Hansen guilty of bank fraud

By Drew DeSilver
Times-News writer

BOISE — Former congressman George Hansen and a longtime aide were convicted Friday of 45 counts of bank fraud.

The federal jury of seven women and five men deliberated for about nine hours Thursday and Friday before delivering the guilty verdicts.

Hansen, who represented Idaho's 2nd District from 1965-1968 and again from 1975-84, did not react visibly as U.S. District Judge Edward Lodge announced the verdicts.

Hansen and John Scoresby were originally charged with 49 bank fraud counts each. But Lodge dismissed two charges earlier in the trial, and the jury acquitted Hansen and Scoresby of two others.

Each fraud conviction carries a maximum sentence of 30 years in prison and a $1 million fine.

Hansen likely will receive a more severe penalty than Scoresby, because he was convicted in 1984 of filing false financial disclosure statements.

Under federal sentencing guidelines, a prior felony conviction means a harsher mandatory minimum sentence.

Lodge set March 1 as the sentencing date. Until then, he ordered Hansen, who lives in Arlington, Va., and Scoresby, who lives in Idaho Falls, not to leave the continental United States, and strongly encouraged them to clear any financial transactions with their attorneys.

Outside the courtroom, Hansen maintained his innocence and declared himself a victim of government agencies, especially the Idaho Department of Finance.

"It was a shipwreck," he said, referring to his financial activities. "But they were trying to make it look like we ran it onto the rocks on purpose."

More troubles? - B1

Hansen's attorney, John Runft, said no decision will be made about appealing the verdict until the defense completes its presentencing motions.

But Hansen declared that he would challenge the conviction.

"We're going to look for ways to fight it and overturn it, because it's a serious miscarriage of justice," he said. "We had a very well-presented case, but somehow it didn't get the jury."

Instead, the jury opted for the government's case, which charged Hansen

Landfill will cost Twin Falls County up to $5.6 million

By Phil Sahn
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A landfill on Hub Butte will cost Twin Falls County $2.24 million to $5.6 million, engineers estimate.

The costs per ton range from $31.45 to $18 annually, depending on the type of landfill built — with or without clay and plastic liners, for example — and on how long the project is financed.

These estimates include costs for roll-off sites — places where people can take trash to drop into a container that is hauled by truck to the landfill — in several areas of the county.

The costs do not include fees that private haulers would charge to pick up and deliver trash to the landfill — the fees, for example, that Parks and Sons charges to haul city residents' trash to the landfill.

Engineers from EHM and J-U-B Engineers prepared the estimates and presented them to the Twin Falls County Commission on Friday.

The cost estimates are based on the county raising $1.5 million up front for construction, said Steve Freiburger of J-U-B.

The commissioners wanted to raise $1.5 million through the recently rescinded $50 solid waste fee. Commissioner Marvin Hempleman said Friday he favors restoring the fee to raise the $1.5 million.

"I would say we need to go ahead and raise that $1.5 (million). Then, we could drop back to a gate fee," Hempleman said.

Commissioner Jim Fraley, while agreeing that the fee assessed to some businesses was inequitable, and despite the general uproar about the fee, said it was fair.

"I think the fee was reasonable. ... Citizens have to realize we are mandated to protect the environment," Fraley said.

Commissioner Norma Bless wants the inequities of the business fees addressed. "We have to stay within the boundary of what the citizens can afford," Bless said.

All the commissioners said even though costs of building a landfill will not be cheap, they were relieved to see the costs per ton look reasonable.

Aid trucks left stalled by fighting

The Associated Press

MOGADISHU, Somalia — Two of Somalia's main warlords agreed to a ceasefire in the capital Friday, but gun battles stalled food convoys headed for the starving in the hinterlands.

The Marines scrubbed plans to escort a food convoy into northern Mogadishu and set back a scheduled convoy to Baidoa at least a week, despite appeals from relief officials who said bandits were in a looting frenzy.

U.N. officials halted the agreement between Gen. Mohamed Farrah Aidid and "Ab Mahdi" Mohamed as a first step in a long and difficult attempt to reconcile all of Somalia's major clans.

But the two warlords have, and authority over many of the unruly factions, no authority to control the capital.

Just how difficult it would be to attain peace was demonstrated by:

- Turnout and looting in Baidoa, one of the towns hit hardest by famine. The chaos forced the postponement of a relief convoy planned for Saturday and had aid workers pleading for help from American Marines.
- Plundering and hostage-taking in Kismayo, an important port 300 miles south of Mogadishu.
- A night-long battle over a radio station between Ali Mahdi's forces and those of Aidid, which forced the United Nations to postpone sending a 10-truck convoy of food to northern Mogadishu. A disagreement over whether Marines or Pakistani U.N. peacekeepers would drive the trucks also played a role in the cancellation, according to U.N. sources.

The cancellation of this convoy meant the fourth straight day without food deliveries for the northern sector of the capital.

Marines almost wipe out truck carrying media

The Associated Press

MOGADISHU, Somalia — The U.S. Marines revealed Friday that a truckload of reporters were a heartbeat away from death during this week's invasion of Mogadishu.

"Maybe it was serendipity, but I like to think that God smiled on them," Col. Fred Peck, spokesman for Project Restore Hope, said as he began a 20-minute lecture to journalists about what the Marines considered press misbehavior during the operation's early days.

But Peck placed no restrictions on coverage.

The incident that almost ended in disaster happened before dawn Wednesday at Mogadishu's port area, where reporters entered by the vanguard of a U.S. task force in Somalia to protect food shipments.

The Marines, slipping in under cover of darkness and wearing night-vision goggles, sensed they were fired on and fired back, Peck said. As they maneuvered the pier, he said, "they saw a pickup truck with no lights coming at them. People were hanging all over it."

The Marines had been told about the Somali capital's trucks mounting guns carrying explosives and with a radioactive weed called chat. The Marines thought they had seen their first one.

A Marine locked the truck in the sights of his anti-tank weapon and "was one second away from firing. For some reason he decided not to fire," Peck said.

The truck was filled with journalists, photographers and television crews out to cover the landing.

Clinton cabinet appointments promise a difference at the top

By Jill Lawrence
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President-elect Clinton's latest appointments promise that the top tier of his administration will be not only diverse but also different from recent Republican teams.

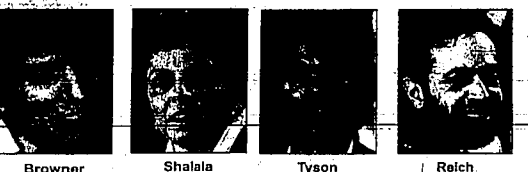

The score after Clinton's Friday announcement was five men, four women, no minorities. That was bound to change, perhaps as early as Saturday, with black and Hispanic appointments.

"When you see the whole Cabinet, it will be genuinely reflective of this country in gender and racial terms," Clinton said.

Whatever the ultimate statistics, Clinton's team already has a distinctive look as a result of the three women he added on Friday: Donna Shalala to be secretary of health and human services; Carol Browner to head the Environmental Protection Agency and Laura D'Andrea Tyson as chairman of the White House Council of Economic Advisers.

That came on the heels of Alice Rivlin's appointment as deputy budget director, which feminists consider a breakthrough in a key economic power post.

In addition, Clinton chose Robert Reich, to serve as secretary of labor.

"You're struck by the large number of women already tapped ... and I suspect there'll be more," said newsletter publisher Stuart Rothenberg, a Republican analyst.

With blacks and Hispanics expected on the roster as well, he added, "this is very different from the selection of a bunch of Nicholas Bradys and Republican businessmen. It sends very different signals."

The President Reagan started with women at EPA and the United Nations, but had no female Cabinet secretaries until 1983 when he installed Elizabeth Dole and Margaret Heckler at the transportation and health departments.

President Bush initially named two Hispanics, two women and one black to top jobs in his administration — four Cabinet secretaries and the trade representative. Brady, an investment banker and longtime Bush friend, has been treasury secretary.

Clinton's first batch of appointments included four white males from Congress and Wall Street — and Rivlin. But the second wave was bracing to feminists who had pushed for female appointments.

Storms hammer Northeast, Great Lakes, Rockies

The Associated Press

Wind up to 90 mph caused damage and flooding Friday along the Eastern Seaboard, and snow fell from the Great Lakes and central Appalachians into New England.

The coastal flooding was caused by the on-shore wind coupled with unusually high tides. Wind gusted to 90 mph in Wildwood Crest in extreme southern New Jersey, and to 77 mph in New York City's LaGuardia Airport, which was shut down. Wind to 80 mph broke off part of a church steeple and the debris closed the Ben Franklin Bridge between Philadelphia and southern New Jersey.

Show communities had flooding from New Jersey to Massachusetts.

Snow also fell over the northern Rockies and rain along the Pacific Coast changed to snow at higher elevations.

As much as 14 inches of snow fell overnight in western sections of Yellowstone National Park. Overnight snowfalls in the eastern Sierra Nevada ranged from 18 inches at California's Mammoth Mountain ski resort area to 9 inches at Truckee, Calif.

Advisories for blowing and drifting snow were in effect for Saturday for Wyoming's Big Horn Mountains. And a winter storm watch was in effect for Saturday over northeastern Arizona.

Advisories for blizzard or near-blizzard conditions were posted for Alaska's Pribilof Islands through Saturday.

At midday, rain was falling from the central Atlantic Coast across the southern New England coast. Snow fell over the lower Great Lakes, the Ohio Valley, the northern and central Appalachians, and central and northern New England.

As much as 37 inches of snow had accumulated in two days in parts of Pennsylvania. In two counties in West Virginia's mountainous Eastern Panhandle, only emergency vehicles were allowed on roads after up to 30 inches of snow fell with more expected. Parts of adjoining western Maryland got 35 inches.

Temperatures around the 48 states at 1 p.m. MST ranged from 20 at Bemidji, Minn., to 80 at Brownsville, Texas.

Judge throws out charge against Weinberger

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal judge Thursday threw out an Iran-Contra charge against former Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger that was brought four days before the election and prompted allegations prosecutors were trying to help President Bush's re-election campaign.

Four felony charges remain against Weinberger for trial Jan. 5. But U.S. District Judge Thomas F. Hogan, in a major setback to independent counsel Lawrence Walsh, barred Weinberger from being tried on the charge that alleges that Weinberger lied to Congress.

and Scoresby with orchestrating a wide check-kiting scheme that left the Bank of Commerce in Idaho with some $2.1 million.

Throughout nine days of testimony and arguments, Assistant U.S. Attorney George Breitsamer said that the lawyers used the scheme to artificially inflate the bank balance of Hansen's firm, Ideal Consultants.

Among the many Hansen supporters who traded checks with him was Rupert farmer Brad Neibaur, who admitted swapping 424 checks with a total face value of more than $45 million.

The government charged that the inflated balances created by the kited checks were used to prop up Hansen's "loan program," under which scores of backers in southern and eastern Idaho lent him money at interest rates of up to 10 percent a month.

After the Department of Finance began probing the loan program as a violation of state securities laws, it agreed with Hansen and Scoresby on a court order shutting it down.

The injunction, issued in February 1991, ordered the two men not to solicit any more loans without complying with the Idaho Securities Act's registration and disclosure requirements.

However, testimony during the trial revealed that Hansen continued to solicit loans after the injunction was issued.

Hansen, Scoresby and their attorneys all say they thought the jury would acquit them.

"We're terribly disappointed in the verdict, but I think we had a fair trial," Ruffin said. "We came to the announcement of verdict with high hopes, but jury trials are not predictable."

Breitsamer said only, "I'm pleased with the verdict. I'm pleased with the jury's consideration of all the evidence."

Landfill

"These numbers are going to make it feasible for the whole county to go with Hub Butte. These are numbers we can live with," Friley said.

The most expensive landfill, $5.6 million, would have a composite clay and plastic liner financed over 20 years. Friley said, it would cost an estimated $2.5 a ton to landfill trash under this plan.

A landfill financed over 10 years, with a liner, would cost an estimated $4.1 million, or $27.96 a ton. One financed over five years, with a liner, would cost an estimated $2.8 million, or $31.45 a ton.

After the end of the financing period, the higher the costs per ton. The financing plans include a fund that would accrue money to open the next part of the landfill when the first one is full.

Frileyberger also listed a lined landfill in which the Bull and Twin Falls highway districts would help build roads for a cost of $4.7 million over 20 years.

"The least expensive would be an unlined landfill financed over five years at a cost of $2.24 million, he said.

The county might be able to build a landfill without a liner because of the little rainfall the area receives and because of the distance to groundwater - generally hundreds of feet - in the area, he said.

But the county must get state and, possibly, federal approval to go without the liner. Hempleman said the county might be able to do it.

County engineer said that he can prove that he doesn't need it," he said.

Records at the county's current landfill show no leaching of contaminants that could get into groundwater, he said.

Annual operating costs range from $1.1 million for a lined landfill

Clinton

"We are very pleased," said Harriett Woods, president of the National Women's Political Caucus. "We are continuing to press for diversity in terms of color, which is not yet there, and for breakthrough positions like attorney general which have never been held before by women."

There's some reason for hope among women and minorities that they will not only be represented in larger numbers, but will also have jobs that in the past have gone to white men.

Clinton reportedly is planning to name a woman as attorney general. And Tyson's job as economic adviser has never been held by a woman before.

The Department of Health and Human Services, where Shalala is headed, does not fit the breakthrough category. Nor would the expected appointment of San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros as housing secretary.

U.N. ambassador, a prospective post for Democratic Party chairman Ron Brown, has been held by several blacks. But he would be the first of his race if he were named commerce secretary or trade representative - other possibilities for him.

The same would be true if Clinton gives secretary of state or secretary of defense to Colin Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, or agriculture secretary to Mississippi Rep. Mike Espy.

Woods said the "obvious goal" of her group would be that women fill about half of 19 Cabinet and senior posts viewed as the uppermost tier, but acknowledged that's not realistic.

Coastal flooding, wind damage, snow blast East

More than 50 cars are stranded on FDR Drive on Manhattan's Upper East Side Friday after a giant storm sent the East River, left, over its banks at high tide and flooded the roadway.

The Associated Press

Wind up to 90 mph lashed the Atlantic Seaboard on Friday. Flooding shore communities with some of the highest waves this century, blowing out skyscraper windows in New York City and shutting down transit for hundreds of thousands.

"We're boarding up as fast as we possibly can. Say a prayer for us," said Mary Franchi, manager of the Bass Point apartments at Nahant, Mass., where waves crashing into the sea wall leaped 30 feet in the air.

Inland, 3 feet of snow fell in Pennsylvania. Virginia's Gov. L. Douglas Wilder sent the National Guard to evacuate up to 2,500 rural residents isolated by 2 feet of snow since Thursday around Winchester.

National Guardsmen were called out to help evacuate thousands from shore communities in Massachusetts and in New Jersey, where Gov. Jim Florio declared an emergency for 10 counties. Two young boys were missing in one New Jersey town. New York Gov. Mario Cuomo also declared an emergency.

The storm brought New York City's transportation network, used by hundreds of thousands of people daily, to near-collapse.

Lafayette Field Airport shut down after wind gusted to 77 mph. Other airports in the region had lengthy delays and some canceled flights, including Newark, Philadelphia and Boston. That affected flights connecting to other airports across the nation.

Flooding and power problems virtually shut down New York's subway system for part of the day, as well as commuter trains running under the Hudson River from New Jersey, and delayed service to other suburbs. Wind-blown debris closed some bridges and high water closed parts of major expressways along the East and Hudson rivers.

"We literally had scuba divers taking people out of their cars on the FDR Drive," said Joe DePasco, a spokesman for New York City's transportation department.

People stranded in town found many hotels filled.

"The coastal flooding was caused by the on-shore wind coupled with extra-high tides. Wind gusted to 90 mph in Wildwood Crest in extreme southern New Jersey. New York's Central Park, partially protected by surrounding skyscrapers, had sustained wind at 35 mph during the afternoon with gusts in the 50s. One to 2 inches of rain had fallen along the coast.

The National Weather Service said Friday morning's high tide at Atlantic City, N.J., was about 4 feet above normal. Meteorologist Wayne Albright said: "People who have lived through probably the highest tides this century on the southern New Jersey coastline."

Inside the protection of New York Harbor, ferries had to stop because

Christmas tree stands firm

NEW YORK (AP) — Its branches drenched, hobbled and swayed in the wind and tearing through New York, but the trunk stood firm and the star and thousands of lights sparkled Friday on the Rockefeller Center Christmas tree.

"It's never blown over, and this is the 60th tree," said Jim Reed, a spokesman for the center. "It's put up by professional riggers who anchor it with four cables."

In two counties in West Virginia's mountainous Eastern Panhandle, only emergency vehicles were allowed on roads after up to 30 inches of snow fell. More snow was expected and adjoining western Maryland got 35 inches. Schools were closed a second day in nearly half of West Virginia and thousands lost phone and electrical service, officials said.

Gusts to 80 mph blew part of a church steeple onto the Ben Franklin Bridge linking Philadelphia and southern New Jersey, closing the span.

The Coast Guard rescued the eight crew members of a fishing vessel off Chatham, Mass., plucking four of them from 20-foot seas after the vessel sank.

Police boats and New Jersey National Guard trucks were used to evacuate residents of flooded sections of a half-dozen shore towns. State Police estimated evacuations at more than 3,000 statewide.

"We're evacuating the people we can reach, but we can't even get to some people because the water is so high," said Patrolman William Rain in Sea Bright.

New Jersey National Guard Spc. Ken Basco carried two-year-old Robert Galgulich from his Brigantine, N.J. home to a waiting National Guard truck Friday morning.

of high waves, halting travel to Staten Island and the Statue of Liberty. Windows were blown out of some skyscrapers, commodities markets closed early and some businesses sent employees home early because of the mounting commuting problems.

One woman was killed when a roof blew off a building in Jersey City, N.J., said Hudson County spokesman Jay Rosenfeld. The county courthouse was closed for fear its dome could blow off.

In Pennsylvania, at least 15 deaths Thursday were connected to the storm. As much as 37 inches of snow was reported in parts of the state.

Mayor says hunger, homelessness rising

WASHINGTON (AP) — A growing number of hungry and homeless Americans — including many children — had to be turned away by public agencies and private groups this year, the nation's mayors said Friday.

In releasing its annual report on hunger and homelessness, the U.S. Conference of Mayors said unemployment and its accompanying problems were to blame for the increased requests at a time of limited resources. It said the solution lay in creating jobs with salaries that keep pace with the cost of living.

"This report is really a chronicle of shame," said Boston Mayor Ray Flynn, past president of the conference. "The solution is going to cost money, the solution is going to require political will that has not existed. We need a clear agenda of jobs... and affordable housing."

Researchers found an 18 percent increase over the past year in requests for emergency food assistance, with children or their parents making up two of every three people seeking food.

City and private agencies turned down an average of 21 percent of the requests, up from 17 percent in 1991, the report said.

Resources available for food assistance rose only by 6 percent from 1991.

Requests for emergency shelter went up by 12 percent this year, and about 23 percent of those people had to be turned away. The rejections were up from 15 percent a year earlier. Seventy-two percent of the cities reported having to turn away homeless people due to a lack of resources.

The survey was based on estimates provided by 29 cities, all of which participate in the conference's Task Force on Hunger and Homelessness. The information covers a period from November 1991 through October 1992.

Only percentages were provided, because the cities based their estimates on figures gleaned from nonprofit agencies or community groups that keep only informal tallies on the people they serve, said researcher Laura Waxman.

Among the causes for homelessness, city officials listed unemployment, poverty, drug abuse, mental illness and a lack of services.

An estimated 55 percent of homeless people were single men, and 32 percent were families with children. Forty-one percent were drug abusers or alcoholics and 28 percent were mentally ill.

"People are growing tired of seeing the homeless," said Jim Scheibel, mayor of St. Paul, Minn., and task force chairman. "They want the problem to go away. The way to make the problem go away... is to address the problems in the report."

Networks adopt violence standards

WASHINGTON (AP) — ABC, CBS and NBC have agreed on standards governing television violence that could influence next fall's programming, a senator who helped arrange the deal said Friday.

The voluntary agreement resulted from a law sponsored by Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., that gave the networks an antitrust waiver so they could plan among themselves ways to control violence in TV entertainment programming.

"The networks have assured me you will see a difference," said Simon at a news conference that did not include any network representatives.

Simon said he was optimistic cable programmers would adopt similar standards.

He said the networks will be holding an industry-wide conference on violence next spring in Los Angeles that also will involve Hollywood studios, which produce most television drama.

According to the standards, depictions of violence:

- Should be relevant to the development of character or advancement of the plot.
- Must not be gratuitous or excessive.
- Should not be depicted as glamorous or a solution to human conflict.
- Should not be used to shock or stimulate the audience.
- May not show excessive gore, pain or physical suffering.
- Should be measured in intensity and frequency so the program as a whole is appropriate for home viewing.

• Must not show how to use harmful devices or weapons or give descriptions that would lead to imitation, or involve ingenious, unique or otherwise unfamiliar methods of inflicting pain.

• Should include the consequences to victims and perpetrators.

• Should be used with exceptional care when children are portrayed as victims.

• Should be eliminated from children's programming if it would be unduly frightening to them.

• Should only involve animals if needed for legitimate requirements of plot development.

• Must not be mixed with sex as erotic.

Judge accused of sex abuse says he's 'hugger'

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — A judge charged with sexually molesting eight women at a courthouse took the stand Friday, sobbing and describing himself as "a hugging type of person."

Chancery Court Judge David Lanier, 58, blames the allegations on disgruntled employees and political enemies.

Lanier is a former mayor of Dyersburg, and his family has been politically active in the town since the turn of the century.

Lanier is charged with violating the civil rights of eight women through sexual abuse. He was indicted in May on 11 charges, three of which are felonies punishable by up to 10 years in prison.

Shortly after beginning his testimony in federal court Friday, Lanier broke into quiet sobs while giving the names of his two daughters and his grandson.

He described himself as physically expressive and said it is common for workers to hug each other at his small-town courthouse 80 miles north of Memphis.

"It's a really friendly, courthouse," he said.

"And, he told the jury, 'I'm a hugging type of person.'"

Lanier's accusers said they were afraid of reporting Lanier because of his political power in the town of 16,000 residents.

The women were subpoenaed after an FBI investigation into allegations of civil rights violations against Lanier revealed accusations of molestation.

Lanier said he had no power that would keep the women from reporting him. He said he has many political enemies in positions of authority.

"There were enough people after me in Dyer County who would have listened to anybody," he said.

Lanier's family has been active in county politics since the early 1900s. He was mayor for 14 years, before being elected judge in 1982. He faces re-election in 1998.

Somalia

Shifting mood in streets of Mogadishu poses threat

The Washington Post

MOGADISHU, Somalia — In a courtyard full of mangled bodies, four young Marines circled, their rifles leveled and fingers tense against their safeties, aware of mortal danger.

The Marines, a corporal the senior man among them, had stumbled on an arms cache: stacks of boxed ammunition, a recoilless rifle, two anti-aircraft guns, two heavy machine guns and a howitzer.

A Marine had reported that shots had been fired from this building on the nearby U.S. Embassy, and these soldiers intended to confiscate the cache. But around the courtyard, a center for one of Somalia's warring militias, 30 or 40 Somali men in fatigues were ignoring the Marines' shouted orders to them.

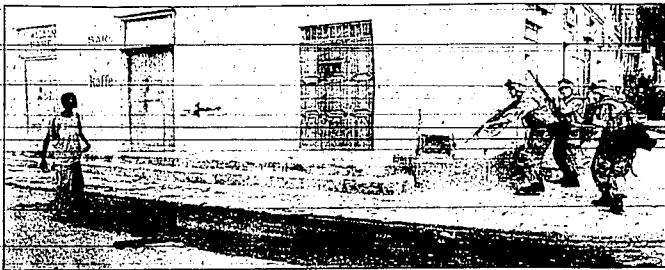

The standoff ended when the Marines' lieutenant radioed orders for them to withdraw, to the Americans' enormous frustration. On his second day for U.S. troops in Mogadishu, the incident dramatized how thinly stretched are the 1,760 troops of the initial deployment here, and how ambivalent is their relationship with Somalis.

After the Marines' bloodless landing and a day of grace Wednesday, they saw a more ominous face of the Somali capital Thursday.

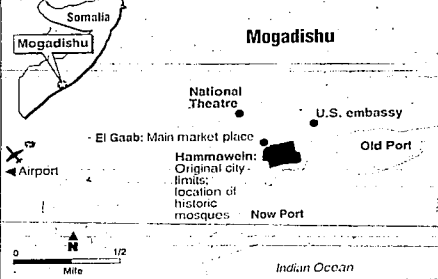

Gunfire subsided after the Marines' landing, but resumed sporadically. Wednesday night, sending the men of "fire teams" Tango-10 and Tango-11 on adrenaline-charged dashes around the city in search of snipers.

Follow Marines reported shots striking near them, but only one did sporadically. Wednesday night, the shots seemed to originate.

Cpl. Jeffrey Mann saw the man and his weapon through a red-on-

U.S. Marines draw their weapons on a Somali carrying a weapon, forcing him to lay it down, as the Marines advance further in the disputed area of the country's capital city.

black thermal sight, but decided not to fire. "I had my cross hairs on his grape (head)," Mann said, "but I don't know if he was the one firing."

two teams, in their Humvees, to a partly gutted six-story building a block from the main gate of the U.S. Embassy.

A young Marine had said he thought shots from the building had struck the sprawling embassy compound. When Mann reached the building a few minutes later, a howitzer was visible in a courtyard through a hole in the wall.

A crowd formed as the Marines tried to size up their position. Daje Bane, a Somali who emerged from the crowd, told the Marines the building was controlled by Osman Ato, a wealthy ally of warlord Mohamed-Furah-Aidood—with a substantial private army of his own. "You have to meet the boss who is responsible of those people," Bane said. "I am sure if we can talk with their boss, they will go out without any need of guns. There is no need of attack."

"We're not attacking," Mann replied tersely, uncertain what to do next. He radioed for instructions, but got none.

The character of the episode was now changing. The men crowding around the two Humvees grew more aggressive, surging closer and speaking in tones of challenge and disdain.

Lance Cpl. Robert Parrish, a gunner on one of the vehicles, swung his heavy gun toward the crowd and trained it on the nearest men. "Hey! Get back!" he yelled, to little effect. Each team left one man behind and sent two through the gate into the compound. Inside, the farther they walked, the more war material they saw and the more militiamen.

Mann, seeking more contraband, reached into the cab of a truck and pulled out a G-3 assault rifle. Its owner, outraged, stepped forward as if to challenge him. Cpl. Steve Tilley, covered Mann, pointing the muzzle of his rifle straight at the Somali's sternum from six feet away.

Another Somali gestured at the collection of weapons and supplies. "They are no threat to the U.S.," he said. "In the morning we will tow it to where we put the others."

Other men around the compound continued to move, picking-up or putting down boxes or nonchalantly walking to stand behind fuel drums.

The Marines' tension was multiplied when two photographers and a radio reporter, drawn by the crowd, rushed into the compound, halting in Parrish's field of fire.

Suddenly Parrish shouted: "Someone's just walked past the door carrying something!"

Reinforced by arrival of another Marine, Mann ducked back to his Humvee and got on the radio.

"We have a situation here that needs someone higher up," he told Lt. Mark Murphy, his platoon commander. "AK's (AK-47 assault rifles) and much ammo. The boss of the compound has requested to speak to someone up higher. He says he's USC (Aidood's United Somali Congress) but we don't know."

There was a pause, then a look of astonishment on Mann's face. "Do I copy right you want us to leave the area?" he asked. "We have armed personnel in the back of the compound."

"I don't care what you have," Murphy replied. "Get your vehicles and leave the area. Is that clear, over?"

"I heard rumors of peace talks tomorrow between the factions," Murphy said in an interview later. "If there was a big incident there today, would that be conducive to the peace process? Also, it put those guys in a vulnerable position when we couldn't quickly reinforce them."

Capt. Brian Beaudreault, the Golf company commander, said the Marines' "have got as much ground as we can possibly cover. As a battalion landing team our plate is as full as it can possibly get."

The Marines' work is complicated by an uneasy relationship with residents still sipping up the outsiders. The crowds Thursday seemed more aggressive than Wednesday's, and they sometimes took to jeering the Marines.

U.S. officials cool to U.N. leader's call for expanded military role

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.N. Secretary General Boutros Boutros-Ghali is asking the United States to keep its troops in Somalia until local wardens are disarmed and a police force is set up. U.S. officials said Friday.

The State Department tipped around the request, saying that Boutros-Ghali had an important role to play in the massive relief effort to the stricken east African country and that the military operation led by American troops needed to establish "a security environment" before food could be delivered to the starving nation.

But the department spokesman, Richard A. Boucher, also said the military commanders would determine the "appropriate measures" to carry out their mission and then turn the turbulent situation over to U.N. peacekeeping troops.

Privately, a U.S. official characterized the request as going far beyond the Security Council resolution that approved sending the force, which ultimately will include at least 28,000 U.S. troops, to Somalia.

The officials, speaking on the condition of anonymity, said Boutros-Ghali wanted the U.S. troops to stay until the feuding clans were disarmed, the drug trade suppressed and a police force established.

Boutros-Ghali made his request in a meeting Wednesday at the United Nations with Brenton Groves, who heads the State Department's task force for Somalia, and with Adm. Frank L. Bowman, director of political-military affairs for the Joint Chiefs of Staff, among other officials.

Somalia has been in a state of anarchy for nearly two years. President Bush, through his spokesman, Martin Fitzwater, has pledged to try to withdraw the U.S. troops by the time his term ends on Jan. 20. Pentagon officials have indicated, however, that at least some of the troops might be kept in Somalia several weeks longer.

In a letter Nov. 29 to the Security Council, Boutros-Ghali said any military operation must "ensure on a lasting basis that the current violence against the international relief effort is brought to an end." He said it would be necessary at least for the heavy weapons of organized factions "to be neutralized and brought under international control and for the irregular forces and gangs to be disarmed."

At the Pentagon, Marine Corps Lt. Gen. Martin Brindley seemed eager to discourage the notion that U.S. forces in Somalia might undertake a broader pacification effort.

"United States forces have their mission, which you are well-aware of, and I would defer you to the secretary general for a discussion of his views on that," said Brindley, the chief operations officer for the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

"Our mission has not changed," he told reporters. Meanwhile, Robert Oakley, a senior U.S. diplomat who was sent to Mogadishu, the Somali capital, has been meeting with competing clan leaders to try to persuade them to seek a political settlement.

Bush said Thursday that the United States was prepared to send more troops to Somalia if needed to ensure the safety of those already there, but that he did not anticipate they would stay there long.

"U.S. armed forces will remain in Somalia only as long as necessary to establish a secure environment for humanitarian relief operations," he said in a letter to "leaders of Congress.

Clan reportedly holds relief workers hostage

WASHINGTON (AP) — Humanitarian relief workers in the Somali port city of Kismayo were being held hostage Friday by a Somali clan, and negotiations were under way for their release, a senior Defense Department intelligence officer said.

Sen. Adm. Michael Cramer, the chief intelligence officer for the Joint Chiefs of Staff, told reporters at the Pentagon that "a small number" of relief agency workers were being held, apparently as part of a turf battle among Somali clans.

Cramer said he believed the workers were not American, but he declined to be more specific. He would not identify the relief agency they work for or specify the number of hostages.

"We can confirm independently that some hostages have been taken from remaining humanitarian organizations," he said. "The negotiations right now are under way for their release, so I don't want to give more details."

He said the negotiations are being conducted by the unidentified relief agency.

Cramer said hostage-taking is not uncommon in Somalia, where several major factions are vying for control of portions of the famine-ravaged country. He said a relief worker was taken hostage in the capital, Mogadishu, a few days before American Marines arrived this week, and then was released there on Thursday.

He said the American public should be prepared for the possibility of more hostage problems while U.S.

Marines and Army soldiers are in the country.

"We likely will see this kind of activity between the factions as one faction will take a hostage to try to gain a position on another," he said. "This could be expected to continue."

Cramer said the latest U.S. intelligence reports indicated that fighting between factions continued in Kismayo, a port city in the extreme south of Somalia. U.S. forces are scheduled to move into Kismayo later as part of their U.N.-authorized mission to establish safe overland routes for delivery of food to starving Somalis.

Cramer said that in Baidoa, at the center of Somalia's worst famine zone, about 130 miles west of Mogadishu, looting and fighting continued this week, and the security conditions there were poor. American forces plan to set up a base of operations in Baidoa within several days.

"The situation here is grim," Cramer said in reference to violence between factions.

Wave of hope sweeps camps

GENEVA (AP) — As many as 500,000 Somali refugees are so encouraged by the landing of U.S. Marines in Mogadishu that they are preparing to return home from Kenya, Ethiopia and Yemen, a U.N. relief official said Friday.

"People suddenly have a new sense of security and are already talking about wanting to go home," said Sylvia Fain, spokeswoman for the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees.

"Life in a camp is not really very wonderful," said Fain. "They're very very packed and people are living with pieces of plastic sheeting over their head. People want to go home as fast as they can."

UNHCR will wait until it has confirmed conditions are safe before it encourages the refugees to go home, she said. It will provide supplies and transportation if refugees decide they want to go earlier.

Many of the refugees in Kenya walked there all the way from Mogadishu, at least a 350-mile journey, she said.

Iran-Contra indictment under scrutiny

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Justice Department's original division will look into Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole's accusation that an Iran-Contra indictment was politically timed to wreck George Bush's re-election campaign, the department said Friday.

Attorney General William Barr decided to use the normal department procedure and rejected Dole's request for an independent counsel to investigate the indictment of former Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger on Oct. 30.

Also Friday, Dole's office said that the Iran-Contra prosecutor who obtained the indictment, James Brosnahan, has contributed $17,000 to Democratic candidates since 1984.

Meanwhile, records show that Dole has gotten $13,000 in campaign contributions since 1987 from the law firm representing Weinberger. The contributions are individual donations and money from the political action committee of the firm — Skadden, Arps, Slater, Mengler & Flom.

Dole staffers handed reporters a sheet listing Brosnahan's contributions to the presidential campaigns of Walter Mondale and Michael Dukakis, to Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, to Sen.-elect Diane Feinstein and to other Democrats.

Dole reiterated his demand that Iran-Contra prosecutor Lawrence Walsh should fire Brosnahan, which Walsh has rejected before.

"There is either impropriety or the appearance of impropriety and it ought to be investigated," Dole said of the campaign contributions by Brosnahan, who joined Walsh's office Oct. 15.

Walsh responded Friday by saying that "we think it is inappropriate for the Senate Republican leader to 'interfere' in a pending prosecution."

Dole defended the contributions his campaigns have collected from the Skadden, Arps political action committee and the firm's lawyers.

"I'm not part of a prosecuting team... I think there is a vast difference" from the contributions by Brosnahan, said Dole, who also urged President Bush to consider pardoning Weinberger.

A longtime Dole associate, Robert Lighthizer, is a partner in the Washington office of Skadden, Arps. The firm — one of the largest in the country — contributes primarily to Democrats through its political action committee.

Lighthizer was vice chairman of Dole's 1988 presidential campaign and he coordinated a group of Dole backers in the legal community. There were $8,000 in contributions to Dole's Senate campaign from Skadden, Arps lawyers and the firm's political action committee over the past year and a half, including $2,000 in September, Federal Election Commission records show.

The Skadden, Arps political action committee contributed more to Dole in 1991 and 1992 than to any other member of Congress.

Lighthizer was the Senate Finance Committee's staff director when Dole was chairman. He joined Skadden, Arps in 1985.

Dole said he hadn't discussed the Iran-Contra probe with Lighthizer or anyone else at Skadden, Arps.

Dole said that Lighthizer "is a friend of mine" and asked, "What's he got to do with it?" when a reporter brought up Lighthizer's role in Dole's 1988 presidential campaign.

Neither Robert Bennett nor Carl Rauh, the Skadden, Arps lawyers defending Weinberger, has contributed to the firm's political action committee, Bennett said last week.

"I didn't even know Bob Bennett was part of the Skadden, Arps firm until 10 days ago," said Dole.

First lady Barbara Bush places Presidential Medal of Freedom around the neck of entertainer Johnny Carson. President Bush watches during the White House ceremony Friday.

Bush bestows medals on 'American heroes'

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Bush read "a roll call of American heroes" Friday as he bestowed the Presidential Medal of Freedom on 10 Americans distinguished in the arts, sports, war and diplomacy.

Two recipients, singer Ella Fitzgerald and actress Audrey Hepburn, were unable to attend the East Room ceremony "by doctor's orders," Bush said.

Barbara Bush draped a benediction gold medal around the necks of the other notables after her husband spoke of their contributions to America and the world, and a military officer read formal citations.

The eight other honorees were: broadcaster David Brinkley, TV personality Johnny Carson, architect I.M. Pei, stock car driver Richard Lee Petty, diplomat Jarry W. Shlaudeman, violinist Isaac Stern, retired Gen. John W. Vessey, and author Elie Wiesel.

Bush said each had "made extraordinary contributions to our country."

"Each is a great American," said the president, reading his "roll call of American heroes." He said bestowing the honor was "one of the great privileges of being president."

Of Carson, Bush said, "With decency and style he's made America laugh and think."

Carson shook hands and chatted beforehand with Vice President Dan Quayle, often a target of the comedian's jokes.

The president called Vessey "the ultimate never-say-die soldier," the last four-star combat veteran of World War II to retire and his special emissary to find soldiers missing in action in Vietnam.

And he described Wiesel, a Nobel Peace Prize winner, as "another type of veteran of World War II who survived the Holocaust and still today keeps watch against the forces of hatred."

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, named Thursday by President-elect Clinton as his first Cabinet choice, for secretary of the treasury, attended the ceremony.

So did Gen. Colin L. Powell, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, who has been mentioned as a possible secretary of state.

without comment after being released to his attorney's custody.

Defense attorney Paul Lukas said he was considering an appeal based on what he said were prejudicial statements by prosecutors in closing arguments.

The jury foreman, Eric Ayen, said jurors believed Porter was guilty but initially had too many doubts to convict him. He said the jury's first vote was 8-4 to acquit Porter.

Ultimately, the decision hinged on Sara's credibility, he said.

Porter will be sentenced Jan. 28 on six counts of criminal sexual conduct. Each carries a maximum penalty of five years in prison and a $10,000 fine, but state guidelines recommend probation for a person with no previous convictions.

Prosecutor Richard Hodson said he didn't know whether he would ask for a stiffer sentence than recommended guidelines.

Return to Arizona for Wonder depends on star's 'availability'

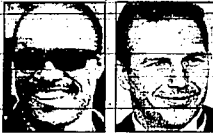

PHOENIX (AP) — Stevie Wonder boycotted Arizona because it didn't have a civil-rights holiday, and now that it will, some say the singer has an obligation to join the state's first Martin Luther King Day observances.

The holiday was approved in the November general election.

"We were told, 'If you pass the holiday, we're going to come back,'" said Rex Newsome of the Phoenix Equal Opportunity Department. "After it was passed, we called him and said, 'We're ready.'"

Organizers are planning to mark the holiday Jan. 15, which would have been the 64th birthday of the slain civil rights leader.

Wonder's booking agent, Melvin Clark, was non-committal. "The issue is availability, period," he said.

Costner plans Native American documentary

LA JUNTA, Colo. (AP) — Kevin Costner is planning a documentary that explores Indian culture across North America.

Costner starred in and directed the Academy Award-winning film "Dances With Wolves," which depicted a soldier's relationship with a Plains Indian tribe.

The documentary, to be called "500 Nations," will be styled after the popular 1970s miniseries "Roots," said Jan Goedert, director of Southeast Colorado Enterprise Development.

Costner will film part of the movie in Kiowa County, about 150 miles southeast of Denver, Goedert said Thursday.

Costner starred most recently in the movie "The Bodyguard," with singer/actress Whitney Houston.

two years ago. But the singer turned down a $500,000 offer, saying his home was worth twice that.

Months later, Anka learned that the county wanted to take his property to widen Tropicana Avenue.

Don Abraham, who handles Anka's real estate, said he had a cordial meeting with county officials this week.

"I suggested there was a friendly way to do this, that we were open to overtures," Abraham said. County appraisers will determine how much to offer Anka, who says his home is now worth more than $1.5 million.

Gary Leberg, head of real estate acquisitions for the county, said the land may be taken by condemnation if a price can't be worked out.

Griffin's face to appear on casino advertisement

PADUCAH, Ky. (AP) — Entertainer Merv Griffin will lend his name and likeness to promotions for Illinois-based casino boats that will begin plying the Ohio River next year.

The landing where the two casino boats will dock in Metropolis, Ill., will bear Griffin's name as well two restaurants: Merv's Celebrity Buffet and Merv's Bar & Grill.

Griffin also will appear in advertising for the Players Riverboat Casino, The Paducah Sun reported Thursday.

"It's a two-boat, multi-year deal that puts one of the world's most admired celebrities and businessmen at the forefront of our newest venture," said David Fishman, vice chairman of Players International.

The landing is scheduled to open in January, and the casinos are to open in March.

Riverboat gambling is illegal on the Kentucky side of the Ohio River.

All visits hospitalized kids, but doesn't speak

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Muhammad Ali didn't speak a word Friday as he moved from patient to patient at Children's Hospital of Oklahoma. But body language said it all.

The 50-year-old legendary boxer bent his hulking frame ever so slowly, kissing a young girl in a wheelchair, causing her to giggle.

Talking is difficult for Ali because he has Parkinson's disease, but children were treated to smiles and pictures of the former heavyweight champion.

And the youngsters did plenty of talking, greeting him with comments like, "Hi, champ" and "You still look pretty."

Parents said they were thankful for the visit—especially during the Christmas season.

"It's really nice of him, since he has his own problems, to give of his time," said Gail Breckle, whose 11-

Fergie takes responsibility for scandals

NEW YORK (AP) — The Duchess of York, the estranged wife of Britain's Prince Andrew, said in an interview broadcast Thursday she takes responsibility for the scandal surrounding her in the past year.

But the former Sarah Ferguson, known popularly as "Fergie," was unapologetic about photographs of her topless and smooching last summer with Texas businessman John Bryan at a villa on the French Riviera.

"What is done is done, and there is no good going back over it," she said in an interview with ABC News' "PrimeTime Live."

The interview was taped Dec. 2 before the announcement Wednesday that Prince Charles, the heir to the British throne, and his wife, Princess Diana, were separating.

Charles is Andrew's older brother.

The interview came amid tumultuous developments for the British royal family, including this Saturday's remarriage of divorced Princess Anne; a devastating fire at the family's Windsor Castle; and Queen Elizabeth II's subsequent offer to pay income taxes after taxpayers balked at the cost of restoring the Castle.

The Queen herself last month described 1992 as a horrible year.

The photographs of the Duchess of York and Bryan, taken by a Frenchman who crept through underbrush to the secluded villa, caused an uproar in Britain's tabloids—feeding rumors that the British royal family was disintegrating.

"And I of course brought it on myself, therefore I must be responsible for that," the duchess said.

She noted, however, that the pictures of her and Bryan were taken after her March separation from Prince Andrew. A Paris court ruled this week that the French photographer violated their privacy, and awarded her and Bryan $132,000 in damages.

The duchess declined to discuss her marriage problems in the interview.

"That's between Andrew and I. Andrew and I are best friends," she said.

Asked her general thoughts on marriage, she said: "One thing I might say is to make sure you spend a long time before you make your decision and really know your man."

Queen Mother to attend Anne's wedding

LONDON (AP) — Queen Mother Elizabeth will attend the wedding of her divorced granddaughter Princess Anne this weekend, but Princess Diana will stay away.

The statement from Clarence House, London home of the 92-year-old Queen Mother, contradicted earlier tabloid reports that she would snub the Saturday wedding in Scotland.

But Diana, whose separation from Anne's brother Prince Charles was announced Wednesday, will not be there, according to the news agency Press Association.

The Times of London reported Friday that Diana has sent a message of good wishes to Anne. The newspaper called it "evidence of a new and more detached role" for Diana.

Buckingham Palace refuses to comment of the guest list for the wedding of Anne and Royal Navy Cmdr. Tim Laurence. News media have been banned.

Anne, 42, the queen's only daughter and second eldest of her four children, and Mark Phillips were divorced in April after more than 2½ years separation. They married on Nov. 14, 1973.

Laurence, a 37-year-old bachelor, was an aide to the queen from 1986 to 1989.

The queen mother's hesitation about whether to make the long journey to northeast Scotland led to media speculation that she disapproved of Anne's remarriage.

Surviving Beatles will come together

NEW YORK (AP) — The three surviving members of the Beatles will get together for a 10-part television series about the group and may do "a little bit of music," Paul McCartney said Thursday.

The TV series will be an "anthology" of the group and will definitely include George Harrison and Ringo Starr, McCartney said at a news conference for Australian media announcing his plans to kick off a worldwide tour in Australia next year.

"There is a chance that we might actually do a little bit of music" for the series, McCartney said.

The Beatles broke up in 1970 and never reunited. John Lennon, who together with McCartney wrote most of the group's popular music, was murdered in New York in 1980.

"Rather than put a big pressure on us and say, 'the Beatles are reforming,' probably it will happen a bit more naturally and we'll get together for this (series) and that will just be the three of us probably," the ex-Beatle said.

McCartney, 50, didn't say when the TV series would begin production. It will be produced by the British Broadcasting Corp., said the cable television station New York 1.

School expels student with loaded gun

COEUR D'ALENE — A Coeur d'Alene student who brought a loaded gun to class has been expelled, but school officials wonder whether more firearms will start showing up.

The school board voted to expel the sophomore who brought a .38-caliber handgun to school Nov. 23 to give to another student. That second student, a resident of the Anchor House boys' home, apparently brought the pistol to the house before leaving for Idaho Falls for Thanksgiving vacation.

"With any student who would be involved with a weapon at school, our response is going to be expulsion," said Coeur d'Alene High School Principal John Brunley. "We're in a different era of school safety."

Uof I student attorney general resigns

MOSCOW — The attorney general for the University of Idaho student leaders has resigned and vows to try and change the school's policy so it protects homosexuals from discrimination.

Thomas Talbot, a law student from Boise, indicated that his work on the non-discriminatory language committee to change the UI policy caused Student Body President Richard Rock to decide against reappointing him. Talbot filed an appeal seeking reinstatement.

Rock replied that bias in any form, including sexual orientation, is abhorrent. He denied Talbot's work on the committee prompted him to seek applications for the attorney general's post.

After that statement, Talbot said he would resign at the end of the semester and waived his right to an appeal.

Officials to ask for more lead monitoring

COEUR D'ALENE — Public health officials will ask the federal government to extend its blood-lead level monitoring beyond the Bunker Hill Superfund site in Idaho's Silver Valley.

The 21-square-mile "box" around the old mining smelter is part of the Superfund cleanup process. Earlier tests showed local children had high lead levels in their blood, which can harm growth and mental processes.

The answer likely will be no unless the request is confined to a geographic area or age group to make it affordable, said Greg Thomas, regional representative with the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry.

Since 1987, the agency has monitored blood of all children between 9 months and 9 years.

Ada United Way $400,000 short of goal

BOISE — With six weeks and $400,000 to go, the Ada County United Way's annual fund-raising campaign may not meet its $3 million goal.

That could force agencies to cut services to the Boise-area's poor. Money raised by the United Way would be distributed to at least 24 Ada County social service agencies next year. For agencies that depend on the funding, falling short of the campaign goal could be disastrous.

United Way officials blame the economy and the election for much of the shortfall.

Experts: Improve telecommunications

BOISE — A 30-member committee of state agency heads and technology experts has issued recommendations for plugging Idaho into the high-tech telecommunications revolution.

Proposals from the Telecomm '92 panel are aimed at making Idaho more competitive in the global economy and enhancing business, education, medicine and government access, members said Thursday.

"We tried to focus not on 'gee whiz' technology, but the end uses — how can telecommunications improve the lives of Idahoans," said project co-manager Dick Gardner, executive director of the Idaho Rural Development Council.

Boise shelter stops taking Canyon cats

NAMPA — The Idaho Humane Society says Canyon County is foisting thousands of cats on its Boise shelter and it has drawn the line on more stray felines.

"People were bringing in 20 to 30 cats a day from Canyon County. They were bringing them in by the boxful," society executive director Roger Schmitt said.

Schmitt halted the practice Dec. 1 and asked the Canyon County Animal Shelter to keep its cats. The society takes in about 6,000 cats every year and most are euthanized.

Parole board backs early release

BOISE (AP) — In the face of politicians supporting harsher prison terms, while opposing the tax increases to build more prisons, the members of the state parole commission on Friday tentatively endorsed early release of inmates to ease prison overcrowding.

"Speaking for myself, I don't think this commissioner is adverse to the proposal," Dan Sharp of Boise said after discussing the issue with the Board of Corrections.

But Sharp and his colleagues on the Commission for Pardons and Parole made it clear to the board that the early release plan it submits to lawmakers next month must include the commission in the determination of the inmates who will be eligible.

Sharp and Gary Shaming, who is the police chief in Emmett, also advised the board to try to get the judges and the sheriffs behind the plan if it wants any real chance of winning legislative approval.

Although the details of the early release proposal will be worked out between the board and commission in the coming weeks, aides to Gov. Cecil Andrus said the governor will include a credible early release proposal in his legislative agenda for the 1993 session.

Andrus, who has also been a strong supporter of mandatory minimum sentences that some corrections officials blame for contributing to the overcrowding problem, has made it clear he will not spend any additional cash on building new prison cells.

The state currently has just under 2,200 inmates in its prisons. Just over the population cap dictated in the mid-1980s by U.S. District Judge Harold Ryan. But there are also nearly 200 more state inmates being held in county jails until space becomes available in the prison system. The state will pay counties $3.2 million for housing those inmates this year, and without some relief the price tag will exceed $4.5 million in the next budget year.

The general outline of the release scheme would allow the board to declare an overcrowding emergency once the state inmate total hits somewhere between 95 percent and 100 percent capacity of the system and stays there for four weeks. At that point, the board would begin releasing previously screened inmates until the population was brought back under control.

The overcrowding emergency as defined in the bill has existed for the past several years with no relief in sight.

Despite the commission granting more and more pardons, the prison population continues climbing. Since March, the system received over 100 more inmates than it released and that fall's addition of a new cellblock at the main prison complex along with the opening of the women's prison at Pocatello is not expected to ease the inmate backlog.

"What's happening is the courts are just committing more people," Corrections Director Richard Vernon said. "I don't know if it's the population or what. But we're in a gridlock."

The barrage of get-tough-on-crime legislation that has won approval in Idaho in recent years is seen as the cause of overcrowding. Idaho now has the second longest average prison sentence in the nation but still spends only an average percentage of its budget on the prison system.

Vernon and Corrections Board Chairman Nick Miller called the early release plan a stopgap measure that will give the criminal justice sector up to 18 months to come up with a long-term solution.

But even in that short time frame, parole commission members expressed concern about the kinds of inmates who might be considered for early release.

Conservative senators blast Republican caucus

BOISE (AP) — A bitter split within the state Senate Republican caucus has exploded with two founding members of the chamber's Conservative Caucus claiming they were censured for helping challenge moderate incumbents.

Sens. Rex Furness of Rigby and Stan Hawkins of Ucon issued statements Thursday blasting the Senate GOP caucus for stripping them of their seniority in secret meetings last week.

Furness lost his chairmanship of the Health and Welfare Committee and was denied membership on the Senate Finance Committee. Hawkins said he was denied a chance to succeed Furness as Health and Welfare chairman.

At least three other senators reportedly supported by the conservative wing also lost standing, according to sources.

Freshman Sen. David Childers of Boise, who served four terms in the House, and returning Sen. Roger Madsen of Boise, who served a term in 1989 and 1990, were both in-line for the Health and Welfare chairmanship but passed over without even being consulted. And freshman Sen. Grant Ipsen of Boise was the only non-leader, non-chairman to be assigned to just two committees.

The division was obvious at the close of the organization session, but Furness and Hawkins refused to do anything more than hint at it a week ago.

Senators on both sides of the rift say it could jeopardize Republican chances of electing a governor in 1994, and it could prompt a move to ban secret party caucuses where many key decisions are made in the Legislature.

Republicans have not elected a governor since 1966 and winning the seat held by Democrats Cecil Andrus and John Evans since 1971 is the party's top goal over the next two years.

State Republican Chairman Phil Bait said the battle was unsettling, but he would not take sides. "I don't like to see factional disputes," he said.

Furness and Hawkins said they were disciplined for participating in PAC-5, a conservative political action committee that gave $8,770 to conservatives who lost GOP primary challenges of six Senate incumbents.

In an interview, Furness said the six winning senators acted as "prosecutors in a mock trial" during last week's Senate GOP caucus.

Sen. Jerry Thome of Nampa, one of the six incumbents targeted by PAC-5, said their standards of conservative purity prompted the action against Hawkins and Furness.

"They and Gary have made their own bed," Thome said.

Hawkins called the caucus action "cowardly abuse of power" and said such secret meetings ought to be outlawed.

"The people's demands this year for an end to secret abuse of power by their elected officials reached a deafening roar, but it obviously fell on deaf ears with a majority of the Republican Senate caucus," Hawkins said.

He said opening the caucuses may be the only way to resist the dark side of abusive power that makes incumbent re-election an altar on which they ruthlessly sacrifice the freedoms of my who stand in the way."

GOP Caucus Chairman David Kerrick of Caldwell maintained the pair gave up their posts voluntarily. But he refused to discuss details, citing the rule of secrecy governing the caucus.

Furness and Hawkins said their seniority would be restored only if they apologized and pledged to never again support challenges to incumbents.

"I could either forfeit my First Amendment rights to free speech and have my seat or I could get the hell kicked out of me," said Furness. "What kind of choice was that?"

Kerrick said the pair may be disciplined for violating the secrecy rule.

"This is a very, very serious breach," he said.

But Childers backed up Furness and Hawkins after reading their statements on Thursday.

Poor county looks to nuclear dump

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — For nearly half a century, mines on the Rainbow Plateau in San Juan County provided the uranium that fuels America's nuclear industry.

Now, the county's commissioners are thinking of taking it back.

On Monday, the three-member commission will hear the initial report on the county's bid for a temporary high-level nuclear repository that would hold tens of thousands of tons of deadly radioactive waste.

The commission last March voted 2-1 to accept an invitation — and a $100,000 grant — from the U.S. Nuclear Waste Negotiator to explore the feasibility of a Monitored Retrievable Storage, an above-ground facility for spent fuel rods from atomic power and weapons plants.

Opponents are convinced the hearing will be a formality and that the project will proceed despite their objections. Gene Stevenson, a Bluff geologist and organizer of the loose-knit anti-nuclear group Concerned Citizens of San Juan County, said the commissioners are being seduced by promises of potential millions for the state's poorest county.

For years, the spent rods have been kept in pools of water at reactor sites. But those pools are rapidly nearing capacity. In 1987, Congress created the negotiator's office to find a temporary storage site while the government continues efforts to build permanent repository somewhere deep underground.

The negotiator solicited every state, county and Indian reservation in the country. So far, according to office spokesman Vern Nelson, fewer than 20 have responded.

Just 11 — 10 Indian tribes and San Juan County — applied for grants to further the study process.

The government is willing to pay, and apparently pay big, for anyone offering a temporary home to the rods, which can remain lethally "hot" for centuries.

According to Nelson, payment could be virtually anything — federally funded roads, schools or a facility to train local residents in skills that could land them MRS-facility jobs — even millions in hard cash.

"All Congress said is that the agreement be reasonable," Nelson said. To Stevenson, the negotiations border on bribery. And he scoffs at the idea the repository would be temporary.

The American Indians living on the southeastern Utah portion of the tri-state Navajo Reservation, who are the majority of the county's residents as well as the poorest, also oppose the MRS.

Commissioner Mark Maryboy, a member of the Navajo Tribal Council, resisted the initial grant and said he will continue to fight the project. The tribal council has said it would oppose its placement on the reservation.

"There is a positive side, and that is that the whole project would generate a lot of revenue for community infrastructure, which is definitely needed on the reservation," Maryboy said. "But judging on past experience from the commission, the reservation wouldn't benefit anyway."

He said he believes Indians would get only menial jobs.

There is deeper, emotional opposition as well. Many Navajos have died over the years from lung cancer acquired working in southern Utah uranium mines. Congress passed the Radiation Exposure Compensation Act — offering survivors and victims's families an apology and $100,000 — partly with them in mind.

"We know about uranium," Maryboy said. "These are the fears we have. This would just bring these problems closer to home."

Further, the Navajo belief system requires a life in harmony with the land, which would be difficult with such a facility so near, he said.

Assembly releases committee assignments

CARSON CITY (AP) — Assembly Speaker Joe Dini has released a list of committee assignments in the lower house, taking a mid-term swipe at the Senate which has yet to spell out its committee lineup.

"The Assembly is organized and ready to go to work. Maybe that will nudge the Senate into some action," Dini said Thursday. The 1993 Legislature begins Jan. 18.

While the 11 Senate Republicans have met and chosen chairmen and leaders, they have not yet announced who will serve on committees. And the 10 Senate Democrats aren't expected to decide until next week on a minority leader.

Dini, D-Vernon, decides who will chair the Assembly committees, and who will serve on them. The chairman is listed first and the vice chairman is listed second on each committee.

Boise federal judge moves to senior status; 10 apply

BOISE (AP) — U.S. District Judge Harold Ryan plans to move to senior or semi-retired status at the end of this month and Rep. Larry LaRocco, D-Idaho, said he has received applications from 10 people to replace him.

Ryan, who has served as a federal judge at Boise for more than 10 years, officially will take senior status at the end of the year but said he won't be able to reduce his workload until a successor is nominated and approved.

That could take months, considering the backlog of new appointments by the administration of President-elect Clinton, but LaRocco said Friday he's trying to get the Idaho nomination considered quickly.

Edward Lodge is chief judge of the district and Ryan is the only other full-time district judge.

"We need to get this acted upon quickly," LaRocco said.

The nomination is up in the air, he said, because the Clinton transition team has not informed him of the process. LaRocco said he could submit just one nomination for the president to consider, or several.

LaRocco said he conferred Friday with Maurice Ellsworth, U.S. attorney for Idaho, a Republican who will be replaced by someone approved by the Democratic president, and met a few days ago with Ryan.

Both said a new judge needs to be appointed quickly so the district will not get behind in its work load, particularly the slate of criminal trials, LaRocco said.

Pickup strikes, kills Utah patrol trooper

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A Utah Highway Patrol trooper was struck and killed by a pickup truck Friday as he assisted two other motorists involved in a minor accident on Interstate 15, authorities said.

Joseph Brumet, 24, was hit by a pickup truck at 7:15 a.m. and died 90 minutes later at LDS Hospital, said UHP spokesman Gary Whitney.

The driver of the pickup fled on foot but was apprehended about an hour later and booked into the Salt Lake County Jail for investigation of automobile homicide, said Deputy Sheriff Jim Potter.

The chain of events began when Brumet arrived at about 2800 South on I-15 to look into an incident in which a southbound truck hauling a horse trailer lost a wheel that bounced across traffic and hit a northbound tractor-trailer rig.

Royal pair return to scene of honeymoon for banquet

EDINBURGH, Scotland (AP) — Two days after announcing their separation, Prince Charles and Princess Diana returned Friday to the royal yacht where they honeymooned to join 12 European leaders for a banquet held by the queen.

But Princess Diana reportedly will be alone again today, staying away from one of the few happy events of the royal family's year — the second marriage of Princess Anne.

Making their first joint appearance since the separation was announced Wednesday, Diana and Charles planned to join Queen Elizabeth II and her husband, Prince Philip, for the dinner on the Royal Yacht Britannia. Diana drew a place at the top table, beside French President Francois Mitterrand and two seats away from the queen, according to Buckingham Palace.

Charles was put at another table, opposite Prime Minister John Major. Charles and Diana cruised the Aegean and Ionian seas, and on through the Suez Canal, aboard Britannia during a two-week voyage following their wedding in 1981.

Announcing their separation on Wednesday, Prime Minister John Major said Charles, 44, and Diana, 31, had agreed to lead separate lives and carry out separate public engagements.

Major said they would occasionally attend national events together. They also plan to meet for a few family occasions, such as a Christmas carol program Sunday at their sons' school.

The queen visited Glasgow and Edinburgh on Friday, smile firmly in place and appearing to take no notice of the topic on everyone else's mind.

"I am very disappointed about the latest news," Mandy Struthers said as she waited for the monarch in Glasgow. "I feel Prince Charles and the princess should have stayed together out of a sense of duty more than anything else."

On Friday, duty took Charles to a meeting on the countryside in Dundee, and Anne opened an equestrian center in Fishersoss in central Scotland.

Princess Margaret, the queen's divorced sister, also was in the Scottish capital for the banquet. BBC radio said Prince Andrew chose to go ahead with a shooting party at the queen's Sandringham estate in England on Saturday, and would not attend.

Meanwhile, controversy continued about whether Diana should become queen if Charles is ever crowned king.

Dame Jill Knight, one of the Conservative grandees in the "House of Commons," suggested that Charles step aside so that his son William could succeed Elizabeth on the throne.

In cooperation with all the talk of tottering thrones and national crisis, author Jan Morris wrote in The Independent new paper that "the whole business of royalty is a fantasy and a monumental waste of energy."

"For God's sake, let us grow out of this debilitating nonsense once and for all, and get on with real life," Morris wrote.

India death toll exceeds 1,000 in religious violence

Paramilitary security forces behind barbed wire and sandbags guard the site in Ayodhya Friday where Hindu fundamentalists earlier this week destroyed an ancient Muslim mosque.

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Charred corpses were pulled out of the smoldering ruins of a Muslim slum Friday, where rampaging Hindus threw flaming, gasoline-soaked rags into homes and mosques.

At least three people died in Hindu-Muslim rioting that began in the mixed Seelampur district on Thursday, tapered off overnight and flared again Friday afternoon.

On the Hindu side of the district, black smoke curled from three-story apartment houses torched the night before by a mob of pistol-shooting Muslims, residents said.

More than 1,000 people have died in the religious violence that has convulsed India since Sunday, when Hindu zealots tore apart a 430-year-old mosque they believe was built on the birthplace of their god Rama.

By nightfall, the rioting was waning in Bombay, Calcutta and dozens of other cities and towns. Curfews imposed by army troops armed with shoot-on-sight authority, were cautiously being lifted for several hours.

A few miles from Seelampur, Prime Minister P.V. Narasimha Rao told reporters that the worst of the rioting was over. "It's a matter of days before we come back to normal," he said.

At India's largest mosque, about 10,000 troops stood guard, anticipating violence on the Islamic-sabbath-sunday, the Babri mosque in the northern city of Ayodhya was destroyed.

But only about 100 worshippers arrived for the main midday prayer at the Jama Masjid in New Delhi, which normally draws 25,000 to 30,000 people. The prayers ended peacefully.

Thousands stood on the rooftops of their homes in curfew-bound areas to hear the chief preacher appeal for communal harmony through the sharia's public address system.

Police said raids by Hindu and Muslim mobs in Seelampur left three people dead — were killed, but reporters saw charred corpses being pulled from the smoldering ruins in the Muslim section of the mixed district.

From his rooftop, Mohammed Saheb Sadikki watched Hindus throw burning rags into homes and mosques. He predicted more trouble after the nightfall.

"After tonight, you will see. There will be nothing there," said Sadikki, pointing to the destroyed buildings.

"There are organized groups trained to burn and to make us homeless. We have nothing to respond with. I'm searching my home and I can't even find a stick," said Sadikki, 39, who owns a small flooring business.

People whose homes were burned picked their way through streets cluttered with broken bricks, stones and glass, carrying suitcases or bundles wrapped in blankets on their heads as they fled to safer quarters.

Across the road, on the Hindu side, B.C. Tiwari said he was brushing his teeth Thursday night when a mob of Muslims screaming "Allahu Akbar," or "God is great," stormed down the street firing pistols.

"They fired on us and they fired on the police. We had nothing but sticks to defend ourselves," he said.

Of the two neighborhoods, the Muslim area appeared more damaged and to have suffered higher casualties. On both sides, temples and mosques appear to have been singled out for attack.

On each side, families clustered on the roofs, waiting for the next blow. Muslim residents accused police of taking part in the rampage and firing on unarmed people.

Wave of IRA bombings scares insurers

LONDON (AP) — Irish Republican Army bombs that have killed dozens and wounded hundreds in England have not budged the British from Northern Ireland.

But one big blast in London struck at the nation's financial heart by scaring insurers away from the city. Starting in January owners of the glass towers where London wheels and deals may have to absorb the entire loss if IRA bombers hit their property. The threat of more bombs and no insurance has stirred fears of unrelenting attacks that could bankrupt companies, prompt others to leave London and discourage away foreign investment.

Berliners ponder Cold War listening post

BERLIN (AP) — It's the highest point in Berlin, a mountain of rubble where the U.S. military built a top-secret listening post to monitor Warsaw Pact communications.

Berlin authorities are trying to figure out what to do with another leftover from the Cold War — a weird assemblage of domes, shredders, antennas and empty buildings on the Teufelsberg — German for Devil's Mountain.

"It always was an excursion area for Berliners, and the borough wants it to be a recreation area again," Volker Hassmer, Berlin's minister of civic development and environment, said during the first press tour of what once was the most secret military post in West Berlin.

"We've only had it now for two months," he said Thursday. "We want to decide very quickly, by early next year, and then either demolish it, or demolish part of it, or begin with new uses."

The former U.S. Army dining hall could be converted into a restaurant with fine views over the flat Berlin countryside. The windowless buildings could be used for an archive.

'We want to decide very quickly, by early next year, and then either demolish it, or demolish part of it, or begin with new uses.'

— Volker Hassmer, Berlin official

But what to do with a 372-foot antenna mast? Or three domes that hid top-secret radar and receiving antennas? Or a pair of closet-sized shredders — labeled "document disintegration system" — that fueled incinerators in the next room?

"Hearing protection required" says the sign on the door, leaving the imagination to ponder the roar as the machinery obliterated paper that emerged from technicians monitoring Warsaw Pact radio, translating it, transmitting it to Washington and destroying the evidence. The U.S. Army vacated Teufelsberg in October, removing most of the equipment during the night, and still says little about the installation other than the obvious: a top-secret listening post. Britain had part of the site for its own intelligence work.

For years, the U.S. military had about 6,000 soldiers and airmen in West Berlin. Now the figure is about 3,000, and the foreign military presence in the united German capital is expected to end in 1994 when Russian troops complete their withdrawal from eastern Germany.

Military bases are gradually being turned over to German civilian use, though the U.S. Army still has three big compounds, including housing, that are eyed hungrily in a city with a perpetual housing shortage.

Teufelsberg is in the middle of the Grunewald, 9,500 acres of forest, lakes and trails visited by hundreds of thousands of Berliners annually.

The 400-foot-high hill was built in the 1950s when West Berlin authorities realized there was too much rubble for existing dumps. It contains 875 million cubic feet of rubble, and is overgrown with birch trees and scrub.

Zaire president tightens grip on 27-year rule

KINSHASA, Zaire (AP) — President Mobutu Sese Seko suspended the transitional parliament Friday in his latest attempt to prolong his 27-year rule and put off a two-year promise of democracy.

Although Mobutu did not explicitly fire his arch-rival Prime Minister Etienne Tshisekedi, he said a senior civil servant would "coordinate" the day-to-day running of the government, at least temporarily.

Mobutu reiterated a demand that Tshisekedi name a new government. The High Council he suspended was to administer the nation until the country holds its first democratic elections.

Buana Kabue, leader of Zaire's Human Rights League, indicated the High Council likely would ignore Mobutu's announcement, made on state-run radio.

"We'll see what happens Monday when the High Council tries to convene," Kabue said in a telephone interview.

"If the military tries to stand in the way it could provoke the population and we might see trouble here."

MOSCOW (AP) — Russia's hard-line Congress escalated the power struggle in the Kremlin on Friday by moving to crush President Boris Yeltsin's drive for a nationwide referendum on new elections.

The action by the 1,041-member Congress, dominated by former Communists, narrowed Yeltsin's options in the political gridlock, the worst since the collapse of the Soviet Union. Yeltsin and the parliament speaker later agreed to start new talks Saturday on the stalemate.

Yeltsin, angered after the Congress rejected his nomination of reformist Yegor Gaidar as prime minister, said Thursday he could no longer work with the legislature. He proposed a referendum on whether to hold new parliamentary or presidential elections, or both.

Lawmakers voted 529-298, with 80 abstentions, to bar a public vote of confidence in any branch of government. The law also would prevent the disbanding of government bodies, such as the legislature, before their terms expire.

Yeltsin might still be able to hold the referendum if he proposes a different question that would alter the constitution as it relates to presidential powers.

The power struggle is over the pace of most procedural, he said he reiterated during the talks that he stands behind Gaidar.

"Right now, I'm not ready to present the Congress with a new candidate," Yeltsin told reporters. "Gaidar is part of the reform."

He knows what steps to take next. A new man would cost us time."

Yeltsin said he suggested a compromise allowing Gaidar to serve as acting prime minister at least until the next Congress session, in April. The law only allows him to appoint an acting premier for three months.

There was no word on whether hard-liners would accept the offer.

Yeltsin, elected in June 1991, would like a strong presidency to accelerate reform. The Congress, elected in March 1990, wants strong legislative controls over the president.

Surveys indicate widespread popular dissatisfaction with the hardships from Yeltsin's reforms, including an inflation rate of 2,000 percent and a 25 percent drop in production.

Sergei Stankevich, an adviser, said the president wanted a compromise under which he would change the date or the wording of the referendum. In return, he said, the Congress would have to change the terms of constitutional amendments passed this week.

Cautious approach for NATO

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — People in besieged Sarajevo are running short of food and a U.N. official said Friday they would be "bloody lucky" to even have bread and tea.

A humanitarian airlift to the capital's 400,000 residents was suspended Dec. 1 after shots were fired at a U.S. plane. United Nations officials say emergency food stocks are almost gone.

For a fifth day, the city was without electricity, water or telephone.

Fighting continued around the hills north of Sarajevo, but Bosnian forces were holding, recently captured positions on Zuc mountain despite heavy shelling by Serb rebels, the Bosnian army said.

NATO allies meeting in Brussels said they would only consider using force to end the bloodshed if they could act under a U.N. umbrella.

In Brussels, NATO Secretary General Manfred Woerner said at the close of a two-day meeting of defense ministers that "if the United Nations would turn to NATO (for a military intervention) we would not say 'no.'"

Some Western nations are considering using air power to enforce a U.N. ban on Serb war planes over Bosnia.

The Bosnian government's military headquarters said there had been 49 Serb flights over Bosnia in the past week, bringing the total to 250 flights in violation of the U.N. ban imposed two months ago.

In Belgrade, a high-ranking Russian official called on Yugoslavia to choose peace and cooperation with Bosnia instead of continuing a "bloody conflict without any foreseeable resolution."

Coming only 10 days before elections in Yugoslavia and Serbia, the appeal was the clearest international endorsement so far of candidates opposed to Slobodan Milosevic, Serbia's nationalist president.

At least 17,000 people have died in the fighting between Muslims, Serbs and Croats in Bosnia, and more than 100,000 are listed as missing, Muslims and Croats voted in February for independence from Serb-dominated Yugoslavia, provoking a rebellion by Bosnian Serbs.

In Geneva, Sadako Ogata, the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees, met Thursday with Muslim, Serb and Croat representatives to seek new assurances of safety for the airlift, spokeswoman Sylvana Foa said Friday.

"We're now hoping with our fingers crossed ... that we will be able to recommence the airlift on Tuesday," Foa told reporters in Geneva.

Bread has been the mainstay of Sarajevo's diet, and even that is running low. Officials said Thursday that the only functioning bakery was operating at just one-fifth of capacity.

"If they have bread and tea they will be bloody lucky," said Larry Hollingworth, chief logistics officer in Sarajevo for the UNHCR.

No food stocks were left in U.N. warehouses, he said. "Everything I've got, they've got. It goes within minutes."

Because of bad weather, the United Nations would only be able to fly in about eight planes a day, or 80 tons of food in all, he said. Sarajevo's minimum needs are 270 tons.

Aid also comes overland, but convoys have been hampered by dicey mountain roads and fighting along the routes.

Residents content with landfill fee

By H.R. Weikel
Times-News correspondent

JEROME — In spite of dissatisfaction over landfill fees in Twin Falls, Jerome County residents have accepted payment of a higher fee without much complaint.

Jerome residents will pay an $80 fee—double the amount previously levied—to support construction of a new landfill under new federal guidelines. Meanwhile, landfill fees also doubled to a minimum of $160 for businesses.

And while Jerome commissioners were swamped with questions at a recent hearing on property taxes and the fee, most residents said they were willing to pay.

“There were some who were angry, but most of them just had questions and didn’t really protest the landfill fee,” Commissioner Jerry Kidley said.

“They wanted to know how we arrived at the costs each property owner had to pay. We’re going to get those figures so everybody will know.”

“Additional meetings with residents wishing to discuss their taxes and the landfill fee are scheduled from 3 to 6 p.m. Monday and at 1:30 p.m. on Tuesday in the commissioners’ chambers.

Appointments should be made by calling the county clerk’s office at 324-8811. Copies of tax bills and other pertinent information should be brought to the meetings.

County Treasurer Mary Childers said there were errors on some tax bills caused by coding used in putting property parcels into the computer program.

“We want to hear from anybody who thinks their tax bills are incorrect,” she said.

Insurance department investigates agent Fay

TWIN FALLS — The state Department of Insurance is investigating Twin Falls insurance agent Gary Fay for an unspecified reason and a hearing has been scheduled for January.

Jean McNeil, public information officer for the Idaho attorney general’s office, said Friday she was advised by Department of Insurance employees that a complaint had been filed with the department.

Fay said Friday the investigation and hearing are simply routine procedures for the department when an insurance agent plans to leave the business.

“It’s not an unusual thing for these things to happen,” Fay said. The purpose is to make sure the general public and the insurance carriers have been treated properly, Fay said.

Fay said he is selling his share of Anderson-Blake-Fay Insurance. He said he relinquished his insurance license on Nov. 30 and has not sold insurance since.

He said the hearing is scheduled for Jan. 23.

“I have nothing to hide,” Fay said.

United Way ends campaign $107,000 short of goal

TWIN FALLS — United Way of Magic Valley ended its official campaign Thursday just over $107,000 short of its goal.

The campaign had pledges of $172,662 Friday. United Way spokeswoman Tammy Gooding said its goal was $280,000.

Some pledges come in after the deadline, however. The campaign raised $302,000 in pledges last year.

Andrus appoints Saxvik again to power planning council

BOISE — Robert Saxvik of Burley has been appointed to another three-year term on the Northwest Power Planning Council.

Gov. Cecil Andrus appointed Saxvik, 62, to the council along with Boise City Councilman Jay Webb. Webb succeeds Jim Goller, who retired.

The council is made up of one Democrat and one Republican from each of the Pacific Northwest states. The group is responsible for long-term planning of energy and national resource issues in the Columbia River basin.

Saxvik, the only Democrat elected to the Idaho Legislature from Cassia County since 1952, served three terms in the state Senate, ending in 1977. He later served as a legislative assistant to then-Gov. John Evans.

He’s a former owner of Burley radio station KBAR.

Faulty fireplace pipe causes damage to mobile home

BUHL — A fire caused by a faulty fireplace pipe did about $1,000 in damage to a mobile home south of here Friday.

According to a Twin Falls County Sheriff’s Department report, the fire in a mobile home owned by Valerie Lowman at 3841 North, 1400 East, damaged the fireplace area, but was contained before it spread to other rooms.

The pipe overheated and ignited wood and insulation, the report said. The Buhl Fire Department responded to the blaze.

Teacher’s union wants super-out

By Kirk Mitchell

SHOSHONE — The Shoshone Education Association is asking the School Board to fire Superintendent Eugene Emahiser for his “disparaging attitude towards staff and community.”

At a Dec. 3 SEA meeting, 28 of 32 association members voted to adopt a “no confidence” resolution against Emahiser. Two members voted against the action and two were absent from the meeting.

“Problems with Dr. Emahiser began when he arrived in the district,” Violet Eaton, association president, said in a Dec. 10 news release.

“Dr. Emahiser’s disparaging attitude towards staff and community impedes development of a professional atmosphere of mutual respect and trust,” an association news release says.

The association’s resolution and a petition requesting the “immediate removal” of Emahiser, who is also Lincoln Elementary School principal, will be given to district board members.

SEA membership includes 27 of the 32 teachers in the district and five support staff members.

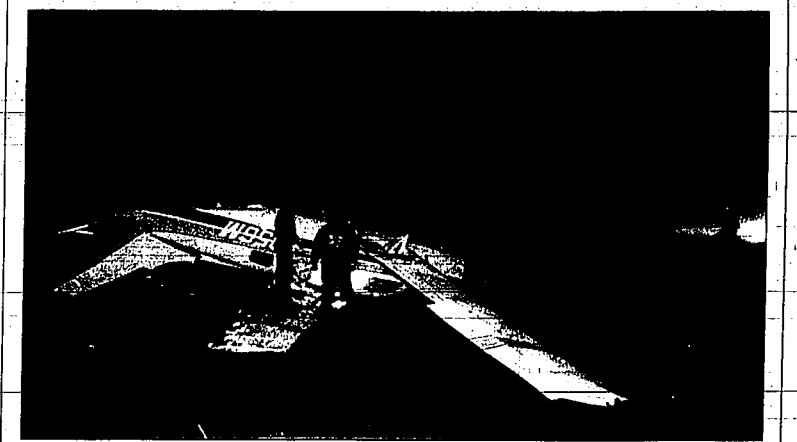

Emahiser, who began working in Shoshone this year, denied the allegations against him; which he said were based on innuendo and made-in-general-terms-only.

The action came without any teachers filing a grievance against him, he said. Eaton said, however, that at least two teachers have filed grievances against Emahiser.

“It’s not true in any shape or form,” he said. “I do the job very well.”

This is an unusual event and unique to Idaho,” Emahiser said. “It’s a power play. If the board caves in, the board caves in.”

The SEA isn’t even representative of the majority of teachers and support staff, he said. Ultimately, it is the opinions of the 450 children that he places most weight on, he said.

In the nighttime fog, searchers wait at the wreckage of an airplane that crashed east of the Twin Falls-Sun Valley Regional Airport Friday night.

Pilot survives crash

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A 46-year-old Ketchum man was counting his blessings Friday night after walking away from a plane crash south of Twin Falls.

David F. Wilson was less than a mile from the runway at the Twin Falls-Sun Valley Regional Airport when his six-passenger Piper Malibu plane went down in a field shortly before 7 p.m.

The plane left debris for well over 100 yards before flipping onto the cockpit, with one wing missing and the nose crumpled.

Sheriff’s deputies and emergency crews battled thick fog and imprecise emergency locator signals for two hours before someone heard Wilson yell for help. They found Wilson in a muddy field about three and one quarter miles south of town off of Eastland Drive.

“He was very lucky,” Deputy Dan Hall said while standing at the wreckage. The pilot taken by ambulance to Magic Valley Regional Medical Center. He received a few stitches for cuts on his face and was on his way home — by car this time — before 11 p.m., sheriff’s dispatcher Cal Patricia Barth said.

Details about the cause of the crash were sketchy Friday night. The airport radio tower first reported to police after the pilot radioed that his automatic tracking device was malfunctioning, Barth said.

On his way home from Florida, Wilson last left Greeley, Colo. and was on route to Friedman Memorial Airport in Hailey when weather conditions forced him to Twin Falls, air traffic manager Steve Storey said.

An electronic locator device indicated the plane was well east of its actual location, Hall said.

A woman living at 3300 North called to report seeing a flash to the northeast, but officials still had difficulty finding the aircraft in fog that limited visibility to 30 feet.

Judging by the plane’s path, it appeared to have hit a ditch at the end of the field before sliding and eventually tumbling to a stop.

Federal aviation officials were notified Friday night and will investigate the accident, Hall said.

Bureau refuses to investigate recall election

The Associated Press

KETCHUM — The Idaho Bureau of Investigation has refused to review possible voting irregularities in the Ketchum recall election, Blaine County Prosecutor Fritz Haemmerle says.

He requested the investigation last week because of allegations some voters may have been unqualified as they went to the polls Nov. 3.

Recalled over the firing of Police Chief Cal Newland were City Council members Ed Simon, Larry Young and Pam Kitzau.

“I have respect for the bureau’s decision,” Haemmerle said. “They’re a lot like me. It’s impossible for an investigative agency to investigate without any names of people of people who committed a crime.”

The agency will reconsider the issue once the county has exhausted the state procedures, he said.

Last week, Ketchum resident Jim Stelling gave County Clerk Mary Green the names of 12 Ketchum people who believes voted illegally. Some have homeowner’s exemptions, he said, but others do not live at the Ketchum addresses on their registration cards and may actually reside in Sun Valley or the county.

Green will contact the 12 to determine if they are qualified. Under Idaho law, illegal registration is a misdemeanor with penalties of up to $500 and six months in jail.

Haemmerle stressed any misconduct would not invalidate the outcome of the recall.

State reviews Hansen consent agreement for violations

The Associated Press

BOISE — Based on testimony in the federal bank fraud trial of former Idaho congressman George Hansen, the state is reviewing an agreement Hansen signed 22 months ago to determine if it has been violated.

Wayne Klein, chief of the Securities Bureau of the Idaho Department of Finance, said Friday the state will make its own investigation into whether Hansen violated the agreement by soliciting at least two $50,000 loans last year.

“We are reviewing the Hansen case,” Klein said. “We are now aware of the evidence that Hansen solicited additional investors after our injunction. We take it very seriously when someone has violated an injunction.”

Hansen and business associate John Scoresby of Idaho Falls were convicted Friday of 45 counts of bank fraud. The government charged Hansen and Scoresby with a check-kiting scheme that eventually left Bank of Commerce, Idaho Falls, holding $2.1 million in bad checks.

In February of 1991, Hansen and Scoresby signed a consent agreement which was filed with 7th District Court at Idaho Falls. In it, they admitted violations of state securities laws and agreed to cease these violations. The court issued a permanent injunction against Hansen and Scoresby.

Hansen’s bank fraud trial centered around his “loan program” in which he raised money for various projects with short-term loans to be repaid with proceeds from the projects.

The state contends that Hansen issued promissory notes for the loans. Under state laws they become securities if held as investments. Before such notes can be issued, Hansen must prepare statements disclosing exactly what the money is to be used for, interest, terms and when they are to be repaid.

As of Friday, Klein said Hansen has filed no such statements with the state Department of Finance.

The government produced two eastern Idaho residents, Clyde Haws and Keith Cornelison, who this week testified they made $50,000 loans to Hansen in 1991.

Prosecutor Assistant U.S. Attorney George Breitsamer told the jury that showed Hansen’s disrespect for the law because he earlier signed an agreement that he wouldn’t solicit any more loans unless he first met the state’s requirements.

John Ruff, Hansen’s attorney, said one of the loans was secured in February, a few days before Hansen signed the consent agreement, and the other wasn’t negotiated with Hansen personally, but with his New Continental Congress Foundation.

Klein, who testified in the trial and attended other sessions of it, said he didn’t personally hear the testimony from Haws and Cornelison.

“I was led to believe that one was in May, and the other in August. Both would have been after our injunction,” he said.

Klein said the injunction against Hansen says neither he nor his employees, associates or affiliates, directly or indirectly, may solicit loans without first

Property owner fights homeowner’s board, restrictions

By Florence Blanchard
Times-News correspondent

KETCHUM — Idaho property owners who live in subdivisions with restrictive covenants may need to help pass state laws to protect their property and constitutional rights from capricious homeowner boards, according to one Ketchum resident.

Bill McDorman said those covenants can pose a tightrope for residents — and he speaks from experience.

McDorman organized a recent meeting on the issue at the Old Ketchum Town Square.

McDorman said that there is currently little or no case law regarding these associations, and that they can use their powers to harass people and add further restriction after a property has been sold.

McDorman’s dispute in Elkhorn ended up in 5th District Court, which upheld the association board’s decision. The association also threatened to place a lien on McDorman’s house when he was late in settling his fines.

He said excessive restrictions approved by homeowner boards in other states include fines for keeping more than one fish in the house, or the front doorstep and adding solar collectors.

“A person’s property can be seized and sold for failure to pay fines or address code violations,” McDorman said. “This is against the U.S. Constitution,” McDorman said.

Marlene Lowry, manager of the Sun Valley Elkhorn Homeowners’ Association, said that she thought her board would be very open to listening to people.

“We want to know what concerns the property owners have,” she said.

McDorman presented several suggestions for improving the situation. Alternative

Celebrity stops astrologer from using name in ads

TWIN FALLS — Donna Eubank-Hennen can't use TV star Roseanne Barr Arnold's name in her Twin Falls advertisements anymore, but the nationally-known astrologer is determined not to close up shop on a service she says local folks have been looking for.

Hennen received a letter last week from Michael Roberts, attorney for Roseanne and Tom Arnold, asking that Hennen stop using Roseanne's name in ads for her Center for Artistic and Metaphysical Study, which Hennen opened in June after she moved to Twin Falls from Los Angeles.

She said she didn't know she wasn't supposed to use the star's name and has changed the ads.

But Hennen, who did astrology charts for Roseanne and Tom Arnold and several members of Roseanne's family during the late 1980s, and claims to have predicted Arnolds rise to fame, said "she's hurt by the celebrity's snub."

"I was a very big part of Roseanne's life for a long time," Hennen said. "I'm living here with my children now and frankly, I'm just trying to get by. I'm very hurt that she would do this to me."

But Roberts said in a phone interview Friday the letter he sent Hennen was nothing personal.

"Our interest is the same as it would be if it were anybody anywhere under any circumstance," Roberts said. "Roseanne and Tom and every celebrity, their name and likeness is their stock-in-trade. That is what we sell."

"You cannot use someone's name for advertising purposes without their consent. And ways for advertising," he explained to Hennen on the telephone, she's got her First Amendment rights, and we don't care what she says to anybody. We can't curtail anybody's right to do any of those things. When you take out someone's property, you interfere with our privacy rights and you can't do that for commercial purposes."

Robins said the Teller Hennen received was similar to many letters he sends every year to people using the Arnold name without permission. He said the Arnolds do not deny that Hennen did their astrology charts, and that no further action will be taken against Hennen.

"In my letter, I said that if she did these things (change the ads), we would forget about it," Robins said. "This is not the first time this type of thing has happened."

Hennen said she won't use Arnold's name again.

"I'm concerned that I'm in a small town now, and I'm trying to get started and I just want to protect my reputation. That's very important to me."

Movie proceeds benefit needy

The Times-News

JEROME — The Jerome Christmas Basket program will get a good shot in the arm this weekend at the Jerome Cinema.

The cinema is bringing back to the screen one of last summer's hit movies, "3 Ninjas."

Proceeds to the Saturday and Sunday shows will be donated, and moviegoers are asked to bring one or one non-perishable item of food. Those will be donated to the Jerome Basket program to help the needy. Show times will be 1 p.m.

and 3 p.m. both days.

Boy Scouts in the Jerome area will distribute the food to needy families in the area.

According to Daryl D. Dille, the Jerome Cinema manager, members of the Order of the Arrow, a scouting honor organization dedicated to service, will perform Indian dancing complete with costumes — for each movie performance and be at the door accepting donations for the Food Basket program.

"The Order of the Arrow," says Dille, "centers around service and Indian lore. We have some terrific youth in the area dedicated to service."

The basket program is chaired by Don Sherkert, Northside District executive for the Boy Scouts of America; and Rev. Baldwin Cannon of St. Paul's Lutheran Church and the Jerome Ministerial Association.

Each year Interstate Amusement, the parent company that owns the Jerome Cinema and the newly remodeled Twin Cinema 9, donates screen time and box office proceeds to the Jerome and Twin Falls area food basket program.

Language center produces Somali phrase guides

Knight-Ridder News Service

MONTEREY, Calif. — A week ago just nine people in the U.S. armed services could say "hello" — or anything else — in Somali.

Today, thanks to the military's language center in Monterey, thousands of U.S. soldiers in the war-ravaged nation carry hip-sized survival guides to such key phrases as "Don't shoot (me)," and "Where are the mine fields?"

It's all the result of an extraordinary effort from the Defense Language Institute, the military's premier language school, where directors have been working day and night since the first hint of U.S. involvement in Somalia to get language materials to soldiers on the ground.

Up at the Presidio of Monterey, commanders remember too well their mistakes in last year's war with Iraq, when it took the school five months to produce one Iraqi phrase book and videotape.

This time around, even though just a single student or staff member at DLI speaks Somali, the school managed to produce the first version of its "Surviving in Somalia" guides in one day. The Saudi Arabia, we hemmed and hawed and produced an absolutely beautiful product five months after our involvement there started," said Chief Warrant Officer Robert Higgins, who manages the Somali language project. "Our approach now is to get something into people's hands as quickly as possible. Is it pretty? Is it perfect? No, but it's a help."

The phrase books are only the beginning. Since Nov. 30, the institute has spent more than $130,000 to put Somali language courses on audio and video tapes, hire three native Somali language teachers and translators from a private firm in Washington, D.C., and design an intensive, 40-hour Somali language class.

On Sunday, DLI plans to ship 10,000 more Somali language phrase books to U.S. troops posted in the small African nation. The institute has orders from the Pentagon to spend whatever is needed to keep the language materials coming.

It hasn't been easy. Until this weekend, the school was playing the part of maverick, pushing the language guides through with no direct orders from their bosses at the Pentagon. Employees placed hundreds of calls to organizations as diverse as Stanford University, CBS News, National Geographic and half a dozen relief organizations, searching out materials on Somali language, history and culture.

Scrambling for any help they could get, the school's directors managed to find an infantryman posted at nearby Fort Ord who, somewhat miraculously, is one of the "nice people" in the U.S. military who speak the language of the famine-wracked country.

With two of his last hours before being deployed to the African nation, the Soldier, born in Somalia and raised in the United States, copied out a list of Somali phrases phonetically and then stuck around to produce audio and video tapes, DLI commanders said.

On Thursday, the three Somali language instructors flown in to DLI this week were studying the half-completed Somali language courses and making suggestions and improvements.

Then they sat in a room outfitted with huge cameras and television screens, part of a satellite-aided instructional skills course with others born in Somalia in a classroom in Washington, D.C.

In a warehouse next door, 2,000 audio tapes stood ready, packed for Marine units to take when they leave for Somalia this weekend.

"This is fun, it's real and this is why we're in this business," Higgins said. "I'm telling you, we're pumped. Customer service, this is what it's all about."

Nevada to cast electoral votes for Clinton

CARSON CITY (AP) — Nevada's four Democratic electors meet Monday to vote for President-elect Bill Clinton in an historic event that will have none of the frills expected in some other electoral voting around the nation.

Presidential electors Virginia Cain and Harvey Whittemore of Reno, Mike Berman of Las Vegas and Sandra Miller, wife of Gov. Bob Miller, will meet in the old Supreme Court chambers at the Nevada Capitol.

The signing of certificates will mark the final steps in Nevada's general election balloting last month that resulted in the state backing a Democratic presidential candidate for the first time since 1964, when Nevadaans supported Lyndon Johnson.

Dale Erpiquian, elections deputy to Secretary of State Cheryl Loe, said that certificate-signing should take only a few minutes. The documents then will be transmitted to the U.S. Senate for the official counting.

"That's it, that's their task for the day," Erpiquian said. "There will be no souvenirs, no lunches, their travel costs are their own. This is the way it's traditionally done in Nevada. It's a final, ceremonial duty."

The process is the same in other states, although there are add-ons in some states that have resulted in extra costs. There's no taxpayer cost in Nevada.

In New York, the taxpayer-supplied budget for the electors is $10,000. The 33 electors can take a taxi to lunch at a fancy French restaurant at a cost of about $1,500. They also get power privileges. Al Gore, at a cost of about $1,900.

The New York electors also are reimbursed for travel expenses, which in recent years they have been donating to charity.

Clinton received 189,148 votes, or 37 percent, to President Bush's 175,828 votes, or 35 percent, to the November balloting in Nevada. Independent Ross Perot drew 132,580 votes from Nevadaans, or 26 percent — one of the highest percentages in the nation. The rest of the votes went to splinter party hopefuls or to "None of these candidates."

Association provides Christmas dinners

TWIN FALLS — Two needy families living in Twin Falls County's west end will get Christmas dinner with all the trimmings, thanks to the Twin Falls County Sheriff's Association.

The association, a group made up of sheriff's office employees, will provide turkey dinners to people chosen by the South Central Community Action Agency, Cpl. Patricia Barbs said. Money for the project comes from a donation made by Twin Falls resident George Matthews, who died earlier this year.

The association provided dinners in Murtaugh and Twin Falls in Thanksgiving and has been giving the charity dinners for the past three or four years, Barbs said.

Dispute Resolution to keep cases out of the courts, limits on absentee directors, laws protecting the investor, and limiting limits on fines, mandatory signoffs on deeds, full disclosure of restrictions at time of sale, and legal fees for prevailing parties.

Homeowners who don't live in the subdivision often make decisions affecting those who do, McDerman said.

"About 75 percent of the people in our subdivision don't live here. They don't know what it's like, but their proxy votes set the rules."

Most of the residents agreed that proxy votes were a problem. Most supported a need to limit fines and to make the election of new members to homeowner-boards more democratic.

"We need to solicit a more representative board," said Joel Graff, an Elkhorn resident. "I see increasing restrictions in Elkhorn, and there should be more informed voting."

Steve Kessler, a local contractor, argued that the extent of the restrictions in the Elkhorn subdivision was actually decreasing his property values.

"I like to be nice here," she said. "But this is excessive."

Chuck Williamson, a property owner association manager, suggested that residents mobilize and use their powers.

"Go to the associations as a group," he said. "They'll have to listen."

"Not so easy," said resident Steve Deal. "I'd have to mobilize 200 people, and that's a difficult process."

About 20 local residents attended the meeting, along with State Sen. John Peavey, D-Carey, who said he hoped to determine if there was enough interest in developing some basic guidelines for homeowners associations in Idaho.

Peavey said he was concerned that subdivision residents were not allowed to know who filed a complaint against them.

"I believe in freedom of information," he said. "I also believe that people should have a say on who sets the rules. It sounds like this has gone too far. I don't think a subdivision's law should supercede city law."

Mini-Cassia area well on way to normal monthly precipitation

By Eric Goodell
Mini-Cassia News Service

BURLEY - While precipitation has been piling up as late in the Mini-Cassia area, officials know there is not more need to make up for the drought years.

Pomerele Ski Area reported 81 inches of snow on the top of Mount Harrison Friday. Last year, the mountain only had 89 inches at its peak in February.

A big storm Wednesday dumped two feet of snow in less than 24 hours.

"We really got stammed," ski area spokesman Jodi Burrows said.

The Burley Municipal Airport reported Friday afternoon that the area has received 85 inches of moisture so far this month. The average for the area for the entire month of December, according to Bill Galkin of the Kimberly Weather Station, is 1.09 inches.

The long-range forecast is for

...If we had a normal or above-normal snowpack and a spring like it was in 1991?

Hydraulic engineer Mike Beus of the Bureau of Reclamation on the possibility of Upper Snake River reservoirs filling up normal to below-normal precipitation, Galkin said.

Upper Snake River reservoirs are now 26 percent full, and there is a possibility they will fill, said hydraulic engineer Mike Beus of the Bureau of Reclamation.

"It could happen," Beus said. "If we had a normal or above-normal snowpack and a spring like it was in 1991."

At this point last year, the Upper Snake River Reservoir System was 51 percent full, he said.

Officials say "one key" to the reservoirs filling is having a good snowpack in Eastern Idaho and Western Wyoming. Snowfall figures in the area about a week ago looked grim, but have improved somewhat over the last few days, Beus said.

Currently, several watersheds in Eastern Idaho have about 80-90 percent of normal snowfall, he reported.

Because heavy snow months occur in December, January and February, those percentages can change dramatically, either for the better or worse, Beus said.

"If we didn't have any snow for three days, they would drop," Beus said.

City clears 1st funding hurdle

Mini-Cassia News Service

RUPERT - This city is one of 31 finalists statewide vying for federal funds that would pay for most of one phase of its two-part renovation project.

James Hawkins, director of the Idaho Department of Commerce, told Mayor W.F. "Bill" Whitton the city's preliminary application for $483,000 in funding has been accepted, Whitton said Thursday.

About one-third of the original applicants did not make the first cut, Whitton said. The city must submit a more detailed final application by early February to remain in the running for the funds.

City officials want to upgrade streets, sidewalks, curbs and gutters on Eighth Street in the first phase of the project. During the second phase, the city plans to improve the streets around City Square, refurbish downtown storefronts and install new street lights on Highway 2425.

The project will cost more than $900,000, including more than $100,000 in city funds and other matching funds.

Originally, the city applied for a Community Development Block Grant through the Low to Moderate Income National Objective program. CDBG funds are disbursed to states by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development and, in Idaho, administered by the state Commerce Department.

On the advice of a Department of Commerce official, the city reapplied in late November for CDBG funding through HUD's Slum and Blight National Objective. Whitton said it should be easier for the city to obtain these funds, he said.

Whitton met Friday with representatives from CH2M Hill, the city's Boise-based engineering consultant, and the City Leaders Institute, an urban planning

Mini-Cassia-United Way campaign falls short

Mini-Cassia News Service

BURLEY - The Mini-Cassia United Way fund-raising effort fell short this year, but the agency's campaign chairman still feels good about the results.

"Mini-Cassia should be proud of themselves," said Armando Soliz. "With the economic conditions ... people gave wholeheartedly."

The fund-raising campaign, which ended this week, raised about $6,000, or about $2,000 short of the agency's $8,000 goal. Throughout the Magic Valley, contributions are reported down.

Soliz said half of the donations in the Mini-Cassia area came from small businesses and individuals, a higher amount than usual. The remainder was paid by corporate sponsors, he said.

The Mini-Cassia area United Way is a member of the Magic Valley organization that provides funds to 19 member charities.

Soliz said he would work toward creating a separate United Way organization for the Mini-Cassia area.

"I think we would get a much better response if we had our own entity here," he said.

He said it is not too late for residents to make donations.

The suspected marijuana was sent to the state lab for testing and investigation into the incident is continuing, law officers say.

Congressman hopeful for wilderness solution

The Associated Press

Democratic Congressman Larry LaRocco hopes to find some kind of imaginative resolution to the debate over additional wilderness during a round of town meetings next week.

"I am looking for creative solutions from the people of Idaho," the lone Democrat in the state congressional delegation told reporters from his Washington office on Friday.

With sessions set in Coeur d'Alene, Lewiston, McCall and Boise, LaRocco said he will "stay until the last person has spoken. Everyone is welcome, and no one will be cut off."

He acknowledged differences between himself and other members of the delegation on underlying questions that must be answered in any wilderness bill and expressed optimism that some of those can be worked out during a meeting in mid-January.

It's time to revisit vision of Bethlehem Letters

It was 120 years ago that Phillips Brooks wrote "O Little Town of Bethlehem. He was fast becoming one of America's most popular preachers.

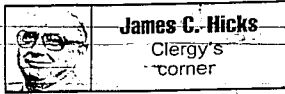

In 1866, Mr. Brooks had visited the Holy Land and had stood under the stars at Bethlehem on Christmas Eve and so wished he could bring the memory of Christ's birth with him to the boys and girls in his Sunday school. And from that desire came the words ...

"O Holy Child of Bethlehem, descend to us, we pray;
"Cast out our sin and enter in; be born in us today.

"We hear the Christmas angels, their great glad tidings tell;
"O come to, abide with us, our Lord Emmanuel."

May the vision of that song be born in our hearts and lives today. In this modern day and age, we find it is extremely difficult to grasp the true meaning of Christmas and its full significance. As we are crowded into many varied festivities of the hour, we still search for true love. And the second stanza goes like this ...

"For Christ is born of Mary; and gathered all above.

"While mortals sleep, the angels keep,
"Their watch of wondering love."
And I must say his love brings a godly style to our living and links us to timeless "eternity" as we live in a prodigious world where scars of affliction are upon all of us stained by our own waywardness.

We find ourselves emotionally vulnerable, so physically fragile and, many times, intellectually unstable. And yet, he knew that the attracting energy of his love would not only heal our wounds but join us together and into him in a harmonious experience that we could share out of his abundant supply.

The last part of the third stanza goes like this ...
"No ear may hear his coming; but in this world of sin,

"Where meek souls will receive him still,
"The dear Christ enters in."
God has given us eternal life through his son. And we can know the absolute evidence, the deliberate testimony of God's love toward us is that "God so loved he gave."

The privilege of boldness is that we firmly accept the gift of God's grace and walk in faith as we receive his pardon. Just as fortitude develops maturity and tried integrity produces confident joy of knowing Jesus Christ has been born in your heart and life.

Let's make room for him in our hearts, and permit Christ to enter in and live through us.

Reader defends letter

I feel that someone should come to the defense of Beverly Frazier in regard to her letter: "Are Mormons Christians?" I'll try to make this brief, which shall be brief.

When I moved to Salt Lake City in 1950, I didn't even know what LDS meant, so since they were neighbors, I decided to find out what they believed. I read everything I could get my hands on in regard to their beliefs and I found out that my good neighbors were even surprised. In other words, they evidently were kept in the dark.

To name just a very few of their teachings: God didn't create the world, he just put it in order; the birth of Christ was not a virgin birth; Joseph was the biological father; the Holy Trinity is false teaching; all other religions are false. I also found out that good people have never mentioned by these people. Now I ask you, how can you have Easter without Good Friday?

I could go on and on, but I said I'd be brief, but one last observation: Good-bye with our LDS friends, just very concerned.

ELIZABETH HERMAN
Buhl

Letter does make sense

No faithful Mormon can honestly believe the Bible and the Book of Mormon because their doctrines contradict one another.

In fact, the Book of Mormon, the Pearl of Great Price and the Doctrine and Covenants contradict each other. Secondly, if someone prayed about the truth of the Book of Mormon and received an answer that it was false, one could always say they weren't sincere enough. A person can't rely on prayer alone; you must also use your given intelligence and the facts.

The Mormon priesthood is unnecessary. In Old Testament times, the people had to offer sacrifices to be forgiven from sin and the priests of that day were the communicators between God and the people. Through the death and resurrection of Jesus, Christ is now our high priest (Hebrews 3:1), and he intercedes for us.

True Christians believe that only those who trust in Jesus Christ as their personal Lord and Savior will enter heaven to spend eternity with God. Mormons believe that everyone (except apostate Mormons and murderers) go to one of three degrees of heaven.

Is it wrong to fast someone that their house is on fire? Frazier was doubtful that she would let her 10-year-old son experience the joy we Christians share through worship and praise of our wonderful Lord.

Jesus loves all of us

To the man who left a message on my answering machine on Nov. 27: Since you did not leave your name or number, I will respond in print.

I do not have the power to condemn anyone to hell. The Bible says, "He who believes in him is not condemned, but he who does not believe is condemned already because he has not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God" (John 3:18). Not in the name of a church or a social prophet, but only in the name of Jesus.

If you saw a group of people following a leader who was heading for the edge of a cliff, would you think I shouldn't say anything because I might frighten them or hurt their feelings or would you shout, "Stop! You are dangerous!" My last letter was a shout of danger. To me, it is more "unloving" to see destruction ahead and keep your mouth shut.

To the man who left a message

Dec. 2: The message was mistakenly created, so I pray that you would call me back.

Finally, I want to say that Jesus loves all of you, and "his desire is that all men would be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth" (1 Timothy 2:4).

JANICE OAKES

Opinion vs. definition

I would like to respond to the religious letters published Nov. 28.

Janice Oakes asked, "Since when is telling the truth about an organization and its practices bashing them?" Is truth so painful that they feel threatened in some way?

William Haffner stated, "Misleading and teaching people things that are not true could be one of the greatest sins man has been plagued with."

Beverly Frazier stated her reasons why she believes Mormons are not Christians. Does she believe her representation of Mormon doctrine is accurate? I think so. Is it really? Not by a long shot. She is merely echoing some of the standard distortions advanced by anti-Mormon writers and lecturers.

It is quite simple to collect a lot of factual information on some religion and then by careful selection of the data, put together a fairly misleading (and therefore dishonest) report while still claiming the facts therein are true!

Whether you believe Mormons are Christians or not simply depends on your definition of what a Christian is. If your definition is one who believes Jesus is the Savior and that nobody, but nobody, will get to heaven without the approval of Jesus, then we are long about. She is merely echoing some of the standard distortions advanced by anti-Mormon writers and lecturers.

Are Christians Christian?

It has been interesting to read the comments concerning the question, "Are Mormons Christians?" A better question might be: Are any of us who profess to be Christians really Christians?

A Book of Mormon prophet asked a group of people wanting to become Christians whether they were ... willing to bear one another's burdens ... comfort those that stand in need of comfort, and to stand as witnesses of God at all times.

Another Book of Mormon prophet said to those wanting to take upon themselves the name of Christ, "... ye yourselves will succor to those that stand in need of your succor ... and ye will not suffer that the beggar putteth up his petition to you in vain."

Jesus said that the second commandment is to "... love thy neighbor as thyself." He also said, "... if any man will see thee at the law, and take away thy foot, let him have thy cloak also" and further, "... love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you ... and be concluded by challenging us to "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."

The question again: Are any of us professing to be Christians - Mormons, Catholics, Baptists, Lutherans, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, etc., truly Christians, in word and in deed?

Religious leaders support operation

All denominations back relief effort

By David Briggs
The Associated Press

From the Vietnam War to the Persian Gulf War, religious leaders have been among the strongest critics of U.S. military intervention. But Christian, Jewish and Muslim leaders agreed the decision to send troops to Somalia is a case where might makes right.

"Even while we are talking, people are starving," said Rabbi Alexander Schneider, president of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations. "We ought not to stand idly by while innocents are being slaughtered."

The widespread support among U.S. religious leaders contrasts with the mixed response two years ago to the war against Iraq. Before President Bush decided in February 1991 to escalate the Persian Gulf War, leaders of some of the nation's largest Protestant denominations and 15 Roman Catholic bishops called for a cease-fire and a fresh effort to find a diplomatic solution.

Now, a coalition of Christian, Muslim and Jewish leaders earlier this month appealed Bush for a larger American role in Somalia, including military intervention if necessary to ensure the delivery of relief supplies that had been routinely looted by armed bands.

Some 300,000 people have died of starvation, disease or warfare in two years of clan conflict. U.N. officials estimate, and hundreds of thousands more are at risk of starvation, especially in the interior.

The emergency food airlift to Mogadishu resumed Wednesday, hours after 1,700 Marines went ashore and seized the airport and seaport, the first steps in the unprecedented, U.N.-sponsored campaign to deliver aid through armed force.

"While we are generally reluctant to support intervention with military force, we are persuaded that the scope of the humanitarian disaster affecting millions of innocent people in Somalia justifies these limited steps to halt the loss of innocent human life," said Archbishop John Roach, chairman of the International Policy Committee of the United States Catholic Conference.

The general secretary of the National Council of Churches also called the intervention urgent and necessary.

"We recognize there could be violence, but as Christmas approaches we pray that this will be an example of how swords are beaten into plowshares," the Rev. Joan Brown Campbell said.

For some church leaders, the U.S. military intervention didn't come fast enough.

"It should have been done a long time ago, and it should have been done in Liberia," said the Rev. Amos Brown, chairman of the Civil Rights Commission of the National Baptist Convention U.S.A. Inc.

"We need to slow the same kind of concern we show for Somalia as we do for Poland, as we do for Israel, and even for Russia," said the official of the nation's largest black church. "We just throw peanuts to Africa."

The president of the Islamic Society of North America is concerned the United States might be tempted to go beyond its humanitarian mandate to establish a government favorable to U.S. interests in the predominantly Muslim nation.

"If past history is a guide, it might lead to that," said Syed Imtiaz Ahmad. But Ahmad said he still supports the military intervention to provide food to starving Somalis.

"According to Islam, the use of force is always justified for the collective good of the people," Ahmad said. "The basic criterion is that this force is used so that the world can become better."

People are being hurt — and fleeing — by divisions in Christianity

If a church has to break apart over an issue, my preference would be that the schism be caused by a theological question.

The divinity of Christ would be such an issue, something that people could argue about for an evening and then have fudge, bars and decaf and go home feeling both righteous — and loved.

O the Trinity. Now there's a theological question that could keep a congregation going for years, whether it's true or if it's important to believe in a God with three distinct functions or persons — whatever, the theologians say.

Once heard a preacher explain to a class of seventh-graders that the Trinity is like a tricycle. The vehicle, he said, has three distinct wheels and can't function with one wheel missing. This earthbound illustration does take God. But such is the difficulty of understanding the concept that preachers, like anyone else, are known to stoop low to get a point across.

Yes, these theological arguments are fulfilling, even inspiring to people who are bathed in the doctrines of the church. The tradition in Christendom is that theology — and nothing else — will be allowed to split the church and send disciples spilling out of the inner sanctuary.

Clark Morpew

But have you noticed that today's schism-producing issues are not about theology? Rather, they're about people. The questions today are whether the church will tolerate people who have abortions, participate in homosexual activity or openly admit they are women.

These questions bring denominational fissures down to a more personal and, therefore, a more emotional level.

When a denomination says it won't ordain women, for instance, that makes some women very angry. They fume for a while, organize protests and ask embarrassing questions. Sometimes, they walk away and never look back.

But if the opposite happens, if the church decides to ordain women, then another group starts to fume. When you're dealing with people — issues, there is always some group getting out of whack and angry.

Right now, the Church of England is in turmoil over the ordination of women. In a tight vote, church officials decided they would break a 2,000-year tradition and ordain women. Reputedly, there are 100 women in England who are theologically trained, qualified for ordination and willing to take the plunge into the priesthood. They are jubilant.

But jubilation in these disputes simply means there is another group mad with rage. In this case, the raging people are traditional bishops and priests, also a group of about 1,000, who are threatening to leave Anglicanism to become part of the Catholic Church.

This makes Catholics happy, and the Vatican's Department of Ecumenical Relations says it will help these dissident Anglicans find a place in Catholicism. So much for building ecumenical relations.

The archbishop of Canterbury says he will ordain the first woman — The bishop of London says he will become a Catholic and pledge allegiance to Rome rather than the queen of England, who is believed to be the most wealthy head of any church in the world.

Well, you can see what a mess these people schisms can become. The problem is that we're talking about flesh-and-blood humans who believe they have rights, even within the church.

The old theological schisms were about disembodied ideas that involved no people except the theologians involved in the argument. And while serious, those people were having fun. I can't disagree.

Now, we have entire committees, in every major denomination, trying to decide if gay males and lesbians can be ordained, as if homosexuals had never served in the ordained ministry before. And they are debating this is-sure during a worldwide obsession with AIDS. Of course, none of these potential schisms is without theological implications, and some of the arguments posed by both sides are supported with biblical and doctrinal evidence.

But the difference now is that people are being hurt by the divisions in Christianity, and large pockets of people are giving up and fleeing from the church, as if from an enemy.

Ancient Jewish sect makes comeback ... in Iowa

LAMONT, Iowa (AP) - More than 10,000 miles from the Holyland, nearly 2,000 years after they were last heard from, an ancient Jewish sect is making a comeback, of sorts.

In Iowa, these new Essenes follow in the ascetic footsteps of the Essenes who are believed to have written the Dead Sea Scrolls. They have left jobs, friends and sometimes family to seek spiritual perfection on 240 acres in a small town a few miles from the Missouri border.

Like the ancient Essenes, the Iowa community of about 60 people has a leader called a teacher of righteousness. They share all property communally and follow a strict penal code that assesses penalties such as 30 days of lowered food rations for a public display of anger.

While scholars pore over the scrolls first uncovered in 1947 in caves east of Jerusalem near the ruins of Qumran on the Dead Sea, the Iowa Essenes are attempting to live life as the cult did two millenniums ago.

"The Essenes of old were separate from society. We believe that's the only way we can achieve our purposes, to come out of society so we can save the purity of our own society," said Julie Holtz, 28.

The Essenes arose in the 2nd century B.C., a group of largely celibate males who practiced an austere, contemplative life preparing for the Messiah.

The Essenes are tied to the scrolls because one of their communities was located near Qumran and historical accounts of the sect's practices and some of the community rules found in the scrolls are similar.

The Iowa group got its start about a decade ago when a former minister named Ron Livingston and five others could no longer stand the gulf between what was preached on Sunday and how church members lived their lives.

They left the local Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and formed their own pastoral group. By 1987, they had bought some land, and soon families began moving on to it.

It was little more than a year ago that community members first began calling themselves Essenes. Even before they knew of the scrolls, they were already following Essene practices such as morning and evening prayers, a similar priesthood structure and holding all things in common.

Today, they treat the published Dead Sea Scrolls as scripture, and give adult and child education classes in them.

Their sabbath falls on Wednesdays, following the solar calendar used by the Essenes, according to Livingston, the community's teacher of righteousness who now goes by the name "Grampa."

There are major differences with scholarly depictions of the Essenes - the Iowa group holds Christian beliefs and emphasizes families. But Grampa, acting as communal prophet, teaches that Jesus was an Essene, and the ancient Essenes gave up celibacy at the birth of Mary.

Unshaven and dressed in overalls and a patchwork of other simple clothing, many of the group members look like aging hippies. Even families with four children live in large one-room houses, many of them with thatched roofs.

There is no plumbing, electricity or running water in their wooded enclaves, nestled amid the rolling farmland of southern Iowa. Water for scrubbing clothes by hand, bathing and drinking is taken from a well, and in one of the two villages a single outhouse serves a half-dozen families.

Elderly rural farmers who can remember hardscrabble times express wonder that community members would voluntarily subject themselves to such a lifestyle, but the Essenes say the life has its benefits.

When he was a professional carpenter, Alma Halley, 37, said he used to dream of a time when he would only have to work 40 hours a week. Now he spends three or four hours a day on community work crews, and spends much of the rest of the time with his wife and four children.

Nine out of 10 car crashes would be avoided if drivers could hit the brakes one second sooner. So contends a Mercedes-Benz executive.

Interesting. Would a car with hand brakes on the steering wheel help? If not, why not?

Pistons, Cavs head in opposite directions; Sonics dump Celtics

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. (AP) — Detroit won its fifth straight game as Joe Dumars scored 28 points and Dennis Rodman grabbed 21 rebounds in a 107-103 victory that extended the Cleveland Cavaliers' losing streak to four Friday night.

Rodman, the NBA rebounding leader, has now had seven consecutive games with 20 or more rebounds since returning to the lineup from a suspension.

Brad Daugherty scored 24 points and Hot Rod Williams 19 for the Cavs, who led 60-54 early in the third quarter before getting scores for a 3-0 span.

The Pistons seized the opportunity, with Isiah Thomas scoring eight of his 21 points and Orlando Woolridge six, the Pistons went on a 21-6 spurt for a 75-66 lead with 3:56 left in the third quarter.

Cleveland closed to 100-97 in the final two minutes, but got no closer.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Danny Manning scored 29 points and Mark Jackson 26 as Los Angeles won the Spectrum for the first time, beating Philadelphia.

The Clippers' franchise first win in Philadelphia was Oct. 31, 1975, when they were the Buffalo Braves. The team then lost 23 straight at the Spectrum.

The 76ers have lost eight of nine games and fell to 2-8 at home this season.

ATLANTA (AP) — Kevin Willis scored seven of his 25 points in overtime, triggering Atlanta over Denver.

The Hawks, who won their third in a row, scored the first six points of the extra period. Willis threw in a hook shot over 7-foot Denver MVP and Dominique Wilkins added four more points for a 105-99 lead.

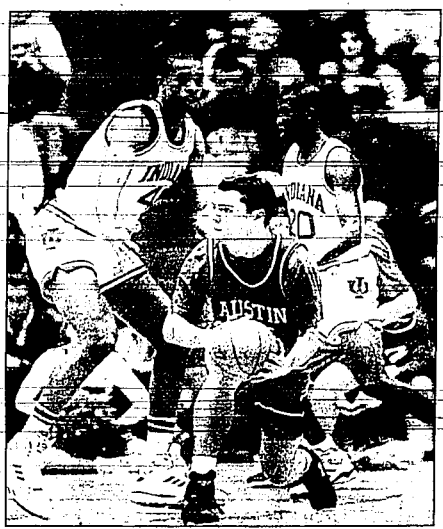

Willis, who also finished with 22 rebounds, hit another hook for a 107-105 lead and added a jumper from the corner for a 110-103 advantage with 1:20 left.

Wilkins led Atlanta with 33 points, the 11th game of the season he's scored more than 30 points.

Hoosiers dominate Governors; BYU dumps S. Utah, 108-62

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP) — Even Bob Knight was in a good mood after this one.

The Indiana University coach watched his fourth-ranked Hoosiers take an 18-point halftime lead and expand it to a 107-61 rout over Austin Peay on the first round of the Indiana Classic.

College basketball

"The best thing for us was sustaining play over 40 minutes," Knight said. "It is the first time we have done that since the first game against Murray State."

The Hoosiers (6-1) had won four of five since that 103-80 opening victory, but none by more than 10 points. Each time, Indiana built a big early lead only to watch its opponent come back.

"In the past what we've done is be satisfied with the lead and we have teams rally on us and what we do is fold," guard Greg Graham said. "We are trying to become a stronger mentally and physically."

One area where Indiana appeared mentally stronger was at the free throw line. The Hoosiers had shot 67 percent from the line in their first six games, but had misfired down the stretch in some instances.

On Friday, Indiana made 22 of 29 free throws for a respectable 76 percent. "I don't know why we are missing," Graham said. "All we can do now is concentrate and step up there and make them."

CINCINNATI (AP) — Erik Martin scored 23 points and led a pair of 20-2 runs that carried 19 Cincinnati to an 83-58 victory Friday night over Southeast Missouri State in the Delta Breaker Classic.

Cincinnati (2-0) used its trapping defense to make up for the loss of playmaker Nick Van Exel, sidelined by knee surgery. The Bearcats forced eight turnovers, while opening the game with a 20-2 run, then held the Indians (4-1) without a field goal for nearly seven minutes during an identical second-half burst.

Southeast Missouri, facing pressure defense for the first time this season, turned the ball over 30 times to set up 41 of Cincinnati's points.

BYU (3-1) took control immediately. The balanced attack overhauled a stellar performance from Southwestern Louisiana's Michael Allen, who scored 38 points, including eight of 17 from 3-point range.

Down by two points, the Magic worked the ball to O'Neal on two possessions in the final seconds. He went to the line with 6.5 seconds to play with a chance to tie, and he made one of two foul shots.

NHL owners tap 1st commissioner

The Washington Post

PALM BEACH, Fla. — The National Hockey League's Board of Governors, flush with excitement and at least temporary unity with Thursday's election of two franchisees, settled its leadership question Friday by appointing Gary Bettman as the league's first commissioner and sixth chief executive.

Bettman

The owners wrapped up their meetings at the Breakers Hotel a day early, deferring until January one of their bigger decisions, whether to shut down the league for the duration of the '94 Winter Olympics to allow NHL players to participate.

Bettman, 40, has been the NBA's senior vice president and general counsel since 1984. He will assume his new office on Feb. 1, 1993. He said his contract is for five years, and it's thought he will make about $1 million annually.

Gil Stein, 64, who has been president since John Ziegler resigned in June, had been the other candidate for the commissioner's job, but took himself out of the running, allowing Bettman to be voted in without a floor fight among the 24 owners. Stein said there had been pressure to not contest the office, and he will remain with the league as president until at least June and perhaps in some capacity thereafter.

"What we've done is form a management team," Los Angeles

Kings owner and board chairman Bruce McNall said. "Gary is a terrific commissioner and he is the boss."

Stein: "What I sensed was that if everybody who said they were voting for me were voting for me, I might win, but it would be a divided league."

Bettman is taking over a league in some flux. It wants to close the popularity gap between itself and the three other major sports. It has a new cable TV deal, but desperately wants more exposure. But to be exposed, it must be operating and the threat of a work stoppage looms large with the collective bargaining agreement set to expire on Sept. 15, 1993.

Financially, the league received a "big lift" in the view of Quebec Nordiques owner Marcel Aubut, who said the deal with Time Warner and Wayne Huizenga, founder of Blockbuster Entertainment, agreed to buy franchises in Anaheim, Calif., and Miami, respectively.

Those teams could be in action next season, but McNall said the league might expand further in the next few years.

At the same time, franchises such as the Hartford Whalers are struggling.

Details remain on NFL labor pact

NEW YORK (AP) — The NFL and its players still have some tightrope walking to do before they end pro football's five-year labor stalemate.

The last say, however, will be with Judge David Doty, giving both sides a reason to reach agreement rather than have Doty impose his own settlement.

While the league and the players now have a framework for an agreement that would bring unrestricted free agency to the NFL for the first time, they still must work out some major details. Negotiations resume Tuesday at Dallas, one day before the owners' meeting. "With the major differences that still exist, it could be a long session," Joe Browner, the NFL's vice president for communications, said Friday.

"This is not a done deal yet. The information given to the media Thursday was not the deal. Rather, it was the union's proposal mischaracterized by the players as the agreement. Both sides now know what it would take to make a deal. That includes compromises on both sides and the union hasn't been made yet."

Doty, who heard motions on the White, case a month ago, privately told both sides afterward that if he had to come up with a plan, it probably would make both sides unhappy. So negotiations have intensified in recent weeks.

Browner was disturbed by what he considered premature news of a settlement. "The distribution of the information by the union on Thursday was a gross breach of the confidentiality pact agreed to by the two sides," he said.

"I'm very hopeful about what happens in the next week," Doug Allen, the union's assistant executive director, said.

Overall, the chances of the deal falling through are "unfettered," says primary to Doty, who presided at the trial in Minneapolis. During the summer at which the NFL's retracted Plus B free agency system was thrown out by a jury. He also is hearing a lawsuit filed by Reggie White, of the Philadelphia Eagles seeking free agency for the 600 players whose contracts expire Feb. 1, 1993.

Bills look for break in slide with visiting Broncos

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. (AP) — Two straight losses have stunted the Buffalo Bills. It would seem like Saturday would be a good time for the Denver Broncos to travel to Rich Stadium, right?

Wrong, according to the Broncos' quarterback tag-team of Tommy Maddox and Shawn Moore.

"I think we are coming in there at a tough time," Maddox said. "I don't think Buffalo has lost two games in a row at home in a long time."

"I think we've caught them at a bad time," Moore said. "They need a victory."

The other problem for the Broncos is that they're not playing well, either. Three straight losses — the last two in the fourth quarter and overtime — have dimmed the playoff prospects for the Broncos (7-6).

"If we were on a winning streak, (the Bills' problems) might be an advantage, but we're both struggling, both looking for ways to figure out how to win," Denver coach Dan Reeves said. "We have to eliminate our mistakes to have a chance."

That won't be easy. With John Elway expected to miss his fourth straight game with a shoulder injury, the Broncos again are expected to use Maddox and Moore, both in their first NFL seasons.

Maddox threw for three touchdowns in last week's 31-27 loss to the Dallas Cowboys, but he also had four interceptions. Alternating plays with Maddox, Moore didn't throw any touchdowns or interceptions.

"I think the quarterbacks did a good job," Reeves said. "Unfortunately we turned the ball over a number of times, which you can't do, and that's what causes problems."

Floyd survives shaky early round for lead

DORADO BEACH, Puerto Rico (AP) — Ray Floyd overcame a couple of errant shots with spectacular putting to take a two-shot lead Friday in the opening round of the $1 million, season-ending Senior Tour Championship.

Television technicians were not as fortunate.

Floyd was unable to overcome the effects of a massive storm battering the east coast of the United States and a power failure at the Dorado Beach course.

As a result, the scheduled national television coverage of the event was canceled — at least for one day.

ABC officials hoped to have the problems corrected in time for the weekend telecast.

While the TV people struggled unsuccessfully with the two problems which affected satellite transmission, Floyd was rising above his two brushes with adversity.

The putter did it. "I made everything I needed to make — and a few more — on the hole after a 7-under-par 65 that included 10 one-putts."

With two rounds to go in the chase for a $150,000 first prize, George Archer, Don Bies and Dale Douglass shared a lead at 67.

Archer hit 17 greens in regulation and played without a bogey. Douglass spiced his round with a 30-foot eagle putt on the 10th hole and Bies moved up with a 31 on the back nine.

DeWitt Weaver, Jim Colbert and Gibby Gilbert were another stroke back at 68.

Gilbert, who opened the 1991 edition of this event with an eagle-two on the first hole, repeated the performance this year, holing out a 90-yard sand wedge shot.

Lee Trevino, playing with a damaged thumb that will require surgery next Tuesday, had a 2-under-par 69 that left him vulnerable to being overtaken in the race for the money-winning title.

"At least, he's vulnerable to Jim Colbert."

Trevino leads with $847,752. Colbert, who missed out to have a chance of overtaking him, is second at $724,518.

Coe-Jones puts defending champ out of tournament

WAIKOLOA, Hawaii (AP) — Dawn Coe-Jones needed an extra hole to eliminate defending champ Deb Richard in Friday's quarterfinal round of the LPGA Match Play Championship.

After Richard made an 8-foot putt to save par on No. 18 and force sudden death, Coe-Jones hit a 6-iron on her second shot to the back rough about 12 feet from the pin.

She missed a birdie by a half-inch, then tapped in for par. Richard missed a 5-footer for par.

Coe-Jones said she was lucky to win. "I didn't make any putts. The holes I won, she gave them to me," Coe-Jones said. "Maybe I'm saying a putts, I hope."

Coe-Jones will play Cindy Rarick, a 2 and 1 winner over Sherri Steinhilber.

Rarick, resident pro at the host Waikoloa Beach Golf Club, jumped to a three-hole lead after seven, and extended it to eight after 13 when Steinhilber missed a put-for-par.

Steinhilber pulled within two when Rarick conceded the 15th after hitting her third shot into a bunker. Steinhilber lost when she missed chip for birdie on No. 17.

Rarick said she's starting to feel the home-course advantage she earlier denied existed. "I'm starting to feel a lot better here," she said. "In the morning I missed a lot of putts on the back nine. I kept those in mind when I played Sherri this afternoon and I made them."

The other semifinal pits Beth Daniel against Dana Lofland. Daniel was a 1-up winner over Brandi Burton. The two were even until No. 17, when Daniel made par after missing a 25-foot birdie attempt and Burton three-putted for bogey.

"I'm a better player in match play. In match play, you do what you need to do," Daniel said. "There's less pressure for me. The player you're playing dictates how you play the course."

Lofland was a 1-up winner over Jane Carter. Lofland won No. 2, gave it back when she three-putted No. 9, and went back ahead by two when she made a 15-foot putt on 13.

Irish remember Krause

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) — Former Notre Dame athletic director Edward "Moose" Krause was remembered Friday as a man with great foresight who helped bring glory to Fighting Irish teams for three decades until his retirement in 1970.

Krause was found dead Friday morning in his South Bend home, apparently having died in his sleep. He was 79.

"I think the true legend of Notre Dame was just this man," said Gerry Faust, a longtime friend and Notre Dame football coach from 1981-1985. "They talk about Gipper, Rockne, the Four Horsemen, but I think he was the one who really cared for his players, he cared for the university, and always treated me first class."

"There is not a person who loved the university more," Faust said. "He was a best friend. It just brought tears to my eyes."

John Heisler, sports information director, said Krause's death shocked everyone. He did not believe Krause had any serious health problems.

"We had our athletic department Christmas party last night, and he was there," Heisler said. "Krause's death came at the same week that former Notre Dame football coach Hugh Devore died
