Water aplenty

MIKE SALSBUURY/The Times-News

Geoff Wright of Jerome checks siphon tubes at the farm of his uncle, Stuart Tolman, near Murtaugh Friday afternoon. The end of the six-year drought means ample water supplies for area irrigators this summer.

State water officials declare drought over

By N.S. Nokkentyed
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — By this time last year, irrigation demand had reduced Upper Snake River reservoirs to only half full on June 30.

This year, as of Friday afternoon, the system was 98 percent full. And there's still a little more snow to melt in the mountains.

A Department of Water Resources official has declared the six-year drought over.

But runoff from this winter's snows has been less than the runoff in 1989, said Mike Beus, Bureau of Reclamation hydrologist in Burley.

The difference is this year the wet cool spring reduced and delayed demand for irrigation water, allowing reservoirs system to fill — or nearly so. Only the Jackson Lake Reservoir remains a little shy of full. And it is unlikely to fill completely, Beus said.

Jackson Lake, whose capacity is 847,000 acre feet, lacks about 75,000 acre feet to fill. An acre foot is the amount of water needed to cover one acre with one foot of water.

The rest of the reservoirs are full. And that means good irrigation water supplies for area farmers this summer. Most years irrigation demands begin to draw down the American Falls Reservoir before other reservoirs in the system fill.

With all that water in the reservoirs, Idaho Power Co. expects a near-average hydro-power year. In an average year the utility generates 60 percent of its power at hydro plants, which are far cheaper than coal-burning plants that generate the remaining 40 percent.

Plot probe looks at links to sheik

The Washington Post

With eight men under arrest in New York in an alleged Fourth of July bombing plot, investigators Friday focused attention on the links of several suspects to Muslim Sheik Omar Abdel Rahman.

FBI investigators are evaluating evidence seized from Rahman's Jersey City home, which was searched Thursday as authorities revealed details of an elaborate bombing conspiracy.

Authorities said the suspects were days away from carrying out a devastating plan that allegedly targeted several public officials as well as the United Nations headquarters, two Manhattan commuter tunnels and the federal building that houses the FBI.

Justice Department officials said Friday they are reviewing alternatives in the unusual situation in which the teachings of a religious leader — who calls for the creation of an Islamic theocracy in Egypt — may have prompted some of his followers to engage in acts of terrorism. Siddiq Ibrahim Siddiq Ali, the 32-year-old alleged leader of the bombing plot, was a follower of the sheik and had served as his translator, authorities said.

"The consensus of opinion is that the case is not strong enough to bring charges (against the sheik)," one official said. "Of course that could change."

Rahman, who could not be reached for comment Friday, reportedly has denounced the bombing plots and said he was not involved. One of his aides said Friday that the sheik is suffering from diabetes and will have a public comment later.

Other law enforcement sources described the sheik as a "party of interest" in the in-

Gem court says split Ed Board unconstitutional

The Associated Press

BOISE — The Idaho Supreme Court ruled a new law dividing the state Board of Education unconstitutional Friday evening, six days before it was to take effect.

The law approved by the 1993 legislature would have created two councils of the Board of Education, one for higher education and the other for public schools.

But schools superintendent Jerry Evans contended it was unconstitutional, and attorney Elaine Eberharter-Maki presented his argument to the Supreme Court Friday afternoon.

She argued that the only way the makeup of the board can be changed is through a constitutional amendment, not the Legislature.

Eberharter-Maki quoted a legislator who sponsored the bill as saying if it were successful, the Constitution could be amended to conform.

"That's putting the cart before the horse," she said. "You can't do it that way. In order to make it constitutional, there has to be a constitutional amendment first."

The court heard an hour of verbal legal arguments.

The Board of Education now has eight members who supervise both the public schools and higher education. House Bill 345 created separate councils of four persons each, with Evans serving on both to make five-member councils.

All members of both councils would have served on the Board of Education, and met as a whole to govern other institutions placed under the board by the Constitution.

Under the law, the governor would have appointed one new member and designated who would serve on the separate councils. Gov. Cecil Andrus was waiting for the court's decision before making any appointments.

To Eberharter-Maki's argument that the Constitution calls for "a" board of education, meaning one, opposing attorney Bobbi Dominick said it was wrong to focus on a single word.

The entire section must be taken in context, she said.

The Constitution says the Board of Education must be made up "as prescribed by law" and only the Legislature can pass laws, she said.

"The Legislature has the power to decide

Gore rescues economic package with tie-breaker

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — It was 1 a.m. MDT, and the vote was tied at 49 on the year's biggest bill.

All eyes in the packed Senate chamber were on Al Gore. He intoned firmly, "The vice president votes in the affirmative and the bill, H.R. 2264, is passed."

No one erupted in whoops or cheers. No one ventured to applaud.

But privately, a few Democratic senators breathed a sigh of relief. They were the "no" votes who had secretly pledged to switch over if the White House needed them to push through President Clinton's economic package.

"We knew it was going to be close," Press Secretary Dee Dee Myers said Friday in a morning-after summation. "Fortunately, we have the silver bullet in the vice president."

It was the first time since 1987 that a vice president had had to ride to the rescue to break a Senate tie. The last occasion was when George Bush voted to save Ronald Reagan's prized Strategic Defense Initiative.

For Gore, it was a more dramatic vote than any he had cast in his eight years as a senator.

Throughout the marathon debate, the vice president was never far from Capitol Hill — at the ready in case his vote was Rain and thunderstorms were scattered across the South and from the southern Plains to the Great Lakes on Friday while chilly air invaded the Rocky Mountains.

Showers and thunderstorms also extended across the eastern Gulf of Mexico states, the Tennessee Valley and the southern Atlantic Coast states.

Weaver jury still out heading into 10th day

BOISE (AP) — Jurors in the murder-conspiracy trial of white separatist Randy Weaver and Kevin Harris started their marathon deliberations 90 minutes earlier than normal on Friday but still failed to reach a verdict.

After putting in their longest day yet behind the closed doors of the jury room — 10 hours — the seven women and five men adjourned at the regular time Friday evening and planned the 10th day of deliberations today.

There was no indication why the jury decided to meet earlier than on any of the other eight days since the case was submitted to it.

Jurors have spent 75 hours so far reviewing the testimony and evidence during the government presented during the eight week trial and have contacted U.S. District Judge Edward Lodge only once.

Lodge denied their request on Thursday to visit Weaver's isolated cabin on a mountaintop just 40 miles south of the Canadian border where Deputy U.S. Marshal William Degan was killed in a shootout last Aug. 21.

But the judge said he might reconsider if they become deadlocked.

Weaver, 45, and Harris, 25, are charged with Degan's murder along with various conspiracy and firearms counts stemming from the gunfight and subsequent 11-day siege at the cabin.

Meanwhile, Boise businessman David Wilkinson demanded that U.S. Attorney General Janet Reno reprimand two unidentified federal marshals he claims harassed him on Thursday.

Wilkinson said he was in the Denver airport, waiting for a plane to St. Louis earlier this month when he saw a federal marshal he had seen earlier in the day at the Boise airport.

He told Reno he just asked the man if he was a marshal and whether he was involved in the Weaver case. He said the marshal denied that he was in an exchange that took 15 seconds.

But on Thursday, he said two marshals from outside Idaho came to his Boise office, did not identify themselves, asked why he had gone to St. Louis and then warned him that nothing had better happen to the marshal he talked to in Denver. At that point, Wilkinson said, he told the two to get out.

He said he told Michael Johnson, U.S. marshal for Idaho, about the incident, and Johnson said he knew nothing about it.

the membership," Dominick said, and it has done so by passing the new law.

The current Board of Education system was created by a constitutional amendment proposed by the Legislature in 1911, approved by voters in 1912 and started the next year.

Both attorneys quoted Idaho governors to back their arguments on what was intended.

Dominick said the 1912 amendment clearly intended the Legislature to control the board. "The Constitution has given the Legislature the responsibility to decide the membership and responsibilities of the state Board of Education," she said.

Eberhart-Maki said it was imperative that the court work quickly to block the new law. She noted that education takes 75 percent of general tax revenue, half for public schools.

"Regardless of what form the board takes, its actions will be suspect," she said.

needed to break any ties in a mind-numbing series of amendments.

At one point, Gore abruptly canceled an afternoon interview with a group of radio reporters 10 minutes after it was to have begun in the Old Executive Office Building. Aides said he was needed on Capitol Hill in a hurry.

As it happened, it was only on the final tally that Gore's vote was needed.

"He hasn't been seen around here much lately, but I think he'll be remembered for this vote," said Senate Republican leader Bob Dole, one of the administration's sharpest detractors. "It's now the Clinton-Gore tax increase."

Gore said Friday his duties as tie breaker came as no surprise. "It was clear early on that the passage was going to be very close," he said during an appearance in Philadelphia.

All day Thursday, Clinton, Gore and top aides had watched anxiously as Democratic senators, one by one, fell into line and as a few fell by the wayside.

Besides Gore, Clinton did have one other vote in reserve in case of emergency.

Sen. Patty Murray, D-Wash., was recovering from surgery at her suburban Washington home. She watched the Senate debate on television, "non standby" in case her vote was needed.

About 10:30 p.m. MDT, Senate leaders decided they could make it without her. And a few hours later, it fell to Gore to deliver the Senate victory that Clinton so desperately needed.

Clinton faces 1 more tax battle after close call

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate squandered President Clinton's tax bill left supporters with a political tightrope to walk in seeking a compromise with the House — which passed its own version by a margin nearly as thin.

Clinton predicted Friday that the talks would "produce a bill that in some ways is superior to both bills and will have broader support."

It couldn't have much less support, without losing.

The Senate, at the end of a debate that stretched nearly until dawn, tied 49-49 on the package of tax increases and entitlement cuts. Vice President Al Gore had to break the tie to save the bill.

But administration officials played down the closeness of the vote, saying privately that two of the six Democrats who voted against Clinton would have come aboard if needed.

Also, Clinton said, "there were a couple of senators who indicated they would have voted for the House bill. There were all kinds of differences of opinion."

What they agreed on, he said, was that the process must not come to a halt.

The House and Senate now must try to iron out significant differences — a process as likely to cost Clinton votes as to gain them.

The House voted last month 219-213 for a version close to Clinton's original plan, with a broad-based tax on energy. The Senate narrowed the levy to a 4.3 cent-per-gallon increase for gas and diesel fuel.

To make up part of the lost revenue, the Senate would tighten the Medicare budget by about $60 billion over the next five years, $10 billion more than the House.

There were dozens of other differences in the legislation, which is nearly 900 pages in its Senate version and twice that many in House form. The White House and congressional leaders would like to approve the compromise bill before lawmakers begin their August recess, and then move on to Clinton's health care package after Labor Day.

Clinton and Democratic leaders seemed upbeat.

"They'll try to bridge those gaps."

I don't think they are particularly large. I think it's quite encouraging," Clinton said.

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, predicted the differences would be "equitably and promptly resolved."

But one of the nay-sayers, Sen. Bennett Johnston, D-La., suggested otherwise.

"The razor-thin margin should be a warning to the conferees not to add more taxes or have fewer spending cuts," he said.

And while Clinton continued to distance himself from the Senate process — "This administration didn't make any deals," he declared — heavy White House involvement might be needed to bring the two chambers together.

Sen. David Boren, D-Okla., who supported the bill after helping force Clinton away from the energy tax, said Clinton "must weigh in on the side of those who want more spending cuts and fewer tax increases."

"There are several senators, including myself, who in no way are committed to vote for the final conference report," the eventual House-Senate compromise.

On the other hand, Clinton risks losing House liberals, including members of the Congressional Black Caucus, unless the compromise includes the tax credits for the working poor included by the House but scaled back in the Senate.

"Anyone can draft a bill in con-

Clinton tax comparisons

INDIVIDUAL TAXES

Both create two new income-tax brackets on the well-to-do, who now pay a maximum 31 percent. A 35 percent rate would apply to taxable incomes (after exemptions and deductions) above $115,000 for single people and $140,000 for couples. A 39.6 percent rate would apply to taxable income over $250,000. Senate would raise 28 percent top capital-gains rate to 30.8 percent on taxable income over $250,000; House would not.

MEDICARE TAX

Both remove the $135,000 limit on annual wages subject to the 1.45 percent tax. Earned-income credit: Both expand this benefit for low-income families with children; the House also extends it to some childless couples for the first time. Senate provides a credit or outright government payment of up to $2,550; House, up to $2,685. Maximum benefit available with incomes up to $11,000.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Senate requires single people whose incomes plus half their Social Security exceed $32,000 and couples above $40,000 to pay tax on up to 85 percent of their Social Security benefits. House applies that rule to singles above $25,000 and couples over $32,000.

ENERGY TAX

Senate raises taxes on gasoline, diesel and other transportation fuels by 4.3 cents on a gallon but exempts jet fuel. House taxes most forms of energy, including electricity, natural gas, coal and oil, according to heat content, raising, for example, the gasoline tax by about 8 cents a gallon.

MOVING EXPENSES

Both prohibit deduction for cost of meals while moving to new job and certain move-connected housing costs; Senate limits total moving deduction to $10,000.

LUXURY TAXES

Both repeal luxury taxes on expensive yachts, planes, jewelry and furs and keep tax on high-priced cars but adjust $30,000 threshold at which it begins applying to account for inflation.

BUSINESS TAXES

Both bills raise 34 percent top corporate tax rate to 35 percent; allow deduction of 50 percent of business meals and entertainment cost, down from 80 percent; kill deductions for lobbying expenses and club dues; limit deduction for an executive's pay to $1 million a year. House allows up to $25,000 of machinery to be written off in the year of purchase; Senate, $20,500.

Nominee defends his record at Penn

WASHINGTON — Educator Sheldon Hackney, nominated to the head the National Endowment for the Humanities, told a sympathetic Senate panel Friday he was a victim of "slander by slogan" and that his staunch support of free speech had been distorted by the media.

The University of Pennsylvania president, appearing before the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee, said that as head of the federal agency that dispenses grants to museums, scholars and libraries he would ensure that "all voices" are considered.

Hackney, 59, has been under assault from critics who have cast him as an adherent of "political correctness," whereby ideas and speech are stifled for fear they could offend certain groups or individuals.

Witness will not testify until Monday

WASHINGTON — An FBI supervisor who told prosecutors her husband killed the bureau out of $17,430 and then abruptly recanted at his trial will not reappear on the witness stand again until next week.

At the request of her attorney, U.S. District Judge Thomas Penfield Jackson on Friday excused Margo Bennett from further testimony until Monday in the trial of her husband, Gene, also an FBI agent.

Mrs. Bennett shocked the judge, prosecutors and even her own attorney on Thursday when she declared she had fabricated the allegations against her husband after he sued her for divorce and custody of their two children last September.

Clinton nominates Tampa, Fla., chief

WASHINGTON — Police Chief Eduardo Gonzalez of Tampa, Fla., was nominated Friday by President Clinton to become director of the U.S. Marshals Service.

Attorney General Janet Reno said Clinton also intends to nominate New York attorney Jo Ann Harris, the Justice Department's one-time fraud chief, as assistant attorney general in charge of the criminal division. Harris, who gained notice by winning a tax-evasion case against the Rev. Sun Myung Moon, leader of the Unification Church, would be the first woman to head the division.

Gonzalez, 51, served from 1965-1986 with the Metro-Dade Police Department in Miami, rising from patrol officer to deputy director and getting to know Reno when she was the county's chief prosecutor.

Holes show up in pilot's blimp story

BOSTON — A former U.S. Navy blimp pilot says he dropped a bomb that blew a hole in a Nazi submarine off Cape Cod in October 1944.

Now, the pilot's commanding officer and other aviators from the same squadron are blowing holes in his story.

The Michael, a commercial diver, claimed recently to have found the sub four miles off Cape Cod in 41 feet of water. Michael said Joseph Fallon, 72, told him he piloted the blimp that sank the submarine on Oct. 28, 1944. The blimp was one of eight in Squadron ZP-11 out of South Weymouth.

Retired Capt. Robert Connor, the squadron's executive officer in 1944, said Fallon's account was untrue. "I can fairly state that there was no sub sunk in that area at that time," Connor said Friday.

FBI links several mail bomb incidents

NEW HAVEN, Conn. — Mail bombs that maimed professors at Yale and the University of California this week were linked Friday to a dozen similar attacks since 1978, most at universities and high-tech companies, the FBI said.

The FBI examined fragments of the most recent bombs and believed the attacks are tied to the "Unabom" case, covering a dozen unexplained bombings that killed one person and injured 21 since 1978.

"The forensic experts believe ... that the maker or makers of each of these 14 explosive devices are the same person or persons," Milt Allerich, special agent in charge of the FBI in Connecticut, told reporters.

White House favors stricter casino controls

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Clinton administration favors stricter financial controls for Indian gambling casinos to discourage money laundering by organized crime and drug dealers.

Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen said in a letter released Friday that he would support legislation authorizing him to require Indian-owned casinos to record and report large cash transactions.

Ambiguity in the 1988 law setting up the current regulations for Indian gambling operations effectively exempts tribal casinos from requirements of the Bank Secrecy Act, Bentsen said.

That law, which requires financial institutions to report cash transactions of more than $10,000 to the government, has been applied to privately owned casinos in Nevada and Atlantic City, N.J., to help detect money laundering, tax evasion and other financial crimes.

"Without adequate recordkeeping, internal controls, and currency reporting, Indian gaming has a similar potential to be an attractive target for money laundering," Bentsen said in the June 22 letter to Sen. Richard H. Bryan, D-Nev.

The letter was released at a hearing of the House Native American Affairs subcommittee by another Nevada lawmaker, Democratic Rep. James Bilbray. It was the Clinton administration's first statement on the issue.

Bilbray supports legislation sponsored by Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev. and Rep. Robert G. Torricelli, D-N.J., that would give states greater power to regulate Indian gambling.

"I don't know of any tribes that would oppose the Bank Secrecy Act if it is applied as it is applied to New Jersey and Las Vegas operations," said Tom Wapato, executive director of the National Indian Gambling Association.

But Wapato said in an interview that tribes would oppose empowering the states to require such reports.

He charged that the legislation to expand the states' power is motivated by "economic racism" to protect the commercial interests of gambling in Nevada and New Jersey.

The legislation is one of many proposals to change the 1988 Indian Gaming Regulatory Act, which gave states the authority to negotiate regulatory agreements with Indian tribes.

Indian gambling, which includes bingo, keno and other games of chance, produces an estimated $1.5 billion a year in revenue, said Will E. Cummings, a consultant.

But Bilbray warned that unless Congress gave the National Gaming Commission set up to oversee Indian gambling more resources, organized crime would infiltrate the industry.

"The tribes don't have the resources" of states like Nevada to do extensive background checks of people seeking to run their casinos, Bilbray said. "They would never know if they are dealing with Vito Genovese's grandson. These people are very savvy."

"And if the tribes wanted to get rid of them, God help them," he said.

"People who would not and could not be licensed in the state of Nevada" are trying to get involved in Indian gambling, he said.

The Justice Department, however, told Congress last year that it had no evidence of organized crime involvement in Indian gambling.

Anthony J. Hope, chairman of the National Indian Gaming Commission, blamed states for the failure to adequately regulate casino gambling on Indian reservations. The 1988 law gave states the responsibility for this function "and they don't want it," he said in an interview.

The federal commission's role is to regulate bingo but not casino operations, he said.

Clinton wants less pesticides

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Clinton administration announced Friday a major effort to reduce use of agricultural pesticides, signaling a dramatic shift in the government's approach to pest-controlling chemicals.

The White House "is committed to reducing the risks to people and the environment that are associated with pesticides while ensuring the availability of cost-effective pest management tools for agriculture and other pesticides users," three agency heads said in a joint statement.

Officials at the Environmental Protection Agency said the administration's proposals are still being developed, but that the White House and the agencies involved wanted to announce their goals in advance of an upcoming National Academy of Science report on pesticides and children.

The long-awaited study is expected to show that government standards do not provide sufficient protection for children and infants.

Ted Turner and his wife, Jane Fonda, listen during a hearing of the House Telecommunications and Finance subcommittee Friday. Turner said he supported a curb on television violence.

Turner decries violence on TV

WASHINGTON (AP) — Cable network magnate Ted Turner blamed television Thursday for causing violence in America and advised Congress to "ram it down their throats" if the television industry doesn't voluntarily start a rating system.

Turner, accompanied by his wife, actress Jane Fonda, advised the House Energy and Commerce telecommunications subcommittee not to let up its campaign against TV violence.

He wasn't optimistic that an entertainment industry-sponsored meeting in Los Angeles on Aug. 2 would make progress in quelling the violence on television.

"Unless you keep the gun pointed at their heads, all you'll get is mumbly, mumbly-mouthed BS," he said. "They just hope the subject will go away."

He admitted that more violence than he wished has been creeping into programming on his own TNT cable network.

"We've eased up because we are being forced to by the competition," he said. "They're guilty of murder. We all are — me, too."

"As a parent with five children, I don't need experts to tell me that the amount of violence on television today and its increasingly graphic portrayal can be harmful to children," he said.

"Television violence is the single most significant factor contributing to violence in America," he said.

A rating system, coupled with TV sets equipped to block violent programs, would be the solution, Turner said.

"Parents can push a simple little button and get the garbage out of their homes. If it's not done voluntarily, Congress should act and ram it down their (the TV industry's) throats."

Fonda, who sat quietly behind her husband during the hearing, told reporters afterward that she agreed with what Turner said and hopes, for the sake of young actresses, that on-screen violence is diminished.

During his testimony, Turner decried the movie "Single White Female" starring Fonda's niece, Bridget Fonda, as an excessively violent film.

"If the market for violent drama is turned off, young actresses are not going to be asked to be brutalized," Jane Fonda said. "My heart goes out to the young actresses."

She said people in the media have a responsibility to help reduce violence in society, but struggling actors and actresses can't start the process.

"I don't blame my niece Bridget. She has to earn a living," she said. "Once you become a star, you can say no."

She praised congressional pressure on the industry as "the first step toward the answer."

Clinton appoints AIDS official

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton's AIDS policy coordinator steps into a job others have turned down, trying to focus the federal response to the epidemic.

Kristine Gebbie's success will depend on how much he listens to her.

"I'm real thrilled," Gebbie said as she stood in the sunshine on the White House lawn Friday when Clinton announced her appointment.

"We will ensure that one person in the White House oversees and unifies government-wide AIDS efforts," Clinton said. "She has my full support in coordinating policy among all the various executive branch departments."

Beyond that, the president did not describe her job. Whatever it is, at least three people have turned it down.

"It's been a tough one to sell, hasn't it?" said Dr. David E. Rogers, vice chairman of the National Commission on AIDS and one of those who declined the job. Gebbie has accepted.

"Whether she can be effective or

Gebbie

"It's doable if the president really means business on it," Rogers said.

Virtually every department of the government has some piece of the AIDS issue, and getting the bureaucracies to work together is no small task. On top of that, research scientists often compete with each other to make discoveries.

Meanwhile, thousands of people are dying from the disease, and they want a cure found fast.

As of March 31, AIDS, or acquired immune deficiency syndrome, had been diagnosed in 289,320 Americans, of whom just over 63 percent, or 182,275, have died since June 1, 1981, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

The Clinton administration has proposed spending $2.7 billion on AIDS research, prevention and treatment in fiscal 1994, a 28 percent increase over 1993 spending.

Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., said the size of Gebbie's White House ceremony, which included leaders from Congress, researchers, AIDS activists and Health and Human Services Secretary Donna Shalala, was a sign of how serious Clinton is.

"It seems to me he gave her a very good sendoff," Frank said.

When questioned about Gebbie's ability or the problems she faces, Frank said reporters were being too negative.

Gebbie is a former nursing professor who served as the Washington state secretary of health from 1989 until leaving the post this spring. Before that, she was administrator of the Oregon Health Division for 11 years. She served on a presidential commission on AIDS during the Reagan administration and has been on other federal advisory panels on the issue.

Food and Drug Administration Commissioner David Kessler, whose agency is among those that will have to work with Gebbie, said he was pleased with the appointment and hoped it would help break loose additional research efforts.

An AIDS vaccine or effective treatment were discovered, it would have to be approved by the FDA before it could be given to people.

"We don't have one application today pending at the FDA for an antiviral drug," Kessler said. "There's a lot more work that needs to be done by everyone."

Rogers of the AIDS commission said just dealing with the researchers alone can be a challenge because some of them are prima donnas, comparing them to the late opera star Maria Callas.

"There's 10,000 Maria Callases out there, but somebody can put together a good opera," Rogers said. "Sure, they're competitive, but they're stung by the enormity of the problem and anxious to see a coordinated effort."

Court makes job bias harder to prove

WASHINGTON (AP) — A divided Supreme Court made it significantly more difficult Friday for employees to prove they were victims of illegal on-the-job discrimination.

Employees cannot necessarily win job-bias lawsuits if they prove the reasons given by their employers for treating them differently are untrue, the court ruled by a 5-4 vote in a Missouri case.

Although based on the somewhat arcane provisions of a federal law known as Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the decision likely will have an enormous impact on numerous employment-bias disputes.

The job-bias decision was a defeat for Melvin Hicks, a supervisor at a minimum-security prison in St. Louis until he was fired in 1984. Hicks, who is black, sued St. Mary's Honor Center, alleging that his firing was motivated by racial bias.

A federal judge ruled that the purportedly non-discriminatory reasons offered by prison officials for Hicks' firing were false because white employees had not been disciplined for committing more serious offenses.

But the judge also ruled that Hicks

Other decisions in the Supreme Court

The Supreme Court, which will end its 1992-93 term Monday, also announced these decisions Friday:

• A West Virginia jury's $10 million award against an energy company was not unfair. The 6-3 ruling rejected American Business' latest attempt to have new constitutional limits placed on huge punitive-damages awards.

• The government may prohibit television and radio stations licensed to operate in states that ban lotteries from advertising a neighboring state's games.

The court, 7-2, said a federal law that keeps a North Carolina radio station from airing commercials for Virginia's state-run lottery does not violate free-speech rights.

had failed to meet his "ultimate burden" under Title VII of proving that his firing was motivated by some racial animosity.

The 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reinstated Hicks' lawsuit and ruled he should win because he had disproved the prison's stated defense.

The appellate court said Hicks should not be required to come up with direct evidence of racially motivated treatment.

Other federal-appellate courts had split on the issue, and Friday's decision said the court was wrong.

"Title VII does not award damages against employers who cannot prove a nondiscriminatory reason for adverse employment action, but only against employers who are proven to have taken adverse employment action by reason of, in the context of this case, race," Justice Antonin Scalia wrote. "Nothing in law would permit us to substitute for the required finding that the employer's action was the product of unlawful discrimination the much different (and much lesser) finding that the employer's explanation of its action was not believable," he said.

He was joined by Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices Sandra Day O'Connor, Anthony M. Kennedy and Clarence Thomas.

Justices David H. Souter, Byron R. White, Harry A. Blackmun and John Paul Stevens dissented.

In a strongly worded opinion for the four, Souter said the decision was "unfair to plaintiffs, unworkable in practice and inexplicable in forgiving employers who present false evidence in court."

Title VII bans employers from treating employees less favorably than others when it comes to hiring, firing and employment terms and conditions because of their race, sex, religion or national origin.

Nixon funeral will be at library

YORBA LINDA, Calif. (AP) — Former President Nixon escorted his wife to California for the last time Friday, returning to his birthplace to bury the loyal partner who stood by him in his darkest hours.

A funeral will be held today at the Nixon presidential library for former first lady Pat Nixon, who died of lung cancer at the couple's New Jersey home on Tuesday, one day after the couple's 53rd wedding anniversary. She was 81.

Her body was being flown to El Toro Marine Corps Air Station during the afternoon aboard the same Air Force Boeing 707 the Nixons used during their trips in office to China and the then-Soviet Union.

President Clinton on Thursday offered the Nixon family use of the plane, which was Air Force One during Nixon's presidency.

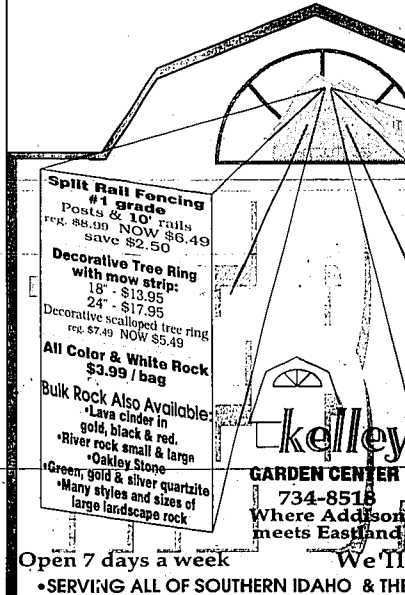

From the Marine base, they were to travel 20 miles north to the Richard Nixon Library & Birthplace, where the closed casket was to lie in state.

The library lobby was filled with hundreds of floral tributes.

The Rev. Billy Graham, a long-time Nixon family friend, will preside over Saturday's funeral in the library garden just east of the First Lady's Garden, blooming with the deep burgundy Pat Nixon rose.

Wedding ceremony has its ups, downs

TAMPA, Fla. — Forty-six couples took the plunge Friday, exchanging wedding vows on a roller coaster.

The couples and a minister made two two-minute runs on the "Kumba" billed as the biggest, longest roller coaster in the Southeast.

Once around was enough for four couples on the ride, which hits 60 mph, soars 143 feet in the air, does a diving loop and plummets 135 feet.

"They were kind of green," said Lisa Brock, a spokeswoman at the Busch Gardens amusement park. Those couples took their vows later — standing still.

Onlookers fail to help blind victims

LOS ANGELES — Two elderly blind women were attacked by purse snatchers in broad daylight on the streets of west Los Angeles, and witnesses did not intervene, authorities said.

"This is about as low as it gets," police Sgt. Doug Abney said. "It's just one more indication of how bad things have gotten in Los Angeles when women this old can't even walk down the street anymore — blind women, no less."

In Thursday's first attack, thieves drove up to an 86-year-old woman and grabbed her purse, which contained about $100, as she crossed a street.

A 92-year-old blind woman was robbed about two hours later and two miles away.

Lawmaker attacks Clinton forest policy

WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration is bungling the Northwest forest crisis politically by not making a strong enough case for its logging cutbacks and accompanying jobs package, Rep. Peter DeFazio, D-Ore., said Friday.

Labor Secretary Robert Reich said the administration will do its best to offset the loss of Northwest timber jobs this year. But he said money is tight and that loggers ultimately must be dealt with in a broader policy addressing worker dislocation nationwide.

DeFazio called on Clinton on Friday to return to Oregon to defend his pending forest policy and make good on his goal of having no net loss of jobs in the region.

What makes a mall a mall?

L.M. Boyd
What's what?

Official designators of places to shop say a mall isn't really a mall unless it has more than 10,000 parking spaces. But what they call it without that many they don't say.

Who specifically make up the "middle class"? So inquires a client. Much debated, that. One favored definition: "Those not poor enough to take charity and not rich enough to donate."

Consider those brain receptors that tell you all you need to know about their skin. Almost a fourth of them keep you informed specifically about the skin on your hands.

The Quechua Indians of Peru are said to have at least 1,000 words for potatoes. No mystery about the why of that.

Chimneys used to be taxed in Rumania. So kitchens were built in separate little outbuildings without chimneys. Travelers say many still stand.

The sort of clothing worn by the earliest Seminole Indians in Florida was almost identical to the sort of clothing worn by the ancient Incas. What do you make of that?

Q. After the first five years of a marriage, what year is a divorce, if any, statistically most likely?

A. The first year after the last younger leaves home.

"The employer generally gets the employee the employer deserves," said Wilted Gilbey, an expert on the matter.

Q. How does an insurance company protect itself from me if I pretend to have lost my hearing?

A. You're asked to talk into a microphone. A device plays back the words - delayed about a fifth of a second - to you through earphones. You can go on talking only if you can't hear the playback. If you can hear it, you get confused and start to stammer.

Your foot is of normal size if it's length is 15 percent of your height.

Campbell assumes Canadian prime minister post

A Royal Canadian Mounted Police officer salutes Prime Minister-designate Kim Campbell shortly before her swearing-in ceremony Friday in Ottawa. Campbell is Canada's first woman prime minister.

TORONTO (AP) — Kim Campbell took over Friday as prime minister of Canada.

She is the first woman ever to hold the post and began her quest to convince Canadians it should be more than a summer job.

The new prime minister, a 46-year-old lawyer from Vancouver, has only a couple of months to erase the unpopular image of her predecessor, Brian Mulroney, before she must call an election. Polls suggest that if the vote were held now, she would lose.

"I am announcing today not only a new team, but a new, lean, streamlined government that will be more responsive to the real needs of Canadians," Ms. Campbell said in Ottawa after she and her Cabinet were sworn in.

Trying to set the tone, the new Cabinet ministers arrived for the swearing-in in taxis rather than the usual chauffeured limousines.

Keeping her promise to reduce the size of government, Ms. Campbell appointed only 24 ministers, 10 fewer than the Mulroney government, and reduced the number of departments from 32 to 23.

Mulroney, 54, who had headed the Canadian government since 1984, tendered his resignation Friday morning to Governor General Ray Hnatyshyn. An hour later, the swearing-in ceremony was held for Campbell and her Cabinet at the governor general's residence.

"We'll go away for awhile,"

Mulroney said as he left the residence with his wife, Mila. The ex-first couple is scheduled to vacation in France before moving into a newly purchased home in Montreal.

She recited the brief oath in English and French, Canada's official languages.

Mulroney announced on Feb. 24 that he was stepping down. That set off a leadership campaign that culminated with Ms. Campbell's narrow victory over Environment Minister Jean Charest at the Progressive Conservative Party convention June 13.

Mulroney, who won massive majorities in the House of Commons in 1984 and again in 1988, plummeted in the polls over his economic policies. He eventually became the most unpopular prime minister in Canadian history.

Ms. Campbell, who served as justice minister and defense minister in the last government, must distance herself from the Mulroney legacy without breaking from Conservative Party values if she is to have a chance in the elections.

A Gallup poll published Thursday showed Jean Charest's Liberal Party ahead with 41 percent, followed by the Progressive Conservatives with 36 percent, and Audrey McLaughlin's New Democratic Party with 10 percent. The poll of 1,014 adults is accurate within 3.1 percentage points.

If Ms. Campbell can't reverse that trend, her reign in Ottawa will be brief. The mandate of the current House of Commons expires in November, and she must call elections before then. The party that wins a majority chooses the prime minister.

"It is crucial to close the distance between Canadians and their government," she said.

In her brief remarks to reporters after the swearing in, she offered no specific new policies.

"When I see the energy and enthusiasm of my team, I am sure we have the time to prove to all Canadians what we can do, what we will do," she said.

Charest, who came from far behind and nearly defeated Ms. Campbell in the leadership race, was named deputy prime minister and minister of industry, science and consumer affairs.

"The leadership race is over," Charest said. "In the next few weeks we will go out there and define the mandate that we are asking Canadians for."

Eight ministries are being redesigned and renamed, and 15 are being abolished or combined with others.

Trimming the government is symbolic of her desire for change. But it's unclear how much she can do in limited time to come to grips with such overriding issues as a $28 billion budget deficit and 11.4 percent unemployment, while at the same time maintaining Canada's social safety net.

"There is no greater challenge or priority today than maintaining the integrity of the Canadian health care system," she said. "Canadians want the system to survive. We must help insure that it does."

Confusion reigns among Bosnians

ZAGREB, Croatia (AP) — Bosnia's feuding leadership appeared increasingly at odds Friday over how to respond to a Serb-Croat peace plan to carve Bosnia into three ethnic zones.

Seven members of the collective leadership gathered without their Muslim president, Alija Izetbegovic, who bitterly opposes the plan and refuses to discuss it.

Some of those meeting in Zagreb flatly rejected proposals to make Bosnia a three-state confederation, while others appeared willing to consider the division.

Izetbegovic boycotted the latest round of the Geneva talks where the plan was presented by the presidents of Serbia and Croatia, which border Bosnia.

Izetbegovic believes the plan would provoke more ethnic cleansing, in which one ethnic group purges another from disputed land through killings, rape or other forms of intimidation. Serbs have been the biggest practitioners in the 15-month war, but Muslims and Croats have used the method with growing ferocity.

With details of the partition plan still unclear — especially on the vital issue of borders — Bosnia's collective presidency seemed able to do little Friday but discuss strategy for the next round of talks Monday.

Those talks will be in Geneva. Presidency member Miro Lasic, a Bosnian Serb, rejected the idea of a confederation. But Miro Lasic, a Croat member, cautioned: "If that will bring peace, we are ready for that."

European Community foreign ministers were to meet Saturday with members of the Bosnian presidency, but it was unclear whether Izetbegovic intended to go to Brussels.

He and two other members of the presidency, Ejup Ganic and military commander Rasim Delic, remained in the Bosnian capital Sarajevo on Friday.

"We are open to all new ideas," said Muslim Fikret Abdic, a presidency member who is being touted as a potential rival to Izetbegovic. "We will take them back and consult our people, not only Mr. Izetbegovic."

Abdic left Friday's talks just over an hour after they started, indicating there was little chance of a major decision. He said only that he was leaving early for the Brussels meeting.

International mediators, frustrated with Izetbegovic, have apparently encouraged other members of the presidency to assert more authority in the increasingly desperate search for some form of negotiated settlement.

White extremists storm S. African center

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Hundreds of heavily armed white extremists stormed the scene of high-level political talks Friday, assaulting participants and spraying obscene slogans on the walls.

Police and soldiers did not intervene to stop the attack on black and white officials negotiating the end of apartheid.

Top officials of the government, the African National Congress and other groups were hustled away by guards carrying assault rifles. Some delegates piled furniture against doors in case rightists tried to break into rooms where they took refuge.

The extremists oppose black rule and believe the political talks will lead to an ANC-dominated government after apartheid.

The assault outraged mainstream political leaders, who called the attack barbaric and promised to step up efforts to end white minority rule. The incident was comparable to hundreds of armed extremists storming and occupying the United Nations Congress.

President F.W. de Klerk went on White right-wing extremists occupy a conference room Friday in Johannesburg, disrupting high-level political talks aimed at ending South Africa's system of apartheid.

television to appeal for calm after the attack, warning such incidents posed a threat to peace. "There is a grave risk ... that racial conflict at grassroots level can erupt as a result of this," he said.

After pushing past police, well-formed and armed neo-Nazis used a small armor-plated truck to ram through the large glass walls at the front of the conference center. Several hundred protesters poured in and took over rooms and offices as about 1,000 more waited outside.

Pandemonium reigned inside the conference center as the extremists — armed with rifles, pistols and knives — swarmed around and occupied conference rooms. They chanted, punched and slapped delegates and journalists. There were no serious injuries, and negotiations resumed later Friday.

Dozens of riot police armed with submachine guns and other weapons watched silently as the extremists sprayed slogans urging death to blacks and sat at desks normally occupied by officials of the country's political parties.

Police Capt. Wikus Weber said police decided not to confront the heavily armed protesters to avoid a bloodbath.

The government said afterward that it would investigate and charge the culprits, but there were no immediate arrests.

Kurd unrest fuels chaos in Germany

BONN, Germany (AP) — As Turks and Kurds brawled in the streets Friday — a day after Kurds launched attacks across Europe — Germany threatened to deport Kurdish militants to prevent them from bringing their war to German soil.

Turks and Kurds who have lived side by side for decades expressed concern that Thursday's attacks by Kurdish militants in six countries could increase anti-foreigner sentiment and set back their quest for more civil rights and protection from neo-Nazi extremists.

The Kurdish attacks, apparently coordinated by the Marxist Kurdish Workers' Party, or PKK, targeted Turkish diplomatic missions and businesses in France, Denmark, Sweden, Switzerland and England. The PKK is fighting to carve out an autonomous region for Kurds in southeast Turkey.

Germany saw the most attacks Thursday, with more than 30 people arrested during assaults in 10 cities. Militants smashed bank and travel agency windows. In Munich, they held hostages for more than 14 hours.

The violence continued Friday.

Turks attacked a group of Kurds who had blockaded the Turkish consulate at Karlsruhe, in southern Germany. Police arrested 100 people after a brawl in which about six people were injured and cars vandalized, a police spokesman said.

In Turkey, Foreign Minister Hikmet Cetin said his government had intelligence reports about preparations for further attacks on Turkish missions in Europe on Saturday. He said it had warned several countries, but did not elaborate.

He said a delegation had gone to Germany to discuss the attacks and the extradition of the Munich hostage-takers.

They went before a magistrate Friday on charges of kidnapping and attempted coercion of the German government.

ISU professor heads GOP party

POCATELLO — Idaho State University Professor Lela "Kitty" Humphrey is the new chairman of the Bannock County Republican Party.

She succeeds Randy Smith, Pocatello attorney, who was elected state GOP chairman earlier this year after Phil Batt resigned to run for governor. Humphrey was elected Thursday over Elvin Gunter, Pocatello.

Judge to issue warrant on attorney

POCATELLO — A district judge says he will issue a warrant to arrest an attorney who didn't attend a contempt of court hearing Friday, or give the attorney five days to show why he shouldn't be arrested.

Tom Hale was scheduled to explain why he shouldn't be held in contempt for not appearing for a June 15 trial. Court officials say he was representing Fairy Jane Owen, accused of 30 counts of grand theft and two counts of attempted grand theft.

Owen said earlier Hale was in Kentucky where his mother is critically ill.

Bannock Prosecutor Mark Hiedemen said a local arrest warrant should be issued immediately. "I just don't think he can keep ignoring this, thumbing his nose at this court," he said.

Court OKs prison for livestock crime

BOISE — The Idaho Court of Appeals has approved a prison sentence of five to 10 years ordered in an arson, burglary, grand theft and livestock destruction case, even though the defendant was just age 18 at the time.

In a decision released Friday, the court rejected an appeal over the prison term ordered by 4th District Judge Deborah Bail for Robert Dechenne. The court said Dechenne had "serious behavioral problems," caused about $55,000 damage to baled hay and straw, killed two cows and wounded 10-12 other animals.

Pocatello cautious about fireworks

POCATELLO — Despite an unusually wet spring, Pocatello Fire Chief Richard Wolfe on Friday banned fireworks in bench areas of the city.

Fireworks are banned from Monday through midnight July 6. Wolfe said while rain may give the city a wet and green look, the grass dries up. "We're thinking that things are going to be extremely dry by the Fourth of July," Wolfe said. "With an influx of people visiting here over the weekend, we feel our service level will be stressed out."

Ex-candidate indicted on abuse charge

BOISE — Former Boise mayor candidate Ron Bjorklund has been indicted by an Ada County grand jury on charges he sexually abused a 9-year-old boy, Bjorklund's attorney said.

The alleged incident occurred on June 19 at Bjorklund's home after he had taken the boy on an outing.

The medic for the Idaho National Guard was the only other announced candidate beyond Tracy Andrus, daughter of Gov. Cecil Andrus. Bjorklund withdrew his candidacy for mayor after his arrest.

Bjorklund, 37, was slated to enter a plea in 4th District Court to a charge of lewd conduct, said his attorney, John Christensen.

Librarian seeks to keep access open

MOSCOW — The head librarian at the University of Idaho's government publications library is lobbying against the attempts of private corporations to make big bucks from public records.

A move to charge people for access to information that has been compiled at taxpayer expense is wrong, says Lily Wai. She has joined in the intense debate.

Information industries charge the public thousands of dollars for computer access use. And publishing houses take government journals, many of which are not copyrighted, and reprint them for a profit.

Wai has been lobbying members of the Idaho congressional delegation for bills such as the government information GPO Act, which became law last spring.

Plan would help youth programs

LEWISTON — Rep. James "Doc" Lucas of Moscow is calling on the Legislature to fund counties for new preventative programs for youngsters that will eventually defuse exploding prison and welfare costs.

And he's dubbing it Near Home Solutions. "No one in the Legislature has ever said I was wrong," said Republican Lucas, who has complained about the state financing prisons and welfare at the expense of education for the past several years.

He said Thursday he wants the state to appropriate funds directly to each county without strings attached, and allow them to arrange a volunteer coordinator and training for prevention programs designed for children.

If the Legislature doesn't go along, he said he intends to launch an initiative campaign.

House rejects INEL research project

The Associated Press

Idaho Congressman Michael Crapo has lost a major fight in the battle to keep alive a major reactor research project at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory and the hundreds of jobs that go with it.

But after the House voted overwhelmingly to kill even the Clinton administration's scaled-back spending proposal, Crapo said the fight to save the Integral Fast Reactor research would continue in the Senate.

"It is unfortunate that a majority of House members were not able to see the value of this technology," Crapo said.

"We knew it would be a struggle to get beyond the misinformation

Crapo

$55 million in the energy appropriations bill for completely shutting down the project.

Crapo had been pressing for approval of even more cash than President Clinton had called for so that only the recycling research could and rhetoric of the opposition. But this fight is not over.

The House voted 267-162 Thursday against continuing just the limited research into recycling nuclear materials, leaving just continue at Argonne National Laboratory near Chicago but also the basic reactor research at Argonne's facility in eastern Idaho.

Elimination of that project would mean the loss of about 800 jobs at INEL. More than 500 jobs are on the line in Illinois.

But Crapo said he would be working with Republican Sens. Dirk Kempthorne and Larry Craig to restore the entire project in the new budget.

Supporters of the project, who include Gov. Cecil Andrus, have called the Integral Fast Reactor the next generation of nuclear power plants because of its proven safety and its ability to recycle spent fuel from traditional reactors.

Andrus told congressional committees earlier this year that since the bulk of the development has already been completed on the project and it is less than three years from being demonstrated on a large scale, it makes no sense to pull the plug now.

In fact, he maintained that relatively speaking it costs almost as much to shut the project down as it would to keep it going for the next three years.

Crapo said the campaign will intensify to education the Senate and the majority in the House about just how vital the technology is to provide answers to difficult nuclear concerns and keep the country in the forefront of energy research.

Dixie gives rough welcome to Earth First!

DIXIE (AP) — In a move designed to attract media attention and defy the U.S. Forest Service, members of the Earth First! environmental group have walked into a Panhandle timber sale area closed to the public.

No arrests were made Thursday, but Idaho County Sheriff R.E. Meinen defused an altercation between a group member and a frustrated resident.

After informing the Lewiston Tribune of their intentions Wednesday night, a small convoy of Earth First! members drove through Dixie about 9:45 a.m. Thursday. Dixie townspeople lined the street.

The convoy stopped about three miles down the road at the Noble Creek timber sale road. Forest Service and sheriff's deputies were waiting. As about 10 of the Earth Firsters walked into a clearcut area, others stood by and recorded the event.

Eric Ryberg, one of the members, stood on a tree stump and loudly proclaimed the Forest Service was destroying the ecosystem. The group objects to timber sales in what it considers the largest contiguous wild area in the lower 48 states.

There were no arrests or confrontations. Officers said citations may be issued to some of the people involved.

The Nez Perce Forest closed the timber sale area Tuesday after road building equipment in logging roads belonging to a Highland Enterprises Inc. of Grangeville was vandalized last weekend. No arrests have been made.

Earth First! has vowed to stop the logging of the area, although it disavows any knowledge of the vandalism.

Thursday's drama actually peaked in Dixie.

Ryberg arrived in Dixie several minutes before his group and went to a telephone booth to send a press release. In advance of the event, to his headquarters at Missoula. In the press release, Ryberg said 10 Earth First! activists had been arrested for violating the closure.

While Ryberg was on the telephone, Jim Miller, owner of the Lodgepole Pine Inn, mounted his horse and, carrying a rope, took a stand in the middle of the road.

Meinen approached Miller and asked him to move away from the phone booth. Miller shouted, "As soon as that ... bitch comes out of that phone booth, he's taking a ride down Main Street on the end of a rope!"

Ryberg looked shaken. "I guess I was lucky the sheriff was here," he said.

Residents say tourists, including the Good Sam recreational vehicle club, have stayed away from Dixie because of the Earth First! theatrics.

TWIN FALLS — A charge of attempted rape against a Twin Falls man was reduced Friday as he was ordered to stand trial in 5th District Court.

Lance L. Sears, 21, was arrested two weeks ago after a Kimberly-area woman reported being attacked in her home.

Twin Falls County Prosecutor G. Richard Bevan said Friday he decided to go forward with a charge of aggravated battery rather than attempted rape because that charge more closely fits the evidence in the case.

The woman told police her attacker grabbed her hair and hit her head on the wall several times during the attack.

City takes grant for new terminal

FAA funds will cover 77% of design costs, but project currently in limbo

By Phil Sahn
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The City Council has accepted a federal grant for the design of an airport terminal and also has amended a contract with a local architect to finish the project design.

Accepting the grant from the Federal Aviation Administration means the city will be reimbursed approximately $9,000 of $49,000 it spent on preliminary design work, said Twin Falls-Sun Valley Regional Airport consulting engineer Dale Riedesel.

The amended contract with architect Harold Gerber to prepare detailed plans and construction documents totals $116,000. However, the FAA grant will pay 77 percent of the contract, meaning the city's cost will total $26,703.

The city can pay its share with money from a passenger-facilities charge added to airfare, Riedesel said.

This charge, approved by Congress last year, amounts to a head tax paid by air travelers to help fund airport improvements. Airports around the country are using the charge, which can add up to $12 to the cost of a round-trip ticket.

While the FAA has offered grant money for the terminal design, and will pay up to an estimated 85 percent of the terminal cost, the project is caught in limbo right now.

The federal airport improvement program historically has run in five-year increments, but last year Congress renewed it for just one year.

The U.S. Department of Transportation has suggested that the program be renewed again for only one year to allow for changes the Clinton administration might make in the program. This brings grief to local airport officials.

The Twin Falls airport is scheduled to receive $400,000 in federal airport improvement money this year, Riedesel said.

But officials say it would be much easier to finance the new terminal if they know how much money the airport can count on receiving for the next several years.

To that end, airport officials have contacted Idaho's congressmen and other representatives on appropriate committees urging them to extend the program to at least three years and preferably five years.

Twin Falls County Commissioner Marvin Hempleman said Rep. Michael Crapo, R-Idaho, sent a letter this week saying he will work to get the airport improvement program extended.

Co-op gives Burley man $10,000 for vandal report

By Eric Goodell
Mini-Cassia News Service

MALTA — The Raft River Electric Co-op has made good on its promise of a reward to residents reporting vandalism.

Jim Chard of Burley received $10,000 Thursday after he spotted a man shooting a power pole in a remote area of northern Utah in May 1992. The man convicted of the damage is a police officer for Brigham City, Utah.

"We are trying to send a message to the public that we are serious about stopping (vandalism)," Co-op General Manager Bud Tracy said.

He said $10,000 can seem like a lot of money, but it will be worth it if the rural electric can prevent vandalism to poles and lines.

Already this year, the utility has spent $24,000 in repairs, he said.

Chard, who works for the Forest Service, was driving on the Idaho side of the border 13 months ago when he noticed a couple by a pickup alongside the road.

At first, he thought they had mechanical problems, but then noticed they were firing at a nearby electric pole.

Tracy said Chard gave him a "very detailed" description of the people and pickup, along with its license plate number. Chard didn't know about a reward being offered until about six weeks after speaking to Tracy.

"I was concerned that what they were doing appeared unsafe," Chard said. "I had no idea it was a criminal act. All I knew is that it just didn't look right."

Tracy said damage to the single pole affected services to 120 customers. He said it took two hours to replace the pole.

But he said far more customers could have been affected. Just a quarter-mile from the pole that was shot up, a pole carried a major transmission line from Wendover, Nev.

The Box Elder County (Utah) sheriff's office later identified the shooter. Dane Johnson, 40, a police officer from Brigham City, pleaded no contest on Aug. 3, 1992, to criminal charges. His companion wasn't charged.

While Johnson was convicted of a misdemeanor, Co-op officials wanted him to be prosecuted with a felony, administrative assistant Ralph Williams said.

The prosecuting attorney for Box Elder County, however, said it was a misdemeanor case. The judge fined Johnson $200.

Not deterred, Raft River Co-op then took Johnson to civil court, where they recovered about $1,200 damage to replace the damaged pole, Williams said.

The vandalism last year isn't the only problem the rural cooperative has had to cope with. On May 5 of this year, the company had to repair 19 strings of insulators along the main transmission line after rain shored them out.

Retired Twin Falls County Sheriff Jim Munn now presides over the court security desk at the judicial building. Munn, who spent less than a month in retirement, says his latest job is rewarding and a fairly comfortable change: "I love it. I think it's great. It's real easy. I already knew everybody at the courthouse."

Former sheriff now in charge of judicial building security

By Analise Taylor
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Jim Munn is back in the saddle, only this time on a different horse.

Munn, 62, retired as Twin Falls County sheriff in January. Munn had held the job just a few days shy of 14 years.

Now, visitors can see Munn presiding over the court security desk at the Twin Falls County judicial building.

That post was often manned by Wayne Touseley, chief of courthouse security before he was elected to succeed Munn in November.

Judge Daniel Hurlbut hired Munn in February. "At first it was kind of weird to see him in the blue uniform and me over here (in the sheriff's office)," Touseley said.

The former sheriff would sometimes ask, "Well, how does it feel to be in the hot seat?" Touseley said.

Munn says his part-time job as court bailiff has been rewarding.

"I anticipated becoming a part-time bailiff upon retiring, and they needed some help over here," Munn said.

Munn began his job in February and has been working part time ever since.

He and his wife travel, and he works around his house, Munn said. He is enjoying his four grandchildren, including his four-week-old grandson and seven-week-old granddaughter, as well as his retirement.

"I love it. I think it's great. It's real easy. I already knew everybody at the courthouse," he said.

His son, Jim Jr., has served in the police department for over 13 years. Jim Sr. worked in the sheriff's department for over 23 years, he said.

"I'm working to supplement my income and keep me partially busy," he said.

California developer receives zoning change

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS — A Beverly Hills, Calif., developer has received a zoning change to start a housing development in the city's "area of impact" east of Twin Falls.

Michael Avatar plans to build houses on, 80 acres between Madrona Street North and Eastland Drive north of Candlelight Drive.

The acreage measures one-half mile wide and 1,300 feet deep.

The land was zoned for minimum 1-acre lots, and Avatar had asked the city to rezone the area to allow duplexes and single-family homes on minimum 6,000 square-foot lots.

The Planning and Zoning Commission in late May, however, recommended single-family zoning with a minimum lot size of 8,000 square feet. Under this zoning, lots along the development borders must be at least 85 percent as large as any existing or platted lots within 150 feet of the development.

Avatar agreed to the recommendation and the City Council OK'd the zoning change.

Engineer Dale Riedesel, representing Avatar, told the council Avatar is ready to develop 20 acres of homes with lot sizes ranging from 10,600 to 20,000 square feet.

Water service will be available to the development and, except for the northeast section of the property, sewer services also will be readily available, said City Community Development Director LaMar Orton. Avatar must pay for extending the services to the development.

The area of impact lies outside the city limits, but according to state law, is overseen by the city.

Impact areas are a mile wide and are set up to protect residential areas from development that might encroach toward the city.

State kept in the dark about INEL corrosion

By N.S. Nokkentved
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Federal officials have kept details of corrosion problems in a highly radioactive waste storage building at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory from state officials.

When state officials met with INEL officials on June 17 to discuss spent fuel storage problems, INEL officials did not mention a June 14 report that detailed the storage problems.

"They didn't talk about it," INEL Oversight Program spokesman Terry Smith said Friday. "We feel like we're not getting all the facts."

The report was supplied to the state by the Snake River Alliance, a statewide citizen activist group.

INEL officials have known for 15 years about corrosion problems in metal cans holding highly radioactive spent reactor fuel in water-filled basins inside a building that doesn't meet earthquake standard, according to the June report.

The report by Westinghouse Idaho Nuclear Co. Inc., which operates INEL's Chemical Processing Plant where the spent fuel is stored, says officials discounted or ignored safety problems for economic reasons.

Officials at the INEL now insist the storage is safe — for the "short term" — but they plan to move the spent reactor fuel into a newer building over the next 12 years, spokesman Brad Bigger said.

State officials, however, are concerned about the structural integrity of Building 603, where the spent fuel is stored in three water-filled basins. If the corroded cans leak, and an earthquake cracked the basin, radioactively contaminated water might seep into the Snake River Plain Aquifer.

The report found that "corrosion of the cans had progressed to the extent that the integrity of the cans could no longer be assumed."

The state's INEL Oversight Program wants INEL to halt all shipments of spent fuel to the facility until all facts about storage have been reviewed, Smith said.

But just because there are safety problems with storage, doesn't mean it's unsafe, Bigger said.

"There is no realistic risk to employees or the public," he said.

There is a possibility of an accidental criticality — an accidental uncontrolled nuclear chain reaction — in the fuel storage basin. But water in the basin would provide shielding for most of the radiation such a reaction would produce, Bigger said.

Before some of the fuel can be moved, it must be dried out and put into new containers. But that will require a new facility, which first must be designed and built, Bigger said.

Twelve years is too long. The state would like to see that schedule moved up, Smith said.

Meanwhile, another trainload of spent

Suspect in Idaho slaying escapes

FRENCH CAMP, Calif. (AP) — Authorities have issued an all-points bulletin for the man who escaped from a northern California jail just two days before he was to be tried for murdering a southeastern Idaho truck driver last year.

San Joaquin County Sheriff Baxter Dunn said Jesse Vargas Rodriguez, 26, was one of six inmates to flee the new county jail last week-end after a hollow window bar was cut with a hacksaw blade.

Four of the escapees have been recaptured. But Dunn said Rodriguez and Ricardo Alanis, 22, who is also charged with murder, remained at large on Friday.

Sgt. Mike Esau said they were seen in Los Angeles Wednesday afternoon and were believed headed for either Mexico or Arizona.

Rodriguez was scheduled to go on trial last Monday for the murder of Bradley Rex Nielsen, 25, of Downey was shot three times in the back while asleep in the cab of his tractor-trailer rig on Interstate Five near Stockton, Calif., last October.

Nielsen, who was delivering a load of flour from Salt Lake City, apparently tried to flag down several motorists after he was shot, but he was dead by the time an ambulance arrived.

Two other men, Christian Willis, 24, and Daniel Rontel, 21, and a 26-year-old were also charged with Nielsen's murder.

The new $72 million county jail at French Camp just opened last December, but Dunn said he believes the old, low-vacant, jail was more secure.

"No one ever kicked their way out of the old jail," the sheriff said.

He said that over the course of several days some inmates distracted the only guard on duty in a day room of the 64-bed pod housing Rodriguez, while others used the hacksaw blade to cut through a hollow steel bar.

Dunn said he did not know how the blade was smuggled into the jail, although the 16-foot-tall masonry surrounding it's recreation yard is low enough for items to be thrown over the top.

Judge dismisses public defender for suspects in trooper's death

CASTLE DALE, Utah (AP) — A judge has dismissed a public defender for two Indiana teen-agers charged in the shooting death of a Utah Highway Patrol trooper last week.

Earlier, 7th District Judge Bryce Bryner appointed attorney Allen Thorpe to defend the pair, but Friday Bryner dismissed Thorpe and appointed two Salt Lake attorneys, Ken Brown and Steven McCaughy.

Bryner said Thorpe lacked experience in capital homicide cases. A preliminary hearing was scheduled for Friday, but was postponed without date.

Jason Scott Pearson, 18, and 16-year-old George Todd Kennedy of Delphi and Camden, Ind., respectively, could face the death penalty if convicted in the shooting death of trooper Dennis "Dee" Lund, 37, a six-year UHP veteran who was shot and killed during a chase June 16.

State high court takes unusual request under advisement in initiative lawsuit

BOISE (AP) — The Idaho Supreme Court took under advisement Friday arguments presented in an unusual hearing challenging the ballot title of an anti-gay initiative.

In a proceeding that hasn't been used for nearly 40 years, the court was asked to order changes in the title given by the attorney general's office to an initiative sponsored by the Idaho Citizens Alliance.

It seeks to forbid any legislation giving "minority status" to homosexuals. It also bans the teaching or advocating homosexuality in schools.

The American Civil Liberties Union asked the Supreme Court to order a ballot title for the initiative that makes it clear the intent is to discriminate against homosexuals and take away civil liberties.

The chairman of the Idaho Citizens Alliance, Kelly Walton of Burley, was given permission to address the court, even though he is not a lawyer.

He spent most of his time attacking the ACLU proposal, finally drawing a warning from Chief Justice Charles McDevitt that the purpose of the hearing was to determine whether the attorney general's ballot title was proper, not the validity of changes proposed by the ACLU.

Deputy Attorney General Frank Walker took only a few minutes for the state's side. He said the law says only that the ballot title must be accurate and neutral in its description.

"The title does meet the requirements set forth in the Idaho Code," he said.

The citizens alliance must obtain about 32,000 signatures in the next year to put the issue before voters in the next general election.

ACLU lawyer George Patterson said if the Supreme Court orders changes in the ballot, all petitions gathered so far should be voided and the process should start over.

Instead of a ballot title that says only that the initiative deals with civil rights, Patterson said it should make it clear that it is an attempt to discriminate against homosexuals and stop any public discussion of it.

"A law professor could not write or speak favorably or even neutrally about the recent holding of the Supreme Court of Hawaii that same-sex marriages are protected under that state's constitution," he said. "The petitioners in this suit who work for public agencies could be fired for their candid acknowledgment of their sexual orientation."

ACLU hadn't proposed a different title, his organization probably wouldn't be in court. The ACLU language, he said, "goes out of its way to cast a negative light on our initiative."

The Supreme Court should accept the Idaho Citizens Alliance language for the ballot title because it's based on the language of the initiative itself, Walton said.

Patterson said if the initiative were taken literally, all libraries would be forbidden to carry any book or article on homosexuality.

Justice Byron Johnson said it wasn't clear what was meant by "educators" in the section banning discussion of homosexuality in schools.

Some feel proposed concession fee hike fair

JACKSON, Wyo. (AP) — Not all concession operators are opposed to a bill endorsed by the Clinton administration that would raise fees charged to concessionaires in Grand Teton, Yellowstone and other national parks.

The measure would end the requirement of the Concessions Policy Act of 1965 that incumbent concessionaires have preference in contract renewal.

The fee rate "probably is lower than it should be," said Greg Smith of Signal Mountain Lodge Co., which paid $49,824 on a gross of about $2.5 million in Grand Teton-National Park, for a 2 percent fee. "I don't think a lot of people would have a problem with (an increase)."

Grand Teton Lodge Inc. paid only $246,817 in franchise fees in 1991 on estimated gross receipts of about $16.4 million. That amounts to 1.5 percent of gross. Clay James of Grand Teton Lodge called the rate fair considering the money they recycle into the operation to fix facilities.

"If our facilities were run down then, yes, it probably should be a larger percentage," he said.

"In places like Grand Teton the federal government has basically given up its job as a landlord. It's just going on for the ride," said Bill Chan-der, National Parks and Conservation for the National Parks and Conservation Association, a Washington, D.C.-based watchdog group.

Rex Maughn, owner of Signal Mountain Lodge and chairman of National Park Hospitality Association, responded that the criticism comes from environmentalists who want development removed.

Concessionaires nationwide currently pay the government $18 million in fees, while collecting $622 million in revenues per year, for a return to the government of less than 3 percent.

In Yellowstone, Hamilton Stores

paid $589,640 in franchise fees on an estimated $21.4 million gross, a 2.75 percent rate. TW Services, which operates most Yellowstone hotels, pays more than 20 percent of its gross annually under a unique contract in the park system.

Chandler pointed to Yellowstone for the power of the preferential right. After the government bought out the previous operator and put the contract up for competitive bid in 1979, eight firms sought the contract, he said.

"When TW renewed its contract 10 years later, you had zero firms bidding."

A. Ruth Pierce

FILER — A. Ruth Pierce, 95, of Filer, died Monday, June 21, 1993, at the home of her son in Filer. Ruth was born Nov. 18, 1897, at Niles, Mich., the daughter of Henry and Mabelle Thompson Johnson. As an infant, she moved to California, spending the majority of her growing years at San Diego Teachers' College (now San Diego State University), where she served as coxswain and captain of the women's rowing team.

Ruth met Jesse Jennings Pierce while at high school and they became engaged for nine years. During that time, Ruth taught at a one-room schoolhouse at San Miguel and Jennings served as a Marine during World War I. They were married in 1923 at Berkeley, Calif., after Jennings graduated from the University of California. They spent their honeymoon and first summer at Yosemite where Jennings sang every evening at "Fire Fall" with the Golden Bear Quartet.

Their first home was San Francisco, where Jennings was announcer for one of the first radio stations in the nation. Ruth taught until her first son was born. They raised their family and cared for her father-in-law at Oakland, Calif., and moved to North Hollywood in 1941. During the war, she worked graveyard shift at Lockheed Aircraft Company, grew victory gardens, and cared for her mother and a young nephew whom she raised with her own children.

In 1949, Ruth and Jennings moved to Modford, Ore., where they retired and bought their "dream home" on the Rogue River. Their life was filled with traveling and fishing. Finding retirement unfulfilling, they moved to Cassland, Idaho, to assist their son, Alan, in his dairy farming operation. There, Ruth raised calves and was active in the Baptist Church and community. Following her husband's death in 1979, Ruth moved to Nampa, residing at Sunnyside Manor Retirement Center for eight years. She became part of the Alan Pierce family at Filer in 1989. Ruth's life was her husband. Family and friends. She was a practical, no-nonsense, tell-it-like-it-is lady who could make decisions and live by them. Her husband's death was a blow for each day has been an inspiration to those around her.

Ruth is survived by two sons, Jennings (Joanne) D. Pierce of Chenneno, Wyo., and Alan (Lisbeth) Pierce of Filer; 10 grandchildren, Jay, Terry, Scott, Dale, Patricia, Jennifer, Stephanie, Mark, Craig and Linda; and seven great-grandchildren. She was preceded in death by a brother, George Johnson, who died three years ago at the age of 92.

A memorial service will take place at 10 a.m. Saturday, June 26, 1993, at the Filer Missionary Church in Filer, Idaho. The family suggests that memorial contributions be given to the Filer Missionary Church "Operation Blessing" program. Arrangements are under the direction of Reynolds Funeral Chapel in Twin Falls.

Navy works on proposal with spray pilots

SPOKANE (AP) — The head of an aerial spray plane pilot's association said Friday he is confident the U.S. Navy will adopt new rules for jet training flights to avoid collisions over the Palouse region.

"I'm optimistic," Dick Tigges, president of the Northwest Aerial Applicators Association, said of the Navy's proposal to limit the speed and altitude of jets flying training missions from the Whidbey Island Naval Air Station.

Details of the proposals remain to be ironed out, and a meeting between spray plane operators and the Navy is scheduled Monday at Colfax, Tigges and Navy spokesmen said.

"I think most of this will fall into place as proposed," Tigges said. The proposed changes were prompted by an April 14 collision over Whitman County involving a Whidbey-based A-6E attack jet and an aerial spray pilot's plane.

Under the proposals, the Whidbey jets would be limited to 475 mph over designated routes during periods when seasonal spraying is heavy over farmlands, Lt. Cmdr. Doug Johnson, assistant operations director at the base, said Thursday. Jets from the base near Oak Harbor have traditionally flown as fast as 540 mph on Palouse routes.

In addition, the jets would fly at least 300 feet above ground, instead of the current floor of 200 feet, Johnson said.

He said the base, on Whidbey Island northwest of Seattle, will file flight plans for its jets 24 hours in advance. It also is considering setting up a toll-free phone line that would give civilian pilots information on their flights in corridors used for military training.

Whidbey currently can inform the Federal Aviation Administration of its flight plans the same day as the flights.

"We want the system to work," he said.

"The proposals are intended as a gesture by the Navy to better utilize the existing air space," Whidbey spokesman, Lt. Tom Bernotta said Friday. "We are trying to do what we can to minimize endangering other aircraft. It's an ongoing process."

Though aerial spray pilots can already call for information on the Navy flights, they have better utilized the existing air space," Whidbey spokesman, Lt. Tom Bernotta said Friday. "We are trying to do what we can to minimize endangering other aircraft. It's an ongoing process."

Navy pilots will be ordered not to fly the routes if they are ahead or behind posted schedules, Johnson said.

INEL

U.S. Navy reactor fuel apparently is on its way to Idaho, said Beatrice Brailford, who runs the Snake River Alliance's Pocatello office.

The alliance is disturbed that management has known for 15 years that storage was unsafe but kept it from the public and the state, she said.

"There is no safe storage in Idaho," she said.

Building 603 is demonstrably unsafe, she said. Numerous mishaps with stored spent fuel have happened in the building, including contamination of workers, she said.

The building is not being emptied as fast as it could be because the INEL is busy unloading Navy fuel for storage, she said. Pleasing the Navy continues to be a priority to day as it has in the past, which is one cause of many of the storage problems, she said.

INEL will continue to accept the Navy spent fuel shipments, Bigger said. Building 666 at the chemical plant has plenty of room, he said.

But the state isn't satisfied that the more modern building can hold the old, corroded spent fuel from Building 603 along with Navy spent fuel shipments over the next dozen years.

"They haven't really shown that's true," Smith said.

The chemical plant has a long history of reprocessing spent fuel to recover, still-useful nuclear material. The plant, in fact, was geared for reprocessing, not long-term storage.

In April 1992, however, the department stopped reprocessing spent fuel. Now spent fuel sent to Idaho is merely stored indefinitely.

Despite former department policies to store fuel only five years, some of it has been in the storage pool since the early 1960s, according to the report. And some fuel, still stored in a manner that promotes corrosion, even though officials have known for many years that it is wrong, the report said.

Back in the 1970s, Building 603 at the chemical plant was considered the "dump for all garbage fuels that no one else wants," the report said.

Crews discovered the wires became exposed after somebody shot up the lines. Materials and labor cost $5,300.

Raffi River Electric with its main office in Malta serves 2,500 customers from American Falls to Wendover.

Williams said there have been significant problems with vandalism in remote areas. Sometimes, a power pole will be shot "right down to the ground" because of repeated hits of high-powered rifles, he said.

In addition to poles, vandals also shoot wire insulators. The wires then eventually short out during rainstorms.

The company recently had to replace many strings of insulators during a May rainstorm, causing thousands of dollars of damage and cutting power to numerous households.

Parade kicks off Regatta

By John J. Harberth
Mini-Cassia News Service

BURLEY — With dozens of boats, some decked out in balloons, and even Smokey the Bear riding in a Forest Service truck, the Idaho Regatta boat parade Friday kicked off the weekend racing event.

Regatta Committee Chairman Terry Bingham said the parade is a regular part of the annual event, which is in its 17th year.

The parade began at Payless Drugs in Burley while the boats, towed on trailers, circled city streets as they made their way to the race site, the Burley Municipal Golf Course Marina.

The event allowed people to get a close up look at some of the powerful machines, which may be a bit harder to see as they scream by in the water at more than 150 mph.

Race fans lined the parade route, some watching from their vehicles and others standing outside.

Theo and Harry Merrick from Twin Falls said they have been coming to the parade and races for about 10 years.

"I think this is really good for a community like Burley because it brings out so many people," Harry Merrick said.

They were hoping to see more boats from Twin Falls, but only saw one.

Alice Schenk of Rupert came for the first time with her children to watch.

She said her kids were more interested in the candy thrown from the passing boats and vehicles than watching the parade.

Group pushes for overhaul of government

SPOKANE (AP) — A new citizens' group is pushing a proposal to reorganize city government by moving from the current city manager-weak mayor system to a strong mayor model.

Attorney Stephen Eugster this week filed a proposed initiative on behalf of a group called Coalition for a New Spokane.

Eugster said the group does not plan to solicit signatures for the initiative this year, but wants the proposal to become part of the city election debate this fall.

"The government we have is not representative of the people," Eugster said. "The way we've got the thing constructed is collective incompetence."

For 33 years, the city has operated in a system in which the city manager has power to hire and fire all department heads.

Book chronicles 'bad science' of Utah fusion

SALT LAKE CITY — There was an elegant understatement to the news release of March 23, 1989:

"Two scientists have successfully created a sustained nuclear fusion reaction at room temperature in a chemistry laboratory at the University of Utah. The breakthrough means the world may someday rely on fusion for a clean, virtually inexhaustible source of energy."

Electrochemists B. Stanley Pons and Martin Fleischmann claimed they had achieved their extraordinary results in a test-tube reactor about the size of a highball glass. But Gary Taubes writes in "Bad Science: The Short Life and Weird Times of Cold Fusion," that instead of leading to Nobel prizes and billions of dollars, the discovery would devolve into one of the most bizarre episodes in scientific history.

The book, published by Random House, portrays cold fusion as an out-of-control fiasco that began with the public announcement at the news conference.

Taubes makes no bones about what he thinks of phenomenon. "Cold fusion did not exist," he writes. "It never had."

Taubes interviewed more than 260 people between March 27, 1989 and November 1992. Conspicuously absent from the list of sources are Pons and Fleischmann, who refused to talk.

With two or three exceptions, few fare well in the book: But former University of Utah president Chase Peterson and Brigham Young University physicist Steven Jones take especially hard hits.

According to Taubes, Peterson's desire to transform Utah and his university into a major intellectual

Utah base gets a little good news

OGDEN, Utah (AP) — Hill Air Force Base had some good news Friday to offset Thursday's bad news from the Base Closure Commission.

Hill Air Force Base will receive 53 military jobs from the 436th Training Squadron at Carswell Air Force Base in Texas, said Technical Sgt. Barbara Fisher, base spokeswoman.

The closure and realignment commission voted Friday to redirect the 436th to Hill Air Force Base, Luke Air Force Base and Dyess Air Force Base.

On Thursday, the commission voted to transfer up to 200 tactical missile interservice jobs from the Ogden Air Force Logistics Center to Letterkenny Army Depot in Pennsylvania.

Positions from seven other facilities also will be consolidated at Letterkenny. The Utah workers maintain missiles such as the Maverick and AIM 9 Sidewinder.

Fisher said about 140 employees will be directly affected by the consolidation, and the base could lose up to 60 more support personnel.

and economic force deafened him to those who urged caution. "The long-standing rivalry between Utah and BYU lifted cold fusion from a scientific controversy to an emotional one," Taubes writes.

For instance, Taubes said Peterson reneged on an agreement to work with BYU in one of the nastiest in a series of political moves that overshadowed the science.

But the move was intuitive, not paranoid, Taubes said.

Jones had received a review copy of the pair's funding proposal a few months before they ended up going public. Taubes reviewed Jones' lab books, which the author said showed Jones resumed research he had long abandoned only after reading the proposal.

"Jones, BYU and the Department of Energy put them in an untenable position," Taubes said in an interview Friday. They had to go public, fast.

Pons is working near Nice, France. He does not have a listed telephone number. Attempts to contact Fleischmann in England also were unsuccessful.

Still, Peterson, who maintained going public was the right thing to do, should have known better, Taubes said. Peterson resigned from the university in June 1991.

"He admitted he couldn't function as a university president any more," Taubes said. "But that's not the same as admitting he made a mistake."

Peterson, a physician at the University of Utah Health Sciences Center, said he would have liked to delay the announcement another 18 months.

Beyond that, "Would I do something differently? No," he said Friday.

Decision on zoning ordinance may come at Monday meeting

Mini-Cassia News Service

BURLEY — Cassia County commissioners might adopt its new zoning and subdivision ordinance Monday at its meeting at the courthouse, a county employee says.

The ordinance has been the result of years of work by the commissioners who say a new plan is needed because of more concern from landowners worried that their neighbors' activities are causing a nuisance or a decrease in property values.

Three hearings were held in May; another one took place earlier this month at Burley High School.

Commissioners heard several comments, from those who said there should be no regulations, to those who said they see a need for zoning.

Last week, commissioners toured the Jackson area near Minidoka Dam to determine if a zoning change was needed. Several people testifying at the hearing said the area should be zoned prime agricultural instead of residential/agricultural because there aren't very many houses there.

Commissioners said before the tour, however, that others have told them to leave it zoned the way it is.

The commissioners are expected to also form a zoning board composed of area residents who will investigate zoning matters.

The new zoning ordinance would require a special use permit to be obtained in order to construct a landfill.

Dispose-All, a private landfill company with headquarters in Boise, is currently constructing a landfill on Burley Butte west of Burley.

In a letter from the company's attorney, Dispose-All claims the commissioners are trying to infringe on its right to build a landfill.

In other items scheduled for the Monday commissioner's meeting, department heads will give reports and Jim Vining, director of Trans IV, will ask commissioners for funding.

Man with illness wants drug charges dropped

LOGAN, Utah (AP) — A 32-year-old man suffering a life-threatening illness says he bought marijuana for medical reasons, and wants criminal charges against him dismissed.

Ruben Contreras, who has been charged with possession of a controlled substance, has autonomic neuropathy. The disorder is characterized by uncontrollable nausea and vomiting.

Contreras filed a motion this week asking the state to dismiss the drug charge against him. A hearing is scheduled for Monday in 1st District Court.

A narcotics agent intercepted a parcel, sent to Contreras' home, in December 1991. The packet contained three ounces of marijuana.

Logan instructor Edward Redd says smoking marijuana would ease Contreras' suffering, since he cannot take synthetic drugs. Contreras' condition leads to dehydration and starvation.

More than 1,000 apply for flight attendant jobs

SEATTLE (AP) — More than 1,000 people showed up at Alaska Airlines headquarters Friday to apply for any flight attendant jobs that may come open during the carrier's labor dispute with the attendants.

The carrier advertised for applicants Wednesday, the same day it announced a new package of wage scales and work rules for the 1,560 flight attendants who have been negotiating with the airline for a new contract since 1990.

Contract talks broke down last Saturday, at the end of a 30-day cooling-off period ordered by a federal mediator. The attendants have authorized a strike, but union leaders, citing concerns about job security, said they would instead employ a strategy of "creative chaos," with job actions ranging from surly service to selective walkouts.

Religion

Strange happenings in religion

How's this for a ridiculous situation? Before the first-ever World Conference on Human Rights even begins, its organizers discriminate against a major religious leader.

First, they invited the Dalai Lama, the spiritual leader of Tibetan Buddhists, to speak at the Vienna conference. Then the Chinese government said it didn't want the 'Dalai Lama to speak, so the conference organizers "disinvited" him.

Clark Morpheu
Faith today

Talk about a great start. Obviously, China didn't want the Dalai Lama there because he would talk about the Chinese invasion of Tibet in the 1950s that eventually drove him to leave his homeland and set up a Tibetan Buddhist compound in India.

Since the Chinese takeover, Tibetan culture has been plundered, more than 6,000 Buddhist temples have been destroyed, poverty is widespread and even the Tibetan language is being replaced with that of the Chinese captors. The world has been standing by for 40 years watching the gentle Tibetan people slide into oblivion. In another two decades, the Chinese will probably have completely cleansed the Tibetan culture from the face of the Earth. Meanwhile, the Dalai Lama, who was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1989, is treated like a human-rights outlaw.

Meanwhile, in the town of West Wendover, Nev., there is a casino, a big gambling joint that draws thousands of Mormons from Utah — even Salt Lake City, which is just 117 miles away.

Does this strike you as strange? Here we have a religion that is based on clean living: no alcohol, tobacco or caffeine. Suddenly, the Mormons throw it all away for a fling in Nevada and the privilege of throwing their money into the black hole of the gambling world.

Mormon officialdom disputes this, claiming that the people going into Nevada to gamble are not the best members of the Latter-Day Saints church. But there are 1.7 million people in Utah, and 1.2 million of them are Mormons. Gaming officials in Nevada say that 90 percent of the gamblers at West Wendover are from Utah, so there must be a lot of backsliding Mormons in Utah.

Mormon theology says that gambling is considered one of the lesser evils only because it perpetuates the myth that one can get something for nothing. Mormon leaders fear that kind of thinking would give their people freedom to let down their guard; work less and play more, over at West Wendover.

My worry is this: In the decadent environment of a gambling den, these decent and innocent people might be tempted to sample some of the greater evils offered in a place like that — alcohol, caffeine and tobacco. Talk about sin. Once a person gets started, there's no end.

Meanwhile, I've covered papal trips twice — once on his journey through Canada and the other in the United States. So, I've seen all the hype and the sleazy stuff that gets sold as souvenirs at these events.

The church tries to control it by authorizing only tasteful products, such as stamps and coins. But there really is no way to control it, and private vendors set up booths all over the place.

Security is very tight at these events, and trying to drive an automobile anywhere can be a nightmare. So, people end up walking past booths along every road leading to the auditorium where the pope is speaking.

The last time Pope John Paul II came to the United States, vendors were selling the infamous pope-on-a-rope soap. Somebody even was selling a pope lawn sprinkler, in which the water came out of his upraised hand.

Private vendors also were selling slightly obscene T-shirts and garish jackets with the pope's likeness on the back. One entrepreneur this year asked church officials to approve his pope on a slope, a small sculpture showing the pope in full robes skiing down an alpine hill.

It was rejected, officials say, not because Catholics have no sense of humor. Rather, the pope on a slope was rejected because church officials wanted Pope John Paul II wearing a parka and the designer wouldn't agree to the costume change.

Prayer — public or private — can make a difference

"If you ever get an opportunity to fight with someone over prayer at graduation, please respectfully decline," states the editor of The Times-News, in the Saturday, May 30, edition. He goes on to say, "A two-minute conversation with God won't significantly hurt or help anyone."

On June 25, 1992, the U.S. Supreme Court released its ruling on the case involving Rabbi Gutterman's prayer at a Providence, R.I., graduation. Justice Antonin Scalia, in writing the dissenting opinion concerning the case of Lee vs. Weisman, made the following statement concerning the officially sponsored non-denominational invocation and benediction read by Rabbi Gutterman: "To the contrary, they are so characteristically American they could have come from the pen of George Washington or Abraham Lincoln, himself." (Bradley P. Jacob, "Praying Up a Storm,"

Jim Sommer
Clergy's corner

Citizen, May 17, 1993, p. 2)

"Putting all discussions of 'rights' aside, however, I would still argue that my God, the Almighty One who is Omnipotent and Omniscient, the One who (through Jesus Christ) has given me the promise of eternal life, can and does make a significant difference in this world. I will acknowledge that many times there have been innocuous, even harmful, public prayers offered by clergy in our efforts to please the critics."

In fact, what we really needed at those times was boldness to pray as if God was really a God who hears and answers prayer. The kind of prayer that brought answers such as Elijah received when he prayed that it not rain for 3½ years and it didn't rain; when he prayed that it rain once again, it began to rain. The kind of prayer that causes people to fall on their faces and to cry out, "The Lord, he is God; the Lord, he is God." (1 Kings 18)

What we really need is the kind of prayer that Jesus might have prayed, causing the deaf to hear, the blind to see (even those spiritually blind, as the Apostle Paul, once was) and the lame to be healed; the kind that delivers people from bondage and hopelessness and the torment of mental and emotional illness.

Jesus spent time alone in prayer. He also prayed in public, such as the time at the tomb of his friend Lazarus. He prayed, "Father, I thank you that you hear me. And I know that you hear me always, but because of the people standing around, I said it, that they may believe that you did send me." (John 11:42-43)

He prayed aloud in public so that those gathered there might believe, and I am sure there were those present who hated the "good" that came as a result. What happened, though, has had lasting effects.

May we also see the power of God in our young people who are searching for meaning and truth. We must pray, privately and publicly when allowed. Certainly the state of the schools would improve.

About Jim Sommer

Jim Sommer is the pastor of the Christian Center of Magic Valley.

He has a varied background that includes previous experience as a farmer, school teacher and pastor at the Filer Missionary Church.

He is a graduate of Boise State University and the Berean School of the Bible. He and his family spent two years in Sierra Leone, West Africa, as missionaries with World Partners of the Missionary Church before returning to Twin Falls.

His wife, Doris, teaches at O'Leary Junior High School. They have two children, Jimmi and Shelby.

Building foundations

The future is now, is a statement the Rev. Jim Davis says he likes to tell his congregation, including youth pastor Dennis Wiser, now that construction of their new church in Hagerman is completed.

Pure and simple

That's how people like gospel, reverend says

By Terrell Williams
Times-News correspondent

HAGERMAN — Gospel, pure and simple, is alive and well at the Christian Center in Hagerman.

Evidence is the new 15,000-square-foot church on a hill overlooking the city, hundreds of faithful members, and missionary work around the world.

The Rev. Jim Davis, a tall and thoughtful man with a deep voice, said there are a number of reasons why his church is growing so fast.

"I could tell you it's the preaching," but I know that's not true," he said with a smile. "People who come say they can feel the love and the welcome. They tell me they love our music and our singing. They drive from Twin Falls, Buhl, Gooding, Jerome, Wendell, Bliss. Sunday, we had people from Fairfield."

People are tired of hoopla and showmanship in religion, according to Davis.

"Simple gospel. People do not tire of it," he said. "They want something solid that they can anchor to."

The idea is that today's people are raising their children in a world where violence is splattered across the TV screen and swear words pepper the movies.

"I think people are trying to counteract that influence," Davis said. "They bring their children to Sunday school and give them some good eternal values."

In the beginning

Davis and his wife Pauline started the interdenominational Christian Center in Hagerman (population 750) in February, 1981. A handful of people from various religious affiliations met at the American Legion Hall for six months, then bought the old Mormon church building on State Street across from city park. There, the Christian Center grew to a full house.

In five years, the group had reached the building's capacity of 250 people,

'Simple gospel. People do not tire of it. They want something solid that they can anchor to.'

— The Rev. Jim Davis, Hagerman Christian Center

jammed tight, with seating shortages, parking shortages and no room to expand.

In 1991, Edith Vernon donated a six-acre building site one-half mile west and one-half mile south of Hagerman. Raising funds for the new church was surprisingly easy.

"We started this building with a cash offering one Sunday of $62,000," Davis recalled. "I was flabbergasted, overwhelmed. I had hoped for maybe $25,000. They wanted to see a new building. They knew we needed one."

Help to put up the building also came in generous amounts — like an old-fashioned barn raising. In the congregation were professional carpenters, stone masons, a carpet layer, a plumber, an electrician, a cement contractor and a well driller.

"Every trade I needed was in the church," Davis said.

At the front of the new chapel is a baptismal tub, a stage with a grand piano and a podium. The church also has a wide foyer and modern tiled bathrooms. A large fellowship hall has side doors that open to seven classrooms, a nursery, a spacious kitchen and storage areas. In front are the church offices. Landscaping, more parking area and stained glass windows are on the way.

Davis said the building is valued conservatively at $750,000 but was built for a third of that amount, primarily because of the free labor.

On Easter Sunday, the Christian Center congregation met for the first time in the new building. The chapel, with padded benches to seat 500, was filled and additional chairs had to be brought in. Since then, the chapel has been filled to at least 70 percent on Sunday and has been gaining new members every week. Dennis Wiser recently started work as youth pastor and choir director.

As she worked in the front office, Ruby Boone, church pianist and organist, said she knows why the Christian Center is so popular.

"A church alive is worth the drive," she said. "Jesus is here."

Missionaries

If that basic gospel brings people in, the desire to spread the word sends them out again.

Davis said the Christian Center spends more than $25,000 a year to help people in other countries and to send church members halfway around the world to build schools and churches.

Dan and Jackie Maddox of Wendell went to Alaska last year to do missionary work. Dan said he likes the Hagerman church because he likes the easygoing atmosphere and the people who go there.

"The preaching is down to earth and easy to understand," he said. "The preaching is directly from the Bible."

Betty Bishop of Bliss said the Christian Center sent her to the Marshall Islands a few years ago as a cook. She likes the center, she explained, because the people can disagree agreeably and still be friends.

"To me, it's like a family, someone you can depend on," she said. "Gene Swenson of Hagerman has sponsored himself to go to Africa five times to work on behalf of the center."

"We sponsor a lot of missionary work," Swenson said. "That's what the gospel is about."

Couple uses puppets to teach principles

By Theresa Humphrey
The Associated Press

ELKTON, Md. — Children may not listen to a preacher on Sunday mornings, but they'll soak up every word from a puppet teaching the same Christian principles.

Just ask Jim and Bonnie Blank, who travel to churches of all denominations throughout Maryland, Delaware and Pennsylvania with their cast of puppets and volunteers known as the Kingdom Characters.

"We feel like maybe somebody will listen to what the puppets might say when they might not listen to a Sunday school teacher or a grown person," Mrs. Blank said.

The couple, who own a real estate agency in Elkton, have been involved with the puppets for two years. But the idea to teach children about devoting their life to Christ began six years ago when their 23-year-old daughter Diana was killed in a car accident.

"I guess Diana's death was the key that got both of us thinking about being saved. Bonnie and I had been going to church, but we were backsliders," Blank said.

Borrowing on the Muppets concept, the puppet troupe could hardly go wrong trying to grab the attention of a restless audience.

They rock the rafters when Herschel the puppet does a spin off of Michael Jackson's "Beat It" with "Read It," referring to the Bible. A blue-faced, bewigged George Washington commands attention when he says, "It is impossible to rightly govern the world without God and the Bible," before breaking into his rendition of the "Battle Hymn of the Republic."

"Baby" lets loose with her best vocals on "America the Beautiful," interspersed with Scripture read by "Louie the Pastor" about God creating heaven and Earth.

The Blanks' unconventional approach to the Gospel doesn't stop with puppets. Mrs. Blank also does Christian-based clowning and Blank is getting involved with ventriloquy.

Randy Benefield, operations manager for One Way Street, a puppet and children's ministry supply company in Englewood, Colo., said Christians are increasingly turning to unconventional methods to spread the Gospel because of competition with television.

Jim and Bonnie Blank pose with their puppets, known as Kingdom Characters, in their Elkton, Md., last May. They use the puppets to convey religious principles.

The holy terror: Dennis the Menace talks to God in latest book

By Richard Scheinin
Knight-Ridder News Service

In the past four decades, Hank Ketcham has written about 50 books about Dennis the Menace.

In his latest, "Dennis the Menace: Prayers and Graces" (Westminster-John Knox Press), the little devil talks to and about God and creation.

Kneeling beside his bed at night, the famous towhead looks upward and says, "I'm sorry, but I'm afraid I had a real ininteresting day again." Then, when a minister pats him on the head, Dennis queries, "How long before they start doin' unto me what I did unto them others?" His parents look on with characteristic discomfit.

All this is interwoven with traditional prayers, blessings and table graces by Ketcham, who first thought of the project about 10 years ago. Ketcham, 73, grew up in Seattle, where he attended the First Methodist Episcopal Church. A longtime resident of Monterey, Calif., Ketcham was interviewed earlier this week amid much excitement over the June 25 release of John Hughes' "Dennis the Menace" movie starring Walter Matthau as Mr. Wilson and introducing Mason Gamble as Dennis.

Still, Ketcham was just as happy to talk about the new book, which has a forward by Ruth and Billy Graham. It's dedicated to Ketcham's old Sunday school teachers, grandparents and parents — "and to those others," he writes, "who were fooled into believing that I was a little angel."

Q: Is Dennis suddenly becoming prayerful?

A: No. Ever since I started Dennis some 43 years ago, I have integrated some theological concepts into the cartoon. I would have his parents putting him to bed and he would be saying a little prayer. Or I'd have him coming in or out of church, and he would have some pithy comments to make. The way I look at it, sometimes Dennis goes to the barber shop, and sometimes he goes to church. It's his life. It's all to show where his little feet take him. And I've found it gives a marvelous insight into the child. His comments and questions are different than they would be in another situation.

Q: Tell me a couple of your favorites from the book.

A: Well, there's one that's not in the book that comes to mind. It's called "The Ultimate Confession," and it shows Dennis kneeling at his bed, looking upward, and his hands are in an attitude of prayer. And he says, "Well, God, I goofed again." I think that everyone can relate to that.

I also like the one in the book where he says to his mom, "How did God know that I wanted you for my mother?" That's kind of a sweet one. There's all kinds of cute things that happen when children are talking about an abstraction like the Lord. It gives them an opportunity to say things they otherwise wouldn't.

Q: Is Dennis's prayerful side in the new movie?

A: It's definitely in it.

Role models and heroes: Redefining needed?

By Tom Schaefer
Knight-Ridder News Service

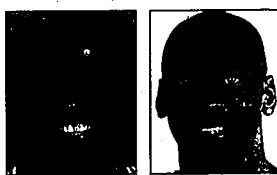

When I was a kid, my hero was Stan Musial, first baseman and outfielder for the St. Louis Cardinals. To my way of thinking, he could do no wrong.

My dad would listen to Cardinals games on his radio, and I would stop whatever I was doing when Musial stepped up to bat. With each pitch I would lean ever so slightly toward the radio, anticipating his swing. Of course, if he flied or grounded out — he rarely struck out — I was certain that his next trip to the plate would produce a hit. After all, he was Stan the Man.

His skill as a ballplayer and the respect given him by thousands of fans defined for me, in an inexpressible way, what a hero is. Throughout my growing up, I never lost respect for Musial.

Today, it seems, sports heroes are hard to find. Even those who try to wear the hero's mantle often fail, partly because there are too many off-the-field temptations and too few players who can command the respect of a cynical public. And always there is the media's scrutiny. No wonder some athletes refuse to be called heroes or role models.

Take Charles Barkley, for example. In a commercial for Nike, Barkley, who led the Phoenix Suns to the National Basketball Association finals, left no doubt about his views on being a hero: "I am not a role model. I am not paid to be a role model. ... I am paid to wreck havoc on a basketball court." The ad ends with Barkley saying: "Just because I can dunk a basketball doesn't mean I should raise your kids." Good point. After all, this is a man who shouts obscenities at crowds and who "talks trash" on the court.

Now contrast Barkley's commercial with Michael Jordan's ad for Gatorade, which features him shooting basketballs and drinking the thirst-quenching beverage. Throughout the ad, a voice sings this cheerful refrain: "I wanna be like Mike."

Be like Michael Jordan? In last week's issue of Sports Illustrated, several people who are familiar with the problem of gambling addiction point to warning signs — like precursors of cancer — that they think show Jordan to be a compulsive gambler. Their analysis was prompted by the publication of "Michael & Me: Our Gambling Addiction ... My Cry For Help" by a California businessman. Jordan denies he's got a problem.

All of this is simply a prelude to that subliminal sound you may hear in the "I wanna be like Mike" commercial: The crash of yet another hero.

Of course, searching for heroes isn't purely a 20th-century quest. Its roots go back at least to ancient Greece, where individuals were prized for their superhuman strength, courage, character or ability. And, in the history of this country, various presidents, military leaders and men and women of letters have been praised as heroes. Only in recent times have athletes joined the pantheon of American heroes.

But in the past two decades, more than a few seem to have fallen. Books such as Jim Bouton's "Ball Four" and Peter Golenbock's "The Bronx Zoo," as well as news story after news story about the abhorrent behavior of pampered sports stars (including alleged rapes by college athletes and drug abuse by pro athletes) have created a sickening litany on the demise of sports heroes.

As a result, many people believe that today's athletes, in striving for greatness, show nothing more than an insatiable thirst for wealth, pleasure and self-aggrandizement.

But maybe the problem isn't entirely the lauded athletes. Maybe we shoulder part of the blame. We look for individuals to stand above the crowd without the faults and failures of lesser mortals, though, curiously, we're both envious and resentful of what they have achieved. And what we find are gifted individuals who, in many ways, are like everyone else — less than perfect.

No, maybe it's time to rethink our definition of a hero. Let's give it a try: A hero should be someone who strives to do the very best, personally and professionally, and when he or she fails — as will always happen in one way or another — admits failure, corrects the mistakes and pushes on to be even better.

I believe there are heroes to cheer, and I will cheer. But they must be willing to admit their mortality and still — Charles? Michael? — still try to be the best they possibly can.

Do not look for a miracle

Often we hear someone say it was a miracle, but miracles are only for those who do not have the right answers to why things happen as they do.

In the book of Revelations the false prophets are blamed for working miracles and deceiving the whole world.

In Mark 8:12 Jesus said, "Why doth this generation seek after a sign? Verily I say unto you, there shall no sign be given unto this generation."

The first followers of Jesus were persecuted and destroyed with the help of a pharisee by the name of Paul, whose religion was mostly based on signs and miracles. In Revelations 16:14, devils and miracles have a lot in common, for together they have great power. David Koresh was waiting for a miracle: No different than 2000 years ago when the pharisees were waiting for their dead to arise.

Jesus wanted truth and righteousness. —The pharisees wanted miracles and they also did the writing, for we have nothing in the Bible that Jesus wrote.

Stop, and think about God

With all that is going on in the world, we need to stop and see how great God is. Isn't it time we stop and rethink about who we are? How our God loved us! Take a moment out of your busy schedule and read this:

"Your greatness is seen in all the world. O Lord, our Lord, your greatness is seen in all the world! Your praise reaches up to the heavens; it is sung by children and babies. You are safe and secure from all your enemies; you stop anyone who opposes you. When I look at the sky, which you have made, at the moon and the stars, which you set in their places, what is man, that you think of him, mere man, that you care for him? Yet you made him inferior only to yourself; you crowned him with glory and honor. You appointed him ruler over everything you made; you placed him over all creation; sheep and cattle; and the wild animals too; the birds and the fish and the creatures in the seas. O Lord, our Lord, your greatness is seen in all the world!" (Psalms 8 — in part)

Have you stopped to think about how great God is? You know life is not fair, but God is good. If you are not going to church, go to church somewhere and learn more about how great God is.

Halley festivities kick off Catholic celebration

By Barbara Neiwerth
Times-News correspondent

HAILEY — This year marks the 100th anniversary of the Diocese of Boise of the Roman Catholic Church.

It also marks the 110th anniversary of the St. Charles Borromeo Parish in Hailey.

Being the site of the first established Catholic church in southeastern Idaho, Hailey has been chosen as the kick-off site for summer celebrations throughout the state.

Festivities are set for July 3, beginning at noon with an antique wagon entry in the Days of the Old West Parade. Guests will include Father Don Fraser of Twin Falls, Executive Director of the Centennial Committee.

Following the parade is an open house and ice cream social set for 2 to 4 p.m. at St. Charles. Historical artifacts will be displayed.

Being the site of the first established Catholic church in southeastern Idaho, Hailey has been chosen as the kick-off site for summer celebrations throughout the state.

At 5 p.m. a Centennial Mass will be celebrated with Bishop Tod Brown presiding.

Immediately following is a potluck picnic at St. Charles.

The church began in the state as a response from the Flathead Indians of northern Idaho to bring a priest to their tribe to teach them the Catholic faith. Father Pierre Jean DeSmet, a Jesuit priest, presented the first Mass in what is now the Diocese of Boise on July 22, 1840, at Henry's Lake.

Today, there are 73 parishes, serving 103,534 Catholics with 44 stations, five Catholic hospitals, two health care centers and 14 schools.

The first Mass in the Wood River Valley was given by Father Louis Verhaegh in 1880 at Bullion, a mining town of 700 people seven miles west of Hailey.

St. Charles in Hailey was originally constructed in 1883 on the site of what later became the Natatorium. It was the first church of any denomination to be built in the Wood River Valley.

All parishes of the deanery are invited to participate in the anniversary celebration. For more information, contact Beverly Angell at 788-4428.

Community school 'journey' complete

RUPERT — The Community Vantage Bible School completed its weeklong "Amazing Journey to Bible Times" with an evening program June 11. The Bible school involved the Episcopal, First Christian, Assembly of God, First Freewill Baptist and Nazarene churches in Rupert.

A different mission is targeted every year. This year's project was the Christian Children's Ranch in Eagle. The goal was to raise funds to purchase cows for the ranch. The children raised more than $550. Approximately 230 children participated.

Graf slams down Kelesi 6-0, 6-0

The Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — No one at Wimbledon has ever won a "golden match" — yielding not a single point — but give Steffi Graf a little more time.

Nearly flawless and always rushing, Graf gained her second double bagel in three matches this week, 6-0, 6-0 in 35 minutes Friday over Helen Kelesi.

In reaching the round of 16 in a bid for a fifth Wimbledon title, Graf dropped only six points in the first set and five in the second while winning 49 points overall.

In men's matches, Pete Sampras, Boris Becker, Andre Agassi and Michael Stich rolled into the fourth round.

Graf looked ruthless on the court, or perhaps it was that Kelesi seemed so submissive. "It's just that there is nothing really I can do about it," Graf said, oddly apologizing for being so good. "I wish she would have played better because I know she can. But she didn't. I think it's wrong to just lose a few games, or a game, just to make the score look better."

"I mean, I don't enjoy winning 6-0, 6-0. I enjoy to play well, but not to win like that." Graf is on a collision course in the quarters with Jennifer Capriati, but first gets a chance to go for gold against American qualifier Meredith McGrath, who beat Shaun Stafford 6-1, 6-2.

Only one player in the Open era, Bill Scanlon, has ever recorded a golden set, much less a golden match. Scanlon did it in 1983 in a clay-court tournament in Florida.

Capriati, meanwhile, struggled through three sets for the third time this week before beating the fastest server in women's tennis, Brenda Schultz, 7-5, 4-6, 6-2.

Capriati could have another tough test in the fourth round against Lisa Raymond, who recently turned professional after winning her second straight NCAA title at Florida.

For all Capriati's promise during her debut on Centre Court in a dizzying comeback over summer in 1990, nothing is easy as she continues a quest for her first Grand Slam title.

The first time she stepped on Centre Court as a precocious 14-year-old, the Royal Box was filled and Princess Diana was in attendance. On Capriati's return this year, the Royal Box was empty: It was tea time.

The lesser royals and guests returned midway through the first set, but it was hardly a brilliant match with many errors on both sides.

Capriati had her service broken at love to lose the second set, then wasted two double faults by Schultz in the first game of the third set to fall behind.

On the changeover, as the late afternoon chill was setting in, Capriati asked for an injury timeout to have the trainer treat a blister on her left foot.

"It was irritating me in the second set, so I just asked her to redo the taping," Capriati said. "It felt a lot better. I started playing better and she missed shots here and there that were important."

Baseball labor negotiators Ojeda looks to the future send out peace signals

The Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — Sitting at separate tables only a few feet apart and rarely looking at each other, the two men who will negotiate baseball's new labor agreement talked Friday about the need to work together.

"The game needs a collegial approach," said Richard Ravitch, president of the owners' Player Relations Committee. "I've never seen a situation where there is as much hostility between two sides."

Donald Fahr, head of the Major League Baseball Players Association, agreed that the spirit of cooperation was missing. He blamed owners for doing little lately to improve relations.

"When we talk about a collegial atmosphere, it's difficult to tell the players you want to work together when you're just signing a six-year television contract, the most important document in our industry, that players had no input on," he said.

Fahr and Ravitch spoke at the Associated Press Sports Editors annual meeting. Both tried to use Thursday's trade of Gary Sheffield from San Diego to Florida to illustrate what has gone wrong in the game.

Sheffield, last season's NL batting champion, and reliever Rich Rodriguez were sent to the Marlins for three young pitchers. The deal was the latest in a series of San Diego's cost-cutting moves.

"It's a sad example of what's happening in baseball," Ravitch said. "I talked to their owners today and they authorized me to tell you that they've lost $12 million in cash out of their pockets in the last two years."

Fahr countered that buying a ballclub wasn't a guarantee of making money.

"What is it that they found out that they didn't know?" he asked.

Neither Ravitch nor Fahr talked about a work stoppage when the collective bargaining agreement expires at the end of the year.

But the last seven negotiations starting in 1972 resulted in four strikes and three lockouts.

Before Ravitch begins bargaining with Fahr, however, he wants to get the 28 teams to agree on a revenue-sharing plan for their local broadcast money.

Ojeda looks to the future

Lone survivor of accident says it's time to move on

By Sheldon Ocker
Knight-Ridder News Service

CLEVELAND — Bobby Ojeda sat rigidly erect in the Cleveland Indians' dugout, his eyes moving neither left nor right. The brim of his cap was as flat and stiff as a starched collar, and his uniform looked uncomfortably crisp and white.

He gave the appearance of being a fantasy camper who just paid $3,500 for the privilege of looking like a big-league player. Since March 22, Ojeda's life has been anything but a fantasy, and he only reluctantly considers the major leagues a desirable place for him to be.

A piece of Ojeda's scalp was torn away in the spring-training-boating accident that killed Indians pitchers Steve Olin and Tim Crews in Florida. Ojeda said he probably came within minutes of dying himself.

But he was alive. His friends were not. Suddenly, anything he thought or did seemed pointless. That was three months ago. Ojeda isn't a bundle of laughs these days.

Report alleges problems with Huskies' program

SEATTLE — A Pacific-10 Conference investigation has found 24 potential cases of misconduct involving the University of Washington football program, the most serious involving boosters.

A "Notice of Charges" released Friday cited 24 allegations ranging from $50,000 in improper loans to quarterback Billy Joe Hobert to irregularities in summer jobs for other players hired by well-tied football fans. The probe also alleged inadequate accounting for spending on high school prospects during 48-hour campus visits.

The report made no mention of potential sanctions, an issue to be decided by the league in late August and subject to NCAA review.

The probe resulted from copyright articles about Hobert's loans Nov. 5 in The Seattle Times and about booster activity involving other players Dec. 9 in The Los Angeles Times.

BURLEY — It resembled a family reunion.

Dancing Bear was there. So was Nightmare, Liquid Fix and Shockor.

The Gladiator and Mega Nutz were there also. Along with Major Trouble, Mr. "R," My Pleasure, Crazy People and Bronco Billy.

These were just some of the boats taking part in this weekend's Idaho Regatta in Burley.

Regatta Committee Chairman Terry Bingham estimated about 100 boats would show up this year, but said the exact figure wouldn't be known until registration was complete.

One of the boat drivers, Robert Scherer of Orange, Calif., said that races like the Regatta are more like a family get together because most of the racers know their competition. "About 99 percent know each other," he said.

The sleek racing boats spur plenty of interest during preliminary activities at the Regatta in Burley.

He was one of several racers from Southern California. Other drivers came from Oregon, Washington, Utah, and Arizona. During their season the drivers go from

Battle back from cancer continues

Shelley Hamlin of Phoenix, Ariz., watches her tee shot on the 17th hole Friday in Somers Point, N.J. Hamlin has slowly returned to top form after breast cancer two years ago.

SOMERS POINT, N.J. (AP) — Shelley Hamlin, knocked off the women's tour two years ago when she battled breast cancer, shot a 4-under-par 67 Friday to share the first-round lead in the $450,000 ShopRite LPGA Classic.

Defending champion Anne-Marie Palli and Brandie Burton also had 67s, while Sherri Steinhilber was one shot off the lead with 36 holes to play at the Greater Bay Country Club. Judy Dickinson had a chance to join the leaders but double-bogeyed the final hole for a 69, leaving her tied with a group that included Jane Geddes, the winner of the Oldsmobile Classic in Michigan earlier this month.

Meg Mallon, one of four two-time winners on tour this year, headlined the group at 1-under-par 70, while Nancy Lopez topped those at par 71.

"I'm not much of a leader," the 44-year-old Hamlin said. "I kind of wander around and then sneak in the back door. Actually, this is the first time I've been invited into a press room to talk about something other than cancer. I just love it. This is great. I'm back on golf."

Two years ago Hamlin's life was not so rosy. She was diagnosed with breast cancer in July 1991 and two weeks later underwent a mastectomy. She earned $16,170 that year and had to qualify for the LPGA Tour since there was no medical exemption.

Still, Hamlin got her card back and then surprised the golf world by winning the Phar-Mor at Inverrary just seven months after the surgery. She went on to record six Top 20 finishes in 1992 and earned a career best $157,327.

Hamlin has had a so-so 1993. She missed the cut in her first four tournaments and her best finish in 13 events is a tie for ninth. She had two sub-70s in 41 rounds coming into this event and $40,114 in earnings.

Round 42 was a gem. She had five birdies and a bogey and missed several good birdie chances in her last five holes.

Hamlin had birdie putts of 25, 12 and 20 feet on the second, fourth and fifth holes, respectively. She bogeyed the par-3 12th hole after missing the green but responded with a 2-foot birdie on No. 13 and a 25-footer on No. 14.

"When I was making all those birdies early, they were just good misses that limped onto the green and then I rolled these fabulous putts in," Hamlin said. "Later when I was hitting these marvelous shots, I missed the putts."

Hamlin laughs at the inconsistency. It's not worth worrying about, she says.

"Since cancer, I don't let too many moments slip by because I am sweating the small stuff, worrying about a putt I missed or taking myself too seriously," she said. "I think that is really

Pavin slips in key round before weather hits

CRÖMWELL, Conn. (AP) — Corey Pavin used precise iron shots and ideal morning conditions to shoot a 5-under-par 65 Friday and take a two-stroke lead midway through the Greater Hartford Open.

Wind gusting to 20 mph Friday afternoon kept later starters from making a strong run at Pavin, who completed 36 holes at 132, 16-under-par, two rounds over the 6,280-yard Tournament Players Club at River Highlands.

"I guarantee you the course was at least a couple shots harder in the afternoon," said Keith Clearwater, who shot 68 to gain a share of second place at 6-under 134 with Mike Spivey.

Springer, who is recovering from a wrist injury, and Bruce Fleisher, who is at 4-under, also shot 65s Friday, one stroke off the course record.

First-round co-leaders Roger Maltbie and Craig Stadler had wind problems, each shooting 71 to drop to 4-under.

Lanny Wadkins failed in an attempt to become the first repeat champion of the Greater Hartford Open champion, shooting a 73 for 147 and missing the cut. Two-time Hartford winner Paul Azinger was 12-over after a 77.

Pavin, who lost in a playoff to Billy Ray Brown two years ago at Hartford, said he expected to be in contention.

"When I get on a course that I feel comfortable on and I happen to be on my game I expect to have a chance to win," he said.

Pavin, who started on the 10th hole, used a 6-iron to get within five feet for birdie putts on the 10th and 16th holes, a sand wedge to within 15 for birdie on 13 and a 7-iron and a 9-iron to within 10 feet for birdies on the 18th and ninth holes.

His longest birdie putt was from 25 feet on the first hole.

Pavin hasn't won on tour yet this year, but has three top-10 finishes in the last five weeks. He was three back after two rounds of the U.S. Open last week only to learn a difficult lesson in the third round.

"I learned not to shoot 75 in the third round," he said. "I probably tried to do a little too much out there in the third round. Mental errors for me are the biggest kind of mistake I can make because I feel that's the strongest part of my game, playing smart."

Springer, whose wrist troubles have at times prevented him from lifting a club, was surprised by his outing.

"I've been just grinding away out there. I haven't been playing well at all," he said. "It's been tough just trying to get the ball close to the hole."

Springer said the problem has been that his elbow and his wrist have been out of alignment. He said a chiropractor has helped, but the wrist is still weak.

"I lost 15 to 20 yards off my driver and 10 yards off my irons," Springer said. "Getting used to the new distances is a real headache."

Golfers trying to adjust to the afternoon winds faced a similar problem.

"Even the downwind holes were very difficult because you had to be picking the right club to get on the front edge and then it was running all the way to the back. There was a lot of guessing," Clearwater said. "You had to be a lot more conservative. Just getting it into the center of the green was difficult."

ward Daigle, also covets defenseman Chris Pronger of the Peterborough Petes of the Ontario Hockey League.

"Chris Pronger has the size and a good shot," Sexton said. "He's very talented, the franchise player among the defensemen."

Pronger, a 6-foot-6, 200-pounder, is rated the best defenseman in the draft. But while he can fill a uniform nicely, he probably wouldn't fill a building like Daigle.

With Laval not far from Ottawa, Daigle would be a virtual hometown hero and dream come true for the expansion Senators.

"Alexandre will have a great following here," Sexton said. "That's one check in his favor."

Centers dominate NHL draftees

QUEBEC (AP) — Centers will have center stage at today's NHL entry draft.

Topped by Alexandre Daigle, expected to be the No. 1 pick by the Ottawa Senators, the center position should be well represented in what has been called the strongest draft in years.

"It looks like a deep draft," New Jersey Devils director of player personnel Marshall Johnson said, "and if you're looking for players with speed or size, finesse or strength, there seems to be something for everybody."

Especially in the middle of the ice, where a dozen centers may go in the first round.

The flashy Daigle, from Laval, Quebec, and a product of the Quebec Major Junior Hockey League, is an impact player. He has been described as a hybrid of Pat LaFontaine's speed, Joe Sakic's playmaking and Jeremy Roenick's intensity.

And he desperately wants to be the No. 1 pick.

"I would be disappointed if I wasn't picked first in the draft," said Daigle, who had 45 goals and 92 assists for Victoriaville this season. "It is something I have worked my entire life for."

There was a chance that he wouldn't be picked No. 1. Senators general manager Randy Sexton, while making it clear that he was leaning to-

Stewart faces Holyfield, future tonight

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — By Sunday, Alex Stewart will either be a 29-year-old heavyweight in line for a title shot or a former contender with a reputation of not winning the big one.

Stewart will mark his birthday by fighting a rematch with Evander Holyfield tonight at the Convention Center. "It's very rare to get a second chance," Stewart said.

Actually, it's a last chance for Stewart, who was knocked out of the championship picture by Holyfield Nov. 4, 1989.

Two fights after that victory, Holyfield knocked out James "Buster" Douglas in the third round and won the title he held until being outpointed by Riddick Bowe last Nov. 13.

The 30-year-old Holyfield, who retired briefly after the loss, sees the fight as a step to a rematch with Bowe. He is a 4-1 favorite.

When they fought in 1989, Stewart, then 24-0, with 24 knockouts, badly hurt his left hand early in the match, but still got Holyfield into deep trouble in the fifth round.

Holyfield won when the fight, at the Convention Center, was stopped in the eighth round because of a bad cut over Stewart's right eye. "If he had had a left hook, then he probably would have stopped Holyfield," Jim Fennell, Stewart's manager, said.

"I gave it all I had," Stewart said. "I never look back with any regrets. I just didn't do it."

While Stewart said he has no regrets, he admitted he often has been plagued by self-doubts. "This fight will tell a lot about me," Stewart said. About Holyfield, too, now that he has realized defeat for the first time in his career. Stewart followed the Holyfield loss with two wins, but then got stopped by Mike Tyson in the first round Dec. 8, 1990. Two fights later, he was stopped in the fourth round by unbeaten Michael Moorer July 27, 1991.

After another win, Stewart's career appeared finished when he was knocked down twice by George Foreman in the second round. He got up, however, and battered Foreman's face lopsided only to lose a majority 10-round decision April 11, 1992.

Stewart has won his last four fights, all against relatively unknown opponents, and is ranked fifth by the WBC, No. 7 by the IBF and eighth by the WBA.
