Skydivers take disabled on flights of adventure

By Maria Stafford
Times-News writer

BUHL – The flimsy metal door of the small plane swung open and a rush of cold air slapped the sky divers into action.

It was time for Dorothy Hill to brace herself for the 10,000-foot plummet toward the green and yellow patchwork farmland below.

She didn't say much as she shimmied to the edge and smiled at the cameraman perched on the strut of the wing, a camera attached to a helmet.

"Set, ready, GO!" yelled Brian Wallace, the jump master, who was attached to Hill from behind as he launched them into the void.

Hill, who said with a sly smile that she was 59, suffers from muscular dystrophy. She was among a dozen disabled people who parachuted into Buhl's municipal airport Saturday at the second annual FROG jump – the Friends of Recreation Organization Group's tandem skydiving event.

Though not restricted to disabled people, FROG was formed with the intent of creating recreational opportunities where access was limited.

"We're just like you," Hill said. "We like to have fun too."

Tandem skydiving is the latest way to have fun FROG-style. Using state-of-the-art skydiving equipment, tandem allows anyone to parachute from a plane – especially the frightened, inexperienced and physically disabled, who crave the sensation but otherwise might not or couldn't do it alone.

"It started in 1984 for handicapped people," Wallace said, "and now it's evolved as a way to teach everyone."

With about 3,000 jumps under his belt, Wallace and his crew brought tandem jumping to Buhl Saturday from the Ogden Skydiving Center in Utah.

The sport uses an oversized parachute built to carry two and a dual harness system that attaches the jumper to the front of the skydiving instructor.

For $155, a person gets a tandem jump and the chance to see it later on video in comfort and safety back on the ground.

Twenty-five minutes after she and Wallace left the plane, Hill was back in her scooter-wheelchair savoring the memory of her second tandem jump.

"Oh, god it's so great," said the high-spirited Hill, of Buhl, organizer of the event. "That was way better than the last time – I'm going to have a great video this time."

"If I had good legs, I'd learn to do it myself," she added.

Wallace prepared another jumper, who is paralyzed from mid-torso down, strapping and taping his legs up to his chest to ensure that it will be Wallace's legs that later land them smoothly on the large patch of straw.

"I always wanted to do this, I just never had the chance," said a nervous Chris Pruett, 21, of Bliss.

Clinton reaffirms reform

President blasts moderate measure; lawmaker rips 'tactics' against seniors

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Clinton on Saturday denounced "halfhearted" health reforms that would do nothing for millions of Americans. The acting House Ways and Means chairman accused Republicans of trying to scare senior citizens to death over Medicare limits needed to help pay for universal health care coverage.

"Now that we've come this far, we mustn't turn back," Clinton said in his weekly radio address. "Momentum is building toward a solution."

Democrats on Ways and Means, in a rare Saturday session, postponed a debate about cost containment because of internal divisions over how tightly to control medical spending.

"We are really still debating that on our side," said Rep. Sam M. Gibbons, D-Fla., after gaveling the panel to work shortly after 8 a.m.

The debate grew rancorous after Republicans ridiculed as a "fantasy" the Democratic proposal to help pay for coverage for all Americans by cutting the growth of Medicare, the health insurance plan for 36 million elderly or disabled Americans.

"We are trying to legislate here with a magic wand," said Rep. Clay Shaw, R-Fla. He claimed one hospital alone in Gibbon's home district of Tampa stood to lose $300 million in the year 2000 if the Medicare cuts occurred.

Gibbons, looking directly at a camera carrying the hearing live on cable television, said angrily, "I want to tell the seniors through C-SPAN right now: This is just an organized attempt to scare you to death. Don't believe them. They didn't vote for (Medicare) when it first came up."

Rep. Jim McCrery, R-La., rejoined, "I'm not trying to scare the seniors in the country. I'm trying to scare all the taxpayers. ... We're just playing games here."

The big Medicare savings won't materialize and "you're going to have to raise taxes" to deliver on health care for all, predicted McCrery.

But Rep. Benjamin Cardin, D-Md., said Medicare spending would still grow by 8.6 percent a year under the Democrats' plan, instead of the current 10.5 percent. Medicare, now spending $163 billion, would expend $391 billion in 2004, he said. Without constraints, it would spend $460 billion.

So far, two congressional committees have approved Clinton-style health plans but negotiations are going much slower in three other major panels, particularly the crucial Senate Finance Committee.

Clinton, in his Oval Office radio address before helicoptering to Camp David, Md., for the weekend, said that after 60 years of trying, Congress is closer than ever to guaranteeing health coverage for every American.

"Make no mistake: measures that are halfhearted would, at best, guarantee that things stay only about as good as they are now," Clinton warned. "The poor would get health care, the wealthy would get health care, the middle class would get it sometimes and not get it sometimes."

But Rep. Jim Saxon of New Jersey, delivering the Republican response, said Clinton's employer mandate "will destroy more than 1 million jobs and significantly reduce wages," hurting "the very middle class that the president says he wants to help."

Japan awaits 3rd leader in a year

The Washington Post

TOKYO — For the third time in less than a year, the Japanese are wondering who their next prime minister will be.

The resignation Saturday of Tsutomu Hata has focused speculation several potential successors, including Hata himself, who hopes to regain office by forging a new ruling coalition. The selection process, which has been covered extensively by press and television, will begin Monday afternoon, when the lower house of the Diet, or Parliament, convenes.

But the most important issue is not who will become prime minister; Japanese premiers hold little power. The key question is what will become of the reform movement aimed at cleaning up Japanese politics and opening its economy.

Hata's resignation is the latest in a series of setbacks that have beset the reform movement since its heady days of last August, when a seven-party coalition headed by Morihiro Hosokawa as prime minister ended the 38-year rule of the scandal-ridden

Truth or fiction: Seeking the real O.J. Simpson

O. J. Simpson

Boston Globe

LOS ANGELES — At the time Eunice Simpson told the anecdote, it was meant to be a funny story about the long odds her son had overcome on the way to the Pro Football Hall of Fame and what seemed to be a charmed life, as a professional athlete, television broadcaster, actor and million-dollar spokesman for several American corporations.

But in the stark light of another day, the words of O.J. Simpson's mother are filled with irony and sadness for a fallen hero and the three families he stands accused of destroying.

"He always said, 'One of these days you're going to read about me,'" Mrs. Simpson recalled on the sunny summer afternoon of Aug. 3, 1985, when her son was inducted into the Pro Football Hall of Fame, "and my oldest daughter would always say, 'In the police report.'"

Just a man – A6

Today, O.J. Simpson, 46, sits in a 9-by-7-foot cell at the Los Angeles County Jail, accused of the double homicide of his ex-wife Nicole Brown Simpson and her 25-year-old friend Ronald Goldman, a crime that could carry with it the death penalty.

No. 32, the number Simpson wore as a football player, is now prisoner No. 4013970, a man under a 24-hour suicide watch. Millions who believed they knew O.J. Simpson are now reading about someone they don't recognize. They are learning about him from police reports.

Until recently, he seemed to have led a wondrous life. Somehow, things always worked out for "The Juice." People bent to his wishes and were swept away by his smile, his disarmingly cordial demeanor, his matinee idol looks, his raw talent. His body responded to every demand he put on it. The people who surrounded him did the same.

Several dozen of Simpson's friends, teammates and business associates interviewed over the last week, as well as reams of court documents, provided small hints that the neatly packaged image of O.J. was more perfect than true.

There were allegations of cocaine use in Buffalo, widespread womanizing throughout his careers and, most recently, hints that his finances, while strong, were the source of some worry. Still, from the potholed streets of the

Heavy rain falls in Southeast, Great Lakes

The Associated Press

Rain extended along the East Coast and South on Saturday as a cold front pushed toward the sea. There was heavy rain in Florida, and rain and thunderstorms also developed over parts of the Mississippi Valley.

A cold front that produced rain over the Midwest on Friday continued pushing slowly eastward Saturday.

Showers and thunderstorms developed in the warm and humid air along and ahead of the front, extending from the Great Lakes into Florida.

Thunderstorms produced wind gusting to 81 mph at Savannah, Fla.; 70 mph near St. Teresa, Fla.; and near 60 mph in Suwannee County, Fla., the National Weather Service said.

Hail the size of golf balls fell in northwestern Alabama's Lauderdale County.

Thunderstorms also developed across the upper Mississippi Valley, with heavy rain following storms that spread across the Plains.

In Florida, more than 3 inches of rain was reported across southern sections of Escambia and Santa Rosa counties.

Heat continued across the Southwest with midday temperatures passing 100 in the deserts of California, Nevada and Arizona. Amarillo, Texas, tied its record for the date of 105 by early afternoon.

Straw poll politicking reveals Dole, religious right challenges

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — The Republicans' first straw poll of the 1996 presidential season was clouded by arguments about the role of religious conservatives, a disagreement likely to color much of the campaign.

Sen. Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania pointed out gains made by the right in Texas, Minnesota and Iowa, warning "it defies the basic American principle of separation of church and state that's older than the constitution."

"It was wrong pragmatically because it will cost us many votes by driving mainstream conservatives out of the party and swing voters to the Democrats," Specter warned.

That drew scattered boos from heavily conservative activists and a rebuke from other prominent Republicans.

"I'm offended by those who take the position that if you have strong religious views, then somehow you ought to be precluded from politics," said Sen. Phil Gramm of Texas.

Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole won the straw poll as expected — he's from neighboring Kansas and was the winner in Iowa's 1988 precinct caucuses — but his rivals took heart at the narrowness of his win.

Dole drew a little more than 26 percent of the 1,349 votes cast in the straw poll Friday night, ahead of Gramm and former Education Secretary Lamar Alexander, both of whom got about 15 percent.

The rally kicked off the state GOP convention, convened to adopt a platform and attend to party business. Republicans paid $25 each to attend the rally and vote in the straw poll.

Specter got the backing of former New Jersey Gov. Tom Kean, who said: "Churches exist to save those who will hear the word, but government exists to serve everyone."

Still, there was little doubt about the preferences of activists casting ballots. Only six cast ballots for Specter and two for Kean.

The straw poll drew wide attention even though the first test among Republicans hoping to get the party's nomination to oppose President Clinton won't be until Iowa's precinct caucuses in February 1996.

"Something becomes important basically when the candidates and the media decide it's important," Iowa Republican Chairman Richard Schwarm said.

Specter said he made a late decision to attend the rally because he wanted to sound the theme that "we must roundly reject the politics of exclusion and enthusiastically embrace the politics of inclusion."

Key bomb suspect may turn evidence

NEW YORK — One of 13 defendants accused of plotting to bomb New York landmarks has fired lawyer William Kunstler and apparently decided to testify for the government, Kunstler's office said Saturday.

In an angry letter to U.S. District Judge Michael Mukasey, Kunstler and partner Ronald Kuby said they were advised on Friday that the suspect, Siddig Ibrahim Siddig Ali, had hired a new attorney.

They also said that he had been moved from the federal detention center without their knowledge, and that they had been unable to locate Siddig Ali's wife to find out what was going on.

Union workers clash with police

DECATUR, Ill. — Hundreds of union workers and their supporters clashed with police Saturday at a rally protesting their year-old lockout from A.E. Staley Manufacturing Co.

Police twice used pepper spray on protesters during the 90-minute demonstration. One person was arrested for trespassing and obstructing police, the union said. "This isn't the scabs' job. This is my job," said Dan Rhodes, a 20-year Staley employee. "We've lost homes, cars, everything. I've got nothing to lose."

Staley locked out about 760 members of Allied Industrial Workers Local 837 on June 27, 1993, and has operated since with replacement workers. The company makes animal feed and sweeteners from corn.

Candidate: I won't shoot your dog!

APACHE JUNCTION, Ariz. — Political campaigns out West sometimes get stripped down to basic issues. A campaign flier for Ed Barker says simply: "He Won't Shoot Your Dog."

Barker is aiming at unseating incumbent Pinal County Constable Howard Holbrook, who three years ago shot a shar-pei that he said was threatening him. No formal nominating petitions have been filed yet by either man. Police cleared Holbrook in the shooting.

As Pruett was wheeled to the plane his worried mother followed close behind.

"I thought this was over when you quit bull-riding," said Sherry Pruett.

Before loading Pruett on the Cessna, Wallace told him about the parachute, which has a second chute wrapped inside, just in case.

"But hopefully we won't need the second one," Wallace said.

He told Pruett to keep his head back and to arch his back during the one-mile free fall. In Pruett's case, his legs were pulled behind his back during the free fall part of the jump, which would automatically arch his back, Wallace said.

"Did I tell you the three most important things?" Wallace asked. Pruett shook his head and draws a look of concern.

"Number one, keep your eyes open so you don't waste your money, smile for the camera, and have fun," Wallace said.

"And just remember – I learned this last week so it's fresh in my mind," he said with a smirk.

Wiping tears from her eyes, Pruett's mother said her son has always been the adventurous type.

"But it's always been on the ground," she exclaimed.

Later, on-lookers strained their necks to watch the green and orange canopy weave it's way through the azure sky. And after a smooth slide into the straw, Pruett completed his first sky dive jump.

"I was doing fine until he opened the door and I looked down," Pruett said. "It's a good thing he was there to push me out of the plane."

Despite his reluctance to exchange the safety and coziness of the plane for a leap into space and a two-mile descent to the ground, Pruett thought he found a new way to entertain his senses.

"I'd do it again in a heartbeat," he said. "There's not a lot you can do in a wheelchair and get that kind of adrenaline rush."

Hata's forced departure after just two months in office underscores the likelihood that the path to reform will be long and torturous — a frustrating prospect for a U.S. administration anxious to see progress on deregulation and market-opening measures.

The good news about reform, says Gerald Curtis, a Columbia University expert on Japanese politics, is the underlying trend.

The political system, he said, is heading toward the creation of two or more parties that will stand for ideas and policies in such areas as consumer rights, deregulation and international affairs instead of competing for power, as the Liberal Democrats have done — by offering favors and protection to special interests.

"The bad news is, it's going to take a lot longer than anyone expected a year ago for all of this to sort itself out, and in the meantime, very little is going to be done," Curtis said. "These guys struggling for power in Japan don't have much time or energy to think about things like deregulation."

Underpinning the reform movement is legislation passed in January, that revamped the electoral process. It abolished a system of parliamentary election districts that was widely believed to have fostered the pork-barrel style of "money politics" associated with the Liberal Democrats.

The new system will be in place in the fall.

Faced with defeat on a no-confidence vote in Parliament this afternoon, Hata decided to resign partly in order to preserve the gains of electoral reform.

By quitting, he averted a potential disaster for the reformers — an immediate election, under the old electoral system.

Reconciliation urged at Bighorn event

FORT MEADE, S.D. (AP) — More than a century after the Battle of Little Bighorn, the cavalry and Indians met again Saturday, this time in the spirit of friendship.

"I figured it was time to get together," said Francis Whitebird, South Dakota's commissioner of Indian affairs. "(We share) the common value of bravery. We're all on the same side."

Organized in part by the 7th Cavalry Regimental Association, the symbolic ceremony drew cavalry members and Indians from across the country. It started Thursday with a horseback ride to nearby Bear Butte and culminated Saturday with a 90-minute ceremony on the Fort Meade parade ground. About 250 people, mostly non-Indians, attended.

The ceremony came 118 years to the day that Sioux, Cheyenne, Arapaho and other tribes defeated Lt. Col. George Custer and the 7th U.S. Cavalry in the Battle of the Little Bighorn in Montana.

Anti-crime bill, once deemed likely to succeed, disappears

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — When it cleared the Senate and the House by overwhelming margins, this year's anti-crime bill looked like a proposal whose time had come.

It offered a president hungry for domestic accomplishments a way of spawning innovative projects in cities large and small. And it gave lawmakers with violence-plagued constituents evidence of a determination to crack down.

But somewhere on the way to its gala signing ceremony, the most-likely-to-succeed package has disappeared in deep political quicksand.

The widespread agreement on many of its aspects is now being overshadowed by a bitter fight over one provision that relates to racial disparity between convicted murderers who receive the death penalty and those who do not. The so-called "Racial Justice Act," which appears only in the House version, is now so explosive that it threatens to trigger a Senate filibuster and jeopardize passage of the entire bill.

An increasingly anxious White House and Democratic leaders in Congress are struggling to find a route through a minefield of racial politics, but so far have been stumped. "I think we are in a real box," says one House Democratic leader.

The debate, which is being waged as House and Senate negotiators try to find a compromise anti-crime bill acceptable to each chamber, says as much as anything about the very different ways the crime issue hits various coalitions in Congress, and the limits on the White House's ability to cope with it.

The Racial Justice Act, sponsored by Rep. Don Edwards, D-Calif., a longtime civil rights advocate, would allow defendants convicted of capital crimes to challenge their death sentences by producing statistical evidence to prove that the penalty was being applied in a discriminatory manner in their area of the country.

Driving the debate is a belief that in some regions, the death penalty is applied more often in cases where blacks murder whites than in cases of blacks murdering blacks or whites murdering whites. The issue is by no means clear, however, with advocates and opponents alike marshaling statistics they contend either prove or disprove that such bias exists.

An increasingly anxious White House and Democratic leaders in Congress are struggling to find a route through a minefield of racial politics, but so far have been stumped.

The measure barely passed the House on a 217-212 vote and was not included in the Senate bill. Both the Senate and House have gone on record in separate, non-binding votes to oppose the act, indicating how perilous a course it faces.

Proponents argue that it would be acceptable as part of the omnibus crime bill lawmakers want to embrace.

"It will identify in certain jurisdictions those crimes for which blacks frequently get the death penalty while white defendants rarely do," Edwards said in a recent letter to colleagues. "Only a defendant who can show that his case fits such a pattern of racial disparity can invoke the act" to have a death sentence converted to a life prison term.

In any case, Edwards said, prosecutors would have a chance to rebut claims of racial bias, with the decision made by a judge based on a preponderance of the evidence.

Opponents, however, view the measure as an indirect attack on the death penalty itself rather than a procedure to deal with alleged racial bias in capital cases. They say the true intent of the act is to provide defendants with another vehicle for appeal, one that is subject to laborious statistical arguments that will further tie up the courts and limit executions.

Rep. Bill McCollum, R-Fla., who has led the fight against the measure in the House, has said its passage "would mean the end of the death penalty in most jurisdictions where it currently exists."

Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., whose views on crime issues are shared by most of his GOP colleagues, said there us no way to compare one death penalty with another, since the circumstances of each case were different. Any attempts to deal with racial bias, he said, should be limited to "the four corners of the case."

"I don't see many Republican votes for the bill with the Racial Justice provision in it," Hyde said. The compromise proposals floated by Democrats so far have failed to make the provision more acceptable, he added.

On other issues, the key Senate and House negotiators appear close to agreement on the following major items that would provide:

- $10.9 billion for state and local law enforcement over the next six years, including almost $9 billion for 100,000 community police.
- $8.4 billion for state and local prisons.
- $7.6 billion for a variety of crime prevention programs, with an additional $1.4 billion for drug courts to encourage treatment of addicts rather than incarceration.

Police recover part of basement savings

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A 91-year-old man amassed $800,000 in his basement since the Great Depression because he didn't trust the banks. He did, however, trust a woman who cleaned his house.

Now authorities have accused the woman and four others of sneaking into the man's house while he slept, hauling away cash, gold coins and securities and spending the take on cars, vacations and appliances.

'I'd like to wring their necks.'

— Robbery victim, 91, Barnesboro, Pa.

"I'd like to wring their necks," the robbery victim said Saturday from his home in Barnesboro, a town of 2,700 people about 75 miles east of Pittsburgh. He asked that his name not be used because he's afraid of being robbed again.

The man — a widower, coin collector and retired coal miner — noticed the money was missing in early May but didn't report the theft until June 3, Barnesboro Mayor Mike Suchar said.

Police arrested five people last week, two of them as they returned from a Florida vacation Thursday, Suchar said. The suspects allegedly spent the money on cars, trailers, a motorcycle, stereo equipment, televisions and other goods.

"They were living high on the hog," the 91-year-old man said.

Police said one of the women told the others about a padlocked strongbox she noticed while cleaning the man's basement. The group entered the house while the man slept and broke the lock on the strongbox, police said.

About $300,000 of the savings was in cash and the rest in collectable coins and government securities, police said. About $60,000 in cash has been recovered. Suchar said the securities, which were payable only to the victim, may have been burned.

The man said he and his father lost nearly half of their savings during the Great Depression, although he couldn't remember how much that was.

"You know, if you had $1,000 it was a lot of money back then," he said. He said he earned 17 cents an hour when he started as a miner during World War I.

Suchar said the man's only daughter, who lives in Ohio, has been asked to become his guardian.

"This ought to open up her eyes. We think he was saving the money to give to her," Suchar said.

Priest acquitted

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — A priest accused of sexually assaulting an 11-year-old altar boy was acquitted Saturday, and said he hopes the verdict convinces the church to back up priests accused of misconduct.

"The church has to recognize that just because a priest is accused does not mean he is guilty," the Rev. Paul Manning said.

Manning, 54, was charged with molesting the boy after another priest said he saw the two seated in a rectory reclining chair last September, their naked legs entwined.

Nation

Riots changed gays' self-images

Incidents started gay-rights movement that changed face of nation

Knight-Ridder News Service

NEW YORK — In the summer of 1969, Ivan Valentin was a 20-year-old go-go dancer and female impersonator who found respite from an intolerant world at the Stonewall Inn in Greenwich Village.

"It was the most comfortable place," he said, if one were young, poor and gay in New York, and looking to be among friends.

Valentin liked the music, the dancing and the easy intimacy. "If you wanted to pick somebody up, all you had to do was ask them to dance," he said. "And from then on you could tell."

On the night of June 27, Valentin's world and that of the other gay men and lesbians who frequented the Stonewall collided with the mores of the era.

In the past it might have meant a night of socializing cut short by a humiliating run-in with police. That night, however, it was to be different.

"We fought back," said Valentin, now 45. "... We had every right to be there having a good time, and we were not going to take it anymore."

On three nights over the next five days, outraged gay men and women confronted police who had routinely harassed them. They demanded no more, no less than any other segment of society — to be left to live their lives as they saw fit.

The Stonewall riots changed the way many gay people saw themselves, and from that altered self-image has flowed the gay-rights movement that has changed the face of the nation.

"In 1969-70 we could not get the liberal mayor in the most liberal city in America to talk about gay issues. Now the president of the United States talks about gay issues," said Mark Segal, publisher of the Philadelphia Gay News, who was at the Stonewall when the police raided it that muggy night in 1969.

"It's amazing that from this spark in Greenwich Village has grown this worldwide movement," said Arthur Finn, chair of the Stonewall March Committee, which expects a million people from all over the world at the march Sunday in New York to commemorate the riots and the movement that has grown from them.

Friday, June 27, 1969, had been particularly hot and oppressively humid. And, for many in the gay community, it had been acutely sad. The funeral of Judy Garland, a cult figure among gay men, had been held in New York that day.

The Stonewall was a seedy, smelly place on the fringe, frequented by people who did not fit in anywhere else — drag queens, runaways and street hustlers.

"Stonewall was a place that didn't have an identity," said Richard Goldstein, executive editor of the Village Voice and one of the city's leading gay voices. "The gay scene then was very segmented. The leather people hung out in one bar; the roughnecks had their place. Stonewall had an extremely varied clientele, and that's why what happened there happened. They were the outcasts, even in the gay community."

Maybe it was the lower-class clientele, or maybe the same-sex dance partners, but the bring-your-own after-hours club was subject to frequent police raids. Ostensibly, the raids were to crack down on underage drinking, illegal selling of liquor and vice code violations. To patrons, however, they seemed simply attempts to harass and humiliate gay men and women.

Just such a raid took place shortly after midnight.

"I can remember just dancing, and the lights coming on," Segal said. "They asked all of us to come to the door and carded us." He got out quietly. Others did not.

Ivan Valentin, a slim, small-boned man, headed for the door and slipped out before he could be collared. As he emerged onto the street, an officer's nightstick caught him on the head. Valentin ran but slipped and fell, leaving a gash in his knee that would take 10 stitches to close.

Sascha Loren, 54, a Hungarian-born former prostitute, worked as the doorman at the Stonewall. He said that when the police initially tried to get in, someone locked the door from the inside to give patrons and employees time to hide the club's liquor and to stop dancing between same-sex customers.

The officers knocked the door down and charged in. As they did, many people, like Valentin, immediately headed for the club's single door. There were only six officers. There were about 200 people in the bar.

As the police entered, someone hit a switch behind the bar that turned up the lights, and stopped the music. "This was protocol during a raid," said Loren, who now works as the doorman at the Monster, a well-known gay bar across Sheridan Square from the present-day Stonewall.

The officers eventually let most of the customers out. They detained two employees and two patrons. But something unusual was happening outside.

Typically during police raids, patrons of gay clubs were so fearful of being revealed as homosexuals that their only goal was to get as far away as fast as possible.

"What was different about this," said Segal, "was that the crowd didn't disperse."

Instead of running, some of the bar patrons just stood outside. Others from the neighborhood began to gather. Segal said many in the crowd began taunting the police. "There was more sexual innuendo than political statements," Segal recalled.

One woman dressed as a man was arrested for cross-dressing, a violation of New York law at the time. When she complained that the handcuffs were too tight, witnesses said, she was struck on the head with a nightstick.

People in the crowd started throwing coins at police as they tried to load their prisoners into the van. Loren said he saw someone throw what he thought were dog feces at an officer and miss. As officers tried to clear the street, they pushed people, who pushed back.

Then someone threw a bottle. Others began throwing anything they could find: wire mesh garbage cans, stones, bottles. Deputy Inspector Seymour Pine, who headed the raid, ordered his men back into the bar.

Someone used lighter fluid to try to set a fire to the bar. At least one officer inside the bar drew his gun. Among those in the bar were a reporter for the Village Voice, which had offices a few doors away, and folk singer David Van Ronk, who had been in a straight bar a few doors down but got caught in the crowd and was arrested.

Pine called for backup. Police in riot gear showed up. They formed a line and tried to clear the street, only to be pelted by the mob.

After more than three hours of commotion, the crowd finally dispersed.

Afterward, some who had been there scrawled messages in chalk on the street, urging people to return Saturday night to protest the police action.

Many did, and again they clashed with the police. A smaller clash the following Wednesday ended the riots.

"What was amazing about Stonewall was that for the first time the authorities found out that gay people would fight back," said Segal; "that we wouldn't run away."

With drop in viewers, CNN in midlife crisis

NEW YORK (AP) — CNN, the Cable News Network that began in 1980 as Ted Turner's dream of a 24-hour hard-news television network and came of age in the Persian Gulf War, is finding itself in a midlife crisis.

CNN's ratings were off about 25 percent for the first three months of 1994; its revenue for the same period fell about 7.5 percent.

By the end of May, CNN's average daily rating was five-tenths of a ratings point (off two-tenths of a point for the same period last year). With CNN in 67.2 million homes, that works out to an average audience of 336,220 homes.

Why did all the viewers leave?

"There was a slow news environment this year," said CNN publicist Howard Polskin. "When we look at '93, we had the World Trade Center bombing, the blizzard of '93, the hold-out in Waco and President Clinton's inauguration.

"The second reason is channel repositioning," he said. "Because of cable re-regulation, almost half of CNN subscribers have had CNN moved on their lineups over the last 13 months or so."

That makes CNN harder to find for people who don't regularly tune in, he said.

"And it's no secret that it's a more competitive news environment out there," he added.

CNN, CNN International and Headline News constitute Turner Broadcasting System's news division. CNN is generally thought to generate 70 percent of TBS' $250 million to $400 million annual operating profit.

On June 9, CNN President Tom Johnson named two of his top managers-producers, Executive Vice President V.R. "Bob" Furnad and Senior Vice President and business anchorman Lou Dobbs, to lead CNN's new programming development.

Madison Avenue and Wall Street have taken the ratings slump in stride.

Media buyer Bill Koenigsburg said CNN's commercial time sales always have been "pricey and aggressive, but there's no doubt that they have to be realistic and come down in price."

Low ratings don't mean that much in the cable buy, said Jerry Dominus of the J. Walter Thompson agency: "Since cable is generally bought as a medium of audience accumulation, not a medium of broad reach, it's not a fatal illness."

Ex-Army sergeants land in jail for passing secrets

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — A federal judge sentenced two former Army sergeants to 18 years behind bars for passing military secrets to Hungarian and Czechoslovakian communists in 1985.

"A few in the armed forces have forgotten the principles of duty, honor and country," U.S. District Judge Ralph Nimmons said Friday. "They put at risk the lives of many, both civilian and military."

Jeffrey Stephen Rondeau, 30, and Jeffrey Eugene Gregory, 32, could have received life sentences under their plea earlier this year to espionage charges.

But the judge took into consideration that the men were relatively minor players in a spy ring that military officials said severely compromised the defense of Eastern Europe prior to the end of the Cold War.

Prosecutors said the confidential information they handed over included plans for the defense of Europe and the United States.

The ring was masterminded by Clyde Lee Conrad, who was sentenced in June 1991 to life in prison after a West German court convicted him of passing secrets to Hungary and Czechoslovakia from 1975 through 1985 in return for $1.2 million.

Conrad, a sergeant in charge of safeguarding classified documents at the 8th Infantry Division at Bad Kreuznach, Germany, recruited another sergeant at the base, Roderick James Ramsay, who, in turn, recruited Rondeau and Gregory.

According to court documents, Ramsay told Rondeau he was preparing a "mother lode" of documents for delivery to Conrad, who planned to sell them one by one to Hungarian intelligence agents.

In late 1985, Rondeau photocopied various documents Ramsay had identified.

After Gregory joined the ring in late 1985, he helped Ramsay one evening remove a military flight bag stuffed with 20 pounds of classified documents, most of them the so-called "mother lode."

Ramsay, who left the Army in 1985, was working as a busboy in Tampa at the time of his arrest in 1988. He was convicted of selling information to the Hungarian and Czechoslovakian secret services between 1983 and 1985 and is serving a 36-year prison term.

U.S. suspected new Colombian head's ties to traffickers last fall

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Clinton administration heard as long ago as last fall that Colombian drug traffickers were arranging for large donations to the campaign of Ernesto Samper, newly elected Colombian president, U.S. officials say.

Assistant Secretary of State Robert Gelbard met alone with Samper in Washington last October and asked him about evidence suggesting a link between him and the narcotraffickers. U.S. officials, speaking only on grounds of anonymity, said Samper categorically denied the allegation.

This past week, the alleged donations by the Cali cocaine cartel exploded onto Colombia's political landscape with the release of an audiotape that further confirms the long-held U.S. suspicions.

The audiotape indicates the Samper campaign sought money from the cartel and that the traffickers were trying to "buy" five Cabinet positions, including that of defense minister.

Colombia's defense minister traditionally has played a key role in implementing strategies for curbing drug trafficking.

A senior U.S. official, asking not to be identified, said the tape is part of a "long chain of highly credible reports" connecting the cartel and the Samper campaign.

Samper has continued to deny any wrongdoing. He met late last week with U.S. Ambassador Morris Busby, but officials declined to characterize the meeting.

State Department spokesman Mike McCurry had said earlier that "it's not my understanding that we have confirmed" the link between Samper and the Cali cartel. But he also said, "That's something we're looking into."

The taped conversations were discussed during the Samper-Busby meeting, McCurry said Friday.

Woodstock '94 tickets go on sale

SAUGERTIES, N.Y. (AP) — About 150,000 tickets to the 25th anniversary Woodstock festival at the not-so-nostalgic price of $135 for a group of four go on sale today.

Concert promoter John Scher said about 250 Ticketmaster locations in the Northeast will take walk-in business. Tickets for the two-day event must be bought in blocks of four.

The concert, planned for Aug. 13-14 at a farm two hours north of New York City will feature Bob Dylan, Aerosmith, Spin Doctors, Johnny Cash, Melissa Etheridge and about 25 other acts.

Fans won't actually get tickets, but a receipt. The tickets will arrive by express mail about Aug. 1, along with a parking pass, directions to the concert and what to bring, Scher said.

Tickets for the originial three-day concert were $18, and nearly 400,000 patrons got in free.

Little Rock readies for abortion showdown

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — The next battle over abortion will be in President Clinton's home state, activists on both sides say.

Anti-abortion groups set July 6-9 for what they call their "Summer of Justice" to protest a new federal ban on blocking access to abortion clinics. The opposition, in turn, plans to defend the clinics' work. Saturday, about 70 women and men met in a public library and learned to form a "human wall."

Both sides say they expect hundreds of participants.

The Arkansas capital and its four abortion clinics were chosen as the target of anti-abortion protests because the president favors abortion rights — a position he advanced May 26 by signing the Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances Act.

Abortion opponents have argued in court that the law is vague, violates free speech and outlaws peaceful, non-violent protest. But a federal judge in Virginia upheld the law last week, saying it is clearly aimed at those who threaten violence or who physically block a clinic door.

Operation Rescue, Rescue America and the Pro-Life Action Network anti-abortion groups say they will join forces here in a protest to highlight their objections to the law.

"We all feel compelled to take a stand for the babies and for our values as Christians. We could think of no better place than Little Rock from whence the four-year scourge upon America sprang," said national Rescue America director Don Treshman, speaking from Houston.

Wendy Wright, spokeswoman for Operation Rescue in Dallas, said abortion opponents will hold prayer meetings near the clinics and post sidewalk counselors who will give women information about alternatives to abortion.

She said the group plans no civil disobedience. But she said it's not clear what would be considered a violation of the law.

"Any time you're out in the street presenting a message, that ends up being considered confrontational," Wright said.

Simpson

San Francisco ghetto where he grew up to the gold-lined boulevards of West Los Angeles where he lived, those who knew Simpson are universally amazed at what has befallen their friend.

More than anything else, Orenthal James Simpson loved being O.J.: his million-dollar homes in Manhattan, Brentwood and Laguna Beach, his jet-setting work for TV and Hollywood, his Heisman Trophy, his name etched in leather-bound record books on the shelves of the NFL Hall of Fame.

In many ways, some friends have come to believe, his image was his profession, nurtured across career lines that swallow lesser men alive, carried over the great racial divides that marked his time. He was a nice guy in an age of spoiled celebrities. He signed autographs anytime, anywhere. Not only did he do it, he liked it. Because he knew that once the fans were gone, O.J. would be no more.

As a man, Simpson is infinitely more complex than the image his celebrity projected. But his goals in life were straightforward: to own his own home, a large one at that; to rise above race and become an American hero devoid of any color; and, most important, to be liked. He had largely achieved all of that.

Then, about a month ago, Nicole Simpson told him they could never reconcile. It was perhaps the first time in his adult life, friends say, that O.J. had ever been told no; had ever been denied something or someone he coveted.

From that moment, some say, a heretofore hidden, ugly side of O.J. Simpson surfaced, one possessed of a violent temper and an obsession with a woman he could not have.

Once, a decade ago, Simpson told a reporter his view of relationships: "I don't believe in equality in a relationship, and I don't believe people who say that they have that. Someone, either the man or the woman, has to have the upper hand. They (women) like an extrovert who's confident — even to the point of cockiness."

Simpson was all of that, but after being jilted by Nicole, perhaps for the only time, being The Juice was not enough.

What resulted, Los Angeles police say, was a man who lost complete control of his senses.

"Don't feel sorry for me, I've had a great life, great friends," Simpson wrote in an apparent suicide note before he gave himself up last Friday after 10 hours as a fugitive and a 60-mile chase on the highways around Los Angeles. "Please think of the real O.J. and not this lost person."

The question is, which is the real O.J. Simpson? Was he the Hertz pitchman with the eternal smile who company surveys revealed was "colorless' to the American public? Or did he still carry much of the cruel persona of the gang leader he had been, the kid who pulled robberies and who once said, "It wasn't a weekend if there wasn't a fight. I enjoyed it."

Sometime after Orenthal James Simpson was born to Eunice and Jimmy Lee Simpson, in 1947, they noticed something funny: He was slow to walk. They decided to take him to San Francisco General Hospital, a squat building on the fringe of Potrero Hill, where Simpson's mother worked the overnight shift as an orderly most of her life.

Doctors there found the boy ravaged by rickets — a vitamin D and calcium deficiency that weakend his legs. If he was to walk, they would have to break and reset his legs or fit him with braces. The Simpsons could afford neither, so they fashioned a set of homemade braces with his shoes placed on the opposite feet. The result was that he ended up bowlegged — and a 9.3 sprinter in the 100-yard dash. Such a contradiction would become typical of his life.

Simpson was the leader of a social group known as The Superiors while attending Galileo High School and of an antisocial group known as the Persian Warriors, a street gang. The former organized dances and community events for youths in the project. The latter stole food and drink for those dances.

Nearly all the best athletes on Potrero Hill joined Simpson's gang, among them a boy who would become his lifelong friend, Al Cowlings. For most of their early years, Cowlings ran interference for Simpson and two weeks ago, at age 47, he was at it again when he apparently prevented him from committing suicide by driving him around Los Angeles.

Marguerite Whitley was O.J.'s high school sweetheart; Simpson stole her from his best friend Cowlings, married her and later divorced her in 1980, only months after their 23-month-old daughter, Aaren, drowned in their swimming pool. Whitley described Simpson's early life in a 1968 Look magazine interview.

"He was a beast," she said then. "He was pretty horrible. If there were other fellows who wanted to talk to girls, he'd make them stay away. He'd been a terrible person, right on the edge of trouble."

Although Simpson's scrapes with the law were petty, he was taken to juvenile jail at 15 and held for the weekend after a fight that began after his group stole liquor from a local store. This would be a turning point in his life.

> 'There was a good side to O.J. And there was bad side.'
> — Jim Brown, former NFL running back

When he arrived home on Monday, he expected to see his father waiting for him, a familiar strategy imposed by his mother when things began to slip out of control. A beating would be in order. But this time someone else was waiting.

Willie Mays, the star centerfielder of the San Francisco Giants, had been asked to intercede and he agreed, taking Simpson with him for the day. Not once did he mention gangs or cops or trouble. Instead, he took an awed O.J. to his massive home in Forest Park, one of the city's wealthiest sections. What would leave an impression on Simpson was not Willie Mays, but the size of his house.

By then, O.J. was on the verge of getting his own recognition as a running back at Galileo High. As he did, he was willing to tout himself to anyone, including the world's greatest running back.

One Sunday after the 49ers had lost to the Cleveland Browns, Simpson and his friends finished collecting cushions and retired to a nearby ice cream stand. To their surprise, in walked Jim Brown, the NFL's leading rusher.

Simpson could not pass up this chance. "The other kids were really awed but, you know, I was the leader of the gang, and so I had to say something," Simpson said in a book called "The O.J. Simpson Story."

He told the star, "Jim Brown, you ain't so great. ... When I get to play pro ball, I'm gonna break all your records."

As a senior, Simpson's team took on mighty St. Ignatius, winners of 23 straight. As expected, Galileo trailed, 25-10, and then Simpson took over, scoring touchdowns of 90, 80 and 60 yards for the biggest upset in the city's high school history.

Unfortunately for Simpson, he couldn't outrun or out-talk his C-minus average, and he briefly considered going into the Army after high school before friends persuaded him to enroll at City College.

He later enrolled at USC, where he won the Heisman Trophy in 1968 and ran on a world-record 4-by-440 yard relay team. He was the No. 1 draft choice in the NFL in 1969.

Simpson's transformation from college golden boy to professional superstar occurred in Buffalo, a hard-scrabble city in an economic downturn. Back in 1969, Buffalo was a bleak outpost of brutal winters and lost jobs. The city needed a spark, a savior of sorts, and it came in the form of O.J., the prize draft choice of the Buffalo Bills.

He did not want to come at first, and said he preferred playing on the West Coast to "make as much money" as he could. Many sports fans added to Simpson's hesitancy by decrying the drafting of the Heisman Trophy winner by a team in a city largely considered a frozen backwater. Sticking O.J. in Buffalo was like "putting a tuxedo on an ape," wrote Jim Murray, the celebrated sports columnist for the Los Angeles Times.

Tight-fisted Bills owner Ralph Wilson quickly ponied up with an estimated four-year deal worth $100,000 a year, a staggering amount at the time.

More than 2,000 people screaming "O.J., O.J." showed up at the airport to watch Simpson walk off the plane in Buffalo. Within hours, he would have 340 requests for personal appearances. And within weeks he upgraded Buffalo's image, at least as a sports town.

"A lot of bad things were happening to Buffalo at the time," said Larry Felser, a sports columnist for the Buffalo News who has known Simpson for 25 years. "And the town already had an inferiority complex. But OJ became the personification of success and notoriety — that Buffalo was indeed a good place after all. He was our validation."

Simpson possessed a race-neutral style, which included dating white women, and while it triggered jeers in some black and white quarters, Simpson appeared comfortable. He'd later say with pride that Hertz's market research found that American consumers considered him "colorless." In 1969, he told Robert Lipsyte of the New York Times that his biggest accomplishment was that "people looked at me like a man first, not a black man."

Simpson produced on the field for the Bills. And off the field, he was no wallflower. He liked to party, and he met Michael Millitelo, a local club owner who had opened a place called Mulligan's, then Buffalo's version of Studio 54. Disco fever was on. And so was cocaine.

"Sure, me and Juice did a lot of cocaine together," Millitelo said. "But that was back in the '70s. We stopped in the '80s. O.J. helped a lot of guys out with their addictions, paying for people to go to rehab."

Jim Brown claimed that anyone who knows Simpson knows that he used a lot of cocaine. "There was a good side to O.J.," Brown told a television interviewer last week. "And there was bad side."

After the stadiums of the NFL, Simpson galloped into new careers as easily as he ran downfield. His step was gone, but his charisma, his character remained, this time to be featured in B movies like "The Towering Inferno" and the "Naked Gun" series, or in the broadcast booth of "Monday Night Football." His dash through an airport for Hertz rental-car commercials may have been his most famous run of all.

So he settled back into Los Angeles, where it all began at USC. Old friends came over. New friends were easy to make.

Simpson's celebrity allowed him to meet and date some of the most beautiful women in the country. His marriages were no obstacles, according to friends. He met Nicole when she was but 18 years old, the homecoming princess fresh out of a suburban Los Angeles high school.

No matter that Marguerite was home pregnant at the time, fully aware of his sexual escapades. "My wife knows I'm under control," Simpson told People magazine in 1979. Not so, though, according to Marguerite's lawyer.

Though it was an amicable parting, highlighted by a lump-sum payment of $500,000 from Simpson to Marguerite and thousands more per year in support for their two children, her lawyer would say of the womanizing, "I would say she knew or sensed it."

In 1973, Marguerite had told an interviewer that when it comes to relationships between men and women, Simpson was a traditionalist. "O.J. is the type of person who believes a woman should stick by her husband's side," his first wife said.

The two would be divorced six years later.

Even against the backdrop of Hollywood, O.J. and Nicole were a striking couple. He was impossibly handsome, defiant of the effects of age. She was blond and gorgeous, and a slave to exercise. They openly kissed at parties, sporting events and charity benefits. They stopped by the hottest nightspots of West LA. On Feb. 2, 1985, seven years after they met, they were married in a ceremony at his Rockingham Avenue estate.

They drove Ferraris. They summered at his house in Laguna Beach. They vacationed, on Hertz, in Hawaii. Eventually they had two children, a daughter and then a son. Nicole wanted to go to a junior college, but was prevented from doing so by O.J., who wanted her to be available at all times to travel with him.

But old habits die hard, and those who know Simpson well said that women remained eager to please him wherever he went.

About this time, another side to Simpson began appearing behind the tall gates to his Brentwood estate.

This became apparent in the now-infamous incident in the predawn hours of New Year's Day 1989. Police were summoned to Rockingham Avenue, and found Nicole outside the house, her eye blackened and her lip bloodied. She fell into an officer's arms, sobbing hysterically and screaming, "He's going to kill me."

Eight previous times, police had been summoned to their home. What followed were three volatile, sometimes violent years. Simpson's lawyer, Robert Shapiro, said that Simpson once tried to kick in his ex-wife's door, and that another time he smashed something over her car.

O.J.'s 1992 divorce from Nicole brought the next signs of trouble, this time in worry over his financial future. From outside the gates of Rockingham Avenue, all looked resplendent. Inside, according to court documents, was a different story.

Though his net worth was valued by a judge to be more than $10 million, and his income for 1991 was an additional $734,000, Simpson appeared concerned. His NBC contract was for $100,000 less in 1992 than in 1991 and would be up for renegotiation soon. His Hertz contract was also coming up.

A profitable Pioneer Chicken franchise he owned in South Central Los Angeles was burned to the ground in the riots. A second, money-losing store had to be closed. And three Honey Baked Ham stores, in which he was a 50 percent owner, had to be shuttered in 1992 because of the California recession.

And the divorce from Nicole was proving to be expensive. Simpson's lawyer complained that Nicole refused to work outside the home. She hired a housekeeper to tend to domestic chores during the week and drive the children to school, and a second one on the weekends to give her Saturday away from the children. Baby sitters were brought in at least three nights a week to allow her the freedom to spend time with her friends.

A recent AIDS Awareness fundraiser in Los Angeles at the Beachfront Cafe in Venice was off to a slow, even miserable start. "But when O.J. came in, it became lively," recalls Shirley Morgan, a local lawyer. "People were talking to everyone else. There were hugs and kisses all about."

And in the meantime, there were other women, beautiful women. Paula Barbieri, a Victoria's Secret model, began dating Simpson more than a year ago.

"Paula, what can I say," Simpson wrote to Barbieri in what seemed to be his suicide note last week. "You are special. I'm sorry we're not going to have our chance. God brought you to me. I now see. As I leave, you'll be in my thoughts."

Simpson survived last Friday's dramatic chase without turning the gun he held on himself, but most believe he is gone regardless.

Never again can he simply be the smiling pitchman who wanted to be liked. He is seen now in a different way, with sidelong glances, sad shakes of the head and fascination mixed with horror. This was never part of the image he worked 46 years to create. This is a new O.J., another O.J., a forlorn O.J.

Everyday dangers can't compete with juicy ones

As Art Linkletter used to say, people are funny.

A famous guy is accused of killing his wife, and the nation is agog. All over the country, hotlines and shelters for battered women report huge increases in calls.

The increase in calls is probably a good thing. It means domestic-violence victims are taking their problem seriously. Too bad they needed a notorious murder case to help them realize the danger.

But compare that incident with some events that happened locally last week. In the days following the Simpson spectacle, two traffic accidents in the Magic Valley claimed four lives. That's twice as many deaths as in the O.J. case.

Do you think those deaths will affect people's driving habits? They should, but they probably won't.

Truth is, statistics don't cut much ice when it comes to getting people's attention.

According to our office almanac, auto accidents killed 41,710 people in 1992. Murders killed only 26,570. Murders by Heisman Trophy winners were considerably fewer than that.

Yet it's the O.J. story that gets people's attention (and yes, the media coverage).

Here's another example. The AIDS epidemic, which has people panicked all over the country and has triggered a flood of TV commercials about safe sex, killed 33,590 people in 1992.

That same year, heart disease killed 720,000 people – 21 times as many as AIDS.

But there are no red ribbons for heart attack victims. There are no celebrity appeals for people to eat right, to exercise and to stop smoking. There are no made-for-TV movies.

The reason, of course, is that people are drawn to the unusual. That's why your hometown paper never prints stories about banks that didn't get robbed.

If people were purely logical, the heart disease would send us running to the salad bar. And we would read car accident story as a warning about how deadly highways can be.

Instead, the commonness of car accidents and heart attacks lulls us to complacency – even though their commonness is precisely what should scare us.

To the families who lost loved ones on local highways last week, we offer our deepest sympathy.

To everyone else: Let those deaths be a reminder to slow down a little, to stay sober, to fasten your safety belt, and to be just a little more attentive to cars around you – especially during the coming holiday weekend.

And while we have your attention, how about kicking the cigarette habit?

O.J. was – and is – just a man

Brad Bowlin

Not much surprises me.

Thanks to satellite-fed news wires, newspaper people read about the worst sort of slime and debauchery imaginable. We see the stuff that doesn't get into the paper. So not much shocks me when it flashes on my computer screen.

But news that O.J. Simpson, practically a god at my alma mater, is suspected of hacking his wife and another man to death gave me pause.

How could this bloody crime be laid at the feet that dazzled defenses from Los Angeles to Buffalo? How could they say this about the man who wore the jersey, who won the trophy that now stands enshrined in that red brick temple to athletics that sits in the middle of the USC campus?

I visited Heritage Hall many times during my four years at Southern Cal. Many stars are captured there – Charles White, Ronnie Lott, Marcus Allen, Mike Garrett – but none brighter than the man called "Juice."

O.J. Simpson won the Heisman Trophy, college football's highest honor, the year I was born. My visions of his fluid stride, his bursts of speed that left defenders grasping air, come mostly from NFL highlight films.

But the image loomed much larger than life at Southern Cal, a football factory with a university attached. The day that image appeared in human form at a campus picnic is one of the clearest memories from my college days.

Several of my college comrades and I were throwing the traditional pre-game party before a big game with cross-town rival UCLA. While tossing a football back and forth, I spotted a familiar face walking toward the Coliseum.

"Hey, O.J."

He stopped and led a group of us in the school cheer. Then he shook a few hands and rejoined the crowd.

Nobody asked for souvenir pictures or autographs. That's for tourists. We were fellow Trojans, members of a big family bound not by blood, but by tradition, hype and legend.

But for an instant, O.J. was not a legend. He wasn't some gridiron icon framed in a museum. He wasn't a line of stats in a record book. He was no hero, no phony Hollywood creation surrounded by a throng of fans.

He was a man – just a man out for an afternoon walk in the park on the way to a football game.

Turns out that's all O.J. ever was. He was just a man, blessed with an incredible talent for slipping by linebackers. Off the field, he dealt with the same demons as the rest of us, and apparently handled them even less well than do most of us.

Until he made his final end around on the L.A. freeways last week, O.J. seemed a likely hero – a young man from a nondescript background who rose to stardom. A successful businessman, attractive and composed, he was the perfect role model for any young person facing challenges, not just Black ghetto kids.

The trouble with fame is that it doesn't insulate one from the trials of life, the broken hearts and shattered dreams that all of us face. It is not hard to speculate that a man who almost never heard the word "no" from anyone – especially a woman – could not handle his ex-wife's rejection.

These days, sports heroes with marital problems are a dime a dozen. But it is far more difficult for me to imagine the man who stopped at our picnic that day – smooth, gracious, seemingly almost flattered by the attention – as the raging killer who cut down two people in Brentwood.

Small town not safe from crime

Becky Moser

For a long time, I was glad I lived in a small city because, the statistics told me, we were safe.

And, for a long time, we were.

As long as we got along with our neighbors and our in-laws, we stood a pretty good chance of living a full life without danger from bullets or knives.

Indiscriminate crime was something that happened to folks who lived in Miami or New York City. Only people we knew – and often, loved – hurt us.

Not any more.

Saturday night, my youngest child was attacked.

She's safe, thank God, because she rolled up her car windows and locked all the doors.

Driving down the road half an hour before her midnight curfew, she and a carload of her friends thought they saw someone they knew in a car up ahead. They pulled alongside and waved.

They were wrong. The people in the car weren't friends, and the attention they gave these strangers was unwanted.

A block or so later, still jittery from the insults they suffered from innocently greeting other human beings, my daughter and her friends were attacked.

They were trapped at a stoplight between a man on a motorbike and the strangers' car while a maniac beat on my baby's little gray Honda, hurling threats and challenges to get out and fight.

Get out and fight.

As they cowered and cried, this shirtless, tattooed stranger took out a knife and in his frustration, punched a hole in the metal roof of my daughter's car.

The light changed, and my daughter floored the accelerator, catapulting them to safety.

All in all, they were lucky.

As terrifying as the what-ifs are, and as expensive as it's going to be to fix the car, I'm happy that I still have my child.

All four teenagers are alive and – having had a good scare – now are aware of danger that they didn't imagine before.

But the question now is, what do we do about this insanity? Move? Where? What town or city is safe? Do I restrict her from driving after dark?

Do I tell her to avoid major town arteries, even if that is the only way to take her friends home? Do I tell her to carry a gun?

Dammit, a kid ought to be able to ride down the road with her windows down. She ought to be able to laugh and wave at other people without risking her life.

A man ought to be able to jog in his neighborhood without risking robbery.

What is the matter with people? Isn't life hard enough without going around picking fights?

I have my hands full just keeping up with laundry and bills and a job and two teenage daughters. I have a stomach-full of conflict right in my own world.

My husband says this town is full of people eager for a butt-kicking. They don't care whether they receive the kicking or administer it, just as long as somebody's butt gets kicked.

That's crazy.

How can we give peace a chance, when we're too afraid to take chances?

I don't like living like this, and worse, I don't know what I can do to change it.

My guess is, lots of us feel this way. If you have ideas that work, please, please let me know.

Ask Crapo to ban plutonium

I agree with Congressman Crapo most of the time; he is a very good man. But when Mike Crapo ran for Congress, he said, "The environmental concerns of the Magic Valley are just as important as the economic concerns for the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory in Idaho Falls. Sounded good, but reality is that Mike refuses to write a bill to ban the burial of billions of deadly plutonium particles in the soil over our water supply – the aquifer. Mike now says, "the Department of Energy does not need micro-management by Congress!"

While DOE documents reveal meltdown problems with their new nuclear experiment, the Integral Fast Reactor, that doesn't stop Mike from spending endless hours volunteering Idaho for front-line duty, using the word "safe."

As nuclear documents calmly discuss disaster plans for "impounding foodstuffs and alternative water supplies," do you feel good that Mike Crapo is "betting the farm" for you?

As we try to teach our children not to prostitute themselves for easy money, how come Mike will do anything for INEL money?

Well, maybe because Mike has enough money from tobacco and nuclear lobbyists to advertise his way through Congress, to the Senate, then on to Lobbyland, like Sen. McClure, where the real money is.

While "clean-up" plans simply rebury cancer-causing particles, it seems like nothing has changed since 1988.

The local INEL "information" office pumped $1 million into Magic Valley businesses in the first year. This year, more than $4 million came drooling down the federal pipeline. That's the only change, getting our local leaders addicted to the tax-money feeding trough.

I like Sen. Laird Noh; he is a good man, too, but maybe that is why this powerful chairman refuses to lift a finger to help stop the burial of plutonium. I guess our water supply is not as important as being polite.

I know you folks are busy, but a 1-minute call to Mike Crapo at 734-7219 asking him to ban the burial of plutonium in Idaho might ... ahh, never mind.

Don Sipion will be missed

The letter by Marilyn Blackburn about Don Siplon was superior and very true. It should get many, "I second the motion."

Don Siplon was and is always aware of the rights and needs of the people. His research and tabulation of important public issues were thorough.

American Legion Post 7 had the opportunity to benefit from such tabulation but blatantly refused. The post will never be the same.

We who have had the opportunity to be friends and supporters of Don Siplon always will feel that someone and something special had come our way. Florida is lucky.

Beware, after-hours swimmers

It has come to our attention that recently a number of individuals have been swimming at the Jerome Recreation District pool at night after the facility has closed for the day. As fun as this may be for the swimmers, it is very dangerous and potentially life-threatening to those who choose to swim at this time.

In order to eliminate this hazard in the future, the Jerome Recreation District is hereby notifying any individuals caught swimming after normal business hours that they will be prosecuted. We simply cannot allow those who choose to trespass to jeopardize the safety of themselves as well as those who are with them.

We appreciate your cooperation in helping us maintain a safe and enjoyable environment for Jerome area youth.

Valley racing needs coverage

I don't usually write to the editor, but I feel that this deserves your attention.

I realize that not everyone is as excited about stock car racing as I am. I also realize that there are more exciting things going on in the community, but give me a break! Please don't send the recipe reporter to cover the races.

Last week the report consisted of two paragraphs with the race drivers' names spelled incorrectly. This week, so far, nothing has been reported. The speedway deserves at least as big a headline as the College of Southern Idaho rodeo. The racers don't abuse animals to entertain you, but we do have a few exciting moments.

Maybe you can send out a reporter that knows a race car from a bucking bronco to cover the races. We work hard and we deserve better.

Illegal aliens are threat

If the current level of immigration is not stopped, the U.S. population will soar from 250 million to 500 million in the next 50 years, warns Susu Levy, president of the Foundation for Optimal Planetary Survival in Encino, Calif. To tolerate the way things are is to commit national suicide.

Illegal aliens are ripping off American taxpayers to the tune of $13 billion a year, according to Rice University Economist Donald Huddle. Congress is doing nothing about it.

In five states, illegals are draining $2.9 billion yearly in federal, state and local funds, according to the General Accounting Office. Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., has introduced a bill to cut immigration by 175,600 a year, reducing the quota from 650,000 to 500,000. It is this writer's opinion the reduction should be 500,000 a year. Simpson's legislation addressed legal immigration only.

Illegal immigration must be stopped. All illegal immigrants must be returned to the country of origin.

Citizens of this country are expected to obey the laws. Why are exceptions being made for illegals?

In Florida, the state's human services agency spent $27 million to provide illegal aliens with food stamps and $512 million to service 131,000 students to a limited English-proficiency program.

In total, Florida's state and local governments spend in excess of $2 billion every year to provide these services. The Department of Corrections spent $44 million to incarcerate criminal aliens.

If federal, state and local governments do not take control, illegals will gain control and this country will no longer be a United States.

Write to your senators and representatives. Time is running out.

Let's affirm, not end, single-gender schools

Kenneth F. McKenzie Jr.

Those who call for an end to the single-gender admissions policies of The Citadel and the Virginia Military Institute are missing the point.

This is not about equal opportunity for women in the military. Women make an irreplaceable and increasing contribution to our nation's armed forces, but that has no bearing on the admissions policy of these two schools.

It does, on the other hand, have a very real bearing on the admissions policies of the federal service academies. These schools exist solely for the purpose of providing professional military officers. Women deserve the professional opportunities the academies offer just as men do, and that is why women are very properly at those institutions today.

The Citadel and VMI cases are about the value of single-gender educational development for young males and whether it should be publicly funded. While military in organization and adversative in their approach to the educational process, these colleges are not intended to produce officers for the armed forces. Less than 25 percent of the graduates of these colleges choose to enter the armed forces upon graduation.

These schools seek the optimum in male development – academically, morally and physically. Both schools use a military framework because it's one of the most effective and time-tested ways to impose structure on young males, but it's much more than just a military regimen. In fact, the heart of these colleges is their single-sex environment, not their military systems.

The single-sex environment is instrumental in focusing the individual on character as well as academic development. An overwhelming body of educational evidence clearly supports the efficacy of this educational approach. It is based on well-researched differences in male and female socialization.

Many – not all – young males respond well to an adversative single-gender environment. By the same token, a more supportive single-gender educational environment is beneficial for many – not all – young women. This is a demonstrable fact, buttressed by the testimony of many of the pre-eminent educators in this country.

The nature of the environment at these two schools is oriented solely on male development. The undisputable efficiency of their system is linked to their single-gender status. If they are required to become coeducational, this fundamental, defining feature will be gone. The single-gender nature of these institutions is more important than their military structure. A coeducational adversative process will remove the most important element of their success.

No reasonable person will dispute that it is the responsibility of the state to ensure equal and nondiscriminatory educational opportunities for all its citizens. Most reasonable people will also agree that in so doing it is hardly necessary to destroy existing, time-proven institutions.

It is not necessary for all parties to lose. If there is a demand for women's single-gender, baccalaureate degree-granting institutions – either adversative or supportive – then the Commonwealth of Virginia and the state of South Carolina should establish them and so expand choices for female citizens without removing an existing, effective option for males – in other words, an inclusive option that affirms educational diversity.

Conversely, disrupting two existing institutions, forcing a coeducational solution that irrevocably tears apart the engine of their success, is an exclusive option that removes reasonable choices from the state's male citizens, stamping out diversity while denying women the opportunity to partake of a single-sex system themselves.

This is a ruthless homogenization of education in the name of abstract justice driven by its own insidious gender stereotyping rather than an action based on educational imperatives. In the long run, it will do far more harm than good to the young men and women involved.

To paraphrase the Rev. Jesse Jackson, we must practice the politics of inclusion – the expansion of opportunities for all concerned. Should we fail to uphold diversity now, this trend toward nihilistic, unthinking homogenization will lead to the destruction of America's women's colleges, both public and private. Almost all of them receive some form of public funding and are ultimately vulnerable to this type of attack.

The choices are stark and clear, and the time to act is now – through the affirmation of the single-gender educational process, and, if necessary, the expansion of single-gender opportunities to all citizens. The solution is not expedient exclusion, but rather broad inclusion.

GOP's attack dogs continue to gnaw on Clinton

Molly Ivins

I'll say this much for the American media: We gave O.J. Simpson more benefit of the doubt than we ever give Bill Clinton.

For further evidence, see The New Yorker's June 20 issue for "The Friends of Paula Jones." And what a swell crew of reliable sources they are.

The good news of the day is that Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, whom Republicans must have selected as their lead attack dog on the Clintons' integrity because they couldn't get Bob Packwood, turns out to have made $37,125 in a single day in a speculative stock deal himself.

The House Republicans are now taking their political strategy from Rep. Newt Gingrich. They have decided to go ahead and be the grinches who kill health care. (We need a new verb for this. Gingrinching?)

There is a distinctly surreal quality to the health-care debate now that the Republicans are gingrinching. "Americans don't want a government health-care plan," they cry, citing polls showing that the insurance industry's multi-million-dollar campaign has indeed succeeding in poisoning some of the support for Clinton's plan. A government health-care plan, terrible idea, some government bureaucrat making decisions about health care." As though insurance company bureaucrats weren't routinely making the decisions now. They carry on as though this were the most outre, unheard of, outrageous idea yet conceived. Every other advanced nation on Earth has figured out a way to provide health insurance to all its citizens. It's not mysterious or unworkable or new – ask a Canadian.

So much of this debate is just silly. We've been trying to fix health care in this country for half a century, and administration after administration has come up to approximately the same conclusions. Dwight D. Eisenhower did when we spent only 7 percent of the gross national product on health care, not the 14 percent we now spend.

The status quo is not an alternative. Nor is there anything remotely radical about Clinton's plan; it's not some far-out deal that has to be killed because Clinton won't compromise. The Clinton plan itself is the compromise of a compromise of a compromise, and even so, it was deliberately designed to be a framework for negotiation rather than a detailed plan. How absurd to pretend that Clinton's plan is too rigid. Both Clinton and his plan are so notoriously flexible that his next job should be as a yoga instructor.

So nice to see Gingrich, along with D'Amato, in the brain (?) trust to get Clinton. I've thought Gingrich had an unusual sensitivity about the problems of seriously ill people ever since I learned that he gave divorce papers to his first wife while she was in the hospital for cancer treatment.

And the American Medical Association is doing its part. The doctors' guild announced last week that it would use a new method of computing the median salary of doctors; the old median of $177,000-plus is getting to be an embarrassment. The AMA will now factor in the salaries of doctors who work for government and people who are still in training to become doctors.

This is an interesting notion: Do CPAs add in the salaries of all the kids still in CPA school when they look for their "median"?

It's probably not news to you, but greed and self-interest are in the lead in the health-care reform sweepstakes.

An Air Force B-52 bomber crashed into flames Friday at Fairchild Air Force Base in Spokane, Wa., killing all four people aboard. The low-flying plane was in a steep bank when it corkscrewed to the ground and exploded in a fireball. These pictures were taken from an amateur video camera.

Ex-flyer believes pilot error caused crash

HAYDEN LAKE (AP) — The crash of the last B-52 bomber at Fairchild Air Force Base near Spokane took retired U. S. Air Force Col. Richard LeFrancis back almost 40 years, to the moment the first B-52 went down in flames.

In the earlier accident, mechanical failure sent the bomber plunging to earth from 30,000 feet.

Judging by the television footage he saw of Friday's crash, Col. LeFrancis of Hayden Lake believes Fairchild's B-52 may have gone down because of pilot error.

"First of all, he was too close to the ground to be making the maneuver," the career military pilot said. "In my estimation, it all happened too fast — he couldn't catch the controls in time."

"That means he was making a left turn," he said, agreeing with eyewitness accounts that said the B-52 was engaged in a steep left bank just before the crash.

Such a severe, banking turn probably caused the plane to stall, he added, by negating the pressure on the top and bottom of the wings. At a higher altitude, the aircraft would have gone into a spin in reaction to the stall. At just over 300 feet above the ground, the B-52H showed a similar response before it hit the ground.

"It looked to me like he was just beginning to do that," LeFrancis said.

The retired combat pilot stressed that he does not hold himself up as an expert on the Fairchild accident. But, with three wars and many flights in various configurations of the B-52 under his belt, he is more than passingly familiar with the aircraft.

On Feb. 21, 1956, LeFrancis learned moments after it happened that the first B-52 bomber had crashed.

At the time, he was assigned to the 328th Bomb Squadron of the 93rd Bomb Wing at Castle Air Force Base in Atwater, Calif. In the heat of the Cold War, that disaster — as well as an accident that claimed the second B-52 on take-off two weeks later — never went public.

The colonel said of the first B-52 to crash: "They were flying at approximately 30,000 feet on a training mission."

A piece of metal from one of four alternators run by hot compressed gases flew off and ruptured the fuel tank. By the time the radar-bombardier and the navigator noticed smoke pouring into the plane, the cockpit above them was engulfed in flames.

"The cockpit was being flooded with fuel," LeFrancis said. "The co-pilot told me he was actually up to his shoulders in kerosene when he blew out."

Four crew members ejected before the B-52 exploded — the same number of men that lost their lives in the Fairchild crash. The pilot of the 1956 bomber went down with his plane.

Fairchild cancels show amid tragedies

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — Rocked in four days by a mass murder and a fatal B-52 crash, Fairchild Air Force Base canceled a planned air show and tried to make sense of a tragic week.

Base counselors who had worked round the clock to comfort families of victims of Monday's shootings by a disgruntled ex-airman reactivated a crisis line after Friday's crash.

"It's a tragic loss for us at Fairchild, twice in one week. It's a very sorrowful time for us," said Sgt. Allen Geisler, a base spokesman.

The base's last B-52 crashed in flames Friday, killing all four aboard, on the same day funeral services were conducted for two Air Force therapists who were among those killed Monday.

Maj. Jerry Brown Saturday identified the victims as Lt. Col. Arthur A. "Bud" Holland, the pilot, born in Suffolk, Mass., Lt. Co. Kenneth S. Huston, the navigator, born in Avenal, Cal., and two instructor pilots, Col. Robert E. Wolff, born in Chicago, and Lt. Col. Mark C. McGeehan, born in East Liverpool, Ohio. Ages and most recent hometowns were not immediately available.

Yard sale profits to block low-income homes

NAMPA (AP) — Nampa's West Park Neighborhood Association has held an old-fashioned yard sale for money to block construction of a housing development for low-income renters.

About 100 families sold their old stuff Friday and Saturday outside West Junior High School to raise money for the association's lawsuit against the city of Nampa.

As of Friday afternoon, the group had $500 in the till.

At issue is the proposed New Hope subdivision that the City Council approved this month.

It will include 16 single-family homes on 3.2 acres of land. Each three-bedroom home will rent for $320 a month to families that meet income qualifications. Mercy Housing Inc., the nonprofit developer, broke ground on June 18.

The lawsuit, filed June 13 in 3rd District Court, charges the city with planning violations and three city officials with conflicts of interest. It asks a judge to order a redraft of the plan.

Water reservoirs low

"We're asking people to curtail their outside watering to allow us a chance to refill the reservoirs and get the system back up. We're not asking people to cut down on inside usage," Boise Water Corp. Vice President Ben Hepler said.

Ex-border guard faces jail for taking bribes

SPOKANE (AP) — A fired U.S. border guard and his wife have been sentenced to a year in prison for accepting bribes to allow marijuana to be smuggled in from Canada.

Roderick Neil MacKenzie, 48, who worked for the U.S. Immigration & Naturalization Service for 23 years, and his wife, Marie "Bert" MacKenzie, 52, a contract employee for U.S. Customs, were arrested Dec. 19 by FBI agents and drug task force detectives.

Both pleaded guilty to three charges on April 7 and were sentenced Friday to concurrent one-year prison terms by U.S. District Judge Justin Quackenbush. The couple will be allowed to voluntarily surrender when a prison is designated.

Quackenbush said Mrs. MacKenzie's addiction to alcohol and marijuana ruined the lives of the couple.

Unattractive have rights

Did you see the Associated Press story out of Salt Lake City last week about the group that's organizing to battle discrimination against those considered physically unattractive?

It's about time. Ugly is beautiful.

Those of us with brown-paper-bag faces, radar-dish ears, corn-stalk cowlicks, sweaty upper-lips, bad teeth, and profiles like the Sta-Puft marshmallow man in August have for too long cowered in the shadow of lookism.

It's no fun startling small children, playing Ichabod Crane in the school Halloween pageant, and placing ahead of your schnauzer in dog shows when your important contributions to aesthetic sensibility are forgotten the first time Claudia Schiffler sashays by.

Homely is a long and proud American tradition — from Ben Franklin through Chelsea Clinton — that celebrates the incorruptibility of bags, wrinkles, warts, bulldog snouts, bad haircuts, braces, big pores, bow-legs, thick ankles and, above all, cellulite.

Steve Crump
Don't ask me

An honest man looks you in the eye, shakes your hand firmly, and has a face that makes you want to howl at the moon. A virtuous woman has a mustache, piano legs, and jiggling bags of fat hanging from her upper arms named Floppy and Bob (with apologies to Garrison Keillor).

Truth be told, bone-ugly lies at the heart of America's great Calvinist tradition, the one that makes you feel guilty if you buy even a tube of Chap-Stik.

Seventeenth century Puritans who fled persecution and civil war in England left their compacts and eye-liner behind in Southampton, and plainness was considered such a virtue that the Plymouth Colony forbade the possession of mirrors. (Which is why, of course, a New Englander was able to write "America the Beautiful" some years later).

Seductiveness, savoir-faire, grace, sex appeal — they're all just tarted-up French imports designed to make the 49ers forget they were out of beer.

For beauty, you see, is as corrosive as it is corrupting, and the country started to go to hell in a hand basket when an electorate enamored of flappers and bathtub gin chose pretty-boy Warren G. Harding over hound-dog plain Alabama Sen. James W. Cox in 1920.

Harding's crowd was as crooked as his smile, and within three years he was dead of cigarrets, whooskey and wild, wild women.

He was succeed by Calvin Coolidge, whose face only a mother could love — a mother with a sense of humor. But Coolidge quickly wearied of being compared unfavorably with a mountain in his native Vermont and he dropped the country right into slick Herbert Hoover's greasy palms.

The rest is history. With three exceptions, America has been run by the Brooks Brothers ever since.

The first was Harry Truman, with a bow-tie like an apostrophe, a haircut like a sheared sheep and wardrobe like a fire sale at Montgomery Ward.

You always knew what was what with Harry, and if he made Winston Churchill look tall just by standing next to him, who the hell cared?

The second was Dwight Eisenhower, who cut a reasonably dashing figure as a general but as president deteriorated into a dumpling left too long in the sun.

Didn't matter. The country was on automatic pilot, inflation was at 2 percent, unemployment at 4 percent, and even the farmers were happy. The man was a magician; in fact, I think he shared Merlin's tailor.

The last great homely president, of course, was Richard Nixon. Couldn't have gotten elected today; would have broke the Steadi-Cam. But the man was a genius at being ill at ease, reflecting the insecurities and social disgraces of half the country.

Nixon always looked like the hardware salesman from North Dakota who makes it to the final round of the "$64,000 Question" and forgets his own name on national television. Didn't matter that he turned out to be a crook; he was real people, and he carried 49 states against McGovern in the middle of the Watergate scandal.

Bob Dole, Pat Buchanan, Pat Moynihan, Tom Foley, William Bennett, Rush Limbaugh, Ross Perot — they'll never be president. Too plain, too average, too bad.

The world belongs to the blow-dried and liposuctioned, and beauty hasn't equalled truth since Marie Antoinette got her charge account at Filene's.

Arise, Plain Janes and Homely Harolds; you have nothing to lose but 20 pounds.

But don't scare the cat.

Exclusion could beget lawsuit

Lawmaker pushes for compensation program to cover farm workers

By Frank E. Lockwood
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS – A Republican state legislator says he'd like to see Idaho farm workers covered by the state's worker's compensation program by next year.

If the state continues to exclude this largely Hispanic work force from coverage, Rep. Jesse S. Berain, R-Boise, says the legislature – and the Idaho Farm Bureau Federation – could face a class action lawsuit.

Once a migrant worker at the Twin Falls labor camp, Berain toiled in the potato, tomato and onion fields of the Magic Valley and in the cotton fields of Arizona. He remembers the harsh realities many workers face.

"You're talking about the lower tier of our economic structure," Berain said. The current law reveals "a lack of sensitivity and concern for those who have no power" – impoverished laborers who are unable to "put money in reserve in case they get hurt on the job."

Farm-worker advocates say the current law discriminates on the basis of race. Berain refrains from name-calling but says the farming community could "certainly show a different type of sensitivity and commitment" by supporting his proposal.

Idaho is one of seven states that doesn't mandate worker's compensation coverage for farm laborers. Berain, the first Hispanic to serve in the legislature, tried unsuccessfully last winter to change that.

The House State Affairs Committee killed Berain's bill, but the legislature set up a committee to study the issue. The committee, composed of legislators, farm workers and food producers, met earlier this month, and will meet again July 12 in Boise.

Despite the early legislative setback, Berain predicts change is coming.

"I think there's a willingness to compromise and come up with something that everyone can live with," he said, noting that even die-hard opponents "see the end coming."

But without an exemption for small family farmers, Berain and others say the changes could face substantial opposition.

Rep. Steve Antone, R-Rupert, said worker's compensation is a touchy topic in the Magic Valley, an idea that faces a lot of opposition from "individual farmers that don't like to be pressured into spending more money" by the government.

Nonetheless, Antone sees some merit in the proposal.

"In the long run, it's a good protection for farmers because they're protected from lawsuits under worker's compensation," he said.

Injured workers can sue their employers for lost wages, pain and suffering, and medical expenses. Under Berain's proposal, however, worker's compensation would be the only remedy for injured workers, helping employers avoid costly legal fights.

If the interim committee omits small farmers and crafts a well-worded proposal, Antone said he might back it.

Also watching closely is the Idaho Farm Bureau. Cherie McCandless, a research analyst and lobbyist for the bureau, thinks farmers are willing to compromise, but says her organization won't take an official position until its annual meeting in December.

McCandless is concerned that farm workers would still be able to sue employers in addition to receiving worker's compensation.

The Farm Bureau lobbyist also worries about the small farmers who are "inundated with federal mandates" and the dishonest workers who might defraud the system.

Despite her concerns, McCandless didn't rule out compromise.

"If they're fair with us, then we're willing to compromise. I really believe that, (though) I can't say for sure till December," she said.

But she didn't wait until winter to answer charges of racism.

"Discrimination plays absolutely no part in this as far as I'm concerned," she said. She estimates that 98 percent of field workers are Hispanic, but says this statistic is irrelevant.

Marchers celebrate Jesus

Born-again Christians march for Jesus

By Frank E. Lockwood
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS – Born-again Christians from across the Magic Valley took to the streets in Twin Falls Saturday to "take a stand for Jesus" and spread their evangelical message.

The flag-waving, banner-carrying crowd of 250 people that marched from the Blue Lakes Mall to the city park was part of a "Global March for Jesus." Thousands of Americans in more than 500 cities, plus millions of Christians worldwide participated, organizers said. Sponsors billed the event as "the most massive prayer gathering in history."

With picket signs and spirited shouts, the event resembled a conventional political rally. But these folks weren't present to protest – they were lining up to "proclaim Jesus" and to pray for the nation.

Pastor Fred Barton of Overcomer's Christian Fellowship said it's time to "come out in public, outside the church doors, and make a statement."

"In the big cities, you always have people marching," he said. "Nazis march, transvestites march, homosexuals march, it's time for the Jesus people to march," Barton said.

Many of the marchers shared his enthusiasm. A group of "praise dancers" from Aberdeen danced "unto the Lord," waving ribbons and pompons shaped like stars of David. Others, clutching tambourines, were leaping and shouting and praising God.

Mothers pushed infants in strollers, grade school children pedaled bikes, and a man on a jumbo-sized motorcycle joined the procession, his radio blaring gospel music. A couple of Christians in wheelchairs also made the mile-long journey, eager to share their faith with their neighbors.

Members of the Salvation Army were on hand and in uniform, their color guard marching in the procession. A church van followed the parade route, offering rides to stragglers and overheated marchers.

The interdenominational multitudes praised the Lord as they paraded down Blue Lakes Boulevard.

"Give me a J-E-S-U-S" they chanted. "Jesus! Jesus! Jesus!" Then they sang about the "power, power, wonder-working power in the precious blood of the Lamb."

Police cars, with lights flashing, escorted the marchers, halting traffic temporarily along the way. But most folks didn't seem to mind the momentary delay. Along the route, motorists honked and waved. Business people poked their heads outside to view the spirit-filled spectacle pass.

Pastor Ted Mangini of Winepress Christian Fellowship said this outpouring of exuberance was appropriate.

"We're excited about who Jesus is. We're excited that He loves Idaho. We're excited that He loves Magic Valley and this is just an opportunity to celebrate," he said. Mangini and his associate pastor helped keep the celebration festive, leading chants, cheers and choruses for the Lord.

Many of the marchers wore gospel T-shirts, their chests veritable billboards for – among other things – salvation, sexual abstinence, and the second coming of Christ.

At the end of the parade route, the marchers gathered at the fountain in City Park to pray and honor God. One of those who bowed her head in silent reverence was Bertha Torres Sullivan of Filer.

She said her reason for marching was simple: "Because I love God, because I love Jesus, and because He died for me on the cross. So walking for him is nothing to me."

Reinke spent $11,000 for commission seat

By Sean L. McCarthy
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Becoming a county commissioner is a costly endeavor.

For Twin Falls County Commissioner Brent Reinke, winning the May 24 Republican primary election for the 1st District cost him upward of $10,555, according to post-election financial reports filed with the county clerk.

Reinke defeated his three opponents comfortably for the GOP's 1st District nod and was appointed June 3 to fill out the remainder of Norma Blass's term as commissioner. Blass resigned June 1 to take a job with The Times-News.

Reinke has raised a total of $11,107 toward his primary and general election campaign. That is $4,500 more than second-place finisher Gary Grindstaff of Buhl raised.

No reports had been filed by Republicans Charles Barnes and Doug Howard or by Democrat Dave Bailey.

Reinke

Grindstaff

Reports from the 3rd District showed that John Etheridge – who finished fourth in the five-way GOP commissioner race – had $1,434 still in his bank after the primary election.

Etheridge had raised $2,917, more than any of the other 3rd District GOP candidates who had filed campaign finance reports by Friday. Pam Dowd, the Republican nominee, had not filed her report yet. They were due Thursday.

Deputy County Clerk Larry Haycock said all of the candidates would be given a five-day grace period to turn in their finance reports.

Also in the 3rd District, David Williams spent $2,330 and Daleine Talbot $447 in their losing efforts. Bob Wright, a staff sergeant at the county jail who finished second to Dowd, spent a little more than $700 on his campaign. Wright donated the $101 balance he had remaining to Volunteers Against Violence.

On the Democratic side, 3rd District nominee Dennis Maughan reported campaign earnings of $1,109 through the 30-day post-primary period. Maughan had spent $684, leaving him $425 in available cash.

Democrat Linda Medley of Hansen had not filed her report by Friday.

In the coroner's race, incumbent Gene Turley spent about $1,312 in defeating fellow Republican Bill McDaniel, an investigator in the county sheriff's department. McDaniel spent $321.

Turley has no Democratic challenger.

Albert 'Pete' Petersen

BURLEY – Our teasing, joking Cowboy Pete has taken the long trail back home. Every breath was a struggle but the smiles came easy. Rather than taking his annual birthday fishing trip, he journeyed this birthday into a far better place. He is now surrounded by all his animals he cared for and by all the people that loved and preceded him. He wanted to do so much for so many. The need came from all the many talents and occupations that he had. Ranching, livestock, trucking and carpentry were his fondest love. All occupations throughout his life surrounded by those inspirations. Dad, we will never be apart; your memories are always in our hearts.

"It makes absolutely no difference to us what country they come from," she said.

Though she's heard threats of legal action, McCandless says her organization isn't among the bad guys.

"We're not against workers compensation for our farm workers," she said. "We're not against protecting our farm workers at all."

Committee co-chairman Sen. Roger Madsen, R-Boise, said he hopes to avert "an expensive, time-consuming, emotional and divisive" court battle. "The legislative process is a much better avenue" he insists.

In the meantime, the Boise attorney and consultant says he's "committed" to finding a solution that unites "people of goodwill" and protects both farm workers and small farmers.

Despite the differences, Madsen sounds optimistic.

"I think there's more promise now than there's ever been with this contentious issue," he said.

Soaking in the sights

Sunbathers dot banks; crowds watch boats race at Burley regatta

By Liz Wright
Times-News writer

BURLEY – Faster boats, more out-of-state spectators and larger crowds have changed the face of the Burley regatta with each passing year, longtime fans said Saturday.

But some things never change.

"The women never change, though the bathing suit styles are different this year. I think they were better last year," Croft said.

Whether connoisseurs of turbo-charged engines, admirers of the opposite sex or parents with their children, the several hundred people who crowded Waterfront Park seemed to enjoy the 18th edition of the Mini-Cassia area's largest annual event.

The aroma of coconut butter mingled with the heat waves as the temperature climbed into the upper 90s. Prompted by events' emcees, people got up and jumped into the cool river water between races.

Throughout the day, trucks from California, Montana, Arizona and beyond pulled high-performance boats into the Burley City Golf Course parking lot. Locals chatted with the racing boat drivers in the "pit."

> 'I think even the girls get goosebumps over those fuel alcohol-blown boats.'
> — Brad Bakeler, of Declo

"It's really a rush to be out here," said Brad Bakeler, who brought his relatives from Declo. "With the speed of these boats, you really get a thrill from them. I think even the girls get goosebumps over those fuel alcohol-blown boats."

Golfers on the nearby course teed-off and got a first-class view of the races. Drivers gunned their engines and waved to the crowds as they circled an island on their warm-up laps. Camera shutters snapped, and video cameras rolled.

Hungry spectators ate their hamburgers and french fries and sipped cool drinks from over-worked food booths. Crumpled beer cans were strewn under lawn chairs. The Budweiser beer garden was a predictable success.

Around 4:30 p.m., about a dozen women and four little girls registered for a bikini contest. They took turns climbing up on a picnic table and strutting it's length. About 100 on-lookers roared their approval.

"I used to be a model; it's kind of fun," said Dawn Blackwell of Jerome. Blackwell didn't draw the most hoots to win, but the announcement of her favorite activity drew loud applause.

"Let's try to keep this one PG folks," Bob Thompson, radio announcer for KZDX–FM, said before the contest.

Terry Strickland, proud father, climbed up on the table and held up his two-month old daughter, Brittni. The infant was decked out in a neon swimsuit and sported yellow sunglasses.

One driver flipped his boat in the early afternoon, but emerged unscathed. Police who patrolled the grounds had similar luck - no fights broke out.

"You can be a Democrat or a Republican or whatever, but when you come to the boat races, you're neutral," said Mike Garner, a farmer in Raft River. "It really brings the community together."

The Budweiser Idaho Regatta 1994 continues today at 10 a.m. at Waterfront Park. The racing boat drivers will receive their awards at 7 p.m.

Minidoka schools name new principals

By Eric Goodell
Times-News correspondent

RUPERT – Steve Hubsmith, formerly principal at Minico High School in Rupert, will serve as principal at West Minico Junior High next school year.

In another move, Bob Stearns has been selected to be principal at Big Valley Elementary in Rupert.

"I think it will be a good experience," Hubsmith said of his calling.

Hubsmith requested to be transferred from Minico in March after some controversy regarding a letter he received from Superintendent Michael Bishop.

In the letter, Bishop questioned Hubsmith's abilities to lead the high school.

Bishop said on Friday that he was confident Hubsmith would do well at West Minico.

"I think he'll do a great job," Bishop said.

Hubsmith said he was looking forward to working at the junior high school.

"They have some excellent faculty and I think positive things will happen at West Minico," he said.

Hubsmith will take the place of Gary Stears, who is seeking employment elsewhere, Bishop said.

Bishop said a committee composed of patrons, teachers and school board members picked Hubsmith and Stearns to fill the positions.

It was Stearns' management style in working with teachers and parents that impressed the selection committee, the superintendent said.

"The teachers see him as a colleague who is strong in team management and leadership," Bishop said.

Stearns previously served as a an assistant principal who rotated between Paul Elementary and Big Valley.

Senate rejects amendment, 44-54, to broaden Whitewater inquiries

States News Service

WASHINGTON — Here are the votes of Idaho senators and local representatives on key legislation in Congress this past week.

Senate votes:

1) Bill: Whitewater — The Senate rejected Tuesday by 44-54 vote an amendment to a bill (S. 229) outlining the scope of impending Whitewater hearings that would have broadened the inquiry. The Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee will investigate Clinton administration meetings related to the Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan as well as the suicide of White House counsel Vincent Foster.

Senators Larry Craig and Dirk Kempthorne, both Republicans, voted to broaden the Whitewater hearings.

2) Bill: Treasury — The Senate passed Wednesday by a 72-27 vote a spending plan (H.R. 4539) that would provide $23.6 billion for fiscal year 1995 operations at the Treasury Department, the U.S. Postal Service and White House offices. The measure, which would provide a 1.6-percent pay raise for federal employees, was not controversial. The House passed a plan earlier this month that would give employees a 2.6-percent pay hike.

House votes:

1) Bill: NEA — The House on Thursday approved by a 380-41 vote a measure that would cut National Endowment for the Arts funding by 2 percent — about $3.4 million. The House had earlier rejected attempts by conservative Republicans to exact greater cuts.

Rep. Mike Crapo, Republican, and Rep. Larry LaRocco, Democrat, voted to support scaled-down cuts to NEA funding.

The attendance record tracks the cumulative attendance of members to date when they are physically present for roll call votes.

Senate attendance, present and voting:

Craig 99.28 percent, Kempthorne 99.64 percent.

House attendance, present and voting:

Crapo 98.74 percent, LaRocco 98.39 percent.

Gas prices explode for holiday

BOISE (AP) — The Fourth of July will be exploding at least one place in Idaho this year — the gasoline pumps.

Based on its holiday Fuel Gauge survey of 87 stations in four geographic areas of the state, the American Automobile Association of Idaho says the price for a gallon of self-serve unleaded gasoline has shot up over 8 cents per gallon in the last month. The rates are up from $1.12 a week prior to Memorial Day to the present average of $1.20.

"The state's fuel prices were low and stable for the first five months of the year," says Automobile Association spokesman Dave Carlson. "But since mid-May they have risen dramatically." He says it is unknown if motorists will see more increases at the pumps soon.

Idaho's prices are among the highest in the nation. The state's average price is 9 cents higher than the national average of $1.115. Prices were down in all regions of the country except the West for May.

Seasonal demand may be one factor behind the high Western prices.

Higher gasoline prices in the West apparently are not putting a damper on travel plans. The American Automobile Association says 6.4 million motorists in the West are expected to travel. That is a 14 percent increase over 1993.

TWIN FALLS – Emil P. Amen, 66, of Twin Falls, died Saturday, June 25, 1994, at the Twin Falls Clinic & Hospital.

He was born Feb. 8, 1928, in Flint, Mich., the son of Bishara and Marcella Amen. He graduated from high school in Flint. His family moved to Los Angeles in 1946. During the Korean War, he served in the Army at Richland, Wash. He married Beverly Mickelson on July 14, 1957. They had two children before moving to Colorado in 1963. In 1974, the family moved to Twin Falls. He owned and operated his own businesses, but his greatest pleasure came from the outdoors. An avid hunter and fisherman, he enjoyed hiking and camping in the Idaho mountains.

Survivors include his wife, Beverly of Twin Falls; one son, Derek Amen of Reno, Nev.; one daughter, Susan Wells of Portland, Ore.; and his three brothers, George, John and Louis Amen, all of Los Angeles, Calif. He was preceded in death by his parents and an older brother, Joe.

Funeral services for Emil Amen will be conducted in Los Angeles. Friends may call from 4 to 8 p.m. Monday, June 27, 1994, at White Mortuary in Twin Falls.

Girl moved, still critical after boat accident

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS – The 12-year-old girl who was hit by a motor boat Friday when she was water-skiing was transferred Friday evening to St. Alphonsus Medical Center in Boise.

Jami Powlus of Fruitland remained in critical condition Saturday evening according to a hospital spokeswoman. Powlus suffered severe injuries to the back of her head and arm.

Powlus was incorrectly identified as Jami Beaman in Saturday's Times-News.

Compensation

"It makes absolutely no difference to us what country they come from," she said.

Though she's heard threats of legal action, McCandless says her organization isn't among the bad guys.

"We're not against workers compensation for our farm workers," she said. "We're not against protecting our farm workers at all."

Committee co-chairman Sen. Roger Madsen, R-Boise, said he hopes to avert "an expensive, time-consuming, emotional and divisive" court battle. "The legislative process is a much better avenue" he insists.

In the meantime, the Boise attorney and consultant says he's "committed" to finding a solution that unites "people of goodwill" and protects both farm workers and small farmers.

Despite the differences, Madsen sounds optimistic.

"I think there's more promise now than there's ever been with this contentious issue," he said.

Soaking in the sights

Sunbathers dot banks; crowds watch boats race at Burley regatta

By Liz Wright
Times-News writer

BURLEY – Faster boats, more out-of-state spectators and larger crowds have changed the face of the Burley regatta with each passing year, longtime fans said Saturday.

But some things never change.

"The women never change, though the bathing suit styles are different this year. I think they were better last year," Croft said.

Whether connoisseurs of turbo-charged engines, admirers of the opposite sex or parents with their children, the several hundred people who crowded Waterfront Park seemed to enjoy the 18th edition of the Mini-Cassia area's largest annual event.

The aroma of coconut butter mingled with the heat waves as the temperature climbed into the upper 90s. Prompted by events' emcees, people got up and jumped into the cool river water between races.

Throughout the day, trucks from California, Montana, Arizona and beyond pulled high-performance boats into the Burley City Golf Course parking lot. Locals chatted with the racing boat drivers in the "pit."

— Brad Bakeler, of Declo

"It's really a rush to be out here," said Brad Bakeler, who brought his relatives from Declo. "With the speed of these boats, you really get a thrill from them. I think even the girls get goosebumps over those fuel alcohol-blown boats."

Golfers on the nearby course teed-off and got a first-class view of the races. Drivers gunned their engines and waved to the crowds as they circled an island on their warm-up laps. Camera shutters snapped, and video cameras rolled.

Hungry spectators ate their hamburgers and french fries and sipped cool drinks from overworked food booths. Crumpled beer cans were strewn under lawn chairs. The Budweiser beer garden was a predictable success.

Around 4:30 p.m., about a dozen women and four little girls registered for a bikini contest. They took turns climbing up on a picnic table and strutting it's length. About 100 on-lookers roared their approval.

"I used to be a model; it's kind of fun," said Dawn Blackwell of Jerome. Blackwell didn't draw the most hoots to win, but the announcement of her favorite activity drew loud applause.

"Let's try to keep this one PG folks," Bob Thompson, radio announcer for KZDX–FM, said before the contest.

Terry Strickland, proud father, climbed up on the table and held up his two-month old daughter, Brittni. The infant was decked out in a neon swimsuit and sported yellow sunglasses.

One driver flipped his boat in the early afternoon, but emerged unscathed. Police who patrolled the grounds had similar luck - no fights broke out.

"You can be a Democrat or a Republican or whatever, but when you come to the boat races, you're neutral," said Mike Garner, a farmer in Raft River. "It really brings the community together."

The Budweiser Idaho Regatta 1994 continues today at 10 a.m. at Waterfront Park. The racing boat drivers will receive their awards at 7 p.m.

Minidoka schools name new principals

By Eric Goodell
Times-News correspondent

RUPERT – Steve Hubsmith, formerly principal at Minico High School in Rupert, will serve as principal at West Minico Junior High next school year.

In another move, Bob Stearns has been selected to be principal at Big Valley Elementary in Rupert.

"I think it will be a good experience," Hubsmith said of his calling.

Hubsmith requested to be transferred from Minico in March after some controversy regarding a letter he received from Superintendent Michael Bishop.

In the letter, Bishop questioned Hubsmith's abilities to lead the high school.

Bishop said on Friday that he was confident Hubsmith would do well at West Minico.

"I think he'll do a great job," Bishop said.

Hubsmith said he was looking forward to working at the junior high school.

"They have some excellent faculty and I think positive things will happen at West Minico," he said.

Hubsmith will take the place of Gary Stears, who is seeking employment elsewhere, Bishop said.

Bishop said a committee composed of patrons, teachers and school board members picked Hubsmith and Stearns to fill the positions.

It was Stearns' management style in working with teachers and parents that impressed the selection committee, the superintendent said.

"The teachers see him as a colleague who is strong in team management and leadership," Bishop said.

Stearns previously served as a an assistant principal who rotated between Paul Elementary and Big Valley.

Senate rejects amendment, 44-54, to broaden Whitewater inquiries

States News Service

WASHINGTON — Here are the votes of Idaho senators and local representatives on key legislation in Congress this past week.

Senate votes:

1) Bill: Whitewater — The Senate rejected Tuesday by 44-54 vote an amendment to a bill (S. 229) outlining the scope of impending Whitewater hearings that would have broadened the inquiry. The Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee will investigate Clinton administration meetings related to the Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan as well as the suicide of White House counsel Vincent Foster.

Senators Larry Craig and Dirk Kempthorne, both Republicans, voted to broaden the Whitewater hearings.

2) Bill: Treasury — The Senate passed Wednesday by a 72-27 vote a spending plan (H.R. 4539) that would provide $23.6 billion for fiscal year 1995 operations at the Treasury Department, the U.S. Postal Service and White House offices. The measure, which would provide a 1.6-percent pay raise for federal employees, was not controversial. The House passed a plan earlier this month that would give employees a 2.6-percent pay hike.

House votes:

1) Bill: NEA — The House on Thursday approved by a 380-41 vote a measure that would cut National Endowment for the Arts funding by 2 percent — about $3.4 million. The House had earlier rejected attempts by conservative Republicans to exact greater cuts.

Rep. Mike Crapo, Republican, and Rep. Larry LaRocco, Democrat, voted to support scaled-down cuts to NEA funding.

The attendance record tracks the cumulative attendance of members to date when they are physically present for roll call votes.

Senate attendance, present and voting: Craig 99.28 percent, Kempthorne 99.64 percent.

House attendance, present and voting: Crapo 98.74 percent, LaRocco 98.39 percent.

Gas prices explode for holiday

BOISE (AP) — The Fourth of July will be exploding at least one place in Idaho this year — the gasoline pumps.

Based on its holiday Fuel Gauge survey of 87 stations in four geographic areas of the state, the American Automobile Association of Idaho says the price for a gallon of self-serve unleaded gasoline has shot up over 8 cents per gallon in the last month. The rates are up from $1.12 a week prior to Memorial Day to the present average of $1.20.

"The state's fuel prices were low and stable for the first five months of the year," says Automobile Association spokesman Dave Carlson. "But since mid-May they have risen dramatically." He says it is unknown if motorists will see more increases at the pumps soon.

Idaho's prices are among the highest in the nation. The state's average price is 9 cents higher than the national average of $1.115. Prices were down in all regions of the country except the West for May.

Seasonal demand may be one factor behind the high Western prices.

Higher gasoline prices in the West apparently are not putting a damper on travel plans. The American Automobile Association says 6.4 million motorists in the West are expected to travel. That is a 14 percent increase over 1993.

U of I professors: Anti-gay initiative would hamstring them

MOSCOW (AP) — University of Idaho faculty worry that if the state's anti-gay initiative is passed, students would be hard-pressed to read the works of poets Walt Whitman or Oscar Wilde.

The same is true in other disciplines.

The initiative would make it illegal to expend public funds to promote homosexuality as an acceptable lifestyle.

Some faculty members at Idaho see that as restrictions on their ability to teach and contradictory to the university's mission as conveying higher learning.

Gary Williams, English Department chairman, said if the Legislature tried to proscribe what could be taught in the classroom there would be defiance from Idaho professors.

"I think you would see the faculty rise up against it en masse," he said.

If instructors were forced to censor references to gay or lesbian lifestyles, many works of literature could not be discussed in the classroom, Williams said. So many works speak positively of same-sex relationships, instructors' hands would be tied.

Poems by Whitman are an example. How could a 19th century American literature course be taught without discussing Whitman, whose works allude to his homosexuality, Williams asked.

"You could leave it out, but what you would offer would not be a credible course (outside Idaho)," he said.

"Gay rights is one of the cutting-edge issues in constitutional law," MacDonald said.

If the initiative is passed by voters it will probably be struck down by the courts, he said.

"No matter how I felt about an issue, I would not be sympathetic to any limits to how I can teach ... I have already decided I would be a scofflaw and ignore it."

Sociology professor Ginna Babcock said the idea of ignoring a section of the population runs counter to the ethics code for the sociologists' professional association.

She teaches a family and marriage class that discusses different family styles — including gays and lesbians. Babcock said she brings in homosexual couples to her classes when she covers the subject.

"They're out there, I don't ignore them," she said. "The topic of my life work is people, groups of people."

She is currently studying divorced mothers denied custody of their children. Some are lesbian. Babcock said she is unsure if she would be eligible for state funding if she includes them in her research.

Unified GOP has chance, Batt says

Batt

LEWISTON (AP) — The Idaho Republican Party has killed the only pro-term limits resolution proposed at this year's state convention.

The effort was lead by Speaker of the House Michael Simpson of Blackfoot and state Representatives Ruby Stone of Boise and William Deal of Nampa.

The GOP's silence on the issue is one more example of the party's excluding issues which divide it like the Idaho Citizens Alliance's proposed anti-gay initiative.

But gubernatorial candidate Phil Batt says the party is ready to make sweeping improvements in the state.

"In all my political career, I've never seen this party so unified," the former lieutenant governor said Friday at the GOP convention in Lewiston.

Vowing to end "24 years of stagnant bureaucracy" under Democratic governors, Batt told the delegates, "If we stand together and work, we will win."

At the helm of the Republican Party, Batt revived the GOP in 1992 after it suffered heavy losses in the Legislature and statewide races.

Often-contentious committee meetings on the party platform wrapped up without touching abortion or this year's hot social issue — the anti-gay initiative sponsored by the Idaho Citizens Alliance.

Alliance chairman Kelly Walton said he will support Batt, although the candidate opposes the initiative.

"Phil Batt and I agree on many more issues than we disagree on," Walton said. "I run a small business. I need the government off my back."

Batt said Republicans can make inroads in the traditionally Democratic Lewiston area by identifying with the problems of timber towns.

"Perhaps nowhere else in Idaho are the crippling effects of misguided federal policy and lack of state leadership more apparent than right here in Lewiston," he said, "and I hope members of the timber unions understand that jobs are at risk."

Batt said he is a friend to working men and women, even though the Idaho AFL-CIO has endorsed Democratic opponent, Attorney General Larry EchoHawk.

Batt added he looks forward to making changes in "the entrenched educational establishment."

Anne Fox, the GOP hopeful for state school superintendent, will help the state get its educational priorities in order, he said.

Fox pledged Friday to do away with outcome-based education.

Fire burns 10 acres in wilderness area

MCCALL (AP) — Twenty smokejumpers were sent Saturday to battle a hot-burning 10-acre fire in the Frank Church-River of No Return Wilderness Area.

Payette National Forest officials said another 20-person crew was dispatched to the blaze, 54 miles northnortheast of McCall on McCalla Creek. It apparently was started by lightning on Friday, but high winds prevented smokejumpers from reaching the fire until Saturday.

Krassel District Ranger Fred Dauber flew over the blaze Saturday and said it was burning in a pocket of spruce and fir surrounded by lodgepole pine. The blaze was burning in the general direction of Root Ranch six miles away.

Dauber said the fire was unusually aggressive for June. Usually, moisture keeps material from burning rapidly but this year, moisture is at mid to late August levels.

Dems must prove virtue, Mauk says

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — Idaho Democrats in November must confront a philosophical opponent as steely as any Republican in voters' cynicism, their leader says.

State Democratic Party Chairman Bill Mauk opened the four-day convention Friday by urging Democrats to remind voters that good people do get involved in politics.

"I am struck by the sense we have lost something of fundamental importance," he said. "We seem to have lost our spirit of optimism."

Mauk said distrust of politicians afflicts Republicans as well.

Watergate and assassinations of political leaders helped create the social ill. But it's not a fatal condition.

It can be cured by promotion of fact-based campaigns that resist character attacks.

The theme was echoed by Bethine Church, the widow of former U.S. Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho. Though frequently pressed to run for office herself, Church demurs. Her role is to encourage participation in politics.

"A lot of people need someone to show them being a Democrat is something to be proud of, that there is honesty in politics," Church said.

More than 200 Democrats are meeting behind enemy lines in heavily Republican eastern Idaho. Events include candidate training, especially useful to first-time candidates.

Mauk also urged Idaho Democrats to retake some of the moral righteousness claimed by the far right of the Republican Party.

He said Democrats have to appeal to voters who place a high priority on family values.

"We have to learn to talk to people of faith," Mauk said. "We have ceded the high ground to our opponents for too long. The Democratic Party is a party of values."

Democratic candidates, he said, must not let their opponents paint them as "less religious, less virtuous and less Christian."

Haiti slum: Sun, soccer and near-starvation

Now look closer. Only two have shoes. Their clothes are in tatters, already used when they came from a foreign charity and worn since by numerous older brothers and sisters. The skin of the small rubber ball was worn away long go.

The field? It's a slab of cement where an aluminum shack once stood, one of more than 800 destroyed in a fire that swept part of the sprawling slum called Cite Soleil six months ago. The site is now a vast expanse of rocks, rusted metal, broken glass and fly-infested piles of garbage.

Cite Soleil means Sun City, and it's a worthy name: The sun beats down relentlessly on windowless aluminum shacks, separated by narrow dirt alleyways, that house about 25,000 people.

Political crises come and go in Haiti, but life in places like Cite Soleil just gets harder.

Makelo Marcelin, 8, will walk home from the soccer game at sundown to a one-room shack, slightly larger than a jail cell, that he shares with his parents and their seven children.

He ate just one meal on this day — a thin soup made of bread, oil and water that his mother cooked over a small charcoal fire late in the afternoon.

After dark, there is nothing to do but sleep. The single lightbulb in the shack sometimes works if you rig two wires together, but the family has no books to read or TV to watch.

Makelo has no homework because there has been no money for school fees since the tourists stopped coming and his father Jean's income as a guide vanished.

Most of the children will lie on a cotton sheet on the dirt floor of the airless 8-by-10-foot shack, but Makelo's parents will take at least one into the lumpy double bed. His two oldest brothers shared a narrow bunk until one of its thin aluminum legs snapped.

After bedtime, the coughing begins.

Jean, 49, has severe attacks of asthma every night. Madeleine, his wife, props her husband's frail, shaking body up on pillows as he heaves and hacks uncontrollably.

"Because he's suffering, we cannot sleep," said Mrs. Marcelin, a thin, serious woman of 38. "It's worse when there's a full moon."

"I cannot buy the medicine I need," Jean said wearily. "I have no money."

When it rains, which it does in torrents for half of the year, water pours through cardboard patches that cover holes in the walls and roof.

"It floods," Madeleine said.

During a hard rain, Jean puts the youngest two children, 4-year-old Gary and Margarete, 18 months, up on a tiny wooden table to sleep and sits beside them so they won't fall. Madeleine pulls a bucket on the bed to catch the water gushing through the roof and the family huddles together until the storm passes.

The floor has been built up with flat rocks so the water will drain out the door. Sometimes it works, but not in a hard rain.

In the morning, the sun is back. The Marcelins wake early, hang sheets and clothing on ropes to dry, then go to a community toilet a few minutes' walk away that is open only in daylight.

When it doesn't rain, 19-year-old Madiana stands in line to buy five or six gallons of water, carrying it home in a wide red basin balanced on her head. The water must serve the whole family for drinking, cooking and washing.

In a clearing outside the house, Madiana crouches over a small bucket, holds her purple tunic in front of her breasts and soaps herself, calmly meeting the eyes of passersby.

After bathing, she dresses in a corner of the room while her brother Kims, 20, tinkers with a toy truck he made for Gary from metal cans that held donated food. On the hood, it says USAID. The wheels are made from old sandals.

Each day, Jean walks several miles to an art museum hoping to find foreigners he can refer to a craftsman of Haitian art, earning a commission. But few foreigners come around these days, so he usually brings home just a few coins from begging.

Kims also creates wall decorations by cutting intricate designs into sheet metal with a hammer and chisel, then painting the finished product.

"Sometimes my father finds people to buy them," he said.

Shortly before sunset, Jean heads for the market to get food for the next day's meal. Flies crawl on open baskets of grain, seeds and vegetables. Jean picks out two green breadfruit and buys some rice.

Roosters run around, dogs bark, people push and shove. Putrid smoke from burning garbage clings to clothing.

Two youngsters play makeshift flutes, one fashioned from an old vacuum cleaner hose, the other from a plastic pipe.

Not in Sun City.

What's next for Haiti from U.S.?

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — The Clinton administration is poised to revoke the U.S. visas of all Haitians as part of escalating sanctions aimed at restoring Haiti's elected president, a source said Saturday.

The action would follow last Wednesday's ban on all financial transactions between this impoverished Caribbean nation and the United States, its major trading partner, and Friday's suspension of direct commercial flights.

Revoking all U.S. visas would have a jarring effect in Haiti. It would affect upper-class Haitians and army officers who send their children to school, own property and investments in the United States or simply go there to shop and visit.

But it also would affect many more less wealthy Haitians who have relatives in the United States.

The intent of the U.S. measures, combined with the U.N. trade and oil embargo, is to pressure Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras and his top commanders, who overthrew President Jean-Bertrand Aristide in 1991, to step down.

Yemen troops push on

SAN'A, Yemen (AP) — The southern stronghold of Aden, besieged for most of Yemen's 7-week-old civil war, came under heavy artillery and rocket barrages for a third straight day Saturday.

The port city of 350,000 — plus 50,000 refugees — lost electricity at midday and also was without running water, the Kuwait News Agency, which has a correspondent in Aden, reported.

It said the main power station, nine miles west of Aden, was under artillery fire. More than 3,000 southern troops have been mobilized to defend the western entrance to the city, with fierce tank battles under way, the agency said.

Clothier has Reagan with AIDS

ROME (AP) — The Italian clothier that continuously courts controversy with provocative advertisements has come up with a new startler: Ronald Reagan as a victim of AIDS.

The magazine has yet to reach newsstands, but posters with the picture have appeared on the street in New York.

Benetton's publicity machine has attracted a lot of attention over the last few years with ads such as one showing two models, dressed as priest and nun, kissing.

The photographer behind the series of controversial photos, Oliviero Toscani, denied the retouched photo of Reagan was a provocation.

In Friday's La Stampa newspaper, based in Turin, Toscani criticized both Reagan and former British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher for their AIDS policies.

"They didn't understand anything about AIDS, they did everything wrong. They never realized the emergency," he said.

Township attack results in 5 dead on eve of peace meeting

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Assailants killed five youths and wounded two in the Tokoza black township on the eve of a peace meeting Saturday between militias of rival political groups.

Several men opened fire Friday night through a window of a house where the victims, aged 10 to 20, were staying, township residents told the South African Press Association.

There was no immediate comment from police on the identities of the attackers or victims.

The attack was similar to a massacre of 12 people last month in Tokoza, southeast of Johannesburg, that police blamed on a rivalry between forces set up by the African National Congress and Zulu nationalist Inkatha Freedom Party.

Jesse Duarte, the minister for safety and security in the new provincial government for the Johannesburg region, said Friday's attack appeared intended to undermine a peace meeting Saturday between the rival militias.

ANC supporters in Tokoza refused to attend the meeting because of the attack, which witnesses claimed was carried out by Inkatha supporters from Zulu workers' dormitories in the township. Militia units from other townships held the meeting anyway, the press association reported.

South Koreans mark invasion anniversary

IMJIN-GAK, South Korea (AP) — Forty-four years ago Saturday, North Korean troops streamed across this river valley as they launched the invasion of South Korea that began the Korean War.

Yun Ki-hyon watched as poorly armed South Korean soldiers tried vainly to stop the onslaught.

"I first knew the North was invading when I saw waves of refugees swimming across the river toward us," says Yun, now 80.

Yun's village was burned to the ground on the first day of the conflict. The fighting ended three years later with a 1953 armistice, but 2 million troops still face each other across the world's most heavily armed border.

Small groups of South Koreans, including Yun, gathered here to mark the anniversary, many peering quietly across barbed-wire fences toward the Communist North. Some prayed for peace.

"The tragedy can't be allowed to happen again," said Lee Chae-suk, a 67-year-old veteran. "I would rather die than experience the war again."

Fears of renewed fighting arose this month over the North's refusal to allow full inspections of its nuclear program and subsequent U.S.-led threats of U.N. sanctions.

North Korea says its nuclear program is for peaceful purposes, but other nations suspect it is developing nuclear weapons.

In Seoul, South Korea's capital, about 80,000 Christians gathered to pray for a peaceful resolution of the nuclear tensions and for reunification.

President faces tough battle

KIEV, Ukraine (AP) — President Leonid Kravchuk, a former Communist boss and now the favorite of Ukrainian nationalists, faces six challengers today in presidential elections in this former Soviet republic.

Kravchuk, elected 2½ years ago by a comfortable margin to steer Ukraine to independence, faces a much tougher battle this time around.

The conviction that independence would bring higher standards of living has since evaporated. In its place are economic decay, disillusionment with political leaders and the emergence of extremist organizations pitted against each other along regional lines.

With more than 2 million of Ukraine's 53 million people officially out of work and the average monthly salary below $20, Kravchuk's rivals have made the moribund economy the centerpiece of their campaigns.

Former Prime Minister Leonid Kuchma, Kravchuk's principal rival, claims to have a quick fix to Ukraine's woes: economic union with former Soviet republics, with special attention to restoring close ties with Russia.

That message and a promise to elevate Russian to the status of an official language is sure to win votes among Ukraine's Russian-speaking minority, which is concentrated in the depressed industrial south and east bordering Russia.

"We rely on Russian raw materials, energy and spare parts to keep our enterprises working," said Victoriya Miroshnichenko, 39, an assembly-line worker in a turbine factory in the eastern city of Donetsk. "It doesn't take a genius to see we need a common currency with Russia and the removal of trade barriers."

But in staunchly nationalist western Ukraine, in provinces that were not absorbed into the Soviet Union until the 1940s, Kuchma's program implies the end of Ukrainian statehood and the return of authority to Moscow.

Cease-fire talks canceled in Bosnia

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Bosnia's latest cease-fire was close to collapsing Saturday after the United Nations failed to bring the warring sides together to talk about salvaging it.

A credible truce is considered vital to international efforts to negotiate a settlement to Bosnia's 26-month-old war. The current truce took effect June 10 and was to last a month.

As reports of heavy artillery fire filtered in from the north, U.N. officials in Sarajevo scrapped planned talks between Bosnian Serb and government military and political chiefs.

The U.N. commander in Bosnia, Lt. Gen. Sir Michael Rose of Britain, hoped talks would cool main battlefronts and produce an accord to curb recent sniper fire in Sarajevo.

A U.N. spokesman, Maj. Rob Annink, said senior military and political officials of the Muslim-led government balked at taking part. They apparently wanted to discuss only the agreement to stop sniping.

That was not enough for the Serbs, who had been agreeable to a meeting of top officials. Even so, it was uncertain whether Serb commander Gen. Ratko Mladic would have attended.

Annink said the United Nations was trying to get the two sides to meet Sunday, but he couldn't say whether either had accepted.

Fighting continues in Rwanda

KIGALI, Rwanda (AP) — The United Nations called off plans to move 600 refugees out of battered Kigali on Saturday after a newly struck truce between rebel and government forces collapsed within hours.

France sent more troops in on the third day of its U.N.-authorized mission to stop the bloodshed, raising the total to about 1,000 soldiers.

The French forces, based in border towns in Zaire, sent scouts by helicopter to western and southwestern Rwanda to check on the needs of hundreds of thousands of refugees fleeing the ethnic slaughter.

The French Defense Ministry said other European countries may send troops to the Central African nation, and Italy said it would send a fact-finding mission to Rwanda to determine if its troops could help with relief efforts.

Heavy fighting in Kigali since Monday night has made it impossible for the United Nations to safely get refugees out of the chaotic city.

About 300 people, mostly children, were to be evacuated from St. Michel Cathedral in government-held Kigali to the eastern suburb of Kabuga, and an equal number were to be transferred from King Faisal Hospital in rebel territory to Runda, 12 miles west.

But heavy artillery fire broke a truce struck a few hours earlier Saturday, making the rescue impossible, said a U.N. military spokesman, Maj. Jean-Guy Plante.

A lull in the fighting did allow 70 people to be taken from the overcrowded Red Cross Hospital, which is in the government-controlled area and has repeatedly come under fire, to King Faisal Hospital.

Britain vetos EU chief choice

CORFU, Greece (AP) — The European Union was thrown into disarray Saturday after Britain vetoed the choice of the other 11 nations for chief executive, reflecting British unease at moves toward a more united Europe.

EU powerhouses France and Germany said they would try again to name Belgian Premier Jean-Luc Dehaene as successor to Jacques Delors, who will step down early next year after nine years in the trading bloc's top job.

But a defiant Prime Minister John Major of Britain insisted he would not back down.

Magic Valley Generation Xers have seen tomorrow, and it's a challenge

By Steve Crump
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Marti Wurzer has a job, friends, hopes and dreams, but no illusions.

"I'm gloom-and-doom," said Wurzer, at 27 part of the rank-and-file of what has become known as Generation X. "Our expectations of the future — well, we don't have a lot of delusions."

Out on the leeward slope of that great demographic mountain called the Baby Boom, Xers have run into stormy weather. The economy is mercurial, relationships unpredictable, and every time they turn on their beloved TV sets or venture into cyberspace, there's a talking head warning them they'll have to change jobs eight times before they retire.

To make matters worse, their parents are mostly living the American dream. Protected by jobs the Xers can't get and IRA's they can't afford, the boomers are living comfortably in six-figure homes and long-term relationships.

"My parents are Camelot," said Wurzer, who is divorced and works as a secretary. "That's not the case with a lot of people my age that I know."

Still, Wurzer isn't entirely comfortable with the Generation X label and some of the stereotypes that go with it, and neither are most Magic Valley twentysomethings interviewed for this story.

"I really resent being lumped with people who can't get a job and told I'm lazy and unmotivated," said Nicole Crawford, 29, of Kimberly. "When I couldn't get the job I wanted and make the kind of money I needed as a single mother, I started my own business and I made it succeed, and I did it with hard work."

But even Crawford, now the proprietor of her own home-cleaning business, finds herself still on the road to her dreams after 10 years of trying.

"When I went to college, I wanted to be a lawyer," she said. "Now I'm not so sure about lawyers. I'm thinking about becoming a paralegal."

More than anything else, the Xers are baffled by a world in which the rules seem to have changed.

"When I was growing up, the enemy was communism," said Ben Beck, a 26-year-old electronics technician from Twin Falls. "Now the black-and-white is gone, and everything is gray."

The Xers, technically the 38 million Americans born between 1964 and 1973, are betting the Social Security taxes they may never collect on a future that may be very different from their mothers and fathers'.

ANDY ARENZ/The Times-News

Marti Wurzer is one of 38 million Americans born between 1964 and 1973 who grew up on television and is finding life quite different than that of past generations.

What is Generation X?

Generation X is the media-manufactured label for people between 21 and 30, the young adults who followed the baby boom generation (those now between 31 and 48) that has dominated the post-Vietnam War era in the United States.

The name comes from Douglas Coupland's 1991 novel, "Generation X," about three aimless, disillusioned young drifters. But the classic profile of the Xers — TV-addled couch potatoes, cyberpunks, cynics who opt out of politics and dodge commitment — grew out of Richard Linklater's 1991 film, "Slacker," the movie that saddled the Xers with the label so many of them hate.

The evolution of Generation X paralleled the rise of alternative rock 'n roll, personified by the bands Nirvana, Pearl Jam and Nine Inch Nails — and especially by Nirvana's lead singer, Kurt Cobain, who killed himself earlier this year.

Buffeted by economy uncertainty, saddled by the boomers with a $4 trillion national debt, and traumatized by the fact that half of their parents' marriages failed, the Xers are supposed to be a messed-up generation without many prospects. According to the stereotype, they're smart but lazy, doomed by years of channel-surfing to decades of shuttling among low-paying computer and service jobs, and whining all the way.

Most Xers hotly dispute that image. A recent MTV poll reported that the term "Generation X" is used by just 10 percent of twentysomethings, according to the June 6 edition of Newsweek. And the magazine also said Xers ranked ahead of boomers in surveys of job satisfaction, employer loyalty, work ethic, personal satisfaction and dissatisfaction with conditions in America.

Demographically, boomers outnumber them by almost 2-to-1, hold most of the better-paying jobs and expect to keep them until they retire, to be supported by the then-middle-aged Xers.

That's in an America where the number of manufacturing jobs has fallen by one-third since 1970, virtually eliminating unskilled or semi-skilled labor as a career option.

During the same period, college costs have risen 600 percent, and for those who finally get their degrees comes the news that employment among Fortune 500 companies has declined by 10 percent just since 1990.

As a result, jobs have replaced careers and tomorrow ain't what it used to be.

"These are anxious times for people who are entering the work force," said Janell Hyer, labor market analyst for the Idaho Department of Employment. "But economic growth in Idaho has been so strong (since 1987) that we've managed to escape a lot of the problems they've had in other parts of the country."

In Idaho, job and career prospects for Xers are really not much different than they were for their parents, most of

Activities to cure kids of the summertime blues

By S. Carolyn Lewis
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — It's two weeks into summer vacation, just enough time for many kids to have become thoroughly bored.

Youngsters with nothing to do are the cause of more than a few cases of summertime blues among parents, but that can change in a hurry.

Kathy Thomsen of Twin Falls takes bike rides with her four kids, who range in age from 2 to 8 years. They also participate in weekly rollerskating outings and attend children's movies. Thomsen takes them to swimming lessons and involves them in helping prepare activities for the vacation Bible school that she directs.

"Living on a limited budget means finding free or inexpensive activities for family fun," Thomsen said. "We enjoy the band concerts in City Park and the reading programs the library offers in summer. We also try to camp in the South Hills at least once during summer."

Janis Shropshire and her two boys, ages 5 and 7, are already getting bugged this summer. Being home-schooled by their mom, the Shropshire boys continue their education year-round, and this summer they're busy identifying birds and collecting bugs.

Later the family will build several birdhouses that will become Christmas gifts after they finish a cookie-baking project in December. The boys also have planted a pumpkin patch and will sell their pumpkins in the fall.

Best of all, they're not bored.

"We always find time for one or two camping outings each summer," Shropshire said. "We also make several trips to the library. Then we take our books and a picnic lunch to an area park. I spread a quilt on the ground and read aloud to the boys for a while. They like that."

Most Magic Valley communities offer youth baseball and softball during the summer, and several cities make available a variety of programs. In most towns, one or more churches will sponsor vacation Bible school sessions.

Many public libraries offer summer reading programs for youth. Contact any church or

For Renae Lammers of Kimberly, being the mother of four boys, ages 5 to 13, means baseball every day through mid-July. Not only does she chauffeur the boys to practice sessions and games, she also coaches a time.

On top of that, Lammers also has a year-old daughter and a large garden to tend.

During summer, she stresses reading at home by providing a lot of books, having quiet times and limiting television-watching to an hour a day. The family takes a weekly fun outing to the children's movies at the Twin Cinema.

"I attend the movies with the kids," Lammers explains. "I want to know what they are seeing."

The Vedder family of Twin Falls began the summer with a three-week visit to relatives in Arizona and South Carolina. Later, the three other children will take swimming lessons and go to the city pool once or twice a week.

"A favorite activity for the entire family is swimming outings in the evening," Sharon Vedder said. "We all really enjoy them."

Summer activities for the Vedder kids include golfing with Dad, bowling, gymnastics and tee-ball. There are also weekly trips to the library and day-long outings to area parks several times during summer.

Kathleen Thom of Buhl plans to take her kids on picnics and swimming outings this summer. Later in the year, the Thom family looks forward to a two-week trip to Seattle and Canada to visit relatives and friends. Also a homeschooler, Thom plans educational projects related to wildlife and plants; otherwise, the family observes a break in schooling during the summer.

"I don't plan activities for them," Thom said. "Since we began homeschooling, they use their imagination a lot more. They don't tend to be bored much."

Xers

entered the labor market during Idaho's long boom of the 1970s, she said.

"The jobs are there, and they will continue to be there even if the economy slows down," Hyer said. "The only difference will be that new jobs will be created more slowly."

But job growth has not been matched by wage growth in Idaho, Hyer said, and therein lies one source of the Xers' discontent.

"People who live in Idaho tend to live here because of the quality of life," she said. "Not for the money."

"I was working in an office for $5 an hour trying to raise two little girls," Crawford said. "I heard that people were making $8, $9, $10 an hour cleaning houses, so I thought to myself, 'Why am I doing this?' "

"You can aspire to earn $40,000 a year in Idaho, and if you work at it a while, you can get there," Hyer said. "But you're probably not going to do it right out of school, and you may not get there until you're your parents' age."

Many of the Xers say they were warned by college and high school counselors to expect tough times in the real world, but most say those fears were exaggerated.

"I was told that there were 300 applicants for every three jobs in broadcasting," said Shawn Barigar, 22, a reporter for Twin Falls' KMVT-TV. "That just wasn't the case. I was lucky enough to find a job near where I grew up, but if I hadn't, I think I would have found a job after a while."

"Five or 10 years from now, I expect to be doing better than I am now," said Brian Mortensen, 28, a sportswriter for the South Idaho Press in Burley. "But maybe not as well as I once dreamed I would."

"I think people my age are realistic about a lot of things," said Amy Lockwood, 24, of Hazelton.

"We're not as willing to jump into marriage," said Hillary Brown, 20, of Twin Falls. "There's a lot of uncertainly — we're making sure we're prepared for jobs."

If that sounds very much like somebody from the class of '74, from the high noon of boomerdom, you're right — up to a point.

"We're more aware than any other generation of the power of technology," Beck said. "And things are changing fast."

Taking comic books from the adolescent to the educational

The Baltimore Sun

When comics artist Scott McCloud decided to suspend work on his ongoing comic "Zot!" to write a book entitled "Understanding Comics," most of his friends had the same reaction: What's to understand?

"It's the assumption on many people's part that we don't need to understand comics in order to enjoy them," admits McCloud.

"I think they're right to a degree. You don't need to dive underneath a lake to enjoy sailing across it. . ."

Islands of our youth are reached by a ship from our dreams

Aging
Lucille S. deView

Listen, Old Timer, I told myself. Summer's upon us. That deep whistle on your childhood excursion boat calls. It recalls again the thrill of leaning far — too far — over the railing as the boat pulled away from the pier.

My extended family made many trips up the Detroit River to Bob-Lo Island. We kids explored every inch of the boat while the adults chatted, played cards and guarded the picnic baskets.

We peered into the engine room almost level with the water, aghast at the huge machinery that made the deck beneath our feet vibrate.

We spent our pennies in the lounge, lined with souvenir and refreshment stands. There, the star attraction was the plaster fortuneteller in a glass case. Shove a coin into a slot, and one of her hands moved back and forth above some playing cards.

And we never tired of trying to manipulate the toy steam shovel into a heap of candy, hoping to grasp a too-large stuffed animal in its jaws.

In our early teen years, we gave up such childish pursuits. Forget waving to passing freighters. Forget nagging for popcorn or ice cream. Our mission: dance and flirt.

Little kids slid around the edges of the wooden dance floor on sprinkles of wax while we danced our hearts out to live music. We must have been a sight, trying to make our tangos look sexy.

Our curiosity about sex was insatiable. At Bob-Lo, we dashed past the amusement rides, toward the beautiful fieldstone dance pavilion, lured by the band music that echoed across the island.

And on the boat trip home, after dark, we trailed after these lovers as they floated like balloons to the topmost deck. There, under the stars, they cuddled. And more. We teens hovered like humming birds over a field of nectar, feasting on the sight.

We didn't have sex education in our schools in those days. We had it live, on the Bob-Lo boat.

I've thought often of making a sentimental journey up the Detroit River, but the years sailed past and now it's too late. The amusement park at Bob-Lo is being dismantled, I hear. One reason: It was reachable only by boat. Alas.

So this Old Timer is left only with memories, though they are most sweet.

Vital, living church should receive as much as we can give

DEAR ABBY: In a recent column, a reader complained about the amount of money he was expected to give to the church. Perhaps this piece will provide an answer to that question. I regret I don't know who the author is, but I hope you feel that it's worth sharing.

– BOB WHITMORE, EUGENE, ORE.

DEAR BOB WHITMORE: I do. And many thanks for sending it.

Last Sunday, another golfer sank the last putt on the 18th green and received a check for $50,000 for four rounds of golf, plus an automobile for himself and one for his wife. This week, the papers reported that a certain popular singer will receive $100,000 per week for her current singing engagement. Americans spend annually more on dog food than on church contributions. It is not unusual for an individual to pay more for his country club membership than he gives to the church. Is the church costing too much?

Let me share an experience with you. On June 2, 1940, a little girl was born to us. She cost us money from the moment she was born. As she grew from babyhood to girlhood, she cost even more — her dresses and shoes were more expensive, and we had to have the doctor through all those childhood diseases.

Dear Abby
Abigail VanBuren

She was even more expensive during her school and teen years. She needed long dresses to go to parties. When she went to college we discovered, along with other parents, that all college expenses are not listed in the catalog. Then after graduation, she fell in love and married. She was married in a church wedding and that, too, cost a lot of money.

Then, five months after her marriage, she suddenly sickened and within a week she was dead. She hasn't cost us a penny since the day we walked away from her grave.

As long as the church is alive, she will cost money. And the more alive a church is, the more money she will cost. Only a dead church, like a dead child, is no longer expensive. Think it over. Is the church costing too much? "

DEAR ABBY:

"My boyfriend (I'll call him George)..."

"My neighbor (I'll call him George)..."

"My boss (I'll call him George)..."

How many letters do you get that begin that way? Frankly, I'm sick of this Georgism. Whenever someone wants to complain about someone to you, they call him George. If I were George, I'd be feeling pretty bad right now. It seems like everyone who knows George thinks he must be a two-timing, couch-potato, back-stabbing, cheating loser. I mean, can't anyone think of a different alias for the bad guy in their stories?

Abby, please tell your readers that if they want to disguise some man's identity, there are alternatives to the name "George."

– NOT GEORGE IN TACOMA

DEAR NOT GEORGE: By George, it's Jake with me. I, too, am getting pretty tired of every Tom, Dick and Harry becoming "George" in order to preserve his anonymity.

DEAR READERS: Your chuckle for today: "I don't want to achieve immortality by being inducted into Baseball's Hall of Fame. I want to achieve immortality by not dying."

– LEO DUROCHER AT 81

Video answers questions about death, dying, preparing

Orange County Register

About a year ago, video producer Marion Ruggles asked a group of senior citizens what they would ask for, at this stage in life, if they could have anything.

"Money," several said.

"Good health," said several more.

Then, one man raised his voice above the others.

The man had just helped his mother plan her funeral. It took 30 days, but it was done and paid for and his mother was finally happy. If he could have anything, the man said, he would want the same.

Such was the inspiration for "The Forgotten Step," a 30-minute instructional video researched, hosted and produced by Ruggles, 67, a former television engineer who now runs his own video-production company.

"It's a very hard subject to think about, but everybody has one (a funeral)," said Ruggles, of Fullerton, Calif.

Stop car sickness before kids climb into back seat

You're halfway between home and lost, on a winding road in a rainstorm. The empty bags of Cheese-Doodles and soda cans rolling around the floor of the car are ominous portents of things to come from the three kids sitting in the back seat who are turning progressive shades of pea green.

Car sickness can happen to anyone, but children are more likely to suffer because their developing brains are more susceptible to the signal glitches. And because they can't always see out the windows when they're sitting in their car seats.

And children with chronic ear problems can be even more likely to have it.

"The inner ear is often involved," said Dr. Harry Romanowitz, chief of pediatriacs at Stamford (Conn.) Hospital. "When there's inflammation in the inner ear, the motion-sensing portions of the inner ear are affected and they're more susceptible to having it."

• Sit in the front seat. Of course, children must be in a car seat, but if they're older, the car seat should be facing forward and high enough so that they can see out the windows.

• Keep fresh air flowing. "It can take the edge off enough to make the trip bearable," Cass said.

• Make frequent stops so kids can get out and walk around.

• Don't let them read inside the car. "Have kids focus on things outside the car — traffic, signs, whatever — rather than things inside, like books or games," Romanowitz said.

• Give them a little something to eat before the trip.

• Take a Dramamine. Although Romanowitz cautions that in some children, the drug can have the opposite effect and make the child agitated. Check with your pediatrician.

• Eat some gingerbread. Ground ginger is a home remedy that's been said to help alleviate motion sickness. "I'd be willing to try it," Cass said. "I don't see a down side to it."

And should one of the kids experience motion sickness, or actually vomit, you should:

• Pull over and stop. Or remove your child if he or she's on an amusement park ride. "Immediately stop the activity that's causing the problem," Romanowitz said.

• Let the child lie down and rest for awhile. Sometimes a cool cloth on the forehead helps.

• Don't become angry or upset with the kid. He or she can't help it. Help the person be calm and reassured.

"A lot of people say it's all in your head and if you tell yourself you're not going to be car sick you won't be car sick," said Cass. "That's malarkey. It's a physical phenomenon." • Don't let car sickness become a habit. "It can be fostered and reinforced and become a pattern," Romanowitz said. "I've known families where they get into the car, pull over into a parking lot, the kid gets out and throws up and they go on their way."

Big woman still fighting for fat folks' rights

The Baltimore Sun

BALTIMORE — Well, she's still fat.

Regina Elizabeth Guy, the woman who proved to the Maryland Motor Vehicle Administration — and the world — that she's not too fat to drive, tips the scales at 336 pounds. Correction. Make that 336 luminous, in-your-face-and-proud-of-it pounds.

In 1990, Guy was a 25-year-old, 367-pound nursing assistant deemed by the Motor Vehicle Administration as too fat to drive a car without special equipment. She took that as a rebuke, and so did a great many other fat folks who made Guy's case a cause celebre.

Today, Guy remains a fat activist. She is organizing the Larger Than Life support group, a loose-knit group of about 15 fat friends and "FAs" (that's "fat admirers") who lean on each other for fun and support. It's a haven, of sorts, for large people stuck in this thin-obsessed world.

But way before Larger Than Life was a fleck of an idea, Guy was living an everyday kind of life, never suspecting her weight would land her on national news.

The saga began on a summer evening when Guy drove a friend's car with the high beams on. A police officer stopped her but did not mention her weight at that time. But a few weeks later, Guy received a letter from the MVA saying it was going to examine her ability to drive again.

She was also asked to appear at a hearing to explain why her license should not be revoked.

That letter quoted the officer as saying her weight made it impossible for her to sit behind the wheel of a car without special equipment. Guy got angry. Then she got a lawyer.

When the day for the hearing rolled around, local and national news media converged upon the scene en masse. Under the bright glare of television cameras, Guy successfully demonstrated to everyone that she had no problem driving her blue Dodge Aspen.

After that, Guy made national television appearances on the Oprah Winfrey show and CBS' "This Morning" to speak for the rights of fat people.

Today, the cameras are gone, but Guy is still active for her cause. And people shouldn't, in some misguided attempt at political correctness, refer to Guy as "weight-challenged," or even the seemingly benign "overweight."

Guy is quick —.quick — to correct those PC euphemisms.

"Fat! The word is fat! Not overweight," she says. "Over whose weight? Over what weight? Being called overweight is not acceptable, and 'fat' is not a four-letter word!"

Guy no longer works as a nursing assistant. She is busy starting a telemarketing business with a partner. And she has lost a few pounds, but not from dieting.

"I 'dieted' my way up to this weight," she says, explaining the effects of yo-yo diets. Guy concentrates on eating low-fat or no-fat meals now. "I'm not trying to lose weight. I'm trying to eat healthy," she explains.

She says things like her blood cholesterol and blood pressure are in good shape. Her weight goal? "If I could level off at 300 ..." she says, leaving the question unanswered.

It's important to let daughters know where you stand on issues

John Rosemond

Q. I have a five-year-old daughter with whom I feel I have an open and trusting relationship. The problem that I am at a loss to deal with involves my religious views. Through family members, kindergarten, and friends my daughter is exposed to a belief system that I do not share. I am not necessarily opposed to this, but I feel reluctant to share my religious views with her for fear that if she repeats my thought and ideas, she will be ostracized at a time in her life when she is not able to deal with it. And yet, she is beginning to ask me questions about my beliefs. In the past I have responded to her question with, "Yes, lots of people believe that."

Now, she ask

"Do you believe that?" How do I maintain the openness we have without endangering the relationships she has with others?

A. More important than the need to protect your daughter from having differences of opinion with other children is her need to know exactly where you stand on these issues.

At this time in her life, her need to identify with you takes precedence over peer affiliations and peer approval. You are her primary role model and she is consciously striving to patten herself after you — your behavior, your interests, your ideas. She looks to you to set the standards and wants only to follow your example. And yes, she will identify with your beliefs and claim them as her own.

You are also her primary source of security and will continue to be for the next seven years (or thereabouts) as she goes about finding a comfortable place for herself within her own generation. Before she ventures into new social territory, however, she must have a blueprint for behavior, and the directions must be clear. She depends on you to show her the way, but in this instance, it sounds as though she's having some difficulty "reading" you.

If you make it difficult for her to pin you down (remember, she doesn't know that you are trying to protect her), she will become "hung up" on the question, "What does Mommy believe?" The vague, evasive quality of your answers will frustrate her and stimulate feelings of insecurity. In an effort to reduce her anxiety, she will fixate on the religious issues until you clarify matters for her.

Furthermore, she may interpret your discomfort as a sign that you are ill-at-ease with your own beliefs — that perhaps you feel something is wrong with them. Otherwise, why the game of hide-and-seek?

I also think you may be overestimating the significance of her religious beliefs to her acceptance among her peers. A child's religious views, or the religious persuasion of her parents, is relatively insignificant to the social process at this age. Young school-age children don't ostracize one another because of differences in race, religion, politics, or what-have-you unless their parents encourage them to. The exception would be the child who wore her differences "on her sleeve."

Answer her questions, I would suggest, however, that instead of telling her what you don't believe, you answer her primarily in terms of what you do believe. Keep in mind that five-year-old children cannot understand philosophical abstractions. Explain your beliefs clearly, concisely, and concretely.

For the sake of trust.

Former students help compile history of Russell Lane Grade School

The Times-News

EDEN – Former students of the Russell Lane Grade School are compiling a history of the school, which was located west of Eden in Jerome County.

Betty Cozad Johnson of Boise is compiling information to prepare the history. She currently has a listing of events from about 1920 to about 1942.

More information is needed about the years from when the school started in 1908 to 1925 and 1935 to 1952, when the school was consolidated.

Johnson asks that former students of the Russell Lane Grade school bring whatever memorabilia they can spare to the Eden High School Reunion, set for July 9-10.

She is looking for newspaper clippings, stories and photos. Photos will be returned to the owner provided they have a name and address on the back.

She will be at the Weston Inn in Twin Falls on July 8 and the morning of July 9.

Anyone interested in seeing what is done so far or contributing to the history is encouraged to see her there.

The reunion features a banquet on July 9 at the Weston Inn in Twin Falls and a picnic beginning at 1 p.m. July 10 at the park in Eden.

Registration for the banquet and/or picnic may be made writing to Lela R. Masters, 301 E. Main, Buhl, ID 83316, or calling her at 543-5227.

Library's history campaign yields new books

By Melissa Gibson
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – A new microfilm reader/printer, historical dissertations and hundreds of new books are just some benefits from the Twin Falls Public Library Foundation's Idaho History Challenge campaign.

This short-term fund-raising effort is dedicated to raising more money to put into the library's Endowment Fund, said Foundation Executive Merlene York. This funding is then used to increase the amount of books and materials in the library, she said.

So far, the fund has reached its goal of $150,000, mainly through donations from corporations, businesses and private citizens, she said.

"People from all over town really help out," York said. "It's amazing how people will give."

One of the main benefits coming from these donations is a new microfilm reader/printer, said Library Director Arlan Call. The library did have one donated about 10 years ago, he said, but it was very expensive to keep the outdated machine in repair.

Thanks to donations from Mr. and Mrs. T.W. Stivers, Titlefact Inc., WestOne Bank and the Margaret de Jarnatt estate, the library was able to purchase a new machine about a week ago, said Call. It cost $7,500, he said.

"This type of resource is just wonderful for the library," said Call. "It's going to be really useful."

The Challenge campaign was successful in buying more than just equipment, he said. To date, the library has purchased 825 books for all library departments and 75 out-of-print books for the Idaho and Pacific Northwest Room.

The library searches for these rare titles nationwide, purchasing them for about $50 a piece, Call said. These books are all specifically about the history of Idaho and the northwest states, he said.

About 50 specific doctoral dissertations and master's theses from universities across the nation have also been purchased in order to "fill in the historical gaps," Call said.

The library uses the database at University Microfilms, where they are given a specific topic, and then locate the dissertations through a computer, he said. The bound copies are then sent to Twin Falls.

Other doctoral and masters theses are more difficult to find, he said, and it is necessary to search through bibliographies in order to locate them. It's "tough," but the library has been able to locate about 40 of them, he said.

The topics vary, but most are specific to Idaho, Call said. They range from general topics like Chinese-Americans in the Northwest to specific ones like women's roles in fur trading, he said.

The library also documents history through its collection of microfilm, he said. The earliest run of the Idaho Statesman, from 1864 to 1887 is in the collection, and the library has just recently acquired microfilm from 1887 to 1905, said Call. From that time on, the library carries all of the Times-News papers from 1909 to the present.

"These papers bring us through history," he said. "You can see how the area changed, and how the newspapers changed as well."

But historical documentation doesn't stop at the written word, said York. The Idaho room also has a number of oral histories about the beginnings of Twin Falls. Now, the Foundation has formed a committee to review those histories and document today's history for future Twin Falls residents, she said.

"After all," said York, "if you document what happens today, it is definitely going to have historical value later."

New book answers freshmans' questions

WASHINGTON (AP) — Claudia Seymour is thinking, "Wow! I can't believe it. I'm finally in college." Tempering her enthusiasm, though, are some nagging questions endemic to many incoming college freshmen.

What will life be like in the dormitories? How do you balance studies and social life? How do you help your parents let go?

Ten university faculty and staff members answer these and other questions in "Smart Start," a new book written to ease a student's transition from home to college.

Written in a conversational, question-and-answer format, the book addresses such issues as the last summer at home, relationships, dorm life, academics, security and health and nutrition. It includes recipes for those who don't like the dorm food, a Greek glossary for those thinking about joining a fraternity or sorority and guidance on taking notes during a class lecture.

"You are about to begin a very exciting journey," managing editor Melinda Dalgarn tells students. "It will be filled with joy and sorrow, success and failure, hope and disappointment. . ."

IOC sets Atlanta ticket prices

The Associated Press

LAUSANNE, Switzerland — It will cost just $6 for a ticket to a preliminary round baseball game at the 1996 Summer Games in Atlanta. It will cost a lot more — 100 times more — for the best seats at the opening and closing ceremonies.

Atlanta organizers announced their ticket prices Saturday after receiving approval of the executive board of the International Olympic Committee.

The average ticket price is $39.72, with more than half at $20 or less.

"We based our prices on fairness, equity and affordability," said Billy Payne, chief of the Atlanta Committee for the Olympic Games. "These will be the most accessible Olympic Games in history."

Adjusting for inflation, 90 percent of the tickets will be at or below the prices charged for the same events at the 1984 Los Angeles Games, Payne said.

He said 95 percent of all tickets will be priced below $75 and every sport will have at least one session with tickets available at $25 or less.

For the first time, the price of tickets will include free rail or bus transportation to and from the venues provided by Olympic organizers.

The highest prices will be for the opening and closing ceremonies, with $600 for the best tickets, $400 for mid-level seats and $200 for the cheapest. By comparison, ceremony tickets in Barcelona cost $500 for the best seats.

Many of the seats for the ceremonies will be held by Olympic officials, sponsors, athletes and media. Payne said the exact number of tickets available to the general public won't be known until later.

A total of 11 million tickets will be available, 50 percent more than in Los Angeles and 2½ times more than for the 1992 Games in Barcelona.

Tickets will go on sale starting in the spring of 1995, first by direct mail and later by phone. About 900,000 tickets are set aside for purchase outside the United States. Details of the purchasing process will be announced by the end of this year.

IOC director general Francois Carrard said the IOC was pleased most of tickets will be available at "moderate prices."

"We are satisfied that what we heard is a very good plan," he said.

Organizers hope to sell at least 60 percent of the tickets in order to achieve their projected revenue target of $260 million — out of ACOG's total estimated revenues of $1.58 billion.

By all indications, tickets will be in high demand for the centennial Olympics. Payne said one U.S. survey indicated more than 22 million Americans hoped to attend.

Nine sports have tickets over $75: the final session of track and field and finals of basketball, boxing, diving, gymnastics, soccer, swimming, tennis and volleyball.

The highest demand is expected to be for basketball, track, gymnastics, swimming, diving and volleyball, Payne said.

For track and field, tickets for preliminary events will range from $20 to $50, $45 to $75 for finals, and $75 to $250 for the final session.

The finals of basketball and gymnastics are the only other events with tickets going as high as $250.

The lowest-priced tickets will be for preliminary round baseball games at Atlanta Fulton County Stadium, home of the Atlanta Braves, with $6 for the cheapest seat. For baseball finals, the price will range from $20 to $60.

The cheapest ticket for any final event will be $10 for the dressage portion of equestrian.

ACOG released a list of comparative prices for major sports events of 1994, with tickets ranging from $25 to $475 for the World Cup soccer tournament, $30 to $125 for the NBA Finals, $175 to $250 for the 1994 Super Bowl and $20 to $500 for the Kentucky Derby.

Tickets will go on sale starting in the spring of 1995, first by direct mail and later by phone. About 900,000 tickets will be set aside for purchase outside the U.S. Details of the purchasing process will be announced later this year.

Becker, Navratilova advance to 4th round

The Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — Stomach churning, mind spinning, nerves shakier the closer she comes to a 10th Wimbledon title, Martina Navratilova got a curious tip from coach Billie Jean King: Stare at the wallpaper.

They didn't talk about the tactics Navratilova would use to beat Linda Harvey-Wild 6-3, 6-2 Saturday to reach the fourth round. Not a word about the serves that Harvey-Wild would barely touch, or the leaping overheads and volleys that would bring cheers from the crowd and loud whoops from King.

"What do you see on this wall?" King asked her in the house

Navratilova is renting.

"Striped wallpaper," Navratilova responded.

"What colors?" King asked.

Navratilova described the colors, the details, focusing on nothing but the wallpaper.

"It just got me in the 'now.' That's all you have to do," Navratilova said. "It's easier said than done, but I've been practicing it for a few years so I can get in it immediately. What time is it? Now. Where are we? Here. That's the whole ballgame. You can talk all kinds of psychological babble, but that's basically the bottom line — stay in the moment."

The wallpaper trick seemed to work. Navratilova, looking stronger and quicker as she goes along, yielded only three points on serve in the first set and was at the net almost before Harvey-Wild hit the ball.

"I was cruising," said Navratilova, upset by Harvey-Wild on grass in the second round of Eastbourne in their only previous match. That was no fluke, either. Harvey-Wild reached the final at Eastbourne on June 18.

"You do get better because your opponents get better, and also you get used to the court and the occasion," Navratilova said.

King was the loudest spectator in the Centre Court stadium, pumping up Navratilova after every winner.

"She's playing great, especially the last two matches," King said. "She's really happy now. She took her ritual walk on Centre Court before the tournament. She picked a couple of blades of grass. She's really happy for the first time since January. Her heart

U.S. attempts to 'Carpe Diem' again today

The Associated Press

PASADENA, Calif. — When the U.S. soccer team walked into its locker room at halftime Wednesday, coach Bora Milutinovic had written on the blackboard: "Carpe Diem," which is Latin for "Seize the Day."

The Americans did just that, beating Colombia 2-1 for their first World Cup win in 44 years. On Sunday, when they return to the Rose Bowl to play Romania, they have another moment to seize: clinching a spot in the second round for the first time in 64 years.

"We can almost qualify without playing," Milutinovic said.

The top two teams in each of the six groups advance to the knockout phase along with the four third-place teams with the most points. It's likely four points will be enough, but a tie or win will ensure advancement for the Americans.

"Now, everybody knows how nice it is to be successful," said U.S. defender Thomas Dooley, who won a German championship with Kaiserslautern in 1991.

If the Americans tie or win, the United States can win Group A, depending on how current leader Switzerland does Sunday against disappointing Colombia. A tie or a win against Romania also means the Americans will avoid playing Brazil or Germany in the second round.

And if they win the group, the Americans play their second-round game in the Rose Bowl against a third-place team. If they finish second, they would go to Washington and probably play Spain. If they finish third, they probably would play at Stanford, most likely against the Brazilians, but there's a chance they would go to Chicago, with Germany the probable opponent.

"We're in a position probably nobody expected us to be in right now," goalkeeper Tony Meola said Saturday.

Following the victory against Colombia and a 1-0 upset over Mexico in an exhibition game on June 4, the Americans regard the Rose Bowl as their favorite place to play.

"I want to play on the same field," Dooley said. "I don't want to go to Washington or Chicago or San Francisco."

Romania upset Colombia 3-1 last weekend, then lost to Switzerland 4-1 on Wednesday. The Romanians probably need at least one point to ensure they'll advance.

"We think there are some weaknesses in Romania's game we can exploit," Meola said.

Adalbert Kassai, general secretary of the Romanian team, said Saturday the team was in the Detroit airport watching on television as the United States beat Colombia.

"We already knew the United States in terms of competitiveness and aggressiveness," Kassai said through an interpreter. "We were surprised by the frequency of the attacks by the U.S. and the degree of danger they created. ...

"Maybe one of our problems will be to deal with the heat during the game. One of the other things is we must look to stop their attack along the sidelines, but of course that will be up to the technical (coaching) staff."

While the U.S. players are aware of the Romanians' talent, they're more concerned about keeping their alignment compact, not letting defenders, midfielders and forwards spread out.

"We don't need to change it now," forward Eric Wynalda said. "We just need to go in the way we did the other day."

Going to the second round means the United States will be one of the world's top 16 teams, ahead of England and France, which didn't even qualify.

It's far different from 1990, when the Americans finished 23rd among 24 teams. Or the period from 1950 to 1990, when the United States failed to even qualify and was on the outside looking in.

With soccer suddenly coming out of hiding in the United States, the players are trying to maintain their composure. They know what can be done, but only if they're at their best.

"We have to be humble," midfielder Tab Ramos said. "We're still the same team we were three, four days ago."

Alaskan basketball player signs with Padres

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — Trajan Langdon, the most highly recruited basketball player in Alaska history, has signed a contract to play professional baseball. His three-year, $230,000 contract with the San Diego Padres won't affect his eligibility to play college basketball for Duke University.

Langdon, the highest paid baseball player in Alaska history, said farewell to his East High Legion teammates Friday night. On Monday, he reports to the Spokane Indians, a Class A minor-league team in the Northwest League.

The deal with the Padres will in no way affect Langdon's commitment to basketball. He'll still play for the U.S. Junior National basketball team in Argentina this August, and for Duke next winter.

Going to college and playing basketball remain top priorities, Langdon said. But the baseball job will be a pleasant summer diversion — and a lucrative one.

"I knew if I wanted to play baseball I'd have to sign professionally, because I wouldn't play at Duke," he said. "The main question was did I want to continue playing baseball."

The Padres picked Langdon, the Region IV player of the year, in the sixth round of this month's draft.

The contract with the Padres includes four years of tuition at Duke. Langdon can't keep his athletic scholarship once he turns pro.

The contract also includes a disability insurance policy in the event Langdon's basketball career is interrupted or ended by a baseball injury.

In return, Langdon has committed a minimum of 30 days to the Padres for three consecutive summers. He can report to the club no later than June 30, and his stay in the minor leagues can go beyond 30 days if he chooses.

"They're being flexible," Langdon said of the Padres. "If they weren't, I wouldn't make that decision to sign."

A right-hander who starts at shortstop when not pitching, Langdon will play third base in Spokane.

At 6-foot-4, Langdon is taller than most shortstops and probably doesn't have the range required. But the Padres — as well as a couple of other teams that scouted Langdon — are impressed with his bat and his overall athleticism.

In the 10-game high-school season, Langdon was 2-1 with a 0.90 ERA. He batted over .400 with three home runs. In the Legion baseball season, he was 2-0 and hit .360 with three home runs.

Langdon got permission from Duke's basketball coach, Mike Krzyzewski, to sign with the Padres.

The NCAA allows athletes to turn pro as long as the sport they play professionally is not the same one they compete in at the collegiate level.

Orioles clip Blue Jays

TORONTO (AP) — Cal Ripken hit a tiebreaking, two-run homer in the eighth inning Saturday and the Baltimore Orioles sent the Toronto Blue Jays to their seventh straight loss, 4-1.

Juan Guzman (6-8) had retired 14 straight batters before Rafael Palmeiro singled with two outs in the eighth for only the Orioles' second hit of the game.

Ripken followed with his ninth home run, a line drive just inside the left-field foul pole for a 3-1 lead. Chris Hoiles hit his 12th homer in the ninth.

Mark Eichhorn (4-1) won for the second straight day, pitching two perfect innings in relief of starter Jamie Moyer. Lee Smith worked the ninth for his 25th save.

Athletics 2, Tigers 1

OAKLAND, Calif. — Pinch-runner Scott Hemond scored from third base on a wild pitch by Joe Boever in the eighth inning, giving the Oakland Athletics a victory over Detroit.

Geronimo Berroa opened the eighth with a single off Boever (6-1) and Hemond entered the game. Hemond stole second and, after walks to Mike Bordick and Mike Aldrete loaded the bases, scored on Boever's wild pitch to Rickey Henderson.

Oakland won for the ninth time in 11 games.

American League

Yankees 11, Indians 6

CLEVELAND — The Cleveland Indians' 18-game home winning streak came to a belated end when they lost to the New York Yankees 11-6 in a game that had been suspended Friday night.

Three rain delays and the league's 1 a.m. curfew forced the two teams to push back the final two innings of the game until Saturday. The Yankees led 9-5 after seven innings when the game was suspended at 1:18 a.m.

The game scheduled for Saturday afternoon was rained out.

Cleveland's 18 straight victories at Jacobs Field were a franchise record and the best home streak in baseball since Boston won a major league record 24 in a row at Fenway Park in 1988.

Terry Mulholland (6-6) won for the first time in a month, allowing four runs and eight hits in 5 1-3 innings. Mark Clark (8-2) lost for the first time since May 8.

Royals 4, Twins 1

The Royals managed only six hits — giving them 13 in their last three games — but Bob Hamelin and Terry Schumpert both homered off Twins starter Pat Mahomes (7-3).

Gubicza (5-6) cruised until the seventh inning, when a double by Kirby Puckett, a single by Kent Hrbek and Shane Mack's sacrifice fly produced the Twins' only run.

Rockies take Giants 6-4

DENVER (AP) — Charlie Hayes was hit in the face by a pitch from Salomon Torres, nearly touching off a bench-clearing brawl, and the Colorado Rockies went on to beat the San Francisco Giants 6-4 Saturday.

Torres (2-7), who left the Giants without approval earlier this week, hit Andres Galarraga in the left arm with his first pitch of the fourth inning. Torres' next pitch hit Hayes in the face, near the left cheekbone.

Hayes was down on the ground for about two minutes while the Rockies attended to him. Hayes then suddenly popped up and tried to get at Torres, but was held in a bear-hug by Rockies manager Don Baylor. Hayes was escorted by Baylor to the clubhouse down the left-field line.

Cubs 3, Cardinals 1

CHICAGO — Kevin Foster held St. Louis hitless for 6 1-3 innings and pitched the Chicago Cubs past the Cardinals.

Foster (2-1), traded from Philadelphia to the Cubs on April 12 for Shawn Boskie, gave up two hits in 7 1-3 innings. He struck out three and walked four.

Randy Myers pitched the ninth for his 15th save. Vicente Palacios (1-6) lost despite allowing only three hits and striking out eight in seven innings.

Padres 6, Reds 0

CINCINNATI — Joey Hamilton pitched a six-hitter for his first major-league shutout as the Padres ended Cincinnati's six-game winning streak.

Hamilton (4-2) walked two, hit two batters and struck out one as he shut down the NL's top-hitting team.

The Padres rocked Pete Schourek (3-1) for eight hits in two-plus innings. The left-hander gave up four consecutive singles in the first and two more each in the second and third innings.

Pirates 3, Mets 1

NEW YORK — Orlando Merced hit a three-run homer and Zane Smith allowed only four hits in eight innings as the Pirates won their fifth straight.

Smith (8-6) struck out four and walked none to win for the fourth time in five decisions. He needed just 75 pitches to get through eight innings.

National League

Alejandro Pena pitched a perfect ninth — striking out two — for his sixth save in seven chances, preserving the Pirates' seventh win in eight games.

Gary Varsho doubled against Bret Saberhagen (7-4) with one out in the third and Carlos Garcia singled to deep short. Merced hit the next pitch for his fourth homer.

Phillies 7 Braves 1

PHILADELPHIA — Pitcher Bobby Munoz's first major-league homer gave him enough runs to collect his fourth straight win.

Munoz hit a three-run homer off Kent Mercker (6-2) in the second as the Phillies snapped a three-game losing streak. Munoz (4-2) struck out four and allowed six hits and one run in 5 2-3 innings.

The homer, which was only Munoz's fifth major-league hit, scored Kevin Stocker and Mickey Morandini to put the Phillies up 3-0.

Expos 7, Marlins 3

MONTREAL — Lou Frazier drove in three runs and Moises Alou hit a two-run homer as the Expos handed the Marlins their sixth straight loss.

The Expos capitalized on a two-out error by shortstop Kurt Abbott to score five runs — four unearned — against Charlie Hough (5-6) in the second inning.

Gil Heredia (4-2), who replaced Jeff Fassero with two outs and the bases loaded in the fifth, earned the victory with 1 1-3 innings of one-hit relief.

Hough allowed five runs and seven hits in four innings.

Dodgers 4, Astros 2

HOUSTON — Pedro Astacio allowed seven hits in 8 2-3 innings and Mike Piazza hit a two-run homer Saturday night, leading the Los Angeles Dodgers past the Houston Astros 4-2.

Astacio (6-5), who struck out eight, was within one out of his fourth complete game when he was lifted after giving up his first walk. Todd Worrell came on for his fifth save.

Astacio pitched a four-hit, 1-0 shutout in his other start against Houston this season.

Brian Williams (4-4) allowed six hits and four runs in seven innings.

Defending men's champion and top-seeded Pete Sampras, avoiding the upsets that have claimed Stefan Edberg, Michael Stich, Jim Courier and Graf, trounced fellow American Chuck Adams 6-1, 6-2, 6-4 in a match suspended by rain late Friday.

"I can't be worried about what everyone else is doing," Sampras said. "Upsets are going to happen, especially here on the grass. You can't take anything for granted. I play a guy, Daniel Vacek, who beat (Yevgeny) Kafelnikov, hit 30 aces. So a couple of swings of the bat and you could be out of this tournament."

Bryan Shelton, who knocked off Stich in the first round, made it to the fourth with a 7-6 (9-7), 5-7, 5-7, 7-5, 6-4 victory over Jason Stoltenberg. Shelton next plays another unseeded player, Christian Bergstrom, who beat Jordi Burillo 6-3, 6-3, 6-4.

No. 4 Goran Ivanisevic beat Amos Mansdorf 6-3, 7-5, 6-4. Ivanisevic, who didn't lose a point on serve in the first and third sets and notched 25 aces, will play Alexander Volkov, who beat David Prinosil 7-6 (7-4), 6-3, 6-3.

Three-time champion and No. 7 seed Boris Becker beat Javier Frana 7-6 (7-4), 6-4, 1-6, 6-3 to set up a match against No. 9 Andrei Medvedev, who beat Richard Fromberg 7-6 (7-4) 6-3, 5-7, 6-4.

In the big match for the home crowd, Jeremy Bates became the first British man to win on Centre Court since 1985, outplaying power-serving Markus Zoecke 6-4, 6-4, 3-6, 6-3. Zoecke served a top speed of 134 mph, tying the fastest serve clocked by IBM's radar gun in the past four years.

Cleveland's historic streak comes to an end

CLEVELAND (AP) — It took more than seven hours of baseball and rain delays, spread over two days, to bring an end to the best stretch of home games in Cleveland Indians history.

The New York Yankees beat the Indians 11-6 Saturday — ending Cleveland's string of 18 straight wins at Jacobs Field — in a game that had been suspended after seven innings Friday night because of the American League's 1 a.m. curfew.

The final two innings Saturday were played in a persistent rain. Saturday's scheduled game was then called off; no makeup date was announced.

"It took so long to get one win," Yankees leadoff hitter Luis Polonia said. "It didn't look like this game was going to end. They keep fighting. I would like to have a nice day and play to see what's going on between the teams. It would be real interesting."

The victory, the Yankees' fourth straight, vaulted them a half-game ahead of Cleveland for the best record in the American League.

The Indians lost for the first time at home since Texas beat them May 1. Their team-record 18-game home streak was the best in the majors since Boston won a record 24 in a row at Fenway Park in 1988.

"To me, it's not a big deal," manager Mike Hargrove said. "I'd have liked to win the ballgame. I think it's a really neat deal that we've set a franchise record for wins at home in a row. But we can't lose sight of the fact that we're trying to win the division and let that (the streak) become all-consuming."

Randy Velarde matched his career high with four hits, including a home run, and Danny Tartabull and Jim Leyritz also homered for New York.

"During the last three or four weeks, I haven't felt that comfortable at the plate," said Velarde, who was just 3-for-32 in his previous nine starts.

"Last night and today I started to feel a lot more comfortable, the way I know I'm capable of swinging the bat. Hopefully this is a sign of good things to come."

Candy Maldonado and Albert Belle homered for Cleveland.

Terry Mulholland (6-6) won for the first time in a month, allowing four runs and eight hits in 5 1-3 innings. Mark Clark (8-2) lost for the first time since May 8, yielding five runs and six hits in three-plus innings.

The start of the game Friday night was delayed by rain for two hours and 43 minutes. Two short delays in the sixth inning then ensured that it would not be completed by the league's curfew, which prohibits an inning from starting after 1 a.m.

The seventh inning was completed at 1:18 a.m., with the Yankees leading 9-5. The game continued at 1:07 p.m. Saturday despite showers that soon turned the infield to mud. Leyritz homered and Mike Gallego added an RBI for New York in the ninth, and Cleveland scored a run on Donn Pall's wild pitch in the bottom half.

The game officially lasted 4:03 — not counting more than three hours of rain delays — making it the longest nine-inning game in Cleveland history.

Jerry DiPoto pitched the final two innings for the Indians, who recalled him from the minors overnight. DiPoto had his cancerous thyroid gland removed in March and had been pitching for Triple-A Charlotte.

"I never doubted that I'd get back here this year," he said.

The Yankees, however, didn't think DiPoto should have been permitted to pitch, because technically he was added to the roster during a game in progress. Steve Farr, who had pitched in the same game Friday night, was placed on the 15-day disabled list to make room for DiPoto.

Strike outlook appears bleak

Commentary

By Phil Rogers
Dallas Morning News

Can the outlook for avoiding an extended players strike grow any bleaker?

First, owners plot among themselves for 18 months on a salary-cap proposal. Then they try to shove it down the players' throats in negotiations that are almost as petty as they are late to begin.

Next, they successfully lobby the Senate Judiciary Committee to protect their antitrust exemption, the biggest hammer they hold over the players' association. And now heaven help season-ticket holders everywhere the Chicago White Sox are lagging behind in the American League Central.

If there was a ray of hope at the June 6-8 owners' meetings in Cincinnati, it came from the White Sox's being as hot as any team in baseball. Many thought Sox chairman Jerry Reinsdorf, baseball's most influential owner, no longer seemed as willing to shut down the game in the crusade for an economic overhaul.

The White Sox haven't been to a World Series since 1959. This looked like their year as recently as two weeks ago. But Chicago has gone 5-10 since the Cincinnati meetings ended, falling to a distant second behind the Cleveland Indians. Manager Gene Lamont and struggling closer Roberto Hernandez are getting booed at Comiskey Park and roasted on talk shows.

Uh, oh. Reinsdorf suddenly has as little to lose as his colleague Bud Selig, the Milwaukee Brewers' owner and de facto commissioner. So much for his motivation to extend the current contract one more year to avert an almost certain strike sometime after the All-Star break.

Reinsdorf is both feared and despised by the players union. No owner is tougher in dealings with his own players, especially rookies and others with little recourse in contract negotiations.

When the union assembled players from all 28 franchises for a meeting in Chicago on June 16, only four White Sox players dared or cared to come to the O'Hare Hilton. The California Angels meanwhile chartered a bus to bring 15 in support of the union.

Jack McDowell, the unsigned Cy Young winner, was among the White Sox players in attendance. He and Reinsdorf have built up such bitterness over negotiations that they can hardly tolerate each other.

Reinsdorf has made Lamont's job tough for three seasons, pulling stunts — Michael Jordan, Bo Jackson, Carlton Fisk, etc. — while taking his 218-175 record for granted. He declined to extend Lamont's contract after winning the American League West last year, effectively undercutting his position in the clubhouse.

"I can't say that I like it," Lamont said about the uncertainty. "I don't like that it keeps coming out, but it goes with the territory, I guess. I know it is out there. It makes it tough when you lose, but I can live with it. I've blocked it out pretty good. I don't think anyone can block it out entirely."

General manager Ron Schueler made one move last week, replacing bullpen coach Dewey Robinson with Class AAA pitching coach Rick Peterson, the guru behind Wilson Alvarez's success. The Sox hope Peterson can do as much for Hernandez (7-for-11 in saves with a 7.33 ERA and .304 opposing batting average) as he did for Alvarez last August.

"Right now, we feel with Roberto and a couple of guys in the bullpen, the problem is mental," pitching coach Jackie Brown said. "It's not mechanics. It's not pitch selection. It's being negative instead of positive. And that's what Rick is good at."

The White Sox need all the help they can get in chasing down Cleveland or holding off Baltimore, Minnesota and Kansas City for a wild-card spot. Chicago is 3-1 against the Indians, with eight games left, all in an 11-game stretch July 14-24. "That means," Schueler said, "we get to play them before something happens."

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The injury karma around the Philadelphia Phillies is so bad that team physician Dr. Phillip Marone worries about a spillover effect.

"It's so bad this year that even (pitcher) Shawn Boskie's wife breaks her shoulder rollerblading and Vinnie Vukovich (son of coach John Vukovich) breaks his hand playing baseball," Marone said.

Last year's National League championship team sailed through 1993 in fine shape, with only six players making six trips to the disabled list.

The tally this year — 11 different players, most of them key contributors, making 14 stints on the disabled list — is a good starting point for any discussion of why this year's Phillies went into Saturday night's game against Atlanta in third place in the NL East, 12 games behind the Braves.

Several other Phillies, among them infielder Mariano Duncan and pitcher David West, have nagging injuries that may send them to the sidelines. And outfielder Pete Incaviglia limped off the field after banging his knee diving for a ball Friday night.

Three of Philadelphia's four starting pitchers, Curt Schilling, Tommy Greene and Ben Rivera, are out, prompting locals to refer to the starting rotation of Danny Jackson and younger players Boskie, Bobby Munoz and Mike Williams as Danny and the Juniors.

At one point a month ago, three of their four starting infielders — first baseman John Kruk, shortstop Kevin Stocker and third baseman Dave Hollins — were out of the lineup. Kruk and Hollins were All-Stars last season.

Kruk and Stocker are back, but manager Jim Fregosi noted, "They're just starting to get back into playing shape now."

The Phillies' health woes started, early and ominously, in spring training, when Kruk was diagnosed with testicular cancer. On the same March day he was put on the disabled list, outfielder Wes Chamberlain went down with a knee injury.

The Phillies knew reliever Norm Charlton, an off-season free agent signee, wouldn't be back from reconstructive elbow surgery until after the season started. They thought May. Charlton is at least another month — possibly longer — away.

Larry Andersen, a valuable set-up reliever last season, made the first of his three trips to the disabled list after injuring his knee in spring training. He's on the list now with a sore rib cage.

Greene's right shoulder hurt enough to put him on the disabled list in April. He came back prematurely, underwent surgery May 23 and won't be ready until late July.

Schilling, who had undergone shoulder and knee surgery in the past month, may be close to a rehabilitation trip to the minors, but no one has talked about when he might be back in the rotation.

Rivera, who has a strained shoulder, has been on a rehabilitation assignment since May 6. His return to the rotation is also up in the air.

Hollins, who broke his hand sliding into first May 23, won't be back until some time after the All-Star break.

Center fielder Lenny Dykstra, baseball's best leadoff hitter last year and catalyst of the Philadelphia attack, had his appendix removed Wednesday. He's out for two to three weeks.

Add it all up, and Phillies' players have missed a total of 316 games this season.

The mass movement to the trainer's room has forced general manager Lee Thomas to dip into a farm system that is considered one of baseball's weakest. He also signed Fernando Valenzuela on Friday, trying to bolster the rotation.

"We have some guys that maybe weren't quite ready for the big leagues yet, but they're doing a good job," outfielder Jim Eisenreich said.

Newest U.S. teen phenom actually has real life

By Dave Hyde
Fort Lauderdale Sun-Sentinel

WIMBLEDON, England — She is the anti-Capriati: The American phenom who stayed in school. The girl who enjoyed her friends, her prom, her graduation, her youth.

Now, even as she watches tennis classmate Jennifer Capriati's career tailspin to a despairing and lengthy halt, Lindsay Davenport is just coming into view.

On Friday, the ninth seed from Southern California defeated Germany's Barbara Wittner, 6-4, 3-6, 6-1, to advance to Wimbledon's Sweet 16. She now stands in the shadows of the international spotlight that until recently she had purposely avoided.

In fact, a couple years ago, while the 15-year-old Capriati was the toast of the tennis and marketing communities, the 15-year-old Davenport briefly considered quitting the sport. She took a month off before throwing herself back into junior events that were mixed among high school activities.

It all underscores a childhood that actually was one, a fact that isn't lost on Davenport as she saw Capriati's career plunge and now at 17 is just allowing the tour to shape her life.

Even last weekend, in the days before Wimbledon began, Davenport was home to attend her high school graduation in Murrieta, Calif. She flew to Wimbledon to get in one day of practice on grass, a surface that is difficult for most young players and especially so for ones as big (6-foot-2, 165 pounds) as Davenport.

"I don't think think (Capriati) was really able to have anything normal, like friends, or to go shopping or even to the movies and that was something I definitely got to experience," said Davenport, who is three months younger than Capriati. "I really feel I had very normal teenager and high school years when I was at home. It's something I would never trade back."

Davenport advances to play 10th-seeded Gabriela Sabatini in the round of 16. Lori McNeil, who beat Kristie Boogert, 6-3, 6-7 (5-7), 6-3, will meet Argentina's Florencia Labat.

Other round of 16 matches determined Friday pit 14th-seed Amanda Coetzer against Larisa Neiland and third-seeded Conchita Martinez against Kristine Radford.

But Davenport might be the most timely story because of the bigger story of Capriati. To be fair, the temptation wasn't as strong for Davenport to turn pro so early.

She didn't quite have Capriati's game as a young teen-ager and didn't have the big-money endorsements lined up. But she also commends her parents, who stressed patience and knew big-time sports — her father, Wink, played on he 1968 U.S. Olympic volleyball team.

That career management has led to her to No. 9 — with a bullet. She advanced to the third round of her first Wimbledon last year. Now, the way the draw has fallen this tournament, she even has the expectation of advancing further than once expected.

It didn't start out that way. When Mary Pierce withdrew, Davenport was given her spot in the draw, which moved her into Steffi Graf's bracket. What looked more difficult initially took a twist when McNeil upset Graf in the first round.

Davenport is still so new at all this, though, that she called herself "the underdog against Sabatini." Wimbledon officials obviously didn't think so. They ranked Davenport higher.

Even as she rises at Wimbledon, Davenport still has thoughts elsewhere. A group of high school friends went to Mexico after graduation. She talked her best friend, Sky Lovinger, to come with her to Wimbledon.

The stay has gone so well so far, Davenport is wondering what it would be like to play on Centre Court, three years after Capriati played there.

Soaring with Eagles: Philadelphia loves Lurie

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The bus was lurching along a busy downtown Philadelphia street at dusk when it suddenly slowed, moved toward the curb and stopped.

The doors whooshed open and the bus driver stepped off, rushing toward a surprised pedestrian.

"I just had to stop the route," the driver said, shaking the man's hand. "You've improved the quality of life here. On behalf of everybody in Philadelphia, thank you."

That was when Jeffrey Lurie realized the $185 million he came up with in May to buy the Philadelphia Eagles brought him much more than a football team.

It bought him a savior's mantle, a role the unassuming Lurie is only now beginning to understand.

"It's been an adventure," said Lurie, who bought the team from the universally unpopular Norman Braman, a Miami car dealer.

"You certainly don't have much privacy, but, on the other hand, you can't help but respond favorably to people's warm responses to you," he said. "So when people say, 'Thank you for buying the team,' or 'We're rooting for you,' I don't see it as an invasion, but as a kind of uplifting moment."

Lurie has experienced many of those positive moments in his brief stewardship of the Eagles, who last won a championship in 1960.

Fans perceived Braman to be more interested in the bottom line than the line of scrimmage. They are giddy over the prospect of somebody new running their team.

And Lurie isn't just somebody. Articulate, progressive and down-to-earth, the 42-year-old former movie producer described himself as "a fan's owner" whose goal is putting together a Super Bowl team.

"Sports is great fun, but it's much more fun when you're winning championships," he said. "You really get great satisfaction when you can go out on the streets and scream you're No. 1 because you're world champions."

Lurie first felt a fan's passion growing up in the Boston suburb of West Newton. He's celebrated Celtics' world championships, camped out overnight at Boston Garden for Bruins' playoff tickets, and was one of the 21,597 people who came to see the fledgling Boston Patriots open their first American Football League season in 1960.

An heir to the Harcourt-General publishing and movie theater fortune, Lurie nonetheless grew up in what he called "very, very middle-class surroundings."

"We never lived in any sense of luxury growing up," he said. "I lived in a nice, middle-class house, shared bedrooms and bathrooms with my brothers and sisters and had to go over to other kids' houses to play touch football because we didn't have a big enough yard."

There was never an emphasis on material things and possessions, he said, and he became even less concerned with those things when his father, Morris John Lurie, died of cancer when Lurie was 9.

"Having a father die when you're young leaves you feeling that life is short and it's not the material possessions that will bring happiness, but the relationships between people and your family and friends, and ideas mean more than possessions," he said.

Belgium's Preud'homme helps team take 1-0 victory over Netherlands

In one of soccer's great rivalries, Belgium defeated the Netherlands 1-0 Saturday to register its second straight victory at the World Cup, clinching a spot in the second round.

In a Citrus Bowl baking in 100-degree temperatures, the lone goal came from defender Philippe Albert. But it was the spectacular goalkeeping that made the difference.

The outcome left the Dutch looking like anything but a pretournament favorite. They face Morocco on Wednesday needing at least a tie to have a chance to advance.

After the 117th game between these neighboring nations, Belgium has six points, the Netherlands and Saudi Arabia three and Morocco none. Belgium plays Saudi Arabia on Wednesday to settle Group F.

Belgium went ahead in the 65th minute when captain Georges Grun headed a corner kick to Albert, whose low shot from eight yards squeezed in off the near goalpost. It was Albert's first game in the World Cup following his suspension for the opener.

"It was truly a great day," said Albert, who had recovered just in time from a car crash to make the World Cup team. "It's a victory over fate."

Fate was not on the Dutch side. In the final minute, a deflected shot by Marc Overmars was pushed onto the crossbar by Preud'homme with a one-handed save, highlighting his second straight world-class performance.

"I could just get my fingertips to the ball and it bounced on the crossbar, so I was a bit lucky," said Preud'homme.

Added Overmars: "It was terrible. He just stopped everything you threw at him."

Belgium's opportunistic goal, cheered on by about 15,000 Belgian fans, set up the tense finish, with the Dutch forced to deploy their renowned offense full-force and the Belgians able to rely on their famed counterattacks.

The Dutch, buoyed by 20,000 orange-clad fans in the sold-out crowd of 61,219 at the Citrus Bowl, were often on the verge of tying the score, but could not get the ball past Preud'homme.

Preud'homme made a great save in the 84th minute, a one-handed stop to punch out a scorching 30-yard drive by Ronald Koeman.

Earlier, he denied Dennis Bergkamp. In the 59th minute, the Dutch star turned around Albert and rifled a shot to the upper corner.

"I had just the time to put my fists to it," said Preud'homme, and the ball sailed just past the post, leaving the Dutch frustrated again.

The Dutch kept coming up to the final whistle, and four minutes from the end substitute Rudi Smidts had to kick a shot by Bryan Roy off the goal line to protect the slim margin.

Belgium, meanwhile, threatened to produce an insurance goal, with Josip Weber missing on a breakaway.

Belgium could have gone ahead in the first minute when striker Weber met a crossing pass from playmaker Enzo Scifo, but the ball clipped the crossbar.

After Preud'homme warmed up by stopping two of Koeman's free kicks, he had his first fine moment in the 24th minute. He pushed a low, angled shot from Rijkaard wide with a spectacular one-handed save.

"He played an excellent game, as against Morocco," said Advocaat. "He saved three points for Belgium today."

U.S. hopes to prove itself to Romania

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — The Americans have nice uniforms, Romanian coach Cornel Dinu had said. And maybe in 100 years or so, they might be able to field a decent soccer team.

That was 17 months ago, after the United States had played Romania to a 1-1 tie in an exhibition game at Santa Barbara.

Dinu was eventually fired, but the Americans still have an opportunity to prove his timetable was off by 98 years or so.

The United States, which already has established itself in this World Cup by beating Colombia 2-1, faces Romania, a 3-1 winner over Colombia, in a first-round finale Sunday at the Rose Bowl.

At a news conference Saturday, Romanian officials were still trying to explain away the remarks by Dinu, who was replaced by Anghel Iordanescu. The new coach is considerably more circumspect than his predecessor.

"It's just the way he is," Adalbert Kassai, general secretary of the Romanian team, said of Dinu. "He is just a little bit more explosive."

Kassai, speaking through an interpreter, added: "But the U.S. team over the last two years has grown up a lot, and we appreciate this. We believe the relationship between our teams is very good."

Cristian Bivolava, Kassai's deputy, added that Dinu's comments in Santa Barbara were "not isolated for him," explaining that other comments by the coach after a game in Mexico "brought us to the brink of a diplomatic scandal."

The Americans and Romanians are both virtually assured of advancing to the second round, but the winner of Sunday's game will finish either first or second in the group.

Although the former Romanian coach had a low opinion of American soccer, the current coach and players apparently don't, having watched the United States-Colombia game on television in the airport in Detroit. They were preparing to fly back from a 4-1 loss to Switzerland, which had tied the United States 1-1 in its opener.

"We already knew the United States in terms of competitiveness and aggressiveness," Kassai said of the Americans' upset of Colombia. 'We were surprised by the frequency of the attacks by the U.S. and the degree of danger they created. ...

"Maybe one of our problems will be to deal with the heat (expected to be in the 90s) during the game. One of the other things is that we must look to stop their attack along the sidelines. But, of course, that will be up to the technical (coaching) staff."

There were no players or coaches at the Romanian news conference, bringing protests from reporters.

Not money or fame but pride drives Saudi Arabia soccer squad

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Some play for the big salaries and bonuses, the luxury cars and the fame. Others play for the honor of their homeland.

There's little question where the Saudi Arabian soccer team draws its inspiration in its first trip to the World Cup.

"We want to win because we represent not just Saudi Arabia, but the whole Arab world in the World Cup," said Fuad Amin, who scored the winning goal as the Saudis defeated Morocco 2-1 Saturday. "We and our brothers from Morocco have performed magnificently."

They got it thanks largely to the superb goalkeeping of Mohammed Al Deayea, who made a half-dozen tough saves as Morocco took 29 shots to only 10 for Saudi Arabia. And they got it on a 35-yard twisting shot by Amin at the end of the first half that completely fooled the Moroccan goalie.

"It was the knockout for us," said Morocco's Rachid Azzouzi. "It was the final minute of the first half. We had just gotten 1-1 and that goal made it very hard for us."

Each Saudi player received a $100,000 bonus and a Mercedes for qualifying for the world soccer championship. Who knows what awaits if the Saudis move into the second round, which they could do with a victory over Belgium on Wednesday. Even a tie might be good enough in Group F.

"We play not for rewards, we play for our country," said Jorge Solari, Saudi Arabia's Argentine-born coach. "We came to represent our flag and show Saudi Arabia is a good team."

Belgium already has advanced after wins over Morocco and the Netherlands. The Moroccans, who made the second round in 1986, have almost no chance of moving on.

The crowd of 72,404 was decidedly pro-Morocco. But fans who were neutral at the beginning seemed swayed to the Saudi side by the work of Al Deayea.

"I feel happiness. I feel good for the win," said Al Deayea, at 21 one of the youngest players in the tournament. "I am also one of the youngest goalies and one day I'll be one of the best."

He looked like one of the best against Morocco. The goalie who cost his team a tie against the Dutch — he misjudged a cross and was caught out of the net for the winning goal late in the game — did nothing wrong Saturday. Several times, he collided with opponents and went down, but he got back up and remained steady, sometimes spectacular.

"Our goalie was fantastic," Saudi captain Mohammed Al Jawad said. "He played very good. He is very intelligent and has a very flexible body. He reacts very fast. He is one of the best in the tournament."

The Saudis got started early, just as they did in their 2-1 loss to the Netherlands. In the eighth minute, Sami Al Jaber accepted a long pass in the penalty area and was dragged down by Noureddine Naybet. Al Jaber put home the penalty kick to the left corner as goalkeeper Khalil Azmi dived right.

The long ball worked well for Saudi Arabia until midway in the first half, when Morocco took control. Morocco had several excellent scoring chances, but Al Deayea stood firm.

Al Deayea made a wonderful hand save near the crossbar in the 14th minute and cleared a bunch of dangerous balls. But he could do nothing on Morocco's tying goal in the 27th minute.

Maradona helps Argentina win 2-1

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — The fan's homemade sign, in the powder blue and white of his nation's flag, proclaimed "God is Argentine."

To any Argentine, or any soccer fan, it's not hard to figure out to whom the signmaker was referring — rehabilitated superstar Diego Maradona.

Maradona, triumphantly back from three years of drug abuse and weight problems, helped set up a pair of goals by Claudio Caniggia that gave Argentina a 2-1 win over Nigeria on Saturday.

The victory assured Argentina a place in the second round of the tournament. The Argentines have won the World Cup the last two times it was played in the Western Hemisphere.

Maradona played the full 90 minutes on a cool, though humid, afternoon. More than any other player, he set the pace of the game and drew eight fouls from the Nigerians — who committed 33 fouls to just five by Argentina.

"I ran a lot and my legs supported me, thanks to all the work I've been doing," said Maradona, who lost 26 pounds to prepare for his fourth World Cup. "I felt great in the field. I felt important. I felt the team needed me to have the ball."

Former president George Bush attended the game, but Hakeem Olajuwon — who led the Houston Rockets to the NBA title on Wednesday and said he wanted to go to Foxboro to watch his nation's team — did not appear to be in the stadium.

Maradona played in his 21st World Cup game, tying the record set by Uwe Seeler of West Germany in 1958-1970 and matched by Poland's Wladislaw Zmuda in 1974-1986.

Maradona, while running much less than in his prime, has guided Argentina past Greece 4-0 — even scoring a goal — and Nigeria. The Nigerians, who beat Bulgaria 3-0 on Tuesday in their World Cup debut, need at least a tie against Greece on Thursday to have a shot at advancing.

Both of the Argentine goals came off free kicks taken by Maradona, 33, who led his nation to the 1986 World Cup crown and into the championship match in 1990.

Midway through the first half, Maradona back-heeled a free kick to Gabriel Batistuta, whose volley was dropped by Nigerian goalkeeper Peter Rufai. Caniggia swept in to lift the ball over the prone Rufai.

Seven minutes later, Maradona sent a free kick into a huge hole along the right side of the Nigerian defense and Caniggia went in alone on goal, flipping the ball over Rufai into the far corner of the net.

Nigerian star Rashidi Yekini dribbled around an Argentine defender and passed to Siasia, who took one step to his right and lofted a shot over Argentine goalie Luis Islas. The Argentines claimed Siasia was offside on the play.

Caniggia, who scored a pair of vital goals as Argentina reached the championship match in 1990, is also making a comeback.

He was suspended for failing a cocaine test while playing in the Italian League.

"We were taken by surprise by the early goal," Caniggia said. "The important thing is we won and that gives us confidence. We were able to turn things around."

A Connie Hawkins-type, with big hands and swooping move to basket. ... Scores a lot on layups, dunks and short jumpers. ... Excellent outlet passer ... Projects as small forward due to frailty. Needs to add 10 pounds to play power spot.

Aaron McKie, Temple
6-5, 209 ... 18.8 ppg, 7.2 rpg, 3.2 apg

Talented, yet unselfish, offensive player. ... Streaky shooter who can both catch-and-shoot and create shot. ... Definitely has NBA 3-point range. ... Is Cal's all-time leading scorer. ... Compared to Glen Rice and Dennis Scott.

Wesley Person, Auburn

Khalid Reeves, Arizona
6-2½, 207 ... 24.2 ppg, 4.3 rpg, 2.9 bpg

Dispelled any doubts about point guard capability at Phoenix Desert Classic. In three games, averaged 4.7 assists and only one turnover. Also averaged 19.7 points, 3.3 rebounds and two steals, all while playing just 22 minutes a game. ... Powerfully built, underrated playmaker who could have filled that role in college if not for talented teammate Damon Stoudamire.

Glenn Robinson, Purdue
6-8, 225 ... 30.3 ppg, 10.1 rpg

The "Big Dog" is expected to be the top pick overall, currently held by Milwaukee. ... Tough competitor who is dynamic inside-outside scorer. May need to bulk up (10-15 pounds) to play power spot. ... Hit 39 percent of 3s, and not afraid to take it (nearly 300 attempted in two years). ... Is streaky from perimeter and shot selection occasionally leaves something to be desired. ... Goes strong to hoop and draws fouls. Averaged eight trips to line last season, and converted 80 percent of free throws. ... Likes to post up taller defenders and has nice 10-15 foot turnaround. ... Good rebounder who boxes out well. Gets the ball with gusto.

Carlos Rogers, Tennessee State
6-11, 220 ... 24.5 ppg, 11.5 rpg, 3 bpg

Is thin, but muscular, yet needs more weight (15-20 pounds)-to-withstand punishment from NBA power forwards. Gets pushed around by stronger opponents. ... Has some good moves in the post and uses quickness well near the hoop. ... Hustler with great hands and an aggressive rebounder. Style gets him into foul trouble. ... Long arms contributes to shotblocking skills. ... Gets to line in bunches (nine fouls shots per game last year), but only a 64 percent free-throw shooter. ... Will play big forward in pros after manning pivot in school.

Jalen Rose, Michigan
6-8, 210 ... 19.9 ppg, 5.7 rpg, 3.9 apg

Many adjectives apply, but mostly "versatile" and "talented." Also has been called enigmatic and cocky, but wherever he goes, his teams win. ... # Robinson a shoe-in for No.1 pick INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Purdue's Glenn Robinson appears a sure bet to be Milwaukee's choice for the No. 1 pick in the NBA draft on Wednesday. After that, there's a second tier of likely picks, although the order in which they'll go is still a little murky.

"The only way I think Milwaukee will entertain a trade is if they don't want to take Robinson. Then I think their problem is to find a way to swap picks or something," Indiana Pacers president Donnie Walsh said.

"Our feeling is that they're going to end up taking Robinson. That would leave them open to a guy that could end up scoring 30 a game for the next 10 years, and that's a tough explanation (if the Bucks don't pick him)."

The Pacers, who lost to the New York Knicks in seven games in the Eastern Conference finals, are the host team for the draft at the Hoosier Dome. Indiana will pick 15th unless Walsh can work a deal to move up. He's had some conversations with other teams but no offers yet that are too good to pass up.

Milwaukee won the No. 1 pick in the draft lottery last month, followed by Dallas, Detroit, Minnesota and Washington. Philadelphia will pick sixth, followed by the Los Angeles Clippers, Sacramento, Boston, the Los Angeles Lakers, Seattle, Miami, Denver, New Jersey and Indiana.

Barring a trade that might put the Pacers among the early picks, Walsh said Friday that he thinks he knows how the draft will unfold.

"My feeling about the draft, if I were to do it just quickly in my head, I would say that Robinson will go one," he said of Purdue's 6-foot-8 All-American, the nation's scoring leader at 30.3 points a game and the player of the year.

"Grant Hill (Duke) will go two, Jason Kidd (California) will go three ... probably Donyell Marshall (Connecticut) will go four, Juwan Howard (Michigan) will go five, Sharone Wright (Clemson) will go six — and again, these are all subject to change (in the order)," Walsh said.

"Lamond Murray (California) would go seven, and now you get into the area where I thought Eric Montross (North Carolina) would go, eight or nine. We're starting to hear that eight (Sacramento) might not take him, and that nine (Boston) might not take him."

The Celtics got the ninth pick by missing the playoffs for the first time since 1978-79, the season before the arrival of Larry Bird.

"I'm not afraid to trade down if there is an opportunity to come up with a player who would fit in well," said M.L. Carr, Boston's new vice president for basketball operations.

"Being at No. 9, versus 19 or 23 or 27 as we've been before, it's a position where you see a lot of good players. I don't want to wait three years, I want to get it done this year. And I think there's a window of opportunity for us," Carr said.

Miami already has interviewed 11 players under consideration for its pick at No. 12.

"This is a very good draft," Heat partner Billy Cunningham said Friday. "There's a good chance the player drafted 12th will be a better player over the life of his career than the player taken seventh.

Among those considered possibilities for the Heat are Khalid Reeves of Arizona, Jim McIlvaine of Marquette, Eddie Jones of Temple and Eric Mobley of Pittsburgh.

But, again, no one knows if they'll be available.

"Once you get to seven, I think the draft is becoming confusing, between seven and 15," Walsh said. "And I think the reason for that is that teams are bringing in more players the further down in the draft that you go. As they see players play, they're impressed with one guy over another. Or, somebody's trying to trade into that vicinity, which could change the makeup of the players that are going to be available."

Another wrinkle is the number of underclassmen who have declared themselves eligible for this year's draft.

Andrews streaks ahead in Classic

SOMERS POINT, N.J. (AP) — When Donna Andrews won the Nabisco Dinah Shore in March, the gallery urged her to jump into a pond as a victory celebration and the self-described crowd-pleaser obliged.

There's a nice-sized pond adjacent to the 18th hole of the Greate Bay Country Club here and based on her score at the $500,000 ShopRite LPGA Classic on Saturday, Andrews may be taking another plunge.

The 27-year-old from Pinehurst, N.C., surged ahead on the strength of her putter to take a three-shot lead over Barb Bunkowsky going into Sunday's final round.

Eighty players made the cut for the final round, with a cut-off of 4-over-par 146. Among those missing the cut were Beth Daniel and Dawn Coe-Jones.

Andrews sank birdies on her first three holes, ending with a 5-under-par 66 for the day. She completed the first two rounds at the 6,235-yard, par-71 course at 9-under 133 — a tournament-record low for two days.

Andrews, who had seven birdies and two bogeys, said her command of the greens was the key to keeping Bunkowsky at bay.

"I felt like every putt I stepped over today I had a good shot at making, especially after my fast start," she said. "I try not to play too mechanical, but to go by feel. Sometimes you get in that zone where it's working."

Andrews, fourth on the 1994 money list, is shooting for her third win of the year after capturing both the Dinah Shore Classic and Ping-Welch's Championship in March.

Bunkowsky chased Andrews for the lead all day, finishing at 2-under and compiling a two-day total of 6-under-par 136. Bunkowsky, who played in the same threesome as Andrews, didn't have a bogey all afternoon but sank just two birdies.

"I didn't feel as if I was swinging as well as I could," Bunkowsky said. "But I didn't think I was in trouble because golf is just such a funny game."

Dottie Mochrie finished the day one stroke behind Bunkowsky with a 3-under 68, taking a 5-under 137 into Sunday's final round — not quite far enough for Andrews.

"Dottie has looked good all week and she's capable of rattling off a 66 without even blinking," Andrews noted.

Betsy King made a run for the lead as she tries for her 30th career victory and automatic qualification into the LPGA Hall of Fame. King was tied with Mochrie at 5-under heading into No. 18, but a bogey dropped her to even-par for the day and a two-day total of 138, tied with Sherrie Steinhauer and Mardi Lunn for fourth.

Stockton Jr. doesn't feel pressured going into Hartford final as . . .

CROMWELL, Conn. (AP) — Dave Stockton Jr. says he doesn't feel any pressure going into the final round at the Greater Hartford Open because no one expects him to win.

With players like Greg Norman chasing him all day, he himself was surprised that he still was atop the leader board after the third round Saturday.

"It's a shock to me as much as anyone else in this room," Stockton said after a 67 put him in a first-place tie with David Frost at 11-under-par 199.

Frost actually had the better round, a five-birdie, one-bogey 66. The pair's score of 199 is a record for 54 holes in the 10 years the GHO has been played at the Tournament Players Club at River Highlands.

At 200 was Norman, who matched Frost's 66 after five birdies and a bogey. He was in sole possession of third and two strokes ahead of John Cook, who played bogey-free golf and was one of four players who tied the course record of 64.

Stockton said he was sure Norman "wasn't going to lose any sleep with me ahead."

Next at 203 were Mike Reid, Clark Dennis, Ted Tryba and John Daly.

Frost, who played with Stockton, moved into the tie with a 30-foot putt for birdie at the 17 to go 11-under. Stockton fell back to 11-under with a bogey on the hole. Both parred the 18th.

Frost downplayed his putt at 17.

"The only reason it's a big deal is because it came at the end of the round," he said.

Stockton's father currently leads the Seniors Championship by five shots after 54 holes. The two are trying to become the first father-son team to win PGA events in the same week and the first to win the same tournament. Stockton Sr. won the GHO in 1974.

Overnight rain and near windless conditions resulted in record-low rounds early in the day. But the wind picked up in the afternoon and made things tougher for those who had later starts.

Brad Faxon, Dillard Pruitt and Mike Standly matched Cook's 64, doubling the number of 64s since the course was renovated.

No player has finished with a double-digit, under-par score after four rounds at the TPC since the course was renovated in 1991. The lowest score after 72 holes was defending champion Nick Price's 9-under 271 last year.

Glen Day got his second hole-in-one of the tournament, using a 5-iron on the 171-yard 16th. On Friday, Day scored on the 158-yard 11th with a 7-iron. Day shot a 70 on Saturday and was at 207, eight shots out of the lead.

Price, meanwhile, looked like he was going to emerge from the third round in strong contention for a second straight title before he faded late on the back nine and finished with a 3-under-par 207.

Price, who was even after two rounds, birdied four of his first seven holes and reached 5-under-par with another birdie at No. 13 before bogies on his final two holes.

"I had the potential to shoot a really well round, then I kind of butchered it at the end," Price said. "I'm really unhappy about the way I finished."

. . . Older Stockton takes Seniors lead

DEARBORN, Mich. (AP) — A cold, steady drizzle and an unforgiving golf course weren't the only things Dave Stockton had to worry about. There also was the matter of his son.

Stockton shot a 1-under 71 during the third round at the TPC of Michigan on a gray, rainy Saturday afternoon, opening a five-shot lead over Jim Albus in the Senior Players Championship.

But his mind was frequently hundreds of miles away where Dave Stockton Jr., a rookie on the PGA Tour, was fighting to hold the lead in the Greater Hartford Open. He eventually completed 54 holes in a tie with David Frost.

The Stocktons could become the only father-son duo to win PGA tournaments in the same week and also the first to win the same tournament. The senior Stockton won the Greater Hartford Open in 1974.

"I talked to Junior this morning," the senior Stockton said. "I didn't tell him much. I just reminded him to go slow and allow some extra time at the course. He said he was going out early, exercise in the health van, and watch films for a couple of hours. His routine is a lot different than mine was."

Just then, the image of his son popped up on a television monitor in the press interview room.

"Timeout!" Stockton said.

A graphic appeared on the screen, telling viewers the younger Stockton ranked 165th on the tour in putting.

"One hundred and sixty-fifth in putting," the elder Stockton said, shaking his head. "That's not the old man."

As he watched the monitor, his son missed a moderately long putt.

"Tonight, on the telephone, he'll tell me about that putt, and tell me he just got robbed," Stockton said.

"David's got a good golf game. He just doesn't know it. Well, he knows it, but he isn't tournament-tested yet."

The elder Stockton won 11 times on the PGA Tour, his victories including the 1970 and 1979 PGA Championships, and has seven victories on the senior tour, one this year.

The senior Stockton won the Senior Players Championship two years ago and, unless somebody makes a move in Sunday's final round, he may win it again.

"I still don't feel like I have the lead," Stockton said. "I know it's hard to cry when you have a 5-stroke lead. But I'm not even thinking about what the rest of the guys are doing. I want to make as many birdies as I can get."

Albus, who won this tournament in 1991 while still a club pro at Piping Rock Club on Long Island, was grinding his way to an even-par 72 for the round and 208 for the tournament.

"Playing the ball up made it harder, but I didn't play, really," Albus said. "I'm lucky to be in second place. I struggled on a lot of holes."

Lee Trevino, who started the day three strokes off the pace, suffered the most in conditions more typical of Scotland than Michigan in the summer.

Trevino bogeyed three of four holes during a wayward stretch on the back nine. He finished 2-over for the round and was tied with Jim Dent six shots behind the unflappable Stockton. Dent shot a 2-under 70.

Landmark gas station targeted for demolition

JEROME - After 25 years of pumping gas, the Jerome Gas station on South Lincoln will close its doors Monday.

Owned and operated by George and Bart Silver, the landmark station will be torn down to make way for a Maverick convenience store and service station.

Jerome Gas and Oil Inc., will continue to sell and deliver bulk fuel, motor oil, tires, batteries, feed, dog food and miscellaneous farm items. The bulk plant, at 129 West D, will be run 24 hours a day using a customer key system for dispensing fuel.

"The Silver brothers are farmers at heart and want to concentrate on their farming and serving our farm customers," Delores Silver said. They also own and operate a station in Buhl.

Vigorous Idaho economy backs health of tax notes

BOISE – Moody's and Standard & Poor's have again given their highest credit ratings to Idaho's Tax Anticipation Notes. Both credit rating companies reported they gave the high marks because of positive projections of revenues to the state in fiscal year 1995.

State Treasurer Lydia Justice Edwards will sell $200 million of the notes beginning June 28. Edwards said she is issuing the notes to manage the state's cash-flow deficit of about $253.5 million that is expected in November. This is the 10th time in the past 11 years that Idaho has issued such notes.

A new look

ANDY ARENZ/The Times-News

Dana Jahn, ShopKo manager, said the store's renovation will mean more merchandise on the floor and a move upscale.

ShopKo modifies focus in changing retail market

By Mick Normington
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – As ShopKo Manager Dana Jahn walks through his store, customers constantly stop and ask him for directions.

His Magic Valley Mall store is going through a complete renovation as ShopKo tries to redefine itself and survive in the highly competitive retail industry.

"There are two kinds of retailers these days: the quick and the dead," said a recent headline in Business Week magazine.

ShopKo is checking its pulse and moving. "As far as the direction we're heading, we're becoming more upscale," Jahn said. "We're positioning ourselves to define a niche between the Wal-Marts, the Targets and the Mervyns. We're going to be somewhere in the middle," he said.

'As far as the direction we're heading, we're becoming more upscale.'

— Dana Jahn, ShopKo manager

ShopKo had traditionally operated as a discount department store, with competitors such as Fred Meyers, Woolworth, Kmart and Wal-Mart.

But with the giants of Kmart and Wal-Mart battling each other by building more and more stores, some of the medium discount retailers have been hurt.

ShopKo has seen its sales volume rise, but its operating margin and profit margin have suffered. ShopKo's profit margin – the ratio comparison of profit to sales – was 2.5 percent last year. By comparison, the retail industry's average was 2.9 percent, and Wal-Mart's profit margin was 3.5 percent.

So ShopKo is trying to reposition itself through it's "Vision 2000" program.

Under Vision 2000, ShopKo stores will focus more on fashion clothing and home furnishings. The stores will also expand their pharmacy and optical departments, which the company hopes will bring more traffic into the stores.

Stores will reduce their selections of such "hard-good" merchandise as hardware and automotive products.

Value Line's retail analyst David Cohen said Vision 2000 changes should "modestly improve earnings" for ShopKo this year with a "relatively large year-to-

Pharmacy, Hallmark store renovates to deal with competition from 2 sides

By Mick Normington
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Serious about their young cards and gifts retail business, the owners of Kurt's Pharmacy closed down their store for a week to renovate and move for what they hope is their last time.

Kurt Hefner started his pharmacy 10 years ago on Blue Lakes Boulevard North. Unlike other businesses, he's moved south on the busy street. And three years ago he added a Hallmark store onto the business that his wife, Karen Hefner, runs.

Last week their combined business moved again inside the Lynwood Shopping Center. They only moved next door but they got a bigger store that they completely renovated.

But why go to all the trouble?

"Because of the glut of retailers," Karen Hefner said. "According to Hallmark, there are 40 percent more retailers than the population needs."

To help them ride out a retail shake-out, Hallmark came in and helped them set up a modern cards and gifts store.

That means the basic items such as photo albums, wrapping paper and ribbon are on the walls. Seasonal items, like graduation gifts, are near the entrance. And aisles of new greeting cards curve through the store so customers can see more of the selection.

ANDY ARENZ/The Times-News

Hallmark helped Kurt and Karen Hefner set up a modern card and gift shop to accompany the pharmacy.

"Hallmark stores have tended to look like bowling alleys," Karen Hefner said.

Kurt's Pharmacy gets competition from many angles. Besides the plethora of gift stores in Twin Falls, the pharmacy side of the business has seen increased competition in recent years from the large discount retail chains like ShopKo, Costco, Kmart

Electronics ready for giant leap

Boston Globe

CHICAGO — Pagers that talk back, tiny wireless fax machines and shopping from pocket-size electronic catalogs are visible on the horizon as the electronics industry moves toward a giant technological leap in the coming year.

Whether buyers will go for the new generation of wireless machines is a subject of intense debate at the Consumer Electronics Show that closed here Saturday.

One of the stars of the show was a small-dish satellite television system that is being test marketed in two Southern cities. It will be available nationwide this fall for under $700 for the hardware, plus monthly service fees designed to compete with cable.

The Digital Satellite System, or DSS, delivers high-quality digital sound and pictures via an 18-inch dish that can be mounted on a window sill to bring in signals from two dedicated satellites, one of which is operating now. When the second orbiter is launched next month, the system will provide up to 175 channels of programming.

A joint venture with backing from RCA, General Motors, Hughes Aircraft and Hubbard Broadcasting, DSS will offer pay-per-view television, concert-quality audio, many of the familiar news and entertainment channels now offered by cable and movies that start every 30 minutes. Subscribers will be able to view an on-screen guide.

A substantial part of the show was devoted to wireless communications, although manufacturers had only a limited offering of new products to display. Motorola introduced a lighter-than-ever cellular telephone, and NexTel promoted a single hand-held phone that enables a traveler to make cellular calls, accept and return pages or send brief text messages to colleagues.

The company, which launched its service in Los Angeles, announced it is expanding service to the Chicago area in what it intends will eventually be a nationwide service.

And to demonstrate miniaturization, MicroTech Technologies introduced a cordless telephone that can be worn on the wrist. Called TeleWatch, it can even tell time.

Randy Battat, a vice president of Motorola, unveiled the Envoy, a new personal communications device that can send and receive electronic mail and faxes, as well as call up pictures from soon-to-be-developed electronic catalogues that enable buyers to review products and order them on the spot.

The Envoy, which will cost about $1,500 when it goes on sale, can make airline reservations, keep a personal calendar and function as an address book. While it is smaller than a notebook computer, the Envoy is too big to fit in a jacket vest pocket or medium-sized purse, which could prove a key factor in its acceptability by travelers who already are weighted down by all the technological marvels they carry.

Experts: Dollar should rebound without Fed help

Knight-Ridder News Service

Surely, the dollar's alarming slide Friday against the Japanese yen and the German mark must suggest something ominous for the U.S. economy.

Once again, the stock and bond markets slumped as investors anticipated a new round of interest rate increases by the Federal Reserve to boost the dollar. Such increases might help the currency, making dollar-denominated investments more attractive — but also would dampen the economy's recovery, investors feared.

Not so, economists say.

The Fed, they say, won't raise rates solely because of the dollar's decline. The Fed plans to raise rates several more times this

Relying on 'float' time may soon prove hazardous

Writing checks day before payday could be trouble in coming years

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — We all do it from time to time: Write a check for groceries the day before payday, figuring that by the time the store cashes it, the money will be there to cover it.

Those days are quickly coming to an end. Banks are beginning to use electronics, rather than airplanes or the postal service, to speed the time it takes to clear checks.

By sending electronic information to each other about the checks you've written, banks are making it tougher for customers to rely on the so-called "float," the lapse in time between when a check is deposited and when the funds show up in the bank account.

The banks are not necessarily out to nab customers who keep their accounts in good standing but occasionally rely on float when writing a check for the groceries right before payday.

They say they're really after criminals and deadbeats, who exploit float to pass bad checks. Experts estimate that of the 60 billion checks written every year by businesses and consumers, about 1 percent, or 600 million, turn out to be bogus for one reason or another. Losses from fraudulent checks are estimated at between $5 billion and $10 billion a year and rising.

"Playing around with float has now lost its innocence," said Wyn P. Lewis, managing principle at J.D. Carreker and Associates Inc., a Dallas-based consulting and software company that is working with several dozen banks testing the use of electronics in check clearing.

The banks are members of the Electronic Check Clearing House Organization. The 59 members, which include the nation's largest banking companies, handle 60 percent of all bank deposits.

One-third of the members are now sending check information to each other electronically every night. The information is captured by computers that "read" the magnetic code on checks at the bank where the items are deposited. That information is sent via telephone lines to computers at the bank where the check is drawn.

The bank can then assess whether the checks are covered by sufficient funds in customers accounts.

The Federal Reserve banks, which play a big role in check clearing, have an electronic clearing project under way. Other private consortiums are signing up banks to do electronic clearing.

"Today, it can take 3 to 7 days to find out whether a check clears" using conventional means of deliverying paper checks to the paying bank, said Sydney Smith Hicks, senior vice president at NationsBank.

NationsBank, based in Charlotte, N.C., is the nation's fifth largest banking company as measured by assets and clears more checks every day than any bank in the country. It is a member of the electronic clearinghouse organization.

year, they add, but had planned to do so anyway to prevent the economy from overheating. The next rate hike may come earlier than expected — in early July, perhaps, rather than August — but that means little.

The bottom line, economists say, is the dollar will eventually strengthen on its own, the Fed board knows it and thus will leave it alone.

To truly bolster the dollar, the Fed would have to raise rates a full percentage-point, economists add, and that would lead to unacceptable economic damage. Investors may be hurt more as the financial markets stumble about, but the currency's travails mean little, if anything, to most Americans.

"The turmoil over the dollar is much ado about nothing," said David Blitzer, chief economist of Standard & Poor's Corp.

"The run on the dollar is temporary, and its impact on the economy will be very minor," said Ross DeVol, director of U.S. forecasting at the WEFA Group, a Bala Cynwyd, Pa., economic consulting firm.

The only wild card, economists say, are the financial markets themselves.

If the value of stocks and bonds keeps deteriorating, many Americans will feel poorer and spend less. In addition, worried investors could bid up the yield on the benchmark 30-year Treasury bond to 8 percent, crimping home sales and business investment. The yield rose Friday from 7.4 percent to 7.52 percent, near the high end of its three-month trading range.

Economists say the odds of an 8 percent Treasury bond soon are slim. Inflation — the ultimate arbiter of long-term interest rates — is unusually low and likely to remain so.

"There is no evidence that inflation is accelerating whatsoever," said David Cohen, a Belmont, Calif.-based economist for MMS International, a New York economic forecasting firm.

More bond buyers could begin to reap the already-generous yields on bonds, Cohen reasoned, and push rates back down.

Another reason some argue the dollar crisis is overblown is that the currency is declining mostly against the yen and the Deutschemark. It is appreciating, not declining, against the Canadian dollar — and Canada is the nation's biggest trading partner. Canadian imports almost rival the combined total of Japanese and German imports, Cohen says. As the dollar strengthens against the Canadian dollar, Canadian imports grow cheaper and help keep inflation low.

The decline in the dollar is considered by many a temporary phenomenon. The currency is declining because the United States is importing much more than it is exporting, flooding the world with dollars.

Faced with abuse, tobacco industry comes out smokin'

The Washington Post

NEW YORK — Politically besieged and impatient with their industry's traditional reluctance to strike back at critics, the nation's major tobacco companies have begun extensive advertising and information campaigns to blunt tax and court assaults against them.

The campaigns, including a torrent of full-page newspaper ads and efforts to reverse legal actions in several states, make cigarette companies new heavyweights in the national debate over smoking rights vs. health.

Until now, tobacco executives say, such activities have often been left to industry surrogates such as the Tobacco Institute.

Philip Morris U.S.A. Friday released the text of a series of full-page newspaper advertisements, to be published next week, highlighting what it said were weaknesses in government studies linking cancer and second-hand smoke.

A spokeswoman for the R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., which has had its scientists touring two dozen U.S. cities since May, said Friday she expects its own ad campaign pleading for accommodation between smokers and non-smokers to last through the summer.

"Many manufacturers have reached the conclusion that the industry has not done enough to make its point and this is not going to go away if we just lie low," said Ellen Merlo, Philip Morris USA vice president for corporate affairs.

Philip Morris's newly aggressive stance has been ignited by last week's arrival of new chairman R. William Murray and chief executive Geoffrey C. Bible, who said they would counterattack critics quickly and strongly.

Advertising experts say the advocacy campaigns, if sustained, can have a marked effect on the strength of voter support for more restrictions on smoking. Talk show hosts in some cities visited by the R.J. Reynolds team say they notice more callers, including non-smokers, complaining about government interference in individual rights. One poll also showed weakening support for banning all tobacco advertising.

Tobacco executives say the latest barrage of anti-smoking publicity has left them no alternative but to strike back as hard as possible.

R.J. Reynolds spokeswoman Maura Ellis said anti-smoking hearings and press conferences in Washington have become "almost daily" since early February. Thursday's events were particularly intense, with Brown & Williamson Tobacco Co.'s chief executive denying accusations that his company secretly boosted the addictive components of cigarettes and the Justice Department looking at possible criminal charges based on congressional testimony by seven tobacco executives in April.

"WERE YOU MISLED?" says the headline on the first of Philip Morris's ads scheduled to run five days next week in 10 newspapers, including The Washington Post. The ads reprint a long Forbes MediaCritic article decrying statistical flaws in a 1993 Environmental Protection Agency report on second-hand smoke and the media's failure to identify the report's problems. Each ad ends with the slogan, "In any controversy, facts must matter," and ask questions such as: "Of 11 U.S. studies used by the EPA, not a single one concluded that there is a statistically significant overall association between second-hand smoke and lung cancer. What did the EPA do to find a link, using the very same studies?"

The EPA Friday released a summary of its research that concluded it "stands behind the science used in the (1993) report — and so does the scientific community."

On the 16th floor of the Reynolds Building in Winston-Salem, N.C., R.J. Reynolds executives have been orchestrating a campaign to take doubts about secondary-smoke studies and concerns about smoking rights to dozens of American cities. The company's ad campaign, with the slogan "Together, we can work it out," has produced a series of full-page appeals for what it calls "a policy of accommodation."

The Reynolds campaign emphasizes a March Gallup/CNN/USA Today Poll that showed 86 percent of 1,700 Americans surveyed do not want to make smoking illegal. The same survey shows support for a ban on all tobacco advertising declining slightly from 49 percent in 1990 to 45 percent in March.

A Reynolds team of publicists and scientists has visited with reporters, editorial writers and talk show hosts in each of the cities. "We feel there has been too much Washington-based discussion and not enough outside-the-Beltway discussion," Ellis said.

Talk show hosts interviewed Friday said there is considerable support to limit the assault on smoking. "I am kind of amazed," said Barbara Whitesides, who hosts a show on KMOX radio in St. Louis. "I sense a certain amount of ambivalence ... a concern on this point of this being a freedom of choice issue."

Calls to an 800-number listed in the Reynolds ads have largely agreed with the appeal for limits on the anti-smoking campaign, with the majority of support coming from non-smokers, Ellis said.

The ads attack the notion of heavy new taxes on smoking and predict that alcohol, caffeine and high-fat foods will be the next targets.

Ameristar expands

By Mick Normington
Times-News writer

JACKPOT – Ameristar Casinos Inc. has bought 18 acres of land near its Vicksburg, Miss., riverboat and will use the land for two more hotels.

Ameristar already plans to begin construction later this year on a 300-room luxury hotel next to the riverboat. That hotel should be completed in late 1995.

This 18-acre site, which is about two blocks away from the riverboat, will be used as a parking lot for 600 vehicles as well as for two more hotels. But Ameristar won't develop these two other hotels, said Brad Meyer, corporate director of marketing.

Ameristar is looking for hotel franchisees who will develop the hotels, which should have about 100 rooms each, on the 18-acre site. But Ameristar will continue to own the land the franchise hotels will be on, Meyer said.

The company wants to get those new hotels up and operating by the end of 1995, he said.

Ameristar's casino riverboat opened up for business on the Mississippi River in February. It is the largest of five casino riverboats in Vicksburg. And Ameristar is now building an administrative building next to the riverboat.

"When all negotiations and construction are completed, there will be more than 500 hotel rooms to accommodate different market segments and 2,000 parking spaces within easy access of the riverboat casino," said Ken Edmunds, vice president of development for Ameristar.

HOW MUCH DOWN PAYMENT?
QUESTION: I intend to trade up to a newer and larger home in a better location. Does it make sense to make a larger down payment than the minimum?
ANSWER: One advantage in making a larger down payment is that your monthly mortgage payments will be lower. For another, it means you'll be in a better position to qualify for a larger loan.
However, something else to consider is just how much of your monthly income should be used for mortgage payments. Most people keep themselves in a comfortable financial position by limiting house payments to 20-25% of their monthly income. Don't put yourself in a cash bind.
A LARGER down payment will reduce monthly payments. But don't put yourself in a cash bind.

Interest in composting spreads

Cow manure is Roger Wood's dream.

It used to be John Reitsma's nightmare. Then he went into the manure composting business with Wood.

Now it's a money-making opportunity for the team.

"It wouldn't hurt my feelings a bit if I took every pound of manure that's produced in the Magic Valley," Wood said.

The manure composting in long piles at Reitsma's dairy along I-84 west of Jerome has already found its way to golf courses and garden centers as far away as Salt Lake City.

Landscapers and gardeners have fast adopted its use, but farmers – who have perhaps the most to gain from its use – have been more reluctant consumers of composted manure.

The government shouldn't punish Idaho farmers for irrigating land outside the boundaries of their water rights just because their irrigation techniques have become more efficient, farmers told U.S. Bureau of Reclamation officials Wednesday.

The agency hosted a public meeting in Burley to discuss the practice of "water spreading," or applying irrigation water in ways other than specified on permits.

"We're all in violation, every damn one of us," said John Hansen, who farms northeast of Rupert.

About 35 farmers met with Bureau of Reclamation officials to discuss the agency's plan to crack down on those who irrigate land not approved by the federal agency.

A U.S. Magistrate – in a case that began a year ago in Gooding County – has fined two Canadians $40,000 for their involvement in a blood-switching plot to illegally transport Mexican fighting cattle to their home in Listowel, Ontario.

Jose Borges Sr., 58, and Jose Borges Jr., 25, both of Listowel, pleaded guilty to misdemeanor fraud charges on Monday in U.S. District Court in Boise.

USDA Investigator Kirk Miller said Jose Borges Sr. was fined $35,000 and his son, Jose Borges Jr., was fined $5,000. Felony charges were dropped after the pair agreed to cooperate with authorities gathering evidence against a California man involved in the case.

A committee studying the issue of whether Idaho farmers should be required to carry workers' compensation insurance continues its search for answers.

Idaho's farm lobby again struck down provisions that would make worker's compensation mandatory for agricultural employees during the last Legislative session.

After HB610 – intended to remove the agricultural exemption from providing workers' compensation – was defeated in committee during the last session, the Legislature created the interim committee to examine the issue in more detail, said committee member Pat Takasugi, a Wilder farmer and Idaho Farm Bureau vice president.

"If we do agree to have workers' compensation, we want to have it fashioned for Idaho agriculture," said Takasugi. "We don't want to have to go back to the Legislature to correct a bunch of things. If it isn't to our liking, we'll fight it."

Field mice are causing a lot of difficulty on the northside, says Minidoka County Extension agent Ivan Hopkins.

"I had a call from a grain grower that said he is going to experience 15 percent loss from the mice," said Ivan Hopkins, Minidoka County Extension agent.

USDA Secretary Mike Espy wants integrated pest management practices employed on 75 percent of U.S. cropland by the year 2000, but the agency has given farmers few clues about what it considers such practices to be.

That was the opinion of fieldmen and University of Idaho researchers attending a UI fieldmen's luncheon here Wednesday.

"There are a lot of pests for which we may never have economic thresholds," said Ed Bechinski, a UI Extension integrated pest management specialist in Moscow.

Economic thresholds are an important part of integrated pest management programs, Bechinski said. Specific to crops and insects, thresholds determine how many insects a particular crop can tolerate before treatment is warranted.

Temperatures in the low 30s late last week brought frost to many areas of the Magic Valley, but most of the potato crop is far enough along to withstand the cold, Extension agricultural agents report.

"I've seen some spuds out there the size of walnuts already," said Bob Vodraska, Twin Falls County Extension agent. "And the plants are pretty well covering the rows."

"Some areas had a touch of frost on the northside (of the Snake River) primarily," said Minidoka County Extension Agent Ivan Hopkins. "It was just a light touch, but anytime you frost a potato, you hurt it."

Feedlots may be current on supply, but farmers with lambs shouldn't wait for a market peak to sell, market analysts said Monday.

"I wouldn't hang on to all of them," said Harold Harper, a Denver-area lamb feeder. "I know there's a lot of lamb in the freezers all over the country that are going to start coming out next week."

Earlier this year, lamb prices crashed when imports from New Zealand and Australia drove prices down, said Wayne Clark, former head lamb buyer for Farmstead Foods in Albert Lea, Minn., which closed last February.

Clark predicted the lamb market to be stronger due to short supply on the horizon, but Harper expects frozen stocks – and imports – will prevent prices from reaching a peak.

A replacement for the Wool Act may be included in the 1995 farm bill.

"We're working diligently on a replacement for the Wool Act," said John Olsen, executive director of the American Sheep Industry Association.

year rebound in the fourth quarter."

Vision 2000 calls for all stores to be completely renovated. The Twin Falls store's renovations carry a price tag of $258,950, according to the building permits.

As part of those renovations, the women's clothing section of the store is growing and will begin at the main store entrance that connects to Magic Valley Mall. Next to that will be a "Fashion Trends Stage" where Jahn said he'll be able to display any seasonal items such as women's summer clothing or school supplies in the fall to attract customers.

The renovations began May 22 with construction crews working mainly at night and should be finished by late July, Jahn said.

Other changes include raising many of the shelves from 66 inches high to 84 inches.

The Green Bay, Wisc.-based chain had 39 stores in 1984 when it started a growth program and was aided by an initial public stock offering in 1991. The company now has 155 stores in 15 states in the Midwest and West.

and Wal-Mart coming into the area.

The prescription drug business has now changed so that all pharmacies give discounts and there's now little room to move on prices, Kurt Hefner said. So like some other independent pharmacists he's concentrated on service such as offering home deliveries.

He said the card and gift operation has helped bring in people to his pharmacy business. While prescription drugs account for the bulk of the dollar sales at Kurt's Pharmacy, the number of customers is evenly split between the pharmacy business and the cards and gifts business, he said.

"We've done Hallmark stores the same for 25 years and we're now trying to change with the times," said Whitney Phillips, Hallmark's Idaho sales representative who worked with the Hefners. Kurt's Pharmacy is the first Hallmark shop in Idaho to get the redesign.

American Stores plans expansion

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — American Stores Co. plans to spend $700 million this year to build 34 new stores, remodel 210 stores and warehouses and improve information systems and technologies, shareholders have been told.

The 1994 expansion follows the Utah-based company's 1993 acquisition of 55 Reliable drug stores and expenditure of $653 million to open 39 new stores and remodel 233 others, president and chief executive officer Victor L. Lund said at an annual shareholder meeting Tuesday.

American Stores operates 1,689 stores in 27 states. It is the nation's largest combined food and drug chain, and ranked third in 1993 in grocery sales behind Kroger and Safeway and second in drug sales behind Walgreen's, said Meredith C. Anderson, vice president for public, government and investor relations.

Lund said the expansion and remodeling continues the company's philosophy that "our prosperity, in fact our long-term survival, will absolutely depend on a course of action that addresses our most critical needs."

The national economy may be iffy, but business is booming for car thieves. In 1991, 1.8 million cars were stolen, a 50 percent increase form 1985. Worse, the chance of recovery is way down.

What can you do about it? Basic protection includes locking the car every time you leave it, and taking the keys.

Most common among the anto-theft devices is an alarm. A sensor sounds the siren if it detects motion, a sharp blow or a broken window. There's even a panic alarm the owner can trigger if he or she feels threatened. Unfortunately, or course, there are many false alarms sounding also.

A disabling device makes the fuel and/or ignition systems inoperable. These are effective and inexpensive, but not completely infallible. They may even stop the owner form driving away.

The bar lock--most common is "The Club"--is highly visible. It may not stop the professional auto thief, but it can stop a beginner. Other options: a vehicle recovery radio system and VIN-etched windows.

For money funds: Where does buck stop?

PLAINSBORO, N.J. (AP) — When managers of money market mutual funds put up their own money to make good on bad portfolio investments, they solve one problem — but may create another.

The actions at a series of funds in recent weeks, following precedents set years ago, have so far averted any loss of principal for money-fund shareholders.

They have also raised questions for the future, however, about just how far the managers can and should go to keep that record intact. In addition, these make-good moves may cloud the whole issue of who bears risk in a fund investment.

So suggests Arthur Zeikel, who as chief executive of Merrill Lynch Asset Management oversees one of the nation's largest mutual fund families with close to 200 stock, bond and money market funds encompassing more than $120 billion in assets.

"I fear we are entering an arena where we are shifting responsibility from the investor back into the management company," Zeikel said in an interview at Merrill's office campus here, set in semi-rural country an hour's drive from corporate headquarters in New York.

"If this industry gets into a money-back-guarantee mode, it's potentially very damaging."

Merrill Lynch, the nation's biggest securities firm, didn't invent the money market fund. But on Zeikel's watch since 1976, it has played a central role in advancing the idea, offering funds that stand on their own or fit into the firm's pioneering Cash Management Account.

No funds in the Merrill Lynch family have been involved in recent tremors touching various money funds that suffered losses in so-called derivative securities, Zeikel notes.

He says he agrees with the decisions to date by the managers of those funds to put up cash covering the losses, in order to avoid "breaking the buck" by having their net asset values fall from $1 a share to 99 cents, 98 cents or lower.

They have done this even though money funds carry no guarantee against loss, and their managements aren't obligated by law or contract to support the price of a share at $1.

"The industry in total has to maintain the confidence of its constituency," Zeikel says. If a fund's net asset value per share should fall to 99 cents, "it's just a penny, it's 1 percent," he adds. "But it would shake the confidence of the shareholders.

"It would appear, generally speaking, that they did the right thing, in their own best interest. But at some point, if the practice does become standard, that's a serious development.

"The question is, who bears the risk," he adds. "There seems to be an attempt, as evidenced by a variety of lawsuits based on investment disappointment, to shift a greater part of the responsibility back to the management company. We're part of a pass-the-blame society."

Should that trend continue, he suggests, "no one but the very large companies are going to be able to manage their business on that basis."

Also, he says, once an effort begins to take the burden of risk off fund shareholders' shoulders, it's hard to see where it stops. "What about a lawsuit where your stock fund is up 30 percent but the other guy is up 40 percent, and you say 'where's my 10 percent?'"

"My guess is that the American legal system will do a reasonably good job" of settling these questions, Zeitel says.

In the meantime, he says, the fund industry needs to improve efforts to explain and keep clearly defined what risks its customers must bear in buying and owning fund shares. "The fund industry has done really a pretty good job of this," he says. "We have to do an even better job."

Firms plan resorts in Vietnam

HANOI, Vietnam (AP) — Two U.S. companies plan to build resorts worth $380 million on the sands of what American soldiers during the Vietnam War knew as China Beach.

The bigger of the two projects to be located near the central Vietnamese city of Da Nang will consist of four hotels, a conference center and a golf course. It will be the biggest investment so far by a foreign firm in Vietnam.

The BBI Investment Group, headquartered in Chevy Chase, Md., plans to sign a joint-venture agreement within a month to develop the complex, Stewart Stemple, the company's managing director in Vietnam, said Tuesday. BBI's share in the project is expected to be 67 percent. The likely partner, a firm owned by the Quang Nam-Da Nang Tourist Co. and the people's committee of Quang Nam-Da Nang province, will hold the remaining 33 percent.

Travel ads often seek salesmen

Q: I saw a classified ad that reads, "travel the country, high pay, all transportation and expenses paid," it seems too good to be true. What can you tell me about these types of jobs?

A: Such ads usually solicit teenagers and young adults to become part of traveling sales crews that sell magazine subscriptions or cleaning products door-to-door across the country.

Consumer Watch
Better Business Bureau

In most cases, the ad does not give the name of the company or the nature of the work, but list a local phone number. The job interview usually takes place in a hotel or motel and if the person decides to take the job they are asked to leave right away.

Once on the job, the new employee may find that the hours are long, with early morning and late-night meetings rehearsing sales pitches. The living conditions are cramped and allow little personal freedom. Meals and personal items must be bought with a nightly dole. In some crews, employees do not receive paychecks. Their sales are credited to an account by the crew manager, who may deduct hotel expenses, cancelled orders, fines for "misconduct" and the nightly allowance. Often employees end up in debt to the sales organization, or so they are told, and therefore are unable to leave if they want to.

Anyone who is considering working for a traveling sales crew should obtain in writing: the company name and address, details about travel, food and housing; commission rates and bonus plans, the salary amount, who keeps track of it and how it is paid. You will want to know how friends and family can contact you and who arranges transportation home.

If the company can't supply you with this information, job seekers should look elsewhere. Always remember to check the company out with the Better Business Bureau.

Q: How can I get my landlord to make repairs to my apartment?

A: According to information supplied to us by the Idaho Legal Aid Services Inc., Tenants' Rights pamphlet, you must first notify your landlord in writing of the need of repairs. The letter must contain in detail all repairs that need to be done. Keep a copy of the letter for your records.

The letter can be delivered to the landlord or their agent; leaving the letter at the landlord's usual place of business or with their employee; or you may send a copy of the letter by certified mail, return receipt requested. If after three days from serving notice, no repairs have begun, a tenant may sue his landlord in court for damages and specific performance.

Specific performance means the court will force the landlord to make the repairs. You may want to consult an attorney prior to commencing any court actions.

A tenant should not attempt to withhold rent or use any other self-help method. If the court finds in the tenant's favor, he may be entitled to recover damages and attorney fees. Actions for repairs are covered by Idaho Code Section 6-320.

Gay Games' sales disappoint vendors

Newsday

NEW YORK — Like dozens of vendors, Ann Marie Mills of Alaska came to Gay Games IV in New York with high hopes, shipping boxloads of T-shirts to hawk at the event's merchandise fair.

But she'll return to Anchorage with empty pockets — and nearly all of her goods.

"I haven't sold one-100th of what I thought I'd sell," said Mills, 29, as she stood in front of boxes of unsold T-shirts at her booth on the 18th floor of the Hotel Pennsylvania, where the Unity Center Merchandise Fair is located. She expects to lose $10,000.

"This is supposed to be about unity," said another vendor who didn't want to be named. "But you know what? This is about getting screwed."

The vendors aren't blaming the economy for their woes. Instead, their ire is directed at Seth Felson, a Miami businessman who organized the fair, collected booth rental fees and bought the rights to sell official Gay Games paraphernalia.

Felson, the vendors claim, unfairly installed his booths at choice locales in the hotel, failed to provide advertising and promised more customers. They're also miffed because Felson was sanctioned to sell at Gay Games events, thus diverting business from vendors who until Wednesday could only sell at the fair.

In a brief interview, Felson shrugged when told of vendors' complaints. "I'm officially licensed by the Gay Games and the Gay Games is handling everything," he said.

Harold Levine, Gay Games marketing director, said vendors were never "promised or led to believe that they would be able to sell in another locale except this central merchandise fair." Levine also said the fair will probably not prove to be a money-making venture for Felson, saying, "He may make $1 on doing this."

About 15 of the fair's vendors have taken their complaints to a New York City lawyer, Margo Diesenhouse, who wrote two letters to Felson demanding that he resolve the problem.

"To date, we haven't received any response at this time," Diesenhouse said. "There's been absolute silence toward me on this end."

Dejected vendors said a response would come too late anyway.

"Our T-shirts were originally $15. We had to cut them to $10," said Phyllis Galavotti of Orlando, Fla., noting that she expects to lose upward of $15,000. "It's so frustrating. I can't believe this is happening to me."

Asia offers opportunities for Northwest businesses

KANANASKIS VILLAGE, Alberta (AP) — Booming Asia offers rich opportunities to businesses in the region on both sides of the U.S.-Canadian border.

That's according to speakers at the Pacific Northwest Economic Region.

"By far the greatest growth economically going on in the world today is specifically within the Asian region," said Washington Gov. Mike Lowry, who noted Asia will buy $180 billion worth of planes over the next 15 years — a market that has not gone unnoticed by Seattle-based Boeing Co.

Countries with developing economies need everything from environmental technology to airplanes and agricultural assistance, said Lowry, who recently returned from a trade mission to Asia.

The organization — headed by Washington state Sen. Alan Bluechel — is a loose alliance of government and the private sector that wants to pool and market the business resources of Alberta and British Columbia in Canada and of Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana and Alaska in the United States. It met last week in Canada.

"There is more work there in environmental technology than all of our companies put together for the next 40 years could handle," Bluechel said. "What we want to do is put it together, open the doors so that our members ... can make the sale," Bluechel said in an interview at the organization's summer conference here, west of Calgary.

Economic cooperation can be hindered by such conflicts, Lowry said, citing the stalemate between the United States and Canada over diminishing salmon stocks off the West Coast. The two countries were unable to reach agreement this year to renew the salmon treaty that has governed the fishery since 1985.

Last week, in a bid to force negotiators back to the table, Canada began charging U.S. commercial fishing vessels $1,100 to traverse the sheltered inside Passage along Canada's coast — the safest route for boats traveling to Alaska from Washington and Oregon.

State and provincial governments must press federal officials in both countries to resolve these differences and protect resources, Lowry said.

"I really feel bad about the (salmon) situation going on right now and I believe the United States is every bit as much a problem as Canada is," he said.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

Dear Mr. Wolff:
We play two-over-one as forcing to game. Do jumps to game announce maximum values for prior bidding or do they indicate little or no slam interest?
Hard Lessons, Seattle, Wash.

ANSWER: Many use the jump to game to deny slam interest. In theory, after a two-over-one response that forces to game, a jump to game eliminates bidding space for slam-probing bids and therefore shows little slam interest. This is an area that demands clear partnership understanding.

Dear Mr. Wolff:
At duplicate, partner opens one club and my RHO overcalls one heart. I bid two diamonds with 11 HCP and a five-card suit. If partner rebids two no-trump, are my 11 HCP enough to raise?
Scattered Stuff, Pasadena, Calif.

ANSWER: Some 11-point hands are better than others. With a quick source of tricks (a very good diamond suit), I would raise. With scattered values, a pass is probably best. There's little profit in playing game with 23 or 24 HCP in the combined hands.

Dear Mr. Wolff:
Partner overcalled in clubs and I supported with K-10-3-2. Against a four-spade game, he led the ace and dummy came down with Q-9-6. How bad was it for me to play the 10 as encouragement?
Cost Plenty, Phoenix, Ariz.

ANSWER: Very bad. Partner should have at least a five-card suit, giving declarer a singleton at most. When you play your 10, you create a finessing position for declarer and will cost your side a trick if the suit is continued. Your second-lowest club would be best in this situation.

Dear Mr. Wolff:
We had a part-score of 90 and I opened one no-trump, 16-18 HCP. If partner bid two spades, would this be considered a slam try — i.e., "overbidding the score"?
Man Overboard, Houston, Texas

ANSWER: No, it would not. To invite slam, responder should bid three spades. His two-spade bid is merely an effort to play in a safer contract.

Dear Mr. Wolff:
At rubber bridge, after the bidding starts, can a player call attention to the state of the score?
Bad Memory, Short Hills, N.J.

ANSWER: No, he cannot. He can do so before the bidding starts. After that, no reminders are in order.

Send bridge questions to The Aces, P.O. Box 12363, Dallas, Texas 75225, with self addressed, stamped envelope for reply.

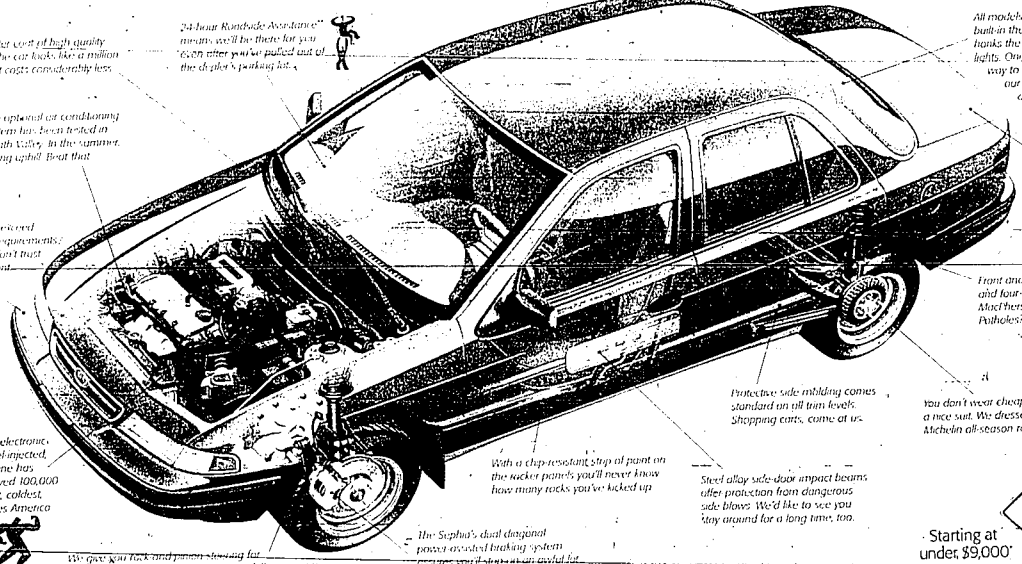
It's about time everyone had a well-made car.

Something deep down inside tells us we'll be around for a long time.



Coat after coat of high quality paint. The car looks like a million bucks. It costs considerably less.

24-hour Roadside Assistance* means we'll be there for you. Even after you've pulled out of the dealer's parking lot.

All models come standard with a built-in theft-deterrent system that honks the horn and flashes the lights. One sure-fire way to make sure our cars stick around longer.

The optional air conditioning system has been tested in Death Valley. In the summer. Going uphill. Boat that.

You don't wear cheap shoes with a nice suit. We dressed our car in Michelin all-season radial tires.

Our 1.6 liter, electronic, multi-port fuel-injected, 16-valve engine has already survived 100,000 of the hottest, coldest, toughest miles America could throw at it.

With a chip-resistant step of paint on the rocker panels you'll never know how many rocks you've kicked up.

We give you fast-and-precise-steering for a more precise feel and greater control. Because cars tend to last longer when they stay on the road.

Starting at under $9,000*

Q I'm curious about the real-life chemistry between Roseanne Arnold and Laurie Metcalf, who plays Roseanne's sister, Jackie, on the weekly sitcom. Do these two women get along?—Frank Habel, Walnut Creek, Calif.

A "Impossible" is probably the kindest word you will hear from most people in the TV industry when asked to describe Roseanne Arnold. But that's not the story you get from Laurie Metcalf. The actress —born in Carbondale, Ill., an original member of Chicago's prestigious Steppenwolf Theatre and a featured player on "Saturday Night Live" in 1981—has established a good personal and professional relationship with Roseanne. Theirs is the present-day equivalent of the chemistry that existed between Lucille Ball and Vivian Vance from the 1950s through the '70s, when they played pals on "I Love Lucy," "The Lucy Show" and "Here's Lucy." Says Metcalf, 39: "People seem to think that whether or not people can do their job, Roseanne will just come down on them for no reason. That's not true." Of course, if you ask Tom Arnold about Rosey's famous temper, you might get a different answer.

A Discounted air fares are meant to attract the discretionary dollars of leisure travelers, so airlines insist on Saturday-night stays to discourage business travelers. That situation may change, however. A spokesman for the International Airline Passengers Association says some companies now encourage employees to stay through the weekend during business trips in order to get the cheaper fares. As an incentive, the companies are allowing employees to take along a spouse or friend. The two discounted fares and the extra hotel room often cost less than one full-fare ticket.

Simmons: Still rockin'

Q One of my all-time favorite bands is Kiss. Can you tell me how much they earned over their long career?—Darrin McGoldrick, Windham, Maine

A It's impossible to put an exact dollar figure on the group's earnings, says Gene Simmons, the bass player for Kiss, but he estimates that they have sold 70 million albums. Simmons (real name: Gene Klein, 44, born in Haifa, Israel) and vocalist Paul Stanley are the only original members still with Kiss, which was formed in New York in 1973. The quartet became notorious for their outrageous makeup, costumes and pyrotechnical displays, and Kiss continues to draw concert audiences. "Amusement Business" magazine reports that the group grossed more than $22 million on tour from 1985 to 1992. Kiss will release a new disc later this year. Meanwhile, Garth Brooks and other Kiss fans just released a tribute album with their versions of the band's hits.

Q Am I just imagining this, or haven't I seen Alison Armitage, the co-star of the TV series "Acapulco H.E.A.T.," in a couple of revealing magazine spreads? While you're at it, can you tell me if she does her own stunts on her show?—B.A., Denver, Colo.

A You're not dreaming. Shapely Alison Armitage has gotten a lot of exposure lately—particularly on the cover of "Sport" magazine's 1994 swimsuit issue. As Brittany York, she also was the "Playboy" Playmate of the Month in October 1990. The actress, who puts her age at "29 or so," says she's a tomboy at heart. She insists on doing most of her own TV stunts in her role as Marie Claire "Cat" Pascal, a cat burglar working on the right side of the law. And when the cameras aren't rolling, Alison indulges in such high-risk sports as car racing, rattlesnake hunting, bungee jumping and skydiving.

TV's Alison Armitage: Lots of exposure

Q Can you explain why Jeff Bridges was not nominated for an Academy Award this year for "Fearless"? Why doesn't he get the recognition that he certainly deserves as one of the best actors in Hollywood?—Jennifer Carter, Washington, D.C.

A Sadly, the Oscars are as much about box-office earnings as they are about excellence in acting. Although Jeff Bridges was praised for his performance in "Fearless," the film was not a hit. In fact, some studio executives believe Bridges lacks the charisma to pack movie houses—which may be why he's one of the most underrated actors working in Hollywood today. Another reason may be the way he immerses himself in a role and allows other actors to upstage him. Critics have applauded Bridges for this ability; but the Oscar nominations have gone to his co-stars, such as Rosie Perez for "Fearless" and Mercedes Ruehl, who won for "The Fisher King." During his 25-year career, Bridges has received three Oscar nominations—for "The Last Picture Show" (1971), "Thunderbolt and Lightfoot" (1974) and "Starman" (1984)—but he has never won.

Q I just read the wonderful biography "Truman," by David McCullough. I wonder if you can name any current member of the U.S. Senate who is in Harry's class as far as integrity and guts are concerned?—D. Lawley, South Portland, Maine

A In this play-it-safe age of instant sound bites, it is true that few U.S. Senators have the grit and guts of Harry Truman. However, when Washington veterans are pressed to identify the members of the current crop on Capitol Hill who display the most integrity, they name the following Senators: Bill Bradley (D., N.J.), Ben Nighthorse Campbell (D., Colo.), Orrin Hatch (R., Utah), Nancy Kassebaum (R., Kan.), Herb Kohl (D., Wis.) and Harry Reid (D., Nev.).

In 1993, the economy began to turn around, the job market started to open up—and, if you were flexible, you stood a better chance of making a good living. How did you do?

WHAT PEOPLE EARN

BY MICHAEL VERMEULEN

FLEXIBILITY IS THE main qualification in today's job market: the ability to do one thing well and then, if need be, shift swiftly to do another. But there are some immutables. A recent study published by the National Bureau of Economic Research has shown that appearances do count—they can affect your paycheck by 5% to 10%. Sorting through a mass of employment data and surveying 7000 adults, interviewers divided the group up according to looks and then compared what those working similar jobs in each category were paid. Those rated "below average" in appearance earned less than those rated "average," who earned less than those rated "above average."

But before running off to the plastic surgeon, consider that beautiful people have money problems too. At a recent Calvin Klein fashion show, the skinny women on the catwalk received $7000, while the men —paid just $1500—felt skinned.

The illusionist David Copperfield earned $26 million in 1993 and became engaged to the supermodel Claudia Schiffer this year. The actor Macaulay Culkin, 13, made $16 million, the director Steven Spielberg made $42 million, and Michael Jordan, though struggling to escape baseball's minor leagues, still topped all other sportsmen by earning a major-league $36 million, most of it through endorsements.

Computer-systems analysts averaged $42,000 last year, college professors $61,270, insurance auditors $33,897 and orthopedic surgeons $283,000. The median (as many above as below) weekly earnings for the nation's workers before taxes came to $463 a week, says the Bureau of Labor Statistics; that would be $24,076 annually if they all worked the entire year. The Commerce Department set the official poverty level in 1993 at $7357 for an individual and $14,764 for a family of four. Yet, according to the Census Bureau's latest figures, one in six full-time employees earns less than the poverty level. This is a shocking 35% rise in America's "working poor" since 1979.

At the opposite end of the scale, America's highest-paid corporate executive was Walt Disney Chairman Michael Eisner, who reaped a windfall of more than $203 million for his toil. He, like many other top company bosses, avoided the sting of President Clinton's $1 million cap on corporate paychecks by making less than the ceiling in straight salary and the rest in profits off stock options, which are unrestricted.

At the same time, many Americans are making substantial gains outside of traditional salary arrangements, as fluctuating performance-related bonuses take the place of automatic ladderlike pay raises. A survey of 2000 large U.S. companies last year showed that 68% offered pay-for-performance plans for all salaried employees—up from 47% in 1990. This year, such bonuses are expected to average more than 6% of their recipients' base salary—much better than the 4% pay raises predicted for 1994, which will barely beat inflation. If there is a problem with these schemes, however, it is that performance-based pay is not permanent: It has to be "re-earned" every year.

But what is permanent these days? Certainly not jobs. While the profits of America's 500 largest companies grew by 14% last year, their personnel shrank by 1% as big cuts continued. The economy is robustly recovering from recession, but that recovery has been led by increased productivity, not by an increasing number of jobs. Instead, workers are putting in more overtime—paid and otherwise—than at any point since the reconstruction following World War II. And many of the jobs that were created this year were lower-paying service or part-time positions.

Still, as the companies currently "downsizing" become "rightsized"—and provided the economy continues its present 3.5% growth—the job picture should improve, especially for young people (see accompanying article). Older workers, however, have some reason for concern. So far in the 1990s, middle-aged Americans are 55% more likely to lose their jobs than in the 1970s. The median incomes of college-educated men aged 45 to 54, in particular, have fallen 17% since 1986 to $41,898, with the biggest drop after 1989. But women of similar age and education have experienced a slight in-

Women now make 77 cents for every male dollar—1.5 cents better than last year and 14.5 cents better than in 1979. But, in general, men are dropping back more swiftly than women are gaining.

One of the women interviewed in PARADE's annual survey of wage-earners, Kim Yen Pham, 23, a Vietnam refugee, saw her income climb 25% over the past year. After five years in Baton Rouge, La., she was making $12,000 a year as a seamstress. She opened her own shop in January and is hoping to earn $15,000 by the end of this year. "First week, I have only one customer," she says. "The second week, I have another. The third week, another. Now it is okay." She adds, "In a perfect world —nirvana—I would expect $20,000."

Daniel Ames, 42, an airline passenger-service agent living in Morton, Ill., must contend with an imperfect world. His carrier, Air Wisconsin, was acquired by United and then broken up into three smaller units. Married with two children, he was fortunate to keep his job; but, under new contracts, his hourly pay declined from $14.30 to $12.78, his health insurance went up and his pension contribution went down. He also had to change airports from nearby Peoria to Moline, which adds the cost of 200 miles' commuting and two nights in a hotel each week. "Everything included, my income has been downsized 18% over last year," he says.

This year, many Americans made substantial gains outside of traditional salary arrangements. On average, fluctuating bonuses based on performance were bigger than automatic pay raises in many companies. The problem with such schemes: The bonus is not permanent. It has to be "re-earned" every year.

Lucy McBain, 55, a Los Angeles Realtor, is also down for the year, although it's not quite the same. One of Coldwell Banker's top residential salespeople, she sold 30 properties last year and made a hefty $300,000. But that's a far cry from the $750,000 she earned a few years back. "I worked harder to earn that $300,000 than I ever did to earn the $750,000," she says.

Finally, Darryl Sept, 31, of Brooklyn, N.Y., has really come a long way. Eight years ago, he was a $12,000-a-year foot messenger, but he now earns $46,000 as a customer-service representative for the same firm, the New York arm of a British-owned, Hong Kong-based printer. Eager to succeed, Sept acquired new skills and responsibilities at every opportunity, then stood up for himself in salary negotiations. It worked. He is one happy fellow.

Sept hopes to boost this year's take, with bonus, to $50,000. Then he'll stop to enjoy his winnings—and possibly win more. "I'm going to save up for a vacation," he says. "I want to see Vegas."

The most pressing issue facing today's youth has been finding a job. Now the jobs are starting to show up—but you have to be prepared.

FINALLY—SOME GOOD NEWS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

RACHELLE BROWN OF SAN DIEGO GOT HER first job at 13. In the six years since, she has worked as a floral assistant, a home health-care aide, a fast-food server and a retail salesclerk. "I wanted to try different things to see what I'd like," she explains. Since graduating from high school in 1993, she has been training to become a solar installer at the San Diego Job Corps Center. "My goal is to get a contracting license and eventually open my own company," she says. "I want to be in a field with a future and, in this area, solar installation is really in demand."

Like Rachelle, many of today's teens are trying to figure out how to support themselves in the years ahead. "They're acutely aware that there has been an economic slowdown and that the job market is changing," says E. Don Brown, a high school principal in Hurst, Tex. "Their own parents may be out of work, or their older brothers and sisters can't find jobs."

But prospects for young job-seekers are growing brighter. This year, according to one survey, Fortune 500 companies have hired 8.8% more new college graduates than in 1993—the first increase in years. By 2005, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, employment will grow by 26 million jobs. "After more than a decade of downsizing and restructuring, the tide has definitely turned," says Victor Lindquist, placement director at Northwestern University. "There should be some exceptional opportunities for young people, but they have to be prepared to take advantage of them."

Preparation means education. "Young people who do not get a high school degree will be unemployed or underemployed by the turn of the century," says Stephen Barley of the Cornell University School of Industrial and Labor Relations. "A high school diploma is a ticket you have to have, but it's not sufficient for getting anywhere. You need advanced training—although not necessarily at a four-year college. Many of the jobs opening up in fields like electronics, medical technology or science technology can be as easily prepared for at a community, junior or technical school."

Yet a college degree is still considered a good investment. In the course of their careers, college graduates earn 77% more than those without degrees. More than a third of the fastest-growing fields—including physical and occupational therapy, special education and computer sciences —generally require a bachelor's degree.

The demand for skilled workers such as carpenters, electricians, plumbers and other craftsmen should remain strong. "The service occupations also will continue to grow," says Jon Sargent, an economist with the Bureau of Labor Statistics, who predicts more jobs for salespersons, office clerks, chefs, waiters and waitresses, police and firemen.

Vinson Tafoya of El Cajon, Calif., went looking for work after passing a high school equivalency exam last year. "There's nothing out there," he says. "No one wants to hire a 16-year-old." Tafoya is now training with the Job Corps and hopes to enter the Marine Corps.

"Military service is definitely still a good option," says Maj. Thomas M. Leahy of the U.S. Army Recruiting Command at Fort Knox, which will sign up to 70,000 recruits for active duty this year. "While recruiting quotas are lower than in the past, we need and will not stop needing young soldiers." Almost all of today's enlistees have high school diplomas; many join to earn scholarship aid (up to $30,000 for four years of active service) or acquire specialized training. "The military experience provides not only tangible skills but also intangible qualities that employers value in civilian companies," says Leahy. "Teamwork, initiative, determination, responsibility."

Another alternative is the Job Corps, a federally funded program with 109 centers, which provides 62,000 young people a year with individualized job-skills training, high school and college coursework, and free housing. "I'd dropped out of high school and ended up homeless before I entered the San Diego Job Corps," says Lans Pursel, 21. "Now I'm getting training that will prepare me for jobs in building maintenance, plumbing, electrical work or solar installation. I want to make sure I open the door of opportunity wide enough to step through."

Experts suggest that young people start preparing early. "Sixth- and seventh-graders should be giving serious thought to how they're going to spend their lives," says Pat Schwallie-Giddis, the acting executive director of the American Counseling Association.

Since the careers of the future may well be different from those of today, educators are emphasizing skills rather than specific jobs. "At 13 or 14, you shouldn't try to decide if you want to be a doctor or lawyer or whatever," says Principal Brown, "but you should start acquiring skills and exploring different types of work so you can see how you might apply those skills."

Here are other recommendations that can help in planning for the future:

• Take school seriously. "Don't make the mistake of thinking that classes in literature, math or science aren't useful," says Stephen Barley. "They are, and they will be even more so in the future." Whatever you do, you're going to need to know how to express yourself effectively, work with figures and understand how things work.

• Acquire a range of experiences. By participating in extracurricular activities or volunteering for nonprofit groups, you gain practical skills as well as learn to work as part of a team, motivate others or plan a major event.

• Develop specialized skills. Familiarize yourself with different computer systems and software. Learn a language or study abroad, if possible. "As they move into the global marketplace, companies are looking for people who show that they can adapt to other cultures," says Maury Hanigan, a New York-based management consultant specializing in strategic staffing.

• Learn about different careers. Talk to older siblings and their friends about their jobs. Volunteer to run errands at a family friend's workplace to get an inside view of daily work.

• Get a part-time job. "Some work, even if it's flipping burgers at McDonald's, is better than none," says Barley. "It shows that you're reliable and gives you a reference." Use every job to learn about yourself. "Dissect the components of a job," says Maury Hanigan. "Ask yourself: 'What did I enjoy? Why did I stick with it other than to get a paycheck?' " Use these insights to learn what type of work suits you best.

• Become an intern. Paid or unpaid internships provide the best entry into many fields. Of firms with cooperative work-study arrangements or internships that were surveyed last year, 93% offered graduating participants permanent jobs.

• Work hard at looking for work. "Sometimes young people think, 'I'm young, I'm inexperienced, I don't have a shot, so why try?' " says Hanigan. "Employers are looking for people who do more than the minimum to get a job, because they'll do more than the minimum after they've got it. It takes real determination and discipline, but the jobs are out there if you go after them." ■

LYNN MINTON REPORTS:

FRESH VOICES®

Successful come-on lines: The response

An 18-year-old boy from Peoria, Ill., recently revealed his "come-on lines that work," adding that "whether a girl realizes it or not, if she laughs at a line, she's fallen for it." A lot of readers responded. Here are some excerpts:

I fell on the floor laughing at what this guy said. Face it: Some women, like myself, would see right through lines like, "Stop looking so beautiful, I'm trying to drive." Yes, I admit it, I would be amused. But I wouldn't fall for the line—or for you. I'd be laughing at your lack of creativity and your insensitive approach to getting to know me. Women just want to have a conversation, not hear a bunch of corny, reused lines that every girl in Peoria has heard.

—Carrie Sauter, 19, Baltimore, Md.

Once my friend and I were standing in line for a movie. These two cute guys came up to us, and one said, "I'll trade you my friend for yours." And I was like, "All right. Take her!" And we saw the movie with them.

Another good one is, "I seem to have lost my phone number. Can I borrow yours?" Or, "If I told you that you have an awesome body, would you hold it against me?" (But I hate it when someone comes up to me with a really sleazy pickup line.)

But the ultimate pickup line—one that is guaranteed to work—was made up by a friend of mine. She was at this pool, and she said to the lifeguard: "Excuse me, do you believe in love at first sight—or do I have to walk by again?" They went out for about a month and a half after that.

—Becky Barnes, 17, Colorado Springs, Colo.

Some lines I've heard: "I'd buy you a drink, but I'd be jealous of the glass." And, "I know we're not on the phone, but can I reach out and touch you?"

—Carly Grace, 15, Thomasville, Ga.

May I suggest a more unique approach, which will not only grab a girl's attention but also impress her beyond your wildest dreams? Take a moment to watch her. Then, if your eyes meet, try a very simple smile (nothing toothy). And then use something you have noticed about her as the icebreaker: "Hi, I'm Gary. You are a very good dancer/You have a beautiful smile/I noticed your ring—where did you get it?" The more unique the aspect is to her, the more perceptive you will appear.

Then try showing genuine interest in her. Ask questions and listen to her answers. I think you will find that there is a way to meet people without degrading yourself by using lines that any guy could (and probably does) use—and that any girl knows he's used on other girls before her.

—Catherine Quast, 23, Portland, Ore.

Cindy Rhoday, 23, of Collinsville, Va., told us some come-on lines that got her attention, what she replied to the guy and what she thought:

Cindy: "Yeah, we'd have another Freddy Krueger."
The guy: "We were destined to meet." (This was nice. Even though he wasn't sincere, the way he said it just sounded good.)
Cindy: "Well, what's your reasoning behind this?" (I kept talking to him—which is the point of a line, anyway. The truth is, the lines you hear most often are very ordinary, like, "Don't I know you?")
The guy: "I'm the shy, quiet type." (The ones who say they are shy are the worst in the entire world, because they are always the opposite. Run away as quickly as possible!)
The guy: "I could really fall in love with you—I'm over my ex." (Leave him in the dust! If they have to say that, then you know they're really not over her.)

Why have I heard so many come-on lines? My friend and I are, like, the two most outgoing people in the entire universe. We always have a good time. And people are like, "What are they laughing about?" I think maybe that's why they want to come over—you know, to be part of our good time.

TELL ME YOUR PROBLEMS. Write to Lynn Minton, Box 5103, Grand Central Station, New York, N.Y. 10163-5103. Please include daytime phone number. Every letter is read, but personal replies regrettably are not possible.

Live Action Meets the Cartoons

Jim Carrey—the rubber-limbed funnyman who shot to movie stardom in Ace Ventura: Pet Detective—really gets to stretch as an actor in The Mask. And he's aided by some special effects that have Hollywood buzzing.

What's new? We asked Scott Squires of Industrial Light & Magic, the wizards who have won 13 Oscars for their visual effects. (Squires was the technical director on Who Framed Roger Rabbit.) "We're taking processes used on Jurassic Park and Terminator 2," he told us, "and using them to turn a live-action film into a Tex Avery-type cartoon."

Avery, a legendary animator, created cartoon classics in the 1930s and '40s that were noted for their exaggerated sight gags. In The Mask, when Carrey is attracted to a sexy lounge singer, his tongue extends out of his mouth and across the table; his heart thumps out of his chest. The gags look real but are computer-generated.

The film, which opens late next month, is based on a comic book about a timid bank clerk —played by Carrey—who turns into a green-faced superhero when he puts on an ancient mask with strange powers. One of the secrets of the mask is that its effects depend on who is wearing it. "The mask brings your innermost desires to life," Squires told us. "Jim Carrey's character watches a lot of cartoons, so his persona is like a cartoon character. When the bad guy puts on the mask, it's evil and frightening." And when the hero's pet terrier, Milo, puts on the mask, Squires added, "all heck breaks loose."

New Line Cinema

The most difficult special effects? Creating computer-generated water for a whirlpool sequence, said Squires. And turning Carrey into "Flat Man" when he jumps out a window and is flattened on the pavement.

So will this odd-looking guy with the green face appeal to audiences? Special effects aside, a lot depends on Jim Carrey, Squires admitted. New Line Cinema is optimistic. It just signed the hot 32-year-old comic to star in a Mask sequel for a cool $7 million.

Album Sales Come Alive After Death

Kurt Cobain, the lead singer of Nirvana, shot himself to death on April 8. Within a week, three of his albums had a surge in sales. In Utero shot from 27th to 11th in the rankings, Nevermind went from 56th to 28th, and Incesticide rose from 135th to 73rd in the Top 200.

Variety, the show-biz paper, reported that Nirvana's sales spurt, though overwhelming, still wasn't equal to the fan reaction that followed the deaths of Elvis Presley and John Lennon. Presley's Moody Blue album shot from 24th to fifth the week after he died in 1977. And Lennon's Double Fantasy album went from 11th to No. 1 after the former Beatle was shot to death by a deranged fan in 1980.

Cheating on the Rise On College Campuses

This spring the United States Naval Academy expelled 24 of its midshipmen and punished 47 others for cheating on an engineering final exam in December 1992. An inquiry found that 11% of those who took the test had advance knowledge about it. Some had sold copies of the exam to classmates for as much as $50.

This may be only the tip of the iceberg. Cheating is both rampant and on the rise on American college campuses, according to a recent report by the U.S. Department of Education. The researchers found that students copy each other's papers, steal exams, forge university transcripts, plagiarize term papers, take exams for someone else, hire ghostwriters, pass on test questions to others and use bribery or blackmail—all in pursuit of better grades.

Various studies have found that anywhere between 9% and 95% of undergraduates cheat. Why do they do it? Stress and competition—for graduate-school admission, scholarships and jobs after graduation.

Cheating happens most when students don't think they can get caught, or if the penalties are mild. And most faculty members don't report cheating incidents to the college administration.

What can be done? Colleges can define cheating and advise faculty members to discuss academic dishonesty in class. Honor codes—in which students sign a pledge not to cheat and to report those who do cheat—have been found to help at some institutions.

So does punishing students —but not by lowering grades or expelling students. Experts recommend giving an "XF" grade, which specifically indicates failure due to cheating. At the University of Maryland, where this practice is in effect, a student caught cheating can have the "X" removed from his records after one year by completing a seminar on academic integrity.

"Homebaked" means you have to sift, soften, measure, beat and blend.

Without turning your kitchen into a war zone. Look for the homebaked cookies made with a lot of love and care. And a lot less time and trouble.

PARADE'S GUIDE TO

BETTER FITNESS™

BY MICHAEL O'SHEA

Q What exercise can you recommend to work my abdominals and my back?

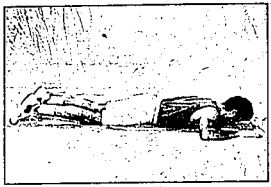
A The press-up is one exercise that helps to stretch your abdominals and to strengthen your back. Begin by lying on your stomach with your hands just outside your shoulders, palms down on the floor. Slowly lift your head by curling your neck back. Continue to curl up, using your back muscles to lift your chest off the floor. Your arms will start to straighten out as they support you, but they should not aid in lifting. Your lower stomach and legs should remain on the floor. Press up with this curling action until your arms are extended, then curl back to your starting position. Do two sets of 10 repetitions each.



THE PRESS-UP: Begin by lying on your stomach with your palms flat on the floor.

Then curl up slowly, using your back muscles to lift your chest, until your arms are extended.

Q I'm going to be traveling quite a bit this summer, and I don't think I'm going to be able to work out regularly. Is there anything I can do to keep myself in good shape?

A As exercisers, we all have experienced times when we cannot work out as often as we would like—or at all.

Research has shown that if you stop working out, your endurance capabilities are significantly diminished within two to four weeks, according to a recent article in the National Strength and Conditioning Association's Strength and Conditioning Journal.

However, research also has shown that you can reduce the frequency or duration of your workouts by 33% to 66% without losing conditioning, if you maintain intensity.

Training intensity is the key to sustaining conditioning when you are not able to work out often. For example, if you work out three times a week for one hour at your target heart-training range, you could maintain your present fitness level for 15 weeks by working out one or two times a week for 20 to 40 minutes at that same intensity.

It is important to fit in these occasional "maintenance sessions" to keep the fitness level you have worked so hard to attain.

Q Recently, my husband was told he has diabetes. He was advised to lose weight and exercise, but he doesn't think exercise will help. I am also worried that our two grown sons will develop the disease. What can I do?

A Your husband undoubtedly has Type 2, or insulin-independent, diabetes. (This used to be called adult-onset diabetes.) You are right to be concerned about your sons, as Type 2 diabetes is more readily inherited than the other common type, insulin-dependent diabetes.

I discussed your problem with Dr. Charles Peterson, director of research at the Sansum Medical Research Foundation in Santa Barbara, Calif., and co-author of a helpful book, A Touch of Diabetes (Chronimed Publishing). Exercise can help your husband's condition, says Dr. Peterson. In fact, in addition to improving the body's sensitivity to insulin, exercise can enhance immune function, reduce blood pressure, decrease anxiety and improve sleep.

One of the most important things you could do for your husband and sons is to help them become involved in an exercise program. A gift membership to a health club where "one-on-one" training is available could be a true gift of life. Consult your physician for additional preventive and treatment strategies.

Remember to consult your physician before starting an exercise program or implementing exercises that appear in this column in your exercise regimen. Recommended exercises may not be appropriate for all individuals.

"My daughter is getting married this summer, and I plan to have a luncheon in her honor. Can you help me with some light, luscious recipes that won't keep me in the kitchen for hours?" —Priscilla Hawk, Westport, Conn.

A Bridal Luncheon For Today

THIS LOVELY SPRING MENU MARRIES TRADITIONAL ELEGANCE WITH UP-TO-DATE EASE

Summer Sweet Pea Soup

This soup should be velvety smooth, so be sure to strain it. Freshly snipped chives would be just right for a garnish along with the radishes.

2 tablespoons butter or low-fat butter substitute
1 cup coarsely chopped onions
4 cups defatted chicken broth
2 packages (10 ounces each) frozen peas, defrosted
1/2 cup coarsely chopped fresh mint leaves
1/2 cup heavy cream
Salt and white pepper, to taste
4 to 6 red radishes, cut into 1/8-inch dice, for garnish

1. Melt butter or butter substitute in a large, heavy pot over low heat. Add onions and cook, stirring occasionally, about 10 to 12 minutes or until wilted.
2. Add the chicken broth and peas. Bring to a boil, reduce heat to a simmer and cook, partially covered, for 15 minutes. Stir in the mint and cool slightly.
3. Puree the soup in a blender or food processor in small batches until completely smooth, pouring each batch through a strainer into a bowl to remove any skins from the peas. Use the back of a wooden spoon to mash the solids gently, extracting any excess liquid.
4. Stir in the cream and season to taste with salt and pepper. Cover and chill well in the refrigerator until serving time.
5. To serve, ladle small portions into demitasse cups. Garnish each portion with diced radishes.

Serves 12. Per approximately 1/3-cup serving: 58 calories, 5g fat and 14mg cholesterol.

Celebrate tastefully with Chiffon Potato Salad (top), Orange Blush Lobster Salad and a cup of Summer Sweet Pea Soup.

Here comes the bride! Few words make people happier—and that includes the pleasure that sisters, aunts and girlfriends take in celebrating the bride by bringing out their prettiest dishes, silver and linens, all adorned with gorgeous flowers. For a lovely luncheon serving up to 12 guests, the stars of the table are chilled Summer Sweet Pea Soup, garnished with crispy radishes and served in demitasse cups, and Orange Blush Lobster Salad, with fresh ginger, melon and papaya. To balance their tastes and colors, there's Garden Asparagus along with a delicate Chiffon Potato Salad. Individual Strawberry Heart Cakes, made with the ripest June berries, are a loving dessert. I've made them special by preparing the pastry with heart-shaped cookie cutters.

Orange Blush Lobster Salad

If fresh lobster meat is unavailable, a frozen brand can be found in many supermarkets. If you want to cook your own, you'll need six lobsters, about 1½ pounds each. Shrimp or fresh crabmeat are lovely substitutes.

2 pounds cooked lobster meat, cut into 1-inch pieces
3 cups cantaloupe balls
1 papaya (about 1¼ pounds), peeled, seeded and cut in 1/2-inch dice
6 plum tomatoes, seeded and cut in 1/4-inch dice (about 2 cups)
1 tablespoon freshly minced ginger
1/4 cup fresh orange juice
2 tablespoons red-wine vinegar
1 teaspoon Dijon-style mustard
Salt and black pepper, to taste
1/2 cup extra-virgin olive oil
1 teaspoon finely grated orange zest
1/4 cup freshly snipped chives
2 heads radicchio, leaves washed and patted dry, for garnish

1. Place the lobster meat, cantaloupe, papaya, tomatoes and ginger in a large bowl. Gently fold together with a rubber spatula. Set aside.
2. In a small bowl, combine the orange juice, vinegar, mustard, salt and pepper. Whisking constantly, slowly drizzle in the olive oil. Continue whisking until the mixture has thickened slightly. Stir in orange zest (makes 3/4 cup).
3. Shortly before serving, toss 1/2 cup of the dressing with the chives and lobster mixture. Serve on a decorative platter surrounded by radicchio leaves, or place serving portions inside the leaves. Serve remaining dressing on the side or reserve for future use.

Serves 12. Per serving: 195 calories, 10g fat, 50mg cholesterol.

Ladies' Lemonade

12 cups water
1 cup sugar
1 cup fresh lemon juice
2 to 4 tablespoons grenadine
1/2 pint fresh raspberries

1. In a small saucepan, add sugar to 2 cups water; heat until sugar is dissolved. Cool. Combine with remaining water, lemon juice and grenadine in a bowl.
2. Chill thoroughly. Serve in pitchers, adding berries. Pour over ice in tall glasses.

Chiffon Potato Salad

The ingredients can be prepared ahead of time, but the salad must be tossed just before serving, so it won't wilt.

4 tablespoons white-wine vinegar
1/2 cup olive oil
6 Idaho potatoes, peeled
Salt and black pepper, to taste
1 seedless cucumber, peeled and cut into 1/2-inch dice
4 stalks celery, trimmed and cut into 1/2-inch dice
6 scallions, thinly sliced
2 heads Boston lettuce, washed and dried
2 ripe avocados
2 tablespoons chopped parsley, for garnish

1. To make dressing, place 4 tablespoons lemon juice, the vinegar and oil in a small bowl; whisk together well. Reserve.
2. Cut potatoes in half lengthwise, then cut in 1/4-inch slices. Place in a pot; cover with salted water. Heat to boiling, reduce to medium and simmer until potatoes are tender but not mushy, 8 to 10 minutes. Drain; remove to a bowl. While potatoes are warm, toss gently with 1/2 cup reserved dressing, salt and pepper; set aside.
3. Place cucumber, celery and scallions in a large bowl. Reserve about 8 to 10 whole lettuce leaves. Tear remaining lettuce into bite-sized pieces; add to bowl. Shortly before serving, toss with remaining dressing. Add reserved potatoes and gently toss.
4. Arrange reserved lettuce leaves decoratively around rim of a serving platter. Mound salad in the center.
5. Halve, pit and peel the avocado; slice into coarse pieces and place in remaining lemon juice to prevent discoloration. Lay slices over salad; sprinkle with parsley.

Serves 12. Per serving: 192 calories, 14g fat, no cholesterol.

Strawberry Heart Cake

The shortcakes can be made a day ahead. Keep wrapped in plastic until time to use.

3 cups all-purpose flour
1/4 cup plus 2 tablespoons sugar
1 tablespoon baking powder
1 teaspoon salt
12 tablespoons (6 ounces) cold butter, cut into small pieces
3/4 cup low-fat milk
1/3 cup half-and-half
4½ pints ripe strawberries, lightly rinsed, hulled and quartered lengthwise (reserve 12 best whole berries for garnish)
4 tablespoons orange-flavored liqueur
1½ cups heavy cream
2 tablespoons confectioners' sugar

1. Preheat oven to 400°F.
2. Place flour, 1/4 cup sugar, baking powder and salt in bowl of a food processor. Combine well. Add butter; pulse processor on and off several times until mixture resembles coarse meal. Add milk and half-and-half; process until dough just forms a ball.
3. Form dough into a disc on a lightly floured surface and roll 1/2 inch thick. Use a 3-inch, heart-shaped cookie cutter to make 12 hearts, rerolling dough as necessary. Place on 2 ungreased baking sheets 1 inch apart and bake for 12 to 15 minutes. Cool cakes on a rack.
4. Toss quartered strawberries with liqueur and 1 tablespoon sugar. Set aside.
5. Just before serving, whip heavy cream with remaining tablespoon of sugar.
6. Split cakes crosswise and place one bottom half on each of 12 dessert plates. Spoon quartered strawberries on bottom halves, dollop with whipped cream and replace top halves at an angle. Dust cake tops with confectioners' sugar; garnish each with a whole strawberry.

Serves 12. Per serving: 418 calories, 24g fat, 76mg cholesterol.

Garden Asparagus With Mimosa Sauce

Trimming the bottoms and peeling asparagus usually is saved for tough stalks, but it gives the spears a special appearance.

1/4 cup cider vinegar
1 teaspoon Dijon-style mustard
1/2 teaspoon sugar
Salt and black pepper, to taste
1/2 cup olive oil
2 hard-boiled eggs, finely chopped
2 tablespoons finely chopped gherkin pickles
2 tablespoons finely chopped flat-leaf parsley
2½ pounds asparagus (allow 5 to 6 medium-sized spears per person)

1. Place the vinegar, mustard, sugar, salt and pepper in a small bowl and whisk well. Whisking constantly, slowly drizzle in the oil until slightly thick.
2. Stir in the chopped eggs, gherkins and parsley; mix well. Set aside until serving time. (Makes 1 cup of sauce.)
3. Trim 1/4 inch off the bottom of each asparagus. Using a potato peeler, gently peel away tough outer skin of each stalk, working downward from the center.
4. Bring a large pot of salted water to a boil. Cook asparagus in small batches, boiling for about 1 minute or until just tender but still crisp. Drain and refresh asparagus immediately under cold running water. Remove to a kitchen towel and gently pat dry.
5. Just before serving, arrange the asparagus on a serving platter, mounding slightly in the center. Spoon the sauce in a 1-inch-wide ribbon across the spears, about 3 inches from the bottom.

Serves 12. Per serving: 106 calories, 10g fat, 30mg cholesterol.

Has lobbied for stronger gun laws with his wife, Sarah, who is the chair of Handgun Control, Inc.; serves on board of trustees of the Center To Prevent Handgun Violence; vice chairman of the National Head Injury Foundation and the National Organization on Disability.

IT WAS WEIRD GOING UP TO the reception desk of this office at 1225 Eye Street in Washington and saying to the young man, "I'm Jim Brady, and I'm here to interview Jim Brady."

It is 13 years since a wacko named John Hinckley Jr. pulled a handgun outside the Washington Hilton Hotel and shot President Reagan and his press secretary, James S. Brady, as well as two officers. Today, Brady is still in a wheelchair, still in pain and still battling.

I guess most of us know about the "Brady Bill," recently passed into law, that requires a waiting period before buying a handgun—one of the more hotly debated legislative issues in recent Congresses. On one side were Jim, his wife, Sarah, and their Center To Prevent Handgun Violence; on the other, the National Rifle Association.

As of now, it's Bradys 1, NRA 0. But the fight is far from ended. Mr. Brady was waiting for me in the Center's offices on Eye Street. A big man, dressed in a gray suit, business shirt and tie, he was sitting in a wheelchair, his left side partly paralyzed, his right side vigorous. His voice—which I thought might be slow and faltering—was instead crisp and strong. I started off by asking, "Will there be a Brady Bill Two?"

"Yes," he said: "One is in the hopper right now, working its way through both House and Senate." How is it different? "It's the be-all and end-all—to treat guns as we treat automobiles. Before you buy a car, you drive it around the block. You ask Dad for the keys. You take a test, get a license. It makes sense, and the last Gallup Poll indicates 77 percent of the people want it.

"This organization [the Center] is not for banning guns but for keeping guns out of the wrong hands. We don't need Uzis out there on the street. I hunt and shoot traps and shoot skeet. But I don't want children carrying handguns.

"We have a program for kindergarten through eighth grade, teaching how to resolve conflicts. In my time, if you had an argument at recess, you went out and kicked his butt. Today, they go home and get Mr. Smith and Mr. Wesson. We're losing 17 children a day. We're soon gonna lose an entire generation."

The first time I ever heard of Jim Brady was when he was press secretary to former Texas Gov. John Connally, who was then making a not-very-successful run for a Presidential nomination. "I showed him how to spend $12 million and win one delegate," Brady told me, poking fun at himself. He remembers those Texas years with affection. "Once you make friends down there, you've got friends," he said.

His nickname was "The Bear." How did that come about? "At 6 feet 1 and 250 pounds," he replied, "it was easy."

I asked how much he could still do. "I can ride a horse," Brady said. "I can sing." He also can wage a reasoned argument. Aren't any handguns defensible? "For target shooting, that's okay," he said. "Get a license and go to the range. For defense of the home, that's why we have police departments. One of the most dangerous things is to have a firearm to defend your home. It's six times more likely to kill a loved one."

He was shot 13 years ago by a man trying to kill the President. Today, Jim Brady is still in pain, still fighting to control guns.

Brady's Bits

I asked Jim if he was in pain. "A lot," he said. "And all the time." What does he take? Jocularly, Jim said, "Some days, I feel like rat poison. But I take phenobarbs to keep me from having seizures. I sure don't want another seizure." At that, he grits his teeth and shakes his head. What did it feel like, being shot in the head? "I thought an ice pick was being driven right in over my eye with a ballpeen hammer," he said, gesturing toward the spot where the bullet had entered his brain. Had the attempted assassin, John Hinckley Jr., ever tried to get in touch or to apologize? "No," he said, "and I don't ever want to hear from him. I'm trying my best to forget that day." He does hear often from Ronald Reagan and was in California recently for the dedication of the Reagan Library. Does he ever think of giving up, surrendering to pain and quitting his handgun-control campaign? "I'm a tough Irishman," said Jim. "It's David and Goliath. We're outspent $10 million to $100 million by the NRA. Give up? Not now that we sense we can kick their butts. We're in it for the duration."

Two alien spacecraft are traveling directly toward each other, one at 38,171 miles per hour and the other at 21,829 miles per hour. They originated on planets 82,710,317 miles apart. Without using paper and pencil to get the answer, how far apart will they be a minute before they collide?

—Mike Androtti, Ely, Minn.

A thousand miles. The distance between their home planets is irrelevant. The two spacecraft are approaching each other at a combined speed of 60,000 mph (38,171 mph + 21,829 mph = 60,000 mph), which means the distance between them is closing at 1000 miles per minute (60,000 mph ÷ 60 minutes in an hour = 1000 miles per minute). So, a minute before the collision, they'd have to be 1000 miles apart.

As we know, popcorn pops at different intervals. Why doesn't it just pop simultaneously with one big bang?

—Melva Jenkins, Baltimore, Md.

This is a popular question, but it's a little like asking why leaves don't all fall off trees at the same time. The answer is simply that popcorn kernels are all a little different—like leaves.

Then again, maybe it's just nature's way of going easy on us. Imagine what life would be like, for example, if we were strolling back home from a nice walk and suddenly all the raindrops fell from the clouds at once.

I've got a little extra money in the bank right now, and, after hearing so much about how funding for the arts is disappearing, I'm thinking about donating it. Which of them would you recommend? A thousand dollars means a lot to me, and I want to do the right thing.

—Gina Topaz, New York, N.Y.

Here's what I've done myself. Instead of donating your $1000 to one group, give $100 (or whatever it takes to earn a few special privileges, like a backstage tour or attending a dress rehearsal) to 10 of them. Then take advantage of whatever they offer; this is a delightful way to meet new people and to learn more about the philharmonic and the ballet and the opera and others too. And the next time you have some extra money in the bank, you'll probably know exactly what you'd like to do with it. (But do your recipients another favor. Decline to accept any free gifts, such as mugs or T-shirts or recordings. It helps their dollars stretch further.)

A few years ago, at age 41, an extraordinary thing occurred. I was walking alone when, suddenly, I came to myself! For the first time in my life, I knew I was here. Before that event, my life happened to me, but now I am the one acting upon life.

My sister says that I have always made my own choices. I say that before I woke up, I was unable to choose and therefore not responsible. Until this day, I do not understand exactly what happened. Did "childhood" end that day? And which of us do you think is correct?

—Mrs. Claymore, Ohio

When we consider how many people there are in the world, we shouldn't be surprised that the period of "growing up" ranges from one extreme to another. Some of us never grow up at all, some take many years to do it, and some take only a few years. However, you're the first person I've heard who grew up in only a few minutes.

But maturing is not the same as becoming responsible, and I don't agree with either you or your sister. I believe that as a person grows older, he or she becomes more and more responsible for himself or herself and should be judged accordingly, relative to the standards of the community. In general, the more serious our action, the more obviously wrong (or right) it is, and so the younger we can be held responsible for it.

That is, a normal 6-year-old knows perfectly well that it is wrong to do physical harm to another, but he may not know that he shouldn't gather a basket of strawberries from his neighbor's garden. I'd hold him responsible for the former but not for the latter.

You abandoned logic and reason in the answer where you said topless dancers are "dumb clucks." Maybe a woman who works a few hours a day, has fun dancing, talking, eating and drinking, and makes good money at the same time is not as dumb as you think. Maybe she's not desperate, as you suggest. Maybe she just doesn't have your inhibitions. Do you really think spending 40 hours a week working in an office implies that a woman has greater intelligence than one who works as a topless dancer?

—Mike Taylor, Austin, Tex.

Yes.
