Thousands resist Soviet coup

The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Thousands of anti-coup demonstrators poured into the streets Monday, surrounding tanks sent into Moscow by a hard-line Communist junta seeking to cement its overthrow of Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev.

Rallied by populist politician Boris Yeltsin, who called for a general strike, the protesters defied the emergency committee's threat to use force to consolidate its power.

Demonstrators surrounded the Russian parliament and government building, about a mile from the Kremlin, and stayed there overnight to protect Yeltsin from arrest. They erected barricades of bricks, wooden boards, and even several blue-and-white trolley buses.

Inside, Yeltsin's supporters worked the phones, appealing throughout the sprawling republic for resistance to the coup. Yeltsin's office announced early Tuesday that he was sending his foreign minister, Andrei Kozyrev, to Washington to consult with President Bush.

The eight-member coup committee, which included the KGB secret police, military and police chiefs, announced a takeover of state

"When Andrei Dmitrievich Sakharov died, a half-million Muscovites went out on the streets," said Yelena Bonner. "If we repeat this today, we will win."

In an afternoon of heated exchanges with civilians who clamored about their tanks, many of the soldiers deployed in Moscow had expressed reluctance to shed Russian blood.

By nightfall, when the tanks surrounding the Russian parliament were withdrawn without explanation, only to be replaced by news media and shut down independent broadcasters.

"You can build a throne out of bayonets, but you can't sit on them long," Yeltsin told loyalist troops. "There is, or can be, no return to the past."

The hard-liners said they acted to halt the descent of the country into chaos, and promised to crack down on crime and take measures to produce more food. They may have been forestalling Gorbachev's planned return from vacation to Moscow, where on Tuesday he was to have signed a Union Treaty that would have given more authority to the nation's restive republics.

Yeltsin calls for general strike

The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Ten loyalist tanks flying the Russian flag rumbled to the Russian parliament building to protect Boris Yeltsin on Monday night and were greeted by cheering crowds like cavalry coming to the rescue.

The tanks of the elite Tamanskaya Division that arrived at nightfall were the first sign of military support for Yeltsin, who spent the day providing the angry crowds milling around the capital a leader they could rally around.

Displaying the moxie and frankness that got him elected as the top-ranking Russian official, Yeltsin at one point scrambled at one of the tanks sent by hard-liners to encircle the white marble building, and appealed to the awe-struck soldiers not to fire on their countrymen.

"The country is facing the threat of terror," Yeltsin said. "The order" promised by the self-described saviors of the motherland will end up with tragedy; suppression of dissent, concentration camps, night arrests."

"Don't forget that you gave an oath to be true to the people. I believe that in this tragic hour you will be able to make the right choice. The honor and glory of Russian weapons will not be smeared by the people's blood."

The soldiers made no move to stop him. According to Russian legislators, the commander said, "I'm not going to order my troops to shoot Boris Yeltsin!"

The anti-Yeltsin forces withdrew by sundown without explanation after their show of force.

As the pro-Yeltsin tanks rumbled across a bridge over the Moscow River toward the Russian parliament, thousands of Yeltsin supporters opened make-shift barricades to

Magic Valley Soviet community expected ouster

By Steve Crump Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Most members of the Magic Valley's community of Soviet emigres had expected Mikhail Gorbachev to fall, but when his ouster finally came Monday, it left them reeling.

"Of course, I'm really shocked," Vladimir Chestnov said. Chestnov, a 28-year-old computer programmer and mathematician, left the Soviet Union with his wife and son and settled in Twin Falls in October.

"Everybody was waiting for something to happen, but it's still a surprise," he said.

"It's horrible; conditions have been very bad for a long time," said Rena Garibyan, a 31-year-old Armenian teacher who emigrated with her husband and daughter in January. "It's a country out of control."

Soviet emigres and their families milled in and out of the College of Southern Idaho's Refugee Center all day Monday, exchanging information and asking for news from home.

Because of the center, the Twin Falls area is a magnet for new immigrants from Eastern Europe. Between 15 and 17 Soviet families have settled here — about 60 people altogether.

Most of them were talking about the man who made their exit from the Soviet Union possible, but few spoke fondly of Gorbachev.

"Gorbachev's arms are in blood," said Garibyan, who now works as a translator at the refugee center. "Lots of people have been killed (in the restive Soviet republics during his tenure). We expected this."

"Nobody wants Gorbachev," said Chestnov, a refugee center translator who supplements his income by working in a Please see VALLEY/A2

Observers predict long wait as Odiaga case goes to jury

By Brad Bowlin Times-News writer

HAILEY — Mitchell John Odiaga's guilt or innocence was placed in the hands of the jury Monday afternoon.

"You are about to embark on a very difficult mission," Blaine County Prosecutor Ned Williamson told the eight women and four men before they were escorted from the courtroom at 1:47 p.m.

The jury had not returned a verdict by press time.

The jurors will remain sequestered until they reach a verdict, and because of the complex nature of the case and the number of charges, courtroom observers predicted a long wait.

The jury's decision whether Odiaga had formed criminal intent before shooting two men in Ketchum last year is important to society, as well as to the defendant, Williamson said.

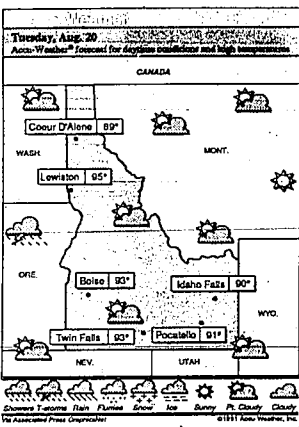

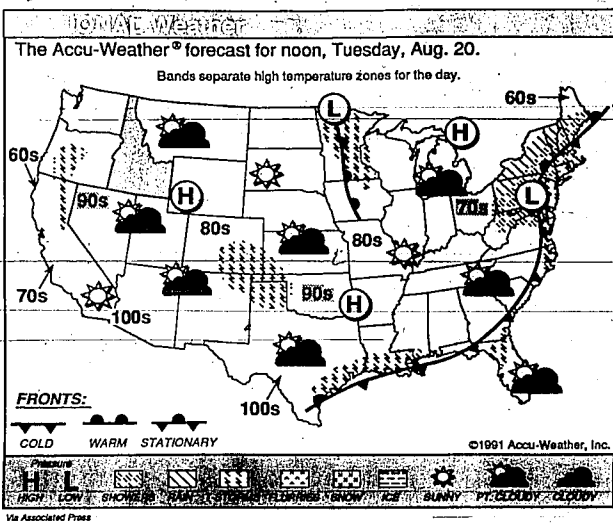

Odiaga is charged with two counts of first-degree murder, one count of attempted first-degree murder and three counts of aggravated battery.

Attorneys on both sides of the case agreed on two points: Mitchell John Odiaga killed two men and shot at another in Ketchum on the night of June 22, 1990. Odiaga also suffers from a mental illness.

The jury must decide if the killings meet the legal requirements for murder and attempted murder.

Weather summary

The combination of warm high pressure at upper levels and thermal low pressure at the surface will continue the hot afternoons through Thursday. Moist air moving up from off the California coast will be unstable enough for the usual late afternoon and evening thundershowers. They will be mainly over the southern half of the state. On Thursday low pressure at upper levels will begin to move inland bringing cooler temperatures for the weekend.

On Monday thundershowers again developed over southern Idaho and the east central mountains. A drier westerly flow kept them out of northern Idaho. The strongest thundershowers built over the mountains between Sun Valley and Arco before weakening and moving east to the Idaho Falls area. A second group of fairly strong thundershowers formed over the mountains south of twin falls and burley and moved south. A third rather large cluster of thundershowers over southeastern Oregon. Monday evening was edging very slowly eastward so thundershowers are a possibility for western Idaho into tonight.

No severe weather has yet been reported from Monday thundershowers. Weiser had the state high of 104. Riggins checked in with 101.

The warmest temperature in the state Monday was 104 degrees at Weiser; Stanley reported the coldest at 38 degrees.

Elsewhere in the nation Monday, the highest temperature was 114 degrees at Lake Havasu City, Ariz. The lowest was 36 degrees at Wisdom, Mont.

Tanks that won't shoot line Moscow's wide boulevards

MOSCOW (AP) - Young soldiers who seized the heart of Moscow on Monday emerged from their tank turrets and personnel carriers to face the anger of their compatriots and their own doubts about what they had done.

"Why tanks?" screamed a gray-haired man, waving wildly as a column of tanks passed. "Tanks against whom? Boys! Boys! You are our children! What are you doing? What do you want?"

Column after column of tanks, armored personnel carriers and trucks loaded with soldiers swarmed the Soviet capital to enforce the ouster of Mikhail S. Gorbachev by hard-line leaders including the heads of the military, police and the KGB.

Small bands of Muscovites built barricades of concrete blocks, iron bars, benches and parked-buses to prevent the armor from passing. Defiant protesters held non-stop rallies near the Moscow City Council and the central Manzh Square and planned to march tonight.

But the crowds were much smaller than political rallies have drawn in far less tense times.

And after midnight, crowds had largely disappeared near the City Council building and at Manzh Square, where about 400 paratroopers and 20 armored personnel carriers had moved in to take control of the favorite meeting site of reformers.

U.S. television showed a man pulling a car off the back of a tank, splashing it on the vehicle and being pulled away before he could be hurt.

There were no reported casualties in Moscow, which the military clearly was in control.

But at the Russian Supreme Soviet building, populist Russian leader Boris Yeltsin held out against the onslaught and even climbed onto an armored vehicle.

The lieutenant colonel in charge of about 20 tanks ringing the building pledged he would not shoot at Yeltsin.

About 500 yards from the building, one of his tank commanders, 22-year-old Alexander Krytov, said he would move against the Russian parliament building if ordered to.

"But I won't go against the people," he said. "Actually, I have my doubts about the government that's taking over now." He said several other tank commanders agreed with him.

Another tank crew, asked who they had come to save, said "You the people." But they asked to look at the text of the statement declaring a state of emergency.

They said they had been in their tanks since 1 a.m. and had not been allowed to leave the city. Many of the soldiers appeared to be from the Central Asian republics, and may have been chosen because they could be expected to have less sympathy for Muscovites.

Other soldiers showed the crowd empty shell casings to try to prove they had no ammunition. In several places, the armored vehicles backed away rather than risk a confrontation with the people.

The mood of Soviets ranged from anger to resignation to a sprinkling of support for military rule.

The crowd in the square chanted, "Free Russia!" and "Yeltsin, Yeltsin!" They cheered when a speaker read part of a statement by Bush saying he would not recognize the new leaders.

Twelve armored vehicles drove away from the Kremlin with protesters who had climbed aboard still clinging to them, waving Russian republic flags.

"Down with Yavoz!" shouted one, referring to Defense Minister Dmitri Yavoz.

democratic trends Gorbachev had begun; most said he had simply botched the job.

"Gorbachev was trying to do new things with the old system," Garibyan said. "The Soviets must build a new system."

"He wanted to sit on two chairs," Chestnov said. "He wanted to make a consensus, and you can't find a consensus between democracy and communism."

Few of the emigres held out much hope for Boris Yeltsin, the embattled president of the Russian republic who now leads the Soviet reformists. But fewer still thought the hard-liners who ousted Gorbachev would succeed in erasing his reforms.

"Yeltsin is popular, but I don't know if he's popular enough to protect him," Chestnov said. "But no matter what happens, nobody wants to go back" to the days before Gorbachev.

Most, like Garibyan, are thoroughly disenchanted with the Soviet system.

"It doesn't matter who's in power - Yeltsin, Gorbachev, Stalin, Lenin - I don't trust them," she said. "They all do the same mistakes - lots of words, no deeds."

Garibyan is a native of the Soviet city of Baku in the Moslem-dominated republic of Azerbaijan. As a member of the Armenian minority in Azerbaijan, she was caught up in ethnic violence in 1988 that she says Gorbachev did nothing to stop.

"I sat in my flat in downtown Baku and heard the Muslims in the street below telling each other to kill every Armenian," she said. "The Armenians that didn't get out, as I did with my family, were killed."

Chernov, who attended a prestigious Soviet university and worked for the same technical institute where Nobel Prize-winning physicist Andrei Sakharov was once on staff, left because he became disillusioned with the possibility of change in the Soviet Union - then and now.

"The system has been needing change for a long time," he said. "The trouble is, people just get used to it."

Coup

Independence-minded Baltic republics. A Soviet military commander declared himself de facto ruler of Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia, and Soviet forces forced their way into TV and radio stations, beating protesters. Soviet warships blockaded the main harbor in Estonia.

There, said Interior Ministry troops had killed the driver of a van in Riga, Latvia.

Yeltsin's call for a strike was heeded by Siberian coal miners in Vorkuta and the Kuznets Basin, who sawed their strike early Tuesday. The miners have been among Yeltsin's biggest supporters and proponents of radical economic change.

"The whole city will come to a standstill tomorrow," Yuri Kozlov, a member of the Vorkuta city strike committee, said in a telephone interview.

The coup seriously jeopardized the 6-year-old reforms identified with Gorbachev. His policies of "perestroika, restructuring, and glasnost," or openness, inspired a far-reaching but often chaotic transformation of the Soviet Union as well as an end to the Cold War.

Vice President Gennady Yanayev, who earlier headed the new ruling committee, told a news conference that Gorbachev, 60, would be confined for treatment of exhaustion in the Crimea - where he had been on vacation.

"He is very tired after all these years, and he will need some time to get better. We hope ... he will take office again," Yanayev told reporters.

Yeltsin said Gorbachev was being "treated."

There had been no recent indication Gorbachev was ill. Unconfirmed reports carried by CNN and the Russian Information Agency said Gorbachev was seen boarding a plane in the Crimean city of Simferopol. CNN said he was reported to have been flown to a military base at Sevastopol.

CBS News reported that Prime Minister Valentin Pavlov - one of the eight emergency committee members - and another hard-liner had recently flown to Gorbachev's vacation home and demanded he resign. When Gorbachev refused, CBS reported, Pavlov told him, "You are going to be sick for a very long time."

Yanayev said he was taking over as acting president under the state of emergency. However, he appeared to wield little power and some analysts said he seemed to be acting on behalf of the army and KGB.

The 53-year-old Yanayev (pronounced yah-NEE-yehf) was a prominent leftist and Communist Party official when Gorbachev chose him as his deputy in December, saying he was a man he could trust.

let them through, cheering wildly. The demonstrators had gathered around the flood-lit, 19-story building to support Yeltsin and form a human shield against a possible take-over by soldiers under the hard-line command.

In June, Yeltsin won a landslide election to become the first popularly elected president in the history of the Soviet Union's largest republic.

His supporters built bonfires Monday against the chilly, rainy weather. They lit candles, ate from big samovars and shared cigarettes in a mood that combined fear, uncertainty and comradery.

Tension rose after legislator Valentina Linkova announced at midnight that emergency wards reportedly were being prepared to handle possible casualties. She advised the crowd to bring wet cloths to protect themselves from tear gas.

Inside the building, Yeltsin and more than 100 Russian legislators were spending the night. Up to 100 pro-Yeltsin Russian riot police wearing camouflage fatigues kept guard outside and patrolled the rooftops with AK-47 assault rifles.

They warned those inside to keep windows drawn and stay away from shadows because of unconfirmed reports of snipers in the Ukraine Hotel directly across the river.

Odiaga

To do that, jurors are being asked to boil down the testimony of more than 60 witnesses who trooped to the stand over two weeks, and reams of physical evidence - medical records, interview transcripts, witness reports, bullet casings, a rifle and more.

Legal issues, not morality, are what should decide the case, countered defense attorney David Nevin.

"Many of the prosecution's witnesses gave testimony that supports the defense's theory that Odiaga was actively psychotic at the time of the shootings, Nevin said.

Throughout his journey from Boise to Ketchum, which went through Mountain Home, Fairfield and Pine, Odiaga openly engaged in bizarre behavior.

In Pine, he made a point of telling people his name.

"You tell me, is it a guy ... going down to Ketchum to commit a murder?" Nevin asked.

Several psychiatrists and psychologists testified during the trial that Odiaga's thought patterns were so scattered that he could not have thought about the shootings beforehand.

Insanity is not allowed as a defense under Idaho law, but proving insanity would prove a person intended to commit the crime with which he or she is charged.

The question jurors must answer is whether Odiaga knew he was shooting at human beings when he shot and killed Gen. Sherman Wash Wright and Bruce Tate Schaffer.

Wright, 47, was a itinerant handyman who had lived in Ketchum for about 20 years. Schaffer, 23, was an aspiring architect from Burley who was living in Ketchum.

In interviews with psychiatrists, Odiaga said an overdose of cold medicine made him hallucinate. The whole world seemed to change, and people turned into aliens, he told his doctors.

Williamson said Odiaga knew full well what he was doing when he fired his .30-06-caliber rifle.

"I'm not saying he's exaggerating his mental illness," Williamson said. "He is exaggerating his symptoms."

Odiaga was not exactly forthright in his meetings with doctors," Williamson said, pointing out several times where Odiaga led to doctors about his previous drug use and violent behavior.

Psychiatry is not a science, and even experts in the mental health field can be led astray by a man trying to escape conviction, Williamson said.

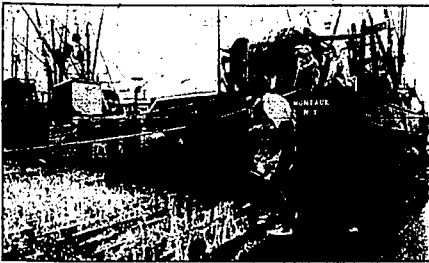

The prosecutor listed several excerpts from interviews in which Odiaga referred to his victims as "people," "men" or "guys."

"They warned those inside to keep windows drawn and stay away from shadows because of unconfirmed reports of snipers in the Ukraine Hotel directly across the river.

Each count also includes an additional charge of using a deadly weapon in the commission of a felony, which would add to any prison sentence handed down.

Jurors will not decide Odiaga's sentence if he is convicted on any of the charges. That will be decided by a judge at a sentencing hearing to be held later if necessary.

Hurricane Bob churns up Eastern Seaboard

NARRAGANSETT, R.I. (AP) — Hurricane Bob swirled up the Eastern Seaboard on Monday, whipping the coast with heavy rain and strong winds and creating a mass exodus of anxious beach dwellers from North Carolina to Maine.

The storm knocked out power to about 725,000 people, prompted the governor of Maine to shut down the state government and sent Navy submarines fleeing their berths in Connecticut for the safety of the deep.

Nuclear power plants throughout the region were powered down as a precaution. A special storm barrier was lowered in Narragansett Bay to protect Providence, R.I.

Bob, the second tropical storm of the season, carried sustained winds of 110 mph and gusts of up to 138 mph. It was rated a Category 3 storm on a scale of one to five.

The storm, which formed off the Bahamas last week, glanced off Cape Hatteras, N.C., late Sunday night and then spun northward off the coasts of Virginia, Maryland, Delaware and New Jersey. Although it kept a safe distance of about 90 miles offshore, it was close enough to bring gusty winds and torrential rain to the coastline.

The eye of the hurricane slipped about 50 miles east of New York's Long Island at about 1 p.m., turning the sky purple over the eastern end of the island.

The hurricane struck land first at Block Island, midway between Long Island and Rhode Island, at about 1:30 p.m. The winds there were clocked at 105 mph.

"The 105 is at the limit of the equipment, so it could have been stronger than that," said Bob Thompson, meteorologist for the National Weather Service in Boston.

Betty Gann, a dispatcher for the police and fire departments on Block Island, said the eye of the storm brought an eerie calm after the high winds.

"Absolutely dead. It's almost frightening," Gann said. She said 2,000 to 2,500 people had sought shelter in the Block Island school, a medical center and a sewer plant.

MIAMI (AP) — A Panamanian lawyer and fugitive co-defendant of Gen. Manuel Noriega told a trial judge Monday he will plead guilty and testify for the government.

Ricardo Bilonick "will provide significant testimony against Gen. Noriega," Assistant U.S. Attorney Myles Malman told U.S. District Judge William M. Hoeveler.

But one of Noriega's defense attorneys, Jon May, played down the importance of Bilonick's plans to testify.

"Any person in Panama who is accused of having engaged in narcotics trafficking has a strong motivation to tell the government they did their deals with our client," May said.

Immigrant found guilty in arson case

NEW YORK (AP) — A jury convicted a Cuban immigrant of murder Monday for setting an arson fire that killed 87 people at the illegal Happy Land social club.

Relatives of the victims wept while the jury foreman repeated the word "guilty" 176 times, covering two counts of murder for each victim, plus arson and assault.

Julio Gonzalez, 37, started the blaze on March 25, 1990, by igniting a dollar's worth of gasoline at the club's only exit after a fight with a former girlfriend.

She worked at the club as a coat-checker and was one of six survivors.

Since Gonzalez's lawyer admitted that his client set the fire, the key issue for jurors was whether he was sane at the time.

Judge Burton Roberts set sentencing for Sept. 19.

Gonzalez faces a maximum of 25 years to life in prison, since all of the deaths stemmed from the same act.

Gonzalez was charged with two counts of murder for each person killed, one for felony murder in the commission of another felony, the arson, and one for depraved indifference to human life.

Prosecutors often file both charges since they are separate crimes under New-York state law.

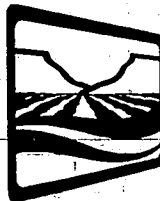

The verdict came on the jury's fourth day of deliberation, and a few hours after jurors asked the judge to have his explanation of the insanity defense read back to them.

"He wasn't insane," said Milka Rios, 12, whose mother died in the fire. "He knew every step he did, he knew how he did it."

But she confessed to mixed emotions: "In a way I'm happy, in a way I'm sad. We have waited for 14 months."

The girl was accompanied by her grandmother, who cried while chanting "Guilty! Guilty! Guilty!"

WHO'S THE FAIREST OF THEM ALL?

FARMERS NATIONAL BANK

WE ARE!

Fairness is something we pride ourselves on at Farmers National Bank. For example, we'll never charge you a loan fee. And unlike most banks, we base service charges on your average balance over the entire month, not your minimum balance the day before you deposit your paycheck when your balance is at an all-time low. This helps you get the best return from your account and keeps you from incurring penalties and extra service charges.

At Farmers National Bank, you get consistently high interest rates, and you'll be treated fair when it comes to service charges.

And that's no fairytale!

Many at high risk for AIDS virus not tested

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - Nearly 40 percent or more of Americans at high risk of getting AIDS have not been tested for infection, jeopardizing their health and possibly increasing the spread of the virus, a study suggests.

A survey of 14,000 people found that about 38 percent of men who reported homosexual activity in the previous five years had not been tested.

Neither had about 47 percent of people who reported using intravenous drugs in the previous year, said researcher Thomas Coates.

"What we need to do is continue penetrating and pushing into these populations because they are where the majority of HIV disease is in our society," said Coates, co-director of the Center for AIDS Prevention Studies at the University of California, San Francisco.

HIV stands for human immunodeficiency virus, which causes AIDS.

The virus can spread by homosexual or heterosexual sex and by the sharing of needles among intravenous drug users.

The study also found that about 60 percent of heterosexuals with multiple sex partners in the previous year had not been tested, nor had about 60 percent of people who said their sexual partners had been using intravenous drugs.

Overall, the proportions of at-risk populations, that had been tested were "pretty good numbers (but) we would like to see them higher," Coates said in an interview.

"Public health requires effective campaigns to reach at-risk populations so they can receive adequate care" if infected, he said.

Such campaigns also help protect sexual partners and future children, he said. The AIDS virus can be transmitted from a mother to her baby.

Coates presented the findings Sunday at the annual meeting of the American Psychological Association.

The results came from the National AIDS Behavior Survey, which contacted participants in the continental United States by telephone last fall and winter.

The analysis was adjusted to represent the nation's population as a whole.

FAA tightens airport security workers standards

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Federal Aviation Administration stiffened its hiring, training and performance standards Monday for airline and airport security personnel, including the employees who screen passengers and luggage for weapons and explosives.

The new rules are required under aviation safety legislation passed by Congress last year.

For the screeners, who are the largest group of full-time aviation security employees, the new rules will require either a high school degree, a General Equivalency Diploma or other education and experience judged to be adequate for the job.

Other entry-level requirements include the ability to speak, read and write English, good eyesight and hearing, good color perception and physical dexterity.

In addition to receiving initial training, the screeners will be required to take recurring and specialized training sessions.

A screener who fails an operational test will have to undergo remedial training before he can resume screening.

A security official will be required to make an annual evaluation of each screener's abilities, skills and performance.

Employers will have to limit the time a screener can work at an X-ray screening station to make sure fatigue does not diminish the screener's alertness, the FAA said.

Tim Neale, a spokesman for the Air Transport Association, an airline industry group, said the association had recommended such rules.

Inmates want to be fathers

BOYDTON, Va. (AP) - A death row inmate wants his sperm frozen and used to inseminate his girlfriend, saying the state's right to kill him doesn't mean it can end his bloodline.

Joseph Roger O'Dell, 49, faces execution for the 1985 rape and murder of a Virginia Beach secretary.

He asked the state Supreme Court to allow him and fellow death-row inmate Joseph Savino, 32, to preserve their sperm.

The court denied the request, calling it frivolous. Prison officials were still considering it.

Interest rates on Treasury bills fall

WASHINGTON (AP) - Interest rates on short-term Treasury securities fell in Monday's auction to the lowest level in several years.

The Treasury Department sold $10.4 billion in three-month bills at an average discount rate of 5.17 percent, down from 5.30 percent last week. Another $10.4 billion was sold in six-month bills at an average discount rate of 5.23 percent, down from 5.39 percent last week.

Eastern Europe shudders at Soviet coup

WARSAW, Poland (AP) - Fear rippled through the emerging democracies of eastern Europe Monday after the overthrow of Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev, but leaders pledged there was no turning back from reform.

"The process of radical political and economic transformation cannot be reversed," said President Václav Havel of Czechoslovakia.

"As a sovereign state, we will continue to build democracy and reform our economy," promised President

Lech Walesa of Poland. Eastern Europeans stayed glued to radios and televisions for the latest news from Moscow, in downtown Warsaw, about 500 people lined up downtown to buy an extra edition of the Gazeta Wyborcza newspaper devoted to the coup.

At Warsaw's Stalin-era Palace of Culture, word of the coup spread among Soviet street traders who strained to pick up reports on Polish radio. In Czechoslovakia, dependent on the Soviet Union for all its fuel, drivers lined up at gas stations for hours, fearing supplies would be cut. Eastern European nations worried about a possible flood of refugees if a full-scale conflict should break out in the huge neighbor still sometimes referred to as "Big Brother."

Many also voiced concern about possible attempts to restore the Soviet Communist order toppled in 1989. "Worse times will come," engineering student Adina Forteanu predicted in Romania. "Gorbachev played an important role in the freedom we enjoy now. ... It may emerge that this precious gift of freedom will be taken away."

"This is the end of one of the best summers of my life. From now on, the going gets tough," said Marek Gregor, a 22-year-old Prague student. "All I can say is that it is damn good that the Red Army is out of here," said architect Tamas Imre in Budapest. The last Soviet troops pulled out of Hungary and Czechoslovakia during the summer and the Warsaw Pact military-political alliance was dissolved July 1.

Coup timing catches West by surprise

WASHINGTON (AP) - U.S. intelligence agencies warned the White House that Soviet hard-liners posed a danger to the survival of Mikhail Gorbachev as president, but failed to predict the coup that toppled him from power, officials and analysts said Monday.

"The threat of some action like this has been present for months," said President Bush's national security adviser, Brent Scowcroft. "I don't say we anticipated anything right at the moment." Scowcroft, who accompanied Bush back to Washington from Maine, said, "Gorbachev was obviously taken by surprise," too.

But white intelligence analysts predicted various threats to Gorbachev, they appeared to be focusing more on secession by the six republics that have declared their intention to break away from Moscow. "Most people thought there was a greater danger of the dissolution of the Soviet Union than a takeover" by hard-liners, said Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz.

As for a possible coup, intelligence analysts were wary because of the repeated threats to Gorbachev that have sounded ever since he began his course toward reform in 1986. They also were perplexed by Gorbachev's shifts — toward the hard-liners last winter, and then back toward the reformers this spring.

Analysis at the State Department believed "Gorbachev could manage the change," said Rep. Dave McCurdy, D-Okla., chairman of the House Select Intelligence Committee. CIA analysts were more skeptical, predicting Gorbachev wouldn't survive in the long run because of his taking "half measures rather than the drastic moves required to save the economy from crashing, he said.

Defense officials say that while they had information in recent weeks of possible action against Gorbachev, it wasn't sufficiently specific and wasn't much different from many previous threats. "Generally, most people here just didn't think it was going to happen," said one who spoke only on condition of anonymity.

The prevalent view among analysts at the departments of State and Defense was that hard-liners would grouse about the treaty Gorbachev was about to sign Tuesday with nine republics, ceding them more power. "But we thought they would roll with it," said the official.

Now, however, intelligence analysts believe the treaty was the catalyst for the coup. Scowcroft cited that, as well as Gorbachev's prolonged vacation in the Crimea, as causes that "precipitated the coup."

Vincent Cannistraro, a former senior CIA official who retired last year, said the intelligence community appeared to have failed to provide "a hardened, concrete assessment that Gorbachev was in trouble." Cannistraro is now a fellow at the private National Strategy Information Center.

"Hard-edged assessment? They didn't even provide a soft-edged one," said Sen. Howard M. "Bud" Shriver, D-Ohio, a member of the Senate Intelligence Committee. He said intelligence officials had briefed the panel about possible dangers to Gorbachev over the past year, but "it's a figment of their imagination to say they warned of anything resembling a hard-line crackdown."

Soviets rescuing ice-bound crew

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) - Helicopters began lifting Soviet crew members from an ice-bound research ship in Antarctica on Monday, the first phase of a risky rescue operation, organizers said.

The leader of the operation, Arthur Chilingirov, told a news conference a Soviet transport plane was expected to leave Cape Town on Tuesday to complete the rescue.

The long-range Ilyushin-76 arrived in Cape Town last week to fly the stranded Soviets off the ice-covered continent 2,500 miles away.

A total of 222 Soviet scientists and technicians have been waiting on the Mikhail Somov since the research vessel became stuck in ice last month about 35 miles from the Soviet research base of Molodezhnaya.

West denounces Soviet coup, freezes aid

LONDON (AP) — Western leaders on Monday denounced the coup by hard-liners that ousted Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, and swiftly froze aid to Moscow.

British Prime Minister John Major called the development "ominous" and French President Francois-Mitterrand urged the nations to guarantee "life and liberty" for Gorbachev and Russian President Boris Yeltsin.

Iraq and Libya welcomed the takeover, however, apparently hoping that the change would restore the Soviet support they lost with the end of the Cold War.

President Bush told reporters at his vacation home in Maine that "I've said over and over again that we did not want to see a coup backed by the KGB and the military, and apparently that is what is under way."

He then cut his vacation short and headed back to Washington.

Bush temporarily suspended U.S. aid to the Soviet Union and said he expected Western allies to follow suit. Britain suspended its $80 million in aid to Moscow, and government sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said all European Community aid was "in effect on hold."

Stock markets plunged in value as investors moved their money into dollars and gold — both considered safe investments in times of unrest. Oil prices rose sharply on fears that Soviet oil exports would be reduced or halted.

As thousands of demonstrators began pouring into the Moscow streets, Bush and other officials also said that it was not clear whether the Soviet people would accept the new leaders.

"What hasn't been heard from yet are the people of the Soviet Union," Bush said.

Former British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher said: "The people have got used to democracy. I doubt whether they will give it up easily."

U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar said he hoped the coup would not lead to violence or demoral efforts to forge democracies in Eastern Europe.

NATO officials met in a special session in Brussels, and said in a statement that "the latest developments foreshadow a grave deviation from the path of reform and the rule of law in the Soviet Union."

The European Community called an emergency foreign ministers' meeting for Tuesday in The Hague. The Netherlands, current president of the European Community, warned the coup could harm Soviet relations with Europe.

Yazov Pavlov Kryuchkov Pugo

Hard line dominates new ruling committee

MOSCOW (AP) — Here is a look at members of the State Committee for the State of Emergency in the USSR, formed Monday to take control of the country from Mikhail S. Gorbachev:

GENNADY YANAYEV
Yanayev, 53-year-old career Communist, was elected vice president of the country in December. He was seen as a compromise candidate to appease hard-liners. Yanayev has not criticized Gorbachev publicly, but he has expressed concern for the well-being of the public in the transition to a market economy. He is a member of the Communist Party's ruling Politburo and its policy-setting Central Committee.

VALENTIN PAVLOV
The Soviet prime minister, Pavlov had been involved in another apparent attempt to seize power from Gorbachev. In June, he asked the national legislature to grant him emergency powers to issue decrees without the approval of the president or parliament. The legislature turned down his request. He was elected prime minister in January, nominated by Gorbachev. The 53-year-old Pavlov had been finance minister during a time when the government's budget deficit soared.

DMITRI YAZOV
The Soviet defense minister since 1987, Yazov has consistently allied himself more with KGB chiefs than Gorbachev. Although his speeches contain endorsements of Gorbachev's reforms, he has opposed some publicly, especially those involving military cutbacks and draft deferments for students. The 68-year-old Yazov holds the rank of marshal. As defense minister, he has met frequently with his American and other Western counterparts.

VLADIMIR KRYUCHKOV
The 67-year-old chairman of the KGB secret police since October 1988, Kryuchkov has been the most vocal — and most powerful — critic of many of Gorbachev's reforms. He has often been seen in public with Yazov, leading to speculation that they were the driving force behind hard-line opposition in the Soviet leadership. He has given speeches and interviews charging that the West was actively trying to undermine Soviet society.

BORIS PUGO
Long viewed as a hard-liner, Pugo has often been asked to explain the actions of Soviet troops he controls as Soviet interior minister. Those troops have been called upon increasingly to quell ethnic violence that has flared in many of the 15 republics. In some cases, the troops themselves have been accused of attacks, particularly in the Baltic republics.

News emerges unrestricted

NEW YORK (AP) — Despite Mikhail Gorbachev's ouster by Communist hard-liners, Soviet officials haven't censored television news reports from Moscow or restricted coverage of U.S. network officials said Monday.

"The telephones work, the satellites work, planes flew and we were able to get people in (to Moscow) this morning," said Jeff Grinick, an ABC News vice president in charge of special news coverage.

"We keep expecting the plug to be pulled, but so far that hasn't happened," said CNN executive vice president Ed Turner. He also said there has been no intimidation of Cable News Network crews by Soviet troops.

OLEG BAKLANOV

Soviet athletes ponder effect of coup

The Associated Press

LONDON — Some Soviet athletes phoned home. Others sought ways to leave their homeland. And an American soccer team was glad it left the Soviet Union 24 hours before Monday's coup.

The overthrow of President Mikhail Gorbachev by Kremlin hard-liners left Soviet athletes abroad in limbo, and those at home wondering if they will be able to compete in foreign events.

The Canada Cup hockey tournament prepared for a possible Soviet withdrawal even after being told the Soviet squad would still participate. A Soviet track and field official questioned whether his team will make it to the World Championships in Tokyo.

Soviets kept a low profile at the cycling world championships in Stuttgart, Germany, at the rowing world championships in Vienna and at the European Swimming Championships in Athens.

The head of the Soviet track and field team said he was worried about his athletes being able to get to the World Championships that begin this weekend in Tokyo.

Most of the Soviet team has been training in Vladivostok in the far eastern part of the country, but pole vaulter Sergei Bubka and three others were still in Moscow.

"I have been in phone contact with Moscow and I understand the situation is very serious," coach Vadim Zelicchenok said. "I am afraid they will close the airports and the team will not be allowed to fly to Japan. It would be a pity if they could not come. They are professionals who have trained hard all season for this event."

Soviet athletes abroad worried about loved ones back home.

Viktor Losev, captain of the Dynamo Moscow soccer team currently playing exhibition games in Italy, said he talked to friends in Moscow and was assured they were safe.

"We are scheduled to return home by the end of the week and will see then what has happened," Losev said. "What can I say? Life continues."

White Sox hurler stays suspended, AL rules

NEW YORK — The three-game suspension of Chicago White Sox pitcher Jack McDowell was upheld Monday by American League president Bobby Brown.

McDowell was suspended for fighting with Mark Whiten, then of the Toronto Blue Jays, on May 19. During a game, McDowell threw a pitch behind Whiten's legs, the outfielder charged the mound and a brawl ensued.

Both players were suspended for three games and fined $1,000. Whiten has already served his suspension, but McDowell appealed and attended a hearing at the AL office last Friday. The suspension will begin Tuesday, Aug. 20, when the White Sox open a two-game series against the Detroit Tigers. McDowell will also miss Chicago's game at Cleveland on Friday.

Broncos' offense sparks win

The Associated Press

DENVER — Rookie running back Greg Elway scored twice, and John Elway passed 62 yards to Ricky Nattiel for another touchdown as the Broncos broke out of an offensive slump with a 21-13 exhibition victory over the Dolphins Monday night.

The Broncos (2-2), who had scored just one touchdown in their first three exhibition outings, showed signs of life on their first offensive play, when Elway hit Mark Jackson on a 46-yard pass play.

That series ended when safety Jarvis Williams intercepted Elway at the Dolphins' 12.

But Elway later found Jackson on a 31-yarder to set up Lewis' 3-yard run for a 7-3 Broncos lead midway through the second quarter.

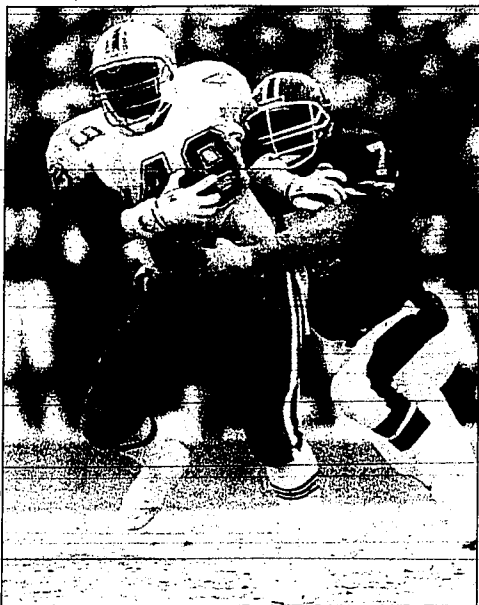

The Broncos scored two touchdowns 27 seconds apart in the third quarter.

Nattiel got behind cornerback Chris Green on a streak pattern and hauled in Elway's long pass in stride at the 20, putting the Broncos up 14-6 with 6:59 left in the third quarter.

On the next play from scrimmage, Broncos linebacker Karl Mecklenburg stripped the ball from rookie running back Aaron Craver and defensive end Warren Powers recovered at the Dolphins' 25. Lewis swept the right side on the next play for his second touchdown with 6:32 remaining in the period.

Elway, calling his own plays for the second straight game, completed seven of 15 passes for 185 yards.

Dan Marino, who had led the Dolphins to a pair of field goals by Charlie Baumann, gave way to Scott Secules after the Broncos' third score, and Secules promptly engineered an 80-yard drive for the Dolphins' lone touchdown. Secules kept the drive alive with a shovel pass to Craver that went for 31 yards on fourth-and-5, and he hit rookie wide receiver Scott Miller on a 6-yard pass for the score.

Veterans lose jobs as season nears

The Associated Press

Mike Wilcher, an 8-year starter for the Los Angeles Rams; Al Del Greco, the Phoenix Cardinals' placekicker for the past four seasons; and veteran backup quarterbacks Don McPherson and Rusty Hilger were out Monday as NFL teams got down to 60 players.

Cedric Mack, who started 84 games in eight seasons with the Cardinals, and Michael Haddix, Green Bay's leading rusher last season, were also set free by their teams, while the Atlanta Falcons admitted their interest in acquiring holdout running back Bobby Humphrey from Denver.

Broncos coach Dan Reeves confirmed that negotiations for the 25-year-old runner are underway with Atlanta, but said the Falcons "offered us something we didn't need."

Erickson still seeks respect at Miami

The Associated Press

CORAL GABLES, Fla. — The tally for the Miami Hurricanes after two seasons under coach Dennis Erickson includes three defeats, two bowl victories, one national championship and one lousy reputation.

When Erickson succeeded Jimmy Johnson in 1989, the Hurricanes were regarded as college football's bad boys. They still are.

The image was reinforced once more on Jan. 1 when Miami was flagged for a Cotton Bowl-record 202 yards in penalties as it trounced Texas 46-3. Nine of the penalties were for unsportsmanlike conduct or personal fouls. "We've got to clean our act up ... I want to stop the stuff that's embarrassing to our football program and the university," Erickson said.

The Hurricanes finished last season 10-2 and ranked No. 3, but their season was marred by fights against Kansas and San Diego State, and the Cotton Bowl was a new low. The Hurricanes' behavior was condemned by the university president and by a Miami newspaper columnist who said it gave the city "another national black eye."

"The Hurricanes' reputation sustained further damage this spring with the disclosure that fraudulent financial aid applications had been submitted by an academic adviser on behalf of football players and other athletes.

The case is under investigation by federal officials. So far, only the single employee — now departed — has been implicated.

An image makeover is perhaps the most difficult challenge facing Erickson, whose team is loaded with talented — as always. The Hurricanes have been ranked in the top three at the end of each of the past five seasons, compiling a 55-5 record during that span.

This year's squad includes three players that Erickson said are as good as any in the nation at their position — senior offensive tackle Leon Searcy, junior outside linebacker Darrin Smith and junior free safety Darryl Williams.

Junior Gino Torretta entered fall practice with a lead over sophomore Bryan Fortay in the battle for the quarterback job.

"Gino understands the offense extremely well," Erickson said. "He really perceives the game and what we're doing, probably better than my quarterback I've had."

Miami lost its opener last season at Brigham Young, and with new starters at quarterback and 11 other positions, the Hurricanes may again begin slowly.

The opener is Aug. 31 at Arkansas, followed by a home game against Houston on Sept. 12.

Yet another long driver favored in U.S. Amateur

The Associated Press

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. — While Phil Mickelson is the favorite and defending champion, the true star of the 91st U.S. Amateur could be The Honors Course. Mickelson, the long-driving player from Arizona State University, will try to become only the ninth man to win back-to-back U.S. Amateur titles when the field of 312 golfers tees off Tuesday.

The 21-year-old San Diego, Calif., native brings a No. 1 amateur ranking into the tournament, not to mention a resume that includes a PGA Tour victory in last winter's Tucson Open.

But Mickelson and the rest of the field may have their hands full with The Honors Course, a treacherous par-72, 7,064-yard course that will test their endurance as well as their skill.

"This is an awesome place, just awesome," Mickelson said after a practice round Sunday. "Obviously the key to winning out here is your driver and keeping the ball in play."

The tournament opens with two days of stroke play at The Honors Course outside Chattanooga and at Cleveland Country Club — a par-70, 6,557-yard course in nearby Cleveland, Tenn. — to cut the field to 64 golfers.

Half of the remaining golfers will be eliminated Thursday when match play begins at The Honors Course. Two match-play rounds Friday will pare the field to eight, and two more Saturday will reduce it to just two.

The finalists will square off Sunday for two more rounds to determine the champion. If they're tied after 36 holes, there will be a sudden-death playoff.

Although match play makes it unlikely, the winner conceivably could play 126 holes over the final four days, nearly twice the total in a normal PGA Tour event.

U.S.'s Pan Am performance unlikely in 1992 Olympics

The Associated Press

HAVANA — Maybe new uniforms will help, but most likely new bodies in them will be the elixir America needs to make it from Havana to Barcelona without further embarrassment.

In many sports — basketball, track and field, boxing and swimming, among them — that's exactly what they'll get. And that's why the Pan American Games were a false barometer of how the United States will do at the Barcelona Olympics in 1992.

"The other countries aren't standing still, so something's got to change," U.S. women's basketball coach Vivian Stringer said. "If we continue to be a dominant world power eight years from now, then you can believe that some things will have changed."

Not since the first Pan Am Games in 1951 has the United States lost the gold medals race. America didn't even send a full team to Argentina then, and the Argentines won.

America got beaten by the host country again this time. Spurred by nationalism and their ubiquitous commandante, Fidel Castro, Cuba had a great stake in these games. America didn't. For the United States, this was a training ground.

The Cubans had all their best athletes here: runner Ana Quiros; world high jump record-holder Javier Sotomayor; heavyweight boxer Felix Savon; and a baseball team with several players with major-league ability on the roster, including the double-play combination of shortstop Gorman Mesa and second

UNR concerns remain with Big Sky foes

RENO, Nev. (AP) — Nevada coach Chris Autbelton is letting his team's upcoming move to the West Conference and I-AA football title intentions away from another Big Sky Conference championship and an elusive I-AA title.

"We're not looking past this season. Our only thought right now is on defending our championship. We've accomplished a lot in this league. The one thing that has eluded us is a national championship," he said. "This will be our last chance. It'd be a great way to leave the conference."

A year ago, the Wolf Pack fell one game shy of winning its first I-AA title. Georgia Southern handed Nevada a 36-13 loss in the title game on the Eagles' home field in Las Vegas. A return trip to Statesboro, and not next season's Big Sky debut, has been the Wolf Pack's biggest motivator this year.

"We were so close last year and then we played so poorly in the championship game," quarterback Fred Gatlin said.

"That sticks with you for a long time." But Nevada, 13-2 last season, isn't even the consensus pick to win the Big Sky this year. League coach Wolf Pack for a second-place finish to Idaho.

Nevada's 1991 campaign will be missing two-time All Big Sky receiver Tremelle Taylor and wide receiver Craig. Also departed is workhorse running back Ray Whalen.

Junior Jason Frisieron will get the first shot at replacing Whalen as the Wolf Pack's primary ball carrier. "I feel fine. I'm ready to roll," Frisieron said.

Replacing Taylor and Ortega may not be so simple. Only senior Joe King returns as a consistent receiving threat. Sophomore Chris Singleton and transfer Brian Reeves both have big-time size and speed, but unknown playing credentials.

The offensive line should be fine, especially if tackle Tony Edwards can return from back surgery. With junior Shadrin Fountainish (6-6, 265 and a 485-pound center), also anchoring the other side of the line, the Wolf Pack should be able to match tackles with their opponents.

Quarterback isn't a question, although the starter remains in doubt. Gatlin's starter for two seasons, is Nevada's No. 3 career passer entering his junior season. The Wolf Pack is 19-5 in games Gatlin has started. But the team was 3-1 in games Chris Vargas has finished. The sophomore replaced Gatlin in the second half of its last three playoff games and led the team in all seven overtime periods the Pack played last year.

"He's not the whole team but by no means. But we did get him out and that always helps."

It was the last game of the season between the teams, and the Blue Jays lost the series 8-6. Toronto is 35-17 against Detroit in the last four seasons, since the 1987 collapse.

"It's still a race to see if Mickey Anderson, who has used 18 pitchers this year.

And more may be on the way. Scott Aldred was sent back to Toledo after Sunday's game.

Pitching is the one thing that sets the Tigers apart from their 1987 counterparts. That team — led by Darrin Jackson, Matt Nokes and Alan Trammell — hit 225 homers. That team had eight players with 13 or more home runs.

Jays rely on pitching to stay ahead in East

DETROIT (AP) — The Toronto Blue Jays are looking not a bit like the 1987 model.

The Blue Jays sent a message to the rest of the American League East over the weekend that anyone who hopes to bump them from first place should realize it won't be easy.

Toronto came to Detroit closing to a two-game lead, which dropped to a night when the Tigers won 5-2. It was impossible at that point not to think of the Blue Jays' 1987 collapse — in which they lost their last seven games — and the Tigers' corresponding rally to win the division.

The Blue Jays, while not playing with any particular brilliance, managed to win the last two games of "My heart feels better. The Toronto fans are still going to have to stick with us."

— Cito Gaston, Blue Jays manager

The series. Toronto now has won only three of their last 11 games.

"My heart feels better," Toronto manager Cito Gaston said. "The Toronto fans are still going to have to stick with us."

There was no way the Blue Jays could match the Tigers' big bats. So they won with pitching. They held the Tigers to eight hits the final two games, five Saturday and just three Sunday.

Along the way, the Blue Jays shut down Detroit home run king Cecil Fielder. For the series, Fielder was hitless in nine at-bats, with just one run batted in.

"He knows that any time he needs a day off all he has to do is let me know," Detroit manager Dick Anderson said. "We've DH'd him 28 times. I don't know how much more rest we can give him."

For the season, Toronto is hitting just .196 against Fielder. Last season, Fielder hit .285 with seven home runs against the Blue Jays.

on July 12, has two seasons remaining on a four-year, $2.3 million contract signed in 1989.

The 31-year-old Wilcher, who played in 122 games, was perhaps the best known player cut. But he was beaten out by a group of younger players as Los Angeles worked to revamp a defense that ranked next-to-last in the NFL last season.

Monday was the first day this season of wholesale cuts as NFL teams that opened training camp with 80-man rosters worked to get down to 47 by 4 p.m. EDT today. They must cut to 47 by noon EDT next Monday, six days before the start of the regular season.

Other than Wilcher, Del Greco and the two quarterbacks, most of the players cut were free agents or low draft picks. It was also a tough day for coaches, particularly new ones.

"This is probably the worst part of the job," said Bill Belichick, the first-year coach of the Browns, who was making his first major roster reduction. "Most of these players have been busting their tails for four or five weeks, and we've got to tell them they can't play anymore.

There were two injuries. The Saints sent unsigned cornerback Robert Massey, a two-year starter, to the Cardinals for guard Derek Kennard and an undisclosed draft choice. Kennard will help fill the hole caused by a season-ending knee injury to starting guard Steve Trapplo.

The New York Jets, meanwhile, sent offensive tackle Ron Mattes, obtained from Seattle for a draft pick last January, to the Bears for an undisclosed draft pick. Mattes was the player who got Green Bay, lost the Cardinals' kicking battle to Greg Davis, a Plan B pickup from Atlanta who had four field goals in the Cards' 46-0 win over New England on Saturday night.

Greco, an 8-year veteran who also played for Green Bay, lost the Cardinals' kicking battle to Greg Davis, a Plan B pickup from Atlanta who had four field goals in the Cards' 46-0 win over New England on Saturday night.

Spotlight again shines on Yankees

NEW YORK (AP) — A year after George Steinbrenner's forced abdication, baseball once again is the focus in the Yankees' clubhouse.

Yankees manager Stump Merrill hasn't been fired. Pitching coach Mark Connor is still on the job. No one's been forced to leave a physical lately, although haircuts occasionally cause controversy.

Life certainly is different without the Boss. "Yes, it bothers me," Steinbrenner said last week. "I miss the players and some of the owners. But it isn't as though — well, I'm still healthy."

On Aug. 20, 1990, Steinbrenner resigned as managing general partner of the New York Yankees after a 2.629-day reign. Commissioner Fay Vincent wanted to suspend him for two weeks, but Steinbrenner and his lawyers bitterly negotiated the penalty into what amounts to a lifetime ban.

"I feel pretty good about things," Steinbrenner said the day of his resignation.

But he and his lawyers spent much of the next year bitterly attacking Vincent through the courts and the gossip columns of New York City tabloids. Three federal lawsuits were filed; one has been dismissed and nothing has happened with the other two.

While that was going on, new managing general partner Robert Niderlander and general manager Gene Michael have reorganized the Yankees' hierarchy from a fiefdom to a normal front office.

MONTREAL (AP) — Bill Sampen walked Luis Salazar with two outs in the 11th inning as the Cubs beat the Expos 3-2 Monday night for their eighth victory in 10 games against Montreal this season.

The Cubs loaded the bases with runner out against Sampen (6-3) before Andre Dawson hit into a fielder's choice, shortstop to home, and George Bell lined out. Sampen then walked Salazar on a 3-1 pitch. He hit a two-run, 17-4-pitch, two-inning for the Cubs, who were out 14-7.

History repeats itself in Soviet Union

Vladimir Voina

Gorbachev did what he could. It would be improper, maybe, at this moment to criticize him for making the wrong moves.

But how else can one explain what happened to him — and to all the people in my country?

I would confine my observations to the most obvious and minimal criticism: He could not find the strength to leave the Communist Party.

He lost the support of the only political force that could stand for him, the people, so unanimous in supporting Boris Yeltsin.

Nobody will die for the leader who did so much to degrade Yeltsin — another of Gorbachev's tragic mistakes, the last, really, in a country that had expressed so evidently its anti-communism.

Gorbachev personally brought to power the most outrageous people who never even pretended that they liked democracy.

Now these sinister usurpers of power will rule my country. How poor is my people! We are again a plaything in the hands of Communist manipulators.

Gorbachev personally brought to power the most outrageous people who never even pretended that they liked democracy. Now these sinister usurpers of power will rule my country. How poor is my people! We are again a plaything in the hands of Communist manipulators.

The worst has happened. History is repeating itself. In 1968, my generation was with Alexander Dubcek, the great reformer who came to save the communist world.

I was thinking at that time: Will we live to see the moment when our own "Dubcek" would come to power?

Now the Moscow Spring is over, I hope this time without manslaughter, while Czechoslovakia is free. Are we to wait 17 more years till our own "Vaclav Havel," a staunch anti-communist, will liberate us from this scourge of humanity?

Wisdom comes with time. But there is a leader who understood the most important truth about communism.

Yeltsin is our hope for salvation. I cannot wait 17 years more, when Communists will find themselves out of power in my country, too.

At that time I would be 72, if alive and with some health still; after long years of imprisonment.

Today, I am with my friends, in Moscow and in Kiev, in Tbilisi and Vilnius, in Tallinn and Yerevan, at this hour of tragedy.

I have no willingness to go to prison. I hope to be able to help my people from here, as a better alternative to torture and a total disability to act.

I am to ask for political asylum in the United States of America, seeing no other way out.

God save my people!

Power co-op's demise hints at higher rates in future

Idaho Power has taken the first steps toward absorbing Prairie Power Cooperative Inc., one of a dwindling number of rural power companies in southern Idaho born of Franklin Roosevelt's drive to electrify America during the Great Depression.

The offer looks good for Prairie's members, most of whom live on the Camas Prairie or in the valley of the South Fork of the Boise River. But it says something about the changing nature of southern Idaho's second-most-precious commodity and the way it is bought and sold.

Idaho Power has consistently had some of the lowest electricity rates in the country, and not just because of the cheap hydropower it has generated for the last 75 years.

Even in a highly regulated industry, competition in Idaho has kept rates down.

Why? Take a look at a map of Idaho Power's service area, and you'll find a surprising number of holes.

Utah Power serves most of rural eastern Idaho; the cities of Idaho Falls and Burley have their own municipal electric companies. In between, there are a dozen small co-ops much like Prairie Power, born of the New Deal-era Rural Electrification Administration, that provide electricity to isolated areas.

Taken as a whole, the amount of electricity sold by Idaho Power dwarfs its competitors, but they have remained competitive enough to stay in business — and in some cases, to thrive.

Most of them have done that by buying public power — cheap hydropower generated by the Bonneville Power Administration.

When a family that lives in downtown Burley or two miles from Fairfield is using economical BPA power, it doesn't make a lot of sense politically for Idaho Power to ask the Public Utilities Commission to raise the rates of their neighbors.

But that may be changing, and companies such as Prairie Power are the first casualties.

Cheap public power isn't so cheap anymore; the market forces generated by drought and increasing demand have driven prices up. And with Idaho now a net importer of electricity, it's becoming harder for small companies and municipal utilities to compete.

Idaho Falls, where growth is fast outstripping the ability of the city's utility to supply electricity, has been searching ever more frantically for alternative sources. Hence the city's continuing interest in the Wiley Dam site on the Snake River near Bliss road after its development partner, Tacoma Public Power, wrote off the project as uneconomical.

In the cases of rural co-ops, public power is the margin of survival. Operating an electric utility whose customers are spread over hundreds of square miles is hugely expensive, and companies like Prairie can't hope to compete with the economies-of-scale that Idaho Power enjoys.

That means the trend is for fewer power companies — and higher costs for Idaho irrigators and consumers.

Under the terms of the merger deal, Prairie Power customers will receive a 15 percent reduction in the rates for the first 10 years after the company's acquisition by Idaho Power. After that, they'll have to take their chances with the marketplace.

Mikhail S. Gorbachev's peaceful revolution is over. My country is again a "normal" dictatorship, a variation of Nazi-like totalitarian society ruled by force, by shameless scoundrels.

This is the end of the most dramatic chapter in the postwar history that changed the face of the world. The breaching of the Berlin Wall symbolized the highest point in the unprecedented drive for freedom.

In the former communist countries, the nightmare is over. They are lucky to be protected by international law, by the might of the world democratic community led by the United States.

After the Persian Gulf war, no Soviet general would dream of restoring the world order as it had existed B.G., before Gorbachev.

Not many people in this country can fully appreciate how great was the difference between Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. In my country, not much had changed since the old times; Communists still were in power — and, as it is now more clear than ever, there can be no "good" Communists.

Great expectations. That would be the proper name for the Western reactions to the reform, or perestroika. One can even describe it more harshly: wishful thinking.

The world was so much taken by the Robert Kennedy leader "with a human face," that normal, sober, rational — or you may even call it cynical — criteria for measuring the scope of change within the Soviet Union were lost.

WHY, LOOK — IT'S THE GREAT WHITE HUNTER, AGAIN!

Bush casting U.S.-Soviet relations in new light - but with caution

Tom Raum

President Bush's faith in Mikhail Gorbachev as the West's "best hope" for reform has vanished with the Kremlin coup, and Bush must now recast the U.S.-Soviet relationship in this new light.

But he was in no rush to do so in the first hours after Gorbachev's ouster, carefully and characteristically keeping his options open.

Bush sought to encourage popular resistance to any return to totalitarian rule in the Soviet Union. But he didn't say he wouldn't deal with the group that tossed Gorbachev from power.

Military action was quickly ruled out. When asked whether his preferred course was to see Gorbachev returned to power as Soviet president, Bush paused and hedged.

While noting that U.S. foreign policy until now had been based on "the fact that he offered the best hope," Bush added tellingly that there are "other democratic forces there now and we want to give them the kind of support we can without being counter-productive."

Bush appeared to be holding out the hope that the coup might be reversed by the Soviet people. At some point, a more democratic reformer — perhaps a Boris Yeltsin — might end up with the reins of power. "Coups can fail," he said.

He did take one action quickly, putting economic assistance to the Soviet Union "on hold." But there was no indication that would be a major new problem for the Soviets — at least for the short term. Bush had already declined to send the massive direct aid that Gorbachev wanted.

National Security Adviser Brent Scowcroft, asked what the United States could do, said, "The options are to stop whatever's happening" between the two nations.

What's been happening has included such advances as the nuclear arms treaty, cooperation in the Persian Gulf War and agreement to co-sponsor a Middle East peace conference.

Ratification of the treaty could be tougher now, in both countries. And the peace conference, already uncertain because of a dispute concerning Palestinian representation, could be on even shakier ground now.

Although Bush's temporary return to the White House gave a show of motion and activity — the offered reason was so Bush could swear in new Soviet ambassador Robert Slon — the president was still trying to exude a sense of not rushing to judgment.

"All this stuff is unfolding. It's just happening. And we will take a calm approach to it, but a firm stand based on principle," Bush told reporters. Still, these are very serious events and times. And U.S. officials know that, despite the wretched state of the Soviet economy, Moscow still remains a nuclear superpower.

"Tanks on the street in Moscow put the whole world on edge," said Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

Bush and other top administration officials had already known that takeovers by hard-liners was a distinct possibility. Gorbachev's popularity had sagged as his vast nation was more and more torn by economic and internal domestic strife.

For that reason, Bush had taken care to leave the door open to other political forces within the Soviet Union — for instance, the way he received Yeltsin on the Russian Republic president's visit earlier this year to Washington; and his meeting with Yeltsin and other reformers during last month's Moscow summit.

Of course, Yeltsin's fate also was far from clear. After armored vehicles rolled into a Moscow square to underline the new government's takeover, he climbed atop one of them to condemn the action.

Just a week ago, the White House issued its annual "National Security Strategy of the United States," emphasizing that the revised U.S. military world view was based on better U.S.-Soviet relations.

But, the report warned prophetically, "We will remain alert to the potential strategic consequences of a return to totalitarian policies."

Now, strategic planners must re-evaluate U.S. policy in light of the dramatic changes under way in Moscow.

And Bush and his Western allies can only hope that, as the president told reporters on Monday, "the taste of democracy is such that people aren't going to regurgitate it."

Tom Raum covers the White House for The Associated Press.

Jerome family proud of hospital

It seems you always hear negative things about our hospital in Jerome (St. Benedict's) and the good things never get published, so I'd like to let the people of Magic Valley know what a great hospital we have in our community.

Having just been a patient in St. Benedict's Hospital, I think they have a hospital and medical staff to be proud of. Without their very efficient help and help from above, I would not be here today. It takes a good working team to accomplish what they did with me.

Keep up the good work.

Seniors, arise and be heard!

This is a letter to the senior citizens who were born in the years 1917-1926. We are called the "notch-year babies."

If the voices of Idaho's seniors are still strong enough, we can prod our representatives, Stallings, LaRocco, Craig and Symms, to vote for HR 917.

This bipartisan bill simply patches up the notch-pooles so that those of us born between 1917 and 1926 will get benefits comparable to those born before and after them.

Since the House and Senate have readily voted themselves a $30,000 raise, it would seem that we few seniors who are still hanging in deserve to have this inequity corrected. Call your representatives and ask them why they have continued to ignore this responsibility to us by voting for HR 917. Two hundred thirty-seven members have voted for this bill — but not one from Idaho! ED CHUPA
Twin Falls

Throw the rascals out!

Bravo to Mr. Sabala on his letter to the editor! I sincerely hope that many more Idahoans feel as Mr. Sabala does about the affairs that exist in our Congress and about the pay raise that Sen. Craig thinks that he deserves.

Through lack of interest in what their congressmen have been up to by their failure to vote, the people of this nation have brewed a fine kettle of fish for us and posterity. Your children and their children for years to come will be paying a terrible price through the burden of taxes and loss of freedoms that have come about through the actions of an arrogant, self-serving group of politicians known as the Congress of the United States. Regrettably, the roots of this goes deep into every phase of public office.

"Monkey see, monkey do."
Here's another good example of bungling, so pay attention all those born between 1917 and 1926 who are on Social Security. You have been short-changed because Congress made an error in 1972 and has never corrected it.

I just received a letter from Sen. Craig and also from Rep. Stallings relative to this. Quote from Sen. Craig: "This kind of expense would threaten the financial stability of the entire Social Security system and the livelihood of millions of current and future beneficiaries." Stallings took a similar stand.

Doesn't the hypocrisy of this statement make you angry? They have been asked repeatedly to put Social Security Trust Fund off limits to Congress: The greatest danger to Social Security is from Congress. They have been asked repeatedly to make it a law to have a balanced budget.

Thousands of people have lost their savings because bank and savings and loan failures and the people will have to pay billions of dollars in additional taxes while five key figures in Congress have walked away without even a wrist being slapped.

Congress says, "We didn't do anything wrong, it's all illegal pay raises."

Pick a subject, any subject, and look at the influence-peddling and corruption that can be uncovered. It has infected every facet of life in this land.

It will not change until the people get mad. Mad enough to vote and acquire the courage and will to change it through the elective process and by putting into place safeguards that break up and control the "congressional club."

Let's start cleaning house and put Jim Jones in the Senate, along with some other good replacements. There's only one thing wrong with Jim, in my opinion, and that is he is too honest to suit some of the powers that be.

Filer gave support during crisis

Last week, while in Filer, we faced one of the most traumatic situations parents can experience — a missing child. Fortunately, after five days of extensive searching, we found our son. Our search was aided by the magnificent cooperation and support from the residents in Filer.

It is for this reason that we are writing this letter of appreciation. We would like to take this chance to express our sincere gratitude to the community of Filer.

Although our son returned to us, we now face the challenge of rebuilding our relationship. We are grateful to the Filer community and those people who helped for the second chance we have been given.

Thank you again.

Serbs, Croats continue to clash, threatening tenuous cease-fire

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Federal officials warned Monday that a shaky cease-fire in the breakaway republic of Croatia was in jeopardy as skirmishes between Croatian security forces and rebel Serbs broke out again.

The eight-member federal presidency, Yugoslavia's top ruling body, was to meet Monday to discuss the possible consequences for Yugoslavia resulting from the ouster of Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

A commission overseeing the cease-fire proclaimed Aug. 7 in Croatia by the federal presidency said the renewed skirmishes were straining the tenuous truce.

The federal panel issued a statement saying the cease-fire was not being respected in certain regions of Croatia. Officials said federal cease-fire monitoring teams traveled to troubled regions in the republic.

The success of the Serbian rebels in gaining a foothold in the breadbasket region of western Slavonia in mid-Croatia gave rise to fears that they were trying to cut Croatia in half and isolate the area.

Mortar shells exploded around the town of Okučani, a Serb stronghold that saw fierce fighting the past three days. A federal army column entered the town 70 miles southeast of Zagreb, the Croatian capital, on Saturday in an apparent effort to separate the warring sides.

Serb rebels were reported in control of most of the nearby town of Pakrac, with a large ethnic Serb population, Belgrade television reported. Fighting was also reported in other Croatian towns.

The television report said Croatian forces were withdrawing from the region. Croatian radio reported only that heavy battles were taking place in Pakrac and Okučani.

Firefights were also reported in other parts of western Slavonia and elsewhere in Croatia. There were no immediate reports of casualties from Monday's fighting.

The Croatian Interior Ministry said at least 55 people have died in fighting since the cease-fire was declared in Croatia. More than 200 people have died in clashes between ethnic Serb militants and Croatia's police and National Guard since June 25, when Croatia declared its independence from Yugoslavia.

Leaders of Croatia's Serbs, who make up 12 percent of the republic's 4.75 million people, say they want to remain part of Yugoslavia or even join Serbia.

Faction said to block any hostage deal

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — A government faction opposed to relations with the West is seeking to delay hostage releases until the 1992 U.S. presidential elections, saying the Islamic Republic can win concessions out of the United States, sources said Monday.

They pointed to a recent article in the Tehran daily Salaam that speaks for the hard-line faction, saying: "The presidential elections in the United States are near and on the eve of these elections more concessions can be received from the United States."

But with President Hashemi Rafsanjani's commitment to ending the 6-year-old saga of Westerners held by Iranian-backed groups in Lebanon, the hard-line faction can slow down but not halt the process, analysts here said.

"The Iranian government has set no conditions for its help in freeing the Westerners save the release of the Arab prisoners and Obeid," said Morteza Firoozis, political writer for the government-owned Tehran Times newspaper.

He was referring to about 400 Lebanese and Palestinians held in south Lebanon or Israel, including Sheikh Abdul-Karim Obeid, the 33-year-old leader of a militant group that snatched in southern Lebanon in July 1989 by Israel, seeking a bargaining chip for the return of seven missing servicemen.

Firoozis warned that the Lebanese kidnappers will not free more Westerners until Obeid or some of the monthly-shifter hostages are freed. The Tehran Times serves as the voice for Rafsanjani, especially to the Western world.

"If the United States expects another American hostage will be released before a positive move from Israel, then they are wrong," he said.

Accusations stall vote tally in Mexico

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The vote count from Mexico's midterm elections stalled Monday amid ruling party claims of a sweeping victory and opposition cries of foul.

Mexicans voted Sunday for a 500-member Chamber of Deputies, half the 64-member Senate and governors in six states in an election that tested a new law aimed at cleaning up the scandal-tainted image of Mexico's elections.

The new electoral system failed to deliver on the government's promise of election night returns.

Federal election officials released only fragmentary returns after the polls closed Sunday night, then shut operations without any explanation for the delay.

The count was due to resume later Monday.

In the central state of Guanajuato, opposition candidate Vicente Fox said he'd been robbed of victory.

"We're collecting all the information, all the documents of what was a giant fraud," said Fox, of the conservative National Action Party.

The government news agency Notimex said people were "left with resentment and mistrust about whether everything had been done as it should have or whether we had returned to old times, the times of tricks, deceit and endless electoral fraud."

The most serious allegations came from the Harvard-educated Fox, a former president of Coca Cola Co. in Mexico. He said ballot boxes were stolen or counted in secret and many polling places never handed out ballots for the gubernatorial race.

Report: Japanese living longer still

TOKYO (AP) — For the fifth straight year, Japanese of both sexes can expect to live longer than anyone else, according to a government report Monday.

Japanese females born in 1990 are expected to live to an average age of 81.81 years, the report said, up 0.04 years from 1989. Japanese men, however, lost 0.05 years from their life expectancy, which was 75.86 years in 1989, said the report compiled by the Ministry of Health and Welfare.

Rankin: State should fund mandated services

By Phil Sehm
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The state — not local government — should pay for schools, health care for the needy and court costs, and the 1 percent property tax limit can bring that about, tax reformer Ron Rankin said Monday.

"If the state is going to mandate it, the state should fund it," he said.

The Couer d'Alene resident brought his campaign to roll back property taxes to a Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce luncheon.

Rankin said he wants schools, courts and indigent health care off the property tax rolls and paid for by the state, because the state requires those services. Capping property taxes at 1 percent would force the state to pay for those services because local governments and school districts no longer would have the money, he said.

Rankin leads the drive to pare back Idaho property taxes and cap them at 1 percent of market value.

He denied that cutting property taxes will gut cities' and counties' ability to provide important services, calling such claims "scare tactics." People have not gotten the true picture of the 1 percent plan from the media and those who oppose the property tax cap, he said.

Specifically, people have been misled into believing that the tax cap would cripple school districts' abilities to pass bond issues, he said.

The initiative would require a two-thirds majority of registered voters to pass an override levy. But that stringent requirement wouldn't apply to bond issues, he said.

The Idaho constitution requires a two-thirds majority of people who vote — not all registered voters — and the initiative can't change the Constitution, he said.

The Legislature could fund schools by raising the state income tax by 2 percent, he said. A 2 percent increase in income taxes is fairer than property taxes, Rankin said.

One after another, Twin Falls Mayor Tom Condie, Twin Falls School District Superintendent Terrell Donich and local attorney John Hohhorst also spoke, attacking the initiative.

State estimates show that the initiative would cost Twin Falls $1.2 million a year, he said. But the 1 percent initiative gives no options for making up the loss, he said.

"Options and alternatives have to be in place before something like the 1 percent initiative can be in place. But the initiative doesn't speak in any of that," he said.

If the Legislature would allow a local-option sales tax, redistribute the statewide sales tax, or increase the state income tax, the 1 percent property tax cap might work, Condie said.

Firefighting and police protection would be the last services cut, Condie said. But they, too, likely would feel the crunch, he said.

"I would like each of you to sit on the City Council and decide where you're going to cut," Condie said.

The initiative would take more than $1 million from the Twin Falls schools and leave schools at the mercy of even more interference from the state, Donich said.

Programs required by state law — transportation and special education, for example — could not be cut. Programs not required, such as elementary-school physical education and counseling, would be cut, Donich said.

Losing $1 million would invite more state control of education, Donich said. At a time of "creeping state control in education" this would worsen matters, he said.

On a personal level, his estimates show that the initiative would increase his total tax bill by almost $1,000.

Capping property taxes at 1 percent would take $16.3 million a year from local governments, Donich said. This equals 16 percent of the state budget, he said.

To make up that money, sales and state income tax would have to rise 16 percent, he said. While the 1 percent initiative would save him $100 a year in property taxes, a 16 percent increase in state sales and income taxes would increase his total tax bill by nearly $1,000, Donich said.

"One percent is not the panacea that people think it would be," he said.

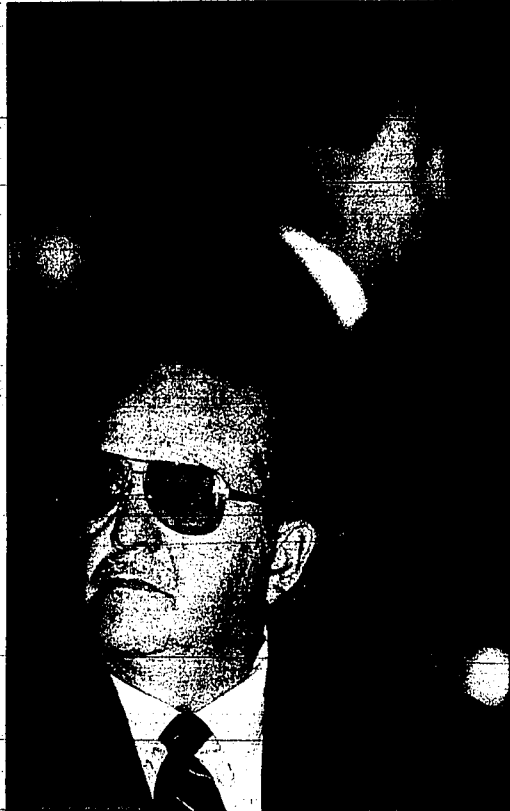

Hohhorst said raising the state income tax rate from 8 percent to 10 percent to fund schools would be a 25 percent increase, not a 2 percent, as Rankin claims.

The 1 percent plan is a "pure-and-simple appeal to the pocket book," Hohhorst said.

The real winners are big property owners, he said. "The more you own, the more you win," he said.

Union Pacific Railroad, J.R. Simplot Co., Burlington Northern and other companies are big property owners, he said.

Coroner rules shooting incident accidental

TWIN FALLS — The shooting death of 17-year-old Peter Ross last Friday morning was an accident, Twin Falls County Coroner Cal Edwards said Monday night.

Ross was killed by a single shot from a .45-caliber automatic pistol during a party in a house on the 800th block of Wendell Street. A 15-year-old girl was injured by the same bullet after it had passed through Ross's body.

"It was an accidental death," said Edwards. "The reason we hesitated is that after he was taken to the hospital there were so many people we needed to interview."

Twin Falls police have not released the name of the injured girl or the extent of her injuries.

Congressional hearing looks into impact of higher fees

TWIN FALLS — The economic impact of a substantial increase in federal grazing fees will be the focus of a congressional hearing here this morning.

The House Agriculture Subcommittee on Livestock, Dairy and Poultry will hold the hearing at the Fine Arts Building on the campus of the College of Southern Idaho, starting at 9:30 a.m.

The subcommittee's chairman, six-term Texas Democratic Rep. Charles Stenholm, is scheduled to conduct the hearing. Rep. Richard Stalling, D-Idaho, who is a member of the agriculture committee although not a member of the livestock subcommittee, will also be on hand.

Witnesses will include state and local elected officials, industry representatives, range specialists, meat packers, agricultural lenders and others.

The subcommittee will accept written testimony from anyone who wants to submit it.

3 boys arrested for stabbing calves arrested after calf tipping failed

BURLEY — Three male juveniles have been arrested for stabbing calves when they couldn't tip them over in their sleep, Cassia County authorities say.

Cassia County Sheriff's Detective Kelly Hutchinson said Monday the three youths were trying to see if they could tip over the calves standing up as they slept late Saturday night.

But when they tried to give the calves a push, the animals began to run off. The boys stabbed three of them, killing one and wounding two others.

Livestock owner Ken Turpin said the calf he lost was worth about $900 dollars, on top of the medical costs of treating the other two.

Cutting $90,000 from budget topic of CSI board meeting

TWIN FALLS — The College of Southern Idaho board of trustees will discuss how to cut $90,000 out of its budget at a 5:30 p.m. board meeting today in the college's board room.

The 1.3 percent cut was ordered by Gov. Cecil Andrus after state revenues fell short of projections.

Reapportionment panel back to square 1

By Drew Do Silver
Times-News writer

BOISE — The Legislature's reapportionment committee ended Monday pretty much where it started.

The panel, charged with making a recommendation on reapportioning the Legislature and Idaho's two congressional districts to reflect the results of the 1990 Census, lost a congressional redistricting plan, but gained two plans for redrawing legislative boundaries.

At its Twin Falls meeting three weeks ago, the bi-partisan committee approved a new dividing line between the 1st and 2nd congressional districts that the current boundary sliced through Boise.

But the committee scrapped that map

after the Legislative Council staff informed it that too many people would have remained in the 1st Congressional District.

"We are now back to square one," said committee co-chairman Rep. Pam Bengson Ahrens, R-Boise, after the decision.

The problem is that two north Boise precincts now are divided by an imaginary line.

The committee put one precinct in each congressional district and drew a new boundary, assuming few people would be affected.

But Legislative Council researchers, who are aiding the legislative line drawers, found out that more people were involved than previously thought, enough to make them unable to use the plan.

Committee members then submitted seven new proposals for a congressional map, all of which divide Boise but imaginary lines.

After considering them Monday night, the committee probably will adopt one at today's meeting in Nampa.

The two legislative plans that were presented brought charges of gerrymandering from Magic Valley Republicans and Democrats.

"It's a wild-cow plan — a wild cow could have drawn better districts," fumed Sen. Denton Darrington, R-DeClo, after Boise Democratic Rep. Jim Hansen presented his scheme.

Hansen's plan gives the Magic Valley five districts:

- District 21, covering Blaine, Camas,
- District 22, covering Burley, Filer, and
- District 23, covering

Burley City Council votes itself big raise

By Christopher R. Clark
Times-News correspondent

BURLEY — Despite the objections of one of its constituents, the Burley City Council voted itself a 33 percent pay raise Monday night.

After listening to Mary Ellen Rasmussen argue that City Council members don't need or deserve more money, five of the six councilmen voted to increase their pay from $300 to $400 a month.

Mayor Frank Bauman got a 9 percent boost, from $27,500 a year to $30,000.

Rasmussen said she felt council members should pass up the raise because they sought their positions knowing what the job paid.

But Councilman Dave Gibbons said that because three council members are up for election in November, it's possible they'll never see the wage hike scheduled to go into effect Dec. 1.

Councilman Clay Handy voted against the raise, while Gibbons, Wendell McMurray, Leonard King, Derlin Taylor and Laverne Jackson voted yes.

Taylor, Gibbons and King will be up for reelection on Nov. 5.

Bauman supported the raise, arguing that council members spend a lot of time working for city improvements.

Bauman's salary will increase by $208 a month under the new schedule, while councilmen will earned $4,800 a year.

Council rejects Addison site for center

By Phil Sehm
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Addison Avenue East site proposed for a regional juvenile center is not zoned for such a facility, the Twin Falls City Council decided Monday night.

The city's action means the committee searching for a site for the regional center might have to consider placing the facility in the old Twin Falls Industrial Park.

The decision, by unanimous vote, hinged on how the center would be zoned according to city ordinance — as a government facility, a government protective facility or a government protective agency.

Twin Falls County Prosecutor K. Ellen Baxter tried to convince the council that the center was not a protective facility, but a residential one that could be defined as a governmental facility. Police facilities, for example, are considered protective, she said.

"This would be more in the nature of Canyon View (Hospital), or the Border Patrol," Baxter said.

The Border Patrol keeps an office in the same east-end neighborhood where the center is sited in the juvenile center and sometimes houses prisoners overnight, she said.

City laws define a governmental facility as "facilities owned and operated by a governmental agency for the benefit of the general public."

"It should be obvious that the proposed facility falls squarely within the definition of a governmental facility," she said.

Baxter said she lives near the site of the proposed facility and favored placing it there.

Attorney Jeff Rolig, speaking for people who opposed putting the center there, said he saw a significant zoning problem in allowing the facility.

City code allows governmental facilities in C-1 zones, but says nothing about protective facilities. Protective facilities are allowed in C-2 zones. Government

EPA plans to crack down on unsafe storage tanks

By N.S. Norkent
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Federal inspectors will soon begin ticketing owners of underground gasoline and diesel storage tanks that don't meet the law.

In a move to cut through the red tape of federal underground storage tank regulations, the Environmental Protection Agency announced Monday it will start issuing on-the-spot citations for violations.

Much like traffic tickets, citations will give tank owners 30 days to pay the fine and correct the violation.

Federal water quality regulations require owners of underground tanks that store petroleum products to insure their systems, don't leak.

According to EPA officials, more than 100 underground tank leaks have contaminated groundwater in Idaho, some of it used as drinking water. The leaks also can create an explosion hazard in sewer lines and buildings.

Even a pinhole in an underground tanks or pipe can release more than 400 gallons of gas or diesel in a year.

The ticket system was designed as an incentive for tank owners to comply with the federal regulations, said Warren McFall, of EPA's Boise office.

"The bottom line is to get compliance, not to collect a lot of fines," McFall said.

He said the system would save EPA money and lower fines to tank owners.

"We can cover a lot more ground," McFall said.

The process is simple, he said. It offers the tank owner an opportunity to settle — to agree to pay the fine and to correct the violation.

"This is one area where we can make a real difference and protect groundwater," McFall said.

If a tank owner contests the fine or the problem is serious, EPA officials will go through a lengthy administrative compliance process now used to deal with violations, he said.

In most cases, however, it is not a question of whether their tanks comply with the law, he said.

Tank owners must have some sort of leak-detection equipment, spill and overflow prevention, some form of corrosion protection on steel tanks and pipes and proper records, according to 1988 regulations. Older tanks require more extensive monitoring.

If the requirements have not been met, the tank owner would be issued a citation.

"They're either in compliance or not," McFall said.

Coroner rules shooting incident accidental

TWIN FALLS — The shooting death of 17-year-old Peter Ross last Friday morning was an accident, Twin Falls County Coroner Cal Edwards said Monday night.

Ross was killed by a single shot from a .45-caliber automatic pistol during a party in a house on the 800th block of Wendell Street. A 15-year-old girl was injured by the same bullet after it had passed through Ross's body.

"It was an accidental death," said Edwards. "The reason we hesitated is that after he was taken to the hospital there were so many people we needed to interview."

Twin Falls police have not released the name of the injured girl or the extent of her injuries.

Reapportionment panel back to square 1

By Drew De Silver
Times-News writer

BOISE — The Legislature's reapportionment committee ended Monday pretty much where it started.

The panel, charged with making a recommendation on reapportioning the Legislature and Idaho's two congressional districts to reflect the results of the 1990 Census, lost a congressional redistricting plan, but agreed to two plans for redrawing legislative boundaries.

At its Twin Falls meeting three weeks ago, the bi-partisan committee approved a new dividing line between the 1st and 2nd congressional districts that like the current boundary bisected through Boise.

But the committee scrapped that map

after the Legislative Council staff informed it that too many people would have remained in the 1st Congressional District.

"We're now back to square one," said committee co-chairman Rep. Pam Bengson Ahrens, R-Boise, after the decision.

The problem is that two north Boise precincts now are divided by an imaginary line.

The committee put the precinct in each congressional district and drew a new boundary, assuming few people would be affected.

But Legislative Council researchers, who are aiding the legislative line-drawers, found out that more people were living in that precinct than thought enough to make them unable to use the plan.

Committee members then submitted seven new proposals for a congressional map, all of which divide Boise but in imaginary lines.

After considering them Monday night, the committee probably will adopt one at today's meeting in Nampa.

The two legislative plans that were presented brought charges of gerrymandering from Magic Valley Republicans and Democrats.

"It's a wild-cow plan — a wild cow could have drawn better districts," fumed Sen. Denton Darrington, R-Declo, after Boise Democratic Rep. Jim Hansen presented his scheme.

Hansen's plan gives the Magic Valley five districts: District 21, covering Blaine, Camas,

Burley City Council votes itself big raise

By Christopher R. Clark
Times-News correspondent

BURLEY — Despite the objections of one of its constituents, the Burley City Council voted itself a 33 percent pay raise Monday night.

After listening to Mary Ellen Rasmussen argue that City Council members don't need or deserve more money, five of the six councilmen voted to increase their pay from $300 to $400 a month.

Mayor Frank Bauman got a 9 percent boost, from $27,500 a year to $30,000.

Rasmussen said she felt council members should pass up the raise because they sought their positions knowing what the job paid.

But Councilman Dave Gibbons said that because three council members are up for election in November, it's possible they'll never see the wage hike scheduled to go into effect Dec. 1.

Councilman Clay Handy voted against the raise, while Gibbons, Wendell McMurray, Leonard King, Derlin Taylor and Laverne Jackson voted yes.

Taylor, Gibbons and King will be up for re-election on Nov. 5.

Bauman supported the raise, arguing that council members spend a lot of time working for city improvements.

Bauman's salary will increase by $208 a month under the new schedule, while councilmen will earned $4,800 a year.

Council rejects Addison site for center

By Phil Sahm
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Addison Avenue East site proposed for a regional juvenile center is not zoned for such a facility, the Twin Falls City Council decided Monday night.

The city's action means the committee searching for a site for the regional center might have to consider placing the facility in the old Twin Falls Industrial Park.

The decision, by unanimous vote, hinged on how the center was defined according to city ordinance — as a government facility, a government protective facility or a government protective agency.

Twin Falls County Prosecutor K. Ellen Baxter tried to convince the council that the center was not a protective facility, but a residential one that could be defined as a government facility. Police facilities, for example, are considered protective, she said.

This would be more in the nature of Canyon View (Hospital) or the Border Patrol," Baxter said.

The Border Patrol keeps an office in the same east-end neighborhood where the committee wanted to put the juvenile center and sometimes houses prisoners overnight, she said.

City laws define a government facility as "facilities owned and operated by a government agency for the benefit of the general public."

"It should be obvious that the proposed facility falls squarely within the definition of a government facility," she said.

Baxter said she lives near the site of the proposed facility and favored placing it there.

Attorney Jeff Rolig, speaking for people who opposed putting the center there, said he saw a significant zoning problem in allowing the facility.

City code allows governmental facilities in C-1 zones, but says nothing about protective facilities. Protective facilities are allowed in C-2 zones. Government owners of underground tanks that store petroleum products to insure their systems don't leak.

According to EPA officials, more than 100 underground tank leaks have contaminated groundwater in Idaho, some of it used as drinking water. The leaks also can create an explosion hazard in sewer lines and buildings.

Even a pinhole in an underground tanks or pipe can release more than 400 gallons of gas or diesel in a year.

The ticket system was designed as an incentive for tank owners to comply with the federal regulations, said Warren McFall, of EPA's Boise office.

"The bottom line is to get compliance, not to collect a lot of fines," McFall said.

He said the system would save EPA money and lower fines to tank owners.

"We can cover a lot more ground," McFall said.

The process is simple, he said. It offers the tank owner an opportunity to settle or agree to pay the fine and to correct the violation.

"This is one area where we can make a real difference and protect groundwater," McFall said.

If a tank owner contests the fine or the problem is serious, EPA officials will go through a lengthy administrative compliance process now used to deal with violations, he said.

In most cases, however, it is not a question of whether their tanks comply with the law, he said.

Tank owners must have some sort of leak-detection equipment, spill and overflow prevention, some form of corrosion protection on steel tanks and pipes and proper records, according to 1988 regulations. Older tanks require more extensive monitoring.

If the requirements have not been met, the tank owner would be issued a citation.

"They're either in compliance or not," McFall said.

New Magic Valley co-op program faces 1st test this fall

By H.R. Weikel

JEROME — Magic Valley schools will put to the test for the first time a new cooperative program set up to save smaller vocational education departments and help needy students.

The Cooperative of Southern Idaho organized last year and based at Jerome High School has received new funds, in particular to help disadvantaged students.

According to the director of the cooperative, a new emphasis also will be placed on technical programs.

Vocational-education programs were threatened after a law required districts' programs to meet size quotas in order to receive federal funding. Many of the smaller districts in the valley wouldn't have qualified for federal funding under the new requirements.

Last spring, 12 area schools and Twin Falls School District formed the cooperative as a way to entice funds, and Jerome volunteered to handle funding and administration.

This spring, the cooperative received a federal grant of $124,210 from the Carl D. Perkins Vocational and Applied Technology Fund.

The funds are to be used for special education purposes and for vocational training of economically disadvantaged and handicapped people.

They also will be used to purchase computers for all students.

Under the guidelines of the cooperative, programs are being developed to enhance technical education, Tybo said.

"It's a matter of how we apply what we have," Tybo said.

"For instance we need to move from making breadboards in our woodworking classes to the higher technology of making 'mother boards' for computers," he said.

number of minorities, handicapped and needy students.

School districts participating in the cooperative include: Gooding, Wendell, Bliss, Jerome, Camas County, District, Richfield, Filer, Kimberly, Glenns Ferry, Valley and Twin Falls.

Also members are the College of Southern Idaho and the Idaho School for the Deaf and Blind.

This year, Jerome and Filer high schools and one other school not yet identified will be made models for vocational education to pattern other school vocational programs after, Tybo said.

A career counselor will be hired, and a demonstration program putting handicapped students to work also will be tried.

Breakdown of funding for co-op member schools

• CSI technical courses career counseling courses	$12,421
• Jerome High School	$49,182
• Filer High School	$16,799
• For special education and handicapped support training	$6,000
• Development of technology courses	$16,799
• Administrative costs	$6,210

"Do any of those people sound like they need help?"

Twin Falls County property taxes increased in the past decade not because the levy went up, but because land values increased and because the county assessor made sure property was valued at the maximum market value, Hohnhorst said.

Stripping money from local governments likely would force cities and counties to borrow more often for public works projects, he said. Interest on borrowing always costs the taxpayer, he said.

Lincoln and Gooding counties;

- District 22, composed of Jerome County and most of Twin Falls County;
- District 23, which includes the cities of Twin Falls, Filer and Dubois;
- District 24, made up of Minidoka County and the cities of Burley and Declo in Cassia County, and;
- District 25, which contains eastern Twin Falls County and Cassia, Oneida and Franklin counties.

Hansen said he drew his map to, among other things, avoid splitting the city of Twin Falls between two districts and to contain the Magic Valley's largest concentration of Hispanics in District 24.

But Darrington had another explanation.

"Putting Kimberly and Preston together is a political move, pure and simple," he said. "His map protects three Democratic senators in Pocatello and one in Blaine County and gerrymanders Republicans out of their seats."

The other plan, submitted by Rep. Evan Frasure, R-Pocatello, drew criticism from Rep. Clint Stennett, D-Ketchum.

Frasure's plan, a modification of a highly controversial proposal he submitted at the Twin Falls meetings, groups heavily Democratic Blaine County with mostly Republican Camas, Custer, Lehmi and Lincoln counties.

"I like Hansen's plan because it keeps us where we are," Stennett said. "Eastern Idaho keeps trying to cut up the Magic Valley because they've lost population. Why should we pay? We should be reaching in, there instead."

The Frasure scheme makes the city of Twin Falls its own district, District 23.

The rest of Twin Falls County, except for the Castleford and Deep Creek precincts, would combine with the Jerome County precincts of Canyonside, Eden, Hazelton, Falls City, Rimrock and Southwest to form District 22.

The Castleford and Deep Creek precincts would be grouped with Gooding County and most of Elmore County except for Mountain Home Air Force Base to form District 21.

District 25 would contain Minidoka County and rest of Jerome County and District 24 would consist of Cassia County and four western precincts of Power County.

Frasure said his plan would provide the Magic Valley with majorities in five districts, and an even chance of dominating a sixth, District 23.

But Stennett disputed that contention, saying that the Frasure proposal effectively would remove Blaine and Lincoln counties from the Magic Valley and benefit Republicans.

Sen. Patricia McDermott, D-Pocatello, and Marti Calabretta, D-Osburn, will present their own redistricting plan at today's hearings.

Darrington, who said Frasure's plan had "some merit," said he was working with the Pocatello Republican to devise a Magic Valley plan. That won't be ready for awhile, he said.

Any plan the committee comes up with will be scrutinized to make sure it doesn't dilute Hispanic or native American voting strength, Rudy Pena of the Idaho Hispanic Caucus told the committee.

The caucus, which is just getting involved in the redistricting process, will concentrate its work on three areas of the state, with largely Hispanic populations: Canyon County, the Magic Valley and Bingham and Blaine counties.

The caucus will also coordinate with Indian tribes to advance both groups' interests, he said.

Despite what some of the remap committee members believe, Pena said a 25 percent Hispanic district can be "rather easily constructed" in Canyon County.

"For us, there is a world of difference between a district that is 25 percent Hispanic and one which is 15 or even 10 percent Hispanic," he said. "And we fully intend to fight for that difference."

But Sen. Jerry Thorne, R-Nampa, remained skeptical.

"There's no way you can take a precinct in Wilder, a precinct in Caldwell and a precinct in Nampa and make a district out of it."

Soviet visitors view crisis with alarm

Seattle Times

SEATTLE — For a number of Soviet citizens aboard a Soviet research vessel docked in Seattle, news of the ouster of Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev was met with pessimism and uncertainty.

While many were shocked, some held out hope that the U.S.-Soviet friendship will continue.

Dan Danilov, a Seattle immigration attorney, was visiting the Soviet ship, Academic Shirshov, Sunday night when he learned of Gorbachev's removal via a telephone call on his cellular phone.

Danilov said that when he told ship Capt. Vilen Alper, the captain was shocked, but then said he hopes the friendly relations between the two countries will continue. Alper also said, "Such sudden changes in government do no good for anybody," Danilov said.

A short time later, Danilov encountered a group of young crewmen. When he told them the news, the reaction was momentary silence.

But then members of the group said they want the friendship between the United States and the Soviet Union to continue. One crewman, however, showed his contempt for Communist rule, saying, "Anything is better than Communism," Danilov said.

Danilov was aboard the Soviet vessel to collect the baggage of his client, Evgenii Kassakine, 33, a Soviet businessman who jumped from the ship near Port Townsend Aug. 10.

Kassakine, who has been allowed to remain in this country for now, has been flown to Portland by a businessman there who offered him a job.

The Academic Shirshov was scheduled to leave for San Francisco Monday and stop later in Los Angeles before returning to the Soviet Union. The ship was here on a goodwill tour to commemorate the 25th anniversary of the first Russian ship's visit to the West Coast of the U.S.

One man on the ship, from Kiev, said the coup was illegal.

"It is scandalous. Only the parliament can remove Gorbachev," the man said. He declined, however, to repeat what he said. An official interpreter intervened and said no comments would be given. "Nobody knows anything. Please, go away," she demanded.

Two crew members removed the stairway leading to the ship. But several Soviet passengers agreed to talk.

They were hungry for details: "Are you sure those were tanks in Moscow?" "What has happened to Gorbachev?" "Did Yeltsin say anything?" referring to the reformist president of the Russian republic, Boris Yeltsin.

The reaction of four Soviet journalists was unanimous: "We are worried. We are in turmoil."

"This effectively means the end of democratic changes which started to take root in our country," said a reporter for Soviet TV and radio. "Those changes were associated with Gorbachev."

A colleague was more outspoken: "They have drowned Lithuania in blood, now they will drown the whole country in blood."

He agreed that view was very pessimistic but said he can hardly expect niceties from the new regime of hard-liners.

All worried about families, relatives and friends in Moscow who may be affected if massive upheavals ensue.

protective agencies can get special-use permits for the C-1 zone.

Orton had told the Twin Falls County officials that he thought the detention center could be defined as a governmental facility, and would be permitted in the zone.

"If protective facilities were allowed in C-1, the language would not be in C-2," Rolig said.

The kinds of kids housed at the center would make it a protective facility, he said.

The center would house between nine and 12 juveniles. They would not be violent offenders, such as rapists and murderers, Kurt Friedehauer, of the state Youth Services Center in St. Anthony told the council and residents.

Kids sent to the center would have gotten in trouble for crimes such as burglary, he said. Residents worried about their safety should realize that these youngsters are already roaming the streets and they at least would be supervised and watched in the juvenile center.

Kids rarely would stay longer than five to seven days at the center, Friedehauer said.

Neighborhood residents told the council they did not want the center. A couple of them thought the desert would make a nice place for it.

"I love juveniles. But I'm not so fond of juvenile delinquents," Jack Wright of Kimberly Nurseries said.

Juveniles have stolen trucks and ruined trees at his facility in the past couple of years, Wright said. Keeping 55 vehicles within two blocks of the center might be a bit of a temptation, he said.

Frank Ireton, who lives on Carriage Lane, said the old Q Bar building where the center would be located was not up to standard and that the lot on which it sits is too narrow on which to expand. He also questioned whether nine beds would handle teens from six counties.

Real estate appraiser Gary Kounik said the center would hurt property values.

"Please, don't make us the prisoners of this facility," he said.

One by one, the council members voted against the center, saying the facility appeared to be a protective one and therefore not allowed in the zone under city law.

"It's a tough job finding a place for these facilities," Mayor Tom Condie said. "I don't know if anyone really wins in a decision like this."

After the council voted, City Attorney Fritz Wonderlich urged a second vote on whether the center, according to city code, would be a government protective agency or government protective facility. If the council decided it was an agency, the juvenile center could be allowed in the proposed area on a special-use permit.

Once again, the council voted unanimously, saying it was a protective facility and allowable in a C-2 zone.

Snoring wars have meant sleepless nights for couple

DEAR ABBY: My husband says that I snore, but I know I don't. One thing I know for certain is that HE snores, and if I don't fall asleep before he does, I am up all night. He tells me that it is up all night because of MY snoring, which is ridiculous because if he were up, he wouldn't be keeping me up with his snoring. How can we find out the truth? Don't suggest we have a third party sleep with us, as I am very old-fashioned.

Dear Abby Abigail VanBuren

snoring should say, "I am awake, so YOU must be snoring!" And that should settle it! DEAR ABBY: My problem is a husband who thinks he's funny. I had a very nice dinner party at home the other night and was especially proud of the way everything turned out. Well, when the guests were leaving, my husband said, "Come back soon because the only time I get a decent meal around here is when we have company." Everybody laughed, but I wanted to crawl into a hole. He said that once before and it got a big laugh, so he pulled it again. In the first place, Abby, it's not true. I pride myself on always feeding my family very well. I told him later I didn't think that crack was very funny, but he said, "I was only kidding."

DEAR TICKED: You could say (only kidding, of course). "The only time my ever-lovin' Scrooge gives me money for fancy groceries is when we have company."

DEAR ABBY: You had a letter in your column about people who were always mooching rides, and these moochers were called "snoorers." I would like to know where that term came from. We are one of the 200 families in the United States with the name of "Schnorr," and we object to the use of our name with such a meaning. We hope that the Schnorr families in Oregon, New Mexico, Illinois and all other states feel as we do and that you get 199 more letters of protest. - THE SCHNORRS OF ARIZONA states feel as we do and that you get 199 more letters of protest.

DEAR SCHNORRS: The verb "to beg" is "schnorrer" in German. From it comes the noun "schnorrer" - which means "a beggar, a panhandler, a moocher, a cheapskate, a chiseler, a bum, a drifter or a borrower." It can also mean a compulsive bargain hunter, bargainer or an impudent ingenuit. The above information was "schnorred" (borrowed without permission) from "The Joys of Yiddish" - a delightful and authoritative book written by Leo Rosten.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Circumstances take sudden, dramatic turn in your favor. You'll win emotionally, financially. You'll find cause by reading between lines, studying small print. Taurus represented.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Investigate, discern motives, ask questions concerning written material. Individual close to you could be involved in nefarious scheme. Don't abandon principles, refuse to condone.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): What appeared to be "lost cause" will boomerang in your favor. You'll win friends and influence important people. Focus on popularity, speculation, sex appeal. Embrace from emotional coo!

What's what?

A sloth in death
You know how sloths hang upside down? They've been known to just go on hanging there after they die.

To prevent drunken driving, says a "perfect hostess," don't serve drinks during the last two hours of a party. Could work.

Still, theists nearby suggest there might not be any "last two hours" at such a party.

In computer slang, "bogosity" is the degree to which something is bogus.

Among the righteous punishers of old were some perfectionists — for murring and pinning, they insisted, the tar had to be fine, the feathers, goose.

CODEINE
Q. When was codeine invented?
A. In 1832. A French chemist named Pierre Jean Robiquet isolated it from opium. Same year a Baltimore shipyard turned out the first true clipper ship.

Thomas Hastings of Utica, N.Y., composed the "Rock of Ages" music; Boston's Samuel Smith wrote the lyrics to "America." And cowboys first showed up in Hawaii. Some year.

Didn't you know a grasshopper has five eyes?

An average horse in an average barn with an average pasture — what kind of horse is that, anyhow? — only needs two hours of sleep a night, according to the experts.

It was Rene Descartes who said he "proved the existence of God mathematically."

DEVOUT IRISH
Some hardly ever say "Irish" without saying "Irish Catholic." What many don't realize is it was the Irish devout who established America's first "Presbytery" Church, in Virginia, and first Methodist Church, in Manhattan.

When a criminal takes a hostage, this is said to be the order of police action: 1. Persuasion. 2. Chemical weapons. 3. Snipers. 4. SWAT team.

Can an insect actually capture a bird? You bet. One large praying mantis was seen to clutch into control one small hummingbird.

Queen bees control whether their offspring is male or female.

"When will the next one be along, Daddy?"

Change in Soviet leadership sends stock prices plunging

NEW YORK — Stock prices plummeted Monday in heavy trading on fear of instability caused by the ouster of Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks fell 69.99 points to 2,898.03. Earlier, the key index was down as much as 106 points in panic-driven selling that engulfed the market the moment it opened. The Dow's decline was the steepest since Oct. 9, when it fell 78.22 points on record-high oil prices and threats by Saddam Hussein of Iraq. The plunge in the Dow by more than 50 points set off the New York Stock Exchange's "circuit breaker" rule. The rule is designed to prevent a price freefall by limiting computer-driven selling.
