Flyin' high

The nation's symbol, the American bald eagle, may soon leave the endangered species list.

Bald eagle numbers soar

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The bald eagle, America's national symbol for two centuries, is coming back from the brink of extinction and soon will no longer be an endangered species, Fish and Wildlife Service Director Mollie Beattie said Friday.
Because of the bird's strong recovery in the past three decades, "we're moving quite close" to taking the bird off the endangered list, along with several other species, she said.
Fish and Wildlife officials said the change will not remove the bird completely from protection under the Endangered Species Act; it will be listed in the less dire "threatened species" category.

"Clearly the data indicate that it does warrant reclassification in some parts of the country," said Jamie Clark, head of Fish and Wildlife's endangered species office. She said the change is likely next year.
Beattie said her agency is evaluating several species whose populations have recovered under the Endangered Species Act.
"We are now putting a tremendous emphasis on delisting," she said.

The bald eagle, found in all states except Hawaii, had dwindled to an estimated low of 417 nesting pairs in the lower 48 states in 1963. A 1992 survey found the population up to 3,747 pairs, according to the Interior Department.

Researchers credit the comeback in large part to the banning of the pesticide DDT which had interfered with the reproductive capacity of the eagle and other birds. In addition, the government acquired nesting sites for the eagle, relocated some eagles in areas where they had died out and developed captive breeding programs.

In some places, power lines that electrocuted the birds were redesigned so eagles would not be harmed. The reclassification is "a significant step in that it recognizes the substantial recovery the eagle has made around the country," said Michael Bean of the Environmental Defense Fund, a private group.
Beattie's designees of the National Audubon Society said the move was a cause for celebration but still left concerned over whether the eagle would become endangered again by encroachment on its nesting areas and contamination of its habitat by pollution.

Gem judge sets Wells' execution for Jan. 6

The Associated Press
BOISE — A district judge on Friday set Jan. 6 for the execution of double murderer Keith Eugene Wells, who has dropped all appeals and asked to die.

Fourth District Judge Gerald Schroeder said the execution by lethal injection should be carried out as soon as possible after midnight.
It will be the first execution in Idaho since 1957 and only the 10th carried out by the state.

"I feel you've been very fair and done a lot of things for me," Wells, 31, told the judge. "I just wanted to thank you for that."

He seemed extremely relaxed as he sat in the courtroom, shackled and wearing an orange jail jumpsuit, waiting for the hearing to begin.

As he was escorted from the downtown courtroom, Wells waved to his father, mother, a sister and an aunt, who were present for the brief hearing. It appeared that he whispered to them that he would telephone them Friday evening from the maximum-security prison's Death Row.

The family members declined any comment. Public Defender Ami Myshin said Wells had asked them not to talk with reporters.

Wells was convicted of the 1990 beating deaths of John Justad, 23, and Brandt Rains, 20, during a tavern robbery. He set the stage for his execution last February when he won approval to fire his attorneys and drop appeals.

The remaining barrier to his death was removed a week ago when the Idaho Supreme Court unanimously upheld his sentence under the automatic review required in all capital punishment cases.

Myshin said the state has agreed to allow Wells a contact visit with his family sometime after Christmas. He

Scientists produce record energy levels from atomic fusion process

The Associated Press

PLAINSBORO, N.J. — Hours after producing the world's most powerful controlled fusion reaction, scientists more than doubled their own record.

The successes Thursday and Friday raised Princeton University researchers' hopes of someday harnessing an inexhaustible, clean source of energy, and of getting the money to build more advanced experimental fusion reactors.
About 500 visiting scientists and staff at the Princeton-Plasma Physics Laboratory here were on hand when its experimental fusion reactor generated the first record — the equivalent of 3 million watts of power — just before midnight Thursday.

They clapped and cheered just as loudly Friday afternoon, during three more successful experiments; the last of which produced 5.6 million watts, said Dale M. Meade, deputy director of the lab financed by the federal Energy Department.

"This is the one we really wanted," Meade said, adding that the lab's scientists were "busy validating the data and seeing what we can do to make the number even bigger."

Late Friday night, after two more experiments were conducted, the reactor produced a record 6.4 million-watts, Meade said. The scientists would probably not do any more experiments Friday or over the weekend, Meade said.

A promise for the future

Hydrogen fusion is the process used by the sun and other stars to produce energy. The success of an experiment at the Princeton Plasma Physics Laboratory has raised hopes of using fusion in commercial reactors by the year 2035.

Fusion
Used in the Princeton test and in hydrogen bombs (H-bombs).

- In the test, two types of hydrogen nucleus were used: deuterium (one proton and one neutron) and tritium (with an additional neutron).
- The hydrogen is brought to a temperature of hundreds of millions of degrees, and the atoms begin to fuse, or combine.
- The particles combine into an alpha particle and a spare neutron. In a commercial reactor, the neutrons would hit materials that heat it up; this heat would be used to turn the turbines of electric generators.

Advantages:

- Cannot run away into a meltdown (the reaction is difficult to maintain if something goes wrong, it stops)
- Produces no radioactive waste products

Fission
Used in today's nuclear reactors and in atomic bombs (A-bombs).

- A heavy atom such as uranium is hit with a neutron.
- The uranium nucleus splits, releasing energy and neutrons. One of the neutrons may hit other uranium atoms, leading to a chain reaction.

Disadvantages:

- Runaway reaction (meltdown) must be prevented.
- Produces dangerously radioactive waste.

Already more than 500 families have requested presents for some 1,800 children and adults, Davis said. A stack of more than 50 requests brought in Friday had not yet been counted, he said.
Last year, for the entire Christmas season only 1,400 requests for presents were made, Davis said.
"Our waiting room is packed with people filling out request forms," he said. "I'm getting a little anxious."

So far, people have contributed $16,881, either mailing in checks or dropping their change into kettles around town, Davis said.
That is about the same amount the charity received by this time last year, but the need is much greater this year, he said.

"Most of those requesting help look awkward asking for something, Davis said.
"They are folks that you know have never asked for anything before," he said.

Most parents requesting help have jobs that don't pay enough for them to make ends meet, Davis said.
"They're doing all the right things, they just can't make it," he said. "Between rent and expenses, there's nothing for Christmas."

State agency amends rules covering abortion funding

The Associated Press

BOISE — The Idaho Department of Health and Welfare is adding pregnancy caused by rape or incest to the reasons justifying Medicaid funding of abortions.

Idaho Medicaid rules now allow payment only for abortions that doctors certify are needed to save a mother's life.
Health and Welfare attorney Ann Cosha told 4th District Judge D. Duff McKee on Friday that the rule change should be complete by Feb. 4 to comply with relaxed federal standards for abortion funding under Medicaid.

The standards were changed after the American Civil Liberties Union and the Planned Parenthood Association of Idaho filed a lawsuit contending the rule and the state law behind it violate the Idaho Constitution.
But an ACLU attorney told McKee during a hearing Friday that even an amended rule would discriminate against poor women by denying them such rights as "pursuing happiness and securing safety."
"Women in this state can't secure safety if they're unable to terminate a pregnancy that threatens their health," said Louise Melling of the ACLU's Reproductive Freedom Project.

On Aug. 20, McKee cleared the way for Medicaid funding of an abortion for a 13-year-old girl who was eight weeks pregnant and the baby was likely to be deformed. But he did not rule on constitutional questions, and the girl involved had a miscarriage soon after the August decision.

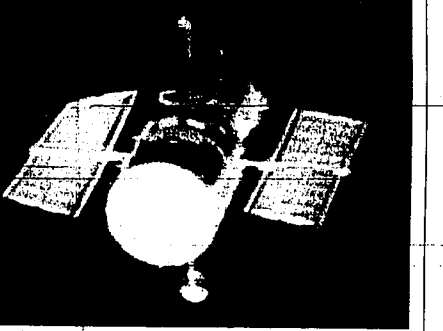

Still at issue is the constitutionality of the law allowing Medicaid funding only when two physicians find that an abortion is needed to save the mother's life or health, or when the pregnancy is the result of rape or incest. In the August ruling, McKee said the girl was eligible because her age made the pregnancy the result of statutory rape.

Health and Welfare rule is more restrictive than the law. Before Medicaid will pay for an abortion, it requires written certification from two physicians that the mother may die if the fetus is carried to term.

ACLU and Planned Parenthood lawyers told the judge Friday that no other Medicaid-funded procedures have such restrictions.

Weather summary

A strong low pressure system moving into Canada continued to spread higher clouds across Idaho Friday.

The warmer air flow out of the southwest associated with the low pressure system has brought mild temperatures and some high-winds for the Gem State.

Over the southwest skies were cloudy to mostly sunny, while over the southeast skies were mostly sunny to sunny.

Over the north skies were generally cloudy.

Conditions were mostly pleasant as some locations felt a slight chill as a result of the occasional higher wind gusts.

Most of the reports of precipitation in the state Friday came from the northern sections. Coeur d'Alene with -1.5 inch led the reports, with others including Mullan .08, Moscow .06, and Lewiston .11.

Mild temperatures and generally light winds made the day pleasant in the Magic Valley although there were some clouds at varying levels and densities during the day. Skies were mostly cloudy by sunset.

The highest temperature in the state Friday was 64 degrees at Hagerman. Ketchum reported the lowest at 11 degrees.

Elsewhere in the nation Friday, the highest temperature was 90 degrees at Kingsville, Texas. Devils Lake, N.D., reported the lowest temperature at 6 degrees below zero.

Rain widespread over U.S.; temperatures set records

The Associated Press

Rain fell over much of the United States Friday, but the weather was warm enough in several areas to set high-temperature records for the date.

Rain fell across the Atlantic coastal states, the upper Ohio Valley, the Tennessee Valley, the eastern Gulf states and the northern Pacific Coast.

Snow was scattered over Michigan, changing to rain in some areas. Marquette, Mich., received an inch of snow during the same six hours.

High wind warnings were posted over many of the Pacific states Friday, and winter-storm warnings were issued for west-central Nevada and the eastern Sierra Nevada

proposal falls flat

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — U.S. officials met with North Korean officials Friday in New York City and apparently turned down a proposal under which the Pyongyang government would only partially comply with international requirements for inspection of its nuclear facilities.

White House press secretary Dee Dee Myers told reporters that officials of the two countries discussed "the U.S. demands that North Korea open its sites to nuclear inspection and resume dialogue with South Korea."

That means there is no sign of a resolution of the diplomatic stalemate over North Korea's nuclear program. If North Korea does not allow the inspections, the United States has suggested it may have to resort to economic sanctions against Pyongyang.

For its part, North Korea has said it would consider imposition of sanctions an act of war.

"We responded to their proposal," said one administration official. "This is an ongoing discussion."

A week ago, North Korean officials at the United Nations proposed that the International Atomic Energy Agency, or IAEA, be allowed to inspect five of the seven facilities it has acknowledged as part of its nuclear program. The two sites at which inspections would not have been permitted are the country's two most important installations, the main nuclear plant and reprocessing facility at Yongbyon.

At the White House, Myers said the United States had made a counterproposal to North Korea, but refused to say what it was.

temperatures to fuse, releasing energy in the process. The researchers' goal: harness more energy from the reaction than the millions of watts needed to run the mammoth reactor.

On Friday afternoon, laboratory workers and Energy Department officials gathered around monitors each time the experiment was repeated successfully. Cameras inside the reactor showed the darkened interior suddenly glow brightly — from the tremendous heat energy — and then gradually fade.

Each experiment in the lab's Tokamak Fusion Test Reactor lasts about five seconds, including the one-second burst of fusion power. The experiments use different mixtures of special isotopes, or forms of hydrogen. The temperature inside the reactor reaches 300 million to 400 million degrees Celsius.

The reactor's output far exceeds the previous record, the 1.7 million watts produced Dec. 9, 1991, by the Joint European Torus, the machine's chief rival near Oxford, England.

Despite the competition, scientists from that lab and others around the world have collaborated with those at Princeton.

Fusion is the opposite of fission, which involves breaking apart very heavy atoms, such as uranium. Fission is the process that powers nuclear reactors. Atomic bombs also use fission; hydrogen bombs use fusion.

Scientists argue that fusion energy will be desperately needed by the time it is practical and can compete economically with polluting energy sources such as oil and coal.

Idaho has 20 other convicted murderers on Death Row, some there for more than a decade, but all have their cases in varying stages of appeal.

Abortion

"We're asking for equal treatment. We're not asking for something more," Melling said.

"Health" in the state law might be defined only as physical health, while Melling said the U.S. Supreme Court has ruled it also should include emotional, psychological and family considerations, and the woman's age.

"Planned Parenthood" attorney Newell Squyres said 12 states provide Medicaid funding for non-life-saving abortions. And Melling said since Idaho pays for the pregnancies of Medicaid-eligible women who carry their babies to term, it also must fund reproductive services that do not end in childbirth.

"Because the state has chosen to subsidize part of the decision about whether or not to have a child, it must remain neutral in subsidizing their parents," Melling said.

But Deputy Attorney General Mike DeAngelo said even if the Idaho Constitution protects the right to an abortion, it does not provide a right to have it paid for by the state.

"We're not talking about the exercise of a right," he said. "We're talking about money, and who has it and who should spend it."

Abortion is not the only reproductive service Medicaid does not finance. DeAngelo said others include fertility services and artificial insemination, and the plaintiffs are essentially arguing for Medicaid to pay for abortion on demand.

Nevertheless, Cosho said existing state rules would pay for abortions in many of the cases raised by the ACLU and Planned Parenthood if more doctors would certify that continuing the pregnancy threatens the mother's life.

Federal Health Care Financing Administration officials told recently that carrying a deformed fetus to term often can be considered life-threatening. Cosho said the problem is that only a handful of Idaho doctors perform abortions, much less are willing to certify that women's lives are at risk without them.

Oil keeps inflation down; analysts see good future

WASHINGTON (AP) — A sharp decline in international oil prices restrained U.S. inflation to a modest 0.2 percent in November, and analysts predicted even better price news ahead despite improving economic growth.

Energy prices fell 1.3 percent last month, the biggest decline since March 1991. That helped offset a 0.4 percent rise in food costs and a 0.3 percent increase in all other goods and services.

The energy declines were produced by a drop in crude oil prices from nearly $19 a barrel in mid-October to just over $14.50 a barrel earlier this month and should restrain inflation to near zero for the next few months, analysts said.

For the first 11 months of this year, consumer prices have risen at a 2.8 percent annual rate, down a notch from the 2.9 percent rate for all of last year.

And the consensus forecast of 51 top economists surveyed by Blue Chip Economic Indicators of Sedona, Ariz., is for a 2.9 percent rate next year.

"The bottom line is ... you're basically looking at 3 percent inflation. That's where we've been for the last two years, and that's probably where we'll be for another year," said economist Donald Ratajczak of Georgia State University.

Despite the favorable price outlook, economists are becoming increasingly convinced the Federal Reserve will nudge short-term interest rates higher early next year just to make sure price pressures do not rise.

"The Fed really has to be focused on the long term," said economist Martin Regalia of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. "Even at 3 percent, inflation isn't good enough for them."

In the meantime, lower energy prices should act like a tonic for economic growth, giving businesses and consumers money to spend on other goods and services, analysts said.

"This good news on inflation is also good news for consumer buying-power," said economist Sung Won Sohn of Northwest Corp. in Minneapolis. "Every dollar decrease in the price of crude oil puts $7 billion to $8 billion in consumers' pockets."

In a separate report, the Labor Department said Americans' inflation-adjusted average weekly earnings have climbed for two consecutive months, up 0.3 percent in November and 0.7 percent in October.

In November, gasoline prices fell 1.8 percent, the biggest decline in six months, after jumping 4.5 percent in October because of an increase in federal excise taxes. Fuel oil declined 0.6 percent and electricity, 0.8 percent. Natural gas was down 1.7 percent, the largest decline since April 1990.

The index for meat, fish, poultry and eggs increased 0.5 percent, a reflection of higher feed prices after the summer's floods in the Midwest. Vegetable prices jumped 5.3 percent, but fruit costs fell 0.5 percent, led by an 11 percent drop in oranges, the steepest in two years.

New logging plan wins timber praise

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Clinton administration won rare praise from the timber industry Friday with a new plan to ease logging restrictions near northern spotted owls.

But environmentalists warned it could push the bird toward extinction. The government will focus recovery of the threatened owl on national forests and other federal lands, making it possible to relax protective guidelines the Bush administration first recommended on state-owned and private lands in the Northwest, Assistant Interior Secretary George Frampton Jr. said.

"The vast majority of suitable owl habitat that remains in the region is on federal land," Frampton told a news conference.

Mary Pleneri, regional director in Portland, Ore., for the Fish and Wildlife Service, said the plan would free "significant" amounts of private timber for harvest but neither he nor Frampton would estimate how much.

The administration hopes to complete an environmental impact statement on the proposed regulation and formally propose it in March when Clinton presents a federal judge in Seattle with a comprehensive owl-protection plan.

Logging has been banned across most of the federal lands containing owls in Oregon, Washington and Northern California since U.S. District Judge William Dwyer found government harvest plans to be illegal in 1991. The owl in 1990 was listed as a threatened species under the Endangered Species Act, which means the government must take steps to protect its habitat.

Frampton said the administration wants to waive federal protection of the owl on private lands in California — with the exception of a ban on killing the bird — because California's state laws already provide as strict or stricter protection.

In Oregon and Washington, the proposed rule would forbid logging on federal and state lands within a 70-acre circle around a known owl nesting site. In addition to the 70-acre circle, landowners in the 10 special emphasis areas also would be required to maintain 40 percent tree cover over the landscape.

Otherwise, logging would be allowed on private and state lands where it once was prohibited in an area as large as 1,000 acres around each nest.

But Andy Kerr of the Oregon

Natural Resources Council in Portland, Ore., had a different view.

Kerr said the 70-acre circles are not large enough to provide enough wood rats and other food for a breeding pair of owls.

"The administration's proposal says you cannot shoot spotted owls, but you can starve them to death," he said. "Either way the result is the same — extinction."

"The timber industry commends the Department of Interior for beginning this effort," said Mark Rey, vice president of the American Forest & Paper Association.

"Relief for state and private landowners in the region is vital to avoid a worsening of the severe social and economic impacts already occurring as a consequence of court injunctions and sharp reductions in federal timber harvest," he said.

Environmentalists criticized the move, saying owl protection on private as well as public lands is necessary.

"If the federal lands look like a mangy dog, a lot of the private lands look like a skinned Chihuahua," said Frances Hunt, forestry resource specialist for the National Wildlife Federation.

Kathleen McGinty, director of the White House Office on Environmental Policy, said easing owl protections on private lands is possible because Clinton has developed the comprehensive plan to protect the owl and old-growth forests on federal land.

Clinton said in July that his plan would drop federal logging levels in the region to about one-fourth the annual average of the 1980s. He said that was necessary because of decades of excessive timber harvests.

Under the proposed rule, premium protection of the bird's habitat would remain in effect on state and private lands that are part of 10 "special emphasis" areas most important to the owl's survival, McGinty said. These areas would serve as bridges between federal owl-conservation areas.

Private logging restrictions may be further relaxed in the future if landowners develop their own conservation strategies that will ensure the bird's survival, Frampton said.

The administration already has secured a commitment from Weyerhaeuser Corp. to develop such a plan for 100,000 acres of the company's lands in southwest Washington, he said.

President Clinton, left, and Vice President Gore talk with the crew of Endeavour on Friday after the astronauts had completed successful repairs to the Hubble Space Telescope.

Hubble 'ready, open for business'

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — The Hubble repair crew sent the refurbished telescope back into space Friday to conduct "many, many more years of science" and then took a presidential call of thanks.

President Clinton congratulated the seven Endeavour astronauts on "one of the most spectacular space missions in our history."

"You made it look easy," Clinton said.

The last remaining goal of the record-breaking, spacewalk-studded mission was reached early Friday when Swiss astronaut Claude Nicollier released the Hubble from the end of the shuttle crane 369 miles over South Africa. Its new golden solar-wings shimmered in the sunlight as Endeavour slowly backed away.

"That was a very special moment to see it on its way, ready, open for business," flight director Mit Heftin said.

During the mission, which cost $629 million and came after a series of embarrassing problems for NASA, the astronauts conducted a record five spacewalks. They installed 11 new Hubble parts, including guidance and power systems and mirrors designed to correct the telescope's nearsightedness. The crew encountered few obstacles, and all were surmounted. The last was a telescope data-relay problem that delayed Hubble's release by three hours.

The final and most important outcome, however, won't be known for two months. That's how long it will take NASA to focus and align Hubble's new instruments and determine whether the telescope can clearly see the more remote objects in the universe.

NASA launched the $1.6 billion Hubble in 1990 with a primary mirror that was ground too flat along the edge. The defect left Hubble nearsighted and unable to answer astronomers' most pressing questions, such as the age and size of the universe. It also left NASA scrambling to fix Hubble's vision during what should have been a routine service call. Among other things, the astronauts also had to replace shaky solar panels and failed gyros.

Hubble program scientist Edward Weiler said NASA did everything possible to avoid an optical problem this time, most notably conducting an unprecedented number of tests.

Nevertheless, he said, "I can't guarantee success."

There was no denying the astronauts' success. As a reward, Mission Control gave them the rest of Friday off. The mission is scheduled to end with a landing at Cape Canaveral, Fla., on Monday, 11 days after it began.

Payload commander Story Musgrave, one of Endeavour's four spacewalkers, said it was "a very ambitious mission to restore Hubble ... so it will be good for many, many more years of science." The next service call on Hubble is set for 1997, then 1999 and 2002. Its 15-year design lifetime is up in 2005.

"But it did take the kinds of stuff that we have, and that's mostly attention to detail. Identify surprises, turn over every stone and give it all the energy we've got," Musgrave told the president.

Replied Clinton: "You gave an immense boost to the space program in general and America's continuing venture in space."

"I think that most Americans see your success not only in terms of the specific mission you have successfully performed, but also as a symbol of NASA on the way back," Vice President Al Gore added during the 10-minute call from the Oval Office.

Feminist coalition launches effort to revive ERA

WASHINGTON (AP) — A coalition of women's groups launched yet another drive Friday to pass the Equal Rights Amendment, arguing that a 1982 deadline for ratification was arbitrary and political.

Members of the ERA Summit said since the measure passed 35 of the 38 state legislatures required by 1982, only three more states must pass it to make the amendment law.

"We are aware that it is within the prerogative of Congress to lift that expired deadline so that ratification of three additional states can be secured," said Allie Corbin-Hixon, spokeswoman for the ERA Summit. "With an administration that favors constitutional equality for women, we also believe the time is now favorable to push our suit for justice for all."

Hixon cited the passage last year of the 203-year-old Madison Amendment, which requires that an election intervene between the approval of a congressional pay raise and its effective date.

"We think a concurrent resolution could be passed that says putting a deadline on the (Equal Rights) amendment was in error," she said at a news conference at the Capitol.

The coalition does not yet have sponsors for the proposed resolution, Hixon said.

Until the 18th Amendment establishing Prohibition, Hixon added, no deadline was ever placed on a proposed constitutional amendment.

Patricia Ireland, president of the National Organization for Women, said the 12-year Reagan-Bush era, for women, "like being in a hamster in an exercise wheel, running as hard as we could just to stay even."

"We are going to mobilize the movement once again around what has been the Holy Grail of the feminist movement once we won the right to vote," she said.

Standing in front of a statue of suffragists Susan B. Anthony, Elizabeth Cady Stanton and Lucretia Mott, the ERA Summit members said the United States should be embarrassed that its Constitution excludes women.

"In a country that considers itself a democracy, it continues to say that women are not included, that women can be discriminated against, that women continue to live second-class citizens' lives," said Paula McKenzie, a member of the board of the National Woman's Party.

Chelsea takes part in holiday production

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton generally tries to keep his daughter, Chelsea, out of the limelight, but he said it was "wonderful" to see her photograph in newspapers rehearsing for a holiday ballet performance.

Chelsea, 13, takes classes at the Washington School of Ballet. She is one of four students sharing the part of Favorite Aunt in the Washington Ballet's production of "The Nutcracker."

The troupe has not announced which performances she will appear in.

Fire crews and investigators look over the wreckage of an air tanker that caught fire and exploded Friday at Milwaukee's Mitchell International Airport.

Plane explosion kills 6 at airport

MILWAUKEE (AP) — A military tanker jet being serviced for minor electrical problems exploded and burned Friday at Mitchell International Airport, killing six ground crew members.

The fire spread too fast to give anyone a chance to rescue the workers aboard the Air National Guard KC-135, said Col. Eugene Schmitz, commander of the 128th Refueling Group.

The cause of the fire was under investigation.

Pilots and other personnel scrambled to move three jet tankers away from the burning plane.

"The debris was flying around and there was smoke and fire," said Lt. Col. Chuck Hardesty, vice commander of the unit, who helped start and move one of the planes.

Hardesty said there was an initial explosion about 7 a.m. followed a few minutes later by two more explosions.

The airport remained closed for about an hour.

The KC-135, a military version of the Boeing 707, is used for in-flight refueling of other planes.

It was being serviced at a section of the airport where the unit is based. It had only a fraction of its normal load of fuel at the time of the explosion, Schmitz said.

The plane had lost fown Thursday, and had minor electrical and avionics system problems that were being repaired in preparation for another flight, Schmitz said. The problems included a burned-out beam light and a broken switch.

"All of a sudden, we hear a boom and the house is shaking. Then I saw flames and a lot of black smoke, billowing black smoke," said Zona Ukasick, who lives across the street from the Air National Guard installation. "I thought it was a building with oil barrels that had exploded."

Kevorkian, 11 days into hunger strike, faces charges in court

ROYAL OAK (AP) — Dr. Jack Kevorkian, unshaven and appearing weak from a jailhouse hunger strike, was wheeled into court Friday to face a charge of helping a 72-year-old woman commit suicide.

Supporters applauded as the self-styled right-to-die advocate entered the packed courtroom, hunched over in his wheelchair and wrapped in a gray blanket.

The 65-year-old Kevorkian dismissed questions from reporters about his 11-day-old hunger strike and how he was feeling with a wave of his hand.

Chants of "Free Jack now" from outside the courtroom nearly drowned out lawyers as District Judge Daniel Sawicki opened the hearing to determine if there is enough evidence to try Kevorkian in the Oct. 22 death of Merlan Frederick.

The chants quieted after about 10 minutes.

Kevorkian already faces similar charges in two cases in Wayne County.

The Rev. Kenneth Pfifer, testifying in return for immunity, told how he, Frederick's son and daughter-in-law, and Kevorkian watched for the 30 minutes it took for Frederick to die by breathing carbon monoxide.

Pfifer, a minister at First Unitarian Universalist Church in Ann Arbor, said he had counseled Frederick through much of her ordeal with Lou Gehrig's disease. He also attended a videotaped meeting with Kevorkian at which she expressed her desire to die.

Under questioning from Oakland County Assistant Prosecutor Errol Shifman, Pfifer told how he and Rick and Ola-Fredrick brought the woman to an apartment Kevorkian rents next to his own.

Frederick walked up the stairs, went inside and sat on a couch, Pfifer said. Kevorkian supplied a canister of gas, a mask and tubing, he said. Frederick placed the mask over her face and pulled a string to release a clamp on the tubing, starting the flow of deadly gas.

"What happened then?" Shifman asked.

"We waited for the gas to take effect and her suffering to be over," Pfifer said.

Pfifer covered his face and cried when shown pictures of Frederick's body on the couch.

Under cross-examination from Kevorkian's attorney, Geoffrey Fieger, Pfifer would not say whether Frederick told him in counseling that she wanted to die, saying that was privileged information between himself and a parishioner.

But Pfifer later told Fieger, he knew Frederick wanted to end her suffering and was particularly discouraged because she could not speak or hold up her head.

Rick and Ola Frederick also planned to exercise their Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination if called to testify, said their attorney, Dan Devine Jr. He said prosecutors' offers of immunity were too vague.

Kevorkian has been subsisting on juice, water and vitamins since he was jailed on a $50,000 cash bond Nov. 30. He reduced his juice intake this week to about 2 ounces a day, Fieger said. Doctors who examined him Thursday said he was weak but in no imminent danger.

Johnson settles HIV suit out of court

KALAMAZOO, Mich. (AP) — Retired basketball star Magic Johnson and a woman who accused him of giving her the AIDS virus reached a private agreement that brought the dismissal of the woman's lawsuit.

U.S. District Court Judge Richard Enslin signed the dismissal order Thursday, saying only that lawyers on both sides requested it.

There was no indication in his order whether a financial settlement had been reached. Attorneys for both sides did not return phone calls Friday.

Johnson had acknowledged one sexual encounter, in June 1990, with Wayner Moore, a woman he knew from college.

The former Los Angeles Lakers star said he was unaware he carried HIV until shortly before announcing his retirement from the National Basketball Association in November 1991.

Moore, who discovered she had the virus in June 1991, contended that Johnson either knew he was infected or should have known he was at risk because of his admittedly promiscuous lifestyle.

Johnson's attorney, Howard Weitzman, told the Kalamazoo

Gazette he would not reveal any details.

"The parties are going to get on with their lives," he said. "I'm sure Mr. Johnson is pleased the case is dismissed."

Moore, 32, refused to comment to the newspaper. Her spokesman, Armstrong Williams, said Friday she was pleased about the "mutual agreement." He declined to call it an out-of-court settlement or say whether Moore was paid anything.

The lawsuit, filed in October 1992 in federal court in Kalamazoo, had been tentatively set to go to trial March 7, 1994.

Sitter pleads guilty to death

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP) — A baby sitter pleaded guilty Friday to manslaughter in the death of a 10-month-old boy she admits throwing to the floor in anger after the baby pulled her hair.

Westchester County Judge J. Emmett Murphy said he will impose the maximum term of eight and one-third to 25 years in prison at sentencing, scheduled for Feb. 17. Franklin had been charged with second-degree murder.

The victim's mother cried in court as Ann Franklin, 26, told what happened last February after changing Kieran Dunne's diaper. She said the baby yanked her hair as she placed him in his crib.

"I got annoyed," Franklin said, "I swung and threw him down. I'm sorry."

Massachusetts enacts gay law

BOSTON (AP) — Gay people have new protection against discrimination in public schools through a measure Gov. William Weld signed into law Friday.

"We hope that the bill's passage here is going to signal a whole new frontier in the gay rights movement," said David LaFontaine, who heads the Governors Commission on Gay and Lesbian Youth.

Some school systems have gay rights policies, but no other state has adopted such a law, which flatly bans discrimination against gays in schools, said the group Parents, Families and Friends of Lesbians and Gays, which is based in Washington.

Gore will visit Kazakhstan to speed missile destruction

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vice President Al Gore leaves Saturday on a weeklong trip to prod Kazakhstan to dismantle nuclear missiles and to set the stage for next month's U.S.-Russia summit in Moscow.

The vice president also will celebrate the invitation for Russia to join the international space station consortium and visit Kyrgyzstan in Central Asia to applaud the former Soviet republic's market reforms.

After a stop en route in Germany to visit with American troops, Gore travels to Kazakhstan, where the parliament is scheduled to vote next week to endorse the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty. After that vote, the parliament is to disband and let President Nursultan Nazarbayev rule the oil-rich Central Asian nation by decree until new elections in March.

Pentagon slashes forces in Army Guard, Reserve

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Army National Guard and Reserve will lose about 127,000 jobs over the next six years and some units will be disbanded as the nation's backup combat and disaster relief forces reorganize, the Pentagon announced Friday.

"We're here to talk about closing an old chapter in the history of the Army and opening a new chapter that will help us meet the challenges of the post-Cold War world," Defense Secretary Les Aspin said in outlining the changes.

Aspin said that although the Guard and Reserve will become smaller they will be more tightly focused on specific wartime and peace-time missions that will benefit from what Army leaders called a new partnership with active-duty forces.

Aspin said his plan is supported by all the key players in the military, although it remains to be seen whether the Congress will accept it.

During the Bush administration, the Congress killed numerous bills to reduce the reserve forces, mainly because of the job impact in many congressional districts.

In a sign that Congress may be more willing to go along now, however, Rep. G.V. "Sonny" Montgomery, D-Miss., chairman of the House Veterans' Affairs Committee, said even before Aspin's announcement that he could accept the plan, in part because deeper cuts proposed under President Bush had been averted.

The Bush administration had suggested cutting the Army Guard and Reserve to 563,000 by 1999 but met resistance from Montgomery and other supporters of the reserves in Congress.

The Clinton plan is to reduce the Guard to 367,000 and the Reserve to 208,000 for a total of 575,000 by 1999. The Guard currently is at 422,700 and the Reserve at 279,600. The administration plans to cut the active-duty force to 1.4 million from 1.7 million.

"I would prefer no cuts at all, but 'don't have' that choice," Montgomery said in a statement. He said most armories will not have to close if the Clinton plan is adopted.

Deborah Lee, assistant secretary of defense for reserve affairs, said no decisions have been made on which individual Guard and Reserve units will be closed over the next six years. She stressed that some reductions will be achieved by not replacing people who leave on their own.

Gen. J.H. Binford Peay III, vice chief of staff of the Army, told reporters the main benefit of the changes will be making the Guard and Reserve forces more ready for warfighting. He acknowledged that it won't be a smooth change.

"There will be some initial short-term turbulence" within the reserve forces as personnel cuts and changes in specific units are carried out, he said.

In addition to reducing the Guard and Reserve, the Clinton plan aims to reorganize the reserve forces so that the Guard is more tightly focused on preparing for combat and remaining ready to respond to domestic civil emergencies. The Reserve will be more oriented toward combat support missions, such as providing military police, transportation and medical services during wartime, although it also will retain some combat missions.

Soldiers have had enough of baffling mission

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — Capt. Drew Camp happily hovered in his helicopter to protect relief convoys, then found himself leading attacks on Somalis who killed his comrades.

Then, he cursed in rage when the faction leader he tried to find or shoot and learned to hate was shuttled to peace talks two weeks ago aboard a U.S. military plane.

Now, after two weeks that spanned both ends of the yearlong mission to Somalia, he just looks forward to leaving this baffling place next month, when the withdrawal of U.S. troops will be moving full throttle.

"If you look at the humanitarian effort, maybe casualties were worth it," said Camp, the 28-year-old commander of a squadron of U.S. Army Cobra attack helicopters. "If you look at the other part, the sort of battles we fought, those deaths weren't."

Most U.S. troops visit Somalia for about four months and then leave, so they have a limited perspective on the evolution of the U.S.-led relief mission that began on Dec. 9, 1992.

But a relative handful saw Somalia in two pieces and some of them, like Camp, consider the first a noble crusade and the second its evil mutant twin.

The pivotal transition came when the United Nations took command of the evolution in May and clan leader Mohamed Farah Aidid aligned himself against it.

On June 2, Somali gunmen believed loyal to Aidid killed 24 Pakistani peacekeepers. The United Nations issued a warrant for his arrest, and Camp and other chopper pilots took part in a furious hunt for the warlord and his lieutenants.

A U.S. helicopter was shot down in September, and pieces of what Somalia said were the pilots' bodies were paraded through the streets. Another crewman was taken hostage and eventually freed.

"I was the first to get the call that a helicopter was down," said Capt. Michael Lewis, 27, a battle planner in Camp's unit, the Raven-Task Force of the Army's 10th Mountain Division, from Fort Drum, N.Y.

"I think everyone expected there would be casualties, but when this happened it hit home for us," said Lewis, from Albany, Ore., who also is on his second tour. "We went from a humanitarian mission to combat."

On Oct. 5, a firefight left 18 U.S. soldiers and an estimated 300 Somalis dead. President Clinton ordered all the troops home by March 31. Aidid finally called a cease-fire.

Then a U.S. military plane shuttled Aidid to peace talks in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia. Camp said it enraged the troops. He said he had fixated on Aidid as the enemy the way he did on Saddam Hussein when the pilot flew missions in Iraq.

"There was a tremendous loss of morale," said Camp, from West Long Branch, Va. "He killed U.S. soldiers."

Lewis disagreed. He said he understood the decision to make sure Aidid made it to the talks that many people believe, and fear, may be the last hope for the final success of this mission.

Few soldiers are happy with this shotgun marriage of humanitarian, political and military mission under the aegis of the United Nations.

If misery loves company, it adores the soldiers in the 516th Signal Company.

Hoachuca, Ariz., which now provides long-range communications to the U.N. effort, is one of the key units that will have to be replaced when the Americans go home.

The calendar in the command tent of the 516th has all of December's dates correctly written. But each day is Monday; every day in Somalia is like a week that never ends, only begins.

"They filled us up with all this stuff about let's go feed the Somalis, feed the kids, disarm the bandits. It was a mission of mercy," says Sgt. 1st Class Thomas Butterworth.

"Now that's all gone," said the lanky 38-year-old from Vinton, Va. "There is a sense of frustration."

"What's there for Americans under the U.N. They're disorganized, slow. They don't know what they're doing."

But it would be a terrible loss if the operation that did so much good were to collapse, said Chief Warrant Officer David Coates, a Cobra-chopper pilot from Task Force Raven.

Coates, who studied a 1935 book called "A Tear for Somalia" to better understand the nation's clans, flew choppers in Vietnam and worked as an operations officer in the Persian Gulf.

He spent 12 hours in combat during the Oct. 5 firefight and finds the "frustration level" higher under the cumbersome U.N. operation.

But he prefers to think about the fruit of his first four-month stint in Somalia even as he plays out the second.

"As I fly out there I see fertile fields where there were not fertile fields," said Coates, a Fort-Wayne, Ind., native.

"To me, it's always been a humanitarian mission. The problem was the bad guys."

U.S. mission of mercy slowly turns into Somalian quagmire

By Paul Quinn-Judge
Boston Globe

WASHINGTON — It seemed easy at the time, almost a breeze. The U.S. intervention in Somalia would be quick, clean and bloodless, triumphant proof that the United States cared enough about suffering in the world to do something.

Instead it turned into the paradigm of the nasty, confusing, low-tech war that has replaced great-power nuclear confrontation.

After a smooth beginning one year ago this week — with U.S. Marines crawling up the beaches under the glare of network camera lights — the operation turned into a nightmare of guerrilla warfare, mixed signals, communications failures and inadequate intelligence.

Analysis

The lowest point was the botched U.S. Army Ranger raid in south Mogadishu on Oct. 3, which cost 18 American lives and hundreds of dead Somalis. Subsequent images of a U.S. helicopter pilot, Michael Durant, in captivity provoked a crisis of confidence in the Clinton administration and an abrupt decision to terminate the mission as soon as possible. U.S. forces will leave Somalia altogether by March 1.

Although many of Somalia's sick and starving were saved over the past year, there is a clear danger that Somalia again will collapse into anarchy after the U.S. troops leave. And instead of offering an inspiring example of an international relief effort, the Somalia operation probably will be remembered most for betraying the weak spot in U.S. foreign policy: Cause U.S. casualties and Washington soon loses interest.

That is clearly what the Haitian junta had in mind on Oct. 11 when armed thugs prevented the USS Harlan County from docking at Port-au-Prince by threatening "another Somalia."

The early days of Operation Restore Hope, however, passed in a glow of official optimism. Somali gunmen melted from the streets — at least when U.S. troops drove by. Sworn enemies Mohamed Farah Aidid and Ali Mahdi Mohamed met under U.S. auspices.

Although no one could predict the bloodletting that would follow, there were early signs that the operation would be more complex than Washington believed. The clearest signal was the deep suspicion with which many Somalis viewed the United States and its Western allies.

Away from the U.S.-mediated talks, Aidid supporters stressed that their leader's determination to rule Somalia was unaltered. Aidid lieutenants said they expected U.S. troops to finish their feeding program and leave fast. The United Nations, they warned, should not interfere.

The unraveling came in the middle of the year, after the United States handed over command of the operation to the United Nations and drew down its troop strength. Aidid became nervous that a continued international presence would undercut his power base and on June 5 clashed with Pakistani troops under U.N. command, killing 24.

The United Nations then asked the U.S. forces to get Aidid. To the outside world the warlord's days seemed numbered, and his decision to take on the U.S. foreigners insane. U.S. helicopters controlled the air. A U-2 spy plane photographed the area almost daily. The National Security Agency was using its electronic expertise to eavesdrop on Aidid's communication.

But things went badly wrong. Aidid and other Somalis gave the eavesdroppers little to listen to. They also blended in with the large civilian population. Reports that Aidid had been located were as common and reliable as "Elvis sightings," a disgusted military official said at one point.

Against the U.N.-U.S. forces, Aidid deployed one of the Third World's most ragtag but murderous fighting groups. A painstaking U.S. intelligence assessment after the Oct. 3 firefight concluded that Aidid's men had little in the way of a command structure. Their early warning consisted of local children and women spreading the word when patrols approached.

In a fight, the report said, Aidid's main fighters would put their weapons on automatic, aim them roughly in the direction of the enemy and fire until they ran out of ammunition. The report is said to have come to the stunning conclusion that Aidid's gunmen broke off the Oct. 3 engagement when "they got tired."

Aidid's overall strategy zeroed in on the great weakness of the U.S.-U.N. effort: the unwillingness of Washington and other Western capitals to take casualties. One U.S. military official called Aidid's approach "political attrition." It was, he noted, extremely effective.

Lawyers for gay agent say settlement reached

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Lawyers for a fired gay FBI agent said Friday they have reached a settlement with the Clinton administration that would prohibit the FBI from discriminating on the basis of homosexual orientation or conduct.

A lawyer for former agent Frank Buttino told U.S. District Judge Sandra Brown Armstrong that agreement had been reached on a draft settlement of the class-action suit.

A few details needed to be worked out before a signed settlement could be presented to the court for approval, he said. That could happen as early as later today.

According to a statement by Buttino's lawyers, the FBI has agreed not to discriminate against employees or applicants on the basis of sexual orientation or homosexual conduct.

They also said the FBI has agreed to hire Dana Tillson, a lesbian, when a job becomes available.

Tillson, 32, now a San Francisco private investigator, testified that she applied to the FBI in 1987 and got high marks until the bureau learned her sexual orientation, which she has not tried to conceal.

Buttino, who had sought reinstatement, will instead accept an undisclosed financial settlement, his lawyers said.

Boardinghouse murderer receives a life sentence

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Dorothea Puente was sentenced Friday to life in prison without possibility of parole for murdering three of her boardinghouse tenants.

The sentence was the only one that Superior Court Judge Michael Virga could impose on Puente, 64. A jury deadlocked on Oct. 13 on whether to send the landlady in the gas chamber.

Puente was accused of killing nine of her tenants in the 1980s, but jurors convicted her last August in only three of the deaths. They deliberated 24 days, a California record for a murder trial.

She was convicted of first-degree murder in the deaths of Dorothy Miller, 64, and Benjamin Fink, 55, and of second-degree murder in the death of Leona Carpenter, 78. She was sentenced to life terms for the first-degree convictions and 15 years to life for the second-degree.

Puente's trial was moved to Monterey, about 135 miles southwest of Sacramento, because of heavy publicity about the case in the state capital.

In October, in the penalty phase of the case, the jury that convicted her deadlocked over whether Puente should receive the death penalty or life in prison without possibility of parole. The vote was 7-5 in favor of life in prison.

Under California law, a deadlock among jurors in the penalty phase results in an automatic life sentence.

Seven of nine tenants were found buried in a tiny side yard at Puente's downtown Victorian boardinghouse in November 1988.

One was found in a box in 1985 along the Sacramento River but was not identified until years later.

Another was a woman who died at Puente's home in 1982.

3 Palestinians die at hands of Jewish settlers

TARQUIMIYAH, Occupied West Bank (AP) — Three Arab workers were headed home Friday after a day of building houses in Israel when two men, allegedly Israelis, stopped their car, stuck guns in the windows and shot them to death.

"I didn't recognize them for a few minutes, there was so much blood on their faces," said Taysir Fatafah, a cousin of the victims, who was first to arrive at the scene.

As the deadline approaches for implementing the Israel-PLO autonomy accord, extremists on both sides who hope to destroy the peace process have provoked a cycle of revenge killings.

Opposition to the accord has led to the deaths of 41 Palestinians and 14 Israelis since the pact was signed Sept. 13. People on both sides are wounded every day in knifings, shootings or stone-throwing.

An army statement confirmed Friday's slayings and said the attack was being investigated. The Muslim militant group Hamas vowed to retaliate.

Under the peace agreement,

Israel is supposed to start withdrawing its forces from the Gaza Strip and West Bank town of Jericho on Monday. Autonomy is scheduled to begin in April and a final settlement for all Israeli-occupied lands is to be worked out within five years.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and PLO leader Yasser Arafat are expected to meet in Cairo Sunday to try to settle differences over security arrangements that could delay the initial withdrawal.

In Tunis, Tunisia, Arafat sidestepped questions about whether he thought the deadline could be met, saying only: "We hope so. We hope so."

The Israelis are due to withdraw from the Palestinian police station in downtown Gaza City, which will be taken over by unarmed Palestinian police, said Zaqariyah Talmes, a spokesman for the PLO office in Gaza.

They will also close the Ansar al-Islam prison camp in Gaza, which holds about 150 prisoners and would be used by the Palestinians to train police. All 10 military outposts and refugee camps will be dismantled, Talmes said.

Christopher ends peace mission with Arafat visit

RABAT, Morocco (AP) — Secretary of State Warren Christopher wound up his Middle East peace mission Friday with a symbolic visit to PLO headquarters in Tunis to deliver an invitation for Yasser Arafat to meet with Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin.

"One can say the Middle East peace process is back on track in a positive way," Christopher told a news conference later after meeting with King Hassan II of Morocco.

He said a goal of his Middle East trip was to "encourage all the parties to seek more normal relations with Israel."

Christopher's stops in Tunisia and Morocco gave him an opportunity to touch base with two Arab nations considered the most likely to establish diplomatic relations with Israel as soon as the peace process moves further along.

Egypt now is the only Arab nation with diplomatic ties to Israel.

Christopher was returning to Washington on Saturday.

In Tunis he visited PLO headquarters and said, with the PLO chairman at his side: "The significance of my coming here means this is a new day in relations between the United States and the PLO."

Arafat immediately accepted the invitation to meet with Rabin on Sunday in Cairo, a session forecast for days as an eleventh-hour attempt to meet Monday's deadline for agreeing how to implement the peace accord between Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Vietnamese harvest war-era metal

GIO LINH, Vietnam (AP) — Farmers in Vietnam's poorest province are fighting to survive their worst drought in 80 years by scavenging live American ammunition remaining from the Vietnam War.

Eight months of withering heat destroyed most of this year's rice crop for some 350,000 residents of Quang Tri province in central Vietnam. Two months of rain followed, but came too late.

Many families face possible starvation. To survive they pick up scrap metal left from the war, including unexploded bombs and artillery shells that have maimed and killed scores of farmers.

Quang Tri province straddles the former demilitarized zone that once divided Vietnam into a communist North and a pro-American South. As the scene of some of the war's fiercest battles, including Khe Sanh and Hamburger Hill, Quang Tri was a military junkyard when the war ended in 1975.

"I don't care what type of job it is, I'll do anything I can," said Nguyen Thi Doai, a scrap metal trader in Gio Linh, 280 miles south of Hanoi. "At least when I do the business, I can reduce the amount of junk left over from the war."

Doai and her husband started last month to buy metal from local scavengers and sell it to foundries. Their front-yard scrap heap is one of two in Gio Linh that started operating after the drought began in January.

One of Doai's suppliers is Nguyen Thi An, a rice farmer who said this year's crop failure forced her to work full time in the metal trade. As An spoke, she emptied a gunnysack containing rusty shards and a battered shell casing onto a set of scales in Doai's shop.

An buys scrap from another trader, who in turn purchases directly from the "diggers." She earns up to 5,000, or the equivalent of 47

3 Brits pardoned by Saddam leave Iraq

AMMAN, Jordan (AP) — Three Britons pardoned by Saddam Hussein for illegally entering Iraq left Baghdad for home Friday, accompanied by the former British prime minister who won their release.

Nguyen Cu, left, and Tran Dung search for ammunition left behind by Americans at a former U.S. helicopter base in Quang Tri. Farmers in the poor Vietnamese province struggle to survive the worst drought in 80 years by selling live ammunition from the Vietnam War.

cents a day. As the drought got worse, more people started scavenging and now the best spots in the district have been picked over, An said. She hears that some diggers have been maimed or killed.

One metal-casing in good condition sells in Gio Linh for the equivalent of $2, more than three times the price of other scrap. Local authorities say they warn people to contact local military experts instead of trying to defuse live shells themselves.

But doctors at Quang Tri hospital in Dong Ha, the provincial capital, know the cost for scavengers made desperate by drought.

In a typical year, the former-U.S. field hospital treats about 100 patients mutilated by exploding ammunition, says Dr. Huynh Xuan Tin, chief of the intensive care unit. In the first nine months of this year, Tin says he has already seen 115 cases.

An additional 60 people have died on the spot after touching off explosions, he estimates.

"In most cases, the patients didn't want to tell us they were looking for scraps," Tin said. "Maybe they're ashamed of their poverty ... They just do this to escape hunger."

Farmers in Quang Tri were struggling even before high temperatures, devastating southwesterly winds, and a 48 percent reduction in rainfall caused rivers and wells to dry up during the first eight months of this year.

Quang Tri is about the most desolate province I've seen in Vietnam," said Jim Monan, who visited the area in September as a consultant for the aid agency Oxfam Hong Kong.

Furthermore, deforestation from the war has reduced natural water supplies, and salt water spreading inland from the coast has made much of the farmland sterile.

The average annual income in Gio Linh is about $204, making it one of the country's poorest districts, says Pham Quoc An, vice-chairman of the local People's Committee.

The recent drought wiped out 70 percent of Gio Linh's August and October rice harvests, leaving some 6,000 people close to starvation, and that number could rise to 24,000 by next May if secondary crops of sweet potatoes, peanuts, and other vegetables also fail, he said.

For the entire province, effects of the drought were worse still. Quang Tri lost 86 percent of its rice crop and 70 percent of its secondary crops, according to an official report prepared in August. Provincial officials calculate farm losses at $5.4 million. Rains finally came in September and October, but there was little left to save.

Farmers say it's the worst drought in Quang Tri for some 80 years, and that some have few options but to buy and sell scrap metal.

Nguyen Duong, a Gio Linh rice farmer turned scrap trader, estimates more than 3,000 tons of military metal have been taken from his district this year.

"Sometimes I think it's funny," he said. "Sometimes I get angry. But I still do this business, because otherwise it's a waste."

Mandela, de Klerk accept peace prizes

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Nelson Mandela accepted the Nobel Peace Prize with South African President F.W. de Klerk Friday, calling it an appeal from the world to continue efforts to end apartheid.

"We stand here today as nothing more than a representative of millions of people who dared to rise up against a social system whose very essence is war, violence, racism, repression and the impoverishment of an entire people," Mandela said in a copy of his speech released in advance.

"We do not believe that this Nobel Peace Prize is intended as a commendation for things that have happened and passed. We hear the voices which say it is an appeal from all those, throughout the universe, who sought to end the system of apartheid."

"We understand their call," the 75-year-old leader of the African National Congress said.

The two exchanged congratulations before the 2,000 people, including Norway's king and top leaders, packing Oslo's city hall to watch them accept their peace prize.

Norwegian Nobel Committee chairman Francis Sejersted presented the medals and diplomas. Both recipients stood in silence, smiling and holding their medals for the applauding crowd to see. Sejersted called the laureates "a shining example for the world that there are ways out of the vicious circle of violence and bitterness."

Thousands of miles away in Cape Town, South Africa, Anglican Archbishop Desmond Tutu applauded with joy while watching a live broadcast of the black activist and the white president receiving their prizes.

"Congratulate one another, man!" exclaimed Tutu, who received the prize in 1984 for his own efforts against apartheid. "It's a wonderful thing that black and white should be given this extraordinary accolade together."

Crowds had gathered on the crisp, clear day in the Norwegian capital to see the laureates arrive after an audience with King Harald V at the royal palace.

About 20 demonstrators waved banners that read "De Klerk Go Home" to protest the award to the South African president, whom they blame for failing to stop violence that has killed thousands in South Africa.

Inside the city hall, there were flowers, and — as touches of distant Africa — palm branches and African song. Mandela, smiling from his chair, several times raised and waved his fist to salute the crowd and the South African group. Ladysmith Black Mambazo, that sang for the laureates.

Mandela said he wanted to pay tribute to de Klerk because "he had the courage to admit that a terrible wrong had been done to our country."

De Klerk, 57, began tearing down the racial barriers of apartheid when he became president in 1989. He released Mandela from 27 years in prison in 1990, and has scheduled the country's first multiracial elections for April.

"Five years ago, people would have seriously questioned the sanity of anyone who predicted that Mr. Mandela and I would be joint recipients of the 1993 Nobel Peace Prize. And yet both of us are here before you today," said de Klerk's prepared speech.

"We are political opponents," said de Klerk. "It was not easy for the supporters of Mr. Mandela or mine to relinquish the ideals they had cherished for many decades. But we did it. And because we did it, there is hope."

Sejersted said some have worried that $790,000 prize was awarded too soon because of the daily violence and the risk of civil war in South Africa.

"We know that the process is not finished. The danger of setbacks exists," he said.

He said the committee hoped the award would make a small contribution to complete democracy in South Africa.

The Nobel Prizes, first awarded in 1901, are presented on Dec. 10, the anniversary of the death of their benefactor, Alfred Nobel. The five prizes in sciences, economics and literature were being awarded in Stockholm, Sweden.

Leading cartel seeks deal with Colombia

The Washington Post

BOGOTA, Colombia — Leaders of the Cali cocaine cartel, rid of rival Pablo Escobar, have reopened an offensive to negotiate a settlement with the government that would allow them to legalize their drug fortunes and serve a minimum amount of time in prison.

With police having slain the leader of the Medellin cartel a week ago, Colombian and U.S. officials now face the larger task of dismantling the dominant, skilled Cali organization.

But the government's proposal to settle with members of the Cali cartel, first floated in March, has taken on new life with recent changes in the penal code — approved after open lobbying by lawyers of the cocaine traffickers — and the death of Escobar.

The deal would exchange short prison terms for cartel, promises to dismantle operations. The source of the traffickers' massive wealth would not be challenged, in effect making them legitimate businessmen.

Russia vote outcome uncertain

By Grigori Gorenstein Knight-Ridder News Service

MOSCOW — Two days ahead of Russia's parliamentary elections Sunday, it is still impossible to predict the outcome of the vote with any degree of accuracy because publication of opinion poll results in the media has been banned by President Boris Yeltsin.

Analysis

But what opinion polls results managed to see print before the ban suggest the government party, Russia Choice, will be the majority party in the Duma (the lower chamber of parliament) with about 30 percent of voters' support.

Pro-communist parties may enjoy another 15 percent of the voters' support, while the rest will be shared by centrist political blocs, which mostly differ in their attitude to the desired pace of economic and political reform, while agreeing on the necessity of it.

But even these figures do not make the situation clear because only half of the 450 deputies of the future federal parliament's lower chamber will be elected on a political ticket.

The other 225 deputies will be elected from 1,567 independent candidates with no declared political platforms.

The ideological outlook of these people remains a mystery, although their social makeup has been made known by the Central Elections Committee.

The largest social groups among the candidates are as follows: 20 percent of them are local government officials, 22 percent heads of commercial companies, 10 percent scientists, 4.5 percent journalists and 4.5 percent industrial workers and agrarians.

The 176 deputies of the parliament's upper chamber, the Council of the Federation, will be elected from 490 independent candidates. The largest social groups among these are as follows: 36.8 percent local government officials, 15.5 percent heads of commercial companies, 7.8 percent industrial managers, 5.6 percent scientists and teachers, 3 percent journalists and 2.9 percent industrial workers and agrarians.

Equally important to Russia's future development is the outcome of the referendum on the constitution, which will be held in tandem with the parliamentary elections.

The draft constitution has come under severe fire from Yeltsin's opponents, mostly because it gives too much power to the president and his team, the president's team being, in this case, the Russia's Choice, which has been running the country since the abolition of the parliament in the summer.

Eight current government ministers have been put forward by Russia's Choice as parliamentary candidates, Yegor Gaidar, Russia's chief economic reformer, is among them.

It is not certain whether the constitution will be approved by the nation, especially as Russia's Choice's opponents, even in the reformist camp, have been agitating against it.

But if it were approved, Russia's Choice is likely to continue to run the country, whatever the outcome of the parliamentary elections is.

INEL scientists reject Senate investigators' safety warnings

The Associated Press

Idaho National Engineering Laboratory scientists discounted Senate investigators' warnings about the possibility of chemical explosions at Energy Department nuclear waste processing sites like one at the INEL.

Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, wrote Energy Secretary Hazel O'Leary on Thursday that the caution was based on an investigation of an April blast at a Russian nuclear facility.

"The potential for explosions is widespread throughout the entire DOE weapons complex," Glenn wrote.

But Jerry Paulson, chairman of the radiation, environment and safety committee for Westinghouse Idaho Nuclear Co., said no such explosion could occur at the INEL's Idaho Chemical Processing Plant.

Paulson said a chemical necessary to create explosive potential was removed from the INEL plant's waste tank after weapons-grade uranium production ceased in Idaho in 1988.

And from 1980 to 1988, Paulson said, the Chemical Processing Plant operated under a series of safeguards installed after an earlier report analyzing the kind of problem that caused the April 6 explosion at the Tomsk-7 weapons facility in Siberia.

Glenn emphasized that his concern was about the "potential" of a chemical explosion if proper precautions were not taken. He acknowledged he had no evidence that any of the government's nuclear waste tanks were about to explode.

The Russian waste tank explosion, caused by a chemical reaction when workers improperly poured nitric acid into the tank, caused radiation to spew across a 47-square-mile area, according to Energy Department officials who have visited the site. The extent of injuries is not known.

U.S. officials have determined the processing tank contained plutonium nitrate and other fission products. A combination of chemicals in the tank created a compound scientists have called "red oil" — a dense, organic material that decomposes spontaneously upon heating, releasing flammable gases. Organic nitrates are a basic component of some explosives.

The Senate report said there was concern the same volatile situation could arise at U.S. weapons plants during the separation and processing of tons of highly radioactive wastes. Some of the compounds have been stored for decades and their exact composition isn't known.

"There are a number of facilities in the DOE weapons complex where 'red oil' can be a problem," especially in the processing phase of dealing with the wastes, Glenn said.

But Paulson said no red oil remains at the INEL.

And after the Tomsk explosion, he said, INEL engineers expanded the scope of their ongoing review of Chemical Processing Plant operations to look at all organic chemicals used. The review found the possibility for an explosion in the rest of the plant "minimal."

The facilities cited by the Senate report as having a potential for an explosion during processing are:

- Five separate facilities at the Hanford weapons complex near Richland, Wash.
- A waste separation plant and waste tank farms at the Savannah River complex near Aiken, S.C.
- The gaseous diffusion plant near Portsmouth, Ohio.
- Waste tank farms at Oak Ridge, Tenn.
- Waste tank farms at the Idaho Chemical Processing Plant near Idaho Falls.
- A processing facility at Los Alamos National Laboratory in New Mexico.

Fight at Meridian school injures 3

BOISE — In perhaps the first school-related stabbing in Ada County, two teen-agers were hospitalized for knife wounds while a third was treated for physical blows from a fight at Centennial High School.

The injuries occurred Thursday in a dispute between two groups of youths just yards from the Meridian school.

Police were trying to locate three other juveniles they believe were involved for questioning. They were not from Centennial.

A Centennial junior and an 18-year-old former student were subdued with a knife, school officials said. The third injured teen-ager, a former Centennial sophomore, apparently suffered from physical blows.

The other three youths were not from Centennial, police said. Names of the youths believed to have been involved were not released.

County official wants investigation

CASCADE — Valley County Prosecutor Larry Schoenhut wants the attorney general's office to appoint a special prosecutor to investigate allegations against Sheriff's Deputy Donald Seidler Jr.

Schoenhut said he has a conflict that precludes him from participating in the case, which could lead to criminal charges against Seidler.

In a petition filed in 4th District Court, the prosecutor said he previously "acted as defense counsel in one of the matters in which a criminal charge may be filed."

Neither Schoenhut nor Valley County Sheriff Lewis Pratt would comment on the nature of the investigation.

But the prosecutor said it was not related to an investigation last spring that cleared Seidler of allegations that he used County Drug Task Force money to pay for gifts for a former sheriff's deputy. Bookkeeping procedures were tightened up as a result of the probe.

Idaho Guard unit receives award

BOISE — The 124th Fighter Group of the Idaho Air National Guard has received the Air Force Outstanding Unit Award.

Air Force Secretary Sheila Widnall on Thursday presented the award to those she called a "long list of go-getters."

The unit was recognized for its efforts during "Operation Southern Watch," a series of missions over the Persian Gulf earlier this year.

About 1,300 people serve in the group. About 300 were deployed in the 190th Fighter Squadron, directly responsible for 590 combat missions over Iraq that included attacks on surface-to-air missile sites.

Judge will not lower youth's bond

BLACKFOOT — A magistrate has refused to reduce the bond for a Blackfoot teen-ager who faces charges with another boy for beating and robbing an elderly woman last month.

Magistrate James Matsch held bond at $100,000 for Brandon Stecklein, 15, whose public defender had asked he be released so he could return to the alternative school he is attending.

Both Stecklein and Aaron Bruce Nelson, 15, whose bond was set at $50,000, remained in the Bingham County Jail pending Monday's arraignment in 7th District Court on charges of robbery and battery with the intent to commit a serious felony.

The youths are accused of forcing their way into the home of Stecklein's neighbor, Fay Spanbauer, 75, kicking and hitting her until she blacked out and stealing her purse, which contained $10 in cash. Spanbauer was hospitalized for several days with cuts and bruises.

Officials hope project will clean air

COEUR D'ALENE — State officials propose creating a voluntary, three-year demonstration project to clean up Kootenai County's air quality.

If approved by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, the program could help the county avoid violations of the federal Clean Air Act and potentially costly sanctions, officials said Thursday.

A $60,000 EPA grant and matching donations from businesses and government agencies would be used to buy equipment to help locate sources of pollution, said Bruce Cyr of the Kootenai County Air Quality Advisory Committee.

Retirees claim legal counsel plundered Bunker Hill

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — Some Bunker Hill retirees are accusing attorneys and other experts working on the bankruptcy case of the mining complex's one-time owner of plundering the insolvent company and jeopardizing their pensions.

Court records show the lead bankruptcy attorney for Gulf USA Corp. has sought court approval of a $425 hourly rate. Attorney Joshua Angel's New York firm has already received a $50,000 retainer.

And the pensioners are objecting that those salaries are coming from the same pool of cash that finances their benefits, which are often less than $200 a month.

"That's money we can't never get our hands on, and I think we're entitled to it," claimed retiree Dudley Lemon of Kellogg.

Still, the attorney representing the interests of Lemon and other retirees is being paid $300 an hour plus expenses, an amount pensioner

Carmen Moore admits is a lot.

"But this is going to be a pretty complicated case," Moore added. "They're playing pretty high stakes."

Corporate officials have repeatedly said, however, that the pension fund is not in danger, especially with the court supervising Gulf's reorganization.

In addition to its responsibility to retired Bunker Hill workers, Gulf is also responsible for the bulk of the $120 million cost of the environmental cleanup required by Bunker Hill's decades of operation.

Despite concerns about the fees, bankruptcy experts say they are not out of line, and the president of Gulf's Bunker Hill subsidiary agreed.

"We're just in the very early stages of the bankruptcy and there's not a reorganization plan in place yet," said Trey Harbert of Pintar Corp.

Jury finds 2 of 6 Adamsons guilty

By Mick Normington
Times-News writer

BOISE — Faced with 24 counts of bank and mail fraud, only two members of the Robert "Don" Adamson family of Carey received guilty verdicts in Boise federal district court Friday.

A federal grand jury in June named six members of the family in a half-century indictment alleging they sold fraudulent "sight drafts" to investors.

The Idaho Finance Department unsuccessfully sued the family on civil charges in 1988. This summer, federal attorneys filed criminal charges against Robert "Don" Adamson, his children Robert K., Craig, Brent, Jed and Jan Adamson.

The jury found:
• Robert "Don" Adamson guilty on two counts of bank fraud. He was also found innocent on separate counts of mail and bank fraud.

• Robert K. Adamson guilty on three counts of mail fraud and two counts of bank fraud. He was also found innocent on six separate counts of bank fraud.
• Craig Adamson innocent of five counts of bank fraud.

• Brent Adamson innocent of two counts of bank fraud.

• Jed Adamson innocent of five counts of bank fraud.

• Jan Adamson innocent of three counts of bank fraud.

Members of the Adamson family couldn't be reached for comment.

And neither Adamson's defense attorney nor prosecuting attorneys with the U.S. attorney's office in Boise returned calls to comment.

Like checks, sight drafts are payable when presented at banks.

The indictment against the family alleged they sold and used fraudulent sight drafts for nonexistent banks.

Manufacturing firm talks about relocating

TWIN FALLS — Officials with an out-of-state manufacturing company, considering relocating its 80-employee factory, spent the week meeting with leaders of the Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce.

"This is a company we've been working with for a long time," said Kent Just, chamber executive vice president. "It's still not imminent. It's still going to take some time, maybe as long as two years before they make a move."

2 cars collide 1 mile east of Red Cap Corner

KIMBERLY — Two cars collided one mile east of Red Cap Corner, where Highway 30 turns south into Kimberly, at about 5 p.m. Friday near one of the two drivers failed to stop at a stop sign.

A 16-year-old girl driving a 1976 Toyota ran the stop sign at 3600 E. 3800 N. Her car was hit by Huck Flynn, 42, in a 1982 Honda.

"He couldn't do anything to not hit her," said Cpl. Bob Bingham of the Idaho State Police.

All four passengers were taken to Magic Valley Regional Medical Center for treatment, but the extent of their injuries were unknown at press time.

Filer man faces 2 counts of grand theft after confession

TWIN FALLS — An 18-year-old Filer man was arrested and charged with two counts of grand theft early Friday morning after allegedly confessing to the crimes.

Danny Jo Redden, whose bail was set at $2,500, was stopped by a sheriff's deputy at 3:30 a.m. Friday at the Town and Country Store in Buhl.

Redden had been wanted for questioning as a suspect in the theft of a silver Mercury Triquet from a Gooding man, according to an affidavit filed by Deputy Matt Clawson.

Clawson approached Redden and asked him about the car, the affidavit stated. And after reading him his Miranda rights, Redden told Clawson he had stolen the car and several other items, the affidavit stated.

The items allegedly include a bass speaker, a check book, a compact disc player, 20 compact discs, a jacket and a necklace.

Sgt. L.J. House of the Buhl Police Department also arrested Redden for the theft of a Super Nintendo system and several games, which Redden allegedly pawned at a Twin Falls shop.

In addition, Redden was charged with driving without privileges. His license had been suspended for 180 days in May on a drunken-driving charge. Redden faces a preliminary hearing Dec. 17.

Twin Falls man charged with lewd, lascivious conduct

TWIN FALLS — A 24-year-old Twin Falls man was charged Friday of lewd and lascivious conduct with a 15-year-old girl.

The girl alleges that Raymond Edward McGuire of Jackson Street raped her, according to an affidavit filed by police officer Jason Schultz.

McGuire, who took the Fifth Amendment, faces a preliminary hearing Dec. 17.

He had been arrested for drunk-driving in March.

Highway 77 reconstruction in Cassia to begin this spring

SHOSHONE — Reconstruction of Highway 77 in Cassia County from 500 South County Road to Deelo will begin this spring, the Idaho Transportation Department recently announced.

The highway lanes will be widened to 12 feet each, with two additional feet of paved shoulder. Crews will rebuild the roadbed and raise the elevation of the new pavement to flatten the rolling terrain and reduce snowdrift accumulation.

Motorists should expect delays and congestion around the project next spring. The project is expected to be finished in late summer.

Bannock Paving Co. of Pocatello was the low bidder for the contract for the project with a bid of $1.39 million.

Monday's City Council work session canceled

TWIN FALLS — The City Council's regular work session scheduled for Monday has been canceled.

The council's next meeting will be Monday, Dec. 20 at City Hall.

Hanging around

Twin Falls High School students spend an hour in Friday afternoon's sunshine due to a minor fire in a boys restroom. The fire, apparently intentional, was put out in minutes by Twin Falls firefighters, but students waited for smoke to clear before going back to class, said Battalion Chief Wayne Campbell. The fire caused about $1,000 in smoke damage, Campbell said.

Walton: ICA reaches half-way point on initiative

The Associated Press

IDAHO FALLS — The founder of the Idaho Citizens Alliance says his volunteers have collected only about half of the signatures they need to put his anti-gay rights initiative on the 1994 general election ballot.

Making a swing through Idaho Falls this week, Kelly Walton said Bonneville County and its conservative voters are critical to the success of the drive that has been opposed by nearly every political and civic leader in the state.

"In order for this to work, we need to have thousands of volunteers, each doing a small amount of work," the Burley contractor told two dozen supporters at a local church.

Walton asked them for volunteers who can line up supporters precinct by precinct. And he said the alliance needs cash. The effort is costing up to $5,000 a month, he said, and $2,000 of that is coming out of the family-owned business.

The initiative would ban same-sex marriages even though they are not legal in Idaho now, forbid all state and local government employees including teachers from portraying homosexuality as acceptable, and prohibit laws specifically setting out the rights guaranteed homosexuals.

Critics maintain the initiative would actually legalize discrimination against homosexuals, and Attorney General Larry Echols has twice said he believes the proposition is unconstitutional. Many opponents have said if the initiative wins ballot status the campaign will be divisive.

Although the alliance has worked many months to get 16,000 signatures for the initiative, Walton continued to confidently predict no trouble in securing the needed 32,000 registered voters' signatures by the July 8 deadline.

In fact, he told the Idaho Falls group he wants 100,000 signatures by next summer to build up a mailing list and demoralize opponents heading into the fall balloting.

"We will not settle for a 55 percent win," Walton said. "We are going for a 70 percent landslide."

While alliance members expressed satisfaction with the turnout of 24 supporters for Walton, the head of Eastern Idaho for Equality said it showed how few people accept the concept.

"To me it shows that they're having a hard time recruiting people to this discriminatory issue," Maudi Gomez-Schneider said.

Hagerman finds grant paperwork

By Terrell Williams
Times-News correspondent

HAGERMAN — Missing paperwork for a $600,000 grant has been found, and work on a new water system can get under way.

City officials were supposed to have been signed the papers by Dec. 9 in order for Hagerman to receive the money. Earlier this week, however, the papers were nowhere to be found, said Joe Glick of Region IV Development Association.

Friday Glick announced that the documents had been found.

"We can celebrate," he said. "This is excellent news for Hagerman. It's really a blessing."

Glick said he had been unsure if failure to process the documents on time would mean the city would lose the grant.

The city had been wanting to begin work on a new water system until funds were released for the grant, which was awarded to Hagerman last spring.

Glick said the documents from the Economic Development Administration in Washington, D.C., turned up on Thursday just a few blocks away at the Farmers Hope Administration office. The FmHA will administer the EDA grant for Hagerman.

Glick declined to say who was at fault for losing the papers.

"It's not politically palatable to question when or where they came from," he said.

"All we know now is, they're in the hands of the appropriate agency, and we can go forward from there."

He said the city technically beat the Dec. 9 deadline by passing a resolution Tuesday, declaring that Hagerman accepts the grant money. Glick said he sent a copy of that resolution by fax to the EDA on Wednesday.

The documents now will go from the FmHA to Hagerman for official signing.

"Everything has been taken care of," Glick said. "Not all the i's have been dotted and not all the t's have been dotted, but everything is on its way and it's looking fine. We can relax."

Council member Mary Temple said Friday that she is glad the problem has been solved so the city can continue on with the project.

Temple said she was concerned because the loss of that grant could have meant that part of the project would have to be cut.

"I felt that we would never have another chance for (grant) money," she said.

Hagerman may now award the bid to put in a well. Eaton Drilling of Wendell was the lowest of three bids at $53,322. The second place bid was $54,546 and the third was $75,455. Work for the 12-inch well includes drilling, casing, screening, sealing, pumping and testing.

Glick said that when the well is complete, engineers will be able to finish plans for the rest of the water system, based on the volume and pressure of flow from the well.

Engineer Scott Bybee said the rest of the work on the new water system should be ready to bid by early spring so work can continue through the summer of 1994.

Snowplow will bypass road to remote home

By Michael Hoerber
Times-News correspondent

HAILEY — Blaine County commissioners' denial of a plan to plow the road to a remote private homestead inside national forest boundaries is likely to halt construction for the season.

The homestead, owned by Norman and Carol Nie of Chicago is located about three miles northeast of Triumph along Hyndman Creek Road at the base of the Pioneer Mountains. It is surrounded by public lands administered by the Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management.

"Plowing will stop at the turnout to Hyndman Creek Road," reported Deborah Vignes of the Blaine County Planning Department.

The commissioners voted 2-1 Monday to deny a plowing plan proposed by the Forest Service that would put a gate across the road and allow only the Nies and their construction crews access to the site during the winter. The Nies have offered to pay for the plowing.

Commissioner Rupert House voted in favor of the plan, saying the owners ought to have access to their property.

But potential problems associated with increased winter traffic in the remote area and questions about the county's obligation to backcountry homeowners prompted commissioners Len Harlig and Tom Blanchard to vote against the plan.

"The commissioners also felt that the effects to wintering wildlife in the area had not been adequately studied," said Vignes.

The unplowed Hyndman Creek Road is used by cross-country skiers and snowmobilers in the winter.

The Forest Service has no plans to pursue the plowing issue, according to Carole Brown of the Sawtooth National Forest. Access to Hyndman Creek Road will not be fenced or gated, and the use of the road will remain as it has in the past.

Lincoln commissioners try to block sheriff's suit

By Sean L. McCarthy
Times-News writer

SHOSHONE — An Idaho Falls judge came to town Friday to hear the latest arguments in the lawsuit between Lincoln County Sheriff Steve Southwick and the county commissioners.

The commissioners have filed a motion asking Judge Ted Wood to prevent Southwick from blocking the move of the county's emergency dispatchers to Jerome.

A decision should be reached before the end of the year.

"Everything is the responsibility of the sheriff," Southwick said. His lawsuit questions the constitutional rights of the commissioners to move the dispatch center, he said.

The commissioners wanted to close the county's dispatch center Oct. 1 and shift emergency calls to Jerome County's dispatch center in a move to save money until a regional center is built.

But Southwick's lawsuit has stopped the switch at least temporarily.

Southwick said Friday he is opposed to regional dispatching for Lincoln County because it would further hamper his abilities as sheriff. He has contended already that the commissioners also have not given him enough money for proper law enforcement.

"They're looking to save money ... and that's not a sure thing," he said.

Lincoln County Commissioner Clarence Tews said Friday that Southwick cares more about his power base than about the needs of the county taxpayers.

"The bottom line is he wants his way no matter what," Tews said. "He admitted it on the stand."

Consolidating emergency dispatch with Jerome, Gooding and Twin Falls County is a bid for Lincoln County, he said.

Lincoln County gets the best deal because we don't have a very large population base," he said.

But the lawsuit could prohibit Lincoln County from benefiting from the dispatching merger.

"As I understand it, if we lose this, Lincoln County will have to pull out of the regional concept," Tews said.

No matter who wins, Tews believes that county residents should ask for accountability.

"I think there should be a recall against either him or us," he said. "Because one of us is wrong."

A trial date to hear the full lawsuit has been set for April 26, Southwick said.

Utah Supreme Court upholds Salt Lake City Council prayer

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The Utah Supreme Court has upheld the Salt Lake City Council's practice of allowing public prayer to open its meetings.

In a 5-2-page decision released Friday, the court stated that the City Council prayer did not run counter to a state constitutional provision barring use of public money or property for religious practices.

"It appears that the court has upheld our practice, which we think is important for all the people of the state to establish a fair and correct balance between religious liberty and the sense that the state and the city do not have to be anti-religious," said Salt Lake City Attorney Roger Cutler.

In 1992, 3rd District Judge Dennis Frederick ruled in favor of the Society of Separationists, which had filed a suit claiming the city acted unconstitutionally when it spent public money to conduct prayers at City Council meetings.

The district court permanently enjoined the city from spending more public money for such purposes or allowing pre-meeting prayers.

In arguments before the Supreme Court this year, the city's position was that opening prayers at the meetings were a non-religious exercise, but were instead moments of reflection that encouraged meditation and civility, fostered sensitivity and recognized diversity.

The high court did not agree, and noted in its decision that the prayer-at-issue was directed to a divinity and seemed "undeniably religious."

However, taking a position described as middle ground between the Society of Separationists and Salt Lake City, the court found that governmental neutrality in the use of public money or property underlies the state constitution.

"When the state is neutral, any benefit flowing to religious worship, exercise or instruction can be of the character of an indirect benefit that flows to all who are beneficiaries of government."

wrote Justice Michael Zimmerman for the majority.

The constitution does not require a hostility toward religion, "nor does it permit the state to enter the quagmire of direct government support of religious or religious functions," he wrote.

Much of the ruling centered on the unique history of Utah, settled by Mormons, and the resulting extra protections built into the state constitution to prevent domination by that religion. The ruling states there is no evidence to support a claim that allowing prayers before city meetings would allow religious domination.

In the sole dissenting opinion, Justice I. Daniel Stewart wrote that the high court, "in a decision unparalleled in Utah jurisprudence, refuses to enforce the plain meaning of a constitutional provision."

Stewart wrote that the section in the state constitution forbidding expenditure of public money for religious exercises was purposely stronger than similar sections of the U.S. Constitution.

The framers of the Utah Constitution "sought to make clear the line that should separate church and state," Stewart wrote, and "well knew that they dealt with a society unique in its religious character."

Stewart wrote that the opinion that anti-establishment provisions are hostile to religion is wrong and that the majority's "middle-ground" approach is contrived. The decision, he said, "sanctions a serious and highly regrettable erosion of freedom of religion."

The practice of saying prayers prior to Salt Lake City Council meetings was abandoned between 1911 and 1979, and resumed in 1980. In 1987, an assistant city attorney said that while prayer probably was allowed by the U.S. Constitution, such prayers should be nondenominational.

However, as a result of that opinion, the prayers were suspended for several months. In 1988, the practice again resumed, but representatives of a variety of faiths were invited to participate.

In 1991, the Society of Separationists sued in 3rd District Court, alleging the City Council had violated the Utah Constitution by spending public money for a religious exercise. The Utah chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union joined the suit.

Brian Barnard, who filed the original suit for the Society of Separationists, said the ruling was a major setback for freedom of religion in Utah.

"This is a dangerous precedent and a misinterpretation of the clear language of Utah's constitutional provision," he said in a prepared statement. "In the long run, all of the people in Utah would benefit from government not being involved in the practice of religion."

Barnard said after trying and failing three times on the issue, the resolution was made by the federal courts. But with "all the Reagan and Bush appointees entrenched there, our prospects are not encouraging."

ACLU attorney Kathryn Kendall said her organization was "dismayed" at the ruling, and cautioned against a "knee-jerk legislative rush" to amend the Utah Constitution.

The Legislature considered a religious liberties amendment to the Utah Constitution last year. Some lawmakers pointed to the pending Supreme Court ruling as a reason not to pass the amendment, hoping Frederick's ruling would be struck down.

"They also pointed out that any resolution was made by the federal courts by the public until the 1994 general election."

But others, mostly Republicans, wanted to use the case as a vehicle with which to remove a church-state separation clause they've viewed as an oppressive imposition by Congress for nearly 100 years.

Utah is predominantly Mormon. The church claims roughly 70 percent of the state's 1.2 million residents as members.

Small aquifer in southeast Boise in trouble

BOISE (AP) — An aquifer serving bustling southeastern Boise is dropping and many more wells will begin sucking air in the next few years, a study says.

People attending a state Department of Water Resources meeting Thursday came away convinced the aquifer that serves the area is in trouble.

Research showed groundwater dropped about two feet a year from 1971 to 1991. It then plunged about 10 feet per year after large wells were drilled.

Scott Stephens, who uses a well, said he believes further development of the aquifer should be stopped.

"It's pretty basic supply and demand," he said. "If you don't have water, you can't supply the people."

Boise Water Corp., which funded the research, has asked Water Resources to declare a 19-square-mile section in southeastern Boise a "groundwater management area."

That would require anyone who wants to drill a new well in that area to get a permit. It would also mean water, a request that would be nearly impossible to prove.

David Tutill with Water Resources said the agency would make a decision on the request next year.

A Boise State University study shows that part of town is served by a small aquifer separate from a large pool of underground water that supplies the rest of the city. The larger supply is fine.

The BSU study indicates a lot more wells could be sucking air in five to 10 years if growth continues at its current rate.

About 24 percent of Boise's rapid residential development has occurred there since 1980 and the trend is expected to continue.

Development consultant Chris Korte said growth does not have to be slowed. It is just a matter of getting water to the area from somewhere else, he said.

Bay area woman hits record nickel jackpot

RENO, Nev. (AP) — A San Francisco Bay area woman spent less than $2 worth of nickels to win $955,132, a record jackpot on a 5-cent slot machine.

"I couldn't believe it. I didn't even play a whole roll of nickels," Lyla Bailey said. "I just thought I had won a whole lot of nickels."

Bailey, 27, of Vallejo, Calif., said she was visiting Reno with her brother and his girlfriend.

"We were talking about how we were coming up to Reno on a bus and we were going to fly back on a plane. I guess we can now," she said.

She hit the jackpot late Thursday at Harrah's Reno.

Nevada Nickels, created by International Game Technology, links more than 4,250 machines in over 120 Nevada casinos to a single jackpot that builds from a $200,000 base. Three coins are required to win the big payoff.

Loretta Klingenberg will retire after 41 years as Rupert city clerk.

Rupert city clerk serious about 3rd retirement try

By Liz Wright Times-News writer

RUPERT — No one took Loretta Klingenberg seriously when twice she offered to retire as city clerk.

After 41 years, this time she means it. Klingenberg, 72, has worked for the city of Rupert since 1952, kept the books for three mayors, overseen countless elections and managed the city's accounting. She will retire Dec. 31.

Klingenberg gave the City Council a letter announcing her retirement when she turned 65, then the age limit for public servants. She gave the council another when she turned 70, after the limit was changed.

Council members and Mayor W.F. "Bill" Whitton shrugged it off.

"I have two letters of retirement in a drawer somewhere," she said. "The mayor would say, 'We'll deal with that later, Loretta.'"

Her reason for retiring this time, she jokes, is that after so many years, she's getting out before she's thrown out.

"I think maybe it's time that I get out, at least before someone says, 'You know, maybe this old lady needs to go.' I don't think I would like someone to say that," Klingenberg says.

A native of Heyburn, she graduated from business college and worked at jobs such as the Minidoka County treasurer's assistant.

During World War II she managed the Office of Price Administration which doled out rations of food, gas and other necessities. The daily paperwork and bookkeeping was "actually a lot like the council," Klingenberg said.

She remembers when the city hall was about one-sixth its current size, next to an auditorium where state basketball championships were held.

"It was fairly crowded. It was just as crowded then as it is crowded now," she said.

But things have changed. In an age when people all sue each other, the traditional oral contract and handshake has been replaced with a pile-of-legal-documents, she said. Even with computers, paperwork has increased dramatically.

"I think it's even increased since the Paperwork Reduction Act," she said with a laugh.

But old accounting habits die hard. Klingenberg said she doesn't trust the new computers in the city hall to do the math for her.

"I still keep my own handbooks and make sure they compare," she said.

Klingenberg is no stranger to the daily visitors grumbling about their sewer, water, electric and garbage bills. Once in awhile, she says, she actually gets a compliment from someone about how low the bills are compared to where they used to live.

"There was a man who once said that the real work goes on in the kitchen. The parlor might be the nicest part of the home, but the real nitty gritty goes on behind the doors in the kitchen. That's kind of the way I feel about this job," she said.

An avid reader, Klingenberg looks forward to taking literature courses at the College of Southern Idaho. She has two daughters, four grandchildren and eight great-grandchildren.

Unregistered sex offender nets 90 days, 2 years probation

By Liz Wright Times-News writer

BURLEY — A convicted sex offender who failed to notify police that he had moved to Cassia County was sentenced Friday to 90 days in jail and two years probation by a 5th District judge.

Jesse Franklin Palomarez, 23, is the first person in the state to be sentenced under a new law designed to keep track of convicted sex offenders.

Judge George Granata said the state needs to enforce the sex offender registration law, but Palomarez's crime wasn't worth any penitentiary time. Palomarez pleaded guilty last month to a charge of failure to register as a sex offender. He had faced up to five years in jail and up to a $5,000 fine.

The new state law required that Palomarez give the Cassia County Sheriff's Department his new address, and that he be fingerprinted and photographed. According to court documents, his parole officer told him in August to register within 5 days of moving to Cassia County. Police arrested him 1 1/2 months later.

Palomarez said he was convicted last year in Ada County for lewd conduct with a 15-year-old girl.

Palomarez had posted bond before the sentencing. He has moved to Heyburn, where he registered with the Minidoka Sheriff's Department, according to a police report.

Man receives 10 years in beating case

The Times-News

BURLEY — A 5th District Court judge sentenced a man who beat a Burley woman to ten years in prison without the chance of parole.

Roy Garcia, charged with rape, had pleaded guilty to a lesser charge of battery with the intent to commit a serious felony.

Judge Roger Berwick said in court Friday that Garcia, along with another man, committed one of the most brutal crimes he has seen in his 20 years on the bench, Deputy Prosecutor Howard Smyser and the court clerk said.

A jury found the other man, Gilbert Chapa, guilty of rape last week. Garcia and Chapa were charged in connection with the rape and beating of a 37-year-old woman west of town on Oct. 17 last year. The woman spent three days and two nights in the hospital as a result of her injuries.

Chapa's sentencing is scheduled for Dec. 21.

Babbitt wants new grazing fee proposal done by February

GRAND JUNCTION, Colo. (AP) — Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt hopes to have a new proposal on grazing fees and water rights ready by mid-February.

Babbitt told a crowd of about 75 people he has made "great progress" since he began meeting with 16 Colorado environmentalists and ranchers to discuss public lands issues.

"I think what we've heard is very, very encouraging," he said. Babbitt's visit this past week is part of a series of meetings that Gov. Roy Romer set up between the Interior Department and Coloradoans to find common ground on public lands issues.

Some Idaho officials have urged Gov. Cecil Andrus to put together the same kind of exchange for his state.

Andrus and Romer were the only western governor to support the Clinton administration in its initial — and unsuccessful — attempt to revamp federal land grazing management.

Babbitt is making eight weekly trips to Colorado to participate in the discussions. The remaining sessions are scheduled Dec. 16, Dec. 22, Jan. 5 and Jan. 19 in Romer's office in Denver.

After Thursday's session, Babbitt said the group has agreed that a land management council should be formed at the local level, with representatives of every involved industry, that would have authority for planning and budgeting.

Last spring, Babbitt proposed raising the government's fee for grazing livestock on federal lands by 130 percent, which would have boosted the current $1.86 fee to $4.28 per month for a cow and her calf or for five sheep.

Later, Babbitt changed the fee to $3.45 which some Western senators accepted. But the proposal was derailed earlier this month partly because it also would have given the government new rights to water on or under its land.

Kootenai deputy leaves prosecutor's office

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — A top deputy prosecutor in Kootenai County is resigning, in part because he contends county commissioners are interfering with Prosecutor Bill Douglas' ability to run his office.

John McKinney said Thursday that he is quitting primarily to pursue a job handling federal appeals cases. But he said the decision also was influenced by what he sees as a sour relationship between commissioners and Douglas.

The prosecutor filed suit against county commissioners earlier this year after they set up their own legal division and took two of his attorneys to staff it.

McKinney said he felt commissioners blocked recent promotions for himself and Deputy Prosecutor Brian Watkins to get even with Douglas.

"It seems to be real clear that they are punishing Bill," McKinney said. "They aren't letting him use his budget the way he sees fit. This position is not funded properly to make people want to stay, and that's not Bill's fault; it's the higher-ups in the county."

"I don't want to be part of their political thing here," McKinney said.

said McKinney's statements were sour grapes prompted by his failure to get the promotion. The commissioners' relationship with Douglas is fine, he said.

Filer school combines secular, sacred

By H. R. Weixel
Times-News correspondent

FILER — Amid the hint of a one-room schoolhouse environment, students at Clover Trinity Lutheran School receive both a secular and a Christian education.

Wide open plains, potato and grain fields and a white church complete with a belfry and steeple surround the school that is located about seven miles southwest of Filer. It was built in 1915.

Enrollment ranges from 100 to 120 students, preschool through eighth grade, according to the Rev. Dale Grimm, pastor of the Clover Trinity Lutheran Church that sponsors the school. From an annual budget of $260,000, the church spends about $130,000 in support of the school.

About 40 percent of the students belong to Clover Trinity Lutheran Church, reported Hugo Meyer, one of the school's early students. The other 60 percent represent 17 different denominations.

"People came here from the Midwest, and they wanted a Christian school for their kids, so the first thing they built was the school," he said. "They lived in tents until the school was done. Then they built their homes and the church."

Meyer and his brother and four sisters were born in a house ½ mile west of the school. They all graduated from Clover Trinity, as did Meyer's four children. The third generation of Meyers, seven grandchildren, are now attending or have graduated from the school. Hugo Meyer's daughter, Shirley Hadley, teaches at the school.

The statement of philosophy for the school reads, "The prime reason Clover Trinity Lutheran School exists is for its people to share the Gospel of Christ and to live as servants of God (Luke 10:41-42). Nearly equal in importance, yet secondary to the first, Clover Trinity Lutheran School exists to educate the whole child to become a valuable member of the society."

In keeping with the purpose of the school, its curriculum is Bible-based. The parent handbook reads, "The pupil has the benefit of hearing God's Holy Word taught daily in purity and truth. Our aim, therefore, is to teach religion, not as a subject only, but to allow it to permeate into all learning and to instill in the child entrusted to our care a truly Christian philosophy of life."

Subjects include social studies, science, language arts, mathematics, fine arts, physical education, computer education and Bible study.

Sports experiences are varied. "High School principals and coaches have told me they are always glad to get our eighth-grade athletes because they come from a small school and have had more practice playing more positions," Meyer said.

Children whose parents are members of the church are given first priority for enrollment. Those whose parents are members of other Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod congregations are second, followed by those whose parents are of non-Lutheran background but who are prospective members.

Unchurched people and those who have a church of their own and have no intention of making a change are considered for enrollment last. Children of parents who are church members are charged a different tuition rate.

Meyer said some parents enroll their children at Clover Trinity Lutheran because the children have special learning needs or behavioral problems.

"But we limit the number of these students, so we can be sure we can take adequate care of them," he said.

Mervin Munster serves as principal and teacher, working with seven other teachers, 10 staff members and several volunteers.

"We're not here for the money; we receive less than the public school system, but the joy comes from teaching and training the whole child, body, mind and heart."

How to enjoy the holidays this year

Every year Christian denominations make a concerted effort to get people to stop spending their money on Christmas gifts, and each holiday season the profits for peddlers goes up even more.

Obviously, something is wrong. Christians sit in church and listen to kindly pastors bemoan the spending frenzy and then, after church, head for the shopping mall and spend piles of money.

Do they feel guilty? Not in the least. Do they think their pastor is out of touch when the sermons are in process? Of course not, because they know it's all part of the holiday zinnies.

Clark Morphew
Faith today

These good Christians simply feel compelled to spend lots of money on Christmas. And no amount of admonishing will change their minds. Spending lots of money at Christmas is the American way, and if we didn't, entire families would be mad as harassed hornets.

Here's the deal. Let's say you have sent Aunt Mildred an expensive lace hanky every Christmas for 25 years. Then you decide to apply Christian principles to the holidays. Instead of a hanky, you simply send Aunt Mildred a nice Christmas card.

Now, will Aunt Mildred mind? What do you think? All I can say is: At the next family reunion, you're liable to get Aunt Mildred's baked beans right in the kisser.

And what about the children? They have heard every toy commercial, seen every Santa Claus, watched the television specials, and they will not be denied their fair share. How could you even think about shorting the children?

Here is the official disclaimer from the United Methodists this year. Instead of letting yourself get caught up in the commercialism of Christmas, Christians should: relax, center on Jesus, seek solitude, share with others and rejoice.

All of that is very good advice, if you're capable of carrying through. But how many of us have time to relax at Christmas time?

Here, for your enjoyment, is the proven Morphew method of enjoying Christmas:

• COMPLAIN—In some cultures, complaining has become an art form. Remember, the more complaining you do, the more sympathy you will receive. Complain about anything from how tired you are to the poor quality of Christmas trees, and if you can't get done eventually, so, flip on that television, read a book about slugs — and be one.

• PROCRASTINATE. This is as close as you will come to relaxing this Christmas. When the urge to do something Christmasy pops into your mind, do a reverse on the gear shift of your brain and back away. We all know that most things will get done eventually. So, flip on that television, read a book about slugs — and be one.

• MAKE LISTS. Make lists of everything: groceries, guests, Christmas cards, things to do, people you no longer enjoy and relatives you think are jerks. This exercise will relieve your guilt over being far behind on everything. When all the lists are done, throw them away and start over.

• CUT. Trim everything but the Christmas tree. Your Christmas dinner should be cut by one dish. If you have too many dishes, people will just think you're trying to show off. Cut the card list by 10 percent minimum — the gift list by 5 percent. With the money saved, buy yourself a labor-saving appliance.

• NAP. Napping is the ultimate escape. It's better than watching television, because when you're conscious, you might slip and think about Christmas chores. This is dangerous. So, hit the couch instead, have some happy dreams and wake up refreshed. Nap as often as you like, and you'll be surprised how much faster Christmas comes and goes.

• CONFESS. Obviously, if you follow this plan, when Christmas does arrive, you will not be done with all your Christmas work. There is only one thing to do, and I can tell you from personal experience that it works. You must confess.

Tell your friends and relatives that time has just flown by and you have not completed everything. They'll say, "Who needs all that stuff, anyway? Come over here and relax on the couch."

You'll be amazed how forgiving people are. And isn't that the way things should be at Christmas?—and you will have done a wonderful thing: living people an opportunity to show their loving and forgiving side.

My guess is, this will be your very best Christmas ever. And you have me to thank.

Clark Morphew is an ordained clergyman and writer for the St. Paul (Minn.) Pioneer Press.

Students from Clover Trinity Lutheran School give a musical performance during the Twin Falls Festival of Trees celebration. A Bible-based curriculum at the school brings a 'Christian philosophy of life' into the teaching of all subjects, according to the parent handbook.

Tabernacle Choir already geared up for Christmas songs

The Times-News

SALT LAKE CITY — The Mormon Tabernacle Choir is known as "The Christmas Choir," probably for a lot of reasons.

One is its home base in the heart of downtown Salt Lake City, which is festively decorated for the holidays with hundreds of thousands of tiny, sparkling lights. Another is the collective musical abilities of choir members and leaders, who specialize in performing music that is wondrous and warm. Still another is the choir's religious heritage, which considers the Christmas season to be laden with special meaning and significance.

But if you ask the choir's musical director, Jerald Outley, he'll tell you that this year there is at least one other contributing factor to the choir's reputation as the Choir of Christmas: frequency.

"We've celebrated Christmas three times already this year," Outley said. "We've made new Christmas recordings and prepared for our annual Christmas concerts, which will also be recorded for Christmas."

Deadline is Dec. 13. Include your name, address and phone number.

Orthodox Church has rich history

"Orthodox, is that Christian?" This is a common question asked by many when they hear of the Orthodox Church for the first time.

The answer is a definite yes! In fact, Orthodox means "correct doctrine," and the Orthodox Church traces its heritage to the age of the apostles. Yet many in the United States are unfamiliar with the Orthodox Church. Some have called it the "best-kept secret in America."

From the time of Christ until the end of the first millennium, the church was one. The holy apostles and their successors were zealous to guard the unity of the church. However, in A.D. 1054, differences between the West (Rome) and the East (Constantinople, Antioch, Jerusalem and Alexandria) came to a head and the church split. This split is called the Great Schism. The western church became known as the Roman Catholic Church and the eastern church became known as the Eastern Orthodox Church, or simply the Orthodox Church.

It is important to keep in mind that all Christians have a common heritage for the first 1,000 years of church history. It was during the fourth century, for example, that the church met and decided which writings should be included in the Bible. Also, from time to time, false teachings arose to challenge the faith handed down from the apostles. On these occasions, great councils of bishops were convened to answer these heresies and to set forth the true teaching of Christianity. From A.D. 325 to A.D. 787, there were seven such "Ecumenical Councils."

Clergy corner
Father Philip Nixon

The Orthodox Church believes that the full Christian faith was given by Christ to the apostles. The responsibility of the church is to receive the faith and faithfully "pass it on" to the next generation. The "faith" encompasses the entire life of the church — its worship, its doctrine and its government. The Orthodox Church looks to the Bible as the primary source of the Christian faith. The Ecumenical Councils are viewed as faithful interpretations of the scriptures and explanations of the Christian faith.

For the Orthodox, the Christian faith does not change. While new challenges and issues may arise, the task of the church is not to adapt the faith but to address these issues in light of the unchanging Christian faith. In an age when everything is up for grabs, the Christian faith is not. Many Christians seeking true Christian worship,

Lutheran Church vows to complete task force's human sexuality policy

The Associated Press

The nation's largest Lutheran group has vowed to keep closer tabs on a task force that provoked widespread protests for supporting homosexual unions, but the church is not backing off from its sex wars.

The Church Council of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America voted to appoint an 11-member consulting panel to work with the task force to make sure any official policy on human sexuality would stand on biblical foundations and the confessional tradition of the church.

Church officials also announced Thursday that the council has decided to hire up to three people to replace the Rev. Karen L. Bloomquist, who was removed as the director of the sexuality study after the first draft was released.

'We do have a crisis. A crisis can be a doorway to looking at things in a new way or a teaching moment.'

— Bishop Herbert Chilstrom

Lutheran Church in America, the American Lutheran Church and the Association of Evangelical Lutheran Churches.

It is not affiliated with the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod. A 21-page report released in October, "The Church and Human Sexuality: A Lutheran Perspective," urged members to challenge traditional biblical condemnations of homosexuality, and argued that supporting and even moving toward a practice of blessing committed same-sex unions are practices "strongly supported by responsible Lutheran tradition."

The 67-member Conference of Bishops expressed concerns about how parts appeared to be equated with the term "loving, committed relationship," and in particular with the way Scripture was interpreted in defense of homosexual relationships.

The reaction from the pews was immediate, and largely negative. Chilstrom said he received about 700 letters.

"Most of the negative letters go directly to the issue of homosexuality. It is very clear that that is the flash point," he said in a statement.

In its official statement released Thursday, the council acknowledged "strong signs that trust in the current task force has been impaired" and that significant modifications were required for the process to be widely accepted and trusted.

Local churches have until June to send back responses to the first draft. A second draft is scheduled to be prepared next summer in time for a churchwide assembly of lay and clergy delegates in 1995.

Women's Aglow is an international, interdenominational Christian organization of women introducing women to Jesus and encouraging them to get to know him better.

Parish plans Mexican tradition

TWIN FALLS — The Posadas, a pageant of Christmas, will be celebrated by the Hispanic community of St. Edward's Catholic Parish from Thursday through Dec. 24.

During the Mexican tradition, a procession of families visits a different house each of eight nights before Christmas Eve. The celebration will conclude on Christmas Eve at St. Edward's Catholic Church, 161 Sixth Ave. E.

At each house, the procession re-enacts the story of Mary and Joseph in Bethlehem as they ask for a room and are turned away. The story is portrayed in song and prayer and is followed by refreshments served by the residents of the home.

As the highlight of each evening, a pinata is broken. The breaking of a pinata is an Italian custom commemorating the reaching of adulthood. The custom was brought to the new world by the Spaniards and took on a religious meaning in Mexico. An ornately wrapped clay vessel contains cookies, candies, and sometimes small toys is suspended overhead. The pinata represents the demons inside of people. A blindfolded person representing virtue strikes the pinata with a stick. When the pinata breaks (virtue overweighing evil), goodies fall to the floor (the attractiveness of evil) and are consumed (elimination of all that is bad).

The procession continues to a room at the church on the ninth night, at which time Jesus' birth is commemorated in front of the crib scene.

Missionaries

Three young men have been called to serve two-year missions for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. One young woman has returned from serving a mission.

Phimmosone

Elder Phou Phimmosone, son of Seng and Sone Phimmosone, will serve in the California Fresno Laotian-speaking Mission. He will speak in sacrament meeting at 12:30 p.m. Sunday at the Twin Falls 11th Ward chapel on Eastland Drive North, and will enter the Mission Training Center in Provo, Utah, Wednesday. Phimmosone graduated from Twin Falls High School in 1992 and attended the College of Southern Idaho for one year, where he was on the dean's list. During high school, he was on the Bruin football and track teams for three years and was named All-Conference Defensive Back his senior year.

Elder Casey Adams, son of Lary and Kathy Adams of Murtaugh, will serve in the Fiji Suva Mission. He will speak in sacrament meeting at 10:45 a.m. Sunday at the Murtaugh LDS Church and will enter the MTC Wednesday. An Eagle Scout, Adams graduated from Murtaugh High School, where he was active in athletics, and attended CSI for one year, where he was a member of the track team.

Elder Christopher Hoy, son of Tom and Joan Hoy of Rupert, will serve in the Pennsylvania Philadelphia Laotian-speaking Mission. He will speak in sacrament meeting at 9 a.m. Sunday at the Rupert 4th Ward chapel, 100 W. 36 S., and will enter the MTC Wednesday. An open house is set for 12:30 to 4 p.m. Sunday at the Hoy residence, 45 S. 85 W. Hoy graduated from Minico High School in 1993, where he was active with the Drama Club. He has been working for a couple of farmers in the Rupert area.

Sister Lisa Dixon, daughter of Paul and Wendy Dixon of Jerome, served for 18 months in the South Africa Durban Mission. She will report on her mission at 9 a.m. Sunday at the Jerome 5th Ward chapel, 320 N. Lincoln. Dixon graduated from Jerome High School in 1989. She plans to continue her education at Brigham Young University in Provo, Utah.

Heir to top Mormon post back at work

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — He's frail and can't walk without help, but the 86-year-old heir to the mantle of prophet, seer and revelator to more than 8 million Mormons worldwide is back at work.

Howard W. Hunter, president of the Council of the Twelve Apostles, spent nearly six months recuperating from gallbladder surgery in May. He has made the trip from his home to the church's Administration Building almost daily for the past month.

The state of Hunter's health is critical to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, whose president, Ezra Taft Benson, 94, has been enfeebled for several years. At no time in the faith's 163-year history has a successor been too frail or sick to assume the presidency.

"He's doing remarkably well," said Hunter's son, Richard, of San Jose, Calif. "I speak with him just the other day. I find it incredible, bouncing back the way he does."

Richard Hunter and church spokesman Don LeFevre said that for the past month or so, Hunter has been at the office "virtually every day," often working six or seven hours.

"He has felt well enough to attend his regular meetings and to handle his responsibilities as president of the Council of Twelve Apostles from his office," LeFevre said in a prepared statement. Hunter declined to be interviewed, as did other members of the council.

"He prefers details of his health challenges remain private," LeFevre said.

Hunter has suffered a variety of physical ailments: a heart attack, bypass surgery and a weakened leg that have forced him to use a walker. He spends much of his time in a wheelchair.

In 1989, Hunter lost his balance and fell while speaking at the church's General Conference. He pulled himself back to the podium and completed the speech.

His health problems and the loss of his first wife in 1983 led to a bout with depression. He remarried in 1990, at age 82.

Virtually every conversation about Hunter includes the caveat, "For a man of his age...." It is no secret that his 86 years have left him physically frail, although apparently he is mentally sound.

As long as he remains that way, then all is well from the standpoint of the church's doctrine on apostolic succession. Church presidents serve for life, and ascend as "prophet, seer and revelator" through strict seniority within the Council of the Twelve.

Hunter, a Boise, Idaho, native and a corporate attorney by profession, was named to the council in 1959. If he becomes president, he will be the first Mormon leader born in the 20th century.

Gordon B. Hinckley, 83,

Benson's first counselor, follows Hunter.

Since church founder Joseph Smith's murder in 1844, the 11 intervening presidents before Benson averaged 85 years of age at death. The average age today of the three-member First Presidency and the Council of the Twelve is 74.

But if a president were to die and the senior apostle be incapacitated, the other apostles would be faced with a "terrible quandary," and not just for ecclesiastical reasons, said D. Michael Quinn, author of a forthcoming history of the Mormon hierarchy.

The governing First Presidency has become the "soul" of the faith's multi-billion dollar corporate structure, Quinn said. Its members — the president and two counselors he picks from the apostles — act essentially as its chief executive officer and senior vice presidents.

When a church president dies, the First Presidency is dissolved and the council and former counselors meet in the Salt Lake Temple with quorum to ordain the new president. He picks his counselors, and the trio immediately execute a variety of documents that ensure a smooth transition of power.

"That could not happen if the senior apostle were incapacitated," Quinn said. In the 19th century, the church was able to operate without a First Presidency, and did so on three occasions. It would be more difficult, if not impossible, for that to happen now.

"The president is the soul of the financial structure of the church," Quinn said. "That would make it very difficult, if not impossible, to return to the pattern of last century."

Group hopes to rebuild Mormon tabernacle in the Midwest

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa (AP) — A group plans to rebuild the Mormon tabernacle where Brigham Young was named president and prophet of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

The newly organized Pottawattamie County Mormon Trails Association must match a $25,000 grant from the Block Family Trust to rebuild the historic Kanesville Tabernacle, built in December 1847.

The original building, which was north of what is now Council Bluffs' First Avenue near Indian Creek, was large enough to seat 1,000 people. It was destroyed because it was built on top of a natural spring.

and spiritual values, albeit differently. "Noel," produced by Bonneville International, is a lengthy collection that features performances of 35 different Christmas songs and carols, including "Here We Come A-Caroling," "God Rest Ye Merry Gentlemen," "I Wonder as I Wander," "Still, Still, Still" and "What Child is This?"

The second collection, "Christmas With the Mormon Tabernacle Choir," produced by Laser Light, includes 14 selections (most traditional favorites like "Angels We Have Heard on High," "The First Noel," "O Holy Night," "Silent Night" and "Joy to the World").

Both recordings are available in retail record shops. Choir leaders are constantly on the lookout for what Otley called "new material that has a familiar ring" and familiar material with a new twist.

For example, the choir repertoire includes five different arrangements of "Oh Come Immanuel," the traditional opener of a Mormon Tabernacle Choir Christmas concert. The different arrangements are rotated from year to year and from recording to recording to keep the material feeling fresh to singers and listeners alike.

"The Christmas story of the birth of Jesus Christ in a manger in Bethlehem is central to our beliefs as a church," Otley said. "So singing Christmas music is not just a musical experience for the members of the choir but a cultural, aesthetic and religious experience."

Golden Eagles struggle, win

By Larry Hovey
Times-News writer

PRICE, Utah - College of Southern Idaho's men did a lot of things quite poorly Friday night in opening their title defense of the Scenic West Athletic Conference.

But it did two things very well. First, it won 76-74, and second, it had a big night at the foul line, hitting 15 of 17.

In fact, CSI won it at the line when freshman Shawn Bankhead hit two threes with five seconds showing.

The victory, which came very hard after CSI had moved ahead by 12 points with just over seven minutes left, moved the Eagles onto their second loop game tonight against Northwestern Colorado of Remedy.

CSI had major trouble on two fronts, especially in the closing minutes against CEU.

First, Coach Steve Irons put them in a slowdown to waste clock but made an offensive error at the end.

What it basically accomplished was shutting off CSI entirely as the team was unable to come out of the slowdown and make a good offensive thrust.

Then, in the final 2:52, CEU got four put-back field goals as the Eagles outscored CSI 24-14 after falling behind 62-50.

"The negative of the game was definitely the last three minutes," said Irons. "One problem was I was calling out the plays but the players couldn't hear me over the crowd. We will have to work on having the point guard picking that up and running it on the floor."

"But the disappointment was when we slowed down we didn't execute into a termination play. We need to be able to do that."

Still, the second half was better for CSI than the first, particularly in the area of transition offense.

"In the first half I don't believe we had one good transition basket," Irons said. "At halftime, we stressed pushing the ball upcourt, and we got some critical points that way."

And the foul shooting brought a smile to the face of the coach who has been worried about a low percentage all season. "At halftime I'm looking at the stats and feeling if we were going to shoot free throws like that in the second half, we'd be all right."

That was true. But not until Bankhead, who called it a routine day at the office, knocked down the two winners.

It was CSI's worst game from a couple of other statistical standpoints. First, the Eagle committed 25 turnovers. The other wasn't bad - the Eagles shooting was 28.65 for the night. The Eagles held a solid 14-rebound edge - but it was their inability to secure the ball off the board at the end that paved the way for CEU's comeback.

Eastern Utah overruns CSI for 96-72 win

By Larry Hovey
Times-News writer

PRICE, Utah - The inside-outside punch of Natalie Hawks and Angela Ross overpowered College of Southern Idaho's women Friday night.

And the College of Eastern Utah ran off with a 96-72 victory to open the Scenic West Athletic Conference basketball race.

Hawks, a freshman from Rexburg, worked the middle for 23 points while Ross had a quiet 24, punctuated by three 3-point goals.

Hawks was 11-15 from the field as CEU outshot CSI 30-67 against 20-73.

CEU hit a six-point spurt to open a 12-7 lead early and never trailed again. But its lead didn't hit 20 points until 7:10 remained in the game.

The game was marked by 56 fouls - 28 on each side. CSI had 27-40 from the stripe while CEU had 32-43.

Court issues citation for Capriati incident

TAMPA, Fla. — Tennis star Jennifer Capriati received a citation for walking away from a shopping mall booth wearing a $15 silver ring she was trying on, her agent said Friday.

The citation, given to Capriati on Thursday at the Tampa Bay Center Mall, carried no civil or criminal penalties and requires no further action, agent Barbara Perry said in New York.

Capriati, 17, the world's ninth-ranked women's player, was trying on rings with a friend at a booth in the mall. She was already wearing several of her own rings, Perry said.

"She inadvertently walked away with one of the rings from the booth still on her finger," Perry said.

De La Hoya seeks to split from his pair of managers

LOS ANGELES — Oscar De La Hoya, who always seems in command inside the ropes, said Friday he's taking control of his career outside the ring as well.

De La Hoya said that he has terminated his agreement with the two men who signed him after his gold medal performance in the 1992 Olympics.

"I'm making a business decision, for my future," De La Hoya said in a news conference.

He accused Steve Nelson and Bob Mittleman of failing to deliver on their promises in a $1 million, five-year contract. The fighter said he will honor a three-year deal with promoter Bob Arum but also plans to sign a five-fight deal with HBO.

Bruins prevail in defensive battle

By Mike Muller
Times-News sports editor

TWIN FALLS — In a slug-it-out defensive battle, Twin Falls evened its record at 1-1 with a 39-27 win over Jerome Friday night.

"The Bruins broke a 25-all tie with a 7-0 run in the fourth quarter and finished off the Tigers at the free throw line."

"We've played real good defensively, and we've struggled a little bit offensively," said Twin Falls Coach Ben Allen of the Bruins' start.

Twin Falls has given up a total of 64 points in two games and scored 75.

Brad Starley and 6-7 center John Krahn scored 11 points each to lead the Bruins. Krahn tallied seven of his in the fourth quarter.

Jerome, 3-2, lost its leading scoring threat when Chris Williams got in early foul trouble and left the game with his fifth personal with three minutes to play. He was shut out in the second-half, after six first-half points.

"We've had a difficult time scoring the last two ballgames," said Jerome Coach Brent Clark. "Right now, I believe we're lacking a little bit of confidence in our shooting."

Neither team had that Friday. Neither managed to hit 30 percent of its shots.

Much of that was attributable to the other team.

"Twin Falls plays great defense," Clark said. "That's why we only scored 27 points. There wasn't one shot we had that wasn't contested."

Twin Falls faced the same difficulties until the late going.

Jerome fired its only burst of the contest, an 8-2 run led by Kelly Mower's four points, for the 25-25 tie with 5:25 left.

Stanger hit a jumper in the lane 14 seconds later to give Twin Falls the lead for good.

Krahn added three points and Josh Amundson a basket on an assist from Krahn for the 32-25 advantage.

The last minute was a parade to the free throw line.

Indiana suspends Knight

The Associated Press

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. — Coach Bob Knight was suspended for Indiana's game Friday night against Tennessee Tech because of his conduct during the Hoosiers' game against Notre Dame earlier this week.

"It has been determined by Indiana University that coach Bob Knight engaged in unsportsmanlike conduct during the Notre Dame game Tuesday, Dec. 7," the university said in a brief statement.

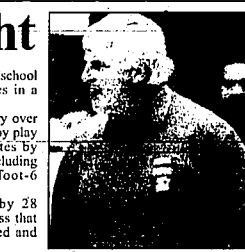

The athletic department cited Big Ten regulations that hold each member of the school responsible for conducting themselves in a "sportslike manner."

Knight's ousting in the 101-82 victory over Notre Dame was triggered by some sloppy play in the closing minutes by Hoosiers reserves, including his son Pat, a 6-foot-6 junior.

Indiana was up by 28 points when Pat Knight made a bad pass that Notre Dame's Ryan Hoover intercepted and took in for a layup.

Alabama's Antonio Langham won the Jim Thorpe Award, presented to the top defensive back.

Texas Tech running back Byron Morris, who won the Doak Walker Award earlier this week, also was honored.

Ward, who travels to New York today for the Heisman Trophy announcement, accumulated a record 83 percent of the Maxwell vote. He received 1,168 first-place votes to finish well ahead of Boston College quarterback Glenn Foley, who got 49 first-place votes.

Tennessee quarterback Heath Shuler was third with 41 first-place votes, followed by San Diego State running back Marshall Faulk, last year's runnerup.

Ward completed 69.5 percent of his passes for 3,092 yards and 27 touchdowns this season.

"I'm just thankful for the opportunity to play and show what I can do," said Ward, who will lead top-ranked Florida State.

Conference teams build new rivalries

HOUSTON (AP) — The retirements of Larry Bird and Magic Johnson not only cost the NBA two superstars, it cost the league its best rivalry: Boston Celtics vs. Los Angeles Lakers.

Now, the best matchups are between conference teams, and one of the best is the brewing battle between the Houston Rockets and Seattle SuperSonics, who meet tonight.

Six weeks into this season, Houston (18-1) and Seattle (16-1) are the best teams in the NBA. Both also are in the Western Conference, meaning they might meet in the postseason if either reaches the NBA final.

"The buildup is good," Houston center Hakeem Olajuwon said. "That's what the NBA is all about, games like this."

The teams met in the conference semifinals last season, playing a seven-game series in which each game was won by the home team. The Sonics capped it with a 103-100 overtime victory at the Seattle Center Coliseum.

But Houston fans still bemoan Seattle's homecourt edge last season and the Rockets are out to bring the playoff advantage to the Summit this season.

"It's going to be a tough game," Houston guard Vernon Maxwell said. "There's going to be a lot of physical play and a lot of fouls and there will be a lot of talking going on."

Last season, Seattle and Houston tied for the second-best conference record at 55-27. Because the Sonics won the head-to-head series 3-1, they got the home court.

Houston fans, however, like to point out the mitigating circumstances that cost them that advantage, such as the first two Sonics victories coming in the first two games of the season in Japan.

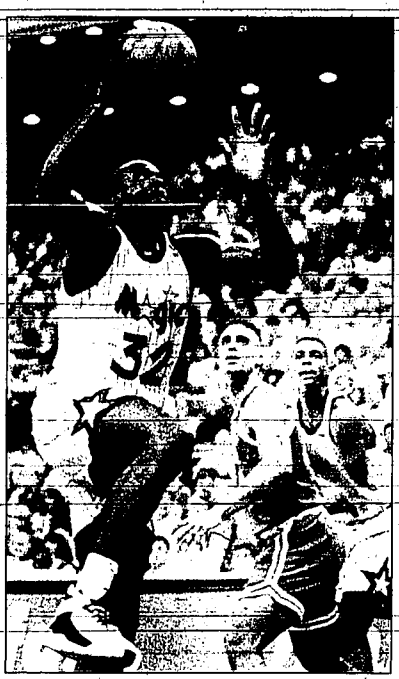

There also were tough losses in the final weeks of the season, including one to San Antonio, which forced over a 20 David Robinson dunk that appeared to be after the buzzer, and one to the lowly Dallas Mavericks.

So, with that in mind, not even the comfort of an NBA recording start can let the Rockets shake the Sonics. Seattle even made the cover of Sports Illustrated while Houston had a better record.

"I wasn't here last year, but the other guys have told me about the great series between these two," said Houston's Mario Elie, who played last season with Portland. "I think that will continue."

Seattle comes into today's game off a 125-93 victory over Dallas Thursday night. The Sonics hit 15 of 20 second-quarter shots and forced nine turnovers in the period to pull away from the Mavericks.

"They blitzed us," Dallas coach Quinn Buckner said. "They're a championship-quality team."

Orlando's Shaquille O'Neal goes up for a dunk Friday night against the Boston Celtics.

O'Neal leads the way for Orlando over Boston

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Shaquille O'Neal, the NBA's leading scorer, had 30 points, 12 rebounds and eight blocks Friday night, leading the Orlando Magic to a 117-102 victory over the Boston Celtics.

Scott Skiles scored 24 points for the Magic, who built a 15-point lead early in the fourth quarter.

The Celtics were led by rookie Dino Radja with 22 points.

Kings 109, 76ers 103

PHILADELPHIA — Sacramento won its first road game of the season and snapped an eight-game losing streak, defeating Philadelphia behind Spud Webb's 10 fourth-quarter points.

Mich Richmond scored 26 points and Lionel Simmons had 23 points and 16 rebounds for the Kings, the last NBA team without a road win.

Bulls 109, Nets 105

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Scottie Pippen scored 28 points, including a key three-point play late in the game, and Chicago held off a late charge by New Jersey.

Kenny Anderson led the Nets with 31 points and 11 assists, while Derrick Coleman scored 26 points. B.J. Armstrong scored 40 points for the Bulls, while Horace Grant had 18 points and 16 rebounds.

Pro Basketball

Bucks 90, Pistons 88

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — Ken Norman hit two 3-pointers in the final 1:46, and Milwaukee overcame a 13-point fourth-quarter deficit to hand Detroit its eighth consecutive loss.

Wolves 109, Clippers 108

MINNEAPOLIS — Rookie Isiah Rider scored nine of his 27 points in the fourth quarter as Minnesota snapped a three-game home losing streak by defeating Los Angeles.

Rider, starting for the second straight game in place of injured guard Doug West, hit a pair of 3-pointers during a 17-7 run in the middle of the fourth quarter, but the game wasn't decided until the final seconds.

Nuggets 107, Jazz 98

DENVER — Mahmoud Abdul-Rauf and LaPhonso Ellis each scored five points during a 15-0 fourth-quarter flurry that carried Denver past Utah.

Abdul-Rauf scored 25 points and Ellis 18 for the Nuggets, while Dikembe Mutombo had 13 points, 10 blocked shots and nine rebounds. It was the fourth time this season that Mutombo blocked nine or more shots.

Purdue dismantles Houston

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Glenn Robinson sparked a 15-0 run late in the first half with eight of his 33 points as 11th-ranked Purdue defeated Houston 114-90 Friday night in a non-conference game.

Cuomo Martin added 21 points, while Justin Jennings and Herb Dove added career highs of 18 and 11 off the bench. Purdue (6-0) had its highest scoring output of the season and set a new school record for tying the school record for second-half points (69).

The 6-foot-8 Robinson contributed two 3-pointers as Purdue ran off 15 straight points to take command 48-28 late in the first half. The Boilermakers held Houston (2-4) to one field goal over the final four minutes of the half.

No. 20 Cincinnati 92 Cleveland State 70

CINCINNATI — Freshmen Dentonio Wingfield and Damon Flint keyed a pair of six-minute bursts as No. 20 Cincinnati won Friday night in the first round of the Bearcat Classic.

Cincinnati will play Rutgers in the tournament championship tonight. The Bearcats have won their own tournament each of the three years it has been played.

Wingfield finished with 18 points for Cincinnati (5-1). Flint and Darnell Burton had 16, John Jacobs 14 and Keith Gerber 10.

College basketball

No. 16 Illinois 110 Morehead State 75

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — Dean Thomas scored 26 points Friday and moved into second place on the school's all-time scoring list as 16th-ranked Illinois beat Morehead State 110-75 in the opening game of the Illini Classic.

Thomas, a senior center, moved past Mark Smith on Illinois' scoring list with 1,670 points, just 21 behind Eddie Johnson. Thomas could take over the top spot during today's tournament championship game.

Illinois (3-1) will play the winner of the American University vs. Tennessee-Marion game. Morehead State (3-2) will play the loser.

No. 12 Indiana 117 Tenn. Tech. 73

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. — Patrick Knight joined his suspended coach-father on the sidelines Friday night when he was ejected for hurling water at Tennessee Tech player in No. 12 Indiana's 117-73 victory in the first round of the Hoosier Classic.

Knight, a key figure in the suspension of his father Bob, showed a bit of the family temper in the second half when he and Greg Bibb dragged each other to the floor before teammates and referees could separate them. Both were ejected.

Rob West led all scorers with 23 points, and Maurice Houston, the Eagles' scoring leader, added 10 — half his 20-point average.

BYU 111, Nicholls St. 96

PROVO, Utah — Russell Larson scored a career-high 36 points as Brigham Young rolled past Nicholls State 111-96 in the nightcap of the Cougar Classic Friday night.

Robbie Reid and Kenneth Roberts came off the bench to score 23 and 14 points, respectively, to help put the Cougars into today's championship game against Oklahoma Baptist, which defeated Oregon State 85-69 in the tourney's opener.

Rutgers 71, Boise St. 50

CINCINNATI — Charles Jones scored 19 points to lead Rutgers to a 71-50 win over Boise State in the first round of the Bearcat Classic on Friday night.

Jones got 13 of his points in the first half as Rutgers (3-2) took a 34-30 lead at intermission. Andrew Kolbasovsky finished with 12 points for Rutgers.

No. 24 G. Washington 76 Long Island U. 60

WASHINGTON — Yinka Dare had 20 points and 12 rebounds as No. 24 George Washington held off a stubborn but outmanned Long Island University 76-60 in the opening round of the Red Auerbach Colonial Classic on Friday night.

George Washington (3-1) will meet Jackson State tonight for the tournament championship. The Tigers defeated Howard 75-69 in Friday's other contest.

South African takes Senior lead

Stockton, 2 others land 2 behind Hobday

DORADO BEACH, Puerto Rico (AP) — South African Simon Hobday shot a bogey-free 8-under-par 64 and took a two-shot lead Friday in the first round of the season-ending Senior Tour Championship.

"I putted the bloody eyes out of it," Hobday said after one-putting nine holes on the Dorado Beach Resort course.

"Now I know what it's like to be Dave Stockton," Hobday said of the leading money winner on the senior circuit, long noted as one of golf's premier putters.

"I made everything I looked at. All were right in the heart of the hole."

Hobday, who played most of his golf on the European and South African tours before joining the U.S. seniors in 1991, scored his first victory in the United States in June.

He pulled away from this elite field of the top 30 money-winners of the year with a card that showed no bogeys and no 5s. He birdied all the long holes and three of the four par-3s.

"Any time you birdie three pars, you're guaranteed a good round," he said.

Stockton, who leads the seniors with five victories and $1,115,944 in earnings, scrambled to a 66 and was tied for second with Larry Gilbert and Bob Murphy. Lee Trevino and Jim Albus were next at 68.

Defending champion Ray Floyd shot a 71 and George Archer, who won two of his last three starts, carded a 72.

Hobday had to struggle to save par on only one hole, the 16th, where he drove into a fairway bunker, couldn't find the green and had to drop a 5-footer.

But that was almost routine for him in this round that was keyed by good putting.

"You can't have a round like this without putting the eyes out," he said.

He made a pair of 30-footers for birdies, dropped two others from 20-foot range and got the ball close a few times.

"It's a good combination," he said.

Stockton, who needs to finish no lower than second in this $1 million tournament to beat Trevino's single-season money winning record, said his round was "the tale of two nines."

He played a flawless, 4-under-par 32 on the front, but struggled on the back side.

As usual, his putter saved him.

On the par-4 12th, he drove into the woods, hit a palm tree with his second and went farther into the forest, found an opening to the green and made a 15-footer for par.

The adventures continued on the par-5 13th, where he was bunkered in two, short in three, then chipped on and holed another long putt for par.

He also made a 35-footer from off the green on the 14th for a birdie, then closed it out with a 20-footer on the final hole.

Simon Hobday took the first-round lead of the Senior Tour Championship on Friday with an 8-under-par 64.

Falcons, 49ers sport hot streaks

ATLANTA (AP) — Jerry Glanville says the San Francisco 49ers have become the best team in the NFC.

George Seifert says the Atlanta Falcons "are a dramatically better club" than they were early in the season, when the 49ers beat them 37-30 at San Francisco.

"It's about as big a transformation as I've ever seen in one season from the way the defense was playing early to the way they're playing now," Seifert said.

Both coaches have a point. San Francisco struggled to a 3-3 record before going on a six-game winning streak that has the 49ers battling for home field advantage in the playoffs as they close in on the NFC West championship.

The Falcons (5-7) lost their first five games, all without two-sport star Deion Sanders in the lineup. Sanders returned from baseball and the Falcons got hot, winning five of their next six games before getting beat at Houston 33-17 last Sunday.

In tabbing the Niners as the NFC's best right now, Glanville said, "Sometimes the best team in December certainly isn't that way in September."

"They struggled a little early, but teams change," Glanville said. "Right now, they, without a doubt, are playing the best football in the NFC. Originally 1 thought Dallas was better than they are, but now that's not true."

The 49ers and Falcons meet for the 54th time Saturday, at the Georgia Dome. San Francisco leads the series 32-20-1, having won the last three meetings and five of the last 19.

Before Atlanta's Bobby Hebert experienced problems at Houston last Sunday — six interceptions and a fumble recovered for an Oilers touchdown — this game appeared to be a matchup between the two highest-rated quarterbacks in the league.

San Francisco's Steve Young has the top rating, 102.4 — the only one above 100 in the NFL. Hebert's was second last week before dropping to fifth with an 89.6 mark.

Young has completed a league-high 69 percent of his passes, throwing for 3,058 yards and a league-best 22 touchdowns. Hebert, who became Atlanta's starter in the third game and has been playing despite a sore right elbow, has passed for 2,180 yards and 19 touchdowns; second best in the league.

The 49ers have a series of injuries, including running back Ricky Walters, wide receiver John Taylor and tackle Steve Wallace.

"I'm not saying that we are decimated, but we have lost some players," Seifert said.

The Redskins' offense hasn't been doing much either recently. Rich Gannon threw for only 63 net yards in last Sunday's 23-17 win over Tampa Bay, ending a three-game losing streak. The winning margin was provided by linebacker Kurt Gouveia's 59-yard touchdown return on an interception.

Mark Rypien, who was benched last month, shared practice time this week in case Gannon doesn't improve at spotting open receivers.

Rockie Reggie Brooks has been the key to Washington's running game with 873 yards. But take away his 78-yard touchdown against the Buccaneers, and the Redskins rushed for only 102 yards against Tampa Bay.

Jets hope back can get them to end zone

WASHINGTON (AP) — While Boomer Esiason and Ronnie Lott have been put on the New York Jets in the direction of an AFC playoff spot, it's going to take a healthy Johnny Johnson for them to have any chance of getting there.

Both their leading runner and receiver, Johnson bruised his ribs three weeks ago and the Jets (7-5) haven't scored a touchdown since.

Without him, the Jets' offense stalled last Sunday in the rain, and Indianapolis ended their five-game winning streak with a 9-6 victory. The previous week, New York also had only two field goals, defeating New England 6-0.

"He's about 25 percent of our offense; we've got about 4,000 yards and about 1,000 of them are his," Jets coach Bruce Coslet said of Johnson, who is questionable for Saturday's game against the Washington Redskins (3-9).

After the loss to the Colts — one of the teams Washington has beaten this year — Esiason sees Johnson and tight end Johnny Mitchell, who has been playing on a sprained knee, as the keys to preventing the injured Redskins from upsetting the Jets.

"Hopefully, we'll get into this game 100 percent healthy, which will make a big difference for us," said Esiason, who is hampered by a stiff neck. "I would hope that I'll be a lot closer to 100 percent than I was last Sunday."

The Redskins' offense hasn't been doing much either recently. Rich Gannon threw for only 63 net yards in last Sunday's 23-17 win over Tampa Bay, ending a three-game losing streak. The winning margin was provided by linebacker Kurt Gouveia's 59-yard touchdown return on an interception.

Mark Rypien, who was benched last month, shared practice time this week in case Gannon doesn't improve at spotting open receivers.

Rockie Reggie Brooks has been the key to Washington's running game with 873 yards. But take away his 78-yard touchdown against the Buccaneers, and the Redskins rushed for only 102 yards against Tampa Bay.

Briefly

LSU coach apologizes for remark

BATON ROUGE, La. — LSU basketball coach Dale Brown apologized Friday for any hurt feelings generated by his statements numbering homosexuals and drunks among the poor role models for today's youth.

"I regret, deeply, that I hurt anyone. That was not my intent," Brown said in a news release. He also said his words were taken out of context.

Brown's remarks came Thursday at his regular weekly news conference after he was asked repeatedly to comment on two LSU football players who were booked on burglary charges. The Associated Press reported his remarks, along with The Times-Picayune and a Baton Rouge television station.

"They get good people to copy from," Brown said.

"The television personalities that are homosexuals and embezzlers, the coaches that are drunks, the ministers that are false evangelists. So, you know, they're looking at society in general. And it's kind of a sickness in society."

Players union voices disappointment

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. — Baseball players remain disenchanted with the lack of progress on negotiations regarding a proposed extra round of playoffs next season, union head Don Fehr said Friday.

After the final session of four days of meetings this week of the union's executive board, Fehr painted a noncommittal view of the clubs' representatives on a Basic Agreement and other unresolved issues.

"The overall sense of the board is really pretty clear. I think it is one of disappointment," Fehr said.

"Players hoped that the clubs would be forthcoming enough to bargain on this additional round of playoffs in the manner they had publicly been saying."

But Fehr said teams negotiator Richard Ravitch hasn't followed through with his pledge to work out a deal with the players.

Fehr reiterated previous arguments that the extra round of league playoffs, which would include the three divisional champions and a wild-card team, produce new revenue which the players want to share.

FIFA may restructure Cup draw

ZURICH, Switzerland — Hinting that it may change the rules for the World Cup draw, FIFA said Friday that only the positions of the six seeded teams had been decided.

Under rules currently in place, which take into account finishes in the 1982, 1986 and 1990 World Cups, it already can be determined which bowl each team will be placed in for the Dec. 19 draw. However, FIFA said in a statement that it will discuss "various formations and the method of allocation of the remaining 18 teams among the different bowls" when the organizing committee meets next Thursday at Las Vegas.

Nations and drawn from four bowls into six first-round groups. The seeded teams are the United States (host), Germany (defending champion), Argentina, Italy, Brazil and Belgium.

Supporters want more quest for Stagg

PHILADELPHIA — The quest for gridiron victories for Amos Alonzo Stagg Sr. has been rekindled by Susquehanna University, 28 years after the football pioneer's death.

Stagg Sr. recently was dropped to fourth place on the all-time win list after the NCAA credited Glenn "Pop" Warner with six more victories.

But the way some see it, the NCAA has shorted Stagg Sr. for 21 victories at the central Pennsylvania school where he shared coaching duties with his son from 1947-52.

If the wins were counted, Stagg would move to second on the all-time win list ahead of Warner and Alabama's Bear Bryant. He would still trail Grambling State University's Eddie Robinson.

The NCAA has credited Stagg Sr. with 314 wins from a 57-year head coaching career with stints at Springfield College, the University of Chicago and the College of the Pacific.

But the victory tally stops when Stagg, then 84, joined his son Amos Alonzo Stagg Jr. at Susquehanna in 1947. The younger Stagg was listed as the head coach on all school records submitted to the NCAA during the six years his father was there.

Apple - the industrial version of 'Murphy Brown'

By B.J. Phillips Knight-Ridder News Service

According to legend, when Texans are unhappy with their employer, they hang around bars sipping Lone Star beer out of long-necked bottles and playing "Take This Job and Shove It" on the jukebox.

Unless they're Texas politicians. Then they go into the courthouse, bang a gavel and tell a company to take 700 jobs and shove them.

That's what the Williamson County commissioners did earlier last week when they refused to grant Apple Computer a long-promised tax abatement for its new facility on the outskirts of Austin. The reason: Apple's benefits programs cover all employees' domestic partners — of the same and the opposite sex.

"It came down to the issue of homosexuality or economic growth," intoned Commissioner Greg Boatright. "The constituency I represent feels we need to preserve traditional family values."

With that, Boatright and two of his colleagues on the five-member board set Apple's $80 million Computer Support Center, first in Apple's personnel policies in the fall. After all, local governments don't often take it upon themselves to assume the responsibility for establishing litmus tests on social issues for private corporations. Even in those areas where government involvement has long been acknowledged — pollution control, worker safety, antitrust issues and the like — regulation is the province of federal and state governments, not a handful of yachts-down-the-beachy-southtowns.

Commentary

But it appears that Apple has unwittingly become the industrial version of "Murphy Brown." The computer company started out to build a few offices and ended up in the center of the family-values debate.

Apple's benefits policy became common political currency when it, among other companies, was held up as an example by proponents of a plan to extend same-sex benefits to City of Austin employees. (The plan passed this fall.)

Two commissioners, both of whom are up for re-election next year, immediately voiced their opposition to any company that "encouraged" homosexuality. But a third, David Hayes, backed the company, even writing a local newspaper on the eve of the vote to argue that how Apple administered its medical benefits was nobody's business but its own.

The only problem is that 150,000 other people live in Williamson County, and they're the ones who will suffer most from the move to out Apple. Most of them, Heiligenstein notes, "are traditional folks with traditional families with traditional values."

Commissioner Heiligenstein had a different explanation: "The fundamentalists regard the phone company as all right, and he folded like a cheap deck of cards."

"I couldn't go to church and have people point at me and say, 'That's the man who led homosexuals into Williamson County,'" he told the local paper.

Commissioner Heiligenstein had a different explanation: "The fundamentalists regard the phone company as all right, and he folded like a cheap deck of cards."

The measure was defeated, and Apple announced it was pulling out.

Ironically, both sides are now hailed as heroes — albeit among very different constituencies. Gay-rights groups are lining up to praise Apple, while Hayes and Boatright cast stars on Christian radio stations.

The only problem is that 150,000 other people live in Williamson County, and they're the ones who will suffer most from the move to out Apple. Most of them, Heiligenstein notes, "are traditional folks with traditional families with traditional values."

Now, if they can just find traditional jobs

Commissioner David Hayes listens to arguments in Georgetown, Texas.

Poet urges more courage for survival; flu strikes Jackson tour

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Humans are "wondrously different and marvelously alike," Maya Angelou said.

"Human beings are more alike than unalike," the writer said Thursday at Ohio Dominican College.

"Whether in Paris, Texas, or Paris, France, we all want to have good jobs where we are needed and respected and paid just a little more than we deserve. We want healthy children, safe streets, to be loved and have the unmitigated call to accept love."

"If we are religious, we want a place to perpetuate God. If not, we want a good lecture every once in a while. And everyone wants some place to party on Saturday nights."

People must become more courageous to ensure the survival of humanity, Angelou told students and faculty. "We are acting too cowardly to survive. No one guarantees that our species will survive unless we begin to develop courage," she said.

Author of Chinese life finally visits subject

BEIJING (AP) — Novelist Maxine Hong Kingston didn't visit her ancestral homeland until she finished several books about China and the Chinese-American experience.

"I believe there is a mythic China that exists in the imagination of all people," she told a group of Chinese writers on Friday.

"A strong imagination imagines the truth. When I arrived in China, sure enough, it was the same as my imagination."

The writer of "Tripmaster

Monkey," "Woman Warrior" and "China Men" is on her third visit to China. She asked one of China's most prolific writers, former culture minister Wang Meng, how he managed to produce so much.

His advice: Stay happy, stay out of government and drink Chinese tea.

Jackon cancels Buffalo concert due to sickness

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Janet Jackson canceled a concert because of a flu-bug that spread among her dancers and musicians, the promoter said.

The concert at Memorial Auditorium in Buffalo was called off three hours before she was to appear Thursday night.

The show will be rescheduled for later this month or early January, said promoter Pate, a spokeswoman for

Mr. T promotes strength of mind to Ohio students

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Mental strength is more important than physical prowess. That's the word from Mr. T.

"If I couldn't read, if I couldn't comprehend, then I wouldn't be where I'm at," he told a middle school crowd Thursday. "A lot of people don't get jobs because they can't read."

The star of "The A-Team" television series was in Columbus to speak at two schools and give out awards to winners of an anti-drug poster contest.

Friends save house for retarded family

SPOKANE (AP) — Teresa Juneau is an unlikely construction foreman.

But when she learned her three mildly retarded neighbors were living in squalor, Juneau took charge.

"I had neighbors who were freezing to death in the winter," Juneau recalled. "What else could I do?"

Four months ago, Eugene Hunt, 34, his brother, Gilbert, 36, and their 62-year-old mother, Doreen, were living in a filthy, ramshackle house in the city's east-central neighborhood.

A local newspaper columnist, Doug Clark, calls the Hunts "sweet, gentle" people who are mildly retarded and can't work.

When Juneau, who runs a small beauty salon, learned of their plight, she orchestrated a rescue effort for the family and their home.

"We like these people," Juneau said in a recent interview. "We don't want anybody else for neighbors, but they are in desperate need."

Since late summer, some $40,000 to $50,000 in improvements have transformed the Hunt house.

"It's like a dream," Eugene Hunt said. "It's like I woke up and found I was living in a mansion."

Juneau said it's difficult to determine exactly how much was donated because only $3,500 was in cash.

The rest of the contributions were labor and materials from more than

Three-hundred volunteers did everything from haul trash to hang drywall.

The house was in danger of caving in, but a new support beam is now in place. A high-efficiency gas furnace was installed. There's a hot water tank, insulation, new windows, a new kitchen, a new bathroom, smoke detectors. The list goes on and on.

The Hunts have lived in the house since 1969 when a friend abandoned the home and gave it to them.

During a neighborhood cleanup last summer, Juneau was appalled by the dangerous, repulsive conditions in which the Hunts lived.

"Nobody should live like this," she said. "Nobody."

But the family was caught in a bureaucratic Catch-22. They received $22 too much a month in welfare to qualify for housing assistance. They didn't use enough electricity — because an old wood stove was their only source of heat — to qualify for energy assistance.

On Dec. 18, an open house and potluck is scheduled to let neighbors meet the Hunts and see the house that Clark says "love built."

"Our community decided it wasn't acceptable to leave some of our very special citizens in the home they were in," Juneau said. "For the first time, it's winter and the Hunts are warm."

Judge rules against money-drawing artist

WASHINGTON (AP) — A judge gave federal prosecutors permission Thursday to bring counterfeiting charges against a Pittsburgh artist who produces hand-drawn likenesses of paper money.

U.S. District Judge Royce C. Lamberth ruled that the Secret Service and prosecutors in Pittsburgh could press charges against J.S.G. Boggs without violating the artist's constitutional rights.

Lamberth rejected Boggs' argument that federal counterfeiting statutes, which ban the production of bills that are the same color and size of actual money, violated the artist's constitutional right to freedom of expression.

The Constitution gives the government specific authority to protect the value of coin and currency, Lamberth noted, and the counterfeiting laws "give the Treasury this power without impinging upon Mr. Boggs' constitutional rights."

Boggs, who draws the bills and barbers them for services such as meals in restaurants or hotel rooms, denies that his drawings are an exact copy of pieces of real money.

He said he doesn't make exact copies — "I do a drawing or an interpretation, which is substantially different." "Instead of Washington, D.C., it says Pittsburgh, Pa. I sign my own name to it. I put my own thumb print on it."

The bills are printed on thick paper. "I know for a fact that a blind person can tell the difference between a Boggs Bill and a real piece of money," he said.

But after examining a portfolio of the artist's "handwork," Lamberth said "many of the Boggs Bills could be passed as genuine."

"Although Boggs prides himself on those characteristics of his bills that distinguish them from real currency, some of the works in question are far too similar to authentic currency," the judge said.

A jury could reasonably conclude that "a person of average intelligence and ordinary observation could not readily and immediately distinguish them from genuine currency," Lamberth said.

Federal counterfeit laws prohibit likenesses of currency, except those that are printed in black and white and are slightly smaller or slightly larger than a regular-sized bill.

Lamberth accepted Boggs' claim that he never used the bills to defraud people who accepted them as payment for services. But the judge said prosecutors need not prove intent to commit a fraud.

Colognes let you smell like a college team

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — Aahh, that hint of pine — is it Wolverine or a Spartan?

A new line of men's colognes is aimed at fans of some of the nation's powerhouse college teams.

For University of Michigan fans, there is the piney-scented Victors, named for the Wolverines' fight song. For fans of intrastate rival Michigan State, there is the winter-green-scented Spartan.

Philadelphia businessman Peter Klamka, 24, said Victors "smells like 175 years of academic and athletic excellence." But then, he's a Michigan alumnus.

Other school scents he is marketing include Florida-State, Miami, Penn State, Grambling, Kentucky, North Carolina, Duke and Harvard.

Klamka said the collegiate colognes are selling in about 200 stores. A 3.3-ounce bottle typically goes for $28.

Overweight and smoker, but jolly old elf nonetheless

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — He may smoke and drink like a bit out of hell and possibly even imbibe now and then.

And he wears fur! Politically incorrect maybe, but forgivable flaws in a right jolly old elf, Case closed.

The Court of Historical Review & Appeals ruled against city Supervisor Angelo Alioto, who wanted Santa to present children with a slimmer, healthier image.

"I'm not here to attack Santa," Alioto said. "He's my friend."

The mock court met Thursday for its 74th session, ruling that Santa is in fact politically correct.

Past rulings have involved such weighty questions as "Did the Chinese or Italians invent Spaghetti?" and "Does Chicken Soup Deserve Its Reputation as Jewish Penicillin?" (The Italians and Yes).

Dr. Boyd Stephens, the San Francisco coroner, testified that Santa's "speeding and erratic" driving could be alcohol-related.

And how about those rosy cheeks? The Grinch also testified, insisting that he and not Santa had the right image for these days: slim, albeit green.

Santa himself denied all charges when he took the stand.

"I haven't smoked in years," he said. "I use the pipe as a prop."

His weight has held steady all these years, Santa said. As for the furs, they were all bequeathed to him by animals he loved.

"I thought I was pleasing everyone," Santa said.

Mrs. Claus — not Mrs. — said she'd never seen her husband smoking.

And he only looks fat because of all the clothing he wears to ward off the winter cold," she said.

Her testimony was key, Judge George Chappelas said in his ruling.

After all, the wife said she was the only one to see Santa "everyday, and natural."

Sydney Omarr Horoscope

IF DECEMBER 11 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: You are intuitive, unorthodox, fascinated by the occult, arts, sciences. During early years, questions, controversies existed relating to your "name at birth." During 1994, you'll be more independent, "constructive outlets" will exist for creative talents. Focus will be on style, love, fresh state courage of convictions. Marital status figures prominently in January. July will be your "money month."

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Darker corners of your life receive benefits of "greater light." Accent on financial status of mate, partner, legal adviser. Controversy could swirl around romance.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Spotlight on direction, motivation, parents, colleagues, appraisal of property. Credit restored, views vindicated. Gourmet dining on tap tonight.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Accent humor, diversity, willingness to ask "dumb questions." Laugh at your own foibles, investigate, advertise and publish. New apparel improves "body image." Sagittarian figures prominently in your life. "Name at birth" could lead to familiar ground - someone wants something for nothing, you could be prime target. Scrutinize agreements, prospectus. Member of opposite sex is not being entirely straightforward.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Finish what you start, don't be cajoled into being careless. Gain indicated via words, verbal, written. Properly value figures in scenario.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Accent humor, decoration, remodeling; music study. Family member says, "You're worth all the gold in the world!" Major domestic adjustment involves lifestyle, finances, marital status. Results!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Psychic faculties surge forward. Hunch pays off, financial windfall could be part of scenario. Clear definition of terms necessary.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Focus on deadline, organization, responsibility, intense relationship. "You'll want to be where you are - don't fear competition."

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Longstanding negotiations finished - don't stay too long at the fair. Broaden focus of interest. Spotlight possibility of overseas journey. "Name at birth" has these letters, initials in name: I and R.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Make fresh start, emphasize independence of thought, action. Wish comes true in "amazing" manner. You'll win friends, influence people. Sales ability heightened.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Family-differences settled - full division of property, money featured. Decide on direction, motivation. Benefits indicated by being near water.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Individually win "far away" match - election of member. "Name at birth" features idealism, possible journey, publishing project. Umrhrood procedure brings desired results. Sagittarian represented.

Alaskans define snow job

Q. Where'd we get the expression "snow job"?

A. Word tracors debate this one. But some say it originated when Alaskan land speculators sold snow-covered acreage that looked valuable in the winter but worthless in the spring.

Q. Two things promoted Atlantic City into fame. Name them.

A. The Miss America contest of 1921 and the game of Monopoly.

Psychologists say, "Women are more likely to become depressed." More women live with men, some point out.

Q. Does China still ban beauty pageants?

A. Not altogether. But the revived contests have new nomenclature—"Elite" since Competition." "Miss Protocol." Such names.

Q. How much of the nation's water drains into the Mississippi?

A. Better than 40 percent! Drains in- flow out, not always where you'd figure.

Playboy Magazine turns 40

Revolutionary publication still turns a profit, no longer breaking ground

CHICAGO (AP) — It started with a restless young man plotting an empire from his kitchen table.

He had little money and a big plan: to remove the plain brown wrapper from America's most taboo topic — sex.

Soon he had the recipe: The bunny. The photo of Marilyn Monroe. And, of course, THE name, Playboy.

Playboy celebrates its 40th anniversary this month and both the magazine and man have changed. Hugh Hefner, once the guru of hedonism, is a cooing senior citizen and family man, his empire is run by a feminist — his daughter, Christie — and his middle-age creation has gone from scandalous to just naughty. Yet it remains a success.

"Playboy is no longer at the leading edge of sexual shock," said Bernard Beck, an associate sociology professor at Northwestern University. "It's conventional."

"It's no longer cutting edge ... but it's still the biggest men's magazine and probably the best in the culture," declares James Kobak, a New York magazine consultant who has worked with Playboy. "They really changed with the culture. Or maybe the culture changed with them."

One change is that this James

— Christie Hefner

Bond-like-fantasy empire, long accused by feminists regarding women as sex kittens, is run by a no-nonsense woman who has lectured at Harvard Business School.

Christie Hefner, chairman and chief executive officer of Playboy Enterprises Inc., who was 1 year old when the magazine was born, rejects the criticisms. "I'm very secure in what the values of Playboy are ... and an proud of its humanism and political values," she says. "I don't think you have to trade feminism for being a feminist."

Ms. Hefner also agrees Playboy's niche has changed.

"Playboy is now in the mainstream because of the changes in the culture and in attitudes about nudity," she said.

In an era when Dr. Ruth blithely chats about orgasms on TV and Madonna's private parts are in public view, nudity is everywhere: movies, prime-time TV, cable, videos.

But when Playboy debuted in the butted-down '50s — a nude Monroe picture Hefner bought for $500 appeared in the first issue — bare bosoms and bottoms were relegated to gas station calendars.

Hefner, then working for a kiddie's magazine, started Playboy from his apartment; a graphic designer, Art Paul, created the rabbit head logo.

Hefner brought nudity into the homes of American males, or at least into their dresser drawers, where young boys could sneak a peek at women named Anna-Marie and Fawn.

In breathless prose, these pinups would reveal lofty ambitions — to become "an ambassador of goodwill" or gush about being a Playmate: "It's like you're part of American history."

Today, Playboy's U.S. circulation is 3.4 million, half its peak in the 1970s; about 80 percent are subscriptions. It has 1.6 million readers of 17 foreign editions.

The $215 million empire, which in the '80s closed its U.S. Playboy clubs featuring cotton-tailed waitresses, has expanded into videos, cable and other electronic media.

While Playboy's content has changed from the Atomic Age to the AIDS age, "the magazine has very much remained entertainment for men and it always will be," Ms. Hefner said. "The women who read it are over-the-shoulder readers."

Hefner, 67, who suffered a minor stroke in 1985, remains active in shaping Playboy. "He's the universal conscience," beams publisher Michael Ferlis.

Hefner still approves the Playmates. He married one in 1989. They have two sons.

Though the Playmates get the most attention, some media experts say Playboy often is overlooked for providing a forum for great American fiction. Among writers it has featured: Joyce Carol Oates, John Cheever, Philip Roth, John Updike and Joseph Heller.

Its interview subjects have ranged from Jimmy "I'm not a saint" Carter and Fidel Castro to David Bowie and Bob Hope.

For the most part, Hefner, who is as old as Playboy, doesn't worry it will become passé. "Being 40 isn't what it used to be, he-boasts. "We're just in the middle of our best years."

President's mom battles cancer, keeps busy

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's First Mom, Virginia Kelley, is making time between poker and the ponies to write about her sons, her husbands and her uphill battle with cancer.

The book, the poker, the horse racing — not to mention the fishing, shopping, speeches and lunch on Fridays with the ladies — are in keeping with her own advice. Stay on the go, she told a women's group in a speech about cancer, "to get your mind off your problems."

One of her closest friends, Estelle T. Blair of Hot Springs, Ark., marvels at her ever-optimist pal. "She's always a-runnin' and gettin' and goin'."

Much of Mrs. Kelley's time is spent on an as yet untitled book that will be published next year by Simon and Schuster, documenting "a very personal story of her journey," said her Washington attorney, Robert Barnett.

The 70-year-old retired nurse is working with an author to produce an autobiography that will address "the problems with her husband, her battle against breast cancer, the joys of the campaign and the convention, her love of horse racing and her affection for Elvis Presley," he said.

Mrs. Kelley buried three husbands, one an abusive alcoholic. She moved away from her older child for two years to further her education, helped her other child through a drug addiction and late in life fought breast cancer with a radical mastectomy.

'She's always a-runnin' and gettin' and goin'. She never stops.'

— Estelle T. Blair, Virginia Kelley's friend

Friends say her cancer has resurfaced, and she is undergoing chemotherapy. The White House will not comment about her health, and Mrs. Kelley — a chatty, colorful character in scores of interviews during her son's campaign — is politely declining requests from journalists now.

There have been hints of her private struggle. Speaking to a group fighting breast cancer in October, Clinton referred to his "brave mother who struggles on with her breast cancer condition and who has resumed her remarkable life."

In one of a series of speeches on breast cancer, Mrs. Kelley told a group of Louisiana bankers' wives last month, "I don't know how much time I have. But I told my doctor I refused to go until they find a cure for this thing."

Meanwhile, she's keeping busy. Mrs. Kelley has been to Washington only a handful of times, most recently to go Camp David for Thanksgiving.

One day, it poured outside while the family stayed in an idyllic puzzle and talked. "That was — by far — her favorite day," said another friend, Johnette Taylor.

After returning to Arkansas, she caught up with the mound of mail from admirers and had lunch nearly every day with a friend or two.

On Sunday, she and a few pals played poker. Mrs. Kelley is a $2 bettor on weekends at her hometown horse track, which opens for the season early next year.

Fridays are special. That's when Mrs. Kelley and 11 friends get together for their "Birthday Club." They meet to chat, gossip, celebrate their birthdays and brag about their kids.

"These are 12 mamas. By the time each of us get to testify it's time to go home," said Edgett Irons, a longtime friend of Mrs. Kelley who was the president's high school counselor.

Mrs. Kelley has given speeches about cancer in Washington, Louisiana, Ohio and Canada. And she recently dedicated William Jefferson Clinton Interdisciplinary Elementary School in Sherwood, Ark.

She enjoys fishing, visiting with ailing friends and shopping in her home town, where she is a celebrity. "Everybody knows Virginia," Taylor says.

In short, she does not act like a woman tested — once again — by adversity.

"To hear her tell it, she's never going and she's always fine and always a-goin' and always pushing," says Blair, 85, stopping between words for emphasis. "She ... just ... won't ... stop."

Anthony buck stops here, says Thomas B. Shick

WASHINGTON (AP) — He jingles when he walks and gets dirty looks at the cash register, but Thomas B. Shick is a man of principle.

What he believes is the Susan B. Anthony dollar, mad of metal.

Shick spends the coin dollar wherever his fellow countrymen spend a paper buck. It's one man's campaign to gain respect for a piece of legal tender that laid an egg.

Introduced with much fanfare in 1979, the Susan B. Anthony dollar honored the 19th-century crusader for giving women the vote.

The coin was supposed to replace the dollar bill one day. But it never won acceptance as a coin of the realm.

The realm would not have it. "The government wound up with $300 million of them in warehouses. The problem was that the Susan B. Anthony (the government tried to get people to call them "Susies," but that didn't work either) looked too much like a quarter. People who mistakenly spent a dollar on something that cost 25 cents would swear off the Susan B. Anthony.

That's when Shick, 58, a mechanic who lives in nearby Woodbridge, Va., swore on it. He found one branch bank — and only one, he said — that would sell him Susan B. Anthony coins.

"Ninety percent of my cash transactions are done with Susan B. Anthony coins," Shick reported in a letter to the editor in The Washington Post this week.

He's not out to prove anything, he elaborated in a subsequent interview.

"I do it just to get attention, I guess," he said. "Just to do something different. I do it mainly to watch the reaction of people when I pay with them. I've had a couple refusals. Some people think they're Canadian money."

Sometimes, he said, he's had to persuade a clerk to summon the manager before his payment is accepted.

And what does his wife think of this?

"She thinks I'm nuts," Shick said. "She's always so much like a quarter, that's valid," Shick said. "But it's like anything else, if you spend one like a quarter once, you don't do it again."

From time to time, members of Congress, spurred by the vending machine industry, propose reinstating a dollar coin. In 1987, they offered legislation on grounds it would save $500 million a year since paper money wears out faster than coins.

But the U.S. Mint said the savings would only be achieved if the dollar bill were eliminated and people had no choice but to use the coin. Only 15 percent of those asked in a poll favored that.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE BOBBY WOLFF

"A clean glove often hides a dirty hand."
 — English proverb.

"Did you manage an endplay to make four spades on board 15?" a competitor asked one of his fellow declarers.
 "Nothing as complicated as that," was the reply. "I cinched the game at trick one instead of waiting until the end game.
 The heart king was led, and after East had followed with the heart five and South with the trey, West switched to clubs. Dummy's club ace won, the ace and king of trumps were cashed, and declarer led dummy's diamond queen after cashing the club king. East covered, as did South, and another diamond was led to dummy's jack, dropping West's 10. Reading the distribution correctly, South led a heart from dummy, planning to cover whichever card East played. West was forced to win, but after he cashed another heart, he had to surrender a ruff and discard to give South his game.
 The South played the hand well but he did not find the right distribution. The other fellow resorted to a bit of legitimate skulduggery. At trick one, when East played the heart five, South followed with his nine instead of his trey. This deceived West into reading East's five as a come-on, and when West continued with hearts, South had his 10th winner without a tricky endplay.
 Why depend on good luck and good play when a bit of honest deceit will get the job done?"
