Legislators hold fund-raising edge

By Drew DeSilver

BOISE — Buoyed by contributions from corporations and political action committees, Magic Valley legislators are maintaining healthy financial advantages over their rivals in next week's elections.

Reports filed with the secretary of state's office indicate that Sen. Dean Cameron, R-Rupert, has raised more money than any other legislative candidate who's filed so far.

Tuesday was the deadline for filing the last reports on campaign contributions and expenditures before the Nov. 3 election. However, reports will not be considered late if they were postmarked Tuesday.

As of Oct. 19, Cameron had more money left in his campaign coffers than his Democratic opponent, Jason Stolldorf of Rupert, had raised the whole year.

Cameron had raised $23,902 in his campaign for the District 24 Senate seat, $5,000 from the state GOP. His Democratic opponent, Jason Stolldorf, had raised only $3,680, $2,000 of it his own money.

Cameron, who sits on the Senate Education Committee, was one of only five Republican legislative candidates in the state to receive money from the Idaho Education Association. The IEA's political action arm gave him $500.

The freshman senator, appointed to his seat last year after Lynn Tominga of Rupert resigned, spent most of his money on signs and newspaper and radio ads. However, he used $1,053 to reimburse his family business, Insurance Benefit Designers of Rupert, for rent, secretarial help and various campaign-related office expenses.

Cameron had $9,238 left at the close of the reporting period, while Stolldorf had $1,233.

Sen. Joyce McRoberts, R-Twin Falls, had raised $12,587 in her District 22

Anti-pornography activists receive their marching orders

By Jim Wilkie

TWIN FALLS — A national anti-pornography group's lawyer came to town to help battle obscenity Tuesday, but none of the prosecutors invited showed up.

Len L. Munsil, chief attorney for the Phoenix-based National Family Legal Foundation, spoke to about 14 people during a 2 1/2-hour law enforcement seminar Tuesday in the KMYT Community Room. Munsil visited Twin Falls as part of this week's White Ribbon Against Pornography.

Two Twin Falls police officers attended the seminar, but the turnout disappointed organizer Sandee Fairbanks who sent 30 letters, early this month, inviting county prosecutors and city attorneys around the Magic Valley.

"I'm lame. I think it's sick," Fairbanks said.

Later Tuesday, local businesses that have taken pornographic material off their shelves were honored by activists at '(Pornography) teaches that women are objects or they're just pieces of flesh.'

— Len L. Munsil, foundation lawyer a City Hall rally. The anti-pornography group also paid tribute to officials they considered to be opponents to pornography.

Munsil told the seminar crowd of mostly anti-pornography activists what it must do to get rid of hard-core porn.

He said obscenity cases can be prosecuted successfully because of Idaho's strong laws. But various obstacles prevent cases from being won or prosecuted in the first place, he said.

One challenge facing activists is making the public opposition against pornography as strong as it is against drugs for example. Too many don't see pornography as causing any harm, Munsil said.

"But we're trying to change that," he said.

Munsil pointed to psychologists who have said that pornography does affect people's behavior and the results end up harming women and children. He said the availability of pornography has a connection to instances of rape.

"Some of the bizarre things they do, they get the idea from this stuff," Munsil said. "(Pornography) teaches that women are objects or they're just pieces of flesh."

The $10 billion pornography industry is mainly controlled by organized crime and Munsil said the five Mafia families that run the business are able to hire high-priced attorneys, Munsil said. These "New York lawyers" succeed in confusing the judge and jury when they go up against the low man on the totem pole who is picked to fight the "smut case," he said.

Iraq export issue brings fresh attack

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The chairman of the Senate Banking Committee accused the Bush administration Tuesday of "putting out false information" on U.S. export of advanced technology to Iraq before the Gulf War.

At a rare hearing during the congressional recess, Sen. Donald Riegle, D-Mich., also criticized the Justice Department for what he called a delay in investigating possible criminal wrongdoing by administration officials.

"It appears on the face of it that laws were broken; the people that did it have to be identified," said Riegle, who was the only committee member present. "The delay cannot go on indefinitely here ... If this Justice Department and attorney general don't do it, then another one will."

Before they were submitted to Congress, documents pertaining to export licenses for Iraq were improperly altered by Commerce Department employees to disguise their military potential, the department's inspector general has found.

Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas, House Banking Committee chairman who has investigated U.S.-Iraq ties for two years, testified that the Bush administration helped the Iraqis build a nuclear "supergun," by approving export licenses in 1989 for related technology.

Gonzalez said the Commerce Department granted an export license in 1989 to Space Research Corp. of Maryland for a computer used to design a projectile for the long-range cannon designed to deliver nuclear weapons. At the time, Gonzalez said, the State Department knew Space Research was engaged in numerous military projects in Iraq.

"Not surprisingly, the State Department misled the public about export licenses approved for Space Research Corp.," Gonzalez said.

Riegle was bolstered in his assertions by testimony from several nuclear technology experts who disputed recent statements by President Bush and top administration officials that U.S. technology was not used in Iraq's nuclear weapons program.

Bush had said in the final presidential debate that "there hasn't been one single scintilla of evidence that there's any U.S. technology involved in it." But the former head of the U.N. nuclear inspectors team in Iraq, David A. Kay, disputed that.

Last week, Bush said he may have "overstated it" in the debate.

At Tuesday's hearing, Kay repeated his

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — "Dear Allen," begins the handwritten note left at the Vietnam Veterans Memorial. "I took me twenty years to contact your parents. I couldn't find a way to say 'You're still saving my life.'"

"I finally did, though. I talked to your father on the phone. It was difficult for both of us but my load is so much lighter now. Johnny, Chip, Ted, Gerald, Bob and Sgt. Jackson are here with you. I miss you all. Love, Brother Lynn."

Above the note is a photo of 10 men in army fatigues and helmets lounging on a makeshift wall of muddy sandbags. The names and location recall a time long ago and a place far away: "Charlie Squad at Con Thien, Feb. 1968. Fox Co, 2nd Battalion, 1st Marines, 2nd Platoon."

The note, part of a new Smithsonian Institution exhibit, includes more detail than many of the anonymous messages and mementoes left beside the black granite wall which bears the names of those who died in Vietnam. But it shares much with them — an effort to deal with the guilt, pain and horrible memories of a war that still troubles Americans 30 years later.

"Sometimes, people make their own decisions about what a monument will be and sometimes they create their own shrines," Roger Kennedy, director of the Smithsonian's National Museum of American History, said of the mementoes on Tuesday. "It's an astonishing and unprecedented expression of a drawing together of people ... and a washing away of division in the presence of great sorrow."

In conjunction with the 10th anniversary of the Vietnam Memorial, the Smithsonian decided to showcase some 500 of the more than 25,000 heart-wrenching items, notes and artifacts that have been left at the wall since it opened on Veterans' Day, 1982.

"There have been some very somber moments as we've worked on this exhibition," said Ed Ezell, a Smithsonian curator who oversaw the project. "You cannot work with these objects and not be touched with the intense human drama that the Vietnam War represented to this nation."

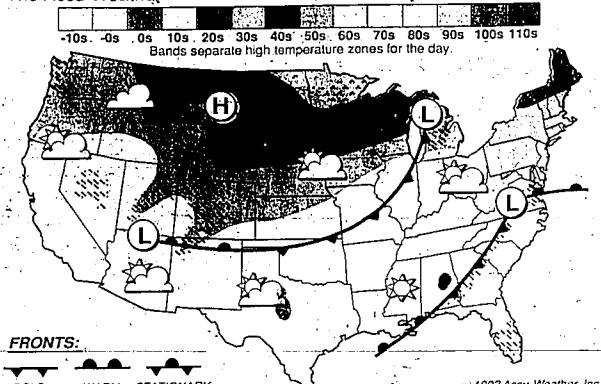

Reporters examine exhibits at the Smithsonian Institution commemorating the 10th anniversary of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial.

Teddy Keeton of Buhl. Keeton had raised a total of $2,874, $1,747 from herself.

Rep. Colin Gould, R-Buhl, who is running against veteran activist

William Chisholm for one of District 22's two House seats. He had raised $9,432 to Chisholm's $1,096.

Rep. Doug Jones of Filer, the Republican candidate in the other District 22 House seat, had raised $5,520 to independent McMurrain's $1,469. McMurrain, a frequent unsuccessful candidate for various public offices, said he raised all but $125 of his campaign funds at yard sales.

Several businesses and PACs showed up frequently on incumbents' disclosure reports. A few examples:

Timber PAC, a group representing Idaho's forest-products industry, has given $1,000 to Cameron and $500 each to McRoberts, Gould and Jones.

Union Pacific railroad gave $750 each to Cameron and Gould, and $500 to McRoberts.

The Idaho Medical PAC, representing the state's physicians, gave $400 to Cameron and McRoberts, $300 to Jones and $200 to Gould.

West One Bancorp gave $250 each to Cameron, McRoberts, Gould and Jones.

One candidate, Peter Janss of Bliss, has bypassed outside funding sources completely. Janss, a Republican who is challenging Rep. Clint Stennett for one of the District 21 House seats, has spent $7,681 of his own money on his campaign.

Area candidates whose disclosure reports had not arrived at the secretary-of-states-office-by-late-Tuesday afternoon include Stennett; Sen. John Peavey, D-Carey, who is running for the District 21 Senate seat; Rep. Pattie Nalziger, D-Wendell, who is running for the other District 21 House seat; GOP Rep. Ron Black and Democrat Gary Robbins, who are vying for one of the District 23 House seats; and Democrat Rep. Leanna Lassen of Mountain Home and Republican Robb King of Glenns Ferry, who are competing one of the District 20 House seats.

Casino opponents outspend Idaho tribes

BOISE (AP) — Supporters of the constitutional amendment to ban casino gaming everywhere in Idaho are outspending the proposition's critics, led by the state's Indian tribes, by a two to one margin.

Campaign finance reports filed with the Secretary of State's office on Tuesday showed the anti-gambling coalition called "Yes! We Want No Casinos" spent nearly $25,000 through Oct. 1.

Sixty percent of that went to media advertising in a campaign that has been low-keyed.

On the other side, Citizens Against HJR 4 headquartered in Lapwai on the Nez Perce Indian Reservation spent $13,000, all of it on its media campaign to convince voters the amendment would only violate tribal sovereignty and undermine Indian efforts to bolster depressed reservation economies. All the money for the campaign against the proposal came from the Nez Perce Tribal Executive Committee.

The pro-amendment financial support appeared to be broad-based. There were only two major contributors — Morrison Knudsen Corp. with $5,000 and Twin Falls businessman George Detweiler with $5,000.

The anti-casino forces got over $13,000 in contributions of less than $50 each.

But despite the discrepancy in financial resources to press their positions, public opinion polls have indicated some support for the Indian stand on the amendment.

Earlier this week, anti-casino forces won a victory when the Supreme Court refused to block the vote on the amendment, rejecting the Nez Perce challenge to the validity of the voter pamphlet explanation. The tribe claimed the pamphlet was misleading.

That's where the National Family Legal Foundation can come in. The non-profit organization, whose board of directors includes former U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese, tries to help prosecutors bridge the gap by serving as a resource in obscenity cases.

Using precedents as examples, Munsil told the crowd the three-prong test of what prosecutors need to show judges and juries in obscenity cases.

The first is proving the material panders to a prurient interest and shows a shameful, morbid interest in sex.

The second-prong is patent offensiveness such as material showing specific sex acts that are described in statutes.

The third is whether a reasonable person thinks the material lacks serious literary, artistic, political or scientific value.

Munsil also offered advice on preventing hard-core pornography businesses from moving into an area.

He said adult bookstores can't be zoned out of existence but zoning laws and fees charged to cover background investigations can help discourage such businesses from starting up.

Although his organization battles hard-core pornography, Munsil encouraged people to "politely" urge present businesses to stop selling soft-core pornography that is protected under the First Amendment.

Presidential candidates won't talk about root causes of urban riots

WASHINGTON (AP) — Talking is what presidential candidates do for a living, but some things they don't mention.

They don't much discuss problems that they know would confront them in office but that don't lend themselves to painless solutions — or, sometimes, any presidential solution. Those are the unmentionables of politics. There are plenty of them that George Bush, Bill Clinton and Ross Perot haven't said much about: —Not much these days about rebuilding Los Angeles or dealing with the root causes of urban eruptions even though, in the days after the riots, that killed 53 people and injured nearly 2,400, both Bush and Clinton toured the ashes and vowed to make things better. Clinton said the rioting raised an issue: Could America "make some good" come out of it? Bush said he would work to give the victims "a shot at the American dream." • Not much about the financial crises facing many American cities, losing their tax bases as demands for services rise. Or the decaying infrastructure, as dramatized by the flooding of downtown Chicago last spring. • Nothing about the growing list of countries — some, like Iran and North Korea, hostile to the U.S. — that are getting close to being able to manufacture nuclear weapons. • Nothing about whether the U.S. has a role to play in ending the bloodshed in what was once Yugoslavia or in rescuing the 400,000 people of Sarajevo who, U.N. officials say, face death by starvation or by freezing this winter unless the world finds a way to deliver 200 tons of food a day.

Bush Clinton Perot

Presidential scholar Henry Graff of Columbia University says Clinton especially has no reason to discuss dispatching U.S. forces to keep the peace there. That would just reawaken talk that "the Democrats always get us into war," he says. "Besides, it's an unanswerable question." • Nothing about the possibility some would say the likelihood that the former states of the Soviet Union will slide into chaos, anarchy or totalitarianism or will require huge amounts of Western aid to survive as democracies.

• Not much about how the candidates are likely to select new justices for the Supreme Court, among the most far-reaching acts of any president. Three or more appointments could be made by the next president. • And, until a questioner brought the matter up in the final presidential debate, nothing about what some observers call "the December surprise" — a banking crisis akin to the S&L collapse. One study, disputed by bankers and by the Treasury Department, says 1,150 banks are solvent only on paper; it foresees a $75 billion bank bailout — after the election. As a consequence of the silence of the candidates, the presidency they describe on the stump doesn't look much like the one the winner will confront in office.

didn't mention a ticking time bomb that preoccupies his good friend, Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady. The secretary spent much of the summer drawing up plans for a government bailout of a collapsing savings and loan industry.

Sixteen days after Bush took office, the crisis was acknowledged and the newly installed president offered a costly plan to deal with it. "Nothing is without pain when you come to solve a problem of this magnitude," he said. So far it has cost taxpayers $87 billion they didn't expect to have to spend. When a candidate is silent on the real problems that will confront the president, he cannot claim to be marching orders — a mandate — to deal with them. "Our tradition in politics has not been to use election campaigns as a way to get the prior approval of voters for solutions," says political scientist Bruce Buchanan of the University of Texas.

Polls show Bush perilously low in some states

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans' economic worries and desire for change are proving stiff obstacles to a comeback for President Bush, who is making late progress in a handful of traditional Republican states, but in others has stalled or even slipped.

The incumbent president has even slipped below 20 percent in some recent overnight tracking polls, according to pollsters in both parties who are not involved in the presidential campaign. They predicted Bush ultimately would fare better in those states, but said the numbers underscore the president's troubles in the final days before the election. Several pollsters interviewed Tuesday said Bush's standing is remarkably stagnant in national surveys because so many voters are convinced he is not the best choice to run the economy. "The feeling was that he wasn't paying as much attention as they wanted, him to pay to the central thing — which is jobs and the economy," said Andrew Kohut, director of surveys for Times Mirror Center for the People & The Press, which has polled 1,200 voters 10 days apart this month and found no movement toward Bush.

One alarming sign for Bush: pollsters in New England say Clinton has stretched a tiny lead over Bush in New Hampshire to double digits in recent days. New Hampshire last supported a Democrat for president in 1964.

Also, pollsters trying to gauge the impact of Ross Perot's unsubstantiated allegations of a Republican smear campaign say there was movement away from Perot in Monday night polls in Wisconsin and Michigan, with Clinton the beneficiary. Interviews Tuesday with a dozen pollsters across the country and recent national survey data offered ample evidence of the obstacles Bush faces in generating a last-week comeback, and few-encouraging signs for the president. Even with good economic news Tuesday, pollsters said, it likely is too late for Bush to repair his image on the issue of most concern to voters.

Historically low prices... Two pairs of eyeglasses for $98!

Our low eyeglass prices may sound like something from the distant past, but they are actually the result of some very modern methods.

To be profitable selling quality eyewear at prices as low as ours requires state-of-the-art efficiency in all phases of the business: computerized manufacturing, volume purchasing, and expertly managed stores.

So how can less efficient companies afford to offer some of those low prices you see advertised?

Maybe it's because their prices sound better than they really are. Is the "second pair free" only when you buy their $200 glasses? Are their $59 glasses only from a "special selection" of twelve frame styles?

No fly-by-night pricing here

We don't try to create the impression of value with cleverly worded low price specials.

A pair of our glasses — complete with single vision plastic lenses — is $59. A second pair, same prescription, same visit, is just $39. Most bifocals $20 more a pair. No tricks here. Consumer spending boosts economic growth in 3rd quarter

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer spending powered the economy to a stronger-than-expected 2.7 percent growth rate in the July-September quarter, the government said Tuesday in the last major economic report before Election Day.

The seasonally and inflation-adjusted growth in the gross domestic product, while far less robust than past recovery periods, still was nearly double what analysts predicted.

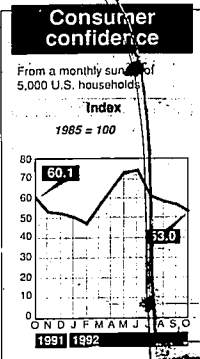

President Bush, playing catchup to Democrat Bill Clinton, immediately hailed the number as evidence of a turnaround, but private economists weren't convinced, with one going so far as to contend that the administration "cooked the books" to come up with the positive news.

"The Democrats keep telling us that everything is going to hell, but they are wrong," Bush said while campaigning in Des Moines, Iowa.

Bob Dole of Kansas, the Senate Republican leader, said the report offered "a strong signal that things are looking up."

Commerce Secretary Barbara Huckman Franklin said it means "consumers are starting to spend again, having been through a cautious year."

But the number shocked private economists, who were predicting only a 1.5 percent advance, the same as the second quarter. Previous reports for the period had shown industrial production stagnating and the number of jobs falling.

Source: The Conference Board

"I think they cooked the books. The numbers don't add up at all," said economist Michael K. Evans, a Washington-based consultant who is a Republican. "This ... sounds like the dirty-tricks department."

However, the Commerce Department's top economist, Under Secretary J. Antonio Villamil, said the bulk of the third quarter growth came from consumer spending, an area for which the department has hard data, rather than from areas such as trade, inventories and construction, which are partially estimated.

"This is based on solid evidence ... not on our assumptions. ... We go by the book and we call it like we see it," he said.

Even economists who stopped short of questioning the integrity of the statistics said they may simply represent a continuation of the stop-and-go pattern that has characterized the economy since the start of the recession in July 1990.

"This cannot be taken as a sign that the economy is all of a sudden snapping out of the doldrums," said Bruce Steinberg of Merrill Lynch in New York.

The GDP rebound from the second quarter was attributed largely to a resurgence in consumer spending at a 3.1 percent annual rate. It had slipped 2.1 percent in the first quarter of the second quarter.

Government spending also boosted the GDP. It was up at a 2 percent rate, the strongest in 21 months. Military spending increased at a 6.9 percent rate, the first rise after five quarters of decline.

Housing construction rose at a slight 0.4 percent annual rate. Business investment was up at a 0.3 percent rate. An 8.5 percent increase in spending on capital goods such as computers offset a 17.7 percent drop in spending on new buildings.

Additions to inventories also contributed to growth in the third quarter. However, the nation's trade balance deteriorated, detracting from growth.

Meanwhile, an inflation measure tied to the GDP rose at a 2.1 percent annual rate, the best since the department began calculating it in 1982.

Although the administration touted consumer spending for building up the economy, another report issued Tuesday said American consumers' confidence in the economy declined in October for the fourth consecutive month to the lowest level in eight months. That report came from The Conference Board, a private business organization in New York.

Meanwhile, the Labor Department said American workers' wages, salaries and benefits rose 3.5 percent in the year ended Sept. 30, the smallest increase in five years.

Later this week, the Commerce Department will publish figures on personal income, durable goods orders and new home sales in September.

But Tuesday's report, dealing with the economy as a whole, amounts to the last economic report card of the Bush administration.

The latest quarter marked the fourth best GDP showing of George Bush's presidency, but it still left his administration with paltry average annual growth of just 0.8 percent.

Still, the latest spurt put the total of goods and services produced in the United States at an annual rate of $4.92 trillion, just above the $4.9 trillion highwater mark reached before the recession.

To economists, that marks an important milestone: the end of the recovery and the start of a new expansion. But they noted that the six-quarter recovery was the longest on record since the Depression.

Elect Peter Janss

State Representative — Government —

My opponent is all across the political spectrum. For those whose politics lie to the far right, there is his legislation to shift education funds from the poor schools to the wealthy. To the left is the recycling bill, directing the Department of Transportation to replace gravel with crushed glass. This law will crowd out private enterprise, freeze the technology at its most primitive level, and raise your taxes - since crushed glass is several times more expensive than gravel. He has said that domestic water users are junior to irrigators, which is not true. He wants to tax incoming nuclear waste, which is unconstitutional.

The only unifying theme running through this broad sweep of law and opinion is his desire to please everyone.

If we try to please everyone, government will continue to grow and become more costly. As a legislator, I will be guided by a strong sense of restraint - that government action should be the last option, not the first.

Columbia's astronauts rock 'n' roll around world

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Columbia's astronauts rocked and rolled around the world Tuesday, sharing their orbital musical selections with MTV viewers.

Oh yes, they also conducted more experiments.

Pilot Michael Baker celebrated his 39th birthday in orbit Tuesday. Mission Control marked the occasion by piping up the Beatles tune "Birthday" for the crew's wakeup call.

The crew of five-men and one-woman listens to such stars as Eric Clapton and Ringo Starr during off hours in orbit.

Commander James Wetherbee, a drummer in an astronaut rock band called Max Q, said in an interview with the music video cable TV network that playing the drums is "a pretty fun diversion from an otherwise dull and boring profession."

"No, honestly, launching into space, sitting on top of 3½ million pounds of explosive propellant ... I don't get nervous about that at all," Wetherbee said. "But I tell you what, getting up in front of people and playing on stage, with my talent, really scares me."

"They're not really to give up their day jobs yet," astronaut Charles Lucy Veach quickly added.

Wetherbee assured MTV viewers that none of the astronauts had spied any UFOs since they arrived in orbit Thursday.

"The last thing that my mum said to me before I launched was don't talk to strangers when I come up here," joked Canadian astronaut Steven MacLean.

With five days left in the 10-day mission, Wetherbee climbed into a waist-high vacuum sack that forced blood from his upper body into his legs. It was his second depressurization session and, at four hours, the longest.

Car crash interrupts soap opera

GRAND ISLAND, Neb. (AP) — A woman got more drama than she bargained for while watching her afternoon soap opera: A car crashed into her living room.

"I saw the wall coming up, I thought it was blowing up," said Alice Garza. She was lying on the couch Monday when the car came through the wall, landing between her and the television.

A pickup truck collided with the car on the street and the car's driver lost control, driving across two lawns and into Garza's living room, police said.

The driver of the car was not injured. Garza suffered only a strained shoulder.

EPA proposes controls on smog pollutants

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Environmental Protection Agency on Tuesday proposed controls on smog-causing pollutants from factories and electric power plants. State officials, however, said the rules are too weak and may hinder efforts to improve urban air quality. The EPA's regulations for controlling nitrogen oxide are among a string of rules the White House plans to push out this week in an attempt to counter criticism that President Bush has been "slow" in implementing a new clean air law.

Nitrogen oxide, which is produced by the burning of fossil fuels, is a component of urban smog as well as a cause of acid rain. While the EPA long has controlled the chemical's release from automobiles, it has never before restricted its release from electric power plants and industrial boilers.

Under the regulation proposed Tuesday, nitrogen oxide emissions from about 200 coal-fired utility boilers will be cut by 2 million tons a year by 2000, according to the EPA. A final rule is expected to be issued soon. A separate regulation provides guidance to states for restricting nitrogen oxide releases from other industrial sources to meet urban smog requirements.

William Rosenberg, the EPA's assistant administrator for air programs, said the reductions will be made while still providing industry with flexibility on control equipment and deadlines to save costs.

The regulations, however, raised concerns from state pollution control officials, who called the EPA standards too weak to ensure that cities will be able to comply with federal air quality requirements.

"The EPA's (pollution) limits are disappointing," said Bill Becker, executive director of two associations representing the country's state and local air pollution control officials.

He said the EPA ceiling on allowable nitrogen oxide releases from industrial boilers under the smog provision is nearly a third greater than levels recommended by the state and local officials as necessary to meet federal air quality improvement goals.

The EPA's latest air quality assessment, released last week, showed that more than 86 million people live in urban areas that do not meet federal health standards for smog.

While much of the smog problem is attributed to pollution from motor vehicles, state air control authorities believe strong measures must be taken against industrial and utility polluters as well if urban areas are to come into air quality compliance.

"Not only has EPA adopted a lowest-common-denominator approach, but it has done so six months after state and local regulators overwhelmingly adopted a (more stringent) control strategy," Becker said in a statement. He represents the State and Territorial Air Pollution Program Administrators and the Association of Local Air Pollution Control Officials.

The EPA rule on nitrogen oxide emissions also brought criticism from environmental groups.

Bush signs bill releasing JFK material

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush signed legislation Tuesday requiring government agencies, including the FBI and CIA, to release secret material on the assassination of President Kennedy.

The law, known as the so-called JFK bill into law in Paducah, Ky. "I sign this bill in the hope that it will assist in healing the wounds inflicted on our nation almost three decades ago," Bush said in a statement issued after the signing.

Pentagon to continue MIA search

WASHINGTON (AP) — A five-man team will travel to Vietnam later this week to continue the search for new material that could help resolve the cases of American servicemen still missing from the Vietnam War, the Pentagon said Tuesday.

"That's when we expect to get more pictures," Pentagon spokesman Pete Williams said at a briefing.

Last week, a U.S. delegation headed by retired Gen. John Vessey returned from Vietnam with a promise that Hanoi would share all its information on American servicemen still missing from the war.

In the months before the agreement was announced, the Pentagon had been given nearly 4,800 photos of individuals, artifacts and crash sites, most of them funneled through an American researcher in Hanoi.

Williams called the development a breakthrough in attempts to resolve the cases of the 2,265 men still unaccounted for in the wake of the Vietnam conflict.

The spokesman said the team will be headed by Bob DeStatte, a member of the Pentagon's joint task force that is seeking to resolve the cases.

DeStatte will be accompanied by three military officers and the researcher Ted Schweitzer, who disclosed the existence of the photos and other material to the Pentagon, Williams said. The spokesman said officials hope the team, which will begin searching other archives and help organize the study of additional data promised by Vietnam, will be able to find "some correlating data that will allow us to further learn" from the 4,000 pictures that have been made available.

Pentagon officials said the new information had helped them resolve the fate of four missing Americans.

Navy admirals receive no more punishment

WASHINGTON (AP) — Acting Navy Secretary Sean O'Keefe has decided that no further punishment should be given two top Navy admirals who lost their jobs for failing to aggressively pursue an investigation into the Tailhook sex abuse scandal, Navy sources said Tuesday.

O'Keefe, in a letter to the Pentagon's inspector general, said "no further action is warranted" against Rear Adm. Duvall Williams, the former commander of the Naval Investigative Service, and Rear Adm. John Gordon, the Navy's judge advocate general, said the sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity. The decision allows both men to retire in their current grades. Williams is a one-star while Gordon is a two star admiral.

A third admiral who was also criticized for failing to pursue the matter, Rear Adm. George Davis, the Navy's inspector general, was ordered resign.

Janitors trash butts

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — A museum exhibit director was right to think 1,000 pigareps' butts would show how disgusting smoking is. They were so disgusting, the cleaning crew threw them out.

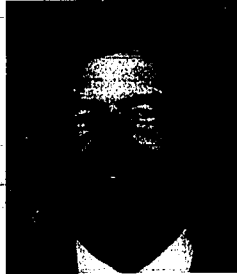

"They didn't smell very good, I have to admit," said Tom Gilie, who had gathered the butts for the exhibit at the new Museum of Discovery and Science in Fort Lauderdale. "But I was very disappointed."

R.I.P. Idaho Right to Work 1985-1993?

Call Governor Bill Clinton at 1 (800) 325-9992

Call Congressman Richard Stallings at 1 (208) 336-1992

Will Clinton and Stallings Kill Idaho's Right to Work Law?

A Warning to Idaho Workers, Small Businesses, Taxpayers and Consumers from the National Right to Work Committee

Bill Clinton and Richard Stallings Want to Force You to Pay Union Dues to Work in Idaho

As Governor, Bill Clinton bragged about his state's Right to Work law to lure new jobs and small businesses to Arkansas. In fact, Arkansas' Right to Work law (which allows workers to choose whether or not to pay union dues) enabled Bill Clinton to boast that his state "ranks 1st in the country in growth of new jobs ... and 4th in income increase."

'Whatever Y'all Want': Clinton Trades Right to Work for Big Labor Support

But to win the support of Organized Labor's massive political machine (which dumps over $350 million into federal elections each year), Bill Clinton now promises the AFL-CIO he'll betray his own state — and yours — by repealing all 21 state Right to Work laws.

In his campaign book, Putting People First, Bill Clinton wrote the magic words union officials so want to hear: "I support repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act." Section 14(b) authorizes state legislatures to enact Right to Work laws. Repeal of Section 14 (b) would repeal all 21 state Right to Work laws — including Idaho's.

Unless you change Bill Clinton's mind, he and Senate Candidate Richard Stallings may repeal your Right to Work law and force tens of thousands of Idaho workers to pay union dues or be fired. Thousands of jobs would be lost forever.

HELP SAVE IDAHO'S RIGHT TO WORK! Tell Clinton and Stallings not to force Idaho workers to pay union dues.

This advertisement is paid for with voluntary contributions from Idaho members of the National Right to Work Committee who believe that every worker should have the right, but not be compelled, to join a union in order to get or keep a job.

To help protect Idaho's Right to Work law, defray the cost of this advertisement, or for more information (including copies of the candidates' Right to Work Candidate Surveys), please:

- 1) Call 1 (800) 325-7892, or
- 2) Mail a contribution payable to NRTWC, 8001 Braddock Road, #500, Springfield, VA 22160.

(Contributions are not tax deductible.)

Congressman Richard Stallings also Betrays Idaho's Right to Work Law

Last year, Congressman Stallings voted to enact Senate Ted Kennedy's Pushbutton Strike bill, (S. 55). The Strike bill would have forced workers to strike. Union "organizers" would call virtually any strike they wish and win any strike they incite. Employers could be forced to fire workers who disobey union strike orders.

If Congressman Stallings had prevailed, Kennedy's Pushbutton Strike bill would have blown a gaping hole in Idaho's Right to Work law. Kennedy's Strike bill sailed through the U.S. House of Representatives ... thanks to Congressman Stallings.

Congressman Stallings is Hiding from YOU

Hundreds of Idaho members of the National Right to Work Committee have contacted Congressman Stallings urging him to answer the Committee's Candidate Survey. But Congressman Stallings refuses to tell you whether he'll defend your Right to Work law in the U.S. Senate next year.

Congressman Stallings' opponent, Dirk Kempthorne, pledges to support Right to Work 100% — especially Idaho's Right to Work law. Congressman Stallings should publicly vow to support Right to Work, too.

Union Control over the White House and Congress = Forced Unionism

UNLESS YOU TURN BILL CLINTON and RICHARD STALLINGS AROUND ON RIGHT TO WORK NOW, union power brokers may be able to pass just about any law they want in the first 100 days of a Clinton Administration.

Right now is the best time. Now's when the politicians are still listening to YOU. Give 'em an earful.

Tell Bill Clinton and Richard Stallings:

Hands Off the Freedom and Jobs of Idaho Citizens!

Opinion

Editorial

Bush is wisest choice for America's future

In what is probably the most unusual presidential campaign in recent memory, Americans will select from three serious contenders on Tuesday. We believe the choice should be President George Bush, but that a vote for Ross Perot is an honorable alternative.

Why not Clinton

First, as to the Democratic contender, Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton. Clinton has raised several serious and interesting proposals in his campaign. The one we like best is his idea to create a national college support fund to help deserving young people gain higher education. They would then pay back the loans the election, he is clearly behind, and unlikely to capture the electoral votes necessary.

The case for Bush

Not entirely though his own fault, Bush has become the latest in a string of presidents whom Americans love to hate. He has been far from perfect. His slavish groveling to the Republican Party's right wing has demeaned him and cost him broad support.

Clinton has no foreign policy experience or program) are well-through payroll deductions in their working years, a little at a time. This idea would be, in effect, a GI Bill for the 1990s and it would help bring about a national objective of improving education for millions of young people.

The end of the Cold War is a great achievement for which Bush and his predecessor, Ronald Reagan, deserve the credit. His victory in the confrontation with Iraq was also a major accomplishment.

Bush has the ability to thread carefully the minefields of international affairs and his vision for an export-led free trade zone covering Canada, the United States and Mexico will make all Americans richer and more secure.

The inevitable conclusion is that he would either increase the deficit, raise taxes, or both. Clinton argues that he can raise taxes on the "rich" to accomplish his objectives, but virtually no economist outside Clinton's campaign thinks taxing the rich alone will suffice.

Bush is an honorable and decent man who has accomplished much and been given little credit from any quarter. One example: AIDS funding in the Bush administration has increased dramatically, and on a per-patient basis is many times higher than federal spending on other diseases, such as cancer.

Clinton and his wife, Hillary, come from a tradition of lawyer activism in which government uses the court system to advance social causes. It is not by accident that Clinton has broad support of yuppie members of the American bar.

Bush has had the unfortunate fate as president of dealing with an angry, Democratic-controlled Congress that has passed a lengthy list of partisan legislation and left him no alternative but to veto. He admits to a mistake in agreeing to a tax increase, but it is beyond us why people would now vote for Clinton, who promises one.

The so-called "character" issues also are worth discussing. Clinton's organizing of protests in a foreign land was indeed different from merely opposing the Vietnam War. Throughout the campaign, his disingenuous replies to questions about marital fidelity, marijuana use and the draft have been even more disturbing than the questions themselves.

Bush is, in our view, the best choice.

A choice of visions

It is a point we have made before, but it appears now that if Bush loses, it will be because we all have become an entitlement-driven culture, a people unwilling to either sacrifice or invest, a people willing to follow our leaders only so far as they fulfill our most immediate gratifications.

The Perot card

Traditionally, a vote for a third-party candidate is a wasted protest, but a vote for Perot, in our view, does not fit that definition.

Bush offers steady, long-range conservative values. He is right when he says the election revolves around issues of trust and character.

Perot is the only candidate in the race who has offered credible solutions to the national deficit. His proposals to raise the gas tax and to curb entitlement growth are both realistic and fair.

Perhaps we are a bit old-fashioned, but we agree with Bush's call for limited government, lower taxes, and a world made safer by strength, individual self-reliance, initiative and hard work.

He is the only candidate who talks realistically about the legacy we will leave our children if the deficit is not controlled.

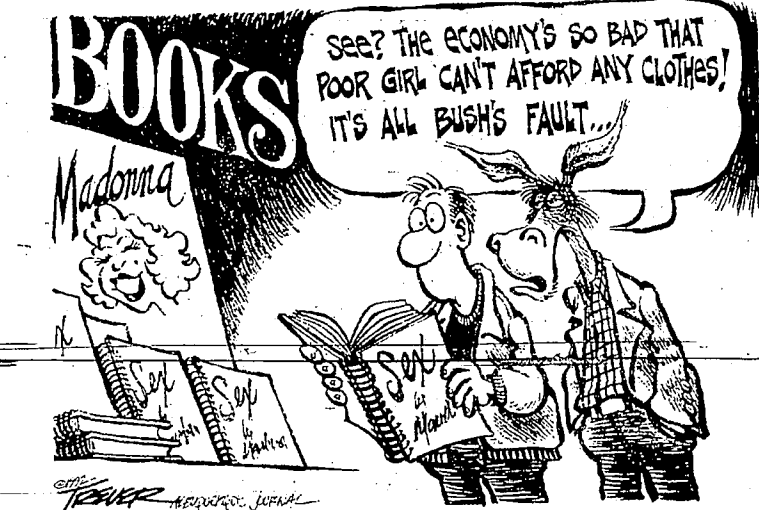

Stallings is opposed to oil drilling in the ANWR. Richard is the only Northwest congressman to support restoring our salmon runs.

Perot's experience in other aspects of government is limited, but he has the ability to attract intelligent and thoughtful competitors. The government he would put together would, in our view, be credible on the world scene.

We ask you to be very clear on the kind of change you seek for Idaho this year. Kempthorne says "It's time for a change." To us that means a change from Syms, not just in name and looks but in philosophy and vision. Vote for Richard Stallings for U.S. Senator.

Unfortunately, Perot's campaign has been hampered by his in-again-out-again-in-again mercurial style. A week before

No need for another Syms

One of this state's political tragedies came in the 1980 election when Sen. Frank Church was defeated by Steve Syms and the ultra-right wing political machine. During the 12 years of Steve Syms in office, Idaho gained notoriety as the home of Steve Syms, the young protégé of Jesse Helms and the arch conservatives.

The same highly finagled machine that backed Syms in the '80s is now packaging and funding Dirk Kempthorne's race against Congressman Richard Stallings. He is the right wing's Boy Syms of the '90s. Kempthorne endorses Bush's choice of Syms as secretary of the interior.

Don't be fooled by this demagogic calendar candidate. He is no supporter of Idaho's environment. Take a look at some of the issues that Kempthorne chooses to ignore in favor of elevators and subways: Kempthorne supports Complex 21, a consolidation of nuclear weapons facilities at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory. Stallings has worked for eight years to redirect the INEL from a site relying on weapons and nuclear waste to a diversified energy research and development center with a waste cleanup - not a waste-generating emphasis.

Kempthorne has denounced additional wilderness areas for the state. Stallings supports further wilderness and listens to sportsmen and conservationists on this issue.

Kempthorne supports drilling for oil in the A. Reata National Wildlife Refuge and he would clearly try to weaken the Endangered Species Act, lessening protection for salmon and Idaho's water.

Stallings is opposed to oil drilling in the ANWR. Richard is the only Northwest congressman to support restoring our salmon runs.

We ask you to be very clear on the kind of change you seek for Idaho this year. Kempthorne says "It's time for a change." To us that means a change from Syms, not just in name and looks but in philosophy and vision. Vote for Richard Stallings for U.S. Senator.

Country needs Griz

Well, Perot is back in the race. People are excited. Finally we will have some change. But how can you expect change from a wishy-washy president. The hopes and dreams of being able to finally have change for the better in the government flew out the window when he got in.

But it opened up a new door for many people. On the search to find a new candidate who will support the rights of the people. We found him! Lt. Col. James "Bo" Griz. He is for change. Not only does he state what he wishes to change, but he has a well-researched plan on how to achieve each goal.

This man is a person, not some pony who avoids all of your questions by giving double talk, beating around the bush or

Attacks on Stallings unfounded

Give me some credit for having a brain. I realize that I am just a "woman" voter who should not focus on the issues. But these mindless attacks on Richard Stallings and his co-conspirator role in a Washington, D.C.-based takeover of Idaho's vested interests have gone too far.

Richard Stallings has been Idaho responsive in the congressional quagmire. Richard Stallings has gained the respect of Idaho and the nation for his devotion to the people and principles who elected him.

Let us not go back to politicians who are insulated from us by partisan party politics. Those politicians have embarrassed Idaho on the national level. Please join me in supporting Richard Stallings.

McRoberts deserves your vote

I'm writing to endorse the candidacy of Sen. Joyce McRoberts. I've served in joint leadership with Joyce McRoberts the last two years in the Idaho Legislature. I can personally testify that she is an important contributor in our joint meetings.

I can also verify that she works long, tedious hours in her leadership position and in representing her constituents. She is always accessible to her constituents. She not only works hard during the legislative session but also during the weeks and months in the remainder of the year.

So it is that I can recommend to the voters of District 22, without equivocation, the reelection of Sen. Joyce McRoberts.

Examine Stallings' record

I will agree that Richard Stallings voted against a pay raise early in his term, and he set up scholarships with the money after the raise was voted in, but it seems I remember he used some of that money to buy a car.

After his purchase was revealed he said he had only borrowed the money.

Has there only been one pay raise since he took office, and if there was another, did he accept it or set up more scholarships, and did he vote for or against it?

Support Tousley for sheriff

There are four good men in our county running for the position of sheriff:

They are men who are our friends and neighbors; they are fathers and husbands; they are all taxpayers and in many ways very much like each of us.

When it is time to cast our ballots on Nov. 3 for one of these four fine men, we must vote for the man who is most qualified.

If you would only take the time to make a list of the qualifications each of these men have which will be a benefit in the years they will serve us as sheriff, you'll be able to make the correct decision.

After you have listed the qualifications of each of the four good men, you will find that one of them is far-better qualified to be our sheriff. This person is Wayne Tousley. He has a much better-rounded total list of qualifications.

We have had the privilege for many years of having a man qualified to be our sheriff, and I give two thumbs up to our retiring sheriff, Jim Munn. We want the man who steps into his shoes to be qualified and of good character. Wayne Tousley is that person.

We have known Wayne since he was a small boy. We know everything there is to know about him and we know him to be a man of excellent character.

Wayne is our son-in-law. He is married to our oldest daughter, Marsha. Sometimes it is difficult to like the man that marries your daughter, but in Wayne's case, we are very proud of him and Marsha and the life they are living.

We believe him to be the man for the position of sheriff and we hope you will too.

Whether you vote for Wayne or one of the other good men, the main thing is for each and every person to vote.

Challenge Nafziger residency

How can someone run for a public office in a district in which they do not reside? Why isn't the law enforced?

Patti Nafziger resides in one district and runs in another. Where can she vote?

My husband, Tim Meyers, is running as a write-in against Patti Nafziger. A number of people have told me, "I'm voting for Tim." That sounds fine, but I'm writing about a changed part of District 21 into District 22. They are no longer in the district in which he is a write-in. For they don't care. The reasoning is, "If Patti runs in a district that she doesn't reside in, then I can write in someone's name who isn't running in that district."

When Tim decided to run as a write-in candidate for District 21, he called Secretary of State Pete Cenarrusa. Pete said, "If they made a ruling against Patti because she was in violation of the law, she would have to withdraw before the election. (There are penalties for violation ranging from $250 to $2,500 who knowingly and willfully violate the Idaho Code.) If Patti got re-elected in the election, the Legislature will then decide if she is in violation of the law. The Legislature will then pick three people in the district and the governor will pick who will fill that district office.

It's already known the violation has occurred. Why not act now and let the people decide?

County Clerk John Myers; Gene Emahiser, Shoshone School Superintendent; Gooding County Commissioner Bob Tupper; Mitch Arkoosh, Gooding County GOP chairman - all know the situation. Does this mean that the political parties, the Legislature, the county officials, and the schools get to break the laws because no one wants to challenge someone?

Writer exaggerates in letter on mining

In response to Mr. Medberry's letter of Oct. 9, I think that the only mining that Mr. Medberry would like to see would be where there can be no exploration or disturbance of the surface.

When I stated that no mining company would mine the Sun Valley area, I was assuming the fact that the Idaho Conservation League has no publicly held claims there and the only they were worried about and not the whole area of southern Idaho.

I think that the claim that legitimate mining companies file claim to hundreds of thousands of acres is exaggerated as 10,000 20-acre claims would be 2 million acres - quite large for a mine.

Mr. Medberry states that there needs to be a change in the 1872 mining law to reflect modern mining practices and environmental protection standards.

If you had read the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 enacted into law Jan. 1, 1970, and the Federal Air and Water Quality acts, he would know there are guidelines for environmental protection.

It is quite evident that there is no quick way to obtain land for nothing.

Join effort to battle use of drugs, alcohol

For the past three months, the Red Ribbon Week Executive Planning Committee has been hard at work organizing activities for youth and adults.

This year, the committee is taking a strong stance in recognizing the No. 1 drug problem in this community and in our nation - alcohol.

Based on recent studies, a minimum of 10 percent of all individuals who choose to use alcohol will become addicted or experience other health effects.

These numbers are actually a slight improvement on the 1988 survey, but are unacceptable to the overall health and safety of our community.

Therefore, we plead with you as a community member to become involved, to become aware and to become educated about this No. 1 killer.

Best-prepared candidate for Senate is Stallings

After listening to most of the pros and cons from the primary election to the final goals of Election '92, I, like most Americans, am tired of deceit, degradation and most of all the loss of the truth in the campaign. Republicans blame Democrats and Democrats blame Republicans. The fact remains that both have failed the people for eight years under the direction of the actor, Reagan, and four years with his vice president, Bush.

As I have worked long with elected officials in the past and hope to do so in the future, I am particularly interested in our elected officials' voting records.

Now that Rep. Stallings is changing from the House of Representatives to seek the Senate seat for Idaho, his past record and his open-door policies to listen to his constituents in Idaho should not be forgotten on Election Day.

If you are a Democrat, he takes your call and gives his personal time to share in your problems and ideals. If you are a Republican, he listens with the same enthusiasm.

I am not going to throw any garbage on Mr. Stallings' challenger, Mr. Kempthorne. I feel Mr. Kempthorne is an honorable man, but Election '92 doesn't need a freshman in the Senate with all the problems facing our nation.

Richard Stallings is one of the best-informed members of the House with literally hundreds of hours in research, study and opinions of Idaho people. There is not enough time before the vote to educate a freshman about issues that are as deep and massive as General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and the North American Free Trade Agreement.

Don't run United States with policy of deception

This letter is for constructive criticism only. Through the use of the English language, the Democratic way has become one big racketeering lie.

Mr. Bush - jump-start economy, lower prime interest rate, "wrong" taxes, collect taxes by July, skim the top for government people's big $2.000 to $3.000 raise. Wrong.

Mr. Clinton - affordable health insurance, April of 1991, on TV and in newspapers, get your flu shot, because this flu is going to get the old and young. What comes to your mind, Mr. Clinton, if you read or hear this statement and who profits? Has it been done before? Reader's Digest did an article on this virus bit, 30 years ago or about. Also, last year, Medicare paid; this year, no. Some places charge $14.

Mr. Perot - raise gas taxes. Wrong. Not everyone pays gas taxes. Cut Social Security and Medicare; that's already been done.

Running government by deception is wrong. The American people know and have known for a long time. What they don't know is when will it ever stop.

George 'PeeWee' Silver has great professionalism

I am writing in support of George "PeeWee" Silver. He is one of the most professional-law-enforcement officers I have met. He projects himself with calm, caring support to both the situation at hand and to his officers. I also am pleased to see that he is out there working with his officers whether it is day or night. I admire an administrator who is willing to work alongside his staff. We need to see more of this.

Chief Silver is extremely well-qualified for the position of sheriff and will be bringing all of these attributes to the sheriff's office when elected. Local experience and the ability to cooperate with the other law enforcement agencies and elected officials is vital in this position.

I urge you to support and vote for George "PeeWee" Silver III for the next Jerome County sheriff. We need him!

HAP AND MERLE WILSON Jerome

Silver is right choice for Jerome sheriff

As tight as our economy is and with the sheriff's office requesting an increase of about 39.7 percent over last year's budget to $659,068, it has become apparent that good management is essential in the sheriff's office.

It seems commissioners have been working very hard to improve our law enforcement because the increases have all been about the 5 percent cap.

With this in mind, I feel that Chief Silver will be the person to best operate our law enforcement. He will keep our county safe, as well as handle the budgeted tax dollars as wisely as we would our own money.

He has demonstrated good management and skills with the city chief of police position (in fact, he has consistently returned unused money from his allotted budgets back to the city) and I feel he will carry these good qualities on to our county office.

Luck you all to think very carefully about how you would have this county law enforcement run. I feel your vote will come to the same conclusion that I have and cast your vote for George "PeeWee" Silver III for Jerome County sheriff.

The real tax, spend candidate is Bush

The "tax and spend" candidate this time around is George Bush. The Wall Street Journal (Aug. 12) points out that Bush had the second largest tax increase of all time. The conservative CATO Institution has called George Bush "the largest spender to sit in the White House in the past 30 years."

Just since the Republican convention, in what appears to be a last-ditch attempt to buy the American voter, Bush has proposed $425 million in new spending. Under Bush the national deficit has doubled and the national debt rose 41 percent to $4 trillion.

According to the Citizens for Tax Justice, Bush has proposed:

Justice. Bush's new tax proposal would give a $12,465 tax break to individuals earning more than $200,000. It is understandable that George Bush and Dan Quayle are not running on their records.

Clinton/Gore offer a deficit reduction plan that cuts the deficit in half in four years and also revives the economy. But no plan is any good if it cannot be implemented.

Our Constitution splits powers between the Congress, the president and the judiciary. Clinton/Gore have the coalition-building skills to work with others of both parties.

Clinton was voted the outstanding governor by both Republican and Democratic governors; he had endorsements from many groups that usually endorse the Republican candidate. Gore is highly respected by both Republicans and Democrats.

Democrats are wrong ones to have in charge

Really now, what about our economy? Gov. Clinton keeps pointing at the economy and jobs. Yes, he knows the Western world is in a recession. It is all Bush's fault.

About our economy, everyone needs to realize - not one nickel is spent unless the House OKs it. And who controls the House? The Democrats.

A year ago, for every dollar of increased taxes, the Democrats (House) spent $1.58. This year it was $1.83.

The Democrats (Congress) have refused to give the president the line item veto.

And who defeated the Balanced Budget Amendment? The Democrats!

It takes one-third of our income taxes to pay the interest on our national debt. One hundred ninety-billion dollars would pay several jobs!

Eliminating waste would more than pay the debt (Grace Commission).

Clinton - jobs, economy, really! Now I would like a change, but Democrats? No way!

Tousley is the right one to run sheriff's office

I've read with interest the letters to the editor section regarding the upcoming sheriff's election.

So far, most of the letters extol the merits of the candidates as wonderful people and the great job they have done in their work areas. But of all the qualifications I have read, there is only one with qualifications needed to run the Twin Falls County sheriff's office.

Wayne Tousley has had experience in the sheriff's office itself as an on-the-road deputy, as jail administrator, and in the court system. He has had administrative experience in these areas and is presently the chief security officer in the judicial system. He is intelligent and motivated to work for the safety of everyone in Twin Falls County.

Personally, I would feel more comfortable having a sheriff who has background and up-to-date knowledge of the job in question and who is motivated to make our security system better and more effective.

I appreciate your paper giving private citizens the opportunity to air our views. Thank you. MARIAN W. WULFF Twin Falls

Support Jim Webb for office of sheriff

This letter is to inform the citizens of Twin Falls County about Jim Webb, who is running for sheriff.

Jim is running as an Independent, which means he doesn't have a Democrat or Republican cash box to serve the voters free barbecues, hamburgers and soft drinks. Nor does he ask his religious organization for contributions.

Jim isn't relying on any misrepresented educational background to handle the job of sheriff of Twin Falls County. Jim doesn't have to put on a big front or rely on people to write statements on his behalf as they have for other candidates running for sheriff.

Actions of his opponents speak louder than words. You may be able to fool some of the people some of the time, but you can't fool all of the people all of the time.

Jim is running for sheriff on his personal qualifications and professional record. He is certified under Idaho law enforcement requirements. He has attended college. However, all the degrees obtained in a lifetime don't mean a thing if you don't have the ability, as I know how, or in other words, plain old common sense when working with the general public every day.

Sexual harassment is common problem in the business place today. With Jim Webb as sheriff, the public should never be faced with a sexual harassment lawsuit inquiring about the morals in the sheriff's department.

Jim Webb doesn't have to brag or lose his temper to win a point. He knows the citizen cannot afford discrimination lawsuits caused by favoring one employee over the other.

Let's not be fooled by any false qualifications that we may be led to believe are true. Let's vote for a man who doesn't have to rely on pulling the wool over anyone's eyes. Jim Webb is a fair and honest man with a proven record in the sheriff's department. He has our vote. Please join us. MR. AND MRS. TIM WILLIAMS Twin Falls

Lebanon fighting could threaten peace talks

TYRE, Lebanon (AP) — Israel reportedly moved more tanks into its buffer zone in southern Lebanon on Tuesday while its warplanes and artillery hit guerrilla positions to avenge attacks by the pro-Iranian Hezbollah that killed six Israeli soldiers.

The fighting, which has left at least 13 people dead and 35 wounded in Israel and Lebanon this week, threatened to undermine the seventh round of Arab-Israeli peace talks in progress in Washington.

Hezbollah, the Shiite Muslim fundamentalist group that wants to derail the talks, claimed responsibility for the bombing Sunday in the Israeli buffer zone that touched off the latest round of violence. The blast killed five Israeli soldiers and wounded five.

"We must be ready and deployed to respond in the necessary manner if Hezbollah continues in its attempts to attack," Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin said after a guerrilla rocket killed a teen-ager in northern Israel before dawn Tuesday.

Lebanon is arousing Israeli public opinion and hampering Rabin's efforts to prepare his people to make concessions required for peace with the Arabs.

Hezbollah, which said it was mobilizing its 3,500 members, clamored Tuesday for Lebanon to withdraw from the talks. The Beirut government, which is supported by Syria, ignored the demand but said it would lodge a complaint with the U.N. Security Council over the "ferocious Israeli aggression."

Jerusalem police arrest one of 250 Jewish settlers who attempted to storm Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin's residence in Jerusalem Tuesday. Rabin was not home.

Israel radio said an unspecified number of tanks moved into the buffer zone Tuesday to reinforce troops that patrol the area, which was set up by Israel in 1985 to guard against guerrilla attacks on northern discuss whether more tanks were sent into the zone.

Israeli planes, helicopters, gunboats and howitzers struck at numerous suspected guerrilla targets in Lebanon on Monday.

Tuesday, Israeli warplanes staged two separate raids in eastern Lebanon's Bekaa Valley apparently in response to the pre-dawn Katyusha rocket attack that killed a Ukrainian teen-ager and wounded five people in the Israeli border town of Kiryat Shmonah.

Police said Israeli gunners intermittently shelled villages in southern Lebanon and the western Bekaa Valley with 155mm howitzers, causing hundreds of people to flee to safer areas.

Cars crammed with refugees and beds and mattresses tied on top streamed along roads leading to the coastal cities of Tyre and Sidon, where buildings are equipped with air raid shelters.

Smoke billowed from the hills as the thunder of shell blasts echoed across the region overlooking the market town of Nabatiyah, where people emerged to stockpile food and drinking water during a short lull.

"It looks like we're going to be holed up indoors for quite a long time. So it's prudent to have food stocks around," said Mariam Sabbagh, 37, mother of two daughters.

Japanese emperor says relations with China better

SHANGHAI, China (AP) — Japanese Emperor Akihito suggested Tuesday his groundbreaking visit to China had helped cure the ill will lingering from the 1937-45 Sino-Japanese war.

"I felt that most of the Chinese people here for friendly relations between our two peoples," he told reporters as he prepared to leave Wednesday.

Those relations had been strained for decades by the lingering wounds from World War II.

His assessment of the Chinese mood comes from a narrow circle of people. Security has been unusually tight, and virtually all of the people he has met were either chosen or at least screened by the Chinese government.

At a state banquet hours after his arrival in China on Friday, Akihito deplored the "great sufferings" Japan inflicted on the Chinese people. Millions of Chinese died during eight years of war with the Japanese.

The long-awaited remarks were the strongest expression of remorse for the war yet offered by Akihito, and were more explicit than those made by his father, the late Emperor Hirohito.

Iraqi oil embargo to remain

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The head of the U.N. weapons inspection program said Tuesday that the Security Council is not likely to lift the oil embargo on Iraq any time soon.

Rolf Ekeus of Sweden, executive chairman of the U.N. Special Commission dismantling Iraq's weapons of mass destruction, also confirmed that the current U.N. team in Iraq has not found any of the up to 200 Scud missiles that the CIA says may be hidden there.

Ekeus just returned from political consultations in London and Paris on program to abolish Iraq's chemical weapons arsenal and long- and medium-range missiles as well as its programs to build nuclear and biological weapons.

He also has been sounding out the Iraqis and Security Council nations to reach an understanding about what constitutes "full cooperation" by the Iraqis.

The Gulf War cease-fire resolution adopted by the Security Council in 1991 links the lifting of the oil embargo to Baghdad's total cooperation.

But Ekeus told reporters that not only are there still crucial shortcomings in Iraq's cooperation, but also key Security Council members still are opposed to lifting the oil embargo. "No one is prepared to commit" to lifting the embargo, Ekeus said after a news conference, talking with a small group of reporters.

"It is too early to say" that Iraq is fully cooperating, in any case, he said. His comments are sure to disappoint the Iraqis, who viewed the latest U.N. inspection mission as a possible opportunity to get a "clean bill" of health on the weapons issue, thereby paving the way for lifting the oil embargo.

But Ekeus also said that while Iraqi officials are being more cooperative, his inspectors still are harassed in the country.

In addition, he said the Special Commission is "satisfied" with the inspectors' ability to find prohibited weapons and weapons production facilities.

The current team of inspectors in Iraq is focusing on Scud missiles and similar missiles that threaten Baghdad's neighbors.

It is seeking information on some of their components — particularly fuel and guidance systems — and wants to know how the missiles were used in the 1980-88 Iran-Iraq War and the Gulf War, Ekeus said.

Gorbachev slowly re-enters politics

MOSCOW (AP) — Mikhail Gorbachev took a step toward re-entering politics by announcing Tuesday that he was co-sponsoring a conference on ethnic conflicts.

The former Soviet president said his foundation would join with a Russian political party, the Party for Economic Freedom, in organizing the conference in March.

Gorbachev has said he does not plan to re-enter the political arena as an elected official of any political party. He said the conference would try to find ways to resolve conflicts through intellectual rather than political means.

"We are committed to keeping this process within an intellectual framework, not to politicize it, to be above that ideology," Gorbachev told a news conference.

Armed man robs

Twin Falls business

TWIN FALLS — A man carrying a handgun robbed a Twin Falls gasoline station and convenience store Tuesday night, police say.

A white male wearing a ski mask pointed a gun at the cashier at the Super Quik Stop, 408 Washington St. N., and demanded the money in the cash register, Sgt. Jim Massey said.

The man entered the store at about 7:30 p.m. and fled on foot, Massey said. Police said they had no suspects Tuesday night and no shots were fired.

Police say there are not sure how much money was taken.

Jerome girl in serious condition after accident

JEROME — A 16-year-old Jerome girl remained at the hospital in serious condition Tuesday night after being injured in an automobile accident Monday.

Danielle Gamache was severely injured when a car driven by 16-year-old Kara Briggs of Twin Falls rolled over on Golf Course Road in Jerome County Monday afternoon.

Both girls were thrown from the vehicle and Briggs died at the scene. Idaho State Police officers are still investigating the accident.

University presidents speak out against tax initiative

TWIN FALLS — Idaho's college and university presidents said Tuesday they understand taxpayers want them to do more with tax dollars, but that the 1 Percent Initiative could make their jobs impossible.

The tax-cutting measure on next week's ballot would limit property taxes to 1 percent of market value and has drawn the wrath of the state's education community.

Idaho State University President Richard Bowen said the higher education system has for the most part been able to meet the growing demands of enrollment increases and program needs in recent years without a substantial increase in state funding. But as demand continues to outstrip resources, he said, Idaho may be forced to reconsider its policy of universal access.

Bowen, Lewis-Clark State College President Lee Vickers and acting Boise State University President Larry Selland stopped in Twin Falls Tuesday afternoon for the fourth in a series of six forums on the status and needs of Idaho's higher education system.

University of Idaho President Elisabeth Zinner was attending an Extension conference Tuesday afternoon and did not make the Twin Falls trip.

Each election year, the four presidents travel to regional hubs in a show of unity to legislators, candidates and alumni. The six-city tour continued concludes today in Pocatello and Idaho Falls.

Jerome County residences must meet energy standards

JEROME — Contractors or owners of residential buildings being built in Jerome County will be assessed a fee to obtain certification that the home is in compliance with energy conservation standards.

The certification is required under Senate Bill 1591, section 44-2303. Jerome County will charge a $25 certification permit fee, effective immediately, Carl Montgomery, commission chairman, said.

The certification is issued by the Department of Labor and Industrial Services. Issuance of a permit could take as long as four weeks after application.

Twin Falls man draws jail time for beating dog

TWIN FALLS — A Twin Falls man has been sentenced to five days in jail for beating a dog in July.

Fifth District Judge Michael Redman sentenced Richard Skelton, 21, 190 Adams St., to the jail term Tuesday and ordered him to pay court costs of $32.50.

Redman said he did not give Skelton a stiffer sentence because he did not have a prior criminal record.

A Twin Falls woman testified earlier this month that she saw Skelton pick the puppy up by its head and bash it against a fence.

The woman said she witnessed the beating in July while walking a group of children to a Twin Falls park.

Voters to decide on 5 magistrate judges

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Ever been to court for a traffic ticket? A divorce case perhaps? Maybe a small civil claim or a misdemeanor crime?

If so, you probably dealt with a magistrate judge — perhaps one of the five men facing retention election on Nov. 3.

There are 11 magistrates in the 5th Judicial District, which spans Blaindoka, Cassia, Jerome, Twin Falls, Gooding, Camas, Lincoln and Blaine counties.

Each of those judges comes up for retention every four years, and the voters cast their ballots "yes" or "no" to determine if they remain on the bench.

Four judges retained their seats in 1990. The retirements of Blaine County Magistrate Daniel Alban and Minidoka County Magistrate Donald Workman have pared this year's field from seven to five.

Most court cases find their way to a magistrate's desk sooner or later. In addition to handling small claims, divorces and misdemeanor criminal matters (including driving under the influence charges), the magistrates also screen felony criminal cases.

Even so, most voters never deal directly with the courts on a regular basis. To give voters a better picture of their magistrate judges, The Times-News asked every attorney in the 5th Judicial District for their opinion of the judges' performance.

The results of those surveys, along with brief profiles of the judges and statistics about their case load, will appear in the newspaper over the next several days.

The surveys were anonymous and the original copies were stamped to assure no photocopies would be turned in.

Some magistrates, like R. Barry Wood of Lincoln County and John Varin of Camas County, travel throughout the district on a regular basis and come into contact with more attorneys than some other judges. For that reason, some judges received responses from more attorneys than others.

The magistrates' jobs have gotten more difficult in recent years with climbing case loads and changes in the law, 5th District Administrative Judge J. William Hart said.

Hart said he is "exploring asking for an additional judge" for the 5th Judicial Survey: Higer performs with courtesy, consistency

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News writer

BURLEY — Judges see a lot of unsavory people from the bench — burglars, drunks, murderers and criminals of every stripe.

But 5th District Magistrate Nathan Higer says they all deserve to be treated with respect by court officials, and that respect begins with the judge.

"Everyone who appears in my courtroom is entitled to courteous treatment," Higer said.

Cassia County voters will vote on Nov. 3 whether to accept Higer on the bench.

According to lawyers in the 5th Judicial District, Higer has been keeping that promise to treat people in his courtroom fairly.

In response to a Times-News survey, attorneys rated Higer highest in maintaining judicial temperament and courtesy, and keeping his case flow moving.

Keeping on top of an ever-increasing case load means giving prompt attention to each case, Higer said.

Reseeding of Trapper Creek burn begins

By N.S. Nokkentved
Times-News writer

OAKLEY — The blue-and-white helicopter swooped low over a fire-blackened landscape, spraying a cloud of seed mixture from the bucket slung beneath its belly.

The Forest Service hired Reeder Flying Service of Twin Falls to resseed parts of the 9,500-acre Trapper Fire Tuesday in the Trapper Creek drainage southwest of Oakley.

The lightning-started fire burned in the Twin Falls Ranger District of the Sawtooth National Forest in late August.

At more than 60 mph, the helicopter spread almost 15,000 pounds of seed — 400 to 500 pounds at a time — in four patches over about 1,000 acres. The mixture included 63 percent crested wheat grass, and the rest was yellow blossom sweet clover, delmar small burnet and fourwing saltbush.

The fire burned out the juniper trees that had dominated the area. Junipers take over some areas because livestock grazing and effective fire management have removed much of the grass understorey and halted periodic grass fires.

The small, less intense fires that once ran across the range renewed grasses and kept juniper seedlings from taking over. Once junipers have taken over an area, they release a material that inhibits the growth of other plants.

The seeding is part of the Oakley Valley-Grazing-Allotment. Its purpose is to improve grazing for livestock as well as wildlife, project leader Ray Newwert said.

Money for the seeding comes from wildlife and range betterment funds, he said. Range betterment funds are part of the grazing fees ranchers pay for running their livestock on public lands.

The crested wheat it is used because it works well to protect watersheds, providing stability to fragile volcanic soils, said Sawtooth District Ranger Don Oman. In a mixture with other plants, it provides good forage for livestock while also benefiting wildlife, he said.

The Forest Service is seeding in the fall so the seed will be there for the spring moisture and also to get seed on the ground before fall storms form a crust on the soil.

Other burned areas don't need to be seeded because the higher ground contains more limestone and the soil is more stable, Oman said.

The seed was spread by helicopter because using a bulldozer and range drill — a heavy duty planter — would be more time consuming, and the tractor can't get into some of the rough terrain, Oman said.

Where they stand on health care

Leanna Lasuen

IdaHealth: Co-sponsored the bill to set up a state-run, single-payer health insurance program in Idaho. Plans to introduce a revised version of IdaHealth if re-elected.

State role needed: Says that a single-payer system would give the state enough clout to enforce cost controls on health care providers, guarantee everyone access to medical care, and help refocus the health-care system toward prevention rather than treatment.

Lasuen

King

Robbi King

IdaHealth: Opposed the bill as "socialized medicine," saying it would have cost the state $1.6 billion and eliminated 9,000 jobs, mostly in the insurance industry.

Minimal state role: The state should cooperate with health care providers, insurers and others on a market-based reform plan. Such a plan could be based on tax credits for insurance premiums, small-group reform, and full deductibility of medical costs.

Citizens seek alternative to Burley Butte

By Phil Sahm
Times-News writer

BURLEY - Burley Butte remains the first choice for a landfill in Cassia County, but officials of the South Idaho Regional Solid Waste District will give a citizens group until Nov. 15 to look for other workable sites.

Cassia County Commissioner John Adams asked the district board of directors Tuesday to give the citizens group time to look for possible sites. The board agreed, but members said they do not have a lot of time and voted to give the citizens group until mid-November.

Adams and the other Cassia commissioners caught heat the past week when citizens learned that the board wanted to place a landfill for Minidoka and Cassia counties on Burley Butte, about eight miles west of Burley.

"The citizens feel like we've been hiding this from them. I don't feel like this is the case at all," Adams said at a last night's meeting.

After meeting with people who live near Burley Butte last week, Adams and the other commissioners agreed Monday to let the citizens' group look for other sites.

"We feel they deserve this," he said.

If the citizens group finds another promising site, the district would drill the area for soil depths, board members voted Tuesday.

The board also voted to postpone a $15,000 aerial mapping project of the butte, until the citizens group finishes its search.

However, the district likely will keep with its plan to ask the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare to review the Burley Butte site. This won't cost any money, said Terry Schultz, the district director.

If the citizens search comes up empty, Adams said the Cassia commissioners will go forward on Burley Butte.

"Don't misread me. The commissioners are not backing off this in Cassia County," Adams said. "If there's not another site, we'll go with Burley Butte."

The district's board chairman, Blaine County Commissioner Tom Blanchard, said Burley Butte remains the best site.

"Quite honestly it is going to be hard to beat this site. We have a superior site here," Blanchard said. "The matter where we go, we expect we'll get opposition. But we're willing to take it."

The district looked at four or five other sites in the Burley Butte area, but none of them was as good as the butte, he said.

The Burley Butte site totals almost 1,400 acres, but only 200 of that would be used to bury trash. The landfill would be lined with two feet of compacted clay and a plastic liner to meet new federal rules. The site has adequate water and an average of almost 40 feet of soil, which engineers say makes it a good site for a landfill.

Cassia County resident Howard Conrad is negotiating to sell the land to the district.

Conrad urged the district board Tuesday to move quickly on the sale.

One of the district's engineers, Phil Newton, said the district wants to speed the Burley landfill design through the South Central District Health Department for certification. With an October 1993 deadline to get a new landfill operating, the district needs to get a preliminary landfill design certified as soon as possible, Newton said.

If necessary, the district can build a landfill to meet the standards of the federal law and "self-certify" that the facility meets the new law, Schultz said. That way, the district can meet the deadline and then get the needed permits, he said.

"We've always maintained that we might have considered that option," Schultz said. Self-certification does not eliminate any of the safeguards, in fact, it probably means more safeguards.

Another engineer, Lynn Askew, said the district also needs to submit a draft groundwater monitoring plan as soon as a site is confirmed.

The district must take four samples of groundwater around the proposed area in a minimum of nine months. This data would be used as a measure against future tests for contamination, Askew said.

The Twin Falls city engineer and sanitation inspector attended the district meeting Tuesday.

City Engineer Gary Young told the group that Twin Falls remains interested in joining the group if it is effective. However, the city must resolve issues about double-taxation and what kind of role-it could play in the solid waste district.

Twin Falls City Council members are concerned about city residents having to pay taxes for a county landfill, even if the city wants to take its trash to a regional landfill in Burley. Council members also wonder whether the city could merely contract with the district or become a member.

The city is funded to buy in to the district as a member if that is possible, Young said.

Schultz said the district is trying to resolve the issue of whether the city can become a member of the solid waste district. Idaho law only mentions counties in multiple-jurisdictional bodies such as the solid waste district.

The district also is researching the question of double-taxation, Schultz said.

Social Security numbers not required, judge rules

By Phil Sahm
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - Recent amendments to Idaho's driver's license laws do not require private numbers on their license application, 5th District Judge Daniel Hurlbutt has ruled.

The ruling comes after Twin Falls attorney Joe Stanzak challenged the Idaho Transportation Department for denying him a Class D driver's license because he refused to put his Social Security number on his license application.

Stanzak filed suit last July after applying to renew his license.

The Idaho Legislature amended the state's driver's license laws with two bills in early 1992. But amendments stated different requirements within the law.

One amendment required all license applicants to provide their Social Security numbers, while the other required the social security number of only those applying for commercial licenses.

The changes also stated that after Jan. 1, 1993, no one would be required to divulge their Social Security number for a driver's license.

Stanzak said that the law does not require Class D license applicants to divulge their Social Security number to get a license.

The Transportation Department contended that the Legislature intended for Class D license applicants to put their Social Security numbers on their application.

Hurlbutt ruled that by reading the two amendments it can only be concluded that the Legislature expressly intended to exclude applicants for Class D licenses, those for private purposes, from divulging their Social Security numbers.

"The Legislature was aware of all of the changes adopted in the two bills and intended to include each of them in the final form of the statute. Therefore, the express intent of the Legislature is clear and must be given effect. There is no conflict or ambiguity in the two bills," Hurlbutt wrote.

"The result is that Class D driver's license applicants are not required to give their social security numbers to receive or renew their licenses."

Hurlbutt spends much of his time handling the Snake River Basin Adjudication.

Magistrates help pick up the slack: Magistrate Roger Burk of Jerome served as district judge pro-temp during Becker's absence.

Case-load figures don't tell the whole story of how much each judge does during the week, Hart said.

For example, Varin and Wood handle far fewer cases than their counterparts but they work just as hard, he said.

Those judges frequently travel to other counties where case loads are piling up, and they often handle district court cases that take much longer than magistrate matters.

They have been spending a lot of time in Minidoka County since Workman resigned in September.

Judges

Twin Falls County provides a good example of the increasing case load for magistrate judges. The number of actions filed in the magistrate division there went up 46 percent between 1985-91 with no increase in judges.

To compensate for the additional work, the county has increased the number of court clerks from 12 in 1985 to 19 now.

But the judges still must hear the cases, meaning they must be working harder, Hart said. And the increased number of cases far outstrips the rate of population growth.

There may be an increased awareness on the part of law enforcement sending more cases to court, the judge said.

Higer

He also credits his crew of court clerks for helping him keep things moving in Cassia County.

Higer, 48, has been on the bench for nearly 15 years. Over the past four years, his image with the attorneys who practice before him has remained remarkably consistent.

When attorneys were surveyed in 1988, Higer's scores were firmly in the mid- to high "B" range just as they are this year. In fact, his overall grade-point average of 3.17 remained the same.

His lowest score came in the area of making rulings not based on public opinion, where survey respondents gave a Higer a cumulative 2.94.

"I'm surprised by that," Higer said in response to the numbers.

"I try to make rulings based on what the law says," Higer said. "I don't consciously let public opinion have any bearing on my decisions."

When he's not researching cases or sitting on the bench, Higer likes to go fishing and duplicate bridge or go playing.

A magistrate's job includes a lot of repetition, but Higer said the job still interests him and he plans to remain on the bench as long as the voters want him there.

In Twin Falls County, misdemeanor driving under the influence cases have increased 60 percent from 1985-91, and traffic citations have jumped 93 percent.

Domestic violence charges didn't even exist in 1985. There were 255 such cases in Twin Falls County last year and 346 have been filed this year.

Other counties show similar increases, Hart said. Add to the rising number of cases the fact that two district judges have been limited in the cases they handle, and it's clear that 5th District magistrates have had plenty to do this year.

District Judge Phillip Becker of Gooding was out of action for a year as the result of a drunken driving incident, and District Judge Daniel Hurlbutt spends much of his time handling the Snake River Basin Adjudication.

Magistrates help pick up the slack: Magistrate Roger Burk of Jerome served as district judge pro-temp during Becker's absence.

Case-load figures don't tell the whole story of how much each judge does during the week, Hart said.

For example, Varin and Wood handle far fewer cases than their counterparts but they work just as hard, he said.

Those judges frequently travel to other counties where case loads are piling up, and they often handle district court cases that take much longer than magistrate matters.

They have been spending a lot of time in Minidoka County since Workman resigned in September.

Newman outspends her opponent in campaign

By Douglas S. Jones
The News Journal

RUPERT — Independent candidate for Minidoka County Prosecutor Gara B. Newman, has raised more than her opponent Prosecutor David Haley, campaign disclosure reports filed Monday reveal.

Newman out-raised Haley by 16 percent during the period June 6 to October 19, with $2,200 in contributions. She also out-spent her opponent by 43 percent, partly by incurring higher bills.

Newman's report listed total contributions of $2,200 during the period including $155 in donations of $50 or less and $297 of in-kind donations, or non-money contributions.

Haley reported contributions of $1,892 for the period including $812 in contributions $50 or less. Other contributors include $100 from Glen Allen of Rupert; John Remsburg of Rupert; Steve Wheeler of Rupert; Kristina K. Carrier of Burley; Donald E. Mayes and Douglas E. Reincke both of Rupert contributed $125 each, while Haley spent $231 of his own money.

Newman's large contributors include $200 from the firm of herself; Grover Newman of Rupert and O.C. Hanzel of Rupert; $100 each from Triple Ace Farms of Paul; Radio Service Co. of Burley; Thomas and Jamie Dyer, of Boise; Garce N.

Jones of Great Falls, Mont.; Patterson Farms of Paul; Charlotte Patterson of Paul; Marjorie Newman of Rupert; Ray Barlow of Tucson, Ariz.; Ace Bail Bonds of Burley; James J. Lynch of Burley and Francis McDonald of Burley.

Newman, who is current county public defender, spent $1,504 during the period with a balance of $698, but also had $938 in bills, while Haley reported expenditures of $1,709 and a balance of $183 on hand.

In the commission races, Republican challenger John Remsburg III of Rupert is out spending incumbent Commissioner Clarence Bellemore six to one.

Remsburg reported total contributions of $1,422 and the same in expenditures. Remsburg contributed $1,372 to his own campaign, and reported a $50 contribution from MAP.

Bellemore reported $1,877 in expenditures or bills.

Bellemore reported no balance forward, and a contribution from his wife, Lillian Bellemore, of $483. Bellemore reported he spent $513.

Law requires candidates to list all contributions made to a campaign including ones made by candidates themselves.

Larry Harper, Republican candidate for the District 2 commissioner seat listed one expenditure, $94, but did not list contributors.

Harper's opponent, Democrat Seth Corless, failed to file on time.

Elementary conducts presidential elections

By Eric Goodell
Mini-Cassia News Service

BURLEY — And the winner is... Bill Clinton!

Or so say the students at Overland Elementary School in Burley, who held a mock presidential election Tuesday.

The election was the climax of approximately two weeks of debates, poster-making and other projects by second-, third- and fourth-graders.

"The kids have been debating and representing political parties," Principal Kevin Bushman said. "They have been working hard."

A total of 107 students cast ballots during the mock election. Clinton garnered 50 of those votes; George Bush got 41 votes; and Ross Perot nabbed 14.

The students' teacher, Delia Valdez, got the two remaining votes, perhaps an indication of how much she's done.

Valdez, who said she told students she was too young to run for president, said students expressed much interest in the event, even though they had to put a lot of effort into the projects.

"The students have had to do more than just listen," she said.

Students were urged to read and watch television news shows in order to keep up-to-date on how the presidential campaigns were shaping up.

They also produced their own commercials on candidates with the aid of a video camera.

Steven Roth said he played Bush in one of the commercials, which made him want to vote for the incumbent president. Student Hector Arce said he would vote for Bush because he would keep taxes low.

Education is one of the themes which dominated discussion about the election, said Valdez, who said she let the students decide what to discuss.

Bushman said he was thrilled with how much effort students put in with their projects.

"I didn't think they would get that involved," he said.

hooked on having been paying their sewer bills, according to Rosenstein.

The city hopes that by simply reminding residents that they are required to participate in the sewer system, they will act on their own accord, Wright said.

"I think we can work with them on that individual basis," he said.

Bellevue residents face deadline on sewer hookups

By Deborah Shimkus
Times-News correspondent

BELLEVUE — Residents and businesses have two days left to hook on to the sewer system in Bellevue, or they could be cited for a misdemeanor, according to the city's sewer ordinance.

The wastewater treatment system was completed last spring, and residents have had more than six months to connect their homes and businesses to the system, said Geri Rosenstein, city secretary.

But 16 businesses and 21 residents have not yet completed the process, she said.

"Mostly, people just haven't gotten around to it," said Rosenstein.

The use of septic tanks will no longer be legal as of Saturday. People who are ticketed for failure to follow a city ordinance and have to appear in court or pay a fine, according to mayor Dennis Wright.

As a last resort, the city will hook residents onto the system, then charge them for the service.

The city will be sending out registered letters to all people who could be in violation of the ordinance, warning them of the deadline, and the possible fines or non-compliance.

Some people are just putting off connecting to the system to delay the cost of hooking up, said Wright.

What residents don't understand is that the ordinance doesn't have a hook-on fee required by the city, but there is no guarantee that such a fee will be charged next month, he said.

All low-income families were connected to the new sewer-system through block grant funds, according to Wright.

The average costs to connect a residence has proven to be less than $600, and a significant portion of that was paid through additional grant funds, he said.

The city has been charging residents and businesses for sewer services for several years, whether or not they have hooked up.

Girl, 9, rescues brothers, sister from burning home

By Deborah Shimkus
Times-News correspondent

BELLEVUE — Patricia Brand saved the lives of her younger sister and two brothers when she led them from their burning trailer home recently.

According to the Blaine County fire chief, the nine-year-old had just seen the younger children — ages 1, 3 and 8 — after learning about the dangers of fires at school only a few weeks earlier.

The blaze destroyed the trailer home of Lorrie and Roland Brand on Chestnut Lane in rural Bellevue, and the family is now in need of new lodgings.

Patricia, a fourth-grader at Hailey Elementary, said she was outside with her two brothers on Sunday when her sister fled the home and told her she had the keys to the house.

According to Lorri Brand, her daughter was in the bedroom, playing with matches as she tried to light a candle for the Halloween pumpkin.

Brand said she had left briefly to go to the grocery store to pick up soda pop.

Patricia said after her sister told her she started a fire, she rushed into the house, and the others followed her.

"By the time I got there the bedroom was filled with flames, and the fire alarm was going off," Patricia said.

She said she ushered the children out of the house and told them to run away from the building.

Patricia said she ran for help at a neighbor's, knowing she had to call the 911 emergency number, then returned and moved the dog, who was tied up near the house.

By the time Patricia reached a telephone, a neighbor saw smoke and called in to report the fire.

The fire caused an estimated $55,000 damage to the trailer, and the Brands lost their belongings and car, according to Blaine County Rural Fire Chief Dan McKenna.

He said the Brand's has no home-owners' insurance.

Two weeks earlier, Patricia's class had learned during Fire Prevention Week the importance of establishing a planned route out of the house in case of an emergency. The classes were sponsored by the Blaine County and Bellevue fire departments.

Patricia worked with her parents to plan a safe escape from their trailer, said Lorrie Brand.

"She did exactly what she was supposed to do and deserves credit for saving the lives of her brothers and sisters," said McKenna.

The Brand family is temporarily staying with friends and needs a home of their own, said family friend Lani Trahan.

Roland is currently unemployed, looking for work in construction.

Lorrie Brand said that — even though the family lost everything, they are happy they have each other.

"I can't emphasize enough how important it is that kids know how to get out of a house in case of a fire," she said.

Along with Blaine County, the Bellevue Volunteer Fire Department also responded to the fire that was under control within 10 minutes.

Claim alleges girl held with no charge

RUPERT — A 16-year-old Rupert girl has filed a $100,000 tort claim against Minidoka County, claiming she was held in juvenile detention for two months although she was never charged with a crime.

The girl's attorney, Paula Brown-Sinclair of Twin Falls, said Tuesday that her client was held from late August to late October without being charged.

She declined to name the girl because she is a juvenile.

Minidoka County Prosecutor David Haley counters Tuesday that the county had received the tort claim, but would not comment on the allegations.

The claim has been sent to the county's insurance carrier, he said.

The county has 90 days to respond to the claim. If it remains unsettled, Brown can take the case to court.

Additional claims may be made against the city of Rupert in conjunction with the case, Brown said.

Board president takes 7 trips outside state

MOSCOW (AP) — State Board of Education President Karl Shurtliff has taken seven trips to higher education conferences outside Idaho in the past three years, the board's travel records show.

Board member Roberta Fields of New Meadows spent more than Shurtliff on travel during the period — $7,900. But all of her expenses were for higher education business inside Idaho.

Records indicate Gary Fay of Twin Falls, who was pressured to resign after the September 1991 firing of Boise State University President John Keiser, was the only other board member to attend a conference outside Idaho.

Shurtliff said Monday he was shocked to hear none of the other current members have traveled outside the state to learn more.

"I think it's important to find out what is going on, instead of from the bureaucrats," the Boise attorney said, and the opportunities are there.

He has been invited by University of Idaho Vice Provost for Research Jeanne Shreeve and North Idaho College President Robert Bennett to attend conferences in Las Vegas and Anaheim, Calif., in the past few weeks.

Shurtliff said he believes he has an obligation to show his support for their activities. Shreeve said she wanted Shurtliff to attend the annual conference for the Experimental Program to Stimulate Competitive Research because he has a major role in the state's university system.

A year ago, Idaho lost its multi-million-dollar bid for a second three-year grant through the program after receiving $1.8 million in the previous three years. She said the National Science Foundation will reimburse the state for the cost of Shurtliff's trip.

According to records, Shurtliff's other trips included:

• National Association of State Boards of Education conference in Washington, D.C., in July 1990.
• Association of Governing Boards of Colleges and Universities conference in Washington, D.C., and Miami in 1991, and in San Francisco in March 1992.
• Western Interstate Commission for Higher Education workshop in San Diego, in November 1991.

The cost of Shurtliff's airfare, lodging and other expenses totaled about $4,100, according to records. The total cost of all his travel and miscellaneous expenses, including in-state, is about $7,300.

Heart attack kills clerk battling thieves

BOISE (AP) — A Garden City convenience store clerk found dead apparently died of a heart attack as he fought with would-be thieves. police say.

Officers found Jack Bainbridge, 55, dead in the parking lot of Jackson's Convenience Store early Sunday morning.

Garden City Police Chief Willard Heaps said one or more suspects apparently entered the store and attempted to walk away with three 24-ounce packs of beer. Bainbridge and the suspects struggled before he had a heart attack.

Heaps said the victim had a slight cut on his nose and forehead, but that was not the cause of death.

Those involved in the incident would be charged with manslaughter, he added.

Agreement may protect foothills area

BOISE — A 3½-year effort to save the Hells Gulch area of the Boise foothills with its wetlands and riparian habitat has resulted in a tentative agreement that could stop development there.

Hells Gulch activists, Boise city officials and Wayne Booe of General Water Works announced a $900,000 deal Monday to convert 80 acres of proposed homesites to public land.

Orion Investment Corp., a sister company to General Water Works, wanted to construct 304 homes on 270 acres in and above the gulch. Acting Mayor Sara Baker said the city will own the land, which includes 14 acres of wetlands and a popular hiking area known as The Grove. The money to close the deal comes from federal funds, private donations and $50,000 in city money.

Sheriff's trial postponed until Dec. 1

IDAHO FALLS — The state court trial of Idaho County Sheriff Randy Baldwin has been postponed until Dec. 1.

Baldwin, 38, was scheduled to go on trial next week in Idaho Falls on burglary and handgun charges stemming from his arrest last Dec. 20 in a sting operation at a Nampa home.

Sixth District Judge Ted Wood rescheduled a pre-trial hearing for Nov. 23 and trial for Dec. 1 at the request of defense attorney R. Keith Roark.

Roark said Tuesday that did not leave him time to prepare for a trial starting next week. Also, the defense won a motion for a transcript of the federal court trial and it isn't ready yet.

Murderer draws at least 25 years

MOSCOW — Convicted murderer Douglas Raymond Colvin will spend at least 25 years behind bars for shooting a Moscow man over a lovers' triangle.

Colvin, 30, of Colfax, Wash., wept openly in court Monday as he told 2nd District Judge John Bengtson that he was sorry for his actions.

"If I could bring him back, I would. But I'm not God," Colvin said. The judge sentenced him from 25 years to life for killing Yancey Knoke.

Defense attorney Michael Henegen of Moscow said his client suffered from mental illness and asked Bengtson to impose a 10-year minimum sentence.

Bengtson, saying his most important charge was to protect society, felt the 25-year minimum term would also provide time for Colvin to receive treatment. He said a psychological report convinced him Colvin suffered from a "mental condition," namely depression.

Cardiac arrest may have killed inmate

BLACKFOOT — Although a complete autopsy report will not be finished for a few weeks, officials say preliminary findings indicate a Bingham County jail inmate died of cardiac arrest.

Sheriff John Cowley said Francisco Mateo, 28, also had fluid in his lungs.

"We suspect he may have had some sort of virus," Cowley said Tuesday. "But we just won't know until the laboratory exams are finished."

Mateo was serving a six-month sentence for a second drunken driving conviction. He was on a work release program and had not missed any work before notifying jailers that he had a fever early Sunday.

He was treated at Bingham Memorial Hospital for acute gastritis.

Boise County sheriff's trial postponed

BOISE — The drunken-driving trial of Boise County Sheriff Craig Landers has been postponed until March 16, well after his re-election bid is settled next week.

Landers' attorney Monday said prosecutors failed to provide him with crucial evidence in time to prepare for a trial originally scheduled to begin Tuesday.

"They're probably thinking he'll have a better chance in the election," said Janeen Eggebrecht, a Democratic candidate and one of Landers' four challengers.

Landers, 39, was charged with a DUI after he crashed his patrol truck May 11 in Boise County. A test showed his blood-alcohol level to be 0.15 percent. A driver is presumed drunk with a reading of 0.10 percent or more.

Landers was slightly injured in the accident, which caused $7,000 damage to the new four-wheel-drive patrol truck.

Convict wants freedom to adjust to normal life

BOISE (AP) — The appeal filed by an Elmore County man over his prison term is being reviewed by a novel approach.

The attorney for Jay Marsh, 24, said he's spent less than one year since he was age 15 out of prison or jail. That hasn't kept him from repeat violations, the appeal argued, so something else should be tried, such as probation or a shorter sentence. Otherwise, Marsh might turn into an "institutionalized" inmate, unable to function on the outside, the appeal said.

The Idaho Court of Appeals on Tuesday declined to go along. The court noted that Marsh since the age of 14 has been convicted of two counts of malicious destruction of property, two counts of burglary, six counts of forgery, grand theft, second-degree burglary and prison riot.

"The district court in its sentencing comments noted that Marsh's prison term is excessive," the court had ever seen, considering Marsh's age of 24 years," the court said, in an opinion written by Judge Cathy Silak.

"Apparently, the court was convinced that the sentences imposed in the past had not deterred Marsh's criminal behavior and that there was a need to protect society from his continued conduct," the Court of Appeals said.

In another decision released Tuesday, the Idaho Supreme Court ordered a lawsuit sent back to 13th District Court. A jury awarded Donald Pratto $5,952 in damages after his car ran into a calf on a Bonner County road. District Judge James Mithaud ordered a new trial.

ACLU pans school books

BOISE (AP) — Coloring books and cassette tapes distributed at a Boise grade school violate the constitutional separation of church and state, the American Civil Liberties Union charges.

The books and tapes, which appear on the cover to be anti-drug materials, contain a song promoting the idea that God created and has a plan for everything in the world, said George Patterson, chairman of the ACLU's legal committee.

Bob Beaver, principal of Roosevelt Elementary, said the materials were being distributed to area schools by the timber industry. He said the teachers did not go through them in class.

He said he reviewed the books before they were distributed handed out and did not note anything objectionable.

"It was a one-shot deal," he said. "It won't happen again" with this particular material.

They include a coloring book called "Welcome to Timber's Unbearably."

Classic custard has it all

It's sort of strange with the harvest almost completely done, and Halloween a couple of days away to have such nice weather. I hope this means a long, long mean winter with tons of snow.

Anyone remember the winter of 1948-49? Look it up in your books and you'll know why we could use another one this year just like it!

Of course I'm remembering it through the eyes of a child, but I can still see the snow piled up to the eaves so houses looked like chipmunks. Everyone had to dig in and dig out. I suppose with our modern equipment we wouldn't be as isolated as we were then. What a winter!

Next week we'll be sort of back to normal. Who am I kidding - with the holidays bearing down? But at least we'll know who won the election!

Friend-Husband had to vote absentee and is wondering if I'm going to cancel out his vote. I'll never tell!

OK, the recipe I sent from the convention for Salad with Fluffy Avocado Dressing was missing the following ingredients: 1/2-pound green beans, trimmed; 12 leaves butter or red leaf lettuce, washed and crisped; 1/2 cup grated parmesan cheese. Don't know what happened. Maybe it was my excitement over winning the big drawing I wrote about.

A really rich dessert that I often do ahead is this classic caramel custard. It's wonderful but takes extra time so it's even better made days in advance and refrigerated.

Freshen oven to 325 degrees and get your molds out.

I like to use the small 4-ounce custard cups but you can also do it in a 1-quart mold.

CARAMEL CUSTARD

- 1/3 cup sugar
- 1/4 teaspoon cream of tartar
- 1 2-inch piece of vanilla bean or 1 tablespoon vanilla
- 2 cups whipping cream
- 1/4 cup sugar
- 5 egg yolks
- 1 tablespoon rum or coffee liqueur

Combine the 1/3 cup of sugar and cream of tartar in a heavy-bottomed saucepan. Pour in water to cover (1/4 cup plus). Cook over low heat until sugar melts. You can shake the pan a couple of times.

Now increase heat to medium-high and cook - without stirring - until sugar caramelizes and turns a deep mahogany brown. Pour into the molds and swirl to try to coat sides with caramel.

Scrape the seeds from vanilla bean into heavy-bottomed saucepan. Add vanilla bean, cream and remaining sugar. Cook over low heat until cream is scalded (185 degrees). Set aside.

In a mixing bowl combine the egg yolks and liqueur. While whisking gently, very slowly pour in the scalded cream. Strain mixture through a sieve into mold or molds (discard the vanilla bean). Let stand 30 seconds and then skim off foamy top.

Set molds in a larger pan filled with enough warm water to come 2/3 up sides of molds(s). Bake at 325 degrees for 50 to 60 minutes for large mold and about 25 minutes for smaller molds. Check for doneness by inserting a knife in edge of custard and it comes out with a thick custard coating. Remove from oven and water.

Place a piece of plastic wrap right on the surface of the custard so it doesn't form a film. Cool at room temperature.

Refrigerate at least 6 hours and up to several days.

To unmold just before serving, place the mold briefly in a pan of hot water to dissolve any remaining caramel, invert, mold onto a plate and pour caramel over top.

Serves 6 to 8. I don't do this recipe often but when I do it's usually for a big "do" and I double or triple the recipe. There are some small aluminum molds in the supermarkets in the disposable pan department that are just the right size and can be used again and again.

The celebration of Halloween is centuries old. The early Celtic calendar began the new year on the first of November, and the last night of October was known as "old-years-night," or the night of all the witches. Today, we continue the tradition of Halloween as children of all ages enjoy dressing up in all types of frightening costumes from ghosts and skeletons to witches.

Another age-old custom, combining Halloween with a harvest theme, dates from the Roman festival in honor of Pomona, the goddess of fruit. That tradition was brought first to Britain during Roman times and continues today with our use of pumpkins as a focal point for Halloween.

Whether left whole for decoration or carved as jack-o'-lanterns and set aglow with burning candles, pumpkins capture perfectly the spirit of both the modern day and the ancient Halloween.

This Halloween, why not gather the little ghouls and goblins for a party at home? You can make it a ghoulish good time with costumes, games and these devilishly good Halloween pumpkin treats.

PUMPKIN SHAKIES

- 1 cup undiluted evaporated milk, chilled
- 1/4 cup solid pack pumpkin, chilled
- 1 medium-size ripe banana
- 1/3 cup packed light brown sugar
- 6 to 8 ice cubes
- 1/2 cup orange juice, chilled/pumpkin pie spice or ground cinnamon

Chocolate Spider Webs (optional - recipe follows) long cinnamon or licorice sticks (optional)

In blender or tall container, combine evaporated milk, pumpkin, banana, sugar, ice cubes and orange juice.

Halloween favorite puts spice into ghoulish goodies

Sprinkle with pumpkin pie spice and garnish with Chocolate Spider Webs or cinnamon or licorice sticks. Makes 6 servings.

Chocolate Spider Webs: In microwave or in saucepan over low heat, melt 1/2 cup (3 ounces) semi-sweet chocolate morsels. Cool until just warm but still fluid. Spoon into small heavy gauge plastic bag; cut off small corner. On waxed paper, pipe six 3-inch spider webs; chill. When firm, carefully peel away paper.

BEANWITCHED WENIES

- 4 1/2 cups (two 21-ounce cans) pork and beans
- 2 cups (two 15-ounce cans) great northern beans, drained
- 1 cup solid pack pumpkin
- 1 cup (8-ounce can) tomato sauce
- 1 cup (8-ounce can) crushed pineapple in juice,

- undrained
- 1 cup sliced green onion
- 1/3 cup packed light brown sugar
- 1 tablespoon dry mustard
- 2 teaspoons Worcestershire sauce
- 1 teaspoon ground ginger
- few drops liquid smoke flavoring
- 2 pounds turkey hot dogs, sliced
- 14 mini or 1 large pumpkin (optional)
- In 5-quart casserole or cast iron kettle, combine beans, pumpkin, tomato sauce, pineapple and juice, onion, sugar, mustard, Worcestershire sauce, ginger and liquid smoke.

Bake uncovered in preheated 325 degree oven for 45 minutes, stirring occasionally. Stir in hot dogs; bake for 15 minutes. Cut pumpkins around stems to make lids about 2 1/2 inches in diameter; scrape out seeds. Dip each "bowl" and lid in boiling water; drain. Serve bean mixture in individual pumpkins with tops set aside.

Makes 16 servings.

DINOSAUR BONES

White House kitchen chief offers revealing facts

By Cathy Thomas
Orange County Register

Cottage cheese doused with ketchup. Sounded like a luncheon dish fit for a president of the United States?

Not according to Henry Haller, the White House executive chef in 1966-1973.

"Somehow, everyone thought that President Nixon ate cottage cheese with ketchup on it, but in fact I never saw him do that. And I have no idea how that rumor ever got started in the first place," Haller said in a telephone interview from his home in Potomac, Md.

Yet during Richard Nixon's term, the alleged Nixon Cottage Cheese and Ketchup Diet became so popular with dieters that it appeared on many trendy restaurant menus.

"President Nixon ate a cottage cheese and fruit 'diet special' two or three days a week for lunch," Haller said. "These specials included a scoop of low-fat cottage cheese, fresh seasonal fruit, Ry-Krisp crackers and sometimes a hard-boiled egg or slices of fresh vegetables."

But absolutely no ketchup.

"Foodies" have long believed that you can tell a lot about a person by what and how they eat. Perhaps that is why presidential cuisine has of special interest.

Haller's "The White House Family Cookbook" (Random House, 1987) gives an intimate look at the eating habits of five presidents and their families. Administration by administration, Haller takes the reader on a culinary tour of the offices, with glimpses into breakfast nooks and homey "family" dinners as well as White House weddings, banquets and sumptuous state dinners.

Not just a collection of recipes, this book (in its fifth printing) is crisscrossed with anecdotes about life in the executive mansion. The photos bring back a flood of memories: Ford meeting ex-Beate George Harrison at the alongside several Cheesecake officials, Johnson grinning at the sight of his daughter Luci's splendid wedding cake, and Amy Carter nibbling as she visited the White House kitchen.

The state dinners sound intriguing, but perhaps the most interesting aspect of his book is the nitty-gritty on the everyday food that kept the first families fed and happy.

Triva about president's dining habits

Knight-Ridder News Service

President Franklin Roosevelt loved sauerkraut and pig's knuckles so much that he once served them to visiting British Prime Minister Winston Churchill.

The White House got its first kitchen stove during the presidency of Millard Fillmore, between 1850 and 1853. It was so complicated that Fillmore himself had to instruct the kitchen help on how to operate it. Before that, cooking was done on an open fireplace.

Thomas Jefferson's wine bill during his two terms in the White House came to $11,000, and he paid for it himself. Not until the administration of Warren Harding did the government start paying for official White House entertaining. The first family, however, continues to pay for its private meals.

President Calvin Coolidge would go to the White House pantry and make cheese sandwiches for himself and his Secret Service guard after their daily walk.

President George Washington had to fire his chef after he found him stealing food and wine.

The two heaviest presidents were Grover Cleveland, who weighed about 250 pounds and loved rich food and beer, and William Taft, who weighed 300-350 pounds. The presidents with the smallest appetites for food were John Kennedy, Richard Nixon, Chester Arthur and Abraham Lincoln. Lincoln mostly liked plain cheese, crackers and fruit.

"Each first lady would meet with me on a regular basis to discuss menus for the family," Haller said. "Most often their primary concern was their husband's health. When President Nixon took office, I was told he liked very fancy food, which wasn't true. After one week, I was told to cut out the desserts and first courses. I was just to serve the main course and salad."

"Here are recipes from three of the five administrations Haller served. Each family's preferences were reflections of geographic, cultural and family influences.

PRESIDENT JOHNSON

"President Johnson liked to accomplish some of the day's work before he even got out of bed in the morning," Haller wrote. "As early as 6 a.m., he would watch the news on three television sets while scanning the day's papers."

"Mrs. Johnson used her own bedroom suite as an office, spending much of her day there working on projects and answering the some 1,500 letters she received each week. She would join the president each morning to have breakfast in his four-poster bed."

"Once in a while, Mrs. Johnson would also join him in indulging in some thickly cut, well-cooked Thick Ranch-Style Bacon. It was prepared every morning in the White House. Any extra might be used in Mrs. Johnson's Quiche Lorraine. She liked this recipe for Quiche Lorraine so much that she included it in the menu for Lynda's wedding reception."

LADY BIRD JOHNSON'S QUICHE LORRAINE

- 12 thick slices of bacon, cut into small pieces
- 1 cup diced onions
- 6 eggs
- 2 egg yolks
- 1 quart half-and-half
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 1/4 teaspoon freshly ground white pepper
- 1/4 teaspoon ground nutmeg
- 1/4 pound Gruyere cheese, freshly grated (see cook's notes)
- 1/4 pound Parmesan cheese, freshly grated
- 2 (9-inch) partially baked pie crusts (recipe follows)
- 4 tablespoons chopped fresh chives

Cook's notes: Swiss Gruyere cheese has a rich, nutty flavor. If it is not available, substitute Swiss cheese. It has a golden-brown rind and a firm pale-yellow interior. Procedure: In a cast-iron skillet, saute bacon until crisp. Remove with a metal spatula and drain well on paper

Pregnant girl, family face tough situation

DEAR ABBY: My 21-year-old daughter, Chris, is a virgin until she became involved with a married man I'll call "John." Chris is now pregnant and wants to keep the baby, but in order to keep it she will have to pay for public assistance. To qualify, she will have to disclose his identity as the baby's father, and she doesn't want to do that.

I think she should, because as a taxpayer, I resent having to pay for this man's irresponsibility. Chris will have a much more difficult life, and John will not have to suffer any consequences at all for his actions. Chris says she wants no contact with — or hassle from — John. She says she knows he can't afford to pay anything toward the baby's support and, besides, she doesn't want to hurt his wife and children by exposing this mess. She has a few options.

Abby, we've argued bitterly about it and have agreed to leave the decision up to you.

CHRIS' MOM: It is unfortunate that John's wife and family will be "hurt" if this mess is revealed, but John should not be let off the hook for any reason.

Your daughter's willingness to protect this man's family is noble, but I think she should name John as her baby's father and make him assume his share of the responsibilities.

DEAR ABBY: America is perhaps the richest country in the world, but has one of the worst fire-death rates. Our problem isn't resources or technology, but a complacent attitude about fire safety.

For example: Although smoke detectors are in 82 percent of American homes, one-third of them don't work because of weak or missing batteries! This is tragic, because a working smoke detector cuts the risk of dying in a home fire nearly in half by providing an early warning and critical extra seconds to escape.

To prevent needless deaths and injuries due to home fires, the Inter-

GARY L. NICHOLS, CHIEF, FIRE DEPARTMENT, SEDGWICK COUNTY, KAN.

DEAR ABBY: Please settle an argument for several of us here at work: Did the 19 people who served time because of their involvement in the Watergate break-in lose their right to vote?

LOUISE B., DANA POINT, CALIF.

DEAR LOUISE: They lost their right to vote while they were in prison, and for the duration of their parole, if they were paroled. But, according to the Justice Department, once their sentences were completed, whether or not their voting rights were restored depended on the nature of their crimes and the laws of the state in which they resided.

It was a good lesson in passion and civility.

And more lessons remained. I became a regular at council meetings. City hall was my classroom, my hobby, throughout the war. I learned to appreciate the many fine people who serve quietly and tirelessly, making a government of, by and for the people work.

Throughout the years, the memory of that autumn night when we stormed City Hall cheered me with its lessons.

And yes, I still dress up and do my hair on Election Day, or for jury duty, or anything that takes me to halls of government. I know no one cares; it's merely my way of saying: This is important. This matters.

Memories of autumn night help season strong sense of civic pride

The neighborhood was in an uproar. We trooped to City Hall to confront a rezoning of the property near ours.

With my husband overseas during World War II, it fell to me to decide for both of us whether to agree with the against-it position of our group.

For this, my first experience in citizenship, I dressed my pants and wore curlers all day so my hair would look neat instead of windblown. I could scarcely wait for nightfall and the walk to City Hall, scuffling through dried autumn leaves.

One of my grandfathers had been a city alderman; my parents did civic good deeds. Small wonder I thrilled to the sight-of-the-council chambers, the semicircle of solemn office holders, the crowd milling in the gallery.

But I was unprepared for the passion and eloquence of my neighbors as they raged against the proposed zoning.

The pleasant man down the street flushed with anger and shook a fist.

The woman next door who brought me cookies whispered of dire plots against us.

I realized for the first time what a fine line exists between righteous indignation and becoming an unruly mob. I saw how easy it would be to get swept up and vote or act in unintended ways.

My neighbors, of course, did not breach that fine line. Still, I expected to be shunned when, after hearing all the arguments, I had to disagree with them.

When my turn came, my voice quavered. It was my maiden speech, and when I finished, I experienced the loneliness of the outsider.

My neighbors were understandably distant at first, but the cookies kept coming, and as we shared per-

How would you like to become a professional chef? Many would, evidently. There are 625 accredited schools to train chefs in this country, and enrollment therein now is higher than it has ever been, and still growing. According to trade-school networking agencies, numerous professionals in the middle of other careers are switching to the craft of classy cookery.

Pumpkins

In medium bowl, combine flour, poppy seeds and baking soda, set aside. In large mixer bowl, cream margarine, brown sugar and granulated sugar until fluffy. Beat in pumpkin, egg and zest. Gradually add ingredients, beat well. Cover and chill dough for several hours or up to one day.

With lightly floured hands, pinch off 2-inch pieces. On floured surface, shape each dough piece into a 9-inch long strip. Fold ends under, shape to look like a bone. Repeat with remaining dough. Bake on ungreased baking sheets in preheated 350-degree oven for 10 to 12 minutes or until lightly browned. Cool for 1 to 2 minutes; carefully transfer to wire racks. Spoon glaze over warm cookies; sprinkle with additional poppy seeds. Cool completely.

Makes 2 dozen cookies.

Glaze: In medium bowl, combine 3/4 cups (1 pound) powdered sugar and 1/3 cup water; mix until smooth.

Bake on lowest rack in preheated 375-degree oven for 45 minutes or until golden brown and firm to touch. Remove and let stand for 30 minutes.

Presentation: Slice into wedges and serve. Serve as an entree for a lunch or dinner. In a medium bowl, stir 3 cups, all-purpose flour and 1 teaspoon salt. Cut 2 sticks (1 cup) butter with pastry cutter until it is thoroughly distributed and the mixture resembles coarse bread crumbs. Add 1/2 cup cold water a little at a time, mixing by hand until dough is smooth.

Divide dough in half. Place part on lightly floured surface and flatten by hand into a round. Roll out to 1/2-inch thickness. Fit loosely into a 9-inch pie pan. Trim and flute edges. Repeat with second portion of dough. Line pie shells with wax paper or parchment paper. Weight down with uncooked dried beans or pie weights. Bake at 350 degrees for 15 minutes or until lightly browned. Remove paper and beans (or weights).

PREIDENT NIXON
"The Nixons liked simple American foods and ethnic dishes," Haller wrote. "With full responsibility for the many meals served at the White House," it was a relief to be asked to prepare simple "salads" as luncheon fare—especially on days with an evening reception for 500 or a fancy formal dinner to honor a king or prime minister.

"Even as a resident of the White House, where lavish meals and daily stress can promote weight gain, President Nixon was able to maintain his marriage weight from some 30 years earlier. His success in long avoiding undesirable weight gain was due to a combination of self-discipline and common sense. President Nixon ate small portions, avoided snacking and

BETTY FORD'S CHOCOLATE ANGEL FOOD CAKE

1 cup plus 2 tablespoons cake flour
2/3 teaspoon salt
1/2 cup cocoa powder
1/2 cup sugar, divided use

"President Ford had a terrific appetite and appreciated lots of good, wholesome food," Haller said. "Unlike the other presidents, he swam and exercised every day."

"The president and his four offspring were avid skiers, swimmers and tennis players," Haller wrote. "Like their father, the Ford boys played high school football. In her younger days, Betty Ford had practiced dance and had even studied professionally under the legendary Martha Graham. Later, as a busy congressional wife and eventually first lady, Mrs. Ford found the time to take long, brisk walks."

"Mrs. Ford liked to serve her active family an airy angel food cake: An American creation, angel food cake is light sponge-type cake made with well-beaten egg whites and fine cake flour. Weight-conscious Americans appreciate the relatively low-calorie value of this delicious dessert. Unlike most cakes, angel food is sweet but not high in fat. Even the chocolate-flavored cake is relatively low in fat content because cocoa is used rather than fat-rich chocolate made with cocoa butter."

Government remains perplexed by label issue

WASHINGTON (AP) — Twelve days before new rules must be announced revolutionizing food nutrition labels, government agencies are still haggling over what the tags should say.

The regulations, due Nov. 8 and expected to cover 4,000 pages, will spell out exactly how words such as "light" and "low-fat" should be used, how ingredients should be listed and what information should be on the labels.

Publicly, government spokesmen say all is moving steadily toward completion.

Privately, industry sources and government officials say disagreements between the Food and Drug Administration and the Agriculture Department have been so intense that key parts of the regulations are still unsettled.

Chief among them is the format for the nutrition label, which traditionally has given quantities of calories, fat, carbohydrates, fiber, protein, cholesterol, sodium, vitamins and minerals.

FDA Commissioner David Kessler, instead, wants a chart that breaks down each major nutrient in a product as a percentage of daily nutritional needs.

In other words, if a microwaveable dinner had 10 grams of fat, the chart would say how much of a recommended daily consumption of fat the dinner would account for.

But while day, critics ask, "Nutrient needs vary so much that it's virtually impossible to create a chart enumerating any one person's needs."

A 21-year-old, 200-pound construction worker, for example, could consume 4,000 calories a day and not gain a pound, but a 65-year-old, 125-pound woman with a sedentary lifestyle could start gaining weight if she regularly consumed more than 1,625 calories a day.

FDA first recommended a daily diet of 2,350 calories and 75 grams of fat, but medical officials said those amounts would be too high for many people.

The agency revised the proposal to a daily diet of 2,000 calories and 65 grams of fat, including 20 grams of saturated fat. Although that's a lot less food than many people could safely consume, it's not likely to be too much food to endanger anyone's health, said the medical officials.

With geraniums shining brightly, take time to ensure they stay that way

My geraniums have been blooming so brightly in the front yard we've been able to see them for a half mile before we get to the house. Now it's time to take cuttings and save some for next year.

The number of geraniums I have for next year is limited only by the number of pots I have around the house and the space on my window sills. Geraniums need to spend the winters on sunny window sills, so I had my house positioned so that all the windows see sun for a time each day.

Cathy Walworth Green
Thumbprints

pruners to take off stems that are large enough to stand up nicely in the pots. Each cutting will need at least five leaves on top after I've stripped off those leaves that will be in soil. I choose each stem with those two criteria in mind.

The pots are already filled half way with new, sterile potting soil. A self-closing plastic bag has some Rootone or other rooting compound in it. I wash each geranium cutting under the faucet to get rid of dirt and any insects that might be looking for a free ride.

The blooms must be snapped or cut off cleanly. The new plant won't have the energy to support a blossom right away. Then the lower leaves are snapped off with the fingers or cut with the pruners. The stem is immediately immersed in the plastic bag with rooting compound. Hold the plastic bag tightly around the top and shake as if you're bread-crumbing chicken. The rooting compound will coat the moist wounds where we removed the leaves.

The cutting is put into the pot and moist potting soil is gently but firmly packed around it. The newly potted cutting needs to live out of the sunlight until it has rooted, probably about 10 days. After that, it moves to a sunny spot and is fed with Peter's 20-20-20 all winter.

A lot of folks recommend that geranium cuttings not be fed, or at least put on a diet for the winter. But I enjoy the bright geranium blossoms all winter - especially around Christmas time. The only drawback I've found to feeding them all winter is that they get so big before Mother's Day when they go live outside again that they almost topple off the window sills. Maybe I should try hanging planters this year.

Don't become spaced out over trying to cram your 'full house'

Weeding out a house is much like weeding the garden. We do it to make room for the good stuff and replenish what's needed to make a "full house."

Leslie Linsley
Quick Home Design

If you're like me, you're always looking for more space in your home. Not a day goes by when I don't say, "I wish this house was just a little bit bigger." I have never enough closet space and the answer seems to be to get rid of things I no longer need. Not so easy!

When it comes down to throwing things out, I'm always convinced that what I throw away today I will surely need tomorrow... even if I don't think about it for five years. Most of us have a linen closet filled with sheets and towels that have been better days.

A bed, after all, only takes two sheets at a time. Accounting for the fact that one set is on the bed and another in the wash, most of us have more than two sets. I often wonder why since the four I use are the best, softest and prettiest. When do I think I'll use the next best choice? And where did they come from?

Towels are another matter. It takes a long time for a towel to get so frayed that it is unacceptable. This is a problem if you do not own the new crop that shows up in every catalog with every change of season. I hate those lush catalogs that tempt me with beautiful linens. How can I justify new ones when the old aren't old enough to get rid of? And how, I often wonder, do I wind up with towels that don't match? I'm almost positive I started out with matching sets.

I've discovered another fact. New sheets, no matter how expensive or how many zillions of thread counts per inch, never ever feel as soft as the old ones that have been washed a trillion times. But they are prettier.

So, do I sacrifice that wonderful, soft-as-butter feeling for chic sheets that are a real letdown in the "feel good" department? Thus, we keep the old grayish sheets but also buy the new, pretty ones which leads to an overloaded closet. It is simply a no-win situation. And we're just talking about the linen closet here.

Now let's move onto clothes closets, kitchen cabinets, bookcases, utility closets... on the other hand, let's not. Like our politicians, I seem to have defined the problem, but where is the solution? A platform for reform is needed.

My husband, Jon, suggests a holding tank. He says what everyone needs is a place for things not yet ready to go but definitely on the way out. There's no need to make the final decision. The items in question are put on hold. "But where do we put them on hold?" I ask him. "Well, we need another closet," is his answer.

Just like our politicians, anyone can come up with an impossible solution that sounds reasonable until examined closely. Which leads back to my original statement. We all need more space than we have, no matter who we are or where we live. In either words, I beg the issue.

Speed up painting by choosing right tools

Q. I have a new house that needs interior painting, but it has been many years since I held a brush. There are new painting tools in the stores that I'm not familiar with. What tools should I use? Is there a good instruction book?

A. Brushes are generally used in interior painting only when painting trim such as baseboard and window frames or for painting at edges of large surfaces. Even then, the work can often be done better and faster with painting pads. These generally feature plastic handles with removable foam-and-bristle pads of various shapes and sizes.

Wide pads held paint well and

Do it yourself Gene Austin make it easy to smoothly and quickly paint flat surfaces. Small, narrow pads are excellent for painting narrow pieces without smearing at edges.

There are also special edging pads for painting border areas.

Walls and ceilings are almost always easiest to paint with rollers, which spread paint quickly and smoothly.

An extension handle for a roller can virtually eliminate the need for a ladder.

If a lot of painting is to be done, a power-rod roller is a good buy. It includes a pump-equipped container that keeps the roller supplied with paint. Rollers are also available that hold a supply of paint in their handles.

To get good results, buy high-quality rollers and choose the nap carefully - a short nap for smooth surfaces and a longer nap for rough surfaces such as stucco or textured walls.

Small rollers are also available for painting trim, and wedge-shaped rollers paint corners neatly.

However, it is wise to have several brushes on hand for special needs.

Since latex (water-based) paints are used for most interior painting, buy synthetic-bristle brushes, which work best with water paints. I suggest one brush 3 inches wide and one 1/2 inches wide. Many paint stores and home centers have free brochures with tips on interior painting, proper use of rollers and so forth.

A good book for in-depth information is "Decorating With Paint & Wall Coverings" ($8.95 paperback, Sunset Publishing Corp.). This is one of the Sunset Book series, sold at many home centers, garden centers and bookstores.

You can also order it by sending a check for $11.45 to Mail Orders, Sunset Books, 80 Willow Road, Menlo Park, Calif. 94025.

Storm windows: 1st step to winterizing your home

By Karol V. Menzie and Randy Johnson
The Baltimore Sun

Frost is starting to show up in what weather forecasters call "the outlying suburbs" and it's starting to become a temptation to break our vow about not turning on the heat before Thanksgiving.

As in years past, we may succumb early. Meanwhile, there are a lot of ways to conserve heat built up during the day and keep colder night air out. If you begin fine-tuning your entire winter-warming system now, you'll be ready for that first cold snap - or truly thankful at Thanksgiving.

Here's a list of tactics that will abate winter warmth:

If it sounds elementary, it is: Close or install storm windows.

Remember that as you close up the house, you will be decreasing ventilation and possibly increasing humidity. Make sure ventilating systems, such as exterior-venting range hoods and exhaust fans, are in good working order, and use them regularly.

While the house is closed up, be extra careful using products containing volatile organic compounds - solvents, paints, paint thinner, some cleaners - that can pollute indoor air. Such products are best used and stored outdoors.

Remove air-conditioning units. Or wrap the outside with plastic, remove the front cover, pack the inside with fiberglass insulation and replace the cover. Or, if they can be removed, take units out and store them in the basement.

Check doors and windows for leaks and drafts.

Line door jams with a good, flexible, bead-type weatherstripping that compresses when the door is closed. Replace worn thresholds to meet door-bottom weatherstripping. (The old-fashioned technique of using a rolled-up towel or sand- or bean-bag doesn't work well, too, and doesn't cost much.)

Old double-hung wood windows can be made more energy-efficient if they're fixed in place and caulked. If you don't have storm windows, use shrink-film, one-season plastic weather-seal film.

Remember that the most effective system is two weather-tight surfaces with dead air space in between. The shrink film won't work well if you don't seal the windows.

If you have an exterior door that isn't used, as often happens in the middle of a rehab, caulk and seal it as if it were a window.

Change filters and tune up your heating equipment so it's clean and running efficiently. If you are replacing a furnace or boiler, upgrade to a more efficient model - but check out maintenance. The very highly efficient equipment requires far more care and maintenance.

One of the most effective ways to conserve energy is to install a clock thermostat that automatically sets back the temperature when no one is home or everyone is asleep.

Remember that it's far cheaper to wear a sweater and keep the temperature a little lower. For every degree you turn the heat back and leave it, you save 3 percent in energy costs.

NBA team's career scoring leader retires

DENVER — Alex English, the Denver Nuggets' career scoring leader, announced his retirement as an active player on Tuesday and said he would take a position with the National Basketball Players Association.

English, who played with the Nuggets for 10 seasons, was traded to Dallas in 1990 and played in Italy last season.

As director of player programs and services for the NBPA, English will be responsible for the implementation of rookie orientation, career planning, an AIDS-HIV information and education program and drug education programs. He will also be the liaison to the National Retiree Basketball Players Association.

"Joining the administration of the NBPA seems a natural extension of my basketball career," English said. "In my new position I will continue to be part of the game which has been so important to me all my life."

English holds Nuggets' records for points (21,645), games (837), minutes (29,893), baskets (8,953) and assists (3,679), ranks second in free throws made (4,428) and third in rebounds (4,686).

English ranks fourth in NBA history in field goals (10,659) and seventh in points (25,613) and games (1,192). He represented the Nuggets in the all-star game from 1982 through 1989.

The Nuggets will retire English's No. 2 jersey during a game this season, the Nuggets said.

NL plans Friday conference call to vote on Astros sale

NEW YORK — The National League scheduled a telephone conference call for Friday to vote on preliminary approval of the sale of the Houston Astros from John McAllen to Bryan McLane Jr.

The deal is said to be valued at $115 million for the Houston Sports Authority, which owns the team, its lease on the Astrodome and related properties. The club's value in the deal is said to be about $90 million.

McAllen purchased the Astros in 1979 for about $18 million. He announced the agreement with McLane on July 24, about a year after he first said he wanted to sell the club.

National League spokeswoman Katy Feeney and the Astros said they had no information about the meeting, but an NL spokesman confirmed that it had been scheduled. The deal is expected to gain approval, but final approval can come only during a joint major league meeting.

The sale needs the approval of 10 of 14 NL owners and eight of 14 American League owners.

Colorado Rockies General Manager Bob Gebhard, right, introduces the team's first manager, Don Baylor.

Expansion team helps Baylor finally land managerial job

The Associated Press

DENVER — Don Baylor, long considered a top candidate to run a team but bypassed twice last year, became the fourth minority manager in the major leagues when he was hired Tuesday by the expansion Colorado Rockies.

Baylor, 43, played for six American League teams in a 19-year career as an outfielder, first baseman and designated hitter, playing in three World Series and seven All-Star games. He had a 260 career average, 338 homers and 1,276 RBIs and was hit by pitches a record 255 times. He was the American League's Most Valuable Player in 1979, when he hit 36 homers, drove in 139 runs and scored 120 runs for the California Angels.

Baylor was batting coach for the St. Louis Cardinals last season after being a finalist for that team's manager position in 1990. Baylor was batting coach with the Milwaukee Brewers in 1990 and 1991.

Baylor is the fourth minority manager in the major leagues, joining Cito Gaston of Toronto, Hal McRae of Kansas City and Felipe Alou of Montreal.

General manager Bob Gebhard said Baylor, signed to a three-year contract, agrees with his philosophy that expansion teams don't necessarily have to be losers.

"Even though this is an expansion team, we must teach these young kids how to win," Baylor said. "I'll tell our young guys in Please see BAYLOR/D2

3rd AL Manager of the Year award thrills La Russa

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Tony La Russa, who led Oakland to its fourth AL West title in five years, won his third American League Manager of the Year award on Tuesday.

La Russa, who kept the team in contention during the first half of the year despite injuries to key players, received 25 of 28 first-place votes in balloting by the Baseball Writers Association of America. He got two second-place votes and one third for 132 points in the balloting, which is done on a 5-3-1 basis.

"I'm definitely thrilled," La Russa said during a telephone conference call from Scottsdale, Ariz., where he was involved in the A's instructional league.

"It's not something you expect when the season starts. I think I understand the significance of the award. You don't take it personal. It's an award that the team generates and the organization is responsible for and if ever that was true, it was true in 1992."

Phil Garner, who kept the Milwaukee Brewers in contention in the AL East until the final weekend of the season, was second with 76 points. He received two first-place votes, 21 seconds and three thirds.

"I'm happy for him. I'm glad he won it," Garner said. "I've been asked, 'Were you disappointed? Were you shooting for it? Did you have hopes?' But really not. We had a great year. My gratification comes from the way the players responded to the type baseball we wanted to play."

"This award, although it would have been nice to have had it, is certainly not something I longed for. The gratification I have is from the way we played this summer. We did everything we could to win, even though we came up a little short."

Johnny Oates of the Baltimore Orioles finished third with 27 points on four second-place votes and 15 thirds. Cito Gaston, who led the Toronto Blue Jays to Canada's first World Series title, was fourth with 13 points from one first-place vote, one second and five thirds; Mike Hargrove of the Cleveland Indians got four points from four third-place votes.

La Russa won the initial AL manager's award from the writers in 1983 for leading the Chicago White Sox to the AL West title. He won it again in 1989 for leading the A's to the first of three straight AL pennants.

He spread the credit around for his latest award to his players and the coaching staff but singled out the work of pitching coach Dave Duncan.

"The one guy I think it would be a crime not to acknowledge is Dave Duncan," La Russa said. "I don't think it's any coincidence that the first time I won the award in '83 is the first year we were together. When we won three straight AL pennants from 1988 to 1990, pitching was our hallmark and Duncan orchestrated it."

"This year our bullpen was restructured and we had problems keeping our starting rotation intact but Andy Van Slyke replaced pitching staff with a 3.70 ERA and 96 wins. So, I'm proud of what the staff and coaches can do. This was the most demanding year for any club I've ever been a part of and still been successful, and the players also deserve a majority of the credit for that."

Jordan says he'll still gamble on golf but for much less cash

The Associated Press

CHICAGO — Michael Jordan says he has learned his lesson — don't play golf or cards for high stakes with the wrong company.

The NBA superstar admitted during James "Slim" Boulter's federal drug and money-laundering trial last week that he lost $57,000 in golf and poker bets to Boulter in a weekend outing in South Carolina 16 months ago.

"Winning is great but when you lose that amount and get all the abuse, I got it ain't worth it any longer," said Jordan, back playing basketball in the Chicago Bulls' preseason camp as the team shoots for its third consecutive league title.

Jordan said he will stick to $20 bets. "I think people can accept my losing $40 or $50. It's easy to relate to," he said in an interview Monday at practice. "A $20 Nassau is something I should stick with."

A $20 Nassau is when golfers bet $20 on front nine scores, $20 on back nine scores and then $20 on the total 18 holes, with $60 the most anyone can win or lose. Jeff Rimsdorf, head pro at Cog Hill Golf and Country Club in Lemont, explained Tuesday.

Jordan testified that he played $1,000 Nassau with Boulter and others at Hilton Head, S.C.

Even though Jordan makes millions in Bulls' salary and endorsements, he said he cannot afford to lose $57,000.

"It's a little embarrassing because I don't play that type of golf that much," he said. "My golf game isn't that good that I can play that consistently."

He claims he doesn't have a gambling problem.

"To me, it was never a problem," he said. Jordan said he doesn't believe he was conned by Boulter and others that weekend.

"It was just bad golf in a three-day period," he said. "Like most competitors, you raise the limit and you want to get back (your money) and the next thing you know, boom, you are playing bad."

"When money is on the line and you don't respond, next thing you know you are down a big hole."

Annual stat rankings say Cubs' 2nd baseman is best

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Ryne Sandberg isn't just the highest-paid player in baseball, he's also the best, according to the annual statistical rankings.

Sandberg got a 98.137 score over the 1991 and 1992 seasons and replaced Cal Ripken as the highest-ranked player in the game, the Elias Sports Bureau said Tuesday.

Barry Bonds of the Pittsburgh Pirates was second at 97.838, while Ripken dropped from a perfect 100 to third at 97.449. Cincinnati pitcher Jose Rijo was fourth at 97.304.

Sandberg and the Chicago Cubs agreed last spring on a $28.4 million, four-year contract that begins next season. His average salary of $7.1 million is tops in the game.

Ripken isn't too far behind, though. He and the Baltimore Orioles agreed last summer to a $32.5 million five-year extension, the second highest by annual average and the top deal ever in total guaranteed money.

Bonds, who on Monday became a free agent, may be joining another team, but he is expected to be in or near the top of baseball's pay scale.

Sandberg was the highest-ranked National League second baseman for the ninth straight season. Fred McGriff of San Diego repeated at first base, Terry Pendleton of Atlanta replaced Cincinnati's Chris Sabo at third base, and Barry Larkin of the Reds was first at shortstop for the third straight season.

Bonds and former Pittsburgh teammate Bobby Bonilla, who signed with the New York Mets following the 1991 season, repeated in the outfield, while Andy Van Slyke of the Pirates replaced the Dodgers' Darryl Strawberry.

NEW YORK (AP) — Three days after winning the World Series, the possible breakup of the Toronto Blue Jays began when Game 4 winner Jimmy Key and reliever Tom Henke filed for free agency.

Four more Oakland Athletics and six St. Louis Cardinals were among the 32 players filing, leaving the total of free agents from the AL at least six more A's and as many as 107 total players still are eligible to file by the Nov. 8 deadline.

Reds will open 1993 NL baseball season against Expos

CINCINNATI (AP) — The Cincinnati Reds and the Montreal Expos are to play the traditional National League season opener on April 5, 1993, at Riverfront Stadium.

It will be the 106th time in their 109 seasons in the National League that the Reds have opened the season at home. In both 1877 and 1966, the Reds started the season on the road because of rainouts at home. They opened the 1990 season on the road because of baseball's labor dispute that year.

Howell, Both Howell and Sanderson are now free agents. Philadelphia also said it would not offer salary arbitration to second baseman Wally Backman, who had been covered by the five-year restriction on repeat free agency. The California Angels said arbitration would not be offered to infielders Hubie Brooks and Ken Oberkfell and catcher Mike Fitzgerald.

Teams must decide by Thursday whether to offer arbitration to 22 players still covered by the repeat rights restriction, a group that includes Carlton Fisk of the Chicago White Sox, Jim Gantner of the Milwaukee Brewers, Mike Moore of the A's and Jeff Reardon of the Atlanta Braves.

She's the coach

Woman impresses with leadership, communication

TAFI, Calif. (AP) - Donna Heiman knew it was going to be a long haul when an opposing coach walked past her, toward her two male assistants - during postgame handshakes.

Just another snub for the head coach of Taft High School's B football team.

Heiman, 29, is believed to be the only female prep head football coach in the state, according to Thomas Byrnes, commissioner of the California Interscholastic Federation.

It hasn't been an easy transition from pep-squad leader to the football sidelines for Heiman.

Antwan Simpson, a freshman and two-way starter, said he has heard more than a few unsolicited comments about Heiman, most of them negative.

"(People) think it shows that the school system doesn't care," Simpson said. "They think she's out there just because somebody has to be there."

Taft varsity coach Troy Starr disagrees. He had seen Heiman coaching the school's softball team and knew she was an effective and effusive teacher. Yet he had few other candidates.

Starr said he was impressed with Heiman's leadership qualities - she led the softball team to a 17-3 record last spring - and told her that her previous ability to communicate was important.

"After (Starr) sweet-talked me about what it involved, I decided to do it," Heiman said, laughing. "He was lying, big time."

Every practice, Heiman is in the trenches, teaching blocking schemes and roughing out the rudiments.

Simpson said Heiman earned a lot of credit with him by admitting that she is a football novice.

"If there's something she doesn't know, she'll tell you and ask the other coaches," Simpson said. "She doesn't pretend."

Said Heiman: "Believe me, there are some players who are ahead of me. I told them, 'Hey, I'll have to get back to you tomorrow, because I don't know the answer to that.' I'm gonna lie to them if I don't know."

Not that Heiman hasn't had a few crum sessions. Her favorite book to check out of the library is called "Play Football the NFL Way."

Donna Heiman, coach of the freshman football team at Taft High School in the Woodland Hills district of Los Angeles, oversees tackling drills during a Tuesday practice.

"I renew it every two weeks," she said.

Her assignment is to get Taft's B team out of last place. It's a major task. The team, which is for smaller, younger players, has not won a game in three years and scored just one touchdown last season.

The team almost ended its losing streak in the season-opener at Canoga Park. The Toreadors drove to Canoga Park's 13-yard line with under a minute left and the score tied 12-12. But Taft failed to score and, instead, attempted a field goal.

"Everybody was asking, 'Donna, Donna, why didn't you kick it?'" she said. "But we didn't have anybody that could hold the ball. I was thrown into it so fast there were things we didn't cover."

"Things haven't gone as well in the weeks that followed. The Toreadors have lost five in a row to fall to 0-5-1 and have been shut out the past two weeks. On the positive side, Taft ended its three-year winless streak with the Canoga Park tie and has easily outscored the 1991 team.

"Sometimes, I feel like a babysitter," Heiman said. "To be honest, I think it's easier to coach girls than it is guys. Maybe it's their age. Ninth-grade boys are so and you know that some of the guys are just as good as some of the girls, you keep," said New England's Dick MacPherson. "And it's a critical time in their careers."

And you have to cut some veterans, tell an athlete who has considered himself invincible that he has reached the end, at least in that setting.

"The toughest thing for me is when you have to release a veteran, somebody who has worked hard and done an extremely fine job over the years, and then comes to the end of the line," Indianapolis' Ted Marchbanks said. "This year we released Albert Bentley and Mark Herrmann on successive Mondays. Those are difficult days for a coach."

"No doubt, no hesitation," Chiefs coach Marty Schottenheimer added, "it's when you have to release a player. What you're doing is making a judgment that's not always right."

"Sam Mills would be a good example, although Sam wasn't ready to play then," Schottenheimer said of the Browns' having cut the linebacker in 1987 when Schottenheimer was an assistant coach. Mills subsequently became an All-Pro in New Orleans. "But you're making a judgment which ultimately can affect the lives not only of one indi-idual, but the lives of his family. That's a rather dramatic thing to be in a position to do.

"It's unlike business or industry. The difference between a pro athlete and the money he can make for the security of his family ... in private industry, you don't have that kind of disparity in income levels."

"So when you release a player, and he doesn't go somewhere else, it has a major economic impact on the and his family. In private industry, if you're released and find another job, you're not looking at making 300 percent less income level."

While the players' job security is minimal, the coach's aren't on much sturdier ground. It doesn't take much to get them fired - Buddy Ryan was one of the most successful coaches in Eagles history, but was not rehired in 1991 after failing to win a playoff game in three straight years.

"From one point of view, these folks remind me of super-famous trial attorneys," Rusk said. "They are part of an immense public trial every week during the season. And there is a clear verdict, with millions of people watching you get your good or bad verdict."

"Talk about fish bowls, that's a bloody fish bowl."

and yes, some scrambling as well.

Steve and I, we'll have to grow and just work at it. It's not going to happen overnight," said Rice, who privately favored the more disciplined Steve Bono over the scrambling Young during a mini quarterback controversy in training camp.

But Rice has, to his chagrin, played in the 49ers' 6-1 start, which Young has been a big part of, with his Montana-like passing precision and, yes, some scrambling as well.

Rice still catching TDs despite many changes in 49ers

SANTA CLARA, Calif. (AP) - They may be going Jerry Rice could at any time surpass former Seattle receiver Steve Largent's NFL career record of 100 touchdown receptions.

Young has downplayed his running this season and said he, too, would like to get the ball as much as possible to Rice, who shares the team lead in receptions (30) with Ricky Walters.

"What made (the Montana-Rice connection) special was it was very productive. So, yeah, I very much want to keep that going ... and I think we have been," said Young, who has thrown 26 touchdown passes to Rice, including four this season.

Rice also has caught touchdown passes from Jeff Kunkin (8) and Bono (5), as well as one each from Matt Cavanaugh, Mike Moroski and full-back Harry Sydney.

But Rice said he's also had to accept a diminished role as first-year coordinator Mike Shanahan introduced a subtle - some would say subtle - placed an increased emphasis on offensive diversity.

"We don't have the same scheme," Rice said. "It has changed in that we're not depending on two or three guys to win the football game anymore. We're working to make it a group effort. That's what's so different about this year. It's just not the same old deal. Like when Bill Walsh was here and Joe, when he was the quarterback, I knew they would get me the football even if I'm double." "Right now, if the guys are going to double me, I'm not going to place to force the ball in to me and Mike Shanahan isn't going to feel desperate to get me the ball."

The San Francisco 49ers' Pro Bowl, wide receiver is three TDs short of the mark in his eighth season. That puts him six seasons ahead of Largent's pace.

Yet, the last few legs of Rice's journey have not been without some frustrations. He talked about some of them as he sat by his locker, occasionally tugging at the beard he grew recently because he was tired of his baby face.

Rice, who caught 55 of his 97 touchdown receptions from Joe Montana, admitted his alliance with Steve Young has been uneasy at times. He said he's still adjusting to the differing styles of Young, a long-time backup who has blossomed into a top-rated passer during the past season and a half while chronic elbow problems keep Montana sidelined.

Steve and I, we'll have to grow and just work at it. It's not going to happen overnight," said Rice, who privately favored the more disciplined Steve Bono over the scrambling Young during a mini quarterback controversy in training camp.

But Rice has, to his chagrin, played in the 49ers' 6-1 start, which Young has been a big part of, with his Montana-like passing precision and, yes, some scrambling as well.

Knee problems force SMU quarterback to end comeback

DALLAS (AP) - It's an autumn tradition. You had a young boy his first football, teach him everything you know and hope that some day it makes you proud. That's what happened to the young of the intricacies, so you stick to things like cradling the catch. And this: always fight for one more yard. That's the principle of the game, you tell him, the essence of a winner.

That's what Mike Romo learned the game and that's how he led the game, fighting for one more yard.

The record-setting quarterback at Southern Methodist closed one of the most shining and sorrowful chapters in the history of college football this month when he ended his comeback from reconstructive knee surgery.

A groin injury prevented Romo from fully recovering from his fourth knee operation in five years, so he decided to walk away from football while he still could.

"I was trying to defy the odds," Romo said. "My heart was there, but the rest of my body wasn't."

Romo was the first player to sign with SMU in 1988 when the program arose from the "death penalty" caused by an alumni-slush fund scandal.

Romo's goal was to return SMU to greatness, then go pro. He set or tied 17 school and NCAA records in his first two seasons after rejoining in 1988 while recovering from knee surgery in high school.

Then came the third quarter of the third game of his third season.

"I remember Baylor was just drumming us," recalled Romo. "We finally got something going. Get a drive. Got a touchdown. Got the ball back."

"Baylor did a twist blitz. The middle opens wide. The safeties start breaking to make a tackle. I've got the first down."

Bounding 21 yards, it's the longest scramble of his career.

"I was trying to ignite the team, pick up a few extra yards," he explained. Then I got hit from behind and the deciding kind of happened in slow motion. I knew exactly what happened."

Torn anterior cruciate ligament in his right knee. In high school, it was the left knee. He knew too well the pain, the sacrifice, the headache, and he decided then that was enough. But one day last summer he spied a few of the guys throwing the football around, and one of them hollered, "Hey, Mike's coming back."

He joined in the fun, the laughter, throwing a few passes. And when he went home that night - football gushing through his veins again - he thought, "Well, why not?"

Coach Tom Rossley welcomed Romo back to his last season of eligibility. After all, it was the least SMU could do.

Romo knew there was a lot of work to be done. Two-day-a-days were just around the corner and he needed to get stronger, and fast. Strapping knee braces on both legs, he hit his workouts harder than ever.

"When he thought he couldn't do any more sprints, he'd do another 20. When he thought he couldn't push it one more pound, he'd stack another weight on each side. Pushing, harder and harder."

Fighting for one more yard. It was overcompensating for the knee that wasn't 100 percent. It was really pushing it in the weight room," Romo said. "It was a simple lung exercise. I went down too far, lost my balance and pulled back."

A pulled groin, after all of this? "I left a little burning and soreness, but I didn't feel like it was anything real serious," he said. "So I went out and ran that night. The next morning it was just killing me. And then I just kept aggravating it."

Hardly any NFL coach fails to work hard

The Associated Press

Here is the professional coach's dilemma: he must have control, yet he often can't control himself. He attempts to take care of every little detail except one - caring for himself.

"These people are excitement freaks," said Dr. Tom Rusk, author of "Instead of Therapy," and associate professor of psychiatry at the University of California-San Diego. "They thrive on center stage and being in charge, being the one responsible person, in the spotlight. It's exciting, high profile and they're in the fast lane. The other side of the medal involved is it is a very exciting kind of life."

But a dangerous one. Mike Ditka has heart problems. So does Dan Reeves. Bill Parcells got out when his heart began troubling him.

Coaching burns these men into insomniacs, chronic worriers, makes them suspicious of everyone - George Allen saw spies in dorm rooms; Joe Gibbs thought he found one in a tree.

"And they don't always recognize it."

"I haven't changed a whole lot," said the Raiders' Art Shell, perhaps the least demonstrative of all NFL head coaches. "As in any job, the more you're in it, the more you learn. You have to delegate as much responsibility as possible, try not to do everything, but that's a hard thing to do."

It's hard because it means giving up a measure of control. It means delegating authority, which, if not handled properly by an assistant, could mean your job.

So the boss makes sure he pushes them, makes it as hard as he pushes himself, creating a vicious cycle: the future head coaching candidates already are indoctrinated in the workaholic system.

"There's only so many working hours in the day," said Cleveland's Bill Belichick, who worked a lot of them as an assistant, which our assistants do. Our assistants don't work any less than I do. It isn't like they're out taking the kids to the circus and I'm here at the office. I mean, everybody's working hard."

Add Buffalo's Mary Levy. "We get some compensating time off, but from the beginning of July until the season ends, you're talking an average of 12-14 hours, seven days every week. I'm up at 6, I work until 10, I go home and I go to bed. Then I'm in and in the office at 6."

Ditka cut back his frenetic pace after his heart attack in 1988. But his sideline antics, marked by volcanic eruptions like his haranguing of quarterback Jim Harbaugh - earlier this season, almost a scene proper - conduct for someone with his health history.

"Yes, you can achieve balance," Ditka said. "I've spent nights in the office, but that's overrated because there's only so much your mind can control and handle. Sometimes, when you spend so much time on the game plan and come up with so many ideas, you can overwhelm yourself and your team with things you're not two new things a week aren't going to hurt. Everything has to fit in his head and handle. Sometimes, when you spend so much time at it."

In a strange way, what Ditka did with Harbaugh was therapy for both.

"As a psychologist, the best of them handle every single athlete uniquely," Rusk said. "There is no cookie cutter. The more you know about their athletes, and take their own selves for granted and do not self-coach very well."

"So Ditka doesn't burn out, he only gets a massive heart attack. Let's say Dan Reeves in Denver. He doesn't burn out; the body just blows out."

Which is another way of losing control, of course.

One of the things the NFL coach has almost total control over is shaping the roster. Nearly every one of them admits it is the most distasteful part of the job.

"I think the toughest duties are when you get down to the final 47, and you know that some of the guys are just as good as some of the girls, you keep," said New England's Dick MacPherson. "And it's a critical time in their careers."

And you have to cut some veterans, tell an athlete who has considered himself invincible that he has reached the end, at least in that setting.

"The toughest thing for me is when you have to release a veteran, somebody who has worked hard and done an extremely fine job over the years, and then comes to the end of the line," Indianapolis' Ted Marchbanks said. "This year we released Albert Bentley and Mark Herrmann on successive Mondays. Those are difficult days for a coach."

"No doubt, no hesitation," Chiefs coach Marty Schottenheimer added, "it's when you have to release a player. What you're doing is making a judgment that's not always right."

"Sam Mills would be a good example, although Sam wasn't ready to play then," Schottenheimer said of the Browns' having cut the linebacker in 1987 when Schottenheimer was an assistant coach. Mills subsequently became an All-Pro in New Orleans. "But you're making a judgment which ultimately can affect the lives not only of one indi-idual, but the lives of his family. That's a rather dramatic thing to be in a position to do.

"It's unlike business or industry. The difference between a pro athlete and the money he can make for the security of his family ... in private industry, you don't have that kind of disparity in income levels."

"So when you release a player, and he doesn't go somewhere else, it has a major economic impact on the and his family. In private industry, if you're released and find another job, you're not looking at making 300 percent less income level."

While the players' job security is minimal, the coach's aren't on much sturdier ground. It doesn't take much to get them fired - Buddy Ryan was one of the most successful coaches in Eagles history, but was not rehired in 1991 after failing to win a playoff game in three straight years.

"From one point of view, these folks remind me of super-famous trial attorneys," Rusk said. "They are part of an immense public trial every week during the season. And there is a clear verdict, with millions of people watching you get your good or bad verdict."

"Talk about fish bowls, that's a bloody fish bowl."

Favorable report on economy fails to influence choppy market

The Associated Press

NEW YORK - The stock market settled narrowly mixed in choppy trading Tuesday despite the release of a favorable report on the economy.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial firms rose to 3,235.73. Declining issues only slightly outnumbered gaining ones on the New York Stock Exchange.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board rose to 201.65 million shares as of 4 p.m., up from 187.95 million in the previous session.

Stocks opened mixed as traders took profits on the heels of the Dow's 36-point run on Monday. Prices then softened for much of the session, driven lower by computer-triggered sell programs and then rising when traders snatched up bargains.

The market struggled to advance after the Commerce Department reported that economic growth picked up to an annual rate of 2.7 percent in the quarter ended Sept. 30, far better than analysts' expectations of a 1.4 percent gain.

The report said growth nearly doubled the lackluster 1.5 percent rate in the April-June quarter.

Later, the Conference Board reported consumer confidence fell to an eight-month low in October as concerns about the weak job market continued to escalate.

Analysts were divided over the impact the report had on the trading. Some dismissed it, arguing that consumer confidence will lag any concrete improvement in the economy.

Sharp declines in several stocks that comprise the "Dow average" had a disproportionate hand in lowering the index even though the overall market was actually advanced slightly.

IBM lost 1% to 65K; General Motors, whose chairman resigned on Monday, fell 1% to 34K, and Minnesota Mining & Manufacturing was off 1% at 103.

Third-quarter earnings reports continued to drive the trading of individual issues. Several companies put in better-than-anticipated performances and enjoyed a spike in their stock prices.

Consequences of a fragmented Canada?

Report done by the Royal Bank of Canada, the country's largest bank, says if a "no" vote for Canada's constitutional accord defeats the Oct. 26 referendum, the nation could face deep economic trouble. If Quebec and other provinces break away, the study warns of:

- Falling income
- Higher unemployment
- Mass emigration

Presented here is a look at statistics in the study detailing how a fragmented Canada would compare to a united Canada, and the U.S. for 1990 and 10 years later. Dollar figures for both years are reflected in 1991 dollars and exchange rate.

Indicator	United Canada	Fragmented Canada	U.S.
Per capita income (in 1981 U.S. dollars)	1990: $20,893 +12% 2000: $23,304	1990: $20,893 -5% 2000: $19,821	1990: $23,036 +19% 2000: $27,411

Canadians reject accord, tell politicians to chart new path

The Associated Press

MONTREAL — Canadians discovered a landslide 67.9 percent of voters to reject the deal.

East and west, French and English came together — not over constitutional reforms but in rejecting the path chosen for them by the country's political elite.

The results of Monday's referendum was a sharp rebuff to Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, provincial premiers and aboriginal leaders. As expected, voters in French-speaking Quebec — rejected the reform accord, but it also lost in five other provinces and one territory.

Pollsters predicted Tuesday that Mulroney, the deal's chief salesman, would be the biggest loser and might soon be forced from office. With an anemic campaign that has 1.5 million Canadians out of work, Mulroney is Canada's most unpopular prime minister since pollsters began tracking such sentiments.

Only Canada's three poorest provinces — Newfoundland, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island — strongly backed the reforms.

Separatists in Quebec were cheered, hoping the results would rejuvenate their independence campaign and give them a boost in provincial elections that must be held by 1994. However, the province's rejection did not translate into support for independence, because many opponents of secession also voted "no."

The reform package originally was designed to meet Quebec's complaints about threats to its cultural identity in a predominantly English-speaking nation. But it gradually was expanded to meet demands for giving more power to less populous provinces and aboriginal peoples.

A downhearted Mulroney, who must call national elections by November 1993, said early Tuesday that he would turn the government's attention away from constitutional wrangling and toward the economy.

Pollster Angus Reid said that 10 days before the vote, he found that Mulroney managed to persuade twice as many people to vote against the accord as for it.

The constitutional changes would have recognized Quebec as a "distinct society," reformed the Senate and the House of Commons to give western states more representation and recognized the rights of Indians and Inuit to govern themselves.

But while Canadians continued to vote the measure down 54.4 percent to 42.4 percent, they had widely varying reasons. Canada was left no closer to a consensus on dealing with the cultural and regional differences that have been straining the federation for years.

"The Mulroney factor was enormous," Alex McDonough, leader of the New Democratic party in Nova Scotia, told Canadian Broadcasting Corp. "People reacted badly to the scare-mongering and the hard sell."

The loudest "no" came from British Columbia, where anti-Quebec sentiment and fears of increased land claims by Indians and Inuits prompted a landslide 67.9 percent of voters to reject the deal.
