Court ruling aids property owners

Chicago Tribune

WASHINGTON — Property owners won a legal victory Friday as the Supreme Court made it harder for governments to require them to set aside private land for public purposes.

Setting a new standard for land-use regulation, the court ruled that a local government must prove that the conditions it imposes on building permits closely match any potential adverse impact of the proposed development.

By failing to meet this test, Chief Justice William Rehnquist said, the city of Tigard, Ore., had violated the 5th Amendment when it required store owner Florence Dolan to deed a portion of her property for both flood control and a pedestrian/bicycle path in order to obtain a permit for a new building and paved parking lot.

The amendment prohibits government from taking private property for public use "without just compensation."

Announcing the new standard in a 5-

4 opinion, the court said that governments must demonstrate a fairly close fit — or "rough proportionality" — between the harm caused by a proposed new land use and the benefit it hopes to obtain from the conditions placed on a developer. Rehnquist emphasized, however, that "no precise mathematical calculation" is required.

In 1961 the Illinois Supreme Court adopted a tougher standard than what's in Friday's decision, requiring local governments to show that the conditions it imposed for permits be directly proportional to the impact of the development. "We do not think the federal Constitution requires such exacting scrutiny," the high court noted Friday, alluding to the type of state standard found in Illinois.

"Cities have long engaged in the commendable task of land use planning, made necessary by increasing urbanization, particularly in urban areas such as Portland," Rehnquist wrote. "The city's goals of reducing flooding hazards and traffic congestion, and providing for public greenways, are laudable but there are outer limits to how this may be done."

The court for the first time said that a city or governmental unit has the burden of demonstrating the constitutionality of its permit requirements. Specifically, the court held that there must be an "individualized determination" that any disputed condition satisfies the new proportionality requirement.

"Whoever has the burden has the more difficult time," explained Richard J. Lazarus, a law professor at Washington University in St. Louis. "What makes the ruling problematical is that it is very hard to quantify the risks of floods and traffic congestion."

Lazarus, who was co-counsel for the city of Tigard in the case, pointed out that the court was unclear on precisely what kind of showing the government has to make in order to prevail in similar land-use disputes.

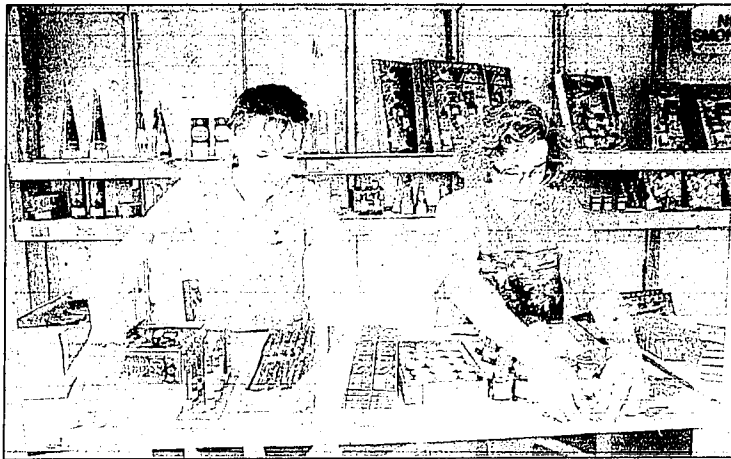

He predicted that cities would increasingly rely on impact fees for new

Setting up shop

Shawn Arrington and her daughter Jenny prepare their fireworks stand for the rush of customers that will increase as the Fourth of July approaches.

Idaho laws limit your fireworks

By Virginia Garber
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Fireworks merchants are setting up shop all over town, and the kids down the street are keeping you awake with their seemingly endless strings of firecrackers.

So what's legal and what's not? Idaho code forbids possessing or using cherry bombs, crazy jacks or jump ing jacks, skyrocket, bottle rockets, all sizes of firecrackers including M-80s and silver salutes, Roman candles and sparklers over 10 inches long or one-quarter inch in diameter.

Illegal fireworks pose significant dangers to both life and property, says Gary Cravens, Twin Falls fire battalion chief.

One Fourth of July in Twin Falls, an illegal bottle rocket shot into a dry evergreen bush in front of a house and started a fire that quickly spread, causing extensive damage to the home, Cravens said.

Another holiday night, adults trying to send bottle rockets over the Snake River Canyon shot one into the canyon. Firefighters battled the flames for two hours, Cravens said.

All illegal fireworks can be confiscated, and the maximum penalty for possessing, selling, giving, discharging or importing illegals into Idaho is a $250 fine and 30 days in the county jail, Cravens said.

The fire department inspects fireworks booths in Twin Falls throughout the selling season, he said. If booth operators are caught with illegal wares, their licenses are revoked, the booths are shut down, and all illegal product is confiscated.

Firecrackers, sparklers, roman candles and bottle rockets bring joy to millions each summer.

But each year, this pleasure turns to pain and sorrow for many unfortunate families.

In 1993, about 12,600 people were treated in emergency rooms as a result of firework-related injuries, the Consumer Product Safety Commission estimates.

Children under the age of 15 sustained about half the injuries, which ranged from minor burns and cuts to blindness and even death.

Judge cites publicity, halts Simpson grand jury

The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — The O.J. Simpson double-murder case took another astonishing twist Friday when a judge aborted a grand jury probe after complaints that unrelenting news coverage may have influenced the panel.

The decision means the case will advance to a preliminary hearing Thursday, during which prosecutors will have to lay out their evidence in open court, as Simpson's lawyer had wanted.

If the grand jury had indicted Simpson first, no hearing would have been held.

The 46-year-old former football star remains in jail on charges of murdering his ex-wife and a friend of hers.

Prominent defense lawyers Alan Deroshowitz and F. Lee Bailey have joined Simpson's defense team, and Bailey told CNN's "Larry King Live" they have been working on the case since earlier this week.

A source told The Associated Press that Deroshowitz helped on the action that led to Friday's move by Superior Court Judge Cecil J. Mills taking the grand jury off the case.

"As an unanticipated result of the unique circumstances of this matter pending before the 1993-94 grand jury, some jurors have become aware of potentially prejudicial matters not officially presented to them by the district attorney," said Mills, the court's supervising judge.

He told the 23-member grand jury to close its books on the Simpson case. The grand jury had secretly been hearing testimony all week.

Simpson, wearing a dark coat and white, open-collared shirt, sat attentively during the hearing and appeared to smile slightly after the decision.

"I don't think I've ever heard of it happening before, but then the publicity concerning O.J. Simpson has been literally unprecedented in magnitude," said John F. Banzhaf III, a law professor at George Washington University who is not connected to the case.

Defense attorney Robert Shapiro and prosecutors had both raised concerns that grand jurors may have been influenced by the publicity.

Domestic homicides decline across U.S.

The Associated Press

BOSTON — While the O.J. Simpson case has focused attention on what advocates say is escalating domestic violence, federal crime figures show the rate of domestic homicide is actually in decline.

The overall rate of women killed by husbands or boyfriends has dropped 18 percent since the late 1970s. More dramatic is the decline in such murders of black women; they are down 41 percent since 1976.

"These declines are substantial, particularly when compared to peoples' perceptions," said James Alan Fox, the dean of Northeastern University's College of Criminal Justice who analyzed FBI crime statistics and census data for the study.

"It's a tragedy when it happens, but it's not happening any more now."

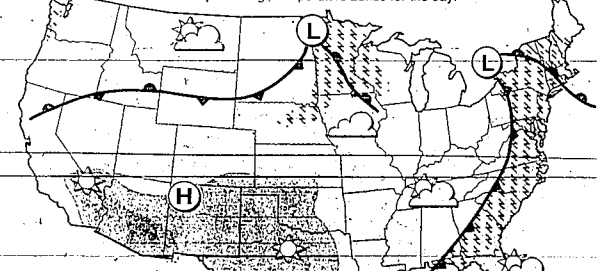

Fox and others believe the decline in murders reflects

Extended forecast: Southern Idaho - Monday through Wednesday dry and warm. Lows in the 40s and the lower 50s. Highs 75 to 85 Monday and the 80s to lower 90s Tuesday and Wednesday.

Northern Utah and Nevada: Utah - Partly cloudy and hot today. Local south winds 10-20 mph. Highs 95-100. Saturday night partly cloudy. Lows in the 60s. Sunday partly cloudy. Highs 95-100.

Elko County - Mostly sunny today. Highs in the mid-80s to mid-90s. Fair tonight. Lows in the mid-40s to mid-50s. Sunday partly cloudy. Highs in the lower 80s to lower 90s.

Weather summary
A weak cold front over southeastern Idaho brought scattered high clouds and cooler temperatures to the state Friday.

However, skies were mostly sunny most of the day and in most areas.

Temperatures varied from the middle 60s in the north to the lower 90s along the Utah border. Most readings in the south were in the middle 80s and 70s from the central mountains to the Canadian border.

Winds were light to moderate and variable in direction statewide.

The highest temperature in the state Friday was 95 degrees at Malad. Stanley reported the lowest at 31 degrees.

Elsewhere in the nation Friday, the highest temperature was 122 degrees at Lake Havasu City, Ariz. Truckee, Calif., reported the lowest temperature at 30 degrees.

Since the June 12 slayings, police have released sensational 911 audio tapes, and prosecutors have made several statements about the slayings of ex-wife Nicole Brown Simpson, 35, and her friend Ronald Lyle Goldman, 25.

There was yet another twist in the case Friday: Deputy District Attorney Marcia Clark disclosed that a blue knit cap was found at the feet of one of the victims. She did not elaborate.

Two days earlier, Clark disputed news reports that a bloody ski mask had been seized from Simpson's home after the slayings. She said no such ski mask existed.

Earlier Friday, Shapiro filed an extraordinary motion in which he asked that the grand jurors be questioned and that the investigation be aborted if any of them had been influenced by news coverage or investigators' statements.

"We feel that the grand jury has been contaminated," Shapiro told Superior Court Judge Lance A. Ito. "It is ... impossible for Mr. O.J. Simpson to receive a fair trial or a fair review before the grand jury."

In his motion, Shapiro said prosecutors tainted the case when they identified Simpson as the "sole murderer," speculated Simpson might eventually confess, characterized the murders as "a classic domestic violence killing" and authorized the release of the 911 audiotapes.

There were testy exchanges between Shapiro and Clark over use of the media in the case. At one point, Ito asked them to stop.

District Attorney Gil Garcetti said he didn't consider the decision a setback.

safe if used properly. Here are some tips:

- Prevent young children from playing with any fireworks. Sparklers, the "safest" fireworks, are responsible for most injuries of children under 5.
- Always supervise older children who use fireworks.
- Read the directions and warnings.
- Never place your face or any other body part over a fireworks device. Do not take chances.
- Never try to relight a firework that has not fully functioned - burning fuses are not easily detected.
- Keep a bucket of water nearby in case of malfunction or fire.

developments, which would enable them to bypass the court's new requirements.

While acknowledging the city's legitimate need to control flood hazards, the court concluded, however, that it had failed to justify its demand that Dolan cede a portion of her property for improvement of a storm damage system.

"The city has never said why a public greenway, as opposed to a private one, was required in the interest of flood control," Rehnquist said.

Furthermore, the chief justice said, the city had made no effort to quantify its findings "in support of its argument that using Dolan's property for a pedestrian/bicycle pathway would actually curb the increased traffic generated by her new plumbing and electrical supply store."

Although 4 million domestic assaults are reported annually, tougher laws, batter enforcement and more shelters have helped reduce the number of cases that end in murder.

heightened awareness of domestic violence. That awareness has translated into tougher laws, more aggressive enforcement and an increase in the number of shelters for battered women.

Murder is just the tip of the iceberg, however. From 1980 to 1990, federal figures show, reports of domestic assault cases of violence that fall short of murder - rose from 2 million to 4 million, according to Rita Smith, coordinator for the National Coalition Against Domestic Violence.

Fox was quick to note that the declining homicide figures do not mean domestic violence overall is on the wane. He looked only at homicides.

But he said the study suggests that more and more cases of domestic violence are being dealt with before they escalate into murder.

What it basically suggests is that in the last 15 years, many more programs, from shelters to restraining orders, have come into place," he said.

While the O.J. Simpson murder case has given some the impression that domestic violence is out of control, Fox's study shows a gradual decline in the rate of domestic murders over the past 18 years.

Overall, the murder rate dropped from 2.47 per 100,000 in 1976 to 1.90 per 100,000 in 1991. It rose slightly to 2.08 in 1992.

Domestic murders among black women went from 10.25 per 100,000 in 1976 to 5.19 per 100,000 in 1991 before rising to 6.02 in 1992. The murder rate among white women stayed basically the same.

Moderate senators urge compromise health plan

Knight-Ridder News Service

WASHINGTON — An influential group of politically moderate senators rebuffed President Clinton on health care Friday, introducing a compromise plan that falls short of the White House goal of guaranteed insurance coverage for all Americans.

The proposal by four Democrats and three Republicans on the tax-writing Finance Committee aims to extend health insurance to 95 percent of Americans by 2002.

But it would not require either employers or individuals to obtain insurance. Moreover, government subsidies in the plan may not be sufficient to help all the low-income people who might want to purchase coverage.

"If you are not willing to compel people to buy health insurance through a mandate, then you have to be willing to come up with the tax to pay for subsidies," said Marilyn Moon, a health economist with the Urban Institute, a Washington think tank. "This doesn't sound like it's there."

Currently, 83 percent of Americans have health insurance — most of them through plans offered by employers. The overwhelming majority of the 39 million uninsured are in working families, and high cost is the leading reason they don't carry health insurance. The average family plan goes for $5,000 a year, while individual coverage runs about $2,000.

Clinton's plan, which would require employers to pay 80 percent of the cost of their workers' coverage, would guarantee coverage for all Americans by 1998. But small business opposition may make it impossible for Clinton to convince Congress to pass an employer requirement.

The proposal by the self-styled "mainstream group" in the Finance Committee points to a seemingly unbridgeable gap between Clinton and the conservative moderates on health care. That's a critical problem for Clinton, because he needs the votes of conservative Democrats and liberal Republicans to pass any health-care reform plan — particularly in the Senate, where Democrats have a 56-44 majority.

With Finance expected to begin drafting a bill next week, the seven senators probably constitute the biggest bloc on the 20-member panel. If their plan fails to pass, it would be a clear setback for Clinton. It would complicate his efforts to get the Senate to pass a bill that guarantees coverage for all.

Sen. John D. Rockefeller IV, D-W.V., a leading Clinton supporter on the Finance Committee, said the compromise bill would still leave too many people without health insurance. "If this is the best they have to offer, we still have a lot of work to do," he said.

The White House had no comment on the bill, but one official said privately there is "no chance" Clinton would sign it.

The authors of the compromise rejected criticism that their plan doesn't go far enough. They estimated it would extend coverage to two-thirds of the uninsured.

"It is far more than a minimalist approach," said Sen. David Boren, D-Okla. "It's got significant reform of the health system in it, but with a minimal amount of government interference."

Plan cuts mandate on business

The Associated Press

Key provisions of the health reform compromise offered Friday by a bipartisan group of senators on the Finance Committee:

COVERAGE

• No mandates on employers or individuals to buy insurance.

• Vouchers to help low-income families buy insurance. They would begin in 1997 for those below 90 percent of the poverty line, and help those with incomes up to 240 percent of poverty — $34,000 for a family of four — by 2002.

• Insurance and market reforms to make coverage more affordable and available, including guaranteed renewability and a ban on denial of coverage for pre-existing conditions.

• Voluntary purchasing pools for individuals and small businesses with 100 or fewer employees with community-wide rating. Premiums could be adjusted by age, but older workers could not be charged more than twice what younger workers pay.

• Firms with more than 100 workers could self-insure and would not be included in the community-rated pool.

• Individuals and small groups could sign up for health plans offered by the Federal Employee Health Benefit Plan, but they would pay their own community rate.

FINDING WAYS TO COVER EVERYONE

• If 95 percent of all Americans do not have insurance by 2002, a National Health Commission would recommend ways to Congress and the president to achieve universal coverage. Congress would have to act on the recommendations quickly, but would not be bound to accept them.

FINANCING

• A 51 increase in the cigarette tax, now 24 cents per pack.

• Savings of roughly $110 billion over five years in Medicare and Medicaid and $13 billion from Postal Service retirement funds to pay for subsidies.

• A new tax on high-cost health plans starting in 1996. The most costly 40 percent of plans in an area would be taxed. They would pay 25 percent of the difference between their premiums and the average premium in the area.

• All state and local government workers would have to pay the Medicare payroll tax, now 1.45 percent on both employers and employees.

BENEFITS

The National Health Commission would establish two benefit packages — a standard package based on the Blue Cross-Blue Shield standard option under the federal employees plan, and a basic benefit package with higher cost sharing and fewer benefits. Doctor bills, hospital stays, emergencies, mental illness, prescription drugs and other expenses would be covered.

MEDICAID

• Medicaid patients could be folded into the community-rated private insurance pool, but welfare recipients would keep extra health benefits they now get under Medicaid.

MEDICARE

• Medicare would remain a separate program, but the elderly could opt to enroll in the community-rated health plans to gain prescription drug coverage and other benefits.

MALPRACTICE

• Medical malpractice liability reforms, including a $250,000 cap on damages for pain and suffering.

TAX DEDUCTIONS

• Expanded tax breaks for individuals on the costs of their health insurance. Eventually everyone, whether self-employed or an employee, could deduct 100 percent of insurance costs. Previously, there was a 25 percent deduction only for the self-employed.

• New tax deductions for long-term care insurance premiums and actual expenditures for long-term care.

EFFECT ON DEFICIT

• Limits on federal health expenditures, including Medicare, Medicaid and the low-income vouchers, to automatically prevent them from increasing the deficit. The voucher phase-in would be delayed, the tax on high cost insurance plans increased, and other steps taken to prevent an increase in the deficit.

Clinton accuses critics of promoting cynicism

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Striking out at his conservative critics in particular and the media in general, President Clinton bitterly complained Friday that unfair and negative reports about him are feeding a cynical mindset in America.

Mentioning conservative talk-show host Rush Limbaugh and televangelist Rev. Jerry Falwell by name, Clinton decried "a constant unremitting drumbeat of 'negativism'."

"The American people are entitled to know what's going on in this country," Clinton said. "... The American people keep being told that things are bad and politicians are corrupt and the system's broken. It's not true."

Clinton insisted he wasn't criticizing evangelical Christians overall, just people who "put on the mantle of religion and then (use it) justify anything they say or do."

Limbaugh shot back on his own talk show a half-hour later. "The gauntlet has been thrown," he said, then proceeded to play a tape of Clinton's remarks and ridicule them. "This is not a program of negative pessimism."

Clinton's temper flared as he conducted a radio interview for KMOX from Air Force One as he flew to Missouri to promote anti-crime and national service initiatives.

One question that appeared to grip him on deal with stories that White House staff members had taken towels from state rooms during their stay aboard an aircraft carrier in Europe earlier this month.

"We're not sure that just the White House staff did that," Clinton insisted.

"There were people on that boat who were not members of the White House staff."

He cited the question as an example of the media's focus on bad news. "Look at all the things you (could) ask me about — and you asked me about that," Clinton told his interviewers.

Press Secretary Dee Dee Myers insisted Clinton was not angry, but simply "spoke his mind." Myers said Clinton spoke loudly because it was noisy on the aircraft, but his voice clearly rose at certain points in the interview.

Ironically, it was Clinton's morning outburst that largely overshadowed the other purposes of his trip — to push for congressional crime legislation, promote the Summer of Service youth program, and headline a fund-raiser for Rep. Richard Gephardt, D-Mo.

In a speech at Fox Park in a crime-ridden area of St. Louis, Clinton said the Summer of Service program would allow young people to help reclaim their neighborhoods. But once again, he returned to the theme of fighting negativity and cynicism.

"In order to be in the Summer of Service ... you have to believe that you can make a difference," Clinton said.

"One of the biggest problems that we've got in this country today is that we are constantly being told that we can't make a difference, that everybody that's trying is a sucker, that everybody in power is trying to take advantage of you and that nothing good can ever happen."

"It emanates over and over and over again from every news outlet that we have," he complained.

And once again singling out talk shows, he added: "If you're really good at bad-mouthing people you can get a radio talk show."

In his radio interview, Clinton vowed to promote his accomplishments more aggressively.

"I'm going to tell what I know the truth to be," he said. "I'm going to be very nice about it, but I'm going to be aggressive about it."

Speaking of Limbaugh, Clinton complained: "After I get off the radio today with you, Rush Limbaugh will have three hours to say whatever he wants. And I won't have any opportunity to respond. And there's no truth detector."

Asked if his criticisms also apply to Falwell, who is selling videotapes that criticize the president for his handling of the Whitewater land deal and a range of unproven allegations, Clinton declared: "Absolutely."

"Does he make full disclosure to the American people of the backgrounds of the people that he's interviewed that have made these scurrilous and false charges against me? Of course not," Clinton said. "Is that in a good Christian spirit? I think it's questionable."

Limit near on Clinton legal defense fund

WASHINGTON (AP) —

President Clinton's advisers are prepared to recommend that he accept contributions of up to $1,000 to help defray legal expenses, although he has not made a final decision, White House officials said Friday.

It would be the first legal defense fund for a sitting president.

White House press secretary Dee Dee Myers said accepting $1,000 from individuals — up from an earlier suggestion by advisers that contributions be limited to $500 — is "a decision the president will have to make."

The president still has not made final decisions on this, Myers said. "He has not been briefed fully on what his options are."

White House officials who spoke on the condition of anonymity said a final recommendation on the fund may be presented to the president next week. At first, Clinton appeared to reject the notion of such a fund. But aides said he is reconsidering in light of mounting personal legal bills.

GOP House members seek Elder's ouster

WASHINGTON (AP) — Eighty-seven GOP House members sought the resignation of Surgeon General Joycelyn Elders on Friday, escalating a conflict over Democrats' attacks on right-wing Republicans.

The Republicans' letter to President Clinton came two days after Elders, according to newspaper accounts, referred to the "un-Christian religious right" and added, "We've got to be strong to take on those people who are selling our children out in the name of religion."

The letter did not specifically mention those remarks but were cited often at a news conference by Rep. Cliff Stearns, R-Fla., author of the letter, other lawmakers and spokesmen for conservative Christian organizations.

"She should be using this office to fight sickness and disease and not using this office to fight parents and churches," Stearns said.

The letter said Elders "has not chosen to utilize her position to advance the general health and welfare of all Americans, but rather to advocate views antithetical to the majority of citizens."

Elders' press spokesman could not immediately be reached for comment.

On Thursday, 44 Senate Republicans wrote Clinton asking him to repudiate remarks that reflect religious bigotry. That letter came after Rep. Vic Fazio of California, chairman of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, criticized the rise of the radical right in Republican politics.

On Friday, President Clinton criticized evangelical Christian broadcasters, mentioning Jerry Falwell by name.

Clinton said he was getting tired of being pounded by the right wing. "I'm going to be far more aggressive," he said.

At the news conference outside the Capitol, Rep. F. James Sensenbrenner Jr., R-Wis., said Elders had "forfeited her right to be surgeon general of the United States."

The letter denounced Elders for her remarks that the Boy and Girl Scouts discriminated against homosexuals, that the legalization of narcotics should be considered and that girls should take condoms when they go on dates.

"Whether one agrees with these statements or not, and I suspect that the majority of Americans do not, they clearly serve to divide Americans rather than unite us behind our common interest in public health and welfare," the Stearns letter said.

BEDDING PLANT SALE

The dollar slipped to another postwar low against the Japanese yen Friday in Tokyo despite market intervention by the Bank of Japan.

Help for dollar fails to produce

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States launched another international rescue effort to prop up the sagging dollar Friday, but the attempt was branded a failure by financial markets and a Republican opponent of the president.

Critics derided the administration's third attempt since late April to halt the dollar's slide as poorly timed and badly executed.

The administration disputed those contentions with President Clinton maintaining that the whole issue of the dollar's instability was being overblown.

"The American dollar is actually stronger against a lot of other currencies in the world than it was a year ago. I think it's important that we not overreact to this," the president said in a telephone call to a St. Louis talk-radio station.

But on Capitol Hill, Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., termed the dollar's instability a "global vote of no confidence" in Clinton administration policies. "I, among many others, attribute this recent precipitous drop in the dollar to a worldwide lack of confidence in U.S. leadership that threatens prospects for sustained future U.S. economic growth," he said in a speech on the Senate floor.

Despite the fact that the United States and 16 other nations joined in the effort Friday to buy dollars in order to push up its value, the dollar rallied only briefly before being driven lower again against both the Japanese yen and the German mark.

The dollar briefly hit a 13-month low against the German mark in late afternoon trading.

Faced with these developments, the administration issued another statement late in the day designed to show stronger resolve about the part of the United States and the world's other richest industrial countries to fight any further devaluation of the dollar.

"We intervened today to demonstrate that this administration prefers a stronger dollar," said the statement attributed to a senior Treasury official.

"In the context of recent economic developments, it is our view and the G-7's that further appreciation of the mark and the yen (against the dollar) would be counterproductive for global recovery."

But just as the broad-based buying of dollars by central banks failed to push the dollar higher earlier in the day, the stronger statement had little effect either.

Market analysts estimated that Friday's intervention by 17 countries was well in excess of $3 billion and could have gone as high as $5 billion.

However, despite the massive effort, the dollar was still limping at the end of the day.

In late New York trading, $1 was buying 100.50 yen, down from Thursday's closing price of 101.25 yen. Against the German mark, $1 was buying 1.5814 marks in late afternoon trading, down from Thursday's closing of 1.6025 marks.

The dollar on Tuesday fell for a brief period below the 100 yen barrier, setting a postwar record low against that currency.

Seeing that Friday's effort to bolster the dollar backfired, Wall Street investors grew jittery, pushing both stock and bond prices lower.

The price of the benchmark 30-year Treasury bond fell sharply lower Friday, pushing the yield up to 7.52 percent.

Many economists said that Wall Street is worried that the Federal Reserve will soon be forced to boost interest rates in this country for a fifth time since February as a last resort to defend the dollar's value.

Higher U.S. interest rates would make the dollar more attractive to foreigners because it would boost the return on their American investments.

Jenkins said the celebration and dedication committees unanimously opposed working a political debate into the festivities. Local legislators and some people who were surveyed on the street also were opposed, she said.

"It would take away from the dedication and take away from our celebration," Jenkins said. If the candidates want to debate in Fort Benton, they are welcome to return on another weekend, she said.

The idea of debating in Fort Benton arose Wednesday at a Capitol news conference held by Mudd. Since the June 7 primary election, he and Burns had been squabbling about whether they would debate and when, how and where.

U.S. further isolates access to Haiti

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — A nervous Haiti watched its ragged ties to the outside world stretch thinner Friday, when daily U.S. flights were being halted in a new attempt to end the military's harsh rule.

Effective at midnight Friday, flights between the Caribbean nation and the United States were banned. All U.S.-Haitian financial transactions were halted Wednesday. The Clinton administration imposed both sanctions.

While one-way passengers sweated in long lines for Friday's last flights, authorities attempted to crack the financial ban with a court order.

The court demanded that the Port-au-Prince offices of Citibank and Bank of Boston reopen. Both shut down on Thursday and so far have stayed closed in compliance with Clinton's measures, denying thousands of depositors access to their money.

"There is real panic" among Haitians who depend on imports, exports, or travel to U.S. cities and commerce with U.S. banks, Aristide's caretaker prime minister Robert Malval told AP in an interview Friday.

"People are beginning to get the message that this time, this is serious," he said.

On the surface, however, life seemed no better nor worse than usual in this hot, dusty port that is home to a million people, most of them desperately poor, with little formal education or job skills.

The two daily flights between Port-au-Prince and Miami represented Haiti's most important link with the outside world, but some less frequent international flights continued to operate.

And Malval and others said it was too soon to say if the new sanctions, which are being heaped atop a crushing trade embargo, will succeed.

Clinton has refused to rule out a U.S. invasion if peaceful measures fail to dislodge the clique of officers, led by Brig. Gen. Raoul Cedras, that ousted elected President Jean-Bertrand Aristide and has ruled Haiti ever since, weathering several international pushes for a return to democracy.

"We haven't made a heck of a lot of progress in three years, and we're not naive enough to believe that," U.S. Embassy spokesman Stanley Schragger acknowledged to reporters. "The resistance has been more than we bargained for."

"The general feeling is... we may not have done it right in the past, but this time we got it right."

White House's Africa conference backfires

WASHINGTON (AP) — A White House conference on Africa designed to show U.S. concern for the region instead has become a springboard for congressional and human rights critics to launch attacks on administration policy.

The criticism threatens to undermine the purpose of the two-day conference, which was to highlight U.S. attention to the continent and demonstrate a commitment that critics have said is lacking.

"The object is to encourage an

A Haiti-bound passenger moves to the check-in counter of the last Haiti Trans Air flight to the country's capital at Miami International Airport Friday. The U.S. stopped all flights into Haiti.

Final flights to and from embattled country carry hope, anger, disgust

MIAMI (AP) — Passengers lugged anger and despair as well as bags and boxes aboard the last U.S. flights to Haiti's capital on Friday.

The U.S.-led ban on commercial air travel to and from Haiti was set to take effect at midnight, choking off a key route between Haitian immigrants in the United States and their island homeland.

"I think it's ridiculous," Joubert Pascal said of the Clinton administration's latest effort to force Haiti's military rulers to reinstate ousted President Jean-Bertrand Aristide. "A small country that is not at war, Haiti doesn't deserve that."

Pascal, a U.S. resident who lives in Haiti, was among the passengers loaded down with wrapped bags and boxes with items for friends and relatives in desperately poor Haiti.

Many refused to say what was in their baggage because of an embargo on everything but food and medicine.

The cutoff of flights to and from Miami and New York will shut down a lifeline for Haitians who count on relatives to return with staples such as rice, flour, even frozen chickens and turkeys in bags stuffed with ice.

Some travelers tried to carry so much food they had to pay other passengers to carry bags for them.

Still, American Flight 1291, the airlines' last flight to Port-au-Prince, was just half full when it took off at 11:25 a.m. from Miami International Airport, with 100 passengers booked on 260 available seats. The last flight from New York left Kennedy Airport at 12:30 p.m.

In Port-au-Prince, travelers jostled each other as they waited impatiently in long lines to board the last flights out. All seats were booked for American's return flights to Miami, said airline spokeswoman Pat San Pedro.

While the air embargo will make travel between Haiti and the United States more difficult, it won't be impossible. U.S.-bound travelers in Port-au-Prince can book seats on Air France, the only major carrier connecting Haiti with other Caribbean nations.

Aris Labady, a missionary whose family lives in the United States, was on the last flight to Haiti from Miami. He said he thinks the embargo won't work and will hurt too many innocent people. "It's hurting everybody, especially the poorest," he said.

toward the continent.

The latest broadside against the conference came from Human Rights Watch, which on Friday accused President Clinton of a "shameful response" to the crisis in Rwanda and a poor human rights leadership elsewhere in Africa.

"This conference seems to be little more than a gesture to counter criticism of the lack of U.S. leadership in Africa," said Janet Fleischman, Washington representative for Human Rights Watch. She said the administration's Africa policy "has a very disengaged quality."

Earlier this week, the Congressional Black Caucus announced it will boycott the Sunday-Monday conference because Clinton has not treated Africa as a priority. Additionally, TransAfrica director Randall Robinson, a leading advocate for African concerns, is staying away to protest U.S. policy toward Haiti. Human Rights Watch representatives will attend the conference, but only to make known their criticisms.

Town rules out debate at dog statue dedication

FORT BENTON, Mont. (AP) — Montana's U.S. Senate candidates have been eclipsed by a dead dog who will be remembered with the dedication of a statue at Fort Benton's annual summer festival this weekend.

Republican Sen. Conrad Burns and his Democratic challenger, Jack Mudd, say they would like to hold a campaign debate Sunday in Fort Benton. But some people in the Missouri River town worry a debate might cloud their 18th annual Summer Celebration.

"Sometimes people, when they come out and have fun, they don't want to hear a political debate," said Connie Jenkins, co-chairwoman of the Fort Benton Summer Celebration. "We didn't think it was the place for it."

Even though there will be no debate, Burns and Mudd plan to campaign at the festival. A different time and place for the candidates' first face-to-face debate have not been chosen.

The Fort Benton celebration will feature a parade, fireworks, a street dance, art on the levee — and the dedication of a bronze statue of Sheep, who died in 1943.

After the shepherd who owned Sheep died and his body was sent east by rail, the statue sat in the depot for six years. He hoped his master would return, the story goes. Sheep died after falling under a train, and is buried on a hill overlooking the depot.

Jenkins said the celebration and dedication committees unanimously opposed working a political debate into the festivities. Local legislators and some people who were surveyed on the street also were opposed, she said.

"It would take away from the dedication and take away from our celebration," Jenkins said. If the candidates want to debate in Fort Benton, they are welcome to return on another weekend, she said.

French troops begin Rwanda mission in refugee camp

A French army vehicle boards an Antonov 125 cargo plane on the Zairean border before leaving for Kigali Thursday. About 600 Foreign Legion units and French marines on the Zairean border began "Operation Turquoise."

Terrified Tutsis warily welcome French soldiers

NYARUSHISHI, Rwanda (AP)—The colonel stood on a hillside Friday and looked down at thousands of terrified refugees in a sprawling camp of blue and green tents now guarded by 50 of his intimidating French commandos.

"There are 8,000 people here, all Tutsis. We're here to protect them," said Col. Didier Thibaut. "When we arrived they were a little afraid. Some people said we came to kill them."

Despite opposition from Rwanda's predominantly Tutsi rebel movement, France is forging ahead with plans to send 2,500 soldiers and marines into the Central African nation to try to stop the horrific massacres that have killed more than 200,000 civilians.

The rebels distrust France because French troops blocked a rebel offensive in 1990 and they have vowed to treat the intervention force as an enemy. But for now, French troops are operating only in territory held by the Hutu-dominated government.

"Operation Turquoise" began Thursday when Thibaut's 250 commandos drove to Cyangugu, a town a few miles from the eastern Zaire border.

The first target of the peacekeeping effort was a Tutsi refugee camp at Nyarushishi, about 10 miles east of Cyangugu, where Tutsis fleeing slaughter by fanatical members of the majority Hutu ethnic group have been overcrowding during two months of civil war.

The Tutsi-led Rwandan Patriotic Front, which has overrun the eastern two-thirds of Rwanda, accused the French of moving into areas still con-

NYARUSHISHI, Rwanda (AP)—More French troops crossed into western Rwanda Friday searching for refugees who fled protection from the ethnic slaughter that has convulsed this central African nation for more than two months.

Hoping to ease the suspicions of Rwanda's predominantly Tutsi rebel movement, French commanders made their first objective the refugee camp at Nyarushishi, where 8,000 Tutsis have been menaced by fanatical Hutu militias. About 50 commandos were on guard Friday, a day after moving in from Zaire.

Leaders of the rebel Rwandan Patriotic Front do not trust France because it intervened to prevent a rebel assault on the Hutu-dominated government four years ago. Still, rebel officers repeated Friday that their fighters would not try to confront French troops if they stayed in the government-controlled west.

France insists it is not taking sides in the civil war this time and wants only to prevent more massacres, which U.N. officials estimate have killed more than 200,000 civilians, most of them minority Tutsis.

With the approval of the U.N. Security Council, the French government plans to put about 2,500 soldiers and marines in Rwanda for two months until an all-African U.N. peacekeeping force twice that size arrives.

For now, French troops are staying out of the eastern two-thirds of Rwanda, which are believed controlled by rebel forces.

"This is a humanitarian mission. We are not here to fight the RPF," said Col. Didier Thibaut, chief of a 250-commando unit sent to guard refugees at Nyarushishi and other camps in the area around Cyangugu, a border town in the southwestern corner of Rwanda.

He said other French units were heading deeper into Rwanda to look for other pockets of refugees. French commanders were considering forays as far east as the strategic government-held towns of Butare and Ruhengeri, controlled by the government to protect a regime that Paris financed and armed for years.

Seeking to gain the trust of the rebels, France made its first target for protection the vulnerable pocket of Tutsi refugees around Cyangugu.

More French troops headed into areas deeper in Rwanda on Friday in what Thibaut said was a search for other groups of refugees. French commanders were considering forays as far east as the strategic government-held towns of Butare and Ruhengeri, which the rebels have been trying to seize.

The Tutsis at the camp in Nyarushishi ostensibly have been under the protection of Rwandan police. Deeply anti-French, the refugees nevertheless warily welcomed the additional protection.

"Some of us are happy. Some of us are not," said Camilus Kayira, 23, who was among hundreds who fled a soccer stadium in the town of Eymbogo when a Hutu militia known as the Interhamwe began systematically taking people away to be murdered. His brother was among those killed.

"If the French mean what they say—that they come to peace—then we are happy," said Kayira, a high school Latin teacher before the ethnic slaughter, began in April. "We need the protection."

He said Rwandan police had been unable or unwilling to stop Hutu militiamen from sporadically taking people from the camp and marching them over the hills, where he said they were butchered.

Yeltsin signs trade pact with European Union

CORFU, Greece (AP)—Stepping up his drive to cement links with the West, Boris Yeltsin Friday signed a trade and cooperation agreement with the European Union that he said would end the "economic Cold War."

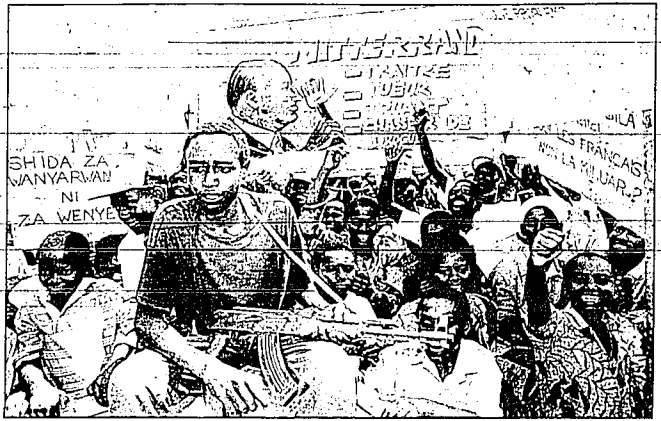

Although Yeltsin was the star attraction at the opening session of the two-day summit, he was likely to be overshadowed later by a bitter fight over the selection of a new EU chief executive.

Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreu, looking frail and unsteady as he welcomed Yeltsin and other dignitaries, was under pressure to get the pact to agree on a successor to Jacques Delors, whose term expires in January.

Prime Ministers Jean-Luc Dehaene of Belgium and Ruud Lubbers of the Netherlands were the front-runners.

A failure to choose one would underscore the difficulty the group has, despite pledges of unity, in working together. Its new Treaty on European Union calls for a common foreign policy and a single currency by 1999.

At the opening session in a church overlooking the Ionian Sea, Papandreu led the signing of the agreement that ends import restrictions on most Russian goods.

A young soldier of the Rwandan Patriotic Front has his gun at the ready at the head of an anti-French intervention protest by over 10,000 supporters at Kabuga, just outside Kigali, Friday.

which the rebels have been trying to seize.

Tutsis at Nyarushishi expressed suspicion of the French soldiers. But most welcomed them, nonetheless, because 11 Rwandan policemen supposedly guarding the camp have not stopped sporadic murder raids by Hutu militiamen.

"If the French mean what they say—that they come in peace—then we are happy. We need the protection," said Camilus Kayira, 23, a teacher before the war resumed after the April 6 death of President Juvenal Habyarimana, a Hutu who had reached a power-sharing accord with the rebels.

Hutu greeted French troops warily, cheering and waving small French flags when soldiers drove through dusty towns to survey villages and refugee camps.

French officials in Paris said the troops observed groups of young men armed with knives and clubs but reported no incidents.

Gen. Raymond Germanos, assistant chief of staff, told reporters in Paris that patrols had found several mass graves. He said there was no immediate word on the number of victims or their ethnicity.

In Kigali, the capital about 60 miles to the east of Nyarushishi, the rebels pressed their assault on government positions with virtually nonstop bombardment Friday. The Red Cross hospital was caught in the cross-fire when a mortar shell hit the emergency room, killing seven patients.

About 10,000 people danced and chanted through rebel-controlled parts of Kigali to protest the French operation. They carried banners reading "No to French imperialism," "We thank RPF" and "Let them (the French) go!"

Col. Frank Mugambage, the rebels' chief negotiator at stalled cease-fire talks, urged the United Nations to quickly send the planned reinforcements for the 450 U.N. soldiers now in Kigali so the French would have no reason to stay.

But he said the rebels would not seek to attack French soldiers as long as they stayed in the west and kept to the United Nations' humanitarian goals. "Let's wait and see if what they are saying is what they will do," he said.

Talks won't remove North Korean issue, analysts warn

By Jim Landers
Dallas Morning News

WASHINGTON — President Clinton, following in the footsteps of Jimmy Carter's mission to Pyongyang, may have awakened America out of the nightmare of Korean War II this week.

But analysts and diplomats warned Thursday this had dream will be likely to return as the struggle over North Korea's nuclear program shifts back to the diplomatic arena.

U.S.-North Korean negotiations are expected to resume July 8 in Geneva, U.S. officials said, a move that ends for now the threat of U.N. sanctions that North Korea said would be an act of war.

But the world still does not know if North Korea has the bomb, and that is the issue that stopped the last round of negotiations and led to this month's war threats.

North Korea's promise to freeze its nuclear program and leave in place international safeguards makes it unlikely that the North will be able to make any nuclear weapons for the next several months.

Analysis

What it has done in the past, however, remains a mystery that forces defense planners and diplomats to assume Pyongyang is now a nuclear power.

The next point of confrontation could come when the United States presses North Korea to reveal whether it has secretly manufactured enough plutonium for one, two or as some U.S. intelligence analysts fear as many as four bombs.

The greater the number, the greater the concern that North Korea will make nuclear weapons available to other countries.

"Yesterday's agreement was something for everybody, but much more for the Americans and the non-proliferation regime. The nuclear program is capped," said Peter Zimmerman, a nuclear non-proliferation expert with the Center for Strategic and International Studies. "If you're keeping score, since January we're probably one-all, and that tie will get broken over the next several months."

North Korea's 82-year-old president, Kim Il-sung, finds himself center stage in world affairs, defying the world as envoys come to his otherwise isolated capital to seek a compromise.

"Talk about well done," said Donald Clark, director of international studies at Trinity University in San Antonio.

"Even the South Koreans are a little proud of his performance. Deep down, they're seeing this betokens someday a unified Korea that's a nuclear power. The North Koreans have certainly gotten a tremendous yield out of the way they've played it."

South Korean diplomats, whose greatest fear has been an outbreak of war, say privately that they are relieved.

"From the U.S. standpoint, it may be that stopping the spread of nuclear weapons is the highest priority," said a senior South Korean diplomat who asked not to be identified. "For the Republic of Korea, the most important thing is how to prevent the recurrence of war."

"If war broke out, it would mean the end of their regime, so they would use everything they've got chemical weapons, nuclear, missiles, all they have or may have. There would be terrible casualties. So what would be the use then of non-proliferation?" he asked.

Clinton administration officials have insisted in background briefings that they will continue pressing North Korea to allow access to its nuclear facilities that would enable international inspectors to read its history.

That remains a priority with the International Atomic Energy Agency as well. After the Persian Gulf war revealed how inadequate the agency's safeguards had been in Iraq, some analysts suggest that it has decided to take a stand in North Korea to maintain its credibility.

North Korea's refusal at the end of May to allow agency inspectors access to key evidence from the past prompted the last confrontation.

Hans Blix, the agency's director, told the U.N. Security Council that North Korea had stopped his inspectors from examining 300 fuel rods at a small reactor in Yongbyon that could establish whether large amounts of plutonium were produced by North Korea in 1989.

Instead, the North swiftly removed thousands of fuel rods from the reactor and put them in a cooling pond.

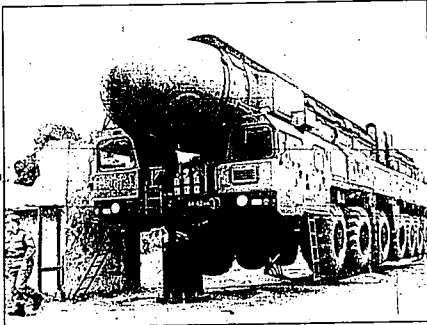

The U.N. inspectors no longer know which are the 300 crucial rods. They say they can't no longer reconstruct what happened in 1989 without more complex inspections of two nuclear waste sites that the North has refused to let them explore.

"We have irrevocably lost the best way to reconstruct the history," Zimmerman said.

North Korea has now agreed in writing to freeze its work at the Yongbyon nuclear reactor.

And a senior Clinton administration official said the same letter from North Korea's foreign ministry offered full compliance with the nuclear non-proliferation treaty and access by international inspectors to nuclear facilities in exchange for a comprehensive settlement.

With those assurances in hand, assurances first made by North Korea's Kim in meetings with Carter Clinton halted a drive for U.N. sanctions against North Korea.

Missiles such as this Topol SS-25 strategic intercontinental ballistic missile in northern Russia will be converted into launch rockets for space satellites when their military usefulness expires.

Russians will launch satellites on missiles

MOSCOW (AP) — Russia will convert some intercontinental ballistic missiles into launch rockets for space satellites when the military can no longer use them, an army general said Thursday.

Some SS-25 missiles will be reconfigured and used for launching communications and other satellites. Lt. Gen. Yuri Zhuravlyov told the ITAR-Tass news agency.

Zhuravlyov said converting ICBMs into rockets for civilian use could profit Russia and its financially strapped space program. Russia has signed a multi-million dollar contract with South Africa and other countries for launching communications satellites. The first launch is scheduled for September, said Zhuravlyov, who did not provide further details.

The rocket conversion is the latest step in a gradual relaxation of military tensions since the Cold War ended. Last month, the United States, Russia and Britain agreed to re-target their missiles away from each other.

But the SS-25s that remain will become the backbone of Russia's nuclear arsenal, the Strategic Missile Force said in a statement.

President Boris Yeltsin took part Wednesday in test firing an SS-25 from a launch facility in northern Russia.

It was the first time a Soviet or Russian president took an active role in a test launch and got a "first-hand look at how the red button works," the daily newspaper Izvestia said.

Yeltsin was particularly interested in the time needed for re-targeting nuclear missiles in critical situation, the paper said.

Europeans back big atom-smasher

GENEVA — Plans to build the world's most powerful atom-smasher won strong support Friday from all 19 members of a European consortium, but a last-minute wrangle delayed approval.

Britain and Germany, two of the biggest contributors to the laboratory, withheld their approval in a move to wring concessions from other contributors. A key concern was that host countries France and Switzerland provide extra support officials said.

The proposed Large Hadron Collider would be nearly as powerful and sophisticated as the Superconducting Super Collider that was to have been built in Texas and would cost about one-sixth as much. The $11 billion American project was cancelled last year.

Japan's prime minister faces key vote

TOKYO — Just two months in office, Prime Minister Tsutomu Hata faced a vote in Parliament today that could cost him his job and leave Japan rudderless before the heads of the world's major economies meet next month.

The showdown is only the latest episode in nearly a year of political turmoil that has plagued Japan since reformists ousted the conservative Liberal Democrats, who governed the nation unchallenged for a generation.

The instability has vexed American efforts to get Japan to ease bureaucratic red tape and open its markets to more imports. It could also make decisive action by Japan over North Korea's secretive nuclear program more difficult.

Legislators decided before dawn to schedule the no-confidence vote for noon Saturday. Barring a turnaround, Hata was likely to lose, which would force him either to resign or call new elections.

Tourist survives fall from 15th story

COPENHAGEN, Denmark — A high-flying German tourist came down to earth last night when he fell from the top of a 15-story building — and survived with barely a scratch, police said Friday.

The 19-year-old man was under the influence of alcohol and hashish when he climbed up to the top floor of a suburban Copenhagen condominium Thursday to enjoy the view, said police officer Kim Christensen. He thought he was going to vomit and lost his balance as he leaned over the balcony, falling about 150 feet.

The 19-year-old man rebounded on light wires and glided down a tree top before landing safely on a small lawn.

Grain Millers, Simplot agree to new contract

HEYBURN—The local union of the American Federation of Grain Millers approved a new contract Friday with officials at the J.R. Simplot Co. food-processing plant in Heyburn.

The two sides had reached an agreement Tuesday on a three-year contract for plant workers that included "substantial pay raises" and improvements in the workers' benefits packages, according to James Hicks, president of the Grain Millers' Local 296.

The union had asked for a 3.5 percent pay raise, while the company originally offered a 1.5 percent raise. Final details of the new contract were not made public Friday.

But Hicks said that the union got "almost everything" it had been asking for during contract negotiations. "We got enough that we are pleased with the package," he said.

Authorities continue search for girl's body in Snake River

MURTAUGH—Rescue workers from Twin Falls, Jerome and Cassia counties spent a second full day searching for the body of a 17-year-old Paul girl believed drowned in the Snake River.

The water level was lowered to aid the search in the Star Falls area east of the Murtaugh Bridge, but crews still had not found the body of Crystal Tracy Friday evening.

Tracy was swimming in the river Wednesday afternoon when she was swept through the rocky falls.

The water level, which is controlled at Milner Dam and is essential to area farmers' irrigation needs, was due to begin rising again late Friday.

Rock Creek Fire District, firefighters offer CPR class

KIMBERLY—The Rock Creek Fire District and the Firefighter's Association will be hosting a free CPR class on Saturday, July 16, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., at the Rock Creek Fire Station in Kimberly.

Instructors for the American Heart Association-certified course will be Rod Smith, EMT-D with the Filer Fire and Rescue, Ken Thomson of Jerome, and Jerry Morton, assistant chief of the Rock Creek Fire District.

Morton says class size is limited, so register early. He may be reached at 423-4336.

Park service plans 1995 reconstruction for Craters

SHOSHONE—The National Park Service plans a major reconstruction project for roads and parking areas at the Craters of the Moon National Monument during spring and summer of 1995. The park service made available this week an environmental assessment of the construction to take place in the 54,000-acre national monument. The document is open to public review for 30 days.

Copies of the environmental assessment are available from the Craters of the Moon National Monument at 527-3257. The comment period closes July 22, 1994.

Health officials warn residents to avoid rodents

By Mick Norrington
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS—Recent occurrences of hantavirus in northern and southeastern Idaho haven't spread to the Magic Valley, but local health officials are still warning residents to avoid rodents.

Earlier this month, a 23-year-old south-eastern Idaho woman died, and last fall a Coeur d'Alene boy died. Both had contracted hantavirus from rodent droppings.

Of the 78 cases of hantavirus across the nation, six are in southeastern Idaho, said Bob Walsh, health education specialist for the Southeastern District Health Department in Pocatello.

No new cases have been reported in the Magic Valley but health officials are testing a person in Oakley and another in Burley who contracted hantavirus more than three years ago and lived, said Margaret Howard, public health nurse with the South Central District Health Department in Twin Falls.

Her office is warning local residents and doctors to be on the lookout for hantavirus symptoms. Symptoms are similar to the flu, including high fever, muscle aches, coughing and headaches.

Wild rodents such as mule deer mice appear to be the main carriers of hantavirus. The mice live in fall parts of Idaho, and infected deer mice spread the virus through their urine, saliva, droppings and their nesting materials.

The infection can be contracted from rodent droppings and nests or while up the droppings.

The woman who died in Pocatello was cleaning an old house when she contracted the disease. She died two days later. Her name and home town haven't been released.

According to the state Division of Health, there are no cases of the disease being spread from person to person or from dogs and cats.

"But pets may bring infected mice into contact with people," said Roger Perotto of the Division of Health. "It is possible that other rodents may also be carriers. That is why it's important to avoid all contact with wild rodents."

Assessor candidate goes to court on sex charges

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News writer

HAILEY—The man who would be Lincoln County's assessor and who was once Shoshone's police chief appeared in court Friday on four counts of sexually molesting a boy.

Frank L. Shaffer, 52, is being held in the Blaine County jail in lieu of $20,000 cash bond. A preliminary hearing is scheduled July 8 in Shoshone.

Shaffer, who works in the Lincoln County assessor's office, was due to take over that position as the unopposed Republican nominee after November's general election.

But allegations that he repeatedly abused a boy over a period of six years have cast doubt on his political career. Shaffer left his position as Shoshone police chief in 1986 after 15 years in the department. A deputy Idaho attorney general says in court documents that Shaffer began having sex with a boy younger than 10 years old that same year.

The first incident involved Shaffer fondling the boy, but progressed to oral sex and finally, during a 1991 camping trip to Pettit Lake, to anal intercourse, according to the affidavit signed by Laymont Anderson of the Idaho attorney general's office.

Anderson is part of a special state task force that helps counties handle child sex abuse cases.

He has charged Shaffer in Lincoln County with three counts of lewd conduct with a minor that the alleged victim says happened at Shaffer's home in Shoshone. Anderson says the boy told investigators in May that he and Shaffer had sexual contact monthly between 1986 and 1991.

A fourth lewd conduct count is filed in Blaine County as a result of the reported incident at Pettit Lake. Shaffer was arrested on that charge Thursday.

Court documents say Shaffer recently was released from Canyon View Hospital in Twin Falls, a private mental hospital. He is considered a high risk for suicide, the documents say.

If he posts bond, Shaffer is ordered to stay away from the alleged victim or his family, and he cannot leave the area. It is unclear why three years elapsed between the final allegation and the boy's statement to investigators. The Jerome police officer who has been handling the investigation was out of town and unavailable for comment Friday.

Shaffer also showed the alleged victim sexually-oriented magazines and videotapes, including "Debbie Does Dallas" and "Taboo," Anderson's affidavit says. Police armed with a search warrant entered Shaffer's home at 107 E. Fourth in Shoshone on May 25 and found 24 Playboy magazines, 14 videotapes, four school papers belonging to the boy who reported the abuse and a book entitled "Young Deviates," according to the affidavit.

Earlier in the month, Shoshone Police Chief Chuck Cox took several weapons from Shaffer's home after being called there by Shaffer, the affidavit says. The boy, who is not related to Shaffer, told police Shaffer gave him gifts of clothing and guns.

During his visit to Shaffer's house, Cox said Shaffer told him the boy was going to charge him with molestation. When Cox asked Shaffer if the allegations were true, he replied "Something to the effect that they will find me guilty." Cox is reported in the affidavit as saying, "At the preliminary hearing July 8, prosecutors must present enough evidence to convince a judge the case should go to trial in District Court. Shaffer has requested a public defender to represent him."

Lewd conduct carries a maximum penalty of life in prison.

Girl, 12, still critical after boat accident

Man cited for negligent operation

By Melissa Gibson
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS—A 12-year-old girl remained in very critical condition Friday afternoon at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center after she was hit by a motorboat Thursday in the Snake River above Shoshone Falls.

Jami Beaman, of Fruitland, was water-skiing when a boat, also with a skier in tow, hit her. The boat sliced the back of her head and her shoulder, said Sgt. T.L. Peterson of the Twin Falls County Sheriff's Department.

Beaman, who was in the intensive care unit Friday, may lose her arm, said John Pohlman, a friend of the family. Beaman had her spleen removed and was in surgery for most of Thursday night, Pohlman said. Hospital officials would not discuss her condition.

Dan Kohring of Twin Falls was cited for "gross negligent operation" of a water vessel, a misdemeanor, Peterson said. Kohring, who was not available for comment Friday, was released on $300 bail and will be arraigned soon, he said.

Kohring was "watching his skier instead of where he was going," said Pohlman, who witnessed the accident. The water-skier behind Kohring's boat saw Beaman and fell in order to warn Kohring, but by the time he had turned the boat, Beaman was already hit, Pohlman said.

"This was a horrible accident," he said. "And it was totally preventable."

Kohring was tested for alcohol at the scene, but his blood-alcohol content was under the legal limit for operation of a water vehicle, said Peterson. Two other passengers were in the boat with Kohring, he said.

Beaman was unconscious when pulled from the water, and she was not breathing,

Boating safety tips

By Melissa Gibson
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS—A total of 62 boating accidents were reported in 1993, according to the Idaho Department of Parks and Recreation.

Nine boaters were killed and 22 were injured last year, while $291,730 worth of property was damaged.

Nationally, small boats are involved in more than 90 percent of drownings each year, according to the Insurance Information Institute.

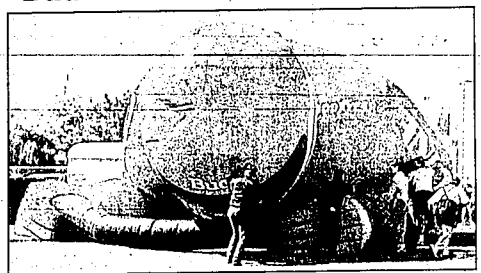

The institute offers these safety tips:

- Check weather forecasts. Also check engine, fuel, electrical, steering and exhaust systems.
- Carry one or more fire extinguishers readily accessible on board.
- Equip the vessel with required navigation lights and with a whistle, horn or bell.
- Make sure that every person on board wears a life jacket.
- Know and obey marine traffic laws. Learn distress signals.
- Keep an alert lookout for other watercraft, swimmers, floating debris and shallow waters.
- Pay attention to loading. Don't overload; distribute the load evenly; don't stand up or shift weight suddenly in a small boat; and don't permit riding on the bow, seat backs or gunwales.

said Pohlman. First aid and cardiopulmonary resuscitation were given to Beaman while he went to call 911, he said.

Beaman was in Twin Falls visiting her mother, Niki Bingham.

Homeless advocates sign deal to buy house for use as shelter

By Maria Stafford
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS—After a week of negotiations, homeless advocates signed a deal Friday morning to buy a house for use as Twin Falls' first homeless shelter.

"We signed the agreement today," said Randy Hansen, president of the Valley House Coalition Inc., a new organization for the homeless. "Now we've got to get out and get the money for it."

The property is at 212 Fourth Ave. E., across from the Twin Falls Public Library.

Under the purchase contract, the coalition's board of directors must come up with the money for the house within six months, Hansen said.

"We think we can do it," he said. Hansen would not disclose the final sale price of the house, but said it was "within parameters of the bond."

"We're happy with that," he said. The seller was asking $110,000 and rejected the coalition's first offer of $90,000.

The coalition hopes to have a special-use permit within four to six weeks and to open the shelter as soon as the house is paid for, Hansen said. He hopes to raise over $100,000.

"I'm very excited about this," Hansen said. "We think this will be a boon to Twin Falls."

The Valley House Coalition is a collaborative effort by members from 15 local community service organizations who saw a need for short-term shelter and a central organization to better help people facing hard times.

The coalition is planning on appealing to the city and county for funding, as well as local church and service organizations. The group will also hold special fund-raising events, perhaps including a "homeless awareness" week.

Anti-gay initiative opponents concede measure is near ballot

The Associated Press

COEUR D'ALENE — The Idaho Citizens Alliance anti-gay rights initiative is within 5,000 signatures of making November's ballot, according to figures tallied by its opponents.

According to a Don't Sign On to Discrimination poll of county election officials across the state, the Idaho Citizens Alliance of Burley has collected 27,871 verified signatures. At least 15,000 more are thought to be in the state, the initiative would make it onto the ballot.

At a Coeur d'Alene house party Wednesday, a local anti-initiative activist nearly conceded this stage of the race.

"Ladies and gentlemen, I think it's going to be on the ballot and we've got some work in front of us," announced Rich Carlini, a member of Idaho for Human Dignity and North Idaho Voices for Human Rights.

He was a guest at the gathering, which was organized to raise money for the Don't Sign On campaign.

Through private house parties, public auctions and yard sales, the group has raised almost $80,000 to fight the initiative.

But it may be too late to keep it off the ballot. "I think we're easily on track to getting them (the required signatures)," said alliance director Kelly Walton of Heyburn Thursday. "I'm not saying their numbers are correct. I'm not saying we don't already have them all. I'm just not saying."

But Walton did state a contingent of alliance volunteers would be collecting signatures at the Boise River Festival this weekend, which is expected to attract more than 100,000 people.

In the Coeur d'Alene area, "I haven't seen any petition signing on an overt basis," Carlini said. "It's been in the churches and in the primary (election) campaigns."

Walton said 80 percent of the signatures were gathered by individuals passing petitions around to friends and relatives. The rest were gathered by "hard-core" volunteers.

Many signatures came from the efforts of people like pastor Dan Austin of the Friends Church in Hayden Lake. He received an alliance mailing with a blank petition, which he circulated selectively.

Last week, Carlini and other anti-initiative volunteers held an alliance volunteers gathering signatures in the Kootenai County Courthouse.

Carlini and company descended on the courthouse, too, with their "bigot-busting kit" that contains a list of "10 things the ICA doesn't want you to know," he said. They approached people to urge them not to sign the petitions.

Despite those efforts, Walton said support has been strong statewide. "Up north, the brightest spot on the map is Bonner County," he said. Courthouse clerks report 1,111 registered voters have signed the petition.

Deputy prosecuting attorney for Jerome County quits post

The Times-News

JEROME — Deputy Prosecuting Attorney Frank Nichols has left his job in Jerome County.

Nichols had served as the Jerome deputy prosecuting attorney since January 1993. He also served part-time as the Coeur d'Alene County prosecuting attorney, John Horgan said.

"It was an agreement between the two of us — a matter of case load," Horgan said.

Horgan said he Nichols had "done a fine job. I know he has been my preference that he remain as the Jerome County Deputy Prosecutor, but he chose Camak," he said.

Nichols could not be reached for comment.

"We're interviewing and receiving resumes for his replacement," Horgan said. The position should be filled by the first week in July, he said.

K. Ellen Baxter, former Twin Falls County Prosecuting Attorney, said in a telephone conversation that Horgan had discussed the possibility of Baxter filling the vacancy.

"I'd love to, but can't because of the summer schedule I have with my children," she said.

George B. Saviers
SUN VALLEY — George Bate Saviers, 78, of Sun Valley, died Thursday, June 23, 1994, at the Wood River Medical Center in Sun Valley.

He was born Aug. 6, 1915, in Twin Falls. He graduated from Twin Falls High School and then attended the University of California, Berkeley. During World War II, he served in the U.S. Navy at Dugway Proving Grounds in Utah and then in San Francisco. He attended Cornell Medical School and served his residency in San Francisco, Calif., and Denver, Colo. He came to Sun Valley in 1953, when he was still owned by the United Pacific Railroad and became a partner with Dr. Moritz until retirement in 1987. He married Patricia Pierce and they were later divorced.

He loved hiking, hunting, fishing, bird watching, Idaho wildlife and environmental concerns. In 1970, he went to Vietnam for several months as a volunteer to care for villagers.

Survivors include two sons, George (Joan) Saviers of Salt Lake City, Utah, and John P. Saviers of Salt Lake City, Utah; one daughter, Georgia Saviers of Washington, D.C.; and one brother, James Saviers of Anchorage, Alaska. He was preceded in death by his son, Frederick Gordon Saviers in 1989.

A memorial service will be announced at a later date. Cremation took place at White Crematory and interment was at Sunset Memorial Park in Twin Falls.

EchoHawk outspent challenger by 4-to-1

BOISE (AP) — Attorney General Larry EchoHawk, who swept to a landslide victory in Idaho's primary election, outspent his major challenger by nearly four to one.

Former state senator Ron Beltschpacher, Grangeville, filed his campaign finance report with the secretary of state's office Friday, showing he spent $55,242 through June 3 of this year and $93,286 including last year.

EchoHawk, who captured nearly 74 percent of the vote, spent about $370,000 for the campaign and won the Democratic nomination to face Republican winner Phil Batt in the general election.

The report from perennial candidate David Shepherd of Lewiston wasn't received in Boise by late Friday.

Beltschpacher wound up with $20,662 in his campaign fund as of June 3. He also reported loans of $5,932 to the campaign and a $2,000 contribution from his wife, Linda.

Dean Haagenson, the Coeur d'Alene contractor who finished third in a three-way race for the GOP lieutenant governor nomination, spent $81,032 on the campaign. Lt. Gov. Butch Otter, despite being outspent more than double by both of his challengers, won the party's nomination and faces state Sen. John Pevey, D-Carey, in the general election.

Haagenson spent $76,365 on the race in 1994 plus $4,667 last year. He reported making $13,000 in personal loans to the campaign.

Gov. Spence spent $70,000 in 1993 and $33,700 this year. The third candidate, Boise surgeon Dean Sorensen, spent $10,000.

Former teacher beats clock, files as independent candidate for schools chief

BOISE (AP) — Former school teacher Don Hawkins of Boise just beat the deadline and qualified as an independent candidate for state schools superintendent.

State election officials said Hawkins turned in petitions bearing 128 signatures Friday afternoon just 15 minutes before the deadline. That was enough to give him a spot on the Nov. 8 general election ballot.

Hawkins, an AT&T employee, formerly taught at Boise's Capital High School. He described himself at a news conference this week as "a concerned parent and frustrated and angry taxpayer." He promised to hold the office just one term if elected.

Hawkins turned the race into a three-way battle to succeed Jerry Evans, a Republican who's retiring after 16 years as schools superintendent.

Anne Fox, Post Falls, won the GOP nomination with Willie Sullivan, Caldwell, was unopposed for the Democratic nomination.

He's the third independent to file for statewide office. The other independent candidates, both Coeur d'Alene men running for governor, are Gary Crider and Ron Rankin.

Four independents filed for state legislative positions.

Bison butts girl

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK, Wyo. (AP) — A Utah girl was treated and released from a park hospital after a bison butted her while she was trying to photograph it Friday morning, officials said.

In a release, park Superintendent Bob Barbee said witnesses told him the girl, Cindy Jess, 12, of Salt Lake City, moved to within eight feet of a more than 2,000-pound bison grazing in the Bridge Bay Campground.

After she turned to walk away, the bison lowered her head and butted her from behind, the release said. She was treated and released from the Lake Hospital for minor injuries.

Cassia County officials to meet over courthouse

By Liz Wright
Times-News writer

BURLEY - Cassia County officials plan to meet with architects Monday to discuss preliminary blueprints for a new courthouse.

The proposed courthouse would be two stories and meet federal security codes with roomier courtrooms and an extra stairwell or elevator for improved access, said Sam Barrows, senior architect for Lombard-Conrad Architects in Boise.

Federal law requires prisoners, defendants, witnesses and the public be separated during courtroom proceedings to prevent potential violence, Barrows said.

The existing courthouse is poorly arranged and would require substantial remodeling to meet the security codes, Barrows said. The new building would also have security checkpoints and more handicapped facilities, he said.

Court officials will examine the floor plans and discuss any changes they might want. Architects will also visit with county administrators, who would stay in the current building and expand their departments, he said.

Cassia County commissioners plan to review the proposal on July 18, Barrows said. The cost of the project will be presented by that time, he said. No estimate has yet been made.

No specific location is planned, yet, but one option is to build the new facility next door to the existing building located at 15th Street and Overland Avenue, Barrows said.

Commissioners approved spending up to $25,000 to study a new facility in early May.

Also on Monday, commissioners will review next year's budget. They plan to start their discussion at 1:30 p.m. Last week they also reviewed part of the budget.

Other items on the agenda are: a meeting with department officials at 9 a.m. and a land transfer request by the Cassia County Fair Board at 11 a.m.

The commissioners will meet in their office in the basement of Cassia County Courthouse at 15th Street and Overland Avenue. For more information call the office at 678-7302.

Mini-Cassia students graduate from colleges

The Times-News

The University of Idaho in Moscow held its spring commencement exercises recently. Graduates from the Mini-Cassia area were Wayne W. Cutler of Heyburn, College of Agriculture; Brent A. Dozier and Bret R. Homer, both of Paul and both College of Agriculture; Benjamin Nava Jr. of Paul, College of Business; and Stephanie A. Fessett of Rupert, Juris Doctor.

Several Mini-Cassia area students were among the graduates at commencement exercises for Albertson College of Idaho, held recently in Caldwell. Terry Weigand of Heyburn received a bachelor of arts degree in elementary school administration, and Priscilla Pele Cox-Lynn of Burley was awarded a bachelor of science degree in zoology. Master of education degrees in school and community counseling were awarded to Lauri J. Bailey, Beverly A. Clark, Daniel R. McCarthy and Frances Adrian Roper, all of Burley, and Patricia M. Bedke of Oakley. Other master of education degrees were awarded to Jeanne E. Kerbs of Paul in school counseling and James P. Norton of Burley in secondary school administration.

U of I medical program will focus on rural care

LEWISTON (AP) - An emphasis on rural health care is at the heart of a University of Idaho plan for medical education in the state.

It includes financial incentives to encourage doctors to practice in small towns.

The school next week will notify the state Board of Education it intends to present a full proposal later this summer.

Both Idaho and Idaho State University are jockeying for the regents' endorsement to improve medical education.

Idaho State, going for a medical school partnership with the University of Utah that would cost about $1 million to start up, and recurring costs of up to $2.5 million to accommodate 20 to 30 new Idaho students per year.

Idaho's idea would probably cost little to implement and much less to operate, said Michael Laskowski, WAMI director at Idaho. It trains physicians from Washington, Alaska, Montana and Idaho.

Costs of the Idaho plan will be clearer when the full proposal is finished.

Laskowski said it makes more sense to work within the existing WAMI relationship between Idaho and the University of Washington.

The state already pays for 16 new Idaho students each year to attend medical school at Washington under WAMI. It also finances another six seats at the University of Washington.

Expansion of WAMI seats is one possibility under the Idaho plan, Laskowski said, although the issue must be studied.

Additional seats are the most costly method of resolving the rural care problems, he said, and doesn't guarantee those doctors will practice in Idaho.

The University of Idaho wants to expand an existing approach that pays medical school debts for doctors who agree to practice in underserved rural areas. At an annual cost of $140,000, it placed 10 physicians during the last two years.

The loan repayment program offers as much as $20,000 per year for four years.

Utah woman dies in explosion

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) - A 75-year-old woman died Friday after her South Salt Lake home burst into flames following an explosion, a police spokesman says.

A road crew was working across the street when the explosion occurred inside the home at about 2:40 p.m., said South Salt Lake Police Officer Beau Blah.

"I don't want to speculate right now on the cause, but there was a large explosion and a fire ensuing," Babka said.

The explosion erupted toward the front end of the woman's house, which burned to the ground, authorities said. Two cars also were destroyed.

South Salt Lake Fire Chief Robert Adams said the explosion killed the woman instantly. Her name was withheld pending notification of next of kin.

About 40 firefighters responded to the blaze.

Cross-country horseback trip takes rider through 48 states

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — D.C. Clough was stiff and achy. He had $10 to his name. His horse had a sore shoe.

In the midst of what's planned to be a nine-year horseback journey through 48 states, Clough was having an off day.

The 29-year-old horseman from Plaisant, N.H., sat on his duffel bag in an unused corner of the parking lot at an Idaho Falls state fair late afternoon Thursday. Clough had just traveled 30 miles.

Sitting in the shade of a small tree, he contemplated his latest problem. He'd unsaddled Louise, a 15-year-old Shire draft mare, and discovered a nasty saddle sore on her upper back.

Clough and Louise left New Hampshire in April 1991 and have ambled 10,000 miles through 26 states, camping or staying with local residents who offer shelter and a meal.

"I just wanted to see all the places I read about as a kid," he said. He had never been on a horse until his mid-20s, but after he tried it, it suited him.

"It just appealed to me, the three miles per hour," he said. He'd always dreamed about traveling through the states. "I just decided it wasn't enough to think about it. I wanted to do it."

So he did. Single, without kids and debt-free, he decided there wasn't a better time. He quit his job as an auto parts wholesaler, sold everything he owned and bought a horse, a former logging horse from Maine.

"I didn't have a great deal of support when I left. Everybody thought I was crazy," he said. "The hardest thing for me was just to learn to slow down."

He had been working since age 16 and was used to a fast pace. Now? Well, he says, "I forget what day of the week it is all the time. Maybe I'll forget how old I am pretty soon."

He started the trip with $2,000. But five days into the trip, a hurricane damaged or destroyed most of what he owned. Much of his money was spent to replace gear.

"Mother Nature really has been my great adversary," he said. But he stuck with the trip, and now lives on donations and hospitality. From New England, he headed south through the East Coast states to Texas, across the Gulf Coast into Florida, the Southwest and then California.

"The proudest day of my trip was the day I rode into the Pacific Ocean," he said. He traveled north through the Golden State, with a short side trip into Nevada, then to Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, Idaho again, Wyoming and Idaho a third time.

Of the states he's seen so far, he says Georgia and Idaho are his favorites. "The scenery is unbelievable. ... There's always something different around the next corner," he said.

From Idaho Falls, he plans to head to Blackfoot, eventually into Utah, Colorado and then the Midwest. He plans his route about a year at a time, but adjusts it as he goes. He hopes to finish, returning to New England, by the year 2000.

"If I finish it, I'll be the first as far as I know," he said.

Earlier Thursday, Clough met Ammon Waggoner, who has horses of his own, offered Clough a place to keep the horse for a day or two.

Waggoner soon pulled into the parking lot in his pickup truck, with a horse trailer. The two loaded up Louise, and talked about the saddle sore.

Clough's unsure what he'll do when he's finished with the trip. He's considering writing a book. But he says he hasn't thought that far ahead yet.

Thursday his mind was on Louise's saddle sore and raising money.

Andrus: People's policy on track

BOISE (AP) — Nineteen years after conducting one of the most comprehensive public opinion polls ever, retiring Gov. Cecil Andrus believes Idahoans have generally gotten what they asked for.

The federally funded project in 1975 was called "Idaho's Tomorrow." More than 1,500 people were polled. Over 800 took part in a statewide conference and regional meetings.

Andrus, then just beginning his second term, was looking for some signal from the public about the direction they wanted the state to go.

In the midst of the major economic boom of the 1970s that eventually turned into one of the worst economic downturns in the mid-1980s, Idahoans seemed to indicate that they wanted:

- Limited to moderate population growth.
- Expanded tourism and manufacturing but still on the solid agricultural base.
- Policies protecting environmental quality in any quest for economic expansion.
- Increased reliance on renewable energy resources over expansion of the hydropower system or the construction of coal-fired or nuclear power plants.

Today, Idaho's population is just over the 1 million mark that a third of the respondents to the 1975 poll favored. Another third had said they hoped the population, then at 832,000, would not change.

Agriculture remains the state's number-one industry, but tourism has immediate effect of securing legislative approval of state-wide land use planning and solidified opposition to construction of a coal-fired power plant south of Boise.

But for the longer term, it provided the framework for what has become the Andrus' agenda.

"The people of the state of Idaho drew it up," said Andrus, now in the final months of his unprecedented fourth term. "The people told me what they wanted, and I have built a political career giving them what they wanted."

— Gov. Cecil Andrus

moved to number two and there has been a rise in relatively good-paying manufacturing jobs since the economy began rebounding in 1977.

Environmental concerns remain at the heart of nearly every political and socioeconomic debate as nearly two-thirds of those polled wanted.

And Idaho has no coal-fired and nuclear power plants and no prospects of any being built. There is little likelihood that the hydropower system will be significantly expanded as well. "You can call that luck, you can call that accident," Andrus said.

"But if you look at the state numbers, we've done just about what the people asked us to do."

"Idaho's Tomorrow" had the framework for what has become the Andrus' agenda.

Mr. Blobby aims to give Barney stiff competition

New York City school children greet British children's television star Mr. Blobby upon his arrival by helicopter in New York Monday.

LONDON (AP) — Forget "Middleman," "Grillzation," and all those other highbrow BBC programs. Americans are getting a taste of the stuff Brits really watch: Mr. Blobby, a fat, clumsy, pink creature resembling a giant, polka-dotted jellyfish.

The British Broadcasting Corp. he's been extremely profitable. Now he carries the corporation's hopes of beating Barney the purple dinosaur in the rich U.S. children's market.

"We're talking tens of billions of dollars here," Michael Gury, vice president for product-marketing at BBC Lionheart Television, said Friday.

Or as Mr. Blobby would say: "Blobby! Blobby! Blobby!"

A long way from Noel Coward, but it works. Lyrics crafted from Mr. Blobby's one-word vocabulary produced No. 1 record — confirmed this week as Britain's best-selling single of 1993.

Not to mention the Blobby video, Blobby T-shirts, Blobby bubble bath, Blobby wallpaper, Blobby pink lemonade and a Blobby theme park. There are even Blobby pinches-out-to-cheat the BBC of Blobby earnings with Blobby fakes.

When Mr. Blobby visited the old seaside resort of Brighton recently, the BBC said he drew 19,000 fans.

"Only the British would travel hundreds of miles to pay homage to a lump of pink rubber," says Noel Edmonds, host of "Noel's House Party," Mr. Blobby's Saturday prime time showcase.

Based on Mr. Blobby's appearance last week at the International Licensing and Merchandising Conference and Exhibition Show in New York, Gury thinks Americans may be as susceptible — and not just kids.

"The licensing offers we got — for boxer shorts for men, and ties and braces, you know — would suggest that those folks see an appeal in a sort of a camp dad marketplace," Gury said in a telephone interview from the United States.

Lionheart, the BBC's marketing arm in the United States, is still working on a television showcase for Mr. Blobby.

Gury said he had been skeptical about Blobby in the U.S. market, but has been encouraged by the response from test groups.

Some parents, he said, expressed a preference for Blobby over Barney.

"We didn't position ourselves as the anti-Barney. That just happened."

For a character that does little more than fall down, or knock someone else down, Blobby is doing fine in the U.S. media: He has had write-ups in The Wall Street Journal and The Washington Post and an appearance on CNN's "Larry King Live."

Gury sees Blobby as the key to establishing a "long-term branded presence of BBC children's product with young kids, parents of children 2 to 6."

"A 4-year-old is not different from Mr. Blobby," Gury said.

"You know, he wants to learn, he has a limited vocabulary, and generally he's enthusiastic about trying stuff—he needs a lot of encouragement and when he actually achieves something he is absolutely elated."

Businessman denies trading animal parts

ROSEMead, Calif. (AP) — A businessman arrested after he allegedly bought thousands of dollars worth of bear gallbladders from undercover agents denied Friday he was involved in illegal animal parts trading.

"I'm not a dealer," Joseph Chang said in a brief telephone interview from his business, AA Radiator Corp.

"I don't know what happened. In court, I will say everything."

Chang, 39, was arrested Thursday on a warrant charging him with three felony counts of purchasing bear parts. He was released later that day after posting $10,000 bail at the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department's Temple City substation, said jail Officer Marilyn Valdez.

His arrest capped an 18-month investigation that included four other arrests in California and several dozen in Colorado and Utah, said L.E. Eddie Watkins of the California Department of Fish and Game.

Earlier this year, a Hollywood businessman was fined $10,000 for running an illegal bear hunting club to collect and sell bear parts.

Brit recovers after 6 organ transplants

LONDON (AP) — A 32-year-old man who received six transplanted organs was released from the hospital Friday, but doctors say he still has a long way to go in his recovery.

Stephen Hyett received a liver, kidney, stomach, duodenum, small intestine and pancreas in March at Addenbrooke's Hospital in Cambridge. The operation had not been announced previously. The hospital declined to give the exact date of the surgery, which took 14 hours.

"Where I had an awful lot of pain before the operation I haven't got that now," Hyett told British Broadcasting Corp. radio.

"Although I get a bit tired at the moment they said that would go with time. Otherwise I am fine."

Surgeon Peter Friend said Hyett's doctors were thinking "in terms of 50-50 chances" for his survival.

Hyett has a condition called Gardner's Syndrome, which causes deadly tumors in the bowel and duodenum. Professor Sir Roy Calne, who headed the surgical team, described the disease as a recurring fibroma.

Hyett, who lives in Haverhill, 56 miles northwest of London, had to return to the hospital daily, follow a strict diet and take medication to guard against rejection of the new organs, said hospital spokeswoman Jane Meggitt.

"We're delighted with Stephen's progress and although there is still a long way to go, the signs are very encouraging," said Calne.

"It was a difficult operation. We had not appreciated that he would need a new kidney, as well as a digestive tract. But the organs were all from a single donor, so we were able to adjust," Friend said.

Mom runs after snatching on sons

POMONA, Calif. (AP) — Marilyn Ross is on the run for doing the right thing, she says — turning her two sons in for murder.

The 37-year-old mother is in hiding because her teen-agers' gang friends have threatened to "get her" if she testifies, said sheriff's Sgt. Rey Verdugo.

"I couldn't live with the thought that they might kill again," Ross said from a hotel room, where the Los Angeles Times interviewed her for a story Thursday.

The boys, 15 and 16, are accused of shooting a convenience store clerk during a Feb. 15 robbery in Azusa. Ross said her eldest son, Nicholas, told her about the killing a week later.

"From the moment he said it to me, I knew what I had to do," she said.

Nicholas faces trial as an adult and up to life in prison if convicted. He has pleaded innocent. A preliminary hearing was set July 18.

Exhibit reveals cosmetic secrets of the ancients

NIJMEGEN, Netherlands (AP) — Ever wonder what perfume Delilah might have used when she tricked Samson into getting a haircut, or what Cleopatra might have dabbed behind her ears to drive Marc Antony wild?

Such cosmetic secrets of the ancients will be revealed at the Open Air Biblical Museum in an exhibit starting Sunday on the history of perfume.

On show will be 15 recreated perfumes from ancient cultures, as well as incense burners and sacrificial altars.

"We can't be sure they are exactly the same smells because the recipes were kept close secrets in those days, just like now," museum director Jan van Laarhoven said Friday.

Museum researchers combed through the Old and New Testaments for tips on ancient oil-based perfumes. Common ingredients were basil, cinnamon and myrrh, van Laarhoven said.

Boy saves dog from being lunch

BREMERTON, Wash. (AP) — Mitzi, a 10-year-old miniature dachshund, was strolling along a beach near her home when a bald eagle mistook her for lunch.

Thanks to 12-year-old Alex Ball's quick reflexes, Mitzi survived.

The eagle had swooped from its nest in Wynn Jones Park and sunk its claws into the dog's back when her yipping alerted Alex. He threw rocks at the eagle, which dropped Mitzi and flew off.

Dog owner Isabel Mays rushed her to the vet where she received 40 stitches.

Now Mitzi is kept on a tight rein.

"She walks at the end of the leash with a long face," Mays said. "She's a puppy dog that's used to being free. But I don't want any eagle to take her away."

Pavement burns toddler

CHANDLER, Ariz. (AP) — A toddler suffered second-degree burns when she stumbled and fell on hot pavement in 110-degree heat.

"It peeled the skin right off," Fire Capt. Roger Vigil said Thursday. "I felt the sidewalk and it was like, wow."

He said 15-month-old Irma Johnson fell outside while playing with a friend and couldn't get back to her feet quickly enough to avoid being burned on her arms, hands and right leg. Her mother was inside their apartment.

Vigil could not estimate how hot the pavement was.

Rushton, Wheeler ace holes at Munny course

TWIN FALLS — Two holes in-one were scored at Twin Falls Municipal Golf Course Thursday afternoon.

Rod Rushton, watched by Gary Baum, Orville Kemper Jr. and Bryan Powless, used an 8-iron to ace the par three 152-yard sixth hole.

Jody Wheeler scores his first ace on the par three, 150-yard 14th hole with a 7-iron. Witnesses were Jeff Jansson, Kip Perkins and Rich Cook.

Next weekend tournaments still have a few openings

TWIN FALLS — A few places still remain open in the three-day, three-golf course golf tournament set for Twin Falls Munny, Canyon Springs and Jerome County Club in another weekend.

The men and women's teams will play best ball all three days while the couples division will play chipman, best ball and scramble. A third of the field will play at each course each day.

Entries is $100 per team. Twin Falls and Canyon Springs will receive entries.

Salt Lake City draws 2nd spot for Games presentation

LAUSANNE, Switzerland — Salt Lake City on Friday drew the No. 2 position in the lineup for making presentations to host the 2002 Winter Games.

"It's a great position," said Anita De-France, the U.S. member on the IOC executive board. Salt Lake City will be among 10 candidates making pitches to the International Olympic Committee on Jan. 24.

Nets expect to name new coach by early this week

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Five people are still in the running to replace Chuck Daly as coach of the New Jersey Nets and one of them will probably get the job early next week, general manager Willis Reed said Friday.

The shortlist includes Brendan Stryker and Paul Silas, two of Daly's assistants, as well as Indiana assistant Bill Blair, Orlando assistant Bob Hill and Howard University coach Butch Beard.

Agassi shines on cloudy day at Wimbledon

The Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — Andre Agassi chased down a final backhand at the start of a cloudburst and stopped the torrent of upsets at Wimbledon — at least for a day.

"That was perfect," Agassi said after his winner capped a comeback from 5-2 down in the third-set tiebreaker and gave him a 6-4, 6-3, 7-6 (7-5) victory Friday over Aaron Krickstein. "I can't tell you how much I wanted to make that last backhand."

Agassi and everyone else knew that point would have been the last one of the night, no matter how it turned out. The referee was standing at the entrance to Centre Court, ready to give the order to pull out the tarpaulin. If Agassi had lost the point, the tiebreaker would have gone to 6-6 and the conclusion would have been put off until today.

"They had the court covered before I even had my stuff in the bag," said Agassi, who reached the fourth round in his bid to regain the title he won in 1992.

At the same moment he won, defending champion Pete Sampras was romping over Chuck Adams, 6-1, 5-1. Their match was suspended for the night.

After three straight days of upsets that claimed Steffi Graf, Michael Stich, Stefan Edberg and Jim Courier, things returned to normal.

Todd Martin, the No. 6 seed, served 29 aces to beat Martin Damm, 6-2, 6-7 (7-1), 4-6, 6-3, 11-9, and set up a meeting next week with Agassi.

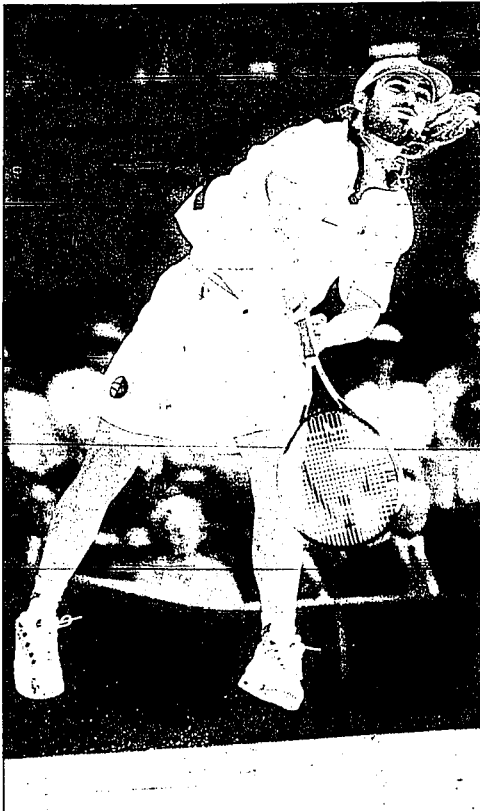

French Open champion Sergi Bruguera, No. 8, beat Jean-Philippe Fleurian 7-6 (7-4), 6-4, 2-6, 7-5, to advance to the fourth round against former French champ and No. 10 seed Michael Chang, a 7-6 (7-4), 6-4, 6-2 winner over Grant Connell.

Kenneth Carlsen fell ill and defaulted a day after upsetting Edberg. Carlsen began vomiting during his third-round match with Jonas Bjorkman of Sweden and withdrew while trailing 6-4, 6-4, 1-0.

"It's a huge disappointment for me," Carlsen said. "I was playing well and beat the No. 3 seed here, the first time I beat a top 10 guy."

The only seeded man to lose was No. 15 Yevgeny Kafelnikov, who succumbed to 31 aces by Daniel Vacek and went out 4-6, 7-5, 6-4, 3-6, 6-4.

In women's matches, Lori McNeil, who topped Graf in the first round, reached the fourth round with a 6-2, 6-4 victory over Kristie Boogert. McNeil will play another unseeded player, Florencia Labat, who beat Pam Shriver 6-4, 4-6, 6-2.

Andre Agassi serves to Aaron Krickstein during their third-round singles match Friday on Wimbledon's Centre Court. Agassi, a former champion, won 6-4, 6-3, 7-6 (7-5).

No. 9 Lindsay Davenport, playing in only her second Wimbledon, beat Barbara Rittner of Germany, 6-4, 3-6, 6-1. Next up for Davenport is Gabriela Sabatini, No. 10, who beat Meredith McGrath 6-4, 6-1.

The 102-degree midday heat took a toll more on the fans than the players, as more than 100 spectators fainted and another 150 were treated for heat exhaustion.

Though sweltering, it had been a beautiful day until the sky darkened quickly and the shower hit in the third set of Agassi's match. The last thing Agassi wanted was to lose the tiebreaker and have to complete

Fight gives Duran shot at 5th title

The Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — Marvelous Marvin Hagler is an actor living in Italy.

Sugar Ray Leonard is a would-be actor living in California.

About 10½ years after he fought Hagler, 14 years after he fought Leonard, 27 years after he turned pro, Roberto Duran still is a fighter at age 43.

"I'm not really surprised he's still fighting," Leonard said. "With Duran, what's the alternative. He's always searching for the rainbow, even though he's famous. I think certain guys are meant to do that."

Duran says he might stop after another year, but he says it with a grin. Retirement remains a laughing matter to him.

Vinny Pazienza would like to make retirement a reality for Duran, and a Pazienza victory today in their 12-round super middleweight match would seriously nudge the Panamanian in that direction.

"I think Duran is going to give his best effort, but it's his last hurrah," the 31-year-old Pazienza said. "I'm going to put him out of his misery."

"This is an important fight for me," Duran said. "I want to win a fifth world title. I want people to remember Roberto Duran when he retires, and I always want to be a part of boxing history."

The fight at the MGM Grand is for the International Boxing Council's super middleweight title, a championship that doesn't carry much weight with boxing people.

But a victory might put Duran in line for a few good paydays and a shot at a more recognizable championship.

Pazienza was a 2-1 favorite in the feature match of a pay-per-view tripechler beginning at 7 p.m. MDT.

Tony Lopez, a former junior lightweight and lightweight champion, will box Greg Haugen, a former lightweight champion, in a 10-round junior welterweight bout. Undeclared Jorge Luis Gonzalez, a former amateur star in Cuba, will fight Mike Evans in a 10-round heavyweight match.

Duran perhaps was the most dominant fighter of the 1970s, when he was the world lightweight champion for seven years.

He opened the 1980s by upsetting Leonard for the WBC welterweight championship, but quit in the eighth round of their rematch. He has had a checkered career ever since, although he did win the WBC junior middleweight and WBA middleweight titles.

"Once a quitter, always a quitter," is a taunt Pazienza has thrown at Duran in their bitter battle of words.

"I'm going to break your neck again," Duran has told Pazienza, who broke his neck in an auto crash Nov. 12, 1992.

It will be Pazienza's seventh fight since the injury. Pazienza, a former IBF lightweight and WBA junior middleweight champion, is 37-5 with 27 knockouts in his career.

Phillies give ex-Major Leaguer another chance

The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Fernando Valenzuela, who left the majors this season to pitch in Mexico, returned to the big leagues Friday when he signed with the Philadelphia Phillies.

Valenzuela, 33, will report to the Phillies on Monday, general manager Lee Thomas said. The left-hander was 10-3 this year for the Jalisco Cowboys of the Mexican League.

Valenzuela was 8-10 with a 4.94 ERA in 31 starts for Baltimore last season. He was 149-128 with a 3.45 ERA in a 13-year career that started in 1981, when he won the Cy Young Award and rookie of the year honors with Los Angeles.

Valenzuela

As of June 21, Valenzuela had a 2.70 ERA in 16 starts for Jalisco. He had eight complete games. He also recently pitched one scoreless inning in a game in San Antonio between the Mexican League all-stars and the Texas League all-stars.

Thomas said the Phillies were desperate for pitching help and Valenzuela was "worth the gamble."

"There aren't a lot of pitchers out there who can help your ballclub," he said. "With the problems we have in the rotation, we think this guy can help us."

Valenzuela, who was to pitch five innings in Mexico Friday night, will make his first Phillies' start Tuesday against Florida and will go again Sunday in Los Angeles against the Dodgers.

"We've had scouts talk about him and watch him," Thomas said. "Everybody knows how Valenzuela pitches. He has to have control."

Manager Jim Fregosi declined to say which of the replacement starters the Phillies have been using — Shawn Boskie, Bobby Munoz, Mike Williams and David West — would be dropped from the rotation.

"If he's going in, somebody's going out," Fregosi said. "When he arrives, we'll explain everything."

Known for his trademark eyes-to-the-sky delivery, Valenzuela pitched with the Dodgers, Orioles and California Angels.

To make room for Valenzuela on the 40-man roster, the Phillies designated Bob Wells of their Scranton-Wilkes-Barre farm team for assignment.

For U.S. team on Sunday — a tie better than a win

The Associated Press

MISSION VIEJO, Calif. — U.S. players realize the importance of Sunday's game against Romania: A tie clinches advancement for the first time since 1930 and means they'll avoid Brazil or Germany in the second round.

"If you play Brazil or Germany, chances are you'll be knocked out," midfielder Tab Ramos said after practice Thursday.

Ramos, who serves in the informal role of team mathematician, filled his room with World Cup charts four years ago. Today, plotting out all the possibilities. On Thursday, he reduced everything to a small piece of paper that folded neatly into the pocket of his red shorts.

"We almost can qualify without playing," U.S. coach Bora Milutinovic said.

If the United States wins Sunday, it will either finish first or second in Group A, depending on how Switzerland does against Colombia. A tie means the Americans will finish no worse than second. A loss means the possibility of finishing third and playing one of soccer's powers. It also means the Americans might not know their site and opponent until next Thursday.

"The important thing is to be in," Milutinovic said.

Missie McGeorge prepares to hit her tee shot on the 15th hole of the ShopRite LPGA Classic Friday. In Somers Point, N.J. The Dallas golfer leads the field at 5 under par.

McGeorge points to putter for hot round

SOMERS POINT, N.J. (AP) — Missie McGeorge shot a 5-under-par 66 on Friday to take a one-stroke lead over eight golfers after the opening round of the $500,000 ShopRite LPGA Classic.

McGeorge led a tournament-record 33 players who came in under par at the 6,235-yard, par-71 Greater Bay Country Club course. McGeorge, who started her round on the back nine, was 2-under after four holes, bogeyed No. 14, then dropped a 5-funter for birdie on No. 17 to make the turn at 33. She birdied Nos. 3, 4 and 9 on the front side to complete her 66.

"I felt like my putter was with me," she said. "I hit a lot of good shots when I had to save par and made the birdies when I needed to."

McGeorge's lead wasn't assured until late in the afternoon, when Nancy Harvey bogeyed the 18th to ship back to 67. It was only the second bogey of the day for Harvey.

Harvey birdied Nos. 2, 4, 10 and 12 to get to 5-under. She slipped on No. 6 before recovering on No. 8 to get back to 5-under. Harvey seemed to be headed for a tie with McGeorge but missed a six-foot putt to save par on the par-5 18th.

Defending champion Shelley Hamlin, playing what she called "my course," started out strong on the front nine but double-bogeyed the par-4 15th and ended up in the group at 67.

Betsy King, who needs just one win for 30 victories and automatic qualification into the LPGA Hall of Fame, also finished the day at 4-under.

Admission costs could keep UNLV out of WAC

LAS VEGAS (AP) — UNLV — faced with a $100 million deficit — may balk at joining the Western Athletic Conference because of a $600,000 admission fee.

UNLV interim president Kenny Guinn told university regents on Thursday that the invitation to join the WAC is "a wonderful opportunity."

But he said the school just doesn't have the admission fee. He said the only hope is that UNLV and five other schools involved can get the conference to lower or drop its demands.

The regents voted to approve admission to the league on the condition that the conference drop the fee.

UNLV, San Jose State, Rice, Texas Christian, Southern Methodist and Tulsa were invited to join the WAC last April. The expanded conference was to be in effect for the 1996 football season.

Regent Shelley Berkley said she was unhappy with the fee.

"It sounds like highway robbery to me," Berkley said. "I'm not sure I want to deal with a conference that starts off this way."

Guinn said UNLV has until Aug. 1 to tell the WAC whether it will accept the conditions and join the conference.

The Las Vegas school, a member of the Big West Conference, had been looking forward to joining the WAC and the opportunity for increased exposure for its football program, more bowl opportunities, and more revenues.

Athletic Director Jim Weaver said he and the other five schools looked to the WAC's demands on June 10 following a meeting of the conference directors.

Germans look for a spark

CHICAGO (AP) — German coach Bertie Vogts is thundering. His players are pointing accusing fingers at each other.

The temperature is certainly rising in the camp of the World Cup champion.

Vogts thinks hotter tempers and some excitement may be good for the German team, which has failed to dominate in its first two games, even though it collected four points and is virtually assured of advancing to the second round.

After giving them 24 hours off following Tuesday's 1-1 tie against Spain, Vogts called his players together for a stormy meeting.

"I told them I was happy with the four points, but not with the spirit-less performances," said Vogts, whose team edged Bolivia 1-0 in the World Cup opener. "I want more from every player. I was very clear about that."

The team watched a videotape of the game against Spain and then had a discussion, using "locker-room language," captain Lothar Matthaus said.

"It was a nice discussion. I told them what I didn't like, the players themselves talked about their mistakes. I was loud. It was like a thunderstorm," Vogts said.

"It was a thunderstorm without rain," Matthaus said.

"The players are unhappy with their performance and that's positive," Vogts said.

Stockton Jr. leads Hartford while ...

CROMWELL, Conn. (AP) — Dave Stockton Jr. shares more than just his name with his golfing father. Even though they were separated by several hundred miles, the Stocktons junior and senior were mirror images on Friday. Each shot 66 for the second day in a row and forged into the lead in their respective PGA tournaments.

Stockton Sr. built a three-stroke lead in the Seniors Championship in Dearborn, Mich., while Stockton Jr. took a one-shot lead in the Greater Hartford Open.

The younger Stockton is trying to win the same tournament his father won 20 years ago.

"It would feel real, special to win the same tournament my dad won when it's not in the same town," Dave Jr. said Friday after a round featuring five birdies and one bogey put him at 8-under-par 132 for two rounds.

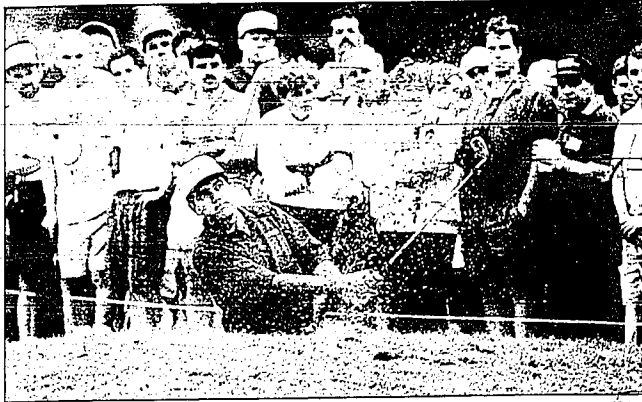

Stockton's father won the GHO in 1974 when it was held in nearby Wethersfield.

"I can't be thinking about Junior with a course this tough," the elder Stockton said after his 6-under-par 66 round. But he did betray his excitement by hanging around the press room until he got the word his son was leading at Hartford.

Dave Jr., a stroke ahead of David Frost, said he's been calling his father over the past couple days for advice.

"I told him some of the funny things I was doing and he gave me some tips," said the 25-year-old Stockton, who used the caddy for his father at the GHO. "He's been my teacher all my life."

Frost, who shot a 68 for 133 and sole possession of second, was 7-under after 12 holes and had a chance to tie Stockton for the lead. But a double bogey dropped him back.

David Frost blasts a shot from the sand trap next to the 7th green during the Greater Hartford Open in Cromwell, Conn. Frost is one shot off the pace set by Dave Stockton Jr.

"I don't know what I was thinking," Frost said. "Those things shouldn't happen when you're in contention."

Five golfers were at 134, including Greg Norman, who shot a bogey-free 65. Also at 6-under were David Toms, Ted Tryba, Wayne Levi and Mike Reid.

Tryba was the only other golfer to reach 8-under on Friday when he eagled No. 13 but he fell back with a double bogey four holes later.

At 135 were Doug Tsewell and Kenny Perry, and the group at 136 featured John Daly and Fuzzy Zoeller, who tied a course record with a 64.

Rain fell off and on throughout the day, changing conditions over the 6,820-yard Tournament Players Club at River Highlands significantly from the first round, which was played under sunny skies. The round was not delayed.

Stockton, in his first year on the PGA Tour, has missed the cut in 16 tournaments and hasn't placed higher than 30th in the other six. Last year, he earned $64,214 to place 23rd on the Nike Tour.

Twenty years ago in Wethersfield,

Stockton Sr. shot 65 over the first two rounds of the GHO on the way to a four-stroke victory over Ray Floyd.

If Dave Jr. does win the GHO, the Stocktons would join the Haeffners and Kirkwoods as the only father-and-son teams with wins on the PGA Tour.

Vance Haeffner won the 1981 Walt Disney World Team Championship and father Clayton won five PGA titles. Joe Kirkwood Jr. won the 1950 Ozark Open and the 1951 Blue Ribbon Open. His father won several tournaments in the 1920s and 1930s, including the 1933 Canadian Open.

... Dad surges into top spot at Seniors

DEARBORN, Mich. (AP) — Friday was quite a day for the Stockton family.

Dave Stockton fired his second straight 6-under-par 66 Friday to build a three-stroke lead midway through the Senior Players Championship at the TPC of Michigan.

Meanwhile, Dave Stockton Jr., a rookie on the PGA Tour, fired his second straight 66 to lead the field by a stroke in the Greater Hartford Open.

"I called junior this morning and some of the TV guys told me how he was doing," said the visibly proud senior Stockton. "But I couldn't think about him while I was playing, not on this course."

Steady rain and varying winds made the TPC more challenging and pushed scores a bit higher than Thursday when 43 golfers broke par.

Stockton, at 12-under 132 for the tournament, holds a three-stroke lead over Lee Trevino, who shot a 69 for a two-day total of 135.

At 8-under 136 were first-day leader Tom Weiskopf, who had a 71 on Friday, Jim Albuz, who shot 69, and Harold Henning, who had a 67.

Isao Aoki shot 70 and Bob

Murphy a 68 to complete 36 holes at 7-under.

Mike Hill, who started the day one stroke behind Weiskopf, suffered back spasms on the back nine Friday and finished with a 4-over 76. He's at 142.

Raymond Floyd and Jack Nicklaus remained in the hunt at 140 and 140, despite missing several close-range birdie putts, finished with a 68. Nicklaus was even-par 72.

Arnold Palmer, with a 76, was at 149 and Gary Player was at 143 after 72.

"It was a rough day," said Stockton, who has shot eight straight sub-70 rounds. "You had to be very careful with your iron shots. Really, we're very lucky to be able to play today. There was water everywhere."

Senior rules allow players to lift, clean and place the ball in wet conditions, but Stockton didn't think that helped keep scores down.

"We had lift, clean and place in Atlanta (two weeks ago) and I shot 64-63 on the days we didn't have it and 67-69 on the days we did have it. It doesn't make that much difference."

Trevino agreed.

"It was still tough to find a good lie," he said. "There was casual water everywhere. You still had to deal with a lot of water."

The greens were adversely affected, Trevino added.

"When the greens get that soft, it makes it real tough because a dying ball will roll away from the cup," he said. "The cup will rise slightly, so you have to really pop it in there."

The greens exacted a huge toll on Weiskopf, who missed short birdie putts on the first five holes and managed only one birdie all day.

"I played better tee to green today than yesterday, but I couldn't make my putts," he said. "Who knows why you make putts?"

"One day and you don't the next? I'm not frustrated because I accept my position. I put myself in this position. If I play this well all week, I'll be very happy."

Stockton, as has been his trademark through the years, mastered the greens. He used just 27 putts.

"As good as I'm putting, I feel like I can pretty much run the table," he said. "I'm not surprised when I make a putt from anywhere. I'm surprised when I miss. I just think that, mentally, I am a better putter than most people."

The rollercoaster round of the day belonged to Henning. The South African jumped onto the leader board with a 5-under 31 after nine holes at 8-under for the tourney.

He took the lead at 10-under with six holes to play, only to fall back with a triple bogey. Henning, who started his round on the back nine, put his drive on No. 5 into a creek and then made matters worse by three-putting when he finally got on the green.

"All the good work I did was undone in a matter of seconds," he said. "I only made one birdie the rest of the way, so I never did fully recover from it. Still, I'm in contention and I haven't been there in quite a while."

Stockton lingered around the press room after his round to get the latest word on his dad's day at Hartford.

When he was told that Junior had the second-round lead, he said,

"How about that?"

The Stocktons could become the only father-son duo to win PGA tournaments in the same week and also the first to win the same tournament.

Blackman wants to be a Mav

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Rolando Blackman, whose NBA career appears near an end, says he likes the thought of returning to the Dallas Mavericks for what probably would be his last year as a player.

The Mavericks traded Blackman, still their leading career scorer, to the New York Knicks after the 1991-92 season. But Blackman didn't play for New York in its seven-game NBA Final series against the Houston Rockets — an indication the Knicks won't invite him back in the fall.

The Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported Friday that Mavs general manager Norm Sonju already has made overtures to Blackman's agent, George Andrews, about having him rejoin the team as a radio analyst in the coming season if Blackman decides to retire.

"I want to play one more year, and it would be great to finish my career where it started," Blackman said Thursday. "I'm not ruling out anything at this point. But I have to sit down with my family and sit down with the Knicks to see where things stand."

Blackman was a first-round draft choice of the Mavericks in 1981, the club's second season.

Johnson sees little future with Rockies

DENVER (AP) — Howard Johnson is not happy, and not likely to improve his spirits anytime soon.

Johnson hasn't started a game for the Colorado Rockies since June 16, and his future doesn't look any better. Outfielder Ellis Burks is close to returning from the disabled list, and Eric Young has been swinging a hot bat in left field.

That means even less playing time for Johnson, which isn't sitting well with him as he continues to sit on the bench. "The situation we're in right now isn't right for me," Johnson said. "I don't see anything positive that can come out of it. As it is right now, I'm just excess baggage."

Rockies manager Don Baylor said center fielder Mike Kingery (338, two HRs, 21 RBIs) will play left field against right-handers when Burks returns. And he said the possibility of a players strike makes the first half of the season too important to let Johnson work his way out of a slump.

Falwell risks reputation on Clinton smear

It is no secret that President Clinton and first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton have enemies and that they are viciously attacking them at every turn.

But now Jerry Falwell, the founder of the Moral Majority and the chief preacher on the syndicated "Old Time Gospel Hour," has gone beyond all previous attempts to discredit the president and his wife. Further, his motive for this vile attack may not be entirely religious but, rather, political and financial.

Falwell is marketing a video that alleges

Clark Morphew

that Bill Clinton arranged the murders of people who were investigating his private life, that he hired or coerced people into making planes crash and that his people broke into enemies' houses and set some on fire.

Most of the charges on the video are made by three people: Gary Parks, who has publicly declared himself an enemy of the president; Paula Corbin Jones, who has filed a lawsuit charging that the president made unwanted sexual advances toward her while he was governor of Arkansas; and Larry Nichols, a former Arkansas state employee who says on the video that Clinton had a hand in "countless murders."

Parks alleges, without offering proof, that his own father was murdered by Clinton's people because he was keeping a file on Bill Clinton that documented sexual liaisons as far back as 1982. Parks says that if he could locate the file, Clinton would no longer be president.

But the file allegedly was stolen, or perhaps it never existed. Parks never offers proof of these charges, and that is also true of the other allegations. The video purports to tell the truth but then offers no evidence to help the viewer believe.

According to the Religious News Service, Falwell admitted on national television that he has no independent evidence to back his charges. Falwell also said that he "not making the charges but simply publicizing charges made by others."

That, of course, amounts to gossip and is a clear violation of the eighth commandment, "Thou shalt not bear false witness against your neighbor." Falwell knows his Bible and understands exactly what he is doing. That he would risk his clean reputation on such a sleazy piece of work is truly astounding. Something else must be at work here.

Some say Falwell is simply trying to raise money for Liberty University and hopes the video will be purchased — at $43 a tape — by thousands of Clinton detractors. Falwell has suspended his "Old Time Gospel Hour" on some cable stations to run an infomercial promoting the tape.

It's hard to believe that the television evangelist is so desperate for money that he would risk losing fringe listeners who might admire the president. According to a news report in the News and Advance — a daily newspaper in Lynchburg, where Falwell is headquartered — Falwell is facing debt restructuring and a $7.5 million shortfall.

But one has to ask, exactly how much is a reputation worth? Would Falwell throw it all away if he could wipe out his debts? I doubt that he would if he were operating in a rational way. But there is a small of desperation hooked to this enterprise that makes it all the more sad.

Falwell is not the only conservative Christian making accusations against the president. Pat Robertson, Rush Limbaugh and many others are making relentless attacks on the Clinton administration. But Falwell's campaign is the most insidious, the most bizarre and the most sinful.

What does the Bible say about this kind of practice, repeating charges against a person? It says, before you repeat charges, you find the proof, and if there is none, then you say nothing. Further, rather than encouraging people to make charges, you ask them to stop their assaults until they can find proof.

I honestly never thought I would be encouraging Christians to act in a biblical way toward the president of the United States, but I am. And I need to add a warning that these kinds of dirty tricks are someday going to backfire.

Musician in tune with purpose

Volunteer keyboard player says appreciation is payment enough

By H. R. Weixel
Times-News correspondent

JEROME — A circuit-riding piano player makes 'hef rounds in the Magic Valley, tickling the ivories to the glory of God.

Zora Fansler, a Jerome businesswoman, says, "There's such a need — I just do what has to be done," as she travels from Jerome to Wendell to Shoshone and on to the Hagerman Valley. She plays the piano, organ and keyboard for church services, senior centers and care homes.

"I'm not a Liberator by any means, not a professional at all," Fansler said. "I just know somebody has to be there to play, so I go."

Fansler is a member of St. Paul's Lutheran Church in Jerome, where she plays for morning worship services once a month. She gets paid for this job. She plays at all the other places on a volunteer basis.

"The smiles and to see people perk up when they hear music is enough pay for me," she said.

A typical Sunday will find Fansler at her Jerome church in the morning, then at the Creekside Care Home and St. Benedict's Long-term Care Unit in the afternoon. At about 6:30 p.m., she will head for the Wendell Lutheran Church and its Sunday evening worship hour.

On Wednesday afternoons, Fansler plays piano at several Holly Care homes around Jerome.

A few times a month, she accompanies the Idaho Old Time Fiddlers at gigs throughout the Magic Valley. Occasionally, she accompanies the Fiddlers at the Gooding Green Acres convalescent home and at Gooding's senior housing center. She plays backup keyboard for the Fiddlers at the Hagerman, Wendell, Shoshone and Jerome senior centers.

Fansler is also part of a trio of musicians who have banded together for special musical presentations. Fiddler Loretta Brant, guitar player Christine Kerner and Fansler on keyboard or piano make up the trio.

ANDY ARENZ/The Times-News

Zora Fansler lifts spirits with the piano music she provides at Magic Valley churches and care centers.

Fansler said she got started playing the piano when her parents had her take lessons as a kid. She played for church worship services at her home in Round Mountain, Nev., where she attended an interdenominational church. The congregation did not have a pianist.

"The pastor begged me to play. He said if I could even pluck out a melody it would be good enough," Fansler said. "So I did the best I could and played for five years."

The avocation stuck. Fansler is currently studying under Phyllis Van Nest, a Twin Falls piano and organ instructor.

Fansler plays all kinds of music, specializing in gospel, country and old-time secular. When she's not on duty at the keyboard, she stays busy as owner and operator of two businesses in Jerome.

A cosmetologist, Fansler works full-time in her Zora's Hair Fashions shop. In her "spare time," she collects antiques to stock her Few Seconds More antique shop. "I have as much fun as anybody," Fansler said, with a big smile. It's fun combined with service.

Football star plans world's 1st Bible-based theme park

By Dan Chapman
Knight-Ridder News Service

FORT MILL, S.C. — Welcome to Zoeland, the world's only Bible-based theme park.

Come ride "Heaven & Hell," a 12-minute roller coaster journey through the Afterworld. Pass through the Gates of Glory. Listen to the Angelic Choir.

Watch out: The 100-foot descent into hell approaches.

DEPART FROM ME YOU WORKERS OF INIQUITY! The stentorian voice of God.

Ride through the Lake of Fire. Breathe deep the sulfurous stench of decay. Watch the devil perform their dance of the dead.

Had enough? "Hopefully," says Rick Joyner, who is part of the group hoping to develop Zoeland, "people will leave this exhibit thinking, 'Hey, where do I want to go?'"

To Zoeland, at least in this life. Zoeland backers, led by professional football player Reggie White, hope to open the theme park by late 1996. They talk of a $100 million investment and 1,300-plus jobs. The group is considering three sites: White's home town of Knoxville, Tenn.; Mobile, Ala.; and New Heritage USA, at Fort Mill, formerly owned by television evangelist Jim Bakker.

But White envisions Zoeland — Zee basically means "life" in Greek — as much more than an amusement park with a religious bent.

It's touted as a tonic for inner-city ills; its name of profits eventually pumped into depressed urban areas. Thousands would work at Zoeland, learning business skills such as sales, accounting and management.

White was in Charlotte, N.C., earlier this month to kick off the city's chapter of the "Green Bay Packers" inner-city revitalization program. The Green Bay Packers' defensive lineman is the founder and president of the Society of Nehemiah, a religion-fueled, nonprofit corporation with chapters in Philadelphia, Miami, Mobile, Knoxville and elsewhere.

"My dream is to totally impact the inner cities of America to increase the quality of some peoples' lives," says White, an ordained minister. "We've got to begin to reinvest in our communities, to give people hope."

White believes Zoeland can become a cash cow to help fund some of his inner-city vision.

But where will the money come from to build Zoeland?

White won't say. Here are some possibilities:

White has put together a network of other athletes and entertainers to support the inner-city program; the group might invest in Zoeland, too.

And traditional funding sources — banks, limited partnerships, even state bond packages — may also be tapped.

Yet White's group may have an ace in the hole. Since a percentage of the profits will be pumped into community redevelopment, Zoeland may be eligible for state and federal economic development funds and low-interest loans. There are capital pools set aside for minority-specific projects.

Zoeland backers will also try to hook up corporate and church sponsors to finance individual rides and attractions. And Zoeland will also approach retail and restaurant chains, like Cracker Barrel Old Country Store Inc., to build and operate stores.

Zoeland's backers are eyeing 600 acres in the southeast corner of New Heritage, the former PTL/Jim Bakker property now owned by a Malaysian conglomerate. Preliminary discussions between White's people and New Heritage were held June 3 and 4. The group will come back with a detailed proposal in time for New Heritage's board meeting next month.

White's group commissioned a notebook-thick feasibility study. The Zoeland-Theme Park would have four main sections:

- Old Jerusalem — A life-size model of the ancient holy town with restaurants, an amphitheater and a shopping center.
- Mount Sinai — Rides galore, including Heaven & Hell and Exodus on Wheels, where you ride between the parting Red Sea. There are also gospel shows, restaurants, an arcade and more.
- The Church — Where the history of religions come alive. There will be attractions with names like Upper Room, Pentecostal Theater and Gethsemane Gardens.
- Play World — For the kids, there will be Bible Storyland, Puppet Palace and Thrill Rides.

O.J. Simpson seemed to be talkative and alert Wednesday when he appeared with his attorney Robert Shapiro for a hearing on defense motions.

Simpson is still a hero, but never will be a god

By Joy Thompson
Knight-Ridder News Service

Commentary

An idealistic public fades deep into a field of dreams. And, out of nowhere, brutal reality comes and intercepts its faith.

Once again, a hero cowers beneath the mantle of disgrace. And frail humanity is elevated to celebrity status.

The only positive thing that may come out of this mess — the trial of the former football star O.J. Simpson accused of murdering his ex-wife and her friend — is that the issue of wife-beating and domestic violence may be taken a lot more seriously. (Simpson's past track record in this area may be the most damning evidence against him.)

From a religious angle, one can look at the difference between an idol and a hero, and perhaps, in doing so, better deal with the shock of this event.

The Bible condemns idol worship — the elevation of things and people to godlike status — and with good reason. Our imaginations have an ageless tendency to bestow on certain men and women a divine-like aura. The result is a warped view of reality: Mere men and women become perfect. In them, there is no fault. There can be no wrong.

Maybe, that's where our society should be faulted — for making gods out of less glorious things.

It is not a sin to admire and be inspired by others. We need heroes. We need the examples they set. We need to know that people can overcome great obstacles — like the background of poverty that Simpson overcame. We need to know that they can score; they can win; they can set new records.

We need heroes. God knows we need them. The Bible is full of them.

There's Moses, the humble man who freed an entire nation of people from a brutal oppressor. He was a hero, but he also had a bad temper. And one angry outburst cost him entry into the land that God promised the very people he rescued.

There's Samson, a strong, powerful man who triumphed over the Philistines, longtime enemies of the Israelites. He was a hero, but he had an uncontrollable lust for

In humanism, morality becomes subjective

Lenin would revel in the America of today.

One of the primary goals of the Bolshevik revolution was the death of God in the hearts of men. Communism was a frontal assault against God. As intense an attack as it was, it failed in Russia and Eastern Europe. There, God is alive. This is evidenced in a massive movement to Christianity perhaps unprecedented in modern history.

However, what could not be accomplished overtly by Communism has been established covertly by humanism in the West. God is dead in the heart of the modern humanist. With the death of God, "revealed truth," dies also. Truth is now relative, subjective. Thus we hear statements like, "It works for you, that's great." Or phrases like "my reality" and "your reality" — as though there were no objective, transcendent reality.

What follows a denial of absolute truth is obvious: morality becomes subjective. Morality is no longer obedience to a higher law. Instead, it becomes a matter of "choice" rather than truth.

About Father Philip Nixon

Father Philip Nixon is the priest at the St. Ignatius of Antioch Orthodox Church. Nixon attended Biola University and did graduate work at Biola and Talbot Seminary. He was ordained to the Orthodox Priesthood in 1987.

The modern humanist proudly proclaims, "God is dead. There is no absolute truth." But modern relativistic philosophy is an exercise in the absurd for at least two reasons.

First, man can choose to believe God or oppose him. In no way can he "murder" or annihilate God. ("Why do the nations rage and the people imagine a vain thing?" Psalm 2:1)

Secondly, when modern man says, "There is no absolute truth," he contradicts himself. This itself is an absolute statement. Nevertheless, he continues on as if there is no accountability, devising his own "humanist morality," losing his conscience as he goes.

The most gruesome example of this "humanist morality" (ironically called) is the destruction of human life in the womb. In the name of "choice," true morality is denied. Yet, in this godless, immoral act, the true nature of the humanist philosophy is revealed. It is a philosophy which is anti-God and, therefore, at its root, violent and barbaric.

Abortion has been revealed by God to man to be a violent act of murder, and no amount of humanist white-washing will change the truth. This is the doctrine of the church and will remain so until the end.

The longing to know the truth lies within the heart of each person and is the soul of a nation. Like the unborn infant, this desire must be nurtured and given birth. However, our nation is in danger of losing its soul, if it has not already. To save ourselves, our children and grandchildren, each of us must decide to make it our primary life goal to know and live by the truth.

As Jesus Christ said, "You shall know the truth and the truth shall set you free."

Scientists virtually bring church to life

By Julianne Basinger
The Associated Press

RESEARCH TRIANGLE PARK, N.C. — As workers in Dresden, Germany, lay the first stones to rebuild a Baroque church destroyed in World War II, computer scientists here are creating a 3-D version of what the finished project will look like.

Using a virtual reality headset, viewers can see the blue doors of the church open to a view of the ornate ivory-and-gold altar and the organ that Johann Sebastian Bach played in 1736.

Light coming through the Protestant church's clear windows illuminates paintings of the Apostles in the inner dome, which virtual tourists can observe, much as if by pushing a button to "fly" up there.

IBM Germany hired the scientists at Research Triangle Institute to help create the virtual reality model in order to generate money to rebuild the actual Frauenkirche, or Church of Our Lady, said Robert Haak, special projects manager for IBM Germany. The rebuilding is expected to cost about $150 million.

Some critics have questioned the wisdom of spending such a large amount of money on the ruined church, which lies in the economically strapped former East Germany.

Yet Haak says most Dresden residents support the project. All but 10 percent of the money comes from private donations.

One could think it's more important to build apartments," Haak said in a telephone interview from his office in Stuttgart, Germany. "But the people of Dresden want this."

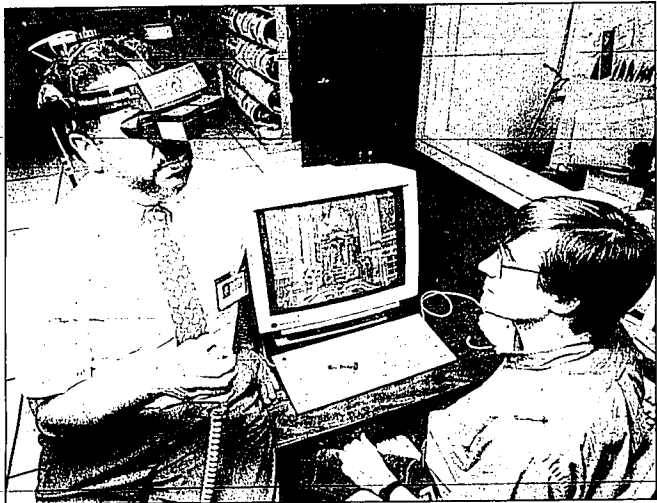

The foundation to rebuild the Frauenkirche, a private group made up mainly of Dresden residents, has been working since the late 1980s to generate support for the reconstruction.

IBM Germany offered its help in 1989, providing money, equipment and consultants, and workers last year began clearing rubble from the site. They expect to complete the project by 2006, the 800th anniversary of the city of Dresden, Haak said.

The original church, on the Elbe River, took about 10 years to build and was completed in 1742.

The church survived the Allied bombing that destroyed much of Dresden in February 1945, but toppled in the firestorm that immediately followed.

"It was a very elegant city," said

Scientist Jorgo Montoya, left, demonstrates at Research Triangle Park, N.C., the helmet and hand-held control which navigate through the virtual reality model of a Baroque church in Dresden, Germany. Scientist Steve Duncan watches scenes from the church on a computer screen.

Gerhard Weinberg, a professor specializing in World War II history at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

Weinberg said rebuilding the Dresden church has political and social significance for eastern Germany.

"It's the general sense of rebuilding religious life in a society in which religious life was tolerated but discouraged by the Communist regime for decades," he said.

The virtual reality model of the church met rave reviews in March, when it was unveiled at a computer trade show in Hannover, Germany. One person donned a special helmet and maneuvered a hand-held control to navigate the tour. For the demonstrations, the images then were projected onto a small theater screen viewed by people wearing 3-D glasses.

The scientists plan to set up a similar demonstration pavilion in Dresden in September, Haak said.

The church's interior is one of the most complex virtual worlds ever constructed, said Dale Rowe, director of RTI's Center for Digital Systems.

Three RTI computer scientists — Jorgo Montoya, Steve Duncan and Jim Chung — developed the virtual reality model of the church's interior from an animated model, similar to a computer-generated film, supplied by IBM.

A French computer graphics artist, Luc Genevieve, directed a team of artists who drew the church's interior, working from architectural plans, historical descriptions and prewar black-and-white photographs.

Haak said only one color photograph existed. Hitler in 1943 had ordered color photographs be taken, and one recently was found in Munich. The photo shows the church's inner dome, and Genevieve used it when depicting the painted Apostles.

IBM scientists in New York and the United Kingdom "did the calculations for the animated computer model.

The RTI scientists' task was to convert the animated model to a version that an individual could "walk through" in real time, Rowe said.

The animated model took 2½ hours to generate a single scene. To walk through the models in virtual reality, the researchers needed to generate 30 frames per second.

The complexity of the animated drawings complicated the project, Rowe said. The scientists developed a way to simplify the images by mimicking the focus of the human eye and narrowing the field of view. RTI also enlisted the help of a powerful graphics computer owned by Silicon Graphics, Inc. of Mountain View, Calif., which helped generate the dinosaurs in the film "Jurassic Park."

Haak said the RTI scientists are still working to increase the speed of the virtual reality church before the September demonstration in Dresden.

Missionaries

Three young men from the Magic Valley area have been called to serve two-year missions for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Elder Greg Starley, son of Grant and Sharon Starley of Twin Falls, will serve in the England/London South Mission. He will speak in sacrament meeting at 1:20 p.m. Sunday at the Twin Falls 14th Ward chapel on Caswell Avenue West and will enter the Mission Training Center in Provo, Utah, Wednesday.

Starley is an Eagle Scout and a 1993 graduate of Twin Falls High School, where he was active in sports and was a member of the National Honor Society. He attended Utah State University in Logan for one year, with a focus on pre-medicine.

Elder Brian L. Ward, son of Larry and Louise Ward of Burdett, will serve in the Mission St. Louis Mission.

He will speak in sacrament meeting at 11:45 a.m. Sunday at the Murtaugh LDS Church and will enter the MTC Wednesday.

Ward graduated from Murtaugh High School in 1993, where he was active in sports and was salutatorian of his senior class. He attended Ricks College in Rexburg for one year, where he was pursuing an art major.

Elder Justin Thompson, son of LaRon and Paula Thompson of Jerome, will serve in the Argentina Buenos Aires North Mission. He will speak in sacrament meeting at 8:30 a.m. Sunday at the Jerome 4th Ward chapel, 26 N. 100 E., and will enter the MTC July 6.

Thompson graduated from Jerome High School in 1993, where he participated in football, tennis and Junior Society. He recently completed one year at the LDS Business College in Salt Lake City.

The Times-News welcomes news of church missionaries. Send information to Ellen Thomson, The Times-News, P.O. Box 548, Twin Falls, ID 83303. Deadline is noon Thursday for publication on the Saturday religion page.

Letter

Natural science can't prove, disprove miracles

William Haffner, in his letter about science and religion (June 17), misses the point. Natural science can never disprove the existence of miracles. A miracle, by definition, is "unscientific"; otherwise, it would not be a miracle.

If a man with incurable cancer dies, we say that this is the "natural" result of the disease. It is "scientific" if the natural course has been followed. If, on the other hand, the same man is suddenly and completely cured, we would call this a miracle. The natural course has been altered in an unnatural or unscientific way. Those who believe in miracles would call this a supernatural (above nature) occurrence.

Many doctors and scientists have witnessed and documented miracles, usually in the form of miraculous cures. Mr. Haffner chooses not to believe them. You can say that he "failed" in that miracles cannot happen. His belief is not reached by scientific reasoning; it is founded on religious conviction.

Pope: Women should not try to be like men

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Women should not try to be like men and they should fight stereotypes by viewing them as objects, Pope John Paul II said Wednesday.

"Perfection for the woman isn't being like the man, in masculinizing herself to the point of losing her specific qualities as woman," the Pontiff said in his weekly remarks to a crowd of St. Peter's Square. "Her perfection ... is in being a woman, equal to man but different."

The pope spoke on women's issues two days after the Vatican indicated it is seeking to expand the roles of women in the Roman Catholic church as nuns and lay workers.

Feminists and liberal Catholics have attacked the pope for his insistence that the priesthood is reserved for men. The pope restated the prohibition against women priests in a letter to bishops last month.

women. And that lost him his strength and led to his disgraceful capture by the very people he used to defeat.

Then, there's David — the giant-slayer, the instant popular king, the man after God's own heart. He murdered an innocent man — one of his most loyal subjects — because he wanted the man's wife. As a result, he lost an infant son.

All-heretic — mon — but — men — nevertheless. They were not perfect. They were not invincible. They were not gods.

But despite their shortcomings, we remember them as heroes, because God used them to do heroic things. We remember them as heroes, because there were times in their lives that they scored, triumphed and beat the odds — and we aspire to be like them.

We remember them as heroes, and we can understand how they failed, because we, like them, are mere men and women who make mistakes — sometimes awful, horrible mistakes. And we, like them, need to be held accountable for all the things we do, whether good or bad.

O.J. Simpson is a hero. He did some great things in his life and inspired many people. O.J. Simpson is a man. He may have made some serious mistakes, and if the charges are true, he will have to answer for them.

The Simpson case is a reminder that the burden of perfection belongs to the divine. Heroes, on the other hand, are bound by their humanity.

Park

The feasibility study projects annual revenue of $157 million, based on a 36-week season and 3 million visitors. U.S. theme parks average between 1.5 and 3 million visitors a year.

The study says Zoeland can reap $66 million from ticket sales. That works out to $22 a ticket; nearby Paramount Carowinds charges $24.95.

Much of the rest of the money would come from food ($25 million), merchandise ($17.2 million) and arcade ($14 million).

It would cost $105 million annually to run the theme park six days a week. Salaries for the proposed 1,386 employees would cost $16.5 million.

New Heritage is within 2 miles of Paramount's Carowinds, just across the state border in North Carolina. Carowinds — a successful amusement park which appeals to many regardless of religion — certainly would make a formidable competitor.

Perhaps the biggest marketing impediment is New Heritage itself. Industry analysts say it's risky to build a religious-based theme park on the site of Jim Bakker's infamous religious empire.

"The stigma on this place could be a negative," White acknowledged in a 2 interview. He vowed, however, that Zoeland and the Society of Nehemiah will be above reproach. "Everything I do I will make sure I'm led by God. He gave me a vision. The question is: Do others believe in that vision?"

Former BYU head becomes Mormon apostle

By Peg McEntee
The Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — Elder Jeffrey R. Holland, a former president of Brigham Young University, was ordained Thursday as a member of the Mormon Church's Council of the Twelve Apostles.

Holland's ordination completes the reorganization of the faith's top leadership following President Ezra Taft Benson's death May 30 at age 91.

Benson was succeeded by Howard W. Hunter as prophet, seer and revelator of the 8.8 million-member worldwide faith.

Holland was ordained in the Salt Lake Temple during a meeting of the faith's governing First Presidency and the Council of the Twelve. He was a whitewind calling; he said Hunter summoned him to his office early Thursday and within hours performed the temple ordinances installing him.

"I wish to say to all of you who magnificently strong and deeply moving his counsel and guidance and blessing to me were," Holland said at a news conference.

The Council of the Twelve is the second tier of leadership, after the First Presidency, in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Holland said he did not yet know what his specific duties would be, but that as the youngest apostle at age 53, he would be willing to "take the most distant outpost ... and I will do that lovingly and willingly to protect any saint (apostle) who has already done all of that."

Hunter, 86, was senior apostle and ordained as president according to the church's system of succession. Hunter named Benson's counselors in the First Presidency, Gordon B. Hinckley and Thomas S. Monson, as his own counselors.

After his ordination, Hunter invited "those who have transgressed or been offended" back to the fold. He did not specify any of the high-profile scholars and feminists who have been excommunicated in the past year.

Hunter, without elaboration, said Hunter's invitation was "as basic to our apostolic mission as anything I know."

He also said that the denial of tenure to two outspoken professors at BYU in 1993 had no impact on the "magnificent academic freedom" at the university, which has been criticized by some faculty as repressive.

Holland said his wife, Patricia, would be at his side in all his travels and work.

"When one is called, the other is called as well," Mrs. Holland added.

Holland had been a member of the church's First Quorum of the Seventy since 1989, when he left church-owned BYU after nine years at its helm. He served in the presidency of the North America West Area and as assistant executive director of the church's Correlation Department.

He previously had been a regional representative, a counselor in three stake presidencies and a bishop in the church's all-male lay clergy. He

3 church heads go to Illinois to mark 150th anniversary of Smith's death

By Michael Hineley
Chicago Tribune

He proclaimed himself a prophet, saying he had received and translated revelations from God. He led devoted followers, some recruited from overseas, to his American promised land, where they could build their own kingdom of God on Earth. But his image was tarnished by reports of conjugal visits with many wives, including spouses of associates. Finally, before the government could bring him to justice on criminal charges, he was killed in a raid.

Smith was shot to death June 27, 1844, in Carthage, Ill., by a militia-mob that stormed the jail where he was being held. He had been charged with destruction of printing presses that exposed the practice of polygamy among his followers.

As much as that sounds like Branch Davidian leader David Koresh's rise and fall last year near Waco, Texas, it is not. Rather, it is a synopsis of the life and death of Joseph Smith, the founding president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Smith was shot to death June 27, 1844, in Carthage, Ill., by a militia-mob that stormed the jail where he was being held. He had been charged with destruction of printing presses that exposed the practice of polygamy among his followers. Some 15 miles from where he died, Smith and his followers had built their model city of Nauvoo, Ill. The centerpiece of its checkerboard pattern of lots and streets was their Mormon temple.

Lubavitchers consider selves lost after death

By Beth Silver
Chicago Tribune

With the death of their leader earlier this month, many Lubavitcher Hasidic Jews are asking where the ultra-orthodox sect of Judaism will go from here — or if it will even continue. Rabbi Menachem Schneerson, 92, who was considered by some followers to be the Messiah, died in Brooklyn, N.Y., after complications from a second stroke in March. In 44 years, the charismatic leader who is called "the Rebbe" by followers, had brought the organization to worldwide prominence. Under Schneerson, some 1,600 Lubavitcher social and educational institutions were built around the world. "Anyone that knows anything about the Rebbe and his being a giant in so many walks of life knows that there can be no one of the Rebbe's caliber to replace him. The Rebbe cannot have a successor," said Rabbi Daniel Moscovitz, regional director of the Lubavitch Chabad of Illinois. All Jews are required by the Torah to believe in the coming of the Messiah at any time. Any generation is the Moses of that generation, capable of becoming the Messiah. "Without a doubt, the Rebbe was the Moses of our generation," said Rabbi Yitzchak Wolf, dean of the Lubavitcher Chabad of Chicago. Seymour J. Abrams, Cheder Lubavitch Hebrew Day School in Skokie, "If we had merited it, the Rebbe who is the Moses of this generation would have been the Messiah to lead us to Israel to build the temple and usher in the Messianic era."

something that could happen at any time and that, the Rebbe said, is imminent. We continue to believe that," Abrams said. Now that the Rebbe has died, "We literally consider ourselves as orphans," Moscovitz said. But he explained that there are two types of orphans: one left destitute and the other with a "$500 million trust fund." The organization's wealth has been estimated at nearly $500 million. Also, Schneerson left 200 volumes of published works and opinions. It is with Schneerson's teachings that Moscovitz said the movement can thrive. In fact, Moscovitz said there may be no need for a new Rebbe because Schneerson's teachings were so complete. For now, the Worldwide Lubavitch Movement's administration will continue to run the organization, Moscovitz said. There are nearly 10,000 Schneerson followers in the Chicago area and an estimated 300,000 Lubavitchers worldwide. The leadership position has held a lot of political and economic power, said Kenneth Seeskin, former director of Northwestern University's Jewish Studies Program and a philosophy professor. Because Schneerson had no children, there is no male heir to lead the movement. One reason for new leadership is to create a committee of Lubavitcher rabbis, instead of having one Rebbe, or leader. But Seeskin said a committee approach could lead to the movement's demise. "When you have a charismatic figure of that type and you run it by committee, you run the risk of losing some of the enthusiasm," he said.

Nazarene church offers dedication

TWIN FALLS — The First Church of the Nazarene, 1231 Washington St. N., has planned a dedication service for its new facility for 3 p.m. Sunday at the church. Honored guests at the dedication will be the Rev. Ray L. Doane, former pastor now residing in Long Beach, Calif.; and James H. Diehl, general superintendent of the Church of the Nazarene. Diehl will speak at the service. After the service, the church will be open for tours.

Doane

Diehl

The Twin Falls Church of the Nazarene was organized in 1924 with 11 charter members. It began as a mission church, receiving support from the district budget. Members met in the Labor Hall, the Gossman Undertaking Parlor and the Goldfellow Hall over the Idaho Theater for about two years. In December, 1925, construction began on a building on the corner of Third Avenue and Third Street North. In 1939, the members of the Twin Falls church purchased two lots at Fourth Street and Sixth Avenue North and built a stucco church. They purchased 10 acres on North Washington Street in 1980.

Church youths present 'Joseph'

HAZELTON — The children and youth of the Valley Presbyterian Church will present the musical, "Joseph," during morning worship at

Amid spiritual awakening, new Russia rebuilds its old churches

By James P. Gallagher
Chicago Tribune

SHARYPVOVO, Russia — Even though it is far from finished, the handsome new church lends a touch of grace to this bleak Siberian city. White Gennady Montsyetov, local businessman, has donated time and money to spearhead the expensive building project, that's nothing compared to the price his parents paid for their religious beliefs during the Stalinist era. They each spent 17 years in Soviet prison camps. Though Montsyetov was only 3 months old when his parents were ripped from his life, he somehow clung to their beliefs. Now that communism has been brushed aside, he wants to help revive Russia's repressed Orthodox faith. "Russia needs a spiritual revival even more than it needs an economic revival," said Montsyetov, 57. "Without a spiritual revival, we won't be able to come to grips with our crime problem, official corruption and other moral blights."

So three years ago, his construction company began work on the Holy Trinity Temple, as the new church is called. Although the building lacks a roof and the interior is still bare, contributions are trickling in, and Montsyetov is confident the first services will be held next year. "I know young couples who have put off getting married because they want the ceremony to take place in the new church," he said. "And some parents are also waiting to have their babies baptized there."

In the five years since Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev lifted the restrictions on opening churches, thousands of new Russian Orthodox parishes have sprung into existence, church officials say. In the official said, there are now more than 14,000 parishes throughout the former Soviet Union, where religious activity was tightly controlled and sharply curtailed during 75 years of communist rule. Most of the parishioners are worshipping in restored old structures that managed to survive despite anti-religion campaigns that led to destruction, abandonment or misuse of churches as factories, warehouses, garages and barns.

In Moscow alone, church officials said, there are now 175 working parishes, and about 100 more churches are being restored at the expense of Orthodox believers — who contribute money, material and labor. But new churches are also being erected. The most noted is the beautiful Kazan Cathedral in Moscow's historic Red Square, which opened in 1993. And efforts are under way to replace the majestic Cathedral of Christ the Savior, erected in 1812 to celebrate Russia's victory over Napoleon. It was considered one of the most impressive churches in the capital before being razed in 1934; while anti-religious sentiments were running high.

Like Christ the Savior, the original Holy Trinity church in Sharypovo was also closed in 1934. But it wasn't razed until several years later, local residents recalled. The church was built in 1816 by Russian peasants, who had begun settling in this fertile part of eastern Siberia some two decades earlier.

"The first church was nothing like the new one," said Alexander

Komissaryenko, a journalist who specializes in Siberian history and folklore. "It was much smaller, much simpler."

"As in many small Russian communities, the church became the center of social as well as religious life. Old-timers still boast about a belfry in the 1920s."

"They still remember how he could play a podgornaya, a fast Siberian dance, on the bells," Komissaryenko said. "People still praise him as a real master on the bells."

Komissaryenko said he was surprised when Montsyetov launched the campaign to replace the lost church. "There was no big demand for a new one, as far as I could tell," he explained. "People had lost the habit of religion after so many decades without a church. And I'm still not convinced the new church will ever be finished. They still have to raise a lot more money."

The work that remains will be expensive — gilding the onion dome, outfitting the altar and covering the walls and ceilings with traditional religious paintings that reflect the history of the religion and the brief history of the local area.

That's a daunting prospect in a hard-hit area where coal miners and other workers wait months for paychecks — and often must settle for food and other consumer items in lieu of increasingly hard-to-come-by cash.

But Montsyetov, the grandson of a priest, has faith that the job will be completed — even if it takes longer than he expected.

"In Russia," he explained, "it was always a tradition that churches like this one would be worked on by three generations. The grandfather would get things started, and the grandson would put the finishing touches. If it takes that long for this church, that's OK."

American Buddhists hope film teaches

By Steve Rabey
Colorado Springs Gazette Telegraph

"Although many critics have given the film 'Little Buddha' low marks, American Buddhists have high hopes that the film will introduce more people to the Buddha's dharma, or teaching."

Produced by Academy Award-winning director Bernardo Bertolucci, who is a Buddhist, the movie interweaves a modern story about a Buddhist monk's search for the incarnation of a revered teacher with pieces of the life story of Siddhartha Gautama, the man who was called Buddha, or "the Enlightened One."

Critics have panned the film as poorly acted and heavy-handed.

Wall Street Journal critic Julie Salamon said watching the film made meditation look involving by comparison. The release of the film may signal a new high-water mark for public awareness of Buddhism in America.

"It's a source for people to be introduced to dharma," she says. "It's unfortunate that the film has received very bad reviews, because there is a lot in it that would have a very positive impact. A lot of serious attention was paid to the presentation of the dharma material."

Tworkov says the release of "Little Buddha" follows on the heels of positive portrayals of Buddhism in movies like "What's Love Got to Do With It," based on the life of Tina Turner, and "Heaven and Earth," Oliver Stone's film about Le Ly Hayslip, a Vietnamese Buddhist who survived rape, torture and the destruction of her village by French and American soldiers.

Wall Street firms lend hand to hearing-impaired investors

Chicago Tribune

When Christopher Sullivan started working as a technical analyst with the Wall Street giant Merrill Lynch in the late 1980s, he found that many of his friends began asking him for investment advice.

Under normal circumstances there would be nothing unusual about this — even financial writers sometimes get asked for their advice — but Sullivan's case has an unusual element: Sullivan, like many of those who sought his counsel, is deaf. "After seven or eight months, the word got around the deaf community that there was a guy on Wall Street," said Sullivan, now 47. "I was not a financial adviser, I was an analyst. But I began to think there had to be some kind of service."

Sullivan dug out figures on people who are deaf and hard of hearing, showing they number in the millions. Since no legal definition exists for deafness, let alone hard of hearing, the numbers lack precision.

Estimates based on the health survey by the National Center for Health Statistics, the only national survey concerning deafness, puts the overall figure at 20.4 million for the United States. But more than half that number have hearing difficulties only in one ear, meaning they can conduct financial affairs without special assistance.

At first, Sullivan referred deaf prospects to Stephen Hibcock, a deaf Merrill Lynch broker based in Columbia, Md., who at that time was the company's only deaf financial counselor. Hibcock, a pioneer in his own way, once told executives at Merrill Lynch that for deaf people "Wall Street is like the Berlin Wall."

With the support of Merrill Lynch, Sullivan began putting together a program aimed at investors who are deaf and hard of hearing. The program went into effect in January 1990, making Merrill Lynch the first major investment company to devise and implement a comprehensive system targeted at people who are deaf and hard of hearing.

Since then, the program has grown to include 84 volunteer brokers in 42 states. Four of the brokers are deaf themselves, including Hibcock. About 90 percent have firsthand experience with the deaf community, most often through a spouse or family member.

Sullivan has been full-time manager of the program, called Merrill Lynch's Deaf/Hard of Hearing Investor Services, based in Princeton, N.J. So far the program has attracted about 3,000 customers.

Some other brokerage firms offer services to hearing-impaired investors, typically an 800 number that they can access with a TDD, a telecommunications device for the deaf, a keyboard and screen linked to a telephone. It transmits words typed on the screen, and can be used with an intermediary operator who reads the message to a second party, who then responds to the operator, who types the message back to the original sender. If both broker and investor have machines, they can eliminate the operator and communicate directly.

Charles Schwab, Dean Witter and others offer toll-free numbers to connect a relay operator to assist in this kind of call.

Merrill Lynch's program appears to be the most comprehensive.

Last December, the National Association of the Physically Handicapped presented Merrill Lynch and Sullivan with separate Presidential Merit awards, its highest honor.

"This company is bending over backwards," said Clarence Averitt, president of the association. "I've presented only 12 of these awards since 1958. We're very careful about whom we give them to. They've recognized the deaf as a group, and can be successful in life and in business. There's dollars there."

Stocks take a tumble

Los Angeles Times

Stock and bond prices took another drubbing Friday after central banks worldwide failed in an effort to bolster the dollar against other currencies, thus enhancing fears that the Federal Reserve Board again will raise U.S. interest rates.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials tumbled 62.15 to 3,636.94 — its worst daily decline since losing 72.27 on March 30, and dropping the blue-chip average to its lowest level in six weeks. It was the average's fifth loss in six sessions, during which the industrials have skidded 174.40 points, or 4.5 percent. This week alone, the Dow Jones industrials suffered their worst pummeling since mid-October in 1989. Losers overall swamped gainers by nearly five to one on the New York Stock Exchange, but the session was not a rout. Big Board volume was a moderate 261 million shares, well below the average daily turnover so far this year.

In the credit markets, government bond prices skidded and their yields soared amid investors' expectations that the Federal Reserve will now try to prop up the dollar by raising U.S. interest rates for the fifth time this year.
