Warehouse area renewal target

By Phil Sahn
Times-News writer

Blighted district in Twin Falls could generate fresh growth

TWIN FALLS—The city's blighted warehouse district might sprout new businesses and affordable housing in a few years.

The City Council has OK'd a plan to incorporate the district into an existing redevelopment area, meaning the Twin Falls Urban Renewal Agency can apply for funds to acquire land and raze decrepit buildings. Eventually, parcels could be sold to businesses and developers.

The council will decide next Monday whether to form an advisory group to look at the long-term possibilities for the area. Mayor Howard Allen already asked nine city residents to serve on the group.

Economic Development Director Dave McAlindin said the district on the city's south edge near Rock Creek Canyon would make a "classic urban renewal project." He urged the council to hire a professional to develop the best plan for the area.

"It is critical to start off with a good plan," he said.

Up to $500,000 in Community Development Block Grant money might be available to acquire land, raze buildings and start other work in the area.

Mayor Howard Allen said work on this part of town is overdue.

"It's almost disgraceful. We have to make it viable again," Allen said.

The council incorporated the warehouse district into the redevelopment area that includes downtown and the old industrial park.

Doing this will allow the Renewal Agency to funnel any excess money generated from the whole redevelopment district into the warehouse area, McAlindin said.

Uninsured face high medical bills

The Associated Press

STERLING, Va.—Bill Snoberger made almost $40,000 last year as foreman of a small machine shop and never expected his wife and three children to land among the almost 37 million Americans without health insurance.

But that's what happened last December after his employer abruptly switched insurance policies and stopped offering family coverage.

"I didn't worry about it at the time. It was right before Christmas and afterwards I was going to look at getting insurance somewhere else," said the 34-year-old Snoberger.

But his 15-year-old daughter Sandra became ill in mid-December and on New Year's Eve was diagnosed with leukemia. Because of that "pre-existing condition," private health insurance was suddenly unavailable at any price.

The plight of the 36.6 million Americans without insurance—10 million of whom are children in the best recent government survey—is a driving force behind President Clinton's campaign to overhaul America's health care system. He has promised to send Congress a blueprint next month including universal health coverage.

Five of six Americans have health insurance, but the uninsured include millions of working men and women, their children, individuals gambling they won't get sick and others.

"They are a lot of everybody," said Katherine Swartz, an economist at the Harvard School of Public Health.

Many move back and forth between being insured and not. Most go without insurance for less than six months, and only 15 percent spend more than two years uninsured, according to Swartz.

But 57 million Americans will be without insurance sometime this year, according to the advocacy group Families USA.

Sandra Snoberger wound up in Children's National Medical Center in Washington, D.C., where she has run up bills of $150,000 and eventually qualified for Medicaid. The hospital has a policy of providing full care even for patients without insurance.

"We never thought anything like this would happen," said Audrey Snoberger, whose husband commutes 70 miles each way to work from their rented

Who are the millions without health insurance?

The Associated Press

Who are these 36.6 million people without health insurance? They are a cross-section of America, most from working-class families.

Here is a look at them, drawn from an Employee Benefit Research Institute analysis of the government's March 1992 Current Population Survey, the most recent available:

- 9.5 million are children under 18; more than a third are in families living in poverty.

- 12.6 million are workers and heads of families.

- 7.9 million are workers dependent on others.

- 6.3 million are adults not in the work force.

- 300,000 are elderly ineligible for Medicare because their Social Security contributions were insufficient.

- Almost 20 million of the uninsured had family incomes under $20,000 in 1991. Another 12.8 million were in families with incomes of $20,000 to $50,000. The rest, 3.8 million, had family incomes above $50,000.

- Fifty-eight percent were white; 19 percent Hispanic; 18 percent black and 5 percent other.

- Fifty-six percent are men, 44 percent women.

- Twenty-eight million of the uninsured live in cities, eight million in rural America.

Arson probers say cultists ignited fire

Los Angeles Times

HOUSTON—In a finding that lends credence to the FBI version of how the Branch Davidian compound was engulfed in flames, arson investigators Monday said they believed followers of cult leader David Koresh set the fires that swept through the flimsy buildings, killing as many as 86 men, women and children.

"The team believes this fire was intentionally set by persons inside the compound," said Paul Gray, a Houston arson investigator heading the examination of the charred compound outside Waco, Texas, where those inside held off federal authorities for 51 days before the April 19 fire.

There have been two versions of how the fire started and spread. The FBI said that several snipers observed Branch Davidians starting the fires, while cult members who survived the blaze said the fire started when a federal vehicle knocked over a lantern.

In his preliminary findings, Gray said the fire started at two locations in the building at about the same time and that large amounts of flammable liquids added to the unnaturally rapid spread of the flames.

Gray said all the investigators were independent of any federal law enforcement agency. However, a spokesman for the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms in Houston confirmed that Gray had in the past worked with that agency as part of a federal task force. And he also said that Gray's wife works for the ATF in Houston as a secretary.

The ATF was the federal agency that launched the Feb. 28 raid on the compound. Four agents were killed and 16 others were injured. Since then, the ATF has come under considerable criticism for going through with the raid even after agents knew the element of surprise had been lost.

Jack Zimmermann, a lawyer who has represented the cultists, took issue with the findings, particularly the conclusion that the fires were deliberately set.

"Based on what?" asked Zimmermann.

"Until I see an opinion from an independent, impartial expert, I choose to believe the firsthand accounts of eyewitnesses who said there was no fire started by the Branch Davidians."

Zimmermann said he agreed with everything in the report except the key sentence about how the fire began. Other findings were consistent with what cult members told him or their own lawyers.

They included the conclusion that the compound was a fire hazard waiting to happen.

The front began moving across the state late Sunday and reached the Magic Valley shortly after dawn. Variable clouds were home by winds which reached the 25 to 30 mile an hour range with some gusts in late morning slightly stronger.
The winds died slowly during the afternoon and skies cleared by evening in the southern sections of the state.
Rainfall totals were led by 1.09 inches at Mullan, with other reports including .47 at Grangeville, .48 at Coeur d'Alene, .56 at Moscow, .39 at Lowell, .29 at Malad, and .01 at Challis.
The warmest temperature in the state Monday was 64 degrees at Payette. Dixie reported the coldest at 28 degrees.

Russians demonstrate support for reforms in referendum vote

By Bryan Brumley
The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Populist Boris Yeltsin turned once again to the Russian people, and once again they backed him in his political struggle, showing a surprising commitment to democratic and market reforms.
The conventional wisdom in Moscow was that Yeltsin was pinned to the ropes by the Communist Congress of People's Deputies, and that voters were at best apathetic and at worst downright hostile after eight years of reforms.
Yeltsin gambled big, and greatly strengthened his position. Preliminary official results of Sunday's referendum showed that 55 percent to 57 percent of the voters expressed confidence in him and some 50 percent supported his reforms, despite soaring prices and worsening living standards.
Yeltsin's spokesman Vyacheslav Kostikov said the results show "that a nationwide will for revival through democratic reforms has emerged and is strengthening in Russia."
Kostikov may have been exaggerating, but not much. He marked a threshold of sorts for Russians, an echo of the resolve they showed in August 1991 by defying a hard-line coup.

Analysis

The victory was not so much for Yeltsin as for the voters, who only four years ago took part in their first semi-democratic balloting. They elected a Congress of People's Deputies from candidates nominated largely by the Communist Party.
The Communist Party has since collapsed. But Russian democracy is alive and kicking.
However, Yeltsin, a former Communist, did not win enough support to give legal basis for his call for parliamentary elections before the scheduled 1995 date.
Nor does he have a legal basis to replace the Soviet-era constitution with a new charter he has proposed to strengthen the presidency and abolish Congress in favor of a bicameral Western-style legislature.
Yeltsin's critics — and some of his allies — fear he'll slide back to Russia's authoritarian past by taking non-constitutional measures to impose a new charter and schedule elections.
"This referendum has split society," said Yeltsin's chief rival, Congress speaker Ruslan Khasbulatov. "This referendum is another stage on the road of weakening Russia's statehood."

The president's foes also charged, accurately, that only about 35 percent of Russia's 105.5 million registered voters supported Yeltsin enough to cast their ballots for him.
The turnout, 62 percent, was lower than the 71 percent when Yeltsin was elected president in 1991. But it was higher than in many Western countries. Just 56 percent of the U.S. electorate voted in the 1992 presidential race.
The next round may indeed belong to Congress, which might continue its efforts to whittle away at the powers of the president.
It is likely that lawmakers will balk at early elections. But they have diminishing grounds to claim that Yeltsin's market reforms are unpopular.
The results of an exit poll gave further evidence that the coming generation of Russian voters are absorbing the lessons of democracy and capitalism and want to leave the totalitarian past behind.
Yeltsin's staunchest supporters are the young, the educated and the self-employed. An exit poll of 5,219 voters by the Russian Center for Public Opinion and Market Research found that 68.4 percent of people aged 18-25 years expressed confidence in Yeltsin.

Warehouse Volunteers haul debris from Oklahoma tornado

CATOOSA, Okla. (AP) — Cleanup crews hauled away debris Monday from demolished homes, schools and shops as residents tried to put their lives back together after a killer weekend tornado.
Insurance agents fanned out among the flattened homes in the city of 2,500 residents and homeowners sorted through whatever valuables they could find.
"Homes are just torn all the way," said Roger Berry, a city maintenance worker whose brother is mayor. "I didn't know we had so many power lines until they were scattered all over the ground."
Seven people died in the twister Saturday night. Ninety-five people were hurt. Authorities on Monday warned residents about barrels of missing toxic waste.

Emergency teams reported 242 houses and mobile homes destroyed in Catoosa, 113 houses damaged, 49 apartment units damaged, 49 businesses damaged or destroyed and 14 public buildings damaged.
City workers, who have just two suitable trucks for the work, said it could take three weeks to clear roads of tree limbs, power lines and other debris.
"Trying to clean up with two trucks is like taking a spoon to drink out of the ocean," said Mayor Ron Berry, who asked for help from residents.

Uninsured

home in Cross Junction, Va.
Like the Snoblers, most of the uninsured live in families headed by someone who works, usually for a small business.
In many instances, their company offers no health benefits, or covers only the workers. Often, the employees are unwilling or unable to pay the premiums.
They're people like Miguel and Evelyn Perez of Milford, Mass.
He ekes out a living as a $4.75-an-hour warehouse worker. His job offers insurance, but it would cost $18 a week and the couple feels they can't afford the cut in his $177 take-home pay. Their three young children dread the uninsured get about 40 percent less care, on average, than people with insurance.
By law, hospitals must treat anyone who shows up with a medical emergency, so when Evelyn Perez underwent an emergency appendectomy recently, she didn't have to pay the hospital's $6,450 bill. But the surgeon and other doctors dunned her for more than $2,000.

Cheryl Skelton, 35, of Peabody, Mass., recently got insurance for herself after taking a $6.15-an-hour computer-assembly job. Her weekly premium is less than $22, but she put off covering her two children, who have chronic health problems, because it would boost the premium to $25.
"There's no justice for children. I've got 18 prescriptions in my pocketbook but I can't afford to fill," said the frustrated mother.
Russell Beaudreault of Athol, Mass., disabled by a back injury, is covered by Medicare, but his wife Judy and son Sean, 9, have gone uninsured for several years.
"We go to doctors and we bargain with them. If they want $60, we offer them $30 cash," said Beaudreault. "Most of the time they take it."
"I have a constant worry that one of us is going to be hospitalized for one reason or another, and that I'll be on the street," Mrs. Beaudreault said.
The problem is worst among younger workers, the self-employed and those in trades that traditionally offer few benefits, including farm work, nonunionized construction and retail sales.

Some of the uninsured are risk-takers.
Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., said her son Richard, a 32-year-old film editor in Los Angeles, is uninsured. The company he works under contract for doesn't offer benefits so "he gambles," said his mother.
Swartz said, "If you're 25 and single and really don't think anything was going to happen to you ... it's not irrational to not buy insurance."
A low-income worker facing a $500 deductible and $50 monthly premiums would have "to pay $1,100 before they get any coverage back," she noted.
For others, it's a struggle to find affordable insurance.
"It's very tough to get individual insurance," said Mark Nadel, an assistant director of the General Accounting Office. "There are very few people in middle age who don't have some condition that would make an insurer not want to cover them."

Gays offer middle-of-the-road appearance

By Jill Lawrence
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — They fell short on numbers, but organizers of the weekend's gay march achieved at least one immediate goal: The marchers were overwhelmingly middle class and middle of the road.

Most of the campy gay culture that passes for mainstream in the minds of some straights was limited to performances on the rally stage Sunday evening.

It was much harder to find cross-dressers and "dykes on bikes" — the symbols of the fringe — along the march route or on the Mall.

"For the first time there was a much more representative sampling of who this community is," said Torie Osborn, executive director of the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force. "The media in general showed our real diversity. There was not an attempt to marginalize this march."

But if there was satisfaction at who turned out, there was tremendous frustration at estimates of how many turned out.

Organizers staked a lot on numbers. They built expectations for 1 million and took extraordinary steps to get their own tally. Many marchers were pink stickers that said "I was counted," and there were even sign-in sheets for various march contingents.

The official U.S. Park Police estimate of 300,000 was crushing. Osborn, one of the gay leaders who met this month with President Clinton, said Monday that she had already called the White House to register a protest. She said she wants to pressure the Interior Department to get "an objective observer" to analyze aerial photographs.

The count quickly became an in-joke among homosexuals who had marched.

A gay couple got on the subway in suburban Virginia on Monday morning and one of the men, spotting another gay couple already on the train, remarked without any pretence: "It was at least 25,000." Everyone know what he was talking about and hugged.

Numbers were not the only source of frustration for the marchers. Some said they were disappointed that Clinton did not show up or send his wife or vice president. He sent a statement instead. A few speakers were very critical, and there were some chants of "Where's Bill?" Some marchers, unaware of Clinton's positions on specific gay issues, were annoyed to find out that he opposes gay marriage.

Clinton has made history on other fronts, meeting with homosexuals at the White House and challenging the military ban. March organizers said they were disturbed that so many speakers criticized him and so many newscasts featured those speakers.

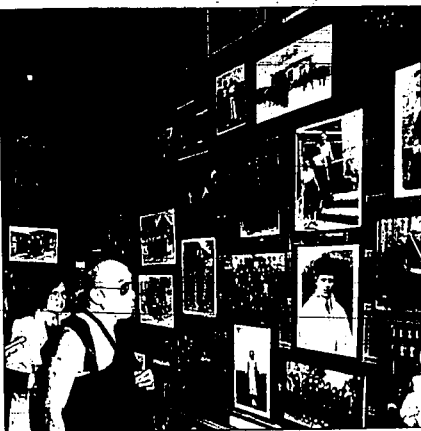

Analysis

"We've been on the outside for so long that it's difficult to adjust our tactics when dealing with a friend," said Gregory King, spokesman for the Human Rights Campaign Fund. "But we believe in him and we're going to save him, too." As the march occurred, the president was speaking on the subject of gay rights with characteristic caution.

In an address to newspaper editors in Boston, he endorsed tolerance, but not permissiveness, in society. He said people would continue to make private judgments, but also said the country should be "free of unnecessary discrimination."

Some gay people see Clinton's measured approach as the only practical way he can advance their cause. Others may have unrealistic expectations; presidents don't do marches.

The pressure on Clinton may stem in part from a charisma vacuum. For while there are some respected gay leaders, the movement does not have a well-known person who embodies and crystallizes and ennobles its cause. King predicts that will come in time, perhaps even the next couple of years.

The Dalai Lama tours the Holocaust Memorial Museum Monday in Washington, D.C.

Buddhist leader visits Holocaust memorial

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Dalai Lama of Tibet prayed Monday for the millions killed in the World War II Holocaust and described them as victims of evil misuse of the human mind.

The Buddhist leader inspected the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum minutes before it opened to the public — he was the first of many international spiritual figures expected to visit the building dedicated last week.

When mankind fails to use its intelligence positively, "these are the consequences," he said after viewing exhibits tracing Nazi Germany's extermination of Jews and other minorities.

In the museum's Hall of Remembrance, the Dalai Lama lit a candle from the eternal flame, spread a silken Buddhist prayer shawl, known as a Khatag, before the altar, and folded his hands in prayer for nearly a minute.

The Holocaust is relevant to his own experience and that of the Tibetans, said the Dalai Lama, who led thousands of his people into exile when the Chinese army crushed a 1959 uprising in their Himalayan homeland.

"It couldn't have been a greater opening day for the public than to have a visit by one of the world's most respected spiritual leaders," said exhibition director Raye Farr, who guided the Dalai Lama on his 30-minute tour.

Like Jews in the Holocaust, she said, "the Tibetan people are faced with threats of annihilation, but they are not the only ones. One group after another can relate to the exhibition."

The Dalai Lama's aides said he would be received by President Clinton this week for what would be his first meeting with a U.S. president. There was no confirmation from the White House.

The United States supports protection of human rights and distinct cultural identity for Tibetans but recognizes Tibet as politically part of China.

Public views new museum

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum opened to the public Monday and the first wave of visitors included many gays and lesbians, one of the minorities the Nazis hated and killed in great numbers.

"What happened in the Holocaust is an extreme example of what is happening today with the unequal treatment of gays," said John Drew of St. Louis. "It's the right wing carried to the extreme."

Some people were in line to tour the museum four hours before the 10 a.m. opening. By the time the doors were opened, the line for tickets stretched to the back of the museum and up the block.

Many of those in line wore clothing that indicated they took part in the march for homosexual rights on Sunday.

Plant, animal inventory set

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton set in motion Monday a $179.4 million inventory of the nation's plant and animal species to increase understanding of America's biological resources.

The National Biological Survey will be conducted by an agency formed from the consolidation of eight bureaus of the Interior Department. Most of the 850 biologists and the money for the program will come from the Fish and Wildlife Service.

A White House statement said the initiative was designed "to prevent another serious natural resource conflict of the sort currently plaguing the old-growth-forest communities of the Pacific Northwest."

Chester, 140 in dog years, left a Chattanooga, Tenn., shelter shutting down this month, for the loving care of Doug and Beth Gray.

'Ancient' pooch finally leaves the dog pound

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) Chester may be 140 in dog years, but the once-abandoned pooch still knows a few tricks.

The gold and white beagle mix was dumped on the doorstep of an animal shelter more than two years ago. No one wanted to adopt the aging pet, but handlers didn't have the heart to put him to sleep. "He became our dog. We all just loved him," said Bonnie Marcus, treasurer of the Tennessee Humane Animal League.

Chester's owners called once and said they'd be back for their then 18-year-old dog, but they never showed up. He became the shelter mascot.

When the league decided to pull its support from the shelter to open one in Chattanooga, people began to worry about what would happen to Chester.

Enter Doug and Beth Gray. "They thought they may have to put him to sleep and we just couldn't let that happen," said Ms. Gray, who first saw Chester at a pet adoption fair soon after he was abandoned and always wondered how things turned out.

Now, Chester lives with the Grays and their other two dogs on Signal Mountain.

Although he can hardly see, hear or chew, Chester's still a canny canine. One of his first acts as a member of the family proved he may be old, but not reformed.

The couple's dogs sleep on blankets in the living room.

Foley urges slower approach to health care

BOSTON (AP) The Clinton administration may be rushing to produce a health care reform package that could be tough to sell to Congress and the American public, House Speaker Thomas S. Foley said Monday.

"I'm troubled because the country is not ready for the challenge of providing the kind of coverage that we want to do to ensure universality," Foley told the annual meeting of The Associated Press.

Foley, D-Wash., also said most critics of President Clinton's economic stimulus bill, which failed last week, should eventually be approved "in one form or another."

Poll finds qualified support for Clinton

NEW YORK (AP) — As President Clinton nears his 100th day in office, almost half of Americans in an Associated Press poll say he already has broken promises too often. But about the same number consider him a strong leader.

The leadership measure could be crucial for a president trying to push an agenda of change after winning only 43 percent of the vote in November. Those polled regard Clinton as a strong leader 49 percent to 37 percent, with the rest unsure.

More Americans than not say Clinton has set the right tone for his administration, by 44 percent to 40 percent. But 48 percent say he already has broken his promises too often, compared with 34 percent who say he has kept his promises up to this point.

Clinton complained Sunday that it was "just not realistic" to expect that he could have moved on all his campaign commitments in his first 100 days. "That's why you get a four-year term, not a three-month term," he said.

The poll indicates a quarter of those critical of broken promises still respect Clinton's leadership. People who voted for him are much less likely than others to fault him for breaking promises, but nearly a fourth are withholding judgment or have a mixed assessment, the poll found.

The national telephone poll of 1,014 adults was taken April 16-20 by ICR Survey Research Group of Media, Pa., part of AUS Consultants. Results have a margin of sampling error of plus or minus 3 percentage points.

Clinton was under harsh media scrutiny while the poll was taken, with Republicans in Congress having scuttled his $16.3 billion economic stimulus and the standoff with armed cultists in Texas ending in a fiery tragedy. But the poll asked respondents to take a broad view of Clinton's "opening months in office."

Most, 68 percent, say Clinton has accomplished about what they expected, 6 percent say more than they expected, 22 percent say less. Among the disappointed are 18 percent of Democrats and 18 percent of Clinton voters.

Clinton gets higher marks for leadership among women in the poll than among men, possibly because of his push for spending on social programs that traditionally are more popular with women than men. Also, the president has taken favorable stands on controversial issues, such as abortion rights and homosexuals in the military, in which polls show more male than female opposition.

GOP rates Clinton: No gold stars early on WASHINGTON (AP) Republicans offered an advance report card and video of President Clinton's first 100 days in office Monday, savaging him as a tax-happy liberal even as they pledged cooperation in the second hundred days.

National GOP and congressional leaders painted Clinton as abandoning centrist campaign positions, to court Javaz, with Democratic liberals and said his economic proposals raised spending too much and cut the deficit too little.

"I think his entire package is in some difficulty," said Senate Republican leader Bob Dole of Kansas, noting criticism of the Clinton budget plan from several powerful congressional Democrats as well as Republicans. "It may be time for the package to go to the body shop."

The Republican leaders spoke at a news conference on Day 97 of the Clinton administration, opening a week in which virtually every political group in Washington is offering a 100-day report card on the new administration.

At the GOP gathering, Dole said of the 100-day tradition, "I've never been certain that it is the best measure of a president."

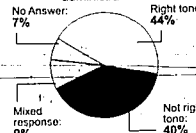

But, since it is tradition, Dole had no qualms about joining GOP colleagues to criticize a president Dole said had been "captured by liberals in his party."

After a campaign in which he promised middle-class tax relief and to cut spending before raising taxes, the Republicans said Clinton's economic program had more than $3 in taxes for every $1 in spending cuts, including an energy tax that would reach well into the middle class.

Supreme Court strikes down solicitation curbs on accountants

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court, drawing a distinction between lawyers and accountants, said Monday states may not prevent certified public accountants from soliciting potential customers by telephone or face-to-face.

The 8-1 decision struck down a Florida ban on such unsolicited solicitations by CPAs, ruling that it violated their free-speech rights.

The court said only three other states — Louisiana, Minnesota and Texas — impose a blanket ban on CPA solicitations. The new ruling cast grave constitutional doubt on those laws as well.

In past decisions, the court has allowed states to ban in-person soliciting and direct-mail advertising by lawyers. The 1978 ruling on lawyer solicitations involved an Ohio lawyer who visited the hospital room of an accident victim.

Justice Anthony M. Kennedy wrote for the court Monday that an accountant's direct solicitation "poses none of the same dangers."

"Unlike a lawyer, a CPA is not a professional trained in the art of persuasion," Kennedy said. "The typical client of a CPA is far less susceptible to manipulation than the young accident victim" involved in the 1978 case, he said.

In other matters, the court:

- Reinstated the fraud convictions of two savings and loan executives, ruling, 6-3, they are not entitled to a new trial just because alternate jurors wrongly were allowed to watch the jury's deliberations.
- Reinstated a sexual-harassment lawsuit in which a neurologist says she was treated unfairly after resisting the advances of her boss at the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md.
- Agreed to decide in a Nevada case

whether prosecutors must prove that people charged with evading federal laws requiring the reporting of currency transfers over $10,000 knew they were committing a crime.

In the decision on accountants, the court said Florida officials had not proved that imposing the soliciting ban would preserve the integrity of CPA's opinions on financial statements or protect the public from fraud.

"The ends sought by the state are not advanced by the speech restriction, and legitimate commercial speech is suppressed," Kennedy said.

Justice Sandra Day O'Connor dissented, saying, "I see no constitutional difference between a rule prohibiting in-person solicitation by attorneys and by-certified public accountants."

The Florida law was challenged by licensed CPA, Scott Egan, after he moved from New Jersey to Homestead, Fla., to establish a tax-accountancy practice.

Sergeant earns posthumous medal of honor

Knight-Ridder News Service

On April 23, 1943, the U.S. 9th Infantry Division jumped off in Tunisia.

The division was on the far left (north) flank of the corps area. Its objective was to reduce the enemy's strongly fortified Djefna position on Green and Bald Hills, which dominated the Djebel Aboid-Mateur highway and railroad. The geography was a series of jumbled hills with high crests that afforded the enemy a clear view of the valley and the ability to call down accurate fire on any American movement.

The 9th Division had been reinforced for this assault by the addition of three French infantry battalions (Corps Franc d'Afrique) and a number of extra artillery batteries, including the entire 434th Coast Artillery battalion. There were also two tank destroyer battalions attached.

All three of the division's regiments went into the attack. The 47th Infantry Regiment was to make a holding attack in the south while the other regiments (39th and 60th Infantry and the French) sought to move around the enemy defenses towards the north.

The 39th ran into trouble. A company of Germans counterattacked and captured the regimental commander and most of his staff. The assistant divisional commander took over the 39th until a new commander could come up. The next day, the regiment's 1st Battalion lost its commander, executive officer, intelligence company commander. Casualties were heavy in all ranks, but the unit pushed on. After four days of fighting it dug in after taking the vantage point of Djebel Ainchouna.

North of the 39th Infantry, the 60th Infantry had moved faster and had to halt on April 25 for supplies to catch up.

Much of the regiment's success had been due to the actions of Sgt. William L. Nelson. On the second day of the attack, as the 60th moved northwest of the Sedjenane River, Nelson led his section of heavy mortars to a forward position. The Germans were mounting a fierce counterattack. Under heavy artillery and small-arms fire, Nelson advanced alone to an exposed observation post so that he could better direct his mortars for maximum effect. The resulting fire from his mortars was so accurate that it broke up the initial German assault.

The enemy concentrated on Nelson, tossing a number of hand grenades at his position. Nelson was badly wounded by the blasts, but crawled even farther forward until he was only 50 yards from the main enemy concentration. He continued to direct the fire of his section, which continued to inflict high casualties on the enemy until the Germans fell back.

Nelson then died from his wounds. He was awarded the Medal of Honor. The citation's concluding passage read, "his courage, and self-sacrificing devotion to duty and heroism resulting in the loss of his life, was a priceless inspiration to our Armed Forces and were in keeping with the highest traditions of the U.S. Army."

Overall, the 9th Division was moving forward, but at a slower rate than originally planned. In the rough terrain, the battle had devolved into a series of small unit struggles; battalions, companies and individuals like Nelson making the difference.

Supreme Court strikes down solicitation curbs on accountants

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court, drawing a distinction between lawyers and accountants, said Monday states may not prevent certified public accountants from soliciting potential customers by telephone or face-to-face.

The 8-1 decision struck down a Florida ban on such unsolicited solicitations by CPAs, ruling that it violated their free-speech rights.

The court said only three other states — Louisiana, Minnesota and Texas — impose a blanket ban on CPA solicitations. The new ruling cast grave constitutional doubt on those laws as well.

In past decisions, the court has allowed states to ban in-person soliciting and direct-mail advertising by lawyers. The 1978 ruling on lawyer solicitations involved an Ohio lawyer who visited the hospital room of an accident victim.

Justice Anthony M. Kennedy wrote for the court Monday that an accountant's direct solicitation "poses none of the same dangers."

"Unlike a lawyer, a CPA is not a professional trained in the art of persuasion," Kennedy said. "The typical client of a CPA is far less susceptible to manipulation than the young accident victim" involved in the 1978 case, he said.

In other matters, the court:

- Reinstated the fraud convictions of two savings and loan executives, ruling, 6-3, they are not entitled to a new trial just because alternate jurors wrongly were allowed to watch the jury's deliberations.

- Reinstated a sexual-harassment lawsuit in which a neurologist says she was treated unfairly after resisting the advances of her boss at the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md.
- Agreed to decide in a Nevada case

whether prosecutors must prove that people charged with evading federal laws requiring the reporting of currency transfers over $10,000 knew they were committing a crime.

In the decision on accountants, the court said Florida officials had not proved that imposing the soliciting ban would preserve the integrity of CPA's opinions on financial statements or protect the public from fraud.

"The ends sought by the state are not advanced by the speech restriction, and legitimate commercial speech is suppressed," Kennedy said.

Justice Sandra Day O'Connor dissented, saying, "I see no constitutional difference between a rule prohibiting in-person solicitation by attorneys and a rule prohibiting in-person solicitation by certified public accountants."

The Florida law was challenged by licensed CPA Scott Fane after he moved from New Jersey to Homestead, Fla., to establish a tax accountancy practice.

Sergeant earns posthumous medal of honor

Knight-Ridder News Service

On April 23, 1943, the U.S. 9th Infantry Division jumped off in the general attack by II Corps in Tunisia.

The division was on the far left (north) flank of the corps area. Its objective was to reduce the enemy's strongly fortified Djefna position on Green and Bald Hills, which dominated the Djebel Aboud-Mateur highway and railroad. The geography was a series of jumbled hills with high crests that afforded the enemy a clear view of the valley and the ability to call down accurate fire on any American movement.

The 9th Division had been reinforced for this assault by the addition of three French infantry battalions (Corps Franc d'Afrique) and a number of extra artillery batteries, including the entire 434th Coast Artillery battalion. There were also two tank destroyer battalions attached.

All three of the division's regiments went into the attack. The 47th Infantry Regiment was to make a holding attack in the south while the other regiments (39th and 60th Infantry and the French) sought to move around the enemy defenses towards the north.

The 39th ran into trouble. A company of Germans counterattacked and captured the regimental commander and most of his staff. The assistant divisional commander took over the 39th until a new command and control could come up. The next day, the regiment's 1st Battalion lost its commander, executive officer, intelligence officer and heavy weapons company commander. Casualties were heavy in all ranks, but the unit pushed on. After four days of fighting it dug in after taking the vantage point of Djebel Ainehoua.

North of the 39th Infantry, the 60th Infantry had moved faster and had to halt on April 25 for supplies to catch up.

Much of the regiment's success had been due to the actions of Sgt. William L. Nelson. On the second day of the attack, as the 60th moved northwest of the Sedjenane River, Nelson led his section of heavy mortars to a forward position. The Germans were mounting a fierce counterattack. Under heavy artillery and small-arms fire, Nelson advanced alone to an exposed observation post so that he could better direct his mortars for maximum effect. The resulting fire from his mortars was so accurate that it broke up the initial German assault.

The enemy concentrated on Nelson, tossing a number of hand grenades at his position. Nelson was badly wounded by the blast, but crawled even farther forward until he was only 50 yards from the main enemy concentration. He continued to direct the fire of his section, which continued to inflict high casualties on the enemy until the Germans fell back.

Nelson then died from his wounds. He was awarded the Medal of Honor. The citation's concluding passage read, "his courage, and self-sacrificing devotion to duty and heroism resulting in the loss of his life, was a priceless inspiration to our Armed Forces and were in keeping with the highest traditions of the U.S. Army."

Overall, the 9th Division was moving forward, but at a slower rate than originally planned. In the rough terrain, the battle had devolved into a series of small unit struggles: battalions, companies and individuals like Nelson making the difference.

Yemenis elect 1st parliament

SAN'A, Yemen — Yemenis elected on Monday their first parliament since the capitalist north and Marxist south reunified three years ago.

The campaign was marred by violence and opposition claims that the governing parties flooded the field with candidates and inflated voter rolls.

On Saturday, an Al-Islah Party candidate shot dead his General Peoples Congress rival.

Previous attacks were often against officials of the Yemen Socialist Party, but few people were killed or wounded and there have been no arrests.

Despite an economic crisis worsened by Saudi Arabia's expulsion of 1 million Yemeni workers, personalities and tribal affiliations dominated the campaign. Yemen supported Iraq in the Persian Gulf War, while Saudi Arabia was a key member of the U.S.-led anti-Iraq coalition.

The elections are highly unusual for the Arabian Peninsula, where most countries are ruled by royal families or have appointed consultative councils with no legislative powers.

Flash flood hits sleeping town, kills 17

BOGOTA, Colombia — A flash flood swept dozens of sleeping people from their homes early Monday, killing at least 17 and injuring seven, police said. At least 43 people were missing.

The flood was caused by torrential rains that sent the Tapato River, northwest of the capital Bogota, rushing over its banks.

The river grew from one moment to another and swept entire families out of their homes while they were sleeping, police Inspector Antonio Velez Londono said in a radio interview.

Albania recognizes Macedonia

TIRANA, Albania — Albania recognized Macedonia on Monday, joining a handful of nations in establishing diplomatic relations with the former Yugoslav republic.

The Albanian decision, announced by state television, followed U.N. admission of Macedonia on April 8 under a temporary name — The Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia.

Greece had insisted that admission under the name Macedonia implied territorial designs on the northern Greek province of the same name.

Bank chief to head Italy's government

ROME (AP) — Italy's president on Monday chose a respected banker to form a new government and rebuild a political system discredited by corruption and scandal.

The selection of Carlo Ciampi, the country's central bank chief, demonstrates that Italy may indeed be on the road to breaking with its past of party-dominated government and pork-barrel politics.

If he can form a government, he would be the first premier from outside the world of the traditional parties since World War II.

Ciampi, 72, has been governor of the Bank of Italy since 1979. His independence from partisan politics is a plus in a nation ridden by scandals which have implicated more than 2,600 politicians and business figures.

Ciampi said at a news conference

At least 55 die in Indian Airlines crash

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — An Indian Airlines jet carrying 118 people crashed Monday in western India, reportedly after hitting a truck on the runway during takeoff. Officials said at least 55 people were killed.

Survivors and eyewitnesses told India's two news agencies that the jetliner never regained its balance after hitting the truck at Aurangabad airport, 680 miles southwest of New Delhi.

The survivors, most of whom walked away with only scratches, said the aircraft lost altitude and hit a high-tension wire on the way down.

The plane caught fire and broke into three pieces as it came smashing down on its belly, four miles from the airstrip, the news agencies said.

Houston center gains honors for April play

NEW YORK — Hakeem Olajuwon, who helped Houston win its first division title in seven years, Monday was named NBA Player of the Month for April. He averaged 30.8 points, 13.4 rebounds, 4.5 blocked shots and 4 assists a game for the month. He also shot .545 from the field and .793 from the foul line as the Rockets went 11-2.

Houston (55-26) captured the Midwest Division and the second seed in the Western Conference playoffs behind Phoenix, which had the best record in the league.

Olajuwon led the league in blocks with 4.17 per game and was fourth in scoring (26.1) and rebounding (13) rebounds per game. He scored at least 20 points in 12 of Houston's 13 games, went over 30 points five times and 40 points twice.

Former Yankee star delays vacation after falling ill

ROME — Joe DiMaggio cancelled a visit to his parents' hometown in Sicily after suffering chest pain, his spokesman said Monday.

DiMaggio

John Salamone, who is accompanying the 78-year-old baseball Hall of Famer on his Italian visit, said DiMaggio felt ill Saturday night after dinner in Rome and decided to cancel his trip to Isola delle Femmine, a small town near Palermo, Sicily. The town had planned a ceremony to make him honorary citizen.

"DiMaggio had chest congestion but it is nothing serious. He is doing fine," Salamone said. The spokesman said DiMaggio went for a walk Monday. "He's up and about and enjoying Rome," Salamone said.

Bulgarian boxer dies a day after suffering knockout

SOFIA, Bulgaria — An 18-year-old boxer died in a hospital after being knocked out at the National Junior Championships, officials said Monday. Alexander Kostadinov collapsed Sunday in the third round of his bantamweight fight and died hours later in the town of Sliven in southeastern Bulgaria.

The fatal blows apparently occurred when Kostadinov was knocked out in the third round. The name of his opponent was not immediately available. The boxer had hemorrhages on both sides of the brain, said Dr. Emilia Konsulova, head of the Sliven hospital. The remainder of the fights in the tournament were postponed for two weeks.

Right to the horse's mouth

Trainer George Romero feeds his Kentucky Derby hopeful Dixieland Heat Monday at Churchill Downs in Louisville. Romero's brother, Randy, will ride the horse in the race.

Brother team eyes shot at horse racing crown

The Associated Press

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Jockey Randy Romero feels close to Dixieland Heat and even closer to the Kentucky Derby contender's trainer.

Even a little criticism from the trainer doesn't bother Romero. "If I make a mistake he bawls me out," he said. "I don't know why, but I don't feel any pressure riding him."

The trainer is Romero's brother Gerald. "It would be very special if Randy and I could win the Kentucky Derby — very special," Romero the trainer said.

"I have the best shot I ever had of winning the Derby," Romero the jockey said. The 35-year-old rider's best showings in seven previous Derbies were a pair of seventh-place finishes.

"I know this is the best chance I've ever had," he said, "and I'm going to ride him as if he's a good one."

Kentucky Derby 119, Louisville, Kentucky, May 2, 1993

Dixieland Heat is a good one. The colt won his only race as a 2-year-old and his first four starts this year, including the Louisiana Derby, before finishing third in the Blue Grass on April 10 at Keeneland.

Gerald, 37, the oldest of five brothers from Louisiana, will be seeing the Derby for the first time in person.

"He acts like he's been here a hundred times," the jockey said of how his brother is handling the hoopla surrounding Derby week. "I don't have to tell him anything."

Both brothers, however, appeared apprehensive after Dixieland Heat's scheduled workout over seven furlongs of a mile on a sloppy track was aborted shortly after it started.

"The track was slick, and we had talked before about what to do," said Randy, who quickly turned the workout in a strong gallop. "I could tell when I was hoping that he wasn't handling the course that well."

"Randy knew after the first eighth of a mile that the horse wasn't handling the track," Gerald said. "He felt uncomfortable and I got to go with it. He'll come back Tuesday and work three-quarters of a mile."

CSI sweeps Eastern Utah after shaky starts; Garman, Chavez play tough

By Brad Ellis
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The College of Southern Idaho baseball teams had the best of both worlds to sweep the College of Eastern Utah in a double header at Frontier Field Monday.

The Golden Eagles used a high-powered offense and a stingy defense to rack up wins of 10-3 in the first game and 13-3 in the nightcap.

CSI struggled early in each game, but settled down to cruise in the later innings to improve its season record to 32-9. Coach Jim Walker was pleased with the wins following a poor team performance in a loss to Treasure Valley last Saturday.

"It was a good team effort after the way we played in Treasure Valley," Walker said.

"We hit the ball well today and defensively we're playing well. We had a couple of real nice plays by Sean Garman at third. Overall, I'm really happy with the way we played," Walker said.

While Garman shined for the CSI defense, Devin Chavez supplied the power for the Golden Eagle offense. Chavez hit 2-3 with 4 RBI and drew a bases loaded walk in the first game. In the nightcap he went 2-2 with a towering three-run home run into a stiff wind. For the night, he hit 4-5 with 7 RBI, scored twice and reached base seven times in eight plate appearances.

In the first game, Chavez slugged what turned out to be the game winning hit with the bases loaded in the second inning. Chavez's single brought in Rich Stoltz and Nate Tehbs, who had each reached base on a balk error, and put CSI ahead to stay 5-3.

Dan Poulton gave up three runs on only three hits and three CSI errors through five innings to pick up the win for the Golden Eagles. Pat Flury, who has been highly scouted by the pros, closed out the game in the final two innings without giving up a hit and recording one strikeout.

"Pat Flury looked like the pitcher he is supposed to be. It's been such a circus with the scouts and everything. There were a couple of big scouts here tonight and I thought he might get nervous, but he really came through," Walker said.

In the second game, Jason Fuller looked very shaky on the mound early and was rocked for three hits and three runs in the first inning. But after he settled down, he retired 12 of the final 13 batters allowing one walk and nothing but two strikeouts.

Once again, CSI got all the runs they needed in the second inning and cruised from there. After two consecutive bases-

NBA playoffs feature key power forward matchup

The Associated Press

One series matches Michael vs. Dominique, another pits Kemp vs. Karl Malone. And then there's Barkley vs. the Los Angeles Lakers, who managed to increase their playoff appearance streak to 17 years in a row.

It's NBA playoff time, and there are intriguing matchups throughout the first round, which begins Thursday night in Boston, Cleveland, Houston and Portland. The other four best-of-5 series open Friday at Chicago, New York, Phoenix and Seattle.

Michael Jordan and Dominique Wilkins, who finished 1-2 in the league's scoring race, go at it when the two-time NBA champion Bulls play the Atlanta Hawks.

The best individual matchup, however, could be between power forwards Shawn Kemp of Seattle and Karl Malone of Utah. The Lakers and Boston Celtics, who won eight of the 10 NBA titles in the 1980s, have come down from their perch, but both

Pistons miss playoffs, dump coach

The Associated Press

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — Ron Rothstein, whose team failed to make the playoffs for the first time in 10 years, was fired Monday as coach of the Detroit Pistons.

Pistons president Tom Wilson and Billy McKinney, the player personnel director, met with Rothstein at The Palace Monday and announced his dismissal in the afternoon.

"This team was beset with inherent problems from the day I took over," Rothstein said in a statement. "I don't think I have to recount the other problems that unfolded as the year progressed. I have given this job my all from day one. I tried to find a balance between the needs and wants of the players and what I felt was my responsibility as the head coach. Above all, I have tried to conduct myself in a professional manner."

Rothstein's biggest problem was Dennis Rodman. The moody forward missed all of training camp, a West Coast road trip and several other games because of suspensions or vague injuries.

Something old, new at speedway

By Jeff Hoskinson
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Mother nature cooperated this week allowing the Magic Valley Speedway to finally have its season opener.

Fans who had to wait the week were not disappointed.

Darin Fairbanks started the new where he left off last year, in the winner's circle. Tim Taylor appeared ready to step up and take over the Budweiser Street Stock division from Scott Keller and Bruce Quale, and Shawn Nice claimed his first main event win ever.

The excitement started early when Doug Dugger duplicated a feat of last season by taking out a light pole in the Street Stock heat race. Dugger and Harold Warfield bumped coming out of turn two forcing Dugger into the light pole in the middle of the backstretch.

Nice, who started the Quale Pony Stock race in the sixth position, was able to take advantage of five caution flags to move his No. 92 Plews Heating & Air Conditioning car into a spot where he was sitting in second position entering lap 4. On that lap, Nice was able to get even with the Mike Tract's No. 53 Farnoux car and then pass just before the duo passed the start finish line.

From that point Nice had clear sailing over the next 16 laps to claim his first ever main event win.

"I'm a happy camper," Nice said. "The way the car was handling was the only thing that made me win."

Fairbank, driving the No. 7 Wickham Pipe vehicle, was able to step in where most had expected him to go. With last season's point champion Scott Keller not racing this season and runner-up Bruce Quale moving up to the Pepsi Pro Stock division, most people figured Taylor as the preseason favorite to win the division.

Taylor started on the pole and never relinquished that position, cruising to an easy win over Harold Warfield.

"It's a great way to start the year," Taylor said. "It's perfect."

In the Pro Stock race, Fairbanks showed that his car has not changed much from the one last year that earned him the track points title and a top five finish in the Pacific Coast region of NASCAR.

Starting in the fourth spot in the grid, Fairbanks wasted no time in powering his Chevrolet Insurance car into the lead. On lap six he passed Eddy McKean's Cactus Pete's Chevy Lumina coming out of turn two and that was all she wrote. Fairbanks proceeded to lap all the other drivers in the race.

Detroit continues torrid offensive pace

The Associated Press

Detroit is scoring more like the Lions than the Tigers.

The Tigers aren't just winning games. They are punting their opponents, scoring runs in bunches. They fell into a little slump in their series finale at Minnesota on Sunday, managing just one run in the first six innings.

Then they made up for that oversight, scoring 15 in the final two innings for a 16-5 victory. That came less than 24 hours after winning, 17-1. Those wins followed lopsided scores of 12-4, 20-3 and 20-4 run up in the last two weeks by this modern Murderer's Row.

Detroit's numbers in the first month of the season are mind-boggling, forcing statisticians to work overtime.

The Tigers outscored the Twins 45-10 in the three-game series, and outscored Minnesota 11-2. The American League record for runs in three consecutive games is 56, set by Boston in June 1950.

Twice this season, Detroit has scored 20 runs. Only two teams in modern major league history have scored 20 or more runs on the same day in the same year.

Detroit leads the majors with 145 runs (8.5 per game) and 27 homers in its first 17 games. Maintained for the full season, that prodigious pace

Projected over a full season:

1,067 - 1931 Yankees

Home runs: 257 - 1993 Tigers
240 - 1961 Yankees

AP/Wide World

translates to 1,377 runs and 257 home runs. Both would be records.

The modern record for runs in a season is 1,067 by the 1931 New York Yankees. The Yankees hold the record for runs in month, scoring 275 in 36 games August 1938, an average of 7.6 per game.

New York also holds the mark for home runs in a season, hitting 240 in 1961, led by Roger Maris' 61 and Mickey Mantle's 54.

The '31 Yankees included Babe Ruth (163 RBIs), Lou Gehrig (184 RBIs), Ben Chapman (122 RBIs) and Tony Lazzeri (83 RBIs).

This season's Tigers feature a lot of players cast off by other teams, including Cecil Fielder, Rob Deer, Mickey Tettleton, Tony Phillips, Dan Gladden and Kirk Gibson.

To the Twins over the weekend, however, they all looked like Detroit Yankees team from 62 years ago. Minnesota's team ERA zoomed from 4.21 to 5.88.

"Right now we are all hitting," Phillips said. "We can get a walk and a home run and score some runs. We can get two straight home runs. With the guys we have who can hit it out, if we can get people on base in front of them, we've always got a chance."

In their four big victories this season, the Tigers have outscored their opposition 73-13. Amazingly, Fielder has only three RBIs in those games.

Fielder has led the major leagues in RBIs the last three seasons, joining Ruth as the only players to do it. He had 16 RBIs in the Tigers' first 13 games.

"You just keep going and pressing and trying to do better," Fielder said. "This is one of those beautiful things. The way we're feeling now, we'll keep pressing and know that our good inning is going to come."

Survivor faces long layoff from baseball

CLEVELAND (AP) — Cleveland pitcher Bob Ojeda, the survivor of a boating accident that killed two other Indians pitchers, is on the mend but still weeks away from stepping on the mound again.

Ojeda is recovering from injuries suffered in the March 22 accident that killed teammates Steve Olin and Tim Crews. The three players were fishing on a private lake near Cleveland, Fla., during a day off from spring training when their boat collided with a dock.

Ojeda, who suffered a severe scalp injury and lost nearly two quarts of blood, was examined last week at Lutheran Medical Center. Indians general manager John Hart says there was some good news about Ojeda's progress.

"He's not 100 percent, but he's at a point where he can do some light physical rehabilitation," Hart said. "He's still suffering from dizziness, which is related to the loss of blood from the accident."

While Ojeda's recovery continues, team doctors say now is as good a time as any to do some work on his shoulders.

Ojeda threw only two spring

training games before being sidelined with tendinitis in both shoulders. Hart said Ojeda will undergo arthroscopic surgery on his "left shoulder Tuesday. It will probably be at least 60 days before Bobby is able to go out and he's going to have to start from square one because he's been unable to do anything since the accident," Hart said.

If the arthroscopic surgery uncovers a serious shoulder problem, Ojeda could be out even longer. But Hart said team orthopedic surgeon Dr. Lou Kepler thinks the time is right for doing the surgery.

"Dr. Kepler will do the operation and we think it will be just some minor work," Hart said.

Hart dismissed rumors that Ojeda is considering retirement.

"Bobby never said anything about that," he said.

Jazz: Jay Humphries, Tyrone Corbin and Larry Krystowiak are the vets acquired to help Stockton, Karl Malone and Jeff Malone find way to win in postseason.

Spaniard captures Monte Carlo after rain

MONTE CARLO, Monaco (AP) — Sergi Bruguera won the Monte Carlo Open for the second time in three years Monday, once again triumphing a day behind schedule after a rain-forced postponement.

The Spaniard beat a 5-0 first-set lead against Frenchman Cedric

Pioline, but then emerged from a 90-minute rain break to win a tiebreaker and storm through the second set for a 7-6 (7-2), 6-0 victory.

It was Bruguera's first title of the year and seventh of his career. He won here in 1991, also on a Monday after rain forced a delay in his final secondary court.

Pioline, seeking his first pro title, fell behind 5-0 in the first set. But he rallied and trailed only 5 when play was halted after 45 minutes.

He held his serve when play resumed, but was overpowered in the tiebreaker and second set.

Hurrah for volunteers — especially this week

What is it that makes people want to give away the most precious commodity they own — their time? That's what volunteerism is. It's a gift of time, from one person to another, or to a group of others. From a perspective of strict self-interest, according to the laws of capitalism taught in economics classes, it makes no sense at all. Volunteerism is a purely subject this week for a couple of reasons.

Sunday's paper contained a story about the folk who volunteer for Guardian ad Litem. The guardians are advocates for abused children, in a legal system in which the defendants have lawyers on their side, the state has a whole bureaucracy on its side, and the children have the pain.

And this weekend will see scads of volunteers out bending their backs for two excellent causes.

One is Johnny Horizon Day, the annual cleanup of area roads and highways. Hundreds of volunteers will scatter down highway shoulders and borrow pits, stuffing pop cans and candy wrappers into sacks.

The other is the raising of the walls at the first house being put up by Habitat for Humanity of the Magic Valley.

Habitat is a nationwide organization that builds homes for low-income people. Thanks to free labor by volunteers and by the future homeowners themselves, Habitat puts home ownership within reach of people who otherwise would struggle to pay rent.

Both these events will take place on Saturday. Though the scheduling would seem to be a conflict, our guess is that neither project will have a shortage of eager workers.

Meanwhile, hundreds more local volunteers will go right with the everyday kind of giving that doesn't make headlines: tutoring, visiting shut-ins, teaching Sunday school, leading Scout troops, coaching youth soccer and the like.

(Notice how many items on that list deal with children? Imagine the cost of raising a family if parents had to pay for all the services now provided by volunteers.)

What's in it for the volunteers? Ask one, and the reply will surely be some variation on, "It helps the community," or "It makes me feel good."

Chiches, certainly, but accurate ones. The German philosopher Friedrich Nietzsche wrote: "Should not the giver be thankful that the receiver received? Is not giving a need? Is not receiving a mercy?"

Maybe so. In any case, our community can be glad that so many want to give of themselves, for whatever motive.

Want to help?

If you'd like to volunteer this Saturday for Johnny Horizon Day or Habitat for Humanity, here's how:

Johnny Horizon: Call the cleanup coordinator for your area:

Buhl: Kenny Hulise, 543-5211.
Castleton: Trisha Wetzstein, 537-6511 or 537-6686, and Susan Murphy, 537-6501.

Filer: Joe Baratti, 326-5001 or 326-4821.

Hansen: John Hinton, 423-6356.

Hollister: Tergessa Taylor and Evelyn Slater, 655-4310.

Kimberly: Jesse Posey, 423-4151.

Murtaugh: Robin Wright, 432-6643.

Rogerson: Sherry Satterwhite, 655-4322.

Twin Falls: Darrell A. Heider or Lueanne Attix at the county Solid Waste Department, 734-9491.

Habitat: Show up at 10 a.m. at the work site, at the corner of Fourth

How to tell when the Allies mean business in Bosnia:

The report that shook up the schools

Edward B. Fiske

foundations of our society are ... being eroded by a rising tide of mediocrity that threatens our very future as a Nation and a people."

The report went on to list what should be done to get American education up to a world class level: more attention to core academic subjects, higher standards, longer school days and years, higher pay and more rigorous certification standards for teachers, more standardized tests, including basic literacy tests for teachers, and so on.

This did Terrell Bell, who thought things were OK, become the father of contemporary school reform.

Bell's boss, President Reagan, had maintained a simple three-part agenda for education: Abolish the dated Department of Education, enact tuition tax credits for parents of children in private and parochial schools and a get constitutional amendment to permit prayer in the schools.

When the commission sent an early copy of "A Nation at Risk" to the White House in mid-April, the domestic advisers were angered to discover that it made no mention of this political holy trinity. Unless the document was made politically correct, they warned, they would cancel the Rose Garden ceremony where Gardner was scheduled to present the first copy to President Reagan. Gardner refused.

After much give and take, a compromise was reached: The report would remain unchanged, the ceremony would go ahead as scheduled, and President Reagan would, in his own remarks, praise the commission for its supposed ringing endorsement of the holy trinity. This is exactly what happened. The commission members left Washington in a depressed state of mind. As one member remarked to Gardner, "We've been used."

Several days later, Michael Deaver called Secretary Bell to his office. It seems that political polls were showing that "A Nation at Risk" had struck a chord with the public. "Americans care about education," he explained to the secretary, who recalls replying with something to the effect, "No kidding."

Deciding that the quality of public education had voter appeal, Reagan put it on the national domestic political agenda. He began touring the country to demonstrate his administration's commitment to good schooling, and Secretary Bell, the erstwhile political pariah, discovered what the inside of Air Force One looked like.

It is difficult to overstate the impact of "A Nation at Risk" through the rest of the 1980s. Its depiction of the dismal state of American public education inspired a national school reform movement that was the first since the launching of Sputnik by the Soviet Union in 1957, and the largest ever.

Within a year or so of the appearance of the report, every state legislature and statewide board of education had enacted some sort of school improvement program — most of them in line with the steps recommended by the commission.

As it's turned out, a lot of good things are happening because 18 citizens had the courage to tell their political benefactor that, so far as the quality of America public schools was concerned, the emperor had no clothes.

Energy tax will hit agriculture

The proposal to tax all types of energy will hit agriculture in the Magic Valley extremely hard. The majority of our farmers are conservation-conscious. This not only involves water but also soil. Because of this, many farmers have installed sprinkler systems. These are expensive to install and to operate at present power costs.

This proposed tax increase hits those hardest that have tried to be good conservationists. Agriculture as a whole is not able to pass their costs on as most other types of business or manufacturing can. Any farmer pumping water will be looking at a tax increase ranging from a few hundred dollars into several thousand dollars for some of our larger operators.

This tax increase not only will be on electric power but also on diesel fuel and gasoline for farm purposes. Sure, we realize changes need to be made in our national economy, but let's don't soak agriculture for too much of the bill.

Nothing makes ranchers happy

We all know the cow is sacred in many parts of India. But how about those grazing on national forests and the Bureau of Land Management public lands in Idaho?

A camper who spends a week at $6 a day in a Forest Service campground pays as much as a rancher puts out to run three cows and their big calves for the entire grazing season. The camper can face a stiff fine if he drives his rig through a stream. A hundred cows slopping through the same water are dismissed as a factor in multiple use.

The camper can stay in his chosen Forest Service site for only 14 days. The cows can camp all summer. Should a driver hit one of these cows on an unfenced road in the forest, he'll be held responsible for damages to both his car and the cow. And any bovine so damaged will become a rare specimen of great value.

A new twist to the taxpayers charitable support of range cattle is the concept of Incentive Based Grazing fees. This, in a nutshell, would allow ranchers who abide by the rules and make certain improvements to qualify for lower grazing fees. Now watch the Western senators who cry loudly for reduced public spending. Livestock interests will have them lined up in an unbroken row behind this new grazing charity.

While we're about it, let's note that the taxpayers fork out about $30 million a year in predator-control operations that essentially protect the domestic animals from such native wildlife as bears, cougars, bobcats and coyotes.

Does all this keep Idaho ranchers happy? Not quite. As reported in the Times-News April 19, ranchers who graze the national forest lands south of Twin Falls would prefer to tell the Forest Service officials when the permitted grazing seasons should start and end. It irks them when the people trained and hired to manage these public lands insist on doing their jobs.

We don't need logging industry

While Idaho's elected representatives in Washington spout rhetoric about cutting the federal deficit, they are actually busy working to protect and expand senseless government spending programs. Hidden in the Trojan horse of proposed federal wilderness legislation are plans to significantly expand heavily subsidized logging on national forests in Idaho.

Contrary to the claims of the timber industry and their politicians, we don't need the timber. All the national forests in the United States contribute only 14 percent of the timber harvested each year, and none of that is needed for either home construction or paper products. The recent jump in lumber prices is mostly due to cyclical factors and not due to a shortage of timber.

In fact, falling demand cannot sustain the present rate of logging. New household formation throughout the 1990s will average about 1.1 million annually, down from 1.7 million in the 1970s and 1.3 million in the 1980s. Housing construction is declining accordingly. And economical, alternative building materials are readily available.

At the same time, new federal landfill regulations will very soon make it prohibitively expensive to dispose of waste paper in landfills — indeed, in many eastern states, paper must now be recycled by law. This forced recycling of paper will further reduce demand for timber. In addition, on non-federal lands — the source of 86 percent of our logs — Forest Service figures show that standing timber has increased by 25 percent since 1950, but the industry naturally prefers dirt-cheap, subsidized federal timber.

Last year, based on the ludicrous argument that Canada unfairly subsidizes logging, the timber industry convinced its politicians to impose a 14.5 percent import tariff on Canadian lumber. The clamor for the protection of import tariffs was a sure sign of timber surplus.

Just as fallacious is the claim that logging on our national forests is a significant source of employment. Only 25,000 jobs are dependent on this enormously subsidized government program, loses nearly half a billion dollars annually. Now consider that for the past two years, an average of 80,000 Americans have lost their jobs every business day of every week.

So the 25,000 jobs that are dependent on federal timber sales amount to about the number of jobs that are lost during a 2.5-hour period on any given work day in America. And the vast majority of those who lose their jobs find other work.

An appeal to the public-at-large

Quite a number of "supernatural" events have occurred in my life, and it is due to their nature and the political/religious ramifications that certain interests want me silenced. Therefore, I hereby appeal to the public-at-large for aid and protection.

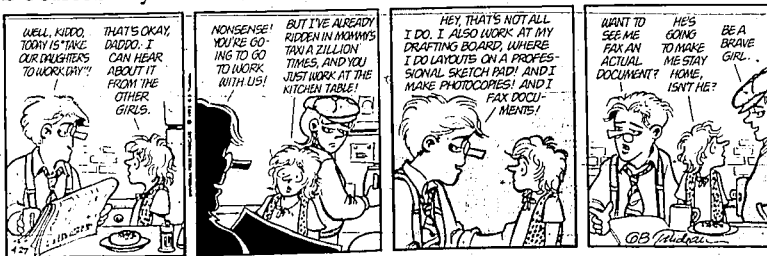

I ask that a task force be formed — first, to fully record my recollections of these numerous events and, secondly, to perhaps pursue corroborative testimony and evidences and to look into other matters.

I hereby swear that everything in this letter is true. My great-grandfather came to the Picaabo area in the 1880s. I was born and raised in Elko, Nev., and came to Idaho in 1973. I am known by many as a functional and apparently sane and responsible person.

In 1979 near Caldwell, I saw a human spirit floating above the spot where the person had died three days before in an auto accident I had also witnessed.

In 1968, my sister and I were delivered from a probable death by an entity suddenly steering our vehicle that was about to plunge into a gorge.

Mourners observe Chernobyl anniversary

KIEV, Ukraine (AP) — Hundreds of people in Kiev and Moscow mourned victims of the Chernobyl nuclear accident at services Monday marking the seventh anniversary of what Russia's prime minister called "a black day for us."

President Leonid Kravchuk of Ukraine led a memorial service in the capital, Kiev. A tribute also was held at a windswept cemetery in Moscow for victims of the world's worst nuclear accident. "We must take responsibility for our decisions, and we should be responsible for our people, for nature, for our land," Kravchuk said at the Chernobyl Memorial Museum. "People have come to understand ... that mankind's responsibility for atomic power should be much greater," the Ukrainian leader told the crowd of 500 people, including some resettled from the Chernobyl area.

An explosion and fire at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant, 80 miles north of Kiev, began spewing radiation across Europe on April 26, 1986.

Soviet officials said 31 people were killed, mostly firefighters. But some Ukrainian and Western scientists believe the actual toll from cancer and related illnesses could be in the thousands.

Oleg Perchuka's widow, Larissa, left, and daughter help his mother, Nadezhda Perchuka, at a memorial service for Chernobyl victims Monday in Moscow.

More than 25,000 people were evacuated immediately, and more than 180,000 eventually were resettled.

At Mitinskoye Cemetery in Moscow, a military band played funeral dirges, and grieving family members lay roses, tulips and carnations on black granite slabs where 27 victims were buried.

Above them loomed an unfinished memorial, a stark bronze figure of a man with outstretched arms pocked by holes as if something were eating away at him. He was framed by a gray, concrete mushroom cloud.

"This is a black day for us," Russian Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin said. "This day will always live in our memory."

But Larissa Perchuka, 39, said the government officials' speeches did nothing to make up for the loss of her husband, Oleg. "You see how far away I am standing from them ... that's what I think of these leaders and their speeches," Perchuka said.

She said her husband, a technician at the plant, was injured in the explosion at Reactor No. 4 and died 25 days later from radiation sickness.

Dozens of family members stayed after the service for a picnic of bread, pickles and vodka.

"Never again!" said a white-haired man, lifting his glass and leading the others in a toast.

The World Health Organization said Sunday that cases of children's thyroid cancer in the contaminated area had risen dramatically since the accident. The children are the first whose cancer can be linked directly to the nuclear fallout, said Nikolai Napalkov, assistant director-general at the U.N. agency.

Children in some areas are still eating food grown on land contaminated by the accident, Russian television reported from the Belarussian capital, Minsk.

A 23-inch high statue of a high priest dating back 4,600 years is one of a number of items found near the Giza Pyramids.

Excavation unearths treasures

GIZA PLATEAU, Egypt (AP) — Egyptian excavators digging in two ancient cemeteries have discovered an archaeological treasure buried within sight of the Giza Pyramids.

Findings include several painted statues — one an extraordinary depiction of a father and his two young children — intricate tombs and decorated limestone tablets.

There's even a chilling, and evidently successful, curse to frighten away would-be tomb robbers.

The discoveries came to light over the past six months, during digging in graveyards where upper- and middle-class officials were buried during the era of Giza's pyramid-building pharaohs, 4,600 years ago.

They're remarkable not only for their beauty but because they yield insights into Egyptian society during the time of the early pharaohs.

"It just shows how much is out there to be discovered," said Zahi Hawass, the antiquities official who headed the Giza excavations. Hawass is currently lecturing on the finds in Philadelphia and other U.S. and Canadian cities.

Egypt has yet to announce the finds officially, and the excavations have been temporarily shut down. An announcement was planned months ago as part of a campaign to counter tourism losses from Islamic extremist attacks.

The extremists seek to undermine Egypt's secular government, which depends heavily on tourism revenue. About 140 people have died in attacks and police retaliation over the past 15 months, and both the number of tourists and tourism revenues are believed to have dropped sharply.

In the excavations, the most impressive discovery is a painted limestone statue of the high priest Kai. He served all three pharaohs who built pyramids on Giza Plateau and was entombed among upper-class pharaonic officials.

Guess What Incredible Interest Rate We're Offering On Home Equity Lines?

Okay, so we're not masters of subtlety, but we have put together a pretty great Home Equity Line offer. Apply for a new Home Equity Line before May 31, 1993, and for an entire year, we'll assign a great fixed 8.0% Annual Percentage Rate (APR) to your line of credit. The fixed 8.0% APR interest rate will apply to any withdrawals you take during the first year after your loan is opened.

After the one-year period, the interest rate on your loan will revert to a variable rate based on the Wall Street Journal prime rate plus 2.0%.

And with a First Security Home Equity Line, you don't pay any appraisal, title, insurance, origination, or filing fees. We even waive the first year annual fee of $50. Plus, we'll protect your interest rate with a rate cap of 14.5% APR on your new line until January 1, 1995. And that's not all.

With a First

Security Home Equity Line, you have extra options.

You can make interest-only payments for the first ten years of the loan. That interest is 100% tax deductible for most folks (see your tax adviser for details). We also offer convenient automatic payment deduction from your checking or savings account.

There it is. A bona fide bargain you won't want to miss. So open a new Home Equity Line (minimum of $10,000) at your nearest First Security Bank of Idaho office. Or call 1-800-657-5513. And do it soon. Offer ends May 31, 1993.

Suspect jailed in Rexburg boy's death

REXBURG Police are investigating the Saturday death of a 21-month-old Rexburg boy.

Officials on Monday said a suspect was being held in Madison County jail on a drunken driving charge. Criminal charges might be filed in connection with the boy's death after an autopsy, which was being conducted in Bonneville County.

Kristopher Bret Purcell died at Eastern Idaho Regional Medical Center Saturday afternoon. The boy's mother, Gayle Stephens of Rexburg, came home and found the boy with multiple injuries, witnesses said.

Inkom plant powers itself with tires

INKOM In two weeks, the Ashgrove Cement Co. plant here will start burning old tires as part of the fuel for its cement kilns.

The company's been authorized to use tires for up to 14 percent of its energy needs about one tire every 90 seconds. That's more than 28,000 per month, based on a 24-hour operation.

"We're excited about it," said Plant Manager Henrik Voldback. The Idaho Division of Environmental Quality issued a permit for the experimental technology, designed both to get rid of the tires that clog landfills and to provide a source of energy. Ashgrove gave the state data from other facilities that use tires, showing it's possible to burn tires without polluting the air.

The company must successfully burn 14 percent tires along with the coal and waste oil it currently uses without increasing emissions, Voldback said. If that works, the state will allow it to gradually increase the proportion of tires to 25 percent.

Sheriff urges no charge against inmate

CALDWELL Canyon County Sheriff George Nourse says he sees no need to file an escape charge against a county jail inmate who tried to escape on April 10.

David Knight, 23, Caldwell, who is being held on a grand theft charge, tried to escape by breaking through a jail cell's ceiling and hiding in the crawl space between floors. He was quickly recaptured, but county officials say they may have to beef up security in the ceilings of cells. Nourse immediately ordered installation of motion detectors between floors. Knight is being held under $100,000 bond.

Within days of Knight's attempted escape, jail director Bob Bigelow resigned. The second in command at the jail, Capt. Teri Carpenter, contends she was fired over the incident last Wednesday, and has filed a tort claim against the county.

Shoshonis plan historic July wedding

BLACKFOOT Blackfoot will be the site of what is believed to be the first traditional Shoshoni Indian wedding in more than 70 years July 31 at a city park.

Leonard Alex, who said he is chairman of the Northwest Band of Shoshoni, and Theda McPherson, a national health care coordinator, will be married at twilight in a traditional Shoshoni ceremony in native language and dress with a medicine man attending. "This is the first ceremony of this type to be performed in over 70 years that we know of," said Alex. State and federal dignitaries representing 35 states are expected to attend along with television crews and writers for national magazines.

Suspect dies following chase by police

MCCALL A man who police say shot himself in a McCall bar after running from officers through city streets has died in a Boise hospital.

He was identified as John Leach, 36, by the Ada County coroner's office. Leach died early Sunday at St. Alphonsus Regional Medical Center, where he had been in critical condition after being brought by helicopter from McCall on Saturday, said Lynn Bowerman, chief deputy coroner.

Patrol boats will battle salmon poachers

LEWISTON (AP) If any endangered Snake River sockeye salmon return to their spawning grounds this summer, they'll have an escort from the ocean.

The USS Corliss, a 56-foot ocean cruiser, will follow migrating chinook salmon and any remaining sockeye as they travel up the Snake and Columbia rivers.

The vessel will serve as a 24-hour base of operations for two smaller patrol boats and a multi-agency police force determined to prevent anyone from illegally killing salmon.

The big boat will turn back at Lewiston, but that won't stop the escort.

"We're going to keep going all the way to Redfish Lake (in central Idaho's mountains), using jet boats and airplanes," said Dave Johnson, coordinator of the Columbia River Law Enforcement Committee.

The flotilla will be the highest profile yet in a three-year, $4.5 million salmon enforcement project. The project already has added 23 field officers to those on the rivers. They have state-of-the-art surveillance equipment.

It began in January, 1992. The Bonneville Power Administration provided the money to the Columbia River Law Enforcement Committee. It was created in the 1970s to coordinate enforcement on the Columbia and its tributaries.

The Idaho Fish and Game commission received $700,000 of the money.

Rod Nichols, Lewiston, said part of Idaho's money went to pay for public education. "There are people in the fisher community, non enforcement folks, who oppose the project because their thinking says poaching is not an important factor — that we have to focus on habitat and the hydro dams," he said.

"I don't think anyone in this project is under the illusion that poaching is the major factor (causing declines in the salmon runs). They just feel it is a factor, and since we're down to such low numbers on some of these runs, you have to worry about every fish."

The project allows for air surveillance. At night, the flying cops use heat-sensitive infrared equipment to spot people on the river. Ground officers are alerted to suspicious activity.

Amphibious planes are used for daylight patrols.

Jim Brown, one of seven officers hired by Washington state with the BPA money, is on the lookout for people whose fishing gear indicates they are targeting salmon.

"It's also looking for out of season or off-limits species of fish. Even if a salmon is injured and accidentally caught, it must be returned to the river."

Brown's also on the lookout for commercial poachers, who snare salmon in nets.

"One person with a gillnet out there for three or four days can do as much damage as 20 fishermen," he said.

Brown said an angler who catches a salmon in closed season is subject to $150 fine in Washington.

Collect calls mean profits for jail, state penitentiary

POCATELLO (AP) Although they probably aren't aware of it, people who accept collect telephone calls from the Bannock County Jail and the Idaho State Penitentiary are helping pay the costs of running the facilities.

That's because both the jail and prison collect commissions on collect calls placed by inmates to outside numbers.

Bannock County usually receives an 18 percent commission on phone calls made from the jail. Sheriff Bill Lynn said. The money goes into the justice fund which helps pay for jail operation.

The phone system generates $600-$1,200 per month, said sheriff's Lt. Gwen Evans.

The state penitentiary funnels the commissions back to prisoner facilities. A 1990 report showed the Idaho State Penitentiary was collecting $3,000 to $5,000 a month in phone commissions, according to a study by a Public Utilities Commission analyst.

Prisoners can place calls only on a collect basis. If somebody refuses the call, it's terminated. But if they accept, it can be expensive.

Collect phone calls made from a Bannock County Jail inmate to John Hart in Downey on March 13 cost him $34.67, according to records from Tataka Corp., the company that provides the phone service to the jail.

Jail phone systems are expensive because they have to screen out restricted calls and withstand vandalism, Lynn said. Calls need to be screened, so inmates can't call people and harass them.

Lynn likes the current phone system because it makes money, he said.

Dairy robbery suspects' fates in judge's hands

TWIN FALLS — A judge will issue a written decision soon on whether three men charged with robbing two dairy workers in February will stand trial.

Fifth District Magistrate Judge Melvin Edwards took the case under advisement after making oral findings on some of the facts in the case, Twin Falls County Prosecutor G. Richard Bevan said. Edwards will decide later if the evidence is sufficient to justify a trial.

Brothers James Fox, 24, and Stacey Fox, 21, of Wendell and Ronald Lehmann, 23, of Buhl are charged with robbery, second-degree kidnapping, burglary, grand theft and criminal conspiracy.

The trio are charged in connection with the Feb. 25 robberies of two workers at a dairy near Buhl.

Stanley Museum officials want help solving robbery

STANLEY — Several valuable items were stolen from the Stanley Museum earlier this month, and officials want help finding the culprits.

Ruth Niece, chairman of the Sawtooth Interpretive and Historical Association, said that somebody apparently broke into the museum during the weekend of April 17.

The museum is closed during the winter, but Niece checks it regularly to make sure the heater is working. When she checked the museum on April 19, several valuable artifacts, including a collection of antique cameras, were missing.

Other items reported stolen include flat irons, children's toys and decorative kerosene lamps.

Anybody with information on the robbery can call Niece at 774-3380 or the Custer County sheriff's office at 1-800-523-1537.

Former Twin Falls man to face child sex charges

TWIN FALLS — A former Twin Falls man has been arrested and charged with three counts of child sexual abuse.

Jack Frates, 46, was arrested Friday by the Ada County sheriff's office and returned to Twin Falls. He faces two charges of lewd conduct with a minor under 16 and one count of sexual battery of a minor between 16 and 17.

As of Monday afternoon, he remained in jail on a $50,000 bond.

The incidents happened between 1984 and 1989, Twin Falls Prosecutor G. Richard Bevan said in court documents, and involved "numerous" acts.

Frates had been counseling at Boise's Veterans Hospital's sex offenders program, but had quit and was threatening people involved in the case, according to an affidavit filed by Craig Carroll of the Kimberly Police Department.

Twin Falls Canal Co. to begin water deliveries Wednesday

TWIN FALLS — Repairs to the Twin Falls Canal Co.'s Main Canals are complete, and the company expected to begin water deliveries Wednesday.

The Main Canal now has water in it and it appears to be holding, the company reports.

Spring: Season for foliage — and ticks

The Times-News and The Associated Press

Spring in the Northwest brings forth fragrant flowers, green grass, baby animals and bloodsucking ticks.

And those ticks can carry diseases: Lyme disease, relapsing fever, tick paralysis and Rocky Mountain spotted fever.

In 1992, two cases of Lyme disease were reported in southern Idaho, said Cheryl Becker, nurse epidemiologist with the South Central District Health Department in Twin Falls.

Anyone who goes out in the field to camp, look at wildflowers, work or whatever should inspect their bodies twice a day. Pets should be checked too.

Mike Todd of the Region 4 Fish and Game office in Jerome suggests wearing long pants. White socks and light-colored clothing also make the little bloodsuckers easier to spot, he said.

A person who finds an imbedded tick should grab the parasite as close to the skin as possible either with tweezers or gloved fingers — and pull steadily and gently.

Wash the bite thoroughly and apply an antiseptic.

If possible, put the tick in a small container with a few blades of grass for moisture and refrigerate. Do not freeze. Note the date and location of tick contact.

If signs of illness — fever, muscle pain, weakness, severe headaches or rash — occur in the next 14 days, see a doctor and take the tick so if necessary it can be tested. Otherwise, after three weeks, discard the tick, said Mike LaSeoula of the Spokane County Health District.

Tick season is the spring and summer months. Ticks are most commonly found in brushy and wooded areas, LaSeoula said.

LaSeoula said 99.9 percent of tick bites pose no risk to people, but tick-borne illnesses can be serious, he said.

In 1992, two cases of relapsing fever, which is characterized by attacks of fever and chills, were reported in Spokane County.

Insect repellent and proper clothing provide some protection. LaSeoula recommends applying insect repellent to clothes rather than directly on the skin.

One of the worst problems with ticks can be during hunting season. Hunters bring home deer and lots of ticks that end up in automobile trunks, garages and houses, LaSeoula said.

Tick populations begin to diminish with the first frost.

Dr. Keith E. Davis advises medical assistant Lynne Miller on what tests are needed for Medicare patient Harry Johnson Monday afternoon in Shoshone.

Study: Fewer physicians equal less hospital care for Medicare patients

By Kirk Mitchell
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A shortage of family doctors in Idaho makes it tougher for Medicare-eligible patients to get hospital care in the state, a new study suggests.

The study by the New England Journal of Medicine ranks Idaho 50th in the country for its number of hospital admissions per 1,000 Medicare-eligible persons.

Idaho also has the lowest average Medicare payments for inpatient care. Dr. Keith E. Davis, president of the South Central Idaho District Medical Society, said he believes the Medicare payments and utilization rates in the Twin Falls area are at least as low as in the rest of Idaho.

It suggests that people who need to be hospitalized are not, Davis said.

Also, people who cannot find a doctor are waiting until their conditions are so bad that they must go to the emergency room for care, he said.

"Some of them are going untreated,"

Davis said.

He said one Twin Falls doctor, whom he declined to name, stopped taking Medicare patients this year because of all the paperwork.

The paperwork for Medicare patients can require a full-time staffer, he said.

Because of lower Medicare reimbursements in Idaho it is tougher to recruit new doctors to the state, Davis said.

Davis, who is a primary doctor in Shoshone, said Medicare patients represent only 20 percent of his patients, but take up 40 percent of his time. And Medicare only reimburses him at 70 percent of his regular rates, he said.

Authors of the national study said that the ratio of doctors to specialists largely determines a state's volume of Medicare payments, not the state's total number of doctors.

This may be true in major metropolitan areas studied by the researchers, Davis said. "But in Idaho we face a crisis — a shortage of primary care physicians, and believe this is a contributing factor to lower utilization rates."

Although Idaho has fewer physicians per capita than any other state, a higher percentage of Idaho's physicians are in primary care than in other specialties.

Bob Seehusen, executive director of the Idaho Medical Association, said all Idaho doctors should be credited for low Medicare costs.

"Physicians work to keep costs as low as possible," Seehusen said. "Unfortunately the government doesn't seem to recognize the effort being made by physicians and hospitals in the state."

Doctors struggle to balance their books when their costs increase 5 to 6 percent a year and Medicare reimbursement rates fall or rise 1 or 2 percent a year, he said.

Hospital admission rates per 1,000 Medicare-eligible persons ranged from 219 in Idaho to 533 in Mississippi in the areas studied by the researchers, Davis said. "But in Idaho we face a crisis — a shortage of primary care physicians, and

Medicaid doctors suffer cuts

The Times-News
The Associated Press

TWIN FALLS — Dr. Mary Groda-Lewis, whom Gov. Cecil Andrus singled out in January as a big recipient of Medicaid dollars, is receiving a lot fewer of those dollars this year.

Groda-Lewis, like other health clinics and physicians who treat large numbers of Medicaid patients, says she is suffering under Andrus' cuts in the program.

She said she stands to lose between $30,000 and $40,000 this year, mostly because of a reduction in the Medicaid reimbursement for office visits by patients. She is also confronting a reduction in the amount of money paid by Medicaid for cesarean-section births.

In January, Andrus ordered cuts in the amount physicians are paid for treating Medicaid patients. Groda-Lewis takes most of the Medicaid patients in Twin Falls, and Andrus touched off a controversy when mentioned her high level of payments from the program.

Last year, Groda-Lewis received about $200,000 in Medicaid reimbursements, which was about $100,000 less than she would have received if her Medicaid customers had been able to pay her full price for services. In 1992, Groda-Lewis saw about 10,000 patients; 75 percent were Medicaid patients.

Groda-Lewis said Andrus' cuts will not stop her from seeing Medicaid patients. "We'll just absorb it," said David Lewis, husband and office manager.

But in January, before learning of the cuts, Groda-Lewis had to limit the number of new Medicaid patients she receives, "because 1

Astrologer sues KMVT, the Arnolds

By Suzanne Huxhold
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — A former Hollywood astrologer living in Twin Falls has sued a local television station and TV stars Roseanne and Tom Arnold.

Donna Hennen's complaint, filed Monday in Los Angeles, alleges that a news story about her involvement with the Arnolds caused her to lose clients and to become ostracized throughout the Magic Valley.

The complaint also accuses television station KMVT of poor judgment in airing the story Dec. 10, 1992, it alleges that KMVT's news assignment editor, Charles Lemmon, had "malicious feelings and intentions" toward astrologers and didn't want Hennen to live in Twin Falls.

Hennen said she was contacted by Lemmon about a feature story after Hennen arranged to have a television commercial filmed at KMVT's studios.

In the suit, Hennen said reporter Pat Marcantonio "ambushed" her during the subsequent interview. Marcantonio told Astrologer Donna Hennen says she has been harmed by a news story that aired on KMVT.

her the Arnolds had said they consulted Hennen only "a few" times and had fired Hennen for "bad advice," the suit alleges.

Hennen's complaint contends that the Arnolds and their associates consulted her 13 times, and that she was not fired. It accuses KMVT of slandering Hennen and then destroying notes of the interview with the Arnolds.

KMVT's news director, Douglas

Maughan, said Monday that he could not comment on Hennen's charges. But he said suit came as no surprise.

Maughan added that he had not seen the complaint and was "a little uncomfortable" commenting on its contents.

The Arnolds' attorney, Michael Robins, said he hadn't seen the lawsuit either, but

Jury may hear why Chisholm threw paint

By N.S. Nokkentved
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Bill Chisholm of Buhl may get a chance to tell a jury why he threw paint on a train carrying nuclear waste last year.

The city of Pocatello would like to keep him from turning a courtroom into a public forum to air his views.

Chisholm appeared in 6th District Court in Pocatello Monday to appeal a magistrate judge's decision denying him a civil disobedience defense.

Chisholm had asked to be allowed to defend his actions in the perspective of the nuclear waste controversy, he said.

In January, he had pleaded guilty to a misdemeanor charge of injury to property. He was fined $300 and ordered to pay $1,000 restitution to clean the paint off the train. He also received one year of probation, and a 10-day jail sentence was suspended.

Chisholm, however, agreed to the penalties on the condition that he be permitted to appeal the court's refusal to hear his "defense of necessity" — a civil disobedience defense based on his claim that he was trying to prevent a greater harm.

The District Court judge Monday sent the case back to the Magistrate Court for jury trial. He will let Chisholm tell his story to the jury, but he denied Chisholm's motions to call declared, "It has no merit whatsoever." Robbins previously has denied the Arnolds made the statements attributed to them by KMYT.

"I know the Arnolds have done nothing whatsoever to harm this lady," Robbins added.

Heumen said she has brought the lawsuit after spending the past two months seeking a retraction from either the Arnolds or KMYT.

"If they had given me a retraction, none of this would have happened," Heumen said from her Twin Falls home Monday. "At this point, I don't know who is lying and who is telling the truth."

Local fallout from the story continues, she said.

"I went to apply for a job just last week and the lady at the personnel office said, 'Oh, I know who you are. You were fired by Roseanne,'" Heumen said. "I just want the people of this town to know that isn't true."

Hennen's Beverly Hills attorney, Darian Bojeaux, said the lawsuit is Hennen's last resort in an attempt to get her life back together.

The ironic thing is that Roseanne portrays in her series the problems faced by people trying to make a living and support their family, when, in reality, Roseanne and Tom Arnold have an "off with their heads, fire them" attitude, and have no concern for the pain and hardship they cause to others and their families," Bojeaux said.

Volunteers needed to clean up property

RUPERT — Dave Pauli, director of the Humane Society, put out a plea Monday for additional volunteers at the Myrtle Kelly residence.

Pauli is helping clean up the mess left by dozens of animals that Kelly has collected at her property at South Fifth and C Street in Rupert. No local volunteers from the general public have joined him, Pauli said.

The cleanup will continue through Friday, Pauli said.

can't continue to see people I lose money on." However, she still takes new pregnancy cases and the case of pregnant patients' children, she said.

Medicaid cuts were targeted at procedures that cost Medicaid more in Idaho than in neighboring states, such as office examinations and cesarean sections.

"If you are going to achieve cost containment, you have to look at where the money is spent, and the Cesarean births are clearly the expensive births," said Ann Kirkwood, spokeswoman for the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare.

For the Boise-based Family Practice Residency program, which operates the Family Practice Medical Clinic, the cuts will mean a $100,000 hole in next year's $3 million budget.

At non-profit Terry Kelly Health Services the cuts will cost up to $22,000 a year in a budget totaling about $5 million.

Obstetrical services were among the hardest-hit, and the clinic in Boise provides a lot of them. It treats all pregnant Medicaid patients in Ada County.

The clinic formerly got $1,600 for the prenatal care, delivery and postpartum care of women who gave birth by Cesarean section. That has been reduced to $1,300.

By comparison, identical care for a patient with private insurance would cost about $2,000, according to one group practice in Boise.

The family suggests memorial contributions may be made to the Blaine Manor, Box 927, Hailey or to the Blaine County Education Foundation, Box 1008, Hailey ID 83333. Arrangements are under the direction of the West River Funeral Chapel in Hailey.

expert witnesses and to use the civil disobedience defense.

But Chisholm may not get to tell his story to a jury. The city of Pocatello may file its own appeal.

"We agreed with the way the magistrate judge ruled," Deputy City Attorney E.W. Carter said.

Chisholm is not charged with any federal crime, and Carter is trying to keep it a simple misdemeanor, he said. He also is trying to keep Chisholm from using a criminal courtroom as a forum for his views, Carter said.

It's not that the city disagrees with his views, it just doesn't think that a criminal courtroom is the proper place to air them, Carter said.

Chisholm said Monday that he wants a chance to tell a jury about the dangers of storing radioactive waste over the Snake River Plain Aquifer and the dangers of storing radioactive waste in general, no matter where it's stored.

The federal government essentially has turned Idaho National Engineering Laboratory into a nuclear waste dump by bringing in spent Navy fuels and other spent fuel to be stored indefinitely, Chisholm said.

Last October, Chisholm threw a $4 quart of red paint at the train passing through Pocatello. The paint hit the last of three stainless-steel transport casks carrying spent reactor fuel to the INEL.

The shipment was part of the U.S. Navy's Nuclear Propulsion Program, which brings all its spent reactor fuel to Idaho for inspection and storage. The Navy does not discuss the classified shipments to protect them from terrorists and foreign spies, officials say.

Chisholm also was arrested outside Pocatello in 1991 for attempting to stop an INEL-backed truckload of waste from a commercial Colorado reactor.

Cassia Commissioners grant extension on landfill information

By Eric Goodell
Mini-Cassia News Service

BURLEY — Cassia County commissioners have given a Boise-based company two more weeks to provide detailed information about its plans for a Burley Butte landfill.

The commissioners had intended to question Dispose-All Inc. President Douglas Lomow on Monday about his company's plans. But Lomow said he had received a letter asking for the information only a day ago.

County lawyer Steve Bywater, however, said he faxed the information to Lomow April 20 and also mailed a letter to Dispose-All the same day.

"The information was in their office on the 20th," Bywater said. Lomow said he doesn't yet know many details concerning the landfill. He said he wasn't able to get all the information from the engineering firm.

He said, however, that the engineering firm is recommending a composite liner for the landfill. That partially answered one of the commissioners' big questions.

The landfill is already under construction on the butte eight miles west of Burley, even though it lacks the permits required for operation.

According to Bywater, however, state law allows landfill construction without permits if the liner is installed.

Commissioners want Dispose-All to fill out a landfill application, which would include detailed information regarding the company's financial status and engineering studies of the landfill site.

In an opening speech, Lomow urged the commissioners to re-examine their alliance with the Southern Idaho Solid Waste District, a group of six local counties working on a solid waste plan.

He suggested that the solid waste district wouldn't be able to open new landfills open by Oct. 9, the day old landfills are to close under federal guidelines.

He said organizing the solid waste district two years ago was commendable, "but today, as you know, things have changed dramatically." He said it's questionable whether the solid waste district will be able to "circumvent" the Idaho Constitution and pay for its landfills without a bond issue vote.

District officials hope to gain legal authorization to finance the landfills without a public vote. But Lomow said he has heard of a number of people who say they will intervene in court to try to stop the landfills.

Lomow said the landfill his company is building will be a "long-term, good-neighbor facility." He said he hopes the landfill will receive between 250 and 300 tons of trash per day. He said the company will seek to fill that requirement even if it must haul in out-of-state trash.

He said he has already looked at Camas and Elmore counties, as well as Jackson, Nev.

Susan Duncan, who lives about three miles from the site, asked Lomow whether neighbors' opposition to the landfill would affect Dispose-All's plans.

Lomow said there doesn't seem to be significant opposition to the landfill. He told Duncan that the landfill won't be an inconvenience.

Minidoka to maintain off-ramp beautification if state pays for it

By John J. Harber
Mini-Cassia News Service

RUPERT — If the state will pay for a $350,000 beautification of Rupert's key freeway off-ramp, Minidoka County will take over maintenance, officials say.

County commissioners voted Monday to apply for the off-ramp enhancement project. The project on Exit 208 would begin in 1997, according to Bill McClung, chairman of the Mini-Cassia Transportation Committee.

The project would include an irrigation system, grass, shrubs and trees. Under the proposal, once the state finishes the enhancement, Minidoka County will be responsible for maintaining it, McClung said.

The state estimated maintenance costs at $35,000 a year, but McClung called that estimate high.

Exit 208 carries travelers from Interstate Highway 84 to Rupert and Heyburn. Although the off-ramp is located in Minidoka County, the county may ask nearby Cassia County and local cities to help maintain it.

Commissioner John Rensberg said the enhancement will be a benefit to the whole area.

Minidoka County will not be locked into the agreement and has two years to get out if no one else is willing to help, McClung said. He did say, however, that mayors of at least two cities have expressed interest in helping.

Commissioner Norman Seibold said that while Cassia County gets most of the business that comes off the highway, "what's good for them is good for us."

The enhancement will be great for the Mini-Cassia area, McClung said.

McClung said the proposal to beautify the off-ramp was the idea of Gary Asson, a Burley businessman and transportation committee member.

Humorists plot to harness power of laughter to make America better

By Michael Precker
Dallas Morning News

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y. Decked out in a crazy-quilt jacket, propeller-topped orange hair, stockings and a red sponge nose, Lamore Dielenbacher wanders through the hotel lobby, blowing soapy bubbles from a wand stuck in a teddy-bear container.

Dielenbacher, a nurse from Chicago, is following instructions to wear whatever helps her feel comfortable, creative and lighthearted. She also has brought along an enormous flyswatter.

"This isn't my full outfit," she says. "Actually, I feel a little underdressed." Yes, ladies and gents, it's the eighth annual International Conference on Humor and Creativity. While most of you spent the weekend cutting the grass, catching a movie, hundreds of your fellow citizens trekked to a charming town in upstate New York to make your life a little merrier.

Dentists and ministers, social workers and consultants, clowns and stodgy business people, they are piling to harness the power of laughter to make America a better place.

"Humor and creativity are in every one of us," says Joel Goodman, founder of The Humor Project, which runs the conference. "And the world needs that. We can really make a difference."

Goodman, a former college professor, is both a funny guy and an important figure in the world of humor. But you won't catch him act in clubs or sitcoms, on "The Tonight Show" or the Comedy Central network.

Instead he is one of the leaders of a curatorial, less noticed aspect of America's comedy boom. The mission: to boldly joke where many have never joked before.

A word, for example. Sean Greenwald, whose job title really is "Grand Poobah of Joy" for Ben & Jerry's ice cream, regularly organizes employee events such as Elvis sneezing contests and persuades the boss to do things like dance around in a pink tutu.

Nobody jokes about the company's low absenteeism, high turnover, high productivity and quality control.

and a growing national reputation as a place where people love to work.

"It means breaking through the paradigm of 'If you laugh, you're not working,'" says Greenwald, of Watbury, Vt. "Why can't we be fun, too?"

At school, for example, Roger Anderson, president of nearby Adirondack Community College, likes to put comic strips on his memos, slip jokes into the minutes of meetings and wear a big "NOT" button at budget sessions.

"It's hard work," says Anderson. "It takes a lot more time to be creative and different. But you can get a message across in a humorous way. The goal is to mainstream humor into your organizational fabric and culture, not just to get silly once or twice a year."

Even in jail, believe it or not, Gili Dean, education coordinator for an 800-inmate detention center in Burlington, Ontario, says she tries to inject a light touch in a very unfunny place.

"It can all seem very hopeless," she says. "You don't clown around, but if you can give people a laugh, it's great. So I pretend we're in a place where we call the emergency button 'sassy service' and things like that. Maybe they'll relax a bit."

Dielenbacher volunteers for "clown rounds" at a children's hospital, using funny outfits, juggling and a little magic to coax smiles from young patients. She thinks that task is important enough to warrant a full-time paying job, and she's here for inspiration and ammunition to reach her goal.

"There's lots of contacts, lots of information, lots of people using humor," she says. "It's a lot of backing for us to fight skeptics who still think there's no place for this."

Humor has long been regarded as serious business. More and more studies show the therapeutic value of laughter for relieving stress, boosting spirits, even improving a medical prognosis.

Now it's an increasingly big business as well. Humor is becoming a mainstay of the motivational speaking and management training circuits. Humor consultants are springing up, collecting big fees to teach companies how a little levity can go a long way.

John Cleese of Monty Python fame is making a fortune marketing corporate humor videos; Steve Allen Jr., a physician, a humor conference regular and, yes, son of THAT Steve Allen, sells a kit showing how to juggle scarves. It comes with three colorful scarves and a promise to boost self-esteem and ease tension.

The chuckle-your-way-to-a-better life theme is flooding book and video stores with new titles like "How To Get Those Butterflies Flying in Formation: Laughter, Its For Survival," and "Some Days You're The Pigeon, Some Days You're The Statue."

Need more evidence? About 1,100 people from 40 states and Canada paid $325 each to attend the conference, plus the cost of getting to and staying in Saratoga Springs, which is 175 miles north of New York City.

"People are realizing there's a great need to pay attention to our lighter side," says Sheila Feigelson, a former teacher who conducts humor-based training workshops. "You run into such pompousness in a lot of corporate settings. Shared laughter has a power to create the kind of environment that is really inviting."

Feigelson, who lives in Ann Arbor, Mich., chaired a conference session on adding spice and fun to meetings. Some of the suggestions include headband nametags (for better eye contact), funny questions and food (for icebreakers and conversation starters) and special treats after a recess (so people will come back on time).

Is this really such revolutionary stuff?

"You'd be surprised," says Raïna Marder, of Longwood, Fla., who founded Lighten Up Ltd. two years ago. "We go into companies, and they've never done this before. They're all in their cubbyholes, and they don't talk to each other. People are just so uptight."

Marder and her partner, Lynn Berger, bring funny notes and foolish exercises to a growing list of corporate clients.

"It bonds people together," says Berger. "If you laugh together and play together, you work together better. You remember you were funny together instead of under stress all the time."

Cancer patient's friends lighten load

DEAR ABBY: May I share with you the incredible courage shown by a young friend of mine? She is Gail Aschenbrenner of Portland, Ore. She works in an office of the U.S. Forest Service there.

Dear Abby
Abigail VanBuren

At this writing, Gail is in remission from lymphoma, a form of cancer. The following is a copy of her letter of thanks to her colleagues and her many friends:

WHY I'M ALIVE TODAY
I'M ALIVE TODAY ... because I finally went to the doctor.
I'M ALIVE TODAY ... because of great advances in chemotherapy, especially over the last five years.
I'M ALIVE TODAY ... because you've donated hundreds of hours of your hard-earned annual leave, allowing me to keep paying my insurance premiums and have the luxury of staying home to recover from five months of difficult treatments.
I'M ALIVE TODAY ... because of all the cards, messages, phone calls and prayers you've sent me. Whenever I wanted to give up, I thought of you and your positive thoughts ... and paying those old and new medical bills that my insurance doesn't. Thanks to the terrible folks at Wind River Ranger District and Nursery who raised $2,000 auctioning off goods and services.

I'M ALIVE TODAY ... and getting better all the time. Because of physical suffering, I know what health is. Because of emotional heartache, I know what peace is. Because you were there for me when I was bald, blistered and bloated, I know what friendship is.

I'M ALIVE TODAY ... and "thank you" seems inadequate. No matter what the future brings, I'll always remember what you did for me.

YOUR FRIEND,
GAIL ASCHENBRENNER

Personally to me, Gail wrote: "I believe that my illness and suffering were given to me as a gift so that I will be able to recognize the many miracles of life while still young. I also feel that having fought this battle, it should be shared so that others may know a little better what endless possibilities for boundless joy await them if only to have health and love, and little else."

My response to Gail, in part: When the volunteers for the American Cancer Society come to our doors, we will remember you, Gail. Your brave words inspire us with renewed determination to help gain the victory for this noble cause.

BERENICE BUE JUVE

DEAR ABBY: What memories the letter signed "Bugged in St. Paul" brought back to me. My late husband rose from a country boy with an eighth-grade education to an executive in a large (and famous) nationally known corporation. He was called upon to make many speeches, and I cringed every time I heard him say, "I seen."

After years of keeping my mouth shut, I said, "Darling, don't say, 'I seen,' say either, 'I saw' or 'I have seen.'" He said, "Sure."

To my horror, the next time, it came out "I have saw ... After that, I gave up. (I liked "I seen" better.)

He's been gone for 34 years, and how I'd love to hear him say "I seen" again. By the way, I'm 91 and taking classes in German and Spanish and chair-dancing.

Project brings humor front, center

By Michael Precker
Dallas Morning News

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y. - If Alvin the van driver is out there somewhere, Joel Goodman sure would like to thank him.

In 1976, the college professor flew to Houston, where his father was facing surgery for a life-threatening aneurysm. On the daily five-minute drive from the hotel to the hospital, Alvin told jokes, did magic ... and worked wonders.

"Mum and I were just rigid with fear," he says. "He transformed two stressed-out people to people who would laugh and chuckle. We let go of some of our terrible tension."

After Dad's operation turned out fine, the son thought things over.

"Alvin had given us such a wonderful gift," says Goodman, who is 44. "I wondered: Do we have to wait for the Alvin of the world to come along at just the right moment, or can we be more intentional about humor?"

The Humor Project was born. Goodman became a clearinghouse for humor research, a world-traveling speaker about the power of humor and a self-styled Johnny Humoresque.

"We were the first kids on the block doing this," says Goodman, whose wife, Marie Ingram, coordinates the annual conference. "There was no career path for my shenanigans."

There is now. Goodman estimates that he has personally reached 500,000 people in years of speaking and that he answers 50,000 letters a year "from all over the planet."

The list of humor workshops, humor consultants and humor marketers is growing steadily, but Goodman says ... no kidding ... he doesn't mind.

"The world needs a lot of us," he says. "I think it's great people are picking up the ball."

The Humor Project's first conference in 1986 drew 450 people, and the turnout now regularly tops 1,000. It has a staff of nine, a Humoresources catalog selling everything from Groucho glasses to funny computer software, a speaker's bureau, a humor quarterly called "Laughing Matters" and a huge network of comic comrades.

"He's really the guru of all this," says Sheila Feigelson, who conducts workshops on bringing humor to the business world. "The thing that makes this special is they're very inclusive. They really serve as a conduit for connecting people, and they're really good about giving credit to people for their ideas."

They also share a bit of their success. The organization has passed out about 175 "humor grants" to spread good cheer in hospitals, schools, libraries, drug treatment centers, even prisons.

"We get this ripple effect," Goodman says. "It's been very gratifying to see how the sparks create whole new idea and applications."

But they've never found Alvin.

"We've tried to track him down," Ingram says. "Nobody knows what happened to him."

For more information on The Humor Project, send a self-addressed envelope with 75 cents postage to 110 Spring St., Saratoga Springs, N.Y. 12866.

Job hopping turns off bosses

Why didn't you get that job you applied for? Maybe your application reflected a history of job-hopping. Those who hire, and don't, say that's the No. 1 reason for rejecting applicants even before the interview.

If somebody around you scatter does a ton of laundry a year - you're the one - that's typical for a householder.

Name the three biggest cities in Ireland. Dublin, sure, but did you forget Cork and Limerick? Name the three biggest cities in Northern Ireland. Belfast, yes, but did you forget Londonderry and Newtownabbey? If you're one of the professionally hired who remember all and never forget, please ignore the rhetorical queries.

Q. Who was the Whitney that Mount Whitney was named for?

A. Josiah Whitney, a geologist. California hired him to find likely places to dig for gold. He couldn't find any. He did know textbook geology. Eventually, the state cut off his search-for-gold money. And named a mountain after him. For other contributions.

L.M. Boyd

What's what?

Q. What's a "honda"? I mean in English?

A. The eye in the end of a brain. Where the other end of the rope is passed through to form a loop.

Q. Are you aware most of Louisiana's Cajuns can neither read nor write the French they also speak?

A. That's nothing, most of us can't read or write the French we also don't speak.

Q. What did the earliest lamps look like?

A. Shallow limestone saucers. Wherein were put lumps of animal fat with moss for wicks. Such from the lee Age have been found in southwest France.

Job hopping turns off bosses

Why didn't you get that job you applied for? Maybe your application reflected a history of job-hopping. Those who hire, and don't, say that's the No. 1 reason for rejecting applicants even before the interview.

If somebody around your scatter does a ton of laundry a year - you're the one! - that's typical for a householder.

Name the three biggest cities in Ireland: Dublin, sure, but did you forget Cork and Limerick? Name the three biggest cities in Northern Ireland: Belfast, yes, but did you forget Londonderry and Newry? If you're one of the professionally Irish who remember all and never forget, please ignore the rhetorical queries.

Q. Who was the Whitney that Mount Whitney was named for?

A. Josiah Whitney, a geologist. California hired him to find likely places to dig for gold. He couldn't find any. He did know textbook geology. Eventually, the state cut off his search-for-gold money. And named a mountain after him. For other contributions.

Q. What's a "honda"? I mean in English?

A. The eye in the end of a harist. Where, the other end, of the rope is passed through to form a loop.

Q. Are you aware most of Louisiana's Cajuns can neither read nor write the French they also speak?

A. That's nothing, most of us can't read or write the French we also don't speak.

You know-how your voice sounds funny when you've got a cold in your nose? That speech is called "stomatolalia." In doc talk.

Q. What did the earliest lamps look like?

A. A shallow limestone saucers. Where-in were put lumps of animal fat with moss for wicks. Such from the Ice Age have been found in southwest France.

Europeans give up fight in high-tech TV race

BRUSSELS, Belgium — The European Community will likely abandon a futile, eight-year effort to beat the United States in the race to develop advanced television technology for the 21st century.

After spending $750 million of taxpayers' money, the EC is about to ax its program to create razor-sharp cinema quality television images.

Telecommunications ministers who met here May 10 are expected to drop their original aim of setting an exclusive community standard for high-definition television (HDTV) and opt instead for a more technologically advanced U.S. transmission system.

Hesitant angers its 11 EC partners late last year by blocking a $400-million five-year action plan to promote broadcasts using the EC-backed "MPEG" family of standards, arguing the spending wasn't justified.

GM subsidiary Opel to start shipping new cars to China

BEIJING — General Motors Corp.'s Opel subsidiary announced plans Monday to begin selling its luxury Omega and Vectra cars in China.

The official Xinhua News Agency said Opel planned to sell 500 cars to China this year and had established sales and service outlets in 16 cities.

The brief report did not say what the purchase price would be. China charges more than 200 percent import duty on foreign cars, and levies so many other taxes and fees that even domestic-made cars start selling at $30,000. The Opel is designed and built in Germany.

Interest rates on Treasury bills and Monday session mixed

WASHINGTON — Interest rates on short-term Treasury securities were mixed in Monday's session.

The Treasury Department sold $10 billion in three-month bills at an average discount rate of 2.88 percent, up from 2.82 percent last week. Another $10 billion was sold in six-month bills at an average discount rate of 2.95 percent, down from 2.96 percent last week.

The three-month bill rate was the highest since they sold for 2.89 percent on April 12. The six-month bill rate was the lowest since Oct. 13, when they also averaged 2.95 percent.

The new discount rates understate the actual return to investors. A 2.94 percent for three-month bills and a 3.04 percent for six-month bills would yield $1.50 billion for $1.49 billion and $1.50 billion for $1.49 billion, respectively.

Knight-Ridder News Service

WASHINGTON — The International Monetary Fund projected Monday that the world economy would continue to recover this year, but at a "hesitant" pace.

In a new report, the IMF forecast that the world economy would grow 2.2 percent this year, up from 1.8 percent last year, and then expand at a 3.4 percent pace in 1994.

Growth in the industrial nations will average 1.7 percent this year, and 2.9 percent next year, up from 1.5 in 1992, the IMF said.

"The recovery of global economic activity after the 1991 downturn remains hesitant and uneven," the IMF said. Although some industrial nations have emerged from recession, growth has weakened in many other countries because of short-term interest rates, depressed consumer and business confidence, and "considerable financial tensions," the report said.

The IMF in its semi-annual economic outlook projected that the U.S. economy will grow at a 3.5 percent pace this year and in 1994, respectively.

'The recovery of global economic activity ... remains hesitant and uneven.'

— International Monetary Fund

The Japanese economy will grow 1.3 percent in 1993 year and 3.5 percent next year.

The German economy is projected to contract 1.3 percent this year but then recover to expand at a 1.7 percent pace in 1994.

The IMF said further cuts in German interest rates "will probably be necessary" to revive the German economy this year. It said such cuts are "likely" as price pressures continue to ebb and money supply growth slows.

Although small cuts in official German rates have helped ease tensions within the European Monetary System, monetary conditions in most European countries remain "unduly tight."

Regarding the U.S. economy, the IMF report said the Federal Reserve may need to allow monetary conditions to tighten in order to avoid any resurgence of inflation as the U.S. economy gains momentum.

The report said recent U.S. economic developments suggest that "the natural forces of recovery" are taking effect and that significant fiscal stimulus measures are less necessary.

Commenting on other countries, the IMF said there are signs that the Japanese recession is "bottoming out," but that the strength and timing of the upswing remain uncertain.

"The low inflation rate and the recent strength of the yen suggests that there also remains some room for interest rate reduction should economic weakness persist" in Japan, the IMF said.

Regarding industrial countries in Europe, the IMF projected the United Kingdom economy would grow 1.4 percent this year and 3.1 percent next year.

Losses in rate-sensitive U.S. stocks may prove bad omen, analyst says

Knight-Ridder News Service

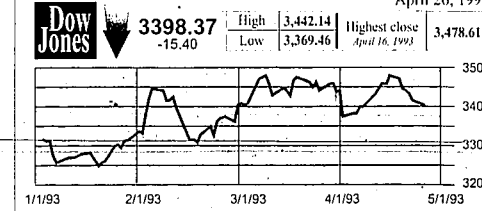

NEW YORK — Although the stock market may be ready for a "bounce" following its decline from the April 16 record in the Dow industrial average of 3,478.61, mounting losses in interest-sensitive issues could prove a longer-term, bad omen for the market as a whole, says technical market analyst Paul Rabbitt at Oppenheimer and Co. in Los Angeles.

Rabbitt said that "white" market valuations remain terribly high and unattractive historically, low interest rates have — up until now, at least — continued to make alternative investments unfavorable vis-a-vis equities.

But that could soon change, if current market action is any guide, he warned. "Last week, the usual beneficiaries of low rates, interest-sensitive stocks, plunged," Rabbitt said. "Utilities fell 3.54 percent, banks fell 9.6 percent despite positive earnings, S&P's fell 6 percent, brokers fell 5 percent, life-insurance fell 5 percent, and property-casualty insurance fell 3.5 percent."

Rabbitt said that the fact that these industry groups usually "lead" U.S. long Treasury bonds "augurs poorly toward future declines in rates."

Indeed, carry-over selling in major bank stocks Monday was every bit as broad as on Friday. Wells Fargo plunged 6% to 102 1/2, Mellon tumbled 3 1/2 to 52 1/2. First Interstate sank 3 1/2 to 53 1/2, BankAmerica lost 2 1/2 to 44 1/2. Bankers Trust fell 2 1/2 to 67 1/2.

Citigroup dropped 1 1/2 to 25 1/2, and J.P. Morgan — a mainstay of the Dow index in recent weeks — surrendered 2 to close at 66 1/2.

Moreover, commodity prices have surrendered only about 2 percent of their recent gains, which have amounted to 8 percent since February, Rabbitt said. "This does little to ease inflation pressures," he stressed.

Even worse, sentiment in the U.S. bond market is still much too bullish, according to investor surveys, "and the long bond is still technically overextended," he added.

Meanwhile, in the stock market itself, investor sentiment, while not as bullish as in bonds, has nevertheless failed to break down during market pullbacks. This, from a contrarian's viewpoint, is a negative factor.

Stock market psychology overall is technically neutral, Rabbitt explained. But it can also be described as complacent. "Share sales and put-volume are high. One in four sentiment polls we monitor is too bullish, and the rest are neutral. Mutual fund purchases are too high. Insider selling is high. IPO (initial public offering) quality is trashy. And the increasing rate of margin debt is losing its beneficial effects as the absolute level climbs to new highs," he said, referring to the all-time record high in margin debt reported by the NYSE last week.

All these factors are likely to undermine the stock market as soon as U.S. bonds begin to show accelerated weakness, Rabbitt said.

Existing home sales

Seasonally adjusted annual rate, millions of units

Weather dampens building

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Sales of previously owned homes slipped 2.9 percent in March as severe weather froze housing activity in much of the nation, a real estate trade group reported Monday.

The National Association of Realtors said sales of existing single-family homes totaled 3.36 million at a seasonally adjusted annual rate, down from 3.46 million in February and 3.78 million in January. Sales fell in every region except the Midwest.

Sellers and buyers both lost a week in March, said Realtors President William S. Chase. It was the third straight month that weather was blamed for skidding sales.

The 2.9 percent slide was larger than the 1 percent decline that many analysts had expected. And the revised 8.5 percent drop in February was even steeper than the 6.1 percent original estimate. Sales had declined 6.4 percent in January after falling 4.7 percent a month earlier.

But Chase and other analysts said housing fundamentals, including low mortgage rates, are favorable and that the winter weather merely postponed sales activity until spring.

The Realtors predict that existing homes will total 3.66 million units this year, compared to 3.52 million in 1992 and 3.22 million in 1991 when the housing recession ended.
