Senate

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Senate Democrats, trying to head off a congressional backlash that could weaken the week-old Clinton administration, offered a compromise Thursday for suspending the military's ban on homosexuals.

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., and Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, rushed the Senate proposal to the White House late Thursday and appeared close to an agreement with Clinton after a two-hour meeting.

"We made good progress," Mitchell told reporters.

White House Press Secretary Dee Dee Myers said Clinton expected to make an announcement today, but she gave no indication of what he would say.

She said both Clinton and Nunn, chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee and the most influential opponent of lifting the gay ban, wanted to go over some

SAN JOSE, Calif. — The homosexual sailor ordered back in the Navy by a judge says he's saddened by the "openly hateful" reaction of opponents to President Clinton's plan.

"I feel like it's a Republican Convention all over again," Petty Officer Keith Meinhold said Wednesday. "But change is inevitable, he said. "It's going to happen. Gays and lesbians are going to be allowed to serve."

final points overnight and would talk again today. "They're close," she said. It was not known what differences remained.

Asked if there was no agreement between them and the president, Nunn said only, "That's all I have to say about tonight."

Military views - A2, A3

The White House negotiations came as a federal court ruling in Los Angeles gave Clinton strong ammunition to press for ending the ban entirely.

Mitchell said news of the Los Angeles decision was brought up midway through the White House meeting, Mitchell said he wanted to read the ruling before commenting. Press Secretary Myers said the decision had no bearing on Clinton's decision.

Myers said the final loose ends dealt with how to treat homosexuals in the military during the six-month interim before a final executive order was issued.

The congressional proposal closely tracks Clinton's plan for a six-month interim period during which the Pentagon would stop recruiters from asking about sexual preference and halt the ouster of homosexuals in uniform.

Shoshone suspends superintendent

By Kirk Mitchell
Times-News writer

SHOSHONE — School Board members have suspended Superintendent Eugene Emahiser for what the administrator calls petty allegations.

The School Board on Thursday morning held a special meeting and voted to suspend Emahiser with pay pending a 6 p.m. hearing Feb. 8 at Lincoln Elementary School.

"He's had some allegations made against him, and he is suspended until the hearing," board member Susan Bryant said. "This is his opportunity to respond to the allegations." She declined to elaborate.

The hearing will take place in an executive session, meaning that it will be closed to the public, Bryant said. Any decisions about Emahiser's status must be made in public, according to Idaho law.

But Emahiser said he wants the hearing open to the public. "I think people have a right to hear this stuff," he said. "My civil rights have been trampled on so hard it's unbelievable."

Until Thursday Emahiser said he has been kept in the dark about the School Board's reasons behind his suspension.

When asked to respond to the allegations, Emahiser laughed. "And you can quote me on that," he said.

Emahiser said none of the allegations against him were serious enough to suspend him.

"Everybody that looks at them raises their eyebrows in disbelief," he added.

He also declined to say specifically what the allegations are before the hearing. He did say that most of them are not "specific" enough to respond to and the few that are, are based on innuendo and petty gossip.

"When the facts come all out there is going to be some apologizing, believe me," he said.

The Shoshone Education Association adopted a "no confidence" resolution against Emahiser on Dec. 3.

Regional landfills will cost $17 million

By Phil Salm
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A six-county solid waste district's $17 million plan for two landfills and several transfer stations is on the money, an independent audit shows.

Critics have charged that the solid waste district is spending too much money on its landfill plans. Southern Idaho Regional Solid Waste District Director Terry Schultz said the district is only doing what is required by new federal landfill laws.

The firm of CH2M Hill audited the plan at the district's request and concluded that the cost estimates are accurate, or at least within $800,000 of being accurate.

The $17 million will pay for two new landfills and closing the existing ones.

"The costs for the selected solid-waste systems appear generally consistent with similar solid waste system costs," wrote engineer Kurt Drensen in a summary of the audit.

"Any estimates Drensen questioned erred in being too low, he wrote. Because of the audit, the district likely will increase its cost estimates by approximately $800,000, Schultz said.

Drensen works in CH2M Hill's Seattle office. The district requested the audit to

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS — The director of a regional waste district has wished Twin Falls County good luck with its landfill plans now that the Twin Falls City Council has unofficially chosen county's landfill plan over the regional district's proposal.

Some tension developed between the two camps after Twin Falls County left the district to "go" to build its own landfill. The regional district and its members — Blaine, Lincoln, Gooding, Jerome, Cassia and Minidoka counties — offered to handle the city's garbage at the regional landfill.

But now that the city has said it likely will go with the county, Southern Idaho Regional Solid Waste District Director Terry Schultz says cooperation would better serve both camps.

"It's much better to take a cooperative approach," Schultz said. "We just wish them luck."

Meeting an Oct. 9 deadline to close old landfills and open new ones will be hard to do under the best of circumstances, he said.

Twin Falls County Commission Chairman Jim Fraley agreed that the two groups need to cooperate.

"We've all got to cooperate to work on this because all the counties are in on this together," Fraley said. "Our county just chose not to join a regional landfill."

Judge rules against gay service bar

The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — A judge struck down as unconstitutional the military's ban on homosexuals Thursday, saying it violated the Constitution's guarantee of equal protection.

The decision in the case of Keith Meinhold, 30, a Navy sonar operator who was discharged after he announced on a TV program that he was gay, came the same day President Clinton maneuvered with Congress in an effort to move toward lifting the military's 50-year-old ban on homosexuals.

"Gays and lesbians have served, and continue to serve the United States military with honor, pride, dignity and loyalty," U.S. District Judge Terry Hatter Jr. said in a written ruling that affects all branches of the military.

"The Department of Defense is permanently enjoined from discharging or denying enlistment to any person based on sexual orientation in the absence of sexual conduct which interferes with the military mission of the armed forces of the United States," Hatter wrote.

The judge said that justifications offered by the Department of Defense were baseless and similar to the reasons offered to keep the military racially segregated in the 1940s.

"Gays and lesbians should not be banned from serving our country in the absence of conduct which interferes with the military mission," he said.

In November, Hatter issued a temporary injunction ordering the Navy to reinstate Meinhold, a 12-year Navy veteran who was honorably discharged August after disclosing on national television that he is gay.

Hatter said at the time that Meinhold must be returned to his old job pending the outcome of his lawsuit challenging the ban on homosexuals.

"I'm feeling ecstatic about it. It goes to prove all along what I've said — that the policy's unconstitutional. It's nice to see lion and the Lincoln County landfill $5.8 million. Transfer stations will serve both facilities.

"We can breathe a little easier, Schultz said. "It would tend to see this as a validation of the engineers' cost estimates."

Drensen pointed to three areas where he thought the district should increase funding — contingency funds, transfer stations, and fees and profits for contractors.

Contingency funds for both landfills need the largest adjustment. Schultz said the district will increase those funds by $350,000 to $400,000.

Contingency funds are used to pay for unknown, but possible, conditions in the projects. With the increase those funds will total around $3 million for both landfills, Schultz said.

Drensen also said that the district underestimated the money needed for contractor markups for getting equipment and workers to-and-from-the-landfill-sites, bonds, insurance, overhead and profit.

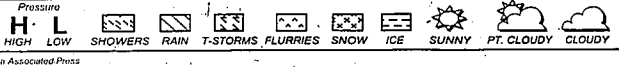

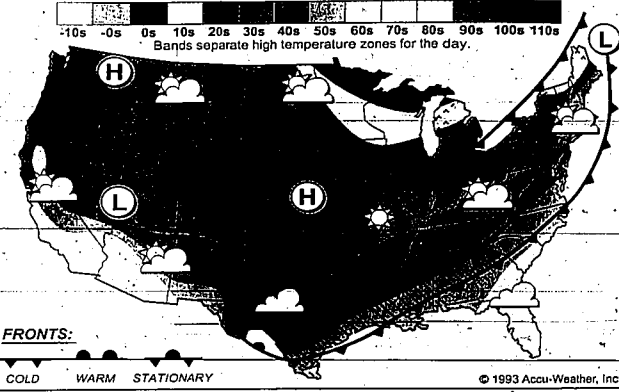

Schultz said the district will increase those funds by about $200,000.

Finally, Drensen suggested that the district allow more money for transfer stations, which will be in various areas of the six-county districts. Trash will be gathered at the stations and then hauled to the landfill.

Wind, cold sweep across central sections of nation

The Associated Press

Wind and cold air pushed across the central part of the nation Thursday, and snow was scattered from the Rockies to the Northeast.

During the early afternoon, wind gusts lowered wind chills to 43 below zero in northern Minnesota at Bemidji and Hibbing.

Wind advisories were posted for parts of the upper Great Lakes and the Dakotas.

Wind in Iowa gusted to 45 mph at Waterloo and 46 mph at Mason City during the early afternoon.

As far south as the Texas and Oklahoma panhandles, temperatures were expected to drop into the lower 20s and upper teens by Friday morning, with gusty wind.

Snow showers extended over parts of the eastern portions of the northern Rockies, north-central Nebraska, central South Dakota, the upper Great Lakes, and the upper Ohio Valley and northern Appalachians.

Rain fell over the northern Pacific Coast and southern Texas.

Heaviest snowfall during the six hours up to 11 a.m. MST included 3 inches at Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., and 2 inches at Bradford, Pa.

Emotions boiling at Marine base

CAMP PENDLETON, Calif. (AP) — Warnings of low morale and resigning Marines swept through this sprawling Marine base Thursday as President Clinton moved toward lifting the military's ban on homosexuals.

"It's an uproar on base right now," said 1st Lt. Donald L. Orleski. "There's a lot of hostility and aggression."

Administration officials said Thursday that Clinton would soon issue an interim order directing the Pentagon to stop asking recruits about their sexual orientation.

Some Marines said comrades were talking about leaving the Corps once their tours of duty end — or even sooner.

"You've got a lot of good people you respect who are saying, 'Look, personally I can't live with this policy,'" said Capt. Clark Fleming.

"When you see good people get out like that, it's got to have an effect." Not all predictions were so dire.

"I don't really see the big deal about it," said Col. Patricia Teachey. "I believe in equal rights." Teachey said she feared that homosexuals who reveal their identity could risk reprisals.

Orleski said her job commanding a company of Marines would become more complicated if she has to pay special attention to the safety of homosexuals. "I definitely think people could get hurt," she said.

Others at the northern San Diego County base expressed emotions ranging from fear to outrage.

"I wouldn't want to live with a homosexual Marine, and I don't blame any of my younger Marines for not wanting to," said Warrant Officer Ron Sablan, who has been a Marine for 12 years.

Lance Cpl. Richard McDowell said he believed many homosexuals might not have the courage necessary for battle.

"I don't think they'd handle it," McDowell said. "I wouldn't feel comfortable with some guy who's gay in a fighting hole, in the middle of battle. You wouldn't know if he'd be thinking about fighting or be thinking about you, you know."

Asked if he was concerned homosexuals might secretly be serving with him now, McDowell said, "What I don't know won't hurt me."

Despite strong personal opposition to the plan, Fleming said he thinks Marines could adjust.

"As Marines have always done, when the commander-in-chief speaks we're going to step back in line and say 'aye-aye, sir,' and carry on," he said.

FDA rejects over-the-counter birth control pills

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Food and Drug Administration has canceled an advisory panel's plan to discuss the possibility of making birth-control pills available without a prescription.

The issue has stirred divisions among family planning advocates. Some worried that wider access to the pill might have adverse health effects.

It could also increase the out-of-pocket costs for oral contraceptives, since Medicaid and most insurers do not pay for over-the-counter drugs.

The FDA's Fertility and Maternal Health Drugs Advisory Committee had planned to hold a workshop on the issue at the agency's headquarters in Rockville, Md., next Thursday and Friday.

But the agency decided it should not proceed without consulting more widely, said FDA spokeswoman Betsy Adams.

She said the workshop would not have produced a formal recommendation from the maternal health panel in any event.

He said the studies consistently found no proof that homosexuals could not serve in the military, and said one study concluded that the difference in job performance between homosexuals and heterosexuals was no different than being left- or right-handed.

Hatter quoted a message from Vice Admiral Joseph S. Donnell, the commander of the Surface Atlantic Fleet, which stated: "Experience has shown that the stereotypical female homosexual in the Navy is hard-working, career-oriented, willing to put in long hours on the job and among the command's top professionals."

In Meinhold's case, Hatter said, the sailor enlisted at the age of 17 and "over the last 12 years Meinhold has established a reputation for being a dedicated and disciplined sailor ... He has consistently received outstanding evaluations and has never been the subject of disciplinary action."

our Constitution's going to be followed now," Meinhold said in a telephone interview.

"The decision speaks to conduct; it says that if there's a condition that interferes with the military's mission, then of course that person should be discharged. I would assume that means heterosexual misconduct as well."

In reaching his decision, Hatter said he "cannot merely defer to the military judgment" as the rationale for the policy — the court must consider the factual basis underlying the "military judgment."

He noted that former Secretary of Defense Richard Cheney said in a TV interview in December that gays and lesbians are no longer a security risk to the military, contradicting claims made in the Meinhold case.

The judge cited a long history of studies commissioned by the military going back to 1957 when consideration was given to changing the policy on homosexuality.

Moffett spokeswoman Anne McMillin said the vandalism was being investigated. She said she knew of no other problems involving Meinhold since his return to active duty.

Meinhold blamed the incident on an intensified atmosphere of hatred and anger over the issue of gays in the military due by open opposition from top military commanders.

Meinhold said the battle to regain his job has taken a personal toll. "It's kind of hard to feel positive about the military in general," these days, he said.

The School Board hired Emahiser this year. The board has not appointed anyone to replace him as superintendent and principal of Shoshone Junior-Senior High School during his suspension.

Emahiser said he has an attorney, but declined to say who it is. "He's a good one," he said.

Marshall leaves legacy behind

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thurgood Marshall was remembered Thursday as an 'irresistible force for justice' who never lost faith in the Constitution and the fundamental decency of Americans.

President Clinton and Vice President Al Gore and their wives joined 4,000 others, including civil rights leaders, members of Congress and ordinary citizens, at the Washington Cathedral for the funeral of the nation's first black justice of the Supreme Court.

"Thurgood Marshall left an indelible mark, not just upon the law but upon his country," said Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist.

Carved-in-the-marble-above-the-Supreme Court building's entrance are the words "Equal Justice Under Law," Rehnquist, who took the opposite side from Marshall in many court rulings, said. "Surely no one individual did more to make these words a reality than Thurgood Marshall."

The court's nine current and three retired members served as honorary pallbearers and walked down the cathedral's aisle ahead of Marshall's coffin at the start of the service.

Marshall, who retired in 1991 after serving 24 years on the high court, died Sunday at age 84. Almost 19,000 people filed past his coffin Wednesday in the Supreme Court building. Marshall will be buried Friday at Arlington National Cemetery.

"Thurgood Marshall was the irresistible force for justice, the unmovable object against injustice and a warm, kind human being. Alas, he was mortal," said Judge Ralph Winter of the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, a former law clerk to Marshall.

Marshall was "the most significant lawyer of his time," courageously facing down death threats and angry gangs as he fought the legal battle against segregation as a civil rights lawyer decades ago, Winter said.

Blacks trying to break barriers of segregation took inspiration from the words "the lawyer is coming," said Karen Hastie Williams, Marshall's goddaughter and a former law clerk to the justice.

President and Hillary Clinton, along with Vice President and Tipper Gore take part in the funeral service for former Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall Thursday in Washington, D.C.

"They didn't have to say his name. They knew who he was," she said.

Marshall's greatest victory as a lawyer for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People came in 1954 when his arguments led to the Supreme Court's landmark ruling that outlawed segregation in public schools.

In 1967, President Lyndon B. Johnson appointed Marshall to the Supreme Court.

During conferences with the other justices, "he spoke from the heart for the humble people who could not for themselves," Williams said. "He never lost faith in the fundamental decency of women and men of good will or in the integrity of the Constitution and Bill of Rights."

Former Transportation Secretary William T. Coleman said Marshall's fight for civil rights had other far-reaching effects. Referring to Clinton, Coleman said he wondered "if the son of Arkansas would be here if Thurgood Marshall in that hot summer had lost, not won the Little Rock school case."

Gore read from the Bible during the Episcopal service.

"Hate evil and love good, and establish justice in the gate," said Gore, whose staff includes Marshall's son, Thurgood Marshall Jr. "Let justice roll down like waters, and righteousness like an ever-flowing stream."

The choir from Howard University, where Marshall earned his law degree, sang one of his favorite hymns, "The Battle Hymn of the Republic."

The nearly two-hour service closed with Aaron Copland's "Fanfare for the Common Man" on the church's massive pipe organ and the hymn "Lift Every Voice," known as the black national anthem.

Former National Urban League President Vernon Jordan said "we who grew up in the sunlight of his deeds" owe Marshall special gratitude.

But for all Americans, "Thurgood Marshall was more than a crusader for justice, more than a torch-bearer for liberty," Jordan said. "He was a teacher who taught us to believe in the shield of justice and the sword of truth."

Clinton eyes former Iraq backer for post

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Bush administration official who was a leading advocate of U.S. support for Iraq before the Gulf War may be named to a top Pentagon post by President Clinton, Pentagon and other sources say.

If Clinton puts forward James "Jock" Covey for the newly created job of assistant secretary of defense for regional conflicts, he is likely to face opposition from some members of Congress, Senate aides said Thursday. They spoke on condition of anonymity.

Covey's nomination "would run into problems" in the Senate Armed Services Committee, one aide said.

During his campaign, Clinton was a forceful critic of the Bush administration's support for Iraq in the years leading up to Saddam Hussein's invasion of Kuwait in August 1990.

White House spokesmen did not immediately return telephone calls seeking comment Thursday. Efforts to reach Covey were unsuccessful.

Clinton also is expected to name Frank Wisner, undersecretary of state for international security affairs in the Bush administration, as undersecretary of defense for policy, the No. 3 job in the Pentagon.

Wisner was a career foreign service officer who served as ambassador to Zambia, the Philippines and Egypt. In recent months, he played a leading role in cementing the START II missile reduction treaty with Russia that Bush signed early this month.

Action on abortion, gay rights anger some

By Tom Rasm The Associated Press

Analysis

WASHINGTON — Bill Clinton, moderate, has yet to make his debut from the Oval Office.

The president elected with middle-of-the-road credentials has taken two policy stands in his first week — both on issues dear to the hearts of liberals.

He promised to focus "like a laser beam" on the economy. But he quickly reversed restrictive abortion policies put in place by Republican predecessors.

And now he finds himself in a row with Congress on a side issue from the liberal agenda, homosexuals in the military, risking the loss of political capital he will need for the big battles ahead on his economic and health-care packages.

"It hit the ground stumbling," said Ben Wattenberg, a moderate Democrat who is a senior fellow at the American Enterprise Institute. Wattenberg said Clinton's early actions, taken with his major appointments, suggest a drift to the left. "He is not a different Democrat."

He is fulfilling campaign promises, to be sure.

Yet, to borrow Clinton's own words in dismissing the importance of his early proposal for a middle-class tax cut, they were not among the "big things" on which he was elected — especially the military-gays issue.

Nor were they part of his central mandate: to do something about the economy.

Clinton, in the space of a week, has managed to displease anti-abortion activists, much of Congress, the Joint Chiefs of Staff and a good percentage of the public.

His first actions "don't fit with his basic centrist strategy," said Vanderbilt University political scientist Erwin Hargrove. "To take advantage of your political capital that comes out of the election, you've got to move quickly."

Few analysts suggest that Clinton's problems on the military-gay ban will be long-lasting. And administration officials suggest there are reasons for trying to get the abortion and the military-gays controversies behind him.

"Ultimately the president is going to be judged by the policies he presents to the country and how they affect the lives of real people," said White House communications director Gregory Stephanopoulos. "And that's what we're going by."

Still, Clinton needs some congressional wins under his belt. And the controversy he has stirred on the gay issue hardly fosters the image of a president in full command.

"He's off to a blurry start," said University of Texas political science professor Bruce Buchanan.

Stephanopoulos says Clinton anticipates "a spring filling with action on the economy and health care."

But his timetable on the economic program already has slipped. He once pledged to have it on the table the day after his inauguration.

Now, Clinton says he "will have the outline on Feb. 17 when he addresses Congress. But the full plan itself is not expected to be ready for a few weeks beyond that."

Clinton brusquely told reporters who asked him if he found the military-gay issue to be distracting him from focusing on the economy: "No. It's distracting you. It's not distracting me."

Still, it was clear that the administration was anything but enthusiastic about this early clash with the Democratic Congress — and this from a politician who had promised to end White House-congressional gridlock.

And, despite the generally upbeat mood at the White House and the reserve of goodwill that Clinton now seems to enjoy in both Congress and in the nation, his presidency hardly off to a smooth start.

The week before he took office was dominated by Clinton's appearance in front of the House on Feb. 11 and his first week in office was soured by the withdrawal of Zoe Baird, his attorney general nominee, in a firestorm of opposition because of her hiring of illegal immigrants to do household work.

Despite Clinton's claim that he is not distracted, all of it is going to be distracting until he comes up with his economic program," said Jeff Faux, president of the labor-union-backed Economic Policy Institute.

"The economy is what he was elected on and that's what people are waiting for," Faux said.

Lifting ban on gays in military sparks debate

The Associated Press

From the military ranks to mainstream America, a firestorm of divided feelings buzzed Thursday over President Clinton's plan to lift the ban on homosexuals serving in the military.

Some in, and some out of uniform questioned what, the big deal was, but many soldiers, sailors, Marines and airmen voiced a resounding "no" about liberalizing the policy.

"Quite honestly, the only way to describe the opponents' reaction is hate," said Sam Gallegos, now a reporter for a gay magazine after he was given a general assignment from the "Colorado National Guard" in 1991.

But at the Marine Corps base at Camp Pendleton, Calif., Lance Cpl. Richard McDowell said a new policy would affect performance.

"I wouldn't feel comfortable with some guy who's gay, in a fighting hole, in the middle of battle," McDowell said. "You wouldn't know if he'd be thinking about fighting or be thinking about you, you know, you."

At Fort Rucker, stationed at Fort Campbell, Ky., said allowing gays in the military "disgusts me." He said homosexuals on active duty would be treated roughly by other soldiers.

"If they want to put all the females and one guy gay in the same platoon, that's fine — just keep them away from me," Rader said.

"I don't want somebody looking at my butt in the shower if they're the same sex."

At Malmstrom Air Force Base in Montana, Sgt. Marty Tucker said the change is "not the image the military should project."

And Capt. Tim Myers, commanding officer of the Chicago-based 3rd Airborne Operations Training Corps, said

'I wouldn't feel comfortable with some guy who's gay, in a fighting hole, in the middle of battle. You wouldn't know if he'd be thinking about fighting or be thinking about you, you know, you.'

— Lance Cpl. Richard McDowell

'I've served 16 honorable years, not marred with any type of allegation of inappropriate sexual conduct. Let our records speak for themselves.'

— Capt. Pam Mindt of the Minnesota Army National Guard who admitted in July she is a lesbian the close quarters of sea duty would pose problems.

"I think it is very difficult for the heterosexual and gay male to live beside one another for six months on a ship," Myers said. "There is no place to go if someone is uncomfortable."

But Frederick Seltzer, a gay journalist seaman apprentice at the submarine base in Bangor, Wash., says fears are misplaced.

"We are not sexual predators," said Seltzer, whose discharge is pending. "We are basically normal human beings but the one thing in our lives that is different is our sexual orientation."

Others say service, not sexual orientation, should be the measure of professionalism.

Capt. Pam Mindt of the Minnesota Army National Guard came forward in July, out of "duty and honor," to tell her superiors she is lesbian. Her discharge also is pending.

"I was sick and tired of seeing quality people being kicked out because of their orientation," Mindt said. "I've served 16 honorable years, not marred with any type of allegation of inappropriate sexual conduct. Let our records speak for us."

"Social justice is never easy," said Joe Steffan, a top student at the Naval Academy in Annapolis who was discharged weeks before his graduation in 1987 because he is gay. Steffan, now a law student in Connecticut, is author of "Honor Bound: A Gay American Fights for the Right to Serve His Country."

At the 140-member Alexander Hamilton American Legion Post in San Francisco — the only gay post in the United States — World War II veteran Paul Hardman blamed "sanctified ignorance" for opposition to Clinton's order.

"Most gay men in the military, you wouldn't know one from the other," said Hardman, the post's founder.

Most public opinion polls show the American public split. And a segment questions how Clinton could act if he personally resisted putting on a uniform.

"Let him serve for a month on a ship at sea. That ought to do him good," said Cheryl Harrison, a former Navy petty officer whose husband is a 27-year Navy veteran at the Naval Air Station in Brunswick, Maine.

"You don't get to pick your roommates."

And former commanders said allowing homosexuals to serve would affect morale because officers would have to guard against gay-bashing and ensure peace in the ranks.

"It creates additional headaches on the chain of command, whose main business is war," said retired Maj. Gen. Joseph Griffin, the former adjutant general of Georgia. "This is just another one of those things that detracts from cohesion, from training and certainly affects discipline."

The 650-members of Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 658 in Macon, Ga., also opposed Clinton's view.

"The people who are pushing do not realize the possible repercussions against those individuals accepted in the military service who are gay. I think it's putting their lives in jeopardy," said retired Brig. Gen. Dan Bullard, the post adjutant.

David M. Smith, executive director of the Gay & Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation in Los Angeles, said it is "a bunch of nonsense to think that sexual orientation is going to affect performance. The (new) policy will do one thing: It will allow homosexuals to serve without worrying that their careers will be ruined."

Former Nazi camp guard leaves country

WASHINGTON (AP) — A retired Illinois janitor who admitted working as a Nazi concentration camp guard during World War II has left the United States and promised never to return, the Justice Department said Thursday.

Michael Schmidt, 69, of Lincolnwood, Ill., left about two weeks ago for Austria, en route to Germany where he has cousins, said his attorney, Douglas Weigle.

Schmidt signed an agreement with the department's Office of Special Investigations in which he admitted he participating in the Nazi-sponsored persecutions of civilians at Sachsenhausen concentration camp in Germany and that he lied about it when he sought to enter the United States, the department said. The document included his promise never to return to the United States.

Spending surge temporary; jobs permanent cure

WASHINGTON (AP) — A burst of Christmas-time spending propelled the nation's economy to its fastest growth in four years, the government said Thursday.

But analysts warned the revival will sag without more jobs.

The economy during October-December grew at a healthy 3.8 percent annual rate, exceeding the 3.4 percent rate of the July-September quarter and the 3 percent rate most economists had predicted.

However, the best performance of George Bush's presidency came too late to convince voters he should be returned to office.

"For ex-President Bush, it's too bad the election wasn't held today," said economist Allen Sinai of the Boston Co. "It's just ironic the economy looks so good in the third and fourth quarters."

In the fourth quarter, a 4.3 percent advance in consumer spending accounted for about two-thirds of the growth. Other bright spots included a 9.7 percent increase in spending by businesses for new equipment and buildings and a 29.1 percent leap in housing construction, the best since the end of the last recession nine years ago.

President Clinton meets with Federal Reserve Board Chairman Alan Greenspan Thursday. Analysts say the holiday spending that propelled the nation to its fastest growth in four years; will sag without more jobs.

Clinton told reporters that economic signals have been mixed, with some favorable signs balanced by continued widespread layoffs among such corporate giants as Sears, IBM and Boeing.

"I think there is a lot of response to the efforts we are making now," Clinton said. But he added, "There is also a lot of troubling news about lost jobs. We've got a lot of work to do."

According to the Labor Department, the number of Americans filing new claims for jobless benefits rose by 2,000 to 362,000 during the week ended Jan. 16. It was the third consecutive weekly increase and brought the total to the highest level in two months.

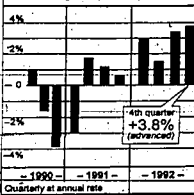

Clinton and his top economic advisers met Thursday morning with Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan. Both Greenspan and Clinton, who plans to deliver an economic stimulus program to Congress on Feb. 17, have been stressing their common desire for a healthy economy. But congressional Democrats have made it plain they expect Greenspan to foster growth by refraining from raising interest rates this year.

Most economists anticipate growth during the current quarter will lapse to 3 percent or lower. They warned that consumers-raised their savings and used credit cards to finance their holiday spending spree and overall consumer spending will decline sharply when the bills come in unless employers step up their hiring pace.

"Certainly the weakness in the recovery is the lack of job growth," said economist Bruce Stemborg of Merrill Lynch. "Without some more job growth, things are going to slow."

But he said he remained optimistic that job creation would accelerate soon. Strong profits should provide companies with the wherewithal to expand their payrolls. On Thursday, a slew of companies reported big earnings gains for the October-December quarter.

AT&T said profits surged 58 percent to a record $1 billion. Procter & Gamble Co. said earnings rose 13 percent to $590 million. Coca-Cola Co. said strong holiday sales helped lift profits to $392.6 million, up 9.5 percent from a year earlier. And Chrysler Corp. said it earned $356 million, nearly triple what it earned

Clinton considers cost-of-living curb

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Clinton administration is considering curbing cost-of-living increases for recipients of Social Security, the White House communications director said Thursday.

George Stephanopoulos said a news briefing that such a proposal was one of the options under consideration by President Clinton as he prepares a comprehensive economic recovery package.

"It's one of the issues that's being discussed," Stephanopoulos said. "We haven't made any final decision yet."

Any attempt to alter Social Security would have to be approved by Congress, where it would be controversial. Many economists believe that cutting entitlement programs is one of the few ways to achieve the goal of substantially reducing the nation's deficit.

In addition to slow job growth, analysts cite two other reasons for concern during the first six months of this year. A year ago, President Bush ordered tax withholding reduced to put more cash in Americans' pockets. That will result in higher tax bills or reduced refunds for many this year. Also, the economies of Japan and Europe have slipped, depressing U.S. export sales.

Mild flu season not over yet, officials say

ATLANTA (AP) — It has been a mild flu year, but don't tell that to the people in 29 states who have endured the sneezing, coughing and aching.

And if you're not one of them, don't put away the tissues just yet, federal health officials said Thursday. The influenza virus circulating this winter tends to stick around, sometimes into March.

"This year's flu hasn't been too disruptive," said Dr. Larry Schonberger of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. "It's too early to tell yet whether this thing is going to peter out or build up."

Last winter, the United States experienced a flu epidemic that began in October 1991, two months before flu season usually peaks. Most patients were hit by Type A, the worst strain.

This year, the first outbreak wasn't reported until December, and most Americans are getting Type B flu, the milder strain.

That doesn't mean it hasn't caused problems. Among the 29 states hit, widespread outbreaks have struck New Mexico, New York and Washington and smaller outbreaks in Alaska, Arkansas, California, Missouri and Texas.

Schools have reported outbreaks in Arizona, Arkansas, Missouri and Washington. Washington also had the first outbreak in a nursing home, where 19 of the 97 residents caught flu or flu-like illness and two, who were already in poor health, died.

"Type B flu tends to build up in the nation much more gradually than Type A, which can hit us over the head with a big bang," Schonberger said.

Flu generally kills about 10,000 Americans each year, most from Type A. With Type B predominant this year, flu deaths have remained well below the rate expected so far, Schonberger said, though no exact figures were available.

But Type B lasts longer, into February and sometimes March, when flu season normally is considered over. The CDC expects to see outbreaks in more states this winter, but doesn't expect serious problems, Schonberger said.

Because flu seasons run in cycles, experts expect a harsh season next year. That worries doctors because people tend to avoid getting vaccinated after a mild year, Schonberger said.

Already, CDC and U.S. Food and Drug Administration officials are meeting to decide how to brew up next year's vaccine. They're looking at the flu diagnoses in the next month to decide what will be the chief ingredient. Which ever strain starts to gain in strength in the next weeks of flu season is generally the strain that will predominate the following year, Schonberger said.

The CDC expects one of the Type A strains, either the particularly bad Beijing flu or the somewhat milder Texas flu, to dominate next year. Both have been found in very scattered cases in 12 states this winter: Alaska, California, Hawaii, Illinois, Indiana, Massachusetts, Michigan, New York, Ohio, Texas, Utah and Washington.

On Nov. 7, 1991, Johnson, who played professional basketball with the Los Angeles Lakers, announced that he had HIV, the virus that causes AIDS. That happened to be the midpoint of the study.

Of the 185 people surveyed before Johnson's announcement, 31 percent reported having one-night stands in the previous three months and 32 percent reported three or more sexual partners, the CDC said.

After the announcement, 20 percent of the 97 people surveyed reported Johnson's name, and they had didn't change our questions. We were kind of blind to it until we saw the data at the end."

The CDC questioned 283 people at a clinic for sexually transmitted diseases in Montgomery County, Md., from July 29, 1991, through Feb. 14, 1992. The agency asked how often in the last three months each person had a one-time sexual encounter or had three or more sexual partners, both risky behaviors for AIDS transmission. They also were asked how often they used condoms, an AIDS prevention measure.

"Statistically, that's a very significant drop," Ms. Valleroy said.

The last 24 people in the study were the only ones who were surveyed a full three months after Johnson's announcement, and they had the biggest drop in risky behavior, the CDC said. It didn't provide exact figures.

"We can't prove that the drops were totally due to Magic Johnson, but they occurred after his announcement and during all the intense media reporting about AIDS that followed it," Ms. Valleroy said. "That's a pretty loud message."

Lady Bird applauds Hillary's policy role

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lady Bird Johnson expects big things from the health care reform task force headed by Hillary Rodham Clinton.

The former first lady said in a statement, "One thing for sure, no one will care more than Mrs. Clinton about health care reform. When you read the roster of brains, expertise and varied backgrounds of her committee members, it fills you with high hopes that something very good will emerge."

Mrs. Johnson's statement was provided by her office in Austin, Texas, in response to a reporter's inquiry about Mrs. Clinton's new role in the Clinton administration and how it compares to that of previous first ladies.

Risky behavior drops after Magic AIDS revelation

ATLANTA (AP) — Fewer people in a Maryland clinic reported having one-night stands and multiple sexual partners after basketball star Magic Johnson announced he had the AIDS virus, according to a study released Thursday.

The study was the first to track reaction to a celebrity revelation about AIDS without creating a bias, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention said.

"There have been a number of other studies where people asked, 'Did you change your sexual behavior because of Magic Johnson?'" said Linda Valleroy, a CDC epidemiologist. "That's a more loaded question."

"We were in the middle of a risk behavior study when Magic Johnson made the announcement, and we didn't change our questions. We were kind of blind to it until we saw the data at the end."

The CDC questioned 283 people at a clinic for sexually transmitted diseases in Montgomery County, Md., from July 29, 1991, through Feb. 14, 1992. Energy taxes have their differing fans, opponents

Boston Globe

WASHINGTON — The oil-dependent Northeast will face off against the oil-producing Southwest.

The transit-riding East will go up against the pickup-loving West.

The coal-burning Midwest will find common cause with coal producers.

As the Clinton administration, struggling to control a soaring budget deficit, considers whether to increase the gasoline tax, impose an oil import fee or try a "carbon tax" or "BTU tax" regional interests are loading their statistics, packing their reports and preparing for a Capitol Hill showdown over energy taxes.

"We're seeing the opening fissures, but the hand-to-hand combat is yet to come," said Daniel Yergin, president of Cambridge Energy Research Associates, a Boston-based consulting firm, and author of a Pulitzer Prize-winning history of the oil industry, "The Prize."

That President Clinton would turn to energy taxes to shore up federal finances should not be surprising. Economists have long argued that the nation relies too heavily on taxing income and property and not heavily enough on taxing consumption of commodities, such as energy.

With the exception of state and federal levies on gasoline, which are small-by-international-standards, and a few taxes on electric utilities, energy now goes largely untaxed in this country. And this at a time when many say the nation should be using the tax system to encourage conservation, discourage pollution and reduce U.S. dependence on foreign oil.

If he decides to seek new energy taxes, Clinton will enter the fray with two things going for him. First, many congressional Democrats who might otherwise oppose taxes that hurt their regions are ready to give a new Democratic president the benefit of the doubt. Asked whether he would back a Clinton-proposed energy tax increase, Rep. Gerry Studds, D-Mass., said: "Unless he asks me to violate some fundamental principle of our region, it's my intention to support him."

Secondly, Clinton's economic advisers seem to be considering a BTU tax — a tax based on a fuel's energy content as measured in British thermal units — that distributes its burden more equally across regions, and therefore that might prove more acceptable politically than energy taxes have in the past.

Still, given the kind of battles among the states that previous energy tax proposals have prompted, even optimists are not confident that the president will make much headway.

This is the best chance in probably two decades to win a new tax," said William W. Hogan, a professor and energy economist at Harvard University's John F. Kennedy School of Government, "but I still think it's a 50-50 shot whether he can get anything significant."

Though Clinton aides have been quietly floating the idea of new energy taxes for several weeks, the subject was first broached in a publicly prominent way on Sunday when Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen said on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press" that the administration was studying the subject.

The administration has four broad options. It can slap a fee on imported oil, raise the gas tax, impose a carbon tax or embrace a BTU tax.

All four suffer from the problem of any tax based on consumption instead of income: They tend to fall most heavily on the poor, a fact that some lawmakers were already criticizing Wednesday. Energy taxes "impose the heaviest burdens on the same low- and middle-income families who have borne the brunt of the Reagan and Bush tax policies for the past 12 years," Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., said in a press release.

However, with the possible exception of the BTU tax, that problem is nothing compared to the political outcry.

The idea of slapping a fee of, say, $5 a barrel on oil imported oil is a nightmare for New England.

The region is more dependent on imported oil than any other in the country. The average Massachusetts resident consumes 143 gallons of home heating oil a year, according to Energy Department statistics; the average Californian consumes a half-gallon.

Raising the federal gasoline tax from its current 14.4-cents-to-15.25 cents or 35 cents is a Westerner's bad dream.

People in the vast, rural Western states are more dependent on the automobile than those in the congested East, where many residents "use mass transit."

"I don't support it, never have, never will," Sen. Malcolm Wallop, of Wyoming said of a gasoline tax. Wallop, the ranking Republican on the Energy Committee, went on "The fact is we would be hit the hardest."

The gasoline tax has its advocates. Economists like it because it lets the government raise a lot of money without putting the nation at a competitive disadvantage to other countries.

Because the United States has the lowest gasoline taxes in the industrial world, the tax could rise and it would still be cheaper to drive here than elsewhere.

Environmentalists like it because it discourages driving, which pollutes. Even the Big Three automakers like it because they think it will let them escape tougher government-mandated fuel-efficiency standards, which are another way to cut auto pollution.

'Embarrassing' availability of handguns haunts Virginia

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Buying handguns in Virginia is so easy the state has become an armory for criminals elsewhere, state and federal officials say.

Forty percent of the traceable handguns found at crime scenes in New York City in 1991 were sold in Virginia, says the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms. And in the past 10 years, 40 percent of the handguns used in crimes in Washington, D.C., were sold in the state, the agency says.

"Virginia has become an embarrassment," said Richard Cullen, U.S. attorney for the Eastern District of Virginia. "We are the state of choice for the drug gangs in the inner cities to get their guns."

Cullen, a Republican, has joined with Democratic Gov. L. Douglas Wilder in proposing a one-gun-a-month limit on handgun sales in the state. A bill co-sponsored by congressmen from New Jersey and Virginia would do the same thing nationally.

A similar proposal from Wilder last year died quickly in the legislature.

"One thing that has changed is there has just been a lot more information coming out about the high volume of weapons confiscated in crimes that originated in Virginia," said Susan Whitmore, spokeswoman for Handgun Control Inc. in Washington.

"Think about the fact that Virginia is several hundred miles from New York. There are a lot of states and a lot of gun stores in between, and still people come to Virginia to get the guns," said Jeff Munchick, spokesman for the Washington-based Coalition to Stop Gun Violence.

Virginia has a large number of well-stocked gun dealers and Interstate 95 makes travel between New York and Virginia easy.

And there are no limits on the number of weapons someone may buy and no waiting period. All that is required in Virginia is a state driver's license and an instant background check. The computer record check is intended to screen felons, but many multiple buys are "straw purchases" in which criminals hire people with no criminal record to make buys, authorities say.

The National Rifle Association and other gun rights advocates complain the statistics are misleading. NRA executive director Wayne R. LaPierre said much of the debate in Virginia "is just political maneuvering."

"Politicians realize they can grab a lot of headlines with the gun issue," LaPierre said.

South Carolina is the only state currently limiting the number of monthly handgun sales.

Under federal law, a person buying multiple handguns from the same vendor in a five-day period must be reported to the ATF, but is not prevented from making the purchase.

The NRA opposes the Wilder measure as an infringement on lawful gun owners.

"Plus, it won't work," LaPierre said. "Criminals find ways around every kind of regulatory fix. That's why they're called criminals."

Earlier this month, the NRA ran full-page advertisements in Virginia newspapers headlined: "If They Can Limit You to One, They Can Limit You to None."

Saddam's tactics frustrate U.S. pilots

Chicago Tribune

ABOARD USS KITTY HAWK — For the brotherhood of steel-spined fighter jacks aboard the Kitty Hawk, the preferred operating mode is all-out aggression on a clearly defined enemy target.

Instead, Saddam Hussein is forcing the Americans to play by more cautious rules, by what the Navy calls "low allowable risk."

"He doesn't care how many airplanes he loses, how many of his people get killed. If he gets one of our airplanes, he wins," said pilot Bob "Kong" King, 42, commander of the VF-51 Screaming Eagle fighter squadron.

The Kitty Hawk is the centerpiece of the Navy battle group patrolling the Persian Gulf.

The pilots aboard it — the older ones, at least — remember Navy Lt. Robert Goodman, whose A-6 attack bomber was brought down over Lebanon in 1983 by lightly regarded Syrian troops.

The Reagan administration was bailed out of a serious political embarrassment only after Jesse Jackson traveled to Damascus and won Goodman's release.

"It's like we're the undefeated team playing against the last-place team. The pressure is on us not to screw up," said Tom Bronkema, a 32-year-old Air Force flier on loan to the Navy.

Saddam

'He doesn't care how many airplanes he loses, how many of his people get killed. If he gets one of our airplanes, he wins.'

— Pilot Bob "Kong" King on Saddam Hussein

The hard part, said Bronkema, is sitting up there waiting and you don't know if he's gonna come out. As a rule, combat pilots crave a fight. Flying combat missions over Iraq would normally be a major career opportunity, but playing by Saddam's rules is not exactly what these pilots had in mind. The Iraqis may be flying MiGs, but they are no Russians.

"It's been a little anticlimactic," conceded King, as he downed a midnight snack of hot dogs and hamburgers after a quiet night over the skies of Iraq.

"I've been training for this moment for 17 years. But the first time over the beach in enemy territory, I was a little more comfortable than I thought I would be — and I didn't like that," he said.

Pilot Dan Donoghue, 40, an Annapolis graduate, also sees the Iraq mission as a "career opportunity." After 16 years of drawing a bead on imaginary enemies — "drilling holes in the sky" in fighter jock jargon — he welcomed the opportunity to measure his skills against a real enemy.

But Iraq's timid "cheat and retreat" tactics are frustrating, and Donoghue is concerned that complacency could become the most dangerous enemy.

"If you don't have your act together, they can kill you, and any time somebody can kill you, you have to respect it," he said.

For Navy brass, the carrier group's role in enforcing the no-flight zone in southern Iraq is seen as a golden opportunity for the Navy to demonstrate the usefulness of its large surface ships in the post-Cold War era.

In recent months, the Navy has rewritten its doctrine to reflect a fundamental shift away from open-ocean warfare toward littoral conflict and conducting land operations from platforms at sea.

The Kitty Hawk's own recent adventures have been the best example.

Soon after it set sail from San Diego in November, the Kitty Hawk was ordered to Somalia to provide air cover for the Marines, who are attempting to restore civil order to that famine-stricken country.

Then, on Dec. 27, after a U.S. Air Force plane shot down an Iraqi fighter, the carrier was ordered into the Persian Gulf to help beef up U.S. enforcement of the no-flight zone.

In addition to flying combat patrol missions along the 32nd Parallel, 35 aircraft from the Kitty Hawk participated in the Jan. 13 strike against the Baghdad nuclear facility.

So far, the cruise has been a rousing success, but as Rear Adm. Phillip Coady, commander of the 12-ship U.S. battle group in the Persian Gulf, is quick to point out, "flying planes off carriers is a risky business."

A single plane down in the desert, a single Navy flier paraded through the streets of Baghdad would be a political nightmare for both the administration and the Navy.

This was taken into account Monday during a pre-patrol briefing in the Screaming Eagles' inner sanctum, the ready room aboard the Kitty Hawk. After the day's mission leader outlined the flight plan, another pilot ran down procedures on ditching a plane over enemy territory.

Each pilot on this patrol was given the option of strapping on a .45 pistol. They all took it.

When performed right, 'shooting the bird' a thing of beauty

The Washington Post

ABOARD USS KITTY HAWK, Persian Gulf. As an F-14 Tomcat fighter rars its engine and nudges its nose forward, ready to spring from the deck of this supercarrier, all eyes turn toward Len "Gash" Geshan, a slightly round, slightly balding naval officer in charge of "shooting the bird."

Geshan, wearing a special yellow safety vest, with goggles down and sound mufflers snug over his ears, uses a mixture of hand signals, arm-waving, deep knee bends and other contortions to launch the plane off the deck, standing so close to the cockpit that he has to duck as the plane's wing whizzes over his head.

Besides the pilot, the catapult officer — more commonly known as the shooter — is the most important person involved in launching an aircraft from the deck of a carrier. As one of the ranking officers on the deck, he makes precise calculations about wind, speed, weight and lift and oversees all of the activity outside of the aircraft, including final safety checks and hooking the plane to the catapult.

Then, from a vantage point just outside the cockpit and often with exaggerated flair, the shooter communicates the precise instant to release the catapult and shoot the plane down the deck.

The steam-operated, piston-driven catapult can propel a 36-ton F-14 operating at full engine power across a 267-foot runway at 130 mph in about 2½ seconds.

Just as baseball enthusiasts can recognize their favorite players by their stances at the plate, people on the Kitty Hawk know the carrier's nine shooters by their style of shooting.

"I can tell every shooter even in all their protective gear by their manner and style: the way they walk, a hand gesture," said Capt. James I. Maslowski, commander of the Kitty Hawk, who watches each launch from the bridge. "It's like a ballet, a very meticulously rehearsed and choreographed moving of planes and shooting."

"And when it goes well, it's a thing of beauty," he said.

There's Robo-Shooter, who goes through the motions with a jerky, mechanical precision. Sammy the Claw orders F-14 pilots to fire their afterburners with a sweep of the arm that ends with one clawed hand slaking above him and the other pointing at the plane.

Geshan, 32, described his own style as "animated. I don't stand still at all when I'm shooting." He said he developed his style by stealing a variety of techniques from other shooters and combining them. "I'm going into a stereo-component store and taking this and this and this, and putting them together in a package."

Marty Martin, a shooter from Memphis, claims to have "never practiced in front of a mirror, but I launched cars for parties all through college. We're all extroverts who feel the need to perform."

Tony Migliore of Fullerton, Calif., "came here to be a shooter... Of all the jobs on the ship, I wanted to be on the deck where the aircraft are and where the action is. It wasn't until a few weeks ago that I stopped being scared walking around the flight deck with all the extreme noise and power, the speed and weights of everything. I've never been in a more violent environment."

Non-incident has Talley ticked

Linebacker denies brawl with Magic's guard

The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — The Super Bowl got its annual sideshow Thursday when the peace and harmony of the Buffalo Bills had hoped for was shattered by a debate over what happened between Darryl Talley and Magic Johnson's bodyguard.

"Nothing happened," Talley told the 200 or so people who surrounded him at the Bills' media session. "That's the biggest crowd around any player since about 300 stood around a chair with Jim McMahon's name over it in New Orleans seven years ago."

Talley

questions, Talley, one of the most cooperative and affable Bills, stood up, grabbed a microphone, and said: "Attention everybody!! Nothing happened!! OK?"

All this came over something that happened — or didn't happen — at Roxbury, a West Hollywood night spot, on Sunday night.

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. — Now the Phoenix Open is a three-day tournament. "I looked at the pro-am scores yesterday, and they scared the hell out of me," Gary McCord said in recalling Mark O'Meara's course-record 60 in Wednesday's pro-am. But there was no runaway on Thursday on the 6,992-yard TPC of Scottsdale course.

Seven players tied for the first-round lead on Thursday and another 21 were within two shots.

Jeff Maggert, Michael Allen, Robert Wrenn, Mike Donald, David Frost and Scott Simpson joined McCord in the lead.

Olympic president: Golf has 'little chance' for '96 Games

MILAN, Italy — IOC president Juan Antonio Samaranch says golf has "very little chance" of being included on the program for the 1996 Summer Games in Atlanta.

"I think that no new sports will be admitted for Atlanta," Samaranch was quoted as saying in an interview published Wednesday in the Italian sports daily Gazzetta dello Sport. "Golf has very little chance of being included."

Atlanta organizers have petitioned the IOC to add golf as a medal sport in 1996.

College football players must leave game if bleeding

OVERLAND PARK, Kan. — The NCAA football rules committee has approved a rule requiring players who are bleeding or have open wounds to leave the game until treated, the association announced Thursday.

The committee recommended the rule at its annual meeting recently in New Orleans.

It is subject to approval by the NCAA Executive Committee.

Shoshone rolls to District 4, A-4 crown

SHOSHONE — The Shoshone Indians, without a senior on the roster, ran off with the fourth district Class A-4 girls' basketball championship while the Bliss Bears grabbed the second-chance playoff.

Shoshone, never trailing, rolled into a 60-41 victory over Hagerman in the finals after Bliss, getting a good one-two punch from Olivia Ferreria and Kim Victor, dropped Oakley 49-34.

Bliss advances to a playoff against the third district third-place team at 3:15 p.m. Saturday at Mountain Home High School. That survivor will also move to Idaho Falls where it will play the second game and compete in the upper bracket with Hagerman.

The extra session that made the Southside subdistrict battle between Oakley and Hagerman so exciting early in the week made Thursday night's district finals, fatal.

Both southside teams were playing for the third straight night, a point not missed by either Northside coach.

"I saw Oakley for the first time last night and I thought they starting dying in the second half. We knew they would be very tired tonight," said Bliss Coach Diana Butler.

Shoshone mentor Tim Chapman admitted "the fact they were playing the third straight night didn't upset me."

Commitment to excellence

Teams bring just that to Western States Classic

By Ron Gates
Times-News writer

GOODING — Dr. James Naismith would have approved the Western States Basketball Classic.

Sure, the lane is wider now and there's that curved 3-point line at both ends of the court. But the spirit in which the game is played at the tournament here probably more closely reflects what the game's originator had in mind back in 1891.

"I really feel that these kids are just like any others, but this is an experience where they really have to make a commitment, remain dedicated and earn the right to come," said ISDB Athletic Director and tournament coordinator Carl Peterson. "This is a way to bring kids together with a focus and the focus is to be the best that you can be."

Results — A8

The Classic, which opened a three-day run in the Idaho School for the Deaf and the Blind and Gooding High School gymnasiums Thursday morning, brings together athletes representing eight schools for the deaf and the blind spanning six western states.

ISDB drew the host designation for this year's tourney — celebrating its 17th year — and threw in some perks for the visitors from Phoenix and Tucson, Ariz., Fremont and Riverside, Calif., Vancouver, Wash., Salem, Ore., and Santa Fe, N.M.

Free throw competitions between superintendents, then players, followed by a team "hot shot" contest were combined with Wednesday's opening ceremonies. A swimming party at Sligar's Hot Springs offered a break after Thursday's first round.

A world renowned native American dance troupe will perform after Saturday's championship finals and it all ends with a soak hop in the ISDB gym.

Parity. "I've seen powerhouse teams finish dead last the following year," said Peterson, exists despite an imbalance in numbers.

Enrollment hovers around 50 students at most of the participating schools although pre-tourney favorite Fremont boasts 225. Riverside and Tucson rank second and third, respectively, in size. For all, the WSBC allows the days of facing someone more their size.

"A lot of times when you play other, bigger schools you get thrashed up on pretty good," Peterson said. "Here, you play three games win or lose. We try, like in most tournaments, to seed the top four on the last day, but you can lose the first two and finish fifth."

Yes, trophies will be awarded to the top five teams in both boys' and girls'

Havela Moyer of Idaho School for the Deaf and Blind shoots over a defender from New Mexico School for the Deaf.

The three cheerleading squads will be similarly honored. And first and second team all-stars will take home plaques.

The real intent, however, is for everyone to return to his or her respective institution with something more — a host of new, hopefully, long-time friends.

"In a way it's about basketball," Peterson said. "But there is so much more than can be gained through the sport. I feel like our students, if they went to a public school, might not be able to compete because they'd be too occupied coping with both their studies and their lack of hearing or speech."

"One of the most important things for those who have been before is to go again," he continues. "They make friends, correspond and remain close. Sometimes forever."

So if thunderous dunks are your bag, or if you really like 15 more minutes of hoops after the clock winds down to two minutes, a three-hour drive on the right day will get you a peek at the likes of Michael Jordan.

A much shorter and far less costly trip to Gooding offers an opportunity to watch aspiring deaf athletes demonstrate what the sport is supposed to be about — keen competition mixed with fun and good sportsmanship.

Retirement looms for ageless Palmer

The Associated Press

MAUNA LANI, Hawaii — A year of decision begins for Arnold Palmer this weekend in the Senior Skins Game.

At stake is his continued participation at the top level of the game he has influenced as perhaps no other man in history.

The time may come very soon, Palmer acknowledges, when he must decide to hang up the clubs that have ripped and slashed through five decades of golfing history, when he will retire quietly to the private play of daily competition with his cronies at his Bay Hill Club in Orlando, Fla.

"The decision has not yet been made, Palmer said.

But the decision is there, looming; waiting to be made.

"I don't want to forego the opportunity to continue to enjoy playing and enjoy competition," he insists.

But he is aware of the passage of the years even the generations. He knows full well the toll taken on his 63-year-old nerves and body by competition dating back to the first Eisenhower administration. He can read the record as well as anyone.

"My goal is to win," Palmer said. "When I see that is literally impossible, I will give up."

And that is the problem.

The flood of victories that cascaded into the eager hands of a young ex-Coast Guardsman so long ago, now has dwindled into a trickle.

Winning — so easy, so common in the late 1950's and '60's — now has become a something, a phenomenon remembered and treasured but not necessarily anticipated.

His last victory on the PGA Tour came 20 years ago in the Bob Hope Classic. His last triumph on the senior tour was five years ago in the Crestar Classic.

Only in the Skins Game has Palmer been able to generate a glimpse of the magic that helped lift professional tournament golf to the level it now enjoys.

He won the Senior Skins — that is, he won the most money — in 1990 and again last year at the post Mauna Lani resort.

That success is, at least partially, attributable to the nature of the competition: a four-man, two-day, 18-hole, made-for-television exhibition. Consistency is not a premium; a sudden flash of brilliance is.

And Arnold can still do that.

The back of his neck is lined, as seemed and weathered as that of a Kansas farmer, but the power remains in the broad, thick hands and the sloping shoulders.

The waist is thicker and the hair thinner than when he began dominating professional golf in the years immediately following the Korean War. He has long since resigned himself to the need for hearing aids.

But the familiar mannerisms remain; the unconscious hitching of the britches, the tilting, questioning, anxious movement of the head and eyes following the flight of the ball.

You won't find Johnson tearing out his hair

By Bernie Lincome
Chicago Tribune

LOS ANGELES — To know Jimmy Johnson is to know the secret of his hair. "It is very fine hair," Johnson says, putting some of it up and away from the side of his head. He lets the hair fall, and it returns obediently to its place. "I do not know what else to do with it except to shave my head — and I ain't."

Oh, yes. Fine hair. Extensive shearing is a choice Johnson has taken before. Dallas Cowboy owner Jerry Jones, a roommate of Johnson's in college, remembers him as a burr head. "He wore a crew cut," said Jones. "Course, it didn't move then either."

In fact, the number of witnesses who have actually seen Johnson's hair in motion are few and generally discredited.

But runner Thurman Thomas was recruited by Johnson at Oklahoma State. "Back then," Thomas said, "his hair would blow when the wind did."

At 39, but that was before a national college championship at Miami, before successfully defeating the legend of Tom Landry, before reaching the Super Bowl.

Today it would not dare. "I give it a little spray to keep it out of my eyes," Johnson said. Schooners are caulked with wax. Paper airplanes have a duller crease. Ties are laid more carefully. Mathematics is guessing: Johnson's hair is science.

"I find it reassuring," said guard Kevin Gogan. "If your coach is all about personal grooming, you know the game plan has to be perfect."

Dallas Coach Jimmy Johnson, neat hair and all, jokes with reporters Thursday in Santa Monica, Calif.

Even in jest, one man's reassurance can be another man's obsession.

"I wouldn't say I was obsessed," Johnson said. "I have goals and priorities. I try to keep them simple. I see what I want and I try to get it."

"I guess he spends every day and night at the office," said quarterback Troy Aikman. "I'm lucky to have a coach like that."

It is rarely possible to be consumed by football without being consumed by football. Dick Vermeil, one of the first significant examples of "burn out," was very much like Johnson. George Allen managed to last a lifetime worrying about details (he once charted the sun at the Super Bowl) and swore that losing was like dying, though he would probably now disagree with that.

"One game or one season is not as lasting as some people make it," Johnson said.

Commentary

Maybe he even believes

Johnson may not be a similar victim of his profession because he seems to have a healthy intellectual curiosity about how all of this works. To know the coach, is to know his library. What book is he reading? "Flow," said Johnson. "Written by a guy with a name this long."

The book is actually "Flow: The Psychology of Optimal Experience." The author is University of Chicago professor Mihaly Csikszentmihalyi. It's a self-help book. Game films are less boring.

"It tells you how to feel good about yourself," Johnson said. "It helps you focus in on the task at hand."

It has chapters like "Cheating Chaos" and subsections like "The Waste of Free Time." These very words have been written on chalkboards by coaches who didn't have to pay $11.37, with tax, for the paperback.

"Like the marathon swimmer," Johnson explains. "Pain is excruciating while you are swimming. But later, when you look back on it, you find you actually enjoyed the ordeal. So I guess this means that it's not the end result that brings happiness but getting to the end result."

"This is a long way from Vince Lombardi's, 'Winning is the only thing.'"

Maybe not. Lombardi also insisted cold is a state of mind. Or was that Bud Grant? The great football philosophers are interchangeable. So was their hair.

CFL teams complete 16-player trade

EDMONTON, Alberta (AP) — The Edmonton Eskimos and Toronto Argonauts made a 16-player trade on Thursday, the largest deal in Canadian Football League history.

The keys to the swap were quarterback, Edmonton sent Tracy Ham to Toronto, who sent Ricky Foggie to Edmonton.

Eight players went in each direction. Going to the Eskimos from Toronto, in addition to Foggie, were slotback Darrell K. Smith, cornerback Ed Berry, wide receiver Eddie Brown, defensive end Leonard Johnson, defensive halfback Don Wilson, and two young Canadians, linebacker Bruce Dickson and slotback J.P. Izquierdo.

Heading to the Argos from Edmonton, in addition to Ham, were defensive backs Enis Jackson and Travis Oliver, slotbacks Craig Ellis and Ken Winey, fullback Chris Johnson, linebacker John Davis and the rights to defensive lineman C.M. Brousseau, a 1991 draft choice.

Ham was named the CFL's most outstanding player in 1989 and was in his career passed for more than 4,000 yards and rushed for more than 1,000 yards in a season.

However, he has been dogged by accusations that he cannot win the big game. Foggie was the Argos' starter most of last season, but failed to live up to Toronto fans' expectations. He had several strong games the previous season as a backup to Matt Dunigan.

Smith, Wilson, Ellis and Jackson have all been named to CFL-all-star teams in the past. Smith and Ellis have been two of the CFL's most productive receivers over the past several seasons.

In Buffalo, they're wearing blue stars

BUFFALO, Texas (AP) — George Chaika is the only Bills fan in Buffalo. That's Buffalo, Texas, and on Super Bowl weekend you can address your letters to Blue Star, Texas.

This tiny town tucked in the woods of southeast Texas halfway between Dallas and Houston has vacated the enemy monicker to join the Dallas Cowboys' push for an NFL championship.

Although the official name change occurs Friday, the transformation was under way by mid-week, with blue stars covering "Buffalo" in most shop windows and residents everywhere talking about the Cowboys.

"We're giving up our name," said 49-year-old Estaline Bounds, who runs a beauty salon across the street from City Hall. "The Cowboys better win for us."

The name change was the brainchild of Mayor Byron Rydor, who got the idea after a reporter suggested doing something to celebrate Dallas' Super Bowl berth.

"In a couple of hours she called us back and we agreed to head the change," Rydor said. "We're going to change our name. Everywhere there's a Buffalo sign we're going to make a star and cover it up. That's where the name Blue Star, Texas, came from."

Residents immediately went to work painting 100 plywood stars Dallas blue. They also constructed an eight-foot sign that's planted at the town's largest intersection, a flashing yellow light where State Highway 75 crosses route 164. Rydor then got permission from the state highway department to cover exit signs leading to Buffalo, and the Postal Service agreed to accept letters addressed to Blue Star.

The mayor has since been featured on radio and television shows nationwide. He even was named Buffalo, N.Y., Mayor Jim Griffin, who offered to bet two orders of Buffalo wings against two Texas steaks.

Griffin didn't, however, offer any of Buffalo, Texas, Mayor Byron Rydor poses Thursday by a highway sign 15 miles south of town. The 14 Super Bowl tickets his office has. This is war, after all.

"I asked me if I had tickets and I told him that, at this point, I do not," Rydor said, laughing.

About the only one in town who hasn't caught, Cowboys fever is Chaika, a 44-year-old Niagara Falls, N.Y., native who coaches the boys' basketball team at Buffalo High School.

The lifelong Bills fan said his life will get easier — even his wife is a Dallas fan — on Monday.

"The Bills are going to do their work on Sunday and my job will be easy on Monday," Chaika said. "We'll start selling Buffalo Bills paraphernalia here in town and get the name changed around so we're not named after a bus company or an ointment or a beer company."

How 'Blue Star' came to be

'Blue Star' Our town was named a long time ago.

Never gave much thought to the Super Bowl. In their four short years, after much hard work.

How could we now our loyalty shrink? We all love our town. We all love our team.

To show our support, serious business we mean.

We're changing our name our support to show.

We can change it back after the Super Bowl.

So the mayor's decreed: Blue Star is the name.

Loyal fans here reside for the Super Bowl game.

Let our Cowboys know it's not our town we're ashamed.

For one game only, we'll display our new name.

Good luck to our Cowboys our pride to you show.

'Blue Star, Texas; for now we're known. Go Cowboys, our loyalty you know.

According to the first account, in Wednesday's Fort Worth Star-Telegram, Talley was punched in the nose by Johnson's bodyguard. The incident identified only as Anthony. The incident reportedly took place after Jim Kelly and Talley directed pointed remarks at Johnson.

"It's no story," Johnson said Thursday. "We're all laughing about it. Darryl Talley's laughing about it, and Anthony's laughing about it. I told everybody that if the guy had hit him, he wouldn't be playing. Then you'd have a story."

But that didn't stop the Bills' media session from turning into a general circus.

"Coach Mary Levy implied that some Dallas Cowboys planted the story. 'Nice try fellas, but clumsy. It's no story at all.' When he was pressed again, he finally cut everyone off. 'No more questions. Let's talk about the game.'"

"Bills' general manager Bill Polian said: 'Everyone denies it. It's not a story. Why is everyone making a big deal about it?'"

Kelly waded through about 150 media members and said: "Crossfire!" "I was there for 5 minutes," he said. "If something happened, I didn't see it."

A Linebacker Cornelius Bennett said nobody could possibly know what happened.

"I was in the same place along with guys from the Cowboys and players from a lot of other NFL teams. There said, 'It's a hip place to go. There were singers, movie stars, TV stars. It was so crowded anybody could have bumped anybody. I got my foot stepped on several times but just blew it off."

This came during a week in which the Bills had been amiable and low-key, easily fending off questions about the possibility of becoming the first team ever to lose three straight Super Bowls.

There have been few hitches and players like Thurman Thomas and Bruce Smith, surly the past two seasons, have been charming. Thomas even passed out little plastic helmets Thursday to commemorate his faux pas of a year ago, when he misplaced his helmet for the first two plays of what became a 37-24 loss to Washington.

Many of the Bills found the whole flap amusing — something to spice up what usually is a week of much ado about very little. This, they thought, was extraordinary ado about very little.

"This will be good for a lot of laughs," said Adap Lingner, a reserve offensive lineman.

"You guys aren't really a problem. The real distractions start tonight when the families get in."

The Cowboys had no such distractions.

One Dallas player, safety Ray Horton, amiably greeted a writer who asked him, "How often did you see your father fight?"

"As far as I know, my father never fought," Horton replied and pointed toward the other side of the room. "That's Ken Norton whose father was the fighter. He's sitting over there."

Dallas' main concern on the field, meanwhile, was focused on stopping Buffalo's no-huddle offense.

Dave Wannstedt, the team's defensive coordinator, conceded that he talked to a half-dozen coaches about trying to stop it. One result: Wannstedt's strategy of having his defense play against two offenses — one right after the other — to simulate the speed of the offensive linemen.

The Cowboys' strategy uses as many as 18 different players on defense.

Governor's plan would soak wrong sectors of economy

The biggest problem with Gov. Cecil Andrus' tax proposal is not the "urban bias" cited by some rural legislators. Rather, it's the plan's focus on transferring money out of productive economic sectors and into government.

Resisting the temptation to do just that is probably one reason Idaho has fared well economically, while many other states have suffered.

Andrus' plan would repeal the production exemption for tools, equipment and machinery. That exemption is important not only to farmers, but also to mining, timber and manufacturing.

Michael Ferguson, Andrus' chief economist, told the House Revenue and Taxation committee that the exemption is a "selective tax break that benefits a relatively small segment of Idaho." That statement is perhaps technically true, but it undervalues the contribution of that "small segment."

Earlier this week, The Times-News published an analysis of how the governor's plan might affect various hypothetical Idaho citizens. The analysis — prepared with Ferguson's help — found that urban homeowners might pay a bit more or less in total taxes if the plan is enacted. But the two hypothetical farmers in the sample would feel a significant pinch — $1,171 in one case, $2,672 in the other.

One broad effect of the governor's plan apparently would be to shift tax burden from cities to rural areas — a point that rural lawmakers swiftly seized upon. But a more important impact is not geographical, but economic.

Agriculture, mining and timber are the engines of Idaho's economy. Keeping those engines humming has kept Idaho fairly prosperous while many other states have explored the depths of recession.

In any engine, a certain amount of friction (in the form of taxation) is unavoidable. But the production exemption is an important lubricant — it reduces the friction.

Ferguson and the governor believe that repealing the exemption would raise $25.8 million. Maybe so — but at what cost in economic vitality? What is the effect of weakening the economic sectors that create our wealth?

The other key component of Andrus' revenue-raising plan, extending the sales tax to some kinds of services, may make more sense. Even more appealing is a plan being crafted by legislative Republican leaders. It reportedly would include a smaller tax increase overall than the governor's plan includes, with broader property tax relief. Still unsettled, in our view, is the question of whether state government really needs to increase the share of Idaho's economy it consumes. If it must, however, let it look somewhere other than Idaho's basic industries.

Wilderness debate might not rage as it has in past

Those five smiling Idaho politicians you saw sitting around a table on television — the governor and our congressional delegation — were happy for a reason. More than a smiling photo opportunity, our meeting may well have been the beginning of the end of the gridlock over the future of 9.3 million acres of roadless areas.

The debate over the management of those lands, most often referred to as the "wilderness" debate, has raged for decades. But we left the discussions on an optimistic note because it had taken years of effort to get as far as we got that day. In highly publicized attempts during the '80s, Gov. Cecil Andrus, Sen. Jim McClure, Idaho interest groups and a top-notch mediation team all failed to resolve the issue.

Add my name and everyone else's who held office in the 1980s to that list.

Oh yes, we all tried. But our attempts fell short, or outside interest groups proved too powerful for Idahoans to reach a consensus. Thankfully, just as our parents taught us, we tried and tried again. And this time I believe we're on to something.

Which proves another parental maxim: Yesterday's attempts are the building blocks for tomorrow's successes! Learning from the past, I called the group together to try it a new way. We began by turning the past model of roadless area decision-making on its head. Instead of taking our crayons and drawing new wilderness boundaries all over the state map, we began by seeking common ground on the fundamental principles that have brought previous attempts at resolution to a screeching halt.

We also agreed to test a new integration of mixed-use and wilderness areas in the Boise National Forest, applying that model later to bring land use certainty to other parts of Idaho. Rather than simply creating vast tracts of new wilderness lands as some in Congress would prefer, our Idaho group will consider a range of options that take the different faces of our state and its people into account. Idahoans deserve to know what public land in our state will be available for recreation, timbering, mining, ranching and other pursuits. And we need to know what areas will be preserved for the future as wilderness. That's the essence of

"Certainty." That's also the first fundamental principle our group talked about. The roadless area question — remember, we're talking about 9.3 million acres — is usually answered when Idahoans know what what purpose and for how long. The second principle I proposed for discussion was the preservation of state water rights.

In any federal land-use bill — and an Idaho wilderness bill is ultimately decided in Congress — there must be explicit protections of Idaho's water rights.

Otherwise, the federal government could control one of Idaho's most precious resources. The third principle discussed was private rights.

Because Idaho is two-thirds federal land, we need to pay particular attention to how that land is managed. The surrounding or taking of private land should be avoided, as should the disruption of the rights of grazers, outfitters and others.

After all, we're not just talking about tracts of land; we're talking about the lives and property of thousands of Idahoans and the future of dozens of Idaho communities. If we can move forward on our test case in the Boise National Forest, agree on basic principles and present a united front in Congress, I believe Idahoans will see the roadless area question resolved by next year.

Human beings — and I still believe politicians are human beings — can learn from the past. We can build successes over time. We can break the gridlock surrounding important issues. And, with God willing and concerned Idahoans involved, I believe we can solve Idaho's roadless area question before Congress does for us.

That will really be something to smile about.

Larry Craig is Idaho's senior U.S. senator.

Cut non-essential jobs; lay off taxpayer

When there are heavy snows in Washington, the federal government sometimes announces on local radio and TV stations that only "essential" employees need report to work.

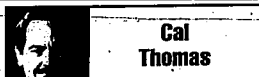

My quick and easy solution to reducing the size and cost of the federal government is to identify all the non-essential people and release them. Since that is not likely to happen, how should President Clinton honor his campaign pledge to "eliminate 100,000 unnecessary positions in the bureaucracy" and "cut 100,000 federal government positions through attrition" and "require federal managers and workers to achieve a 3 percent across-the-board administrative savings in every federal agency"?

In his Inaugural Address, Clinton spoke of the need for "sacrifice." The federal government, not the overtaxed American, should lead by example and make the first sacrifice. But the Wall Street Journal reports that far from taking the lead in downsizing government, the president's advisers are already urging him to increase taxes, including taxes on the middle class, the very group whose tax burden he promised to cut.

The last time taxes were raised in 1990, the economy took a dive and the incumbent president began his long trip out the door. Predictably, Congress spent the new revenue rather than reducing the deficit.

The American people are not taxed too little, as Ronald Reagan used to say, their government spends too much. Increased taxes on the "rich" (those making over $100,000) won't solve the deficit problem. That is the smallest number of taxpayers, yet the rich, along with the middle class, already pay more in taxes per capita than any other income group.

President Clinton can enlist Republican help if he is serious about cutting the federal bureaucracy and controlling spending. The conservative Heritage Foundation wants to assist him and has proposed a plan of action.

To reduce the bureaucracy, it suggests he impose a federal hiring freeze, accompanied by a 3 percent administrative cut in all departments. He then should demand that Congress eliminate minimum staffing levels in all departments and agencies. A second phase of personnel reductions would include a modified freeze administered by the Office of Personnel Management to allow for continued reductions handled in accord with efficient use of personnel resources.

Congress should be asked to remove limits on the number and functions of political appointees and reduce the Executive Office of the president's staff by 25 percent. Political appointees will keep the omnivorous bureaucracy from swallowing the president's reforms. There are many other suggestions on the Heritage list, but this is where it must start.

Personnel costs (including wages and benefits) equal 15.5 percent of total domestic spending, and other administrative overhead adds 24 percent more.

Because government spending now equals $2,000 per household, government sacrifices would have broad political appeal. Under George Bush, federal spending mushroomed. If President Clinton attempts to "jump-start" the economy with more federal spending on "infrastructure," he will increase the deficit and not create real jobs that contribute significantly to economic health.

Instead, the President should immediately reinstitute the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit reduction targets. He should create a presidential commission, modeled after the Base Closing Commission, to examine options for reducing federal spending.

And he should announce a campaign against "wasteful" spending, including pork-barrel projects, and say that he intends to expose them and to demand a line-item veto so he will have the authority to eliminate them. Sens. Ted Kennedy and Bill Bradley support the line-item veto. If Clinton begins with government sacrifice, he will have more support when he asks for reductions in entitlement programs.

If he pursues such a course, most Americans will back him. If he doesn't, he could be vulnerable early to Republican attacks. Former HUD Secretary and potential 1996 presidential candidate Jack Kemp says that Clinton may already be falling into the same trap that got former OMB Director Richard Darman in the disastrous 1990 budget agreement with Congress. Clinton, Kemp says, could resemble not his idol, John F. Kennedy, but Herbert Hoover.

A central message of the 1992 campaign was that the voters think government is too big, too insensitive and spends too much on ineffective programs. Politically, the worst thing Bill Clinton could do is to be seen as another tax-and-spend liberal Democrat, when he had promised he was a new Democrat.

If he adopts a bold strategy, he might lay the deficit, spending and big government dragons and earn the thanks not only of the American people but of future presidents.

No thanks, Mr. Padgett

In response to James Carmichael's letter on Jan. 26, you have your opinion of Ed Padgett. I have an entirely different opinion, based on my first encounter with Ed Padgett. To you, he is helpful, kind and friendly. To myself and family, he was crude and rude and if he had only stuck around longer, he would have been made aware of how I really feel about him.

You, Ed Padgett, demonstrated to me through your actions that you are not a person that I want representing my family's interest regarding the city of Hollister. It's obvious that Mr. Carmichael hasn't lived in Hollister long enough to know who he has become friends with.

Shot at Stockdale unwarranted

I thought Steve Crump exhibited extremely poor taste in the comments in his Sunday column of Jan. 24 referring to wandering around like an Admiral Stockdale. If the admiral wasn't glib on television like most politicians or newspaper reporters, that shouldn't be held against him or be considered a reflection on his mental acuity. Glibness and mental acuity are not always related. You proved that point!

Someone who has been through all that he has and paid such a high price, who won the Congressional Medal of Honor, deserves far more respect than you have shown him. Please don't bring patriotism down to your level.

It's your type of journalistic comments that reinforces the reason why so many I have talked to are not subscribers to The Times-News.

Clerk exhibits moral fortitude

I'm the city clerk of Hollister. When I first took this job in October, I liked it. Like keeping books. I needed this job. But now after almost four months, I realize I don't need this job as much as I thought I did. I don't like politics. In fact, I hate politics. I thought all I had to do was send out the monthly water/sewer bills, take minutes at the City Council meetings and make deposits. I admit, I don't know very much about city codes and laws. But, I also didn't know that people would get so upset about a water bill that they would threaten to "have my blood" if I didn't fix their water bill. Or have anonymous concerned citizens calling me and telling me that I'd better comply with so and so's request or else my head would be on the chopping block too!

I have four kids and a husband to take care of.

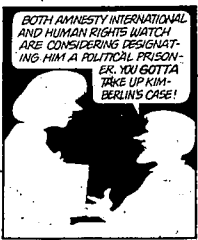

We moved out here to be a part of this community. All I've gotten is threats and harassing phone calls. I guess I didn't really know what a city clerk does or has to put up with.

This was going to be my letter of resignation, but after talking to the city attorney, I've decided that I can't quit now. My husband and I are property owners and we're here to stay.

The only way we can make Hollister a better place to live and raise our kids is by standing up and fighting for what we believe in. I know that I have a lot to learn about being a city clerk, but I'm not going to give up that easy.

Court upholds deportations, orders appeal procedure

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israel faced growing world censure and jeopardized peace talks on Thursday after its supreme court upheld the deportation of more than 400 Palestinians to southern Lebanon.

The court's ruling rejected all appeals of the Dec. 17 expulsions, but it ordered the government to let the men appear individually before military appeal committees.

Rabin tests Clinton's friendship with Israel

By Marcus Eliason
The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin is putting Bill Clinton's friendship with Israel to its first test, saying he expects the president to fight U.N. sanctions over the deportation of 415 Palestinians to Lebanon.

Now that the Israeli Supreme Court has let the deportations stand, the next move is up to the Security Council. And Israelis, having seen the world body in action on Iraq and Bosnia, are a little anxious about the prospect of sanctions.

Rabin this week has twice challenged Clinton to follow the example set by his predecessors since the late 1950s, and block concrete action by the United Nations.

"I find it hard to imagine that the administration and the U.S. president wouldn't fight sanctions against Israel," he said in a speech shortly after the Supreme Court announced its ruling Thursday.

"For the past 35 years, this was the policy of all the presidents and all the administrations in America. And therefore, I feel there is high probability that this will be the American policy."

"Certainly this is what I expect." In Washington, the State Department declined to comment on the Supreme Court ruling and urged the Security Council to postpone consideration of sanctions against Israel.

In Israel, however, there was some nervousness about Rabin's stance. His argument sounds convincing, the daily Yedioth Ahronoth newspaper said, "but is it enough to justify such a far-reaching gamble?"

The main danger to himself was something of a gamble. Rabin gambled it would devastate the Islamic fundamentalists, who had killed six Israeli troopers in 10 days, Islamic-based violence against Israelis has since dropped dramatically.

He gambled that the U.S.-backed peace process would survive the shock of the deportation. Syria, the key player, has not pulled out of the talks, but the Palestinians have.

And he gambled that world outrage would not lead to U.N. sanctions. A week ago, Israeli officials were saying that Boutros Boutros-Ghali, the U.N. secretary general, wanted to end the affair through diplomacy, despite the Security Council's unanimous demand to reverse the deportation.

Russian team to examine sunken sub

MOSCOW (AP) — Russian scientists and military experts are on an expedition to examine a sunken nuclear submarine that reportedly is leaking radiation, a news agency reported Thursday.

The Soviet nuclear-powered Komсомолец sank in the Norwegian Sea on April 7, 1989, killing 42 of 69 crewmen. Norwegian experts believe the sub's reactor and two nuclear-tipped torpedoes contain 28 pounds of deadly plutonium.

The sub is the top priority of a special panel set up to identify and dispose of Soviet nuclear and chemical weapons lost or dumped at sea.

Panel members say no technology exists for recovering the Komсомолец hull or for enclosing it in a way that would rule out future corrosion, a newspaper reported last week.

A Norwegian company on Wednesday proposed enclosing part of the sub with special concrete to contain radiation, at a cost of about $46 million. The Russian government said it would study the proposal.

The wreckage lies at least 4,900 feet underwater about 310 miles from Norway's northern coast. Last year, scientists detected traces of radiation near the vessel, raising fears it might harm the Arctic's rich fishing grounds.

Israel says it expelled the men because they are tied to radical Islamic groups that killed six soldiers in December, and it indicated Thursday that it expects the United States to head off any U.N. action.

Israel radio quoted Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin telling a closed Labor Party meeting that U.N. punishment would destroy the peace process by signaling the Arabs that they can win concessions through the Security Council, rather than through negotiations.

In a public speech, however, he was more upbeat, saying: "I am looking forward with the belief and the hope that the peace talks will continue. I might add that you don't make peace by doing favors."

Facing a possible standoff with either Israel or the Arabs, the Clinton administration urged the Security Council to put off consideration of sanctions. State Department spokesman Richard Boucher would not comment on the court ruling, but it is clear the United States hopes to avoid a council showdown in which it would have to choose between vetoing sanctions or alienating Israel.

The council is scheduled to meet Monday to discuss new steps. U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali has urged further action against Israel, and Rabin acknowledged that he expects a tough fight.

But he told reporters that he expected the United States to block any sanctions, which would be the most drastic step.

"I would say that for the last 35 years the United States has made every effort to prevent sanctions against Israel," Rabin said. "No doubt, in this case when no one was injured, when no one died ... it will be unbelievable that the United States will support sanctions."

At the deportees' tent camp in south Lebanon, spokesman Dr. Abdul Aziz Rantisi denounced Israeli officials as "Nazis." He also indicated the men would not appear before Israeli military committees to appeal their deportations.

The deportees shouted "No! No! No!" when he asked if they would accept anything short of the unconditional return demanded in U.N. Security Council resolution 799.

The Palestinians are marooned in a no man's land between Lebanese army lines and territory controlled by Israeli troops and their Lebanese allies. Beirut, unwilling to let Israel dump its problems on Lebanon, has renounced any responsibility for the men.

Hajun Ashrawi, spokeswoman for the Palestinian negotiators at the U.S.-backed Middle East peace talks, said the delegation would boycott the talks until the men were returned to the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

"The only recourse is the implementation of Security Council resolution 799 because we feel the legal system in Israel has never served the interest of justice, but served the interest of occupation," she said.

In Tunis, Yasser Abu-Rabbo, a member of the Palestine Liberation

Organization's executive committee, said the PLO will urge the Security Council to act forcefully.

He called the ruling "racist" because it allowed Israel to violate human rights. The Security Council resolution condemned the deportations as a violation of the Fourth Geneva Convention's ban on transferring people from occupied territory.

The final hours of a fallen Marine in Somalia

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — The screams were distinct — the chilling call of the fallen.

A sniper's bullet hit his chest. Lance Cpl. Anthony Botello was carried from harm's way clinging to the sleeve of his comrade's camouflaged blouse, his last link to life.

The manner of his untimely death illustrated the dilemma of the nearly 9,000 Marines in Somalia: To show restraint while going down the dark and lawless corridors of a country where the gun rules.

Botello, 21, from Wilburton, Okla., had volunteered that fateful Monday night as the point man on a patrol looking for snipers who had been firing on the Marines.

"Let's get this one done tonight. Let's come back," he told his squad leader, Cpl. Scott Richards, 24, of Westminister, Mass.

As the patrol stopped for a security check before rounding a corner, Botello talked about how there was no moon out.

"You doing all right?" Richards asked.

"Yeah."

"Make sure you take it slow careful now."

"I'll be going nice and slow."

Rounding the corner, the 20-man patrol made a left to expose a pathway shown on their map as a road that turned out to be a trail dotted with huts.

They heard a gate open.

"We heard the latch lift up on the steel and we knew something was up," recalled Cpl. Bill Lamb, 22, of Allentown, Pa., the team leader who was immediately behind Botello. "I hear voices up ahead," Botello turned to Lamb and said.

Lamb thought it normal. They had heard voices on previous patrols as they moved through peoples' yards.

"OK. Keep your eyes open," Lamb told Botello.

Lamb, who was wearing night vision goggles, saw a man step out, speaking in Somali. "He started talking as though he was giving commands to other people," recalled Lamb, "probably telling them, 'They've got people coming through.'"

On previous patrols, Somalis had come out of their homes when they heard the Marines passing through. But when they realized they were U.S. Marines, they went right back inside.

Not this night.

Lamb and the other Marines heard two Somalis cook their rifles.

"I couldn't see a weapon," said their homes. That's why I was afraid to shoot."

At first, I kept thinking, 'Lord, please have them go back in their homes. Go back in.'"

But it wasn't to be.

Lamb knew when he saw one Somali put a rifle on his shoulder as he knelt and pointed it at Botello, 15 feet away.

"I was five feet behind Bo," said Lamb. "I grabbed my rifle. All that kept going through my mind was, 'I have to shoot this guy.' It seemed like forever, but it was all a matter of a second."

Lamb fired four rounds at the Somali.

"All hell broke loose," he said. "Everybody started shooting."

A third Somali on the roof fired two green tracers. One crashed through Botello's arm, an area not protected by his flak vest, continued through his armpit and into his chest.

Botello screamed three times. "It's become very distinct — that sound when somebody gets hurt," Lamb said. "They don't say nothing. Just a yell. Just a cry. I never heard it before."

Lamb hadn't seen the sniper fire from the roof.

"I kept thinking, Lord, please tell me — he jumped — to the ground — and banged his knee. I was hoping he broke a leg or broke an arm. That sounds horrible but I was hoping he hurt himself and hoping he didn't get hit."

The men were ordered to pull back so a team of machine gunners could move up and lay down heavier fire to protect the rest of the patrol.

But Lance Cpl. Michael Soman, 21, of St. Paul, Minn., and Pfc. James Allison, 21, of Santa Fe, N.M., refused. Still under fire, they crawled to Botello.

Soman hoisted him on his back, carried him part way, stumbled and fell, then dragged him the rest of the way to the rear.

Botello looked at Soman. He looked at Allison.

"He had a hold of my sleeve," said Soman. "He knew that we were there and we were bringing him out. He was alive."

Within the hour, death embraced him.

Botello was an artist. Another artist and a member of the patrol, Lance Cpl. Jeff Blevins, 21, of Kerrville, Texas, painted a mural in his memory over a dingy wall in a room under the soccer stadium where the Marines live. It bears a cross and depicts Soman carrying Botello on his back.

Blevins painted the handprints of the other Marines into the mural, each with a farewell salute.

"Peace '93. My heart rides with the 2nd platoon. We love ya, Bo," wrote one.

"I'll see you some day," said another. "WE all miss you and we think about you all the time and I know you are in a better place."

Despite Bush's promise, troops appear to be in for a long stay

By Reid G. Miller
The Associated Press

MOGADISHU, Somalia — When George Bush first entertained the notion of sending U.S. troops to Somalia, he suggested most could be home before he left the presidency.

They weren't, and many appear to be in for a long stay.

The length of that stay is apparently a question the new president, Bill Clinton, has not addressed in his first days in the White House.

There is little doubt among diplomats, military officials and other observers in the Somali capital on what to avoid: a prolonged American engagement or an intense involvement in what could become a quagmire.

Disengagement for Clinton, however, may be more difficult than engagement was for Bush.

As he had done a year earlier in the Persian Gulf, Bush went to the United Nations in the waning days of his presidency with a proposal that the United States lead a grand military alliance to save a Muslim nation.

As he had saved Kuwait from the depredations of Iraq's Saddam Hussein, so would he lead the world in saving Somalia from starvation, clan warfare, banditry and the breakdown of every form of civil order.

It was a noble cause. More than 350,000 people had died in a catastrophe born of war and drought and the U.N. estimated that 2 million more were in imminent risk of starvation.

Analysis

So was born "Operation Restore Hope," which now involves about 25,000 American soldiers, sailors, Marines and airmen and some 13,500 troops from 21 other nations.

The mission had two objectives: • Securing the capital of Mogadishu and the southern coastal city of Kismayo, their Indian Ocean ports and airports, and six major towns in the interior of the country for the safe delivery of food and other aid.

• Establishing a "secure environment" for the eventual transfer of the humanitarian effort to a U.N. peace-keeping force that would rehabilitate the shattered nation and restore a civilian government.

The first objective has been largely accomplished. It is the second that raises questions about how soon the Americans can withdraw.

A U.S. Marine was killed in Mogadishu on Monday night, the second Marine to be shot to death by a sniper in little over a week and the third American to die since the Marines came ashore on Dec. 9. Two foreign aid workers also have been killed, six Belgian soldiers wounded and more than two dozen Somalis slain in shootouts with American and allied troops.

"I'm not going to tell you that Mogadishu is a benign environment," U.S. army Lt. Col. Steve Ritter, a spokesman for the coalition told reporters Tuesday. "I don't think it ever will be."

Washington informally asked the U.N. Security Council last week to consider a new resolution turning over responsibility for the humanitarian operation to the United Nations.

It said it and its coalition partners had made significant gains in securing the targeted towns, ports, airports and roads. But it stopped short of saying they had secured a safe environment.

U.N. Secretary-General Boutros-Ghali has made it no secret, however, that he will resist deployment of U.N. peacekeepers until it is safe for them to operate, and no action has been taken on the U.S. request.

Even if the Security Council were to approve, the U.N. force would have to be put together, transported to Somalia and supplied in the field with food, water, ammunition, transportation and all else it would need to sustain itself.

Under the Bush administration, the United States said it wanted to remove its front-line combat troops as soon as possible but was willing to retain a large logistical force to support the U.N. peacekeepers.

Fewer than half the American troops in Somalia are combat soldiers, who consist mostly of the 9,000 Marines who were among the first to arrive.

Even if those Marines were to leave tomorrow — and they won't — the rest of the U.S. force seems destined for a long stay.

Demonstrations mark Hitler's rise

BERLIN (AP) — Germans are marking the 60th anniversary of a black date in their history with protests against racism meant to strike a strong contrast to the weakness and illusion that put Adolf Hitler in power on Jan. 30, 1933.

Hitler, controlling a third of the seats in Parliament, was chosen by elected politicians who thought he would fall if given responsibility for dealing with the Great Depression, World War I reparations and other problems afflicting a democracy only 15 years old.

Their action wrote the death sentence for the Weimar Republic. Two months later, Parliament gave Hitler the power to rule by decree, after fire gutted the Reichstag building, the seat of Parliament.

Blaming the left, Hitler declared an emergency, suspended most civil liberties and arrested thousands of Communists. A Dutch Communist was executed for the fire, but many believe it was set by the Nazis.

Jerome woman in ICU following 2-car wreck

JEROME - A Jerome woman is in the intensive care unit at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center following an accident Thursday.

Kathleen McKay, 23, of Jerome was northbound on Highway 79 on South Lincoln when her vehicle was hit on the driver's side by a pickup truck driven by Chris Kiser, 34, of Twin Falls.

McKay had to be "extricated" from her car by the Jerome Fire Department and was taken to the hospital. She was listed in serious condition Thursday night, according to a hospital spokesman.

Kiser was arrested and charged with drunken driving. The case is under investigation, according to Gerry Martinez, detective for the Jerome County Sheriff Department.

Idaho Power Milner plans include kayak launch, fishing

TWIN FALLS - Idaho Power Co. plans to build a kayak launching and fishing access area just below Milner Dam.

The project is part of the utility's license requirement for improvements at Milner, including a small hydroelectric plant, a refurbished dam and a larger plant downstream. The access area will include a gravel parking area, a toilet and a changing room.

When so-called recreational flows are released from Milner Dam - also required by the federal license - the stretch 1/2 miles below Milner is considered among the best whitewater in the country.

A similar kayak take-out and put-in point will be built just below Idaho Power's new power plant 1/2 miles downstream from Milner Dam.

Jerome man charged with grand theft by possession

JEROME - A Jerome man has been arrested and charged with grand theft by possession.

Ernest Nelson, 32, was arrested by the Jerome County sheriff's department Thursday in connection with four guns taken from Robert and Ethel Piland of Jerome County. The guns were recovered from a Jerome pawn shop, said Gerry Martinez, detective.

The guns, valued at $1,200, were reported missing Jan. 23. Nelson is being held on a $15,000 warrant.

Kimberly schools hike lunch price by 10 cents Monday

KIMBERLY - A 10 cents per lunch increase will take effect Monday in the Kimberly School District.

The district's board of trustees approved the increase because of higher costs of commodities.

The new prices will be $1 for elementary lunch, $1.10 for middle school lunch and $1.10 for high school lunch.

Changes will not effect the free or reduced student. Any family can apply for free or reduced breakfast/lunch at any time during the school year.

Prices for the Kimberly School District Food Service's breakfast will not change.

SBA will explain Economic Injury Disaster Loan program

TWIN FALLS - Representatives from the U.S. Small Business Administration will be in Twin Falls next month to explain the SBA's Economic Injury Disaster Loan program.

Those emergency loans are available to businesses hurt by drought, late frost, heavy rain or severe heat during 1992.

Small non-farm businesses and small agricultural cooperatives from 16 Idaho counties are eligible for the loans. Cassia County is the only Magic Valley county where the loans are available, and business owners there must apply for the loans by July 16.

The maximum loan is $500,000 and the interest rate is four percent, according to Thomas Bergdoll, district director of the SBA's Boise office.

SBA representatives will be at the College of Southern Idaho Feb. 9, from 7 p.m.-9 p.m. and again on Feb. 10, from 9 a.m.-noon.

Performance-audit bill returns

Newcomb hopes 3rd time's a charm for plan to evaluate how well Gem agencies function

By Drew DeSilver
Times-News writer

BOISE - For the third year in a row, House Majority Leader Bruce Newcomb has introduced a plan to allow the Legislature to evaluate how well state agencies are doing their jobs.

But he doesn't know whether this year's plan will fare any better than the previous versions.

"I don't know if that's possible," the Burley Republican said when asked if the "performance-audit" bill can get past Gov. Cecil Andrus.

In 1991, Andrus vetoed a Newcomb-sponsored performance-audit bill. Last year, Newcomb sponsored several performance-audit bills, but failed to get them through the Senate, which was split evenly between Republicans and Democrats.

The bill introduced Thursday by the House State Affairs Committee is generally similar to those past efforts.

It would authorize a legislative management systems analyst to evaluate the performance of state agencies, boards and commissions, as well as cities, counties, school districts and other taxing bodies.

Legislative log - B4

The audits would look at, among other things, how effectively programs are being administered; the cost-benefit ratios of programs; whether programs are fulfilling legislative intent; what the programs' goals are; and developing standards by which to measure the programs' success or failure.

The goal, Newcomb said, is not to harass agencies but to help them do their jobs better and to ensure that they're getting the most out of each tax dollar.

It's entirely possible, he said, that a performance audit would find that an agency needed to spend more money or add more service-level staff to do its job properly.

"The message has to be, 'We're not coming in to hack you to death. We're coming in to help you,'" Newcomb said.

The analyst would be appointed by the Legislative Council, a committee of high-ranking lawmakers that oversees legislative services. The council is dominated 8-6 by Republicans, but 11 votes would be needed to hire an analyst. Newcomb said he included that provision to make sure one party could not dominate the process.

The analyst and his or her staff would conduct performance audits under the supervision of a bipartisan Legislative Oversight Committee - again, Newcomb said, to keep the audit program independent of partisan politics.

Hagerman mayor, political foe scuffle

By Terrell Williams
Times-News correspondent

HAGERMAN - No charges have been filed in connection with a Wednesday evening scuffle between Hagerman's mayor and one of his political foes.

"It's embarrassing. We're grandpa age," said Leon Urlic, a supporter of last year's attempt to recall Mayor Jim Martin. "It was a very unfortunate deal ... It was wrong on both sides."

Martin said he was going to his car at about 6 p.m., after downing a beer at Wilson's Club, when he was accosted by Urlic.

"It's been building up since the recall," Martin said. "They've made threats and everything else."

Urlic said Thursday that he was trying to take Martin's car keys because he thought Martin shouldn't be allowed to drive. He called the incident a mutual misunderstanding.

"I was going to stop him from drinking and driving," Urlic explained. "Jim hit me first. I don't like it, but I'm not going to press charges. I'm prepared to let it go."

Martin said Urlic had been drinking, and he is considering whether to take legal action.

"I'm just deciding what to do about it, and I'll do a lot of thinking before I decide," Martin said.

The mayor said he asked that the county sheriff be called to handle the matter so people would not have an excuse to find fault with Hagerman Police Chief Curt Kaneaster.

Martin said he has been pressured by a

'It's embarrassing. We're grandpa age.'
- Leon Urlic, recall supporter few people to get rid of Kaneaster, and he alleged that Wednesday's incident was a result of his lack of response to that pressure.

Sheriff Jim Jax said he took Martin to Gooding to help "defuse the situation."

Martin said he asked for a breath test to prove he had had only one beer, and Jax said the test showed Martin was not drunk.

"He wasn't even close," Jax said.

Urlic said he could not remember whether he hit Martin or not. He said Martin was holding him by the coat and Urlic was struggling to get free. Urlic also said Martin spoke obscenities to him.

Urlic said he went to a hospital because he thought his nose was broken.

"But it wasn't, so they packed it with cotton," he said.

Jax said he is delaying any legal action until county prosecuting Attorney Philip Brown returns on Monday. But Brown may have a conflict of interest because he also is Hagerman's city attorney, appointed by Martin, Jax said.

If there is an investigation, Jax predicted it will be assisted by a neutral party, probably state officials.

Martin said there may be an investigation of people in Hagerman allegedly making threats to public officials.

"Some of these people have been doing it," he said.

Magistrate fines Chisholm for splashing paint on train

By N.S. Nokkentved
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - A Bullh man pleaded guilty Wednesday in a Pocatello magistrate court to charges of malicious injury to property for throwing red paint on a train-load of nuclear waste.

Bill Chisholm was cited in October by Pocatello city police but wasn't arrested.

Magistrate Judge A. Fred Chisholm: $300 and ordered him to pay $1,000 of restitution to the federal Department of Energy. A 10-day jail sentence was suspended, and he was given one year's probation.

Chisholm said he pleaded guilty because the judge denied his motion for a civil disobedience defense - to defend his actions in the perspective of the nuclear waste controversy.

"Justice wasn't served," he said Thursday.

Chisholm contends it is greater crime to continue sending nuclear waste to Idaho while the state is in federal court trying to stop the shipments.

He signed an agreement to pay the restitution under protest, he said. But he hopes to appeal the court ruling so he can explain his actions to a jury.

"When does a citizen have the right to stand up to the government?" he said.

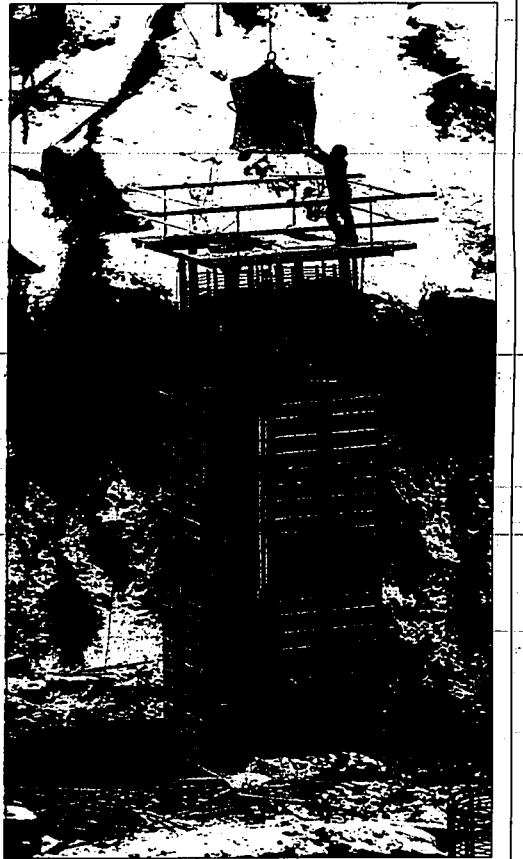

Bill Chisholm, right, was cited in October for throwing red paint on a nuclear waste train.

paint hit the last of three stainless-steel transport casks headed for the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory.

"This is just to let them know we were out here," he said at the time.

INEL's Naval Reactors Facility, where the waste was bound, called it "a senseless act."

Work in progress

Thursday's cold doesn't slow work as Wayne Ickes helps direct concrete for the construction of the Singing Bridge replacement.

Despite storms, bridge project is on schedule

By Jim Willie
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - Recent winter storms haven't halted progress to replace the Singing Bridge over Rock Creek Canyon.

Betty Byce, controller and office manager for Idaho Construction Co. in Kimberly, said the $2.3 million project is on schedule for completion this fall.

"It hasn't slowed us down any," Byce said. "The guys don't give up for any kind of weather."

Byce said crews for Idaho Construction are working on the bases to support the bridge columns on the canyon floor. Pouring concrete for the footings will be the next step, she said.

Removing some rock in the canyon added unforeseen costs to the project, but Byce said it was mostly additional labor expenses.

"We're not talking big dollars," said Byce, who did not have the amount available. "I don't see any big cost overruns. We usually cover ourselves in the bid."

The state may need additional drilling from the blasting company that was hired to bring down the old bridge last November.

Minidoka rotates elementary school principals

By Eric Goodell
Mini-Cassia News Service

RUPERT — Minidoka County elementary school principals will have an advance opportunity to get acquainted with the new schools they will administer, district officials say. Assistant Superintendent Bert Nixon said principals have been encouraged to visit the schools where they recently were assigned. "There will be some discussing, planning and getting acquainted to make the transition as smooth as possible," he said. The Minidoka County School Board recently announced it would rotate elementary school principals when the next school year begins. The announcement might have surprised some teachers, but the change will be for the better, Nixon said.

"I don't think the change should have a big impact on the good teachers," he said. The suggestion to make the rotation came up about a year ago, Nixon said. Principals were consulted, he said, and the decision was made Jan. 21.

The decision wasn't easy; there was a suggestion that the School Board delay a decision for another year, he said.

Teachers weren't told about the plan until principals notified them later in the day, Nixon said.

"Change is never easy for anybody but it's been my experience that I grow with every challenge," he said. He said some teachers are probably uncertain about what it will be like working under the new principal.

"It will be a challenge but it will be OK," said Garth Baker, who has been principal at Memorial Elementary School in Rupert for 11 years.

One of the biggest challenges, he said, will be running a larger school with older students. Baker will be transferred to Paul Elementary which has about 700 students. Memorial had only 400 students.

Other changes which were announced include Brent Perry of Paul going to Memorial, Joe Youren of Pershing going to Heyburn, Lew Roberts of Big Valley going to Acquia and Goldie McClure of Acquia going to Pershing. A new principal will be assigned to Big Valley.

Andrus delays tribal bill to seek comment

BOISE (AP) — Gov. Cecil Andrus has decided not to submit a bill to create a Commission on State-Tribal Relations until Indian leaders indicate how they feel about the plan.

Idaho Legislature 1993

The Alliance of Idaho Tribes has scheduled a Feb. 15 meeting in Seattle during the annual convention of the Affiliated Tribes of Northwest Indians to discuss its position on Andrus' commission proposal, as well as proposed reauthorization of a legislative interim committee on Indian affairs. Andrus said Thursday that after expressing conceptual support for a commission in meeting with him last fall, some tribal officials now question its potential value.

state agencies. House Speaker Michael Simpson said Thursday that some changes may be needed in Andrus' proposal. The Shoshone-Bannock Tribes' Fort Hall Business Council voted to oppose the idea even before Andrus announced it in his Jan. 11 State of the State address, and other Indian leaders have questioned whether it would promote a "government-to-government" relationship between the state and each sovereign tribe.

"The advice and wisdom of the tribal chairmen has always been important to me and I await their recommendation before proceeding with plans for a commission on Native American affairs," the governor said. "If the tribes are willing to be committed partners in a collective effort, we will have formed a worthwhile alliance. But they don't see value in it, a commission won't have much of a chance of succeeding at its mission."

The proposed commission would include six members appointed by each of the six federally recognized tribes, two gubernatorial appointees, of which one must be Indian, and two legislative appointees. It also would include 13 nonvoting members from Andrus raised the commission idea after calling a special session of the Legislature last summer to put a constitutional amendment on the ballot banning casino gaming anywhere in Idaho. The successful amendment, now being challenged by the tribes in federal court, stemmed from Indian efforts to negotiate federally mandated compacts with the state that would allow casino gaming on Idaho reservations.

Dave Vandegriff, a spokesman for Boise-Cascade Corp., said the sales are important to his company and other timber mills. "They are necessary to maintain the timber industry in Southwest Idaho and they are aimed at improving forest health," he said. Vandegriff said that if the dead and diseased trees are logged, the entire forest in the area stands a better chance of survival because healthy trees will have less competition for water and nutrients. But Medberry said the issue of forest health is being used as a smoke screen. "Salvage logging has been the biggest excuse for continuing business as usual in the forest," he said.

Boise Forest wants to sell timber killed by insects

BOISE (AP) — Environmentalists and logging companies could see a soon over proposed timber sale in the Boise National Forest.

The Boise Forest wants to sell about 5.5 million board feet of timber — enough wood to build 550 three-bedroom homes — killed by insects and dwarf mistletoe.

Included in the offering is a 1.5 million board-foot sale that would include trees in the Grape Mountain roadless area, about four miles east of Arrow Rock Dam. Mike Medberry, with the Idaho Conservation League, said he wasn't familiar with the sale, but had concerns about any logging in roadless areas.

"It's premature to start developing roadless areas until Congress has a chance to look at them for wilderness potential," he said.

Senator blasts Bumpers proposal

The Associated Press

A mining bill unveiled in the Senate could wreck rather than reform an already-struggling industry, Sen. Larry Craig contends. The Idaho Republican said Thursday that proposed reforms to the 1872 Mining Act offered by Sen. Dale Bumpers, D-Ark., fly in the face of reforms and compromises offered by western senators last year.

Craig said if Bumpers' proposals are approved, several states — particularly in the West — could see an exodus of mining jobs to foreign countries.

"Everyone knows this bill will cost thousands of jobs and losses in federal and state revenues," he said.

Pension or pay choice faces leaders

BOISE (AP) — Republican legislative leaders say money is so tight public employees may have to choose between pension improvements and pay increases.

But the House-Senate committee reviewing state employee pay was told Thursday that state workers need both along with adequate funding for health insurance. "It should not be an either-or situation," said Vicki Patterson, lobbyist for the Idaho Public Employee Association and Idaho State Police workers. "They deserve real money."

"Don't take money from employees for programs," she said. The Legislature last year financed the first of a four-phase pension improvement plan. But with Republicans committed to holding the line on taxes this year, the tight revenue picture has GOP leaders talking about dropping the second phase, which would save the state $1.8 million and school districts more than $3 million.

Warren Lundquist, representing unionized public service workers, claimed that amounted to reneging on last year's deal.

Highway projects law fails to cement demand for recycled glass

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — The Idaho Legislature passed a law last year that was supposed to chip away at the state's glut of recycled glass by encouraging, but not mandating, its use in state highway projects.

But the effort has stalled. The push to create a demand for recycled glass has left consumers and commercial recyclers with a market that remains depressed and growing stockpiles of a nearly worthless material.

Consumers continue taking their glass to the recyclers still willing to accept it. But they aren't getting paid. In fact, commercial recyclers say the market price of $35 to $40 a ton barely allows them to break even after labor and the cost of shipping to recycling mills.

Recyclers who still accept glass say they do so as a public service. They also hope consumers will bring in aluminum and other materials that have some value.

Last year's legislation, which took effect July 1, was supposed to encourage the use of recycled products, particularly glass, in asphalt and roadbeds. It was aimed at keeping thousands of tons of glass from ending up in Idaho's landfills each year, while helping out recyclers.

It permitted 0.5 percent, or $935,000, of the state highway distribution account to be spent on recycled materials for road construction. The account is funded by fuel taxes, license and permit fees and other highway user fees.

But the traditional raw material for road construction — rock — can be purchased for much less than what recyclers say they must get for glass. So the Idaho Department of Transportation has bought no glass for road construction. It does buy tiny glass beads for reflective striping paint.

Transportation officials say laws requiring them to accept the lowest responsible bids for materials bar them from paying more for glass than rock, and Idaho does not generate nearly enough glass to make its use economical.

The Transportation Department has offered commercial recyclers a compromise. In a one-time deal, it will pay $5 per ton for the crushed glass recyclers have on hand. It also has a standing offer of $4 a ton for whole bottles.

"That's the best we can do, we feel," said Hugh Lydston, Transportation Department deputy director.

So far no one has taken the state up on its offers. Lydston said the state Transportation Board will take up the price issue when it meets with a Twin Falls recycler on Feb. 18 and 19.

Christy Hamilton of American Recycling in Idaho Falls pushed for the glass law and when it passed began stockpiling glass she thought the state would buy. She stopped accepting glass on Jan. 1.

"We have a year and a half supply sitting on hand," Hamilton said. "All we're trying to do is get a good, permanent home for it."

She contends the Transportation Department has simply decided it does not want to deal with the issue. But Lydston said the department faces legal obstacles to using recycled glass.

Boise churches seek support in stopping anti-gay plan

BOISE (AP) — Two Boise churches are asking others to join them in opposition of what they say is a discriminatory measure proposed by the Idaho Citizens Alliance.

Tom Tucker, senior pastor at First United Methodist Church, and John Thornton, bishop for the Episcopal Diocese of Idaho, plan to announce their opposition to the proposed measure at a Friday news conference.

The ICA plans to introduce a measure prohibiting extending civil rights protection specifically to gays. The measure being introduced in Idaho by Kelly Walton won't be worded exactly like Oregon's Measure 5, which was defeated last fall and would have required the state to define homosexuality as "abnormal, wrong, unnatural and perverse," Walton said.

An aerial ambulance from the First United Methodist Church from 1983 until 1990, said he doesn't care what the wording of Walton's measure is. It's the intent that bothers him.

"The thing that's upsetting to us, is they're using the slogan 'no special rights,' which is one of those slogans that means exactly the opposite. They want to deny basic protection of rights," Tucker said. "Our feeling is you do not need to discriminate against a certain group of people. Who's next?"

Thornton said he presented the statement to 36 of his regional clergy during a Wednesday meeting and it was "enthusiastically received."

Walton said he's not surprised at the public opposition of the Methodist and Episcopal churches to ICA's measure, because they were the most vocal in opposition of Measure 9.

"We did not expect otherwise," Walton said. He said the wording for ICA's Idaho proposal should be completed in early February.

Metropolitan Community Church Worship Coordinator Darlene — who asked her last name not be used — boosts a largely gay and lesbian congregation and welcomed the support of the Methodist and Episcopal churches.

"Even though people might not believe in homosexuality, they dislike bigotry even more," she said.

ISU cancels rapper's appearance

POCATELLO (AP) — An Idaho State University student group has cancelled rapper Ice-T's scheduled Feb. 18 speaking engagement because local police refused to provide security for the controversial star's appearance.

Jeff Klinger, issues and speakers chairman for The Associated Students of Idaho State University, said Thursday that lack of security was the main reason for the cancellation.

"We feel that we cannot adequately ensure the safety of students and others in attendance at the lecture," Klinger said. "Because of these safety concerns, we cannot, in good conscience, continue with the program."

Pocatello 10 police and Bannock County sheriff's officials objected to Ice-T's rap song "Cop Killer," about an angry young black man's hatred for police. The song sold 200,000 copies in its first two months and put Ice-T at the center of a national controversy last year.

The song includes the line: "I'm 'bout to dust some cops off. ... Die, die, die, pig-die."

Warner Bros. Records defended Ice-T's right to record the song, which the rapper eventually announced would be dropped from the album. But in protest, police around the country have refused to provide security at Ice-T concerts, forcing him to cancel several.

ISU student leaders said a proposed contract for the Pocatello appearance called for Ice-T to be paid $7,000 plus $800 to cover expenses. But the agreement was never signed so the student organization is not obligated to pay for the cancelled speech.

University President Richard Bowen said he would do the university with the Ice-T appearance.

"It's not a selection I would have made, not one I feel would do the university much good," he said, "but in keeping with the role of the university, we do protect free speech."

Klinger said the ISU Student Senate had passed a resolution Monday requiring minors to be accompanied by an adult to the lecture.

He said the program board heard rumors that gang members from Salt Lake City and Pocatello might try to attend. The possibility of a "conflict in the parking lot" from people prevented from attending the lecture was "a gamble I'm not willing to take," Klinger said.

Bowen: Education costs not bad in Idaho

POCATELLO (AP) — As state legislators struggle to accommodate spiraling spending demands without raising taxes, the president of Idaho State University says as stark as the financial reality may be, things could be worse.

"Everybody's always talking about a tight budget climate, but things are not that bad in Idaho," Richard Bowen said. "This is a financial reality, but it's not as bad as it's being made out to be."

Bowen said Idaho's higher education funding compares very well with many other western states. Some like Oregon have been forced to make drastic cutbacks in state support for higher education.

In Idaho, lawmakers are grappling with Democratic Gov. Cecil Andrus' sweeping tax revision that pumps another $55 million into state spending. With that additional cash, Andrus proposed an 8 percent increase in state aid to the four colleges.

But Republican lawmakers, committed to holding the line on taxes, have begun toyding with a scaled-back spending scheme that would provide just a 5 percent increase.

Still, in Bowen's view, that beats seeing the support actually reduced.

"In no way do I think we're facing some kind of disaster," he said. "It's kind of amusing how people are always trying to find the rotten apple in the barrel. When it gets rotten we'll talk about that."

Couple stranded in snow may head home

RENO, Nev. (AP) — A couple who lost parts of both feet to frostbite after being snowbound more than a week in remote northwest Nevada may be heading home to the San Francisco Bay area next week, a family spokesman said.

"The doctors are talking about it being the first part of the week," said Kevin Mulligan. "Still, nothing is yet absolutely confirmed."

Denise Yoxsimer, a spokeswoman for Washoe Medical Center, said she had the same report, but as of late Thursday had not been able to confirm it with hospital officials or with James and Jennifer Stolpas's doctors.

An aerial ambulance company in Hayward, Calif., has been contacted to pick up the Stolpas on either Monday or Tuesday, according to Jane Weirick, a flight coordinator for Air Ambulance Inc.

She said Air Ambulance had offered its services free of charge to the family earlier this month, and was contacted by the family on Wednesday afternoon.

Ms. Yoxsimer said the Stolpas both were in satisfactory condition following their surgery and were back in their hospital room with their 5-month-old son, Clayton, who survived the ordeal with them.

Legislative log

Introduced in House — HB109 (Health and Welfare) — Amends Department of Health and Welfare rule to allow permit fees of $50 for indoor swimming pools and half the indoor fee for outdoor pools.

HB102 (Resources and Conservation) — Urges Congress to modify the Endangered Species Act to give necessary consideration to social and economic issues faced by the people who live and work in Idaho.

HB100 (Resources and Conservation) — Increases nonresident license, tag and permit fees for hunting and fishing; raises estimated $3.8 million per year.

HB101 (Resources and Conservation) — Gives corporations which manage, operate and maintain irrigation or canal systems flexibility in assessing stock shares.

HB102 (Revenue and Taxation) — Frezes market values used for property tax assessment purposes on home which is the primary dwelling place of homeowners who are 65 years or older.

HB103 (Revenue and Taxation) — Reinstates the production exemption for contract miners which was inadvertently removed in a 1991 amendment.

HB104 (Revenue and Taxation) — Amends the 1980 law which limits general fund spending to 5.33 percent of total personal income in Idaho to 6 percent.

HB105 (State Affairs) — Amends definitions of "adjustment and manipulation" as it applies to the practice of chiropractic services and provides that individuals licensed in another profession or occupation are exempt from provisions of the chiropractic licensing chapter.

Introduced in Senate — SB1026 (Health and Welfare) — Requires rules, regulations and policies of the Department of Health and Welfare or the Board of Health and Welfare protecting public health to be no more stringent than federal law, rules or policies.

SB1027 (Education) — Allows public school students to transfer to another school within the home district.

SB1028 (Education) — Makes changes in number of hours and days public schools must be in session; gives state superintendent of public instruction authority to grant exemptions for pilot programs, educational research or experimental projects.

SB1029 (Education) — Provides that sponsors of a recall election shall file petitions with the school board not less than six months before the next regular election in which the trustee whose recall is petitioned is subject to re-election.

SB1030 (Resources and Environment) — Gives director of Department of Water Resources authority to develop, coordinate and provide for weather modification projects.

SB1031 (Judiciary and Rules) — Clarifies what proceeds are subject to forfeiture if seized under the Uniform Controlled Substances Act.

SB1032 (Judiciary and Rules) — Allows for early release of state prison inmates if overcrowding conditions exist for at least four weeks.

SB1033 (Resources and Environment) — Allows a landowner to bury as well as move a lateral ditch or buried irrigation canal of another on his own property.

Some offices may violate record law

BOISE (AP) — Some Boise city departments apparently have violated the state's Public Records Law by charging too much for copies of public documents, an opinion from the Idaho Attorney General's office stated.

Charging more than the cost of copies discourages public access to information and violates the intent of the law, Francis Walker, deputy attorney general, wrote in an opinion requested by the Idaho Press Club.

Mayor Brent Coles said he had not seen the opinion yet, but would consider changes. "It's certainly our intent to comply with the law."

Cash shortage threatens building

BOISE (AP) — The chairman of the House Appropriations Committee made clear on Thursday that without additional cash, the state's public building construction program will grind to a halt.

Revenue in the building account is currently running more than $9 million under the spending authorized by the Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee.

And only cash infusions in the past and increased reliance on debt financing through bonds and other schemes have kept the fund in the black.

"This committee continues to fund its favorite projects legislatively without having the money," Chairman Kathleen Gurnsey, R-Boise, said, "We don't have any money to build any more buildings."

It only added to the financial problems plaguing legislative budget writers now that the days of unanticipated cash surpluses have disappeared and spending demands keep pushing well beyond available revenues.

The crunch is creating a real test of the GOP will to avoid any significant tax increase.

Democratic Gov. Cecil Andrus has proposed a sweeping tax restructuring that would provide $47 million in property tax relief, add another $55 million to ease budgeting pressures and pump $35 million into the building account over the next two years.

That $35 million would come from the administration's plan to require self-employed businessmen and people with large amounts of unearned income from investments or other sources to pay state income tax every three months instead of once a year.

The quarterly payment requirement would apply only to those people who already have to pay federal income tax every three years. Supporters contend it will equalize a collection system where wage-earners currently have their taxes withheld every paycheck.

Ruin looms for sand dunes

Scientists fight to preserve community in a most unexpected place

ROCK SPRINGS, Wyo. (AP) — The world's second largest active sand dune is in a most unexpected place — more than a mile above sea level in southwestern Wyoming.

The Killpecker Sand Dunes team with life, from the graceful desert elk to the resourceful Jerusalem crickets and the spiny-foot roads that shovel out holes with their hind feet and back themselves in during the day.

The sands themselves seem to writhe in a slow motion dance with the mighty, constant winds. Such winds first began scraping the earth to create the dunes 20,000 years ago near the end of the last glacial age.

Scientists and federal environmentalists keen to preserve at least part of the 170 square miles of dunes hope to get Congress to designate some of it worthy of protection from the one creature that doesn't live here naturally — humans. They drive in to hunt and ride in on dune buggies to play.

From the air, the Killpecker resembles a snake trailing 100 miles nearly straight west and east, 3 to 13 miles wide in places and pock-marked by waterholes and scarred by the crude roads the vehicles trace.

The eastern end starts about 150 miles west of Cheyenne. The western end is 200 miles northeast of Salt Lake City. Comprising roughly one cubic mile of sand, the Killpecker is second only to the active dunes found in the Sahara in North Africa.

Animal tracks crisscross the Killpecker's desert waves. But it's the tracks humans make that bothers federal wildlife specialist Andy Tenney, who worries about harm to the fragile desert ecosystem.

"The unstable dunes are sensitive," Tenney said. "You don't want to break down the dune community by having people drive on them."

To that end, Tenney and others at the Rock Springs District of the U.S. Bureau of Land Management are asking Congress to designate federal wilderness protection for the western and most unstable section of the dunes 30 miles north of Rock Springs where shifting sands soar as high as 150 feet.

A study was completed in 1991 and the federal land management agency is now awaiting a congressional decision on the proposed Wyoming Public Lands Wilderness Act, which includes protection for the dunes. A grant of federal protection would provide money to enforce preservation of the dunes against unwanted traffic and oil and mineral developers.

Local officials say they expect the bill to pass.

For the time being, signs intended to ward off intruders are posted every 100 feet along outlying roads.

U.S. Bureau of Land Management wildlife specialist Andy Tenney kneels on the second largest active sand dune in the world, Killpecker Sand Dune, which stretches more than 100 miles from east to west.

They're evidently ignored, judging by the signs shot down and flattened. "Every hunting season, these roads that are just about to recover, people drive on them," Tenney said.

The penalty is a $100 fine — if violators can be caught. "To me, it's just like a slap on the wrist," said Tenney, whose colleagues nicknamed "Sandman" because he dotes on the remote stretch he visits once or twice a week.

Many others have found much pleasure in this place. "Hikers, wildlife spectators, campers, nature study groups and scientists know the area. It's also one of the best spots in the country to fly a kite."

Dune buggy riders may use a 10,500-acre patch just east of the area under study. They find the Wyoming dunes ideal because they are unusually long and flat.

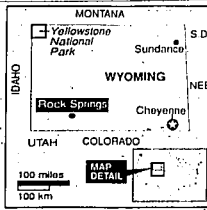

"Everybody raves about it. You hang with the buggy crowd and you hear about these places and you have to search them out," said Mark Russo, a recent visitor from Lafayette, Colo.

Buggy riders also need to stinky the dunes.

They must watch for steep slopes that hide ponds below. Part of the buggy area is an active gas field, so it's necessary to keep eyes out for pipelines that poke through the sand.

Doug Varilek doesn't mind. "As long as it's sand, we love it," said Varilek of Thornton, Colo., as he roared straight over a dune in his remodeled Volkswagen bug.

"You're like a little kid in a sandbox." The sandbox has been growing thanks to nearly a decade of drought. "We've got a sand dune that in the 20 years, I've been here. It's grown a couple times and advanced across the road one year and died back and stabilized," said Jim Dunder, a biologist with the Bureau of Land Management. Because of the drought, he said, the dune is now around the middle of the road.

It's not always the most comfortable playground, though. "You better run around there in the morning because by noon the wind is sandblasting," Dunder said.

Water also comes with this wild terrain. In winter, blowing sand covers patches of snow and ice that accumulate on the sheltered side of the dunes. These so-called iceboxes in the sand melt in summer to form freshwater ponds.

Sixty to 80 ponds dot the landscape, some 12 feet deep. They host salamanders and freshwater shrimp and white, eyeless jugs with big stingers. "You don't want to run around barefoot," Dunder advised. The sand holds many other treasures.

As Tenney walked along the dunes recently showing visitors around, he pointed out more signs of life, the black pellet-like elk droppings, the clumps of silver buffalo berry, the grasses and sagebrush.

The country's only known desert elk herd also inhabits the dunes. The herd died off before the turn of the century and elk were transplanted back to the area in the 1940s and 1950s. Numbering about 1,000 in the mid-'70s, the elk population has declined to about 500.

The desert elk prove a strong attraction to companies filming wildlife. The majesty of elk surrounded by a desert backdrop and striking features like the Bear's Tusk, a 400-foot volcanic monolith, has entertained more than one moviegoer.

"It'd be hard to duplicate our sand dunes anywhere else because of the unique plant and animal species that occupy them," Dunder said. "It's probably not very well known... but they are unique."

Beef processor welcomes Jack in the Box business

WILDER (AP) — SSI Food Services Inc. officials have mixed emotions about adding a major fast-food chain to its customer list as a result of people being poisoned by tainted hamburger at Jack in the Box restaurants.

"We're happy for the increase in business, but this isn't the way we'd like to get it," SSI President Kirk Smith said.

Jack in the Box officials announced on Wednesday they were dropping their current meat supplier, The Vons Cos. of Arcadia, Calif., following an outbreak of bacterial infections linked to undercooked hamburgers at some of the chain's restaurants in Idaho, Washington, Nevada and California.

SSI currently processes 2.5 million to 3 million pounds of meat products each week for several national fast-food chains, Smith said.

More than 400 cases of E. coli bacterial infection have been reported in Western states, primarily Washington and Nevada, and one child has died after eating the tainted meat, which Jack in the Box said it got from The Vons Cos. in November. Most of the suspect beef was shipped to restaurants in Washington and Idaho.

"It's a very unfortunate circumstance for the fast food industry as well as the beef industry," Smith said. "Both industries are concerned about it."

Northwest, Nevada and northern California.

"We monitor and select our raw material very carefully and deal with people who are very reputable," he said. "The fast food industry has very tight specifications."

Health officials have said the meat most likely became contaminated during slaughter, but bacteria could have been killed by thorough cooking. Federal epidemiologists and agricultural inspectors are trying to trace the beef to the slaughterhouse of origin.

Jack in the Box has announced it has changed its cooking standards to cook burgers more thoroughly.

He said SSI has a U.S. Department of Agriculture certified micro-biology laboratory on site and no beef leaves the plant without being checked for bacteria.

Washington judge pushes for resolution of civil-rights case

SPOKANE (AP) — Eastern Washington's chief federal judge says he'll preside if a jury trial is necessary to resolve a Gypsy family's $40 million civil-rights lawsuit against the city and Spokane County.

But if attorneys agree to resume a non-jury trial suspended in September, U.S. District Judge Justin Quackenbush said he will recommend that a federal judge in Seattle preside.

U.S. District Judge William Dwyer could conclude the case after reading the transcript of testimony taken before Judge Robert McNichols' ill health forced suspension of the bench trial last fall, Quackenbush said Wednesday.

McNichols, who died of cancer Dec. 20, had worked out an agreement with parties in the case to expedite resolution of the lawsuit filed by the families of Grover and Judy Markley over 1986 police raids. The families contend they were targeted because of their ethnic background.

Attorneys agreed last April to resolve the 1989 lawsuit in a non-jury trial with no chance of appeal. The city and county admitted liability for civil-rights infringements during the raid and the Gypsies dropped their right to seek punitive damages against individual police officers.

McNichols was to decide whether to award the plaintiffs any of the $40 million in damages they sought.

But the April agreement also contained a provision nullifying the plan if McNichols was unable to conclude the case. He suspended proceedings midway through the September trial, which was to have lasted 12 days.

If the parties don't agree to Dwyer's taking over for McNichols, Quackenbush said he would submit the case to judges for consideration.

If they also are rejected, Quackenbush said he would preside in a jury trial.

Oregon senator says he'll fight sex harassment charges

EUGENE, Ore. (AP) — Sen. Bob Packwood plans to challenge the stories of women who have accused him of sexual harassment, and won't rule out trying to use information about their sexual histories if it will help him.

"Am I not to be allowed to question their stories?" Packwood said in an interview in today's The Register-Guard of Eugene. "I certainly don't want to give the impression that statements that we now know can add a much broader context (to the issue) will simply go unchallenged."

Packwood said he wants the Senate Ethics Committee to hear from witnesses to whom his accusers "told a different story or a slightly different version of events than they're telling now."

"Asked why his accusers and their stories mattered if they had resisted his advances, Packwood replied, "Before the ethics committee, we will investigate that."

"The attorneys will make the decision and the ethics committee, of course, will determine what is admissible evidence," he said in an interview in Salem today with The Associated Press.

"Is it fair that somebody complains about my conduct, but (says) 'I don't want to be questioned, and I don't want anybody to put me under oath, and I don't want to appear in court, and they should be no right to present any other information?'"

In December, Packwood called his actions "unwelcome and insensitive" and apologized, offering "to take full responsibility for my conduct."

"I was recanting what he was recanting his earlier apology for his conduct, Packwood said, "That will all come out before the ethics committee."

Maura Roche was one of the women who accused Packwood of improper behavior, saying he read sexually explicit jokes to her when she worked as intern in his office in 1989.

Reacting to Packwood's comments Wednesday, Roche said "He's going to do the same kinds of behaviors that make women afraid to come forward. It's the old-fashioned way of thinking that you deserve rape or you deserve any kind of abuse."

Packwood said his statements were not intended to frighten away women who might be called before the committee. But he said he didn't mind if his tactics deterred who women wouldn't be truthful under oath.

Packwood is making his first trip to Oregon since The Washington Post reported in November the sexual misconduct allegations by 10 women who worked with or for him during a 23-year period.

The visit has been marked by protests. Many have involved only a handful of people, but Wednesday evening 200 hostile demonstrators gathered outside the Corvallis Gazette-Times, where Packwood was giving another interview.

Supporters locked arms and escorted Packwood, and his chief of staff, Elaine Franklin, from the building. As Packwood stepped outside, protesters closed in, jostling and jeering him.

Packwood has repeatedly refused to discuss specifics about the allegations.

Break in winter

Sam Davis of Pendleton, Ore., soaks up some afternoon sun in the spring-like weather this week. The temperatures hit the low 50s in mid-week, with forecasts calling for more mild weather.

A subway system grows in LaLa Land

LOS ANGELES (AP) — After decades of dependence on smog-belching automobiles, the city where cars are king of the road ushers in a new era in transportation Saturday: its first modern subway.

City officials call the Metro Red Line "the backbone of a regional rail network that, when completed in 2010, will carry as many as 500,000 passengers a day across Southern California."

"After years of dreaming and working for this subway system, it's a magnificent moment for the residents of the city of Los Angeles," said Mayor Tom Bradley, one of the subway's most ardent supporters.

The first leg of the Red Line will connect the downtown Union Station with MacArthur Park in the city's Wilshire District. Two stainless-steel rail cars traveling at 70 mph will make the 4.4-mile trip in seven minutes.

Art ranging from flashy neon sculptures to flying fiberglass figures is displayed in the five stations, which are as graffiti-proof as designers could make them. Tile was used liberally at each stop.

There will be no turnstiles or ticket takers.

Tickets for the $1.10 fare can be purchased at subway stations from ATM-like machines with talking video screens. Riders are on their honor when they get on the subway or cars because no one will collect tickets.

Fare inspectors will make spot checks from time to time, asking riders for proof that they purchased tickets. Violators will be subject to Riders will be on the honor system when they board Los Angeles' new Metro Red Line subway trains.

Officials have done away with turnstiles. Ticket takers, too. Transit notice will make spot checks, asking riders for proof of ticket purchase.

Offenders will be subject to $90 to $250 fines, said Lou Hubaud, director of safety and security for the Los Angeles County Transportation Commission.

The honor system is already in use on the county's Blue Line, a rail system carrying commuters from Long Beach to downtown Los Angeles.

"It's worked fantastically," said Stephanie Brady, a spokeswoman for the county transportation commission. "We've had 95 to 99 percent compliance."

Tickets can be purchased at subway stations from ATM-like machines with talking video screens. The fare is $1.10 one way. Transfers will cost 25 cents.

Hubaud said officials chose to use a turnstile-free system to save money—buying a fare-collection system would cost more than the amount likely to be lost to cheaters, he said.

"You save yourself a considerable amount of money in capital outlay for the expensive equipment you would need people to go through," he said.

Nell Peterson, executive director of the Los Angeles County Transportation Commission, said critics were wrong to think transportation officials were pinning all their hopes for smog and traffic reduction on the Red Line.

"It's only part of the solution," he said. "Over the next 30 years, we're also going to be trying to increase bus ridership and ride-sharing programs and expand other transit programs."

The subway's opening comes 52 years after dedication of the city's first freeway, the six-mile Arroyo Seco Parkway, later upgraded and renamed the Pasadena Freeway. The city now has a 510-mile freeway system.

"The Red Line symbolizes the fact that we are moving in a new direction in public transportation," Peterson said.

The first segment of the Red Line, which cost $1.45 billion, will link the county's Metrolink and Blue Line train services.

Metrolink began operating last October, carrying commuters from the suburban communities of Moorpark, Santa Clarita and Claremont into downtown Los Angeles during rush hours. The Blue Line serves Long Beach.

Los Angeles has tried underground transportation before. In 1924, workers began constructing a one-mile tunnel carrying Pacific Electric Railway "Red Cars." The line ran until 1955.

But the Red Line is the city's most ambitious attempt at duplicating the success of New York, Tokyo and other metropolises.

Nevada ethics panel to rule on donations

CARSON CITY (AP) — The state Ethics Commission is expected to recommend that donations from a university foundation go through the Board of Regents before being given to professors or other beneficiaries.

The commission held a telephone conference meeting Wednesday to discuss an opinion being drafted in response to a question by Carl Looney, a computer science associate professor at the University of Nevada, Reno.

Looney has said the UNR Foundation improperly supplemented the salaries of various university officials and supplied cars to four vice presidents.

He said the practice violates state ethics law, which prohibits public employees from getting compensation from private sources for the performance of public duties.

The opinion is expected to serve as a guideline for all groups that raise funds for a university or college.

During the meeting, Ethics Commission Chairman Thomas "Spike" Wilson said the issue of whether foundations are public or private may not have to be addressed in the opinion.

The commission indicated its opinion probably will state that once donations from any source are transferred to the Board of Regents, the money becomes public.

The public money then could be allocated by the regents to professors or others in line with any guidelines set up by the original donors.

Seattle Times

SEATTLE — Ten days after notification of a major food-poisoning incident, a food handler on Mercer Island was still not cooking hamburgers at regulation temperature, health officials say.

Inspectors, who were sent to the restaurant Tuesday because a food handler has hepatitis A, found the grill was not working properly: It was cooking burgers at 13 to 17 degrees below the state-required 155 degrees.

Contaminated and possibly undercooked hamburger patties served in the restaurant chain has led to the food poisoning of more than 250 Washington state residents since Jan. 3. At least 69 have been hospitalized, and one child has died from poisoning by E. coli O157:H7 bacteria.

The Mercer Island Grill in the Box is closed until the grill is certified as operating properly by an outside expert, said Carl Osaki, acting chief of environmental health for the Seattle-King County Health Department.

"We have to be assured by them in writing that the problem will not continue," Osaki said.

Robert Nugent, president of Jack-in-the-Box at the last week, that the grill in all of the chain's restaurants had been checked for proper operation and that all personnel had been retrained in proper cooking procedures.

Health officials said the restaurant Wednesday also had no soap and towels for worker hand washing — the third hand-washing violation at the restaurant this month. And they said there was raw meat touching items such as lettuce that was not to be cooked.

Osaki said he wants written assurance that those problems, as well, will not recur.

"We haven't seen the Health Department report, but rest assured we'll be investigating it fully," said Sherie Zizzi, a spokeswoman in Jack in the Box's San Diego headquarters. "Our procedures clearly outline proper hygiene, food storage and cooking in accordance with state standards."

The worker with hepatitis A, meanwhile, may have infected dozens of customers. (The infection is not related to the E. coli contamination.)

Health Department officials said customers who ate sandwiches at the restaurant on Jan. 18, 19, 22 or 23 from 6 a.m. to 3 p.m. could be infected.

Within 14 days of eating there, they should get injections of immune globulin, which carries hepatitis A antibodies and can prevent the illness.

The injections are available from private physicians, health-department clinics or hospital emergency rooms.

Anyone who has had immune globulin in the past three months or has had laboratory-confirmed infection with the hepatitis A virus does not need an injection, the Health Department said.

Hepatitis A is caused by a virus found in feces. It causes an enlarged liver, yellowing of the skin, clay-colored stools and stomach problems.

New York group pushes Colorado boycott

Chip Duckett, a spokesman for the group that he estimated has about 75 members.

"We plan to tell everyone we can that Colorado has passed a very discriminatory law," Duckett said.

He was referring to Amendment 2. It would ban laws that prohibit discrimination against homosexuals and bisexuals based on their sexual orientation. More than 53 percent of state voters voted to pass it in November, and Colorado has not been quite the same since then.

The state has become a national battleground for gay rights. City councils of several major cities, including New York City, have banned official travel here. And millions of dollars have been lost to the Colorado economy when a dozen or so groups canceled conventions in the state.

That toll increased Wednesday, when the American Mathematical Society officially informed Denver convention officials it has dropped the state as its convention site for January 1994.

That's a $3.6 million loss in business, the second-largest convention to turn its back on Colorado because of Amendment 2.

More bad news came Sunday, when the national board of the American Civil Liberties Union overwhelmingly voted to endorse the boycott. The Colorado chapter of the ACLU is maintaining a neutral stance, mainly because it is involved in a lawsuit seeking to overturn the amendment.

The formation of New York Boycott Colorado is a new twist in the Amendment 2 backlash. It is the first group started outside Colorado with the sole aim of promoting economic warfare on the state.

There is a Denver-based group called Boycot Colorado, with which the New York group keeps in contact, but Duckett said the Manhattan group is "completely autonomous."

"For people outside of Colorado, we have to keep the pressure on and we just wanted independence to do that without having to answer to people in Colorado," he said.

New York Boycott Colorado has two goals: Stop money and people from flowing into Colorado and stop Colorado companies from making money in New York City.

For example, the group has targeted Neoplan U.S.A. Corp., a Lamar, Colo.-based bus manufacturer trying to sell buses to New York City's transportation department. Duckett said his group will try to derail that deal by picketing and COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. — A new gay rights group in Manhattan has taken the idea of saying no to Colorado and New Yorked it.

Their target: Amendment 2. Their goal: Boycott Colorado. Their approach: in your face.

They are New York Boycott Colorado, less than a month old but already claiming two victories won in a scrappy, confrontational style.

Television personality Connie Chung is no longer going to speak Friday to the Grand Junction Chamber of Commerce partly because the New York boycott group passed out thousands of leaflets to subway commuters that included the CBS broadcaster's office and fax machine numbers. "Does Connie Chung endorse discrimination?" the leaflet asked.

Wednesday, Self magazine decided to drop a weekend sales conference in Aspen after the boycott group and its supporters, the Lesbian Avengers, raided the magazine's offices and momentarily trapped the editor in her office because she reportedly feared the Avengers were armed.

"This is New York. The only way people pay attention to you here is get in their face and scream," said

Watercolor enthusiasts set meeting for mid-February

TWIN FALLS — The South Central Region of the Idaho Watercolor Society has planned its meeting for 7 p.m. Feb. 11 in Room A06 of the Evergreen Building at the College of Southern Idaho campus.

The meeting will feature a slide show of the Idaho Watercolor Society Membership Exhibition held last year in Boise. Also shown will be slides of paintings by Nita Leland, of Dayton, Ohio, who will be teaching workshops and judging this year's exhibition.

Anyone interested in watercolor painting is invited to attend. For more information, call 326-4938 or 733-4547.

Young writers sought for competition, savings bonds

BOISE — Twelve young Idaho writers will receive a $100 savings bond, have their work published in an issue of Boise Weekly newspaper and be given an opportunity to participate in a public reading event this summer.

High schools throughout the state have been notified of the first Young Writers Competition sponsored by IJA Productions with support from First Security Bank.

The contest is open to junior and senior high school students who are residents of Idaho. Entrants may submit up to three poems, short stories, essays, fiction, history, biography or other writing, but only one work per entrant may win. Content should be appropriate for public display. All entries will become the property of IJA Productions and will not be returned.

Entries must be postmarked no later than midnight Feb. 12 and should be addressed to Young Writers Competition, IJA Productions, 2950 Selkirk Drive, Boise, ID 83702. Hand deliveries will not be accepted.

Interested students should contact their English/literature teachers for more information.

Spielberg pursues film plans in Auschwitz, despite uproar

NEW YORK — Film director Steven Spielberg has given assurances that any filming he does at the Auschwitz concentration camp in Poland will be done with dignity, and he will meet with Jewish leaders to discuss the project next month, the World Jewish Congress has reported.

Spielberg, most widely known for directing blockbuster entertainers such as "E.T.," "The Extraterrestrial" and "Jaws," initially planned to erect a fake gas chamber at the death camp and hire hundreds of extras for the film "Schindler's List." The plans drew objections by the WJC, which is based in New York, and the Auschwitz Museum's International Council.

"The problem was survivors of the death camp and museum authorities were opposed to any commercial filming at Auschwitz, which is the largest Jewish graveyard in the world," Israel Singer, secretary general of the WJC, said. "We have trust in Mr. Spielberg and accept his word that he will use only documentary-type footage in black and white to distinguish it from the story train and won't use extras," Singer said. More than 1.5 million Jews died at Auschwitz.

Variety show benefit takes Valentine's Day to heart

By Denise Turner
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The word is "love."

Partly because Valentine's Day is coming soon, but mostly because of the word's broader meaning — love is the theme of Saturday's Mental Health Variety Show.

"Love comes in many forms, but, when you are dealing with mental illness, love has to come from the heart," said variety show chairperson Joanne Weston. This year's program is entitled "Color of Love."

Tickets on sale

The 10th annual Mental Health Variety Show, Color of Love, is set for 7:30 p.m. Saturday in the College of Southern Idaho Fine Arts Auditorium. Tickets — $5 for adults, $4 for students and senior citizens — are available at Little Red Hen, The Homestead and Venzon Jewelry or at the door.

It's dedicated to the memory of Mosell Nora, a longtime advocate for mental health and former vice president of the Mental Health Association board. She died in 1990. Her son, Bob, will perform her favorite song in the show. It's entitled "Navaho Princess."

Bob Nora, well known in the Magic Valley as the leader of the Bob Nora Band, will play the saxophone, clarinet and flute in the program. He will also sing.

Joining him will be John Caviness on guitar, Cheri Chandler will sing and play piano.

Popularity of Utah film festival threatens its roots

By John Horn
The Associated Press

PARK CITY, Utah — Like many 15-year-olds, the Sundance Film Festival is struggling with its identity.

Robert Redford founded the festival for independent film makers and hopes it will remain true to its roots when it grows up. But Hollywood agents, studio executives and curiosity seekers threaten to lure the adolescent away from the apron strings.

Out-of-state attendance for the week-long program of 80 dramatic and documentary films soared 20 percent to 5,000 this year.

And the festival's modest appeal has been transformed into an extravaganza of parties and deal-making.

"As far as I'm concerned, it'll be bad if it expands past this," Redford said. "Once we start to expand just to suit the outside need, rather than our initial purpose — which is to support the film maker — we lose."

Redford produced his film "A River Runs Through It" independently because no studio would finance it.

The mountain resort, with a population of 2,800, is overflowing with movie lovers, film makers, producers, reporters, studio executives and agents. "If you drove a Jeep down the sidewalk, you'd wipe out half of the agents" in Hollywood, said Tom Rothman, head of production for the Samuel Goldwyn Co. It's a bizarre combination of artistry and type.

The collision was in stark evidence at Saturday's world premiere of "Boxing Helena." Written and directed by Jennifer Lynch, the 21-year-old daughter of David Lynch, the film was the most anticipated title in the program, festival organizers say.

As curious spectators and industry executives arrived to see the film about amputation, sexual intercourse and ear infections, Miss Lynch and producer Carl Mozzone greeted the really important ones at the door.

Troubled lives dominate festival agenda

By John Horn
The Associated Press

PARK CITY, Utah — While Hollywood cranks out larger-than-life tales of magical genes, passionate bodyguards and a few good courtroom theatrics, independent filmmakers are finding life itself is large enough.

If there is any clear trend at the 15th Sundance Film Festival, it is that everyday personal difficulties anchor more stories than ever before. A generation of writers and directors who came of age in the 1970s and 1980s are now transforming experience and observation into a variety of accounts of modern living.

The festival, which ends Sunday, consequently is filled not with stylish exercises in obscure narratives but rather straightforward takes on dysfunctional families, doomed love and broken homes.

"It's all about examining families with a critical eye," said Geoff Gilmore, the festival's director. "We looked at 225 other films that aren't here. I can't tell you how many other titles had dysfunctional families at their center."

When families aren't wobbling, individuals are.

"Ruby in Paradise," probably the festival's most talked-about film, spends its two hours with a young woman named Ruby who has fled her Tennessee home "without getting pregnant or beat up." Her unsatisfying past at least geographically behind her, Ruby's now trying to find herself in a small city on the Florida gulf coast.

Other movies hinge on feuding brothers, single-parent households, strained marriages and yuppie relationships gone sour. Even "Twenty Bucks," a snappy comedy following the path of one $20 bill, has at its center a young woman whose father berates her career choice of writing.

"Welcome to the '90s," said Gillian Armstrong, who directed "The Last Days of Chez Nous," set in a household on the verge of collapse. "It's a time of change and people are working all this stuff out." Her Australian feature, due in theaters in

Victor Nunez's 'Ruby in Paradise' follows a young Tennessee woman trying to find herself in a small city on the Florida gulf coast.

February, is led by Beth, a successful novelist whose husband doesn't sleep with her and whose father doesn't communicate with her.

And that's just the beginning of her travails.

"We all love and hate ourselves. We all have our ups and downs," Armstrong

"Even if you come from a perfect family, you have to make that split and find who you are. ... I was trying to somehow say that it is important to have some line in your life. But what's even more important is that the line has to come from inside."

— Victor Nunez, writer, director said. Conventional movie storytelling, she said, tends to smooth over such complications in favor of formula-driven simplicity.

"With this film, more than anything I've done, people have deeply personal reactions," said the director whose credits include "My Brilliant Career" and "Mrs. Soffel." "I've been told by many people that they went home and talked about their marriages."

Victor Nunez, the writer-director of "Ruby in Paradise," said no film producers were interested in his script 1½ years ago. These days, several companies are weighing bids for his film and audience reaction has been strong. "Maybe I'm in sync with the times," he said.

Although moviegoers will see in Ruby a person adrift, Nunez is hopeful the young sales clerk's voyage of discovery is what audiences remember. "How do you live a life? How do you find a way? That's what this is about," Nunez said.

"Even if you come from a perfect family, you have to make that split and find who you are. ... I was trying to somehow say that it is important to have some line in your life. But what's even more important is that the line has to come from inside."

Pre-summer Hollywood holding pattern holds

By Glenn Lovell
Knight-Ridder News Service

Like the ashen-faced passengers of the plane-turned-wingless-jet in "Alive," Hollywood's power brokers are now airborne, belted into place and nervously awaiting the impact of Oscar madness, which begins with the Feb. 17 announcements.

Little wonder we feel as if we're floating, or consigned to Hollywood's version of a holding pattern. I'm not complaining, mind you; I'm just trying to summon some enthusiasm for what lies ahead.

As in seasons past, the weekends between now and Memorial Day are filled with nitwit assaults (Mike Myers in "So I Married an Axe-Murderer"), last year's leftovers (TriStar's "Mr. Jones" with Richard Gere, 20th Century Fox's "Jack the Bear" with Danny DeVito) and those artsy, angst-ridden attractions ("Damage" with Jeremy Irons, "Unlabeled Heart" with Christian Slater) that find loyal cult followings but never catch a mainstream audience.

Winter and spring have always been good times to wheel out aging macho men who have lost it at the box office.

Winter and spring have always been good times to wheel out aging macho men who have lost it at the box office. Another bomb at this time of year isn't nearly as damaging as a flop in the peak Christmas and summer seasons.

Which is why the ruffled but game Bud Reynolds, Sylvester Stallone and Don Johnson all return in February and March. Reynolds has the dreadful sounding "Cop and a Half," wherein his Florida detective teams up with an 8-year-old witness to murder; Stallone returns in the more elaborate "Cliffhanger"; and Johnson joins wife Melnic Griffith (another casualty of '92) in a remake of the Garson Kanin kirk "Born Yesterday."

Just to give you some idea of how weird things can get at this time of year, distributors are also promising "Meteor Man" with Robert Townsend as a wrong-way superhero; "Wild West" with a Pakistani country-western band; "The Pickle" with Danny Aiello as director Paul Mazursky's down-for-the-count alter-ego; and, sometime in May, "Dragon: The Bruce Lee Story" with newcomer Jason Scott Lee (no relation) as the martial-arts superstar who died at 32.

It's a mixed bag, to be sure — everything from urbane literary adaptations (Miramax's "Ethan Frome") to schlock shock (another remake of "The Invasion of the Body Snatchers") that it keeps Hollywood in the movie business until the Super Mario Bros. Arnold Schwarzenegger ("The Last Action Hero") and Steven Spielberg ("Jurassic Park") materialize for what the industry prays will be another $1 billion summer.

Still, if one looks hard enough, it's possible to skirt the dumb tent antics and tired sequels ("RoboCop 2," among others) and locate a handful of decent diversions.

1/Monday

FILER - The Filer High School Symposium presentation of "Munkay by Membership Only" will be held at 7 p.m. Monday at the Filer High School auditorium.

FILER - The play, written by Thomas Hirschel, is about eight detective-fiction authors who gather at the Orey Club in London to receive the most successful mystery novel award, the Orey Award. Most of the members have the arrogant streak, so it is no surprise when the annual murder mystery is solved.

The suspense builds as the specialists in murder try to decide whether or not to solve the case themselves. The play's main character lives since the murder is one of his. The alternative is to call Scotland Yard.

Tara Wright plays Sturges. Other cast members include Heidi Bennett, Melissa Butler, Christy Lewis, Joyce Meyer, David Wagner, Amy Slank, Jennie K. Jones and Joni Campbell.

Cost is $4 for adults and $2 for students. Students with activity cards will be admitted free.

Sundance

"This is somebody we need to be nice to." Mozzarella told Lynch while introducing her to Universal Pictures executives.

Hollywood is always eager to convert fresh talent to the studio system and dozens of scouts come here prowling for young blood.

The Hollywood hounds rarely consider the films themselves. Some of the most talked-about Sundance titles of recent years — including "Poison," "Slacker," "The Hours and Times," "Gas Food Lodging" and "In the Soup" — were ignored by the major studios.

Anthony Drazan, who brought his film "Zebrabhead" to last year's festival, now has a deal with Steven Spielberg's production company, and Quentin Tarantino, whose "Reservoir Dogs" shocked patrons at the 1992 competition, has a contract with Danny DeVito's outfit. Their films, respectively, were released by independents Triumph Releasing and Miramax Films.

About half the films are in competitions, with awards to be presented Saturday night.

For the few film makers who parlay their Sundance experience to Hollywood power, many others continue making movies any way they can, even if their works face borderline budgets and even shakier prospects for showing up in theaters.

But getting the cold shoulder from mainstream Hollywood isn't the end of the world for some. "To call us Triple A league for the majors may be true for some people, but it's equally true that we're a home for people who want to maintain their independence," said Geoff Gilmore, director of the festival, which ends Sunday.

American Music Awards honor diversity

By John Antezak
The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Michael Jackson won two trophies and his third special award while Michael Bolton, Billy Ray Cyrus, Mariah Carey, Reba McEntire, Patti LaBelle, Garth Brooks and Bobby Brown scored major victories Monday at the 20th annual American Music Awards.

Jackson won favorite pop rock album for "Dangerous" and favorite soul-rhythm and blues single for "Remember the Time." He now has 14 of the awards in competitive categories.

Jackson was presented a new honor, the International Artists Award, which in future years will also bear his name.

Jackson used the stage to spread a message of love: "It is the ultimate truth at the heart of all creation."

Cyrus accepted trophies for favorite country single with "Achy Breaky Heart" and favorite new country artist and addressed what he called his "self-proclaimed critics."

"Tonight this award is from you the fans. And as far as I'm concerned, to those people who don't like 'Achy Breaky Heart,' here's a quarter — call someone you care!" he said to cheers. That was a jab at Travis Tritt, one of Cyrus' biggest critics, who hit a hit with the song "Here's a Quarter (Call Someone You Carees)."

American Music Awards nominations are based on industry record sales and airplay data, and winners are voted by a national sampling of record buyers. ABC-TV broadcasts the awards show live.

Bolton was named favorite male pop-rock artist and favorite adult contemporary artist. Clutching a trophy backstage, he commented on some of his harshest critics. "Success is the best revenge," he said.

female artist, and her "Unplugged" recording was top adult contemporary album. "I'd like to thank God for every blessing in my life," she said.

Miss McEntire won favorite female country artist and favorite country album with "For My Broken Heart." She thanked her fans and added, "I love ya."

In his only victory over Cyrus, Garth Brooks was named top male country artist. Bobby Brown won favorite male soul-R&B artist. Patti LaBelle won favorite female soul-R&B artist.

In a widely divergent field, Pearl Jam beat Arrested Development and TLC for favorite new pop-rock artist. The group also claimed favorite new artist honors in the heavy metal-hard rock competition.

Boyz II Men won favorite pop-rock single for "End of the Road" and most popular soul-rhythm and blues band, duo or group. Young rappers Kris Kross won favorite new artist honors in the rap-hop rock and soul-rhythm and blues categories.

Alabama received its 16th career trophy as favorite country band. The all-time American Music Awards leader is Kenny Rogers with 19, including one non-competitive special trophy.

"Funky Divas" earned the soul-R&B album award for the group En Vogue.

Metallica defeated Def Leppard and Red Hot Chili Peppers as favorite artist in the resurgent heavy metal-hard rock category.

Genesis scored a big victory over fierce rockers U2 and Kris Kross for favorite pop-rock group. U2 was shut out entirely as its "Achtung Baby" lost to Jackson's "Dangerous" as favorite pop-rock album.

Another conspicuous loser was Eric Clapton, nominated for favorite pop-rock male artist. Clapton is the leading nominee for the record industry's Grammy Awards with nine bids.

Elizabeth Taylor, recovered from a respiratory infection, returned to public life by presenting Jackson's honorary award. Jackson, who opened the ceremony with a performance of his "Dangerous" album title track, also received an honorary Merit award in 1984 and an Achievement award in 1989.

The favorite rap-hop artist was Sir Mix-A-Lot, whose hit is "Baby Got Back."

Backstage, the artist defended the song from criticism that it is only about women's bottoms: He said it was meant to show that slender models are not the only definition of beauty and that the song was "a knee-jerk response to the beer commercials."

K.d. lang was the favorite new adult contemporary artist. "I'm very lucky. I had eight years to prepare for this," she quipped.

Legendary rock promoter Bill Graham, who died in a 1991 helicopter crash, was honored with the Merit award. In the 1960s, Gratman made Winterland and the Fillmore East auditoriums in San Francisco and the Fillmore East in New York City into rock's premiere stages.

Movies

"The Vanishing." Kiefer Sutherland (on a roll since his villainous cameo in "A Few Good Men") plays a man obsessed with kidnapping. (Note: This is one of the unsettling Dutch thriller of the same title. The original's creator, George Sluizer, is back in the director's chair and Jeff Bridges co-stars as the all-too-human serial kidnapper. (Note: This is one of the retooled European hits. "Point of No Return," with Bridget Fonda, is a remake of "La Femme Nikita"; "Sommersby," with Jodie Foster and Richard Gere, is a classic spin-off. "The Return of Martin Guerre.")

"Army of Darkness." The third segment in Sam Raimi's hilariously gruesome horror series, (began in '83 with the low-budget "The Evil Dead,") again stars Bruce Campbell as an average Joe who unwittingly unleashes the forces of Hades. Raimi, who last brought us "Darkman," is a master at screwball terror.

"Untamed Heart." Another offbeat relationship picture from Tony ("Five Comers") Bill, this one co-starring Maria Tomic as an over-ager waitress, the wonderful Rosie Perez as her mouthy best friend and Christian Slater as a severely introverted husband.

"Groundhog Day." Yeah, I know, it's a knockheaded farce starring Bill Murray as a meteorologist covering his least favorite celeb, inauspicious Phil the groundhog. But don't let this throw you. With Harold ("Caddyshack") Ramis on board as director-writer, this could be the comedy hit of the winter.

"Falling Down." Michael Douglas plays a midlife casualty who abandons his car in rush-hour traffic and walks home. Robert Duvall and Barbara Hershey co-star in this intriguing-sounding blend of "Fellini" and "The Swimmer."

"Blood in ... Blood Out." Taylor Hackford's long-awaited gang epic stars Jesse Borrego, Benjamin Bratt and Damian Chapa as cousins who turn to law, art and crime. Co-written by Floyd Mutrux ("American Mc"), this street saga is sure to anger as many as it entertains.

"Swing Kids." With the specter of fascism again rearing its head in Germany, this Disney pickup couldn't be more timely. Christian Bale, Frank Whaley and Robert Sean Leonard co-star as teenagers in pre-World War II Germany hooked on the Big Band sounds of Glenn Miller and Benny Goodman.

affair with the stage began at St. Edward's School when he was 13. He was cast in the lead role in a play entitled "The Gypsy Troubadour. He calls it turning point of his life.

These days, Bob Nora specializes in jazz but has added all kinds of music to his repertoire. His two albums are "Mardi" and "City of Dreams." A third album, "Freedom Is," will be released this summer.

Also on stage at the variety show will be Roger Vincent, who has performed solos throughout the United States with Community Concerts. He will play the lead in the Dilettantes production of "Kiss Me Kate" this year and will sing "It's a Well Known Fact" in the variety show.

Vincent will also join Carol Barsness in a rendition of "All I Ask of You." Barsness, a member of the Magic Valley Chorale, is a voice teacher. She will sing "Think of Me" as a solo Saturday night.

Alice Anderson will perform two songs in the variety show: "Hello Young Lovers" and "Till There Was You." She is a professor at the College of Southern Idaho and was a soloist in local productions of "King & I" and "Kismet."

Anderson will be singing "Stranger in Paradise" with Jack Van Buren, who will also duet with Jeanne Wilson on "If I Loved You." Van Buren, a member of the Golden Moments Trio, is a teacher at Twin Falls High School. Wilson, who has starred in several area musicals, is executive director of the Community Organization for Rehabilitative Efforts.

Completing the playbill of duets are Teddy Snow and Burt Huih, who will perform "Hey There" and "Amazing Grace." Snow teaches music at Sawtooth and Perrine schools, and Huih is a State Farm insurance agent who sings with a variety of local groups on the side.

The Magic Valley Chorale is going to perform Saturday, too. Group selections are from "Oliver" and "Godspell," under the direction of Camille Cox and Carson Wong. Soloists are Susan Waters, Al Sanderson, Angela Davis, Gina Lay, Clarence Dudley, Linda Stevenson and Nancy Wallace.

Accompanists for the evening include Liz Pierce, Dennis Pack, Jeff Brock and Phyllis Van Nest. Bryan Hyde of Z103-Radio will serve as master of ceremonies.

All of the artists have donated their time, in order to raise funds for educational programs, emergency medical help, the mental health hotline, Hurambee House and CORE House. This year's goal is $4,000. Last year, the group raised $3,000.

"Unlited Way cut us a little this year," Wilson said, "but the need is great, especially with all the homeless people who need our help."

IF JANUARY 29 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: During 1993 your organizer, accept challenge of deadline, gain greater awareness of spiritual values. You also recover from emotional setback. You have golden opportunity for proverbial "second chance." Travel indicated in February, added recognition, removal of burden you should not have assumed in first place. You are unorthodox, fascinated by the manic arts and sciences, including astrology.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Make this your power-play day! Individual you met approximately eight months ago resurfaces, offers profitable contact, agreement. Cycle-high: trust your own judgment, intuition.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Before this day is finished, you'll say, "Mission completed!" Long-standing project reactivated. Individual in position of authority provides encouragement, funding.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You'll be saying, "I'm glad I decided to be on my own!" You'll be making room for new experiences, fresh concepts, love. Many desire of gaining approval. Fashion agreement. Cycle-high: trust your own judgment, intuition.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Family ties dominate. Individual who acts in eccentric manner wants attention, is desirous of gaining approval. Solution to dilemma will be discovered.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Diversify, display wit, wisdom, humor. Focus on distance, language, universal appeal, chance to participate in import-export activities. You'll star at social affair tonight. All stops out!

VERGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Check sources, bring product up to state of the art. Be aware of possible mechanical defect in household product, automobile. Plumbing problem not originally anticipated.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Written notice confirms views, opinions. Focus on distance, language, universal appeal. Attention also revolves around reputation, public image, marital status. Justice prevails in court case.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Emphasis on design, music, flowers, mansion with loved one. Gift received, surroundings will be beautiful, you'll be told, "You work as music to my ears!"

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Review Libra message. Emphasis on variety, challenge, deadline, intensified romance. Answers are found behind scene. What was out of sight becomes visible. You'll benefit as result. Look!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You'll be saying, "I can hardly believe it but everything is music to my ears!" You'll utilize past experience, individual in authority says, "You are appreciated!"

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Long-standing legal dispute can be settled out of court. Close relative visits, declares, "All of us admire you and are in your corner." Emphasis: universal appeal.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): New approach brings financial gain. Let go of status quo - impart style, lead rather than follow. Dynamic Leo encourages, will be in your corner.

4 capital crimes in Byzantine Empire

Citizens in the old Byzantine Empire could be put to death for four capital crimes: 1. Incest. 2. Homicide. 3. Teaching shipbuilding to the enemy. And 4. Making purple cloth for anybody other than royalty.

Q. Why is a "brinnee" called that?
A. One of Spring's earliest bloomers, that one. The name comes from the Latin for "first."
Q. Gravity keeps constant pressure on your bones, so your bone cells are naturally replenished to deal with the stress. But astronauts who remain weightless in space, overlong lose bone mass. So researchers theorize that bones of beings from outer space, if any, are stronger or weaker than the bones of comparable earth animals, depending on the gravity in their home environments.
Q. What's a "drugget"?
A. A coarse cloth used variously. Mostly on floors. Queen Victoria put one under her dining-room table to catch spills and crumbs.
Q. Report is it's illegal in equatorial Guinea to name a baby "Monica." We need to know why. Send someone. Students rummaging through the 1802 records of one Massachusetts town noted with interest that the municipality that year spent $7,370 on schools and roads, and $15,560 on rum. At 61 cents a gallon.
Lose 20 percent of your body's water, and you're a goner. Yet the medics say you could lose 80 percent of your intestines, one lung, one kidney, every organ in the pelvic area, your spleen and 75 percent of your liver and still survive.
The man who never makes a mistake met tired of doing nothing." That's another of Will Rogers' lines.
Legal scholars estimate there are 35 million laws to enforce the Ten Commandments. And many more that don't. For instance, in England, it's illegal to wrestle in public with an untrained bull.

'Used People:' Downbeat realism

By Glenn Lovell
Knight-Ridder News Service

Take the classic second-time-around romance, leaven it with some fine-old-ethnic-values-and-crown-it with half the cast of "Fried Green Tomatoes" and you've got "Used People," this week's touchy-feely, grab-for-the-gusto family saga.

Actually, "Used People" is a lot better than that cut-and-paste description makes it sound. Indeed, thanks to British director Beban Kidron and Shirley MacLaine at her most restrained, it seems almost astringent, like a tart, overcast "Moonstruck."

For some it will seem too downbeat and realistic. It certainly lives up to its title. The characters on display here are all used up and wishing they were somewhere or someone else. And in this instance, the usually flighty and flamboyant MacLaine is the most suspicious and uptight of the lot.

MacLaine plays Pearl Berman, a Queens homemaker who, upon her husband's death, learns that she has been admired from afar for 23 years. Her admirer—an Italian immigrant with an anecdote and aphorism for every occasion. His name is Joe, and he's played with wit and sheepishness by the great Marcello Mastroianni.

Of course the appearance of a suitor at hubby's funeral doesn't go over in a big way with the Berman family which, besides Pearl, consists of a cluck-lucking grandmother (Jessica Tandy playing Jessica Tandy) and a pair of resentful, mixed-up daughters (Kathy Bates and Marcia Gay Harden).

Like the heroines of a number of popular tearjerkers (Shirley Booth in 1992 Largo Entertainment

Marcello Mastroianni and, clockwise, Marcia Gay Harden, Shirley MacLaine, Kathy Bates and Jessica Tandy star in 'Used People,' a comic drama from Largo Entertainment.

"Come Back, Little Sheba" comes to mind), Pearl has cast herself as life's biggest martyr.

It's a role she plays with great conviction.

Need proof? Just look at her lips and face; they're pursed and stretched thin, like a death mask frozen somewhere between harried and disappointed.

Joe, sort-of-sappy-but-genuine—says it's time for Pearl to start thinking of herself and embrace the kind of giddy, all-out affection that cluded her the first time around. Pearl, out of understandable guilt, resists and resists ... and resists.

And therein lies the film's chief problem. Pearl resists the big-hearted Joe for so long we come dangerously close to not caring if she'll ever get around to cracking a smile and saying, "Yes."

In other words the very qualities that make this family chronicle so different will probably hurt its chances at the box office. Director Kidron, best known for the eccentric friendship comedy "Antonia & Jane," provides a refreshingly off-kilter perspective on this familiar material. She definitely plays against the story's built-in sentimentality. In its place, she provides a wry-to-bittersweet tone. She obviously cares about her characters. Everybody has their quirks and faults, but these are outweighed by redeeming qualities.

On top of this, "Used People" comes with a pair of knock-out performances. The never-more-controlled MacLaine and the kooky-to-nomadic Harden should both earn Oscar nominations. Harden's Norma is as afraid to face reality as her mom and comes across as a showboat schizoid.

Sylvia Sidney brings her usual moxie to the role of Tandy's disagreeable best friend, and Bates gives her customary reading of the daughter who grew up dumpy and angry. Mastroianni, alas, comes off as more simple-minded than sincere. He has been called upon to do a caricature of his most determined and disarming suitors.

Capsule reviews

The following are capsule reviews of movies now showing in the Magic Valley. Ratings are by the Motion Picture Association of America and the Los Angeles Times.

ASPEN EXTREME (PG-13)
Two Detroit auto assembly workers head to Aspen and a new life as ski instructors where one of them becomes very popular and hobnobs with the wealthy. Starring Paul Gross, Peter Berg, Finola Hughes, Teri Polo and William Russ. Directed by Patrick Smith.
"SCENT OF A WOMAN (R). Al Pacino gives a tour de force performance as a blind, retired Army lieutenant colonel in this compelling, remarkable odyssey. Chris O'Donnell is fine as the scholarship student from a nearby prep school who is hired to take care of Pacino for the Thanksgiving weekend and ends up accomplishing him on a bender in Manhattan. Overlong and occasionally cornball, but full of affecting moments and wonderful acting.

BODY OF EVIDENCE (R). Despite the presence of Madonna, a plot line involving death by sex and the presence of erotic toys borrowed from the Spanish Inquisition, this "did she or didn't she" courtroom and bedroom thriller is more fizzle than sizzle. A feeble knockoff of "Basic Instinct," which was pretty feeble in its own right, this film is unconvincing, uninvolved, and, worst of all, uneventful.

McDonnell's star rises after years on stage

By Barry Koltzow
Orange County Register

Several months ago, Mary McDonnell was flying from Los Angeles to Chicago when the jet she was on hit unexpected turbulence.

The bumpy approach to O'Hare brought on anxious moments for the passengers, most of whom were either praying or reaching for emergency bags.

But the actress, who admits she was no less terrified than anybody else, didn't have time for prayers. As she clutched her emergency bag to her chest, she was forced to sign autographs for a couple of starry-eyed flight attendants who seemed oblivious to the plane's sudden drops. With glazed eyes and a weak smile, she kept up a brave front for the chatty stewardesses.

"This never would have happened a few years ago, when McDonnell was just an unknown stage actress.

"I had almost forgotten that flight," she said with a laugh recently after being reminded of the ordeal. "Fame leaves you very vulnerable in your daily life, and that can get scary at times. The best of privacy is the cost you pay for fame, but the rewards are better, roles, so it evens itself out."

McDonnell, whose latest film, John Sayles' "Passion Fish," is set to open soon, has been famous since Kevin Costner plucked her from the relative obscurity of a New York theater career and cast her as Stands With A Fist, the white woman raised by the Sioux in the 1990 smash hit "Dances With Wolves."

She was nominated for a supporting actress Oscar for that role, and there is a strong industry buzz that she will get another nomination, this time for best actress, for "Passion Fish," in which she plays an embittered actress confined to a wheelchair after a traffic accident.

Between those two films, she appeared in Lawrence Kasdan's "Grand Canyon" and starred opposite Robert Redford in the box office hit "Sneakers."

"I used to look at famous people and wonder how much money they were making," McDonnell said. "Now I guess people look at me and wonder the same thing."

"This fame thing really is interesting. One day you're walking down the street and living your life and the next day, you're walking down the street and people are calling out your name.

"That feeling started to fade, but now, with movie success coming so late, I feel like I'm still playing catch-up."

Eventually, McDonnell started going out for a few auditions in those early years in New York. She began to work as an actress, and the stage roles got better with each successive year. She even found time to dabble in films ("Matewan" and "Tiger Warsaw" with Patrick Swayze) and television (she starred opposite Elliott Gould in the short-lived series "E.R.," being shown in reruns).

Then came the fateful call. "I had just finished an Ipsen play, and my agent called because she wanted me to read this script for a movie they were casting at a hotel," McDonnell said. "I asked what the movie was about, and she said it was a cowboy-and-Indian film with Kevin Costner. Well, having just done Ipsen, I had an attitude a mile long and said I didn't want to be in a cowboy-and-Indian movie."

"But my agent insisted, so I told her to send me a script, but she said they weren't giving out scripts. Well, now I was really put off. I said, 'Oh, I can go to the library and read Shakespeare, but Kevin Costner doesn't want his script read by anyone.'"

"But she persisted, so I went to the audition anyway, and they gave me 30 pages to read. That's all I needed. It was great. This was the type of role that any actress would kill for."

"I knew I wanted to act, but I wasn't willing to do what it takes to become a professional actress," she said with a shrug. "I wasn't willing to knock on doors and look for an agent and go to auditions and perform in plays in the hinterlands to gain experience."

"I waited a year because I thought that maybe I could sneak into New York so nobody would notice and then take my time getting-started with my career."

Boy, did she ever take her time. For the next two years, the closest she came to acting was watching other people act in plays.

"Because of that period, I've always felt like I was trying to play catch-up with my career," said the 40ish actress, married almost nine years to stage actor Randall Mill.

"Because of that period, I've always felt like I was trying to play catch-up with my career," said the 40ish actress, married almost nine years to stage actor Randall Mill.

The role in "Passion Fish" is another that any actress would kill for, but it apparently was a role destined to be played by only one actress.

"Years ago, way before 'Dances With Wolves,' I was at an off-Broadway play and John Sayles was sitting behind me," the actress said. "We had worked together on 'Matewan,' and he leaned over during the intermission and said he had this idea for a movie about a bitter woman. I told him it sounded cool, but he never said another word about it."

"Then, when I was doing 'Grand Canyon,' John's producer called me and asked if I would be interested in doing this film about the bitter woman. I told her I hadn't read the script, and she said John hadn't written it yet."

Three weeks later, the script arrived and McDonnell said she loved it.

'King of countdowns' signs long-term deal

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Casey Kasem, radio's Top 40 'King of the Countdowns,' has signed a new contract with the Westwood One Companies that will keep him on the air into the 21st century. "Signing a new contract is like renewing your wedding vows," Kasem said Wednesday. "The only difference is I'm not only happily married to Westwood One but also to the hundreds of radio stations around the world that really make our marriage work." Financial terms of the contract, which takes Kasem through 2000, were confidential. "Casey's Top 40" for contemporary hit radio and "Casey's Countdown" for the adult contemporary format report the top hits each week. His daily "Casey's Biggest Hits," focusing on both formats, is also syndicated on radio stations worldwide.

Although it isn't life-threatening, it causes severe itching. (Animals have been known to scratch themselves raw from this affliction.) I am a former medical laboratory technologist, and pinworms were a fairly frequent finding from a number of times it turned up on parasitology examinations. In fact, a special test was developed to check for it when a patient complained of anal itching that couldn't be explained by some ordinary infection. Chess players head to Boise

BOISE — The 1993 Cabin Fever Scholastic Open Chess Tournament is set for Saturday at Garfield Elementary School on the corner of Broadway and Boise avenues in Boise. Registration will be held from 8:30 to 9:15 a.m. and games will be played from 9:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. The tournament is open to all students in kindergarten through 12th grades. Entry fee is $3.50 per person. Players should bring their own chess boards and pieces, a sack lunch and something to read between rounds. Parents or guardians are urged to attend with the students. Players will be divided kindergarten through sixth grade, seventh through ninth and 10th through 12th grade divisions. All competitors will receive participation certificates, and top finishers in each division will receive victory certificates. Other prizes include first, second and third place trophies in each division, first place trophies for grades one through six and a trophy for highest-placing female entrant. The event also includes a team competition for any elementary school fielding at least three players, with the team trophy going to the school whose top three finishers have the highest number of combined points. Only elementary division participants will be allowed to play for their school team. All players will compete in five games, using Swiss-style pairings, unless entry numbers necessitate a differing number of games. Ties may be broken by playoffs or a tie-breaking system decided by the tournament director. This is the first of several winter/spring events. All eligible players participating in the Cabin Fever Open will receive invitations to other events.

Casting directors like sharp clothes, seek special abilities

By Susan Pack Knight-Ridder News Service

BURBANK, Calif. — You've got your bulging biceps, your taut triceps, your pecs pumped up to the moon. You're buff, bronzed and blond.

Hasta la vista, Hank. If you wanna be in pictures, it's not your bod that'll get you the part. It's your duds, dude.

"I look for people who have really nice clothes," says Shannon Dunn, casting director at Cines Casting.

And if your Zip code doesn't happen to be Beverly Hills 90210, don't fret.

"One of my extras is a homeless, very upscale-businessman," Dunn says. "He lives in his car."

As the recession rolls on, show biz is the only biz for many extras. And while few earn big bucks — or big raises — they do get to work in the same spotlight as stars. They also get lobster for lunch. So what does it take to be in pictures? A driver's license, Social Security card and $10 or $15 to cover the cost of a computer photo that can be punched up at a casting director's desk.

That's all it takes to get you into the Burbank offices of Cines or Central Casting, two of the world's leading agencies. In return, you get the numbers of job holes. If you fit the profile for a particular part, you'll get a personal call. So who is Central Casting gonna call?

"Somebody who shows up on time and is reliable and has a good wardrobe," says Franklyn Warren, senior director.

If you're a member of the Screen Actors' Guild (SAG) and the par-

'They can actually get some women to do it for $65. It depends how naive the poor thing is.'

— Lydia Laurans, Screen Actors Guild, on payment for nudity, which can pay up to $400 calls for a tux or gown, you'll get $18 extra if you bring your own.

"It's a specialty item to own and clean," Warren explains. "It would cost the film company a lot more to go out and get them."

Business suits, for women as well as men, also are a vital component of an extra's wardrobe. Laid-off Douglas Aircraft Co. engineers are particularly popular with Dunn.

"A lot of upscale people with great suits," she sighs.

Most extras are between 25 and 50 years old.

"There are very few calls for older people, except 'Defending Your Life,' when I called everyone over 80," says Dunn.

Work is sporadic, and the going rate for non-union extras is $40 a day. Union extras receive a minimum of $65 a day. Both receive time-and-a-half after eight hours and double time after 10.

SAG members earn at least $75 if they have special abilities, such as swimming or sword swallowing. Extras who stand in for stars collect $90 a day.

Then there are the "bumps."

Riding a horse or dealing cards will raise the rate by $10. Getting wet is worth $14 unless, of course, you're wearing a bathing suit. Nudity can gross you $400 a day — if you negotiate.

They can actually get some women to do it for $65," says Lydia Laurans, a SAG business representative. "It depends how naive the poor thing is."

Not only do SAG members earn more than non-union extras, but they also get first shot at the jobs. The first 30 extras hired by a film company must be union members; the minimum for television is 15.

So how do you get a SAG card? There are two ways.

"You get a (speaking) role," Laurans says. "As soon as you say a word, you immediately become a principal."

A simple yes or no is considered dialogue. A snort is not.

"It can't be a grunt, howl, whistle or a scream," Laurans says. "You can't be saying yes while 50 other people are saying yes. You must be heard. And you have to be asked to speak."

If you can't get a speaking role — which pays $46 a day — you can earn your SAG card by filling in for union members three times. You can replace a no-show, or you can have a look or a skill no SAG member has.

Then you can pay SAG an extra $974.50 initiation fee.

Because of the cost, some extras don't bother to join the union.

For the past 36 years, Brenda Tempel, 30, of Long Beach has been working as a non-union extra an average of four days a week.

She supplements her income by working as a temporary clerical worker.

"What non-union extras hope and pray for is overtime," says Tempel, who used to own a martial arts business.

Her prayers were answered recently, when she spent several long days on the set of "The Last Action Hero," an Arnold Schwarzenegger movie being filmed in Long Beach. She also played a cop in a DuPont commercial, which paid $100 for one day of work.

A paycheck is only one benefit of being an extra.

"It's hurry up and wait," Dunn says. "There's a lot of down time. If you want a free lunch, this is the job for you. If you want a free union, this is the job for you. If a union extra isn't fed every six hours, the production company is slapped with a meal penalty. And extras eat as well as the stars."

"We're talking ribs and lobster," Dunn says.

"We're not, however, talking to the stars. Some have contracts prohibiting extras from looking at them."

But even if you can't talk to them, you can learn from them. A Central Casting extra played a juror in "A Few Good Men."

"He sat eight feet away from Jack Nicholson," Warren says. "He said it was incredible."

Tempel is studying script supervision, making sure the wardrobe and props are consistent in each shot.

"Doing extra work for me is a way to be behind the scenes and learn what's going on," she says. "It's basically a paid education."

Computer interpreter turns 'moshi-moshi' into 'hello'

The Associated Press
'TOKYO -- "Moshi-moshi," said a Japanese researcher, speaking into a microphone.
Eight seconds later, a computer in Pittsburgh gargled the translation: "Hello."

translated by a computer into written text, which was sent by modem over a telephone line. A voice synthesizer on the other end then "spoke" the translated words. "It was a success," said Shigetaki Sagayama, head of speech-processing for Advanced Telecommunications. "It recognized and translated all of the conversation. Researchers had agreed ahead of time to talk about an imaginary conference, and likely phrases had been pre-programmed into the computer, such as "This is the conference office. May I help you?" and "I'd like to apply to attend the conference."

A researcher in Japan helps make the world's first computerized telephone translation tests.

Panhandle mine needs ore find, manager says

The Associated Press
KELLOGG One of two remaining silver mines in the Silver Valley is in danger of shutting down unless miners can find high-grade ore soon, the Sunshine Mine manager said.
The northern Idaho mine produces between 10,000 and 12,000 ounces of silver per day, but needs to produce as much as 40,000 ounces to remain profitable, said Harry Coughler, vice president for Sunshine Precious Metals Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of Dallas-based Sunshine Mining Co.

for $3.68 an ounce today at the New York Commodity Exchange, compared with $5 to $6 three years ago.
"But the encouraging thing is that we're trying to do something, rather than sitting on our hands and waiting for the price to go up," Coughler said.
The Sunshine and Lucky Friday mines use the last silver operations in the Silver Valley, where four mines have shut down in the last 2 1/2 years. Coughler said Sunshine's mine isn't running out of silver or but needs to find an ore body with a higher concentration of silver that's more profitable to mine.
Sunshine Precious Metals last year won protection from creditors under Chapter 11 of federal bankruptcy code.

Buoyed by good news, stocks rise nearly 15

NEW YORK — The stock market pushed ahead slightly Tuesday, encouraged by news of stronger-than-expected economic growth and declines in interest rates.
The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 14.86 points to 3,306.25.

analysts' estimate, and lent support to the view that the price of the economy picked up significantly in the latter stages of 1992.
Many economists have argued that this strength isn't likely to carry forward at the same rate into the new year.

H-P unveils new disk drives

BOISE (AP) — Three large-capacity versions of Hewlett-Packard Co.'s successful 1-year-old 3.5-inch disk drive have been unveiled.
The computer memory-storage devices are being manufactured at H-P's western Boise site for evaluation by electronic equipment manufacturers.

H-P's 1-gigabyte disk drive has been well-received, said Bruce Spenner, general manager of the Disk Memory Division in Boise, although he declined to reveal sales information.
"We fully expect the new drives to build on that success by providing a reliable, high-performance solution for storage-intensive applications," Spenner said.

Nevada, Utah banks plans merger

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — First Security Bank will acquire Desert Southwest's Nevada Community Bank and operate it as a separate subsidiary of First Security Corporation, bank officials announced Wednesday.
Nevada Community Bank is a commercial bank with assets of $39.4 million, deposits of $33.4 million and loans of $27.7 million. It is insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. and was chartered by the state in 1990 by Noell L. Bennett and Edward Johnson. The merger with First Security, based in Salt Lake City, is expected to be completed by the middle of the year, officials said.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE BOBBY WOLFF
If you're faced with losers that you can ruff with dummy's small trumps, it's usually a good idea to do so. Nevertheless, it never pays to lose sight of your priorities.
South won his club ace, and dummy's singleton proved too tempting. Quickly he ruffed a club, cashed a high diamond, ruffed a diamond and ruffed his last club. He cashed dummy's trump king and led a heart back to his ace. The trump ace, another trump put West on play, and South was forced to make a discard from dummy when West led a club. He discarded a heart, hoping to run the diamonds, but it didn't work (the heart finesse would also have failed), and the slam suffered one down.
I make the slam if East holds the third trump in exchange for his fourth club (an endplay) or if a diamond queen drops in South's hand. Actually he missed a much better play for his slam.
At trick two, instead of ruffing a club, South should work on dummy's diamonds. He cashes the diamond ace, ruffs a low diamond, and cashes the ace and king of trumps. He discards a club on dummy's diamond king, which West ruffs (refusing to ruff doesn't change matters), and a heart shift goes to South's ace. The delayed club ruff provides an instantly dummy entry to ruff out East's diamond queen, and dummy's heart king is the entry that allows the run of dummy's diamonds.

Enberg: A broadcasting pro

By Bob Keisler
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

LOS ANGELES — Dick Enberg has a loving wife and six children, a glossy 27-year broadcast career, more awards than he can fit on his mantle and enough talent to make 98 percent of his peers envious.

What he lacks is timing. Enberg broadcast the NCAA tournament for six years, but before it became the third jewel of sportscasting — behind the World Series and Super Bowl.

He did two Olympics, but Jimmy Carter forced America to boycott the one he was scheduled to anchor.

He was scheduled to become NBC's top baseball voice at the same time that Vin Scully became available.

He's done four Super Bowls, but each has been the broadest equivalent of a flat tire.

What this has done is rob Enberg of what they call a "defining moment" in broadcasting, which turns a broadcaster into a fixture. Jim McKay had Munich. Al Michaels had his Miracle. Bob Costas had Barcelona. Scully has had enough moments to fill a calendar.

Enberg has had some sweet moments at Wimbledon, a superb effort in a 46-10 Super Bowl, and all those local memories of the Angels and Rams and Bruins. But he's still waiting for that moment when the drama is heightened and the event is watched by multitudes, and his flawless call of a game, with just the right emotional punch, becomes a part of its collective memory.

Like McKay, "They're all gone." Like Michaels, "Do you believe in Miracles? Yes!" Maybe it will be Sunday in the Super Bowl. If his luck stays to form, it won't. One team will win by 20 and media critics will write that Enberg once again gave CPR to a comatose contest.

If he's better about it, it doesn't show. The only thing more consistent about Enberg is his ability to call a game well is his conviviality. He is a congenial guest without ego, a quality in short supply among sports casters.

"There were times when I wished it had been a different way," said Enberg, who will call NBC's play-by-play for Super Bowl XXVII Sunday. "But I have to weigh that against the 100 times things have been exactly the right-way. It's only important if my ego needs to be more important."

"Nineteen-eighty was going to be my time... (anchoring the Olympics), and Jimmy Carter decided that. Who knows why the decision was made (to use Bryant Gumbel in 1988), but that experience (anchoring) still could come."

"I always felt baseball would be my area. I was probably most hurt by that, less so because it was Scully, because it happened while I was preparing to do the (1983) World Series. But as it turned out, I was allowed to do other things (Wimbledon), and the variety is a part of my life I don't want to let go."

"When it's over, my moment will likely come from the fact people, when they turned on the TV and heard my voice, knew what they would get: I'd be prepared, offer some emotion, be quick and accurate in my call, and share some of the excitement."

For sportscasters, Super Bowl memories run deep

By Steven Herbert
Los Angeles Times

Winning a Super Bowl can turn a football star into a sentimentalist.

With Super Bowl XXVII ready to kick off Sunday at the Rose Bowl in Pasadena, Calif., we asked four football broadcasters who played for Super Bowl-winning teams what was foremost in their memories of having been part of America's most-watched sporting event.

Terry Bradshaw

The first quarterback to lead a team to four Super Bowl wins, CBS' "NFL Today" analyst singled out the Pittsburgh Steelers' first and last victories.

"Seeing (then-NFL commissioner) Pete Rozelle hand the Lombardi Trophy to (the late Steelers' owner Art Rooney) tops my list," Bradshaw said. "It was his first championship. He was such a wonderful person, a great man and great owner."

"My second greatest thrill was in Super Bowl XIV (against the Rams), running off the field, signaling my finger up in the air (signifying that we're No. 1) and seeing my folks and running through the tunnel."

"I had a feeling that when we were at the goal line scoring our final touchdown we'd never come to another Super Bowl again in my playing career."

Todd Christensen

The NBC analyst earned his first Super Bowl ring in 1981 as a third-string tight end and special teams player for the then-Oakland Raiders. But his favorite Super Bowl memories come from three years later — when he was a member of a Raider team that scored a 38-9 upset over the defending Super Bowl champions, the Washington Redskins.

"I remember the beginning of the fourth quarter, (kicker) Chris Bahr and I were standing on the sideline and we looked up at the scoreboard and he said, '35 to 9, there's no way they are going to come back.'" Christensen said.

"From that time, people started to congratulate themselves. I remember hugging a number of players. Finally, with the two-minute warning, sitting down and putting my face in my hands and starting to cry in the realization of all of the things that it took to get there. I had been cut twice, sat out on the bench for four years, sat out with a number of teams and that particular year was the culmination of things."

Lynn Swann

Like Bradshaw, Swann, who is college football analyst for ABC, has four games from which to look back on, including Super Bowl X, where he was named the game's most valuable player after catching four passes for 161 yards and a touchdown in the Steelers' 21-7 win over the Dallas Cowboys.

"That was an important game for me personally because I was coming off an injury and able to shake it off, start and play a good game," said Swann.

Among Swann's catches is one frequently replayed on highlight films where he catches it, loses control, and catches it again while falling.

Joe Theismann

The ESPN analyst led the Washington Redskins to the Super Bowl title in 1983 over the Miami Dolphins following the strike-shortened 1982 season.

"My best memory is taking the last snap, and I couldn't believe we were world champions," Theismann said.

"I don't know if most people can relate to achieving your ultimate dream in life, and that's what that moment felt like. The combination of tears of joy and disbelief is an overwhelming feeling."

Trumpy to analyze Super Bowl

By Steven Herbert
Los Angeles Times

Bob Trumpy played 10 years of professional football, all with the Cincinnati Bengals, but never made it to the Super Bowl. While he's been there several times as an announcer, Sunday he will serve on NBC as Super Bowl XXVII's expert analyst for the first time.

Born and raised in Bloomington, Ill., Trumpy played college football for the University of Utah, before joining the Bengals in 1968. He was selected twice for both the American Football League's All-Star Game and the Pro Bowl. When he retired from football in 1977, he was the Bengals' second leading receiver.

Trumpy, with NBC since 1977, has served as an analyst for NFL and college football bowl games and as blow-by-blow announcer for professional and Olympic boxing coverage.

In an interview, Trumpy discussed pro football and announcing.

Q: Do you have any apprehensions or concerns about your debut as the Super Bowl's television analyst? Or is this just another game?

A: It certainly is not just another game. You just can't take that approach. But I think I have an advantage because I did the Super Bowl twice on radio and I've been through the hoop in Super Bowls working with Merlin Olsen.

I also realize the responsibility is different because it's in my hands. It's a responsibility that I certainly still take seriously, but it's not an overwhelming responsibility. If we have a good game, I should play a very small part in the proceedings. If we have a 46-3 game, like has happened in previous Super Bowls, I'm not sure I'll be able to live up to that. But I'm not sure anybody would either. You hope for a good game that decides it in the last play.

Q: How does your preparation for a Super Bowl compare to a regular season game?

A: My approach for every Super Bowl has been taken from football. You want to keep things as consistent as possible. You want to maintain the routine, and that's the approach I take.

I watch about four hours of tape for each team each week, and do my normal asking of questions and trying to figure out from coaches what their intentions are and go from there.

Police series 'Homicide' debuts after Super Bowl

By Harriet Winslow
The Washington Post

Executive producer and Baltimore native Barry Levinson is behind this new entry in prime-time crime. Known for his own trilogy of feature films — "Diner," "Tin Men" and "Avalon" — he also produced "Rain Man," "Bugsy" and the newly released "Toys." Tom Fontana ("St. Elsewhere") also produces, scripts and helps edit the series.

Former Washington Post movie critic Paul Attanasio adapted Simon's diary-format book for television. Levinson chose it "because it was Baltimore, and because it was so rich in character and theme," Attanasio said. "It is heroic in the dullness of it."

He said he "pieced together" nine characters from the book's 40 or 50 detectives. "The 'Homicide' cast and crew finished nine episodes before Christmas and will do four more in February, for NBC's initial order of 13.

"Homicide: Life on the Street" will debut Sunday at 8 p.m. MST on NBC.

Brooks to perform Super Bowl anthem; Jackson, halftime show

By Robin Rauzi
Los Angeles Times

PASADENA, Calif. — The Super Bowl. It's not just for sports fans anymore.

Super Bowl XXVII brings head to head not only the Dallas Cowboys and the Buffalo Bills, but also two of the biggest names in pop music — Garth Brooks and Michael Jackson.

Brooks will be singing the national anthem. Jackson will be headlining the halftime show, which in recent years has involved thousands of people, with a finale by an entertainer. This year's, Sunday afternoon at the Rose Bowl, will focus on Jackson as he performs a mini-concert, culminating with his "Heal the World" anthem. Producer-director Don Mischer said it will be unlike anything the Super Bowl audience has ever seen.

"Michael chose to do this because he is trying to get a certain message out," Mischer said. "He realized a potential in terms of an audience around the world."

The Super Bowl grabbed the top spot in the 1992 Nielsen ratings; the pregame show took a close second, and the post-game show came in at No. 7. The National Football League estimates the 1993 game will draw an audience of more than 1 billion people in the United States and 86 other countries.

Brooks

Jackson's deal with the NFL includes a $30-second ad spot, $100,000 in donations from the NFL and game sponsor Frito-Lay, and several stories in the Super Bowl program — all for his Heal the World Foundation.

A 260-person team assembled by Radio City Music Hall Productions has about five minutes to assemble a 22-piece 75-by-75-foot concert stage, complete with audio, lighting and pyrotechnic equipment. About 3,500 children, ages 8 to 17, will take the field as part of a spectacle using the whole stadium and its 102,000 spectators in a massive car stunt.

Sill, Mischer said, he is trying to maintain an intimate feeling. "Can we, in this environment, create something that will feel emotional," he said. "Stadiums are very irreverent places. People don't pay much attention to what's going on. The spoken word, or the words to the song, are hard to understand."

The "King of Pop" will not be lip-synching, but may "sing along with a track," Mischer said, which is common during such large-venue events.

Jackson's rehearsals were closed to the media to preserve the mystery of the show. Executive producer Arlen Kantarian insists it will be the "most action-packed, mistake-free 10 minutes in television history."

"And this year, even the expected has a touch of the unexpected. Brooks isn't just going to crown the 'Star Spangled Banner'; he's going to be part of an expanded portrayal of the national anthem," according to Don Garber, vice president of business development and special events for NFL Properties.

Garber wouldn't go into detail but said, "Never before have we built up our relationship with an anthem singer as we have this year."

Brooks will sing two songs as part of TNT's "Super Bowl Saturday Night" show. Dennis Miller will host from Hollywood as TNT broadcasts live from the NFL Experience, a sports/entertainment theme park adjacent to the Rose Bowl. NFL officials will honor the player and rookie of the year and introduce the 1993 Pro Football Hall of Fame inductees.

'Super Bowl XXVII' airs at 4 p.m. MST Sunday on NBC.

Plot portents

One Life to Live

As Tina and Cain head out to town for a romantic getaway, Cord stuns the Buchanan family with his return. Cord explains that he got caught in the crossfire of the revolution that began with the murder of General Gazi and was sent to a labor camp, only now managing to escape. As Cain prepares marriage to Tina, Cord heads to Atlantic City to find her. Jason, who knows Kevin won't give Lee Ann any custody rights to Duke if she marries Jason, calls off the wedding. As Lee Ann gets Hank to drop drug charges against Jason, Marty agrees to help Jason with his plan to break-up with Lee Ann. Viki spots Lindsey and Clint at the same restaurant where she is supposed to dine with Sloan. Clint learns that Viki lied to him about her dinner plans and picks a fight with Sloan. Luna moves out of Max's house, upset that she saw Max kiss Blair. Max explains it was a good-bye kiss. Blair has left town. Max brings Luna to the site of the dream house he is building for her. Alex plans to rob the Palace Hotel so it will appear as if Carlo has resumed his life of crime. Bo tries to rescue the taxi driver who helped him the night of the accident.

Loving

Clay and Dinah Lee have an emotional confrontation about her betrayal prior to his arraignment in court. Gwyn threatens to expose Isabelle's secret unless Isabelle takes responsibility for Clay's actions. Isabelle marches into the courtroom and confesses she is responsible for tormenting Stacey and then collapses. Ally remembers her parents' marital problems and fears marriage to Casey would be doomed. Casey is shocked, and Stephanie delighted, when Ally rejects Casey's proposal. Jeremy challenges his students to dare to live. Ava learns that Shana is investigating Lee. Trisha walks away from her family when they refuse to divorce who was really responsible for Stacey's problems. Trucker warns Clay not to trouble Trisha again.

General Hospital

Furious over Felicia's treatment at the institution, Mac takes his frustrations out on Ryan at General Hospital, forcing Steve and Tom to pull them apart. Tony confirms Dominique's terminal diagnosis to a devastated Scotty. Dominique, in turn, confesses her desire to live what's left of her life to the fullest. Marco and Reggie go to L.A. to dig up dirt on Tiffany's past, as Bobbie foils the bill. For her part, Tiffany does damage to undermine Bobbie's reputation, hoping to gain custody of Lucas. Following Sen. Kensington's threats to dis-sport ELQ, Tracy and Edward warn Ned to back off from his plans to blackmail the senator. Monica learns that AJ will be released from rehab soon and worries about his future. Karen tries to forget about her love for Jagger, while Brenda pays him another visit out of town.

All My Children

Tad and Dixie each arrive at the bridge that fell from two years ago. When they see one another Dixie runs away. Tad runs after her but is overcome with pain from his head injury. Dixie tells Brian that she's losing her mind. She saw Tad just as she saw Will after he died. Brian says she must have seen "Ted," the same man that funny thought was Ted. Adam catches Dixie alone and finds her muttering to herself about talking to the dead. Tad flies back to Napa Valley to bury Nola.

Brooke suspects that the mysterious woman he's been searching for has been hired by Natalie to work for the Mason Foundation. She is introduced to him as Laurel Banning. Jack pulls her out of the meeting and grills her. She apologizes for using an alias and says she's just being playful. She still denies seeing him on the road on New Year's Eve. Hayley tells Adam that although she loves him, she has to testify against him. Adam threatens to disown her.

Days of Our Lives

John's announcement that he's leaving Salem comes out of left field for an anguished Marlena, who feverishly tries to persuade him to stay. Sami and Carrie plan a huge surprise party for Roman and Marlena's wedding anniversary. Marlena begs John not to leave as they lock in a passionate embrace...and make love. A tormented Marlena, having completely forgotten about her anniversary, is beside herself with guilt as she is congratulated by well-meaning friends and family, and over-compensates with an energized facade. Tipped off by an informed source that Bo is about to obtain another search warrant, Lawrence sets off in the rain to dispose of the stone cat and the rug where Lisanne met her end. Billie fingers Cash as Abe's assailant. But when Cash realizes Billie was part of the sting operation, he vows revenge. Sami overhears when she keeps running into a gorgeous guy around town. Little does she know he's her sister's boyfriend.

The Bold and the Beautiful

Mike tells Sheila he will turn her in to Dr. Peters unless she makes love to him. Mike admits he lied. Tracy a tale telling her everything Sheila did. Jack tells Sally it's been a long time since he's been intimate with a woman...and he suggests they go into the bedroom. Tracy is about to begin reading the note from Mike when Sheila bursts into Tracy's office and tries to distract her. Saul tells Macy he's been in love with Sally for 30 years. He gets teary-eyed when Sally admits she spent the night with Jack. Tracy calls and tells Brooke the test results are in. Eric explains to Sheila that although he cares deeply for her, he cannot ignore his obligations to Brooke and their family. Brooke tells Ridge she loves him and pays for a note that says "I love you," if she really proves Eric to be the father she promises never to interfere in his marriage.

The Young and the Restless

John tells Drucilla she's been missed around the office and shows his excitement for her when she reveals that she's been on a cruise. Blade warns Neil that Drucilla is in love with him, but she won't wait forever. Tracy tells Brad she never wants their relationship to end when their marriage is over. Lauren receives the fourth piece of the puzzle and plays with a note that says "I love you" will be revealed in a week. Victoria is blown away when Nikki offers to pay for sex therapy. Dr. Levinson explains to Victoria that time away from her husband and sexual pressure will help her evaluate the situation. Michael and Rebecca are surprised when Roman is afraid of something. Ryan urges Vicki to leave, saying he cannot spend too many more nights lying next to her without reaching out. Michael vows not to let private detectives get in his way. Cricket overhears Nancy's conversation with Paul and isn't pleased to learn about the surveillance bill calls her doctor and arranges to see him to discuss her fertility.

He's no longer 'scott free'

Although Scott DeFraitas is in his early 20s, he is a veteran of the soap world, having chalked up eight years in the role of Andy Dixon in CBS' long running daytime drama "As the World Turns." He literally grew up on the soap and fans have gone through his terrible teens with him. They watched Andy suffer the consequences of alcohol abuse and saw him mature into a fairly responsible young man who recently took a bride, the lovely Courtney Baxter (played by Hayley Barr). The wedding was a big event on the popular soap opera and viewers looked forward to this union because the two characters are big favorites with the show's faithful fans.

Scott DeFraitas grew up on a soap set

John N. Goudas

"Courtney is only 19 and still in college and my character is 22 and has a pretty good job as a photographer but they're really still kids and they've got a lot to learn yet," notes Scott. "But they love each other and I just want Doug Marland to come up with some good storylines to keep them busy in the coming months. Marland is a magician. I have complete faith in his instincts and his wisdom is beyond reproach. I just go along and let the plot surprise me and it always does."

Scott said that when he first came on the show, he used to ask a lot of questions, wondering where the plotlines were going to end up, but now he sits back and trusts Marland and his staff of writers completely.

Scott was born in Boston, Mass., and if it weren't for the fact that his next-door neighbor was an agent and got him started working in TV commercials, he might have ended up a professional athlete. Scott loves sports but after he got a taste of acting, he decided this was for him.

Many child actors spend their teens acting and then disappear from the scene. In show business terms, many of them can't get through "the awkward years" or late adolescence when the roles are fewer.

Scott said he went through his awkward years on the soap and was lucky to have such good people (cast and production staff) around him, helping him get through those years with production staff (around who helped him get through those years with relative ease).

"I had a pretty normal time away from the set. I went to high school and didn't miss out much. I had a lot of friends and never got into the soap star thing. I did interviews for those magazines which the young girls buy but it was part of the job. As for the fans, I took it for what it is and never let it go to my head."

Unlike some critics of soaps who think the plotlines take much too long to unravel, Scott thinks they don't spend enough time on certain plots. He thinks they should go into even more depth. He hopes this will be the case in telling the story of his and Courtney's adjustment to marriage. Like most of the fans of "As the World Turns," Scott can't wait to see what's in store for the newlyweds.

"As the World Turns" airs from noon to 1 p.m. on CBS.

Daytime star goes prime time in 'Dr. Quinn'

By Bettelou Peterson
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

Q. Tell me something about daytime star Joe Lando. How did he get into acting? Where can I write him? —B.B., West Haven, Conn.

A. After a year as Jake Harrison in "One Life to Live," Lando is now a prime-time actor in CBS' "Dr. Quinn, Medicine Woman." He backed into acting with a job coaching Trapezoidal and Kevin Kline on how to spin the pizza for the 1990 feature "I Love You to Death." "Life" was his first real acting job. Other credits include bits in "Star Trek IV," and, on TV, in "Nightangles" and "Pro and Con." Write: CBS-TV, 7800 Beverly Blvd., Los Angeles, Calif. 90036.

Q. I'd like to know where Mindy Lewis is and when she will come back to "The Guiding Light."

A. Kimberly Simms, who was Lewis, departed in a contract squabble. The show wanted her to sign for two years because of big plans for the Lewis character. Simms didn't want to commit to more than a year. She wants to do other things, features for instance. The role has been recast. Ann Hamilton is taking over.

Q. I recently watched "Matlock" and I recognized Bryan Thayer. I can't recall what soap she was in but she's familiar.

A. Thayer spent nine years, 1978-86, as Jenny Wolek in "One Life to Live." She left the New York-based soap to try her luck in Los Angeles. She's done one series, 1988's "TV101," and many guest roles in TV series and movies.

Q. Tell me what Bill Hayes is doing now. I loved to hear him sing on "Days of Our Lives."

A. That's what he's doing: Singing. Hayes does concerts and theater around the country.

Dame Edna moves from NBC to FOX with special series

By Bob Curtright
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

LOS ANGELES — Dame Edna, that dotty old dear from Down Under, has defected from NBC to become the talk-show darling of Fox.

The Diva of Dish is preparing a one-hour special with her unique brand of celebrity baiting and teasing for the February ratings sweep. But that program will also act as the pilot for a half-hour series for the Aussie hostess with the postscript.

"We've been searching the world for a celebrity interviewer who'll be larger than life," Barbara Walters, Joan Rivers, Whoopi Goldberg, Oprah Winfrey — they're terrific at what they do. But we wanted someone who would take us to a higher level, someone who would be a magnet for celebrities fighting to get on her show," said Sandy Grushow, new president of the Fox Entertainment Group.

"We finally got lucky. A network which shall remain nameless got so preoccupied with losing a hit show ("Cheers") and possibly its late-night talent that it neglected the person who's just right for us," Grushow said.

"Fox will be the future American home for none other than Dame Edna," Grushow announced with all the flourish and bemused sparkle of someone enjoying an enormous inside joke.

Dame Edna, of course, is the flamboyant, mauve-haired creation of Comic and female impersonator Barry Humphries. He puts on a sequined gown and matching trademark glasses, invites a series of disparate celebrities to Dame Edna's Hollywood home and then proceeds to ridicule and ignore them to audience delight.

NBC imported Dame Edna for two specials, one of which just aired during the holiday season. But they were disappointingly tame by comparison with her British and Australian specials because network censors put a crimp in her strength, which is sexual innuendo.

Fox promises to be a more lenient — and possibly funnier — new home.

Even Dame Edna herself, during a delicious conceit of a conversation-performance, agreed. "I felt I was surrounded by a lot of lawyers (at NBC). I did," Dame Edna insisted with viperish charm. "Here at Fox, I feel I am surrounded by friends. I do. Make a note of that. It's a lovely statement."

Dressed in a stylish suit of shocking pink sequins trimmed with black, Dame Edna paraded back and forth, musing about her plans. For her past specials, she has played host to such stars as Burt Reynolds, Mel Gibson and Cher. Now that she's on youth-oriented Fox, she admits that she'll have to go a little younger with the likes of, probably, Luke Perry and Torie Spelling.

"I'm having hot young people on the show. I am," she burbles with a hint of mischief in her voice. "My view is, of course, that there are some people who are so young that they're not terrible interesting. If they're not, I'll just do most of the talking. I will."

She does that anyway, of course. The particular charm of the show is that she considers it her monologue, occasionally "interrupted" by celebrities.

Stern keeps on growing

By Tom Ichna
Fort Lauderdale Sun-Sentinel

LOS ANGELES — "The Howard Stern Show" is a redundancy.

Howard Stern is a show. The Federal Communications Commission's Public Enemy No. 1 brought his brass act to the mid-season press tour this week. (Actually, the press tour went to him. Awaiting the birth of his third child, Stern stayed in New York and conducted a satellite interview.) It was an amusing, shocking, outrageous and, to some, offensive session. In other words, vintage Howard.

Ostensibly, Stern was promoting his Friday-night-interview-show on the E! cable network. However with minimal prodding, he extended the parameters of the press conference to work in his unique opinions about the entire TV/radio universe. Mostly, though, he talked about his favorite subject, Howard Stern.

But that's OK, he said, because nothing is more interesting. "My critics say Howard Stern's biggest fault is that all he talks about is himself. Well, people find me interesting."

In fact, Stern said, NBC is missing an opportunity by not naming him the replacement for David Letterman. "I know I would win. At 12:30, what would I have to compete against? Jessica Hahn's love phone? But I could beat Jay and David, too." Could be. When Stern was a guest on Leno's show last spring, requests for tickets reached the level of Johnny Carson's farewell tour and the program the night he was on had uncommonly high ratings.

But Stern said he isn't pining for the job. He's too busy with his E! show, a movie he is planning to start this spring and his radio show, which is now in 12 cities and is No. 1 in the ratings in the nation's two largest markets, New York and Los Angeles.

Besides, he already has had one bad experience with NBC. "When I was on NBC radio, it was the low-light of my career. (Among other things, he was fired.) The radio guys would be afraid to put me on because of my image, but I don't care."

Isabelle hadn't considered moving or retiring... not really. Not until she heard BridgeView Estates was offering spacious apartments with full kitchens and weekly maid service. And, she loved the possibilities of the Meet Your Neighbor Parties and the elegant Blue Lakes dining room with a dance floor.

It seemed an extravagance. But, by the time Isabelle added up all her monthly household expenses plus fire insurance and taxes, she found BridgeView very affordable. For just monthly rent she could enjoy a much easier life while the money from her house was put to work... earning money.

OUTSTANDING

There were added advantages too. She wouldn't have to leave BridgeView if she ever needed a little help because the assisted retirement apartments were in the next wing. And, the village Health Care Center would be there for emergencies and physical therapy should she need it.

Of course, she especially liked the picturesque location... right across the street from the shopping center... OUTSTANDING!

STRESSED for SUCCESS

Most people have an image of what success means to them. But balancing family, career and personal interests can sometimes test our ability to cope.

NewsCenter 7's Kimberly Van Scoy and photographer Rich Jordan look at the physical and mental toll stress can take. They'll also give you some tips on how to reduce stress without giving up on your goals.
