Critics jab at Somalia policy

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Administration officials defended their strategy in Somalia Sunday against criticism that it is ill-conceived and ill-planned, while lawmakers took President Clinton to task for his overall foreign policy and argued against a scheduled deployment of U.S. soldiers to Haiti today.

The administration, which once believed it possible to help Somalia build a stable government, "is no longer signed over that goal." Instead, he said on NBC's "Meet the Press," President Clinton has decided to limit the U.S. goal to helping the United Nations restore order and is trying, through U.S. special envoy Robert B. Oakley, to turn over any political nation-building to nearby African nations.

Secretary of State Warren Christopher acknowledged that to help the Somalis and help the adjacent country leaders to find a sound, political solution," he said. Clinton announced he would send 1,700 more combat troops to Somalia and station an additional 3,600 Marines offshore but pledged to pull all but a few hundred support personnel out by March 31. The decision followed a fierce battle four days earlier in which at least 15 Americans died and 75 were injured.

Since then, congressional criticism has mounted over Clinton's handling of Somalia and over the extent to which U.S. foreign policy — and U.S. troop deployment — in Somalia and elsewhere should be guided by decisions made at the United Nations. Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., Sunday said he believed a proposal by Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., to cut off money for the Somalia operation later this year "stands a reasonable chance of passing."

"This is not a problem of execution of policy. This is a problem of formulation of policy. And the policy formulation was ill-conceived and it was open-ended and it was poorly planned," Bradley said. "And that is why we are in this fix now... in this case, through a series of ad hoc decisions, we find ourselves in this predicament." Senate Minority Leader Robert

Salvage crews scramble to prevent fuel spill following tanker explosion

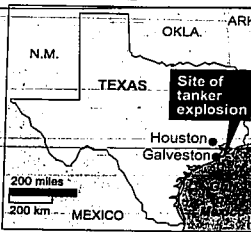

The Associated Press

GALVESTON, Texas — Salvage crews scrambled Sunday aboard a gasoline tanker ripped open by an explosion that peeled back part of the deck "like a sardine can." Three people were believed killed.

The Coast Guard strung containment booms in case of a possible fuel spill from the damaged OMI Charger, which was carrying no cargo but held 365,000 gallons of fuel.

"There is a potential for a major spill," said Capt. Paul Prokop, commander of the Coast Guard station at Galveston. The Houston Ship channel, one of the world's busiest waterways, was closed part of the day because officials feared ship wakes could endanger the tanker. Officials later allowed restricted use of the channel, which serves the Houston petrochemical industry.

Coast Guard officials said they were convinced none of the fuel had spilled from the 660-foot ship. It was partially afloat in about 40 feet of water. Crews planned to remove the fuel and booms were set as a precaution around the ship and along wetlands on the Galveston shoreline, about 50 miles southeast of Houston.

Witnesses said the ship was hit by two explosions Saturday. The first blast around 8 p.m. was felt more than four miles away while a less intense explosion occurred about an hour later. The fire burned out of control for some 50 hours.

Two men were confirmed killed and one other was missing and presumed dead. Three of the 35 crew members remained hospitalized Sunday, one in serious condition. About a dozen others were treated and released.

The blasts opened a gaping hole along the left side of the ship, exposing its interior. Pipelines on the deck were twisted like blackened spaghetti.

Part of the main deck was "peeled back like a sardine can," said Coast Guard Cmdr. Roger Peoples, who flew over the wreck Sunday. The ship's stern had sunk to the channel bottom and it listed to port, but Peoples said it was in no danger of sinking.

Twenty-seven crew members were rescued from the burning ship minutes after the blast by the crew of a passing oil rig supply boat.

But Allen LeBlanc, the 54-year-old captain of the supply boat, said he and his crew are no heroes, only a bunch of Cajuns who did the right thing.

"You try to help the other guy, 'cause you never know. One day it might be you."

Mexico hopes NAFTA will stem tide of emigrants

The Associated Press

PUACUARO, Mexico — Celso Ascencio is unusual. He hasn't left town for the United States.

Most men from this Purepecha Indian village have headed north in search of the jobs and money Mexico cannot provide. Ascencio remains behind with the village children, who play noisily in the dirt streets outside his home and furniture workshop.

Towns like Puacuario, in west-central Mexico, are the source of a human river that is transforming the United States. It has carried tens of millions of people across the border in the past 50 years, and demographers say Latinos soon may be the largest U.S. ethnic minority.

NAFTA

Supporters of the North American Free Trade Agreement say it will help curb that flow by luring investment to Mexico.

"We want to export goods and not people," President Carlos Salinas de Gortari told U.S. businessmen in San Francisco last month. Ascencio is a modest example of those hopes.

"I have a source of work. There's no need to go," said the 30-year-old carpenter, who employs six people in the shop at the back of his house.

"All the furniture made here is for the United States," he said, showing off the tables and chairs he sells to a New Orleans store.

"Illegal immigration has so alarmed California that a liberal senator proposes posting U.S. troops on the border. The state's governor has recommended abandoning a historic principle of U.S. law: that those born in America are Americans."

"Denying citizenship to children of illegal aliens isn't going to solve your problem," said Douglas Massey of the University of Chicago, who has studied Mexican migration for more than a decade. "Most Mexicans aren't motivated by citizenship. They're motivated by employment."

Unlike most men in Puacuario, Celso Ascencio chose to stay and build a furniture business in the west central Mexico town. U.S. jobs and money lure Mexicans north.

Twin Falls, Burley, Rupert, Jerome and Gooding: Partly cloudy with light winds tonight. Highs 65 to 75. Tonight and Tuesday mostly cloudy with a slight chance of showers. Lows near 40. Highs 65 to 75.
Camas Prairie and Wood River Valley: Partly cloudy today with high near 60. Tonight and Tuesday mostly cloudy with a slight chance of showers. Lows 30 to 35. Highs in the 60s.
Extended forecast: Southern Idaho - Wednesday through Friday partly cloudy. A slight chance of mountain showers. In the east lows in the 30s with highs in the 50s and lower 60s. In the west lows in the 30s and lower 40s. Highs mostly 60s.
Northern Utah: Mostly cloudy today with widely scattered afternoon showers or thunderstorms. South winds 10 to 20 mph with gusty winds near thunderstorms. Highs near 70. Scattered showers and a few thunderstorms tonight. Lows in the 40s. Tuesday variable clouds with a chance of showers. Highs 65-70.

Weather summary
Most of Idaho was sunny late Sunday morning. However, a light blanket of mid and high level clouds spread into the southwestern part of the state from Oregon and Nevada. There were also a few areas of patchy valley fog and low clouds lingering across parts of eastern and northern Idaho.
The highest temperature in the Sunday was 74 degrees at Biggsman. Fairfield reported the lowest at 18 degrees.
Elsewhere in the nation Sunday, the highest temperature was 97 degrees at Lake Havasu City, Ariz., and Sheridan, Wyo., reported the lowest temperature at 15 degrees.

Cold covers central states, Northeast; rain heads onto West
The Associated Press
Temperatures dipped to record lows across the center of the nation Sunday, and a new storm system spread rain onto the West Coast.
Temperatures fell to and below the freezing point across the central Plains, the middle Mississippi Valley and much of the Great Lakes region.
Record lows were 34 at Amarillo, Texas; 30 at Dodge City, Kan.; 29 in Fort Wayne, Ind.; and 30 at Kansas City, Mo.
Temperatures also remained low across much of the northern Rockies, the northern Plains and the upper Mississippi Valley, dipping into the 20s at many locations.
Sunday morning's low for the Lower 48 states was 18 at Sheridan, Wyo.
Scattered showers spread from the Missouri Valley into the central Plains.
Freezing temperatures were expected during the night into Monday morning from the upper Ohio Valley into New England, the National Weather Service said. Frost and freeze warnings were posted across Ohio, West Virginia, much of southern Pennsylvania, New Jersey, southeastern New York, Connecticut, Rhode Island and Massachusetts.
In the West, a storm system approaching the West Coast spread clouds from the northern Pacific Coast into the Great Basin.
Showers were scattered across northern California and southwestern Oregon.
Warm, humid weather continued across the Florida Peninsula and coastal sections of Georgia and South Carolina, with temperatures ranging from the lower 80s to around 90 and a few widely scattered thunderstorms over Florida.
Augusta, Ga., warmed to a record 85 degrees.

J. Dole, R-Kan., who has been more supportive of Clinton's Somalia policy than many Democrats, predicted the vote would make "it clear how Congress feels about having our troops under another command."
"And the answer is, if we're going to have the casualties and we're going to do all the hard work, then they ought to be commanded by Americans," he said.
The ongoing concern over the changing U.S. role in the world was made more immediate by today's scheduled arrival of several hundred lightly armed U.S. soldiers in Haiti.
"This is another area where we need to avoid any ill-effects and say it's time for us to be fully briefed. Congress needs to be brought in on the action here," said Senate Armed Services Committee Chairman Sam Nunn, D-Ga. "It could be a very dangerous situation for our military."
Asked to comment on continued U.S. participation in U.N. peacekeeping missions, given the problems in Somalia, Dole replied: "I wouldn't be sending anybody to Haiti. My view is that this probably precludes any participation in Bosnia... and we ought to bring what few people we have in Haiti back home and not send any more."

Responding to concerns about troop vulnerability in Haiti, Defense Secretary Les Aspin, on ABC's "This Week With David Brinkley," said: "They will be armed to protect their own lives and their own safety. They are not armed sufficiently in order to do a peace-keeping job."
About half the 600 U.S. soldiers being sent to Haiti should arrive today and Tuesday. Most are military engineers and trainers who will implement a U.N. truce agreement that calls for Haiti's military rulers to resign by Oct. 15 and to re-elect the president the military deposed two years ago, Jean-Bertrand Aristide. Recent violence and threats of noncooperation by the military there have caused concern in the Pentagon and elsewhere.
On Somalia, Christopher acknowledged that the United States might have underestimated the consequences of supporting the U.N.

So-the-big-battles-that-loom-in-volve how heavy a hand the government should have in regulation; how to persuade people to consider limits in doctor choice; and determining how to cover everyone—the big question.
Clinton's plan is built on the employer-employee system under which most people are currently insured. The president would compel all employers to pay 80 percent of their workers' costs. The other alternatives don't go this route, partly out of fear that it would drive small employers out of business.
Instead, plans by Rep. Jim Cooper, a conservative Democrat from Tennessee who led last week's middle-ground coalition, and the Senate GOP are designed to make it more affordable to small businesses and individuals to buy insurance. They could band together in purchasing pools to bring rates down.

While Clinton's plan would cover everyone by having the government pay for the poor's insurance, Cooper's would provide subsidies to the poor on a sliding scale, for those who earn up to 200 percent of the poverty level.
Cooper's plan would require about $125 billion in new money over five years; Clinton's plan would take $350 billion. Critics of Cooper's plan say it leaves 25 million people uninsured.

Froilan Bautista, 30, said he had never held a job in Mexico.
"There's no work here," he said, leaning against a post outside his mother's grocery a few blocks from Ascencio's house in the lakeside fishing town.
Bautista said he had papers to work legally in the United States, but was spending a year at home after a decade of farm-jobs in California, Colorado and North Carolina.
"I had been here a long time," said, "I wanted to be a while." Money sent from the United States has planted concrete block homes amid the old adobe of Pacuaro, and paid for pickup trucks that rattle down its rutted streets.
It also helps support farms and businesses.
"I send money to my father here to buy fertilizer, insecticide," Bautista said. His father has a 2-acre plot of rice, corn and wheat.
"To buy fertilizer, you have to go to the United States," Trinidad Rodriguez said, half-jokingly.
Rodriguez, who has 20 acres in Arico de Rosales, 25 miles south of Pacuaro, was a construction worker in Los Angeles three years ago and still has three brothers in the United States.
"It was an adventure," he said, but added, like most others, that he prefers his home: "I want to be with my family."
"You feel very alone" in the United States, said Manuel Rodriguez, another farmer in Arico. "Because it is not your land, you feel lonely."

Antonio Sario said he had four children north of the border, but "if they had work, even if it paid even less, they would stay here."
Massey, of the University of Chicago, estimated that 12.2 million Mexicans crossed the border from 1985 to 1989 but only about 1.5 million stayed.
It is not uncommon in the Pacuaro area to find U.S. citizens who have returned to Mexico after a lifetime of work, or trucks with U.S. Marine Corps bumper stickers.
"Millions of Mexicans now have family and friends in the United States. Many, like Bautista, took advantage of the 1986 Immigration Reform and Control Act, which allowed illegal workers to obtain legal documents."
"There's a whole structure to receive them, to find them work, to obtain false documents," said Sergio Zendejas, a migration expert at the Colegio de Michoacan, a graduate school in Zamora, 45 miles northwest of Pacuaro.
"Migration won't stop automatically with NAFTA—unless there's a clear process toward higher incomes in Mexico, and even if you get that, it's going to take several generations to start seeing a clear reduction."
"You have the social factor. You have the cultural factor: You migrate

Bridge wrecks seen as a 'wake-up' call on safety issues

The Washington Post

NEW ORLEANS — The most battered bridge in America appears to be a draw span that carries the Southern Pacific Railroad mainline over the Atchafalaya River near here and is on the route of Amtrak's Sunset Limited.

Barges have rammed the 1,328-foot bridge hundreds of times since it was built in 1908. By the time a heavy-duty protective system was installed in 1978, much of the battered span had been replaced.

The deadly wreck last month of the Sunset Limited at a poorly protected bridge in Saraland, Ala., has focused official attention on one of the country's more overlooked safety issues.

Hundreds of times a year, barges and ships strike highway and railroad bridges, causing millions of dollars in damage and sometimes killing people.

Nationwide, an estimated 10,000 bridges cross navigable waterways; 130 are large spans over major ship channels. Statistics suggest commercial river traffic will strike many of these spans, sometimes repeatedly.

In 1990, the last year for which statistics are available, the Coast Guard recorded 196 major collisions with bridges. Officials estimate that as many as 35 less intense strikes and bumps occur every day.

Concern about such incidents was apparent last week when the National Transportation Safety Board met there to discuss the collapse last May 28 of approach spans to the Judge Seaber Bridge over a canal. One motorist died and two were injured.

The accident occurred after a towboat captain pushed a barge against the bank while awaiting clearance to enter a lock and left the engine running while he went below deck. The tow broke loose and rammed the bridge.

Discussion also turned to the Atchafalaya River bridge, which is more typical of certain spans that seem to bear a "hit me" sign.

In some cases, these vulnerable bridges were built above tricky currents. Some are too narrow to give vessels room for error. Some are in areas prone to fog or violent weather.

Many are poorly protected with fenders and deflection devices. Coast Guard Capt. Chris Desmond of the port at Morgan City, La., said navigating the Atchafalaya bridge requires skill, because barges must negotiate a tight turn after passing under two highway bridges and the railroad bridge.

Officials monitor the bridge on closed-circuit television and often know well in advance that a barge is not going to make it, he said. "We turn the VCR on," he said. "We have recorded most of our bridge hits."

Sixteen bridge hits have occurred during this year, mostly in the high-water winter months, Desmond said. The length of tows was limited last winter in an effort to prevent such incidents.

"We take it personally when we have bridge hits," he said. "Hundreds of highway bridges also are vulnerable. F. William Conway, bridge engineer for the Alabama Department of Transportation, said the Warrior River has suffered so much damage it no longer can bear its designated load."

Blaming river pilots is difficult, Conway said, because they must queue 105-foot-wide tows through a 150-foot space between bridge piers. "It would take a magician to get through there without touching it," he said.

No one has been killed in marine collisions at the Atchafalaya and Black Warrior bridges. That may be why most collisions like these and the problems that lead to them have not attracted much public attention.

Gluing wounds?

Doctors calls natural adhesive suture of future

MARIETTA, Ga. (AP) — Imagine the surgeon at work — demanding scalpel, forceps ... and a spray bottle of glue?

That's no longer such a far-fetched scenario. Little vials of freeze-dried body glue are already for sale in Europe.

Researchers say the natural adhesive — made from the blood proteins that cause clotting and scabbing — is strong enough to hold skin grafts in place and seal wounds to keep blood and bacteria out.

"Having a spray bottle of glue in the operating room one day will save time and money and give the patient a better result," said Renato Salza of the Medical College of Georgia, which sponsored a conference this past weekend for researchers from around the world to share their work on body glue.

"Anything that stops bleeding and forms a tight surface — that's what the patient needs."

Studies show patients patched up with body glue instead of stitches suffer less scarring and heal faster.

And the glue could save money, since it biodegrades as the skin heals. Patients pay for the time it takes to stitch them up and remove the sutures.

Scientists first tried to create biological glue in the 1940s, but it was in 1974 before an Austrian doctor separated the useful proteins from blood, freeze dried them and mixed them into an adhesive.

Now researchers are seeking ways to cleanse the glue of blood-borne viruses, strengthen it and mass produce it for the United States market.

"This has the potential to replace sutures and staples in many operations," said Brenda Morse, a scientist at CryoLife Inc.

The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services recently awarded Marietta-based CryoLife $500,000 to test a body glue that the company hopes to market in a few years.

FibRx, resembling the rubbery caulking used to seal windows, would come in a syringe. Doctors would squeeze it out on a wound, but it wouldn't harden until exposed to ultraviolet light, leaving time to set the tissue.

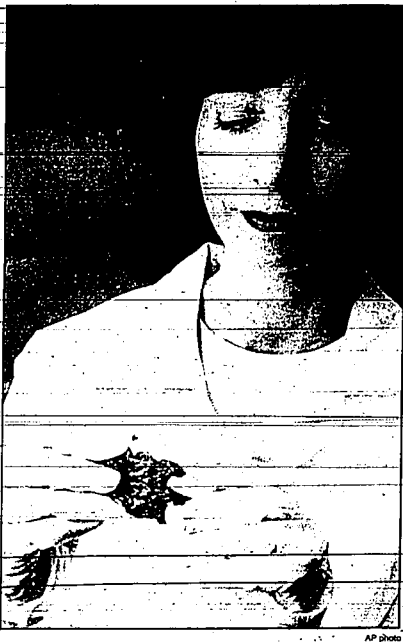

The body glue now available in Europe isn't approved for use in this country because of concerns that the blood-based product could transmit disease. But researchers are testing a way to wash the blood proteins with a solution that kills any lurking viruses.

And since American doctors say the glue needs to be strong enough to use in many different operations, so it's practical to manufacture, researchers are working on ways to strengthen it.

Collagen, the protein that makes skin elastic, appears to strengthen the material's stick, said David Sierra of Ougen Corp. in Palo Alto, Calif.

And doctors in New York are testing the adhesive with stitches, since heat appears to strengthen its bond. "I'm sure there is a biological glue that will work," Salza said.

"A lot of people are skeptical about it, but when we show them all it can do, we get their attention."

Dr. Brenda Morris tests the strength of beef tissue she joined with a biological glue at CryoLife Inc. in Marietta, Ga.

Lobbyists unite to defend their rights

WASHINGTON (AP) — Using their best tactics, Washington lobbyists are on a mission to rescue themselves from government restrictions.

The quest has all the earmarks of any modern lobbying campaign: a coalition of allied interests; fax machines dispatching bulletins to clients; position papers and studies to provide intellectual firepower for their arguments.

And like most good public relations efforts, the struggle is portrayed not as a defense of the pocketbooks of its interest-group members, but as preservation of "far loftier goals" — the First Amendment and citizens' rights to talk back to their government.

The battle also picks of some of America's easiest villains to pillory: Congress, the Internal Revenue Service, the Postal Service, and faceless federal and state bureaucrats.

The lobby has formed a group they call the Free Speech Coalition. Most of its members are tax-exempt "social welfare" organizations, including the American Civil Liberties Union, the American Conservative Union, People for the American Way, the Fund for a Feminist Majority and the Sierra Club.

Lawrence Pratt, director of the Gun Owners of America, said the groups have been lobbying for others while ignoring themselves. "We have been lobbying about it, but when we show them all we have shoes," Pratt said last week at a conference called by the new coalition.

They are worried about a growing list of government actions they say impede their fund-raising, lobbying and educational efforts, including: • Legislation that would require more complete registration of lobbyists, and expand its coverage to include those who lobby the executive branch as well as Congress. The bill, which has passed the Senate and is pending in the House, also would require lobbyists to detail which specific issues they raise with government officials. • Congressional proposals to require tax-exempt groups to disclose more information about their activities and to limit the pay of the groups' officers.

• An IRS ruling that bars tax-exempt groups from lobbying for or against the confirmation of top presidential appointees, unless they set up a separate fund to pay for the activity.

• The proliferation of state and local restrictions, such as requiring the posting of bonds, for direct mail fund-raisers.

• Efforts to raise mailing rates for non-profit advocacy groups, and to force groups to disclose their membership lists.

A spokesman for Rep. John Bryant, D-Texas, sponsor of the lobbyist registration bill, called the coalition's assertions "nonsense."

"Obviously, the lobby bill does not inhibit anybody's freedom of speech," said the aide, Carlton Carl. "It treats equally all organizations that try to influence government decision-making. And the public interest is certainly protected by making people aware of who is trying to get Congress or the executive branch to do something."

7 astronauts, 48 rats prepare for shuttle flight

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — When Columbia lifts off on a two-week mission to the longest space shuttle flight yet, it will be loaded with seven human guinea pigs and 48 rats.

The seven astronauts will spin in chairs, do bungee jumps, draw blood and conduct other medical tests to study the effects of long space trips. They'll share the shuttle with the most rats ever carried on a shuttle.

The launch is scheduled for Thursday morning. "All kidding aside, we're just tickled to have the opportunity to sort of earn our tickets, if you will, and really contribute something meaningful," said astronaut William McArthur, an Army officer and former test pilot.

"This is my big shot at doing the very best for science that I can," said Dr. Martin Fettman, a veterinarian and pathology professor at Colorado State University.

If all goes as planned, the mission will exceed by five hours the current shuttle record of 13 days, 19 hours and 30 minutes, set by Columbia last year.

That pales in comparison to NASA's space endurance record — an 84-day Skylab mission by three astronauts in 1973-74 — and Russia's 366-day Mir space station stay by two cosmonauts in 1987-88.

NASA program scientist Frank Sulzmann says the shuttle work will complement studies already conducted on Mir.

"The experiments that we are conducting on this mission are things the Russians have not been able to do because of the way their program is designed," he said.

For instance, Sulzmann said, it's difficult for Mir cosmonauts to bring back biological samples and to collect medical data during the first few days of space flight — a critical time in the body's adaptation to weightlessness.

Space travel is rough on the body over time. Muscles shrivel, bones weaken, red blood cells dwindle, the immune system diminishes and, for two-thirds of all astronauts, motion sickness strikes.

Mid-Snake group to conduct workshop

TWIN FALLS - An irrigators' group working to help clean up the middle Snake River will hold a workshop Oct. 21 at the College of Southern Idaho's Aspen Room 108.

The Mid Snake Irrigation Water Quality Coordination Committee will discuss ways to reduce the amount of sediment and chemical nutrients entering the river via return flow streams from irrigated agriculture.

The committee is in the process of finalizing a nutrient management plan for irrigators, which will be used to prepare a nutrient management plan for all river users along the mid-Snake.

For more information, contact Chuck Brockway or Clarence Robinson at the University of Idaho Research and Extension Center, 423-4691.

Commission will consider homeowners' request

KETCHUM - The City Planning and Zoning Commission will consider a request Monday night for a $188-a-square-foot increase in building coverage by the Pines Homeowner's Association.

The commission will meet at 6:30 p.m. at City Hall. The meeting is open to the public.

The association's request to amend its conditional use permit requires a public hearing, which is scheduled for 7 p.m.

The commission will consider two applications for subdivisions and determine what, if any, additional area beyond 300 feet from the proposed location for a conditional use permit will require prior notice.

The commission also will review designs for renovations of four structures and construction of a new residence.

Health officials say surface water parasite not a problem

TWIN FALLS - Magic Valley residents need not fear a pesky parasite in their drinking water, public health officials said Friday.

Cryptosporidium is a protozoan parasite similar to Giardia that is widespread in surface waters. A recent national study of public water systems found the organism in 87 percent of surface sources.

But Mike McMasters, a supervisor with the state Division of Environmental Quality in Twin Falls, said little of the Magic Valley's surface water is used for drinking water.

A report last Thursday said cases of diarrhea near Cascade Reservoir had been linked to cryptosporidium.

But Roger Perotto, chief of the state Bureau of Communicable Disease Prevention, said Friday that the traces of cryptosporidium were found in Payette Lake, not Cascade Reservoir.

"It's not life-threatening," McMasters said.

In fact, cryptosporidium symptoms - diarrhea, dehydration, nausea, cramps, and a low fever - normally go away without treatment in one to four weeks for people with healthy immune systems.

Back-country travelers can protect themselves from infection simply by boiling water for five minutes before drinking it or using it to prepare food. At home, adults and children should wash their hands thoroughly after using the toilet or before handling food.

Pollen levels may mean misery in fall

The Times-News and Associated Press

TWIN FALLS - This fall could prove to be the most miserable on record for hay-fever sufferers in southern Idaho, as sagebrush pollen pours in from the desert.

"It comes in on the wind," said Dr. Mitchell Ganier, a Boise allergist. "It will go miles and miles."

Pollen counts in Twin Falls are running well above average. Twin Falls allergist Gregory Kadlec said last Thursday.

"We've had the highest pollen counts that I've seen in the 14 years I've been here," Kadlec said.

The highest sagebrush count this season in the Twin Falls area was 245, Kadlec said. Pollen counts from 1 to 30 are considered low, from 31 to 60 moderate, from 61 to 149 high, and 150 and up extremely high.

Ganier said that when the season winds down, usually with the first few hard freezes in October, he will know for sure whether this year is the most extreme ever in Boise.

Why so much pollen? Kadlec said the area's wet winter and spring caused plants to grow much faster than usual.

People can help themselves by keeping their windows at home closed and by staying out of the desert, Ganier said.

For most allergy sufferers, over-the-counter medications - or a visit to the family doctor - will take care of their sneezing and runny noses.

Those with more serious problems often are referred to someone like Kadlec. "We're very, very busy because of the increase in pollen this year," he said.

necessary and unreasonable resource damage.

BURLEY - The Forest Service is looking for public comments on a environmental effects of mining expansion southeast of Burley.

"Black Pine Mine Inc. is proposing to expand their current operations on the south end of the Black Pine Division," said Pete Peterson, Burley District Ranger at the Sawtooth National Forest.

The Forest Service has released a draft environmental impact statement on the proposal, which involves heap-leach gold mining on National Forest land 60 miles southeast of Burley.

The draft will aid us in making the decision to approve or not approve the proposal," Peterson said, and to decide on "any associated mitigation measures that may be needed to modify or prevent un-

The modifications proposed by Black Pine Mine include mining three deposits from open pits; developing an additional waste dump, building haul roads to transport ore and waste rock, and raising the height of the existing leach pad by 50 feet.

Black Pine Mine's proposals would involve an additional 755 acres of National Forest land, increasing the company's operation to 605 acres of federal land.

Peterson said that comments will be welcomed for inclusion to the final environmental impact statement until Nov. 26.

In addition, the district office will hold an open house Oct. 26 from 7 to 9 p.m. to answer questions and receive comments on the proposed expansion.

The office is located at 3650 Overland Ave. in Burley.

Twin Falls is growing, and the development of rural land means the extension of Locust Street North is 'inevitable,' says City Councilman Tom Condie, whose home is located in the area.

Development would push Locust to Pole Line

By Sean L. McCarthy

Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - Locust, meet Pole Line. Pole Line, meet Locust.

"That meeting of the roads will come a little closer if a development group gets its way Tuesday night.

Stonebrook Partners is seeking zoning changes on 90 acres south of Pole Line Road and east of where Locust Street would run if extended northward.

"Most of the land could then legally sprout houses, and commercial buildings would be permitted along Pole Line.

That may surprise residents of Locust Street North. The city planning and zoning commission wasn't required to notify many of them because their property is not within 300 feet of the planned development.

The commission will consider the zoning change Tuesday night. It also will consider Stonebrook's proposal to build 110 houses on the 37 acres just north of where Locust Street dead ends at Juniper Street.

Approval would require extending Locust Street northward as far as Cheney Drive. That's about halfway to Pole Line, narrowing the gap to about a quarter-mile.

Residents of the Locust neighborhood can tell city officials what they think of that idea Tuesday night.

When the city considered extending Fillmore Street north to Pole Line, angry residents filled City Hall to express their opposition to the plan. The battle of Fillmore drew to an inconclusive conclusion Monday with the adoption of the city's comprehensive plan.

According to city officials and area residents, the eventual extension of Locust all the way to Pole Line is inevitable.

"I thought it was pretty clear that Locust would go through," Community Development Director LaMar Olson said Friday.

Councilman Tom Condie - a Juniper Street resident - said Friday that the City Council has known that both Locust and Madrona Streets would be extended.

"When you live in an area where there is vacant ground, and the city is growing like it is, this is bound to occur," he said.

Locust Street will extend northward whether or not this particular proposal is approved, he said.

Any extension of Locust Street would have to be examined carefully, he said, because the street passes two schools as well as the municipal swimming pool.

"If it goes through, it has to go in a safe and sane way," he said.

Commission will meet

The Twin Falls City Planning and Zoning Commission will meet at 7 p.m. Tuesday at City Hall. The public is invited.

But Phil Younger is one Locust resident who was surprised to learn Friday that the extension could happen soon.

"I thought the pressure was off," Younger said.

Although the comprehensive plan calls for extending both Locust and Fillmore streets to relieve Blue Lakes Boulevard traffic, Younger said he thought the City Council had put those extension plans on hold for now.

"Maybe time has caught up with us," he said. "This is a more subtle approach to opening Locust, and probably a little more palatable."

Rare plant interrupts cable project

By Brad Bowlin

Times-News writer

FAIRFIELD - Two government agencies and a telephone company recently joined forces to help save a fragile yellow flower with a funny name near Fairfield.

Rather than disturb the plant's habitat, US West rerouted the cable to the other side of the highway for 15 to 20 miles, said Don Wilkerson, area manager for US West.

Wilkerson declined to say how much the change cost the company. "We have to deal with these government agencies on a regular basis," Wilkerson said. "We want to save as many endangered plants as possible."

Navy League looks to rekindle interest in support organization

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS - The new head of the Navy League's Boise council hopes to rekindle local interest in a group that has been supporting America's sea-going military forces since 1902.

"The Navy League is something that most people have never even heard of," said Mario P. Delisio of Eagle. "But it's really exciting. You're serving the country and a patriot."

The Navy League supports the Navy, Marines, Coast Guard and merchant marine by providing a link between the military and the public, Delisio said.

If a civic group wants to schedule the Blue Angels precision flying team or the Navy balloon team, for example, the group can contact the Navy League, which has direct access to the top brass, he said.

"When one of the four seafaring services has a particular need, they call on the Navy League for help. Currently the league is helping to recruit medical people and engineers to serve," Delisio said.

Active support for the sea services is especially necessary in an era of military budget cuts, he added.

For a $30 yearly membership, Navy League members get fringe benefits like access to military bases all over the country and the opportunity to sail on a Navy ship during the Rose Festival in Portland, Ore.

Members also get the monthly Sea Power magazine and an annual almanac of U.S. military vessels.

The money goes to the organization's headquarters in Washington, D.C., where

Wolf surveys draw public into debate over recovery

LOWMAN (AP) — If you want to sound like "Canis lupus," you have to lose your inhibitions, take a deep breath and howl.

Those were the simple instructions participants received at a recent "howl-in" on the Boise National Forest. The event was aimed at detecting traces of the endangered Rocky Mountain gray wolf in Idaho's backcountry.

The howling surveys are used to accumulate data about how many of the reclusive animals live in Idaho, and to teach the public about the species.

"That big, bad wolf still exists in their minds; it's mythology," said Suzanne Lavery, executive director of the Wolf Recovery Foundation in Boise. "We want to end a conflict and let people make up their minds, based on fact instead of myth."

The federal government recently completed a series of hearings throughout the Rocky Mountain states to gauge public sentiment for reviving the predator packs.

A final statement should be ready in January on whether to proceed with the preferred alternative of releasing an experimental, nonessential wolf population in Yellowstone National Park and central Idaho.

Some of the information used in developing the plan comes from the Wolf Recovery Foundation's meetings. U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, Forest Service and Idaho Department of Fish and Game biologists often participate.

The recent howl-in began at dusk. Participants traveled by truck this time, but they often go by horseback or walk. If there are enough people they break into squads to cover more ground.

Some are embarrassed at first, but everyone takes a shot at howling. Lavery suggests five short, quavering howls, followed by five longer cries and five more that are even longer. The sets of five help other squads recognize the howls as human.

Studies show wolves can hear them at least six miles away.

A government pamphlet on wolf documentation has this advice for howlers:

"The researcher should not be concerned about doing it right. Wolves howl a variety of stimuli, and a human rendition of a howl that sounds like a sick cow will likely elicit a response if wolves are receptive."

After howling, the party uses a battery-powered parabolic dish with earphones sensitive enough to pick up the slightest sound — even a real wolf miles away. At the same time, participants get to enjoy an uncluttered view of constellations, owls and elk making their nocturnal rounds.

Finding wolves is so difficult that the industry's howlers' howl is a response justified all their unrequited effort.

Suzanne Lavery of the Wolf Recovery Foundation in Boise illustrates how wolf howls in central Idaho earlier this month as part of a survey of the wolves' condition.

"Having them answer back was something I'll always remember," she said. "Automatically there were tears in the eyes."

After a long night in the woods come the daytime duties. Lavery talks with the locals and checks the ground where wolves are reported for tracks and droppings. The day after the survey she reports finding wolf signs.

Lavery said the wolf has been an endangered species much longer than salmon or snails in Idaho, but the government has given it less attention than in other states. She hopes to use the surveys as ammunition to convince federal agencies to put more manpower into the Idaho documentation effort.

"In Montana, they're beating the bush for wolves. But in Idaho, we don't get wolves radio-collared and protect them," she said.

In fact, the only recent confirmed wolf sightings in Idaho have been of the animals' dead remains. A live wolf was found in the Boise National Forest in 1991, but it soon died after eating a poisoned carcass.

One radio-collared wolf roams the Kelly Creek area of northern Idaho, but it has only been seen through aerial surveys.

Still, Lavery believes there are two wolf packs in the state and several "dispersers" — lone male wolves trying to entice females from the one pack to form another.

Agricultural groups oppose wolf reintroduction in Idaho because of the perceived threat to their cattle and sheep. But a National Park Service report released last month said about 1,600 wolves in Minnesota killed four adult cattle and 23 calves annually between 1979 and 1991, or 12 per 1,000.

Sheep killed during the same period totaled 50, or 2.37 per 1,000.

Lavery said research also shows more than 200 wolves could exist in Idaho without a ripple in the state's growing deer and elk herds. In fact, her group wants to fill a predator niche in the ecosystem that has been vacant for years.

If hunters spot any wolves this fall, Lavery hopes they'll call.

Benson's grandson leaves church

PHOENIX (AP) — The grandson of the head of the Mormon Church — Pulitzer Prize winner Steve Benson — has resigned from the church, a newspaper reported Sunday.

The sixth-generation Mormon said he was quitting to protest intolerance by church leadership. The Arizona Republic said.

Benson, a Republican editorial cartoonist, said he made his decision after visiting his family in Salt Lake City, where The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is based.

Afterward, Benson said the church was manipulating his 94-year-old grandfather, Ezra Taft Benson, and that his failing health left him incapable of exerting true leadership.

"In order to be truly obedient, one must be allowed the right to think, question, doubt and search for truth. The modern church is intolerant of these God-given rights. I didn't leave the church. The church left me," he said.

Benson said one sign of the church's "dysfunctionality" was reaction to his statements. Church leaders called him in for explanation, and he received anonymous letters from church members.

The letters were, he said, "in essence damning me to hell and telling me I was possessed by the devil."

Benson said he had considered quitting for a decade. He delivered a resignation letter to his bishop and stake president last week.

Church spokesman Bruce L.

Olsen said the church regretted the loss of any member.

Benson's wife, Mary Ann Benson, also resigned. She called the decision "painful yet exhilarating."

Benson said his grandfather and family taught him the importance of remaining true to one's beliefs. "I was told it was no accident I was the grandson of the prophet, and that it was foreordained that I was born into a family headed by the prophet, seer and revelator Ezra Taft Benson. I was told I had a special obligation to act accordingly," he said.

Benson said his grandfather told him he had a duty to tell the truth and to fight against evil. He said that was what he was trying to do.

"Grandpa would understand," he said.

Council: Testing will cost $1 million at lake

MCCALL (AP) — Private foundations will be among the sources tapped to pay for an extensive Payette Lake water-quality study expected to cost $1 million to $1.27 million.

Peter Johnson of McCall, a former Bonneville Power Administration chief and now chairman of the Big Payette Lake Water Quality Council, said matching funds and grants for the study will be sought from private sources and city, county, state and federal agencies.

"There are several private foundations across the nation who have targeted clean water as one of the most important natural resources which we need to protect," he said.

He said the council hopes to raise $800,000 in private funds as a sign of the community's support and commitment to the project.

The Big Payette Lake Water Quality Council was established earlier this year by Gov. Cecil Andrus. Members were appointed by Andrus to represent major interests in the lake and watershed.

The council's study will assess the lake's health, the impacts of various watershed management practices and the quality of water flowing out of the lake into the North Fork of the Payette River.

Dewey Worth of the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare's Division of Environmental Quality, a member of a task force that developed guidelines for the water-quality study, said the work would be costly and complicated.

"There have been some heated arguments," said Larry Koenig, also of the Division of Environmental Quality.

Council members also will explore ways to educate the public on how to responsibly use the western Idaho lake to protect its value as a natural resource.

"We need to find a way to reach the conscience of those using the lake so they become good stewards by persuading them that the common interest of preserving and protecting the lake is also in their self interest," Johnson said.

Agencies prepare study on eagle river habitat

BOISE (AP) — Biologists worry rapid development will chip away at bald eagle habitat along the Boise River until the national symbol is chased out of the area.

"That would be a sign that other wildlife species along the river are in trouble."

Based on those concerns, federal agencies will soon launch a study of the river and expect to come up with a plan by March to protect eagle and wildlife habitat from Lucky Peak Dam down river to the western edge of Ada County.

The hope is that Boise, the county and a variety of federal and state agencies will agree to abide by the plan.

As a result, Boiseans may have to avoid certain parts of the river periodically; developers could have to build smaller subdivisions and keep them farther away from the river and wildlife habitat from Lucky Peak Dam down river to the western edge of Ada County.

In return, biologists say, eagles, deer, songbirds, waterfowl and other wildlife will be assured a place to live and Boiseans will be able to watch them.

"If we can share the river with eagles, it's a sign of good quality of life in Boise," said Karen Steenloff, a raptor biologist with the Bureau of Land Management.

Protecting wildlife also has wider implications. Their habitat — such as wetlands — helps maintain water quality and protect against flooding.

Developers say they're all for a scientific study of the river, but aren't sure the federal government should be looking at ways to control development.

"It gets me nervous when they say they'll do land-use planning," one developer said.

No information has been compiled on the rate of growth along the river, but it has been rapid. Twenty years ago there was basically nothing but trees and wetlands north of the Broadway Bridge. Now there are corporate headquarters, subdivisions and bike paths.

"The river environment is the single most desirable place to live in Boise, besides the foothills," said Clair Bowman, Ada Planning Association director. "It's reasonable to expect growth will go there."

That's why, biologists said, a comprehensive plan is needed.

Group honors Housing Agency

BOISE (AP) — The Idaho Housing Agency has received three awards from the National Council of State Housing Agencies.

The agency received the awards during the 23rd Annual Conference of the national council this week.

The Idaho Housing Agency won two awards for program excellence in communications. The agency's Review newsletter was judged to have the best design and content. The agency was also named "the most outstanding among state housing finance agencies in the area of communications" for its statewide art contest campaign designed to help win permanent extensions of mortgage revenue bonds and low-income housing tax credits.

"We are pleased to receive this national recognition," Idaho Housing Agency Executive Director A. Wayne Mittleider said. "We believe our publications and programs are a reflection of our organization."

The Idaho Housing Agency is a self-supporting corporation created in 1972 to provide financing for affordable housing for Idaho's lower-income citizens.

American troops have good reason to train Haitians

With the arrival of an advance party of American troops in Haiti Wednesday, this country's military forces are now engaged in another venture abroad. Its purpose is to assist in restoring the elected and then-deposed democratic government.

Although the operation coincides with the United Nations' intervention in Somalia, there are important legal and formal differences. Haiti has a government, and the Americans are coming into Haiti by its invitation. But that government has no effective control over its army, and the degree of anarchy in Haiti is not, as a practical matter, very different from that in Somalia.

The American troops in Haiti will not be there as suppliers of humanitarian relief or as peace-keepers, but rather as good examples. Some will offer elementary training to the Haitian soldiers, although nothing involving weapons or combat.

Others will be military engineers, there to work on roads, bridges and water supplies. The advance party of some two-dozen men will be increased to 300 next week and ultimately to 600, not many in a country of 7 million.

The U.N., under which this operation is being organized, already has a couple of hundred foreign observers posted throughout Haiti to monitor human rights. There will be troops from other countries doing work similar to the Americans', and the U.N.

has recruited several hundred policemen from French-speaking countries — France, Canada, Algeria and Madagascar, among others — to work with the Haitian police as they set up, for the first time in the country's history, a civilian police force separate from the army.

For the United States, the real difference between Haiti and Somalia is that Haiti is 8,000 miles closer to U.S. shores. Americans went into Somalia for purely humanitarian reasons. But chaos in Haiti affects this country directly. It generates unmanageable flows of refugees, and it provides havens for drug smugglers, not to speak of the approach of its abominable poverty and malnutrition only a few hundred miles from Florida.

The American troops are going into a highly uncertain situation. At the end of this month, Jean Bertrand Aristide, the elected president of Haiti, ousted and exiled two years ago by the army, is to return. Whether Haiti's soldiers will voluntarily give up their power and let the legitimate democratic government take over is a big question.

The current signals are not promising. There is good reason for American forces to take part in this latest attempt at international rehabilitation. They ought to stay only as long as a democratic government is running the country.

Hint:

It is time to come home, America

Cal Thomas

The lessons of Vietnam included the realization that the United States cannot be the policeman of the world. And if American lives are ever put in harm's way, the objective should be clear and attainable, the public must support the operation and sufficient numbers of military personnel must be committed at the beginning to overwhelm any resistance and to ensure victory.

This was the approach taken by President Bush in the Persian Gulf War. The opposite approach is being taken by President Clinton in an adventure in Somalia that is quickly revealing the inexperience, even incompetence, of an administration with little military experience and no foreign policy vision.

The sight of the captured American paratrooper his captors is bad enough. The picture of a dead American's naked and mutilated body being paraded through the streets is an outrage.

Those who warned against putting American forces under the command of the United Nations were correct. American interests are unique and American military personnel always make an inviting target. If a case could be made for U.S. assistance to aid the starving last December, it has long since evaporated as the naive Clinton administration now wants to engage in the folly of "nation building." We cannot even stem crime in our own streets — what makes us think we can stop thuggery in a foreign land?

Former Democratic presidential candidate George McGovern, an ardent opponent of the Vietnam War, supports the humanitarian rationale of initial American involvement in-

Somalia, but he tells me that the idea of nation building is "too ambitious" and that such terminology is "too extravagant."

The proper analogy is to compare Somalia not to Vietnam but to Lebanon. Ten years ago, President Reagan ordered American Marines into Lebanon where they were pinned down by warring factions that temporarily set aside their own grievance to focus on killing Americans. Immediately the president removed the remaining troops. Mr. Reagan said later the Lebanon operation caused him more personal grief than any other decision he made.

Some U.S. officials are now quoted as saying the United States must remain in Somalia in order to "save face." That is the poorest reason for maintaining a policy. Lyndon Johnson tried to "save face" in Vietnam, saying he didn't want to be the first American President to lose a war. Fifty thousand Americans lost their lives. The nation lost its confidence.

It is interesting to see how Congress is lining up on Somalia. Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole wants a quick withdrawal, as do Republican Sen. John McCain of Arizona (a Vietnam POW) and Democratic Sen. Robert Byrd of West Virginia. Polls show a majority of Americans oppose a continued U.S. presence in Somalia.

If President Clinton won't or can't rally the support of the public behind clear and well-defined goals for our presence in Somalia, Congress should intervene either through the War Powers Act or by some other means to end the U.S. presence there. Already resolutions have been introduced to bring American forces home, which the administration opposes on grounds that the "dynamic" has changed. Indeed it has — that's why we should get our people out now.

It isn't "cutting and running" when you realize a mistake has been made. Humanitarian aid was one thing, but building a nation when chaos rules is impossible. How sad that a president who took what he regarded as a moral and principled stand to escape service in the Vietnam War now sends American men to die in another even more questionable conflict.

The president may have limited constitutional authority for what he is doing, but he has not demonstrated moral authority. He risks serious damage to his presidency if he continues to incrementally add a few hundred troops. These will only serve as new targets for the warlord Mohammed Farah Aidi and his increasingly bold sharpshooters.

Write to us

The Times-News welcomes letters from readers on subjects of public interest. To make sure your letter is published promptly, here are a few guidelines to remember: Each letter should include the writer's signature, mailing address and telephone number. Typewritten letters are preferred, because they allow faster handling with less chance of error.

Letters may be brought to our Twin Falls office, mailed to P.O. Box 548, Twin Falls, 83303, or sent by fax to (208)734-5538.

Letters considered libelous, obscene or in bad taste will be rejected, as will material expressing racial, ethnic or religious bigotry.

Sheriff didn't overspend

Crybabies? Read our lips... The sheriff has not, we repeat, has not spent over his budget. How many times do we have to say that? We have the proof to back this statement too. Items mentioned such as patrol cars and uniforms came out of the budget that Sheriff Munn asked for, and there was no overspending.

Working in law enforcement is not a "job," it is a "career." This is something that these men and women have prepared for, mentally and physically, all of their lives. Some choose to work in their hometown or where they would like to live until retirement — not because of the income but when their lives are endangered because of lack of manpower or their home life becomes impaired because of overwork, they have no option but to speak out.

Mr. Parrott, the people of Twin Falls County told Wayne when he was running for sheriff that they wanted improvements. Not one person told him they wanted things to stay the same. He is trying to keep his campaign promises to improve law enforcement in this county. You, the people of Twin Falls County, asked for more law enforcement. You wanted more protection for your families and possessions. Now that he attempts to start the improvement process, his wings are clipped by the commissioners. Now when we share the truth, you imply that we are "crybabies."

We are tired of the commissioners implying that the sheriff's department has overspent, only to divert your attention away from their frivolous spending and poor management of county funds. Do you have any idea how many people have encouraged us to tell the truth?

Sheriff Tousley will have a tough time trying to take care of daily duties, much less any emergencies. Our county is 1,900 square miles from Murtough (Cassia County line) to Castelford (actually Bell Rapids line) and from the Snake River to the Nevada State line. Our responsibilities include traffic and road patrol, range and forest patrol, civil processing, civil and criminal records, drivers licenses, investigations, dispatching, drug enforcement, search and rescue, marine patrol, sex offenders, concealed weapons permits, court security and the jail and, of course, the notorious juvenile detention, which at the moment seems to wander about the state.

If we did not speak out, who would? Someone who doesn't know anything about our responsibilities? Yes, we are crying out for your help. Besides being deputies, we are husbands, wives and taxpayers. We know what happens out there every day. We see it firsthand. We will not quit crying... JENNY ANTON and 11 other signers Twin Falls

Square dancing offers fun

Some time ago, an article about singles in the Magic Valley appeared in The Times-News written by Steve Crump. I wrote to Mr. Crump, thanking him for bringing attention to the plight of single people in this area and mentioning the lack of support groups available. He brought to light the fact that there was only one support group currently in the Magic Valley area and aside from several LDS dances, there was nothing else available. In my letter, I reminded him that he had interviewed one person who mentioned she squared-danced with a singles out group and that he had failed to list our club and contact persons along with the others.

I would like to take this opportunity to inform those singles in the valley that are looking for something to do that the Magic Valley Singles Square Dance Club is alive and well! We have a wonderful group of people of varied ages (mid-20s to early 80s) that meet each week to dance together, socialize and have a great time. We meet every Tuesday evening at the Catholic Parish Hall at 216 Second Ave. E. in Jerome. We are a non-denominational group and any adult 18 years and older is welcome to join us. Although we are a singles group, couples are also very welcome. After all, some of our "singles" met and became "couples" while members of our club. If you're looking for a clean, wholesome activity away from the drinking crowd, this is the place to come.

A beginners class will be opening Oct. 12, and Oct. 19, and anyone interested in learning to square dance is invited to attend. The class will be held in Jerome at the Catholic Parish Hall and will run from 8:30 p.m. to 10 p.m. Classes will continue each Tuesday evening through May. Cost is only $2.50 per person per session.

We invite you to visit one of these beginning sessions and receive your first "yellowlock." I'm sure you'll be pleasantly surprised how much fun you can have.

For more information, call 326-5470 or 734-5662. SHIRLEY BAKER Twin Falls

Stop complaining, Twin Falls

From reading The Times-News about jobs and the top weaknesses of Twin Falls, it makes my blood curdle.

You stated in this "revising the tax structure so that people who shop or work in Twin Falls but don't live there help pay for city services." What do you expect of out-of-town people?

You have taken all the business out of all the towns around and forced us to go to Twin to shop and work. Now you want us to help pay your taxes. We are the ones that have helped you to be a big city and have all the advantages. You should have to pay for it. Even the College of Southern Idaho started in Buhl, then you took it away from us.

Just look around. What have you got to complain about? BARBARA LAPRAY Buhl

Sheriff, take a look around you

I have been following the letters in The Times-News concerning the sheriff's budget and would like to point out a few things that are missing from the whole picture.

The sheriff's budget was not the only one that was cut, nor were the deputies the only ones that did not receive raises this year. I, too, am an underpaid county employee, as are all the other people who are working for Twin Falls County.

I applaud Sheriff Tousley and his department and think that you are doing a fine job and respect all of you for the job that you are doing. I know many of you personally and agree that you deserve more than you are receiving (although I'm sure you know what the salary was when you accepted the job).

Why is the focus only the sheriff's office and the deputies' salaries? All of the other departments had to cut spending also and none of the departments were allotted salary increases for their employees. I served on an employees committee for county employees a number of years back, and the attitude was much the same at that time. The sheriff's deputies have always wanted all the benefits and salary increases for themselves, but have never been concerned for the rest of the county's employees.

I would like to see the sheriff's department become team players and start looking out for the rest of the county employees who did not receive raises either. We, too, have families to feed and bills to pay on our low salaries.

If mission fails, Haitians will come

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — If the United Nations mission fails to restore democracy in Haiti, the remainder of the volatile political negotiations that many fear will force the U.N. peacekeepers into fighting, as has happened in Somalia.

A U.S. warship carrying hundreds of G-16s to take part in the U.N. mission is to arrive today. A small contingent of U.S. and Canadian peacekeepers arrived last week.

The U.N. troops are part of a U.N.-brokered plan to restore democracy to the country more than two years after Leaders says even 6th Fleet won't be able to stop refugee wave into U.S.

President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, Haiti's first freely elected leader, was deposed in a military coup.

After Aristide's ouster, countless Haitians began fleeing by boat for the United States. U.S. military ships began intercepting them and returning them to Haiti, sparking outraged criticism that Washington was turning away refugees of political oppression.

If the U.N. plan fails, "more and more people will leave the island. It will no longer be a problem for Haiti. It will be a problem for Florida," Malval told reporters, speaking from the porch of his home.

"Even the U.S. 6th Fleet will be unable to prevent Haitians from fleeing a less and less hospitable land," Malval said.

He rejected comparisons with Somalia, asserting that 90 percent of Haitians — inside and outside the military — wanted to restore democracy here. However, his transition government has received little cooperation from the Haitian army, and civilian gunmen tied to the military have been blamed for a series of politically related killings in the past two months.

More than 200 people have died in almost nightly shooting attacks on pro-Aristide neighborhoods. There was no casualty toll available for the shooting Saturday night and Sunday morning.

"Many friends and observers are very pessimistic," Malval acknowledged. "But we are not Haitians; we refuse to identify with those who maintain them in poverty and terror."

45 die when Indian bus falls into riverbed

PATNA, India (AP) — A private passenger bus fell off a bridge over the Ganges river Sunday, killing 45 people and injuring 20, United News of India reported.

The driver lost control of the bus as it crossed the bridge, and the vehicle broke through a railing and crashed into a dry riverbed of the Ganges, which many Hindus consider holy.

Socialists return to power in Greece

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — The opposition socialists made a dramatic return to power Sunday, with early parliamentary election results showing voters rejecting the conservative government and its painful austerity measures.

Clearly upset, Premier Constantine Mitsotakis conceded defeat to former Socialist Premier Andreas Papandreu Sunday evening at the election center in downtown Athens.

"The election has been decided. The Greek people has chosen the Panhellenic Socialist Movement, which will form a government with a large majority in Parliament," Mitsotakis said.

"Our struggle continues. I will set into motion procedures to choose a leader for New Democracy," he said in a brief statement.

Rough seas capsize ferry

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — A ferry carrying more than 200 passengers capsized in rough seas off South Korea's west coast on Sunday, and police said more than 120 people were dead or missing.

By nightfall, 74 people had been rescued, 42 were confirmed dead and the rest were missing and presumed drowned, police said.

"The ship sank in less than 30 seconds," said Lee Sang-mun, who broke a window to escape his second-floor cabin. "There were many women and young people in my cabin and few came out."

Television reports quoted survivors as saying most of the passengers were inside the cabins because of the bad weather and were trapped when the ferry capsized.

Most of the survivors had been on the upper decks and jumped or were thrown into the water before the ship went down, survivors said.

The West Sea Ferry sank off the coast of northern Cholla province, about 140 miles southwest of Seoul. It was carrying passengers bound for a day of fishing and hiking on islands in the Yellow Sea.

There were conflicting reports on the number of people aboard the ferry because no passenger list was available, police said. State television quoted witnesses as saying there were 200 to 250 people on the boat, which had a capacity of 207.

The Yonhap news agency said the ship left Wido, about six miles off the mainland, 30 minutes behind schedule due to bad weather, and headed to the island of Kyokpo, 11 miles away.

Gusting winds and high seas forced it to turn back about 2 1/2 miles from Wido, Yonhap said. As the ship was turning, it was swamped by waves, capsized and sank.

Police said more than 30 navy and civilian ships and 16 helicopters had joined in rescue operations, but they were hampered by seas running 10 to 13 feet high.

Defense Minister Kwon Young-hae and Home Minister Lee Hae-koo rushed to the area to help supervise rescue efforts. A team of 50 navy commandos trained in underwater operations was flown to the scene, officials said.

Libyan suspects' lawyers oppose surrender

CAIRO — Lawyers for two Libyans charged with the bombing of Pan Am flight 103 over Scotland in 1988 said they had advised their clients not to surrender to U.S. or British officials, a move that could lead to stiffer U.N. sanctions against Libya.

The United States, Britain and France, on Oct. 1, proposed a new round of sanctions at the U.N. Security Council, but they delayed a vote after Libya said it had no objections if the men voluntarily surrendered for trial in Scotland. Their lawyers Sunday rejected that proposal as "unacceptable," expressing "grave concern" over the "possible prejudicial effect on potential jurors of pre-trial publicity" in the West. They also said Western prosecutors had refused to disclose the evidence they intended to use.

Libyan intelligence agents Abdel Basset Ali Megrahi and Lamen Khalifa Fhimah face U.S. and British charges that they carried out the bombing, which killed 270 people.

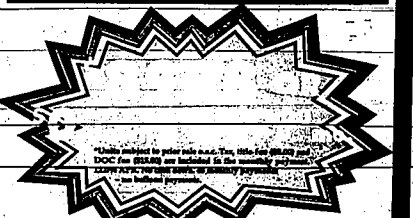

A Western diplomat in Tripoli said recently that the Libyan government appears to believe that it can ride out tightened sanctions without great difficulty.

What you take depends on what you give

Two residents of a small town in Maine were discussing the virtues and shortcomings of an old timer who had just passed on to his reward.

One of the men asked the other if he would be going to the funeral.

"Nope," replied the other. "He ain't coming to mine, so I ain't goin' to his."

JoAnn Larsen
Psychology

Sometimes in the everyday humdrum of life it's easy to slip into the above mode — "I'm not going to give if I'm not going to get."

Inadvertently, that attitude shuts us off from the very nourishment we need to feed our own souls and spirits. We need others.

And we need to give to them, not only for their sake, but for our own.

Our giving, in the end, comes back to us many-fold.

Interestingly, at times, not giving actually comes back to benefit us, as in the case of an ambitious farmer who, unhappy about the yield of his crops, discovered a highly recommended new seed corn that he planted in his fields.

Astonished by the resulting abundant crop, his neighbors asked him to sell them a portion of the new seed. But the farmer, afraid that he would lose a profitable competitive advantage, refused.

The second year the new seed did not produce as good a crop, and when the third-year crop was still worse it dawned upon the farmer that his prize corn was being pollinated by the inferior grade of corn from his neighbor's fields.

Speaking of giving, and borrowing a concept from financiers who speak of "available funds," philosopher Gabriel Marcel wrote of a rare human quality — that of "opening a line of credit" to other people.

This involves making available to others not what we own, but what we are.

He speaks of people, burdened by egos, money, or degrees, who allow no one else to enter their inner world. Closing themselves off to others, they become crisped like dry autumn leaves.

Nothing "crispates" a person's human soul as much as having a do not disturb sign hanging over his or her head.

In this respect, many sages have come, through their various paths, to a core truth regarding the human condition — that it is in freely giving to others that life takes on meaning. For example:

"The dead take to the grave, elated in their hands, only what they have given away."

— DeWitt Wallace

"The fragrance always stays in the hand that gives the rose."

— Hadia Be'jar

"The only things we ever keep are what we give away."

— Louis Ginzberg

"The more sympathy you give, the less you need."

— Malcolm S. Forbes

Looking good

The softer side of fashion

The Washington Post

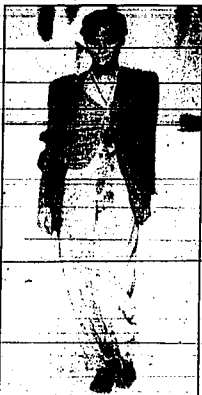

MILAN — It must be one of the stranger phenomena of modern fashion that just as women are finally acquiring some power in the office, just as they are really starting to pull down the big bucks and get a little respect, designers take their clothes away from them.

If one follows the logic of the Italian collections on their second day of merrily tripping toward spring in a Mao jacket and sandals, women might just as well give up any thought of getting dressed for work. There have been virtually no suits on the runways. Even last season's ubiquitous pantsuit has been rudely upstaged by chiffon tunics and tap pants.

Designers, of course, will say the softening of fashion is nothing more than a reappraisal of what's considered feminine, and to some extent this is perilously true. Clothes are losing their structure, just as society is changing its views about women. And yet, at the same time, it's hard to believe women are so indifferent to how they are perceived by others that they will allow themselves to be seen half-naked.

There was little of substance to absorb at the Prada show last week. Although its luxury goods house has found a place on the cutting

When good water goes bad

Little organisms with big names can spread through small amounts of water, and if ingested, can cause a person to get sick.

Experienced giardia yet? You'll know when the time comes

By Cathy Walworth
Times-News correspondent

Giardia's vicious cycle

TWIN FALLS — Let's have a test:

Define coli form bacteria, giardia and cryptosporidium.

Pencils down. These things have been in the news so much lately that they've become household words, but few people understand more than the fact that they all make us ill. Violently ill.

All of these organisms are spread through contaminated water. Giardia and cryptosporidium are one-celled protozoa. The rest are bacteria.

But giardia, sometimes known as beaver fever, and his pal, crypto—the bug that brought Milwaukee to its knees last spring — are just lumped together with the rest because they cause the same kinds of symptoms, said Cheryl Becker, Giardia is spread by contaminated water or food, or by personal contact. This parasitic infection is most common in the tropics, but recently, it has become a more frequent occurrence in developed countries, especially among groups of preschool children.

The parasites are in feces, and in areas of poor sanitation may contaminate water or food.

The parasites are acquired from drinking untreated water or food that has been contaminated by sewage or through hand-to-hand or sexual contact with an infected person.

The parasites enter and multiply within the intestines, where they adhere to the intestinal walls.

Symptoms occur one to three days after infection.

a registered nurse with the South Central District Health Department.

And, oh, what symptoms.

"Giardia is one of those things that won't go away on its own," Becker said.

"It's an interesting disease. When you get it, you become very symptomatic; really sick. Then when you think you can't take it anymore it gets better. You think you just ate something (bad) and you'll be OK. Then the symptoms return."

The typical victim will go through as many cycles as he can tolerate, then get treatment. The reason for the ups and downs of giardia, Becker said, is that people ingest the adult parasites, which cause the original symptoms.

The adults are excreted, leaving the eggs, or cysts, behind. Until they hatch, the victim feels pretty good. When the cysts become adults, the race to the bathroom is on once more.

About two-thirds of those infected have no symptoms, according to the American Medical Association's Encyclopedia of

Risk - There's no getting away from it

"Each week in this country a toddler drowns in a 5-gallon bucket. ... Poisoning from improperly cooked food causes thousands of deaths a year."

— "Hidden Hazards," published by Consumer Federation of America

The Washington Post

Here's the problem. Stay at your desk, and spend yet another hour breathing as the office ceiling oozes lead dust? Or go to the street for a hamburger and ingest some cow's intestinal bacteria?

Order a nice, chunky fruit salad, except that more than 1,000 people a year die from choking on food.

Go for a walk instead. Except that around 800 people a year die from being hit by falling objects.

There is, it seems, an epidemic of death afoot. Accidents claim 45,000 lives a year and send hundreds of thousands more to the hospital, and it is utterly impossible to skirt calamity.

At least that's the feeling inspired by the Consumer Federation of America's recently released list of "Hidden Hazards," a collection of killers that the group feels need more attention.

The list is selective — the federation chose items where it felt people could easily reduce their risk — but the sweep is so broad that no age or aspect of life is excluded, from infancy to senescence, from the bathroom to the bedroom.

Forget old age. Forget heart disease, cancer, car wrecks and other major social traumas like gunplay in the city. Death still lurks, though it is more like the Three Stooges run amok: God, it appears, loves good slapstick.

People get struck by lightning, knock the toaster in the bathtub or slip under the lawn mower. Stuff falls on them. They fall on stuff. Stuff gets left inside by doctors (four deaths in 1990).

AIDS (30,000 deaths a year) is an easy call by comparison. You know what to do. Or not do. But accidents? The only plausible message is just to stay in bed. (Though several hundred people a year die falling out of it.)

The federation's theory in promoting its list is that an educated consumer is a safer one. Toddlers drowning in buckets is a horrific thought, after all, and easily prevented: a helmet, likewise, is a small price to avoid the hundreds of deaths and thousands of head injuries that result from bicycle accidents each year.

Health notes

FIXING FACES: Severe facial burns now condemn a person to go through life disfigured by scars. But a technique developed by Dr. Elliott Rose of the Mt. Sinai Medical Center in New York is restoring beauty and function to deformed faces. Known as aesthetic facial restoration, the technique combines skin grafting, microsurgery, liposuction, computer imaging, medical tattooing and other cosmetic procedures to rebuild a person's appearance. The key to the procedure is a 12-hour operation to transfer precisely patterned skin grafts taken from the back to cover matching facial areas such as cheeks, nose and lips. First the scar tissue is removed; then the grafts are attached to blood vessels in the face to keep them fully functional.

CANCER PAIN: Cancer pain remains largely undetected, according to a study in the Annals of Internal Medicine. The study, which involved 897 cancer doctors, showed that 86 percent believed that most patients with pain were undermedicated and that only one in two doctors said pain control in their own practice was adequate, said Dr. Jamie Von Roenn of the Northwestern University Medical School, who headed the study.

SURGERY DISAPPOINTS: Morbidly obese people who opt for surgery to lose weight are often disappointed in the results, researchers at the Bronx VA Medical Center and New York University have found. A study of 33 patients scheduled for surgery to strictly limit the amount of food their stomachs can hold, and 32 patients who had undergone the surgery, showed that those who had the surgery overanticipated its benefits on their sex lives, friendships and jobs.

POTENT ANTIBODY: University of Alabama scientists believe they have discovered a key to treating all types of auto-immune diseases, including myasthenia gravis and multiple sclerosis. These auto-immune disorders are caused by an errant immune system that builds antibodies to attack the body's own tissue. Biophysicist J. Edwin Blalock developed a harmless dummy antibody that looks like the destructive one. Injected into animals, the dummy antibody stimulates an immune response against it and the real, disease-causing antibody, Blalock said. The dummy antibody protects 75 percent of rats from developing a form of myasthenia gravis, he reported in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences.

GET PHYSICAL: When a new patient asks a physician for a physical examination in America, she can expect just about anything, a study published in the Annals of Internal Medicine found. The study, organized by researchers at the Norris Cotton Cancer Center at Dartmouth University, used nine actresses, who played the role of a 55-year-old smoker with a bad diet and familial history of cancer. The actresses visited a total of 59 community physicians and got a wide range of response to their requests for a physical exam.

Pare timeout with loss of privileges

Q. My 5-year-old simply refuses to go into timeout after she's misbehaved.

We've actually gotten into physical struggles in which I've dragged her, kicking and screaming, through the house. I succeed at getting her into her timeout place — the downstairs bathroom — at great emotional cost to us both. Then comes the battle of getting her to stay there for five minutes, which I "win" only by holding the door. This simply isn't worth it, and I'd like your advice.

A. As I've said before, and I'll say it again: In and of itself, timeout is useful with children who are generally well-behaved. However, when it comes to highly oppositional (disobedient) children, timeout is generally ineffective unless paired with the removal of privileges.

The scenario you describe is one I hear frequently from parents of difficult children. And you are certainly correct, the "price" you pay getting her there for five minutes is not keeping her there for five minutes and is worth the benefit.

Frustrating timeout, which constitutes nothing but a relatively insignificant period of confinement and cooling-off, with systematic removal of privileges will probably solve your problems. First, on a sheet of paper, identify five "targets" or misbehaviors. The targets should be specific, as in "refusing to do what we tell you to do" and "calling us 'stupid' or other disrespectful names." When completed, the list is posted on the refrigerator. Then, using four index cards, write "free" on one and a privilege on each of the other three, as in "going outside," "watching television," and "regular bedtime." Punch a hole in the top of each card and hang them on a hook somewhere in the kitchen with the "free" card on top.

Every time your daughter displays a "target" behavior, she goes to timeout and loses a card. The first card is "free," but every card lost thereafter results in the loss of a privilege for the remainder of the day. So, the second misbehavior of the day means timeout and loss of television; the third misbehavior means timeout and loss of television; the fourth "earns" her both timeout and an early bedtime.

"But John," you say, "I told you she won't go to timeout!"

Right! So, every time she misbehaves, you say, "That's one of your targets, which means you must go to timeout and lose a card. But if you'd rather not go to timeout cooperatively and stay there your full five minutes, I'll just take two cards instead of one. The choice is yours!" And just like that, your struggles are over!

When people don't get enough fluids, Becker said, kidney and heart problems can develop, and they can die from dehydration. Symptoms of dehydration to watch for in infants are fever, lethargy, and little or no urine output.

You get giardia from bad water, but generally, there's not much of that in these parts, says Merl Egbert, supervisor with the district health department.

"We do get some hits and most commonly (those are) because of problems within the systems themselves," he said. In the eight-county district that Egbert monitors, there are more than 100 private water systems. "Of those," he said, "we may come up with one or two hits a month or less. And not every month."

When that happens, Egbert says the well is sanitized immediately. His department asks for five samples within the first 24 hours of a positive test, and four to five samples in the month following.

"Monkey bars! The threats start at birth and don't end until the end, wouldn't want to give him in the first place." That settled it for me.

"True giving is free from any obligation that makes giving a 'loan.' Gifts become debts when not given freely. And shouldn't our true gifts be given freely, and presented to another in the same way? Then charity will be free of finances, love unburdened with personal claims, and giving and receiving, all that we will ever require, will be ours for the asking."

Comprehending for the first time the concept of "true giving," James Kilpatrick relates being suddenly crippled by a painful attack of sciatica and, after years of independence, finding himself dependent upon others.

"For several weeks I was mostly helpless," he reports. "It was, as they say, a learning experience. It was also humbling."

Through this experience, he says, "I have rediscovered the essential kindness of people. Time after time, when I would be struggling with a wheelchair, a total stranger would stop by my side.

"May I give you a push? That's a

Cholesterol screening planned

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS — The South Central District Health Department, in conjunction with the American Heart Association, has planned a cholesterol screening in celebration of the American Heart Association Food Fest. The screening, which includes total cholesterol, high-density lipoprotein (good cholesterol) and the ratio between the two, is set for 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday at Waremart on Kimberly Road. Cost is $10 per person.

Medicine. When symptoms do occur, they begin one to three days after the parasite has entered the body.

The victim has violent attacks of diarrhea accompanied by gas, abdominal discomfort, cramps, or swelling, loss of appetite, and nausea may also occur. In some cases, the infection becomes chronic, the book says. Giardia is the No. 1 cause of diarrhea among backcountry wanderers in the Sierra Nevada and Rocky Mountains.

Becker warns that any of the intestinal problems can be devastating to infants and the elderly. Dehydration sets in faster than you can say ginger ale. "The elderly may already be on diuretics," Becker said, and in no time get into serious trouble from loss of fluids. Decreased fluids in babies is serious, too, she said, because "they don't have that much to begin with."

When people don't get enough fluids, Becker said, kidney and heart problems can develop, and they can die from dehydration. Symptoms of dehydration to watch for in infants are fever, lethargy, and little or no urine output.

"Monkey bars! The threats start at birth and don't end until the end, motto for the nation. It's something all of us can do. We can give our fellow man a little push."

An anonymous poet illustrates this reflection:

*Is anyone happier because you passed this way?
Does anyone remember that you spoke to him today?
Can you say tonight, in parting with the day that's slipping fast,
That you helped a single brother of the many that you passed?
When that happens, love unburdened with personal claims, and giving and receiving, all that we will ever require, will be ours for the asking.*

As you close your eyes in slumber, do you think that God will say, edge of fashion, outfitting every model who comes to town. It seems to me, suede backpacks and combat boots, his collections are often uneven and self-consciously hip. No surprise then, that the spring collection explored endlessly what the program notes called "the elegant ambiguity of gender." And what this roughly meant was young models in thickly knitted black underwear covered with T-shirts of white chiffon; crush-pleated tunics with tight leather bomber jackets; white anklets and navy blue linen coats belted over bloomers. There were some sweet off-the-shoulder dresses in the mix, and the navy blue evening pajamas were perfectly dreamy, but it takes a sharper eye to find elegance in ambiguity.
"You have earned one more tomorrow by the work you did today?"

Giorgio Armani's Emporio Armani collection was beautifully thought out, with softly tailored jackets, long summery dresses and creamy white knits that you would just barely see through. Here were modern clothes meant to be worn without much thought: a breezy navy blue jacket wafting open over a pair of wide trousers striped in navy and rust; a baby-doll dress in saffron chiffon hiding under a checked linen jacket; a slip dress of ivory silk with a modest inset of lingerie lace just above the bosom; a trusty tattered jacket in beige linen with a perfectly mismatched pair of brown and blue gingham check trousers.

Armani managed to incorporate nearly every major idea of the season — crinkled fabrics; semi-transparent knits, unstructured sportswear — into a collection that is moderately priced. There wasn't the cruelty in his knits that one saw in Gianni Versace's, with their punctured holes, or in Prada's, with their frank display of anatomy. Nor were his dresses so dependent on sheer fabrics for their sexiness that they couldn't be made of yellow and black gingham, and cut on the bias. It was simply a matter of Armani interpreting things his own way.

IF OCTOBER 11 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: You are intuitive, inquisitive, unorthodox, daring, progressive, willing to fight when cause is right. Among family you are considered "oddball." You prefer to create your own traditions, that's why you broke from family pattern while relatively young. You'll conclude "big death" prior to end of October. You'll travel in November, could be madly in love. December spells excitement.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You may be pressed for time but deadline is met, you're rewarded for efforts. Scenario features intensity in all areas, including love relationships.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Negotiations finished - don't stay too long at the fair! Opportunity exists to succeed in making important professional. You might be flirting with "fame and fortune." Do it!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Let go of status and don't get too comfortable in sea of mediocrity. Shake-up due, play leadership role. Focus on written material, close relative seeking special privileges.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Money on the way! Focus on finances, successful investment. Unorthodox approach brings desired results. An article located during late afternoon.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You'll be saying, "Let's party!" High cycle plus 3-Jupiter "influence" coincides with finance-romance. Diversify, experiment, publish. Popularity moves up, social demands will accelerate.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Much occurs behind scenes - check references, insist on quality. Bring forth sense of discrimination. Scenario features hospitals, museums, theaters - emphasize experience. Scenario favorable.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Read and write, teach, refuse to be shoved aside by bellicose, envious individual. Moon position "colides" with success, celebration, sex appeal.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Pleasant surprise - gift received, possibly flowers, representing genuine feeling of affection. Emphasis on decorating, re-modeling, acquisition of art object, luxury item. Taurus is in picture.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Spiritual values surge forward. Search for "soul mate" brings you closer to self-understanding. You'll answer eternal question. Scenario favorable.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Obstacles overcome, you'll earn plaudits - and cash. Dig deep for information, reject superficial answers. Love relationship controversial, durable.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Those who think you "missed the boat" are surely mistaken. A dreamlike, unusual possibility of journey that could include overseas.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You asked for love and now you get it. Imprint style, emphasize originality, inventiveness, willingness to take risks.

Name game with Friar Tuck

"Am now advised Friar Tuck of Robin Hood's band was named after a thrusting sword called the "tuck" from the French "estoc." Sort of like "Mac the Knife."

Researcher says they know that one out of every nine single women will make love tonight, but they don't say how they know.

Q. Didn't people used to pay to see public bawling?
 A. They did that. For an experimental while there more than a century ago, locals promoted those spectacles, and sold tickets. By 1901, though, interest had slackened off.

There is no sadder sight than a young pessimist, except an old optimist," said Mark Twain.

Q. What's the normal body temperature of a camel?
 A. Varies. A camel can adjust its internal temperature from 83 to 106 degrees F, depending on whether it's a cold night or a hot day.

What people don't realize about the Great Wall of China is it has been in constant repair. Almost none of it is the original. So most of it is nowhere nearby as old as we think.

Dave's real world encounters television

The reason I agreed to be in an episode of a TV situation comedy was that the role was perfect for me. You want to choose your roles carefully, as an actor.

Dave Barry Humor

"You want to look for roles in which you can display the range, the depth, the infinitely subtle nuances of your acting talent."

"It's just one word," the director said. "You say, 'Howdy!'"

"I'll do it," I said. A role like that comes along once in a lifetime.

The TV show — which might even give me on the air as you read this — is called "Dave's World." It's loosely based on a book and some columns I wrote. I use the term "loosely" very loosely. There's no way they could just take my columns and turn them directly into a TV series; every episode would last four minutes, and end with all the major characters being killed by an exploding toilet. So they have professional writers supplying dramatic elements that are missing in the sense that, whereas plots, characters and jokes that do not involve the term "load mucus."

(Let's just think I have "sold out" as an artist, let me stress that I have retained total creative control over the show, in the sense that, when they send me a check, I can legally spend it however I want.)

I worked hard on "Howdy," memorizing it in just days. Depending on the scene, I could deliver the line with various emotional subtexts, including happiness ("Howdy!"), sorrow ("Howdy!"), anger ("Howdy!"), and dental problems ("Hmpgh!").

Then, just before I flew to Los Angeles for the filming, the director called to tell me that they had changed my role. In my new role, I played a man in an appliance store who tries to buy the last air conditioner, but gets into a bidding war for it with characters who are based, loosely, on me and my wife, played by Harry Anderson and DeLane Matthews. (Harry Anderson plays me. Only taller.)

In my new role, I had to say 17 words, not one of which was "Howdy!" I was still memorizing my part when I got to the studio. It was swarming with people — camera people, light people, sound people, bagel people, cream-cheese people, people whose sole function — this is a coveted union job, passed down from father to son — is to go "SSHHH!" You, the actor, have to say your lines with all these people constantly staring at you, plus the director and the writers keep changing the script.

The actors will do a scene, and the director will say, "OK, that was perfect, but this time, Bob, instead of saying 'What's for dinner?' you say, 'Wait a minute! Benzene is actually a hydrocarbon!' And say it with a Norwegian accent. Also, we think maybe your character should have no arms."

My lines didn't change much, but as we got ready to film my scene, I was increasingly nervous. I was supposed to walk up to the appliance salesman and say, "I need an air conditioner." I had gone over this many times, but as the director said "Action!" my brain — the brain is easily the least intelligent organ in the body — lost my lines, and began frantically rummaging around for them in my memory banks. You could actually see my skull bulging with effort as I walked onto the set, in front of four TV cameras, a vast technical crew and a Live Studio Audience, with no real idea what I was going to say to the appliance-salesman ("I need a howdy").

But somehow I remembered my lines. The director seemed satisfied with my performance, except for the last part, where Harry Anderson, out-bidding me for the air conditioner, hands the salesman some takeout sushi and says, "We'll throw in some squid," and I became disgusted and said, "Yuppies!" (If you recognize this dialogue, it's because it's very similar to the appliance-buying scene in "Hamlet.")

"That was perfect, Dave," said the director. (This is what directors say when they think it sucked!) "But when you say 'yuppies,' make it smaller."

So we re-did the scene, and as we approached my last line, I was totally focused on doing a smaller "yuppies." Then T noticed that (a) the other actors weren't saying anything, and (b) everybody in the studio was staring at me, waiting. I had clearly messed up, but I had no idea how. This was a time-to-think-fast, to-improvise, to come up with a clever line that would save the scene. So here's what I did: I fell down. (It's a nervous habit I have. Ask my wife.)

When I got up, I explained that I'd been waiting for Harry to say the squid line.

"They took that out," somebody said.

"They took out the squid?" I said. "The squid is gone?"

It turned out that everybody else knew this, including probably the Live Studio Audience. So we had to do that part again, with my brain feverishly repeating "No squid! Smaller yuppies!" (This would be a good slogan for a restaurant.)

That time we got through it, and my television career came to an end, and I went back to being, loosely, a newspaper columnist. I have not, however, ruled out the possibility of starring in a spinoff. I am thinking of a dramatic action series about a hero who, each week, tries to buy an air conditioner. I have a great line for ending this column, but I can't remember what it is.

NOTE: This episode of "Dave's World" is tentatively scheduled for Oct. 25. Dave is the man in the appliance store who is shorter than Harry Anderson.

Disgusted stepmother ready to step down

DEAR ABBY: Your letters regarding jealous women and stepchildren have prompted me to write to several misconceptions concerning stepmothers. I am now the stepmother of five children, and it is the most difficult situation I have ever had to deal with in my life.

I fell in love with the father of these children — but had I fully realized what was involved, I would have left the country and changed my name.

I am expected to be chief baby-sitter, entertainer, chauffeur, nurse, counselor and caretaker of these five children — with none of the say as to how they are raised or disciplined.

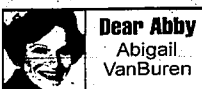

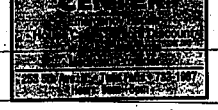

These particular children are about as lovable as Satan, and I'd attempt an exorcism if I thought there was a priest who could survive it.

Taking care of them has landed me in the hospital three times in the last two weeks.

When these spoiled children are all 18 and scatter to the four corners of the globe, their father will be lucky to hear from them on Father's Day (they don't bother with it currently).

As soon as I can scrape the funds together, my bags are packed. Am I alone, or have other stepmothers experienced this?

— FED-UP STEPMOTHER IN LANCASTER, PA.

Dear Abby Abigail VanBuren

DEAR FED-UP STEPMOTHER: I hope you are alone — but I have a feeling you aren't. Readers?

DEAR ABBY: I was born in 1925 of poor Jewish parents in Poland. At age 19, I went to Canada, enlisted in the Army and served in World War II with the Allied Forces.

I was a high school graduate, but my English was poor. I went to the printing office to be the first to buy a newspaper so I could get a head start on anyone else who was seeking employment.

A lot of immigrants were looking for employment, so I had to be unique in my strategy to get a job. I offered to work for a week without pay, and if the boss was not happy with my work, there would be no more work.

LEGAL NOTICE
NOTICE: The Twin Falls Probation Department will hold its 7th Quarterly meeting for 1993 on Tuesday, October 11, 1993 at 7:00 P.M. in the classroom of the Twin Falls Probation Department, Second Avenue East, Twin Falls, Idaho. PUBLISH: October 8, 10 and 11, 1993.

NOTICE OF INTENT TO ESTABLISH A STATE SMALL BUSINESS TECHNICAL AND ENVIRONMENTAL ASSISTANCE PROGRAM
The Idaho Department of Health and Welfare, Division of Environmental Quality (DEQ), will hold a public hearing on November 10, 1993 at 7:00 p.m. in the Elmore County Courthouse, 150 South 4th Street, Elmore, Idaho 83427. The purpose of the hearing is to receive input from the public on revising the referenced State Small Business Technical and Environmental Assistance Program. The hearing will be held in five (5) minutes per speaker. The hearing is open to all persons and is scheduled a public comment period from October 11, 1993 through November 12, 1993.

The purpose of the hearing is to receive input from the public on revising the referenced State Small Business Technical and Environmental Assistance Program. The hearing will be held in five (5) minutes per speaker. The hearing is open to all persons and is scheduled a public comment period from October 11, 1993 through November 12, 1993.

The Idaho program is consistent with federal and state requirements. It demonstrates the state's commitment to providing a program of assistance for the many small businesses that will be affected by new decontamination regulations. This is a commitment to address not only the distinctive needs of small business, but to further the air quality goals set forth in the CAA and state environmental statutes.

In implementing the CAA, the state is committed to providing a healthful environment for all Idahoans without causing unnecessary hardship for small business. The SBAP will provide timely information and useful technical assistance to help these small, but distinctive needs, but to further the air quality goals set forth in the CAA and state environmental statutes.

Copies of the proposed amendment are available for review at the DEQ Central Office in Boise at 1410 N. Myrtle Street, Regional Offices in Coeur d'Alene at 2110 Ironwood Parkway in Lewiston at 1118 E. Street, in Twin Falls at 801 Pole Line Road, and in Pocatello at 224 S. Arthur. The Cour d'Alene Public Library, 201 Main Street, the Lewiston City Library, Tacomacum Branch, at 428 Thain Road, the Boise no later than 2:00 p.m. MST, Thursday, November 11, 1993, at which time the bids will be opened in the Second, Library at 812 E. Clark; and the Idaho State Public Library at 457 Broadway. Any interested party submitting written comment regarding the proposed amendment should be submitted to the DEQ at the address above. To be most effective, comments should specifically address the SBAP and include support materials where available. For technical information, call Doug McRoberts, Division of Environmental Quality, (208) 334-5870, or write to 1410 N. Myrtle, Boise, ID 83706-1253.
