Bond issue falls far short in light turnout

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Voters sent Twin Falls County commissioners back to the drawing board Tuesday, rejecting an $800,000 bond issue to help pay for a regional jail for juveniles.

The measure needed a two-thirds majority (66.7 percent) to pass, but only 1,945 people voted for the measure (50.5 percent), with 1,899 voting against, in the unofficial results. Ballots will be canvassed for the official tally Friday.

Early in the day, Commission Chairman Jim Fraley said the light turnout at the polls did not bode well for the election. About 13 percent of the county's registered voters cast ballots.

By the time results from the first nine precincts were in, Fraley gave the thumbs down sign when it was evident the measure was headed for defeat.

County commissioners wanted to build an 18-bed, secure detention center on Wright Avenue in the city's industrial park. The estimated cost for the project is $14.2 million, with the rest of the money coming from a state grant.

Now commissioners must come up with a plan for dealing with juveniles in custody. The existing temporary center at the county fairgrounds in Filer holds only eight boys, and Fraley said he isn't sure how much longer that facility can remain open.

The county already has $380,000 budgeted to operate the Filer center. Fraley said the vote probably will force another $400,000 into next year's budget to transport young prisoners to and from distant detention centers.

Five counties — Twin Falls, Jerome, Camas, Blaine and Gooding — have been working with a $740,000 state grant for the past two years to find a permanent solution to the area's lack of juvenile detention space.

The money was turned over to Twin Falls County last year to speed up the process of funding and building a center. Now, about $100,000 of the grant money has been spent, and the county has nothing to show for it except 4.1 acres in the Twin Falls industrial park.

Commissioners will meet with state officials to decide where to turn next, Fraley said. Building a sealed-down detention center with the remaining grant money may be an option, he said.

A citizens committee that recommended a smaller, cheaper center located next door to the courthouse opposed the bond issue election.

"You have your Fantastic 14 to thank for it," he said, referring to the group of property owners who thwarted the county's efforts to borrow the money without an election earlier this year.

FBI choice earns reputation as hard-driving pro

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — During the FBI's long-running investigation of waterfront corruption in the late 1970s, New York-based agents and other law enforcement officers would often discuss their accomplishments over a late-night beer.

But one of the younger agents, Louis J. Freeh, would always excuse himself from the group before midnight.

An out-of-town colleague who usually slept at Freeh's New York apartment remembered Tuesday that "I'd get in from our gathering about 2 a.m. and be awakened at 5 by Louie singing opera while shaving."

"He's always been a very straight, very graduate that ultimately would lead to his nomination to head the nation's premier law enforcement agency, which traditionally has made organized crime one of its specialties.

Those who have known the new FBI director-designate as a federal agent, prosecutor and later a federal judge describe him as a hard-driving professional who has inspired others with his work ethic and has never sought personal aggrandizement.

Like all of Freeh's big projects in the past 18 years, the conspiracy, bribery and racketeering cases he helped develop in UNIRAC involved the teamwork of many law enforcement officers. UNIRAC cases ran from Boston to Miami and across to Galveston, Texas, and resulted from the cooperation of dozens of FBI agents and other federal officers, as well as police investigators from 12 states.

Ginsburg to follow Constitution

The Associated Press

Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., visits with Ruth Bader Ginsburg before her confirmation hearings began Tuesday.

WASHINGTON — The lawmakers who will judge her nomination greeted Supreme Court nominee Ruth Bader Ginsburg warmly Tuesday as the former women's rights campaigner pledged "not to read her convictions into the Constitution."

"My approach ... is rooted in the place of the judiciary, of judges, in our democratic society ... third in line" behind the people and their elected representatives, she told the Senate Judiciary Committee at her confirmation hearing.

Citing the words of Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, she said: "One of the most sacred duties of a judge is not to read her convictions into the Constitution. I have tried, and I will continue to try, to follow that model."

President Clinton's nominee, the first by a Democratic president since Lyndon Johnson, was welcomed warmly by members of both parties. No significant opposition has emerged, and the relaxed atmosphere of Tuesday's hearing contrasted starkly with recent experience.

Only Sen. Arlen Specter, recently returned from brain surgery, had any tinge of harshness in his words.

"I admire the positions you've taken, what you've achieved as a litigator and what you've done as a jurist," he said. "But ... when you're on the Supreme Court ... you'll have a free hand in doing a great deal more. ... So that I think these hearings are very important."

Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, said he hoped she took advantage of her new powers.

"I want to know whether Judge Ginsburg will embrace this opportunity to shape the law to make the enduring principles of the Constitution a reality for all Americans," he said.

She said of the Constitution's framers, "Their large view was expansive. Their immediate view was tied to the circumstances in which they lived." For example, Thomas Jefferson opposed allowing women to serve in government.

"I do believe that if Thomas Jefferson were alive today he would say that women were equal citizens," she said.

Navy asks Congress to open waste gate

By N.S. Nokkentved
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The U.S. Navy has asked Congress to exempt its radioactive waste shipments to Idaho from a court order barring such shipments. Gov. Cecil Andrus said Tuesday.

The Navy is trying a legislative "end-run" around the June 28 court order that halted further shipments of spent fuel to Idaho until an environmental impact statement on operations at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory is completed, Andrus said.

In the process, the Navy Nuclear Propulsion Program last week spread "unfounded fears" with a background statement circulated to members of Congress on the effects the injunction, he said.

"The background statement treads old ground by merely reiterating the same contentions that the judge found to be unconvincing," Andrus said in a letter to Adm. Bruce DeMars, head of the nuclear navy.

A House Armed Services Committee staff member confirmed Tuesday that the Navy had approached the committee to have an exemption included in the military authorization bill being discussed today.

A similar bill including an exemption also will be discussed in the Senate Armed Services Committee. Republican Sen. Dirk Kempthorne, a member of the committee, called the issue "critical" for Idaho.

Andrus characterized the Navy's effort as a "sleazy attempt" to gain an exemption without any hearing, with letting Idaho know.

"Unfounded assertions of job losses and threats to national security do not override the importance of ensuring that the federal government takes a hard look at the environmental effects of and alternatives to receiving and storing spent nuclear fuel at INEL," Andrus said.

From the admiral's statement "it appears to me that you are unwilling to accept the judge's decision and have opted to pursue a campaign of

CHEYENNE, Wyo. — Heavy logging and road building in forests bordering Yellowstone National Park will doom the region's grizzly bears unless drastically scaled back, environmentalists said Tuesday.

Undeveloped corridors linking the 2.2-million-acre Yellowstone park with six surrounding national forests are essential for the several hundred remaining grizzlies to survive, the environmentalists maintained in three lawsuits filed against the U.S. Forest Service.

"The problem in greater Yellowstone has been that ongoing human development ... has nibbled away at the ecosystem from the outside as well as from the inside," Louisa Willcox of the Greater Yellowstone Coalition said.

More water expected in flooded St. Louis

The Associated Press

Emergency workers with bulldozers drove through flooded south St. Louis urging evacuation holdouts to flee as the Mississippi River bulged toward a second, higher crest

Tuesday and another section of levee weakened. The new crest was expected to be only about an inch higher than the record 46.9-foot crest Sunday night, but engineers said the danger could be considerably greater.

"The levees are really taking a beating out there. If the levees are on the verge of failing, an inch or two could put it over the edge," said Tom Dietrich, a hydrologist with the National Weather Service in St. Louis. He predicted a crest Tuesday night at 47.0 feet, 17 feet above flood stage. Other parts of the Midwest also faced new complications in trying to recover from more than 1 1/2 months of record flooding.

Sgt. 1st Class Mark Miltzner of the Kansas National Guard loads sandbags onto a transport truck Monday in Manhattan, Kan., where residents are bracing for floods from a rising river.

Norman Berkbligler uses a tape measure to check floodwaters from the Mississippi River Tuesday in St. Genevieve, Mo., a historic town split in two by high water.

Residents battle water with humor in the 'Row-Me State,' elsewhere

ST. GENEVIEVE, Mo. (AP) "Good news!" the tired National Guardsman exulted.

"We've been waiting for that WATER to disappear. And look!" Was this guy kidding? The neighborhood street he gestured across was swamped with brown water.

A closer look revealed a smirk on his face and an up-to-its-eyeballs sign: "IMPASSABLE IN HIGH," it read — indeed, the "WATER" had disappeared, underwater.

OK, it's not Letterman, but it's something to laugh at. All across the Midwest flood zone — from Missouri (now the "Row-Me State") to Des Moines, Iowa (Zip Code 50120) — folks say their endless jokes in the face of disaster help keep back tears.

"What else can you do but laugh?" said Mark Shaughnessy, managing a pump at a flooded church in St. Genevieve. "It's going to be a long time cleaning up."

Nearby, a hand-lettered sign led to a closed shop's door smarted off to the Mississippi: "Go South Ole Man," it said. "You Have Made Your Point."

That's the right attitude, experts say.

"Having a sense of humor is like a lifeboat," said Joyce Saltman, who teaches at Southern Connecticut State University and lectures widely to cancer victims, laid-off workers and others about the therapeutic value of laughter.

Medical research has shown that laughing triggers production of the body's "natural painkillers," but she said humor's emotional lift may be more crucial than the biochemical one.

"Even if you're treading water," she said, "making a joke takes you out of that situation and puts you in control. ... It lets you step back from the situation and get a new perspective."

Examples of folks who lost humor and health but kept their sense of humor are everywhere along the ailing river.

Instead of worrying over a family dog that paddled around in a flood-caused crude-oil spill in Niota, Ill., Mary Rea said, "We nicknamed him Slick."

Washed-out farmer Bob Johnson of Eldaville, Iowa, joked, "We're going to start selling corn by the gallon ..."

And John Muehring Jr. couldn't help exaggerating when asked about a universal fear as water spreads: Seen any snakes?

"We found a dead rattle-headed copperhead," he said with a straight face as wary co-workers, snubbing their plant in Hannibal, Mo., doubled over with laughter.

"Wasn't much left of him. He'd just

In rain-soaked Fairmont, Minn., folks slumped around in a "Mud Olympics," staged by radio station KFMC-FM.

"We gave people a chance to come and get wet and muddy and say, 'We can't do anything about our fields. Let's play,'" said announcer Al Travis, who came up with the idea as a way to relieve pressure.

A different kind of exertion was the order of the day at The Theatrical Shop in West Des Moines, which sells costumes, clown noses and the like, and where only one phone remained working in the multi-level store.

"Everybody runs to get it," manager Kathy Hankrader said. "Everyone here's on a new exercise program. It's called flood aerobics."

The Des Moines Register ran an "It's a Floody World" contest, trying to keep the city's spirits up after the water system failed.

Subscribers completing joke sentences ("I smell so bad ...") would win prizes — or as a headline put it: "Attention unwashed Iowans: Convert your body odor into cash!" Hundreds of replies came in.

"I smell so bad," wrote reader Pat Jarvinen, "that my Sure deodorant is undecided."

Committee passes relief bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House committee approved $2.98 billion in disaster aid for Midwestern flood victims on Tuesday, less than a week after President Clinton asked for the emergency spending.

The House Appropriations Committee approved $500 million more than Clinton originally requested. The administration late Monday had asked for the additional funding.

The largest share of additional spending will go for direct aid to flood victims and to cover crop losses.

The full House is scheduled to take up the bill Thursday, after which it must go to the Senate.

Because of the growing disaster, the spending levels in the bill could rise even further before President Clinton is asked to sign it.

"We may have additional amounts requested," said Rep. William H. Natcher, D-Ky., chairman of the appropriations committee, urging its members to act quickly.

"This ... is on a fast track in Congress," said Rep. Richard J. Durbin, D-Ill., chairman of the Appropriations subcommittee on agriculture. "We realize that this aid must be distributed as soon as possible."

The largest single items in the bill are $1.15 billion for direct crop losses, and $815 million for the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

The crop provision covers losses elsewhere in the country, but with restrictions aimed at making sure most of the money goes to growers in the Midwest. The FEMA money goes directly to individuals and families for help with housing and other needs.

The crop-loss funding will enable growers who know already they won't have a crop to begin applying immediately for compensation. Agriculture Secretary Mike Espy last week said those growers should be able to receive crop disaster payments within two weeks of making a claim.

David Martin, a FEMA spokesman, said the increased funding for his agency should enable it to continue providing help that it has already been giving. "What they'll do is guarantee the continuation of the flow," he said. Most help becomes available to individual applicants within "a matter of days," he said.

Other amounts approved by the committee include $43.5 million for temporary jobs; $130 million for repairs to locks, dams, levees and other flood-control works; $54 million for health and renovation of community health centers and migrant health centers; $100 million for highway and bridge repair; $21 million for restoration of rail service; $100 million for housing construction, rehabilitation, repair and rental assistance; and $53 million for disaster-related community development.

Underwood murder strikes close to home for papers

The murder of Jeralee Underwood in Pocatello horrified people all across the state. This is Idaho. Things like that aren't supposed to happen here.

We in the newspaper business were especially shocked and dismayed, because Jeralee was a news-paper carrier. She was abducted from the street while collecting payments on her route.

Since then, managers at The Times-News and other Idaho newspapers have wrestled with questions about how we do business. Are our junior carriers exposed to unreasonable danger when they deliver the paper and collect for subscriptions? Are we doing all we can to protect them?

Circulation Manager Allen Wilson says that soon after Jeralee's body was found, our circulation employees began calling carriers. They reminded the kids about the safety precautions they had been taught when they signed on as carriers.

Stay alert when you're on the street. Watch for strangers. Take a parent along when you collect, or at least make sure they know which houses you plan to visit. Don't carry much cash.

Our district managers, who supervise the carriers, have offered the youngsters help with collecting if they're nervous about it, and they cruise the streets during delivery hours to keep an eye on the kids.

Wilson is also working to set up additional safety seminars with police officers for the carriers.

Some readers have contacted us to say measures such as those aren't enough. Some suggest we should bill our subscribers by mail, so that youngsters won't have to knock on doors to collect. Some say children shouldn't even be delivering the papers.

Certainly, we could switch to an all-adult delivery force. But delivering papers is one of the few ways an ambitious youngster can earn pocket money and learn the work ethic.

Lots of successful adults learned their first lessons about business by delivering papers. And lots of them paid for part of their college educations with money they saved up from paper routes.

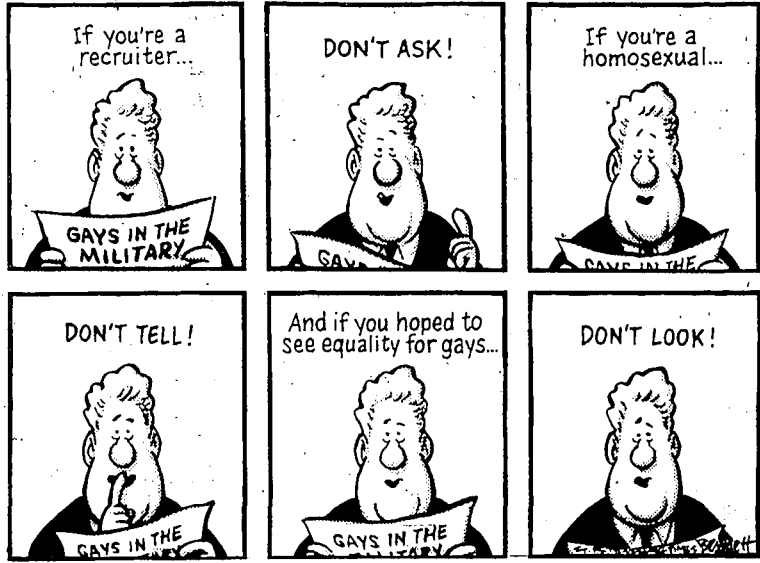

As for billing - we're happy to have customers pay by mail. About 70 percent of our subscribers already do, and we'd like that number to be higher.

We'll provide the remaining 30 percent with pre-addressed, postage-paid mailing envelopes as incentive to try it.

But we know that some customers still prefer personal service, and we don't want to force them to give it up.

We realize that no system will please everyone 100 percent. But we hope what we're doing is a reasonable compromise for the carriers and their customers.

We also realize that nothing we can do will absolutely guarantee the safety of a young person on the street. Parents should realize it too: All children, not just newspaper carriers, need to be schooled on matters of personal safety.

Gore works to 'reinvent government'

David S. Broder

"The books you see in this picture contain the regulations you have to follow in order to hire, fire or promote a federal employee," he says. "They weigh 1,088 pounds. The comparable volume of material at the Saturn plant in my state is about 20 pages."

That is a useful way of encapsulating the enormously ambitious venture in "reinventing government" which the vice president is pushing toward a hazardously early deadline in early September. Charged by President Clinton with the task of engineering what Gore called "a quality revolution... in the way government works," and given only six months to show it was serious, the No. 2 man is pressing several hundred bureaucrats he has borrowed from around town to come up with a package that is bold enough to disarm the cynics.

"Crucial government-wide systems are in crisis," Gore told me, voicing a view that few inside or outside government would dispute. "The budgeting system is ridiculous. The procurement system is famously ridiculous. The personnel system... well, that's when he hauls down the photo on the mantle.

The comparison with the General Motors' Saturn plant in Tennessee is not an idle one. Gore's argument is that 10 years ago, when the Japanese were gobbling up the U.S. auto market, the idea that some American-made cars would become "world-models of economical quality" seemed ludicrous.

But competition and the threat of lost jobs and profits drove the auto companies and unions to change their way of operating. And now governments, battling rumprant public disillusionment with their services, must show they can do the same thing.

It is easier said than done. When Clinton gave Gore the assignment last March, he provided no budget or staff of any consequence. A sympathetic observer of the "national performance review" told me, "It is very uneven. Some of the people they have borrowed are very young and don't understand their mission. You can get to one of the meetings and come away thinking that these people don't really grasp what they're dealing with."

But this insider also said it would be a mistake to write off the effort in advance, because Gore and the handful of others directing it understand the difficulty of the challenge and have made a commitment to stay with the effort.

That is my impression, too, so I am not going to join the scoffers who say in advance that Gore's project will join other "waste and inefficiency" studies that have gone straight from the printing press to the dustbin.

"The short-term splash is often the enemy of long-term, substantive change," Gore told me. "Every large organization that has gone through the process of reinventing itself will tell you that it takes time."

To give the effort credibility, Gore is preparing a set of executive orders that Clinton can issue just before Labor Day, when the "performance review" is presented to him. Along with the executive orders will come a set of legislative recommendations, which Gore hopes to persuade Congress to handle on a fast-track basis, probably with the incentive that they will provide opportunities for additional spending cuts.

But beyond that opening salvo, Gore promises an ongoing effort to "change the culture of bureaucracy and the pattern of practice inside each agency. That will take sustained leadership from the top and sustained involvement of rank-and-file government workers at all levels."

As Gore understands, the only way you change behavior is to alter incentives and rewards. Today, government managers who find ways to save money on one program are rarely given the option of applying the savings to other, underfunded projects. Employees who shorten-regulations to get better results often get reprimands, not promotions.

Changing incentives - and changing systems - will not come any more easily in government agencies than in the auto plants. But there is widespread recognition that the status quo is no longer acceptable to the citizen-customers of democracy. A long-stymied bipartisan bill to require strategic planning and performance measurements in federal agencies has passed the Senate and is expected soon to be on the president's desk. The National Academy of Public Administration has launched a laboratory and a communications network for the myriad efforts to "reinvent government" taking place at the state and local levels.

Major private accounting and financial management firms are working to improve the laggard practices of the Pentagon and other federal agencies. Gore and his group are not operating in a vacuum. They are part of a tide, and it may be strong enough to prove the cynics wrong.

Meeting on flooding needed

It is obvious why the facts of why the city of Twin Falls is going to flood out future development at the new Centennial park with runoff from Blue Lakes and Pole Line parking lots, work and roadways will never be ferreted out by the media.

As the whistle blower, I suggest a town meeting jointly sponsored by the Twin Falls Rotary Club, which made the fund drive to start the park, and Idaho Rivers United, a local group that has the knowledge of the Snake River and water laws.

Ecosystem report inaccurate

The article, "Ecosystem protection measure hits Congress" by N.S. Nakkertent in the July 16 issue is typical of the biased reporting on environmental issues by the media. Americans are constantly victimized by such abuses in the press.

The common technique employed by closet eco-fanatics disguised as reporters is to simply collect quotes of those people they agree with and publish them under the guise of "objectivity."

No doubt your reporter considered the implications of quoting anyone opposed to more wilderness, and there are millions of us out here. It is very risky to quote anyone opposed to more wilderness. That may suggest that the real question is, "Do we really need wilderness?" Your reporter implied that the question was simply, "How much more do we need?"

The U.S. Congress suffers from heavy lobbying by the legions of environmental groups that swarm and infect Washington, D.C. Most politicians fear being labeled anti-environment by these non-profit organizations if they don't support eco-legislation. These organizations generate all of their income and power through government grants and by promoting fear and junk science among the general population.

Wilderness has little if anything to do with America's national heritage. America was founded on the principles and values of civilizing our lands, not turning them over to bureaucrats. The values of the environmentalist movement do not represent America. In fact, they are totally opposed to the values that created our prosperity and standard of living. We must reject the idea that we can have more liberty and prosperity by forfeiting our lands to organizations opposed to technology and civilization.

Environmentalism has the potential to be to America what Marxism was to Russia. People were duped into believing that they would have more freedom, more prosperity and more happiness by allowing government bureaucracy to control everything.

If you are going to continue to publish such biased articles, please move them to the editorial page where they can be read as opinion, not fact.

Says unwelcome in military

There has been a lot of hullabaloo lately about homosexuals in the military. I would like to point out one very important factor which everyone has overlooked. I served in the Navy in two wars, World War II and the Korean War, and I have very strong feelings on this subject.

If known homosexuals are allowed in the military, it will be a very costly thing for the government. They would have to put bigger bribes on ships and larger stockades on land. If a known homosexual, even if the for she) was an admiral, gave me an order, I would, as I suspect many others would do, tell them where to shove it.

I can certainly see myself or any other man or woman salute one.

Inmate does not deserve pity

I'm writing in regard to the actions of Deputy Public Defender Patrick McMillen and 5th District Magistrate Melvin C. Edwards in defending the rights of Frank Kitchen, a convicted drunk driver serving a six-month jail sentence.

Every day, you read or hear of something from our judicial system that insults your intelligence. Correct me if I'm wrong, but I thought you forfeited your "rights" when you broke the law.

Didn't Mr. Kitchen choose to get behind the wheel of a car when drinking, realizing that if he got picked up he might miss his eye appointment on July 6? If he wasn't concerned about his appointment, why are McMillen and Edwards? It was Kitchen's eye appointment, and it's obvious he didn't care.

And don't tell me drunkenness is a disease. That's another insult to my intelligence! It's a matter of choice, and somewhere I read that we are held accountable for our actions.

Our judges are earning the title of "bleeding hearts," and our law firms aren't called "Coyote, Coyote and Skunk" for nothing. Let's stop making our jails like a visit to grandma's house!

Searching for Stalin's victims: Security Ministry reveals mass graves

BUTOVO, Russia (AP) — This hamlet on the southern fringe of Moscow looks green, with soft muddy lanes, green forests and strolling pensioners.

But there are those who remember when Butovo's roads rumbled with prison trucks and the air rang with rifle volleys.

The Russian Security Ministry successor to the KGB — went public this month with Butovo's secret: A so-called infirmary firing range in town was really a killing field where 22,000 to 28,000 political prisoners were shot in 1937 and 1938 in Josef Stalin's Great Terror.

The victims are buried in mass graves in the 4-acre site, now an apple orchard and forest. They were teachers, artists, engineers, farm workers and others who ran afoul of the Communist dictator.

A few thousand were foreigners, including nine Americans.

"When I first began investigating this, it was very difficult for me, very difficult, and it still gives me shivers," said Lt. Col. Mikhail Kirillin, a 40-year-old, chain-smoking Security Ministry officer who was assigned to find the graves hidden by his predecessors.

He said the American victims were mainly the U.S.-born children of Communists from Russia, Poland or the Baltic states who returned to Russia after the 1917 revolution.

Although their only real ties to America were by birth, the children likely suffered for having any foreign connection, Kirillin said.

Butovo is believed to be the largest killing field near Moscow. At Likhovovo, outside St. Petersburg, an estimated 47,000 were executed.

About 16,000 more bodies are buried at the nearby Kommunarka State Farm, the ministry announced. Most were employees of the KGB's forerunner, the NKVD, which began devouring its own as the terror grew.

Earlier this year the Izvestia newspaper reported testimony from a Kommunarka official indicating that Swedish diplomat Raoul Wallenberg might have been among those killed there.

Wallenberg, who saved tens of thousands of Hungarian Jews during World War II before disappearing in Stalin's gulag, was not identified by name in the testimony. The Security Ministry said it could not confirm the report.

Russians have long known that millions of people perished in Stalin's prisons and camps. But Kirillin said the Security Ministry revealed the mass graves to show that it was serious about uncovering its past crimes.

Butovo and Kommunarka have not been dug up, and Kirillin based his figures for the deal on KGB files, which he said were incomplete. He also interviewed the few surviving NKVD officials and drivers who worked at Butovo.

and wood fence topped by barbed wire. Across the street, a three-story crack house is being built, and the country of workmen's hammers sounds like gunshot.

Since the 1950s, Butovo has been a "KGB village," a retirement haven for the agency's employees. Few people in town showed surprise at the revelations.

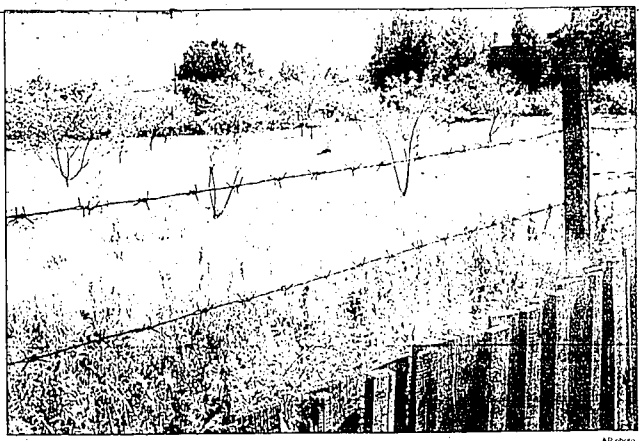

"I didn't see what went on but I knew," said Klavdia Yeliseyeva, 70, who grew up in the town.

"One day a woman in rags came to the door and said, 'Hide me, hide me, I'm a political prisoner.'" Yeliseyeva said she shut the door. "What else could I do?" she said, shrugging. "She was a political."

The mass graves date from the peak years of the terror. Stalin's prominent political opponents usually were shot in Moscow prisons after staged trials and were cremated or buried in city cemeteries, Kirillin said.

Butovo's victims, on the other hand, were not tried and probably believed they were being transferred to another prison, he said. They were taken to the killing field, lined up in front of a trench and shot in the back, often in groups of more than 200.

"We did know there was something suspicious going on, but we didn't know what," said Evdokia Gromova, a 76-year-old Butovo native, who stopped to talk on her way to find firewood, saw in hand.

us it was practice. We knew there were prisoners. They told us just to keep away."

In the 1950s, the KGB planted apple trees over the mass graves, and sent the fruit to orphanages filled with the children of Stalin's victims.

"All these places are sacred, but I have the most bitterness over Butovo because these were ordinary, average people who weren't guilty of anything at all," Kirillin said.

Postal minister resigns

TOKYO (AP) — A Cabinet minister quit in protest Tuesday as Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa lingered another day in office and his sharply divided party searched for a successor.

"I have no intention of just hanging onto my position," Miyazawa told Liberal Democratic Party leaders. "I am doing this job at the party's behest. It will determine my fate."

The pressure on Miyazawa to take responsibility for the party's loss of its 38-year majority in Sunday's parliamentary elections came to a head at a Cabinet meeting.

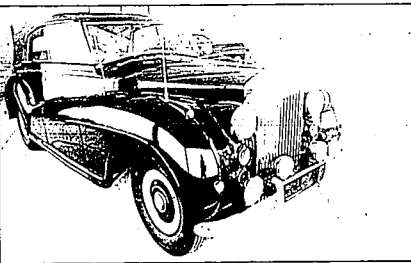

Posts and Telecommunications Minister Junichiro Koizumi, refusing to back away from his demand that Miyazawa step down, quit himself. Similar calls have come from other party leaders but are rare from a cabinet member.

Miyazawa, considered a lame duck since losing a no-confidence vote in June, surprised party members Monday when he refused to resign, saying he would make his own decision after consulting party views.

Party insiders said they expected Miyazawa, 73, to announce his resignation during a meeting of LDP lawmakers Thursday.

While the remains of Miyazawa's power base were rapidly crumbling, the party faced the "difficult question of choosing a successor."

Yugoslav army to hawk Tito's Rolls for $814,000

It's short of cash and it has to move merchandise now.

So come on down to Belgrade army headquarters and take a gander at today's special: a 33-year-old Rolls-Royce Phantom V once owned by the late Communist president Josip Broz Tito. It's only got 12,000 miles on it, and it could be yours for $814,000.

The army hopes to get at least that much. It will try to auction off the 1953-foot limo, complete with bar, that was a gift to Tito from Britain's Queen Elizabeth II.

Potential buyers will have to deposit $160,000 before entering a bid.

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Bosnia's president pleaded for U.N. help Tuesday against a strong Serb offensive on the outskirts of Sarajevo that seems designed to increase pressure on Muslims to accept ethnic partitioning.

But in a move that could strain the recent alliance of Bosnian Serbs and Croats in pushing for division, Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic announced plans to unite his self-proclaimed state with Serb-held regions of Croatia.

The Serb attack on Mount Igman, overlooking Sarajevo's U.N.-controlled airport, is the furthest in the area since the Serb siege of the capital began in April 1992 soon after the outbreak of the war.

Maj. Lank Nielsen, a spokesman for U.N. peacekeepers, said sketchy reports from Mount Igman indicated night attacks by troops of Bosnia's Muslim-led government were recapturing positions seized by Serb fighters during the day.

Bosnian President Alija Izetbegovic appealed for international help in a letter to U.N. Secretary General Boutros Boutros-Ghali and other officials.

"The Serb aggressor has launched a heavy offensive toward the Sarajevo 'safe zone,' now coming from two directions, southeast and southwest, aiming to cut off the city," said Izetbegovic, a Muslim.

"There are signs that the Serbian forces plan a general attack on the town itself," he wrote. "I call on you to intervene and stop this act of aggression."

The U.N. Security Council designated Sarajevo and five other cities as "safe areas" for Bosnian Muslims, but it has provided no troops to guard the zones.

Heavy fighting also was reported Tuesday between government forces and Bosnian Croats in several areas of central Bosnia, where the former allies are battling for territory. Fighting was especially fierce in the towns of Gornji Vakuf and Hrupovo, Nielsen said.

Croats initially allied with Muslims after Bosnia seceded from Serb-dominated Yugoslavia 10 months ago, then began cooperating with Serbs recently to push the partition plan and gain territory.

"That relationship could be undermined by the determination of Serbs to continue to create a 'Greater Serbia' from all lands controlled by ethnic Serbs, including the one-third of Croatia they hold."

The idea also could wreck the attempt by Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic and Croatian President Franjo Tudjman to conclude a peace agreement embracing both Croatia and Bosnia. Last month, they agreed on a plan to divide Bosnia into three ethnically defined states.

Bosnian Muslims reject the plan, fearing it would leave them in hand-knuckled pockets squeezed between hostile Serb and Croat renegades that eventually would unite with Serbia and Croatia.

Treaty puts Major in peril

LONDON (AP) — Nine months after staking his political credibility on European union and surviving by three votes, Prime Minister John Major is back in political peril over the treaty.

His Conservative government is furiously twisting arms and courting Northern Ireland Protestants to win a House of Commons vote on the Maastricht union treaty Thursday.

This time, as he battles to get the treaty past its last parliamentary hurdle in an increasingly confused process of ratification, things look even closer for Major.

Personally, his popularity has plummeted.

The margin of his Conservative Party's fragile majority, over all other parties in the 651-member House of Commons is down from 21 to 18.

Quake death toll rises to 185; 57 still missing

TOKYO (AP) — Divers found four more victims Tuesday from a major earthquake that devastated a northern coastal area with landslides, tidal waves and fires, raising the death toll to 185.

Police said the list of missing from the July 12 quake was reduced from 64 to 57 as three bodies recovered earlier were identified. Twelve bodies remained unidentified, they said.

Meanwhile, an 11-member U.S. government delegation arrived in the northern city of Hakodate on its way to study earthquake damage on Okushiri Island, which sustained most of the damage.

Underwood murder strikes close to home for papers

The murder of Jeralee Underwood in Pocatello horrified people all across the state. This is Idaho. Things like that aren't supposed to happen here.

We in the newspaper business were especially shocked and dismayed, because Jeralee was a newspaper carrier. She was abducted from the street while collecting payments on her route.

Since then, managers at The Times-News and other Idaho newspapers have wrestled with questions about how we do business. Are our junior carriers exposed to unreasonable danger when they deliver the paper and collect for subscriptions? Are we doing all we can to protect them?

Circulation Manager Allen Wilson says that soon after Jeralee's body was found, our circulation employees began calling carriers. They reminded them: "You had been taught when they signed on as carriers."

Stay alert when you're on the street. Watch for strangers. Take a parent along when you collect, or at least make sure they know which houses you plan to visit. Don't carry much cash.

Our district managers, who supervise the carriers, have offered the youngsters help with collecting if they're nervous about it, and they cruise the streets during delivery hours to keep an eye on the kids.

Wilson is also working to set up additional safety seminars with police officers for the carriers.

Some readers have contacted us to say measures such as those aren't enough. Some suggest we should bill our subscribers by mail, so that youngsters won't have to knock on doors to collect. Some say children shouldn't even be delivering the papers.

Certainly, we could switch to an all-adult delivery force. But delivering papers is one of the few ways an ambitious youngster can earn pocket money and learn the work ethic.

Lots of successful adults learned their first lessons about business by delivering papers. And lots of them paid for part of their college educations with money they saved up from paper routes.

As for billing, we're happy to have customers pay by mail. About 70 percent of our subscribers already do, and we'd like that number to be higher.

We'll provide the remaining 30 percent with pre-addressed, postage-paid mailing envelopes as incentive to try it.

But we know that some customers still prefer personal service, and we don't want to force them to give it up. We realize that no system will please everyone 100 percent. But we hope what we're doing is a reasonable compromise for the carriers and their customers.

We also realize that nothing we can do will absolutely guarantee the safety of a young person on the street. Parents should realize it, too: All children, not just newspaper carriers, need to be schooled on matters of personal safety.

Meeting on flooding needed

It is obvious why the facts of why the city of Twin Falls is going to flood out future development at the new Centennial park with runoff from Blue Lakes and Pole Line parking lots, roads and roadways will never be feticled out by the media.

As the whistle blows, I suggest a town meeting jointly sponsored by the Twin Falls Rotary Club, which made the fund drive to start the park, and Idaho Rivers United, a local group that has the knowledge of the Snake River and water laws.

Ecosystem report inaccurate

The article, "Ecosystem protection measure hits Congress" by N.S. Nokkented in the July 16 issue is typical of the biased reporting on environmental issues by the media. Americans are constantly victimized by such abuses as the press.

The common technique employed by closet eco-fanatics disguised as reporters is to simply collect quotes of those people they agree with and publish them under the guise of "objectivity."

No doubt your reporter considered the implications of quoting anyone opposed to more wilderness, and there are millions of us out here. It is very risky to quote anyone opposed to more wilderness. That may suggest that the real question is, "Do we really need wilderness?" Your reporter implied that the question was simply, "How much more do we need?"

The U.S. Congress suffers from heavy lobbying by the leagues of environmental groups that swarm and infect Washington, D.C. Most politicians fear being labeled anti-environment by these non-profit organizations if they don't support legislation. These organizations generate all of their income and power through government grants and by promoting fear and junk science among the general population.

Wilderness has little if anything to do with America's national heritage. America was founded on the principles and values of civilizing our lands, not turning them over to bureaucrats. The values of the environmentalist movement do not represent America. In fact, they are totally opposed to the values that created our prosperity and standard of living. We must reject the idea that we can have more liberty and prosperity by forfeiting our lands to organizations opposed to technology and civilization.

Environmentalism has the potential to be to America what Marxism was to Russia. People were duped into believing that they would have more freedom, more prosperity and more happiness by allowing government bureaucracy to control everything.

If you are going to continue to publish such biased articles, please move them to the editorial page where they can be read as opinion, not fact.

Gore works to 'reinvent government'

On the mantelpiece of Vice President Gore's office these days is a photograph of a roomful of books. When Gore wants to tell a visitor what the "national performance review" he is directing is all about, the photo becomes his prop.

"The books you see in this picture contain the regulations you have to follow in order to hire, fire or promote a federal employee," he says. "They weigh 1,088 pounds. The comparable volume of material at the Saturn plant in my state is about 20 pages."

That is a useful way of capsulizing the enormously ambitious venture in "reinventing government" which the vice president is pushing toward a hardheaded early deadline in early September. Charged by President Clinton with the task of engineering what Gore called "a quality revolution ... in the way government works," and given only six months to show it was serious, the No. 2 man is pressing several hundred bureaucrats he has horrified from around town to come up with a package that is bold enough to disarm the cynics.

"Crucial government-wide systems are in crisis," Gore told me, voicing a view that few inside or outside government would dispute. "The budgeting system is ridiculous. The procurement system is famously ridiculous. The personnel system ... well, that's when he hauls down the photo on the mantle."

The comparison with the General Motors Saturn plant in Tennessee is not an idle one. Gore's argument is that 10 years ago, when the Japanese were gobbling up the U.S. auto market, the idea that some American-made cars would become "world models of economical quality" seemed ludicrous.

But competition and the threat of lost jobs and profits drove the auto companies and unions to change their way of operating. And now governments, battling rampant public disillusionment with their services, must show they can do the same thing.

It is easier said than done. When Clinton gave Gore the assignment last March, he provided no budget or staff of any consequence. A sympathetic observer of the "national performance review" told me, "It is very uneven. Some of the people they have borrowed are very young and don't understand their mission. You can go to one of the meetings and come away thinking that these people don't really grasp what they're dealing with."

But this insider also said it would be a mistake to write off the effort in advance, because Gore and the handful of others directing it understand the difficulty of the challenge and have made a commitment to stay with the effort.

That is my impression, too, so I am not going to join the scoffers who say in advance that Gore's project will join the other "waste and inefficiency" studies that have gone straight from the printing press to the dustbin.

"The short-term splash is often the enemy of long-term, substantive change," Gore told me. "Every large organization that has gone through the process of reinventing itself will tell you that it takes time."

To give the effort credibility, Gore is preparing a set of executive orders that Clinton can issue just before Labor Day, when the "performance review" is presented to him. Along with the executive orders will come a set of legislative recommendations, which Gore hopes to persuade Congress to handle on a fast-track basis, probably with the incentive that they will provide opportunities for additional spending cuts.

But beyond that opening salvo, Gore promises an ongoing effort to "change the culture of bureaucracy and the pattern of practice inside each agency. That will take sustained leadership from the top and sustained involvement of rank-and-file government workers at all levels."

As Gore understands, the only way you change behavior is to alter incentives and rewards. Today, government managers who find ways to save money on one program are rarely given the option of applying the savings to other, underfunded projects. Employees who shirked regulations to get better results often get reprimands, not promotions.

Changing incentives - and changing systems - will not come any more easily in government agencies than in the auto plants. But there is widespread recognition that the status quo is no longer acceptable to the citizen-soldiers of democracy. A long-stymied bipartisan bill to require strategic planning and performance measurements in federal agencies has passed the Senate and is expected soon to be on the president's desk. The National Academy of Public Administration has launched a laboratory and a communications network for the myriad efforts to "reinvent government" taking place at the state and local levels.

Major private accounting and financial management firms are working to improve the laggard practices of the Pentagon and other federal agencies. Gore and his group are not operating in a vacuum. They are part-of-a-tide, and it may be strong enough to prove the cynics wrong.

David S. Broder writes for the Washington Post.

Potential buyers will have to deposit $160,000 before entering a bid.

The army ran its first newspaper ad Friday, and the officer in charge of the auction said no one had deposited the money as of Tuesday.

Tito, who died in 1980 after ruling 45 years, was a passionate collector of expensive cars and other luxury items. After the breakup of Yugoslavia in 1991, most of his cars remained in a museum in Slovenia, now an independent state.

The Yugoslav army kept the Rolls-Royce and five Mercedes that used to belong to Tito. Four of the Mercedes, which were used to carry the Communist leader's clothes when he traveled, also are on sale.

"We have to sell the cars. We need cash," said the officer, who would not allow his name to be used.

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Bosnia's president pleaded for U.N. help Tuesday against a strong Serb offensive on the outskirts of Sarajevo that seems designed to increase pressure on Muslims to accept ethnic partitioning.

But in a move that could strain the recent alliance of Bosnian Serbs and Croats in pushing for division, Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic announced plans to unite his self-proclaimed state with Serb-held regions of Croatia.

The Serb attack on Mount Igman, overlooking Sarajevo's U.N.-controlled airport, is the fiercest in the area since the Serb siege of the capital began in April 1992 soon after the outbreak of the war.

Maj. Lutz Niessen, a spokesman for U.N. peacekeepers, said sketched reports from Mount Igman indicated night attacks by troops of Bosnia's Muslim-led government were recapturing positions seized by Serb fighters during the day.

Bosnian President Alija Izetbegovic appealed for international help in a letter to U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali and other officials.

"The Serb aggressor has launched a heavy offensive toward the Sarajevo 'safe zone,' now coming from two directions, southeast and southwest, aiming to cut up the city," said Izetbegovic, a Muslim.

"There are signs that the Serbian forces plan a general attack on the town itself," he wrote. "I call on you to intervene and stop this act of aggression."

The U.N. Security Council designated Sarajevo and five other cities as "safe areas" for Bosnian Muslims, but it has provided no troops to guard the zones.

Heavy fighting also was reported Tuesday between government forces and Bosnian Croats in several areas of central Bosnia, where the former allies are battling for territory. Fighting was especially fierce in the towns of Gornji Vakuf and Buzovo, Niessen said.

Croats initially allied with Muslims after Bosnia seceded from Serb-dominated Yugoslavia 16 months ago, then began cooperating with Serbs recently to push the partition plan and gain territory.

That relationship could be undermined by the determination of Serb extremists to create a "Greater Serbia" from all lands controlled by ethnic Serbs, including the one-third of Croatia they hold.

The idea also could wreck the attempt by Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic and Croatian President Franjo Tudjman to conclude a peace agreement embracing both Croatia and Bosnia. Last month, they agreed on a plan to divide Bosnia into three ethnically defined states.

Bosnian Muslims reject the plan, fearing it would leave them in landlocked pockets squeezed between hostile Serb and Croat regions that eventually would unite with Serbia and Croatia.

Postal minister resigns

TOKYO (AP) — A Cabinet minister quit in protest Tuesday as Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa lingered another day in office and his sharply divided party searched for a successor.

"I have no intention of just hanging onto my position," Miyazawa told Liberal Democratic Party leaders. "I am doing this job at the party's behest. It will determine my fate."

The pressure on Miyazawa to take responsibility for the party's loss of its 38-year majority in Sunday's parliamentary elections came to a head at a Cabinet meeting.

Posts and Telecommunications Minister Junichiro Koizumi, refusing to back away from his demand that Miyazawa step down, quit himself. Similar calls have come from other party leaders but are rare from a cabinet member.

Miyazawa, considered a lame duck since losing a no-confidence vote in June, surprised party members Monday when he refused to resign, saying he would make his own decision after considering party views.

Party insiders said they expected Miyazawa, 73, to announce his resignation during a meeting of LDP lawmakers Thursday.

While the remains of Miyazawa's power base were rapidly crumbling, the party faced the difficult question of choosing a successor.

Treaty puts Major in peril

LONDON (AP) — Nine months after staking his political credibility on European union and surviving by three votes, Prime Minister John Major is back in political peril over the treaty.

His Conservative government is furiously twisting arms and countering Northern Ireland Protestants to win a House of Commons vote on the Maastricht union treaty Thursday.

This time, as he battles to get the treaty past its last parliamentary hurdle in an increasingly confused process of ratification, things look even closer for Major.

Personally, his popularity has plummeted.

The margin of his Conservative Party's fragile majority over all other parties in the 651-member House of Commons is down from 21 to 18.

Germany sends 1,700 troops to Somalia

BONN, Germany (AP) — The government decided Tuesday to forge ahead with plans to deploy 1,700 troops in volatile Somalia, resisting calls to halt what many Germans oppose as a risky mission.

The Cabinet agreed that shrinking a commitment to the United Nations would badly damage Germany's international trust, chief government spokesman Dieter Vogel said.

Chancellor Helmut Kohl's decision to send peacekeepers to help distribute food and medicine in Somalia marks the latest step by the German leader to play a bigger role in international security — and possibly secure a seat on the U.N. Security Council.

Quake death toll rises to 185; 57 still missing

TOKYO (AP) — Divers found four more victims Tuesday from a major earthquake that devastated a northern coastal area with landslides, tidal waves and fires, raising the death toll to 185.

Police said the list of missing from the July 12 quake was reduced from 64 to 57 as three bodies recovered earlier were identified. Twelve bodies remained unidentified, they said.

Meanwhile, an 11-member U.S. government delegation arrived in the northern city of Hakodate on its way to study earthquake damage on Okushiri Island, which sustained most of the damage.

Court schedules hearing for activists

GRANDVILLE (AP) — A preliminary hearing has been scheduled for seven Earth First! activists who were arrested on state charges Thursday or attempting to block road construction on the Noble Creek timber sale road.

And four other activists arrested on federal charges, were released Monday on their own recognizance after a trial was set in U.S. Magistrate Court at Moscow.

Although the 42 at first refused to give their names, all identified themselves during their initial court appearances. The activists were charged with malicious injury to property and conspiracy to commit grand theft, both felonies.

OSHA will not fine plumbing company

BOISE — The federal government has decided not to fine a Boise plumbing company whose employees failed to take safety precautions when rescuing a man in May.

The Occupational Safety and Health Administration cited DeBest Inc. in June, saying its employees should have shielded trench walls and worn hard hats during the May 11 rescue. It proposed to fine the company $2,875.

Walls of a trench had collapsed onto Dwight Kaufman, 21, at a Garden City construction site, burying him. Two DeBest workers and an other man dug the victim's upper body out before rescuers arrived. DeBest did not dig the trench and was not working on it when the accident happened. The victim received, and two companies doing work at the construction site have agreed to pay, and correct violations.

Budget cuts trigger layoffs at INEL

IDAHO FALLS — Budget cuts at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory continue to affect employment there, this time triggering the layoffs of 50 security personnel and pay cuts for another 55.

Security contracts between Lockheed Technology Idaho and the Department of Energy cited the diminishing selective role of the federal facility as reason for the reductions announced Monday.

P11 General Manager Ben Essary said the company is trying to be more efficient as other contractors alter their activities.

State clears fired school principal

SANBORN — A state investigation has cleared fired elementary school principal Steve Johnson of allegations he violated the teachers' code of ethics.

But the state Department of Education's Professional Standards Commission is still considering allegations of unethical conduct against Bonner County School Superintendent Gary Barton for the tactics he used against Johnson last spring.

Johnson was accused by the school board after he went to the news media with charges that Barton and the board intruded achievement scores, intimidated and harassed teachers, and kept a list of malcontents.

Home finishes scabies treatment

BOISE — One of the state's largest nursing homes has finished treating all its patients and workers for scabies after state inspectors found evidence of the contagious skin condition there.

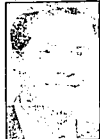

"We wanted to take care of it, contain it, put a stop to it," Robert Decker said on Monday. Decker took over last week as administrator of Boise's Capital Care Center.

The nursing home, which remains fully licensed, took appropriate action by treating residents and thoroughly cleaning the facility, said John Hahnway, acting chief of the state Bureau of Health Standards.

GOP ad targets LaRocco

BOISE (AP) — Idaho Congressman Larry LaRocco Tuesday became one of about three dozen Democratic House and Senate members targeted around the country by the Republican Party in a radio advertising campaign to torpedo President Clinton's deficit-reduction plan.

LaRocco

Launched by the state and national GOP, the radio spot being aired over next nine days asks Idaho voters to telephone LaRocco's office and urge him to vote against the plan that Republicans claim means more taxes that will kill jobs and economic growth.

"We want to have our congressman from the 1st District lead from Idahoans and not someone else," State Republican Chairman Randy Smith said. "He's lost touch with Idahoans. We want Idahoans tell him how to vote. ... Idahoans don't want a tax increase."

But State Democratic Chairman

William Mauck called the Republican ploy "a staged propaganda campaign."

"The Republican Party, instead of going around attacking the state trying to foment dissension, ought to focus its attention on the conference committee" that is drafting a compromise deficit plan, Mauck said.

"They should make a bipartisan effort to reduce this deficit." The advertisement began running just hours before Republican National Chairman Haley Barbour arrived in Boise for two fund-raising events at the home of business magnate J.R. Simplot.

And Mauck said Barbour's schedule that includes fund-raisers at the home of one of the richest men in Idaho only underscores what Democrats have been talking about during the deficit-reduction debate. The issue is not taxes, he said, but how to cut the deficit. Republicans want to put the burden on the poor and the elderly through significant budget cuts, Mauck maintained.

What Democrats want the state trying to do is to pay more for needed programs.

"The Democrats are trying to bring about change," Mauck said. "The Republicans are trying to protect the status quo."

Smith maintained the vast majority of Idahoans want spending reduced, not their taxes increased, and he said the ad is intended to have that majority convince LaRocco that his original support for the president's plan was ill-advised and should change. The three Republican members of the state's congressional delegation are on record in opposition to the Democratic approach.

Idahoans give panel careful

MOSCOW (AP) — The Legislature's special committee on tax reform moved into north-central Idaho Tuesday as scores of people gave the lawmakers an earful on Idaho's property tax system and what they see as the inability of public officials to exercise any restraint.

In the Panhandle, more than 150 people turned out, many of them warning the lawmakers that a taxpayer revolution is brewing.

Key members of a Kootenai County Task Force that successfully initiated to defeat last fall of the initiative to cap property taxes at 1 percent of value said without some scheme to provide property tax cuts, the new tax cap initiative can probably not be stopped.

Boise's exotic dancers plan to protest thong crackdown

BOISE (AP) — The capital city's cadre of exotic dancers are taking their protest of a state crackdown on their skimpy costumes to the State House steps today.

"It's a matter of principle — free dom of expression," said Tommie, who dances for tips at Norm's Inn.

State liquor agents cracked down on the dancers' performances at Norm's Inn and the Kit Kat Klub in rural Ada County last three weeks ago, banning thongs that leave little to the imagination. Agents are requiring more modest bikini bottoms.

The dancers maintain the thongs cover exactly what the law requires and the crackdown has hurt business — and reduced the money they earn to support themselves, their children and, for some, to finance college education.

But the agents say the thongs, or T-bags, do not always keep everything covered that the law requires, especially when the dancers are gyrating on stage.

At Norm's Inn this week, a dozen men munched on sandwiches, sipped beer and ogled Lacey as she danced to rock tunes.

Assistant Manager Cary Hawkins says state inspectors visited Norm's as often as twice a day since the crackdown to make sure the dancers comply.

The dancers have contacted the American Civil Liberties Union, which is gathering information on their gripes.

"The campaign of morality is getting out of hand when private business establishments can't allow consenting folks to view women in thongs, as opposed to bikinis," Idaho ACLU Director Jack Van Valkenburgh said.

BPA's increase in rates will hit Idaho customers

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — Warning a home in many areas of Idaho this winter will be a costlier proposition with Bonneville Power Administration's plan to boost its rates.

The Northwest's power broker intends to raise the cost of electricity by 15.7 percent starting Oct. 1. It cites the region's six-year drought, costly programs to save fish and wildlife and buying more power from utilities in other regions.

Idaho Falls officials say they will boost bills by 11 to 13 percent for municipal power users, raising the average monthly cost by $5.87. Idaho Falls operates a municipal power system but also buys energy from the BPA.

The BPA will make its final decision July 28, and plans to file for approval from the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission on Aug. 2.

"They tried to keep this down as low as they could," said Sylvia Lattimer, BPA district conservation manager in Idaho Falls. "We know it hurts out there."

The average bill in town for 1,200 kilowatt hours will rise from $48.92 to $54.79.

Most of the increase is a result of the drought, which power officials hope was a one-time occurrence. While the higher rates will last two years, the BPA said its goal is to keep 1996-97 increases to a single digit.

Families back in homes after evacuation

CALDWELL (AP) — Some 200 residents finally returned to their homes Tuesday, three days after gasoline fumes forced the evacuation of a 10-block residential area of north Caldwell.

Fire Chief Bruce Allcott opened the area to residents at noon after checks of test sites showed gasoline fumes had fallen to within safe limits.

Residents were required to show identification as they passed through the checkpoint and they were given safety check lists.

They were told not to use power equipment like mowers and to tollifiers until Wednesday and to return to the checkpoint if gasoline odors are detected.

The evacuation was forced after a Maverik Country Store driver mistakenly pumped 5,000 gallons of gasoline into a monitoring well instead of the store's fuel tank. About 3,000 gallons was pumped back out of the well, but the rest leaked into the sewer system.

Allcott said Maverik has agreed to cover the cost of the mistake, which could run into hundreds of thousands of dollars. Enforcement of fines against the company will be handled by the Department of Environmental Quality, the fire chief said.

The city sewer system will be rerouted through the area to direct it away from the flow of groundwater and prevent potential problems in the future, Mayor Jim Dukam said.

Lost osprey flock

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — Wildlife biologists in Colorado are puzzled by a flock of Coeur d'Alene ospreys that failed to come home from a trip to South America. Just three out of 28 ospreys returned from a two-year migration to Fort Collins, Colo., where they were transplanted from Lake Coeur d'Alene.

The female and two males straggled home this spring, the last remnant of a project that has attempted to move 42 birds from the Coeur d'Alene area to Colorado.

Project managers still don't know whether the other birds decided to live somewhere else, were killed by natural causes or were killed by poachers.

Stivers' land value remains unchanged

TWIN FALLS — The county commission has denied the appeal of a tax assessment on 13.5 acres in east Twin Falls.

Twin Falls resident T.W. Stivers appealed the assessment on June 30, saying that the land was not worth the $14,250 value that county Assessor Dorothy Hamby put on it.

The land south of Elizabeth Street and west of Hanks Road was considered agricultural and was assessed at $8,500 last year. But Stivers wrote Hamby this spring to tell her that no crops were grown on the acreage and that it was wasteland.

Stivers said he thought the assessment might go down if the land were considered wasteland.

But since no crops were being grown and improvements had been made on the property, the land classification changed from agricultural to residential, Hamby said. With the residential classification, the assessment increased.

Commission Chairman Jim Fraley toured the property and said that improvements on the land — drain and sewer lines and fire hydrants — showed that it was not wasteland.

The land has been listed for sale with a local realtor for $190,000, Fraley said. Nearby parcels of similar land have sold for comparable amounts to the assessment, officials said.

Idaho Housing Agency will listen to public comments

TWIN FALLS — The Idaho Housing Agency is holding a public hearing to allow area residents to express their opinions on housing issues.

The information collected will be used to prepare Idaho's 1994 Comprehensive Housing Affordability Strategy.

The hearing is scheduled for 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. Thursday in Room 109 of the Shields Building at the College of Southern Idaho.

Several members of the IHA staff will be present to speak and answer questions.

SNRA seeks some volunteers for Galena Summit Overlook

KETCHUM — The Sawtooth National Recreation Area is seeking volunteers to help staff its Galena Summit Overlook this summer.

Volunteers will assist Forest Service personnel in making visitors aware of issues like salmon habitat protection, low-impact backcountry activities, recreational opportunities, and area services such as lodging, restaurants and community activities.

Persons interested in volunteering a few hours of their time should contact Maria Taylor at 726-7672.

Trails Advisory Committee wants to buy Galena Lodge

HAILEY — The 22-member North Valley Trails Advisory Committee is looking for a way to buy Galena Lodge and keep it in public ownership. The Blaine County Recreation District announced this week.

A private offer to buy Galena Lodge from its current owner, Steve Hains, and maintain its cross-country ski trails fell through earlier this month.

With Galena Lodge closed last winter, the Blaine County Recreation District administered the North Valley Trails program with donations and user fees. The North Valley Trails Fund concluded the season with a $15,000 surplus.

The North Valley Trails Advisory Committee Thursday agreed to set up a financial committee to study the amount of money needed to purchase the lodge and to design a fund-raising program.

Members of the committee are expected to discuss the Galena Lodge situation with the Blaine County Recreation District Board of Directors at its July 28 meeting.

Workers are busy and running on schedule on the replacement for Twin Falls Singing Bridge, set to be finished in October. Despite harsh weather, construction company official Gaylord Hudson said, 'We might beat the deadline.'

Bridge project on schedule

By Phil Sahn
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Workers are on schedule to finish the replacement for the Singing Bridge by October, maybe a little sooner, the project supervisor said Tuesday.

"We might beat the deadline," said Gaylord Hudson of Idaho Construction Co., the Kimberly company building the bridge.

Crews will spend the next three weeks laying steel rods to reinforce the bridge's concrete deck. After this, 1,000 cubic yards of concrete will be poured for the deck, Hudson said.

When the deck is finished, guardrails and sidewalks will be built, and this will complete most of the work, he said. The bridge will be five lanes wide.

As work on the bridge stops, the company must reseed vegetation and reshaping the landscape disturbed along Rock Creek when the bridge's three piers were built.

Work started on the $2.3 million project last October when the 72-year-old Singing Bridge was closed for being structurally unsound. After trying several times to bring the bridge down with dynamite, workers used a crane to dismantle it.

Despite harsh weather, crews lost only a half day's work this winter, Hudson said. However, the spring rains stopped work for a week.

Idaho Transportation Department engineers estimated it would take a year to build the new bridge.

Murtaugh board will continue talk on consolidation

By Mychel Matthews Goodman
Times-News correspondent

MURTAUGH — In the wake of a disappointing loss at the polls last week, School Board members agreed to talk more about consolidation with Hansen, as well as other districts on Monday.

The date was set after board members regrouped this week to discuss options after last Tuesday's failed $2.18 million bond issue.

Superintendent Mike Chesley said that the election proved what the board thought already, that the majority of the patrons in the district — 53 percent — want a new school built in Murtaugh. However, a 67 percent majority is needed to pass a bond issue.

Last fall, a similar proposal was defeated by only eight votes. Last week, the bid was defeated by a much wider margin — 48 votes.

Fearing a debate that "could go on all night," board member Stuart Tolman suggested tabling the discussion on consolidation and picking it up Monday.

A new steering committee will be formed and a plan formulated at the 7 p.m. meeting.

At Monday's meeting, resident Jane Toupin said that it was the growing support of the consolidation issue that defeated the bond issue last week.

"As a board, we owe it to the patrons to look into all options," Board Chairman Mike Bland said, including consolidation.

Bland said that the board "wants to move ahead," and is open to all ideas.

Consolidation with more districts than just neighboring Hansen should be considered, he said.

"Direction is not important," he added. "Why not look at consolidating with Cassia (County School District)?"

DEQ gathers comments on Idaho's water quality

By N.S. Nokkented
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The cost of cleaning up polluted water is far greater than preventing it, an Idaho Conservation League spokesman said Tuesday.

The time, money and effort local individuals and groups are putting into doing something about the pollution problems in the Middle Snake River are a good example, ICL's Tom Woodbury told state officials.

Woodbury spoke at a state Division of Environment Quality hearing on new water quality rules for toxic chemicals and a review of state water quality standards in general.

The Snake River problems are the result of policies from 20, 30 or more years ago — more the result of ignorance than any evil intent, he said.

"The question that faces the state as it reviews its water quality rules and considers rules for toxic and cancer causing chemicals is "are we learning our lesson," Woodbury said.

The Federal Clean Water Act requires states to review their water quality policies and regulations every three years to let the public comment on "what's working and what's not working," said John Ledger, with DEQ's Boise office.

The review and the comments are then sent to the Environmental Protection Agency.

This year, however, the state focused its presentation on the new rules for toxic chemicals, Ledger said. But it still would welcome comments on any aspect of water quality rules, he added.

The Clean Water Act also required states to develop standards for toxic and carcinogenic chemicals. But Idaho and several other states failed to meet the deadline. The EPA's "National Toxics

Sheriffs optimistic about law

By Analise Taylor
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Magic Valley sheriffs say they don't expect Idaho's new sex-offender registration law to spark the kind of violence that resulted in the recent last week of an ex-convict's Washington home.

"We haven't really had a problem with that. I don't foresee it happening," said Elmore County Sheriff Rick Layher. "We have more problems protecting the victims."

More than 200 convicted sex offenders registered with county authorities across Idaho during the first 3 weeks the new requirement was in effect, state officials report.

However, local sheriffs are either hesitant or unaware of how to notify the public about sex offenders living in their communities.

And they're not expecting to exert special efforts to protect registrants.

"I don't think you could deviate from the way you would handle it with the general public. On the same token, it would not entitle the offender to any special privileges," Mindoka County Sheriff Paul Fries said.

Outraged people set fire to Joseph Gallardo's home in Lynnwood, Wash., when they were notified that a sex offender was living in their midst.

And such responses have not been unusual under Washington sex-offender notification law, according to the Associated Press:

- John Curtis Peterson received death threats and was evicted from a Borhelt mobile-home park after police announced his release in 1990. He moved to Ketchikan, but was forced to leave after people posted fliers with his picture. He lost three jobs before eventually leaving the state.
- In 1990, Tacoma residents picketed the home of Bobby Bonnell. Someone also threw a rock through a window of Bill Asschenbrenner's Tacoma home.
- In Kent's Timberlane neighborhood in 1991, residents recorded the movements of a convicted rapist on a computer and posting updates of his activities at a local market. Eggs were thrown at his home and the family received death threats.

Police in Washington have the option of notifying citizens and the media about where an offender plans to live.

Idaho's law requires any convicted sex offender to notify local authorities when moving into the state or moving into another Idaho county.

Magie Valley sheriffs see no problems that might arise with the new law or the cost the individual county might incur.

"I think it's a very good idea that they have to register," said Mindoka County Sheriff Paul Fries.

Cassia County Sheriff Billy Crystal said that his department hasn't formulated any plans to protect convicted sex offenders in his area, but that the law is good.

"I'd rather have it like this so we know where the offender is," he said.

Six offenders have registered in Cassia, Mindoka, Twin Falls and Elmore counties.

"I think it's a good law and long overdue," Layher said.

Portland chain looks at buying Blue Lakes Mall

By Stefano Esposito
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A spokesman for the Fred Meyer shopping-center chain confirmed Tuesday that the company is interested in Twin Falls, and a merchant in Blue Lakes Mall said she had been told Fred Meyer might buy the mall property.

Rob Boley, Fred Meyer's assistant vice president of public relations, said Tuesday that he could not confirm any interest in Blue Lakes Mall.

"We haven't settled on a specific piece of property yet," Boley said in a telephone interview from the grocery and variety-store chain's Portland headquarters. "All I can really tell at this juncture is Twin Falls is definitely an area we are interested in."

Boley said he received this information last week.

Rumors that Fred Meyer might buy the mall have circulated in Twin Falls for weeks. Until Tuesday, however, neither Fred Meyer nor anyone associated with the mall had gone on record about the possibility of a sale.

Julie Conley, manager of the Reflections hair salon, said the mall's management intended Fred Meyer while she was discussing a lease renewal agreement about a month ago.

"They had told me that they were negotiating with Fred Meyer," Conley said. "They said they did not have anything signed with Fred Meyer."

Mall merchants have been summoned to a meeting today "to discuss rumors of the sale of the mall." A memo from the mall's property manager, Julie Johnson, told the merchants, "Time will be made to answer any questions or concerns merchants have regarding a possible sale of the mall."

Contacted by the Times-News Tuesday, Johnson refused to say whether an announcement would be made about a buyer.

Conley, whose lease expired at the end of June, said she hopes to negotiate a six-month lease with the mall. She said she hopes to find out today whether she can renew her lease.

Some of Conley's fellow merchants said they had heard rumors about a sale but hadn't been told anything yet by mall management.

Proposed Kmart sparks lively debate in Hailey

Mychel Matthews Goodman
Times-News correspondent

HAILEY — A petition that is now circulating around town is sending a message to big business: You are not wanted here.

The petition sprang out of a request last month by retailer Kmart to build in Hailey an overstore many smaller towns suffering from financial woes would have welcomed.

But Hailey is unlike many other towns in Idaho — and Kmart's proposal in June to build a 94,000-square-foot store, slightly larger than Twin Falls' Kmart, for the town of 4,500 has stirred up controversy ever since.

Letters to the editor have poured into the local papers, while some merchants feel threatened, and developers say the time is

Either way, the issue comes down to zoning and whether folks in this place that many believe is a land of the super-wealthy really want a discount store.

Hailey city planner Carl Hjelm said Monday that before Kmart could build, two questions needed to be answered: "Do the residents of Hailey want a large retailer in town, and if they do want it, where do they want it?"

At the heart of the issue, he said, is whether Kmart fits into what townsfolk perceive is their community.

"Now that is a hard question," Hjelm added. "We have got a very eclectic mix of people here. Most people in Hailey don't perceive Hailey as a typical western community. One thing that Hailey very much wants to maintain — and I think this is a general feeling throughout the community — is the small-town feeling. And that's a very hard thing to define."

"Most people, I think, would agree that a large retailer would damage that small-town feeling."

Meanwhile, the petition has been well-received, according to Hailey resident Tina McNeal, who started it.

"People are saying we don't want any kind of business like this," she said. "In fact, people are still in a state of shock over getting a McDonald's."

Recently, Hailey gave the go-ahead for the fast-food chain to come into Hailey.

"It's not that we're elitists," McNeal said. "But we've made do without. We don't need

"Twin Falls people come up to Hailey and Sun Valley for a certain ambience, and we come to Twin Falls for a lot of our necessities. I think it's a nice trade off."

Such a commercial development, Hjelm said, would need 10 to 13 acres of land, an area equal to about six or seven city blocks. There are few suitable sites within the city limits.

Two possible parcels are within the Northside and Woodside developments; and both are involved in current rezoning applications before the City Council.

There are several issues at work:

- Northridge developer Elliott Caplow, of EMB Hailey, has requested that a 14-acre parcel within this property be rezoned to allow

Council amends city employee ordinances

By John J. Harberth
Mini-Cassia News Service

RUPERT New state laws have forced the City Council to make changes to local ordinances concerning library employees or increase the facility's budget to comply with the raise.

The law requires employees of the library be integrated into the city budget unless treated differently by a city ordinance, according to city attorney Rick Bolla.

The library "cannot function without an increase in the budget because of the manner in which the employees are dealt with," said Bolla.

He said unless the ordinance that deals with employees is changed, those people working at the library must be accorded the benefits shared by all city employees.

The council voted Tuesday to consider changing the ordinance before adopting one of three proposed budgets presented by Steve Oglivie, chairman of the library board.

Under the first proposed budget, the library's two full-time employees would become city employees and receive full benefits. Currently, there are no full-time employees receiving benefits at the library.

This budget would cost the city an additional $2,600 a year, Oglivie said.

The second proposed budget would maintain current operations with no increase in costs. To meet the budget, the salary of one full-time employee would have to be cut.

"This budget represents the minimum we can run on library and continue current services," Oglivie said.

The third proposed budget represented a compromise using additional funds towards insurance costs for the full-time employees without making them employees of the city.

Mayor W. L. "Bill" Whitton said budget constraints have forced the city to make some tough decisions.

"This council and this administration stands 100 percent behind that library," Whitton said.

But when it comes to more money for the library, "I don't think our funding sources are there," he added.

Councilman Duane Alford asked county trustees why the library is not being funded.

Oglivie said county residents pay a user's fee that city residents don't pay.

Under the long-range plan the library hopes to become a district library which would cover the county by 1996.

"This would give the library a broader financial base, Oglivie added.

He said the library might have to expand to be able to serve the county.

Currently, the library is holding a book sale to get rid of the older books and make room for new ones.

Minidoka District aims to improve test scores

By Eric Goodell
Mini-Cassia News Service

RUPERT Minidoka County School District officials are vowing to improve what they deem as unsatisfactory standardized test scores for its students this year.

At Tuesday night's meeting, district employee Terry Garner told trustees that 11th-grade students below the state average on the state-mandated Direct Writing Assessment. A total of 48 percent of those students passed the writing exam. Sixty-five percent is the state average.

Students' scores on other standardized tests, such as the Iowa Test of Basic Skills, remained about the same overall, but there were some decreases, he said.

The news brought concern to board members who wanted to "know how to raise the marks."

"We aren't happy with the scores," Superintendent Michael Bishop said. He vowed to make raising the test scores a high priority for the district.

He said it is difficult to know why scores weren't as high as was hoped. Garner recommended that teachers have more training on improving test scores.

But Garner said scores on the Direct Writing Assessment dropped this year because the standard of excellence was raised.

What last year was an "A" score is now an "B," Garner said.

Bishop and trustees wondered how teachers use the test results in grading what they teach the next year.

Iowa Basic Test Scores within the district were around the national average or within the 50 percentile, Garner said, but some scores had dropped. The fourth grade posted a 43 percentile.

Kellogg residents want help to study lead poisoning

KELLOGG (AP) — Karen Bear's son has a chromosome defect, so that he is one of only 18 people worldwide identified with it.

The 23-year-old Bear, who has lived in Snellville for 10 years, is like other residents who want a cleanup to end ailments from the Silver Valley's decades of lead smelting.

But the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry says its job is not curing patients, just identifying them.

Bear is one of more than 100 residents flooding the agency with letters and phone calls. They want to shake loose money from the Banker Hill Superfund cleanup for a health program focused on lead poisoning.

"For us, it's a dead issue," said Greg Thomas, ATSDR regional representative in Seattle. "Their assertion is that health care in the valley is inadequate, and we disagree."

He said they are sending pleas to his agency, although it only identifies health problems.

"We do surveillance and health studies. We don't follow up."

Barbara Miller, an organizer for the Silver Valley chapter of the Idaho Citizens Network, has led the charge at ATSDR. The grass-roots organization has struggled for six years to convince residents of the 21-square-mile EPA Superfund site that its medical problems could be lead-related.

"At last it was a loyalty issue and people denied the problems," she said. The time the smelter had been the source of lead-paying jobs, but citizens gradually realized the scope of the contamination.

The citizens network seeks $5 million for a clinic. It would provide vouchers for free medical care for the unemployed residents. The money could be used to hire doctors to determine blood-lead levels, as well as brain scans to measure neurological damage from the metal and follow-up care.

Rule," as a result, took effect this February.

The state's proposed rules would replace the federal rules. The advantage to the state would be greater flexibility, Ledges said.

The state also opted for a more conservative risk level for cancer-causing chemicals to allow for the additive effects of exposure to more than a single pollutant, he said.

Woodbury suggested the state would do well to err on the side of safety than on the side of economics when regulating these chemicals.

"They cause cancer, and people die," he said.

Rightfully the people who are profiting from discharging the chemicals should bear the additional cost of preventing the discharge, Woodbury said. The original goal of the Clean Water Act was to eliminate such discharges, he said.

But the state spends too much effort on "point sources" — pollution that is discharged from a pipe. Only 7 percent of the state's surface waters are affected by point sources, Woodbury said. Most of the waters are affected by "non-point" sources — pollution that doesn't come from a single identifiable point, such as agricultural runoff or logging.

The conservation league proposes a new water quality classification to protect clean water before it is affected by either kind of pollution source, Woodbury said.

He suggested a "high quality water" classification based on water that can support bull trout. The trout species most sensitive to water quality changes — especially to sediments. It has been proposed for endangered species status.

The proposal would meet the minimum federal standards to protect high quality water, Woodbury said. The state has no protection scheme for such high quality streams that support these fish, he said.

are what the patrons want for the school, then the district should look at consolidating with a larger school than Hansen, Chesley learned.

Bland said the board's greatest fear is to have consolidation pass with a simple majority, then have another bond issue fail "and still not have a new school."

Tomlin said Tuesday that the key to successful consolidation and the subsequent passing of a bond is being realistic in what is offered.

"Most of us would love to see consolidation with more districts — Hansen, Valley, Kimberly — but we realize the more districts that are included, the harder it will be to get passed," she said. "We feel we will have the best chance of passing consolidation, and eventually a school bond, by pursuing consolidation with Hansen."

Still, Tomlin does not rule out other consolidation options.

"We need to talk to all the boards," she said.

low's first, and the Northridge site is Kmart's last, so far only, choice for a possible location.

The other option Hailey cited is Woodside, which has a 12-acre parcel "zoned — and zoned — for business development, but is facing a possible rezoning attempt to disallow large business development on the parcel. The Woodside owner is opposed to the rezoning to limit business, called down zoning, that is being requested by the city. The issue will come before the city Monday.

McNeal's petition makes no mention of Kmart or Northridge.

"The petition says we support the city's rezoning efforts," McNeal said. "Once this business zone in Woodside is eliminated, then a large type of store such as Kmart cannot go in."

"I don't think Kmart could survive here," she said. "And I could we'd end up with a huge, white elephant."

The City Council has tabled Caplow's request, pending public discussion on the issue, Hejlm said. The council will look at the Woodside rezoning issue during its next meeting Monday night.

Spencer Grubb and Associates, Inc., which owns Woodside, has not been approached by Kmart, according to Judy Hartley, vice president of the company.

"The city administration's attempt to rezone the property in Woodside 'has nothing to do with Kmart,'" Hartley said Monday. "People are getting that confused."

Hartley said there have been several unsuccessful attempts to rezone the property within the past few years, long before Kmart approached the city.

Hartley said that although Kmart has not approached Spencer Grubb about locating within Woodside, she said the subdivision would be a good place for "modern shopping. It's designed for it. It has been since the it was platted in 1972. It's got big streets on both sides, and it's next off the highway. It's just a good spot."

Hartley added that a lot of people would like Kmart to build in Hailey.

"The feeling for those who want it, is that prices are too high in this valley. It's just as soon not want to drive to Twin Falls," Rogers said. "The other side of that, people who don't want it, say that it would put everybody in Hailey out of business. It's an emotional issue."

As far as Northridge is concerned, Hejlm said, it has "all been planned as a purely residential development."

"A lot of people who bought (Northridge) property have bought it with that as an assumption, that it would remain a residential property."

There is a need for Kmart in the valley, Elliott Caplow said from his office in Los Angeles.

"We'll keep working on this," he said. "We're convinced that if it's not Kmart, it will be one of the major mass merchandisers. One will be there. It's just a matter of where."

Residents, council discuss golf course

By Eric Goodell
Mini-Cassia News Service

BURLEY — City Council members will review policies at the city's golf course to ensure it is managed with the public in mind.

The action comes amid discussions by several area residents at Monday's meeting that some golfers disagree with how the facility is operated.

One charged that there are too many golf scrambles at the course during the weekends, making it difficult for golf enthusiasts not involved with the events to play a round of links.

Burley resident Clarence Wright told the City Council there are "hundreds of people" who believe the golf course isn't being managed correctly. "The golf course is completely out of control," he said.

Burley Golf Course Pro Earl Simpson, when contacted Tuesday, said he believes the golf course is run well.

"I think it is a real nice golf course, and we try to make it available to a wide range of people," he said.

Besides too many scrambles, Wright and the five residents accompanying him also complained of a lack of marshaling during the weekends, which has caused play to be slow.

He said one weekend his golf party was slowed up by someone trying to retrieve a golf ball from a water hazard.

"If they can't afford to buy a ball they should get off the course," Wright said.

Councilmen Derlin Taylor and Wendell McMurray said there are positive aspects to how the golf course is operated. Others, including Councilmen Brent Kerbs and Jim Lynch, said practices should be reviewed.

Taylor said that many years ago the golf course used to be subsidized by tax dollars, but create a usage. Because it's being used more, the golf course is paying for itself, and has money left over for course improvements. Taylor said.

"(Simpson) is a victim of his own success," Taylor said.

He said it's hard to please everyone at the busy season of the year, but by the middle of August, Taylor said golf course usage will decrease, making it possible for golfers to play whenever they want.

Lynch suggested that those on the committee that oversees the golf course review the policies. That included examining Twilight league play, as well as get more public input on how the golf course should be run.

Kerbs, Lynch and McMurray are on the committee.

Simpson on Tuesday disputed much of Wright's comments, saying, "We do a ton of monitoring (on the golf course). We try to stay on four-hour rounds."

He said that while there have been scrambles during the weekend, there has also been open play.

"I feel the golf course is used by a whole range of people," he said.

Jerome honors Tom Mahan

By H.R. Weikel
Times News correspondent

JEROME — The Jerome Chamber of Commerce selected Tom Mahan as citizen of the year.

Mahan, 75, will be grand marshal of the Aug. 3 Jerome County parade and will lead the event with his wife Mary.

For 15 years, he was a trustee of the Jerome Board of Education and served as its chairman.

He was a charter member and treasurer of the College of Southern Idaho Foundation. He served as ex officio trustee of the CSI board when it was started.

For 30 years, Mahan has been a board member of the Idaho Youth Ranch. He assisted in the establishment of the organization.

He has served with the Jerome Rotary, Chamber of Commerce, Toastmasters Club, and St. Benedict's Family Medical Center Foundation.

Mahan was chairman of the Republican Central Committee for two years.

Being selected as citizen of the year is not news to Mahan. The Idaho Statesman newspaper gave him that title in 1970, and KMYT-TV chose Mahan as citizen of the year in 1975.

Wreck leaves 3 with minor injuries

BURLEY — Three juveniles escaped serious injury near Burley Saturday night when the vehicle they were riding in went off the road and overturned, deputies say.

According to the Cassia County Sheriff's Department, Gina Leigh Hodge, 17, Heyburn, was driving a car eastbound on Highway 81 at milepost 32 near Burley when the vehicle went off the right side off the road. Hodge overcorrected and the car went across the highway. The rear of the car then struck a sign and an embankment, deputies said. The car then rolled onto its top.

Hodge and passenger Amber Warr, 17, of Rupert, received minor injuries, while passenger Adam Dayley, 17, Burley, was uninjured, deputies say. The car had $6,000 damage.

Gear reported stolen at City of Rocks

ALMO — Two Utahns say someone stole their camping gear Sunday at the City of Rocks.

According to the Cassia County Sheriff's Department, Billy Glasscock and Sally Shaun of Salt Lake City said they left their camp for about four hours. When they returned, their gear worth $1,585 was missing.

The camp gear included sleeping bags, clothing, a Sony Walkman and a tent.

Man reports theft of motorcycle

RUPERT — A Rupert man reported Friday that his motorcycle had been stolen.

Richard Wahlholtz said the Honda motorcycle was parked in a shed near his house on 2900 South and 3000 West, according to the Minidoka County Sheriff's Department.

He discovered the missing shortly before 2 p.m., deputies said. The loss was estimated at $500.

Hafer earns 2nd place at PGA Championship

BLACKFOOT — After two holes of sudden death, Cameron Gunville, a 15-year-old from Billings, Mont., edged Preston Hafer, 16 of Kinnelby, for the 1993 Mayfly Rocky Mountain PGA Junior Championship at Blackfoot Municipal Golf Course Tuesday.

Jody Nieman, 16 of Rigby, won her third straight title with a new women's tournament record of 149.

Hafer and Gunville also completed 36 holes in 149.

Gunville and Nieman earned berths in the national finals at Pinehurst, N.C. in August.

Jazz draft pick Wright expected to be at camp

SALT LAKE CITY — Jazz draft pick Luther Wright is expected to show up for the beginning of summer camp on Friday, although contract negotiations remain at an impasse.

Jazz officials also are hopeful the 7-foot-2, 200-pound center from Seton Hall, the No. 18 pick in the draft, will play in the Rocky Mountain Revue — a summer pro league at the Delta Center.

"We're doing everything in our power to get him here for summer camp," Jazz basketball operations director Scott Layden said Monday. "To me, it's essential that he plays."

However, it is considered unlikely that Wright, who is represented by New Jersey agent Sal DeFazio, will participate in any organized workouts unless he signs a contract first.

Layden said if Wright does not show up for summer camp and the Rocky Mountain Revue, his value to the Jazz will decrease and Utah might be forced to explore other player options.

76ers' Bol, his cousin, 4 U.S. Marines could land in jail

NAIROBI, Kenya — Philadelphia 76ers center Manute Bol, his cousin and four U.S. Marines could be charged with a misdemeanor carrying a one-year jail term following a barroom brawl in a hotel, authorities said Tuesday.

Nairobi police spokesman Jeremiah Matigaro said an investigation was being conducted into the Saturday night incident.

"But we are wondering whether it is in the interest of any of them to prosecute because there is only one witness," Matigaro said.

He said a bartender, who witnessed the brawl, said fighting broke out after one of the Marines made an uncomplimentary remark about Bol's height. Bol is the NBA's tallest player at 7-foot-7.

Two chairs and several glasses were broken.

The press box at Atlanta-Fulton County Stadium blazes Tuesday. The fire was started with a stereo heating unit in a luxury suite near the press box and burned for approximately 45 minutes. No injuries were reported.

Heating unit sets stadium on fire

The Associated Press

ATLANTA — Fire swept through a section of Atlanta-Fulton County Stadium on Tuesday, sending fans and players scurrying for safety as black smoke poured from the burning press box.

The fire in the stadium's middle level started 90 minutes before the Atlanta Braves were to play the St. Louis Cardinals and was put out 45 minutes after it began.

One firefighter was taken to a hospital suffering from heat exhaustion and as many as 10 others were treated on the scene for heat-related problems. Remarkably, no other injuries were reported.

A crowd of more than 40,000 was expected, and the few hundred fans who arrived early for the 7:40 p.m. EDT start were evacuated. While Braves management and fire officials decided whether the game could be played safely, fans milled outside the stadium. Finally, the game began at 9:38 p.m.

Joe Torre, manager of the Cardinals, was in the clubhouse when he heard about the fire.

"I just ran out onto the field and looked up and it scared the hell out of me," he said. "I just kept running into the outfield."

Atlanta fire chief David Chamberlin said the fire apparently started with a "stereo heating unit."

The fire burned 25 minutes before firefighters could get close enough to pour water on it. Twenty minutes later, it appeared out.

Chamberlin said the primary structural damage to the 28-year-old stadium was to beams above the box. Assistant fire chief Larry Tanner said the contents of five box suites were destroyed and a sixth was heavily damaged.

Braves president Stan Kasten said 2,000 seats could not be used. The scoreboard and lights operated, but not the public-address system. The team was able to broadcast the game.

McGriff replaces Bream in Braves' starting lineup

The Associated Press

ATLANTA — Nine months after sliding home safely to give the Atlanta Braves the pennant, another slide at the plate cost Sid Bream his job.

With Tuesday's arrival of first baseman Fred McGriff, Bream is out of Atlanta's starting lineup.

"There's no doubt something like this hurts the pride and the ego," Bream said. "I'm not going to sit here and make a stink."

"If the Lord doesn't want me here, I'll be here. If the Lord doesn't want me here, I won't."

Last October, Bream scored from second base after a two-out, ninth-inning single by Francisco Cabrera gave the Braves a 3-2 win over Pittsburgh and sent them to the World Series.

This season, the 32-year-old Bream was batting .242 with eight homers and 27 RBIs in the final year of his contract. So when McGriff, baseball's most consistent home run hitter, the past 5½ years, became available, Atlanta made his move.

Now, the Braves hope McGriff will rescue the offense. As if to prove they needed him, Atlanta was beaten 4-0 Monday night by the St. Louis Cardinals.

He was in the lineup batting cleanup and wearing No. 27, but his debut was delayed by one hour, 58 minutes when a fire broke out at Fulton County Stadium before Tuesday's game.

"What a start," he said.

Before the Braves gave San Diego three minor leaguers for McGriff on Sunday, Bream platooned with Brian Hunter. Bream was playing against right-handers and Hunter facing left-handers. Hunter has no homers and eight RBIs. McGriff is batting .273 with 18 homers and 46 RBIs.

Hunter, optioned to Class AAA Richmond, said he hoped to be part of the trade.

"That's the only way I'll be able to play, if I'm traded," he said.

Bream refused to speculate about a future elsewhere or a diminished role in Atlanta.

"Even though I feel Sid Bream can play, it's reminding me that Sid Bream's getting a little older," he said. "And I don't know what's going to happen in the future."

Bream said the one thing he is certain about is his past achievement. He hit .273 in last year's playoffs.

"I accomplished what I wanted to do with the Atlanta Braves," he said. "I helped them to two National League titles. I feel hopefully, Sid Bream has done quite a lot for this city and this team."

Oakland starting pitchers no longer can finish, win games

The Associated Press

CLEVELAND — Tony La Russa has given a new twist to the phrase "pitching rotation."

Instead of scheduling one pitcher per game, the Oakland manager is now scheduling three.

No longer will an Oakland starter have a chance for a complete game, or even a win. No longer will an Oakland pitcher have the luxury of four days' rest.

Under La Russa's new plan, the A's pitchers will be limited to about three innings or 50 pitches, and they'll have to be ready to pitch again three days later. Only the most efficient starter would be able to squeeze five innings — the amount necessary to get credit for a victory — into 50 pitches.

The scheme was hatched after the A's lost three weekend games in New York by a composite score of 32-14. Oakland hasn't been higher than sixth place in the AL West since the end of April.

Something had to be done to save the season, and nothing conventional was working.

"It's an interesting shot to take. We'll watch it real closely and see what happens," La Russa said.

The multi-pitcher approach will end, he said, "as soon as I think it's not our best shot."

On Monday night, in the opener of a three-game set at Cleveland, La Russa scheduled

Todd Van Poppel as his starter, to be followed by Ron Darling and Kelly Downs. Van Poppel drew exactly 50 pitches over four innings, and Darling went the rest of the way in the 4-2 loss to the Indians.

Because Van Poppel and Darling combined for fewer than 100 pitches, Downs was not used. He was pushed back into the mix for Tuesday night's game, to be started by Mike Moehler with a supporting cast of Bobby Witt and John Briseo.

Bob Welch, who pitched five innings Sunday in New York, was scheduled to work again Wednesday, on two days' rest, along with Rich Gossage and Shawn Hillegas.

All of the pitching lineups, of course, are subject to change.

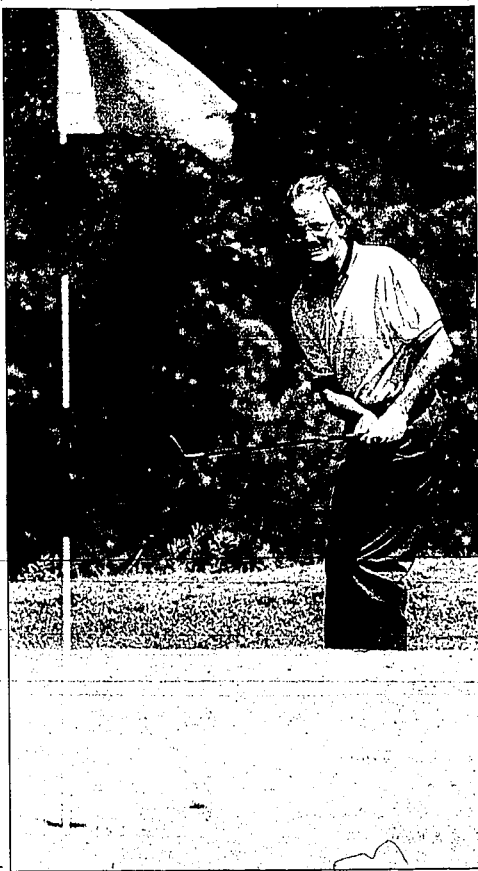

"I don't even mess with saying I understand truly what's going on," Darling said. "We just have to stay ready to go, and then go until he taps us on the shoulder. Tony and (pitching coach) Dave Duncan really think this is good for the ballclub."

La Russa particularly hopes the system will benefit Van Poppel, a 21-year-old rookie.

"If you stop and think about it, if he pitches every three days, he'll get a heck of a lot more experience than going out every five days," La Russa said. "If he goes out every five days, if he struggles, he has five days before he goes again. This way, he'll go out every three days regardless."

Van Poppel wasn't ready to pass judgment on the plan yet.

Pro holds shaky Carter Cup lead

By Larry Hovey
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — It was good news, bad news on the amateur side of the Carter Cup matches against the professionals Tuesday.

The good news was that the amateurs had played well enough that non-playing Captain Lynant Gallup eliminated curfews and bed checks.

The bad news was the amateurs are four points behind the pros going into the final day of the annual competition that pits the best 10 professionals (by money against the 10 best amateurs (by tournament points).

With 30 points available, the cup remains available to the hot team today.

There will be 10 head-to-head matches, scored on the basis of one point for the front nine, one for the back nine and another for the total 18.

"We'd better play well tomorrow because it doesn't look like our guys played too well this afternoon," said Twin Falls professional Mike Hamblin in surveying Tuesday's play.

The professionals bounced out to a quick 10½-4½ lead in the morning Champion round. The pros shut out two amateur duos and gave up just a half-point in another. Tracy Frank and Carson Mounsey blanked Tom Sanderson and Rob Ellis for the amateurs' best win — a three-pointer.

Then in the afternoon, the amateurs came alive in the two-man best ball phase.

Twin Falls youth begins pre-Olympic training

By Ron Gates
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — What began in the "squared circle" may end with five interlocking circles representing an Olympic opportunity for a Twin Falls teen-ager.

Tom Finnegan, ranked No. 3 among Junior Olympic boxers in the light heavyweight division after a tournament held in Gulfport, Miss. last month, attracted enough attention to warrant pre-Olympic training reserved solely for the exceptionally talented.

"He's going to their most extensive program in Marquette, Mich. Aug. 1 because they feel he has Olympic capabilities," said Finnegan's trainer, Woody Turley. "There have been parents who tried to pay to have their kids go there. They won't take them. They pick and choose."

The two-week camp will conclude with a replay of last month's tourney, matching the top four boxers over the final two days. That event is likely to afford Finnegan a chance to avenge a controversial loss at the hands of the eventual champion in the semifinal round.

"I'm looking forward to it. I'd feel great if I won," said Finnegan, who paused, flashed a

Brown threatens to sit out season unless Pittsburgh pays him more

The Associated Press

If Chad Brown doesn't play football this year, there's always the snake business.

Snakes? Brown, you see, breeds and sells snakes. Clearly, he is not the conventional draft choice.

NFL training camps

In any case, he is threatening to sit out the season unless the Pittsburgh Steelers come up with more money. On Tuesday, the Steelers signed first-round draft pick Deon Figures, a college teammate of Brown at Colorado. That leaves Brown, a linebacker chosen in the second round, as the only unsigned player among the Steelers' 10 draft picks.

Brown said his threat isn't a negotiating ploy. He and his partner own about 100 snakes, some worth as much as $5,000. They breed and sell snakes to pet shops and other breeders.

"This year my partner and I will make about $160,000 if things go well," Brown said. "If things don't go well, we'll make $80,000 to $100,000."

Brown plans to continue breeding snakes even if he signs with Pittsburgh. "I'm not trying to use it as leverage or anything," he said. "It's just that I'm not going to be broke if I don't play for the Steelers this year."

Indianapolis Colts defensive end Steve Emtman practices for the first time Monday at the Colts' camp in Anderson, Ind.

"He kind of stunned me a little bit," Dye said.

Meanwhile, coach Joe Bugel is trying to shape his team without quarterback Timm Rosenbach, whose agent says he is eyeing football to raise cattle and take an extended leave on the toilet circuit.

"If he shows up at camp, good, and if he doesn't show up at camp, good also, but I'd just like for the kid to tell me what he's decided," Bugel said. "Just a show of professional courtesy."

Redskins

No. 58 was always popular in Washington. It still is even though Wilber Marshall has moved on to Houston. The new No. 58 is Carl Banks, who wore that number with the New York Giants before joining the Redskins.

"He's going to bring a quality leadership to our team that maybe we haven't had in the past," assistant coach Larry Pectolito said. "Yesterday, he took a young player aside after practice and was working with him on some things. I haven't seen that before during my time with the Redskins."

Packers

Mark Clifton, three other wide receivers and a tight end have been slowed by injuries.

Clifton pulled a hamstring. Jack Milling mowed his left leg and sustained a concussion. Wisconsin Louis Clark hurt his hip and Chris Holder, dislocated his thumb. Ed West, who has more experience than the other three reserve tight ends combined, "got a crack on the ankle," coach Mike Holmgren said.

Dolphins

Miami, which waived Mark Duper because of a surplus of receivers, is suddenly not so deep at the position.

On Sunday, the day before training camp opened, receiver Mike Williams broke a finger in a bicycle accident. On Tuesday, Irving Fryar went down with a strained knee. He is expected to miss up to two weeks, but will not face surgery.

Giants

Coach Dan Reeves would like to talk with AWOL linebacker Pepper Johnson and clear the air. Reeves seemed a little concerned over reports that Johnson was staying away from training camp because he was unhappy over a proposed move from inside linebacker to outside linebacker.

Reeves said that's not the case. "I've said all the time that he's the starting inside linebacker and someone has to beat him out to change that," Reeves said.

General manager George Young reported no progress on signing veterans Jambo Elliott, Dave Meggett, Mike Fox and Corey Miller or draft picks Michael Stitzman or Marcus Buckley.

Running back Rodney Hampton also continued to be AWOL, over-unhappiness with a contract that ends this year.

49ers

Larry Sidney, who hadn't started a game in five seasons but was an integral part of the club as special teams captain and a reserve fullback, announced his retirement. He played for two teams that won Super Bowls.

Gordon replaces Allison in race

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Indy-car driver Robby Gordon will drive Ford Thunderbird No. 28 in Sunday's DieHard 500 Winston Cup race at Talladega Speedway, replacing the late Davey Allison for one race.

Scheduling conflicts prevent the 24-year-old California native, who is eighth in the Indy-car driver standings, from running in other NASCAR races this season.

"I'm excited that they're taking a chance with me," said Gordon, who has never seen the Talladega track. "I know it's a big risk."

"Davey was one of my favorite NASCAR drivers," Gordon said. "I'm not replacing him. It just happens that I have an off weekend and I'll do the best I can."

Team owner Robert Yates said he chose Gordon because he has raced in a Winston Cup event, the 1991 Daytona 500, and is highly regarded by NASCAR experts. Gordon ran as high as fifth at Daytona before spinning to avoid an accident and finished 18th.

"We're going to put Robby in the car for one race," Yates said. "As far as the future, we're going to look down the list. All we've been doing is answering the phone. A lot of people want to get in the seat of the No. 28 car."

Robby Gordon Places eighth in standings

The process was an agonizing one for Yates and the rest of the team because it involves naming a replacement for the popular Allison at his home track.

Talladega also is the place where the 32-year-old stock car driver crashed his helicopter last week, suffering fatal head injuries.

"It's tough because we're going back to Talladega," team spokesman Brian VanDeroock said. "All of Davey's extended family will be there."

Allison won three Winston 500s at Talladega, which is located not far from his hometown of Huey-town, Ala. His father, Bobby Allison, won four times there and his uncle, Donnie Allison, won twice.

Yates decided not to enter last Sunday's race at Pocono, saying the team needed time to come to grips with Allison's death.

At the time, he said the team would attempt to be ready for Talladega.

"Had Talladega been the first weekend, we would have missed it," he said Tuesday. "This is our livelihood. This race team is prepared to go there and win this race."

When Allison was injured in a spectacular wreck last year at Pocono, Yates went to Bobby Hill as a replacement driver the next week at Talladega and Dorsey Schroeder the following week at Watkins Glen, N.Y.

As difficult as it has been, VanDeroock said the team has been bolstered by thoughts of how Davey Allison responded after his younger brother, Clifford, was killed in a wreck during practice several days before a Winston Cup race last year at Michigan.

"We know this is what he would want us to be doing," VanDeroock said. "We saw him go through it."

Landry accepts Cowboys' Ring of Honor position Lewis rejects Bowe for title

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Tom Landry accepted a spot in the Dallas Cowboys' Ring of Honor on Tuesday, an honor he had slumped since being fired as coach in 1989.

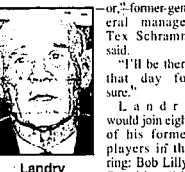

Landry, who guided the Cowboys to two Super Bowl championships in 29 years, left the franchise on his own when Jerry Jones fired him only hours after buying the team.

Landry had previously refused enshrinement in the ring, which encompasses the facade between the decks of Texas Stadium, and has distanced himself from the team by spending more time with personal business and charities.

On Tuesday, Jones said that Landry had agreed to be enshrined on Nov. 7 during a game between the Cowboys and the New York Giants.

Jimmy Johnson, who replaced Landry as coach, said, "I think it's good that coach Landry will be in the ring of honor. He's a big part of the great tradition of the Dallas Cowboys."

"I think it's tremendous that Tom has decided to go into the Ring of Honor," Jones said.

Landry

Don Perkins, Chuck Howley, Mel Renfro, Roger Staubach and Lee Roy Jordan.

Landry, always a bit a stoic figure on the sidelines, turned a floundering expansion franchise of the early 1960s into an NFL power by the 1970s.

Under Landry, the Cowboys had a 270-178-6 record, reaching the Super Bowl in 1971, 1972, 1976, 1978 and 1979, beating Miami 24-3 in 1972 and Denver 27-10 in 1978.

He was named to the Pro Football Hall of Fame in 1980, joining Lilly and Staubach.

LONDON (AP) — Lennox Lewis, the WBC heavyweight champion, has rejected a deal to fight Riddick Bowe for the undisputed title.

"The deal was $21 million for Bowe and a 50-50 split if the final purse went above $32 million," Frank Maloney, who represents Lewis, said Tuesday. Lewis was guaranteed $11 million.

"We declined that, and the Bowe fight won't happen until the summer of 1994," Maloney said.

Lewis was awarded the WBC title last year after Bowe was stripped for failing to make his first defense against the British fighter. Bowe retained the IBF and WBA crowns.

Dan Duva, who has promotional ties with both champions, said from his office at West Paterson, N.J., Tuesday that Rocky Newman, Bowe's manager, made the offer to Lewis' management group, headed by Panos Elias.

"Their responses were, 'we've made commitments for two fights,'" Duva said.

Aikman working too hard, too fast?

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The ball was wobbly and overthrown so the receiver had to make a lancing one-handed catch.

No this wasn't All-Pro Michael Irvin with the acrobatic, fingertip grab. It was injured Troy Aikman, who doesn't act like he had back surgery on June 19.

Aikman is so far ahead of his expected rehabilitation pace that he has coach Jimmy Johnson shaking his head and doctors worried the Cowboys' Super Bowl MVP is going too far too fast.

"He's amazed me," Johnson said. "He's looking really good."

The antsy Aikman already has set a tentative date for his playing comeback: It's Aug. 21 against the Houston Oilers in the Alamodome.

He's working like everyone forgot he threw four touchdown passes in the Super Bowl and got $500,000 for saying "I'm going to Disneyland."

Early in the morning he's up, practicing his backpedal in a harness and tossing a medicine ball. The harness helps Aikman rebuild his back muscles.

Then he's out on the field making longer passes each day. He's already up to 30 yards with a tight spiral. Worried trainers caution him not to cut loose with 50 yard throws.

"I can throw the ball 30 to 35 yards no problem," Aikman said. "The back feels good. Every day in my rehab I do more."

Aikman said he had feared the herniated disc in his back was a ticking bomb.

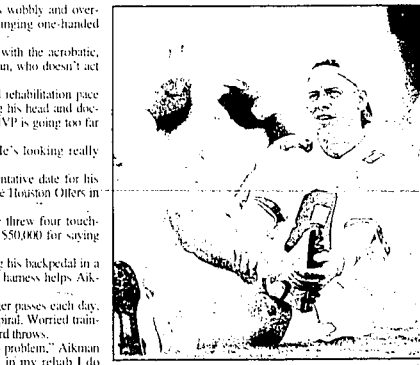

"I had been wearing down over a period of years and when I did those squats with the weights it pushed things over the edge," he said. "At first I thought the problem was muscular. But it sure wasn't. Jay Novacek had this same operation four years ago and he seems fine. I don't want long-term problems because I want a normal life after I get out of football."

Aikman is a picture of impatience at the Cowboys' training camp at St. Edward's University, where the boredom of two-day practices drags on.

"Frustrating," he said. "It's frustrating."

Aikman hopes to begin practicing with the team following a London exhibition game against Detroit Aug. 8. He'll be in California working out under the watchful eye of the doctors who operated on him.

"There's been no pain so I'm encouraged," he said. "I plan to play in the last preseason game and possibly the one before that.

What drives Aikman is his experience two years ago when he was injured and Steve Beuerlein took control of the team in the playoffs.

"Watching someone else quarterback this team isn't fun for me," Aikman said. "I've lived through that experience."

Aikman then took off to run on a treadmill.

Run, Troy, run. He'll keep running until he's out on the field with the team in RFK Stadium on Sept. 6, starting against the Washington Redskins.

"I'll be there," he said.

NICE, France (AP) — Sergei Bubka has had his ups and downs — mildly down — recently in the pole vault while Olympic gold medalist Maxim Tarasov is a rising young star of the event.

Bubka gets a chance to redeem himself against Tarasov on Wednesday at the Nikita Grand Prix track and field meet.

Although he set two world indoor records this year, Bubka has been struggling lately. In his last four meets, he has only one victory — at

Prince Edwards Island takes their spuds seriously

I've found one other place on the face of this earth where people are as proud of their potatoes as we are in Idaho. It's P.E.I. - Prince Edward Island, Canada. It's the smallest, but maybe the most beautiful, province. It's a lovely island nestled above Nova Scotia. We were there for the first ever World Potato Congress, where 44 countries were represented.

Nancy Joy Jones
Valley cooking

P.E.I. is Lucy Maud's country. Lucy Maud Montgomery was the creator of "Anne of Green Gables." But back to the potatoes.

A tourist from Connecticut, after reading my badge, asked, "Just what do you do at a World Potato Congress?"

I said, "They talked about potato varieties, seed, yields, phytosanitary certificates—fertilizer and taxes, diseases, biotech trade agreements..." About that time, her face went blank, and I knew I had fed her too much information. So I'll try not to do that to you.

Some of the top scientists and researchers were there to present the latest news about the honorable spud. There was a trade show of equipment, and there were lots of great social events.

On Saturday, during a visit to the operations of some farming folk on the east end of the island, we lunched on delicious lobster rolls. I'm going to give you the recipe because, if you get your hands on some canned lobster (check the frozen foods department of a specialty market), this is a good recipe to spread the lobster around. I imagine crab would work, too.

P.E.I. LOBSTER ROLLS

- 2 cups lobster meat
 - 2 tablespoons celery, small dice
 - 1 tablespoon onion, minced
 - 1/2 cup salad dressing
 - 1 teaspoon lemon juice
 - 6 rolls (the long deli kind)
 - 1/2 cup cheddar cheese, grated
- Cut lobster into small bite-size chunks, removing any membrane. Combine with celery, onion, salad dressing and lemon juice.

Split rolls in the center and fill with lobster mixture. Sprinkle with cheddar cheese and broil in oven until cheese melts and mixture is heated through (about 5 minutes). Or microwave on High about 2 minutes. Makes 6 servings.

Since it's high picnic time I'm going to give you some different potato salad recipes for your next getaway.

CURRIED POTATO SALAD

- 6 large potatoes,
- 1/2 cup Italian dressing
- 1 cup chopped onion
- 2 cups mayonnaise (can use light)
- 1 tablespoon curry powder
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 1 tablespoon chopped parsley

Boil, peel and dice potatoes. Cool. Add remaining ingredients and toss lightly. Chill before serving. Serves 6 to 8.

PARTY POTATO SALAD

- 10 cups diced cooked potato (skins on or off)
- 1/2 cup vegetable oil
- 1/2 cup wine vinegar
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 1/2 teaspoon pepper
- 1 teaspoon chives, chopped
- 10 slices bacon, cooked crisp then broken
- 6 hard-cooked eggs, diced
- 1 cup celery, sliced
- 1/3 cup chopped onion
- 1/3 cup chopped green pepper
- 2/3 cup sour cream
- 1/2 cup mayonnaise

2 unpeeled cucumbers, scored with a fork lengthwise and sliced very thin. Combine the potatoes with the oil, vinegar, salt, pepper and chives. Mix well and chill. Add remaining ingredients at serving time and mix lightly. Serves 10-12.

While in P.E.I., I had a potato salad that was different than any I had tasted before. This comes pretty close.

POTATO-COLESLEW

- 8 potatoes, cooked, peeled and cut into bite-sized pieces
- 1 14-ounce package fresh prepared

Cook-free main dishes will keep you and your kitchen cool

Chilling out

Wake up warm weather appetites with cooling, cook-free San Antonio Spinach Salad. A satisfying main dish that's made in minutes, it relies on picante sauce for its zesty, garden-fresh flavor.

On steamy days when it's too hot to cook, the mealtime solution is simple: Don't cook. Sidestep the stove and serve whole-meal salads that refresh and revive... and keep the cook and kitchen cool.

- The strategy is simple:
 - At the supermarket, drop by the deli for cooked meat, poultry and seafood.
 - Check out the cheese case and bag a tin or two of tuna.
 - Use the old bean (the canned kind, that is) and peruse the production section for the season's finest fare.
 - Toss together your selections with an eye toward texture and color contrasts.
 - Then add size to your salad with a delectable dressing.

Six new main dish masterpieces will point the way. Each satisfying, cook-free salad is assembled in short order, and each boasts the zesty jalapeno heat of mild, medium or hot Pace Picante Sauce.

SAN ANTONIO SPINACH SALAD

- 4 cups packed torn spinach leaves
- 1 can (15 ounces) black beans, rinsed and drained
- 1 cup sliced mushrooms
- 1 red bell pepper, cut into short, thin strips
- 1 cup thinly sliced small red onion rings
- 1/2 cup Canadian bacon, cut into short, thin strips
- 1/2 cup picante sauce
- 1/2 cup bottled Italian dressing
- 1 teaspoon ground cumin

Hard-cooked eggs, sliced or cut into wedges (optional)

Combine vegetables, beans and bacon in large bowl. Combine picante sauce, dressing and cumin in small bowl; mix well. Pour picante sauce mixture over vegetables; toss lightly to coat with dressing. Garnish with eggs, if desired, and serve with additional picante sauce. Makes 6 servings, about 7 1/2 cups salad.

SPICY-SWEET SHRIMP SALAD

- 1 pound cooked, peeled and deveined shrimp
- 8 ounces fresh pea pods, blanched and halved diagonally (2 cups)
- 1 red bell pepper, cut into short, thin strips
- 1 cup diagonally sliced celery
- 1/2 cup diagonally sliced green onions with tops
- 2/3 cup picante sauce
- 2 tablespoons honey
- 2 tablespoons chopped cilantro (optional)
- 1 tablespoon lemon juice
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- leaf lettuce leaves

Combine shrimp, pea pods, red pepper, celery and green onions in large bowl. Combine remaining ingredients except lettuce in small bowl, mixing well; pour over shrimp mixture and toss well. Chill several hours, tossing lightly several times. Serve on lettuce-lined plates with additional picante sauce. Makes 6 servings, about 6 cups salad.

Bliss baker buffalos his way into cookie hall of fame

By Suzanne Huxhold
Times-News correspondent

BLISS - When John Burk was growing up on his family farm in Kansas, he and his five brothers and sisters were encouraged to learn everything there was to know about living the country life - cattle, machinery, crops, even cooking.

"Dad would take the girls out to do the farm work and Mom would keep the boys in the kitchen for a day," Burk recalled. "They wanted us to have a good, all-around experience."

That experience has paid off. Burk recently won one of 50 coveted spots in a national oatmeal cookie cookbook for his very western buffalo chip cookies, a recipe he swiped (and modified) from one of his brothers' wives.

"If we had a really special recipe, we always tried to share it," Burk said. "So when we went down to my brother's wedding in Texas, his future wife made us all a batch of buffalo chip cookies. We all really loved them. So after the wedding, I asked her for the recipe. I figured if I waited until she was part of the family, she'd be obligated to give it to me."

Burk modified the sister-in-law's recipe by adding raisin bran and whole wheat flour to the more sublime oatmeal, chocolate chips, M & M's, butter and sugar. "To make them a little healthier," Burk joked.

He began cooking up a batch every couple of days to feed to his own brood of six kids. They gobbled up the huge, sweet wafers in nothing flat, Burk said, so he started taking a lip-smacking batch now and again to the dental office in Wendell where his wife, Melanie, worked as a hygienist. They were a big hit there, as well.

"Everybody really seems to enjoy them," said Burk, who, aside from his baking prowess, also puts up about 200 quarts of fruits and vegetables every year and shares

The flood of requests for the recipe (and for more cookies, please) led Burk to believe he had something pretty special baking in his big double ovens in his spacious north-of-Bliss home. So when his mom sent him an ad she saw in a Kansas newspaper for an "Ah, Oatmeal" cookie contest, he jumped at his chance to be in the equivalent of the cookie hall of fame.

"I've been baking since I was a kid, but this is the first big contest I ever won," said Burk, who holds a degree in adolescent psychology and manages a nursery farm near Bliss. "The cookies are pretty unique, so I thought I might have a good chance of winning."

Burk did win, his cookies rising above a pack of more than 5,000 entries from across the United States and Canada, said cookbook author Honey Zisman, who has sponsored a half dozen such contests and authored nine cookbooks on everything from hamburger to cheesecake to an international dessert cookbook in association with UNICEF.

"This was by far the best response we've ever had for a cookie contest," Zisman said

Cookie recipe

Here is John Burk's award-winning cookie recipe. Burk makes large batches in his commercial mixer, but cookie lovers with smaller mixers and smaller households can halve the recipe to fit their needs.

- Mix well until creamy:
 - 4 sticks margarine or butter
 - 2 cups sugar
 - 2 cups brown sugar
 - 4 eggs
 - 2 teaspoons vanilla
- In separate bowl, sift together:
 - 2 1/2 cups all purpose white flour
 - 2 cups whole wheat flour
 - 2 teaspoons baking soda
 - 2 teaspoons baking powder
- Add while mixing to creamed mixture. Then add to flour and butter mixture:
 - 2 cups oatmeal
 - 3 cups raisin bran cereal
 - 2 cups M & M candies
 - 2 cups chocolate chips
 - 1 cup chopped nuts (optional)
 - 1 cup shredded coconut (optional)

Use a 1/2-cup measuring cup or ice cream scoop to dollop dough onto cookie sheet, 4-5 cookies per sheet. Press dough lightly with fingers to flatten. Bake at 350 degrees to desired doneness. (Burk prefers his slightly underdone.) Cool cookies on a rack.

from her office in New Jersey.

After she sifted through the bags full of recipes that came to her door, and counted out the best 200, Zisman said she began baking. "That's the fun part, when the baking and tasting comes," Zisman said. After

Only abstinence is the safest sex

DEAR ABBY: I just read the confidential you wrote to "Needs to Know the Truth in Cleveland." You said, "The only safe sex is NO sex. Trust me."

Well, that is the best, and most accurate advice I have ever heard on that subject. Thank you for telling it like it is.

I am relieved to know that there are still people out there who speak the truth without rationalizing, or trying to justify sinful behavior all in the name of "safe sex."

I hope your statement will send a message to people who engage in sinful behavior, and worse yet, take chances. When are people going to wake up and realize that there is no "safe sex"?

The only answer is NO sex. Say it again, Abby, and say it often.

ANOTHER ABBIGAIL.
ST. PAUL, MINN.

DEAR ABBIGAIL: The statement was made in a literal context, not in a religious or philosophical sense.

Dear Abby
Abigail VanBuren

The woman's question: "If condoms aren't 100 percent safe - what is 100 percent safe?" My answer: Abstinence.

DEAR ABBY: You said, "When an engagement has been broken, the lady should return the ring, or she's no lady."

Sorry, Abby, you are way off base on that one. My engagement was broken two months before my wedding date when I learned that my philandering fiancé got himself into the embarrassing position of becoming a father. I was shocked and totally devastated. Can you imagine how hurt I was when he actually married this bimbo a week after terminating our engagement!

The ring he had given me on the eve of our engagement was a beautiful three-carat solitaire. The house had the nerve to ask me to return it, which of course I refused to do... on the advice of my lawyer. I promptly sold the ring and used the money to buy new bridesmaids for their dresses. I also repaid my parents the money they had deposited for the wedding that never came off.

Then I took a vacation and began a new life of my own. Abby, if by your definition I am no "lady" - so be it. But he certainly is no gentleman!

BETTER OFF: Considering the circumstances, you'll get no argument from me. Pass the crown, please.

DEAR BETTER OFF: I am 25 and I am just about to get married to a man I love very much. I am still a virgin, I am afraid that after he sees my body, he is going to want to get a divorce! I have these ugly stretch marks on my hips and backside.

Do you know of any creams that would work? Is there a plastic surgeon who could fix this? Will it hurt? And how much will it cost?

Here answer quickly, Abby. My wedding is on Aug. 5.

DESPERATE BRIDE-TO-BE IN PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS: DEAR DESPERATE: Calm your fears. If the man proposed without encountering your stretch marks, then you can be certain they will not be of utmost importance to him after he discovers them. I know of no solution to the stretch mark problem. But the magician who finds one is certain to make a fortune.

For everything you need to know about wedding planning, order "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send a business-sized, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 477, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Brandon-Smutny

Cynthia H. Brandon and Jeff D. Smutny

TWIN FALLS: Cynthia H. Brandon of Bellevue, Wash., and Jeff D. Smutny of Moscow, Idaho, announce their engagement.

She is the daughter of Keith and Elizabeth Brandon of Pullman, Wash., and he is the son of Alvin and Joanne Smutny of Twin Falls.

Brandon is a graduate of Pullman High School and is a 1988 graduate of Washington State University with a bachelor's degree in apparel merchandising. She has been employed as an assistant buyer with Lamonts in Bellevue, Wash., and is being transferred to Lamonts in Lewiston.

Smutny is a 1979 graduate of Twin Falls High School and is a senior majoring in mechanical engineering at the University of Idaho in Moscow. He earned with his parents for several years, prior to returning to college.

Letters of thanks

Festival thanks local Schwinn bicycle shop

I wanted to thank George's Valley Schwinn for its participation in the Freedom Festival held at the Centennial Mall recently. It was manning the Head Smart Bicycle Helmet booth, stressing the importance of helmets on children while riding.

Shortly after talking with them, my daughter Emily's bike went out of control. She ended up with skinned elbows and knees and the marquee sign scratches on her helmet. I shudder to think of the outcome had she not talked to the man at the booth and not been wearing her helmet.

Thanks to the man from George's Valley Schwinn.

IF JULY 21 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Current cycle emphasizes marital status, possible addition to family, significant changes, travel, variety of experiences. You possess unique sense of humor, are versatile; restless, have an abundance of intellectual curiosity. You are aware of fashions, styles, trends, are super-sensitive concerning body image. During August, you entertain, are popular, could be involved in controversy relating to show business.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Gift received represents appreciation for recent favors. Focus on creativity, entertainment, domestic adjustment that could include home decoration, remodeling.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Spotlight on real estate, home, building materials, defining terms. You'll be dealing with sensitive individuals, many born under Pisces. If patient, you win. Conversely, you lose if attempting to force matters.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Make this a power play day! Take special care in traffic, express feelings, let others know you are vibrant, alert.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Long-distance communication enables you to broaden horizons. Money that had been withheld could be released in your name. Love relationship requires "immediate" attention. Libra is involved.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Clandestine arrangement proves beneficial. Follow through on hunch, accent intuitive intellect. Adhere to unorthodox procedure.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Review Cancer message. Diversity, accent exploration, intellectual curiosity. You'll win friends, strong allies. Ignore individual who lacks faith, talent. Emphasis on drama, color and showmanship.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You're given free hand where marketing, distribution, rebates are concerned. Spotlight on authority, promotion, production, getting credit long overdue.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Written message contains news eagerly awaited. Leo Moon highlights vast expanse of your mind, spirit. You'll overcome distance, language barriers. Love will dominate spotlight.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Attention revolves around home, security, family, marital status. Lunar position highlights information relating to tax, license requirements, possible inheritance.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): What appeared nebulous would turn out to be "solid gold." Secrets will be revealed; you'll be trusted to keep information off the record. Emphasis on legal agreements, partnership, marital status.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You'll receive benefit of experience from one you admire. Focus on responsibility, display of unique product, talent.

L.M. Boyd
What's what?

Q. Is there any animal that never sleeps?
 A. Presumably not. But the bullfrog is a candidate for consideration. If it sleeps, scientists say, they don't know what.

The right whale has eyebrows, mustache, beard and sideburns. What's missing? Little wire-framed specs maybe.

Ninety percent of the $250,000 face value of counterfeit money cranked out daily in this country reportedly is seized before it hits the street.

"The Devil" was a Lunenburg pub at No. 2 Fleet Street. In the 1780s, when lawyers thereabout took their daily breaks, they posted signs on their doors, "Gone to the Devil." Such had abandoned work for drink or whatever. But the writers who hung out in the Fleet Street pubs wore the lawyers' lunge into the vernacular.

Long before the Spaniards showed up, the Mayans believed in one god, in an afterlife, and in confession.

On jogging, Windon Churchill expressed this opinion: "I get my exercise being a pallbearer for those of my friends who believed in regular running."

Argument continues over the most frequently quoted feminist slogan. Likely candidate for that distinction: "A woman without a man is like a fish without a bicycle."

But a few collectors of palindromes — phrases that spell the same backwards and forwards — have seen this one: "Red rum, sir, is murder."

Enjoy fruits of summer in cobblers

By Jimmy Schmidt
Knight-Ridder News Service

Today's lesson: Summer fruit cobblers are among the best desserts to take advantage of the bounty of berries and stone fruits now in season.

Advantages: Cobblers taste best when made with really ripe, mature fruit and berries, which are most often not the most beautiful or perfect. Cobblers age great with bruised or irregular fruit. They are terrific to handle the surplus of berries and fruits from your yard, garden or local farmer's market.

Tricks of the trade: The first trick is to select the sweetest fruit for your cobbler by tasting it. You can usually get a great deal on blemished or surplus berries and fruits, especially close to closing time at a farmer's market.

The second trick is to bake the fruit with sugar and without the crust, to allow even heat penetration. That will really get the fruit juices flowing and result in a silky, moist texture.

The third is to make sure the pastry or batter does not seal the top of the baking dish. Make sure steam can escape, so that the fruit will cook fully and so that the sauce will develop. If you seal the baking dish with the pastry, the fruit will not cook, the natural sauce will be watery and the simple cobbler will become a complicated disaster.

Fruits that work best: Berries and fruits that are high in moisture content or juice produce the best sauce and overall silky texture. Just about all berries work well, as well as cherries, both sweet and tart and other small moist fruits. Larger stone fruits such as nectarines, peaches and plums are perfect. Apricots and apricot firmer peaches are less sweet and thus produce less sauce.

Preparing your fruit: Berries and small fruit require just a quick rinse under cold water before being mixed with sugar and spices. Stone fruit may be peeled to remove coarse skins that may become even tougher during cooking. Slice or dice your fruit, remove the pit and toss in lemon juice to retard browning before mixing.

Seasoning the cobbler: The real concentration of flavor in a cobbler comes from the fruit, so add your spices and seasonings here. Try citrus rind such as lemon, orange and lime to pick up your fruit flavors. Spices such as ginger, cinnamon, nutmeg and vanilla are a perfect match. Be adventurous with unusual combinations such as green peppercorns, cassia and even herbs to take your cobbler to new heights.

The cooking begins: Place the seasoned fruit into the baking dish and place on the lower rack of the oven to start the process. Cook the fruit until it begins to soften and the juices begin to weep. Gently mix to massage even heat penetration. After the fruit is under way, top with the pastry or batter making sure that it does not touch the sides of the baking dish. Bake until golden brown and cool to room temperature.

Serving suggestions: The intense fruit flavor of the slightly warm or room temperature cobbler is hard to beat just by itself. Serve this delicacy with ice cream or a little whipped cream and you have a masterpiece.

PEACH AND RASPBERRY COBBLER

Serves 6 to 8
6 cups sliced fresh peaches
1 1/2 cups granulated sugar, divided
1 tablespoon orange peel

1/2 teaspoon vanilla extract
1 tablespoon butter
1 pint raspberries, cleaned
2/3 cup mint leaves, picked whole, 6 to 8 reserved for garnish

1/2 cup all-purpose flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
2/3 teaspoon salt
6 tablespoons unsalted butter
1 egg, beaten
1/2 cup butter
4 scoops vanilla ice cream
Confectioners' sugar
Preheat oven to 400 degrees.
In a medium bowl combine peaches, 1 cup sugar, orange peel and vanilla, tossing to combine. Butter a 9-by-9-inch baking dish. Place peach mixture in baking dish. Sprinkle the raspberries and mint through the peaches. Place baking dish in oven for 15 minutes.

Meanwhile, in a large bowl combine flour, remaining 1/2 cup sugar, baking powder and salt. Cut in the unsalted butter until well mixed. In a small bowl combine beaten egg and butter milk. Slowly add to the flour mixture until mixed.

Remove the peaches from oven. Spread the batter across the peaches to cover evenly, making sure that it does not touch the edges of the baking dish. Return the cobbler to the oven and cook until golden, about 30 minutes.

Remove from the oven and place on a cake rack to cool.

Serve the cobbler by cutting into squares and scooping into the center of the serving plates. Scoop the ice cream and position beside the cobbler. Dust with confectioners' sugar. Garnish with mint-pigs-and-scones.

Fatty foods find way into Americans' diets again

By Jay Mathews
The Washington Post

NEW YORK—A dollop of thick, caramel-brown "Tappaccino Cream" ice cream crawled down the side of Julie Epstein's sugar cone until she scooped it up with her tongue. At the Haagen Dazs outlet in midtown Manhattan's AVS Plaza, the 27-year-old New Yorker was savoring a dose of one of the most luscious desserts ever invented.

She is not alone. After years of warnings about the dangers of excess weight and fatty foods, some Americans show signs of sliding back into what many dietitians consider bad habits. Perhaps because of relaxed attitudes toward excess weight, craving brought on by diets or the stress of economic uncertainty, these consumers seem determined to enjoy the richest products of an endlessly inventive food industry no matter what the consequences.

Haagen Dazs's new Extras line of ice creams, with 16 percent to 17 percent butterfat, has increased the company's market share by more than a third in less than a year. Flavors such as Triple Chocolate Oreo, Caramel Cane Explosion and Cookie Dough Dynamo are tugging the stomachs of even health-conscious consumers such as Epstein, who says that their occasional indulgence helps her relax.

And 100 of the 250 McDonald's restaurants in the Washington area are experimenting with the Mega Mac, a high-calorie beef combination that delivers more meat, cheese and sauce than ever before in the fast-food chain.

Supermarket shelves are still full of low- and nonfat products. But industry surveys show the overall demand for diet products is no longer climbing at the 1990 pace, and manufacturers and retailers are looking for reasons to pivot.

Average cholesterol levels have declined 4 percent in 12 years, with measurements less stringent for both years. Doctors noted that the lower cholesterol count also could be affected by increased use of anti-cholesterol medicine and a combination of other factors, such as the fact that the number of people taking cholesterol-lowering drugs has increased from 58 percent in 1983 to 76 percent last year.

Cookie

her panel of experts, made up of family, friends and local gourmands, tasted the buffalo chip cookies, they were convinced the sweets should have a spot in the cookbook, which will be sold in bookstores across the country next spring under the name "The Fifty Best Oatmeal Cookies in the World." The only problem was Burk's rather Western name for the cookies.

"I loved the name buffalo chip cookies," Zisman said. But she added, "The cookbook, as distributed all over the world, and I didn't know if everyone would get the humor in the name. I didn't want anyone to be offended."

Burk laughed. "That's the difference between Western and eastern sensibilities."

Zisman, with Burk's approval, renamed the cookies Oregon Trail bits, a nod to Burk's adopted home and the sequentiveness of the trail that brought thousands of people from the East to the West.

Burk said all the ballyhoo about his winning cookies has come, so far, primarily from his large family. But he's confident that, when the rest of the country gets a load of buffalo chip cookies, they'll agree that his recipe deserves its place in oatmeal cookie history.

IF JULY 21 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY:

Current cycle emphasizes marital status, possible addition to family, significant changes, travel, variety of experiences. You possess unique sense of humor, are versatile, restless, have an abundance of intellectual curiosity. You are aware of fashions, styles, trends, are super-sensitive concerning body image. During August, you entertain, are popular, could be involved in controversy relating to show business.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Gift received represents appreciation for recent favors. Focus on creativity, entertainment, domestic adjustment that could include home decoration, remodeling.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Spotlight on real estate, home building materials, defining terms. You'll be dealing with sensitive individuals, many born under Pisces. If patient, you win. Conversely, you lose if attempting to force matters.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Make this a power play day! Take special care in traffic, express feelings, let others know you are vibrant, alert.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Long-distance communication enables you to broaden horizons. Money that had been withheld could be released in your name. Love relationship requires "immediate" attention. Libra is involved.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Excellent for initiating project, being vulnerable to love. You'll be at right place, circumstances turn in your favor. Wear shades of yellow, gold. Make personal appearance, be emphatic, not lukewarm.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Clandestine arrangement proves beneficial. Follow through on hunch, accept intuitive intellect. Adhere to unorthodox, procedure.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Review Cancer message. Diversity, accent exploration, intellectual curiosity. You'll win friends, strong allies, ignore individual who lacks faith, talent. Emphasis on drama, color and showmanship.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You're given free hand where marketing, distribution, displays are concerned. Spotlight on authority, promotion, promotion, getting credit long overdue.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Written message contains news eagerly awaited. Leo Moon highlights vast expanse of your mind, spirit. You'll overcome distance, language barriers. Love will dominate spotlight.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Attention revolves around Luna, security, family, marital status. Lunar position highlights information relating to law, license requirements, possible inheritance.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): What appeared rebellious could turn out to be "solid gold." Secrets will be revealed, you'll be trusted to keep information off the record. Emphasis on legal status, partnership, marital status.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You'll receive benefit of experience from one you admire. Focus on responsibility, display of unique product, talent.

Sleepless nights with a frog

Q. Is there any animal that never sleeps?

A. Presumably not. But the bullfrog is a candidate for consideration. If it sleeps, scientists say, they don't know when.

The right whale has eyebrows, mustache, beard and sideburns. What's missing? Little wire-framed specs.

Ninety percent of the $250,000 face value of counterfeit money cranked out daily in this country reportedly is seized before it hits the street.

"The Devil" was a London pub at No. 2 Fleet Street. In the 1780s, when lawyers thereabout took their daily breaks, they posted signs on their dogs, "Gone to the Devil." Such had been said, true, about anyone who abandoned work for drink or whatever.

But the writhers who hung out in the Fleet Street pubs wave the lawyers' joke into the vernal air.

Long before the Spaniards showed up, the Mayans believed in one god, in an afterlife, and in confession.

On jogging, Winston Churchill expressed this opinion: "I get my exercise by a pallbearer for those of my friends who believed in regular running."

Argument continues over the most frequently quoted feminist slogan. Likely candidate for that distinction: "A woman without a man is like a fish without a bicycle."

But a few collectors of palindromes — phrases that spell the same backwards and forwards — have seen this one: "Red rum, sir, is murder."

The whale cast Jonah up on the beach about 20 miles south of Beirut. That's what a lot of Lebanese believe.

Food

Enjoy fruits of summer in cobblers

By Jimmy Schmidt
Knight-Ridder News Service

Today's lesson: Summer fruit cobblers are among the best desserts to take advantage of the bounty of berries and stone fruits now in season. Advantages: Cobblers taste better when made with really ripe, mature fruit and berries, which are most often not the most beautiful or perfect. Cobblers are great with bruised or irregular fruit. They are terrific to handle the surplus of berries and fruits from your yard, garden or local farmer's market.

Tricks of the trade: The first trick is to select the sweetest fruit for your cobbler by tasting it. You can usually get a great deal onblemished or surplus berries and fruits, especially close to closing time at a farmer's market.

The second trick is to bake the fruit with sugar and spices without the crust, to allow even heat penetration. That will really get the fruit juices flowing and result in a silky, moist texture.

The third is to make sure the pastry or batter does not seal the top of the baking dish. Make sure steam can escape, so that the fruit will cook fully and so that the sauce will develop. If you seal the baking dish with the pastry, the fruit will not cook, the natural sauce will be watery and the simple cobbler will become a complicated disaster.

Fruits that work best: Berries and fruits that are high in moisture content or juice produce the best sauce and overall silky texture. Just about all berries work well, as well as cherries, both sweet and tart and other small moist fruits. Larger stone fruits such as nectarines, peaches and plums are perfect. Apricots, apples and firm pears are less sweet and moist, and thus produce less sauce.

add Jimmy and more sugar for the best results.

Preparing your fruit: Berries and small fruit require just a quick rinse under cold water before being mixed with sugar and spices. Stone fruit may be peeled to remove coarse skins that may become even tougher during cooking. Slice or dice your fruit, remove the pit and loss in lemon juice to retard browning before mixing.

Seasoning the cobbler: The real concentration of flavor in a cobbler comes from the fruit, so add your spices and seasonings here. Try citrus rind such as lemon, orange and lime to pick up your fruit flavors. Spices such as ginger, cinnamon, nutmeg and vanilla are a perfect match. Be adventurous with unusual combinations such as green peppercorns, cassia and even herbs to take your cobbler to new heights.

The cooking begins: Place the seasoned fruit into the baking dish and place on the lower rack of the oven to start the process. Cook the fruit until it begins to soften and the juices begin to weep. Gently mix to insure even heat penetration. After the fruit is under way, top with the pastry or batter making sure that it does not touch the sides of the baking dish. Bake until golden brown and the juices thicken. Remove to a cake rack and cool to room temperature.

Serving suggestions: The intense fruit flavor of the slightly warm or room-temperature cobbler is hard to beat just by itself. Serve this delicacy with ice cream or a little whipped cream and you have a masterpiece.

PEACH AND RASPBERRY COBBLER

Serves 6 to 8
6 cups sliced fresh peaches
1 1/2 cups granulated sugar, divided
1/4 teaspoon orange peel

1/4 teaspoon vanilla extract
1 tablespoon butter
1 pint raspberries, picked
1/2 cup mint leaves, cleaned whole, 6 to 8 reserved for garnish

1 1/2 cups all-purpose flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
1/2 teaspoon salt
6 tablespoons unsalted butter
1 egg, beaten
1/2 cup buttermilk
4 scoops vanilla ice cream
Confectioners' sugar

Preheat oven to 400 degrees.
In a medium bowl combine peaches, 1 cup sugar, orange peel and vanilla, tossing to combine. Butter a 9-by-9-inch baking dish. Place peach mixture in baking dish. Sprinkle the raspberries and mint through the peaches. Place baking dish in oven for 15 minutes.

Meanwhile, in a large bowl combine flour, remaining 1/2 cup sugar, baking powder and salt. Cut in the unsalted butter until well mixed. In a small bowl combine beaten egg and buttermilk. Slowly add to the flour mixture until mixed.

Remove the peaches from oven. Spread the batter across the peaches to cover evenly, making sure that it does not touch the edges of the baking dish. Return the cobbler to the oven and cook until golden, about 30 minutes.

Remove from the oven and place on a cake rack to cool.

Serve the cobbler by cutting into squares and scooping into the center of the serving plates. Scoop the ice cream and position beside the cobbler. Dust with confectioners' sugar. Garnish with mint sprigs and serve.

Fatty foods find way into Americans' diets again

By Jay Mathews
The Washington Post

NEW YORK — A dollop of thick, caramelized "Cappuccino Cream" ice cream crawled down the side of Julie Epstein's sugar cone until she scooped it up with her tongue. At the Haagen-Dazs outlet in midtown Manhattan's A&S Plaza, the 27-year-old New Yorker was savoring a dose of one of the most fat-laden desserts ever invented.

She is not alone. After years of warnings about the dangers of excess weight and fatty foods, some Americans show signs of sliding back into what many dietitians consider bad habits. Perhaps because of relaxed attitudes toward excess weight, craving brought on by diets or the stress of economic uncertainty, these consumers seem determined to enjoy the richest products of an endlessly inventive food industry, no matter what the consequences.

Haagen-Dazs' new Extras line of ice creams, with 16 percent to 17 percent butterfat, has increased the company's market share by more than a third in less than a year. Flavors, such as Triple Brownie Overload, Caramel Core Explosion and Cookie Dough Dynamo are filling the stomachs of even health-conscious consumers such as Epstein who eat their occasional indulgence to pack a wallop.

And 100 of the 250 McDonald's restaurants in the Washington area are experimenting with the Mega Mac, a half-pound beef concoction that delivers more meat, cheese and sauce than ever seen in the national chain.

Supermarket shelves are still full of low- and nonfat products. But industry surveys show the overall demand for diet products is no longer climbing at its 1980s pace, and nutrition experts say there is reason for concern.

Average cholesterol levels have declined 10 percent in 12 years, with measurements too infrequent to catch any recent uptick. Doctors noted that the lower cholesterol counts also could be affected by increased use of anti-cholesterol medicine and emphasized that most Americans still do not limit their eating habits, and still suffer too many gains before they show results.

Opinion polls indicate a significant change in national attitude about body type. A survey by the NPD Group, a market research company in Port Washington, N.Y., reveals a steady decline in the portion of Americans who say overweight people are unattractive from 55 percent in 1985 to 36 percent last year.

Cookie

her panel of experts, made up of family, friends and local gourmets, tasted the buffalo chip cookies, they were convinced the sweets should have a spot in the cookbook; which will be sold in bookstores across the country next spring under the name "The Fifty Best Omealed Cookies in the World."

"The only problem was Burk's rather western name for the cookies."

"I loved the name buffalo chip cookies," Zisman said. But, she added, "The cookbooks are distributed all over the world, and I didn't know if everyone would get the humor in the name. I didn't want anyone to be offended."

Burk laughed. "That's the difference between western and eastern sensibilities."

Zisman, with Burk's approval, renamed the cookies Oregon Trail bits, a nod to Burk's adopted home and the bicentennial of the trail that brought thousands of people from the East to the West.

Burk said all the ballyhoo about his winning cookies has come, so far, primarily from his large family. But he's confident that, when the rest of the country gets a load of buffalo chip cookies, they'll agree that his recipe deserves its place in national cookie history.

Before you cram that Coleman, brush up on cooler cuisine

By Charlotte Balcomb Lane
Orlando Sentinel

Vacation-starved travelers packing munchies in the cooler for their spring or summer road trips might be tempted to load in everything but the kitchen sink. But before you start cramming the Coleman, veteran traveler Janet Greene, an expert on the finer points of cooler cuisine, has a little advice:

Skip the bananas. After two days smelling them in a cooler, where they're getting progressively more bruised and squishy, nobody in the car will eat them. You may end up pitching the fruit in a rest-stop trash bin just to get it out of the car.

The hamlet lesson is just one pearl of "ice chest-management" wisdom dispensed by Greene, author of "Cooking Aboard Your RV" (Ragged Mountain Press/McGraw-Hill, 1993) for long-road-trippers and "Cooking on the Go" (Hearst Marine Books, 1980) for sailors. Here are some others.

Do eat fruit, Greene said. It's flavorful, nutritious and usually appeals to road-weary palates. Plus, fruit doesn't spoil quickly, and if it does, it usually won't pose a health or safety hazard unless it's mixed with chicken, fish or egg products.

But don't pack fruit that crushes easily or has lots of stems, seeds or peels that will need to be discarded. Greene advises that fruit should be peeled, washed and otherwise made ready-to-eat before it's put in the car. For example, if your family likes melon or apples peeled, pare and slice the fruit in advance and store it in individual, self-sealing plastic bags. Ditto for oranges, tangerines or grapefruit. Be sure to pack a clean, damp washcloth in a separate bag for wiping fingers or faces.

Dried fruit, such as raisins, apricots, prunes or cherries, is a good alternative to fresh fruit. Juicy, canned fruit in natural juice and individual servings of a low-sugar fruit cocktail are other sensible choices. Greene suggests buying fruit juices in individual square boxes that pack neatly into the bottom of a cooler.

Practicality, palatability and safety are the three top concerns for dining in a car seat. Sandwiches are an excellent choice, as are ready-made meat, chicken, tuna or pasta salads. Pack sandwiches in individual plastic bags; if you have small children who can't finish a whole sandwich, bag both halves separately for two meals.

The old standby, a peanut butter sandwich, is a another practical food for car trips for travelers who like to nibble rather than eat a meal, dips and ready-to-eat vegetables like carrot sticks, celery and cauliflower are good.

Be practical. Spaghetti with red sauce may be delicious, but it isn't sensible to dish up in the back seat. Neither is cold fried chicken, hot soup, barbecued beef or ribs, sloppy Joes or pizza sandwiches—all of which are likely to create mess.

Avoid foods that require complicated assembly, such as Dagwood sandwiches or cheese-and-cold-cut plates.

Foods made with raw onions, lots of garlic, smoked fish, cucumbers or hard-boiled eggs aren't good travel companions because they become stronger tasting the longer they sit. Some foods might also become objectionable to other passengers, such as liver-wurst, sardines, smelly cheeses or sauerkraut.

And don't pack any raw meat, chicken, fish, shellfish or eggs in your cooler, unless you plan to stop in a few hours and cook it. Don't pack hot food in a cooler along with cold items, because mixing the two will create a warm environment perfect for bacterial growth. Don't consume any food you suspect may be spoiled.

Minivan or sport-utility drivers or anyone with room to spare may want to consider investing about $100 in a 30- to 40-quart thermoelectric cooler that will plug into the automobile's cigarette lighter. These ingenious devices act like portable refrigerators and consistently keep food cold without ice.

Greene also suggests that travelers avoid putting cold food in hot coolers. "It's not going to do you much good to put ice in the cooler if it's hot from being stored in the attic," Greene said.

Before leaving home, travelers should thoroughly chill the cooler with extra, "sacrificial" ice, she said.

As far as Greene is concerned, there isn't much chilling difference between real ice and the frozen blocks made from chemical substances. Both will melt evenly and must be refreshed periodically. The biggest difference is that when ice melts it can turn the contents of your cooler into a soggy mess.

If you're using ice, avoid soaked sandwiches and pulpy poundcake by packing them in square or rectangular waterproof containers or self-sealing plastic bags. Packing ready-to-eat frozen foods also keeps the ice chest cold—when it thaws, you can eat the food.

Jim Reid, a spokesman for the Coleman Co. in Wichita, Kan., makers of coolers and insulated beverage containers, suggested freezing water or reconstituted juice in clean milk jugs or cartons to keep things cool. Solid blocks of frozen liquids last longer than crushed ice, and as they melt, they provide a source of fresh beverages.

If you're on the road for more than 24 hours, buy new bags of real ice every day to make sure the cooler and its contents stay cool. It also may be a good idea to buy an inexpensive refrigerator thermometer to monitor the temperature inside the ice chest, especially if you're packing baby formula or other highly perishable items. While the temperature inside your vacation cooler should never rise above 45 F.

And here's how to keep your cooler cool: For trips of several days duration, pack two coolers. Pack one for drinks and snacks that will be easily accessible to auto passengers. Pack another with food and perishables that will stay efficient and inaccessible except at meal times.

For most efficient cooling, keep the cooler full or nearly full. Pack the cooler in chronological order, with foods that are to be consumed last near the bottom and foods that are to be consumed first near the top.

Don't allow a cooler to sit in direct sunlight. Pack suitcases or sleeping bags around the cooler to help insulate the contents. Clean coolers after the trip with a non-abrasive floor cleaner or a mild bleach-and-water solution. To keep cooler smelling fresh between trips, apply a drop of vanilla extract or lemon zest to a paper towel and leave in cooler.

By Stephanie Reents
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS Karen Schoepflin Hagen sleeps about three hours a night. The rest of the night, she's quilting. "It's a fever," she said. "I'm trying to train my body that quilting is as restful as sleep."

Hagen started quilting in 1975. Since then, she's designed and constructed more than 50 quilts. Whimsical, colorful and intricate, each quilt is a testament to Hagen's careful skill and inspiring creativity.

Some of the quilts are based upon traditional designs, but most are "haunting ideas of her own."

After she sold her first five quilts, Hagen decided to keep the rest of her collection together and share them with as many people as possible.

To this end, she has taken her quilts on the road in a show called "One Quilter's Quilts."

It's set for 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. today through Friday at the Magic Valley Adventist School, 131 Grandview Drive. Admission is $2.

Karen Schoepflin Hagen has constructed more than 50 quilts since she took up quilting in 1975.

"If I could," Hagen said, "I quilt all day and quilt all night; would quit all my jobs so I could. I'd never be tired of quilting."

More men take up quilting

By Darryl E. Owens
Orlando Sentinel

When he was growing up, it wasn't unusual for the women in Robert Williams' household to pounce on a pile of weathered clothes and mismatched fabric swatches, armed with needle and thread.

Once the stitching stopped, Williams often had a new quilt to warm his bones on chilly nights.

Little has changed over the years. Orange polka dots, raspberry paisley swirls and multicolored diamond swatches lay strewn across the floor in a colorful, if disorderly, mound.

But now, it's Williams seated at the bench of his Singer sewing machine, mating a powder-blue swirl with a white patchwork yellow patch, then bonding them in matrimony with a cross-stitch. The coupling continues. A stitch here. A patch there.

Quilting has long been sewn into the fabric of America, but for the most part, women have done the stitching. Williams is one of a small but growing number of men who have taken up the patchworking folk art.

"I thought it was hard," said Williams, 68, a retired construction supervisor, in his home west of downtown Orlando. But "I enjoy sitting at that machine. It gives me peace of mind."

Williams, along with his wife, Dorothy, has completed some 30 quilts since taking up the hobby about two years ago during the Persian Gulf War.

It was something to do "instead of sitting around just holding hands," quipped Dorothy, 65, adding that quilting afforded them a pleasant diversion from television coverage of the war.

Of the thousands of Americans who quilt, about 90 percent are women, said Meredith Schroeder, president of the 70,000-member-strong American Quilter's Society, in Paducah, Ky.

"There aren't very many men involved," she said. "I think more and more are going to get involved. We're glad to have the men."

These days, seeing men at quilting shows isn't so peculiar, said Judy Wyldte of the Orange Belt Quilt

Club in Dunedin, who often sees several men at each of the five fairs she attends annually.

"I don't think it's unusual," she said. "Some of the best tailors in the world are men."

Quilting offers men another outlet for their creative energies. The tactile appeal of the medium and the colorful shapes is appealing to many men, quilters say.

And for those who've gotten past the perception that quilting is women's sport, it's a chance to do with needle, thread and cloth what others do with brush, oils and canvas—create a masterpiece.

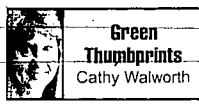

Savor summer scents with potpourri

Grandmother used potpourri, a mixture of dried flower petals and buds to perfume molly, damp rooms. We don't need to add scent to modern homes anymore. We just want to.

Potpourri can be moist or dry. The dry variety is more familiar to most of us, but the moist variety has a longer lasting and stronger scent. Both are made with: 1) dried flowers, petals and buds, which form the basic scent and the bulk of the blend; 2) a fixative; 3) fragrances derived from other flowers, herbs, spices or fruits and 4) essential oils.

The basic ingredient in most potpourri is rose or other flower petals and buds. Experiment with mint leaves, scented geraniums, hay or rosemary. Since potpourri is often displayed in glass jars or bowls, you may want to use flowers that are pretty but have no fragrance of their own.

To dry petals, cut newly opened flowers (not wet with rain or dew) in the morning when their fragrance is highest. After removing the petals from the stem, put them in a cool, dry place out of direct sunlight. Spread them out in a single layer on a window screen or rack set up so air can circulate on all sides.

Petal for moist potpourri are dried until limp, which takes a few days. Dry potpourri requires that petals are dried until crisp, which takes several days to several weeks. When dry, place in a jar or plastic bag.

Make dry potpourri with one quart (4 ounces) of dried rose petals to each ounce of chopped or cut (not powdered) fixative, such as citrus rind, stems, benzoin or patchouli. One quart of dried rose petals probably started as at least two quarts of fresh petals.

After the petals and fixative are mixed, add whatever secondary scent you like, such as spices, herbs or dried fruit peels, at the rate of one ounce per quart of petals. Mix them in a glass or plastic container (not metal), and stir it all up with your fingers or a wooden spoon. Three-drops-of-essential-oil-per-quart will finish the recipe. Choose an oil that is floral, fruity, woody, spicy or minty, depending on your preferences.

Leave the potpourri in a cool, dark place until it has lost the raw, multi-scented aroma and becomes a smooth, pleasant blend. If the fragrance fades after a while, add a few more drops of oil.

To make moist potpourri, alternate one-inch layers of limp petals in a non-metallic container with one tablespoon of non-iodized salt, which is the fixative. After that has cured for several weeks, add the secondary scents and essential oils, and cure the mix for another month under a weighted plate. If a moist potpourri dries out, add a few drops of brandy to restore it.

When the potpourri is ready, put it in baskets, sachets or glass containers, but keep it out of direct sun. Open the container to fill the room with the fragrance of summer.

Rostenkowski brushes aside scandal questions

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Dan Rostenkowski brushed aside fresh questions about his role in the House Post Office scandal on Tuesday, and House Speaker Thomas Foley cautioned against leaping to "totally unjustified" conclusions about the powerful Illinois lawmaker.

Even so, Foley, D-Wash., conceded he was "obviously surprised" by claims made by former House Postmaster Robert V. Rota, who said in a plea bargain agreement on Monday that he had willingly helped unnamed lawmakers embezzle funds from the post office for 20 years.

Rota named no names, but court documents, when matched with House records, suggested Rostenkowski was "Congressman A."

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, left, talks to Sen. Daniel Moynihan during a Senate hearing Tuesday. Rostenkowski's role in the House Post Office scandal was questioned.

By the scandal, he wasn't showing it.

When one senator suggested the energy tax passed by the House but rejected by the Senate was effectively dead, he had a ready reply: "I don't know by what stretch of the imagination the gentleman suggests the Bill tax is dead. It's still part of the bill passed by the House."

As chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, Rostenkowski is House point man in the talks.

President Clinton and the Senate's lead negotiator, Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., had similar responses when asked whether Rostenkowski's problems would affect efforts to craft a bill.

"No," Clinton said. "We've got a lot of work to do. Chairman Rostenkowski's done a great job with this budget so far, and we've worked very closely together. And we're going to work today. I don't know anything about the rest of it."

Moynihan added: "Not one bit. Not the least bit. His status hasn't changed."

Foley's daily news conference was convened with the subject of Rostenkowski.

"There is no information from the Justice Department, from any source, that indicates that any member of Congress is about to be indicted," Foley said.

House Democratic caucus rules require that any committee chairman step aside if indicted on felony charges.

Foley said he was "obviously surprised by the extent" of Rota's claims, called the statements "deeply distressing," and expressed a "deep concern that public confidence in the House needs to be strengthened, not ... further eroded."

Foley stressed that the House Post Office has been placed under control of a former U.S.

Postal Service executive, Michael Shiny, adding, "All the procedures that led to the statement yesterday have been totally and radically altered."

Rota pleaded guilty Monday to conspiracy and embezzlement charges, and admitted scheming with unnamed lawmakers to provide them with cash from embezzled House Post Office funds.

Court papers filed in the case listed 19 specific transactions in which $21,300 in allegedly embezzled money was given to a Congressman A and $9,300 to a Congressman B.

Through comparing transaction records in court papers with those in public House reports, the dates, amounts and description of goods indicated that Rostenkowski was Congressman A and former Rep. Joseph Kolter, D-Pa., was Congressman B.

Both have denied wrongdoing in the past. Attempts to reach Kolter in Pennsylvania and the Washington, D.C. area Monday and Tuesday were unsuccessful.

The post office is a contract agency of the postal service, staffed solely by House employees.

Rota admitted that he schemed with Congressman A and Congressman B to get them personal cash — sometimes when they submitted official vouchers for stamps; and on other occasions when they turned in stamps, already bought with official vouchers.

The court papers in the Rota case show that Congressman A — Rostenkowski, according to the matchups — submitted stamp vouchers for $1,100, $900, $2,000, $1,200, $2,100, $1,400, $2,800, $2,000, $1,500, $2,300, $2,000 and $2,000.

The first voucher was submitted on May 1, 1985, and the last on April 17, 1991, about the time that federal investigators began probing the post office.

LEGAL NOTICE

ADVERTISMENT FOR PREQUALIFICATION TO BID

The South Central Region E911 is proposing to construct a new building in Jerome, Idaho. Working drawings and specifications are currently being finalized for the building and all associated site development. The building will be approximately 4,500 square feet with attic mechanical space and covered outside areas. Site development will include fencing, paving, landscape and site utilities. The construction is anticipated to consist of slab on grade, concrete block exterior walls and steel frame roof structure with metal roofing. Glazing will include thermopane windows, glass block and translucent fiberglass wall panels. Interior finishes will include painted gypsum board, cement wall panels, carpet, carpet tiles, sheet vinyl, sealed concrete, floor coatings and glue up tile. Specialty items include computer flooring, generators and ups power system. The building's mechanical and electrical systems are completely sophisticated compared to other buildings in this size. Prequalification applications are being distributed upon request. Only general contractors who have submitted the prequalification form and have been accepted as prequalified on this project will be allowed to bid for the construction of the project. Subcontractors are not required to be prequalified. Prequalification forms may be obtained from Al Sandnor, P.O. Box 237 North Lincoln of the South Central Region E911, Jerome, Idaho 83338; telephone number (208) 324-1344.

Prequalification applications must be returned no later than 5:00 p.m. local time, 8 August 1993. Contractors who are prequalified will be notified as soon as possible but no later than 5:00 p.m., 10 August, 1993. Construction Document Packages will be available on 28 July 1993. Construction bids will be opened at Al Sandnor's office at 2:37 North Lincoln, Jerome, Idaho, on August 11, 1993.

NOTICE OF APPLICATION FOR MERGER

Lincoln, Jerome, Idaho. Construction is anticipated to begin immediately upon the signing of a contract, which is anticipated to be on or about August 17, 1993, with the lowest responsible bid. Final completion for the project will be required by 17 December 1993. To be prequalified the general contractor must be evaluated but a minimum requirement is the successful completion of a minimum of 10 building contracts of no less than $1,000,000 in the last five years. In writing, to the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco, 101 Market St., San Francisco, CA 94105. The comment period will not end before July 30, 1993, and may be longer. THE ACES ON BRIDGE BOBBY WOLFF
"Like our shadows,
Our wishes lengthen as our sun declines."
- Edward Young.
Today's West aimed his shot in the right direction but he set his sights too high. East didn't have to hold as much as West had visualized.
West started with the club king and saw back prospects after dummy's singleton appeared. Seeing little hope unless East held either the trump king or the diamond king, West wished for a little more. If East also held the doubleton 10-10 in hearts, a heart shift at trick two would be the killing lead. So a low heart was led at trick two.
South guessed correctly and let this ride to his Jack (Q-x in the East hand would have proved fatal), trumps were drawn and South held his losers to only one heart, one diamond and one club.
Hoping for both the jack and the 10 of hearts was too much. A wish for either one would do. At trick two, the winning play is to lead the queen of hearts. Dummy's king wins but East avertly jettisons his 10. Later, when South's diamond fit heart and West is able to score both his ace and his nine to beat the game one trick.
When one must wish for something, it's best to wish for the minimum needed to get the job done.
