Canada vote stirs treaty questions

By David Shribman
Boston Globe

WASHINGTON — Canadian voters this week did more than oust an unpopular government and raise questions about the enduring stability of their northern confederation. They also roiled the political waters in the United States. By stripping the Conservatives of all but two of the 153 seats they controlled in the 295-seat House of Commons, Canadians delivered a stunning repudiation to a party that had held sway over Canadian politics for nearly nine years and that negotiated both a Free Trade Agreement with the United States at the end of the last decade and the North American Free Trade Agreement at the beginning of this one.

The election's effect south of the 49th parallel goes beyond the installation of a virtually unknown prime minister, the Liberal leader Jean Chretien, at the head of a nation that is Washington's greatest trade partner. It also adds a new measure of uncertainty to the fractious domestic debate over NAFTA, endangering a trade agreement that President Clinton is struggling to win approval for in an extremely skeptical Congress. Chretien and the Liberals take over Parliament Hill after five years of criticizing the Conservatives' free-trade policies, including vague but unmistakable skepticism about extending free-trade policies to Mexico. "The election of a Liberal government in Canada," said Peter B. Teeley, former U.S. ambassador to Ottawa, "is not helpful to NAFTA."

The Clinton administration is wagering that the large cushion provided by the Liberals' 178 seats will give Chretien adequate political security to resist the entreaties from Canadian labor groups that ordinarily have a strong voice within the Liberal caucus.

But, perhaps more important, the repudiation of the Conservatives and Prime Minister Kim Campbell — who did not even win her own seat — is providing an opening for American opponents to the treaty.

Just hours after Canadian election officials completed the ballot counting, anti-NAFTA lawmakers seized on the defeat of the Conservatives.

"The U.S. should use this opportunity to address the basic flaws in NAFTA," said Rep. Sander Levin, D-Mich., a member of the House Ways and Means Committee, which has jurisdiction over trade matters.

House Democratic Whip Dave Bonior of Michigan, who has broken with the White House and become a leader of the NAFTA opponents, declared at a press conference. "The people of Canada sent a clear and powerful message yesterday: This NAFTA won't work." He added: "Yesterday's vote spells trouble for this NAFTA."

Clinton sought to play down the effect of the Canadian election on American domestic politics, saying he believed the Canadian outcome "will have no impact at all" on his drive to win approval for NAFTA. The president, who spoke briefly with Chretien yesterday, said he saw "no reason to renegotiate the agreement."

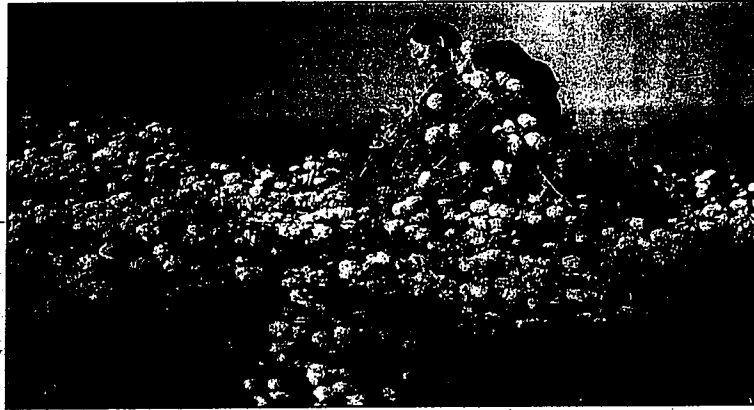

Administration officials are prepared to argue that the trade agreement was not a major element of Canada's 47-day campaign, which was dominated by employment and government-service issues along with questions about the future of a united Canada.

Woman forgotten in life, overlooked after death

The Associated Press

WORCESTER, Mass. — One neighbor had Adele A. Gaboury's lawn mowed for her.

Another took care of a pile of mail. A utility company was called to tend to her broken pipes.

All the while, the recluse lay dead, probably for four years, in trash on the kitchen floor. Authorities found her body Monday with a phone nearby, as if she had been trying to make a call when she died at age 73.

"She didn't want anyone bothering her at all," said an old friend, June Tsikas. "She just wanted to be left alone. I guess she got her wish, but it's awfully sad."

Neighbors had inquired about Gaboury about four years ago, after they noticed she was missing. But they notified she was missing. But they notified she was missing. But they notified she was missing.

wasn't close, told police she had gone into a nursing home.

"A brother had located a woman with the same last name and assumed it was his sister. It wasn't," said police Capt. James Gallagher.

With the search for Gaboury ended, neighbors began to tend to her two-story house that stood out in its desecrated middle-class neighborhood of this central Massachusetts city.

The mailman kept delivering her mail through a slot in the door, until neighbor Michael Crowley noticed a pileup. He opened the door and hundreds of pieces of mail fluttered into the yard. Crowley notified police, who got the deliveries stopped. Subsequent mail was stamped return to sender.

U. S. will store Belgian fuel rods

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Energy Department agreed Tuesday to accept weapons-grade uranium fuel from a research reactor in Belgium, bypassing formal environmental impact reviews, administration officials said.

An Energy Department official said the unusual action was taken to prevent 144 used fuel rods of highly enriched uranium from being sent to Scotland for reprocessing — and possibly ending up in the wrong hands.

There has been concern within the Clinton administration that tons of bomb-grade uranium from European research reactors might be diverted to weapons use if reprocessed or kept in crowded European storage.

The Clinton administration disclosed last July that it would resume acceptance of used nuclear fuel from European research reactors to ease storage problems in Europe. Such shipments normally would require formal environmental impact reviews both for transportation and disposal.

Truckers call nationwide shutdown over fuel hike

The Associated Press

PHOENIX — Jim Bowman has some advice if his fellow truckers go on strike: "Tell your momma to stock up on groceries because ... there won't be anything in the stores."

Bowman's wife, Doris, was passing out fliers at a truck stop here Tuesday to get support for a nationwide industry shutdown. Nov. 11-17. Truckers also are spreading the word on CB radios and a network of toll-free numbers.

Big trucking companies and the Teamsters union oppose the effort organized by independent truckers to protest rapidly rising diesel fuel prices.

Mackin, 47, said he's paid about $2,000 for a three-day run from St. Louis to Los Angeles, after the trucking company he contracts with takes 8 percent to 11 percent off the top. After buying fuel, oil and paying other maintenance costs, the St. Louis resident ends up with about $1,000.

"This will be a big bite in my pocket-book, but it's worth it," Mackin said. "It's past time they did this," said Mackin, who'd just delivered a load of pies from Indianapolis to Phoenix and was waiting for a broker to arrange his next cargo.

Strong winds sweep East, warm California temperatures

The Associated Press

Strong winds buffeted the East Tuesday, while warm Santa Ana winds blew through Los Angeles, raising temperatures 15 degrees in a 12-hour period.

Gale warnings were posted Tuesday and Wednesday from the southern New England coast through southeast Virginia. The strong winds and high tides were expected to cause some coastal flooding and beach erosion.

Temperatures in many places were cooler than normal for late October. Clayton Lake, Maine, chilled to 14 degrees early Tuesday, and the low temperature for the Lowry 48 states was 8 degrees at Pinedale, Wyo.

At 1 p.m. EDT, temperatures around the nation ranged from 33 degrees at Alamosa, Colo., and Laramie, Wyo., to 93 degrees at Thermal, Calif.

The Santa Ana winds arrived in Los Angeles during the morning, and quickly sent temperatures rising. The National Weather Service recorded a 15-degree gain in 30 minutes as Southern California temperatures headed toward 90. Highs in the 90s were also forecast for Wednesday.

At midday, rain and occasional thunderstorms extended over the central Atlantic coastal states and the western portion of the Florida peninsula.

Snow over south-central Colorado changed to rain, and rain also fell on southwest Kansas and the Oklahoma and Texas panhandles during the day.

Heavier rainfall during the six hours ending at noon MDT included 1.25 inches at Hatteras, N.C., and 1 inch at Wilmington, N.C.

There were no reports of measurable snowfall during the same six hours, but a fast-moving cold front brought 3 inches of snow Tuesday morning to Beulah, Colo., and Cuchara, Colo.

Guns rule in Haiti gas station lines

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — Gun-toting men barged past waiting motorists to commandeer dwindling gasoline supplies Tuesday, as a global oil embargo aimed at restoring democracy squeezed Haiti harder.

Parliament was again unable to muster a quorum to pass laws that could end the crisis. Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras, head of the military that toppled President Jean-Bertrand Aristide in 1991, wants the parliament to grant an amnesty to those involved in murders since the coup.

But many legislators are in hiding at home or abroad, afraid that anti-Aristide thugs will kill them if they appear in public.

A U.S. Embassy spokesman, Stanley Schragar, on Tuesday characterized the political efforts to return Aristide as "stymied."

White House wants ruling held up

WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration asked the Supreme Court Tuesday to delay a lower court order banning discrimination against homosexuals in the military.

The emergency order, if granted, would enable the Defense Department to implement its new policy on homosexuals, which states that recruits will not be asked their sexual orientation but that openly declared homosexuals will not be permitted to serve.

The Justice Department filed its request with Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, requesting a partial stay of a U.S. District judge's order while the administration appeals it. The aim is to limit the judge's ruling to Navy Petty Officer Keith Meinhold, a gay sailor discharged from the military in August 1992 after he disclosed he was homosexual.

The department contended in its application that U.S. District Judge Terry Hatter Jr. "clearly erred with respect to issues of great importance" when he ruled Sept. 30 the Pentagon could not deny enlistment or promotion, or change enlistment status or duty assignment because of sexual orientation.

President proposes buying overhaul

WASHINGTON — President Clinton proposed a major overhaul of government buying Tuesday, requiring that the Pentagon and other agencies order items off the shelf when possible rather than custom-made, super-expensive versions.

As part of a government-streamlining program, Clinton also proposed a $10 billion package of new spending cuts and other cost-saving moves, ranging from offering federal workers bonuses for retiring early to letting the Internal Revenue Service hire private bill collectors.

"We can and will run a government that works better and costs less," Clinton said at the White House.

from going into effect, I hope Secretary Babbitt and the appropriate parties in the Congress will, for the first time, sit down and try to work out this issue," Domenici said Tuesday evening.

Reid fired back after the vote failed that his amendment is the "best deal" that ranchers will get.

"I hope we don't filibuster, delay and stall until we get all of what Secretary Babbitt recommended," said Reid, who criticized partisan lawmakers for constantly trying to get enough votes to hold up important legislation.

He noted that the grazing fee program has been operating at a loss since its inception.

"We have been losing significant amounts of money as taxpayers every year on this program," Reid said. "We have been going further and further in the hole."

Nevada Democratic Rep. Joseph Bilbray predicted Tuesday morning that the filibuster would not end Tuesday, but would probably come to a close today.

"The Western senators have to do their thing," Bilbray said.

Domenici's spokesman, Ari Fleischer, said in his notation was preposterous. "That guy's living in a fantasy land," Fleischer said.

in the next few days," said Charles Roh, assistant U.S. Trade Representative. "We don't think they're committed to some sort of confrontation with the United States."

Chretien and the Liberals spoke in a deliberately ambiguous idiom about the agreement, at times suggesting they might seek to renegotiate it. In face-to-face meetings with American officials, Chretien has not spoken in specifics, other than to ask for an overhaul of American trade policy.

The Liberals want the United States to abandon its sanctions policy, elements of which were won by the electronics, textiles and steel industries after domestic political battles. These companies regard American trade tools as their last line of defense against unfair trade practices abroad, including in Canada.

nursing home, started paying her own grandson $10 twice a month to mow Gaboury's lawn because the property was such an eyesore.

A utility company was called to shut off the water when Pagan noticed Gaboury's pipes had frozen and sent water spilling out the door.

No one could imagine Gaboury was inside. Even when police searched the home Friday, after a neighbor complained about it as a health hazard, they missed her badly decomposed body in 6 feet of trash.

Authorities still suspicious returned Monday for another look and found the body.

Police said they believe Gaboury died of natural causes four years ago, when her bank transactions ended. The state medical examiner's office was investigating.

A brother, Joseph Gaboury, 70, of East Brookfield, said the family hadn't been close since their mother died in 1979. But he said "Someone should have noticed something before now."

Gaboury apparently had worked at a nursing home and had been living with a male companion until he died six years ago. Florence Stearns, administrator of the Anna Marie Rest Home, said Gaboury worked there as activity director for about two years, leaving in 1986 after problems arose over her absenteeism. Stearns said she knew little about Gaboury except that she had formerly worked on a cruise ship.

"She was rather a private person," Stearns said. "She kept her own affairs to herself."

And few others knew much about Gaboury, who lived on the street for 40 years.

Health plan will fall $30 billion short of savings estimate

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton's health reform proposal will fall $30 billion short of the budget savings predicted earlier, an administration official said Tuesday as the White House readied the plan for delivery to Congress.

The president and Hillary Rodham Clinton were due to bring the 1,600-page bill to Congress in person today in a ceremony in Statuary Hall, five weeks after Clinton's initial pitch.

Clinton has argued that without a sharp slowdown in health inflation, the federal deficit would spiral back up later in this decade. But his economic advisers had vowed to sacrifice further deficit reduction before raising taxes any more for health reform.

In the original draft, Clinton's health plan would have lowered the deficit by $91 billion between now and the year 2000.

Dr. Philip R. Lee, the assistant secretary for health, told medical educators meeting the deficit reduction figure now is "around $60 billion."

Other administration officials said the revised plan will offer discounted coverage to some small businesses with as many as 75 workers. The cutoff had been 50 workers in the original plan.

And a government takeover of employers' costs of providing health benefits for early retirees ages 35 to 64 will be phased in slowly between 1998 and 2001, said the officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

In another change, the White House has backed down from an ambitious goal to reserve half of all residencies for doctors training in primary care, not specialists, within five years.

Instead, it would set a goal of having 55 percent of the residents in primary care by the year 2002. Seventy percent of the 625,000 U.S. doctors now are specialists.

Clinton said Tuesday he was not willing to water down his health reform plan in the face of criticism from the National Association of Manufacturers that he was promising Americans too much.

"Most manufacturers are going to save money on this. If they want to look a gift horse in the mouth, that can be their decision," the president said.

Leon Panetta, the White House budget director, said Clinton had taken pains to avoid creating new "open-ended entitlements" in health care, "particularly when we're trying to discipline the rest of government spending."

Panetta said Clinton has built in a mechanism to cap the entitlements.

A 239-page draft summary of Clinton's original proposal that leaked out almost seven weeks ago has been a lightning rod for complaints from businesses, hospitals and others with worries about the so-called Health Security Plan.

The plan proposes to pay for the reforms with cigarette taxes, big savings in Medicare and Medicaid, a one percent levy on large corporations and a requirement that all employers and employees buy insurance.

Some lawmakers have voiced fears that Clinton was concentrating too much power in the hands of an independent National Health Board and the regional alliances that would form a new insurance-buying marketplace.

Under the final plan, the health board would be an executive agency, not an independent board like the Securities and Exchange Commission, the sources said.

And the regional health alliances would accept virtually all health plans with no limits on the number of plans offering traditional, fee-for-service medicine, the officials said.

Sources, not the alliances, would certify each health plan.

But Lee told the Association of American Medical Colleges that even the fee-for-service plans would receive flat amounts to provide care for all their customers — regardless of whether they paid physicians a salary or a fee for each procedure or service.

The Clinton plan would encourage Americans to join prepaid plans such as health maintenance organizations where their out-of-pocket costs would be lower. Such plans would charge patients $10 each time they went to the doctor with no deductibles.

Advocates for the poor warned that $10 would be a hardship for a poor family on Medicaid, which now has no copayments.

The revised Clinton bill would reduce the copayments for welfare families and allow the health plans to waive them for others as well, the officials said.

Clinton initially promised subsidies for small businesses with 50 or fewer workers and average wages of $24,000 or less. Now the discounts will go to firms with up to 75 employees, varying both by size and average wage.

Clinton's proposed takeover of the employers' 80 percent share of premiums for early retirees will be phased in slowly. The government would pick up 10 percent of the employer share in 1998; 20 percent in 1999; 30 percent in 2000; and 100 percent in 2001.

The White House contends that early retirees will still benefit from its switch to community-wide insurance rates, with no discrimination between younger and older workers.

Keating banned from S&Ls

WASHINGTON (AP) — Regulators banned jailed financier Charles H. Keating Jr. on Tuesday from working for a bank or savings and loan and ordered him to pay $36 million in restitution for the failure of his Lincoln Savings and Loan Association.

The action, by Jonathan Fiechter, acting director of the Office of Thrift Supervision, caps an administrative procedure that began in August 1990 and it follows the March recommendation of an administrative law judge who conducted a hearing on the charges.

Keating had sought a new hearing, saying he would be willing to testify, reversing his position at the original hearing where he invoked his constitutional privilege not to testify.

But Fiechter rejected the request, saying he had his chance in the original hearing and that he had the right to appeal the agency's order to the U.S. Court of Appeals.

Keating's Lincoln Savings, based in Irvine, Calif., collapsed in April 1989 at an estimated cost to taxpayers of $2.6 billion, the costliest thrift collapse ever.

The size of the failure and Keating's political wheeling and dealing, which tarnished five senators, made him a national symbol of the S&L crisis.

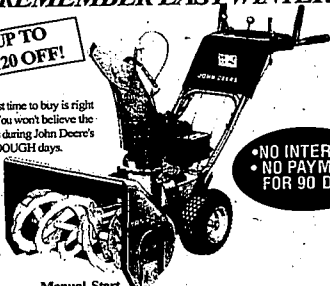

He was convicted under California law in 1991 of 17 counts of securities fraud and is serving a 10-year prison term. He is scheduled to serve a federal sentence of 12 years and seven months after his state term is completed.

Senate kills jobless benefits extension

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate voted Tuesday to kill a Democratic attempt to provide extra unemployment benefits for Americans who have been out of work the longest.

Ignoring supporters' claims that 1 million jobless Americans would suffer, senators voted 59-38 to keep the legislation alive — but fell one vote short of the 60 they needed. The vote was on a procedural motion brought by Republicans on grounds that the bill would violate budget laws by driving up the federal deficit this year.

Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., switched her vote from supporting to opposing the benefits at the last moment. Voting to keep the legislation alive were 51 Democrats and eight Republicans; three Democrats and 35 Republicans voted to kill it.

Former HUD official convicted of fraud

WASHINGTON — A former top aide to ex-Housing Secretary Samuel Pierce was convicted Tuesday of 12 felony counts of defrauding the government, taking a payoff and lying to Congress.

The jury deliberated for three days before returning the guilty verdicts on all 12 counts of the indictment against Deborah Gore Dean.

Dean was executive assistant to Pierce in the Reagan administration when the HUD was parceling out federal money under its moderate rehabilitation housing program.

She was convicted of three counts of conspiring to defraud the U.S. government, one count of accepting an illegal gratuity from a consultant and eight counts of lying about her activities at HUD. Dean faces a maximum possible prison term of 57 years and $3 million in fines.

Two boys charged with killing drug dog

SWEENEY, Texas — The remains of a drug-sniffing police dog that disappeared in April have been found and two teen-agers who reportedly bragged about the killing have been charged.

The Labrador retriever, known as Officer Baker, was taken from the fenced yard at the home of its trainer.

Bryan Travis Burt of Port Lavaca was charged with theft and criminal mischief in the dog's death. He was released Sunday on $30,000 bond. Christopher Davidson of Sweeney was charged with the disappearance of the dog. He was released Monday on $15,000 bond. Each charge carries up to 10 years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

Suicide doctor will plead 'no contest'

DETROIT — Dr. Jack Kevorjian is willing to plead no contest to assisting a suicide in exchange for a hearing on the constitutionality of the Michigan law banning the practice, his lawyer said Tuesday.

The retired pathologist was arraigned in Circuit Court on an assistant-suicide charge in the Sept. 9 death of Donald O'Keefe. Kevorjian stood mute to the charge and Judge Richard Kaufman entered an innocent plea on his behalf.

O'Keefe, 73, had bone cancer and died at his home in Redford Township by inhaling carbon monoxide.

Helmsey heads to halfway house

NEW YORK — Leona Helmsey was halfway home Tuesday, settling into a hotel just off Fifth Avenue. But the only exotic aspect of her new digs is the name: Le Marquis Hotel.

It's a federal halfway house, where as many as six people sleep in one room. The pillows are sans mints and the bathroom is aeev bugs.

The 73-year-old hotel queen was sentenced to four years in prison for tax evasion and began serving her term on tax day — April 15, 1992. A federal judge, citing her age and husband Harry's failing health, reduced her term to 30 months.

Vincent Price, master of horror, dies at 82

Price

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Vincent Price, with insinuating voice and menacing face, used warm humor against his warped reputation as the horror king of Hollywood.

Price died Monday at age 82 of lung cancer he fought for five years.

He had faith in his own versatility and was amused when the public viewed him solely as a master of menace. Consider the woman in Houston who once asked him to bite her neck. Price obliged, though he had never played Dracula. "My, was she surprised!" he grinned as he recounted the story.

"He could do anything," said his friend Bob Hope. "He could do a heavy, and he could do light comedy. Not many like Vincent Price. Never was."

Price began as a classical actor, though he had no pretensions about the profession. He cheerfully lent his authority to schlock like "Rage of the Buccaneers," "Dr. Goldfoot and the Girl Bombs," "The Conqueror Worms" and "It's Not the Size That Counts."

His reputation as a scare merchant was established in the 1953 3-D thriller, "House of Wax."

During the 1960s, Price appeared with Boris Karloff, Peter Lorre, Lon Chaney Jr. and others in a series of Edgar Allan Poe movies made by Roger Corman.

Price demonstrated his wit and knowledge on TV shows, including "Pantomime Quiz," "Hollywood Squares" and "The $64,000 Question." In every performance, even a TV commercial for a bathroom cleaner, Price never consoled.

"It's awfully easy to get out of the business, it's not easy to stay in," he said in a 1988 interview. "I never felt that the great parts were the only things you should do. That's a great mistake, because there are so many interesting things available."

His approach to life was open-mindedness and willingness to explore. "You never know where things will lead you," Price mused.

Price's interest in art — his first ambition was to be a painter but he didn't think he had enough talent — led to a collection that he constantly replenished. He opened a gallery, donated paintings to a local college, even selected 15,000 works of art aimed at working-class Americans through the Sears catalog.

Price's hobby of gourmet cooking produced a cookbook that sold 350,000 copies.

He contributed a ghostly voice to Michael Jackson's hit record, "Thriller," and played the creator of "Edward Scissorhands" in the 1990 film.

GM, pickup owners support settlement

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Lawyers for General Motors Corp. and owners of some 6 million pickups with side-mounted gasoline tanks urged a federal judge Tuesday to approve a settlement offering $1,000 toward the purchase of a new truck.

"It is a very fair, reasonable and adequate settlement in one of the largest class actions ever brought," said Diane Nast, an attorney for truck owners.

Lawyer James Shink, representing GM, also called the settlement a "fair, reasonable and adequate resolution."

U.S. District Judge William Yohn Jr. gave no indication on when he would rule on the proposed settlement.

The agreement would settle 36 class-action lawsuits brought by disgruntled owners. General Motors first made the $1,000 offer in July.

The government, which could still order a recall, contends the side-saddle placement of the fuel tanks outside the trucks' frame rail in the 1973 to 1987 models is a safety hazard that has caused fires that killed more than 300 people.

Shink said the two-wheel-drive and four-wheel-drive trucks are not dangerous.

"A side-mounted tank is not defective as alleged. They are safe," he said.

GM agreed to the settlement despite its belief that it would prevail in court, because "we don't want to have an adversary relationship with our customers," he said.

Another GM lawyer, Lee Schutzman, called the offer of $1,000 certificates "a good resolution" to a case that could generate $24 million in lawyers' fees.

But the Center for Auto Safety, the Washington-based advocacy group founded by Ralph Nader, said accepting the settlement "would allow approximately 6 million trucks with the highest fire-crash death toll in automotive history to remain on the highways."

If the settlement is approved, GM would distribute the coupons between Thanksgiving and Christmas.

QUALITY GLASSES FOR JUST $59!

Okay, so we didn't take over a continent. But a while back we did do something our competitors in the optical industry probably thought bordered on heresy. We chose to be straightforward about eyeglass prices.

No pricing gimmicks would be allowed. We'd offer honest, everyday low prices, and we would count on you to see the fallacy of others' two-for-one and half-price sales, where the regular price can be hiked up as much as $100 or more.

Our offer is simple—quality, fashionable eyewear at rock-bottom prices. Every day. A pair of glasses—complete with single vision plastic lenses—is $59. Additional pairs, same prescription, same visit, are $39. So two pairs are just $98. Three pairs are $137. And so on. Most bifocals are $20 more a pair.

Maybe it's not as exciting as a Super Duper Half-Price Sale. But a lot of people must like it. Our business has never been better.

WE DON'T SKIMP ON QUALITY

Some might think a large chain like us can't offer the same quality as a small store on the corner.

Au contraire!

The economies of scale actually work in our favor.

Because we buy the latest frame designs and lenses in huge volume, we're able to negotiate very attractive prices. So we can provide you with high quality products at lower prices.

Our size also enables us to operate our own state-of-the-art manufacturing labs with our own strict quality controls.

We can say with confidence that our glasses are as good as—or better than—those you'd pay considerably more for elsewhere.

CHECK OUT OUR CONTACTS!

If you wear contact lenses, you'll appreciate our prices, too. A pair of Softmate B or Ultra DW contact lenses is just $34. (Eye exam not included.) You can also get back-up glasses, with single vision plastic lenses, for $39.

Boy falls 7 stories, lives to tell about it

NEW YORK (AP) — If it wasn't a miracle it was pretty close. A 5-year-old boy fell seven stories out his bedroom window, landed on concrete and lived to tell about it. Paul Rosen was resting comfortably at New York Hospital Monday, a day after his plunge. Paul not only survived, but apparently suffered no broken bones or abrasions. He did not lose consciousness. He did not even lose his appetite. "Uniquely fortuitous," said Charlotte Spiegel, a window safety expert for the health department. "By 5, his body has formed to a degree where you'd expect very serious damage." Other children have fallen farther and survived, but Spiegel said she knew of none who fell so far, landed on something so hard and escaped with so little damage. "It was like the angels caught him," said paramedic Raymond Bonner. The Daily News dubbed him "SUPERBOY" on page one, and New York Newsday proclaimed a "Miracle on 79th Street." Hospital spokeswoman Myrna Manners said Paul was being held for observation and would not be released before today. The bedroom window Paul fell from had no window guards, as required by law. It remained unclear why Paul fell. His mother, Christine Rosen, said Sunday that her son "thought he could fly." But police said he was leaning out the window, trying to retrieve a dangling toy microphone.

Is it time to expand Guard's civil role?

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon didn't like the District of Columbia's idea of enlisting National Guard troops as urban crime fighters — and it isn't looking for any other new civil missions either. President Clinton on Monday turned down D.C. Mayor Sharon Pratt Kelly's request that he give her the same power that governors have to call out the Guard. Clinton said he would support asking Congress to change the law to give her that authority, but by the meantime her idea of using the Guard for police work is dead. Ms. Kelly's request highlights a broader debate now under way: Is it time to commit the Guard to new missions, and are citizen soldiers suited to law enforcement? The Defense Department thinks not, on both counts. "I would be concerned about it if it went beyond" the traditional role of the Guard's a backup to military duty troops in wartime, a force to respond to civil disorder and natural disasters, and a supplement to counter-drug forces, said Deborah Lee, the assistant defense secretary for reserve affairs. "Our people — even our MPs are not trained in the intricacies of law enforcement," Ms. Lee told reporters Tuesday. "They don't know about arrest and search and seizure and the like. "You need to be sure that people are trained to go into whatever role you are putting them into," she said. "And currently our personnel simply are not trained for that. And, I would argue, at the current time shouldn't be."

Bishops: U.S. should keep peace in post-Cold War era

The Associated Press
The United States should keep its ban on nuclear testing, stop peddling its arms around the world, and turn its swords into plowshares in Central America, Africa and the Middle East, Roman Catholic leaders say. The proposal calling for the United States to combat a groundswell of isolationism comes a decade after the bishops' pastoral letter on nuclear arms propelled them into U.S. public policy debates at the height of the Cold War. The new statement, "The Harvest of Justice is Sown in Peace," says the United States retains a moral responsibility to intervene — with force if necessary — in regional conflicts and to increase humanitarian aid to countries where it once battled communism. "Liberty and justice for all" is not only a profound national pledge; it is also a worthy goal for a world leader," the bishops said. The statement was written by some of the nation's most influential bishops, including Cardinals Joseph Bernardin of Chicago and Roger Malony of Los Angeles; Archbishop John R. Roach of Minneapolis, chairman of the bishops' International Policy Committee; and Bishop James Malone of Youngstown, Ohio, a former president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops. Gen. Colin Powell, former chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, was among those to appear before the committee. The policy statement will be presented by the committee to the full conference at its meeting Nov. 15-18 in Washington.

Pepsi tamperer lands year in jail

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa. (AP) — A man who falsely reported a hypodermic needle in a can of Diet Pepsi was sentenced Tuesday to a year in prison. Christopher J. Burnette, 25, was the first person charged after dozens of bogus tampering reports around the nation last summer. He pleaded guilty to telling an emergency room nurse that a needle he found in the can hit his tongue. He made a similar report to the local Pepsi distributor and later showed the can and syringe to the manager of a supermarket where he bought a 12-pack of Diet Pepsi.

What part of 'no' confused the DOE?

Maybe the least surprising news of the past week was that another prediction by critics of the federal Energy Department came true.

Just as the Snake River Alliance and other critics had forecast, the Energy Department acknowledged that it was considering the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory as one of three sites to receive as many as 15,000 spent-fuel shipments from foreign nuclear reactors.

This is the same department that has been denying for years that it would try to solve other countries' problems by dumping more foreign radioactive waste in the Idaho desert.

It's the same agency that vowed that New Mexico's Waste Isolation Pilot Plant would be up and running and accepting the radioactive waste stored in Idaho by now. And it's the same outfit that denied that Idaho would unwillingly become host for more commercially generated nuclear refuse from out-of-state.

When it comes to INEL, it seems as if almost anything that the Energy Department denies is destined to come true in spite.

In her relations with states that are the sites of DOE facilities, we had hoped that new Energy Secretary Hazel O'Leary might have dealt from the top of the deck.

No such luck. And in retrospect, we should have known better.

The Energy Department remains what it's been for years: the Professor Harold Hill of federal bureaucracy.

It's government by sweet talk and shell game, where nothing is ever quite as it seems. For short-term political gain, there's no promise that can't be broken — along, of course, with plausible deniability that any promise was ever made in the first place.

Idahoans have long since learned that living with the Energy Department is a never-ending Showdown at Credibility Gap.

And those of us who depend on the aquifer that lies beneath the eastern Idaho wasteland, where all that foreign radioactive garbage would be cached, have found that the most effective means of dealing with the DOE is a good lawyer.

So let there be no misunderstanding this time: If Energy Department bureaucrats think Gov. Cecil Andrus gave them a tough time when they tried to foist more commercial and Navy-generated radioactive garbage on Idaho, let them try to force foreign readers' leavings on us.

It's really very simple, Madam Secretary: Idahoans won't stand for it.

Stop being moral hypocrites

It is ironic that our society feels that an $82 fine is not enough for the crime of littering a biodegradable Kleenex wyc at the same time supports unrestricted abortion on demand as a fundamental human right. It would seem reasonable that if one was only slightly concerned about having a clean environment for future generations, one would have to be extraordinarily concerned about protecting the unborn babies of the future generation from the surgical instruments and tools of dismemberment and death.

Is it more important to worry about a litter-free planet while more than 4,000 unborn babies are slaughtered each day in America alone? We have achieved the same average daily rate of murder that Hitler did during the Holocaust. The Third Reich used the argument that a clean environment meant eliminating 6 million undesirable Jews. Since 1972, we have taken the lives of 30 million, more than five times the number that the Nazis massacred.

As Jack Kemp recently said, "... the right to life is a gift from God, not a gift from the state. Abortion must never rest easy on the conscience of our nation."

How long can we continue to be moral hypocrites? Stopping abortion must be more important than stopping trivial littering.

Highway will be slipperier

Has anyone noticed Highway 93 between Rogerson and Jackpot? It's bad enough that there is no chip rock on it and that it will be slipperier than Hades this winter, but now we have a highway without any double lines for 18 miles over hills and around curves. For the locals, that might not be too bad because we use the road all of the time, but how about the out-of-stater who doesn't travel this road, especially in the fog?

Slams on somebody. Are they going to wait until next year to paint on "no passing" double lines like they are the chip rock? Does this leave someone open for a good lawsuit in case of an accident?

Renters don't respect property

For the past few years and especially the past few months, there has been a lot of talk about a housing shortage in the Magic Valley because of population growth throughout the area.

Each year it seems like more people than the previous year move into the area, which creates more of a housing shortage. Also, there is much talk about high rent on homes.

I have worked in the Magic Valley as a house painter for almost 16 years. I realize there is a housing shortage, but I also realize there is another shortage. A shortage of respect for other people's property. I have painted the interior of rental houses that have been left a total mess when renters moved out. I have seen jam and peanut butter smeared on walls. I have also seen the contents of dirty baby diapers smeared on houses. I have seen, in what were very nice houses or apartments, the light fixtures and kitchen cabinets break loose from the ceiling.

When these things happen, the landlord has no other choice after he pays to have things replaced and repaired but to charge the monthly rent and require a large cleaning deposit on the next renter while the renter who did the damage goes on his merry way.

The landlord has to keep raising the rent to keep their property in good repair in hopes they will eventually find a good renter. I know of rental property after damage was repaired, the landlord has locked the doors, never to be rented again. They do this because the price of repair exceeds the monthly rent income and it becomes a non-profit business.

If we, as fellow human beings, would have treated each other with a little more respect and common courtesy in the past, some of the problems we have now would be minimal or non-existent.

Do we want world government?

Soon, the United Nations will celebrate 48 years of doing nothing to establish world peace. In Somalia, our armed forces received no backup and many of our men lost their lives — for what? For years the United Nations has been quietly building a world power, or I may say a super world power. Now our military-hating, draft-dodging president is handing over our armed forces to United Nations control. Our soldiers are now wearing United Nations insignia and United Nations caps.

We cannot solve our own national problems so we are spread out around the world trying to solve small national problems at the cost of United States lives and millions of dollars.

Do we want our own federal government or a world government? Does our national sovereignty not come to an end when we submit to a super world power such as the United Nations?

Week affords awareness

Alcohol affects the lives of everyone I know. Many of my parishioners and friends have chosen to eliminate alcohol from their lives and the rest of the people I know, including myself, consume alcohol to some degree or another. Therefore, the annual observance of Red Ribbon Week allows all of us to accomplish two things that are important for young and old alike.

First, by participating in Red Ribbon Week events, we demonstrate our awareness that drug and alcohol abuse are devastating diseases and acknowledge that their elimination is vital to the welfare of our community. Secondly, Red Ribbon Week gives each of us an opportunity to re-evaluate our personal use of alcohol — a more often process that probably should occur more frequently than once a year.

This would be a perfect time to wear a red ribbon and begin your own reflections about the place of alcohol in your life and in the lives of those you love.

Red Ribbon Week gives each of us opportunities to show our concern for those who struggle with drugs and alcohol. Wear a button. Tie a red ribbon to your car. Decorate your business in red. And while you are demonstrating your concern over the abuse of alcohol and other drugs among our young people, perhaps you will find your way to a better understanding of your own needs and desires concerning the use of these powerful substances.

Please participate in Red Ribbon Week. It could be the start of something very important for someone you care about and for yourself.

More law enforcers needed

I thought there were new, tougher laws against drinking and driving. I've also noticed how many alcohol-related accidents there have been in the past months.

Our county has grown considerably in the past couple of years. By looking at the statistics, we can realize we need more law enforcement people hired. If you think we have enough on duty now, you need to pull your head out (of the sand) and see the truth.

There are not enough deputies to go and travel all the roads we have in this county. Two deputies on at night just does not cut it, but if someone needs an officer at night and he or she is on the other side, then we hear complaints. It doesn't take a genius to figure out there does need to be a bigger budget for law enforcement.

This is drug awareness week, and I hope everyone will take a moment to decide if they are responsible enough to be behind the wheel if they choose to drink. If not, get a designated driver. We are all responsible for our own actions. I have lost two sons in alcohol-related accidents, and it is very sad for my family and I to witness another family going through the pain and agony that we went through and sometimes still do.

We all need to be aware.

Schools, think of losing coach, keeping teacher

One of the more impragable notions of our society is that team sports keep young people out of trouble. It seems so logical. More time on the basketball court, soccer field or hockey rink is less time on the nasty streets, right?

How many times have you seen or read sports stories like: "Whitlind's talents saved him from crime, drugs and despair?" From basketball teams for immigrant settlement houses in the early 1900s to today's 30 hours of weekly football practices, the belief that sports discipline the young infests everyone from parents who hold children back to let their bodies mature for football to politicians who think the way to relate to inner-city boys is better done by shooting hoops than by reading them a book.

Evidence is growing that sports are not an automatic social enlightener. A recent issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association reported that some studies are finding that there are no conclusive data to support the belief that school sports discourage unhealthy behavior.

The University of Pittsburgh's Epidemiology of Sports Injury Study found 47 students from the 7th to 9th grade (12-16 years old) in a Pittsburgh-area community who said they had not smoked, drunk alcohol or carried a weapon in the previous 30 days.

The number was a story in itself. It represented only a third of the students in these studies. Nearly two-thirds of the students had already engaged in one of the three above unhealthy behaviors.

One year later, 9, 12 and 15 percent of the previously "clean" students had smoked, drunk or carried a weapon at least once in the last 30 days. But while 17 percent of boys who did not play a team sport said they were now drinking, 17 percent of boys who played one or two sports teams and 23 percent of boys who played on three or more drank.

The athletes most likely to drink alcohol were soccer players (35 percent), soccer players (28 percent) and baseball players (25 percent). Football players were more likely to carry weapons. Among girls, 27 percent of softball players and 22 percent of cheerleaders reported drinking.

Deborah Aron, a graduate student of the University of Pittsburgh School of Public Health who presented her findings this summer to the American College of Sports Medicine, said, "We have found no consistent evidence (among the previously clean students) that high levels of physical activity or aerobic fitness in adolescence were protective against the acquisition of adverse health behaviors."

Last year, researchers at UCLA School of Medicine found in a survey of 109 athletes and 110 nonathletes at the same college that athletes drank more alcohol in one sitting, drove more while under the influence of drugs or alcohol, rode more with drunk drivers, used seat belts less and had more sexual partners and more incidents of sexually transmitted diseases than nonathletes.

This year, UCLA researchers compared 401 college athletes to see which risky behaviors were statistically significant, by sport. Football, water polo and soccer players were more likely to engage in drinking and driving behaviors. Many soccer players did not wear motorcycle helmets.

Dr. Aurelia Nattiv said the study was at "one university at one location" and the findings may not be generalizable. But they should also give us caution about reflexively pushing the line that sports gives us disciplined citizens.

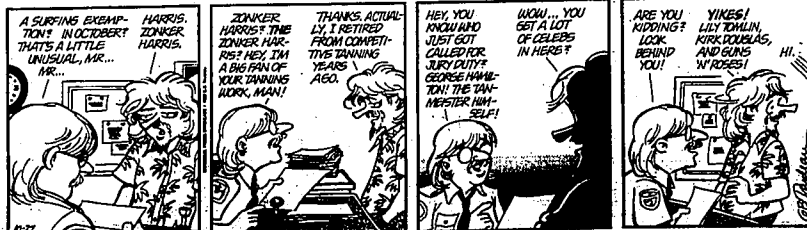

Perhaps we have given sports such a high priority that many participants do not feel accountable for their behavior. Was it an accident that the scene Walt Disney filmed and then cut from its current movie "The Program" involved drunken football players who lie in the middle of a highway?

Perhaps it is time to rethink what disciplines we need in the first place. Perhaps when schools cut their budgets they will start thinking about hiring a coach for the football team and instead keep the English teacher.

Noose tightens around Colombian drug kingpin

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — The helicopter, carrying men in combat fatigues and cradling automatic rifles, rushed over the verdant landscape toward a mountain where a shack was perched midway up its flank.

Escobar

Word was that Pablo Escobar — drug kingpin, suspected mass murderer and one of the most wanted men in the world — was hiding inside.

The men leaped out as the chopper landed at the base of the mountain just outside Medellin. Another squad jumped from a helicopter at the summit.

As the two units converged, two women ran out of the shack and were quickly captured. Inside, the men — members of an elite force who've been hunting Escobar since his prison escape 15 months ago — found two assault rifles, the drug lord's personal papers and two-way radios.

But no Escobar. He apparently had slipped into the woods just as the assault began.

"We were so close," said Gustavo de Greiff, the nation's prosecutor-general, who described the Oct. 11 operation in an interview.

Escobar, who has an $8.7 million reward out for him offered by Colombia and the United States, had eluded capture once again.

But lawmen say the noose is tightening. Of the nine Medellin cocaine cartel members who escaped with Escobar from a luxury prison in July 1992, all have surrendered or been killed. The last was his bodyguard, Alfonso Puerta, nicknamed "the Little Angel," who was shot dead by security forces Oct. 6.

"Every day he has less and less friends and people on his side," said a top law enforcement official. "Little by little, he's running out of room and out of time."

The official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Escobar is still wealthy — with land holdings and cuts on cocaine shipments — but has trouble getting fast cash.

Although Escobar's cartel has been splintered and surpassed by the Cali cartel as the world's main supplier of cocaine, he is still dangerous.

Escobar allegedly ordered bombings that have killed 62 people since his escape. He is blamed for the slayings of hundreds of people, including government ministers, presidential candidates, judges and police officers, during the height of the drug war in the 1980s.

De Greiff, who is responsible for bringing Escobar to justice, said he himself has received death threats.

"I'm told that to install bullet-proof glass would be expensive," de Greiff said. "I can't see spending that money to protect myself when other prosecutors who work for me are doing their jobs without protection."

Enrique Parejo knows about the deadliness of the Medellin cartel. The former justice minister should be dead. Instead, he recently sat in his living room, next to a vase of red and white carnations, and calmly described how a cartel hit man tried to kill him in January 1987 in Budapest, Hungary, where he was ambassador.

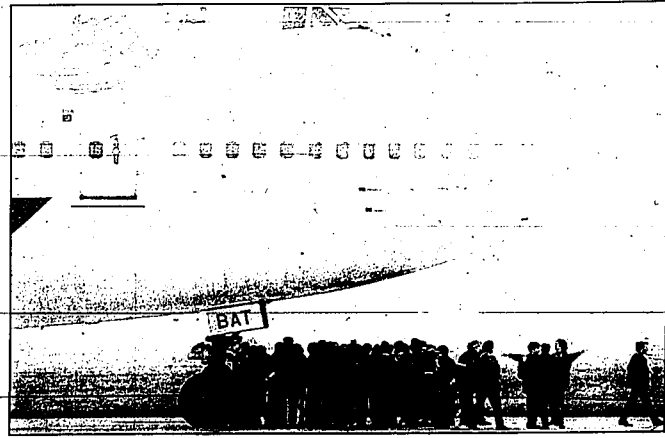

"He asked me 'Are you Enrique Parejo?' I said, 'Yes.' He pointed a pistol at my head and began shooting."

One bullet smashed through his right cheekbone and lodged near his spine. Another went through his mouth and exited through his left upper jaw. Two more hit his arms.

"He tried to give a coup de grace, with one last bullet into the head, but it didn't penetrate my skull. It just passed between my skull and my scalp," Parejo said, running his finger along the bullet's path.

Parejo, now fully recovered from the attack, had earned the enmity of the cartel as justice minister from 1984 to 1986, by extraditing a dozen traffickers to the United States.

Escobar surrendered in June 1991 after Colombia's government barred extraditions and promised him leniency. He and his lieutenants were allowed to stay in a luxury prison where he continued trafficking and even ordered the executions of rivals.

Striking Air France employees block a Pakistan International Airlines jumbo jet at Orly airport south of Paris Tuesday. Pilots, airport employees and Air Inter personnel joined the 2-week-old strike of Air France groundworkers. The jet was delayed for half an hour.

Workers defiant as French air strike widens; airports still open

PARIS (AP) — Strikers marched across runways, shot off fireworks and carried a coffin representing ailing Air France as a two-week-old walkout widened to pilots and airport workers Tuesday.

Flight display boards were blacked out and check-in lines were snarled, but officials insisted foreign airlines were little affected by the walkout at Orly and Charles de Gaulle airports.

While the wider strike was to last only 24 hours, some union leaders vowed to continue their walkout until the government agrees to scrap plans to cut 4,000 jobs at the money-losing state-owned airline. Air France freight employees went on strike Oct. 12, and ground workers joined in a week later.

Air France, which is expected to lose $1 billion this year, also planned to cut wages and sell off some subsidiaries as part of its austerity program.

Workers' Force, which represents about 35 percent of the ground employees, called for an end to the walkout. But two other unions representing ground employees said they would wait until Wednesday to decide.

Freight workers voted Tuesday to stay off the job until the government drops legal action against strikers, pays workers for strike days and begins talks immediately.

The strike, costing tens of millions of dollars so far, has posed the biggest challenge yet to the six-month-old conservative government of Premier Edouard Balladur. He has promised to cut a huge government deficit and sell off 21 state-owned companies.

Marc Blondel, secretary general of the Workers' Force union, worried that privatization of Air France "would be dramatic."

"There isn't any major disturbance" for foreign carriers, "but there's been a deterioration in service," said airport spokesman Jacques Reder.

Spokesman for American, Trans World and United Airlines as well as British Airways, the biggest foreign carrier in Paris, said at midday that all of their incoming and outgoing flights were on schedule.

Reder said several hundred police were deployed at each airport, but there were no reports of violence.

Gang beats refugee

FRANKFURT AN DER ODER, Germany (AP) — A gang of youths battered a Chinese refugee with baseball bats during a rampage through eastern Germany in a stolen car that ended with their arrests, police said Tuesday.

In addition to badly injuring the 30-year-old refugee Monday, the three teen-agers and a 20-year-old ran over two bicyclists, smashed apartment windows, robbed a gas station and threatened other refugees and children.

The youths didn't belong to any right-wing organization and apparently none had a criminal record, police said.

Dominicans send Haitians back home

SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic — The Dominican Republic is returning thousands of Haitians to their homeland despite political uncertainty and poverty in that troubled land.

"We are not persecuting the Haitians. We are simply continuing our program of repatriation of foreigners who live illegally in the country," Dominican immigration director Hector Vilario Caminero said Monday.

"We ought to be deporting 1,000 or more illegal Haitians daily, but we do not have the resources," he said. There are an estimated 500,000 to 1 million illegal alien Haitians in the Dominican Republic.

Israeli right-winger runs for top spot

TEL AVIV, Israel — Right-wing politician Rafael Eitan, the army's chief of staff during the 1982 invasion of Lebanon, announced Tuesday he was running for prime minister.

Eitan, 64, speaking at a news conference, called for moving up the elections because of the Sept. 13 Israel-PLO accord, which he opposes. His Tsomet party objects to dialogue with the Palestine Liberation Organization.

The next election, scheduled for 1996, will be Israel's first in which the prime minister is elected directly. Under the old system, by which Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin was chosen in 1992, a prime minister had to negotiate for a majority in Parliament.

Leftist Cabinet controls Polish economy

WARSAW, Poland — A new leftist Cabinet that gives former Communists control over the economy was sworn in Tuesday, ending a four-year rule of Solidarity-rooted parties.

The government of Waldemar Pawlak must win parliament's approval before it formally takes office. Approval is expected with a vote this week.

President Lech Walesa urged the new Cabinet not to waste the economic achievements of the outgoing government of Hanna Suchocka. Economic growth of 4.5 percent is predicted for this year.

U.S. diplomat asks Russian troops to leave

RIGA, Latvia (AP) — Secretary of State Warren Christopher arrived Tuesday in Latvia and immediately called on Russia to withdraw its remaining 16,000 troops from this Baltic state that is looking westward in economics and politics.

Christopher, hoping to make it easier for Moscow to yield, boosted the idea of full citizenship rights for the Russian-speaking minority that makes up 34 percent of the population and, in many families, goes back several generations.

Latvia was Christopher's last stop on an eight-day trip that has been focused on U.S. efforts to accelerate the denuclearization of three other former Soviet republics, Ukraine, Kazakhstan and Belarus.

That effort has had mixed results. Belarus is complying with its pledge of May 1992 to dismantle its 81 long-range nuclear missiles.

But Ukraine and Kazakhstan are taking their time — as Russia is about withdrawing the 16,000 troops that along with a naval base and a major installation are the last vestiges of 50 years of Soviet occupation.

"The United States supports the early and complete withdrawal of Russian troops from the soil of Latvia," Christopher said at the airport.

Auditorium plan squeezes students, budget

By Kirk Mitchell
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls High School student body would fit — albeit much more tightly — in an auditorium proposed by architects Tuesday night in a special meeting.

But maybe more importantly, the new $2.28 million proposal would fit the school district's tight budget, said Scott Theobald, architect for Design West.

"We've designed a building that the school district could afford to buy," Theobald said. "We think we can still provide a pretty terrific auditorium for Twin Falls."

Board met to hear Design West's proposal for scaling down the auditorium after construction bids came in $900,000 higher than the district could afford earlier this month.

Board members voted Tuesday night to reject the earlier bids, but postponed directing Design West to finish drawings on the new building that would not include a balcony, an orchestra pit or a fly loft.

Board member Calvin Lamborn said residents should be given the opportunity to see the latest plans and comment about them, particularly since many of them donated money to expand the auditorium from 1,000 seats.

Jim Coles of Design West said when and if the board gives approval for the latest plans, his company will redesign the building for no additional cost.

The district could open new bids by February and start construction in March, Coles said. Construction would take about nine months, he said.

Theobald said the biggest cost savings in the newer design is related to eliminating the balcony and lowering the height of the structure by 15 feet.

Lowering the ceiling cut the amount of required masonry by a third, he said.

The footprint of the building will remain the same as the original design because seats were brought closer together and some space was added when the stairway to the balcony was eliminated.

Commission denies zoning request for apartments

By Sean L. McCarthy
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — About 20 people said Tuesday that a plan to bring 110 new apartments into their neighborhood would bring too many young people, too much traffic and too much noise.

Don Zuck, a Rose Street resident, said he was concerned that the additional residents would pose an undue burden to the neighborhood.

"The selection for the place is very wrong," Zuck said.

City planners Tuesday agreed, denying a zoning request that would have allowed the construction of 110 studio apartments between Filer Avenue West and the Rose Street cul-de-sac — an area where senior citizens and families with small children live.

Tim McMaster had asked the city planning and zoning commission for a zoning change on 4.39 vacant acres to allow for the planned unit development. The proposed apartments could provide ideal housing for students at the College of Southern Idaho or retirees, he said.

"I think everybody knows that the need is there," he said.

Neighborhood residents agreed that Twin Falls needed additional housing, but they disapproved of the location for the new apartments.

The residents present at the meeting said that increased traffic would be dangerous for their children and for children attending Perrine Elementary School or Robert Stuart Junior High School, located about a block north of the proposed development.

"I agree there needs to be more housing," said Lewis Bunnell, a Filer Street resident. "Ten or 12 (units) maybe, but 110? I don't think so."

Debate among the commission members centered on the proposed density of McMaster's housing.

Building four-plexes on the land, which can be done under current zoning, would increase traffic, Scott Allen of EHM Engineers said. While the number of units would decrease to about 72, he said, the number of cars would increase because the housing would be family-oriented.

Each studio apartment would be only 320 square feet, McMaster said.

Commission member Ken Stutzman said he agreed with residents who argued that the neighborhood could not accommodate 110 new residents.

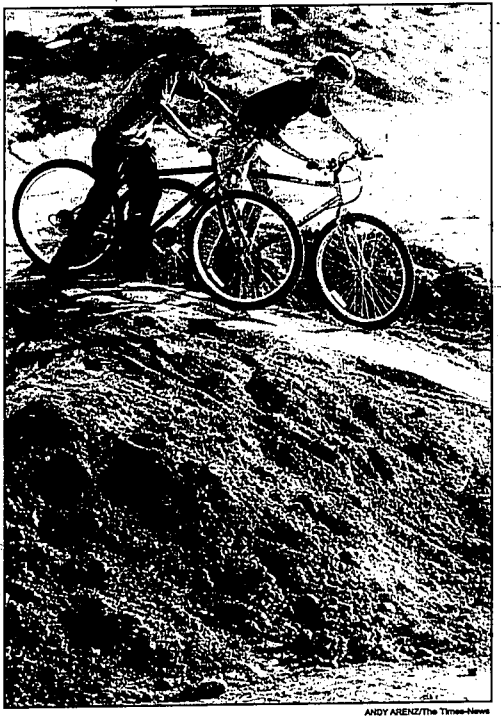

"In my opinion, it's too many people," he said.

Member Fran Florence said he saw no coalition forming on the commission that could argue to the development Tuesday night under any conditions.

After the vote, Allen said that he and McMaster would need to meet again with the commission to figure out what proposal could gain the commission's approval.

"We've got to talk to these guys and see what they like," Allen said.

Trailblazers

Unopposed Clow: Sales tax may counter growth

By Sean L. McCarthy
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Lance Clow is running unopposed for City Council Nov. 2, but don't tell him that.

Clow, 46, has brochures at the ready and signs placed around town as if he were being challenged to fill the seat vacated by Councilwoman Pam Dowd.

The treasurer of the Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce, Clow said in an interview with The Times-News last week that he had intended to run "against the least resistance possible."

"But he was surprised to hear of Dowd's retirement."

"There's no magic to why I'm running for a particular seat," he said. "I wanted to run four years ago."

Clow was a senior vice president and marketing director at Twin Falls Bank & Trust in 1990 when his job was eliminated. He is currently an independent financial planner with IDS Financial Services, and said that the career change sidetracked his plans for political involvement.

Clow said that he is inquisitive by nature and will encourage debate and free-flowing discussions on the City Council.

"My father always said that I should have been a judge," he said.

Often a short-term decision has long-term ramifications, and those ramifications need to be seen and discussed before the decisions are made, he said.

Clow said that he has been "struggling" with the issue of the city's growth, especially as it has increased the city's daytime population of shoppers and workers from neighboring towns.

Growth has created a need for increased services, he said.

Seeking a local option sales tax from the Legislature may be the answer, he said. "We need to find some way to pay for these services," he said.

"Population growth hasn't really scared me," he said. "If you've got a nice town, people are going to move here."

About Lance Clow

Age: 46
Education: Bachelor's degree in economics, California Lutheran University
Occupation: Personal financial planner, IDS Financial Services
Personal: Married to Dee Dee Clow, a former teacher at Lincoln Elementary School; two children: Tami, a sophomore at California Lutheran University; and Kelly, a junior at Twin Falls High School.
Activities: Treasurer of Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce; past president of Twin Falls Kiwanis Club; member of Magic Valley Regional Medical Center Foundation; led volunteer effort to build the community swimming pool on Locust Street.

He said that he can relate to the concern of the area's best residents because his boyhood home in Southern California was bought out for a freeway. Locust Street is bound to be extended to Pole Line Road, but extension of Fillmore Street now is too expensive, he said.

And he said he "would not encourage" a temporary solution for Fillmore. Placing a stop light on Fillmore or removing on-street parking would cause more long-term damage to the neighborhood's quality than extending the street will, he said.

But Clow would support more improvements to Blue Lakes Boulevard.

"I think we need to control where people turn on Blue Lakes," he said.

He said he would support building a series of landscaped islands in the middle turning lane along Blue Lakes Boulevard North. The islands would beautify the main artery and control traffic, he said, but funding for the islands would have to come from state grants.

Funding constraints also hamper the city's efforts to control increased crime.

"The long-term solution has to be more police officers," he said, "but the budget is maxed."

Public agencies no longer exempt from landfill fees

By Sean L. McCarthy
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The county is telling most government agencies to pick up their own tabs on future dumping at the county landfill.

"We learned in our bonding that all of these entities were dumping for free," Commissioner Marvin Hempleman said Tuesday.

Hempleman said that because the county issued a tax-free bond toward construction of the new landfill at Hub Butte, the county no longer may allow free dumping there.

The county has enacted a new policy to clarify the county's responsibility to the bonding agency.

"If an agency generates its own waste, that department must pay for disposal of the waste."

"If an agency is responsible for picking up and disposing public waste, that department will not have to pay disposal costs."

The two agencies in Twin Falls County that will continue to be exempt from dumping fees are the Twin Falls Humane Society and the South Central Community Action Agency.

The humane society only uses the landfill for the burial of animals, Hempleman said, and the South Ce-Non-ral Community Action Agency, supported mostly by grants, already maintains its own contract with FSI Waste Systems.

But 19 city agencies, three county agencies, seven school districts, the College of Southern Idaho and 11 state and federal agencies will begin paying for their own wastes.

Changing these agencies for landfill use will pose a "hardship" because the fee changes came after the 1993-94 fiscal year started, Hempleman said.

"The worst part of it is we didn't budget for it," he said.

The county will enforce the changes "now that we know we have to fix it," he said.

Darrell Heider, the county's solid-waste director, said Tuesday that recycling could soften the economic impact on public agencies. Aluminum cans, paper and cardboard can be recycled, thereby lessening the amount of waste each department takes to the landfill, he said.

Candidates north of the river seek support before elections

By Terrell Williams
Times-News correspondent

Elections in southern Idaho are less than a week away, and all across the Magic Valley candidates are lining up for the Nov. 2 contests.

Hagerman

Six people have filed for two Hagerman City Council seats.

Incumbent Mike Wintner is seeking a second four-year term. Wintner, 46, is a district equipment representative for an industrial equipment company. He said he wants to stay on the council to be part of the city's continued progress.

"I like the team effort," he said. "I don't have any problem with the way the city is going right now."

Amber Artburn, 24, is a weigh-master at a sugar processing plant. She said she wants to be on the council because she enjoyed her previous work for the city, serving six years as librarian. She also served four years on the library board.

Bob Bonning, 42, is a fourth generation

"I have no big plans for change," he said. "I am an extension of the people of Hagerman and I just want to carry out the wishes of the majority of the people."

Connie Brown, 32, grew up in Hagerman and is a homemaker with three children. She said she has attended numerous council meetings and has seen issues she would like to work on as a council member.

"I plan on being fair," Brown said. "I don't play favorites or anything like that, and I do know the difference between right and wrong."

Carey fire district seeks $175,000 block grant for storage buildings

By Barbara Neiven
Times-News correspondent

HAILEY—The Carey Fire Protection District is applying for a grant to build two storage buildings to house fire trucks and equipment in Carey and Picabo.

The district is seeking a $175,000 Idaho Community Block Grant from the Region IV Development Association.

The grant proposal would be locally matched with $130,000 in donations of time, materials and in-kind contributions.

Monday Blaine County Commissioners said the project was worthwhile and agreed to sponsor it. Since Carey and Picabo are not incorporated cities, the block grant must be applied for under the jurisdiction of the next highest governmental agency, which is Blaine County.

In a land swap arranged between Blaine County and the Idaho Department of Transportation, a building site would be available on the north end of Carey by the abandoned gravel pits. Of the more than 50 acres included in the deal, Blaine County would lease three acres to the fire district for their building and right of way for utilities.

A potential one-acre site in Picabo could be acquired through a donation of property by Bud Purdy and Department of Transportation, said Dennis Patterson, fire district commission chairman.

As of Oct. 1, residents in the Picabo and Gannett areas seceded from the Wood River Rural Fire District, said Patterson.

This has increased the area to 600 square miles that the volunteer fire and quick response units must cover. The Carey Fire Protection District provides services for 770 people plus the new residents in Picabo and Gannett, Patterson said.

The building in Carey that houses the quick-response vehicle and extrication truck is an old, uninsulated building with a gravel floor. Emergency vehicles are housed in borrowed, unheated buildings in Picabo, Patterson said.

Plans call for a basic building in Carey with metal or polysteel walls and concrete floor. It would have three bays for vehicles, an office and training room. The Picabo building would be similar and offer two storage bays. Patterson said the architect's projected cost is about $200,000, but the fire district plans to cut off some of the frills, including a decorative tower.

"We want our buildings to be functional," Patterson said.

If any funds are left over after the buildings are complete, plans call for the purchase of firefighters personal protective gear. It costs about $800 to properly outfit one firefighter, Patterson said.

The block grant is designed for communities that have at least 54 percent of its residents falling within the low to middle income bracket.

The population in the fire district's portion of Blaine County represented by this income bracket is currently 72 percent, said Johnny Andrew, fiscal manager of Region IV Development Association.

A public meeting in Carey Monday night drew about a dozen people to ask about the grant. No one expressed opposition to the proposal, Patterson said.

Another public meeting to review the final plan will be held at 7 p.m. Nov. 1 at the Carey School. The application will be submitted Nov. 5. Final selection by Gov. Cecil Andrus will be made in mid-March, Andrew said.

Buhl council OKs trailer move

By Bertilla L. Redfern
Times-News correspondent

BUHL — Bob Goff will be able to stay in his home of 11 years.

"I feel a lot better," Goff said Tuesday evening after hearing about the City Council's ruling this week to allow the mobile home he rents to be moved.

Goff's trailer is located on the property of Jackson's Country Korner Cafe, but it did not meet city codes and had approval of the restaurant-store's operating permit.

The council decided to allow the trailer to be moved to a site prepared by Jackson's in the city's impact area — an area outside the city likely to be annexed in the future.

Council members also gave the Jacksons till Dec. 1 to relocate the trailer. And they now meet all requirements to keep their restaurant and convenience store open beyond the November 31st deadline.

"The council made its decision following the advice of their City Attorney Bill Nungester. Nungester said if the city ruled the mobile home could be moved, there would be no challenge from the county or state.

Nungester reviewed several codes with council members and said it was his opinion that the codes did not present a problem with moving the mobile home to the impact area.

He said "based on all the issues, the mobile home should be moved to the site prepared on Carter Park Road."

A letter from the Attorney General's Office said that the definition of mobile home could fit into either a manufactured home or a recreational vehicle. It also said "the owner of the unit may certainly claim that he owns a 'mobile home' within the meaning of the city's ordinance."

Marie Maier, the only council member opposed to moving the mobile home, said that she preferred it remain where it is for another six months, while another alternative is sought. She said she felt the location was safer under city fire protection than in the impact area.

Linda Jackson said "Mr. Goff said he has aged 20 years over this and leaving him there another six months would not be good for him."

The Jacksons have the building and moving permits for the site that was prepared on Carter Park Road. And because Goff has been living in the mobile home for the past 11 years, Nungester said it would not be necessary for them to buy an occupancy permit.

The only other obstacle the Jacksons might encounter is a permit from the State Electrical Inspector, who will have to approve the trailer's wiring. Goff could be settled in the new location by Dec. 1, if there are no electrical problems.

Wendell mayor, council dispute business's request for water line

By Steve Koehler
Times-News correspondent

WENDELL—A request from a local business for a water line for fire protection has ignited a disagreement between the mayor and City Council.

On Oct. 14, Jim Kelly, vice president of Magic Valley Growers, requested that the City Council order a water line installed along D Avenue West.

"I'd feel a lot safer if I had something to fight a fire with," Kelly said.

Low water pressure in the 1.5-inch line to the property was inadequate for watering the landscape, he said, but it was OK for domestic use.

Council President Mike Weitzstein said the fire department now would have to pump water 800 feet from the nearest hydrant, and that would require a relay pumper. Weitzstein said he remembers an oral agreement between the council and Magic Valley Growers 16 years ago, in which the company would buy the pipe and the city would install it.

Mayor George Benson said the matter was discussed but that no motion was passed.

Kelly said he would look up the date of that council meeting-agreement and tell the city office so that the tape could be reviewed.

Because one councilman was absent and other voices were in a borrowed room, the meeting ended early and resumed the following week.

At last week's meeting, Weitzstein moved that the city accept the offer from Magic Valley Growers to buy 6-inch pipe and have the city install it on D Avenue West to Wallace Street, and install a hydrant at it's end.

Benson said the 1.5-inch water line to Magic Valley Growers goes down Wallace Street. He argued that a water line down D Avenue West is a new extension, and that city ordinance says the property owner pays for it.

Weitzstein said Magic Valley Growers is a business that pays taxes and that he thought the city is required to pay for fire protection.

Councilman Dale Bunn said he thought the Magic Valley Growers offer was reasonable.

Benson said if someone starts a housing development they're going to pay taxes too.

Weitzstein said Magic Valley Growers already has water and sewer services so the city is not extending service to them.

"The 6-inch water line is for fire protection they don't have," Weitzstein said.

After some discussion about who should pay, the motion passed.

The city ordinance says anyone may apply to have a water line extended. If the city approves, it may, at its discretion, require the applicant to make the installation or it may install the line itself.

"In either case, the entire cost of such installation shall be borne by the applicant," the ordinance says.

Ranch owners propose land trade
KETCHUM — Owners of the Board Ranch property near Ketchum are proposing a land exchange with the Forest Service to resolve a recently discovered encroachment onto public land.

A five-acre parcel of land in the area known as the Charles and Stine has been in contention since 1905, first as a lumber mill and later as part of Board's homestead. A recent survey revealed that the acreage is actually public land under the jurisdiction of the Forest Service.

"To resolve the encroachment, the owners of Board Ranch — Board's Mill and Sunset Ranch — have proposed exchanging five acres of Board Ranch land for the five acres encroached upon.

"We are required by law to resolve encroachments on National Forest System lands," said Alan Pinkerton, Ketchum District Ranger. "A straight-across trade of equal land is in the public's interest, because it will resolve the problem fairly and quickly."

"Details of the proposed exchange are available from the Ketchum Ranger District on Sun Valley Road, phone 622-5371. Public comment is being solicited through Nov. 26. Written comments may be mailed to Ketchum Ranger District, Box 2356, Ketchum, ID 83340.

A half dozen residents attended the meeting, most of them asking the board to include an orchestra pit in the plans.

Shauna Fuller said when she campaigned for an expanded auditorium the plans she showed people included an orchestra pit.

The board would only consider having an orchestra pit or other features like a scene building shop in the auditorium if the district had money to do so, board Chairman Steve Tolman said.

Theobald said an option would be to build removable seating in the first row of the audience area of wood set on a fold-up floor. Under the floor would be a three-foot-deep orchestra pit.

But board member David Sass said taking down the seating and setting up the orchestra pit may be costly. He also said he would not want a classroom used to store the chairs.

Wendell
In the Wendell mayoral race, George Benson is being challenged by David Henstee and Lynn Nelson.

Benson, 66, is at the end of his first four-year term as mayor. He is retired from the postal service. Benson said he wants to see the completion of projects that were started during his term.

"I want to continue to help the City Council run the city like a business," Benson said.

David Henstee, 46, is a professional security officer. He said he has lived in Wendell all his life and would like to donate some time back to the city for all the good times he has had here.

Henstee said he will be open to anyone who wants to discuss the issues with him.

"I will be more than willing to visit," he said.

Lynn Nelson, 46, has been the city attorney for Wendell since 1985. The city needs to plan and regulate growth so it does not affect the quality of life everyone now enjoys, he said.

"I see a couple of things that need to happen in the community," he said.

In the council race, incumbents Dale Bunn and Gwen Rost are challenged by Cliff Harris and Tim Meyer.

Dale Bunn, 64, a retired policeman, is serving his first four-year term on the City Council. Bunn said he enjoys being on the council, and he has the time it takes for the job.

"I just want to be there to look out for the rights of the citizens," he said. "We have to have a new handapped access to city hall. I'd like to see about remodeling the present one we have."

Gwen Rost said she is a lifetime resident of Wendell. She has been on the council for two years and is running for a four-year term.

"I'm retired and I have some time to spend taking care of whoever it is as they raise," Rost said. "I would just like to do anything that I can to help."

Cliff Harris, 64, a credit manager for a farm supply store, said he is running for the seat being left by David Henstee. He said he will retire next spring and will have time for the job.

"I have been approached before (to try for a council position) but I never had time," Harris said. "I felt like right now I had some time and I'd take a shot at it. I think I have something to offer."

Tim Meyer, 38, a self-employed carpenter, said he wants to help Wendell stay the way he has always appreciated it. He said the city government has been lax on long-term planning.

"I'm an honest person and I'll try to do the best I can for the whole city of Wendell, not just individuals," Meyer said.

Court: Land set aside doesn't have own lease

The Associated Press

BOISE — Placing farm land into a federal set-aside program doesn't create an independent lease arrangement on the land, a divided Idaho Supreme Court says.

The court Tuesday voted 3-2 to overturn a Court of Appeals decision and reinstate a district court ruling for William and Irene Farwell in a Cassia County case.

Just because land was placed in reserve under the federal Conservation Reserve Program for 10 years by two parties does not create an independent lease on the land, the court ruled, in a decision written by Justice Linda Copple Trout.

Violet Schiewe argued that because she was party-to-an-agreement-to-put the farm land into the federal set-aside program for 10 years, that in effect gave her an ongoing 10-year lease.

But the Supreme Court ruled the CRP agreement wasn't a separate lease and since Schiewe only had an interest in the land on a renewable, year-to-year agreement, the Farwells and the owners were justified in terminating it.

Court documents describe the case. Farwell used some of his own land and farm land leased from two others to form a 2,800-acre tract.

Violet Schiewe and her late husband, Arthur, farmed the land under a renewable, year-to-year lease with the Farwells from 1974 to 1987. In 1987, the Farwells put the land in the federal set-aside program, with the Schiewes included in the contract as operators.

Arthur Schiewe died in July of 1987.

In 1988, Farwell asked Mrs. Schiewe to sign a five-year lease which would have cut her CRP payments from $50,000 per year to $30,000 per year.

She refused, contending she had a right to remain on the land 10 years under the CRP contract. The Supreme Court held that despite the CRP contract, she had no right to the land other than that which came from the yearly renewable agreement.

"Although Schiewe may be a party to the contract, this contract does not create a right to remain on the cropland for the contract period where no independent right exists," the court majority said.

Trout was joined by Chief Justice Charles McDevitt and Justice Byron Johnson.

Pocatello District Judge Peter McDermott, who sat on the case, dissented, joined by Justice Stephen Bistline, who also wrote a second dissent.

McDermott said the Farwells gained an "unconscionable" advantage over Schiewe, profiting at least $20,000 per year.

Bistline also used the word "unconscionable" to describe the Farwells' treatment of an old neighbor, "notwithstanding that the friendship of Violet Schiewe and William Farwell extended back to the time when they were grade school classmates."

Bistline noted that the CRP agreement stated specifically that it could not be revoked or revised unless both parties agreed, and in the agreement, Bistline said he didn't know what prompted Farwell to make such an unfair offer to his longtime neighbor after her husband died unless he was "activated by avarice and opportunity to increase his net worth."

Vimalaben Patel, a native of Karamsad, India, pours nonfat milk over a bullet-shaped traffic barrier Monday, which has been turned into a shrine devoted to the Hindu deity Siva, in San Francisco's Golden Gate Park. The milk keeps Siva cool.

Barrier reincarnated as Hindu shrine

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — In a past life it was a traffic barrier. Now, it's reincarnated as a Hindu shrine.

The bullet-shaped hunk of granite draws worshippers to a quiet clearing behind the Japanese Tea Garden in Golden Gate Park, off the tourist-beaten path.

"Anyone who wants to can come, a sari-clad Vimalaben Patel said Monday at the shrine dedicated to Siva, Hindu god of rebirth and destruction.

Patel poured her offerings of rice and milk over the rock, lit a candle and incense and began her prayers.

Next to worship Monday was Corky Engel, sporting bicycle shorts, T-shirt and cycling cap.

Presumably unneeded elsewhere, the traffic barrier has been stored in the glen for years. Worshippers began to appear about four years ago, said park gardener Cloyd Buck.

Shrines to Siva are generally phallic-shaped, as is the 4-foot tall barrier.

Some devotees want permission to build a permanent shrine, bringing up the issue of separation of church and state in the city-owned park.

"We're trying to be as sensitive as we can, but it's just not appropriate to build a shrine in the park," said park spokeswoman Deborah Learner.

Environmentalists cool to Clinton forest plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton's Northwest forest plan, already the target of timber industry lawsuits, suffered another blow Tuesday when leading environmentalists warned the strategy is illegal because it allows too much logging.

In a last-ditch effort to persuade Clinton to save more trees, the conservationists said they were providing the administration with new maps showing the president's plan would leave unprotected large tracts of the most significant centuries-old forests.

The strategy offers too little protection for the northern spotted owl, ignores the advice of the government's top fish biologists and threatens with extinction 400 old-growth-dependent species in violation of the National Forest Management Act, they said.

"Based on this analysis, most everybody in the environmental community will come to the conclusion this plan does not meet the test of the National Forest Management Act of the national forest program for the Wilderness Society."

The new claims further jeopardize what Clinton has portrayed as a good compromise protecting old-growth forests while allowing some controlled logging and spending $1 billion on a long-term economic package to help hard-hit timber towns.

Assistant Agriculture Secretary James Lyons, in charge of the Forest Service, defended the plan.

"We think it is substantially sound and we're following the procedure required by law to develop a final plan," he said.

Interior Department spokesman Kevin Sweeney said the administration wants to hear the environmentalists' complaints.

"It doesn't necessarily mean we will be heading back to court" to fight off another lawsuit, he said. "It might mean the plan is adjusted because of the criticism."

Little logging has occurred on federal lands in western Oregon, western Washington and northern California since U.S. District Judge William Dwyer of Seattle ruled in the spring of 1991 that the government harvests were violating the National Forest Management Act. That action came a year after the spotted owl was declared a threatened species, requiring the government to take steps to protect its old-growth habitat.

The Bush administration never did come up with a plan that would satisfy NFMA's wildlife protection standards.

The Clinton administration intends to present its protection plan to Dwyer in December and ask him to lift his 27-year-old injunction so more logging can resume.

But the environmentalists said Tuesday that Clinton's proposed reserve system protects 500,000 fewer acres of suitable owl habitat than the preliminary system proposed by President Bush's spotted owl recovery team.

State officials blast Boise hospital for bonding request

BOISE (AP) — In a stinging indictment of St. Alphonsus Regional Medical Center's commitment to reasonably priced health care, two state officials on Tuesday blasted the hospital for asking taxpayers to subsidize its $40 million expansion.

Health Commissioner Chris Anton defended the request for financing through the Idaho Health Facilities Authority, maintaining the 20-year-old program was intended to let health care facilities benefit from low-interest money.

While the bonds would help the hospital set up services that duplicate those offered at the city's other hospital, St. Luke's, Anton said the additional health care capacity was justified by the region's growth.

But during an unprecedented hearing on the bonding request, Idaho's chief economist and the manager of its worker's compensation insurance fund said the subsidy to provide services for which no need has been proven should be denied a hospital that already reaps millions of dollars in excess income every year.

And a longtime member of the board of St. Luke's, joined others in proposing some kind of system to review health care facility expansion plans to assure they do not lead to costly duplication.

Boise attorney Gene Thomas, emphasizing that he was speaking for himself only, contended St. Alphonsus should not be duplicating cancer, maternity and cardiac care services already provided by St. Luke's.

Chief economist Michael Ferguson pointed out that a nonprofit tax-exempt organization, St. Alphonsus has earned excess income of over $60 million since 1984. Its profits have risen over 450 percent since then while Idaho's personal income has jumped just 75 percent despite enviable economic growth.

The candidates have four minutes to respond to two questions prepared by forum sponsor, the Mini-Cassia Chamber of Commerce, then take questions from the audience. Questions start at about 12:30 p.m. following a noon buffet lunch.

Questions posed to three Rupert Mayor candidates will be: "What do you see as a source of revenue for a city to fund new projects?" and "What one thing best qualifies you for the office of Mayor?"

Questions for Burley, Rupert, Heyburn and Pae city council candidates include: "What two issues do you see as most vital to your community's economic growth?" and "What single project would you like to be remembered for in your first term and how do you propose to fund it and implement it?"

Rupert's mayoral candidates are incumbent Mayor W.F. "Bill" Russell, Joel Rogers and Richard E. Russell.

Candidates running for city council include:

In Rupert (two seats): Dwayne Alfred (incumbent), Cliff Barorka, Steve Barras, June Dombek and George McDonald.

In Heyburn (two seats): Flossie Kay (incumbent), George Froom, Les Steube and Nife Biotom.

In Pae (two seats): Tom Daitley, Darrell Runyon (both incumbents) and Randy Jones.

Questions will start at about 12:30 p.m. Burley Kiwanis Club and Rupert Rotary Club members will attend along with chamber members. For reservations, call the Mini-Cassia Chamber of Commerce at 436-4793.

Utah churchgoers join in protest of adult bookstore

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Churchgoers from southern Utah have joined in a 24-hour picket outside a Mesquite, Nev., adult bookstore.

Members of Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and other Christian churches are sending members to man picket lines outside the Pure Pleasure adult store, which opened last month.

Dave Anderson, a Mormon bishop in Mesquite and a member of a group calling itself Help Our Moral Environment, or HOME, said the group contacted the Utah congregations because many of the store's customers are from Utah.

"(HOME) said 'We know what their market is,'" Anderson said. "And we said, 'We'll be down there.'"

Meantime, Mesquite city officials are considering ordinances that would give them some say in controlling the types of items sold in the store.

The city closed the store for two days in September, but store owners won a federal court injunction to remain open pending a constitutional review of a town law banning such businesses.

Police Chief Michael Murphy said magazines sold in the store are likely protected by the free speech clause of the First Amendment. But he believes other items, euphemistically referred to as "marital aids" and including such things as lubricant creams and blowup dolls, can be regulated.

Utah woman charged with bigotry

OGDEN, Utah (AP) — A Clearfield woman is to be arraigned next week on charges of bigamy and check forgery.

The bigamy charge is the first to be filed in the Ogden area in memory, authorities and court officials said.

South Ogden Police Sgt. Steve Wallerstein said the case began in South Ogden in August, when a Layton man had a check forged from his checking account and passed in a South Ogden bank.

Wallerstein said the man told police he suspected his estranged wife, The man said she had moved out and may have married another man illegally.

The bigamy tip was turned over to the Weber County Sheriff's office for investigation since it involved records kept in county offices.

Wallerstein, in the meantime, located Violet Shearer, 33, in the Weber County Jail on an unrelated charge.

Investigators said the October arrest violated the terms of her recent parole from Utah State Prison on a bad-check conviction and she was returned to prison.

Shearer waived a preliminary hearing and is to be arraigned Nov. 1 before 2nd District Judge Stanton Taylor.

Hot rock source of geothermal heat

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The source of geothermal heat used to generate electricity in southwestern Utah has been found to be a 6- to 9-mile-wide cylinder of partly molten rock miles underground.

The new study of Roosevelt Hot Springs 12 miles northeast of Milford could aid efforts to find more sources of geothermal power under the Milford Valley, geophysicists said.

Their report was published in this month's Journal of Geophysical Research.

The hot springs produce underground pressurized water at temperatures exceeding 446 degrees Fahrenheit, said David J. Becker of the Army Corps of Engineers in Omaha, Neb., and David Blackwell of Southern Methodist University in Dallas.

Since 1984, Intermountain Geothermal Co. has piped steam from the underground springs to Utah Power's Blundell Geothermal Power Plant, which produces 23 megawatts of electricity, enough for roughly 23,000 homes, said Steve Austin, a geothermal field-maintenance operator.

Idaho Utility: Recovery plan choice between bargaining, drawdown

BOISE (AP) — Idaho's largest electric utility sees last week's proposed recovery plan for threatened Northwest salmon runs as requiring policy makers to choose between bargaining and drawdowns as the primary way to reduce destruction of the fish by the hydropower dam system.

Steve Herndon, an attorney for Idaho Power Co., described the 500-page recovery proposal "a fair and accurate discussion of the issues and the options that have been identified to date for the recovery of the fish."

While the plan submitted to the National Marine Fisheries Service by a pair of attorneys addresses a number of issues like fish passage, habitat and hatchery practices, most officials see as key proposals developing improved methods of barging or trucking salmon around the dams and another test drawdown of the reservoir behind Lower Granite Dam in eastern Washington.

Idaho Gov. Cecil Andrus has been a major proponent of drawing down reservoirs to speed the flow of the river so the migrating fish can make it to the sea more quickly. Drawdown supporters maintain a huge number of young salmon die in the slack waters of the reservoirs or are destroyed in the hydropower system.

But the governor maintains the recovery proposals pay only lip service to drawdowns while emphasizing more bargaining, which Andrus says has been shown not to work over the 17 years it has been employed. He called it a sop to downstream water users, who refuse to make the major changes in the operation of the Columbia River Basin that saving the salmon will require.

Idaho Power, however, said it viewed the proposal as a call "for the region to take the steps necessary to make the choice between" drawdowns and barging.

Meanwhile, another new organization has formed to promote downstream interests and reinforce the opposition to Andrus and his drawdown plans.

In the first issue of the Alliance Advocate, the Portland-based Columbia River Alliance for Fish Commerce and Communities blasted the governor's legal action to force drawdowns, warning that it could threaten the Idaho economy.

Alliance Director Bruce Lovell said Andrus' demand for increased water flows could result in the government ordering the water in the Snake River in central and eastern Idaho being diverted from irrigation to downstream flows.

The same warning was issued by the Direct Services Industries, an organization of primarily aluminum producers, in a lawsuit filed against the state of Idaho last week.

Andrus labeled it nothing more than the beginning of the long-awaited downstream grab-for-Idaho water.

Simon the squirrel, seen outside his 'penthouse' at the Huddle Tavern in Lewiston in July has been trained by the employees and patrons to perform tricks in exchange for nuts that are donated by the patrons and stored in the bar's beer cooler. The penthouse, built by the tavern's employees, has a mailbox and a dumbwaiter.

Tavern wildlife kind of squirrel-y

LEWISTON (AP) — The folks at Huddle Tavern are nuts over Simon the squirrel, and they're not ashamed to admit it.

On Simon's behalf, they've raised a squirrel house — complete with a dumbwaiter to transport favorite filberts — above the beer garden.

"We do dumb things for entertainment, like train squirrels," said Jerri Samuels, a bartender at the Huddle.

"We made a pet out of him, so we have to take care of him," said customer Carole Crawford, who regularly brings boxes of nuts to the tavern for Simon.

Bar owner Mabel Strickler said Simon was born in a tree in the tavern's beer garden about a year ago. The squirrel house was raised earlier this month.

The squirrel comes into the bar and retrieves nuts from the jukebox, bar stools and even atop a beer bottle sitting on the pool table. Strickler has assembled a photo album to record the squirrel's best performances. There's also a jar for the "Simon Nut Fund."

"He's smart, I don't care what they say," Strickler said.

Case in point: Ever since Simon got the new house with a dumbwaiter, he seems to prefer to have nuts delivered rather than doing tricks for them, Strickler said.

Squirrel-y jokes are popular here, too.

"Simon's got a prettier tail than most of the other folks around here," said customer Bud Skien.

"There's too much wild life in here already," another patron added.

Simon is believed to be a family squirrel. There's a wife, Henrietta, and three babies: Inky, Dinky and Stinky, Strickler said.

Dennis Thorson, who delivers beer to the tavern, said he sometimes gets waylaid waiting for Simon to finish showing off. But occasionally even a squirrel can go too far, like the time Simon dropped a nut in a pocket of one of the bar's pool tables, stopping play until it could be fished out.

"That's the trouble, we got him spoiled," Strickler said.

"He's sort of a mascot. I'm sure he's the only squirrel in town with his own (photo) album and penthouse."

House OKs money for reactor project

The Associated Press

The U.S. House of Representatives Tuesday approved a report including $112.8 million for the Integral Fast Reactor project at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory — research that provides 900 Idaho jobs.

A conference committee report cleared the House 332-81, as Rep. Michael Crapo, R-Idaho Falls, urged members not to allow this country to slip behind in nuclear research.

The conference report still must clear the Senate, which earlier this year voted to terminate the project. It also must be approved by President Clinton.

Crapo's staff said potential roadblocks still could come up, since legislation introduced earlier to scuttle the project still pending in the House.

The IFR is an advanced reactor designed to recycle and burn its own fuel as well as fuel from other commercial reactors and the plutonium pits from dismantled nuclear weapons.

Engineers at Argonne National Laboratory-West are testing and installing huge machines they hope will make the concept a reality in the next three years.

Rep. Carlos Moorhead, R-Calif., supported Crapo in the floor debate. He said the Idaho research is vital because it could provide some answers about what to do with nuclear waste.

"Without some sort of prospective program to address the nuclear waste problem, I believe we would close out the nuclear option ... that supplies 18 to 17 percent of all electricity in this country," Moorhead said.

Crapo said the research is critical to keep this country on the leading edge of technology.

"Nuclear research is one of those areas that we must not forget," Crapo said. "America will slip that much further behind in this needed area of technology."

In addition to 800 workers in Idaho, the project provides 500 jobs at Argonne's Chicago facilities.

Environmental and tax watchdog groups have attacked the project, saying it is unsafe, costly and unworkable. Scientists insist the IFR could provide a nearly limitless supply of cheap electricity.

Legal battle continues over snack

BLACKFOOT (AP) — Two and a half years after two women were arrested after they took a bag of popcorn into a Rexburg theater, the legal battle continues.

The Idaho Court of Appeals on Monday heard the appeal from one of the women from convictions for trespassing and obstructing, resisting and battering police officers. One of the women said they face $25,000 in legal bills.

And if Joan Thomas, 48, loses her appeal to the Court of Appeals, her attorney said the case might go to the state Supreme Court because of the "outrageous" nature of the charges.

"They thought these women were terrorists," attorney Gary Moeller said.

Thomas, Clearfield, Utah, formerly of Idaho Falls, and her sister, Susan Anderson, 44, Rexburg, took a bag of popcorn into the Holiday Theatre that was purchased elsewhere.

The manager complained, police were called, and officers said they turned into a hissing screaming and kicking battle when they tried to arrest the women.

Both women were convicted of misdemeanors. Anderson did not appeal past the district court level, but Thomas did. Thomas also filed a $300,000 civil suit against the owner and former manager of the theater.

Chief Judge Jesse Walters said the appeals court will issue a decision later. But he asked Moeller why the women did not simply leave the theater and tell others about how they were treated.

"The word is going to get out and people aren't going to buy tickets at that theater," he said. "Isn't that the answer?"

Moeller said that even if Anderson was guilty of a crime by bringing in the popcorn, Thomas was an "innocent bystander" and she didn't deserve the ticket she received from police.

Moeller said the women were illegally arrested because none of the officers personally heard the manager ask them to leave. Police must witness a misdemeanor offense occur before they can make an arrest, Moeller said.

He denied that Thomas bit one of the officers.

Doug Worth, deputy attorney general, said some witnesses testified at trial differently than the sisters. The women were uncooperative with police and refused to leave although they were asked to do so on ten separate times, he said.

Moeller also claimed that three of the 14 people on the jury were members of the Mormon Church ward of which Rexburg City Prosecutor J.D. Hancock was the bishop. That caused an "implied bias," he said.

Aerospace company lands in Post Falls

POST FALLS (AP) — Business at All-American Aviation is booming, even though other subcontractors in the aviation industry are hurting.

In three years, the company has grown from being a tiny contractor for EEMCO, Los Angeles-based division of Dayton, to a company with $4 million in sales and about 45 employees.

All-American, the smaller of two Southern California aerospace companies moving to Post Falls, started production last week even as equipment was being unloaded at Riverbend Commerce Park.

EEMCO next summer plans to move its operations to Post Falls, providing between 130 and 200 jobs.

Both companies make actuators, parts that move wing flaps, cargo doors and other airplane mechanisms.

Bob Potter, president of the Kootenai County business recruiter Jobs Plus, said the two companies will provide a base for further expansion in high-tech manufacturing.

But the trade's newness to Kootenai workers means there are few qualified workers, people with experience in the high-precision manufacturing demanded by the aerospace industry.

George Bekessy, All-American's president, said he is relocating seven key employees from the company's headquarters in Glendale, Calif. The rest of the workers will be trained locally, even though one skilled position had to be filled from outside the region.

All-American's customers include The Boeing Co., McDonnell Douglas Corp., Bombardier/Canadair Inc. and Northrop.

Although EEMCO still is working out the logistics of its move to Post Falls, Potter said All-American decided to move to Idaho because EEMCO, one of its biggest customers, was moving there.

"It wouldn't have made any sense," Bekessy said. "The important thing was for us to be located together."

EEMCO will build its own manufacturing center at Riverbend, owned by the Jacklin Land Co.

EEMCO is the second-largest company to relocate to Kootenai County in recent years. The largest, California furniture maker Harpers Inc., will employ 600 when its Post Falls plant opens early next year.

Reports of missing girls keep Nebraskans on run

PIERCE, Neb. (AP) — Law officers in northeast Nebraska received reports from across the country about young missing girls Tuesday after a report from a motorist who said he saw a girl trying to get away from two men in a car.

"The girl exited, the car, tried to run and was dragged back," Pierce County Sheriff Rick Eberhardt said.

Eberhardt said a motorist reported seeing a 9- to 12-year-old girl yelling and trying to run from a car and two men on the side of a road about 2.7 miles north of the Pierce-Madison County line.

"We have received reports from all over the country on various cases of missing girls since the report of the Nebraska incident went on national law enforcement computers, Eberhardt said.

There were no local reports of missing girls matching the description given by the motorist, who said the girl had shoulder-length blonde hair and wearing blue jeans and a white shirt with a print design on front.

Stephanie Crane, 9, who has been missing from Challis, Idaho, for the last three weeks has dark hair although it is long.

The incident happened Monday morning just north of Norfolk, a community of 21,000 people located about 90 miles northwest of Omaha.

Eberhardt said the motorist stopped and confronted the man, who pulled a gun and fired two shots at the motorist.

The motorist said he then jumped into his car, was chased by the other car and ran into the ditch. The motorist jumped from the car, ran into a field and hid.

Eberhardt said the motorist was not followed to the Norfolk area.

The man then called Norfolk police. "He is scared to death. I've talked to him," said Eberhardt, who said the man didn't want to be publicly identified.

County sheriff's deputies and the Nebraska State Patrol are looking for a two-door late 1970s model medium blue Chevrolet-impala that has a light blue license plate.

Sheriff to return department car

LEWISTON (AP) — The Nez Perce County Sheriff's Department will have to return a car it bought recently because county and state requirements were not met before it was purchased.

The 1993 Ford Tempo GL was bought from Tony Copeland Ford for $10,588.

Nez Perce County Commissioner Ervin Hill said the commissioners learned of the purchase Oct. 15. The purchase was made with money in the 1992-93 budget.

He said the commissioners refused to pay for the car because it was not budgeted for last year.

Hill said county policy requires commissioners be notified before all major equipment purchases exceeding $350.

He also read from an opinion written by Prosecutor Denise Rosend, which quotes an earlier Idaho Supreme Court decision in which the court held the authority to purchase property for use by the county is vested in the county commissioners.

Lone bidder wins fire-burned timber

LEWISTON (AP) — One bid was the top bid for the shunned Selway Fire Salvage timber sale on the Nez Perce National Forest.

Weyerhaeuser submitted the lone bid to buy the fire damaged timber along the Selway River that earlier this month was scorned by bidders altogether.

The company submitted the minimum bid of $88.59 per thousand board feet, or $429,662, said Rosanne Didier of the Nez Perce staff at Grangeville.

Bill Mulligan, resource manager for Weyerhaeuser's Kamiah mill, said the scarcity of bidders reflected the timber sale's status as risky business.

"Whenever you have a fire salvage sale there is always a high degree of risk," he said. The extent of deterioration in the timber contributed to potential bidders' reluctance.

"We were the only ones at the table willing to take that risk," he said.

Mulligan and other industry officials have been a client of U.S. Forest Service handling of salvage timber sales.

Fax helps keep in touch with loved ones

I don't know how I lived for so many years without a fax. Yes, I did it. There's one in my "office" now.

It's no longer "my people will get together with your people and then we'll do lunch." That's definitely old hat in this day of instant contact.

Nancy Joy Jones
Valley cooking

I just "faxed" a recipe to a friend, corrected a bill by "faxing" a copy of the canceled check, sent a note to youngest daughter in Hong Kong, followed up on a story and sent details of a coming convention and food show to Sweden. Now I know it's going to cost me, but, if I got on the line with the daughter of our friends in Sweden, it would cost a whole lot more.

Friend Husband took youngest daughter to Hong Kong a couple of weeks ago. She's going to work and live there for six to 12 months, maybe. Even though she lived in the Netherlands for two years, the Orient is a totally different world.

The first apartments they looked at were exorbitantly expensive - and tiny. By tiny, I mean, smaller than our bathroom, which is 5 feet by 6 feet (without the tub). She finally ended up in the new Terraces, the zone between Hong Kong city and the Chinese border. She takes a train to the Metro station, catches a subway to Kowloon and another to Hong Kong Island. It takes 1 1/2 hours but she has two rooms on the seventh floor with a tiny but adequate kitchen and a bath - and with a security system - all for the same price as the uptown room.

She hasn't seen too many Americans yet, but one of them was Mike Espy, the U. S. Secretary of Agriculture. I can see she's off on another adventure!

Speaking of adventures, have you looked at the squash available right now? Some are just too pretty to eat. I especially like the "urban" shaped ones.

Here are some recipes to help you use them this fall.

Baked Orange Squash

- Preheat oven to 375 degrees, spray a 12-qt baking dish with a non-stick cooking spray.
- 2 cups cooked, mashed butternut or acorn squash
- 1/2 cup frozen orange juice concentrate (unsweetened), thawed
- Dash of ground ginger
- 1/4 teaspoon ground cinnamon
- 1/4 teaspoon grated orange peel
- 1 tablespoon plus 1 teaspoon reduced-calorie margarine
- Brown sugar sweetener equal to 4 firmly packed teaspoons
- Combine all ingredients, mixing well. Bake uncovered for 20 minutes. Serves 4.

Pumpkin Ice Cream Pie

- 1 quart vanilla ice cream
- 1 9-inch pie shell, baked
- 1 cup cooked fresh or canned pumpkin
- 1/2 cup granulated sugar
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 1/4 teaspoon pumpkin pie spice
- 1/4 cups whipping cream, whipped
- Syrup:
- 1/2 cup light brown sugar
- 1/4 cup dark corn syrup
- 1/4 cup hot water
- 1/2 teaspoon vanilla extract
- Spread ice cream in pie shell. (You may not want to use all of a quart if your pie shell is more shallow.) Place in freezer until thoroughly hardened.
- Blend together pumpkin, sugar, salt and spices. Fold 1 cup of the whipped cream into the pumpkin mixture. Now spread this over the ice cream layer in the pie shell. Return pie to freezer until ready to serve.
- Make syrup by combining the brown sugar, corn syrup and water in a small saucepan. Bring it to a boil and continue to boil until it starts to thicken, but don't let it get too thick. Let cool, then add vanilla.
- To serve, cover the pie with the additional whipped cream and drizzle the syrup over the top.

Spaghetti Squash, Italian Style

- 1 2-3 pound spaghetti squash
  - 2 tablespoons butter or margarine

Dutch ovens offer diners gourmet cuisine

By Terrell Williams
Times-News correspondent

PAUL - From hobo stew to cordon bleu, Keith and Denise Barnes cook fabulous meals in their black, cast-iron Dutch oven pots.

The Barnes enter their best dishes in dozens of Dutch oven cooking contests every year. They also cater company picnics, weddings and parties for 20 to 200 people.

"We do a lot of experimenting when we go camping with our family," Keith Barnes said. "Sometimes our kids say, 'When are we going to go camping so we can eat something real good again?' That's when we eat the best is when we go to the mountains."

People are often amazed at what comes out of Dutch ovens, said Barnes, who makes braided breads, baked Alaska and an elaborate chocolate coconut cheesecake topped with marshmallow meringue.

This year, the Barnes were thrilled to win sixth place in the world championship, sponsored by the International Dutch Oven Society in Logan, Utah. For that contest, they cooked a turkey stuffed with sausage, apples and pecans mixed with French, white and wheat breads.

Most major Dutch oven cooking contests call for three dishes, usually a main entree, a raised yeast or sourdough bread, and a side dish or dessert. All three have to be presented to the judges at the same time, Barnes said, so timing is an important factor.

"A lot of these cook-offs are as much a beauty pageant as they are a cooking competition," he said. "You have to garnish your meals and make a nice presentation."

Barnes said one of his most beautiful and aromatic meals is an Italian-style flank steak, marinated in olive oil, garlic and parsley, then topped with toasted red bell peppers, smoked ham, fresh basil, more parsley and Parmesan cheese.

The steak is rolled, wrapped with bacon, tied like a roast, and baked until the meat is dark on the outside and pink in the middle to please all tastes.

Contest entrants are judged on their interaction with the spectators, Barnes said. The cooks share recipes, discuss techniques and encourage newcomers to try Dutch ovens.

At a winter rodeo in Jackson Hole, Wyo., last February, the Barnes won first-place prize money when they fed the cowboys some fresh bread baked over coals above the snow.

"We were the only ones who did a yeast-rise bread," Keith said. "The others didn't know how they could get their bread to rise in 20-degree weather."

At home in Paul, the Barnes are members of the Mini-Cassia Dutch Oven Society. Members get together three or four times a year for potluck Dutch oven dinners. Everyone is welcome to join this group. (Call the Barnes for more information at 438-8951.)

to wipe them dry, then reheats them with vegetable oil and wipes them again. This, he said, prevents rust and preserves the wonderful flavors that the ovens accumulate as they become black and seasoned with years of use.

"It just seems to enhance all the flavors of the foods you cook," he said.

The following recipes are some of the Barnes' most popular Dutch oven dishes.

Cheese Biscuits

- 5 cups flour
- 3 teaspoons baking powder
- 1 teaspoon baking soda
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 1/2 cup sugar
- 2 cups buttermilk (room temperature)
- 1 tablespoon yeast
- 1/2 cup warm water (to dissolve the yeast)
- 1 cup vegetable shortening
- 1 pound sharp cheddar cheese, cubed.

Dissolve yeast in water and let it stand. Mix flour, baking powder, baking soda, salt and sugar in large bowl. Cut in shortening. Add yeast and buttermilk. Stir gently. Cube cheese into one-inch squares. Form into balls. Pat out a two-inch ball of biscuit dough and wrap around cheese ball. Be sure to cover cheese completely.

Place biscuits in a greased 14-inch Dutch oven. Place oven over nine or 10 charcoal briquettes. Cover and put 20 to 24 coals on the lid. Bake for about 20 to 25 minutes. Check after about 15 minutes and adjust heat if necessary. Remove from heat if biscuits are getting too brown too quickly.

Recipe can be used without cheese to make regular biscuits.

Bar-B-Q Beef

- 1 onion, chopped
  - 1 clove garlic, chopped
  - 1/2 cup vinegar
  - 1/3 cup Worcestershire sauce

Students rely on powers of observation to dispute report

By Denise Turner
The Times-News

TWIN FALLS - Another tasty tidbit of trivia bites the dust.

Each orange, green and tan.

Children at Acorn Learning Center didn't think so. Last week, they set out to challenge the claim.

"They thought it was great fun, too."

The students, working with individual packages of M&Ms, graphed their finds and used calculators to figure out color percentages.

"Our results were different."

The students, Jessica Kounik, Bryony Barton, Kit Fielding, Nicole Dossey, Jake Cress and Derek Stephens, found only one bag of candy with percentages that exactly matched those in the article. In four other bags, one or two colors matched the percentages reported.

Chris Mannon, who teaches fifth and sixth grades at the school, decided to create a math lesson out of the whole thing. Working with the six students in her class, she compiled worksheets.

"I gave them the formula," Mannon said. "They did the plain in class and the peanut as homework."

The class learned a lot from the exercise, Mannon said. But the most popular part of the study happened after the work was done. The kids got to eat the candy - 100 percent of it.

"Percentage doesn't usually come up this early, but I saw this as a great way to teach the students about percents," Mannon said.

The result was a letter written to The Times-News and signed by all six students.

"We saw your article in the paper on Sept. 29 about M&Ms," the letter reads in # Education best defense for safe sex

DEAR ABBY: I just read the letter from "Nervous in New York," who was concerned because condoms were being handed out to schoolchildren. She said it was the same as giving kids permission to have sex.

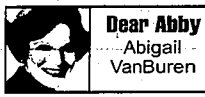

Well, the truth is, the kids are having sex anyway, and if they aren't educated by their parents (most are not), they will get the information from the kids at school. I've heard many things from my friends about sex that aren't true - like you can't get pregnant the first time.

I am all for sex education in the school, including handing out condoms with the proper instructions on how to use them. Kids are having sex much earlier than their parents did, so we might as well be realistic and educate them. That way, they will be much safer. This is not encouraging sex - it's protecting children.

If this were taught in more schools, we would have fewer pregnancies.

Sign me...
17-AND WELL-INFORMED

DEAR 17: Congratulations. You are better informed than most kids your age. However, everyone regardless of age - should be aware that no form of birth control is 100 percent foolproof, and no form of protection from sexually transmitted diseases is foolproof either. Abstinence is the only foolproof solution. Trust me.

Dear Abby
Abigail
VanBuren

DEAR ABBY: I am sure you will get many hostile letters regarding your response to "Nervous in New York" and your strong defense of school condom distribution. I, for one, say, "Thank you, Abby!"

As you pointed out, this is a life-and-death issue. Informing our young people of the very real dangers of unprotected sex does not promote promiscuity - it stresses the importance of education over ignorance and emphasizes the responsibilities-and-consequences-of sexual activity.

In this day and age, it is unfortunate that the same caring parents who would give their lives to protect their children and keep them out of harm's way, stick their heads in the sand when it comes to sex. If we truly care about our children's wellbeing, we have a moral obligation to do all we can to make sure they have the facts they need to make informed, intelligent decisions.

Again, thank you, Abby. I am hopeful your words will help a number of parents.

- ERIC C. LARSON,
LOS ANGELES

DEAR ERIC: Thanks. I needed that.

DEAR ABBY: I was so happy to read the letter in your column from the lady who objected to the hotel clerk announcing her room number loudly enough for everyone in the lobby to hear it.

I have a similar complaint: Why must so many bank clerks loudly count the money the customer receives in a transaction as though they were announcing a train schedule?

I am not hard-of-hearing and would appreciate a little privacy. When I leave the teller's window, I feel as though everyone in the bank knows exactly how much I have in my purse. After all, the person standing behind me in line - or at the next window - could very well be the friendly neighborhood robber.

If you could mention this in your column, perhaps some of these well-meaning bank personnel would see it and remember to modulate their voices.

- F.S. IN WEST HILLS, CALIF.

DEAR F.S.: Coasider it mentioned, although most bank tellers know better. A thought: People who are hard-of-hearing are inclined to raise their voices. Perhaps the bank teller who speaks louder than is necessary should have his/her hearing tested.

Letters of thanks

"Search" helps students

On Oct. 19 and 20, the Magic Valley Alternative High School students participated in a two-day "Search" program (formerly Kids' Day).

This positive, powerful experience motivates young people to say no to drugs and helps them develop self-esteem. Many wonderful and supportive businesses and individuals donated food and supplies that made this program possible.

As chairpersons of the food served, we wish to say a special thank you to those who enthusiastically and graciously reached out and helped:

Albertson's, Coca-Cola Co., Costco, Domino's, Rick Horner, Lynwood IGA, Jan McBride, S&G Produce, Smith's, Swenson's, Wendy's, Williams Market and the food service department of the Twin Falls School District. Also, thank you to the First Christian Church for the use of its facility. Without your help, the "Search" would not have been possible.

Friends, officials helpful

It has been 1½ years since my daughter Jordan's drowning in the Perrine Coulee. I would like to express my gratitude to the many people who helped.

Thanks to the 911 operator, the ambulance emergency team, on the ambulance, all the police officers that responded and searched for Jordan, the doctor and the medical team at the Magic Valley Regional Medical Center and the life-support team and medical staff from Primary Children's Hospital in Salt Lake City. Thank you to the many people who supported us through thought and prayer during that time. A very special thank you to officers Jim Massey and Dave Vaniceau and especially to Steve Beusola who has continued to be a support to my daughter Erin.

Through this experience, I've been shown that there are many loving, caring people out there that we never have to go through anything alone. For this, I am forever grateful.

Thank you, Suzanne

I wish to thank a waitress by the name of Suzanne at Cactus Pete's in Jackpot, Nev.

My husband and I went to Jackpot for the fish buffet. I swallowed a fish bone and tried to cough it up. Thanks to Suzanne's quick response in using the Heimlich Maneuver, the bone came up. She may very well have saved my life for I was losing consciousness.

I also want to thank the staff - two security guards and the restaurant manager - for their concern.

I believe every restaurant could benefit the public if their staff knew how to do the Heimlich Maneuver.

I didn't get Suzanne's last name and I'm not sure if I personally thanked her as I wasn't thinking very well after the scare, but, Suzanne, if you are reading this, a big thank you.

Ready your house for cold of winter

The Baltimore Sun

It's official: Summer's over and winter's on the way.

If you're lucky, you haven't had any problems yet — no leaks, cracks, breaks or major failures. Your house hasn't let you know it's time to bar the elements, and you still have time to prepare for cold weather on your own schedule.

If you're lucky and organized, you may have last year's list of things to do as a guide. A list will help you keep track of when the flues were last cleaned, or when the furnace was serviced, and can help you remember such things as turning off the water to outdoor spigots. Most of us aren't quite that organized, however, so here's a new list to work from:

- Doors. Check weatherstripping and repair old strips for wear or gaps; replace or repair as necessary. Check locks to make sure they're properly aligned. An out-of-kilter strike plate can keep a door from shutting tightly.

- Windows. Install or replace weatherstripping. Repair any broken glass. Make sure locks work to keep windows shut tightly. Install storm windows.

- Heating equipment. For forced-air systems, clean or replace all filters; have equipment serviced, if necessary. Check registers to make sure they open and close easily. Vacuum vents of cold-air returns to remove lint and debris.

- For boiler systems, vacuum burners to clear debris; oil the circulator. Add water to the system, and bleed radiators, if necessary. If there are any problems, schedule service now.

For all systems, clear furniture and other items from around vents, registers and radiators.

- Fireplaces and wood stoves. Clean flues and fireboxes. Inspect for cracks or loose connections. Line up a chimney sweep, if necessary. (By the way, don't store wood on a porch or anywhere near the house. Keep it off the ground, too, or by spring you could be dealing with termites.)

- Window air-conditioning units. Take out removable units and store them in a dry place. If a unit stays put through the winter, pack the front with insulation and wrap the back with plastic.

- Insulation. If the insulation in your attic or crawl space has been there for a while, you may want to supplement it. Owens-Corning has a new product designed to beef up existing insulation; it's called Pink Plus, and is a fiberglass but completely wrapped in plastic film, so it's easy for homeowners to install. (It's more expensive than unwrapped fiberglass, as you might expect, and it doesn't have a vapor barrier.)

- Gutters and downspouts. Try to keep up with the falling leaves — clogged water-removal systems can mean water damage later, especially if water gets into a foundation or under roofing material. It's especially important to get the last leaves of the season. They can trap water, that could freeze and cause structural damage.

- Foundation. Check around the outside of the house for low spots or other problems. Fill in lower places and adjust grading so water will run away from the building. Turn off water to outside spigots and drain them.

- Paint and caulking. Now is the perfect time to do any exterior painting — it's no longer too hot, and it's not yet too cold. Caulk first, paying particular attention to areas around doors and windows. Winter freeze-and-thaw cycles are hard on all exterior surfaces.

- Concrete and masonry. Resurface driveways and repair any cracks in concrete. Repair concrete steps and walks.

- Roofing. If a flat roof needs recoating, find a good day and have it done now; you won't get a chance later. Check all flashing to make sure joints are sealed — don't wait for a leak to indicate there's trouble.

While you're sealing up the house to keep out winter drafts, remember houses may be healthier if they're allowed to breathe. A too-tight house can trap moisture and pollutants that damage interior surfaces and make inhabitants miserable. It may be better to put up with a little cooler air, if you add insulation, you may have to add ventilation as well.

And training family members to put on a sweater and extra socks, rather than turning up the heat, can save a lot money in energy costs.

Stopping disease may solve gladiola problem

DEAR CATHY: I've raised gladiolus for umpteen years — until the last three years.

They come up looking normal — to my eyes, anyway. Then the leaves slowly turn brown in streaks and what blooms appear have dried up before they come out of bud.

It's not the bulbs. We have planted old ones, then bought new ones. Same result for three seasons now. Different places in the garden, too.

We've just dug the bulbs again, and they look fine and healthy. I get not one bloom from them.

I have a feeling that the trouble could center on the compost heap, but my husband says no — just that the bulbs need to be acclimated. But some of the failures were not "foreign" bulbs, but our own. Please help me before time to plant again.

— EVELYN HINTZE, JEROME

DEAR EVELYN: You have nicely eliminated some of the more obvious problems: bad bulbs, bulbs eaten by gubs and foliage attacked by thrips. Nematodes are often the cause of stunting and discoloration or a decline in vigor, but they're out because you say there are no knots or galls on the roots.

Your problem is a difficult one to diagnose. The symptoms you describe fit those of a virus that attacks gladiolus and tulips. This virus is spread by insects and the gardener himself.

This virus will show up when the blossoms break and are streaked with white or cream. The plants themselves are stunted with a general yellowing of the foliage.

Sucking insects, such as our friend the aphid, are usually guilty for spreading the disease. Then the gardener prunes, grafts, or makes cuttings without cleaning his tools between cuts, further spreading the disease. Chemicals won't control a virus.

Buying plants that are certified to be disease-free is the first step, which you have already taken. The second step is to see if you can wipe out some of the virus.

Before you plant this year, sterilize the soil with a bleach solution. Put one part bleach and ten parts water in a bucket and dump the solution all over the soil. This is called a drench.

Learn to carry a bucket of the same solution with you as you go about your garden chores. After each cut, dip your pruners into the solution and wipe dry. Bleach is tough on tools and the tools need to be oiled to prevent rust afterward. A bottle of rubbing alcohol and a rag is nice to the tools, but costlier.

Since the disease is spread by insects, you might want to keep a watchful eye out for Mr. Aphid and his ilk. Until you have the virus under control, your tolerance for these garden pests should be zero. Good luck, and please let me know how next year's crop grows.

Cathy Walworth is an avid Twin Falls gardener. Write to her in care of The Times-News.

Smoke, heat detectors provide security, peace of mind

Orange County Register

I sleep a lot easier at night knowing that fire won't threaten family members or pets because I have a smoke and heat detector system. If a fire does start, the people who monitor the system will call within a minute.

The reason I know this is because we've already had two accidental fires. In the first test, soon after we moved into our home, my wife lit a fire in our fireplace but didn't open the draft.

Within minutes, smoke from the fireplace had set off the smoke detectors. While an incredibly loud, piercing siren sounded, I tried to look up the new system's shut-off code. Before I could find it, the people monitoring the system called and gave me the code so I could shut off the system.

The other time, the smoke came from something I'd burned on the stove. The detector that sensed my culinary accident was on the ceiling of the laundry/pet room about 15 feet from the stove. I have a heat detector in the kitchen, but the Orange County Fire Department doesn't recommend installing a smoke detector too near the stove. Some silly guy might burn his dinner.

I have four smoke detectors in my home, located in areas where the fire department deems them best:

- Laundry room.
- Garage.
- Downstairs entrance hall.
- In the hallway at the top of the stairs.

The fire department says that a system in which all detectors are wired together is best because they all will go off if one is triggered. Mine was a professionally installed system.

If you rent or don't want to pay to have such a system installed, use battery-powered smoke detectors. Here are the best locations for most homes, according to the fire department:

- Sleeping areas need the most protection. One detector in a short hallway outside bedrooms is usually adequate.

- Hallways longer than 30 feet should have one at each end.

- In the living areas, such as the family or living rooms, keep the detector away from a fireplace or wood stove to avoid false alarms.

- Place detectors at the top of each stairwell. Smoke rises easily through stairwells.

- In the kitchen or dining areas, keep smoke detectors from cooking fumes or smoking areas.

- Here's how to install detectors, according to the fire department.

- Place each detector at least four inches from the dead space near walls and corners.

- While smoke detectors are best placed on the ceiling, if you have to place them on a wall, make sure they're 4-12 inches below the ceiling and away from corners. Keep them high because smoke rises.

- Don't place detectors fewer than three inches from air registers. This could keep smoke from reaching a detector.

- Don't place detectors on uninsulated exterior walls or ceilings. Temperature extremes can affect batteries, and temperature differences might keep smoke from reaching the detector.

After determining which areas should get smoke detectors, it's time to decide which type of detector you want. They come in two types: ionization and photoelectric.

An ionization detector contains a safe amount of radioactive material that ionizes the air around it. When smoke penetrates that ionized air, it changes the flow of an electrical current and sets off the detector's alarm. It's best for sensing flaming fires such as those caused by burning paper or drapes.

A photoelectric detector contains a light source (such as a photocell). Light from the source reflects off any smoke particles nearby and is directed toward the photocell, which triggers an alarm. It's most effective for sensing smoldering fires such as those caused by a burning cigarette in a sofa or a smoldering rug.

Choose between partial, complete closing of home

Q. We want to winterize our house while we are away for several months. How do we go about such things as shutting off the water? Should the house be heated while we are away?

A. There are two basic approaches — a complete or partial closing of the house.

In a complete closing, the heating system is turned off and the water is drained from all plumbing, including faucets, toilets, water heater and appliances such as dishwashers and clothes washers. If the house has hot-water heat, the radiators and boiler should also be drained, and if there is a well, the pump and storage tank must be drained. Appliances such as refrigerators and freezers should be unplugged and emptied of perishables.

Since draining plumbing can be complicated, it should be done by a plumber — at least the first time around. Homeowners who expect to make regular winter closings can watch what the plumber does and take notes, and drain the plumbing themselves the next time.

One of the trickiest aspects of draining plumbing is protecting the traps in the drain pipes under sinks, toilets and similar fixtures. The traps must contain some liquid to prevent sewer gas from entering the house. The usual treatment is to pour a mixture of equal parts of water and automotive antifreeze into all traps and toilet bowls.

Do it yourself

Some homeowners worry that leaving a house unheated will cause damage to walls, furniture and other parts of the house. There is some controversy about this, but most experts say there should be little or no damage to a house left unheated for several months.

In a partial closing, the house is checked frequently by a friend, neighbor or hired house sitter. The heat is normally left on with a thermostat setting of about 55 degrees and the plumbing is not drained. Appliances such as freezers and refrigerators can be left operating, as long as they are checked regularly by the house sitter to make sure they are working properly.

However, water heaters should be turned off during any extended absence and should be drained if freezing is possible.

Mary Ellen Pinkham sells herself as well as advice on housekeeping

Knight-Ridder News Service

Mary Ellen Pinkham cuts right to the point. Take the way she greeted the man who would become her second husband.

About four years ago in a Minneapolis bar, this tall, blond, muscular, movie-star handsome man sat down on the next stool, and Pinkham recalls it, looked over and said: "Hello."

"Are you married?" asked Mary Ellen.

This is the woman who says that if she had it to do again, she wouldn't bother owning good china, and who advises: "Stop cleaning stuff you don't like. Get rid of it."

Pinkham — known to millions of hint-seekers as Mary Ellen — has no-balance answers for most issues, whether it's running your house or your life. Her six advice books have sold 13 million copies. Her career includes a of couple years as a regular on "Good Morning America" and a long-running column for Woman's Day magazine.

She also has fought alcoholism, depression, financial disaster and the death of her first husband.

"It's all for a purpose," she says. And usually the purpose can be seen in more books, more answers.

She is on the road this month promoting her latest, largest book, an encyclopedia of housekeeping called, "Mary Ellen's Clean House." It cuts through the guff, too, but not too much more, on virtually every household subject.

But back to unfinished business. We left Mary Ellen as she met Tom Eng, her hunk of a second husband.

No, he wasn't married. But, he told her, "I'm really, really very busy on weekends."

"If that isn't a red flag, I don't know," says Mary Ellen. "That means they've got a wife or a girlfriend. I looked at him and said, 'I'm really, really very busy during the week.'"

"I'd been through enough," she says. "I would rather go to war than be out in the dating world today."

Still, they dated. She was cool.

Helpful hints from a professional

Here are some helpful hints from Mary Ellen Pinkham: WHY DIDN'T I THINK OF THAT?

1. If your refrigerator has a rotten smell after you've cleaned the inside and the drip pan underneath, look on top. Maybe you set meal up there when you were hunting for something in the freezer.

2. A trick for making sure you don't run out of something like toilet tissue: Buy one roll in a color you don't usually use and put it behind all the others. It shows up, you know you're almost out.

3. To carry flowers as a gift, stick the stems in a balloon filled with water and secure it with rubber bands.

4. If you have a problem with power outages, leave a small bowl of ice cubes in your freezer when you go out of town. If the cubes are still there, you'll know the freezer did not thaw and refreeze while you were gone.

5. THE 10-MINUTE EMERGENCY DRILL.

Even an organized household can be traumatized when company calls to say they're dropping in. Here's how to make the best of a 10-minute warning: Do the pans you need. Get as far as you can.

1. Quickly comb your hair and check your makeup, so they'll notice how good you look.

2. Close doors to rooms you won't use.

3. Get a carton. In entry hall and living room, pick up everything that doesn't belong. Hide carton.

4. Take a spray window cleaner or spray furniture polish into the main room and quickly wipe visible dirt off tables.

5. Flip up pillows.

6. Check bathroom. Slick clutter or dirty towels out of sight; wipe sink and mirror with toilet tissue; hang clean towels.

7. GETTING BY IN AN IMPERFECT WORLD:

The best replacement for a bathtub plug is a golf ball. If it's kicked out, it'll roll right back.

Photocopy your credit cards, and you'll always have the numbers handy, even if your wallet is stolen.

Tom, the trophy date, talked about his business ventures.

"I never told him anything much about myself," she says. "I let him talk. He didn't even know what I did for a living."

"He'd say, 'I could really help you out with your business promotions.'"

Six months later, madly in love, they married.

She didn't cook for him until right before the marriage. "Tom truly didn't realize he was marrying one of this country's most famous housekeepers."

He knows today, she says, and he loves it.

"When we entertain and everything looks beautiful, and I come whipping through the door with this beautiful food, he just has this big smile," she says. "That's when he's the most proud of me; it's very genuine."

Like her second husband, most of the good things in Pinkham's life just fell into her lap, she says.

Take the career. In 1976, she was on her way to being a housewife with a new baby, she says, when first husband Sherman lost his job.

They had $2 in the bank. But her head was full of household wisdom she'd learned while being raised by her grandmother. Mary Ellen tapped her greatest talent — selling herself — and drummed up local backers to publish 50,000 copies of "Best of Helpful Hints."

She was showing the first book to friends over lunch, when a man at the next table asked to see it.

"Do you give these away?" he asked, insatiably.

"I stood up and I said, 'I will sell millions of these!'"

She got on the phone and peddled books to gift stores. She forced herself to sell 500 a day by phone or by mail, before she'd come out of the office in her basement.

By 1979, when Warner Books finally picked up "Best of Helpful Hints," she'd already sold 500,000 copies. For a while, says Pinkham, the book was No. 1 and No. 2 on the New York Times non-fiction best-seller list — one version published by Warner Books and one version published by Pinkham.

"I always knew I was going to be famous," she says. "So I'm famous for cleaning toilets."

Her career took off from there — TV, newspapers, magazines, more books. Other people give household advice, but Mary Ellen sells Mary Ellen.

She's great on TV or radio — funny on cue. Her sardonic observations are a staple of her writing. Example: "What's the best way to get a broken appliance to magically work again? Show it to a repairman."

Her solution: Videotape the appliance when it's doing the bad thing.

Pinkham's life has become her career. She gained weight, then lost it; then she wrote "Mary Ellen's Help Yourself Diet Plan."

She quit drinking in 1983, then got Sherman to quit; then she wrote "How to Stop the One You Love From Drinking," subtitled "I Know Because Intervention Worked for Me." "He died sober," she says about Sherman's death from cancer.

Her tips weave common sense with wit and observation.

On hiring a painter:

1. Check the truck. A worker with a clean truck will probably do a clean job.

2. Avoid smokers. They take a lot of breaks.

3. Don't hire anyone who can't wear a belt. They spend a lot of time hitching up their pants.

"Of course," she notes, "based on these standards, there were many times in my life when I wouldn't have hired myself."

Mr. Food: 'It's so good!'

SCHENECTADY, N.Y. (AP) — Art Ginsburg doesn't think much of recipes that call for exotic ingredients like radicchio or dill. He has no patience for health food crazes, gourmet cooking or lengthy food preparations, either.

Instead, Ginsburg, a pudgy Jewish grandfather with a raspy voice and a flair for the theatrical, peddles his own brand of food sense to "Mr. and Mrs. Joe Everybody," as "Mr. Food" on his syndicated cooking segments.

"Chefs say 'you must use this, and you must use that.' They're so disciplined to culinary rules that they're missing the boat," Ginsburg said during a recent taping at a Schenectady, N.Y. television studio. "Food is a lot of fun, but people just make it a religion, and they shouldn't."

The nearly 2-minute segments, broadcast in more than 260 cities, feature a bespectacled, toque-wearing "Mr. Food" presiding over buses set sprouts as lovingly as a ricotta cheese pie.

The segments are chock-full of recipes, cooking hints, short-cuts and "best food buys." Ginsburg also selects a "cheese of the month."

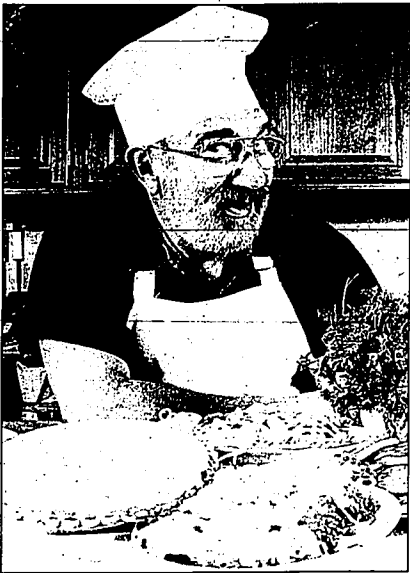

The shows, laced with Ginsburg's boundless exuberance, always end with his trademark schtick: "OOH, It's So Good!"

Cooking has always been central for this 62-year-old son of a butcher, a former caterer.

Ginsburg grew up in the kitchen of his family's home in nearby Troy, where the rich smells of Jewish, Italian, Polish and Irish cooking wafted from house to house in the close-quartered immigrant neighborhood.

The abundance and diversity of ethnic foods from those days are a mainstay of Ginsburg's cooking. His versatility, along with his lack of formal culinary training, have stood him in good stead, setting him apart from other cooks, Ginsburg said.

Although Ginsburg eschews nutritional gurus who deliver sobering lectures about cholesterol, fats and sugar, his recipes use plenty of produce and in-season items. But, Ginsburg's most requested recipe is a dessert he calls "Death by Chocolate."

Ginsburg's wife Ethel serves as "Dear Abby" to viewers who have "food problems" and helps with preparations before and during tapings. His daughter Cary runs the recipe club, and sons Steve and Chuck produce and distribute the show.

Ginsburg and his family now live in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., but fly to Schenectady each month to tape 20 segments, a month's worth of shows.

Two children remain in the area, serving as home-base during the two-day taping sessions. Ginsburg's "The Mr. Food Cookbook" and "Mr. Food Cooks Like Mama" have sold nearly 1 million copies. Three more books, with chicken, pasta and dessert recipes, are set for release this fall by William Morrow & Co.

Linda Ellerbee battles back from cancer, mastectomy

The Washington Post

It's amazing what cancer will motivate you to do.

In Linda Ellerbee's case, she dropped 50 pounds, changed her eating habits, stopped smoking, began exercising daily and bought her first dress in 10 years.

"I don't recommend cancer as a health and beauty aid, but I'm in much better shape today than I was 20 years ago. The absence of alternatives clears the mind wonderfully." The veteran television journalist notes wryly.

Ellerbee, who had breast cancer and underwent a double mastectomy in February 1992, hosted an ABC News special reuniting "The Other Epicure: What Every Woman Needs to Know About Breast Cancer." With her new elfin hairdo, contact lenses and size-10 figure, many viewers didn't recognize her.

"All these people called to say how great I looked," Ellerbee says, adding, "but when you've had cancer, they're just glad to see you, period."

Ellerbee is saving both her health and her success after spending a dozen frustrating years working in network television news. Her irreverent, caustic wit was appreciated by a loyal cadre of viewers, but not by the networks' honchos.

After her last show, "Our World," was canceled by ABC six years ago, she formed her own company, Lucky Duck Productions. She also enjoyed a sweet revenge of sorts with her best-selling book "And So It Goes," titled after her familiar sign-off line. The book humorously skewered the quirky world of TV news.

In the past few years, Ellerbee's New York production company has done a number of projects for cable television as well as a PBS "Smithsonian World" show on one of her favorite subjects, food. As soon as the first admit, she loves food, loves to cook, even dreams of doing a cookbook "someday."

Linda Ellerbee Cancer survivor

Since being diagnosed with cancer, however, Ellerbee has overhauled her diet in a way that she knew she should have done a long time ago.

"Four years ago, when I quit drinking, I should have done it, but it's hard to see alcoholism as life-threatening as cancer," she pauses. "The phrase 'Knock some sense into the woman' comes to mind."

To begin with, she has slashed the fat in her diet to a bare-bones minimum — a real accomplishment given her Texas upbringing, where the three basic food groups are barbecue, Mexican and chicken-fried steak. "Grilling and steaming are now her cooking methods of choice, whether at home or eating out."

She also is "heavily into cancer-preventing foods," particularly fruits and vegetables high in vitamin A, as well as such grains as bulgur wheat and couscous.

The woman who once said her favorite food was "something with potatoes or a good cream sauce" now will eat a whole head of steamed broccoli or a bowl of couscous for dinner.

She had quit smoking following her mastectomy, and her immediate worry was not how to take off the pounds, but how to keep any more from piling on.

So she joined a gym, slowly working up to an hour a day on a stationary bicycle plus working out with weights.

Her new healthier habits have given her the energy of "three women 10 years younger," says Ellerbee, 49.

These days, when she is at home, she begins the day with a giant "smoothie" made from fresh-squeezed orange and grapefruit juices, chunks of banana or cantaloupe and ice cubes whirled in a blender, plus a slice of seven-grain bread and a cup of herbal tea.

She has her protein at lunch — salad or vegetables with tuna, for example — and dinner consists of a giant portion of a single cancer-fighting food like steamed broccoli or asparagus or a big bowl of a high-fiber grain. She's even been known to splurge and have not one, but two, whole packages of spinach. "Two boxes are only 120 calories," she enthuses.

She tries to avoid eating out too often — "It's easier to put weight on when you eat out frequently," she says — but when she does, she opts for the grilled and avoids the sautéed, requesting a plain potato or veggies as a side dish.

Her Spartan eating during the week gives way somewhat on the weekends, when she often invites friends over for dinner. She describes her weekend menus as falling into two categories: "Me and my grill or me and my pasta."

Ellerbee does allow herself some splurges. An ice-cream treat, she treats herself to a some non-fat frozen yogurt twice a week. If she happens to be visiting her family in Houston, "I eat cheese enchiladas with the best of them."

Afterward, however, she makes sure she works out a little longer and eats healthfully the rest of the week: "I look at my eating on a weekly basis, not daily," she notes.

Preparation can make an inspired pumpkin design

Colorado Springs Gazette Telegraph

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. — The Great Pumpkin has great possibilities.

Considering that the first jack-o'-lanterns were turnips, beets and potatoes carved into candle-holders by the English and Irish to light the way on Halloween, it seems a shame to use the relatively huge canvas on a pumpkin to carve out the same old triangular eyes, nose and jagged grin each year. Even if you have no artistic talent, there are tools, techniques and even patterns for making your jack-o'-lantern a work of art.

Kits are available. Some carvers use keyhole saws to cut intricate patterns, and vegetable parers to remove pumpkin skin for a glowing, textured effect. A void long, flexible knife blades, which are dangerous if they buckle.

Pick a smooth, unbruised, evenly colored pumpkin with a flat bottom. A softer pumpkin is easier for children to carve, although it won't last as long as a harder pumpkin.

Plan your design on paper. If you're creating a face, add eyebrows, and wrinkles around the eyes, and the corners of the mouth.

Consider other Halloween themes: bats, cats and spiders, for example. Or let your pumpkin say "Boo!"

Trace your design onto the pumpkin, and use a carving poker or knife tip to score into a face, add eyebrows, and wrinkles around the eyes, and the corners of the pumpkin's outer skin.

With a pen, make a lid marking. Cut the lid using a sturdy paring knife (this should be done by an adult). Angle the blade inward, toward the pumpkin's center as you cut. If you cut straight down, the lid will fall into the pumpkin when you try to replace it. You also can cut an irregular shape, like a zigzag along one side, to make it easy to replace the lid.

Sprinkle the underside of the lid with nutmeg and cinnamon, and rub it into the lid. The heat from your candle will create a pleasant pumpkin-pie smell.

Scoop out the pulp and seeds with a large spoon. If using a pumpkin-carving kit, scoop until the pumpkin shell is only 1 inch thick.

Pumpkin-kit saw blades break easily if handled improperly. First, twist the kit's drill through the pumpkin shell at design starting points. Then, holding the pumpkin in your lap and holding the saw like a pencil, insert the saw in the drill hole at a 90-degree angle and begin sawing with a gentle up-and-down motion.

Take your time — quick movements can lead to cuts and broken blades. Non-kit users can use a real drill to create holes for starting each design element. Drilling eliminates one of the biggest injury risks in jack-o'-lantern carving. It's easy to slip when stabbing a tough pumpkin shell with a knife.

Saw intricate parts — a detailed eye or a spider's web — in small sections, to minimize chances of a whole area collapsing. Push cut parts out with your fingers, not with a knife or saw blade.

Cut tooth notches on the inside of the pumpkin shell to create an interesting effect when lit.

When you're done, cover the cut edges of your jack-o'-lantern with petroleum jelly to prolong freshness. A shriveled pumpkin can be revived by soaking in water for a couple of hours.

Sensible diet, exercise can pare off excess pounds

The Baltimore Sun

Cathy and I have each lost six pounds this summer, eating 1,800 calories a day.

About a year ago, I had a discussion with group of knowledgeable, forward-thinking dietitians about mid-life weight gain.

It is inevitable, we wondered, to gain weight; if so, how much is "healthy"?

The problem was of particular interest to me, since I was beginning to slide into more of a pear shape than I appreciated, and I was encountering other mid-life women having the same problem.

I had thought about dieting, but rejected the idea, because I hate being hungry.

Besides, I'm all too familiar with our growing awareness with diets that just don't work:

In general, I eat well, and I do 30 to 45 minutes a day of varied activities, about four or five days a week, so I thought maybe I had to accept the inevitable.

While pondering this dilemma, I remembered the advice of David Williamson, Ph.D., of the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

Based on research, he believes that if each person would gradually work up to exercising 45 to 60 minutes each day, eat lots of grains, fruits and vegetables, and reduce dietary fat, each would achieve his or her own best weight.

When my daughter Cathy returned from college in mid-May, we decided to launch our own program based on Williamson's idea.

These were our guidelines:

- Eat 1,800 calories a day.
- Limit fat to 20 percent of calories (40 grams per day).

- Keep a notebook.
- Exercise 45 to 60 minutes, five or six days a week.
- Weight once a week.

We used the Food Guide Pyramid. Most days we had six to nine grain foods, two to four fruits, three or more vegetables and two or three dairy foods. We limited meat, poultry and fish to 4 or 5 ounces a day, and often substituted a vegetarian entrée.

We aimed at 500 calories for breakfast, lunch and dinner, with 300 calories worth of snacks when we needed them most.

Occasionally, we went over 1,800 calories. A few times we had only 1,500 calories.

"There's nothing we absolutely gave up. We've had flat mignon, chocolate mousse, pizza and even a scoop or two of ice cream."

- ¼ cup celery, chopped
- ½ teaspoon sugar
- 1 tablespoon fresh oregano or 1 teaspoon dried

Salt and pepper to taste
Freshly grated Parmesan cheese
Place whole, unpeeled squash in a pot of boiling water. Pierce the skin with a fork several times to keep the squash from bursting. Cover and boil 30 minutes or until tender.

Meanwhile, in a small saucepan saute the onion and celery in butter until lightly browned. Add remaining ingredients and simmer for about 15 minutes.

Charlotte grabs NFL team

Decision on 2nd franchise delayed

The Associated Press

ROSEMONT, Ill. — The NFL expanded into new territory Tuesday night, adding a team in Charlotte, N.C., that will begin play in 1995 as the Carolina Panthers.

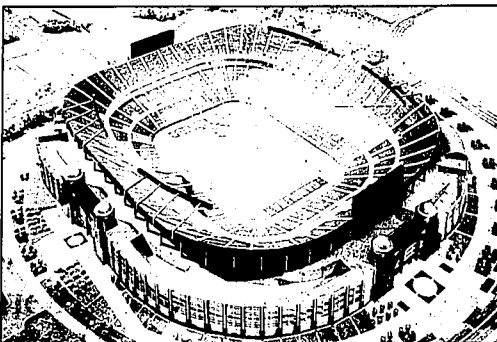

Richardson

NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue announced the addition at the league's expansion meeting. Action on the second team was deferred until Nov. 30 with St. Louis, Baltimore, Memphis, Tenn., and Jacksonville, Fla. still in the running.

Charlotte was a unanimous recommendation by the 11-member expansion and finance committees and a unanimous choice of the 28 owners, although only 21 votes were needed. Tagliabue was interrupted by applause from Carolina backers in the jammed hotel ballroom where the announcement was made.

In Charlotte, fireworks exploded and hundreds of people gathered for a downtown celebration. Many North Carolina television stations carried the brief announcement live.

The Panthers, the NFL's 29th club, will be run by Jerry Richardson, an ex-

Baltimore Colts wide receiver and owner of company that owns such restaurants as Hardee's and Denny's. "I hope giving birth isn't as difficult

Baker earns NL honor

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Dusty Baker would have rather finished second in the voting for National League Manager of the Year and first in the NL West.

"It's high-priced consolation. Anytime you get awards and don't win, it's a consolation," the rookie manager said Tuesday after beating Jim Fregosi of Philadelphia in voting by the Baseball Writers Association of America.

Baker received 15 first-place votes, more than Fregosi, who led the Phillies to their first pennant in 10 years. Baker got nine second-place votes and three thirds for 105 points. Managers receive five points for first, three for second and one for third.

"These guys they played hurt; these guys they played tired," Baker said at a news conference in San Francisco. "These guys would fight me if I tried to take them out of the line."

San Francisco, which finished one game behind Atlanta, became the first team to win 103 games and not finish first since the 1954 New York Yankees, who had with eight fewer victories than Cleveland. It was the most victories for the Giants since 1962.

Baker became the first NL manager to win the award after a non-first place finish since Buck Rodgers of the Montreal Expos in 1987.

"One thing I do notice, though, is that about three of them have been fired since they won Manager of the Year."

Fregosi got 11 seconds and four thirds for 92 points. Felipe Alou of the Montreal Expos and Bobby Cox of Atlanta tied for third with 27 points each.

Don Baylor, a rookie manager who took the expansion Colorado Rockies to a sixth-place finish in the NL West, received one third-place vote.

Baker, 44, was hired by the Giants' new owner last Dec. 16 to replace Roger Craig. Baker had spent five seasons with the team as a coach, including the previous four as the hitting coach.

The Giants led the NL West from May 11 to Sept. 11, when they were overtaken by the Braves. The teams fought down the stretch and the Giants lost on the season's final day, when the Los Angeles Dodgers routed them 12-1.

Coach: Academic campaign hurts recruiting

The Associated Press

The University of Idaho's campaign to improve student retention rates may be significantly increasing recruiting problems for its athletic coaches.

"I kind of agree with the direction it's going," football coach John L. Smith said. "But again, we're out there running interference for some of the other people."

"I like the quality of students we're getting, but again I think this: There are a lot of kids coming in out of high school with 2.5s, and maybe not that high, who are very capable of getting through college and we're closing the door on them," Smith said.

The university has increased the minimum high-school grade-point average for freshmen enrolling next fall from 2.5 to 3.0 on a scale of 4. The new minimum will make admission to Idaho the most difficult of the eight Big Sky Conference universities. It also exceeds the National Collegiate Athletic Association standards by a full point.

— Idaho football coach John L. Smith

Exceptions can be made for students with a lower average, provided they test high enough on either the ACT or SAT college admissions exams. In addition, there is a special admissions committee which can grant exemptions in hardship cases.

Boise State University is making only slight changes in its admission standards next year. In addition to the 2.0 average it has been requiring, Boise State will also require minimum scores on college entrance tests — 17 on the ACT or 700 on the SAT.

"Our main concern, of course, as always is that if all the institutions in the state raise their admission standards, the big question is where do many of our students go who don't meet the standards?" Boise State about the impact of the higher stand his school has adopted, particularly on athletics.

"But the fact is, there are many examples of institutions who have stiffer requirements who are successful athletically," he said.

He said Idaho coaches have been recruiting for several years with academic success in mind, and he pointed to the fact that under 1 percent of the school's special admission students are athletes.

Smith said his staff has been selective in recruiting and has been relatively successful. But he knows more than one athlete will slip away to another Big Sky school.

"It hurts us," Smith said. "They'll go somewhere else and play against us... Now we're moving up another step and it makes it even tougher."

Senator presses for NCAA antitrust investigation

The Associated Press

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — U.S. Sen. Mitch McConnell, says that Louisville will be shut out of all New Year's Day bowl games, asked the U.S. Justice Department on Tuesday to investigate whether a college football bowl coalition violates antitrust laws.

McConnell, a Kentucky Republican who graduated from Louisville, said he didn't bring up the issue to improve the Cardinals' chances to get invited to a prestigious bowl. The 17th-ranked Cardinals are 7-1 this season. "What I want is for any team in America to be able to benefit, whether they're in a conference or out of a conference," McConnell said, from Washington, D.C. "I hope they'll reach the conclusion that it's not fair for any team in America to be punished for success."

Louisville coach Howard Schnellenberger said he shares McConnell's "concern about the fairness of the current bowl setup."

"Many coaches, players, fans and even some bowl committees feel the same way," Schnellenberger said. "To exclude teams from the chance to play in the very best Jan. 1 bowls before even a single game is played is of concern to all of us." McConnell said his request to have the bowl coalition repealed does not mean government is overstepping its bounds by intervening in collegiate athletics.

"The antitrust laws are designed to allow competition to blossom in our country," McConnell said. "It's pro free enterprise, not the opposite."

In a letter to Ann Bingham, the assistant attorney general of the Antitrust Division, McConnell calls the bowl coalition the "phottization" of independent teams shut out of the major bowls.

He said the bowl coalition unfairly denies independents financial rewards and national recognition from appearing in a major bowl.

"We're not just talking about prestige," he said. "We're talking about money. Television contracts, recruiting. How could you possibly recruit if you said to your recruits, 'We may never get a major bowl game to win 11 games.'"

Rick Baker, executive director of the Cotton Bowl and the bowl coalition, said the bowl alliance does not violate antitrust laws.

"Speaking for the college football bowls that are a party to the coalition Please see NCAA/D2

Shula catching up to Halas

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — An old friend, Matt Schottenheimer will cheer as loud as anybody for Don Shula's record-tying 324th coaching victory.

"Unless he gets it this week, 'Absolutely correct,' said Schottenheimer, whose Kansas City Chiefs meet Shula's Miami Dolphins on Sunday. "It won't hurt Don to wait a few more days to get the record, which will certainly come with time."

Shula prepares to host the Chiefs with 323 career wins, one fewer than George Halas' NFL record. There's irony in the fact his first shot at tying the mark comes against a coach who's not only a friend but who a generation ago almost became his player.

Nearing the end of his career as a linebacker, Schottenheimer was put on waivers by Pittsburgh in 1971. Baltimore and Miami both put in claims for him.

"Pittsburgh recalled the waivers and made a conditional trade with the Colts," Schottenheimer said. "I was sent off the team and made a trade to get Bob Matheson from Cleveland."

Matheson then became the namesake of Shula's "53-defense" as the Dolphins of the early 1970s went on to capture back-to-back Super Bowl championships.

"He got Matheson over me," Schottenheimer said. "He's always been a shrewd evaluator of talent."

"We probably wouldn't have gotten along over the years if I'd played for him because he's a hardhead and so am I."

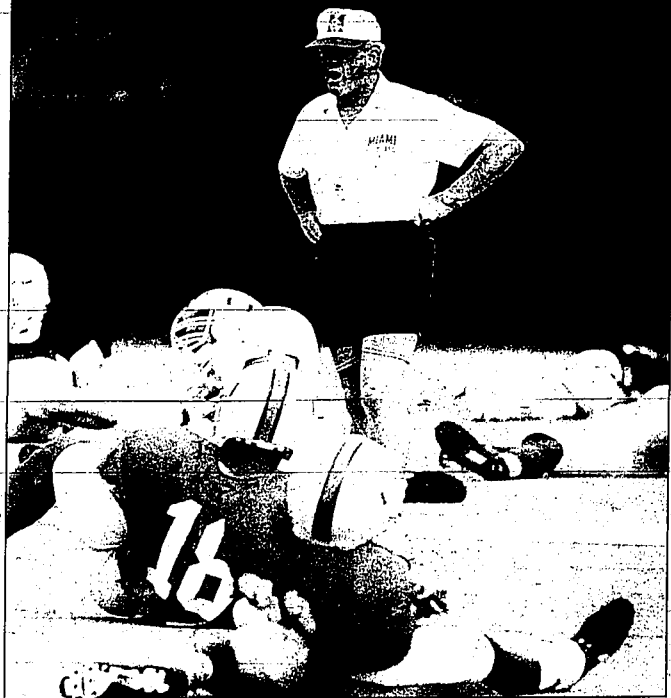

No, both serve on the NFL's competition committee. "Don Shula has had as great a capacity for getting the very best out of his players ... as any coach that I have ever been around or played for," Schottenheimer said. "If you're going to say he's the best of all time, am I going to argue? No."

After a best week, the Chiefs have a rested and healthy Joe Montana at quarterback to try to keep up the club's best start since 1971. At 5-1, Kansas City has the same record as Miami and sits atop the AFC West.

While relaxing on the golf course together, Schottenheimer has quizzed Shula about his remarkable stamina in a profession where burnout is a common malady.

"In discussions with him, he's answered the question," Schottenheimer said. "I don't know if I understand what he said. Basically, he's always told everybody, 'I enjoy it, and as long as I enjoy it, I'm going to keep doing it.'"

The other thing Don has had a capacity to do, is the things he has no control over, he doesn't worry about."

Dennis Erickson looks to gain his 100th career victory Saturday when his Miami Hurricanes play the Temple Owls.

Erickson closes in on milestone

CORAL GABLES, Fla. (AP) — The hate mail has stopped. The critical calls to radio talk shows have ended. Miami Hurricanes coach Dennis Erickson can prepare for this week's milestone in relative peace.

When fourth-ranked Miami plays hapless Temple on Saturday, Erickson likely will earn his 100th career victory.

Such an achievement suggests Erickson knows how to coach, but some disagree. In the days following Miami's loss at top-ranked Florida State on Oct. 9, talk-show callers and letter-writers demanded Erickson's head, or at least his resignation.

"I think there's a perception out there that anybody can come in here and do this," he said Tuesday.

Even after a stunning 49-0 victory Saturday against Syracuse, Erickson struggled to shake the sting of fan criticism. It shouldn't bother him, he admitted, but it does. Radio call-in shows bother him the most.

"Those things are unbelievable. In the old days you'd wait until the newspaper came out the next day. Now they can vent their anger as soon as the game is over."

Erickson isn't accustomed to fan fallout following a loss, because he usually wins. He'll have 100 victories at age 46; the late Bear Bryant reached the milestone at the same age and finished with 323 victories, the most of any major-college coach.

"That puts Erickson on a record pace. He's 23-5-1 in his 124 National Championships in 4½ years at Miami."

"I just hope to get to 200 someday — if I live long enough in this town," he said. "I never thought I'd get to 100, but I won 50 of them here, so maybe Miami has a little bit to do with it."

"If I had stayed at Washington State, I don't know if I'd be at 100 by now. I'd be at 60 or something."

Erickson came from Washington State to Miami in 1989, inheriting perennial high expectations for a program that had won two national championships and 63 of 73 games in the previous six years.

"I don't think anybody does a better job," Florida State coach Bobby Bowden said. "It's harder to maintain a program than to get there."

"One of the amazing things about Miami's program is their ability to select coaches. They had Howard Schnellenberger, and then they had Jimmy Johnson, and when he leaves you say, 'They can't get a third one.' But Dennis is as good as any of them."

Thompson, 6 others file for free agency

NEW YORK (AP) — Robby Thompson, who hit .312 with 19 homers and 65 RBIs for the San Francisco Giants, headed the list of seven players who filed for free agency Tuesday.

Cincinnati Reds second baseman Rip Roberts and New York Mets third baseman Howard Johnson also were among those filing, as were Chicago White Sox pitcher Tim Lincecum, Oakland second baseman Jerry Browne, Seattle catcher Dave Valle and Colorado pitcher Bruce Hurst.

Hurst filed after the Rockies decided to give him a $400,000 buyout rather than exercise a $3 million option.

The New York Yankees told Mike Witt that they would give him a $500,000 buyout rather than exercise his $500,000 option.

The list of those potentially eligible dropped by one when the California Angels place infielder Kurt Stillwell on unconditional release waivers.

In addition, the Toronto Blue Jays said they wouldn't offer salary arbitration to three players covered by the restriction against repeat free agency within a five-year period: outfielder Rickey Henderson, reliever Mark Thompson and shortstop Dick Schofield.

The three may file for free agency starting Friday. In Henderson's case, the right to offer arbitration was waived by the Blue Jays when they acquired him from Oakland on July 31. He will be represented this winter by Dennis Gilbert, who negotiated Barry Bonds' contract with San Francisco last winter and Bobby Bonilla's deal with the New York Mets after the 1991 season.

Twenty-eight players have filed for free agency and about 85 more are eligible to file by the Nov. 7 deadline. They can talk specific money terms only with their former club until Nov. 8, when they become free to sign with any team.

USOC tries to nominate new representative

NEW YORK (AP) — U.S. Olympic leaders will try again this week to solve a problem that has bedeviled them for almost two years.

Who should be the second American member of the International Olympic Committee?

One of a handful of nations entitled to two seats on the IOC, the United States has been down to a single member since Robert Helms resigned in 1991 in the midst of a conflict-of-interest scandal.

Samaranth

Efforts to fill the hole have so far failed because of the inability of leaders of the U.S. Olympic Committee to come up with a single candidate or even a short list of names acceptable to IOC president Juan Antonio Samaranch.

Names that have been mentioned include former United Nations ambassador Andrew Young; NBA commissioner David Stern; USOC executive director Harvey W. Schiller; Larry Hough, the head of the federal student-loan administration; and Peter V. Ueberroth, the guru of the 1984 Los Angeles Olympics.

Even actor Arnold Schwarzenegger has been listed as a contender.

Samaranch is scheduled to attend the last three days of the USOC's Olympic Congress and board of directors meetings here Friday-Sunday-and LeRoy Walker, USOC president, has been canvassing committee members for their thoughts.

"I think the IOC is going to be a major focus here," said John Krinsky, deputy secretary general of the USOC.

Walker was unavailable for comment. Messages left at his home and offices were not returned.

It's hard to say what, if anything, the United States and Olympic athletes lose by not being fully represented on the IOC, a 92-member panel that controls the Games and their support system.

Anita DeFrantz, the sole U.S. representative, is an increasingly public and powerful member of the IOC, a member of its policy-making executive board and a spokeswoman on causes ranging from athletes rights to gender equity.

But the United States is due to host the next summer Olympics, in Atlanta in 1996, and more and more decisions directly affecting U.S. interests will be made by the IOC as those Games near.

The Winter Games enter into the equation, too.

Salt Lake City is bidding to host the Winter Olympics in 2002, a vote that will be taken in less than two years. IOC members are pointed in promoting Olympic bids from their countries.

"I certainly would love to have a companion," DeFrantz said. "I'd love to share the responsibility with someone else of spreading the word of the Olympic movement, which is an important part of the work of an IOC member."

The USOC didn't want it to drag on this long.

Last summer, it submitted a list of four names for IOC consideration but was told that none of the four then USOC president William Hybl, vice president Mike Lenard, Ross Wales of the International Swimming Federation and former International Baseball Federation president Robert Smith — were acceptable.

It tried again in Monte Carlo last month, at the IOC's annual session. But so many names were being circulated — between 12 and 17 million, IOC vice president Richard Pound joked — that Walker and DeFrantz finally told Samaranch they couldn't settle on just one.

"You should notice that we (IOC) didn't elect any new members in Monte Carlo or in Barcelona," DeFrantz said. "So I don't think the United States is being singled out on this."

Jordan's exit leaves room for scoring

Chicago Tribune

CHICAGO — If they are honest, most of them anyway, they will admit it was one of the top five things that entered their minds. After, of course, the initial shock and maybe the sadness and perhaps even the fear.

Who is going to score now that Michael Jordan is gone? How are the 45 shot attempts per game going to be distributed and how about his nearly 33 points?

If Chicago Bulls players weren't thinking it when the retirement announcement was made, they have most certainly pondered it since. Of course, filling the void defensively for a player many consider the greatest in the game will be no easy task either and may, in fact, prove to be more daunting. But when they divvy up the pie this season, it will be the offense, the shots, the points, that will capture our attention.

"From a coach's standpoint, you'd like to have everybody on your team average 15 or 17 points a game and have different people come through for you in different situations," says Bulls coach Phil Jackson. "And this is the kind of team I think is going to take on that characteristic to some extent."

"But in a situation like this, where we have our instant pool, basically you can do anything you want and talent will (win) out regardless. You can play isolations, you can give everybody the ball 20 times a game and everybody gets their 20 chances, and guys who are good are going to do the scoring."

In other words, Scottie Pippen, the team's second-leading scorer behind Jordan for the last five years, should step in naturally as the team leader, perhaps increasing his average a few points. But how about the other? Does B.J. Armstrong, the team leader in field-goal percentage last season, increase his 12-point scoring average to fill Pippen's role?

Does Horace Grant, long a player desperate for more offensive opportunities, hike his 13-points average to a new echelon? And what about the big men such as Bill Cartwright, Scott Williams, Will Perdue and Stacy King, players who have always been expected to pass first, face up to the basket second? Do they get into the act as well?

"Now (in the preseason) it's not necessary," says Grant, "but during the season, I'm pretty sure I'll take a lot more shots, get a lot more involved in the offense, and not be the go-to guy but the second guy in command, if you will. I expect to average about 20 points and at least 12 rebounds. I think that's a good possibility."

Grant was the most emphatic, but others are just as ambitious.

"Obviously, there will be more scoring for the front line just because our opportunities will increase," says Cartwright. "Everybody is looking forward to more opportunities."

Williams admits he got a little too overanxious at first.

"You have to be more aggressive when opportunities present themselves, but you don't have to hunt for shots," he says. "That's what happened to me early in the exhibition season. I got away from what I do best, defense and rebounding, and I have to concentrate on those things."

Nevertheless, Williams thinks the post players can grab a bigger piece of the scoring load naturally.

"We're going to have to get high-percentage shots and that means trying to pound the ball inside and get teams into foul trouble," he says.

"Armstrong, meanwhile, is cautious in his enthusiasm. "This is my fifth year," he says, "and I'm not looking for them to all of a sudden say, 'Here are some plays to get you involved.' Phil likes the team approach and our system."

Armstrong is not fazed from that system, finding open spots on the court to set up when Jordan or Pippen kicked the ball back out. But he has been fighting his own aggressive offensive instincts since he came to the Bulls.

"I expect less spot-ups," Armstrong admits, "and new opportunities to create, but I'm not a scoring machine like a Jordan and I'm not going to try to be. We were all scorers before we came into this situation, but trapping, rebounding, making mistakes, those are the things that Michael did so well and we need to continue to do that to get the easy baskets."

"What I see," Jackson says, "are a lot of our players filling the roles they've filled before and being the people they are. I don't think you're going to change the spots on the court right now. You're not going to all of a sudden have a 20-point player who averaged 10 the last couple of years."

Someone excited to find out what happens is assistant coach Tex Winter, who has preached the team concept through his triangle offense for years and will have a chance to see if it can succeed in its true form.

"I love Michael and I think he's the greatest basketball player to ever play the game," Winter says, "but from my selfish standpoint, I'd like to see how we can function without the best player in basketball, to see if we can still be the point most people are making and see how the system functions now. I look forward not to the challenge but to the opportunities this presents."

Pac-10 rivals downplay game's importance

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — No. 7 Arizona's game with No. 15 UCLA this week, while important, isn't the most crucial game in the Wildcats' history, coach Dick Tomey said Tuesday.

Tomey said he agreed with UCLA coach Terry Donahue that it was easy to get carried away with the import of the contest.

"When you look at our conference, there's a long way to go for all of us," Tomey told reporters. "But for us at this point, this is a great opportunity, and this is something we really look forward to."

The Wildcats, never before unbeaten in seven games, are the lone leader in the Pacific 10 Conference race this late in the season (4-0), play UCLA on Saturday in Pasadena, Calif.

The winner will have an edge on the fight to claim a return appearance in the Rose Bowl on Jan. 1, Arizona is the only Pac-10 team never to play in a Rose Bowl game.

'It's a big ballgame — but it's not a final kind of thing. ... This conference race has got a long way to go.'

— Dick Tomey, Arizona coach

With a win, the Bruins (5-2, 3-1) would tie Arizona and "turn the race topsy turvy and it would be one of the most interesting conference races in history," Donahue said in a teleconference call.

But Tomey said Arizona had more on the line in last November's game with Washington — a 16-3 Wildcat victory — because it kept his team in the Rose Bowl hunt until the Wildcats stumbled and finished 6-4-1 with back-to-back losses to Southern Cal and Arizona State.

"At this point of the season, you can kind of feel it and sense that the season's rolling down to the end and that every game is going to get more meaningful," Tomey said.

But he reiterated: "It's a big ballgame — but it's not a final kind of thing. The Washington game last year, we lose it, we're done, as far as the conference race is concerned. This conference race has got a long way to go."

Both coaches also agreed that

UCLA benefited from its 14-13 early-season loss to Nebraska, much in the same way Arizona gained in confidence after losing narrowly to Miami last year.

Tomey once coached as a fellow assistant with, and then under, Donahue and keeps in close touch with the Bruins' coach. He said they discussed getting better after the Nebraska-UCLA game.

"We talked about the Miami game, and all that about the fact that they could make something out of that very similar," Tomey said. "And I'm glad they have. I'm glad to see them being successful. But I had no idea that they would turn it around as quickly or as abruptly."

"That victory and UCLA's surge from a 15-0 deficit to beat Washington 39-25 "were both very impressive performances," he said.

Hall, of Richardson, Texas, was selected as the Western States League MVP in 1991 while at Ricks College, and was second team All-American.

He started every game during BYU's 1992 season and was honored by coaches three times as linebacker of the game.

2 charged for egging pitcher's house

MOORESTOWN, N.J. — Two teen-agers were charged with pelting the home of Philadelphia Phillies relief pitcher Mitch Williams with eggs to show their displeasure with his performance in the World Series.

Hours after Williams gave up the series-winning home run against Toronto on Saturday, police said about 30 youngsters armed with cartons of eggs arrived at Williams' house. Williams was not at the house — after leaving Toronto, he flew to his home in Arlington, Texas, where he lives during much of the offseason.

When police arrived, most of the youths fled, but two were taken into custody — a 17-year-old from Gwynedd, Pa. and a 16-year-old from Moorestown. Both were released to their parents and could face harassment charges, police said.

But there has been patrolling the area since Oct. 20 after at least two death threats against Williams. The threats began after Williams blew a five-run lead and the Phillies lost Game 4 of the World Series.

Falcons drop recently acquired back

SUWANEE, Ga. — The Atlanta Falcons on Tuesday released running back John Stephens, obtained earlier this month in a trade with the Green Bay Packers, and signed two players from their practice squad.

The team signed running back Anthony Wallace to replace Stephens and quarterback Chris Haker to replace the injured Billy Joe Toler.

The Falcons received Stephens, 27, in a trade that sent running back Eric Dickerson to Green Bay.

Stephens, a first-round draft choice by New England in 1988, never suited up for Atlanta. He ran for 173 yards and had five receptions for 31 yards for the Packers.

Judge dismisses charges against Rison

ATLANTA — A judge dismissed assault and weapons charges Tuesday against Atlanta Falcons wide receiver Andre Rison, but a prosecutor said the case could be reopened.

Rison was charged with aggravated assault, discharging a firearm, simple battery and carrying a pistol without a license after a fight with rap singer Lisa Lopes outside a nightclub on Sept. 2.

The two had been celebrating Rison's new contract and their engagement, witnesses said, when Rison became upset. Lopes walked out of the club and into a nearby grocery store.

Two men in the store tried to help Lopes when Rison hit her, police said. They said Rison went to his car, got a gun and fired a shot that struck a wall.

Florida fires coach after investigation

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — The University of Florida fired women's swim coach Mitch Ivey after a university investigation of his relationships with former and current athletes.

The investigation began after ESPN reporters showed up on campus three weeks ago to work on a story about Ivey's interaction with former and current athletes.

Ivey denied the charges of misconduct after his firing Monday night, saying the university would rather avoid bad publicity than stand behind its coach.

"It's real unfortunate," Ivey told The Gainesville Sun in a story published today. "I was told that putting my arm around a girl and using foul language was deemed reason enough."

Howard finds job with other NY team

NEW YORK — Frank Howard, fired by the New York Yankees after the season, was one of three coaches hired by the New York Mets on Tuesday.

The others were Greg Pavlick and Steve Swisher, and they will join returning coaches Bobby Wine, Mike Cabbage and Tom McCraw on manager Dallas Green's crew.

Howard, 57, once an interim manager of the Mets and a coach under both George Bamberger and Davey Johnson, will be the team's first-base and outfield coach.

Pavlick, 43, part of the Mets organization for 23 years, will be pitching coach, and Swisher, 42, who has spent the past five years in the Mets minor league system, will be a bullpen coach.

Wine is Green's bench coach, Cabbage coaches third base and McCraw is the hitting coach.

2-top hoops players to sign with WSU

PULLMAN, Wash. — Two top high school basketball players plan to sign national letters of intent to attend Washington State University next year, school officials said.

Chris Griffin, a 6-foot-2, 190-pound guard from Jesuit High in Carmichael, Calif., and Carlos Daniel, a 6-7, 215-pound forward from Fairview High in Boulder, Calif., said Monday they will sign with the Cougars.

Griffin averaged 14 points, six rebounds and four assists per game last season with a 22.2 assist.

Daniel averaged 18.6 points, 11 rebounds and four blocked shots per game as a junior last season.

Both said they planned to sign national letters of intent to attend WSU during the early signing period, which runs Nov. 10-17.

76ers Hornacek ends his holdout

PHILADELPHIA — Jeff Hornacek ended his holdout with the Philadelphia 76ers in time to play against the Charlotte Hornets Tuesday night.

"I came back with the agreement that something gets done in the near future," Hornacek said in Charlotte. "Hopefully, that will be by the beginning of the season. By then, I should know if my future is with this team or not."

Hornacek, a holdout since the start of training camp, was not with the team for a 105-103 overtime exhibition victory Sunday over the Washington Bullets.

The guard and his agent, Peter Johnson, are seeking a balloon extension that would pay Hornacek about $8 million in the 1997-98 season, when he will be 34, according to The Philadelphia Inquirer.

The 76ers have already said they consider his demands to be out of line.

Hornacek has four seasons remaining on a six-year contract he signed with the Phoenix Suns, paying him a guaranteed total of $6 million and up to $7.5 million with performance-based incentives.

CBS suffers 2nd-lowest Series ratings

NEW YORK — Ratings for this year's World Series were the second-lowest ever and slipped below the NBA Finals for the first time.

Toronto's six-game victory over the Philadelphia Phillies got a 17.3 rating and a 30 share, according to figures released today by A.C. Nielsen Co. The rating was down 14 percent from the 20.2 rating for the Blue Jays' six-game victory over the Atlanta Braves last year.

The only lower-rated World Series since records began in 1959 was Oakland's earthquake-interrupted sweep of San Francisco in 1989, which got a 16.4 rating.

In 1989, the NBA Finals got a 15.1 rating. The Chicago Bulls' six-game victory over the Phoenix Suns in June got a 17.9 rating, the league's record high. The Dallas Cowboys' 52-17 rout of Buffalo in the Super Bowl on Jan. 31 got a 40.3 rating.

Toronto's dramatic 8-6 victory Saturday night got a 19.0 rating, the lowest ever for a sixth game, and a 35 share. This was down 66 percent from the 27.7 rating and 41 share for Toronto's 4-3, 4-hitting victory at Atlanta in Game 6 last year.

Ratings increased throughout the game, which included a five-run Philadelphia comeback in the eighth and Joe Carter's game-winning homer off Mitch Williams in the ninth, only the second home run to end a World Series.

BYU player may have to end career after cardiac tests

PROVO, Utah (AP) — Brigham Young University football standout Nathan Hall, taken to a hospital during the third quarter for cardiac testing, is considering whether to should continue his athletic career.

The 6-foot-4 senior has been sidelined and won't play this Saturday against Utah State, said BYU coach LaVell Edwards.

Hall stopped playing at halftime in the game Saturday with Eastern State University, and during the third quarter was taken on a stretcher to a hospital for tests. He returned to play in the fourth quarter.

Hall said Monday his cardiologist told him he could no longer play football.

Edwards said he was sorry Hall could not play out his career. "But this pales in comparison with the number one issue, which is his health," the coach told the Daily Universe, BYU's student newspaper.

But Tuesday, BYU's sports information office issued a news release that said the player's career has "temporarily been put on hold."

Team doctor Darrell Stacey said Hall may be able to play again, if not this season.

Hall, a 6-foot-4 senior, also has diabetes, and has suffered from a heart ailment since high school. He said he had not taken his medication recently.

He knew what was happening. It was nothing new," he told the Universe. "As the game went on, my legs got heavier. I got lightheaded."

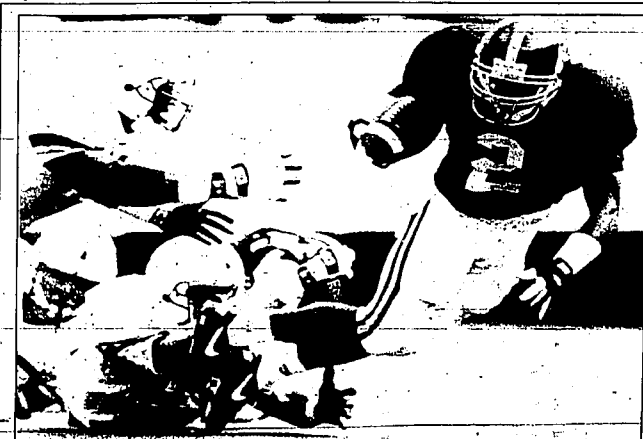

He rested for 30 minutes, but his heart rate did not go down, he said.

Hall expected to know more after a medical evaluation this afternoon, the BYU sports office said.

Hall, of Richardson, Texas, was selected as the Western States League MVP in 1991 while at Ricks College, and was second team All-American.

He started every game during BYU's 1992 season and was honored by coaches three times as linebacker of the game.

Alabama's David Palmer is quite possibly the best college football player in the nation, despite the lack of Heisman attention he has received.

Tide's Palmer can do it all

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (AP) — David Palmer's a receiver, quarterback and tailback. He returns kicks and punts. And his coach says he wouldn't hesitate to use him as a defensive back.

He's Alabama's "Deuce on the Loose," and possibly the best all-around player in college football.

Sure, Florida State quarterback Charlie Ward is the favorite to win the Heisman Trophy. But what other player could do what Palmer did last week?

With starting quarterback Jay Barker injured and the offense sputtering, Palmer was a one-man team — literally — in No. 5 Alabama's 19-14 victory over Mississippi. He rushed seven times for 60 yards. He completed his only pass for 54 yards. He caught eight passes for 76 yards. He returned three punts for 41 yards and two kickoffs for 34 yards. He accounted for 265 all-purpose yards.

David Palmer won the football game for the University of Alabama. "Ole Miss coach Billy Brewer said, 'We couldn't do anything against him. Without his play, we might be tearing down the goalpost.'"

"I really don't know what they look for in a Heisman," said Alabama coach Gene Stallings. "If they are looking for an outstanding football player, he is one. His numbers might not be quite as good, but anybody who can return the way he can, run the football, throw the football, catch the football, has got to be a candidate for outstanding whatever."

Palmer usually avoids the media, but even he was talking after that performance.

"It was a great day," said the 5-foot-9, 170-pound junior, known as the Deuce because he wears No. 2. "I did about everything but score a touchdown."

On Saturday, at Bryant-Denny Stadium against Southern Mississippi, Palmer will start at receiver, but also see duty as a quarterback, tailback and kick returner. Alabama's defensive coordinator, Bill Oliver, has not asked to borrow Palmer. Yet.

Palmer's numbers are not overwhelming. Still, he's leading the team with 35 catches for 598 yards and five touchdowns. Plus, he's averaging 5.8 yards rushing, 23.8 yards on kickoff returns and 8.9 yards on punt returns.

Palmer rarely shows his face around the athletic dorm on Mondays, when the school holds its weekly media day. He is wary of reporters, perhaps because of publicity surrounding his off-the-field activities.

Like many who grow up the product of a broken home in a low-income neighborhood, Palmer became a father while still a teenager. Last season, the 20-year-old was suspended for the first three games after being arrested twice for driving under the influence of alcohol.

"When David came in here he was this excited guy who just wanted to be there and do whatever."

"After all the trouble he got in, he did some talking with the older guys and the coaches. It made him grow up and mature. Now he's a good student and a good athlete. He doesn't party like he used to."

NCAA head foresees playoff

Chicago Tribune

OVERLAND PARK, Kan. — To those who want to see a national football playoff in Division I, take heart. Outgoing NCAA Executive Director Dick Schultz maintains there will be a playoff by the end of the decade.

And that's not all. Schultz predicts much of the gender equity debate will be decided by the courts, that sports programs are going to endure further budget cuts, that women's sports programs can be developed into revenue producers, and that athletes will have a greater voice in college sports, which could lead to a possible trust fund for them.

The six years of Schultz's tenure saw some of the biggest changes in NCAA history. But the future could make the last six years seem like a tremor compared with the earthquake that's on the way.

Schultz he won't with the NCAA to see that future. He was forced to resign in May after an independent investigator determined Schultz knew of improper loans made to athletes during his previous job as athletic director at Virginia. Schultz, who denied the charges, will stay on in his post until a successor is named, probably by January.

Like him or not, Schultz attempted to be progressive in driving the NCAA toward unprecedented reforms. That's why those in college sports pay close attention to his vision for the future.

The following are excerpts from a recent interview:

A national football playoff: "I think we will have one by the end of the decade. My personal feeling is that college football needs a shot in the arm. The (National Football League) is slowly strangling college football. They've driven all the bowl games to New Year's Day. We're going to lose some bowls in the next couple years."

Gender equity: "Schools pulling out of the NCAA (to avoid gender equity legislation) aren't going to accomplish anything. Gender equity's going to go with you wherever you go. It's the law. If schools continue to fight it, it is going to polarize the entire situation, and that's not going to help anything.

"Proportionality is a troubling area. The thing that scares (schools) is that it's got to be 50-50 (ratio of men to women athletes). It's a little difficult for some schools to understand why they have to have 50 percent (female athletes). Is there that kind of interest? It's one of the troubling areas we have to get over. The courts will determine that, unfortunately."

Tackles lead Vikings to big victory

EDEN PRAIRIE, Minn. (AP) — Had John Randle and Henry Thomas been a fraction of a second quicker, they would have been interesting the snaps from Chicago center Jim Fontenot to quarterback Jim Harbaugh.

Randle and Thomas, Minnesota's standout defensive tackle duo, seemed as much a part of the Bears' backfield as Neal Anderson and Ironhead Heyward in the Vikings' 19-12 victory Monday night.

Thomas and Randle repeatedly beat Chicago blockers, enabling them to chase down Harbaugh and throw down backs for negative yardage.

"These guys really exploded off the ball," Vikings coach Dennis Green said Tuesday. "John Randle is an amazing athlete. His first two, three steps, it's very difficult to single-block him. And Henry Thomas, if you don't double him, Henry gets a lot of penetration."

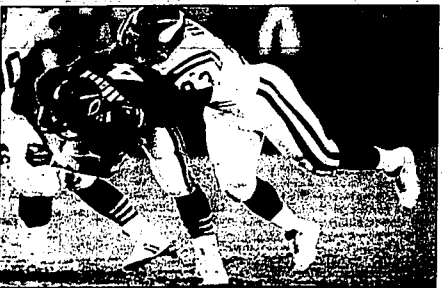

"They play at a very high intensity level and they work real well together."

Originally, the Vikings were credited with eight sacks Monday. But after watching the film, the NFL gave Minnesota another, and the rare tied a team record. Randle had three, Thomas 1½.

End is usually the glamour position on a defensive line. That also used to be the case in Minnesota, where Chris Doelman was once the sack master.

But no more.

Thomas leads the Vikings with six sacks. Randle is second with Minnesota's John Randle recorded three sacks of Chicago quarterback Jim Harbaugh in Monday night's game.

5½. Combined, they have more than the rest of the Minnesota team. Combined, they have more than four entire NFL clubs.

"John and Henry are too difficult for teams to handle 1-on-1," Green said. "But if you double-team them, it sets up other mismatches for us."

Monday, their up-the-middle pressure made it possible for ends Doelman and Roy Barker and linebackers Carlos Jenkins and Jack Del Rio to get in on the sack parade.

Thomas, who actually plays nose tackle in the Vikings' uneven four-man front, lined up so close to Jerry Fontenot that the Chicago center could feel Thomas' hot, hungry breath. Then, at the snap, Thomas would shoot one of the gaps, throw Fontenot aside like a rag doll and wreak havoc in the backfield.

"Henry has really perfected that," Green said. "Believe me, every coach calls the league and says, 'This guy's offside.' But he isn't. What it does is give him real good opportunity to jump into the seam."

Randle also found plenty of seams. Or he created his own seams. He was far too active for any one — or two — Chicago linemen.

"We call him Motor," Green said. "He's going all the time."

Rider reportedly close to signing with Wolves

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Isaiah Rider, the Minnesota Timberwolves' top draft choice, was close to reaching agreement with the NBA team.

Team officials said no official announcement of a signing was expected today, but a source within the organization said it was possible Rider would join the team in time for Wednesday's practice.

The Star Tribune of Minneapolis, quoting an unnamed source, reported today that Rider had made his airplane reservations to fly to Minnesota. Timberwolves president Bob Stein refused to confirm or deny the report, but said Monday night that they're "getting closer" to signing Rider.

"We're getting very close, and I'm hoping we can get him signed in the next few days," Stein said.

The contract will pay the former UNLV star about $2.5 million.

The main sticking point in the negotiations had been an opt-out clause, which Rider's agent, Arn Tellem, said must be part of any deal.

The clause is a provision that allows players to become free agents after a certain period in their contracts.

Many NBA teams are considering the clause to help circumvent salary cap restrictions, but Stein has said the Wolves are opposed to it in principle. Stein and Tellem reportedly have worked out a clause for Rider that will be satisfactory to both sides.

"We're basically done. We've told them what our bottom line is," Tellem said. "I hate to say anything other than that. But the tone of our conversations (Monday) was positive. It's up to them."

Wolves general manager Jack McCloskey said: "They're right there. I know they talked several times (Monday), and it could be done soon."

Rider has told friends that he has worked out every day and will be in top shape when he reports.

"I'll be relieved when he finally shows up," Wolves coach Sidney Lowe said Monday night. "We've got a lot of work to do with him individually in terms of getting him in shape and getting him used to our system. He gives us another piece coming off the bench. With the way he can score, he's going to give us more depth."

The Wolves have two exhibition games remaining — at Target Center against the Bucks on Friday and at Duke University on Sunday against the New Jersey Nets. The regular season begins Nov. 5, when the Wolves play at Detroit.

IBM losses heavy, but less than expected

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — IBM said Tuesday it lost $48 million in the third quarter, a markedly better performance than analysts expected.

The world's biggest computer company said its overall revenue increased slightly and hardware sales fell just 1 percent.

Chairman Louis V. Gerstner Jr. said the results were clearly unsatisfactory but contained some encouraging signs.

International Business Machines Corp. has been struggling to align itself with changes in the buying habits of computer customers. The company for years drew most of its profit from mainframe computers but has been squeezed as the power, and hence the popularity, of cheaper desktop machines has increased.

In the third quarter, the company's loss amounted to 12 cents per share. A year ago, IBM lost $2.8 billion, or $1.87 per share, after taking a special charge for cutting its work force and reducing factory capacity. Without that charge, the company would have earned $86 million in the third quarter 1992.

After preferred stock dividends of $22 million, the loss applicable to common stockholders for the third quarter 1993 was $70 million. Most Wall Street analysts predicted a loss of around $150 million to $200 million.

Revenue was $14.74 billion, up a fraction from $14.70 billion in the third quarter of 1992. Revenue from large, mid-sized and workstation computers was down compared with a year ago but personal computer revenue was up significantly.

The company was also boosted by a 27 percent jump in revenue from its services and consulting businesses. However, software, maintenance, rentals and financing revenue declined.

IBM had its worst loss ever in the second quarter, $8 billion, because of charges for paying 85,000 workers to leave the company by the end of the year. Its operating loss for the period was just $40 million, however.

Source: IBM
 The company now employs 267,000, down 41,000 from a year ago and 34,000 from the start of this year.

IBM has hired some people in its services business but said it still aims to cut an additional 12,000 workers by the end of December.

Dow loses 1 point; overall market slips

Knight-Ridder News Service

NEW YORK — The Dow industrials lost 1 point to close at 3672 Tuesday, but the broad market also lost ground.

Stock market measures fell more steeply, following the release of the Conference Board's latest data on U.S. consumer confidence.

The Dow initially fell 7 points due to anxiety over continued softness in U.S. Treasury bonds, which went down sharply in early trading for a fourth consecutive day.

But even when a rebounding bond market eventually took psychological pressure off stocks, the gains for the bond rebound — a gloomy October report from the Conference Board — was itself enough to keep equities depressed for the rest of the day.

The Conference Board's October report fell 39.4 from a revised 63.8 in September, surprising Wall Street economists who had expected a rise to around 65.0. The expectation index plunged to 65.4 from a revised 72.8.

The confidence readings fell in the face of recent strong economic statistics, from solid housing starts last week to mid-October car sales on Monday, and contradicted the latest University of Michigan survey. The Dow slid again after the release of the Conference Board data, eventually inching down to a session low at 3654, down 19 by mid-afternoon.

Although the Dow rebounded at mid-afternoon, such indexes as the NASDAQ Composite did not materially par their losses. At the close, the Dow stood at 3672.49, down only 1.12, but declining issues outpaced advancing stocks on the New York Stock Exchange by a somewhat more perceptible margin.

Rich avoid tax returns

WASHINGTON (AP) — The 10 million individuals and businesses that fail to file federal tax returns include more than 74,000 with incomes over $100,000 a year, the Internal Revenue Service said Tuesday.

About half the well-off nonfilers had some income from self-employment or farming, more than 40 percent had wages and about four of every ten had actually overpaid their taxes through withholding and estimated payments.

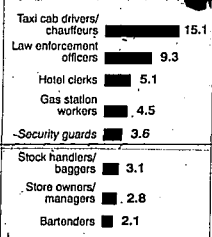

IRS Commissioner Margaret Miller Richardson disclosed the figures in testimony to the House Ways and Means oversight subcommittee about the agency's year-old campaign to bring nonfilers onto the tax rolls. The nonfilers cheat the federal treasury of about $10 billion a year.

It is too early to draw conclusions on the non-filer program, Ms. Richardson said. "I can say that we have identified a serious non-filer problem," she added. "But we also believe that we have made progress in dealing with the problem and are working toward a solution."

The commissioner repeated the agency's standing offer to delinquents: "It is not too late to file."

Cab drivers, dispatchers have most dangerous jobs

ATLANTA (AP) — People who drive or dispatch taxis were most at risk for being murdered on the job during the 1980s, federal safety officials reported Monday.

The National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health said 7,043 people were murdered on the job in the United States from 1980 through 1989 — an average of nearly 15 people a week.

Homicide was the leading cause of workplace death for women and the third leading cause of on-the-job death for all workers, the agency reported.

Motor vehicle accidents were the top cause of death in the workplace and machine-related accidents were second.

Taxicabs and taxi dispatch officers topped the list for most dangerous workplace with 26.9 of every 100,000 workers murdered during the decade — almost 40 times the national on-the-job rate of 0.7 per 100,000 workers.

Cab drivers and chauffeurs were listed as the riskiest jobs, with a rate of 15.1 deaths per 100,000. This year in New York City, where about 50,000 cabs cruise the streets, 32 cabbies have been murdered on the job.

"This is the most dangerous job in the city and no one besides the drivers seems to care," said Kenny Arthur, spokesman for Affiliated Livery Drivers and Owners in New York, a trade association.

After taxicabs and dispatch officers, other risky workplaces were liquor stores, where 8 of every 100,000 workers was slain; gun stations, 5.6; detective agencies, 5.5; courthouses, job-prisons-police and fire departments, 3.4; grocery stores, 3.2; jewelry stores, 3.2; hotels-motels, 1.5; and restaurants-bars, 1.5.

After cab driver and chauffeur, other high-risk occupations were police officer, 9.3 per 100,000; hotel clerk, 5.1; gas station worker, 4.5; security guard, 3.6; stock handler-bagger, 3.1; store owner-manager, 2.8; and bartender, 2.1.

Of 100 highest on the report workplace homicides declined 24 percent over the decade, from 914 murders in 1980 to 694 in 1989.

The agency collected its data from death certificates which do not provide a reason for on-the-job slayings.

Officials said the list of risky workplaces and jobs suggests that robbery is a primary motive. Disgruntled workers and domestic violence that spills into the workplace also contribute to on-the-job murders, the agency said.

To reduce the chances of workers being murdered on the job, NIOSH recommends that employers close establishments during late-night and early-morning hours, instruct workers not to resist during a robbery, install silent alarms and surveillance cameras, use drop safes to reduce the amount of cash on hand, and post signs that limited cash is available.

"Each employer is going to have to come up with some creative solutions to avoid this type of bad setting," spokeswoman Terry Hammond said.

Are 37 million Americans really in poverty?

NEW YORK — The Census Bureau says 36.9 million Americans, or 14.5 percent of the population, lived in poverty last year, a claim that has raised questions about the methodology involved.

Is the number really that high? Or should the Census Bureau's definition include, as it does not, the tens of billion of dollars in non-cash payments to the poor, including food stamps, housing subsidies and medical care?

Add in such transfer payments, as they are called, and according to one economics professor, the number in poverty drops by several percentage points.

In 1991, for example, the official number in poverty was listed at 35.7 million and the percentage at 14.2 percent. Include those non-cash payments and the number drops to 24.9 million and the percentage to 9.9 percent.

In 1990, such transfers totaled $123 billion. In 1965, the amount in comparable dollars was $6 billion. In 1965, noncash benefits accounted for 17 percent of total transfers to the poor. By 1990, the percentage was 70.

Failing to count them in the poverty rate, says professor June O'Neill, means "we fail to credit the substantial efforts the nation has been making to improve the standard of living of the poor."

O'Neill, professor of economics and director of the Center for the Study of Business and Government at Baruch College in New York, expressed her criticisms before the House Subcommittee on Human Resources last year, but with little impact.

Her analysis, which she stands by today, also contends that the government's cost of living index is faulty. She says it inaccurately raised the 1991 poverty rate by an additional 1.5 percentage points. The error originated, she says, in bad historical estimates of the index. The error produced a rise in the index 8.5 percent faster than true inflation in 1967-1983, before the computation method was corrected, she says.

Because of the flaw, she says, the official poverty threshold "still continues to be indexed by the flawed measure."

The professor agrees that poverty has indeed and regrettably risen in the 1990s, but she attributes that to recession. She maintains that, viewed over a longer period of time, poverty has declined rather than risen.

"The real trend in poverty has been obscured by the official statistics which falsely indicate that the poverty rate in 1991 was lower than it was in 1967," she told the House subcommittee in 1992.

"The corrected numbers," she continued, "reveal that poverty, even in the recession year of 1991, is substantially below the level of 1967, a peak year."

Statistical distortion or not, why should 10 percent poverty exist in a nation with such a high priority on reducing it?

Part of the reason, she says, is tied to a decline in wage rates for young male workers with low levels of schooling. She also mentions a large influx of non-English speaking immigrants whose earnings are temporarily very low.

A third explanation, according to O'Neill, lies in the persistence of the "subgroup of the population referred to as the underclass and the role of welfare in perpetuating the problem."

But to O'Neill, it is hard to explain why non-cash payments aren't included. Without them, she seems to suggest, we measure poverty-level earned income but not poverty level existence.

Big airlines cut fares; ticket deadlines near

The Associated Press

Major airlines cut fares up to 40 percent for trips through mid-January, but passengers have to make reservations by Friday and popular travel dates around the holidays aren't included.

At the same time, many airlines said they would raise long-distance round-trip fares $10 to $20 after the sale.

Northwest Airlines started the discounting over the weekend and other airlines quickly moved to match the price, spreading the sale across the country.

The double-edged move to raise fares while temporarily cutting them reveals conflicting temptations in the industry to both increase revenues but at the same time lure more people into the air with lower fares. The sale can't be applied to flights on the Sunday after Thanksgiving, Dec. 23 or Jan. 2. The last day to travel on a discounted ticket is Jan. 15.

Northwest said round-trip fares between Boston and Chicago would be $238, a 31 percent discount, for tickets purchased by Friday. One of the largest discounts announced Saturday, 39 percent, is on round-trip flights between Los Angeles and Seattle, which will cost $218.

As usual with discounts aimed at leisure travelers, the tickets are non-refundable, must be bought at least 14 days in advance and require a Saturday night stay.

Other airlines, including American, United, Delta and Continental, said they would spread the fare cuts to virtually their entire domestic route networks. United's discounts on routes where it doesn't compete with Northwest are between 23 percent and 33 percent, spokesman Joe Hopkins said.

Separately, many airlines matched an increase on selected fares by United Airlines. The increase raises round-trip fares about $20 on trips of more than 1,000 miles and won't take effect on 14-day advance purchase tickets until next weekend.

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — American fast-food franchises proliferate in this city nestled high in the Andes.

You can grab a bite at a Pizza Hut, a Dunkin' Donuts or a Whopper King.

Whopper King? You read that right. Not Burger King, the "Home of the Whopper" that Americans are familiar with, but Whopper King, a counterfeit knock-off.

In Bogota and many other cities around the world, businesses frequently use variations of U.S. brands or duplicate their letter for letter.

In the sleek shopping districts of Bogota's wealthy northern section, there are Benny's ice cream parlors — looking just like Ben & Jerry's of Waterbury, Vt. Benny's has the same lettering and dairy cow motif as Ben & Jerry's and sells Cherry Garcia, a top Ben & Jerry's brand. But instead of rich cherry ice cream and chunks of chocolate and cherries, Benny's version is a bland mix of artificial-tasting ice cream and candied cherries.

In Bogota's Zona Rosa, a casino, bar and restaurant district, Colombians wearing pre-faded jeans and tennis shoes crowd into Friday's, which serves burgers, beer and other fare under a red-and-white awning. Except for the chatter in Spanish, the scene could be a TGI Friday's in New York or Washington.

Consumers don't seem to care that they're not buying or patronizing the real thing.

Advertising is helping to create a homogeneous and bland consumer society — one which encourages people to seek status symbols at the expense of quality, a Colombian sociologist says.

"Many people can't afford Nike sneakers, for example," said Myriam Henao of the Universidad del Valle in Bogota. "So companies make copies and sell them cheaper — and acquiring that label becomes more important than having the quality of the genuine item, or of another item."

Joseph Finniff, executive director of the Colombian-American Chamber of Commerce, has little respect for brand-name pirates.

"Somebody took the time, designed a logo, put it on the market and spent years building the company's prestige, and for someone to come along and copy it..." Finniff said, shaking his head.

None of the owners of counterfeit businesses contacted in Bogota was willing to speak on the record. One, however, defended his action, saying that taking the name of another firm was a form of tribute to that company.

Jerry Greenfield, one of the founders of Ben & Jerry's, laughed when a reporter told him there was a copycat chain here, saying he'd be surprised if the Cherry Garcia reference came in a play on the name of rock singer Jerry Garcia — would be understood in Colombia.

But Greenfield said he would rather do without the honor of being copied.

After building Ben & Jerry's into an international firm with outlets in Russia and Israel over a period of 15 years, "Our name, our concept and our brand are that much more important to us," Greenfield said in a telephone interview.

Unlike counterfeiters who sell cheap copies of Rolex watches and Chanel scarves on street corners in various cities, the owners of bogus U.S. eateries can't run when the authorities come.

Commission denies toll-free area

BOISE (AP) — The Idaho Public Utilities Commission has denied a request from Latah County residents for toll-free, extended area telephone service between Moscow and Troy.

Last year, the PUC received hundreds of petitions from local residents asking for toll-free service between the communities.

majority of customers would receive a benefit from extended area service," the commission said.

The commission said the average Troy customer makes 28 in-state long distance telephone calls. But 75 percent of Troy customers pay less than $16 per month in toll charges and nearly half pay less than $6.85.

Troy residents have toll-free telephone access to many services that other communities its size do not have, the commission said, including schools, police and fire departments, medical clinic, and ambulance service.
