Ex-Pentagon chiefs say POWs left

Former CIA chief James Schlesinger, above, is sworn in at the Senate hearing Monday. Melvin Laird, former defense secretary, emphasizes a point in his testimony, below.

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Two of Richard Nixon's Pentagon chiefs told a congressional panel Monday that the government believed American airmen were left alive in Laos and not returned at the end of the Vietnam War. Separate testimony by Melvin R. Laird and James R. Schlesinger, both of whom served as President Nixon's secretary of defense two decades ago, supported conclusions by leaders of the Senate investigating committee that not all Americans came home at the war's end. "I think it's quite extraordinary when two former secretaries of defense both give evidence documenting that they had information, or they believed personally, that people were alive and not accounted for in Operation Homecoming," Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., chairman of the Select Committee on POW-MIA Affairs, said.

"They have acknowledged publicly that there was evidence people did not come back who should have, that they were held prisoner to the best of our knowledge," Kerry said. The panel also released internal White House and Pentagon documents supporting the suggestion that some in the government believed Americans had been left behind. Laird and Schlesinger appeared as the panel began the first ever under- oath, public questioning of the highest-ranking officials of the Nixon administration about their efforts to win release of American POWs as they negotiated an end to the long, bitter war in Southeast Asia. Henry A. Kissinger, Nixon's national security adviser and secretary of state who conducted the negotiations with the North Vietnamese, was scheduled to undergo questioning today. His former assistant, Alexander Haig, who was later a White House adviser to Nixon, strongly disagreed with the suggestion the administration knew Americans were left behind. Haig, combative and confrontational, said he did not believe the North Vietnamese produced a full accounting of U.S. prisoners. But Haig asserted he saw no evidence that living Americans had been left in captivity, and he strongly questioned the committee's motives in raising the issue now. Also appearing were several former U.S. officials who had negotiated the Paris peace accords that ended the war. William Sullivan, former ambassador to Laos and a participant in the talks, said Americans were dealt with ruthlessly by the loosely organized Pathet Lao. "My guess is that a lot of them were tortured to death, beaten to death, starved to death," Sullivan testified. Laird, a former Wisconsin

Americans' patience running out, envoy tells Russian POW hunters

The Associated Press

MOSCOW — The American co-chairman of a joint POW commission urged Russia on Monday to declare that it is no longer holding American servicemen, and warned that U.S. patience is running out. Malcolm Toon said he had no evidence that American POWs were alive in the Soviet Union. And he acknowledged that an aide to his Russian co-chairman, reformist historian Gen. Dmitri Volkogonov, said recently that Russia had no live American POWs. But that statement, he said, "wasn't sufficiently specific."

"Above all I want a clearer statement from the Russian government that there is no live American POW held in detention in Russian facilities," Toon, a former U.S. ambassador to Moscow, told reporters. Toon did not specify what was wrong with the aide's statement, but he apparently wants something unequivocal from the highest levels. Toon issued the demand — among his most forceful remarks yet concerning the Russians — at the start of a weeklong meeting in Moscow of the Russian-American Bilateral Commission on POWs. Both sides have praised the panel, formed in March by President Bush and Russian President Boris N. Yeltsin, for fostering cooperation among the former Cold War adversaries. But so far it has produced little, other than a list of several dozen U.S. civilians trapped in the Soviet Union after World War II. The commission "must start producing results, because the American public is getting awfully impatient," Toon said. Members of POW organizations and the American Legion complained last summer about the lack of progress, he said. "The feeling back home is that this exercise is not doing very much," he said.

Convention center would need subsidy, study says

By Drew DeSilver
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A consultant's report released Monday doesn't exactly throw cold water on proposals to build a convention center in Twin Falls, but its tone is decidedly lukewarm. Such a facility likely would need government subsidies to survive, according to the report. It also would have to rely on local events for most of its bookings, not major statewide or regional meetings. The report was presented Monday by Paul Jinneman, president of the consulting firm Jinneman, Kennedy, and Associates of Federal Way, Wash., to a convention center task force of the Greater Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce. The report found that, although there was much demand among local businesses and organizations for "larger, higher-quality" meeting facilities, "the vast majority of local and state meeting needs can be met by the facilities currently existing in Twin Falls." Surveys of state association meeting planners, area businesses and organizations indicated a need for a new convention facility, according to the report, "but it is more of a qualitative need for a better, more functional facility versus a larger facility to serve unmet needs." And the report questions whether local groups would pay rental fees for a convention center when, more often than not, they can reserve meeting space in existing hotels for free. The task force probably will commission a "Phase II" study, said chamber director Kent Just. Such a study would investigate possible funding sources, operating costs, size and other matters in greater detail, Just said. The "Phase I" report released Monday cost $15,000, and was paid for by donations from local businesses. The Realities redefining role of U.S.

By Donald M. Rothberg
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Economic and political realities are redefining America's role in a changed but still troubled world. Sending money to governments is out; private sector involvement is in. The industrial democracies usually referred to as the world's richest nations no longer feel that rich. Their leaders are under political pressure to pay more attention to problems at home. "That turning inward is at the root of the monetary crisis that threatens plans for European unity. It also was an underlying theme of President Bush's speech Monday to the United Nations." Bush described the new U.S. approach as an attempt to move beyond the "artificial divisions" of the Cold War era and work within the "continuity of nations." But the changed missions described by the president also reflected a strained domestic budget and the pressures of an election year. The U.S. economy is stagnant and unemployment is high, and Republicans will give to the polls six weeks from Tuesday are described as angry and looking for change. It's the kind of year in which traditional foreign aid has no constituency.

Even Dan Quayle watches 'Murphy'

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — A fictional single mother got in her licks at Vice President Dan Quayle on Monday night, when millions of Americans tuned in "Murphy Brown" to watch the sitcom that entered the national political debate. It was Quayle, a first-time viewer Monday night, who shifted the national focus to "Murphy Brown" when he criticized the CBS series comedy for its title character's decision to become a single parent. "Some might argue that attacking my status as a single mother was nothing more than a cynical bit of election-year posturing," said Brown (Candice Bergen), reacting in an editorial segment on "FYI," the equally fictional news show. "I prefer to give the vice president the benefit of the doubt." These are difficult times for our country and in searching for the causes of our social ills we could choose to blame the media, or the Congress or an administration that's been in power for 12 years, or we could blame me." She agreed with Quayle that a dialogue on family values was needed, but said that limiting the definition of a family to a mother, father and children "seems painfully unfair."

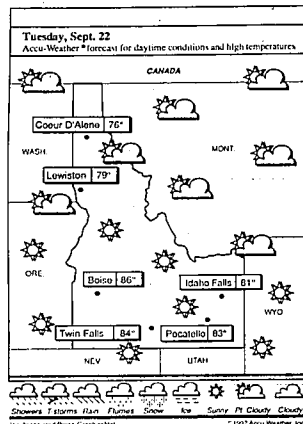

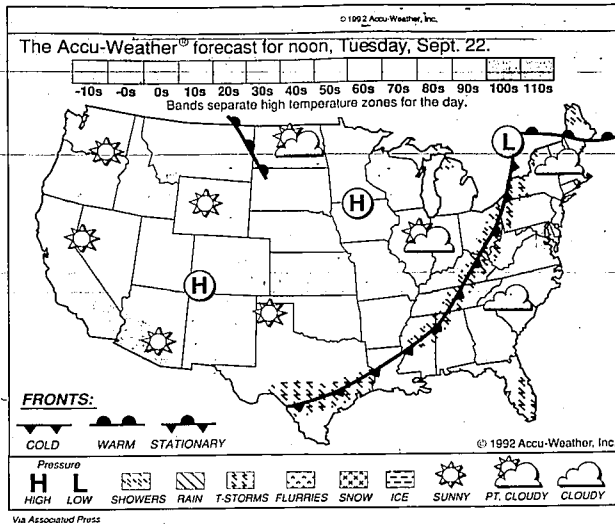

and recognize that whether by choice or circumstance, families come in all shapes and sizes. And ultimately, what really defines a family is commitment, caring and love." Then Murphy Brown introduced single-parent families. It was a moment of high seriousness for a sitcom about a Washington, D.C.-based TV reporter and her co-workers. The series had been a hit almost four years before its producers decided to let the unmarried Murphy become pregnant. Quayle, in a May 19 address in San Francisco, blasted the Murphy Brown character for "mocking the importance of fathers by bearing a child alone, and calling it just another lifestyle choice." Monday's hour-long season premiere, kept under wraps until after the birth of her son. Halfway through the episode, the frazzled new mother heard news footage of Quayle's speech, and said in exasperation, "I'm glamorizing single motherhood? What planet is he on? Look at me, Frank. Am I glamorous? ... "And what was that crack about 'just another lifestyle choice'? ... I didn't just wake up one morning and say, 'Oh, gee, I can't get in for a fact, so I might as well have a baby.'"

Candice Bergen as Murphy Brown holds her baby in a scene from the new season of the CBS series. Frank, her co-worker (Joe Regalbuto), tries to calm her. "Murphy! It's Dan QUAYLE! Just forget about it!" But then the phones began to ring from newspapers around the country. "What is this, slow news day?" Murphy asks. "Just tell the ... go find another story!" Quayle tuned in Monday night with several single mothers at a Washington apartment. Afterward, he insisted that when it comes to his criticism of the program, "Hollywood still doesn't get it."

Heavy thunderstorms rock parts of Midwest, South

The Associated Press

Thunderstorms dumped heavy rain Monday on parts of Midwest and South, bringing flash flood watches in Indiana and Kentucky and a tornado watch in Oklahoma and Texas.

Showers pushed eastward by a warm front curving through the Ohio Valley were prevalent from eastern Tennessee through Kentucky to southern Lower Michigan and Great Lakes region.

Rain also was heavy in the lower Mississippi Valley and the central Gulf Coast region. Benton, in northwestern Louisiana, was deluged with 3.53 inches of rain in two hours Monday morning.

Central Indiana was drenched with 2 to 5 inches of rain by early morning. A flash flood watch was posted there and for parts of Kentucky and Ohio.

—Strong thunderstorms developed in warm, humid air ahead of a cold front slowly crossing central Oklahoma and north-central Texas, where a tornado watch was posted.

Rain also was scattered from Georgia to the middle Atlantic Coast, and a few showers and thunderstorms hit extreme southern Florida.

Dry weather prevailed across the rest of the nation, with sunny skies over much of the western half of the country.

Heavier rainfall totals for the six-hour period ending at 2 p.m. CDT included 1.6 inch at Fort Wayne, Ind.; 1.22 at Indianapolis; 1.1 in Peru, Ind., and .97 at Buffalo, N.Y.

Strong northwesterly winds behind a cold front brought cold air into the north-central United States. Afternoon temperatures were generally in the 50s and 60s, from northeast Montana to northwestern Minnesota.

congressman, was Nixon's defense secretary for four years of the fighting, from 1969 to 1973, when he moved to the White House as presidential adviser to help Nixon battle the growing Watergate scandal.

Schlesinger was Nixon's director of Central Intelligence and became secretary of defense in 1973.

Both testified that downed American airmen were contacted on the ground in Laos by U.S. forces in numbers greater than were ever accounted for. During the peace negotiations with North Vietnam, U.S. officials were given a list of only 10 prisoners in Laos.

"It is evident that the Laotians gave no true accounting of the Americans who had been taken in Laos," Schlesinger said.

Asked directly if the United States left men behind, Schlesinger said: "As of now, I can come to no other conclusion. That does not mean that there are any alive today."

Schlesinger speculated that some others may have been killed in combat on the ground or died of exposure in the jungle.

Laird testified that the Pentagon had solid information, such as letters, eyewitness reports, or direct radio contact, on about 20 American airmen who survived downings in Laos. Laird said he notified Nixon of these estimates in late 1972. Only 10 were released the next year.

Laird did not say how many prisoners he believed were never accounted for, but said he was disappointed by the "short list" provided through the North Vietnamese.

Documents released by Sen. Bob Smith, R-N.H., vice chairman of the committee, show that as many as 350 U.S. airmen were missing or captured in Laos.

Nixon, in a televised address to the nation on March 29, 1973, declared that as a result of the Paris peace accords with North Vietnam, "All of our American POWs are on their way home."

Committee members have asserted that evidence shows that statement was false, and that its acceptance as fact severely damaged subsequent efforts to unearth the truth about missing Americans.

Laird, questioned about Nixon's statement, said he was no longer defense secretary at that time and had no input into the statement. But he said he regretted Nixon made it.

"Phase II" study would cost $7,500 and be funded from similar sources. Just said.

The report recommended three sites along or near Blue Lakes Boulevard North for a convention center.

Within the proposed Canyon Park mixed-use development project, on Blue Lakes between Canyon Springs Road and the Snake River canyon. The site is owned by Nielsen Company.

The Roy Raymond property east of the College of Southern Idaho on North College Road.

The report suggested that the Canyon Park site would be the best choice, "citing among other advantages" "a spectacular view of the Snake River Canyon that would set the convention center apart from all other meeting facilities in Twin Falls, and from many others within the state."

The Roy Raymond site, on the other hand, should "get the only secondary consideration" because it is farther from the interstate than the other two sites. Also, if a center is built there and linked in some way to CSI, it might face restrictions on serving alcohol.

The center, if built, should not include a major hotel, the consultants said, because Twin Falls' current supply of hotel rooms should be sufficient until 1997 or 1999.

They cited the Nampa Civic Center as a model for a Twin Falls convention center. The Nampa facility cost $3.5 million to build, has about 25,600 square feet of meeting and exhibition space, and hosted some 700 events in 1991.

"Foreign aid as we've known it needs to be transformed," the president told a U.N. audience that included scores of nations that have benefited from U.S. largesse over the past 40 years.

He restated the traditional U.S. commitment to assist the have-not nations of the world, but stated that "it should be done by promoting the private sector to build these new economies, not by fostering dependency within traditional government-to-government foreign aid."

What Bush told the United Nations was a restatement of the approach he has used for assisting Russia and the other nations that emerged from the wreckage of the Soviet Union.

There is general agreement among

Western democracies that even together they do not have enough money to rescue the Russian economy with direct aid. Far more important is technical assistance needed to establish such business systems as a banking system and a legal code to govern contracts and private property.

Much of the U.S. aid to Russia has been in the form of agricultural credits that will help Moscow purchase grain from U.S. farmers. It helps the Russians while boosting U.S. agricultural exports.

The concept of technical assistance rather than direct aid was also a theme of the U.S. approach to peacekeeping. Bush acknowledged that the need for enhanced peacekeeping capabilities has never been greater. He promised to cooperate in joint efforts and to help train peacekeeping forces. But he also made it clear he was not offering a blank check for use of American troops.

Member states, as always, must retain the final decision on the use of their troops," he said.

While Bush was at the United Nations, world finance ministers were meeting in Washington. They also were confronting difficult problems with diminished resources.

Plans for moving toward a single European currency were shaken by a week of frenzied fluctuations in exchange rates.

Germany was resisting pressure to lower interest rates, which most other nations believe are too high. But the nations participating in the annual meeting of the International Monetary Fund also expressed the view that U.S. rates are too low.

Bush offers support to peacekeeping expansion

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — President Bush offered U.S. support Monday to strengthen international peacekeeping and urged overhauling foreign aid programs to get away from Third World handouts.

"We propose to alter fundamentally the focus of U.S. assistance programs to building strong, independent economies that can become contributors to a healthy, growing global economy," Bush said in a speech to the U.N. General Assembly.

He did not offer to commit U.S. troops to the widening peacekeeping operations of the United Nations in the post-Cold War era. Nor did the president directly commit fresh U.S. funds.

But he enthusiastically endorsed the call by U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali for a new agenda "to strengthen the United Nations' ability to prevent, contain and resolve conflict across the globe."

Some 40,000 troops are serving in U.N. peacekeeping operations.

"From Cyprus and Lebanon to Cambodia and Croatia," Bush said,

"the blue-ribbon has become a symbol of hope amid all that hostility."

Bush also backed an indefinite extension of an international agreement designed to block the spread of nuclear weapons.

At home, he proposed transferring funds from U.S. foreign-aid programs to create a $1 billion fund to support American businessmen in providing expertise, goods and services in countries converting to free-market economies.

Some 40,000 U.S. jobs would be created under the program, the White House estimated.

Bush's call for revamping foreign aid could lead to a bipartisan effort if he wins re-election. A prominent Senate Democrat, Patrick Leahy of Vermont, has proposed reconsidering the $14 billion U.S. program next year and several senior House Democrats have called for major changes in the past.

Since World War II, Bush said, foreign aid has served as a Cold War weapon — and he said it still serves security interests.

"But foreign aid, as we've known it, needs to be transformed," he said.

"The notion of the handout to less-developed countries needs to give way to cooperation in mutually profitable economic relationships."

Bush said that as nations rely more on the private sector and free markets the higher their growth rate.

In supporting a larger peacekeeping role, Bush said that "member states must always retain the final decision on use of their troops."

Still, he acknowledged that "robust peacekeeping requires men and equipment that only member states can provide."

The president added, "These forces must be available on short notice on the request of the Security Council with the approval, of course, of the governments providing them."

He urged the scores of presidents, prime ministers and foreign ministers assembled for the annual special session to resist "any temptation 'to turn inward' and not 'to build walls against anything new.'"

"To turn inward and retreat from the world is to invite disaster and defeat," he said.

He was applauded at the end of the speech.

Asked about it afterward, British Foreign Secretary Douglas Hurd told reporters, "It was full of interesting ideas... especially on the peacekeeping side."

"We have to study it," said Chinese Ambassador Li Daoyi.

"A very positive speech," said Marjack Grouding, the U.N. under-secretary-general for peacekeeping.

Bush said he had directed Defense Secretary Dick Cheney to develop programs for using U.S. bases, engineers and intelligence jointly with other nations under the control of the United Nations and such regional groups as the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Bush said that American planes and ships would transport peacekeepers and that peacekeeping would be taught at U.S. military schools. He said Fort Dix, N.J., could be used for multinational training and field exercises.

But he did not endorse Boutros-Ghali's proposals for a $50 million peacekeeping start-up fund and a $1 billion peacekeeping endowment fund.

Bush called for a Security Council meeting to assess the idea and said the United States would explore new ways to support peacekeeping.

A senior U.S. official said no change is planned in making up delinquency dues of more than $200 million. Overall, the United States owes more than $600 million to the United Nations.

"The fear of nuclear Armageddon between the superpowers has vanished," Bush said. Now, he said, there is an opportunity "to forge a genuine global community."

"Securing democracy and securing the peace in the century ahead will be no simple task," Bush said.

President Bush tells the United Nations that the United States endorses the ability to prevent, contain and resolve conflict.

Broadcasters, cable operators use TV ads in battle over bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — A frequent ad on cable television channels this week has been one with rain pouring from the inside.

The message: If the government regulates cable television rates, you'll get soaked.

A competing ad, on broadcast stations, shows Americans at work and play as an announcer says...

Congress just voted for a bill to control cable rates and guess what? The cable companies don't like it. But consumer groups do, and so do senior citizens, blue-collar workers and thousands of Americans just like you and me.

"So if you see a commercial or receive mail attacking the cable bill, consider the source. Don't let the cable companies win by confusing the issue."

So far, cable's campaign to stop the bill to regulate the industry hasn't worked, but a vote scheduled Tuesday in the Senate could show otherwise.

That's when the Senate decides on the compromise legislation worked out by a House-Senate conference committee and approved 280-128 by the House last Thursday.

The Senate is expected to approve the compromise, but President Bush said he'd veto it for being "heavy-handed" with "burdensome and unnecessary requirements on the cable industry."

That has added pressure on supporters of the bill to show their strength by getting a veto-proof margin on the Tuesday vote. A two-thirds majority of those voting is needed to override. That would be 67 if all 100 members vote.

Since the vote is assured, Democratic congressional leaders have agreed to hold Congress in session until noon Oct. 5 to provide time for an override attempt.

If successful, the override would be the first of Bush's veto.

Rep. Edward Markey, D-Mass, and the bill's sponsor, said last week he had enough votes to do so. But Senate sponsors weren't so confident.

Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo., rebuked cable's campaign against the bill, saying Monday, "They'll do anything they can to preserve their monopoly status."

But, in a possible hint of override chances, he said, "If we run out of time in this Congress, we'll be back from day one next Congress."

The National Cable Television Association hasn't said how much it has spent to defeat the measure, but Peggy Laramie, the association's spokeswoman, says it's not the "millions" that the other side says.

Besides producing the 30-second spots on cable channels, her group has bought full-page ads in Washington area newspapers, with cable companies around the country doing the same in their local papers. Filers degrading the legislation have been inserted with monthly cable bills.

The National Association of Broadcasters has fought back with its own television commercial while newspaper space charging the cable campaign with deception has been purchased by the Association of Independent Television Stations, the Consumer Federation of America, the National Consumers League, the National Council of Senior Citizens and the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association.

Airliner de-icing plan likely will result in more delays for travelers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government's plan for keeping airliner wings free of ice and snow has a price — more delays for winter-time passengers — but it may save lives.

The Federal Aviation Administration says 16 accidents over the last decade related to the failure to de-ice the aircraft properly before takeoff, killing more than 100 people.

The agency is expected to announce its new de-icing plan in the next few weeks. Airlines then would have to submit their own de-icing proposals for approval and to implement them by Nov. 1, in time for winter flying.

Pathologist receives 10 years probation

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — A pathologist pleaded no contest Monday to charges of falsifying autopsies in three counties and was sentenced to 10 years of probation.

Ralph Erdmann was forced to resign his medical license while under probation and agreed to pay about $14,000 in restitution for autopsies he had said he completed but now acknowledges he did not perform.

Under the plea bargain, Erdmann was sentenced to 10 years of probation on each of seven counts — the sentences to run concurrently — in Lubbock, Hockley and Dickens counties in west Texas.

Airline industry sources said the FAA plan is expected to lead to more intensive training for flight officers and de-icing ground crews, changes in the type of de-icing fluid used and construction of secondary de-icing facilities at the end of runways at some airports.

"We are going to be doing some things differently and you may see some additional delays," said David Hesse, air safety chairman of the Airline Pilots Association. "Passengers should understand that this is a necessary part of the safety process."

Fleets are being established at 30 major airports to determine the best way to clear ice from planes, he said.

The FAA was roused into action by the crash of a USAir flight on an icy runway at New York's LaGuardia Airport last March that killed 27 people. The agency is examining whether a buildup of ice on the wings of the Dutch-made Fokker 28 aircraft caused them to lose their aerodynamic lift.

The plane had waited for takeoff more than half an hour after its second and final de-icing.

According to airline industry sources, the FAA's final de-icing regulation will lead to:

- Much more intensive training for flight officers and de-icing ground crews.
- A significant increase in the use of the so-called No. 2 de-icing fluid commonly used in Europe. The fluid has a longer staying power than the No. 1 fluid long used in the United States.
- An intensive effort to reduce the numbers of planes waiting to take off in winter weather.
- Building secondary de-icing facilities near the ends of runways at airports which can accommodate such structures. Primary de-icing will be conducted at the gates in most instances.
- The use of holdover time charts to give pilots guidelines on how long an aircraft can stand in freezing weather without needing to be de-iced a second time.
- In certain conditions, aircraft will be inspected physically to make certain ice has not formed.

J. Roger Fleming, senior vice president for technical development of the Air Transport Association, which represents major commercial airlines, praised the FAA's efforts.

Sudan accused of executing U.S. worker

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Sudanese government is believed to have executed a U.S. government employee on charges of treason despite strong U.S. objections, the State Department said Monday.

Press officer Joseph Snyder said the United States has expressed grave concern to the Sudanese government over the incident.

Andrew Tombe, 34, was the senior Sudanese employee of the Agency for International Development in the southern city of Juba, stronghold of a rebel Christian and Islamist movement which has been at war with the Muslim Arab-dominated government in Khartoum.

The basis of the State Department's concern was unclear. Snyder had no information to report the Sudanese government's claims that Tombe was a rebel militant.

U.S. relations with the Sudan have been poor ever since a military coup led by Islamic fundamentalists ousted a democratic government several years ago. During the Persian Gulf War, the Sudan supported Iraq.

The administration has suspended the regular U.S. aid program but continues a large-scale program to feed Sudanese affected by the country's prolonged drought.

"Given the continuing allegations about human rights abuses in Sudan, particularly in Juba, and the government's delay in responding to our repeated requests for information about Mr. Tombe, we are viewing this incident with the gravest concern," Snyder said.

Sudan's ambassador did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

Other U.S. officials said other Sudanese employees of the U.S. government have been detained as well and that Sudanese authorities seized U.S. government property in Juba.

Why our $59 eyeglasses are worth more than theirs lately there's been a lot of blarney from our higher priced competitors about their new low prices.

The new "low prices" take up a huge portion of the ads. Yet, if you get to the stores, how many frames do you think you'll find at that price? Would you be disappointed if there were only 12 or 13?

Unfortunately, it makes it even harder for you to believe that our low prices are really on the level.

Few companies operate with the cost-cutting efficiency required to succeed at prices this low.

Our $59 price is complete, including frames and single vision plastic lenses. Additional pairs, same prescription and visit, are just $39. Most bifocals just $20 more. So two pairs cost just $98. And no extra charge for over-size or almost all high power lenses.

You don't wear the price tag

Still, the biggest difference between us and them is our selection. Our $59 and $39 prices include a choice from over 400 fashionable frames—the vast majority of frames in our store.

From the fashionably conservative to the cutting edge of today's styles, these include designs from St. Moritz, Converse, REM, Zimo, Renaissance, Enrico Blangi & more. For $20 to $90 more, we carry specialty designers like Liz Claiborne, Anne Klein, Ray Ban, Logo of Paris, Cheryl Figgis & others.

Doctor's Comment

"Working with the Portland Trailblazers, I learned how important correct eye care is in sports."

"If you wear contact lenses, you should be fitted for a larger lens size for sports. This will decrease the chance of losing one during physical activity."

"Or if you play a sport in which a ball can hit your eyes, you should wear protective sports goggles, whether your vision needs correction or not."

Clinton campaign begins preparing for transition to White House

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Thirteen floors above downtown Little Rock in a half-empty, nondescript office, first steps are under way to shape the administration Bill Clinton hopes to lead as president.

"You have reached the Clinton Gore Planning, Educational, says the telephone answering machine in the office a few blocks from Clinton's presidential campaign headquarters.

Aides to the Democratic nominee stress that there is no transition team at work here — just a "transition planning team."

But it is designed to be the forerunner of a transition team, which — if the campaign is crowned with success — will usher in a new era of Democratic rule in Washington.

Transition teams are the talent hunters who help the president find Cabinet officers and other top aides. They also serve as employment agencies to help reward loyal campaign workers with government jobs.

Already, Democrats eager after a dozen years of Republicans in the White House are firing off resumes to the office whose official name is the "Clinton-Gore Presidential Planning Foundation."

"We've received a number of resumes, many unsolicited, as you can imagine, given the situation Bill Clinton finds himself in," says campaign Chairman Mickey Kantor.

"It is a transition planning team," says Kantor. "There is no transition team. That would be premature."

"A small group of people are determining questions that would help the organization if we win," Kantor says.

Clinton's Cabinet or promising administration posts yet. Instead, it is building a program that can help Clinton make those choices after the election.

He insists that the office is not a sign that Clinton is rocky.

"Obviously, this is the responsible thing to do," Kantor said. "You have to begin the planning process so if you win, you can make a smooth transition."

"If the question is, are they being a bit premature, I think the answer is no," said Christopher Arterton, dean of the Graduate School of Political Management at Georgetown University. "If they don't engage in this kind of activity now, there will be much confusion should they win."

Washington consultant Mark Stegal, a key official on Jimmy Carter's transition team, said it was "good" that they have people conceptualizing so that when the moment comes, they're ready — not ready with a Cabinet but ready to begin the process, to select a government."

Quayle addresses the National Association of Home Builders in Lexington, Ky., Monday.

Despite flubs, Quayle makes progress in public appearances

Knight-Ridder News Service

WASHINGTON — Vice President Dan Quayle has changed since the 1988 campaign.

The now appear less flustered, more at ease, light suits better front of television cameras and even downright spontaneous at times.

But he still has one troubling barrier to being taken seriously. He continues to make gaffes, and the media, to the contrary, continue to have a field day with them.

According to one top Quayle aide, who asked that his name not be used, the vice president "usually ignores" what he considers "main press."

But he's something he finds particularly outrageous, "he shakes his head and says, 'How do they get away with printing that?'"

Four years ago Quayle sometimes appeared intimidated by the press and sometimes openly hostile — his handlers kept him isolated from reporters on his campaign plane.

Now he is Mr. Affability, chatting and schmoozing with reporters, and sometimes even inviting the media to join him in his forward cabin on Air Force II.

Undoubtedly, he is more comfortable in front of the cameras. The only time you see the "deer in the headlights" look is when he is asked a question that takes him completely by surprise.

But after four years of fidgeting questions, it's pretty hard to hit Quayle with one he hasn't heard or doesn't anticipate.

In 1988, it was almost as if Quayle had a Rolodex of answers in his head and when a question was asked, it would spin until the appropriate programmed response popped up. This time he answers much more easily.

As to persistent queries about whether any media specialists privately have coached the vice president, the Quayle aide said, "Roger Ailes (a high-profile Republican media consultant) periodically comes in, and yells at him. He tells him the odd thing, but nothing programmatic."

He said Quayle also tries to watch videotapes of his speeches and appearances on talk shows.

The vice president is notably more spontaneous, sometimes with boyish glee.

On a trip to Detroit within the last year, he stopped at a coffee shop on a busy highway for an "im-promptu" chat with customers. On his way inside, he spotted a young man in deep conversation on a pay phone, trying to persuade a woman to go out with him.

Quayle grabbed the phone, identified himself to the startled woman and then arranged a date that evening between her and the young man.

Grimacing from ear to ear, he handed the phone back to the somewhat dazed-looking man and said everything was set. As the press swept into the coffee shop with the vice president, the man could be heard saying loudly into the phone, "It really was him. It really was."

Some of the assessments on how Quayle has grown are the backhand variety. "He's learned to duck questions more effectively," said Kathleen Hall Jamieson, dean of the Annenberg School for Communication at the University of Pennsylvania and a presidential campaign expert. "An important political skill is not to answer questions."

As an example, Jamieson singled out Quayle's ability to dodge ABC newsman Sam Donaldson's questions on abortion during "This Week" on Sept. 13.

"In 1988," she said, "he would have said something stupid." Instead, this time, he deftly parried an increasingly frustrated Donaldson who was trying to pin him down on where he and the president personally stood on the part of the Republican platform that calls for a constitutional amendment to ban abortion.

At one point, Quayle told Donaldson, "Look, Sam, there are a number of human life amendments that are pending on Capitol Hill."

"But which do you support?" Donaldson persisted.

"Well," Quayle replied, "we have said, and the platform refers to this, that we will support a human life amendment. We do not say which human life amendment. There are a number of them."

Even Democratic strategist Mike McCurry, an informal adviser to the Clinton campaign and Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen's press secretary during the 1988 contest, has some kind words for Quayle this time around.

"He's sophisticated enough to understand you have to have an agenda, a game plan ... Quayle is much more influential in this administration than people give him credit for ... I disagree violently with most of what he says, (but he's) doing what he should be doing ..."

"He's a very likable guy (and) he's got a very sharp, shrewd staff!"

Democrats focus on economy, fend off attacks on draft record

CHICAGO (AP) — Bill Clinton trumpeted endorsements from 400 corporate executives Monday as he mounted a determined effort to keep his campaign focused on the economy instead of fresh attacks about his draft record.

But it wasn't easy. Even as he basked in support from a business group that included numerous Republicans, Clinton had to respond to President Bush's first direct attack on his candor in discussing how he avoided the Vietnam draft 23 years ago.

Bush's attack also came up in each of six interviews that Clinton conducted with television stations in Illinois and Michigan.

Clinton spent most of the afternoon preparing for as yet unscheduled debates with Bush.

Clinton said repeatedly throughout the day he was eager to debate, charging that Bush was the roadblock by refusing to accept plans of a bipartisan commission offering to host three presidential debates in a single-moderator format.

"I'm not sure he would do poorly in that format but they obviously think so," Clinton told Chicago's WMAQ-TV. "They are just trying to get out of a more engaging debate because they've got an economic record they can't run on."

For Clinton, the goal is to spend every day of the campaign's final six weeks talking about jobs, education, health care, welfare reform, college access and the other policy proposals he puts under the umbrella of his promise of economic revival.

Monday's endorsements were designed to show that an economic plan Clinton boasts will put working people first also has deep support among corporate executives, a group generally considered to favor Republicans.

"The significant thing is the emerging consensus in this country that we need to break out of the paralysis of the last 12 years and take a new course," Clinton said.

The event also gave Clinton a chance to reintroduce specifics of his economic plan, from an investment tax credit for new plants and equipment to a permanent research and development tax credit to tax changes to remove incentives for moving American plants overseas.

Clinton could only smile as several of his corporate supporters echoed his themes, including California developer Kathryn Thompson, a Bush convention delegate and major campaign contributor in 1988.

"George Bush does not understand the complexities of our economic crisis," she said. "For months and years he denied the country was in a recession. For months, then years, he delayed in presenting a plan to confront these problems. Today, his proposals can only be described as too little, too late and too political."

Clinton lost some control over the day's focus, however, during a question and answer session dominated by questions about the presidential debates and Bush's draft attack.

Coalition works to bring gay voters to the polls

WASHINGTON (AP) — A non-partisan coalition of leading gay and lesbian groups announced efforts Tuesday to get homosexual voters to the polls in November.

The effort "is our response to the attacks by the fundamentalist fascists and immoral minority to make us the Willie Horton of this election," said Tim McCarthy of the

"Come Out Voting Coalition."

The organization will air a television ad, distribute posters, and promote voter registration among homosexuals, McCarthy said.

The coalition is composed of many leading gay and lesbian groups in the United States including Queer Nation, ACT-UP and the Human Rights Campaign Fund.

McCarthy said the campaign does not support any particular candidate. "We think people have a sense of who they should vote for."

Tim McFeeley, executive director of the Human Rights Campaign Fund and the Triangle Institute, which is sponsoring the ad, said homosexuals could have a decisive influence on the election.

Bush's plan to use gold as currency standard draws little support

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gold, the mystical metal, should play a greater role in calming world currency markets, George Bush believes. But persuading America's major economic allies to go along with the idea may not be easy. The idea received a less-than-enthusiastic response Monday from many finance ministers and central bank presidents at the annual meetings of the International Monetary Fund and World Bank. The president caught many by surprise when he suggested in a speech

Sunday that one way to alleviate turmoil in currency markets would be to use a market basket of commodities, including gold, to help determine the value of major currencies. Bush called this commodity basket "an independent reference point" that would help strengthen global economic cooperation. Administration officials insisted that Bush was not trying to return the United States to the gold standard, whereby the value of the dollar would be tied to the price of gold. Instead, they said the president saw this approach as a way to allow the world's major industrial countries to determine whether their currencies were properly valued by measuring their purchasing power against a set collection of commodities. The only specific commodity mentioned by the president was gold, although administration officials said the value of such products as wheat or oil could also be included. The proposal would give gold a standing in currency affairs that it has not had since 1971 when then-

President Richard Nixon suspended the convertibility of dollars into gold. That marked the first step in the eventual breakdown of fixed currency exchange rates. Fixed rates were in 1973 with the current system in which the values of the dollar and other major currencies are allowed to float with their exchange price set by the open market. While some finance officials said they would have to know more details before they could comment on Bush's proposal, Helmut Schlesinger, the head of the powerful German central bank, gave the idea a quick brush-off. "There are many disadvantages to such a currency construction, and I won't be pushing for it in my short term in office," said Schlesinger, who is scheduled to retire as Bundesbank president a year from now. While others replied more diplomatically, no one endorsed the idea. IMF Managing Director Michel Camdessus said that it would be impossible to act on the proposal at this year's meetings but he called Bush's suggestions "useful and worthwhile" for study. French Finance Minister Michel Sapin jokingly told reporters that the main discussion he had heard about the proposal involved just what date it was last put forward by the United States. "There was some debate as to whether it was made in 1985 or 1986. We came to the conclusion that it was 1985, but there were some differences of opinion and the debate goes on," Sapin said. Actually, the idea was first raised by then-Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III at an IMF annual meeting in 1987 as a way to improve economic policy coordination among the seven richest industrial countries — the United States, Japan, Germany, France, Britain, Italy and Canada. A senior administration official, speaking to reporters on condition of anonymity, said the new proposal would seek to raise the profile of the commodity basket and link it more closely to currency decisions. Under such an approach, an individual country could measure its own inflation rate against price changes of goods in the commodity basket. If the country's inflation rate was below the rate of price increases of the commodities, then it could consider loosening monetary policy by cutting interest rates. Under current world conditions, economists said, the Bush proposal would allow most major countries to cut interest rates. That is what Bush and Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady have been seeking for 18 months, particularly in Germany. High German interest rates, which force other European countries to keep their rates high, have been blamed for the economic slowdown in Europe. German interest also were blamed for the currency turmoil last week when England, Italy and Spain were forced in effect to devalue their currencies.

Study finds women live until birthdays, men die just before

SAN DIEGO (AP) — A study of California death certificates found women were slightly more likely to die of natural causes in the week after their birthdays than any other week of the year. The study found a coinciding dip in deaths in the weeks before birthdays, according to a report published Monday in Psychosomatic Medicine, the Journal of the American Psychosomatic Society. "Some dying patients are able to prolong life briefly until they have reached a positive symbolic occasion," said one of the authors, sociology Professor David P. Phillips of the University of California, San Diego.

In contrast, the study found men were more likely to die in the weeks before a birthday than during the rest of the year. That may be because men are more likely than women to dread birthdays, Phillips said.

Phillips focused on statistics involving women, and plans a more in-depth study of the effects of birthdays on men.

Phillips' findings appears to add to growing evidence of a psychological aspect to death, said Albert Marston, professor emeritus in psychology and psychiatry at the University of San Diego.

"What is interesting from a biological point of view is where is that switch, in the brain or wherever it is, that helps a person will himself to survive or decide to give up and die?" Marston said.

Phillips said the study of women's deaths supports anecdotal evidence of people clinging to life to survive milestones such as the birth of a grandchild, a wedding, anniversary or holiday.

"Birthdays may consciously, or unconsciously be an opportunity to say goodbye," he said. "It's a wonderful way to wrap things up. People get together to celebrate your life, and you see relatives you might not otherwise see."

Phillips looked at computerized California death certificates for 1.44 million adults who died of natural causes from 1978-1990. Information was omitted on people who underwent surgery that would have contributed to death.

For women, the study found 3 percent more deaths in the week after a birthday than would be expected in a normal week. It found a dip in deaths of the same size spread over the 20 weeks before the birthday.

Phillips speculated that the opposite trend was found in men because they are more likely to use birthdays for taking stock of their lives and noting failure to achieve unrealistic career goals.

Women may be more likely to place importance on relationships with family and friends, which are celebrated on birthdays, he said.

Phillips has done earlier studies that found deaths of Jewish people dipped 31 percent before the holiday of Yom Kippur and peaked by the same amount just afterward.

The studies may be useful for doctors and care-givers who should be sensitive to the emotional impact special occasions have on their patients, Phillips said.

FBI agents arrest 2 associates of Gotti

MIAMI (AP) — Two Gambino brothers linked to convicted mobster John Gotti were nabbed in an FBI raid on a plush hotel, authorities said Monday.

Giovanni "John" Gambino, 52, and Giuseppe "Joe" Gambino, 46, had jumped a $5 million bond on federal drug and racketeering-murder charges in New York City, said Andrew Duffin, head of the FBI's Miami office.

The Gambinos did not offer any resistance Sunday, but only came to the door where they were staying at the South Haven Hotel-Apartments in Fort Lauderdale when police began knocking it down with a sledge hammer, FBI spokesman Paul Miller said.

"They are very dangerous individuals," Miller said. "Some time ago they were both involved in a conspiracy to kill an Italian magistrate — a magistrate who was eventually murdered."

The New York charges involve heroin and cocaine trafficking, as well as related murder charges, he said.

John Gambino is a reputed "capo" in the Gambino family, and both are cousins of Carlo Gambino, head of the crime family, Miller said.

Joe Gambino appeared before a federal magistrate Monday and agreed to waive a formal removal hearing to New York. He said he wanted to return to Miami as possible, according to Dan Gelber, spokesman for the U.S. attorney's office. John Gambino, who told arresting agents he was ill, was being held in an undisclosed Broward County hospital under FBI guard until he is well enough to appear before the magistrate, Miller said.

The brothers jumped bond on Sept. 1, and were the subject of an international manhunt that included the United States, Europe and South America, the FBI said.

The Gambinos surfaced in the Gotti racketeering-murder case after they were taped talking with the leader of the Gambino crime family. An FBI videotape shows Joseph Gambino meeting with Gotti, Salvatore "Sammy Bull" Gravano — who later turned against Gotti — and New Jersey capo Robert "Bobby Caber" Bisaccia the night before the three Gotti pals allegedly executed an enemy of the Sicilian wing.

Air plan drawn up for China

Knight-Ridder News Service

Lt. Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell was trying to push forward two projects in September 1942: a new Air War Plan to guide operations in the China Theater and the old 30 Division Plan he had been pressing on the Chinese government all year.

The Air War Plan drawn up by Stilwell's staff divided the major tasks between the China Air Task Force (CATF) and the Chinese air force. The CATF would protect the aerial supply line over "the Hump." The Chinese air force would defend the capital at Chungking and the Yangtze Valley.

Another in a series

Stilwell assigned first priority to defending the air transports (most operated by Pan American Airways) coming over the Himalayas from India, since this was the only source of outside support as long as Japan controlled Burma.

Stilwell agreed with Brig. Gen. Claire Chennault that the best defense was an offense. Chennault commanded the CATF, which had replaced his American Volunteer Group (AVG), the famous "Flying Tigers," in July. The aerial guerrilla warfare that had made the AVG a legend was to continue, but on Japanese air bases and their support system was Chennault's top priority, with attacks on Japanese shipping and supply depots next in importance.

Unfortunately, Chennault's full program for operations could not be undertaken because of logistical shortages. The 1,900 tons per month of supplies Chennault requested would have taken virtually the entire capacity of the Hump operation at that time. Even more of a pipe dream was Chennault's request for 100 of the new P-51 "Mustang" fighters and another 25 B-25 "Mitchell" medium bombers.

The CATF would have to struggle on with the four squadrons of venerable P-40 "Warhawks" belonging to the 23rd Fighter Group and the handful of B-25s of the 11th Bomb Squadron.

The Chinese Air Force existed only on paper. It flew no missions in September and only a few in October. The ground war in China was further hampered by the withdrawal of B-25s of the 11th Bomb Squadron.

The Chinese Air Force existed only on paper. It flew no missions in September and only a few in October. The ground war in China was further hampered by the withdrawal of B-25s of the 11th Bomb Squadron.

Both the Nationalists and the Communists were primarily interested in hoarding their strength for a future civil war to determine who would rule China once the Japanese were gone.

Stilwell was himself looking south rather than north or east. His aim was to retake Burma rather than drive Japan out of China. His 30 Division Plan was to create a strike force capable of launching an offensive into Burma in conjunction with British forces attacking out of India. He wanted to fly the best Chinese divisions to India, where they would be fully equipped and trained by American advisers.

Chiang agreed but was slow to implement the plan. It would take many more months to even start the movement of troops.

U.S. reportedly halts chemical shipment

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States has blocked a shipment of chemicals from India to Syria and complained to Indian authorities that the material was designed to manufacture chemical weapons, a U.S. official said Monday. As soon as the United States found out that the substances had been loaded onto a German ship for transport to Syria, it asked Germany's government to intervene, said the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity. "German authorities tracked the ship and learned it had unloaded its cargo in Cyprus last month, from where it was supposed to be loaded onto another vessel bound for Syria," said the official.

Salem church readmits witchcraft trial victims 300 years later

SALEM, Mass. (AP) — Three hundred years after they were excommunicated and executed, two victims of the Salem witchcraft hysteria were readmitted to their church. "It's supposed to be the start of a healing process," said Edward Gwin, a member of The First Church in Salem. He helped organize a vote among the Unitarian church's members Sunday that unanimously favored readmitting Rebecca Nurse and Giles Corey. "We're trying to make more out of Salem than just that this is where the witches are tried. We're trying to make something positive out of it," Gwin said. The gesture drew to a close commemorations of the 300th anniversary of trials in which 19 people were hanged and Corey was pressed to death with stones after they refused to confess to witchcraft. The last executions were Sept. 22, 1692. Nurse, described as a devout longtime member of the church, was hanged July 19, 1692. Corey died Sept. 19, 1692, when stones were piled on his chest to force him to confess he was a witch.

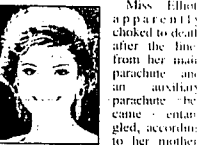

Defense claims government ignored key evidence in Iraq case

ATLANTA (AP) — Prosecutors ignored evidence of a broad scheme to illegally loan Iraq $5.5 billion because it did not fit their theory that an Atlanta banker acted alone, defense attorneys charged Monday. U.S. District Judge Marvin Shoob was expected to decide Tuesday whether to accept the motion. The government, in a memorandum opposing the motion, told Shoob that Drogoul has consistently acknowledged his guilt. "A change of heart alone will not suffice to support a withdrawal motion," acting U.S. Attorney Gerrilyn Brill said. Drogoul, the former Atlanta branch manager of the Italian-owned Banca Nazionale del Lavoro, pleaded guilty in June to 60 counts of bank fraud and other charges. His loans, allegedly hidden from regulators and bank officials, helped fund Iraq's military buildup before the Persian Gulf War, investigators contend.

Miss N.C. dies while skydiving

FARMVILLE, N.C. (AP) — A beauty queen who took up skydiving to conquer her fear of heights died in a parachuting accident, authorities said Monday. Jess Elliott, 23, Miss North Carolina USA, fell to her death Sunday when she became entangled in her parachute lines, said Pitt County Sheriff's Maj. Donnie Hudson.

Miss Elliott, a parentally challenged, according to her mother, Elaine Key. After she was named Miss North Carolina USA last November, Miss Elliott competed in February in the Miss USA pageant in Wichita, Kan. She was among 11 semifinalists. "To overcome my fear of heights, I learned to skydive," Miss Elliott said in a profile she submitted to pageant officials. She was a member of a skydiving club that was flying out of a small airstrip near Farmville. Mrs. Key said her daughter was packing two parachutes. When the first one didn't activate after she jumped from the plane, Miss Elliott pulled the cord on the auxiliary parachute. As the second parachute opened, the first one activated as well. It was Miss Elliott's third jump, Mrs. Key said.

Officers say mom killed 2 children

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa (AP) — A woman distraught over her pending divorce was found driving along an interstate with her children, shot in the head in the back seat, authorities said.

A state trooper found the dead youngsters, ages 5 and 8, early Saturday when he pulled over Kimberly Martin's car after receiving a complaint that a motorist had driven away from a truck stop without paying for gasoline.

Mrs. Martin, 29, had been the subject of a search in Indiana, where she was living with her parents and the children. In court Monday, she was disoriented, asking a judge "Who is Dusty and Brandy?" at the mention of her children's names.

Mrs. Martin cried during Monday's brief hearing. The judge told her Dusty and Brandy were her dead children and someone would talk to her about it in jail. She was ordered held in lieu of $500 bond for two counts of first-degree murder. Pottawatomie County Associate District Judge James Hackerman scheduled a preliminary hearing for Sept. 29. "Kim was just driven mentally insane by her husband," said her mother, Janice Nagel of Elkhart, Ind. "He was harassing her all the time, threatened to take the kids away all the time. He kept saying she'd never get custody."

Volcanoes inspire names of brothers

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — Nicholas and Zachary Ferrell have been named after volcanoes. Both brothers have volcanoes for middle names to mark their births during eruptions — Redoubt for 2-year-old Nick and Spurr for Zach, born Aug. 18.

Their mother, Marcy Ferrell, 27, of Kenai recalled walking through the darkened halls of a hospital across the Cook Inlet from Mount Redoubt while an emergency generator provided power and her doctor drove through thick ash to the older boy's birth. "I felt like I was going to erupt myself," she said of her 16 hours in labor. Then this year, nearby Mount Spurr erupted while Ms. Ferrell was giving birth to Zach. She learned of the coincidence call from an aunt. "I thought, 'Oh, my God, he's again,'" she said. "I told her, 'But expect me to name him Spurr. I'm not doing it.'"

Conservationists fear Symms choice

BOISE (AP) — A top aide for Interior Secretary Manuel Lujan says retiring Sen. Steve Symms is considered qualified as a replacement if President Bush is re-elected.

Symms

Symms spokesman Dave Pearson said national support is beginning to "steamroll" for Symms to become Interior secretary should a vacancy occur in a second Bush administration.

But Idaho conservationists say they are "horrified" by the prospect.

Pearson said Symms has received many calls of support from national proponents of multiple use of public lands.

Pearson said he does not know whether pro-Symms groups have lobbied the White House since a public television report last week that Symms could be the choice.

"But I know this is starting to steamroll," Pearson said. "Steve is not going out of his way to encourage that. He's getting a lot of encouragement, though."

Steve Goldstein, chief spokesman for the Department of Interior, said Lujan respects Symms.

"He knows Steve Symms, and Steve Symms has a good reputation defending Western issues and matters of importance to Interior," Goldstein said. "But Cabinet selections are made only by one person, and that's the president."

Goldstein said Lujan has not discussed his future with Bush. "In Secretary Lujan's case, the body is not yet cold, so all of this speculation is quite premature." Conservationists rallied Friday at the Idaho Statehouse to protest the prospect of the GOP senator taking over the nation's biggest land-management agency.

The 50-year-old Symms said they want to kill the Symms talk.

"The possibility that Steve Symms might become our next secretary of Interior is horrifying to conservationists and sportsmen," said Ron Mitchell of the Idaho Sportsmen's Coalition. "We need to nip this right in the bud."

He called Symms a "radical" opponent of the environment.

Wendy Wilson of Idaho Rivers United said the issue is not partisan.

"Democrats and Republicans alike should ask George Bush, 'Say it isn't so; say Steve Symms isn't going to be our next secretary of Interior.'"

Former Fish and Game Commissioner Fred Christensen said Symms is incapable of compromise on natural resource issues.

"I can't imagine anything more horrible," Christensen said. "He certainly won't be able to solve the problems with the kind of attitude he has." "They're nuts," Pearson replied. "Steve would be the best thing for the environment because he's a common-sense environmentalist."

Overhaul education panel, say 3 members

MOSCOW (AP) — An overhaul of the state Board of Education's research panel is needed to maintain credibility with lawmakers and curb infighting among the institutions, three of its members say.

The Higher Education Research Council currently includes eight representatives of Idaho's four-year schools and three outsiders. It distributes the state's $2.5 million appropriation for research to the schools, because the board typically adopts its recommendation.

Doyle Markham, a research ecologist for the U.S. Department of Energy at Idaho Falls, said infighting among the representatives is interfering with its function.

They always vote in ways that will benefit their respective institutions, he said.

Darryl Manning, adjunct general of the Idaho National Guard at Boise, agreed there is "excessive regionalism" on the council.

Markham suggested adding another outside representative and cutting the number of university representatives from eight to four.

The University of Idaho currently has three seats, while Boise State University and Idaho State University have two seats apiece. Lewis Clark State College holds one.

Ron Bitter, vice president of Caldwell-based Pan Agro, said adding more non-institutional members would give the council more credibility when it seeks research money from the Legislature.

This week, the education board opted to seek the same amount of money, $2.5 million, for research from lawmakers in the next fiscal year as it currently has.

Manning said the non-institutional representatives also should be allowed to serve as chairperson.

Bitter contended that would have more credibility with legislators because it usually is a college official asking for research money.

FBI accepts cash from bar owners

KELLOGG (AP) — The federal government is giving most of the owners of bars raided by FBI agents last year a chance to forfeit cash seized in the raids to avoid the possibility their bar properties could be forfeited.

"The government is trying to work this out in a way that would not be unduly harsh or punitive under the circumstances," said Anthony Hall, an assistant U.S. attorney based in Boise. "The intent is to encourage some kind of settlement from most of the bars."

Letters of settlement recently went out to many of the owners.

Craig, Symms vote against storm aid

States News Service

WASHINGTON — Here are the votes of Idaho senators and representatives on major legislation in Congress this past week.

A "Y" means the member voted for the measure; an "N" means the member voted against the measure; an "A" means the member did not vote; a "P" means the member voted present, and an "R" means a member resigned.

SENATE VOTE: TO PROVIDE AID FOR HURRICANE VICTIMS

The Senate passed by a vote of 84-10 a supplemental appropriations bill that would provide $10.5 billion in aid to hurricane victims in Florida, Louisiana and Hawaii. The emergency funding will be added to the nation's budget deficit. (H.R. 5620)

HOUSE VOTES: TO RE-REGULATE THE CABLE TELEVISION INDUSTRY

The House passed a bill to re-regulate the cable television industry, which Congress de-regulated in 1984. The bill would require the Federal Communications Commission to set rates for basic-cable service 4½ areas lacking competition among cable operators. Supporters say the bill would yield lower rates and better service for consumers. The vote of 280-128 is more than the two-thirds majority needed to override a presidential veto, which President Bush has promised because of the additional regulations it places on the cable industry. (S.12)

TO FUND FISCAL 1993 ENERGY AND WATER PROGRAMS

The House approved a House/Senate conference report on the Energy and Water Development appropriations bill. The $22 billion bill is $414 million less than President Bush has requested for fiscal 1993. It includes $517 million to continue development of the Superconducting Super Collider, a science project that the House earlier had voted to eliminate because of its cost. The vote was 245-143. Bush is expected to sign. (H.R.-5373)

Jays' veteran aims for old records

The Associated Press

It was in early April, about an hour before game time, and Dave Winfield was relaxing in the dugout at SkyDome, surveying the scene at his new home. That's the spotted few familiar faces. The Yankees were in Toronto that night, and a couple of writers who used to cover him in New York were wandering by. "They said he was too old, couldn't play anymore," Winfield said, breaking into a big smile and his best Muhammad Ali imitation. "He was all done, they said. Couldn't do the job."

Well, hee-haw, because the joke is on the Yankees and the Angels and everyone else who believed that Winfield was washed up. He is old, that part is true. As in the oldest player to hit three home runs in a game and the oldest player to hit for the cycle.

And, in the next few days, Winfield might add an even more meaningful accomplishment — the only 40-year-old player ever to drive in 100 runs in one season. In fact, if Winfield waits until Oct. 3, the next-to-last day of the season, he can do it on his 41st birthday.

Winfield and the AL East-leading Blue Jays begin a three-game series in Baltimore on Tuesday night. Winfield goes into the opener with 99 RBIs.

"I don't normally dwell on the statistics, we've got a pennant race to worry about," Winfield said Sunday. "But I'll take a lot of satisfaction in getting the 100th."

"The next one is special," he said. "A lot of ballplayers have had 100 RBIs in a season, but I'll be the old man on that list."

Since 1900, only twice has a player 40 or older driven in as many as 90 runs. Ty Cobb had 93 RBIs in 1927 at age 40 and Darrell Evans had 99 RBIs in 1987, also at 40.

Evans thought he had gotten his 100th in the final week of the season. He had 99 RBIs when he singled and Bill Madlock scored, but the play was scored an error on Baltimore catcher Terry Kennedy because Madlock's hard slide knocked the ball loose.

Evans did not drive in a run in Detroit's last three games, and finished one short.

The oldest players with 100 RBIs in modern history are Babe Ruth, Honus Wagner, Ernie Banks, Tony Perez and Cobb, who each did it at age 38. Banks' total of 106 in 1969 leads the list.

Several other players reached 100 RBIs at age 37, including Hank Aaron, Carl Yastrzemski, Mike Schmidt, Carlton Fisk and Dwight Evans.

Winfield got his 99th RBI on Sunday in Toronto. The Blue Jays play in Baltimore and New York before returning home.

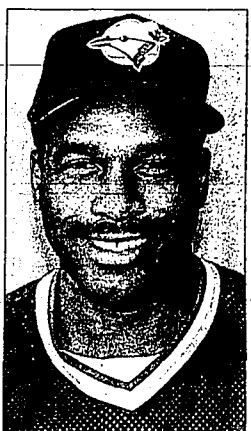

"The 100th will probably come on the road, which is unfortunate for the fans up here," he said. "They've always been Dave Winfield fans and I would have liked to do it here."

"This park has had a lot to do with it," he said. "I've enjoyed hitting here from day one."

The Blue Jays have enjoyed having him since last Dec. 19, when they signed Winfield as a free agent to a one-year contract for $2.3 million.

Winfield is batting .294 with 25 homers and 31 doubles. No one as old as Winfield has hit 30 home runs in a season.

Winfield joined the Blue Jays after he was let go by California last year following a season in which he led the team with 28 home runs and was second with 86 RBIs.

ASU puts coach on leave after his arrest

TEMPE, Ariz. — Arizona State placed pitching coach Walter C. "Dub" Kilgo Jr. on administrative leave today after he was arrested at a hotel and accused of burglary and other crimes. Phoenix police officers arrested Kilgo on Saturday in a room at the Pointe Hilton at South Mountain, said Sgt. Leo Speliopoulos, a police spokesman. Kilgo was arrested on suspicion of theft, burglary and trespassing, Speliopoulos said. Athletic Director Charles Harris released a brief statement announcing that Kilgo had been placed on leave without pay. Assistant Sports Information Director Frank Rex said university officials had no other comment on Kilgo's status. Kilgo, 39, joined Arizona State's staff in 1987 and has been credited with dramatically improving the Sun Devils' pitching staff. In 1986, the year before his arrival, Arizona State had a staff ERA of 6.61. By 1990, the staff ERA was down to 3.48, second lowest in Pacific-10 Conference Southern Division history. Before joining Arizona State's staff, Kilgo was pitching and third base coach at MacLennan Community College in Waco, Texas, from 1978-86.

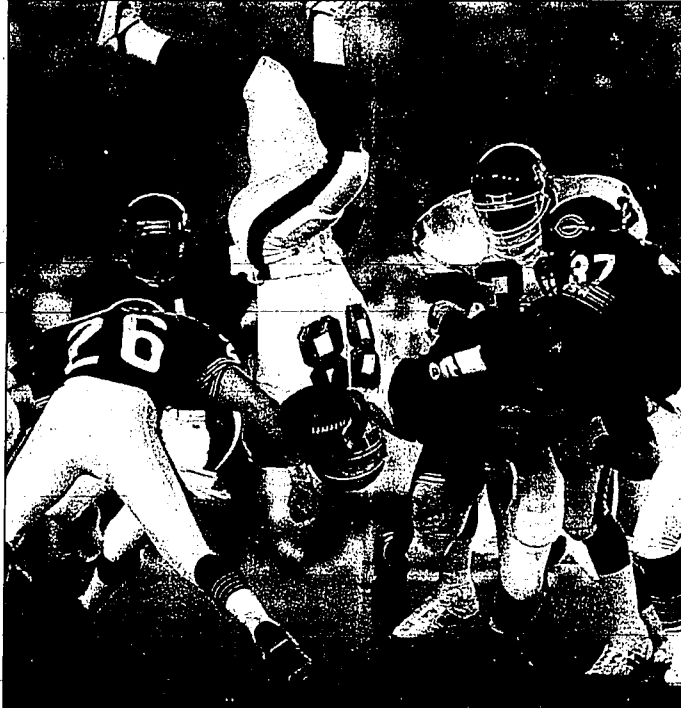

2 Vandals, a Bronco earn Big Sky football honors for week

BOISE — University of Idaho running back Sherridan May, Vandal defensive end Jeff Robinson and Boise State defensive tackle Chris Shepherd have been named the Big Sky Conference football players of the week. May, a 6-foot-1-inch, 210-pound sophomore from Tacoma, Wash., rushed for a career-high 202 yards and three touchdowns Saturday in Idaho's 52-24 victory over Weber State. He also caught two passes for eight yards. Robinson, last year's Big Sky defensive most valuable player, also had a big day for Idaho against Weber State. The 6-5, 260-pound senior from Spokane, Wash., got seven tackles, victory over Weber State, he also caught one quarterback sack, a forced fumble and one fumble recovery.

CHICAGO — The New York Giants finally found a remedy for a leaky defense that gave up the most points in the NFL in the season's first two weeks. Keep it on the field. With Phil Simms throwing for 220 yards and two touchdowns and Stephen Baker catching seven passes for 109 yards, the Giants reverted to the ball control formula that won them a Super Bowl just two seasons ago to beat the Chicago Bears 27-14 Monday night for their first win of the season.

After trailing 7-0 and 14-7, the Giants tied the game 14-14 by halftime and then controlled the ball for 12:17 in the third quarter and outgained the Bears 155-33 in the period. They broke the tie on a 13-yard pass from Simms to Baker that gave them the lead in a game for the first time this season, then added 31- and 32-yard field goals by Matt Bahr, the second set up by Dave Meggett's 39-yard punt return. Simms, who finished 19 for 30, also had a 15-yard TD pass to Howard Cross in the first period and Rodney Hampton, who gained 92 yards on 21 carries, scored on a 1-yard run as the Giants won in Chicago for the first time since 1962, when the Bears played at Wrigley Field. They had lost six times during that period. For the Bears, it was the second straight loss after an opening-day win and marked the first time since 1983 that they have lost more than one game in September. The weird first half featured three fumbles by the Bears that they recovered themselves, a botched fake punt by Chicago, an interception of a pass by Chicago running back Brad Muster and a short fight that led to the World Cup starts preparing for security problems

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — World Cup organizers said Monday they will attempt to prevent fans with a history of violence from entering the United States during the 1994 tournament in an effort to combat hooliganism. The officials also said they were considering the possibility of segregating fans by nationality inside the nine stadiums to be used for the 52-game tournament. They also said they had ruled out the possibility of a large military force to provide security, but intended to have SWAT teams available in reserve. "This is America. This is not a police state and we're not going to turn it into one," said Alan Rothenberg, chairman of World Cup USA 1994, the group that will stage the World Cup.

Rothenberg said security would be the largest budget item for the tournament. Soccer has had a history of fan violence at big games, although World Cups have been relatively trouble-free because of massive preparation. Rothenberg on Monday hired Edgar N. Best as senior vice president for security. Best was director of security for the 1984 Los Angeles Olympics, overseeing an $80 million budget.

"I'm not guaranteeing that we won't have an incident," Best said. "It would be foolish to do that. We will not be able to anticipate everything. This is a strange world." At the 1990 World Cup in Italy, up to 4,000 police and military personnel, many of them carrying machine guns, were used at games. There were three minor incidents, all outside the stadiums, but tear gas was used. Fans from England, Germany and the Netherlands have caused problems at European matches, trashing town centers, ferries and railroad cars during drunken rampages. European police have identified many of the troublemakers and prevented most of them from going to the 1990 tournament in Italy. Best said he anticipated hooligans would attempt to come to the U.S. tournament, scheduled for June 17-July 17, 1994. He already consulted with European police when he attended the 1990 World Cup. "They said, 'They'll come by charter aircraft. Don't think that you won't have that problem,'" he quoted them as saying.

Football nut compiles Top 20 list from fans' votes

The Associated Press

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Sports writers have their say about which teams are the best in football. So do coaches. Now a high school algebra teacher is giving fans their own voice. Don Harris of Nashville, an admitted football nut, has started the Association of College Football Fans. He compiles a weekly Top 20 list for the group from members' votes. "The coaches have their poll, the writers have theirs, but we don't have a say as the fans. And we're the ones footing the bill," Harris said. Harris, a former high school football coach for 12 years, is one of those rabid fans. The kind who watches college games on TV all day and into the night on Saturday and then pours over the sports pages on Sunday. But he didn't feel motivated to do anything more than that until the confusing end to the 1991 season. "College football is really a big thing, and I think some of the fans felt cheated," Harris said. "One poll picked Miami and one poll picked Washington last year. We didn't get our say so." To give fans a voice, Harris founded the Association of College Football Fans. Starting in April with his own money, he placed an advertisement for members in the Sunday Oklahoma newspaper's sports section. He said he figured the Midwest was a good place to start since college football is king there, especially in Oklahoma.

The association has 132 members who pay $25 a year to belong and vote each week in Harris' ACFF poll. Harris said the fee allows him to break even on his mailing and advertising costs. One member comes from California, while Tennessee is the farthest point east for any member. They call their votes in every Sunday to Harris who writes and produces a Top 20 poll by Wednesday. Each person then receives a copy of the poll through a weekly newsletter. "Our fans are pretty honest. ... In our poll, we picked Michigan over Notre Dame, and it looked like Michigan had the better team the other day. "It looks like our poll is pretty accurate. Of course, Oklahoma is pretty high, but in AP and USA Today, Oklahoma is pretty high there," Harris said. The AP polls sports writers each week to compile its Top 25, while CNN-USA Today offers coaches' opinions of the Top 25. The association's goal is to crown a national champion — call them the people's choice — name a coach of the year and select an All-American team. Down the road, Harris would like to gain a sponsor who would pay to fly those people in for a convention of football fans. "Can you imagine the Alabama nuts, the Tennessee nuts and the Nebraska nuts getting together for a convention? Could you imagine all these fans getting together ... and crowning your national champ," he said. "It would be football heaven."

Former CSI pitcher shuts down Cardinals

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Steve Cooke throws a football and shoots a basketball right-handed, but his left arm officially knocked the St. Louis Cardinals out of the pennant race.

Cooke, a rookie left-hander who pitched two seasons at College of Southern Idaho, pitched seven innings of three-hit shutout relief after Bob Walk apparently reinvented himself and the Pittsburgh Pirates moved to a third straight NL East title, beating the Cardinals 3-0 Monday night.

Walk and Cooke (2-0) combined on the Pirates' 18th shutout of the season — second-high in the majors to Atlanta's 21 — and Pittsburgh won its 13th in a row over St. Louis. The Pirates are 15-2 against the Cardinals and combined 25 against division rivals St. Louis and New York.

"It's only right that Pittsburgh knocked out only one," said manager Joe Torre, whose Cardinals were mathematically eliminated from the division race.

Pittsburgh won its fifth in a row and its seventh in eight games to lower its magic number by winning another division title to six. The Pirates already are assured of being the only NL team to post a winning record in all three seasons of the 1990s.

The Pirates now lead second-place Montreal by seven games and "we've put ourselves in a position where we can go up to Montreal (on Wednesday and Thursday) and get swept—and still be in a real-good position," Walk said.

"We've felt confident from Day 1 of the season we were going to win," said Don Slaught, who hit a solo homer. "We're in a position now where we can close it out soon and we feel good."

Cooke who was 1-0 with a 6.39 ERA in his first seven major-league appearances, limited the Cardinals to two singles and a double after replacing Walk to start the third.

Walk, who has been on the disabled list twice this season with a strained right groin, thought he reacquainted the injury covering first base on a grounder in the second inning.

Cooke hadn't pitched many innings at all — just 12-2-3 just joining the Pirates on July 25 — but contributed one of their best relief outings of the season.

"About the third or fourth inning, I stopped and thought, 'Hey, I've got pretty good stuff tonight,'" Cooke said. "I've helped a team in a pennant race and I feel pretty good. I feel good knowing (Lindsay) had confidence in me to keep me in there."

Cooke, from Tigard, Ore., was a former Louisiana State basketball recruit who also received some college football offers. A Proposition 48 casualty, he turned to baseball after enrolling at CSI. He shoots a basketball and throws a football right-handed, but pitched left-handed.

"I can't explain it," he said. "I can throw a baseball right-handed and it doesn't look awkward, but it doesn't have anything on it."

Cooke struck out four and walked one in his longest appearance so far in the majors.

Phillies 9, Expos 2

MONTREAL (AP) — Darren Daulton hit his third career grand slam and John Kruk drove in three runs as Philadelphia beat Montreal sending the Expos to their third straight loss.

Winner Ben Rivera (6-4) gave up two runs and four hits. He struck out six.

The Phillies chased Nick Napolitano (10-11) in the third inning with three runs, including Kruk's two-run double. Dave Hollins singled to move Kruk to third and Mariano Duncan hit a two-out single.

Cubs 10, Mets 1

NEW YORK (AP) — Andrew Dawson got his 2,500th hit and Greg Maddux pitched a career-high with his 19th victory as Chicago crushed New York.

Ryne Sandberg hit his 25th home run and Luis Salazar also connected for the Cubs.

Orioles' stopper stops fading club's 3-game losing skid

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Mike Mussina won his sixth straight decision and Mike Devereaux reached the 100-RBI mark with a three-run double as Baltimore salvaged the finale of a four-game series by beating the Milwaukee Brewers 4-1 on Monday night.

Milwaukee, which won the first three games of the series to move past Baltimore into second place, fell 4-1 games behind the Toronto Blue Jays in the AL East. The Brewers have 12 games to go, all against AL West teams. Third-place Baltimore, which plays the Blue Jays three straight beginning Tuesday night, moved CHICAGO (AP) — Ricky Henderson led off the game with a lunger for the 55th time and Mark McLuskey was the 416th runner for the second time in his career as Oakland defeated Chicago.

It was Oakland's 12th win in its last 13 games and increased the Athletics' AL West lead over Minnesota to nine games. Oakland's magic number for its fourth division title in five years is four.

pay-per-view college football. The charge is that ABC Sports won't switch from regional blowouts to show another game because some viewers paid $9.95 to see the other game on TV.

ABC executives are so simple that even a high-level network executive can understand it, seems to argue in favor of ABC on this one.

Based on ratings for the first three weeks of the season, about 6.5 million viewers are watching ABC's college football games on regular TV each Saturday, says ABC vice president of programming David Downs, one of TV's more mathematically astute executives.

"And if pay-per-view is wildly lucky, we'll get 25,000 homes per week," he said. "So you can tell which is our main business and which we're most concerned about doing the right thing for."

If ABC gets 25,000 homes on a given weekend, at $9.95 per home, pay-per-view would gross a little less than $250,000. If you guess that ABC makes that much in three minutes of on-air commercial time for a college football game, you'd probably be right.

"It just doesn't make sense for ABC to purposely enrage its advertisers and over-the-air viewers for the sake of pay-per-view," ABC does its college football PPV in conjunction with Showtime Entertainment Television, and they have not yet been able to get a deal with the network for the first three weeks. A reason is that, because it's experimental, cable companies are putting the games on customers' regular monthly bills rather than billing the games individually. Results have been slow.

Downs said ABC's projections, however, are for a buy rate of one-tenth of 1 percent from a total PPV ejection of Giants wide receiver Mark Ingram.

Chicago scored first, driving 74 yards in nine plays capped by an 8-yard TD pass to Neal Anderson by Jim Harbaugh, who was 15 of 28 for 183 yards. But the Giants came right back, going 78 yards in seven plays as Simms hit Cross from 15 yards out for the score.

Then it was Chicago's turn. A 42-yard connection from Harbaugh to Muster, who caught the ball 5 yards past the line of scrimmage, juggled it, then broke three tackles and took off down the right sideline for the end zone.

But the Bears blew a chance to take an even bigger lead after Trace Armstrong recovered a fumble by James Boyd at the New York 26.

Chicago then called a timeout and the first play was an option pass by Muster that sailed far over the head of every Bear and was picked off by Greg Jackson in the end zone.

Everson Walls' interception, the 55th of his career, set off the ying-yang for the Giants, which came on a 1-yard dive by Hampton at the end of a 47-yard drive.

Then the Giants took the opening kickoff of the second half and went 80 yards in 11 plays capped by Simms' TD pass to Baker in the corner of the end zone.

From then on, it was all Giants.

Youthful gang of new NFL coaches jumps to fast starts

The Associated Press

The early returns are in... Consider the "new generation" of coaches a success.

Bill Cowher has Pittsburgh unbeaten in three games and fans eagerly anticipating a new football dynasty.

Cincinnati's Dave Shula looks like he'll be a better head coach than an assistant. His Bengals are 2-1 despite a last-minute loss at Green Bay.

Dennis Green has Minnesota thinking playoffs again after an undefeated preseason and 2-1 start.

Green Bay's Mike Holmgren is 1-2, but the Packers' 24-23 victory on Sunday may do a lot to get the team back on track.

The Steelers' 23-6 victory over San Diego marked the first time since 1979 the team has won its first three games, and everyone in western Pennsylvania remembers what happened then - the fourth Super Bowl win in six years.

"It's nice to be in this position," Cowher said. "But you can get caught up in looking at the big picture."

Cowher is inspirational rather than tactical. And his disclaimer isn't necessarily CoachSpeak - young teams with young coaches often start well, then fade when the enthusiasm wears off.

Still, excluding San Diego's Bobby Ross, who lost quarterback John Friesz in preseason and is 0-3, the four other first-timers are a combined 8-4. The group is 8-2 against coaches other than themselves - Shula's first loss was to Holmgren on Sunday and Holmgren's first loss, on opening day, was to Green's Vikings.

There's one common denominator running through the gang of four - youth.

Cowher is 35, Green 42, Holmgren 42 and Shula is the baby of the bunch at 33 - the common perception when he got his job is that it was only because of his surname.

Add second-year coaches Bill Belichick (39) of Cleveland and Rich Kotite of Philadelphia (an ancient 50) and you may have the coaches of the '90s.

They're also different guys for different teams - Cowher and Green are gun-ho motivators; Shula, Holmgren, Belichick and Kotite more the tacticians.

And they have help - Shula from defensive coordinator Ron Lynn, who makes up for mediocre personnel with an attacking defense and Kotite from Bud Carson, 61, the former Cleveland coach, who gambles less than Buddy Ryan with just as effective.

NFC East rivals can't wait for Monday meeting

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - The two-week wait before the Dallas Cowboys play the Philadelphia Eagles in a meeting of unbeaten promises to rival the Super Bowl in the level of hype.

"I cannot wait to play Dallas," Eagles coach Rich Kotite said of the Monday night game Oct. 5. "I'm sure Jimmy Johnson is saying the same thing about us."

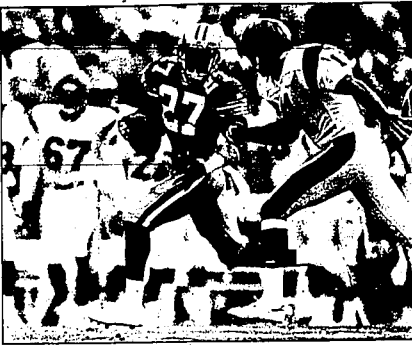

Both the Eagles and Cowboys are idle this week, and Kotite gave his players and coaches four days off.

The Eagles are coming off a 30-0 victory over Denver in which they held the Broncos to 82 yards in total offense and gave John Elway one of his worst days in 11 years as a pro. Dallas prepared for the Eagles by beating Phoenix Sunday, 31-20.

Kotite fed the sometimes ugly rivalry between the two teams, saying he still hasn't forgotten last year when the Cowboys came to Philadelphia and won 25-13, knocking the Eagles out of the playoffs and earning themselves a berth for the first time in six years.

"I'm going to be honest with you," Kotite said. "I haven't forgotten that Dallas game last year. I still see that punt returner running. I'm not kidding you."

Kevin Martin returned a punt 85 yards for a touchdown, turning the game around. That loss is the only blotch on the Eagles record for the last 11 games.

Green Bay's Terrell Buckley helped first-year coach Mike Holmgren win his first game by running back a second half punt for a touchdown Sunday.

pick, preferring to keep Elardo Webster, a ninth-round pick this year.

Moreover, the new guys are willing to disregard inflated reputations.

Green dumped such fixtures as Joey Browner, Wade Wilson and Keith Millard and Cowher got rid of Huey Richardson, last year's No. 1

pick, preferring to keep Elardo Webster, a ninth-round pick this year.

"I judge on performance," Cowher said. "Huey wasn't one of my top 47 guys."

COACHES II Kotie may be successful because he's absorbed in his job. But in three years (one as offensive coordinator) he has yet to learn his way around Veterans' Stadium, where his team plays and practices.

After Philadelphia's 30-0 dismantling of Denver, owner Norman Braman took Kotie aside outside the locker room and asked him to come upstairs to meet some luxury box types.

"Which way to get upstairs?" Kotie asked Braman.

THE 31 FACTOR The San Francisco 49ers have scored 31 points in each of their three games, 31-14 wins over the New York Giants and Jets and a 34-31 loss to Buffalo.

Next week, they play at New Orleans, which has allowed only 28 points in its three games.

IT'S A NICE PLACE TO VISIT, BUT... San Francisco has played two of its three games at Giants Stadium, and won both. But the guys don't love New York (New Jersey).

"I hate playing here," Jerry Rice said. "The fans have so many names for you. One guy told me he hopes I break my neck today. The fans are really hostile here."

One note - Steve Young, the Niners' quarterback, grew up in Greenwich, Conn., about 25 miles from Giants Stadium.

High-rent Greenwich, however, is not to be confused with New York. Or East Rutherford.

WHY TRAINING CAMP? Terrell Buckley became the latest guy to show up one day and star the next.

As did Deion Sanders with a 99-yard kickoff return in his first game this season for Atlanta. Green Bay's unsigned first-rounder took back a punt 58 yards for a touchdown in his team's 24-23 win over Tampa Bay, waving the ball high at the 10-yard line. Then, despite also fumbling a punt, he declared himself the athlete of the 20th century's second half.

SMITH AND JONES... FINA Like Buckley, Henry Jones of the Bills knows about holdouts - after being chosen in the first round last season, he was almost useless because he held out.

But on Sunday night, he returned two interceptions for TDs - one of 23 yards, the other of 82. Not to be undone, this year's No. 1 OFFENSIVE TACKLE John Fina, also scored for Buffalo on a 1-yard pass - he was playing the role of tight end Butch Rolle, now with Phoenix, whose only nine catches in a four-year stretch with the Bills were short TD passes in goal-line situations.

Then there's Bruce Smith, obviously recovered from his knee problems.

He had 26 sacks and seven unassisted tackles, five behind the line of scrimmage, for the Bills in their 38-0 win over the Colts.

BUT... Smith has 47 sacks in three games, but doesn't lead the NFL.

Neither does Philadelphia's Clyde Simmons, who has five. The leader is Tampa Bay rookie Santana Dotson, a fifth-round draft choice from Baylor with 5%.

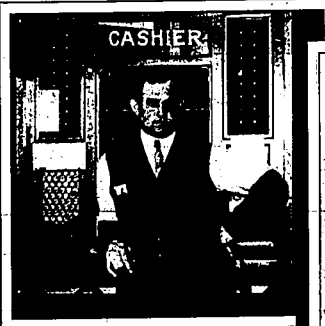

He leads Dotson, Fina, and just about everyone but (perhaps) Dale Carter of Kansas City in the race for rookie of the year.

NON-ROOKIE OF THE YEAR For one game at least, Cleveland figured out what to do with Eric Metcalf, its first-round pick in 1989. He caught five passes for 177 yards and scored four touchdowns, three on passes from Todd Phillips, in the Browns' 28-16 upset of the Raiders, who drew only 48,102 to the Coliseum despite the insertion of Todd Marinovich at quarterback.

Marinovich threw 59 times, completed 33 to his teammates, three to the Browns and netted 395 yards.

Drop Into Your Local Office This Week & Help Celebrate Our 75th Anniversary

A humble beginning.

Farmers National Bank was chartered in Buhl, Idaho, by a small group of early settlers in September, 1917, with original capital of $13,750.

The following spring, John ("J.C.") Hamilton joined the bank as cashier. By 1919, he'd assumed control of the bank. A pioneer banker, Hamilton invested heavily in the Magic Valley. While other financial institutions in the area fell by the wayside, Hamilton guided Farmers through the stock market crash and the Great Depression of the '20's and '30's, adhering to the principle of giving customers a fair deal in all aspects of banking.

Passing the torch.

After serving Farmers in various capacities—including president and chairman of the board of directors—for 48 years, J.C. stepped down in 1965, a year before his death. His son, J.P. "Pat" Hamilton, succeeded as bank president.

The next 25 years saw Farmers add two new offices: in Wendell in 1973, and in Twin Falls in 1989. And while times were not always easy, the bank always rebounded, growing at a steady rate: assets now total more than $100 million.

Today, five members of the third generation of Hamiltons are bank officers, while J.P. Hamilton serves as chairman of the board.

Always a conservative bank, Farmers was rated in 1992 by Money Magazine as the strongest bank in the state of Idaho.

Proving once again that, even after 75 years, Farmers National Bank is truly "A tradition you can count on."

Consider voting for new types of public servants

"Nobody can fire me; I'm a public servant."

—Huey Long

As you're weighing your options this November, keep these happy thoughts:

• The average member of Congress has spent more than half his adult life working for federal, state or local government.

• Since he graduated from Yale Law School in 1973, Democratic presidential candidate Bill Clinton has spent only four years off the public payroll.

• President Bush, who likes to boast that he spent 17 years working in the private sector, has spent almost twice as long drawing a federal paycheck.

There are many reasons why the federal government doesn't work, and one of the biggest is the army of public servants dedicated to its growth and prosperity.

It wasn't supposed to be that way. The Founding Fathers saw public service as a noble and temporary calling, and for good reason.

The king's agents - bureaucrats who ran the colonies as fiefdoms - were a major reason for the revolution, and James Madison, Thomas Jefferson and the other architects of the new nation were determined there would never be a large, powerful class of magistrates and quill pen-pushers running things.

Their example was George Washington, who refused a third term, went back to his Virginia home and declined a pension for either his military service or his presidency.

His 15 immediate successors, through Abraham Lincoln, spent a total of 42 years on the federal and state payroll, not counting their White House years. The next 15 totaled 87 years working for Uncle Sam or state government.

To a degree, the rise of a professional governing class was inevitable in a democracy as complex as the United States. The best and brightest gravitate toward power, and power in this country flows toward Congress and the federal bureaucracy.

But the New Deal, and the postwar explosion in the size of the federal government, left the government professionals ascendant, to the point where a man like Clinton can run as an outsider even though he's been collecting a check from the taxpayers since 1977.

No one wants a federal government run by people with no experience, but the business of governing breeds isolation.

For too many public servants, advancement means telling people somewhere in America that they can't do something, or that they must pay more money to the government, or that the way they do business doesn't conform in some way with the government's expectations.

Congressmen, bureaucrats and decision-makers who have never met a payroll or had to worry about competition, business taxes, regulation or the welfare of employees really don't have a clue how the real world works beyond the Capital Beltway.

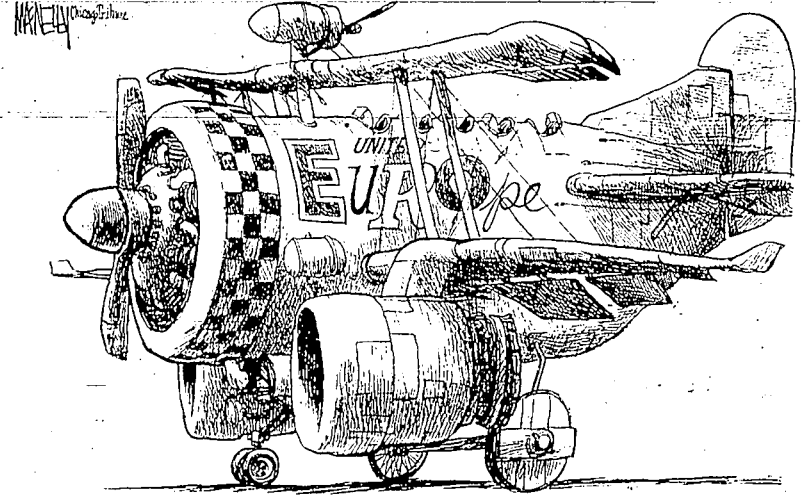

That's why public officials dedicated to change are so often ineffective once they get to Washington, and why politicians' promises notwithstanding - nothing seems to change.

It's not in Washington's interest to change. That's our national dilemma, and our ever-more-alarming national crisis.

A history of government service doesn't mean a candidate for public office is dedicated to business as usual, but it's a question worth asking.

We've been sending men and women to Washington for 200 years who know - or soon learn - how to run the country.

Now maybe it's time to send people who've demonstrated they can run their own lives before they try to run ours.

Parties slink into tobacco money pipe

Derrick Z. Jackson

Tobacco is the leading preventable cause of death in the United States. A half-million people a year die from tobacco-related causes. That is the equivalent of municipal New Orleans or Seattle.

That is more than all the U.S. soldiers killed in World War II. That is equal to the battle deaths of 10 Vietnams. That is more than the annual deaths from illegal drugs, murders, suicides and accidents combined.

You would think this annual burial/cremation of 500,000 people could inspire a presidential candidate. A challenger could turn up the heat by saying: "My opponent's administration has been in office 12 years. During that time, it has presided over the equivalent of the Jewish Holocaust."

You want to talk toxic dumping? A cigarette has 4,000 chemicals. Many cause cancer. Family values? A new study links a mother's smoking to her child's behavior problems.

The economy? Health care? Politicians brag about ending welfare waste. Democratic presidential nominee Bill Clinton makes a big deal out of saying the United States spends $8 billion more on welfare and food stamps than it did three years ago. Tobacco, the government says, costs us $2 billion a year in wasted health costs or lost job time.

Clinton says, "By the time we're through, we shouldn't have a welfare program in America." No such strident vision of attack exists for tobacco. Politicians do not say, "By the time we're through, we shouldn't have a Marlboro Man."

You will not hear that. Both the Republicans and the Democrats have slunk into the tobacco money pipe. Craig Fuller, who ran the Republican convention in Houston, is a vice president of Philip Morris. As of May, according to the National Library on Money and Politics, Philip Morris, R.J.R. Nabisco and U.S. Tobacco gave 23 percent of the $4.8 million given by the top 10 contributors to the Republican Party.

The Democrats have not historically been showered with tobacco money, but they are rapidly catching up. While tobacco's reported contributions to the Republican Party have increased threefold, from $448,300 in 1988 to $1.3 million in the first half of this year, the Democratic Party has received 19 times more money from tobacco in the first half of this year than in 1988. It has gone from $38,000 to $725,000. While R.J.R. Nabisco has given the Republicans $427,550 this year, it has also given the Democrats $301,000.

From Jan. 1, 1987, through March 31 of this year, nearly 400 House members and 92 senators were reported by PACs as receiving tobacco money, according to the National Library. This includes $7,499 given to Democratic vice presidential candidate Al Gore.

Harlem Democrat Charles B. Rangel, the most outspoken man on Capitol Hill about drugs, received $23,000 from tobacco. Someone ought to tell Rangel that the $52 billion in smoking's unnecessary health costs surpasses the $30 billion of so U.S. citizens wasted on coke and heroin in 1990.

Edward Kratoch, a top executive of U.S. Tobacco, said he kept a high profile at the Republican convention because "it really behooves us to get to know these folks before they make decisions. They make life-or-death decisions."

These decisions involve efforts to ban U.S. cigarette advertising, tobacco farm subsidies and unrestricted plundering of developing countries and Eastern Europe. Big tobacco has been wounded by growing awareness about smoking. Many U.S. cities restrict smoking in public places. Smoking is banned on domestic flights. But tobacco remains happy as long as it can stay legal.

A major part of big tobacco's fight to the death for this right to kill is keeping the nation's politicians maiming on their latest nickel bag. Last week, Senate Democrats blasted the Republican war on drugs. Judiciary Committee Chairman Joseph R. Biden Jr. of Delaware lamented that we now have 3 million "hard-core" cocaine and heroin addicts.

As for the 62 million U.S. smokers, Democrats and Republicans nod off in the corner like cheap street hustlers. They hope no one notices their slurred speech on tobacco. They hope no one rolls up the sleeves on their buttoned-down pinstripes. Cigarette burn marks are an ugly thing to see.

Don't be wooed by Demos

A few years ago, Congress voted to raise their salaries, within their rights, of course. Actually, they should have struck for a raise like other agencies. Could be they didn't like what was best for the United States in mind. They did and still do have a sizable retirement, even after one term in office. The oversized budget for their staff is degradable and should be restricted. Almost 50 million travel to other states and foreign countries is out of hand. Who should handle the purse strings or this is a dictatorial suggestion?

And ... and ... can you be sure that changing horses in the middle of the stream, so to speak, is what we need in this bumuddled, inflationary-plus-depressantary United States of America? We hope not. Can you be sure the blame from the economic contraction Congress wasn't a man and political move? The needs for America were being ignored. Who will say that a program like FDR's WPA is the next answer? Don't be wooed by the Demos to change. Good day.

Fair restrooms were disgusting

I'll make this short and to the point. We went to the fair on Thursday, Twin Falls Day. Did anyone out there besides our family and several friends notice the filthy restrooms? They were disgusting! I certainly hope the fair board didn't cut money used for wages for a crew to clean restrooms day and night shift at the fair. I know about this because I worked a few fair myself and was on this crew. It's not an easy job but someone has to do it for health sake.

Why build the dam?

Caldron Linn. You will find it in all the Idaho history books. You will find it on all the maps of the early trappers and mountain men. You will find it in the Overland Guide books that led the immigrants along the Oregon and California trails.

You will find it destroyed if B&C Energy of Twin Falls gets its way. If there was a serious need for energy, I might understand the proposal for the dam, but there is none. There are no benefits to be gained from this dam, other than filling a few pockets with money.

Milner Dam is only several miles upstream from the proposed dam, and a power plant was recently built on the northside canal. Just below Milner is the power plant at Shoshone Falls and a few miles upstream is the Mindokda Dam. In a relatively sparsely populated region as the Magic Valley, another dam would be absurd.

Each power plant in the area would be affected by the new dam, since water flow would have to be redistributed in order to keep a high enough water level to generate power. This would also affect area farmers, since their water allotment would certainly be reduced in order to maintain a high enough water level to keep the dam's generating power.

So why build the dam? We don't need the power and we wouldn't reduce our rates - there is already an abundance of energy. It wouldn't add jobs, since automated power plants need only a few operators and attendants.

There is no current need for whatever extra energy might be produced. The only possible use would be to selling it to Nevada, which I believe to be the main reason B&C is pushing the project.

It is my sincere hope that this project be soundly defeated. We would lose a historic site, fishing and hunting would be adversely affected throughout the canyon and one of the fine stretches of kayaking would be lost; far more money can be generated from tourists, kayakers and rafters than we would ever see from a dam.

B&C Energy can in no way justify destroying our resources solely to line their pockets. Once destroyed, these natural and historic treasures can never be replaced.

Consideration would be nice

Isn't it amazing how rude people can be?

We recently had lunch at one of our favorite places, and there were people smoking in what I had always thought was the no smoking section. There had been signs on the wall until that day. I asked one of the girls working about it, and she said the sign had somehow been ripped off the wall so there was not anything she could do about it. We always try to sit in the no smoking area because my mother, who was with me, is asthmatic and allergic to cigarette smoke. I had just taken her to the doctor because her asthma was really bad at that time. We were fortunate the area of the smoking area we sat in no one smoked, so it turned out OK.

I have never smoked so maybe I'm prejudiced on the subject, but it looks like people could have a little consideration for others. Of course, if I had my preference, there would be no smoking in any public buildings. I know that's not a popular opinion among a lot of people including restrooms day and night shift at the fair. I know about this because I worked a few fair myself and was on this crew. It's not an easy job but someone has to do it for health sake.

I would really like to see more people have consideration for other people when in a public building, especially an eating establishment.

French returns reveal electorate divided over union

PARIS (AP) — The referendum on European union sketched a revealing portrait of a deeply divided France. On one side were Parisians, professionals, the young. On the other, farmers, factory workers, the French who feel forgotten.

The results "show a new, detailed face of France, of its hopes and fears, that must be reckoned with," said Jacques-Delors, the Frenchman who presides over the European Community's executive branch.

The 12.6 million voters who opposed the Maastricht treaty — 49 percent of those who cast ballots Sunday — encompassed the fringe political parties of the far-right and far-left, but also a broad spectrum of the working class.

While the political, corporate and cultural elite pleaded for a "yes" to keep alive the dream of a European confederation, an estimated 60 percent of farmers and laborers were voting "no."

Paris, the seat of a vast government bureaucracy, gave 62 percent support to the treaty. Most other big cities voted "yes," but Marseille — the economically troubled Mediterranean port with longstanding resentment of Paris — voted 55 percent "no."

That same figure applied to entire south coast of France, from the Pyrenees to the Riviera. Unemployment in the region is even higher than the 10 percent nationwide rate, and its agriculture and maritime industries are reeling.

Far northern France, with a struggling steel industry and rampant joblessness, was another "no" bastion, as were working-class Paris suburbs where the hardline Communist Party remains strong.

But the wealthier suburbs — and prosperous urban areas nationwide — voted "yes."

Among the "no" voters, the primary motivation was a fear that France would lose sovereignty in a more closely united Europe. The second most common reason cited in exit polls was antipathy toward the EC's Brussels-based technocrats, followed by fear of German domination and hostility toward President François Mitterrand, a staunch treaty supporter.

Those who said "no" have given a warning to the Socialist government about domestic policy and a warning against a certain type of Europe which they don't want," said Alain Madelin, a centrist politician who supported the treaty.

For treaty supporters, the principal motivations were to consolidate peace in Europe and respond to economic challenges from the United States and Japan.

Red Cross food lost to looters

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — An International Red Cross food depot was looted amid heavy clan fighting in the western Somali town of Belet Huen on Monday, as more U.N. troops arrived to protect other relief shipments to the starving nation.

Spokesmen for two aid agencies said relief workers in Belet Huen were staying in their compounds and a decision would be made Tuesday on whether to evacuate them.

"The relief teams are just keeping their heads down," said Ben Foot of the Save The Children Fund of Britain.

About 15 foreign aid workers, plus scores of Somalis who work only for food, are operating in Belet Huen.

It was not immediately clear how much food was stolen from the Red Cross compound. There were no reports of deaths or injuries.

The attack underscored the banditry and chaos in this African nation, riven by clan warfare since the ouster of dictator Mohamed Siad Barre in January 1991. Relief workers have been killed and wounded trying to alleviate the suffering in this Horn of Africa nation, and by some estimates, up to half of the 165,000 tons of aid delivered this year has been stolen.

The United States was forced to temporarily suspend its airlift of food to Belet Huen on Friday when one of its planes was hit by a stray bullet while unloading on the town's airstrip.

"Monday's raid "appears to be an argument between two clans over who controls the airport, who controls the offloading of goods," said Foot from his office in Nairobi, Kenya. "One faction apparently felt it wasn't getting its share of the goodies and decided to make its presence felt by raiding the warehouse."

In the Somali capital, Mogadishu, the main body of a 500-strong armed U.N. force from Pakistan began arriving Monday, charged with preventing similar attacks at the city's port and airport.

Twenty-three Pakistani soldiers were ferried into Mogadishu on an American C-141 Starlifter cargo plane. The troops are being brought in an American military aircraft in an operation monitored by 2,100 U.S. Marines sitting on four warships off Somalia's Indian Ocean coast.

Brig. Gen. Imtiaz Shaheen, commander of the 500 armed U.N. troops from Pakistan, estimated it would take about a week to bring in the entire force, which is restricted to Mogadishu. The force will not be deployed until all the troops have arrived, he has said.

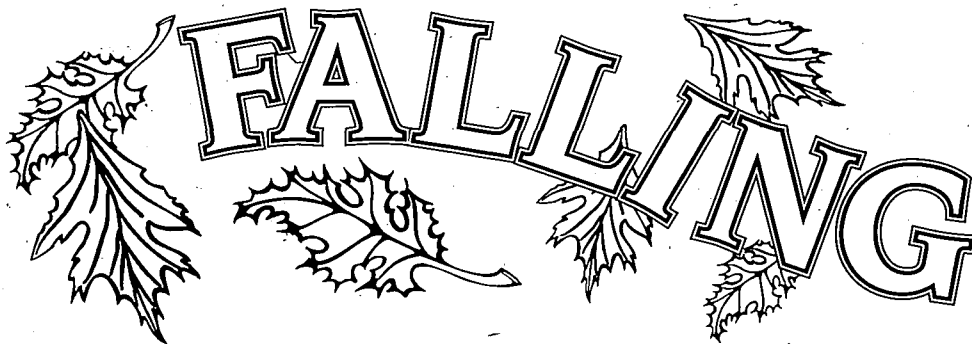

The presence of Marines so close to Somalia has angered the country's main warlord, Gen. Mohamed Farh Aaidid, who demanded that they leave.

Shaheen said he told Aaidid on Monday that the Americans had no intention of invading Somalia. "They just came to guide their own aircraft," he said.

The general refused to discuss details of his meeting with Aaidid. But one subject was almost certainly U.N. plans to send 3,000 more troops to protect humanitarian operations in a country where drought and war have killed more than 100,000 and 2 million more are in danger of imminent starvation.

Aaidid, whose militia men have been accused of much of the looting, has opposed foreign intervention, apparently fearing a large U.N. presence would dilute his power.

Forgotten islands struggle with Andrew aftermath, too

ELEUTHERA ISLAND, Bahamas (AP) — Residents of this sliver of land in the Atlantic are struggling against a hurricane aftermath every bit as severe as the wreckage left in Florida, Louisiana and Hawaii.

In the northern hamlet of Current, hardest hit of any community on Eleuthera, Derek Elden is still dazed one month after a giant wave created by Hurricane Andrew swept his home out to sea. All that's left is a concrete slab.

Thirteen miles to the north, down a rain-splashed dirt road, a group of Haitian refugees huddle under leaking tents. They were given food, but have no stove to cook it on. It is a miserable existence.

Yet they are grateful to be alive, and some of them say they prefer this sort of life to the kind they had in Haiti.

On Harbor Island, a sprig of land two miles offshore noted for its 18th century colonial buildings and spectacular pink beach, the cleanup is well in hand, but the reconstruction may take a long time.

Andrew swept across the Bahamas a half-day before smashing into Florida.

Help has come from the United States, Britain and Jamaica, but many islanders feel progress is slow. Money has been provided by the Taiwan government, banks and private donations.

Nine-year-old Andre Neely of the Bahamas looks out his missing back door at the debris scattered throughout the yard by Hurricane Andrew. Boxes of relief aid lie among the ruins.

"The whole northern end of the island is pretty much without power," said Lt. Steve Rowks, head of a 22-man detachment of U.S. Navy Seabees that arrived to help Sept. 7, two weeks after Andrew hit.

"The Navy has provided water and construction support, and the Seabees have been flushing out fresh water wells, ridding them of contamination. They also have rebuilt roofs on two schools, a clinic, a mission, a residence for the elderly and several other buildings. They have also cleared roads, provided generator power and helped bring supplies to more than 1,100 people."

The devastation is merely a matter of scale. This isn't Dade County, Fla., which has 1.9 million residents. Only 11,000 people live on this 100-mile-long, 2-mile-wide island 60 miles east of Nassau. Most are farmers, fishermen and tourist industry workers.

Amazingly, only four people died in the hurricane. The Bahamian government estimated damage at $250 million and said 1,700 people were left homeless. Though significant here, it's nowhere near the havoc in Florida — $20 billion in damage and at least 250,000 people left homeless.

But on Eleuthera, virtually everyone who lost their home was taken in by a friend or relative — everyone except the Haitians, who are leftless for the most part, with few friends and family here.

"We have to stay here because we can't go back to our country," said Concilia Buissan, standing in a narrow passageway between rows of leaning blue tents, most with soggy cardboard on the floor.

"If we find a nice place, we will go there. If not, I will stay here forever," she said.

In Current, it was the sea, not the wind, that was the destroyer.

As the leading edge of the storm passed over the peninsula, it pushed the water out from the beach so far that it was no longer visible.

"Then the wind switched and blew it back in," said Elden, who works for Bahamian Customs. "It was a huge wall of water at least 18 feet high."

Many houses like Elden's are gone except for the foundation. Clothing can still be seen clinging to trees and bushes.

"This is the biggest disaster we have ever had," said Godfrey Devenax, who was landing out food and water from a Kiwanis Club relief van. "People who were more fortunate on the south end of the island are coming up here to help as much as possible."

The island's citrus groves, a major product, are a mess. It's off-season for pineapples, but no one knows yet how other vegetables and fruit will rebound now that the ground has been thoroughly soaked with salt water.

Nearly everyone is desperate for building materials, especially roofing. Most of these products normally are imported from Florida. But south Florida has its own problems and supplies are tough to find.

Shevardnadze threatens to quit if election blocked

MOSCOW (AP) — Eduard Shevardnadze, the former Soviet foreign minister who returned to lead his native Georgia this year, said Monday he would quit the job if violence blocks national elections next month.

The Black Sea republic has been wracked by ethnic and political war for more than a year. Shevardnadze's government is battling supporters of ousted President Zviad Gamsakhurdia, as well as separatists in two regions.

In a radio address to the nation Monday, Shevardnadze also threatened to attack militants again in the Georgian coastal territory of Abkhazia if the secessionist Mountain People's movement doesn't put down its guns by Friday.

"If elections are thwarted, there will be nothing for me to do in Georgia," Shevardnadze said, repeating a previous threat to resign.

He said violence was threatening chances of holding fair, democratic elections Oct. 11. They would be the first elections, since Gamsakhurdia was chosen in the republic's first popular vote last year.

"What would happen in Georgia will contradict my convictions. That will be either anarchy and chaos, or a military dictatorship," Shevardnadze said.

He also had warned of an impending dictatorship when resigning as Soviet foreign minister in December 1990. He returned to the job briefly after the 1991 Soviet coup and before returning to Georgia in March.

His speech followed the destruction before dawn Monday of a bridge in western Georgia, a Gamsakhurdia stronghold.

The government blamed pro-Gamsakhurdia forces and said the bridge was destroyed to keep residents of the town Mtskheta from taking part in the elections.

Swedes chase mystery submarine

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — The navy fired depth charges at a suspected foreign submarine Monday in the second attack against a mystery intruder in less than a week, military officials said.

The attack was launched outside Landsort in the Stockholm archipelago after a hydrophone detected an underwater vessel, the military said in a statement. A hydrophone picks up sounds in the water, such as from a submarine engine.

There were no reports of a hit by any of the depth charges.

Sweden has reported regular violations of its waters for more than a decade. Since the collapse of the Soviet Union, officials have been unable to explain where the intruders have come from, although Defense Minister Anders Berck suggested May that elements of the Russian military could be acting without the knowledge of Russian President Boris Yeltsin.

Electricity in east end to be cut off one hour

HANSEN—Electricity for Idaho Power customers in the Hansen, Murtaugh, Eden, Hazelton areas, as well as in areas south of Kimberly, will be cut off at 9 a.m. Wednesday for about one hour.

Idaho Power is cutting the electricity to perform line maintenance and repair a switch at the company's Eden substation.

Ambulance rates to rise soon in southern Blaine

HAILEY—Ambulance and emergency medical care in southern Blaine County will cost more after Oct. 1. New rates on user fees, approved by the Blaine County commission, will boost the cost of an ambulance ride from $2.50 per mile to $4 per mile.

Basic life support by Blaine County emergency crews will increase from $125 to $190. Advanced life support will cost $250 rather than $175 under the old fee structure.

The new fee structure will be comparable to rates charged by the Ketchum Fire Department in northern Blaine County, according to Dan McKenna, director of Blaine County Emergency Services.

User fees currently generate about $60,000 of the county ambulance service's $723,000 budget. The new fee structure is expected to create an extra $30,000 in revenue for the department.

CSI will spend $205,000 on new computer system

TWIN FALLS—College of Southern Idaho board members voted unanimously to spend $114,000 on a new computer software system that will keep track of college records.

The total cost of buying the system, installing it, converting existing data into the system, training staff to use it and the first year maintenance agreement will be $205,000.

The college will use $25,000 of Title III federal funds to pay part of the system.

The board also approved a $28,805 bid by Business Interiors of Idaho for furniture in the college's Student Union including 60 upholstered stack chairs, three love seats, seven lounge chairs and 21 tables.

Twin Falls deputy wins praise for high marks

TWIN FALLS—High marks in the classroom drew high praise at the Twin Falls County Sheriff's office Monday for one of the department's newest members.

Deputy Jim Tuttle, 29, became only the second Twin Falls County deputy ever to receive the Claude F. Wiley award from the College of Southern Idaho law enforcement program.

The award is given each year to the graduate who attains the highest scholastic average.

Sheriff Jim Munn said he knew of the award some time ago, but was waiting for an opportune time to present it. "This is a proud moment," Tuttle said after receiving the plaque.

Tuttle, who graduated in February, said he isn't sure what his exact grade point average was, but it was over 3.0.

The law enforcement program substitutes for the state's police academy, although CSI cadets must take the same tests and meet the same standards as academy students.

Tuttle became a reserve deputy in 1990 and has been a full-time deputy since graduation.

Denton Darrington receives award from hospital group

SUN VALLEY—State Sen. Denton Darrington, R-Declo, received the Idaho Hospital Association's Star-Garnet Award, its highest honor, Monday at the association's 59th annual convention.

Darrington, a five-term legislator who chairs the Senate Judiciary and Rules Committee and is vice-chair of the Health and Welfare Committee, was cited for "outstanding contributions to the health care field."

"Darrington is widely respected and acknowledged as an exceptionally strong, effective leader and a person who is committed to the public service mission of Idaho's hospitals," said Chris Anton, IHA chairman and president of Boise's St. Alphonsus Regional Medical Center.

City considers landfills

By Phil Sahn
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS—Twin Falls County's trash dilemma spilled over into Twin Falls City Council work session Monday.

With the county exiting the Southern Idaho Regional Solid Waste District, the city council must decide if the city will use the regional landfill, a county-run one, or find another solution.

"The council heard from three people close to the trash issue."

City Sanitation Inspector Sherry Jeff questioned the county's decision to leave the regional district.

Jeff said the county's original decision to join the regional district was a good one and questioned why the two commissioners who rarely went to the regional meetings, Norma Bliss and Jim Fraley, would vote the county out.

"They should have gone to the regional meetings the last three years if they had questions," Jeff said.

Bliss and Fraley voted to withdraw from the district last Thursday. Commissioner Marvin Hempleman voted to stay in the district.

"I have a real worry about their decision-making process," Jeff said.

They should have given the city of Twin Falls, which produces the most trash of entry in the county, more consideration in the decision, Jeff said.

New federal rules will require the county to close its current landfills by October 1993. The county must either open its own new landfill, join the regional district, or find another way to dispose of its trash.

Solid waste district Director Terry Schultz explained the regional plan, while Gerald Tewes, who heads the county landfill siting group, questioned the regional district's plan and said that the county can do as well on its own.

Schultz showcased the regional plan — two landfills and a system of 13 transfer stations — for a price of up to $16 million.

Despite the price tag, the regional plan will save the counties money over time, Schultz said.

"That's one of the significant differences in approaching the problem," Schultz said. "We are willing to spend some money up front and use experts to save in the long run."

The regional financing plan also allows those counties — Blaine, Jerome, Lincoln, Mardok, Cassia and probably Gooding — to retire their debt in 15 years and then pay as they go to buy new equipment and expand the landfill, Schultz said.

But Tewes said the regional plan leaves too many questions, including how dead animals, septic waste and industrial waste will be handled, or how the regional system will pay for the costs.

The regional budget calls for Twin Falls County to add $350,000 in the upcoming fiscal year "and that won't turn one spade of dirt," Tewes said.

While the county doesn't have cost estimates now, it will when a site is found. And Twin Falls County can get a good financing package like the district, he said.

Councilman Jim Vickers said he might see a reason to go with a regional system.

"The obvious reason to get mixed with these other counties is to save dollars," Vickers said.

Red Cross director will head for Florida

By Phil Sahn
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS—The manager of the Twin Falls chapter of the American Red Cross left today to spend the next three weeks helping victims of Hurricane Andrew in Miami.

Chapter Manager Ruth Young said she volunteered for the assignment because she hopes to learn from the experience.

"I think it will help me understand how to prepare this area for a disaster," Young said.

Granted, Twin Falls isn't in a hurricane path, like Florida and Hawaii, but the area likely might see a disaster sometime. If it does, Young wants to be ready.

Young doesn't know what work she'll be doing but expects a tough grind.

"The working conditions won't be particularly easy. Long days and no days off," she said. "Our emphasis is trying to get families to function again as families."

The Red Cross provides the means for disaster victims to get food, clothing, medicine, tools, in other words, the basics.

Fairfield fiddle king Mannie Shaw dies

The Times-News

FAIRFIELD—A man whose fiddle once helped thaw the Cold War between the United States and Iron Curtain countries died following a stroke on Sunday.

Mannie Shaw, 85, of Fairfield, was known by many as "Mr. Idaho Fiddler," "Mr. Fiddler USA" and was the organizer and past president of the Old-Time Fiddler's Association of Idaho.

Born in Torrington, Wyo., in September 1907, Shaw moved with his family to Washington and then came to Idaho by covered wagon in 1918. He was 11.

Within two years, Shaw began fiddling for community dances on the prairie.

He once said he could pick up a few dollars at the rodeo and then $2.50 a night fiddling.

Shaw, who could not read music, eventually would be featured in such national magazines as "Woman's-Day," "Life," and "Sunset." He was also featured in a Russian magazine.

Shaw also toured Romania with a group of Idaho fiddlers at a time when the Cold War was only getting hotter.

Another of Shaw's great loves was politics.

Weekend party concludes with shooting, stabbing

By Brad Bowlin

TWIN FALLS—A Twin Falls man was shot in the arm and shoulder early Sunday morning near the scene of a raucous party on Jefferson Street, police say.

A second man was stabbed with a screwdriver at the same party, police say.

Officers found shooting victim Francisco Rendon on Madison Street, bleeding from his right arm and yelling for help at about 12:30 a.m.

Rendon, 18, told police he had been walking south on Jefferson Street when someone yelled at him and fired a gun, striking him in the shoulder, according to a police report.

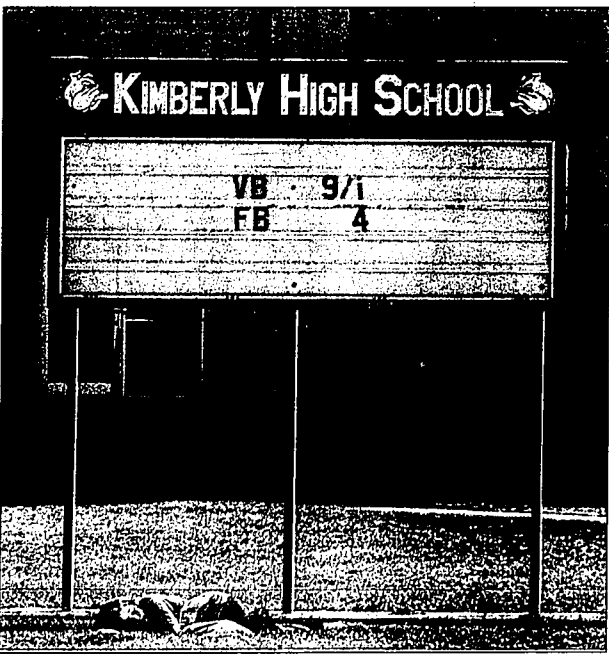

He ran east on Borah Avenue to Madison Street, where he pounded on a door and asked for help. Rendon was in stable condition at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center Monday evening, according to a nursing supervisor there.

While investigating the shooting, officers found a spent shell from a .12-gauge shotgun in the 300 block of Jefferson Street.

The shooting came more than two hours after police were called to quiet a party at 395 Jefferson Street.

Moose leaves officials perplexed

By N.S. Nokkentved
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS—Even though the moose that blundered into town last week got killed, officials aren't sure what they would do differently if the situation arose again.

"It's hard to say what we should have done," said Randy Smith, a wildlife biologist with the state Department of Fish and Game.

The young, 500- to 600-pound bull moose led state and local officials on a chase through the city's north end Thursday. It eluded capture, only to be hit and killed by a car Friday night while crossing Highway 30 west of town.

The car's occupants were not seriously injured. In hindsight, Smith said, officials might have gone out to look for the moose on Friday morning. But the department director, Jerry Conley, was in town for an employee meeting.

Fish and Game's Jerome office had no calls of moose sightings on Friday. And without knowing where the moose was hiding, finding it would have been a long shot, he said.

Besides if it had left town, officials thought it might be best to leave it alone, Smith said.

But if another moose wanders into town, officials might react differently, he said.

It might have been easier to tranquilize the moose when it was sighted about a week ago near Hansen. But experience showed the animals tended to avoid town and head south, Smith said.

The moose was roasted from a pond on Washington Street North Thursday. It then visited the Target store parking lot and Gary's Westland Motors on Blue Lakes Boulevard North, before heading for the College of

This bull moose caused a stir in Twin Falls. Several attempts to tranquilize it with darts failed.

It apparently spent Thursday night in the draw where the Perrine Coulee enters the Snake River Canyon.

Officials could have used a more potent tranquilizer, but they decided not to because the moose was in a populated area, Smith said.

The drug that was used on the moose was recommended by officials in Idaho Falls, where last year about 80 moose were removed from the area, he said.

He was not sure why the tranquilizer failed to pacify the Twin Falls moose.

Because the meat may have been tainted by the tranquilizer, the carcass was disposed of in the South Hills Saturday.

Although moose occasionally wander through the Magic Valley, they usually avoid town, Smith said.

"It's uncommon to have a moose wander through Twin Falls," he said.

The closest known moose population is in the Sublett Mountains east of Burley. There may also be a few moose in the South Hills, Smith said.

But just where they're heading when they pass through the Magic Valley on their migrations is unknown, he said.

In 1990 a young bull moose was spotted south of Burley, Smith said. A few days later, Fish and Game officials got a call from Nat Soo Pah reporting the animal.

Later a rancher south of Rogerson reported a moose camped out in one of his pastures.

"Then it just kind of disappeared," Smith said. He suspects it headed for greener pastures farther south.

Young males of several game species in addition to moose wander in search of new territory, for a variety of reasons.

Some are forced out of their home territory by more dominant males. Or they may be rejected by a pregnant mother. Or they may simply have wandered off during the winter in search of food.

In the process moose, elk, deer and other wildlife cross Interstate 84 and highways 30 and 90, often without incident. But occasionally some are killed.

When large animals stray into town, it's up to Fish and Game officials to handle the problem.

"We're not prepared to handle larger animals," Twin Falls police chief Paul DuFresne said.

But the department does from time to time deal with escaped horses and cattle. Last year officers had to shoot a bull that had escaped from the stockyards, he said.

Florida

Young said.
The organization already has served more than 3 million meals in Florida since Hurricane Andrew ripped through the area in late August, Young said. Almost 6,000 Red Cross workers are stationed there, she said.
Eighty-four emergency response vehicles are handing out 140,000 meals each day to the Andrew's victims and relief workers, Young said. Mental health workers are in high demand, not only to the victims but to those helping them, she said.
Work in Florida presents a bigger challenge than in Hawaii, she said, because of the scope of the damage. But the Twin Falls Red Cross got into a few calls after Hurricane Iniki pummeled the island of Kauai recently from Twin Falls—area people were trying to locate relatives on the small island.
Red Cross chapters across the country are being asked to train workers to help in the disaster relief. But that's not something that can be done overnight, she said.
"It's not something that you can give a little orientation and get on the plane."

Young is the only worker from the Twin Falls chapter going to help with hurricane relief so far, but others from around the state already have gone, she said.

One area woman, Shirley Helms, went to Guam recently after a typhoon struck there, Young said. Young expects to be gone about three weeks.

Shooting

When the officers left shortly after 10 p.m. Saturday, several men came out of the house and began arguing, but they went their separate ways without further incident, officer Chris Fullmer of the Twin Falls police department said in his report.
"At 10:30 p.m., officer Tim Miller was called to Magic Valley Regional Medical Center to take a report on a man who had been stabbed in the neck with a screwdriver.
Police believe that man, 18-year-old Oscar Ortiz, was at the party on Jefferson Street when he was stabbed, Lt. Jim Kistler said.
Due to the nature of his injuries, Ortiz was unable to speak with officers immediately, Miller said. Ortiz remained in stable condition at the hospital Monday evening.
"This is a case of a party that really got out of hand," Kistler said. Police have suspects in both incidents, but no arrests were made Monday as detectives continued their investigation. Officers said suspects leave the area or go into hiding. Kistler said he expects to make arrests by mid-week.

Neither Bishop nor LaRoque could be reached Monday for comment.

Object dropped onto passing truck

RUPERT — A tractor-trailer driver told the Minidoka County Sheriff's Department that someone on Sunday dropped an object onto his windshield from the 200 West overpass on Interstate 84.

Eric Josephson of Madison, Minn., told deputies he was driving west on I-84 at 3:15 a.m. when something shattered his windshield, but didn't break it out. Damage was estimated at $200.

Deputies searched the area trying to locate the object but found nothing. Some youngsters were reportedly dropping water balloons from the 500 West overpass at about the same time, deputies reported, but none of the youths were caught.

Boys' smoking allegedly causes fire

RUPERT — Two boys are believed to have started a shed fire Saturday while they were smoking cigarettes.

According to a Rupert Police Department file, Jose Gonzales, 127 E. Sixth, notified police at 3:13 p.m. that his backyard shed appeared to be on fire.

When the officer arrived, he observed smoke and flames coming from the roof of the building.

Three cigarette lighters and half a pack of cigarettes were found near the shed, and two boys admitted to accidentally setting the fire, police reported.

Fire officials haven't determined the amount of the loss yet.

Pickup rear-ends car on bridge

BURLEY — A pickup driven by a Heyburn man ran into the back of a vehicle Saturday morning on the Heyburn-Burley bridge, deputies say.

According to the Cassia County Sheriff's Department, a car, driven by Otilia Cecena, 27, of 25 Van Englen Drive, stalled on the bridge at about 10:30 a.m.

A passenger reportedly got out of the car to alert motorists of the car being on the bridge but Kenneth Craythorn, 58, 2156 Sessions, didn't see the car until it was too late and hit the car from behind.

Both vehicles sustained about $3,000 damage, but no injuries were reported, deputies said. Craythorn was cited for inattentive driving and for not having insurance, said a report.

Car windshield apparently kicked in RUPERT — Someone apparently climbed onto the hood of a car owned by a D Street resident Saturday and kicked out the windshield.

Rupert police reported that the vandalized vehicle belongs to Marisol Garcia, 924 D St., who discovered the problem at 11 p.m.

The officer on the scene observed footprints on top of the car near the windshield.

Police estimated the loss at $150.

Burglars strike home near Declo

DECLO — Burglars stole almost $2,000 worth of electronic gear and other items recently from a house northeast of Declo, deputies say.

According to the Cassia County Sheriff's Department, Randy West returned home Sunday to find his home had been robbed of a color television, video recorder, microwave oven, stereo and other items. Burglars apparently broke the door latch in order to gain entrance into the house.

Black Pine Mine seeks to expand operation

By Eric Goodell
Mini-Cassia News Service

MALTA — Black Pine Mine officials have determined there's enough gold in them that hills to request approval of another mining pit.

Sawtooth National Forest employees are conducting an environmental analysis of the proposed project and have scheduled public meetings to accept comments.

In addition to the new pit, the mine's owners are asking for a site to dump waste rock and a road to the pit.

The meetings have been scheduled for 7 p.m. Sept. 30 at the Best Western Burley Inn and 7 p.m. Oct. 1 at the Snowville (Utah) School.

Visual impact is of chief importance in the request, said Larry Randall, district minerals administrator for the Burley Range District.

"The proposed pit is far on top of the mountain and that will mean there will need to be a road going up to it, so it will be highly visible," Randall said.

The current mine, owned by Pegasus Gold Corp., is already visible from Interstate 84.

Pegasus hopes to have the pit approved by this spring. Three pits have already been approved for the mine, and mining started on the second pit this past summer.

Randall said, however, that mine officials want to begin mining the proposed fourth pit before the third one.

Besides visual impact, other Forest Service concerns include possible damage to the watershed or erosion which might take place if the new pit and road were built.

"We'll be looking for the grade of road and erosion control and revegetation techniques," Randall said.

The request by Black Pine isn't unusual, he said. Most mines usually get a mine started and then continue to explore other areas to determine whether opening other pits is feasible, Randall said.

"It's typical of mines to go through staged approvals," he explained.

Black Pine gave a formal proposal to the Forest Service last week, saying it has obtained enough geologic information to warrant another mining pit.

This summer, however, Forest Service officials received an initial proposal from the mine and have been working with mine officials to "refine" it, Randall said.

He said the Forest Service is pleased with the work the mining company is doing.

"They are meeting or exceeding all the environmental standards," Randall said.

"We are really pleased with the care they are taking to make it a first-class mine."

The mine officials have agreed to reclaim the area, located about 70 miles south of Burley, once mining is finished at the site.

Grandview residents oppose annexation

By Eric Goodell
Mini-Cassia News Service

BURLEY — City officials met a strong negative response when they surveyed Grandview residents to determine if they wanted to be annexed into Burley.

So strong that city officials want to put the proposal to rest.

"It's a dead issue," said Councilman Clay Handy at Monday night's bi-monthly meeting at the Cassia County School Central Office.

There were two ways to every way received, Mayor Frank Bauman reported. The city sent 80 to 85 letters sent and received about 50 replies, he said.

Many of those who responded negatively to the survey did so because of the higher taxes that come with being in the city and because they may have to give up farm animals they owned, Bauman said.

Those who were in favor of being annexed often weren't dissatisfied with their present services, but "could see it was best in the long run," said Bauman.

Bauman said that if the Grandview area was annexed, the city would have to install curb and gutter work, and sewer and water lines.

Last week, in another annexation issue, the Burley Planning and Zoning Commission recommended that the city annex about 14 to 15 homes located at various locations outside the city in part to "square up" city boundaries.

The city council is expected to take action on that recommendation within the next two months.

Man worries about new wife's evening habits when on the road

DEAR ABBY: My wife and I have been married for two years. I am 51 and she is 47. This is my third marriage (death, divorce and her second (divorce). We are very much in love, and whatever we do, we do together. It's when we are not together that causes me concern.

Dear Abby
Abigail
VanBuren

with Victorian principles. I await your answer.

- JEALOUS

DEAR JEALOUS: Your wife is a "career woman" — perhaps your previous wives were not. Since she is being up-front with you and telling you what she does on these trips, you have no reason to be jealous. When a businesswoman is "on the road," it's not unusual for her to have dinner with business associates (just as a businessman would). And if she and her escort are dining in a club where there's music and dancing, why shouldn't she dance if she wants to?

You say you trust her. Fine. Now stop worrying about her fidelity, unless you have a reason to question it.

DEAR ABBY: I am a young woman on my own, and I have been self-supporting since I graduated from college three years ago. I have a friend (male) who makes his living about stocks. He has done very well, and insists that buying and selling stocks is not a gamble if you know what you're doing.

Well, this friend told me that he had a "hot" stock that was sure to go up immediately. I believed him and invested $5,500 in it. This may not be a lot of money to some people, but it represented my life's savings.

Instead of going up, the stock went down. It's worth about $400 now. My friend felt guilty and offered to buy it from me at the price I paid for it.

Should I let him buy it to relieve his conscience? Or should I tell him I'm a big girl — nobody twisted my arm — and thanks, but no thanks?

- LEARNED A LESSON

DEAR LEARNED: Since he advised you to buy the stock with what represented your life's savings, he had a moral obligation to keep his eye on it. (It didn't lose over 90 percent of its value overnight.)

If I were you, I'd take him up on his offer. Now, take a tip from me, and don't take any more "tips" from him.

DEAR ABBY: I heard that you are a big fan of ABC's "Homefront" TV series. I love that show, and watch nothing else but that and the news.

Since "Homefront" takes place in your era, I hope you can answer this question: The pilot episode was titled "S.N.A.F.U." What do those letters stand for? I've asked around, and nobody seems to know.

- DENNIS W. IN ST. LOUIS

DEAR DENNIS: They stand for "Situation Normal — All Fouled Up." It came into the language during World War II, and means "badly confused or ridiculously muddled."

My wife works for the government and does some traveling. Sometimes she travels alone and sometimes with other employees. It's these trips that I have problems with, Abby, is it proper for a married person, while away from home, to:

1. Accept dinner invitations with a member of the opposite sex?
2. Accept invitations (opposite sex) for cocktails?

3. Accept invitations to a club where there is dancing?

4. Allow a person of the opposite sex in your hotel room?

Maybe my age is my problem, but I would not do any of the above. I just wouldn't feel right. She says that sometimes she is put in a situation where she can't say no. I disagree. I trust her, but I find these activities bordering on the brink of trouble. She thinks I'm being silly. Who is right? Perhaps I'm living

Study: Students with low grades drink heavily

WASHINGTON (AP) — College students with low grades consume an average of 11 alcoholic drinks a week, three times the amount that members of the honor roll imbibe, researchers reported today.

The study, based on a survey of 56,000 students, also found that students at small schools are drinking more than those at larger schools, and men are more likely than women to go on heavy "ages."

Researchers from Southern Illinois University and the College of William and Mary analyzed survey results collected at 78 campuses during the 1989-90 school year.

The report is intended to help campus leaders understand the frequency of drug and alcohol use as they design programs to combat substance abuse.

Alcohol, as expected, is the drug of choice: 86 percent of respondents said they used it in the last year, and 45 percent said they drink on a weekly or more frequent basis.

Twenty-seven percent of students said they smoked marijuana in the past year, and 6.1 percent said they used cocaine, the survey found.

But Presley and colleague Philip W. Meilman said the most significant result is the link between low grades and booze.

Students who were getting Ds and Fs were averaging 10.8 drinks a week, while students with As were consuming 3.4 drinks.

"You can't make a statement that drinking causes low grades and vice versa," Meilman said. "All we can say is there is a relationship."

The survey of 56,361 students at 56 four-year schools and 22 community colleges also found:

• Students at smaller campuses drinking more frequently. At four-year schools with an enrollment of less than 2,500, students under 24 averaged seven drinks a week. That rate fell at larger schools.

"Small schools tend to be located in rural environments where there is less to do, so people may turn to drinking more," Meilman said. "There's a tendency to conform to existing social norms."

• 14 percent of men and women said they went on a binge at least once in the past two weeks, consuming five or more drinks. The gap between the sexes widened, however, when students were asked if their binges were common. Sixteen percent of men said they had five drinks or more at least three times in two weeks, compared with 9 percent of women.

• Regular drinkers also want access to drugs. Forty-nine percent of students who drink every day said they would like to have drugs available in social situations around campus.

Goose dismantling

Workers begin the process of sectioning the historic HK-1 Hughes Flying Boat, built by the late Howard Hughes, Monday in Long Beach, Calif. The Flying Boat, known as The Spruce Goose, will be cut up into 38 separate elements for transportation by land and sea to its new home at the Evergreen AirVenture Museum in McMinnville, Ore.

Nevada fire marshal joins probe into blaze

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Deputies from the state fire marshal's office are in Pahump, Nev., to assist in the investigation of a $1.8 million blaze at a pep pill manufacturing plant.

"We have no indication that the blaze was suspicious," state Fire Marshal Ray Blehm said Monday. "It would be premature to speculate at this point."

Blehm said two deputies were on the scene Monday morning and a third was en route to the Nye County community 65 miles west of Las Vegas.

Blehm said local fire officials had requested the assistance of state investigators in probing Friday night's blaze.

"We have jurisdiction in the 14 rural counties," Blehm said of his office's role in the investigation. "We're the ones with the expertise to go into the rural areas if they need help. We're routinely called by rural fire departments."

The fire marshal declined to speculate when his office might determine the cause of the blaze.

"It was an awfully big building, and there's lots of rubble to go through," he said.

Deputy Fire Marshal Martin Lucas said Sunday that authorities were searching for a point of origin. He said they were not ruling out arson, but had no reason to believe that was the cause.

Lucas said he expects representatives from the state fire marshal's office to spend two more days examining the scene. They were to begin taking witness statements Monday.

The fire broke out about 10 p.m. Friday at the 7-year-old complex, a subsidiary of International Nutrition of Las Vegas.

The Pahump factory manufactures herbal energy, a stimulant made from rare Chinese herbs and sold in convenience stores.

Joe Nebe, a public health rating and survey officer for the state health division, said state officials took the company to task at one point for using "misleading" labels, which were promptly changed by its parent company.

International Nutrition, which was founded by G.S. Oden, began producing herbal energy in 1982. It has been neither tested nor approved by the FDA, and it is licensed by the state as a food manufacturer and inspected at least once a year.

Union official calls for campaign against hotel as strike continues

LAS VEGAS (AP) — A national union executive used the first anniversary of a bitter strike at the Frontier Hotel to announce a nationwide campaign by organized labor against the Strip resort.

"We've taken on this dispute and will make it a major national priority, similar to what we did with Eastern Airlines and others," Jim Baker, executive assistant to AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland, said Monday.

Monday marked the first anniversary of the strike by five unions against the Frontier, one of a handful of hotels that have not signed new labor contracts since the expiration of the previous contract in 1989.

"Our goal is to reach union members and their families, telling them that they should not use the Frontier Hotel," Baker said. "There are some 14 million members in unions affiliated with the AFL-CIO. We expect most of the unions to cooperate with our campaign."

Baker said unions across the country would be asked to participate in a Dec. 5 demonstration at the Frontier that has been dubbed Desert Solidarity Day.

"That's the day we intend to draw our line in the sand, locally and nationally," Baker said.

The striking unions have held several major demonstrations at the Frontier, the latest on Labor Day when 179 people were arrested on charges of unlawful assembly and obstruction of a roadway. The protesters blocked the three south-bound lanes of the busy Strip for two hours in a peaceful demonstration.

Frontier General Manager Tom Elardi called the Labor Day demonstration a "circus" and accused the five unions of failing to compromise on a settlement. He has called on the unions to turn over details of their health and welfare plan, but union officials say the plan is proprietary and can't be released.

Elardi did not immediately return a phone call Monday regarding the December demonstration or the latest union action.

Five unions walked out on strike against the Strip resort Sept. 21, 1991, with wages and health and welfare benefits the major issues.

Since then, pickets have continued to parade in front of the resort, negotiations have been few, and business and political leaders have failed in efforts to get the two sides to reach a settlement.

Gov. Bob Miller has tried to get the two sides to work out a settlement, siding with business leaders, who say the strike is harmful to the city's lifeblood tourism economy.

Actress stresses family communication

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Mariette Hartley says she overcame the influence of her "crazy family" by talking it out after years of silence and learned in the process that good communication is the foundation for a good family life.

The actress, speaking at the Fifth Annual Governor's Conference on Families this past weekend, said talking was her way of breaking her family's destructive cycle.

"I was raised to keep it all inside.

When I was 26 years old, I didn't know what the word anger meant," she said. "My biggest defense was my silence. But I almost died with the secret."

Now, she said, "I'm so out of the closet, they never should have taught me to speak."

Hartley joined her parents in alcoholism when she was 14 years old. Her father committed suicide in 1963, and her mother attempted several times afterward.

"My family wasn't dysfunctional; they were crazy," she said.

Hartley said parents and children in dysfunctional families must not be afraid to seek professional counseling.

"When you're raised in a society that says these things are bad, it's very difficult to get help. But we all need guides. We all need teachers," she said.

Accident kills man

BLUFF, Utah (AP) — A New Mexico man died after being struck by a truck in a "mud-bog" competition at the Utah Navajo Fair.

Thomas H. Mobley, 54, of Taos, was a timekeeper for the competition Saturday. He was struck by a truck that went out of control while racing around the quagmire, said San Juan County Sheriff's Lt. Rudy Cook.

Mobley died of massive chest injuries en route to a hospital.

Q. Why are people in high society called "bluebirds"?

A. What high society? Never mind. Blue veils were more apparent under the pale skin of early aristocrats than under the tanned skin of laboring folk. Bluebirds became another term for the leisure class, who didn't much like suits men.

They didn't eat woodpeckers, not in ancient Rome. That was a sin there and then.

Briefly

U of I fall enrollment rises 4%

MOSCOW - Fall enrollment at the University of Idaho is up 4.63 percent to a record 11,448, school officials said Monday.

Tenth-day class reports prepared for the state Board of Education listed on-campus enrollment at 9,804, up from last year's 9,492.

The university also said minority student enrollment was up 12.58 percent, the second straight year of double-digit increases. Idaho also had 1,324 new freshmen direct from high school, with an average grade point average of 3.24 based on a 4.0 scale.

Taxes inspire 2 bills from Democrats

COEUR D'ALENE - The public furor over higher taxes has prompted two bills from Democratic legislators in Coeur d'Alene.

Rep. Mary Vandenberg and Sen. Mary Lou Reed have drafted separate measures.

His would freeze the market value used for property tax assessments on the homes of senior citizens who have turned 65. The legislation would take effect Jan. 1, 1994.

Meanwhile, Reed has proposed limiting further increases in the assessed valuation on full-time residential property.

The bill also drafts a measure to limit the value of homes at the 1992 assessment level, deferring a tax increase until the home is sold or substantial new construction is undertaken.

N. Idaho road named 'deadliest mile'

CLARK FORK - A stretch of Idaho Highway 200 in northern Idaho has been dubbed the "deadliest mile," because six people have been killed in three accidents as their vehicles went off the narrow, winding highway into the Clark Fork River.

Help is on the way. This past Friday, the Idaho Transportation Board added a $3.4 million improvement project to the highway agency's five-year plan.

A project tentatively scheduled to start in 1997 will include reconstruction of a five-mile section ending at the Montana state line - including the "deadliest mile."

Foes reject hydro developers' offer

BOISE - Two groups who have been battling to stop a hydroelectric project on western Idaho's Payette River have rejected a settlement offer from the developers.

Friends of the Payette and Idaho Rivers United said Horseshoe Bend Hydroelectric Co. offered to put up $50,000 to fund a nonprofit foundation to protect and preserve Idaho's rivers. The groups said the offer included $15,000 annual funding. The foundation would be managed by a five-person board, three appointed by the conservationists and two by the developers.

"The steering committee unanimously rejected the offer. The Payette River is not for sale. We still want a full environmental review of this project," said Joan Cochran, representative of Friends of the Payette.

Tabloid to replace U of I magazine

MOSCOW - The University of Idaho alumni magazine will be replaced with a tabloid-style publication, although school officials still call it a magazine.

Terry Maurer and Kathy Barnard of the UI communications office, described their new publication Friday for the university's Alumni Association Board of Directors. The first issue of "The University of Idaho Magazine" is due out in October.

Several alumni board members said they look forward to seeing the tabloid, which Barnard described as "smorgasbord" of news and feature articles.

"The tabloid will contain an expanded version of the magazine's 'Class Notes,' concise news stories, letters to the editor, and longer feature stories. UI officials and publishing professionals helped design the publication, Maurer said.

Reapportionment suit unites Hispanics

IDAHO FALLS - Hispanic leaders say a lawsuit challenging the Idaho Legislature's reapportionment plan has done a lot for the state's largest and fastest-growing minority.

"We've realized the success of bringing people together and will be able to assist Hispanics in addressing other issues in the future," Ernesto Sanchez, board of directors president for the Idaho Hispanic Caucus, said.

The lawsuit before U.S. District Judge Harold Ryan is the first time Idaho's Hispanics have taken a stand against what many see as political bias, Sanchez said.

"It already has made some Idaho politicians sit up and take notice of Hispanics and their growing political power, said Rudy Pena, an Hispanic Caucus member and chairman of the Idaho Commission on Hispanic Affairs.

Faulty exhaust to blame for 2 deaths

COEUR D'ALENE - A teenager thought his mother and her boyfriend were sleeping off a drinking binge when he turned off the ignition of their car and went shopping.

Hours later, the couple was found dead in the vehicle from apparent carbon monoxide poisoning.

Jim Erwin, 19, said he didn't look at the faces of his mother and her boyfriend Saturday morning when he opened the car door and shut off the ignition.

"I figured they were drunk and were sleeping it off," Erwin said Sunday.

Police said they believe the two - Jeanne Zucally, 42, and Steve Cloutier, believed to be in his 40s - died from accidental carbon monoxide poisoning from a faulty exhaust system. Foul play was not suspected.

Weiser event benefits victims of rare disease

WEISER (AP) - The people Jason Daniel loved most in his brief life were married Sunday under a bright blue sky Sunday in Weiser's Memorial Park.

Jason died July 16 at age 17 from progeria, a rare aging disorder that affects only 13 children in the world. His last wish was to have his mother, Cathy, and one of his best friends, Tony DeMaria, be married.

The couple on Sunday vowed to dedicate their lives helping children who suffered from disabilities. Talk show host Geraldo Rivera - who befriended Jason after he appeared on his show - served as best man and his executive producer Dan Weaver gave the bride away.

"Just having little April here is like having a piece of Jason here," she said April Frankland, 12, of Chico, Calif., also suffers from progeria and served as Cathy's flower girl.

The ceremony, which drew 1,000 spectators, followed by live music featuring country singer Ricky Skaggs, was a kickoff to raise start-up money for a progeria foundation to help other progeria children. More than 3,000 tickets had been sold to Skaggs' performance by mid afternoon Sunday.

Rivera said Jason was "probably the most memorable guest I've had in the history of the show. He moved me in an extraordinary way."

April told the crowd she hoped they understood Jason's desire to educate people about progeria.

"We're kind of like other people, we just look different," she said. "Some of us have special needs and need help."

Residents revive northwest Boise group

BOISE (AP) - The Northwest Boise Neighborhood Association is back after it died out during the mid 1980s.

This summer, the association was revived to fight a 128-lot development that members said would put too many people on not enough land, crowd the streets and lower housing values.

That battle won, the group plans to stay together and affect future growth in the area.

The members generally live between Gary Lane on the east, Dunham Lane on the west, Hill Road on the north and State Street on the south. Brad Hall, the association's president, said.

Interest rates now under attack

Leaders want U.S. to raise interest rates, Germany to lower them

WASHINGTON (AP) — World financial leaders Monday pressed the United States to raise its interest rates to help quell turbulence on currency markets rocked by a week of uncertainty over European unity.

Leaders gathering for the annual meeting of the 170-nation International Monetary Fund and World Bank were breathing easier after the French narrowly approved a European unity treaty Sunday. And currency markets were calm today in Europe in Asia.

However, the IMF's policy-making Interim Committee said more was needed to bring long-term stability. In a communiqué, it said "key countries need to cooperate closely in ... facilitating a narrowing of interest-rate differentials."

The United States and Great Britain have been pressing Germany to cut its interest rates, but Spanish economics minister Carlos Solchaga, the chairman of the Interim Committee, said U.S. rates should rise, too.

"What is clear ... is part of the problem ... comes from the fact that interest rates in Germany are too high and interest rates in the United States are too low," said Solchaga, whose own currency was battered during last week's market crisis. "I hope and think ... that in the future this interest rate differential will be reduced."

The U.S. Federal Reserve has been cutting rates for three years in an effort to foster a sustained recovery from the recession. But the U.S. economy remains nearly stagnant and Bush administration officials, seeking to bolster the president's reelection chances, have continued to press the central bank to consider further rate cuts.

Many private analysts anticipate another interest rate reduction as soon as early October, particularly if the U.S. unemployment rate takes a turn for the worse. Michel Camdessus, managing director of the IMF, said it was up to the Federal Reserve to determine when the U.S. economy was strong enough to raise rates, but said it should then quickly do so.

"We would recommend the Federal Reserve be prompt to accompany the recovery with moderate and corrective increases of interest rates as soon as recovery gains momentum," he said. The treaty approved by the French on Sunday is designed to unite the 12-nation European Community in economic, foreign and defense policies and a single currency by 1999.

Regulation of airlines could return

Knights-Ridder News Service

WASHINGTON — If advocates of airline re-regulation are looking for a window of opportunity, Nov. 3 — Election Day — may be the day. By the end of the evening, a new man may be getting ready to occupy the White House and new faces, perhaps hundreds of them, may fill both legislative chambers.

look at what can be done to make the industry more competitive, short of re-regulation."

Stephen A. Alterman, executive vice president of the Air Freight Association, said the industry will face re-regulatory pressures the likes of which it hasn't seen since deregulation took effect in 1978. "A lot of issues are very contentious, and it's a scary thought to consider a new Congress might deal with deregulation," he said.

'I can see a change in the status quo because the status quo is unacceptable.'

'Undoubtedly, a lot of Clinton supporters would favor re-regulation.'

— L. John Eichner, aviation consultant line industry was burning in the infirm of $6 billion in losses over the last two years, waxes philosophical over what impact the changes in Congress will have on aviation laws.

"It's fair to say that any time you have some change in personnel that they bring some different approaches and attitudes," said Arthur J. Rothkopf, deputy transportation secretary.

Rothkopf said President Bush will veto any re-regulation bill and also took a swipe at the Democratic-controlled Congress for attempting to inject regulation in areas where it wasn't needed.

"You might have had significant re-regulation if it weren't for this administration," he said.

Some of the 20 members of the Senate Commerce Committee, which handles aviation matters, are up for re-election. Of those, Sen. Robert J. Kasen, R-Wis., locked in a tough battle with Democratic challenger Russ Feingold, is the only one in serious jeopardy of losing his seat, according to a Senate staffer.

Sen. Albert Gore, D-Tenn., Gov. Bill Clinton's vice presidential running mate, also would leave the committee if the Democrats win the White House. Clinton's staffer said he sees little change in the committee's pro-deregulation posture.

change much over there," he said. The outlook is murkier in the House, where the two top members of the Public Works and Transportation Committee, Rep. Robert Roe D-N.J., the committee chairman, and Rep. John Paul Hammerschmidt, R-Ark., the ranking minority member, are retiring. The committee regulates aviation on the House side.

Some congressional watchers are charting the status of Rep. James L. Oberstar, D-Minn., chairman of the House aviation subcommittee, to get a read on policy matters. Washington sources said Oberstar has grown increasingly disenchanted with deregulation and may push for a more active role in the industry's affairs.

Spokane-area truckers approve 3-year contract

SPOKANE (AP) — Drivers who truck groceries from warehouses to stores voted to approve a three-year contract with grocery wholesalers, averting a strike after marathon talks. Members of Teamsters Local 690 voted 130-44 Sunday to ratify the agreement, which boosts hourly wages by $1.40 an hour over three years, said Bob Ross, the local's secretary-treasurer.

The vote averted a strike by more than 200 truck drivers and several hundred union warehouse workers who would have joined them, Ross said. The agreement covers Allied Employers Inc., representing Safeway Inc., URM Stores Inc., and SuperValu. Al Baird, an Allied negotiator, said the three companies were resisting major wage increases in order to remain competitive with the Albertson's grocery chain.

Interest rates on Treasury bills rise to highest level in 2 weeks

WASHINGTON (AP) — Interest rates on short-term Treasury securities rose in Monday's auction to the highest level in two weeks. The Treasury Department sold $10.3 billion in three-month bills at an average discount rate of 2.91 percent, up from 2.89 percent last week. Another $10.3 billion was sold in six-month bills at an average discount rate of 2.93 percent, up from 2.90 percent last week.

The three-month bill rate was the highest since they also sold for 2.91 percent on Sept. 8. The six-month bill rate was the highest since they averaged 2.95 percent, also on Sept. 8. The new discount rates understate the actual return to investors — 2.97 percent for three-month bills with a $10,000 bill selling for $9,926.40, and 3.01 percent for a six-month bill selling for $9,851.90.

Echoes of Baby Boom may help economy

NEW YORK — Yes, help is on the way for the economy, but it will have little to do with politics, elections and government programs, and a lot to do with people. It also will come too late — it might not even be felt until late next year — to help incumbent office holders seeking reelection. Economists and politicians can do little if anything to speed it up. "It's the continuing echo of the Baby Boom.

John Cumtiff Business

The prospect offers pleasant relief from the relentlessly dismal economic reports and forecasts that have marked the past few years, and presents a heartening contrast to vague political promises and programs. Richard Hokenson, an economist at Dunlap, Klein & Jenrette, the securities firm, asked himself what is there anything that will ever produce a sustained rebound in the U.S. economy? "Yes," he says, "a definitive YES. Studying the demographics, he concludes that the force that will redirect the economy is an increase in the number of Americans turning 25 years old.

— but whatever support exists is a mere cushion rather than stimulus. The good news, he says, begins late next year and reaches its zenith early in 1996. According to Hokenson, "In all likelihood, these years will be the best for consumption and housing in the 1990s."

Abetting the demographics, he believes, will be a pronounced decline in the rate of inflation by midyear 1993 and a consequent rise in real wages that would "imply a fairly robust recovery from the current economic doldrums." What happens in the post-1996 years? "They will again be difficult for consumption and housing as the number of 25-year-olds resumes its decline." But first things first. Come the recovery, the welcome — some might say blessed — event. May it be robust. John Cumtiff is business analyst for The Associated Press
