Snafu pulls liquor sales off ballot

By Phil Sahm
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — County residents will not vote on Sunday liquor sales in the November general election.
A proposal to let licensed bars sell liquor on Sundays accidentally was left off the ballot, county officials said Monday.
The Twin Falls County commissioners learned of the foul-up late last week when they received the printed sample ballots for the general election.

When Commissioner Jim Fraley looked at the sample ballot he saw that the Sunday liquor sales issue was missing.
"I said 'Oops,'" Fraley said on Monday. "The man who led the move to get the issue on the ballot, Mike Brock, was mystified Monday to learn that the issue would not be voted on.
"I feel betrayed. ... They had given me their word that they'd get it on the ballot," Brock said.
A "lack of communication" between the commissioners and county prosecutor's office left the initiative in limbo, Fraley said.

The commissioners had wanted the prosecutor's office to check the law on how the issue could be put on the ballot, he said. Somewhere along the line, the issue was dropped and never got to county Clerk Bob Fort to go on the ballot.
"It was unintentional on everyone's part," Fraley said.
Commissioner Marvin Hempleman said he doubted the issue can go on the ballot now.

"There's no way to fix it now because they've already started with the election," he said.
Absentee voters already have sent in their ballots, so it might not be legal to draw up a separate ballot for voters to check off in November.
"A dropping of the ball is all there is to it," Hempleman said.
Brock, manager of the Sandpiper restaurant in Twin Falls, asked the commissioners in early June to consider

Haitian repatriation, religious issues will receive Supreme Court attention

Knight-Ridder News Service

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court, launching its new term Monday, ventured anew into the sensitive religious issues that dramatically split the justices last June.
In addition, the court agreed to settle the conflict over the Bush administration's Haitian repatriation policy and voted to consider a police search issue of importance in the war on drugs.
The court selected 21 cases for review from among 1,400 petitions accumulated over the summer. Among those accepted were a pair of cases involving the delicate relations between government and religion in education.
One tests the validity of bans on religious activities in the growing numbers of public school buildings being used as after-school community centers.

Lamb's Chapel, an Evangelical Christian Church in Suffolk County, N.Y., is challenging the refusal of the Center for Moriches Union-Free School District to allow the church to show religious films in local schools.
A federal appeals court in New York distinguished the case from recent Supreme Court rulings that granted equal access to public school facilities for students seeking to conduct after-school religious meetings.
The Lamb's Chapel case involves "outside organizations seeking access where access has been limited and all religious use has been barred by policy and practice," the appeals court said.

The second religion case accepted by the Supreme Court asks whether public school districts must pay for sign-language interpreters for deaf students who choose to attend a Catholic school.
The Tucson, Ariz., district involved in the case said it would pay for interpreters in public and non-sectarian private schools, but not in religious schools.
A federal appeals court acknowledged that the school district's refusal to help the student, James Zobrest, now 19, impair his First Amendment right to practice his religion freely.
But that right is outweighed by the district's "compelling interest" in ensuring

Heyburn toddler dies in house fire

By James Prichard
Mini-Cassia News Service

HEYBURN — A fire at a 16th Street residence early Sunday claimed the life of a 2-year-old girl and sent her 3-year-old brother to the hospital.
Britaney Green died at 12:45 a.m. Monday at the University of Utah Burn Center in Salt Lake City, according to a hospital spokeswoman. The cause of death was listed as smoke and heat inhalation.
According to Don Bailey, a Pocatello-based deputy state fire marshal, the Heyburn Fire Department was called at 2:08 a.m. Sunday to the home of James and Robin Green, 2060 16th St., on the report of a residential fire.

Bailey said a dust-filled baseboard heater in the children's bedroom apparently came in contact with some bed clothing, igniting a fire that smoldered for some time before erupting into flames.
The parents were able to escape the smoky fire and notify firefighters, but could not reach their children, Bailey said.
Doug Brown, a Heyburn firefighter, pulled 3-year-old Destree Green from the home, the fire marshal said.

Rupert Police Chief Paul Fries said two of his off-duty officers who happened by the scene, Brent Wright and Spencer Uhl, went into the house along with Sgt. Marjorie J. Cassin County's sheriff's deputy, and pulled Britaney from the flames.
Britaney and Destree both were unconscious when they were brought outside. Bailey said, and emergency personnel worked to resuscitate both children.

Mom leaves baby at restaurant on way to party

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Finding a good babysitter can be difficult, but authorities are investigating a young Twin Falls woman who may have taken that search too lightly.
A Wendell woman told city police Friday night that if young Twin Falls mother abruptly left her baby at the Depot Grill restaurant to attend a party.
Fonda Tappan, 23, said she stepped into the restaurant foyer to use the cigarette vending machine when, despite her protests, she found herself taking care of a 2-month-old girl without even knowing the mother's name.

She called police, who turned the baby over to the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare. The department placed the child in foster care and she remained there Monday awaiting a child protection hearing scheduled for Tuesday afternoon.
Health and Welfare officials and police are investigating the case, Twin Falls police detective K.C. Dudley said Monday. No criminal charges have been filed.

The Health and Welfare official in charge of the case said Monday that he could not comment.
Police have identified the 19-year-old mother whom Tappan says approached her on the way out of the restaurant and asked if she would take care of the baby, according to report by Sgt. Steve Ryan.
The woman said she wanted to "go party" and asked for Tappan's name so she could call her the next morning, she told police.

Tappan agreed at first, but quickly changed her mind when she realized what was happening, Ryan said.
She told the mother that she lived in Wendell and did not want to take responsibility for the child, but the baby's mother left without leaving her name or a telephone number — just a baby carrier, he said.
In an interview from her home Monday, Tappan said she barely knew what was happening until the mother had walked out.

Congress regulates cable TV

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Congress overrode President Bush's veto Monday and enacted legislation designed to regulate the cable television industry and curb rising rates.
It was the first time the House and Senate had thwarted Bush's veto during his presidency.
The House voted 308-114; the Senate 74-26.
Both were comfortably over the necessary two-thirds majority.
Both of Idaho's Democratic congressmen, Richard Stallings and Larry LaRocco, voted to override the veto and enact the bill into law.
Bush had successfully vetoed 35 previous bills.
Clapping, cheers and hand-slapping erupted on the Democratic side of the House floor as the vote total neared the magic number of 289, assuring the veto would be overridden. Democrats began chanting, "Go, go, go," as the vote total crept toward 289.
The override came despite an intensive last-minute lobbying campaign by the White House eager to preserve Bush's perfect record and avoid a highly publicized defeat one month before the election.
Opponents of the bill blamed election-year politics for the override, but proponents said consumer anger over soaring rates led to wide bipartisan support for the measure in both chambers.
"This is not a partisan piece of legislation," said Rep. Edward Markey, D-Mass., co-author of the bill that reimposes government regulation on the cable TV industry. "It is an issue between the cable industry and the consumers of our country."

Republican Sen. John Danforth of Missouri, a coauthor of the bill, cautioned Democrats not to characterize the vote as a weakening of the president.
"I know a lot of weight has gone on the president's perfect record on vetoes," said Danforth. "A lot of presidents have had vetoes overridden, and they have been very strong presidents."
He pointed out that nine vetoes by President Reagan were overridden.
But earlier in the Senate, Republican leader Robert Dole said, "This is an attempt to embarrass the president 30 days before the election. That's what this is all about."
The Senate vote was seen as the crucial test of the president's veto strength on the issue.
White House press secretary Martin Fitzwater said earlier Bush was telephoning lawmakers and "we obviously hope we switched some." Bush had breakfast Sunday with eight senators he hoped to sway.
But the Senate vote was identical to its original roll call on the cable TV bill last month.
"This is a tremendous victory for consumers," said Gene Kimmelman of the Consumer Federation of America which supported the bill. "This shows that the Congress has ... chosen to stand by consumers to protect them from the excesses of cable monopolies."

Weather summary

The National Weather Service says a westerly flow of cool North Pacific air will keep temperatures a few degrees below normal through today over Idaho.

Moisture left over from this past weekend's weather system contributed to areas of valley fog and low clouds Monday. Another minor disturbance coming in from the coast will maintain the clouds, along with a slight chance of mountain showers.

Overnight temperatures stayed above freezing in most valleys around the state Monday, with lows in the mid-30s to mid-40s although readings dipped into the 20s in the southeast and the central mountains.

Visibility was near zero Monday because of fog in the Pocatello area and in northern Idaho, as well as along the Salmon River.

Precipitation was light, with only a couple hundredths of an inch at Grangeville, Malad, Mullan and Pocatello. However, during the weekend, heavier rains fell on the central mountains and at spotty locations in southeast Idaho with totals around an inch.

At midday, the sky was mostly clear over the northern half of the state and partly cloudy over the south, with a few patches of valley and low clouds.

The warmest temperature in the state Monday was 76 degrees at Hagerman. Dixie reported the coldest at 24 degrees.

Elsewhere in the nation Monday, the highest temperature was 101 degrees at Palm Springs, Calif. The lowest was 22 degrees at Houlton, Maine, and Truckee, Calif.

Winds kick up surf along Southeast's shores

The Associated Press

Stormy weather over the Southeast kicked up high surf Monday along the coast of the Carolinas, and cold air pushed into parts of the Northeast.

At midday, showers and thundershowers extended across the Carolinas and eastern Georgia, and were scattered over northwestern Florida.

Warnings of gale force wind were posted along the coasts of Maryland, Delaware, Virginia, and North Carolina.

By mid afternoon in North Carolina, 15-foot surf was reported at Duck Pier, with a 17-foot sea at Diamond Shoals, the National Weather Service said.

Elsewhere, showers and thundershowers were scattered over the middle of the Missouri Valley. Rainfall amounts reported during the six hours up to 2 p.m. were all less than one-half inch, the weather service said.

Warnings of freezing temperatures for this morning were posted over the upper Susquehanna Valley and northeast metropolitan sections of eastern Pennsylvania, with frost warnings over the remainder of eastern Pennsylvania. Frost warnings also were posted over southern New Jersey, except for the coast.

A few unseasonably cool temperatures were reported elsewhere Monday morning. Astoria, Ore., reported a record low of 34, and Orlando, Fla., cooled to a record 58. Melbourne, Fla., tied its record for the lowest of 62.

Monday's low temperature for the Denver 48 states was 22 at Houlton, Maine, and Truckee, Calif.

Polls show Clinton holds lead

NEW YORK (AP) — Polls released Monday showed Bill Clinton maintaining a strong lead with Ross Perot in single digits and President Bush losing the "bounce" he got after the Republican National Convention.

In a Harris Poll of 1,015 likely voters nationwide, 53 percent said they would vote for Clinton, 36 percent for Bush and 9 percent for Perot if the election were now. The ABC News-Washington Post poll had the candidates' percentages in the same order, 48-35-9, with the remainder uncommitted to any of the three.

Both polls were taken Friday through Sunday, after Perot re-entered the campaign. The margin of sampling error was plus or minus 3 percentage points for Harris, 4 points for the ABC-Post poll of 799 likely voters.

Perot's support was down from 19 percent in a Harris survey two weeks earlier. The poll indicated that further slippage of Perot's support could help Clinton, who was named by 56 percent of Perot backers as their second choice.

Overall, 31 percent of likely voters in the Harris Poll rated the job Bush is doing as excellent or pretty good, which is close to his July low point, after a rebound to 41 percent in August.

Clinton's lead over Bush has widened from eight points to 21 points in recent polls, but analysts say those ups and downs are insignificant as long as Bush's percentage remains mired in the mid-30s and Perot a distant third.

MEROM, Ind. (AP) — An explosion touched off a fire in part of a power plant Monday, leaving three people missing and 32 injured, authorities said.

A crane and helicopter were used to rescue several workers from the burning building.

None of the 32 injured people were seriously hurt, authorities said.

The fire erupted in late morning at the Merom Generating Station about 75 miles north of Evansville.

"I called at her, and I was going to go after her, but she just left with a bunch of kids," said Tappan, who has two children of her own.

Tappan and a friend found the baby's diaper bag outside near a coin-operated telephone.

"I had everything she needed in the bag — including food, clothes and a diaper," Tappan said.

A young boy came back in the restaurant and got Tappan's name and phone number. "On Saturday morning, the mother called, but Tappan was outside and only got an answering machine message."

By the time she called the Twin Falls police department, the mother was already there, speaking with Health and Welfare workers.

"The baby appeared small for her age, but was generally healthy, he said."

"That's the first time I've ever been to that restaurant," Tappan said. "I'm not over going back."

The children and their parents all were taken to Cassia Memorial Hospital. James and Robin were treated and released, while Destree was admitted in stable condition.

The University of Utah's AirMed medical helicopter flew Britney from Burley to Salt Lake City, where she died of injuries she sustained in the fire.

The blaze was contained in the children's bedroom, although smoke and heat caused heavy damage throughout the rest of the home, Bailey said. He could not provide a damage estimate on the structure or its contents.

JFK pathologist backs lone gunman theory

CHICAGO (AP) — A pathologist who participated in the autopsy on John F. Kennedy says he agrees with two others who recently said the president was killed by two bullets fired from behind.

"We got it right in 1963 and it still stands in 1992," said Dr. Pierre Finck, then an army lieutenant colonel and the only trained forensic pathologist at Kennedy's autopsy. Forensic doctors specialize in applying medical knowledge to legal matters; Finck is an expert in gunshot wounds.

"There were two bullets striking from behind, and there is no evidence for any wounds from the front," Finck said in comments published in the Oct. 7 issue of The Journal of the American Medical Association.

Finck's account, submitted in written form to a JAMA reporter during an Aug. 19 interview in Switzerland, was consistent with testimony published by JAMA in May of the two other pathologists at the autopsy.

"These firsthand accounts of the autopsy and the scientific forensic evidence are indisputable," said Dr. George D. Lundberg, the journal's editor, in an accompanying article in this week's issue.

"Both bullets struck from behind. No other bullets struck the president," said the first "bullet" — Lundberg's note, adding that no conspiracy affected the autopsy, his findings or its report.

Dr. Cyril H. Wecht, who argues against the lone-gunman theory, accused Lundberg, a pathologist, of using his publication to protect the image of his fellow pathologists who conducted the Kennedy autopsy.

Wecht, who is a forensic pathologist, said Finck's new account is at odds with testimony he gave under oath in 1969 that he was instructed to skip certain autopsy procedures.

"The pathologists' explanation leaves unresolved many questions, including how account is at odds with testimony he gave under oath in 1969 that he was instructed to skip certain autopsy procedures."

Buchanan joins Gilbert campaign for Congress

BOISE (AP) — Conservative lightning rod Pat Buchanan traveled to southwestern Idaho on Monday to boost Republican challenger Richard Gilbert's 1st Congressional District campaign.

Gilbert said Buchanan truly represents the mainstream of Idaho voters, although her opponent Democratic Rep. Larry L. Hancock's campaign manager replied the unsuccessful presidential candidate is on the "extreme right fringe of her own party."

"I'm basically going around the country, finding areas where there are incumbent liberal Democrats who have solid conservative challengers where there's a real chance the conservative can win, and this is one of those races," Buchanan said.

He planned to attend a Nampa fund-raiser at $250 a head and then a Boise rally. Recognizing the tough time a challenger has against an incumbent, the Republican National Congressional Committee also has given her the maximum possible donation of $65,000 for campaign ads, Gilbert said.

A vocal critic of President Bush who ran in the primary race, Buchanan said he now speaks for the Bush-Quayle ticket in his travels.

"The election of Bill Clinton and Al Gore ... would do irreversible damage to my country and to the causes that I believe in," he said, adding that he was able to convince the Bush camp to accept some of his ideas at the Republican convention in New York.

"I think the platform is Buchanan-Bush," he said. "I think we accomplished something down there."

"Ross Perot shuffles the deck," he added. "He brings into the race a second candidate that favors higher taxes."

Sunday liquor sales.

The commissioners could have voted outright to let bars sell liquor on Sunday. Instead, they told Brock that if he got every bar-owner in the county to sign a petition favoring Sunday-liquor sales the issue could go on the ballot.

But in reading Idaho law, Fort wasn't sure if the signatures of the bar owners would be enough to get the issue on the ballot. He asked the Idaho Association of Counties to research the matter.

The group's deputy director, Tony Poineill, said Monday that he is waiting to hear back from Idaho Attorney General Larry EchoHawk's office.

The question is whether the county commission needs a petition signed by a percentage of registered voters to put the issue on the ballot, Poineill said.

Sunday liquor sales have twice been voted down by county residents. But Brock said Monday that bar-owners were going to campaign to get the issue passed this time.

Fraley and Hempleman said they didn't think the issue would pass. Both men oppose Sunday liquor sales but said that had nothing to do with the issue getting dropped from the ballot.

If the issue cannot be put on the ballot, Brock said the commissioners should OK Sunday liquor sales anyway.

"I should not have been put to a vote in the first place. They need to understand more of the community and business needs rather than just their personal feelings," Brock said.

Court

that religion and government are kept apart, the appeals court said.

As expected, the Supreme Court voted to review the validity of the government's policy of repatriating Haitian "boat people" despite the risks of government repression in the homeland.

The case tests President Bush's "Kennebunkport order" of last May, which authorized the Coast Guard to intercept thousands of fleeing migrants on the high seas and return them to Haiti without screening their claims for asylum in the United States.

A divided federal appeals court in New York ruled that the policy violated U.S. immigration law. However, on Aug. 1, the Supreme Court allowed the administration to enforce its policy until the dispute over its legality is finally resolved.

The police search dispute arose in Minneapolis, where an officer passed a suspected drug dealer and took a small lump in the suspect's pocket. The officer concluded that the object was crack-cocaine.

But the Minnesota Supreme Court ruled 4-3 that a police officer may "conduct a carefully limited frisk for weapons" but may not use "the sense of touch" to probe for drugs or other evidence without a warrant.

Economy takes center stage among 3 candidates

WASHINGTON (AP) — The presidential race entered its final four weeks on Monday with three candidates — instead of two — leveling blame for the nation's weak economy, a fragility underscored by new turbulence in the stock market.

Democratic nominee Bill Clinton attributed the day's drop in the Dow Jones Industrial Average — over 100 points at one point — to "uncertainty over President Bush's economic program."

He urged markets to "calm down," boasting that "help is on the way."

The White House shrugged off the stock plunge, which by close of trading had been largely erased. "We're watching it. We don't think it calls for any action at this point," said presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater.

Bush campaigned in Delaware after asserting on a morning television interview show that Democrats in Congress had further endangered economic recovery by adding new taxes to a compromise tax bill.

Asked on ABC-TV's "Good Morning America" if he would veto the bill, Bush replied: "I'm not sure."

Ross Perot was acting as sounding like a major contender, six days before all three will meet in St. Louis for the first of three presidential debates.

The independent challenger, whose first national television ad, a 30-minute spot, will air on Tuesday night, insisted he wasn't running to be a spoiler in the presidential race.

"It was already spoiled," he said on NBC's "Today" show.

Lashing out at both Bush and Clinton, the Dallas executive accused the president of being out of touch and said Clinton's support for a free-trade agreement with Mexico showed the Arkansas governor doesn't understand business.

"We're taking the best part of our work tax base and putting it in jeopardy," Perot said of the trade pact, negotiated by the Bush administration and endorsed by Clinton with some reservations over the weekend.

With Perot trumpeting his austerity plan for balancing the budget and the stock market roiling, economic issues were clearly at the forefront of the political debate as the campaign entered its final month. "You can turn out the lights on trickle-down economics and open a new day for the United States of America," Clinton told a rally at Daytona Beach. He and running mate Al Gore were on a bus tour through Florida — a GOP bastion-turned-battleground state this year.

When the stock market nosedived 105 points before noon, Clinton said: "I think it's uncertainty over President Bush's economic program and the performance of America."

Stock prices later rebounded to regain most of the fall. But the decline, coming after a 54-point selloff on Friday, clearly focused new political attention on the weak U.S. economy.

While cautioning against overreacting "to one day's volatility," Clinton said the stock market's teetering "reflects the larger trends and long-term poor economic performance."

"One of the things that I would like to say to the markets is relax. Calm down. Help is on the way," Clinton asserted.

"Some analysts have suggested that uncertainty about a prospective Clinton presidency was contributing to some of the market's instability."

Said Clinton: "I think once the election is over, if we prevail, we can send a clear signal to those markets that we're going to move this country in the right direction. We're going to take the deficit down, take investment up and get economic growth going."

Bush, meanwhile, accused Democrats of loading up a catchall tax bill with new tax increase proposals.

The bill would expand tax-deductible Individual Retirement Accounts, offer incentives for job creation in blighted areas and tangle out tax breaks to targeted groups.

However, the tax breaks would be paid for with a modest minor tax increases that would bring in $27 billion over five years.

Bush, who has apologized for agreeing to a far larger tax increase in 1990, said on ABC that he liked some parts of the bill but "I'm going to have difficulty signing it because of the new taxes."

The president's comments a day earlier on CNN that "things have been tough, but they haven't been that tough" brought ridicule from Perot.

Perot said the comments showed Bush was out of touch. "God bless him. See, Marie Antoinette thought the people had cake. I guess that's about as succinct," he said.

Texas billionaire Ross Perot prepares for his appearance on the 'Today' show Monday.

Minority saves fetal research ban

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democrats who tried to lift the government's ban on paying for fetal tissue transplant research gave up in frustration Monday, complaining they'd been thwarted by a tiny minority using Senate rules.

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, was clearly incensed at the idea that a dozen of his colleagues could grind this bill to a halt.

"The American people won't understand it," Mitchell said as he announced that the bill was being dropped for the rest of this year. "It is a deplorable state," Mitchell said. "It is a terrible circumstance."

The Senate last week voted 85-12 to limit debate on whether to even take up the bill, but that just meant the senators could only talk about that for 30 hours they did. That lasted over the weekend.

Under Senate rules, the Democratic majority faced another vote to limit debate on the bill itself, followed by another 30 hours of discussion before a final vote.

The Democrats had the votes to pass the bill, but there was nothing they could do about the passage of time. The Congress is adjourning this week.

Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., floor manager of the bill, said its opponents "turned a deaf ear to the pleas" of the sick.

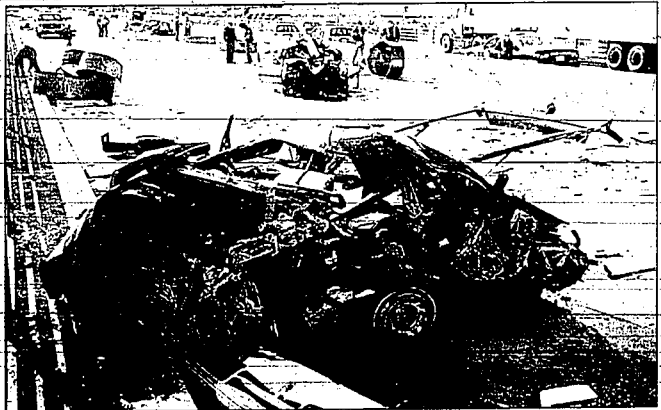

Use of transplanted human fetal tissue shows some promise in treatment of such diseases as Parkinson's disease, Alzheimer's disease, diabetes and spinal cord injuries.

This was the second attempt since last spring to get this issue through Congress. Mitchell said it would not be the last. Using his authority as majority leader, he said it will come back next year at the top of the Senate's agenda as bill No. 1.

President Bush vetoed the last try in June, and the House sustained his veto.

The administration has steadfastly opposed it because it would allow use of tissue from induced abortions in transplant research.

Bush did sign an executive order setting up a bank to collect and store fetal tissue from miscarriages and ectopic pregnancies.

Officials investigate wreckage along Interstate 190 in downtown Buffalo, N.Y., Monday after an 18-wheel rig lost its load of steel coils, each weighing 3 1/2 tons.

Heavy steel rolls crush commuters

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Sheet metal rolls each weighing 3 1/2 tons fell off a tractor-trailer truck Monday, crushing three cars and killing all four people inside.

The truck had been hauling two trailers loaded with steel rolls along southbound Interstate 190 during the morning rush hour.

As the driver changed lanes, the rear trailer overturned and hurtled five rolls over a short concrete barrier separating the lanes, said state police Lt. Jack Fay.

"Everything just came over the concrete wall," said Bill Deane, who was driving a few cars behind the crash. "I thought it was a tank."

The steel rolls, measuring about 2 feet wide and 4 feet in diameter, landed on three northbound cars and crushed them, killing four people in the cars, Fay said.

Another car hit the debris, and the driver sustained minor injuries. A fifth car on an entrance ramp was struck by debris, but the driver wasn't hurt.

"The stuff came flying over, and a couple of cars started on fire," said Daniel Lyons, who was two or three vehicles behind the crash. "All you could see was debris and smoke."

The victims — three women and a man — were apparently on their way to work, police said. They were not immediately identified.

The truck driver, Philip Morris, 34, was uninjured. No charges had been filed, Morris works for Ken Staub Trucking Inc. of Buffalo and had been hauling the steel used to make highway guardrails to Bladell, 10 miles away.

Investigators had not determined what caused the steel to fall off the truck. The trucker did not appear to have been speeding, Fay said.

Bush seen flip-flopping, Clinton waffling as they address the issues

By Jill Lawrence
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Bill Clinton never seems to force an option while George Bush stakes out unqualified stands that sometimes come back to haunt him — tendencies illustrated this week by jockeying over trade and taxes.

Clinton's hedged support of the Mexican trade treaty was a classic example of his style: weigh all factors, split the differences and satisfy everyone a little, no one completely. "You must look at the other side of the coin," he said of the treaty, a comment that typifies his approach to many issues.

Bush, meanwhile, faces a day of reckoning on what came perilously close to a renewed no-new-taxes pledge earlier this campaign season. Congress is about to send him a bill that contains many of the tax breaks he wants — but they're offset by increases in other taxes and fees.

"They pack it up with some of the good things the country needs, and then load in some things like higher taxes, and I'm going to have difficulty signing it before we go to war."

On Sunday, Clinton endorsed the Mexican trade treaty negotiated by Bush. But he also pledged to seek supplemental agreements to protect U.S. jobs and markets.

Clinton directly addresses the concerns of voters that he believe the treaty would be a disaster for them.

And while Clinton supports legal abortion, he also told Readers Digest this month that he doesn't oppose a 24-hour waiting period "as long as it is not an undue burden on low-income people who travel long distances in states where abortions are performed only in one or two places."

He supports laws that require young girls to notify their parents or a judge that they're having an abortion, and signed one in his state. And while he supported legal abortion, his national health-care reform plan, Arkansas has not paid for them during his tenure as governor.

Bush is often categorical, and it's not hard to find 180-degree turns in his career. The best known is the 1988 new-taxes pledge he broke two years later. Bush also embraced supply-side economics after earlier calling it "voodoo economics," and backed a constitutional amendment against abortion some years after saying he supported legal abortion.

Bush also became an avid supporter of federal aid to low-income parents who send their children to private schools, and reiterated that view Monday in the ABC interview. But it wasn't always thus.

Bush also had a change of heart — or at least of strategy — on Clinton and the draft. During the primaries, Bush said Clinton had been subjected to "quite unfair" attacks on his draft record and personal life. "I'd like to keep on the issues themselves," Bush told the Boston Globe.

"The sympathy didn't last. Bush has assailed Clinton's draft history and his handling of the issue in stump speeches for the last month.

Judge delays abortion counseling case ruling

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal judge said Monday he's postponing a decision on whether the Bush administration acted legally in barring federally funded family planning clinics from advising women about abortion.

U.S. District Judge Charles Richey said he would not rule in the case until a federal appeals court decides a similar case.

"In declining to act at this time, this court is not abdicating its judicial obligation, but merely abstaining temporarily," Richey wrote.

Richey last May ordered the government to halt enforcement of its rule, which tells family planning clinics receiving federal money that only doctors can advise women on the option of abortion. That order was overturned by the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

Richey ruled at the time that the government acted illegally in establishing the rule because it linked to follow procedures that would have allowed for public comment. The administration argued that the rule was not really a change in federal regulations but was guidance in how to apply regulations already on the books.

The Supreme Court has already said that this rule does not violate constitutional protection of free speech.

Machinists strike USAir; flights cut

IMPERIAL, Pa. (AP) — Ground crews for USAir, the nation's sixth-largest airline, walked off the job Monday in a dispute over job security, canceling flights for thousands of people.

Flight attendants voted to honor the picket lines, which sprouted at dawn at airports around the country, including USAir hubs in Charlotte, N.C., and Pittsburgh, where 28 strikers were arrested. Airline pilots said they would continue to work.

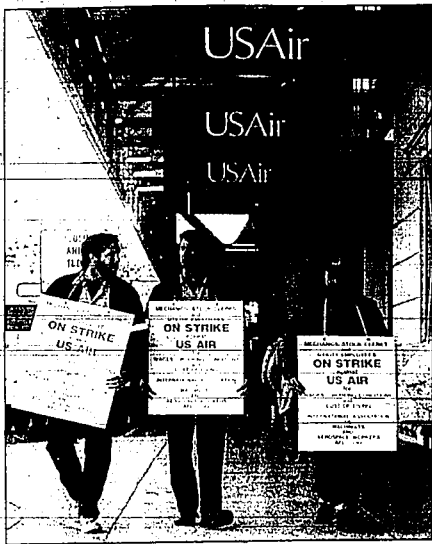

USAir said three-quarters of its 2,600 daily departures were canceled and other carriers were accepting stranded passengers. But some travelers forced to find other ways home didn't have much sympathy for the strikers.

"Look at that. Canceled, canceled, canceled. Even 15 minutes late," said Philadelphia-bound Sherry Parisi, who was stuck in Charlotte with her sister-in-law, Janice Graf. "I don't know how anybody could do this in this economy," said Mrs. Graf. "It takes a lot of nerve."

The striking union, the International Association of Machinists, represents about 8,300 employees, and many of them said the main issue was job security — not wages or benefits.

At the newly-opened Pittsburgh International Airport, 25 people were arrested Monday afternoon for trespassing, and three for allegedly carrying brass knuckles.

The Association of Flight Attendants, which represents 9,000 USAir employees, said the leaders of its USAir group had voted to honor the strike. But the USAir unit of the Air Line Pilots Association said its members would fly.

Striking USAir machinists, fearing loss of job security, walk the picket line at Washington's National Airport Monday.

USAir said its overseas flights — three departures daily to London, two to Frankfurt and one to Paris — were not affected, nor were the USAir Express and USAir Shuttle services. Northwest, Delta and Continental airlines said they will honor most USAir tickets. Continental, with major northeast hubs in Newark, N.J., and Cleveland, said its route structure will allow many USAir travelers to make their destinations with minimal disruption.

The toll-free number for USAir passenger inquiries is 1-800-428-4322.

At the Pittsburgh airport, passengers had more time than they expected to enjoy the mall-like atmosphere in the $800 million Midfield Terminal, which opened Thursday. The amenities range from fast-food restaurants and fern bars to upscale stores selling books, cosmetics, jewelry, sunglasses and gifts.

Sandy Martin had to wait four hours for a flight to Tampa, Fla., after her morning flight was canceled. She had breakfast at a restaurant and browsed in a Christmas gift shop. "It makes the layover a lot easier," she said.

Union and airline negotiators were unable to agree on a new contract after lengthy weekend talks that lasted into Monday morning. National Mediation Board spokesman Lew Townsend said no other talks were scheduled.

USAir is asking all employees for wage, benefit and work rule concessions, so it can cut costs by about $400 million this year. Elits agreed to salary concessions in June.

Chairman Seth E. Schofield accused the Machinists of being "unwilling and unable to make the same concessions and sacrifices as other USAir employee groups during this difficult economic period."

O'Conner stunt lights up switchboard

NEW YORK — The NBC switchboard was still getting calls Monday from people who couldn't believe their eyes when singer Sinead O'Connor tore up a picture of the pope on "Saturday Night Live." "There was an immediate viewer response that continued on Sunday and continues today," said NBC spokesman Curt Block. From the show's conclusion through Monday, the network received more than 900 calls from people who didn't like the show — and seven who did. "I was offended; the executive producer, Lorne Michaels, likewise was offended and surprised," said Block.

Spewing oil well, fire threatens birds

NEW-ORLEANS — Wildlife experts headed for the coast Monday with noise-making cannons to scare birds away from a 4-mile-long slick of oil spewing from a burning offshore well. Crews worked to contain the spill, drill a relief well to cut off the oil, and remove the damaged rig. Seven workers were injured early Monday when two crew boats collided. None of the injuries appeared to be serious, Coast Guard spokesman Dennis Schaefer said.

The well, which had been out of service for years, blew out Sept. 29 as workers were trying to return it to production, the Coast Guard said. After spewing oil for two days, it burst into flames Thursday while workers tried to cap it.

Appeals court keeps VMI all-male

RICHMOND, Va. — A federal appeals court Monday refused to strike down Virginia Military Institute's all-male-admissions policy but ordered the state to guarantee rights of women, perhaps by establishing a separate military program for them.

A three-judge panel of the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said the state military school's single-gender education "is justified by a legitimate and relevant institutional mission."

Bomber command launches massive raid

Knights-Ridder News Service

The VIII Bomber Command had been slowly building up its operational strength in England during September and on Oct. 9, 1942 launched over 100 heavy bombers on a single mission.

The target was the industrial area of the French city of Lille. Eighty-four B-17 "Flying Fortresses" from the 92nd, 97th, 301st and 306th Bomb Groups were joined by 24 B-24 "Liberators" from the 93rd Bomb Group.

This was the first mission for both the 93rd and 306th BGs. Seventy-two fighters from the 1st Fighter Group (P-38 "Lightnings") and 4th Fighter Group ("Spitfires") flew support. Seven more 92nd BG bombers flew a diversionary mission.

Though 108 bombers took off for Lille, only 79 actually made it to the target and dropped their bombs. A variety of problems — from malfunctions, faulty navigation and bad weather to the collision of two B-17s flying in tight formation prevented planes from carrying out their mission. "Neither of the colliding bombers went down or suffered casualties, but they had to return to base.

The daylight raid was intercepted by scores of German fighters. Four bombers were shot down — one from each group except the 97th. Forty-eight other bombers were damaged, two badly enough to be scrapped on their return. Ten crewmen were wounded, and 29 were listed as "missing" from the downed aircraft.

The B-24 of Lt. Joe Tate was one of those badly damaged. An FW-190 fighter hit the bomber with three 20mm cannon shells that exploded in the tail, bomb bay and under Tate's armored seat. Oxygen lines were cut to the nose and cockpit compartments. The crew resorted to bottled oxygen.

Another in a series

A fuel line was cut near the bomb bay. Aviation gas poured into the plane.

Ironically, Tate had named his plane "Ball of Fire." Tail-gunner Tech. Sgt. Aaron Moses found the leak and stopped it with his fingers — but at the cost of his hand being badly frozen and his eyes and face being sprayed with the caustic fuel. Tate, however, brought the bomber in for a successful emergency landing in England.

Lt. Donald Swenson's B-17F from the 301st BG didn't make it back across the Channel but ditched in it. All the men made it out of the plane before it sank, but could get only one life raft inflated. They were only about a mile off the coast of England.

However, the water was extremely cold, with 15- to 20-foot swells. Fortunately, an RAF air-sea rescue launch, alerted by radio, had seen the bomber go in and reached the crew in 15 minutes. One of those rescued was a member of the ground crew who had talked his way on board in order to see what combat was like.

Only one more raid of this size was sent up in October. On Oct. 21, the 92nd-97th-301st and 306th Bomb Groups sent 90 bombers armed with 2,000-pound bombs against the fortified U-boat pens at Loriet on the French coast.

However, bad weather prevented all but 15 B-17s of the 97th BG from bombing the target. The 97th lost three bombers that day with 30 men. Another six bombers were damaged with five crewmen wounded.

This was the 97th's last raid as part of the VIII BC. It was transferred to the 12th Air Force for operations in North Africa.

Relief planes mark Sarajevo's 6-month anniversary

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Five U.N. relief planes delivered emergency supplies to the Bosnian capital on Monday, exactly a half-year after the death of eight demonstrators from sniper fire brought civil war to Sarajevo's streets.

Troops loyal to Bosnia's Muslim-dominated government on Monday repelled an attack by Serbian military, tanks and mortars on Trg Pero Kosoric, a square in southern Sarajevo.

Electricity has been cut since last month to about 80 percent of the city that played host to the 1984 Winter Olympics, and U.N. peacekeepers hoping to restore power have been fired on by snipers. Water also is scarce.

Shelling also started fires at the New Town's city hall, a post office, at least five high-rise apartment buildings, an Orthodox church and the Dobrinja suburb near the airport.

Sarajevo's Holiday Inn, which houses many foreign journalists, was also hit. There was fire and extensive smoke, but no one was reported injured.

Bosnian government military sources said the simultaneous attacks on the southern and northwest suburbs likely signalled a new effort by Serb forces to divide the city of about a half-million mostly Muslim residents.

Two large plumes of smoke rose over Sarajevo as the fighting shattered a weekend of relative calm.

At the main hospital, Dr. Marko Vukovic said seven dead and 26 wounded had been brought in, including some from the city's old Turkish quarter.

The Bosnian Health Ministry said 23 people were killed and 128 wounded throughout Bosnia in a 24-hour period ending at 1 p.m., but the figure may not have included some of the most recent casualties in Sarajevo.

Six months ago, after fighting had claimed about 100 lives elsewhere in Bosnia, at least eight people were killed and 30 wounded when snipers fired on thousands of peace demonstrators in Sarajevo.

In Zagreb, Mike Aitchinson, air coordinator for the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees, said five planes arrived Monday in Bosnia's capital.

He said one U.S. plane had to return to Zagreb because of bad weather.

In Geneva, a U.N. health expert predicted that children will start dying of starvation within one month unless there is a huge increase in the amount of food sent to besieged Sarajevo.

Sir Donald Achevon said the residents of Sarajevo needed at least 2,400 tons of food daily. Only an average of about 40 tons a day reached the city over land during a monthlong suspension of an international airlift, which resumed Saturday.

The suspension was due to the downing of an Italian plane carrying relief supplies, killing four crew.

Also in Geneva, Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic threatened to pull out of peace talks on former Yugoslavia if a "no-fly" zone is imposed over Bosnian airspace, as President Bush has proposed.

"It's probably more than a threat," U.N. envoy Cyrus Vance told reporters. "However, I think that Mr. Karadzic should think very, very carefully before he goes forward."

For the first time, all sides in the Yugoslav conflict have committed themselves to a timetable for providing names of camps and detainees and working out arrangements for their release, said an official of the Swiss-run International Red Cross.

The agreement signed Friday in Geneva, came as a terror in Bosnia-Herzegovina mounted from "ethnic cleansing," or the purging of people of one ethnic group and replacement by another ethnic group so the fighting parties can lay claim to occupied territory.

At the United Nations, diplomats said the United States and European nations are pushing the Security Council to set up a war crimes commission Tuesday to lay the groundwork for punishing combatants who commit atrocities.

U.S., Russia sign joint space venture

MOSCOW (AP) — American and Russian officials signed a joint agreement Monday that will put cosmonauts on a U.S. space shuttle and an astronaut on the Mir space station in the next three years.

The United States and Soviet Union cooperated on the manned Apollo-Soyuz space flight in 1975, in which spacecraft from the two countries docked in orbit. But Russians and Americans have never flown as crew members aboard the other's spacecraft.

"Space offers inspiration, hope, opportunity and peace for the people of this world," said Daniel S. Goldin, the NASA administrator who signed the pact with his Russian counterpart, Yuri Koptev.

The deal calls for putting a Russian cosmonaut aboard a U.S. space shuttle in November 1993 and an American astronaut aboard the Mir space station for an estimated 90-day mission in 1995.

An American shuttle carrying U.S. astronauts and Russian cosmonauts would then dock with the Mir, depositing the Russians on the space station and retrieving the American and Russians from the Mir.

"Our nations are learning to work together and we're trying to disarm and rid ourselves of the weapons of war," Goldin said.

Goldin said NASA had not yet selected an astronaut for the Mir mission.

The Russians have chosen two veteran cosmonauts, Sergei Krikalev and Vladimir Titov, to train to fly aboard the U.S. shuttle, the ITAR-Tass news agency reported.

Krikalev, 34, already has flown in space with French and British cosmonauts aboard the Mir.

He recently spent 312 days in space from May 1991 to March, in part because his return was delayed by the collapse of the Soviet Union.

Before he could land, Russian officials had to negotiate an agreement with the former republic of Kazanstan, where the Soviet space flights begin and end.

Titov, 45, also has logged many months in space, including a 366-day mission aboard the Mir in 1987-88.

Georgian helicopter down

TBILISI, Georgia (AP) — A Georgian military helicopter was shot down Monday over the separatist region of Abkhazian, and Georgia immediately blamed Russia as the two nations traded increasingly hostile words.

Russia denied it was involved. It said the helicopter was hit by a ground-to-air missile fired by Abkhaz separatists who have been fighting Georgian government troops in the Black Sea coastal region for six weeks.

A member of Georgia's ruling State Council, meanwhile, gave Russian troops 10 days to leave the country, Russian forces have remained in Georgia because it was the Soviet military's headquarters in the Caucasus region.

The heightening tensions over the Abkhazian conflict have brought Georgia and Russia closer to open battle — potentially one of the most dangerous confrontations since the collapse of the Soviet Union.

"Somebody wants very much to see a war between Russia and Georgia. In essence, such a war is already under way," the State Council's press center quoted Georgian leader Eduard Shevardnadze as saying.

Nordic group meets to clear ski trails

The High Desert Nordic Association will have its first public get-together of the 1992-93 ski season Sunday. The event begins with trail clearing at 9 a.m. at the Magic Mountain Ski Lodge, followed by a bonfire and cookout at 6 p.m. in Twin Falls.

Mets buy ads to say sorry to fans for sour season

NEW YORK — The New York Mets figured after their second straight fifth-place finish and their first 90-loss season since 1982, they owed New York baseball fans an apology.

"On Monday, the team delivered it, using full-page advertisements in the New York Daily News, New York Post, The New York Times and New York Newsday to do it. 'Our season wasn't exactly one to remember,' the ad began. 'We were just as disappointed as we know you were. But what we won't soon forget is all of you who came to Shea, despite our many injuries, despite the economy, despite even the bad weather.'"

"They say when you're down and out, you find out who your true friends are. We were happy to discover we still had true friends by the millions. 'So thank you Mets Fans and thank you New York. Spring training is only four months away. We can hardly wait. 'Let's go Mets!'"

Officials from developmental league welcome opening day

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. — When the Southeastern League takes the field tonight against the Grand Canyon Raiders and the first ball is thrown out in the Arizona Fall League, few people will be happier than Mike Port.

"To go from an idea with not even a box of paper clips to its name to having a league with national recognition and players attracting the attention of the major league clubs ... is incredible," the president of the new circuit said.

The commissioner's office created the league as a U.S. alternative to the four Caribbean winter leagues. The idea came up three years ago, when several team executives were sitting by a swimming pool at Phoenix. Noticing the warmth of the November day, they decided south-central Arizona would be ideal for a developmental league.

On a cold night, you have to hit the ball 25 feet farther. So in other words, if the fence is 338 feet and you hit the ball 338 feet, you'll be 25 feet short.

Jury awards players $30 million in free agency case

The Associated Press
WASHINGTON — A federal court jury on Monday awarded 235 NFL players a total of $30 million in damages from the 28 teams for fixing wages of players.

The five-month, three-man jury agreed that the $1,000-a-week wage paid to members of six-man developmental squads during the 1989 season was less than they would have earned had they been free to negotiate their own contracts.

After less than a full day of deliberation, the jury awarded the players all of the $10 million in damages they claimed. Under antitrust laws, the awards were tripled.

In a separate ruling Monday, the National Labor Relations Board affirmed a March 1991 decision that the league broke federal labor law during the 1987 player strike and must pay $30 million to the 1,100 players who joined the walkout. NLRB administrative law judge Benjamin Schlesinger, in his 1991 decision, said the clubs owe the money because they shorted the players a week's salary after the strike ended.

Bucs, Braves open tonight

The Associated Press
ATLANTA — Barry Bonds has never been Mr. Postseason and the Pittsburgh Pirates are 0-for-October since 1990. The only question that the National League playoffs rematch that begins Tuesday seemingly is which Atlanta Braves pitcher will be this fall's Zero Hero.

Maybe not. Sure, the Braves — one run short of winning the World Series last year — will start John Smoltz, Steve Avery and Tom Glavine against Pittsburgh; what was slotted in for his last three home games of the '91 playoffs.

But, this year, the Pirates — not the Braves' Big 3 — enter the playoffs on a tear, winning 42 of their last 56. The Braves' young gun starters have won just three times among them in a month, the best-kept bulge — is questionable, with Algorando Pena out and Kent Mercker hurting. Mike Stanton is only healthy Braves' left-hander reliever to counter the Pirates' left-handed strength of Bonds and Andy Van Slyke.

Walker, Eagles down Cowboys

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Before Monday night's showdown, Herschel Walker miffily dodged inquiries about his desire for revenge against the Dallas Cowboys for trading him.

Then he went out and miffily deduced the Cowboys, scoring touchdowns on runs of 9 and 16 yards and rushing for 86 yards on 19 carries as he and the Philadelphia defense combined to beat Dallas 31-7 in a battle of the NFC's last two unbeaten.

The defense, led by linebackers Seth Joyner, Byron Evans and William Thomas, got four turnovers — three interceptions and a fumble recovery that led to three touchdowns and derailed the Cowboys again.

The Eagles broke away with three touchdowns in the final 20 minutes.

It was just another chapter in the saga of Dallas quarterback Troy Aikman against the Eagles, who now lead the NFC East at 4-0, while the Cowboys fell to 3-1.

Two plays later, John Booty picked off a pass over the middle, returned it to the 14 and set up a 2-yard bootleg for a TD by Randall Cunningham four plays later.

—The Cowboys tied it on a 7-yard pass from Aikman to Kelvin Martin and the Cowboys took a 10-7 lead on Roger Zuzek's 40-yard field goal with 1:34 left in the first quarter.

a couple of times. "We'll get them, we know their reputation and this and that," reliever Tom Lenke said. "This is my fourth time winning the division," he said. "I want to go to the next step."

Nof many of the Blue Jays have been beyond that first step: The catches of Toronto's hitters combined for 43 appearances in the playoffs, but have won only five pen-nants and three World Series. Morris was the MVP award last October — and Alfredo Griffin was on one. By comparison, Oakland's players have totaled 55 appearances in the playoffs and advanced 4.2 times. The result has been 10 World Series rings. "They have experience," Toronto's Dave Winfield said. "They've done these things before."

The A's, however, also have something to prove. They're still smarting from the period of 1988-90, when they won three AL pennants and believed they were the best team in baseball each time, but won just one World Series.

—The only time Oakland made it all the way was 1989, when Henderson tore up the playoffs and Dave Stewart and Mike Moore dominated the earthquake-torn World Series against San Francisco.

Annual falls run scheduled this Saturday

THE TIMES-NEWS

TWIN FALLS — The 13th annual Falls-to-Falls Run will be held Saturday.

The race, normally conducted in July, did not have an organization to administer it the past summer. Supporters of the race decided to hold one to be sure to keep the race alive.

Registration begins at 9:15 a.m. at Twin Falls. The 5.3-mile race runs from Twin Falls Dierkes Lake at Shoshone Falls and starts at 10 a.m.

The fee is $15 and includes a T-shirt and refreshments. Fruit will be available after the race provided by S & G Produce. The first men's and women's finishers receive $50 gift certificates from Donnelly Sports. Age group winners will be awarded medals.

Walkers are also welcome for the race.

Runners and walkers can pre-register at Donnelly Sports in Twin Falls or at the Jerome Recreation District.

For more information, contact Rick Haberman at 324-5934.

Young, old find success on the lanes

Bowling is truly a sport for all ages. Just ask octogenarians Stan Crom of Twin Falls and Gladys Shaw of Shoshone.

At a sprightly 87, Stan recently popped off games of 210 and 207 on routes to a 576 series. How does Stan stay so sharp? According to wife Kay, "He golfs all summer, then will play both sports in the fall as long as the weather permits."

Gladys, who bowls with a cane, recently rolled a 437 series, finishing with the No-Tap Tourney at the State Innbar.

Further advancing the theory that bowling is a sport for all ages, results are in on the Bowldrome's Junior No-Tap Tourney held last Saturday.

Bowling these games of 7 pin, no-top in the 8-and-under division, Brandon Perkins had a 743 series, highlighted by a 243 game. Second place in the division went to Pete McMullin with a 616 series.

In the 9-and-up division, no-top was played, Stephanie Kiesel, too-first with an 805-rolling-a-244 along the way. Naomi Sweetfield's 795 was good for second.

Stephanie's brother, Nathan, took top honors with a 437 series over division, where 9-pin, no-top was rolled. Nathan had games of 213 and 219 and an 811 series. Marc Bacon was second with a 679.

Stewart

in Wednesday's opening game.

"He has outstanding experience in that situation," La Russa said of the A's right-hander. "I think our team, including the other pitchers, believe Stewart's the guy who should be in Game 6."

The choice wasn't as automatic as in 1989 and 1990, years in which Stewart had 21 and 22 wins respectively.

This season, he wasn't the staff ace, going 12-10 with a 3.66 ERA. Mike Moore (17-12) and Ron Darby (15-10) had more victories.

Plus, Stewart has been bothered by elbow problems and spent 24 days on the disabled list in July.

He says his elbow is fine now. In his last start, he was 2-2 but had an ERA of 2.84.

"He's been getting healthier and more effective, and he's been more like himself as we go through the season," La Russa said.

Second Base

Atlanta: Maury Ayler, 26 RBIs. Hit just 227 with six homers and 26 RBIs, but patience showed with 50 walks, second-inning on the team. He slumped to 18 hits in 102 at-bats in scoring position, improved to 33R, going 40 for 145. # 'Flow of energy' dooms Schottenheimer team again

The Associated Press

With John Elway, you never know what will happen in the final quarter, particularly when he's playing against a team coached by Marty Schottenheimer.

Then again, you can figure Robert Massey, a cornerback, and Chris Chandler, a backup quarterback, leading the Phoenix Cardinals back from an 18-point fourth-quarter deficit against the Denver Bowl champion Washington Redskins?

Or Todd Scott, a strong safety, sparking Minnesota back from 20 points down and bringing Mike Ditka's wrath down on Jim Harbaugh, the quarterback who until Sunday had been one of his all-time favorites?

Elway's Oliver-burned badly in Buffalo two years ago, leading the Dolphins to a rout of the Bills — Keith Jackson's assistance notwithstanding.

Or New England, which totaled 13 points in its first three games, scoring 21 in the second half and still losing, 30-21, to the Jets. That left the Patriots as the league's only winless team — the Jets, Raiders, Cards and Chargers all having won for the first time Sunday.

But back to Elway. "I thought I had seen everything, but this beats them all," said Denver coach Dan Reeves after Elway pulled out a game in the final quarter for the 21st time. This time, the Broncos traded Kansas City, 15-6 with five minutes left and had gone without a touchdown for 12 straight quarters.

Not only did the two TD passes in the final two minutes give the Broncos (4-1) the advantage over the Chiefs (3-2) in the AFC West, it also marked Denver's eighth win in nine games against Schottenheimer and Kansas City in straight loss at Mile High Stadium. Schottenheimer now has been victimized six times by Elway comeback drives, the best-known in the AFC championship game in January 1987 when he was in Cleveland. Last week, he said he'd wait until the end of his career to top up the money Elway had cost him: This week, he was more into CoachSpeak. "There's a flow of energy," he said. "It changed when the Broncos got possession. Once they got into position, they capitalized."

NFL notebook

The Phoenix-Washington game was a bigger shocker, particularly with the Redskins in cruise control with a 24-6 fourth-quarter lead over the winless Cards. Mark Rypien took away from the boobirds in Washington and relaxed.

Next Monday night — Elway at Rypien in Washington (800).
ADD COMEBACKS, HOUSEHOLD NAMES (AND DITKA TRADES): Don't ask "WHY?"
He was chosen by the Vikings last year on the sixth round from Southwestern Louisiana, where he played with such household names as Willie Culppepper, Chris Gannon, Adam Johnson, Mark Hall and Louis Agee; the last of whom happened to be across the sidelines with the Bears on Sunday.

So Agee was watching in the first minute of the fourth quarter with the Bears holding a 20-0 lead when Ditka's favorite quarterback called an audible. Scott, who had been faking zone coverage, jumped into man-to-man on Neal Anderson, grabbed the ball and took it 35 yards for a TD.

That ignited a rally that brought the Vikings back to a 21-20 win and gave them control of the NFC Central at 4-1.

Ditka, who hates the Metrodomo anyway was immediately in Harbaugh's face. Later, he took from Harbaugh, the son of an assistant coach at Michigan, the right to call audibles and threatened to take his job.

Unlike Ditka, Scott isn't a household name yet, but he's on his way to becoming one — he had three interceptions against Cincinnati last week. And he also replaced a household name, Joey Browner, who was released in preseason.

DEBUTS Jackson caught just one more pass (four) than Oliver; the Dolphins' strong safety, in Miami's 37-10 shocker over the Bills he knocked Buffalo out of first place in the AFC East for the first time in 36 weeks. Actually, he probably should have had just three — with one less TD than Oliver. The 24-yard touchdown pass he caught appeared to be intended for Mark Clayton, who was about 10 yards further downfield.

But Jackson, wide open, pulled an Oliver and held it off.

As for Oliver, Buffalo is where he was pulled two years ago after giving up three TDs in a 44-34 playoff loss. So things even out on both sides of the line.

Quarterbacks side with Harbaugh

The Associated Press

The audible — football's version of "read my lips" — suffered a severe setback Sunday when Chicago Bears quarterback Jim Harbaugh talked his way into big trouble with coach Mike Ditka.

And the controversy confused three quarterbacks who spent more than 40 years calling plays, many of them audibles, in the NFL.

"If you see something you can attack, you want to do it," said Ken Anderson, who quarterbacked the Cincinnati Bengals for 16 seasons. "You don't want to waste a play when you read a defensive front and it's set to stop what you're calling."

All week long, football teams try to prepare for a host of certain contingencies. "Over and over," Anderson said, "you're told. If you see this, this is what you do. You can't anticipate everything. You have to have flexibility. It makes the offense more productive. It makes you run the right play for the right defense. You can't shake your quarterback."

Joe Theismann, who called plays in Washington for 12 seasons, agreed. "What Harbaugh did was a bad throw, not a bad decision," he said. "I heard him quoted as saying, 'I'm trying to throw it away.' Then it was a big mistake. He's got an entire stadium to throw it to. If you want to throw it away, throw it into next week."

The quick-out, Harbaugh's

Chicago coach Mike Ditka questions quarterback Jim Harbaugh's changing of the play Sunday.

downfall, was a favorite maneuver for Archie Manning, who played 13 years with New Orleans and Minnesota. "I always liked to take the quick out if they gave it to me," Manning said. "It's quick. It should be protected. But you have to ask if it's worth five to seven yards to take the chance of an interception. If the offensive coordinator said, 'If they give you the quick out, take it," Harbaugh tried to do exactly that when he thought he saw a hole in Minnesota's defense and changed a play at the line of scrimmage. It's something quarterbacks have been doing in the NFL since George Halas and his pals invented the league in a Hippoboblie showroom 72 years ago.

This time, however, it backfired. The quarterback's pass turned into an interception and a touchdown, sending Ditka into a dither. The bottom line, the coach said, was no more switching signals by the quarterback, no more smart stuff at the line of scrimmage. If the quarterback makes changes, Ditka said, then so will the coach — and they will be definite and they will be permanent.

Can a quarterback operate without the option to react to something he sees at the line of scrimmage? It's unlikely.

"With a young quarterback, a coach may want to control him," Anderson said. "Harbaugh's a veteran, though."

And what the veteran did was react to the Viking defense — bite the bait, according to safety Todd Scott, who was playing pass and picked off the pass for a 35-yard touchdown. Ditka then went nose with his quarterback on the sidelines. "I was surprised at Mike," Theismann said. "I don't think Harbaugh wants to take over play calling. If Mike says, 'No more audibles,' how does the offense get out of what is going to be a bad play?"

"Mike was obviously upset. Jim was just trying to be a quarterback. I don't think it will upset him. Everybody knows Mike's temperament and nature. I'd be grossly surprised if it was a case of him thinking he was more than the coach. No quarterback does. Unless you're John Elway. Then, maybe you're not."

With The Great One sidelined, all eyes turn to 'The Next One'

The Associated Press

With Wayne Gretzky's future on hold, the Eric Lindros Era begins in the NHL tonight.

The highly acclaimed youngster officially came into the league when the Philadelphia Flyers face the defending Stanley Cup champion Pittsburgh Penguins in one of seven opening night games.

"He is a star attraction," general manager Don Maloney of the New York Islanders said. "He may be the Gretzky of the '90s."

With The Great One out indefinitely with a bad back, Lindros may be the savior of a league hoping to make an impact in the United States. He is the most talked-about player to come into the NHL since Pittsburgh's Mario Lemieux in 1984.

The hype intensified with Lindros' excellent showing during the exhibition season when he led the Flyers with eight goals and a couple of knockouts.

Lindros

Now Lindros can be measured against Lemieux in their head-to-head battle at the Igloo in Pittsburgh. Along with the expected sellout, millions more hockey fans will be on television. The Flyers-Penguins game will be broadcast on ESPN as the league begins a five-year agreement with the national sports cable network.

In other opening night games, it will be Montreal at Hartford, Detroit at Winnipeg, Minnesota at St. Louis, Los Angeles at Calgary and Vancouver at Edmonton.

Lindros won't be the only center of attention at Pittsburgh. Lemieux signed a new contract Monday that made him the highest-paid player in the game. In addition, the Penguins will name a new coach Tuesday. They have been without one since Scotty Bowman was unable to come to terms on a new contract after leading the Penguins to the Stanley Cup championship last season.

Good as Lindros is, he is not expected to lead the Flyers to the Cup this season. They're a team in transition, unlike the Penguins who are seeking their third straight Cup. Lemieux, hockey's top player, is expected to lead the charge if his back holds up. He has missed 66 games in the past two seasons because of back problems.

The Penguins have plenty of talent otherwise, with a blend of veterans like Kevin Stevens, one of the best left wings in the NHL, and Jaromir Jagr, the sensation of last season's playoffs.

The Penguins will have played two games before the New York Rangers, last year's regular-season champions, swing into action. The Rangers, led by Mark Messier, play their opening game Friday at Washington.

The Penguins, Rangers and Capitals are expected to make strong impacts on the league this season. Their Patrick Division is regarded as the NHL's strongest.

Other teams that should be in the hunt for the Stanley Cup include the Detroit Red Wings, Chicago Blackhawks, Montreal Canadiens, Vancouver Canucks and Edmonton Oilers.

Player begins to see Manon Rheaume for what she is — a hockey goaltender

NEW YORK (AP) — When Manon Rheaume puts on all the equipment of a hockey goaltender, including one of the grotesque but effective modern face masks, it's difficult to tell whether she's a male or a female.

When she crouches in front of the cage, preparing to stop shots whizzing at her at more than 100 mph, opposing skaters don't stop to think about her gender. All they want to do is put the puck past her.

Manon Rheaume, female goaltender, has become one of the boys.

She has withstood the rigors of playing against the game's best in an NHL exhibition game and her curiosity factor is slowly diminishing. At the same time, she's finally being accepted for what she is — a goalie.

"They (other players) treat me with respect," the 20-year-old Rheaume said Monday at a press conference for the Women's Sports Foundation. She hasn't even played in a major league game, and yet there she was, joined by some of the world's greatest athletes, including a wealth of Olympic champions.

Manon Rheaume, goalie in the International Hockey League, says she doesn't have the experience yet for the NHL.

Shortly afterward, the Lightning sent her to the Atlanta Knights of the International Hockey League. Instead of being disappointed at the demotion, Rheaume considers the move beneficial. "Before trying out with the Lightning, I didn't expect to stay more than a week," she said. "I was there to get experience, and it was a great experience."

"This (going to Atlanta) was a good opportunity. I will be able to see my evolution after one or two months of practice. Now, I can practice every day. Before (in a Junior A league last season and on the 1992 world champion Canadian national women's team), I practiced only two times a week. This will help me get to the level of the other players."

"I don't have the experience yet."

Not at that level, not even after playing hockey for 15 years. She began skating at age 3 and playing at age 5, when her key ally, Pierre, needed a goalie for a pee wee tournament. She offered and he accepted, somewhat to the dismay of her mother, Nicole.

"She said, 'I have two boys playing hockey; why not play something else?'" Rheaume said. "Then she said, 'OK.'"

While growing up, Rheaume participated in other sports — baseball with the boys, softball with the girls and Alpine skiing — but always came back to hockey.

"My brothers (Martin, now 23, and Pascal, 19) played hockey and I was always with my brothers," she said. "I was always a goalie. They always practiced their share of me."

Pascal is still playing and is expected to sign shortly with the New Jersey Devils. If he makes it to the NHL, and she is promoted by the Lightning, it would make a rare combination — brother vs. sister in a team sport.

Manon says she'll be ready. "When we play sometimes, he wants to score and I want to stop him. I just don't play hockey. It's my passion. I love it."

Penguins reward Lemieux with $42 million at age 27

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Mario Lemieux became the highest paid player in hockey today, signing a seven-year contract with the Pittsburgh Penguins worth a reported $42 million.

Lemieux's 27th birthday and on the eve of the NHL season opener tonight.

Lemieux's record-setting contract will pay him nearly twice what any other player in the NHL is making. Philadelphia's Eric Lindros, who will face the Penguins on Tuesday night in Pittsburgh, signed a six-year deal worth $21 million earlier this year.

Lemieux's contract replaces the final two years on his five-year, $12 million deal that had placed him fourth on the NHL salary scale. The money he'll earn during the course of the deal equals almost two-thirds of the $65 million Penguins owner Howard Baldwin paid for the franchise in 1991.

Baldwin said during the summer he wanted to sign Lemieux to a long-term deal that would bind him to the Penguins for the rest of his career and beyond.

Perot candidacy forces Bush, Clinton to face facts

Ross Perot's back, and long, too soon.

The return of the Texas billionaire put some spice in the insipid race for the presidency, but it did more.

It refocused the attention of President Bush and Gov. Clinton where it should have been all along: on the deficit, on the economy and on both candidates' bankruptcy of ideas and paucity of courage to do anything about them.

Perot is unlikely to get elected, and he knows it, but that's beside the point. His real value will be standing up on that debate stage Sunday night in St. Louis, and asking Bush and Clinton point-blank why they're not leveling with the American people.

Neither of them, obviously, can answer that question.

Clinton cynically proposes new spending of $200 billion while claiming to balance the federal budget. The truth is he can't pay for either, and his assertion that economic growth will substantially increase tax revenues while trimming the deficit is, to be charitable, dubious.

For the president's part, there are growing doubts he can manage the economy, much less cut the deficit and spur economic growth. All of his protests that recovery are just around the corner are starting to sound uncannily like Herbert Hoover's speeches during the 1932 presidential campaign.

Like Clinton, Bush knows that his numbers don't add up, but neither has the guts to admit it.

It's much easier to tout voodoo economics, promise to spread the proceeds of our nearly maxed-out national credit card among more special-interest groups and hope the voters mistake resoundfulness for insight.

The voters aren't fooled. They grasp that neither of the major candidates has the political will to solve the painful budget crisis.

And make no mistake, Perot's prescription is painful. He would raise the top marginal tax rate to 33 percent from 31 percent now, and to 35 percent if necessary. He would impose a 50-cent increase in gasoline taxes over five years and increase taxes on Social Security benefits and cigarettes.

But Perot understands, even if Clinton and Bush do not, that the American people are not quite as addicted to feeding at the public trough as are the politicians they elect.

There's a deep sense of unease abroad in the land about the economy, a feeling not so much that the people running the country are out of answers as that they're out of control.

If you need evidence of that, look to the economic statistics.

- Consumer confidence is lower now than it was in the fall of 1982, when unemployment was at 10 percent in the midst of the steepest postwar recession.

- Almost two years after economists say the recession ended, the economy is growing at an annual rate of less than 1 percent.

- And in four years, an $8 trillion economy has produced fewer than 1 million new jobs.

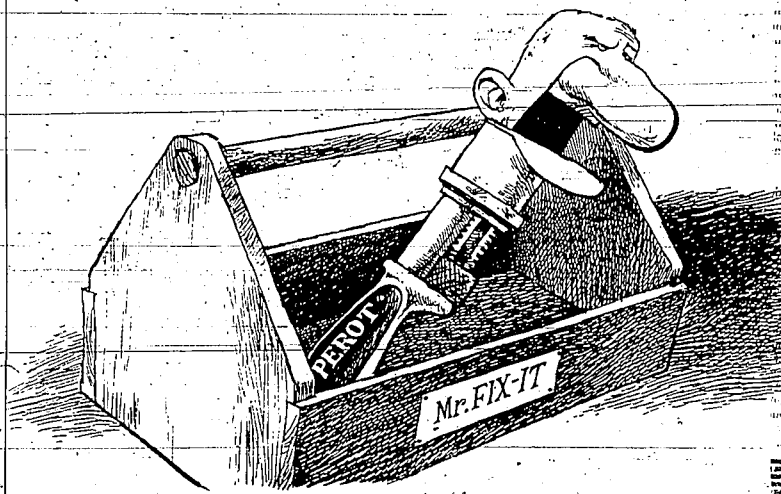

Bush's rudderless leadership and Clinton's hollow grandstanding could have chilling consequences for the country, except for the fact that the American people, as usual, are smarter and more insightful than their leaders.

Perot recognizes that fact, and if he forces whoever is elected president next month to do what's right for the country, he will have done a great service.

He might have done more than that had he stayed in the race last July, but this quirky character from Texarkana marches to a different drumbeat.

The old-fashioned name for it is common sense.

Ask Clinton about court intentions

Why aren't President Bush and Gov. Bill Clinton being asked about the Supreme Court? While both are after the White House prize, the biggest prize of all is the court of courts.

It's clear that if Clinton wins the election, he will name justices whose view of the law would lead them to put the rights of criminals ahead of the rights of actual and potential victims.

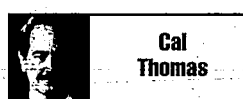

Clinton appointees would see the law as an instrument of social change and take their cues from public opinion polls and cultural fashion rather than see the law as an immutable standard to which people should be conforming.

Clinton appointees would see the law as an instrument of social change and take their cues from public opinion polls and cultural fashion rather than see the law as an immutable standard to which people should be conforming.

Under President Clinton, it would be back to legisprudence, not jurisprudence, a view expressed by the late Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes, who said in 1907 that "... the Constitution is what the judges say it is." This was also the position of the late Justice Felix Frankfurter, who wrote in a 1958 decision: "Article VI of the Constitution makes the Constitution the 'supreme Law of the Land.' ... It is emphatically the province and duty of the judicial department to say what the law is ... It follows that the interpretation of the (Constitution) enunciated by this Court is the supreme law of the land."

Frankfurter believed, as do his ideological descendants, that the Supreme Court, not the Constitution, is supreme. The danger when this view dominates is that justices may then ride roughshod over every constitutional restraint, forcing the country to conform to their own social beliefs and ignoring immutable standards.

In the debates, which begin next week, President Bush and Vice President Quayle should remind voters what legal life was like when judicial free-lancing was in vogue.

They should quote Justice John Harlan, who observed in his 1966 Miranda dissent (requiring that a criminal suspect be read his rights before questioning, thus further expanding the rights of criminals):

"Nothing in the letter or the spirit of the Constitution or in the precedents squares with the heavy-handed and one-sided action that is so precipitously taken by the Court in the name of fulfilling its constitutional responsibilities. The foray which the Court makes today brings to mind the wise and farsighted words of Mr. Justice Jackson: "... This Court is forever adding new stories to the temples of constitutional law, and the temples have a way of collapsing when one story too many is added."

Given Clinton's view of Roe vs. Wade, and noting the ideologically liberal company he keeps, it is fair to conclude that Clinton appointee to the Supreme Court would try to resurrect some, if not all, of the judicial activism of the 1960s and '70s.

While the Rehnquist Court has strived for balance, a court dominated by Clinton appointees would, for example, favor the "underdog" worker over the employer and the criminal over the victim.

Clinton would not be concerned, as Ronald Reagan was, that the Supreme Court has too often intruded into matters best left to the states.

His justices would favor loose, rather than strict construction.

One of the loudest constructionists is Harvard Law School's Laurence Tribe, often mentioned as a possible Clinton nominee. Tribe has written: "There is simply no way for the courts to review legislation in the terms of the Constitution without repeatedly making difficult substantive choices among competing values and indeed among intractably controverted political, social and moral conceptions. ... The danger in this view is that Tribe considers all choices of equal value, or at least none that can be made by consulting a standard that does not change. This approach to law becomes a type of legal coin toss.

Contrast this view with that of then-Attorney General Edwin Meese, who said in 1985: "The intended role of the judiciary generally and the Supreme Court in particular was to serve as the 'bulwarks of a limited constitution.' ... As the 'faithful guardians of the Constitution,' the judges are expected to resist any political effort to depart from the literal provisions of the Constitution. The text of the document did the original intention of those who framed it would be the judicial standard in giving effect to the Constitution. ... To allow the courts to govern simply by what it views at the time as fair and decent, is a scheme of government no longer popular; the idea of democracy has suffered. ... The permanence of the Constitution has been weakened. A Constitution that is viewed as only what the judges say it is, is no longer a Constitution in the true sense."

These competing views of the Constitution ought to be a central issue in this campaign.

So far they have not been. Perhaps someone will ask about each candidate's view of law and the courts in the debates,

Mining law serves well

The Idaho Conservation League would have you believe that you can just simply go out and, for a small fee, mine a land.

The simple fact is you must make a discovery of a valuable mineral that exists in such quantities as to justify the expenditure of money for the development of the mine and the extraction of the mineral. And the mere indication or presence of gold or silver is not sufficient.

If the minerals underlying the golf course at Elkhorn and the ski runs on Baldy are held by the government, they may be located if a discovery is made. If then an owner of the land is to be done, the owners of the surface rights are entitled to compensation for their loss.

Possession of mineral rights does not enable activities prohibited by other federal statutes, nor does it imply right-of-way across private land. Also note the Idaho Department of Lands also requires a notice for surface-disturbing mining work including mining claims.

There isn't a mining company in the country that would touch the Sun Valley area, and I am sure if the ICL has bothered to check, they know this.

As far as getting the patent for land for $2.50 to $5 an acre, it is possible but only after a mineral survey. If you are well fixed, I guess you could afford the cost of core drilling at a cost of around $18,000 for a 500-foot hole, and it may take three or more holes per claim. Don't forget to get all the necessary permits and file your environmental impact statement (real cheap land). And remember, they only grant mineral patents where there is a body of mineable ore and not where you like to build a house.

Now for the part about miners and mines extracting minerals without paying any royalties. Suppose a company has a $20 million payroll. About a third of it will go to federal and state income tax and county property tax and then the rest goes to support the local economy. And yes, let's not forget the income tax on the company's profits.

Let's not be in a hurry to change a law that 95 percent of the people know nothing about or care about until someone takes part of it out of context and tries to make people believe they are getting taken.

STAN STRUNK
Shoshone

Keep mining law intact

The Idaho Conservation League may have some kind of point to make, although the outcome will not be in their best interest. There are two very basic and fundamental flaws in the current arguments being made against the Mining Law of 1872.

The first flaw is the issues have been grossly oversimplified and distorted. The ICL uses such words as "antiquated," "outdated" and "outmoded" and does not acknowledge the subsequent 120 years of case law and precedent. The second major law is the issue of environmental protection. Opponents quickly point out the obvious: The Mining Law is not an environmental law. The Mining Law is a land tenure law.

There are 13 major federal laws that amended the Mining Law to require environmental, historic and cultural protection. A total of 37 statutes directly amend the Mining Law and apply to operations conducted under it.

The anti-mining organizations say people can purchase/patent federal land for $2.50 to $5 per acre under the Mining Law of 1872. At these quoted prices, there should not be any federal or public land left. As hundreds of millions of acres of public lands remain available today, the anti-mining people are leaving some facts out of their argument.

ICL made a big issue stating that hard-rock miners on public land pay no rental fees or royalties to the federal government. However, federal and state governments have the power to levy taxes, and the metals industry pays many different federal and state taxes, including taxes on unmined reserves in the ground. There are corporate income, excise and severance taxes. Also, the mining industry must post environmental bonds in the event that the mining operation is not pulled out and did not adequately restore the environment.

The ICL also is in error when they staked claim markers on lands before they made any discovery of a locatable mineral. New claims or sites must be recorded within 90 days of their location. When prospecting on private land, permission must be obtained from the landowner, or the prospector can be charged with trespassing. After this is done and before any ground is disturbed, a legal bond is needed.

The modifications of 120 years of case law have kept The General Mining Law of 1872 as current as our Constitution and Bill of Rights.

Case handled well

I would like to take a moment to refute Ruth Depew's distorted view (Sept. 28) of the "botched" investigation surrounding her grandson's death.

The first thing I would like to point out is that the article Mrs. Depew refers to dated May 20, 1992, was put in the paper to squelch rumors that her grandson had been deliberately placed in the highway to give the appearance of an accident. The sheriff did speak with the coroner and was advised that there was no evidence of foul play and that the only factual evidence at that point was that there had been a tragic automobile accident.

I would like to address the incident report she criticizes that was written by Deputy Ashley. The report was written from initial contact with the subjects at the scene of the accident. It was not intended as a final, conclusive report on the matter. It was used as a supplemental report and made available to the Idaho State Police.

As far as the person who came forth and admitted to striking the body, she was interviewed by an officer with the Idaho State Police at the Lincoln County sheriff's office.

The third point involves the questions of why he was there and how he got there. Since there was no evidence of foul play, why he was there is not for this office to assume, and how he got there has not been proven factually.

Fourth, I think it says quite a lot of good for the Lincoln County sheriff's office to have called for assistance from an agency that has personnel specifically trained to handle situations such as this. The sheriff's office was not out to "score points" and take all of the glory but was merely interested in helping to solve this tragedy.

The last thing I would like to say is that every rumor or bit of information that was heard by or given to the Lincoln County sheriff's office was relayed to the Idaho State Police for investigation. I can also say that I am aware of the fact that the Idaho State Police conducted a very thorough investigation into this matter and if their report is not conclusive, it is not from lack of investigation.

Although I sympathize with the family, I don't think any amount of factual evidence will dissuade Mrs. Depew's opinion, and I would like to make it very clear that this office did not "botch" anything relating to this case.

Rescuers sift for hundreds believed entombed by crash

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands (AP) — With little hope of finding anyone alive, workers searched carefully Monday for hundreds feared entombed in the tottering ruins of an apartment building torn open by a crashing El Al jumbo jet.

Fourteen bodies had been recovered, and authorities said 250 people were unaccounted for. But it was not known if all were at home Sunday evening when the pilot lost an eight-minute struggle to get his crippled Boeing 747 cargo plane back to Schiphol Airport and slammed into the angle of the V-shaped building.

As the country struggled to cope with its worst disaster in four decades, investigators said it was too early to determine what caused the two engines on the Israeli plane's right wing to tear away shortly after it took off. The pilot, Yitzhak Rakoc, had reported that two of the jet's four engines were on fire.

Dutch television said the plane circled twice in a vain attempt to get lined up with the runway. All four people on the jet died.

The disaster could prove to be the worst plane crash involving casualties on the ground worldwide. Huton Archer, spokesman for the International Civil Aviation Organization in Quebec, said a Boeing 707 cargo plane crashed in Santa Cruz, Bolivia, in 1976, killing 77 on the ground and injuring 78 seriously. Smoldering and falling debris prevented all but the most cautious search at the cordoned-off site. Dutch television quoted officials as saying parts of bodies could be seen under charred and twisted steel, concrete and aircraft pieces.

Huge chunks of concrete plummeted onto a pile of rubble three stories high as workers using cranes tried to shore up the crumbling edges of the 10-story structure.

Dogs were being used to search for survivors. But except for a few pets that crawled to safety, there were no signs of life in the interiors of dozens of apartments with all their furnishings eerily exposed.

"We are trying to recover victims. But because of the danger of collapse, the recovery is very difficult and will take very long," said a police spokesman, Elly Florax.

Fire Chief Hugo Ernst said the body retrieval could take four days. "The hope that anyone is in there still alive is minimal," he said. "To get to them, we have to remove piece by piece and block by block."

At a news conference just after dawn, a shaken Mayor Ed Van Thijn said, "At this moment, we only know that the size of the catastrophe is incredible — and shocking."

He said 209 people were missing, but Dutch radio later quoted him as raising the figure to 250.

Dutch and Israeli officials initially said they did not suspect terrorist sabotage, which could affect Middle East peace talks. But El Al spokesman Nachman Klieman said it was too soon to exclude any possible cause.

Klieman said the crash was the first for El Al since a DC-4 cargo plane crashed in 1951. He had said Sunday that the Amsterdam crash was the airline's first ever.

The plane plowed into a low-income apartment building in the suburb of Bijlmermeer (pronounced Buy'l-mur-MEER). It tore a chasm six apartments wide and 10 floors deep and spewed flaming fuel that touched off a four-hour inferno.

The drug concrete complex is one of a warren of 30-year-old apartment buildings primarily occupied by Surinamese, Turkish, Moroccan and African immigrants.

Authorities said two engines fell from the 747 minutes after it took off from Schiphol Airport, 10 miles west of Amsterdam, and the pilot tried to wrestle the plane back to the airport.

Dutch television said a steering problems prevented the plane from getting back to the airport, which was about 10 miles from the crash site.

Paul Turk, an independent aviation analyst in Washington, said the Boeing 747 is designed to fly on one engine but its maneuverability could be greatly reduced by damage to the wing.

He said the loss of two engines incited one of them likely spewed pieces that damaged other parts of the jet.

Cloaked in a black cape, a somber Queen Beatrix visited the crash scene with Prime Minister Ruud Lubbers.

It was the worst disaster to hit the Netherlands since the North Sea breached the dikes in 1953 and claimed more than 1,700 lives.

An Israeli investigative team arrived to probe the disaster.

Rescue workers are dwarfed Monday by the remains of the apartment complex which was hit by an El Al airliner Boeing 747 cargo plane late Sunday evening. Up to 200 are feared died.

Sudden death from skies rains down in quiet suburb

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands (AP) — Johanna Kok was having a quiet dinner with her husband.

Regina Tawia was braiding her 4-year-old daughter's hair. Mark van der Linden had just sat down to watch soccer on TV.

That was when El Al Flight 1862, a Boeing 747 cargo jet, hurtled from the night sky, its wings ablaze, plowing a fiery path through their apartment complex in an Amsterdam suburb.

"Everything flew up to the ceiling, bookcases fell over," Mrs. Kok said Monday. "I was so scared I couldn't think — I just grabbed my coat and ran."

She and her husband survived, but more than 250 residents of the Kruitberg and Groeneveen buildings were feared dead in Sunday evening's crash. Officials said there was little chance anyone was alive in the rubble.

On Monday, workers wearing gas masks sifted cautiously through the smoldering mauls of twisted wreckage.

Barwin Hercul, 22, was waiting for word of his father — and fearing the worst.

"He watches soccer every Sunday night at the club on the ground floor," Hercul said, fighting off tears. That club now lies under 10 floors of concrete chunks and mangled metal.

"I'm pretty sure my father was at the club," said Hercul, who lives in Rotterdam. "If he doesn't show up at work this afternoon I'll be sure."

Regina Tawia's apartment was several doors away from where the plane sliced through the building. When it hit, she was chatting with her children, relaxing after a Sunday dinner.

"I heard a plane. The whole building started to sway and the windows shattered," she said. "We didn't know where to go. We didn't even know it was a plane crash ... There was smoke and fire and people everywhere crying."

Mark van der Linden had just settled down to watch the soccer match when he heard the roar of the crippled plane and rushed to the window.

"I saw the wings and all ignited," he said, motioning to the devastated building across the way. "It exploded into one huge sea of fire."

Molly Maulabaks, another resident of the apartment block, said the impact was like a bomb blast.

"As I walked to the window, hot air blasted in a knocked me back," Maulabaks said. "I looked out and I saw fire everywhere."

Clinton, Bush state directors debate today

TWIN FALLS — The Idaho director of the Clinton-Gore presidential campaign and the chief of the Idaho Republican Party will square off in a debate at noon today on the campus of the College of Southern Idaho.

Jon Foster, the field representative for the Democratic presidential candidate, and Blake Hall, an Idaho Falls lawyer who served as the state's GOP chairman, are scheduled to debate in the Eagle's Nest lounge in the Taylor Administration Building.

KMVT-TV news director Doug Maughan will be the moderator, and will take questions from the audience which he will direct to Foster and Hall. Foster and Hall will discuss any issue dealing with politics, Foster said Monday. The debate is free and the public is invited.

Judge sentences stalker to maximum jail term — 1 year

TWIN FALLS — A judge sentenced Twin Falls County's first convicted stalker to the maximum sentence — one year in jail — Monday. Jeff C. Laws, 32, was convicted of repeatedly following or harassing Kay McBride in the first local case under Idaho's new law that makes stalking a misdemeanor.

McBride told a jury and 5th District Magistrate Melvin C. Edwards that Laws frequently drove past her house, parked nearby and followed her on his bicycle when she went to work.

The Idaho Legislature, following the lead of several other states, passed the stalking law during the last session. The law went into effect July 1 and sets the maximum sentence at one year in jail and a $1,000 fine.

Computer program joins Twin Falls police department

TWIN FALLS — A new computer program may help area law enforcement agencies identify and capture criminals. Compuskech — a computer program that allows police to turn a witness' description into a sketch of a crime suspect — is in place at the Twin Falls police department, but will be available to all local agencies, detective Dennis Chambers said.

The program sells for $5,000, but the company that makes it sold it to the city for just $3,100 and sent a representative to teach several officers how to operate the program over the weekend, Chambers said.

All the money came from donations gathered by Laurie Wagner of Twin Falls. Wagner was attacked in her home last year and began a crusade to get Compuskech to help other crime victims.

County drops felony child molesting charge against man

TWIN FALLS — Prosecutors have dropped a felony child molesting charge against a Twin Falls man.

Russell L. Baker, 36, was charged in July with molesting a 12-14-year-old girl between 1990-1992. The dismissal order, signed by Twin Falls County Deputy Prosecutor Tracy Post says the charge is being dismissed "in the interest of justice."

Prosecutors may be investigating someone else in connection with the incidents that gave rise to the charges, said Baker's attorney, Tim Williams.

Post said the charges were dropped in connection with an ongoing investigation, but she would not elaborate.

Baker is currently on probation for a March 1991 attack on his ex-wife. He pleaded guilty to battery with the intent to commit a serious felony last year and received a suspended sentence of 2-5 years in prison.

Jerome City Council to award bid for water meters

JEROME — The City Council will award a bid for water meters at its meeting tonight that could cost users more money.

The 2,600 meters, costing $279,000, are being purchased to replace meters throughout the town. By replacing malfunctioning meters, water users would pay about $150,000 more per year, City Administrator Larry Eakin said.

The council meeting starts at 7 p.m. in the City Hall.

Craig blocks 'Brady Bill' on Senate floor

States News Service

WASHINGTON — Idaho Sen. Larry Craig on Monday single-handedly blocked Senate consideration of a gun-control measure he claims could result in a fight between law-enforcement officers oppose the distribution of handguns.

Craig, a first-term Republican, spoiled the plans of Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, who sought senators' support to schedule a vote on legislation that would exempt law-enforcement officers from legal liability if they blocked a handgun sale to an individual whom they believed had a criminal record.

The measure was billed a compromise to the so-called "Brady Bill," which sought a seven-day waiting period before the purchase of a handgun. Republican senators staged off-a-vote on the Brady Bill, a three-year-old measure backed by James Brady, the former White House press secretary who was wounded and disabled in 1981 by a gunman trying to assassinate President Reagan.

By objecting to Mitchell's request, Craig forced Democrats to debate the measure without being able to vote on its passage. During debate on the Senate floor, Craig said the bill would place unnecessary obstacles in the way of law-abiding citizens who want to own handguns to protect themselves from violent crime. "A law enforcement official who simply didn't want handguns in his or her jurisdiction could find reason to disallow the clearing of a background check," Craig said. "We know a criminal would not follow this procedure so we're not talking about blocking firearms" from the criminal element. "We're really talking about a whole new series of jumps and hurdles law abiding citizens must live with."

Susan Whitmore, a spokeswoman for Handgun Control Inc., said Craig's maneuver effectively killed any chance for passage of gun control legislation this year. Congress is scheduled to adjourn this week.

"If we don't see any movement in the next 24 hours, I think we'll have to start over next year," Whitmore said Monday afternoon.

After Craig's comments, Mitchell made a plea on the Senate floor to President Bush, asking him to call off the Republican opposition and allow a vote on the measure.

"There's not much time," Mitchell said, addressing his remarks to Bush. "But with your direct and active involvement, we can pass it now, by itself. ... Without your help, we all know it can't be done."

City Council enmeshed in zoning fight

Members table, pass on separate requests

By Phil Sahn Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The City Council got tangled in the barbed wire of planning and zoning Monday night, tabling one issue and passing another after much debate.

Property owner Ivan Skinner asked the council to replot a condominium project at North Elm Street. The replot included expanding a building width 2 feet.

But residents of the North Elm Village condominium project objected, saying that the 2-foot strip of property belonged to the tenants' association and could not be replotted without their permission.

Widening the building also would cut down on their privacy, residents said.

Homeowners who live near the condominium project also said that the agreement to plant "full-grown" trees as a buffer has not been honored. A fence that the project's original developer was supposed to maintain has been left in disrepair, they said.

Builder Lyle Frazier told the council that 75 percent of the tenants in the project signed petitions agreeing to the replot and the larger building. He also offered to put up extra trees in the buffer area.

But city Attorney Fritz Wonderlich suggested that the council needs to know who owns 2-foot strip of property before any replot can be approved.

"I don't see how you can replot property for someone who doesn't own it," Wonderlich told the council.

The council tabled the issue until the city gets information showing who owns the property that would be replotted for a wider building.

After a long debate, the council agreed to a replot of the Breckenridge Farms development near Pole Line Road and Blue Lakes Boulevard North.

Talk centered on how many curb cuts the developer, Woodbury Corp. of Salt Lake City, wants to put in along seven lots along Fillmore Street behind the project.

Wallace R. Woodbury asked the council to agree to one entrance per lot. But city Engineer Gary Young said that would be too many and would create traffic hazards.

The council finally decided to accept a planning and zoning commission suggestion to limit two lots at each end to share a private drive. The council will consider entrances for the three remaining lots as they come up as part of the planned unit development.

The council also OK'd a replot of the Magic Valley Mall at its meeting and OK'd an agreement with the Idaho Transportation Department to put up lights from Pole Line Road to the Perrine Bridge. The state will pay for the lights as part of the bridge lighting project but the city will maintain the lights from Pole Line to the bridge at a cost of $170 a month.

Burley council probes City Hall contractors

By Eric Goodell Mini-Cassia News Service

More Mini-Cassia news — B3

BURLEY — The Burley City Council is questioning a list of requested changes submitted by Five Star Construction, the contractor building the new City Hall.

"It's not your normal change order," Mayor Frank Bauman said after Monday's council meeting. "Some things were slipped in on us."

Change orders are normally submitted by construction companies when they request a change from the original specifications of a building.

The various items on the change order amount to $2,790, including items such as elevator equipment to a water-line valve.

The council voted to delete one item, a steel beam costing $400 for the basement, from the change order, saying the city should not be charged for it.

The council scheduled a special meeting for Thursday at 7 a.m. at which it will decide on concrete work being proposed by Five Star Construction.

A special meeting is necessary because the company is wanting to get started on the work quickly.

Of the other six items on the change order, the council, by a unanimous vote, agreed to question contract percentages, as well as a 10-day extension request submitted by Five Star.

There was no explanation why the company wanted the extension, City Attorney Bill Parsons said.

Work on the new City Hall began next spring. It will replace the aging City Hall which is not accessible by the disabled and does not meet present-day building codes.

The council has been meeting in the Cassia County School central office for about two years to allow the physically disabled to attend the meeting.

Where they stand

Clint Stennett

Tax increase: If the Governor proposes a tax increase next year, support would depend on how the tax dollars would be used. Would support tax hike for "education, period."

1 Percent Initiative: Opposes initiative, calling it a "tax shift, not a reduction." If initiative passes, the state will be forced to pick up essential services now provided by local government, creating a bigger bureaucracy.

Local option tax: State government should allow local communities the option of taxing themselves so long as the purpose of the tax is specified and sunset provisions are in place. Will help to get enabling legislation passed.

Idaho economy: The best-thing-the-state government could do for the economy is "make it rain." Supports Idaho Department of Commerce promotion of tourism and agricultural products.

Economy

Republican candidate Peter Jans is challenging Democrat Clint Stennett for the District 21 House of Representatives seat. District 21 includes Blaine, Gooding, Lincoln, Camas and part of Elmore County.

Stennett

Jans

Peter Jans

Tax increase: Will not support a tax hike, if proposed by governor in the next session. Says the state already has enough money. Would seek ways to reshuffle priorities instead.

1 Percent Initiative: Not in favor of property taxes in general, but finds fault with how the initiative is written. If it passes, state will come under intense pressure to pick up the difference. Suggests that all state programs should then be "put on the table" and the less important ones eliminated.

Local option tax: Opposed, because it gives yet another level of government the authority to tax. It would accentuate economic differences between the counties.

Idaho economy: State needs to provide more support and endorsement for value-added products. Would like to see a venture capital fund developed to promote new business.

Developer, opponents dispute plan's water quality standards

By N.S. Nakkert
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A Boise developer says three proposed hydroelectric projects won't harm water quality, but opponents of the projects say water in the river already violates water quality standards.

Idaho Department of Water Resources officials have scheduled a public hearing at 7 p.m. Wednesday to discuss the water quality effects of the projects.

L.B. Industries Inc. of Boise has applied for federal licenses for small hydro projects at Boulder, Empire and Kanaka rapids on the Snake River near Buhl.

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission — FERC — regulates private hydroelectric projects.

The federal Clean Water Act requires the state to review any project requiring a federal license to determine whether it would meet water quality standards.

But Idaho Rivers United insists that because the river already violates water quality standards, it makes no sense for the state Division of Environmental Quality to certify that the projects would not harm water quality.

The statewide river conservation group wants DEQ to issue no certifications at all as long as the

Hearing set

State officials have scheduled a public hearing at 7 p.m. Wednesday in Room 108 of the College of Southern Idaho's Aspen Building to discuss the water quality effects of the proposed Snake River hydroelectric projects.

river fails to meet Clean Water Act criteria.

Decades of agricultural and municipal discharges to the Middle Snake River, however, have left it choked with sediment and weeds, and nearly depleted its fish population.

L.B. Industries spokesman Larry Falkner, however, says that's no reason not to certify the projects. "We're not working with the water—that's given to us," he said. Besides the projects would not lower water quality, he added.

But opponents don't agree. They fear that diverting a portion of the river around the rapids would reduce the river's ability to absorb oxygen.

Rapids serve to replenish dissolved oxygen in the water as it tumbles and splashes over rocks.

A portion of the river flow would bypass the rapids in canals, run through the power plants and return to the river below the rapids. L.B. Industries maintains that the projects have been designed to be environmentally benign. They would always leave a minimum flow in the rapids and would not affect water quality, Falkner said.

Meanwhile, the projects also have run into strong opposition from Buhl area residents who fear the Empire Rapids project would threaten the Buhl Country Club.

L.B. Industries would consider dropping the Empire project if it faced reduced federal opposition, Falkner said. But the company is leery of angering FERC by dropping one of the three license applications in midstream.

We're on a railroad track with them, Falkner said. Even in the license application process have to happen on schedule, he said.

If FERC would go along with it, L.B. Industries would consider it, he said. The company has invested a lot of money in the projects and doesn't want to do anything to risk losing it.

Besides, Falkner says, if L.B. doesn't develop the sites, someone else will — and that may mean a dam or larger diversions.

But if the sites are going to be developed, L.B. Industries' proposals are the least environmentally damaging, he said.

"We think these make sense," Falkner said.

United Way

agencies win $10,000 extra

The Times-News
TWIN FALLS — Its campaign is only three weeks old, but the United Way of Magic Valley has already come up with a little something extra for its member agencies.

About $10,000 of the directors of the campaign voted Monday to give its 19 agencies the extra money because the "shrinkage" on campaign's donations from last year's campaign was less than expected, according to Colin Randolph, chairman of the board.
"Shrinkage" represents the difference between pledges and the money the campaign actually receives. The average is 8 to 10 percent, Randolph said, but for last year's campaign it was less than 5 percent.

"We're very pleased," he said. "It shows that we're doing well despite the national publicity last year."
Last year, United Way of America executive director William Aramony resigned after revelations that his $500,000 salary was being supplemented by travel and other perks.
The charges led to United Way of Magic Valley suspending its dues to its national affiliate, but evidently not to any decline in giving locally.

United Way gave its 19 member agencies $158,600 last year after raising $302,000 in pledges. The difference included "shrinkage," administration costs and donor designation, or the money earmarked for charities that are not members of the United Way of Magic Valley.
The United Way discontinued donor designation this year — the money that goes to United Way will henceforth be spread only among its member charities — and hopes to collect $280,000 in pledges by Thanksgiving.

Build solid education with citizenship, principal says

By Eric Goodell
Mini-Cassia News Service

BURLEY — Persuading students to display good citizenship and to attend class are the building blocks of a good education, the principal of Burley High School says.

Bob Plotts told the Burley Area Chamber of Commerce Monday afternoon that teachers need to do all they can to keep students in school.

Parental support of the educational system, also is important, he said.

Plotts said when he was principal at an eastern Washington high school, he once thought the school was doing great to have a dropout average of 25 percent, compared with the national average of 32 percent.

Realizing that's still an awful lot of students not graduating, Plotts said he developed a theory that teachers need to do their best to keep students in school, even if it means giving them a "D" for just showing respect for teachers and classmates and attending class.

"Then the teacher can work for other things on the C, B and A levels," Plotts explained.

"If a student did the two things, 'Then I should be able to teach him something or I wouldn't be worth my salt,' Plotts said.

Plotts said he sees too many students dropping out of school to take jobs paying $4.50 an hour. Student who are able to find jobs usually don't return to school, he said.

Respect for others and faithful attendance are two things that employers want, he said.

Plotts' said parents need to show more support of the educational system. He said many parents have a habit of blaming the school or teachers for the student's behavior, when the parent should look first at the student.

"One of the first things Plotts asks parents to do is to make sure their children get eight hours of sleep a night. Often, however, parents say it is too difficult to control their children, he said.

Plotts also sees "room" for improvement in the educational system. Schools don't always use their resources wisely, and teachers need to challenge students, he said.

Plotts recalled times when failing students did well in driver's education but weren't motivated enough to perform well in other classes.

Schools need to stress academics, Plotts said. He said Burley High officials are considering an academics booster club.

Boy injured by homemade bomb

BURLEY — A 14-year-old Burley boy might be blinded in one or both eyes after a homemade explosive device sent glass shards into his face Sunday afternoon, law officers said.

According to the Cassia County Sheriff's Department, Michael Mercier, 718 Oriental Ave., made what amounted to a bomb out of a pop bottle, water and dry-ice.

When the device didn't explode at first, Mercier approached the bottle, which then exploded in his face, said Loyd Egbert, a detective with the Cassia County Sheriff's Department.

Mercier was taken to Ester Barron and Medina's Regional Medical Center. The floor supervisor said he has since been discharged, but was unsure of where he was taken to next.

The accident occurred at 3:15 p.m. Sunday.

Man hits house with automobile

BURLEY — A Burley man faces a drunken driving charge after an accident that damaged two parked cars and a house.

Francisco Medina, 29, 910 Conant St., was driving a van that hit a parked Chevrolet-Beretta, according to the Cassia County Sheriff's Department.

The Beretta bounced off a parked Ford Tempo, and then the van and the Beretta both jumped a curb and hit a house at 909 Miller Ave.

The house, belonging to Ester Barron and Medina's van each sustained an estimated $1,000 damage. The Beretta sustained an estimated $8,000 damage. Damage to the Tempo was estimated at $500.

Medina was charged with driving under the influence and having no driver's license or insurance, according to the sheriff's department. He was treated and released at Cassia Memorial Hospital.

Sign up for Rupert youth basketball

RUPERT — Registrations are being accepted for the Rupert Parks and Recreation Department's youth basketball league.

Children in grades 3-10 are eligible to play. Separate leagues will be formed for boys and girls, provided enough girls register.

Sign-ups will be accepted through Oct. 30 at the Parks and Recreation office, 620 F St. The fee is $17 for city residents and $22 for non-city residents.

For those registering after Oct. 30, the fees increase to $22 and $27.

Rupert City Council to meet tonight

RUPERT — The City Council will conduct its first meeting of the month at 7 p.m. tonight at City Hall.

Among the agenda items is a review of medical insurance for city employees, an item postponed from the Sept. 22 meeting.

Council members also are scheduled to review the city's Neighborhood Watch program.

Minidoka school board calls meeting

RUPERT — The Minidoka County School Board will meet in special session at 7:30 p.m. tonight in district offices.

The trustees will meet in closed session to discuss the evaluation of personnel.

Burley traveler reports theft

DECLEO — A Burley man who was hitchhiking from Utah said a woman who picked him up drove away with his belongings Friday night.

According to the Cassia County Sheriff's Department, Bastiaan De Bruyne, 22, said a 40-year-old woman gave him a ride from Ogden, Utah, to Jerry's Barbecue in Declo.

She got gas and told him to go inside to buy some oil. While he was doing so, she drove away, he said.

Still in the car was De Bruyne's $130 in cash as well as $600 in traveler's checks, as well as a backpack and sleeping bag.

Automobile wreck occurs near Albion

ALBION — A woman was injured early Sunday morning when two vehicles collided on Idaho 77 near Albion, deputies say.

According to the Cassia County Sheriff's Department, Tammy Sue Owens, 33, of Albion, was southbound on the highway near Milepost 22 when her car was struck by a northbound Suburban driven by Darren J. Loveland, 30, Albion.

Loveland was charged with driving left of the center line, deputies said. Owens was taken to Cassia Memorial Hospital in Burley, where she was treated and released.

Owens' vehicle sustained $5,000 damage while Loveland's sustained $3,500 damage.

Ex-judge Workman joins Rupert law firm

Mini-Cassia News Service

RUPERT — Donald R. "Bob" Workman, who stepped down as Minidoka County's magistrate judge last week, has accepted a position with a Rupert law firm.

Workman will begin working at Ling, Nielsen and Robinson on Wednesday.

His Sept. 1 announcement that he was resigning from the bench ended disciplinary action being taken against him by the Idaho Judicial Council. The nature of the council's investigation has not been revealed.

Robert M. Nielsen, a partner in the law firm, said Workman would be a "general practitioner" working in all areas of law.

Seven applicants, including a Rupert lawyer, are seeking to fill the magistrate position.

The 5th Judicial District Magistrate Commission announced last week that Rupert attorney Larry Duff is one of the seven applicants for the job.

The other applicants are Alan Barber of Idaho Falls; Cindy L. Campbell of Blackfoot; Thomas H. Borresen; Tammy R. McNeese and Gordon S. Nielson, all of Boise; and James A. Schiller of Nampa.

The 15-member commission will review the applications at a closed meeting on Oct. 28, following the receipt of surveys sent to the members of the Idaho Bar Association and public questionnaires available at county courthouses within the district.

The commission reported that a second, as-yet-unscheduled meeting will be held in Minidoka County to interview the finalists. The interviews will be open to the public.

Following the interviews, the commission will deliberate in closed session and make its appointment around Dec. 1. The new magistrate will assume his or her duties early next year.

Until then, other district magistrates will handle the county's case load.

How the Idaho lawmakers voted last week

States News Service

WASHINGTON — Here are the votes of Idaho senators and representatives on major legislation in Congress this past week.

A "Y" means the member voted for the measure; an "N" means the member voted against the measure; an "A" means the member did not vote; a "P" means the member voted present; an "R" means a member resigned; a "D" means member died.

SENATE VOTES:

1) TO PROVIDE TAX INCENTIVES AND ECONOMIC STIMULUS IN URBAN AREAS

The Senate passed a $35 billion urban aid and tax bill by a vote of 70-20. The bill, much broader than the House version, includes a series of tax incentives, including an expansion of Individual Retirement Accounts and credit for first-time home buyers. It also has a plan to create 125 enterprise zones to spur investment in depressed urban areas. The measure now faces tough negotiations between the House and the Senate. Whether President Bush will sign the bill is uncertain because he could view some of the provisions as tax increases, which he has vowed not to implement. (H.R. 11)

2) TO RATIFY THE NUCLEAR ARMS REDUCTION TREATY

The Senate voted 93-6 to ratify the Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty, which sets limits on the number of land- and sea-based nuclear weapons owned by the United States and the former Soviet republics.

Craig (R-N)
Symms (R-N)

3) TO OVERRIDE BUSH'S VETO OF A BILL ELIMINATING THE "GAG" RULE

The Senate successfully voted to override President Bush's veto of a bill that would overturn the administration's ban on abortion counseling at family planning clinics, the so-called "gag rule." The administration allows only doctors at federally funded clinics to give out abortion information. The vote was 73-26. (S. 323)

Craig (R-N)
Symms (R-N)

4) TO OVERRIDE THE PRESIDENT'S VETO ON CONDITIONAL TRADE STATUS TO CHINA

The Senate failed to override President Bush's veto of a bill placing conditions on most-favored-nation trade status to China. The bill would have required the Chinese government to agree to specific human rights and weapons proliferation standards. The vote was 51-48. (H.R. 5318)

Craig (R-N)
Symms (R-N)

5) TO FUND FISCAL 1993 OPERATIONS PROGRAMS

The Senate passed the appropriations bill for fiscal 1993 programs that provide military and economic aid to foreign countries. The $14.1 billion bill includes $10 billion in loan guarantees for Israel. The Senate bill is $1 billion less than the Bush administration has requested but it may run into a veto because it includes funding for the U.S. Population Fund, which some countries use to encourage abortion. The vote was 87-12. (H.R. 5368)

Craig (R-N)
Symms (R-N)

HOUSE VOTES:

1) TO OVERRIDE THE PRESIDENT'S VETO OF CONDITIONAL TRADE STATUS FOR CHINA

The House achieved the two-thirds majority needed to override President Bush's veto of a bill that would place conditions on the granting of most-favored-nation trade status to China. The Senate, however, failed to override the veto. Under the bill, China would have to meet specific human rights and weapons proliferation standards. The conditions would apply only to state-owned businesses. The vote was 345-74. (H.R. 5318)

LaRocco (D-I)
Stallins (D-N)

2) TO OVERRIDE THE PRESIDENT'S VETO OF THE FAMILY LEAVE BILL

The House failed to override President Bush's veto of a bill requiring employers to provide unpaid leave for employees to care for newborn or sick family members. Bush supports family leave policies but he thinks companies should implement them voluntarily. The vote was 211-207. (H.R. 5488)

LaRocco (D-I)
Stallins (D-N)

3) TO FUND FISCAL 1993 TREASURY, POSTAL PROGRAMS

The House passed the conference report on fiscal 1993 appropriations for the Treasury Department, the U.S. Postal Service and other independent agencies. The vote was 291-126. The bill's funding level of $22.6 billion is $188 million more than President Bush has requested, which could prompt him to veto the measure. (H.R. 5488)

LaRocco (D-I)
Stallins (D-N)

4) TO FUND FISCAL 1993 COMMERCE, STATE, JUSTICE PROGRAMS

The House passed by a vote of 302-117 the House/Senate conference report on fiscal 1993 appropriations for the Departments of Commerce, Justice and State and the judicial branch. The $23.2 billion bill is $64.3 million less than President Bush requested. (H.R. 5678)

LaRocco (D-I)
Stallins (D-N)

5) TO FUND FISCAL 1993 POSTAL PROGRAMS

The House passed the conference report on fiscal 1993 appropriations for the Treasury Department, the U.S. Postal Service and other independent agencies. The vote was 291-126. The bill's funding level of $22.6 billion is $188 million more than President Bush has requested, which could prompt him to veto the measure. (H.R. 5488)

- DONALD E. GOTIMER, USN (RET.)

DEAR DONALD: I'm sure many readers will thank you for having written this letter. And on their behalf, I thank you.

half, I thank you. Readers: My staff checked these numbers with the Defense Department and was assured the numbers are correct. However, the lines are often busy. Be prepared to spend some time getting through.

DEAR ABBY: I am dating a wonderful gentleman. His wife died a year and a half ago, and every widow and divorcee in town is after him. My husband and I were friendly with him and his deceased wife.

He is 70, but looks much younger, as he is in fine physical condition. He walks four miles a day - rain or shine. Of course, there is a problem, of why would I be writing a Dear Abby letter?

To put it bluntly, this man smells bad. He smells of stale perspiration - as though he needs some kind of underarm deodorant. Perhaps it's his clothing that smells.

He looks immaculate: manicured fingernails, waxed, clean-shaven and freshly pressed, well-tailored suits, etc. I can't figure out how he can be so neglectful of his personal hygiene.

I really care about this man - he treats me like a queen. But I don't know how to handle this delicate problem. What would you do, Abby?

- MAJOR PROBLEM

DEAR MAJOR: I would tell him plainly and candidly that he has an offensive odor about him. If he insists that he showers or bathes daily, suggest that perhaps he needs an underarm deodorant. Also tell him if he doesn't change his underwear daily, he should.

If you find he does practice good hygiene and the odor is still present, tell him you care about him, and because body odor can be a symptom of a serious medical problem, he should see his physician for a thorough checkup.

DEAR ABBY: "Inhibited and Embarrassed" - the recently widowed 50-year-old woman who had a radical mastectomy - expressed her fear of rejection if she becomes involved with a new man. She asked if your male readers would write her honest thoughts about getting involved with a woman whose body is "disfigured."

These words from "The Little Prince" by Antoine de Saint-Exupery best express mine: "It is only with the heart that one can see right; by what is essential is invisible to the eye."

- ARTHUR H. PRINCE, MEMPHIS, TENN.

DEAR MR. PRINCE: Thank you for writing. The quote is absolutely true.

To get Abby's booklet "How to Write Letters for All Occasions," send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) for Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 417, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Battle for access spreads to small towns

BECKLEY, W.Va. (AP) - Linda Vied's daily odyssey takes her from courthouse to post office to corner sandwich shop, on trails carved out over cracked sidewalks and around endless obstacles.

Though she can walk tentatively with the use of a birch-walnut cane, Vied usually charts her pathways sitting in a wheelchair.

Weakened by multiple sclerosis eight years ago, she is at the vanguard of a new civil rights movement hatched in the cities, crystallized in Washington and now rippling outward toward small-town America.

Vied rolls through Beckley and its outskirts, trying to tear down the barriers for handicapped people.

"If there's no curb cut, no way to get in, it's like people are saying, 'We don't want you,'" she says.

Some businesses are not easily persuaded. But then, Vied is not easily deterred - and now she has the law behind her.

The federal Americans With Disabilities Act, which took effect this summer, requires businesses to make themselves accessible to people with handicaps. That means everything from building wheelchair ramps to permitting seeing-eye dogs.

Cities have made progress, though efforts are spotty, advocates for the disabled say.

But they worry that some small-town governments and businesses seem more concerned with cutting costs than cutting curbs.

"Small rural areas be the last to be fully accessible? Absolutely. And a lot of them never will," said Michael Oestreicher, director of Challenges Unlimited - a Springfield, Mass., design firm.

Disabled people nationwide say they are battling assumptions and misconceptions.

"It just varies so much from small town to small town," said Mark Lewis, spokesman for the National Organization on Disabilities. "In some small towns, access is very good. In others, you get attitudes of paternalism or apathy."

There's been little research into the needs of the rural disabled; and no one's even sure how many of the nation's estimated 1.4 million wheelchair users live outside cities.

A Harris Poll conducted last year suggests that 51 percent of Americans who live outside metropolitan areas neither know nor come in contact with disabled people.

"These little businesses, assuming that just because nobody in a wheelchair has tried to get-in that they don't exist. They exist - they just can't get in," said Dawn Magaro, director of Access to America, a consulting firm based in Marysville, Pa.

Linda Vied uses a wheelchair as she grapples with one of the many barriers she faces everyday in her hometown of Beckley, W. Va. Vied works for the Independent Living Center and tries to convince businesses and public offices to remove obstacles and make places more accessible to the handicapped.

Grassroots community groups are starting to pop up. One, the Center for Independent Living, has chapters in one-third of American counties.

Transportation looms as perhaps the most daunting obstacle for handicapped people.

The new federal law requires only that existing services come into compliance; it does not mandate creation of new services. And without special services, areas with no public transportation leave some disabled people virtual prisoners in their homes.

A. To check out Monkees material write to the Liverpool Productions/ Monkees Buttonmania Club, in care of Charles Rowenay, 397 Edgewood Ave., New Haven, Conn. 06511 (phone 203-865-8131), enclosing

'If there's no curb cut, no way to get in, it's like people are saying 'We don't want you.'

- Linda Vied

In most small towns, access to public transportation is rare, curb cuts are rarer, ramps often are nonexistent, and parking-space designations are ignored.

Many counties and municipalities have no way to comply with the new law, making it difficult to adapt public buildings erected decades ago when architecture wasn't conducive to change.

"It could be years before some of these small communities make changes," said Michael Platzer, who leads a group trying to make Lewistown, Pa., more accessible to wheelchair users.

Still, some towns are meeting the challenge, according to the National Organization on Disability.

Big Sandy, Mont., for example, is making its community swimming pool accessible to people who use wheelchairs. Alachua, Fla., set up a disability hotline. And Frederickburg, Va., is pressing all of its motels and hotels to install wheelchair-friendly apparatus.

Rick Offner, director of the Rural Institute at the University of Montana in Missoula, Mont., said outlying areas may not be as resistant to change as some think.

"The attitudinal change for rural areas may be difficult in some respects," but I wouldn't say that a generalization in rural America," he said. "The values vary with the communities."

Among other things, Offner's organization, which specializes in rural accessibility issues, is overseeing the installation of prefabricated and mobile homes to introduce an instant accessibility of sorts into such areas.

For Vied, the march toward accessibility will be half won when merchants realize that helping disabled people is not only good faith, but good business, too.

She cites as an example a pizza place in Beckley that offers great food but, for her, at least, might as well be located atop a mountain.

"People shouldn't have to give up their rights depending where they live," she said. "This is nothing less than a civil rights movement. And there's a long battle ahead."

Man scales Mount Saint-James mountain

for birthday

PARADISE, Wash. (AP) - A man scaled Mount Rainier one day after his 81st birthday, becoming the oldest person known to have climbed the peak.

Jack Borgenicht of Long Valley, N.J., reached the 14,410-foot summit Aug. 30, on his third attempt to scale the peak, said Jennifer Herzog of Rainier Mountaineering Inc.

Borgenicht ran out of energy on his first attempt last summer, and was beaten back by bad weather three weeks ago, Herzog said.

Borgenicht made the climb with RMH guides Alex Van Steen and Ken Kambis.

Dec Molenaar, a Mount Rainier historian, said the oldest person to climb the mountain had been Julius Boehm, an Issaquah chocolate maker, who was 80 when he reached the summit in 1978.

Business backs Crapo; nurses endorse Clinton-Gore

The Associated Press

Republican Michael Crapo picked up endorsements from two business groups Monday in his campaign for Idaho's 2nd Congressional District seat.

Crapo said "My record as a representative of the Idaho chapter of the National Federation of Independent Business, and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce backed Crapo over Democratic state Auditor J.D. Williams.

"These endorsements are important to working people," Crapo said. "My record is one of fighting for jobs and a strong economy here in Idaho. It's good to see it recognized on a national level."

Crapo

Williams

Both candidates support fiscally conservative policies.

But Pete Skamser of the National Federation of Independent Businesses, which represents 7,200 small businesses statewide, said Crapo's service in the Legislature made the difference.

"When you look at Mike's record, it's very, very strong," Skamser said, also praising the Idaho Falls lawyer's accessibility to business interest groups. "Mike does things; it's established."

Crapo is president pro tem of the Idaho Senate.

In response to the endorsements, Williams said Monday that Crapo's approach to balancing the federal budget was unrealistic. He said the GOP nominee has advocated eliminating the deficit in five years even though he has specifically called for no tax increases.

"No one is suggesting that we can balance the budget in so short a span without serious increases on the revenue side," Williams said. "I'm trying to be realistic about the scope of the problem we face and my opponent continues to spout feel-good rhetoric."

Williams said the key to deficit reduction includes budget cuts along with increasing tax revenue by stimulating the economy with tax incentives for small business, including a reduced capital gains tax rate.

Crapo also supports tax incentives, "But if he (Williams) really believes that's the answer, then why won't he agree not to raise taxes?"

The Republican said a number of studies have shown the budget can be balanced in five years through across-the-board federal budget cuts, a spending freeze, defense cuts proposed by the Bush administration and some program eliminations.

Elsewhere, the Idaho Nurses Association endorsed Democrat Bill Clinton for president. The Arkansas governor and his running mate, Tennessee Sen. Al Gore, also have been endorsed by the American Nurses Association.

Barbara Allerton, president of the Idaho group, said Monday that the support came after a careful comparison of the Clinton-Gore and Bush-Quayle health-care plans with "Nursing's Agenda for Health Care Reform."

Pocatello police investigate shooting

POCATELLO — Pocatello police are continuing their investigation of a motel shooting in which Clarence "Ted" Amos Jones was killed. Capt. Lynn Harris said Jones, 33, Pocatello, was found dead at the Bidwell Motel about 1:40 a.m. Sunday. Police were called there by a man who was living in the room where Jones' body was found. His name was not released today.

Harris said Jones died from gunshot wounds. He declined to call the shooting a homicide or to name a suspect. Jones and the other individual had a continuing disagreement over a girlfriend, Harris said. Police were aware of the situation because they had previous contact with the two over their dispute.

He declined to discuss the nature of those altercations.

Sunday collision near Boise injures 5

BOISE — Five people were injured when two cars collided on Franklin Road near Boise.

Police said the accident occurred Sunday morning when a car driven by Boisen Jane Drake, 32, pulled out of a parking lot on Franklin near Black Cat Road. Elizabeth Cumeal, 28, was traveling west on Franklin and collided with Drake's car.

Drake and passengers Alyce Drake, 5, Holly Drake, 4, and Jane Williams, whose age wasn't released, all were taken to St. Alphonsus Regional Medical Center in Boise.

Former Teamster employee sentenced

POCATELLO — A former office employee of Teamsters Union Local 983 in Pocatello was sentenced Sept. 28 in U.S. District Court of Idaho for embezzling union funds.

September 28, 1991, for embezzling $2,814 in union funds between Sept. 5, 1990 and April 15, 1991, said Suzanne Kirchner, district director for the Office of Labor-Management Standards in Seattle, Wash.

Kirchner said restitution had been made. Brod was sentenced to two years probation, four months in home detention, 100 hours community service in lieu of a fine and disclosure of all financial dealings during probation.

Pit bull owner arrested on drug charge

COEUR D'ALENE — The owner of three pit bull terriers that mauled a Coeur d'Alene man and two police officers was arrested the day before with a half pound of marijuana, a criminal complaint states. "It's common for persons associated with the drug culture to have larger vicious pit bulls to protect themselves and their stash," Kootenai County Prosecutor Bill Douglas said.

He would not comment specifically on Michael Joyce of Coeur d'Alene, but based his knowledge of the animals on his "drug trade experience."

Joyce, 44, was charged Sept. 23 with felony controlled substance with intent to deliver. He was released four hours later on his own recognizance. The next day, Joyce was in Sandpoint when his three pit bulls attacked a neighbor's dog and then mauled the owner.

Police and a citizen shot and killed two of the dogs and wounded the third.

A veterinarian destroyed it later that day.

Bone marrow registry nets match

BOISE — Idaho's first bone marrow registry has provided its first transplant match with a recipient unrelated to the donor.

Karen Sines was among the first 600 Boise residents to sign up with St. Alphonsus Regional Medical Center's Bone Marrow Registry last February.

Within the past week, Sines' bone marrow was transplanted into a leukemia patient outside of Idaho.

"We're just ecstatic," Vicki Cole, coordinator of the Bone Marrow Registry at St. Alphonsus, said Monday. "To be the first registry in Idaho, and now to have the first match is really rewarding. I'm especially happy for Karen. She was so thrilled to be able to actually become a donor and give someone hope for the future."

Forest Service plans to seal biking tunnel

WALLACE — Mountain bikers like to cross the St. Paul Tunnel on the Idaho-Montana border, but the subterranean adventure may be over.

Deemed too dangerous for human passage, the Forest Service is planning to seal the abandoned 1.8-mile burrow by spring. The train tunnel starts a scenic descent to Avery, Idaho.

The bikers will try to win the support of the Idaho Tourism Council by taking some members into the tunnel.

The crown jewel of the tours would be through the St. Paul Tunnel and down the gentle grade of the former railroad line over seven trestles and through eight more tunnels to the Wallace-Avery road.

Federal agency OKs wetlands project

BOISE — A wetlands development and restoration project at the upper end of the Palisades Reservoir has been approved.

The environmental assessment to enhance the area, about 2 miles south of Alpine, Wyo. near the Idaho and Wyoming borders, was reviewed by the public and a Finding of No Significant Impact document has been approved by the Bureau of Reclamation's Pacific Northwest Regional Director in Key.

The work began at the beginning of October and is scheduled for completion in the Spring of 1993.

The Bureau of Reclamation said about 90 acres of waterfowl habitat will be constructed by a series of dikes and canals to form shallow ponds. These ponds will remain full throughout the year in contrast to the present situation where wetlands are left dry as the reservoir is drawn down yearly.

Rulings stripping Indian rights affirmed

WASHINGTON — Rulings that have stripped the Western Shoshone Indians of all hunting and fishing rights in Nevada were allowed to stand by the Supreme Court, which made no comment on the case.

The court on Monday rejected arguments that such rights were retained when the federal government paid $26 million to compensate for broken treaties and to extinguish the tribe's title to its former lands. Compiled from wire reports

Logging with health of the land in mind

Horse logger believes 'environmentally friendly' method holds promise of return

BOISE (AP) — Watching Charlie Newell at work is like seeing a scene from the frontier.

Newell is a horse logger, one of only four he knows of in the United States. "As an alternative to scarring hillsides with heavy equipment, the pioneer method is making a modest comeback. It's slower, but easier on the land. "Other loggers think it's crazy, but I like doing it this way," he said. "It's less noisy, you don't smell the diesels and you don't tear the ground up. When we're done, it just looks natural. Except for the stumps, you can't even tell it's been logged."

Newell and his team can log five acres in a little over three days. A diesel Caterpillar, according to Boise Cascade Corp. regional forester Herb Malany, logs two to three acres a day. A Cat uses 25 gallons of diesel fuel a day; Newell's team uses a bale and a half of hay.

"I don't have to charge more because my overhead isn't very high," he said. "The horses eat, I don't."

Newell, 35, is spending the fall logging 80 acres burned in the Porter Creek fire south of Banks. The land belongs to Don Kemper of Boise. Kemper pays Newell for his work and sells the logs to Boise Cascade.

"We talked to some tractor loggers, and the prices were comparable," Kemper said. "I hired these guys because I knew they wouldn't mess up my land. It also seemed a little romantic."

Except for chainsaws, which Newell and helper Richard Fenton use to fell and limb trees, the work is done much as it was a century ago. The harnesses on the 1800-pound Belgians, Duke and Dan, are attached to a set of steel bars called a doubletree. The doubletree is attached to tongs that grip the log. When Newell gives the order, the horses skid the logs downhill.

Duke and Dan have pulled logs weighing over three tons.

"Six years ago (this is his fifth year in the business), I didn't even know how to put on a harness," he said. "I had horses upside down. It was a mess."

He bought the team and learned to run it from Parker Woodall, of Sweet Woodall, 75, used to be a horse logger with the Morrison-Knudsen Co.

When he isn't logging, Newell uses his team to work his farm between Horseshoe Bend and Emmett. Eventually he hopes to raise work horses. A good team, he said, sells for $3,500 to $5,000.

He is convinced that horse logging should be part of Idaho's future as well as its past.

"It hasn't really caught on yet, but they're coming around to it," he said.

"The Forest Service is beginning to set up some horse-logging sales. This country has plenty of places where it's needed. I've done jobs with a Cat where I've knocked over more than I've taken out. This is a lot easier on the land."

Mormon leaders say follow conscience on gaming vote

POCATELLO (AP) — Pocatello Mormon leaders say when Idaho residents vote next month on two-betting-referendums, they should check their consciences.

"That includes looking at the impacts the pastime can have on gamblers and their families..."

"We're more concerned about the innocent victims — the families — than with trying to dictate morality," said Dr. Kert Howard, president of the Mormon church's Pocatello Stake.

"I've talked to people who play lottery and bingo in Idaho and I question whether their family budgets are able to lose $25 or $50 a week through gambling. Owners don't build gambling houses by losing all the time. They're geared toward making a profit from the people who are doing the gambling."

Idaho voters will decide a ballot referendum on Nov. 3 that would prohibit casino gambling.

Shoshone-Bannock tribal leaders have said they want to expand their existing Fort Hall

Reservation bingo operation to include casino-style gambling and that under federal law they have the right to tax and other tribes view it as a possible way of raising money for social services and providing employment.

Howard responded to a Sunday statement by Elder James Faust, a member of the church's Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, that Mormons need to be "tolerant and understanding" of all views on gambling as debate intensifies between now and the election.

"The way I look it is, he didn't tell us whether way to vote, but to study the issue and vote according to our conscience," Howard said.

Pocatello West Stake President Tom Carlyle had a similar understanding of Faust's statement.

"What he's saying — and this is my own interpretation and not necessarily that of the church — is that everybody has their own free agency in their ability to make the right decisions."

New UI dorms stress health

MOSCOW (AP) — The University of Idaho has two new "wellness halls" on its campus.

Twenty-nine men and 37 women are living in Willis-Sweet and McCoy halls, respectively, where the emphasis is on healthy living choices, including a prohibition on alcohol and tobacco and 24-hour "quiet hours."

"There is a tendency to be concerned on the substance-free side of it, not the wellness side," said UI Residential Life Director James Bauer.

"(But) we want to make a more positive emphasis. It's more about lifestyle choices."

The university's two wellness halls are part of a growing number of health and fitness halls at higher education institutions across the country.

Don Essu, one of UI's five new residence directors, said her alma mater, the University of Northern Colorado, had a hard time with its fitness-oriented wellness program in its rookie year, but it became popular thereafter.
