Search includes kin of missing girl

Stephanie Crane

JEROME – A Jerome fugitive is among three "leads" Custer County officials are pursuing in their search for a missing Challis girl.

Robert Paul Crane, 43, is the great-uncle of 9-year-old Stephanie Crane, who disappeared on Oct. 11.

"He's an investigative lead, like a lot of other leads, before we can say he is a suspect or eliminate him as one," Custer County Sheriff Arvin Finley said Friday.

But Robert Crane's whereabouts have been unknown since June 13, 1989, when he failed to contact probation officers in Twin Falls, Jerome County Prosecuting Attorney John Horgan said Friday.

Crane had been sentenced to five years imprisonment in January 1988 on drunken-driving and driving-without-insurance charges, according to court documents. But he was released on probation in August 1988.

He asked that supervision be transferred to California March 8, 1989. Two months later, he requested to return to Idaho. He never did.

He contacted probation officers twice — on May 17 and June 4, 1989 — but failed to meet a June 13 deadline with those officers.

A $10,000 bond was issued June 22, 1989, for his arrest on charges of violating his probation, Horgan said.

U.S. lacks satisfactory Haiti option

Analysis

By Christopher Marquis
Knight-Ridder News Service

WASHINGTON — As a political compromise to return exiled Haitian President Jean-Bertrand Aristide to power expires today without progress, Clinton administration officials pondering their next step have come upon an icy truth:

There are no good options left.

President Clinton has been growling threateningly at Haiti's military rulers this week as they refused to allow Aristide's return, labeling their defiance of international sanctions "a grave mistake."

But as Clinton huddles with his foreign policy team to consider alternatives — from U.S. military intervention to abandoning the campaign to restore democracy in Haiti — they see a distasteful array.

"The options are so terrible," said Richard Millett, a Latin military specialist at Southern Illinois University who argues that the Clinton administration has tragically underestimated the divisions within Haitian society.

"You don't want to send U.S. ground troops to impose a settlement. Politically, that's a disaster. You'd have casualties on both sides," Millett said.

For the moment the military option, under which American or multinational troops would invade Haiti and forcibly restore Aristide, is all but ruled out.

With the American public and conservative lawmakers outraged over U.S. casualties in Somalia, the administration appears to have no stomach for risking soldiers' lives on a Haitian mission that many people perceive as similar.

U.S. officials say toppling the 7,300-member Haitian armed forces would be a relatively simple military exercise, but the question "What next?" makes them queasy.

Taking control of the hemisphere's poorest nation — a country with few resources, shaky institutions and no democratic tradition — is a formula for an expensive, prolonged and probably fruitless occupation.

New England vampire-killing rituals leave confirming evidence in graves

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Panicked New Englanders, desperate to end attacks from beyond the grave, once unearthed corpses and performed vampire-killing rituals in a war against the undead.

It's a century-old tale of Halloween horror, now confirmed by scientists.

Dr. Paul Sledzik of the National Museum of Health and Medicine said Friday that bodies from 18th and 19th century graves in several locations in New England show evidence that they had been disinterred within a few months or years of death and then mutilated or disrupted in some way.

Journalists' accounts published as recently 1893, he said, support the belief that this ghoulish tampering with corpses was prompted by the idea of "killing" the undead to stop them from sucking the life force from the living.

Sledzik participated in analyzing corpses from a cemetery near Griswold, Conn. and found one that clearly bore the sign of vampire killing.

The corpse, found in a coffin bearing the initials "JB," was found in the Walton family cemetery of Griswold, a burial place that had been accidentally violated by a construction project.

Sledzik said when he examined JB, it was clear the remains had been disturbed sometime after the body had turned to a skeleton.

The long bones of the upper leg had been placed on the chest as an "X" and the skull had been removed and placed on the leg bones.

The effect was to form a skull and crossbones.

In the laboratory, Sledzik determined that the bones bore lesions from tuberculosis. JB also had a hunched and crooked shoul-

Virus infects health disks

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Were the computer disks the White House handed out with the 1,342-page Clinton health plan infected by a virus that flashes a "legalize marijuana" message?

That rumor swept Washington Friday after a business news service reported that such a virus turned up on the computer disks it got from the White House.

However, that appears to be the only reported sickness among the 1,000 sets of two, 3½-inch computer disks that the White House ordered from a Virginia firm in the wee hours of Wednesday morning, shortly before Clinton took a copy of his bill to Capitol Hill.

Johannah Brookwell, president of Controlled Copy Support Systems Inc. in Fairfax, Va., insisted the disks were clean when they left her shop.

Jeff Eller, the White House director of media affairs, said the Bloomberg News Service is the only organization that has found anything wrong with its disks.

"Nobody else has got it. I think the disks that left here were healthy," said Eller. But he added that he could not say with 100 percent certainty that all the disks were virus-free since they were not all checked beforehand.

Riot victims aid fire-stricken

The Associated Press

Any way to shelter – A3

LOS ANGELES — Just 18 months ago, arsonists burned blocks of inner-city businesses during three days of riots.

This week, victims of that siege were among the first to offer help to people in affluent, hillside neighborhoods devastated by brushfires.

"This might help somebody," Gregory Cook said as he and his wife placed four bags of clothing into a truck outside the First African Methodist Episcopal Church in riot-scarred South Central Los Angeles.

The 46-year-old machinist had used his lunch hour to bring the packages to the church, a community hub in the mostly black and Hispanic neighborhood.

"We've been down and out ourselves and had a chance to get on our feet," he said. "Now it's our turn to help. God, he doesn't see any color."

South Central, one of the city's poorest neighborhoods, was hard-hit by three days of riots and arson fires that erupted April 29, 1992, after four white police officers were acquitted of most charges of beating black motorist Rodney King.

This week, authorities blamed arson for six of the 13 wildfires that burned from Ventura County, north of Los Angeles, to the U.S.-Mexico border.

At the Brotherhood Crusade, a charitable organization in South Central, three truckloads of clothes and fast-food gift certificates were ready to be distributed to the latest fire victims, many of them residents of the largely white, affluent suburbs.

"Just as we appeal to others to help us because we have a tremendous need, we would be irresponsible if we didn't step up and accept the responsibility that we ask of others," said the organization's president, Danny Bakewell.

Bakewell lives in the fire-ravaged Eaton Canyon section of Altadena, a suburb northeast of Los Angeles where 118 homes and buildings burned. Four homes on his block burned, but not his.

"If it hadn't been for the Fire Department and neighbors helping out by spraying down houses it wouldn't have been spared," he said.

At First AME, donations were trickling in Friday morning, but the Rev. Cecil Murray said the pace would pick up once word got around.

State Sen. Diane Watson of Los Angeles had suggested that the church become a collection site for the American Red Cross.

"Fires are an equalizer," Watson said. "It doesn't matter how valuable your home is. We're all equalized in our suffering."

Murray agreed.

"Do you see these ashes?" he said, pointing to a layer of grime from the wildfires that had settled on his car. "That's how well we're linked together."

Recalling the flames that engulfed parts of South Central 18 months ago, he added: "The ashes from the riots reached Beverly Hills."

Weather summary

High pressure over the Pacific Northwest brought cold air down from Canada for some of the coldest readings so far at many locations in Idaho Friday.

The National Weather Service said afternoon temperatures remained cool across much of the state. A high pressure ridge will build inland today before another cold front moves into Idaho Sunday.

Temperatures in the Magic Valley tumbled sharply from Thursday's levels and were in the 30s and 40s much of the day. Blustery northeasterly winds and cooler air produced uncomfortable conditions much of the day. Skies cleared in the afternoon and the wind died down by sunset.

Light rain fell in northern and eastern Idaho. Moscow's .10 inch led the reports, which included .08 at Grangeville and .03 at Lowell.

Low readings dipped into the teens in eastern sections and at higher elevations Friday morning.

The highest temperature in the state Friday was 61degrees at Riggins. Arco reported the lowest at 10 degrees.

Snow, sub-freezing chill seize Texas Panhandle, Plains

The Associated Press

Temperatures in the Texas Panhandle ticked down by the minute Friday as snow flurries coated the region, with snow showing up in parts of Kansas and Minnesota as well.

The National Weather Service urged Texas residents to protect their pets, plants and pipes from the cold.

During a 30-minute period in Lubbock, the mercury dropped seven notches to 35 degrees as gusty north winds ushered in the season's first deep cold snap.

Elsewhere, winter advisories were posted for the New Mexico mountains and parts of mountainous Colorado. Between 6 and 10 inches of snow fell early Friday in Rye, Beulah and Cuchara in Colorado.

Snow advisories were posted for northern Wisconsin, northeast Minnesota, and southeast Missouri. Southwest Kansas had its first snow of the season overnight, with 4 inches falling near the Colorado line.

Up to 2 inches of snow fell in Minnesota.

Freezing temperatures were expected in Oklahoma, northern and central Texas, northwest Arkansas, the northern three quarters of Missouri and most of Indiana.

Hot, dry Santa Ana winds were expected to return to fire-ravaged Southern California today, the weather service said. Gusty winds were also expected across Arizona, forecasters said.

During Friday, rain and thunderstorms extended over western Georgia, the Florida Panhandle, Alabama, the Mississippi Valley and much of Texas.

Snow reached from the Texas Panhandle through the Rockies, the upper Missouri Valley, North Dakota and the upper Mississippi Valley.

Heavier rainfall during the six hours ending at noon MDT included 1.5 inches in Meridian, Miss. Denver had an inch of snow in that period. At 1 p.m. MDT, snow was falling in Wichita Falls, Texas, the town's earliest snowfall on record, the weather service said.

Gas exposure evidence growing

The Dallas Morning News

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon has acknowledged for the first time that airborne chemical agents were detected in the vicinity of U.S. troops during the Persian Gulf War, three House Democrats said Friday.

The Dallas Morning News also learned that the Army distributed a medical questionnaire shortly after the war that asked soldiers whether they believed that they had been exposed to "chemical warfare or germ warfare."

The Pentagon officially has dismissed allegations of chemical exposures. Lt. Col. Stephanie Hoehne, an Army spokeswoman, said she was not aware of a classified briefing where the congressmen reported being told about a nerve-gas release.

And she called the medical questionnaire a routine form.

Meanwhile, Sen. Donald Riegle, D-Mich., who has suggested that many U.S. troops were exposed to chemical or biological agents during the Gulf War, asked Veterans Affairs Secretary Jesse Brown to turn over all medical files relevant to his ongoing inquiry.

The request referred to "those exposed directly as a result of Iraqi attacks and indirectly as a result of exposure to the fallout from bombings of Iraqi chemical and biological facilities."

These developments came a day after U.S. Sen. Richard Shelby, D-Ala., announced on the Senate floor that a Department of Veterans Affairs doctor had diagnosed a Navy veteran as suffering from the effects of chemical or biological exposure.

available for comment Friday.

Crane had a previous arrest record, Jerome County Sheriff George Silver III said Friday. In a five-month span in 1985, Crane had been arrested on charges of driving without privileges, disorderly conduct and two separate charges of battery, he said.

Though Crane has been wanted by Jerome County authorities since 1989, recent phone calls have traced him to Colorado, Silver said.

Robert Crane is 6 feet 2 inches tall, weighs about 200 pounds, and has brown hair and hazel eyes.

Meanwhile, authorities in Custer County said Friday that the search for Stephanie Crane has been "frustrating."

Custer County Chief Deputy John Bryant said county, state and federal investigators are following "a couple" of leads in addition to Robert Crane – including one lead in Challis.

"They're not real high, but they're fairly strong leads," Bryant said. "It's becoming a very frustrating exercise."

Calls have come in to the county sheriff's office from across the United States, he said. "We're actively pursuing anything we're getting."

It is statistically probable, though, that a family member or someone close to the family knows where Stephanie is, he said.

"We think maybe somebody has seen something and hasn't told us," he said.

Girl last seen on Oct. 11

Stephanie Crane was seen last at 6 p.m. Oct. 11at Challis Lanes bowling alley, wearing maroon sweatpants and a maroon-and-white striped sweatshirt.

"Gimmie" was printed across the front of the sweatshirt. She also was wearing maroon and white sneakers.

Stephanie is 4 feet 2 inches tall, weighs about 65 to 75 pounds, and has brown hair and blue eyes.

were demonstrated Oct. 11 when Clinton decided to withdraw the USS Harlan County, a Navy transport ship with lightly armed U.S. military trainers and technicians aboard, after a mob barred the ship from docking in Port-au-Prince.

That retreat has emboldened Haiti's military command, which now calculates that it can outlast trade sanctions enforced by U.S. and foreign warships off Haiti's coast.

"The army is concerned about only one thing: the Marines coming down here and kicking their butt," said one former Haitian government official. Barring that, he said, "the army figures the Americans will get tired before we get tired."

All bets against American intervention are off, however, if U.S. citizens in Haiti are at risk. The Haitian military, astutely, has issued instructions to harm "not a hair of any single foreigner" while the repression continues against ordinary Haitians, said the ex-official, who asked not to be named.

Aristide, for his part, has soft-pedaled the idea of returning on the shoulders of foreign troops, because it could undermine his claim of legitimacy — as the winner of 67 percent of the Haitian vote in 1990 — and fuel nationalist arguments of his enemies.

Aristide's strategy to dislodge the military is to apply ever-tighter economic sanctions against Haiti. On Thursday, when it became apparent he would not return today as scheduled by the U.N-brokered Governors Island Accord, he called for a total air and sea blockade.

Clinton has strongly endorsed economic sanctions but it is not clear whether he will back Aristide's latest appeal.

Some U.S. officials worry that an extended blockade, in addition to weakening the military, could provoke a spasm of chaos and violence of the sort that has racked Haiti in the past.

"We could be dragged into intervention by the success of our own sanctions if the military doesn't say 'uncle' when it should," said one U.S. diplomat familiar with Haiti.

Prescriptions for Aristide's return have always counted on at least passive cooperation from Cedras and the high command.

Vampire

der, from an improperly healed collar bone break, a crippled leg and probably what was an open and festering wound on his foot. The man also had missing front teeth.

"In life, JB could have been a frightening figure," said Sledzik. Memory of this scary appearance could have prompted some to dig him up and to make sure he was dead by removing the skull.

Sledzik said his research shows such beliefs were common in New England as late as 1892, particularly among families riddled with tuberculosis, then called "consumption."

"Published vampire accounts places the folklore within the same time frame and location as JB," said Sledzik. He said other researchers have also reported finding bodies from the era that were mutilated.

"When someone died of consumption, it was believed they could come back from the dead and drain the life of their living relative," said Sledzik. "In order to stop this, family members would go into the grave and somehow attempt to kill the person again. If there was still flesh, they would remove it and burn it. Or they would remove the head. In the American tradition, just causing some disruption to the body was the way to kill a vampire."

The crude stake-through-the-heart approach, he said, was an archaic European tradition not practiced by the Americans.

Decomposition effects on the bodies of consumptives, when viewed with imagination, supported the folklore beliefs in vampires, said Sledzik.

"Consumption is a very physical disease," he said. "People can actually see the person wasting away."

And, yet, consumptives would have great bursts of energy and were known for a powerful sex drive, said Sledzik, "so it made sense to people then that after death this desire for life would continue and the dead would be able to drain the life force from their relatives."

Sledzik said it was felt that this life draining provided an explanation for new cases of tuberculosis and drove the living to "kill" the dead in ghastly rituals designed to guard against more disease.

Fanning the Flames

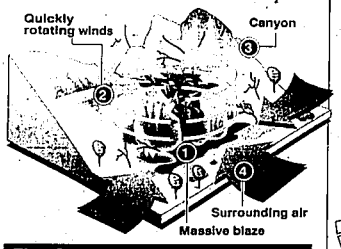
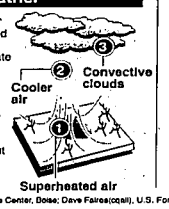
Firestorms

Resembling a tornado, a firestorm results when a brush fire becomes encircled by quickly rotating winds, such as an updraft in a steep-walled canyon. The winds swirl faster and faster, pulling in surrounding air and further fueling the fire. These massive blazes create their own wind patterns, which are strong enough to uproot trees and scatter embers thousands of yards away.



Fire-Generated Weather

As the superheated, smoky air rises, it encounters cooler air and loses it heat. Moisture at higher altitudes condenses on particulate matter—smoke particles and ash—creating clouds. These convective clouds are characteristically flat, indicating strong upper-altitude winds. The phenomenon, which occurred Wednesday in parts of the Southland, is rare in this area but is common in the Rocky Mountains.



Santa Anas

Southern California's notorious winds create perfect conditions for fire. The flow of hot, dry air originates far away in the Colorado Plateau and swirls southwestward, picking up speed and shedding humidity as it goes.

Flowing From Desert to Mountain to Sea

As they pass through the canyons rimming the Los Angeles Basin, the winds grow even more intense, hotter and drier. Acting like a bellows, the hurricane-force gusts feed oxygen to a fire and spread it across highways and canyons with devastating speed.

SIERRA MADRE, Calif. (AP) — On the steep, chaparral-covered slopes of the San Gabriel Mountains, the blue of the Crips and the red of the Bloods were joined in a painted band on the tools of a unique team of firefighters.

"It shows our bond of unity," Morrise White said of the two stripes on the handle of his tool, a combination rake and hoe. "Out here, we are all brothers."

Gang members, former members and their neighbors form a U.S. Forest Service crew called the South Central Panthers, named after the Los Angeles neighborhood ravaged by rioting in 1992.

Formed in June to bring racial diversity to the Forest Service and opportunity to the inner city, the crew of about 20 has fought fires all over Southern California, said Mark Glos, an Angeles National Forest supervisor.

When fire inched down the slopes Thursday over the route of the Rose Festival Parade in Pasadena, the Panthers were dispatched to stop it before it reached the homes below.

Two flashed gang hand symbols and banged their fists against the other's. Others raised their fist in acknowledgment of the call for unity before the crew filed up the Little Santa Anita Canyon to fight the fire.

"All right, South Central No. 1, baby," yelled Jeffrey Williams, 26, a former member of the Black Peestone Bloods.

Williams was arrested for looting on the first day of the riots that erupted in South Central after four white policemen were acquitted on most state charges in the beating of black motorist Rodney King.

He spent 30 days in jail, though he denies stealing anything. Resolved to change his life in some way, he joined the Panthers.

"Now a lot of young brothers ask me how they can do it, too," Williams said.

Helicopters roared overhead, sounding sirens before moving in close to drop fire-retardant foam on the flames as the Panthers dug their line through scrub oak, mountain mahogany, yucca, and buckwheat.

"We're more into each one helping one another instead of gang violence," said Andre Rainey, 31, a former member of the PJ Watts Crips.

"If I'd known about this when I was 18 or 19, I'd have eight or nine years in by now," said Wallace Bedford, 27, who represents the Crips. "I get to do things like hiking and camping that I've never done before."

Some firefighters were skeptical at first, said Glos, the supervisor.

"But by the time we're done working, they say we're a hell of a crew," he said.

Animals find way to shelters somehow

It managed a purr when scratched.

The teens were among hundreds of volunteers who worked to save and shelter the animal victims of Southern California wildfires.

"We moved llamas. We moved pigs. We moved cattle, horses, donkeys. We moved two elephants and lions and tigers; large cats," said Kathy Jenks, Ventura County director of animal regulations. "We have here a pet tarantula that a lady evacuated. It's in a little terrarium."

Many animals were abandoned, or ran in terror from the flames. There were 93 unclaimed horses Thursday at the Ventura County fairgrounds.

But often, homeowners made their cats and dogs a priority when fleeing burning homes.

"Many pet owners are in shock," said Sharon Kuhn, officer manager at Crown Valley Animal Hospital in Laguna Niguel. "They get the animal situated here and then they fall apart."

In Laguna Niguel, the Ritz-Carlton Hotel allowed pets to stay with their owners and even began offering cat and dog food through room service.

Many animals perished in the fires, including at least 40 at the Eaton Park Canyon Park nature center near Altadena.

A young panther and a lioness at the Animal Actors of Hollywood ranch in Ventura County were shot when fire threatened because they were too mean to be moved safely, officials said.

In the same area, a herd of badly burned cattle had to be destroyed.

More than 200 parrots and other birds, valued at more than $200,000, died when flames destroyed two exotic bird farms in Riverside County.

For Andy Dotson of Sierra Madre, Spot the Labrador retriever, two cats and three newborn kittens took precedence over his engagement ring when he was forced to evacuate.

"The animals come first, before everything," Dotson said.

The Los Angeles Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals-Southern California Humane Society picked up 70 cats, 30 dogs and six horses wandering near the Altadena fire.

Firefighters there saved an aviary with 200 finches, said the agency's president Edward C. Cubrda.

At Santa Anita Park, officials canceled thoroughbred races Thursday because of the smoke but they expected clear skies for next week's prestigious Breeder's Cup.

"The horses are fine. Many horsemen declined to work their horses because they don't want them to hurt their lungs," said Mike Mooney, a spokesman for the track that houses 1,800 horses.

CALIFORNIA FIRES

President Clinton has declared the counties of Los Angeles, Ventura, Orange, Riverside and San Diego major disaster areas.

LOS ANGELES COUNTY:
- 6,000-plus acres in one fire. 30 percent contained.
- 118-plus structures damaged or destroyed.
- $58.5 million-plus damage.

RIVERSIDE COUNTY:
- 43,900 acres-plus in five fires. Three contained, two partially contained.
- 121-plus structures damaged or destroyed.

ORANGE COUNTY:
- 10,750 acres in two fires. Both contained.
- 361 homes damaged or destroyed.

SAN DIEGO COUNTY:
- 15,000 acres in two fires. One controlled, one partially contained.
- 11 structures damaged or destroyed.
- $1.25 million damage.

VENTURA COUNTY:
- 106,506 acres in three fires. One contained, two partially contained.
- 71 structures damaged or destroyed.

SAN BERNARDINO COUNTY:
- 4,680 acres in one fire. Partially contained.
- Seven structures damaged or destroyed.
- $ 1 million damage.

TOTALS:
- 186,836 acres in 13 major fires, one small fire.
- 689 structures damaged or destroyed.
- $60.75 million damage and counting.

The Associated Press

Fire season may be over in Idaho, but firefighters are scrambling to help battle the massive blazes in southern California, fanned by the Santa Ana winds.

Mario Marquez on Thursday told his 4-year-old daughter, Kayla, that his boss needed him that night to help out in California. His boss? Smokey Bear, he tells her.

It helped to ease the anxiety as he loaded his gear at the National Interagency Fire Center in Boise. He is one of 20 smokejumpers from the Bureau of Land Management in Idaho called to help.

The hotshot crew could be gone for three weeks, BLM spokesman Ken Franz said.

"Every fire is so different, you never know what it's going to take to get the job done," he said.

Lawmakers press further smoking ban

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress' most vehement anti-tobacco voices vowed Friday to press legislation to ban smoking in all public facilities.

Sen. Frank Lautenberg, D-N.J., who pushed legislation to make domestic airline trips smoke-free, teamed up with Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif. on a new bill to protect non-smokers from exposure to cigarette smoke.

They've got the backing of the usual forces in the anti-smoke battle: the American Lung Association, the Coalition on Smoking or Health, the American Academy of Pediatrics.

A new ally is the Building Owners and Managers Association International, which manages or owns more than 5 billion square feet of North American office space.

Pentagon likes Supreme Court ruling on gays in military

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court opened the way Friday for the Pentagon to implement a new policy allowing expulsion of declared homosexuals from the military but preventing recruits from being asked about sexual orientation.

The justices granted the Clinton administration's emergency request to temporarily limit enforcement of a federal judge's order banning military discrimination against homosexuals nationwide.

For now, the judge's order will apply only to the sailor who challenged the Pentagon's policy and the government's appeal of the order will go forward.

"We're pleased," said Pentagon spokeswoman Kathleen deLaski.

Government lawyers argued that U.S. District Judge Terry Hatter Jr. of Los Angeles lacked the authority to issue a nationwide ban.

In response to Hatter's order on Sept. 30, the Pentagon instructed units to stop barring homosexuals.

But Friday's action means the Pentagon can return to an interim policy in which recruits are not asked about the subject but military personnel who declare their homosexuality are transferred to reserve status.

President Clinton's similar "don't ask, don't tell" policy is awaiting action in Congress. House and Senate versions say recruits and active duty service members would no longer be asked about their orientation, but the legislation leaves open the possibility that a future defense secretary could reinstate the question.

Congressional negotiators are expected to complete a final version of the defense budget containing the provision next week, with a vote by the House and Senate no later than Thanksgiving.

Clinton said during his presidential campaign that he wanted to simply lift the military's ban on homosexuals, but he backed off in January in the face of strong opposition from military leaders and lawmakers.

The Pentagon will wait until Congress acts before sending commanders in the field instructions about how the new policy should be implemented.

Hatter had declared in an earlier decision that the Pentagon's longtime ban on homosexuals in the military was unconstitutional. In broadening that ruling in September, the judge barred the Pentagon from denying enlistment or promotion, or changing someone's enlistment status or duty assignment because of sexual orientation.

Hatter's rulings were in response to a lawsuit filed by Navy Petty Officer Keith Meinhold, who was discharged in August 1992 after disclosing his homosexuality on national television. Hatter ordered him reinstated.

The government appealed, but the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco refused to delay the ruling's enforcement during the appeal. The appellate court is to hear arguments in the case in December.

David M. Smith of the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force said, "Clearly, the military has gone for almost a month now without a gay ban and there have been no adverse effects."

In seeking the emergency order, the Justice Department said Hatter "seriously erred" in his analysis of Meinhold's challenge.

Solicitor General Drew Days also contended that because Meinhold did not file the lawsuit as a class action, Hatter did not have the authority to issue an order affecting anyone else.

The Pentagon's old ban on homosexuals in the military and Clinton's new policy "are premised on the considered military judgment that the presence of individuals who engage in or demonstrate an intent or propensity to engage in homosexual acts is, as a categorical matter, detrimental to the military mission of the armed forces," Days wrote in seeking the Supreme Court's help.

Gun-control bill takes a step forward

WASHINGTON — The Brady bill, the long-delayed attempt to use a five-day waiting period to stop felons and the mentally ill from buying handguns, took a step toward early congressional approval on Friday.

The House Judiciary subcommittee on crime endorsed the measure, 10-3, and its chairman, Rep. Charles E. Schumer, D-N.Y., said: "The Brady bill is a hard, solid, shining part of our fight against crime."

"The long wait for the waiting period is coming to a close," Schumer said.

Brady bill supporters said public anger over a rising tide of gun-related violence ensures the votes needed to speed the bill to President Clinton's desk this year, perhaps as early as Thanksgiving.

Ag Department to issue new meat rules

WASHINGTON — The Agriculture Department will issue new regulations requiring safe handling labels for raw meat and poultry rather than appeal a court ruling striking down the old set.

Agriculture Secretary Mike Espy said Friday that pursuing a lengthy court battle would thwart the goal of providing safety information to consumers quickly.

The new regulations will be published next week and consumers could see the mandatory labels by February or March, according to a department official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The scope of the new regulation could not immediately be learned. A federal judge had ruled the earlier requirements were applied too quickly and too broadly.

All uncooked ground or chopped meat sold at supermarkets and other outlets was to have the labels starting Oct. 15. But the day before, U.S. District Judge James Nowlin in Austin, Texas, blocked the requirement.

DEA head resigns, returns to law job

WASHINGTON — Robert C. Bonner, the head of the Drug Enforcement Administration, resigned Friday to return to a private law practice in Los Angeles.

Stephen H. Greene, DEA's deputy administrator, was named acting administrator by Attorney General Janet Reno.

Bonner was a federal judge in Los Angeles when President Bush appointed him DEA administrator in 1990. During three and a half years at the agency, he created an intelligence division, instituted an integrity assurance program and implemented "the Kingpin Strategy," which targeted major international drug trafficking organizations for destruction.

Cancer delays woman's sentencing

SONORA, Calif. — Sentencing for a woman who fatally shot her son's alleged molester in a courtroom was delayed so she can undergo treatment for breast cancer.

Prosecutors agreed Thursday with a defense request to put off Friday's scheduled sentencing for two months because Ellie Nesler was diagnosed with cancer this week.

"It was gracious of them not to object," defense attorney J. Tony Sera said.

Nesler, 41, was convicted of voluntary manslaughter in the death of Daniel Mark Driver, 35.

He was shot as he sat shackled at a hearing to decide whether he should stand trial on charges he molested four young boys, including Nesler's son.

Investors bail out Falwell's university

LYNCHBURG, Va. — The Rev. Jerry Falwell's Liberty University avoided a second foreclosure attempt when investors agreed to take over a $16 million debt.

Household Finance was the last major secured creditor that hadn't reached a payment arrangement with the university.

It held the third lien on the campus and notified the school before classes began in August that it was going to foreclose.

President Clinton is given a gift of books written by John F. Kennedy and Robert F. Kennedy from Caroline Kennedy. Her brother, John F. Kennedy Jr., is watching, as is Ethel Kennedy, widow of Robert Kennedy. Clinton attended the re-dedication of the John F. Kennedy Library and Museum in Boston Friday.

Clinton pays homage to inspirational JFK

BOSTON (AP) — The "young man from Hope," whose life changed after shaking President Kennedy's hand in the Rose Garden, helped dedicate a remodeled museum at the JFK Library aimed at inspiring another generation of young people.

"What we owe John Kennedy today at this museum is to make the museum come alive not only in our memories but in our actions," President Clinton said Friday, flanked by Kennedy relatives including Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis, daughter Caroline, 35, and John Jr., 32.

The museum, which was closed a little over a year for renovations, is aimed at those too young to remember JFK, assassinated 30 years ago on Nov. 22. The museum originally opened 14 years ago.

Traditional displays of memorabilia have been replaced by TV monitors that tell in chronological order the story of the Kennedy administration, from the campaign through the assassination to his influence on those who came of age in the 1960s. Some cubicles focus on the optimism that gave birth to the Peace Corps and the space program, others on civil rights and the harrowing Cuban missile crisis.

The assassination is left until the next-to-last stop, a dark corridor where five small television sets display footage of TV coverage from the shooting through his funeral.

The final stop is a large room dedicated to JFK's legacy, featuring footage of a teen-ager named William Jefferson Clinton meeting Kennedy in 1963, when Clinton was a delegate to Boys' Nation.

During the dedication ceremony, Caroline Kennedy noted that most visitors to the library and museum in the Dorchester neighborhood south of downtown Boston weren't born when her father was in office.

"November 1963 was not the end," she said. "There are so many things that need to be done."

Aspin orders review of U.S. nuclear arsenal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Les Aspin ordered the first post-Cold War review of the nation's nuclear weapons arsenal Friday and warned that renegade states or terrorists could threaten America with weapons of mass destruction.

"It is a new nuclear threat we face," Aspin said at a Pentagon press conference.

"The old nuclear danger was thousands of warheads from the Soviet Union. That threat has subsided but the arsenal still exists," Aspin said. "The new nuclear danger stems from the possibility of a handful of weapons in less reliable hands."

The secretary said the goal of the review is to help design a long-term strategy and structure for the nation's nuclear force, and help shape thinking for events that could occur decades from now.

For example, Aspin said, no terrorist groups are known to have nuclear weapons in their possession at this time, but such a development shouldn't be ruled out.

"This (problem) is a different animal — and it's not a single animal, it's a multi-headed monster," Aspin said of the potential for the proliferation of nuclear weaponry, delivery systems and know-how.

Aspin said the review should be completed in the spring, possibly by April, and that it would take a fresh look at every aspect of nuclear policy — including the role of nuclear weapons in U.S. security strategy, their number, type, delivery systems, and safety concerns. The study will also review plans for targeting nuc-lear weapons, counter-proliferation issues and operational plans to determine which forces need to be on alert, Aspin said.

Aspin

As well, developing relationships with the newly emerging states of the former Soviet Union will have to be dealt with in the review, given their continued possession of nuclear weapons. Aspin said the review is in line with President Clinton's directive to "redefine the size and shape of our forces," both nuclear and conventional, in the post-Cold War era.

He ordered that both civilian and military officials conduct the review, putting it in the hands of Ash Carter, the assistant secretary of defense for nuclear security and counterproliferation, and Lt. Gen. Barry McCaffrey, the director for strategic plans and policy for the Joint Staff.

No evidence Soviets took U.S. POWs, official says

WASHINGTON (AP) — A U.S. government report alleging that American POWs from the Korean War were transferred to the Soviet Union has been misconstrued as proof of such transfers, a senior Defense Department official said Friday.

Edward Ross, the deputy assistant secretary of defense for POW-MIA affairs, said "there isn't one shred of evidence" that any American airman was taken from the North Korean battlefield to the Soviet Union and not returned.

That comment contradicted the report, titled "The Transfer of U.S. Korean War POWs To The Soviet Union," which was produced by Pentagon analysts and presented to Russian government officials by a State Department official in early September. Ross oversees the work of the analysts who are career civilian and military personnel.

The unclassified report, which the government has refused to release to the public, does not purport to provide proof of such transfers but it represents the first effort by the U.S. government to confront the Russian government with a comprehensive argument and summary of existing evidence that some U.S. POWs disappeared in the Soviet Union.

"The Soviets transferred several hundred U.S. Korean War POWs to the U.S.S.R. and did not repatriate them," the report said, citing "broad and compelling evidence," including statements by former Soviet military and intelligence officers.

A copy was obtained by The Associated Press, and after publication of an AP story about it on Sept. 27, the Defense Department stamped the report an internal "working paper" not subject to public release under the Freedom of Information Act.

Ross, who attended the meeting in Moscow last month during which the report was presented to the Russians, said its intent was to "elicit or provoke some reaction" from the Russians, who have steadfastly denied that any American prisoners in North Korea were forcibly moved to Soviet territory.

He said the report contained "opinion" that could not be backed up by facts.

He declined to say what, if any, response the Russians have provided since the meeting.

Another meeting on the subject is scheduled for early December in Moscow, Ross said.

Woman worries name may be in Packwood diary

WASHINGTON (AP) — A woman who says she may be mentioned in Sen. Bob Packwood's diaries wants the Senate Ethics Committee to back off its subpoena for the journals until her privacy can be assured, her lawyer said Friday.

"Production of these personal diaries and the material both private and irrelevant might cause irreparable damage to the reputation of my client, and others similarly situated," Mark B. Sandground, an attorney in Vienna, Va., said in a letter to the panel.

The woman, identified only as "Mrs. Jane Doe," wants the Senate to postpone Monday's scheduled vote on whether to seek a court order forcing Packwood to turn over the diaries.

She has nothing to do with sexual misconduct charges leveled against the Oregon Republican senator, "but has reason to believe she will be named in the diaries if they are ever made public," Sandground said in an interview.

Georgia troops recapture Khobi

TBILISI, Georgia — Government troops recaptured the town of Khobi in heavy fighting Friday, driving back rebel forces trying to oust Georgian leader Eduard Shevardnadze.

Elsewhere in the west of the former Soviet republic, Russian troops began taking up positions to protect the key rail connection linking the capital Tbilisi with the Black Sea port of Poti.

A Georgian military spokesman reported that 10 tanks and other vehicles were captured in the government assault on Khobi that forced rebels out of the town they took Thursday. Government troops had held the town Wednesday.

Both sides sustained casualties in the battle, the spokesman said, on condition of anonymity. He did not give details.

Serb gunmen attack Sarajevo defenses

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Serb gunners attacked Sarajevo's southern defenses Friday in a 3½-hour bombardment that put the city on general alert.

There were no immediate reports of casualties during the attack, in which Bosnian army positions in the Trebevic and Zlatiste areas came under heavy tank, artillery and mortar fire.

The southern defense lines are under new command after the arrest this week of two renegade Bosnian army officers on criminal charges. The barrages targeted neighborhoods that the officers had run like personal fiefdoms.

Thyroid cancer among children rises

GENEVA — Thyroid cancer cases are increasing dramatically among children affected by radioactive fallout from the Chernobyl nuclear accident, the World Health Organization said Friday.

The U.N. health agency said that since 1989, 225 new cases of the disease had been identified among children in the former Soviet republic of Belarus — the region worst affected by the 1986 reactor explosion in Chernobyl, Ukraine.

A statement from the organization said two or three cases could be expected under normal circumstances.

Lisbon airline workers arrest after melee

LISBON, Portugal — More than a dozen airline employees were arrested and several policemen were injured in an hour-long melee Friday between riot police and protesting workers at Lisbon's airport.

Thousands of TAP-Air Portugal workers stormed out of a union meeting and marched to the departure terminal to protest the ailing state airline's plan to freeze salaries and cut at least 2,500 jobs.

No flights were canceled and only one flight was delayed, said TAP spokesman Alvaro Fernandes.

The workers and riot police clashed when the officers formed a line to prevent the protesters from entering the terminal.

Russian navy will dump waste at sea

VLADIVOSTOK, Russia — The Russian navy will continue dumping radioactive waste at sea until Moscow permanently bans the practice, a Russian admiral said Friday.

Japan protested this month after a Russian military ship dumped 900 tons of nuclear waste into the Sea of Japan. Russian officials canceled a second scheduled dumping and said they would halt the practice permanently if they could get foreign aid to build disposal facilities.

But Adm. Igor Kasatonov, deputy commander of the Russian navy, said Friday the dumping did not pose any danger because it was at a site 60 miles off Russian shores and 200 miles from the Japanese coast at a depth of 9,900 to 11,550 feet.

Israel presents Gaza Strip plans soon

JERUSALEM — Israel will present plans next week for a gradual pullout from the occupied Gaza Strip and the release of thousands of Palestinian prisoners, newspaper and army radio reports said Friday.

In other developments, an Israeli was reported stabbed and kidnapped by masked Palestinians on the occupied West Bank, and a Cabinet minister said some Jewish settlements might be dismantled.

The newspaper Haaretz, quoting Palestinian and Israeli negotiators, said Israel's plan for a phased military withdrawal from Gaza would be introduced Monday when talks on giving Palestinians autonomy resume in Egypt.

The first stage would be a pullout from refugee camps, where Palestinian police would take over, the paper said. No details on other stages were given.

Japanese empress returns to public life

TOKYO — Empress Michiko, still unable to speak, has begun a cautious return to public life one week after suffering an apparent nervous breakdown.

Michiko, who collapsed while preparing for ceremonies marking her 59th birthday on Oct. 20, joined her husband, Emperor Akihito, at two palace receptions and attended a performance of classical court music on Friday.

The frail, gray-haired empress, who made her first appearance in public Thursday at a calligraphy exhibition, seemed to be in good spirits but looked tired.

Palace doctors have said they can find no physical cause for Michiko's condition, and suggest it may have been brought on by mental distress.

U.S. tanks, fighting vehicles arrive

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — Two rocket grenades exploded into homes in southern Mogadishu Friday and a shootout erupted over a hijacked vehicle as clan fighting resumed following a two-day lull.

At least two people were killed in the shootout in the Somali capital, Somali witnesses said.

The fighting came as American troops unloaded heavy armor at Mogadishu port, the most dangerous place in the volatile capital.

Warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid has warned that he considers the arrival of the armor — including 34 Bradley fighting vehicles, 19 Abrams M1 tanks and eight 155mm self-propelled howitzers — to be a provocation.

There were no immediate reports of casualties from the grenade attack, which reporters watched from less than a mile away, as black smoke billowed from the hits.

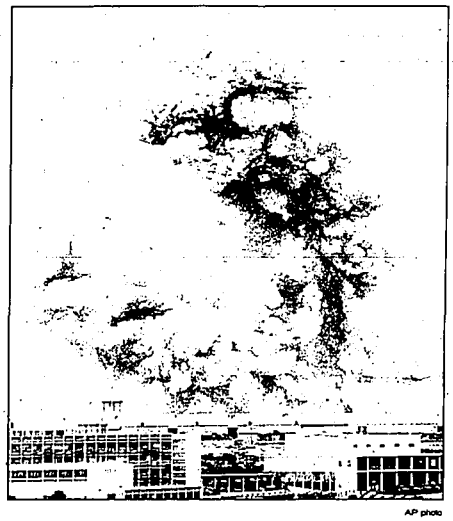
Later in the day, huge explosions rocked Mogadishu as American troops detonated ammunition, including about 80 warheads from ground-to-air missiles, at an old Somali army base southwest of the capital.

Aidid told reporters this week that the U.S. armor and daily arrival of hundreds of American soldiers would be misinterpreted by nervous Somalis.

Aidid has been urging the United States to override the United Nations and take a leading role in attempting to resolve Somalia's conflict, ahead of the arrival this weekend of President Clinton's special envoy, Ambassador Robert Oakley.

In an interview published Friday in the Paris daily Le Figaro, Aidid said Somalia needs foreign assistance, not interference, and warned that the U.N. force has lost all credibility with the Somali people.

"The presence of the (U.N. force) here is undesirable. It has become an obstacle to any political solution in Somalia," Aidid was quoted as saying.



AP photo

Smoke billows from the site of a remote control explosion set off by a U.S. Army ordnance disposal team Friday in Mogadishu.

About 200 U.S. Marines also arrived Friday, flown from ships offshore to the airport, where they were airlifted by helicopters to the fortified compound around the former U.S. Embassy.

Plans to speed their arrival with a beach landing, originally scheduled for today, were on hold, U.S. military spokesman Col. Steve Rausch told reporters. It was unclear whether the delay was connected to Aidid's objection that such a landing was a provocation.

The newly arrived U.S. armor has to be driven from the port through hostile southern territory where Aidid holds sway and up to the U.S. military's Hunter's Base in northern Mogadishu.

Insecurity around the strategic port demonstrates the impotence of the 30,000-strong U.N. force in Somalia, which has orders to attack only when it is directly threatened.

The gunfight Friday broke out in southern Mogadishu after members of the Hawadle sub-clan hijacked a vehicle belonging to a member of Aidid's Habre-Gedir sub-clan.

American military and U.N. officials have repeatedly said they will not interfere in clan clashes, a decision that has allowed Aidid to win ground in recent attacks south of Mogadishu and around the general's home territory in central Galcayo town.

Commanders see boredom as threat to troops

The Washington Post

MOGADISHU, Somalia — Three weeks after the Clinton administration abandoned its military confrontation with Somali faction leader Mohamed Farrah Aidid, U.S. commanders are beginning to worry that boredom, not bullets, could become the biggest threat to American soldiers here.

Indeed, the continuing buildup of U.S. forces in Somalia is starting to look like a massive training exercise. With American troops largely confined to their compounds, commanders are striving to keep combat skills sharp, mapping gunnery ranges and securing permission from Somali clans to practice tank maneuvers on their land.

Infantrymen honing squad-level tactics at their camp in an abandoned university compound mimic shooting noises only a few weeks after many of them experienced the real thing.

"There is a boredom issue, no question about it," said Lt. Col. Bill David, commander of the 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry Regiment of the 10th Mountain Division from Fort Drum, N.Y. "You can only read so many books and you can only watch so many videos."

Snipers still take potshots at U.S. and U.N. military convoys around town, and senior U.S. officers insist they will not hesitate to use force to protect their troops or those serving under command of the United Nations. But U.S. military commanders appear anxious to avoid any misstep that could spoil the Clinton administration's diplomatic initiative here and spark renewed attacks by Aidid's gunmen.

So cautious is their approach that they have postponed plans for an amphibious landing this weekend by U.S. Marines stationed offshore, according to U.S. officers who spoke on condition of anonymity.

'There is a boredom issue, no question about it. You can only read so many books and you can only watch so many videos.'

— Lt. Col. Bill David

The officers said the landing — intended as a two-day training exercise — was deferred out of concern it might complicate the work of U.S. envoy Robert B. Oakley, who is expected to arrive here soon to try to start political talks among rival clans.

For much the same reason, tanks and Bradley Fighting Vehicles to be unloaded today from a U.S. cargo ship in Mogadishu's port will take a bypass road to an American base northwest of the city instead of a shorter route through the center of town.

"The current plans are to bring them around town," said Col. Steven Rausch, a U.S. military spokesman. "The intent is to show that the armor is here, but not necessarily drive it through the city."

The desire of U.S. commanders to maintain a low military profile means they will have a difficult time living up to President Clinton's pledge to open "lines of communication" for U.N. peacekeepers and humanitarian-aid workers in Somalia.

Senior U.S. officers say they have no intention of resuming patrols or checkpoints on Mogadishu streets, despite the reappearance of street barricades and militia weapons in recent days and the killing Wednesday of a civilian U.N. contract worker near the entrance to the city's heavily fortified port.

Moreover, U.S. commanders have retreated from tentative plans to provide combat escorts to U.N. supply convoys in Somalia, asserting that multinational peacekeeping troops can do the job. They are, however, equipping long-range convoys with portable satellite telephones so their escorts can quickly summon help from helicopter-borne U.S. troops if needed, according to Brig. Gen. Greg L. Gile, who commands Army forces in Somalia.

"The focus right now of the U.S. force is on force protection and maintaining security of our forces and our convoys," Gile said in an interview Thursday.

But Gile noted that the U.S. combat element will retain its role as a "quick-reaction force" that can respond to requests for help from U.N. peacekeepers. He also predicted that once all U.S. forces have arrived, multinational troops will be emboldened to leave their bunkers and resume patrols on city streets.

"I would expect a more visible U.N. presence," Gile said.

The U.S. ground element is slated to grow to 3,000 Army infantry soldiers, backed up by 3,600 Marines offshore and equipped with 30 M1-A1 tanks, 48 Bradley Fighting Vehicles and six self-propelled howitzers. The buildup will be complete in about two weeks, Gile said.

For soldiers who came here expecting to fight, the relative calm of the past few weeks has been surprising.

"When we came off the plane, we were ready to go," said Army Capt. Mark Jones of Augusta, Ga., who commands a Bradley company here. "We had all our combat stuff on. Then we got off the plane and everyone's in T-shirts and shorts. We were like, 'What's going on?' "

U.S. forces are concentrated in five locations around the city: the port, the airport, the university and two logistics bases on the northwestern fringe of the city.

The largest contingent is at the university compound, where soldiers live in derelict, semicircular classroom buildings on a hillside with a view of the Indian Ocean. Soldiers have made themselves at home, setting up weight facilities and television lounges with VCRs.

Such diversions can only go so far, however, and with movement around the city restricted to "mission-essential tasks," commanders have to work to keep troops focused and alert.

The answer, for most of them, is training. So far, U.S. forces here have set up 10 major training sites around Mogadishu, including mortar, small arms, air assault and TOW missile ranges and areas for tank and Bradley maneuvers.

"If we're not fighting a real enemy, the guys like to train," said Lt. Curtis Crul, a platoon leader in Alpha Company in the 2nd Battalion here. "It keeps that competition, that drive — and it gets us out of the compound."

Madrid suburb makes bid for Lenin's cadaver

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Lenin may be unwelcome in Moscow these days, but residents of a working-class Madrid suburb say they'd be glad to have his embalmed cadaver as a tourist attraction.

Russian diplomats promised the Neighborhood Association of Parla this week that if the body of the father of the 1917 Bolshevik Revolution leaves Russia, Parla "will be the first to know," association spokesman Florencio Aguado said Friday.

Aguado told Spanish National Radio the idea came up when Russian President Boris Yeltsin announced that Lenin's mausoleum on Red Square would be closed and his corpse removed.

"It seems like a good idea to bring it to Parla to draw tourists," Aguado said.

The association, representing a bleak bedroom community on Madrid's southern outskirts, says that if Lenin's cadaver makes it to Parla, the city will set up a mausoleum and charge admission.

The Amazing overnight AMINO ACID DIET PLAN

Researchers have located a specific hormone that can cause fat cells to be burned safely and naturally.

Studies at the University of Rome indicate that two amino acids, arginine and ornithine, control the release of H.G.H. (Human Growth Hormone) reducing body fat and toning muscles by reactivating the pituitary gland to release the growth hormone.

Tests show as we grow older the pituitary gland provides less amounts of H.G.H., thus increasing our tendency to gain weight.

All you do is take 2 to 3 tablets before bedtime on an empty stomach and you're on your way to a healthier, slimmer you!

IF OCTOBER 30 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: You have remarkable sense of humor, are versatile, super-sensitive concerning body image. You travel more than most persons, are capable of expressing ideas in artistic, entertaining manner. Current cycle highlights commercial enterprise, more responsibility, chance to increase income, intense relationship, marital status, possible addition to family. You'll reach more people in November, could be involved in overseas transaction.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Full Moon relates to income, possessions, property appraisal. Restrictions lifted, you'll be free to travel, to express views, to "fall in love."

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): New start necessary – individual previously indifferent could declare, "I'm so attracted I can hardly keep my hands off you!" Keep it in proper perspective, decide on direction, motivation.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Trust hunch! Taurus moon highlights secrets, clandestine arrangements, invitations relating to art galleries, museums, hospitals. You're called upon to represent unorthodox viewpoint. Do it!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Diversify, experiment, express confidence in your own capabilities. You'll win friends and influence people, wish comes true in dramatic fashion.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Full Moon relates to career, completion of project, decision regarding love and what to do about it. Puzzle pieces fall into place, you'll read them accurately. Be aware of source material, references.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Long-distance communication involves travel, publishing, advertising, participation in unique mission. Get ideas on paper, submit format, article.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Attention revolves around home, family, security, marital status, music. Financial status of partner or mate dominates scenario. Dig deep for information, reject superficial explanations. Truth!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Avoid self-deception. Taurus Full Moon relates to reputation, credibility, legal affairs, partnership, marriage. Some will state, "You appear to be walking on a cloud!"

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Money previously withheld due to be released – in your name. Confidence regained, legitimate opportunity exists to hit financial jackpot.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You get the "break" you've been waiting for – take advantage by making fresh start in new direction. Focus on property, home, durable goods.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Intuitive intellect serves as reliable guide. Female family member wants attention, makes no secret of it. Be receptive, not weak. Money involved, protect assets.

Where's your gator bait?

L.M. Boyd
What's what?

Q. How do you catch an alligator?

A. Grinning folk down on the bayou say, drop a dotted line of marshmallows from the 'gator to a net, and it will follow the dotted line. Funnier than factual maybe, but catchers say alligators can indeed be baited into nets. Or snared. Or wrestled.

Q. Isn't the creator of the Travis McGee mystery stories a Harvard Man?

A. John D. MacDonald? Yes, he had an M.B.A. from Harvard.

Those who study the history of colors say "hot pink" was highly popular in colonial times.

In the England of three centuries ago, people thought they could tell that a boy was the son of a working man just by looking at him. No matter the appearance of the mother, if that boy were particularly refined of feature, it was assumed he was the illegitimate offspring of a gentleman.

A publication for veterinarians has printed the claim that a 30-pound dog can get knee-walking drunk on two tablespoons of whiskey. And that one tablespoon of liquor will kill a five-pound cat. Remarkable, if true.

Q. What makes the scientists believe the dinosaurs were warm blooded instead of cold blooded?

A. Those beasts that carried their heads high above their hearts needed a warm-blood pumping system, it's thought.

Lutherans condemn sexuality statement

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — A group of conservative Lutherans has condemned the first draft of a church statement endorsing masturbation, homosexual unions and sex outside of marriage in committed relationships.

The group, known as the Great Commission Network, demanded Thursday that the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America disband the committee that drafted the statement and "issue a public apology for this gross infraction of our faith and confessions."

The group representing several thousand conservative members said the statement departs from traditional sexual morality.

The Rev. Walter Sundberg, associate professor of church history at Luther Northwestern Theological Seminary in St. Paul, said the statement misuses Scripture and seeks to change basic doctrine.

"It's an unprecedented effort to unsin sin," Sundberg said. "You can't do that and maintain integrity. What the homosexual community wants is the unsinning of homosexual activity — gay blessing and all of that."

The conservative pastors said another problem with the proposed statement is its acceptance of couples living together without marriage if they have a lifetime commitment to each other.

Ann Landers' advice: Here's a way to safe sex

CHICAGO (AP) — Ann Landers' endorsement of masturbation as a safe, realistic alternative for everyone, from teens to the elderly, is winning more accolades than even she expected.

And that, said the advice columnist, reflects a changing society.

Ten or 20 years ago, "I would not have gotten this kind of response," she said. "People are becoming more enlightened, and also they're becoming more honest. And I think that AIDS has got a lot to do with this, too."

The 75-year-old Miss Landers made the recommendation in her nationally syndicated newspaper column Sunday.

"In this day and age of unwanted pregnancies and children being born with no fathers and young people getting in all kinds of trouble, I felt this was a good solution," she said in an interview Thursday. "This is a cheap, easy, safe way to do it."

Judith Seifer, president-elect of the American Association of Sex Educators, Counselors and Therapists, said Friday that Miss Landers has "done a great service to the young adults of this country and certainly to their parents who won't talk about (masturbation) with them."

Miss Landers said she's already received about 220 letters and calls, with about 75 percent to 80 percent being favorable.

She said the readers are saying things like "'Hooray for you,' 'Good for you,' 'Wonderful that you printed it,' 'It was one of the most courageous columns you've written.'

"I expected to hear from many clergymen and the far right complaining bitterly about my advice and that I was surely going straight to hell," she said. "But to my surprise, I received (only) a few, a handful, of negative letters."

Her advice came in response to a California doctor's comments that even condoms don't always protect people from diseases such as AIDS and that abstinence and monogamy are the only safe practices.

Miss Landers then told her readers about "a far more realistic solution than abstinence."

"I am recommending self-gratification or mutual masturbation, whatever it takes to release the sexual energy," she wrote. "This is a sane and safe alternative to intercourse, not only for teen-agers, but also for older men and women who have lost their partners."

RFK Jr. apologizes for Auburn remarks

Kennedy told a University of Alabama crowd on Oct. 6 that he was a big football fan of the Tuscaloosa school.

He said he hated Auburn University, "not just the football team, the whole school and I would say that if I was talking in Auburn."

Kennedy, who lived year in Alabama during the 1970s to write a book about a federal judge, apologized and said his remarks were a joke about the "traditional rivalry between Auburn and Alabama."

This week, he sent Auburn and the media a photo of himself holding an Auburn pennant and wearing an Auburn T-shirt and cap.

Some stores around the Auburn campus have posted Kennedy's remarks in their windows, including a bookstore run by City Council member Trey Johnston.

"I have respected the Kennedy family over the years for what they did in politics," he said. "I was just disappointed that one of the members of the family said something like that. He should be more politically sensitive."

The actor, with a 20 handicap, had his picture taken with Snead, who's golf pro emeritus at the resort.

"This is my second visit to The Greenbrier," said Keach, who was Mike Hammer on television. "I like the food and the golf."

"mild respiratory infection," said his physician and cousin, Dr. Claud Young.

The mayor has chronic emphysema. The doctor said he ordered Young to stay home and avoid the chilly evening and the large crowd.

"By 6 p.m., we were still debating the issue," Claud Young said. "He wanted to come. Sometimes, he doesn't listen to me. This time he did."

Foote praises 'Gettysburg' portrait of General Lee

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — Shelby Foote, who built his reputation on the Civil War, had an observation or two about the movie "Gettysburg."

On Martin Sheen's portrayal of Robert E. Lee as "nervous and excitable" on the day of the big battle: "That's the way Lee was then. It was very bold of him (Sheen)."

Usually, Lee is depicted as stoic and serene, Foote said.

On Tom Berenger, who played Confederate Gen. James Long street: He "had a beard that looked like he bought it down on Franklin Street," a reference to the strip of bars and stores near the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

Foote, 76, was in town this week to participate in a new writer-in-residence program at the school, his alma mater.

The novelist and historian wrote "The Civil War: A Narrative" and was featured at length in the 1990 public television documentary "The Civil War."

Medal of Honor headquarters dedicated

MOUNT PLEASANT, S.C. (AP) — A 100-foot silver wall bears witness to the bravest of the nation's brave.

The wall outside the Medal of Honor Society headquarters lists the names of all 3,418 winners of the Medal of Honor, the nation's highest military honor.

About 300 people, including 120 of the 201 surviving medal winners, gathered on the hangar deck of the USS Yorktown Thursday to dedicate the society's memorial, museum and headquarters.

World War II veteran Dick Bush was one of the attendees who wandered through the museum, reading the citations of medal winners dating to the Civil War and reminiscing.

"This medal doesn't belong to Dick Bush alone, it belongs to all of us," said Bush of Waukegan, Ill. He won the medal for bravery during the battle of Okinawa.

The museum moved from New York to the Yorktown at the Patriots Point Naval and Maritime Museum earlier this year. It includes displays in wood cases commemorating deceased winners.

One case contains a simple wreath in memory of the last to die. On Thursday, it was dedicated to Gen. Jimmy Doolittle, who led a raid on Tokyo a few months after Pearl Harbor. He died last month at age 96.

"There's a feeling here of permanence — that your memories and memorabilia has a home," said James Stockdale, Ross Perot's vice presidential candidate last year and a medal winner who endured 7½ years as a prisoner of war in Vietnam.

America's oldest citizen turns 115

RADFORD, Va. (AP) — After 115 birthdays, Margaret Skeete, the oldest American, has kept her sense of humor and craving for sweets.

She's also unimpressed by her longevity.

"I guess that's something, but it doesn't buy me anything," she said Wednesday, when a steady stream of friends stopped by her town house to celebrate her birthday.

"Make sure you leave me some cake," Mrs. Skeete told her daughter.

Guinness Book of World Records spokeswoman Denise Jack confirmed Thursday that Mrs. Skeete is the oldest living American.

She was born in 1878 near Corpus Christi, Texas, and has lived in Radford since the 1950s. Mrs. Skeete has outlived her husband and two of her three children.

She is nearly blind, has a hard time hearing and needs a walker to get around. But Patricia Jones, a nurse at the party, said Mrs. Skeete's overall health is pretty good.

The oldest living person in the world is 118-year-old Jeanne Calment of France, according to Guinness.

Court cracks down on dressing down

That's the edict in Detroit's 36th District Court, where a dress code forbids shorts, sandals, blue jeans and any skirt more than 2 inches above the knee.

"They come in here in Levis all ripped, clothes or shorts up to practically their crotches," said Paul Kanan, a court administrator. "You've got guys coming down here dressed with their T-shirts showing off their big chests, and the judges don't want that.

"This is a courthouse. We want respect."

The dress code, spelled out on placards posted this week at the entrance to each courtroom, applies to spectators and people appearing in court.

Deficit reduction package would put INEL under microscope

BOISE (AP) — The sweeping bipartisan plan that Democratic Congressman Larry LaRocco helped draft to increase federal spending cuts would force the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory to justify its existence or shut down.

"We've asked people to sacrifice," LaRocco said on Friday. "This is going to put a lot of people on the line with their votes."

LaRocco

The plan announced earlier this week by a task force of 30 House members details nearly 100 specific proposal to cut $103 billion in federal spending over through 1998. It was sought by Democrats, who reluctantly supported the original compromise deficit reduction package last summer despite its more than $200 billion in tax increases.

Republican Congressman Michael Crapo, who has made reduced federal spending and a balanced budget amendment top priorities, was not part of the task force and has not seen the new package of cuts in detail.

But spokeswoman Susan Hawkes said Crapo, whose district includes the INEL, probably will support the package and then look for still more spending cuts to further offset the original deficit package's tax increases.

"I encourage him to sign on," LaRocco said. "You cannot support the balanced budget amendment without making tough choices."

House Speaker Tom Foley has promised a Nov. 19 vote on the entire package. The House will have no alternative but to take all of it or none of it. But the Clinton administration has objected to the plan because it makes cuts in Medicare and earmarks the savings for deficit reduction that the president wants to use to finance his universal health care package.

Under the proposal, an independent commission patterned after the military base closure commission, would assess all federal laboratories like INEL and to determine the most effective organization of defense and energy research facilities. The INEL is a major factor in the eastern Idaho economy, providing over 12,000 jobs, more than any other entity in Idaho except for state government.

Since the base closure commission began operating in the late 1980's, it has directed the shut down of dozens of military installations across the country under a scheme in which Congress can only accept or reject each set of recommendations without making any changes.

Although Mountain Home Air Force Base in Elmore County, which has 3,500 jobs, has escaped the series of closure recommendations over the years, the threat of closure has kept state and local officials busy justifying the base's existence.

Among the package's other provisions with some impact on Idaho are a 20 percent cut in some wheat export subsidies, elimination of the price support program for wool, a 20 percent reduction in the Economic Development Administration's grants for local development, shifting from permanent treatment technologies to control and containment in Superfund environmental cleanup and closing many local Agriculture Department offices.

Mining reform legislation clears first House hurdle

WASHINGTON — Legislation that would revamp a frontier-era mining law cleared the initial legislative hurdle in the House Thursday, but lawmakers acknowledged that the bill has a rough course to travel before it crosses the finish line.

"This is to be a long and torturous trip," said House Natural Resources' Committee Chairman Rep. George Miller, D-Calif., about the road to mining reform. "It will require people to expend political capital to make this work."

Crapo

On Thursday, the natural resource committee's mining panel tinkered with Rep. Nick Joe Rahall's, D-W.V., mining bill which would force miners to clean up the mess they make and pay for the land they use.

A substitute crafted by Rep. Richard Lehman, D-Calif., — and approved by the subcommittee — would allow miners to deduct certain costs from a proposed royalty and alert companies early in the development process that certain lands are unsuitable, and therefore off-limits, to mining.

Rep. Barbara Vucanovich, R-Nev., said she appreciates attempts to make portions of the bill more reasonable, but the concessions fell short.

"Both the original text of Rahall's bill and the proposed substitute, make the de facto statement 'Congress doesn't want new investment in hardrock mining on the public lands.'," Vucanovich said.

Rep. Larry LaRocco, D-Idaho, agreed that the proposal still has some "major flaws." And Jane Wittmeyer, administrative assistant for Rep. Mike Crapo, R-Idaho, said the subcommittee's actions didn't "significantly change the direction of the Rahall bill."

The Clinton administration, Rahall and environmentalists contend that the Mining Law of 1872 allowed the mining industry to rob the land of its precious resources and leave behind a scarred landscape. So Rahall's plan would collect a host of fees from miners and hold companies to stringent federal reclamation standards.

But industry officials say drastic changes in the law would send more mining companies overseas and American workers to the unemployment line.

Rahall's proposal would charge miners annual rental fees and collect 8 percent of their profits. Lehman's substitute would allow miners to subtract the transportation, refining, and initial processing costs, before paying the royalty.

Revenue generated by the Rahall bill would help restore land and purify water tainted by mining and, advocates say, pump money into the Treasury.

The Lehman substitute also would require developers to pay $100 for claims they patented prior to implementation of the Rahall bill (if indeed that happens) and pay $200 for new claims which would be divided into 40-acre plots. Rather than perform $100 worth of work annually to hold onto each 20-acre claim, prospective miners now must pay the federal government an annual $100 holding fee.

> 'This bill lacks any semblance of security or even a qualified right to mine. The security miners need ... has to be granted or investment will dry up and go elsewhere.'
> — Rep. Barbara Vucanovich, R-Nev.

Miners who possess no more than 10 claims would be exempt from the holding fee as long as they notify the Interior Secretary that they've completed $100 worth of assessment work on that land.

Under current law, companies still can purchase the title to a hardrock mineral claim for as little as $2.50 an acre.

Rahall's bill would replace that practice with a rental system of sorts. If Rahall's bill becomes law, prospective miners would have to apply for two permits. Exploration permits would be valid for five years, and operating permits would be good for 10 years.

As long as the mining operators are good stewards and meet stringent federal standards, permittees would have the right to successive renewals. Applicants would have to pay fees to process their paperwork.

"This bill lacks any semblance of security of tenure or even a qualified right to mine," Vucanovich said. "The security miners need may come in the form of the right to a mineral patent for a claim in Nevada... or in a lease on private mineral rights, but it has to be granted or investment will dry up and go elsewhere — pure and simple economics."

Vucanovich and LaRocco offered an amendment that would have given miners 10 years to bring their operations into compliance with the new law:

"This does not exempt these mines, it simply gives them a 10-year period to operate under current reclamation standards," LaRocco said.

The Democratic leadership asked LaRocco and Vucanovich to withdraw the amendment and work with the committee to determine how many miners it would affect. The amendment was withdrawn, but it's expected to resurface when the committee meets next week.

Under an industry backed bill authored by Sen. Larry Craig, R-Idaho, miners could still purchase title to the land, but they would have to pay to use it. The federal government would collect 2 percent of a company's profits after mineral exploration, production, and processing costs were deducted.

Gem cash surplus builds for third consecutive month

BOISE (AP) — Idaho's cash surplus continued to build in September, marking the third month in a row tax receipts have exceeded projections.

"Idaho's booming construction activity and strong immigration are positive factors behind three straight months of strong performance," Andrus administration chief economist Michael Ferguson said.

The latest monthly outlook from the Division of Financial Management, released Friday, showed general tax revenues through the first quarter of the current budget year running $11.9 million over expectations.

The surplus has been building at an average of nearly $4 million a month over the revenue projection that the administration increased by nearly $50 million over authorized spending last summer.

With the $11 million surplus the economy generated during the final months of the budget year that ended June 30, state lawmakers will have at least $60 million in uncommitted cash to address mounting demands in the areas of health care, education and prisons.

The extra cash that has been building since June would only pad that total.

The higher than expected collections also suggest that total general tax revenues for the next budget year could approach $1.25 billion. That would be over $160 million more than the state is spending in its current budget. And based on the legislative penchant for giving public schools half the general tax receipts each year, it would be enough to accommodate State Schools Superintendent Jerry Evans' request for $623.5 million in state aid for the 1994-1995 school year. Schools are receiving $528 million in aid this year.

Prosecutor studies order in Weaver case

BOISE (AP) — One of those who read with interest a federal judge's order scolding the FBI for its conduct in the Randy Weaver-Kevin Harris case is a prosecutor who could file state charges in the case.

U.S. District Judge Edward Lodge this week signed a 14-page order fining the FBI $1,920 for its repeated delays and failure to abide by court orders in producing evidence in the trial of the two white separatists.

An eight-week trial in Boise resulted in jury verdicts clearing the defendants of the major charges that stemmed from the deaths of three people in a shootout and 11-day standoff at the Weavers' northern Idaho cabin.

Boundary County Prosecutor Randy Day said he read Lodge's order with interest and plans to decide soon whether to pursue state charges against Weaver, Harris or federal agents.

"Our investigators just recently returned from Boise," he said. "They went through a large amount of files that were at the U.S. attorney's office. We're working at it and we'd like to get it completed as just as soon as possible."

Day said he is trying to schedule a meeting with Justice Department investigators "to discuss some of the things we've discovered" although he wouldn't elaborate.

In a statement released from Washington, D.C., the FBI said it would take appropriate action once the Lodge order was reviewed by top officials. But it said issues raised by the order are among those covered by an ongoing internal investigation that started six weeks ago.

Maurice Ellsworth, who was U.S. attorney for Idaho during the Weaver trial, said he was relieved that the Lodge order set the record straight. During the trial, the judge announced he was fining the government for delays and failure to give the defense documents on time.

Shelter shields black cats from bad luck

The Panhandle Animal Shelter in Sandpoint won't let anyone get their paws on black cats until November. Shelter workers want to make sure the felines don't become unwanted gifts or the targets of cruelty on Sunday.

"I don't know of that kind of thing happening here, but you never know. Black cats are connected with the season," shelter manager Erica Mattson said Thursday.

Cat lovers can still come in and pick out a black cat, but they can't take it home until after Halloween, Mattson said.

Animal shelters in Spokane, Wash., and Coeur d'Alene use their normal screening processes rather than adopt a black-cat moratorium for the spooky season.

"I can understand the policy," said Leah Siegenthaler, assistant director for Spokane's Spokanimal CARE. "There are people that specifically look for black cats for cult rituals and torture. It's a scary deal."

She said the matter is of enough concern to use extra caution when black cats are adopted.

"It's unfortunate we have to worry about it," Siegenthaler said.

The Kootenai Human Society in Coeur d'Alene has several black kittens waiting for a good home, but no one has wanted one this Halloween, director Pete Nikiforuk said.

"We try to screen people the best we can," he said. "Unfortunately, cats are in with the Halloween ritual — you know, don't let the black cat cross your path."

Student admits fatal gas theft

CALDWELL (AP) — Albertson College student Karl Stewart Schatz pleaded guilty to petty theft for stealing a cylinder of nitrous oxide — or laughing gas — from West Valley Medical Center.

Dustin Kyle Grint of Caldwell died Oct. 19 after inhaling the gas.

Schatz, 21, one of two Albertson College students charged with petty theft, pleaded guilty on Tuesday before Canyon County Magistrate A. Marvin Cherin.

Cherin sentenced Schatz to a 10-day suspended jail term and one year of supervised probation. He also ordered him to perform 80 hours of community service and pay court costs of $49.50.

Canyon County Prosecutor David Young said earlier that his office would seek community service for the two students, and asked that they be required to speak to youth groups about the incident.

Grint, a former Albertson College student attending Boise State University, was visiting friends at the Kappa Sigma fraternity house in Caldwell. He died of asphyxiation after inhaling pure nitrous oxide from the cylinder taken from the hospital.

Missouri man wanted in check-bouncing case

TWIN FALLS – A Missouri man is wanted for bilking a local produce company out of over $26,000 worth of potatoes.

In September 1992, George Raymond Beekley wrote a $26,165 check to Miller Produce Company, 409 Shoshone St. S., Detective Tim Miller said Friday. But the check bounced.

Beekley was charged with passing bad checks once before in 1982, according to police affidavits.

Twin Falls Deputy Prosecuting Attorney E. Scott Paul said Friday that a criminal complaint has been signed against Beekley. "We will be seeking an arrest warrant to extradite him to Idaho," Paul said.

Beekley's last known employer was Redi Foods in St. Charles, Mo.

Police release names of people killed in Hailey accident

HAILEY – Blaine County officials Friday released the names of three residents who died in a head-on collision Thursday morning.

Rebecca Lee Hale (alias Rebecca Lee Bristine), 26, and two other passengers died when the grey Audi she was driving crossed the center line of Highway 75 about two miles north of Hailey.

The car slammed head-on into a flatbed truck, killing Hale, her 6-month-old daughter Stephanie, and Christina Sebring, 19. The driver of the truck was uninjured.

City Council candidate forum will air again next week

TWIN FALLS – King Videocable announced Friday that it would replay the City Council candidates forum that had been televised live Wednesday night at City Hall.

The one-hour program will be replayed Sunday afternoon at 5 p.m. and again Monday night at 10:30 p.m. on King Videocable's channel 10.

The City Council election is Tuesday. Polls will be open at 20 precincts around the city from noon to 8 p.m. The last day to fill out an absentee ballot is Monday.

All five candidates participated in the forum. Former Mayor Chris Talkington is challenging incumbent Councilman Jim Vickers. Dr. David McClusky and Jeff Gooding are running for the seat vacated by Councilwoman Mary McClusky. Lance Clow is running unopposed for the seat vacated by Councilwoman Pam Dowd.

For more information, contact Vince Thompson at 733-6230.

Pellet fired into school bus; children escape injury

Twin Falls police Sgt. Jim Massey said a pellet from a pellet gun was apparently fired into an open window of a school bus on Robbins Avenue near Perrine Elementary School. The bus was taking students from Robert Stuart Junior High School. None of the children were injured, Massey said.

Idaho House Republicans to meet in Twin Falls this week

TWIN FALLS – Most of the Idaho House of Representatives will be in Twin Falls next week.

The House Republican caucus will hold a planning session for the upcoming legislative session Nov. 3-6 at the Canyon Springs Inn. Of the 50 GOP members of the House, 48 will attend the four-day, closed-door conference.

The one part of the meeting that is open to the public is a dinner Friday night at the Canyon Springs Inn. The dinner speaker will be Lou Guzzo, former policy director for Washington Gov. Dixy Lee Ray and co-author with Ray of "Trashing the Planet" and "Environmental Overkill."

Tickets for the dinner are $35 and can be obtained by calling the Twin Falls Chamber of Commerce at 733-3974 or Sue Burwell at 734-7027.

Halloween tonight in Hailey, tomorrow night in Ketchum

HAILEY – Mayor Keith Roark officially declared youngsters in should don their costumes and go trick or treating Saturday night.

Due to the change in daylight savings time and a host of Halloween activities schedule for Saturday, Roark said Saturday would be best. Children in Ketchum and Sun Valley will trick or treat Sunday night.

Happy Halloween?

Spooky holiday offends some liberals, conservatives alike

By Steve Crump
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Witches and goblins are in big trouble.

So are devils and Indians, because for the first time Halloween's critics among conservative Christians have company from the secular left.

"I don't know any knee-jerk liberals, but I suppose if their politically correct sensibilities are offended by Halloween, then that's good for us," said the Rev. Lawrence Vedder, pastor of Immanuel Lutheran Church.

A growing number of parent-teacher organizations, feminist groups and civil rights groups across the country think moms and dads should spirit away costumes that are potentially offensive or promote violence.

In a letter to parents of school children, for example, the Equity-Affirmative Action Advisory Committee of the Iowa City, Iowa, school district came up with a list of Halloween get-ups that presented negative images: Gypsies, American Indian princesses, Africans, witches, elderly persons, disabled persons (including trolls, zombies, hunchbacks and assorted ghouls), East Indians, slaves, hobos and devils.

The committee suggested instead that children might want to dress up as "friendly" monsters, animals, food (pumpkins and carrots), things (crayons, pencils or flowers), people of a different era (Roaring '20s), famous people (Abe Lincoln) or favorite book characters.

That sort of thing would suit Vedder just fine, but don't get him wrong. He's all in favor of kids dressing up and having fun, but he wishes Halloween "would just go away."

"As Christians, we see that Halloween represents kind of a medieval spirituality that's at odds with Christianity," he said. "It would be inappropriate for us to say nothing."

Victimized

MIKE SALSBURY/The Times-News

Marilyn Hempleman says the justice system has not adequately recognized her rights as a crime victim. Hempleman has become an advocate for crime victims since her daughter, Heidi, was killed by a drunken driver in 1988.

Crime victims fight for their rights

By Drew DeSilver
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Marilyn Hempleman was a crime victim three times in 1988.

Three youths mugged her in downtown Twin Falls at high noon. Her home was burglarized. And her daughter Heidi was killed by a drunken driver.

In none of those three cases, Hempleman feels, did the justice system adequately recognize her rights as a crime victim.

That's why she joined several other people Friday to support Attorney General Larry EchoHawk's proposal for a "victims' rights" amendment to the Idaho Constitution.

"So often you're victimized twice, once by the crime itself and again by the judicial system," said Hempleman, wife of Twin Falls County Commissioner Marvin Hempleman. "The defendants have all the rights in the courtroom and the victims have none. They don't even have a right to testify about what the crime did to them."

EchoHawk's proposed amendment would change that. It would guarantee crime victims the right to testify at bail hearings, sentencings and other key court proceedings.

It also would give victims the right to receive advance notice of court dates, parole hearings and prison-release dates, permit them to be present at all proceedings the defendant is allowed to attend, and read pre-sentencing reports on convicted criminals' backgrounds.

The amendment would lift part of the veil of secrecy that now envelops juvenile-crime cases. If a juvenile crime would have been a felony if committed by an adult, victims would be able to learn the accused person's name, attend evidentiary hearings and testify at disposition hearings.

"It was felt there ought to be some parity between the rights of the accused and the rights of crime victims," EchoHawk said Friday afternoon.

State law gives crime victims some rights during criminal proceedings, but local prosecutors and judges don't carry out that law consistently, said Gail Johnson of Boise, state victims' rights advocate for Mothers Against Drunk Driving.

Hospital seeks land through foundation

By Kirk Mitchell
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Complicated negotiations are under way that could result in the Magic Valley Regional Medical Center owning real estate that is now held by the owner of property next door to the hospital.

In a telephone interview with The Times-News Friday night, Helen Kolouch of Salt Lake City was asked if she is the owner of $890,000 in property that the hospital agreed to buy last August.

She responded that the transaction was not finalized and that it is up to the hospital to take the next step. She did not say what that next step would be, nor would she say what property was involved.

Koulouch owns offices and land east of the hospital.

The newspaper contacted Kolouch after receiving a letter earlier in the week that said she was the owner of the property that would be transferred or donated to the county-owned hospital.

A deal is in the works involving a private property owner, the hospital and the hospital's charitable foundation, foundation Director Larry Baxter said Friday. He wouldn't disclose the identity of the property owner, however.

The owner would give the property to the foundation in the form of a charitable remainder annuity trust, he said.

Under the terms of the trust, which has not yet been finalized, the foundation would sell the property – perhaps to the hospital – and make payments to the donor over a period of several years, Baxter said.

After the term of the annuity expires, the remainder of the trust funds would belong to the foundation, he said.

"We contacted the (hospital) board and asked them if they would be interested in the property if it was on the market," Baxter said.

The board agreed to buy the property in August, board minutes indicate.

"We would like it to happen as soon as possible," Baxter said.

Baxter said the net amount of the donation to the foundation has not yet been decided.

But "it could be the largest gift the foundation has received to date," Baxter said.

Annuity trusts are popular for people who have property that has appreciated in value over a period of time.

When owners sell property, they often must pay high taxes, Baxter said.

But if they give property to a charity in an annuity trust, they can realize substantial tax write-offs, Baxter said.

The hospital is considering building a $7 million hospital addition that would include 50,000 square feet of space for doctors' offices, Ken Deibert, hospital administrative vice president, has said.

The hospital purchased Doctor's Pa[illegible] on Shoup Avenue three years ago for $2.25 million. Doctors from Magic Valley Family Physicians, which occupies 6,000 square feet at Doctors Park, have indicated they wish to move to the new office building adjoining the hospital if it is built, Deibert said.

An additional 5,500 square feet of Doctors Park office space, including 3,000 square feet for an out-patient surgery center, will be vacated once Magic Valley Ear Nose and Throat Association moves to a new clinic on Washington Street North in the spring, he said.

Hospital Administrator John Bingham said the hospital board will discuss the proposed $7 million office building at its 7 p.m. meeting Monday in a room adjoining the basement cafeteria, but the board will not vote on the building at that time.

Vickers is biggest spender among Council contenders

By Sean L. McCarthy
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – They may not break any spending records, but financial disclosure reports show that City Council candidates had spent a total of $1,800 on their campaigns as of Oct. 18.

And with $2,150 in the bank, incumbent Councilman Jim Vickers had more cash on hand than the other four candidates combined, according to the candidates' pre-election spending reports.

By law, contributions greater than $50 must be reported at the city clerks' office.

Vickers, seeking a third term on the council, had raised $2,650 in contributions – $2,000 of that his own money. He also had received $200 contributions from Rick Parks and from Bill and Donna Kyle.

Parks is the president of PSI Waste Systems. The Kyles own the McDonald's restaurant at 305 Blue Lakes Blvd. N.

Two television ads to run on KMVT-TV have cost him $500, Vickers said.

His challenger, former Mayor Chris Talkington, had raised $680, including $500 from his own wallet. Talkington's biggest contributor has been Arzella Wilson of Twin Falls, who gave $100 to his campaign.

Talkington had $237 available as of Oct. 18.

In the other contested race, Jeff Gooding held a slight financial edge over Dr. David McClusky in their bids to replace Councilwoman Mary McClusky, David's mother.

Gooding, chairman of the city planning and zoning commission, had raised $639.80, including $414.80 of his own money, which he had spent $414.80 on newspaper ads.

He had $78.76 on hand, only $16.76 more than McClusky's $62 bankroll.

McClusky's campaign had raised $378, including $100 from his mother and $170 from himself. He had spent $303 on newspaper ads.

Lance Clow, running unopposed for the seat vacated by Councilwoman Pam Dowd, had raised $225 in small contributions by Oct. 18. He had spent $43.31 on the campaign in that time.

Colorado con man denies identity; his fate remains uncertain

By Mick Normington
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – The future of a man suspected of defrauding people in three states remains in limbo.

James L. Palmer, 48, will remain in jail unless he can make his $280,000 bail or if the governors of Idaho and Colorado decide to move him.

But in a hearing Friday, Magistrate Judge R. Michael Redman and the attorneys involved couldn't decide what additional procedures need to be taken with Palmer.

The judge said Palmer's case is especially unusual.

Palmer was arrested two weeks ago when he was pulled over on a traffic violation. He was arrested for attempting to deceive an officer because he said his name was "Johnny Palmer." Twin Falls police had been trailing Palmer after they had reports that he had defrauded at least three local business people.

Palmer's fingerprints were sent to the FBI and found to match those of a James Leonard Palmer, who had been convicted of fraud in Colorado and escaped before he was sent to prison for 16 years.

Redman handled Palmer's original arraignment and despite the minor charge of deceiving an officer the judge set Palmer's bond at $30,000.

A week later, Magistrate Judge Charles Brumbach heard arguments of Palmer's conviction in Colorado, which meant he could have no bond. But Brumbach added another $250,000 to Palmer's bond.

But in that hearing, Palmer claimed he wasn't the man wanted and convicted in Colorado, adding a new legal twist to the case.

At Friday's hearing, Redman decided that identity wasn't the main issue. Redman was concerned that a decision on Palmer's case hadn't been reached within 10 days of his arrest, which was on Oct. 15.

West-end candidates seek mayoral, council positions

By Bertilla L. Redfern
Times-News correspondent

The competition is stiff for mayor of Filer in Tuesday's election, and in Buhl challengers seek City Council seats.

Filer Mayoral race

In Tuesday's election, three people are challenging Mayor Russell Sheridan Jr. Sheridan, 53, has been on the City Council for 12 years and was appointed Mayor when Bob Fort resigned last year. He is supervisor of the electrical department at Amalgamated Sugar.

Sheridan said his expertise can benefit the city, and he is seeking another term because he would like to see some projects completed, he said.

Perry Dyke has some experience as Filer's mayor from 1982 through 1985. Dyke, 76, retired, said there are a few things that need attention, and he said he believes someone should be on the job all the time.

Sharilynn Underwood is a real estate agent and owns her own gun shop. Underwood, 50, said Filer needs some new ideas and new business brought to the area. She said she doesn't see that happening.

Stacy Kay Knutson is a business major at the College of Southern Idaho. Knutson, 21, said she's interested in being Mayor because people need to be more involved in their government, especially young people. She said she would like to be a role model for young people.

Filer City Council races

One challenger and two incumbents are seeking two four-year City Council seats.

Incumbent Brent Reinke has been on the City Council for eight years. Reinke, 39, owns and operates Mr. B's in Buhl, and manages the Green Giant canteen during corn season.

Reinke said his involvement with projects like codification, the impact area, as well as protecting smaller communities are just some of the reasons he wants to continue as a councilman.

Competition stiff in Filer, Buhl races

Incumbent Bette Johnson was appointed to the City Council about three years ago to fill the position of her late husband.

Johnson, 67, says she enjoys being on the City Council. She considers it quite a challenge, and said that after three years she now has some experience behind her.

John R. Nunez Sr. has thrown his hat in the ring for the four year seat. Nunez, 62, owns the Ole Barber Shop on Main Street. He said his view is that the city needs a change in direction, and he wants to make sure the people's needs are represented first.

One incumbent and two challengers are running for a two-year City Council seat. The candidate with the most votes will fill the one year position.

Incumbent Lewis C. "Jack" Hart was appointed to fill the remainder of a two-year term when Russell Sheridan Jr. became Mayor last year. Hart, 67, has been chairman of the planing and zoning committee.

He said he would like to finish projects that he's been involved in, including cleaning up and building up the city, codification, and the impact area.

Bob Templeman is seeking the same one-year seat. Templeman, 39, owns a truck brokerage in Twin Falls. He said the council could use some younger people and fresher ideas. He said he thinks the city could be run smoother. He said he is concerned with growth, the impact area and planning and zoning.

Jeff Webster also is challenging Hart. Webster, 35, is a paramedic at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center. He said he's always been involved with the city, through the fire department, the Quick Response Unit, and as a city employee for 10 years. He said he wants to remain involved with his community by serving on the City Council.

Buhl City Council race

Two incumbents and three challengers are seeking two four-year terms on the City Council.

Incumbent Tom Tappen has been on the City Council for 12 years, and filled in as Mayor for 16 months. Tappen, 63, an optometrist, said he's seeking re-election because bureaucracy can be part of the problem or part of the solution, and he wants to help government be part of the solution.

Incumbent Chuck Geska has been on the City Council for four years and is seeking re-election. Geska, 53, owns a machine shop and automotive repair shop.

He said over the past four years he's developed an understanding of how government should work, and he can now do the city some good.

Dan Childs has thrown his hat in the ring for the four-year council seat. Childs, 43, works for a cable television company. He said he wants to see local businesses stay and to bring in new business. Childs said these issues require a lot of effort.

Cecil Larry Harris is also seeking the four-year term. Harris, 55, is retired from 25 years of public service in California. He said he's returned home for the lifestyle, and is the administrator of planning and zoning in Buhl. Harris wants the city to pursue new directions and get back to a town meeting concept.

Jim E. Wilson is the third challenger to the two incumbents. Wilson, 54, owns Jim's Lounge, Gibbs Cigar Store, and Wilson's Lube and Wash. He said he's seeking the position because he has seen things happen that he doesn't agree with, and as a local business man he thinks he has something to contribute.

Castleford City Council race

Two incumbent council members, Linda Calhoun and Ray Fabela, are running unopposed for four-year terms.

Hundreds have bad reaction to grass burning ritual

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — Nearly half of 299 people surveyed in-depth about their concerns over field burning this summer said they had to take medical treatment for smoke-caused health problems.

Nine said they were hospitalized by grass smoke from fields in the Spokane-Coeur d'Alene area.

Of the 299 polled, 290 said their primary reason for calling the complaint lines in Spokane and Idaho was health. Some 228 were personally affected by it, and others called on behalf of a spouse or child.

The numbers come from a study on the 1,376 total complaint calls to health agencies about grass smoke this year. Of those, 299 agreed to participate in a follow-up questionnaire.

"If they were willing to be interviewed we called them back for more details," said Yvonne Bucklin, of the American Lung Association, one of the participating groups.

"This survey gives us a better handle on what citizens are experiencing and whether they feel the problem is significant," Bucklin said.

Field burning has been an annual late-summer ritual in the Inland Northwest since the mid-1950s. In addition to being a low-cost means of disposing of 2 tons per acre of straw, grass seed farmers say they get higher seed yields and profits with the practice.

Critics say it is health-hazardous, renders soil useless for other types of cultivation and spoils recreation possibilities.

Members of the Inland Northwest Field Burning Summit — including farmers, health and environmental groups, chambers of commerce and regulators — have no authority over field burning. The complaint calls are merely tabulated for further reference.

More than half the respondents reported breathing problems caused by grass smoke; 161 had eye and vision problems; 126 reported allergies; 125 reported asthma.

Other frequently reported complaints were headaches and tight chests.

About half said they had to seek medical treatment for problems. Seventy-five were prescribed drugs, 53 used breathing machines or inhalers, nine were hospitalized and one had to leave the area.

Church robber gets up to 25 years

CALDWELL (AP) — Steven Lee Hyde, already serving 20 years to life in prison for robbing a Boise Jehovah's Witnesses congregation at gunpoint, was sentenced to 25 years to life Friday for robbing a Nampa congregation.

Hyde, 35, of Nampa, will serve the new sentence concurrently with the term ordered last month for the Boise robbery, 3rd District Judge Gerald Weston said. That means he will not be eligible for parole for 25 years.

Canyon County Prosecutor David Young said he asked Weston to give Hyde life without parole, but he was satisfied with the sentence.

Hyde was convicted Oct. 7 on 10 counts of armed robbery for using a sawed-off shotgun to rob a Nampa Jehovah's Witnesses church on Feb. 18.

But Weston set aside the verdict on one of the counts on technical grounds.

He was convicted Sept. 9 on 36 counts each of robbery and using a firearm in the commission of a felony for a robbery at a Boise Kingdom Hall within an hour of the Nampa holdup.

Less than $1,000 total was taken in both robberies.

Security was tight in the Caldwell courtroom Friday because Hyde escaped from the Ada County Jail on May 8.

He was recaptured two days later in Meacham, Ore.

Hyde's lawyer, public defender William Butler, asked Friday that Weston take into consideration that Hyde was physically and mentally abused as a child, and had been a longtime drug addict.

But the judge called the crime "outrageous," saying Hyde had defiled the church and put the congregation in fear.

He said it was a miracle that no one was hurt.

Suit blames blood products for AIDS cases

BOISE (AP) — A Boise attorney has filed a class-action lawsuit in federal court here, claiming contaminated blood products sold by pharmaceutical companies caused hemophiliacs to contract Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome or AIDS.

The lawsuit was filed in U.S. District Court in Boise on Friday by attorney Robert C. Huntley. It was filed on behalf of a juvenile male but seeks certification as a class action lawsuit covering all hemophiliacs in the states of Idaho, Utah and Oregon.

Huntley estimates in the lawsuit it could cover more than 400 people. It said because the contaminated blood products were sent out, 90 percent of all hemophiliacs were contaminated with AIDS.

Identity of the plaintiff was not disclosed but the lawsuit said he is a resident of the state of Idaho who was diagnosed as HIV positive on Oct. 12, 1989, after taking intravenous injections of a blood product known as Factor VIII.

Hemophiliacs have uncontrolled bleeding.

The lawsuit said Factor VIII is a product marketed to replace the missing clotting factor in the blood of hemophiliacs.

Named as defendants were Miles Inc. and Armour Pharmaceutial Corp. A telephone number for Miles at Oakland, Calif., wasn't answered Friday. Huntley said the companies would not receive copies of the lawsuit for a few days.

The lawsuit alleges the companies marketed blood products contaminated by viruses that cause AIDS and hepatitis and knew or should have known that the products were contaminated.

The suit claims the manufacturing companies accepted blood for groups with a high risk of having AIDS, including male homosexuals, intravenous drug users, prison inmates, and those high-risk groups should not have been allowed to provide blood for commercial products.

"Yet, defendants continued to use them as donors after defendants had knowledge of this risk," the lawsuit said.

The suit said the identity of the plaintiff, identified only as Richard Roe, was being protected because of the stigma attached to having AIDS.

Halloween

Brent Walker, principal of Twin Falls Christian Academy, wholeheartedly agrees. His school has kept arm's distance from Halloween for years.

"We have a school celebration about the time of Halloween, but it's more of a harvest celebration," he said. "We encourage the kids to have fun, but a lot of parents have very strong feelings about the satanic and demonic symbolism."

Linda Maughan, who co-chairs the Parent-Teacher Organization at Harrison Elementary School, doesn't think much of it either.

"With our own kids, we've always tried to keep Halloween light-hearted," she said. "We stay away from demons and try to play down the violent aspect, and I'd been in favor of avoiding costumes that would be offensive."

Morgret, who counsels kids in his practice and routinely sends them Halloween cards, says Halloween is the one holiday – including Christmas – that parents haven't managed to co-opt.

"It's about having fun," he said. "It should belong to the kids."

Teri Beck, who heads the parent-teacher group at both Hailey and Bellevue elementary schools, seconds that emotion.

"Anything you do is going to be offensive to some group," she said.

Palmer

Redman decided to dismiss Friday's hearing and let Palmer stay in jail awaiting extradition orders from Colorado, unless he can post bond.

Detective Sgt. David H. Heidemann said he is investigating if Palmer defrauded any Twin Falls people. Heidemann is awaiting more confirmation from the FBI on Palmer's identity.

Twin Falls officials are now awaiting a request from the office of Colorado Gov. Roy Romer to extradite Palmer back to that state. Romer's office must contact Gov. Cecil Andrus' office, and then Idaho Attorney General Larry EchoHawk must give final approval for the extradition.

Sgt. Ray Buhr of the Eagle County Sheriff's Department, where Palmer was arrested and convicted in 1988, said his department is involved in going through their courts to begin the extradition process.

But Heidemann said an extradition can take six weeks or six months, and in the meantime Palmer is trying to arrange his bail.

Victims

"The criminal justice system was created to protect and serve the citizens of our state," Johnson said. "But the crime victims have to pick and dig for information about a case."

Because the people arrested for mugging her were juveniles, Hempleman said, she never found out what happened to them. She didn't hear anything about the men convicted of burglarizing her house until one of them, at a judge's order, wrote her a letter of apology. And she couldn't confront the drunken driver who killed her daughter until his parole hearing this spring.

"It's a catharsis," she said. "It helps you channel that anger and the loss you've felt as a victim."

If two-thirds of the Idaho House and Senate approve the amendment, voters will get the chance to add it to the Constitution at next year's general election.

Echohawk said Rep. Celia Gould, R-Buhl, and Sen. Denton Darrington, R-Declo, both have agreed to support the amendment in the next Legislature. Gould and Darrington chair, respectively, the House and Senate judiciary committees, which have jurisdiction over criminal-justice bills.

"We can balance the rights of the victim without taking away the rights of the accused," said Rep. Mark Stubbs, R-Twin Falls, who joined EchoHawk at a Statehouse news conference in Boise. Stubbs, a lawyer, is vice-chair of the House judiciary committee.

Mayoral candidate changes tack, promises no more mudslinging

By Liz Wright
Times-News writer

RUPERT – With four days until the election, mayoral candidate Joel Rogers finds his campaign tactics backfiring.

Rogers said he has changed his tactics after criticizing the business reputation of his opponent, Mayor W. F. "Bill" Whittom.

Early in his campaign, Rogers had said he wanted to "restore integrity to city government." He also referred to the state attorney general's allegations that Whittom had exaggerated the number of subscribers to his farm magazine.

"I had many people accuse me of mudslinging and poor politics. And that can lose more votes than it can gain," Rogers said.

Whittom and Rogers are seen as the two biggest contenders for the mayor's race. Whittom has been Mayor for 16 years, and Rogers has served on City Council one term until he lost in 1991.

"(Rupert) is small enough where people know people's backgrounds well enough," Loosli said Friday. "I felt badly about what was going on, and I just decided I should express my opinion."

Details of Whittom's violations will not be revealed until after Tuesday's election, pending an out-of-court settlement with the attorney general's office.

Rogers, director of the radiology department at Minidoka Memorial Hospital, says he changed his mind after an anonymous phone call and comments from voters.

"It makes it very tricky because not only are you facing your opponent on a daily basis, but you're also facing your opponents supporters. You see them everyday. It becomes very personal," Rogers said.

"But we have to remember that after Tuesday – win, lose or draw – we all have to go back to our businesses, our homes and what-not, and we have to look these people in the eye," Rogers said.

Of the election, Rogers says, "I think it's going to be very close. Very close."

Minidoka prosecutor drops suit, asks attorney general for help

By Liz Wright
Times-News writer

RUPERT – Minidoka County Prosecuting Attorney Gara Newman said she is bitter about having to seek a legal answer to whether she can hire an out-of-county lawyer to help her with a burgeoning case load.

Newman said she suspects foul play, calling it "sour grapes from the election" when she was sent an anonymous document highlighting the reasons she can't hire former deputy prosecuting attorney E. Scott Paul, from Twin Falls county.

"I think it was a personal slap from someone who is trying to make trouble for me," Newman said. "It took time away from my county, and that makes me angry."

The county granted her the money to hire help, but Newman said she could find no one in Minidoka county willing to do that type of work for the low wages.

Paul agreed to commute from Twin Falls county and have a year's wages paid over 11 months.

An anonymous note highlighted segments of state law, indicating that a deputy prosecuting attorney may have to be "a qualified elector within the county."

Newman has dropped her lawsuit against the county and state, in favor of an opinion from the attorney general's office to determine if Paul must live and vote in Minidoka County.

The attorney general's office has already told her that other counties, such as Jerome and Gooding, have bankrolled deputy prosecutors who live outside the county limits.

But in at least one instance, a deputy prosecuting attorney has been disqualified from a case for not living in the same county where the crime occurred.

Newman said she hopes the attorney general's opinion can come soon, not only for Paul's sake.

"I'm swamped, I need a deputy desperately," Newman said.

Moscow teachers, board reach accord

MOSCOW (AP) — Moscow teachers and the School Board were just about ready to set the next date for mediation over a contract.

But at 6:30 p.m., Thursday, after 10 hours of mediation, the two sides reached a tentative agreement.

"I left for lunch thinking we were done for the day," said school board member Matt Graves. "We had even agreed on a date to meet again and I had called my office to tell them I would be back at work."

The compromise was the result of an updated "scattergram," a graph that shows the exact movement of teachers within the salary schedule. When both sides analyzed the new information, they found they were closer than they thought.

Dizzying pace of change sends Utah's Grand County toward recall election

MOAB, Utah (AP) — This was once a desert outpost where uranium prospectors stopped for gas and Mormon farmers planted fruit trees.

Today, it teems with mountain bikers and other well-off urban refugees.

The flood of money and people with bigger ideas has had a dizzying effect on the county of 6,600 people. Democracy has gone haywire. A recall election Tuesday for six of seven Grand County Council members will be the voters' fourth visit to the polling booth in a year just to form a government.

The recent trouble began a year ago, when voters scrapped the old system of three commissioners in favor of a more representative council of seven. Filling the seats required a primary and then a general election in February.

That should have been the end of it for two years, when council terms would expire. But those unhappy with changes — like enforcing the rule that front yards are no place for old cars and appliances — discovered a new recall provision that came with the new government. All they needed for a recall was signatures equal to 15 percent of the vote in the previous gubernatorial election — about 100 signatures per council member.

The petitions quickly filled up. What happens if the recalls succeed, no one knows.

"This recall is sour grapes," said Norman Shrewsbury, leader of the campaign that changed county government.

The roots of those sour grapes run deep in this southeastern Utah vacation spot surrounded by mesas and majestic canyons. In many ways, Moab dramatizes changes taking place all over the West.

Moab sits pretty, if remotely, smack between Canyonlands and Arches national parks. Half a mile away is the Colorado River, whose waters irrigate the orchards Mormon settlers planted in the last century.

The town had a brief fling with wealth once before, when its natural treasure of uranium was mined during the Cold War. It nearly became a ghost town when the uranium boom busted in the 1970s.

The place was seldom visited again until enterprising locals woke to the tourism potential.

Now the smooth red cliffs above Moab, the county seat, where some 4,000 of the county's 6,600 residents live, have made it a mountain bikers' mecca.

In 10 years, the number of visitors to Canyonlands has soared from 3,000 to 324,000. Arches expects more than 700,000 tourists this year, more than twice that of a decade ago.

They brought prosperity. Seven motels went up in one year. Homo values doubled and tripled.

"Five years ago you could have bought the best house in Moab for $50,000. Now you couldn't buy the worst piece of junk for that," said councilman Paul Menard. Like the five other council members facing recall, he's a small business owner who has profited from the tourists.

Those favoring recall get no joy from visitors who take up parking on Main Street.

The higher value of their homes is no comfort when they must pay more property tax from a fixed income or small salaries from service jobs.

Duane and Linda Dull want the council recalled since the county ordered the yard cleanups, though the last government did, too.

"Our rights are being taken away from us. They sent us a threatening letter saying we had 21 days to clean up our property," Mrs. Dull said.

Tourists toting mountain bikes visit Balanced Rock at Arches National Park near Moab, Utah, Tuesday. Bikers and rafters have turned once-quiet Moab into a buzzing tourist town, leading to tension that has caused some Grand County residents to try recalling six council members.

Papal decree sees resistance with Catholics

Clark Morphew
Faith today

The pope issued an encyclical the other day that sweeps away any doubt that there is a clear moral code for Catholics.

The only problem is, people don't care what the pontiff thinks of proportionalism, that dangerous belief that says for every holy law, there are exceptions to the rule.

What Catholics are talking about in regard to this encyclical is John Paul II's assertion that using artificial means of birth control is a mortal sin that could send you to hell. Everywhere I went the day the encyclical was issued, Catholics were talking about birth control and mortal sin – and they were angry.

By the way, this is not the first time the church has declared that the use of artificial birth control is a mortal sin. That admonition goes back 25 years, and since that time, the number of sinning Catholics has risen to epidemic proportions.

Does the pope now think that the thousands of sinners in his church will stop their evil doings and have more children?

Probably not. He's a student of human nature and a fellow with a lot of moxie. But he wants his people to know they are endangering their souls when they are not open to life during lovemaking.

There are many other warnings in this encyclical, but the one people seem to focus on is that birth-control thing. However the real message of this document is that proportionalism is dead – and make no mistake – the pope believes the moral code of the Catholic Church is absolute and that there are no exceptions to the rules.

Of course, the pope has a right to say these things, even an obligation. If he believes his vast flock is in danger of damnation, he must do what he can to save them. You may not like what he says, but he has a responsibility to tell you what he regards as truth.

Theologians are saying this will clear up confusion in the church but that it will not hinder dialogue about moral issues. It's true, of course, that the Catholic Church has been troubled since the Second Vatican Council with theologians who dissent from the church's moral code.

This pope has dealt with a number of them, including Charles Curran, who was removed from his teaching post at a Catholic university for his views on sexual matters. He probably won't be the last.

Because this encyclical is addressed to bishops, who are ultimately responsible for what is being taught at Catholic colleges and seminaries, they will be paying close attention to the content of classes on morality. And when dissension is spotted, the bishops will be obligated to act swiftly and thoroughly.

So, you see, the real onus falls on the heads of theologians, who must now bring their teaching into line with this encyclical. Because of that, this document may be the most important of John Paul II's papacy, and it will drive the church's teaching until another pope comes along and either rescinds or changes it.

It will also be the most controversial document to come out of this papacy because of the church's teaching on birth control. Environmentalists and family planning advocates are already voicing criticism and pointing to the overpopulation of the southern half of the globe. Those are largely Catholic countries, and poverty runs rampant through the masses.

Environmentalists are concerned because overpopulation strains the resources of the Earth. Water is depleted and polluted. Forestry is devastated as people cut down trees for both shelter and heat. Forests in parts of Africa and India have virtually disappeared as the masses do what they have to do-to-stay-alive.

As the population mounts, soil resources are overtaxed and become unable to produce basic foodstuffs. In South America, a predominantly Catholic continent, basic human needs for resources outstrip economic and technological development. In other words, these desperate people rape the resources for basic sustenance.

Brazil, which is probably at least 90 percent Catholic, has the potential of being one of the greatest nations on Earth because of its natural resources. Instead, Brazil has the largest number of abandoned street urchins in the world. And they were abandoned because their parents simply had too many mouths to feed.

Don't ever think that religion does not make an impact on the world. In this case, the impact will be felt for a long time, perhaps forever.

There is a cost to being a follower of Jesus

Neil Castle

In Matthew 16:24-25, Jesus says these words, "If anyone would come after me, he must deny himself and take up his cross and follow me. For whosoever wants to save his life will lose it, but whosoever loses his life for me will find it."

That is a tough statement to be drawn to and even more difficult to accept. We would like to picture the life of a Christian as one of unending honor and countless blessings, a "happy trip" from beginning to end. But Jesus himself said that in this life, the life of a follower will be quite different. He said that there is a cost attached to being his follower or disciple.

What exactly is the price that is required? It involves two steps, the first perhaps the toughest because it involves what we are the most attached to – our own self-will. Jesus asks that we come humbly to him and acknowledge our sin and our need. We must choose to deny all of our rights and our pride and then surrender the ownership of our lives to him, letting him have all the control. Harder yet, it not only means doing that today but also every day for the rest of our lives.

The second step would at first seem even more impossible to carry out – following Jesus. He is saying that we must follow his footsteps and example, patterning our lives after him. How is that possible? According to God's word, if we will surrender to his lordship, he will lead us and give us the power to follow him. But we must stay as close to him as possible, seeking to know him better and then choosing to pattern our lives after him.

There is a book written a number of years ago by Charles M. Sheldon called, "In His Steps." It is a challenge to Christians to follow in Christ's footsteps, regardless of what others do. To take that challenge, each one would pledge not to do anything without first asking the simple question, "What would Jesus do?" And after asking the question, people would follow Jesus as exactly as they know how, no matter what the result may be. I invite you to take that same challenge with me and allow him to lead us step by step as we seek to follow him.

Liberian Joe Boway has continued to work for the Lord despite the bloody civil war that has torn his homeland.

Missionary travels hard road

By Denise Turner
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Joe Boway is on a mission for the Lord. His journey, so far, has not been an easy one.

Boway was born 29 years ago in the village of Sunja in Liberia, West Africa. With no electricity or running water, the village would be considered poor by American standards. But Boway's family of rice farmers was a happy one.

As a child, Boway asked a lot of questions, which prompted missionaries to teach him to read and write.

By the time Boway was a teen-ager, he was well versed in Bible stories and firm in his Christian stance. That's when he was asked, by Lutheran Bible Translators, to work for them full time.

"I hadn't even thought about being this, but I prayed about it and God spoke to me," Boway said in a recent phone interview from Fort Wayne, Ind. "There's not a single moment in time that I've regretted it at all."

That statement may not sound particularly significant – but it is.

In the midst of Boway's highly successful ministry in Liberia, his country was plunged into a long and bloody civil war. Townspeople went into hiding, foraging for wild fruit and seeds and spending nights in the bush for fear of being killed in their sleep. All 2,000 residents of Boway's village fled or were killed. All of their buildings were burned.

As a Christian leader, Boway was marked for death by the rebels.

Boway and one of his brothers set out in search of freedom. They walked three days and nights, 100 miles, to the Ivory Coast. There, crouched by the bank of the Cavalla River, they persuaded two boatmen to take them to a refugee camp.

One of Boway's brothers was killed during the fighting, and his mother was captured and held hostage for a year. Today, Boway's mother and his other brothers and sisters are safe in a Liberian refugee camp. But his father is trapped in the capital city of Monrovia, with rebels controlling the countryside and preventing him from making contact with his family.

Boway teamed up with Lutheran missionary Tom Krenzke and is now studying Christian Education at Taylor University in Fort Wayne. He came to this country in 1990 on a student visa. Missionaries who had paid him for his translation work had put the money into safekeeping in the United States.

Most days, Boway works huddled over books and papers in a small room off a tunnel between classroom buildings near Concordia Theological Seminary. He's translating the New Testament into Western Krahn, one of more than 20 languages spoken in Liberia. He lives in the basement of a commercial building near campus, exchanging rent for maintenance work. On weekends and during the summer, he visits churches.

During the summer of '91, Boway lived in Idaho, where the Krenzkes have family ties. He stayed with Doris and Bob Worstell of Twin Falls, who say he's like part of their family now.

"Joe has a fantastic, sparkling personality," Doris Worstell said.

The Twin Falls Immanuel Lutheran Church, the Worstells' church, is helping to support Boway's work with contributions made through the Lutheran Women's League.

Boway enjoyed his stay in the Magic Valley, he said. In fact, he likes the whole United States "pretty well."

He's become a fan of pizza, but he's not quite as fond of snow.

Someday, when it's safe, Boway wants to return to his country. He dreams of setting up a mission school there and of teaching his people to read and write.

"Nothing makes me happier than to see my own people reading God's word in their own language," he said. "I love to see them smile and know Jesus Christ is speaking to them in their language."

And what about the past?

"Many innocent people were killed by the rebels and also by government troops," Boway said. "God knows what happened, and he will judge everybody – not me. I can forgive them, but my forgiveness is nothing. God can forgive them – and that is everything."

This is the first story in a series featuring missionaries sponsored by area congregations. Stories will run once a month. If your church is sponsoring a missionary you would like included, send information to Denise Turner, assistant features editor, The Times-News, P.O. Box 548, Twin Falls, Idaho 83303-0548.

Lutherans to denounce statements by founder

By David Crumm
Knight-Ridder News Service

Four centuries before the Holocaust, a major Protestant church reformer savagely attacked "this damned, rejected race of Jews" and urged his followers to burn their synagogues, demolish their homes and force them to do manual labor.

Martin Luther, the religious pioneer who helped to launch the entire Protestant movement, published two long anti-Jewish attacks in 1543, one of which was so obscene that it offended even some of his staunchest supporters.

This tragic secret is about to be publicly exposed and denounced by an unexpected source – the leaders of the 5.2 million-member Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, the nation's largest Lutheran denomination.

'From a Jewish perspective, it is discouraging that Luther started out saying some rather positive things about Jews but ... became very frustrated that Jews did not convert.'

— Bishop Robert Isaksen

"The irony is that the vast majority of Lutherans in this country today do not even know about these writings by Luther," said Massachusetts Lutheran Bishop Robert Isaksen. "But the various hate groups of this century, including the Nazis, did know about these writings, and they used them to try to justify some very ugly things."

At a church-wide meeting in Missouri last month, Isaksen convinced other leaders in his denomination that they should delve into the past and repudiate this chapter in Luther's life. Their official statement of rejection is expected to be issued by early next year.

For many Christians, the effort is a surprising new chapter in the gradual movement since World War II to improve Jewish-Christian relations.

The Roman Catholic Church, the world's largest Christian denomination, formally recognized Judaism as a valid faith in the 1960s and has been trying to repent for its own historic contributions to anti-Semitism. Similarly, Lutheran-Jewish relations have been slowly improving over many years.

Luther lived from 1483 to 1546, an era when anti-Jewish attacks were sweeping across Europe. During his lifetime, Jews were forcibly expelled from parts of what are now Germany, Spain, Poland, Italy, Portugal and other countries.

Chuch leaders confront issue of sexuality

Chicago Tribune

A deeply troubled churchgoer stopped Bishop Herbert Chilstrom in an airport recently, recognizing him as the national leader of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America.

The man told his bishop he was upset by two issues of sexuality.

First, he was angered by media reports about a church task force's statement on human sexuality. The 22-page first draft, being sent to ELCA churches around the country, defines healthy sexuality to include masturbation and loving commitments to include homosexuality.

After voicing his concerns about how the publicity might hurt the church, the man revealed the other issue that "was causing him a lot of pain," Chilstrom recalled.

"He had just learned that his son was gay."

To Chilstrom, who presides over 5.2 million Lutherans from a national office in Chicago, the chance encounter was a microcosm of his church's struggle with issues of human sexuality.

The man's first complaint was part of "a tidal wave of negative reaction" to news stories about the statement, Chilstrom said. He termed it "regrettable" that the report was leaked before it was sent to church pastors and other leaders.

He acknowledged that many fellow Lutherans were embarrassed by having their church associated with masturbation and homosexuality in news reports. But, Chilstrom added, what the man at the airport said about his son affirms the need for the report.

"This church has chosen not to put its head in the sand" about sexuality issues, the bishop said, adding: "This culture needs a word from their church about this subject."

He stressed that the first draft of "The Church and Human Sexuality" is not the church's last or definitive word and as yet has no official standing."

It will undoubtedly be revised before, and during, the church's General Assembly meeting in 1995, Chilstrom said.

Even if it is passed there by the necessary two-thirds majority vote, he said, "it doesn't bind the conscience of individuals. That is part of our Protestant heritage."

The Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, the nation's largest Lutheran denomination, is a separate denomination from the 2.6-million-member Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod. ELCA has only one congregation in the Magic Valley, Our Savior Lutheran Church of Twin Falls. Immanuel Lutheran Church of Twin Falls is one of 10 Magic Valley Missouri Synod churches.

The bishop urged church members to reserve judgment on the sexuality statement until they have read it for themselves. He and the Rev. Charles Miller, executive director of the ELCA Division for Church in Society, contended that media reports omitted the context and nuance of what the statement said about masturbation and homosexuality.

For example, Miller said, the oft-reported phrase that "masturbation is healthy" is part of a longer sentence. He read it:

"Masturbation, a means of self-pleasuring, is generally appropriate and healthy, unless it becomes compulsive or hinders development of life-fulfilling relationships."

Temple construction gets under way with groundbreaking

The Times-News

AMERICAN FORK, Utah – Groundbreaking services were conducted Oct. 9 for the Mount Timpanogos, Utah, Temple of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

The temple will be built in the northeast section of this central Utah community. The 16.5-acre site at Seventh North and Ninth East affords a panoramic view of the valley to the west and mountains to the east. The site will be enclosed with a 6-foot open-grill fence.

The temple will be the ninth for the church in Utah. The church currently has 45 operating temples worldwide. Others are under construction in Bountiful, Utah, and Orlando, Fla. Plans have also been announced for temples in St. Louis; Guayaquil, Ecuador; Bogota, Columbia; Preston, England; Hartford, Conn.; Madrid, Spain; and Hong Kong.

Site preparation began soon after the groundbreaking. A construction contract will be awarded, and it is anticipated that the temple will be ready for dedication in approximately two years, church officials said.

The exterior of the temple will be white stone and the tower will rise to 187 feet, including a gold-leafed statue of the Angel Moroni.

The building will have approximately 100,000 square feet of floor space, which will include four ordinance rooms, eight sealing rooms, Celestial Room, baptistry, offices, cafeteria and laundry facilities.

Mormon leaders issue statement

SALT LAKE CITY – The top leaders of the Mormon Church issued a rare statement affirming their position on church discipline in response to publicity about a spate of excommunications.

Five intellectuals and feminists were excommunicated and another was disfellowshiped last month.

The statement, issued last week by the First Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, said the leaders "deeply regret the loss of Church membership on the part of anyone. The attendant consequences felt over time by the individuals and their families are very real."

However, the statement said, "We have the responsibility to preserve the doctrinal purity of the church."

Paul Toscano, a Salt Lake lawyer who was among the five excommunicated in September, called the statement dishonest.

"Once a person is targeted as a dissenter or critic and leaders are fed up with the criticism, the rule is 'do whatever you have to do to silence the person,'" Toscano said. "Any stated policies are just subterfuge."

LOS ANGELES – The mother of a man acquitted of the most serious charges in the Reginald Denny beating drew cheers and "Amens!" from a church congregation Sunday as she praised Jesus for sparing her son life imprisonment.

"If anybody tells you that prayer doesn't work, tell them to see Mama Williams," Georgiana Williams told a dancing, chanting, gospel-singing crowd at the Greater Bethany Community Church in South Central Los Angeles.

In a case that drew parallels to the Rodney King beating trials, a multiracial jury last week acquitted Mrs. Williams' son, Damian Williams, of attempted murder and aggravated mayhem in the riot beating of Denny.

Bishops want quieter Mafia weddings

ROME – Catholic bishops in Italy are asking Mafia members to impose a code of silence on church weddings.

A recent statement from the Conference of Italian Bishops said the Roman Catholic Church cannot prohibit mobsters from taking wedding vows, but urged them to avoid conspicous displays of wealth.

The bishops also urged Mafia members to limit the ceremony to family members and keep high-profile figures and celebrities off the guest list.

In Sicily, the base of the Mafia in Italy, church weddings for mobsters have ranged from lavish festivals to secret gatherings.

FAYETTEVILLE, Ga. – Motorists stuck in traffic near a Baptist church about 30 miles south of Atlanta get a once-a-month treat from church members – a soft drink.

The Rev. Kendall Hicks, pastor of the Starr's Mill Baptist Church, came up with the idea one day as he talked with members, wondering what the church could do to reach the motorists.

The church seeks no donations, but drivers are given a bookmark listing a schedule of services. It also contains a quotation from the Bible.

"We're trying to tell these people we want to give them something," Hicks said. "When work lets out, people are tired and thirsty."

Motorists on Georgia 74, the road near the church, were suspicious the first time the church passed out sodas, giving away more than 200 cans.

"One guy took a Coke and said, 'What's in it?' " Hicks said.

Ex-bishop announces homosexuality

SAN FRANCISCO – The retired Episcopal bishop of Utah says he has been struggling with his sexual identity for 45 years. Now, he's announcing that he's gay and moving to San Francisco.

Bishop Otis Charles, 67, recently retired as the dean of the Episcopal Divinity School in Cambridge, Mass. He led the Utah diocese of the church from 1971 to 1986.

"I will not remain silent, invisible, unknown. The choice for me is not whether or not I am a gay man, but whether or not I am honest about who I am with myself and others," Charles wrote in a letter to his fellow Episcopal bishops.

Charles has five grown children. He told his wife about his homosexuality in 1976 and the couple eventually separated.

"To say that the years since 1976 have been painful is totally inadequate. They have been wrenching for us and for our family," Charles said.

He told the San Francisco Chronicle he plans to live with a community of Episcopal Franciscans in San Francisco and pursue a ministry emphasizing spirituality and ritual.

Council gives lesson on poverty, violence

Seattle Times

SEATTLE – At the front, in plain view, there were tables with flowers, cloth napkins, juice, coffee in ceramic cups, eggs, bacon, grits and toast.

At other breakfast tables, roped off with paper streamers, participants ate beans and rice.

In the final group, people were given paper bowls with one scoop of rice. The men in suits and women in smart dresses could drink from a common pitcher of water or use their bowls as cups.

The early morning exercise, which cost each person $5, was aimed at exposing church and community leaders to one of the root causes of violence: poverty.

The 90-some participants in October's Church Council of Greater Seattle session on violence had growling stomachs for a few hours, but organizers hoped the experience would help understand what others go through daily.

Indeed.

Two others walked out in anger.

A woman who tried to share her breakfast – just as she shares food with homeless people in downtown Seattle – was met by border "police" who threw the food away.

And when they tried to take away one man's rice bowl, he threatened to "blow them away."

Through role-playing, a panel session and information booths set up by social-service agencies, the Church Council attempted to help clergy make connections with roots of violence and to turn individual outrage into collective action.

The group representing 450 congregations has hosted four other sessions on racism, said David Bloom, Church Council associate director.

While some argue the group does more talking than acting, Bloom said the session was designed to nudge congregations to that step.

New campaign promotes moral, ethical values

Knight-Ridder News Service

"Listen, if you want kids to stop popping people off in drive-by shootings, tell them that life has value, that each individual is valuable.

"We have not moved in any bold way to teach young people about values this country has had since its beginning."

She was in Washington, D.C., earlier this month, along with actor Tom Selleck, to kick off a national campaign to promote moral and ethical values among young people.

If it's correctly put together, it could be a needed boost for many who are confused about the importance of morality, both for themselves and for our nation.

The campaign is endorsed by 27 groups – YMCA, 4-H, Little League Baseball and the Boys and Girls Clubs of America among them – who will work together in a Character Counts Coalition to train teachers, youth leaders and others in ways to cultivate ethical behavior.

Unless you've been living in a cave, you know this effort is desperately needed. I went back over some recent studies and surveys about young people and their values and found some sobering statistics:

• 65 percent of high school students said they would probably cheat in some way rather than do poorly on an important test for which they hadn't had enough time to study.

• 39 percent of high school-age boys and 26 percent of high school-age girls stole something from a store in the past year.

• More than half of all students – some campuses report as many as 90 percent – cheat at some time in their college careers.

• 35 percent of 19- to 24-year-old males and 19 percent of females say they would lie to get a job.

Despite the disconcerting stats, it would be wrong to conclude that this generation of young people is rife with liars, cheaters and ne'er-do-wells. The fact is, they're growing up in a society that is confused about its moral beliefs. (Judeo-Christian values, once accepted by most in society, have been rejected, redefined or simply ignored by more and more people.)

So the coalition will focus on "six pillars of character": trustworthiness, respect, responsibility, fairness, caring and citizenship. Organizations supporting the coalition will advertise the effort nationwide, inviting people to write or to call (800) 777-2662 for more information.

Lutherans

Early in his career, Luther surprised other Christian leaders by urging them to stop these persecutions. He hoped that Jews would respond to his kindness by converting to Christianity.

"From a Jewish perspective, it is discouraging that Luther started out saying some rather positive things about Jews but by the end of his life he became very frustrated that Jews did not convert," Isaksen said.

That is one common explanation of Luther's change of tactics: He was angry that his conversion strategy did not work.

Another theory stresses that he was a sick old man by 60, an advanced age in the 16th century. He suffered from ulcers and other painful disorders. That may have left him so bitter that he fell back into the more common anti-Semitic attitudes of his day.

Luther wrote, in part: "For it is as easy to convert a Jew as to convert the Devil. A Jew and a Jewish heart are hard as wood, as stone, as iron, as the Devil himself. In short, they are children of the Devil, condemned to the flames of hell."

Board rescinds Weiser forfeit; gridders perfect

WEISER — Weiser High School's football team has its undefeated season back.

The Third District Board of Control voted Thursday to rescind last week's decision forcing Weiser to forfeit a 34-6 victory over Vallivue on Oct. 8 because of an illegal substitution.

The board decided the substitution for one play did not affect the outcome of the game.

"After hearing testimony, the board decided the best and right things to do for the kids was to have the fine stand and rescind the forfeit," said Mark Ross, secretary and spokesman for the board.

Weiser still must pay a $50 fine, with $25 suspended. But the Wolverines return to being 8-0 on the season and 4-0 in Snake River Valley Conference play. That assures them the conference title and a state playoff berth.

A statewide rule limits athletes to five quarters of football in one week. A Weiser player competed for two quarters in a junior varsity game two days before he played in the varsity game against Vallivue. He played in the first three quarters and one play in the fourth quarter when he realized it was a violation.

Pumpkin Ridge plays host to 1997 Women's Open

PORTLAND, Ore. — The 1997 U.S. Women's Open golf tournament will be played at Pumpkin Ridge Golf Club, near Cornelius, Oregon, giving the state its first major golf tournament in half a century.

"We have accepted Pumpkin Ridge's invitation to be host to the tournament," said David Fry, executive director of the U.S. Golf Association. "The contract isn't signed, but I see no problem."

Gay Davis, one of the partners and founders of the 36-hole complex, said course officials are reviewing the 40-page contract, but they see no problems with it.

Bruins clinch playoff spot

By Larry Hovey
Times-News writer

Prep football roundup — B7

NAMPA — The adversity of being on the road frustrated the Twin Falls Bruins for three quarters Friday night before they exploded with 28 closing points to rip Nampa 34-10 and claim a spot in the Class A-1 football playoffs next week.

The victory means the Bruins will host a first-round game Friday with the opponent to be settled after Friday night's play in other parts of the state.

Two fumbles and four unsportsmanlike conduct calls, plus a face mask and an offensive pass interference kept the Bruins completely at bay for three quarters.

But perhaps 120 yards in penalties served as the fulcrum that levered the Bruins into the win.

All four unsportsmanlike calls came in the closing six minutes of the second quarter and, coupled with the face mask call, gave Nampa two excellent scoring chances. But the Bruins held on downs on a first-and-goal from the five on the first thrust and Nampa's Mike Gussie kicked a 31-yard field goal as the first half ended.

Twin Falls Coach Jon Jund felt perhaps the game was settled at that point. He said the officials said none of the Bruin players swore which pleased him and he added "you got to win football games with your pads and not with your mouth."

"When we held them at first and goal from the five, I thought that was the turning point. Our defense played outstanding all night. Nampa couldn't run the ball inside and if you can't do that, you can't run the option. That left our defensive ends free to concentrate on (quarterback John) Wilkerson," Jund said.

Two big defensive plays were turned in by Toby Lapp. Nampa fumbled on its first play and he recovered at the 30. Five plays later, senior Josh Amundson, who wound up with 122 rushing yards, bulled in from the three. But John McClusky hooked the extra point.

The penalty parade started then, but Twin Falls fought it off to Gussie's half-ending field goal.

Early in the third quarter, the Bruins drove to a first down at the Nampa 13 and threw an ill-conceived pass for an interception.

But the Bruins and Amundson started dominating on their next possession. Amundson capped a 60-yard drive with a four-yard play 69 seconds into the fourth

By Vin Capiello

BURLEY — The Burley Bobcats had the ball bounced their way when they needed it to during their 31-15 A-2 playoff win over Snake River Friday night.

The Bobcats were led by senior Tom Ruffell, who scored three touchdowns and made an interception to ice the victory. The win allows Burley to advance to the next round of the playoffs where they will face the winner of the Marsh Valley-Salmon game next Saturday in Pocatello.

"It was a great win for us," said Bobcat Coach Bill Hicks. "I thought our kids played real well."

Burley broke out to a 21-0 lead as Brad Beck scored on a two yard dive for a 6-0 lead. A pair of scoring strikes from Bobcat quarterback, Bob Plotts to Ruffell seemed to put the game out of reach by halftime.

But the Panthers wouldn't quit.

"Snake River decided they wanted to play football in the second half," Hicks said, "They were very physical up front."

With the score 21-7, Burley's Spencer Turpin went on a tear. He scampered 26 yards to make the score 28-7 and when Snake River had the ball on the next possession it was the 190-pound senior who made a tackle, forced a critical penalty, and batted down an important third down pass by Panther quarterback, Quinton Gneiting.

"He's been doing it for us all year long," the Bobcat coach said. "Spencer is definately our team leader on defense.

Burley forced two fourth-quarter fumbles that kept Snake River from making a comeback. The Panthers, however, managed to keep the game interesting when Brad Bair scored from four yards out with 4:40 remaining in the game.

Snake River recovered the ensuing onside kick, but Burley's defense held as Ruffell intercepted Gneiting with 3:19 to play. Ruffell added a second interception with 1:28 to play.

Jerome advances in playoffs

Mistakes keep game from being blowout

By Mike Maller
Times-News sports editor

ST. ANTHONY — The Jerome Tigers created their own version of the mercy rule Friday afternoon to avoid embarrassing South Fremont in front of its home fans.

The Tigers did advance in the Class A-2 playoffs with a 31-12 victory.

But only a number of mistakes kept the margin from being twice as large or more than it was.

Penalties and fumbles that could have proved costly to the Tigers turned out to be merely an annoyance. As long as the Cougars had little chance of moving the football, Jerome didn't have much to worry about.

On offense, the Tigers got a load from Kevin Capps, who only took eight handoffs. In those eight runs, the 6-1, 180-pound senior ran over and through the Cougar defense for 177 yards. He scored twice on runs of 70 and 66 yards.

"That hurt them, and the kickoff return hurt them," Richter said.

South Fremont scored on a 33-yard pass from Brian Blanchard to Wyatt Tibbitts to cut the score to 17-12 with 3:40 left in the third quarter.

Ron Cook, who earlier aided a Cougar drive with an uncharacteristic unsportsmanlike conduct penalty, returned the kickoff 75 yards for six points.

Graham MacGregor, who kicked four extra points and a 28-yard field goal, booted the point after for a 24-12 lead and the end to any South Fremont threat.

Jerome killed several of its drives with penalties and helped the Cougar offense in the same manner. The Tigers also fumbled away possession twice on punt returns. They had a TD called back because of a clip. Jerome fumbled away the ball at the South Fremont 21 on its first push towards a score.

GLENNS FERRY — The Glenns Ferry Pilots exploded for four touchdowns during an eight-minute span in the second quarter and went on to thrash the Parma Panthers 51-12 in round one of the 1993 Class A-3 state football playoffs Friday.

"It was pretty crazy," said Pilot Coach Bill Brock. "We told our kids to go out full bore and get after them. They've been doing a good job of that all year and it seems like our points have come in bunches. I hope we can keep it up for three more weeks."

Friday's game marked the first time Glenns Ferry has survived an opening round test since Brock's 1987 squad fell out of contention in a semifinal contest. It also set up a meeting between the second-ranked Pilots and No. 1 Teton at 4 p.m. next Friday in the Idaho State University Minidome.

Indians, Pirates survive A-4 play

By Mike Maller

IDAHO FALLS - The Magic Valley gets its second opportunity of the Class A-4 state volleyball tournament at Skyline High School today to derail two-time defending champion Cambridge.

Shoshone struggled through a pair of victories to make the winners' bracket finals against the Bulldogs at 1 p.m.

Hagerman fell 15-8, 15-8 to Cambridge in Friday's first match before defeating and eliminating Raft River 15-11, 15-11.

Raft River fell into the losers' bracket with a 15-6, 15-6 defeat by North Gem.

Shoshone got by Nampa Christian 12-15, 16-14, 15-6 and Clark Fork 15-12, 15-8. The Indians missed 12 serves against Nampa.

"That's a lack of concentration and staying focused," said Shoshone Coach Larry Messick. "When you get to the state tournament, you got to attack, and you got to stay focused the whole match."

Happy to be 2-0 for the day, Messick felt apologetic about the reservations he had about his team's play.

Cambridge blew away Hagerman in the first game and rallied from a 7-3 deficit to win the second. A team statistician said the Pirates gave Cambridge one of its better matches of the season, despite the lopsided scores.

"They're beatable," Messick said about the Bulldogs. "I'd feel good about it if we were playing a little bit better. We have not played with any emotion."

Burley drops pair to drop out of A-2 volleyball contention

The Times-News

POST FALLS — Burley dropped out of the Idaho State Class A-2 volleyball tournament by losing a pair of games Friday.

The Bobcats were evenly matched with both teams Friday going past the 15 point standard that teams can win by two points. Burley pushed past the standard three times in its first three games at state.

Middleton (23–6), the second-place team out of District 3 beat Burley 17–15, 16–14 sending the Bobcats to the losers bracket. Burley-faced-Preston, a team that lost to St. Maries in the first round, and lost 18–16, 15–3 sending the Bobcats home after the two losses in the double-elimination tournament.

Murphy, Wargo card 65s for share of Kaanapali lead

KAANAPALI, Hawaii (AP) — Bob Murphy, a five-time winner on the PGA Tour, and Tom Wargo, a long-time club professional, shot 6-under par 65s Friday to share the opening-round lead in the $550,000 Kaanapali Classic.

Murphy and Wargo, rookies on the Senior PGA tour, shared a one-stroke lead over Charles Coody, Dave Stockton and Bruce Crampton.

Murphy grabbed a share of the top spot on the strength of birdies on the 15th, 16th and 17th holes of the Kaanapali Golf Club course after trailing Wargo most of the day.

"I played better than I scored," Murphy said. "I put myself in awfully good positions out there. Bermuda greens can be a little frustrating, but overall I'm happy."

Murphy, eighth on the money list with $689,543, is looking for his third victory this season. He won $1.6 million in 25 years on the regular tour, but was hobbled by an arthritic right wrist for much of the past 10 years.

A change in medication late last year brought healing to his wrist and new life to his golf game.

"This year has been just fantastic," the Boynton Beach, Fla., resident said. "That new medicine has been a godsend for old Murph."

Wargo, at 51 a year older than Murphy, never played a round on the PGA Tour, instead laboring as a club pro at the Grandview Golf Club in Centulia, Ill. He failed in two attempts in the mid-1970s to qualify for the tour and almost gave up the game completely in 1979 to work in construction.

He changed his mind when the club pro's job became available, and with the advent of the Senior PGA Tour in 1980 bided his time until age 50 to get a second chance at tournament golf. He's made the most of it.

In 30 starts, he's finished in the money every time, with one victory and earnings of $509,820 to rank 16th on the money list.

"This year has been very nice," he said. "It's like walking into Vegas, putting a quarter in the slot and out falls the bingo. All I wanted was an opportunity to compete and make a living."

Wargo's bogey-free round was highlighted by a 30-foot eagle putt at the 15th hole. He added four birdies and saved par by dropping a 20-footer at the second hole.

Mackay tarnishes Oakley's dream of the perfect season

The Times-News

OAKLEY — Oakley's dreams of an undefeated season and a top spot in the Class A-4 state football playoffs were thrashed by a determined Mackay Miners team that nipped the Hornets 8–6 in the Magic Valley Conference football contest Friday night.

The win by the Miners keeps their hopes alive for a spot in the state playoffs. It also put Murtaugh out of the state playoffs and into a Conference playoff and a possibility at first.

Oakley, Mackay and Murtaugh will play for the two state spots at 4 p.m. on Wednesday using the Kansas playoff system. The site will probably be at Hagerman.

Hillcrest 42, Minico 21

RUPERT — Junior Troy Garn scored four touchdowns and led Hillcrest to a come from behind 42–21 football victory over Minico Friday night.

The Spartans led at the half 14–13 as Eric Stroschein threw for one touchdown and ran for another. Both teams were tied 21–21 in the third, but Garn went on a tear. Garn, the second leading rusher in the Gem State Conference, ran for two fourth quarter touchdowns to ice the game and end Minico's season at 1–8.

Gallagher's Tour lead slips to Frost, Kite

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Jim Gallagher's five-stroke lead evaporated in the sultry air in the $3 million Tour Championship as David Frost tied him, Tom Kite stood a stroke away and Greg Norman charged into contention with Friday's lowest round.

One day after carding an Olympic Club-record 63, Gallagher slumped to 73. That opened the way for Frost, who posted a second straight 68, to take a share of the lead for the $540,000 top prize in golf's richest event.

Kite would have joined them but for a cypress tree on 18 that caught his second shot in a tangle of branches and dumped it, after a pause, into a bunker, leading to his only bogey on the back nine in a round of 68 that left him at 137.

Norman posted a 67 that brought him within three shots of the leaders as he stepped up his bid for player of the year and top money winner. Norman figures he will lock up the top player award with a victory here to go with his British Open triumph, second-place finish in the PGA championship, the Doral Ryder title and good showings in several other tournaments in what he believes is his best and most satisfying year.

Norman also moved closer to recording the lowest yearly average since the current system for the Vardon Trophy started in 1988. Norman, a two-time Vardon winner, is ineligible for the trophy because he will finish this tournament two rounds shy of the required 60, but his achievement is no less impressive.

The tournament, seemingly all Gallagher's at the start of the day, suddenly became open to most of the top 30 PGA Tour money winners competing through Sunday without a cut.

The Times-News

OREM, Utah — A Region 18 victory slipped away for the College of Southern Idaho volleyball team Friday evening.

The Eagles appeared headed for victory, holding off the Wolverines 19–17 in game one before recording an easier 15–9 win in game two. It was not to be as Utah Valley battled back to take the match with consecutive 15–11, 15–13, 15–9 triumphs.

"I thought that first one might have put us over the hump," said Eagle Coach Ben Stroud. "There were lots of side outs and the defenses never let the ball hit the floor. We had lots of opportunities to win the match, but we just couldn't get it done."

Despite a loss in the gruelling three-hour match, CSI stands 34–8 with its playoff spot already secured.

Bentt batters Morrison

By Robert Seltzer
Knight-Ridder News Service

Wrong.

He was battered to the bone.

Michael Bentt, a man with only 11 fights on his resume, dropped Morrison three times to score a shocking technical knockout in the first round of a scheduled 12-round bout.

Bentt, a London native who now lives in New York, improved his record to 11-1 with six knockouts; Morrison, of Kansas City, Kan., fell to 38-2.

The upset torpedoed a multi-million-dollar bout between Morrison and Lennox Lewis, the World Boxing Council champion, in March.

"Lennox Lewis would have destroyed this boy," said Jose "Pepe" Correa, who trains Lewis. "In the back of my mind, I thought this was possible. Bentt looked like he had a little bit of bulldog in him. I just wanted Lennox to be the man to expose him."

Morrison charged Bentt at the opening bell, landing a left uppercut to the jaw that backed him into the ropes. He swarmed his opponent, leaving his chin exposed as he landed punches to the body and head. Bentt, slipping most of the blows, lashed out with a short right to the chin — a punch that deposited the champion onto his trunks.

Morrison crawled along the ring, desperately searching for the ropes to climb to his feet. He did, finally, but he would crumple to the canvas two more times, each time from a volley of blows to the head.

"I don't know which Tommy will show," Bill Cayton, who manages Morrison, had said before the fight. "He has all the talent in the world, but I honestly don't know if he's hungry enough to be a great fighter."

quarter. Lapp then rang in with his second major contribution, picking off Wilkerson's first pass after the kickoff and returning it 31 yards for a touchdown.

The Bruins held Nampa on a fourth-and-28 at its own 28 and immediately cashed that gamble in on an Amundson eight-yard run.

"The offensive line is playing awesome tonight," Amundson said.

With 3:34 left, both teams turned to their benches. Nampa's Jeff Davis broke loose two plays after the kick off with-an 85 yard romp. Twin Falls replied when Vilath Kinnavongsa fumbled but teammate Rich Stanger picked it up and completed the 32–yard play.

"It was a weird game," Richter said. "I think we had more penalties today than we had all year. We hurt ourselves."

Jerome plays in the quarterfinals of the Class A-2 playoffs at 5:30 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 6, at Idaho State in Pocatello against Shelley or Preston.

Capps opened the scoring with a run from his 30, breaking five or six tackles and faking a safety into falling down.

The Cougars trimmed the lead to 10-6 on the last play of the first half when wide receiver Ramey Remington leaped into the back of a crowd in the end zone and came away with a pass from Blanchard.

On Capps' second TD, he cut through a huge hole on the right side of the line and never had a defender come close to him on his sprint to the end zone.

bracket finals by defeating Wallace and Challis.

Against Clearwater Valley, Gooding trailed 5-0 and 7-0, respectively, in the second and third games.

"The girls kept fighting, kept coming back a couple points at a time," said Gooding Coach Joleen Toone.

Grace enjoyed a height advantage over both Gooding and Filer and used that in its wins, even though the Wildcats took leads of 7-3 and 6-1 in the games they lost.

"Grace is so hard to predict," Toone said. "They'll hit the ball at you for a while and then they'll tip. They really work your defense over."

spree, started it as well.

Forced to punt after two Pilot sacks drove them back 23 yards, the Panthers yielded their third touchdown on a 12–yard gallop by Knight that sent his team into intermission with an insurmountable 44–6 lead.

Starting at their own 38, Glenns Ferry picked up three of their 11 first downs rushing before halftime on runs of 12, 16 and 13 yards before Joe Solosabal capped a quick drive on a counter good for 19 yards and the icebreaker.

That came with 10:46 on the first quarter clock and Rainford's first touchdown followed at 3:43. Blake Farris threw to Rich Woojan for the first two-point conversion and found Knight after Rainford's score.

A small but quick Pilot line ended speculation about its ability to handle bulkier foes by dominating the Western Idaho Conference's No. 3 team.

"I don't know if there were any doubts or not," Brock said. "We certainly didn't have any. We had confidence that we could keep moving the ball going in."

Parma, which finished a 4–5 season, mounted a brief challenge when Sitts found tight end Matt Kramer for six on a broken play, but didn't score again until Rainford's 13–yarder blew the bulge out to 51–6.

"You don't see that kind of speed at many bigger schools," the former Raft River High School mentor moaned. "And don't forget, they'll be even faster on the Minidome turf."

Rainford, with 134 yard on 11 carries, paced a Pilot offense which amassed 329 yard on the ground. Solosabal added 78 yards on eight totes while Blake Farris, whose pitchouts, set up teammates all evening, connected on five of eight passes for 73 yards and chipped in 44 rushing yards.

Penn State looks ahead to Ohio State

The Associated Press

Coach Joe Paterno has to be wondering how much an extra week's preparation will help 12th-ranked Penn State at No. 3 Ohio State Saturday.

After all, an open date the week before, and even home-field advantage, didn't help the Nittany Lions Oct. 16 when they lost 21-13 to Michigan.

Maybe being away will erase those week-off blahs this time.

"There are very few places that are more fun to play than Ohio Stadium," Paterno said. "We've been there before ... we have a chance to do something to help ourselves."

A fifth victory in their sixth appearance at Ohio Stadium certainly would boost the stature of the Nittany Lions (5-1); who last played there in 1978 when they won 19-0. At the time, the Nittany Lions, who lead the series 6-2, were an independent team. This year, they belong to the 11-member Big Ten.

Of course, the fun house could turn out to be a house of horrors for Penn State.

"Ohio State has stayed healthy and is playing like a national championship team," Paterno said. "I would probably rate them right behind Florida State."

While Ohio State (7-0) will be tested, No. 1 Florida State, No. 2 Notre Dame and No. 4 Miami appear to be in laughers. Florida State is at home against Wake Forest, Notre Dame will at Philadelphia to play Navy and Miami will be at home against Temple.

Elsewhere, No. 5 Alabama plays Southern Mississippi, No. 6 Nebraska plays No. 20 Colorado, No. 7 Arizona plays No. 15 UCLA, No. 8 Tennessee plays South Carolina, No. 9 Auburn plays Arkansas and No. 10 Florida plays Georgia.

In games involving other ranked teams, No. 11 Texas A&M plays Southern Methodist, No. 13 West Virginia plays Syracuse, No. 14 Oklahoma plays No. 25 Kansas State, No. 16 Virginia plays No. 18 North Carolina, No. 19 Washington plays Arizona State, No. 21 Wisconsin plays No. 24 Michigan, and No. 22 Michigan State plays No. 23 Indiana. No. 17 Louisville is idle.

Wake Forest at Florida State

"The big thing," Florida State coach Bobby Bowden said, "is keeping the players' attention on Wake Forest." It's doubtful that the Seminoles (7-0) are looking ahead to Maryland Nov. 6, but they might be thinking about Notre Dame Nov. 13, Wake Forest is 2-4.

Navy vs. Notre Dame

Coach Lou Holtz of Notre Dame (8-0) reminds people that the Fighting Irish were 30-point favorites, but beat Navy only 14-6 in 1974, the last time the teams played at Philadelphia. Obviously, the oddsmakers have forgotten, because they've made Notre Dame a 35-point favorite to beat the Midshipman (4-3) for the 30th straight time.

Temple at Miami

Miami (5-1) has won 54 straight home games. Temple (1-6) ranks last among 106 NCAA Division I-A games in scoring defense and is 101st-in scoring.

Southern Mississippi at Alabama

"Fun is dominating a team from start to finish," cornerback Antonio Langham of Alabama (6-0-1) said. Southern Mississppi (2-5) has only four wins and two ties in 29 games against Alabama, but the Golden Eagles have made a couple of games grim for the Crimson Tide. They beat Alabama 27-14 in 1990 and lost 17-10 last year.

Colorado at Nebraska

The Buffaloes (4-2-1) have plenty of incentive against Nebraska (7-0). A victory would give them first place in the Big Eight with a 3-0-1 record. Nebraska currently leads with a 3-0 record.

Arizona at UCLA

If UCLA (5-2) wants to keep up its excellent total offense average of 409.7 yards per game and tie Arizona for first place in the Pac-10 at 4-1, the Bruins probably will have to rely on a big passing game. "Right now, Arizona's got the best defense in the history of the NCAA against the rush," UCLA coach Terry Donahue said. The Wildcats (7-0) have allowed an average of 15.1 yards rushing per game.

South Carolina at Tennessee

Quarterback Heath Shuler should keep Tennessee (5-1-1) in the hunt for the Southeastern Conference East Division title. The Volunteers have had an extra week to prepare for South Carolina (4-4).

Auburn at Arkansas

"Auburn is as good as they seem to be when you look at them on film," said Danny Ford, coach of Arkansas (3-4). In the flesh, the Tigers are 7-0.

Georgia at Florida

BYU can't afford to overlook 2-5 Aggies

If they do, he warns, this Saturday the upstart Aggies are well able to give USU fans their first win over BYU in more than a decade.

"We've got to start winning," Edwards said. "But this is the best Aggie team they've had up there in 10, 15 years. They've lost some tough ones."

After an impressive 34-13 Big West Conference opener over Southwestern Louisiana, USU went on a five-game skid that included three losses by a total of only 10 points — 31-29 to Utah, 28-24 to Baylor, and 48-44 to Nevada.

But last weekend, the Aggies (2-5 overall) won 33-26 at UNLV to improve their Big West record to 2-1. It was a good start, said coach Charlie Weatherbie, and he wants more.

"Being unable to win those close games has been frustrating," he said. "(The BYU matchup) is a game that's important to our program, a big game for us."

After a 4-0 start, BYU's already questionable defense has been further weakened by injuries. A record-worst 68-14 loss at UCLA was followed by a 45-20 pounding by No.2 Notre Dame. Then last weekend, Fresno State nipped BYU 48-45 in Provo to drop the Cougars out of the Western Athletic Conference lead.

"It's kind of mind-boggling," Edwards sighed. "We're not as bad as it looks. But we've had three tough outings against great offensive football teams."

BYU boasts the nation's fourth-ranked passing offense, averaging 330.4 yards per game. Quarterback John Walsh's favorite target has been Eric Drage, ranked sixth nationally for receiving after a career-best 232 yards against Fresno.

But the Cougars are saddled with a defense ranked 85th out of 106 I-A schools against the pass — and a dismal 102nd opposing the run (254.1 ypg).

Injuries have staggered BYU's already thin linebacking corps. Edwards first lost Todd Herget, then last week Nathan Hall was sidelined with an irregular heartbeat. Tests later showed he has a form of arrhythmia, and Hall is considered questionable, at the very least.

"That hurts us a great deal. He's an excellent football player and a very good leader," Edwards said. "We had (Hall) and Herget who had any experience at all."

Against the reeling BYU defense, the Aggies will field a passing offense ranked 14th. And while Anthony Calvillo quarterbacks an air game piling up 293.4 ypg, USU's runners — Profail Grier had 209 yards and two touchdowns last week at UNLV — average a respectable 136.3 ypg.

Despite five losses, the Aggies' defense has been fair, allowing 149.4 yg rushing and holding opposing passers to 130.1 ypg.

"I think our kids are mentally and emotionally back on track," Weatherbie said. "(But) we're going to have to overcome a mental block of not having beaten BYU in 11 years."

The last time USU beat the Cougars was 1982 in Logan, a 20-17 decision. BYU holds a 33-32-3 lead in the series going back to 1922.

With a bye weekend and three season-concluding WAC games left on BYU's schedule, Edwards says it is crucial he win at Romney Stadium Saturday afternoon.

Pro, amateur athletes must learn to co-exist if the Olympic Games are to survive, panel says

NEW YORK (AP) — Can multimillionaires coexist with athletes of more meager means at the Olympics? They'd better, if the Games are to continue to thrive, a panel of sports officials and observers said Friday.

Participants in "The Great Olympic Debate: Professionals vs. Amateurs" at the U.S. Olympic Committee's Congress said that all athletes should be treated the same at the Games, with limits on what they make and where they stay while they are Olympians.

But just because Larry Johnson makes more than $80 million playing basketball for the Charlotte Hornets doesn't mean he's any less capable of sharing the Olympic spirit than a club wrestler who has to scrape up money to buy a new singlet, a majority of the eight-member panel said.

"The Olympic Games should be for the world's best athletes in sports on the Olympic program," said John Coates, president of the Australian Olympic Committee. "It's unrealistic to consider the Olympic Games in a vacuum."

"Professionals in the Olympics is a logical consequence of the IOC's desire to bring together the world's best athletes," said Hein Verbruggen, president of the International Cycling Federation.

Once an amateurs-only club, the International Olympic Committee dropped the ban against professionals during the 1970s. Starting with ice hockey in 1984 and tennis in 1988, it gradually allowed pros into the Games, and the flow reached new heights last year at Barcelona with the U.S. basketball "Dream Team" of NBA superstars.

The Olympics consist of more than 25 sports, each run by its own international governing body. The IOC allows each sport to set eligibility rules, and so far that's worked well, said Richard Pound, an IOC vice president.

"We should not be trying to squeeze a square peg into a round hole and try to demand the same eligibility for all sports," Pound said.

Two panel members dissented — Lynnette Woodard, a member of the gold-medal U.S. women's basketball team in 1984, and Denis Oswald, president of the International Rowing Federation.

"There is a well-established professional athletic world out there and the Olympics belong to the amateurs," Woodard said. "Amateurism is the basis on which the Olympic ideal was built.

"It seems money calls the shots, but amateurs should stay in the Olympics."

Oswald said rowing started as a contest of professionals centuries ago and evolved into an all-amateur sport today. Taking a paycheck from a sport was not the entire issue, however, Oswald said.

"It's not just a question of money or time devoted to training for a sport," he said. "It's more a question of spirit. It's what you do freely, out of your own choice. Because you love it."

But others on the panel argued that the amateur-only days had created hypocrisy and cheating.

"After years of debate over advertising, pocket money and shamateurism, the Olympic movement yielded to reality," said Walther Troeger, president of the German Olympic Committee and an IOC member.

While supporting the idea of pros in the Games, Pound — who heads the IOC's sponsorship and TV rights negotiations — warned that great care was needed to avoid turning off sponsors and the public through the showcase of rich superstars.

"Everything should be done to make sure there is not a team with first-class members and second-class members," he said. "And we must assure sponsors that their money is not being distributed to well-renumerated athletes."

NBC is ready to do without NFL games

NEW YORK (AP) — Are you ready for an NFL season of watching "Sunday Afternoon at the Movies" on NBC?

That could be on the network's programming agenda next year if the president of NBC Sports carries through on a threat to go without football.

Testifying on Thursday in federal court in Chicago in an NBA suit against WGN regarding the telecast of Chicago Bulls games, Dick Ebersol said that unless the NFL reduces its revenue demands, NBC "will be out of football next year."

Estimates are that the network will lose $88 million on football this season, the final year of its current $792 million contract. "There's no way I can justify that," Ebersol said.

Ebersol was unavailable for comment Friday, and an NBC spokesman said, "We have no comment on what went on in federal court."

Ebersol has often said that all of NBC's sports deals must show profitability. He cited that policy earlier this year when the network agreed to a four-year, $750 million extension with the NBA. "We anticipated a modest profit and we exceeded that," Ebersol said of the original four-year, $600 million NBC-NBA deal.

Earlier this year, Ebserol said, "If we don't think we can make a profit in our next NFL arrangement, we won't be in it, period. We will negotiate and force lower rights fees or we will get out, because nobody can afford this kind of money. We're not a charity."

NFL broadcast negotiations are underway with all of the network and cable outlets currently carrying games and commissioner Paul Tagliabue has said he does not expect the new agreements to yield less than the average $900 million per year that the contracts now generate. The current television package with NBC, CBS, ABC, TNT and ESPN yields $3.652 billion for four years. According to Ebersol, the three major networks will lose more than $200 million this season.

NBC primarily broadcasts AFC games, an extension of the network's original relationship with the old American Football League when that league was formed in 1960.

"We expect the AFC package to remain on a broadcast network, not cable, if not NBC, then with another broadcast outlet," said Joe Browne, the NFL's vice poresident for communications and development. "The league has had a long, productive relationship with NBC and anticipates intensive negotiations with NBC to be concluded on mutually satisfactory terms."

Blue chip stocks idle; overall market mixed

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Stocks of some big name companies stalled while many smaller issues moved ahead, producing a mixed finish for the market Friday.

Blue chip issues idled in neutral for much of the session. Profit taking and a late selloff in one component of the Dow Jones industrial average depressed the widely watched indicator and it closed off 7.27 at 3,680.59. It advanced 31.29 points in the week and reached new closing highs twice.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines on the New York Stock Exchange where about 1,190 stocks rose in price, 813 fell and 666 were unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board slowed to 266.60 million shares as of 4 p.m. from 297.14 million in the previous session.

The Big Board swept past another milepost Friday. It set a record for annual trading value, with a full two months left to go in the year. The value of all NYSE trades amounted to $1.882 trillion, exceeding the previous record of $1.874 trillion reached in 1987, according to the exchange.

Market watchers said stocks appeared stuck in a holding pattern with investors reviewing recent evidence indicating the economic expansion has gathered momentum.

On the Nasdaq electronic market, technology and communications stocks were the stars. Their strength helped the Nasdaq composite climb 5.77 to 779.26. The index ended the week 6.58 higher.

Income increase sets stage for holiday sales

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Americans' personal income rose modestly in September, building on a strong gain in August and setting the stage for a welcome burst of holiday shopping.

Income edged 0.2 percent higher last month after a 1.3 percent jump in August, bringing personal income to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $5.44 trillion, the Commerce Department said Friday.

Consumer spending was fitful early this year but it now has increased for six consecutive months, rising 0.3 percent in September to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $4.43 trillion after an identical gain in August.

Analysts watch consumer spending closely because it represents roughly two-thirds of all economic activity.

"The real important point I get from these reports is that consumers apparently are more confident than surveys would lead you to believe," said economist James W. Coons of Huntington National Bank in Columbus, Ohio.

A consumer sentiment index issued Friday by the University of Michigan rose slightly to 82.7 in October from 77.9 in September, according to Merrill Lynch.

But — as in past months — consumers' assessment of current conditions was significantly higher than their expectations for the future.

Coons said many Americans apparently have been shaken by continuing layoff announcements from big corporations, but smaller companies are hiring and the labor market is improving overall, albeit gradually.

"Despite the pessimistic responses that the mass public is giving on opinion surveys, the reality is that consumers are spending more money than they are taking in, and are drawing down savings to pay for it," said economist Gordon Richards of the National Association of Manufacturers.

The combination last month of spending slightly outpacing income growth produced a tiny drop in Americans' savings rate — savings as a percentage of after-tax income — to 4 percent. That was down from 4.1 percent in August.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE® — BOBBY WOLFF

— Alfred, Lord Tennyson.

Today's South placed all his chips on a winning club finesse. The finesse did offer the best single chance, but there was no reason not to test a more remote chance first.

South didn't like what he saw in dummy, and he had less appetite for West's opening lead. "Just my luck to find 10 of our combined points falling on two spade leads," he thought.

Seeing no alternative to trying the club finesse, South lost trick two to West's club king. West continued in spades and South had no more opportunities. He had only eight quick winners and the game went one down.

Since the club finesse could be postponed at little risk, South should have first tested diamonds. He wins the first trick in dummy and leads a diamond to his queen, losing to West's ace. (Had the queen held, South would have finessed in clubs to cinch nine tricks.) West's spade return crashes South's remaining honors and South counters by leading a diamond to dummy's king with the intention of finessing in clubs. Surprise! East drops the diamond jack and South no longer needs the club finesse. He can win two spades, two hearts, four diamonds and one club, taking nine tricks before the defenders get five.
