Landfill fees could jam courts

By Jim Wilkie
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — If Gooding County is any example, Twin Falls County residents who refuse to pay a new landfill fee could expect a date in court.

Late last year, Gooding County residents reacted angrily to their landfill fees. Many Twin Falls County residents did the same last week after the county sent residents and businesses bills for $50 per unit of trash to pay for a new county landfill.

Since then, Twin Falls County has been handing out appeal forms to residents and Citizens who balk at paying waste bills may face lawsuits

County commissioners determined that one unit of trash equals the amount of garbage that an average household generates in a year.

A threat of a lawsuit for refusing to pay Gooding County's $38 per unit fee prompted some residents to give up, Prosecutor Phil Brown said. Of the 40 to 50 notices sent to residents who "outright refused to pay," Brown said 11 to 13 have still not paid their bills.

Brown said regular collection action will be filed in 10 days to two weeks in 5th District Court as soon as complaints are drafted. Defendants will be sued for attorneys' fees and the landfill fee assessments, which range from $38 to $114, he said.

E. Scott Paul, deputy Twin Falls County prosecutor, said no decision has been made yet about how to deal with people who won't pay their solid waste fees. He said he would consult with Gooding County officials to see how they handled their landfill fees.

"There's no use recreating the wheel if Gooding County has gone through this already," Paul said.

Paul said he wants to examine the

Hansen's lawyer says alleged check-kiting scam wasn't illegal, wants case dismissed

By Stephen Stuebner
Special to The Times-News

BOISE — John Hansen's lawyer says his client didn't do anything wrong when he took part in a financial arrangement funded by bad checks.

The former Idaho congressman's 33-count indictment on federal charges of bank fraud should be dismissed because the banks involved were willingly extending millions of dollars of credit, John Runft argued Monday in a motion to drop the case.

Hansen's jury trial was set to begin Monday, but U.S. District Judge Edward

Hansen

Lodge postponed it until Nov. 30, so he can entertain several defense motions on Nov. 16.

Runft filed motions to dismiss the case, to strike several aspects of the indictment and to limit the cross-examination of Hansen during the jury trial.

In the motion to dismiss, Runft said federal prosecutors failed to allege a crime in the amended, 33-point indictment filed on Sept. 18.

Runft contended that Idaho banks affected by Hansen's alleged check-kiting scheme were "following their policies allowing the extension of credit on uncollected funds."

"Is it a crime to induce the bank to follow its own credit policy?" he wrote. "The indictment is vague and arguably fails to allege an offense."

In response, U.S. attorneys said the indictment clearly charges Hansen and co-defendant John F. Scoresby, a former state Republican Party official from Idaho Falls, with banking fraud.

Gem health report lists poor marks

The Associated Press

Idahoans may have a healthy way of living, but a new report released on Monday rates overall health in the state poorly compared to its neighbors.

Only Nevada was assessed more poorly than Idaho in the American Public Health Association's report card on public health.

And based on the report, Idaho just missed being rated among the worst states in the nation, led by President-elect Bill Clinton's Arkansas.

The rankings are also colored by the fact that the organization, which is financed by public health agencies and lobbies for them, determined that the nation's health is lagging behind that of other developed countries.

"It appears that the states with the highest rankings are also the states with the biggest deficits and financing problems," Gov. Cecil Andrus said. "We're solvent. We'd like to do more, but we're not going to go into debt to do it."

The report rated each state from one to four on medical care access, healthy environment, healthy neighborhoods, healthy behaviors and community health service. Each category was composed of a number of individual factors.

Idaho ranked among the top quarter of the states in healthy behaviors with relatively high use of seat belts and low rates for smoking, obesity and binge drinking.

But it made only the third quarter of the states in health neighborhoods and community health services while finishing in the bottom quarter in medical care access and healthy environment.

Arkansas finished in the bottom quarter in all five categories while Nevada was among seven states to finish in the bottom quarter in three of the five categories. A dozen states, including Idaho, were in the bottom quarter in two of the five.

Of the factors used to make the assessment, Idaho ranked 50th in the percentage of its poor people receiving Medicaid, based on 1989 statistics. Barely a third of Idahoans living under the poverty line were Medicaid recipients. The state also ranked 48th on per capita Medicaid spending — less than $85 in 1987 — and 48th on the percentage of its population without access to primary health care — nearly 16 percent in 1991.

Tradition of mementoes carries over to small Wall

The Associated Press

PENSACOLA, Fla. — Four partly consumed bottles of beer stand in a row in front of the Wall South, a half-size replica of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial.

A single red carnation has been left in each bottle, its stem soaking in the beer.

"You can only wonder," says Bill Corbin, a trustee of the foundation that built the black granite replica. "My first thought was that somebody had lost four friends at one time because they are all in front of the same panel. He just came to share the beer with each one of them. He drank part of it and left the other for them."

After five days the flowers are still fresh. The Wall South, dedicated Oct. 24, will be the site of an informal Veterans Day ceremony Wednesday. People will be able to read poems or say something about loved ones at an open forum after the names of those still listed as missing in action are recited.

Since the V-shaped monument overlooking Pensacola Bay was dedicated, Corbin has gone there every day to catalogue what people have left. The mementoes are a tradition that started with the original memorial in Washington, D.C.

"Among more than 100 items Corbin has listed is an Army helmet with a small U.S. flag stuck in the band. A peace symbol was drawn on one side and across the front someone inscribed: 'Kill them all — let God sort 'em out.'"

Other items include photos of children and grandchildren of the dead and missing whose names are chiseled into stone, live rounds of ammunition, a toy car, hats with unit insignia on them, letters, cans of C-rations and sardines, packs of cigarettes and coffee, lighters, uniform stripes, medals and lots of flowers.

"For some, it's an acceptance that the individual is dead," Corbin said. "They are gone and it's letting go."

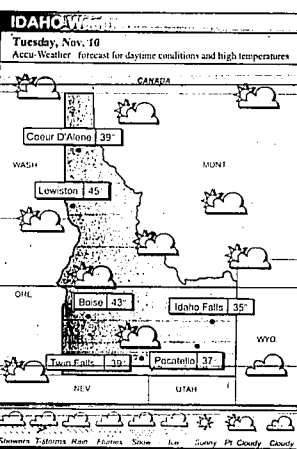

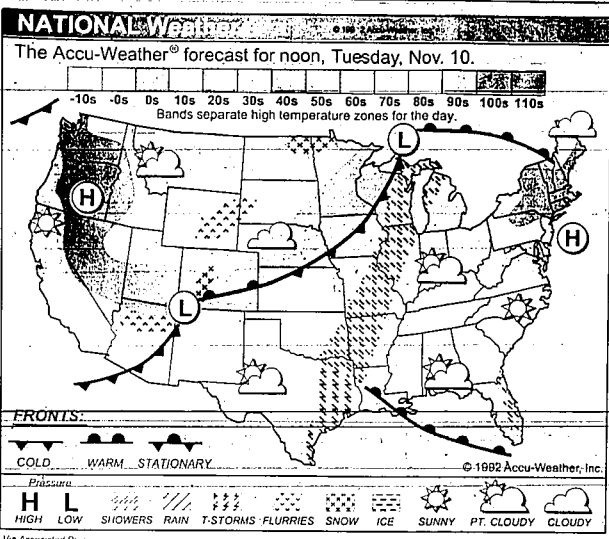

He picks up some of the items and touches them to the wall before putting them in plastic bags for safe keeping until a decision is made whether they will be put on display.

Corbin said he isn't sure why he touches the memorabilia to the wall.

"It just feels right," he said. "It just feels like something I should do."

Double life ends for Air Force sergeant with his pleas of guilty

Pou

RIVERSIDE, Calif. (AP) — An Air Force sergeant who faked his death in 1987 pleaded guilty Monday to desertion and bigamy, telling a military judge he was ready to end his double life as it crumbled around him.

With family members and television producers looking on, Douglas Pou, 32, said he knew in his last days of freedom in June that he was under surveillance and close to being arrested. By then, his second wife had discovered his real identity and found out he had impregnated a neighbor.

"I was ready for this to happen," Pou said in a court-martial at March Air Force Base. "It was scary but I was ready. It was difficult living the way I did."

In a plea bargain, Pou admitted to bigamy and desertion and the government agreed to drop a count of larceny that was based on his insurance collection of $500,000 in money after he was pronounced dead. It wasn't immediately clear what would happen to that money or who turned Pou in.

The agreement called for Pou to be sentenced to three years in prison and to be given a dishonorable Air Force discharge. He could have been sentenced to five years.

The judge ordered evidence and testimony to be presented before deciding whether he will accept the plea bargain.

Before the proceedings, Pou came out on the front steps of the courthouse and posed for pictures clad in his sergeant's uniform and wearing the red beret of the elite parachute rescue team that he served with before leaving his first wife and their two young sons.

In addition to the lawyers representing him on the criminal charges, Pou has hired an agent and an entertainment lawyer.

Representatives of seven television production companies seeking to buy the rights to his story watched as Pou recounted for the judge the morning of May 12, 1987, when he set out for his daily bicycle ride in Albuquerque, N.M., where he was stationed.

"When I crossed the bridge over the Rio Grande River, I jumped off my bicycle and crashed and fell on the ground," he said. "I took off my shoes, jumped from the bridge, and worked my way in the water upstream until I reached a sparse wooded area where I got out."

He said he made his way to a bus station, used $60 to take a bus to San Diego and learned from newspapers later about a massive search for him.

In San Diego, Pou said he took a new name, Christopher Riggs, and married a woman who bore him two children.

Asked when he decided not to come back, Pou said: "It's really still not clear to me. But after I recognized that the Air Force thought that I was dead I thought that was the best way it could be. I had a conscious thought that I would never go back."

His first wife, Suzanne, was not present. She divorced Pou after she discovered he was alive and had remarried.

Pou's second wife, who gave her name as Moonie Riggs, testified that the sergeant showed up at her home after he disappeared, carrying no luggage and looking disheveled, with only 87 cents in his pocket. She had her mirror broken when he visited San Diego and they dated and corresponded occasionally.

Describing Pou as "fun" and a "great guy," she said she claimed he had just concluded a dangerous, secret mission and was now out of the military. She said he, soon was doing odd jobs and supporting himself and that they married in September 1987.

Mrs. Riggs broke down in tears as she tried to describe Pou's effect on her life.

Economic summit leads agenda

The Baltimore Sun

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — After a weekend of golf, jogging and movies, President-elect Bill Clinton returned to the business of building an administration Monday, and putting an economic summit at the top of his agenda.

"I want to bring in some of the brightest people in the country from a broad range of backgrounds to talk to them about the gravity of the situation, deal with what our options are, get as many good ideas as I can," Clinton said after morning meetings at the state Capitol with his state Cabinet, his lieutenant governor and his mother.

Although the unemployment rate had held steady and even declined slightly, he said, "underneath that, manufacturing unemployment is up, production is down. There are a lot of very troubling signs in the economy. I think this is what the election was about."

He said the president-elect also spent part of the morning returning calls to German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and South-African President

F.W. de Klerk, all of whom had phoned to congratulate him on his win and express a desire to meet with him soon.

Clinton's spokesman George Stephanopoulos said he expected the two- or three-day Little Rock meeting to take place before Christmas.

Clinton spent the afternoon at the governor's mansion with Vice President-elect Al Gore and transition director Warren Christopher, working on a timetable for the transition to the White House.

Fees

similarity of Gooding County's fee structure and appeal process before he advises the commissioners how it might apply to Twin Falls County.

"We want to make sure everyone receives the appropriate due process to which they are entitled," Paul said.

Since the charge is a fee, the county cannot place a lien on property, which is the standard method of collecting overdue taxes.

Most residents and businesses unhappy with their solid waste fees will have to wait until at least January to have their appeals heard.

Twin Falls County Commissioner Marvin Hempleman said he has had a few people volunteer for a citizens' equalization board that should begin hearing appeals in January. Hempleman expects the board to consist of three members with some alternates.

Hempleman said some residents have managed successful appeals by proving to the county assessor that the bills were for unused property.

Twin Falls County is collecting the fees to pay for a new landfill, which has not been sited, and current bills related to the project. Federal law requires the county to comply with tough new landfill requirements by October 1993. Once the landfill is built and the money collected, Hempleman said the landfill bills could be lowered if enough money is left over.

"First, let's get some money in the pot and see where we can go," Hempleman said.

Some county residents have paid their landfill fees, Hempleman said.

He said that if everyone pays his assessment, the county will receive $1.6 million for the new landfill.

That figure will be substantially less if the city of Twin Falls opts to send its trash to the Southern Idaho Regional Solid Waste District's landfill. If that happens, Hempleman said the county can easily separate bills and possibly turn them over to the city.

'Let's talk,' EC decides in trade fuss

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — European Community foreign ministers, without setting a date, Monday urged a quick resumption of talks with the United States to avoid a trans-Atlantic trade war.

But after a one-day meeting, several delegations, led by France, also called for counter measures to respond to planned U.S. trade sanctions against $300 million worth of yearly European imports.

Italian Foreign Trade Minister Claudio Vitalone said the 12 EC states asked the bloc's Executive Commission to draft a list of U.S. goods to be targeted for trade sanctions if Washington imposes punitive tariffs on white wines and other EC products.

But other officials said there had been no request to the Executive Commission.

During the meeting, most member-states said they wanted both sides to try anew to resolve a series of farm subsidy disputes before any sanctions are imposed.

"The need has been stressed to come to a conclusion with the Americans ... before the end of the year," said Nico Wegter, an EC Commission spokesman.

The ministers issued a statement in which they expressed "grave concerns at the dangers inherent in the present situation."

The statement made no mention of trade retaliation. Last week, the EC Executive Commission said any trade retaliation would be proportional to U.S. sanctions.

France has urged other EC members to remain tough with Washington, which last week said it would impose stiff tariffs on Dec. 5 on wines if the farm subsidies issue was not resolved within 30 days.

Hansen

In its motion opposing the motion to dismiss the case, federal prosecutors said the defense must consider the whole indictment in understanding the crime.

As for the motion to limit cross-examination of Hansen, Ruff said that Hansen has a number of "dubiously confidential" business dealings that could be jeopardized if they are discussed in public. Such dealings are the subject of non-disclosure agreements, he said.

"The disclosure of business dealings would have the possibility of destroying business confidences and the projects themselves," Ruff wrote. "It is only through these projects that Mr. Hansen can fund his Chapter 11 reorganization plan and repay his lenders."

Health

While officials acknowledge the state's woefully inadequate doctor-patient ratio, some point out that since those statistics were compiled, the state has significantly expanded Medicaid coverage.

But as the report found in other states, Idaho is facing cutbacks in Medicaid coverage because overall spending demands — particularly in the health care and criminal justice systems — are escalating far more rapidly than tax collections, even from the state's healthy economy.

Without some kind of tax or fee increase to cover the state's spiraling Medicaid bill, officials have indicated tighter eligibility requirements will have to be imposed to keep the costs in check.

New senators arrive in nation's capital

WASHINGTON (AP) — Bathed in television lights and looking a bit awe-struck, eleven new senators arrived at the Capitol Monday to learn the nuts and bolts of their new jobs.

Among the vital lessons: How they and their staffs will get paid, ethics rules governing senators, where to go for computers and telephones — and just who those marble busts are surrounding the historic chamber. (They're former vice presidents.)

"I'm a little overwhelmed right at this moment," said Dianne Feinstein, a new Democratic senator from California who was at the center of a mob of reporters and TV cameras.

Driving to the Capitol past the city's monuments, "all of a sudden I looked at them a little differently," she said. As the car passed the Lincoln Memorial, "I said, 'Hello, Abe,' and someone in the car said, 'Welcome, Dianne.'"

The daylong orientation, behind closed doors, included a visit from Vice President-elect Al Gore. Participants said he told the new class "we are on the same new adventure" in trying to make the government work better.

Gore, who as vice president will also be president of the Senate, is Higher percent of Americans grow older

WASHINGTON (AP) — America is changing from a nation of youth to a nation of grandparents thanks to declines in births and deaths, a new Census Bureau study observes.

And the trend will accelerate as the massive Baby Boom generation begins to join the ranks of the elderly starting in 2010, a human tidal-wave of 75 million people born from 1946 to 1964.

The 1990 Census counted 31 million people aged 65 and over. Government projections indicate that group could reach 68 million or more by the middle of the next century.

"We have thought of ourselves as a nation of youth since the founding of this nation. Eventually we may have more grandparents than youth," writes population expert Cynthia Tauber in the new study, "Sixty-Five Plus in America."

In colonial times, half the population was aged 16 and under, and most never reached old age, she notes.

Better medical care has sharply increased the share of the population that reaches old age.

And while the Baby Boom added millions of young people to the population, it was followed by a Baby Bust, a decline in fertility that meant relatively fewer young Americans to replace the aging boomers.

The study pulls together data from the 1990 census, several Current Population Surveys and other sources to draw a lengthy and complex profile of older Americans.

expected to be an important liaison between the new Clinton White House and the lawmakers it will rely on to get its policies enacted.

Most of the new senators will be sworn in on Jan. 3 when Congress reconvenes. Feinstein, who is filling out the last few years of an unexpired term, will be sworn in today.

Asked about the big issues facing them, many of the new senators most of them the low-profile people who make the Capitol run.

Capitol physician Dr. Robert Krasser told them not to neglect their health in a new job that will mean a grueling travel schedule and sometimes long hours. "Don't send your administrative assistant to take your physical" as one senator did years ago, he joked, according to one participant.

Parliamentarians spoke about the complex ways of the Senate floor, a place where senators in debate speak not to each other, but to the chair, and where elaborate "trees" of amendments are built to keep other senators from rewriting a bill's provisions.

And old hands gave a few words of friendly advice. "Somebody will be putting a microphone under your stool and asking about world affairs in Bosnia, and you won't be ready yet," cautioned Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo.

He also advised the newcomers to "let your staff know how you live," and not to succumb to the temptation to go home for a pre-inauguration that comes in the mail. "You have to pull them out of campaign mode, and into Senate mode," he suggested. "These are vital things."

A few in the group sounded like they were still on the campaign trail. "My goal is to bring the politics of this country back home a little bit, and not be so Washington-oriented," said Feingold, a Democrat who defeated Wisconsin incumbent Republican Robert Kasten.

The eleven sat through a succession of meals and speakers,

Court won't extend law to AIDS sufferers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court refused Monday to let AIDS sufferers use a federal pension protecting law to sue when self-insured employers cut health-care benefits for the disease.

The court, over two dissenting votes, left intact rulings that said the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA) does not bar cost-cutting employers who insure themselves from curtailing or ending coverage for any ailment. Two-thirds of employees work for companies that are self-insured. Justices Harry A. Blackmun and Sandra Day O'Connor voted to hear arguments in the case, but four voices are needed to grant such review.

In other action Monday, the court:
 • Agreed to decide in a Florida case whether federal judges may treat a convicted felon's possession of a gun during his crime as a "crime of violence" that justifies a stiffer sentence.
 • Left intact the murder conviction and death sentence of a Ku Klux Klan leader for what prosecutors said was the random killing of a black man in Mobile, Ala., 11 years ago.

 • Refused to revive an invasion-of-privacy lawsuit against a Michigan auto parts manufacturer that required all its employees to undergo drug testing.
 "It's a tragedy," said Suzanne Goldberg, a lawyer with the Lambda Legal Defense Fund, a homosexual rights advocacy group. The court has left American workers hanging, not knowing whether their health-care plans can be counted on to help them."

 Gregory King of the Human Rights Campaign, another gay rights group, said the action "will undermine our nation's ability to cope with the growing AIDS problem."
 King blasted the Bush administration, saying, "Rather than provide alternatives for the court to consider, the administration sought to justify the denial of benefits to a person who is ill."

French defend N. Africa

Knight-Ridder News Service

Oran, in French North Africa, was well defended by the French. The army commander, Gen. Robert Boissac, rejected Gen. Charles Mast's arguments to welcome the invaders. The French Navy was also committed to fight. Given early warning, the port defenses opened on alert when two British corvettes carrying 600 British Commandos and American Rangers tried to rush the harbor at 3 a.m. on Nov. 7. Both ships were sunk with heavy losses.

Another in a series

More successful were six companies of "Darby's Rangers" (1st Rangers Battalion led by Col. William C. Darby). They captured two key forts on the flank of the 1st Infantry Division's Beach Z. Several French destroyers tried to intercept the invasion fleet but the Allies destroyed two of them and forced the rest to flee. Outside Oran, Combat Command B of the U.S. 1st Armored Division defeated a French column of tanks and armored cars.

In Algiers Mast had been more persuasive and the French Army did not fire at the Allies. This was fortunate as the American forces lost most of their landing craft in the rough surf. The American assault force consisted of two infantry regiments, the 39th (Regular) and 168th (Iowa National Guard). There were also 23,000 British soldiers (11th and 36th Brigades). The French Navy resisted as elsewhere.

The batteries Duperré and Lazart mounting 194mm guns opened fire and held out most of the day despite sea and air bombardment. In the harbor, attempts to land a force of U.S. Rangers from two British destroyers were thwarted. The destroyer Brooke later sank from the damage sustained. The 200 Rangers that landed were taken prisoner.

Two submarines made it to sea, but were spotted and driven away from the invasion fleet. They fled to Toulon in France.

Sporadic fighting continued until Nov. 10. The man who the Allies and pro-Allied Frenchmen such as Mast had counted on to take command in North Africa, Gen. Henri Giraud, arrived from Gibraltar on Nov. 9 after being smuggled out of France. But local French commanders would not deal with someone who had no legitimate authority. Thus the attempt by the Allies to avoid alienating any faction by backing a man without a faction proved a failure.

The fighting was halted by the man the Allies had shunned because of his fascist political leanings, Adm. Francois Darlan.

Commander of all Vichy French military forces, Darlan had come to Algiers undoubtedly aware that the invasion was imminent. Darlan had told U.S. Adm. William D. Leahy in 1941 that if the Allies came in full strength, he would change sides. Until then, Vichy forces had a duty to defend what was left of the French Empire from both the Allies and the Axis.

Vichy head of state Marshal Philippe Petain, the aged World War I hero, was still in France. After several attempts to get a decision from Petain, Darlan took it upon himself to call an armistice and sign a treaty with the Allies.

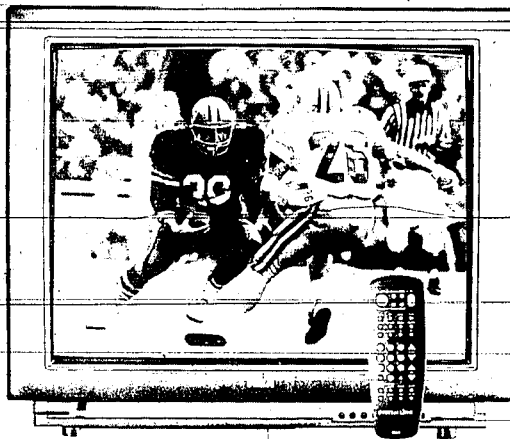

The Germans retaliated by sending their troops to occupy Vichy France. The main French fleet at Toulon scuttled its ships to prevent their capture.

The Allies lost 1,800 men killed, wounded or missing in the invasion of North Africa, one-tenth of the estimated losses if the French had mounted an all-out defense.

County to back religious monument

POCATELLO — The chairman of the Bannock County Commission says he is prepared to defend in court the county's refusal to remove a monument of the Ten Commandments from the courthouse lawn.

"My feeling is, enough's enough," Tom Katsilometes said. "We've been pushed to the wall, and ... We're simply not going to take being pushed around any more, and we're going to take this issue on."

The American Civil Liberties Union, at the urging of an Idaho State University graduate student, had given the county until last Friday to remove the monument on grounds that it violates the constitutionally mandated separation of church and state.

Storm raises hopes for drought help

IDAHO FALLS — The first storm of the season dumped more than a foot of snow in the higher elevations of eastern Idaho Monday, creating hazardous driving conditions but raising hopes that there could be a break in the six-year-long drought.

Subfreezing temperatures combined with dry snow and winds over 20 miles an hour to severely reduce visibility, particularly in the Fremont and Madison County areas. Minor accidents were reported throughout the region. Hydrologist Ron Abramovich of the Soil Conservation Service pointed out that the state received ample moisture in October and November a year ago only to see a dry system dominate the weather through the heart of the winter.

Snow creates havoc in Boise area

BOISE — Up to 15 cars collided in accidents on Bogus Basin Road after snow melted and froze into a sheet of ice, police said.

"The weather also may have helped a pickup slide through a downtown intersection and careen into the marble front of KCBT Channel 2 in Boise Sunday evening.

Teacher questions motive behind 1%

POCATELLO — The president of the Parent/Teacher Education Association is speculating that backers of the One Percent Initiative may have really intended only to defeat Democratic, pro-education legislative candidates.

Linda Rogers acknowledged that the campaign waged by local organizations like hers and the statewide Idaho Education Association against the proposal to cap property taxes at 1 percent of market value proper kept teachers from getting involved in legislative races.

"I kind of wonder if that wasn't planned to work just that way," Rogers said. "Maybe they got us so busy on one issue that we were not able to campaign for the legislative seats. There was certainly a big change across the state."

Boise shelters brace for busy season

BOISE — Boise's homeless shelters are bracing for the "winter crisis."

An estimated 400-500 people in Boise are living on the streets, in shelters or outside. With total shelter capacity of about 200, at least 200 people face the uncertainties of a cold, snowy winter.

Those who work with the homeless are considering a range of options — from sleeping bag space at existing shelters to motel rooms on an emergency basis. "We're not sure how bad the need is going to get this winter," said Bill Brown, the city's homeless coordinator. "From the city's standpoint, we're dedicated to providing as much space as is needed."

Andrus seeks to work with GOP majority

MOSCOW (AP) — Democratic Gov. Cecil Andrus on Monday sought cooperation and a spirit of compromise with the state Legislature's swollen new Republican majority.

He promised to resist the temptation to ignore property tax relief in the wake of the resounding defeat last Tuesday of the One Percent Initiative's cap on property taxes, pledging to offer new proposals in January.

But he gave only the briefest of glimpses at his plan to cover spiraling state spending demands with tax receipts lagging despite the state's continued economic vibrancy. "Compromise between the governor and the Legislature is important — it is documented in our track record over four terms. I believe it will be as centerpiece of our future."

After posting dramatic gains in the 1990 election to cap a decade of resurgence, Idaho Democrats were routed at the polls last Tuesday in what appeared to be a reaffirmation of the state's traditional Republican bent. A record turnout that experts believe was prompted by the independent candidates' runoff race seemed to see Perot's 130,000 voters peel off to Republicans by two-to-one as they moved down the ballot.

Andrus assured lawmakers he would maintain his commitment to educational improvements, keeping the economy one of the nation's most vital; protecting children and safeguarding the environment. And he asked them to become partners in that effort.

Paraphrasing Perot, he said, "The future begins tomorrow and we've got to get to work on it — as a team — as soon as possible."

Andrus remained confident in the strength of the state economy, predicting that while it may slow from its better-than-expected pace there will still be enough cash to cover fighting forest fires, reimbursing counties for housing state prison inmates, covering a Medicaid shortage and health care financing to poor families.

That shortage is estimated at more than $14 million, and in the past Andrus has said there should be a permanent solution to Medicaid expenses persistently exceeding budgeted estimates.

But administration officials said Monday's statement "was not an invitation, and they indicated the governor would present lawmakers with a plan that combines a permanent solution with another one-time bailout from surplus cash.

Andrus also predicted that the increase in 1994 state spending will be more than the 2 percent for the current budget.

Piniella dons Mariners' uniform

Ex-Red inks $2.5 million pact; Griffey Sr. may keep talented son with Northwest team

Seattle Times

SEATTLE - The last time he made the national news, Lou Piniella was seen wrestling Rob Dibble on the floor of the Cincinnati Reds' clubhouse trying to convince the pitcher that honesty is as effective as a fastball on the outside corner.

That September postgame incident, caught by a TV crew and broadcast coast-to-coast, typifies the intensity of Piniella, who reappeared Monday in Seattle as the next manager of the Mariners.

Piniella, 49, agreed to a three-year contract for an estimated $2.5 million, with a club option for the 1996 season. Along with Piniella, the Mariners will bring in Ken Griffey Sr. as hitting instructor, Sam Perlozzo, who coached third base for Piniella with the Reds, will do the same for the Mariners.

Griffey Sr. agreed to a two-year contract. His appointment may turn out to be a key element in negotiations on a long-term contract for his son, who is asking $34 million. The Mariners' last centerfielder was $30 million.

Piniella, who will be Seattle's 10th manager, hit .291 in 16 seasons with Kansas City and the New York Yankees, and won 90 or more games in half his six seasons as Lou Piniella listens to Seattle Mariners' Vice President of Operations Woody Woodward at a press conference Monday to announce hiring.

Baseball owners vote today on Giants' move

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. - Baseball's executive council didn't make a recommendation Monday on whether the Giants should move from San Francisco to Tampa Bay, setting up a final vote today by all major league owners.

Bud Selig of the Milwaukee Brewers, chairman of the executive council, said both leagues will listen to presentations and the National League will then vote on the $115 million offer from a Florida group led by Vincent J. Naimoli. If that is rejected, the NL would then consider the $100 million deal from a Bay area group headed by Safeway Inc. chairman Peter Magowan.

Officials speaking on condition they not be identified said they believed opponents of a Florida move had enough strength to keep the team in San Francisco.

Patriots coach MacPherson requires intestinal surgery

FOXBORO, Mass. - The New England Patriots said coach Dick MacPherson, hospitalized since last week because of a serious intestinal condition, will undergo surgery.

Dr. James Dineen, the coach's personal physician, said in a statement released Monday through the team that MacPherson was suffering from acute diverticulitis and that abscess had formed in his intestine. A date for the operation hasn't been set.

MacPherson was hospitalized last Wednesday. Team officials have said it is unclear when he will return to the Patriots, or if he will be back on the sidelines this season. Special teams coach Dante Scarnevchia has been leading the Patriots in MacPherson's absence.

Collision causes fatal brain hemorrhage in soccer player

TUCSON, Ariz. - A high school soccer player died of a brain hemorrhage after a collision during practice, authorities said Monday.

Brandon Bean, who would have been 17 Tuesday, died Saturday during a scrimmage when he was bumped by another player while picking up a ball as goalkeeper.

Players and coaches at Salpointe Catholic High School said the contact was minimal, but Bean fell unconscious to the ground and later was pronounced dead at University Medical Center.

Deal reunites Mahorn, former coach at New Jersey Nets

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. - The New Jersey Nets signed Rick Mahorn on Monday, reuniting the center-forward with coach Chuck Daly and giving the team a rugged veteran player.

Mahorn, who played for Daly's championship Detroit team in 1988-89, will lend some muscle to the Nets as a reserve center behind Sam Bowie and Chris Dudley, as well as a back-up forward behind Derrick Coleman.

Niners destroy Falcons

The Associated Press

ATLANTA - The San Francisco 49ers made sure there wouldn't be an end-of-the-game "Hail Mary" winner for Atlanta this time.

Steve Young passed for three touchdowns and the 49ers defense came up with six turnovers Monday night to crush the Falcons 41-3 for the second time in three weeks.

The 49ers (7-2) climbed back into a tie with New Orleans for first place in the NFC West and the Falcons fell to 3-6.

Young's scoring passes covered 12 yards to Odessa Turner in the first quarter, 21 yards to Ricky Walters in the second and 19 yards to Jerry Rice in the final period.

Merton Hanks fielded a bouncing punt less than two minutes after the Rice touchdown and returned it 48 yards for another score.

The Niners, who buried Atlanta 56-17 three weeks earlier in San Francisco, have twice been victims of "Hail Mary" passes in Atlanta - losing 17-14 last year and 28-24 in 1983.

Tom Rathanan scored the other touchdown on a 2-yard run and Mike Cofer kicked field goals of 40 and 32 yards.

Atlanta got a 33-yard field goal from Norm Johnson with two seconds left in the half, cutting the lead to 14-3. It capped a 75-yard drive in which Billy Joe Tolliver accounted for all the yardage while completing six of eight passes.

The tone was set early when Keith Jones took in a short pass from Tolliver and fumbled it away. Bill Romanowski claiming it for the 49ers on the Atlanta 48.

Despite loss, Vandals can guarantee playoff berth with 2 remaining games

The Associated Press

BOISE - Losses over the weekend have dropped Idaho and Eastern Washington to a couple points on the NCAA Division I-AA football poll and put three Big Sky conference schools in the hunt for a playoff berth.

Considered almost invulnerable in the league, Idaho was tripped up Saturday by Montana, 47-29, on a muddy field in Missoula. That dropped the Vandals from second-place nationwide to sixth.

Northeastern Louisiana survived a visit from Eastern Washington, 41-31, as EWU slid from 18th place to a tie with Princeton for 20th. Northeastern Louisiana now ranks in 1-A-A.

I-AA rankings - A8

Idaho (4-1, 7-2) and Eastern Washington (5-1, 6-3) are atop the Big Sky rankings. If Idaho wins its last two games against Montana State and Boise State, it takes the automatic berth outright.

Eastern can gain a "co-championship" with a triumph over Boise State Saturday. For EWU to grab the automatic berth, Boise State must defeat Idaho. Should Boise State beat the Eagles and the Vandals, the Broncos could clinch the automatic berth in a possible two- or three-way tie.

Despite the upset by the Grizzlies, Idaho maintained the best total offense in the nation, with an average 486 yards per game. Vandal quarterback Doug Nussmeier holds onto second in total offense nationwide at 317 yards per outing.

Shadrin May of Idaho is tops in the Big Sky for rushing, averaging 96 yards per game. He also paces the league in all-purpose running with 145 yards a game and an average 13.3 points gives him the best scoring statistic in the United States.

Lawrence Taylor's injury

New York Giants linebacker, Lawrence Taylor, is scheduled to have surgery on his Achilles tendon to repair it and restore strength and mobility to his ankle joint.

As a person reaches their 30s the blood supply in the Achilles tendon reduces, especially in the area where it inserts into the heel. The tendon becomes less elastic and is more susceptible to injury.

- Allows the forefoot to support weight

Achilles tear one of few injuries in Taylor's career

The Associated Press

To put into perspective the torn Achilles tendon that probably ended Lawrence Taylor's career:

It is not, as a few golden voices said, "a tragedy."

It is simply an unfortunate end to one of the NFL's great careers. For "tragedy," see Mike Utley, Eric Adolph and Jerome Brown, former center-ending injury, see Joe Theismann, who went out in 1985 with a leg broken when he was hit by ... Lawrence Taylor.

"When I saw the play I thought of myself," Theismann said.

In fact, if Taylor has played his last game, he can look back without regrets. Flash his twin Super Bowl rings, and spend five years on the golf course before going straight to Canton and the Hall of Fame.

For when he went down Sunday on the artificial turf at Giants Stadium after batting down a Brent Favre pass, it was the first serious injury in his 11-year career - the four games he missed when he was suspended in 1988 for drug use marked the only time he was out for more than a week.

More often, he'd go down, the trainers would run out, and the fans would be quiet. Then he'd get up and trot off the field, returning on the next play or the next series.

And he seemed to withstand pain - in 1988, he had 10 tackles and three sacks in New Orleans while playing with a dislocated left shoulder.

So give LT his career and look at others. There's Keith Milner, a dominant defensive tackle who was defensive player of the year for Minnesota in 1989 and has hardly played a down since. He had two knee operations, injured an elbow in Seattle this year and finally retired after being picked up by Green Bay.

So, good as Milard was ... Probably no Hall of Fame. Too short a career. Please see TAYLOR/AB

Jordan cements Bulls' win

CHICAGO (AP)—Michael Jordan scored 10 of his 24 points in the final 2:37 Monday night, enabling the Chicago Bulls to end their second consecutive home loss with a 102-97 decision over the Indiana Pacers.

A basket by Reggie Miller, a free throw from Vern Fleming and Sam Mitchell's three-point play with 6:20 left in the game gave the Pacers a 91-88 advantage.

Indiana led 97-90 with 3:11 left before a dunk by Jordan, an 18-foot jumper by B.J. Armstrong and a bank shot by Jordan with 1:28 remaining closed the Bulls to 97-96.

Then Mitchell grabbed a missed Indiana shot that appeared to graze off the rim with 1:06 left.

"He called timeout, but officials said the ball did not touch the rim, and the Pacers only two seconds to shoot instead of a new 24 seconds."

The Bulls gained possession after Detlef Schrempf's rushed shot, and Jordan hit a 12-footer with 51 seconds left for a 98-97 lead.

Jordan then was fouled by Schrempf with 19 seconds to go while making a reverse layup. He converted the free throw for a 101-97 advantage, and he added another free throw with seven seconds left.

Scottie Pippen finished with 21 points and Horace Grant 16 for the Bulls, who lost 100-99 to Atlanta at Chicago Stadium on Saturday night. Schrempf scored 19 points and Miller 17 for Indiana.

With national title in sight, Tide coach tells players to dream big TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (AP)—Alabama coach Gene Stallings knows his second-ranked team is eyeing a national championship, and he doesn't mind a bit.

"I would hope they are thinking about it," Stallings said Monday. "What's wrong with thinking about it?"

"We talk all the time about dreaming and dreaming big and having aspirations," Stallings said. "Now, all of a sudden, you're going to tell them not to? Let's don't be silly. When you're 9-0, you've got to give it a little thought. You just can't dwell on it."

To make sure his players don't focus too much on the ranking, Stallings said he would discuss it with them during a team meeting.

"Somewhere along the line, you have to forget things," he said. "I like to address it, talk about it, recognize it and then go on to what we've got to handle."

The Tide closes out the season against archrival Auburn, then figures to play Florida in the SEC title match. A victory in that game would send Alabama to the Sugar Bowl — and a likely national championship showdown with Miami.

"I heard someone say we probably have the toughest road to the national championship the next four or five weeks," running back Derrick Lasson said. "At the beginning of the season, our schedule I wouldn't say it was soft, but it wasn't as tough as the stretch we've got coming up."

The Crimson Tide, 9-0 this season and winners of 19 in a row, moved up to No. 2 after Arizona beat top-ranked Washington on Saturday.

Defending national champion Miami is No. 1.

With the Huskies out of the picture, Alabama now has a clear but imposing path to its first national title since 1979: win its final four games, including the Southeastern Conference championship game and the Sugar Bowl.

Alabama is confronted with the most difficult part of its schedule beginning Saturday at No. 16 Mississippi State, where a victory would clinch the SEC Western Division title.

There are others, too.

Think of Chris Miller, the Atlanta quarterback, who might be a major star ... if he could ever stay healthy. Now he's out for this season and may be more with a knee injury after missing parts of his previous five years with various ailments.

Think of John Friesz, another young quarterback with potential. He went down with a knee injury, the Chargers picked up Stan Humphries and won four in a row. Friesz may not even have a job when he comes back next year.

Think of yet another potential star at quarterback, Timmy Tamm. He missed all of last season with a knee injury. Now he's back but can't move ahead of journeyman Chris Chandler, under whom the Cards have won two straight.

Even that of Bo Jackson, whose gamble to play two sports ended on the turf at the Los Angeles Coliseum with a hip injury. And Brian Bosworth, another potential LT. His chronic shoulder injury sent him to Hollywood.

—And finally, think of Andre Tippett, one of the many Taylor clones who has come along but remains buried on a losing team in New England. Tippett, another '86' got to a Super Bowl after '85. Other than that, he remains forgotten.

—In fact, Taylor's injury signals in some way the end of the '80s in the NFL. He was planning to retire anyway after this season.

So is Chicago's Mike Singletary, who played next to Taylor in so many Pro Bowls. And it would be no surprise if at this time next year, there is no Joe Montana, Ronnie Lutz, Marcus Allen, Phil Simms and Anthony Muñoz.

"The thing about the game is that you should go out and have fun while you can," Carl Banks, Taylor's friend and linebacker partner, said Monday.

"You don't make it too complicated because you never know when it will end."

So when you think of LT, don't think tragedy — like Singletary, John Elway, Dan Marino, Lott and Allen — he's among the lucky ones, the ones who have stayed healthy in a distinctly unhealthy game.

Steeler star draws drug suspension

PITTSBURGH (AP)—Tight end Eric Green, the Pittsburgh Steelers' biggest and often most prolific weapon, drew a six-game suspension Monday after becoming the third Steeler in two seasons to violate the NFL's drug policy.

An NFL spokesman said Green's suspension was not for using steroids. "The NFL's substance abuse policy has clearly defined suspensions for those caught abusing steroids, street drugs or alcohol."

The league wouldn't confirm it, but this is apparently the second time Green has broken the NFL's drug rules. A player receives treatment and counseling for a first offense, and no announcement is made. The penalty for a second violation is a six-game suspension.

Green was apologetic in a statement issued by the Steelers, saying he "made a mistake." Steelers president Dan Rooney said "we will do everything we can for Eric to get well."

"I apologize to my teammates, the Steelers' organization, my family and my friends," Green said. "I am looking forward to returning in six weeks."

The suspension couldn't have come at a worse time for the division-leading Steelers (6-3), who are trying to win their first AFC Central Division title since 1984. The Steelers play five of their last seven games at home, where they are 3-0, but won't have Green back until the final week of the season.

"I am very disappointed," Rooney said. "This is not good for anyone, especially not for Eric Green. I am concerned for him, for all of our players, for their well-being. Their lives are more important than anything."

"We will do everything we can for Eric to get well. He must take the first step to accept help, which is available. Our players are good people. When one has a problem, all of us suffer. As part of this community, we must be determined to eliminate drugs. The Steelers continue to support those efforts."

The Steelers hadn't had a drug-related suspension since Larry Taylor's Long and running back Tim Worley became the only NFL player suspended last season.

Kansas City's Derrick Thomas sacks San Diego quarterback Stan Humphries in the second quarter Sunday, one of four sacks he had on the quarterback.

Father's memory inspires linebacker

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—While becoming the NFL's leading tackler in sacks, Derrick Thomas revived memories of a lonesome little boy whose father was lost in Vietnam during Operation Linebacker Two.

Energized by thoughts of his father, Kansas City's All-Pro linebacker always seems to wrap his greatest games around Veterans Day.

It happened in 1990 when a pregame flyover by Air Force jets inspired him to ring up an NFL-record seven sacks. In 1991, he observed Veterans Day activities by sacking Denver's John Elway three times.

And it happened again Sunday, when Air Force jets made a pregame flyover at Arrowhead Stadium. Thomas sacked San Diego's Stan Humphries four times in the first half.

He caused two fumbles and recovered one himself in the melee, enabling Kansas City's sluggish offense to take a 13-0 lead en route to a 16-14 victory on Nick Lowery's last-minute field goal. "I approach every week the same," Thomas said. "But I guess I did have some special sentiments about this game because of the week (Veterans Day). It gives me an added incentive to play, no matter who the opponent is."

"I came out to play the best that Derrick Thomas can play."

Derrick and his father were close when Capt. Thomas shipped out for Vietnam. Because witnesses reported seeing him parachute out of his crippled plane in 1972 — during maneuvers nicknamed Operation Linebacker Two — his ultimate fate was unknown. "Was he dead? Was he alive in a POW camp?"

It must have been hard explaining that to a 5-year-old. Derrick grew up confused, clinging to a fierce hope that slowly faded as the years wore on.

Would this be the day his father came walking through that door? Would tomorrow?

By the time Robert Thomas was declared legally dead, the lonesome 5-year-old had grown into a 235-pound All-Pro. But he never gave up the memories of his father.

On Saturday night, before the San Diego game, Thomas spoke to military personnel at a dinner.

"I take a great sense of pride the way I play on this particular weekend because of my father and all the veterans around the country," he said.

Thomas humbled offensive lineman Harry Swayne, who was asked — in an obvious coaching mistake — to block him one-on-one. Thomas ran around Swayne in the first quarter, stripped Humphries of the ball and recovered it himself.

Thomas had sacks on consecutive plays in the second quarter, beating Swayne and knocking Humphries loose from the backfield.

In the second half, a distressed Swayne had help from at least one and sometimes two teammates every play.

"I think their game plan was to let me have any effect or put any pressure on the quarterback," said Thomas, who tied for the sack lead with 10. "I had a lot of pressure on the quarterback in the second half. I didn't have any sacks; but I was able to assist the timing of the passing game."

"He is a great football player," Humphries said.

"Without doubt, Capt. Robert Thomas would hit you, too."

Wallach, Fisk unprotected

NEW YORK (AP)—Tim Wallach, Carlton Fisk and Bryan Harvey were among those left off protected lists Monday as major league teams decided which players to expose during next week's expansion draft.

Pittsburgh playoff star Bob Walk also will be available when the Colorado Rockies and Florida Marlins each pick 36 players in next Tuesday's draft.

Major league teams were required to submit a list by noon MST Monday of the 15 players each wanted to protect.

The complete lists, which were sent to the Rockies and Marlins, the commissioner's office and the Major League Baseball Players' Association, were not to be made public and were cloaked in secrecy.

Wallach, Fisk and Walk all agreed to waive the no-trade rights they earned as players, who have spent 10 years in the majors, including the last five with the same team.

"I don't think I'm going to be drafted but if there's a team that might draft me, it would be the Marlins because they seem to have the money," Wallach said Monday.

Germans decry night of intolerance years ago

Dresden citizens hold up posters reading '1938-1992' and 'Open Borders for All' during a march Monday marking the 54th anniversary of Kristallnacht, the night Nazis rampaged against Jews.

BERLIN (AP) — Germany marked the 54th anniversary of the Nazis' "Crystal Night" attacks on Jews with solemn memories on Monday of destroyed Jewish communities and warnings about a wave of neo-Nazi violence.

In Berlin, Mayor Eberhard Diepgen helped lay the cornerstone of a new Jewish Museum intended to draw the world's attention to today's treatment of Jews in the city where the Holocaust was planned.

Germans also marked the third anniversary of the Berlin Wall's fall, but no one was in much of a mood to celebrate after violence by anarchists on Sunday disrupted a huge rally against right-wing extremism.

The euphoria of unification gave way long ago to worries about the cost of merging the country's bankrupt formerly Communist eastern lands with its long-prosperous west.

The burden has been compounded by the cost of caring for tens of thousands of foreign asylum seekers, which has bred resentment among many Germans and fueled attacks on foreigners by rightists.

All over the country, observances of what Germans call the "Pogrom Night" of 1938 were colored by worry about the right-wing violence and new signs of anti-Semitism.

Vangelis painted swastikas and slogans saying "No to Arabs and Jews" on a monument to 19th century Prussian royalty in Berlin late Sunday.

The head of the Central Council of Jews in Germany, Ignatz Bubis, said at a ceremony in Bremen that the victims of the Holocaust are not yet healed and he admonished political leaders to stand up to extreme rightists.

Weak leadership was a prime cause of the collapse of Germany's post-World War II democracy, the Weimar Republic, Bubis said.

Nazi thugs attacked synagogues and Jewish homes and businesses throughout Germany on Nov. 9, 1938, leaving so much broken glass it became known as "Crystal Night."

It marked the start of open persecution of Jews and ushered in the Holocaust, which claimed the lives of 6 million European Jews.

On the same date in 1989, the Berlin Wall opened, so Germany marked contradictory anniversaries Monday.

To celebrate the end of the city's division, Berlin granted its highest award — honorary citizenship — to former President Reagan, former Soviet Premier Mikhail Gorbachev and German Chancellor Helmut Kohl in recognition of their services ending the Cold War.

"The old and new wounds are healing," Gorbachev said in his acceptance speech.

"The rebirth of a unified and democratic Berlin is also a symbol, the symbol of a new time, a time of Jerzy Kanak, chairman of the Berlin Jewish community, makes the first hammer blow Monday during the laying of the cornerstone for a Jewish museum in Berlin.

overcoming not only the division of Germany, but also of all Europe."

Reagan did not attend.

German politicians tried to put the best face on the rally that was disrupted by leftist radicals Sunday.

About 350,000 people marched to the rally, but a tiny minority of protesters booed and threw eggs. Kohl had to be escorted away, and federal President Richard von Weizsäcker was splattered by eggs as he spoke.

Diepgen, the Berlin mayor, said the huge turnout — not the leftist protests — was the real story.

"The democrats came out, 350,000 and more, and demonstrated in Berlin. That didn't happen in the Weimar Republic, and that is the difference," he said.

But the rally was boycotted by Kohl's conservative Bavarian coalition partner, the Christian Social Union, which derided it as a meaningless gesture. The party instead demanded the government tighten asylum laws to stem the flood of refugees.

Berlin's planned Jewish Museum became a controversy because of its high cost. Budgeted at $75 million, the project was delayed a year, but the city government finally went ahead because of its symbolism.

Colombians back crackdown

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Government and financial leaders expressed support Monday for President Cesar Gaviria's declaration of a state of emergency to crack down on leftist rebels.

Even the media, which is prohibited under the decree from publishing rebel statements, backed the steps Gaviria announced Sunday night.

The president has finally realized that attempts at a negotiated solution (with the guerrillas) have been and will continue to be futile, said the El Espectador, one of two leading Bogota dailies.

Gaviria also announced a series of security measures to confront a heightened rebel offensive. The action was prompted by weekend attacks by rebels from the Simon Bolivar Coordinated Front, an umbrella organization that represents the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia, or FARC, and the National Liberation Army, or ELN.

Guerrillas overwhelmed a remote southern security post Saturday, killing 26 police officers, charged with guarding a jungle oilfield in the state of Putumayo. On Sunday, rebels detonated 30 bombs at banks across the country, killing five people and wounding as many as 60.

The emergency powers, which will last 90 days, enable the president to order action against the rebels without consulting Congress or the courts. The president announced that any bank caught handling guerrillas' accounts and any official or private citizen caught giving them money will be punished.

The Colombian army estimates the rebels earned over $200 million last year from kidnapping, extortion, robbery and drug trafficking. "The country was waiting for a strong announcement because the situation had become intolerable," said Javier Fernandez, director of the National Association of Financial Institutions.

Yeltsin seeks financial relief in Britain

LONDON — Russian President Boris Yeltsin on Monday appealed for help in rescheduling his country's debts, and urged British businessmen to invest in a new capitalist Russia.

"Our business relations seem to be locked in the past. They still suffer significantly from stereotypes and notions about Russia as a totalitarian nation," Yeltsin said in a speech prepared for delivery at the London Stock Exchange. He said he was planning a series of steps to attract Western investors to Russia, including lower taxes on profits and more opportunity to repatriate profits.

Yeltsin and British Prime Minister John Major, appearing at a joint news conference at Major's 10 Downing Street office after more than four hours of meetings, said there were no disagreements between them.

Czechs set Dubcek's burial Saturday

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia — Former Czechoslovak leader Alexander Dubcek will be buried Saturday in his hometown of Bratislava, the official CSTK news agency reported Monday.

A committee headed by the speaker of the federal parliament, Michal Kovac, was named to organize the funeral and farewell ceremony for the former Communist Party chief. Earlier reports had indicated the funeral would be Friday. Dubcek, 70, died Saturday of heart, kidney and lung failure related to injuries he suffered in a car crash Sept. 1. He was best known for his 1968 "Prague Spring" reforms, which were crushed by Soviet-led Warsaw Pact forces that same year, ushering in two decades of orthodox Communism.

Trio found innocent of Iraqi sales

LONDON — Three businessmen were acquitted Monday of selling arms-making equipment to Iraq.

"A senior trade official acknowledged during trial that the government approved the exports in exchange for information on Iraq's nuclear capability.

The prosecution admitted it no longer has a case against Paul Henderson, 52, former managing director of Matrix Churchill Corp., the Iraqi-owned company's former sales director Peter Allen, 46, and its former commercial director Trevor Abraham, 45.

Rebels free U.S., British missionaries

MONROVIA, Liberia — Twelve American and three British missionaries detained for more than a week by Liberian rebels have been freed and sent to neighboring Ivory Coast, their organization said late Monday.

The missionaries were working for the Sanford, Fla.-based New Tribes Mission when they were taken by fighters loyal to rebel leader Charles Taylor, said Frank Brafferty, head of the missionary group's operations in Ivory Coast.

Sweden assigns infant to military

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — Sandin is only six weeks old, but the army has already notified her that she will be assigned to drive an armored personnel carrier in case of war.

She received the request for her services last week, a few days after regional authorities sent her a reminder to renew her driver's license.

"Someone obviously fed the wrong person number into the computer," an unidentified official said.

Sandin, whose last name was not given in the radio report, lives in the northern city of Boden, home to several military garrisons.

FERRARA, Italy (AP) — Rail traffic between Bologna and Venice will be stopped for an hour Tuesday while military experts defuse a one-ton bomb left over from U.S. air attacks during World War II.

U.N. scientists search for Iraq nuclear sites

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — U.N. weapons inspectors started scouring Iraq's rivers, lakes and canals Monday, collecting samples to determine if Iraq has any secret nuclear facilities.

"The inspection has not generated anything fantastic," said team leader Dimitri Perreios of Greece. "But we are trying."

The 22-member team visited the wreckage of a former Iraqi nuclear facility, bombed by allied forces during the Persian Gulf War, to check whether it was being reactivated.

Perreios said he asked again for a list of foreign companies that supplied Iraq with atomic technology, but was not optimistic the Iraqis would provide it.

"What is at present being generated by the Iraqis is updating of a list of equipment and facilities," he said. "There is no change in their stand."

Iraq has refused to provide a detailed breakdown of its foreign links, claiming the information is confidential.

"We are also having lots of meetings," said Perreios, an atomic chemical engineer and official of the Vienna-based International Atomic Energy Agency.

The team, including 15 Americans, for 10 days will search for weapons and visit 20 to 25 nuclear facilities or atomic support units that aided Iraq's quest to become a nuclear power.

After the 1991 Gulf War, the U.N.

Security Council demanded Iraq dismantle its nuclear program and all weapons of mass destruction including chemical and biological weapons.

IAEA officials have estimated Iraq was only one year away from industrial-scale production of enriched uranium for nuclear weapons when the war started.

In the past 18 months, U.N. teams have discovered much of Iraq's nuclear program.

They have also destroyed 151 ballistic missiles, many chemical weapons and the research centers and factories associated with nonconventional weapons programs.

U.S. chemical weapons expert Ronald Manley arrived in Bahrain from Iraq Monday after two months heading a program to destroy chemical weapons at Muthana, a heavily bombed facility 80 miles northwest of Baghdad.

Manley, a Briton, estimated officials still need to destroy about 500 tons of mustard gas and 225 tons of nerve agents, and that it would take until the autumn of 1993.

Iraqi and U.N. workers are emptying some 30,000 artillery shells, rockets and bombs that were leaking because they were damaged during the war or by the desert heat where they were hidden, Manley said.

U.S. officials believe the Iraqis are concealing information and possibly undeclared weapons and equipment.

Mike Crapo undertakes difficult mission in House

In their euphoria over controlling the White House as well as Congress, the Democrats occupying the national capitol seat will barely notice a freshman Republican congressman from the remote province of Idaho.

That's too bad. Crapo has a message his elders in the House of Representatives should heed.

Tradition dictates that a freshman congressman must hit the ground crawling. He's supposed to keep quiet and to be told.

But Idaho didn't elect Crapo to keep quiet. We elected him because he had a practical and detailed vision of how to reform Congress.

In case you don't remember the Crapo platform, here's a summary:

- Pass a balanced-budget amendment.
- Create a presidential line-item veto.
- Refuse to increase the national debt.
- Freeze spending, as a first step toward reducing the debt.
- Make Congress vote on every budget every year, not merely "autopilot" spending increases.
- Hold roll-call votes (not voice votes) on all taxing and spending measures.
- Approve no tax increases.
- Institute term limits.
- Reduce "franking" of mail.
- Reject any more congressional pay raises.
- Make Congress live by every law it passes, no more exemptions.
- Eliminate congressional perks.

"These ideas aren't Crapo's exclusive property. They aren't even original. His only innovation was to put them in one list—a recipe for reform.

The trick now is to make himself heard. After 12 years of waiting, the congressional Democrats are giddy about their new power. Watch for the resurrection of all those bills vetoed by President Bush. Watch for a deluge of spending proposals.

Prospects for a bipartisan reform movement among House freshmen are dimming. House Speaker Tom Foley is touring the country to cement the Democratic Class of '93's allegiance. Sunday he was in Los Angeles, Monday in Chicago, today in Atlanta.

The implicit message: Remember who's in charge.

Crapo and other freshman Republicans will find the Clinton-era House a challenging workplace. They'll need to find ways to delivering their message without becoming shrill nay-sayers on the fringes of power.

But there is a challenge for the Democrats as well. If they shut out guys like Crapo, and ignore the reforms these fellows are proposing, they'll give voters a reason to vote Republican in the 1994 congressional election.

If the House Democrats are smart, they'll pay attention to the Mike Crapos in their midst. Even if they don't, it's up to Crapo to try anyway.

What ever happens, Mike, keep your chin up, and remember why we sent you.

Helpful advice for the president-elect

Here are some thoughts and suggestions based on hard lessons I learned during the transition to the last Democratic administration 16 years ago:

(1) You cannot organize or effectively manage the federal bureaucracy like the Georgia or Arkansas governments. Make structure, process and accountability the hallmarks of the Clinton-Gore White House. While the executive experience of a governor is valuable, it is at best a very limited experience when measured against the sheer size and complexity of the federal government.

"Message discipline" (and the right message) was the central element of the successful Clinton campaign. It will be 100 times more difficult to focus the attention of the American people on the Clinton agenda in a sustained way. This requires a certain political discipline and an intellectual rigor that will not tolerate a loose White House structure.

(2) Without apology, make loyalty to the Clinton administration and its goals a threshold requirement for people who wish to serve. Because of a lack of political discipline from our White House, we often saw our policies and actions criticized and debated in the press by our "own" appointees.

(3) Don't give the government away. We gave Cabinet officers too much latitude in selecting their key appointees, which resulted in a government staffed by people who did not share or understand our different dream.

Hamilton Jordan

(4) Now, while the country is awash in the euphoria of new leadership, it is time to reassess everything: your priorities, your policies and your timetable for action. A case-in-point is the new president's pledge to send a health care plan to Congress within the first 100 days. A rushed program on this complex subject runs the risk of being superficial and/or leaving a huge price tag attached.

Utilize bipartisan study groups of members of Congress, citizens and business leaders to re-examine critical issues such as the budget deficit. This will vividly demonstrate the end of partisan "gridlock" and buy time and political support for the inevitable modifications in your policies.

(5) Pay more attention than we did to those "old hands" who had direct experience in top government positions. While we listened politely to these veterans, we tended to view those who had served in the Johnson and Kennedy administrations as being of another generation and "outdated" in their understanding of our different campaign and agenda.

(6) Beware the foreign policy "tar baby," whose natural allure for all presidents (and their staffs) can absorb enormous amounts of time and political capital. You will find that a president is more stimulated by a state visit by Boris Yeltsin or tea with Queen Elizabeth than by a member of Congress lobbying to get his staff member a seat on the FCC or speaking to police chiefs in Omaha. Foreign policy will and should take a lot of time, but it should not crowd or dominate your public agenda.

This is an additional reason for selecting a secretary of state who can hit the ground running, manage the cumbersome foreign policy apparatus and be readily accepted in foreign capitals all around the world.

(7) Be as speedy as you can in filling jobs. Get it over with.

At first glance the "plum book" will have seemed like "Treasure Island" for thousands of idealistic campaign workers and even adequate to meet the pent-up political demands of congressional Democrats, most of whom have never served under a Democratic president and have dreamed of the political booty that will be theirs. By Christmas it will seem more like a Stephen King horror story as the debilitating process of "peopling" the government will sap the political strength of the transition team and president-elect.

The sooner the personnel process is completed and separated from the president personally, the better off you will be. Be sure to see that the FBI is adequately staffed to complete the investigation process on all presidential appointees, as the demand for this essential service can create a bottleneck that delays by months the selection and confirmation of key people.

GOP must make major effort to win back Clinton Republicans

In 1988, George Bush carried Southern California's Orange County with about 68 percent of the vote. In 1992, he got only 44 percent.

What caused many lifelong Republicans to bolt their party, and what is attracting new voters to Bill Clinton?

Kathryn Thompson is one of the "Orange Eight" who jumped into the Clinton camp on the morning following the GOP national convention. In 1988 she gave the Republican National Committee $100,000 as a member of Team 100 and served as a California Bush delegate to that convention. Thompson best summarizes the story I heard in 1992 from hundreds of Republican defectors. It's like a commercial airline crash. It isn't any one thing, it's a combination of things that all go wrong at the same time.

The Clinton Republicans I met usually

Robert E. Nelson

(though not always) fit a profile that is vigorously pro-business, but most of them also support free choice on abortion, support a national policy encouraging new industry through tax incentives and by investing federal funds in research and development; want universal access to health care (with some reservations about "play or pay" as a financing mechanism); seek accelerated investment in roads, bridges, transit, pollution control and communications; favor a lean but strong military presence overseas; enforcement of the death penalty; and a "workfare" system to replace existing welfare entitlements. Most Clinton Republicans were universally disgusted by the 1992 Republican convention, especially by Patrick J. Buchanan's endorsement of a holy war. And they were tired of listening to the president blame all of America's woes on Congress.

Roger Johnson, one of the first Clinton Republicans, is chairman of Western Digital, a Fortune 500 company. He notes that, "Eisenhower, Nixon and Reagan were able to work with Congress. Bush blamed Congress for everything, yet he signed every budget they presented to him."

The Clinton Republicans were mostly befuddled more than angered by President Bush's handling of the economy. Thompson, Johnson and dozens (maybe hundreds) of Republican business leaders tried to motivate Bush into a new economic program as early as 1990. In face-to-face meetings they recited specific examples of how the economic crisis was affecting their communities and their own companies.

To their amazement, Bush would tell them: (a) The economic crisis was a media fiction, and (b) the Dan-Rudy-Boskin fiscal and economic programs would soon reinvigorate the nation, culminating in major economic expansion in the first or second quarter of 1992.

"I felt like I was listening to Herbert Hoover calling America, 'Prosperity is just around the corner,'" one executive said.

Did the Clinton Republicans make a difference in the 1992 campaign?

You bet. Forget the role of our formal organization; the fact is that grass-roots Republicans deserting Bush played a vital role in Clinton's success.

Bush lost us because he lacked a policy compass, abdicated national political leadership to assuage the likes of Pat Robertson and Pat Buchanan and repeatedly made important promises that he failed to fulfill.

And unlike the period from 1968 to 1988, in 1992 the Democratic Party offered a smart, moderate alternative with a campaign as competent as the candidate himself.

Will Clinton Republicans be a force in future congressional and statehouse races, similar to the impact Reagan Democrats had from 1980 to 1990? A lot depends on how well Bill Clinton does in office, especially the extent to which he keeps his promise to hold down federal taxes and spending.

Largely, however, the ball is in the Republicans' court.

If the GOP hopes to be competitive it will need to strip its pro-religious, anti-woman, anti-gay (together, read anti-civil rights) platforms and its efforts to use taxpayer funds for parochial schools; it will have to embrace universal access to health care as an entitlement of citizenship, and it will need to find meaningful programs and messages of hope to replace the spiteful, mean-spirited rhetoric and dirty tricks that defined the 1992 Bush campaign.

The odds-on GOP nominee for 1996 is Jack Kemp, one of the most genuinely caring leaders in either party. If he can suppress the platform of the religious zealots, who adore Kemp but helped ruin Bush, the GOP may have a chance in 1996. If not, they'll be a long time on the outs, and they'll deserve it.

Reduce the tax burden

Well, here we go again. The Andrus administration proposes to extend the sales tax to at least some services. When will it end?

They say the move is in response to any spending above a budget. What about our bare-bones level? We're being taxed to death. How much more can we take?

We don't have the option to increase our personal budget the way the government servants do. It's hard enough to make ends meet with the cost of living and government spending as it is. We knew taxes would be raised as soon as Clinton got in the White House, but Andrus decided to let the ax fall as soon as Clinton was voted in.

We, as Idaho residents, should write to Andrus and our legislators to tell them, "No, we don't want another tax increase."

Enough is enough.

The people of Idaho voted down the 1 Percent Initiative because they were afraid of losing services, and now Andrus says we need another tax increase. We say, "No."

As the last initiative, some states passed an initiative that required two-thirds vote of the people of the state before taxes could be raised or levied upon them.

'Rescue 911' features State Police trooper

DECLLO - Tonight's episode of the CBS series "Rescue 911" will feature Idaho State Police trooper Steven Hobbs. Hobbs is the Decllo trooper who was shot and critically injured almost 17 months ago after making a traffic stop on a desolate stretch of Interstate 84 near the Utah border.

Through the heroics of several passing motorists, Hobbs' life was saved. The rescue's drama prompted a film crew from "Rescue 911" to visit the area last May to film the story.

"Rescue 911" now in its fourth season, depicts rescues performed by both professional lifesaving personnel and ordinary citizens.

The show will air at 7 p.m. on Twin Falls' KMVT-TV.

Judge sentences Twin Falls man to 15 years in prison

TWIN FALLS - Making good on an earlier promise, 5th District Magistrate R. Barry Wood sentenced a Twin Falls man to prison Monday for molesting a girl over a five-year period.

Earl G. Boerem, 49, pleaded guilty to lewd conduct with a minor after turning himself in to police. The judge ordered him to spend 15 years in prison, but he will be eligible for parole in 2000.

That sentence may be changed after Boerem completes a 180-day evaluation program for sex abusers at Cottonwood.

"I don't want you to believe that in 180 days you're going to come back here and walk out on the streets of Twin Falls, because that's not going to happen," Wood said.

Boerem served three months probation for another child molesting charge in 1979.

In an emotional statement to the judge, Boerem said he is "facing daily what I have done and the ugliness of it causes me to shudder."

Despite Boerem's statement that he is "not the same person" who molested the girl from the time she was eight years old, Wood said the fact that he abused the child from 60-520 times during those five years called for a stiff sentence.

Attack on woman garners prison sentence of 5 years

TWIN FALLS - A 27-year-old Twin Falls man was ordered Monday to spend five years in prison for attacking a woman in April after losing his clothes in a coin-operated laundry.

Steven E. Ternes was convicted in August for robbery and aggravated battery after he threatened Kathy Stone with a knife inside Sabey's Main Street Cleaners and took her leather jacket.

Ternes said the woman was covering up for her son, who Ternes believed took some of the clothes he had left at the laundry earlier.

The attitude Ternes has displayed toward jail personnel and his refusal to accept responsibility for his actions make him "extremely dangerous," 5th District Magistrate R. Barry Wood said.

Wood said Ternes has stated on several occasions that he has AIDS and "has nothing to lose."

His attorney, deputy public defender Lisa Barini-Garcia, confirmed that Ternes has AIDS, but said she believes he is currently suffering symptoms of the fatal disease.

Fire destroys car stolen from Latham Motors

TWIN FALLS - A pair of Twin Falls County teen-agers found that a trip to Nevada in a stolen car brought a little too much heat over the weekend when the car caught fire near U.S. Highway 93.

The boys, a 17-year-old from Buhl and 13-year-old from Twin Falls, were spotted hitchhiking a couple of miles away from the burning car at about 11:30 p.m. Saturday night, according to a Twin Falls police report.

Two men returning from Jackpot picked up the youngsters and took them to the Twin Falls County Sheriff's office, where they were arrested.

The car, a 1978 Pontiac Firebird, was stolen from Latham Motors Inc. It was totally destroyed.

Defense: Move Stradley trial

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - The defense attorney for a Twin Falls man charged with killing a 2-year-old girl in January is asking that the murder trial be moved.

Public Defender Mike Wood would not comment Monday on his motion to move the trial of Donnell "Bud" Stradley out of the area.

The request, along with motions to sequester the jury and witnesses, is scheduled to be heard by 5th District Judge

James J. May Thursday at 8 a.m. Jury selection is set to begin at 9 a.m. Thursday for the trial, which is expected to last two weeks or longer. Most of that time will be spent on the defense case, as Twin Falls County Prosecutor K. Ellen Baxter has said the state's case will take about two days.

Stradley, 29, is charged with killing 2-year-old Amanda Hostetler. He was living with the child's mother when Amanda bled to death from severe internal injuries on Jan. 20.

Wood would not say why he is asking that the trial be moved. Media coverage and strong public sentiment that could make it impossible to find an impartial jury locally are commonly cited in change-of-venue motions.

News of Amanda's death prompted the formation of an ad hoc child abuse prevention group that called itself "Friends of Amanda." Members frequently attend court proceedings in the cases involving Stradley and Amanda's mother, Jodie Hostetler.

The group's interest was piqued when it was revealed that Amanda's body was covered with bruises in various stages of healing and that she had suffered several injuries including a possible skull fracture.

Hostetler is appealing a sentence of three to nine years in prison, she received after pleading guilty to one felony count of injury to a child stemming from her leaving the child in unsafe conditions. She has since been released on $15,000 bond pending her appeal.

Her attorney, Tom Kershaw, said Hostetler has been subpoenaed to testify at Stradley's trial but he does not know Estonian Indrek Tart is both a poet and a physicist.

Estonian: Poetry kept hope alive

By Drew DeSilver
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - Poetry helped keep the spirit of Estonia alive during the many years that nation was under foreign rule, says poet and physicist Indrek Tart.

But now that the Soviet Union has collapsed and Estonia has regained its independence, Estonian poets must carve out a new role for themselves in the often-chaotic conditions of the 1990s, Tart says.

"They must write about the hardships of everyday life after independence," he says. "They will find ways, I hope, to express not only the need for an independent Estonian state, but an independent Estonian mind. We cannot be swallowed up by a unified world culture."

Tart, 46, is visiting the College of Southern Idaho as part of the International Writing Program of the University of Iowa. He will read some of his poems at 7 p.m. tonight and talk about the role of poetry and science in Estonian history and politics.

Estonia is a nation of 1.6 million people on the Baltic Sea, on the western edge of what used to be the Soviet Union. It is about as big as the eight Magic Valley counties and Custer County combined.

For hundreds of years Estonia, like its neighbors Latvia and Lithuania, was ruled by foreign nations - first Germany, then Sweden and finally Russia. The three Baltic states became independent after World War I, but were reconquered by the Soviet Union during World War II.

The high level of education, especially scientific and technical education, in Estonia helped link the country to the West, Tart said, and Estonian writers helped preserve the national culture against the USSR's attempts at "russification."

"The role of the poet in Estonia has been very great in the last 50 years," he said. "They were the source of the development of the (Estonian) language, and that was the source of the development of the Estonian mind and Estonian identity."

Poetry books were relatively cheap and plentiful, Tart said. "They sold out, not in months, not weeks, but in days, because the themes were so great."

Even so, only a handful of poets were able to earn a living solely from their art. Most had "regular" jobs; Tart was until earlier this year a top theoretical physicist specializing in the field of nuclear

School tobacco proposal draws fire

By Kirk Mitchell
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - A proposed no-tobacco-use policy in Twin Falls schools has some teachers and other Twin Falls School District employees doing a slow burn.

"Idaho has long held the tradition of individual freedom and the protection of these rights," 11 district employees wrote to Robert Stuart Junior High School Principal Dale Thornsberry. "Must we surrender these rights now?"

Board meeting

The Twin Falls School District's board of trustees will meet tonight at 7 at Perrine Elementary School, 452 Casswell Ave. W. The public is welcome to attend.

The district proposes to ban all uses of tobacco in all district facilities, a change from the current policy that allows employees to smoke in designated areas. The Twin Falls School Board will discuss the policy at its monthly meeting tonight, but it is not expected to vote on the proposed change.

Teachers at both Stuart and O'Leary Junior High School wrote letters opposing the policy.

"Next is the School Board going to ban candy and pop machines, or better yet coffee?" O'Leary teacher Jennifer Ingram wrote to Superintendent Terrell Donohue.

"Does the board realize that enforcement of a chewing tobacco ban essentially means potential body cavity searches?" the Stuart letter said.

"Second-hand smoke has often been the victim of environmental witch-hunts," the letter continued. "Most allergic reactions in the workplace come from chemicals released from floor and ceiling tiles and from cleansing agents used in enclosed office spaces."

The Stuart letter also asked whether the ban would include such tobacco products as the "nicotine patch or nicotine gum," both used by smokers trying to quit smoking.

"It has been almost 100 years since school teachers faced mandatory church attendance, a no-smoking or drinking condition to employment, no dating by single woman teachers, and the emptying of coal clinkers at the end of the day," the letter said.

"Must we regress to the suppression of history long since passed?" the letter asked.

It was signed by Dana Tewkes, Angie Fillmore, Leanna Alcaro, Darla Vierstra.

Cassia board OKs buying school buses

BURLEY - The Cassia County School Board approved the purchase of five school buses Monday night for $13,460 apiece.

Trustee Ann Wight expressed concern about the quality of buses, saying "cheapest is not cheapest in the long run and noting that buses she had seen in Utah were Blue Birds.

Andrus backs BLM study of Snake

By N.S. Nokkentved
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - Gov. Cecil Andrus has approved a Bureau of Land Management proposal to study eligible sections of the Middle Snake River for listing under the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act.

As a matter of procedure, the governor's support for the study makes unlikely any federal hydro power licenses on the proposed river sections.

Andrus cited strong local support for the BLM study, but he urged the agency to "be responsive" to the state's comprehensive river planning effort, now under way.

"I believe the state study will identify the critical water issues in the Middle Snake area, including whether the state should support protection of river reaches under federal law," Andrus wrote to state BLM director Delmar Vall.

Failure of efforts in Congress to limit the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission's power to override state wishes in regard to hydroelectric project licensing and "FERC's track record in ignoring state authorities and concerns," lead me to conclude now that a BLM study that has strong local support may be a potential option to ensure protection of the remaining free-flowing stretches of the middle Snake River," he wrote.

With the go-ahead from the governor, the BLM's Shoshone District office will include proposed eligible river reaches in its new Bennett Hills Resource Management Plan - due out early next year, said area manager Bob Cordell.

The plan will recommend three segments of the Middle Snake as meeting eligibility criteria:

- From Milner Dam to the backwaters of Twin Falls;
- From Lower Salmon Falls Dam to the backwaters of the Bliss Dam;
- From below Bliss Dam to King Hill Creek.

The plan would be submitted for public scrutiny and comment. At that time, groups or individuals could propose additional reaches or present arguments why a segment should not be considered eligible, Cordell said.

Idaho Rivers United - a statewide river conservation group - has advocated adding District transportation supervisor Leonard Robinson said the Blue Bird brand is one of the "Cadillacs" of buses, but is $10,000 to $15,000 more expensive.

"Maintenance-wise they are still the same," he said.

Superintendent Norman Hurst said $205,000 was budgeted for buses.

In other business, the board:

- Learned that one of the outreach programs in the district has received another year and a half of funding.
- The Idaho Department of Education has granted the Community Outreach Specialist program $30,225 a year. The program was reviewed by a state advisory committee and an outside evaluator.
- The program works with parents of at-risk youngsters to communicate the importance of homework, attendance and other areas of concern, trustee Karla Robinson said.

TWIN FALLS - Wastes from the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory's radioactive burial ground already have leaked into the Snake River Plain Aquifer below the eastern Idaho site.

Federal Energy Department officials plan a public meeting at 6:30 p.m. Thursday at the Canyon Springs Inn to discuss an amended plan for cleaning up one section of the buried waste area, known as Pit 9.

The plan also is the first step to begin clean up of the haphazard disposal of radioactive wastes during the 1950s and 1960s in the 88-acre burial ground now known as the Subsurface Disposal Area of the INEL's Radioactive Waste Management Complex.

The department's preferred method of cleanup consists of putting up a temporary building to contain any dust, digging up the wastes and separating contaminants by physical or chemical means.

The amended plan would add a stabilization process.

Once the most of the contaminants have been removed the remaining soil - with small quantities of contaminants - will be returned to the pit.

Separating the radioactive contaminants would reduce the volume of waste requiring disposal. Once removed the waste would be stored and managed "in accordance with all state and federal laws regarding storage of the waste residual until an ultimate disposal facility is identified.

Officials also say the proposal will reduce risks of wastes from Pit 9 reaching the aquifer.

But some wastes already have reached the aquifer and others have moved into the ground below the site.

Exploration wells have found organic solvents at just over the federal limit in the aquifer 580 feet below the old dump and traces of plutonium in sediments 240 feet below the ground.

Transuranic waste - contaminated with plutonium - was dumped in pits and trenches in a corner of the INEL for more than 20 years, most of it from the Rocky Flats nuclear weapons plant near Denver.

Public outcry halted the practice in 1970. Pit 9 contains about 110,000 cubic feet of waste in a variety of forms - steel drums, boxes and pieces of old reactors and other equipment. The pit also includes sludges and solvents contaminated with plutonium.

The rest of the waste is classified as low level waste, but that classification is not related to radiation levels. Officially, low level waste is everything not classified as high-level, spent fuel or transuranic waste.

Information on the proposal is available at the Twin Falls Public Library.

Hostetter has returned to the Wood River Valley, where she was living and working before being sentenced. Kershaw said.

Medical experts have testified in earlier hearings that Amanda's death was caused by a severe blow to the abdomen. Wood counters with evidence that the child's mesentery, which was ruptured, had been weakened by a previous injury and was susceptible to damage.

During Stradley's preliminary hearing, police officers questioned him and said Stradley told them he was playing with the child and tossed her through a doorway onto a waterbed. The child fell short, hitting her abdomen on the wooden corner of the bed, according to the officers.

Even if Stradley did not mean to

In most first-degree murder cases, the prosecution must prove malice and premeditation on the part of the suspect. But under the felony murder rule, any aggravated battery on a child younger than 12 that results in the child's death becomes a murder case.

But the feeling of dealing with the equations was similar to dealing with the poetry. The writing was parallel, but with the same emotional center."

Now, with the country grappling with the problems of independence - including several thousand Russian troops still on Estonian soil, the decaying industrial infrastructure left behind by the USSR, and impending food and fuel shortages this winter - Tart says there is less public interest in poetry.

Estonians are by nature a pessimistic people, Tart adds; he himself is skeptical about his country's giant neighbor, Russia, transforming itself into a Western-style democracy. But he still hopes that he and his fellow poets can contribute to their newly restored nation's progress.

"Estonians are very inward people, ironic people, cautious people," he said. "We're always expecting to have troubles, and they usually do come. But our nature demands us to begin working to make our own products and become truly independent."

Poetry, he says, can help ensure that his country's distinctive culture will not be submerged, either in a pan-European culture or a global culture dominated by the United States.

"There must be many kinds of flowers in the world, not just blue ones," he says.

In other business tonight, the board will consider the possible sale to the College of Southern Idaho of part of the land it purchased two years ago to build a new high school.

CSI is seeking between 10 and 20 acres located along North College Road for use by its agriculture department.

The college wants the land to use for research and for agriculture classes.

It also could be used for the future expansion of CSI. President Gerald Meyerhofer wrote in a letter to School Board members.

Neither CSI nor the school district said Monday what the asking price might be. It's part of a 70-acre parcel, bordered by North College Road and Washington Street North, bought by the school district in October 1990 for $310,000.

The property was obtained as the site of a new high school, but passed overwhelmingly rejected a $20 million bond issue in May 1991 that overruled the high school proposal.

Voters subsequently passed a $9 million bond issue to build a new elementary school at another site.

The property would not be used for land speculation or sale, Meyerhofer said.

Accident critically injures 89-year-old

OAKLEY - An 89-year-old Oakley woman was critically injured in a two-vehicle accident Friday afternoon, deputies say. According to the Cassia County Sheriff's Department, Claudia Martin Kidd was slowing down for a left turn when Loretta Ann Smith, 28, Oakley, tried to pass her on the left. The accident happened on Highway 27, about three miles north of Oakley. Kidd was taken to Cassia Memorial Hospital, but was scheduled to be moved to a Boise hospital Monday, a spokesman said. There was $5,000 damage to her car and $1,500 damage to Smith's pickup, deputies estimate. Smith was cited for passing in an intersection, deputies said.

Thieves make off with 8 speakers

RUPERT - Eight speakers valued at a total of $120 were stolen overnight Sunday from a Minidoka County School District bus. The theft occurred while the bus was parked at the district bus garage on D Street.

Boy escapes serious injury in crash

PAUL - A 17-year-old Paul boy escaped serious injury Saturday after the car he was driving left the road, went airborne and hit a utility pole.

According to a report filed with the Minidoka County sheriff's office, the accident occurred at 4:07 p.m. at the intersection of Idaho 25 and 950 West.

Deputies reported that Heath Dewayne Church, 330 North 1650 West, was eastbound on Idaho 25 when the accident occurred. Church told the sheriff's department he could not remember what happened before the crash, and that he might have passed out because of a migraine headache.

Deputies reported that Church apparently drifted toward the right side of the road, overcorrected and went off the left shoulder at 950 West. His car flew over a steep embankment, hit a utility pole about 15 feet above the ground and landed on its side.

Paramedics took Church to Minidoka Memorial Hospital in Rupert. He went home Monday. The accident demolished Church's 1987 Mercury Topaz, deputies reported. Loss was estimated at $10,000.

Man allegedly forged prescriptions

BURLEY - A 20-year-old man was charged Friday with forging drug prescriptions at the Burley Kmart and Wal-Mart stores. Police arrested Gabriel Garza, 1611 Albion Ave., Burley, after a Wal-Mart pharmacist called police to report a forged prescription. Police charged Garza with three counts of forging prescriptions.

According to a police report, Garza admitted to passing a forged prescription at Wal-Mart on Thursday. Police also alleged that he tried to pass a forged prescription at Kmart Friday afternoon but left without getting the prescription filled.

Rupert police reported that a suspect matching Garza's prescription tried to forge a prescription at Swenson's grocery store but ran off.

Sugar beets damage several mailboxes

BURLEY - Airborne sugar beets clobbered several mailboxes Friday night, deputies say.

According to the Cassia County Sheriff's Department, Frederick L. Johnson, 140 South 450 East, reported at 10 p.m. that someone had damaged his mailboxes by heaving large sugar beets at them. Upon investigating, deputies found six other mailboxes that had been flattened by sugar beets. A few more mail boxes were reported damaged later.

Landfill neighbors may file suit

By Kristin Anderson
Mini-Cassia News Service

RUPERT - Angry neighbors of the Minidoka County landfill complained to county commissioners Monday about trash blowing onto their property.

"The paper is still blowing," Ione Anderson said with tears in her eyes.

"I own 275 acres and the landfill is devaluing my property. I live alone, and you expect me to pick up the trash?"

"It's a disgrace to the city, the nation and the United States of America," she said.

It was not the first time the board had heard from Anderson and neighbor Ellrey Wight, who live near the landfill located at 400 W. and 325 N. They said they are considering suing the county.

"We've come in here before, and the only thing they've ever after is to get you guys to clean up your act," Wight said.

Wight suggested he be paid the same wages for picking up trash as the landfill's manager receives, although he doesn't see this as a solution to the problem.

Commissioner Clarence Bellem suggested the county provide a burner for Wight to dispose of the trash that comes onto his property, but

Wight refused the offer. He said it wasn't his problem, and he viewed any such compromise as "forced labor."

Anderson complained several years ago about the trash blowing, and the commissioners put up additional fencing, she said. However, though the new fence stopped trash from going on Wight's property, it did nothing to stop it from blowing onto hers, Anderson said.

Commissioner Norman Serbold said the commissioners realized the trash was their problem. He mentioned a possibility of putting up additional fencing, but he said no major changes are in the county budget because the landfill will close in less than a year. It will be replaced by a multi-county regional landfill, currently slated for construction on the west face of Burley Butte.

Both Anderson and Wight said they'll return next week to see what the board has decided about their problem.

Prosecuting Attorney David Haley spoke to the board about filling the public defender contract after the current contract public defender, Gara B. Newman, resigns to become prosecutor.

Newman was elected to the post and last week and will take office in January.

The contract is usually open to area attorneys and is awarded to the lowest bidder, Haley said.

However, Haley said the law provides for a district judge to appoint a committee of attorneys to designate three to five candidates for the contract. One of these candidates would be awarded the contract by the county commissioners.

The board also announced it would not overturn a Planning and Zoning Commission decision not to grant a Livestock Containment Operation Permit to Eldon Hart of 950 West and Baseline.

The P&Z Commission denied the permit for Hart's hog farm in August, citing non-compliance with environmental standards.

Holiday not for everyone

But not for most folks. Magic Valley schools, with the exception of the College of Southern Idaho, will be open as usual, and all retail stores and state liquor dispensaries will do business on a regular schedule.

The Twin Falls and Hailey city halls will be open, although most other federal, state, county and city offices in the Magic Valley will be closed, including the libraries in Twin Falls, Jerome, Burley, Gooding, Rupert and Ketchum.

Banks, financial services offices, and legal offices will take the day off.

Sanitation services will collect trash on the regular schedule.

Isabelle hadn't considered moving or retiring... not really. Not until she heard BridgeView Estates was offering spacious apartments with full kitchens and weekly maid service. And, she loved the possibilities of the Meet Your Neighbor Parties and the elegant Blue Lakes dining room with a dance floor.

It seemed an extravagance. But, by the time Isabelle added up all her monthly household expenses plus fire insurance and taxes, she found BridgeView very affordable. For just monthly rent she could enjoy a much easier life while the money from her house was put to work... earning money.

OUTSTANDING

There were added advantages too. She wouldn't have to leave BridgeView if she ever needed a little help because the assisted retirement apartments were in the next wing. And, the village Health Care Center would be there for emergencies and physical therapy should she need it.

Of course, she especially liked the picturesque location... right across the street from the shopping center... OUTSTANDING!

Over 40 and pregnant? A blessing!

DEAR ABBY: This is for "Found Love Late" who wonders if she's too old to have a child in her mid-40s.

I was 45 and my husband was 50 when I became pregnant. We had been childless for 22 years and it was a great shock to put it mildly. My husband was an executive in a large corporation, and I had never worked outside the home. I had an active social life and kept busy with volunteer projects. My doctor assured me that my age was no problem because my health was excellent. I had an uneventful and easy pregnancy, and was thrilled when I delivered a beautiful baby girl. We named her Chris.

Dear Abby
Abigail VanBuren

We had some adjustments to make in our lifestyle, but we handled them well. Chris has been the joy of my life. She is 32 now, happily married and has given me four beautiful grandchildren - two boys and two girls. I am now a widow - 78 years young. Would I do it again? Yes! Is it fair for a child to have a menopausal mom? I will let my daughter answer that question. I'm enclosing her letter.

-IDA PFÖHL, VERO BEACH, FLA.

DEAR ABBY: My mother gave me an "assignment" which I am accepting happily.

She asked me what it like being a menopausal mother. I never knew I had one. I suppose most kids think their parents are "old" - but I never thought mine were any older than the rest.

In fact, I always thought my parents were pretty cool - especially my mom. She was always up on the latest fashions, styles and trends, and she dressed accordingly. (She still does.)

My mom is my best friend. We talk on the telephone every day and go together at least once a week to go shopping. She can run circles around me. I have to ask her to stop so I can rest.

I want to tell those women who found love late and had children later than most women:

Don't worry about looking like a grandmother at PTA meetings. You will see women of all ages, shapes, sizes and colors there. Lots of moms are also grandmothers from their other children. Besides, with today's lifestyles, many children are being raised by their grandparents, so I doubt that you will be the oldest mother there.

But most of all, please don't worry about what your children "might" think about having an older mom. I had one, and it never even crossed my mind at the time. I had the most wonderful childhood a kid could have, and the best parents in the world, and your children will probably think the same.

-IDA'S DAUGHTER: CHRIS

didn't bother me.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 43-year-old boy whose mother's hair turned gray when she was around 35 or 36 years old. A few times I've been asked if she was my mom or grandma, but I never worried about it because it "Found Love Late" shouldn't worry about looking like a grandma, either. It isn't the color of the lady's hair that's important; it's what's inside that counts.

-VINCENT YOUNG IN MALABAR, FLA.

It was reported here that the face of every professional clown is made up in a unique pattern not to be copied by any other clown. Clint asks, "How can the clown prevent that from happening by accident?"

They paint their faces on eggshells kept in circus records.

Clint is microwave popcorn pops into bigger kernels - it stored in the freezer.

Business Western lifestyle attracts new business breed

DURANGO, Colo. (AP) — Years of economic decline may be ending in the small towns of the West, brought about by a new breed of entrepreneurs armed with fax machines, electronic mail and desk-top computers.

Economists say the West is becoming increasingly attractive to "lone eagle" business people who like the qualities inherent in small towns.

Frank Crail, president of the Rocky Mountain Chocolate Factory, found the small-town characteristics of Durango were more to his liking than the hustle and bustle of San Diego, his former home.

Crail's accountant works out of Dallas, his lawyer lives in Los Angeles, his ad company operates in Denver and his vice president of marketing lives in Chico, Calif.

Ex-CIA man Bayard Fox runs a $2 million-a-year company specializing in horseback tours from a ranch near Durango, Wyo. Equitour employs only four people, but local economic development officials estimate that on a per-job basis, such companies contribute more to the local economy than the Louisiana-Pacific sawmill that closed in 1988.

Skyline Scientific Services, a company that helps pharmaceutical producers comply with federal regulations, located in Bozeman, Mont., because its founders, both ex-NASA engineers, wanted to live in the West.

Technology is cutting the ties that had bound businesses to the big cities, and some entrepreneurs are taking the opportunity to relocate to areas with clean air, good schools and a good view rather than those with large labor pools or a saltwater port.

Phil Burgess, director of the Center for the New West, a Denver economic development think tank, said the appearance of what he calls the "lone eagle" entrepreneur is breathing new life into the "wild and mild" areas of the Western United States.

The New West 9 million strong, Burgess said the highly educated, white collar entrepreneurs are behind a wave of information-based, cottage industries popping up in rural America. "They're manufacturing reps, writers, analysts, brokers," Burgess said. "They're really valuable people because they sink their roots in the community. The wife will be on the school board in two years and the husband will be on the library board. Most of them are above-average income people — $40,000 to $100,000."

But economists aren't sure if the influx of business to the West will have a significant effect on the overall economic picture of the region.

Oregon State University economist Bruce Weber said such growth is limited by the narrow demand for such consultants, writers and analysts. He added that such well-educated people don't want to move too far from urban culture. "These people tend to like espresso. They go to the opera, they like symphonies."

But studies have shown that areas of the West that are distant from urban centers are benefiting from the economic growth such businesses bring.

A recent Wilderness Society study found that rapid growth in a 40-county area around Yellowstone National Park has been led by an expanding service sector, which has more than made up for declines in traditional industries such as mining, agriculture and wood products.

Dealers put brakes on consumer car book

The Washington Post

Let's get this straight: There's a book available to consumers that assigns low trade-in values for used cars and trucks. It's published by Chicago-based CCC Information Services Inc. You would think that dealers and their representatives would like the book, because lower trade-in values mean that dealers pay less for used vehicles.

Instead, the dealers are in an uproar. Their biggest lobbying group, the McLean, Va.-based National Automobile Dealers Association (NADA), has gone to federal court in Chicago and Virginia to stop CCC from publishing its book.

NADA, which for 60 years has published the widely used NADA Official Used Car Guide, is accusing CCC of fraud and copyright violations in an alleged scheme to rip off consumers and the dealers' group alike.

In the Chicago suit, the NADA — are being denied "full and fair" said that CCC simply pirated the NADA numbers and wrapped them in CCC packaging. In the Virginia petition, filed in Alexandria, the association contends that CCC takes NADA's, used-vehicle values and arbitrarily adjusts them to suit its own ends, according to the association. It's defied insurance companies and default "hundreds of thousands of auto insurance policyholders" who

Dow near flat after sell programs trim gain

Knight-Ridder News Service

NEW YORK — The Dow industrials closed near flat Monday, up less than a point at 3240, after the market drifted in sea-saw trading, principally buffered in a 28-point Dow range first by an arbitrage program buying and then by arbitrage selling.

There was little market reaction to mediocre auction demand for $15.5 billion in three-year notes.

Mild gains in the U.S. Treasury bond market tended to offset any negative effects from the 3-year auction. The long bond was up 1/32 as stocks opened and 3/32 as they closed.

Traders said the market was most likely awaiting the results of Treasury auctions for the longer-term instruments that more directly compete with equities for investor dollars. On Tuesday, the Treasury will auction $11.6 billion in 10-year notes, and on Thursday, it will sell $10.2 billion in 30-year bonds.

Somewhat perplexed by mixed signals from the credit markets, stocks generally drifted, encountering buy-programs, then sell-programs as key investors posted session-high discounts to cash stocks, enticing arbitrageurs to buy deflated futures against sales of cash stocks.

But the Dow remained well within its range of the past two weeks as the pace of trading ebbed. Analysts therefore concluded that the session revealed nothing significant about future market direction. "There was a lot of machine action for program trading," said chief trader Thomas Luker at Nikko Securities.

"But the market was really just bouncing around in a technical range," he said. "A lot of people had time to talk — that usually means that both buyers and sellers have taken the day off."

THE ACES ON BRIDGE

"We have unmistakable proof that throughout all past time, there has been a ceaseless devouring of the weak by the strong."
—Herbert Spencer.

West's opening lead was most effective; it struck a blow at South's weakest suit. There was only one problem. East didn't know when he had had enough of a good thing. West led fourth best from his longest and strongest, and East's queen was allowed to win the trick. East followed with the spade king, and once again South let him hold the trick. Head bowed and eyes closed, East continued with a third spade, forcing South to win his ace. Why was this last led by East a foolish play? He had heard South's opening bid, and 10 HCP were in full view in dummy. Since he was looking at 14 HCP in his own hand, how was West to hold more than a jack? With no hopes of bringing in West's spade suit, East should shift to a heart at trick three: If South wins his finesse and attacks in diamonds, East wins his queen and leads the heart king. Now, whether South wins or ducks, the defenders have a sure set. South is down two if he takes his heart ace, down one if he gives up and ducks. Originally declarer's weak spot was in spades. However, after South holds up twice, East must shift the attack, and the only possible winning shift lies with hearts.
