House passes mining law overhaul

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The House Thursday overwhelmingly approved a comprehensive overhaul of the law governing mining on federal land, voting for the first time to change royalties for the extraction of many valuable minerals and to prevent and repair environmental damage.

In passing the bill 316 to 108, the House ensured a test of will for next year's vote in the Senate, which has approved a far more lenient measure supported by the mining industry.

Sen. Larry E. Craig, R-Idaho, sponsor of the Senate bill, predicted the House-Senate negotiations will be a "slugfest."

Overhaul of the General Mining Law of 1872 — whose provisions still govern extraction of gold, silver and other "hard-rock" minerals from federal land — is a key part of the public land agenda proposed by the Clinton administration and Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt. They have vowed to charge market-based rates for a range of federal resources from timber to forage to irrigation water, and to require more environmentally sensitive treatment of the government's vast acreage in the West.

The administration's public lands agenda are under increasing attack by some Western members of Congress as a "war on the West." Resistance flared in the Senate recently when a coalition of westerners threatened to stop action on a major appropriations bill because it contained administration-proposed fees for cattle grazed on federal land.

Last spring, the White House pulled the plug on a drive to use the budget process to charge higher fees for mining, grazing, and timber production on federal lands. But, pressured by its environmental allies and Babbitt, the administration has continued to seek those changes through other legislation and administrative action.

Rep. George Miller, D-Calif., chairman of the Natural Resources Committee and a strong proponent of overhauling the mining law, said the upcoming conference with the Senate will be "rough and tumble" and that achieving reform would require the active involvement of the Clinton administration.

"If the administration doesn't participate there will be no bill," said Miller, who has frequently prodded the White House to defend more vigorously Babbitt's natural resource policies. "They're going to have to put on their long pants and go to work," he said.

Illegal dumping follows landfill fee hikes

By Sean L. McCarthy
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Rising fees at the county landfill are prompting some rural residents to dump their trash illegally on nearby public lands.

Karl Gebhardt, an environmental engineer with the federal Bureau of Land Management in Boise, said Thursday that the problem may get worse before it gets better.

"As the dumping laws become more restrictive at the landfills, this will likely increase," Gebhardt said. "If (people) can save a couple thousand dollars by driving a couple miles they'll do it."

New regulations by the federal Environmental Protection Agency are causing some landfills to close as others are built to meet the tougher environmental laws.

In recent months, BLM workers have found four new illegal dump sites southwest of Twin Falls.

The BLM is cracking down on illegal dumping on federal lands through public-awareness programs and a strengthening of its enforcement program.

John Ash, a natural resource specialist with the BLM's Jarbidge Resource Area office in Twin Falls, said that 20 isolated dump sites have been discovered in searches of the Jarbidge area alone.

And with 12 employees to manage an area of approximately 1.8 million acres, the field office has neither the time nor the money to clean up all the sites.

"None of us are hired to do this kind of work," he said.

He said the BLM is "just now getting the funding for this kind of thing" from the Interior Department, which oversees the bureau.

On a tour of federal lands south of Buhl Thursday, Ash pointed out the difficulty in spotting the rubbish in the sagebrush.

Down in a swale among the weeds rests a stream of rusted tin and aluminum cans, broken glass and assorted appliances.

"If you were just driving down the road you wouldn't notice it," Ash said.

"Ash said that a partial cleanup of that 'semi-historic' site already has filled a 1-ton stakebed and a four-horse trailer.

Some of the 20 sites date back to the 1940s. But Ash said the BLM is more concerned about new illegal dumping sites.

Illegal dumping of hazardous materials threatens the health of people who use the lands, he said. If that dumping is unchecked, the trash "can accumulate rapidly," he said.

At a new site west of Hagerman, BLM officials found 28 garbage bags scattered in a small swale. A call from a concerned citizen last week was the first notice the bureau received.

"Please see DUMPING/A2"

Call to report illegal dumping

To report illegal dumping to the BLM, call toll-free at 1-800-326-6475, or call one of these local offices:

- Jarbidge: 736-2350
- Burley: 678-5514
- Shoshone: 886-2206

John Ash of the Bureau of Land Management, above, says the agency is investigating the illegal dumping of 28 bags of garbage west of Hagerman. Many dump sites, littered with decaying tin cans like the ones below, date back to the 1940s.

Houses, hamburgers, haircuts drive up living costs

By Mik Nornington
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — For the first time, the cost of living here has exceeded the national average.

An American Chamber of Commerce Research Association cost-of-living survey gives Twin Falls a score of 103.3. The national survey used data from the first quarter of 1993.

A score of 100 is the national average. That means Twin Falls' cost of living is 103.3 percent of the average of more than 200 cities.

By comparison, Boise was at 103.2 and Pocatello was at 92.3.

Twin Falls' index has risen with dramatic increases in the prices of local homes, said Kent Just, executive vice president of the Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce.

Twin Falls housing prices scored 106.5. By comparison, Boise had a housing index of 111.6 and Pocatello was at 83.8.

Local home prices are now rising by about 1 percent a month, said Kenneth Roy, a Twin Falls real estate appraiser.

"I don't know what you think, I consider that a dramatic increase," Roy said.

Just said the Twin Falls housing price score could be higher if local rent prices were included.

"And rents have really been going up," he said.

But Just said the index has gone down slightly since the first-quarter survey was done, partially due to a leveling of home prices.

When Just started compiling the local data for the survey five years ago, the city's score was around 80 — making Twin Falls one of the least-expensive cities in America to live in.

Also going up are prices on "miscellaneous" items in the survey, including underwear, hamburgers and haircuts, Just said.

The American Chamber issues a checklist of items for the survey that chambers voluntarily fill out. Not every chamber returns its quarterly checklist.

"Is it a true gauge of the nation? No. But it is a true gauge of cities that participate," Just said.

Cost of living

Twin Falls' cost-of-living index has increased since the fourth quarter of 1992, according to a survey of various costs by the American Chamber of Commerce Research Association. 1993 figures were gathered in the first quarter.

Downtown Twin Falls snaps on Festival of Lights

By Steve Crump
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — When downtown businesswoman Maria-Larson heard from her sister-in-law about Pocatello's downtown Christmas parade, she thought it might work for Twin Falls.

Next year, perhaps, or maybe for Valentine's Day.

"I mentioned it in a (Business Improvement District) meeting a few weeks ago," said Larson, proprietor of Larson Arts. "Jeanne Wilson picked it up and ran with it."

Wilson, director of the downtown BID,

Parade moves at 6:30 p.m.

Downtown Twin Falls' inaugural Festival of Lights will start at 6:30 p.m. today. The parade route will run from Gem Linen Supply building, 403 Main Ave. W., southeast on Main to Bill Automotive & Muffler, 402 Main Ave. S., around the block, and then back to Gem Linen Supply.

Downtown stores will be open until 8 p.m.

organized a Festival of Lights for tonight and lined up at least a dozen floats.

"We think it has the potential for being an important community event," Wilson said. "Pocatello started theirs three years ago with just a few floats, and now it's huge community event for them."

Organizers of Pocatello's annual Festival of Lights expect several thousand spectators and 32 entries — for their parade the night after Thanksgiving.

"It's been a tremendous success," said

Julie Rene, chairwoman of the Pocatello event and Larson's sister-in-law. "Although the parade only goes through the Old Towne area, we have floats and entries from businesses and service clubs throughout the city."

That Pocatello parade was born of an effort to get shoppers who had abandoned downtown for the malls on the northern edge of town to come back. The city's Old Towne merchants, mostly specialty businesses, do business in a two-dozen-block area in the city's core.

"(The parade) definitely brought shoppers into Old Towne," Rene said.

Hoosiers brace for flooding; rain, snow fall across West

The Associated Press
 Rain-soaked Indiana braced for flooding Thursday as most of the nation stayed dry.
 Scattered rain and snow showers fell over parts of Utah and Idaho.
 National Guardsmen and inmates stacked sandbags Thursday to hold back the rain-swollen White River in southwestern Indiana, where eight inches of rain have fallen since last weekend.
 More than 80 people were still out of their homes after being evacuated from Waverly, Ind., where about 70 people had to leave this week when floods contaminated drinking water. Another 25 were evacuated in nearby Madison Township, said Thomas Miller, a Morgan County civil defense spokesman.

where. Saturday mostly sunny and a little warmer. Highs in the mid-40s.

Weather summary

An upper-air Pacific storm system passed over Idaho Thursday, bringing a dash of winter to some sections of the state.
 In the Magic Valley, snow began falling about 7 a.m. and continued for a couple of hours. Clearing skies late in the morning were accompanied by winds which reached 20 to 30 miles an hour with some stronger gusts.
 The snow stuck to the ground briefly in some areas but moisture amounts were either traces, or only a few hundredths of an inch. Some snow fell over the extreme southeastern part of the state during the afternoon.
 The National Weather Service reported that strong pressure gradient winds blew across southern Idaho. Pocatello and Idaho Falls reported winds of 44 to 45 mph Thursday afternoon.
 Winds in the 15- to 30-mph range were common at other locations.
 Temperatures around the state afternoon were mostly in the 30s and 40s.
 A major winter storm is possible late Sunday and Monday. The storm will move into the state from Siberia, where it is developing.
 The highest temperature in the state Thursday was 50 degrees at Weiser. Spencer reported the lowest at 12 degrees. Elsewhere in the nation Thursday, the highest temperature was 88 at Hollywood and Fort Myers, Fla. Gunnison, Colo., reported the lowest temperature at 1 above zero.

A flood warning remained in effect for several Indiana counties through Friday, when the river was expected to crest at 7 feet above flood stage, said Al Shippe, hydrologist for the National Weather Service.
 The weather service warned of gale-force winds through Friday over Lake Huron, and posted wind advisories for most of North Dakota and western South Dakota outside the Black Hills.
 Blowing and drifting snow was expected in the northern mountains of Colorado. Rain scattered in northern Utah turned to snow in southern Idaho's higher elevations; there was no other reporting of large areas of rain or snow.
 Temperatures around the nation at 1 p.m. MST ranged from 20 degrees at Yellowstone, Wyo., to 88 at Fort Myers, Fla.

Briefly

Strike disrupts American Airlines

Hundreds of flights were disrupted and thousands of passengers delayed Thursday as flight attendants struck American Airlines, picketing airports around the nation in the industry's biggest walkout in nearly five years.
 American wouldn't say how many flights it was able to operate, but said more than 60 percent of the flights at its home base and largest hub, Dallas-Fort Worth, had full crews by early afternoon.
 Sources at another major carrier familiar with American's operation estimated 30 to 50 percent of American's flights were disrupted.
 The union, which struck at 5 a.m. MST over wage and other contract issues, claimed the walkout was 90 percent effective.
 Meanwhile, the more powerful Allied Pilots Association was voting whether to join the flight attendants, a move that would likely ground the airline.

Distracted crew failed to lower gear

CHICAGO — Warning alarms for nearby aircraft so flustered the crew of a passenger plane that they failed to lower the wheels as the plane came in for a landing, investigators said Thursday.
 The Continental Airlines plane scraped the runway as the pilot aborted the landing Monday on instructions from the control tower at O'Hare International Airport.
 Flight 1543 landed safely on a second approach. There were no injuries to the 88 people on board the flight from Houston to Chicago.
 A National Transportation Safety Board investigator interviewed the three cockpit crew and determined that in the confusion of warning alarms, they failed to use the landing checklist, which would have indicated the wheels were not down.

Clinton arrives for Pacific forum

SEATTLE — President Clinton, claiming a strengthened hand from his congressional victory on trade, vowed Thursday to work to "drive down trade barriers" around the world as the start of a conference of Asian and Pacific leaders.
 U.S. Lining himself up as a "rug merchant" hawking U.S. goods overseas, Clinton told an airport rally that if the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation conference is successful, "we can create jobs here and jobs across the Pacific."

And the administration came prepared to deal. As an incentive, Clinton has decided to permit the sale of an $8 billion supercomputer to China and is prepared to lift restrictions on sale of nuclear power generating components in a further effort to widen trade with China.
 Meanwhile, members of the loose federation of Asian and Pacific nations tentatively agreed to lower some tariffs and trade barriers among themselves.

GOP senators offer health plan

WASHINGTON — Two dozen Republican senators promoted a new "consumer choice" health plan they said would make insurance more affordable without the coercive features of President Clinton's approach.
 It would outlaw many exclusionary insurance industry practices and give people individual tax credits to replace the existing tax breaks on employer-provided insurance.
 It would not raise taxes, but would shave $141 billion over five years from Medicare and Medicaid.
 It is "a very significant, serious, credible alternative to President Clinton's government-knows-best health care policy," said Sen. Don Nickles, R-Okla., the chief sponsor.
 Nickles and Rep. Cliff Stearns, R-Fla., were joined at a news conference by some of the 23 cosponsors in the Senate and 15 in the House, including Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole of Kansas.

House passes abortion clinic bill

WASHINGTON — A bill cracking down on abortion clinic violence passed the House on Thursday after lawmakers rejected a bid by anti-abortion lawmakers to soften penalties for protesters, who staged peaceful blockades.
 It was approved on a voice vote after the House voted, 246-182, to reject an effort to send the bill back to committee and strip language opposed by abortion foes.
 It would get the bill to President Clinton before Congress begins its Thanksgiving recess, supporters kept the measure free of controversial amendments so it wouldn't differ much from the Senate version passed earlier this week.
 Both bills create new federal crimes for threats, use of force and obstruction at abortion clinics.

 Another recent dumping had occurred near Roseworth, where BLM workers found what appeared to be five dead cows decaying on a steep hillside, he said.
 "How are we going to clean that up?" he asked.
 Gebhardt said the bureau has hired additional rangers in the past few years in Idaho to improve its law-enforcement capabilities, and has spent over $200,000 on cleanup operations.
 "We're trying to increase our efforts but have taken about a half-million out in the budget," Gebhardt said. "We've requested additional funds to do this kind of work."
 To increase public awareness of the issue, the bureau has held workshops around the state with local landfill officials. The bureau also has developed videotapes and brochures in a joint venture with the state Department of Agriculture and Division of Environmental Quality.

 Residents are encouraged to report illegal dumping to the BLM and to volunteer their time to clean up the affected lands, Ash said.
 There are currently two sanctioned landfill sites in the BLM's Jarbidge Resource Area — House Creek and Roseworth. But both landfills will close in April 1994 because of the EPA regulations.
 "I don't know what those people are going to do," Ash said.

Labor rejects Clinton's post-NAFTA peace offer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Organized labor responded frostily to an olive branch from President Clinton on Thursday after a bitter House struggle over the North American Free Trade Agreement.

The Senate labored to complete passage by week's end.

Departing for an international trade conference in Seattle, Clinton said NAFTA's House passage Wednesday night would help him fight for open markets throughout the world.

He said Vice President Al Gore and Chief of Staff Mack McLarty would fly to Mexico City soon to work out implementation of the pact designed to blend the United States, Mexico and Canada into the world's largest free-trade zone.

Clinton also called for cooperation by both labor and management to make sure the accord benefits "all the working people of our country."

The beginning of Senate debate duplicated arguments that ricocheted through the House on Wednesday, where a 234-200 vote showed more Republicans than Democrats supporting the legislation.

Sen. Donald Riegle, D-Mich., complained that NAFTA would place 60 million Mexican workers in our work force, "costing Americans their jobs in the process."

But Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., said the accord would open the way to more markets for American goods. A vote was expected Saturday at the earliest.

Clinton followed up on a midnight phone call to AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland by expressing respect for the "opinions and convictions of those who did not embrace NAFTA."

But neither Kirkland nor other labor leaders seemed ready to forgive the actions taken by the White House to secure passage in the House.

"We won't forget what happened here," Transfers President Ron Carey said in an interview with The Associated Press. "We're the folks who went out there and worked for a president who talked repeatedly about jobs, and here what we've done is export jobs."

Kirkland's remarks about Clinton were less pointed, and he said organized labor would do "everything that we can" to advance health care legislation, Clinton's top legislative priority for 1994.

The AFL-CIO leader's voice broke with emotion at times as he attacked the House vote, saying American plants would be moved to Mexico and American workers "sold down the river."

Asked how labor would react to the accord, Kirkland said "The voting list on this issue will be examined very, very carefully." But he said he was making no threats.

"It is not a threat to suggest to a member of Congress ... that this is an issue of burning importance ... and that that will weigh heavily on our response to their appeals," he said.

If labor was slow to forgive, House Democrats stressed unity after the vote. "It's a big happy family," said Democratic leader Richard Gephardt, a Missouri Democrat who opposed the agreement.

The divisions in the Senate mirrored those in the House. Three senior Democratic committee chairmen — Riegle, Daniel Patrick Moynihan of New York and Ernest Hollings of South Carolina — are among the opponents. Riegle and Moynihan represent states heavy with organized labor, while Hollings' South Carolina is home to a large textile industry.

But several Republicans favor NAFTA, and Senate leaders confidently predict the measure will win approval. An AP survey showed 49 senators in favor and three leaning that way, 26 senators against and five leaning. Seventeen were undecided.

NAFTA would remake the economic relationships among the United States, Canada and Mexico, gradually reducing tariffs over 15 years. Supporters say that would open the way to vast new markets for American goods. Opponents say U.S. firms would move to Mexico to access to cheap labor and laxer environmental standards, and thousands of American workers would lose their jobs.

There was no doubt where Clinton stood.

"By taking the courageous step of opening trade in our own hemisphere, we have the economic, the political, and the moral standing to make the case that that ought to be done throughout the world, that America is serious about lowering trade barriers and promoting growth in our country, and throughout the globe," he said as he left for his meeting with Asian leaders in Seattle.

He said the House approval gave him a "strengthened hand to fight for open markets throughout the world ... I look forward to this trip and to continuing the fight."

Turning his attention to this hemisphere, Clinton also sent a message to leaders of 31 Latin American and Caribbean governments Thursday, thanking them for "hemisphere-wide backing" of NAFTA.

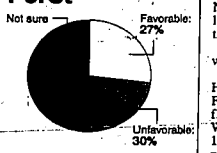

"The NAFTA will set the stage for freer trade and sustainable, more equitable economic development throughout Latin America and the Caribbean, for the benefit of our combined populations of 700 million," the message said.

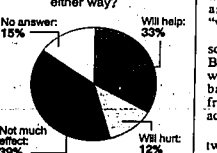

Teamsters President Ron Carey meets reporters in the lobby of AFL-CIO headquarters in Washington Thursday to discuss the North American Free Trade Agreement passed by the House Wednesday night.

Associated Press Poll

Withholding judgment on Perot

Q: Do you think what Ross Perot is now saying and doing will help or hurt in solving some of the country's problems, or not have much effect either way?

Source: AP national poll of 1,002 adults Nov. 14-15 by Hart Survey Research Group of Media, Pa., part of AUS Consulting. Margin of sampling error: 2 percentage points, plus or minus.

Poll: People don't think Perot helps

NEW YORK (AP) — Only one in three Americans sees Ross Perot as playing a positive role in helping the country solve its problems, and even Perot voters give him mixed ratings, according to an Associated Press poll.

The conventional wisdom is that Perot's popularity was bruised badly during the trade fight, but the poll shows many are withholding judgment. 42 percent don't know enough to tell their impression of Perot, while 27 percent say it is favorable and 30 percent unfavorable.

Other findings:

- Just over two-thirds of those who call themselves '92 Perot voters have a favorable impression, but 32 percent now rate him unfavorably or don't know.
- Twelve percent think what Perot is now saying and doing will hurt the country's efforts to solve some of its problems, while 39 percent don't see much effect positively or negatively and 15 percent are not sure. Men, high-income Americans, young adults and those born around World War II are somewhat more likely to be among the third who see Perot's role as helpful.
- Twenty percent of those polled say that if Perot had been elected president last November, he would be doing a better job than President Clinton. Most of these people are not Perot voters. They tend to be young, male, Republican, and apparently anti-Clinton.
- While 27 percent say Perot would be doing a worse job in the White House, the majority say he would be doing about the same as Clinton, or they're not sure.

President's pressure put NAFTA over the top

WASHINGTON (AP) — As President Clinton scribbled on his NAFTA call list, an arrow pointing left meant a "Yes" vote, an arrow to the right a "No" vote.

For weeks, arrows pointing left were hard to come by.

But by Monday, 60 hours before the House vote on the North American Free Trade Agreement, things were finally looking a little better for the White House: Clinton's list showed 190 solid and 13 likely NAFTA supporters. He was still more than a dozen votes short of victory but, finally, within striking distance.

What followed was a wild day of cajoling, dealing and arm-twisting. Not just for Clinton but for most of the Cabinet, allies in Capitol Hill and aides in the White House NAFTA "war room."

At midday Tuesday, Clinton scrawled a pledge from Georgia Rep. Buddy Darden onto his notes, and it was over: The president would win a battle many thought he would run from, and it even many of his closest advisers long thought he would lose.

Clinton's NAFTA triumph is a twisted tale of odd alliances, back-knuckle politics and old-fashioned pork-barreling. Allies say the main ingredient was simply Clinton's refusal to lose. But he didn't win alone. In all, his Cabinet made more than 1,000 phone calls to House members, and Republicans provided critical help.

The president's support of NAFTA was tepid at the outset, providing a source of great optimism to organize labor and other NAFTA enemies in Clinton's own party. But his effort turned fierce by the end, surprising even his allies.

"He was an extraordinarily aggressive and intense pursuer of yes," said House Republican Whip Newt Gingrich, a Clinton ally in the peculiar fight. "I don't know if we've ever had anybody much better."

Looking back, Clinton aides and other NAFTA supporters said there was no specific turning point on the path to victory. But a first big step came Sept. 14.

With former Presidents Ford, Carter and Bush at his side in the East Room of the White House, Clinton delivered a forceful argument for NAFTA. Republicans, who knew they would have to find the most votes, were questioning Clinton's commitment at the time.

"He put his prestige on the line," said Senate Republican leader Bob Dole. "For us, that ended any questions of his commitment."

Even so, Clinton was nowhere close to victory.

He recruited Chicago political pro Bill Daley to lead his NAFTA lobbying, and every morning at 9:15 Daley's crew assembled to give him the news, mostly glum.

For weeks their chart of House Democrats backing NAFTA had but 32 names, and as October turned to November, the count looked lost.

Efforts to win over blocs of voters — like the Massachusetts delegation during a trip to Boston — were scuttled.

"It required an enormous amount of the president's time, but the only way to win was member-by-member," said a senior Clinton aide. "The more time we got, the more votes we won."

The result was a trickle, and then a flood.

Two influential House Democratic leaders, first Vic Fazio of California and then Steny Hoyer of Maryland, endorsed NAFTA.

"We froze movement the other way," said the senior aide. "That was the opening we needed."

The administration gambled, sending Vice President Al Gore into a debate with NAFTA nemesis Ross Perot. Gore was judged the clear winner, and the political dynamics shifted.

Republicans most worried about Perot back home came off the fence. And suddenly more Democrats were open to Clinton's pork and persuasion.

Rep. Karen Shepherd, D-Utah, called with questions about the environment; EPA Administrator Carol Browner was dispatched to answer them, and win her vote. Labor Secretary Robert Reich made the rounds of lawmakers worried about retraining for displaced American workers.

Clinton got the toughest assignments.

Republicans couldn't convince some of their own, so they asked for help. Clinton met with California Jay Kim and New Yorkers Rick Lazio and David Levy, converting all three.

The Democrats were tougher.

Rep. Thomas Sawyer of Ohio told Clinton he supported NAFTA from an intellectual standpoint but that frustrated blue-collar workers back home in Akron were scared for their lives.

"The president saw it was an extremely difficult decision and he listened as much as he talked," said an aide.

In the end, Sawyer promised his vote.

Still, Clinton was short.

So more phone calls and more one-on-one meetings, bringing a rush of what Daley's team called "three-pointers" — converts from opposing NAFTA to supporting without even a pause at undecided. Democratic Reps. Sam Farr of California, Floyd Flake of New York and Bart Gordon of Tennessee were in this group.

"The president was like a junkyard dog going after members," said Democratic Rep. Bill Richardson of New Mexico. "He made Lyndon Johnson sit up in his grave and take notice."

A deal to protect sugar from imports brought — critics say bought — votes from Louisiana; another citrus brought more converts, from Florida.

Benjamin Kelley, president of the Institute for Injury Reduction, holds a toy gun Thursday during a news conference for the Institute's annual toy safety report in Washington, D.C.

Consumers, officials lobby for safer toys

WASHINGTON (AP) — When paramedics got to Teresa and Logan Lough's house in Fredericksburg, Va., their 2½-year-old nephew, Zachary, was blue and not breathing after having swallowed a plastic chicken.

"I handed him to a paramedic. That was the last time I was able to hold him," Lough said, barely able to speak as she stifled sobs and as tears ran down his cheeks. The child died the next day.

Members of Congress appearing Wednesday with the Loughs say legislation they have introduced would require labels on toys warning of the danger of choking.

Rep. Cardiss Collins, D-Ill., said 186 children have choked to death on toys in the last 10 years.

Sen. Richard Bryan, D-Nev., said 31 children died last year from dangerous toys and that 160,000 others were treated at hospitals. Bryan is cosponsoring a bill with Sen. Slade Gorton, R-Wash., and Sen. Jay Rockefeller, D-W.Va.

The Institute for Injury Reduction displayed toys that can jab out eyes, smash fingers and burn skin.

The president of the private institute, Ben Kelley, displayed several toys, explaining how each could kill or injure a child.

Toy arrows became deadly projectiles when the rubber tips were easily pulled off. A coverlet and a sleeping bag, both with the children's TV character Barney the dinosaur on them, were flammable.

A sword, advertised as having a safe, soft, plastic blade, hacked an apple in two. "A plastic 'ax' with a point on the shaft pierced an apple.

Most of the toys were cited because they, or detachable parts of them, could be swallowed.

Kelley had these tips for buying Christmas presents.

- Don't buy any toy or toys that have detachable parts that will fit inside an empty toilet paper roll. These include marbles, small balls, dolls, blocks and balloons.
- Don't buy small toys that look, smell or taste like fruits, candy, drinks or anything resembling food.
- Any toy containing a long rope, chain, string or elastic band could encircle children's necks and strangle them.
- Inspect toy chests to make sure they don't close on their own.
- Reject toys that have rigid edges that can cut.
- Don't buy baby walkers. They discourage children from learning to walk, and they cause tens of thousands of injuries each year by allowing children to roll down stairs, out of doors and into harmful objects.

Indonesian receives human rights award

WASHINGTON (AP) — An Indonesian lawyer received the 1993 Robert F. Kennedy Human Rights Award on Thursday for his work defending the rights of the inhabitants of remote rain forests of New Guinea.

Bambang Widjojanto, 33, joined previous recipients in celebrating the 10th anniversary of the awards, given each year to people who risk death threats, harassment and torture while challenging violations of human rights.

"Bambang Widjojanto is the heir of Robert Kennedy," Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., said during the award ceremony, held in the same room Robert Kennedy announced his candidacy for president 25 years ago.

"If my brother were here today, he would see himself in this year's recipient of the Robert Kennedy Human Rights Award."

Documents show plan for unit of assassins

WASHINGTON (AP) — Days after taking office in 1961, the Kennedy administration asked the CIA to develop a "standby capability" for carrying out assassinations of foreign leaders, according to newly declassified documents.

At the time, the Kennedy administration had inherited a plan to kill Cuban President Fidel Castro and, according to the documents, the White House apparently was interested in an all-purpose assassinations unit for dealing with adversaries elsewhere.

But the documents offer no evidence that the so-called Executive Action Capability was ever used beyond the various efforts to kill Castro.

Former President Reagan issued an executive order early in his administration prohibiting U.S. officials from engaging in assassinations of foreign leaders or promoting such activities.

The disclosure about the Kennedy administration's plan is outlined in a 1967 report by the CIA inspector general, J.S. Earman, which was released by the agency as part of a new program to allow greater access to CIA files.

Much of the report covers the various ways the CIA sought to assassinate Castro during the 1960's. These efforts were reviewed in considerable detail by a Senate committee in 1975, which concluded there were eight such attempts on Castro's life. Castro has claimed there were 25.

Some of the schemes sought to enlist underworld figures to carry out the plots while others were aimed principally at causing Castro embarrassment rather than killing him.

There were proposals to discredit him by contaminating the air of the radio studio where he broadcast his speeches, using a spray that produces reactions similar to that of LSD.

Another called for having Castro smoke a chemically-treated cigar shortly before a major speech so he would "make a public spectacle of himself."

The plan to establish a general standby assassination capability was described to Earman by William Harvey, a top aide to Richard Bissell, then CIA director of plans.

"Early in the Kennedy administration, Bissell called him (Harvey) in to discuss what Harvey refers to as an Executive Action Capability; i.e., a general standby capability to carry out assassinations when required," the report says.

Harvey's notes quote Bissell as saying, "The White House has twice urged me to create such a capability. Eventually Bissell placed Harvey in charge of the effort, which came to be known as ZRRFILE."

Harvey also was put in charge of the plot to kill Castro, and "he ran it as one aspect of ZRRFILE," the report says.

It also indicates that ZRRFILE was never a serious operation because Harvey "soon came to think of the Castro operation and ZRRFILE as being synonymous."

Earman said it was difficult to ascertain the facts of these clandestine activities. Documentation was virtually nonexistent because of secrecy requirements, and his informants had to rely on their memories when questioned about them years later.

The 133 pages of documents underscore the importance which Kennedy gave to the Cuba problem in his early months in office. That concern was highlighted less than 100 days after the inauguration when Kennedy approved the disastrous CIA-sponsored invasion of Cuba at the Bay of Pigs.

FDA moves to regulate medical devices earlier

WASHINGTON (AP) — Seeking to prevent more than 50 deaths a year, the Food and Drug Administration wants to start regulating medical devices including heart valves and pacemakers while they are still in the design stage.

The agency proposed Thursday to make medical device manufacturers follow quality standards during the design process as well as on the actual production line.

"The public must have confidence that the medical devices used to treat them are properly designed," FDA Commissioner David A. Kessler said.

The move follows an agency study that blamed design flaws for almost half the problems that force manufacturers to recall defective products.

Some flaws have been particularly lethal.

Some 350 Bjork-Shiley heart valves have fractured, and two-thirds of those patients died.

Some 82,000 patients worldwide received the valve before it was recalled in 1986. Some underwent replacement surgery; others live with the uncertainty of whether their valve will have a catastrophic failure.

Several babies have been electrocuted in monitors designed to prevent sudden infant death syndrome because people mistakenly plugged the monitors into wall sockets. The plugs had to be redesigned not to fit into electric outlets.

Three elderly patients perished in a fire at Matmonides Medical Center in Brooklyn, N.Y., last Sept. 1 that local authorities blamed on a faulty oxygen respirator. It is still under investigation.

The agency, which will publish its proposed rule in the Federal Register on Tuesday, estimated it would cost $40 billion-a-year, industry $84.5 million a year, but prevent 53 deaths and 1,150 serious injuries annually.

The FDA said it will also seek to mesh some of its standards with those the European Community adopted this year.

James S. Benson, senior vice president of the Health Industry Manufacturers Association, said the attempt to align U.S. regulations with international standards "is a good thing for everyone."

Scientists debate over what to do with last smallpox cultures

WASHINGTON (AP) — The last known laboratory cultures of smallpox are to be destroyed on the final day of 1993 in scientific history's first deliberate extinction of a biological species.

But some scientists are urging a reprieve. The issue is debated in the journal Science. Researchers from the United States, Russia and the United Kingdom say that the surviving smallpox cultures could be of great value to science and that saving them for at least 10 more years of study would not endanger humanity.

They say further study of smallpox could point to a cure for AIDS.

But others argue the smallpox specimens represent a potential biological warfare weapon for terrorists. They also say that the complete genetic pattern of smallpox is already known and that little of scientific importance would be lost if the cultures were destroyed.

"There are now millions of unvaccinated persons worldwide who might suffer terrible consequences if the virulent virus were to escape from the laboratory," the researchers said.

Smallpox, one of the great killers in history, was officially eradicated outside the laboratory in 1980, but both the United States and the Soviet Union preserved small batches in isolation.

The two nations agreed in 1990 to destroy the last specimens on Dec. 31, the first time that's ever been done.

Five scientists, led by Dr. Wolfgang Joklik of Duke University, are urging the cultures be preserved so that researchers can learn how a pox-like virus attacks the body. Techniques are only now being developed, the group says, to advance the fundamental understanding of the disease process.

"Who is to say that knowledge of the mode of action of some smallpox virus-encoded factor...may not point the way to solving the problem of HIV (the AIDS virus) pathogenesis?" the scientists say.

"Even though the world has been declared free of smallpox, it would be foolhardy to destroy the last evidence we have of the virus when we are just beginning to understand it," Joklik said.

Scientists from six countries, led by Dr. Brian W. J. Mahy of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in Atlanta, counter that noninfectious clones of smallpox have been created and that these give science all of the needed reference and research information about the disease.

Keeping the virus specimens alive, they say, would "represent a potential military hazard from any terrorist group that succeeded in gaining access to the virus."

Living virus specimens also pose the risk of an accidental spread of the disease, they said.

The group led by Mahy admitted that killing the specimens would not guarantee that there is not another source of the virus somewhere in the world.

Pampered platoons: Tents offer more comforts

At top, Army Spec. Consuelo Edwards checks the temperature of Spec. Frederick Hayes in a medical tent that is part of a 550-man tent city, shown below, undergoing testing outside the outskirts of Fort Bragg, N.C. The new tents come equipped with more modern conveniences, including flush toilets, air conditioning, telephones and a bank machine.

FORT BRAGG, N.C. (AP) — The image of soldiers shaving with hot water from a Jeep radiator, warming C rations in boiling coffee and trudging to makeshift showers and latrines — all that is about to change.

The Army's new tent cities will provide battle-weary soldiers with all sorts of creature comforts: hotter showers, regular toilets, satellite television, telephones, air-conditioning. Even a bank machine.

True, there's still dirt on the floor of the vinyl-coated tents, but nobody's complaining.

"It's quite nice ... more civilized," Spec. Kelyn Brown, 24, of Columbia, S.C., said as he withdrew cash from the portable teller machine next to the portable post exchange store.

The new digs were developed thanks to some interservice rivalry: The Army noticed during Desert Storm that the Air Force had much better field living conditions.

Dubbed Force Provider in Army-speak, the 550-bed compound is getting its first field test on the outskirts of Fort Bragg this month.

It was designed to be set up 10 or 15 miles from the front, as a restful haven for soldiers getting a break from the action.

The tent cities won't end Spartan conditions on battle lines, where soldiers often catch a little sleep anywhere they can.

"This is designed to bring battle-weary soldiers off the line for five days ... all the while they're with their unit," said Maj. Jim Hinnant, a spokesman for the 18th Airborne Corps. "They keep their battle focus."

Army Chief of Staff Gordon R. Sullivan will be here today to formally dedicate the $5.5 million tent city.

Five more are planned, Hinnant said. The compounds can be broken down into 36 modules for shipment aboard planes or ships. They also could be used as temporary shelter for civilians after disasters.

The cash machine communicates with a bank computer by satellite dish. Next door is the recreation tent. Soldiers relaxed in front of a television playing a movie while other played cards or pingpong. Another got a haircut. Others lifted weights.

Two 41-inch television sets and VCRs are part of the package. So are basketball hoops and volleyball nets.

Sgt. Clinton Murphy, 25, of Leesburg, Ga., helped himself to grilled ham sandwiches and a piece of chocolate cake in a buffet of baked chicken, hamburgers and hot dogs. Such luxuries were rare in Saudi Arabia during Desert Storm. In the new tent city, fresh food would be shipped in to give soldiers a break from prepared rations.

"When we were out there ... we were at the very end of the supply chain," Murphy said. "We walked two miles to phones and the PX, and they were crowded. This is mobile."

Salvagers win most of loot

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — Most of the $21 million treasure from a ship that sank in 1857 was given Thursday to the salvagers, who spent $30 million to find it. The judge making the award said he wished it was more.

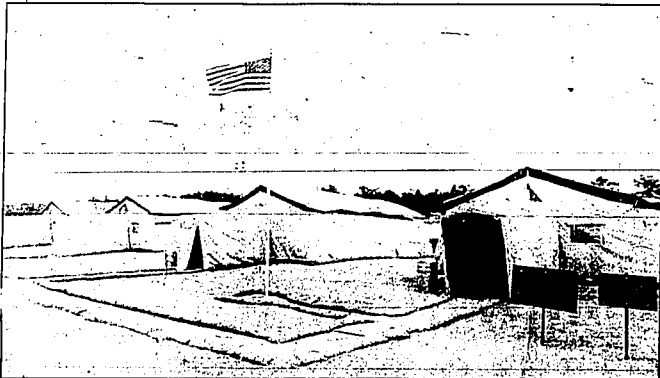

"What a pity it did not amount to a billion dollars so that a proper award could have been given," U.S. District Judge Richard B. Kellam wrote in a decision giving 90 percent of the gold to the Columbus-America Discovery Group.

The billion value of the gold found aboard the SS Central America is about $21 million, Kellam said.

In 1857, the Central America sank during a hurricane off the South Carolina coast. Of the padded steamer's 578 passengers, 153 survived.

Many of the passengers were California prospectors en route to New York with gold to head off a banking crisis. About $1.2 million in gold aboard the vessel was insured.

In 1987, the Ohio-based Columbus-America Discovery Group, an investment syndicate, began an expedition that found the shipwreck and began salvage operations.

Cold takes its toll on Bosnians

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — A month before the official start of winter, frigid weather already is taking its toll among Bosnia's most vulnerable.

Even as leaders of the warring factions signed an accord in Geneva promising to let U.N. aid convoys pass unhindered, the news from Bosnia, where nearly 3 million people are at risk this winter, was bleak.

U.N. officials said five patients died this week at an unheated mental hospital near Sarajevo, and others were wandering naked.

Shots were fired at a U.N. aid convoy en route to two other mental hospitals in the war zone.

One of Sarajevo's two main hospitals prepared to discharge about 100 patients and move 150 others to underground corridors warmed by wood stoves because the buildings cannot be heated.

A British-based medical relief group said it was halting crucial surgery for Sarajevo because patients were too cold and weak to withstand operations.

Winter has already gripped Bosnia, said Chief Thornberry, the U.N.'s chief civil affairs officer for former Yugoslavia. "Everywhere we go, the people are hungry and need help. But, everywhere we go, the men with guns are preventing that help being brought to them. I think it is a kind of madness."

"We are now facing an impossible situation in Bosnia-Herzegovina, with an almost total strangulation of all humanitarian and logistic movement," he said in Zagreb, Croatia.

The deaths of the five mental patients were reported by U.N. military observers who reached a hospital at Pazaric, about 12 miles west of Sarajevo.

Ray Wilkinson, the U.N. relief spokesman in Sarajevo, said the hospital has no heat, electricity or running water for its 389 surviving patients.

Pazaric is controlled by the Muslim-led Bosnian government, but relief convoys must pass Serb territory to reach it. They often have been blocked by Serb women demanding release of Serb war prisoners.

In Sarajevo, where temperatures hovered around freezing Thursday, officials at the unheated state hospital said they would move 150 patients into basement corridors and shut down much of the rest of the four-building complex because of gas and electricity shortages.

Patients not preparing for or recovering from surgery would be discharged, said Dr. Bakir Nakas, the director.

This unidentified member of the brotherhood samples the new ruby-red Beaujolais wine Thursday.

Dwindling sales take edge off wine party

PARIS (AP) — The annual Beaujolais-Nouveau party began Thursday with wine bottles uncorking around the world.

But dwindling sales and scoffs from connoisseurs have soured the fest's aftertaste.

Beaujolais parties from Paris to Tokyo still christen the wine's arrival on the third Thursday of every November. Yet few seem to know what to make of this year's fete.

"Everyone knows it is not a premium wine," said Erika Marcoux, who owns Mermoz Caves, a wine store in Paris where tasting crowds gathered.

"But it has its function," she said. "It is a wine for pleasure, for the table, for many people, for every day."

After booming along with the world economy at the end of the 1980s, volume sales and prices have plummeted the last couple of years, part of an industry-wide trend rooted in the global recession.

Beaujolais-Nouveau sales fell 30 percent in Japan last year and are expected to decline at a similar pace in 1993. They climbed in Germany and the United States in 1992, helped along by prices falling or leveling off.

The cherry-red wine sparks ritual commentary every year by connoisseurs and party-goers. Experts found the 1993 version trim and vivacious, with a dominant flavor of fresh grape underlined by a bouquet of red fruit such as strawberry and currant.

A bottle of Beaujolais goes for 26 francs — $4.40 — in Paris this year. Prices multiply after overseas transport, though. A bottle flown to Tokyo, for example, goes for the equivalent of $24.

"The quality is better than last year or the year before, but the price has stayed down because of the recession," Ms. Marcoux said.

Ukraine fulfills pledge to ratify nuclear arms treaty

KIEV, Ukraine (AP) — Ukraine's parliament defiantly set tough conditions Thursday that could delay the dismantling of its nuclear arsenal for years and slow international disarmament.

While lawmakers adopted the START 1 nuclear arms reduction treaty, they voted to retain a large portion of the weapons at least until Ukraine receives financial compensation and international guarantees for its security.

The more radical START 2, which calls for Russia and the United States to cut their nuclear arsenals by two-thirds, does not go into effect until START 1 is approved by all parties. Ukraine said all its conditions must be met before it implements START 1.

After two hours of debate in closed session, Ukrainian lawmakers voted 254-9 to approve the Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty, with the new conditions.

Russia and the United States had pressured Ukraine to ratify the 1991 agreement. Under START 1 and its protocols, Russia would become the sole owner of the nuclear arsenal of the former Soviet Union. Belarus and Kazakhstan, the other two former Soviet states holding atomic arms, already approved the pact.

The vote came a month after Secretary of State Warren Christopher traveled to Kiev in an effort to persuade officials to adhere to Ukraine's promises to become a nonnuclear state.

"We were forced to accept this document because of the unconstructive position of our partners in the agreement," said Ukraine's foreign minister, Anatoly Zlenko.

Radicals demand feminist writer's head

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — Several thousand Muslim radicals marched Thursday to demand the arrest and execution of a woman author critical of Islamic fundamentalism.

Taslima Nasreen, 31, has received death threats for her novel "Lajla" ("Shame"), which condemns Muslim mobs that attacked Hindus in Bangladesh to avenge the destruction of an ancient mosque in neighboring India.

The government banned the book in July, saying it could spread communal unrest in predominantly Islamic Bangladesh.

Moutana Azizul Haq, a religious leader, told 4,000 people in Dhaka on Thursday that Prime Minister Khaleda Zia's government should be unseated if Nasreen is not arrested and hanged.

Haq urged authorities to destroy all Nasreen's novels, which he claimed were offensive to millions of Muslims.

27 die, 30 hurt in prison riot

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Rival inmates battled each other with makeshift knives, metal bars and rocks Thursday at a prison in eastern El Salvador, and 27 prisoners were killed and 30 injured, authorities said.

Jailers fired shots in the air in an attempt to break up the melee and foiled some prisoners' attempts to escape, officials said.

The fighting began at 2 a.m. and ended about five hours later when guards reimposed calm, said the warden of the San Francisco Goiera prison, speaking by telephone from the penitentiary 100 miles east of San Salvador.

Gen. Mohamed Farrah Aidid speaks in public for the first time in more than five months at a Thursday demonstration organized by his political party, the United Somali Congress.

Warlord Aidid emerges from hiding to a hero's welcome

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — Fresh from forcing a U.N. retreat on an order for his arrest, Gen. Mohamed Farrah Aidid emerged Thursday for a jubilant greeting from 4,000 shouting, dancing and drumming supporters.

Militiamen with rocket-propelled grenades and automatic rifles guarded him when his van drove into a marketplace for his faction's weekly "peace" rally. Crowds pressed around the van, women danced to the sound of drums and people beat the sand with their hands.

The celebration came two days after the U.N. Security Council lifted an arrest warrant for Aidid that had put a $25,000 reward on his head. It was issued in June after militiamen of his clan faction were blamed for attacks that killed 24 Pakistani soldiers.

The search for Aidid in his southern Mogadishu stronghold had effectively stopped after a fierce battle in early October killed 18 American soldiers and more than 300 Somalis.

In ordering a new inquiry into attacks on U.N. peacekeepers, the Security Council also suggested Tuesday that 35 of Aidid's men would be released soon. The vote recognized that a political solution required the participation of Aidid and his Somali National Alliance along with other factions.

"He obviously has a lot of power in Mogadishu," U.S. special envoy Robert Oakley told reporters after meeting with Aidid before the rally. "The United States realized we made a mistake getting involved. ... I'm glad to see the U.N. Security Council changed course."

Aidid, who leads one of the country's 15 major factions, is a powerful force mainly in southern Mogadishu and parts of central Somalia.

At the rally, three men played electric drums and guitars as Aidid addressed the crowd in his first public appearance in more than five months.

"All Somalis must understand wartime is over. Without outside interference, all Somali factions can solve their problems among themselves," he said.

A pop singer, Halima Khalif, led chants of "Aidid, Aidid!" and "Gul, gull!" (victory, victory).

In a sign of growing U.S. popularity, Oakley's convoy was cheered when Aidid militiamen escorted it through the crowd a few minutes before the clan leader arrived.

Aidid's faction had praised President Clinton for reining in the search for Aidid and deciding to pull out the 16,000 U.S. military personnel by March 31. But questions about relations arose after faction leaders warned against the resumption of American military patrols announced earlier this month.

"I did not hear any threats, implicit or explicit. I think the suspicion has dropped," Oakley told reporters after his meeting with Aidid.

Mistrust of the United Nations remains strong in Aidid's faction, which has accused U.N. officials of ignoring it in political talks. Aidid has boycotted U.N.-sponsored local ruling councils being set up as a first step in rebuilding a governmental structure wrecked by Somalia's civil war.

Vote benefits Idaho, gives cover to 2 congressmen

The House victory for the North American Free Trade Agreement is a win-win outcome for Idaho and its representatives. Idaho will reap the benefits of expanded trade opportunities, and Congressmen Mike Crapo and Larry LaRocco will have the political cover of having voted "no."

NAFTA's long-term effects on America probably will be neither as grand as supporters have predicted nor as devastating as opponents have warned.

In politics, however, reality is often less important than image - and for NAFTA opponents the treaty's image as a mess of international potage (for which America is selling its birthright) will persist long after the debate ends.

NAFTA is the latest in a line of Great Satans for a certain category of Americans - those who have distrusted all things international since William Jennings Bryan cursed the gold standard in the 1890s.

For them, NAFTA will join an eternal pantheon of demons that already includes the United Nations, the Internal Revenue Service, the Federal Reserve, the Panama Canal treaty, and the dreaded Trilateral Commission.

Folk of this mindset have long memories. Most NAFTA supporters can forgive a "no" vote; it is, after all, one of many issues on which a politician must be judged. But the true-believer opponents will carry to their graves a grudge against congressmen who they think double-crossed America.

LaRocco and Crapo had differing reasons for opposing the treaty. LaRocco, a Democrat representing Idaho's more unionized north end, sided with labor leaders and Democratic-voting union members, who believe the treaty will cost union jobs.

We think LaRocco and the unions will be proven happily wrong. But give LaRocco this much: His vote reflects his loyalty to a key constituency, and he said so. If he was a tool of big labor, at least he was open about it.

Crapo's reasoning is more complicated. His issue was "sovereignty." This kind of talk verges perilously close to the true-believer crowd, but Crapo is a smart and sensible guy. If he says he's worried about NAFTA's effects on environmental regulations and water rights, he's worth listening to.

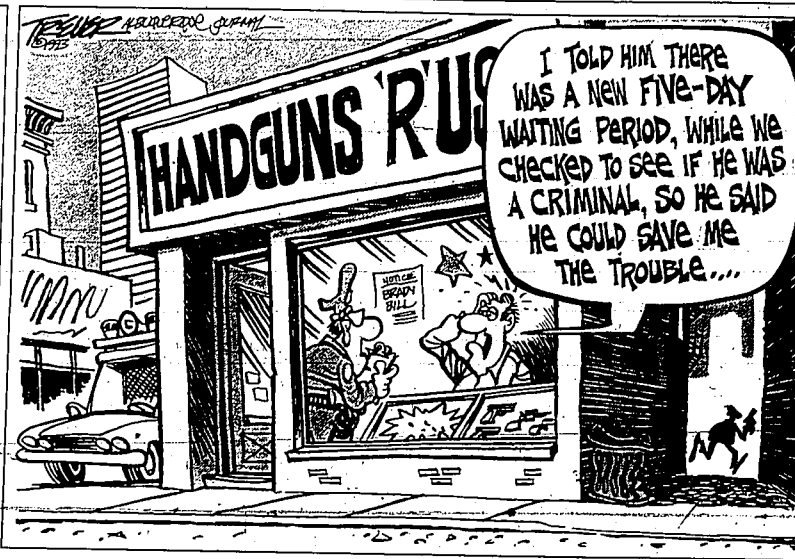

Unfortunately, Crapo has done an inadequate job of communicating those concerns - leaving skeptics to wonder whether those issues are merely a front. Did his vote, like LaRocco's, simply reflect reluctance to offend constituents?

We hope Crapo will offer a more detailed, public explanation of his vote in the next few days.

We also hope that when NAFTA comes to a Senate vote, Idaho's Larry Craig and Dirk Kempthorne will take a broad view of NAFTA's potential economic benefits.

NAFTA offers two benefits to Idaho: an expanded (and expanding) outlet for our agricultural goods, and the security of seeing our nation's southern neighbor grow into a more affluent, more stable international partner.

Fortunately for Idaho, those benefits won't be reserved for states whose congressmen voted "yes."

Earth Tribe is not satanic

Earth Tribe is a religious anti-defamation, anti-discrimination and human rights organization that will not stand idly by in the wake of such atrocity as perpetrated in the Rev. Baker's letter.

First and foremost, wiccans do not believe in the devil-god, Satan, and therefore cannot be described as satanists.

Robert S. Ellwood of the School of Religion at the University of Southern California had this to say about neo-pagans and wiccans: "Any ritual to distinguish between satanists and neo-pagans is irresponsible and essentially dishonest thinking, based on prejudice against certain types of religious activity rather than sincere investigation and commitment to truth. It should give rise to the horrors of the witch hunts of old once again. It must be shunned - like the devil."

Earth Tribe endorses the Earth-Religion Anti-Abuse Resolution 1, that reads as follows:

"We, the undersigned, as adherents of pagan or neo-pagan earth religions, including wicca or neo-pagan witchcraft, practice a variety of positive, life-affirming faiths that are dedicated to healing, both of ourselves and of the earth. As such, we do not advocate or condone any acts that victimize others, including those prescribed by law. As one of most widely accepted precepts is the Wiccan Rede's injunction to 'harm none,' we absolutely condemn the practices of child abuse, sexual abuse and any other form of abuse that does harm to the bodies, minds or spirits of individuals. We offer prayers, therapy and support for the healing of the victims of such abuses. We recognize and revere the divinity of nature in our mother the earth, and we conduct rites of worship in a manner that is ethical, compassionate and constitutionally protected. We neither acknowledge nor worship the Christian (or Jewish and Muslim) devil, Satan, who is not in our pantheons. We will not tolerate slander or libel against our churches, clergy or congregations, and we are prepared to defend our civil rights with such legal action as we deem necessary and appropriate."

We do peace through the unity of humankind is the goal of Earth Tribe. Can this ever happen so long as there is such a reign of intolerance and disrespect for others' ways? Each and every one of us, here in America, has the right to worship as we wish. Rev. Tim Baker, you have that right. Please extend the courtesy to others who may not believe like you do, but who do have the right to believe and worship as they see fit.

Agency hurts more than it helps

Fish and Game doesn't need to protect big game animals from hunters. Hunters need to protect big game animals from the Fish and Game. The department can't seem to make up its mind why the harvest of big game animals has fallen so dramatically this year, blaming the drought one minute and winter

The Times-News welcomes letters from readers on subjects of public interest. To make sure your letter is published promptly, here are a few guidelines to remember:

Letters should include the writer's signature, mailing address and telephone number. Letters considered libelous, obscene or in bad taste will be rejected, and The Times-News reserves the right to edit all letters.

kill the next. Well, if anyone thinks that Mother Nature was the only one doing the killing, we can sell them a bridge. We hunt primarily in Unit 39, west of Featherville, and certainly had our eyes opened this year.

Would anyone be interested in knowing that (1) local residents in that area took up collections and started feeding the elk this last winter when the elk started dying because Fish and Game wanted to wait for just "one more snow" or (2) an off-duty Fish and Game officer stated that feeding the elk was not the answer to the problem or (3) when they were feeding the elk, several large, mature bulls suddenly disappeared from the herd with nothing but a tranquilizer cartridge case being found or (4) in areas which are closed to everyone except those people feeding elk that Fish and Game officers have been seen going into that area and bringing out antlers of winter killed (2) bulls?

Who gets the money when the antlers are sold, Fish and Game or the individual officer? According to one Featherville resident, "if the general public knew how badly Fish and Game handled things, people would want to 'impeach' every Fish and Game officer they possibly could and start all over."

It's too bad that Idaho hunters won't get together and form some type of hunter coalition to keep better tabs on how Fish and Game operates. We believe that monies obtained from big game tag sales and supposedly earmarked for feeding programs are probably used to pay the phone bills in that area when Fish and Game calls hunters to ask how they did and what they saw. After all, aren't surveys more important than winter-feeding programs?

Fish and Game then turns around, ignores what the hunter goes out in the field and sees the mess that exists and treats him like a minus 10 IQ idiot. Perhaps the elk that were traded for turkeys or sent down to Texas for brucellosis testing should have stayed in Idaho.

Growth not something to avoid

In reference to your editorial "Grieve for Montana," I ask why should we? Perhaps I misinterpret the meaning of the editorial, but it seems as though you're against any progress in the region if it means letting in outsiders. Wake up, Idaho! The outsiders now arriving did not contribute to the contamination of the Snake River. They aren't responsible for the draining of the aquifers.

And the police in Twin Falls appear to be as effective at deterring crime as they are in Los Angeles. If you have no growth, you'll never have any problems to solve. You'll also soon be below the national standard with respect to earning capacity. Which means the poverty level will increase and with it the rate of crime.

Unless you find some legal means of blocking the entrance of newcomers, you'll have to learn to live with them. In doing so, you're going to have to learn to address your energies toward real problems, not waste them creating inflammatory editorials.

Taxes fund questionable policies

When they started passing condoms out in school, I didn't speak up because it didn't affect me.

When they started giving free hypodermics to high school teachers, I didn't speak up because it didn't affect me.

When they counseled teen-age girls to have abortions and keep it a secret from their parents, I didn't speak up because it didn't affect me.

When they started teaching children that the homosexual lifestyle is a good and glorious alternative, I didn't speak up because it didn't affect me.

When they took God out of our schools and replaced him with the god-of-this-world, "if it feels good... do it," I didn't speak up because it didn't affect me.

When they told me it was my tax dollars that will pay for all of the above, there was no one left to speak up for me.

From the Wall Street Journal, Nov. 15, under "Asides," page A12, titled "Clinton the Tax-Cutter."

"President Clinton has decided it's a good idea to cut income taxes - in Japan. Earlier this month, he sent a letter to Prime Minister Morihiro Hosokawa urging Japan deepen its proposed income tax cut to $56 billion and delay consumption tax increases for three years. Last week, Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen made his own pitch for tax cuts in Tokyo: 'I believe that cutting the income tax, putting money into consumers' pockets where they can buy products and, frankly, raise their standard of living is appropriate.' Too bad the administration can't get interested in giving Americans the same break."

It appears that President Clinton, Secretary Bentsen and company are desirous of Japan having a strong economy, but not the United States. Why?

U.S. must turn to traditional values to defeat ballooning illegitimacy rate Passion is a prerequisite for driving the discussion of some subjects past boundaries set by political prudence. President Clinton's passionate philippic in a black church in Memphis last Saturday demonstrated that, regarding inner-city violence, the range of the discussable is expanding, but we still are a far cry from candor.

Clinton, a government man, instinctively believes that the underclass, which he says might better be called the outer class, principally lacks what governments can provide - services, work. His instinct is reinforced by reading sociologist William Julius Wilson's analysis of how, in Clinton's words, the inner cities "have crumbled as work has disappeared."

That "as" is an artful equivocation. To a significant extent, work, and willing workers, were driven from the inner city by multiplying pathologies not caused by scarcity of work. And millions of Asian and other immigrants have recently traveled not just beyond neighborhoods but across oceans in search of work and found it in American cities. Clearly there is a novelty of inner resources on the part of many persons whose desperate conditions derive from various kinds of destructive behavior.

Clinton knows this. He told the Memphis congregation that there are changes that government can make "from the outside in" - more police, job training, and so on - but "there's some changes that we're going to have to make from the inside out, or the others won't matter."

Martin Luther King Jr., he says, did not fight for the freedom of children to have children and the fathers of the children walk away from them. "He returned to 'the breakdown of the family,' the need for 'coherent families,' the fact that there is chaos 'where there are no families.'"

Yes, but Pat Moynihan moved the discussion further 28 years ago when he wrote: "A community that allows a large number of young men to grow up in broken families, dominated by women, never acquiring any stable relationship to male authority, never acquiring any set of rational expectations about the future - that community asks for and gets chaos."

That community gets what we have got, what the socialist genius Charles Murray calls an inner city culture of "Lord of the Flies" writ large, the values of unsocialized male adolescents made norms - physical violence, immediate gratification and predatory sex.

Thirteen days before Clinton spoke, Murray spoke via The Wall Street Journal's editorial page. His thesis is as clear as his prescription is stern. Bringing children to the world when one is neither emotionally nor financially prepared for parenthood is a grievous wrong. When it occurs, "the child deserves society's support. The parent does not."

George F. Will

Throughout history a single woman with a small child has not been a viable economic entity. To prevent this, societies have channeled elemental forces of sexuality between embankments of rewards and penalties to buttress marriage. But in just 30 years the embankments have crumbled.

Government now subsidizes such behavior. It should, Murray says, end all economic support for single mothers. Marriage should be the sole legal institution through which parental rights and responsibilities are defined and exercised.

This, he thinks, would force young women who should not be mothers to seek the support of more mature adults and would help to regenerate the deterring stigma of illegitimacy.

Lift all restrictions on intermarital adoptions, Murray urges, and restore the traditional legal principle that placing a child for adoption means irrevocably relinquishing all legal rights to the child. For children not adopted the government should spend lavishly on orphanages. "I am not," Murray says, "recommending Dickensian barnacles. In 1993 we know a lot about how to provide a warm, nurturing environment for children, and getting rid of the welfare system frees up lots of money to do it."

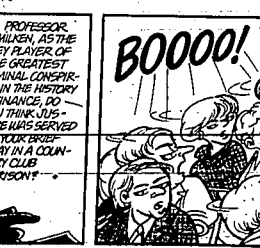

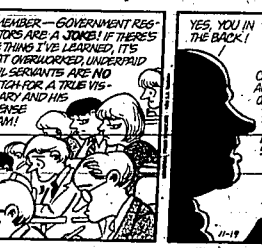

Democracy, he says, depends on virtues which depend on socialization of children in the matrix of care and resources fostered by marriage. This is no longer a "black issue."

The title of Murray's journal essay was "The Coming White Underclass." The clock is ticking. The rising illegitimacy rate - the white rate is now just 4 points behind what the black rate was in 1965 when Moynihan sounded the alarm about the crisis of the black family may make America unrecognizable before political institutions recognize the necessity of measures as bold - as boldly traditional - as Murray recommends.

Andrus blames 'stupid' administration for fish demise

BOISE (AP) — Idaho Gov. Cecil Andrus accused the Clinton administration Thursday of being stupid and irresponsible for leaving key federal jobs in the hands of Republican appointees he blames for the demise of Northwest salmon runs.

"You've got the same thieves in control," Andrus told the Save Our Wild Salmon Coalition in Boise. "And it's my party that's doing it."

The interior secretary under former President Jimmy Carter also complained that Democratic governors in Oregon and Washington have sidestepped the struggle to revive the threatened and endangered runs by refusing to back his demand for modification of Bonneville Power Administration's Lower Snake River dams.

While Andrus has suggested drawing down the reservoirs behind the dams to speed up flows for migrating fish, some of his environmental allies have called for completely removing them.

"The frustration that I have felt is that we can't get any movement out of the other states to join with us in this coalition to get the attention of the federal agencies," he said.

Andrus blasted President Clinton for retaining Randy Hardy as head of the BPA, the region's power generator, and promoting Rollie Schmitt from Northwest regional director to national director of the National Marine Fisheries Service, the agency charged with rebuilding stocks of marine species declared threatened or endangered.

"It's absolutely stupid from a political standpoint, absolutely irresponsible from a resource standpoint," Andrus said. "What's Rollie done except screw up the protection? ... There is still no sense of urgency on the part of BPA."

The governor accused BPA of being the major roadblock to modifying dam operations, and he has blasted Schmitt for refusing to recognize that the overwhelming reason for the loss of salmon is the dam system.

Andrus discounted the proposed salmon recovery because it refused to embrace dam modification. He said the scientists who came up with it would only recognize salmon if it is on the menu of a fine restaurant.

When the National Marine Fisheries Service earlier this year refused to recognize that the dams seriously jeopardized even the attempt to halt further deterioration of the depleted runs, Andrus said there was no alternative but to take the salmon's case to a federal judge.

"We shouldn't be in the courtroom, but where else do you go?" Andrus said. "Randy Hardy, Rollie Schmitt, yeah, they've got friends — House Speaker Tom Foley, Congressman Norm Dicks, Senator Mark Hatfield. Those are pretty big friends. Who do the fish have? Who's representing the fish?"

"We obviously do not have a national commitment so we have to go to the courtroom to make them recognize that those eight jumps of concrete do pose some jeopardy," he said of the dams.

Andrus told the environmental activists that the next year, his last before retiring as governor and the most vocal elected spokesman for salmon survival, is critical. He said they must put enough pressure on downstream political leaders and federal officials to finally force real action in time to stop the extinction of the fish.

"It's a race against time," he said.

Pro-choice groups offer reward to nab arsonist

BOISE (AP) — Two national pro-choice groups are offering a $100,000 reward for information on an arson fire that ravaged a Boise clinic where abortions are performed.

Boise police hope the reward produces new leads in the 6-month-old fire, which caused $60,000 in damage to Women's Health Care Inc.

"Any time you can promote a reward system within the community, you are more apt to get somebody to come forward," Detective Bob Banta said.

The case remains open, but no arrests have been made. Clinic staff blame anti-abortion forces for the fire.

"I think they did the best they could with the leads they had," office manager Marsha Bittiker said of the investigation. "But we joined this reward because we know money talks."

Women's Health Care is not the only clinic to benefit from the reward fund, created by the National Abortion Federation and the Planned Parenthood Federation of America.

Since June 1, more than a dozen other clinics where abortions are performed have been hit by arsonists or vandals. Clinics in California, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Texas, Florida, Indiana, Wisconsin, Kansas and Ohio have been damaged.

The same $100,000 reward is offered in those cases.

The federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms is investigating whether the Boise fire is linked to any of the out-of-state cases. Banta said he had not heard of any link.

Public retirees may get pension boost soon

BOISE (AP) — Thanks to healthy gains by the $2.6 billion Public Employee Retirement System fund, more than 18,000 Idaho retirees could get adjustments in their pensions.

Gerald Rudd, chairman of the Public Employees Retirement Board, said it will recommend increasing pension benefits 2.8 percent. There also will be an additional increase for people who retired on or before 1981 to help keep them up with inflation.

"We realize that some retirees' incomes have not kept pace with inflation," Rudd said. "Our objective is to provide them with a full cost of living adjustment and to help restore their purchasing power to the same level as when they retired."

Karen Steffen of Milliman and Robertson, Inc., consulting agency for the fund, said as an example, an employee might have retired in 1979 with a $1,000 per month pension. With past increases, that member now is receiving $1,700 per month.

Due to inflation, in today's dollars, that amount has only 80 percent of the purchasing power it had at the time of retirement. With an increase to 90 percent of purchasing power, that member now will receive $1,950 per month, she said.

Steffen said most states restore pensions to 70 or 80 percent. The benefit improvement will add $7.4 million to the $111.5 million paid out annually to the 18,263 receiving pension benefits.

The benefit increase will be presented to the 1994 Legislature. Lawmakers have until March 1 to act, or the increase automatically goes into effect. The Legislature hasn't modified any of the board's recommended cost of living adjustments since it received authority to do so in 1986.

The board said the current average annual retirement benefit of $6,570 will climb to $6,754 with the adjustment. If a person retired in 1974, the new average annual benefit will be $7,598, in 1980, $7,328 and in 1981, $6,909.

Inspection reveals corroded waste cans

POCATELLO (AP) — Continuing inspection of spent nuclear fuel storage at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory found another 14 storage containers "significantly corroded," but state oversight officials were not notified of the situation for two days.

The corroded storage containers were located in Building 603, a 42-year-old facility where serious corrosion problems were uncovered in 1992. The material in storage — was from experimental reactors operated in the 1950s.

Because of the earlier discovery, Gov. Cecil Andrus, in his campaign to focus attention on the waste disposal problem, has forced INEL to agree to empty the building over the next seven years.

"We are a little concerned that we weren't notified earlier," Smith said.

INEL spokesman Nick Nichols said that after the problem was uncovered toward the end of the week through underwater video inspection of the storage pool, scientists took time to study the video to determine how extensive the corrosion was.

Then, according to Nichols called existing rules, the Westinghouse scientists notified federal officials before informing the state.

"We followed the procedure we've always used, and there was no attempt to conceal this from anyone," Nichols said.

...the situation poses no immediate safety hazard.

— William Johnson of Westinghouse Idaho Nuclear Co.

"We have conducted a thorough safety analysis of the situation, and while the cans are corroded, the situation poses no immediate safety hazard," said William Johnson, executive vice president of Westinghouse Idaho Nuclear Co. Westinghouse operates the fuel reprocessing and storage facilities for the federal government.

But Terry Smith, a spokesman for the state INEL Oversight program, said the problem was discovered on Nov. 10 but was not reported to the state until Nov. 16.

As the agreement between Andrus and the Department of Energy, which has been adopted by U.S. District Judge Edward Lodge as part of his environmental review order for INEL, requires movement of the first 189 spent fuel containers from the old building by the end of next September.

Utah police knew of family slayings 3 years before arrest

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Three years before Theresa Jimmie Cross was arrested and charged in the California slayings of two of her daughters, Utah investigators provided details on the crimes to Sacramento police, authorities say.

Woods Cross Police Chief Paul Howard said Thursday that on Sept. 5, 1990, he sent a letter to Sacramento police calling an interview his detective had with a Utah woman who claimed to have witnessed the killings.

The witness, identified as Theresa Knorr

Groves of Sandy, said her mother and brother killed a sister and half-sister nearly a decade ago in the Sacramento area. Groves has said she told police and an attorney about the slayings over the years, without result.

But information she provided recently to Placer County, Calif., lawmen finally resulted in charges and the solution to a pair of grisly "Jane Doe" homicides that have long baffled investigators.

Placer County is just east of Sacramento County.

Howard said that along with his certified letter, he also sent a partial tape recording of Groves' interview to Sacramento.

"They didn't send us a written response, but they did call us and tell us they couldn't locate any bodies that matched (the allegations)," Howard said.

"I feel we did everything that we could. It was quite a bizarre story, but we followed through and provided the California authorities with all the details," he added.

Lt. Joe Binloe, head of Sacramento's homicide division, said he had no knowledge of the letter, but confirmed an effort was under way to determine its fate.

"I wasn't here in homicide at the time, and no one here who recalls it," he said.

However, Johnnie Smith, an investigator with the Placer County Sheriff's Department, said he was sure the letter had been received by Sacramento police.

"We are working with the authorities there trying to find out what happened to the letter," Smith said.

Cross, 47, was taken into custody at a Salt Lake City home Nov. 10 by Smith and another Placer County detective. She had been living in Utah since 1987 or 1988, and worked caring for the elderly and disabled. She is fighting extradition.

Cross and her two sons, arrested earlier, were accused in the burning death of 17-year-old Susan Knorr in July 1984 and the slaying a year later of her half-sister, Sheila Gay Sanders, 20, who was beaten and locked in a tiny closet until she starved.

Susan Knorr's body was found near Squaw Valley. Sanders' remains were stuffed in a box and left near Truckee,

Homeless man detained for TB treatment

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Another homeless man has been hospitalized under court order to undergo evaluation for tuberculosis.

William J. Pierce, 37, was taken into custody Tuesday at the Utah Medical Assistance Program in Salt Lake City. A 7th District judge signed a temporary order allowing officials to detain him at a hospital under guard until he can be evaluated.

Officials sought three detention orders against homeless men in October. One man was never found. Two others were found and treated and one of them has been released.

Pierce told health workers last week that he had been treated for pulmonary tuberculosis in Arizona and was feeling ill again. He initially agreed to go to a clinic for a test.

Pierce returned to the clinic, but vowed to refuse medication and said he would not allow himself to be detained for treatment, said nurse practitioner Frank Robinson.

"He walked up to me, stated that he thought he had active TB and felt very powerful and intentionally blew in my face for less than 12 inches away," Robinson said in court documents.

"He then indicated he had done the same thing to a child on the bus on the way back to the clinic."

Pierce left the clinic, but was taken into custody when he returned Tuesday. It is not yet known whether he has active, contagious TB.

"I analogize this case to the person who says 'I have a gun' out at the airport," said Assistant Attorney General Douglas Springmeyer. "You don't make those kinds of idle threats."

Most homeless TB patients agree to treatment, said Health Department spokesman Ross Martin. Quarantine orders are sought only when patients refuse treatment and may be putting the public at risk, he said.

Officials are seeking $350,000 from the Legislature to build or remodel a facility to isolate TB patients. Another $550,000 will be requested for staff, security and medication.

Utah Dems push tax reduction for middle class

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — House Democrats are pushing for the well-to-do while giving tax breaks to the middle class.

"The $90 million shift is needed to make up for years of inflation piling an increasing tax burden on middle-income Utahns, they said."

"We believe the middle-class taxpayer in Utah has taken it in the shorts in the last 10 years," Rep. Dave Jones, state Democratic Party chairman, said Wednesday.

A recent Utah Tax Commission study found an average family of four making $30,000 to $35,000 pays about 9 percent of its income in state, sales, property, income and gas taxes.

The drops to a little more than 7 percent for those with $100,000 incomes, and to 6.2 percent for the family of four with annual earnings above $250,000.

City sues owner of illegal tire pile

SPOKANE (AP) — An illegal tire dump is a fire hazard and attracts mosquitoes, the city says in a lawsuit against the pile's owner.

John F. Lindsay failed to act on a city request to clean up the discarded tire dump, which is operating without a required Spokane County Health District permit, assistant city attorney Mike Piccolo said Wednesday.

The city filed the lawsuit on Monday, saying it served Lindsay with a nuisance complaint in October but got no reply within the 20-day deadline.

There was no answer at Lindsay's telephone number Thursday.

Jerome man injured in accident improves

TWIN FALLS — The condition of a man critically injured in a Nov. 8 accident in Jerome has improved from critical to serious.

Odlon Trejo, 31, of Jerome, remained in critical condition until this week.

But a nursing supervisor at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center said Thursday that Trejo's condition had been upgraded to serious, although he remains in the intensive-care unit.

Another man injured in the accident, the Rev. Baldwin Camin, also of Jerome, initially had been listed in critical condition. But he improved and Camin has been released from the hospital, the nursing supervisor said.

Nov. 8, Trejo ran a stop sign at the intersection of Buchanan Street and 10th Avenue East and hit a car driven by Camin, according to the Idaho State Police.

Two women riding with Trejo were released earlier from the St. Benedict's Family Medical Center and Magic Valley Regional Medical Center.

Pair of high school students arrested for pot possession

TWIN FALLS — Two O'Leary Junior High School students were caught Wednesday possessing marijuana, both were arrested, one for selling the weed.

The two 14-year-olds were arrested Wednesday shortly before 1 p.m. at the school, according to a Twin Falls police report.

The school principal had been alerted that the boys had marijuana and questioned them, the report stated. After the two admitted possessing the pot, the principal called the police, the report states.

One youth said he found the marijuana Monday in a building at the school and took it home. Tuesday, he sold the other youth $1 worth of marijuana, according to the report.

The youths also were arrested for possession of tobacco.

Hearing delayed for woman charged with 4-H theft

TWIN FALLS — The preliminary hearing set today for a woman charged with grand theft and forgery from the Twin Falls County 4-H program has been continued.

Teresa Maria Jensen has been charged with six counts of grand theft and four counts of forgery from September 1991 through October 1992. Investigators allege Jensen stole $2,285 from the 4-H coffers during that time.

Jensen worked with the program through the Twin Falls County Extension Office, but was fired when charges were filed earlier this month. She had been suspended, with pay, since investigation began last May.

No new date for the hearing has been scheduled.

City Council appoints Kral to library trustee board

TWIN FALLS — The City Council appointed Kara Kral earlier this week to a four-year term to the Twin Falls Public Library Board of Trustees.

Kral has served as a trustee since October 1992, when she replaced Joan Craig on the board. Kral's term will extend from Jan. 1, 1994 through Dec. 31, 1998.

The other library trustees are Councilman Tom Condie, Judy Pollow, Ken High, Tom Robertson and Connie Pepper.

Air Force jets may scream over Rogerson

By N.S. Nokkentved
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Plans for state-owned bombing and electronic combat ranges in southwestern Owyhee County include a low-level flight route over southern Twin Falls and Cassia counties.

The Military Training Route would be an eight-mile-wide swath from 100 feet above the ground to 12,000 feet.

The training route would pass over or near Rogerson, Salmon Falls Reservoir, the South Hills and the City of Rocks National Monument.

It would connect military airspace in Owyhee County with the Utah Test and Training Range, which may be closed.

The area is heavily used by recreationists from Twin Falls and the Magic Valley and includes two popular hunting units, according to comments from the Idaho Department of Fish and Game, obtained by The Times-News through the Freedom of Information Act.

The Fish and Game comments were in response to an unclassified version of a draft environmental impact statement on the state's proposal to establish bombing and electronic combat ranges in Owyhee County.

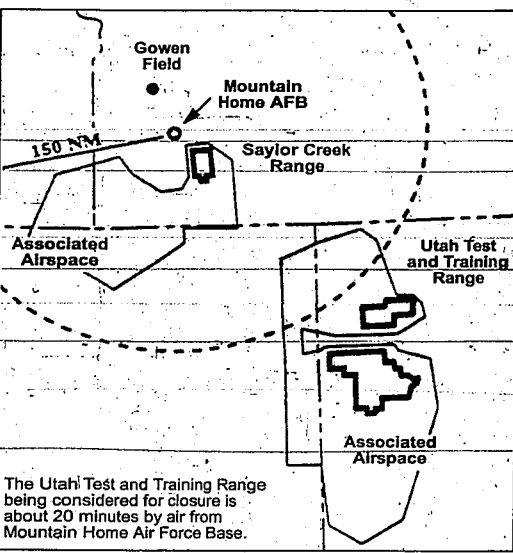

Some of the department's concerns were changed in the draft environmental impact statement released by the Air Force earlier this month.

The range would include about 25,000 acres of practice bomb target areas north and south of the Owyhee River's east fork. It also would include 32 electronic emitter sites scattered across 2 million to 3 million acres of southern Owyhee County.

These scattered sites would form an electronic combat range.

The range was proposed by Gov. Cecil Andrus as a way of ensuring the Air Force would keep the Mountain Home base open. It would be made up of state land acquired through trades with the Bureau of Land Management.

Air Force aims to close 1 range, spend millions on 2nd

By N.S. Nokkentved
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — While the Air Force wants to spend millions of dollars to build a bombing and electronic combat range in southern Idaho, it proposes closing a Utah range because of budget cuts.

According to a recent article in the Ogden Standard-Examiner, military spending cuts may force the Air Force to put the Utah Test and Training Range in mothballs.

The range is about 20 air minutes from the Mountain Home Air Force Base and has been identified as an alternative to building a new range in Idaho.

The Air Force, however, in an environmental analysis of the proposed Idaho range, says the Utah range is too far away, and planes would have to refuel on their way.

But aerial refueling is part of the training and would be conducted by planes training at the Idaho range, the Air Force has said.

The Air Force this month released an environmental impact statement on a proposed state-owned range in southwestern Owyhee County.

The range would include about 25,000 acres of practice-bomb target areas north and south of the Owyhee River's east fork. It also would include 32 electronic emitter sites scattered across 2 million to 3 million acres of southern Owyhee County.

These scattered sites would form an electronic combat range.

The range was proposed by Gov. Cecil Andrus as a way of ensuring the Air Force would keep the Mountain Home base open.

Though the range would be made up of state land acquired through trades with the Bureau of Land Management, the Air Force already has asked Congress for nearly $7 million for the range.

The Air Force has not yet completed its environmental analysis process and doesn't expect to make a final decision on the proposed range until next year.

Work center escapee back behind bars

By Phil Sahn
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — An escapee from the Community Work Center is in jail and probably headed back to state prison after leading law officers on a wild chase early Thursday.

Kristen Lee Bayliss, 19, of Pocatello, left the center in south Twin Falls between 1:15 and 2 a.m. Thursday.

He allegedly stole a Cadillac from a car dealership and led officers on a chase reaching speeds of 95 mph before being caught near Buhl, according to Twin Falls police reports and 5th-District Court affidavits.

Twin Falls police Sgt. Jim Massey caught Bayliss shortly before 4 a.m. about three miles east of Buhl.

Bayliss was last seen at 1:15 a.m. Thursday at the work center, Superintendent Larry Hauber said. Center employees noticed he was missing at a 2 a.m. head count and notified the police.

Massey, according to a police report, spotted Bayliss at the intersection of Addison Avenue West and Rose Street North driving a Cadillac Seville that had no license plates. He followed him, noting that Bayliss was driving erratically, and tamed on his overhead lights.

Bayliss eventually pulled over to the side of the road, but as Massey approached his car, Bayliss sped off, according to Massey's affidavit.

Massey followed Bayliss through Filer and toward Buhl, joined in the pursuit by officers from the Twin Falls Police Department, the Twin Falls County Sheriff's Department and the Filer Police Department.

Bayliss finally pulled off the road near Buhl, got out of the Cadillac and lay on the ground, Massey wrote in his affidavit.

The Cadillac, according to the affidavit, was stolen from D&G Motors, 131 Locust St. Bayliss admitted breaking into the dealership office to get the keys to the Cadillac, the affidavit states.

The car was valued at $3,000. Bayliss had been in the work center just two weeks, Hauber said. He had been imprisoned for first-degree burglary and forgery, and then sent to the work-release center on Washington Street South.

He was arraigned Thursday on charges of eluding peace officers, grand theft, burglary and escape. Bayliss was booked into Twin Falls County Jail Thursday morning, but was later transferred to Cassia County's jail.

The Department of Correction, which runs the work center, contracts with Cassia County to house prisoners, Hauber said.

If convicted of escape, Bayliss will go back to prison, Hauber said. Bayliss had several months to serve at the work center.

Ranchers can still save local boards

By Alice Sherman Hanscop
Times-News writer

SUN VALLEY — If ranchers can prove that local grazing advisory boards are effective and aren't dominated by the wealthiest ranchers, the Interior Department might decide not to scrap them, an assistant interior secretary said Thursday.

Bob Armstrong, second in command at the U.S. Interior Department, spoke to the Idaho Cattle Association's "Cowboy Luncheon" during the group's annual convention.

A rancher told Armstrong that the cattle industry is opposed to scrapping the grazing advisory boards, a proposal included in the Clinton administration's range-reform package. The boards allow ranchers to talk to employees from the Bureau of Land Management about problems they encounter as their livestock graze on public lands.

But Armstrong said he had heard complaints from ranchers about the local boards.

"A lot of people came forward and said the advisory board is composed of the richest rancher in town and a few others, and after a while they got tired of coming to the meetings, he said.

Other ranchers had told him the boards were "old-fashioned and didn't work" or complained that there were more BLM people on the boards than ranchers, Armstrong said.

If the industry can prove those claims are not true, Armstrong said he will attempt to keep the advisory boards alive.

Armstrong heard plenty of comments from the ranchers after he invited them to share their opinions.

Audience members told Armstrong they hoped their concerns would be taken back to Washington, where work continues on a range-reform package that would increase regulations and increase fees ranchers pay to graze livestock on public land.

One rancher indicated said the standardized regulations proposed in the

Legislators lukewarm toward school suit mediation offer

The Associated Press

BOISE — Legislative leaders didn't reject a proposal to mediate settlement of a lawsuit over public school funding at a meeting Thursday, but didn't show much enthusiasm for it.

The state faces a lawsuit from more than 40 school districts over school funding. Trial isn't scheduled until next year. But Robert Huntley, the former Supreme Court justice and attorney for some of the districts, offered to mediate a settlement.

The Legislative Council issued a statement Thursday after a sometimes acrimonious meeting endorsing the idea of mediating instead of going to trial.

But it said to have any meaning, all school districts in the state, not just those involved in the lawsuit, should take part.

And Senate President Pro Tem Jerry Twigg, R-Blackfoot, said the best way for the school districts to mediate would be to drop the lawsuit and let "the usual legislative process" decide what's proper for school funding.

All of the school districts need to be involved, including those who are not in the litigation, because they all will ultimately be affected by the outcome of these negotiations, and the participation by all the districts in the negotiations is essential," the statement said.

Huntley's mediation offer suggested the lawmakers set aside a week during the next session to come up with a school funding level.

Twigg said that won't work. It simply isn't possible to get the Legislature to drop everything for a week or longer to work on school funding.

In any event, he said, the Legislative Council, made up of legislative leaders, can't simply skip the usual committee and hearing process and decide school funding. "We can't mediate a settlement. This Legislature has a responsibility to do the job we're supposed to do," Twigg said.

The session got tangled up in politics for much of the afternoon.

Attorney General Larry EchoHawk, who is running for the Democratic nomination for governor, won approval for his plan to remove himself from the case. "As a candidate for governor, I have to speak on school funding and policy, my personal beliefs," he said, which could make it hard for him to lead the Legislature's legal defense against the school district lawsuits.

An opponent for the nomination, Sen. John Peavey, D-Carey, serves on the Legislative Council.

EchoHawk said he will build "a Chinese wall" staying out of direction or discussion of the lawsuit.

That eventually was approved, although Twigg complained that when the Legislature decided to have the attorney general's office defend against the lawsuit, it was with the understanding that EchoHawk would lead the case. "Does it damage our case with you pulling out?" asked Rep. Robert Gaddes, R-Preston. EchoHawk said his deputies handling the case were doing a good job.

In a partisan vote, the Legislative Council gave Twigg and House Speaker Michael

Simpson, R-Blackfoot, authority to decide if they wanted to hire outside lawyers for the case. All committee Republicans voted for the motion, and all Democrats voted against, except Rep. Al Johnson, D-Pocatello, who voted with the GOP.

The parties also continued wrangling over a countersuit filed by the Legislature. It says that if districts are short of money, it's because of their own decisions on how to allocate resources.

The district judge hearing the case last week allowed Senate Democrats to withdraw from the countersuit.

Simpson called it a "ridiculous political move" on the part of the Senate Democrats and Sen. Marguerite McLaughlin, D-Orofino, said not all Senate Democrats agreed with the idea.

She was born July 19, 1925, in Nyssa, Ore., the daughter of Ervin Henry and Ellen Canfield Gardner. She attended schools in Caldwell. She married Joe A. Gomez on June 15, 1943, in Ontario, Ore. They moved to Paul in 1956, where they lived for 26 years. They then moved to Magic where she had resided for the past 12 years. She worked for Dr. Dan Slavin and Idaho First National Bank, both in Rupert.

She enjoyed fishing, embroidery, sewing, crafts and played the organ. She was a charter member of the West Magic Recreation Club at Magic Reservoir.

She is survived by her husband, Joanne Gomez; one daughter, Joanne Maxfield of Paul; four sons, John of Filer and two in Jerome. Ron of Buhl and Tony of American Falls; two sisters, Joan Strange of Caldwell, Helen Cosmat of Modesto, Calif., Alice Hamlin of Washington and Laura Stevens of Ontario, Ore.; one brother, Ervin Gardner of Caldwell; 14 grandchildren; and five great-grandchildren. She was preceded in death by her parents and one sister.

A memorial service will be held at 2 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 20, 1993, at the Paul Congregational Church, with Pastor Viclan of Jerome. Burial arrangements are under the direction of the Hansen Mortuary in Rupert.

Joint committee wants another study of property tax exemptions

BOISE (AP) — A joint legislative committee, struggling to focus its debate on property tax relief, has ordered yet another review of the hundreds of millions of dollars in exemptions from the various state taxes.

Thursday's directive to the tax-writing committees of both the House and Senate to conduct the review once the legislative session opens in January came despite a warning from House tax-writing chairman Steve Antone that such a review would probably produce little.

The Rupert Republican reminded his colleagues that the last time he participated in such a review and recommendations were made, to eliminate some of the costly exemptions, all the interests benefiting from the tax breaks lined up and every recommendation was rejected by the tax committee.

But Sen. Cecil Ingram, R-Boise, and others said the review was necessary to show the public that "no interest is receiving unwarranted special treatment."

"The public has the impression that we're holding something back from them, that we're cutting deals," Ingram said. "If this committee does nothing else but dispel that belief, it will have been a success."

The Andrus administration's Division of Financial Management has estimated that in the current next budget year that begins July 1, the state will lose over $520 million to exemptions from the sales tax. The next calendar year will see $36 million lost to exemptions from the sales tax, the division analysis showed.

"The more we look at the system, the better off we'll be," said Democratic

Rep. Wally Wright of Boise

Rep. Wally Wright of Boise. There is no estimate of how much revenue is lost to the exemptions from the property tax.

It was the joint committee's first working session after conducting 35 hours of public hearings over 10 days throughout the state on taxes with an emphasis of property tax relief.

But the members appeared to be all but overwhelmed by the myriad of proposals for providing relief, and their list of priorities for dealing with the gnawing question of how to accommodate any reduction in property taxes, which cities, counties and schools districts rely heavily on.

While each members will make up a list of his priorities for dealing with the question over the next week, the panel seemed ready to focus on developing some method to check escalating property values that have caused tax bills to skyrocket. It also discussed the possibility of imposing some kind of fee on newcomers to the state to help offset the cost of the additional services and programs that population influx forces on government.

"We're getting to the point where people moving into our state, causing pressure on our schools, causing pressure on our services, causing pressure on our valuations, these people should be paying more to buy into what we have here," Sen. Stan Hawkins, R-Uloom. The committee was put together in a bid to find the longest viable relief package that would blunt support for the new initiative to cap property taxes at 1 percent of market value. Although voters overwhelmingly rejected that concept last November, some lawmakers overall are of the belief in the nation-wide cap that would hamstring local governments will be approved.

But Republican House Speaker Michael Simpson of Blackfoot has maintained that the state tax system overall is one of the fairest in the nation with one of the least burdensome property tax components and possibly no significant changes should be made.

Lack of good horses ends Ely race event

ELY, Nev. (AP) — After more than half a century, Pony Express Days, Nevada's longest and most colorful horse racing event, is drawing up its reins here forever.

"I'm just can't get enough horses to put on a quality racing event," Chairman Jack Smith said, while getting fewer and fewer from Utah every year.

Southern Utah is the source of most of the horses that run in the Ely races and Smith said potential entrants want more purse money to make the drive to eastern Nevada.

But the Ely Elks Lodge Pony Express Days Committee has lost more than $17,000 in the past five years, including $9,000 this year.

Legislative leaders endorse auditor amendment

BOISE (AP) — The council of Idaho legislative leaders has endorsed a proposed constitutional amendment formally giving its staff the responsibility for auditing state agencies and designating the state auditor as a controller.

The proposal, unanimously adopted on Thursday with the backing of Democratic Auditor J.D. Williams, must still win approval from two-thirds of the House and Senate before being submitted to voters next November.

Intended to end more than two decades of legal wrangling over the auditor's authority to conduct the financial reviews, the proposal was worked out between Williams and legislative experts after the federal government said it would no longer accept audits performed by an executive branch agency of another executive agency.

The legislative auditor has been conducting the reviews under an agreement with Williams and his predecessor that was worked out after the state Supreme Court ruled that the auditing function constitutionally belonged to the elected state auditor.

Meeting with the Legislative Council, which oversees legislative affairs when lawmakers' are not in session, Williams declined to say that the change would not increase the cost of his office and that of the legislative auditor.

Though it would be a state-owned range, it doesn't meet all of the state's own recommendations to reduce the range's effects on wildlife.

To reduce the effects of the range on wildlife in the remote Owyhee antelope habitat, according to the Fish and Game Commission have insisted on three-mile buffers between the range and wildlife habitat.

Two proposed target areas, however, are well within this buffer. Biologists are concerned about the sheep's effects on California bighorn sheep. The canyons are home to the country's largest herd of these animals.

Low-level flights, increased human activity in the area and improved hunter access all could affect the sheep population.

Fish and Game officials also are concerned about the effects on pronghorn antelope that rely on a portion of the northern part of the two-part bombing range.

The development of targets areas in the area would result in the loss of more than 8,500 acres of critical antelope habitat, according to the Fish and Game Commission.

The habitat would be lost to 150-foot wide firebreaks and changes in vegetation from periodic fires resulting from the use of flares and practice-bomb marker charges.

Biologists say the federal antelope will travel great distances to reach areas suitable for bearing their young. It is not known if fawning habitat can be replaced if destroyed.

"If the proposed action is implemented, there is an extremely high likelihood that a major portion of the entire estimated antelope population in Owyhee County may be lost" if the range is developed, the comments say.

Rediscovered video may bring mistrial

By Liz Wright
Times-News writer

RUPERT — The last-minute discovery of evidence in the trial of a Heyburn man charged with sexually attacking two girls, aged 12 and 16, may result in a mistrial.

A videotape — missing until Thursday — shows the younger girl telling a social worker of the occasions when Paul Joseph Pugsley forced her to have sex, county prosecutor Gary Newman said.

The revelation came late on the third day of Pugsley's trial.

Defense attorney Mark Ingram angrily called for a mistrial saying he did not have the full truth to present his case.

Pugsley, 34, faces three charges of lewd and lascivious conduct with a minor and one charge of rape. If convicted, he could serve a maximum sentence of life in prison.

The taped rape accounts are similar to what the girl told the jury, Newman said. The jury did not see the videotape.

The girl, now 13, told the jury Tuesday that Pugsley forced sex on her four times this year — on three separate occasions.

So far, Ingram has based Pugsley's defense on inconsistencies in the girl's stories. Ingram argued that they grew more specific by the time they reached court.

A Twin Falls pediatrician testified Wednesday that a rape exam performed of the girl did not show whether intercourse had taken place. But the prosecution won't need to prove that Pugsley had intercourse with the girl to gain a conviction on the three lewd-conduct charges.

Pugsley told the jury Thursday he did not have sex with the 12-year-old.

But only hours before jurors were to have begun deliberating his fate, the missing videotape was found at the Minidoka County Sheriff's Department, Newman said.

The tape was delivered to the court early Thursday afternoon. The jury was to have heard the attorneys' closing arguments at 2 p.m.

Newman said the social worker had turned the tape over to Captain Randall White as evidence. But White said he thought he didn't have the tape, she said.

Judge William Hurt said he will decide today whether to declare a mistrial.

Thursday Pugsley also denied raping a 16-year-old girl in May 1989.

The alleged victim, now 21, told the jury Tuesday that Pugsley had raped her and told her he'd kill her if she told anyone.

Panel seeks to expel gun-carrying student

NAMPA (AP) — A Nampa School District disciplinary committee has recommended a high school junior be expelled for the remainder of the year for bringing a gun to school.

Interim Superintendent Steve Youngblood, who declined to release the student's name, said the incident happened on Nov. 10. The gun was not discharged, he said, and no violence occurred.

Possession of a weapon at school automatically initiates a hearing before the disciplinary committee. The school board will make the final decision on the panel's recommendation in a closed hearing.

Alaska natives win gaming permit

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — Alaska natives at Klawock have obtained the state's first permit under federal Indian gaming laws, clearing the way for a wide range of gaming including a village casino.

Klawock Cooperative Association, a Tlingit group with about 500 members, said it wanted a gaming industry to lure tourists from the ferry-stop town of Ketchikan, 55 miles east.

Klawock is roughly 200 miles south of Juneau.

Approval came earlier this month from the National Indian Gaming Commission, which regulates gambling on dozens of reservations in the lower 48 states.

The decision involved a 3-acre block of land held in trust for local natives.

Federal law permits gambling operations by tribes on the trust lands. Klawock is among four Southeast towns unusual in Alaska because they hold trust lands.

The others are Angoon, Kake and Metlakatla.

Officials say the decision hinged in part on possession of trust lands, so that approval for Klawock does not open the door for widespread Indian gaming in Alaska.

Jeff Nickerson, Klawock mayor, said Wednesday that news of the approval was a surprise to him. He said the town was trying to develop tourism as an antidote to setbacks in the timber industry.

"I don't know whether it (gambling) would be good or not," he said. "I'm not going to make any comment until I see what the state does."

The Hickel administration, which has gone on record against gambling, said it has begun a review. Klawock's options include setting up card games, bingo and slot machines as well as casino gambling.

Legislators lukewarm toward school suit mediation offer

The Associated Press

BOISE — Legislative leaders didn't reject a proposal to mediate settlement of a lawsuit over public school funding at a meeting Thursday, but didn't show much enthusiasm for it.

The state faces a lawsuit from more than 40 school districts over school funding. Trial isn't scheduled until next year. But Robert Huntley, the former Supreme Court justice and attorney for some of the districts, offered to mediate a settlement.

The Legislative Council issued a statement late Thursday after a sometimes-acrimonious meeting endorsing the idea of mediating instead of going to trial.

But it said to have any meaning, all school districts in the state, not just those involved in the lawsuit, should take part.

And Senate President Fran Tem-Jerry Twigg, R-Blackfoot, said the best way for the school districts to mediate would be to drop the lawsuit and let "the usual legislative process" decide what's proper for school funding.

"One of the school districts need to be involved, including those who are not in litigation, because they all will ultimately be affected by the outcome of these negotiations and the participation by all the districts in the negotiations is essential," the statement said.

Handle's mediation offer suggested the lawmakers set aside a week during the next session to come up with a school funding level.

Twiggs said that won't work. It simply isn't possible to get the Legislature to drop everything for a week or longer to work on school funding.

In any event, he said, the Legislative Council, made up of legislative leaders, can't simply skip the usual committee and hearing process and decide school funding.

"We can't mediate a settlement. This Legislature has a responsibility to do the job we're supposed to do," Twiggs said.

The session got tangled up in politics for much of the afternoon.

Attorney General Larry EchoHawk, who is running for the Democratic nomination for governor, won approval for his plan to remove himself from the case. "As a candidate for governor, I have to speak on school funding and policy, my personal beliefs," he said, which could make it hard for him to lead the Legislature's legal defense against the school district lawsuits.

An argument for the nomination, Sen. John Peavey, D-Carey, serves on the Legislative Council.

EchoHawk said he will build "a Chinese wall" staying out of direction or discussion of the lawsuit.

That eventually was approved, although Twiggs complained that when the Legislature decided to have the attorney general's office defend against the lawsuit, it was with the understanding that EchoHawk would lead the case. "Does it damage our case with you pulling out?" asked Rep. Robert Geddes, R-Preston. EchoHawk said his deputies handling the case were doing a good job.

In a partisan vote, the Legislative Council gave Twiggs and House Speaker Michael

Simpson, R-Blackfoot, authority to decide if they wanted to hire outside-lawyers for the case. All committees Republican voted for the motion, and all Democrats voted against, except Rep. Al Johnson, D-Pocatello, who voted with the GOP.

The parties also continued wrangling over a countersuit filed by the Legislature. It says that if districts are short of money, it's because of their own decisions on how to allocate resources.

The district judge hearing the case last week allowed Senate Democrats to withdraw from the countersuit.

But a "ridiculous political move" on the part of the Senate Democrats and Sen. Marguerite McLaughlin, D-Orofino, said not all Senate Democrats agreed with the idea.

Joint committee wants another study of property tax exemptions

BOISE (AP) — A joint legislative committee, struggling to fix its definition on property tax relief, has ordered yet another review of the hundreds of millions of dollars in exemptions from the various state taxes.

Thursday's directive to the tax-writing committees of both the House and Senate to conduct the review came during a legislative session opens in January with a warning from House tax-writing chairman Steve Antone that such a review would probably produce little.

The Rupert Republican reminded his colleagues that the last time he participated in such a review and recommendations were made to eliminate some of the costly exemptions, all the interests benefiting from the tax breaks lined up and every recommendation was rejected by the tax committee.

But Sen. Cecil Ingram, R-Boise, and others said the review was necessary to show the public that no interest is receiving unwarranted special treatment.

The public has the impression they're holding something back from them, that we're cutting deals," Ingram said. "If this committee does nothing else but dispel that belief, it will have been a success."

The Andrus administration's Division of Financial Management has estimated that in the current next budget year that begins July 1, the state will lose over $520 million to exemptions from the sales tax. The next calendar year will see $86 million lost to exemptions from the sales tax, the division analysis showed.

"The more we look at the system, the better off we'll be," said Democrat

Rep. Wally Wright of Bayview.

There is no estimate of how much revenue is lost to the exemptions from the property taxes.

It was the joint committee's first working session after conducting 35 hours of public hearings over 10 days throughout the state on taxes with an emphasis of property tax relief.

But the members appeared to be all but overwhelmed by the myriad of proposals for providing relief, and their deliberations were hampered by the gnawing question of how to accommodate any reduction in property taxes, which cities, counties and schools districts rely heavily on.

While each member will make up a list of his priorities for dealing with the question over the next week, the panel seemed ready to focus on developing some method to check escalating property values that have caused tax bills to skyrocket. They also discussed the possibility of imposing some kind of fee on new home sales to help offset the cost of the additional services and programs that population influx forces on government.

"We're getting to the point where people moving into our state, causing pressure on our schools, causing pressure on our services, causing pressure on our valuations, these people should be paying more to buy into what we have here," Sen. Stan Hawkins; R-Ucon. The committee was put together in a bid to find some "cost-effective package" that would blunt support for the new initiative to cap property taxes at 1 percent of market value. Although voters overwhelmingly rejected that concept last November, some lawmakers are getting feverish about action the cap that would hamstring local governments will be approved.

But Republican House Speaker Michael Simpson of Blackfoot has maintained that the state tax system overall is one of the fairest in the nation with one of the least burdensome property tax components and possibly no significant changes should be made.

Lack of good horses ends Ely race event
ELY, Nev. (AP) — After more than half a century, Pony Express Days, Nevada's longest and most famous horse racing event, is drawing up its reins here for ever.

"We just can't get enough horses to put on a quality racing event," Chairman Jack Smith said. "We're getting fewer and fewer from Utah every year."

"Southern Utah is the source of most of the horses that run in the Ely races and Smith said potential entrants want more purse money to make the drive to eastern Nevada.

But the Ely Elks Lodge Pony Express Days Committee has lost more than $17,000 in the past five years, including $9,000 this year.

Legislative leaders endorse auditor amendment

BOISE (AP) — The council of Idaho legislative leaders has endorsed a proposed constitutional amendment formally giving its staff the responsibility for auditing state agencies and designating the state auditor as a controller.

The proposal, unanimously adopted on Thursday with the backing of Democratic Auditor J.D. Williams, must still win approval from two-thirds of the House and Senate before being submitted to voters next November.

Intended to end more than two decades of legal wrangling over the auditor's authority to conduct the financial review, the proposal was worked out between Williams and legislative expert after the fiscal year government said it would no longer accept audits performed by an executive branch agency of another executive agency.

The legislative auditor has been conducting the reviews under an agreement with Williams and his predecessor that was worked out after the state Supreme Court ruled that the auditing function constitutionally belonged to the elected state auditor.

Meeting with the Legislative Council, which oversees legislative affairs when lawmakers are not in session, Williams declined to say that the change would not increase the cost of his office and that of the legislative auditor.

— Though it would be a state-owned range, it doesn't meet all of the state's own recommendations to reduce the range's effects on wildlife.

To reduce the effects of the range on wildlife in the remote Owyhee County area, according to the Fish and Game Commission have insisted on three-mile buffers between the range and wildlife habitat.

Two proposed target areas, however, are well within this buffer. Biologists concerned about the range's effects of California bighorn sheep. The canyons are home to the country's largest herd of these animals.

Low-level flights, increased human activity in the area and improved hunter access all could affect the sheep population.

Fish and Game officials also are concerned about the effects on prophorn antelope that rely on a portion of the northern part of the two-part bombing range.

The development of targets areas in the area would result in the loss of more than 8,500 acres of critical antelope habitat, according to the Fish and Game Commission.

The habitat would be lost to 150-foot wide firebreaks and changes in vegetation from periodic fires resulting from the use of flares and practice bomb marker charges.

Biologists say that antelope will travel great distances to reach areas suitable for bearing their young. It is not known if fawning habitat can be replaced if destroyed.

"If the proposed action is implemented, even a slight likelihood that a major portion of the entire estimated antelope population in Owyhee County may be lost" if the range is developed, the comments say.

Rediscovered video may bring mistrial

By Liz Wright
Times-News writer

RUPERT - The last-minute discovery of evidence in the trial of a Heyburn man charged with sexually attacking two girls, aged 12 and 16, may result in a mistrial.

A videotape - missing until Thursday - shows the younger girl telling a social worker of the occasions when Paul Joseph Pugsley forced her to have sex, county prosecutor Gara Newman said.

The revelation came late on the third day of Pugsley's trial.

Defense attorney Mark Ingram angrily called for a mistrial saying he did not have the full truth to present his case.

Pugsley, 34, faces three charges of lewd and lascivious conduct with a minor and one charge of rape. If convicted, he could serve a maximum sentence of life in prison. The taped rape accounts are similar to what the girl told the jury, Newman said. The jury did not see the videotape.

The girl, now 13, told the jury Tuesday that Pugsley forced sex on her four times this year - on three separate occasions.

So far, Ingram has based Pugsley's defense on inconsistencies in the girl's stories. Ingram argued that they grew more specific by the time they reached court.

A Twin Falls pediatrician testified Wednesday that a rape exam performed of the girl did not show whether intercourse had taken place. But the prosecution won't need to prove that Pugsley had intercourse with the girl to gain a conviction on the three lewd-conduct charges.

Pugsley told the jury Thursday he did not have sex with the 12-year-old.

But only hours before jurors were to have begun deliberating his fate, the missing videotape was found at the Minidoka County Sheriff's Department, Newman said.

The tape was delivered to the court early Thursday afternoon. The jury was to have heard the attorneys' closing arguments at 2 p.m.

Newman said the social worker had turned the tape over to Captain Randall White as evidence. But White said he thought he didn't have the tape, she said.

Judge William Hart said he will decide today whether to declare a mistrial.

Thursday Pugsley also denied raping a 16-year-old girl in May 1989.

The alleged victim, now 21, told the jury Tuesday that Pugsley had raped her and told her he'd kill her if she told anyone.

Rescuing buoys

Alaska natives win gaming permit

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) - Alaska natives at Klawock have obtained the state's first permit under federal Indian gambling laws, clearing the way for a wide range of gaming including a village casino.

Klawock Cooperative Association, a Tiingit group with about 500 members, said it wanted a gaming industry to lure tourists from the ferry-stop town of Ketchikan, 55 miles east.

Klawock is roughly 200 miles south of Juneau.

Approval came earlier this month from the National Indian Gaming Commission, which regulates gambling on dozens of reservations in the lower 48 states.

The decision involved a 3-acre block of land held in trust for local natives.

Federal law permits gambling operations by tribes on the trust lands. Klawock is among four Southeast towns unusual in Alaska because they hold trust lands.

The others are Angoon, Kake and Metlakatla.

Officials say the decision hinged in part on possession of trust lands, so that approval for Klawock does not open the door for widespread Indian gaming in Alaska.

Jeff Nickerson, Klawock mayor, said Wednesday that news of the approval was a surprise to him. He said the town was trying to develop tourism as an antidote to setbacks in the timber industry.

"I don't know whether it (gambling) would be good or not," he said. "I'm not going to make any comment until I see what the state does."

The Hickel administration, which has gone on record against gambling, said it has begun a review. Klawock's options include setting up card games, bingo and slot machines as well as casino gambling.

Panel seeks to expel gun-carrying student

NAMPA (AP) - A Nampa School District disciplinary committee has recommended a high school junior be expelled for the remainder of the year for bringing a gun to school.

Interim Superintendent Steve Youngblood, who declined to release the student's name, said the incident happened on Nov. 10. The gun was not discharged, he said, and no violence occurred.

Possession of a weapon at school automatically initiates a hearing before the disciplinary committee. The school board will make the final decision on the panel's recommendation in a closed hearing.

IdahoWest Killer asks court to let him die

Bingham County jailer charged with stealing up to $17,000

BLACKFOOT (AP) — Sgt. Gerald Hansen, 46, Shelley, a Bingham County deputy in charge of the jail commissary, faces a court appearance Nov. 29 on a charge that he stole up to $17,000 in jail funds.

A grand theft charge was signed Tuesday against Hansen and he resigned the next day, Bingham County Commissioner Jule Arave said up to $17,000 is missing from money paid by inmates for purchases from the jail commissary.

The commissioner said Hansen has admitted taking the money and has agreed to make restitution. Officials said the money apparently was taken between Feb. 2 and Nov. 4.

A sheriff's office secretary said she learned that no deposits had been made of cash received by the commissary funds for several months.

In a news conference, Bingham County Prosecutor Tom Moss said Hansen has indicated he would cooperate in an investigation, Bingham County Sheriff Dayle Holm said he received by an audit which started Thursday. The Idaho Bureau of Investigation is expected to begin an independent investigation soon.

"It appears that in excess of $10,000 is missing, but we won't really know for sure how much until an audit is complete," Holm said.

BOISE (AP) — The defense attorney for condemned double killer Keith Eugene Wells asked the Idaho Supreme Court on Thursday to uphold the death sentence so Wells' execution can be expedited.

In an unprecedented presentation to the state's highest court, Public Defender Amil Myshin said Wells, 31, was resolute in his decision to drop all appeals and submit to death for the 1990 slayings of John Justus, 23, and Brandi Rains, 20, during a Boise tavern robbery.

"I have spoken to Mr. Wells at length, and it is his desire that the court affirm this sentence," Myshin said before a packed hearing room that included both Wells' family and the families of his victims.

"He's tired, he's finished suffering and he doesn't want to spend the rest of his life in a concrete cell," Myshin said. "He's cut the deal. We need to go forward and do this."

Justice Byron Johnson, who has taken the lead on the court in questioning the comparative fairness of the death penalty and other murder sentences in Idaho, seemed to assume the role of Wells' advocate from Myshin.

Johnson repeatedly asked both Myshin and state Solicitor General Lynn Thomas to explain why a death sentence was appropriate when the jury bypassed a verdict of premeditated murder for only felony murder and the sentencing judge ruled that there were not sufficient factors to determine that Wells intended to kill.

Chief Justice Charles McDevitt, who also seemed to question the state's support for executing Wells in light of past death penalty decisions, gave no indication when a ruling on the automatic sentence review would be issued.

But Myshin asked that it be expedited because "requiring Mr. Wells to wait for his execution is cruel and unusual punishment under both the state Constitution and the U.S. Constitution." Idaho has 21 convicted murderers on Death Row, some for over a decade. But the state, which has staged only nine executions since statehood, has not carried out a death sentence since 1957.

Under questioning by Johnson, Myshin agreed that the death penalty precluded execution for felony murder when there is no proof of intent.

But he pointed out to Johnson that while sentencing Judge Gerald Schroeder said there were not sufficient factors to determine Wells' intent, with intent Schroeder added the phrase, "that would be a reasonable interpretation."

Most importantly, however, Myshin said those kinds of issues were abandoned as potential reasons to void the death sentence when Wells dropped all his appeals and asked to be executed.

Johnson said he remained puzzled by the verdict. Schroeder's conviction and the fact that following Wells' arrest through Thursday's review hearing "There is no direct statement by the defendant that he is the perpetrator."

During the trial, Wells maintained the killings occurred during a drug transaction with people who have never been identified.

But Thomas, maintaining Schroeder's conclusion was incorrect, argued that there was "unmistakable evidence" that the defendant is the sole perpetrator of these crimes.

Golfer's goof finds Civil War monument

DENVER (AP) — Had his golf shot gone straight, George Kaub wouldn't have stumbled onto a Civil War monument that had been dumped with some junk.

On Wednesday, the restored monument was rededicated with a ceremony featuring a cannon salute and men dressed as Union soldiers.

"All the result of a lousy golf ball?" said Kaub, who found the monument last summer while looking through the rough at City Park Golf Course.

Kaub, 69, began a campaign to save the monument. He spent $8,000 to replace a missing brass sundial atop the waist-high stone and plaque.

The monument was first dedicated 65 years ago and displayed in a City Park rough area. It was moved when the Denver Zoo expanded.

Two years ago, the monument was ditched in the rough after workers cleaned out a shed.

"George, I'm told if you rotate your hips on your follow-through, your ball will be less likely to slice," Mayor Wellington Webb quipped at the ceremony. "Thank goodness your golf ball led us to today."

Karyl Myers and a growing cadre of sometime artisans turn Christmas into cash

By Denise Turner
Times-News writer

The list - C2

TWIN FALLS — Karyl Myers can take an old pair of jeans and craft it into a work of art — as in arts and crafts.

Myers began recycling denim when her two (now grown) children were little. She fashions the used fabric into backpacks, tote bags and quilts. Six years ago, when she was making the items for friends, she was encouraged to raise her sights.

"Everyone told me I should be selling," she said. "That's when my hobby turned into a second job."

Myers is part of a growing cadre of Magic Valley residents who turn spare time into cash at holiday-season bazaars. She's sold her wares at the Twin Falls Christmas Fantasy bazaar for four years in a row. "It's always a well-organized show," she said.

Myers, who works at the College of Southern Idaho Career Counseling Center, has also traveled to arts and crafts shows in Boise, McCall and Stanley — in her 1984 Subaru with a carrier on top.

"I look like a gypsy going to the shows," she said, with a laugh.

Her hand-crafted quilts, many of which are made on request, are a mix of denim blocks and blocks made from other colorful, sport-type materials. The quilts range in size from child-size lap robes to wraps for football games ("big enough for two people if they are friendly").

Each quilt contains Myers' signature. Please see BAZAARS/C2

Celebration could help keep kids' program afloat

By Steve Crump
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — What's a few dollars, more or less, to the United Way of Magic Valley?

Maybe Tessa Ann Fuller's homework. Or Steven Silva's end-of-semester bonus for good citizenship. Tessa, 10, and Steven, 11, are part of the after-school Twin Falls Salvation Army Homework Program, a 9-month-old effort to give kids something constructive to do after school.

The Salvation Army started the program in February, partly on the strength of a $40,000 allocation from the United Way.

"We have kids here from all over town and from every income level," program director Lorrie Davis said. "What they have in common is a need for someone to help after school."

What they get is a minimum of 20 minutes of enforced homework time, with help available if they need it. Then they get a to-ken good for a soft drink or a bottle of fruit juice, 20 minutes worth of video games and access to basketball and pool.

"This place is cool," Steven said Thursday. "I walk over here after school, and a lot of my friends come here too."

"I've been coming since it opened," Tessa said. "A lot of kids, I think, if they didn't have this, wouldn't do their homework."

"That's a definite need," said Capt. Roger Davis, Twin Falls Salvation Army director. "So many kids go home to an empty house — some don't even have a house to go home to — or hang out with their friends and sometimes get into trouble."

Lorrie Davis is the only full-time paid employee. She and handful of volunteers make sure kids do their homework, help them when they have questions, run hand-outs in arts and crafts, and then supervise them until it's time to go home at 5:30 p.m.

"We average 30 to 50 kids a day, and it's growing in steps," she said. "I'm sure there are a lot more kids who could benefit from this."

Each kid gets a card, which is punched at the end of the homework session. At the end of the semester, with bonus points for good citizenship or improved grades, the kids can go to a "store" and trade those holes for real merchandise.

"We get the merchandise from an organization called NAIER, which gets corporate

Event set Saturday

The Celebration of Caring, the United Way of Magic Valley's annual shopping-and-entertainment extravaganza, will be held Saturday from 5 to 9 p.m. in the Magic Valley Mall.

Coupon-books, good for discounts at mall merchants, are on sale for $10 at the mall from member agencies or at the United Way office. Muzzle Braun & The Boys will entertain, and Santa Claus will arrive at 6 p.m.

Proceeds from the coupon books and part of the sales from some mall merchants will go to the United Way campaign.

If you're interested in helping the after-school Twin Falls Salvation Army Homework Program directly, it needs adult volunteers to work with and supervise kids from 3:30 to 5:30 p.m. daily. The program also needs sporting equipment and video games.

Wood River Valley storyteller discourses as 'Oldest Man in Idaho' on state's trivia

By Michael Hofferber
Times-News correspondent

KETCHUM — The "Oldest Man in Idaho" is a 49-year-old carpenter, photographer and compulsive storyteller who lives in Ketchum, works in Hailey, and gives public performances wherever he finds a crowd interested in Idaho history.

Clark Hegler was born at Fargut State Park in northern Idaho, near the Oregon Trail in eastern Kansas, and made his way back to his home state by way of California and a few other places. Along the way he gathered material for Idaho history monologues that he's now begun to record and distribute on cassette.

"Most people know us for our potatoes," said Hegler as the "Oldest Man in Idaho." "When it comes to livestock, everyone thinks beef or maybe sheep. Well, the number one livestock in Idaho is trout. You oughta see cowboys sanddle up and try to round those critters up."

The "Oldest Man in Idaho" is a 105-year-old character Hegler portrays as he talks about Idaho's history. The man has no name and no history of his own. He exists only as a vehicle for Hegler's storytelling.

"He allows me to do a first-person monologue about what I describe as some of the dumb, crazy, goofy things that happened in this state," Hegler explained.

"I have a trivial mind. Anything trivial or off-the-beaten-path kind of information I glom on to. As a consequence, I've developed a tremendous working knowledge of the history of this state in a very fun aspect."

The Oldest Man in Idaho monologue was first performed 18 months ago for grade school kids in the Wood River Valley as part of a storytelling-hour-sponsored-by-the-College-of-Southern-Idaho. Since then, Hegler has taken the program to Oregon Trail celebrations

Clark Hegler told his first story as Idaho's oldest man, at 105, in the spring of 1992 to a group of grade-school children. Since then he has participated in Oregon Trail celebrations and campfire gatherings. He recently put some of his stories on a 60-minute cassette.

Kimberly artist combines sculpture, story-telling

By Denise Turner
Times-News writer

KIMBERLY - David LaMure's "The Child and the Loon" is message sculpture: The loon takes the child diving to new depths, just as everyone has life experiences that do the same.

Most of LaMure's work has a story behind it. As he prepares for his first Twin Falls exhibit, he is about to write the next chapter in his own story.

LaMure first became interested in clay when he was 12. He took a pottery class, and he was hooked. For years, he turned out traditional ceramic pieces in his spare time. Along the way, he earned a college degree in business management.

For eight years, LaMure worked as a guide on the Salmon River. That's when the New Mexico native decided to set up shop in Idaho.

Combining his love of the outdoors and his love of clay, he built a workshop in a shed outside a white frame farmhouse near Kimberly. Today, he lives in the house, with his wife and two young children, and works in the shop, creating everything from free-standing sculptures to hand-thrown drums to personalized masks.

"I sell a lot of pieces on consignment," said LaMure, who has work on display in New Mexico and California and at the Twin Falls-Sun Valley Regional Airport. "I help people create their own stories."

LaMure's porcelain-type masks of people's faces are made of colored clay. Models must work with casts on their faces for a maximum of five minutes to insure results that are intricate and lifelike.

Combining practicality and art, LaMure's functional clay drums are strung with deer or elk skins (only those which would otherwise have been discarded or wasted). His personalized drums contain a mask of the owner's face.

The symbolism is that we are always in the center of everything we see outside of ourselves," LaMure explained. "The drumbeat symbolizes the heartbeat, the first sound we hear inside the womb."

In addition to masks and drums, LaMure's current works in progress include several busts and a large pot, sitting on the wheel ready to spin.

Prices range from $100 to $1,200, depending on how many hours the work took to create. Some of LaMure's newer pieces will be more detailed - and more expensive.

LaMure is 30 now, and he's looking toward his artistic future. Someday, he hopes to have his own studio/art business. Meanwhile, he leads beadmaking workshops, using colored porcelain beads which can be fashioned into jewelry. He also leads experiential workshops for patients at the Walker Center.

"Addictions or stress can occur because people can't go into their right brains and dream," LaMure said. "They use drugs or alcohol or people in unhealthy ways instead."

LaMure, himself, spends a lot of time in his right brain. He's growing and releasing new boundaries in his art, he said, using his clay to create living shapes, colors, sounds and, of course, stories.

aged at elementary school. Kids, is run in conjunction with an evening program for junior high and high-school aged youngsters. On Tuesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights, the Salvation Army opens up its gym and game room and lets the older kids use it.

"It's a place to go," Lorrie Davis said. "If you're 16 and you don't have any money, it's an alternative to ending up at a party somewhere and getting into trouble."

Between five and 40 adolescents use the gym each night it's open, she said.

"We've even had some rival gang members show up on the same night," Lorrie Davis said. "This is neutral ground; they got along great."

Roger Davis said the Salvation Army started the youth program hoping it could raise the money to keep them open. Whether that happens or not depends in part on the United Way, which is more than $200,000 from its $275,000 goal with six weeks remaining in the campaign.

"There's nothing else like this in this community," he said. "This is something these kids need. I hope people understand that, for whatever reason, they're unhappy with the United Way nationally, the dollars they decide to give or not to give have an impact right here."

A shopper's guide to bazaars

The Times-News

Here's a list of bazaars scheduled for the 1993 holiday season.

The Fourth Annual Twin Falls Christmas Fantasy Bazaar is set for 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. today, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday and noon to 5 p.m. Sunday in the Common Area at the Blue Lakes Mall in Twin Falls.

The First Christian Church Harvest Bazaar is set for 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. today at the church, 601 Shoshone St. N. in Twin Falls. (Take the elevator from the entrance in the alley at the back of the church.) The bazaar will feature a country store, craft items, baked goods and a card shop. Lunch will be served from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m.

The Artisan's Holiday Show, sponsored by the Episcopal Church of the Ascension, is set for 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. today and 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday at the church, 210 Blue Lakes N. in Twin Falls. The juried show will feature 22 artisans showing such items as tapestry bags, blown glass, handmade silver jewelry, pottery, puppets, fleece outerwear, jade, watercolors, custom designed hats and shoes, dolls, woodcarvings and teddy bears. The country store will feature handmade crafts, homemade bread and goodies. The dining room will serve homemade soups and pies. There will also be a potato bar.

The Third Annual Home for the Holidays bazaar is set for 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. today and 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday at 1358 Burton Ave. in Burley. The show will feature pottery, jewelry, porcelain dolls, glass-eyes, Christmas gifts and Joe's Daughters wreaths. Those who would like may bring a canned food item to be donated to the homeless shelter.

The Hagerman Craftsman Christmas Open House is set for 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. today and Saturday and noon to 4 p.m. Sunday at Advance to Go Stained Glass Studio, Alley Cat Gifts & Collectibles, Classique Floral & Gift Shop, Rose Creek Winery, Snake River Pottery and Uniques Antiques. Featured items include tea, stained glass, pottery, lamps, wreaths, fine wine, Christmas floral arrangements, collectibles, antiques and decorations.

The Christmas Craft Bazaar and Annual PTO Dinner is set for 5:30 to 9:30 p.m. Saturday in the Bliss School cafeteria. A selection of gifts, crafts and baked goods will be sold. Cost for the dinner is $3 a person or $12 a family.

The 10th Annual Christmas Country Bazaar is set for 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Nov. 26 and 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Nov. 27 at the Knoll Community Grange on Highway 74. The bazaar will feature handmade gifts and Christmas decorations by local artists. Go south across the Old Towne (Singing) Bridge to City Water Tank. Then go right 4 1/2 miles west or 3 miles south of Curry Country Store, then 4 1/2 mile west.

St. Edward's School Parent Teacher Organization is sponsoring the Annual Holiday Craft Bazaar from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Nov. 26 and from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Nov. 27 at the Parish Hall, 206 Seventh Ave. E. in Twin Falls. A variety of handmade crafts, gift items, holiday decorations and baked goods will be sold. Snacks and lunch will also be sold.

The First Annual Northside Arts & Crafts Show is set for 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. Dec. 2 and 3 and 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. Dec. 4 at the Jerome Fairgrounds Messersmith Building. All crafts will be homemade. Bring cans of food to trade for door prize tickets.

The Wendell United Methodist Church Christmas Bazaar is set to begin at 9 a.m. Dec. 3. A dinner will be available from 11:30 a.m. to 7 p.m.

The Fourth Annual Holiday Happenings Artisan Show is set for 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Dec. 3 and 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Dec. 4 at the home of Jana Willis, 491 Park Terrace in Twin Falls. Magic Valley women have hand crafted the items.

The Quilted Goose bazaar is set for 5 to 9 p.m. Dec. 3 and 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Dec. 4 at 1430 Filer Ave. E. in Twin Falls. The bazaar will feature baked goods, original watercolors and hand made items including wreaths, ceramics and quilted items.

The St. Charles Catholic Church Christmas Boutique is set for 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Dec. 4 in the parish hall, 311 First Ave. E. in Hailey. The boutique will feature homemade crafts, gift items, white elephant items, food and drink and a visit from Santa Claus. Free transportation is available to seniors who need it. Advance notice is required. Call 788-9111.

St. Jerome's Catholic Church will hold its Annual Bazaar from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Dec. 4 at the church, 216 Second Ave. E. in Jerome. Food will be served throughout the day.

Christmas Bazaar will be held from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Dec. 4 at the Golden Years Senior Center on North Rail in Shoshone. The bazaar will feature Christmas crafts, quilts and a cooked food sale. Lunch will be available. Free coffee will be available.

The Morningside Bazaar will be held from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Dec. 4 at Morningside Elementary School in Twin Falls. The bazaar will feature ceramics, dolls, wreaths, magnets, woodcarvings and baked goods. Chili, breadsticks and beverages will be available for sale.

The Country Bumpkin Arts and Crafts Bazaar will be open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays through Dec. 19. Arts and crafts are being sold in an 80-year-old barn-four miles north of Curry Crossing between Twin Falls and Filer.

Today, she works on a 30-year old Singer. When her kids left home, she turned her family room into a "factory."

"I turned another room into a storage room," Myers said, "but I sometimes use the rest of the house, too."

Myers' designs are for sale at the Christmas Fantasy bazaar at the Blue Lakes Mall this weekend. The bazaar, organized under the direction of Donna Ferrenburg and Pam Webb, will also feature homemade mailboxes, ceramics, stained glass, baked goods and a variety of Christmas decorations. A crafter from the Salmon area will carve faces in wood.

Dylan returns to roots with new work

Newsday

It wasn't much of a revelation, five or six biographies ago, that Bob Dylan was never really an up-from-nothing rambling troubadour hobo like his hero, Woody Guthrie. Anyone familiar with the traditions of American and Celtic folk music could easily recognize some of the melodies and romantic imagery on Dylan's still-stunning early records.

It's no insult to say that this immeasurably vast and abiding mountain on America's cultural landscape is no longer tapping the same deep well of magical songwriting ideas he did 30 years ago. No one really expects another "Subterranean Home-sick Blues," "My Back Pages" or "Forever Young" to spring from his notebook. Fortunately, the uncanny vision that has always served him so well has led Dylan back up the winding road of his 30-odd-album-career to traditional folk music, performed the same way he came into this world, alone, with one acoustic guitar.

His latest album, "World Gone Wrong," follows the gentle bootee of last year's "Good as I Been to You" — another spartan production of blues and ballads.

Playing agile guitar and singing in a pinched, nasal whine that transcends any objective critical standards — deserving of judgment only for its unmistakable humanity — he creates a powerfully moving aura of somber weight that is anything but oppressive: Where the relaxed feel of "Good as I Been to You" suggested an avuncular presence singing tunes around the kitchen table, "World Gone Wrong" has a quiet, insular intensity that hastens up a vision of late-night studio solitude, where a lonely man pours his gasoline-soaked heart into the emotional fire of these rustic songs.

nature pocket - a jeans pocket with the designer label intact. Quilt prices range from $35 to $110.

For those looking for a less expensive gift, Myers has "just pockets," fashioned into change purses that can be attached to a belt buckle. They sell for $7.

Four fairy pillows are $5, and gym bags sell for $27. Large totes are also $27, and backpacks sell for $33. "Little bags," which can be used as purses, travel bags or shaving/cosmetic kits, are $15. Myers' newest addition to the line is a small shoulder bag that she will price at $10.

Everything is washable, and each item is double stitched or reinforced wherever necessary. The totes are lined.

Myers prices her products, to some extent, according to how much time she puts into them. She figures a quilt takes her eight to 12 hours, while a pocket can be whipped up in 60 minutes flat. Much of the denim is left on Myers' doorstep by friends.

Born and raised in Coalinga, Myers moved to Twin Falls 30 years ago. She's been sewing "forever."

"My mom taught me how, and I was sewing projects by the time I was 10," Myers said. "Instead of playing with dolls, I sewed for them."

She fine-tuned her skills in 4-H and was a home economics teacher for a while.

Briefly in the arts

CSI offers free afternoon concert

TWIN FALLS — A free concert of chamber music, sponsored by the College of Southern Idaho Music Department, is set for 3 p.m. Sunday in the auditorium at the CSI Fine Arts Center.

The concert will feature the Signature Ensemble, with Julienne Slaughter and John Straman, both of Twin Falls and both playing violin, David Hamilton of Jerome on the viola, Larry Goolsby of Jerome on the cello, Del Slaughter of Twin Falls playing the clarinet and Camille Cox of Twin Falls on the piano; the Magic Valley Rye Players, with Karmelle Whitaker Nye of Buhl and Sue Coleman Miller of Twin Falls, on duo piano; the Pro Art Singers, with Cosx Linda Stephenson and Milton Burns, all of Twin Falls; Larson Wong and Rhonda Wong, both of Jerome; and Derald Glenn of Kimberly; a clarinet duet with Linda Aufderheide and Susan Bench, both of Jerome; and the Woodwind Choir and Brass Ensemble, both directed by Peter Crawford.

'The Nutcracker' tickets go on sale

TWIN FALLS — Tickets are now available for the Dec. 11 performance of "The Nutcracker" ballet.

Costs are $8 for general admission and $5 for students. A family rate for up to five people for the matinee performance is $25. Tickets are available at the College of Southern Idaho Continuing Education Office, Candelstick Park, The Little Red Hen, Larson Arts, The Homestead and the Magic Valley Arts Council, all in Twin Falls; CSI Outreach centers in Gooding, Halsey and Burley; Arlene's Flowers in Jerome; and Sawyer in Buhl.

The program will be presented at 2 and 7:30 p.m. in the auditorium at the CSI Fine Arts Center.

For more information, call 733-9554; Ext. 270.

Art guild plans show, sale in Burley

BURLEY — The Desert Art Guild has planned its annual Fall Art Show and Sale for next weekend.

The event will be held from 2 to 9 p.m. Nov. 26 and 27 in the Midway Room at Fries's Cafe. This is a new location this year. An artist refreshments menu and a drawing for an oil-painting is set for 7 to 9 p.m. Nov. 27.

Writers league meets Saturday

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls Chapter of the Idaho Writers League will meet for a no-host luncheon at noon Saturday at the Wok 'N Grill Restaurant on Blue Lakes Boulevard North.

Following the luncheon, a workshop entitled "Writing the Romance Novel" will be presented by Patricia McAllister of Gooding. McAllister has written the radio station as a journalist and on-air personality. She is a former staff writer and editor for the Gooding County Leader. Her book, "Gypsy Jewel," was recently released by Zebra Books, and she has a contract for four more books.

All interested people are invited. The Twin-Falls Chapter of the Idaho Writers League serves as a support group for people in south central Idaho who are interested in writing. For more information on chapter activities, call Betty Conover at 543-5047, Carolyn Lewis at 734-6115, Alice Behr at 487-2672 or Dick Hagerman at 536-2187.

ISU choir chosen for England trip

POCATELLO — The Idaho State University Choir is one of three choirs in the United States that has been selected to attend a 10-day choral residency at the University of Cambridge in England.

The choirs will give individual performances in English cathedrals and will continue for a concert with The Cambridge Chorus under the direction of John Aldis, a world-renowned conductor.

Each choir member is responsible for their own travel and personal expenses. To help with personal expenses, choir members are doing fund-raisers during the year to help pay for the cost of the seminar. In conjunction with Park Price Motor Co., a Mercedes Benz 190 SE will be given away. Tickets for the Mercedes are available for $25 each from the ISU Music Department, 236-3575. Tickets are also available at The Little Red Hen, Blue Lakes Gas and The Music Center in Twin Falls; Mayfair Clothing and The Book Plaza in Burley; and The Bookstore in Rupert. Only 2,200 tickets will be sold before the drawing at 8 p.m. Dec. 9 at the Chamber Choir Christmas Concert at the First Congregational Church in Pocatello. The winner will be responsible for all taxes, licensing and title fees.

The choral residency will be from June 20-29, 1994. Students that will be studying abroad may receive college credit for the program along with the chance for a musical/cultural experience.

The ISU Choir will be performing during the day Saturday at the Magic Valley Mall in Twin Falls.

Gary Karr: If chocolate could sing

By Denise Turner Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The bass is a lot like chocolate — dark, rich and creamy.

That's the word from Gary Karr, who ought to know. Billed as "the world's leading solo bassist," he will be in Twin Falls next week to perform for the Magic Valley crowd.

"I'm a bad chocolate," said Karr, in a phone interview last week. "If chocolate could sing, it would sound like a bass."

No one's arguing. Karr is the first bassist in history to make a full career as a soloist on that instrument.

When asked why, he replied, "It took a long time for people to learn how wonderful the bass is. First, it was the violin, then the cello. Everyone always forgot the bass."

The Karr family certainly didn't. Karr is a seventh-generation bass player.

"I didn't have much of a choice," he said.

He did have a choice about how far to pursue his talent.

He's performed at the Sydney Opera House and the Champs-Elysees Theatre. He's played at the Wigmore Hall in London and with a number of orchestras around the world.

Karr was associated with Yale University for 20 years, and he currently occupies the Mury Primrose Fuller chair at the University of Hartford in Connecticut. For 18

Bassist, Magic Valley Symphony will perform Tuesday evening

Gary Karr will appear as guest artist at the Magic Valley Symphony Fall concert at 8 p.m. Tuesday in the College of Southern Idaho Fine Arts Auditorium.

He will perform "Moses Fantasy" by Paganini and "Concerto in A Major" by Dragonetti. The symphony will perform "Symphony No. 2 in B Minor" by Borodin.

Immediately after the concert, a reception for Karr will be held in the lobby of the CSI Taylor Building.

Concert tickets, priced at $5 for adults and $3 for senior citizens and students, may be purchased at Accents, The Music Center, Keith Bergensen's, Welch's Music and the CSI Bookstore in Twin Falls, West One Bank in Jerome, Positive Way in Wendell, Welch's Music in Burley or at the door.

summers, he has taught at the Johannes International School for the Arts in Victoria, British Columbia.

He's performed two recitals on an Italian cable TV network and has appeared on CBS "Sunday Morning" with Charles Kuralt. He's also released several recordings and videotapes. "Amazing Brass," a one-hour BBC film, centers on Karr's life in music. It's a life during which Karr has received lots of awards and honors.

This all began in Los Angeles where Karr was born and raised. Karr now has homes in British Columbia and in the Connecticut countryside.

"I'm looking out my window at three very large turkeys," Karr said during the phone interview, "and I just fed seven deer."

Karr, who is single, enjoys such pastoral pleasures with his two cats — Durian and East. (They're gray.) He will be 53 on Saturday.

For fun, Karr likes to listen to Bach.

"I'm a romantic at heart, and I love to listen to music that excites the passions," he said.

His own solo repertoire includes everything from baroque to contemporary.

Known as a virtuoso double-bassist, Karr explained his instrument this way: "Double bass is actually like contrabass, but I don't like the word contrabass because it sounds like you are against it. Double bass is a low bass. When you read a note on the staff, the sound comes out an octave below. It is doubled."

Karr's plans for the future include lots more recording. He's purchased a recording studio. He will also continue to tour.

"Traveling with the bass is a nightmare," Karr said. "Sometimes, I purchase a seat for it. The advantage is that you get two meals."

Karr said he is looking forward to performing with the symphony in Twin Falls.

"I hope they like me because I've got 17 encores prepared," he said, with a laugh.

Oldest

Continued from C1 across the state and to campfire gatherings on the Sawtooth National Recreation Area.

Last week Hegler released a cassette tape of the character's ramblings, titled "The We're The Days," the 60-minute tape is now on sale at the BookCafe in Ketchum and by mail order from Hegler's Porch Swing Productions.

"A lot of people think Idaho is a strange name," he says. "It was an Indian name meaning 'Light on the Mountains,' the Oldest Man in Idaho says with a hoarse and aged voice.

In truth, it was a name that was originally going to be used for what became Colorado, he points out.

"That was just a made-up name. It was a white man name. If it wasn't an Indian word at all," he says.

Other segments on the tape discuss how Franklin became the first town in Idaho although the residents thought they had settled in Utah and how the odd-shaped border with Montana was attributed to drunk surveyors, Easterners' difficulty locating Idaho and confusing it with Ohio or Iowa is also discussed and the character offers this explanation:

"We're the only state that was ever settled from the West. That happened because all those people went to Oregon on the Oregon Trail and then went to California when they struck gold in 1849. Idaho had a gold rush in the 1860s. They discovered gold up there in Florence and they had all these people coming into Idaho. They were already out there in California and Oregon, so when they came into Idaho they made us the only state ever settled from the West.

"When all those folks started writing their folks back home those people weren't back East, they were out there on the West Coast. So, no wonder nobody in the East knows where we are."

Hegler, who boasts "tremendous longevity" on both sides of his family, patterned his character's voice after his grandfather. When he visited as a young boy his grandfather would come out to greet arriving guests on the front porch, hand out stretched and waving, shouting "Hi! Hi!" in a thin rasp.

That's how Hegler begins each public performance, and how he begins the program on the tape: "Hi! Hi!"

And he concludes each program with the same exhortation, "Remember them were the days." Copies of "Them Were The Days" are available by mail from Porch Swing Productions, P.O. Box 1210, Sun Valley 83353 for $10 plus $1.50 shipping and handling.

Generation of Four Freshmen graduates to Cactus Petes

By Denise Turner
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Four Freshmen never became who-mores — but they took top honors anyway.

The pop music group was formed in 1947, when four young college freshmen organized themselves into a quartet at Butler University in Indianapolis. Soon after, they dropped out of school to seek musical fame and fortune.

They hit it big with songs like "It's a Blue World," "Graduation Day," "Don't Get Around Much Anymore" and "Angel Eyes." Along the way, they received a series of Grammy nominations for their long list of chart-topping tunes.

"Only two of the original members of the group are still alive," said group member Mike Beisner, in Twin Falls between shows at Cactus Petes, "but the last of the original singers just retired last year."

That would be Bob Flanagan, who spent almost 45 years on the road with the Four Freshmen.

These days, Beisner hits the road with Greg Stegeman, Bob Ferreira and Kevin Stout, doing up to 170 shows a year. All four of the guys play instruments, so the group has a built-in rhythm section and a four-piece brass front line.

"We're a self-contained act," Beisner said of the Los Vegas-based foursome. "We have a virtual pawn shop of equipment."

Today's Four Freshmen, though not exactly freshmen, are a youthful bunch. Ranging in age from 23 to 43 and known for their complex harmonies, they mix some newly arranged songs in with hits from the 50s.

"We are not just a nostalgia group," said Beisner, 38, "but one of the reasons we've stayed around so long is that we haven't strayed far from the original formula. We have some new material, but we sound the same."

Beisner figures the majority of his fans are in their 50s to mid 60s. But the Four Freshmen are posed on the brink of branching out.

"Vocal jazz is big in colleges today, with the Four Freshmen often being used as ear training," Beisner said, "and young kids are getting more interested in the old standards."

The Four Freshmen have always walked a tightrope between pop classic and mainstream jazz.

Their newest album, due out in January, is a tribute to Frank Sinatra, but they have a more varied live album scheduled to be released later in 1994.

Just in time for college graduation?

Tickets available

The Four Freshmen will perform two shows a night through Sunday at Cactus Petes Resort Casino in Jackpot. Nevada ticket prices for the 8 p.m. dinner show tonight and Saturday start at $17.95, with a cover charge for the 11 p.m. cocktail show of $10. Sunday dinner-show prices start at $12.95, with the cocktail show cover charge of $7.50. For more information or to make reservations, call 1-800-821-1103.

English teacher takes gander back at Owyhee County of old

By Denise Turner
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — English teachers always tell their students to write about what they know. Hazel R. Fretwell-Johnson took the advice seriously.

"In Times Past: A History of the Lower Jordan Creek Communities" is set in a portion of Oregon that was once part of Owyhee County in Idaho and is now southern Malheur County — Arook, Danner and Rome. It's the land where Fretwell-Johnson was born and where she lived for 60 years. Her grandparents on both sides and her maternal great-grandparents were pioneers there, coming to the area in covered wagons.

"I've always been a history buff," said Fretwell-Johnson, now 73. "I've been doing research on this book for years."

During part of that time, she worked as an administrative clerk for the Arook School District and wrote articles for the Owyhee Outpost. She also practiced her trade on her family,

Signing Saturday

Hazel R. Fretwell-Johnson will be autographing her book, "In Times Past: A History of the Lower Jordan Creek Communities," from 2 to 4 p.m. Saturday at Waldenbooks in the Magic Valley Mall. Cost of the book is $14.95.

"I've always told lots of old stories to my grandchildren," she said. To complete "In Times Past," Fretwell-Johnson worked through the Twin Falls Public Library, borrowing microfilm from universities. Many of the photos in the book were snapped by the author herself. She's won fair ribbons for both her photographs and her oil paintings.

During part of that time, she worked as an administrative clerk for the Arook School District and wrote articles for the Owyhee Outpost. She also practiced her trade on her family, stagecoach along the Jordan Valley trails.

"In Times Past" is a 200-page soft-cover volume describing everything from Silver City to early gold camps to incidents occurring along nearby rivers and creeks. A first printing of the book, self-published at the end of 1990, sold out.

Meanwhile, Fretwell-Johnson continues to pound the keys of her home computer. She works out of her Twin Falls home, where she lives with her second husband, Irvan Johnson. He's an old schoolmate from the couple's Gooding College days. The two hadn't seen each other for 50 years when they reunited, both having been widowed.

Fretwell-Johnson has three children, eight grandchildren and one great-grandchild. Her oldest son is a fur trader in Alaska. Her daughter lives in Idaho Falls. Her other son lives on the family ranch in (where else?) the Jordan Valley. And Fretwell-Johnson's next project is going to be a book about her ancestors.

New game takes hockey step beyond

By Roy Bassave
Knight-Ridder/News Service

Formats: Sega Genesis 16-Bit System.
Price, manufacturer: $59.95, Electronic Arts.
Recommended ages: 10 and up.

Video game of week

How the game works: What's cold and hot at the same time is this very realistic game, from the designers of NHLPA Hockey '93 and John Madden Football. It lets one or two players challenge the computer in lifelike arena games with team control, realistic organ-music and signature moves for each team member.

Good points, bad points: Excellent graphics and sound effects make for a realistic game and more challenging than last year's version. The only bad point in the electronic version is that, like the real game, fights do erupt, so young children might need a lesson in sportsmanship before they play.

The Verdict: EA proves again that they are the master sports software designers; their next product being released is "Madden NFL '94" on Nov. 19.

Garrison Keillor talks about guy stuff

The Baltimore Sun

Garrison Keillor called back from a Kentucky hotel. Eastern Standard Time. "I think," Keillor wasn't perfectly sure of his whereabouts but was perfectly prepared to address the state of guyhood.

"Guys are keeping a precarious balance. They are doing the best they can and staying within the lines that have been drawn for them," Keillor says. "We have allowed ourselves to be disciplined. Men are meant to be bold and foolish!"

settled in New York. In 1989, he started a new public radio program called "The American Radio Company" — which was just like his old radio show.

To complete the circle, Keillor this year ditched the name and again calls his show "A Prairie Home Companion."

"Garrison is a master of interpreting people," says Bill Kling, president of Minnesota Public Radio, which produces "A Prairie Home Companion." Kling is a longtime friend and boss of Keillor's. "He understands people's faults and foibles, and he can play that back to the average person in a way that they recognize and find very funny," Kling says.

Listening to Garrison Keillor on the phone is no match for listening to him on FM radio.

For one thing, the telephone has feeble fidelity. Its itty-bitty microphone chops Keillor's deep resonance off at the knees. Still, his telephone voice sounds like the best of three male voices harmoniously wrapped into one.

While we had him on the phone, we talked about humor and guy stuff: Is there a difference between comedy and humor?

"I think of comedy as being wit, and wit is a kind of manipulation using language. It's a sort of a show you go to and laugh yourself sick and then can't remember any of it. Whereas, I try to give people something they might remember and take away."

Why aren't there more commercially successful humorists?

"Because they're unnecessary. Most people do it for yourselves. Go and listen. People are richly funny. Most people feel they cannot sing; there are very few Americans who would admit to having no sense of humor."

Women are teeing off on guys these days.

"Women's ridiculing of men has been rich ... and deep ... and sharp. They are extremely funny on the subject of men."

"I don't think guys can survive the loss of humor — that is the deepest cut of all. I think that there are joke police out there, trying to make us behave in a certain way, write in a certain way ..."

"Men have been inhibited. They need to get together," says Keillor, "purchase a radio and listen to Garrison. Is this you? Is this the smooth-talking curator of Lake Wobegon or a graduate of the Robert Bly School of Bonding Warrior Woodsmen?"

"I do believe in what I'm saying, but the purpose is to make people weak and dizzy with laughter," says Keillor, author of "WLT: A Radio Romance," "We Are Still Married" and "Lake Wobegon."

Women, he believes, are more qualified to run the world than men — or at least they are supremely more qualified to lead an adult life. They should go ahead and take over the world so "guys can pursue their destiny as adventurers, lovers, humorists, and backup singers," writes Keillor.

He writes. He sings. He has a deep voice. The 51-year-old storyteller has these cavernous pauses between sentences as he rolls out the red carpet of a story. And radio is his baby. Keillor's two-hour live radio show, "A Prairie Home Companion," airs Saturday evening on more than 265 public radio stations.

An estimated 1.7 million people listen to the show's comedy sketches, guest singers and Keillor's homebound stories. "The News from Lake Wobegon" is his running monologue on the fictional Minnesota town "that time forgot and the decades cannot improve." The book, "Lake Wobegon," was parked on the New York Times best-seller list for 44 weeks.

For 13 years, Keillor broadcast Minnesota-based "A Prairie Home Companion."

But in 1987, he stopped hosting the show. A newspaper had published a picture and address of his St. Paul home, and this becalming performer

More makes merrier at holiday gatherings

DEAR ABBY: Last year, on the night before Thanksgiving, after cleaning my house, putting a turkey in the oven and making some pies, I sat down to relax and read Dear Abby. In your column, you had suggested that people invite others to share Thanksgiving with, particularly those whose families were far away and those who don't have family anymore.

Abby, the time to run that column is well before Thanksgiving, so the people who receive the invitations will feel they are truly wanted and not just an afterthought.

My husband teaches a Sunday school class for single adults. The last two years we have invited anyone who wants to come for Thanksgiving to our house. Each guest signs up to bring a specific dish, or drinks or paper goods. Last year we had 18 friends (including one couple whose family lives out of state, nine single adults and seven children). We had a wonderful time visiting, watching television and playing games.

Others in our church also extend invitations to out-of-state transplants and singles at Thanksgiving and Christmas. It's always a blessing - a wonderful opportunity to get to know them better. I encourage your readers to make room at their tables for Thanksgiving or Christmas dinner. God will richly reward you.

- BECKI SIMMONS, METRO-POLITAN CHURCH OF GOD, BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

DEAR BECKI: I recall this biblical injunction: "It is more blessed to give than to receive." (Acts 20:35)

Phi Theta Kappa schedules dance
 TWIN FALLS - Phi Theta Kappa has planned a Karaoke dance for 10 p.m. to 1 a.m. in the Eagles Nest at the College of Southern Idaho. Those planning to attend must have a student activity card or a guest pass to get in. Students may purchase guest passes for guests at the Student Activities Office during regular business hours. Cost is $2 per person and $3 per couple. Call Lisa Hamilton at 736-2453.

Teachers society meets Saturday
 TWIN FALLS - The Delta Kappa Gamma International Teachers Society will meet at 10 a.m. Saturday at the Canyon Springs Inn. Shawna and Mike Fuller will present the program, "Living with Attention Deficit Disorder." The Treasures and Talents portion of the meeting will be a photography display. Donna Cowan and Crew will provide musical entertainment. Call Barbara Shockey at 733-7057.

Kimberly seniors set beef dinner
 KIMBERLY - The Ageless Senior Citizens Inc. have planned a baron of beef fund-raising dinner for 5 to 6:30 p.m. Saturday at the senior center, 310 N. Main. Cost is $5 per person. Reservations are required. Call 423-4338.

Square dance club schedules dance
 JEROME - The Buttons and Bows Square Dance Club is hosting a Thanksgiving dance Saturday at the American Legion Hall. Rounds begin at 7:30 p.m., with squares following at 8 p.m. A potluck dinner will follow the dance, with the club furnishing the turkey. Bring a covered dish or dessert to share.
 For more information, call June Custer at 733-9235.

Hospital sets seniors' holiday dinner
 TWIN FALLS - A "Thanksgiving Celebration" for senior citizens is set for Sunday in the cafeteria at the Magic Valley Regional Medical Center.
 The dinner menus offer a choice of roast turkey with dressing and cranberry sauce or baked ham, candied yams, whipped potatoes, seasoned corn, green peas and onions, medley fruit salad, pumpkin pie and small beverage. Seating hours are from 11 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. and 4:30 to 6 p.m. Cost is $4.50 per person.

Jerome seniors plan community meal
 JEROME - The Jerome Senior Center has planned a community meal for noon to 2 p.m. Sunday at the center on First Avenue East.
 The menu features roast pork, mashed potatoes, gravy, Oriental mix vegetables, green salad, rolls and cake. Cost is $5.50 for adults and $3 for children ages 1-12. Anyone interested in playing cards is welcome to stay for the afternoon.

Help Ulrich celebrate his birthday
 TWIN FALLS - An open house to celebrate the 80th birthday of Wilbur A. Ulrich is planned for 10:15 a.m. (following morning worship) to noon Sunday in the parish hall at the Immanuel Lutheran Church on Filer Avenue East.
 Ulrich was born on Nov. 18, 1913, in Elk Creek, Neb. He moved to the Glover area near Filer and Buhl with his family when he was 6 years old. He married Blonnie Werner in 1936, and they farmed south of Twin Falls for 42 years. They have seven children, 13 grandchildren and five great-grandchildren.
 The event is being hosted by his children, Imogene Hoehner of Pocatello, Dallas Ulrich of Buhl, Dorothy Kochi and Vickie Tolman, both of Boise, Peggy Ohlaga of Burley and Myron Ulrich of Filer.

Meat Loaf back with a vengeance - and a sequel

Can you imagine "Born Again in the USA" by Bruce Springsteen, "The Virgin Returns" by Madonna, "Father II: Still a Thrill" by Michael Jackson, "More Purple Rain" by Prince or "Rumours II: The Talk Continues" by Fleetwood Mac?

Most self-respecting artists would never dream of releasing a sequel to a spectacular, landmark album the way Hollywood cranks out movie sequels after sequels. But that didn't stop Meat Loaf from releasing "Bat Out of Hell II: Back Into Hell," a direct follow-up and surprise sequel to his 1977 career-making album "Bat Out of Hell."

"Jim and I do great work and that's what it's all about. It's not about anything else but the work," Meat Loaf said in a recent phone interview, referring to Jim Steinman, his collaborator on both albums.

"It's like asking the Dallas Cowboys if they're gonna play another football game after they did a nice job and people enjoyed their performance. They're gonna keep doing it."

But what took him so long to get this second "Bat" out of his cave? Sixteen years is an unreasonably long time to wait for a sequel.

Possible explanations abound. Entertainment Weekly listed problems plaguing the singer during the '80s, including his breakup with Steinman, his bankruptcy after being wiped out by 22 lawsuits totaling $85 million, and the loss of his voice.

His post-"Bat Out of Hell" showings, including 1981's "Deadringer" and 1983's "Midnight at the Lost and Found," were only big overcauses, so a reprise of his sole shining moment in an attempt to regain faded glory seems reasonable.

But, Meat Loaf said, "It wasn't a matter of waiting but when there was time to do it. You can't pinpoint a time. Why is it taking the Cleveland Indians so long to win a world championship? The time isn't right yet. You can't pin anything down. It's when it is, when it's supposed to happen."

For Meat Loaf (real name Marvin Lee Aday), the time is now. His decision paid off in a big way as he's showing some starting strength for a rock dinosaur counted out long ago.

"Bat Out of Hell II" debuted at No. 3 on Billboard's top albums chart earlier this month and remains there on the latest chart, while the single "I'd Do Anything for Love (But I Won't Do That)" is at No. 1 on the Hot 100 Singles chart.

Tickets to his four nights on New York's Broadway in September sold out in 70 minutes; he's taking the show to Australia before resuming U.S. shows, which will include some college dates to accommodate his newer and younger generation of fans.

Meat Loaf, 45, is this year's music comeback story, enjoying his biggest media blitz ever blanketing the talk show circuit and garnering magazine spreads.

Here's still any doubt as to whether Meat Loaf is really back, turn to "Saturday Night Live," that mecca of pop culture parody. On a recent show hosted by Jeff Goldblum, "SNL" player Chris Farley served up a particularly mean and definitely not less than Meat Loaf. (The new and improved Meat Loaf has slimmed down to around 240 pounds; he was about 300 when the first "Bat" was unleashed.)

Meat Loaf, who lives in Connecticut with his wife of 18 years and two daughters, is a little surprised at his renewed success. "Four shows selling out, that amazes me. I thought it would sell out but not in 75 minutes. I can't imagine that."

Mickey:

A star is born

Orlando Sentinel

Somewhere between New York and California, on a train that snaked through big cities and country cornfields, Mickey Mouse was born.

Mickey's dad was a down-on-his-luck cartoonist who had just lost the rights to one of his animated characters. Walt Disney was returning home. But busted — no money, no cartoons and no work for the handful of people he employed.

So it was from desperation. Disney would later say that a pebble rolled in red velvet pants took form. By the time he had reached Los Angeles, his tiny creation was christened "Mickey," and the reign of the world's cartoon king — possibly the most ubiquitous character ever created — had begun. "I don't know of any figure that has been as popular," said Stephen Fjellman, an anthropology professor and author of "Vinyl Professor," a nearly 500-page account of the Disney World phenomenon. "People fall in love with Mickey Mouse-like they do a big teddy bear."

Mickey Mouse turned 65 on Thursday, an age when many movie stars and corporate heavyweights — Mickey's burping to be both — would consider slowing down. But retirement is not in his future. He debuted in "Steamboat Willie" in 1928 and next year will star in his 120th feature, "Runaway Brain." The pint-sized mouse has appeared in books, magazines or films in 52 countries and in 39 languages, including Maltese, Tagalog and Icelandic.

And who better to celebrate the ageless icon's birthday than children? Walt Disney World is bringing in 6,500 underprivileged kids this week for a run of the parks. The Disney resort area will be crawling with stars and politicians, too, including first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton, who is scheduled to arrive Saturday for a discussion on kids' issues.

For the record, Disney is playing down the birthday angle of this event. Mickey Mouse is not even chairman Michael Eisner, insist this is a week of festivities for and about children.

But we know, Mickey has out-lived the average mouse 20 times over. Today, he is the same age as Roddy McDowell, Fats Domino and Walter Mondale. He's eligible for Social Security, Medicare and a host of discounts at movie houses and burger stands.

In fact, if he were a human star, Mickey would probably have lent his name to some politically correct cause by now. But he has done none of that, and still he's Disney's most popular character. His big ears and wide grin have become the Disney logo, as closely tied to the multibillion dollar company as George Washington's mug is to the dollar bill.

Mickey Mouse is popular because he lets us tap into some innocence, into our inner child," said William Weitz, a clinical psychologist and president of the Florida Psychological Association. "We spend most of our lives dealing with stress. He provides an easy escape back into childhood."

Not a bad living butter's he's honest: The mouse has a few faults. Sure, he has a steady job. But why can't he commit to long-term girlfriend Minnie? And what about that cheese-belly? Some of that chubbiness might melt away with a touch of Slim Fast.

But Americans seem willing to forgive Mickey his shortcomings, allowing the mouse his 15 minutes of fame a trillion times over.

He has starred in cartoons, comic strips, books and his very own show, The Mickey Mouse Club. His image has graced thousands of products, from wristwatches to baby diapers, and he's not just some local hotshot, either. Mickey is a global phenom, as recognizable in Russia, where he is Mikki Maus, as in Sweden, where he is Musse Pigg.

Mickey even played his part in the war effort, appearing on posters in World War II that promoted war bonds. And the code word for Allied Forces on D-Day? You guessed it: Mickey Mouse.

"I used to worry about him being overexposed," said Alan Gould, who follows Walt Disney Co. for the Kidder, Peabody & Co. brokerage in New York. "I think, though, as long as there are new generations of kids, there are going to be new consumers for Mickey."

What the world likes about Mickey, psychologists and observers say, is that he's so terribly inoffensive, a bland, "empty vessel." Fjellman said, in early cartoons, Mickey was feisty, always slaying giants or fighting cannibals. He was more of a Bugs Bunny character who got into jams but always landed on his feet.

Hollywood takes care of its own at retirement home

Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD — The beauty queen and the mad scientist are cozied up at their regular table in the cafeteria they affectionately call "the commissary."

Her hair worn in a platinum pageboy, Anita Garvin Stanley bats her long lashes — a siren sending out her well-rehearsed call. Whit Bissell's eyes glint back, profoundly blue.

They are actress and actor, eating hamburgers with knives and forks, talking about the Movies, about directors they have known and roles they have played — about that glamorous, camera-trolling show business world that is now, lamentably and inescapably, at least two generations gone.

Garvin Stanley remembers those crazy Depression-era days playing the teen-idol-egged love interest in Laurel and Hardy films. Bissell was a "chameleonlike character," the best known as the mad scientist in such 1950s sci-fi thrillers as "I Was a Teenage Frankenstein," "Creature From the Black Lagoon" and "Invasion of the Body Snatchers."

Strangers in their Hollywood heyday, they are now good friends and members of the Motion Picture and Television Fund's retirement community in the Los Angeles suburb of Woodland Hills — a tree-shaded tract where movie industry veterans live out their days as a tightly knit family.

It's known as the Lot, a Hollywood movie set of sorts where former gaffers and designers, producers and performers, directors and artists, secretaries, security guards and their spouses all move about, but a bit more slowly, with the same sense of purpose that guided their working days.

Facing off in their matching chrome wheelchairs, Garvin Stanley and Bissell embody the feisty spirit of old Hollywood and famous couples such as Burns and Allen or Bogie and Bette.

Take the way talk turns to the look Garvin Stanley cultivated in many of her 40 film roles — a marathon career that started in the silent days.

Was it more sexy or more glamorous? "I'd say it was more slinky," Bissell, 83, deadpans.

As if on cue, Garvin Stanley produces an ornate fan from her lap — "I say it was more slinky," she purrs. "I love it when you talk like that."

Pushing their walkers about the manicured grounds, playing-bingo-going-group members reminiscing about projects past at the facility's 280 residents are among Hollywood's first generation, a group that still is consulted for guidance by the industry they helped create.

Whit Bissell was a character actor for more than 50 years.

Among residents at the Motion Picture and Television Fund's retirement community is Lothrop Worth, who directed cinematography for such TV series as "The Donna Reed Show" and "The Real McCoys."

In a show business world obsessed with youth, the aged hold a revered place. Through its umbrella Motion Picture and Television Fund — founded in 1921 by Charlie Chaplin, Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks Sr. to aid disadvantaged entertainment workers — the industry provides for those no longer able to help themselves.

Built in 1941, the Lot has been home to luminaries ranging from Mary Astor to Burgess Meredith, as well as to actress Theresa Saldana, who recuperated there after she was stabbed by a stalker in 1982.

Other residents included Mae Clarke, the 1930s star best remembered as the gun moll smashed in the face with a grapefruit by James Cagney in "The Public Enemy." Two movieland Stooges — Joe DeRita and Larry Fine — also lived there.

Bolestered by philanthropy and an industry-wide payroll deduction plan, the Woodland Hills site serves as a national role model for how an industry can take care of its own, Hollywood insiders say.

Former directors who pay their own way live next door to penniless studio guards whose expenses are covered by the fund. Costs per day are $54 to $66 for singles, $90 to $100 for couples, including lodging, food and most medical coverage. Of the several hundred residents, only 15 ever stood before a camera. The rest made their contributions behind the scenes. Most are in their 60s and '90s. Some have lived here for 20 years.

The wait for admission can sometimes stretch to a decade or longer. Residents' reasons for coming are varied. Some are in dire financial need, others are just tired of being alone.

But once inside, they join a fraternity of plucky characters still interested in hearing — sometimes again and again — about the satisfaction of accomplishments during good old days that, at least around here, are still very much alive. "You don't have to be forgotten just because you're old," said resident Fred Engel, who directed Sidney Poitier in "Lilies of the Field."

Pop goes the icon: '80s gods downsized to remain relevant

Madonna. Prince. Michael Jackson. Bruce Springsteen.

In the '80s, they defined pop music. In the '90s, they could form their own distinct career support group. All still sell records. All still claim wide industry respect. But with mounting evidence that the public is moving away from their brand of wide-angle mega-stardom, they're starting to look like the last breed. Somebody call 911: We got icons in trouble.

According to the trades, this is a good moment for established artists: River of Dreams, from stalwart Billy Joel, is one of the best records in the country. Meat Loaf's comeback, a virtual remake of his 1977 "Bat Out of Hell," is a smash. And a number of artists who made their mark in the '80s — such as Sting and Duran Duran, are experiencing solid success.

Except for the huge guns, The large-urban-life artists who dominated the last decade are suffering unusual setbacks. Hounded by scandal, dogged by critics who savaged their declining quality, vexed by creeping grungeism, confused even about what their name is — they're still out there trying, but their efforts seem increasingly forced. The rules have changed, and these stars are scrambling to stay on top of the game.

"All of these people benefited from one incredible pop moment," says Michael Pagnotta of Reach Media, who served as Prince's publicist from 1989 until recently. "It was the song, the times, the look of the video, everything. Now, not all of the factors are converging. The fan base becomes less solid very quickly. The fans feel it."

Consider: Madonna continues to riff through her repertoire of shocks even after her similarly themed coffee-table book, "Sex," and album, "Erotica," were sales disappointments. But when she projects the series of head that crucial stripper wig: Once the audience has seen it all, there's no reason to stick around.

Springsteen watched as two albums he released on the same day last year — "Lucky Town" and "Human Touch," — flopped, failing to labor for more than two years on the top grossed by the usually wandering music press. Even fans wondered about him during the extended tour that followed. Not only were Springsteen's newly mature love songs at the time, but the series of possibility that coursed through Springsteen's earlier work.

Prince put out more records than his public could absorb, in the early '90s, and since the hieroglyphically puzzling last one, he's issued a series of puzzling pronouncements about his

'All of these people benefited from one incredible pop moment. It was the song, the times, the look of the video, everything. Now, not all of the factors are converging.'

— Michael Pagnotta, publicist band, his future modes of expression and very identity.

As for Jackson, those front-page allegations that he molested a 13-year-old visitor to his Neverland ranch — charges that are still under investigation by Los Angeles police — have given fans reason to suspect his philanthropic work with children and undone whatever PR was achieved by his prime-time chat with Oprah. Now he's checked himself into a Swiss clinic because he says he's hooked by the painkillers. The scandal certainly hasn't done anything to boost sales of his most recent record, the unimaginative "Dangerous," which finds the "King of Pop" mining his own catalogue for inspiration.

Each of these stars is anxious, and vulnerable — those highly publicized superstar contracts tend to magnify creative shortcomings. They know that the inspiration that can lead to a "Purple Rain" is an elusive thing. But none seems ready to take a lesson from the recently retired Michael Jordan, who said he was leaving basketball — at the peak of his powers — because the desire wasn't there.

Fed by years of constant adulation, these pop icons insist they still matter. So they resolutely toil on, just like many less-venerated artists, looking for a way to get back into the good graces of the 12-year-olds with hefty allowances.

It's that visible squirming that makes these icons look so awkward.

In the last few years, that big pie known as "pop music" has been chopped into tiny pieces, each defined by a specific musical style and demographic. There are hip-hop for pretens, hip-hop for the bubblegum pop crowd, hip-hop for young lovers, gangsta rap for those in their late teens bent on proving themselves, alternative peace-espousing hip-hop for adults, etc.

No one — not even a huge seller such as Michael Jackson — can dominate, or even dominate, such a fragmented market. As yesterday's icons watch young upstarts enter the Billboard charts at No. 1 — thanks to more accurate sales reports provided by Soundscan — they must wonder about their own long-term viability.

As one industry veteran observed: "Four years ago, Tom Petty was everywhere, the very future of rock 'n' roll. Now who's waiting around for a Tom Petty record?"

In some ways, the icons can't win for trying. "Every generation throws a hero up the pop charts," Paul Simon said in 1986's "Boy in the Bubble." And the Lollapalooza generation can't relate to this tenured bunch: Jackson, Prince, Madonna and Springsteen range from 35 to 44 years old.

John David Kolodner, senior vice president at Geffen Records, believes that "kids under 20 have made a conscious decision that they want a culture of their own. Generation X is definitely mad at baby boomers, and all the excesses of the '80s."

It's probably too late for Madonna to try the low-key approach. Once the runway was among teens, she took home the MTV Magazine Teenager's poll for worst album, worst dressed actress, worst singer, worst video, biggest-ego-and-most-overexposed celebrity.

Madonna appears to be taking it in stride. Excitement is part of the normal cycle of celebrity, she told "MTV News" this month: "It seems to me most women are only allowed to be famous for seven years. Then they're supposed to go away and die from a drug overdose or have babies or do commercials."

But as Nirvana, Pearl Jam and others redefine fame with their anti-glitz approach, Madonna has got to be wondering what her next move should be. As Kolodner says, "The purchasing power of Generation X is redirecting who's considered a big artist and who isn't. ... If you're going to appeal to the whole marketplace, you have to have the proper message for that generation."

Capitol Records president Gary Gersh, who signed Nirvana when he was with Geffen Records, points to Springsteen as an artist likely to survive the backlash. "When I was away by the way he has aged in rock 'n' roll. (It seemed) impossible to age with your integrity intact — we hadn't seen that in anyone that popular to date. He's being who he is."

But others say that the restrictive playlists of radio and MTV mean that all bets are off. The closed-mindedness of radio is well-known. But MTV — once an outlet for a variety of music, including that of the icons — has also gone fickle. Among the best-hit by the cable outlet's grunge-first policy: The icons.

"Right now, the guy with the hottest record in the country, Billy Joel, is barely having his song played on MTV," says the insider. "MTV is weakening itself by refusing to play certain things based on some ideological rigidity or stylistic guidelines."

Sinatra bridges the gap with contemporary stars

Los Angeles Times

Frank Sinatra on the bestseller list in 1993 — alongside Pearl Jam, Dr. Dre and U2?

In less than a week, thanks to a new Capitol album that features Sinatra singing new versions of 13 signature songs with some of the most respected names in contemporary pop, rock and R&B, including Barbra Streisand, Aretha Franklin, Luther Vandross and U2's Bono.

The lineup of songs on Sinatra's first album in a decade — it's titled "Duets" and was released earlier this month — ranges from Cole Porter's "I've Got You Under My Skin" to Johnny Mercer-Harold Arlen's "One for My Baby."

Responding in writing to a series of questions posed by Robert Hilburn, pop music critic for the Los Angeles Times, Sinatra, 77, reflects on the old songs, the new album and vocal partners past and present.

Q: One of my favorite songs on the album is Porter's "I've Got You Under My Skin." Did you know him well?

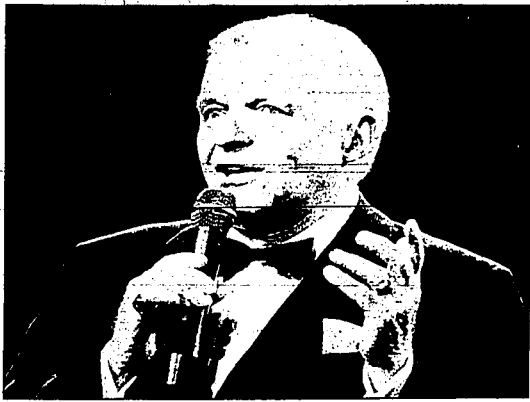

A: He was one of the first "famous" people I ever met. I was singing at the Rustic Cabin in New Jersey and they "Night and Day" was a staple of the set. I sang it every chance I got. But when Porter came in with a group of society types, I started-the song and went blank!

Q: I've always been so nervous at his being there I forgot the lyrics. I still cringe when I think about it. Somehow I got through the number, but I'll never forget that feeling of complete loss.

Q: One of the most dramatic duets on the new album is the one with Bono on "Under My Skin." What do you think of his interpretation?

A: I've often said that interpretation plays a major role in the performance of a song. I've gotten to know Bono and his band members over the past few years when they've come backstage. I respect his approach to the tune. His creativeness on this one is a kick.

Q: Let's move on to "I've Got a Crush on

Frank Sinatra performs at Radio City Music Hall in New York City in May 1980. His first recording in years, "Duets," which hit store shelves early this month, features 15 of his signature songs with a star-studded lineup.

Q: What comes to mind when you think of that song?

A: A guy with a crush has the lovely words to express his "adoration" but can't quite verbalize his feelings to the gal. It really is quite moving, and the lush orchestration puts the touch of velvet on the piece.

Q: Remember the live version of "Crush" — the one you did with Count Basie on the Las Vegas album?

A: Performing live is the way I like to do it — nothing beats the electricity of a hot band and interpreter between audience and vocalist. That's why when I record I try to reproduce the atmosphere of concerts as much as possible. With an orchestra and a hand-held mike... it's the way I am most comfortable.

Q: The duet with Natalie Cole on "They Can't Take That Away From Me" must have brought back a lot of memories about her dad. What are your feelings about Nat King Cole?

A: Nat was one of the gentlest, warmest people I've ever known. I enjoy listening to his music and respect his interpretation and approach to lyrics. The first thing I think of a song can be judged by it or so much the lyrics, but by the interpretation and voice. That's the first thing you notice.

If the voice, enunciation and interpretation are coarse, the rendition fails. The most beautiful lyrics and music can be done in by the vocalist's interpretation. I've always enjoyed this song because of the playfulness and lyrics. It tells a lovely, bittersweet story.

Q: What usually strikes you first about a song: lyrics or melody?

A: You can't nail it down to either. It depends on who is doing the lyrics and music — and what the intention is. On some of the early albums at Capitol, the intention on some was to swing, on others to create a more subdued, mood piece.

Q: Did you ever think "One for My Baby" would be such a signature song for you?

A: I've always considered myself a saloon singer — whether we're in a huge arena, large theater, whatever... the atmosphere of a guy nursing a drink sitting in a bar can be wrenching. I suppose I've experienced just that scene many times and perhaps it's why this song is so meaningful to me. Johnny Mercer, Harold Arlen and Nelson Riddle outdid themselves on (the original version of) this one.

It's fitting that "One for My Baby" is placed at the end of the album. And it comes at a special time during our shows — at the end of the song, the spotlight is on me and Bill Miller at the piano, and it follows me off to the side.

Q: Are you surprised that so many of the songs, including "Summer Wind," have stood the test of time?

A: I'd be surprised if they weren't around popular-American classics will always have an audience because each song is a drama in itself. They tell stories, often very poignant scenarios. Our great lyricists were able to connect with the public through their words.

They wrote about feelings we all have, and I was fortunate to have known and worked with those talented people. "Summer Wind" is a sleeper — we put it in at the end of the concert and audiences just love it. The placement of songs in a show is very important because we want the audience to experience many emotions throughout the evening.

Q: What is it like singing the same song at different stages in your life? Take "You Make Me Feel So Young," for instance.

A: I'd like to think that one's stage of life affects how most songs are performed. Interpretation of lyrics has always been very meaningful to me, but the words and intention of the lyricist is very important as well. This song may have more personal meaning as one matures, but it is an upbeat number at any age. What makes the classic songs I perform so satisfying for me is their timelessness. And every song on this album fits that bill.

Q: You were once very critical of rock. Has your view changed over the years?

A: My initial discomfort with rock was that it contrasted with my admiration and appreciation for lyrics. There are many lovely songs written by contemporary lyricists and we do some on the road. I grew up with the big bands — vocalists simply standing before a microphone backed by an orchestra — no fancy lighting, dance numbers or scenery. The other stuff works for some, but it's not my bag.

Q: Did you have a favorite duet partner in the early days? Bing Crosby? Ella Fitzgerald? Louis Armstrong?

A: Like the current album, each artist brings their own interpretation to a song and, for me, that makes it all the more interesting. I can't say who was my favorite, but working with Ella was, and is, spinning gold. She is very, very shy, but can sing vocally.

Q: What was your favorite moment in the studio recording the new album?

A: It wasn't in the studio. It was when I heard the complete album for the first time. The professionalism, dedication and sheer talent of the artists chokes me up. It humbles me that they made time in their busy schedules to do the gig. Perhaps more than anything, though, I see this record as a tribute to Nelson Riddle, Sammy Cahn, Harold Arlen, Johnny Mercer, Don Costa, Jimmy Van Heusen, Cy Coleman — there's not enough space for me to mention them all. I know, and they know, wherever they are, that without them I would not be where I am today.

Heavyweights prepare to fight for holiday movie audience

LOS ANGELES (AP) — You'd think that with superstars Clint Eastwood and Kevin Costner paired for the first time, producer Mark Johnson would be thrilled with next week's debut of "A Perfect World."

But in the crowded and intensely competitive holiday film season, sure things don't always turn out to be sure things and Johnson is nervous. He's already predicting that "A Perfect World" may be overshadowed by Robin Williams in the comedy role of a lifetime: in drag as "Mrs. Doubtfire."

"It will definitely win the Thanksgiving weekend," Johnson says of the Williams film. "It will beat us out — I'm sure."

The next few weeks are crammed with Academy Award-caliber films ("Schindler's List") aiming high, sequels ("Wayne's World II") aiming low and a jumble of works ("The Pelican Brief") in between.

The box-office clash is especially intense Wednesday, when 20th Century Fox's "Mrs. Doubtfire" goes head-to-head with Warner Bros.' "A Perfect World" and three other major studio releases. The Thanksgiving weekend winner could go on to dominate the box-office charts until year's end.

"Mrs. Doubtfire" casts Williams as the father of three on the losing side of a custody battle. He disguises himself as a plump, aging English nanny who promptly is hired by his estranged wife (Sally Field) to watch the youngsters.

Once scheduled for a Dec. 10 debut, "Mrs. Doubtfire" was moved up to the day before Thanksgiving after the studio showed the film to recruited test audiences.

"We felt after our first few research screenings that this movie plays extraordinarily well to everyone who saw it," says Peter Chernin, the chairman of 20th Century Fox.

Although "Mrs. Doubtfire" tries to deliver a serious message about divorce, it is largely a frothy, humorous diversion.

"A Perfect World," on the other hand, travels across far more difficult R-rated territory. Given the country's current penchant for palatable works, that's what makes its success problematic.

Directed by Eastwood, last year's Oscar winner for "Unforgiven," the movie features Costner as an escaped convict roaming across Texas with an 8-year-old boy as his hostage.

The fearless boy develops an affection for his generally loving captor, and the film evolves into an unusual odyssey of alienation and attachment.

Eastwood co-stars as a Texas Ranger tracking down Costner with the unwelcome assistance of Laura Dern.

While "Mrs. Doubtfire" can be promoted with a simple pitch, "A Perfect World" requires a far more complex advertising strategy. Its premise can't be condensed easily into superficial movie-poster prose. So what do you tell the audience the film is about?

"I think what you do is you tell them what it isn't," Johnson says, of the marketing approach. "It isn't a Clint Eastwood-Kevin Costner movie. It's not what they expect it is. It's not an action movie. It's not a buddy movie. It so goes against that 1 1/2-hour, big-old-dude," he says, meaning that audiences should know going in that it's no lightweight romp.

'We felt after our first few research screenings that this movie played extraordinarily well to everyone who saw it.'

— Peter Chernin, 20th Century Fox

Chernin says Fox will allow "Mrs. Doubtfire" to speak for itself, introducing the film in 1,000 theaters Saturday night in special sneak previews. Although the sneak preview returns will not be tabulated in the film's grosses, they are expected to eventually boost its total haul.

"The thinking is get a bunch of people in to see the movie, because they will be our single best advertisement," Chernin says. "If we can get a couple of million people in that Saturday night, this thing hopefully will ignitic by Wednesday because there'll be so much word of mouth for it."

The Thanksgiving competition includes "Josh and S.A.M.," a film about two children driving across the country; "George Balanchine's The Nutcracker," with "Home Alone" star Macaulay Culkin; the animated work "We're Back! A Dinosaur's Story"; and the independent film "The Snapper," an Irish blue-collar comedy directed by Stephen Frears.

Two relatively quiet weeks follow, and then, on Dec. 10, three other big Christmas films arrive: "Silver Act 2: Back in the Habit," the Western "Geronimo: An American Legend" and "Wayne's World II." Five days later comes Steven Spielberg's Holocaust movie "Schindler's List." Followed by the dog sequel "Beethoven's 2nd" and another Western, "Tombsone."

On Dec. 17, Julia Roberts and Denzel Washington pair in the adaptation of the novel by John Grisham's legal thriller, "The Pelican Brief."

'My Life:' Tear-jerker by the numbers

By Jay Boyar
Orlando Sentinel

Movie review

"My Life" starts with one of those powerful movie ideas that makes you wonder why somebody didn't think of it sooner:

A man with a terminal disease makes a videotape about his life for the unborn child his wife is carrying.

In box-office terms, that's not exactly "Butman," but the emotional potential of this premise is obvious. In fact, the biggest challenge for a filmmaker is to guard against tear-jerker shamelessness.

Bruce Joel Rubin (screenwriter of "Ghost") largely has avoided that trap in writing and directing "My Life." But he has fallen into another one.

Although much of the new film gets by on the strength of its central idea, it's often disappointingly literal.

As Rubin sets things up, you go through just about everything with Bob Jones (Michael Keaton), a Los Angeles public-relations executive with terminal cancer, and his wife, Gail (Nicole Kidman), in one of her better, more restrained performances, who is pregnant for the first time.

You look on as Bob receives the tragic diagnosis, visits relatives in Detroit, walks through the house he grew up in, plays with a toy (a small parachute) from his childhood, deteriorates physically and so on until the predictably bittersweet end. You also watch as Gail has her sonogram and as the couple think up baby names, attend a shower, take a Lamaze class and struggle through the delivery.

This scrupulously straightforward approach is certainly preferable to vagueness or manipulation, but it doesn't exactly fire the imagination. Watching the movie, you may find yourself affected by one episode or another, but the segments don't build.

At times, it's as if training films for expectant parents and cancer patients had gotten their reels mixed together.

The literalism of the movie is at its best in the clips from the video that Bob is making. Keaton often strikes a refreshingly lighthearted tone as his character instructs the unborn child in such areas as basketball, cooking, shaving (up or down but never sideways), jumpable use, music (ignore what Mom says), the right way to enter a room and, very briefly, sex.

In fact, "My Life" might really have been something special had it consisted entirely of Bob's videotape, with all the various story developments somehow implied. In any case, you get the idea that in the process of making the tape, Bob is re-exploring his life and coming to terms with the end that awaits him.

Where filmmaker Rubin's literalism reaches its low point is the scene in which Bob's family belat-

Nicole Kidman and Michael Keaton star as Gail and Bob Jones, an upper-middle class couple who must deal with Bob's terminal illness and Gail's pregnancy.

edly grants his childhood wish by arranging to have a circus perform in his back yard. The sequence is clearly meant to be inspirational, but all it inspired in me is a suspicion that Rubin felt the movie needed a lift at that point. The one portion of "My Life" that isn't entirely literal involves Bob's sessions with a Chinese healer (Haing S. Ngor), during which Bob occasionally sees the famous white light of the "other side." The healer, incidentally, counsels Bob to let go of his anger — especially his anger toward his father (Michael Constantine), a limited man who would have preferred for his son to have remained in Detroit and to have gone into his scrap-metal business.

Watching the movie, you may find yourself affected by one episode or another, but the segments don't build.

—What's rather odd, here, is that although healer and, clearly, the filmmaker counsel forgiveness, the movie presents Bob's father in unflattering terms — as if Rubin were still working off his anger against a parent in the context of this supposedly "life-affirming" movie. Bob's father is even presented as a chain smoker, perhaps planting the suggestion that the secondhand smoke may be related to Bob's illness.

In the context of the movie, however, this isn't a large point. And Rubin does, after all, do a fairly decent job with a great idea.

Perhaps unintentionally, the movie's loveliest image is contained in the brief scene in which Bob tosses the small parachute into the air and it drifts down on the wind. If this weren't such a very literal film, I'd be sure that the toy is meant to represent Bob and that the chute, which keeps him from falling too fast, is the videotape he is making. (Twin Cinema)

'Addams Family Values' strikes ghoulded; 'Rudy:' Sweet, safe

The Times-News

Movies playing in the Twin Falls area this weekend. Ratings are by the Motion Picture Association of America and reviews are by the Los Angeles Times, Dallas Morning News and Knight-Ridder Newspapers.

"Addams Family Values" (PG-13). Practically everyone returns: director Barry Sonnenfeld, Anjelica Huston, Raul Julia, Christopher Lloyd, the kids. Baby Pubert is the cuddly new addition to the clan; Fester has a crush on new nanny Joan Cusack. (Twin Cinema, Jerome Cinema)

"The Beverly Hillsbillies" (PG). Not as awful as you might imagine. Jim Varney heads a cast that also includes Lily Tomlin and Cloris Leachman in this occasionally hilarious, clunky, dumb movie-ization of the incredibly insane TV series. (Twin Cinema, Jerome Cinema, Ace Theatre)

"Carito's Way" (R). A surprising middle of the road venture from star Al Pacino as third son Brian De Palma, this story of a former East Harlem drug kingpin desperate to go straight is a professionally done version of a familiar story that can't quite redeem a menial ending pace with a crackerjack final hour. (Mall Cinema, Jerome Cinema, Ace Theatre)

Capsule reviews

"Cool Runnings" (PG). Blithe, infectious comedy with serious underpinnings about a Jamaican bobsled team competing in the Olympics and coached by John Candy. A beautifully crafted film for all ages. With Leon, Doug E. Doug, Rawle D. Lewis and Malik Yoba. (Twin Cinema)

"Demolition Man" (R). Wesley Snipes and Sylvester Stallone battle it out in a future that is clearly not big enough for both of them. Unable to decide about whether to be a loud movie or a dopey movie, director Marco Brambilla and trio of screenwriters have ended up with a loud movie and a dopey movie, not the best of compromises. (Twin Cinema)

"Ernest Rides Again" (PG). Jim Varney's popular weirdo is back for a fifth film, a stupefyingly inane business about Ernest, now a small-town college janitor, searching for treasure hidden in a long-buried Revolutionary War cannon. With Ron K. James. (Twin Cinema, Jerome Cinema)

"Hocus Pocus" (PG). This is primarily a kids' film, so it's not too scary, but the antics include a boy turning into a cat, kids hit by lightning, the dead rising out of graves and a corpse getting decapitated and having its fingers cut off (but only temporarily). (Twin Cinema)

"Look Who's Talking Now" (PG-13). The rich inner life of dogs is affirmed in this second sequel, which features the voices of Diane Keaton as a prissy poodle and Danny DeVito as a mangy mongrel. She laps up Evan's water; he gnaws on smelly shoes. A lady and a tramp, they're made for each other. The movie is thin but mostly harmless. (Jerome Cinema)

"Rudy" (PG). Sweet-natured and unsurprising, above as hard as resist (and as intellectually demanding as an affectionate puppy, this tale of a guy who never gave up on his dream of suiting up as a football player for Notre Dame benefits from a charming and engaging performance by Sean Astin in the lead role. Otherwise its Never Say Die! Gotta Be Me all over again. (Twin Cinema)

"The Three Musketeers" (PG). The Great Pack does it to Dumas. Charlie Sheen, Kiefer Sutherland, plus Charles O'Donnell and Oliver Platt star in this inane reworking of the old warhorse about All For One and One For All. Lots of horseplay and posturing but the only sharp moments come from Tim Curry as Cardinal Richelieu. He wipes everyone else off the screen. (Twin Cinema)

"Tim Burton's The Nightmare Before Christmas" (PG). Part avant-garde art film, part amusingly morbid fairy tale, this delightful and ghoulish holiday musical about a plot by the people behind Halloween to take over Christmas displays more inventiveness in its brief 75 minutes than some studios can manage in an entire year. The film Burton ("Beetlejuice," "Edward Scissorhands") was born to make. (Twin Cinema)

"Tom and Jerry: The Movie" (G). Remember those old Tom and Jerry cartoons? You'd watch the first two minutes with delicious anticipation, the next two immersed in raucous fun, minutes four through six chuckling contentedly. By about the 8-minute mark, though, you'd start getting antsy — and a bit bored. Get ready for 80 minutes of "Tom and Jerry — The Movie." (Twin Cinema)

Stallone's cliff spectacle, haunting 'American Heart' reach video stores

The Times-News

New videos in Twin Falls stores this week:

"Cliffhanger" Sylvester Stallone, John Lithgow, Janine Turner, Michael Rooker. Stallone returns to the action genre with this Rocky Mountain high-concept, which is at its best when the good guys and bad guys are grunting across spectacular high-altitude terrain, dangling from vertiginous precipices and performing gravity-defying stunts. Once everybody starts talking, however, things get draggy and predictable. Lithgow plays a gleeful sociopath, Turner is Sly's plucky ranger girl friend, and Rooker makes a solid action hero in his own right as a fellow mountain-climbing rescuer. R (violence, profanity). (Knight-Ridder Newspapers) (Video West, Great American Video)

"Free Willy" Jason James Richter, Lori Petty, Michael Madsen. "Old Yeller" with a dorsal fin, "Lassie" with a blowhole, "My Friend Flicka" with a whole lot of blubber ... this splashy, splashy boy-and-his-pet adventure is all of these things, or at least it attempts to be. A formula family pic about a sulky street kid who bonds with a sulky captive killer whale, the film falls short of its classic forbears: The villains are scowly and cartoonish, and the suspenseful finale isn't at all suspenseful. PG (scowly bad guys, dolphin in distress). (Knight-Ridder Newspapers) (Video West, Great American Video)

"American Heart" Jeff Bridges, Edward Furlong. As an ex-con trying to walk the straight and narrow along Seattle's skid row, Bridges gives a performance that is hard-bitten and quietly authentic; he gets inside this man completely. The feature debut of "Streetwise" documentary Martin Bell, this powerfully downbeat slice of low life centers on the relationship between Bridges' character and his brooding teen son. A haunting, sad and richly rewarding film. R (profanity, violence, nudity, gritty street life). (Knight-Ridder Newspapers) (Great American Video, Video West)

"Lost in Yonkers" Richard Dreyfuss, Mercedes Ruehl, Irene Worth. Those for whom the mere mention of Neil Simon's name causes an involuntary shudder in the mouth should know that this screen adaptation of his Pulitzer Prize-winning play is not a comedy. As directed by Martha Coolidge, this is a haunting tale about two motherless boys whose painful childhoods in the dark forest of his family. To make a living as a salesman, he leaves the boys with their authoritarian grandmother. Although Coolidge's film creates a palpable atmosphere, and although Simon's dialogue is even more colorful than her direction, neither successfully explains how a child of a seriously dysfunctional family suddenly — and with no dramatic reason — becomes functional by the end of the third act. PG (profanity, mature themes). (Knight-Ridder Newspapers) (Great American Video, Video West)

"Dangerous Relations" Louis Gossett Jr., Blair Underwood, Rae Dawn Chong, Clarence Williams 2d. Drama: Gossett plays a long-time convict, respected by prisoners and authorities alike, whose newest problem is the arrival in his cellblock of his abandoned son. (Knight-Ridder Newspapers) (Great American Video)

"Frankenstein" Patrick Bergin, John Mills, Lambert Wilson, Randy Quaid. Made-for-cable version of the famed horror story of a scientist who dreams of creating the perfect human. (Knight-Ridder Newspapers) (Video West, Great American Video)

"The Plague" William Hurt, Robert Duvall, Raul Julia, Sandrine Bonnaire. Drama based on the Camus novel of the same title about a city paralyzed by fear of a plague. R. (Knight-Ridder Newspapers) (Great American Video)

"Indecent Behavior" A designer drug leads to murder in this thriller starring Shannon Tweed as a sex therapist and Gary Hudson as a detective. Jan-Michael Vincent plays her husband. (Seattle Times) (Great American Video)

"Puppet Master 4." The puppets baffle the totems in this new installment directed by sequel specialist Jeff Burr ("Stepfather III"). (Texas Chainsaw Massacre III). (Knight-Ridder Newspapers) (Great American Video)

"Carnosaur." Dinosaur thriller. (Associated Press) (Great American Video, Video West)

"The Secret of the Seal" Animated tale about boy and seal. (Associated Press) (Great American Video)

"Out For Blood" More kickboxing action with Don "The Dragon" Wilson, Howard Jackson, Dino Homsey and Eric Lee. (Seattle Times) (Great American Video)

Also: Video West: "Taking the Heart."

It's Rivalry Day for the NCAA

The Associated Press

Thought the biggest game of the year was last week? Try some of these big games set for Saturday:

There's The Game and the Big Game, not to mention games with barrels, bells and buckets on the line.

It's Rivalry Day in college football. Harvard visits Yale in The Game, Cal is at Stanford for The Big Game, the Civil War resumes between Oregon and Oregon State and it's Iron Bowl time with Alabama at Auburn. Victory Bells will toll at various venues, somebody will snatch the Old Oaken Bucket, grab a bronze pig or drink from the Beer Barrel.

Meanwhile, it's No. 17 Boston College (7-2) at No. 1 Notre Dame (10-0), North Carolina State (7-3) at No. 2 Florida State (9-1), No. 4 Miami (8-1) at No. 9 West Virginia (9-0), No. 5 Ohio State (9-0-1) at Michigan (6-4), No. 11 Alabama (8-1-1) at No. 6 Auburn (10-0), No. 7 Tennessee (7-1-1) at Kentucky (6-4), Vanderbilt (4-5) at No.

8 Florida (8-1), No. 10 Texas A&M (8-1) at Texas Christian (4-6).

Also—It will be No. 12 Wisconsin (7-1-1) at Illinois (5-5), No. 14 Penn State (7-2) at Northwestern (2-8), No. 16 UCLA (7-3) at No. 22 Southern Cal (7-4), No. 18 Colorado (6-3-1) at Iowa State (3-7), No. 20 Kansas State (7-2-1) at Oklahoma State (3-7), Purdue (1-9) at No. 21 Indiana (7-3), No. 24 Clemson (7-3) at South Carolina (4-6), and No. 25 Virginia Tech (7-3) at No. 23 Virginia (7-3).

Iron Bowl

The name may have lost a bit of its meaning with the game no longer played at neutral Birmingham, but when Alabama pays a rare visit to Auburn, intensity never wanes.

It never ends. It's 365 days a year, Auburn coach Terry Bowden says. "People don't greet each other by saying, 'Hello.' They say, 'I'm an Auburn fan (or Alabama fan). Who are you for?'"

Alabama coach Gene Stallings says the game is always the biggest event in the state.

West Virginia quarterbacks Darren Studstill, left, and Jake Kelchner go through drills Wednesday in Morgantown, W.Va., where the Mountaineers face Miami on Saturday.

"They get ready for this game back in the summertime," he said. "That's the only one they can think about."

Man claims Barkley threw punch in bar

The Associated Press

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. - Charles Barkley will be questioned by police investigating a man's claim that Barkley punched him in a bar early Thursday. The altercation came after Barkley allegedly used obscenities to two women who were with the man, according to Lt. Mike Keeley.

A man identified by Keeley as Edward Durham, 36, of Glendale, filed a complaint in which he said that Barkley became verbally abusive in telling the two women to leave him alone after they tried to start a conversation with him.

Durham told police he told Barkley he shouldn't use obscenities around women. Barkley responded with more obscenities and moved toward Durham, the police report said.

Barkley was restrained by employees but struck Durham once, Durham told police. Keeley said nightclub employees reportedly also restrained Durham when he tried to retaliate.

Barkley reportedly was escorted from the bar and was not there when police arrived, Keeley said. "I'll always defend myself mentally or physically. Just because I'm Charles Barkley, I don't have to take crap off people. That's it," the 6-foot-3, 252-pound

Barkley

Suns spokeswoman Julie Fie declined to comment.

On June 17, 1992, Barkley was acquitted of breaking a Milwaukee man's nose with a punch. The fight occurred in Milwaukee after a Dec. 22, 1991, game between the Philadelphia 76ers and the Bucks.

Barkley said he hit the man in self-defense. The Milwaukee verdict was delivered hours before Philadelphia traded Barkley to the Suns for Jeff Hornacek, Tim Perry and Andrew Lang.

In an April incident also in Scottsdale, Barkley poured beer on the head of a woman who tore up his autograph after he refused to sign more than one piece of paper for her. No charges were filed.

BSU faces tough game in Moscow

The Associated Press

If the Big Sky Conference had a "mercy" rule, it might not make Boise State travel to Moscow on Saturday for a game that winds up the league's 1993 regular season.

But there's no such rule, and the Vandals (8-2) are huge favorites to once again pummel Boise State, ending its worst season since it came a four year school.

Boise State (3-7), which has floundered all season on offense, comes up against a Vandal team which leads Division I-AA teams in scoring and last weekend ran up 77 points against Coligh, about what the Broncos average for four games. Idaho had 56 points in the first half.

It's a big traditional rivalry, but Idaho has won the last 11 games. And new Boise State Coach Pokey Allen has turned to freshmen and sophomores, building for next season.

Allen - Smith
But he's still breathing fire. "I didn't lose those 11," Allen said. "Those don't bother me. I'm 1-0 versus John L. Smith (Idaho's coach). Ask him if he has any pressure on him."
Allen's Portland State team beat Idaho in 1989, the only time he's coached against the Vandals.
Idaho, ranked No. 11 in the latest Sports Network poll, figures it must beat Boise State again to get into the

Vandals should avoid upset

By Dave Goins

Times-News correspondent

BOISE - Saturday will be a long day away from home for the Boise State Broncos.

It'll be Home Sweet Dome for the University of Idaho Vandals. Kibbie Dome, that is.

Despite their apparent aversion to playing defense, my guess is the 8-2 Vandals will sting the 3-7 Broncos something like 49-17 to clinch a spot in the NCAA Division I-AA football playoffs. And put the Broncos out of their misery.

There's just too much at stake for the Vandals. As much as they would like, in their wildest dreams, the Broncos won't play the spoiler role.

Of course, I've been wrong at least once before. A few years ago, I picked Boise State to finish first in the Big Sky Conference in basketball. They finished fourth.

This is much different, though. Especially when you count the ways the Broncos have found to lose games on their route to an 0-3 road record, 3-4 on Bronco Stadium's blue turf.

Their 1-5 Big Sky resume includes a stunning 34-27 home victory over Idaho State (9-7, 2-3). They also beat a couple of Yankee Conference non-achievers - Rhode Island and Northeastern.

The Bronco secondary has been spotty at best. We won't talk about the worst. A guy like Idaho standout quarterback Doug Nussmeier is almost certain to find and exploit every gaping seam in the BSU defense.

Commentary

Nussmeier and running back Sheridan may have combined for an average-of-almost-500-yards-offense-per-game.

Pokey Allen's squad just isn't up to the job. So the first-year BSU head coach says he'll watch-intently-to-see who wants a starting job next fall.

"If you can't get up for Idaho, you can't get up for anybody, right?" Allen said last week after BSU blew a modest second-half lead to lose 28-17 to Eastern Washington. "We're going to bring in football players who can win games."

If BSU doesn't do better next year, Allen says he will gladly step down.

The Broncos are playing for pride now, but pride won't stop the passing of Nussmeier, the running of May, an angry Kibbie Dome crowd, and Idaho's 11-game winning streak in the series.

No. For the Broncos, it just ain't gonna happen. It's just not the reality of the situation for a team that has posted the worst record in BSU history.

Make it an even dozen for the Vandals.

In the Kibbie Dome Saturday afternoon, the Broncos will soon know they're way too far from home.

Presidents will have to decide scholarship issue in January

The Associated Press

POCATELLO - When the presidents of the three Idaho schools in the Big Sky Conference go to the National Collegiate Athletic Association convention in January, they will have to make up their own minds whether to restrict football scholarships.

The state Board of Education, meeting in Pocatello, discussed the matter but decided not to instruct the presidents. "You're all on your own," board President Keith Hinkley said. Board members said they wanted Idaho State, Boise State and Idaho to remain at the same scholarship level.

"It doesn't trouble me at all that all the presidents vote differently," said Diane Bilyeu, board member from Pocatello. "The important thing to me is that once the vote is taken, the three institutions stay at the same scholarship level."

Currently, Big Sky schools can have 65 scholarships in men's football. It drops to 63 next year.

ISU President Richard Bowen said he will vote for a reduction to 45 in the Please see SCHOLARSHIPS/D2

Boston College quarterback Glenn Foley is taking a new, humble attitude into this year's matchup with No. 1 Notre Dame.

QB hopes for big game vs. Irish

BOSTON (AP) — Glenn Foley went to Notre Dame last season with a cocky attitude, and left a chastened man. This year, the Boston College quarterback is downright humble as he prepares for the top-ranked Fighting Irish.

This was Foley before last year's game: "I never liked Notre Dame. I don't know where it is, and they don't throw the ball. When I was growing up and watching football, I liked teams that threw the ball."

And here's Foley this week: "We're going to have to play the game of our lives... If it happens to be a rout, it's a rout."
The change of attitude came quickly in last year's game. Foley was rattled by three early sacks and finished with just 12 passing yards in a 54-7 loss to Notre Dame that ended the Eagles' undefeated season.

The humiliating defeat was even more bitter for Foley because he was usually saved his best performances for the Eagles' biggest games.

He threw for 344 yards and four touchdowns last season as Boston College won for the first time at Penn-State, and had 423 yards and three touchdowns this season as the Eagles won for the first time at Syracuse's Carrier Dome.

"I like playing in the big games. If you don't like playing in the big games, you've got problems with yourself," Foley says. "You want respect. You want people to say, 'These guys are good, they've won games they weren't supposed to win.'"

Foley, ranked sixth nationally in passing efficiency, has led No. 17 Boston College to seven straight wins after an 0-2 start this season. He has 19 touchdown passes and only three interceptions in those last seven games.

He is trying to forget about last year's loss at Notre Dame, in which the Eagles gained just 11 yards in the first half, while focusing on Saturday's game.

"Last year was last year. We don't bring up last year's game because we're a different football team than last year," he says. "Last year's game is far history, and it's not something that has much relevance now."

Foley, a senior, is approaching several school passing records. Flutie set in the early 1980s. He needs 30 completions to tie Flutie's career mark of 677.

Foley's 2,734 passing yards this year put him within reach of Flutie's record of 3,454 in one season. Foley would have to average 360 yards in his final two games to reach that record, and he has thrown for at least that many in three games already this season.

Boston College coach Tom Coughlin says Foley's strong arm and leadership qualities are enhanced by his thorough preparation each week.

"Glenn works at football and he studies. The reason that he has had the games that he's had is that he has prepared," Coughlin says. "In his mind's eye he has a great vision of what the opponent will do."

'We do what's right'

Joe Restic proud of Harvard teams after 23 seasons

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Joe Restic's square jaw is solid like the concrete stadium outside his office window. He carries his tall, trim body as upright as the pillars that crown that ancient arena where he gave lessons in life.

He smiles as he points to the replica of Rodin's "The Thinker" behind his desk. He gestures angrily at the menace in front — a television that can pour out garbage and lead youngsters to violence.

For 23 years, Restic has been the symbol and the strength of Harvard football.

Now 67, he will retire as coach after Saturday's game at Yale with five Ivy League titles and unshaken principles.

He sees evils in the modern game — illegal recruiting, greed, trash talk, scuffles with opponents. He won't allow any of that. He wants passionately for his players to win, but to win without cheating. Players must grow as students, not only as athletes.

"I'm the same as when I came here," he says. "I haven't changed anything and I don't feel I have to. We do what's right. We do what's good. If you don't buy that, you don't fit in."

Far more than the integrity of college football is at stake. Apply his teachings — play fairly, get the most from your ability, think clearly, serve others — and, he is convinced, America's future will be brighter.

"Any time you allow the world to dictate to you or you sell out to the world, you're going in the wrong direction," Restic says. "The ends are materialistic and then you can no longer protect the integrity of the place, whether it's the institution, whether it's the government or whether it's the game of football."

If he wins by bending rules, players "leave here (thinking) that's the way to get ahead in business. They leave here (thinking) that's the way to take advantage of somebody," he says.

It may be an outdated notion in an era when television and bowl games enrich successful programs. But that's another of Restic's lessons to his players — stick to your beliefs while others compromise theirs.

Restic is Harvard's winningest football coach with a 117-96-6 record but hasn't had a winning record since 1987, the last time he won the Ivy League title. The team is 3-6 now. A loss at Yale (2-7) in a series that began in 1873 would leave the Crimson in the cellar.

"Win or lose, he's always the same," Carm Cozza, Yale's coach for 29 years, said. "He handles it with dignity and grace."

Restic can't pinpoint his greatest football success. "It's the people," he said, "the people that you served."

"The big thing that Joe always said was it's not whether you win or lose. It's how you deal with it," said Stephen O'Brien, a Harvard quarterback in the mid-70s and now an orthopedic surgeon in New York City.

"He's a teacher. You don't picture him doing anything else," said Jim Kubacki, who started ahead of O'Brien and is now a school principal in suburban Cleveland. "He expected you to expect more from yourself."

Saints, 49ers play for NFC West's top spot Monday night

The Associated Press

It only seems like the Saints and 49ers play each other four times a season with an NFC West title at stake.

That's pretty much what's on the line Monday night when the Saints go to Candlestick for their second year, second — meeting of the year.

San Francisco is favored by eight points, which is ridiculous for this series, which usually comes down to a Morten Andersen field goal or late game-winning drive by the Niners. It was Andersen in the first meeting, a 16-13 victory by the Saints.

That was the fourth win on the way to a 5-0 start. Since No. 5, New Orleans is 1-3, including a 19-17 loss at home last week to Green Bay.

That brought the Niners, who once trailed by two games, back into a tie — they beat Tampa Bay 45-21 and finally looked like the team we've come to expect — on offense — as Steve Young and Jerry Rice combined on four touchdown passes.

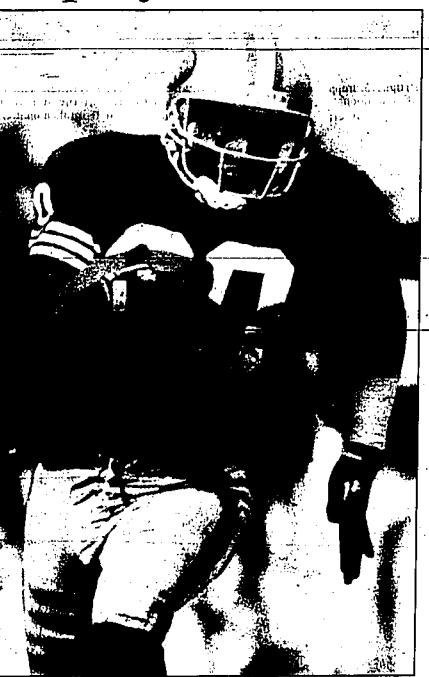

Defense is another matter. "It was like looking at two different teams on film," coach George Seifert said after reviewing the offensive and defensive tapes.

The Niners will probably win — they've NEVER been swept by the Saints when Jim Mora was coaching New Orleans and are 11-4 against them since New Orleans became good. But the margin is usually narrow.

Detroit (plus 3) at Green Bay (Milwaukee)

The Lions are coming off a bye week, which isn't necessarily good. The Saints were coming off a bye last week when the Pack beat them, and bye teams are 7-14 against non-bye teams this year. Green Bay is banged-up, but the incentive is there — a loss and the Pack is three behind the Lions and fighting for a wild card.

PACKERS, 20-15

Jerry Rice and his San Francisco 49ers teammates will be looking to avenge an earlier loss when they play New Orleans on Monday in Candlestick.

Dallas (no line) at Atlanta
This game is off the board because the odds guys don't know

Troy Aikman's status. As long as Bernie Kosar's there, why risk him?

Three factors:
1. Jerry Glanville will have the Falcons sky high.

2. The Cowboys don't play run-and-shoot teams particularly well.

3. So what?

PITTSBURGH (plus 24) at Denver
Mile High is not a good place to go after an emotional win. Particularly when the Broncos have blown a 20-3 lead at home to a team they should have beaten.

But Pittsburgh may be the second-best team in the NFL right now.

STEELERS, 20-16
Chicago (no line) at Kansas City

The Chiefs are taken off the board every week because Marty Schottenheimer never says flatly that Joe Montana won't play. He probably won't, but so what? The Bears can't score.

CHIEFS, 16-3
New England (plus 8) at Miami

Steve DeBerg is the new Don Strock.

DOLPHINS, 21-6
Giants (minus 6) at Philadelphia

Rich Kotite says that one of these days, something good will happen. The Eagles usually beat the Giants, but... this year, Dan Reeves figures out victories.

GIANTS, 16-13
Houston (minus 4) at Cleveland

Normally, the Dawg Pound would be yapping at Warren Moon. This week it's yapping at Bill Belichick, who cut the only healthy NFL quarterback he had.

OILERS, 22-5
Indianapolis (plus 13) at Buffalo

If Jim Kelly can't go, Frank Reich is better as a starter than a reliever. But can the Bills score 13 points?

BILLS, 12-3
Saints (plus 3) at San Diego

The last meeting was the high point of the Chargers' season against a team that's making a habit of blowing early leads.

CHARGERS, 21-17
Cincinnati (plus 13) at New York Jets

The Bengals are so bad they're laughing at themselves.

JETS, 34-10
Washington (plus 16) at Rams

Rich Cannon tries to plug the dime for the Skins in this meeting of two teams in free fall.

REDSKINS, 16-13
Minnesota (minus 8) at Tampa Bay

A little bit of a test for the Vikings off an emotional win in Denver.

The operative words are "little bit."

Jamie Martin set the record last year at 12,207 yards.

He also needs two touchdowns Saturday for the Big Sky career record, currently held by former Vandals Ken Hobart at 105. Nussmeier set the league record with his 89th passing touchdown last weekend.

Idaho has scored in Big Sky's best 65 touchdowns this season, 24 for Boise State. The Vandals also lead all Division I-AA teams in scoring, averaging nearly 48 points per game. Boise State is last in the league in scoring, 70 points behind even Idaho State, which won just 2 of 11 games.

Significantly, in the two games Idaho has lost this year, the Vandals scored 34 and 35 points but the defense gave up 40 and 54. Boise State hasn't scored more than 34 points in any game.

Senior receiver Mike Wilson of Boise State needs 69 receiving yards to move into second place in pass receptions. He has 2,286 yards so far.

Boise State will start four freshmen on offense. The latest to win starting role is Jordan LePaine, a 281-pound tackle. Senior Jan-Erik Peterson was declared out with an injury.

Quarterback Doug Nussmeier has 10,626 yards career total offense and needs just 72 against Boise to move into second place. Weber State's NCAA playoffs. Big Sky champ Montana, No. 3-ranked with an eight-game winning streak and a 10-1 record, already is in and probably will get to host an opening-round game.

Eastern Washington (7-3) won its last four but school officials will have to wait until Sunday's decisions by the playoff selection committee to know if they get into the playoff.

"I wouldn't get it any better than 50-50," he said. "Coach Dick Zornes, nevertheless, the team continues to train and practice lightly in case it gets a call."

Only once has the Big Sky gotten three teams into the 16-team playoffs and never with just seven victories.

Smith said he won't have any problem getting the Vandals up for the game, because of the intense feelings the traditional rivalry generates.

Idaho could set a lot of team and individual records against Boise State, and the Vandals ran up 62 points last season at Boise.

"It's always a huge game, whether for the championship or not," says UCLA coach Terry Donahue, 7-9-1, against USC.

USC coach John Robinson, 5-2 in his cross-town encounters, realizes that better than most.

"It's the best of times," he said. "There can't be anything better than to be in this game... you never know how they are going to turn out."

Beer Barrel
In this game, don't incite the opposition or make the game bigger than it already is.

"As always, I think Tennessee and Kentucky will be a very emotional football game," Vols coach Phillip Fulmer said.

He sounds like a man whose team has won eight straight games in the series, but doesn't want anybody to know it.

Old Oaken Bucket
"This game is certainly a big game. It's the game," Indiana coach Bill Mallory said. It is for the Hoosiers, who appear bowl bound.

Purdue is on the verge of its worst season in more than a half-century, and a loss would be its ninth straight.

A win?
"It makes everything a lot easier to go into the winter time," Purdue coach Jim Colletto said.

Elsewhere, Ohio State needs at least a tie against Michigan to clinch a Rose Bowl berth, while it's Duke vs. North Carolina for the Victory Bell, Minnesota's New for a bronze pig-statute known as Floyd of Rosedale, Washington vs. Washington State for the Apple Cup, Mississippi vs. Mississippi for the Golden Egg, and Lehigh vs. Lafayette in the most playful rivalry.

It's the 129th meeting between the teams.

Shurtliff said, "If people in Pocatello are all hot to fund women's sports, there's no reason (ISU athletic director) Randy Hoffman couldn't generate that money now, but there's no great interest."

Keith Hasselquist, the board's financial officer, said a committee working on ways to finance college building needs will recommend using a surplus in the state budget as a stopgap measure.

The committee's intermediate plan is to ask for an increase for public works projects to 4 percent of the state budget. From its recent average of 2 percent.

The committee also suggested a long-range plan of debt financing for capital projects.

Paralyzed former ump faces delicate spinal operation

BOSTON (AP) — Steve Palermo's world has always centered on alternatives to an unambiguous outcome: ball or strike; fair or foul, safe or out.

But now, after making the toughest call of his life, the former umpire faces an uncertain future.

Palermo, partially paralyzed by a mugger's bullet two years ago, is scheduled for neurosurgery Friday on his spinal cord in an attempt to regain full use of his left leg and return to umpiring.

Surgeons won't know if they can repair damaged nerves until after they've begun the operation, which could last up to 10 hours. If they're successful, they won't know for months whether Palermo will walk normally again.

And if they're not successful, there's a chance of making Palermo's months of grueling rehabilitation and leaving him permanently crippled.

"It's a very delicate operation because you're so close to the spinal cord," Palermo said. "It's like having bubble gum balled up in your hair, and trying to remove all the gum without disturbing any of the hair."

Palermo was shot outside Camp's restaurant in Dallas on July 7, 1991.

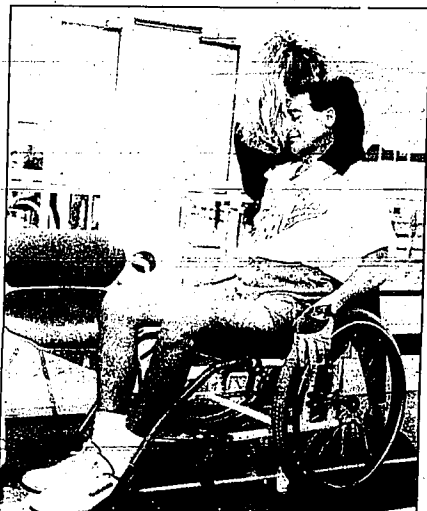

While trying to rescue two waitresses being attacked in the parking lot of the popular Italian restaurant, he had umpired a Rangers game hours earlier.

The mugger got a long prison sentence. Palermo got a bullet through the spine that left doctors saying he would never walk again.

Palermo, 43, who still has metal fragments in his body, has waged a relentless battle to regain full use of his legs. Through painful rehabilitation and sheer willpower, he has recovered enough to walk — haltingly and clumsily, at times — with the aid of canes.

But that has not been good enough for Palermo, who vows he will walk again.

On Opening Day 1992, the resident of Park, Kan., walked with crutches to Royals Stadium and threw out the first ball of the season. As he headed off-the-field, he drew a line in the dirt behind home plate with his foot.

"That is one half of the X that I will make to mark my return to the baseball field again," he said. "I will be behind home plate again."

his right side, his left side remains weak and his progress has stalled in the last year. About six months ago, doctors suggested the highly unusual surgery, similar to that done on infants born with nerve abnormalities.

Palermo spent the past few weeks agonizing over the decision. He underwent countless tests — MRIs, CAT scans, bone scans — but doctors said they would only be able to fully assess his nerve damage with surgery.

He finally decided to have the surgery at the University of Massachusetts Medical Center in Worcester, and flew to his parents' home in Oxford, Mass., last weekend to prepare for the operation.

Dr. Arthur Pappas, an orthopedic surgeon and the team physician for the Boston Red Sox, will assist in the operation. He says the spinal surgery "if it can be attempted — would be done through microscopes. A scalpel would scrape the scar tissue.

"The nerves on the left side of the spinal cord at the lower part of his back are encased by scar tissue," he said. "What has to be determined is if they are intact or disrupted."

"If the nerves are disrupted, there is very little that can be done. If they are intact, it is a matter of removing the scar tissue around the nerves to provide for the impulses to be transmitted to the muscles and to the muscles in his left leg."

Pappas added, "I don't know if this exact operation has been done anywhere."

Palermo knows the risks and the long odds. But he is intent on returning to baseball, and everything that goes with it.

"I'd like to be able to hear some boos directed at me," he said. "That would mean I'm back at work. That would be nice."

Player collects award for hot season — 1969

NEW YORK (AP) — Almost a quarter-century after winning his last Gold Glove, Curt Flood finally got his trophy.

He was supposed to get it after the 1969 season. That, though, was right before the St. Louis Cardinals center fielder challenged baseball's reserve clause with a lawsuit that eventually reached the Supreme Court.

"A strange thing happened to me on the way to receive that Gold Glove," Flood said Thursday as he held the award.

Flood's former teammate and fellow Gold Glove winner, NL president Bill White, was to formally present the trophy Thursday night at a black-tie dinner hosted by Rawlings, which began the awards in 1957.

"Cur mentioned last year that he had never gotten his Gold Glove, and we thought that would be a nice way to do it this year, to right the wrong that occurred," said Rawlings vice president Ted Sizemore, who began his major league career in 1969.

Flood received his award — a new model — along with about a dozen of this season's Gold Glove winners who were in town for the dinner. The trophy is a leather glove and two real baseballs, covered in gold.

Exactly what happened to the actual award Flood was supposed to get in 1969 is uncertain.

"We've never been able to find it," Sizemore said.

Flood won the Gold Glove for seven straight seasons with the Cardinals, and the award was usually presented the next year around opening day. But on Oct. 7, 1969, after being traded along with Tim McCarver from St. Louis to Philadelphia for Dick Allen in a seven-player deal, Flood refused to report to the Phillies.

Instead, he went to court to challenge the reserve system, which restricted the movement of players. When the 1970 season started, Flood was overseas, rather than on a baseball field collecting his award.

"I went to Denmark and I guess Rawlings decided not to go there to present it to me," Flood said. "I think it was just a logistical situation."

NHL referees, league may return to bargaining table

CAMBRIDGE, Ontario (AP) — Striking NHL linesman Bob Hodges was wiping the sweat from his brow after a brisk workout Thursday when he stopped to think about Nov. 27 at Maple Leaf Gardens.

Hodges noted that the Boston-Toronto game was scheduled to be his 1,500th regular-season game, a feat matched by only nine other officials.

But reaching the milestone has been stalled indefinitely because of the strike by NHL referees and linesmen.

"I was going to have my family there," said Hodges, stuck at game 1,492. "It's disappointing. But hey, this is important, too."

"I'm behind every one of these guys."

Don Meahan, the officials' chief negotiator, said he planned to contact the league today, seeking a return to the bargaining table.

The officials want a 60 percent raise; the league's latest offer is 29 percent. A first-year referee is paid $50,000 and a first-year linesman gets $33,000.

walked away from rinks across North America.

Hodges and some of his colleagues get together to stay in shape — laps, stops and starts, plyons and a few shots at their replacements and the players.

"A lot of those guys (replacements) said it would be their dream come true to ref in the NHL," Hodges said. "The dream might turn into a nightmare."

Referee Bill McCreary said the replacements were being pampered by the league, with supervisors doing a lot of the work by radio and the players not giving it their all.

"They are being babysat, they're being coddled," McCreary said. "The players are not playing to the level of professionalism we are accustomed to and hate every night!"

Linesman Greg Devorski hinted, too, that the players were letting the officials down by taking things easy.

"I haven't seen too many body checks and the intensity level hasn't been so high," Devorski said.

Devorski said he felt sick watching other people — some of whom he knew — do his job.

Soccer victories shine brightly in gloom of Romania, Bulgaria

The Associated Press

Romanians and Bulgarians, Balkan neighbors beset by poverty and drudgery, finally have something to celebrate: soccer triumphs that propelled their teams to next year's World Cup in the United States.

It was some of the best news for either country since the ouster of their Communist dictatorships four years ago.

"Hey, Hey, USA!" shouted jubilant crowds that poured into Bucharest's chilly streets after Romania beat Wales 2-1 in Cardiff on Wednesday night.

Communist economic woes.

Politics also took a backseat to sports in Sofia, where Bulgaria's parliament put off a no-confidence vote in the government because of Wednesday night's televised game.

Bulgaria beat France 2-1 in Paris, sending cheering fans into Sofia's wintry streets.

The beleaguered government wasted little time trying to latch onto the victors' coatsails. But Premier Lyuben Berov was disappointed when he showed up at the airport at 5 a.m. Thursday to greet the team's charter flight. Only two players were aboard, the others apparently having missed the plane because they were celebrating in Paris nightspots.

There was little apparent political fallout. Berov survived the postponed no-confidence vote late Thursday, the fourth such attempt to unseat his government.

The thrill wore off quickly for some Romanians, who have suffered staggering inflation and unemployment in the tough transition from Communism to a market economy. Later Thursday, about 15,000 people were on the streets of Bucharest protesting falling living standards.

But for a brief moment, the victory over Wales was something everyone could celebrate.

Opposition legislator Ion Ratiu declared it a "tonic" at a time "when everybody is trying to survive an economic disaster."

The news took up the entire front page of the daily Evenimentul Zilei. One headline said: "Good morning-America, wherever you are."

"Events like the one in Cardiff last better bring us hope ... for a better future," said editor Ion Cristoiu.

Defendant gets rare chance to hit witness

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Ray Mercer will go on trial Dec. 6 on an attempted bribery charge, but first he wants to settle a certain matter with a witness.

Mercer gets a chance to avenge a loss that knocked him out of a heavyweight title bid when he fights Jesse Ferguson. Mercer is charged with offering $100,000 to Ferguson to "lose" the fight Feb. 6 at Madison Square Garden.

"As far as I am concerned it's ludicrous and an absolute joke," promoter Bob Arum, a lawyer, said of the pending trial.

The trial, however, has served as a handy promotional tool for Arum, who has played up the defendant vs. the prosecution witness angle in selling the pay-per-view match.

The 10-round match Friday night at the Convention Center will be Mercer's third since he lost to Ferguson, and it was made before his trial date was set.

"Mercer, on the advice of attorney Dominick Amoroso, did not attend a news conference Wednesday."

In a conference call last week, he contended that the rematch was the only thing on his mind.

Ray Mercer, left, will get the chance not only to avenge a loss in this Feb. 6 bout with Jesse Ferguson, but will be facing the man testifying against him on an attempted bribery charge from that fight.

Ferguson. He said he expected to weigh 225 pounds for the rematch.

The win over Mercer, 32, earned Ferguson a $500,000 challenge against Bowe, who knocked him out in the second round May 22.

As-for his being a prosecution witness, Ferguson said, "What I'm doing I'm doing to protect myself."

"It has nothing to do with me, I've not done anything wrong," added Ferguson who was not charged with failure to report a bribe.

The prosecution said Mercer can be heard on certain video tapes of the fight attempting to bribe Ferguson.

Roslynn Maukopf, an assistant district attorney, said at a hearing July 12 that "the offer came in an early round of the fight and it was repeated several times throughout."

U.S. is host to un-American spectacle

By Jim Litke AP sports writer

A sport they hardly understand, inciting passions they can barely imagine, and peopled with names they can't pronounce is going to be sold relentlessly to Americans between now and next summer.

Even so, anybody searching for World Cup relics by next fall can probably pick up a few at deep discount.

Unfortunately for promoters, a few of the things that might at least have aroused Americans already have been cut out of next summer's extravaganza at nine U.S. cities.

England's failure to qualify means huge numbers of hooligans will probably stay home. Granted, this is good for the police, but bad for those TV executives who hoped their pregame shows might lure viewers away from "Rescue 911."

Even the most politically charged regional qualifying tournament is being made ineligible for the United States. Somehow, Iran, Iraq and North Korea got stuck in the same group and none made it out.

That aside, discriminating Americans can still find much to learn and enjoy about soccer. For one thing, soccer fans take loving beyond the NFL's strictest fans' wildest dreams.

Mike Ditka at his most macho would still have to go a ways to come up with a lament as loaded as Welsh coach Terry Yorath did Wednesday. His team was bested 2-1 by Romania at Cardiff, blowing its chance to qualify for the cup for the first time since 1958.

"I has all dealt Welsh football a cruel blow again," Yorath said. "We will be stuck with that nearly-man tag again."

The gnashing of teeth there was restrained compared to the wailing that accompanied the locals' defeat in other spots on the Continent.

France's defense, which needed only a draw in either of its last two games, crumpled suddenly and lost to Bulgaria with 10 seconds left.

With England's chances for making the field all but gone before Wednesday's results, a British tabloid offered Poland's team $15,000 per player if it helped the cause by beating the Netherlands.

Poland coach Leslaw Ciklik admitted it was "a wonderful incentive," but lost anyway. Now the Mirror can spend the cash defending itself in court for publishing pictures of Princess Diana working out in Scotland — something that sold much better over here than soccer is likely to.

Only a few weeks ago, Disney released a movie about a similarly improbable athletic undertaking — "Jamaicans slipping and sliding" down the side of a mountain in a rickety sled — and made a bundle.

But even Disney isn't daftly enough to risk serious front money on that curiosity the rest of the world correctly calls "football" and Americans — always fashionably late coming to the party — call soccer.

It's . . . so simple. so timely. so important.

Trade pact win opens GATT gateway

Next after NAFTA

These are the steps needed in each country for the North American Free Trade Agreement — passed Wednesday night by the House — to go into effect on Jan. 1, 1994.

UNITED STATES: The agreement needs approval by the Senate. Both Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell and Minority Leader Bob Dole said the opposition in the Senate would not be as strong as it was in the House and foresaw a Senate vote before Thanksgiving.

CANADA: The agreement was approved by Parliament last May but must be officially proclaimed by new Prime Minister Jean Chretien for it to take effect. He has said he will not do that until the United States addresses Canadian concerns on energy, government subsidies and dumping.

MEXICO: Approval by the Mexican Senate is a foregone conclusion because President Carlos Salinas de Gortari's party controls 61 of 64 Senate seats.

By James Flaminio and Patrick Lee
Los Angeles Times

Now that the House of Representatives finally has approved the North American Free Trade Agreement, an even bigger question looms:

What happens next to global trade? With the House passage of NAFTA, the U.S. Congress now is much more likely to mullify the most ambitious trading regime in history — the renewal and expansion of the 110-nation General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, or GATT.

That expansion — which would bring free trade to agricultural products, to services such as banking and engineering and to intellectual property such as films, videos and television programs — would have been defied if opponents of free trade had snuffed NAFTA on Wednesday.

Defeat of NAFTA also would have dashed the hopes of Argentina, Chile and other South American countries for similar U.S. trade agreements.

That sense, the yes vote on NAFTA, which faces certain Senate approval, is a signal that the United States more than ever before sees its economic future in doing business with all the countries of the world. The world's largest customer wants to become the world's largest business partner.

And it will begin with its neighbors, Canada — already the largest U.S. trading partner — and Mexico, the poor relation that promises one of the great growth markets of the next few decades.

It is all part of the pattern of expanding commerce that for the past seven years has formed the basis of the Uruguay Round talks on GATT, the 46-year-old global trade agreement. Successful resolution of the GATT talks would increase world trade in goods and services by $274 billion in the next decade, according to the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development.

But nothing is simple in trade matters. The current talks face a Dec. 15 deadline for amendment-free consideration by the U.S. Congress, and many obstacles remain — not least among them France's objections to reductions of agricultural subsidies, which would favor U.S. farm exports.

Passage of NAFTA, demonstrating U.S. willingness to give as well as get in trade agreements, will help open markets shown by the vote this open foreign government procurement of U.S.-made goods and win greater protection for U.S. copyrights, among other things.

I am sure that the commitment to open markets shown by the vote this evening will greatly assist the successful conclusion of the Uruguay Round, before Dec. 15," said Leon Brittan, external economic affairs commissioner for the European Community, in a statement released after the House vote.

Brittan is scheduled to meet Monday in Washington with U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor to begin negotiations.

As for the economic consequences of NAFTA, many experts have predicted that little will happen immediately. But there is evidence to the contrary. Mexico will act to reduce its tariffs and other barriers to imports and foreign investment beginning in January. And, even though these steps will be phased in over five years, the flow of U.S. goods to Mexico should begin to pick up, analysts said.

Take Ford Motor Co. It now produces 12 different car models at its Mexico City plant. It is not economical to produce small quantities of so many models, but Ford was forced to do so by import barriers. Ford Vice Chairman Allan D. Gilmore said. Now, with NAFTA, "we'll produce two models in Mexico City and ship others from U.S. plants," Gilmore said.

Shifting alliances mark this presidency

By Ann Devroy and Dan Balz
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — In assembling a winning coalition for a second major initiative and one of the sweetest victories of his presidency, Bill Clinton proved again he can breathe life back into proposals hovering near death.

But the effort also demonstrated that for this president — elected with 43 percent of the vote and governing with approval ratings below 50 percent — success won't be easy, won't be pretty and probably won't happen because of any sustaining coalition.

"This guy is trying to move domestic policy a long way. He hasn't called it the New Deal or the Great Society, the way FDR or LBJ did," said Richard Brody, a political science professor at Stanford. "So it's not like there's a huge legislative package that's organized together. That's why every week it's a new story and every week, his support is on the line."

An administration official made the same case another way: "Any time you have a 48 percent (approval rating) president, every major vote is a death struggle. You are dealing with members who don't know whether to embrace him or run from him." The reference highlighted Clinton's approval rating, which only occasionally has risen above 50 percent.

Clinton won the budget battles of last summer without a single Republican. His coalition on the North American Free Trade Agreement contained only 30 percent of the Democrats. Analysts suggest assembling a winning coalition for his next initiatives — banking, health care reform, will be somewhere in between and somewhat harder.

For the budget, the Democratic leadership mostly backed him and carried the ball. For the trade pact, the House GOP led the charge, but when the Democrats would not. For health care reform, the leadership of both parties may well be splintered, forcing the White House itself into a complicated dance of competing interests in which the president is tugged to the left, tugged to the right, both internally and in Congress.

White House Chief of Staff Thomas F. "Mac" McLarty said Wednesday night, "I think his coalition will change for every issue. He will not have as stable a collection of votes to rely on as other presidents have had. But I think he has proven he can come up off the mat and get things done."

Former Republican representative Vin Weber (Minn.) said the NAFTA vote would put the Clinton presidency on its knees. "The coalition that (backed) him on NAFTA is going to be described as a shotgun wedding," Weber said, "but I think it is a sustainable coalition on some issues if Clinton really wants to become a centrist Democrat."

The danger for Clinton, Weber added, is that he will feel compelled to rush back to embrace organized labor and the liberals in his own party to heal the rupture caused by the bitter NAFTA debate. NAFTA, he said, could be "a watershed vote" for Clinton's presidency if he resists that course.

"This (the NAFTA coalition) is a coalition the president could utilize to reform government and change the direction of the country in some ways," Weber said. "But it almost assuredly opens up a challenge for him on the left."

Defeated, but not down

Ross Perot promises to build his group 'United We Stand' into a 'bigger and stronger' organization in time for retribution against congressional supporters of NAFTA.

Undaunted Perot vows to gain from NAFTA debate

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Ornerly and defiant in defeat, Ross Perot vowed Wednesday to make his organization "bigger and stronger" in time for retribution against congressional supporters of the North American Free Trade Agreement.

Perot also said the NAFTA experience will only intensify his desire to delve into health care and other political battles, and he coyly suggested he might soon drop his organization to turning his opposition into a third political party.

Perot said he had "not yet reached that point, but said many United We Stand America leaders wanted to launch a third party and the time might be approaching when I can't hold them back. The anger is through the roof."

Since forming United We Stand, Perot has consistently taken the position that the organization should not be transformed into a political party. But asked in an interview Wednesday if he still held that view, Perot said: "I'm not saying that. That has been my personal opinion but this has been an education."

As the House debated the North American Free Trade Agreement, Perot made a few more calls on members to lobby against the pact, but by mid-afternoon conceded it would pass, and it did Wednesday night.

The vote dealt a major defeat for Perot in his first foray outside of the deficit and government reform agenda that anchored his independent presidential candidacy last year. And even in advance of the vote, it was clear both parties believed one lesson of the NAFTA debate was to be more aggressive

'I'd hold off on writing his obituary.'

— Top Clinton political adviser James Carville in answering Perot's criticisms.

"It certainly shows that the way to beat Ross Perot is head on," said James Carville, a top Clinton political adviser. Still, Carville said Perot has proven his resilience. "I'd hold off on writing his obituary."

Republican pollster Neil Newhouse said Perot remained a potent force but was having difficulty expanding his base beyond the nearly 20 percent he won in last year's election.

"I don't think he has done anything to take away from his core constituency and if anything he has probably crystallized and energized that group," said Republican pollster Neil Newhouse. "But he hasn't done anything to expand it. This has certainly diminished his national star."

But Perot disputed such suggestions and predicted a backlash from the NAFTA vote against both political parties — to his gain.

"Our switchboards are just jammed with working Americans who feel that have been abandoned by both political parties," Perot said. "It is going to be a watershed event in American politics. There are three votes — NAFTA, 1994 in November and then again in 1996."

Beginning Thursday, Perot said United We Stand Chapters would begin new membership efforts using the NAFTA vote and the deals Clinton cut to win support as their rallying cry.

He has refused to say how many members the group has and would not set a target on the new drive. But he predicted it would bring a flood of blue-collar workers to United We Stand's ranks to help its members defeat NAFTA supporters next year.

They feel very strongly against people who voted to damage the lives and the standard of living and the jobs of people in this country and the tax base of this country — and particularly those who did it when they were paid to change their vote," Perot said. "They are going to pay the price."

Several state United We Stand officials interviewed Wednesday promised to make MET a "slim-must test" for support of Perot backers in 1994 congressional contests.

"We are the swing vote," said C.J. Barthelemy, the New Jersey United We Stand director.

Roger Henson, United We Stand's anti-NAFTA coordinator in Texas, said he had told many of the state's House members, "You are going to be hearing about NAFTA until next November."

Several House members who are likely to be targeted by Perot's group, however, showed no fear as they supported NAFTA during the House debate.

One of them, Democratic Rep. Jim Buchus of Florida, predicted a gush of exports — not jobs to Mexico under NAFTA. "It is precisely the opposite of the sucking sound Ross Perot talks about," Buchus said.

With win, Clinton cements image of a 'New Democrat'

By Carol Jozaitis and Mitchell Lofin
Chicago Tribune

WASHINGTON — The House of Representatives' resounding approval of the North American Free Trade Agreement Wednesday night sealed President Clinton with a major, come-from-behind legislative victory that establishes him as the kind of "New Democrat" he has claimed to be.

In the long run, NAFTA may be one of the year's least memorable issues. But the hotly contested debate signals Clinton's emergence as a strong leader who can set the national agenda even if he has to buck a majority of his own party and a traditional power base such as organized labor and the administration.

After a full day of often-passionate debate, the House voted 234-200 in favor of the pact that phases out tariffs and trade barriers with Mexico and Canada. A majority of Democrats voted against the treaty, 156-102, while Republicans voted 132-43 in favor. The lone independent was opposed.

The Senate is expected to give it easy approval before Thanksgiving.

Although Clinton didn't set out to make NAFTA a major issue — and the ferocity of the debate seemed to come from nowhere — the agreement ultimately became a test of the president's New Democratic vision. Along the way, NAFTA became central to Clinton's efforts to combat an isolationist mood in the country and to chart a courageous new course for a nation uncertain of its role in the post-Cold War world.

Along the way, NAFTA became a crisis that weakened Clinton's standing on the global stage, the White House sorely needed to win on NAFTA. Though accused earlier this fall of lacking commitment, the president in recent weeks poured his energies and the administration's resources into the lobbying.

In doing so, Clinton risked deep divisions in the Democratic Party. Also, having given Ross Perot a platform for fanning the flames of discontent among workers, the White House was forced to try to deflate its constant critic by challenging him to a debate.

In a quirky alignment of political forces, House Majority Leader Richard A. Gephardt, D-Mo., and other Democratic leaders lined up votes against Clinton, while the president traded fire with organized labor and cozied up to his most partisan Republican enemies.

By relying on a coalition of centrist Democrats and Republicans to pass NAFTA, critics said, Clinton won a questionable victory at a considerable cost to his relationship with union and liberal Democrats in the House.

"This has created a hornet's nest for health care," predicted Colin Campbell, a presidential historian at Georgetown University. "He can't govern with the coalition that provided him with NAFTA. He's going to need the bedrock liberal Democratic constituency to get his health-care package through."

NAFTA became the latest near-death legislative battle for Clinton, whose approval rating this week slipped to below the 50 percent mark. Until the last minute, it appeared that his weak popularity was hampering him in forging the coalition necessary for passing the controversial program.

issue for Clinton's presidency. Elevating the issue to the level of such historic, nation-shaping votes as the Louisiana Purchase, administration officials argued that it represented more than just an effort to eliminate tariffs with Mexico.

Vice President Al Gore said the defeat of NAFTA would have been "a blow to the president," who sets out Thursday for an economic conference with Asian leaders in Seattle. "It would (have) hurt his ability to argue with Europeans and Japan" that a global agreement for lifting trade barriers should be completed by year-end.

After preaching the benefits of free trade to other countries in an effort to open new markets for U.S. goods, Clinton stood to lose face with other nations if he failed to make that case with Congress.

Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., a NAFTA supporter, maintained that the vote would affect Clinton's leverage with global leaders on a range of Democratic Party issues. "When you're the leader of the world and you take a self-destructive act that nobody else in the world understands, you're not listened to as much as you would be if you were able to see the future and act to build a better future for your people and the world," Bradley said.

Others, however, downplayed NAFTA's importance. The stakes, as well as the risks, to Clinton's presidency were overblown in all the hoopla, they said, predicting that in the future voters will judge Clinton based on the overall economy, not on NAFTA.

"This is a classic case of everyone inside the Washington Beltway being whipped into a frenzy and everyone outside of it being moved to a yawn," said David Axelrod, a Chicago-based Democratic political consultant. "In terms of substance, I don't think most Americans are passionate about NAFTA. The political implications are rather small."

The majority party traditionally loses seats in mid-term congressional elections; so already-nervous House Democrats, all of whom will be up for re-election next year, feel the heat from labor's threat to challenge them if they supported NAFTA.

Clinton's promise to take the edge off attacks on pro-NAFTA Republicans also did not sit well with some Democrats. It could cause problems for Clinton next year, particularly in close races where he could be viewed by Democrats trying to unseat incumbent Republicans as giving up on the economy.

As for 1996, the trade pact's impact on the economy, for better or worse, could be too long in coming to affect the presidential election.

Nobody is going to walk into the polling booth in '96 and say, 'I can't vote for Clinton because of NAFTA,'" Gephardt said. "What they'll vote on is what's happening to them in the economy. If that is in good shape in '96, he'll be in good shape. If it's not, he'll be harder."

The president is counting on labor and liberals having no place else to go when he comes up for re-election. The healing process, he hopes, will come from working together on universal health care, job training and education issues dear to the hearts of the groups Clinton differed with over NAFTA. In fact, while labor leaders were exhorting the president over the trade pact, union representatives were in the White House working to get the confirmation on his health-care legislation.

'Sesame Street' adds cast members, Muppets

By Suzanne Gill
TV Data Technologies

When "Sesame Street" begins its 25th year on PBS Monday, the Count will have plenty to do.

There are four new adult characters, four new children and eight new Muppets. There will be 130 new shows this season, for a grand total of 3,250 (so far).

The show has 51 Emmys and a main character - Big Bird - who's still just 6.

Though the series mission is to reach 3- to 5-year olds from minority and low-income families, nearly every preschooler in America has seen "Sesame Street."

The preschoolers of long ago who watched "Sesame Street" when it debuted in March 1969 are now reading, writing and making change using skills they first practiced in front of a television set. And they're becoming the parents of a second generation of viewers.

When "Sesame Street" first started, says Sonia Manzano, who plays Maria, "most kids who were watching took home with their parents. Now most kids, most American children, are going to be in day care. They're going to be watching "Sesame Street" in a group, not individually."

Over the years, the "Sesame Street" curriculum has been expanded in accordance with the advice of child development experts. It now includes pre-reading, pre-writing and pre-science fundamentals; geography, environmental awareness, social interaction, family relationships and human and cultural diversity. Segments in Spanish and sign language are regular features, and topics have included marriage, birth and death - but not divorce. Says Executive Producer Michael Loman, "Research showed that children would be fied of the (episode). So we did not (broadcast) that show on divorce."

Instead, Children's Television Workshop, producers of the show, have decided to emphasize family matters, including day care, over the next several seasons. To pave the way, they are introducing an expanded set for the 25th season. Called "Around the Corner," the new set is a busy block that intersects with the old at Big Bird's nest.

A park occupies one side of the cul de sac, while the other includes a day-care center, thrift shop, a Muppet-sized hotel, a night club ("Birdland"), a dance studio and a subway station perfect for arriving guests who this year include Marilyn Home, Lily Tomlin, Rick Moranis, Garth Brooks and the Neville Brothers.

"I guess encourage adults to watch the show" along with the kids, says Loman, adding that this is a cornerstone of the show's educational success.

The day-care center is run by newener Angela (Angel Jemott), who's married to Jamal (Jou Jou Pappalari), the park ranger. The dance studio creates a spot for dance breaks. "I have been added to the show to get viewers moving. The hotel, dubbed the Furry Arms, is run by new Muppets Ingrid and Humphrey, the parents of Baby Natasha. "If you're a chicken, you're in town," says Telly Monster. "You'll be staying at the Furry Arms."

The thrift shop, Finders Keepers, is full of fascinating phenomena with a fairy-tale past, and shopkeeper Ruth Buzzi ("Laugh-In") is on hand to tell stories to browsers and buyers alike.

"Everything on 'Sesame Street," Loman says, "is driven by our research department and the curriculum. There isn't any silly, funny bit that doesn't have some motive behind it in terms of education."

Overall, says Loman, "we're putting into place families and extended families so that, not this year, but the following several years, we can deal with families." Angela and Jamal, for instance, are relatives of Susan (original cast member Loreta Long) and Gordon (Roscoe Orman), and they have a 6-month-old baby, Kayla.

New Muppet faces include Zoe, an irrepressible 3-year-old; The Squirrels - Crystal, Darlene and Rhonda - a Motown trio living in the park near inquisitive Wanda Cousteau. Previously, says Manzano, introducing female Muppets "had been problematic."

Most of the successful male puppets have compulsions, like Cookie Monster always has to eat cookies, and that's funny, that's acceptable in the male. As soon as you show a female monster that has to eat all the time, we would have (received) tons of letters saying, 'Why are you showing a female that's overly concerned with food?'

But behind the scenes caution has paid-off-in-a-quarter-century of funny, endearing memories and millions of youngsters a bit better prepared for school and the world around them.

"There's barely a kid in America," says PBS programming chief Jennifer Lawson, "who can't identify Big Bird, and - most importantly, though - those kids who can identify Big Bird have also been introduced on a regular basis to letters, to numbers, to culture and to social skills. And that's the real value of 'Sesame Street.'"

Actor of 'Doogie Howser' fame plays teen-age killer

By Patricia Brennan
The Washington Post

When Neil-Patrick Harris set out to separate himself from Doogie Howser, the precocious adolescent physician he played for four seasons, he chose a role that would have made the young doctor shudder: He plays Brian Hannigan, a Maryland teen-ager who kills his adoptive parents in a bloody fury.

A child who idolized Dr. Doogie should not watch "A Family Torn Apart" (Sunday night on NBC).

This is the story of Joe and Maureen Hannigan (John Jackowski and Linda Kelsey), a religiously devout couple with high expectations and rigid standards. Their three adopted sons are played by Harris, Johnny Galecki and Leslie Walker. "I made it," said this movie is based on a real family in Annapolis and a book about the case, "Sudden Fury," by Leslie Walker.

"We did a dramatization based on the case," Harris said. "We had to change certain things. They would have just seemed too far-fetched."

Truth, it seems, can be just as horrifying as even television's sickest crimes gratuitously violent fiction.

Harris said this movie addresses the physical and psychological abuse that some parents heap on their children. "They're trying to get a message to people that this kind of abuse does exist. As far as the violence standpoint, there's not very much violence - you see blood and you see the beginnings of violence. But that's what we're trying to change, isn't it?"

Author Walker said she was pleased with the film, particularly its presentation of the broken relationship and Harris's and Galecki's acting, but she said abuse was not her book's message.

These parents were not supposed to be portrayed as murderers," she said. "I felt very strongly that his (Brian Hannigan's) foster-care background was key to the story. This is not a story of a young man who just explodes one day against his parents because they were too strict with him and abused him. ... (Brian) had too many sets of parents and was taken from one home to another and never was given a chance to bond with the parents. So he came to the (Hannigan) household as a very damaged child."

Walker said she objected when people asked what she thought was a crucial passage underscoring that point.

NBC's movie is based on the case of Robert and Kathryn Swartz, found dead at their home in the riotous community of Cape St. Claire in January 1984.

Bob, 52, had been stabbed 17 times. Kay, 43, was found next to the family's swimming pool, her skull split open with a maul.

Rebellious Michael (played by Galecki of "Roseanne"), who had been expelled from school and sent to reform school, was immediately suspected, but the killer turned out to be 17-year-old Larry, a Broadneck High School student.

Larry Swartz pleaded guilty to a second-degree murder and served nine years of a 12-year sentence at Maryland's Patuxent Institution, where he was able to get therapy and work on college correspondence courses. He also made many supportive friends from among readers of Walker's book. Larry Swartz was released in January and is now working as a janitor in Annapolis.

But Michael Swartz took a darker path. Released at 18, without a high-school certificate and disowned by his family, he had no support and fell in with a local murderer from Florida, Walker said.

In July 1990, just before he was to have joined Walker for a book tour, Michael Swartz was charged with stabbing a 57-year-old Robert Austin Bell 30 times for his jar of quarters, containing less than $75. Now 28, Swartz is serving a life sentence for first-degree murder in a Maryland Prison.

"He had a much more abrasive personality than Larry," Walker said. "The tragedy of Michael was that when Larry killed their parents, he left Michael homeless and family-less at a crucial time in his life. He was in reform school, he was released and the extended members of his family disowned him."

To this day, relatives believe that Michael was involved in that murder. The one thing he wanted most in life was a reunion with his parents; "and when Larry killed their parents, he took away from him the only solace, solace, emotionally distraught, uneducated young man with no community support. I found him the more tragic of the two characters."

Larry Swartz appears to have a brighter future. Walker said an academic dean who corresponded with him wants to help him continue college work, and a family with children gave him a home when he was released.

Harris, the son of two lawyers ("Mom actually wanted to be a theater major"), started his acting career doing community theater in Ruidoso, N.M. He worked in movies and television, but it was NBC's "Doogie Howser, M.D.," that brought him the People's Choice Award as favorite male performer in a new series. The show also won Harris' favorite new series that season.

Quirky 'Twin Peaks' goes to Russia

By John Jans
The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Does American Gothic translate? Stay tuned. The arrival of the quirky series "Twin Peaks" on Russian television may provide a clue.

Several more conventional foreign soap operas, including "Santa Barbara" and the Mexican telenovela "The Rich and the Poor," have drawn huge followings in Russia.

"Twin Peaks," which debuted on state television a week ago, confused many American viewers and may completely baffled Russians. It dwells on the backward, junk food and coffee take on profound meanings, and characters speak in riddles.

But some think it could be a hit.

The show's odd American Gothic ambience, inhabited with psychopaths, lunatic policemen, disappointed foreign investors, corrupt entrepreneurs and violent teenagers is reminiscent — in a twisted way, of course — of the insane world we enjoy here," wrote Arty Troitsky, a Russian commentator for the English-language Moscow Times.

Office worker Alexander Drobnin gave the show a thumbs-up after the first two episodes.

"I don't watch soap operas at all, because they are silly, completely," he said. "I don't care who killed Laura. I don't care who killed Laura."

Yuri Gladishevich, a television critic for the newspaper Segodnya, predicted many Russians would have difficulty grasping the twisted plot.

"But when they do, it will be impossible to stop watching," he said.

The series centers on fictional FBI agent Dale Cooper, who is sent to a Pacific Northwest lumber town called Twin Peaks to investigate the murder of high-school beauty queen Laura Palmer.

The series gained critical acclaim and a cult following in the United States when it ran three years ago. But a week after its debut on Russia's state-run television, the identity of Palmer's killer is less than a burning question for most Russians. "I don't care who killed Laura," said Irina Shugayeva, an office worker. "What makes the series interesting is the investigation process and its peculiar plot."

Plot pörtenes

Days of Our Lives

The gun used to kill Curtis Brown is found in Billie's bedroom. Kristen and John share a kiss after Billie releases her from the ledge. Tom suffers a dizzy spell and tries to hide it. Sami is livid when John accompanies Marlena to the house for Thanksgiving dinner. The Kirakis' breathe a sigh of relief upon hearing that the police have built a strong case against Billie. Kate learns of Vivian's visit to Pine Haven to see Laura Horton and decides to make one of her own. Abe testifies against Jonah, who must now wait several days before the medical school board makes a final decision.

General Hospital

Jenny makes a startling decision regarding Bill's shares of ELQ which does not sit well with the Quartermaines. Damian asks his father for a loan. Things get off to a shaky start when Luke and Laura move into the brownstone with Lucky. Brenda breaks off with Jagger after finding him with Karen at the library. Sean questions Alan about Ray. Karen's mother returns from the hospital. Scott and Katherine make plans to wed, believing the news will bring Lucy back to Port Charles.

The Young and the Restless

After Victor strongly suggests that she invite Cole for Thanksgiving, Nikki agrees. Jill says John will be fine but Ashley calls the doctor to hear it from him. It appears John had a "warning," but not a heart attack as everyone feared. It is a highly tense situation when Paul tells Brad that Scott is dead. Lauren asks Brad to take care of things at Fenmore's. Scott comes in at this moment and explains "Lauren" when Scott's Lauren gently asks "Lauren" why Scott is "gone to sleep." Scott will never wake again. Cole and Victoria agree that they have to be very careful about their affair. She then becomes quite playful and tells him that she will flirt outrageously with him during the Thanksgiving celebration.

One Life to Live

Nora checks into the hospital for brain surgery. Cassie calls Dorian evil and says she never wants to see her again. After Max convinces Luna of his love, he heroically saves them both from a fire that breaks out in her room. A burdened Rachel confides in Hank about Nora's condition. Cassie returns home to confront her grief over baby William. Rachel and Hank convince Nora to tell Bo about her surgery. Max and Luna's experience car trouble and stay away on an airplane as they try to get back to Llanview in time for their wedding.

Loving

After kidnapping Tyler, Dante poses as an FBI agent and returns the baby to the Alden mansion. Frankie accuses Angie of trying to destroy Jesse's memory. Angie finds out that Charles is an FBI agent and it was he who broke into her house to retrieve Frankie's videotape. Steffi is upset when she learns Cassie's Thanksgiving plans do not include her. Stacy is not pleased over Trucker and Dinah Lee's closeness. Dante holds an unidentified prisoner captive in his apartment.

All My Children

Dixie is stalked by a wolf when she ventures out into the wilderness to find Tad. Ted reveals a twisted plan to kill Tad and substitute for him. Both Tad and Dixie fall into Ted's traps. Maria confirms Dixie and Tad's affair to Brooke, who then rushes to tell Edmund he was right. Dimitri asks Erica for forgiveness; but she asks him for a divorce. Erica says Gloria and Alec are having an affair. Jamal catches Timmy smoking a joint and takes it away from him, then Trevor enters the room and sees the drugs.

Swayze opts out of 3rd part of series

By Bettelou Peterson
Knight-Ridder News Service

Q. I'm a huge fan of the "North and South" miniseries. Parts I and II. I recently heard there is a Part III in the making. Please tell me that Patrick Swayze with other original cast members are in the cast. — A.K., Lakota, Iowa.

A. Swayze figures he's into features now, although his career has been in the dumps lately with a series of flop films. Kyle Chandler ("Homefront") has taken over as Charles Main in "Heaven and Hell," the concluding miniseries based on John Jakes' "North and South," filming now for February release. Original cast members on deck are Lesley-Anne Down, James Reed, Phillip Casnoff, Terri Garber, Wendy Kilbourne, Jonathan Frakes and Genie Francis.

Q. I would like to write to whoever does the programming for CBS and NBC. How do you name and address? — M.L.S., Lima, Ohio.

A. They're Jeff Sagansky, President, Entertainment, CBS-TV, 7800 Beverly Blvd., Los Angeles, Calif. 90036; and Warren Littlefield, President, Entertainment, NBC, 3000 W. Alameda Ave., Burbank, Calif. 91523.

Q. Give me some information on Jennifer Tilly, last seen in "Key West." Where's she from; what other acting has she done? —

J.M., Birmingham, Mich.

A. Tilly was born in Harbor City, Calif., but raised in Victoria, British Columbia, Canada. She landed in show business right after high school when she was cast in the 1984 TV series "Shaping Up." Since then, she's appeared on "Hill Street Blues," "Cheers" and "Moonlighting" and in the movies, "The Fabulous Baker Boys," "High Spirits" and "Loving Violations."

Q. Settle a debate about Maury Povich's age. I say he's 61. His wife is 47. Is that correct? — Mrs. G.F., Hatfield, Pa.

A. Povich is 54. His wife, Connie Chung, is 47. I enjoyed the reruns of "The Rockford Files." How long did the series run? If it was as popular as I've heard, why was it canceled? Is there a chance of a "Rockford" reunion? — S.H., Winnipeg, Manitoba.

A. "Rockford" ran from 1974-80. It was popular, but they can't do it with its star. Jim Garner tired of the role and acted from a multitude of injuries, including a bad knee reinjured several times doing "Rockford" stunts. He also was feuding with Universal over his share of the show's profits.

Taylor comes full circle

Josh Taylor was one of the most popular soap actors when he appeared as Chris Kostelch on "Days of Our Lives" for nine years. He was definitely one of the bigger stars of daytime during that period and his ruggedly handsome face adorned all many soap magazines covers. When he left daytime it was for prime time (actually he did both simultaneously for a while) to play Valerie Harper's pilot-husband in "Valerie" (which later became "The Hogan Family").

Josh Taylor Returns to daytime television

John N. Goudas

The big news in soap circles these days is Josh's return to daytime in the No. 1-ranked soap, "The Young and the Restless." He is the mystery man in Nina Chancellor's life and speculation is running high that he will turn out to be her father.

"Coming back to daytime on a hit show like 'The Young and the Restless' is a big plus. I have always liked this soap even when I was working on another show. It's my personal favorite. They really know how to do it right. It's very rewarding to be on this soap, and I am looking forward to developing my character in the weeks to come."

In the meantime, Josh has been doing double duty. Before the "Y&R" offer came along, Josh had committed to appear in a theatre production of "I Hate Hamlet" in Illinois, near the town where he grew up. Bill Bell, "Y&R" executive producer, agreed to keep his workload on the soap light so that he could fulfill his stage commitment.

"I play the ghost of John Barymore in 'I Hate Hamlet' and it's a great part. Also, my mom and dad and friends can come and see me since I'm doing a play in my old stomping grounds in Peoria, Illinois."

Josh remembers growing up in Chilli-colle, Illinois, and being a jock in high school. However, he also became a huge fan of Paul Newman and secretly yearned to be Newman. That was the first time Josh ever thought of becoming an actor, but he kept it to himself and did not act until until some years later. Said Josh, "When I grew up, they would look at you funny if you said you wanted to be an actor."

After high school, he attended Dartmouth where his major was sociology and he went on to law school at the University of Denver. However, the prospect of practicing law for the rest of his life lost its appeal and he headed for Los Angeles where he managed a restaurant.

"A waitress at the restaurant I managed took me to an acting workshop one night and I was hooked. The old desire to become an actor came out and I stayed in the workshop for over a year." Then, driven by blind bravado, he haunted agents' offices and was signed by Universal Studios. After small roles in many TV series, Josh gravitated to daytime and "Days of Our Lives." Now he has come full circle and is back to daytime. Of course, this does not mean that you won't be seeing Josh in other shows and TV movies. Josh believes in keeping his acting skills sharpened and taking all sorts of roles is his way of "staying in shape."

"The Young and the Restless" airs weekdays from 10 to 11 a.m. on CBS (KSL) and from 2 to 3 p.m. on (KMYT).

Soap 'Beach' was imported from Australia

Q. Are there any plans to return CBS' newest soap to an afternoon time slot instead of its current late-night spot? — J.W., Van Nuys, Calif.

A. "Beach" is not a CBS summer show. It was a syndicated 1993 network import from Australia and the number of shows was limited.

Q. Rick Lake, who hosts "The Rick Lake Show," looks a lot like the girl on "China Beach" but thinner. Is that her and, if so, how did she lose the weight? — Z.R., Virginia Beach, Va.

A. It's Lake, who was Holly, the Doughtnut Dolly, for a season (1989-90) on "China Beach." She used exercise and a diet to trim down for her new talk show, which producer, Gail Steinberg says is aimed at younger viewers. So far, the show hasn't attracted many viewers of any age and may not survive. Q. Where can I write to CBS correspondent Edie Magnus? — T.M., Lackawanna, N.Y.

A. CBS News 524 W. 57th Street, New York, N.Y. 10019.

Q. Tell me what became of Van Williams, of "Green Home" fame? What did he do after that? How old is he now? — M.S., East Haven, Conn.

A. "Homet" was Williams' fourth series. The other three were "Bourbon Street Beat," "Sturkie's Six" and "The Tycoon." He did a few guest roles in other series and a Saturday morning kids' show, "Westwind." A good businessman, Williams, now 59, had invested well and by the mid-70s had given up acting to run his other interests.

Q. Last spring, I saw "The Return of Inconnite." Tell me when the original "Inconnite" aired and for how long. — M.S., South Brunswick, N.J.

A. It's "Inconnite" and the late Raymond Burr was seen as the San Francisco cop from 1967-73.

'The Borrowers' fill their world with pieces of ours

By N.F. Mendoza
Los Angeles Times

No one lives alone in author Mary Norton's world. It's populated by "The Borrowers," little people who set up house beneath floorboards and fill their world with bits and pieces of ours.

They decorate in English country tiny: A minibook becomes a chest of drawers, a biscuit tin a bed.

A TNT original movie premiering Saturday based on two Norton books, "The Borrowers" and "The Borrowers Afield," features Ian Holm and his wife Penelope Walton and Rebecca Culland as the Borrowers: Pod, Homily and Arrehty.

They give human "beans" as two-dimensional giants whose homes they live in. And, they don't trust any of them, until they find themselves lost and must rely on an 8-year-old to help them.

Director John Henderson says the stories were childhood favorites of his. He believes the sense of family they instill makes them valuable in today's world. "What it really does is bring out family values, as the family rallies around together to get through things, despite the pressures of modern life. I think the people who like it so much do so because they pull together on things."

"Everyone can be charmed into the story," Henderson insists, from London where he is finishing Parts 3 and 4 of "Borrowers" stories "The Borrowers Afloat" and "The Borrowers Aloft", "It's for ages 2 to 92," he adds.

"The Borrowers," aired in London and won the equivalent of two British Emmy Awards in April for best youth and family programming, and a second for best photography.

"The Borrowers" was originally made in 1973 with Eddie Albert ("Green Acres"), but Henderson says the TNT production is shot strictly from a Borrowers' point of view. "The previous film, was done from both humans' and Borrowers' perspectives." The production cry on this film was the constant emphasis that "we are a Borrowers' film crew," Henderson adds. "The 1973 version was brave at the time, but now we have more toys to play with. We had something like 600 blue-screen processes," explains Henderson.

Despite the technical feats, Henderson emphasizes that the film is not a special-effects film, but a family one.

"The Borrowers" airs Saturday, with Part 2 airing on Nov. 28 on TNT. For ages 4 and up.

All Turner Entertainment Networks (Cartoon, TBS and TNT) will preempt their regular programming for "The Great International Toon-In" (Friday) marathon. TBS hosts a "Bugs-A-Thon," TNT presents "Cartoon All-Stars" and the Cartoon Network airs "Cartoons A-Z." The new cartoon "Moxy" opens the marathon with its debut. For ages 2 and up.

The premiere of "Babar: The Movie" (Friday, Family Channel) follows the pachyderm from his mother's tragic death to his coronation. For ages 2 and up.

A new series "The World of Peter Rabbit and Friends" (Friday, Family Channel) shows kicks off with "The Tailor of Gloucester." For ages 2 and up.

Last year, Pebbles and Bamm-Bamm took a prime-time walk down the aisle. This year, just in time for Thanksgiving, Pebbles will introduce the newest member of the modern stone-age family in "Hollyrock-a-Bye Baby" (Saturday, ABC). For ages 2 and up.

Program shows growing up does not always make sense

By Scott Moore
The Washington Post

Thanksgiving (and Christmas) programming for children is in abundance this week, and there is a new offering on Nickelodeon that is, no turkey.

"The Adventures of Pete and Pete," getting a sneak preview Saturday, continues to track the stream of consciousness of two decidedly different brothers — yes, both named Pete.

This "skewed version of growing up," as the creators call it, started in 1989 as a series of 60-second film shorts by Will McRobb and Chris Viscardi, then working in Nick's promotion department.

Eventually the idea was expanded to five half-hour specials and now is a weekly series, with a cast of guest stars that includes Deborah Harry, R.E.M.'s Michael Stipe, B-52's Kate Pierson and Baltimore Colts Hall-of-Famer Art Donovan. And there's the Petes' mother, who receives radio distress signals through a metal plate in her head.

Subtitled series regulars Michael Marouña (Big Pete), Danny Tamborelli (Little Pete) and Allison Fancelli (Ellen), the show manages to capture some of "The Wonder Years" flavor, with alternative bands such as Polaris, Nice and Mangle. Fields replacing the Motown soundtrack.

"Our best shows are the ones that take childhood experiences that we've all gone through and put that 'Pete and Peter' on it," says Will McRobb. "We hope that our show is not that referential to any other show. We think that our show exists on its own."

hood, but since our show is told from a kid perspective, it is filled with more of a kid mentality."

Growing up, said McRobb, 32, is "weird and twisted and doesn't make sense. It's filled with nonsequiturs, and all the dots don't connect. And we're just trying to capture that, and maybe we take it a little further than that really is. But in a way maybe we're trying to track the stream of consciousness of the shows like

'(Growing up is) filled with nonsequiturs, and all the dots don't connect.'

— Will McRobb, series co-producer

In Saturday's episode, as the Fighting Squids band drills for the regional championship with marching formations based on Crimean War maneuvers, Ellen is swept off her feet by the bandleader's son.

Meanwhile, Little Pete and his classmates are held hostage by a bus driver haunted by the breakup of his relationship with a fellow driver, played by "Saturday Night Live's" Ellen Cleghorn.

The two stories and their principals are done together like the nuclear fusion referred to in the science class at the beginning of the show.

"Pete and Peter" moves into its Sunday-evening timeslot on Dec. 5. Repeats will run a week later, on Sunday afternoon.

Among other children's program highlights for the week:

—Monday: The hilarious "Steven Spielberg Presents Animaniacs" finds Yakko, Wakko and the beakful of Native Americans in Plymouth, Mass., trying to protect their pet turkey from hunter Miles Standish. In addition to a barrel of laughs, the sibling trio has produced a 16-song soundtrack.

—Friday morning: Fox marks its second annual Kids TV Takeover by airing the four programs that received the most votes through Nov. 17.

"What are all these numbers in my TV listings?"

The numbers you see next to television programs in your television listings are supplied as a special service to Times-News readers. You will find numbers for all shows in Friday's TV Weekly, an insert to the Times-News. With VCR

Plus+, you can use these codes to record a show on most VCRs. Just punch in the code listed next to the show you wish to record. That's all there is to it. Your show will be recorded...and your time is your own.

'Ultimate' fight is just that

By Howard Rosenberg
Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD — Yes, as a regular television viewer, I'd seen my share of violence.

But this time, leaning forward on the edge of my chair in front of my TV set Friday evening, I was poised to wince, flinch, shudder and scream out in terror as never before.

To say nothing of laugh. And no wonder, for about to enter my home from Denver's McNichols Arena was the "Ultimate Fighting Championship." A live pay-per-view cable event ($14.95 a pop) in which "eight of the deadliest fighters in the world" would be competing for $50,000 in a fenced-in, eight-sided ring designed for...

NOHHHHHHH ES-
CAAAA...AAAP!!!

The eclectic field of "deadlies" for this SEG-produced spectacular consisted of a sumo wrestler, savate champion, kick boxer, karate specialist, jujitsu whiz, cruiserweight prizefighter, "shootfighter" and taekwon do expert. Everyone was here but David "Kung Fu" Carradine.

Having survived the prelims, these guys would pair off in single-elimination bouts, with the two finalists meeting to decide who was the "ultimate fighter." A win would occur when there was a knockout, a "chokokou," a doctor's intervention, a corner throwing in the towel or a fighter giving up by tapping on the ground four times.

As for rules, except for eye-gouges, groin shots, biting and — of course using knives, guns or explosives — no tactic was forbidden. Not even spitting?

"If you think you know tough," shouted an advance promoter, "you ain't seen nuthin' yet."

Ring announcer Ron "The G-Man" Goins was ready, TV commentators Bill Wallace, Kathy Long (a former kick-boxing champ) and Jim Brown (the community activist and former pro football gear) were ready. I was ready.

And so were the first pair of contenders, savate champ Gerard Gordeau of the Netherlands and Teila Tuli, a 410-pound sumo wrestler from Hawaii. Like all the fighters, they and their entourages entered the arena in high-concept colored lights.

"I see the perspiration, I see the anxiety," Brown said. "But you also see the respect," Wallace said. Soon they were seeing the massacre. After 26 seconds, punctuated by a savage kick to the already grounded Tuli's face that sent a tooth flying and blood pouring from his mouth, Gordeau advanced to the next round when the doctor stopped the fight.

Next, karate expert Zane Frazier of Los Angeles was worn down in less than a minute by kick boxer Kevin Rosier, a roly-poly 265-pounder from Buffalo, N.Y., who wore his trunks over his belly like Martin Short's Ed Grimley. After exhausting himself by repeatedly knocking Rosier in the head and the groin area, Frazier helplessly collapsed onto the canvas, and his corner threw in the towel when Rosier stomped on his head.

"The crowd seems to be enjoying it," Wallace said.

The crowd would have enjoyed the Christians and lions. Fights broke out throughout the evening, not only in the ring, but all around the announcers and elsewhere in the arena. "This is the most alive group of people I've ever seen," Brown said. "In fact, I'm kind of worried."

After defeating Frazier, meanwhile, Rosier disclosed his strategy to an interviewer: "Let him hit me. Very slow. And incredibly, it worked."

Yet a curious thing happened after the first two contests. Instead of merely goy and funny, the "Ultimate Fighting Championship" began getting interesting.

St. Louis cruiserweight boxer Art Jimmerson didn't get to throw even one punch before giving up. He was swiftly taken down and dispatched with a chokehold by jujitsu master Royce Gracie, whose family is synonymous with the sport in their native Brazil, where mixed-martial-arts championships like this one are commonplace.

In the battle of 220-pound strongman that followed, Lockford, California, shootfighter Ken Shamrock looked invincible in getting taekwon do battler Pat Smith of Denver to submit to a painful ankle twist, setting up an intriguing semifinal with the milder Gracie.

The Shamrock-Gracie winner would face Gordeau. Even though he had broken his hand against the sumo wrestler Tuli, the Dutchman easily battered the blimpish Rosier, who again succeed in getting his opponent to hit him, but unfortunately in all the wrong places. Defenseless on the canvas, Rosier took a rib kick from Gordeau that made you own ribs ache.

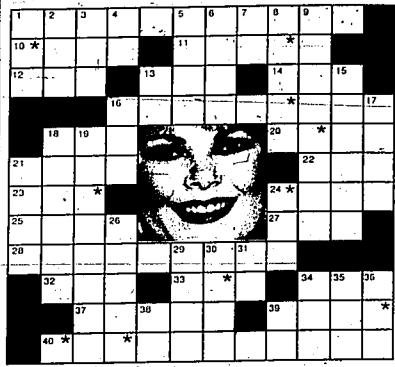

The semifinal between Shamrock and Gracie was the evening's best, with the Californian getting an early advantage, only to be taken down by Gracie and choked into submission. Like a constituting anecdote that is unstopable once it has you in its coils, Gracie used the same breath-stopping technique to easily cut off the windpipe of the much-bigger Gordeau in the final, winning the championship and the $50,000.

Refreshingly, "The Ultimate Fighting Championship" featured little of the obligatory bravado and trash talking that usually accompanies prizefighting. In fact, the sportsmanship in post-match interviews was striking, with Shamrock praising his conqueror, Gracie, for example, and the gregarious Rosier — this event's Mr. Congenially — repeatedly lauding the man who had clubbed him, Gordeau. Obviously, they had recalled Key Luke's "Kung Fu" advice to Carradine: "The wise man walks away with his head bowed, humble like the dust." That humility also applied to Gracie, who afterward celebrated his family instead of himself. His brother, Rorian, founded a juditsu academy in Torrance, Calif.

It was fascinating to watch Gracie strategize and employ his jujitsu moves in his matches, which were all one-sided. "I found my sport," Brown said. Me, too.

NBC sports anchor goes to food network

By Gail Shiner
Knight-Ridder News Service

Gayle Gardner had her cake, but she couldn't eat it at NBC. Now she'll do both on the Television Food Network.

The first full-time female sports anchor at a major network, Gardner left NBC last year after six years "with an enormous sense of frustration that not having had the opportunity to be myself, talk, show my personality or give opinions." (Is that all?)

On TVFN, a 24-hour basic cable service to launch Wednesday, Gardner will host "Eating Right," a nightly call-in show about food, health and nutrition. (Her co-host is an M.D., Stephanie Beigel.) Also, an M.D., Stephanie Beigel, will be an anchor on "Food News & Views" and will sub for Robin

Leach on his celeb-oriented "Talking Food."

Leach's studio host and features reporter at NBC, "I was often reduced to fitting in around events or being on for 90 seconds to enhance an event," says Gardner, 43, whose contract expired Oct. 30. "I felt I had other talents that I wasn't using."

Although the bulk of Gardner's background is in sports — she was an anchor on ESPN's "SportsCenter" for five years before joining NBC — she felt it was time for change. TVFN boss Reese Schonfeld, one of the creators of CNN, convinced her to change at the New York-based network.

Gardner denies that her departure is related to any competitive feelings with host-reporter Hannah Storm, 32, a rising star at NBC.

"I decided a long time ago that I wanted to broaden my scope," says Gardner. "I chose to leave. I wasn't kicked out the door. I missed the daily news situation I had at ESPN. I wasn't just flying around the country and showing up at events. This is a different rhythm and lifestyle."

Reduced air travel was a big attraction for Gardner. Flying aggravates an inner-ear condition, she says, and the medication she's taking has caused her to put on weight. Now she can stay put in New York. Well put. Her two-year contract is worth an estimated $250,000 a year — close to her NBC salary.

Gardner plans to keep a hand in sports with blogs from free-lance reports. Despite some progress, "it's still a boys' club and always will be," she says.
