Court bars prayer at graduation

Knight-Ridder News Service

WASHINGTON — A bitterly divided Supreme Court on Wednesday barred public schools from sponsoring prayers at graduation ceremonies, even when the prayers are non-sectarian and student attendance is voluntary.

Such invocations and benedictions, long common at graduations throughout the nation, violate the basic constitutional principle that "government may not coerce anyone to support or participate in religion," Justice Anthony M. Kennedy wrote for a 5-4 majority.

The decision, announced 30 years after the Supreme Court first outlawed prayer in public school classrooms, was a surprising victory from a conservative court for supporters of separation of church and state.

It was also a disappointing defeat for the Bush administration, conservatives and religious groups eager to expand the role of religion in public life.

President Bush said, "The court has Ruling clears way for lawsuits seeking damages in smoker deaths

Knight-Ridder News Service

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court Wednesday cleared the way for lawsuits that attempt to make cigarette companies pay for the injuries and deaths of smokers.

The court's long-awaited 7-2 decision makes clear that people who want to sue cigarette companies can do so under varying state personal-injury laws.

Whether such suits are barred by federal law was the key dispute in the case of a 58-year-old New Jersey woman who died in 1984 after smoking for 42 years.

Lawyers for the family of the late Rose Cipollone of Little Ferry, N.J., and anti-smoking forces claimed victory. But so did tobacco industry officials who claimed the split decision favored them. Even so, tobacco stocks dipped after the ruling.

On the industry's side, the court ruled that suits cannot be based on claims that mean that religious belief and religious expression are too precious to be either proscribed (banned) or prescribed by the state," Kennedy declared.

Scalia responded in an unusually caustic dissent: "It is a bold step for this court to seek to banish ... from thousands of ... celebrations throughout this land the expression of gratitude to God that a majority of the community wishes to make."

The Bush administration had urged, but did not get, a relaxation of the court's strict legal standard that would have made it easier for judges to uphold government-sponsored prayer, nativity scenes on government property and government aid to religious schools.

Still, the court remains likely to permit greater government accommodation of religion in the future, said University of Chicago law professor Michael McConnell.

Atwood project lands Wilson-Bates, Comfort Inn

By Craig Lincoln
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A Twin Falls-based appliance retailer and national motel chain have announced plans to locate in a new shopping, commercial and residential development on the Snake River Canyon rim west of the Magic Valley Mall.

Wilson-Bates Appliance Stores and Comfort Inn will be part of the development, now under construction.

Wilson-Bates President Rick White confirmed widespread speculation Wednesday that he will move to the new location, anchoring one end of a shopping center with a 50,000-square-foot store. White is one of the principal financiers of the project.

White said the company will keep its office, service and shipping operations in its downtown Twin Falls location, and will have some retail there too.

The first building to go up on the approximately 70 acres of land that will be the site of the shopping center will be Comfort Inn. The motel chain plans to be open by the end of the year.

A South Dakota company joined forces with local investors to build the motel, which will be a franchise with the national chain, said Kerry W.

Boelkeheide. He is one of the principals in South Dakota-based Summit Group, the company building the motel.

Developer LeRoy Atwood of Caldwell is spearheading the development. The land was purchased by a group of local investors.

Several small changes in the project have occurred since it was unveiled late last year.

Congress delays rail strike action

The Associated Press

Area Impact — B1

WASHINGTON — Congress signaled a willingness Wednesday to let a coast-to-coast shutdown of the nation's freight railroads run at least two days before taking any action to stop it.

Lawmakers rejected the Bush administration's call for immediate legislation to stop the strike by the Machinists union against CSX Corp. and the railroad industry's ensuing nationwide shutdown.

"We have a crisis right now, the trains are not running," Transportation Secretary Andrew Card told the House Energy and Commerce Committee's transportation subcommittee. "Congress must act today."

But with Amtrak passenger trains still running between Washington and Boston and both sides still negotiating, key congressmen were taking a wait-and-see approach, at least for a day or so.

"The parties are still negotiating," said Energy and Commerce Chairman John Dingell, D-Mich. "The minute we pass legislation, they would probably quit negotiating."

bolstering that view, some said, was the decision by the executives of 38 other freight railroads to shut down and lock out nearly 250,000 union workers in response to the targeted strike by 1,500 Machinists against Jacksonville, Fla.-based CSX.

"My fear is that we have a contrived national crisis," said Rep. Dennis Eckart, D-Ohio.

Republicans on the subcommittee as well contrasted the current shutdown to one in April 1991 that Congress stopped after only 17 hours.

"While this strike doesn't appear to have the same national scope it did last year, its impact is still significant," said Rep. Don Ritter of Pennsylvania.

Congressional sources speaking on condition of anonymity said the subcommittee and Dingell's committee could meet Thursday to draft a bill for a back-to-work cooling-off period or for a settlement.

In the Senate, the Labor and Human Resources Committee chaired by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., also was taking a wait-and-see approach.

Head injuries fatal to dismembered man

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News writer

SHOSHONE — The man whose dismembered body was found stuffed into garbage bags near a remote Lincoln County road Monday night died of severe blows to the head, the Lincoln County coroner said Wednesday.

An autopsy performed Tuesday afternoon revealed those head injuries were caused by a blunt instrument, but authorities don't know much more about the man, Lincoln County

Coroner Francis Bergin said.

Fingerprints sent to the state crime laboratory in Boise still had not produced any clues to the man's identity late Wednesday, Bergin said. Lincoln County Sheriff Sieve Southwick released a few more details about the body, which was found alongside the Kimama-Carey Road. It was that of a white man, between 50 and 60 years old and weighing 200 to 250 pounds. He had brown eyes and short, thin brown hair, Southwick said.

The man wore a green and tan plaid shirt and blue pants, the sheriff said.

"I have gut feeling he may have been camping, fishing or prospecting — something like that," Southwick said. "He could have been a transient camping out somewhere."

That hunch is based on evidence that the sheriff said he could not release.

The man had been dead from one to three days when found, so "he could have been killed along the Mississippi River for all we know," Southwick said.

Eye tests save lives, study finds

The Associated Press

BOSTON — Requiring older drivers to have their vision checked when they reapply for licenses appears to reduce the number of fatal crashes, a study shows.

Researchers from the U.S. Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta found that people over age 65 are significantly less likely to be involved in fatal accidents in states that require such testing.

The study found that in states with elderly testing, people over age 65 had 10 percent fewer fatal accidents than did drivers ages 45 to 65. In states without testing, they had 2 percent more.

The difference was especially apparent for the oldest drivers. Among those over age 85, drivers in states with testing had 45 percent fewer accidents than the 45 to 65 group, while in states without testing, they had 6 percent fewer accidents.

"It appears that vision testing in older drivers provides some protection against being involved in fatal crashes," said Dr. David E. Nelson, who directed the study.

Vision difficulties are especially common among the elderly because of cataracts and other eye problems. Most states require periodic eye tests for older drivers renewing their licenses, although at least nine do not.

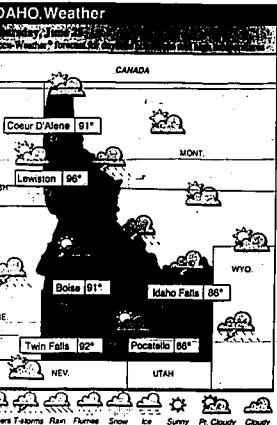

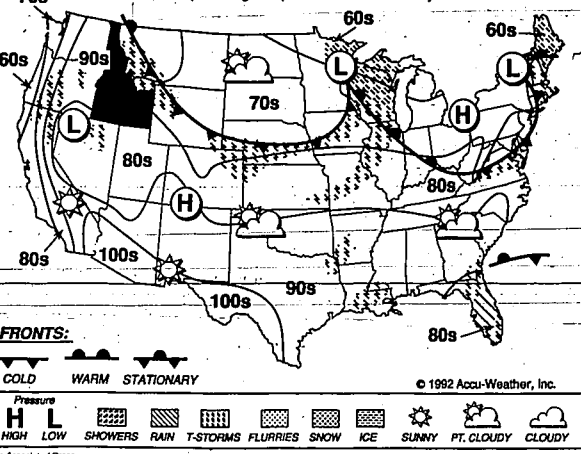

The study, published as a letter in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine, was based on a review of all the accidents between 1986 and 1988 in 20 states.

Most fatal accidents involve younger drivers. Elderly drivers tend to be on the roads less. However, the number of crashes per million miles driven increases substantially for those over 65.

Weather summary

Afternoon heat sent temperatures into the high 90s and low 100s over Idaho Wednesday, but clouds broke the impact of the sun and produced a few showers.

The showers were generally light with mostly traces of rainfall reported. A few lightning strikes were reported across the Magic Valley.

Heavy thundershowers over the Owyhee Mountains produced over an inch of rain in a short time about 4 p.m. along with a flash flood warning for the Jordan Creek area.

The hottest temperature in the state Wednesday was 107 degrees at Weiser. Stanley reported the coolest at 41 degrees.

Elsewhere in the nation Wednesday, the highest temperature was 112 degrees at Gila Bend, Ariz. The lowest was 39 degrees at Marquette, Mich.

Thunderstorms rumble across much of nation

The Associated Press

Thunderstorms struck much of the United States on Wednesday, bringing hail to parts of the Midwest and rain to most of the Atlantic Coast and Pacific Northwest.

A heat wave also sent temperatures soaring in the West.

In the Midwest, heavy thundershowers formed along a low-moving cold front that lumbered across northeastern Kansas and northwest Missouri.

Hail the size of golf balls struck Topeka, Kan., and high winds in Overbrook, Kan., blew down power lines. A tornado watch was issued for much of central and southeast Kansas. Storms with the same front brought hail to parts of Nebraska and rain to Iowa.

Another cold front crossing the Great Lakes brought scattered showers to much of the East Coast, including parts of Vermont, Connecticut, Delaware, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia, as well as parts of Ohio, Kentucky and Indiana.

Farther south, a tropical disturbance in the northwest Caribbean brought heavy rain late Tuesday and early Wednesday to Florida. Up to 10 inches of rain deluged west-central Florida's Manatee County on Tuesday and Wednesday.

Isolated showers and thundershowers also dotted the Gulf Coast states Wednesday afternoon, and thundershowers in the Pacific Northwest prompted officials to issue flood warnings for much of southern Oregon.

Prayer

a leading expert on the Constitution's religion clauses.

He noted that the court's decision was limited to public schools.

The case began in June 1989, when Daniel Weisman of Providence, R.I., challenged a school official's inclusion of a rabbi's non-sectarian prayers in middle school graduation ceremonies attended by his 14-year-old daughter, Deborah.

Rabbi Leslie Gutterman asked God's blessing, gave thanks to God for "allowing us to reach this special, happy occasion" and concluded with "Amen."

Weisman, a Rhode Island College professor who practices Judaism that opposes all forms of school prayers in public schools, sought to block prayers at Deborah's future high school graduation and won two lower-court rulings before reaching the Supreme Court.

Kennedy acknowledged that the rabbi's non-denominational prayer was "more acceptable than one which, for example, makes explicit references to the God of Israel, or to Jesus Christ, or to a patron saint."

But religious worship must be kept in the private sphere, because, when government is involved, "what might begin as a tolerant expression of religious views may end in a policy to indoctrinate and coerce," Kennedy said.

cigarette advertising failed to warn of the dangers of smoking, a decision Philip Morris called "a significant victory."

But the court also ruled that people are free to press claims alleging that the tobacco companies made fraudulent or inaccurate statements in their advertising, or that the companies conspired to mislead people about health hazards.

Those are the issues that make juries more likely to rule in favor of plaintiffs, said Alan B. Morrison, director of litigation for Public Citizen, a consumer advocacy group.

There are three smokers on the Supreme Court: Clarence Thomas, who smokes cigars, Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist smokes cigarettes and Antonin Scalia smokes cigarettes and a pipe.

In a dissenting opinion, Scalia and Thomas argued that the tobacco suits are barred by the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act.

Morrison called the decision more favorable to consumers than to the industry.

Dismember

Because his department is small, Southwick said investigators from Minidoka County and the state are helping the investigation.

The body, which was cut neatly into 12 to 14 pieces with a sharp instrument, is being kept in cold storage unit at the Hansen Mortuary in Rupert, Bergin said.

"We obviously can't begin looking for family members until we get a name," he said.

The man who found the seven garbage bags containing the body alongside a dirt road north of Kimama Monday evening said Wednesday that his heart began pounding and he stood back in disbelief when he discovered the body.

The man spoke only on the condition that his name not be used, saying he fears for his safety.

It is not unusual for people living in the desert in eastern Lincoln County to find trash dumped by people unwilling to pay the $3 fee to enter the Minidoka County Landfill, the man said.

So when he spotted the trash bags, "I kicked it in anger, and it squashed," the man said.

Thinking that someone had dumped an antelope carcass, the man said he ripped open a first-sized hole in the bag to see if it was a doe or a buck before reporting it to the Idaho Department of Fish and Game.

But the hole exposed the side of a human head and ear.

"It really took me by surprise," the man said.

The man stood up and looked around to see if anyone else was nearby.

Then he walked back to his bicycle on the road, still not quite believing what he had found. The man said he then returned to the bag and peeked in the hole again, "then I got back on my bike and huffed and puffed for home."

The man confirmed what Bergin said earlier about a clear set of tire tracks that came from the north — in the direction of Carey — to the site where the bags were dumped, then turned around and returned north.

The bags were found less than a mile north of Kimama.

More than the death of the anonymous man, the fellow who found the body said he is upset at the thought of family members somewhere wondering about the fate of their loved one.

"That man, I'm sure has kids somewhere, or a wife, or maybe a brother," he said.

The shopping center won't be anchored by a 110,000-square-foot Wal-Mart store. Instead, that space on the east of the strip mall probably will be a 69,000-square-foot retailer.

Although negotiations are under way with a few national chains, no deal has been struck.

Three smaller retailers have signed commitments for retail space, said Steve Keim of Gem State Realty's Commercial Brokerage Division. Keim and Jane George of Gem State are marketing the property.

Developers hope to put a movie theatre with six screens in the mall.

The strip of land west of the shopping center has been sold to Village West Developers of Nampa. Commercial office space is planned for the strip.

The development is located northwest of the Pole Line Road-Blue Lakes Boulevard North intersection. On the corner closest to the intersection will be a shopping center, the Comfort Inn, an office building and a restaurant. A residential area will be built on the canyon rim and commercial buildings will be on the west along Pole Line Road.

Senator says 133 POWs might have been left in Vietnam

WASHINGTON (AP) — As many as 133 U.S. servicemen may have been left behind in captivity when the Vietnam War ended, the chairman of the Senate's POW-MIA committee said Wednesday, citing recently declassified government documents.

He also accused the Pentagon of misleading families about the fate of servicemen lost on covert operations in neighboring Southeast Asian countries.

"The information available to the committee does constitute evidence that some Americans remained alive in Indochina after Operation Homecoming" in 1973, said Sen. John Kerry, D-Miss., at the start of hearings on the emotional issue. "We cannot prove they were alive," he acknowledged.

Retired Air Force Gen. Eugene Tighe, a former Pentagon intelligence chief, told the panel that based on U.S. information he was convinced that prisoners were left behind.

At the time of the peace talks to end the war, Tighe said, he was shocked by the North Vietnamese list of American prisoners to be more names, he said.

Tighe and retired Adm. Thomas Moorer, former chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said Wednesday they do not believe the United States government was involved in a conspiracy on the issue. At the Senate hearing, Kerry focused on a senior Pentagon official's statement on April 13, 1973, that the Defense Department had no indication of any Americans alive in Southeast Asia. The date was less than two weeks after the return of what were supposed to be the last U.S. prisoners in Operation Homecoming.

"Some people. Yes," agreed Trowbridge, deputy director for the special office on POW-MIA Affairs.

He said the DIA listed 115 Americans as prisoners of war who did not return in 1973, but added that many of the names "were heard from another prisoner. Some were written on the walls. Nobody actually saw the prisoners."

The Pentagon says it has no conclusive evidence of POWs being alive after 1973. Kerry also contended at the hearing's start that the government deliberately misinformed families about the circumstances surrounding the disappearance of some military personnel.

"For years during the war, the location of POWs for those involved in covert operations in Cambodia and Laos was intentionally falsified, meaning that erroneous information was provided to families and inserted into files," the senator said.

The committee received a recently declassified Defense Department document stating that information was withheld from families on secret excursions that took place in Laos and Cambodia and false data was placed in personnel files.

Perot denounces 'dirty tricks' of GOP, denies investigations

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — Ross Perot accused the "dirty tricks crowd" in the Republican Party Wednesday of trying to sabotage his unannounced presidential candidacy.

Further, he said he had been wrongly accused of making frequent use of private investigators.

"There's been a 90-day effort to redefine my personality," the Texas billionaire said at a nationally televised news conference. "I do not spend my time investigating other people."

Asked specifically about investigating President Bush's children, he said, "I never spent a minute. I never spent a second. I never spent a nickel."

Perot spoke after delivering petitions to elections officials in Maryland to place his name on the November ballot. He already has qualified for the ballot in 16 states, and his supporters say they have sufficient signatures for seven more.

The polls indicate his unannounced presidential candidacy is fully competitive with Bush, and running ahead of Democrat Bill Clinton.

Perot and his Texas twang were combative, evasive and glib during turns as he spent nearly an hour fielding questions at a news conference televised live by Cable News Network.

He sidestepped questions about permitting female Navy pilots into combat, his own voter registration and support for his proposed superconducting super collider.

Asked whether the recent political combat had dimmed his interest in a campaign, he laughed. "You guys don't know what touch is," he said. "This is Mickey Mouse tossed salad."

Articles last week in The Washington Post, Time magazine and the New Republic reported that Perot had hired private investigators to look into the lives of people with whom he disagreed and even to keep watch over his own children.

The Post said he had investigated Bush, and in 1986 had told the then-vice president that two of Bush's four sons were said to be involved in improper activities. Bush said on Monday "there's something not very pleasant" about Perot's dealings. He added, "If he was having my children investigated, that is beyond the pale."

Administration and GOP officials have attacked Perot in recent weeks, trying to raise doubts about his commitment to constitutional rights as a means of undermining his political support.

And White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Perot's charge that Republicans were resorting to dirty tricks was "nonsense.... Mr. Perot's paranoia knows no bounds."

"There was no doubting the intensity of the political brawl under way."

Asked about the Washington Post story, Perot said he had once come across information that raised questions about one of Bush's sons and brought it to Bush's attention "private to private."

Ross Perot meets with Uncle Sam, portrayed by Ed Grunwald, during Perot's campaign at the Annapolis City Dock Wednesday.

'I do not spend my time investigating other people.'

Ross Perot

He called the furor over his alleged use of investigators "animal crackers" and said of GOP political operatives, "They're generally known as the dirty tricks crowd."

It was Perot's second attempt of the day to take the offensive against his critics. Interviewed on NBC's "Today" show, he said he was "not running around like Sherlock Holmes."

Perot was asked about a handful of other issues, and avoided definitive answers to at least two questions:

Asked whether he would support the super collider, a costly scientific installation the House voted last week to kill, he said it was a "fair question" that he needed to study.

Asked whether he favors permitting women pilots in combat, he delivered a lengthy denunciation of the sexual harassment and assault suffered by some women at a highly publicized meeting of naval pilots.

Asked his political affiliation, Perot said he is an political independent. He said he wasn't registered as an independent because that's not permitted in Texas. "I have voted a split ticket for years," he said.

Asked when he intends to make a formal announcement of his candidacy, Perot said he wasn't ready. His supporters still are collecting ballot petitions in some states, he said.

The news conference amounted to a rare question-and-answer session with the Texas billionaire, who announced on the Larry King show in February that he might seek the White House if people showed enough interest.

In the "Today" interview, Perot did confirm a Washington Post account that he hired a Washington law firm in 1987 to look into a Texas land deal that resulted in a $48 million tax deduction for Pennzoil, a company run by J. Hugh Liedtke, a former Bush business partner.

But he denied that he began the probe to look for dirt on Bush. And he denied the newspaper's account that he volunteered the results of the investigation.

"They came to see me and asked about this transaction ... and asked to see the documents," he said. Perot went through other reported instances where he was alleged to have initiated or financed probes in Bush's activities or into personal lives and business transactions of those close to him, dismissing them all as part of the same purported GOP smear campaign.

Panel OKs tighter mining regulations

WASHINGTON (AP) — A key House committee voted Wednesday to impose tougher environmental requirements on the mining industry and tighten rules that have allowed speculators to buy federal mining land for as little as $2.50 an acre.

The legislation, approved by the House Interior Committee by a 26-19 vote, would be the first overhaul of a 120-year-old mining law that critics charge has long been outdated and has generated windfall profits for speculators and mining interests.

The measure would impose higher fees on those holding mining rights and require the mining companies, largely in the West, to restore land damaged while digging for hydrocarbon minerals such as gold, silver and copper.

The legislation was sharply criticized by lawmakers from western mining states, who said it would drive mining companies overseas. "This bill could kill an entire industry, destroy thousands of jobs," complained Rep. Ron Marlene, R-Mont.

The legislation would overhaul the 1872 mining law, which sought to promote mineral exploration and development by making federal land cheaply available for mining.

IMF to provide Russia with big loan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Russia, scrambling for Western assistance to prop up its ailing economy, will soon receive an initial $1 billion loan from the International Monetary Fund, IMF and Bush administration sources said Wednesday.

The money most likely will be approved within the next 10 days even though Russia has yet to receive full approval from the IMF for its economic reform program, officials said. Both IMF and Bush administration officials said Russia and the international lending agency were exploring ways to speed up the delivery of Western assistance given the urgent plight of the Russian economy.

Normally, a country is not allowed to borrow until the IMF has given approval of its plans to foster a free-market economy. However, negotiations between Russia and the IMF have hit snags with Russian officials complaining that the IMF has been making excessive demands and has failed to recognize the unique problems Russia faces as it tries to introduce democratic government at the same time it is reforming its economy.

In an effort to overcome the negotiating delays, both sides are looking at a little-used IMF provision that allows a country to draw down up to 25 percent of its allotted borrowing resources without a fully approved IMF program.

U.S. official: Saddam might be overthrown

WASHINGTON (AP) — Iraqi President Saddam Hussein has heavily bolstered his personal security and might be ousted suddenly, the U.S. State Department's senior official for the region told Congress on Wednesday.

"One cannot predict when he might be toppled. Indeed, it might come suddenly," Assistant Secretary of State Edward Djerejian said during a sharp exchange with congressmen at a public hearing on the Middle East.

Democrats of the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee repeatedly asked Djerejian if he agreed with recent published reports that Saddam and his regime have strengthened Iraq's infrastructure, economy and military since its defeat by U.S.-led forces in the 1991 Gulf War.

The reports also said the U.S. intelligence community regards Saddam as firmly in control and recommends against providing military aid to dissident groups.

"The bottom line, what we consider most important," Djerejian said, is that Saddam "is far weaker than before the liberation of Kuwait ... the military threat is significantly reduced."

Bush offers scholarship bill for poor, middle-income students

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush will make a new push for school choice today when he unveils a bill providing $1,000 scholarships for poor and middle-income children in public or private schools, officials said Wednesday.

The proposed "GI Bill for Children" would allow states, cities or school districts to compete for $500 million in Education Department funds to provide scholarships for up to 500,000 students.

The grants could be spent on tuition at public, private or religious schools. Some public schools charge tuition to pupils who live outside the schools' districts.

Bush has championed the idea of choice as a way to force substantial improvements on schools. But the idea of making public and private schools compete for the same dollars is anathema to most of the public school establishment and the Democrats who control Congress.

Congress has spurned most of Bush's previous school proposals. The Senate last January rejected a more modest Bush plan to provide $30 million for school-choice demonstration projects.

Bush told Congress in his fiscal 1993 budget that he would seek $500 million for a wider school-choice program, but until now he has not sent up legislation to implement it.

Albert Shanker, president of the American Federation of Teachers and a foe of federal aid to private or parochial schools, said, "I'm sure it won't go anywhere. ... It has to be viewed more as an election play than as a real piece of legislation."

Shanker added, "There's not much you can buy in education for $1,000 a year." The federal funds would primarily help those parents "who've got some additional money of their own to add to the government voucher," he said.

Some Democrats, including likely presidential candidate Bill Clinton, support giving parents wider choice over which public school their child attends, but oppose vouchers for private or parochial schools.

Bush himself has likened it to the GI Bill benefits that helped pay his way to Yale University, a private college, after World War II.

"We must open a new world of educational opportunity for America's children and give middle- and low-income families more of the same choice of all schools that wealthier families already have," Bush said in a speech Tuesday.

He said his new plan "will do just that: It's a GI bill for America's children."

An administration official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said states, cities or school districts could apply for grants to run their own school-choice programs under their own rules. To qualify, families could not earn more than the state or national median income.

But all of the arrangements would have to allow the federal funds to be used at public, private or religious schools, the source said.

Libya's offer on suspects falls short

WASHINGTON (AP) — Libya's offer to turn over two bombing suspects to the Arab League or the United Nations falls far short of what the U.N. Security Council demanded, the State Department said Wednesday.

Spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler recalled that the council required that the two be turned over for trial either in Scotland or in the United States. Pan Am Flight 103 came exploded over Lockerbie, Scotland, in 1988, on its way to the United States.

"Libya has made numerous previous proposals and public statements on this matter, all of which fall far short of compliance with relevant United Nations Security Council resolutions, the latest being that the Libyan Congress declared that the two Pan Am bombing suspects could be delivered for trial in a just and fair court under the auspices of the Arab League or the United Nations," she said.

Senate halts nationwide thrift branches

WASHINGTON — The Senate voted Wednesday to prohibit temporarily most thrift institutions from opening branches nationwide. The legislation would block a practice that supporters say would help the industry cope with troubled times by clamping a 15-month moratorium on Bush administration regulations that took effect in early May. Those rules allow financially healthy, federally chartered savings and loan institutions to open branches, or purchase other thrifts outside their home states, practices that had been restricted by the states. The Senate adopted the provision on a voice vote after a move to kill it was defeated 82-15. It was added as an amendment to legislation dealing with federally backed mortgages.

Big-ticket orders dropped last month

WASHINGTON — The government reported Wednesday that new orders for big-ticket manufactured goods fell last month, emphasizing the long climb still ahead for the fledgling economic recovery.

Durable goods

Orders for durable goods made to last three or more years, items from toasters to turbines, fell 2.4 percent in May to a seasonally adjusted $119.5 billion, the Commerce Department said. It was the sharpest drop in five months.

Overall orders were pulled down by a 6.2 percent plunge to $30.9 billion in the volatile transportation category, which had been up strongly in April and March. Orders for military goods, another volatile sector, fell 27.7 percent to $5.87 billion.

Orders fell 0.6 percent for primary metals such as steel, 0.9 percent for industrial machinery and equipment and 1.3 percent for electrical equipment.

Excluding transportation, overall orders fell 0.6 percent. Excluding defense, they fell 0.6 percent.

However, there was strength in one key segment, non-defense capital goods, which rose 1.4 percent. That's a barometer of business investment plans that should enhance productivity and economic growth in the future.

Shipments of durable goods in May rose 1 percent to $122.3 billion. In a bad sign for future employment, the backlog of unfilled durable goods orders in May fell 0.6 percent to $470.3 billion. It was the ninth consecutive monthly drop and an indication factories were having little trouble keeping up with new orders.

Gotti settles in at federal penitentiary

MARION, Ill. — Mob boss John Gotti is the new guy on a block at the federal penitentiary, home to prison guard killers, escape artists and spies — inmates no other prisons are equipped to handle. Gotti, sentenced Tuesday to life in prison for racketeering, arrived at the nation's most secure federal prison Wednesday morning, prison spokesman Fred Apple said. No decision had been made yet on where Gotti will stay at Marion, he said.

U.S. Bureau of Prisons spokesman Daniel Dunne said Marion, built for 350 to 375 prisoners, now has 332 inmates, of whom 117 are state convicts too dangerous to be kept in state prisons, Dunne said.

Oakland chokes restaurant smoking

OAKLAND, Calif. — In two years, every restaurant in Oakland will be a no-smoking zone. The City Council, heeding warnings about the danger of second-hand smoke, voted 5-4 Tuesday night to forbid smoking in all sections of restaurants by August 1994. Oakland is the largest city in California to approve a total ban. Current law requires restaurants reserve 40 percent of their seats for non-smokers.

Spy firm aids U.S. publisher

WASHINGTON (AP) — Russia's spy agency will provide a major U.S. publisher with secret KGB documents as the basis for five books about some of the most enduring mysteries of the Cold War, both sides announced Wednesday. "We're about to step through the looking glass," said Timothy Naftalin, a Harvard University scholar who will serve as an adviser on the project. Crown Publishing Group will pay the Russian Intelligence Service, an unspecified sum of money to underwrite the project, which will require researchers to sift through 75 years of files.

In addition, Crown will share the profits from the books which will be published over the next 10 years, company officials said at a news conference announcing the agreement.

The books will focus on the 1961 Berlin crisis, the 1962 Cuban missile crisis, Soviet intelligence operations in the United States and Soviet penetration of British intelligence.

"The purpose is to contribute to the writing of a more accurate history," said Oleg Tsarev, a former spokesman for the KGB.

He said among the files that might be opened for the project is that of John Walker, the U.S. Navy communications specialist arrested in 1985 after spying for the Soviets for 15 years.

Tsarev, along with British intelligence historian John Costello, has been writing a book that served as the pilot for the project, about the life of Alexander Orlov, the Soviet's highest-ranking defector.

Orlov, who was the head of Soviet intelligence in Spain, defected in 1938 after recruiting such celebrated British agents as Kim Philby. Orlov died in 1973.

Costello said that in his research he had been granted access to materials from the late 1960s and from one 1973 operation.

But Yuri Koboladze, director of the RIS public affairs office, indicated most of the files that would be declassified would be older ones dating to the 1930s and 1950s. He also stressed that the agency would not reveal the names of living Soviet agents.

"We guarantee we'll supply authentic materials never published before," he said.

But Ray Cline, a former deputy director of the CIA and also a project consultant, cautioned that much sensitive material would remain secret and that it would take many years to search the voluminous files.

Fetal tissue bill override fails

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Wednesday failed to override President Bush's veto of a bill that would have ended his ban on the research use of tissue from aborted fetuses, giving the president his 30th victory without a loss in veto fights.

Supporters of the legislation, a $5.4 billion medical research package, said they would redraft it to accommodate some of the president's objections. The House vote of 271 to 156 was more than a dozen votes short of the two-thirds needed to override the veto.

Bush, in his message to Congress, said the legislation was too costly and money would be spent on "research that many Americans find morally repugnant." Medical research using fetal tissue had "potential for promoting and legitimizing abortion," he said.

Bush said enough fetal tissue was available from sources other than elective abortions.

But supporters of the bill disputed that, and said Bush's ban would cripple efforts to help millions of people suffering from Alzheimer's disease, Parkinson's disease, diabetes and spinal cord injuries.

It would "hamstring our nation's researchers because of unfounded fears and political games," said Rep. Fred Upton, R-Mich.

Immediately after Wednesday's vote, Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., chairman of the House health subcommittee, introduced a new health-research bill which he said addressed some of the president's concerns.

On the issue of fetal tissue, Waxman would require all researchers to get their material from the fetal tissue bank proposed by the president. However, if those supplies proved inadequate, they would be free to find other sources.

Chefs prod Congress for inspections

NEW YORK (AP) — Some top chefs are on the road doing what they do best to help persuade Congress to establish a mandatory, seafood inspection program.

The Senate Commerce Committee has scheduled a hearing Tuesday on an inspection bill, which is supported by some consumer organizations and a group of 300 cooks organized by the advocacy group Public Voice as CHEFS, Chefs Helping to Enhance Food Safety.

On Tuesday, Jean-Louis Palladin of Jean-Louis at The Watergate in Washington, D.C., Jean-Francois Taquet of Restaurant Taquet in Wayne, Pa., and Jean-Michel Berguignon of Restaurant Raphael in New York cooked an all-seafood dinner at the James Beard House to make their point about seafood safety.

Other dinners are planned in Washington and San Francisco.

Georgia
coup bid
stymied

TBILISI, Georgia (AP) — Government troops crushed a coup attempt Wednesday by supporters of ousted President Zviad Gamsakhurdia, driving the rebels from a broadcasting center they had seized.

At least two rebels were killed and 27 wounded in the assault on the broadcasting center and a transmission tower by troops loyal to Georgian leader Eduard Shevardnadze, said the press office of Georgia's ruling State Council.

The government initially put the number of deaths at 40, then at 30. It gave no explanation for revising the figure down to two.

The coup attempt was the boldest action by Gamsakhurdia's supporters against the 3-month-old government of Shevardnadze—the former Soviet foreign minister. He returned to lead his native land in the Caucasus Mountains after Gamsakhurdia was driven from office in January by a coalition of intellectuals and democrats who accused the president of becoming a dictator.

Shevardnadze said the coup plotters had hoped to take advantage of his scheduled trip to Russia to meet with President Boris Yeltsin to discuss a "bloody ethnic dispute" troubling the former Soviet republics.

But Shevardnadze was not deterred; after the rebels were driven from the state's television and radio centers, he flew to the Black Sea resort of Dagomys, where he and Yeltsin agreed to a cease-fire in the ethnic fighting.

"Now everything's OK, but it was bad," Shevardnadze said upon arriving in Dagomys.

Dzhaba Ioseliani, a member of the State Council, called the coup attempt "insane actions of a bunch of scoundrels," according to the Interfax news agency.

In Washington, the State Department described the situation as a crisis. Spokeswoman Margaret D. Tutwiler reiterated U.S. support for Shevardnadze's ruling council even though it was not elected.

"To put it into shorthand, all factions in Georgia participated in asking for Chairman Shevardnadze to come back" when Gamsakhurdia was overthrown, she said, and Washington supports his "efforts to bring democracy and free markets to Georgia."

up penned in on beach

ADEN, Yemen (AP) — The last of 3,300 refugees who survived on a ship they hijacked to escape war and famine in Somalia were ferried ashore by small boats Wednesday and penned up on a beach by Yemeni troops.

U.N. officials said at least 149 refugees died from hunger, thirst or heat exhaustion. An unknown number drowned trying to swim ashore Monday after the ship grounded about 150 yards offshore in an attempt to run up on the beach.

About 1,000 people made it to shore Monday, and boats began carrying the rest to shore around midnight Tuesday after Yemeni officials made it to international pressure to accept the refugees.

Despite their ordeal, the Somalis calmly waited in a fenced area erected by Yemeni soldiers on the beach. Some used seawater to wash naked children. White sheets were spread over the fence as shelter from the wind.

U.N. officials said they flew in relief supplies and about 1,000 tents but the aid had not reached the encampment.

The refugees seized the small cargo ship on June 5 in Somalia's capital, Mogadishu, and forced the captain to sail to Aden. But Yemeni officials refused to allow the ship to dock, citing the 50,000 other Somalis already being cared for in this poor nation on the southwestern corner of the Arabian peninsula.

WHO cites bettering of contraception

GENEVA (AP) — Sexual intercourse occurs more than 100 million times daily, resulting in nearly 1 million conceptions and about 350,000 cases of sexually transmitted diseases, the World Health Organization said Wednesday.

About 150,000 unwanted pregnancies end every day in abortion, the U.N. health agency said. On average, one woman dies each minute worldwide because of complications during pregnancy or childbirth.

But the agency's report, "Reproductive Health, a Key to a Brighter Future," said access to contraception has increased rapidly in the past few decades, giving women more control over their bodies and their lives.

"Without fertility regulation, women's rights are mere words," the report said, "A woman who has no control over her fertility cannot complete her education, cannot maintain gainful employment ... and has very few real choices open to her."

The report says about 381 million people used contraception in Third World countries in 1985-90, up from only 31 million in 1960-65. The biggest rise has been in east Asia, where contraceptive use is higher than in industrialized nations.

WHO says couples in industrialized nations use contraception in about 70 percent of all sexual acts.

Women in developing countries had on average 3.9 children in 1985-90 compared with 6.1 in 1965-70, WHO says.

Yugoslav president rallies Serbs to unite against foreign powers

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — In response to rising criticism at home and abroad, Yugoslavia's president urged the country Wednesday to unite against unspecified foreign powers.

The comments by President Dobrica Cosic, a Serb, appeared aimed at rallying Serbs and to be a rebuff to stinging comments by U.S. Secretary of State James A. Baker III.

On Wednesday, the White House announced Bush will no longer recognize the ambassador of the truncated Yugoslavia — only two of the six republics, Serbia and Montenegro, remain in the federation — and has ordered its consulate in Chicago closed.

The United States blames Yugoslavia for continuing violence in Bosnia-Herzegovina, one of the four former Yugoslav republics that have gained independence since a year ago.

The others are Croatia, Slovenia and Macedonia. Meanwhile, a U.N. convoy carrying food and medical supplies arrived in the Bosnian capital of Sarajevo, parts of which were set ablaze in a night of shelling and machine gun fire. Artillery and the crackle of small-arms fire was heard throughout the day.

Earlier, battles were reported in the western suburb of Dobrinja near the airport, which the U.N. has been trying to open for relief flights. But Bosnian officials said late Wednesday that the overall violence was at its lowest level in more than a week.

The U.N. convoy of 28 trucks and eight smaller vehicles took almost 30 hours for the journey from Belgrade.

The warring sides so far have failed to observe any cease-fire, a precondition for the United Nations to take control of the Sarajevo airport. Cosic on Wednesday rejected growing demands for the resignation of his ally, Slobodan Milosevic, the president of Serbia.

"We must be aware that in addition to many internal problems and weaknesses, foreign powers are advancing," Cosic told a group of doctors.

"They are using all of our weaknesses, and in fact the goal is not a personal capitulation — they want our national capitulation. Our country has been attacked in a worse way than in 1914 or 1941," he said.

Reference to those two years in which Serbs were attacked in world wars was intended to rally their patriotism and unity.

Dropping interest rates help market mark slight gain

The Associated Press
NEW YORK — The stock market managed to post some scattered gains for the second straight session Wednesday, benefiting from a decline in interest rates.

declines on the New York Stock Exchange, with 867 up, 820 down and 570 unchanged.

The Commerce Department reported that new factory orders for durable goods unexpectedly fell 2.4 percent in May, in contrast to the fractional increase analysts had been projecting.

Analysts said the report aggravated worries that forthcoming corporate earnings reports for the second quarter of the won't be as upbeat as had earlier been presumed. At the same time, however, the latest data helped push interest rates lower in the credit markets. Prices of long-term Treasury bonds rose slightly, lowering their yields to around 7.83 percent.

Philip Morris rose 1/4 to 73 1/2; RJR Nabisco dropped 1/2 to 54, and American Brands was down 1/4 at 45 1/2, all in active trading, after the Supreme Court ruled that ailing smokers may sue tobacco companies under state laws.

The Wall Street Journal reported on recent insider buying of the stock. Stride Rite tumbled 4 1/4 to 20 1/4. The company posted second-quarter earnings that fell a bit short of analysts' estimates, and said it took a cautious view of prospects for the remainder of its fiscal year.

The producer of children's shoes, Sperry Top Siders, and Keds athletic footwear have been a popular growth stock in recent years, its share price having climbed from low as 1 1/4, adjusted for splits, in the mid-1980s to a peak of 3 1/4 early this year.

Gitano Group fell 1/8 to 5 1/2. The company said it would have a loss for the second quarter resulting from increased interest expenses prompted by its restructuring.

Independents rush in where Democrats fear to tread

The appearance of three independent legislative candidates is further testimony to the bankruptcy of the Twin Falls County Democratic Party.

Democrats are the Palestinians of Twin Falls County politics; homeless, powerless, friendless and without hope of ending their exile.

An encouraging turnout at this year's county caucus created a brief, false hope that the party's candidates would be richly supported by volunteers. But the candidates themselves never materialized.

Among county offices, only the prosecutor's race attracted a Democrat, repeat contender Golden Bennett. The party's sole legislative candidate is former Rep. Gary Robbins.

Both, oddly, are partisan chameleons who formerly colored themselves as Republicans. Purebred Democrats are in hiding this year.

But independents - golly, we're hip-deep in them:

• Bill Chisholm, best known for standing in front of a truckload of nuclear waste, is making his fifth legislative race, this one against Rep. Celia Gould, R-Buhl.

• Teddy Keeton, a community-group stalwart, is challenging Sen. Joyce McRoberts, R-Twin Falls.

• Donald McMurrian, the hardy perennial of Twin Falls politics, is in bloom again. Repeatedly unsuccessful as a Democrat and then as a Green, he declared himself finished with partisan politics this year. But his passion for involvement wouldn't let him stay dormant; he is challenging Rep. Doug Jones, R-Filer.

• Three independents will try to pick off Cal Edwards, the GOP nominee for Twin Falls County sheriff.

Each candidate has personal reasons for choosing the "I," and lumping them together would be unfair. But here's a hypothesis to consider: We would not have so many independents if the Democrats provided a credible opposition party.

In fact, two of the three legislative candidates - Chisholm and McMurrian - have run on Democratic tickets and have held party offices.

Chisholm, a former district chairman, says he went independent because the two parties didn't seem much different from each other, and because the Democratic leadership didn't seem to be addressing the issues he cared about.

Our guess is, he and McMurrian would be Democrats still - along with thousands of others - if the party offered philosophical vitality and useful organizational support.

Supporters of the county's Republican dynasty may regard the Democrats' stagnation as a blessing. It isn't. Competition is good for business.

In our view, the Republicans who dominate politics locally have done a good job in recent years. But wouldn't they work harder, think more deeply and hustle more aggressively if they had a real opposition party to contend with?

Independents fulfill that function in a limited way. But doing the job properly requires a viable second party, with a distinguishable philosophy and an energetic organization.

Oh - and one more thing. Living, breathing candidates.

Hydroelectric development best bet

It should not be surprising that all the hydro-power sites on the Middle Snake River are being seriously considered for development, given the deteriorating energy picture throughout the Pacific Northwest, the persisting drought and our fast-growing economy here in southern Idaho. There is no surplus of energy and we are now in predictable deficits: Hydroelectric development offers our best use of a clean renewable resource and that keeps Idaho's electric rates among the lowest in the nation.

Most of the ground surrounding the three proposed projects is privately owned or is inaccessible. The 1990 Idaho State Comprehensive Outdoor Recreation Plan addressed future facility and opportunity needs assessment for this area and identified the following high priority needs: picnic areas, camps, boat launch sites, sports access (fishing and hiking) and both trail head parking and trails (hiking, interpretive, nature and historic). Our mitigation with the various state and federal agencies fulfills many of the above needs, and I might add parenthetically, with particular attention to the handicapped.

Our proposed bypass flows guarantee the preservation of the rapids (no dams) and, coupled with the flow capacity of the facilities, will avoid and minimize potential impacts to the recreational resources. These benefits would serve well - and maximize the public's best interests and needs in providing access that, until now, has been reserved for the affluent few.

Here are some more points that might be of interest:

Reader comment Lary Falkner

• The Middle Snake River is, by any standard, in an advanced state of degradation with no viable fishing and of minimum recreational value.

• The reason is primarily the long-term result of irrigation farming, fish hatchery development and municipal waste, all aggravated by drought conditions.

• Improvement cannot be achieved by sacrifice of hydropower developments such as Boulder, Empire and Kanaka, which are non-consumptive, non-polluting, renewable assets of significant economic value to the local communities and as contributors to the energy base of the region.

• The Snake River in this area is not pristine. There has been, and from all indications will continue to be, many kinds of development along the river - residential construction, commercial fish production and recreational facilities. These small power plants will be no more intrusive than any of this, past or future.

• These projects have been designed to leave adequate water in the bypass reaches for all other resources, as confirmed by the state-of-the-art computer modeling. The river will still be free-flowing, with vastly improved public access over existing conditions. What few environmental impacts the projects will have can and will be easily and suitably mitigated.

It is with a great deal of concern and frustration that we in the energy development industry must go through the prolonged time frames in working with the huge federal, state and local bureaucracy plus the irrationality of public opinion on energy development.

• We import tremendous amounts of foreign oil and recently fought a war over it. At the same time we are experiencing a terrible drought here in the Pacific Northwest, forcing the importation of expensive thermal power into southern Idaho. Meanwhile our demands on all energy resources continue to be fueled by economic growth.

It is a given that all hydro projects will have some impacts upon our environment and aesthetics - however, it remains our cheapest renewable source of electrical energy. We are a public that continues to place greater demands on electrical usage but retains the "not in my back yard" attitudes that reflect a narrow view in the regional scheme of our continued growth and needs.

L.B. Industries Inc. once again wants to assure the public of our commitment to the upgrading of water quality, appreciation for aesthetics and land values at the hydro site areas, coupled with genuine environmental concerns to provide the highest quality mitigation.

Lary Falkner is the managing director of the Hydro Division at L.B. Industries Inc. in Boise. The company is seeking Federal Energy Regulatory Commission approval for construction of three small hydroelectric projects at Boulder, Empire and Kanaka Rapids on the Snake River.

Curing population problems isn't answer

Among many crises discussed at the Earth Summit this month was the "population problem." We are told that the earth is becoming swamped with people and that it cannot sustain the burgeoning population. The dominant solution seems to call for government (the United Nations, the New World Order?) to intervene with programs and policies structured to stabilize, reduce and otherwise manipulate population growth. This in order to solve the problem of not being able to feed the growing masses.

However, this approach raises some questions. First, there doesn't seem to be a shortage of resources to feed the populations of the countries that have relatively free economies. These countries seem to be thriving, compared to those with oppressive governmental regulation. Taiwan, for example, has a population density five times that of Red China and the original Earth Day in 1970. In an essay by Garrett Hardin, we read, "It is a mistake to think that we can control the breeding of mankind in the long run by an appeal to the conscience... The only way we can preserve and nurture other and more precious freedoms is by relinquishing the freedom to breed, and that very soon." This is similar

Lewiston editorial has merit, needs fine tuning

I found the guest editorial from the Lewiston Tribune, "Don't use lottery to vote against school bond issue," very interesting. It is more truth than fiction, but it can stand some clarification. The lottery certainly will not make the entire state of Idaho more sinful - only those who cannot resist its temptation to become participants. So not everyone will be sent to eternal damnation or, as the article states, "something like that."

As to the revenue, that, of course, cannot be expected to be that great as yet since it has only been in operation since 1988. If I understand correctly, the maximum revenue won't be reached until it has operated for a full 20 years. As each year it is operated, the interest from the winners' portion being held by the state will grow as each year passes, and this the state keeps.

I see no decline as the interest will accumulate on the balance until the last payment at the end of 20 years. By then, the new additions of pots and pot sizes should enhance the state's take and present a fairly stable income providing every thing is kept on the up and up.

Your letters will be published in the newspaper and forwarded to the Air Force for inclusion in the public record.

As for the last sentence, it applies to the participants only; and if, in due course, people who participate awake and accept Christ as their savior and live according to God's word, they will have no fear of going to hell.

The punishment is for denying God's law, word, etc., the same as the girl who was a state participant and defied the dress code ruling. The Bible states very clearly what you can and cannot do. I suggest the writer try reading it.

I fear the fun of participating will fall far short of its worth in the end. The same applies to all types of gambling.

Give Martin the chance to get Hagerman on track

In my opinion, Mayor Jim Martin has made a good faith effort to get the city of Hagerman back on a progressive track. He should be given the opportunity to carry through with these efforts. The job of mayor is not an easy one because you can't possibly please everyone, but I don't feel he has been in office long enough to warrant this current outcry and protest.

As for the previous administrations not doing anything, who paid for a water tank site? Who paid for water studies and engineering? It was the late Mayor Owsley's most fervent wish to see a new water system become a reality during his term in office. Department of Commerce grants were applied for three times. The reason they were turned down - we were told - was lack of matching funds.

Each year, they increased the amount needed for matching funds and even though the city was saving money for this, they couldn't seem to catch up. Then one year, most of the savings had to be used on an unscheduled replacement of a water main down State Street. The city had to start saving all over again. The engineers were even contacted to see if the proposed plans could be scaled down so the project and grant request were not such large sums of money. It was still not within our reach.

One of the requirements in applying for grant funds was to conduct public hearings and submit transcripts of the same. Notices of these hearings were to be published twice prior to the meeting and notices were also posted prominently throughout the town. Each of these hearings was attended by only a handful of people - usually the same ones. These transcripts should still be on file at City Hall.

Mayor Owsley tried every method he could to get this project done without sacrificing other city services (streets, park, etc.) or costing the citizens of Hagerman any additional taxes. Now that the city water situation is becoming critical, it is obvious that it is going to cost the taxpayers some money. The people are going to have to pay for an adequate pure water supply.

Mayor Martin is trying to get the ball rolling again. Rather than casting aspersions on previous administrations (hindsight is always 20-20), the citizens of Hagerman should unite and support Mayor Martin and at least give him the chance to do his job. The November election seemed to indicate pretty clearly that a change was needed and a majority of people felt he could do it.

Hail prosecutors for lack of harsh jail sentences

People of Twin Falls County, let's hear it for our grand and illustrious county prosecutors. Thanks to them, Twin Falls County is becoming a haven for criminals, due to the great system of plea bargaining, defective recording equipment, misinstructing of juries and just not wanting to hurt the feelings of our criminals.

Thanks to our great and learned prosecutors, child murderers, throat slashers, drug dealers and a good variety of others have all but gotten off with no punishment. Whose side are they on anyway? I really hope that in the upcoming election that whoever is elected to the office of county prosecutor will have enough to him to do his job as it should be done.

I think it is about time to have a prosecutor that will back our police instead of the criminals. Give the rights back to the victims. I believe that if a person commits a crime, he should answer to that crime and not plea bargain and get a hand slapping. It is time for our elected officials to do their damn jobs as they say they will while running for the position.

Just try being kind - I'm only doing my job

I work as a telephone solicitor for a charitable organization. My main job is to verify the information taken by other solicitors and to call for donations in between. As far as verifying, I have to make sure the information (name, mailing address and amount donated) is written down correctly. Some of our solicitors either don't write clearly or write the information incorrectly. It is my job to make sure this information is correct.

As far as calling for donations, I'm sorry if I called you at a bad time. I don't know when you eat dinner or have company over. We only call between 5 and 9 p.m. during the week. Also, we do understand three little words: "I'm not interested" or "No thank you."

I don't enjoy getting yelled at or having a phone slammed down in my ear. I'm just doing my job, so please try to be somewhat kind next time someone calls you.

ANC asks for ban on Games

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The ANC said Wednesday it would demand that South Africa be banned from the Olympic Games to protest one of the country's worst mass killings.

President F.W. de Klerk, meanwhile, vehemently denied his government was involved in the June 17 massacre of 42 blacks and called for talks to restore relations with the African National Congress.

The ANC broke off all political negotiations Tuesday in response to last week's slaughter in the Boipatong township south of Johannesburg. "We are deeply disappointed by the ANC's reaction to the Boipatong tragedy," de Klerk told a news conference after a all-day Cabinet meeting.

"The charges of government complicity in the massacre are without any foundation whatsoever and we find it reprehensible," he said.

The collapse of political negotiations has created the country's most serious political upheaval since de Klerk legalized the ANC in 1990 and began negotiations to end apartheid.

The ANC called off both direct discussions with the government and multiparty, black-white talks aimed at abolishing apartheid and writing a new constitution.

Despite the break, the ANC has said it will meet the government to present its demands, which include an international commission to investigate the violence.

De Klerk proposed two days of talks as soon as possible. He said the government would welcome international observers to investigate violence but rejects any foreign groups being placed in a position of authority.

The ANC's secretary general, Cyril Ramaphosa, said that if the government "takes practical steps that are adequate—the negotiation process will be back on track."

On Wednesday, however, the nation's leading black group pressed ahead with its campaign against the government.

U.N. offers new peace proposal to Khmer Rouge

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) — The U.N. peacekeeping chief in Cambodia said Wednesday he had offered the Khmer Rouge new proposals to prod them back into the peace process, but the guerrillas did not say whether they would cooperate.

"They indicated that the proposal we made is an interesting proposal, that they needed time to study it," said Yasushi Akashi, the head of the U.N. Transitional Authority in Cambodia.

Also Wednesday, the U.N. military command reported the third shooting involving a U.N. helicopter since Sunday.

The helicopter was hit by what appeared to be rifle fire as it was flying about 30 miles north of Phnom Penh in a cargo run, U.N. spokesman Eric Falt said. A U.N. helicopter was struck by gunfire Sunday, and shots passed close to another helicopter Monday.

Falt said it had not been determined who was responsible in the incidents. Akashi condemned the shootings and said he would discuss possible responses with other U.N. officials.

He spoke upon returning to Phnom Penh from an international Cambodian aid conference in Tokyo, where he met with Khmer Rouge President Khieu Samphan and the guerrilla group's chief of defense, Son Sen.

Aristide: U.S. should unseat new Haiti chief

KINGSTON, Jamaica (AP) — Exiled President Jean-Bertrand Aristide of Haiti says the United States should work to get his country's new prime minister unseated, rather than suggesting Aristide meet with him.

The U.S. State Department said it would be useful for Aristide and Prime Minister Marc Bazin to engage in serious dialogue. A State Department official said such a message had been conveyed to Aristide.

On Tuesday, at a news conference in New Kingston, Aristide reiterated his opposition to any talks with Bazin while Bazin remained in office.

Asked if he had been pressured by the United States to agree to talks, Aristide said: "Officially? No."

He added: "Practically? I hope they will cancel the visa of Bazin and the appointment of Bazin, his illegal appointment."

Rabin vows to speed up peace process, stoke economy

Rabin

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — The Labor party on Wednesday celebrated its upset of hard-line Likud, and leader Yitzhak Rabin promised to let Palestinians govern themselves and to curtail the building of Jewish settlements.

U.S. and Arab leaders called for quick resumption of peace talks. Rabin is almost sure to lead the next governing coalition; Labor and its allies fell just short of a majority in the 120-seat Parliament.

"I believe that we can set up a stable coalition, not dependent on one party on the left but also on parties on the other side," Rabin told reporters. Rabin spoke at a relaxed news conference at the party's Tel Aviv headquarters. The hall was festooned with banners and flags from the election night party, and Rabin, in an open-necked shirt, was in an uncharacteristic smiling mood.

His national agenda, Rabin said, would include peacemaking, solving unemployment and other social problems, election reform and improving relations with the United States. Rabin led his party to an election victory against Likud for the first time since 1977, when he had been ousted from the premiership because of a scandal involving an illegal overseas bank account held by his wife.

With all but soldiers' ballots counted for the 120-seat Parliament, unofficial returns showed 45 seats for Labor, a gain of six from the 1988 election. Its main left-wing ally, Meretz, won 12, and Arab parties, 5.

Shamir's Likud earned just 32, a loss of eight. Far-right parties won nine seats, and religious parties 17.

In Washington, Secretary of State James A. Baker III called for Middle East peace talks to resume as soon as the new Israeli government settles in. Bilateral peace talks had been suspended pending Tuesday's parliamentary election.

The Bush administration had strained relations with Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir's government. Baker told reporters the United States would work closely with Rabin and try to "strengthen and even deepen the partnership between the United States and Israel."

Baker declined to say whether President Bush would now be willing to provide Israel with $10 billion in loan guarantees to help resettle thousands of Jewish immigrants from the former Soviet Union. Bush had blocked the guarantees to protest the building of Jewish settlements in the occupied territories.

Rabin said he would not freeze settlements, as the United States demanded, but support them only in areas essential to Israel's security — Jerusalem, the Jordan Valley and the Golan Heights.

"I believe this policy that I described... will make it easier" to obtain the loan guarantees, he said.

Meciar named leader

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — Vladimir Meciar, the populist leader seeking independence from Czechoslovakia, was formally appointed premier and formed a Slovakian government on Wednesday.

Meciar had won June 5-6 elections in Slovakia, Czechoslovakia's poorer eastern third.

Meciar and Czech leader Vaclav Klaus agreed last week to split Czechoslovakia in two, making a peaceful division almost inevitable.

Meciar and Klaus asked the Czech and Slovak parliaments to work out a final agreement on the country's future by Sept. 30.

A caretaker federal government is expected to be appointed by President Vaclav Havel in early July.

At a news conference Wednesday, Klaus confirmed newspaper reports that his Civic Democratic Party was proposing Jan Strasky as candidate for federal premier. Strasky was vice-premier in the outgoing Czech regional government.

Meciar had originally favored a loose confederation between the two republics, but has recently pushed for international recognition of Slovakia.

On Wednesday, he charged his Czech negotiating partners had pushed him to that change of policy with their "either-or attitude."

Klaus repeatedly stressed he would prefer the breakup of the country if a continued federation proved impossible.

Pope: Criticism OK.
if it's constructive

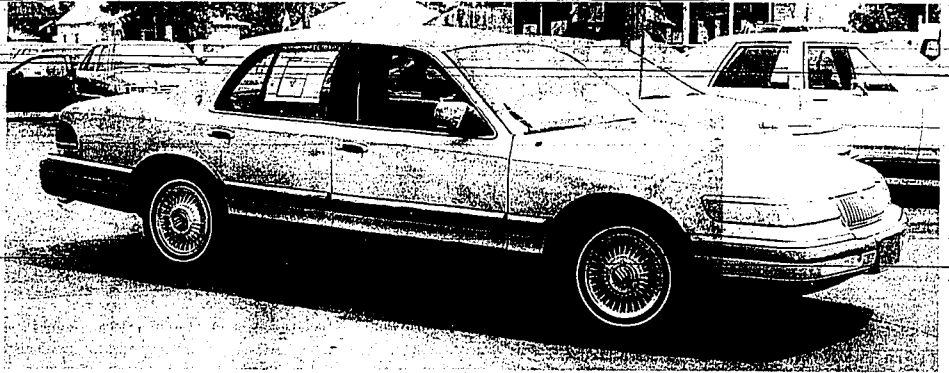

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II said Wednesday that criticism is acceptable within the Roman Catholic Church as long as it is constructive and "full of respect."

Criticism, he said, "can't be given with bitterness; it can't be expressed in offenses, in acts or judgments that harm the honor of people or groups. It must be full of respect and of fraternal and filial affection, avoiding inopportune recourse to publicity."

The statement came amid growing irritation in the Vatican over attacks by some theologians on issues ranging from the church's ban on artificial birth control to the power of the pope.

Sheriff's dispatcher might have saved boy

TWIN FALLS — An 8-month-old Twin Falls County boy may have been saved by a sheriff's department dispatcher who talked the boy's mother through emergency procedures after he fell head-first into a bucket of water.

Denise Jensen called for help Tuesday afternoon after finding her son, Chase, with his head in a bucket of water she was using to clean the house.

Cpl. Patricia Barth said she calmed the mother and told her how to perform cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR). The boy was breathing again by the time the ambulance arrived to the house on Vicki Lane south of Twin Falls, she said.

The tot's sister, 15-year-old Skylla Jensen, said her brother's condition had been upgraded from critical to serious Wednesday at Primary Children's Medical Center in Salt Lake City.

The boy's lungs may have been damaged by cleaning fluid in the water, she said.

Egg ing incidences plague Rupert grocery, homes

RUPERT — Rupert grocery stores might be selling a few more eggs than usual lately, as several businesses and residents have reported that their property has been egged by vandals.

According to the Rupert Police Department, The House of Video and two residences were the latest victims. They were reported to have been hit Wednesday morning.

In another act of vandalism, the Drift Inn, 545 E. St., had neon lights above the bar entrance broken on Monday. Damage was listed at about $250.

Groups opposed to Snake hydro plans ask for hearings

TWIN FALLS — Three groups critical of three proposed hydroelectric projects on the Snake River, have asked for a public hearing on the projects' water-quality aspects.

Idaho Rivers United, the Idaho Conservation League and Three Rapids Coalition have asked the state Division of Environmental Quality to schedule public hearings on LB Industries' request for a water quality certificate from the state.

Concerns over the effects of additional development on existing water-quality problems in the Middle Snake have prompted the groups to ask for the hearing "in order for citizens to present information that may not otherwise be available."

LB Industries, a Boise developer, has proposed building small hydroelectric projects that would divert a portion of the river at Boulder, Empire and Kanaka rapids.

Jerome Chamber seeks nominees for top citizen

JEROME — The Jerome Chamber of Commerce is looking for the right person to be proclaimed citizen of the year.

This annual proclamation started in 1974 and has recognized doctors, legislators, entrepreneurs, real estate agents and community volunteers.

Community spirit, participation in civic and service clubs, charitable activities, work with political commissions and fraternal or religious groups are considered in selecting the recipient. Business and professional accomplishments are also used in determining the person to receive the honor.

Nomination forms can be obtained at the Chamber of Commerce office, 101 West Main. Deadline for nominations is June 20. For additional information, call 324-2711.

Hazelton, Eden combine for 'early' July 4 celebration

HAZELTON — The communities of Hazelton and Eden will be celebrating the 4th of July a little early.

The celebration is scheduled for this Saturday in the Hazelton City Park.

A parade will start the festivities at 6 p.m. down Main Street in Hazelton with local businessman Henry C. Jones as the grand marshal.

There will be food and game booths, pony rides, and a petting zoo in the park, and a fireworks display will begin at dusk.

Bader's entry rounds out race

By Brad Bowlin Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Three independent candidates will battle Republican nominee Cal Edwards and each other in November's election for Twin Falls County Sheriff.

Retired area commander of the U.S. Border Patrol, Ted Bader, filed his candidacy petition with the Twin Falls County Clerk Wednesday, the last day to get on the November ballot as an independent candidate.

Range deputy Jim Webb and courthouse security chief Wayne Tousey jumped into the race earlier in the week.

"I felt the county needed to have another choice," said Webb, 47.

He decided to enter the race after his close friend and personal pick for sheriff, Gene Bolton of Filer, lost to Edwards in the May primary election.

Webb, who has been a Twin Falls County sheriff's deputy for 12 years, said several people called him after the primary urging him to run for the office.

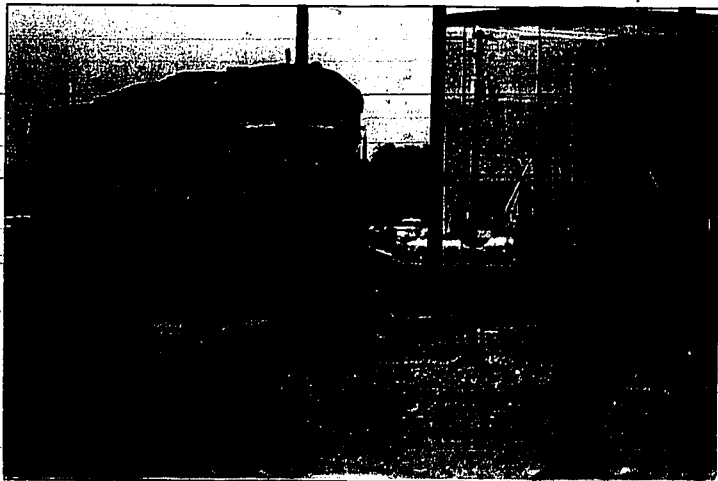

Bader said he expects a clean race, but he criticized Webb's late entry, describing him as a "hero" who intends to split the vote. "I very much resent the 'good old boy' in his shining armor on a white horse who is suddenly going to ride in and save the day," Bader said.

Although he was the last candidate to formally begin his campaign, Bader made his intentions known in February in a bid for the Republican nomination cut short by a law prohibiting federal employees from political activity.

Bader, 44, has hoped his retirement from the U.S. Border Patrol would come through in time for him to run as a Republican, but the paperwork was stalled and so was his Union Pacific engines sit idle in Twin Falls after workers of connecting railroads went on strike Wednesday, halting local deliveries.

Silent railways

Trucks take over where trains leave off

By Craig Lincoln Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Trucks are a lot more popular now as businesses struggle to cope with a national railroad shutdown.

Businesses across the nation Wednesday looked for ways to carry on the nation's business without railroads. It was no different in Twin Falls, but disaster hasn't struck yet.

"In the short term, it won't affect anybody very much," Universal Frozen Foods Transportation Manager Mike Jenkins said. "If it only lasts a day or two, it won't be a problem."

This shutdown, however, may last more than a couple of days. Congress isn't moving as fast to resolve the dispute as it has in the past.

Some administration officials are predicting at least a week of wrangling in the House and Senate before a bill is passed to resolve the crisis.

The shutdown started early Wednesday when about 1,500 members of a union in the East struck CSX Transportation. The rest of the U.S. railroad companies then shut down, saying the industry's interconnections were too interlocked to operate without one of the connections.

Universal Frozen, which ships about one-third of its frozen potato products over rail, is using trucks to move its produce — a more-expensive proposition, Jenkins said. The company moves about a third of its Twin Falls output by rail.

If the shutdown continues through the weekend, Jenkins said, "We will have a problem because all of the cars that would normally be out on the tracks would clog up all of the yards across the country."

Many businesses didn't wait until Wednesday to adjust. At the Twin Falls trucking firm Austin Express, they started using trucks early in the week.

"The railroad strike has created excess demand for trucks," General Manager Jeff Down said. "We noticed quite a bit Monday or Tuesday."

USDA releases 68,660 acres for grazing, haying

The Times-News

BOISE — The U.S. Department of Agriculture Wednesday released 68,660 acres of Magic Valley land idled under its long-term reserve program for livestock grazing or haying to help Idaho ranchers and farmers cope with the drought.

The Conservation Reserve Program lands made available by the USDA includes 28,257 acres in Twin Falls County, 8,869 acres in Camas County, 3,412 acres in Lincoln County and 28,122 acres in Elmore County.

CRP land was also released in Bannock, Bear Lake, Benewah, Butte, Caribou, Idaho, Latah, Owyhee, Power and Washington counties, for a total of 455,795 acres statewide.

That's a little more than half the CRP acreage in Idaho. State Agriculture Director Greg Nelson said the release of thousands of previously idled acres will be a boon to ranchers whose traditional range and hay supplies have been withering as the sixth year of drought intensified.

"We recognize the grazing season on (Bureau of Land Management) land is going to be pretty short," Nelson said. "We're in a little better shape on Forest Service land because of the rain and cool weather earlier this month."

Nelson said his department had anticipated that some cattle that graze on public land would be in trouble by the end of July, but that the recent very hot weather may move up that timetable.

"We wanted to be ready whenever the need arises," he said. "That's why we made the announcement now."

Nelson said use of CRP land will be coordinated by county offices of the USDA's Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service. Farmers and grazers with questions about using CRP land should call those offices or a special hotline, 1-800-662-0598, that is scheduled to go on line next week.

The release of the CRP lands came a day after USDA authorized federal emergency funds to six southern Idaho counties for farmers who have lost more than 40 percent of their livestock feed to drought.

That money was made available to qualified farmers in Twin Falls, Cassia, Owyhee, Jerome, Elmore and Gooding counties.

The federal payment to producers for idling the land will be reduced by the value of the grazing or haying it provides through the Sept. 30 deadline. Ranchers and farmers will be limited to using 75 percent of the land they idled under contract with the government.

State officials have also been working with leaders in other drought-stricken agriculture states to convince the Bush administration to release another $775 million in federal disaster relief for farmers and ranchers this year.

ISU would assume Lewis-Clark programs under plan

The Associated Press

LEWISTON — Lewis-Clark State College will pull out of Twin Falls and allow Idaho State University to increase programs there if the Idaho Board of Education approves an agreement between the schools at its monthly meeting here this week.

Lewis-Clark has offered a bachelor's degree in business management at the College of Southern Idaho for the past seven years, largely because Idaho State was not interested in providing the program 120 miles from Pocatello. However, "We have reached a point in time that ISU can provide equal or better service and has the desire to provide the program," Lewis-Clark President Leo Vickers said this week.

The Board of Education will consider the proposal here today. The board meets Thursday and Friday at Lewis-Clark State College.

Under terms of the agreement, Lewis-Clark would not accept any new students into its program retroactive to May 1 of this year and would not be obligated to offer any classes in the Magic Valley starting in January. Vickers said the college plans to reallocate most or all of the $53,400 a year it spends in Twin Falls to meet the needs of its growing Coeur d'Alene student body.

Idaho State would begin offering bachelor's degree programs in business education and corporate training and a business administration minor at Twin Falls starting in January.

"It's our service area," Idaho State President Richard Bowen said in a telephone interview from his Pocatello office.

Idaho State should have made good on a request for its programs in Twin Falls a decade ago, Bowen said. "But ISU was going through a stubborn phase in its history."

He said Lewis-Clark has done a good job of helping people in the Magic Valley and now Idaho State is ready to fulfill that role.

Under the proposed pact, about 130 students in Twin Falls will be exempt from Idaho State's requirement to take 22 of their last 40 credits on the Pocatello campus for a bachelor's degree from the College of Business.

Silver, Reddick join race for sheriff in Jerome

By H.R. Weisel
Times-News correspondent

JEROME — Two independent candidates have filed for the top spot in the Jerome County Sheriff's Department.

The Jerome Chief of Police George Silver III, 41, and Dale L. Reddick have filed for the sheriff's seat at the deadline hour of 5 p.m. Wednesday.

The two will vie against current Sheriff Larry Gold a Republican, and Ernest Brooks, who is on the Democratic ticket.

Silver has been chief of the City Police Department for two and one-half years. He served on the county sheriff's staff for more than five years as a sergeant and acting chief deputy in the department.

Previously, Silver was a deputy on the Blaine

County sheriff's staff for five years. Prior to that, he was a part-time police officer in Jerome.

Silver has received advanced supervisory and management certificates from the Peace Officers Standards and Training Academy, plus 1,800 hours of other law enforcement training.

He has an Associate of Applied Sciences degree from the College of Southern Idaho.

Silver said his primary goal is to make some positive changes in law enforcement work in the county.

Utah man saves granddaughter from black bear while camping

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — George Gadd attacked a black bear with only a flashlight after awakening to find the animal dragging his granddaughter from their campsite.

Gadd, 59, hit the enraged bear in the snout and tried to intimidate it with noise during the 15-minute encounter early Wednesday in the mountains 60 miles southeast of Salt Lake City.

"I didn't know what else to do," Gadd said Wednesday at Primary Children's Medical Center, where his 9-year-old granddaughter, Krystal Gadd, was in fair and stable condition.

"I just tried to make more noise. When the bear and intimidate him. It's hard to watch something kill your grandkids," said Gadd, who was not injured.

Krystal Gadd spent five hours in surgery as doctors repaired deep lacerations and scratches on her head, right shoulder, side and leg, said Bonnie Midget, hospital spokeswoman.

"(The bear) really took some chunks out of her," Midget said.

Gadd said his granddaughter thought her 12-year-old brother was playing a joke when she felt her sleeping bag being pulled from the camper where the pair were sleeping. The two, along with their grandparents, were spending the second night of a fishing trip in the Soldier Creek area.

The bear had pulled the girl through the camper window when Gadd, sleeping with his wife in a trailer next to the camper, awoke to her screams. Gadd snatched a flashlight at the bear and yelled, hoping "he'd drop her and run."

Instead, the bear dragged Krystal, bundled-in-her-sleeping-bag, by the head through sagebrush until she became entangled in a barbed wire fence.

"I was barefoot, running down the road as fast as I could, and he was getting away from me at every step," Gadd said. "I couldn't believe he could run that fast carrying her because she's not a small girl."

Gadd had climbed the fence and was trying to help Krystal out of the bag when the upright bear charged.

"I hit him as hard as I could on the snout with the flashlight," Gadd said. "I think it shocked him."

Gadd again shined light into the bear's eyes and lifted his granddaughter over the fence. "I couldn't go anywhere with the fence behind me. I told her she had to get back to the trailer herself," he said.

Krystal walked back to the campground white Gadd kept the animal at bay. He was eventually able to climb the fence and return to the campsite while the bear sniffed at the sleeping bag. "When he realized nothing was there, he came after us," Gadd said.

Gadd piled into the truck with his grandchildren and wife, Pat.

"I tried to run the bear down, but he ran over the mountains where I couldn't get at him," he said.

Jason Gadd slept through the incident.

"I remember my grandpa waking me up saying there was a bear," he said Wednesday, close to tears.

Burley faced with unique situation with law enforcement jurisdiction

By Eric Goodell
Mini-Cassia News Service

BURLEY — Because the boundaries between Minidoka and Cassia counties are blurred, local law enforcement officers sometimes face a unique situation in carrying out their duties.

In fact, an officer's title and duty may change, depending on where a crime takes place and on what that crime is. Some problems crop up a lot since the city of Burley has an ongoing law enforcement contract with the Cassia County Sheriff's Department.

"We have a peculiar situation in which our officers cover all of Cassia County and through a contract serve the city of Burley," said Cassia County Sheriff Billy Crystal. "So we have officers on the north side of Burley act only as city officers, not deputies."

White Burley is located in Cassia County, its north end extends across the river into Minidoka County.

Crystal explained that sheriff's deputies are given authority to serve civil papers and documents such as subpoenas, whereas city patrolmen can't.

Also, situations have arisen when authorities aren't certain who should investigate a particular case, Crystal said.

He remembered a situation a number of years ago which occurred in the Milner Dam area.

Burglars entered a building from Twin Falls County but exited the structure on the Cassia County side.

"In situations like that the prosecuting attorney and law enforcement get together as decide who will investigate," said Crystal.

The Milner Dam area is one such location where boundaries of Twin Falls, Jerome and Cassia counties run together, making it difficult to tell exactly in which place the crime was committed.

Some situations allow an officer to cross over into another law enforcement agency's jurisdiction. One such occasion is the principal of "hot pursuit."

"If a law officer is directly pursuing a criminal, he can continue his chase even if the suspect crosses into another county."

One such example occurred several weeks ago, when Jerome County Sheriff Larry Gold chased a motorist at high speeds for several miles, and the pursuit finally ended just inside Minidoka County.

The man, from Burley, who police reports say was intoxicated, allegedly took out a pair of scissors and scuffled with Gold and cut the sheriff's hands.

Gold was able to eventually subdue the man. According to the "hot pursuit" principal, there were no problems with Gold making the arrest, even though it took place in Minidoka County, said Crystal.

It is not very unusual for law officers to cross into other jurisdictions. "It happens on a regular basis," said Crystal.

On other occasions, deputies from one county sometimes travel into another county to interview witnesses to a crime.

Crystal added that Idaho code allows officers to investigate a certain number of feet into another jurisdiction. If a traffic accident were to occur on the spot of a county line, an officer could go a limited number of feet into another county to complete investigation of the crash.

In a drawing below Minidoka Dam which claimed the life of a Rupert area man two summers ago, Crystal said either Minidoka County or Cassia County could have investigated the incident.

The Snake River divides Cassia County from Minidoka County at that spot, and technically each county is in charge of investigating incidents on its half of the river.

Minidoka County assumed responsibility in that case, even though Cassia County assisted with the body search.

Landfill hearing set for July 1

By Phil Sahn ...
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Residents who want to appeal the Hansen Butte Landfill decision can do so on Wednesday, July 1.

That's the date the Twin Falls County commissioners have scheduled for a hearing on the appeal of a conditional-use permit for the landfill, granted earlier this month by the Twin Falls County Planning and Zoning Commission.

More than 100 county residents filed notices with the county commissioners saying they want to appeal the decision. The planning commission granted the permit on June 11.

Six Magic Valley counties applies for the permit to build a regional landfill on Hansen Butte. Twin Falls County was one of the counties that applied for the permit and Twin Falls County Commission Chairman Marvin Hempleman sits on the six-county solid waste district board of directors.

Hempleman said he will attend the appeal hearing but will not vote because of a conflict of interest. That would leave the decision up to Commissioners Norma Blass and Jim Fruley.

However the commissioners decide the appeal, the next step would be to take the appeal to district court.

The July 1 hearing is scheduled for 9 a.m.

Jerome benefits already from factory
JEROME — Financial benefits are rolling into Jerome County from new industrial enterprises, even before the businesses start operations.

The Jerome Cheese Co., being built in the Industrial Park south of Jerome, has been billed for $58,860 for a building permit. The fee is based on the estimated building value of $14.5 million, said Kirk Hansen, county building inspector.

The county had estimated the building permit fee would be about $20,625 according to the current year's budget. Construction is continuing on the cheese plant.

Completion of the project and putting the plant into operation should happen "around the first of the year" Hansen said.

The cheese manufacturing plant will employ about 90 people when in full operation and will require milk from 45,000 cows on a daily basis.

Jerome honors gulf war veterans
JEROME — Jerome County men and women who served their country in the Persian Gulf War will be honored here July 4.

A granite monument with the names of veterans of the war will be dedicated during a ceremony scheduled for 10:30 a.m. on Saturday, July 4, at the monument site in Jerome North Park.

Two F-4 fighter jets from the Idaho Air National Guard will perform a fly-by, and a color guard and representatives from all branches of the armed forces will participate.

Fathers of the veterans of Operation Desert Storm will cut a yellow ribbon from around the monument. Each veteran's mother will receive a yellow rose.

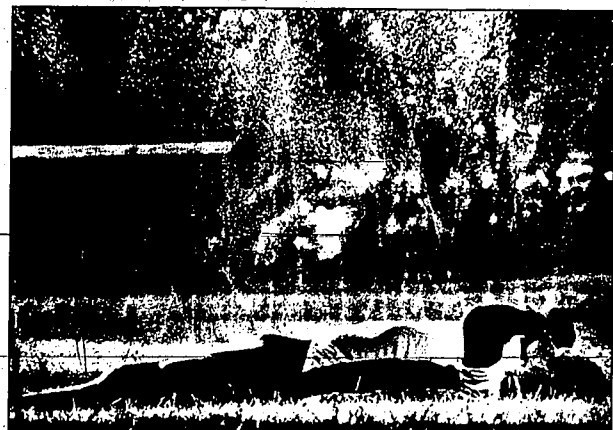

The monument was paid for by family members and a few donations from the community at a cost of about $2,500. Erecting the monument were Dennis Turpin, Stanley Bolich and Milton Robbins, fathers of service men. Assisting were friends Clay Davis, Tim and Mark Mitchell and Alvin Abbott.

Thirty-three names of Jerome County service men and women are on the monument. The committee is seeking the names of any other members of the Armed Forces from Jerome County who participated in Operation Desert Storm.

Names should be phoned to Dorothy Robbins, 324-3761, or Karin Bolich, 324-5121.

Candidates

He had run the local Border Patrol office since 1987 before taking leave time in March. His retirement became official Tuesday night, he said.

Tousley, 41, and Webb say they aren't worried about splitting the independent vote and handing Edwards an easy victory.

"Overall, it will cut down the number of votes anyone will get," Tousley said. "This year, I feel that we are not looking at a party race. The public is going to vote for the individual."

Independent candidates are hampered somewhat by the lack of early exposure afforded party candidates, said Tousley, who believes the sheriff's office should be non-partisan.

The also don't have the advantage of financial and campaign support from a party, he said.

All three independent candidates made it clear that they have no intentions of firing any of the current sheriff's department employees if elected.

"This is a good department with good people," Bader said. "Why waste good talent?"

Webb, who lives near Filer and has 40 cattle and several horses, said his experience as a farmer and rancher and a former convenience store owner makes him aware of the problems county residents have.

"You have to listen to the people," he said.

After spending his first year as a patrol deputy, Webb has spent his tenure with the department as a range deputy patrolling the South Hills and other remote areas of the county, often helping to coordinate search and rescue operations.

He is accustomed to getting up at all hours to help people, and he plans to continue that hands-on style if elected sheriff, Webb said.

Although he only came to the area four years ago, Bader said he has strong ties to the community. He asked to be transferred here after visiting and passing through several times.

"I like the way of life here, and I want to raise the two kids we've still got at home here," Bader said. "I want to make a contribution to the community."

Positions on prayer Grangeville district attorney sees continued opening in ruling

BOISE (AP) — The attorney for the school district at the center of the graduation prayer debate in Idaho said Wednesday's U.S. Supreme Court decision does not go as far as opponents of school prayer contend.

Echohawk

"To paraphrase Mark Twain, the death of school prayer has been greatly exaggerated," said attorney Kirtlan Naylor, who represents the Grangeville Joint District in the legal challenge to prayer at its high school graduations.

prayer, although the 5-4 decision finally provides a concrete guideline on the issue. But Naylor maintained the court majority has left open the possibility of graduation prayer under certain circumstances.

"In the Rhode Island case, Naylor said, the school principal chose the cleric to give the prayer and provided him with guidelines on what could and could not be said so that the state through the school district was directly involved in the activity."

Because of that decision, school district's statewide were left to their own devices on the issue for this spring's graduations and may, including Grangeville, again allowed the practice.

ACLU spokesman George Patterson said Wednesday's ruling clearly bans graduation prayer and leaves those still encouraging it "defying the Supreme Court of the United States and the Constitution of the United States on which the Supreme Court based its decision."

down their request. "If for one fell the baccalaureate service is one all students can benefit from," said board member Diane Butler at the time. "It could be the last address of moral values, some of the students will hear for a long time to come."

Hurst said Cassia County residents had accepted the his School Board's no-prayer policy. "There wasn't any real outcry," he said.

Gem ACLU president 'delights' in Supreme Court's 5-4 ruling

By James Prichard
Mini-Cassia News Service

RUPERT — The president of the Idaho chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union is "delighted" by Wednesday's U.S. Supreme Court decision in which justices ruled 5-4 that public high school graduation prayers violate the Constitution's First Amendment.

"(N)o teacher or student of any such institution shall ever be required to attend or participate in any religious service whatsoever."

Contrary to what some believe, Kofoid said, the ACLU is not anti-religion, but rather pro-Constitution. To emphasize his point, he noted that the organization worked to reinstate the right of U.S. military personnel serving in Saudi Arabia during the Persian Gulf War to take items of religious significance to that country with them.

Lapwai High School principal resigns

LAPWAI — Lapwai High School Principal Steve L. Jones, under fire because of allegations he made racist statements, has resigned to take a job in another school district.

He said his decision to leave has nothing to do with a complaint filed with the Idaho Human Rights Commission. Members of the Nez Perce Indian Tribe alleged Jones made racist comments to students. The commission made a preliminary finding that further inquiry was warranted.

Jones said he's leaving for a job in a larger district, but wouldn't identify it because the school board there has not approved the decision to hire him. Jones said he has been job hunting for several months and had an interview before the complaints surfaced.

Parma man to be arraigned in July

PAYETTE — Aurelio Barajas will be arraigned in July for the slaying death of a Fruitland convenience store clerk.

Magistrate William Jordan has ruled there is sufficient evidence to continue holding the 32-year-old Parma man. Sherrill McDonald, 48, died June 4 in the robbery of the Pick and Pack convenience store in Fruitland. Barajas was arrested a day later in Parma.

Fruitland Police Chief Bud Reifsnnyder said tests on blood found on a knife and money in Barajas' car indicate it is the same type as McDonald's. Her throat was slashed, but an autopsy did not show any other trauma. Barajas is scheduled to be arraigned July 2 in Payette County's 3rd District Court. County Assistant Prosecutor Greg Frates said his office will seek enhanced penalties because of the accused's use of a weapon.

Health group expands Cataldo survey

CATALDO — The state Office of Environmental Health has expanded its examination of mysterious health concerns reported by some Cataldo-area residents.

Several Silver Valley physicians applauded an earlier survey conducted by area residents this spring as a good start. But they said it was too broad to help determine what illness was causing the reported symptoms.

Residents of a 50-square-mile area who completed the first questionnaire last spring were asked to fill out the state's 30-page survey this week, medical monitoring coordinator Steve West said Tuesday.

Intended to help pinpoint the cause of reported symptoms, the new survey asks people their work history, years of local residency and past residences. It also includes specific questions about their medical condition, symptoms, treatments, life history and personal history, West said.

Adult bookstore owner released on bond

BOISE — An adult bookstore owner served 45 minutes of a six-month jail sentence for violating his probation by selling obscene material before being released on $5,000 bond.

Fourth District Judge Duff McKee overruled Ada County Magistrate Charles Hay's refusal to grant bond Tuesday pending appeal for Lamar Larsen, 59, who pleaded guilty in April 1991 to a misdemeanor obscenity charge.

Larsen entered an "Alford plea," allowing him to plead guilty without admitting guilt, and was sentenced to a 180-day suspended jail term, fines, community service and probation barring him from selling obscene material. But police seized videotapes and magazines during three searches of Larsen's Over 19 bookstore in Garden City over 10 days in late November and early December 1991.

Hay later ruled there was probable cause to believe the seized material was obscene.

Former governor: Stop Earth hysteria

NAMPA — There is no scientific evidence we are trashing the planet and Americans need to put a stop to the hysteria, former Washington governor Dixy Lee Ray says.

Ray on Tuesday warned of people determined to prove human beings are the worst thing that ever happened to this planet. Ray said she thinks they really dislike people.

Some want the earth returned to its undisturbed state, and a common environmental theme emerging in Washington, D.C., Ray said, is that all wild land should be under the control of the government.

Compiled from wire reports

Economist: Drawdown saves salmon, money

The Associated Press

There is new confirmation the so-called "Idaho plan" of drawing down lower Snake River reservoirs to speed salmon travel to the ocean is the most cost-effective option, Idaho Gov. Cecil Andrus reports.

Economist Don Reading of Ben Johnson Associates on Wednesday told the Northwest Power Planning Council in Portland the Idaho plan is cheaper than the council's flow-augmentation proposal or an increased flow scenario from the National Marine Fisheries Service.

"Slowly and surely, the evidence mounts that drawdowns on the lower Snake River are the least costly way to return the salmon to its spawning grounds," Andrus said Wednesday.

"Those who rejected the idea out of hand have come to see that, while no recovery plan will be cheap, the salmon is worth saving and drawdowns should be given a chance to work."

Reading issued a paper comparing the costs of using Idaho water to augment flows against drawdowns of the Lower Granite, Little Goose, Lower Monumental and Ice Harbor pools.

He said the drawdowns would be five times more cost-effective than the council plan of higher flows and barging juvenile fish around the dams. It would be 20 times cheaper than the fisheries service recommendation to "flush" the fish with a liberal release of Idaho water, a valuable commodity in the sixth year of drought.

The annual costs of mitigation are $153 million to $1.6 billion under the fisheries service guidelines, $72 million to $168 million for the power council plan, and $14 million to $58 million with the Idaho blueprint.

The service recently listed the wild Snake River sockeye as an endangered species and Idaho's wild chinook as threatened.

While the prices of drawdowns and flow augmentation are comparable, Reading said a lower river level moves water and fish much faster, called "weighted water particle time," so it ultimately saves the regional economy money.

Reading's report is based on economic data supplied to the fisheries service by the Economics Technical Committee on Critical Habitat. It includes members from the Bonneville Power Administration, Pacific Northwest Utilities Conference Committee, aluminum companies, ports, farmers, the states and local universities.

Before the federal dams were built on the Snake and Columbia rivers, it took young fish less than a week to migrate from Idaho to the ocean. With the concrete impoundments and current low-water years, that has been extended to well over a month.

Many young salmon smolts die each spring as they become lost in the slack water at the reservoirs. Reading said the drawdowns were the best at speeding up the water velocity through the reservoirs in the spring.

Congressional delegation scores 2nd-lowest

BOISE (AP) — Idaho's congressional delegation ranks next to the lowest of any state's in support of representative "women's issues," according to a feminist group.

A southwestern Idaho conservative activist said the delegation reflects Idaho values and merits praise. But a pro-choice advocate predicted Tuesday that the delegation's support for those issues will increase in the 1990s as its membership changes.

Idaho's two U.S. senators and two representatives scored a combined 27.5 percent in rankings by the Women's Political Action Group on votes on recent abortion, health and other legislation. Only Wyoming's 26.6 percent ranked lower in the Women's 1992 Voting Guide.

First-term Democratic Rep. Larry LaRocco scored the highest in Idaho — 60 percent — and would have had 80 percent had he not missed one of five House votes on the list.

Republican Sen. Steve Symms scored 0, and GOP Sen. Larry Craig 20 percent. They were the lowest-scoring pair of senators from any state. Democratic Rep. Richard Stallings, running to succeed the retiring Symms, got a score of 40 percent.

"It tells me that the people who have been in office longer have lost touch ... especially with the changes that are occurring in Idaho," said Betsy Dunklin, executive director of the Idaho Women's Network.

"(It (the rating) is an embarrassment, but things are changing," she said.

An influx of new residents from other states, an increase in the number of working women and the urbanization of Idaho will be reflected in Idaho's delegation by the end of the 1990s, Dunklin predicted.

But Nancy Coats, a Midvale school teacher who was Idaho director of the Conservative Women of America, said she fears the state will drift from its conservative moorings on the issues because of population growth.

"I wish they would leave their liberal biases in California," she said.

Coats said the delegation's rating is "a point of pride. Idaho is a very family-oriented state and a free-enterprise state."

"To me they (delegation members) are doing exactly what we want them to do," she said. "We do our own score. Symms and Craig usually are right on top."

Dayna Macy, spokeswoman for the California publisher of the Women's 1992 Voting Guide, said the Women's Political Action Group is an informal collection of writers, editors and researchers prompted to do the book by the bitter confirmation hearing for Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas.

Spokesmen for Craig and Symms discounted the rankings.

"It's a little presumptuous to pose as a spokesman for American women as this group seems to be doing," Craig spokesman David Pish said.

He criticized the group as choosing only five out of hundreds of votes that relate to women.

Symms spokesman David Pearson ticked off a list of the senator's reasons for all his votes, which included opposition to federally funded abortion counseling.

Shelley patrons back renewed school levy

SHELLEY (AP) — Shelley School District patrons have solidly supported a renewed 10-year plant facility tax levy, after twice voting down an increase this year.

The district faces a $429,000 deficit and officials say $189,000 still needs to be eliminated from the budget to balance it at $7.6 million.

The renewal passed by 82 percent Tuesday, easily surpassing the two-thirds' majority needed.

The levy will bring in $191,000 per year, the same amount as the previous one-for-building-maintenance-and-bus-purchases.

In April and May elections, patrons voted down a proposal to increase that amount by $70,000 per year.

Aryans: High court ruling will 'deal a death blow' to groups

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — A recent U.S. Supreme Court ruling that cross burning is protected free speech will "deal a death blow" to human rights groups, the Aryan Nations Church says.

But human rights leaders said the decision only allows supremacist groups to express their feelings. Taking actions, such as committing malicious harassment crimes, still can get a person in trouble, they said.

On Monday the justices unanimously struck down a St. Paul, Minn., ordinance banning the burning of crosses or the display of swastikas or other racist symbols that cause anger, alarm or resentment.

"It's the beginning of the end to so-called hate laws," and groups such as the Kootenai County Task Force on Human Relations, said Floyd Cochran, Aryan Nations spokesman. He also mentioned the Seattle-based Northwest Coalition Against Malicious Harassment.

Carl Franklin, Aryan Nations' chief of staff, said, "We think it is a great step forward in restoring First Amendment rights to our church. I think the justices were forced to recognize that the cross is a religious symbol."

Marilyn Shuler, director of the Idaho Human Rights Commission, disagreed. "We've always said you could stand on the street corner and say such things as all blacks are bad...there's nothing illegal."

"If you're a black person and you're being harassed by an individual, that's a different thing," she said.

Bill Wassmuth, former Catholic priest in Coeur d'Alene and now director of the Northwest Coalition, said premature conclusions shouldn't be drawn from the Supreme Court ruling.

Idaho adopted a malicious harassment law in 1983 as the Aryan Nations and other white supremacist organizations were gaining a foothold in northern Idaho. It's a felony carrying penalties up to five years in prison and a fine up to $5,000.

Washington adopted a similar law two years earlier, with a five-year prison sentence and $10,000 fine. That state's Supreme Court is reviewing the law's constitutionality because it bans all cross burning.

Wassmuth said most hate laws, including Idaho's, prohibit actions that threaten or intimidate people on the basis of race or religion. The St. Paul ordinance dealt with actions that aroused anger, not with threats or intimidation, he said.

The ruling "does not simply give a free license for people to start committing malicious harassment crimes," Wassmuth said.

Amtrak strike leaves author stranded in Salt Lake City

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Best-selling author Tom Clancy heard about the possibility of an Amtrak strike a week ago, but gambled it wouldn't interfere with a family vacation to Las Vegas and the southwest.

He lost, and found himself stranded in a private car on a siding at Salt Lake's Rio Grande depot early Wednesday. Still, he saw the rail stoppage as a minor inconvenience.

"Hey, I'm on vacation," said the author of the techno-thrillers "The Hunt for Red October," "Patriot Games" and "The Sum of All Fears."

"I don't get excited about these sorts of things," he said as porters unloaded his family's luggage.

He said his wife and two of his four children would take a bus or rent a car to complete the final 400 miles of their trip to Vegas, where he will attend the American Academy of Achievement June 24-28 at the Mirage Hotel.

While there, Clancy said he'll spend time with friends Gen. Colin Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and FBI Director William Sessions and their wives.

Clancy began his trip about three days ago in Washington. He arrived in Denver early Monday, where his car was attached to Amtrak's Zephyr heading to Salt Lake.

The rest of the day was spent eyeing the scenery en route to Utah. He said he prefers trains to planes, though this is the first time he's rented a private car.

"It's not cheap, but it's fun," he said. "It's either that or mutual funds—And mutual funds are dull."

Besides, he hadn't seen much of the West. "I've never seen the Rockies from the bottom before," he said. "Absolutely magnificent."

He arrived in Utah shortly after midnight. The strike was in force so his car was detached and his family slept at the siding.

Clancy said he didn't know enough about the issues of the strike to comment.

Officers buy fireworks from Indians

AUBURN, Wash. (AP) — Undercover police searching for illegal fireworks at the Muckleshoot Indian Reservation got a big bang for their buck and fear that others will too.

Auburn undercover police detective Charles Sidelid paid $15 for the illegal, 3-inch-square cube of gunpowder at a firecracker stand on the reservation, and examined it as he sat in his car.

"Can you believe that? This thing could blow up just sitting here," Sidelid said after blowing a cloud of gunpowder off the explosive.

While dry weather forced several communities across the state to restrict fireworks, Auburn authorities are investigating dealers on the Muckleshoot reservation who peddle powerful explosives that may violate federal law.

The tribes can sell many of the items banned by state law, such as bottle rockets and missiles, as long as purchasers don't remove them from the reservations. Authorities acknowledge it would be impossible to try to arrest people who buy the federally-approved fireworks—and then take them off the reservation.

Sidelid went to several fireworks stands, saying he was looking for something big and loud and illegal to live up to a Fourth of July party at his Cle Elum home.

While most places just offered large firecrackers such as M-80s, Sidelid finally was handed the $15 sack called a "Salute Mortar."

The man behind the stand said it was guaranteed to make a boom that could be heard across the valley.

Sidelid said the department will not spend as much time as last year looking for illegal fireworks; but they will take pictures of the fireworks he gathered and give the evidence to the tribe or the federal government.

Food bank to begin statewide distribution

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The Utah Food Bank will begin distributing vegetables and other perishables to needy people statewide using a refrigerated truck, officials said.

Director Brenda-K. Thompson said the expanded services are expected to begin in August. "In the past, when we would receive large donations of fresh produce or other perishable items, we couldn't transport them long distances because we didn't have a refrigerated truck, she said.

Fire scorches 3,000 acres in Washington

ASOTIN, Wash. (AP) — Firefighters Wednesday morning contained a blaze that blackened 3,000 acres of brush and wild grasses in the Snake River Canyon.

The blaze was contained around 5 a.m., but small spot fires were still burning inside fire lines, Asotin County Fire Chief Herman Eiting said.

The fires in a steep, rocky ravine, will be allowed to burn themselves out. Crews were patrolling the area in case winds picked up, Eiting said.

The cause of the fire, about 100 miles south of Spokane was being investigated. No structures were burned, and no injuries were reported.

Straightforward child throws mom curve ball

DEAR ABBY: I have a wonderful 16-year-old daughter. She is very bright — a straight-A student and has been involved in ballet for many years. She knows what she wants in life, and I am sure she will achieve it.

Last week, she asked me if it would be OK for her just once to take the Indian drug peyote, also known as "mushroom." She had heard from friends that it heightens your awareness, and she wants to experience it just once. She loves all kinds of music, and she feels that this would help her to have a deeper understanding of it. I was very upset when she told me this, but she assured me that she would not take the drug without my approval. Abby, I have never taken nor experimented with drugs in my life and I am so proud of my daughter, but now I am worried about her.

Is it possible that this is not an addictive drug and that she would take it only once? We are very close, and I don't want to make a mistake. In addition, I have two younger daughters. What kind of example would this set for them?

Dear Abby
Abigail VanBuren

— CONCERNED LOS ANGELES MOTHER

DEAR MOTHER: How fortunate you are to have a daughter who is so straight and honest with you. Peyote (also known as mesquite) is a hallucinogenic. It is also an illegal substance. Since it is easy to become addicted to substances that produce feelings of euphoria, my advice is to commend your daughter for her honesty, give her a hug, and tell her that you cannot give your approval.

DEAR ABBY: What a beautiful letter from "Thankful in Madras, Calif." — the woman who said no one gave her a shower when she was married, but on her wedding day she received the greatest gift in the world — a wonderful husband.

Abby, I would like to share something that I keep in front of my computer as well as a copy in my purse to remind me to be grateful for the many blessings I have: "So much to be given to me; I have no time to ponder over that which has been denied."
— Helen Keller
Thanks, Abby!

— PAT NORDMAN, DE LAND, FLA.

DEAR PAT: Thank you for a beautiful addition to my collection of "keepers." Helen Keller heads my list of most admired women.

DEAR ABBY: One more letter about how some people try to take advantage of teen-age baby sitters.

I babysat a lot when I was in junior high school. I never just sat; I always straightened up the place and did the dishes after I got the kids' bath and put to bed.
One Saturday night when I arrived to baby-sit, "Mrs. Doe" informed me that they and their out-of-town guests were going 60 miles east to ski. The last thing she said before leaving was, "It's going to take us an hour and a half to get there, so we will start paying you then."

Needless to say, that was the last time I baby-sat for that family. My parents told me I should have replied, "Please give me a call at my house when you get there, and I will go right over to your house and start watching your children."
— GLENWOOD SPRINGS, COLO.

Most teen-agers do not know the facts about drugs, AIDS, and how to prevent unwanted pregnancy. It's all in Abby's updated, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send a business-size, self-addressed envelope; plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Revisit the Kelton stage at Malad this week

BLISS — "The Kelton Stage Revisited" is this week's program at the Malad George State Park, located off I-84 south of Bliss.
The tour begins at 7 p.m. Friday at the picnic shelter of the park. Interpreter Ian Sampson will greet visitors and everyone will car pool to the nearby Kelton historic site for a one-hour tour of the area.
Remnants of the Kelton Road, in operation from 1869 to 1879, are wagon wheel ruts in basalt rock and the site of the old Kelton bridge used by freighters and immigrants to cross the Malad River. Sampson said he will show visitors Oregon Trail remnants and unusual geologic features during the free tour.

Horoscope

IF JUNE 25 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: During August, important domestic adjustment takes place — includes change of environment, serious consideration relating to residence; lifestyle; investment in property; marital status. Pisces, Virgo persons play significant roles in your life. You may not be religious in orthodox sense, but you are spiritual. You seek perfection, can be your own most severe critic. September and October will be your most productive, memorable, romantic months of this year.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Try as you may, it is practically impossible for you to do anything wrong. Cyclic high, powerful, spells intensity, results and profit. Emphasize personality, initiative, get to heart of matters.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Study Aries message. Don't fall in love with objects, possessions. Let go of situation, relationship that drains energy, funds. Secret meeting resolves dilemma. Dis: play courage of convictions.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Obtain valuable hints by reading Aries, Taurus messages. Emphasize first impression, new direction, independence, participation in pioneering project. Associate declares: "I wouldn't be here without you!"

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Delicacy is over — cycle promises action, unorthodox procedures. Family member who was reticent will now say, "I'm in this with you all the way!" Leo, Aquarius natives figure prominently.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 23): Cyclic highlights teaching and learning; investigation, giving full lip to intellectual curiosity. Recent concern relating to "body image" will be eliminated. Step right up and address the people!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Read between lines, keep options open, be willing to revise, review, to clear down for ultimate purpose of rebuilding on more suitable structure. Missing paraphernalia located close to home.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Study Leo, Virgo messages. Emphasize on investigation, ability to discuss motives, to analyze character. Individual attracted to you begins to flirt. Protect self at close quarters.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Attention revolves around harmony, music, greater awareness of other cultures. You'll receive bad news but flowers, candy symbolizing affection, esteem. Taurus plays paramour role.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Those who thought you were befuddled will be in for rude awakening. Goal is in sight, you see it clearly. Emphasis on creativity, variety, thrill of discovery. Virgo represented.

CAPRICORN — (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): What others thought would be difficult you handle with aplomb, possibly declaring, "That is a piece of cake!" Accept challenge of deadline. Test durability of product. Cancer native involved.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Long-range prospects, become crystal clear. Locate legal documents, short trip involved, telephonic communication from relative buoyal spirits. Individual previously neutral will become ally.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): New approach brings desired results. You'll locate item that had been lost, missing or stolen. Cycle high, especially for financial affairs.

1st-round picks - B11

PORTLAND, Ore. — Orlando, Charlotte and Minnesota cashed the most valuable bounty of college centers in NBA draft history Wednesday.

LSU's Shaquille O'Neal, Georgetown's Alonzo Mourning and Duke's Christian Laettner can expect to make as much as $10 million next season and have an impact on the balance of power in the NBA for a dozen years.

Only in 1968, when Elvin Hayes, Wes Unseld, Bob Kauffman and Tom Boerwinkle were the first four picks, have as many as three college centers taken the top spots in the NBA draft.

"This was a pretty good draft for big men championship in the first year; things take time.

"I'll learn the ropes, get my feet wet and, after that I'm going to be a good player. I think I'll be pretty hard to stop. I think I can average 14 points, nine rebounds, three blocks, something like that."

Mourning will join potential all-stars Larry Johnson — last year's No. 1 pick — and Kendall Gill to form an outstanding nucleus of young players with the Hornets.

"I have a strong feeling I'll be in camp on time and my contract will be settled," Mourning said. "I'm excited about coming to Charlotte and joining all the other fine talent there. I feel my biggest asset is

Drama holds Centre Court while attention focuses elsewhere

The Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — It was a comedy of errors, Goran Ivanisevic's 34-ace show with a switch-hitting serve and a wrong-handed rally.

It was like Roger Clemens striking out 18, pausing for a pie fight, losing control, then striking out a few more to win.

Power tennis, often derided as the plague of modern tennis, never was more fun to watch than the duel of speed and wit Wednesday at Wimbledon between Ivanisevic and Mark Woodford.

Ivanisevic clocked 129 mph on the radar gun with his sky serves, recorded the most aces in a Wimbledon match in 16 years, and finally prevailed 6-4, 6-4, 6-7 (7-4), 6-3.

"This was a performance that only the privileged holders of Centre Court seats could enjoy on a day that drew most-TV cameras and fans to other matches.

It lacked the sex appeal that lured squealing teen-agers girls to Andre Agassi's 5-7, 6-1, 7-5, 7-5 victory over Andrei Chesnokov, and the drama that kept fans late at Pete Sampras' 28-ace, 7-6 (7-2), 7-6 (7-4), 6-7 (9-7), 6-4 victory over Todd Woodbridge.

"I missed the upset quality of Julie Halard, No. 23, beating No. 5 Arantxa Vicar-seeded Arantxa Sanchez-Vicario lost to Franca's Julie Halard 3-6, 6-2, 3-6.

Sanchez Vicario 6-3, 2-6, 6-3; and the near-upset of No. 4 Martina Navratilova by Kimberly Po in a suspended match. Navratilova, the nine-time champion, was run ragged by Po in the second set and looked ready to be beaten at 6-2, 3-6 when she requested a halt to play. Po, a Wimbledon newcomer, deferred to her elder.

Ivanisevic-Woodford certainly didn't rank among the highest seeds of the day — women's No. 1 Monica Seles beat Sabine Appelmans 6-3, 6-2, and men's No. 2 Stefan Edberg beat Gary Muller 7-6 (7-3), 6-3, 7-6 (7-4).

All the match between Ivanisevic and Woodford had, and it had it in abundance, was brute force countered by finesse, humor and gamesmanship that produced exquisite entertainment.

Ivanisevic, a gangly giant from Croatia, made his first mark on Centre Court two years ago at 19 when he almost upset Boris Becker in the semifinals. No longer a surprise, he served the most aces in a Wimbledon match since Britain's John Feaver's 42 with a wooden racket in a five-set loss against John Newcombe in 1976.

Newcombe watched Wednesday's match and recalled his own battle against Feaver. "That's a record I wouldn't mind losing," Newcombe said. "My arm was

Powell outjumps Lewis; Reynolds maintains hope

The Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — World record-holder Mike Powell outduelled Carl Lewis in their highly anticipated long jump confrontation that ended anticlimactically, while Butch Reynolds' dramatic and emotional bid to make the U.S. Olympic team continued without interruption Wednesday night.

Powell, who ended Lewis' magnificent 10-year, 65-meet winning streak with a world record 29 feet, 4 1/2 inches, at the World Championships, beat him for the second straight time. This time, the electricity surrounding their competition was lacking.

Powell's winning jump was 28-3 1/2, the best in the world this year, on his third attempt. After that, he passed his final three jumps. His only other fair jump was 27-10 1/2. He fouled once, on a jump that appeared to be close to his world record.

Lewis, who pushed Powell to the world record at the 1991 World Championships with the first three 29-foot jumps of his career, settled for second at 28-0, the 65th time in his remarkable career he reached that distance.

Lewis' other fair jumps were 26-4 1/2 and 27-8 1/2, before he fouled, then passed his final two attempts.

The runner-up finish put Lewis on the Olympic team, giving him the opportunity to become the first three-time long jump gold medalist in the Games' history.

It also was retribution for failing to make the team in the 100 meters and losing a chance for a third straight gold medal in that event. Lewis finished sixth in the 100 last Saturday.

After the competition, Powell and Lewis, who are not the best of friends, congratulated each other.

Reynolds, running on adrenaline as much as talent, finished second in his semifinal heat of the men's 400-meter race at the U.S. Olympic trials, advancing to Friday night's

NFL pair testifies league rules restrict movement

The Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — Frank Minnifield and Niko Noga told jurors in the NFL antitrust trial Wednesday that the league's free agency system has unfairly restricted them from choosing where they want to work.

"I believe pro football players should have rights like everyone else in this room. I just don't believe that another man should stop another man from working," said Minnifield, a defensive back with the Cleveland Browns.

Minnifield, Noga and the six other players who are suing the NFL claim the league's free agency system has cost them money and the opportunity to test their worth on an open market.

All eight were free agents in 1990 but were restricted under "Plan B," which allows teams to protect 37 players with the rest becoming unrestricted free agents. A protected player can accept offers from other teams, but the player's current team is given the right to match any offer. If it declines to match, it gets compensation.

Minnifield testified that he solicited offers from other teams when his 1990 contract negotiations with the Browns bogged down.

But the eight-year NFL player said he received no offers despite being selected to play in the Pro Bowl four times in the late 1980s.

Minnifield then asked to be traded. He said Atlanta was interested in trading for him and offered to pay him $125,000 a year, more than the Browns were offering.

But Minnifield said he nixed the deal because that wasn't a big enough pay increase to justify uprooting his family and playing under a defensive system he didn't feel was right for him.

Sizzling Braves down Giants behind Smoltz pitching

ATLANTA (AP) — John Smoltz pitched a two-hitter and struck out 10 as the streaking Atlanta Braves beat the San Francisco Giants 5-0 Wednesday for their third straight shutout and fifth consecutive victory.

The Braves finished 11-1 on their homestand, the most successful in Atlanta history.

Smoltz (8-5) gave up a two-out single to Will Clark in the first inning and another two-out single to Clark in the ninth. Smoltz, who retired 17 straight batters starting in

NEW YORK (AP) — Dwight Gooden got his first win in a month and doubled in a run as the New York Mets won their fourth straight.

Gooden (5-4) allowed six hits in eight innings, striking out three and giving up an intentional walk. The right-hander had three straight no-decisions following two losses after defeating San Francisco 6-3 on May 23.

Tewksbury, pitching on three days' rest, threw 6-1-3 shutout innings and the St. Louis Cardinals avoided a three-game swing.

CINCINNATI (AP) — Hal Morris hit a three-run homer and Glenn Briggs had a two-run, pinch-hit double as Cincinnati beat Houston in a game that featured a bench-clearing brawl.

The brawl broke out after Morris homered during a six-run Reds' rally in the fifth inning.

Pete Harnisch (3-7) threw the next pitch behind Reggie Sanders' head, triggering a free-all that held up play for eight minutes.

Harnisch, Briggs, Reds reliever Rob Dibble and Astros coach Ed Egners were ejected for their part in the fight.

UNLV accused

LAS VEGAS (AP) — The head of the Clark County grand jury says an investigation of problems at UNLV has uncovered evidence that crimes were committed and that several public officials and private citizens may be involved.

Forewoman Patricia Randall says there also is evidence that federal laws, state civil laws and state ethics codes may have been broken. Her accusations came in a letter to Legislative Counsel Lorne Makiweich.

Randall said the grand jury will investigate crimes that fall under its jurisdiction. But she offered to turn over all other evidence to the Legislative Commission's investigating committee.

Orioles down Brewers

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Leo Gomez singled to break a ninth-inning tie Wednesday night, sending the Baltimore Orioles past the Milwaukee Brewers 8-4 Wednesday night.

Randy Milligan drew a leadoff walk in the ninth from Darren Leonard (2-2) and took third on Joe Orsulak's hit-and-run single. Gomez followed with a single past the drawn-in infield for a 5-4 lead.

Then came another run of tall players, with Notre Dame's LaPhonso Ellis going to Denver, Tom Grottoles of North Carolina State to Washington, Maryland's Walt Williams to Sacramento and Arkansas' Todd Day to Milwaukee.

That made seven of the top eight picks 6-8 or taller.

Williams, touted as this year's "next-Magic Johnson," is believed capable of playing point guard, shooting guard or small forward at 6-8. Day also is 6-8, but was strictly an outside player as the Razorbacks' career leader in scoring.

Birds may have weathered cold

By Larry Hovey
Times-News writer

JEROME — Just when it appeared some good might come out of a drought-stricken spring, it had to get cold and rain or snow for the better part of three days.

The good — perhaps the only plus of the sixth straight year of drought — might have been an excellent weather hatching season which would have resulted in a strong rebounding of Idaho's forest and sage grouse.

There is a sneaking suspicion among Fish and Game Department biologists that a fair percentage of sage grouse and sharp-tailed grouse chicks may have hatched early enough to build up a constitution strong enough to withstand the rigors of the three-day period.

That basically is because there was every indication that the open-country grouse had taken advantage of the good weather to

There was every indication that the open-country grouse had taken advantage of the good weather to bring off broods as much as 10 days to two weeks before the cold snap bring off broods as much as 10 days to two weeks early.

"Our concern right now is for blue and ruffed grouse," says Biologist Randy Smith, noting the indication of early production was not as great among those species.

But for those Magic Valley hunters taking a look at the pheasant situation, don't get your hopes up. Yes, pheasants obviously were earlier than usual in their mating and production but unfortunately, so was haying.

"It's a little difficult to say with the certainty we could the past couple of years when (Tom) Macder had his pheasant study going on in Gooding County," says Region 4 Wildlife Manager Craig Kvale.

"But our observation was that pheasants were earlier and it is for certain that there was more alfalfa mowed in the last week of May than just about any year I can remember."

"So while it appears that the peak of the hatch may have been one to two weeks early, so was hay cutting so there wasn't any advantage. One advantage could be, however, that due to the early nest destruction, more hens might try a re-nesting effort. But that is conjecture."

The department was looking for help in sage grouse production since all indicators showed a major decline in that species' population the past year.

"Our lek (strutting ground) counts showed an overall decrease of 34 percent from 1991," Kvale said. "We usually census each lek three times during the displaying season and usually count the most birds on the last visit. This year all the high counts came on the second one."

The annual "wing bee" gave the department the sad news that 1991 was one of the worst production seasons in Magic Valley history.

"While the average usually runs 50 to 55 percent, last year's success of only 20 percent," Kvale said. The area took a major cold, wet walloping over the Memorial Day weekend.

Additionally, department observers spotted an unusually large number of yearling males hanging around the fringes of the leks.

Drought devastates mating pairs

The Associated Press

WYAN — The six-year western drought is drying up eastern Idaho's Grays Lake National Wildlife Refuge, threatening efforts to rebuild whooping crane populations.

"We see this year as probably the worst drought year in recent times," said Rod Drewien, a University of Idaho research biologist. "There has been but one year out of six that the major portion of Grays Lake marsh has not dried up."

He said at least 95 percent of the 22,000-acre marsh will dry up again this year, and it will probably happen earlier than it did in 1986.

And possibly the most notable impact has come on the 17-year effort to regenerate the country's endangered whooping crane population.

Beginning in 1975, whooping crane eggs were placed under sandhill cranes to raise the young as foster parents. The eggs were taken from the Texas whooping crane flock that nests at Wood Buffalo National Park in northwestern Canada.

Refuge manager Mike Fisher said the Texas population was down to 40 when the program began and is now over 120. At Grays Lake, the population reached 36 before the plug was pulled on the wetlands and the dried up marsh left the cranes susceptible to predators.

"Now, we are down to about a dozen, with only four females," Fisher said.

The decline of North American waterfowl populations, underscored by the whooping crane, is among the issues the Western Governors Conference will consider next week in Jackson, Wyo. A cooperative restoration program involving Canada and Mexico as well as private conservation groups will be before the governors.

"Waterfowl are as important as anything else in the overall ecology,"

Hundreds of geese likely were poisoned

The Associated Press

BENSON, Utah — Wildlife officials say a chemical insecticide may have been used to kill hundreds of Canada geese in the Horseshoe area of Cutler Reservoir during the spring.

And Utah Division of Wildlife Resources Conservation Officer Craig Tabor said those responsible could face federal charges of illegal taking of migratory waterfowl and illegal use of controlled poisons.

Tabor said Tuesday that he and fellow officers began finding dead geese in the area just north of Logan as early as May 6 and since have found hundreds more.

"There was an obscene number of dead geese," he said.

Tabor said wildlife officers first noticed the dead geese in an alfalfa field and in a nearby goose nesting area.

The alleged poisonings occurred in the same vicinity where one Benson farmer several years ago was charged with shooting and killing geese he claimed were foraging in his cultivated fields.

Goose depredation in the same area has been a touchy and controversial matter ever since.

Tabor said he collected 29 adult geese and 126 goslings in one day, although the total number of dead birds is considerably higher.

The birds appeared to die suddenly, some in mid-stride. Tabor said the goslings were lined up in neat rows, in much the same way they usually follow their parents.

"We can safely assume more were killed, and that they died of suspicious causes," he said. "There were entire broods that died. We suspect the geese were killed by poison."

Tabor said he and other officers collected dead birds and took soil and plant samples as evidence, which was sent to a crime laboratory in Oregon to be tested for poison.

Results of those tests are not yet available. Tabor said. If it's confirmed the birds were poisoned, test results will be the evidence used in the possible prosecution of one or more individuals.

No citations have been issued, but several suspects from the Benson area have been interviewed, Tabor said.

Tasty treat

A screech owl feeds its young. Raptor chicks are especially susceptible to human interference this time of year. Free-roaming dogs are a problem too.

Pick up cuddly critters at your own risk: It's fun but illegal

JEROME — Young wildlife is at risk this time of year when it is vulnerable just after being born or leaving the nest.

We have a particular problem with people picking up young creatures they think are abandoned or want to take them home for pets.

Almost all wildlife in Idaho is protected or hunted as game during scheduled seasons. Therefore, it is unlawful to have them in a person's possession. The offense is punishable under a misdemeanor law, which calls for up to a minimum of $25 and maximum of $1,000 fine and up to six months in jail.

Raptors — hawks, eagles, falcons and owls — are susceptible because they take so long to learn to fly. During this week to two-week period, the parents keep track of their young and feed them as they learn how to hunt on their own.

People will find them on the ground in their back yards or out in fields and want to carry them off.

Stu Murrell
Outdoors

The best approach is to leave them alone and let the parents care for them.

If a truly injured raptor is found, then notify the Department of Fish and Game and we will attempt to rehabilitate it.

Another problem at this time of year are free-roaming dogs, particularly the hunting breeds, which harass or catch ground-nesting birds such as pheasants and quail.

Even if the bird is not killed, it may abandon its nest if disturbed. Dog owners should keep their pets kenneled or under supervision when they take them out for a run.

Surveys in the schools of Region 4 have shown a significant percentage of students have BB or pellet guns and are shooting many innocent birds.

The only birds that are unprotected in Idaho and can be hunted by these methods are starlings, English sparrow and wild pigeons. All the rest are either protected or can be hunted as game birds.

The youngsters should learn how to identify the English sparrow as there are numerous other species of protected sparrows that are similar in appearance.

I also tell the hunter education students they shouldn't be shooting some person's tame racing pigeons but only the wild ones that are coming out of the canyon or feeding in feed lots, etc.

Children too young to know about laws are inclined to pick up cuddly critters and bring them home.

My advice to parents is to explain how young wildlife do not do well as pets and they should return them to the site where they were caught so the parents can continue to care for them.

Wolves would begin in northeastern park area

The Associated Press

CASPER, Wyo. — If wolves are returned to Yellowstone National Park, they will probably be placed first in a one-acre pen behind the Lamar Ranger Station.

The Lamar Valley, in the northeastern section of Yellowstone, is home to some of the park's largest elk and bison herds.

As wolf habitat, it is unsurpassed in North America, federal biologists say.

Moreover, there is evidence that the predators lived in the area for some 9,000 years before they were destroyed by man through the 1930s.

Whether wolves will be reintroduced to northwestern Wyoming is still uncertain and is in the midst of federal review. While conservationists welcome the idea of turning wolves to their native region, ranchers in the area fear the predators will attack their livestock. Hunters worry the wolves will decimate prized big-game herds.

And even if wolves are released to the Lamar Valley, there is no guarantee they will survive there.

The only other effort to relocate wild

Judge rules wolf release lawsuit comes too early

The Associated Press

LANDER — A federal judge has ruled that it's premature to take to court the issue of whether wolves should be released in the Greater Yellowstone Area.

Chief U.S. District Judge Clarence Brimmer dismissed the lawsuit filed by Jim and Cat Urbigkit of Lander, saying their concerns must first be addressed in the federal environmental review process.

It is important to note that the government has not taken a final stand on the issue of wolf reintroduction," Brimmer wrote in his decision last month. ("The Urbigkits' arguments are well taken, but must be dismissed on the basis that these issues are not yet ripe for judicial review.")

Whether to release wolves to northwestern Wyoming is fiercely controversial. Ranchers oppose the release, saying the predators would attack their livestock. Conservationists believe wolves should return to their home and be part of the natural ecosystem.

The Urbigkits oppose the release of wolves because, they say, the animals already exist in the area and introducing a

All were simply dropped off in the new area. In less than a year, all were dead. One was hit by a car and killed. One was caught in a coyote trap and shot. The other two were killed by hunters.

Mech and Steven Fritts, the Rocky Mountain wolf coordinator for the USFWS, said they will recommend a "soft release" of wolves for the reintroduction effort in Yellowstone.

Wild wolves captured in Canada would be placed in a large pen behind the Lamar Ranger Station or on Slough Creek, a tributary of the Lamar.

The transplant would probably occur in the late summer, when wolves naturally disperse.

The wolves, probably three pairs initially, would be kept in the pen for several months to acclimate to the area.

They would be fed elk meat and gradually the elk meat would be placed outside the pen, up to one-quarter mile later. Biologists hope the wolves would hunt elk on the own.

The wolves would be fitted with radio collars.

wolves in the Lower 48 failed: David Mech, a wolf biologist for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service tried to relocate wolves from Minnesota to Michigan in 1974. He used two wild males and two females.

Float up to bluegills' front door

By James J. Krunch
Times-News correspondent

Fortunately, one of the rites spring happens to be the arrival of bluegills to their spawning beds. During late spring or early summer (depending on one's definition of spring and summer) bluegills move into shallow water to spawn. While in shallow water, bluegills are most accessible to anglers. In fact, any angler equipped with a float tube, fly rod, and waders, should plan on fish for the skiller.

Float tubes are the ideal approach to spring bluegill fishing. The float tube allows fisherman to cruise the edges of shallow waterbeds where many bluegills concentrate prior to spawning. As spring progresses and bluegills begin digging out their actual spawning beds, casting beneath overhanging shoreline vegetation will consistently produce the best results.

Shoreline anglers must negotiate obstacles such as trees and bushes while backcasting. Float tubes have an unrestricted range of motion. Another element to consider is the concentration of fish. Don't forget that springtime bluegills will be concentrated beneath overhanging vegetation - difficult, if not impossible, to reach from a shoreline position. If not in a tube or boat, fisherman cast only along the edges of overhanging cover and are forced to bypass the most productive areas.

Any fish located in shallow water will bolt from an approaching shadow and bluegills are no exception. Shadows from shoreline anglers will frighten many fish off their spawning beds and send them scurrying for the safety of deeper water. Fishermen approaching spawning sites from a tube don't throw a shadow on the water and don't frighten the fish.

Float tubes also present some advantages over boats. The primary float tube advantage is stealth. Float tubes produce a low silhouette because the fisherman is suspended in the water. This low silhouette allows the float tube to move within easy casting distance of spawn sites without detection. An additional advantage pertaining to stealth is a quiet approach. Tubes are powered by force fins and not oars or paddles which splash in the water (vibrations from surface disturbances put fish on alert). Fly rods are also ideal for bluegills on the beds. The bluegills will concentrate in shallow area where the bottom of the lake or pond is cluttered with weeds, rocks, or sunken brush.

By simply using a floating fly line, these underwater obstacles are avoided since the offering is suspended above the bottom. Fly patterns for springtime bluegills need not be complicated. Although many bluegills are taken on small, cork-bodied "poppers" that were designed primarily for this species, the average trout fisherman has a very useful and effective arsenal already in his vest. Here's an, pleasant tail, and flash-bait nymphs are generally productive patterns. Dry fly patterns such as the Adams, humpy, or caddis are excellent choices for bluegills, especially during early morning or late evening. Wolly buggers, mickey fins, and muddlers will all catch fish. The key to bluegill lies in size. Generally, flies from sizes No. 6 to No. 18 are adequate, with smaller sizes the best choice.

Summer heat pushes populace to the hills

TWIN FALLS — Recreational sites throughout the Sawtooth National Forest are receiving heavy use as vacationers take to the hills to escape scalding valley temperatures.

Wildflowers are in bloom at many locations, offering mountain travelers a special technicolor view of the landscape.

First danger in the forest is rated high to very high and visitors are asked to be careful with all flammable materials.

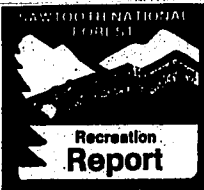

The Forest Service reminds visitors it is illegal to possess and use fireworks in the national forest. Fireworks will be confiscated.

The Burley district reports all trails and campgrounds open. Water is available at Lake Cleveland where campsites are $5 per night. Family sites at Thompson Flat are $3 per night.

The Twin Falls district has all campgrounds open with Pettit and Upper Penstemon commanding $3 rents.

Third Fork trail system backpackers are cautioned about downed timber.

Good supplies of firewood are available on the Twin Falls district in pre-ferred areas near Monument Peak, Cotton Ridge and Second Fork. Personal use permits may be purchased at the district office in Twin Falls between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. weekdays.

Fishing is reported good on the Fairfield district. All campgrounds are open with full services.

The Sawtooth Recreation Area reports some campgrounds and trails open. Although the high passes still have snow, hikers can get over most sections. Down timber could be a problem.

Visitors to the SNRA may take advantage of special interpretive programs and displays available at headquarters visitor center and at Redfish Lake.

Information on activities, trail conditions and campground suggestions on the SNRA may be obtained by calling 726-7672 or visiting the center which is open from 8 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.

Sanitize your mouth before hunt begins

Knight-Ridder News Service

BIRMINGHAM, Mich. — Attention, hunters: Birmingham inventor George White says telters can kill your chances of a date with a deer.

White — a lifelong bow hunter and retired head of a Birmingham auto parts sales company — has come up with a bad-breath solution more complicated than breath mints. He recently got a patent on a plastic mask with a charcoal filter that he says is a surefire way to get close to a wild something in the woods. "It's something in the breath does it," he says of a deer's almost uncanny ability to sniff out a human lurking nearby, sometimes over hundreds of yards. "It's all those little molecules of moisture when you breathe out. You can see it floating around on a frosty day."

But Glenn Dudderar, a Michigan State University associate professor of fish and wildlife, is skeptical. He says White's invention is another shot into an old hunters' dispute, marked by a crossfire of conflicting anecdotal evidence. As a bow hunter of 30 years, Dudderar has his own theory. "The deer has a highly developed sense of smell that's as good or better than a dog's," Dudderar says. "They smell our breath, our hair, our body odor, our skin, all the odors attached to our clothing. They smell everything that emanates from human beings." A mask can't hurt, but if you want to get close to a deer, put on clean clothes — uncontaminated by human smells — and take a bath with odors soap, he says.

Such a simple and clean deception presumably would be welcome news to many hunters wedded to another theory, which requires them to dab themselves with fox urine or lotions guaranteed to make them smell like skunks.

But White says drier odors from clothes and the body do not travel through quiet air like the humid clouds of one's breath.

In separate tests over past two years near the northern Michigan community of Fairview, he says, his mask and filter enabled him to sit quietly under a tree as several dozen deer browsed on carrots he had set out to attract them. All of the deer ventured within 30 yards, many came within 15 yards and at least 10 browsed within a bow's length without detecting his presence, he says.

Fisher said. And Drien said the withering of waterfowl habitat is devastating the birds. "The water is so poor that a number of the old breeding pairs don't even try to nest," he said. "They just stand around all day and look up at the sky all summer... By midsummer we found ducks walking around with their brood, just walking across pastures and down roads, looking for water and feed. The young don't survive."

Fisher believes if ducks are a species that indicates the health of the environment, "then that duck's problem becomes our problem."

new subspecies could harm the existing packs.

In addition, they maintain that if, indeed, wolves already live in Yellowstone, they should be getting the full protection of the Endangered Species Act.

Federal officials currently are preparing an environmental impact statement to determine whether reintroduction — suggested in the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's Northern Rocky Mountain Wolf Recovery Plan — should take place.

The Urbigkists say federal agencies have ignored their contentions that a wolf population already exists in the area and are proceeding as if reintroduction is a certainty. But Brimmer said the determination of whether there is an existing wolf population should be part of the EIS process, and he said the government must listen to the Urbigkists' opinion.

"The (Urbigkists) are entitled to closely pursue the process, and to remind the government of the true objectives of the Endangered Species Act," — the judge wrote. "The government has assured this court that the (Urbigkists)' viewpoint will be considered in the EIS, which assurances are not taken lightly by either the (Urbigkists) or the court."

If the court were to intervene in the EIS, it would "interrupt an enabling process that has already been initiated and would not redress" Urbigkists' concerns, Brimmer continued.

Birds

Despite that, the department found 10 of the 12 routes used in the census showed a decrease in total males — and the number of active leks was down 19 percent.

But in the case of sage grouse and the newly introduced sharp-tailed grouse, the rains and snow will help the chicks that were able to survive it.

The moisture didn't turn the public lands into gardens but it at least provided the possibility of some greenery and forb growth at the lower elevations, where the chicks are hatched and started into life. The hen then follows that greenery into riparian areas or higher elevations where insects and forbs are important until the chicks can make the conversion to sagebrush.

"The survival will be a matter of timing for each individual brood," Kvale said. "Those that were older and could walk into agricultural or riparian areas probably had a good chance of making it. But the smaller chicks, the less chance it has. The little guys can take very little wet and cold."

Meanwhile, Smith is getting a little more excited about the prospect of the South Hills providing good, if not major, ruffed grouse hunting.

"We documented 16 drumming birds — all within a two-mile radius of the release site," said Smith of this spring's drumming.

That is about 14 drummers more than were heard the past two springs of the survivors from an eastern Idaho transplanting.

"There's still a lot of area down there we haven't had the manpower or time to look in yet," Smith continued.

He particularly noted the one area where a Twin Falls father-son hunting group estimated seeing 50 birds last fall, wasn't included in the area canvassed.

"We had one individual who drove three mornings into new areas but he didn't turn up anything," Smith said. "But we're real encouraged by what we have been seeing this year."

Smith said mortality among forest grouse would be difficult to assess because there's little information on the possibility of their hatching season coming early.

He noted that ruffed and blues were largely forest and grove residents and that would provide more shelter than sage grouse could find at lower elevations.

"The young birds are still heavily reliant on insects and probably just about now are starting to turn to some greens in their diets," he said.

The department is trying to put all its data together to formulate proposals for the 1992-93 upland bird seasons. The final draft currently is being written in Boise for this area.

When those are made available, they will be publicized and open houses are planned for July 6 and 7 at Jerome regional headquarters. Those will run from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. July 6 and from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. July 7.

Agencies join forces for waterfowl help

BOISE (AP) — Idaho bird stamp dollars for improving upland game and waterfowl are being stretched further with help from the Twin Falls Ranger District of the Sawtooth National Forest.

Idaho Department of Fish and Game biologists and Twin Falls Range Don Oman have put together three projects in the past several years to help local wildlife.

The Forest Service and Idaho's Habitat Improvement Program split the costs evenly.

The first project completed in 1989 was a 28-acre pond and riparian-habitat 10 miles east of Rogerson.

The Shoshone duck pond was developed in the early 1980s by former Forest Service employee John Claywood. Waterfowl nesting islands were added to the pond. The total cost was $7,000.

Forest Service employees organized a volunteer day to build a mile-long fence around the pond.

"There were 50 to 100 volunteers, including cowboys, sportsmen, Boy Scouts and everyone you can think of," regional wildlife biologist Randy Smith said.

The next year, another $7,000 went to improve the Langford pond. Fish and Game closed the area to beaver trapping so the animals could build the pond.

A fence was built around the 40-acre area.

A livestock trough and moved up water from Arkansas Springs was put in the ranger district.

Smith said he hopes the two agencies will continue to develop at least one cooperative project each year in the ranger district.

"The public gets habitat developed more rapidly when agencies work together."

Bear hunter mixes his facts somewhat

The article in the Outdoor-Recreation section of the June 18 Times-News about Mr. Malone's large bear warrants a response.

Mr. Malone is correct about "the anti-hunting faction becoming a real problem."

However, when one hunting user-group publicly "bash" another user-group (this criticism of hound hunters), this tends to play right into the hands of the anti's.

Regarding Mr. Malone's assertions about houndmen "running off his baits" — he is absolutely correct.

However, one of his baits on Bennett Mountain (actually closer to Glenns Ferry and Hill City than Fairfield) was so close to a public road (less than the 200 yards required by Fish and Game regulations), it was virtually impossible to drive through the area without the dogs scenting any bear that might have been in the vicinity.

Lastly, the article leads the reader to believe that the large bear taken by Mr. Malone was "over his bait" with a bow and arrow.

The facts of the matter are that the large bear was run off of one of his "several baits by hounds" owned by Jerome/Twin Falls houndmen, "traced" by the dogs and then Mr. Malone shot the bear out of the tree with his bow.
