Perot's popularity forces Bush to widen horizons

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Ross Perot's surging popularity before he formally announces his presidential campaign is forcing President Bush's re-election team to plan for one of the most dreaded of all political beasts: the 50-state campaign. Strategists at the Bush-Quayle campaign and at the Republican National Committee have been bewildered and dismayed by the growth in Perot's support in both public and private polls over the past few weeks.

While predicting that the Texas billionaire's luster will fade with time and exposure, Bush's campaign managers are preparing for the worst.

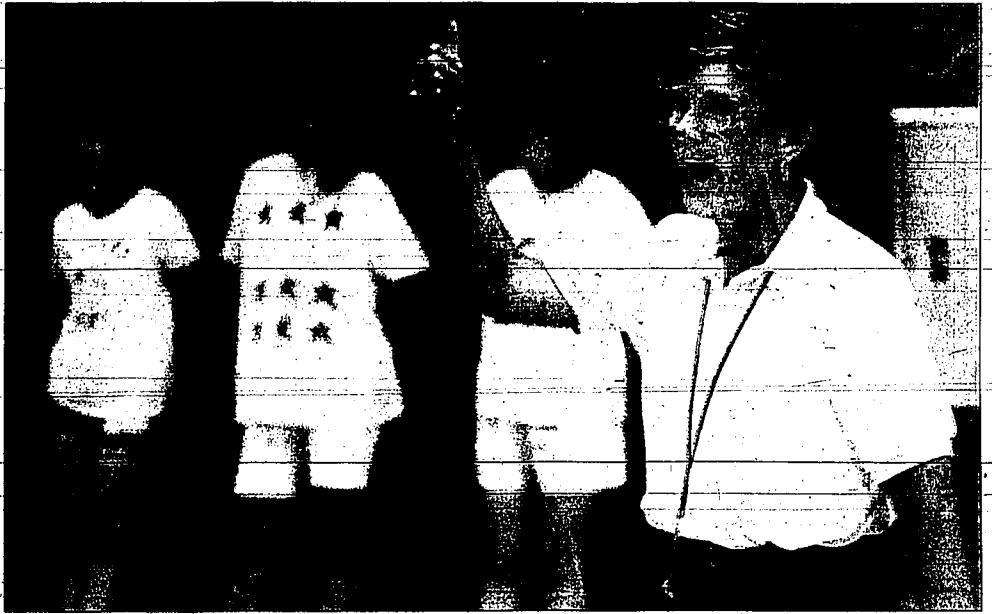

They have jettisoned earlier plans to focus the bulk of the president's efforts mainly in the industrial Midwest, the South and the West.

The earlier strategy had always been that Bush could stack up the needed 270 electoral votes even without California, where he has always been viewed as vulnerable, while expected Democratic nominee Bill Clinton could not win the presidency without California.

But with Perot in the equation, Bush can no longer count delegate-rich Texas in his guaranteed base. Nor can he necessarily take for granted conservative western states that have always voted Democratic.

Undhjem retires

O'Leary Junior High School teacher Virginia Undhjem is ready to hang up her P.E. shoes.

Time to move on

O'Leary's Undhjem closes chapter on teaching

By Terrell Williams
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — Retiring from O'Leary Junior High School will not be easy for Virginia Undhjem. "I've always had a deep love for O'Leary," she said. "It's kind of like a second home."

Undhjem has taught physical education and American history at O'Leary for 32 years, working first in the old building that used to be next to the courthouse, then moving on to the new school for the second half of her career.

Looking tanned, trim and healthy, Undhjem stays in shape by exercising with her students, working out with weights, swimming and walking golf courses.

"I like the feeling you get from doing physical things," she explained. "I like to be physically fit as possible. I enjoy that part of life."

For mental therapy, Undhjem likes to work in her yard, dig in the garden and mow the lawn.

For excitement, she swings golf clubs and beats most of her competition.

In her amateur golf career, Undhjem has won four state championships, eight Idaho senior championships, 25 Twin Falls Municipal Club championships, the Magic Valley Amateur Championship 14 times and at least 100 other invitationals throughout Idaho and in Utah.

"I don't know if I'll golf more when I retire, but I'll have a longer season," Undhjem said. "I have always walked and pulled my clubs, but I may rent a cart, so I

Iran-Contra prosecutors set their sights on Weinberger, Reagan

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Iran-Contra prosecutors are trying to persuade two key former Cabinet members to cooperate in investigating former President Reagan and a possible cover-up of an arms shipments to Iran, sources close to the probe said Sunday.

But lawyers for former Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and former Secretary of State George Shultz told prosecutors that their clients have no information suggesting a cover-up involving Reagan or anyone else, said the sources, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The Washington Post reported Sunday that Weinberger has been told he might face felony charges in the scandal unless he provides evidence they believe he has against Reagan.

"I can't comment on that" report, said Mary Becher, a spokeswoman for the office of independent counsel Lawrence Walsh, who has been investigating the scandal for the past 5 1/2 years.

A federal grand jury investigating Iran-Contra went out of business last week, but Walsh could go to any sitting grand jury if he decided to seek indictments.

Weinberger's lawyer, Robert Bennett, refused to say whether his client had been offered any kind of a deal in exchange for testimony against the former president. Seven people have pleaded guilty to lesser crimes in the Iran-Contra affair in order to avoid felony indictments.

Britain-wigged-out over spare hair

Los Angeles Times

LONDON — Suddenly, some barristers here have gotten wigged out over one of the nation's colorful anachronisms from Dickensian days: the hairpieces worn by judges and barristers. They want them put into history's dustbin.

For 300 years, judges and lawyers have sported their ceremonial horsehair wigs in courtrooms — long after that once-fashionable practice was abandoned by other professions.

But the Commercial Bar Association has suggested that wig wearing be banned in court.

The idea has been referred to the Judges Council, a group that oversees activities of the higher judiciary.

Lord Taylor, the Lord Chief Justice who recommended that the issue be taken up by the Judges Council, himself favors having Britain's legal gales go baldish.

Lord Taylor says that the wearing of wigs in a courtroom creates an "18th-century image" that makes British judges and barristers seem "out of touch" with contemporary society. He has made it clear, however, that he expects the Judges Council not to rush to judgment but to give the issue due deliberation.

"Judges at a stroke could disarm a good deal of public misunderstanding of the legal profession if we stopped wearing wigs and gowns in court," the Lord Chief Justice argued.

Anthony Colman, chairman of the Commercial Bar Association, said: "Wigs just make us appear pompous and out of date."

Despite program, juvenile caseload rises

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — In October, county justice officials unveiled a new juvenile diversion program aimed at keeping kids out of court.

Seven months later, the number of juvenile offenders in the system has doubled.

"I'm not happy," said 5th-District Magistrate R. Michael Redman, who helped gather the citizens' committee that drew up the diversion plan.

"We're swamped."

The diversion program was supposed to cut the number of juvenile cases that came into court by one-third to one-half, Redman said.

Instead, the number of juvenile court cases for 1992 is already nearing the total for 1991, said Twin Falls County Deputy Prosecutor E. Scott Paul, who handles most of the county's juvenile cases.

There were 306 juvenile cases filed in Twin Falls County last year; "We're now right about at that point,"

Paul said.

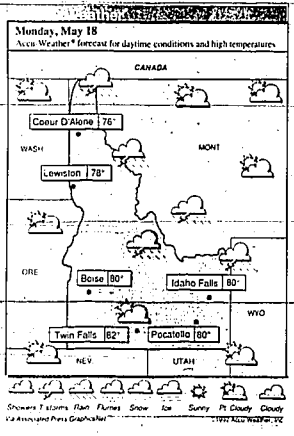

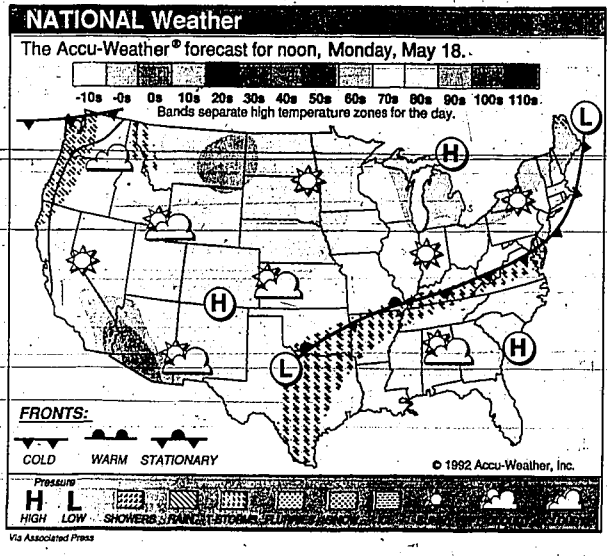

There are two possible explanations for the increase, officials say. Either the number of young criminals is going up or the new program is bringing more of them into the system.

Most experts say both are true.

Juvenile diversion is an out-of-court process that holds young people responsible for their actions without giving them criminal records.

Weather summary

The National Weather Service in Boise reported warming temperatures Sunday, but said to expect cooler days with showers by mid-week.

A warm and dry ridge of high pressure was centered over Idaho Sunday, pushing afternoon temperatures to as much as 15 degrees above normal.

Forecasters said there was just enough moisture to expect a few thundershowers over the southwest mountains.

The ridge will move on, and Gem State residents can expect temperatures to return to near normal. Moisture moving in from the Pacific Northwest will increase the possibility of showers by mid-week.

The warmest temperature in the state Friday was 97 degrees at Hagerman. Stanley reported the coldest at 21 degrees.

Elsewhere in the nation Friday, the highest temperature was 404 degrees at Lake Havasu City, Ariz.

The lowest was 19 degrees at Wisdom, Mont.

Strong thunderstorms belt upper-Midwest; rain in Texas

The Associated Press

Strong thunderstorms moved into the upper Midwest on Sunday. Sunny skies prevailed over the western part of the nation.

Showers and thundershowers hung over parts of Texas for a second day.

Strong thunderstorms formed over Indiana and lower Michigan on Sunday afternoon ahead of a cold front crossing upper Michigan, Wisconsin and eastern Iowa.

A severe thundershow that was posed for portions of Indiana, parts of Ohio, Michigan, and a small part of northwest Pennsylvania.

A flash flood watch was in effect Sunday for the central and eastern sections of north-Texas, and for most of south Texas.

Heavier rainfall totals in Texas for the six-hour period ending at noon EDT included nearly 1/4 inches at Dallas, Austin, which received more than 4 inches of rain Saturday, reported another 2 inches of rain early Sunday.

Widespread flooding was reported Saturday in the central Texas town of Hutto, where nearly 6 inches of rain fell in two hours.

On Sunday, midday thundershowers over Arkansas deluged Little Rock with nearly 1 1/2 inches of rain in 30 minutes.

More violence threatens LA gang truce

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Members of rival gangs hugged and shook hands at a picnic Sunday following a night of violence that killed four people and threatened to shatter a truce forged after last month's deadly riots.

But at the same time as the picnic, a gang brawl at the county fairgrounds about 40 miles east of downtown left at least one person dead and several others shot or stabbed, said Denver police Lt. Bela Laszlo.

In South Central Los Angeles, more than 300 members of the Crips and Bloods gathered Sunday in a city park for a picnic to promote the fragile truce.

Young men wearing Crips blue shock hands and hugged others wearing Bloods red.

"It's a miracle that I would not have believed in, but it's true," said Charles Rachal, 28, a former Crip who helped organize the picnic. "The Lord's going to let it work out. There can't nothing bad come out of something good."

remain at risk." He said the federal government must do everything it can but added that "government alone is simply not enough."

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — President Bush said Sunday the United States would remain at risk unless it reversed the breakdown of the family.

"At the heart of the problems facing our country stands an institution under siege. And that institution is the American family," he told graduates at the University of Notre Dame.

"Whatever form our pressing problems may take, ultimately all are related to the disintegration of the family."

Bush would come up with constructive answers.

The president, who is making family values an important part of his re-election campaign, cited troubling statistics on the high U.S. rate of divorce; teen-age pregnancy; abortion and violent deaths among youths.

"These are not the kinds of records that we want to have as a great country," he said.

"Unless we successfully reverse the breakdown of the American family, our nation is going to

He also reiterated his call for school choice and for government to foster competitiveness.

"But parents must teach their children the dignity of work and instill a work ethic in the kids," he said.

Some students and faculty members wore white armbands to the commencement ceremony to protest Bush's appearance Sunday.

Perot

Republican.

By the same token, GOP campaign strategists say, Perot's presence on the ballot can give Bush new momentum in New York and other populous northeastern states where Perot may make serious inroads among voters that might otherwise go for Clinton.

"It gives us a chance to carry Massachusetts and Clinton a chance to carry Arizona," said senior Bush campaign adviser Charles Black.

Perot's sudden presence comes at a time when other things seem to be going right for the president: the economy is improving; GOP rival Patrick Buchanan has been vanquished and support for Democratic front runner Bill Clinton remains shallow.

But polls show Perot, who has yet to formally declare his candidacy, to be supported by between one-fourth and one-third of the electorate. And he's doing better in some key electorale-heavy states like Texas and California.

A Time-CNN poll released this weekend showed Perot leading with 33 percent to Bush's 28 percent and Clinton's 24 percent. Bush's overall approval rating dipped to a new low of 37 percent.

The poll of 917 registered voters was conducted May 13-14 and had a 3.2 percentage point margin of error.

A California Poll published last week showed that 37 percent of Californians surveyed would vote for Perot in a three-way race, followed by 31 percent for Bush and 25 percent for Clinton. A poll in Texas last month also showed Perot ahead there, although by slimmer margins.

Although Bush is not likely to campaign personally in every state, political director Mary Matalin says the campaign is building up organizations in each state and working on voter lists to identify potential Bush supporters and volunteers.

No candidate has campaigned in all 50 states since Richard Nixon in 1968. While advisers to Democrat Michael Dukakis talked of waging a 50-state effort in 1988, it never came to pass.

GOP strategists also are considering airing television advertisements early and weighing whether Bush should agree to participate in three-way debates.

can play more."

Instilling her own love of sports in her students has not always been easy, the teacher said. Young teenagers look at exercise as something they have to do, rather than as something that will benefit them throughout their lives, she explained.

"Most of them are oblivious to the value of it," Undhjem said. "They think they can be fit without exercise."

Sometimes a student will like one sport, such as volleyball, and not care for basketball or softball.

"And some kids like everything," the teacher said. "That's the way I was when I was growing up. I didn't care what the game was. I loved to play."

A native of Utah, Undhjem graduated from college there in 1954 and taught several years in Utah and Texas before moving to Twin Falls in 1960.

The biggest change Undhjem has seen in her job over the last three decades is a change in children themselves.

"Kids have more freedoms," she said. "They lack respect for adults in the school system and in the community as a whole."

"In picking a highlight of her career, Undhjem said it has to be coaching.

"I loved coaching track," she said. "I had good teams. In 22 years, we lost only three track meets.

"There's nothing in the world like a track meet. I had girls that gave their all when it came to track day, and I had a lot of girls that went on and were state champions."

And as girls' basketball coach, Undhjem lost only four games in eight years. Four teams were undefeated, and the other four teams lost only one game each.

Twelve years ago, the P.E teacher stepped into the classroom and took on history lessons with her first male students.

"I have a great love for American History and I'm fascinated by it," Undhjem said. "I wouldn't like to teach any other history."

But, she admits, enough is enough.

As she spends her final days at O'Leary, Undhjem says she is planning to visit her three grown children Eric in Colorado, Robin in Boise and Lance in Arizona, where there is one grandson and a second grandson on the way.

She also is planning "to find out what else is out there," she says, and maybe begin work at something completely new and different.

"My teaching, my work, has been the most important thing in my life for years," Undhjem said. "It's hard to leave. But it's time to move on and do something else."

Caseload

When a juvenile is suspected of committing a crime, police give the information to the prosecutor's office, where the case is screened to see if the youngster is eligible for diversion based on his or her age, criminal history and the alleged crime.

If granted the diversion, the child and his parents appear before one of four area community diversion boards. Citizen volunteers question the family members to get at the root of the youth's behavior problems, then suggest a suitable "sentence."

That can include community service, receiving alcohol or drug counseling, doing a report on shoplifting or repaying someone whose property was damaged.

Before the juvenile diversion program, police officers often employed their own informal screening process, according to Doug Rubliatus, the county's head juvenile probation.

Now, every case makes it to the prosecutor's office, and that may be one reason for the increase, he said.

Despite the heavier case load, Rubliatus and Redman agree that the system seems to be working for the kids.

Very few of the young people who enter the diversion program don't successfully complete it, Rubliatus said. "They realize it's an opportunity," he said.

At the other end, Redman said he sees few youngsters in his courtroom who don't need to be there.

"Most juvenile offenses are property crimes — shoplifting, joyriding, malicious destruction; burglary, Paul said. Youngsters who commit those crimes can be diverted, although repeat offenders usually are not, he said.

Kids accused of violent crimes such as battery and child molesting are not eligible for diversion.

The number of violent crimes is going up, Paul said, and his office is seeing some crimes committed by young people connected with gangs.

But gang-related crimes are still a "very minute" part of the total caseload, Rubliatus said.

Despite the diversion program's apparent success in holding minor offenders responsible for their actions, officials agree the system still needs work.

"It works as far as it's going," Twin Falls County Commissioner Norma Blass said. "But we need to get other programs in place."

The community committee that gave birth to the diversion boards is now essentially defunct, and officials say they don't expect to see any more innovative programs come out of it.

"Basically, I think it's going to fall on my shoulders," Rubliatus said.

Those shoulders have proven up to the task until now, as Rubliatus has developed several programs aimed at long-term solutions to juvenile crime.

One of those is a tutoring program for elementary school students. Studies show that children struggling in school begin to lose interest at that early level, and Rubliatus said keeping kids in school is the first step to keeping them out of jail.

The community desperately needs some sort of group home, for short-term care in a family setting, he said.

The community at large needs to become more actively involved in finding inexpensive but effective solutions, Rubliatus said.

The volunteers on the community diversion boards are largely professionals familiar with the system — Idaho Department of Health and Welfare workers, teachers, police officers.

"I think we're missing the boat a little bit," he said. "We need more parents, more people outside the system."

Investigation continues in slaying of 5

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Investigators searched for clues Sunday in the slayings of five females found in one small room in a house. Frightened neighbors crammed churches to pray for the victims and their families.

The victims, ages 14 to about 40, were found Saturday in the one-story house in the quiet neighborhood known as Christian Valley, police said.

Police Sgt. Joe Snodgrass said it would probably be late Sunday before the cause of death was determined.

Police said the five were homicide victims, but released little additional information.

Bobby Stevenson, 53, who thought his 34-year-old girlfriend was among the victims, said police told him the women had been shot.

He said his girlfriend left the home they shared a few blocks from the murder scene Friday evening.

"She was real happy. She was going out to buy some food. I got real worried because she never came back," he said.

Neighbors said a woman and her teenage daughter shared the house with one other woman.

Witnesses said they last saw the three about 11:30 p.m. Friday.

Snodgrass said the victims had been dead for about half a day when their bodies were found Saturday afternoon by one woman's boyfriend.

Police said Saturday that they had no suspects or motive, and wouldn't comment Sunday.

At Green Pasture's Church of Christ, across the street from where the victims were found, about 70 people attended services on a rainy Sunday morning.

"We have unusual circumstances today," Pastor Willie Lynch told the congregation. "We're going to pray for these people."

Churchgoers bow their heads in prayer Sunday as they honor the 5 women who were slain. The bodies were found Saturday in a house across from the church.

Beatrice Walker, who lives three houses away, wouldn't know it. I'll just have to pray." Dan Jiggins, 72, lives next to the house where she was afraid.

"We named it the Christian Valley because it was so quiet here," she said. "It could be some body I see staring at my face every day and I said."

Governor receives Kennedy Award

BOSTON — Connecticut Gov. Lowell P. Weicker, who was hanged in effigy after instituting the state's first individual income tax, has been named winner of the 1992 John F. Kennedy Profile in Courage Award.

The John F. Kennedy Library Foundation said Sunday it honored Weicker for his "pinnacle to take a principled stand for unpopular positions" to boost his state's sagging economy in 1991.

Weicker is to receive a silver lantern and a $25,000 stipend during a May 28 ceremony at Boston's JFK Library.

The award, for elected officials who show courage in office, is named after Kennedy's book "Profiles in Courage" which won the Pulitzer Prize for Biography in 1957.

Man posts bond after arrest at protest

UNIVERSITY PARK, Texas — A man who held a knife and a sign reading "Give Hinckley another chance" outside a hall where President Bush was to give a commencement speech was released on bond Sunday.

Jack Conrow, 20, of Dallas, was arrested Saturday as he walked toward the auditorium at Southern Methodist University where Bush was about to speak, police said.

Conrow appeared before a municipal court judge who set bond, said A.T. Martinez, dispatcher for the University Park police. Martinez said he didn't know the bond amount.

Conrow was charged with possessing the knife and with failing to identify himself to officers.

Controversial NASA staff director quits

The controversial staff director of the National Space Council, the Cabinet-level agency that sets the nation's space policy, is stepping down after a three-year tenure marked by calls for better management at NASA and a push for smaller, less-expensive space projects.

Mark J. Albrecht, 41, was widely viewed as one of the principal architects of the council's efforts to curb the appetite of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration for more long-range, expensive space endeavors.

Youth with reattached arms graduates

BOWDON, N.D. (AP) —

John Thompson, whose arms were reattached after a January farm accident, grasped his high school diploma between his wrists Sunday and hugged his classmates at a tearful graduation ceremony.

The 18-year-old from Hurdsfield received a standing ovation after singing the popular song "One Moment in Time" in the school gymnasium packed with about 400 family members, friends and well-wishers.

He dedicated it to his nine classmates, saying, "I'll never be able to repay you guys." His classmates also took time to recognize him.

"You made this a year that no one will ever forget," saluted Kristin Fike told Thompson in her speech.

Thompson was working alone on the family farm Jan. 11 when he became entangled in power machinery that tore off both arms.

He staggered 400 feet to his house, used his mouth to open doors and punched out a call for help with a pencil clenched in his teeth.

That same day, doctors at a Minneapolis-area hospital reattached both arms during an eight-hour operation.

Bush blocks transfer of Iran documents

WASHINGTON (AP) —

The administration has stopped transferring classified documents to a congressional committee investigating U.S. policy toward Iraq, accusing the panel's chairman of endangering national security.

The chairman of the House Banking Committee, Texas Democrat Henry Gonzalez, responded by accusing the administration of trying to obstruct Congress.

The dueling May 15 letters between Gonzalez and Attorney General William P. Barr were the latest skirmish in the administration's fight with the feisty lawmaker seeking to expose what he calls the "flawed and tragic policy" that led to the war with Iraq. Barr told Gonzalez that his recent statements in Congress — based in part on thousands of classified documents he had requested from the administration — "raised serious concerns."

He said further documents would be withheld unless Gonzalez promised to keep them secret.

"Public disclosure of classified information harms the national security," Barr wrote. Copies of the letters were obtained Sunday by The Associated Press.

In his same-day response, Gonzalez said the administration had been "reluctant" to cooperate since his committee began investigating the extent of U.S. aid to Iraq in the 1980s.

"Now your letter suggests that the Bush administration plans to move from foot dragging to outright obstruction," Gonzalez wrote.

He said the documents he had made public this year to buttress a series of floor statements all dealt with past policies, not ongoing operations. "None of the statements and none of the documents compromise ... the national security or intelligence sources or methods."

Roof collapses on nursing home

NORTH BALTIMORE, Ohio (AP) —

Part of a nursing home's roof collapsed Sunday evening during a heavy storm. Seventeen people were injured, one critically, authorities said.

"It's a hell of a mess inside," police officer John Vaughn said. "We're very lucky nobody was killed."

High winds apparently tore off part of the roof of the Blakely Nursing Home, a one-story, ranch-style building, Vaughn said.

Most of the injuries came from shattered glass or falling pieces of insulation, said nursing home co-owner Doug Blakely.

There were 53 patients and nine staff members in the home when the roof of the north wing collapsed, he said.

Twenty-seven patients were in the wing.

Twelve victims were taken to Blanchard Valley Hospital in Findlay, said Vicki Huber, nursing director there.

Eight people were admitted, one in critical condition, Ms. Huber said.

Five victims, none badly hurt, were taken to Wood County Hospital in Bowling Green, said Kip Miller, the hospital's executive vice president.

Patients who weren't injured were taken to North Baltimore High School overnight.

North Baltimore is about 35 miles southwest of Toledo.

Protesters seek Gotti's freedom

NEW YORK (AP) —

Hundreds of people marched Sunday outside the federal prison where convicted mob boss John Gotti is being held, claiming he didn't receive a fair trial on murder and racketeering charges.

Benzly young men with tattooed biceps and bullhorns kept some 700 people shouting "free John" and "fair trial" for more than an hour.

Chartered buses brought the protesters from South Ozone Park and Howard Beach in Queens and other neighborhoods where reputed mobsters live.

"Let him hear you," civil rights attorney William Kunstler told the crowd as he gestured toward the Metropolitan Correctional Center, where Gotti is being held awaiting a June 23 sentencing hearing.

Gotti faces a possible life sentence.

Officials say accident victim was from Hailey

HAILEY — The victim of a single-vehicle accident on Bell Mountain Road east of Bellevue on Saturday has been identified as Melissa Jane Soder, a Hailey resident.

Soder was traveling alone in a Suburban van which fell off the steep mountain road leading to a Bureau of Land Management fire lookout tower late Friday night or early Saturday, according to Lt. Ed Fuller of the Blaine County Sheriff's Office.

Rescue crews revive child found floating in coulee

TWIN FALLS — A massive response to a missing-child report Saturday ended with the 2-year-old youngster being flown in a helicopter to Salt Lake City after a four-hour intensive emergency-room work.

Twin Falls City police and county sheriff's deputies started searching for the child shortly after 10 a.m. Sunday after receiving a report from the child's mother, according to police Sgt. Jim Massey.

A citizen found the child, whose name wasn't released, at 10:16 a.m., floating in the Perrine Coulee near Ninth Avenue East. The child had no pulse and wasn't breathing.

Officers performed cardio-pulmonary resuscitation on the child until an ambulance arrived five minutes later. City police Officer Tim Miller then drove the ambulance to the hospital so the ambulance crew could work on the child in route.

Four hours of work by Magic Valley Regional Medical Center emergency-room personnel established a pulse and occasional breathing, and the child was flown by helicopter to Salt Lake City's Primary Children's Hospital.

Twin Falls girl spots flames in-house, calls for help

TWIN FALLS — Thirteen-year-old Jennie Cunningham, 401 Walnut St., dialed 911 late Saturday night and may have saved a house from total destruction by fire.

Twin Falls Battalion Chief Ron Clark said firefighters responded at 9:05 p.m. to calls by neighbors and Cunningham, who was walking across a street when she saw the fire at 1316 Fourth Ave. E. The owner, Kelen Robbins, had left the house about 15 minutes earlier, Clark said.

When firefighters arrived, the rear and southeast portions of the house were engulfed in flames.

Firefighters controlled the fire in less than 30 minutes, but the fire still caused between $15,000 and $20,000 in damage, Clark said. He said the fire probably started near an electrical outlet.

SHOSHONE — Work has begun on a project to install guardrails on Idaho 75 in the Galena Summit area to improve roadway safety.

Motorists can expect delays of about five minutes. The work will begin in early June and be finished sometime in July.

Back drawdowns or risk losing water, expert advises

By N.S. Norkkved
Times-News writer

REDFISH LAKE — Magic Valley farmers can either support the idea of reservoir "drawdowns" on the lower Snake and Columbia rivers or risk having to give up some of their irrigation water to help save endangered salmon.

"You can drain all of them, and it still won't do the job," Ed Chaney of the Northwest Resource Information Center told an Idaho Conservation League annual conference Saturday.

The Idaho sockeye, the fish that gave Redfish Lake its name, was listed as an endangered species last year by the National Marine Fisheries Service. The service listed three runs of Snake River chinook salmon as "threatened" species earlier this year under the Endangered Species Act.

Plans to restore the fish vary, but are based on the need for young fish to move quickly downstream on their way to the ocean. One way to speed up the river is to reduce the level of the reservoirs behind eight federal hydroelectric dams behind Lewiston and the mouth of the Columbia River.

"Another way would be to increase the amount of water in the river. The supply of additional water has raised concerns southern Idaho.

The Pacific Northwest Utilities Conference Committee has suggested that all water in Snake River reservoirs should be available to work out a solution to other downstream power, transportation and irrigation interests maintain that

Where they stand

Managing growth

Gooding County Republicans John Gough and Robert Tupper are seeking the Republican nomination for Tupper's county commission seat in District 2.

John Gough

"I'd like to see the growth benefit all the people, including the farmers. That's going to be the big influx, I'm quite sure. The concern is not really too many dairies, but we have to keep them away from the populated areas, the subdivisions and things like that. "Anybody that wants to come in is sure welcome. But I see some places that have such an overpopulation problem, and I hope we don't get that way. For instance, I've not been in favor of the Fossil Beds National Monument. It's a retirement center and I don't think we need our roads and parking lots all taken up with traffic."

Robert Tupper

"I think it should be controlled some, especially dairy. That's going to be the big influx, I'm quite sure. The concern is not really too many dairies, but we have to keep them away from the populated areas, the subdivisions and things like that. "Anybody that wants to come in is sure welcome. But I see some places that have such an overpopulation problem, and I hope we don't get that way. For instance, I've not been in favor of the Fossil Beds National Monument. It's a retirement center and I don't think we need our roads and parking lots all taken up with traffic."

Who candidates persuade not as vital as who votes

A lot of times in electoral politics, who bothers to vote is as important, if not more so, in determining the outcome than setting up housing districts, we can't let them drive us out. We have to have representation from the agricultural community."

might vote for Matt Schaffer over U.S. Rep. Richard Stallings. Schaffer has tried to link Stallings with the well-publicized House scandals. But Schaffer lacks Glenn's fire-and-brimstone appeal to disaffected voters, so the impact in that race is uncertain. 2) When you go in to vote May 26, you have the choice of voting in either the Democratic primary or the Republican primary, but not both. That means there's always the possibility that crossover voting could affect the results, though that hasn't happened often in the past. With hotly contested races from U.S. Senate all the way down to county prosecutor, Republicans — especially in Twin Falls County — are unlikely to cross over. But Stallings is heavily favored to win the Democratic Senate nomination, as is J.D. Williams in the 2nd Congressional District House race. So Democrats itching to make a difference may decide to, in the words of the old commercial, "vote Republican — for a change." If they're pro-choice, that would help Milt Erhart, who's battling ardent pro-lifer Rod Beck and Dirk Kempthorne, who takes an intermediate position on abortion, for the GOP Senate nomination. It would almost assuredly help Laird Noh, who faces Russ Newcomb for the District 23 state Senate seat. Noh is pro-choice and has generally good relations with Democrats; some have even supported him more or less openly in the past. 3) Over the Memorial-Day weekend, most people's minds will be on making sure the hot dogs don't burn or on the Indy 500, not politics. On Tuesday, they may not have the time or the desire to vote. That could benefit either Crapo or Glenn.

Crapo has strong support among the 2nd District's Republican hierarchy; these are active, motivated people who would brave a hailstorm to vote. They're also influential, and could persuade their friends to make the effort to vote — presumably, for Crapo. Disaffected people, who are more likely to skip the election anyway, are even less likely to vote after a major holiday. But Glenn is counting on support from the hard right to overcome the "holiday drag." Are conservatives more likely to vote than moderates? If so, that would be good news for Newcomb, as many area conservatives distrust Noh's moderate voting record and friendliness with certain Democrats. Although Newcomb is hardly as conservative as, say, Stan Hawkins, the right wing of the Twin Falls GOP sees this election as their best chance in years to oust Noh. Gooding County Republican, 2 Democrats seek to unseat Sheriff Aja

GOODING — In the race for Gooding County sheriff, two Republicans and two Democrats are running in the primary election.

On the Republican side, incumbent Robert Aja is challenged by Jim Jax. On the Democratic side, Dale McMinn and John Crandall are on the ballot.

Robert Aja, appointed as Gooding County sheriff in 1980, has been elected to three four-year terms. Before being sheriff he was a county deputy for three years. Before that, he was a farmer, rancher and dairyman in Richfield.

Aja is a graduate of the Idaho State Peace Officers Training Academy, has numerous certifications. In addition, law enforcement classes, and speaks fluent Spanish. "I'm running for re-election because I feel I've done a good job," Aja said. "I feel I have the experience to continue to do a good job."

Aja said he works as an interpreter for the court, for other departments within the courthouse and for private citizens.

The county's most pressing problem, Aja said, is also the biggest problem for the state and for the nation and that is abuse of alcohol and drugs.

"Alcohol creates the biggest problem for us," he said. "It's the cause of our major work load. That, in conjunction with drugs."

Aja said his main goals for the next four years are to have better substance abuse education programs for youth and to have more communication with the general public for a team effort to improve Gooding County.

Aja predicted the county soon will be capped with a lower number of prisoners allowed in its jail.

"That's going to create problems," he said. "I want to work toward finding a solution for that."

Aja said that, in 1 1/2 years with this department, he has never taken a day of sick leave and has taken only one-third of his vacation time.

"I've been dedicated to the job," he said. "I've worked hard. I've given it 100-plus percent. I've been honest in the job. I've tried to apply common sense and I will continue to do so."

Aja said his office is open to the public; he will visit with anyone; he will listen to their problems or suggestions, and people may call him at home.

"I welcome calls at all hours," he said. "I'm available and I'll do my best."

Jim Jax, 51, lives in Wendell and has 12 years of law enforcement experience. He worked as a Gooding County deputy for 10 years and currently is a detective for the city police department of Gooding. Jax said he is an Idaho POST Academy Graduate with certification at basic, intermediate, advanced and supervisory certification. He also has certification in undercover search and rescue.

"I think I have a considerable amount of administrative ability," Jax said. "But the main reason I'm running is I have some ideas of my own I would like to try in the battle against drugs."

Drug abuse, including alcohol, is the worst problem facing Gooding County, Jax said.

"Most all of your other problems fall from your drug problems," he said. "From burglaries, bad checks, when you finally get to the bottom, you normally find a drug problem."

As sheriff, Jax said his goals would be to work with school-age children to educate them about the dangers of drug abuse. In addition, he said, adults, including sex addicts, need more education about drugs "to enable them to fight drugs and protect themselves from repercussions of the drug business bring."

Teachers, too, need training in helping identify and help solve drug problems, Jax, a former teacher.

Jax graduated from the University of Wisconsin with bachelor of science degree in natural science and in education. He did taught high school and coached in Wendell for 16 years, a profession he says helped him learn communication skills, especially with youth.

"I really think that dealing with people every bit as important as law enforcement experience," Jax said of the sheriff position.

Solving drug problems is going to take a lot of planning and work on a minute budget, he said.

"The drug situation is first and foremost on my mind," he said. "This drove me out teaching. That's why I went after training. It's kind of been burning on me for 12 years."

Dale McMinn, 54, lives in Wendell and has a private detective agency, Northwest Investigations. In the early 1970s, he worked as a reserve officer and a special deputy Stanley for the Custer County Sheriff's Department. He also said he has owned several service and maintenance companies.

McMinn said he has two college degrees in applied science and is taking classes CSI.

"I do believe it's time for a change," McMinn said. "I feel I'm a man that can handle the job."

The county needs effective law enforcement, he said.

"I think the most pressing problem is drugs, gangs creeping in and just a lack of

3 dead on McKinley, 3 stranded

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — The third climber in three days died on Mount McKinley on Sunday. Rangers struggled in bad weather to reach three others stranded without food for five days in a snow cave. Swiss climber Alex Van Bergen, 44, died Sunday 14,000 feet up the 20,320-foot mountain. North America's tallest peak, after suffering breathing problems, said National Park Service spokesman John Quinley in Anchorage. Von Bergen was among eight people climbing the mountain's popular West Buttress route, Quinley said. The other seven were reported well.

Radio communications between park service headquarters in Talkeetna, about 30 miles from the mountain, and a rest camp at the 14,000-foot level were spotty, Quinley said. "We don't really know what happened," he said. Von Bergen's hometown wasn't immediately known. At least one family member was with him when he died, Quinley said. McKinley, about 130 miles northeast of Anchorage, has received huge amounts of snow during an unusually strong spring storm in the past week. Two other bodies were spotted Friday by a group of climbers. It wasn't known how they died, but likely they were killed in a fall or an avalanche, Quinley said. The fatalities were the first on the mountain since 1990. Sixty-seven climbers have died on McKinley since records were first kept in the 1930s.

Three South Korean climbers at the 18,200-foot elevation Sunday were going into their sixth day without food and also were without fuel to melt snow for drinking water, Quinley said. The group's leader reportedly had frostbitten fingers and altitude sickness, he said.

Restaurant employees found dead

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — Two employees of a Burger King restaurant in the Spokane Valley were killed Sunday morning, Spokane County Sheriff Larry Erickson said.

He said deputies were searching for a 1976 blue car and a killer who may have been spotted by white paint spilled during a struggle inside the restaurant. "A desk officer at the sheriff's office who refused to give his name said officers had identified a suspect, but declined to discuss the case further."

Identities of the victims were not immediately released. Erickson said they were a 22-year-old man and a 20-year-old woman. The sheriff also would not say how the victims were killed. The bodies were found by deputies inside the restaurant on Argonne Road after other employees reporting for work found the doors locked and called 911.

general law enforcement," McMinn said. Also, he said, county officers should be more often with the traffic on Interstate 84. When the state police are short-handed, McMinn said he, as sheriff, occasionally would send a county officer out to work on the interstate if he had an officer available.

McMinn said his main goals as sheriff would be to work personally with the people, including young adults, high school students and grade school children. "You can generate trust in law enforcement and still have effective law enforcement," McMinn said. "I think it can be done. I've seen it done in the past." If elected sheriff, McMinn said all calls for help would be answered and officers would follow through with every investigation. He said the county needs to have citizens' advisory committees from various areas of the county to generate better communication to the sheriff's department.

McMinn said he would treat everyone equally. No one would be a target and no one would be passed over, he said. "If you break the law you should pay for it by the law," McMinn said. John Crandall, 38, lives in Wendell. His wife, Novella, said he works out of state as a sheep shearer. He has a high school education and no experience in law enforcement, she said. John Crandall declined comment.

Water

drawdown solution would be far too costly. Chaney maintains that there isn't enough water in Idaho for the "flush" method to work. Using the drawdown solution, however, would cost less than the current efforts that are killing the fish, he said. Idaho farmers ought to support the drawdown solution as proposed in the so-called "Idaho Plan," said Charles Ray of Idaho Rivers United's Wild Salmon Project. If farmers send more water to help flush the fish, Idaho would still lose the fish, he said.

will be killed on their way to the ocean this week, Chaney said. The Northwest Power Planning Council has spent $2 billion to save the salmon, Chaney said. Formed in 1980 by the Northwest Power Act, the council is charged with ensuring "equitable" treatment of salmon in the northwest's hydropower rivers. But all it has done is cut the population in half, he said. "I could cut 'em in half for a lot less than the two billion — and have money left over," he said. "These guys can't even waste money efficiently."

have tried to convince the Northwest that saving the salmon would result in a 30 percent loss of hydropower and widespread economic losses. "The politicians all wet themselves," Chaney said. But none of it's true, he said. BPA, a government institution, spent tens of millions to make up things to scare people — things like taking Idaho's irrigation water, and halting grazing along all streams — to tie them against each other, he said.

"Farmers ought to ask themselves who is representing their interests in this issue," Ray said. Something will be done to try to save the salmon, but the effect still is unknown, he said. "I can't imagine a wild Idaho without wild salmon," he said. The sockeye once returned to Redfish Lake to spawn in great numbers. After spawning they would die, leaving organic material to fertilize the otherwise sterile lake. As the returning salmon dwindled, however, the nutrient level in the lake has dropped and trout fishing has gotten progressively worse.

The dams were built and are operated by the Army Corps of Engineers. The power produced at the dams is marketed by the Bonneville Power Administration, part of the federal Department of Energy. The corps, Chaney says, had no intention of saving the salmon, but the fish proved more difficult to kill than it had planned on.

Drawdown could actually reduce electricity rates and create jobs while saving the salmon and taking the pressure off Idaho's irrigation water, he said. "The plan for this year remains to flush fish to get them past the dams. But there ain't enough water, Chaney said. "We still can't get them to the first dam," he said. Part of BPA's plan is to divert attention to habitat and ocean harvest — while those are issues that should be looked at, the fact remains, that 95 percent of the fish are killed by the corps' dams, Chaney said. "Idaho has pristine habitat that hasn't seen a fish in 15 years," he said.

Officials ponder UI-WSU bus

MOSCOW (AP) — A bus shuttle to serve employees and students with activities at both the University of Idaho and nearby Washington State University could run between the campuses next fall. Contract negotiations with St. Maries Bus Lines will begin Tuesday, said Jeff Eisenhart, UI assistant financial vice president. St. Maries Bus Lines owners Larry and Christie Hill submitted their proposal for the UI-WSU service this spring. It was unanimously accepted Wednesday by the Inter-campus Transit Committee, representing both schools. Specific details will be hammered out, but Eisenhart said the two universities will contribute less than $100,000 a year to the service. He expects half the cost to be paid for with rider fees and half with university contributions. Part of the funding for the Idaho contribution will probably come from parking revenues, he said. At same point, Eisenhart said, the service will be self-supporting. The service is targeted at students who have cross-listed courses available at both schools but offered at only one, said Doug Knorr, UI director of purchasing.

Helicopter crash kills 2 in Oregon

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — A Sunday morning. Rescue teams had helicopter crashed on the way to a resort, killing the pilot and a passenger and seriously injuring three others, authorities said Sunday. The helicopter left Hillsboro, Ore. airport west of Portland Saturday afternoon headed for Flying M Ranch in Yamhill County south of Portland. The wreckage wasn't found until Sunday morning. Rescue teams had to rappel from helicopters to reach the survivors, said Capt. Pete Anderson of the Civil Air Patrol. Only the survivors' names were immediately available, Pam Daly, 27, of Beaverton, and Kathleen Skinner, 20, were in serious condition at Oregon Health Sciences University Hospital, said hospital spokeswoman.

Cavs beat the odds

Daugherty & Co. crush Celtics; Bulls next

The Associated Press

RICHFIELD, Ohio — The biggest game in the Cleveland Cavaliers' history turned out to be one of their best.

Brad Daugherty scored 16 first-quarter points and the Cavaliers didn't let up, beating the Boston Celtics 122-104 Sunday and advancing to the Eastern Conference finals for the first time since 1976.

It was only the fourth time in 21 tries that the Celtics lost the seventh game of a playoff series. They are 6-2 in seventh games in the Bird-McHale-Parish era, which may be coming to an end.

It marked a giant step forward in Cleveland's recovery after more than a decade of mismanagement, missteps and injuries. "It's a great accomplishment. We've struggled with injuries throughout our careers," Daugherty said. "People got traded. People got injured. We've finally got everybody healthy, and now we'll see what happens."

The Cavaliers, perennial losers in the early 1980s, became competitive again soon after Wayne Embry became general manager in 1986. But they missed the playoffs a year ago, their season dented by injuries that sidelined Mark Price and John Williams.

They turned it around this year, matching a franchise record with 57 regular-season victories, then eliminating New Jersey — and now Boston.

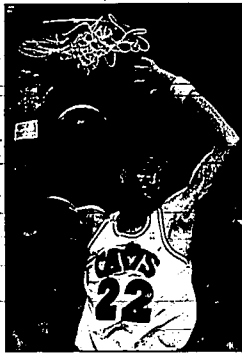

Cleveland had been knocked out of the playoffs by Boston twice before, and the Celtics forced a seventh game by handing the Cavs their worst playoff loss ever, 122-91 Friday night at the Boston Garden.

"They just outplayed us," said Larry Bird, who was hounded throughout the game by Mike Sanders. "They played better offense, better defense, and moved the ball better. We just weren't in the game."

The Cavs shot 73 percent in the first quarter, alternately beating the Celtics on fast breaks and letting Daugherty dominate the half-court game. Mark Price had nine points in the period, which ended with Cleveland ahead 35-21.

Boston got no closer than 10 after that, and Cleveland blew it open by sinking 10 straight shots from the field in the third quarter — the last three long jumpers by Larry Nance — for a 93-67 lead.

Cleveland's Larry Nance scored 15 points Sunday as part of the Cavaliers' dominating front line.

Bulls answer wake-up call, stop Knicks in 3rd quarter for win

The Associated Press

CHICAGO — The Chicago Bulls stayed alive in a bid to repeat as NBA champions Sunday when Michael Jordan gave a repeat performance.

Jordan, six-time scoring champion and career average leader in the playoffs, scored 42 points in Chicago's 110-81 victory over New York that gave the Bulls the Eastern Conference semifinal series 4-3. They will play Cleveland in the conference finals starting Tuesday night at Chicago Stadium.

Scottie Pippen, outplayed by New York's Xavier McDaniel for most of the series, also had a solid seventh-game performance for the Bulls with 17 points, 11 assists and 11 rebounds.

"The Knicks woke us up," Jordan said. "We went into the series sort of sleepywalking. Everyone seemed to expect a sweep. But we responded to the pressure of the seventh game and played more like people expected."

Supposedly worn out by the Knicks' physical tactics throughout the series, Jordan spent most of Game 7 wearing out the nets, especially in the first half when he scored 29 points, more than half the Bulls' total.

"It was mentally draining to wake up every day having to face this physical, brutal team," Jordan said. "It would've been very disappointing not to get to the level we did last year. If I was fired, I didn't feel it. This is the kind of game you want to play."

Chicago took control defensively in the third quarter, holding the Knicks to 13 points on 5-for-19 shooting. New York trailed just 60-57 with 9:01 left before Jordan scored 7 points in a 17-5 run capped by Stacey King's three-point play that made it 77-62 with 39 seconds left.

The Knicks never threatened in the final quarter, scoring just 4 points in the first five minutes on 2-for-6 shooting. New York scored just 30 points in the second half on 32.3 percent shooting.

"We played a great defensive second half, and Michael rose to the occasion," Bulls coach Phil Jackson said. "We spent a lot of effort to get the homecourt advantage during the season. It truly makes a difference in seventh games."

Fairbanks closes in on McKean

By Jeff Hokisson Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Rookie drivers rarely have a big impact. But at the Magic Valley Speedway, it is not uncommon to see a first-year driver near the front.

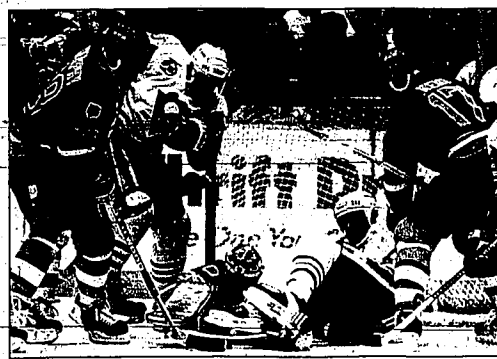

Last year Dwayne Wall and Bruce Quale both had a major impact in the Pony and Street Stock divisions.

This year is no exception. Darin Fairbanks, a rookie from Twin Falls, took the checkered flag for the third time in five races Sunday afternoon.

His win closes the points gap between himself and Eddy McKean, the defending track and region champion.

"I feel good about it," said Fairbanks, about the way things are going so far this season.

Also on Sunday, race fans were treated to their first ever appearance of the IMCA

Orlando sees magic in lottery

The Associated Press

SECAUCUS, N.J. — Orlando general manager Pat Williams, who came into the NBA lottery equipped with the second-worst record in the NBA and the second most ping pong balls in the draft lottery drum, figured the numbers.

Now, they're on Shaquille O'Neal's side. Williams came up with the lucky ball Sunday and the right to select LSU's 7-foot-11 All-American with the No. 1 pick in the draft June 24 at Portland. Now the trick is to sign a player who figures to cost upwards of $6 million a year.

"O'Neal is very special," Williams said. "It improves us, no question, if we can work all this out."

O'Neal, who was unavailable for comment Sunday, has indicated a preference for Los Angeles. Because the Clippers and Lakers were in the playoffs this season, they missed the O'Neal grabber. To get to L.A., O'Neal's rights would have to be traded. A move he could force by refusing to sign with the Magic. Williams couldn't imagine why he wouldn't.

"Everybody else wants to come to Orlando," the GM said. "He's from the south. He likes warm weather. It's a warm, gracious city. We'll make him feel at home."

But what about LA, Williams was asked. "We are the LA of the East," he said. "Orlando had 10 chances at the No. 1 pick because his 21-61 record was the second-poorest this season. Only Minnesota (15-67)

PITTSBURGH — They were sloppy and erratic, but the Pittsburgh Penguins retained that resilient streak they've shown in these 1992 playoffs.

Jaromir Jagr scored with 9:44 gone in overtime to give the Penguins a 4-3 victory over the Boston Bruins Sunday night in front of 16,164 at the Civic Arena in Game 1 of the Wales Conference finals.

The Bruins have a couple of talented players, but they are mostly about hard work and scappiness. Whatever the method, they led 2-1 and then 3-2 until Penguins rookie Shawn McEachern scored with 7:33 left in the third period to force overtime.

The victory is the fourth in a row for the Penguins over two series and they will take a 1-0 lead in this best-of-seven series into

Brown wins shortened

Byron Nelson Classic

IRVING, Texas — A golf tournament with a history of weather problems added a whole new chapter.

For the seventh time in eight years, the Byron Nelson Classic had meteorological misfortune. It was so bad this time that no round ended on the day it started and the tournament was shortened to 54 holes.

Still, it ended Sunday in victory — playoff victory — for Billy Ray Brown.

He dropped a 15-foot birdie putt on the first extra hole to win a playoff among the four third-round leaders.

Brown, Ray Floyd, Ben Crenshaw and Bruce Lietzke — now, all winners of this tournament — finished the third round Sunday at 199, 11 under par on the sudden, saturated TPC Las Colinas course. They became playoff participants when continuing rain forced officials to reduce the event to 54 holes.

Brown, 29, whose only other win was at Hartford last year, was still disappointed about finishing third in his hometown Houston Open two weeks ago.

"It's been kind of stinging on me, having a chance to win your hometown tournament," Brown said.

King leaves nearest golfer 11 strokes behind in LPGA

BETHESDA, Md. — Betsy King thrusted a tough golf course, dethroned the competition and rewrote the record books Sunday in coasting to her first LPGA Championship.

King shot a 5-under-par 66 for an 11-stroke victory, the 26th of her career and fifth in a major championship. It was the largest margin of victory in the 38-year history of the prestigious tournament, breaking the record of 10 strokes by Patty Sheehan in 1984.

King's 267 over four rounds was an LPGA record in any tournament. "This being a par-71 kind of helped a little bit," she said. "But you wouldn't expect that on this golf course. It's not that easy."

King, 36, sure made it look that way. She completed four trips over the difficult 6,246-yard Bethesda Country Club course with 19 birdies and just two bogeys. She led the event wire-to-wire and became the only player in LPGA history to shoot four rounds in the 60s at a major championship.

Indy newcomer roars into lineup; Johncock may be out

INDIANAPOLIS — Rookie Jimmy Vasser was bumped but not beaten Sunday, regaining a spot in the record-smashing field of the Indianapolis 500 with a backup car he qualified 4 mph faster than his earlier effort.

The 26-year-old Vasser outshone everyone on the final day of qualifications, including former Indy winners Tom Sneva and Gordon Johncock, both of whom also overcame tough odds and bad breaks to make the 76th Indy race. The latter's status was uncertain Sunday night pending a hearing on protests over the engine he used to qualify.

The average for this year's 33 starters is 223.479 mph. The last and slowest qualifier, rookie Ted Prappas at 219.173, is faster than the former record field average of 218.590 set last year.

Vasser, from Discovery Bay, Calif., was among 27 qualifiers on the first of two weekends of time trials.

Keep PBS budget down until times are better

There's little doubt that public television could dazzle us with $1 billion. The network has a well deserved reputation for some of the most thought-provoking, educational programming on the tube.

But the billion dollars public television is seeking for the next three years represents a budget that is about 40 percent higher than the last budget. That's a pretty stiff climb, considering today's lean budgets and bloated deficit.

Taxpayers need to take a close look any time any agency wants significantly more money. But let's keep the focus of the debate on the budget, not on ideology.

Some conservative lawmakers, including Idaho's Sen. Larry L. Craig, are using the nation's financial problems to bludgeon public television for its so-called liberal bias.

Because Craig and others don't like some programs, they are proposing ridiculous notions that could cripple public television.

Taxpayers should dismiss this overblown political rhetoric and keep their eyes on the bottom line.

You don't have to be a Larry Craig or a Robert Dole to know that a 39 percent budget increase over three years is a lot, especially at a time when Congress is trying to bring the deficit under control. As much as we'd love to see more public television, we question whether this is the time to do it with tax funds.

The proposed budget increase would be used partly for new initiatives, particularly in the field of early childhood education. Many would be designed to meet the president's worthy goal of properly preparing children for school.

If the Corporation for Public Broadcasting determines that is the proper future course, it should re-order its priorities, continue pursuing new private donors and consider canceling existing shows to make way for new ones.

Of course, most people would want existing programs to continue alongside any new ones. So would we.

But most businesses can't do it all these days. Picking up new programs requires cutting or shifting old priorities. The same rule should apply to public television.

The network needs enough money to continue providing the kind of quality television the public expects. But significant growth may have to wait for better times.

Glenn cooks up deceptive message in salsa ad

A congressional candidate in southern Idaho got caught with his hand in the salsa jar, but he's not exactly remorseful.

Gary Glenn, seeking the 2nd District Republican nomination, ripped off the plot of the Pace Panteo Sauce commercial in which cowboys turn ugly when asked to eat a salsa cooked up in New York City, of all the western places.

Glenn, who was cooked up elsewhere and moved to Idaho, was going after his opponent, State Sen. Mike Crapo, who was cooked up in Idaho. And Glenn, who began his career in Idaho as an agent of Eastern propaganda mills, actually criticized Crapo for being advised by Eastern propaganda mills. Glenn ran a radio ad attacking Crapo that included a line snatched from the commercial: "We ain't gonna swallow no campaign cooked up in... New York City!"

Well, that's all in good fun and clever of Glenn at that, even if it is odd for a relatively recent arrival to use it against a native. However, the salsa company did register an objection because, naturally, it doesn't want any suggestion it endorses a political candidate — least of all one better known for apoplexy than for salsa.

But Glenn's reaction to getting caught was typical of what a sneaky little sidewinder he can be when slithering along the old campaign trail:

He said he only intended to run the ad once and doesn't plan to run it again.

I only stole one horse and I don't plan to steal no more.

I only robbed one bank and that oughta hold me for a while.

I only cheated at poker on this one. I final hand and now I'll just take all your money and leave.

The people can put a stop to this slick dude by voting against him just once and then you won't have to do it again.

Where did this tinhorn learn his manners, in New York City?

Property rights should be total

Land use and zoning were implemented under the pretense of benefiting the people. From its inception, we find that it is nothing short of people control.

One of the foremost rights needed for men to be free is the right to own property and determine its future and best use, without interference. If your neighbor can determine your use of your property, you become merely a caretaker for he who determines its use.

Zoning, building permits, engineer approval, architectural plan requirements for a common outhouse and numerous nonsense requirements which have been made mandatorily are responsible for untold increases in the cost of a home or a building of any kind. Of course, the solution for the imposed costs are for the taxpayer to provide affordable housing.

Roy Hout, an cabinet maker, purchased from one of my competitors a commercial building on Grandview Drive. This building was designed and used for business. As an inexperienced person, he should not have suspected he would have difficulty with the bureaucrats in earning a living in his use of this property or that he would need consent from his neighbors.

The facts are that the bureaucrats would rather have Mr. Hout on welfare than to be self-reliant. Our officials refuse to let him use his building for what would be a total sensible use of the property. Even the police department has been involved in stopping Mr. Hout. The only claim for public need for this arm of public employees in this field is harassment they can cause. How sad.

For 35 years as a real estate broker, I have vigorously opposed these controls and our spending tax dollars on such endeavors and will continue until the day I die. I shall always believe my neighbors deserve to make their own decisions in life.

Vote Beard in, Fraley out

I differ with your editorial that Mr. Fraley should be re-elected as a county commissioner. After all, he was a county commissioner when they decided they needed to raise their wages. As far as I know, there's nothing to stop them from raising their wages again when it they want.

As for the trip to check on Mr. Knievel's jump, no one has yet explained why it cost the county $750 per person to check on him and the city's cost was $600. (It's a small amount, but like those in the federal government say, "What's a million here and a million there?")

I don't know Mr. Beard, but if he's run a farm and met a payroll, he certainly has some knowledge and ability about handling money. With the water situation we're in now, the farmers will have less money and the thinking people in town will realize they're going to receive less. Under these conditions, to be able to handle money will be a big plus as a county commissioner.

Glenn's comments fall flat

This is an open letter to Gary Glenn, who is running for the vacant seat in the U.S. House of Representatives.

Mr. Glenn made a visit to the Magic Valley Alternative High School on May 4. To be honest with you, Mr. Glenn, you lost my vote after showing up one-half hour late; and for the comments you made about the welfare system. You suggest that we should fall back on more traditional things like family, friends and churches for help when we need it.

I see it this way, I've been on my own for seven years now. I was 17 years old when I started my job and became a taxpayer. When I was 21 years old, I became pregnant with my son. I was a high school dropout going nowhere. In August of 1990, I returned to school at MVAHS. I was pregnant, going to school and working a part-time job. Most people would consider school in itself a full-time job.

My point, Mr. Glenn, is if it wasn't for the welfare system giving me a helping hand when I needed it, I'd still be going nowhere. Not all human beings are blessed with your ability to make perfect decisions. You offended me and several other students in my government class. Not everyone in this world has family, friends or church support when they're in need of help. Everyone has their own situation. My son's father and I are paying back the state of Idaho and the taxpayers their money that was used to get me on my feet again. So are a lot of other parents out there.

So in closing, Mr. Glenn, I would like to tell you not to be so quick to cast stones at people like me — at least not until you've walked a mile in my shoes.

Nelson: Worthy prosecutor

It occurred to me the other day while reading the editorial page of The Times-News that I am probably the only person who has worked for both Mike Wood, Twin Falls County public defender, and Lynn Nelson, candidate for Twin Falls County prosecutor.

Mike Wood has long been a thorn in the side of the Twin Falls County prosecutor's office. He is an excellent criminal defense attorney; in fact, the best I have so far encountered. If the prosecutor's office is to improve their batting average against Mike Wood, they will need the best prosecutor available.

Such a man is Lynn Nelson. I have worked with Lynn Nelson as his deputy prosecutor in Gooding County for more than two years.

I have seen him bring the same skill and zeal to the task as a prosecutor that Mike Wood brings to the defense side.

The proper functioning of our criminal justice system requires skilled attorneys on both sides. The criminal justice system will only work if each defendant receives a vigorous defense and forces the state to do its job in proving beyond a reasonable doubt that a crime has occurred and that this defendant has committed it. Mike Wood has done an outstanding job of doing that defense. We now need a worthy opponent on the side of the state. The best man for that job is Lynn Nelson.

Having known and worked with both of these men, I look forward to the contest.

Noh shows he's no friend of rural Idahoans

On two occasions, I have been before the Natural Resources Committee chaired by Sen. Noh — once regarding the Payette River Plan and again on the proposed Henry's Fork Plan.

In my view, both of these plans result from a political decision without concern for the facts, customs and culture or economic impact on the local people.

I was county commissioner in Boise County and, to my great personal distress, had no choice but to participate in raising property taxes 35 percent.

Mr. Noh showed not the slightest concern over that fact and voted to deny our county an opportunity to increase our tax base by 92 percent or $178,000,000.

In my opinion, Sen. Noh is not a friend of rural Idaho.

Writer questions allegiance of Noh on water issues

An attempt is being made to impose federal control on the Payette River.

Before voting, I urge citizens to examine Laird Noh's support for the groups that assist federal control of the Payette and as many as 60 more Idaho rivers identified at their 1990 Idaho River Symposium.

Noh voted for a Payette Plan which says, "(State sovereignty) ... the state opposes any attempt by the federal government ... to usurp the state's role in this area." However, "Friends of the Payette" made it clear in its publications that their goals were to ban hydro on the Payette and place the river under federal control.

Noh's alliance with this group, and I suspect his agreement with federal control, could account for his non-responsiveness to our concerns about state vs. federal control during the hearings.

Unless his campaign chest is already too full of special interest contributions, Noh should demonstrate his commitment to state sovereignty over our water resource by using his influence as chairman of the Resource Committee to stop federal control of the Payette.

Otherwise, it is reasonable to conclude his allegiance is indeed to special interest groups, and state sovereignty over water resources throughout Idaho is seriously at risk if he is re-elected.

Vote for Newcomb and multiple use of water

This is an election alert! We need Russell Newcomb in the Senate! Our natural resource-based industries are in real jeopardy. Sen. Newcomb is sensitive to the problems our economy is facing if we don't protect our tax structure by maintaining a well-balanced multiple-use concept.

Please put Russell Newcomb in charge.

Times-News misses issues dominating '92 elections

If you believe all that you read in The Times-News, the critical issue this election year is going to be Henry's Fork.

I think maybe they better look again. While that issue may have some impact on which candidate the voters choose, other issues of more importance are on the mind of us voters. Education issues are important to me. There are some questions needing an answer from Sen. Laird Noh. Why did you and two other individuals force the Senate Republicans into accepting your version of the Public School Budget which takes away distribution of $2 million to the school districts and instead puts it on a grant basis to only a few select schools? Money for schools is short this year, and your actions have penalized the schools that do not receive these grants!

In the same light, why did you try to kill repeal of the 90 percent attendance rule last legislative session and also this session? From what I have read, there have been very few benefits of the rule and many hardships and dropouts as a result. I don't understand why you feel keeping a rule in place is more important than keeping students in school and away from becoming future welfare recipients. Why aren't you working to make sure they learn something while they're in the classroom?

We spend millions of dollars more on education than we did 10 years ago, but our students that graduate any smarter?

Vandals destroy campaign signs in Gooding County

A few weeks ago, Jim Jax, who is a candidate for Gooding County sheriff, wrote a letter to your editorial column citing the theft and vandalism being done to campaign signs being placed at various locations around Gooding County.

He mentioned in that writing that this activity is a violation of the law. He also stated that he did not condone such actions and that he felt that Sheriff Robert Aja would also disapprove of such activity. As Mrs. Aja stated in her recent letter, it is expensive and time-consuming to paint and place these signs.

We too would like to carry on with our campaigning without our signs being damaged or stolen by people who apparently have no respect for the property of others.

Very probably, this writing will not reach those involved in the theft and vandalism as people who would do a thing like this very probably do not read the newspaper. However, possibly someone saw suspicious activity or heard someone brag or speak of this happening and maybe that person or persons will notify a law-enforcement agency — even if they do it anonymously.

In Jerome County, bring in Petersen, keep Gold

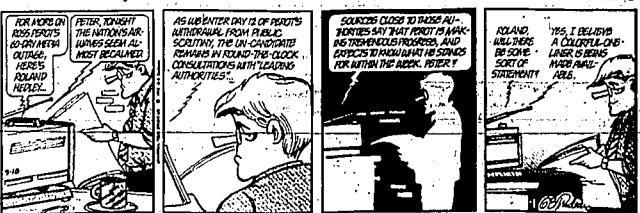

Jerome County, it pays you have something good, it pays you keep it. That's what we have in Sheriff Larry Gold, but it's time we got someone new as commissioners.

Don Petersen is a man that looks ahead and we need someone like him to see that Jerome County makes the most of each dollar that is spent and we are not always adding to the next year. He will listen to everyone.

It's a chance we don't have too often to have two great men that will do the county the most for the money they have to work with.

Bosnia troops call off army barracks assault

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Bosnian troops backed down from their threat to attack two federal army strongholds Sunday after the government reportedly reached an agreement on a pullout of Serb-led soldiers.

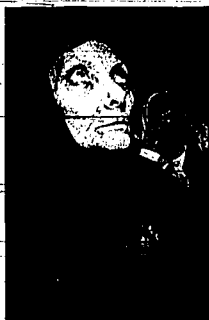

"Obstacles to the peaceful withdrawal of army personnel from the barracks in Sarajevo have been removed," the republic's B-H news agency said in reporting the agreement.

Under it, several hundred of the federal troops were to leave the Marshal Tito and Viktor Bubanj barracks with only their personal weapons. Such a plan would lessen the threat of a new surge in fighting in Bosnia's capital.

There were no immediate signs of a pullout after the 5 p.m. (11:00 a.m. EDT) deadline set by Bosnian authorities passed.

Fighting overnight Saturday died down near daybreak, but an exploding mortar shell killed Jorđi Pujol, a photographer for Spain's Catalan-language daily Avui, and wounded Associated Press photographer David Brauchli. He was operated on for shrapnel in the head, groin and arm.

It was the first death of a journalist in the Bosnian war, which has killed 1,300 people and created 700,000 refugees in 10 weeks. Twenty-three journalists in neighboring Croatia died in fighting that broke out there after the republic declared independence nearly a year ago. In a fierce infantry and artillery clash Sunday some six miles north of the embattled southwestern town of Mostar, three federal soldiers were killed and four wounded, the Belgrade-based Tanjug news agency reported. In Russia, Moscow television reported that Russian Foreign Minister Andrei Kozyrev was due on Monday in Belgrade, the Yugoslav and Serbian capital, to meet with Serbian leaders as a mediator. The violence began after Slavic Muslims and Croats in Bosnia voted in February to secede from Serbdominated Yugoslavia, which now includes only Serbia and Montenegro. Much of the fighting pits Slavic Muslims, representing more than 40 percent of Bosnia's 4.3 million people, against Serbs, who comprise about one-third. But some Serbs, and many Croats — about 17 percent of the republic's population — have sided with the Muslims. The rebel Serbs, with the help of the Serb-led federal army, have fought to control areas that could join Serbia. They now hold about two-thirds of Bosnia.

Don't forget to stoop and scoop Paris

PARIS (AP) — A new "pooper-scooper" measure takes effect today, but some doubt whether Parisians will stoop to cleaning up after their dogs — even under the threat of a fine of up to $250.

Dogs deposit up to 11 tons of waste daily on the sidewalks of this elegant capital, and many residents have had enough of watching their feet instead of their spectacular surroundings.

"It's a fantastic idea, but I don't think it will ever work," Remi Jourdan, a dogless, 24-year-old accountant, said of the new law. French authorities, Jourdan said, "just won't enforce it."

Officials, though, are vowing a serious crackdown. For the past three weeks, sanitation agents have been patrolling Paris, warning violators of the impending fines. Starting today, 50 plainclothes agents will be out in the streets, ready to pounce on violators.

They don't expect their efforts to be well received by all.

"People are definitely going to put up a fight," a police officer on the Champs-Elysees said gloomily. "There will be some serious problems, and I'm sure we'll be called on to intervene."

Comic books teaching sound hygiene have been distributed at elementary schools, and more than 10,000 posters have gone up around town reminding people to curb their dogs.

But if persuasion isn't enough, the fines for violators range from $110 to $250.

Parisians are famous for spoiling their dogs, taking them into subways, chic boutiques and restaurants. The city has a canine population of 200,000 — one for nearly every 10 people.

Thai police fire into crowd, kill 3

Los Angeles Times

BANGKOK, Thailand — Police commandos fired into crowds of protesters Sunday and early Monday as violence erupted for the first time in pro-democracy demonstrations aimed at forcing the resignation of an army general who was appointed Thailand's prime minister last month.

Initial reports said that at least three persons were killed in the gunfire and that more than 200 injured, some of them seriously, when police used batons to disperse tens of thousands of demonstrators.

Prime Minister Suchinda Kraprayoon, who was the target of the demonstration, declared a state of emergency in Bangkok and the surrounding provinces.

The measure banned public meetings of more than 10 people, imposed strict press censorship and gave the authorities the power to arrest anyone deemed a threat to national security.

The protests, which have recurred since Suchinda was appointed prime minister in April without having run in an election, started peacefully Sunday.

More than 120,000 people, including a cross-section of students, academics and members of the country's burgeoning middle class, gathered near Bangkok's ornate royal palace in the largest protest here since 1973, when students mobilized to oust a military regime.

Swiss shift, join in World Bank, IMF

BERN, Switzerland — Swiss voters on Sunday reversed decades of reluctance to join global organizations and endorsed Switzerland's membership in the World Bank and International Monetary Fund. Markus Lusser, president of the National Bank, took the vote as a sign the Swiss also might be willing to join the European Community. "Swiss voters have realized that the world has changed since the fall of the Berlin Wall and that the time has come to open themselves up internationally," Lusser said.

Floods wipe out parts of northern Iran

NICOSIA, Cyprus — Weekend floods in northern Iran destroyed dozens of houses and bridges and ruined thousands of acres of farms and orchards, the Islamic Republic News Agency reported Sunday. In Khorasan province, rains damaged or destroyed some 50 houses, swept away 20 bridges and ruined 2,000 acres of farms and orchards. Damage to one village in the Shirvan district was estimated at $5 million, the news agency said.

In Gilan province, also near the Caspian Sea, damage to farmland near the city of Taleh was almost $10 million, said the agency, monitored in Nicosia.

Workers find Israeli ancient gold mine

JERUSALEM — Archaeologists and geologists have uncovered Israel's first and only gold mine, a spokeswoman for the Israel Antiquities Authority said Sunday. The mine, discovered near the southern resort city of Eilat in the Negev Desert, was worked during the Moslem Umayyad Dynasty, 800 to 1,000 A.D., as part of the rulers' efforts to develop the area.

The dig also uncovered remnants of tents and mining equipment. Archaeologists said the mine was probably shut down because it was unprofitable. The existence of the mine and a nearby gold workshop disproves the belief that gold was always imported to the area, spokeswoman Efrat Auerbach said.

2 quakes hit Philippines; no damage

MANILA, Philippines — Two strong earthquakes struck the southern Philippines on Sunday, but there were no reports of damage or casualties, scientists said. The U.S. Geological Survey in Menlo Park, Calif., said the stronger quake measured 7.3 on the Richter scale and struck about 6:30 p.m. off the eastern coast of Mindanao, the second-largest of the 7,100 Philippine islands.

The other quake, also near Mindanao, occurred about 20 minutes earlier and measured 6.9 on the Richter scale, spokeswoman Pat Jorgenson said.

Santiago promises to press election fraud allegations

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Presidential candidate Miriam Defensor Santiago promised Sunday to press her crusade to prove election fraud, increasing fears the campaign could lead to violence during the slow vote count.

"As a Filipino Christian, I promise the Filipino people that good will triumph over evil," she told more than 4,000 people at a rally. "I promise you we shall win as president and we shall overcome."

The call to protest fueled fears that the military might seize the government if widespread violence breaks out. Her accusations mesh with public skepticism about Monday's balloting that stems from previous election fraud in the Philippines, where violence often has accompanied balloting. The day before this election, rebels killed 15 police officers shortly before voting began, and several other people were killed in scattered incidents. After the voting, a drunken dispute between supporters of Mrs. Santiago and her main rival, Fidel Ramos, ended with one dead and two injured.

"Our message to Mrs. Santiago must be: Miriam, please don't unleash the dogs of war," publisher Maximo Soliven wrote in The Philippine Daily Star.

Koreas commemorate '80 Kwangju uprising

KWANGJU, South Korea (AP) — About 20,000 students and other citizens thronged downtown Sunday for a rally to commemorate a 1980 anti-government uprising that left about 200 people dead.

Although about 7,000 riot police were deployed around the city to prevent violence, they stayed away from the rally, the first commemorating the Kwangju uprising to be approved by police.

In past years the anniversary has been an occasion for several days of clashes between riot police and radical students.

The uprising occurred on May 18,

1980, and was triggered by a military junta's crackdown on students demanding democratic reforms and a civilian government. Opposition to the government traditionally has been strong in Kwangju, 188 miles south of Seoul.

Protesters have accused the United States of acquiescing in the military suppression of the uprising. The United States has denied the allegation.

On Sunday, students took over a large downtown plaza in front of a government building, a site of fierce fighting between soldiers and anti-government protesters in 1980.

"Down with the regime of (President) Roh Tae-woo," some students shouted. They also chanted "Yankies go home," jabbing their fists in the air.

The commemoration included speeches, video displays, plays and singing. Organizers said they would hold another rally on today.

Pope beatifies Opus Dei founder

VATICAN CITY (AP) — An unusually large crowd of more than 200,000 people jammed St. Peter's Square on Sunday to witness Pope John Paul II beatify the founder of the controversial Roman Catholic organization Opus Dei.

The beatification of Monsignor Josemaria Escrivá de Balaguer of Spain was one of the biggest celebrations since John Paul became pope in 1978.

Pilgrims from 60 countries came on more than 2,000 buses, hundreds of airline flights and two ships from Spain.

Beatification is the final step before sainthood. Some former Opus Dei members and church liberals who have criticized the group argued that the step was being taken too hastily. Critics say Escrivá, who died in 1975, was ill-tempered and manipulative, and created a secretive, conservative and ambitious organization.

But to the worshippers packed under a blazing sun, the ceremony was another sign of Vatican approval for the energetic, orthodox organization. Opus Dei emphasizes church tradition and discipline and the sanctity of everyday work.

Controlling behaviors spoil intimacy in relationships

"You're controlling my life! You interrogate me about any time I spend and then you go out and buy a brand new set of golf clubs," a wife shouts at her husband.

JoAnn Larsen
Psychology

"I'm controlling your life?" the husband exclaims with anger and disbelief. "I've gone where you wanted to go on vacation, gone to movies, plays and symphonies because you wanted to, made love the way you wanted and deferred to you about how to raise the kids. You're the one who tries to control me every chance you get. You've done it through our whole marriage and you're doing it now!"

Now it is the wife's turn to look at her husband in disbelief. She stalks out of the bedroom, slamming the door.

Two people - supposedly intimates - wrapped up in control issues. And each feeling that the other is at fault, notes J. Keith Miller, author of "Compelled to Control."

The control factor is an insidious force in relationships, creating resentment and bitterness, he observes. Though issues of control in relationships can be moderate and emanate simply from people not being aware of the inadvertent impacts of their behavior on others, Miller speaks of the compulsion to control, which he deems extreme enough to be called a "disease." And he speaks of his own experience with this insidious phenomenon.

"The discovery that I had a compulsion to control everything and everybody in my life came as a real surprise to me," he says. "I had always seen myself as a sensitive person who wanted everyone to be free to do what they needed and wanted to do."

"What I didn't see," Miller continues, "was that my controlling presence was like a giant amoeba that slowly spread over my intimate relationships, cozing silently and incoercibly across other people's boundaries, until my vacation ideas and my expectations crowded out the space for their identities and growth."

"My controlling behaviors were somehow decoupling their emotional territory. Instead of focusing time, attention and love on them, my life had become the central life in our relationships. My vacation and dreams absorbed my thinking and took up the space where their lives would have been free to develop."

The persistent, irresistible urge to control other people and situations is often at the root of bruised and broken personal relationships, preventing authentic intimacy from developing, Miller emphasizes. "Intimacy means that I share my personal reality with you - especially my thoughts and feelings - and you do not fix me, or try to adjust my reality by telling me that I shouldn't feel what I have expressed. Then you share your personal reality with me, and I do not fix you."

When the mutual sharing of reality takes place in a nonjudgmental and caring atmosphere, participants are emotional equals, not sovereign and subordinate in a one-up, one-down position or contenders for top position.

On the other hand, when issues of control are the focus, the result is often a stalemate. Please see LARSEN/B2

Camping in style

Whatever variety suits you, the low cost for this type of summer vacation cannot be beat

By Denise Turner
Times-News writer

WENDELL - Some campers tote along enough baggage to put Princess Diana to shame. Others carry everything on their backs. Most set up camp somewhere in between. But all of them rally under the same motto: It's cheaper than a hotel.

Russell and Kathleen Morgan, along with children Tim and Karen, have always loved to camp. They have tried everything from tents to campers. A few years ago, they decided to streamline their outings.

"It was always so much of a hassle to load everything," said Kathleen Morgan, a teacher at Wendell Elementary School. "Now we get by with two tarps and a rope - and we have a lot more fun."

One tarp on the ground is for the Morgans' sleeping bags. The second tarp, strung high between trees on a 100-foot rope, is their shelter. They call their home away from home "airy." And, yes, they have been rained on.

The Morgan camping gear is as basic as their shelter. They have day packs for hiking, a gas lantern, folding chairs, an ice chest and a gas stove. Food is prepared and frozen ahead. Quick meals consist of canned chili, granola and s'mores.

When the Morgans sign up for white water rafting trips, they pare down the packing lists even more. "We take only the bare necessities," said Kathleen Morgan, "in small waterproof bags."

You don't need a lot, especially at first, explained Carolyn Baird, owner of Sports Country, "and you don't save any money buying cheap stuff." Baird

Some things to keep in mind before hitting the great outdoors

The Times-News

Recent demographic studies reveal more than 60 million campers in the United States, making it the sixth most popular leisure activity among adults. If you're interested in camping - on a shoestring - keep these tips in mind.

- Avoid flashy equipment.
- Consider renting or borrowing for the first few trips.

- If you invest in a tent, make sure it's sturdy, breathable and waterproof. Two small tents can be just as economical as one large one.

- This affords adults some privacy, too, particularly important to the parents of teen-agers. Before moving on to a recreational vehicle, figure both investment costs and upkeep. Folding camper trailers or tent trailers are generally economical.

- You can make your own first aid kit.

- Choose clothing that wears well outdoors. Fleece under a windbreaker is one good bet.

- Plan ahead in order to pack everything you need and avoid costly purchases at your destination. Don't forget safety matches, flashlights and batteries. According to the book

"The Joy of Camping," you should figure 1½-4 pounds of food with a caloric value of 2,500-4,000 per day per person, but most people take more than they need.

- Sports Country owner Carolyn Baird often picks berries at the campsite, whips up some dough and makes colorful Dutch oven style courses in this type of cooking are offered at the College of Southern Idaho.

- Take care of equipment to add years to its life.

- If you are going to camp a lot, consider joining a campers' club that offers discounts.

- Dian Thomas, in "Backyard Roughing It Easy," invites you to cut costs even more. She suggests pitching a tent on your own lawn and grilling your food on a hibachi improvised from a flower pot.

- She includes instructions for installing a circular dressing room from an umbrella hung on a tree and strung with a shower curtain. And she even discusses ways to iron burritos and to fill a waterbed outside. You can top off the backyard weekend with a bike ride to the park, a leaf-raking party or a family Olympics.

Hats come out of the closet

What goes around comes around, and that goes for hats.

After decades of gaining and losing ground, the fabulous toppers from the past - bowlers, fedoras, cloches and wide-brimmed straw garden hats - have been recycled for this spring.

All those old-time favorites that were stuffed in the back of the closet have been dusted off and given a '90s touch. They're being recycled, as are the ready-to-wear clothes they're meant to go with - such as the '40s-inspired, man-styled pants and suits.

"Nostalgia is selling period," says New York hat designer Penny Elle. "The style can be very casual or very elegant - something you could sort of wear to a polo match or a lawn picnic, and a bowler fits in quite well here."

The '90s twist comes from the way designers are dressing them up.

Take the roll-brim bowlers, undoubtedly the hottest of this year's hat crop. These are flowered and laced and ribboned and made out of delicate open-weave straw or sisal - a durable tight-weave straw.

Bowlers will be strong this spring/summer season, and especially next fall to go with the huberdashery look for women," says Louise Green, a Santa Monica, Calif., hat designer who makes a lively line of them. "A bowler in a dusty rose tone with a bit of ribbon or lace trim will do a lot to soften up the mannish look because it's casual yet feminine."

Good ol' country garb is back

Country is back - in fashion as well as in music. The traditional gingham check periodically checks in and out of fashion.

MIDDLE-AGE SPREAD COMES BEFORE

MIDDLE AGE: According to a study by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, men and women are most likely to gain weight between the ages of 25 and 34. The study also showed that after Americans reached the age of 55, their weight began to decrease slightly.

ROBO DOC: How would you feel about a computer telling doctors whether it's worth trying to save your life? Well, a new database called the Apache III Management System can, with frightening accuracy, predict the chances of survival of patients arriving in intensive care units and emergency rooms. Investor's Business Daily reports. Some health officials see it as a tool to check prognosis and improve treatment; others argue hospitals already are too dehumanized, and life-and-death decisions should not be treated like the odds of filling a straight.

OVERDOSE ANTIDOTE: An enzyme found in low levels in human blood may prove useful in concentrated amounts as an antidote for fatal overdoses of cocaine. Rats given butyrylcholinesterase, or BChE, were able to survive up to 10 times the normally lethal dose of cocaine, researchers reported at the annual meeting of the Federation of American Societies for Experimental Biology.

NO LAUGHING MATTER: Mention the female condom and some would giggle, smirk or express flat out disbelief. But many initially skeptical women - and their partners - have become converts. Wisconsin Pharmaceutical Co., the manufacturer, reports that 50 percent to 80 percent of the 1,500 women who tried the condom were satisfied - with the higher figure among those who were more worried about sexually transmitted diseases than pregnancy. The condom could go on sale by the end of the year.

SAFER SEX: Contraceptive sponges and diaphragms used by women provide much better protection than male condoms against some sexually transmitted diseases. That's according to a study of 4,162 women, conducted at the private research organization Health Decisions Inc., in Chapel Hill, N.C., published in the Journal of Public Health. Cola giants enter sports drink race

The Washington Post

Gulped by athletes during games and practices and dumped over the heads of coaches after victories, Gatorade has become as much a part of the American sporting scene as artificial turf, with which it shares a funny green color.

Now the odd-tasting sports drink is facing some competition of its own.

Coca-Cola Co. and PepsiCo Inc., grappling with slowing growth of their best-known products, are trying to muscle in on the fast-growing $1-billion sports drink industry that Gatorade long has dominated.

Coke has announced that it will introduce its own version of the thirst-quenching drink, which it calls PowerAde, in four southern markets next month. That's when Pepsi is scheduled to expand test marketing of its similar concoction, All Sport, from a handful of markets to 25 percent of the nation.

The new contenders to Gatorade's throne already are learning the lingo of the sports drink business: A Pepsi spokesman mentioned All Sport's "slammiability" — the ease with which the drink pours out of the upended water-mouthed bottle and down the throat of a thirsty athlete. And a Coke spokesman said the company plans to market PowerAde to "points of sweat" — the athletic clubs and other sporting venues where sweaty, thirsty customers gather.

Gatorade has had competitors before, but they have hardly affected the industry leader, which is made by Quaker Oats Co. Gatorade holds around 90 percent of the market for sports drinks, according to industry analysts' estimates.

But Coke and Pepsi could represent serious competition, experts say, because of their powerful distribution systems and marketing clout — including the ability to sell their products in their ubiquitous vending machines.

Quaker Oats officials, however, don't appear to be very exercised at the prospect that two big new contenders are getting into the ring with Gatorade. Gatorade's strong brand recognition, they say, gives it a significant advantage over its upstart competitors.

"Pepsi-Cola and Coca-Cola are formidable competitors with very powerful distribution systems," said Philip A. Marineau, the executive vice president at Chicago-based Quaker Oats who oversees Gatorade. "We would be foolish not to be concerned about that. But ultimately the consumer pulls the product out of the store."

Nevertheless, Quaker Oats is gearing itself for the battle. Earlier this week, it announced a corporate reorganization that established a separate division for Gatorade, which is Quaker's best-selling product.

Female-only health clubs focus on needs

WASHINGTON (AP) — When Carol Falk exercises, she prefers not to have men around. "I don't want to sweat and be very unattractive in front of guys," said Falk, of North Potomac, Md. "I like the idea of a single-sex spa."

Although most health clubs are coed, enough women agree with Falk to keep a sizable minority of female-only clubs in business.

Single-sex clubs appeal primarily to women 30 to 50 years old, many of them with children, who are sensitive to how their bodies may look to others, said psychologist Robert L. Tannenbaum. He reviewed the research and conducted informal interviews for the Houston-based LivingWell Lady chain.

"They liken the experience of being in a coed exercise environment to being in a locker room or a bathroom without stalls," said Tannenbaum.

At the same time, however, they think the group support of a health club will make them more regular exercisers than if they worked out at home, he said.

"I haven't gone into those videos," Falk said. "I thought that, if I'm home, I'm going to get stuck cleaning house or taking care of the child."

Female-only health clubs face legal challenges, however, on claims that they discriminate against men.

Commonwealth Court in Pennsylvania recently overturned a state order that several LivingWell Lady clubs must admit men. The judges said women have a privacy right to exercise without men. The court's two female members dissented, saying exercise wasn't inherently private enough.

A similar challenge is being made in Washington state, said Robert L. Waters, senior vice president of the chain.

Members of female-only clubs tend to be interested in aerobics, but don't like to be watched as they exercise, he said.

Also, they don't want to feel pressure to wear physically revealing exercise outfits, Tannenbaum said.

"I'm not there to turn someone on," said Falk, who belongs to a Spa Lady club. "I come in myself, old sweats."

Fat-burning through aerobics is much more important than muscle toning through weight training for Spa Lady members, said Jane MacFarlane, president of the Rockville, Md.-based chain.

As a result, there are virtually constant aerobics classes and relatively little weight training equipment, MacFarlane said. Members who use equipment prefer aerobic machines such as stair-climbing machines and bikes, she said.

Having a place to leave the children while Mom exercises is important to her members, MacFarlane said. Child-care centers are busy in the evenings, when women get in a workout after leaving work, she said.

Women tend to want more personal attention when they're introduced to equipment, MacFarlane said. "Women like to be taught how," she said. "Men don't mind learning by watching the other guy."

Weight training is more for younger women, ages 18 to 25, the chain co-owner said. Enough women are interested in weight training for equipment manufacturers to produce gear scaled to women's capacities and proportions.

The Nautilus for Women line has weight plates of a third less than the 10-pound plates of its standard line, said the president of the Independence, Va.-based manufacturer, Dan Baldwin. Similarly, the size of the machines were reduced, he said.

The Sprint line of Hoggan Health Industries Inc. of Draper, Utah, has undergone a similar change. Sprint's smaller-sized line is designed for people 4-foot-8 to 6 feet tall, said spokeswoman Michael T. Carroll. Sprint's standard line is designed for heights of 5-foot-3 to 6-foot-3, he said.

control dominate, the energies of potential intimates are immersed in struggles for dominance and autonomy. Control issues "slam the door on intimacy" for "Who wants to share their reality with someone who's going to point out what's wrong with it and you in the process?" Miller emphasizes.

When the need to control becomes a compulsion, and thus an addiction, those who control may need the same kind of 12-step program utilized to aid people with other addictions, stresses Miller, who discusses these steps in his book. Many of his observations regarding control issues, however, are germane to even those whose lives are affected — but not driven — by control dynamics. They include the following:

- Concentrate on your own control issues. Lay aside the issue of fixing the relationship and focus on fixing yourself. Recognize that the need to control your partner's reality has to do with your need to feel secure and adequate.

Let people make mistakes without penalty. "Making mistakes is how everyone learns about life," Miller notes. "It's important to accept our own and others' imperfect nature."

"When someone close to me fails to be perfect about something they said they were going to do for their own life ... I have always been compelled to note their failures for them — just in case they might miss them. I noticed how angry and silent or rageful they got, but I couldn't understand why they were so upset, since I was 'just trying to help' ... I see now that I tell them about their mistakes as a way of controlling them, bolstering my own weak self-esteem and suppressing my fear of not being adequate."

Now, reports Miller, "If my wife goes on a diet or has an exercise program and fails to keep her regimen, it is none of my business. She is a grown woman."

"Give up needing to 'win' or 'to be right,'" Miller says. "I have always had an overwhelming need to be right," Miller says. "When I'd be accused of having 'blown it' or 'done it wrong,' my mind would instantly manufacture several justifications for my mistake or sin."

If his "perfection" was at stake and others tried to share their differing reality, Miller would discount it, twist it or dismiss it as being unimportant. This could happen even in the face of solid evidence that "he" made a mistake. Miller reports he went to great lengths to be right to avoid being blamed by his inner voices.

Give up blaming. Blaming can be used to justify an attack on a partner. Says Miller: "If I am angry at my loved one, to just walk up and hurt her with a nasty comment is too dastardly for a good-guy perfectionist like me who needs to be right. But if I, as Mr. Righteous, can blame my loved one for a wrong I perceived she has done, then it is amazing how justified I can feel in 'getting her back.'" comeback: in form-fitting designs favoring those of '40s and '50s pin-ups. The latest sun-suits, tight-tight jeans and pedal pushers are reminiscent of Norma Jean BEFORE she became Marilyn.

Checks — from picnic-table red and white to tiny pink and white — are shooting up like Kansas sunflowers, everywhere from the Gap and Guess to Adrienne Vittadini.

In keeping with the new country chic, denim and chambray is a natural partner to classic cotton picnic checks. Try a pink and white corset top with frayed denim shorts and add a simple rope belt.

Other adaptations that make the look include scalloping and white eyeliner, popularized this season by French designer Azzedine Alaïa — and used everywhere from bikini bottoms to the crisp, sleeveless white blouse tied at the navel.

Don't call it a comeback: Over-40 model returns

"I wouldn't call this a comeback, because I'm not getting back into modeling," says Lisa Taylor, talking about the ads she did for Calvin Klein's spring collection and upcoming profiles in Allure and Mirabella.

Still, the model-whose face was among the most recognizable in the '70s is now making some kind of splash as a woman over 40. The fact that Klein, an old friend, chose her for his spring campaign says something about the potent quality of realism in fashion; rarely have his clothes looked so compellingly as they do on Taylor. They seemed to belong to her.

"The reaction has been great," says Taylor, who has also been getting a bit of attention from "On the Edge," the recent photo retrospective celebrating Vogue's 100th anniversary. Taylor appears in several prints.

recommends buying camping gear piecemeal.

"Buy a good tent one year, and buy a good sleeping bag the next," Baird said. "People buy cheap and plan to replace when they have more money, but you never have more money." No one is caught in the rain with a broken tent pole, Baird said, or stuck with a sleeping bag that weighs 10 tons and takes up an entire station wagon.

Luckily, campers don't need a lot of clothes. Each of the Morgans pack a change or two. "For longer trips, we usually go to campgrounds with toilet and shower facilities," Kathleen Morgan said.

Many of those campgrounds, with facilities, are easy on the budget. Bob and Barbara Tanner, who own the KOA Kampground on Highway 93, sell discount cards for KOA sites nationwide.

"State and national parks are cheaper than ours," Barbara Tanner said, "but if you've been in the woods a while, you might be ready for some of our amenities, like a heated pool, hot shower, laundry and convenience store."

Another way to save money is to camp close to home. Max Yingst, recreation technician for the Sawtooth National Forest, offers some not-too-crowded options.

"The lower Rock Creek area has Shipper and Birch Glen, Yingst noted, while upper Rock Creek contains Diamond and Jack and Porcupine Spring. "They are all close to Twin Falls — and free," he said.

Campout entertainment is often free, too. On the road in their Bronco, the Morgans study books on insects and wildflowers in preparation for identifying species at the campground. They also sing a lot.

Once at the campsite, Russell Morgan, a workhealth director of physical therapy at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center, usually treats the kids to some inexpensive water play. "We can have a lot of fun with a little tiny stream," he said, recalling sun-drenched days when 10-year-old Karen and 14-year-old Tim spent hours making dams and figuring out who could get across the water first.

Meanwhile, back at the camp, Kathleen Morgan digs into her stack of magazines, which she never has time to read at home. "My husband also sleeps a lot on camping trips," she said, with a laugh.

The family has a travel scramble game and an aerobic frisbee. The kids have Walkmans, too; a concession to life outside the wilderness. Other than that, the Morgans spend time looking for animals. They have seen raccoons, moose and buffaloes. Once, a curious deer wandered into the middle of their campsite.

With their entertainment budget held down, the Morgans' main travel expense is gas and camp fees. "We like hotels, but it's sure nice not to have to pay that much," Kathleen Morgan said. "We even camped out on our first wedding anniversary, and we dressed up and went out to dinner — but when we left the restaurant, we headed back to camp."

PREVENT THE UNTHINKABLE.

Last year's disasters were the most devastating in the history of Red Cross disaster relief. Our disaster relief funds are gone. And we still haven't faced the spring floods or tornadoes we know are coming.

Victims count on us 24 hours a day, so we can't shorten hours or cut back disaster services.

Our only choice is to raise millions immediately. To make sure we're able to provide the relief victims count on.

To expect less of the Red Cross is unthinkable. Please help.

Carole Orzel, 32, who suffers from an extremely rare bone disorder called fibrodysplasia ossificans progressiva, works on a computer in January. At left is Paula Silver, who sets up the computer for Orzel, who then uses a metal rod to work the keyboard.

Old bone growth freezes joints, doctors on road to treatment

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Carole Orzel is trapped by a body that grows normal bone in abnormal places, encasing her in a skeletal shell.

Bone started to grow in the muscles of her neck when she was 2. At 32, she's almost immobilized.

Orzel has a rare disorder called fibrodysplasia ossificans progressiva, known as FOP. It affects only about 100 people in the United States, 2,500 worldwide.

Many patients were misdiagnosed as children and subjected to treatment that did more harm than good. A 10-year-old Atlanta girl had her right arm and shoulder amputated before doctors realized she didn't have cancer.

But there is reason for hope.

Two Philadelphia doctors, who in 1989 began the first collaborative FOP research, are studying possible treatments based on genetic clues uncovered in the last three years.

Lisa and Pat Gillooly of Albuquerque, N.M., brought their 3-year-old daughter, Sara, to Philadelphia recently to be examined by the doctors, Frederick Kaplan and Michael Zaslouf.

Pointy bumps of bone poke out the skin along Sara's spine. The lumps don't show under a sweatshirt, and she looks healthy as she plays catch with her father while the grownups talk. But she can't bend over to tie her shoes.

"If we don't do anything, her hips will be affected by the time she's 10," said Zaslouf, chief of the division of molecular biology and human genetics at Children's Hospital of Philadelphia.

Surgery is out of the question. Any attempt to remove the bone stimulates more bone to grow, said Kaplan, chief of the division of metabolic bone disease at The Hospital of the University of Pennsylvania.

The doctors say their research has broad implications for medical science.

"FOP holds the promise of unraveling clues to a whole spectrum of bone disorders, ranging from malformation of the limbs in newborns, to later degenerative diseases like arthritis and osteoporosis," Kaplan said.

"We know there's a genetic switch, so the question becomes, what is the switch that fails to turn off... that allows a whole set of bone to form?"

"If we can use the clues from FOP to find that switch, we will have found a very potent tool that can be used to turn on bone formation in other conditions," he said.

The first indication of FOP is malformed big toes, the last bones to develop in a fetus. The abnormal bone growth usually begins in childhood and is heralded by painful swellings in muscles and connective tissues along the spine and limbs. These swellings, which often resemble tumors, mature into normal bone. The bone grows in

Brother's skeleton gives bare-bones view of disease

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — It's a skeleton gone mad, with strange bones wrapping around the chest, creeping down the limbs and cementing joints.

Harry Eastlack had a rare bone disorder called fibrodysplasia ossificans progressiva, known as FOP.

When he died in 1973 he left his body to his doctors, who later arranged for the skeleton to be displayed in the Mutter Museum of the College of Physicians of Philadelphia.

"At the end, he couldn't move anything," said Eastlack's sister, Helen Eastlack Davridge.

His chest constricted by abnormal bone growth, Eastlack died of pneumonia a few days short of his 40th birthday.

His skeleton keeps company with unusual pathological specimens, including a tumor removed from President Grover Cleveland's jaw during a secret operation in 1893 and the connected livers of Siamese twins Chang and Eng.

Eastlack's skeleton is a help to two Philadelphia doctors who began collaborative research in 1989 to find the cause of and a cure for FOP.

Davridge said her brother wanted his body to benefit science and she doesn't mind seeing the skeleton hanging in a museum.

"When a person is dead, he's dead," Davridge said. "I feel if Harry can save one person from the agony he went through, it's worth it."

ribbons, crowding out muscles and bridging joints.

People with FOP may have a normal life span, but typically do not, Kaplan said. They are most threatened by pneumonia or other respiratory problems, due to restricted movement of the chest cavity, and by starvation due to fusion of the jaw.

Even though she can't raise her hands much off her thighs, Orzel insists on doing things for herself. She manipulates arm-length sticks with various clamps on the ends to lift a fork to her mouth, put on eye makeup and paint landscapes.

"If you think I'm going to sit in here and twiddle my thumbs for the rest of my life you're crazy," she said. "I have a lot to do."

Ever since her mother died about 10 years ago, Orzel has lived in a nursing home. Every morning she buzzes down the hall in her wheelchair, delivering mail to earn a little money.

Until recently, most adults with FOP had never met another person with the disorder.

Jeanie Peeper, 33, of Casselberry, Fla., decided to do something about that. She asked Zaslouf, who was then at the National Institutes of Health, for a list of people with FOP so she could write to them.

What developed was a quarterly newsletter and the International FOP Association, incorporated in 1988, with Peeper as president.

The association passes around information, identifies new patients, raises money for research and links the patients with the medical community.

"It was through Peeper that Sara's parents learned of the research project in Philadelphia.

"It was the first indication we had that anyone lived past their 20s," Gillooly said.

"You look at (Sara) now and know that in 10 years she could be in a wheelchair, but there's a lot worse things to have," said his wife.

Nancy and Andy Sando of Pekoskey, Mich., both have FOP and use wheelchairs, but that didn't stop them from getting married or working. They met in 1988 when she was writing letters to help Peeper set up the international association.

"I think you strive harder when you have a lot of obstacles to overcome," said Nancy Sando, 32. "You want to accomplish something in your life."

Survey says hospitals short therapists, others

CHICAGO (AP) — The nation's hospitals report a chronic shortage for physical and occupational therapists, requiring many patients to wait longer for rehabilitative services, a hospital group official said.

Barbara Bloom-Kiehl, director of the American Hospital Association's Human Resources Department, said the shortage is caused by higher demand, due to the country's increasingly older population.

She said limited slots in schools that train therapists will mean continued shortages.

"To compensate, hospitals are restructuring some health care services and promoting greater use of other personnel to perform routine tasks, allowing professional staff to focus on higher-skilled functions," she said.

The vacancy rate in 1991 was 16.6 percent for physical therapists and 14.2 percent for occupational therapists, according to the latest survey of 3,184 hospitals by the Chicago-based AHA.

Physical therapy deals with movement disorders, while occupational therapy focuses on relearning muscular control and coordination to cope with everyday tasks.

Trip to Montana offers perspectives on crime, U.S. history

Note to readers: This is Part One of a two-part tax-deductible investigative humor series.

Dave Barry Humor

Recently my family and I, in an effort to explore this great nation's Western heritage and possibly get eaten by bears, visited Montana.

Montana is a very large Western state located near, or possibly even north of, Canada. Not a lot of people live there. I would estimate that I have two-thirds of the population of the state in the state capital, Helena. The population is so small, in fact, that Montana is about to lose one of its two congresspersons. This works out to a 50 percent reduction in congresspersons. We can only hope that more states decide to take this kind of responsible action.

Another nice thing about Montana is that it has a low crime rate. We spent some time in the state's largest city, Billings, which is about the size of a standard shopping mall, but with less traffic. The night we arrived, the local TV news had a segment called "Crime-toppers," in which they re-enacted a local crime. The crime depicted in this segment was - get ready - carpet theft. I am not making this up. There was a scene of the re-enactors cutting through a chain to get at a roll of carpet, then loading it onto a pickup truck and making their getaway. The announcer, in a grim voice, said that the carpeting was valued at OVER $3,000. We have crime-topper-style shoes in Miami, too, but the crimes are different. Our announcers are always saying things like: "Police found the victim's head in a toilet."

Once you get out of the crime-infested Billings area, Montana mainly consists of homogeneous stretches of beautiful scenery being munched on by cows. Occasionally you come to a small town, usually consisting of a post office and a bar that is in danger of collapsing from the weight of all the animal heads hanging from the walls. For research purposes we went into several of these bars. One of the most striking, decor-wise, was the New Atlas bar in Columbus, Mont., which features a giant wall-mounted herd of deceased animals, including a mutant two-headed sheep, which looks at you with all four eyes as if to say: "Either I have two heads, or you have had a LOT to drink."

Patronizing many Montana bars are actual cowboys wearing actual cowboy hats and dirt-intensified Western-style clothing that was not manufactured by Ralph Lauren. My guess is that if Ralph were to mosey into some of these bars wearing his designer Western wear, he might well get his designer self wedged into a spittoon.

In addition to cowboys, Montana has actual Indians. One of them, a member of the Crow tribe named Henry Real Bird, took us on a tour of the Little Big Horn battlefield, the site of Custer's Last Stand, which in some respects was actually more of a Last Sprint. Henry used to be a rodeo rider, but now he's an administrator for Little Big Horn College, on the Crow reservation. He's also a poet, although he's modest about his literary ability. "I just think in Crow and write it down in English," he said, "and white people think it's poetry."

On a cool but sunny day, we sat on a hill overlooking the battlefield, eating sandwiches and listening to Hank tell us about the battle. As he talked, he tended to swoop, poetically - from subject-to-subject, getting animated, standing up, gesturing, telling us not only what happened to Hank, but also how to smoke an Indian pipe: "how the seven bull buffalo ended up in the Big Dipper, how the water bird mixed the mud and the water to make the Crow people, how come he has four different brands of ties on his 'neck,' why some stones have holes in them, and how he knew a guy who could cast a spell on your IRS return. You had to listen fast to keep up with Hank, and sometimes even then you weren't sure what he meant."

"When you get older," he said, very significantly, "you know what's under the table, and who has the grapes." We'd all nod. Hank said that this summer, when the tourists are there, he plans to stage three re-enactments of the battle.

"We're going to let Custer win one," he said. "THAT should get some publicity."

Nobody knows for certain exactly what happened to Custer in the end. Hank said that one time, in a bar, he met a guy who claimed to have a tape-recording - of Jesse James' granddaddy stating that the International Bankers Association hired Jesse James to kill Custer.

(Are you listening, Oliver Stone?) My own theory is that Custer somehow survived the battle and is now in charge of strategic planning for the Democratic Party.

As we dropped Hank off at Little

Big Horn College, I asked him how he felt about the controversy over sports teams using nicknames like "Redskins."

"I think it shows a lack of perspective," he said. "But I have been pushing to change our team name from 'The Fighting Rams' to 'The Fighting White Farmers.'"

End of Montana Adventure, Part One. Next week in Part Two: Hog the Death Cows.

Dave Barry writes for the Miami Herald.

Woman facing breast cancer by herself is running scared from needed surgery

DEAR ABBY: Your help is needed. There are no friends or family members to whom I can turn. A cancerous lump was found in my breast. I've had medical opinions, read everything I can find on the subject, and have all the facts - and I do not want that breast removed. To know that I may wake up and find that I am only part of a woman scares me to death. I have no support from my husband; he was more concerned when my wisdom teeth were removed.

Dear Abby
Abigail VanBuren

I thought maybe someone from the American Cancer Society could help, but I was told to hurry up and have it done, and worry about the rest later.

How do other women handle that kind of problem? No one knows about this except my husband. I feel that there is no need to worry my family, I really don't want all the unwanted advice I'd get from them. I have been a loner all of my life, and this is the only way I can handle it.

Death is better than surgery. I'm damned if I do, and I'm damned if I don't.

DEATH ROW WOMAN

DEAR WOMAN: Death is not better than surgery! The American Cancer Society CAN help you. Many women live through this kind of ordeal and emerge with flying colors, and you can, too. You may be a candidate for more limited surgery than the "old" radical mastectomy. Call your local American Cancer Society for a referral to a breast cancer specialist. In the meantime, share your feelings with your physician. And please write again and include your name, address and telephone number.

DEAR ABBY: My husband of 25 years walked out and left me with two teen-agers to raise. He said he was in love with a woman he works with. I wondered why he worked all those long hours and never had time for his family. He told me he wanted to be president of the company he worked for, which employed about 25,000. I was very naive. I believed him. Now I know that the real reason was that he was having an affair with his secretary.

After a very emotional time and no self-esteem, I see now that life goes on. My children and I are going to survive after many therapy sessions and the support of friends and family. One thing that helped me during this trying time was one of your columns. The response about the man who has a lady for a wife and will pick up some tramp described my situation perfectly. Please reprint that story to help some other woman whose marriage has ended due to adultery. Thanks for your help.

- A LADY

DEAR LADY: If the item has helped you regain your perspective after your trauma, I am gratified. Here it is:

DEAR ABBY: Why will a married man pick up a tramp and treat her like a lady, then turn around and treat his wife (who is a lady) like a tramp?

- MINNIE

because he feels that by degrading her, he will bring her down to his level. This makes him feel guilty, so to get even with his wife for making him feel guilty, he keeps right on punishing her.

'Midlife' women face health-care crisis, group says

Knight-Ridder News Service
Women in their "midlife" years, from age 45 to 64, are twice as likely as men in the same age group to be without health insurance and to pay more for health coverage when they can get it, an advocacy group for older women says.
"As they reach their 40s and 50s and their links to the workforce weaken, many women find that health insurance becomes a precious and sometimes elusive commodity," said the report, issued by the Older Women's League, an organization formed in 1980 to focus on the social and economic concerns of older women.

"Lack of financial resources, changes in marital status and the inability to obtain decent-paying, full-time work make mid-life women especially vulnerable to a loss of health insurance coverage," it continued.
The report, "Critical Condition: Midlife and Older Women in America's Health Care System," was issued in Washington as a "Mother's Day report," said OWL executive director Joan Kufiansky.
The organization supports a universal health care bill that was introduced by Rep. Martin Russo, D-Ill.

That bill would provide health insurance regardless of a person's age, income, health condition or employment status, said an OWL spokeswoman. The bill also has been backed by Philadelphia's congressional delegation; Bob Borski, Lucien Blackwell, and Tom Engleitza.
Among findings in the new OWL report:
• 72 percent of employed mid-life men and 55 percent of employed mid-life women have health insurance based on their own employment.
• Mid-life women pay more for private insurance.
• Nearly twice as many mid-life and older women as men have health insurance coverage under Medicaid.
• Uninsured African-American women age 50 to 64 have a 35 percent greater chance of dying in the hospital than their insured counterparts. Among white women in this age group, the uninsured were 15 percent more likely than insured women to die in the hospital.
