Bush offers tax breaks, nuclear cuts

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush on Tuesday night proposed election-year tax breaks and business incentives to revive America's economy and vowed, "We're going to lift this nation out of hard times." Bush also outlined dramatic cuts in the U.S. nuclear arsenal.

In his State of the Union speech, the president challenged the Democrat-controlled Congress to back his economic programs by March 20 or face a political fight. Invoking Persian Gulf War rhetoric, he vowed the recession "will not stand."

The centerpiece of his economic plan was a bid to put more money in peoples' paychecks by lowering tax withholding rates — even though it would mean smaller refunds a year from now. Bush said it would pump $25 billion into the economy. It would increase take-home pay by an average of $300 for more than 90 million wage-earners, the White House said.

Bush also called for a tax credit of up to $5,000 for first-time homebuyers and tax credits and deductions to help low- and middle-income Americans obtain health insurance. He proposed a substantial boost in tax breaks that businesses can claim for depreciating equipment, and insisted anew on a capital gains tax cut.

In a nationally televised address, Bush discussed the benefits of a reduced military threat from the disintegrated Soviet Union. "The American taxpayer bore the brunt of the (Cold War) burden, and deserves a hunk of the glory," he said.

Bush said he would ask Russian President Boris Yeltsin on Saturday to agree to eliminate all land-based multiple warhead ballistic missiles. If Yeltsin agrees, Bush said, the United States will eliminate all MX missiles, reduce the number of warheads on Minuteman missiles to just one and cut the number of warheads on sea-based missiles by about one-third.

The arms proposal would mark the first time since 1945 that the United States has no nuclear weapons in production.

Over six years, the president proposed to cut defense spending by $50 billion and use the savings to finance tax reductions.

Bush's plan also would freeze federal spending on most domestic programs at current levels.

The Democrats sought to portray the tax cuts certain to come in terms of haves versus have-nots.

"We seek a fundamental change from the unwise economic policies of the past 12 years," House Speaker Thomas S. Foley said. "We will insist that this time, the benefits must go to working families, not to the privileged."

"We will insist that a middle class tax cut be paid for not by taking money that should go to schools and health care, but by cutting on the richest of our citizens, at long last, to pay their fair share," he said.

For all of the hoopla about Bush's plan over the last two months, it was relatively

Vice President Dan Quayle, left, and House Speaker Tom Foley lead applause for President Bush as he prepares to deliver his State of the Union address.

Key proposals from address

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Here are some highlights of the proposals President Bush outlined in his State of the Union address Tuesday night:

- Immediately adjust income-tax withholding tables to boost Americans' take-home pay. Increases in take-home pay would range from around $175 for single taxpayers to more than $600 for two-income families.

- Raise the personal exemption for dependent children, now $2,300 per child, to $2,800. It would take effect next Oct. 1.

- Cut defense spending by $50 billion over this and the next five years. If Russians agree to scrap all land-based multiple warhead ballistic missiles, the United States would eliminate all MX missiles, reduce to one the number of warheads on Minuteman missiles and cut the number of warheads on sea-based missiles by about one-third.

- Freeze federal spending on most domestic programs at current levels. Benefit programs like Social Security would be excluded.

Provide tax credits and vouchers to help low and middle-income families buy health insurance, up to a maximum of $3,750 per family.

- Give first-time home buyers a tax credit of up to $5,000 for homes built this year, with the credit spread over two years.

- Allow first-time home buyers to withdraw up to $10,000 from Individual Retirement Accounts without penalty.

- Student loan interest would be deductible for all families.

- Cut the capital gains tax, or the tax on profits from the sale of stock, real estate and other assets, from its current top rate of 28 percent to a maximum rate of 15.4 percent for assets held at least three years.

- Let businesses take an extra 15 percent depreciation allowance to encourage them to invest in more equipment and machinery.

Grand jury examines death of 2-year-old girl

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A grand jury probe into the death of 2-year-old Amanda Marie Hostetter continued late into the evening Tuesday.

Court officials confirmed that the grand jury was meeting, but could not comment on what the panel was examining.

A look at the witnesses called to testify before the grand jury Tuesday made it clear, however, that the toddler's death was the issue of the day.

Waiting in the corridor outside Courtroom No. 1 of the Twin Falls County Judicial Building were Twin Falls County Coroner Cal Edwards, two Twin Falls emergency medical technicians, Det. Les Howells from the Twin Falls police department, and Officer Bob Peace who tried to revive Amanda Hostetter after police received an emergency call that she had stopped breathing.

Several other witnesses waited their turn inside the courtroom. The grand jury met in a separate courtroom.

Among those waiting were David and LaDonna Johns of Wendell, who told police one day after Amanda died that they had seen bruises on the child when visiting her home at Christmas.

Several witnesses had yet to testify when the grand jury took a dinner break at 6 p.m., and court officials expected testimony

Little Lord Moynihan faces challenge for his seat

The Associated Press

LONDON — Little Lord Moynihan, a toddler from Manila, arrived Tuesday in Britain where he may eventually take his seat in the House of Lords.

But 1-year-old Daniel, the son of the late Lord Moynihan and his fifth wife, Jina Sabigala, faces a challenge for his seat from an alleged older half-brother.

The elder Moynihan, a Manila massage parlor owner who fled Britain more than 20 years ago to escape fraud charges, died in November at age 55.

According to Moynihan's obituary in the Times of London, he had four daughters and two sons, Daniel and Andrew.

Andrew's mother, Editha Ruben, 29, who owns Manila's Flamingo massage parlor, claims her son, born in March 1989, is Moynihan's firstborn boy and therefore heir to the title.

In July 1990, however, Moynihan took out a notice in The Times announcing the boy had died. During his 1989 divorce from Editha, he said Andrew was not his son.

Daniel's guardian and uncle, Charles Vance, said Jina, 26, has produced marriage and birth certificates verifying her son's right to the title.

The House of Lords reported the dispute might not be resolved for at least 18 years. Andrew can petition the Lord Chancellor to make his claim.

Gooding commissioners search for $718,421

By Terrell Williams
Times-News correspondent

GOODING — Local governments and taxing districts in Gooding County went to Plan "B" Tuesday.

Faced with the loss of $718,421 in taxes that will not be collected this year because of an accounting error in the county clerk's office, cities, county departments, school districts and hospitals were preparing to defer purchases and freeze spending.

No one was talking about layoffs yet, but most government agency officials were quick to point out that payroll and employee benefits were the biggest parts of their budgets.

"Our budget didn't have an ounce of fat to begin with," Sheriff Robert Aja said. "We've been cut to the bare bones right from the start."

County Clerk John Myers said he'll try to find places to cut $200,000 without affecting employees and their pay.

"In the next few days, I'll definitely sit in front of it and do what I can," Aja said. "But there really is no place to cut anywhere."

As a result of an incorrect set of figures Myers entered on the 1991 tax levy form, tax collections this year will be based on net assessed valuation rather than on net value, which excludes the homeowner's exemption.

That means that Gooding County taxing districts, which include the Jerome and Buhl school districts, will collect about $700,000 less than they budgeted for.

Gooding County Attorney Lynn Nelson said there's no way to legally reverse the error, or to assess the missing taxes, but Gooding County commissioners pledged Monday to try to find a solution. A few government entities that rely on property taxes were holding out hope for relief on Tuesday.

"We're optimistic that the money will be recovered," said Gooding School District superintendent James Cobble, whose district stands to lose almost $135,000. "Right now, other than holding back, being conservative and having a wait-and-see attitude, I can't say that we have any specific areas earmarked yet (for cuts), and

Search for jury goes on

MILWAUKEE (AP) - Serial killer Jeffrey Dahmer watched quietly Tuesday while lawyers asked potential jurors for his sanity trial if they would be disgusted by testimony about cannibalism, dismemberment and sex with corpses.

Eighteen potential jurors were sequestered

Tuesday night. Attorneys wanted to assemble a pool of 28 people from which to choose the final 12 jurors and two alternates.

The eight people had been excused since jury selection began Monday.

Dahmer has pleaded guilty but insane to slaying 15 young males in Milwaukee.

Gem GOP senators like Bush's ideas; Demo Stallings demurs

States News Service

WASHINGTON — Three members of Idaho's congressional delegation liked President Bush's State of the Union address proposals for cutting taxes.

Two-thirds of them thought the president could find the money to pay for them.

The dissenter, Rep. Richard Stallings, said the president was making promises he can't keep.

"Individually, the proposals were good," Stallings, a Democrat and U.S. Senate candidate, said Tuesday. "But together they'll be expensive, and he'll have to come up with a plan to pay for those programs."

But both Republican Sens. Larry Craig and Steve Symms said Bush's plans were economically sound, and that the Democrats should meet the president's March 20 deadline for passing them.

"It's the kind of growth package many of us have talked about since 1986," Craig said. "Several of us have introduced key parts last year, like the capital gains tax cut, only to be totally ignored by the leadership of the House and the Senate. The president said that ignoring can no longer go on. The Congress has to produce by March 20."

"The monkey's really on the Democrats' back," Symms said. "If they want to put the country ahead of their party, they'll cooperate and pass an economic recovery package before March 20. If they want to put the monkey's back on the country, they'll bicker, argue and nip-tick."

All three congressmen liked Bush's idea of allowing parents to deduct from their taxes the interest they pay on student loans, and all three agreed with Bush that the capital gains tax should be cut, although Stallings thought the 15 percent reduction was too steep.

"Those folks who would be most pleased with the message would be the very wealthy," Stallings said. "The bulk of those tax cuts and benefits would go to the top 5 and 10 percent. To those Americans without health insurance, the tax cuts won't benefit them."

Bush announced a Democratic proposal for a "pay-or-play" health-care system, under which employers would be required to supply health insurance to employees or pay a government fund to do so.

"He really slam-dunked the pay-or-play kind of thing, which is tantamount to a national health-care program," Craig said. "That would be totally federally operated. That's what so many of us don't want to see happen."

to continue until 10 p.m. or later.

An autopsy performed on Jan. 22, two days after Amanda's death, showed that she died of massive internal injuries caused by a severe blow or blows to the stomach, according to Edwards.

The five-in boyfriend of Amanda's mother was arrested the same night and charged with first-degree murder. Donnell "Bud" Stradley, 28, remains in the Twin Falls County Jail without bond.

Stradley told police he had been roughhousing with the girl and tossed her onto a water bed, where she hit her stomach on the wooden frame, according to a detective's affidavit in his court file.

A preliminary hearing to determine if enough evidence exists to move the case into District Court is scheduled for Feb. 6.

That hearing, estimated to take three days, may be canceled if the grand jury indicts Stradley on the charge.

An indictment would move the case directly into District Court without a preliminary hearing.

The 16-member Twin Falls County grand jury was convened in December and handed up 40 drug-related indictments after meeting for three days.

Prosecutors said then that the grand jury would probably not be discharged for about five months, and would gather periodically to investigate allegations of child sexual abuse and an unsolved murder.

The grand jury meets behind closed doors, with only the prosecutor and witnesses allowed inside.

Union

over the last two months, it was relatively modest in scope. For example, it did not include a broad-based middle-class tax cut to fight the recession although the administration had said that it was being seriously considered.

The president openly acknowledged that his election-year message to the nation would be read by many as a pious theme for his campaign — an aside that drew groans from the assembled Democrats. The White House also hopes it will arrest his slide in the polls.

"I am doing what I think is right; I am proposing what I know will help," Bush said.

The historic House chamber was standing-room-only, packed with lawmakers and members of the Bush Cabinet. In an unusual opening, Bush began with a joke about the high expectations for his speech. "I wanted to be sure it would be a hit — but I couldn't convince Barbara to deliver it for me."

Recalling the allied victory over Iraq in the Persian Gulf War, Bush told Congress, "we must stand together to solve problems at home."

"We can bring the same courage and sense of common purpose to the economy that we brought to Desert Storm," Bush said. "And we can defeat hard times together."

But on a political note, Bush evaded a question about his proposals by March 20 or face a fight from the White House. "From the day after that, if it must be: the battle is joined," the president said. "And you know, when principle is at stake, I relish a good fair fight."

Bush stressed the urgency of moving quickly. "The people cannot wait. They need help now. ... We are going to lift this nation out of hard times inch by inch and day by day, and those who would stop us had best step aside. Because I look at hard times and I make this vow: This will not stand."

Cautioning against expectations for a quick fix, Bush said, "None of this will happen with a snap of the fingers — but it will happen."

Announcing changes in America's military structure, Bush said he will shut down the production line for the B-2 bomber after 20 planes are built, cancel the small ICBM program, halt production of new warheads for sea-based ballistic missiles and stop production of the MX missile.

In addition, he announced a freeze on purchases of advanced cruise missiles.

"These are actions we are taking on our own — because they are the right thing to do," the president said.

A White House statement released with Bush's speech said the United States will halt production of VB8 warheads for Trident missiles. That would mark the first time since 1945 that the United States has no nuclear weapons in production.

we wouldn't have, without staff involvement."

"We are worried and concerned about it, but we feel that we've got to allow the county to come up with some method or way through the state to rectify 'the problem,'" said Gooding mayor David Adair, whose city would lose $97,000.

But others weren't optimistic. In Wendell, Mayor George Benson was predicting the city's shortfall would be twice as great as Myers had estimated.

The city is looking at a loss of $43,000, not $20,000, Benson said.

"I think it's real poor management," Benson said.

Benson added that he is hoping for relief, but not expecting it. He could not predict where spending cuts will be made if the county cannot find the money.

"We're on such a tight budget now that anything we cut is a great loss to us," Benson said.

Meanwhile, he said, department heads have been told not to spend money as planned.

Meanwhile in Hagerman, Mayor Jim Martin said his city will just stop spending if funding is short the predicted $10,000.

Planned street paving might have to be cut, he said, and the City Council would have to study the budget for other cuts.

The Wendell School District is $52,000 short, but Superintendent Jerry Manly predicted that wouldn't cause the School Board to change its mind about holding a March 10 bond issue election to build a new high school.

"We are still in need of a facility," he said.

Options, he said, may be to use the district's fund balance, ask voters for an override levy or reduce services.

The county's hospital board will meet on Thursday to decide where cuts could be made, board secretary Lorraine Morrison said, adding, "That is a big question."

The Wendell Fire District, which may lose about $5,000, still will be able to make its scheduled $17,000 payment on a new fire truck, Chief Keith Hosack said. Other expenditures will be made as needed "just to get by," he said.

Harry Surplus of the Wendell Cemetery District said the loss of $3,000 will not be serious, although a planned landscaping project of a new area will have to wait.

House committee OKs benefits

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House committee, with the support of President Bush, gave bipartisan approval Tuesday to a bill granting a second 13-week extension of jobless benefits to victims of the recession.

The Ways and Means Committee's voice vote, Bush's endorsement and subsequent praise by a key Senate chairman made it likely the measure would become law quickly, perhaps by next week. It also meant that last year's four-month partisan fight over the issue would almost certainly be avoided.

The election-year, $2.7 billion extension of the benefits was initiated by Democrats but quickly embraced by Bush. Speedy enactment of the legislation would let both parties claim credit for helping 600,000 Americans expected to use up their jobless benefits by the end of February, and hundreds of thousands of others whose coverage will expire soon thereafter.

"Given that there are American workers whose benefits are expiring, I hope the bill will be on my desk to sign prior to the congressional recess scheduled for Feb. 7," Bush wrote in a letter to Ways and Means Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill.

A year ago, Bush killed two versions of the bill, arguing that the economy was sound.

After four months of conflict with congressional Democrats, and with the recession cutting away at his popularity, he finally signed a letter to Rostenkowski. Unlike the first two, it paid for the extra benefits by speeding up some tax collections and making other changes.

This year, Democrats initially proposed paying for the extended coverage by having Bush declare an emergency, which would let the government borrow the money.

Bush balked at that idea, complaining that it would swell federal deficits that are already setting records.

Under an alternative crafted by Rostenkowski and House Minority Leader Robert Michel, R-Ill., — and backed by Bush — the extension will be financed largely with a $2.2 billion surplus the administration says it has uncovered.

The remaining $500 million of the cost would be paid for by temporarily requiring big corporations to make slightly larger advance payment of their estimated income tax liability.

The legislation enacted last year gives people an extra 13 or 20 weeks of extra jobless coverage — depending on what state they live in — beyond the regular 26 weeks of coverage.

The new bill would take 13 weeks onto that. The program would expire July 4.

Senate Finance Committee Chairman Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, hailed the Ways and Means bill and said his committee would vote on an identical or similar measure Thursday.

Bentsen said he believed Congress would send a completed measure to Bush by the end of next week.

Greg Scott gets a rack of ribs ready for lunch customers at Jilly's — a federally operated restaurant in Marietta, Ga.

Feds run restaurants, no 'ribbing' involved

MARIETTA, Ga. (AP) — The walls are adorned with posters of legendary film gangsters, but don't be fooled.

This is no den for criminals.

At Jilly's restaurant in the Atlanta suburb of Marietta, the barbecue ribs menu doesn't change unless Uncle Sam says so. What's more, the waitresses and cooks come recommended by the FBI.

The federal government has operated two Jilly's — the other in suburban Sandy Springs — since drug agents seized the assets of businessman Carl Coppola in 1986. The restaurants, each valued at about $1 million, were confiscated along with $3.3 million in drug profits.

The government would like to unload the rib joints, as it quickly does with most seized assets. But it can't sell them until Coppola exhausts his appeals. Prosecutors say Coppola ran a cocaine and marijuana smuggling enterprise between Atlanta and Fort Lauderdale, Fla. He is serving a 55-year sentence.

Though a metro-wide Atlanta Ribs Challenge award displayed in the foyer predates the feds, Jilly's ribs in Marietta are still rated above average.

"A good, but somewhat sweet rib," said Lee Walburn, editor of Atlanta magazine and a barbecue connoisseur.

"But just as a citizen, I'm opposed to government ownership of barbecue joints," he said. "It's one of the last pure things in this country."

A contractor was hired to run the eatery, which are part of a local franchise chain, and an employee, Michael Eilermann, was given the manager's job in Marietta. The unusual set-up has given him an unenviable education in bureaucracy.

Anyone he hires, from assistant managers to cooks to waitresses, must undergo an FBI criminal background check. If he wants to change a menu item or paint the bathroom, he needs U.S. Marshal Service approval.

When something is broken or new equipment needed, Jilly's must take bids and wait for the wheels of the bureaucracy to turn.

"We had to do a major roof repair and air conditioning several years ago," Eilermann said. "It took probably six to eight months to get final approval on the work. And it was work that needed to be done — it was summer."

"That's working with the government," he said with a sigh. "There are a lot of people who have to say yes or no."

If the decor seems a little ironic, no-one's complaining. On the walls hang posters of movie stars, notably gangsters played by Humphrey Bogart and James Cagney.

Raymond Navarro, supervisor of seized assets in the U.S. marshal's Atlanta office, said the restaurants' day-to-day operations are left to the contractor. But he must approve exhibits with the largest increases in their medical plan costs — up 19.6 percent and 18.4 percent, respectively.

Settlement nets $566,736 gain for schools

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — An electronics and appliance company has agreed to give Florida schools $566,736 in computer equipment to settle complaints it cheated consumers, officials said Tuesday.

Tandy Name Brand Retail Group will contribute 120 teacher work stations, including computers, software, printers and other equipment. The company will install the work stations and provide free training seminars.

Attorney General Bob Butterworth accused Tandy, based in Fort Worth, Texas, of overcharging for products, delaying refunds and using bait-and-switch tactics in its Video Concepts and McDuff appliance and electronics stores.

Tandy, which has about 70 McDuff and Video Concepts stores in Florida, didn't admit to wrongdoing.

Attorneys clash over fundamental rape questions

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Attorneys in Mike Tyson's rape trial clashed Tuesday as each side tried to probe potential jurors' fundamental feelings about rape: whether a woman might "ask for it" or lie about it.

Seven jurors — five men and two women — have been seated. Marion Superior Court Judge Patricia J. Gifford estimated that selection of a panel of 12 jurors and four alternates would take about two days, with opening statements as early as Wednesday afternoon.

Tyson, 25, has been charged with rape, criminal deviate conduct and confinement. If convicted, the former world heavyweight boxing champion could be sentenced to 63 years in prison.

"Do you think someone could make a false accusation of rape?" defense attorney Kathleen Beggs asked one prospective juror. Prosecution objections that the question was "fact-sensitive" to the case prevented an answer.

Deputy Prosecutor Barbara Trathen objected again when Beggs asked, "Do you have the feeling that a woman who accuses someone of rape must be telling the truth or she wouldn't have come forward?"

Defense attorneys returned the objections later when special prosecutor Greg Garrison tried to ask about whether bad judgment by victims justified the crimes committed against them.

"Some people ask for it — and get what they ask for?" Garrison asked one potential juror.

"Sometimes," replied the man, who was released from the jury pool.

Tyson's accuser, an 18-year-old Miss Black America contestant, told police she met Tyson at a pageant rehearsal on July 18 and went with him to his hotel room, where in the pre-dawn hours of July 19 he restrained her on the bed and raped her.

The boxer, who has been accused often of fondling women, insists his accuser consented to sex.

Among the jurors seated Tuesday were a 37-year-old ex-Marine and IBM marketing manager and a 31-year-old woman who works for the Indianapolis Chamber of Commerce.

Employers foot 13% increase in health costs

NEW YORK (AP) — The cost of providing traditional medical coverage to employees rose 13 percent last year, according to a study released Tuesday.

Businesses paid an average $3,573 per employee in 1991, up from $3,161 per worker this year. The previous year, said A. Foster Higgins & Co., an employee benefits consulting firm. The survey was based on responses from 2,409 employers nationwide.

John Erb, the study's author, predicted those costs would jump to $3,800 per worker this year. Thirty percent of employers surveyed said their costs exceeded $4,000 per worker last year.

To shoulder the increase, more employers are asking their workers to contribute a greater portion of the costs. Deductibles, for example, increased an average $200 per worker last year, from $150 in 1990, survey results showed. They also showed that average out-of-pocket expenditures for coverage rose $50 to $2,100 for individuals and $100 to $2,100 for family coverage.

In addition, the survey found that more employers are implementing managed care programs as cheaper alternatives to traditional fee-for-service plans.

Regionally, employers in South Atlantic and New England regions were hit with the largest increases in their medical plan costs — up 19.6 percent and 18.4 percent, respectively.

Man faces charges for bank fraud

DALLAS (AP) — A 52-year-old man accused of courting women to bilk them out of their cash will spend Valentine's Day in federal court.

Robert John Koch faces a Feb. 14 arraignment here on charges of stealing thousands of dollars from 13 women in 10 states. He also faces state charges in Wisconsin, Missouri and Virginia.

Dubbed the "sweetheart swindler," Koch allegedly wooed hundreds of women with promises of lasting relationships and even marriage, then persuaded them to give him their money by promising to set them up in business.

Let's not repeat 1930's disastrous protectionism

America was at the rock bottom of a farm recession — 10 years of depressed prices for grain and livestock that had driven thousands of farmers off the land.

In the cities, banks and factories were closing. Workers who could find their pick of jobs two years earlier were begging for them now.

America's smelting industries were under siege from cheap imports, and nobody was buying American.

The president, his popularity sinking fast at home, took his plea for international cooperation and free trade abroad, to the scene of past triumphs. He came home empty-handed.

Sound familiar?

It happened 62 years ago, and it provided the final shove for America into the Great Depression.

The Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act of 1930 began life as a relief bill for beleaguered farmers, who had begun their depression a decade before the rest of the nation. Wheat was selling for 20 cents a bushel, corn for even less. A bottle of milk sold retail for a nickel.

The broader economy was in a free fall as credit evaporated, paper assets disappeared and the Federal Reserve Board sat on its hands, refusing to increase the money supply.

Unemployment, which had been at 6 percent in 1928, was at 12 percent and rising fast.

Sen. Reed Smoot, a venerable Utah Republican and chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, assured President Herbert Hoover that a few selective trade barriers would buy some time for a few industries and their workers.

Hoover knew better, but he signed the bill anyway — and with it his political death warrant.

In short order, Smoot-Hawley took America out of the business of international trade. Unable to sell their products in America, other countries stopped buying American. By the end of 1931, unemployment was a 21 percent. By the time Hoover left office in March 1933, it was at 34 percent.

There's a plausible danger that President Bush could find himself in a similar position.

Japan-bashing has taken on a life of its own following the failure of Bush's trade mission to Japan, and any politician who stands in front of that steamroller is in jeopardy.

Rep. Richard Gephardt already has more than 200 co-sponsors in the House for his latest protectionist bill, elements of which bear a striking similarity to Smoot-Hawley.

The real danger is that if a major American company facing competition from Japan fails — a Chrysler, say, or a Motorola — the tidal wave will become irresistible.

The bad news for America and worse for Idaho, where one-fourth of our economy is directly linked to export of agricultural products, timber and minerals.

Bush and cooler heads in Congress need to act, and soon:

- We desperately need a national industrial policy, a combination of federal government investment and tax breaks to protect and expand key industries.

- Except for environmental and worker safety laws, we need to unshackle American industry from regulation.

- Congress needs to approve and Bush needs to sign the Mexican Free Trade Bill. With Europe becoming a unified economy entity this year and Japan Inc. growing ever more powerful, we need a North American common market.

- Increased access by American products to Japanese markets must be a quid pro quo for any additional Japanese expansion in American markets.

The bottom line is that Japan needs American markets at least as much as America needs Japanese capital. As it stands, both economies could be in jeopardy.

It's a different world from 1930, but a few things never change. Amnesia, as it applies to economics, is still fatal.

Victor was right about AIDS

Ever since Nolan Victor submitted his idea on how to control the spread of AIDS, hardly a day has gone by that someone has not written to The Times-News lambasting him, calling him stupid, ignorant and many other names. Yet, none of these self-styled intellectuals have offered a better method or even an alternative method of stopping the spread of this contagious disease. Educating the public about this disease has not, and will not, stop the spread of it.

The guy group that understands this disease better than anyone else seems to be only interested in a taxpayer-paid vaccine that will permit them to continue their immoral lifestyle.

Even though Mr. Victor's method may appear radical, it is the only real solution I have ever seen; and had his system been employed years ago, it would have stopped this disease in its tracks and prevented its spread into the heterosexual (innocent) community.

Don't let all the name calling bother you, Mr. Victor. Congratulations on your courage to call a spade a spade and a pox (AIDS) on all the do-gooder intellectuals.

Children need new school

Patrons of Jerome schools: Many of you have asked, "Why do we need a new elementary school?" For several years now, the teaching staff in the Jerome schools has warned of overcrowding at the elementary level. These warnings did not come from teachers wanting a pretty building or fancy lounges but rather from a professional desire to give our children and grandchildren the best learning environment possible.

Our teachers want to be professional educators, not tenders of humanity in overcrowded, undersized classrooms. Do we just want to "make do" or do we want to excel in the quality of education offered in Jerome? Under these severe conditions, we as a community can be proud of our staff's performance. But think what levels of achievement our children could reach if the teaching staff had the proper environment in which to work.

The urgent request for the bond passage is not for the pleasure of teachers, comfort of the administration or a testament of some passing school board. It is for a place where our children can learn, play, create visions of greatness, conquer worlds and grow into intelligent, responsible, caring citizens.

"Can we say 'no' to the future stewards of our community? On March 10, we can become part of a better future by voting 'yes' for a new elementary school."

Our children need every chance to succeed that our community can offer.

Police brutalized pair

I'm writing in regard to the article of the 1982 case against two Twin Falls Police officers. This case has indeed been dragged out for 10 years — it's 10 years too long.

These two brothers were very much brutalized by these police officers. Anyone who was around at the time of this incident saw Curtis Grant in the hospital for days with his mouth wired closed from a broken jaw and Robert Grant with bruises from head to toe. Anyone who actually saw these boys would see what type of action was taken to receive such injuries. The bouncer was unavailable to testify in the police's behalf. Sure.

Come on, all these two brothers were asking for was justice to be done. Police brutality is very common. The secret cameraman from California who taped police officers beating a speeder proved that it happens more often than we think.

The paper itself indicated Axman has been involved in other cases taken to court. I guess being in the public eye can get us somewhere.

Let this be a lesson to all. Our so-called friendly police officers that we look up to in a time of need are not always so friendly.

Hang in there, boys. We all know what's really happened.

Outraged over tot's death

I cannot think of a word severe enough to describe my outrage over the recent death of Amanda Hostetler. I demand answers to the puzzling, brutal and unnecessary death of this innocent 2-year-old child.

How could this type of abuse take place? If the accused is innocent, then who inflicted the horrible wounds this poor child suffered from? Certainly, Amanda did not pull out her own hair. If she did, isn't that a sign that medical attention or a psychiatric evaluation may be necessary? Wasn't anyone paying attention to this poor child?

I respect the opinion of Cal Edwards, our county coroner, as he is very knowledgeable in his profession. He suspects that the abuse that Amanda was subject to took place over a prolonged period of time. So tell me why, if the accused is innocent of this vicious crime, who is responsible? And exactly how could it have taken place over a period of time?

Let's face it, Amanda did not commit suicide. Someone must pay for this very serious crime. I hope that all the law agencies that are involved in this case do not rest until the person(s) responsible for this horrible crime is locked up so that this can never happen again.

SHERYLL CLARK
Filer

Don't stand for abuse

Amanda Hostetler walks with God, for her heart was pure. To her murderer, may you rot piece by piece.

My questions, someone please ease my mind. Did I miss something? Where was Mom when this slow torture of death was going on? Didn't Mom notice the missing hair? Or did she assume it was a childhood disease? How about the black eyes? The bruises on her little body?

Mom, I pray you loved Amanda. Don't let her death die with her. Speak out, see to it that this slimeball and others like him get their justly awarded punishment.

Child abuse will go on and on; but if you, me and the people of our community let these slimeballs know we won't stand for it, it will make a difference for the other little Amandas that come along.

ANGELA FISHER
Twin Falls

Speak out on child abuse

Many times in the past, I have read an article in the paper that astonished me. At the time, I would share my feelings rather vocally with those around me. This time, however, I find that is not good enough. More needs to be said.

I am talking of course, about the recent death of little Amanda Hostetler. I was not only shocked but sickened by the accounts that I read in the paper. When are we going to wake up to what is going on around us? Are we so complacent in our own little worlds that we can let something like this happen in our midst without doing anything about it?

Yeah, it's easy for people to say now that "I should have done this" or "I should have said something sooner." Poor Amanda. Her life appeared to be a hell on earth and nobody wanted to do anything about it. I hope and pray this teaches us all a lesson.

If we suspect anything like the torture of Amanda going on in some other family to some other child, let us speak out before it is too late for that child. I would rather speak out and take the chance of being totally off base than to take the chance of another child being hurt in such a way.

One more word, I, too, would like to see all those involved in this appalling event receive the most severe penalty possible. Too bad our society doesn't allow it for that. But I suppose that would be considered cruel and unusual punishment.

CAROL MCINTYRE
Twin Falls

Society failed Amanda

Today was a sorrowful day for our community. But then every day is a sorrowful day in a community that turns its back on such a heinous crime as child abuse.

I personally am not pro-choice, but I have to wonder what good is pro-life if a child will be abused to death? Where were all the pro-lifers when Amanda Hostetler was suffering? Maybe death before birth is more humane than abuse to death.

It is time we look at ourselves and question why we let child abuse go on. Abusing parents (or parents' friends) and abused children don't go looking for help; we have to find them.

Friends of abusing parents are afraid to tell anyone who can help. After all, no one wants to be a snitch; but it is time all of us realize only by taking an active positive part can we save abused children from meeting Amanda's fate.

No more excuses, no more reasoning away the guilt of knowing someone who is abusive — take action. We should report what is happening and make sure someone who can help knows.

We failed Amanda. Let's not fail to stop the murder of our innocent child.

Why was smoking allowed?

When we go to town to shop, to eat or to any public building, we see on the door or nearby a sign, "No smoking — state law." Just how far does this law apply? Does it apply just to the common people and not to the government officials, elected representatives and those working in government offices?

The question is why is smoking permitted in our state Capitol that is a public building while not being permitted in other public buildings? At the time of the New Year Day fire, the newspaper reported that the governor or heads of any department at the state capitol had the option to permit or not permit smoking in their areas.

On New Year's Day, a fire in the state Capitol cost at least $4 million in damage. The insurance is a $100,000 deductible to be paid by the taxpayers. The investigation determined the fire broke out after a clerk, working late and on his holiday, dumped an ash tray into a wastepaper basket. Who had the authority to permit the breaking of the non-smoking law? That is where the blame for the fire should begin — with the one who decided it was OK to smoke in his/her office or area.

A special room could have been provided with a sprinkler system, fireproof containers and facilities to protect the rest of the building. But then, a smoking room would have to be provided in all other public buildings as well.

I suggest taking the $100,000 deductible from the budget of the officials who gave the OK to smoke in their department in defiance of the law. Or take it from the official's salary as a fine for breaking the law.

Since I typed this letter, the governor has banned smoking in all state public buildings.

Now there is a news item in The Times-News about the students and some of the faculty at Idaho State University protesting the ban taking away their right to smoke with some smoking to be permitted in the dorms.

Possibly, they would like to contribute to the $100,000 deductible on the state Capitol fire loss to help pay for a smoking night.

RICHARD G. HITCHCOCK
Buhl

Fire brought out heroes

It's been nearly a month now since the tragic fire in the Capitol. We won't soon forget it, and we all regret the damage to this irreplaceable, historic building.

But it could have been much worse. That it wasn't is a credit to some of the "heroes" of the incident.

Mark Furniss, who has been employed as a security guard in the Capitol for about a year, was the one who discovered the fire. We should all be very grateful for his quick thinking and action. Without it, the fire could have cost much more lives.

Another hero is Anne Barker, administrator of public works, who stepped up security in the past year, increasing the number of guards and improving their training. Anne keeps this complex in pristine condition — which contributed to controlling the fire.

It also was her idea to place the Christmas tree outside the building, on the steps where more people can enjoy it. Had it been inside, it certainly would have escalated the conflagration.

I think it's time to change our focus from the unfortunate and unintentional accident which caused the fire to the steps we can take to avoid such tragedy in the future — and to the things our people are doing right.

Discovery crew hopes it receives straight A's

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Discovery's astronauts are grueling pace inside their orbiting laboratory Tuesday and said they hope to get all A's for their work when they return home.

The crew of six men and one woman was squeezing in as much scientific work as possible before the mission ends Thursday, with landing scheduled for 11:07 a.m. EST. The flight was extended to eight days to allow an extra day for experiments.

"You know how much work the scientists have put into putting experiments, together. We only hope the data they're going to get back from this space mission will be reflective of all our caring and effort," astronaut Roberta Bondar said during a space-to-ground news conference.

Bondar compared the mission to an "open-book exam."

"I hope that when we get back we all get four A's," she told reporters.

The news conference was conducted in English, French and German. Bondar, a Canadian neurologist, and cosmonaut Ulf Merbold, a German physicist, are the first astronauts to fly on a NASA shuttle since 1985.

Astronaut David Hilmers admitted being a little lax at times. He said he has trouble staying awake while riding in a rotating chair used in a space motion sickness study.

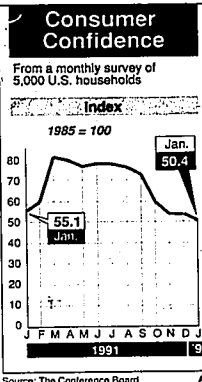

"I found myself today trying to sing the Marine Corps hymn or any other song that has a lively beat to try to stay awake," said Hilmers, a Marine lieutenant colonel.

Norman Thagard, a physician managing the Spacelab module in the cargo bay, said the crew had managed to get through most of the runs in the rotating chair, although it was a challenge.

A lot of folks, probably about 20 two-thirds of the folks, are a little bit queasy on the first couple of days" in space, Thagard said. The chair exacerbates the queasiness, he said.

While the chair spins at about 20 revolutions per minute, the astro-video cameras are recorded. Video images of dilating pupils filled giant television screens at NASA's control centers.

Dr. Millard Reschke, a NASA scientist in charge of the space motion sickness studies, said the data collected exceeds "our wildest dreams." Researchers hope the findings will benefit future space travelers.

Consumer confidence slips again

NEW YORK (AP) — Consumer confidence in the economy retreated further this month, with many U.S. households even more pessimistic about their financial security than in late 1991, a widely followed survey said Monday.

The Conference Board's Consumer Confidence Index, which leveled off in December after sharp declines the previous two months, fell again in January, the business research group said.

The monthly survey, based on consumers' responses to questions sent to 5,000 households nationwide, is considered by many economists to be a useful barometer of the American consumer mood. Consumer spending is critical to a revival of the U.S. economy, which by some reckoning is in the 18th month of recession.

The index, calculated on a 1985 base of 100, is determined by responses to questions ranging from home-buying plans to availability of jobs.

The Conference Board said the January index showed a reading of 50.4, a loss of 2.1 points from December.

"The public's assessment of prevailing business conditions remained at the depressed level registered in December, but expectations, which had improved slightly at the end of last year, retreated in January," the Conference Board said.

Only 6.4 percent of all respondents in January considered business conditions good, while 51 percent said they were bad, the survey said.

Hillary Clinton's comments irk Wynette; apology demanded

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Hey, what's wrong with standing by your man?

Not a thing, says Tammy Wynette, who is "mad as hell" at what would be first lady Hillary Clinton's suggestion that it's not enough just to stand by your man.

Mrs. Clinton's comment came Sunday on CBS-TV's "60 Minutes" when her husband, Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton, defended himself against charges of infidelity.

"I'm not sitting here like some little woman standing by my man like Tammy Wynette," said Mrs. Clinton, trying to explain her support was more than routine.

"That drew fire from Nashville where Wynette is demanding an apology on behalf of all the women who, as she sings, are willing to forgive and accept... after all he's just a man."

"With all that is in me I resent your caustic remark," the 49-year-old country singer wrote Mrs. Clinton on Monday. "I, with no apologies, am as angry as I can be with your statement..."

"Mrs. Clinton, you have offended every woman and man who love that song — several million in number. I believe you have offended every true country music fan and every person who has made it their own" with one to take them to a White House.

Hillary Clinton

"I would like you to appear with me on any forum, including networks, cable or talk shows and stand toe to toe with me. I can assure you, you will find me to be just as bright as yourself."

"I will not stand by and allow you or any other person to embarrass, humiliate and degrade me on national television and print without hearing from me."

Mrs. Clinton rolled her eyes and slapped her forehead when told of Wynette's reaction Tuesday during a meeting with the editorial board of the Grand Junction (Colo.) Daily Sentinel.

"I didn't mean to hurt Tammy Wynette as a person," she said. "I happen to be a country-western fan. If she feels like I've hurt her feelings, I'm sorry about that."

Clinton, whose bid for the Democratic presidential nomination has been marred by allegations of infidelity, was campaigning in Texas on Tuesday.

Wynette, who has recorded more than 50 albums, was not available for interviews because she was see-

'Stand By Your Man' lyrics

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The first two stanzas from the Tammy Wynette-Billy Sherrill song "Stand By Your Man."

Sometimes it's hard to be a woman.

Giving all your love to just one man.

You'll have bad times and he'll have good times.

Doin' things that you don't understand.

But if you love him you'll forgive him.

Even though he's hard to understand.

And if you love him oh he's proud of him.

'Cause after all he's just a man.

ing a doctor for a throat infection. But her husband, George Richey, described her as "mad as hell and she probably will be for a time."

Richey said he and his wife were watching Mrs. Clinton's interview when the comment was made.

"She was totally speechless," Richey said of his wife. "It was totally off base."

The song "Stand By Your Man" was written by Wynette and Billy Sherrill and was a million-seller.

Income stays 1 step in front of inflation

WASHINGTON (AP) — American workers kept ahead of inflation in 1991 as wages, salaries and benefits advanced 4.3 percent compared with the 3.1 percent rise in prices, government figures showed Tuesday.

Still, workers' income and benefits — totaled in the Labor Department's employment cost index — were off from the 4.9 percent gain in 1990. And that suggests "the long sustained malaise of the economy is starting to take a toll on wage increases," said economist Robert G. Derdik of the Northern Trust Co. in Chicago.

Slower wage inflation helps keep the nation's overall inflation rate down. That, Derdik said, is the "good side" of the report. "The downside is that it reduced people's ability to buy goods" and keep the economy growing.

Workers had taken a beating in 1990 when inflation soared to 6.1 percent while their earnings were held to the 4.9 percent gain.

The jump in inflation in 1990 — the steepest since 1981 — was due in part to soaring gasoline and fuel oil costs that followed Iraq's August invasion of Kuwait.

But since the Persian Gulf conflict, fuel prices have dropped and the Federal Reserve's grip on credit has restrained prices in other areas.

In a second report, the Labor Department said contracts settled through collective bargaining last year gave workers average annual wage increases of 3.3 percent over the life of the pacts.

Compensation for union workers rose 4.6 percent, compared to 4.3 percent for non-union workers. This pattern was the same in both the goods-producing and service sectors and reversed a trend that had prevailed for nearly a decade.

The pace of compensation gains moderated over the year, from 1.1 percent and 1.3 percent during the first two quarters to 0.9 percent and 0.9 percent in the final two. The changes were adjusted for seasonal factors.

Wages and salaries, which rose 3.6 percent for the year, also slowed, dropping from a 1.1 percent gain in the first quarter to 0.9 percent in the last quarter. They had risen 4.3 percent during 1990.

For the year, wages and salaries for private industry workers increased 3.6 percent, down from 4.0 percent in 1990. Government wages and salaries rose 3.5 percent.

Revolutionary War bill won't be paid — 214 years later

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A merchant who lived next to Valley Forge when George Washington's bedraggled troops camped there loaned the Continental Congress $50,000 in gold and $400,000 in supplies. But Jacob DeHaven was never repaid.

His descendants sued the government for $100 billion, including interest, but on Monday the U.S. Supreme Court refused without comment to hear the case. The government said the statute of limitations ran out 123 years ago.

"I didn't expect the government to give any money back but I do think they should recognize (DeHaven) in some way," said Ada Brown, 64, of Tabernacle, N.J. She is one of thousands of descendants.

When DeHaven and others responded to Washington's plea for help in the winter of 1777-78, Congress offered to repay in Continental currency, which was widely considered worthless.

C and C Music Factory, Brooks among music award winners

LOS ANGELES (AP) — C and C Music Factory triumphed at the 19th Annual American Music Awards on Monday by winning five trophies, while country superstar Garth Brooks garnered three.

Pop star Michael Bolton, soul's Luther Vandross and Natalie Cole each got two awards.

C and C Music Factory won trophies for favorite dance music single for "Gonna Make You Sweat," favorite dance artist and new dance artist, best pop-rock group and favorite new pop-rock artist.

In sweeping the dance music category, C and C defeated Madonna, Crystal Waters, Mariah Carey and The KLF.

The group has been stung in the past by allegations of lip-synching, but Zelma Davis hummed a few bars at the podium to prove that she really can sing.

There was an outpouring of sympathy for Brooks, who couldn't claim his three trophies because his pregnant wife became ill. He won top country single for "The Thunder Rolls," favorite country album for "No Fences" and favorite male country artist.

"Unforgettable," Natalie Cole's tribute to the music of her father, Nat King Cole, was named favorite adult contemporary album. Miss Cole also won favorite adult contemporary artist, besting Paula Abdul and 11-time winner Whitney Houston.

"I don't know how many times Whitney and I have been in the same category, but I'm going to enjoy this one," Miss Cole said as she picked up her second award.

In the favorite female artist category, Miss Abdul won for pop-rock, Miss Carey for soul-rhythm and blues, and Reba McEntire for country.

Color Me Badd, which entered the ceremony with six nominations, won favorite soul-rhythm and blues single for "I Wanna Sex You Up."

Bolton won favorite male pop-rock artist and his "Time, Love and Tenderness" was the top album in that category. Bryan Adams won favorite pop-rock single for "Everything I Do I Do It For You."

Vandross captured the male artist trophy, and his "Power of Love" record took the album honors in the soul-R&B division.

Hammer, host of the presentation, collected his eighth trophy as favorite rap artist. Naughty By Nature was favorite new rap artist.

D.J. Jazzy Jeff & The Fresh Prince won the rap album honor for "Homebase."

James Brown, the legendary "Godfather of Soul," was presented the award of Soul. Brown performed a medley of his hits.

The perennial favorite country group Alabama won its 15th American Music Award for best band, duo or group in that category.

Guns N' Roses beat Metallica and Van Halen for the favorite heavy metal-hard rock artist award. Van Halen's "For Unlawful Carnal Knowledge" was the top album.

The favorite soul-rhythm and blues band trophy went to Bell Biv DeVoe.

Thirty trophies were at stake in seven categories: pop-rock, soul-rhythm & blues, country, heavy metal-hard rock, rap, adult contemporary and dance.

The American Music Awards are produced by Dick Clark Productions Inc.

Winners were selected by the public through a national sampling of approximately 20,000 record buyers. The sampling takes into account geographic location, age, sex and ethnicity.

Names of nominees on the ballot were based upon calculations involving year-end sales and airplay data.

The information was supplied by a music industry trade publication, Radio & Records, and SoundScan Inc., a computerized point-of-sale tracking system that compiles sales from more than 10,000 record retail outlets.

Ballots were sent by National Family Opinion Inc. and results were tabulated by the KPMG Peat Marwick accounting firm.

Palestinians boycott Mideast talks in Moscow at last minute

Knight-Ridder News Service

MOSCOW — An unprecedented international conference assembled to launch a new era of Arab-Israeli cooperation became ensnared in old-fashioned Middle East politics Tuesday when Palestinians staged a last-minute boycott.

Despite the boycott, Saudi Arabia and other Arab nations that had never been in direct contact with Israel sat down with the Jewish state and the world's industrial powers to discuss common economic, environmental, military and social problems.

"The presence of Arabs at this conference provides proof that Arab nations desire peace," said Prince Saud al Faisal, the Saudi foreign minister.

But focus on the historic and symbolic nature of the conference — attended by representatives of 38 nations — was diverted by the Palestinians' boycott. They protested roles barring delegates representing Palestinians outside the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza.

"We came to Moscow to represent all Palestinian people ... We came not to be a truncated delegation representing one-third of our people under occupation," Palestinian spokeswoman Hanan Ashrawi told a press conference.

Nearly two million Palestinians live in the occupied territories, but as many as twice that number are estimated to be living in exile elsewhere in the Arab world.

Ten Arab states showed up despite the boycott: Bahrain, Egypt, Jordan, Kuwait, Morocco, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Tunisia and United Arab Emirates. Egypt is the only one with formal ties to Israel.

Two other Arab states that had been expected to attend Tuesday — Algeria and Yemen — stayed away in support of the Palestinians.

Secretary of State James A. Baker III and Russian Foreign Minister Andrei Kozyrev, co-sponsors of the conference, ruled that the makeup of the Palestinian delegation should be the same as it was at the Mideast peace conference in Madrid, Spain, last fall, which did not include representatives of Palestinians living outside the occupied territories.

But in a compromise gesture, Baker and Kozyrev said that once the two-day Moscow conference ended, they would support broader Palestinian participation in follow-up meetings on regional problems that affect Palestinians directly.

U.N. team seeks hidden chemical, biological weapons factories in Iraq

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — U.N. inspectors who were roughed up by demonstrators in Baghdad on Monday are looking for secret Iraqi biological and chemical weapons production plants, according to a Security Council document.

The private report, examined Tuesday by The Associated Press, indicates for the first time that U.N. officials believe President Saddam Hussein still has secret chemical and biological weapons factories.

The report, prepared by Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali for the Security Council, was circulated today to council members.

It said the U.N. Special Commission, which is trying to destroy Iraq's weapons of mass destruction, must identify the "development, support and manufacturing components" for the chemical and biological weapons.

"Such components clearly exist in view of the types of weapons which have been identified," Boutros-Ghali's report said.

The U.N. document is the first one obtained by the media that points to the existence of secret chemical and biological production sites that might have survived the massive allied bombing raids during the Gulf War.

If such plants do exist, it is crucial that they be destroyed while U.N. inspectors still have a mandate to destroy Iraq's weapons of mass destruction. Otherwise, Iraq could presumably begin producing chemical and biological weapons as soon as U.N. inspections end.

On Monday, an 18-member team of U.N. chemical and biological weapons inspectors arrived at a Baghdad hotel from Manama, Bahrain, where the U.N. Special Commission is based, to begin their mission.

About 40 Iraqi demonstrators mobbed the group, jostling three of them and pinning them up against the wall of the hotel lobby. The demonstrators also blocked the other 15 inspectors in their bus for 25 minutes.

Council delays decision on sanctions

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The Security Council Tuesday discussed the economic sanctions it imposed on Iraq after it invaded Kuwait, and diplomats predicted the world body would decide to continue them.

The council had planned to decide Tuesday whether to extend or relax the sanctions, but postponed making an immediate decision.

Earlier in the day, diplomats attending a private Security Council session had said the council would continue the sanctions unchanged. Later, however, the council postponed a decision.

The diplomats, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said when a decision is made, the Security Council will continue the economic sanctions.

The president of the council, British Ambassador Sir David Hannay, said some of the council members wanted more time to study a lengthy report by the secretary-general on Iraq's cooperation on weapons inspection and other issues.

"There is very great concern over a number of areas of Iraqi non-compliance, particular over weapons of mass destruction, over detainees, Kuwaiti detainees, over the return of property and over some financial issues," Hannay said.

President Bush and British Prime Minister John Major have contended that sanctions should be maintained while Saddam Hussein holds power.

Yeltsin visits with Black Sea Fleet

MOSCOW — A day after abruptly canceling his appointments, Boris Yeltsin turned up Tuesday in southern Russia to visit with commanders of the Black Sea Fleet. One newspaper said unpredictable behavior is becoming Yeltsin's hallmark.

The Russian president canceled meetings with Japan's foreign minister and others Monday and Tuesday to tour the fleet, the subject of a dispute between Russia and Ukraine. The cancellations went unexplained for 24 hours, and renewed rumors about his health and alleged drinking problem.

Yeltsin's two-day visit to the southern Russian port of Novorossiysk was not announced until Tuesday, a day after he arrived.

He returned late Tuesday, Russian television said.

S. African police arrest 10 extremists

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Police arrested 10 white extremist leaders Tuesday in raids certain to enrage right-wingers, who are already threatening violence against government moves toward power-sharing with blacks.

Among those arrested on charges of public violence was Eugene TerreBlanche, head of the Afrikaner Resistance Movement, who is considered South Africa's most militant right-wing leader.

He and nine associates in the neo-Nazi group were released on bail of up to $36, and a court date was set for March 5.

The 10 men were arrested at their homes in pre-dawn raids reminiscent of sweeps in black townships during the state of emergency that ended in 1990.

TerreBlanche complained that his 10-year-old daughter "had to endure the humiliation, with tears in her eyes, of seeing her father arrested in front of his family on his own farm."

Shanghai gamblers suspend mahjong

BEIJING — Thousands of Communist Party members have pledged to give up the traditional game of mahjong after a crackdown that has virtually silenced Shanghai's gambling houses, an official newspaper reported Tuesday.

During the monthlong crackdown, authorities in Shanghai have closed down mahjong houses and held public meetings to discipline players, the Wen Hui Bao newspaper reported.

It said thousands of "anti-gambling squads" descended on suburban districts, disciplining gamblers and ordering stores not to sell the game. In one county, the local party leader burned more than 400 mahjong sets at a public meeting attended by thousands of people, the paper said.

Contraceptive sales spark violence

DHAKA, Bangladesh — About 50 people were injured by crude bombs that exploded at a song-and-dance show promoting the sale of contraceptives, police said Tuesday.

Though contraceptives are generally accepted in this predominantly Muslim country, some fundamentalist groups oppose birth control, saying it is against the precepts of Islam.

Six people were admitted to the hospital after the incident Monday night in the town of Mymensingh, 70 miles north of Dhaka. The rest suffered minor injuries.

Rebels shoot down helicopter, kill 40

BAKU, Azerbaijan — Armenian rebels shot down a civilian helicopter over the disputed enclave of Nagorno-Karabakh on Tuesday, an Azerbaijani presidential spokesman said. About 40 men, women and children were reported killed.

Vagib Rustamov, a spokesman for President Ayaz Mutalibov of Azerbaijan, said the helicopter was flying over Stepanakert, capital of the enclave, at about 4 p.m. when it was attacked. It was en route to Shusha from the Azeri town of Agdam.

The Azerbaijani mission in Moscow said the helicopter was shot down by a heat-seeking missile, Russian television said. The newscast said the pilots tried "heroically" to save the aircraft and managed at the last minute to turn it away from Shusha.

Japan, U.S. experience trade trauma

TOKYO (AP) — The government on Tuesday dismissed a mounting "Buy American" campaign in the United States as merely "a lot of talk."

Foreign Ministry spokesman Masamichi Hanabusa noted the surge in economic nationalism in the United States has not been publicly backed by the Bush administration.

Still, a business lobbyist, Maki Kunitatsu of the Federation of Economic Organizations, acknowledged that many Japanese businessmen remain wary about developments in the United States since President Bush's ill-fated trade mission to Tokyo this month.

"We are very concerned but frankly we don't know what to do," said Kunitatsu.

As U.S.-Japan trade tensions continue to sour, Americans have increasingly argued that buying U.S. products is an act of patriotism.

The decision last week by Los Angeles County to abruptly cancel a contract with Sumitomo Corp. of America, while front-page news in the United States, was relegated to inside pages in Japanese newspapers.

Government and business officials have tried to play down the significance of the "Buy American" campaign, apparently trying not to aggravate a phenomenon they hope will fade away.

"I don't know exactly what substance this 'Buy American' campaign really has. There has been a lot of talk," Hanabusa said.

The Japanese government has refrained from directly criticizing the Los Angeles County cancellation. The Foreign Ministry has said it is up to Sumitomo to decide whether there was any contractual infringement.

Perhaps hoping not to draw attention to the controversy, Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa has no plans to meet with the U.S. media during his brief visit to the United Nations this week.

Navy, Filipinos sever recruiting

SUBIC BAY NAVAL BASE, Philippines (AP) — The U.S. Navy said Tuesday it has suspended a program under which Filipinos were allowed to serve in the Navy as a possible step toward American citizenship.

Filipinos served in the Navy, most of them as mess attendants, under a provision of the 1947 Military Bases Agreement that expired last year. The Philippine Senate rejected a new base agreement in September, and the Americans have until Dec. 31 to vacate the Subic Bay base, their last military installation here.

It is not known how many Filipinos serve in the Navy. Officials said 200,000 Filipinos applied to join in 1990, and 200 were accepted. Acceptance does mean automatic citizenship, although Filipinos often apply for citizenship when they retire after 20 years of service.

James Jones of the Public Affairs Office said it was unclear whether the suspended program would ever resume.

Snake hydro projects draw hearing

By N.S. Nokken
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A Boise developer wants to harness three rapids on the Snake River for hydroelectric power.

But first, L.B. Industries Inc. must seek exemption from the state's interim protected status for the middle reach of the Snake River before it can build its proposed hydro projects at Boulder, Empire and Kanaka rapids.

The Idaho Water Resources Board has scheduled a public hearing at 7 p.m. Friday at the Weston Plaza to hear the developer's petition for an exemption.

The board granted interim protected status to the Middle Snake only as a comprehensive river plan that includes permanent designation is completed.

The Idaho Water Resources Board has scheduled a public hearing at 7 p.m. Friday at the Weston Plaza North to discuss three proposed hydroelectric projects on the Snake River.

Protected status prohibits enlarging existing dams or building new ones, constructing diversion works, altering stream beds, dredge or placer mining and sand and gravel extraction.

But the board can grant exemptions to the protected status if it deems the project would not harm the qualities for which the river is being protected — fish and wildlife, recreation, geologic and aesthetic values.

Design changes in the three proposed projects would reduce their effects on water quality in the river to near zero, said Mark Hill of Don Chapman Consultants Inc., a Boise-based consulting firm.

But water quality is not one of the criteria the board will look at in granting exemptions.

The three "run-of-the-river projects" are not dams, and they would not store any water. Instead of going over the rapids, part of the water would be diverted into a canal and then into a powerhouse to generate electricity.

The 5.5-megawatt Boulder Rapids project would include a "wetlands peninsula" jutting into the river that would help direct water into the diversion channel and the 2,300-foot power canal.

It would also include a new 2,200-foot transmission line to run power from the project across the river and up to the canyon rim to an existing transmission line.

The 3.8-megawatt Empire project would use no in-stream structures to divert water under Idaho Highway 46 and into a 1,800-foot canal. An 800-foot power line would connect to an existing transmission line crossing the river.

The 6.8-megawatt Kanaka Rapids project would divert water, with a 190-foot weir across the river, into a 2,300-foot canal. A 4,600-foot power line up the canyon wall would transfer power from the power house.

A megawatt is 1 million watts.

L.B. Industries would sell the power from the plants to Idaho Power.

Customer increase sets record for Idaho Power

BOISE — Despite slower commercial customer growth in the Magic and Wood River valleys last year, Idaho Power added a record number of customers in 1991.

The state's largest electric utility announced Monday that it added 6,008 new customers last year, bringing its total to 297,808.

The 1991 increase included almost 4,900 residential customers, including 200 in Halley and 235 in Twin Falls.

Meanwhile, Idaho Power said in its weekly newsletter that it has budgeted $71.4 million for plant construction in 1992 — up more than 40 percent from last year and the company's largest plant construction budget since 1984.

About 80 percent of this year's plant construction budget is for hydroelectric projects, the company said. The big-ticket items are new power houses at two sites, with expenditures of $26.7 million at Swan Falls and $17.6 million at Milner.

Swan Falls, where generating capacity is being more than doubled to 25 megawatts, is scheduled to be completed in 1994. The 58-megawatt Milner project is scheduled to be completed late this year.

Idaho Power also has budgeted $2.2 million to begin construction at its Twin Falls project, where plans are to increase the existing facility's 9-megawatt capacity to 51 megawatts.

Jerome man pleads guilty to robbery solicitation charge

JEROME — A Jerome man has pleaded guilty to charges of first-degree solicitation to commit robbery and burglary after he was arrested by the Jerome County Sheriff's Office with the help of undercover agents.

Robert Scott Sigmon, 27, was arrested Aug. 22 at the Marvin Aslett residence on U.S. Highway 93 southeast of Jerome. Prosecutors charged he attempted to burglarize the Aslett home.

Grant M. Borge and Gary Scheibing, two undercover officers from Emmett, assisted in the arrest by posing as accomplices. Jerome County Sheriff Larry Gold was waiting inside the Aslett home when Sigmon entered the residence, prosecutors said.

Jerome County landfill rules tighten to meet state laws

JEROME — Rules at the Jerome County landfill are tightening up to comply with new state laws.

Effective May 1, tires will no longer be accepted at the landfill. To make the change "a gradual thing," a fee will be charged beginning Jan. 29. Jerome County Commission chairman Carl Montgomery said Monday.

For each passenger vehicle tire dumped at the landfill will cost $1. Truck tires will cost $2.50 and tractor tires $5. After May 1, used tires will no longer be accepted at the landfill and should be taken to a recycling center, Montgomery said.

Effective Feb. 15, loads of refuse taken to the landfill must be covered with a tarpaulin. A $10 fee will be charged if the trash is not covered.

This regulation applies to loads of loose material that could be blown off and litter the highways, Montgomery said. Appliances and burning barrels with lids would not have to be covered, he said.

Joan Craig will serve library as head of board of trustees

TWIN FALLS — Joan Craig has been selected chairwoman of the board of trustees of the Twin Falls Public Library for 1992, according to a library news release.

Judy Pollow will serve as vice-chairwoman.

Ken High was elected secretary, Brit Groom was selected treasurer and Tom Condie will serve as the City Council representative, the release said.

Condie is the finance and budgeting committee chairman. Follow heads the planning and public relations committee, Groom leads the building and grounds committee and High is chairman of the operations and personnel committee, the news release said.

Redistricting process stumbles forward

By Drew DeSilver
Times-News writer

BOISE — The process of drawing new legislative districts moved forward on several fronts Tuesday, but it was unclear whether all the movement was in the same direction.

Friday is the Legislature's self-imposed deadline for passing a redistricting plan. But with three days to go, it seems unlikely that Democrats and Republicans can agree on a plan that Gov. Cecil Andrus will sign.

The Senate may act today or Thursday on a Republican-drawn plan that it pulled out of the deadlocked State Affairs Committee Monday. But that plan differs from the one the House of Representatives passed two weeks ago, so the two plans would have to go to a conference committee to resolve their differences.

Even if that were done before the close of business Friday, Andrus is certain to veto any plan passed over the objections of his fellow Democrats.

At a signing ceremony Tuesday morning for the congressional redistricting bill, Andrus said he would "very carefully consider" any bill passed on a party line vote. As he said that, he picked up and displayed the large red "VETO" rubber stamp on his desk.

Senate Republicans, including President Pro Tem Mike Crapo and Majority Leader Jerry Twigg, have complained that Senate Democrats have not negotiated seriously with them on a redistricting plan.

Legislator develops plan to revamp education board

By Drew DeSilver
Times-News writer

BOISE — Boise Democratic Sen. Mike Burket launched the first trial balloon Tuesday in what may become a major legislative effort to restructure the State Board of Education.

Burket's plan would replace the current seven-member board with a five-member board of regents to supervise higher education and a four-member "council for public schools."

The council, along with the superintendent of public instruction, would be responsible for working with the state's 113 local school districts. The board of regents would hire a chancellor to coordinate all Idaho's colleges and universities, creating a de facto single-university system.

Currently, the state board is responsible for both public schools and higher education. The University of Idaho, Idaho State University and Boise State University now each have their own presidents.

"There's not one person who can take on the persons of higher education, build a constituency for higher education, provide direction and resolve problems," Burket said.

A single-university system would improve students' ability to transfer credits between institutions, reduce rivalry between schools for special programs, and save money by eliminating duplication of services, Burket said.

A single chancellor would also be more able than numerous university presidents to attract support from private industry, he said.

Burket is one of several legislators who are examining various options for restructuring the State Board of Education, which came under strong criticism last year following its firing of Boise State University President John Keiser last fall.

RUPERT — The Minidoka County School Board and Rupert City Council are intent on catching a crank caller in the area.

The two are posting a $500 reward to catch the prankster who has made five bomb threats, two at schools within the city limits, since classes began this past fall.

"I think this is totally asinine," Mayor Bill Whitton said at a recent City Council meeting. "It disrupts the classes, scares the students and harasses the teachers."

Hailey hookup charges increase dramatically

By Linnea Polichetti
Times-News correspondent

HAILEY — City Council members recently approved whopping increases in water and sewer hookup fees to go toward upkeep and maintenance of current equipment.

Effective immediately, the new water hookup fee is $1,832, which represents an 83 percent increase from the previous fee of $1,000.

Sewer hookup fees increased 128 percent from $800 to $1,824.

Funds generated from the fees by law must be set aside for improvement and replacement of lines and systems in place now.

"We can't just sit here and let our infrastructure deteriorate," said Councilman Steve Kearns.

Sewer and water systems have an estimated longevity of 20 years. "If we don't have adequate fees and a large enough reserve eventually you have to go to the voters for an expensive bond issue," said city attorney Steve Crabtree.

"It's fundamental that the public understand the fees are not revenue-producing.

The current value of Hailey's water and sewer system is $10 million. As values increase, so do replacement costs.

Water and sewer user fees are also under review. The council requested more information from engineering consultants, whose reports will provide recommendations for increases.

The council set aside time on the Feb. 24 meeting agenda for public comments on a proposed business license ordinance. The intent of the license is to allow the city to enforce applicable fire and safety codes.

The ordinance, which is not yet in its final form, will exempt certain businesses from licensing requirements.

There are 281 identified businesses in Hailey, of which 101 are home-based. The council also discussed a project to improve the area of Main Street from Kings on the north to Maple Street on the south.

The street would be reconstructed into a four-lane with parallel parking, white curbs, gutters and landscaping would be added.

The Idaho Department of Transportation has funds available to pay as much as 70 percent of the paving, curbs, gutters and sidewalks if the city qualifies for a state grant.

Costs funded by a Local Improvement District would be "minor," according to Mayor Keith Roark.

Roark said the project would add to the attractiveness of downtown and also increase the flow of pedestrian traffic by making it possible to safely walk the entire length of the business district. More information will be gathered by the council.

The proposed election reform ordinance was read for the third time, approved by the council and signed into law by Roark.

The ordinance assigns a number to each council seat, requires candidates to run for a particular seat and provides for runoff elections if no candidate receives a majority of the votes.

Councilwoman Mary Ann Mix was the only board member to oppose the adoption of the ordinance.

Bellevue, firm disagree on rates

By Deborah Shimkus
Times-News correspondent

BELLEVUE — Bellevue officials have refused to raise the rates for residential garbage pickup by the full amount requested by a city disposal firm.

A spokesman for Wood River Rubbish told the City Council the pickup fee was needed to cover increased landfill costs.

Blaine County commissioners instituted a new $1.75 fee hike at the county landfill, which must be passed on to the customers, said Dennis Lallman, accountant for the rubbish firm.

But city officials say the company is asking, and residents don't generate enough garbage to warrant the increase.

Commissioners raised the fee at the Blaine County Landfill from $1.25 per cubic yard of compressed garbage to $3 per yard that took effect Jan. 1.

But the council disagreed with the increase that would figure out to be $1.40 hike in rates per residence, raising the monthly rubbish charge to $8.40.

Instead, the council granted the rubbish company only a 70-cent increase per customer.

Wood River Rubbish is now deciding whether or not to continue to serve Bellevue's nearly 200 homes at the lower rate, according to General Manager Mike Goitandia.

Mayor Dennis Wright presented figures to the council illustrating that Wood River Rubbish had based their figures on an estimated fourteen loads of garbage being hauled from Bellevue to the landfill each month.

"But, there are in fact less than six loads," said Wright, who followed the rubbish collector's last week to gather data.

But Lallman said the rubbish firm based its costs on the actual figures for the county for 1990 and 1991, which includes the high volume times, such as fall and Christmas and during spring clean-up.

However, council member Monty Brothwell said the figures by Wood River Rubbish twist reality.

"The garbage is compressed from three to one before it reaches the landfill. The rates should be equally compressed," he said.

The whole problem is that we, as a city, are being thrown in with the rest of the county, but we have more other people that don't generate that amount of garbage," said council member Richard Kimball.

The cities of Ketchum and Hailey recently approved a rate hike from $7 to $8.08 per household, and Sun Valley approved an increase to $8.38.

Bellevue's rate is higher because the other cities started paying the landfill rate earlier, said Lallman. The rate hike in Bellevue will take effect in April.

A 1972 ordinance adopted by the city provides Wood River Rubbish with a franchise to serve the city, stating that all rate increases must receive the approval of the City Council.

The last rate hike was in 1990 when rates went from $5.25 to $7.00, according to Lallman.

"We're entitled to make a profit," he said.

Auditors praise Jerome County finances

By H.R. Weixel
Times-News correspondent

JEROME — Jerome County financing practices received high marks from auditors reporting to commissioners and department directors Monday.

Interest gained by investing in U.S. Treasury Bills in a timely manner was praised by Auditor Dean Condie, of Glines and Condie, a CPA firm from Rupert.

The investments were made by Jerome County Treasurer Mary Childers.

Through "wise investment practices," the county earned $79,703, Condie said.

Paying for indigent rent, medical hospital and other costs required a $250,000 override levy that is being paid by taxpayers.

"You have a tough time controlling this," Condie said. "The law says you have to help (indigents), even if the money isn't in your budget."

The audit report recommended the county implement better control of drug funds and expenditures involved in the substance abuse operations being used in the Jerome County Sheriff's Department.

Changes in methods used to record grant funds and control of petty cash also were recommended by the auditor.

Property owners living in the Big Little Ranch subdivision south of Jerome who have paid their share of the cost to build a road through the housing area "have been penalized," Condie said.

He said as yet the county has not enforced payment by some property owners who have reneged their share of the bond issue to pay for the road.

The law allows putting the delinquent amounts on the tax rolls.

"We didn't understand we could do that," Childers said. By putting the delinquent amount on the tax rolls, a lien is placed against the property, she said. A 2 percent penalty can also be assessed against the delinquent payments, Condie told the commissioners.

House revenue estimate faces opposition

BOISE (AP) — Republican and Democratic Senate leaders conceded Tuesday that a House-passed projection of tax revenues for the new budget year will be defeated by a bipartisan majority on the Senate tax committee.

And leaders of both parties remained unsure what their response to that action would be.

Republican President Pro Tem Michael Crapo of Idaho Falls said a number of options have been discussed with Senate Democratic Leader Bruce Sweeney of Lewiston and leaders of both parties in the House but no decision would be made until the projection has been formally defeated.

That vote in the Local Government and Taxation Committee was expected Wednesday evening.

The legislative projection has been at the center of the budget debate this month. It is $13.5 million below the forecast Democratic Gov. Cecil Andrus used to formulate his 1993 spending plan — a plan that outlines one of the tightest state budgets in decades.

While not binding, it is the benchmark against which legislative spending decisions are measured in complying with the constitutional requirement that the state budget be balanced.

The dramatically lower legislative figure would make it all but impossible for the Republican-controlled Legislature to match the governor's recommendation on the politically-sensitive, election-year allocation of state aid to public schools.

The reduced projection passed the House last week but only over solid opposition from a coalition of Democrats wanting a figure closer to the governor's and Republicans fearing even the reduced number may be too optimistic. The same coalition, this time claiming a majority, exists on the Senate committee.

Senate Democrats had asked Republicans to delay a committee vote for two weeks when the state would have sales tax figures from the Christmas season — a number they believe would convince GOP pessimists the state economy remains strong.

But Crapo rejected the request for a delay, saying all too much of the business of the 1992 session has been sidetracked.

He also agreed with Sweeney that any tinkering with the House-passed projection would probably not improve the chances that any revenue figure could pass.

The ultimate result, both speculated, could be that the dozen House members on the joint budget committee will use the House-passed projection as their guide in drafting the new budget.

Rainy protest

Thousands of abortion protesters rally on the Capitol steps in Olympia, Wash., Tuesday to listen to legislators praising last year's passage of an abortion initiative.

Utahns don't want to honor legal bill

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Legislators are divided over whether to pay more than $88,000 owed to the legal firm of Jones, Waldo, Holbrook & McDonough for its defense of the state's abortion law.

But 65 percent of Utahns surveyed "don't" want the Legislature to come up with the money for the firm which was forced to resign because of an apparent conflict of interest.

The copyright Deseret News-KSL-TV poll, published Tuesday, also showed that nearly half — 48 percent — said lawmakers definitely should not agree to pay the bill because it was the law firm's responsibility to disclose the possible conflict of interest.

Only 7 percent said the bill should definitely be paid. Twelve percent said the state "probably should pay" it. The poll of 610 Utahns was conducted by Dan Jones & Associates Jan. 7 and 8 and has a margin for error of 4 percent.

Rep. J. Reese Hunter, R-Salt Lake, doesn't even want the law firm to keep the more than $95,000 they've already been paid for less than seven months' work on the case.

The 1991 Legislature appropriated $100,000 to defend the law banning most abortions against a challenge by the American Civil Liberties Union. The money was spent by the law firm before the new budget year began July 1.

Bomb

"We have a pretty good idea of where this is coming from," Whitton added.

The $500 reward is being offered for information leading to the arrest and conviction of a person for the bomb threats.

If the person making the calls is underage, the parents are responsible for up to $2,500 restitution, city attorney Rick Bollar said.

If someone is convicted of the crime, a judge can order he or she to pay the reward money back to the city and school district.

"The calls are not just pranks, but cost taxpayers to do the follow up," said Councilman Ron Kletke.

"A lot of human resources are being lost," Whitton agreed.

People with information about the bomb threats are asked to call 436-4619, an unrecorded phone line, at the Rupert Police Department.

The council confirmed the city department heads' appointments for the coming year.

They include Rick Bollar, city attorney; Lola Clark, treasurer; Loretta Klingenberg, clerk; Don Dustin, public works director; Harold Choate, electrical department; Paul Fries, police chief; Thayne Taylor, fire chief; Reuben Hardy, water department; Les Hutchinson, parks and recreation department; Kelly Sullivan, waste department; Dave Cantrell, maintenance department, and Sperm Roberts, sanitation department.

Education

said the state board currently "micromanages" higher education and pays relatively little attention to public schools.

Ahrens favors splitting the board and gradually moving toward a single-university system, but she said "it'll take (the Legislature) a couple of years to get there."

Sen. John Hansen, R-Idaho Falls, chairman of the Senate Education Committee, agreed that there was growing support for restructuring the state board among legislators and others. In his State of the State address Jan. 6, Gov. Cecil Andrus encouraged the Legislature to consider splitting the board.

"Mike and I are pretty much in agreement" on what should be done, Hansen said, but he expressed some doubt that the whole package would pass this session.

Even Burkett recognized that his plan may have trouble getting through the Legislature.

"This year it could well be difficult to get anything of substance done," he said. "We've already wasted the first month on reappointment."

Districts

Senate Democratic leader Bruce Sweeney presented a handwritten 35-district plan to Crapo Tuesday morning, but Republicans reportedly dismissed it as not a serious basis for negotiations.

imposing a redistricting plan, as happened in 1984. A lawsuit was filed last November in 4th District Court asking the court to take control of redistricting from the Legislature, and Tuesday the judge moved a bit closer toward doing that.

If no plan is passed this week, the Senate will take up a proposal next Monday by Sens. Ron Beltschepfer, D-Grangeville, and Tom Tucker, D-Portville, to turn the project over to a five-person committee.

Four of the committee members would be appointed by the House and Senate Democratic and Republican leaders; they would appoint the fifth member. The committee would have until Feb. 21 to submit a plan to the full Legislature, which could either accept it without change or reject it.

But with the Senate split 21-21 between Democrats and Republicans and Republican Lt. Gov. C. "Butch" Otter holding the balance, the chances for Beltschepfer's bill passing are slim at best.

If the Legislature remains stymied, a judge may wind up

The judge, Robert Newhouse, set a Feb. 14 deadline for any interested parties to file motions in the case, indicating that he was preparing to take jurisdiction. However, Newhouse also strongly urged the Legislature to continue its efforts to adopt a plan.

The judge also set a tentative hearing date of Feb. 6 for an expected motion by Democrats to dismiss the suit. A Republican Party worker, Janet Miller, is plaintiff in the suit, and it has the tacit backing of the Legislature's Republican leadership.

The Democrats are expected to argue that Newhouse should not take jurisdiction of the redistricting process unless and until the Legislature adjourns without a plan in place.

50 years later, internment memories still linger

SEATTLE (AP) — Fifty years later, Sharon Aburano still winces at the irony of her high school teacher's lecture on the Bill of Rights.

It was a fine topic, but the wrong audience.

Aburano and her teen-age classmates were imprisoned at the time, among the 120,000 Japanese-Americans confined to internment camps during World War II. They had been accused of no crime, but in the nervous months following Japan's attack on Pearl Harbor, their heritage was enough to call their loyalty into question.

"Here we were behind barbed wire," Aburano recalled recently, "and the teacher was telling us about civil rights — the right to due process, the right to a fair and speedy trial."

They got none of that. Instead, Japanese-Americans living on the West Coast became victims of racism, wartime hysteria, and greed in an episode that some scholars consider the most serious violation of constitutional rights in U.S. history.

President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed an order allowing internment on Feb. 19, 1942. Today, as the 50th anniversary of Executive Order 9066 nears, it has become a rallying point for Japanese-American groups.

By commemorating the wartime discrimination, the groups hope to portray the internment camps as a blatant symbol of the prejudice that Asian-Americans still face in more subtle forms.

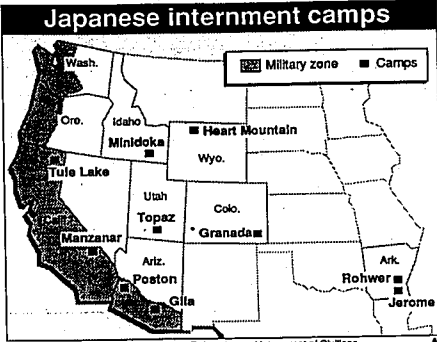

They grant that times have changed for the better since 1942. But they are concerned that racial conflicts may be rising again. Asians and Pacific Islanders are the fastest-growing group of U.S. immigrants, and Japan, while no longer the enemy, looms as America's strongest economic rival.

The fear, said U.S. Rep. Norm Mineta of California, himself a former internee at the Heart Mountain, Wyo., camp is that Asian-Americans "are becoming the targets of Japanese-bashing sentiment."

The commemorations also serve another purpose: bringing together Japanese-American communities. For decades, former internees rarely spoke of their experience, trying to put the humiliating experience behind them. But their children, third-generation Japanese-Americans known as Sansei, remained curious.

"My mother was in a camp but she didn't talk about it," said David Takami, 34. "All she'd say was it was the most humiliating experience in her life. That would end the discussion."

Takami has written a history of Seattle's Japanese immigrants. It's designed to accompany an exhibit on the internment camps at Seattle's Wing Luke Asian Museum, a grassroots history project that started with a handful of people and now has grown to include more than 50 volunteers.

Source: Federal Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians

"This is sort of replacing what my mother never told me," Takami said. "We're learning so much from the Nisei, the older people."

What they're learning is a sad story of discrimination and racial hatred directed at Japanese-Americans since the late 1800s, when the first immigrants arrived on the West Coast to work on the railroads and in salmon canneries and logging camps.

Immigrants were barred from becoming naturalized U.S. citizens; in many areas, they could not own real estate or live in certain neighborhoods. Despite this, immigrants and their children persevered, and by 1941 many were prospering.

Sharon Aburano's father was a grocer in Seattle's Japantown.

"We did very well," she said. "I remember leather sofas and marble table tops at home. But we lost it all."

In November 1941, shortly before the Pearl Harbor attack, Roosevelt had ordered a secret investigation of Japanese-Americans on the West Coast. The investigator concluded that the Japanese-Americans — two-thirds of them native-born American citizens — were overwhelmingly loyal to the United States. "There is no Japanese problem on the Coast," he reported.

But others, fearing that West Coast Japanese-Americans could aid invading Japanese soldiers, were not swayed by a lack of evidence. To them, Japanese-Americans were suspect because of their race; the absence of documented sabotage or espionage was "evidence" that they were lying low, waiting for a coming invasion.

"A Jap's a Jap," declared Lt. Gen. John L. DeWitt, commander of the internment operation. "It makes no difference whether he is an American citizen, theoretically. He is still a Japanese and you can't change him."

Also lobbying for evacuation were white businessmen and farmers on the West Coast who resented economic competition from Japanese-Americans.

"If all the Japs were removed tomorrow, we'd never miss them in two weeks, because the white farmers can take over and produce everything the Japs grow," Austin Amson, head of a California vegetable growers' association, told the Saturday Evening Post. "And we don't want them back when the war ends, either."

Roosevelt's Feb. 19 order didn't mention Japanese-Americans. It merely authorized military officials to declare security zones and exclude anyone they deemed a threat. Shortly afterward, American citizens with at least one-sixteenth Japanese blood were barred from living, working or traveling on the West Coast.

Some Americans of German and Italian background also were questioned and interned during the war, but no blanket order applied to immigrants from those Axis nations.

Ten "relocation centers" were hurriedly built in desolate areas of California, Idaho, Arizona, Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, and Arkansas. The first to go were farmers on Bainbridge Island near Seattle. They were given one week to store or sell their belongings, before being shipped off to the Manzanar camp in Southern California on March 30.

A few weeks later, Seattle's 7,000 Japanese-Americans were evacuated to a temporary camp at a fairground south of the city.

"They told us you can only take what you can carry in two hands," Aburano recalled. Her mother, strong for months, finally broke down when she was pointed toward a pile of straw, handed a canvas bag and told to stuff it to make her bed.

"That was the first time I ever saw my mother cry," Aburano said.

Five months later, the Seattle evacuees were shipped by train to the Minidoka internment camp in southern Idaho's parched sagebrush country. The camp, surrounded by barbed wire and armed guards, eventually held nearly 10,000 internees from Washington and Ore-all Asians into one category.

"When they're ready to knock you on the head, they don't ask you if you're Chinese or Japanese," said Ron Chew, director of the Wing Luke Asian Museum in Seattle.

The most infamous example of misdirected hatred occurred in 1982, when a Chinese-American named Vincent Chin was beaten to death in Detroit by an auto worker who blamed the loss of American jobs on the Japanese.

To counter violence, Asian-American groups push for more public education about the diversity and contributions of Asian-Americans, enactment of stronger hate-crime laws, and better enforcement of existing laws.

The groups count their accomplishments where they can.

In North Carolina, Lloyd Ray Piche was sentenced in October to four years in prison for conspiring with his brother, Robert Piche, to violate the civil rights of Jim Loo, a Chinese-American. Robert Piche was sentenced earlier to 37 years for beating Loo to death at a Raleigh pool hall.

Lloyd Piche's case marked the first federal civil rights conviction involving violence against Asian-Americans, said Daphne Kwok, executive director of the Organization of Chinese-Americans.

"It was a real victory for the Asian-American community," she said.

"People have said to me, 'You have the money and the apology. Do you need a park?' And I say yes. The people who have the money and the apology will be gone soon. — Sue Embrey, former internee gon.

Families lived in 16-by-20-foot rooms with one potbelly stove, one naked light bulb and one electric outlet. There was no running water. Internees scavenged wood from packing crates to make furniture. Food, scarce at first, became more plentiful once huge irrigated gardens were operating.

After the Battle of Midway, the fear of Japanese invasion lessened, and tensions eased at the camps. Internees were let out during the day to work on farms and orchards.

Young men who proclaimed their loyalty to the United States were allowed to join the Army. Some refused and were sent to a segregation center at Tule Lake, Calif. But thousands of others left the internment camps to join up. The Army's 100th Infantry Battalion and 442nd Regimental Combat Team, both composed entirely of Japanese-Americans, were among the most decorated units in the war.

The internment camps existed for three years, until the August 1945 bombings of Hiroshima and Nagasaki ended World War II. Internees were allowed to return home. One Seattle family's welcome was typical: "NO JAPS WANTED" had been painted on their house.

Japanese-Americans tried to put the war behind them. Many swore off all things Japanese, selling or destroying heirlooms such as Samurai swords.

"We just let things go," said Amy Kobayashi, interned at Minidoka at age 12. "It was embarrassing, painful to some. They just wanted to forget."

Decades later, official apologies have helped heal some wounds. In 1982, a federal commission concluded the internment was not based on military necessity, and more than 25,000 claimants have received the $20,000 redress checks Congress authorized in 1988. More than 72,000 former internees still live.

Japanese-Americans are relieved, finally, to have official recognition of the injustice they endured. But many still worry that America has not learned the lesson of the internment camps.

"Sometimes I think it might happen again," said Sue Embrey, 69, a former internee who has lobbied Congress to designate Manzanar a National Historic Site.

One year ago, as FBI agents conducted interviews of Arab-Americans during the Persian Gulf War, Embrey had an uncomfortable feeling of déjà vu. "It was very close to what we had gone through," she said.

"People have said to me, 'You have the money and the apology. Do you need a park?' And I say yes. The people who have the money and the apology will be gone someday. We need to have something that tells our future generations that this is something that shouldn't have happened, and it should never happen again."

Asian-Americans fear violence is returning due to racial hatred

The Associated Press

Asian-Americans have come far in overcoming racial hatred since World War II. But as the Los Angeles office of the Japanese American Citizens League can attest, sometimes it still seems like the bad old days.

The group's planned 50-year commemoration of Japanese-American internment camps prompted this anonymous phone call:

"I'll show you a year of remembrance, you dirty Japs. What we remember is Pearl Harbor... You just wait out for bombs planted around your day of remembrance. We'll get you, you dirty pigs."

The Jan. 14 call was a recent, but hardly the worst, example of what Asian-Americans say is a growing tide of anti-Asian harassment and violence in the United States.

They say the recession, America's economic rivalry with Japan, and a rapid increase in the number of Asian immigrants have combined to create a climate in which racial conflict is flourishing.

Bashing Japan for its trade barriers has become fashionable among U.S. politicians seeking a scapegoat for economic troubles. While Japan is the intended target, American citizens with Japanese or other Asian ancestry say they often bear the brunt of hostility whipped up by the rhetoric.

"You can't throw stones across the Pacific Ocean, but you can do it to your neighbor or someone walking down the street — and they do," said Jimmy Takashi, the JACL's Pacific Southwest director.

No nationwide statistics exist on violence against Asian-Americans, but groups who monitor such activity say the anecdotal evidence indicates an increase in hate crimes.

In November, a Japanese community center in Norwalk, Calif., was vandalized and defaced by graffiti including "Go back to Asia."

The night of Dec. 7, the 50th anniversary of the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor, a small bomb exploded after hours at a Japanese restaurant in Longport, Calif., shattering a window.

Earlier that week in San Jose, Calif., a Vietnamese restaurant was set afire. "Merry Christmas Chink" was spray-painted on the wall.

Americans with Asian or Pacific Islander heritage are still a small minority, but their numbers are increasing fast, the Census Bureau reports. A wave of immigration helped double the number of Asian-Americans in the 1980s; they now make up 3 percent of total U.S. population.

Japanese make up a shrinking slice of the Asian-American population, which has grown quite diverse in the past decade. Asian immigrants now range from illiterate farm refugees to Hong Kong millionaires. But many Americans, especially those prone to racism, lump

Vernon: Prison population growth slowing

BOISE (AP) — Corrections Director Richard Vernon told legislative budget writers on Tuesday the growth in Idaho's prison population is slowing but not enough to drop plans for additional cell space.

Appearing before the Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee, Vernon said the annual increase in inmate population has declined from 22 percent in the late 1980s to about 8 percent last year, and since late summer it has been holding relatively stable.

"Maybe the black hole is looking more like a gray hole," Sen. Mary Lou Reed, D-Coeur d'Alene, said.

But Vernon said that while total prison population has now dropped below the level department officials expected it to be at right now, the system is still taking in 15 to 20 inmates a month more than it is releasing.

"What I must tell you is our growth will continue," he said. "It will be smaller but we still will have growth."

It means the department still needs the $2.7 million Gov. Cecil Andrus has recommended for another 190-cell unit at the prison farm south of Boise and $500,000 to operate it.

Watkins: Cuts could eliminate 4,100 Rocky Flats jobs

DENVER (AP) — The Rocky Flats nuclear weapons plant will eliminate more than 4,000 jobs — cutting its workforce in half — if a key nuclear warhead program is canceled as expected, federal officials revealed.

The cuts would come as a result of cancellation of the W-88 nuclear warhead, the last nuclear production mission for the plant 16 miles northwest of downtown Denver.

The jobs cuts were revealed Monday to Sen. Hank Brown, R-Colo., and a group of Jefferson County community leaders who met with Energy Secretary James Watkins in Washington.

Watkins told the delegation that 4,100 Rocky Flats jobs could be lost over the next three years if the W-88 warhead program is scrapped.

The group went to Washington in an effort to confirm reports published over the weekend that the Bush administration plans to cancel the W-88 program. The Washington Post reported on Saturday that unnamed government officials believe the announcement is imminent.

The W-88 program has not officially been cancelled. Official confirmation of the cancellation was expected to come from Watkins on Wednesday, but it had been rumored that Bush may announce it himself. The layoffs would virtually halve Rocky Flats' workforce of 8,875 people who are employed by managing contractor EG&G Inc. and its subcontractors. But the DOE has committed to keeping 4,000 to 4,500 workers for cleanup at the 40-year-old plant, Brown said.

Watkins

“This is much of what we've been asking for — clear commitments to cleanup, to retraining, to using local personnel — so we were delighted with the results of the day,” he said.

“The W-88 warheads are carried by Trident II submarine missiles. Plutonium triggers for the warheads were to be manufactured at Rocky Flats, the nation's only facility for production of plutonium weapons triggers. The plant has been troubled in the past few years by persistent safety and environmental problems. Watkins ordered a halt to plutonium operations at the plant in December 1989 pending resolution of those problems.

Watkins told the delegation that if the W-88 is cancelled, 100 Rocky Flats workers will lose their jobs this year. About 1,000 workers would lose their jobs in fiscal 1993, 1,000 in fiscal 1994, and 2,000 in 1995.

Dennis Wise, head of the Rocky Flats steelworkers' union, said he was concerned about the manner in which the job cuts would be handled.

“They could come here and totally wipe out the hourly work force and say ‘to do any of this work requires a college degree, whether it be driving a truck or emptying a wash can,’”

However, Sen. Tim Wirth, D-Colo., said other weapons plants faced by such cuts had maintained the level of work before production cuts. He said he expected the number of Rocky Flats workers to be pared back to about 5,000, the number who worked there before EG&G took over operation of the plant and before Watkins took office.

“The average number of workers at Rocky Flats in the 1980s was roughly 5,000,” Wirth said in a prepared statement.

“Today there are some 7,500 workers on-site and another 1,000 off-site. Some gradual reduction of the workforce — primarily white collar employees — to the pre-Watkins level is to be expected.”

Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., sent a letter to Watkins on Monday asking that Rocky Flats workers be given the opportunity to be retained. She suggested some of the workers could be employed at the National Renewable Energy Laboratory, near Rocky Flats in Golden.

“The proposed law does not cover ‘isolated transactions’ or companies that do less than 60 percent of their business by telephone.

Companies also are exempt if they have an Idaho office where the bulk of their business is done, if they are subject to state or federal regulation, are covered by Securities and Exchange Commission rules or conduct certain catalog sales.

Companies selling newspaper or telephone directory ads or services also are exempt, as are “negative option” operations such as record and book clubs in which a subscriber automatically receives goods unless he or she specifically rejects them. DeLange said they are covered by other laws.

Some legislators were concerned that groups such as sheriff's associations would have to register.

DeLange said it depends on their activity. If they are engaged in commercial transactions, selling goods or services, they have to register.

“If consumers had adequate tools, they can protect themselves.”

He said telemarketers are “taking Idahoans' money at a very rapid pace.”

Key provisions of the legislation:

• Out-of-state telemarketers have to register, pay a $50 fee and provide an address where legal actions can be served.

• Purchasers have three days to cancel orders “where they have been the victim of a hard sell,” DeLange said, or simply change their minds.

• Orders that telemarketers secure from children can be rescinded and the parents held not responsible to pay.

The measure has a long list of exemptions which DeLange said are designed to allow legitimate state businesses to operate by telephone.

“It would let state government better manage its affairs,” Hansen said.

The measure says money in the reserve account cannot be used unless the state Board of Examiners certifies that there is a state budget deficit. It would be up to the Legislature to appropriate the money, Hansen said.

Rep. Myron Janes, R-Malad, said it would be even better if the proposal required a two-thirds majority to pull any money out of the fund.

“I kind of like that idea,” Hansen said, “but I'm reluctant to put that language into the constitution.”

The resolution stipulates the budget reserve account cannot accumulate more than 10 percent of the amount the state spends in a year.

“It's a business management tool for the Legislature,” Hansen said. “You don't have to put a penny in it (the reserve account) if you don't want to.”

Legislation would regulate telemarketing

BOISE (AP) — The state of Idaho is making another attempt to regulate telemarketing, an enterprise one state official calls Idaho's biggest consumer fraud problem.

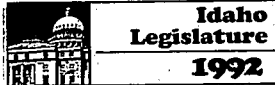

The House State Affairs Committee on Tuesday voted introduction of a bill requiring out-of-state telemarketers to register with the state for a “cooling off” period of three days, giving purchasers a chance to change their minds with no obligation to go through with a purchase.

An accompanying bill is aimed at 900 numbers, or any telephone service with a per-call charge. Similar legislation went down to the Legislature last year, but it was considered too restrictive on state businesses that use telemarketing.

Deputy Attorney General Brett DeLange, who heads the Consumer Protection Division, said he met with groups to meet those objections.

He said telemarketing, mainly high-pressure operations centered in Southern California, is the state's number one consumer fraud problem.

“We don't have a level playing field,” he said.

“If consumers had adequate tools, they can protect themselves.”

He said telemarketers are “taking Idahoans' money at a very rapid pace.”

Key provisions of the legislation:

• Out-of-state telemarketers have to register, pay a $50 fee and provide an address where legal actions can be served.

• Purchasers have three days to cancel orders “where they have been the victim of a hard sell,” DeLange said, or simply change their minds.

• Orders that telemarketers secure from children can be rescinded and the parents held not responsible to pay.

The measure has a long list of exemptions which DeLange said are designed to allow legitimate state businesses to operate by telephone.

“The proposed law does not cover ‘isolated transactions’ or companies that do less than 60 percent of their business by telephone.

Companies also are exempt if they have an Idaho office where the bulk of their business is done, if they are subject to state or federal regulation, are covered by Securities and Exchange Commission rules or conduct certain catalog sales.

Companies selling newspaper or telephone directory ads or services also are exempt, as are “negative option” operations such as record and book clubs in which a subscriber automatically receives goods unless he or she specifically rejects them. DeLange said they are covered by other laws.

DeLange said it depends on their activity. If they are engaged in commercial transactions, selling goods or services, they have to register.

State 'rainy day' fund draws opposing views

BOISE (AP) — A major battle this session of the Idaho Legislature is over the “rainy day” fund.

The state has $2.5 billion in a reserve account called the Rainy Day Fund. Gov. Cecil Andrus wants to use $9.4 million of it to balance his 1993 state budget. Republicans say they want to keep the fund intact in case the state economy turns sour.

Rep. Reed Hansen, R-Idaho Falls, won preliminary approval from the House Revenue and Taxation Committee Tuesday for a resolution that would allow the “rainy day” fund to be used only if a deficit develops in the state budget.

It was introduced and will return to Rev and Tax for subcommittee study.

It would not solve any budget battles this year. If Hansen's resolution, a proposed constitutional amendment, is approved by two-thirds of the members of the House and Senate, it would go before the voters in the November general election.

Affidavit: Jailer talked about woman

SPOKANE (AP) — An acquaintance of a Spokane County jailer accused of mistaking his position says in an affidavit the guard telephoned her and laughed about arranging to have a woman arrested after she stood him up on a date.

In a sworn affidavit filed Monday in Spokane County Superior Court, Julie Green said Ron Tussey called her Jan. 18 and told of having a “blonde babe” arrested. Green said guard Ron Tussey told her he checked the woman's name “through his computer and lo and behold, she had traffic warrants.”

Green said Tussey is a member of the Ideal Beginnings dating service where she works as a receptionist. She said Tussey, 38, often calls the service.

The affidavit was filed in the criminal case against Jennifer Johnson, 22, of Spokane. She was arrested at her apartment Jan. 15 on two traffic warrants, and a trial is set for April.

Johnson claims Tussey arranged to have her arrested as retaliation for her refusal to date him.

Johnson's attorney, Scott Everard, said he hopes to show the arrest was selective enforcement and therefore the warrants should be dismissed.

Undersheriff Terry Snedding said Tussey has admitted looking up Johnson's record on the jail computer, but only after Johnson told him about the warrants.

The sheriff's department is investigating the allegations of Johnson and other women who claim Tussey harassed them.

Food facts

Veggies absent from top 10 calorie sources

Americans have been exposed to an unprecedented deluge of information on nutrition in the past decade but it doesn't seem to be having a pronounced effect on what most of us actually eat. Consider the following list of the top-10 sources of calories in the American diet, which includes many a vegetable, fruit, whole grain or poultry product. The U.S. Department of Agriculture statistics, as noted in the debut issue of Natural Health magazine, are:

- Whole milk; eggs; margarine; white bread; rolls (commercial ready-to-serve); sugar; 2-percent milk; ground beef; wheat flour; and pasteurized process American cheese.

Industry analysts predict big seafood consumption jump

What are aging baby boomers going to be eating next? More seafood, industry analysts say. They predict that as people try to improve their diets, seafood consumption will jump from the current 15.5 pounds per person a year to 20 pounds by the year 2000. Americans already eat 22 percent more seafood than they did 10 years ago.

In addition, analysts say seafood will become more popular because it cooks quickly and because improvements in transportation and distribution have made more types available. The growing Hispanic and Asian communities are also big on fish, and they will cause more seafood dishes to be introduced into the mainstream American diet, the National Fisheries Institute predicts.

In response to the increased demand and changing demographics, the industry will offer the following, analysts say:

- New species of fish such as hybrid striped bass, skate wings, escolar and tilapia.
- Increased nutritional data on labels and in brochures at the seafood counter.
- More products aimed at children—such as breaded fish shaped like seahorses and sharks.
- Breaded fish sticks that are lower in fat because they aren't fried.
- More ready-to-eat seafoods and more microwaveable frozen dinners.
- Prices and availability are likely to stabilize because of aquaculture.

Booklet offers recipes on how to cook with dried tomatoes

What do you do with dried tomatoes? The answer lies in a free new full-color recipe booklet called "Cooking With Marinated Dried Tomatoes." From salads to sandwiches, the booklet features seven new recipes and five quick tips, each showing you how to "jump-start" your meals with dried tomatoes.

For a free copy of "Cooking with Marinated Dried Tomatoes," write, call or fax mailing information to Cooking with Marinated Dried Tomatoes, Sonoma Dried Tomatoes, 4791 Dry Creek Road, Healdsburg, CA 95448; phone 707-433-8251; fax 707-433-8255.

Books help you bluff your way in wine, gourmet cooking

They're called the "Bluffer's Guides". Paperback books with Cliff Notes-style courses in dining and drinking basics on a level slightly higher than what's served in corner taverns and fast-food restaurants.

If you want to use them for gastronomic pretension, so be it. "Bluff Your Way in Wine" by Alan Fulmer and Harry Eyres outlines some vinous terminology, gives guidance on label comprehension and explains growing regions in Europe, Australia, South America and the United States.

"Bluff Your Way in Gourmet Cooking," by Joseph T. Strub, you can learn how to equip your basic kitchen, the difference between Julia Child and James Beard and a few clues to what distinguishes cuisines such as French, Italian and Cajun.

The information in these books will help keep you from getting lost when oenophiles and foodies converse, but if you try to use it to play the sophisticate, you might be embarrassed.

The books, published by Centennial Press, sell for $3.95 each (in bookstores or call 800-225-1078). The best part is the books don't take themselves too seriously. You shouldn't either, unless you want a chuckle.

Professional chef ad-libs with leftovers

By Sheryl Julian
 Boston Globe

The major difference between the professional and home cook is not skill — there are home cooks who make superb food and can produce it in huge quantities — but efficiency and confidence. The professional cook moves through time-consuming tasks in a carefree manner, never bogged down by the routine, undeterred by missing ingredients or by a recipe that doesn't seem to be turning out as intended.

"Having knowledge definitely gives you an advantage," says caterer Linda Marino of La Bonne Maison, Boston. "I can go to the supermarket without a list and know what a recipe calls for; and I'm not intimidated by opening the refrigerator and trying to make a meal out of whatever's there, even if it seems scant."

Professional cooks know enough not to get in the Rough, the warm-weather lobster shack on Boston's Museum Wharf. "Ad-lib within the parameters of what you've done before."

Being able to ad-lib with a refrigerator's remnants is the professional's strongest asset. Given some onions and bell peppers, plum tomatoes and garlic, you might be presented with a pizza topping, an omelette filling, a chopped Middle Eastern salad, a sautéed garnish for fish or something crunchy to top a bowl of beans.

Here are more tips from professionals to ease you through the nightly supper chore.

Linda Marino hates to waste time washing lettuce, so she rinses several heads at once, spins them dry and rolls them up in paper towels, then in plastic bags. ## Cleaning pantry could provide inventive dinner ideas

By Chris Christensen
 Knight-Ridder News Service

This is the best time of year to just putter around the kitchen. I took the opportunity during a recent weekend storm to clean out my pantry. It's one of those jobs you never plan. It just happens. You start looking for that little jar of marinated artichokes way in the back, and before you know it everything is off the shelves and lined-up on the cupboards and floor.

I love when this happens.

If I plan this sort of thing, I never get around to it. But when it just happens, I actually begin to enjoy it. It's like a treasure hunt where you rediscover all kinds of delectable little goodies you forgot you had — a jar of marinated onion rings that will add zip to a homemade potato and egg salad, a small jar of pepper salad that will do wonders for beefburgers made with leftover pot roast.

Everything off the shelves, it's time to wash the cupboards, pitch the outdated stuff, rotate the stock and then departmentalize everything for easy finding — all the pasta stuff together, all the coffees and teas. ...

Not only do you come away from the project with the satisfaction of a job well done, you also have a new mental inventory of your stash so you don't continue to buy stuff you don't really need. Best of all, you're newly inspired to cook, just when you thought the holiday overkill had squelched the desire forever.

With food baskets such popular gift items, a lot of us have pantries full of condiments and specialty items we're not sure how to use. And how many times have you bought dressing — using a blend of olive and canola oils — in quantity and refrigerates that, too. The olive oil coagulates in the cold, she says, but the dressing comes Please see PANTRY/C7

Do your part to help economy: Buy socks

Dave Barry
Humor

Here at the National Institute of Economic Forecasting (motto: "So? YOU Never Made a Mistake?") we are extremely confident that the economy will improve dramatically in 1992. It will do any worse than in 1991, when it got so bad that finally even President Bush noticed it. You probably remember this. When the president realized, possibly from watching the "Tide" show, that the economy was in trouble, he immediately launched a comprehensive and wide-ranging National Economic Recovery Program consisting of buying sweat socks. He and Mrs. Bush went to a mall in Frederick, Md., where she and the president strode about, each leader directly into the J.C. Penney and bought FOUR PAIRS of sweat socks, total retail value $15. In addition, according to news reports that we are not making up:

• Mrs. Bush purchased a compact disc of an opera called "La Bottega" which she paid for with money that she borrowed from a Secret Service agent.

• The Bushes purchased a children's toy called "Slime."

All told, the Bushes pumped $50 cash money into the economy, and many leading economists thought that the recession would end right then and there. However, it did not, and we have been wracking our brains trying to understand why.

One possible problem is that, according to our research, "La Bottega" is an imported foreign opera. In recent years, more and more American consumers are choosing imported operas, with the result that thousands of U.S. opera workers are out on the street. Things could get even worse later this year with the expected introduction of several new Japanese operas, which reportedly contain more notes than the current European luxury models, yet are easier to sing.

Also we have to ask ourselves: Why did the First Couple purchase "Slime"? Why didn't they just keep John Sununu?

But despite these concerns, we're confident that in 1992 American consumers will follow the First Couple's lead by going to the mall of their choice and stimulating the economy with money that they will borrow from conveniently located Secret Service agents.

We also predict that, although the economy will continue to experience problems in the Farm Sector, the Manufacturing Sector, the Retail Sector, the Housing Sector and the Banking Sector, these problems will be offset by continued strong growth in the Frozen Yogurt Sector, the Junk Mail Sector and, of course, the Making People Feel Insecure About Their Long Distance Company Sector. We estimate that, by the end of the year, 27 percent of the U.S. work force will be employed in trying to lure people away from AT&T, with another 27 percent employed in trying to lure them back.

Another sector that we expect big things from in 1992 is the Insanely Complex High-Tech Sneaker Sector. Sneakers have become so technically advanced that it's not clear whether you're supposed to wear them or aim them at specific targets in Baghdad. Recently, for example, we received a press release from Nike Corp. concerning the Air Flight Mid basketball shoe.

According to Nike, this shoe features your Nike Air compressed-gas-filled flexible membrane midsole units in both the forefoot AND heel, plus your Phylon compression-molded Ethyl Vinyl Acetate midsole, your high-traction outsole with cutaways and, of course, your new pro-flexion tongue with Dynamic-Fit snugness. The press release doesn't say how much this sneaker COSTS. But we imagine that to pay for it, you'd have to do without your food, your clothing and your shelter.

Of course this is a small price to pay for getting the economy back on its feet again. That's why we here at the National Institute of Economic Forecasting are urging you consumers to do your part in 1992 by selling one of every organ that you have two of, such as kidneys, then getting out there to buy, buy, buy in an unselfish, economically stimulating manner. And while you're out, pick up us some socks, OK?

Women can sit wherever they want in a bar

DEAR ABBY: My wife and I have a big disagreement about women sitting at the bar when tables are available to them. She feels that as long as she is with a girlfriend (or girlfriends), it is perfectly all right.

Dear Abby
Abigail VanBuren

I disagree. As a male, I have a fairly good idea about how most men think. For the most part, when a man walks into a bar looking for someone to hit on, if he sees a woman sitting at the bar, he figures she's probably looking for company. Like I said, my wife disagrees. We both respect your opinion. How do you vote on this?
— J. IN CHICAGO

bers to say, "No, thank you, I'm married," if she's offered more than a drink.

DEAR ABBY: You have often urged parents to respect the privacy of their teen-agers with regard to letters, diaries, etc. But now that drugs have become a major threat, please comment on how much privacy you think a teen-ager should have. There are a lot of very worried parents out there.

DEAR J.: A woman may sit at the bar because (a) she wants to be seen; (b) she may want to be hit upon; or (c) she may just want to make conversation with the bartender.

A woman sitting alone at a table in a bar could be looking for company — if that's what she came in for.

I vote for your wife's sitting wherever she feels comfortable — as long as she behaves herself and remembered, he received many cards from friends and co-workers who were aware that he was terminally ill.

Some cards bore cheery messages such as, "I hear you're coming home soon." "Get well fast." "We have a lot of catching up to do!"

DEAR ABBY: I have a suggestion regarding sending cards to hospital patients. Instead of your own return address, write the patient's home address in the "return address" corner.

That way, if the patient has already been discharged, the card will be sent to his or her home address, not yours.

— PATTY WILLIAMS, EXCELSIOR, MINN.

DEAR PATTY: Thanks for an excellent suggestion. And speaking of cards, please read on:

DEAR ABBY: Don't people read the messages on cards before they send them? Obviously some do not, and I wish they would.

While my husband (now deceased) was in the hospital with a terminal illness, he received many cards from friends and co-workers who were aware that he was terminally ill.

Some cards bore cheery messages such as, "I hear you're coming home soon." "Get well fast." "We have a lot of catching up to do!"

He appreciated being remembered, but a simple "Thinking of you" card would have done more for his morale.

Please pass this along to your readers, Abby, but omit my name and town.

She would like to go to dinner with a friend, but she can't afford to do so.

She would like to live in more than one room.

She would like new glasses and better access to health care.

She would like — nothing grand, but a little more grace in these, her declining years.

She is not alone.

The Older Women's League points to some alarming facts about the struggles of aged females to keep control of their lives until the end.

- More than 70 percent of the nearly 4 million people older than 65 living in poverty are women.
- Fewer than 25 percent of older women receive any pension income.
- About 70 percent of widowed and never-married women older than 65 depend on Social Security as their only significant income.

Aging
Lucille S. deView

• Some 12 percent of midlife women have no health insurance.

• Nearly two out of three employed women older than 45 work in low-paying sales, clerical or service jobs; the wage gap between men and women grows with the years, so women earn less and less than male counterparts; and taking care of sick or needy family members continues to cost women badly needed wages and benefits. Not a pretty picture.

What to do?

• "Don't agonize, organize."

That was the motto of the late Tish Summers when she suddenly found herself alone in the world and without any money in a society that did not value its senior females. The result: the formation of the national, non-profit Older Women's League.

"We're basically a movement to protect, develop and fight for recognition of older women and their rights," says Rutha Jones, 77, of Mission Viejo, who heads the OWL chapter in Southern California. "We develop and push legislation on all fronts and for all women."

On the OWL agenda:

- Provide a national universal health care system accessible to all.
- Reform Social Security to reflect the current work and life patterns of all women.
- Expand pension coverage and make pensions more portable and equitable.
- Increase availability of safe, appropriate and affordable housing for midlife and older women, including housing with access to community services.

Combat discrimination in the workplace and improve the image of midlife and older women-workers.

Protect the rights of each individual to remain in control of decisions affecting the quality of their lives — and deaths.

One of OWL's many achievements: passage of federal and state legislation to protect the community assets of spouses when a partner must go into a nursing home.

Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — It was meant to be a joke. But the recession got the last laugh when more than 500 callers responded to an ad for a new bridal registry service offered by the 99 Cents Only Stores.

Brides and their gift-hunting pals were invited to inquire about the registry's debut with a call to the discount chain, which advertises household products for sale for under a dollar. The chain's managers knew that their inexpensive products were popular, especially during a recession; but none believed that customers would seriously consider Ajax cleanser and a sponge for couples preparing to waltz down the aisle.

"We thought it was kind of funny and we wanted to see what response we'd get," said Mimi Levinson, sales manager for the chain, based in the Los Angeles suburb of Vernal. "But those who took it seriously made us think it was a good idea. Unfortunately it's a sign of the times."

Indeed it is. With the recession hanging over the nation like a shroud rather than a veil, people are looking for more options and practical purchases instead of more traditional and expensive wedding gifts such as formal china or crystal.

"It's a fantastic idea, because people often have a lot of showers and it's very nice if someone sends you to the 99 Cents Only Store," said Barbara Tober, the New York-based editor in chief of Bride's and Your New Home magazines. "The economy would certainly show an interest in that at this point."

More specialty stores are offering registry services, Tober said. Love-birds with particular interests can register at gourmet, liquor, hardware and even record stores.

Although the 99 Cents Only Stores' bridal registry ad was created as a joke, the chain intends to sell gift certificates (in $9 increments) to those who are interested. After the enthusiastic response, management is seriously considering developing the bridal service.

When office workers at State Farm Auto Insurance in nearby Cerros suggested that Jill Savage take advantage of the ad, she laughed. But then reality hit. She realized that her friends would appreciate a less-costly gift option for her wedding next month.

"In my case it would be practical," Savage said. "I don't need the regular things you usually get. I could always use the gift certificate to buy cleaning supplies as I need them."

QMB program may help with bills

Knight-Ridder New Service

Q. I am over 65 and get Social Security, but it just isn't enough for me to live on after I pay my medical bills. A friend said I would be able to get help with my bills under some other program?

A. Your friend is probably talking about the Qualified Medicare Beneficiary (QMB) program. Generally, an applicant for the program qualifies if he or she has Medicare, and his or her income and resources are limited. The rules vary a little from state to state. To see if you qualify for the QMB program, contact your state and local medical assistance (Medicaid) agency, social service or welfare office.

Q. I didn't get Medicare medical insurance when it was offered to me last year. Is it still possible to enroll?

A. There is an annual general enrollment period for Medicare medical insurance that starts on Jan. 1 and runs through March 31. Whether you sign up in January, February, or March, your insurance will begin on July 1 of that year. There is a 10-percent premium increase for each 12-month period you could have been enrolled but weren't. The premium increase may not apply if you have employer group health coverage. Contact Social Security and they will help sign you up.

Q. I'm confused. ... I'm disabled and was wondering just how much money I can earn while I try going back to work without losing benefits. Is it $200 or $500?

A. There is no limit to how much you can earn during the trial work period — your checks during this period will not be affected. Earnings must amount to at least $200 for the month to be considered a trial work month. After 9 months of trial work (not necessarily consecutive, but within a 5 year period) your work record is reviewed.

Soup expert offers tips for best results

Knight-Ridder News Service

What is the difference between soup, chowder and stew? Soup is the umbrella term for liquid food often containing vegetables and the like. Chowder usually has onions, potatoes, vegetables, some fish or meat, and milk in it. Stew generally is chunkier and thicker than what we'd call soup and it's cooked by covering food with liquid and simmering slowly for a long period.

Going beyond definitions, there is some revisionism going on about how to make a good soup.

John Moody, kitchen systems manager for the Fresh Choice restaurants, where diners daily devour about 70 gallons of 25 different types of homemade soup in 17 California locations, thinks only the freshest ingredients — not the dregs at the bottom of the vegetable bin — should be used in making soup. He offers these other tips on soup-making:

- Be careful not to overcook it. Overboiling can break down ingredients. For example, if you put potatoes on to boil at a roar, they will break down into small pieces. Keep the soup simmering below the full boil and stir gently.
- If adding cream, add it right at the end unless you want the cream to reduce.
- If adding beans of any kind, soak them the night before so they are soft. If you want to have to cook them so long and they won't end up mushy, bean soups need very little spices added to them.

- If adding a beurre manie (equal parts flour and softened butter) to thicken a soup, make ahead and add in small pieces to prevent lumps. Then cook just below a boil at least 20 minutes to get the floury taste out.
- Remember that stocks are eminently freezable, but soups with ingredients such as potatoes and vegetables do not hold up so well. Cream soups do not freeze well.

And also remember these facts about stock, sodium and fat:

- A key to a good soup is good stock. If you do not have your own, remember that most of the canned varieties contain high levels of sodium, as much as 1,800 milligrams, more than half what experts recommend people consume daily. To reduce the levels, add companies are now marketing soup mixtures, such as packages of different kinds of beans, along with flavoring packets. You don't have to use all the flavoring package mix, which contains lots of sodium, but make sure to skim it from the top of soup. Often this is easiest, after the soup has been refrigerated and the fat has risen to the top and hardened.

Discover 10 delicious cheese sandwiches

There are many sandwich combinations using cheese — ham and cheese, cheeseburgers, tuna melt, grilled cheese with bacon, etc. But there are many still to be discovered. To give you some ideas, here are ten more sandwiches for your collection.

Remember, cheese doesn't stop with American, Cheddar or Swiss. There's Muenster, mozzarella, cream, Monterey Jack, Gouda and Brie. There are endless cheese partners such as roast beef, turkey, meat loaf and grilled chicken, as well as different breads and rolls and tasty sandwich dressings to add to the variety.

Interesting garnishes like red onion, tangy salsas, mango chutney, jarred roasted red pepper strips and crisp salad greens bring "news" to cheese sandwiches, too. These sandwich spread recipes made with lowfat yogurt are not only very flavorful, they're low in fat — less than one gram per tablespoon.

When slicing sandwiches always use a sharp serrated knife; this keeps the bread from crumbling. Be sure the sandwich filling extends to the edges of the bread so the eater doesn't feel cheated.

- Cook twice as much rice, potatoes, pasta or beans as you need for the meal. These carbohydrates and legumes tend to be the longest-cooking components of the evening meal, and it makes things easier all around if they're prepared in advance. Leftover rice can be used as fried rice, to stuff peppers or in lemon and chicken salad. Cooked potatoes can be mashed with olive oil, packed into a baking dish and broiled until golden as oven-browned hash-browns.
- Or, chop them finely for a leek and potato soup. Leftover pasta — even spaghetti with tomato sauce — can be tossed with beaten eggs and fried to make an Italian frittata. Beans can go into a vinaigrette salad with lots of red onion, or they can be mashed and fried with onions and garlic to make a filling for tortillas.
- Don't be too particular about segregating vegetables for cooking, whether you're sauteing, steaming or boiling them. If you have to cook both potatoes and broccoli, for instance, put the potatoes in the pan, give them a 15-minute head start, then add the broccoli. Don't worry about the aesthetics.
- Boston restaurateur Michela Larson of Michela's keeps on hand homemade frozen pizza dough and leaves her pizza store in the oven all the time. The dough goes from freezer to refrigerator in the morning. Then a good commercial tomato sauce, some grated cheese and leftover vegetables — broccoli, eggplant or mushrooms — go onto the dough with olives. Dinner is done in no time.
- What may be a snack to one person can be a meal to another. Page Carter, former chef to the president of MIT, eats such meals many nights. She slices open a

2. Heat the olive oil in a large pan over medium heat. Add the onion and garlic; saute 5 minutes to soften. Add the celery and red pepper; saute 5 minutes.
3. Stir in the potatoes, broth, water, basil, oregano, salt and pepper. Bring to a boil, reduce the heat and simmer 15 minutes.
4. While the soup is cooking make a white sauce: Heat the margarine in a small pan. Stir in the flour and cook 1 minute. Add the milk and stir until slightly thickened.

- One small jar of marinated artichokes makes a terrific dressing when purced with a half cup of mayonnaise. Chill until firm and serve over poached fish, mixed seafood salad, or chicken salad. Add chopped artichokes to salads, omelets, fritattas and pasta sauces.
  - Raspberry vinegar and gourmet mustard equal a savvy vinaigrette. Combine 1 to 2 tablespoons vinegar with 1 to 2 minced garlic cloves and 2 tablespoons mustard of choice (Dijon, green herbed, herbes de Provence, whole seed, Creole).
  - Whisk in 6 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil until creamy; then add salt and pepper to taste.
  - Balsamic vinegar can add rich, deep flavor to pan sauces, marinades, grilled fish, soups and stocks, braised vegetables, boiled potatoes and, of course, vinaigrettes (I like it whisked with equal parts tarragon vinegar and olive oil, and a sprinkling of Parmesan cheese). In Italy, balsamic vinegar is sprinkled on lightly sugared strawberries to intensify their "berriness."
  - Use cider vinegar for deglazing pans, adding punch to savory stews. For making strongly seasoned dressings (combined with apple juice and hazelnut oil, it makes a delectable vinaigrette for sturdy greens).
  - Most people THINK they just don't like anchovies. They just don't realize they're eating them — and loving it. For instance, anchovies are the basis of the original Caesar salad dressing. A teaspoon or two (or to taste) of mashed anchovies, or anchovy paste, can add a savory and

Choosing between hybrids and open pollinated seeds

Gardeners can choose between hybrid and open pollinated flowers and vegetables when buying seeds. Each type of seed offers advantages and disadvantages.

Allen Wilson
Gardening

Organic gardeners often prefer open pollinated varieties because they are "more natural." Open pollinated seeds are produced without any control or interference with the normal pollination process.

But even open pollinated varieties have been selected for particular desirable characteristics. When seed is produced, they are isolated from other varieties so that no unplanned cross-pollination can take place.

Hybrid seeds have taken the selection process one step further. Two different varieties have been selected for desirable characteristics and then combined or crossed together to produce a hybrid.

Every time seed of this hybrid variety is produced, these same two parent varieties must be cross pollinated. The seed company controls the pollination process by removing the pollen from one parent physically or through male sterility or incompatibility.

Anyone can produce or "save" seed from an open pollinated variety. The hybrid can only be produced by the seed company because it controls the parents. Seed saved from a hybrid is not the same because the parents contribute different characteristics to the hybrid. These characteristics segregate into a mixture of types when seed is saved from the hybrid.

Hybrids normally outyield open pollinated varieties because of the greater vigor produced from crossing unlike parents. They are also very uniform because the parents have been carefully self-pollinated until they are very uniform. Because they are more expensive to develop and produce, hybrid seeds are usually higher priced than open pollinated seeds.

A home gardener can save seed from an open pollinated variety, but he may even be able to improve it by selecting a slight variation which is even better adapted to his climate or growing conditions. For example, a variety may outyield a later maturing hybrid in a short-season climate.

Even saving seed from open pollinated varieties can sometimes produce surprises. For example, two different squash varieties grown in the same garden can be cross pollinated by bees and produce an unwanted in-between type. This is actually a natural hybrid. Although it may be very vigorous, it may not be at all the type that is wanted.

My personal choice is to plant the best adapted variety available. If there is a well adapted hybrid I generally use it because of higher yields or greater uniformity.

My leaflet on vegetable varieties includes recommendations based upon trials for the past 15 years. For a copy send $1 and a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Allen Wilson, P.O. Box 343, Rexburg, Idaho 83440. Ask for vegetable variety leaflet.

Different insulation widths enable snug fit

Q. My attic has blown-in or loose-fill insulation and I want to replace it with roll-type fiberglass. My problem is that the rolls are too narrow to fit in the joist spaces, which are 19 inches wide. Can I fill in beside the fiberglass with loose fill, which I'd like to reuse? Is it okay to use two types of insulation? — G. Hain

Do it yourself Gene Austin

A. It is all right to use two types of insulation, but putting one beside the other probably isn't the best solution here.

First, roll-type insulation that will completely fill the space is available. Fiberglass insulation for homes is normally made in widths to fit snugly into standard stud and joist spaces, which are generally 16 inches but sometimes 24 inches between centers.

The actual insulation width in each case is 15 and 23 inches. If your joists are 19 inches apart, someone did not follow the rules, but this is not uncommon in old homes.

Some additional widths of roll insulation are made, but they are not usually available in small quantities to do-it-yourselfers.

Fiberglass designed for 24-inch joists would be fairly easy to adapt to 19-inch spaces. To do this, cut about three inches off one side of each piece taken from the roll. The insulation will then be slightly wider than the space, allowing for a snug fit. Fiberglass is easy to cut with scissors or with a utility knife held against a straightedge. The three-inch pieces can be used to stuff into small areas at the ends and sides of the attic. Don't cover vents with insulation, however, or pack insulation around recessed lights.

If you want to reuse the existing loose fill, probably the most practical approach is to rake it out as evenly as possible between the joists, then put a layer of unfaced (no vapor barrier) roll-type fiberglass on top of it.

Q. I suspect my house contains lead paint and I'd like to test for it myself. Where can I get one of the testing kits

I've heard about? — A. Heiser

A. Kits to test for lead in paint, ceramics and several other materials are available from LeadCheck, a division of HybriVet Systems of Framingham, Mass. These kits contain chemically treated swabs that are rubbed over the surface of the suspect material. A swab turns pink if a significant amount of lead is present.

Kits containing eight swabs ($17 postpaid) or 16 swabs ($28.45) are available. Call 1-800-262-5323 to order or get more information.

Do-it-yourself tests such as Lead-Check's are useful, but do not give precise readings and are generally not sensitive enough to detect lead at levels that are low but still considered dangerous. For more precise testing, contact your county or state health department for names of laboratories that conduct lead tests.

Q. I'm looking for an effective gutter guard to keep leaves and debris out of my rain gutters. I tried some aluminum mesh sold in rolls, but it is difficult to install and the wind blows it away. Any better ideas? — M. Petry

A. I've tried a variety of gutter guards and the best I've found so far is a pre-formed aluminum mesh sold in 36-inch strips and labeled Alumax premium hinged gutter guards. It is sold at some home centers and hardware stores, and is made by Alumax Home Products, 450 Richardson Drive, Lancaster, Pa. 17604.

This product is designed especially for aluminum gutters and is very easy to install. Each section has two clips that snap on from the front lip of the gutter. The back edge of the section fits over the rear of the gutter, forming an arched guard that sheds leaves and keeps all but the finest debris out of the gutters. The clips act as hinges, so the sections can be lifted up for cleaning the gutters when necessary.

The price is also reasonable. I paid less than $2 per strip.

Sharpen, prepare cutting, digging tools for spring

By Gene Austin
Knight-Ridder News Service

Do-it-yourself landscapers and gardeners can get a head start on this year's projects by getting outdoor cutting tools sharp and ready for action.

Lawnmower blades, pruning tools, hedge and grass shears, spades, hoes, axes, hatchets, sickles and post-hole diggers are some of the tools that will work better and more safely if their cutting or digging edges are kept in good condition.

A bench-type power grinder can make sharpening many tools fast and easy, and is a good investment for those with sizable tool collections. A serviceable grinder with six-inch grinding wheels, which is adequate for most sharpening, can be bought for less than $60. Belt and disc Sanders can also be put to good use in tool sharpening and are used much like a grinder.

However, most do-it-yourselfers can keep their outdoor tools sharp with a few relatively inexpensive files and honing stones. Basic files needed for sharpening are a flat mason's or double-cut file, which has a checkered surface and is used for fast removal of metal, and a flat mill or single-cut file with slanted, parallel cutting teeth for smoothing and fine sharpening. Both files should be about 10 inches long.

Also helpful for sharpening some tools with curved edges is a small round file.

Never use a file without a handle that covers the pointed tang; a slip can cause injury to the hand. Files are held at both ends when in use, with one hand gripping the handle and the other lightly holding and guiding the tip. The tool being filed should be held in a fixed position in a vise or other clamping device. Apply pressure to the file on the forward stroke, then lift the file from the surface for the return stroke.

For edges that only need honing, an oil stone made of silicon carbide is a good choice. The basic stone is flat and rectangular, with coarse and fine surfaces on opposite sides. When using the stone for sharpening, lubricate the surface with special honing oil, kerosene or most any light oil. A second honing stone with a round or convex surface is useful when sharpening some tools with curved edges.

Small tools, such as knives and chisels, are honed by clamping the oil stone in a fixed position and working the cutting edge over the stone. To hone large tools, use the stone much like a file while the tool is held in a fixed position.

Eagles regain No. 1 ranking

The Times-News

College of Southern Idaho has completed its return to the No. 1 spot in the National Junior College weekly ratings.

The designation comes just after the Golden Eagles' biggest win of the year — a one-point win at Eastern Utah last week — and four days before they get a chance to avenge the loss of the year that knocked them off the top spot for six weeks.

The Eagles, holding a 21-1 record, garnered 10 first-place votes from the participating regional directors, followed by Aquinas, Tenn., which is six first-place

Britain Olympic skater trained at Sun Valley

SUN VALLEY — For the past eight months, Steven Cousins has quietly been training on Sun Valley's ice rinks for the upcoming Winter Olympics, Feb. 8.

At 19 years of age, Cousins will skate under the flag of Great Britain. He left his homeland of Wales in order to come to the United States to train under the tutelage of Alex McIlwain, the skating coach who helped lead Debi Thomas to a Bronze medal in the 1988 Winter Olympics.

Cousins came to skate at Sun Valley to have the opportunity to appear in Sun Valley's summer ice shows along side so many of the world's great skating stars, said Deann Beideck, Sun Valley's Skating Director.

No relation to Robin Cousins, the 1980 men's figuring skating Olympic gold medalist, Cousins left Sun Valley last week to compete in the European Championships in Switzerland before going on to the Olympics.

Beideck said Cousins won the British National Championships in both 1990 and 1991, qualifying him for the one spot Great Britain has in the men's competition.

Cousins is "becoming a skater unto his own" excelling at triple jumps and developing his own unique style, Beideck said.

High school wrestling coach enters record book for wins

PHILADELPHIA — Forty-five years ago, the headmaster of Haverford School in suburban Philadelphia went looking for a wrestling coach.

Neil Buckley volunteered. Buckley taught history to sixth-graders. His only wrestling experience was informal competition in the gym. Now he has made wrestling history.

Last week, Buckley, 75, coached his 603rd victory, a national record according to the National Federation of State High School Associations. His career record is 603-108-8, including a 14-4-1 mark this season.

The previous record was held by William "Red" Schmitt, who compiled a 602-84-5 mark at Alton Western Military Academy and Granite City (Ill.) South between 1946 and 1985.

Buckley, despite an attack of laryngitis, explained Tuesday what made him think he could coach despite an obvious lack of background.

"Everyone thinks you have to be a great wrestler to coach," Buckley said. "You don't. Good coaches aren't necessarily good wrestlers. Good wrestlers are not necessarily good coaches."

"The moves are known by all coaches and wrestlers. That's the basic stuff. The secret is how to place your material. How to work with people. How to make them have confidence in you. You

JEROME — Julie James scored 19 points and for other Tigers hit double figures to lead Jerome to a 73-31 win over the Wood River Wolverines in the opening round of the District 4 Class A-2 girls' basketball tournament Tuesday night.

Burley followed with a 45-31 victory over Buhl. The Tigers' win sets up a showdown with the Burley Bobcats tonight at 8 p.m. Wood River will face Buhl at 6:15 p.m. in a loser-out contest.

Wood River got out to an early 9-4 lead before the Tigers got untracked. James picked up 10 of her 19 points in the opening quarter.

The Wolverines were able to stay relatively close through the intermission, trailing 36-21.

The Tigers opened the second half by extending their defense and allowing only eight points in the third quarter.

Offensively the Tigers were unstoppable on the inside: In addition to James' 19 points, Emily Capps scored 12 points and Landis Barnes added 11 points.

Buhl's defense gave Burley problems, but the Bobcats also held the Indians in check.

"They played really good defense," said Burley Coach Michelle Skyles. "We didn't get a lot of things we wanted. They caused us to play a game we weren't prepared for. They really stepped up and played well. I never felt like we were in control of the game."

Bobcat point guard Rhonda Dudley picked up two fouls in the first 90 seconds of play and struggled through the rest of the contest. Courtney Petersen paced Burley with 15 points. Jennifer Mabey added 10 points and eight rebounds.

Shannon Sisson led Buhl with seven points.

Marchibroda returns to Colts

The Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Ted Marchibroda returned to coach the Colts today, the team he took from mediocrity to three AFC East championships in the 1970s. The announcement was made at a news conference at the Colts' headquarters.

Marchibroda, the offensive coordinator for the Buffalo Bills the past two years, coached the Colts from 1975-79 when they were in Baltimore. His 10-4 record in his first year followed the Colts' 12-12 record the previous year and marked the greatest turnaround in NFL history.

He was named NFL coach of the year in 1975, and his 1976 team led the NFL in total offense, passing and scoring.

Marchibroda was fired by Robert Irsay following a 5-11 season in 1979.

Yawn — Burley hands Minico loss

By Larry Howe Times-News writer

RUPERT — Use to be the Burley-Minico basketball game was played at a tempo about one and one-half steps faster than either club could play.

The Spartans came out in a deliberate offense that wasn't supposed to be a complete stop. But after a slow first half and a 25-minute halftime in which 15 minutes was spent auctioning a basketball for $240, the second half degenerated into walk along and both teams piled up bad passes.

Oh, yes, Burley, now 12-3, pinned the 13th straight loss of the season on the winless Spartans who now haven't won a game since the 14th time out last year. The final score was 51-36.

"This was about the most boring Minico-Burley game I've ever seen," confirmed Burley Coach Bill Cowell who played for the Spartans and has coached on both sides now.

"I felt in the first half we played pretty hard. But in the second half (after his team stood on the baseline for seven minutes and watched the auction), we did nothing," Cowell said.

Minico Coach Craig Stutzman, who is under fire by fans and parents who are listing things like 80 percent team free throw shooting as an attainable goal, said "First, we didn't play very well.

But we had it at 12 points going into the last three minutes and that gave us a chance," he said. Stutzman said he was pleased with his offense's recognition of Burley's shifting defenses.

"I thought we recognized the match up very well and slide into the offense against it. We got the shots but they wouldn't drop," he said.

Stutzman said the other handicap Minico fought was rebounding, particularly on Burley's end of the gym.

"How many putbacks did they get?" he asked. The deliberate style did a couple of things, like holding Burley's Kevin Moreton to under double figures for the first time this year and limiting his assists.

He wound up with nine points. Chuck Feeney and Travis Smith paced Burley with 11 and 12 points, respectively.

The Bobcats hit the first four points of the game and never trailed, although Steve Stephens and Andrew Alexander shot Minico back into a brief tie.

J.V. Evans untied it the next time downcourt and Burley was ahead to stay. The Bobcats three times had 20-point leads in the second half.

In the preliminary, Burley came from 18 down in the final quarter but fell short 70-65.

Rookie joins reserves for All-Star game

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Dikembe Mutombo, the Denver Nuggets' highly celebrated rookie, will be the only first-year player in the NBA's 42nd All-Star game Feb. 9 in Orlando.

The 7-foot-2 Mutombo, the first rookie chosen to play in the All-Star game since San Antonio's David Robinson in the 1989-90 season, was one of 14 reserves named Tuesday by the league's head coaches.

Mutombo, who will be on the West team, leads all rookies with 18.5 points and 13.3 points per game, and ranks third in the league in rebounding at eighth in blocked shots with an average of 2.63 per game.

Also selected as reserves for the West team were Otis Thorpe and Hakim Olajuwon of Houston, Jeff Hornacek and Don Majerle of Phoenix. James Worthy of the Los Angeles Lakers and John Stockton of Utah. Picked for the East team were Scottie Pippen of Chicago, Reggie Lewis of Boston, Dennis Rodman and Joe Dumars of Detroit, Dominique Wilkins of Atlanta and Brad Daugherty and Mark Price of Cleveland.

In addition to Mutombo, those making their first All-Star appearances will be Lewis, Thorpe, Hornacek and Majerle.

Previously chosen in fan balloting as starters for the West were guards Magic Johnson of the Lakers and

With Johnson retired after having tested HIV positive, NBA commissioner David Stern previously named Golden State's Tim Hardaway, who finished No. 3 among West guards in the fan balloting, to the team.

The East starters will be guards Michael Jordan of Chicago and Isiah Thomas of Detroit, center Patrick Ewing of New York, and forwards Charles Barkley of Philadelphia and Larry Bird of Boston.

Levy blasts players for pre-game remarks

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Marv Levy is fed up with his Buffalo Bills in more ways than one. In the aftermath of the Bills' 37-24 loss to the Washington Redskins in Sunday's Super Bowl, Levy warned his players about their behavior prior to big games.

"I think some of them could use better judgment in their public statements," the Bills' coach said before his team left Minneapolis on Monday. "I think you're better being totally bland in your comments."

"I don't think they realize a comment they make is interpreted in greater depth than the depth of thought they gave before making the comment. They're better off just talking football."

Levy wasn't naming names, but his comments appeared to be meant for NFL MVP Thurman Thomas and defensive end Bruce Smith.

In the week leading up to the Super Bowl,

Smith complained that some fans sent him racist letters and he was considering asking for a trade, while Thomas still insisted he wasn't getting enough recognition.

After the game, in which he missed the Bills' first two offensive plays because he couldn't find his helmet, Thomas criticized the coaching staff for not giving him the ball more often.

Levy said Thomas was wrong. "We were in a mode where we had to pass," Levy said. "We would have loved to have been able to strike a balance, but we had to pass. When you fall behind, you don't have a game plan anymore. You've got to play catch-up."

Levy said he tells his players they should try to let their play on the field "speak so loudly, no one can hear what you're saying."

He added that some of his players "haven't all gotten the message, and they need to. Their team would be better off if they did."

And then there was Leon Seals' postgame demand to be traded.

"I don't care what player wants to be traded," Levy said. "I care if we want to trade him."

Levy also said that in 40 years of coaching, he never heard of a player missing playing time because of a lost helmet.

"I recall a lot of players losing their heads, but never their helmets," he said.

"You tell them, 'Have your helmets with you at all times.' But what am I going to do, run around and yell, 'Where's your helmet? Where's your helmet?'"

Penguins lash out at league

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Not surprisingly, the defending Stanley Cup champion Pittsburgh Penguins are on the attack. Except their target isn't opposing goaltenders, but the league itself.

Incensed over referee Ron Hoggarth's conduct in Sunday's 6-4 loss to Washington, All-Star center Mario Lemieux called the NHL "a garage league" that will never attract a major TV contract as long as it condones mediocre officiating.

Lemieux was just as angry Monday when linemate Jaromir Jagr drew a 10-game suspension for bumping into Hoggarth, saying the NHL "is out of hand." He said players drew short suspensions for serious stick violations, yet Jagr was given a "ridiculous" ban for inadvertently bumping into an official. League officials declined Tuesday to critique Lemieux's remarks, but it was obvious that when one of hockey's few nationally recognizable names speaks, the NHL listens. Intently.

"He's one of our premier players, and when he makes comments, everyone takes notice," NHL spokesman Gary Meagher said.

Lemieux's uncharacteristically angry outburst clearly displayed his unhappiness that many sports fans consider the NHL only a small step above the World Wrestling Federation in credibility.

According to Lemieux and Penguins coach Scott Bowman, Hoggarth ignored blatant holding, hooking and interference violations while calling only two minor, incidental infractions on Lemieux. Lemieux wondered why the NHL condones teams winning by hook or crook.

"It was a good hockey game until the referee got into it," Lemieux said. "It's just a disgrace for this game, and as long as we're going to have people like this, the game's not going to go anywhere."

"We're not making any progress. Sometimes they wonder why we can't get a national TV contract. It's because of guys like that. Just a disgrace," Hoggarth, a 20-year NHL veteran, "just took up with us. He's," so bad," he said.

The result of the inconsistent officiating is that less-talented teams can slow high-scoring teams like Pittsburgh with a clutch, grab and hold style that most fans dislike, Lemieux said.

"We can't go out there and hook and grab all the time," he said. "It's a skating game, a passing game. I think that's what the fans want to see. The advantage is to the marginal player now. That's the way this garage league is run."

Lemieux's remarks may violate NHL rules barring blatant criticism of the officiating, but Meagher wouldn't speculate if Lemieux would be fined. "The important thing from league standpoint is ... the comments were made out of the frustration of the moment. That has to be taken into context," he said.

Neither Bryan O'Neill, the NHL executive vice president who would hear Jagr's appeal, nor league director of officiating Bryan Lewis, who attended the game, would comment.

Jagr was suspended after O'Neill determined he violated NHL Rule 67, which prohibits physical contact with an official. Jagr, Chicago's Stu Grimson and Buffalo's Alexander Mogilny all have received 10-game bans for recent violations of the previously seldom-imposed rule.

Jagr claims the collision, which wasn't captured by TV cameras, was accidental and incidental. Lemieux said Hoggarth initially told him he wouldn't invoke Rule 67, only to change his mind.

"I wasn't not to hit him," Jagr said. "I'm not an idiot."

Jagr complained that just before his ejection, he saw Hoggarth laughing after two players hit him in the head. When he complained, Jagr said, "He tells me since I'm a European player, he can't call it."

Rabid Redskin fans rally, rebuff officials

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thousands of men and women shrieked, waved their fists, danced, sang and stomped in the mud near the U.S. Capitol on Tuesday to pay homage to the Super Bowl champion Washington Redskins.

By police estimates, about 75,000 fans gathered on the National Mall for the rally organized to give the team its official welcome. The Redskins defeated the Buffalo Bills 37-24 in Minneapolis on Sunday.

People dressed in burgundy and gold caps, scarves, T-shirts and sweat shirts sneaked their kids out of school, took long lunch breaks and canceled other plans to attend the rally.

"We came out because we're diehard Redskins fans. We would have come even if it rained," said Margaret Chatman, 35, of Silver Spring, Md. "I've been to previous Super Bowl victory events in the rain."

"I've been a Redskins fan since I was six months old, but it's also nice to see people get together and unite over something for a change," said Dwight Dickinson, 34, of Washington. "Usually everyone is all over everyone else's back."

The crowd made it clear they did not come to listen to politicians.

Before team members spoke, speeches by D.C. Mayor Sharon Pratt Kelly and congressional delegate Eleanor Holmes Norton

'The Redskins have given new meaning to the words 'national defense.'

— Congressional delegate Eleanor Holmes Norton were interrupted by shouts of "We want Joe! We want Joe!" from fans who wanted to hear from coach Joe Gibbs.

"I take pride in the fact that we have the team that brought home the Super Bowl cup," said Kelly, who proclaimed the day Washington Redskins Day.

The Redskins have given new meaning to the words, "national defense," Norton said.

Gibbs and several players were cheered as they were introduced. The cheering turned to screaming as the players held the Super Bowl trophy up for everyone to see.

"I just hope you've enjoyed this season as much as we have," said wide receiver Art Monk.

Eight Redskins, including Super Bowl MVP Mark Rypien were not at the rally. They were in Hawaii preparing for this weekend's Pro Bowl.

The only solemn note came when

Gibbs called for a moment of silence for the late Glenn Brenner, a popular TV sportscaster who died of a malignant brain tumor earlier this month.

"I know one thing — Glenn would have wanted us to have fun today," Gibbs said.

Not everyone at the rally was a longtime, rabid Redskins fan.

"I'm a diehard Vikings fan, but this was my only chance to see a Super Bowl victory celebration," said Greg Schmitz, 24, who recently moved from Minnesota to Washington.

"I'm a recently converted diehard Redskins fan," said David Anderson, 25, also a Minnesota native. "If I'd stayed with the Vikings, I might never have been able to cheer a Super Bowl winner."

Timothy Molsell, 38, of Washington, said he came for the sake of his 7-year-old son, Timothy Jr., who got to take a day off from school.

"He's a Redskins fan, he watched the Super Bowl, and I came for him more than anything else," Molsell said.

Except for a little pushing in the part of the crowd nearest the stage, police reported few problems.

Authorities had estimated a crowd of as many as 200,000 for the rally.

No arrests or injuries were reported.

Groups peg retired racers for adoption

NEW YORK (AP) — Retired greyhounds are being given pastures and living-room sofas: Racing and animal-protection groups said Tuesday they have set up a $100,000 fund to help save thousands of the dogs from early graves.

"This dog is as soft and as loving as it's possible for a dog to be," said Roger Caras, president of the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

Alongside him stood Herme, a sleek greyhound without a track but no longer without a home.

"There's no justification for euthanizing an animal like this because he can't run anymore," Caras said.

The ASPCA will oversee the Greyhound Adoption Fund put together by the American Greyhound Council to address the problem of unwanted dogs being abandoned. The council represents track owners, greyhound owners and breeders.

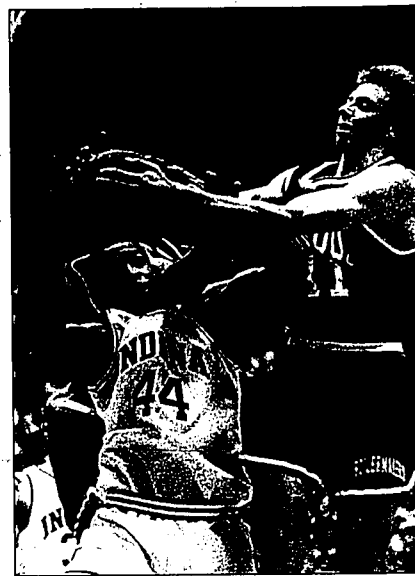

The money goes to about 25 greyhound adoption groups around the country to cover costs for kennels, runs, food and veterinary care.

A videotape will be played at racetracks to help get out the message to those eager to adopt a retired racer: "We're athletes, we're beautiful, we're elegant and we're yours."

The fate of many over-the-hill greyhounds was sharply illustrated earlier this month in Arizona when the carcasses of 124 greyhounds were

Oklahoma State remains unbeaten

DALLAS (AP) — Byron Houston scored 13 of his 17 points in the second half as third-ranked Oklahoma State remained unbeaten with a 64-53 victory Tuesday night over Southern Mississippi.

By winning, the Cowboys became only the third Big Eight ever team to sweep its non-conference games. Oklahoma State (19-0) completed its non-conference slate with a 16-0 mark.

SMU (8-9) gave the Cowboys problems with a 2-3 zone but Houston, who averages 21 points, managed to shake free just enough to hurt the Mustangs.

Randy Davis scored 12 points and Sean Sutton and Bryant Reeves had 10 apiece in the second-lowest-scoring game of the year for the Cowboys. OSU was held to 63 points in a victory over New Orleans.

Mike Wilson scored 17 points and Tim Mason added 13 for the Mustangs.

Only Missouri in 1973 and Kansas in 1990 had gone unbeaten in non-Big Eight play. The Cowboys are off to the best start in school history and are aiming for the school record of 25 straight victories.

No. 4 Indiana 106, Purdue 65

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP) — Calbert Cheaney scored 23 points and No. 4 Indiana won its 13th straight game, routing Purdue 106-65 on Tuesday night for the Boilermakers' second-worst loss ever.

The first-place Hoosiers (15-2 overall, 6-0 Big Ten) also gave Gary Keisler his biggest loss to Indiana in 12 years as Purdue coach.

Purdue's Woody Austin, the Big Ten's second-leading scorer with a 22.4 average, was held to 15. His 3-pointer in the final seconds averted the Boilers' biggest loss ever, 44 points to Illinois in 1948.

Line Darnier scored 17 of his 19 points in the second half to lead Purdue.

The Hoosiers scored a season-high 106 points, hitting 65.5 percent (19-of-29) in the first half.

Damon Bailey finished with 15 points and Greg Graham added 13 as the Hoosiers quickly blew apart Purdue's game plan of mixing outside shooting and post play.

The Boilermakers (11-7, 3-3) never challenged after a 10-10 tie on a basket by Matt Painter.

Coming off a weeklong rest since beating Michigan, Indiana's defense forced 13 turnovers and held Purdue to 10-of-23 shooting in the first half.

No. 5 Kansas 85, Marquette 61

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Adonis Jordan scored 14 points and No. 5 Kansas used a late first-half spurt and its hustling defense to rout Marquette 85-61 on Tuesday night.

The Jayhawks (15-1) went on an 11-0 run sparked by a technical foul on Marquette coach Kevin O'Neill to take a 35-24 halftime lead, then pulled away in the second half.

Alonzo Jamison converted a three-point play and drove for a layup, giving the Jayhawks a 29-23 lead.

Marquette's leading scorer, Damon Key, fouled out with 10:02 to play with only two points, 13 under his average.

Jim Melville led Marquette (11-7) with 15 points.

Judge reverses player's suspension on theft charge

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — A federal judge ruled Tuesday that University of Missouri forward Jamal Coleman won't be suspended from school because of a theft conviction.

Judge Scott O. Wright angrily criticized university disciplinary procedures as a "damned outrage," and suggested that Coleman, who is black, didn't get fair treatment from an all-white disciplinary panel.

Wright said after a daylong hearing that Coleman, who is playing with the eighth-ranked Tigers, removing questions about the future of the senior's college basketball career. The judge said he would make permanent a temporary restraining order he issued in December that set aside Coleman's suspension for a semester. That order allowed Coleman to remain on the team.

Coleman had challenged his suspension, saying it was harsher than punishment given two women who worked with him to steal from the University Bookstore in Columbia.

Wright agreed. "They were placed on probation and he got the ax. It's not fair," the judge said in heated remarks from the bench.

You should see the other guy

New York Daily News

NEW YORK — Preparing for his bout Tuesday night on the Daily News Golden Gloves card, held at Yonkers Raceway, Daniel Caruso experienced a unique humiliation.

Fighting on the all-novice card, Caruso, an unattached boxer, was bounding up his punching resistance by pouncing his gloves in his face just before introductions.

Caruso scored with one punch, giving himself a bloody nose; the doctor would not allow him to box. Caruso's self-KO allowed Kim Richardson of the PAL advanced in the 156-pound novice competition.

Fielder signs into history with single-season contract

Cecil Fielder $4.5 million breaks old record

NEW YORK (AP) — Cecil Fielder agreed to the largest single-season contract in baseball history on Tuesday. While Mark McGwire took a rare payout for a player in salary arbitration, Fielder, who had 95 homers and 265 RBIs during the past two seasons, settled with the Detroit Tigers at $4.5 million. He had asked for an arbitration record $5.4 million while Detroit had offered $3.2 million.

Ryan's $4.4 million 1992 salary with the Texas Rangers. "Both sides agreed that we're going to continue talking about a multi-year deal," said Jim Bronner, one of Fielder's agents. "This puts him in good position for a multi-year deal." Fielder, 28, is eligible for free agency after the 1993 season. In 1991, he hit .261 with 44 homers and 133 RBIs. "I wanted to avoid any further to-do on either side," Tigers general manager Jerry Walker said. "That's the main thing we tried to get done." Six other players in arbitration agreed to one-year contracts Tuesday, leaving 102 remaining. McGwire saw his salary decrease from $2,875,000 to $2.65 million, halfway between his request for $2.85 million and the Oakland Athletics' offer of $2.45 million. McGwire hit .201 with 22 homers and 75 RBIs last season. A year ago, the only cut in arbitration was taken by Dodgers infielder Jeff Hamilton. Other signings: reliever Mike Maddux and San Diego settled at $510,000, a $400,000 raise. Pittsburgh outfielder-first baseman Lloyd McClendon agreed at $465,000, a $190,000 raise.

Outfielder Mark Carreon, obtained by Detroit last week in a trade with the New York Mets, settled at $355,000, a raise of $140,000. Catcher Joe Girardi and the Chicago Cubs agreed at $300,000, a raise of $75,000. And late in the day, San Francisco infielder Greg Linton agreed to a one-year contract. Meanwhile, Kansas City agreed to a minor-league contract with free agent infielder Curtis Wilkerson, who would get a $200,000 major-league deal if he makes the team. Seattle agreed to a minor-league deal with pitcher Mark Grant, who would get $250,000 if he makes the team, and Texas agreed to a minor-league deal with pitcher Mike Jeffcoat, who would get a $200,000 big-league deal if he's on the opening day roster. Cincinnati agreed to a minor-league contract with infielder-outfielder Al Newman, who would get a $100,000 minor-league contract if he makes the team. Relief pitcher Terry Leach agreed to a minor-league deal with the Montreal Expos and former Los Angeles infielder Dave Anderson agreed to a minor-league contract with the Dodgers.

Smulyan will miss formal buyout offer

SEATTLE (AP) — Seattle Mariners owner Jeff Smulyan will be absent when a Japanese-led group makes a formal presentation to buy the American League franchise for $100 million on Wednesday. The Baseball Club of Seattle, headed by billionaire Hiroshi Yamauchi, president of Nintendo Inc. of Kyoto, Japan, made a $100 million offer last week to buy the financially troubled Mariners from Smulyan.

The new group isn't happy Smulyan will be missing. "We're disappointed Mr. Smulyan won't be at the meeting," Both Hartley, spokesman for the new consortium, said Tuesday. "We hoped he would be there. We urged him to come. The baseball ownership committee urged that he there and he has chosen not to be there." "There's no reason for Jeff to be at the meeting," Mariners spokesman Dave Aust said. "It's no big deal that he's not going to be there."

Aust said the Mariners' prospective buyers asked for the meeting for Wednesday. Smulyan had previous commitments to be in Indianapolis, Smulyan's broadcasting empire is based in Indianapolis.

In Smulyan's place, Mariners president Gary Kaseff and lawyers for the baseball team will meet with representatives of the new group at the offices of the Seattle law firm of Bogle and Gates on Wednesday afternoon.

Representing the Yamauchi interests will be Howard Lincoln, a senior vice president of the media-based Nintendo of America Inc., and John Ellis, chairman and chief operating officer of Puget Sound Power and Light Co. Ellis holds a minority interest in Baseball Club of Seattle.

Ellis and Lincoln will be accompanied by John Bauer, an accountant, and Stewart Landefeld, a lawyer, Hartley said. "It's our understanding that we will present all of the paperwork to the proposed deal," Hartley said. "There are some things that baseball is asking to be presented and we will fulfil their requirements. We will make a presentation to the Mariners and we will answer all their questions."

Aust said it is not up to the Mariners to decide whether the new group's offer is acceptable or unacceptable. He said Kaseff and team lawyers will make sure all the information that the league baseball owners need is complete.

"This meeting is for us to receive a completed application and to get as much background as baseball needs," Aust said. "We will review it, make sure it is complete and forward it to major league baseball and the ownership committee." Although Smulyan is a member of baseball's ownership committee, which is made up of eight team owners and two league presidents, he will not vote on the sale, Aust said.

The sale must be approved by 11 of the 14 AL owners and seven of the 12 National League owners. On Friday, one day after the new group announced it wanted to buy the Mariners, the ownership committee met in a telephone conference call and told the buyers they must first detail their makeup and financial structure to Smulyan.

The problem major league baseball's owners have with the offer is non-North American involvement in the ownership of a franchise. Commissioner Fay Vincent has said it is "unlikely" to win approval because of the Japanese money. However, four minor league franchises in North America have Japanese ownership, including Class AAA Vancouver, British Columbia, of the Pacific Coast League.

Yamauchi would own 60 percent of the franchise. His son-in-law, Minoru Arakawa, of Medina and president of Sumitomo of America, would manage the Yamauchi family's investment. Arakawa has lived in the Seattle area for 15 years but is a Japanese citizen.

The Yamauchi family has put up $75 million of a $125 million franchise. Seattle area businessmen would own 40 percent of the Mariners.

New San Jose Stadium: A Giant sellout?

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — Anti-tax pickets rallied outside city hall Tuesday to campaign against building a new baseball stadium in San Jose, calling the deal to lure the San Francisco team south "a Giant sellout." "We don't need to raise taxes to afford millionaires... This should not be publicly financed," said Ross Signorino, a protest organizer and a member of Citizens Against Stadium Taxes. "It will go down in defeat."

The protest by about two dozen people came one week after San Jose Mayor Susan Hammer detailed her plan to increase the city's utility tax rate from 5 percent to 7 percent to help pay for the proposed $185 million stadium. The city council can impose such a rate hike, which would raise an estimated $16 million a year to help retire any stadium debt. It also would cost the average household $30 a year in higher utility bills. But voters must approve spending the money for a stadium, part of the deal announced Jan. 15 between the city and the Giants. The team would move 50 miles south by 1996 after leaving windy Candlestick Park. "I just don't think it's fair to ask us to pay more taxes for what's a private business," said 70-year-old protester Elaine Fee, who carried a sign calling the plan "A Giant Sellout." The anti-tax group helped defeat a November 1990 ballot issue to build a new Giants stadium in Santa Clara. But business groups, which also opposed that 1990 issue, haven't come out strongly against the new San Jose plan. Under a deal expected to be on the June ballot, San Jose would pay $155 million for stadium construction and the Giants $30 million and any cost overruns. The city, which is facing a $29 million budget deficit next fiscal year, also plans to spend $90 million to purchase land for the stadium, access roads and other improvements. "It seems to me we ought to be taking care of our basic needs before we spend money on a stadium," protester Kathy Cancilla said. But Mayor Hammer, speaking last week to more than 2,000 city leaders in her annual "state of the city" address, said building a baseball stadium would boost San Jose's profile and its economy. The utility tax hike also would pay for school and public safety programs, she said. "The Giants will be the economic engine which will help us propel our way to renewed economic growth, not just for a short while, but for a long time to come," she said, noting $90 million in positive economic impacts. Since then, that $90 million figure has been questioned as too optimistic, but San Jose Budget Director Bob Brownstein on Tuesday defended it. "Those entertainment dollars would be new money coming into the city," he said. "Now, if you like any kind of sports you have to leave San Jose." Brownstein said the immediate economic benefit to San Jose would include the creation of 2,000 jobs for stadium construction, which would funnel an estimated $150 million into the local economy. Responding to critics from the anti-tax group who say poor people can't afford higher utility bills, Brownstein said low-income residents can qualify for programs in which they aren't charged any utility taxes.

Yankees' Howe returns to court for 2nd round of drug charges

HELENA, Mont. (AP) — New York Yankees' reliever Steve Howe will be back in court Friday to face a second misdemeanor drug charge. He will be arraigned before U.S. Magistrate Bart Erickson in Missoula, assistant U.S. Attorney Kris McLean of Helena said Tuesday.

Howe was charged Monday with buying two grams of cocaine prior to his Dec. 19 arrest at Kalispell for allegedly buying one gram of cocaine from an undercover agent. McLean also amended the first misdemeanor charge to say Howe attempted to buy cocaine Dec. 19, instead of possessing the drug.

Howe was to stand trial on the first charge Thursday before Erickson. But Erickson, acting on a request from Howe's attorney, Pat Sherlock of Kalispell, agreed Tuesday to delay the trial. He didn't set a new date. McLean said Howe would have to appear in person at Friday's arraignment. Howe, 33, was released without bond Dec. 20, after pleading innocent to the first charge.

He staged a comeback last season after five suspensions from baseball for drug and alcohol problems. McLean's new charges allege that Howe bought and possessed two grams of cocaine in Whitefish between Nov. 23 and Dec. 19. Howe spends the off-season with his family at Whitefish, 15 miles north of Kalispell.

Indians turn ballpark into heaven for hitters

PAINESVILLE, Ohio (AP) — The Indians, last in the American League in home runs last year, set up Cleveland Stadium into a hitter's park in 1992. The Indians announced Tuesday they'll pull the center field fence 11 feet closer to home plate, and the distances to the fences in left and right field will be reduced by as much as 30 feet.

"We'll be able to tell what color the fences are without getting out binoculars," manager Mike Hargrove said as the team began its winter publicity tour. "I know the hitters will like it, because they know they have a chance of hitting the ball out. I think it's more fair this way. I think the fans will enjoy it more."

The changes mark a complete turnaround from the Indians' philosophy at this time last year. Going into last season, they figured on having a little power anyway, so they moved the fences back to protect their pitchers. The fence in center field was moved to 415 feet from home plate, and the power alleys were 400 feet deep. An extension on the fence in dead center doubled its height to 16 feet.

The move worked out reasonably well for Cleveland pitchers, who permitted 110 home runs, second-fewest in the league. But offensively, the move backfired badly when Albert Belle developed into one of the league's better power hitters. Belle was repeatedly frustrated by how long the ball that would have been home runs in any reasonable park. Cleveland hit 79 home runs in 1991; California, with 115, had the next-lowest total in the league. The Indians also struggled with the extra ground they had to cover on their defense. They led the league in errors and lost a team-record 105 games. "It was not a fun park to play in and it was not a fun park to watch a ballgame in," general manager John Hart said. "I want a fair park."

Business Executive bashing affects U.S., Japan

NEW YORK — The term "bashing" is usually associated these days with "Japan," as in American irritation over the country's allegedly restrictive trade practices.

But another group, U.S. corporate executives, is getting a more thorough and less merciful bashing and, unlike the Japanese, is finding few defenders rushing to its side.

The pervasiveness of executive bashing was publicized recently when the heads of American automotive companies stirred up an international controversy about limited access to Japanese markets.

Not only did Japanese executives bash them in return, but many Americans joined in denouncing the ability of the U.S. executives to bash their companies at a profit while producing quality products at a fair price.

The Japanese response was somewhat unexpected, but American executives have had many years in which to accustom themselves to bashing.

For decades they have been bashed by unions in confrontations over wages, working conditions and benefits; they have been scourged by environmentalists; and they have been ridiculed by shareholders at annual meetings.

They have become accustomed also to academic criticism that they are short-sighted, overpaid, unimaginative, risk-averse, lacking in accountability, and overly interested in their own welfare rather than the corporation or community.

Such bashing has been the sort accompanying the territory, but lately they have begun coming from other directions, the Far East being only one of several.

It was only a few years ago, for example, that institutional investors began publicly criticizing management and threatening to enforce their views as voting shareholders. Until then, institutions had rarely intervened.

In fact, so indolent were most institutions in that regard, that they — pension funds, endowments — were themselves bashed by critics for not fulfilling fiduciary responsibilities to their own members.

And it was unheard of for the polite Japanese to speak out on the condition of American management.

U.S. West reports 1991 net income of $1.1 billion

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. (AP) — U.S. West has reported 1991 net income of $553 million, less than the $600 million of 1990's income, but said a $590 million charge for its massive restructuring skewed the earnings figure.

The previously announced restructuring charge, totaling $1.47 per share, reduced 1991's net income to $1.1 billion to $553 million, or $1.18 per share, the telecommunications giant said.

During 1990, net income was $1.2 billion, or $3.11 per share. U.S. West reported that annual revenue grew by $620 million to $10.6 billion during 1991, a 6.2 percent increase from 1990. The revenue jump included $400 million in real estate sales and 2.3 percent growth in U.S. West's other operations.

Dick McCormick, U.S. West president and chief executive officer, said that while the one-time restructuring charge reduced 1991 earnings, it will help improve the company's position in the future.

The charge provides for reductions in the company work force, projected losses associated with ex-

Business

For them to bash, therefore, was something of a shock to Americans. And now, American corporate management is shocked again, this time by conservatives who contend the executives aren't defending the great American free enterprise system but are, instead, selling out for short-term gains.

There was a time when business managers as a group had the almost automatic support of conservatives, who viewed managers as front-line troops. Now, some conservatives view corporate managers as deserters and Uncle Sams.

"If some corporate officials want to sell out at every opportunity, it's more than just their business," said Edwin Feulner Jr., president of the Heritage Foundation, a right-wing think tank, adding:

"It's our business, because it hurts us as consumers, shareholders and taxpayers."

At one time, said Feulner in an annual "State of Conservatism" message, business was a major player in the marketplace. "And at the very least, it could be counted on to defend free-market competition," he said.

"Today, too many businesses and their lawyers and lobbyists are more interested in cutting deals than in cutting taxes; they believe in freer trade only in their own industry."

Feulner's fury was surprising, but more surprising still, of course, because of the group at which it was directed.

Businesses will spend $185 million this year on complying with regulation, he said. But rather than speak out against such costs, he suggested that business executives will merely raise prices and make consumers pay.

Hardly a place exists where business executives can find sympathy today. Old-time investors are angry at them for cutting dividends, and the younger generation views them as relics of a management system gone to seed.

Tuna embargo takes hold

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — After a compromise between the government and environmental groups collapsed, a judge on Monday ordered enforcement of a tuna embargo on nations that fail to ban imports from dolphin-killing fleets.

The embargo, effective Thursday, will block 53 percent of U.S. tuna imports, according to a government estimate.

An industry group, using the government figures, has predicted price increases of five to 10 cents a can of tuna in two months unless major exports nations are exempted.

The embargo is required by a U.S. law enacted in 1989 that prohibits dolphins that swim above yellowfin tuna in the eastern Pacific Ocean.

Since passage of the law, the U.S. fleet has reduced its annual dolphin kills from 100,000 to 1,000 in two decades, and most other nations also have managed the practices.

iting the real estate business and the write-off on certain intangible assets. The company earlier had said it was eliminating 6,000 U.S. West Communications jobs to reduce costs.

"In addition," said McCormick, "by taking the charge now, we have removed from future results the burdening of anticipated real estate losses and amortization of certain intangible assets."

For the fourth quarter, net income rose to $352 million, or 86 cents per share, without taking into account the restructuring charge of costs assumed with adoption of an Oregon alternative regulation plan. When the effects of both the restructuring charge and the Oregon plan were accounted for, the company reported a net loss of $278 million, or 68 cents per share, for the quarter.

During the fourth quarter of 1990, U.S. West reported net income of $348 million, or 89 cents per share. Revenues for the fourth quarter totaled $3 billion, up from $2.6 billion for the same period in 1990. The company said higher real estate sales accounted for most of the increased revenue.

Venezuela, which exceed dolphin-kills rates prescribed by U.S. law.

The dispute Monday was over a provision of the law that forbids tuna imports from countries that buy tuna from Mexico and Venezuela, environmental groups call the practice "tuna laundering."

Henderson ordered the broader embargo Jan. 10, but agreed to the government's request for a stay to clarify its terms.

The government and environmental groups had tried to reach an agreement that would have kept the new embargo from taking full effect until the end of February, giving most countries time to prepare documentation proving they don't buy tuna from Mexico or Venezuela.

Henderson earlier had tentatively agreed to exempt those 20 to 22 countries.

But he rejected that plan Monday in favor of the full embargo after the government and environmentalists failed to agree on which countries would be included in the smaller group.
