Tailhook probe implicates 140

The Washington Post

New beginning — A3

WASHINGTON — A Pentagon report Friday described the Navy's Tailhook sexual assault scandal as "the culmination of a long-term failure of leadership" and recommended disciplinary action against at least 140 Navy and Marine officers.

The 10-month investigation by the Pentagon's inspector general found that sexual assaults at the 1991 Tailhook convention of naval aviators were even more pervasive than previously reported, involving assaults on 83 women and seven men. The Navy last year was able to identify 26 female victims in an investigation later faulted as inadequate.

Friday's report marked the culmination of official efforts to get to the bottom of a scandal that has undermined morale, delayed promotions and transfers for hundreeds of officers and — at the same time — pushed the Navy to the forefront of expanded programs and opportunities for women in uniform.

The document contains more than 300 pages of text, photographs and diagrams of the Las Vegas Hilton, scene of the annual sexual assaults, the report described such scenes as mid-grade and junior officers prowling the halls with genitals exposed and others wearing T-shirts with the slogan, "Women Are Property."

and Marine Corps, which now will recommend punishments ranging from letters of reprimand to courts-martial.

The services, which have delayed disciplinary action pending completion of Vander Schaaf's report, each have appointed a senior officer to review the cases and decide on proper courses of action. None of the accused officers was named in the report released Friday.

The probe could have serious career consequences for the Navy's senior leaders, many of whom attended the convention. Although the probe found no evidence that flag-rank officers had participated in the misconduct, it also blamed naval aviator leaders for failing to curb an event that many knew had gotten out of hand.

"What happened in Tailhook '91 was destined to happen sooner or later in the 'can you top this' atmosphere that seemed to increase with each succeeding convention," the report said. "Senior naval aviation leadership seemed to ignore the deteriorating standards of behavior and failed to deal with increasingly disorderly, improper and promiscuous behavior."

The scandal was triggered by newspaper reports in the fall of 1991 about sexual assaults and misconduct at the annual convention in Las Vegas of the Tailhook Association, a private group of naval aviators named for the arresting hook on carrier-based aircraft. More details emerged last June, when Navy Lt. Paula Coughlin went public with her story of being assaulted by fellow aviators in a third-floor hallway of the Hilton.

Coughlin described how Navy and Marine pilots, participating in a Tailhook training exercise, had been in a Tailhook. Please see TAILHOOK/A3

Clinton gives 'serious consideration' to air strikes, lifting arms embargo

WASHINGTON — After an exhaustive review, President Clinton said Friday that he will unveil a new strategy for deterring Serbian aggression in Bosnia. Citing the view of Colin L. Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, he cautioned that if the United States takes action "we must have a clearly defined objective that can be met, we must be able to understand it, and its limitations must be clear."

He said both of the options "deserve serious consideration." However, the president emphatically ruled out, as he has again and again, the use of U.S. ground troops in the region. Calling the Balkan violence "the most difficult foreign policy problem we face," he suggested that U.S. allies — who also have been reluctant to become embroiled in the intractable conflict — may be ready to move to more drastic measures in their long deliberations over how to halt the Serbians' campaign of "ethnic cleansing."

"I do not think we should move alone, unilaterally, nor do I think we will have to," Clinton, adding a moment later: "We are, after all, the only superpower, and we do have to lead the world."

Yeltsin promises Russians vision of future - private land

The Associated Press

New constitution released — A8

MOSCOW — Boris Yeltsin offered Russians on Friday a vision of their future if they support him in this weekend's referendum: private land ownership, a stronger executive branch and an American-style legislature.

Yeltsin said he sketched his vision in a draft constitution so citizens would know "a vote of confidence in the president is a vote not for an abstract and bright future, but for concrete, legal guarantees, civil rights and human values."

The president was trying to raise the stakes in the Sunday referendum and ensure a high turnout among Russia's 106 million registered voters, as well as seeking to win over those who remain undecided.

But no matter the outcome, Yeltsin's new constitution is likely to become entangled in the same bickering that has paralyzed his reforms since fall. The Communist-dominated Congress is likely to object to many of the proposals — particularly the creation of a bicameral legislature that would cost the lawmakers their jobs.

Yeltsin's aides have said they might try to bypass the Congress by convening a special "constitutional assembly" to approve the new charter.

The president's critics were already working against him on the streets of Moscow. More than 10,000 nationalist and pro-Communist demonstrators marched downtown to urge a vote against Yeltsin.

They waved signs saying, "Yeltsin Means Civil War" and "Yeltsin is the de- Please see YELTSIN/A2

Weather summary

Another Pacific storm was moving inland from the coast Friday morning. This will spread clouds and an increasing chance of precipitation over Idaho later this afternoon and tonight. This pattern will continue into next week with new disturbances moving through every 24 to 36 hours.

Precipitation during the past 24 hours was widespread over the state. Some heavy showers were received in the mountains with near a half inch of rain at places like Elmer, Meccall, St. Anthony, Middle Fork Lodge and Grandview. Other amounts were lighter but spread over most of Idaho. A few thunderstorms were mixed in with the showers. Areas of snow were also reported, with five inches of new snow at Stanley and Island Park and four inches at Ashton. Mel all received about an inch of snow overnight.

Temperatures Friday morning dipped into the 30s over most of the region with a few 20-degree readings in the higher elevations. The coldest reported so far Friday was 25 degrees at Stanley with the warmest overnight reading of 42 degrees at the Fern Ranger Station.

As of 11 a.m. Friday, winds were beginning to increase over the western areas of the state.

Winds were a little gusty in the Magic and Upper Snake River valleys Friday but quite light elsewhere. Clouds were expected to increase during the day with scattered showers and thundershowers Friday night.

Cold in South; storms on Plains; wet in Northwest

The Associated Press

Thunderstorms developed Saturday over the Plains states, temperatures dropped to record lows in the South, and the remnants of a storm moving away into Canada spread rain and snow along the northern East Coast.

Strong southerly wind ahead of an advancing storm system prevailed from the southern Plains and the lower Mississippi Valley to the lower Ohio Valley during the afternoon. Southerly wind blew at 20 to 30 mph across parts of Texas, Oklahoma and eastern Kansas.

Showers and thundershowers were developing across central Texas and central Oklahoma.

Showers associated with a low pressure system centered over western South Dakota were scattered across the north-central part of the nation.

Strong westerly wind prevailed in the high Plains region, gusting to 45 mph during the morning at Casper, Wyo. Up to 4 inches of snow fell during the night in the Big Horn Mountains of north-central Wyoming.

At least 10 cities reported record low temperatures for the date.

Tallahassee, Fla., dipped to 31, the latest freeze there in more than 106 years of record-keeping, the National Weather Service said.

Other records were 40 at Apalachicola, Fla.; 40 at Beaufort, S.C.; 42 at Daytona Beach, Fla.; 50 at Fort Myers, Fla.; 37 at Jacksonville, Fla.; 46 at New Orleans; 45 at Pensacola, Fla.; 38 at Savannah, Ga.; and 45 at Tampa, Fla.

Farther north, New York City's Kennedy airport hit a record 39.

A storm system which dropped heavy rain and snow on parts of the Northeast during the week had moved to south-eastern Canada by Friday, but it continued to produce light rain and snow in the northern Atlantic Coast states as far south as Maryland, the weather service said.

On Thursday, Syracuse, N.Y., got 6.2 inches of snow, a record for the date, and traces were reported at Philadelphia and Atlantic City, N.J.

Reno, Sessions to testify next week

DALLAS — One of the sharpest controversies of the Branch Davidian tragedy — who started the fire that killed an estimated 86 cult members — may come closer to resolution next Wednesday.

On that day, Attorney General Janet Reno and FBI Director William Sessions will appear before the House Judiciary Committee, chaired by Rep. Jack Brooks, D-Texas.

However, an attorney for one of the dead Branch Davidians said the testimony should include information gathered from surviving cult members who say the FBI — not the group itself — started the catastrophic blaze.

The cult compound was still smoldering Monday when FBI spokesmen began insisting that cult members had set their home ablaze, presumably under orders from self-styled messiah David Koresh. However, the fire began when the shock caused by one of the tanks battering the compound knocked over at least two lit kerosene lanterns.

Report marks military transformation

Newsday

The Pentagon's investigation of the Tailhook sex scandal shows how far along women have come in the Navy and how far they still have to go, women's rights activists and military observers said Friday.

Several observers said the treatment of the Tailhook incident marked a watershed in Navy history, noting that not many years ago, what Friday's report called the "debauchery" of a pilots' convention would not have been investigated at all.

"That military men do these kind of things has been known for a long time," said Linda Grant De Pauw, an American history professor who publishes a journal on women in the military. "Usually there's been a kind of a sigh, that, 'Yes, these things are unfortunate, but boys will be boys.'"

"The Tailhook reaction is that these boys are going to have to grow up real fast or they're out of the Navy."

Navy Lt. Paula Coughlin, who was assaulted by fellow aviators, said the Tailhook report would read like an X-rated novel.

Few expressed surprise or shock over the lurid details contained in the report — reports of victims being bitten by assailants, for example — many of which have already been described extensively in the media. Months ago, Navy Lt. Paula Coughlin, who blew the whistle on the affair, told Glamour magazine that the report would read "like an X-rated novel," a prediction that has proven fairly accurate.

But several women activists subsequently forced from their posts by Garrett's replacement as Navy secretary, Sean C. O'Keefe.

Friday's report was aimed at identifying all the guilty parties and satisfying public and congressional demands for a full airing of the episode. The Pentagon expended enormous resources on the probe, assembling a team of 40 investigators who visited Navy installations worldwide to interview 2,900 people who attended the convention.

The probe identified 23 officers said to have participated in indecent assaults and another 23 said to have participated in indecent exposure. The report found that a total of 117 officers had been "implicated in one or more incidents of indecent assault, indecent exposure, conduct unbecoming an officer or failure to act in a proper leadership capacity." The report also identified 54 participants who allegedly lied to investigators.

The report acknowledged that many aviators at the convention objected to the conduct, and the reputations of those officers who are guilty of no wrongdoing have been tarnished by the actions of their fellow officers," the report said.

But the document also challenged frequent assertions by Navy and Marine officers that the misconduct at Tailhook involved only a small minority. "Although there were approximately 4,000 naval officers at Tailhook '91, and sitting 117 officers has been developed, the number of individuals involved in all types of misconduct or other inappropriate behavior was more widespread than those figures would suggest," the report said.

Additional investigations by the Navy and by Marine Corps legal officers will determine whether officers involved should face courts-martial, or a separate administrative process used for non-criminal disciplinary matters.

Linda Bird Francke, a Sagaponack, N.Y., author who interviewed Coughlin for Glamour and who is writing a book about women in the military, said the report underscores how important it is for women to be integrated as equals throughout the ranks of military.

"This double standard that all the services have has had a really negative effect, not only on women's careers but on the perception of women by their male colleagues. ... Women are seen as less," Francke said. "It all ties in together."

Francke and others also questioned the timing of the report, which was released on a Friday just two days before 1 million gays and lesbians are expected to march on the capital and redirect public attention to another burning military issue, the ban on gay soldiers. But Susan Brownmiller, author of several books including "Against Our Will" on the history of rape, said the report signals the radical transformation of the military.

"We're going through extraordinary changes," she said. "It's painful while we're going through them, but in the long run, it's going to be a better system."

Feds set aside $148 million to house homeless, disabled

WASHINGTON (AP) — Housing Secretary Henry C. Cisneros told a congressional panel meeting in a homeless shelter Friday that he'll spend an additional $148 million this year to house disabled, homeless Americans.

Speaking in the basement of the 1,000-bed Shelter near the Capitol, Cisneros said, "There is no higher priority in our department," than helping the homeless.

"During the past few years, we have seen defenseless and hopeless members of our community sleeping on grates, wandering along the sidewalks of our cities, huddled on gates and literally camping in open spaces in our urban centers," Cisneros said. "This is not our vision of America."

Cisneros met with the House Banking subcommittee on housing at the shelter created by the Community for Creative Non-Violence from an abandoned government building. The CCNV's late leader, Mitch Snyder, relentlessly hammered the Reagan administration through protests and civil disobedience to turn the building over to homeless.

Cisneros and subcommittee toured the building which was renovated to provide temporary housing, medical care and counseling.

He said the money will be spent on the homeless will be transferred from a rental assistance fund. It will target homeless persons with disabilities, including substance abuse.

The $148 million supplements the $600 million already set aside for homeless programs in the Department of Housing and Urban Development budget for 1993.

Estimates of the nation's homeless population range from 600,000 to 3 million.

According to the Department of Health and Human Services, single adults suffering from severe mental illness account for one-third of the homeless population. A sizable portion of the homeless mentally ill also abuse alcohol or drugs.

District of Columbia Mayor Sharon Pratt Kelly said the number of families seeking shelter in Washington has risen sharply in the last year from 500 to 800.

A survey by the U.S. Conference of Mayors' task force on hunger and homelessness also found that requests for emergency shelter increased an average 14 percent in 1992, but almost a quarter couldn't be satisfied.

"It's a national disgrace when we see people standing in soup lines, begging for food and sleeping on the ground," said Rep. Lucien Blackwell, D-Pa., whose wife, Jamie Htrekwell, is a member of the Philadelphia City Council.

She testified that the homeless in Philadelphia are sleeping in the city's subways.

Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas and chairman of the House Banking Committee, said the decade of the 1980s and the early 1990s "was devastating to the forgotten number of homeless in our country."

dition called the "gantlet," grabbed her buttocks and breasts and tried to remove her panties. Navy Secretary H. Lawrence Garrett III resigned two days after an account of her ordeal appeared in The Washington Post.

In the meantime, the Naval Investigative Service had looked into the scandal and identified a handful of officers involved in the misconduct. Garrett, eager to avoid charges of a whitewash, subsequently invited Vander Schaaf to conduct his own independent investigation.

The first part of that effort, completed last September, focused largely on the Navy's investigation, which Vander Schaaf faulted for failing to pursue vigorously the sexual assault and misconduct charges. Three admirals in charge of overseeing the Navy's effort were subsequently forced from their posts by Garrett's replacement as Navy secretary, Sean C. O'Keefe.

The report found that a total of 117 officers had been "implicated in one or more incidents of indecent assault, indecent exposure, conduct unbecoming an officer or failure to act in a proper leadership capacity." The report also identified 54 participants who allegedly lied to investigators.

The report acknowledged that many aviators at the convention objected to the conduct, and the reputations of those officers who are guilty of no wrongdoing have been tarnished by the actions of their fellow officers," the report said.

But the document also challenged frequent assertions by Navy and Marine officers that the misconduct at Tailhook involved only a small minority. "Although there were approximately 4,000 naval officers at Tailhook '91, and sitting 117 officers has been developed, the number of individuals involved in all types of misconduct or other inappropriate behavior was more widespread than those figures would suggest," the report said.

Explosive argument cleared way to King verdicts, jurors say —LOS ANGELES (AP) — Drained and sick of each other after 10 days of deliberations, jurors in the Rodney King case slipped into name-calling and threats but cleared the air and reached a verdict the next day.

Three jurors, identified only by seat numbers, said in Friday's Los Angeles Times that half the panel was in tears April 14. One upset juror demanded to see his doctor, stopping deliberations for the day.

"But ironically, it settled everybody down," said Juror No. 6, a 30-year-old engineer.

The next afternoon, the jury convicted Officer Laurence Powell of violating King's civil rights. By Friday they had found Sgt. Stacey Koon guilty and acquitted Officers Theodore Briseno and Timothy Wind.

The verdicts were sealed by the judge until the following morning.

The eight men and four women were strangers when they were seated in U.S. District Judge John G. Davies' courtroom. For 52 days, they lived at a downtown hotel, eating, praying and exercising together under guard by U.S. marshals.

When they were handed the case April 10, "we didn't know how to start," said Juror No. 9, a 35-year-old jeweler.

The first day saw little substantive discussion after the jury selected Juror No. 5, a male engineer, as foreman, over No. 8, a woman. The voting broke down along gender lines.

The next few days, after the judge denied the jury a transcript of one witness' testimony, were spent reviewing the videotape of King's beating.

"We went through it frame by frame, slow-motion, fast-motion. God

I don't know how many times we watched that thing," Juror No. 9 said.

The tape's defining moment, they said, was when Powell gave King a powerful blow across the chest as King lay on his back.

"That chest blow was unreasonable and we felt it was not to effect an arrest but just to hurt the guy," No. 9 said. "That convinced about a third of us."

Things began to deteriorate on the fifth day, Nos. 6, 9 and 11, a welder in his 60s, told the newspaper.

Juror No. 8 argued with the foreman, who called her a profane name and refused to apologize, saying he felt like punching her in the face.

Juror No. 10 questioned the masculinity of Juror No. 6, who wanted to quit early because he felt drained. Juror No. 9 threatened to beat up No. 10.

Juror No. 7 accused others of wanting to prolong the deliberations because they were getting meals from nice restaurants. Juror No. 3, not complaining of any particular illness, left to see his doctor.

By the next day, hard feelings seemed to have been put aside and the first vote — on Powell — was taken after another review of the evidence.

"Anybody for not guilty?" the foreman asked.

No one raised a hand.

Gay community: Public diversity and private decisions

Belief of equal rights binds otherwise polarized group

WASHINGTON (AP) — The gay community, from Republican lesbians and Radical Faeries to drag queens and Vietnam veterans, amies at an unprecedented show of unity at this weekend's march. But getting there was not without its share of infighting.

Some of the unrest stemmed from the sharp divisions that have long been part of the gay community. One thing, perhaps, the only thing that unites the diverse participants is the belief they deserve equal rights.

"What they all have in common no matter how they identify — gay, lesbian or bisexual — is that they are the targets of gay and lesbian oppression," said John D'Emilio, gay historian at University of North Carolina.

Some who plan to participate in Sunday's march aren't completely happy with the way some of skirmishes have been settled.

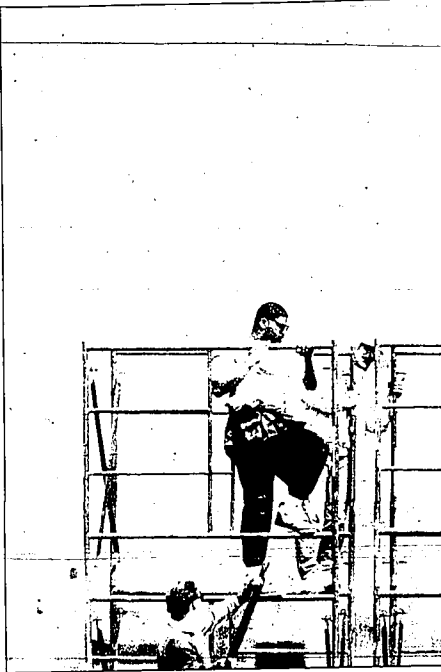

Some "transgendered" people who include transvestites, female sexuels — are frustrated that they weren't included in the march's official name: the March on Washington for Lesbian, Gay, and Bi Equal Rights and Liberation.

There are some in the national transgender network who are definitely upset, but that's a more radical element," said Jessica Xavier, treasurer of the Transgender Educational Association of Washington, D.C. "I think most of us feel that we can support the march and its goals."

Xavier said some in the gay community have difficulty accepting transgendered people.

"If there is a need for another march, I believe you will see transgender in the title," she said. "That's one of the goals of the transgender movement — to be fully included and not to be marginalized."

Bisexual activists, on the other hand, were incorporated in the name of the march — but not without a struggle, said Loraine Hutchins, a coordinator for BiNet USA, a bisexual-rights organization. The bisexual contingent narrowly prevailed when march orga-

With the Capitol as a backdrop, workers prepare the stage for Sunday's gay rights march and rally. Gay America is about to invade Washington to demand an end to discrimination.

Clinton addresses letter to marchers

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton will address gay rights marchers on Sunday via a letter. Clinton's letter — yet to be drafted — will be read to the crowd by Rep. Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., said White House press secretary Dee Dee Myers. The president himself will be out of town for the weekend. He will be in Williamsburg, Va., on Saturday attending a private retreat with Democratic senators, then will travel directly to the presidential retreat in Camp David, Md., for Saturday night. On Sunday, he will go from Camp David to Boston, where he is to speak to a group of politicians. Myers denied that Clinton was leaving Washington for the weekend to avoid addressing the marchers in person.

In march for acceptance homosexuals risk backlash

By Jill Lawrence
The Associated Press

Analysis

WASHINGTON — Gay America is about to invade the capital, and the national consciousness, to demand an end to discrimination. The march Sunday is guaranteed to draw attention, but will it be the right kind?

This would seem to be gay America's moment. Women, minorities and the disabled already have led on public issues like the gay march to demonstrate political clout and foster public awareness.

"Social change doesn't happen in this country unless somebody's rattling the gate. It happens because you compel people to deal with it," said Republican strategist Bill McIntort.

But high pressure and a high profile inevitably invite backlash, and the gay community already has felt some.

President Clinton's challenge to the military ban provoked intense opposition in Congress and the military. Conservative activists are organizing in a dozen states after winning a ban on state and local gay-rights ordinances in Colorado.

Homosexual sodomy remains a crime in nearly half the states. The District of Columbia city council recently repealed its anti-sodomy laws, but congressional overseers may reverse the decision.

Obstacles and delays are the rule, not the exception, in any civil rights crusade. Just ask blacks who counted on President Kennedy to lift them to first-class citizenship. Despite his sympathy, his political instincts prevailed: major civil rights legislation had to wait for the next president.

But gays face some singular problems in arguing that — except for what they do in their bedrooms — they should be treated just like everyone else.

Public talk about sex of any kind makes some people uneasy; public displays of gay affection are that much more disconcerting.

And while fringe elements come with every movement, be they bra-burners, Black Panthers or drag queens, there's a flamboyance within the gay movement that is hard for TV cameras and viewers to ignore.

A cross-section of two feathered men kissing will stand out in any crowd, and attention is turned away from the waitress fired because she was lesbian, from the war hero booted out of the military because he was gay, from those victimized by hate-crimes and from those afraid to tell anyone who they are or who they love.

Nearly seven in 10 people in a poll conducted last month by Democrat Mark Mellman said they know somebody who is gay or lesbian. That's bound to go higher as more gays feel freer to disclose their identities — a process activists hope to accelerate by sending hundreds of thousands of marchers home with new energy and confidence.

Public opinion is somewhat confused now. "There is no line in the sand. People are wrestling with what is the acceptable middle," said McIntort.

The military ban is a good example. Thirty percent strongly favor ending the ban; 30 percent strongly want to keep it, in Mellman's poll. Yet asked if homosexuals should be able to serve in the military "as long as they don't break rules against homosexual activity," 40 percent said yes.

Pollsters say it will take a decade or more before the public becomes as tolerant as gays would like. But Mellman said activists need to jump at the window Clinton provides.

NASA gives the green light to today's launch

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Everything seemed to be going NASA's way Friday for sending the Columbia on a long-overdue science mission after one launch abort and weeks of technical glitches.

Columbia was "doing perfectly well," said shuttle test director Mike Leinbach.

And meteorologists issued a rare launch-day forecast of a 100 percent chance of good weather.

But there was still a little nervousness, especially considering the abrupt end to Columbia's first countdown for the mission one month ago. A stuck valve caused the main engines to shut down three seconds before liftoff.

"A few things in the business you don't like to do," Leinbach said. "You never say never. You never say always. And you typically never say zero percent chance of violation of a weather constraint."

If Columbia takes off as scheduled Saturday, carrying a German-sponsored laboratory research mission and two German physicists, it would be the shortest interval between flights in 32 years of U.S. manned space travel.

Discovery returned last Saturday from NASA's 54th shuttle flight, a mission to study the upper atmosphere's ozone layer.

The fact that Discovery performed so well allowed NASA to plan a record seven days between landing and launch, said shuttle manager Leonard Nicholson.

"If we'd had a lot of issues with the hardware on the last flight, then we would have had a different situation and we may very well have decided that we needed a few more days," Nicholson said.

Germany has been waiting for this mission for years. The flight originally was targeted for 1988, three years after the first German Spacecraft on Challenger, but was put on hold along with everything else after Challenger exploded in 1986.

Facts about space shuttle launch

When: 8:52 a.m. MDT Saturday (could go as late as 11:22 a.m.)

Orbiter: Columbia
Flight designation: STS-55
Site: Kennedy Space Center, launch pad 39A

Mission: Conduct scientific experiments in German Spacecraft module.

Crew: Seven astronauts
Countdown: Began 4 p.m. Wednesday

Weather forecast: 100-percent chance of acceptable weather at launch time, with only scattered clouds expected. Flight duration: 9 days, 22 hours (though mission could be extended one day).

Landing: KSC runway, 7:52 a.m. May 3 (if not extended)

A late February launch date had to be scrapped because of uncertainty over critical engine pump parts, and then a hydraulic hose ruptured.

The biggest setback occurred March 22 when Columbia's main engines shut down seconds after firing. All three engines were replaced.

Hermann Kurscheid, Germany's deputy mission manager, said the latest two-month delay has cost Germany nearly $9 million.

That's on top of an estimated $560 million Germany already had spent on the mission, including $150 million paid to NASA.

Rudolf Teuwsen, a spokesman for Germany's space agency, said the latest delays coincided with debate in Germany over whether the country can afford such projects while it faces high costs of unification.

"But I think the important point is that we got the payload back into very, very good shape and now we are looking forward to the science data that are going to come out of this mission," he said.

A German control center near Munich will monitor all science operations during the nine-day flight.

Investigators: Teeth are all that remain of some Waco victims

WACO, Texas (AP) — Most of the more than 40 bodies retrieved from the burned-out ruins of what was David Koresh's dominion will be X-rayed Friday and autopsied today.

But the radiology tests will not settle the debate over whether some of the bodies had been shot before Monday's blaze, a medical examiner said.

"They will not show whether there were bullet holes, just if there are metallic objects in the bodies," said Darrell Thompson of the Tarrant County medical examiner's office.

"The metal could be a bullet or a fracture from a bullet, but it also could be any type of foreign object — buttons, zippers or other debris. We can't tell from the X-rays," he said.

As 47 bodies were carried out Thursday, another medical examiner disputed a federal official's assertion that "some of the cultists had been shot."

"There is absolutely no evidence of that as far as we are concerned at the state medical examiner's Tarrant County medical examiner's office."

As many as 86 people, including Koresh, were believed killed when the doomsday cult compound went up in flames Monday as federal agents in armored vehicles were punching holes in its walls and pumping in tear gas.

The bodies, taken by refrigerated truck to Peeween's office in Fort Worth, were mostly "soft and crumbling," he said.

Peeween said other remains, particularly those of children, may never be found because the blaze may have "intrinsically incinerated their bodies."

Dr. Rodney Crow, a forensic dentist from Fort Worth who is assisting in the case, said dental records may be the only way to identify the dead.

"There are no faces on some of them and the faces are just completely powder," he said. "Hopefully, the teeth, taking a much higher temperature to destruct, will be in his debris."

Crow said identification could take months because many of the dental records will have to be obtained from places as far away as Australia, England and the Caribbean. Many of the cultists were foreigners.

As the bodies were removed, small, orange flags were left flapping in the wind, marking where they had been found.

Feds net encyclopedias, cash in settlement

WASHINGTON (AP) — Encyclopedia Britannica Inc. will pay the government $375,000 and give the Defense Department $125,000 worth of encyclopedias to settle allegations that it deliberately underreported its sales on military bases.

The Justice Department announced the agreement Friday.

From 1985 to 1989, Encyclopedia Britannica was allowed to sell its goods on U.S. Army and Air Force bases in Europe in exchange for a commission to the U.S. government.

Visionary farm workers' leader dies

SAN LEUIS, ARIZ. (AP) — Cesar Chavez, son of a migrant farm worker who organized itinerant laborers into a union and led a nationwide grape boycott in the 1960s, was found dead Friday, apparently of natural causes. He was 66.

He was really a visionary and Jerry Brown, the former California governor and a close political ally. "What he was looking for was a more cooperative society and a more caring society."

Chavez was president of the California-based United Farm Workers Union, which gave voice to farm workers, many of them poor and Hispanic.

Praised in 1968 by Sen. Robert F. Kennedy as "one of the heroic figures of our time," Chavez called attention to his causes by going on a 25-day fast in 1968, a 24-day fast in 1972 and a 36-day fast in 1978.

His doctors said the water only fast in 1988 was the cause of his death. An California table grapes canceled Chavez to lose 19 percent of his body weight — 33 pounds — and left him with kidney damage. Chavez apparently died in his

Marshall's family told police she was a former

1955 and co-founded the union with him in 1962. "We know he is irreplaceable, but people are in place to continue the work of the union," Huerta said. Condolences and praise came from supporters and opponents alike. Farm leaders like Bob Vice of the California Farm Bureau Federation expressed grudging admiration.

"It was a worthy advocate for his cause," Vice said. "He was no saint, but he certainly changed the face of California agriculture."

Chavez was in this southwestern Arizona border town to testify in the retrial of a lawsuit filed by a farm company that said the boycott hurt business. Bruce Church Inc. won a $5.5 million award against the union in 1985.

His death came at a time when the union's influence was dwindling. Membership, which totaled about 109,000 in the 1970s, was down to about 20,000 by the early 1990s.

Conditions and wages for farm workers peaked in the late 1970s. They suffered through the 1980s and have near farm fields in Shakes; cars or out in the open.

Chavez once said: "If the union talks apart when I am gone I will have been a miserable failure and it will have been a terrible waste of a lot of time by a lot of people."

University bans student-teacher sex

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — The University of Virginia faculty voted to draw the line on professor-student romances by establishing this test:

If the student's academic career is in your hands, then it's hands off.

The Faculty Senate approved the compromise 31-4 earlier than it proposed the total prohibition on sex between students and faculty that a Women's Concerns Committee had advocated as a way to protect students from sexual intimidation.

Women's committee members said they were satisfied with the compromise.

"We just weren't going to win," third-year student Angela Kline said. "We wanted something to protect the students."

Allen Funt hospitalized after stroke

LOS ANGELES — Allen Funt, inspiration and host of television's popular "Candid Camera" remained hospitalized Friday after a stroke.

Cedars Sinai Medical center listed the 78-year-old Funt in "relatively stable" condition Thursday. "He will be undergoing tests and kept under close observation for the next several days," hospital spokesman Ron Wise said.

The television program was born of Funt's "Candid Microphone," a radio show the New York native originated after his Army service in World War II.

"Smile! You're on 'Candid Camera!'" became the trademark phrase on the show that confronted people with such outlandish situations as talking mailboxes or trick telephones and secretly filmed the reactions.

"Candid Camera," which made its debut in 1947, was eventually seen on all the big three TV networks and in syndication through 1978. The concept has been revived with other hosts.

Bush plans to stay out of political arena

BOSTON — Former President Bush said he plans to keep out of politics and does not intend to second-guess President Clinton.

In a 20-minute interview with The Boston Globe in Houston Thursday, Bush denied reports that he has been depressed since losing to Clinton last November.

"You tell me how those stories get started," he said, laughing. "I'm happy and relaxed. I'm not bitter. I'm doing what I want to do and when, and I'm not doing any interviews."

Asked if he were modeling his post-presidential days after Harry Truman, who went home to Independence, Mo., when he left office, Bush said, "No, because he tried to influence presidential politics in the next two campaigns, and I have no intention of doing that."

Bush, 68, said he plans to spend much of his time on his presidential library, which is scheduled to open in 1996 at Texas A&M University.

Man indicted for using dog as weapon

CLEVELAND — A man was indicted on a murder charge for allegedly ordering his pit bull to attack his common-law wife, in a case investigated by a homicide detective and an animal expert.

Authorities say Jeffrey Mann, 36, ordered the 70-pound dog, named Mack, to repeatedly attack Angela Kaplan after the couple argued Sept. 22.

Although Mann said the attack was unprovoked, police Detective Michaelene Taliano said she was suspicious. Of the more than 100 wounds the 28-year-old woman suffered, none were to her neck or throat, which are usually a dog's favorite targets, she said.

"We believe the dog was instigated and re-instigated to attack," said animal behaviorist Karen Arnoff, who put the animal through a series of tests.

Jury convicts Mollicone for bank fraud

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — The former bank president widely blamed in Rhode Island's worst banking crisis since the Great Depression was convicted Friday of embezzling $15.8 million and creating false documents to cover the theft.

A Superior Court jury deliberated nearly three days before returning guilty verdicts on all 26 counts against Joseph Mollicone Jr.

Mollicone, 49, faces up to life in prison when he is sentenced. The former president of Heritage Loan & Investment Co. fled in November 1990 as examiners were scrutinizing the small neighborhood bank's books, and questioning him about millions of dollars in what he said were "off-line," or undocumented, loans.

Doctors fight to save fetus of brain-dead mom

Knight-Ridder News Service

OAKLAND, Calif. — Friska Marshall doesn't know it, but she's in a race against time.

Shot in the head during a botched robbery attempt Monday night, the 28-year-old woman is lying, brain-dead, in the intensive care unit of Highland Hospital. A respirator does her breathing for her — and will continue to do so, her family hopes, until a healthy baby is delivered.

Marshall is 17 weeks pregnant.

Doctors don't believe they can keep her body functioning long enough. Marshall's brain is severely damaged, making it likely that her heart and other organs will fail within two weeks. But at the family's request, they have agreed to keep her on life-support systems.

"Chances for survival (for the fetus) are very poor, but we have not determined it is impossible," Dr. James Mittelberger, an internist and chairman of the Highland Hospital ethics committee, said Thursday.

Oakland police say Marshall was shot after she threatened the life of another — a disabled man she was trying to rob in his MacArthur Boulevard apartment, according to Sgt. Bill Wallace, whom she sent after the wheelchair-bound amputee with a meat cleaver, he shot her in the head with a rifle to stop her.

Marshall's family told police she was a former drug user who had recently entered a rehabilitation program. They didn't know whether she had gone back to using drugs.

"She can't wake up and tell us," a family member who didn't want to be identified told the Oakland Tribune. But "she's a good mother and a really nice person," said Mrs. Smith, a sister of David Smith, Marshall's boyfriend and the father of the fetus.

Marshall has four other children, including two by Smith, police said.

When Marshall was rushed to the trauma center at Highland, she wasn't breathing, but her heart was still pumping, according to Dr. William Fry, who oversaw her care. She was immediately put on a respirator.

3 receive 15 years for raping retarded girl

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Three former high school football teammates were sentenced Friday to up to 15 years in youth detention for raping a mentally retarded teen-ager.

A fourth defendant was sentenced to probation and community service.

They were convicted as adults, but Superior Court Judge R. Benjamin Cohen cited their ages and the likelihood that they could be rehabilitated in sentencing three of them to youth detention.

A 15-year adult sentence normally would carry a 4-year minimum, but the sentence to a youth facility means the three could be released earlier if deemed rehabilitated.

"The defendants are very young, they are not hardened criminals," Cohen said after three of them apologized in court. "They are not without redeeming value."

Yeltsin unveils part of constitution

MOSCOW (AP) — President Boris Yeltsin on Friday released portions of a draft constitution for a strong presidency that he has promised to put forward if he wins a vote of confidence this weekend.

The president's press office also said he had taped a nationwide television address to be broadcast before Sunday's referendum.

The draft issued by Yeltsin describes a system with a powerful president who could under certain circumstances dissolve congress. It also would give the president powers that now belong to parliament, such as the right to appoint the Central Bank chairman, high court judges and the "power ministers" — the heads of security, defense, foreign and interior departments. Other key provisions would guarantee Russia the right to own land, something they do not now have and abolish the practice of exile.

By releasing portions of the draft constitution, Yeltsin was clearly seeking higher ground in a campaign that has grown auster by the day.

He also wants to lay the groundwork to interpret a vote of confidence Sunday as an endorsement for his proposed charter.

Marines take final trip down streets

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — Capt. Robert Abbott was making his next to last cruise through the chaotic jungle of Little Tokyo.

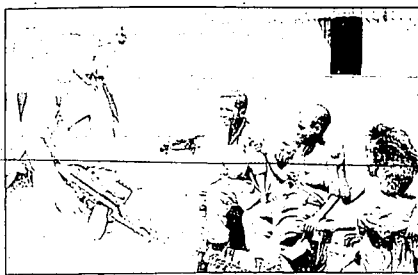

No, he said, it won't be difficult for his Marines to head back to Camp Pendleton, Calif., back to family, cheeseburgers and beer. But it will be tough to say goodbye to those aided by Operation Restore Hope.

Marines aren't supposed to get emotionally involved with the people they help, but "it's hard not to be," he said.

Friday was the last full day of patrols for Marines in Mogadishu as the Americans prepared to hand over control of their final sector in Operation Restore Hope. Pakistani troops take over Monday.

The U.N. will assume most of the costs for the humanitarian effort on May 1, but the date for the actual transfer to U.N. control probably will occur in mid-May. Still, that "seamless transition" which officials refer to is already well under way.

the Marines who guarded adjacent Checkpoint 77 have been replaced by Italian troops. A couple of U.N. armored cars mounted with light cannons and manned by Nigerians of the U.N. tanks used to command Checkpoint 59.

There's a buzz of activity as Americans stream home. A group of 341 Americans, mostly the Marines who handled control of the Bardera district in northeastern Somalia, left a couple of days ago.

There's a long line for U.S. vehicle crews to use high-powered steam cleaners on their vehicles to wash away Somalia's dirt and pass rigorous American Customs regulations. The process can take days for a tank.

However, the American all-purpose military vehicles, still cruise the streets in convoys. But they increasingly are being outnumbered by armored vehicles of all shapes and sizes from the various coalition forces, like Zimbabwe's coffin-like "War Wagon."

N. Korea reportedly wavers on pact

SEOUL, South Korea — North Korea has decided not to pull out of an international nuclear control treaty, South Korean news reports said Friday. But another report quoted a North Korean diplomat denying such a decision.

The Seoul government and the United States indicated that North Korea has shown no change in its position.

North Korea's decision to withdraw from the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty renewed suspicion that it might be developing nuclear weapons, despite its denial.

South Korea's national Yonhap News Agency quoted a North Korean diplomat in Cairo, Egypt, as saying his government will rescind its March 12 decision to withdraw from the treaty. But the unidentified diplomat would not give details.

Groups voice anti-Saddam views

LONDON — A new Iraqi rebel movement, claiming wide contacts in the Iraqi military, announced plans Friday to unite opposition groups in a campaign to accomplish what the Persian Gulf War didn't: oust Saddam Hussein.

"We feel this is the first serious attempt to unite the major opposition groups by having them all co-sponsor a conference of all Iraqis," said Saad Saleh, Iraq's U.S.-educated Shiite Muslim president of the Free Iraqi Council and spokesman for the new movement.

Gen. Aref Abdul Razzak, a former Iraqi prime minister and chairman of the new movement, led an abortive coup in Baghdad in 1965.

Akihito prays for Okinawa dead

ITOMAN, Japan — Emperor Akihito visited memorials to the suffering of Okinawa in World War II, making a solemn start Friday to the island's first imperial visit.

For nearly an hour, Yushiko Muiet, an 82-year-old survivor of a student medical corps, led the monarch through exhibits depicting the hardships she and more than 200 other young women were forced to endure in the name of Akihito's father, the late Emperor Hirohito. Most of them died.

In all, nearly 150,000 soldiers and 100,000 civilians died on Okinawa during the bitter battle in the closing days of the war. The wounds remain deep from the 90 days of fighting, which also killed 13,000 American soldiers, sailors and Marines.

Charges may stem from wine sales

MELBOURNE, Australia — The leader of Victoria state celebrated a landslide election victory last year by selling commemorative bottles of wine from his office.

Now police say charges will be filed against him for not having a license to sell alcohol. If convicted, Victoria state Premier Jeff Kennett could be sentenced to 12 months in prison and fined $3,500. He would not have to leave office if found guilty, but could be pressured to resign, Kennett

Serbs seek concessions, unlikely to endorse plan

BOSANSKI NOVI, Bosnia Hercegovina (AP) — Bosnia's self-appointed Serb parliament will reject a U.S.-backed peace plan unless its ethnic rivals give more concessions, Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic said Friday.

The ad hoc assembly galvanized in this town on the Croatian border amid increasing calls for Western military intervention unless the Serbs take steps to end the year-long ethnic war.

More than 131,000 people have died or disappeared since fighting broke out.

Besides rejecting the peace plan, some Bosnian Serbs said the assembly may consider formal unification with Serb-held lands in Croatia and Yugoslavia, which now comprises only Serbia and Montenegro.

Such action by the parliament is expected to trigger tougher economic sanctions and a tightened naval blockade against Yugoslavia.

Battlefronts throughout Bosnia were reported generally quiet Friday.

In Washington, about a dozen State Department experts on Bosnia sent Secretary of State Warren Christopher a letter saying Western diplomacy had failed and suggesting more aggressive action, said a U.S. official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The New York Times said the memo supported military intervention.

The comments will be included in a report on whether to provide arms to the Bosnian government and whether the United States and allies should bomb Serb artillery sites, the official said.

The U.S. envoy to the United Nations, Madeline Albright, also urged the White House to approve air strikes despite European opposition, the lines reported.

An strikes are a hotly contested issue both within the Clinton administration and among NATO allies.

Idaho students protest rent increases

MOSCOW — More than 100 University of Idaho students crowded into a conference room to ask school officials why they're going back on a promise that rental fees wouldn't go up more than 10 percent per year.

The school's new housing director, Roger Oettli, took a number of shots Thursday night for what students said were unreasonably large increases.

Oettli said proposed rate increases range from 5 percent to 18 percent depending on the student's living arrangement. They are designed to bring all facilities and operations of the housing division to what he termed a "base level."

Rents under the proposal would go up $309 per year for students and up to $50 per month for families. Rents at the university went up 10 percent last year and students said as part of that increase, they were promised future increases would not exceed 10 percent.

Physics professor takes over at college

NAMPA — Physics professor Gilbert Ford has been named acting president of Northwest Nazarene College.

Leon Doane was president of the private school until he died of cancer April 7.

Ford, 70, will assume his new duties Monday and serve until Doane's permanent replacement is named and takes office, Jim Diehl, chairman of Northwest Nazarene's Board of Regents, said Friday.

Diehl described Ford as "a veteran administrator... much loved and respected on the NNC campus."

The acting president has been at the Nampa college since 1950, according to a college media release. He arrived from Harvard with a doctorate in nuclear physics.

Homedale mayor acquitted of charge

MURPHY — A jury has found Homedale Mayor Paul Fink innocent of one count of lewd and lascivious conduct with a minor under 16.

A five-woman, seven-man jury deliberated two hours Thursday before acquitting Fink after a three-day trial before 3rd District Judge Wayne Fuller in Murphy.

Fink was indicted on the felony charge by an Owyhee County grand jury in July 1992. He faced up to life in prison if convicted.

The mayor, who remained free on his own recognizance after the indictment, could not be reached for comment Friday. He had pleaded innocent last August.

Wanted Davidian returns to Texas

COEUR D'ALENE — After hiding for more than two weeks in northern Idaho, a Branch Davidian member wanted on federal firearms charges has returned to Texas to surrender, the Coeur d'Alene Press reported Friday.

Paul Gordon Fatta, 35, and his 14-year-old son Kalani fled Waco, Texas, on March 6, the day a federal warrant was issued for Fatta on charges of conspiracy to manufacture illegal firearms, according to the newspaper.

The father and son reportedly were holed up near Coeur d'Alene. The newspaper said they previously had been hiding in Las Vegas and Portland, Ore.

Fatta returned to Texas late Thursday, the newspaper reported, but Kalani did not accompany his father. His location was not disclosed.

Tribal leader stresses business sense

ALBUQUERQUE — Indian tribes need to develop business as they move into the future, an Indian leader says.

David Matheson, chairman of the Coeur d'Alene Tribe, said Indian entrepreneurs have had to overcome the problems of being located on remote reservations far from commercial markets and within economically depressed communities that have little cash for investment or business start-up.

"We don't have Silicon Valley or Kmart or IBM looking to locate on our land because of the (lack of) benefits there," he said.

On the other hand, reservations have become a popular place to dump trash, including nuclear waste, he said.

13 of 21 Ada lawmakers get an 'F'

BOISE — The Idaho Conservation League says 13 of the 21 state legislators from Ada County flunked its rating for votes on environmental issues in the 1993 session.

But one lawmaker who got an F from the league says that could help him politically in his conservative western Ada district.

"I think they haven't correctly read my voting record," said Rep. Alan Lance, R-Meridian, the GOP caucus chairman. "They are doing arbitrary and capricious grading."

'Rescue ethic' dominates health psyche

LEWISTON (AP) — One of the biggest changes in health care reform may have to be in the mind set of the American people, a panel of health care experts suggests.

"There's something in the mind set of Americans of the 'rescue ethic' that goes to the heart of what we're talking about here," said Mark Gibson, health care consultant and an author of the controversial Oregon health care plan. He and others spoke during a Thursday panel on health care at Lewiston.

The rescue ethic and what leads to extraordinary medical efforts and hundreds of thousands of dollars being poured into saving an individual life, without asking "what about all those others we could save with the same money," he said.

The health care forum was part of the state conference of the Idaho Public Health Association.

The conference concluded Friday at Lewis Clark State College.

The Oregon health care plan moves toward prioritizing care that may become a model for future national changes.

Under the plan, Oregon's Medicaid program would stop covering expensive treatments for conditions such as inoperable cancer and advanced AIDS. The state would limit the use of expensive coverage to 120,000 more of the state's poor.

The plan was blocked by the Bush administration when it was first proposed. But the Clinton administration gave Oregon permission in March to provide Medicaid assistance for its poor by to reform the care they receive.

The central element of the Oregon plan, or national health care reform, is establishing a link between the cost of services and the benefits deceived. Gibson said.

"If we don't test some principle and weigh it clearly in mind... if we don't have a president leading the American people to that point, then we'll gravitate to the rescue ethic every time."

The Oregon plan brought some "realities to the table," noted Herb Maldonado, director of health care management strategies for Medical Service Bureau at Lewiston.

"We're going to spend that money on heart transplants or personal care."

Americans expect reforms to drive down health care costs, and do something about access to medical care and the 38 million people who are uninsured, Maldonado said.

But he said you can't have both.

Boundary fire district seeks compensation

NAPLES (AP) — A rural Boundary County fire district says it might sue the FBI if it doesn't pay a $28,800 bill for standing by during an 11-day siege at Randy Weaver's mountain-top cabin.

Federal agents surrounded the cabin after an Aug. 21 shootout left a marshal and Weaver's teen-age son dead. Eventually, Weaver and three surviving daughters surrendered Aug. 31. Weaver and Kevin Harris are on trial in Boise on charges of killing the federal agent.

North Bench Volunteer Fire District Chief Gary Gage said the FBI requested and received fire protection during the final nine days of the tense confrontation, but refuses to pay a $28,800 bill.

North Bench firefighters were called after two tents occupied by FBI agents caught fire due to improper fuel mixtures in diesel-gasoline heating units, Gage said.

"We really didn't want to go to be with 'em," Gage said Thursday. "The hardest part of the whole thing was having people call us baby-killers and traitors as we crossed through the barricade."

FBI spokesman Nestor Michnyak, Washington, D.C., said the request for reimbursement will be "re-reviewed" by the agency.

North Bench firefighters stood by at the base camp with a mini-pumper truck and 600 feet of hose, Gage said.

The fire truck was needed elsewhere during the Weaver episode, but federal officials asked for firefighters at the scene.

"During that time... we watered down roads to keep dust from computers and (were on standby) to cut down fires in case they arrived," Gage said.

Two firefighters were at the scene around the clock during the standoff. In all, 24 North Bench volunteers participated, he said. The Weaver home, about 40 miles from the Canadian border, is about 13 miles outside the North Bench Fire District.

In a letter to Gage last February, FBI official James Jasinski said, "Under federal law, if a political subdivision... is required to render service, then the United States cannot make additional payments in any form to underwrite that legal responsibility."

Governor's Cup Scholarship goes to 6 Idaho students

BOISE (AP) — Six top Idaho high school seniors have been awarded Idaho Governor's Cup Scholarships, worth about $12,000 each over four years, granted to colleges and universities in the state.

"These young people represent the very best and brightest on Idaho high schools produce," Gov. Cecil Andrus said Friday in announcing the awards. "They are not only outstanding students, but genuine leaders in their schools and communities. They are Idaho's most valuable resource."

The Governor's Cup Scholarship program was established in 1957 to help stem the "brain drain" of Idaho's top high school graduates to out-of-state institutions.

With 30 year's recipients, a total of 30 scholarships have been awarded with a total value of about $3,600,000.

Besides the scholarship recipients, Andrus said referrals of applicants for the award have resulted in recruitment of more than 400 other top high school graduates to further their education in Idaho.

The scholarships are awarded with proceeds from an annual golf tournament in Sun Valley, and with contributions from individual and corporate sponsors and participating Idaho colleges and universities.

"I've watched these students prosper since 1957, and it's a commitment to the program continues through 1994. AIAE became a major sponsor in 1992, and the company continued its support this year."

This year's scholarship recipients all graduating at the top of their classes and active in a number of school and community activities, were:

- Carol Christen of Emuland High School
- Shannon Galloway of Boise's Boreal High School
- Jennifer Clark of Goodwin High School
- Eric Nayroll of Greenleaf, graduating from Prairie High School
- Wendy Stenz of Grangeville High School
- Tony Lancia of Homedale High School.

Big quake would cause lots of shakes in Portland, Salt Lake

LOS ANGELES (AP) — New research shows that major earthquakes under Salt Lake City or Portland, Ore., would generate extreme shaking capable of causing catastrophic damage and numerous deaths, scientists said recently.

"Earthquakes that we know will eventually occur in Salt Lake City and Portland will produce the greatest ground shaking ever experienced since these towns were established," said Ivan G. Wong, chief author of the new studies and a seismologist at Woodward-Clyde consultants in Oakland.

"That will result in significant structural damage and loss of life and injuries," he said by phone from Ixtapa, Mexico, where he presented some of the findings during the Seismological Society of America's annual meeting.

Wong said buildings in Portland and Utah's major cities should be designed to withstand the strongest possible shaking rather than simply meeting building codes, which he called inadequate.

Vulnerable schools, hospitals and utility lines should be reinforced to withstand shaking, which will be extreme because of loose soils under both cities, he added.

Wong's research is "very good work" and shows shaking in Salt Lake City and Portland will be "considerably higher" than anticipated in local building codes, said Tom Heaton, president of the Seismological Society of America and a seismologist for the Emergency officials brace for bogus drill

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — At 6 a.m. on June 7, emergency officials will get in practice for a disaster experts say could some day strike the Wasatch Front for real — a major earthquake.

The mythical tremor, with a magnitude of 7.5 on the Richter scale, has been in planning for more than two years. It will be the latest in a series of such exercises held across the nation.

The goal is to test the national emergency disaster plan and check the ability of local agencies and the state and federal emergency agencies to work together in times of crisis.

The exercise, dubbed "Response 93," will involve the entire Wasatch Front, from Utah County north to Weber County, along western Utah's Tooele County and northeastern Utah's Morgan County. Federal agencies in Denver and Washington will monitor the effort. "It involves a lot of people. We've had training every Saturday for months," said Royanne Frank, director of the state Division of Emergency Management.

More than 1,000 people will be involved in the four day exercise, she said. The general scenario is a major earthquake hitting the Wasatch Front, triggering a disaster on the scale of the Hurricane Andrew disaster in Florida last year.

Frank's office will be called on to coordinate calls for help and reports of trouble all over the state. Federal agencies will set up their own emergency office at the Utah National Guard's Camp Williams.

Under Response 93's script, Camp Williams also is where the state office will be forced to move after its current location in the State Office Building is destroyed.

U.S. Geological Survey.

The studies were financed by the Utah Geological Survey and the Oregon Department of Geology and Mineral Industries. Agency officials warned Oregon and Utah are woefully unprepared for severe quakes, despite recent building code improvements.

Scientists simply don't know when a magnitude 7 quake might occur on the Wasatch fault under Salt Lake City or Utah's other major cities, or when a magnitude 6.5 to 7 quake might happen on any of at least three major faults beneath Portland.

But Wong said his studies show shaking from such quakes would be "many times more severe than in Mexico City during the 1985 quake" which measured 8.1 in magnitude and killed about 10,000 people.

"It's probably going to be one of the most severe instances of ground shaking ever experienced by a metropolitan area" in the western United States, probably exceeded only by San Francisco's 8.3 quake of 1906 and Alaska's 8.3 quake of 1964, Wong said.

The new findings show that if a magnitude 7 quake happened under Salt Lake City, "we would be devastated," said Utah Geological Survey geologist Linda Olig, a co-author of one study. "There would be hundreds of deaths and many more injuries."

"Many of our buildings will collapse."

Wong and his colleagues used information about local soil conditions, quake faults and seismic wave speeds to calculate the maximum force of shaking that would be felt at three sites in Salt Lake City and four sites in Portland during major quakes.

This force, called "peak acceleration," is expressed as a percentage of the force of gravity. Shaking equal to 20 percent the force of gravity caused the collapse of the late-state 880 freeway in Oakland, killing two thirds of the 63 people who died in the 7.1 quake that rocked the San Francisco region in 1989.

Wong found much stronger ground motion would be felt during big quakes in Utah and Oregon.

A magnitude 7 quake on the Wasatch fault under Salt Lake City would cause shaking equal to 60 percent of the force of gravity at Salt Lake City International Airport, 70 percent of the force of gravity in downtown Salt Lake City and 100 percent of the force of gravity on the east edge of the city next to the Wasatch Front mountains.

A magnitude 6.5 quake under Portland would cause shaking up to 30 percent the force of gravity at Portland International Airport, 40 percent the force of gravity at the east end of Marquam Bridge, 60 percent the force of gravity near the Lloyd Center shopping mall and between 40 percent and 70 percent the force of gravity in downtown Portland.

The Wasatch fault stretches from southern Idaho to south-central Utah. Olig said that in prehistoric times, magnitude 7 or larger quakes happened an average of every 200 to 400 years somewhere on the most active part of the fault, which stretches from Brigham City through Ogden, Salt Lake City, Provo and Nephi.

There hasn't been a major Wasatch fault quake in recorded history, and seismologists believe the part of the fault near Brigham City is most overdue for a big jolt. Big quakes on the Salt Lake City part of the fault happen roughly every 2,400 years, and the most recent one was about 1,600 years ago, Olig said.

County revamps approach to 3-party guardianships

POCATELLO (AP) — Grow's children bilk an elderly parent out of her life savings, all under the protection of legal guardianship.

A senior citizen, living in a nursing home, has no family to help him make or take charge of life-and-death decisions.

A mentally disabled woman can't pay her bills because she can't handle money or understand how to use a checkbook.

They are some of the situation where a third party might step in as legal guardian when there's no one else.

That's where the newly revamped Bannock County Board of Community Guardians can make a difference in the lives of extremely vulnerable people, said Ellen Anderson, She's chairperson for a nine-member board appointed last month by the Bannock County Commission.

The county had a guardianship board, then disbanded it. It recruited volunteers who served as individual guardians when needed.

Susan Lorenz, ombudsman for the elderly with the local Area Agency on Aging, said that method didn't work. She spent the past year heading a task force setting goals for the new board and recruiting and interviewing potential board members.

This time, Anderson and Lorenz are convinced the county can have a guardianship program that works.

The guardianships will be in the hands of the entire board. It will act as the guardian, delegating specific tasks to other volunteers in the community.

The board could recruit or hire someone who would be responsible for writing checks or for overseeing some other aspect of a person's life that needs supervision, Anderson said.

Lorenz said a person can serve as a guardian for someone else only through an order from a district judge. The board has the option of accepting a case.

She said having a board act as a guardian removes the responsibility from one person and makes it a shared responsibility. It also provides continuity. The court and don't have to depend on one person remaining in the area to act as a guardian.

"It won't be as overwhelming as an individual guardianship," said Lorenz.

Since the board does not involve itself in details of each case, it doesn't get mired in the client's personal problems, yet can make sure that services ordered by the court are provided.

But the board isn't detached. There will be a pool of community volunteers who will visit clients in their homes. Anderson said board members also hope to make home visits.

Legislation amending Idaho law to allow county guardian boards the right to act as guardians was signed by Gov. Cecil Andrus on March 10.

While waiting for its first case, the group worked on making the contacts needed to start the process.

Court petitions for guardianship can be filed by families, social service agencies or other interested parties who feel the need is there, Anderson said.

"We want to do it well this time or not at all," Lorenz said.

Rail safety week offers free train rides in May

TWIN FALLS - Free train rides are being offered across southern Idaho as part of Rail Safety Awareness Week, May 2-8.

Idaho Operation Lifesaver and the Union Pacific Railroad are sending a passenger train across southern Idaho and eastern Oregon to educate the public on the danger of not obeying railroad crossing signals.

Riders will have the same view as the train's engineer, thanks to cameras mounted on the locomotive.

The hour-long rides are round-trip. Tickets are given out on a first-come, first-served basis.

Twin Falls, train runs May 6, 2:30 p.m.-7:30 p.m. Get tickets at the Union Pacific Depot April 28, 11 a.m.-4 p.m.

Rupert, train runs May 6, 9 a.m.-1 p.m. Get tickets at the depot April 28, 9 a.m.-noon.

Shoshone, train runs May 5, 2 p.m.-5 p.m. Get tickets at the depot April 28, 11 a.m.-3 p.m.

Founder sets predator control show next week in Ketchum

KETCHUM - The founder and president of Predator Project in Bozeman, Mont., Tom Skeele, will give a slide presentation on federal predator control programs on Tuesday, April 27, at Ketchum City Hall.

Skeele's presentation will begin at 7:30 p.m. and will include a history of predator control, a discussion of current practices of the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Animal Damage Control, and suggestions on what to monitor and change the agency.

For more information, contact Predator Project at (406) 587-3389 or Lynn Kincaid in Ketchum at 726-7485.

Twin Falls Public Library seeks new member for board

TWIN FALLS - The Twin Falls Public Library is looking for a new board member.

The board needs the member because a new Idaho law makes its City Council representative a liaison, leaving the board short one full-fledged member.

The new board member will serve from July 1 through Dec. 31, 1994, and then could be considered for an additional term of five years.

Board members must be city residents. Interested people can contact Library Director Arlan Call, City Manager Tom Courtney or library trustees Tom Condie, Judy Pollock, Brit Groom, Ken High or Kara Krai.

Twin Falls BID hopes for new director by middle of June

TWIN FALLS - The Downtown Business Improvement District is looking for a new director.

The district's former director, Betsy Florence, announced last week that she wanted to resign, and the district's board accepted the resignation Tuesday.

The board will appoint an interim director until June 15, when it hopes to have hired a permanent replacement. Florence had been director for more than three years.

PUC sets hearing on request to close UP freight agency

TWIN FALLS - The Idaho Public Utilities Commission is holding a hearing at 1:30 p.m. May 25 on Union Pacific Railroad's request to close its Twin Falls freight agency.

Union Pacific wants to take its customer service representative out of Twin Falls and handle all local shipping business through its computerized National Customer Service Center in St. Louis.

The Twin Falls agency is one of the last in the country, as Union Pacific pulls back to its main line where it hauls heavy loads for long distances, its most profitable endeavor.

Its request to close its Twin Falls freight agency may be irrelevant anyway, since Union Pacific has announced it wants to sell its branch lines in the Twin Falls area.

The commission said it doesn't intend to receive testimony on the sale of Union Pacific's branch lines. The hearing will be at the Twin Falls Police Department classroom, 356 Third Ave. E.

On the lookout in Murtaugh

By Mychel Matthews Goodman
Times-News correspondent

Speeding drivers upset residents; some seek patrolman for town

MURTAUGH - Residents here have been without police protection for more than seven months, and some are considering taking the law into their own hands.

In particular, some are so anxious to put an end to speeding in town, they are trying to stop motorists themselves to tell them to slow down.

A few also say the town council should hire a police officer, because officials aren't taking care of speeding problems in the proper way.

The speed limit within the city of Murtaugh is posted at 25 mph, but residents living on East Boyd Street say drivers consistently exceed that.

Some have started recording descriptions of speeding cars.

"There are people who zoom up and down this street so damn fast," said Kathy Veach. "I've jumped out in front of a lot of people and chewed them out. I've got a kid who's going to be walking around pretty soon."

She's not alone. Hope Rovig has three kids who play along the narrow, two-block long, dead end street.

"It's so stupid for people to drive by here so fast, when the street ends just a block away," she said Friday.

"When school is out, there are usually 20 or 30 kids using the street as a playground," she said. "And somebody's going to get killed."

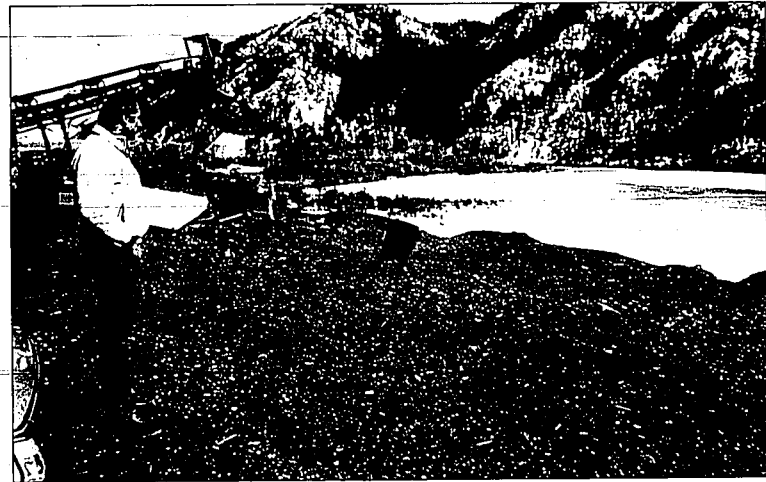

The City Council is also trying to put an end to the dangers to children.

Murtaugh residents received a letter from the City Council this week, requesting that all cars parked along East Boyd Street be moved off the city's right-of-way.

The City Council has received numerous complaints concerning the dangerous safety hazard created by all the parked vehicles.

Triumph tries to repel Superfund juggernaut

The Associated Press

TRIUMPH - Locals have a ready answer to why nearly 1 million cubic yards of toxic mine tailings shouldn't qualify their central Idaho mountain community as a federal Superfund cleanup site.

World-class skier Piaba Street, Residents see the Triumph native, now making her mark on the World Cup circuit, as proof their environment is healthy.

Mismanagement? - B2

"She was born here and lived here until she was 16," Superfund opponent Donna Rose said. "She's like the bionic woman."

Rose and most other residents of the community of 45 self-described old hippies southeast of Sun Valley believe the only danger they face is from a government program run amok.

They contend that in a misguided effort to protect them from tailings contaminated with lead, arsenic and zinc, Superfund cleanup would pilfer their scenic glen, devalue their property and erase their peace of mind.

"There is no evidence at all, to the best science they have been able to show us, that we have a threat," said Wendy Collins, another resident standing up to the Environmental Protection Agency.

Defunct mines

But like the Colorado resort towns of Telluride and Aspen before it, piles of black sand from a defunct silver and lead mine have put Triumph on a seemingly inexorable course toward becoming a national cleanup priority.

Federal officials have assured residents conditions are well beyond the level justifying Superfund status, but they have declined to say just how high they rank the hazard posed by waste from almost a century of mining.

"We can't pull the site back from the process," said Barbara McAllister, the EPA's regional deputy hazardous waste chief. "We just felt we couldn't walk away from it."

Cleanup cost estimates range from $5 million to $600 million. Government officials are just beginning to compile the list of property owners they will try to make responsible for the bill.

But locals consider any cost too high, and the prospect is made even less palatable by what some allege is government use of a high-profile site to draw attention to its cleanup efforts.

"We're connected to a world-famous ski resort, and it will look good in someone's portfolio that they cleaned up an area

Triumph resident Ken Raabe stands near a portal of the defunct Triumph Mine recently. The white area in the valley below is nearly a million cubic yards of toxic mine tailings.

EPA coordinator contends project will prevent problems in the future

The Associated Press

TRIUMPH - The federal point man for the Superfund cleanup of mining tailings in central Idaho fears the government's local critics are being shortsighted about what could become an ecological disaster.

"I like the folks out there," Chris Field said. "The fundamental problem is they think there should be a problem before we step in. Our policy is to take action and prevent health problems."

People in the town of 45, fearing the mess and upheaval of cleaning up a million cubic yards of tailings will destroy their property values and way of life, say there is no solid scientific evidence supporting the contention a health threat is looming. But Field disagrees.

Blood and urine samples from local see all this consistency, that in itself is some assurance" that the threat is real, Field said.

Although tests on residents' have generally yielded lead and arsenic levels below the national average, Field's concern is for the future and what he sees as a likelihood that those human test results will deteriorate dramatically.

The lead content of lawns in the community was 43 times higher than typical. The arsenic content was nearly 200 times higher. And at the tailings piles and the mill itself, the lead content was almost 300 times greater than normal, while arsenic content was more than 1,000 times greater.

Filer schools to seek levy

By Bertilia L. Redfern
Times-News correspondent

FILER - Filer School District residents may soon be paying more in taxes. Board members approved a $75,000 supplemental levy residents will vote on May 18.

The proposed levy would be used to buy needed items and for some remodeling and repair work.

A computer program for the high school, at a cost of $45,000, makes up the majority of $75,000. Board members also wish to purchase science and music equipment, locks and lawn sprinklers. Roof repairs and remodeling of the agriculture classroom will use up the remainder of the funds.

Taxpayers may vote on the levy the same day they cast their ballots for School Board candidates in zones 3 and 5.

Superintendent James Fisher announced at Tuesday's meeting that both Bob Foster and Bob Lanting are up for re-election to the board, and they will not seek another term. James Wray and Judy Hammond are vying for the trustee spot in zone 3. Ron Pierce is running for the position in zone 5.

In other business: A board meeting will be held in the multi-purpose room at Hollister Elementary, at 7 p.m. Monday. The board will discuss reducing the staff because of financial problems.

The board hired all renewing contract staff members and will consider all non-renewing contract staff members soon. They also hired a Chapter 1 migrant aide.

Chevalier recalls early Scouting

By Suzanne Huxhold
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS - When Corinne Chevalier joined the Girl Scouts back in 1916, the uniform of the day differed a little from the ubiquitous green jumper usually associated with the cookie sellers and tree-planters of today.

"We wore long, khaki skirts with big pockets on either side for holding things, and khaki blouses with a kerchief around our necks," recalled Chevalier, now a spry 89-year-old Twin Falls resident, of her pre-World War I scouting ensemble.

Chevalier joined an 8-member Girl Scout troop in Kirksville, Mo., just four years after scouting came to the U.S.

"That was something back then to be a Girl Scout," Chevalier said.

Chevalier, who left Missouri and came to Twin Falls in 1938, has become somewhat of a local celebrity thanks to her long-ago connection with Girl Scouts.

She was interviewed several years ago by a local television station, and Midge Fisher at the regional Silver Sage Girl Scouts Office in Twin Falls said Chevalier is an example to her young Scouts every day.

Established in Savannah, Ga., in 1912 as an offshoot of England's Girl Guides, the Girl Scouts of Chevalier's day were an empowering force to thousands of young women still generations away from the idea that girls could do anything boys could do.

Chevalier's scout captain, Miss Eunice

ANDY ARENZ/The Times-News

Corinne Chevalier says she enjoyed the hikes and campouts during her early Scouting days.

Adams, was also her high school teacher. And though Miss Adams didn't give out badges for recycling or computer science, Chevalier said it was one of the most valuable experiences of her young life.

"We would go to the lake and camp for one week every summer. We swam and played ball," Chevalier said. "That was the only thing young girls had to do back in those days."

Fisher said that although the full khaki skirts and neck kerchiefs are long gone, much of what Chevalier learned in Girl Scouts is still being taught to the young women of today.

"One of the amazing things about Girl Scouts is that the mission statement has basically stayed the same for 80 years," said Fisher, who is field executive for the scout council that oversees troops from Central Idaho to Northern Nevada to Eastern Oregon. "Girl Scouts' mission is to develop caring, competent, resourceful women."

"That goal is as accomplished in the 1990s, Fisher said, in much the same manner as it was in the early part of the century, before feminism or survival skills or even Gore-Tex were part of the American vernacular.

"We still emphasize outdoor skills like kayaking, horseback riding, whitewater rafting," Fisher said. "Those skills teach self-reliance and outdoor survival. But we now emphasize the things that will help them survive in the real world, too."

Girl Scouts no longer just earn badges in child care and cooking, Fisher said. They are also introduced to science, math and computer skills.

Chevalier said she approves of the active, forward-thinking direction Girl Scouts has taken since she was a member.

Still, she was nostalgic for the simpler times.

"I remember I was visiting my uncle one week and I got a letter from one of my Girl Scout friends," Chevalier said. "She wrote that she was sorry I missed the meeting. They had cake and ice cream."

Kimberly farmer fund will help educate high schools' graduates

By Margaret Jones
Times News correspondent

KIMBERLY Graduates of Kimberly High School may find assistance in furthering their education through a new program, the Lee Schmidt Scholarship fund. The grants, from the $390,000 fund, will be awarded to deserving graduates who would not be able to continue their education because of financial need. Schmidt had farmed in the Kimberly area for many years and had no children of his own.

John Garner, school superintendent, told the board there will be summer school sessions for students of grades one through five from June 10 to July 19. If federal funds are available, math classes will be offered for middle school and high school students. Maintenance Supervisor Dale Vanser revealed Western Mountain Bus Sales of Caldwell had submitted the bid of $40,700 for a new bus. The board was pleased they were able to buy the bus in Idaho, and Vanser reminded the board they would realize an 80 percent reimbursement of the purchase price through depreciation.

High school counselor Shane Jones reported the junior class has surpassed their past three years' scoring in the state required tests of Achievement and Proficiency. The class outscored the state with a 3.45 average. Garner told the board that under a new ruling, if there are no things for a write-in candidate, no election will be held. Incumbent Trustee Lois Glenn is running unopposed for the Zone 1 seat.

Shelley finds contaminant in water

SHELLEY (AP) Shelley has joined the list of eastern Idaho communities finding traces of a contaminant in its water system, but officials say so far the tests are inconclusive.

The Shelley water system tested positive for tetrachloroethene, a chemical solvent used in dry cleaning and degreasing of engines. Water superintendent Frank Butler has ordered more tests. Long-term exposure to "the" compound, commonly called "perc," is believed to pose a risk of liver cancer. Tests in 1990 showed heavy perc concentrations in Shelley's water. A year later, tests showed the water was free of impurities, but the findings have been lost.

Facing stricter regulations from the federal Environmental Protection Agency, about two dozen Idaho municipal water systems have struggled with perc contamination. In eastern Idaho, Chubbuck and Blackfoot have confirmed the pollutant. Levels of a similar compound were found in Pocatello's water supply. An engineering consultant started tests at Blackfoot on Thursday to find the source of the contamination, taking samples from a well over a five-foot period.

Since the limited water could not be fed into the city's water mains, the well pumped 1,000 gallons a minute into fire hoses which dispersed the water into a ditch and the city's storm sewer system. That caused minor flooding along Walker St.

Appellate court modifies killer's sentence

BOISE (AP) Convicted killer Barryton Eugene Seary has won a modification of his sentence, but even with the Court of Appeals ruling, Seary must still spend the rest of his life in prison. The decision on Friday directed the district court to modify Seary's sentence so that the additional term for use of a firearm during a robbery is an indeterminate period to match the indeterminate life sentence Seary received for the robbery during which the murder was committed. But both those sentences will still be served only after Seary, 25, serves out his life sentence for the first-degree murder of Ashton grocery store owner Teresa Rice in 1987. And without a parole commutation from the Commission on Pardons and Parole that life sentence prohibits any possibility of parole. It was the third appeal of the sentences imposed on Seary who was just a teen-ager at the time of the killing that authorities said was prompted by his dog habit. While he attempted to win leniency on his conduct during three years in prison, the sentencing judge, J. Reynolds George, said the crime was so serious that the life sentence without parole was something the parole commission should review much further into the future for possible commutation.

Parole board gives murderer 2nd chance

BOISE (AP) — The state Commission on Pardons and Paroles has given convicted murderer James Waller a second chance for freedom after he violated his first parole in the 1980s. The board, meeting at the main prison through next Monday, agreed to parole Waller next April 21 if there are no further problems while he is in prison. Waller, now 46, was sentenced to life in prison in 1972 for the murder the year before of retired Army Lt.

Col. Max Ludlow, who had been stabbed and apparently bashed in the head with a frying pan in an apparent robbery of his room in a Boise hotel. Waller was arrested a day later and charged with the murder after police found Ludlow's knife in his possession. The itinerant, who was just 21 then and passing through Boise on his way to see his parents in Oregon, pleaded guilty to the slaying. But he later appealed, claiming he was in a drugged stupor during the killing, never remembered what happened and fabricated a story in admitting the crime. And during an interview under oath at the prison in 1974, Waller said he was with another man who was the one to kill Ludlow. But he also admitted that he did intend to rob Ludlow, who was believed to have money and drugs, leaving himself still as an accessory to murder.

Edith P. (Ringgold) Smith
RICHLAND, WASH. — Edith Pauline (Ringgold) Smith, 70, of Richland, Wash., and formerly of Eden, passed away peacefully in her sleep Tuesday, April 13, 1993, at her home. She was born Aug. 25, 1922, at Miner, Twin Falls County, Idaho, to Bony Cecil and Lida (Galloway) Ringgold. The family moved to rural

Eden, Idaho, in 1924. Edith attended elementary school at Russell Lane School, and graduated from Eden Rural High School in May 1940. She graduated from Albion Normal Teacher's College at Albion, Idaho, in 1942, and taught the primary grades at Kimberly, Idaho. On Sept. 29, 1944, she married Robert C. Smith at Twin Falls, Idaho. They lived at Twin Falls, where she was a private secretary at Aetna Insurance. Edith and Bob moved to Richland in 1951, and Edith was employed as private secretary to WM "Charlie" Mathis at Hanford Atomic Research and Development. She retired in 1958. Edith was a member of the Northwest United Protestant Church, the Tri-City Genealogical Society, Tri-City League for the Blind, charter member of the Northwest Indian Association, member of the first Governor's Advisory Council for the Blind, and was a Campfire leader for 10 years. She is survived by her daughter, Holly L. Smith of Seattle, Wash.; a sister, Elizabeth B. Parrott of Okanogan, Wash.; a son, Noel A. Wilcox of Seattle, Wash.; and 11 nephews and nieces. Her passing also leaves a host of dear friends who found inspiration through her life, and who inspired her. She was preceded in death by her husband, Robert C. Smith, and her brother, Morgan Ringgold. A memorial service was held Saturday, April 17, 1993, at the Northwest United Protestant Church, 1312 Sacramento, with Pastor James Dyon officiating. She was laid to rest at a private service in the family plot at Mabton, Wash. Memorial contributions may be made to the Arthritis Foundation, 100 S. Idaho senators unanimous in keeping filibuster going

States News Service

Washington, April 23 — Here are the votes of senators and representatives on a measure to extend the filibuster in Congress this week. A "Y" means the member voted for the measure, an "N" means the member voted against the measure, a "D" means that a member did not vote, an "I" means no longer a member, and a "P" means the member voted present.

SENATE VOTES
LIBEL NUMBER: HR 1338
The Senate failed by a 56-43 vote to grant the necessary two-thirds majority to limit debate on President Clinton's economic stimulus package.

The vote was the last attempt to break a Republican filibuster and led to the eventual abandonment of most of the package, except for a $1-billion loan to extend unemployment benefits.

A "Y" vote is in favor of breaking the filibuster; a "N" vote is in opposition.

HOUSE VOTES
LIBEL NUMBER: HR 1338
The House passed by a 301-114 vote a bill that unlinks a $1-billion extension of unemployment benefits from a so-called down version of President Clinton's economic stimulus package.

The benefits were the only part of the stimulus plan to obtain congressional approval.

Residents fear for property rights as EPA pursues cleanup project

The Associated Press

TRIUMPH — For Donna Rose, the government mission to clean up a million cubic yards of toxic mine tailings has jeopardized everything she holds dear in the central Idaho mountains. "Our community is two years into a nightmare from which there might be no awakening," Rose says. The Environmental Protection Agency contends the tailings from the defunct Triumph lead and silver mine near Sun Valley pose a serious health risk to the 45 residents of the backcountry community. Rose's home is just a stone's throw from the old mill that processed the ore and next to a public well the EPA contends has elevated lead and arsenic levels. But having been forced to put her own plans to subdivide seven acres on hold, she is out to prove the government wrong when it says homeowners up and down the East Fork of the Wood River face a severe health threat. An original member of the national Superfund Communities Against Mismanagement or SCAM, Rose is joined in a network of towns fighting designation as a national priority for cleanup under the federal Superfund law. Her kitchen is home to an entire library of information about the cleanup process. And after returning from Aspen, Colo., which has already been made a national cleanup priority, she told her neighbors that a dozen years of EPA meddling there has left local property owners devastated. The mine holds the same for Triumph, she warned, if the EPA is not stopped. "It began to dawn on us we were losing our rights," Rose said.

"They've taken away our pursuit of happiness. They've taken away our freedom of speech." She claims there are so many errors and discrepancies in the EPA tests that the government should start over. And she suggests the government act responsibly in using those test results to publicly declare two years ago that Triumph children might have lead poisoning. Of all the tests it has conducted on water wells in Triumph, the government has only released one showing high chemical levels. Rose claims that was an intentionally lead-laden specimen the government uses to compare to actual samples. But Rose wonders whether her community can weather the emotional and financial pressure that goes with trying to make the federal government back down. "Our lives are definitely on hold," she said.

to support the belief by residents that wetlands below the tailings piles filter out toxins before they can reach the river, and he believes a thorough study of the area's groundwater is needed immediately. But he concedes he has had little success instilling a sense of concern in the residents. In fact, he has become a target of a community frustrated by years of bureaucratic maneuvering with no end in sight. This loss is philosophical. "The public," says Environmental Protection Agency regional deputy chief Barbara McAllister, "is either not there or they're not there." "That's democracy."

Triumph

and Blaine County native, said Triumph residents already are paying a higher price. "I think the stress these people are going through is greater than the health risk from the tailings," Centurisa said. Residents are using the government's own testing to support their case against Superfund designation. They cite blood and urine samples of residents that show lead and arsenic levels below the national average. "However, the EPA counters with tests showing high levels of heavy metal in the community's drinking water. Residents question the competency of the government contractors who took the water sample. And a consultant for Rep. Michael Crapo, R-Idaho, said the lead and arsenic might occur naturally. "The EPA is using fraudulent, falsified information to rank us among the worst environmental messes on record," Rose said.

Why Triumph? More to the point, residents question why Triumph was picked as a cleanup priority when among about 9,000 mining sites throughout

Idaho. They contend their community is nothing like the state's best-known Superfund site — the Bunker Hill mine and smelter complex, where smokestacks speckled heaven lead over northern Idaho's Silver Valley for nearly a century. Triumph residents argue that the untreated lead in tailings remains intact and harmlessly passes through the human body, explaining why miners can work around lead for generations without widespread poisoning. To bolster its case, the EPA has commissioned a study in which pigs are being fed tailings to determine the amount of toxic material the body tolerates. Meantime, the agency's critics are urging landowners to come up with their own cleanup plan to avoid federal involvement and minimize the cost. With their alternatives evaporating, Triumph residents are getting desperate to stop EPA officials from what they contend is an attempt to justify the Superfund program local expense. "Our valley is not sacred to them," Rose said. "Tourists do not go to Superfund sites for vacations."

along East Boyd Street," the letter read. "Notice that nowhere in the letter is the real issue addressed," said Barth Rogie. "Nowhere does it say for drivers to slow down. Without a city constable, they can't enforce the speed limit. So the council has focused the blame on the parked vehicles. The parked vehicles aren't the problem, speed is the problem." Since the last constable quit his job this past fall, the Twin Falls City Sheriff's Department has been patrolling the area. Sheriff Wayne Tousey said that with only 12 road deputies in the county, there's only so much his department can do. "We're out in the area as much as we can be," Tousey said, "but we're limited on our manpower. Right now, Hansen doesn't have an officer, so we're picking up that slack too." Tousey said complaints must go through the City Council process. "It's going to take the citizens of Murtaugh to go to the meeting and say, 'Hey, we want a marshal back,'" he said. Several people have applied for the constable position, said Councilman Terry Hanson, but none have had the required law enforcement training. Hanson figures no one wants the job because the pay is so low — $300 per month. When asked if the council had considered lowering the speed limit on East Boyd Street, or putting in speed bumps, Hanson said he planned to bring it up at next month's meeting. Residents are welcome at the council meetings, Hanson added. "There's times we don't hear from anybody," he said, "until something like this happens." Murtaugh City Council meets the second Wednesday of each month at 7:30 p.m. at the City Hall.

'Rupert Zoo Lady' cleanup begins

Humane Society, volunteers remove debris, some animals

By John J. Harberth Mini-Cassia News Service

RUPERT -- The long-awaited cleanup of Myrtle Kelly's property began Friday under direction of The U.S. Humane Society.

Dave Pauli, regional director for the Humane Society of Billings, Mont., and a half-dozen volunteers from local animal shelters began removing debris from Kelly's yard.

Thursday Pauli and Kelly began to inventory some of the animals which will be placed in the care of animal shelters and eventually given new homes.

The cleanup was mandated as part of an out-of-court settlement between Kelly, nicknamed the "Rupert Zoo Lady," and the city. The agreement allows her to keep 10 dogs, five cats, a skunk and badger.

Pauli said he hoped to remove six to eight dogs, four ducks, two guinea pigs and a pheasant on the first day. He said Kelly had given away five dogs earlier.

Friday's volunteers, from animal shelters in Twin Falls and Idaho, will be joined by local residents over the weekend, Rupert Mayor W.F. "Bill" Whitton encouraged others to help out.

City crews load up some of the debris from Myrtle Kelly's yard Friday.

Pauli said he hopes to have the everything done by Sunday, but it all depends on how much Kelly is willing to cooperate.

"We don't want to give away her personal property," he said.

Pauli said the volunteers want to be sensitive to Kelly, because the animals mean so much to her.

Cassia puts zoning proposals to public

By Eric Goodell

Public hearings on zoning proposals for the county are being held this week. The proposals include changes to zoning codes for residential, agricultural, and industrial areas.

Hearings set

Cassia County commissioners have scheduled several public hearings on zoning proposals to set new zoning laws in the area. The hearings are set for May 7 at Burley High School auditorium.

Dave Pauli said he doesn't like to think of zoning as zoning as zoning, but he said he would like to see zoning that would let people live in their own neighborhoods.

Even on land zoned for multiple use, a permit is needed for some uses, but the proposals would allow only be allowed in areas zoned for multiple use. Special use permits could be requested for both these areas.

Pauli said he doesn't have any concerns. Land of residential use will receive all the benefits of zoning.

He said there were some zoning hearings held by the county in the 1970s that turned out to be a "free for all," Dave said.

Other hearings have had little response, he said. Dave Pauli of the National Planning Service said he suspects some members of the City of Rocks area might have reservations about the ordinance restricting land use.

Proposed regulations:

- Residential agricultural: Property used for agricultural purposes... Agricultural residential: Single-family residential... Industrial commercial: Industrial uses permitted in this zone...

Jury acquits pair accused in church abduction case

BOISE (AP) — A jury on Friday acquitted two people accused of aiding the abduction of a Church Universal and Triumphant member in an effort to break her allegiance to the Montana-based sect.

Jurors could not agree on a verdict for a third defendant, after five days of deliberations.

Kenneth Pauloff of Pray, Mont., and Joseph Szlamant of Pennsylvania were acquitted on charges that they aided and abetted in second-degree kidnapping.

A mistrial was declared in the case of Amy Alice Chalmager, a resident of Tennessee.

The three were tried here in connection with the abduction of Laverne Collins Macchio. Those accused of the actual abduction are to be tried later.

On Nov. 20, 1991, the 41-year-old Macchio was taken from her Boise home by three people, posing as pizza deliverers.

Defense attorney Lawrence Levy said Friday that jurors approached the case with "intelligence and compassion."

Murray Steinman, a spokesman for the church based in Corvallis, Ore., said the verdicts apparently mean "that in America you can kidnap people because of their religious beliefs and get acquitted."

Levy said the court has been asked to dismiss the case against Chalmager. District Judge Alan Schwartzman is expected to consider the request next week.

Jurors deliberated for five days after a two-week trial.

Defense attorneys argued Macchio was taken from her home for good reason. They said her involvement with the church impaired her ability to make decisions, and threatened the health and welfare of her and her children.

Ada County prosecutors described the defendants as professional deprogrammers who needed cash. The defendants corrected some of Macchio's relatives into attacking for the abduction and subsequent persuasion efforts, the prosecutors said.

Tenure proposal upsets technology instructors

PROPOSED APPLIED instructors at Idaho State University's School of Applied Technology are upset over a proposal to end their potential tenure.

Rudy Anderson, director of the state Board of Education earlier this month and hopes to submit a revised version of the proposal to Richard Johnson, dean of the School of Applied Technology.

Anderson said with the Union administration's support, he is an excellent candidate for a position in private industry and the flexibility to change programs to meet its needs are a "make or buy" necessity.

She said the policy change, which would eliminate the honor of tenured faculty but seek to provide enhanced program guidelines, was still in a draft stage.

But even the idea infuriated instructors. One asked what the motivation was.

Anderson said the idea is to provide a more flexible environment for instructors. He said the idea is to provide a more flexible environment for instructors.

Religion

Let's turn away from Waco and look at ourselves

Church Universal carries on

Guru Ma, a.k.a. Elizabeth Clare Prophet, came to the Twin Cities recently to talk about angels, smooze with the faithful and make some new friends.

She is the leader of the Church Universal and Triumphant, certainly one of the most interesting New Age religions in the United States. But during the past six years, the Church Universal has had its share of turmoil. In fact, so much trouble has confronted the group that one has to wonder how it stays afloat and prospers.

Clark Morphew
Faith today

During the 1980s, the group moved its headquarters from California to a 12,000-acre Montana ranch adjoining Yellowstone National Park. In California, members were subject to charges that aggressive recruitment tactics and mind-control techniques were a part of their ritual. So they pulled up stakes and went to Montana hoping for some peace and quiet.

Imagine their surprise when they were assaulted with the same intolerance and criticism they faced in California. Local residents charged they were ruining the fragile environment and endangering wildlife. They were accused of blocking with fences a natural migratory path used by elk and deer, and of tapping into a natural hot spring to heat buildings.

During an interview, Prophet said the charges were untrue.

She acknowledged that the group had considered tapping into the hot spring because it had been done before, to provide mineral baths for wealthy tourists. The environmental concerns were considered, Prophet said, and it was decided to leave the hot spring alone.

The deer and elk migratory paths were never blocked with fencing, she said, and all manner of wildlife roam the ranch at will.

But then in April 1990, a dangerous accident occurred that could have had a big impact on rivers and streams in the Yellowstone area.

The Church Universal was in the process of building vast underground bomb shelters to house devotees of Prophet in the event of a nuclear attack. This was before the fall of communism in Russia but after Prophet had predicted a disastrous nuclear attack by the former Soviet Union sometime between 1989 and 2002.

One of the components of the tunnel-like bomb shelters was to be a heating system and other equipment that required both gasoline and diesel fuel. The group bought huge tanks, installed them underground and proceeded to equip the shelters.

But the tanks broke open at the welded seams spilling 21,000 gallons of diesel fuel and 11,000 gallons of gasoline into the ground. About 10 gallons of gasoline, Prophet said, actually leaked into a nearby creek, a spawning area for trout.

The group hired experts to help with clean-up of the polluted ground, and most of the work is done. They're awaiting judgment on their lawsuit against the manufacturer of the tanks.

All of this was happening at the same time. Morphew's husband was facing charges of illegally transporting weapons across state lines. He eventually was convicted and served a month in prison.

Also during this period, Prophet became estranged from one of her children, and the child decided to hit the talk-show circuit making charges that her mother lived an extravagant lifestyle while church members were deprived. Prophet said mother and daughter are now working at "seeing eye to eye."

You can see that life has not been easy for Guru Ma. But, one of the things that is true of all successful new religions is the presence of a strong and determined leader who presses on in spite of tribulation. Prophet is a sterling example of that kind of leader.

So was Joseph Smith, founder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints (Mormons) and his successor, Brigham Young. What the Mormons went through during those early years is probably the most violent persecution of any religion in America. In fact, Smith was murdered by an angry mob of bigots.

New religions are always persecuted by the ignorant and the fearful. But eventually, they are seen as legitimate pieces in the American religious puzzle.

I predict that is exactly what will happen to the new religions of this new age. They will be persecuted. But determined leadership will carry the day. Someday the Church Universal and Triumphant will be as honored as Mormonism is today.

Clark Morphew is an ordained clergyman and is religion writer for the St. Paul (Minn.) Pioneer Press.

Confusion, anger, disgust and genuine sadness surround the Waco disaster—a "religious" person, it pains me to see other religious people like myself do such things.

Like myself? Yes, I'm afraid so. Before I get comfortable in my condemnation of their folly, I need to remember some of my own. I remember going through school thinking my teachers were "secular" and "worldly" ... and worse, "unspiritual" when they taught ideas that run contrary to what I had learned was the "truth." Creation had to be in seven days. Languages had to be the result of the Tower of Babel. The "infallible, inspired, inerrant word of God" said so. Who was I to disagree? Heaven and hell followed the believe-it-or-don't attitude that I was raised under.

This past week, I had the privilege of performing the marriage ceremony for my oldest daughter. We read from 1 Corinthians 13, which highlights knowledge, faith, hope and love. I've been thinking about these words and the priority given to one of them.

I don't doubt that the people at Branch Davidians had certain knowledge, faith and hope. Crusaders, inquisitors, conquistadors, children with bombs strapped to their backs, Neo-Nazis, Klansmen and zealots of many kinds fill history right up to today. As a person who needed to be right, I know how important certain knowledge, faith and hope can be in keeping those "truths" alive. But what a crushing price is exacted from life as a whole.

Clergy's corner

Attending ministerial training in Los Angeles part time, Fitzpatrick completed her formal studies in four years. She spent two years as a practicing minister before she was ordained.

"In most spiritual philosophies, when you're licensed you're ordained," she said, "but religious science requires two years work as a minister first."

Fitzpatrick began her church work as an assistant minister in San Diego. By the start of her second year, she was ministering to the spiritual needs of a congregation of about 50 members at the Light on the Mountains Church in Ketchum.

Besides doing spiritual counseling, she presides at baptisms, memorials, weddings, and at a regular Sunday service at the Tyrolean Lodge. She also teaches classes.

"We take our prayer, music, and spiritual messages from a wide range of traditions," Fitzpatrick said. "We believe that Jesus is just one of the great spiritual masters who showed us the way to love and accept ourselves and our fellow man."

Affirmative prayer, in which a trained practitioner prays for the resolution of a specific physiological, psychological or spiritual problem, is a central belief of Religious Science.

It also embraces spiritual principles associated with New Age thought, such as meditation, affirmations and man's oneness with the universe.

However, it does not embrace reincarnation, astrology, the Tarot, psychic phenomena or crystal healing.

In fact, Fitzpatrick eschews the term "New Age."

various kinds: tax collectors, sinners and demon-possessed. His hope offered "possible" to the impossibly alienated. He coaxed love from his disciples who wanted to call fire out of the sky to consume people who had offended them. His knowledge and actions reflected a faith and hope rooted in love.

It hurts to see how truth that controls judgment to kill. Misguided knowledge, faith and hope? Of course. That's become my continuing profession as well. I must be careful not to judge without including myself.

But thankfully, there's something beyond judgment: namely, the cross and resurrection of Jesus Christ. Here knowledge, faith and hope have their focus on forgiving and inspiring love. Perhaps Waco will lose its attraction when we see ourselves in the confines of our own compounds ... and look to Christ to lead us out.

Fitzpatrick found a home, a ministry

By Florence Blanchard
Times-News correspondent

Ketchum — The first time Marianne Fitzpatrick attended a Church of Religious Science, she says, she felt at home.

"I had a feeling of finding a philosophy that supported everything I knew deep inside," she said.

Fitzpatrick went on to study Religious Science, and, on January 15, was ordained as a minister.

"We can't always affect what's going on around us, but we can change our response to it," Fitzpatrick said.

Religious Science, founded in 1927 by the spiritual philosopher Ernest Holmes, promulgates a philosophy called Science of Mind.

The church currently has about 50,000 members and 250 congregations and study groups nationwide.

Holmes contended that God is not only in everything but is everything and that, therefore, man is divine. He taught that people can live fruitful and rewarding lives by consciously choosing loving thoughts and restructuring negative thought patterns.

Becoming a minister wasn't on Fitzpatrick's mind a decade ago when she first heard the Rev. Terry Cole Whitaker speak at a Church of Religious Science in Lajolla, Calif. Fitzpatrick was in private practice then as a licensed marriage, family, and child counselor.

"It was a place to refer my clients to, a path to teach them how to love themselves and others, and it supported the things I was doing for them," she said. "I decided to become a minister because I could reach more people."

Mormon professors forced to take religion seriously

By Kristen Moulton
The Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — Mormon professors who don't take their religion as seriously as their teaching and research may find they no longer have a job at Brigham Young University.

Mormon bishops and stake presidents have been told to monitor the spiritual worthiness of all BYU employees, a condition of employment now spelled out in writing.

The development is the latest in a yearlong effort by BYU's Board of Trustees, faculty and administration to establish a formal policy governing academic freedom at the university owned by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

The academic freedom document, issued in September, was to give faculty a map for navigating the sometimes rocky road between BYU's twin goals: to be a topflight university while upholding Mormon spiritual values.

In March, the board approved a revision in the conduct policy and a termination and grievance policy that mean Mormon employees must assure their local bishops that they pay 10 percent of their income in tithing, have a devotion to God and Christ, attend church and support the doctrine and leaders of the church.

Those are major requirements to obtain a "temple recommend," a card issued yearly to devout members so they can enter temples to perform sacred ceremonies.

Putting the notion into writing doesn't sit well with some faculty members.

"Almost always, codified rules are a bad idea. They don't buy you very much," said John Higgins, a computer science professor.

"This sort of monitoring stuff is just idiotic. It's ineffective. Even the KGB has problems doing this, and this is working with lay leaders."

The university, with its 1,400 full-time faculty members, 850 administrative employees and 1,300 staff workers, is small enough to handle problems on a case-by-case basis, Higgins said.

"You're not talking about the United States Army," he said.

David Wright, a math professor, said employees have always known they are "expected" to be "worthy-of-a-temple recommendation."

"I have no problem that certain standards should be maintained at BYU, but the way it worked in the past ... everyone was expected to have a temple recommend, but no one would ever dare you to show your temple recommend. And it worked just fine," Wright said.

"Most people do have them and the people who don't feel a little embarrassed by it," he said.

But BYU Provost Bruce Hafen said the faculty who studied academic freedom for several months saw it differently. There were many campus employees who were unaware they were expected to be temple-worthy so the custom was codified, he said.

The church leaders are to give Mormon BYU employees a "reasonable period of time" to meet standards of temple worthiness.

The policy applies even to those Mormon professors with continuing status, as BYU calls tenure.

Some 98 percent of BYU professors are Mormon.

Hafen noted that the church's right to require employees to be temple worthy was upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court in a 1987 case brought by an employee of church-owned Desert Gym. The church won the equal-employment-opportunity case.

Kuiken will hold seminary job

TWIN FALLS — The Rev. Rebecca Kuiken is the new director of communications for the San Francisco Theological Seminary.

Kuiken graduated from the University of Oregon and later received a master of divinity degree from the San Francisco Theological Seminary in 1985. She is a former Fulbright Scholar and Fund for Theological Education recipient. She has served the congregations of the Lafayette, Calif., and the First Presbyterian Church in Oakland, Calif. Kuiken has written articles for publications by the seminary and other denominations including "Chimes," "Pacific Theological Review," "Presbyterian Survey" and the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America "Celebrate" curriculum.

Kuiken and her husband, David Minehart, have two daughters, Jenna and Marika. She is the daughter of Bill and Edna Kuiken of Twin Falls.

Methodists schedule trout feed

HAGERMAN — The United Methodist Church, 270 E. Salmon, has planned a trout dinner for 5 to 8 p.m. Friday at the church. The menu features trout and includes a baked potato, roll and dessert. Cost is $5 for adults and $2.50 for children ages 6 to 12. Under-6-is-free. The public is invited.

Speaker blends drama, gospel

TWIN FALLS — Michael Reardon will present a dramatic proclamation of the Gospel of Mark 7 p.m. May 3 at St. Edward's Catholic Church, 162 Sixth Ave. E.

According to Reardon, he will proclaim the Gospel of Mark following the Jerusalem Bible text word for word from memory. Patrick Lane, director, designed special lighting and costuming to enhance the presentation.

A native of Alexandria, Mont., Reardon says he has committed the four gospels of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John to memory and that he proclaims them worldwide as his full-time work. Lane, program director and lighting artist, is from Morrill, Neb.

A reception to meet Reardon and Lane will be held after the performance.

Lutheran school enrolls pupils

EDEN — Students are now being accepted for enrollment for the 1993-94 school year at the Trinity Lutheran Church Early Education Center, 1602 E. 1100 S. Trinity's Early Education Program is operated as a self-supporting educational non-profit agency of the Trinity Lutheran Church. The goal is to provide opportunities and activities to help children have a healthy self-concept, which includes accepting their limitations and their God-given talents.

Tuition for the next school term will be $30 per month for preschool and $60 per month for kindergarten. A one-time registration fee for the year for materials used by the child will be $45 for preschool and $60 for kindergarten.

Interested parents or guardians are encouraged to call the church office at 825-5277 or Ruth Olson at 825-5289. Preschoolers must be 4 years old on or before Aug. 15, 1993, and kindergarten students must be 5 on or before Aug. 15, 1993.

Kindergarten will be held all day Mondays and Wednesdays and a half day on Fridays. Preschool will be on Tuesday and Thursday mornings. An afternoon class will be available if the morning class is full.

St. Edward's School plans sale

TWIN FALLS — The sixth-grade class at St. Edward's School has planned a yard sale to raise funds for its trip to Durango, Colo. The sale is set for May 1 in the parking lot at the parish hall. To donate items and have them picked up if necessary, call 734-6369.

Church to restore stained glass

GLENN'S FERRY — The Our Lady of Limmerick Church is celebrating its centennial. Parishioners and the parish council have taken on the task of saving the 13 stained-glass windows in the small brick church and restoring the 77-year-old leaded windows to their former beauty.

The restoration project will cost approximately $10,000, and the Diocese requires that $7,000 be raised before work can begin. Following a recent gift of $1,000 from the St. Anthony community in Wendell, the total of funds raised is $6,325, 1993.

The parish council has set up an account at the Idaho State Bank in Glenn's Ferry. Contributions should be made payable to the Our Lady of Limmerick Window Fund, in care of the Idaho State Bank, P.O. Box 909, Glenn's Ferry, ID 83623. A list of all gifts will be compiled and acknowledged.

Experts: Cults, religions can appear to be similar

By Victoria Lee
Dallas Morning News

DALLAS — A charismatic young man comes out of nowhere to preach a gospel that is heretical and scandalous, according to the established doctrines of the day. He asks his friends to give up all they have to follow him: home, family, worldly goods. For his sake, they endure privation, ridicule, even persecution.

Some ultimately die for refusing to renounce their beliefs.

Those words describe David Koresh — as well as the man whose reiteration he sometimes claims to be, Jesus Christ.

Few outside the Branch Davidian sect have likened Koresh to Christ. In certain respects, they appear to be opposites. But the similarity of their experiences illustrates how hard it can be to separate the spiritual wheat from the chaff — a bona fide religious movement from what is popularly called a cult.

"It's not an easy issue," said Philip Zimbaro, a Stanford University sociologist. "There are no clear-cut edges."

It's often said you can tell a cult by whether it exercises mind control over its adherents. But Zimbaro, who teaches a course on mind control, said even that is no litmus test.

"All religions want to control your mind," he said. "They all say, 'We want you to believe our way.'"

To some scholars, philosophical niceties merely ignore the practical reality that some — they would say many — people do suffer at the hands of what they call cults.

"Cults manipulate people in a special way," said Margaret Singer, an emeritus professor of psychology at the University of California at Berkeley.

"They court people to get them in, but once they're in, they're told that they are sinful and only the leader is pure."

Zimbaro said that to fully understand what he calls "totalistic groups," you must consider what they promise to followers as well as what they take away. Those benefits, not always readily available in the outside world, include status, a place and a function, security, friendship, acceptance and a leader who becomes a substitute parent.

It's a trade, Zimbaro said: "Freedom for security — and for lots of people that's a very attractive deal."

Throughout the ages, new sects have coalesced around magnetic personalities and rejected the culture that spawned them, said Dean Kelley, a semi-retired counselor on religious freedom for the National Council of Churches.

In many respects, he said, even the Branch Davidians are no different from thousands of fledgling religious movements all over the world.

"Their activities, their views, their willingness to make large sacrifices, even including the sacrifice of their lives, is typical," said Kelley.

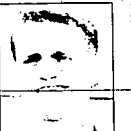

And although few religious sects amass military-style arsenals, most view the outside world with trepidation if not hostility — a feeling that the world frequently reciprocates.

Scholars troubled by fundamentalism

By George W. Cornell
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Scholars say the world, previously presumed advancing into an enlightened age of sheer rationalism free of religious throwbacks, has instead encountered a global storm of religious fundamentalism.

It has shocked modern secular states, overturned prior analyses and sent splintering tremors through societies around the Earth, according to an international team of experts.

"They say the unbroken, religion-linked, for-moral seems more everywhere — in biblical 'inerrancy' and Operation Rescue crusades in this country, Christian violence in Ireland, West Bank Jewish expansionism, Buddhist militancy in Sri Lanka, Christian-Muslim battling in ex-communist states, Muslim absolutism in Iran and Sudan and Hindu rampages in India."

"We have hurricane-force winds of the spirit, blowing in unpredictable places," says the Rev. Martin E. Marty, noted church historian and editor of a massive, multivolume examination of the rash of modern fundamentalisms.

"No one ever foresaw this a few years ago," he added — in an interview. "It inevitably will take down a lot of things in its path."

Although the study doesn't deal with the Branch Davidians who died in a fire at their compound outside Waco, Texas, they are among the many sometimes fanatic fundamentalisms current in the world.

Marty of the University of Chicago and historian-research associate R. Scott Appleby are directing a monumental fundamentalism project sponsored by the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.

With more than 100 scholars of various specialties contributing to the undertaking, three large volumes so far have been issued by the University of Chicago Press, with three more due in the next 18 months.

"Fighting back" is what the various fundamentalisms are described as doing to resist the overwhelming, modern tide of secularizing influences seen as threatening ethnic-religious identities and beliefs.

Traditional orthodoxes, with values based in religious teachings, are finding that those values are undermined by the push to modernize societies according to the "Western" model, Appleby said.

"It's not simply a revival of religion that was dead and is now coming back. Fundamentalists see it as a crisis in which normal procedure must be suspended and they must fight back or their tradition will be lost."

He said those behind some of the movements enlist religion as "a very vital and rich resource for mobilizing people," recognizing it as useful "for getting political goods" and claiming "God's blessing."

However, motivations and methods of the various fundamentalisms differ widely. While some are seen as exploiting religion for power, most are considered committed to religion, yet distorting or narrowing it to defend it.

"We underestimated the attachment people have to religion," Marty said. "When you need an explanation for what's going wrong, or need a motivation for what you hope goes right, nothing beats calling your cause God's cause."

Not long ago, he said, the world was regarded as moving into ever more inclusive unity, characterized by such terms as "global village," "interfaith," "ecumenical" and "racial integration."

"Every image was toward the center," he added. "Now it's just the opposite. It's out toward the margins, the edges. In that chaos, fundamentalists are more zealous and more efficient organizers than others."

"You don't go to the barricades ready to die unless you're sure God is counting on you. You're people who can't tolerate ambiguity, paradox or compromise, that you win some, lose some and God takes care of himself."

Martin E. Marty, left, and R. Scott Appleby are directing a monumental 'Fundamentalism Project' sponsored by the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.

Fundamentalists say the Great Satan, the devil, anti-religion and the secular humanists will overwhelm us and will oversupplant all of God's purposes unless we become God's instruments."

"The industrialized West 'unwittingly had thought the rest of the world eventually would think the way we thought and that religion would go away or turn very moderate,' but just the reverse has happened."

"We lived off the enlightenment and thought everything would be reasonable and rational and that our investments in science would pay off," but events have shattered that vision, he said.

"Now the West is uncertain. All kinds of forces are tilting the vacuum. ... Everyone started going into their own cause, women, gays,

"Here, not many get killed, but they hate each other. The lucky thing about America is we live in such a mixed up pattern. In the rest of the world, groups are mostly on one side of the hill or the other. It's not hard to see who to shoot."

"Here, you don't know where to shoot. Shoot a feminist, it might be my wife. Shoot a Hispanic, it might be my foster daughter. Shoot a Jew, it might be my colleague. Shoot a gay, it might be a best friend."

Outside the West, "the rest of the world never made the move to our style of rationality" and church-state separation. "Muslims' didn't, Buddhists, Sikhs and Hindus didn't."

Controversial church sets up shop in Idaho

SPRIT LAKE — A controversial Christian church has moved its headquarters from Oregon to northern Idaho.

The Bride of Christ recently bought property in Bonner County and opened its business, Alpha Construction, in nearby Spirit Lake.

The church's founder, Pastor Thomas Smith Jr., pleaded guilty in 1966 to rape and incest charges involving one of his daughters. He spent time for those crimes in a California mental hospital, and Smith said he founded the Bride of Christ after "finding Jesus" there. The church, founded in Las Vegas, later was investigated for alleged sexual abuse of children there, but no charges were ever filed.

The Bride of Christ organization moved to Oregon in 1984 and built a church in Canyonville. In 1988, residents there were outraged when Smith invited convicted California rapist Lawrence Singleton to join their church.

Singleton had been released from prison after serving time for raping a girl and chopping off her arms.

But generally, people who lived in the Oregon town where the Bride of Christ was based said members are hard-working and caused no problems.

Morality in danger?

By George W. Cornell
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Charles W. "Chuck" Colson, a man who has ridden a symbolic rock from high to low and back to a peak again, sees the country as plunging from high moral ground toward faithless ruin.

"We are stripping religion away from public life to our great and everlasting peril," he said. "It is the most self-destructive process the nation could embark on."

"We are trying to erase the indispensable role of religion in informing the moral consensus by which civilized society has survived."

Colson once hit bottom himself, spiritually and physically, a cynical White House counsel sent to prison. But he has regained a height, an acclaimed, worldwide ministry in behalf of prisoners.

As winner of the $1 million 1993 Templeton Prize for Progress in Religion, the previously imprisoned "hatchet man" for President Nixon in the Watergate scandal, said he was reclaimed by God's "amazing grace" to serve his truth.

Besides building Prison Fellowship into an international network for mending lives of prisoners and their families and seeking prison reforms, Colson also has turned out a dozen books on contemporary culture and faith.

"We live in a post-Christian age today," he said in an interview. "We are trying to become a city of man without a city of God. We're stripping away our religious roots."

Noting that the late world historian Will Durant concluded that no nation in history has survived without a strong moral code informed by religion, Colson said this erasive basis is being destroyed in the United States.

"We have embarked into a 'brave new world' without moral directions, of values erased from teaching, of tolerance elevated above truth, of the expunging of the last vestiges of religious symbols in the country," he said.

He cited a number of prohibited religious mottos or art from public buildings, parks and inscriptions of banned carols and carols and Ten Commandments from schools, the elimination of group prayers at ceremonies and events.

He said movies and TV entertainment, now a pervasive influence, usually treat religion as nutty or non-existent, and it is marginalized or disparaged in other media, although 43 percent of adults attend worship each week.

The aversion also prevails in the academic atmosphere of most secular universities, he said, and has reached the point that professors risk losing their jobs if they let it be known they are Christian believers.

"God never intended us to be spiritual lone rangers," he said. "That's one of the curses of modern evangelicals, their rugged, individualistic, entrepreneurial approach to Christianity. It's an abomination."

He tackles the problem in his latest book, "The Body," published by World, stressing the essential unity of faith. "We have to see ourselves as part of one holy, catholic, apostolic church, as one body," he said.

Colson, who spent seven months in prison for obstructing justice, founded Prison Fellowship in 1976. Based in Reston, Va., its fulltime staff of 280 and about 50,000 volunteers work at 800 U.S. state and federal prisons, and has branches in 54 other countries.

Believers want their pastors to be different

By George W. Cornell
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Most religious people think they should apply their faith to their work and say they do so to varying degrees, a study finds. But they don't get much clergy guidance about it.

They'd like more of it. These are among conclusions of a study by the Chicago-based Center for Ethics and Corporate Policy, involving questionnaires completed by 1,529 members of 158 congregations — Protestant, Roman Catholic and Jewish.

"There is clear evidence that dealing more with work issues would be a smart move for the clergy," says sociologist Stephen Hart of the University of Wisconsin in Milwaukee who analyzed the data.

"It's something there's a demand for that's not being sufficiently satisfied," he said in a telephone interview. Protestant congregations included in the study were of five mainline denominations and two theologically conservative denominations. Besides the completed questionnaires, three-hour, in-depth interviews were conducted with a diversified set of 47 church members.

"Some complained that the clergy don't understand much about business and are somewhat scornful of the world of profit-making," Hart said, but added that the extent of that feeling was not measured statistically.

However, it showed up often in the personal interviews, says the director of the Chicago center, Steven Priest. He said business people tend to feel that clergy are either biased against business or ignorant of its realities.

"To be helpful, clergy need to understand problems of business and the workplace," Priest said. He said business people are searching for ways to integrate their faith with their work world.

"They're having a hard time doing it," he said. "They're looking for answers or at least suggestions from religious institutions, but the institutions are mostly failing at it."

Commenting on the findings, the Rev. Joseph Wagan, head of the ministry division of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, said "building bridges between the church and the world is very important both for clergy and laity" but many pastors "don't have time to spend nurturing that relationship."

"Most pastors are concerned about keeping the life of the congregation vital," he said, and "do not see enabling the ministry of lay people through work" as a primary pastoral activity.

In the responses, satisfaction with congregational handling of work issues varied from up to 100 percent where clergy dealt often with the subject in sermons to 25 percent when they never dealt with it.

Family members were found to be the main sources with whom work problems were discussed. Coworkers and supervisors ranked next.

Far below came congregational sources — member friends, clergy and congregational groups. Members of one of the two conservative Protestant denominations, the Evangelical Covenant Church, showed the strongest integration of faith and work. This contradicted a common stereotype that theologically conservative Christians are likely to have a kind of other-worldly faith separating it from everyday life. In fact, they most closely connected faith with their work lives.

People feared fires from dry grass

"This would be the perfect marriage: A successful man, one who makes more money than his wife can spend. And a successful woman, one who can find such a man." That's our Love and War man's notion. It's among the early commentaries of the experienced actress Lana Turner.

Bob Diener keeps Jackson Hole tram scaling spectacular heights

TETON-VILLAGE, Wyo. (AP) — For all the excitement a trip in the aerial tram at the Jackson Hole Ski Area provokes, operating and maintaining the tram is routine, perhaps even mundane.

Although it passes over spectacular cliffs and offers sweeping views, the tram always follows the same route, usually at the same pace.

That's why there's a little more excitement on the tram dock and in the mechanics' shop when it's inspection time — an event that occurs only twice a year. That's when mechanics, who routinely impress tourists by riding on the tram's roof, get to go one step farther.

During inspection they ascend 4,139 feet up Rendezvous Mountain while standing on the highest part of the moving cable car — the wheel carriage. As it zooms along on the 2½-mile steel track ropes, an inspector must perch on top to operate "an electromagnetic inspection device and to make visual checks. Until recently that airy spot has been the exclusive domain of the Rocky Mountain guru of wire rope — a half-blind, broken down Utah cowboy named Bob Diener.

It's early morning in the heart of the base station building as operator Lee Kinze runs Car 2 down from the mountain station. The 720-horsepower electric motor and bull wheels whip in the tram's haul rope with a steady hum. In a dark corner, the door to the outside world opens, silhouetting a tall figure bent over a cable.

Bob Diener, 72, hobbles in, his white beard breaking into the light. A black patch over his glasses' right lens draws some of the darkness along.

"He is regarded by everyone in the wire rope industry as one of the best," says Dean Munn, assistant supervisor of lift operations. "One of the best splicers and one of the best inspectors."

Diener, who plans to retire at the end of April, is wearing the accoutrements of a high-wire mechanic and inspector — insulated Carhairs and a wide safety belt and sling, the end of which has a big hook he can clip to a tower or tram car. His voice is gravelly and low, and it carries an authority honed in the windy cirques of the mountains. His bad back would keep most men on the ground. His blind right eye rubs him of the depth perception critical to tower climbing and cable walking.

But up at Tower Three, where the tram climbs over cliffs at a dizzying angle, the crutch leans against the inside of the tram car, abandoned like a lost pair of skis. Thirty feet above, Diener clammers across the rigging like a sure-footed mountain goat. In a moment he is perched in the open air, riding the top of the wheel carriage with God's view of the track cables.

The ash from his stogie, the thing he clenches tightest, drifts 230 feet to the ground.

"I'm a cowboy," Diener explains. "As a kid I broke horses."

He grew to appreciate the handswork of his profession — in the craftsmanship that went into saddles, chaps, bridles, lariats and reins.

"I've done lots of braiding," Diener says — bridles, reins, and so on. "I've always liked rope."

Rope was one of Diener's trades when, as a young man, he began working for a manufacturer of mining equipment in Salt Lake City. Hemp rope was spliced into slings, but for the mining requirements in 1955 it wasn't "always strong enough."

"We need some wire," Diener's boss, Zane Doyle, said one day. "Splicers were hard to find," Diener says. So he went to work splicing a wire rope. "They practically made me do it. They knew I wouldn't quit till I learned."

Wire rope is laid — twisted together — from a series of wire strands. A typical structure might be a 6x25 — six strands wound around one another, each strand made up of 25 wires laid together in their own twisted groups.

On the tram, the four separate track cables are each 44 millimeters in diameter. The 23 outermost "profiles" strands are each 6 mm wide and made flat to create a smooth ride for the tram's rubber wheels. Then sides are tugged by one another by a Z pattern — they fit side by side like tongue and groove carpentry.

Inside this lock coil construction are laid 73 round wires. The cables weigh seven pounds a foot. Each is 13,200 feet long. They are manufactured by Fater & Romanshorn, Switzerland.

Back in 1955 the young cowboy struggled with this obstinate, stiff new medium. At the end of the first day, the wire was winning.

"I couldn't get the marriage," Diener says. "My arms were all swollen up." He thought over the task that night: "I'd sweat-back the next morning and did it the right way."

"That started it," Diener says of his lifelong work. He built his own tools — madsnips and such. He practiced wire rope splicing for a few years. "I picked everybody who knew about it," he says. "They were few and far between. When I had an eye-spa good enough to sell, I began to sell slings."

The RW Diener Co. was born. In his teenage and Diener made slings and chokers for lumber. Ski areas began his call him. He learned on the job.

"I beat it all out on my own," Diener says. "I didn't have any help nobody to turn to. I made every mistake you could."

Diener's eyes starting going bad in 1969.

"I was holding a chair from Montana and my right eye went out," Diener says. In two days, sight from that eye was gone and his left eye was fading. Diener underwent several surgeries for his detached retinas.

When the doctors were done with a winter's worth of operations, Diener says, "I had to go back to work. He was sent off to school to learn how to read and type Braille."

Diener's first marriage was on the rocks. He refused to learn Braille, saying he was going back to work instead. He met his second wife, Bobbie, who was then his nurse, and visited in his left eye began to improve. In 1970 Diener got back on the ski towers above Salt Lake City at Alta. Bobbie has been his constant professional companion ever since. "It takes two people," he says of his job.

On their last inspection of the Jackson Hole tram, Bob and Bobbie sat on the hip. She riding in the cab below with the instrument readouts. The tram stops for a visual inspection of a nick in the rope. The Wyoming forest rake over the crest of the 10,450-foot peak, swaying the tram car gently.

The carriage falls left and right, a distinctly unsettling sensation. The old man crawls out on the lines anyway. He gets his good eye down within 6 inches of the flaw. Then, to block the glare from the snow, he lets go with one hand and shields his face.

"I was strong," Diener says of his earlier days. "Nobody could outwork me."

Except time, perhaps. Time and wire rope.

"It's been damn hard work. My back's blown out. I've had troubles. But those trouble spots helped me the most. That's where I learned."

Diener's going to miss the tower clammers and rope walkers who work in his business, a close knit clan of unassuming men and women.

"They're generally not wealthy people," he says. "They're honest people doing what they have to do."

Bob and Bobbie will come to their farm in Monto, Colo., ranch with their hognuts and hoves. Diener will remain occupied — in time stretching way instead of handing it. "I've got a lot of fence to build," he says.

Tundra swans still dying from mine wastes

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — Nearly 100 years after lead-poisoned swans began showing up east of Coeur d'Alene, the birds still are dying in large numbers. Officials say the problem still is the same, mining waste.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is studying the problem, but officials say they don't have the answers.

At least 31 dead tundra swans have been recovered this spring from lakes in southeastern Kootenai County.

The federal agency's laboratory in Wisconsin examined 13 of the carcasses and preliminary tests indicated that seven of the swans died from eating lead-laden plants. The other carcasses haven't been analyzed yet, said Jay Watson of the Fish and Wildlife Service in Portland.

Between 20 and 200 tundra, or whistling, swans die every spring, which is the migration season, in an area contaminated by mining waste that flowed down the Coeur d'Alene River.

It apparently settled in the wetlands and lowlands favored by several species of waterfowl, federal officials indicate.

Watson and other agency officials say the number of dead swans found in the area are just a fraction of the actual death toll. The area is too large and inaccessible to scout, complicating studies and the development of protection plans, he said.

Several years ago, the agency tried, with limited success, to use airplanes to scare swans from the area.

Fish and Wildlife Service studies identified the problem 29 years ago. A 1961 study and waterfowl have died from lead originating from Coeur d'Alene area mining and smelting since at least the early 1900s.

"Dip otts of tundra swans from lead poisoning are still occurring every year in the Coeur d'Alene River system during spring spring migration," a 1991 study said.

Other agency studies indicate that great blue herons, osprey, Canada geese and ducks captured alive and then released have elevated blood lead levels, said Larry Bliss, research-biologist at Corvallis, Ore.

"Waterfowl seems to be most susceptible to this sort of heavy metal contamination. It's super toxic," he said.

Lead kills swans by paralyzing their digestive systems, keeping nourishment out of their stomachs. Lead also harms their brains and reproductive systems.

The dead swans typically are emaciated and their internal organs discolored.

"This is just simply another example of the same poison that's continuing to flow down the river," said Bob Bostwick, spokesman for the Coeur d'Alene Indian Tribe.

"It has been flowing for over 100 years. This is a creeping, moving poison."

There are very good reasons to be afraid of the dark.

Commissioner's list down to '40 or 50'

Selig says choice will take time, denies owners are 'dragging their feet'

The Associated Press.

ROSEMONT, Ill. — While acknowledging the process may seem too slow to satisfy critics in and out of the game, the head of baseball's Executive Council says a search committee has pared the list of candidates to succeed fired commissioner Fay Vincent to 40 or 50.

"Look, you can talk about pace, but you have to remember where we were last fall," Bud Selig said, alluding to Vincent's ouster.

At a brief news conference following a two-hour meeting, Selig also denied that the owners were dragging their feet on a new labor agreement, a new television contract and schedules for the 1993 and 1995 seasons, which could be radically altered by reassignment of divisions, expanded playoffs and inter-league games.

Owners often have come under fire from the media and occasionally from one another for referring these issues and others to committees that have so far circulated their recommendations only in private. One departing owner who demanded anonymity today said he was last month leaving Phoenix (site of the previous owners' meeting). The pace has definitely slowed on almost everything.

But when that sentiment was raised with Selig, he responded: "On the contrary. The time for the committees to come to fruition is in the next two to three months. And you're going to see a lot of things happen."

Selig said the owners' search committee, working with a Dallas-based consulting firm, had trimmed the list of candidates from about 150 to 40 or 50 during meetings here. The firm is expected to do preliminary screening and pare the list again by half before the owners' search committee would conduct face-to-face interviews.

Bill Bartholomay, chairman of the board of the Atlanta Braves and head of the search committee, said applicants for the commissioner's job did not fall conveniently into categories. In response to a question, he did say that slightly more than 10 percent of the candidates were minorities.

Highly touted cager signs with Trojans

LOS ANGELES — Claude Green of Dunbar High in Washington, D.C., has signed a national letter of intent to attend Southern Cal and play basketball for the Trojans, the school announced Friday.

Green, a 6-foot-3 guard, averaged 18 points, five rebounds, four assists and three steals in leading Dunbar to a 33-1 record last season.

"Claude is an outstanding outside shooter," USC coach George Raveling said in a press release. "With the graduation of our top 3-point shooters, we felt we had to bring in someone that had good range and Claude fits that description."

Salt Lake Trappers make move to Pocatello official

BILLINGS, Mont. — Pocatello will be the new home of the former Salt Lake City Trappers of the Pioneer League, league officials announced Friday.

The decision dashed the hopes of officials for the Montana cities of Missoula and Bozeman, and Ogden, Utah. Each wanted to land the team, made homeless earlier this year.

Pocatello was chosen over the other cities because it has a stadium, Ralph Nelles, Pioneer League president, said in a news release. The other hopefuls would have required "large sums of up front money to play," Nelles said.

The decision to place the team in Pocatello comes just one day after the city requested consideration as a site.

Kentucky griddler dies after suffering bullet wound

LEXINGTON, Ky. — University of Kentucky football player Ted Presley died Friday, about 36 hours after sustaining a gunshot wound to the head during a game of Russian roulette, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Presley, 23, a junior walk-on from Hopkinsville, died about 9 a.m. MDT at University of Kentucky Medical Center, spokeswoman Mary Collier said.

Sullivan calmed his nerves again Friday, overcoming more windy conditions to post five birdies against one bogey on the 6,950-yard layout. He said he feels confident heading into the weekend atop the leader board, aiming for the $270,000 top prize.

Magic takes 1st step to owning NBA franchise

The Associated Press

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — For years, Magic Johnson has made it clear he wants to own an NBA team some day. Now, he's taking a step in that direction.

Johnson, reportedly offered the Los Angeles Lakers' coaching job next season, is part of a group hoping to obtain an expansion franchise in Toronto, it was learned Friday.

The former Lakers star is part of a group that plans to pay the NBA a non-refundable $100,000 for an official application for an expansion team, a source close to the situation who requested anonymity told The Associated Press.

It was reported Thursday that Labatt

The Palestra Group, one of two Toronto groups vying for an NBA expansion franchise, announced that both John Labatt Ltd. and the CIBC would own one-third of the team.

The NBA's expansion committee will meet Tuesday in New York to review the progress toward adding two teams for the 1995-96 season, but no decision will be made, according to Brian McIntyre, the league's chief spokesman. Only last Sunday, Johnson made his preference known.

"I want to own a team, that's my whole goal," he told reporters after the Magic Johnson Roundball Classic high school all-star game in Auburn Hills, Mich. "Hopefully in the next couple of weeks, we'll be able to say something about that."

Toronto might not be an ideal location for a team owned by a group of which Johnson is a part, but perhaps he has no other choice.

Johnson, 33, intended to make a comeback before this season began after sitting out one year after his initial retirement on Nov. 7, 1991, and thus become the first known HIV-positive athlete to compete in professional sports. But four days before the start of the season, he announced his re-retirement after hearing some players felt uncomfortable about competing against someone with the

Sullivan finds gratitude on Greensboro greens

The Associated Press

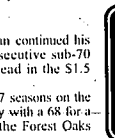

GREENSBORO, N.C. — Mike Sullivan continued his solid play Friday, posting his first consecutive sub-70 rounds of the year to grab a two-shot lead in the $1.5 million Greater Greensboro Open.

Sullivan, who has won only twice in 17 seasons on the PGA tour, followed up his 67-of-Thursday with a 68 for a 9-under-par score through 36-holes on the Forest Oaks Country Club course.

The former University of Florida golfer had only two top-10 finishes last season and his best this year has been a tie for 23rd after struggling with back problems and playing in only six events.

"I don't think there is anything you can really do to make yourself play better other than to just 'convince' yourself you have to be patient," said Sullivan, whose tour wins came in 1980 and 1989. "In the past that has been my drawback; I've been very impatient."

Sullivan calmed his nerves again Friday, overcoming more windy conditions to post five birdies against one bogey on the 6,950-yard layout. He said he feels confident heading into the weekend atop the leader board, aiming for the $270,000 top prize.

Seniors - B10

"I'm not going to make any predictions that I'm going to do the same thing again, but based on the first two days ... if I can keep my wrist about me I feel like I will have a good chance."

Along at 7-under was 24-year-old Dudley Hart, who had a spectacular bogey-free round of 65, matching the tournament's best score. Jeff Sluman, who shot a 78 Thursday, also had a 65 after posting a 30 on his first nine holes.

"I hit the ball about 500 percent better than I did yesterday," said Hart, who also attended Florida. "Yesterday, I probably didn't hit four or five solid shots all around. My putter saved me and I was fortunate to get out with even par."

After carding that 72, Hart turned in a 5-under-par 31 on the front side Friday and talk of Davis Love III's record-setting 62 here last year was bantered about.

Hart, who has missed six of 11 cuts this season, cooled off slightly on the back side to shoot a 2-under 34.

Lennie Clements, who led during much of the first round before bogeying the final two holes, had a 68 and was alone at 6-under.

"You could conceivably bogey almost every hole out here with the way the wind is blowing and the way the greens are rolling," Clements said. "You just have to take a hole at a time. There is no hole out here you fear making a 12 on like maybe a TPC course, but they are all real solid holes."

Fiji native Vijay Singh was another shot back at 5-under after a 67 and was joined by 1990 Greensboro winner Steve Elkington, who shot a 68.

Paul Azinger, who has played well here recently, including a third-place finish last year and fourth in 1990, was in a group at 6-under. He shot a 67 on Friday, Azinger sixth on the money list with more than $417,000, finished second on this season and third three times.

"I've been in the last group four times on Sunday and shook the winner's hand all four times," Azinger said.

Tom Purtzer, who shared the 18-hole lead with Sullivan, shot a 77 to fall back into the field at 144.

Fred Couples, seventh on the money list, was the biggest name to miss the cut, finishing at 10-over after rounds of 78 and 76.

Cravens gets lesson in sensitivity

Comments draw attention to new U. of I hoop mentor

MOSCOW (AP) — New University of Idaho men's basketball coach Joe Cravens has received some informal sensitivity training since inadvertently outraging some people on the Moscow campus.

After the April 8 news conference announcing his appointment to replace the departed Larry Busath, Cravens was asked about Vanderbilt University's former Idaho assistant Hugh Watson did not get the head coaching job.

"It's a tough business. It life was fair, there'd be no crippled children or ugly women," Cravens told a reporter.

University of Idaho President Elisabeth Zaiser

Said Wednesday that she and athletic director Pete Liske were "instantly aghast" by the comments reported in the Lewiston Morning Tribune the next day.

"It was more serious than insensitive even," said Zaiser, adding that the former University of Utah assistant had been under a lot of pressure. Although Cravens did not realize immediately how offensive the remark was, Zaiser said Liske repeated the comment back to him and he eventually understood his mistake.

Zaiser said Cravens then wanted to apologize and do what he could to patch things up with anyone he might have offended.

Liske and Kathy Lark, athletic assistant athletic director, called together a group of campus leaders so Cravens could apologize.

The group included University Center Director Betty Thomas, women's basketball coach Elaine Turner, Administrative Assistant Carol Hahn, Associate Dean Diane Thomas, and Minority Student Programs Coordinator Dianne Allen.

"By the end of the day he went through five years of learning," Zaiser said.

Cravens planned to meet again with some members of the group for continued sensitivity training.

Young calls Montana situation 'bizarre'

Orlando Sentinel

LAKE BRUNA VISTA Fla. "Bizarre" was quarterback Steve Young's summation of the strange actions of the San Francisco 49ers before trading for Montana to Kansas City earlier this week.

Until Friday, Young had been reluctant to make any comment about the 49ers' surprising announcement that Montana could enter this season as the club's starting quarterback. His 49ers' sports director that Young was named the NFL's Most Valuable Player last year.

"Amazing to think you can have that kind of year and lose your starting job in April," Young said, "but Joe has moved to Kansas City, so all that is behind us now."

Practice at Walt Disney World for Saturday's taping of the NFL Quarterback Challenge, a made-for-TV event, Young stressed he is not substituted about anything that happened last week, nor will the 49ers' unbecomingly have any effect on how he performs this fall.

"A very dramatic weekend," Young said, "but the truly intense moments come in the fall, not on a Sunday in April. I really didn't react that much when it happened and need no reaction now because it's over and that's the only real change that has come out of this."

Joe is some. Despite what you may have heard, I learned from Joe and will miss him. We were competitive but we were part of the same family.

Young was with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers in 1985 and '86, a part of 2 1/4 seasons. As dismal as those years were, Young now says they have helped him deal with problems in San Francisco.

"Being in Tampa made a huge difference in how I handled everything after '86," he said, "I learned by what didn't happen there that it takes total effort and devotion."

"In Tampa I had to like the game because there was little else, but now I've learned to really love pro football, and that makes the outside distractions easier to handle."

Young, 31, said he has never become cynical but that he is now a long way from being naive.

"Starting with the L.A. Express of the United States Football League and then Tampa Bay, I've just about seen it all when it comes to the business of football. There's little that surprises me now."

"Asked if he would be surprised if the 49ers traded up in Sunday's college draft to get a rookie quarterback—Young smiled and said, "I'm sure that's just a rumor, but check with me on Monday."

'Retired' Munoz signs with Buccaneers

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — An aching body told Anthony Munoz it was time to leave the NHL. The opportunity to pick his employer and earn the kind of salary offensive linemen are commanding on the open market lured him back.

Munoz

The perennial Pro Bowl tackle for the Cincinnati Bengals ended his brief retirement Friday, signing a one-year contract with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers. Terms of the deal, negotiated without an agent, were not disclosed. Munoz earned $950,000 last season and reportedly was seeking at least $1.5 million, plus performance bonuses, from the Bucs.

"It's something we're happy with, and we'll move on from here," said Munoz, accompanied by wife Dee Dee.

Generally considered as one of the best linemen to ever play the game, Munoz spent 13 seasons with the Bengals. He appeared in the Pro Bowl for the first time in 1981 and earned selection 11 consecutive years before shoulder and knee injuries sidelined him for eight games last season.

He announced his retirement in December, but reconsidered this spring after watching the salaries for offensive linemen soar once teams started competing to sign unrestricted free agents.

"I'd be lying if I said, 'No, the money has nothing to do with it,'" Munoz said Thursday after passing a physical and beginning contract negotiations with Bucs vice president Rich McKay.

"Initially, it was just a matter of choice to go play where you want to play. For 13 years, it was basically: 'You've got to play here or you don't play the game.' All of this kind of started before all the salaries were printed. But then the salaries came out, and maybe that's when folks got a little more serious."

Tampa Bay's ownership began after a telephone conversation between Sam Wyche, who coached the lineman for eight of his 13 seasons in Cincinnati, and Munoz a few weeks ago.

Wyche, who coached his second season with the Bucs called to ask him to participate in a clinic in Tampa. During the conversation, Munoz casually mentioned that the San Diego Chargers were interested in bringing him out of retirement.

Talks with the Chargers failed to produce an agreement, and Munoz turned his attention to Tampa Bay, which has an offensive system similar to the one Cincinnati used under Wyche.

"We saw it was a good fit," Munoz said, clutching a copy of the Bucs' playbook.

"The main thing was making it through the physical. Knowing we had the green light to head and talk" contract, Munoz said. "Now, we'll just take it year at a time."

Although Munoz primarily has been a left tackle — the same position played by Paul Gruber, Tampa Bay's best offensive lineman — he is willing to accept a backup role, even play right tackle or guard with the Bucs.

"I'll play anywhere they need me," he said.

Talks with Munoz fueled speculation that the Bucs may try to trade Gruber, the unsigned free agent who has been designated as Tampa Bay's franchise player. But Wyche said there are no plans to get rid of the durable tackle, who hasn't missed an offensive play in five NFL seasons.

Laoretti takes early Muratec lead

FRISCO, Texas (AP) — U.S. Senior Open champion Larry Laoretti overcame tough conditions to emerge with the first round lead Friday at the $500,000 Muratec Reunion Pro Am at Stonebrae Country Club.

Amid winds measured between 35 and 45 mph by the National Weather Service, Laoretti finished with a 2-under 70, two strokes ahead of Don January and Gene Littler.

He was the only pro in the 78-player field to break even par 72 at the 6,737-yard course.

Laoretti emerged with the lead on the strength of an opening round that included three birdies and one bogey.

Laoretti, 53, said he of only five players to break Stonebrae's 411-yard, par-4 15th hole, which played to the highest scoring average on the Senior PGA Senior Tour last season (4.675 strokes per play).

After holing a 40-foot par putt at No. 17, Laoretti knocked a 176-yard approach shot to within four feet of the flag with a 3-iron at No. 18. He made the birdie putt.

The former club pro from Mahopac, N.Y., took the lead when Bob Murphy injured his back while taking a double-bogey on the par-4 14th.

Murphy said he felt pain in his lower back while hitting his third shot from a bunker. Murphy took double-bogey, double-bogey, bogey, birdie and double-bogey over his final five holes to finish at 2-over.

Tom Wargo chips out of the rough on the 14th hole on the first round of the Muratec Reunion seniors tour Friday.

Wrigley of the West may become reality by 1995

MESA, Ariz. (AP) — Wrigley Field West is to be built by the spring of 1995, Chicago Cubs general manager Larry Himes says a replica of Wrigley Field will be built here in the next two years to replace the HoHoKan Park and serve as the team's spring training home.

Himes said the new ballpark will be "an exact duplicate of our Wrigley Field — to the T — on a smaller scale, of course. But we want to duplicate every crack and every crevice, from every flag to every piece of ivy."

"We want to have the most unique spring-training ballpark in all of baseball, and in this sense, it will be very unique," Himes added.

HoHoKan Park seats 8,963 and every spring training game usually is a sellout. Himes said the new stadium will seat about 12,500 — about 26,000 fewer than the real Wrigley Field, which was built in 1914 and is the third-oldest park in the major leagues.

However, Himes said the replica likely will include a "bleacher hump" section, just like the real Wrigley.

Himes said he came up with the idea a year ago and the team owners, the Tribune Co., liked it.

"It makes sense to me," he said. "Not only will we get to start playing in almost the same ballpark 16 to 15 games before we get to our own in Chicago, but the fun interest is going to be incredible. People will travel for miles just to come to see 'Wrigley Field.' I have no idea why other teams haven't tried this before. It seems like a natural, doesn't it?"

Himes said no name has been chosen for the new stadium yet.

Mesa-Assistants city manager Mike Hutchinson said the project will cost $10-million to $15 million.

He said an architectural firm already is drawing layout ideas for the stadium and surrounding practice facilities and several sites, including HoHoKan Park, are being considered. Mesa will cover one-third of the cost through a bond issue. The rest may be covered by a rental car interchange that funds the Maricopa County Stadium District.

District officials already have earmarked at least $5.5 million for the project, Hutchinson said.

"We've had some additional general discussions with them and have advised them that it now will be a bigger project," Hutchinson said. "We're not terribly worried about the costs. We feel the commitment is there from the Stadium District and the county Board of Supervisors."

"They are well aware that the Cubs are the linchpin of the Cactus League. They not only draw well at home, but at every Arizona stadium they play in. Every team in the Cactus League benefits significantly because of the Chicago Cubs."

Hutchinson said Mesa wants to sign a multiyear agreement with the Cubs that will keep the team here for at least another 20 years.

Himes said HoHoKan Park and the team's practice facility at nearby Frick Park no longer are acceptable as spring training sites, especially when other teams are having new multimillion-dollar complexes built or significant face lifts done to their existing facilities.

"We bring in more money than any team in the Phoenix area and I think that speaks for itself," Himes said. "We just want a situation where we have all the things we need and we're not the odd man out."

Chisox sign 'Spanky' to minor-league pact

CHICAGO (AP)

The Chicago White Sox pitcher agreed to a two-year contract behind the plate on Friday, signing Mike LaValliere to a minor league contract after the Pittsburgh Pirates dumped him earlier this month.

The White Sox have been going with Ron Karkovick, and they also have 48-year old Carlton Fisk, who started the season only 25 games shy of breaking Bob Boone's record of 2,225 major league games caught.

"At some time we may have to go with a third catcher," general manager Ron Schaefer said. "We are limited with only Karkovick and Fisk. If we use one as a pinch-hitter, we are down to only one catcher."

The Pirates are still responsible for most of LaValliere's guaranteed $4.05 million salary through next year. The White Sox have to pay the 32-year-old veteran only the minimum salary of $109,000.

"Right now we plan to send him to Sarasota where he can play himself into shape and get some extra hitting on," Schaefer said. "We will activate him down there next week."

LaValliere, a lifetime .269 hitter who batted .256 last season, is seen as an excellent job of calling a game and handling a pitching staff," Schaefer said.

There was no comment from the team on what "Spanky" LaValliere's presence might mean for Fisk, who had an accumulation contract dispute with management before the season.

LaValliere said he knows nothing about the White Sox's plans for Fisk.

"I'm not the guy making the decisions there," LaValliere said. "All I know is I thought long and hard about this and felt Chicago was the best place for me."

LaValliere contract will pay him $2.15 million this season and $1.9 million in 1994.

LaValliere still was smarting from his release on April 11.

"I'm not sure why I was released," he said. "Maybe it was because I criticized the team over the winter for not signing Doug Diabek. He was a good friend of mine and we both have the same agent. From where I stood, I thought the Pirates botched it."
