Hospital OK's $1.5 million for nursing-home wing

By Kirk Mitchell
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Magic Valley Regional Medical Center's board of trustees will spend up to $1.5 million to remodel a wing for elderly hospital patients who don't require acute nursing service, but who are not yet ready to go home.

Board members approved the construction on the "transitional" nursing care unit Monday night on the condition that when bids are opened in June they not exceed $1.5 million.

The hospital will pay for the project with a revenue bond, meaning that loan payments will be made from money generated by the 17 semi-private and three private rooms in the remodeled wing.

It also means that the construction project at the county-owned hospital will not be paid for with taxes.

In fact, the hospital's total loan payments will decrease even with the new transitional nursing home because the board voted Monday night to refinance $29 million in outstanding debt, hospital finance Director Ken Fry said.

Interest rates are much lower now than when the earlier loans were made, he said.

After refinancing the old bonds and combining them with the new bonds, the hospital will still save $239,000 a year in payments, Fry said.

Without the new debt, the hospital would have saved $368,000 a year by refinancing the old debt, he said.

The rooms will provide a nursing care service that is currently unavailable in Twin Falls, board Chairman Jim Herrett said.

The rooms will be mostly for recovering elderly patients who no longer require acute nursing service but who are not yet ready to either go home or go to a nursing home, Administrator John Bingham said.

The remodeled wing will generate revenue for the hospital by adding services. Also, the hospital can transfer elderly patients on Medicaid out of more costly acute hospital beds to the less-expensive "transitional" beds.

After a patient recovers and his Medicaid payments for a given illness are exhausted, the hospital will be able to move the patient into the "transitional" beds and collect Medicaid there.

The transitional nursing wing will have a living room, a dining room, an activities

White House knuckles under

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The White House signaled on Monday that it was prepared to compromise on its jobs bill as Senate Democrats and Republicans hunted for a way to end their standoff over the $16.3 billion package.

Behind-the-scenes, the two sides searched for a compromise over the jobs bill, which is a central ingredient of Clinton's prescription for economic recovery. Republicans want to trim the measure and pay for it by cutting other programs.

Referring to Republicans, Clinton told local reporters that, "They may hit us a little on this."

GOP lawmakers crowed that the episode shows the White House won't be able to ignore them on future issues.

On the Senate floor, Democrats failed for the third time to find enough votes to halt a GOP filibuster that has stalled the bill for over a week. This time, the vote to halt the delays was 49-29 — 11 votes short of the 60 needed to clear the way for a vote on final passage.

Both Idaho senators, Republicans Larry Craig and Dirk Kempthorne, voted to continue the filibuster.

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, conceded that the message was becoming clear, even before he held a fruitless meeting with his GOP counterpart, Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan.

"If we can't get 60 votes, we can't pass this bill in its present form so we'll have to do the best we can to get as close to that as possible," he said.

On his way to an opening day baseball game in Baltimore, Clinton jabbed at Republicans for the stalemate.

"In a time when no new jobs are being created... it means that for political purposes, they are willing to deny jobs to places Like Baltimore, Dallas, Houston, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia and Cleveland and Seattle," he told reporters. "It's just real sad."

White House spokesman George Stephanopoulos suggested that a compromise was possible. He said the White House would follow Mitchell's lead.

"The Senate's in discussion right now and we're prepared to listen if Sen. Mitchell makes a recommendation, but we're still pushing for the president's package," Stephanopoulos said.

White House budget director Leon Panetta was dispatched to the Capitol and

School reviews to focus on legislative concerns

The Times-News
and Associated Press

TWIN FALLS — Idaho Schools Superintendent Jerry Evans began his annual tour around Idaho Monday, braced for strong words from local school officials about state funding that, he says, will force schools to "step back from the line a bit."

In Twin Falls, the first stop on Evans' tour, much of the talk among school officials was about the $528 million the Legislature gave out last week and last month's Supreme Court decision reopening a lawsuit by several school districts against the state.

The suit, which alleges that the state has violated the state Constitution by not giving local districts enough money to provide a "thorough" education, is "exciting and potentially disastrous at the same time," said Superintendent Terrell Donich of Twin Falls School District 411.

Depending on how the suit eventually is resolved, Donich said, the entire funding structure for public education in Idaho could be changed.

The $528 million in state aid for the coming school year that the Republican legislative majority pushed through is $31 million more than this year's package. However, officials said all the extra cash is being eaten up by skyrocketing enrollment and normal increases in operating expenses.

"It's a disaster for us and most public schools," Donich said.

Twin Falls schools will get $33,029 per classroom support unit and $6.33 per student in one-time money, Donich said — not much more than the $32,781 per support unit and $27.22 per student the district got two years ago.

In the meantime, he said, enrollment has

Post-passover surrender?

The Baltimore Sun

WACO, Texas — A lawyer for David Koresh, the cult leader who has kept federal agents at bay outside his fortress-like compound for 37 days, says his client will surrender once his followers have observed the Passover holy days.

While that should be good news to the FBI, it still leaves a huge question unanswered. When is Passover?

As with so many of the inexplicable details of his Texas tale, the question is rooted in a murky debate over biblical Scriptures, and it posed a new challenge to frustrated authorities Monday.

For Koresh, a man who claims to be Jesus Christ and celebrates Jewish Passover and not the traditional Christian holy days, Passover may or may not be the period between sunset Monday night and sunset Tuesday evening, when most traditional Jews observe Passover.

Authorities have found out the hard way that there is nothing traditional about Koresh or his Branch Davidians, who refuse to say exactly when they celebrate Passover. Not even the two lawyers who have been allowed into the compound in recent days and who have emerged saying the affair will end peacefully, seem to know when the holy day observance will take place.

Medical IDs may bear Social Security numbers

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Clinton's plan to reform health care is likely to include a universal identity card that may use Social Security numbers to keep track of patients, say White House and congressional aides involved in drafting the package.

Ira Magaziner, coordinator of the president's health care task force, says a "health security card" could be part of the plan. Clinton expects to give Congress this spring.

Two congressional aides with ties to the task force, both speaking on condition of anonymity, said Social Security numbers were being considered as the identification number for the cards.

More than 200 million Americans have Social Security numbers. All parents who want to claim a child as a tax deduction must now get a Social Security number before the baby's first birthday.

One of the congressional aides said the medical ID card would likely apply first to patients who receive free or assisted medical care under the plan. Eventually, every consumer could get a health card. An estimated 37 million Americans currently do not have health insurance.

Privacy experts contend that use of Social Security numbers could compromise the confidentiality of a patient's medical history in this age of computerized, womb to tomb records.

"It's not a secure identifier," said Evan Hendricks, editor and publisher of the Privacy Times, a biweekly newsletter in Washington on privacy issues. "If your Social Security number falls into the hands of unscrupulous person, it can potentially ruin you financially or otherwise."

It's not clear how sophisticated the medical ID cards would be — as simple as a plastic card with a name and number or something closer to the cards used to access automatic bank teller machines.

A congressional aide said the cards could be used by doctors and hospitals to call up a card holder's medical records, such as their insurance benefits, from a computer. Magaziner told consumer and health advocacy groups on Friday that a "smart card" that would carry the card holder's detailed medical history in a microchip is several years away.

"Smart cards, he said, 'could serve a lot of good uses in health care... people would have their patient information with them.' Magaziner said.

CALIFORNIA, Pa. (AP) — Ralph Anderson, 55, said the dispute started in 1986, when he bought a parcel of land across from Platter's home on McCrory Lane. When he began building a house, the borough completed McCrory Lane, covering with gravel a section that until then had been nothing but grass.

PERRINE, Fla. (AP) — The stench of swampland being dredged up by a backhoe wafts through the screened walls of a mess hall where young, sunburned volunteers scrape and dice carrots.

Down the road, insects buzz about the ears of an inexperienced work crew trying to rebuild a hurricane-ravaged barn.

This is spring break? Hundreds of students would have it no other way. "People need to do something like this not only for other people, but for themselves," said Julie Ferrero, 24, a nursing student at Western Connecticut State University. Ferrero forfeited the traditional spring break party at the beach to volunteer in the relief effort still needed 7½ months after Hurricane Andrew carved out a ruinous trail south of Miami.

Through the coordinated efforts of the University of Miami Volunteer Services Center, more than 300 students from 19 universities as far away as Michigan were placed in makeshift housing and put to work from Feb. 20 until April 10.

"It was the cheapest spring break there was," joked Craig Ortega, 18, a freshman from Woodhaven, Mich., who attends the University of Toledo.

Amy Cornelius, 19, a sophomore English major at the University of Tennessee in Knoxville, said she wanted to experience a less-than-classroom could offer. "I expected it to be very fulfilling and useful," said Cornelius, who plans to join the Peace Corps. "But it's been much more of a learning experience."

Jill Funk, the hurricane relief coordinator at the University of Miami, said the energy and focus of the college volunteers compensate for their lack of skills.

A tent-city was set up for the students by Samaritan's Purse, part of a ministry based at Boone, N.C.

More than 100 students, in addition to about 100 Samaritan's Purse workers, sleep on canvas cots and share four men's showers and four women's showers.

In Goulds, a community 20 miles south of Miami, 10 students from Toledo were building a barn at The Little Farm.

The hurricane leveled the farm, where physically and mentally disabled inner-city children are taught about agriculture.

"They're just such good people," said Valerie Jarrill, who owns and operates the farm with her husband, Thomas. The business suffered more than $150,000 in uninsured losses.

"It's hard to believe any college student would be giving up their time and their money to come down here."

After an eight-hour day picking up trash, tearing out drywall or building a barn, the students also have to take turns cooking for the group.

But life for the volunteers isn't all work. They can be showered and fed by 7 p.m. — and out on the town, with frequent day and night trips to Fort Lauderdale, the Everglades, Key Largo and Miami Beach.

'Cultural schizophrenia'

Lifestyles clash in Pensacola, where abortion doctor was killed

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — The Pensacola contradiction can be seen in all its glory at Gregory and 10th streets.

There, on one side of the street, sits Sammy's, a topless bar. Across the street, fundamentalist believers attend the Fast Side Assembly of God Church. The two co-exist, not always happily but usually without commotion — much like the rest of Pensacola.

Some call it cosmopolitan; some call it conservative. This panhandle community, where abortionist Dr. David Gunn was killed last month, which anti-abortion activists have vowed to invade this summer, is an urban incongruity.

"Cultural schizophrenia; I guess that's one way of describing it," says sociologist Dallas Blanchard.

The 34,000 inhabitants of the two-county metropolitan area at the western end of the panhandle are a diverse lot. Many are native Southerners, some tracing their heritage to neighboring Bible Belt states.

The rest are from virtually everywhere else. Some have come here because of the Pensacola Naval Air Station and other bases or to work in chemical and paper plants. Others were attracted by west Florida's sugarcane, beaches and the blue-green Gulf of Mexico.

"Pensacola is probably the most liberal and cosmopolitan place along this central Gulf Coast until you get to New Orleans," said Blanchard, a professor at the University of West Florida and a Methodist minister. "We have a lot of retired military here, of course. And, although they may be conservative Republicans, they're also extremely tolerant. Having seen what the rest of the world is like they can abide differences.

That attitude contrasts with the rigidity of some fundamentalists.

"Maybe it's just mix that makes Pensacola kind of a caldron," he said.

The Rev. Charles Cox, pastor of Fast Side Assembly of God Church, sees the church's proximity to Sammys as an opportunity, not a detriment. "We have traditionally been against alcohol and beverages of any type, so the whole concept of a topless bar we feel is unscriptural and is sin," he said. "We are going to do what we can to seek the lost as the Bible says."

That means praying, passing out religious tracts and talking to bar patrons as the opportunity arises, the minister said.

Known in the gay community as a "friendly city" — it annually attracts thousands of homosexuals to beach parties and holiday events — Pensacola also is the place where three teen-agers were charged in 1991 with murdering a man because they thought he was gay.

There are other contradictions: A downtown bust of slain civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr. faces a memorial to Confederate dead.

Country music concerts, monster truck races and professional wrestling all attract large crowds, but so do museums, the historic district, libraries and plays. West Florida has a literary federation and its own poor laureate.

It is a place where Mardi-Gras and other occasions are celebrated with free-flowing spirits while neighboring Santa Rosa County recently voted to continue a ban on hard liquor sales.

Santa Rosa is home to a nudist camp but county commissioners passed an ordinance against nudity in bars just in case voters decided to go "wet."

Party lines often are blurred. Pensacola state Rep. Lois Benson is a Republican who became a Democrat three years ago and lost her first bid for the legislature. Last year, she switched back to the GOP and defeated a Democratic incumbent who once had been a Republican.

The city's official seal symbolizes the importance of religion and the military. In its long history, Pensacola was first settled by the Spanish in 1559 — by fanning a cross and conquistador's helmet.

But in recent years it has become known more for anti-abortion violence. On Christmas Day, 1984, a clinic and two doctors' offices were bombed in Pensacola. The bombings and demonstrations that followed made Pensacola the darling of the anti-abortion movement.

But that changed after anti-abortion activist Joan Andrews received a maximum five-year prison term for leading a clinic invasion here in 1986.

A Chicago-based group urged a tourism boycott and a Kentucky man sought revenge by setting out to bomb the clinic, but he was caught before he could carry out the plot.

Debt ruling favors federal government

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court gave the federal government more opportunities Monday to collect interest on debts owed to it by states.

Ruling 8-1 in a Texas dispute, the court said a 1982 federal law did not cancel the government's traditional power to collect interest on state contractual debts.

That law "tightened the screws, so to speak" on private debtors' obligation to pay interest to the federal government, Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist wrote for the court.

"But it does not at all follow that because Congress did not tighten the screws on the states, it therefore intended that the screws be entirely removed," Rehnquist said. "The more logical conclusion is that it left the screws in place, untightened."

Government lawyers said the decision would affect various federal grant programs where alleged overpayments or misspending occur.

In other action Monday, the court: Left intact Marine Sgt. Clayton Lonetree's conviction of spying while serving as a U.S. Embassy guard in Moscow. The first Marine to be convicted of spying, Lonetree was found guilty in 1987 of passing secrets to the Soviet Union's KGB after becoming romantically involved with a Soviet woman.

Let stand the bribery and conspiracy convictions of a federal judge in Louisiana and his alleged accomplice, U.S. District Judge Robert F. Collins and businessman John Robs were convicted in 1991 of taking $100,000 from a convicted drug smuggler who wanted a lenient sentence.

Rejected Argentina's attempt to kill a lawsuit by a man who says military officers tortured him and seized his family business in 1976 because he is Jewish.

Dismissed a murder case that might have led to an important ruling on police conduct in questioning criminal suspects. The case became moot when the murder suspect was killed last month in the District of Columbia.

In the Texas case, Rehnquist wrote that the 1982 Debt Collection Act was enacted to strengthen the federal government's hand in collecting its debts.

The law requires federal agencies to collect interest on contractual debts from individuals, but it does not mention state or local governments.

Rapper settles suit over alleged attack

BOSTON (AP) — Marky Mark, avoided a criminal trial Monday by settling a civil lawsuit filed by a man who says the rap singer-model broke his jaw.

Assistant District Attorney Amy Machum asked that assault charges be dismissed because Mark's accuser, Robert D. Crehan, was satisfied with the settlement and didn't want to pursue the case any further. Marky Mark, the stage name for Mark Wahlberg, was to face trial Monday. He arrived, where some fans were waiting, but Crehan's attorney announced the settlement before the proceedings began.

Analysts play down inflation anxiety

Knight-Ridder News Service

WASHINGTON — After two months of discouraging price data and an ongoing run-up in commodity prices, analysts continue to say inflation is still under control.

Bond market participants who have built a jump in inflation into their interest rate outlooks may be pleasantly surprised as the year wears on, the analysts said. At worst, inflation will edge up only slightly from last year, they added.

"The best inflation news is behind us, (but) no one is really looking at serious deterioration," said Donald Ratajezak, director of the economic forecasting at Georgia State University.

"It would be inappropriate to conclude that after touching a low of 3 percent in 1992, the consumer price index is headed back up to a rise of 4 percent," he said. Ratajezak said he expects the CPI, which rose 2.9 percent in 1992, to climb 3.2 percent in 1993.

Higher-than-expected increases in some January and February inflation indicators have made March data, due Friday, crucial for economic prognosticators trying to determine whether inflation is creeping back up or remains largely quiescent.

The consensus forecast of analysts surveyed by Knight-Ridder Financial News is for the producer price and consumer price indexes — as well as the core rates for these two indexes, which exclude the food and energy sectors — to be up 0.3 percent in March.

"There are still some pressures out there we have to watch," though inflation in 1993 is expected much more to stay fairly steady," said Marlene Grabau, an economist at County Natixes/Washington Analysis.

The key to whether inflation will re-accelerate is the strength of consumer spending, Grabau said. If consumer demand "starts to slide back, (retailers) are not going to be able to get these prices increased," she said, a trend that should help slow price increases.

PPI is scheduled for release Thursday, while CPI is due on Friday.

Particularly vexing for the inflation-wary financial markets were back-to-back 0.5 percent increases in core CPI in both January and February. If that were not enough, the bond market has been eagerly tuned to every twist and turn of the Commodity Research Bureau's index of 25 key commodity futures prices. As the index spiraled higher, it helped drag the yield on the 30-year bond, which had been approaching 6.5 percent, back up past 7 percent.

The higher commodities price will probably show up in the form of a steeper increase in made-to-order prices in March, but this category is far more volatile than finished goods," said Mike Niemira, manager of economic research at Mitsubishi Bank.

However, the core CPI number has acquired a following among analysts, especially in view of sharp increases of 2.3 percent in December, 3.1 percent in January and 2.2 percent in February.

Stocks end day mixed; tobacco firm stabilizes

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The stock market ended narrowly mixed Monday, as shares of Philip Morris steadied and bond prices rebounded.

A 23-percent loss in the tobacco company's shares prompted by poor earnings outlook, as well as an almost one-point drop in bond prices pushed the market more than 60 points lower on Friday.

The Dow Jones industrial average gained 8.38 points to 3,379.19.

Declining issues narrowly outnumbered advances on the New York Stock Exchange.

Volume on the New York Stock Exchange was 1.1 billion shares, down from 1.2 billion on Friday. The market traded in narrow ranges throughout the day, and analysts said, held up well after last week's steep losses.

Half of Friday's decline came from the plunge in Philip Morris stock. The company forecast disappointing 1993 earnings and said it would cut prices on its Marlboro cigarettes to compete with generic brands.

Clinton seeks to strike Cold War statutes

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Russian diplomats, who met with the chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, hoped he would support repeal of Public Law 86-90, which denounces "the enslavement of a substantial part of the world's population" by Russian communism.

Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ill., was noncommittal. He also was a little puzzled that the visitors from the Russian Embassy seemed more concerned about striking outdated rhetoric from the books than about the trade restrictions in other statutes left over from the Cold War.

President Clinton and President Boris Yeltsin of Russia agreed over the weekend it is time to dispose of

— Warren Christopher, Secretary of State such legal relics, and administration and congressional aides worked Monday to come up with the U.S. list.

At the White House, spokesman George Stephanopoulos said the president hoped to have an accounting by the end of the week and then would "take a hard look at it."

Secretary of State Warren Christopher said there are "a lot of statutes that are just antiquated, they're old-fashioned—they've got nothing to do with Russia in the modern world."

Christopher said Clinton would confer with Congress to determine "whether these can't simply be taken off the books as relics of another age."

Typical of what the secretary of state referred to would be Public Law 86-90 passed by Congress on July 17, 1959, that designated the third week in July as "Captive Nations Week."

The resolution said that "since 1918 the imperialistic and aggressive policies of Russian communism have resulted in the creation of a vast empire which poses a dire threat to the security of the United States and of all the free peoples of the world."

It authorized and requested the president to issue an annual proclamation "each year until such time as freedom and independence shall have been achieved for all the captive nations of the world."

The resolution didn't require the president to issue a Captive Nations proclamation. But all did.

In 1983, President Ronald Reagan's proclamation denounced the Soviet government as a tyranny that "puts itself against God" and said the peoples of the Soviet bloc "were taken captives by force and remain captives by force."

Five years later, President George Bush cited "rays of light" within the Soviet bloc and a "spirit of renewal" in the Baltic independence movements.

Now, "We're not all that concerned about a Captive Nations Resolution," said Sandra Aistars of the Joint Baltic-American National Committee. "We're much more interested in aid to the Baltic countries." She said their concern was "not so much to try and keep a Cold War atmosphere going."

Aside from the anti-communist rhetoric of the Cold War, U.S. laws contain various restrictions on commercial transactions with communist countries.

Most prominent of these was the Jackson-Vanik Amendment to a 1974 trade bill that barred granting credit guarantees and tariff preferences to countries that restrict emigration.

The amendment was designed to pressure the Soviet Union to permit emigration of Jews.

When the Cold War eased and the United States became more interested in granting agricultural credits to the Soviets, Bush used his authority to waive the requirement that Moscow comply with Jackson-Vanik.

General inspired hero tale

Knight-Ridder News Service

On April 5, 1943 the VIII Bomber Command sent 79 B-17 Flying Fortress heavy bombers from the 91st, 303rd, 305th and 306th Bomb Groups and 25 B-24 Liberators from the 44th and 93rd Bomb Groups against industrial targets in Antwerp, Belgium.

Eighty-two bombers made it to the target to drop 190 tons of bombs. The lead bomber on this mission was a B-17 from the 306th Bomb Group. On board as a passenger was Brig. Gen. Frank A. Armstrong, commander of the 101st Provisional Bomb Wing, probably the most experienced and knowledgeable bomber leader in the U.S. Army Air Force.

He had been one of the first six officers brought to England by General Ira Eaker in February 1942 to create the 8th Air Force.

Force. He became the first commander of an American heavy bomber group in England in August 1942 with the 97th Bomb Group.

In January 1943 he took command of the 306th Bomb Group based at Thurlough, a troubled outfit with low morale and poor performance.

The previous commander had been a father figure, well-liked by his men but too sensitive to their personal problems to be an effective war leader. Armstrong restored discipline and instituted rigorous training. He also flew with his group whenever possible to assess the group's performance in combat firsthand.

Higher authority opposed risking generals in aerial combat (Armstrong was the only general in command of a bomb group, the others being led by colonels). Besides the loss to the United States of a top commander, there was also the chance of capture and the revelation of secret information under duress or torture.

Armstrong had been promoted to command of the 101st Provisional Combat Wing in March. He had returned to fly with the 306th on this mission.

German fighters made a determined effort to knock down the lead bomber. An estimated 25 head-on passes were made at the plane, mostly by FW 190s. There were attacks from "12 o'clock high," in pilot's lingo. The plane was hit several times, but made it home. The navigator was badly wounded.

Armstrong crawled back to his position to administer first aid. He rigged a tourniquet and kept the officer on oxygen despite the fact that the oxygen system had been shot up and the general himself almost passed out. Armstrong helped the pilot plot a course back to England, then crawled to the forward nose of the bomber to watch for an emergency Royal Air Force field.

Four B-17s were lost that day; all from the 306th, as the Luftwaffe had concentrated on the lead group. Five other 306th Bomb Group planes had been damaged, besides the one carrying Armstrong. Only six bombers from the other groups were hit. Armstrong was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross for his role in getting his bomber back safely.

At the end of the war, two 8th Air Force officers, Maj. Sy Bartlett and Col. Beirne Lay, became screenwriters in Hollywood. They decided to write a novel based on Armstrong's rejuvenation of the 306th Bomb Group.

That novel became the classic "Twelve O'Clock High," which was turned into a 1949 movie starring Gregory Peck as Gen. Frank Savage and a 1964-67 television series with Robert Lansing in the role of the general.

U of I narrows search for basketball coach

MOSCOW, Idaho (AP) — The University of Idaho has narrowed its search for a new men's basketball coach to two finalists, the school said Monday.

The two are Steve Antrim, coach at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee, and Joe Cravens, assistant coach at Utah, said Rance Pugmire, Idaho athletics spokesman.

Two other semi-finalists are no longer in the running: Kermit Davis, a former Idaho coach currently at Chipola Junior College in Florida, and Hugh Watson, Idaho assistant coach.

The Vandals hope to name a replacement for Larry Eustachy by the end of the week, Pugmire said. Antrim and Cravens are scheduled to visit the Moscow campus in the next couple of days for further interviews.

The school drew up a list of 24 candidates after Eustachy announced March 16 that he had accepted the coaching job at Utah State.

Antrim, 45, has compiled a 111-59 record in six years at Wisconsin-Milwaukee and previously was an assistant at Iowa State under Johnny Orr.

Cravens, 39, has assisted Rick Majerus at Utah for the past four seasons. He served one season as interim coach while Majerus recovered from heart surgery, and was previously an assistant to former coach Andy Russo at Washington.

Jets deal starting quarterback O'Brien to Green Bay

— HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. (AP) — Ken O'Brien, the New York Jets starting quarterback for much of the past nine years, was traded on Monday to the Green Bay Packers for a mid-round draft choice.

O'Brien's days were numbered with the Jets "literally" when the team obtained Boomer Esiason from Cincinnati last month and gave him O'Brien's number "7." Esiason will compete with Browning Nagle for the starting job in New York.

Error seals Tar Heel championship

Wolverine's Webber mistakenly calls timeout team doesn't have

By Jim O'Connell
The Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — North Carolina capitalized on a last-second blunder by Michigan and gave Denn Smith his second national championship with a 77-71 victory over Michigan on Monday night.

The two titles in Smith's 32 years at North Carolina both came at the Superdome, and this one didn't have to wait for a last-minute jumper by Michael Jordan. That 1982 game also ended on a blunder — by Georgetown.

The Tar Heels won with a powerful inside game of Eric Montross and the 3-point shooting of Donald Williams as Michigan's Fab Five lost in the title game for the second consecutive year.

Smith becomes the fourth active coach to win two national championships. Indiana's Bob Knight has won three, while Louisville's Denny Crum and Mike Krzyzewski of Duke have each won two. Only John Wooden with 10 at UCLA, Adolph Rupp of Kentucky with four and Knight have won more than Smith, who was making his ninth appearance in a Final Four.

The Tar Heels (34-1) didn't wrap up the victory until Chris Webber, who had scored 23 points and grabbed 11 rebounds, made the mistake of calling a timeout the Wolverines didn't have.

North Carolina was leading 73-71 when Pat Sullivan missed the second of two free throws, with 20 seconds left. Webber grabbed the rebound, charged up court and stopped in front of his bench with 11 seconds left to call a timeout. The Wolverines had already used their allotted three and a technical foul was called.

Williams, who finished with 25 points, made both free throws on the technical and he added two more when he was fouled on the ensuing possession for the final margin.

When the buzzer sounded the Tar Heels charged the court and mobbed Smith, the second-winningest coach of all time who had always been maligned for his Final Four failures.

The Tar Heels got the lead for good when Derrick Phelps scored on a layup with 3:12 left for a 68-67 lead. Jimmy King of Michigan threw up an air ball from 3-point range and the Tar Heels extended the lead to three when George Lynch scored in the lane with 2:10 left. Montross, who had 16 points, dunked with one minute left and it was the Tar Heels by six.

Ray Jackson's jumper with 47 seconds left brought Michigan within three again. An unforced turnover gave the ball back to the Tar Heels.

N. Carolina's Williams outshines Michigan's Fab Five

The Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — Surrounded by two of college basketball's greatest recruiting classes, Donald Williams, the only sophomore on the North Carolina roster — delivered the national championship for the Tar Heels Monday night.

Williams is the afterthought in the North Carolina lineup, often overlooked in the glow of the other starters. And yet, when there was a championship to be won, it was the slender sophomore from Garner, N.C., who made the difference.

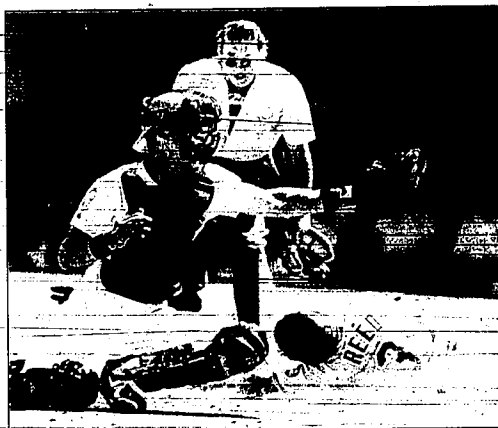

When Michigan nosed in front 60-58, Williams went on a run of eight straight points, including his fourth and fifth 3-pointers. That kept the Tar Heels in business, the last 3-point narrowing the Wolverine lead to 67-66.

As important as that streak was, Williams then punctuated his effort with a key steal following baskets by Derrick Phelps and George Lynch. That led to a basket by Eric Montross, a member of Carolina's talented junior class, that built a 72-67 lead, an edge the Tar Heels never surrendered.

Williams wasn't finished. Williams was one of Michigan's Fab Five sophomores, called for a time out when Michigan had none left and was charged with a technical with 11 seconds remaining. Williams coolly dropped both free throws to make the score 75-71.

A moment later, with Michigan out of options, the Wolverines fouled Williams again. With the bright lights of the Superdome glinting off his shaved head, the youngest dropped two more free throws home, sealing the victory.

Williams finished with a game-high 25 points on 8-for-12 from the field, including 5-for-7 on 3-point attempts. The 5-for-7 on 3-pointers mirrored his production in North Carolina's semifinal victory over Kansas.

Marlins down Dodgers in home, season opener

MIAMI — It may be Opening Day for America's pastime, but this is Miami, and so it is right that baseball here is different, because this is the nation's capital of weird.

It is right that the Florida Marlins shortstop Alex Arias possesses an orange-haired voodoo doll. Just as it is right that hundreds, if not thousands, of fans at the sold-out Florida Marlins season-opener at Joe Robbie Stadium are chatting up their friends from cellular phones and letting them listen to the roar of the crowd and the crack of the bat. Live! Mostly in Spanish. This was from the sell-out crowd of 44,000, gone almost nuts from a century of major-league baseball deprivation.

It is right, too, that the Marlins' assumed to be a lame expansion team and hence almost worthy of pity (made up as Please see MARLINS/B4

Cheers, tears, new faces usher in baseball season

The Associated Press

With tears in Cleveland and cheers in Miami, baseball was back where it belonged Monday.

Jose Canseco started the 1993 season with the first hit, Dwight Gooden pitched the first shutout, Greg Maddux won at Wrigley Field — for Atlanta, not for the Chicago Cubs.

And once again, following a winter of turmoil and turnover, the focus was on the field.

Baseball roundups — B3

All over, opening day meant new faces in new places, plus a new president throwing out the first ball. New teams, too, and new speedup rules, although no one was in a hurry on the first day.

The expansion Florida Marlins, in their bright teal uniforms, won at home at Joe Robbie Stadium, beating Los Angeles 6-3 and setting off a celebration usually reserved for World Series wins.

"I'll never forget it," said Florida native Charlie Hough, 45, the Marlins' winning pitcher. "All those years I watched baseball come in the spring and leave. Now, to play for a team that wasn't, in a stadium that wasn't. It's hard to describe the feeling."

The Colorado Rockies, dressed in purple, lost their first game, 3-0 to Gooden and the Mets. For the record, expansion teams are 8-4 in openers since 1961.

The usual festivities found on opening day, however, were missing in Cleveland, where the Indians began the final season in their old ballpark.

The Indians' fans and all of baseball still mourning the deaths of Steve Olin and Tim Crews in a boating accident during spring training, honored the fearful families of the two pitchers in ceremonies before playing the New York Yankees.

"You have to be thinking about the two pitchers that died," said George Steinbrenner, the Yankees owner who returned to baseball this spring after serving a 2½-year suspension for dealings with a gambler. "I feel awful for their families and their team."

At Royals Stadium in Kansas City, pictures of Olin and Crews were shown on the scoreboard, and a moment of silence was observed before the opener against Boston.

CSI tracksters set 2 school records

The Times-News

MISSOULA, Mont. — The College of Southern Idaho men's and women's track and field teams established two school records, came away with three national qualifiers and posted 10 personal bests last weekend.

"This may be the best meet we've had a collective group since I've been at CSI," said Coach Gary Sievers. On the women's side, Terra Barter, despite running into a stiff wind, ran 2:14.84 to claim first at 800 meters. In addition to her placing, Barter's time set the school record and was a national qualifier. Heidi Morrison, returning to the track for the first time since sustaining an injury two weeks ago, recorded a pair of personal bests. Fourth in the javelin at 112-1, a throw which eclipsed her previous best by 11 feet, Morrison clocked 2:14.14 in the 800, lowering her own personal standard by three seconds. Second in the 500-meter dash, 7-inch shotput, a new standard for the school, was good fourth place in the men's division and qualified him for the NJCAA national meet in May. Jon Bils won at 5,000 meters in a personal best 15:04.24, adding yet another CSI qualifier for the national event. Deke Gibson posted the 400 in a meet, winning 48.34 and later returned to place second in the 200-meter dash. Jason Fisher, 49:74, placed fourth behind Gibson. Matt Fuller claimed first in 1:56.01 in a headwind in the 110-meter hurdles and Monty Green contributed a victory in the triple jump with a leap of 38.57.

Boitano prepares for return to Olympics

The Associated Press

The only battle of the Brits this time will be Boitano against himself. Brian Boitano is back and he hopes, headed for Lillehammer and more Olympic gold. Along the way, he must overcome a variety of obstacles, some of which he has no way of preparing to face. There is his age. Boitano will be 30 at the 1994 Olympics. No singles skater has performed at the level to which he aspires at such an advanced age. There is an aching right knee that hampers his training. There is the perception by some that he is over the hill and should graciously step aside rather than step back into the figure skating fray. There is the possibility of biased judging because Boitano not only is part of the first wave of re-tested skaters, but he has been a leader in the movement to have eligibility restored for professionals. And yes, there is the competition, which will be as fierce as ever. Boitano won four American titles, two world championships and edged his friend Brian Orser for the Olympic gold at Calgary. In the face of all those barriers, why has Boitano chosen to return to the pressure-packed competitive arena? "When I do best skating," he says, "I've been all I can be as a professional, but I want to challenge myself and experience what I really love in skating — improvement and day-to-day training. I don't feel the same pressures there as in 1988. This will never be 1988 to me. I had fulfilled a lot of things I wanted for my career in 1988. But priorities change. It's not a beginning or an end for me, it's a progression. My whole skating career has been a work in progress. Until I'm fulfilled with what I've done as a skater, I'll keep competing. I'll keep skating, whatever. I'm not going to stop." Confirming the special status American skaters held in last month's world championships, bringing home no medals, Boitano should have no trouble making the U.S. team for Lillehammer. There are just two spots available, and few people believe he can't claim one of them. If he can't, he isn't nearly the skater he was five years ago.

Boitano admits he is not able to train the way he did, even though he still has the desire to put in all the hours at the ice rink. The knee, in which he lost a tendon in 1991, simply won't allow it. "I'm an overworker and a perfectionist," he says. "It has been very difficult just to do a warmup and a short program and not be working on jumping and spins, things I'm used to doing when the knee is a little healthier. It's funny, because I had this same problem with the left knee from a short program element I did in 1985 and I don't feel it on the left knee. "The hard thing is holding back on a good day, when I feel like doing 100 triple axels and I have to do two and stop." Linda Leaver, who has coached Boitano for more than 20 years, thought he would stop competing after Calgary and remain a star in ice shows and television specials. "I never factored in his desire to keep improving," she says. "He's done so many important things in his career. People told him, 'You'll never have your own show, you'll never skate on a glacier.' There have been so many nevers in his life. He's done a lot of firsts in skating and a lot of firsts for himself."

Nothing he has done would compare to a successful return to Olympic competition. Of course, success is an ambiguous term in Boitano's case. He might consider something less than a gold medal in Norway as satisfactory; others might find anything that does not shine golden to be tarnished, an unfair outlook, but an understandable one, given Boitano's history. "I would love to have the feeling of going out and having a great, solid performance, something I take pride in more," he says. "It's even more important in a competition — a competition the level of the world championships or the Olympics. It's a great feeling to work, put in the time and come off with the best performance possible. "I'm not looking to top what I did in Calgary. That is dangerous, too. I'll never have the experience I did in Calgary. It's healthy to know that and go on. "I'm a skater, and part of that is skating in shows and part is skating in competition. "His only international competition before next January's nationals at Detroit figures to be the Skate America in Dallas in October. Boitano hopes to go to Lillehammer to train sometime after that event.

Texas Tech, Swoopes savors 1st women's NCAA crown

ATLANTA (AP) — Texas Tech always had good players on its women's basketball team, the kind who hustled, were unselfish and knew the game. But the Lady Raiders always lacked that one piece they needed to get the program to a higher level. Then Sheri Swoopes came along to complete the picture. With Swoopes in tow after her transfer from South Plains College, Tech won its first Southwest Conference championship in 1992. They won the conference title again this season and took another giant step beyond that by winning the national championship in their first Final Four appearance. Swoopes was the key in Tech's 84-82 victory over Ohio State in Sunday's title game, scoring a record 47 points. But coach March, Sharp was able to surround her with players who filled their roles perfectly, including seniors Krista Kirkland and Cynthia Clinger, who would have been the stars if Swoopes had not arrived. "These kids were 23-8 the year before she came. There were some good basketball players in that group," Sharp said. "I think the chemistry has been the biggest part of what we've done because they have let her be a superstar. And what a star she was. The 6-foot senior was named the national player of the year and by the time the final buzzer sounded Sunday, she had broken or tied nine NCAA tournament records. She shattered the record for points in a championship game, which had been 28, and also beat the mark for a men's final, which is 44 by Bill Walton in 1973. Her 177 points in five NCAA tournament games topped the previous record by 43. But it wasn't just her playing skills that contributed so mightily to Tech's success. Sharp said Swoopes' winning personality was just as important. "She has the type of charisma that the crowd loves," said Sharp, whose team finished 31-3. "To me, that's what has taken us to this level. Our fans have fallen in love with her and gotten so much behind her. And I don't think they would have done that if it had been a different personality. "I think that's been really special, and that's maybe the added ingredient that she gives to women's basketball right now."

With the women's game constantly striving for recognition, Swoopes gave the Final Four a Jordan-like figure for fans to ooh and ah over. A national television audience saw her exploits, which included 31 points in the semifinals against Vanderbilt, and the Oum was selected of 16.141 with only a few mis-shots. Even the losing coach could appreciate what Swoopes had done for the game. "This showed CEOs of companies trying to decide how they're going to spend their sponsorship dollars, to station managers, to production people, that women's basketball is a great product," Ohio State coach Nancy Darsch said. "Sheri showed a lot of people around the country that a woman can do great things in this sport." With Swoopes, Kirkland and Clinger leaving, Sharp faces a major rebuilding job. But she doesn't see Tech basketball withering on the vine and noted she's involved in some tight recruiting battles for promising players. Tech's accomplishments in Atlanta should certainly help those efforts. "I think we'll have a good basketball team," Sharp said. "I have absolutely no idea what level that will be and how close we can keep it to this. But boy, we would like to do that and I hope we are going to be able to put the kids on the floor to do it."

As season winds down, NHL teams change form, show turnarounds

The Associated Press

It's been a season of amazing turnarounds in the NHL, from the fall of the New York Rangers to the rise of the Quebec Nordiques. Who would have believed that with a week to go in the regular season, the Rangers would be fighting for a playoff spot while the Nordiques were fighting for the Adams Division lead? And then there are the Toronto Maple Leafs, challenging Chicago and Detroit for the Norris Division lead. Those were just a few of the surprises this season. Thanks to the Eric Lindros trade, the Nordiques have become the league's most improved team, finishing one of the most impressive turnarounds in hockey. Entering Tuesday night's game against Boston, the Nordiques were third in the Adams (44-25-10) with 98 points, one point behind the Bruins and two behind Montreal, included in the accomplishments has been a league-best 23-8 road record — three more wins than their entire total last year. "It's hard for me to look at this team and think of things being bad because we've got so much talent and we show lots of character by winning on the road," said Mike Ricci, one of six players acquired in the deal that sent Lindros to Philadelphia. "All I know is that last year I was on a more experienced team and we never won on the road. So we were always looking for excuses. Here, it seems there are no excuses, just guys putting guys on the back." Ron Hextall has been called the key to the deal, providing the Nordiques with more than just a talented, experienced goaltender. "We had pretty good talent," said owner Marcel Aubut, "but we had no glue. Hextall has filled that role." With Hextall, the Nordiques have been free to let loose on offense. With 333 goals, they have been outscored only by the defending Stanley Cup champion Pittsburgh Penguins, who are on a 14-game winning streak. The Maple Leafs are winning with defense. After finishing out of the playoffs two straight seasons, they have blossomed into one of the league's elite teams. With a 42-26-11 record, breaking a franchise mark for victories, the Maple Leafs were in third place in the Norris, two points behind co-leaders Detroit and Chicago. "The turnaround that this year has been amazing," Todd Gill said Saturday. "Toronto beat New Jersey 4-0. Showing for first place in the division and having this record, to tell you honestly, I never would have believed it." The Maple Leafs broke the club mark of 41 victories set in 1950-51 and matched again in 1977-78. They have a home-ice unbeaten streak of 12 games (10-0-2), the longest since a 14-game unbeaten streak in 1970-71. "It's great for the organization because in the past, when you used to call somebody up, they thought they knew all the answers," coach Pat Burns said. "Now they're thinking. Gee, this is a good team; we're going to have to try to make this team." Doug Gilmour, among the scoring leaders all season, is the keynote player for the Maple Leafs. A late-season trade with the Buffalo Sabres bringing Dave Andreychuk to Toronto has added more scoring potential. But the biggest reason Toronto is doing so well is the defensive philosophy brought to Toronto by Burns. Toronto ranks No. 2 in goals against in the NHL, behind Chicago. The Rangers, meanwhile, have turned their season around in the other direction. Going into Monday night's game against Hartford, they were fifth in the Patrick Division, a point behind the New York Islanders. Last season, the Rangers won the President's Trophy with a league-best 50-25-5 record before being knocked out of the playoffs in the second round by the Penguins.

Michigan finished 5 for 15 from 3-point range, far from the 0-for-0 effort against Kentucky in the overtime semifinal. Michigan's one-game run without any 3-pointers ended early, and three long jumpers on as many possessions started the Wolverines on the way to a 23-13 lead with 11:33 left in the half.

Reserve Rob Pelinka hit two 3s to start the 19-2 run and Rose followed with another as Michigan scored 11 straight points. North Carolina tied at 25 when Williams' first 3-pointer capped the 12-2 run with 8:01 left. Michigan was struggling early against Iowa from the start, but Rose had two personals with 8:38 left in the half. Only Jackson picked up his third foul, but then the Tar Heels had a 42-36 lead, the final points coming on another 3 by Williams with 49 seconds left. North Carolina dominated the boards early, but the Wolverines overcame a 19-18 by halftime. The only statistic of significant difference was turnovers — Michigan had 10, North Carolina just three.

Indeed, the day was obscenely perfect, from blue skies and a pennant-snapping breeze off home plate to old man Hough's

This was Hough, whom Miami Herald writer Dave Barry compared to "your Uncle Warren," the 45-year-old wisecracker who emerged, from his pre-season physical with a cigarette in his lips and told reporters the doctors told me I was in decent shape — it was 50." Well, the aging knuckleballer took down his first batter, the sacrificial lamb Jose Offerman, in three pitches. Gone! ### Wendell woman dies in Monday rollover

WENDELL — A 25-year-old Wendell woman was killed Monday morning in a traffic accident on Idaho Highway 46.

Darleen R. Fields, Veenstra was driving south at 10:12 a.m. when her pickup went off the right side of the road, an Idaho State Police dispatcher said.

The driver overcorrected, and the pickup rolled onto the highway as Veenstra was thrown out, the dispatcher said. She was not wearing a seat belt.

Veenstra was taken to Magic Valley Regional Medical Center in Twin Falls where she died a short time later.

Late Sunday accident claims life of Hagerman resident

SHOSHONE — A 41-year-old man was killed in an accident west of Shoshone late Sunday night.

Steele Larsen, Hagerman, died at St. Alphonsus Regional Medical Center in Boise Monday, according to a nursing supervisor there.

His brother, Merl S. Larsen, 37, of Shoshone, was driving west on U.S. Highway 26 about nine miles west of town when he lost control of his vehicle, the Idaho State Police reported.

Both men were ejected and neither wore a seat belt, an ISP dispatcher said. The accident is still under investigation.

Buhl man loses part of leg when pinned by vehicle

TWIN FALLS — A Buhl man lost part of one leg when he was pinned between an oncoming car and an automobile engine he was moving off the road, according to a Twin Falls police department accident report.

John C. Haken Jr., 29, was driving east on Addison Avenue when the engine fell out of the back of his pickup, the report says.

When Haken got out to move the engine, 17-year-old Michael C. Kudart of Twin Falls drove through the intersection and struck Haken.

Kudart said in his written statement that Haken's truck did not have lights on, and he did not see Haken in time to stop.

Dairy robbery in Buhl area results in more charges

TWIN FALLS — Two more men were charged Monday with several felonies in connection with a Feb. 25 robbery at a Buhl-area dairy.

Ronald P. Lehmann, 23, of Twin Falls, is charged with aiding and abetting robbery, aiding and abetting second-degree kidnapping, burglary, grand theft and conspiracy to commit robbery.

James M. Fox, 24, of Wendell is charged with aiding and abetting robbery, aiding and abetting second-degree kidnapping, aiding and abetting burglary, aiding and abetting grand theft and conspiracy to commit robbery.

Both men were being held in lieu of $50,000 bond. They already were in jail on unrelated criminal charges.

Stacey L. Fox, 21, was charged with robbery and several other felonies last week in connection with the same incident, in which a Buhl dairy worker was tied up and another robbed at gunpoint of $220.

Work begins on improving pair-of-area-intersections

TWIN FALLS — Idaho Transportation Department crews started work Monday to improve the Locust Street and 3200 Road intersections on Kimberly Road.

The project includes upgrading the traffic signals at Locust Street and widening the Locust Street corners to improve the turning area, according to a news release from the Transportation Department.

Crews also will improve the 3200 East Road for turning and install two left-turn bays on Kimberly Road at the 3200 East intersection. New street lighting will be installed.

This work is expected to last a month, after which crews will pave Kimberly Road for two miles between East Five Points intersection and 3200 East.

The whole project will cost $618,000, and Gordon Paving of Burley is the prime contractor. Work is expected to be finished by June.

Gays say they just want equal rights

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News writer

'Idaho gays are about as flamboyant as Idaho people in general.'

— Robert Shaffer, Eagle

TWIN FALLS — When Idaho Citizens Alliance chairman Kelly Walton says his group wants to eliminate "special rights" for Idaho homosexuals, Nancy Tomaskiewicz wonders what he's talking about.

"All I really want to do is keep my job," Tomaskiewicz of Boise said last week.

She and three gay men stopped in Twin Falls on their way to an Idaho Falls news conference announcing the formation of an Eastern Idaho chapter of Idaho for Human Dignity, a group opposed to the ICA's "anti-gay rights initiative."

Homosexuals in Idaho don't want special rights, as Walton says; they just want to have the same rights and protections as everyone else, Tomaskiewicz said.

The group tried to rebut statements Walton has made during public meetings and media appearances. There is no "homosexual agenda" in Idaho to push for special protections, said Robert Shaffer, 33, of Eagle.

In fact, there is no statewide network of gay and lesbian organizations. Local groups are starting to form and join together in response to the ICA's efforts, Shaffer said.

Gays don't want to recruit children; nor do they advocate teaching homosexual sex acts in schools, he said.

The group cringed at the mention of "The Gay Agenda," a graphic video being shown by anti-gay activists. Shaffer and his comrades say the video does not accurately portray homosexuals in general, and especially not gays in Idaho.

"The Gay Agenda" shows men with strap-on phalluses together with women flocking bare-breasted on a city street during a gay parade.

Proposed energy tax would cost Idahoans

By N.S. Nakkentved
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A proposed federal energy tax could cost Idahoans as much as $133.6 million annually after it takes full effect, a new state study says.

The energy tax was proposed by the Clinton administration in February.

The tax is based on British thermal units. A Btu is the amount of energy needed to raise the temperature of one pound of water one degree Fahrenheit.

The Btu tax would be applied to all forms of energy and would be phased in over three years.

The study by the Energy Division of the Idaho Department of Water Resources estimates that electricity would cost almost three-tenths of a cent more per kilowatt hour.

Typical residential customers would pay about $43 more per year. Those with electrically heated homes would pay considerably more, the study said.

Small commercial power users would pay an estimated $209 more per year, and large industrial users would pay from $5,700 up to $87,000 more per year.

To estimate the increase, multiply the number of kilowatt hours on your electric bill by .00295.

For natural gas users, it would raise rates by .257 cents per therm, the unit of gas used for billing. That translates to an estimated $24 per year for typical residential customers and about $100 per year for commercial customers.

Those who use coal could expect to pay $5.40 per ton. That would mean an increase ranging from about $30 a year for a residential user to as much as $80,000 for food processors.

Unadulterated sugar in Twin Falls uses 75,000 to 80,000 tons of coal per year. But other parts of the tax plan would save the company on capital investments and may balance out the increase, Twin Falls plant Manager Vic Jaro said when the tax package was announced in February.

The tax per Btu on petroleum products would be higher. Gasoline prices would go up by 7.5 cents per gallon. The average Idahoan uses 608 gallons of gasoline annually, the study reports.

Diesel would go up 8.3 cents per gallon. Propane would go up by 5.4 cents per gallon.

Idaho Power Co. estimates similar increases for its customers. Fully implemented, the increase would be 6.15 percent for residential customers; 6.97 percent for commercial customers; 10.64 percent for industrial customers; and 8.55 percent for irrigation customers.

For the average residential customer, Idaho Power estimates the proposed energy tax would mean a monthly increase of $3.46 and an annual increase of $41.52.

Advisory group meets tonight over jail plans

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — As the county continues to look up errant youngsters in local motel rooms and in a vegetable building at the fairgrounds, a citizens group will discuss the county's long-delayed plans for a juvenile jail tonight.

County commissioners have been unable to solve the juvenile detention center problem after more than two years of trying.

The citizens group, led by former Idaho House Speaker T.W. Stivers, will meet in the Obenchain Building, 264 Main Ave. S. at 7 p.m.

The current proposal calls for an 18-bed, $1.5 million facility to be built in the Twin Falls industrial park. It would receive juveniles from Jerome, Gooding, Camas, Blaine and Twin Falls counties.

Stivers and 13 other prominent property owners stalled the project last month when they won a court battle to prevent the county from paying for the project without an election.

Commissioners wanted to borrow more than $600,000 to go along with $125,000 already budgeted for the facility. A $740,000 state grant would pay for the remainder of the project.

"There's some real disappointment there," Commissioner Norma Blass said. When nobody objected to the funding plan in August, when it first came up, county officials thought the project would move forward.

Tonight's meeting will be followed by a Thursday trip to the state-run Youth Services Center in St. Anthony. YSC is where the most serious juvenile offenders are sent for rehabilitation.

The tour also will include a stop at the Bannock County juvenile detention center currently under construction in Pocatello.

Anyone interested in reserving a seat on the bus tour, which leaves at 6:30 a.m. Thursday and returns that evening, should call the commissioners' secretary at 738-4068.

The most recent delay means juveniles will still be housed at the Twin Falls County Fairgrounds in Trier when this year's fair rolls around, Blass said.

This September will mark the third year that the county has kept male juveniles in the flowers and produce building, which has been converted into an 8-bed detention center, run by the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare.

But this will be the first time the juveniles will remain in the facility during the fair. Moving the juveniles into a jail, as the county has done in past years, is too expensive, Blass said.

The county already is running up large bills keeping juveniles in other counties' detention centers. On Monday, the county had 17 juveniles in detention, Twin Falls County Sheriff Wayne Tousey said.

Five were being held in Lewiston, at a daily cost of $150 per youngster; one was in Ada County at $125 per day; three are kept under watch in a Twin Falls motel at an estimated cost of $207 per day, Tousey said.

In addition, the state charges the county about $29,000 each month to run the Trier facility, Blass said.

Even though Twin Falls County was just one juvenile prisoner short of filling the proposed regional detention center Monday, Blass said 18 beds should be enough for the four other counties involved.

Under the current plan, the building could be expanded to 24 beds if necessary, she said.

Jerome County planners OK E911 building, tower

By H.R. Weixel
Times-News correspondent

JEROME — The Jerome County Planning and Zoning Commission decided at the last minute Monday it did not need to hold a public hearing to allow an E911 communications building and tower to be built on the southeast edge of Jerome.

During a planned meeting, board members learned that the Jerome County comprehensive plan allowed construction of the E911 communications building without public input.

"There is no legal recourse to stop the center from going in," said Tim Newman, chairman of the commission.

The proposed seven-acre site, located at the end of East H Street, could cost as much as $4,000 per acre, E911 Project Manager Al Samhaber said.

A 3,500-square foot building and lighted 175-foot radio tower are planned for the center. The center is expected to cost

Monte Brothwell received 110 votes and was elected to his second term as

Council holds off on zoning decision for development

By Phil Sahn
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The City Council will make developers and area residents wait two more weeks for its decision on rezoning some north Twin Falls property.

In the meantime, the council has the city engineer studying car and pedestrian traffic at Madrona Street and Falls Avenue to see if the intersection warrants a traffic signal.

The council held a second public hearing Monday night on rezoning 46 acres north of Pole Line Road and east of Washington Street North from residential to commercial planned unit development. Developers Richard Messersmith, Bruce Olsen and Doug Vollmer plan to develop six lots along Pole Line starting at Washington Street and extending past the Perrine Coulee. They also plan a separate planned-unit development for residential housing extending to the Snake River Canyon Rim.

Residents of the Los Lagos subdivision across Washington Street want both projects considered as one, and would like the two commercial lots nearest Washington Street to be zoned for professional businesses.

The residents say combining the two projects now will ensure that the plan for the development does not change.

The residents asked the council to make sure any development in that area fits in the updated master plan the city is now preparing.

Engineer Dale Riedesel, representing the developers, told the council that the development does fit with the proposed changes in the master plan.

Council members voted unanimously to rehear the proposal in two weeks.

In other business, school crossing guard Norma Anderson told the council that speeding motorists at the intersection of Falls and Madrona Street present a serious threat to school children.

She asked the council to take down a sign limiting speed to 25 mph when children are present.

Anderson said that motorists ignore the sign.

Two Twin Falls police officers suggested blinking lights might better draw motorists' attention to the speed limit. The city will study the situation to see if a traffic signal is needed.

Mayor Howard Allen said some of the responsibility should fall on Twin Falls School District and suggested the district might hire another crossing guard in the area.

Lynch named to Burley council

By Eric Goodell
Twin Falls News Service

BURLEY - Retired businessman James Lynch Sr. will fill the vacant seat on the Burley City Council left by Clay Handy.

The city council unanimously approved of Mayor Frank Bauman's nomination Monday night at its regular council meeting.

"It's been my pleasure in the last six months to interview 12 applicants," Bauman said. He said the number of people who expressed interest in the job speaks well of the enthusiasm about city government in the area.

Bauman thanked "all" the applicants. "I would like to nominate all 12 but I can only nominate one," he said.

Lynch will serve until at least Jan. 1, 1993, when the remaining term of Handy expires. Handy resigned from the council last month upon moving to a newly built house out of city limits.

Lynch took over operation of Lynch Out from his father and expanded into the gas service businesses. He retired about five years ago.

He was out of town Monday night and could not be reached for comment.

In other business, resident Virginia Belnap approached the city for help in keeping the city clean. She said many parts of the city have debris and are unsightly, and many of her neighbors living in the northern part of Burley have commented about it.

Councilman Derlin Taylor said the city would support concerned neighborhood residents.

Peer pressure is often most successful in getting debris cleaned up on their yards, Councilman Hrenkovic said.

Bauman and Belnap said they were concerned what might happen to some parts of the city when farm owners start moving into the area. "We could have many, many people living in single-family dwellings," Belnap said.

She complained about trailer courts along the 700 block of Occidental Ave. that had two trailer houses burned down. No one has removed the gutted trailers yet.

"City attorney Bill Parsons said the trailers were recently moved and the owners or owners of the trailer park have 30 days to remove them."

Parsons said the city has been successful getting people to come into at least "reasonable compliance" with public nuisance laws. He said the city has obtained judgments from the court in about four remaining cases and has authority to go into the people's yards to clean up debris.

The harsh winter has prevented that and now city crews have their attention focused on the roads, he said. But soon, city labor will be able to clean up the houses, he said.

to "guard against Arab unrest on the holidays." Israeli soldiers were deployed in West Bank and Gaza Strip, barring 8½ million Palestinians from entering Israel—the closure reportedly is to continue through the week-long holiday.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin imposed the restrictions to quell violence that killed 13 Israelis and 26 Palestinians in March.

The army sent troops to Jerusalem to reinforce police. Extra police were deployed on roads, benches and parks. Soldiers at roadblocks checked motorists driving from the occupied lands to make sure they were not Palestinians.

Members of the Jewish settlement of Kibbutz Ortal in the Israel-annexed Golan Heights helped their Passover meal outside Parliament. The "protest" Rabbi<sup>1</sup> stated was intended to treat the part of the Golan for peace with Syria. Israel captured the Golan from Syria in the 1967 Middle East war.

The 150 settlers gathered around three long tables in a plastic greenhouse they set up in Parliament. Rose Golan, a banner near the front carried a Bible quotation: "The Lord is our God, he will save us from all our troubles."

At the front of the hall, a large, ornate menorah was lit. The menorah is a symbol of the Jewish people, and is often used to represent the Jewish people.

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Marking the 25th anniversary of the war that has shattered their lives and their city, residents of Sarajevo waver between resignation and disbelief.

Grim and exhausted, they live day to day, struggling to survive amid the ruins with UN rations and a belief that the Serb attackers will not take the city.

Amidst the gloom as the first anniversary of the war's last April 6, the United Nations recognized the Republic of Bosnia-Herzegovina, and Serbs who oppose their state's independence drive opened fire on peace demonstrators.

The Bosnian government estimates that 8,250 Sarajevoans have died since then and that 14,500 have been wounded. Across the city, more than 200,000 people are dead or missing, the government says.

No official observances were planned, but on Monday President Alija Izetbegovic issued yet another appeal to the international community to act.

The Serbs have seized 70 percent of Bosnia's territory, and the eastern enclave of Srebrenica is on the verge of falling.

Only the U.N. military command scheduled something special today: a crucial negotiating session of the opposing army chiefs on the neutral grounds of Sarajevo's airport.

Serbs can be partially understood in numbers: 2,500 children killed; 35,000 apartments damaged or destroyed; 75 percent of the city's old architecture in ruins; 54,000 tons of humanitarian aid brought in to keep the city alive.

But raw upon raw of wooden grave markers filling Ilidja Cemetery and the field of the nearby soccer stadium are much more poignant.

"I don't expect it to last this long, but I don't see the end of it even now," said Jadranka Stokjovic, a Hare Krishna member.

State Democratic chairman urges GOP to oppose initiative

BOISE (AP) — State Democratic Chairman Bill Mauck called on Idaho GOP leaders on Monday to unequivocally oppose the impending anti-gay initiative as the Democratic Party has.

"I know that certain Republicans have taken individual stances on this particular proposal but the Republican Party as a whole has not," Mauck said.

"It's critical to the public knowing where both political parties stand on this particular issue," he said. "I think it's vitally important that they take a position now before this petition gets momentum, while its being circulated so the public knows where the Republicans stand."

The initiative sponsored by the Idaho Citizens' Alliance, is aimed at preventing the designation of gays as a minority group in need of protection against discrimination — what the alliance labels as special rights. It also bans public schools and other government entities from offering programs that suggest homosexuality is acceptable.

Craig

A month ago, the Democratic Central Committee adopted a resolution urging voters to oppose the proposal "because it encourages bigotry and hatred."

In addition to asking outgoing state GOP Chairman Phil Batt to have his party take the same stand on what he labeled "divisive and discriminatory" petition, Mauck urged Republican Sens. Larry Craig and Dirk Kempthorne and Rep. Michael Crapo to firmly oppose the initiative.

Kempthorne and Crapo both said they will not sign the initiative, but neither committed to actively opposing it. And Craig maintained his stand that it is not a federal issue.

At this point, Crapo said, "I intend to let the people decide whether this issue should be brought up." He said he was not in a position, as the Democrats appear to believe they are, to judge the motives of the alliance and say their motives to encourage bigotry and hatred. Kempthorne said that while he supports some elements of the initiative such as the ban on teaching homosexuality as an acceptable lifestyle, he fears "such a wide-sweeping initiative can be misperceived and can foster a great deal of acrimony. Therefore, I'm personally not supporting this initiative."

Craig, through spokesman David Fish, said that as on past ballot initiatives, he will not sign the initiative, but neither will he support it. He said it is not a state issue, and he will not become involved.

The other member of the congressional delegation, Democratic Rep. Larry LaRocco, has already voiced his opposition, and Democratic Gov. Cecil Andrus reiterated his opposition to the proposal on Monday, making clear he has no intention of changing his mind.

Batt, who has been on record against the initiative, but had not received Mauck's letter, said the issue would be brought up during the April 24 meeting of the party's executive committee. "It's addressing a problem that does not exist in Idaho," said Batt, who authored the state Human Rights law. "I wrote the civil rights law, and there is no section for special preference based on sexuality and I would oppose one by the same token."

But while personally opposed to the initiative, he declined to predict what stand the party would take. Batt, who is stepping down as chairman at that meeting and plans to run for governor next year, agreed with Crapo that the GOP is not in the position to judge the alliance's motives.

Briefly

Lawyer: Brother couldn't stop killing

BOISE — Bryan Lankford was an "automaton," incapable of preventing his brother from bludgeoning a Texas couple to death on the Clearwater River, Lankford's attorneys said Monday.

Lankford, 32, is being sentenced after being in legal limbo for two years since the U.S. Supreme Court overturned his death sentence on the grounds he and attorney Joan Fishet were not advised at trial Lankford could receive the death penalty.

Lankford's upbringing was so poor he could not refuse any order from his 37-year-old brother, Mark, whom Fishet labeled a "sociopath."

"Mark Lankford dominated him physically, mentally, emotionally and socially," added defense attorney Timothy Ford.

The brothers were charged with the June 1983 murders of Marine Corps Capt. Robert Bravence, 27, and his wife, Cheryl, 25, El Paso, Texas.

High court to consider death penalty

BOISE — The Idaho Supreme Court has set a hearing to determine whether the April 23 execution of convicted murderer Federico Paz should take place.

In a three-paragraph order, Chief Justice Charles McDevitt set Friday as the deadline for prosecutors and defense attorney Andy Parnes of Hailey to submit written arguments on whether there are any new developments in the case that would warrant further review even though he was not raised during the legal period of 42 days after the Paz's conviction.

McDevitt set a hearing for Monday on whether a stay should be granted to those issues can be considered.

Paz, 34, was convicted of first-degree murder in the August 1987 shooting death of Gerry Bright, 39, at the Holiday Cafe in Caldwell.

ACLU protests courthouse monument

POCATELLO — The American Civil Liberties Union has filed suit in federal court claiming Bannock County has violated the constitutional separation of church and state by allowing a monument of the Ten Commandments on the courthouse lawn.

The lawsuit, filed on the behalf of Idaho State University graduate student Andrew Albanese, came after county officials believed they had resolved the dispute by erecting a plaque quoting Thomas Jefferson in an attempt to balance and secularize the display.

Bannock County Commission Chairman Tom Katsilios said the county is ready to defend itself in court.

Bernard Zaleha, who is representing Albanese in the suit filed on Friday, maintained that not only does the U.S. Constitution prohibit such displays but the Idaho Constitution "demands an even higher level of church-state separation."

Top mental health official to leave office

BOISE — Joe Brunson, who holds the state's top mental-health job, will step down Friday after 3½ years of "very difficult work" to improve public services for Idahoans with mental illnesses.

Brunson, 48, will take a new job as director of the psychiatric unit at St. Alphonsus Regional Medical Center in Boise.

Jerry Harris, director of the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare, said he had no beef with Brunson's job performance.

New law imperils bingo operation

BOISE — One of Idaho's biggest bingo operations is facing major changes — if not a shutdown — under the state's new charitable bingo law.

Boise's Riverbend has been drawing from 70 to 150 players six nights a week.

The law signed by Gov. Cecil Andrus last week requires bingo operators to use at least 18 percent of their gross revenues for "charitable purposes" after it goes into effect May 1.

But Riverbend gave only $500 to charity out of more than $230,000 collected in 1991, say court documents.

"If they're the same now as they were then, I would suspect they either are going to be out of business or they are going to have to redefine their business," said Idaho Lottery Director Wally Hedrick, whose office is charged with administering the new law along with Idaho counties.

Sculptor decides to honor loggers

OROFINO — John Gilliam of Orofino has changed his thinking about loggers and produced a sculpture of one he wants expanded to monument size.

Gilliam is more familiar with creating works depicting cowboys and horses. But having lived for several years in a logging town, he has come to realize the near-legendary status of those who work in the woods. "The more I understood about logging, the more I got into the loggers themselves, and realized that not all they've done is bad," he said. The Orofino Chamber of Commerce has commissioned him to sculpt a life-size bronze statue of a lumberjack to be placed near the entrance to town from U.S. Highway 12.

New law allows state to revoke licenses for drunk test failures

BOISE (AP) — Gov. Cecil Andrus has signed legislation making Idaho the 32nd state to impose automatic license revocation on motorists who fail drunken driving tests.

In endorsing the bill that easily cleared both houses of the Legislature last month, Andrus said on Monday that in the other states "it has had a positive effect in reducing the number of recurring incidents."

The governor also signed legislation that preserves public right-of-way access throughout the state. While not retroactive, Andrus said that bill would work to ensure publicly established but unimproved rights of way will remain open.

That issue drew widespread public attention in the 1980s when singer-songwriter Carole King won the right to travel a gate on an unimproved road across her ranch to the Salmon River.

"She was operating under the law as it was then," Andrus said. "It would happen today, in my opinion, the court would have interpreted it differently."

The tougher drunken driving legislation will allow authorities to lift the licenses of drunken drivers faster than they have been under criminal drunken driving laws.

"Our laws have been lax," Andrus said. "Too many times, time goes by, people's memories seem to fade, they sympathy goes to the driver who says, 'I need that license to get to work.' I'm here to say it's not that simple. They should lose all those privileges."

Under current criminal laws, motorists convicted of drunken driving face loss of their licenses for 180 days although they can obtain restricted licenses for work purposes.

The new law allows authorities to use civil proceedings to almost immediately revoke the license of any motorist failing a drunken driving test. And that 90-day revocation includes no driving privileges under any circumstances during the first 30 days.

"If they've been drinking and driving and they fail the test, they're going to be surrendering that license much more quickly than the criminal law allows," Attorney General Larry Echols said.

The bill also imposes an additional $115 fee to regain a license after the suspension expires. But only the increased fee for relicense after suspensions will take effect in July. The stiffer revocation provisions go into effect in mid-1994.

And the handful of legislative critics, questioning the fairness of the accelerated revocation procedures, warned that modifications will have to be made in the law before it is really workable.

Court leaves rollback on taxes uncertain

SANDPOINT (AP) — The Idaho Supreme Court will not deliver an immediate ruling on a referendum to roll back taxes in Bonner County.

Players on both sides of the issue are left wondering when and if an election should be held.

One had been set for Monday, to give residents a chance to repeal a recent 48 percent property tax hike. It has been scrapped. County Clerk Marie Scott said.

But the high court ruling last Friday may clear the way for an election later this month, said John F. Magnuson, the attorney working on behalf of the county's citizen-led tax revolt.

The justices revoked a temporary order banning a vote on the tax rollback. They also scheduled an appeal hearing for June to decide if a referendum is the way to change the budget.

"The bottom line is the decision as to whether or not there will be an election is now up to the county clerk," Magnuson said.

More than 5,000 residents have signed the referendum to revert taxes back to last year's level.

County commissioners defended the $2.8 million increase, saying most people's taxes would not rise because an expensive school levy was taken off the tax rolls.

Scott said she would contact state election officials Monday and decide whether to hold an election.

If one is not scheduled, Magnuson said he would ask the Supreme Court to order one be held.

One hurdle is a ruling last month by 1st District Court Judge James Michael, said Jerry Mason, Scott's attorney.
