WENDELL — When Tom Selleck dances the "Hokey Pokey" with a group of Japanese baseball players in his current movie, "Mr. Baseball," Larry LaPrise of Wendell gets a bonus on his royalty check.

LaPrise, who will be 80 on Nov. 11, invented the popular dance ditty back in the late 1940s while working as a musician in Sun Valley.

"The reaction to it was fantastic," he said. "It went over big."

As leader of the Ram Trio, also known as the Sun Valley Trio, LaPrise needed a song to loosen up the crowd and get strangers to mix.

"The 'Hokey Pokey' is like a square dance, really," he said. "You turn around. You shake it all about. Everyone is in a circle, and it gets them all involved."

LaPrise said he would get in the middle of the circle and show the dancers what to do.

Fry: Tax hike might follow passage of 1%

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS — An Idaho state tax commissioner predicted Friday that the Legislature will have little choice but to raise taxes next winter if the 1 Percent Initiative passes this fall.

"I've heard a number of legislators say that (they won't attempt to offset the loss in property tax revenue with state revenue if the initiative passes)," Robert Fry said following a speech to a conference on aging at the Turf Club. "But realistically, I think there would be such great pressure from financially strapped school districts that they'll have to do something."

Fry, a member of the four-person commission that administers all areas of state tax equalization and collection, was in town to talk to the conference about the 1 Percent Initiative, the ballot measure that if passed would limit property taxes to 1 percent of market value.

He emphasized that both he and the rest of the tax commission are neutral on the issue.

Alan Dorfstein, a tax policy specialist with the commission, has estimated that the 1 Percent's passage will cost local governments and school districts that depend on property taxes between $114 and $150 million a year.

"Of all the options I've heard, I think broadening the sales tax to include at least some services, or maybe raising it, is the most likely," Fry said.

Idahoans now pay 5 percent sales tax, but many services are exempt.

August trade deficit hits $9M

Exports worst in almost 5 years

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — The nation's trade deficit jumped 23.6 percent in August as U.S. exports posted their sharpest decline in almost five years, the Department of Commerce reported Friday.

The $9 billion trade deficit in August is the largest monthly imbalance in nearly two years and is the fifth monthly decline in the last six months. A Federal Reserve index also reported Friday that industrial production slipped 0.2 percent in September, another sign that the economic recovery is faltering.

Industrial output - C1

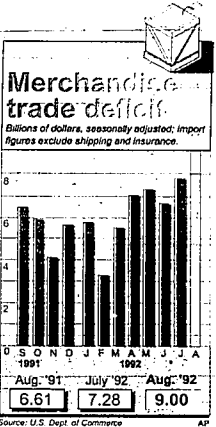

With less than three weeks before the presidential election, the sluggish overseas sales do not help President Bush's efforts to portray increased trade as one of the administration's major economic accomplishments.

In negotiating the North American Free Trade Agreement, Bush repeatedly touted free trade as a key ingredient of a thriving economy.

The August trade deficit was $1.72 billion greater than July. Financial analysts had predicted an increase of only $120 million. But exports fell 6.1 percent in August, to $35.5 billion, while imports dropped just 0.6 percent to $44.5 billion.

Over the last three years, export growth has generally outpaced increases in imports, slowly chipping away at a trade imbalance that has dogged the nation for over a decade. Overseas sales contributed about 70 percent of the nation's economic growth since 1989.

The import levels, however, were mainly a reflection of weak consumer demand during recession. In the last six months, the trend has reversed, as apparent increases in consumer demand have pushed imports higher.

Economists voiced mixed opinions about what the sharp rise in the deficit portended for economic recovery.

"It's disturbing," said David Kotler, economist of Data Resources Inc. "It raises the risk that exports can't lead the recovery, and that we will have to do it ourselves."

Quayle: Bush will hit in the clutch

The Associated Press

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. — Vice President Dan Quayle pounded away at Bill Clinton's character Friday and turned to baseball imagery to predict a dramatic comeback to overtake the Democratic frontrunner.

Reactions to debate No. 2 - A4

"We're the Atlanta Braves and when we get to the bottom of the ninth inning and it's two outs, we're going to score another run and we're going to win," Quayle told 1,500 cheering supporters at Fayetteville Technical Community College.

The Braves won the National League playoffs with just such a comeback on Wednesday.

Here in this military town that is home to the 82nd Airborne, Quayle recalled taking basic training for two months at Fort Bragg in 1969 and invoked memories of the Persian Gulf War.

"Can you imagine what would have happened if Bill Clinton had been president?" he said. "Do you really trust Bill Clinton?" he asked. The crowd shouted "No!"

Local Republicans fretted that Bush had failed to Hey Dirk, can you spare a buck?

IDAHO FALLS — Boise Mayor Dirk Kempthorne, who's waging a million dollar campaign for Idaho's U.S. Senate seat, saw the cost of the effort go up $1 here.

Amid much hoopla, his campaign bus pulled into GOP election headquarters late Thursday afternoon.

The top GOP officials were greeted by reporters, local party loyalists — and a few local vagabonds from the Snake River Greenbelt across the street.

A man on a bike pedaled up to Kempthorne, shook hands, listened to his pitch and then said, "I was wonderin' if you could spare a dollar?" he said.

Kempthorne paused for a moment, then stuck a hand deep into a pocket of his jeans and pulled out, among other little items, what appeared to be his last, crumpled dollar bill.

He gave it to the man.

"You going to get something to eat?" Kempthorne asked.

The man assured him he would. "Dorito chips."

Ex-judge heads Iraq loan probe

The Baltimore Sun

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration's top legal official named a former federal judge Friday to investigate possible government wrongdoing in the scandal over billions of dollars in U.S.-backed loans to Iraq in the years before the Persian Gulf War.

Attorney General William P. Barr continued to resist demands by Democrats in Congress that he hand the entire affair over to a special prosecutor outside the Justice Department, choosing instead to keep the inquiry within the department for the time being.

The move did next to nothing to satisfy Capitol Hill critics of the administration's handling of the scandal. House Judiciary Committee chairman Jack Brooks, D-Texas, for example, denounced Barr's new appointee as "a fig leaf of an investigator."

More widely, Senate Agriculture Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., said the action

Weather summary

The National Weather Service in Boise says mid- and high level cloudiness has covered Idaho but no precipitation has been reported.

Ovenight low temperatures Friday were on the chilly side again with readings generally in the 20s to mid-30s. The cold spot in the state was at St. Anthony, in eastern Idaho, which had a low of 9 degrees.

Winds across the state were light. No precipitation was reported during the past 24 hours.

The cloudiness over the state will decrease as a ridge of high pressure builds over Idaho. This will bring a sunny and warmer day Saturday. However, a storm system off the west coast will move into Idaho on Sunday with a chance of rain and snow in the higher mountains. The weather will remain unsettled through at least mid-week as a strong westerly airflow aloft brings a series of storm systems from the Pacific inland into Idaho.

The warmest temperature in the state Friday was 75 degrees at Hagerman. St. Anthony reported the coldest at 9 degrees.

Pokey

while the other two members of his trio would play the music.

As people gathered around, hopped on one foot and bumped rear ends, LaPrise would sing, "You put your right foot in, you put your right foot out, you put your right foot in, and you shake it all about. You do the 'Hokey Pokey' and you turn yourself around. That's what it's all about."

The other verses call for the left foot, then elbows, hips, front side, backside and whole self, in and out and all about.

"Then you get on your knees and slap the floor and the song ends with, 'That's what it's all about,'" LaPrise said. "People got a big laugh out of it."

The idea for the song came from a similar song LaPrise's father used to sing in French.

"It goes back a long ways. It's been handed down over the years," LaPrise said. "We just put English words to it and changed the tune to suit the group."

At the urging of friends, LaPrise and the other two members of his trio, Charley Mason and Taft Baker, who have since both died, went to Salt Lake City and recorded the "Hokey Pokey" in 1949.

"I didn't take off like a wildfire, but people liked it," LaPrise recalled. Then, it was back to work as usual.

Sun Valley was a great place to have a job back in those early days, said LaPrise, who was a maintenance man at the resort from 1939 to 1965.

The Union Pacific Railroad Co. owned the resort and made it a popular place for movie stars to be seen and photographed. For years, national magazines and newspapers ran pictures of famous people in Sun Valley, and the resort became famous.

When the resort was first opened, agents for the railroad company scouted musicians from all over the country.

LaPrise was found in his hometown of Detroit, Mich., where he was a solo act, but he was recruited by the railroad company player Charley Mason and bass player Taft Baker, and the talented three were given a contract and free train tickets to Idaho.

Moving his wife, Donna, and the first two of their six children to Ketchum meant a $10 a week raise for LaPrise, who jumped at the chance to make such good money. Home for them was at Bald Mountain Hot Springs Hotel when Ketchum was only two blocks long.

"We were one of three house bands in Sun Valley for many years," LaPrise said. "Harl Smith played in the Duchin Room with a seven-piece band, and the Johnny Lister Trio played at Trail Creek Cabin and at the ice shows."

"We played in the Ram. It was less formal, kind of loose, there."

UP had a 500-passenger "ski train" for the rich and famous that ran from Los Angeles directly to Ketchum. Often on board was LaPrise and his Sun Valley Trio, dressed in Tyrolen alpine outfits, singing in three part harmony with a guitar, an accordion, and an upright bass.

"We didn't need amplification; so we were totally mobile. We could play anywhere," he said. "We played on the train, on sleigh rides, on the ski mountain, just anywhere."

The trio played show tunes of Cole Porter, George Gershwin and Irving Berlin as Lucy and Desi dined. Ann Southern sang along and Dan Daley danced a soft shoe to "Tea For Two" without spilling a drop of his martini.

When the Janns Corporation bought out UP in 1964, LaPrise and the Sun Valley Trio, LaPrise said, explaining, "They weren't too impressed with our style of music."

The trio played at a few other places, including George Kay's lounge in Twin Falls, but eventually disbanded. LaPrise gave up his guitar and took a job at the post office in Ketchum for eight years, then retired. He and Donna moved to Wendell to take care of their handicapped daughter, Shelly, and also to live next to their daughter, Linda Ruby.

Through the years, the "Hokey Pokey" has been a standard song at elementary schools nationwide to teach young children some human anatomy as they dance and sing.

Last year, when the "Hokey Pokey" was used on a Jello commercial with Bill Cosby, the royalty check LaPrise received from Acuff-Rose Publishing Co. had a pleasant bonus. The guitar man smiles but won't say how much.

LaPrise wrote a few other dance songs, but none of them ever drew people together and made them laugh the way the "Hokey Pokey" did.

"It's just one of those things that kind of happened," LaPrise said. "We had a lot of fun with it."

Tax

"Depending upon how much you want to tax, you could theoretically just about double the amount (of sales tax) the state collects now, but I think that's very unlikely," he said.

Idaho collected $336 million in sales taxes during the last fiscal year, about 10 percent of all state revenue.

Of total state and local tax revenue, 31 percent comes from property taxes and 25 percent from sales tax.

Fry, a former rancher and Republican state legislator from Hensehles Bend, told the conference that Idaho property taxes rank 19 percent below the national average and that the state's sales taxes are about 3.5 percent below the national norm.

Overall, he said, Idahoans pay 4.3 percent less in taxes than the average American.

Although the 1 Percent Initiative would cap property taxes, in effect it would mean that many of Idaho's 1,000 taxing districts — mostly in rural areas — would be able to tax much less than 1 percent, he said.

That's because many taxing districts in Idaho overlap, and under Idaho law tax districts must levy uniformly — one levy per district.

"Take the example of Camas County, which consists of just two tax code areas — Fairfield and the rest of the county," Fry said. "Both areas levy taxes for the county, the school district, the library and the highways, and Fairfield levies city taxes."

"Right now Fairfield levies about 2 percent. That would be cut in half, if the initiative passes," he continued. "But because the city of Fairfield's percentage, which would be about four-tenths of 1 percent, could not be levied outside the city limits, in effect rural Camas County's levies would be capped at about six-tenths of 1 percent."

State GOP Chairman Jack Hawke said that Bush needs to take the gloves in Monday's final debate, or it will be too late.

But Quayle shrugged off

Thursday night's gentlemanly discourse.

"I've got over two weeks. That's a long time in politics," Quayle said in Raleigh as he embarked on a 160-mile campaign bus ride through eastern North Carolina.

At a brief stop in little Kenly, Quayle said people "were encouraging him to keep up the fight."

"I'm going to hang in there and I'm going to keep telling it like it is," he said.

In Rocky Mount, Quayle told 2,000 supporters, "Bill Clinton has lost right he wants to change the character of the presidency. That's one thing we don't want to change."

"Does not go far enough."

The "BNL" scandal (the initials are for an Italian bank, Banca Nazionale del Lavoro) involves a myriad of acts of alleged wrongdoing in loans through BNL's Atlanta branch bank to Iraq, and in the Bush administration's handling of a criminal case based on those allegedly illegal loans.

Critics charge the loans were used to finance Iraq's massive military buildup right up until the beginning of the Persian Gulf war.

Cries of an official "coverup" — by the Justice Department, the Central Intelligence Agency, and possibly others — are coming regularly from congressional Democrats.

The attorney general insisted at a press conference here that there still is no indication of wrongdoing within his department, but said he felt it necessary "in the current politically charged environment" to have someone "independently examine this entire matter."

Candidates prepare for final debate

Bush, Clinton make references to Yogi Berra

The Associated Press

Bill Clinton and President Bush each invoked the wisdom of baseball great Yogi Berra on Friday, one to caution against overconfidence, the other to summon visions of a stirring comeback in the race for the White House.

"Listen, it's not over till it's over," the front-running Clinton said, exhorting supporters to keep up their struggle for 2½ more weeks.

Said Bush, lagging in the polls: "It ain't over till the last batter swings. We're going to surprise the pundits, annoy the media and hit a home run on Nov. 3."

Berra — not on any ticket this fall — once said "It ain't over till it's over."

Bush and Clinton and Ross Perot headed into a weekend of politicking and preparation in advance of Monday night's third and final presidential debate of the campaign, with the polls pointing to a possible Democratic landslide and the economy delivering a double dose of bad economic news.

Vice President Dan Quayle took a fresh blast at the Democratic would-be president as he campaigned in North Carolina. America "might become the mockery of the world if we elect Bill Clinton," he said, underscoring the Republican campaign attack line that the Arkansas governor can't trustworthy enough for the White House.

With two presidential debates down and one to go, Democrats exulted that Clinton's lead appeared steady in the polls at 10 to 15 points. His schedule called increasingly for emphasis on helping Democratic congressional candidates, the better to build a mandate for a Clinton administration.

Bush made a late afternoon appearance in New Jersey, one of a string of battleground states where he trails Clinton.

His vice president campaigned by bus through North Carolina, telling crowds that "character is an issue in this race" regardless of what Clinton says.

It was a Bush barb over Clinton's anti-war activities during Vietnam that prompted a questioner in Thursday night's debate to tell the candidates to stay on the issues.

"I think the people sent him a message," Clinton said hoarsely on the morning after the debate. "They said to all of us, we want you to talk about us, our problems, and our opportunities. We don't want you to talk about each other."

The economy was at the root of Bush's problems, and not giving him much cause for optimism.

The government announced that the trade deficit surged dramatically in August to its worst level in nearly two years. At the same time, industrial production fell for the third time in the past four months, further evidence of a continuing economic slump.

Clinton told reporters he was studying the possibility of speeding federal spending on highways and other projects as a way to "bump this economy" out of its doldrums.

Highlights from the campaign

By The Associated Press

- THE CANDIDATES:
- GEORGE BUSH: Campaigning in New Jersey. The president spoke at Middlesex County College billed by his campaign as a victory rally celebrating his performance in the presidential debates.
 - BILL CLINTON and AL GORE: In Louisiana, joined a Congressional Black Caucus bus tour seeking black voters.
 - ROSS PEROT: Headed back to Dallas after Thursday's debate.
 - DAN QUAYLE: Said in North Carolina that there's still time for Bush to overtake Clinton, and he suggested that "America might become the mockery of the world" if the Democrats win.

NEWS OF NOTE:

- After Thursday night's debate, a mixup sent reporters a memo from Bush campaign spin doctors that was designed to help supporters stir enthusiasm for the president's performance. "Call your local political reporter and give the spin," said the memo accidentally sent into a number of newsrooms.

- UPCOMING ON TV:
- The last presidential debate will be Monday at Michigan State University in East Lansing. PBS, ABC, CBS, NBC, FOX, CNN and C-SPAN will carry the event live at 7 p.m. EDT. C-SPAN will rebroadcast it at 9:30 p.m. and 12 p.m. Tuesday. CNN will re-broadcast it at 12:30 a.m. Tuesday.
 - Gore will appear on an MTV "Choose or Lose" forum on Wednesday at 10 p.m. EDT.
 - TODAY'S STOPS:
 - Bush: Washington, D.C. with no public events.
 - Clinton: Detroit and Ypsilanti, Mich.
 - Gore: Tallahassee and Jacksonville, Fla.
 - Quayle: Dallas and Tyler, Texas.
 - Perot: No stops planned.

San Francisco region feels effects of quake 3 years later

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Don't be fooled by the fact that the 1989 Loma Prieta earthquake remains the most powerful quake to strike the city since the Oct. 17 quake that killed 63 people and caused $10 billion in losses, some of which are still being recovered and repaired.

Many people still remember the 7.1-magnitude quake that toppled 70 miles of highways and ripped up roads up to coastal Santa Cruz.

San Francisco Bay area is somewhat recovering and is just about to get back to normal.

After 10 months of operations and with two more scheduled, Scarpia, 40, can walk and is just about to get back to normal.

After 10 months of operations and with two more scheduled, Scarpia, 40, can walk and is just about to get back to normal.

Since the earthquake and then the fire that destroyed thousands of homes in the Oakland hills last Oct. 20, 4,000 residents have taken emergency training courses. Oakland voters this year passed a $50 million bond measure to improve emergency preparedness.

Oakland's Office of Emergency Services has 10 full-time employees. San Francisco has budgeted for three — two of them new this year.

"The rest of the state considers this a joke," said retired Adm. John Bittorf, who says he is trying to be pretty positive about it. "I don't think we're doing as well as we should be."

Unions study sale of Oakland Tribune

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Labor unions are studying the possibility of buying the Oakland Tribune newspaper.

The union is set to set out its own deal with the Tribune's owners.

The U.S. Justice Department also is studying the sale.

The Tribune's owners, who publish the paper in the east San Francisco Bay area, have said the 630 employees will be applied for an estimated $250 million.

The Tribune is the only black-owned newspaper in the metropolitan area, struggling for more than 10 years since its founding in 1858.

Local media reports have put the newspaper's sale price at $10 million or more.

Although the price wasn't disclosed, Alameda said it would pay off $9.5 million in loans made or guaranteed to Maynard by the Freedom Forum.

The loans from the Arlington, Va.-based non-profit media foundation saved the Tribune from closing 14 months ago.

The agreement left Maynard with a variety of debts, including more than $600,000 owed to the Northern California Newspaper Guild pension fund, Wallace said.

Schwartz said. "One, it provides a way for the paper to be published and, two, many employees will be hired."

Northern California Newspaper Guild President Bill Wallace said it was too soon to say what would happen.

"The facts are not very clear right now," he said, adding that a decision by the unions was probably weeks away.

The Alameda Newspaper Group bought the Tribune's trademark, name, circulation lists and advertising accounts, but not its equipment or landmark downtown office tower.

Local media reports have put the newspaper's sale price at $10 million or more.

Editorial writers give opinions about debate

Knight-Ridder News Service

LEXINGTON, Ky. — They laughed. Launched at Ross Perot's folksy one-liners, Bill Clinton's witty remarks and President Bush's speaking misadventures.

But for the most part, about 80 editorial writers from across the United States and Canada listened intently as they watched Thursday night's presidential debate on a wide-screen television in a bar at Lexington's Hyatt Regency Hotel.

The National Conference of Editorial Writers' annual convention is in Lexington, and most of the attendees were parked in front of the TV screen

Thursday night. The writers, a decidedly liberal lot, and the papers, whose owners are often conservative, will soon be telling Americans which candidate to choose.

Here's how Thursday night's debate colored their views:

• Don Harrison, Philadelphia Daily News, which endorsed Clinton: "Bush has fallen on his face again tonight. Bill Clinton has done OK. Ross Perot has rambled on too much."

• Jim Strang, The Plain Dealer, Cleveland:

"I think flat out Perot won it. I think Perot could still be a factor in this race."

• Bill Mansfield, Tallahassee (Fla.) Democrat:

"Clinton clearly has the clearest program. The president has been the most embarrassing with his answers. They are simplistic things that don't work. Perot's a lot of comic relief, but he's got an economic plan that most economists say won't work."

• Larry Evans, Freedom Lance-Star, Fredericksburg, Va.: responding to Bush saying he wants to strengthen the death penalty:

"I'd like to see what Bush is going to do about the death penalty. Is he going to hang 'em first and then electrocute 'em?"

• Ron Rederson, Dallas Morning News, a paper that has endorsed Bush: "I think the American people win when they see people like themselves asking questions." • Caroline Brewer, The Journal-Gazette, Fort Wayne, Ind.: "Nothing new came out of the debate."

Mother outraged at topless woman in children's puzzle

NASHUA, N.H. (AP) — When Eileen Godfrey started looking for Waldo, she never expected to find him on a beach with a topless bather.

The mother of two said she was outraged when she spotted a topless woman in "Where's Waldo on the Beach?"

"I just never expected this in a children's puzzle," she said. "How can they say 'for ages 5 to 12' and put a naked woman on it?"

The popular "Where's Waldo?" series of books, puzzles and other merchandise encourages children to find hidden figures in crowded scenes.

In the puzzle purchased by Godfrey, a topless female sunbather is doused with cold water and rises up on one arm, exposing her breasts.

Godfrey, 32, said after finding the figure, she consulted with her husband, but the puzzle out of their 5-year-old daughter and 10-year-old son, and called the store where she bought the book.

"It's very small, but the woman was definitely sunbathing topless," said Doug Rogers, operations manager at BJ's Wholesale Club, which pulled the Waldo puzzles from its shelves. "We responded seriously to the complaint."

London artist Martin Handford, Waldo's creator, could not immediately be reached for comment Friday. His phone was busy.

Two other people complained about the puzzle last year, said Pat Duncan, president of Great American Puzzle Factory of South Norwalk, Conn.

Company officials used a magnifying glass to study the figure, she said. "I consider it very innocent, hardly pornographic. If anyone wants to watch TV, they'd really get shocked," Duncan said.

Central California farm town struggles to survive problems

LINDSAY, Calif. (AP) — Rebounding from the edge of economic ruin is nothing new to this farm town, where half the workers lost their jobs when a freeze wiped out the orange crop two years ago.

Now, just as suddenly, Lindsay's 8,600 residents are trying to weather another economic disaster that could bankrupt the city government.

City officials fear last month's loss of 350 jobs from the closure of Lindsay Olive Growers, the city's largest employer, could push the unemployment rate to 35 percent.

"It may be as big a disaster as the freeze. It could turn this town into a ghost town," said Ron Cain, a car salesman.

The 311-member cooperative, once the world's largest olive processor, had lost more than $18 million in the past three years. After months of fruitless negotiations to sell, it closed its plant Sept. 18. Rival Bell-Carter Foods Inc. later purchased the "Lindsay" label and its inventory but will process olives at its own plant in another county.

But that's not the only problem Lindsay Olives left behind.

The city is scrambling to avoid being stuck with the cost of cleaning up 200 acres of sewage treatment ponds tainted by decades of salty discharge from the cooperative.

State water regulators had ordered the city and the cooperative to clean up the ponds and city officials fear they'll be stuck with the bill now that Lindsay Olives has closed. The state's water board is scheduled to meet Oct. 23 to discuss the cleanup orders in light of the city's hardship.

Long-term costs could run $30 million for a city with a yearly budget of about $1 million.

"It's sudden and pretty devastating. There's some tough, tough times coming," said Mayor John Maynard. Those cleanup costs are astronomical, and our candid answer is: We don't have the money. We'd bankrupt ourselves."

In addition, the city lost a $2.6 million lawsuit filed by farmers whose underground irrigation water was tainted by the salty ponds.

The city also will need to replace $900,000 that Lindsay Olives paid each year to help maintain the ponds and reduce the smell.

The farming community 150 miles north of Los Angeles has appealed to state and federal agencies for help.

"We've been left holding the bag, and if the state pushes it, we'll go bankrupt," said Assistant City Manager Scot Townsend. "Then all of this would fall on the county and ultimately back on the state."

The fiscal woes hit just as Lindsay was gearing up for its first lucrative orange harvest since a freeze ruined most of the fruit crop just before Christmas 1990.

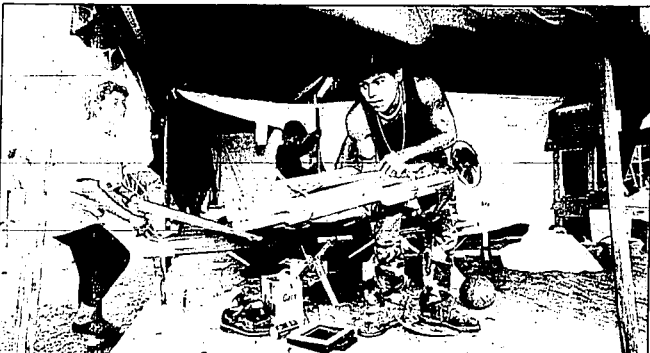

The olive plant's demise also followed the loss of 140 jobs from the shutdown last spring of United Cable, a telephone cable manufacturer and Lindsay's third-largest employer.

Biggest tent city dismantled at Homestead, Fla.

Residents move to mobile homes, other camps

HOMESTEAD, Fla. (AP) — The largest and most visible tent city built for homeless victims of Hurricane Andrew was dismantled today, and its last 600 residents were moved to mobile homes and other camps.

Belinda Sheldon, who lived at Harris Field with her husband and two children, said the move into a mobile home provided by the government wasn't soon enough for her.

"At least I'll have a place now that I can call home," she said.

The expense of operating the encampment fell on the city after the departure of Marines who built it and provided maintenance and other services. The troops took down their tents and pulled out Wednesday.

The camp had 653 residents this morning, down from a peak of 1,250 shortly after the Harris Field tent city opened Sept. 2. Officials said the resettlement effort would take at least the rest of the day.

The sprawling camp, located in a city park called Harris Field, was the largest of five erected for the hurricane victims. Its 108 tents for civilians and a 35 for the Marines became a symbol of the huge rescue effort and was backdropped for the visits of Vice President Dan Quayle, singer Paul Simon and, late Thursday, former heavyweight champion Larry Holmes.

The self-contained city had a barber shop, a day care center and a stage for nightly entertainment. But residents had to contend with chemical toilets, communal showers and ravenous mosquitoes.

"These mosquitoes down here are big," said Marine Sgt. John D. Berry, who was stationed at the field.

Camp life was a strain for strangers thrown together after losing their homes and often their jobs.

"Everyone tried their hardest," said Sheldon. "At least everybody had a roof over our heads."

Two other smaller camps remain open. Officials said they had no timetable for dismantling them.

Harris Field was sealed off at curfew Thursday night and its residents awakened today at 5 a.m. by Federal Emergency Management Agency officials, checking to make sure that each one had a place to move.

"We are committed as FEMA not to leave anybody sleeping on the streets," agency official Frank Teixeira told a planning meeting Thursday.

But some residents said today they felt forgotten.

"This stinks what they're doing to us right now," said Frank Spurling, who moved in just after the hurricane. "It's enough what we're going through already. Now they're making us go through it again."

He said he was scrambling for another place to live after FEMA lost his application for a mobile home. Officials said he would be moved to another tent city.

Gunman was angry about child support

WATKINS' GLEN, N.Y. (AP) — County employees gathered today to talk with counselors, learning to deal with the grief of having four co-workers gunned down by a man angry over a child support dispute.

John T. Miller, 50, who committed suicide after killing the women, had fought authorities for 22 years over support for a girl he denied was his daughter. He apparently reached the breaking point when part of his paycheck was withheld last week, co-workers in Ohio said.

He traveled to this rural New York town about 140 miles southwest of Buffalo, and on Thursday killed four employees in the Schuylter County Department of Social Services support collection unit, officials said.

Workers attended closed-door counseling meetings in the same office complex where the workers were killed. Local schools were closed for the day, too.

"At first I heard a chair fall and the sound of someone getting thrown against a wall," said Stacey Horton, who was in another office on the same floor. "Then I heard shouts of, 'There's a gun! There's a gun!'"

"After about four shots a worker grabbed us and shoved us into a room," said Lisa Kaizer, who was in the same office as Horton. "Then we heard the rest of the shots. People were screaming and running into other rooms and shutting doors." She said she heard seven shots.

"He said he had hurt the people that he'd come to hurt for ruining his life, and he was going to kill himself," said Deputy A.J. Foote, one of five officers who confronted Miller just before he shot himself. "He said there's nobody that could help him and he didn't want to go back to jail."

It was unclear how much Miller owed in support payments for the now-grown child.

Mary Stout of Corning, N.Y., identified by a newspaper as the child's mother, said Miller fled the state 26 years ago when she became pregnant with her daughter, Stella.

"I'm sorry about all those people," Stout told The Democrat and Chronicle and Times-Union of Rochester. "But he is Stella's father and he had a responsibility to help take care of her. That's all there is to it."

Stout told the newspaper she went to court to force Miller to make payments, but the only assistance she ever received was a $20 bill he mailed, she said. She saw him once after that, when Stella was about 5, and called the Schuylter County sheriff's department. In 1970, deputies arrested Miller for non-support — the first of several times.

Report: City officials weren't prepared for L.A. riots

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A special panel will blame poor planning and slow reaction by city officials for failure to contain the arson and looting that raged through the city during the riots, a newspaper reported.

The five-month study by former FBI Director William H. Webster and Hubert Williams, president of the national Police Foundation, is expected to offer broad criticism of the city's response to the riots, the Los Angeles Times reports in today's editions.

The Times cited unidentified sources close to the panel in describing the nearly completed report, which is expected to be released next week. Both Mayor Tom Bradley and former Police Chief Daryl Gates, a longtime political foe of Bradley's, were singled out for criticism, the newspaper said.

"There was a lack of effective planning... a failure of anyone to really take responsibility," the newspaper quoted one source as saying.

The inquiry was ordered by the city Police Commission after widespread criticism that the LAPD response was slow and chaotic as violence erupted after four police officers charged with beating Rodney King were acquitted on all but one charge April 29.

Restaurant break-in ends in tragedy, intruder dies

Fort Lauderdale Sun-Sentinel

RIVIERA BEACH, Fla. — On Oct. 1, the owner of a Riviera Beach restaurant walked in on more than a mess in his kitchen. Sticking out of the vent above the grill at Chris and Don's were the legs of 31-year-old Christopher VanHorn.

Trapped in the chimney and trying to get free, VanHorn had kicked a propane line. He died of asphyxiation. The grease that was funny was now the gas that was not. The amusing break-ins may have come to a tragic end.

"I was scared for my restaurant and didn't want it to happen again," says James Teng of the China Inn, which was broken into in September. "But not wish to see anyone die."

The police aren't sure if VanHorn was connected to the earlier break-ins. "This guy didn't even have a car," says Sgt. Michael Palladino of the Riviera Beach Police. "We think he just read about the other break-ins in the paper or something and decided to give it a try."

Police in Jupiter think he was at least one of the cooking crew. "There may be others involved," says Lt. Tony Perez. "But the method of operation points to this guy. All the break-ins were done this way."

They still don't know much about VanHorn. He seemed to have addresses in both Riviera Beach and Jupiter. "And we have some information that he may have worked in restaurants," Perez says. "That would explain a lot."

To catch a thief, offer a freebie

RACINE, Wis. (AP) — TV viewers who called a toll-free number last week to get a free T-shirt instead found themselves in trouble with the cable company.

Racine TeleCable had scrambled the Sci Fi Channel signal so the only viewers who got it were those with illegal decoding equipment, said system general manager Kevin Anthony.

TeleCable periodically ran a phone number across the screen for viewers to call for a free T-shirt. But the number rang in the company's offices, Anthony said.

The test nabbed at least six cable pirates, he said. TeleCable crews disconnected the cheaters and placed "traps" to prevent them from receiving cable channels without paying.

Bosnian troops block road to airport to stop Serbs

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Troops of Bosnia's Muslim-led government blockaded a key lifeline to Sarajevo on Friday, saying rebel Serbs had tried to advance along the road by using U.N. aid convoys as cover.

U.N. officials said closing the airport road violated an agreement by Bosnia's warring ethnic factions on allowing emergency food into the besieged capital.

A Muslim general warned that his soldiers would fire on any U.N. troops he tried to clear the road. But the two sides agreed late Friday to examine an alternate route Saturday.

Meanwhile, many people in Sarajevo were heartened by the brief restoration of running water and electricity to parts of the city. But new shelling shut down the power supply just hours after it was restored.

In Belgrade, the capital of Serbia and the shrunken Yugoslav federation, federal President Dobrica Cosic strongly criticized Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic and urged his one-time protégé to resign. Milosevic has been accused by many Western nations of fomenting warfare in Bosnia and is blamed by domestic critics for the U.N. trade sanctions imposed on Yugoslavia.

In Geneva, U.N. officials said talks would begin with Bosnian Serb commanders by the weekend on transferring their combat planes and helicopters out of Bosnia, despite resistance by the rebels' air force chief, Bosnian government forces do not have any aircraft.

The U.N.-Bosnian dispute began Thursday, when government troops put a container across the main road linking the airport to the city center. The road was used to move essential supplies brought in by an international airlift for Sarajevo's residents, who have been besieged by Serbs for months.

Overland convoys from Croatia also use the road. In Zagreb, Croatia, U.N. officials said the blockade forced a 10-truck convoy carrying 88 tons of relief supplies to be rerouted from Sarajevo to the nearby town of Vitez.

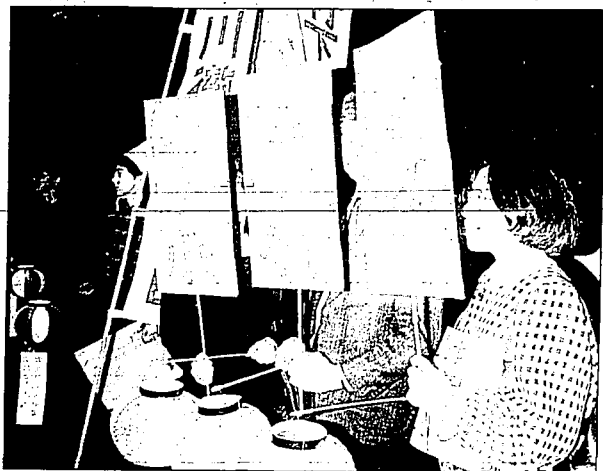

Gen. Mustafa Hajralahovic, the commander of the Bosnian army's 1st corps, said Serb tanks twice followed U.N. convoys in an attempt to seize territory in the west of the city.

"We are forced to defend ourselves," he said. "We must block this road."

He said he would remove the roadblock only if U.N. officials "can guarantee me that the enemy is not going to use this road."

Hajralahovic said if U.N. soldiers tried to remove the barricade, "they would be treated the same as Chetnik forces" — a derogatory term used by Muslims and Croats to refer to Serb fighters.

If the Serbs captured the main overpass on the road, Bosnian troops in the suburbs of Stup and Otes would be isolated.

Gorbachev attends funeral

Los Angeles Times

MOSCOW — Should anyone doubt how fleeting the honors of this world are, consider the most recent twists of fate in the life and reputation of the 1990 Nobel Peace Prize laureate, Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev.

The former Soviet president flew out of Moscow Friday afternoon on a commercial flight to attend the funeral in Berlin of yet another Nobel Peace winner, former West German Chancellor Willy Brandt. Most probably, Gorbachev was glad to go, even if it was to attend the burial of a friend.

For only a few hours before takeoff, yet more anti-Gorbachev charges were filling the Russian media. The think tank on Moscow's Leningradsky Prospekt that he led has now been accused of tax fraud and cooking the books on a massive scale.

According to the weekly publication Arguments and Facts, Yuri Danilevsky, head of financial inspection for the Russian Finance Ministry, has charged after an audit that the Gorbachev Foundation dodged payments to state of at least — 7.2 million rubles, or about $22,500, in the first quarter of 1992.

Danilevsky said that although the supposed non-profit foundation reported losses, it actually made the equivalent of $70,000 in profits. Through bookkeeping gymnastics, the government auditing said, the foundation did not pay profit taxes or a value-added tax of $119,000 on its hotels and subleases.

The image of Gorbachev as an alleged tax deadbeat was just the latest indignity suffered by the former Kremlin leader, who has already had 75,000 of the $5,000 square feet occupied by his foundation seized by the Russian government. He also had his passport impounded; although an exception was made to allow him to attend the rites for Brandt.

Earlier this week, the head of Constitutional Court called Gorbachev a liar in everything but name. And his old nemesis, Russian President Boris N. Yeltsin, delivered a body blow to Gorbachev's good name by charging that he hid important information about the 1983 shooting down of a Korean passenger plane and the slaughter of more than 21,000 Polish officers by Stalin's secret police in 1940.

Valery D. Zorkin, chairman of the Constitutional Court, has been trying unsuccessfully to force Gorbachev to testify before the tribunal.

Thursday, Gorbachev vehemently denied covering up anything and said that the "special file" he supposedly concealed was actually an entire roomful of 1,500 to 2,000 documents that he could not have possibly read.

Yeltsin's government countered Friday that a memo from Valentin M. Fadin, former chief of the Communist Party's International Department, dated Feb. 22, 1990, and signed by Gorbachev, showed that he was "fully informed" about the massacre of the Poles.

Bank of England cuts key lending rate

LONDON (AP) — The Bank of England cut interest rates to a four-year low of 8 percent Friday, seeking to pull the country back from its worst recession since World War II. The rate cut sent the pound plunging against other major currencies.

British stock prices responded with a strong rally but eased in later trading to finish the day with a modest gain.

Commenting on the move, the central bank's lead, dropping their base lending rates from 9 percent to 8 percent.

Chancellor of the Exchequer Norman Lamont said the rate cut from 9 percent was consistent with the government's anti-inflation objectives. Prime Minister John Major endorsed Lamont's move, saying that it would "help British industry and British families" suffering from the recession.

British interest rates, now the lowest since June 1988, could help encourage companies to invest and save consumers money on mortgages and other credit. That could boost an economy plagued with 10.1 percent unemployment.

The Bank of England last cut interest rates Sept. 22, when it reduced rates to 9 percent from 10 percent. The move came less than one week after Lamont pulled the filling pound out of the European exchange-rate mechanism, a system designed to maintain stability among European currencies.

Lamont said Britain now had "the lowest official interest rates in the European Community and a highly competitive exchange rate."

The pound dropped sharply on foreign exchange markets, ending the day at $1.6545, down from $1.7045 late Thursday. A lower interest rate makes the currency less attractive to foreign investors.

But equity investors were not overly impressed. The Financial Times-Stock Exchange 100-stock index ended the day up 17.3 points, or 0.6 percent, at 2,563.9.

Earlier, the central bank move had pulled the closely-watched stock basket to more than 40 points above Thursday's closing level.

Opposition lawmakers criticized Major's government for doing too little, too late to help the recession-hit economy. Liberal Democrat leader Paddy Ashdown condemned the cut as one taken by a "panic government being driven by panic measures."

British Coal announced Tuesday it would halt production at 31 mines, throwing 30,000 miners out of work, although many of the miners have gotten at least a temporary reprieve from court actions intended to stop the mine closures.

Gunman kills woman in bar

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — A man shot three people in a Belfast hotel bar, killing a 29-year-old woman law student, police said.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility.

The gunman entered a bar at the York Hotel near Queens University and the city center. He shot two women and a man, police said.

Earlier Friday, outside the pro-British "loyalists" extremists nipped the Belfast offices of the Dublin newspaper Sunday World.

Gunmen burst into the newspaper's offices, threatened a receptionist and then ran out leaving an incendiary device behind. Staff fled the office and the army dealt with the device, police said.

The Ulster Volunteer Force claimed responsibility.

The Sunday World has uncovered paramilitary rackets and a confirmed terrorist actions on both sides of Northern Ireland's secular and political battle.

The extremists said newsgatherers who sold the newspaper faced retribution.

Guatemalan Indian wins Nobel for peace

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Rigoberta Menchu, orphaned by civil war in her native Guatemala, was hailed as a "divine symbol of peace and reconciliation" by the committee that awarded the 1992 Nobel Peace Prize to the Indian rights activist Friday.

Detractors, however, including Guatemala's foreign minister, denounced the award and insisted that Menchu (men-CHU) is linked to leftist guerrillas who have mounted a three-decade insurgency in her homeland.

"We are aware that this is a somewhat controversial prize," Norwegian Nobel Committee Chairman Francis Sejersted acknowledged.

But his five-member panel had scrutinized Menchu's background and the conflict in Guatemala, where armed forces have been accused of repressing the Indian population and killing tens of thousands, he said.

"We are convinced that Menchu's politics are marked by reconciliation," he said.

Sejersted said it was no coincidence Menchu was chosen on the 50th anniversary of Christopher Columbus' arrival in the Americas. "I hope one of the effects of the award will be a better understanding of indigenous peoples in America and around the world."

Menchu, 33, has never taken a public stand on the armed struggle in her homeland, the last and longest in Central America. But she told Norwegian television Friday, "I may not share pacifist ideas completely, that man should use violence, also he should, especially when it is war in America."

Menchu fled to Mexico 11 years ago but was visiting her homeland to coordinate commemorations marking five centuries of Indian resistance.

"I see poverty as violence, also the life street children live is a form of violence. Today, I wish my mother and father were here ... It would have brought them joy," she said in the television interview.

"But they are dead. Also that is violence," she said.

Her father, Vicente Menchu, was burned to death in 1980 inside the Spanish Embassy in Guatemala, where he and other peasants were protesting military repression.

Her mother and a 16-year-old brother were killed shortly thereafter, in apparent retaliation for Vicente Menchu's activism.

Menchu said she would use the $1.2 million prize money to set up a fund in her father's name.

Guatemala's foreign minister, Gonzalo Menéndez Park, said Menchu should not have received the prize "because she is tied to certain groups that have endangered Guatemala."

Guatemalan President Jorge Serrano congratulated Menchu, and said "With this recognition she will be able to use the award as authority that the world brings ... in search of a peaceful solution" in her homeland.

Two of Menchu's sisters joined the guerrillas, but although she says she respects their decision, she fled Guatemala for Mexico in 1981 to work for change through political activism.

She rose to international prominence with the 1983 publication of "I Rigoberta," a book translated into 11 languages that recounts Indian persecution as she grew up during the civil war.

Stefo Perez Esquivel of Argentina, winner of the 1988 peace prize, said, "Five hundred years from the arrival of the conquistador, Rigoberta represents the voice of those without a voice, the tireless fight of the original peoples of America for their trampled rights, and the hope of thousands of oppressed women and men."

Rightist security forces are blamed for the deaths of as many as 50,000 Guatemalans, mostly highland Indians, during the anti-leftist campaigns in the 1980s. More than 120,000 people have died in the 30-year-old conflict.

"Today, Rigoberta Menchu stands out as a vivid symbol of peace and reconciliation across ethnic cultural and social dividing lines, in her own country, on the American continent and in the world," the committee said.

Germans pay homage to Brandt

BERLIN (AP) — Thousands of Germans, from the elderly who watched Willy Brandt rise to the pinnacle of West German politics to the young who learned how he helped bridge East and West, filed past his coffin Friday in an emotional farewell.

The world's mighty and once-mighty will gather in Berlin this weekend to attend a state funeral for the former West German chancellor, who dared to flout the conventional geopolitical wisdom of his time and extend a friendly hand to the Soviet bloc.

Friday was the turn for ordinary Germans, many carrying flowers and many in tears, to pay their respects at the catafalque draped with a German flag, more than 10,000 had filed past by late afternoon.

"We thank you, Willy!" shouted one man overcome with emotion. "Sleep well!"

Brandt touched ordinary Germans in many ways, railing against the Berlin Wall and later helping German families divided by the Cold War.

Since his death at age 78 on Oct. 8, the country has been flooded with tributes to the statesman.

"You can just imagine how much this hurts," said 89-year-old Wilma Hahn, a member of Brandt's Social Democratic Party. "We all stuck together like a family."

Germans waited a half hour and more to see Brandt's coffin lying in state inside the Schoenberg City Hall, where he served as mayor of West Berlin from 1957 to 1966.

Dutch say early evidence points to jet design fault

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands (AP) — Early evidence from the crash of a Boeing 747 cargo jet into an apartment building points to a design fault in the engine supports, a Dutch official said Friday.

An estimated 70 people died when the El Al jet hit a suburban apartment building on Oct. 4 after its two right-wing engines tore off.

Frank Wolfswinkel, head of the Dutch Aviation Inspectorate, said metal fatigue in the strut that holds an engine to the wing so far seemed the most likely cause of the crash.

"We have no proof, but no reason to believe this hypothesis is not valid," Wolfswinkel said at a news conference at Schiphol Airport.

He said it did not appear 747 passenger jets were in any danger because they carry lighter loads.

In Seattle, a spokesman for Boeing Co., Jack Gamble, said the company could not comment until it received a copy of Wolfswinkel's findings.

"We need a chance to review it and we need to understand the reasons for what he's saying," Gamble said.

Gamble said Boeing was participating in the crash investigation and that "whatever is necessary to ensure the safety of the fleet is what we're going to support."

Last week, Boeing asked airlines to check the pins that attach engine struts to the wings. The pins are designed to snap when an engine fails mechanically and allow it to break cleanly from the wing.

U.S. Federal Aviation Administration-though he said investigators so far had found only one of the eight pins from the two engines lost before the crash.

His agency said it has warned the U.S. Federal Aviation Administration that the airworthiness "is not guaranteed" for 747 cargo planes carrying Pratt and Whitney engines and having logged more than 6,000 flights.

Palestinian wants PLO out of talks

TUNIS, Tunisia (AP) — A radical Palestinian leader renewed a call Friday for pulling out of peace talks with Israel, saying too many concessions were being granted to the Jewish state.

"It is the future of our people which is at stake ... and giving up any of our rights is only treason," said Abu Ali Mustafa, deputy to George Habash, leader of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine.

Mustafa told the Central Council of the Palestine Liberation Organization that peace talks were leading to "a sellout of Palestine to the Zionist enemy."

Yasser Arafat, chairman of the PLO, listened as Mustafa blasted his policy of pursuing autonomy negotiations with Israel. Arafat is seeking backing from the council, an 80-member monitoring body, to continue participating in the talks, which resume Wednesday in Washington.

The PLO is formally excluded from the talks-at-Israel's insistence, but it was involved in picking the Palestinian delegation and its advisers work with the negotiators.

The Palestinian radicals say that after six rounds of talks, Israel is still rejecting any withdrawal from the West Bank and Gaza Strip after a proposed interim period of self-rule.

They also say the limited form of autonomy envisioned by the Israelis does not go far enough or explicitly include the right of refugees to return home.

Mustafa said he would not ask the council to vote on his pullout call, acknowledging that the radicals could not muster enough votes.

"We are discussing a cause of national destiny ... this is not a rally and the minority should not be put at the mercy of the majority," he said.

Arafat interrupted Mustafa many times to explain the PLO strategy on the talks.

8 try to leave Chinese posts

The Baltimore Sun

BEIJING — China's president, defense minister, parliament head and five other senior leaders will retire from top-level positions within the Chinese Communist Party, a Beijing-backed newspaper in Hong Kong reported Friday.

The retirements currently make up a majority of the party's highest body, its 14-member Politburo. Two of them also sit on the Politburo's Standing Committee, the ultimate decision-making body in China. This range in age from 66 to 85.

With the party holding its national congress this week, the eight have been asked not to be considered for election to the party's Central Committee, from which Politburo seats and other top positions are filled, the Hong Kong report said.

The Wen Wei Po newspaper, controlled by China, often is used by the party to release sensitive news. The party congress is being held privately by and a party congress spokesman here Friday had no comment.

The reportedly impending retirements are in line with expectations that the party congress, held once every five years, will result in a shift to a younger group of party leaders to carry out Chinese senior leader Deng Xiaoping's drive to accelerate China's economic reforms.

"With the passing of time, quite a few comrades are getting advanced in age," the party paper People's Daily commented Friday. "We must have an orderly, steady and normal transition from the old leaders to the new."

The new leadership lineup is expected to be announced here after the party congress ends this weekend.

French officials say leader not ill

BIRMINGHAM, England (AP) — There were reports that French President Francois Mitterrand took ill Friday at a European summit, but French officials said the reports were untrue.

Mitterrand was at lunch and "has a good appetite," his spokesman, Jean Muscielli, told reporters.

Muscielli was interrupted during a briefing and asked about the report carried by the BBC that Mitterrand had been escorted out of the conference center after becoming ill.

Muscielli emphatically denied this, and Mitterrand was later seen by reporters in the conference center.

He said the French president was in good health, despite recent treatment for prostate cancer.

Mitterrand underwent surgery on Sept. 11 and was diagnosed as having prostate cancer.

Campaign will wait for FEC decision

BOISE, (AP) — The campaign of Republican U.S. Senate nominee Dirk Kempthorne has decided to wait for resolution of a federal complaint against it before formally disclosing the receipt of computer equipment from the campaign of retiring GOP Sen. Steve Symms.

A spokesman for the Federal Election Commission said on Friday that could put off a decision for another six months or more. Legal guidance on the question could have been obtained in a fraction of the time — likely before the Nov. 3 election — had the original request been followed up by the Kempthorne camp.

"We have gotten no indication when they would come back and report to us on the next step," campaign manager Phil Reberger said.

The latest federally mandated campaign finance report filed with the Secretary of State's office, covering the period from July 1 through June 30, again made no mention of the computer terminals that Reberger acknowledged in August had been received from the Symms campaign but never accounted for.

Kempthorne Stallings

A computer technician employed by the Kempthorne campaign had identified the source of the equipment the day before.

At the time, campaign spokesman Mark Snider said both the letter and the spirit of the financial disclosure law had been complied with.

The equipment transfer, however, was in addition to the $2,000 contribution; the maximum allowed under federal law, that Symms has already made to the Boise mayor in his race against Democratic Congressman Richard Stallings.

On Aug. 20, in acknowledging the transfer and the occurrence of similar unreported transactions between top Idaho Republican candidates for the past decade, Reberger said the campaign believed the deal was appropriate but had asked for guidance from the Federal Election Commission and would follow it.

But Reberger said that request was abandoned when the campaign was served with the formal complaint filed only days earlier by a state Democratic Party official. Instead, the campaign filed a formal response to the complaint, which alleged Kempthorne was receiving illegal subsidies from the Symms' operation.

Reberger refused to provide a copy of the response, and the commission cannot release any information until it closes the case.

Friday's new financial disclosure statement did show that the Kempthorne campaign did make a payment to the campaign of Republican Sen. Larry Craig for the lease of a computer server unit that allows the individual terminals to be linked.

However, both men say the gap is narrowing as the Nov. 3 election nears.

Owens has spent about $1.3 million on his campaign, FEC records reveal.

What really pushed the Senate race into the spending stratosphere was the GOP primary race. Cannon put about $5 million into the race.

On the Democratic side, Doug Anderson — another millionaire — spent about $1.4 million on an acrimonious campaign against Owens.

In the 2nd Congressional District race, Republican Ken Greene is being outspent 2-to-1 by Democrat Karid Shepherd, but in the most recent Deseret News KSL-TV poll she still led by 9 points.

Shepherd has spent $328,569 since the first of the year on her race. Greene has spent $168,919.

Greene has loaned her campaign $54,100. By comparison, in 1990 Owens spent about $1 million in his 2nd District re-election campaign.

Senate race to replace Garn is most costly in Utah

'If, as the Republican nominee, I can't get the financial support to run the race as it needs to be, then that in itself shows a lack of public support.'

— Bob Bennett, Republican candidate for U.S. Senate financial support to run the race as it needs to be, then that in itself shows a lack of public support," he said.

In the latest copyright Deseret News KSL-TV poll, Bennett held a 20-point lead over Owens.

County allows portion of jail to open

CALDWELL — After months of delay, a portion of the new Canyon County Jail in Caldwell is about to open.

The Canyon County Commission voted Friday to open the work-release portion of the jail Nov. 2. It contains 100 beds.

Officials originally hoped to open the $6.8 million facility early this year, but say it could be the first of next year before it is entirely ready for operation.

Sheriff Gary Putman said Thursday he could have the work-release center operating within 14 days of a commission order.

"We would like to have it open to generate some revenue," said Commissioner Jan Vinson.

Work-release prisoners pay the county $12.50 a day as part of their release program, and with a capacity of 100 prisoners, the center could bring in $37,500 every 30 days, Vinson said.

"I feel great about it," Commission Chairman Walter Opp said, but questioned the opening of the jail the day before the Nov. 3 general election. That election has pitted former Republican sheriff George Nourse against Putman, a Democrat.

Some residents urged to boil water

CALDWELL — Residents of the Canyon Hill area of Caldwell have been urged to boil or treat domestic water supplies until at least Saturday, after traces of intestinal bacteria were detected.

Randy Dearden, Caldwell water superintendent, said there are 150-200 people in the area involved. Random testing of nine water lines turned up coliform or intestinal bacteria earlier in the week, but not at a level to require treatment.

Later samples indicated precautions must be taken until new samples are tested, officials said.

Caldwell Water Department crews have flushed and chlorinated water mains in the affected area and will continue until they have new lab test results Saturday.

Cedar grove bought for possible trade

SANDPOINT — Plum Creek Timber Co. has sold a grove of old cedar trees to a real estate company that specializes in public land trades, and discussions will be held to see if they can become part of the national forest surrounding them.

Priest River Land Co. of Orofino, which purchased the 520-acre tract for an undisclosed price, will immediately begin land exchange discussions with the U.S. Forest Service, owner Jim Cochrane said Thursday, a day after the sale was finalized.

Priest Lake District Ranger Al Collotzi was delighted about the prospects.

Congressman wants Fisheries' efforts resisted

The Times-News and The Associated Press

IDAHO FALLS — Congressman Richard Stallings wants the National Marine Fisheries Service to "back off" from its attempt to control how Upper Snake River reservoirs are operated.

"NMFS is using the listing of Snake River salmon under the Endangered Species Act to make a grab for control of Idaho water," Stallings said in a statement issued Friday.

"I do not intend to let them get away with it. It won't do our salmon any good, but it will cause all sorts of trouble for our farmers."

NMFS contends that the way the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation operates the reservoirs affect salmon.

"I contend those reservoirs don't affect salmon at all," Stallings said.

Ken Pedde, the Bureau of Reclamation's assistant regional director in Boise, said there has been "some verbal discussion about consultation, the scope of it and so forth" with the Fisheries Service, but there is no reason to believe any changes in reservoir operations are imminent.

Agencies are required by the Endangered Species Act to confer with the Fisheries Service over any actions that may affect the listed species.

Four species of salmon that migrate into Idaho have been listed under the act.

"Consultation does not necessarily lead to a change or anything else," Pedde said. "It can, of course, but it doesn't necessarily lead there."

Stallings released a letter to Rolland Schmittner, regional director of the Fisheries Service, urging him to drop attempts to exercise more control over operations at Palisades, American Falls and other Upper Snake reservoirs.

He also wants John Keys, the Bureau of Reclamation's regional director, to fight efforts by Schmittner's agency for more details consultations.

"I consider such consultations, were they to occur, as a serious threat to the Idaho farmers and communities in these Reclamation reservoirs areas. And I also think such consultations will do zero good for salmon," Stallings wrote Keys in a letter dated Thursday.

Despite cooler weather, 4 wildfires reported

TWIN FALLS — The summer fire season is playing a reprise in southern Idaho — despite the cooler fall weather.

Four wildfires believed to be person-caused were reported Friday, said Forest Service spokeswoman Barbara Todd. There has been no lightning in the area, she said.

The largest, about 400 acres, burned in grass and sagebrush on Bureau of Land Management and private land northeast of Fairfield. In the dry rangeland, the fire went from 75 acres to 400 in a little more than 30 minutes Friday afternoon.

Another 10-acre fire burned Friday evening in sagebrush and grass east of Ketchum.

Two small fires burned in the Sawtooth National Recreation Area. Firefighters responded to the fires Friday, but officials did not know when the fires could be contained.

Estimated cost of Twin Falls new rose garden — $10,000

TWIN FALLS — The Magic Valley Rose Society put up its signs Friday, signaling the beginning of a new rose garden near the Twin Falls County Courthouse.

The garden, located near the corner of Shoshone Street and Sixth Avenue North on land donated by the county, will contain rose bushes planted by the society and rose plants donated by citizens as memorials.

When the project is finished, the garden will also include benches and paths, and a plot for experimental roses.

The first step will be raising the money to modify the sprinkler system for roses and put in edging. The estimated cost: $4,000 to $5,000.

The full project will cost about $10,000, C.J. Lehman, vice president and treasurer of the society, estimated.

Work is scheduled to begin in the spring. Anyone interested in making donations for the project can call Lehman at 734-1741.

Investigators still search for cause of Twin Falls house fire

TWIN FALLS — Fire investigators were still looking Friday for the cause of a Thursday night blaze that severely damaged a Twin Falls home.

A neighbor called the fire department at 9:57 p.m. Thursday and reported a fire in the rear patio area of a home at 345 6th Ave. E., Battalion Chief Wayne Campbell of the Twin Falls fire department said.

The woman who lives in the home, Kathleen Barksdale, was at home but was not injured in the fire.

Campbell said damage is estimated at $50,000. Ten firefighters battled the fire for nearly two and a half hours, he said.

County commission to meet about need for fire districts

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls County Commission plans a meeting Monday night to talk about the needs for fire districts in the county.

The meeting starts at 7 p.m. in rooms 117 and 118 of the Shields Building at the College of Southern Idaho.

Residents who now receive fire fighting protection from Twin Falls County Mutual and who are not protected by a city fire department or the Twin Falls Rural Fire District are urged to go to the meeting.

After Feb. 1, 1993, Twin Falls County Mutual plans to stop responding to fire calls. This will leave some county residents without fire protection if they do not for fire districts.

The county commissioners and an engineer will talk about the need to form one or more fire districts in Twin Falls County.

Campaign display of Gooding County Sheriff Aja destroyed

GOODING — An expensive campaign display touting Gooding County Sheriff Robert Aja was destroyed early Friday morning.

The display, located on Idaho Street, included a pair of wooden horses and mannequin inside a jail. Someone after 3 a.m. Friday, the $250-$300 display had been completely destroyed, Aja said.

This is not the first time that Aja's campaign has been victimized by vandals. Several campaign signs and billboards have been destroyed in recent weeks.

Aja told the Republican primary election to Jim Jax in May, but is waging a write-in campaign to keep his job.

Local United Way director quits

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS — The director of the United Way of Magic Valley has resigned, a month into the 1992 campaign.

Kathy Williams, who had run the eight-county campaign since June 1988, turned in her resignation earlier this week. Colin Randolph, chairman of the board of directors for the campaign, said Friday.

Randolph said Williams got a job in a federally funded pre-kindergarten program administered by the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare. Williams could not be reached for comment Friday night. "It doesn't come at a very good time, but career opportunities don't wait," Randolph said.

Randolph said the United Way board would meet Monday to decide what step to take next, but he said he expects to begin advertising for a new director soon. He said R'Nec Mullen, the secretary of the local United Way office, would handle day-to-day operations until a new director is found.

The campaign has raised $55,858 toward its goal of $240,000, and Randolph said corporate and large-employer contributions would be coming in within the next couple of weeks.

"We're off to a good start," he said. "But we need someone who can look after things and attend to all the details in the next few weeks, and we're confident R'Nec can do that."

The campaign will end formally on Thanksgiving, although contributions come in until the first of the year. Williams was United Way after working for seven years as area director of the American Cancer Society.

Dealers converge at mall for antiques fair

By Suzanne Huxhold
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — If you're looking for a Royal Doulton bouillon cup hand-painted with 24 carat gold, or a wool World War I uniform with ditty bag and gloves, or a 19th century Dutch pine sideboard complete with authentic Dutch nicks and scratches, then the Magic Valley Mall's annual antiques fair is the place for you to be this weekend.

Antique dealers from all over Idaho converge in Twin Falls about this time every year, displaying their wares in the long slender walkways that stretch from The Bon Marche to Shopko. And though the venue may be strictly 1900s, the merchandise evokes memories of the past.

Claudia Reese, a dealer and collector of western memorabilia and owner of Claudia's Country Cabin in Bulli, is in her fifth year at the mall show. She says the recent nationwide interest in all things western has given her favorite collectibles a leg up.

"I've collected cowboy stuff for a long time," Reese said. "My husband is a cowboy; my house is done in cowboy, and we're the only store around that specializes in cowboy."

Browsing through Reese's merchandise is like taking a quantum leap straight into a Roy Rogers movie.

She has, among other things, a lamp made from an old stirrup and a child's size Davy Crockett belt buckle with a picture of Crockett's rifle, "Old Betsy," on it, and a leather bag that looks as if it could have been carried through town by Doc Holliday on his way to a tooth pullin'.

"People that come to Idaho, it's the Wild West for them, and they want to take some of that home with them," said Reese, who swears she was cowboy before cowboy was cool.

"The quality cowboy items, like the silver-inlaid spurs, the really old chaps and the really fancy things that go back to the turn of the century — those things are really hard to find and in demand now."

Judging by the crowd milling around Marion-Wilson's Vintage Vanities

Cowboy collector Claudia Reese is in her fifth year at the Magic Valley Mall's antique fair.

Clothing booth — just a few steps down from where Reese displays her cowboy doodads — antique clothing, hats and accessories are also a hot trend in antiques.

Darlene Seavers, who fills in at the booth while Wilson works, said the beaded flapper dresses and 1940s evening gowns and old-fashioned purses were catching every woman's eye.

"We've been really busy," Seavers said. "We've had all kinds come through. The younger girls are buying the slips and the flare skirts; the older ladies are buying things for their daughters."

But it's the hats that Seavers can barely keep on the rack. "I've sold five hats already," Seavers said. She doesn't know, she said, whether the people who bought hats would actually wear them or not, but she knew they had a lot of fun choosing them.

One man who certainly takes pride and pleasure in an antique hat is self-described "antiquarian" Jerry Craven, who wears a natty, if somewhat worn, top hat everywhere he goes. Craven and his wife Pam run antique shops in Pocatello and Idaho Falls and travel faithfully to the Twin Falls fair every year.

"I've been coming for as long as they've had it here," Craven said. "I travel all over. This is a good show. There's a lot of collectors who know us and come down, and some people don't know we're here, but some out and see something they like."

A collection of perfectly reconditioned antique radios — Craven's specialty — are lined up on a shelf in his booth, next to a sign that proudly proclaims their suitability for use in the real world.

Indeed, Jerry delights in the incongruity of a rock and roll station playing softly on a 1920's vintage radio that looks better suited to a fireside chat.

"This kind of thing fascinates me."

Stallings big with labor PACs; farmers go for Kempthorne

States News Service

Sen. Steve Symms

WASHINGTON — Organized labor has given strong financial backing to Idaho Democratic Senate candidate Richard Stallings, while agricultural interests have pitched in big to his Republican opponent, Dirk Kempthorne.

Those were among the findings of the Center for Responsive Politics, which analyzes political action committee contributions for each congressional district in the country, breaking down donations by industry.

Researchers only tallied contributions made between Jan. 1, 1991, and June 30, 1992.

Stallings, a four-term congressman from Idaho's 2nd-congressional district and Kempthorne, the mayor of Boise, are vying for the Senate seat of retiring Republican "In a year when voters are increasingly skeptical of the promises made by political candidates, it is more important than ever for voters to see where the candidates are getting the money to run their campaigns," Ellen S. Miller, the center's director, said.

Larry Makinson, the project's research director, said he was not surprised by the study's results, but said Idaho voters might be.

"When you look at the money, you can see that congressional committee assignments count for more than anything else" in Washington, Makinson said. "Most voters back in the district don't know what committees their congressman sits on," he said.

According to the report, Stallings collected $352,100 from PACs, while

Jerome man lost at sea, apparent drowning victim

By H.R. Weixel
Times-News correspondent

JEROME — A Jerome man has been lost at sea a month after he returned to his ship after a visit home, apparently a victim of drowning in the Atlantic Ocean.

Justin Shawcroft, 19, son of Amos and Lenora Shawcroft, was declared missing by the U.S. government on Oct. 13.

He was on duty for the U.S. Navy, serving on the U.S.S. Leyte Gulf CG55, a guided missile cruiser, enroute to France. The ship was 1,600 miles from America when Shawcroft disappeared.

The body of the seaman has not been found. The event is still under investigation, according to U.S. Navy officials.

Shawcroft had been home in Jerome on leave in September. His ship had gotten under way for its trans-Atlantic trip from Mayport, Fla. It was due in Cielty Oct. 25 and then was scheduled for a layover in France through Christmas.

Justin has a cousin, Jason Edwards, in the Navy and stationed in the Persian Gulf.

His brother, Brian, is a junior at the Jerome High School. Justin graduated from High School in 1991 and started his tour with the Navy two days after graduation.

A memorial service, with an honor guard from the U.S. Marines, will be at 11 a.m. on Oct. 11 at the Hove Funeral Chapel.

Crowd celebrates groundbreaking for new high school in Wendell

By Terrell Williams
Times-News correspondent

"We're just thrilled it's here," Katie Cutler said. "It's exciting for us to see it finally becoming a reality."

WENDELL — The band played and colored balloons rose as Wendell patrons celebrated the beginning of a new high school.

A large crowd turned out Friday afternoon to hear speeches of appreciation and to partake in a free barbecue dinner.

"The school is for the students," Superintendent Larry Manly told the group. "We will do all we can to make this one of the finest schools in the area."

Student officer Jenny Young presented a silver-plated shovel to Principal Roy Parton to use for the ground breaking ceremony. The shovel will be engraved and put into the trophy case of the new high school, Manly said.

Award plaques were given to Tony Rost, Scott and Katie Cutler, Carol Rae Goekner, Blake Walsh, Renee Fowler and Phyllis Bunn for their work on the building committee.

Rost, a member of the school board, was lauded for his years of help with the project.

Rost said many people worked together to organize a new school for the children of Wendell. "Our kids are our future," Rost said. "The $3.8 million bond was passed in March after it had failed on the first vote in September of 1991. It includes a new high school, an expanded media center at the elementary school and demolition of the 70-year-old section of the present high school."

The new high school, to be located on the east side of the gymnasium, will be a separate building from the gym and will reach as far east as the road by the swimming pool.

Manly said he was not surprised the bond levy passed on the second try. "The patrons recognized the need for a new facility," he said. Construction is set to begin next week and Shovels await the first spadeful of dirt during a ground-breaking ceremony for Wendell's new high school.

The new high school building is scheduled to be completed next year by September or December at the latest.

Construction at the old high school and at the elementary school is scheduled for the summer of 1994.

INEL may receive more spent nuclear fuel from New York

By N.S. Nokedntev
 Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Activists in New York state have notified the Idaho's Snake River Alliance that three spent nuclear fuel shipping casks evidently have been loaded on railroad cars at Saratoga Springs, N.Y.

The alliance is a statewide citizen activist group and a member of the nationwide Military Production Network that keeps an eye on federal Energy Department operations.

Activists believe the casks may contain spent fuel from the Knolls Atomic Power Laboratory in New York, and it may be bound for Idaho for storage at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory.

The lab is part of the Navy's Nuclear Propulsion Program, which sends all spent reactor fuel to Idaho for storage at INEL.

INEL's Naval Reactors Facility said Friday it would not discuss the details of spent fuel shipments.

In the past officials at the facility have said that spent fuel shipments from Navy reactors are kept secret to protect them from terrorists and foreign spies.

In addition to being classified, the shipments are escorted and are treated the same as nuclear weapons shipments.

The spent fuel is examined at NRF to support fuel development and to verify operation performance. After the inspection, the spent fuel is moved to the Idaho Chemical Processing Plant at INEL for storage.

Recently the alliance and the nationwide network of environmental and activist groups, reported a spent fuel shipment would be coming to INEL from the Knolls lab.

But it turned out the shipment was not spent fuel, and it was not bound for Idaho. The shipment contained "propulsion plant equipment" and went instead to the federal Energy Department's Savannah River Site in South Carolina.

But spent fuel from Knolls reactors has been sent to INEL in the past, the department admits.

And more will be "railroaded to Idaho" in the future, activists say.

Meanwhile Gov. Cecil Andrus has expressed opposition to shipments of nuclear waste, including spent reactor fuel, coming to Idaho for storage only. The department has agreed to provide Andrus with detailed information about future shipments, and it has assured him that no shipments would be coming from the Knolls facility in the "near future."

The spent fuel was once reprocessed at the chemical plant to recover valuable uranium. But since that process has been stopped the department has not yet said what it plans to do with the spent fuel that will continue to come to Idaho.

The Navy has said the number of shipments will increase and wants to expand its facility to examine the fuel.

The Energy Department has said it will conduct an environmental impact statement on changes at INEL, including the storage of spent nuclear fuel at the chemical plant.

Meanwhile the shipments keep coming.

The family suggests memorial contributions may be made to the Heart Fund or to the Arthritis Foundation.

Panel seeks 'world-class' schools

OLYMPIA (AP) — Gov. Booth Gardner's high-powered panel on school reform Friday proposed a road map for giving Washington "world-class" schools by the turn of the century.

The sweeping proposal covers everything from deregulation of the state school system and rewards for top-flight districts, to tough new learning goals for each student and a better way of measuring progress.

The old system, which mandates everything from the number of hours a student spends in class to the curriculum he or she takes, would be scrapped in favor of locally determined reforms that focus on the goal — student learning. Letter grades and grade-levels could become a thing of the past.

The plan would cost about $200 million in the next two years, all of which would have to come from new taxes. Most of the new money would be for retraining teachers and for staff before forming sessions on the reforms.

The proposal, still in the draft stage, will be presented to the public in 21 cities next month. After finishing touches by the Governor's Council on Education Reform and Funding, Gardner and legislative members of the panel plan to present the proposal to the Legislature.

The sweeping changes and the pricing make passage a tall order, but lawmakers and the taxpayers will see the wisdom of investing in schools, the governor said in an interview.

"I don't think it's a lot of money compared to what we spend now on education ($7 billion), and if we can turn education on its ear, it's a helluva good investment," Gardner said. "This would put us at the top two or three states in this country."

Later, he described it this way: "We're setting world-class standards for students of the state of Washington, and I emphasize world-class. It does no good to set the high jump bar at 3 feet and tell kids that if they're over it, they're OK. Not when they're fighting to compete in a world economy and hold decent-paying jobs. We're just lying to them if we set those standards too low."

Once the standards are set, schools will need new ways to assess whether they are met. Teachers will need time to learn to operate within the new environment, the governor said.

David Hornbeck, a national education consultant who helped the council pull the package together, said

'We're setting world-class standards for students of the state of Washington, and I emphasize world-class. It does no good to set the high-jump bar at 3 feet and tell kids that if they get over it, they're OK. ... We're just lying to them if we set those standards too low.'

— Washington Gov. Booth Gardner

if it's approved by the Legislature, "Washington will be catapulted into leadership position in this country. Lots of states have done lots of individual things; few states have had the tenacity and courage to do it all."

The commission includes some of the movers and shakers of the education community, business and labor, the Legislature and community leaders.

Members include business executives like Frank Shrontz of Boeing and John Ellis of Puget Sound and the Mariners, Seattle Mayor Norm Rice and legislative leaders are members.

Gardner has personally chaired the commission that he and the Legislature created last year after the state's longest teacher strike.

Washington Education Association president Carla Nuxoll said in an interview the proposal is "both exciting and scary." She said she yet prepared to recommend that her members support the plan. Main concerns include deregulation, a new school funding system, and what schools must do with students who fail to earn a periodic "certificate of mastery."

State school chief Judith Billings said she is "excited by about 90 percent" of the proposal, particularly setting high goals and committing to help each student meet them. Her main concern is that the program would be state bureaucracy.

"I do expect it to pass," she said. House Education Chairman Kim Peery, D-Camas, agreed. Public support for good schools is stronger, than ever, he said.

Gardner conceded that the council's first task will be to "rewrite it into English," stripping out some of the jargon and explaining the relevance to the average citizen and taxpayer.

The plan will be presented at public hearings in Longview, Mark Franklin High School, Nov. 9; Seattle, Franklin High, Nov. 10; Pullman, Washington State University's Compton Union Auditorium, Nov. 11; Yakima, West Valley Junior High, Nov. 12; Everett, North Middle School, Nov. 13; and Federal Way, Decatur High, Nov. 16. All sessions are from 6:30 p.m. to 9:30 p.m.

On Nov. 14, a televised conference will link locations in Cashmere, Joyce, Spokane, Olympia, Walla Walla, Mount Vernon, Moses Lake, Omak, Pomeroy, Potosi, Metairie Falls, South Bend, Tekoa-Troul Lake and Washougal. The session is from 9 a.m. to noon.

Air Force base accused of violating hazardous waste regulations

The Times-News

MOUNTAIN HOME — The state Division of Environmental Quality has charged that the Air Force base is violating hazardous waste regulations at the Mountain Home Air Force Base.

In a settlement with the state, the Air Force has agreed to improve its hazardous waste handling.

The Air Force agreed to determine what hazardous wastes are present at base facilities and to perform weekly inspections.

DEQ assessed a $16,700 fine against the Air Force. But because of a U.S. Supreme Court ruling upholding the sovereign immunity of federal facilities, the fine was not levied.

It could be very effective where the candidate picks up the information and runs with it," Makinson said. "But we're not providing ammunition for the candidates, we're providing ammunition for the voters."

Makinson said he was surprised that energy interests didn't cough up more money this election cycle, since Congress churned out the first comprehensive energy legislation in more than a decade. Makinson said he thinks more energy money has rolled in since June 30 — the cutoff date of this study.

In the race for the Idaho's 2nd congressional district seat, Republican Michael D. Crapo is pulling in more PAC money than his Democratic opponent J.D. Williams.

By the end of June, Crapo had raised $61,936 from PACs, while Williams brought in $55,131. Crapo's biggest supporter is the transportation industry, which gave $22,100. Williams netted $48,000 from labor PACs.

Financial surveys such as this "haven't played a big role yet in campaigns, because voters haven't known about" industry spending in congressional races, Makinson said. "It's not something that candidates talk about," Makinson said.

Phil Reberger, Kempthorne's campaign manager, said "we expected (Stallings') support to be Washington-based," compared to Kempthorne's base of in-state support.

Voters care that the incumbent seems to rely so heavily on outside interests," Reberger said.

Organized labor pumped a hefty $154,227 into Stallings' campaign. Overall, the study found that 93 percent of labor money went to Democrats. Makinson said Kempthorne received no labor money.

"Labor people are afraid of Kempthorne because of the Republican rhetoric. As the mayor of Boise, Kempthorne had serious trouble negotiating with unions," said Stallings' press secretary, Al Bunch.

Stallings fared well with "single-issue" PACs, collecting $71,462 for his Senate bid. For example, more than $53,000 of that money came

Rupert farmer asks 3 irrigation district board members to resign

Mini-Cassia News Service

RUPERT — A Rupert farmer has submitted a letter to the Minidoka Irrigation District's board of directors, asking for three of its five members to resign or possibly face a recall election.

James Cotten said Friday he made the request primarily to protest last month's board decision to cut off water from cattle ranchers and others, in order for potato and sugar beet growers to be assured water for their crops.

After protests from cattlemen, the board later reversed that decision. Cotten seeks the resignations of Pat O'Donnell, vice chairman of the board, and board members Larry Ketterling and Daniel Stapelmann.

If they do not step down, Cotten said, he would begin circulating a recall petition and attempt to have the three voted out of office.

MID attorney Kent Fletcher said a successful recall petition would be a complicated and costly matter.

Recall petitions are invalid, if presented less than six months before such an election, Fletcher said. The board seats occupied by Ketterling and O'Donnell on Dec. 8.

Anyone attempting a recall petition should employ an attorney, he added. "It's a complicated, two-part process in which 20 percent of the MID's current members must sign a recall petition, and their replacements voted in during a second, Fletcher said.

Cotten said his letter is "to make known to the general public" what he characterized as the board's mishandling of the district's water supply.

He has not received a reply to his request from the board.

Preliminary hearing postponed for state trooper charged with fondling young girl

Mini-Cassia News Service

RUPERT — The preliminary hearing for a former state trooper charged with fondling a young girl was postponed Thursday.

Fifth District Magistrate John F. Varin granted a postponement request from county Prosecutor David Haley and Greg Fuller, the Jerome attorney representing ex-trooper Ibert A. Connor, 52, and the two attorneys more than an hour Friday morning.

Varin said a preliminary hearing would be held within about 30 days.

Haley said he made the request because authorities are still in the charge.

The prosecutor has alleged that

Connor fondled the breasts of a 12-year-old girl at various times and locations, a charge that carries a maximum penalty of 15 years' imprisonment.

Earlier this year in Cassia County, Connor was charged with sexual abuse of another young girl. The state attorney general's office has taken over that case.

Construction to begin on Declo vo-ag building

By Eric Goodell Mini-Cassia News Service

DECLO — The fact that construction is ready to begin on Declo High School's $108,000 vo-ag building shows how dedicated the community is to the school, according to an area organizer.

"We are committed to making them work," said Lynn Steadman, chairman of the school's parents advisory committee.

Steadman said only $7,000 more is needed to get the building under way. The school board has approved a bond issue for $12,000 in additional labor. Another $9,000 has yet to be collected.

County School District #20,000 toward the project.

Steadman said one contributor gave "very substantial" donation to the project, but wants to remain anonymous. Others gave a thousand dollars, and others gave $5.

He said it was a sacrifice for some of the people to give $5 because they were living on fixed incomes.

"All in all, the people in the area have been very, very supportive," said Steadman.

The new, 80- by 100-foot building will replace the aging building that was being used for the vo-ag program. It will contain a classroom, offices, rest rooms, locker space, greenhouse, and woodworking and metal working areas.

Arizona, Utah to study use of artificial heart as transplant bridge

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — University Medical Center announced Friday that its joint venture with a Utah foundation has received federal permission to study use of an artificial heart as a bridge to transplants.

UMC officials said the Food and Drug Administration notified it by telephone Friday that the agency had issued an investigational device exemption, or IDE, requested earlier this year by CardioWest Technologies Inc.

CardioWest Technologies is a joint venture between UMC and the Medforte Research Foundation of Salt Lake City. Medforte is affiliated with the University of Utah.

The artificial heart to be used formerly was known as the Jarvik. Its technology was owned by now-defunct Symbion Inc. of Tempe until the technology was transferred to CardioWest in August 1991.

Greg Pivorotto, UMC senior vice president, said the so-called CardioWest heart is the same air-driven, plastic-and-metal heart that Symbion marketed but continued to be popularly known as the Jarvik heart. The original Jarvik heart, named after inventor Dr. Robert Jarvik, was intended as a permanent replacement, but its use was halted after several patients developed complications before dying.

Pivorotto said the exemption granted by the FDA was conditional, but he said UMC officials didn't know yet what the conditions were.

"We'll actually get that in writing next week," he said.

urgencies, Symbion dissolved its heart business early this year. CardioWest, the study establish receive a The FDA withdrew Symbion's IDE in January, 1990, thus preventing the devices from being sold or used in the United States except in last- resor- t months later. Just before the new IDE, a medical consultant said would gather data and criteria as to who should receive artificial hearts.

Dr. Jack Copeland, who used the Jarvik didn't know what complications would occur, he and who related to the device or something else.

Researchers since had begun to learn how to study the device, said Copeland, the head of UMC's heart transplant and artificial heart programs.

Copeland implanted the first Jarvik successfully used as a bridge to transplant in 1985. By when the heart's technology was transferred to CardioWest on Aug. 1, 1991, total artificial hearts had been implanted 182 times as bridges to transplants.

Convicted killer escapes from Latah jail

MOSCOW (AP) — Authorities erected road blocks and checked vehicles in the Moscow area Friday night as they searched for a convicted killer who escaped from the Latah County Jail.

William Andrew Davison, 32, escaped from the exercise yard at the jail at about 3:50 p.m., said Doug Whitney, county deputy prosecuting attorney. Officers from other counties in Idaho and Washington, the Idaho State Police and U.S. marshals were involved in the search for Davison Friday night.

"We're still focusing on the Moscow area, but we're also responding to any tips," Whitney said.

Davison was convicted in federal court in Moscow on Sept. 24 in the November 1990 shooting death of 68-year-old Victor Pierre of Worley on the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation.

Davison was being held in the Moscow jail and was scheduled for sentencing Dec. 4. He could get life in prison for the murder.

Whitney did not elaborate on how Davison left the exercise yard.

Developing renewed inner life is possible despite spiritual abuse

A voice inside me said, "You'll get there." And I took hope from the voice. Somewhere I felt sure that voice was God, that there was a reason for all of this abuse while growing up. Today I can share that hope with others, that you can heal within and develop faith again in God.

Pamela Weese
Clergy's corner

With a higher power without support. When adults get into counseling, they usually have many memories of growing up hearing religious statements that were abusive.

The most common questions asked are: Why did God allow it to happen? Where was he when my father was sexually abusing me? If there is a God, why did he let me suffer so much? It's incredible loss to lose the spiritual side of yourself. For those who experienced both physical and sexual abuse, recovering spiritually is a process that will take time but a necessary part in order to heal back into wholeness.

There are no experts, only supporters; I have found that nothing really could get me through some of my memories, the help I received from God. One may ask, "What is childhood spiritual or religious abuse?" It's a form of blaming God for all their problems and having you feel responsible for everything that happened to them.

God will bless us with more material goods. Because of your behavior, I believe God is punishing us by having us live this poor; he must be very angry at you."

There are many ways we have been abused in the name of God by others and our parents. Some parents teach children that God will punish us if we don't obey all the church rules. They use religion and God to fulfill their own parent responsibilities in order to gain control over their children. The healing process from religious abuse takes time.

I usually suggest for those who are having problems getting in touch with their higher power or inner self to begin listing the abusive statements they heard as a child and make a decision to develop within themselves a relationship with God of their own understanding that would bring healing, peace and forgiveness for self and others.

Whether you have a fixed concept of God, believe there is a loving spirit coursing through us all or simply learn to trust your own intuition, having faith in something more powerful and constant than your shifting emotions is an important step toward healing spiritually.

Whether you choose to call him God, Higher Power, Jesus, Holy Spirit, I Am, does not matter. It's not the form we use or name, it's the loving presence that can guide you through the shadow of past childhood or adult memories to ward the inner light of healing to become the person you were intended to become before the abuse occurred.

Your inner teacher will never leave you to face your problems alone; there will always be someone there to assist you through. Trust in your inner self. You're worth recovery.

Episcopal bishops downplay controversial issues, focus on Bible

By David Briggs
The Associated Press

After years of strife over issues such as the ordination of homosexuals, Episcopal bishops have turned back to their Bibles.

At a meeting in Baltimore in September, the House of Bishops set aside their social policy, swords and ruminated over different approaches to Scriptures and its role in the contemporary church.

And a funny thing happened on the way to the Bible: Staking out turf on issues such as whether to ordain homosexual priests seemed to have lost some of its urgency, some bishops said.

"What the message is is not the answers to these questions, but a different way of being the church," said Bishop Glenn M. Hathaway of the Diocese of Pittsburgh. "We're going to be more of a conciliar thing. Where we cannot decide, we will not decide. ... The guidance will wait on the Holy Spirit."

Then, "We'll be able to speak with a different kind of authority, one we haven't had in a long time," Hathaway said.

The Bible has always been beneath the surface of many of the most contentious church debates. For example, on the issue of homosexuality, those who favor abandoning old strictures against homosexual practice have portrayed their opponents as being blindly tied to a literal approach to the Bible that ignores contemporary culture and modern scholarship. In turn, those who favor a ban on the ordination of homosexuals have accused their opponents of being indifferent to biblical passages condemning the practice.

The conflicting movements are visible in the formation of a separate traditionalist Episcopal Synod of America in protest of "liberal" trends in the church. On the other side, New Jersey Bishop John Spong has organized an avowed homosexual and specialist in a book that the Apostle Paul was a self-hating, repressed homosexual.

At last year's churchwide convention in Phoenix, the discussion of a proposal to allow homosexual priests turned into an angry debate that Bishop Frank Allen of Atlanta called "a crisis of leadership and trust and the way we do business with one another as bishops."

In the pews of the 2.5 million-member church, where attendance has thinned considerably over the past generation, people are confused by the infighting, some bishops said.

"They were perplexed that the so-called fathers of the church were not able to live with each other," said Bishop A. Heath Light of the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia.

In backing up from controversies on social policy statements, the bishops took the unusual step of devoting a large part of their meeting to reflect on what the Bible says to the church today. The format they chose was to study four papers from scholars arguing for opposing views ranging from a literal understanding to a liberation theology approach. Bishop Frederick H. Borsch of Los Angeles, head of the bishops' Theology Committee, said most bishops affirmed "a middle-ground stance taken in papers by Charles P. Price of Virginia Seminary and Richard A. Morris Jr. of Union Theological Seminary."

The approach recognizes the Bible is not a rule book on issues such as sexuality, but also states the Bible is to be taken seriously as central to the life of the church.

In Price's terms, Jesus is the word of God absolutely and the Bible is the word of God relatively.

"Church and Bible are found to be in a continuous and never-ending dialogue," he wrote.

In the end, there was no consensus on any one way the Bible speaks to the world today, but there was a greater appreciation of the seriousness which all parts in social policy debates take the book, some bishops said.

Light called it "a rediscovery of a sense of community within the House of Bishops ... which allows us to disagree without an undiluted sense of vitriol."

That doesn't mean the next time passions rise over an issue such as the ordination of homosexuals that it will be any easier reaching a consensus, the bishops said.

But the dialogue over the Bible helped the bishops create a little more room for the Holy Spirit, Hathaway said.

Where the specific answers will come out, I don't know. But we're dealing with it in the right context," he said. "God will have his way with us."

The Right Reverend Frederick Hoak Borsch reads from the Bible during a service in Claremont, Calif.

Those in power should observe rights of others

I am responding to the recent banner escape.

The questionnaire and article written by your staff writer was biased against the Adameses. Using the word complain indicates the Adameses did something wrong, something bad.

In reality, what the Adameses did was stand up for their own human rights as based on our democracy. It is a very positive action on their part. More of us should do the same thing.

On the other hand, I believe the mayor was very negative and immature in the way he took responsibility for his own actions. He used sarcasm, ridicule and other "emotive" techniques to avoid facing the truth.

Why doesn't he admit he just made a mistake? Plain and simply, he blew it. It does not make him a bad person. It does, however, make him human. That is why people in power positions should not act independently. In local politics, "the city council" acts as a check and balance to avoid misuse of power. That's the American way.

I believe the mayor's comparison of AWANA and the Boy Scouts is also misleading. It is my understanding that the Boy Scouts is a non-denominational-sponsored organization. The AWANA is a denominational-sponsored organization.

In a new directions class I took at the College of Southern Idaho, I received a paper describing my basic human rights, and it is non-denominational. I will send a copy of it to the city clerk for the mayor and city council viewing.

I guarantee following these guidelines will build good morals and strong character for Americans of all kinds, shapes and sizes.

POLLY BICKETT Jerome

Religious groups need to have free speech, too

In the Oct. 10 letter written by David Spaulding concerning the Jack Adams/Jerome banner issue, I find a general state of confusion in his attempt to rebuttal.

I was not advocating an official church state, although it appears that is exactly what we've got. Humanism, declared by the U.S. Supreme Court in 1963 to be an official religion, has become the official state church. The myth of evolution being taught to the youth of creation science in our public schools at the taxpayers' expense is proof enough.

I am angry with ample reason to be so. What David Spaulding is inadvertently promoting (while the American Civil Liberties Union promotes intentionally) is selective free speech. According to the far left, free speech would be vigorously defended for everyone: the press, the people, the politicians and yes, the hard-core pornographers. The only exception is if you happen to be a Christian and then the special effort is made to censor — all in the name of separation of church and state.

I have had it up to my receding hairline with this myth. The neutrality of the left-wing social elite pretends to operate under. These people are all for free speech unless, of course, someone disagrees with them. This twisted version of separation of church and state has been co-opted up to limit the First Amendment — freedom of every segment of our society, the Christians.

Any thinking individual had better support free speech rights for all churches, not just their own. Let the battle for the hearts and minds of individuals be won in the forum of a level playing field with free speech as the centerpiece. To those Christians who have been intimidated by this garbage, speak out, especially if you're a public school teacher. Liberties not exercised are liberties easily lost. Unless everyone has free speech, there is no free speech.

The reality of Christmas, Easter and opening prayer in the U.S. Senate must really bug the ACLU. I guarantee that if the ACLU had the power, every mention of our God would be gone. Hang the banner back up.

KELLY WALTON Burley

Church Women United study legacy of Columbus

Because of its impact on the European nations in the 15th Century and eventually the entire world, the international community observed a Columbus Week, maybe a Columbus Month or a year, which began Oct. 11.

The expansionism begun by the Spanish government and continued by the English, French, Portuguese, Italian and others, has shaped the world as it is today. If this course of international interaction were followed today, it would be known not as exploration but as pacification of native (indigenous) peoples. It has been the root cause of the poverty of indigenous people in both North and South America. People of conscience still struggle against the discrimination against all peoples of color.

Church Women United, a national organization supported by many mainline churches in the United States, is seeking to understand the "painful impact of this event" (Columbus' landing in this hemisphere) on the civilizations which were in place at the time of his arrival through its National Resolution on Indigenous Peoples.

CWU has a commitment to educate about the Columbus event and its continuing effect, through prejudice and discrimination, as a root cause of poverty; calls upon churches for repentance with reconciliation that comes from recognizing the sin of dominant groups and moving beyond it with healing actions for change; and advocates legislation that defends the most basic demands of native peoples — sovereignty, self-determination, land and treaty rights, language and cultural identity, religious freedom and the return of cultural property (housed in museums) to appropriate governments.

Religion can become an addiction for some

Here's the picture: You can't stay away from church, you think sex is dirty, you've begun thinking God will magically solve your problems, you've stopped questioning and doubting the faith, you're rigid and judgmental, you pray compulsively and give huge amounts to your local church and you've dropped most of your friends outside the congregation.

At one time, people like that were called "religiously scrupulous," and they constituted one of the most troubled groups within Christianity.

But now the experts have dropped the euphemism. Today, these people are described simply as addicted to religion, overwhelmed by their own devotion to the church.

But is that such a terrible thing? you may ask. After all, didn't Jesus call his followers to total devotion and expect them to sacrifice for the faith?

Ah, but there's a difference, says the Rev. Leo Booth, an Episcopal priest and the author of "When God Becomes a Master" (Jeremy P. Tarcher/Perigee Books, $12.95). Such people, he says, have lives grounded in fear, shame, guilt and sin, rather than in love, forgiveness and acceptance of one's self.

Booth, who serves St. George's Episcopal Church in Hawthorne,

Clark Morpewh
Faith today

Calif., says that many religiously addicted people grew up in dysfunctional families in which parents seldom talked and problems were never addressed. Eventually, convinced that they are not acceptable people, many spend the rest of their lives trying to measure up to impossible standards.

"People grow up with destructive religious messages," Booth says. "It's selfish to take care of yourself, for instance. Sex is bad, unless your married, and then it's celestial. If sex isn't talked about in a family, then the message is, sex is dirty."

Religious addiction, Booth says, is the easiest to deny because if family members criticize a parent's devotion, they have to voice negative feelings about their own. "If sex isn't talked about in a family, then the message is, sex is dirty."

Booth says, "The mind of a religiously addicted person, when you criticize the church, you're criticizing God."

religiously addicted people by setting expectations — that parishioners can never meet.

"From television preachers we hear over and over that the more we give to their ministry, the more we will receive in return," Booth says. "Send your money to Jesus, they tell us. But what they're really saying is send your money to this ministry, to me."

Booth says the first step in moving out of religious addiction is to face it honestly.

"You have to look at your addiction and move beyond it," Booth says. "But never deny. If you deny that you belong to an abusive church, you'll probably stay in it."

Recovery from religious addiction will probably require some rebuilding of a person's entire life. The important thing is take control of your religious devotion. If your congregation, for instance, claims to have the corner on truth, visit some other churches and decide for yourself.

Another way to assault your addiction, Booth says, is to set friends outside your congregation and raise your esteem by accepting your own imperfections.

Booth emphasizes that religious addiction is based in fear, guilt and shame. And the fear that turns up most is the gnawing feeling that you will be rejected because you can never measure up.

But that fear comes from being raised to believe you are not worthy of love, that your imperfections outweigh any good points of your personality.

Booth suggests using affirmations — such as "I am lovable just as I am" — and repeating those positive thoughts whenever one's self-esteem is slipping. But sometimes people can't see that they are addicted in the first place and, therefore, can't pull themselves out of the addiction.

When the addicted person is ruining family life and life in general, then, Booth says, a spouse, children or friends may have to get involved. Booth suggests an intervention, that is, a frank but loving talk with the addicted person that explains in detail the loved one's addiction and how it is damaging the entire family.

Nobody is born incapable of good, Booth says. That kind of thinking is a lie passed down through generations, and it brings nothing but shame and self-loathing to those who believe in the Bible says the only way we can love others is if we first love ourselves.

Church plans Old Testament day

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls Church of the Nazarene, 401 Sixth Ave. N., has planned a "Walk Through the Old Testament" day for 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Oct. 24 at the church.

The event is designed to help people match novel hand signs with key events, people and concepts of scripture to give them a new look at the Bible and its history, geography and life-changing applications. For more information or to register, call 733-6610.

Course in Catholic history set

TWIN FALLS — St. Edward's Catholic Church religious education department has planned a course in Catholic Church history to begin Oct. 29. The series will be taught from 7:30 to 9 p.m.

Thursdays in the Lower Parish Hall. Interested persons are asked to sign up now so that books can be acquired for everyone.

"Catholic Church History in Peak Moments from the Pentecost to the Year 2000" is for Catholics and non-Catholics alike. According to Tom McNamara, assistant director of religious education, the course is an interesting perspective to study the 2,000-year-old church.

The course presents the key events... and the peak experiences of the church and knits them together in a sequence from the beginning to the present day.

The text, "The Story of the Church" by Robert McBride, consists of four sections: The Early Church, The Middle Ages, The Reformation and The Modern Church. Within these sections, it covers 30 key events.

For more information, call Bob Sass at 733-5883 or the Office of Religious Education at 734-2466.

Ortiz will appear in Twin Falls

TWIN FALLS — Pastor Ken Ortiz will be the guest speaker at 9 and 11 a.m. Sunday at the Calvary Chapel, 241 Main Ave. W.

Ortiz began his ministry in 1969 and was involved in the Shiloh Ministries for the first 11 years. He was on staff at Chuck Smith's Calvary Chapel in Costa Mesa, Calif., for two years. He has been senior pastor at the Calvary Chapel in Spokane, Wash., for the past nine years. The Spokane Calvary Chapel currently has approximately 3,000 members. Ortiz can be heard at 10 a.m. daily on his syndicated radio show, "Matters of the Heart," on KAWZ 89.5 FM.

The Times-News welcomes news of church events. Send information to Ellen Thomson, The Times-News, P.O. Box 548, Twin Falls, ID 83403. Deadline is noon Thursday for publication on the Saturday religion page.

Mary Magdalene's image undergoes change

Emphasis now on role of witness

NEW YORK (AP) — A new generation of scholars is reclaiming Mary Magdalene as the most important Christian witness of the resurrection, and not the prostitute with a heart of gold that has been her fate in popular piety and culture.

Led by feminist Bible scholars, researchers are uncovering the role centuries of largely male interpreters have played in creating the symbol that lives on in Western art and legend — Mary Magdalene, repentant whore.

Forget the image of the woman with a sinful past who falls in love with Jesus in "Jesus Christ Superstar," or the tattooed prostitute of "The Last Temptation of Christ."

There is no evidence Mary Magdalene was a prostitute. What the biblical record shows is a woman who participated in Jesus' ministry; mourns at his crucifixion; and in three Gospel accounts, was the first person to whom the risen Christ appears, these scholars say.

"In short, Mary Magdalene is the primary witness to the fundamental data of early Christian faith," writes Jane Schaberg, professor of religious studies at the University of Detroit-Mercy, in the October issue of Bible Review.

The paucity of information in the Gospel accounts of Jesus' life has led to the development of many mythical biographies of others like Judas or the centurion at the cross, Schaberg said in an interview.

While it is still being unraveled, the journey of Mary Magdalene — from the woman commissioned by Jesus in the Gospel of John to spread the news of his resurrection, to repentant sinner — "is a lot more potent and a lot more long-lived, and has more psychic twists to it," she said.

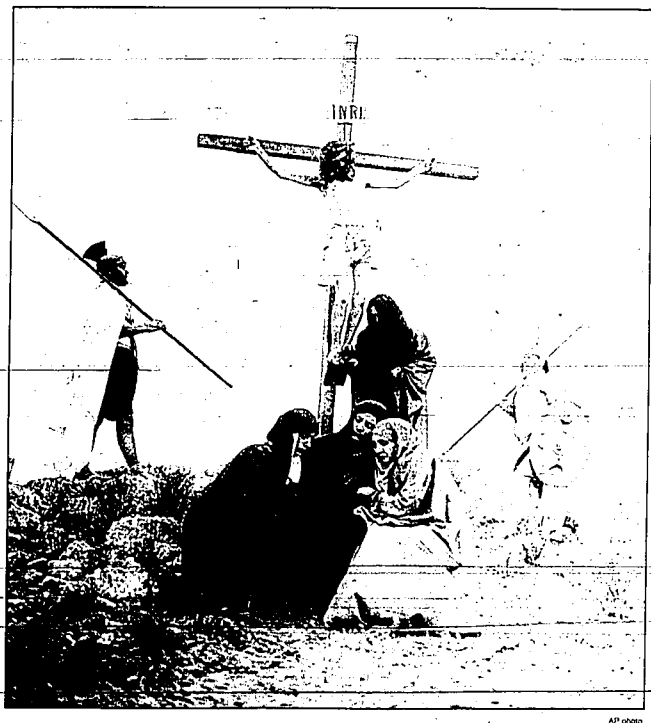

In the review article, Schaberg traced the origin of Mary's transformation into an ex-prostitute. Early interpreters, she said, juxtaposed Mary Magdalene, who came to Jesus' tomb on the first Easter to anoint him, with Mary of Bethany and eventually with an unnamed woman in Luke who was a public sinner. Both Mary of Bethany and the unnamed woman anointed Jesus' feet.

Using a link of sexual sin, some later traditions even identified Mary Magdalene with the story in John of an unnamed woman caught in the act of adultery.

"The initial motives for this juxtaposition" may have been benign, even creative," she wrote, but ultimately it served to degrade Mary Magdalene.

Schaberg said one feminist scholar, Marina Warner, argues the legend of Mary as prostitute was "brought into existence by the powerful undertow of misogyny in Christianity, which associates women with the dangers and degradation of the flesh."

To this, Schaberg added that the legend-making process also reflects a Christian reaction against female power.

"When you boil down the bare bones of the story, you've got a woman who courageously went against cultural expectations to join this movement to begin with," she said in an interview.

Mary Magdalene then stood by the arrested and condemned Jesus, and it was her insight that "is the core of the resurrection faith," she said.

Sherman Johnson, a member of the translation committee of the New Revised Standard Version of the Bible, said feminist scholars have set the record straight on Mary Magdalene.

"It straightens out history," Johnson said. "Here's obviously one of the most loyal of Jesus' followers. She was the principle feminine disciple, other than Mary, the mother of Jesus." Roman Catholic and Protestant doctrine today separate as three distinct persons Mary Magdalene, Mary of Bethany and the unnamed sinner in the seventh chapter of Luke.

"But it hasn't penetrated the popular mind," admitted Johnson, visiting professor of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific in Berkeley, Calif.

He said there needs to be more articles published, greater research and more teaching in the church to restore Mary Magdalene to her rightful role.

First, that means recognizing Mary Magdalene as a central figure in Christianity, scholars said.

If there are elements of sexism that still exist in the scholarly community, Schaberg said, it is no longer over whether Mary Magdalene was an ex-prostitute.

"The question would be more how important is this figure: Is this figure worth scholarly attention?" Schaberg said.

Bruins come back to shock Boise

By Larry Hovey
Times-News writer

BOISE — Give Josh Barron the game ball for probably the major play. And maybe a pat on the back of Rob Studebaker for another big defensive clincher.

But then note it was a team effort that gave Twin Falls one of its biggest comeback victories ever.

The Bruins overhauled Boise's Braves

26-22, twice erasing two touchdown deficits, to earn a third straight trip to the state playoffs.

"We're in and we're hosting a first round game," said a smiling coach Jon Jund.

But getting there was a gut-wrenching, hand-wringing experience. The Bruins did it with a dominating second half as Barron highlighted with a 57-yard interception return to give Twin Falls its first lead with 2:51 left in the game.

To that point, the three-touchdown pass combination of Greg Starley to Jason Ringenberg and the emergence of juniors John McClusky and Ian Jensen as rushers, had set up Barron's heroics.

The Bruins had fallen behind 14-0 early in the second quarter and appeared in for a lacing at the hands of a top defensive team.

"Our players just decided at halftime we could beat this football team," said Jund.

The second half belonged to the Bruins as they marched four times inside the Boise 10 yard line.

First, Starley and Ringenberg hit on a 32-yarder. But three plays later, Boise somehow got Kevin McDonald wide open on a third-and-nine play. That resulted in a 70-yard bomb. The Boise holder, Scott Pierce, fumbled the snap, but still managed to skirt in on the two-point conversion.

Reds promote from within to replace GM

CINCINNATI — Jim Bowden received a mandate Friday when he was named the Cincinnati Reds' latest general manager; Win, or else.

Chief executive Marge Schott introduced Bowden as his third general manager in four years Friday, replacing the fired Bob Quinn. Bowden, 31, is the youngest current general manager in the major leagues.

Schott made it clear that Bowden, her player development director last year, has no more security than his predecessors.

When a team spokesman opened the news conference by saying there was good news to announce, Schott added tartly, "We'll see how good the news is at the end of the year."

Neither Bowden nor Schott would say whether he has more than a one-year contract. Schott has been reluctant to commit long-term to her general managers, preferring to fire them instead of managers.

Bowden was the leading candidate from the start to replace Quinn, whose contract wasn't renewed after the Reds' second 90-win season in three years. He knows the farm system and will give the team some continuity.

His first major job will be replacing manager Lou Piniella, who felt snubbed by Schott and left after the season. Bowden said he'll start interviewing current Reds staff members and then outsiders, if necessary. He plans to name a manager by Dec. 1.

Expansion team breaks ground on future home

DENVER — National League president Bill White; U.S. Sens. Tim Wirth and Hank Brown, Gov. Roy Romer and Mayor Wellington Webb were among dignitaries attending a groundbreaking ceremony Friday for the Colorado Rockies' future home, Coors Field.

White had kind words for the expansion team during brief remarks at the site in lower downtown Denver.

"At one time, St. Louis was the westernmost franchise in baseball," White said. "I now see expanded to the West Coast. I think being in the Rocky Mountains will be the best decision ever made by the National League and by Major League Baseball."

“The World Series. No-names can acquire names. And good players can go unfulfilled forever.”

— Dave Winfield, once labelled 'Mr. May' by Yankees owner George Steinbrenner

Forget the season — it's World Series time

The Associated Press

ATLANTA — Maybe it's the memory of Jack Morris standing tall on the mound, or Lonnie Smith getting lost on the bases.

Perhaps it's the image of Kirk Gibson hobbling toward home plate, or Bill Buckner watching the ball roll through his legs.

However it plays out in your mind, that's what the World Series is — a series of memories that can linger and last a lifetime.

More World Series coverage — B8

"This time of year, everything is so magnified and so important," Atlanta's Tom Glavine said Friday.

"They don't think about me winning 13 straight games during the season, or that I won 20 games for two straight years," he said. "This what people look at it: 'What have you done for me lately?'"

Glavine will start it off this October on Saturday night, when he pitches against Morris and the Toronto Blue Jays in Game 1.

For Glavine, for Dave Winfield, for Otis Nixon, Smith and others, these can be the days of redemption. In just one week, the World Series can wipe out one bad game, one bad series or one bad season.

For someone like little Mark Lemke or Gene Tenace, it can make a career. Or, for stars like Winfield, it can tarnish one.

"It's a chance for anybody for real stardom," said John Smoltz, who will pitch Game 2 for the Braves. "If you go 4 for 4 or get a big hit like Francisco Cabrera or pitch a real game, everyone sees it."

"People on the bench, they'd die for a moment like that. Because as much as we all think we're going to be back, you may never get this chance again," he said.

Smoltz was one out away from being the loser in Game 7 of the playoffs until Cabrera became one of baseball's most unlikely heroes, delivering a two-run pinch single with two outs in the ninth inning to beat Pittsburgh. The hit helped Smoltz, instead of Pirates knuckleballer Tim Lincecum, wind up as the MVP.

Atlanta's Dave Justice cavorts in the outfield during the Braves' workout Friday at Atlanta Fulton County Stadium.

"I've seen it at least 15 times," Cabrera said of his single. "I don't need my own tape. I keep seeing the replays on TV."

That one hit matched the total that Winfield got in his only previous World Series. He went 1 for 22 in 1981 for the American League Championship Series MVP Roberto Alomar readies for today's Game 1.

Yankees, and even though that performance has not haunted him, it has haunted him.

"The World Series," Winfield mused. "No names can acquire names, and good players can go unfulfilled forever."

Tenace, now a Toronto coach, has nowhere near the big career numbers that Winfield owns on the other side of the Blue Jays clubhouse. But for a brief time, in October 1972, he did things that not Winfield, not anyone had ever done.

Tenace became the first player to homer in his first two Series at-bats. He set a record with a 913 slugging percentage, including four home runs. And on a team with Reggie Jacks, Catfish Hunter, Rollie Fingers and others, he was the star who led Oakland over Cincinnati.

"One week changed my life," Tenace said. "I was here then. And look at me now — I'm still a household name, 20 years later."

While Winfield wants to erase what happened more than a decade in the past, and the Blue Jays want to completely wipe out their label as losers, Glavine hopes to rub out what took place only a few days ago at Fulton County Stadium.

Glavine was tagged for a playoff-record eight runs in one inning by Pittsburgh in Cincinnati.

Bulls star saves comments on gambling allegations for jury

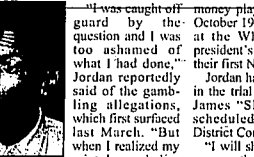

The Associated Press

CHICAGO — Michael Jordan's only comment about a newspaper story alleging he conceded losing $57,000 gambling will be to a North Carolina jury, the player said Friday.

The Chicago Sun-Times reported Friday in a copyright story that Jordan admitted losing the money gambling while the rest of the Chicago Bulls were visiting President Bush. Jordan had insisted publicly that the money was a loan to a convicted drug dealer to help him build a golf driving range.

"The story is an allegation from the Sun-Times," Jordan said during a news conference. "It's not something I gave them."

Jordan didn't deny the accuracy of the Sun-Times story, which quoted him as saying he initially put out a false story about the money because he was embarrassed.

guard by the question and I was too ashamed of what I had done," Jordan reportedly said of the gambling allegations, which first surfaced last March. "But when I realized my mistake and discovered the background of the people I had been with, I told the truth and offered a public apology."

He apologized during a news conference on March 31 "for the biggest and most embarrassing mistake of my life." He said at the time that he had told the NBA and federal authorities about the $57,000 check, but refused to reveal publicly what he had said.

The Sun-Times said Jordan lost the money playing poker, dice and golf in October 1991 while his teammates were at the White House receiving the president's congratulations for winning their first NBA title.

Jordan has been subpoenaed to testify in the trial of convicted cocaine dealer James "Slim" Boulter. The trial is scheduled to start Tuesday in U.S. District Court at Charlotte, N.C.

"I will show up. I won't run, and I'll answer the questions that are put to me," Jordan said. He said he has been told by his lawyer not to elaborate on the allegations.

Court documents filed by U.S. Attorney Tom Ashcraft allege the check was a payoff for a golf gambling debt.

Boulter has pleaded innocent to 12 federal charges accusing him of laundering money for a cocaine ring led by James Edward "Ned" Johnson. Johnson is serving a 20-year sentence and is cooperating with prosecutors.

New York awarded '98 Goodwill Games

Los Angeles Times

THURSDAY in their bid for the 1998 Goodwill Games.

Most prominent among the bidders — rivaled for attention only by hosts Ted Turner and Jane Fonda — were New York Gov. Mario Cuomo and New York Mayor David Dinkins. The show of strength by the New York Sports Commission overwhelmed the other candidates.

"A lot of heads are turned by celebrity," said a concerned member of the Dallas-Fort Worth 'bid committee, which countered with former football coach Tom Landry but was unable to produce Gov. Ann Richards, who was occupied with the Clinton-Gore campaign.

So impressed were most people there that few even flinched when Cuomo pledged $4 million for the construction of an aquatics center on Long Island and then added, "Whatever an aquatics center is ..."

Perhaps Goodwill Games officials could relate because that is how their venture often has been described. The first two, in 1986 at Moscow and 1990 at Seattle, were financial and critical failures, conditions that are not guaranteed to improve in 1994 at St. Petersburg, Russia.

Alabama ready for 1st game with team in Top 25

The Associated Press

There won't be any history majors lined up for Tennessee on Saturday when the 13th-ranked Volunteers meet No. 4 Alabama in one of college football's most traditional rivalries.

"Most of your young people are more interested in today's championship situations and what the rewards are ... than they are about Gene McEver's 1928 kickoff return," Tennessee coach Johnny Majors said.

In fact, most of Tennessee's players would just as soon forget last week's game, too.

The Vols (5-1) are coming off a 25-24 upset loss to Arkansas, while Alabama has won six in a row — this season and over the Volunteers.

The game is crucial to both teams' chances of winning the Southeastern Conference.

"People are talking all the time about how we've not played a Top 25 team," Alabama safety Chris Donnelly said this week. "Well, we're ready for the challenge."

In other Saturday games involving ranked teams, it was No. 1 Washington (5-0) at Oregon, Texas Christian at No. 2 Miami (5-0), No. 3 Michigan (4-0-1) at Indiana, Rice at No. 5 Texas A&M (5-0), No. 6 Florida State (5-1) at No. 16 Georgia Tech (4-1), Oklahoma at No. 7 Colorado (5-0), Arizona at No. 8 Stanford (5-1), No. 20 Boston College (4-0-1) at No. 9 Penn State (5-1), and Vanderbilt at No. 10 Georgia (5-1).

Also, No. 14 Syracuse (4-1) at No. 24 West Virginia (3-0-2), No. 15 Mississippi State (4-1) at South Carolina, No. 17 Virginia (5-1) at North Carolina, California at No. 18 Southern Cal (2-1-1), Duke at No. 19 Clemson (3-2), No. 21 North Carolina State (5-2) at Virginia Tech, UCLA at No. 22 Washington State (5-0), Auburn at No. 23 Florida (2-2), and No. 25 Kansas (4-1) at Iowa.

Eagles, Gilbert spike Vikings

By Mike Miller
Times-News sports editor

TWIN FALLS - What started out as a College of Southern Idaho blowout ended up a five-game grind.

"Thanks to the booming spikes of Liz Gilbert, the Golden Eagles held on for a 15-6, 15-1, 4-15, 15-17, 15-10 win over rival Ricks College Friday night.

"Liz was hot. Liz was on fire," said CSI Coach Ben Stroud. "I kept telling our setters 'Go out. Let her swing.'"

The 5-9 sophomore from Jerome totalled 28 kills for the match, three getting side outs late in the fifth game to hold off a Ricks rally.

CSI led the fifth game 10-5 before the Vikings battled back to 10-9. The Eagles needed eight servers to get the last five points, but only let Ricks sneak in one rally. Nikki Ginn's crosscourt spike finished off the match.

"The middle two games, we really let down mentally," Gilbert said. "It was nice to see we could pick it back up the fifth game and get after them again."

The Eagles held a 10-4 edge in the fourth game. Eight straight points by Ricks got the Vikings on the way to a 14-11 lead. CSI did pull ahead 15-14 before Ricks ended the match on two kills from Alotha Gomez of Lewiston and a block from 6-1 Kristi Stratton of Las Vegas, Nev.

"The fourth game, we had it," Stroud said. "They were ready to die. You could see it in their faces. Then we missed two serves after 11 points."

After winning the first two games easily, the Eagles took a 2-0 lead to start the third. Ricks ran off the next 10 points and coasted.

"We just kind of let down," Gilbert said. "Then we got too tense. When they got a couple points on us we tensed up."

"Those first two games were too easy," Stroud said. "You knew they were going to wake up and start swinging on us."

The win puts CSI at 3-0 in Scenic West Athletic Conference play and 27-8 overall. The Eagles have a virtual lock on a regional tournament berth.

The season-ending CSI-Ricks match in Rexburg Nov. 6 will likely decide which school plays host to the tourney.

The Vikings, now 2-2 with CSI, are 34-5 overall.

Jazz boost coach's contract

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) - Utah Jazz coach Jerry Sloan has been given a raise and a one-year extension on his contract, a deal he described as "more than fair."

Neither Sloan nor Jazz owner Larry Miller would disclose the terms.

The contract was reported in a copyright story in The Salt Lake Tribune.

Sloan's previous contract was signed on April 19, 1991. With the extension, he will be covered through the 1994-95 season.

"The last two years have been a 'fair to me all the way around ... more than fair,'" Sloan said.

He said deals given recently to Larry Brown in Los Angeles, Jerry Tarkanian in San Antonio, Pat Riley in New York and Mike Dunleavy in Milwaukee made Sloan's contract out of date.

In other Jazz news, center Mark Eaton will undergo arthroscopic surgery on his right knee on Monday.

The purpose of the surgery is to repair cartilage damage, which has been causing Eaton discomfort, and to further evaluate the knee, director of operations Scott Layden said in a release.

Layden was not immediately available for additional comment, but Jazz officials are expected to provide more information Monday following the surgery performed by Dr. Lonnie Paulus.

A couple of passes carried to a first down at the Bruin 23-yard line as Twin Falls fans implored the clock to run out.

"This is a big, big win for us," said Judd. "After all the injuries, all the position switching and moving up sophomores, this is a huge win," he corrected himself.

Braves' manager helped build 2 teams

ATLANTA (AP) — In a moment of nostalgia for his days and long nights in Toronto, sweeter in memory than the ones were in reality, Atlanta manager Bobby Cox waxed downright poetic over the city, the club and the old ballpark.

The fast inflow carpet and the wind blowing off Lake Ontario out to right field suited Toronto's style when Cox managed the Blue Jays, and other teams always hated the cold at Exhibition Stadium, the American League's version of Candlestick Park.

He had a batting coach there, a fellow named Gus Gaston, now Toronto's manager, a good baseball man, a guy who studied everything, didn't miss anything and helped a lot of hitters."

On a rainy Friday afternoon in Georgia, Cox put the Braves through their paces, now opening the World Series at home Saturday against the Blue Jays. And as he thought about his tenure in Toronto from 1982 through 1985, he wished only that the teams were going back next week to Exhibition Stadium instead of his high-tech summer, SkyDome.

"I love that organization and the people that run it. They're dynamic people," Cox said. "I loved that old ballpark. That was the bring back a lot of memories."

He conveniently forgot about the flocks of seagulls that circled the field and feasted in the stands, the many seats that faced the wrong way, sometimes hundreds of feet from the diamond, because Exhibition Stadium really was a place for football, not baseball.

And maybe he didn't want to recall that it was the wind in Game 7 of the 1985 AL playoffs that carried Jim Sundberg's bases-loaded fly ball, a routine pop-up anywhere else, on and on from center to the top of the right-field wall, where it bounced back on the field for a triple. That led Kansas City to a victory after Cox's Blue Jays held a 3-1 lead in games and had won 99 games during the regular season.

And that also was the start of all the "choke" talk in Toronto, a burden the team carried through two more playoff failures before finally winning under Gaston this year.

Cox could have stayed in Toronto, despite the criticism and the bitterness of losing. He won the American League Manager of the Year award that season, but when he was needed to make a change after that loss or Cox's desire to get out of the dugout for while and go home to Atlanta, where he managed from 1978 through 1981, he chose to move on. The Braves offered him a spot as general manager and wanted him to oversee the development of the farm system.

"It was a deal of a lifetime for me to come back here," Cox said Friday at the ballpark, a short drive from his home at Marietta, Ga. "In baseball you're surrounded an awful lot from your family. It was important for me to be here. It was a tough decision, real tough because it's a great organization up there and they treated me extremely well."

Cox added the manager's job to his responsibilities on June 22, 1990 as the Braves' founder.

The club skidded through the rest of that season, then hired John Schuerholz as general manager in October, allowing Cox to concentrate solely on managing. "My hiring was to stay as manager," Schuerholz said. "I didn't want him to leave. That was one of the important considerations for me that he stay here as manager because I always had great respect for him when he was managing the Toronto Blue Jays. I thought he was one of the best managers in baseball even then."

Success can be contagious, just as failure can. In Cox, Schuerholz would have a manager with a proven record as a winner who had the experience of working for a team that had been built virtually from the ground up — just as the Braves had to do at that point.

"It's important to have good people like Bobby," said Schuerholz, who helped build a winner with Kansas City from the mid-70s to mid-80s. "I just think the more good baseball people you have, the more people who come from winning programs, the more universal your focus is on winning and on the requirements of winners and what it takes to build winners."

Schuerholz credits Cox's "event-oriented, level-headed approach to all circumstances," knowledge of the game and handling of players as keys to success.

"He seems to have the right touch in all situations," Schuerholz said.

Cox, the National League Manager of the Year last year, sees those same qualities in his World Series rival and friend, Gaston. They call each other on the phone once in a while, mostly to congratulate each other for something. Just a couple of weeks ago, it was to share the thrill of each winning division titles again. And this week, it was to share the joy of a World Series together.

"I'm just happy they got in," Cox said, "because it's such a great organization up there, a class bunch of people and they've been fighting for a few years and getting eliminated all the time. So it's important that they got in this year. I've been pulling for them because of it and my relationships with them."

Aces return from bad outings

ATLANTA (AP) — It looks like an even matchup in the World Series opener. Two of baseball's best pitchers are coming off two of their worst performances.

Toronto's Jack Morris, a snarling competitor who doesn't tolerate losing, slugged it off Friday with a single. "I didn't pitch too good."

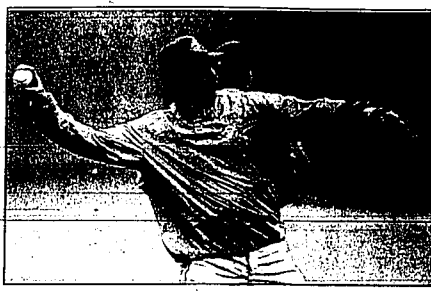

Atlanta's Tom Glavine admitted the obvious: "It was not a very good outing and it's behind me. I've forgotten about it."

Neither wanted to waste time rehashing their failures when the need to succeed is so great in Saturday night's game. Last year's loss to Minnesota was the Braves' only World Series since moving from Milwaukee in 1966. The Blue Jays are in it for the first time.

Morris helped Toronto get there with a 21-6 record that tied him for the most wins in the American League. And he had a 7-1 career postseason record before the playoffs against Oakland.

But he gave up three homers in a complete-game 4-3 loss in the opener. He was much worse in Game 4, allowing five runs in 3 1-3 innings before Toronto rallied from a 6-1 deficit to win 7-6.

Glavine was 20-8, but his 1-5 slide in his last seven starts was a clue that all was not well after he cracked a rib. He was the loser in Game 3 of the playoffs against Pittsburgh and was horrible in Game 6 when he was yanked in the second inning after giving up eight runs.

Jack Morris, left, and Tom Glavine will square off in tonight's first game of the World Series.

"This time of year everything's so magnified and so important that that's how people look at it: what have you done for me lately?" Glavine said. "They don't talk about my 13 straight wins or the fact I won 20 games."

They talk about things like 'he cracked a rib and how it might still be bothering him. He admitted that it might have affected his pitching mechanics but claims he's completely healthy and feels no discomfort."

His windup and mechanics were fine in his last start, he said. He just couldn't spot the ball on either edge of the plate as he wanted.

"I need to establish my fastball on both sides of the plate," Glavine said,

"then the changeup becomes a great pitch for me as long as I can keep their minds on my fastball on the inside corner or outside corner."

"I know at any given time, Tommy can come out and just throw a shutout," Atlanta's Sid Bream said. "If you play long enough, you're going to get beat around a little bit," teammate Jeff Blausier said.

Morris, 37, has played for 16 seasons and has more experience and postseason success than Glavine, 26.

Glavine is 1-1 in the World Series, while Morris is 4-0, including a 10-inning shutout in Game 7 against Atlanta that clinched last year's title for Minnesota.

"That was last year. It's a whole different set of circumstances," Morris said. "I don't know if it's an advantage, having faced Atlanta. They've seen me three times now."

"One big difference is he became a free agent and went to the team he helped beat in last year's AL playoffs. The similarities are both were winning ballclubs that believed in themselves," Morris said. "This club was favored to be in the World Series since last winter. It was different in Minnesota, where we were supposed to finish last."

"There's less pressure when you're not expected to do well."

Gillick's imprint is all over these Blue Jays

By John Steadman

The Baltimore Sun

Advertising what he's going to do or pounding himself on the chest with gestures of self-aggrandizement have never been characteristics of Pat Gillick, who came to baseball as a Baltimore Orioles pitching prospect with a mesmerizing curve and a good enough fastball to attract more than casual attention. Under a hot spring-training sun, he made a promise similar to what has been uttered ad infinitum.

"If I'm not in the major leagues in five more years, I'm quitting," he said. "I have other things I want to do instead of spending all my young years in the minors."

There's hardly a sportswriter in the world who hasn't heard that before, but Gillick was different. At age 26, he fulfilled his own prophecy. He left the field of play and headed in another direction.

Now the Toronto Blue Jays, because of Gillick's intellect and ability to evaluate talent, are in the World Series. Gillick isn't an accident. He was up front when brain power was dispersed. At age 16, he graduated from Notre Dame High School in Sherman Oaks, Calif., and four years later, had a degree in business from the University of Southern California.

That's when he signed with the Orioles and spent the next five seasons in their farm system at such varied addresses as Stockton, Appleton, Little Rock, Elmira, Rochester and Vancouver. That playing background, plus his innate intelligence, has given him an edge over the rest of the crowd as the architect of a baseball team he has personally created.

Gillick, though, was equipped with more than mere baseball mentality. He was quiet, introspective, but not aloof. What was going on in the rest of the world interested him. His manager, Earl Weaver, then picking his way through the same minor-league vineyards, and some of Pat's teammates called him "Yellow Pages."

Why? He just seemed to have more knowledge on diverse subjects than anyone they ever met. Certainly anyone in a baseball uniform. Instead of sleeping until it was almost time to get up and leave for the ballpark, Gillick headed for public libraries early in the morning. While others might be trying to get over a hangover, Gillick was immersed in learning.

He also read newspapers from near and far and absorbed what he perceived as "good books." His mind was retentive. And why not? He was "Yellow Pages."

"I really liked him as a friend," said Barry Shetron, who played with Gillick in the Orioles' organization. "He was plenty smart."

No doubt, Gillick could have been successful in any line of work. There's no substitute for the kind of intelligence he has.

It's interesting, too, to realize he was born into a baseball family. His father, Larry, was a standout pitcher in the Pacific Coast League and later became sheriff of Butte County, Calif. When he died, broadcaster Paul Harvey, reviewing the senior Gillick's law-enforcement career, said the sheriff never tried to become the fastest gun in the west.

According to Harvey, the sheriff was known to have a pocketful of stones, all shapes and sizes, and fired them for strikes at criminals who tried to flee from questioning or arrest. The man's son won't swear the story is true but says it has been told to him by what he considers reliable sources.

Since the Blue Jays were born in 1977, the club's every player trade and purchase has been under his jurisdiction. He was there from the outset of the expansion franchise. Peter Bavasi, first president of the Blue Jays, made an extraordinary admission, which became a rich compliment for Gillick.

It concerned Gillick's desire to deal pitcher Bill Singer to the New York Yankees for a then-unproven Ron Guidry. The Yankees said yes, but Bavasi nixed the transactions. He had never heard of Guidry, but Gillick had since he previously worked in scouting and player personnel for the Houston Astros and New York Yankees.

"After that," said Bavasi, "I told him to just tell me how much money he needed to get a player and I'd give it to him. I probably fooled around with Pat's baseball operations too much but not enough to destroy the team."

Gillick was demeaned by some critics, those who wouldn't know the proverbial prospect from a suspect, and at one point was painted with a brush of criticism that described him as "Stand Pat" Gillick. But he never tried to make headlines, preferring instead to assess quietly what was needed in all situations and then initiate a move.

The Toronto Blue Jays wouldn't be in the World Series without him. Take a ticket on that. A great city and a superb franchise, located in the world's most innovative and luxurious ballpark, SkyDome, truly deserve the guidance of a unobtrusive genius as baseball has ever had. The name again: Pat Gillick.

Souvenir vendors gamble big on success of Braves

ATLANTA (AP) — Vendors rushed to stock the shelves with Atlanta Braves caps, T-shirts and other paraphernalia in anticipation of huge sales during the World Series.

"The sale of souvenirs can go up 200 percent during the playoffs and World Series," said Hugh Gallagher, president of concessions for ARA Services, the company that manages food and merchandise services at Atlanta-Fulton County Stadium and other major league baseball stadiums.

"Fans either want to take home a remembrance of the game or they're looking at it as an investment," he said.

Rodney Hinton is a Columbus, Ga., vendor who gambled big on the Braves' success. When the Braves led the playoffs against the Pittsburgh Pirates last week, Hinton, president of the Atlanta Braves, ordered 4,000 baseball caps proclaiming the Atlanta Braves as National League champions of 1992.

Hinton swatted it out as the Pirates rallied to send the series into the crucial seventh game.

But the Braves game-winning, three-run ninth inning Wednesday night got Hinton off the hook and the caps were on their way to Atlanta merchants by 2 a.m.

Protesters return to demonstrate against tomahawk chop

ATLANTA (AP) — The Atlanta Braves and their tomahawk-chopping fans are headed back to the World Series this year, and so are the American Indian protesters.

Indian leaders, upset that the Braves and their fans still use the Indian mascot and the tomahawk chop, despite numerous protests last year, are hoping more World Series demonstrations and a federal lawsuit will send a louder message.

"I'm sorry, because we felt in spring training that we'd be facing Toronto," Pendleton said. "We thought we'd get another chance to hit Jack."

"We'll be back out there again opposing that type of unnecessary, degrading behavior by the fans. It's still an issue," Aaron Two Elk, an American Indian who has led protests against the Braves, said Friday.

Two Elk, whose class-action lawsuit against the Braves is pending in federal court, said his group is organizing protests for every World Series game between the Braves and the Toronto Blue Jays. The Indians led quiet demonstrations during the last three games of the National League playoffs between the Braves and the Pittsburgh Pirates, he said.

Braves officials did not immediately return telephone calls Friday, but have said the tomahawk chop and Indian paraphernalia are not meant to offend Indians.

At issue is the Atlanta team's use of an Indian name and mascot. The Indians also are upset at fans who wear war paint and feather headdresses and cheer the team with the now-famous tomahawk chop — a swinging elbow to hand motion — and war chant.

"We're still having to convince people that we're human beings worthy of the most basic human respect and dignity. That is outrageous. That is unbelievable," said Ray Apodaca of the National Congress of American Indians.

Markets and the '92 election

Stocks react to campaign, especially the 'Clinton factor'

By Russ Stanton
Orange County Register

Oct. 5 was a wild day on Wall Street, and it probably won't be the last one this month, either.

After plunging more than 100 points — the single biggest drop this year — the Dow Jones industrial average rebounded to close only 21.61 points lower, to 3,179.

Of larger concern is that Monday's shenanigans helped shave more than 200 points off the Dow in the past three weeks, adding credibility to some analysts' contentions that a major market correction is just off. Is the market headed for another crash? Will the election determine which way the market will go this year?

Here are answers to some questions investors were asking themselves.

Q. Why are the markets so jittery?
A. Because interest rates on everything but credit cards are at their lowest levels in nearly 30 years, yet the nation's economy continues to single.

In addition, many analysts are concerned that stocks are fundamentally overvalued, meaning that their prices don't match up with expected earnings increases in the quarters and years ahead.

Investors also are concerned about the uncertainty over the presidential election and whether a new president, specifically Bill Clinton, would be better or worse for the country.

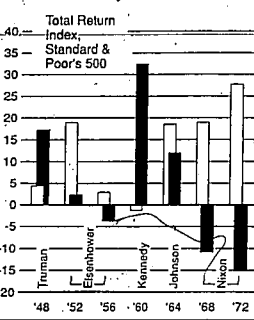

If that weren't enough, the economies and financial markets of most of the major industrialized nations around the world also are hurting.

Japanese financial markets have followed that country's economy downward. Japanese stocks fell seven days straight earlier this month. The Tokyo stock market has rallied in recent months from the lows of the summer. Europe also is experiencing a prolonged recession while wrestling with unifying itself into one giant trading bloc.

That helped trigger last month's currency crisis, which didn't do anything to boost the confidence of investors in the United States.

Q. Does the Dow fall sharply every October?
A. No, it just seems like it.

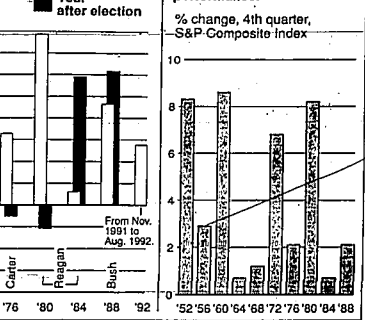

Six of the 10 worst days on Wall Street since 1926 have occurred in October, including the crash of 1987, when the Dow fell 508 points, and the mini-crash of 1989, when it lost about 200 points in one day. (The Dow ended that month down only 1.7 percent.)

In the past 12 years, however, the Dow has ended the month of October higher more times than not.

Actually, September historically has been the worst month of the year to be in the market. Since 1950, the S&P 500 has fallen an average of 1 percent in September. May is the only other month to show a downturn falling an average of less than 0.1 percent the past 42 years.

Q. What happens if Clinton is elected president?
A. Some stock pros believe that the market's upheaval the past few days

... but elections always boost 4th-quarter performance.

KRT Infographics, The Philadelphia Inquirer/DARYL MILES

is a sign that investors are beginning to take into account a Clinton victory. Specifically, they're worried — fairly or not — that the Democrats' return to the White House will result in higher taxes and government spending, which could reignite inflation. That, in turn, would greatly disturb the bond markets, which tend to move in tandem with stocks.

One investment firm, Cowen & Co. of New York, believes that a Clinton presidency will boost the fortunes of energy, heavy construction, communications and low-price retailing companies, but hurt traditional health-care providers and defense contractors.

Hence, the company has lightened its stock portfolio, especially in the latter two industries.

One thing is certain: Wall Street hates change.

Q. What happens if Bush is re-elected?
A. That's hard to say, but the elections in the United Kingdom this spring may provide some insight. After trailing in the polls, British Prime Minister John Major and his Conservative Party rallied for an impressive come-from-behind victory.

The markets responded by adding 150 points over the next month. Then, reality set in. As a steady stream of dismal economic reports continued, the market fell 15 percent over the summer.

Q. What if Ross Perot wins?

A. The Texas billionaire's still appears to be a longshot, according to most polls.

But his economic proposals, which would be a severely bitter pill for the nation's economy to swallow, and the uncertainty of what a Perot presidency would mean would probably drive the markets crazy. Investors likely would react favorably either to his election or to the unknown changes it would bring.

Investors prosper under GOP presidents

NEW YORK (AP) — Over the past 92 years, the return on stocks has seemingly been higher during Democratic than Republican presidential administrations, you consider the inflation factor.

That factor is huge, demonstrated by the fact that it reverses the outcome. That is, after deducting for inflation, the best real returns came during the Republican years.

The results, compiled by Wright Investors' Service, show that in the 52 Republican years the nominal return on stocks was 11.7 percent, compared with 13 percent for the 40 Democratic years.

But, while the real or after-inflation calculation brought the Republican return down to 9.3 percent, it cut the Democratic showing much more, all the way down to 7.4 percent.

The inflation factor was worse on bonds. In nominal terms, bonds averaged an average annual return of 7.2 percent in Republican years versus 3 percent in Democratic years.

John Cunniff
Business

Inflation cut the yield in Republican years, but only to 5.1 percent, regarded as a fair showing. But in Democratic years the return fell all the way to a minus 1.8 percent.

White such comparisons have some value, they also have limitations created by factors such as depression and war. Moreover, one administration may inherit problems from another. And there are factors beyond any administrator's control.

Did the postwar boom, for example, result from administration policies or from pent-up demand? And what role did any administrator play in the baby boom that forced changes in spending and living patterns for decades?

Nevertheless, the investment results associated with the two major parties tend to reinforce public notions of party policies. The results have influenced how people voted in the past and probably will again.

However, voters today are confronted with federal and related concerns that might rate higher importance than investment returns. They're concerned with jobs, debts and incomes, for example, and with financial survival rather than progress.

The economic reality today is that job openings are declining rather than increasing, job insecurity is high, wage increases have stagnated, debts are at suffocating levels, confidence is low and expectations even lower.

In short, rather than hoping to improve living conditions, many families are seeking simply to maintain their current status. Confronted with that reality, investment returns may not rate very highly.

Election poses new worries for U.S. banks

Boston Globe

BOSTON — Just as recession-tossed U.S. banks have begun enjoying themselves again, with profits up and interest rates down, they are facing new worries about sweeping changes on legislative, regulatory and presidential fronts after the Nov. 3 election.

The biggest change would result from the election of Gov. Bill Clinton or Ross Perot as president, either of whom would have a new banking agenda and economic team, not to mention power to almost immediately choose three of the nation's top bank and thrift regulators.

"It's hard to say about Perot, but if Clinton wins, the approach to banking is going to be much different," said Robert Litan, banking scholar at the Brookings Institution, a liberal-leaning Washington think tank.

Litan and other analysts are agents for social and economic change, and that's not the view of banking we've had during the Reagan-Bush years.

But even if President Bush is re-elected, the banking industry knows a sea change is coming in the form of a new economic team and lots of new faces in Congress.

As bankers from around the country gather in Boston this weekend for the annual conference of the American Bankers Association, that knowledge is weighing heavily on their plans for future growth and

"It's going to be a whole new ballgame for the industry, and we're going to have to do everything we can to adjust."

— Edward Yingling, banking lobbyist they hope, long-term prosperity.

"It's going to be a whole new ballgame for the industry, and we're going to have to do everything we can to adjust," said Edward Yingling, a top lobbyist for the bankers' association.

"With Clinton it will be more difficult because they will have to educate a whole new administration on their needs," said L. William Seidman, former chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. "But I think either administration will be moving forward to straighten out legislative problems the industry has."

Among the top priority issues for the nation's bankers are:

• The industry's desperate attempt to reduce its regulatory burden, which according to one study costs more than $10 billion a year.

• Long-sought changes in bankruptcy law to give banks greater powers and protection, particularly in foreclosure situations.

• The removal of barriers to widespread interstate banking.

• An earlier or later easing of the strict separation of commercial banking and investment banking activities.

Repeated attempts to accomplish those goals have been stymied by a variety of factors, including fears among congressional Democrats that because of an unusual number of pending personnel changes on key banking fronts.

For instance, because of a quirk in the S&L bailout law, the next president in February will have to fill all five positions on the board of the FDIC, the agency responsible for insuring the nation's bank deposits. That includes not only the head of the FDIC, but also the comptroller of the currency and the director of the Office of Thrift Supervision.

Bankers are well aware that the three new regulators, as well as other new members of the FDIC's board, will oversee the implementation of new financial standards for banks, that take effect Dec. 19.

Sixty to 80 banks, with $30 billion in assets, are expected to fail capitalization tests established under the new standards, putting them at risk of being closed or merged with other banks by March 1993.

Moreover, there is almost certain to be a new Treasury secretary by January. The current secretary, Nicholas Brady, has said he would not remain in the post for a second term. Bush said he plans to name commission chairman James Baker as his replacement.

Richard Darman and Michael Boskin, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisors.

If Clinton is elected, speculation for the treasury job is focusing on Robert Rubin, a senior partner with Goldman Sachs & Co.; former Federal Reserve chairman Paul Volcker; investment banker Felix Rohatyn; and investment banker Roger Altman, a partner in BancBoston.

James Baker is certain to be what might happen if Perot were to win the presidency.

A huge upheaval also is expected in Congress, including more than 100 new faces in the House. Among the departing congressmen are Reps. Clements, Wylie of Ohio, ranking Republican on the House Banking Committee, and Frank Annunzio of Illinois, the Democratic chairman of the House banking subcommittee on financial institutions. Departing members of the Senate include Jake Garn of Utah, ranking Republican on the Senate Banking Committee.

Meet Your Match

What a fantastic way to meet someone with whom you share things in common (whether it be co-dancing, outdoor activities, or dating). You'll find all types of people - tall, short, energetic, young, old, friendly - searching for a perfect match.

It's easy! All you do is write an ad describing yourself, your interests and/or the type of person(s) you would like to meet. No names, addresses, or phone numbers will appear in the ads to maintain confidentiality. Simply wait for the responses to be forwarded daily, and choose who you would like to contact.

Reading the section daily will increase your chances of finding an intriguing ad that sounds like it may describe your perfect match. Then, you can respond by writing to the box number. All correspondence is handled with the strictest confidentiality by The Times-News.

Ad Cost: *10/1 week, *15/2 weeks, *20/3 weeks.
Included: Daily in The Times-News, Tuesday in Chail and Saturday in Ag Weekly.
Reply Cost: *3 per response or 2 for *5

Of course it's too much!

You know it's coming but new car prices still come as a shock. The problems of traditional used cars offer little comfort even at a lesser price. You do have an alternative. Not the traditional used car where you're so often buying someone else's problems Now you can buy smart. Smartcars™ which are available only at your local Smartcars dealer.

Smartcars™ are extremely low mileage vehicles. They've never been titled to an individual. They're the most popular vehicles available and come with a majority of the manufacturer's warranty. And most important, the initial new-vehicle depreciation has been eliminated making the purchase price far less than the identical new vehicle.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE[®] BOBBY WOLFF

A fanatic is one who can't change his mind and won't change the subject.
— Winston Churchill.

I knew a duplicate expert who, when partnered with an inexperienced player, would never allow the opponents to buy a one-no-trump contract. "I may go for a number much of the time," he averred. "However, that's no different from earning my poor score in defense. With an inexperienced partner, once the opening lead is made, the defense is set in concrete. Only dynamite will work to shift the defense."

A timely shift can also be important at higher contracts.

West made the excellent choice of a low club, the only lead to give his partner a chance. East won the ace and, with his feet in concrete, returned the suit. West won his king, but what was there left to do? Regardless of what West did now, the defense could get no more than one spade, and South made off with 10 tricks. Instead of an automatic return of partner's lead, East should have taken time to count potential defensive winners. Even assuming two club winners and an unlikely winner in trumps, at least one defensive trick must come in spades. Therefore, it's imperative to lead a spade at trick two instead of a lazy club.

With the enlightened spade return, West collects his two spade winners and the club king before declarer gets started. And instead of a successful game, South pays off with one down.
