Initiative's opponents concede signature numbers, target November vote.

The Associated Press

BOISE — Opponents of the anti-gay initiative on Friday conceded the opening round in their battle with the Idaho Citizens Alliance. Brian Bergquist of the Don't Sign On campaign said a survey of all 44 county clerks showed that the alliance and founder Kelly Walton have already certified more than the 32,061 registered voter signatures needed to put the proposition on the November ballot — but not by much. Walton was scheduled to turn in his petitions next Wednesday, two days before the deadline. "Obviously we're disappointed that Idaho is going to have to fight about this," Bergquist said. "But Don't Sign On has always said we thought it would get on the ballot. Frankly, we're surprised it took this long."

"We've always been geared long-term working toward November," he said. Opponents, working under a new but still undetermined name, hope to raise $500,000 to defeat the initiative at the polls. Walton has indicated he wants to spend at least that much and possibly more to win adoption of the proposition that bans state and local laws prohibiting discrimination against homosexuals. Although opposed by nearly every political and civic leader in the state, including a once noncommittal Republican Congressman Michael Crapo, supporters claim the proposal is needed to stop homosexuals from gaining what they call special rights and to prohibit the teaching of homosexuality in public schools. Critics, maintaining neither has occurred or could in a conservative state like Idaho, have argued that the initiative would strip homosexuals of their basic civil rights, and they have promised a court challenge. If voters adopt it, Attorney General Larry Echo Hawk has twice said he believes the proposition is unconstitutional. Although failing to stop the issue short of the ballot, Bergquist said opponents took heart in the fact that Walton and his cadre of paid signature collectors certified only 32,733 signatures through Thursday and would likely submit only about 35,000 — well below Walton's target. Last December during a swing through Idaho Falls, one of the initiative's relative strongholds, Walton said he wanted to gather 100,000 signatures to build up a mailing list and demoralize the opponents.

Perot, GOP join in health-reform pitch

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Ross Perot said Friday he will buy national television time for a program on health care to be produced by the Republican National Committee. He said Americans "need more facts and less propaganda." RNC Chairman Haley Barbour said Perot and his supporters "hold similar views to those of the Republican Party on health-care reform." He said the GOP program would try to "advance the debate in a positive way." Dr. Bernadine Healy, former director of the National Institutes of Health, will be host of the program, he said. The unusual collaboration stems from Perot's and the GOP's dissatisfaction with President Clinton's health-care proposals. Both Perot and the RNC contend Americans are not getting factual information. The Perot and Barbour statements contained few details, but earlier party officials said that the program would be an hour long and that Perot had offered at least $1 million to purchase the TV time. The Dallas billionaire, who captured 19 percent of the vote running as an independent in the 1992 presidential election, said the television networks would not sell time to his political organization, United We Stand America. He said the networks are more likely to sell time to political parties. "The Republican Party wants an opportunity to explain health care to the American people. I have agreed to pay for this television time," he said. "The American people can have more balanced information," Perot said in a statement.

Jets said to spook bighorns

By William Brock
Times-News writer

MOUNTAIN-HOME — Wildlife advocates say sonic booms from Air Force jets over the Owyhee canyons are a big reason why this year's desert bighorn-sheep counts have dipped by more than 50 percent. Idaho Gov. Cecil Andrus and officials at Mountain Home Air Force Base are pushing for approval of a 25,000-acre bombing-training range in southern Owyhee County. Critics say the current level of military flying is already too much — and any more would threaten the area's wildlife. The Idaho Department of Fish and Game reported that 347 bighorn-sheep were spotted this year — down from last year's figure of 669, according to Southwest Regional Supervisor Tracey Trent. "What's changed over the past year? The Air Force began supersonic flights in there," said Bob DiGrazia, a Boise-based past president of the Foundation for North American Wild Sheep. "When (Air Force jets) go supersonic, it's unnerving — especially if you're in a canyon and not expecting it," DiGrazia said. "It will knock you to your knees." "If sheep are being run out of the canyons because of noise, where is the Air Force's sense of responsibility?" he asked. Mountain Home Air Force Base spokeswoman Capt. Christie Dragan said there is no conclusive evidence that military overflights are responsible for the decline in sheep counts. "No one is sure what the effects of supersonic flights are on bighorn sheep," she said. DiGrazia said studies have shown that bighorn sheep are frightened by jet noises. The decline in numbers could also be due to the weather and on-the-ground disturbance by hunters, hikers and boaters, Dragan said. "We are very sensitive to this issue," she said, adding that jets from Mountain Home have been re-routed to avoid canyons containing sheep. Permission to fly faster than the speed of sound was granted in 1992, she said. Dragan insisted that all supersonic flights take place above 10,000 feet — but residents of the nearby Duck Valley Indian Reservation have often complained of sonic booms caused by planes lower than 10,000 feet. Residents of the area have testified that sonic booms break windows, frighten babies and shatter the area's solitude. This year's Fish and Game survey was done in exactly the same way as surveys in previous years, Trent said. Small planes flew the same routes; with the same observers aboard, he said. The upshot: "We saw fewer sheep this

If you must clean up after rodents, you should take precautions to avoid hantavirus infection. • Wear latex or rubber gloves, which should be thrown out or disinfected after the area is cleaned. • Wear a face mask when working in enclosed areas such as cabins or other buildings. • Thoroughly spray a solution of 10 percent bleach or household disinfectant on the rodent debris.

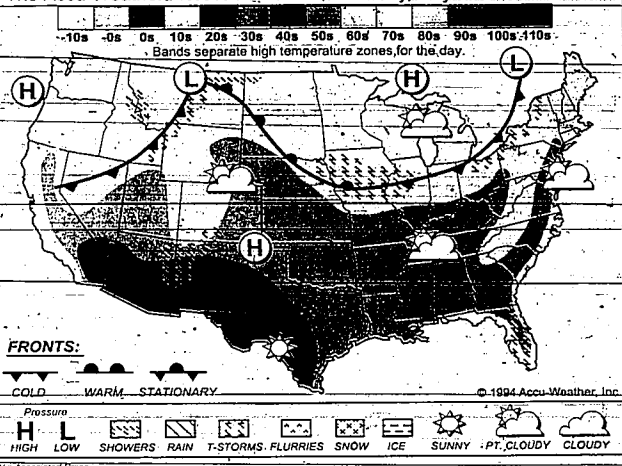

Also mop floors and baseboards with it. Steam clean carpets, rugs and upholstered furniture. People should plug up, screen or cover any openings through which rodents could enter, said Roger Perotto, chief of the Idaho Bureau of Communicable Disease Prevention. Rodents and their feces have been found in the area. Perotto said there is no evidence that pets can transmit the disease or contract it themselves. ## Heat eases slightly in Southwest; thunderstorm plague stays

The Associated Press

The summer heat baking the Southwest eased somewhat Friday, although the mercury still topped the century mark in many spots.

Scattered thunderstorms east of the Rockies brought hail to the Plains and a tornado to Maine.

Record-setting highs in Texas ranged from 110 in El Paso to 106 in Midland and 105 in Amarillo, but most of the mid-afternoon temperatures reported statewide were 5 to 10 degrees cooler than earlier in the week. Albuquerque, N.M., set a record for the date with a high of 101.

In Caribou, Maine, a fierce thunderstorm produced a tornado that caused no damage, but heavy rains in the area flooded caves. Similar storms produced large hail in parts of Oklahoma, Arkansas and Texas.

A tornado watch was posted for much of Nebraska, while severe thunderstorm watches covered parts of Oklahoma, Kansas, Missouri, Arkansas and Iowa.

After highs in Southwestern deserts soared into the 120 to 125 degree range on Thursday, many areas had triple-digit temperatures this morning.

Nevada had the warmest and coolest lows, with a 90-degree reading in Las Vegas and a chilly 38 in Elko.

Much of the rest of the country saw lows in the 60s and 70s. Some readings in the northern Plains, Rockies and West Coast were in the 40s and 50s.

Rainfall totals for the 24-hour period ending at 6 a.m. EDT included 2.52 inches at Jacksonville, Ark., 1.2 in Baltimore and 1.1 in Des Moines, Iowa.

Weather summary

Sunny skies which prevailed over Idaho on Friday are expected to give way to a Pacific weather system moving into the state during the evening and today.

The system is expected to bring cloudy conditions to most of the state, with some showers and thunderstorms possible. Brisk winds from west to the northwest are also expected to be felt across much of the state.

At mid-afternoon Friday temperatures ranged from mid-70s to the upper 80s in the north and from the lower 50s to the lower 90s in the south.

No precipitation was reported. Winds were light to moderate and variable, with gusty conditions in Boise, Malad and Coeur d'Alene.

The highest temperature in the state Friday was 97 degrees at Caldwell and Hagerman. Stanley reported the lowest at 33 degrees. Elsewhere in the nation Friday, the highest temperature was 123 degrees at Bullhead City, Ariz., and Death Valley, Calif. Truckee, Calif., reported the lowest temperature of 26 degrees.

Democrats predict eventual OK for Clinton's health-reform plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Democratic leaders predicted Friday

that health legislation based on President Clinton's goals will be approved without any vetoed Republican votes.

Key senators worked privately on a bipartisan plan that fell short of a House demand for universal coverage.

"I still believe that it is possible in the weeks to go to get both the Senate and the House ... that provides for universal coverage and cost containment and improving the health care system," House Democratic Leader Richard Gephardt said after a White House meeting with Clinton.

In a reflection of the political stakes involved in health reform, 1992 independent presidential candidate Ross Perot was offering Republicans $1 million or more for production of a nationally televised program criticizing Clinton's plan.

GOP officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said national party Chairman Haley Barbour had spoken with Perot several times about the offer, most recently on Thursday.

Perot's involvement in political issues has been relatively subdued since his debate last year with Vice President Al Gore on NAFTA, an event widely viewed as a triumph for the administration.

Gephardt, D-Mo., and other party leaders' push to get health reform passed one day after Democrats muscled a Clinton-style health bill through the House Ways and Means Committee. The vote was 20-18, with four Democrats in opposition, underscoring the difficulties confronting Clinton and other leaders as they try to craft a bill that can clear the House.

Clinton, in a letter to all members of Congress, said, "We can make history in the month ahead if we listen to the American people." He renewed his appeal for signing private insurance for every American.

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — A van apparently left running in a garage turned a house west of Lantana into a large, gaseous tomb for five people, Palm Beach County sheriff's officials said on Friday.

When the Carreros arrived at the home, they became worried when no one answered the door.

University of Nevada. "It took me a long time to get my strength back."

A week after being hospitalized with flu-like symptoms, Krysl died from hantavirus.

Hantavirus can cause serious respiratory illness, and there are at least five distinct viruses in the hantavirus group. There is no vaccine to prevent the disease.

As of last week, 78 cases of hantavirus had been reported nationwide, including six in Idaho since 1978. Of the total cases nationwide, 43 people have died.

dent populations, said Gene Gibson, Extension agricultural agent for Gooding County.

Campers should not sleep on the bare ground but should pitch floored tents away from garbage cans, woodpiles or other places rodents live, said Roger Perotto, chief of the Idaho Bureau of Communicable Disease Prevention. Gloves and protective clothing should be worn by workers harvesting crops or hay, he said.

Like Dragan, Trent said it's hard to say what caused the decrease. Harsh weather, hunting, relocation and low lamb production could be as significant as superspore flights, he said.

Last year, hunters killed 22 big game in the Owyhee River drainage. Fish and Game workers trapped 110 others, and released them in the area, he said.

Trent said, "There's an awful lot of factors to be considered."

Aerial surveys aren't perfect, Trent added, and there's always the possibility we missed some sheep.

On Tuesday, Cheryl Becker, nurse epidemiologist with the South-Central District Health Department in Twin Falls, also confirmed that an Oakley woman who now lives in Utah contracted the disease five years ago. Local residents are not at high risk to contract hantavirus, but residents ought to take precautions against getting the disease, Becker said.

Rodents such as mule deer mice, which are distinguished by their white bellies, appear to be the primary carriers of the virus. The virus is contracted by inhaling aerosolized particles from rodent carcasses, feces, saliva, nesting materials and urine; its incubation period is about two to four weeks.

Three weeks after they swept out the bunkhouse, Torelli became ill, and 37-year-old Krysl, who had a genetically weak heart, became sick a week later, he said.

"I started out that I thought I had the flu," said Torelli, who had a fever and aches and pains. Next he suffered severe headaches, labored breathing, and a high fever.

After three to four days, Torelli said he went to a hospital emergency room, was told he had pneumonia and was sent home. Torelli said he was sick for a couple of weeks and lost 15 pounds.

That's not likely, said DiGrazia.

Over the past five or six years, he said, noting that big game sheep counts have consistently remained between 600 and 700.

Allowing the population to decline would be a sad end to what has otherwise been a remarkable success story, DiGrazia said.

"This has been the most significant reintroduction of native sheep anywhere in America," he said, noting that the colony began in 1963 when 22 sheep were released in the area.

Hantavirus cases have been associated with activities such as cleaning barns and outbuildings, disturbing infected rodent areas while hiking or camping, occupying previously vacant cabins or other dwellings, and inhabiting buildings with indoor ro-lost 15 pounds.

"The problem with the hantavirus is that there's so much we don't know about it," Torelli said. "I don't know if it's the only person I know of who has contracted hantavirus and survived without being comatose or hospitalized, although others probably also fought off the infection without realizing what it was."

Senate barely endorses Clinton on embargo

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton ducked an embarrassing congressional rebuke over his handling of foreign policy on Friday as the Senate endorsed the continued arms embargo against Bosnia by the smallest of margins.

By a 50-50 roll call, senators rejected a proposal by Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., that would have ordered Clinton to abandon the United Nations arms ban immediately. A majority is required to pass legislation.

Moments earlier, lawmakers voted 52-48 to back continuing the U.N. sanctions, for now. But the measure included a proviso: It urged Clinton to join with U.S. allies to consider lifting the embargo if the Serbs attack Bosnian safe areas or don't negotiate for peace.

The Clinton administration declared victory, as Press Secretary Dee Dee Myers welcomed the vote as "a confirmation of the president's Bosnia policy."

But Senate Armed Services Committee Chairman Sam Nunn, D-Ga., who sponsored the successful provision with Sen. John Warner, R-Va., was less upbeat.

"The Senate is frustrated and does not agree by a very large majority with the arms embargo," Nunn said afterward. "The overwhelming sentiment is to have an approach that will end up lifting the arms embargo."

Dole credited heavy White House lobbying for his defeat and said: "With all that pressure we still got 50 votes. We'll try it again."

The Senate's vote on Bosnia may have spared Clinton a veto fight with Congress because three weeks ago, the House voted 244-178 to require him to abandon the embargo.

Vice President Al Gore presided over the Senate as it voted Friday in case this vote was needed to break a tie. In a fight over the same issue in May, a divided Senate had narrowly approved both measures, leaving the chamber's stance unclear. On Friday, 43 Democrats and 9 Republicans voted for the Nunn measure supporting Clinton's continuation of U.N. sanctions. 13 Democrats and 35 Republicans were against it.

Thirteen Democrats and 37 Republicans supported Dole's attempt to force Clinton to abandon the embargo; 43 Democrats and 7 Republicans opposed him.

Opponents of Dole's measure said it would not hasten peace, as its supporters hoped.

"There will be many more deaths, much more ethnic cleansing, and it will then become an American war, and we'll be back here with a request to send American troops," said Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine.

But Dole's backers said the United States has little choice but to help a nation being chopped to pieces by its Serbian adversary. "Only one amendment sounds a certain trumpet," said Sen. Joseph Lieberman, D-Conn., a sponsor of Dole's proposal. "The other amendment is uncertain, and responds to the cries of the people of Bosnia for help with a face turned in the other direction."

The debate was waged as the Senate considered legislation authorizing $263.3 billion in military programs for fiscal 1995, which begins Oct. 1.

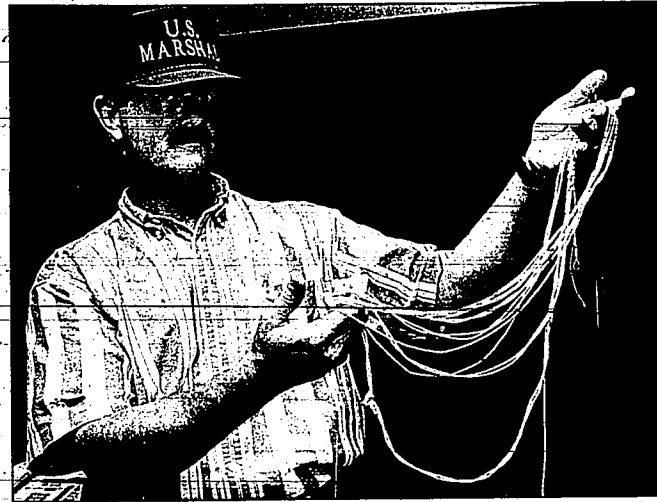

In the same bill, senators voted to abandon Congress' year-old decision to build only 20 B-2 bombers. By 55-45, they voted to retain $150 million in the legislation that will let contractors who build the expensive, radar-evading plane keep their assembly lines, ready in case additional planes are ordered.

"We can never kill anything around here, no matter how outmoded the original purpose for building it might have been," said Sen. Dale Bumpers, D-Ark., referring to the initial rationale for building the B-2: hitting the Soviet Union.

Supporters, including Sen. James Exon, D-Nebr., called the extra money "an insurance policy."

The Senate voted last year to build 20 B-2s at a cost of $44.4 billion. Senators also voted 88-12 to move up to April the date when military retirees would receive their 1995 cost-of-living increases in their pensions. The date was rolled back by six months last year as part of Clinton's deficit-reduction package. Senators decided to advance it again so military and federal civilian retirees would receive increases at the same time.

They also voted 99-3 to order the Pentagon to establish procedures for handling sexual harassment complaints. That was adopted over a tougher proposal by Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., who wanted to impose criminal penalties on military and civilian Defense Department employees who fail to report instances of misconduct.

U.S. Marshal John Galner displays a 20-foot rope of braided dental floss, which Robert Shepard used to escape the South-Central Regional Jail in South Charleston, W.Va.

'Spider-Man' prisoner scales wall to freedom with dental floss

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — Robert Shepard didn't need a file blade in a cack to get out of jail. Dental floss worked just fine. While cameras, guards and computer-controlled doors were keeping other inmates in, Shepard braided the floss into a rope as thick as a telephone cord and used it to scale an 18-foot wall.

Shepard

Now, townspeople are talking of Shepard as a real-life Spider-Man; the comic-book hero who spins his web and hangs from ceilings — and dreaming up 1,001 new uses for floss.

"I just wonder how he got hold of so much dental floss," said Mike Reiser, who lives near the South-Central Regional Jail in South Charleston. "What did this guy do? Walk around with stuff in his mouth all the time?"

Shepard escaped from the recreation yard, which is topped by a chain-link fence. The 5-foot-9, 155-pound inmate apparently attached a weight to his waxed and minty-fresh cord and hurled it upward to loop it through the fence. He then apparently used it to help him climb the cinder block wall, and hung from the cord while he cut through the fence with a 3-inch piece of hacksaw blade.

Shepard, 34, remained at large

Friday, two days after the break-out. He had been awaiting trial on charges of robbing a post office, and his record includes convictions for manslaughter and armed robbery. At the time of the escape, he was being disciplined with reduced privileges for using a handmade tool to scrape mortar in the exercise yard until late at night, after other inmates were locked in. Just how much floss it takes to make a rope of such a size hasn't been documented. Packages typically contain 55 yards. Jail Administrator Larry Parsons said officials were checking records to see how much Shepard may have bought at the commissary. "I just find it incredible that somebody could use something that thin," Parsons said. "He's almost taken on superhuman qualities."

In the meantime, inmates will have to pick their teeth with matchbooks. Sales of floss have been suspended.

Those inmates have 24 hours a day to work on these things," said Jack Roop, executive director of the Regional Jail Authority. "They really get high planning these escapes, so to speak, and they do some things that are quite impossible."

Shepard has been the No. 1 topic of conversation in the checkout line at the Wal-Mart, which sells supplies to the jail.

"I think he was ingenious," Joan Workman said.

"It makes you want to hide your dental floss," Gaynelle Estep said. "It must be strong," said Mrs. Estep's husband, Bobby. "I may take that kind of floss and tie up tomatoes with it."

Others were disturbed that Shepard could escape a $125,000 high-tech jail that has been open for about a year.

"I don't like it, a brand new jail," Ginger Saunders said.

At Oral B Laboratories Inc., a toothbrush and floss manufacturer in Redwood City, Calif., marketing director Scott Meyer said he was not surprised the floss was strong enough to hold a man.

"It has to be strong in order to prevent it from shredding or falling apart when you pull it between teeth," he said. "That's one of the common features of it."

Victory not problem for president

WASHINGTON (AP) — A return to power of Eastern European leaders with ties to the Communist past is not troubling as long as there still is a commitment to democracy and human rights, President Clinton said Friday.

"None of us always agree with the outcome of every election in our own countries," the president said. "While some governments have old labels, he said, 'it depends on what they do. I mean, change is difficult.'"

He did not cite any country by name. However, Lithuania, Poland, and Hungary have voted former Communists back into power. In Ukraine, too, former Communists did well in recent parliamentary elections.

On Tuesday, Clinton set out on a four-nation European trip, stopping first in Latvia, where he will be the first American president to visit a Baltic state.

The next stop in the weeklong journey is Warsaw, Poland, where Clinton will meet with President Lech Walesa and address the Polish parliament. From Poland, Clinton will travel to Naples, Italy, for the annual economic summit of industrialized nations and talks with Russian President Boris Yeltsin.

The last stops will be in Germany in Bonn and then Berlin, where Clinton will make a major address at the Brandenburg Gate in what was East Berlin. He also will oversee the deactivation of the Berlin Brigade, ending the American military presence in the city after nearly half a century.

Surveying his journey, Clinton said, "My message will be that we've torn down the walls but now we have to build the bridges. We have to unite Europe and we have to move forward on security issues, on economic issues, to make a better world."

He made his comments in an interview with German television GDF.

Clinton said one of the lasting political memories from his childhood was seeing then-President John F. Kennedy deliver his famous "Ich Bin Ein Berliner" speech at the Berlin Wall.

"So, for all of us in America, it's been a source of great joy to see the Wall come down and to see what is happening now in Germany," Clinton said.

Clinton said the United States will step up its efforts to help Eastern Europe, saying, "I think we should do more and we will."

Reno asks court to give Fiske more 'independence'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorney General Janet Reno asked a federal appeals court Friday to appoint Robert B. Fiske Jr. as an independent counsel to continue his investigation of President Clinton's investments with the owner of a failed Arkansas thrift.

Reno took the action just one day after Clinton signed legislation reviving the independent counsel statute, which had lapsed for 18 months.

Reno last January appointed Fiske as "special counsel" to probe the White House and related agencies of Clinton and his wife Hillary during Clinton's term as Arkansas governor. But she had said repeatedly it would be better for an independent panel of judges to appoint the person passing the investigation.

Under the statute passed by Congress this week, a special division of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit appoints independent counsels.

Thereby request that the court appoint a statutory independent counsel as soon as possible, and that the court appoint Robert B. Fiske Jr., so that he may continue his ongoing investigation without disruption and with the full independence provided by the act," Reno wrote the appeals court.

"Theoretically, the panel could appoint someone else, but it was unlikely the judges would take the matter away from Fiske, a Republican former prosecutor from New York."

Simpson hearing: 1 in 4 homes tune television in

NEW YORK (AP) — As many as one in four U.S. homes tuned in to the opening day of O.J. Simpson's court hearing, a TV analyst said Friday.

"That would be supplemented, of course, by a significant out-of-home audience, since it ran in the lunch hour for most of the country," said David Poltrack, CBS' top audience researcher.

ABC, CBS and NBC pre-empted their regular programs for live coverage, earning a combined rating of 16.6 and a 49 audience share for the period from noon to 3 p.m. EDT, in the 31 metered markets of Nielsen's overnight report.

Bar owner, 3 others die in shooting

VIRGINIA BEACH, Va. (AP) — A bar owner and three other people were shot to death as his 4-year-old son slept in a back office.

No immediate arrests were made in the slayings Thursday. Police spokesman Lewis Thurston said the motive may have been robbery, but he would not give details. The victims were found at the Witckud Inn by a customer who tried to go in about midnight but found the door locked two hours before closing time. He entered the combination bar and restaurant through a back door.

"Apparently it wasn't unusual for the daddy to bring the youngster up there on the nights he worked," Thurston said. The child "was apparently oblivious to whatever was going on."

U.S., Vietnam agree progress made in accounting for MIAs

HANOI, Vietnam (AP) — High-ranking U.S. and Vietnamese officials agreed Friday progress has been made toward making the fullest possible accounting of Americans missing in action from the Vietnam War.

But the highest-ranking U.S. delegation to visit Vietnam since the 19-year trade embargo was lifted in February urged Hanoi to do even more. This is a condition President Clinton has attached to the establishment of diplomatic relations with the Communist nation.

"In our discussions with Vietnam's leaders, we will acknowledge the progress we have achieved and discuss with them how we can make more progress," said Hershel Gober, deputy secretary of the Department of Veterans Affairs and head of the U.S. delegation.

"We will urge Hanoi to step up all of its efforts, both joint and unilateral, to help us find the answers the families of our POW-MIAs deserve," said Gober. "I think that things are moving, and we're hoping they will continue to move since the president lifted the embargo."

Deputy Foreign Minister Le Mai, head of the Vietnamese delegation in the talks, said there are no obstacles to resolving the MIA cases.

"I don't see any outstanding issues," he said. "We are having very good dialogue and cooperation on the issues, and things are moving in the right direction."

The two countries are preparing to open diplomatic missions after signing a formal agreement last month. These would be upgraded to full embassies once Clinton is satisfied with progress on the MIA issue.

Le Mai said the American mission can open whenever it finds housing in Hanoi.

Hanoi's cooperation was a condition Clinton had set for restoring economic relations. He lifted the trade embargo Feb. 3, despite opposition from families of MIAs and from veterans groups. A next step would be granting Vietnam a lower-tariff trade status.

Paul Spira, junior vice commander-in-chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, said the FVW still thinks it was a mistake to lift the embargo. The FVW is the oldest veterans organization and has 2.2 million members.

"We just don't think that the things that have been accomplished warrant lifting the embargo," said Spira. "That's why I'm here, to get a firsthand view of it."

U.S. officials responsible for the MIA search have reported progress, but agree with critics that the Vietnamese could turn over more remains and documents.

So far this year, Vietnam has turned over 39 sets of remains believed to be those of Americans. It turned over 67 sets of remains last year and 35 in 1992. Since the war ended in 1975, Vietnam has turned over 623 sets, according to records of the U.S. MIA office in Hanoi. Of those, 287 have been identified as Americans.

The United States lists 2,231 Americans as missing in action from the war, including 1,641 in Vietnam, 504 in Laos, 78 in Cambodia and 8 in China.

But witnesses have confirmed that half those were killed in action, even though their remains have not been recovered, U.S. officials say. More than 400 others were lost over the sea and their remains probably will never be recovered, officials say.

AWACS knew F-15s' targets were U.S. copters, officials say

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two American pilots shot down a pair of U.S. helicopters over northern Iraq in April after controllers aboard a radar plane failed to tell the pilots the choppers were friendly aircraft, two senior Pentagon officials said Friday.

The officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the finding was contained in a secret report on the April 14 accident that was delivered on Wednesday to Defense Secretary William Perry and Gen. John Shalikashvili, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

It is expected that Perry ultimately will decide what punishment will be meted out for the mishap, in which 26 people aboard the two helicopters were killed in one of the U.S. military's worst self-inflicted losses.

Perry was traveling today on the West Coast and was not immediately for comment.

The accident report notes that while some controllers were clearing the two F-15 pilots to attack the helicopters, other controllers aboard the AWAC radar plane knew at the time the choppers were U.S. Blackhawks, the officials said.

The report cites multiple human error, said one of the officials, noting that the responsibility for the accident is put to at least eight people.

The New York Times was the first to disclose the details in the report in Friday's editions.

The report found the two pilots were responsible because they did not follow established procedures, a congressional source told The Associated Press. The pilots could be relieved of their duties or face court-martial, the source said.

Pentagon spokeswoman Kathleen DeLaski refused to comment on the report, saying only that it was still under legal review and not yet final. DeLaski said the two F-15 pilots involved in the incident are at a U.S. base in Germany. They have never been identified.

"We will not confirm or discuss any details of the report until the secretary acts upon it and the next of kin of those who lost their lives in this tragic incident have been briefed,"

Dennis Boxx, another Pentagon spokesman, said Thursday night. The shootdowns created an international incident. The helicopters were ferrying officials from several nations on a mission supporting U.N. humanitarian relief efforts on behalf of Kurds in northern Iraq.

Fifteen of the dead were military officers from the United States; three from Turkey; two from Britain and one from France. Five Kurdish passengers also were killed.

According to the report, the pilots apparently mistook the helicopters for Iraqi aircraft in their visual sightings of the aircraft. But the helicopters should have been sending a special signal to the jets that they were "friendly" aircraft, the officials said.

Immediately after the incident, Perry ordered pilots to adopt less aggressive "rules of engagement" to ensure the accident wasn't repeated.

U.S. military officials in Europe were given the responsibility of drafting the accident report.

Stooge families complain Moe got the dough

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Even in death, Moe's apparently been getting the best of Larry and Curly.

Heirs of two of the Three Stooges sued MGM Grand for $1 million on Thursday, claiming the stooges' likenesses were used in performances at the hotel and theme park without compensation.

Grandchildren of the late Larry Fine and the widow of "Curly Joe" DeRita claim they were excluded from a licensing agreement between the hotel and descendants of head stooge Moe Howard.

MGM Grand lawyers hadn't seen the lawsuit and couldn't comment, said a spokeswoman at the company's Las Vegas headquarters.

The lawsuit asks for any profits the hotel has made on the stooges' images since it signed a March 5, 1993, agreement with Moe's descendants for use of the group's names, faces, voices and antics.

The trio included various members over the years.

Ohio's educational funding questioned

NEW LEXINGTON, Ohio — A judge declared Ohio's way of funding education unconstitutional Friday because it fails to close the gap between how much rich and poor districts have to spend on their schools.

Perry County Common Pleas Judge Linton Lewis ordered state officials to submit a plan to the Legislature for eliminating the spending disparities — disparities he said violate a child's fundamental right to an education.

The state plans to appeal, a spokesman for Gov. George Voivovich said.

Five school districts challenged the state's method of school funding, which relies on local property taxes, supplemented by state and federal aid.

The reliance on property taxes to pay for education has long been under attack across the nation as burdensome and inequitable.

Minnesota court limits roadblocks

ST. PAUL, Minn. — Police cannot set up roadblocks to stop a lot of motorists in hopes of nabbing a few drunken drivers, the state Supreme Court ruled.

The state Constitution requires police to suspect that drivers have broken a law before pulling them over, the court ruled 5-2 Thursday.

The U.S. Supreme Court ruled in 1990 that temporary roadblocks do not violate the Fourth Amendment, which protects against unreasonable search and seizure.

But the state Supreme Court said Minnesota's Constitution may be interpreted to offer more protection.

Company pays for deadly heart valve

IRVINE, Calif. — Shiley Inc. has agreed to pay $10.75 million to settle allegations it lied to win government approval of an artificial heart valve that has been blamed for hundreds of deaths.

The manufacturer also agreed to provide up to $10 million for valve-replacement surgery for patients who received the Shiley device and are on government medical programs.

Shiley sold its Bjork-Shiley Convexo-Concave heart valve around the world from 1978 until 1986, when the device was pulled off the market.

Failure of a tiny slit in the valve has been blamed for more than 360 deaths. At least 556 valves had fractured as of May 31, Shiley said.

Students have longer to repay loans

WASHINGTON — Starting now, college students will be able to pay back their federal loans over 30 years, instead of 10, or choose other new repayment plans.

The options should make it easier for graduates who don't make high salaries to repay their loans, officials say. And that should lower the default rate, saving the government money.

The changes are part of a program proposed by President Clinton and passed into law last year.

It calls for the federal government to finance student loans directly, instead of through banks and other private lenders that add their own fees to the loans.

The direct-loan program is expected to save the government $4.3 billion over five years, Education Secretary Richard Riley said.

North Korea OKs talks proposal

SEOUL, South Korea — North Korea accepted a South Korean proposal Friday that their presidents get together twice during their summit this month unaccompanied by large entourages of aides.

But northern negotiators objected to the idea of live television coverage of the unprecedented meeting planned for July 25-27 in North Korea's capital, Pyongyang.

The planning delegations scheduled a second meeting for Saturday in the border village of Panmunjom to hash out differences on details of the summit.

The two longtime rivals are trying to reduce tensions that have escalated over suspicions North Korea is building atomic weapons. The hard-line communist regime in Pyongyang contends its nuclear research is peaceful, but has refused to allow full U.N. inspections required under its treaty obligations.

FBI plans to open office in Poland

WARSAW, Poland — The FBI plans to open an office in Warsaw as soon as possible to help in the battle against international crime, director Louis Freeh said Friday.

Freeh, on a 10-day swing through eastern Europe, talked of bolstering "what will be a very strong working relationship" with Poland to stem drug trafficking, money laundering, smuggling and terrorism. It is to include exchanges of information, liaison officers, experts and training. The eventual goal is the formation of "NAPO," a North Atlantic Police Organization.

Serbs scorn international peace plan

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Bosnia's Serb threatened to go to war with new Friday as Serbs retook territory from Muslim-led government forces and scorned a new international peace plan.

Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic said a partition of Bosnia proposed by American, Russian and West European envoys was humiliating to Serbs and could lead to war.

His lie and intensified fighting in northern Bosnia did not bode well for efforts to forge a peace plan in time for a summit next Friday of the world's leading industrialized nations and Russia in Naples, Italy.

A cease-fire accord that took effect three weeks ago is in tatters, largely because of a recent government offensive against Serbs in the north.

Japan's leader seeks to assure allies

TOKYO — Japan's new Socialist prime minister assured allies Friday the country would stick to its foreign commitments, including a U.S. defense pact and support for pressure on North Korea.

In their first telephone conversation, Tomichi Murayama told President Clinton there would be no changes in Japan's foreign policies. Giving such reassurances may create problems in the makeshift governing coalition of left-leaning Socialists and conservative Liberal Democrats.

Japan has been urged by its allies to take a more active role in international matters, particularly in such areas as U.N. peacekeeping operations. The Socialists have opposed such proposals, fearing a strengthening of Japan's military.

Russia begins 130-day space mission

MOSCOW — Two rookie cosmonauts blasted off Friday on a mission designed to boost relations between Russia and Kazakhstan, which have squabbled over the spoils of the former Soviet space program.

Cosmonaut Talgat Musabayev, an ethnic Kazakh, will be conducting research on behalf of Kazakhstan even though he is employed by Russia's space program, Russian authorities said.

Musabayev and cosmonaut Yuri Malchenchenko were aboard a Soyuz TM-15 rocket launched from the Baikonur Cosmodrome in Kazakhstan, the TASS-Tor news agency said.

They are to hook up with the Mir space station in two days for a 130-day mission.

Fireworks blast kills at least 30 people

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil — A fireworks stall exploded Friday at an outdoor antique market in southeastern Brazil, killing at least 30 people and injuring more than 40, a fire official said.

The fireworks exploded in the Vila Rubim shopping district in downtown Vitoria, capital of Espirito Santo state 315 miles north of Rio de Janeiro.

A fire in the stall apparently set off the fireworks, Lt. Edmilton Ribeiro Aguiar Jr. said in a telephone interview.

French face angry sides in Rwanda

MOUNT KAROUNGI, Rwanda (AP) — French troops evacuated badly wounded Tutsis from their mountain hideout Friday as Hutus who had expected French help against Tutsi-led rebels were growing resentful of their neutrality.

The increasing Hutu anger means the French troops, one week into a U.N.-authorized search-and-rescue mission, are facing hostility from both sides in Rwanda's civil war, in which hundreds of thousands have been slaughtered.

The rebel Rwandan Patriotic front, which has seized more than two-thirds of Rwanda, opposes the mission because of past French aid to the Hutu-led army and militias, which are blamed for most of the massacres. The Hutus are resentful that the French have not intervened on their side.

One military officer said the French were keeping close watch for the first sign that "lightning" would turn into a "thunderstorm." The officer referred to the experience of U.S. troops in Somalia, where an aid mission went awry, sparking firefights and Somali resentment of the foreign troops.

French troops, who began their mission by moving east into Rwanda from Zaire, will also begin deploying to southern Rwanda, French officials said.

That could increase the possibility of confrontation with the rebels: Hundreds of thousands of Hutus in the south are fleeing advancing rebel forces. The main area of concern is between the towns of Gikongoro and Butare, officials said.

France is worried that its troops won't be relieved by a multinational U.N. force as scheduled by the end of July.

Arafat makes historic return

RAFAH, Gaza Strip (AP) — When Yasser Arafat returned to a patch of homeland Friday, he took a giant leap toward fulfilling the lifelong mission he gave himself to lead his people out of the wilderness.

He kissed the sandy ground of Gaza, land held holy by Muslims, Christians and Jews since Moses led his tribes from Egypt.

Then Arafat got into his armored Mercedes for a tumultuous 21-mile ride that transformed him from a shadowy guerrilla chieftain to the head of state who is expected to show up for work.

"This is almost the happiest day of the Palestinian nation," said Samir al-Katari, a 32-year-old mechanic, who gushed superlatives when asked what he thought of his leader. "Abu Ammar," people chanted, using the name of Arafat's real name, a term of endearment. Before he spoke in Gaza City, jubilant gunfire sounded like the old days in the heart of Beirut.

To extract Arafat after his speech, a living blanket of security men lay across the hood and trunk while the driver hit the accelerator.

But along with wild adulation, there was a meltdown among Palestinians who worry that Arafat's 30 years of operating with smoke and mirrors may limit his ability at serious statecraft.

Now there is a government to run, but enemies he has acquired among radical Palestinians and diehard Israelis make it all but impossible.

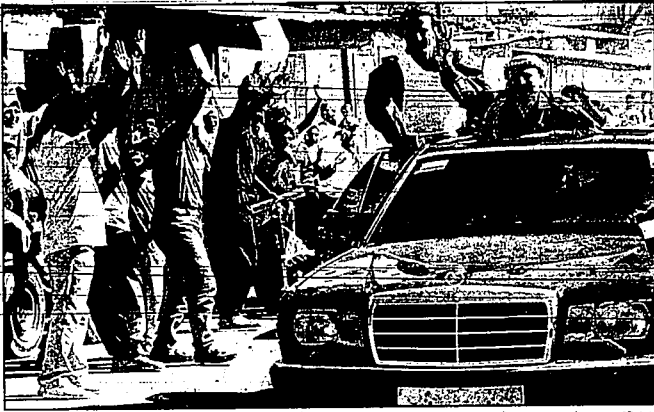

Arafat the politician to get out and press the flesh. The lightning-flash grand entry at Rafah demonstrated what Arafat is up against.

Samir al-Katari, who came to see Arafat

Only a few thousand dignitaries and diplomats gathered to wait for him to cross the Egyptian border. Police shoos away people who had no credentials to enter the high-security zone.

Behind the Palestinian police honor guard a ragtag baggage band failed to add much to the official spontaneity.

Beyond a colorful highway over the road, amid a blaze of Palestinian red, green, white and black, a lone Israeli flag stood out — a stark blue and white reality check to keep the euphoria in line.

Palestinians line the road as PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat arrives in downtown Gaza for his first visit in 27 years to Palestinian soil.

Under the controversial self-rule accord, Israel controls the borders and protects 4,000 settlers who remain in Gaza.

When Arafat finally appeared, he sat nowhere near the bleachers where guests had waited hours in the sun for a look at him. He snubbed diplomats who had driven from Jerusalem.

Instead, he took a brief walk somewhere beyond the jostling journalists, rode a few yards on supporters' shoulders, and disappeared into one of three identical long sedans.

Along parts of the motorcade route, frenzied mobs flung themselves at the black cars, straining for a glimpse inside the darkened windows.

When the crowds thinned to small knots of people, Arafat stood up and waved through the open roof, shielded by a guard in a flak jacket. He ducked back inside each time new crowds appeared.

Palestinian self-rule officials claim a victory that no one was killed by gunfire or traffic accidents in the chaos of the visit.

But journalists attempting to cover Arafat had a taste of the administrative quagmires facing Arafat, who must build the basis for an eventual independent Palestinian state.

Gaza and Jericho make up only 151 square miles. But both small pieces of the homeland are important to Arafat: Gaza, where he is being challenged by Muslim militants and Jericho as the symbol for the vastly larger 2,270-square-mile West Bank that he wants to cover.

Press cards were promised for 9 a.m., but without explanation they were delayed until 1 p.m. even though the border crossing was more than an hour away. Those wishing to complain faced a closed door. The result was a swarming, swearing melee, forcing many to take their chances at sneaking in.

The day of clashing symbols obscured the deep problems that Arafat now must settle down to resolve, the biggest of which is money. Gaza and Jericho now survive on aid, slow in coming and barely enough to pay salaries. But much more is needed in a desperately poor enclave where for many life revolves around drinking tea and smoking cigarettes.

Mixed reaction to the visit suggested he is under pressure to deliver quickly on his promise to better the lives of Palestinians: to full independence.

But, clearly, he has some time. At dawn by the Rafah checkpoint, a 21-year-old student in a black suit and silk tie walked out of Egypt into Gaza, 10 hours ahead of Yasser Arafat. "Now I am ready to come home," Ahmed Aqad said, explaining that he studied medicine in the Slovak Republic and a year ago had resolved to stay abroad when he earned his degree. "So much has changed, now we can build something. I am very happy. There is no country like your own country."

'So much has changed, now we can build something.'

Critics still chafe over state park timber sale

FARRAGUT STATE PARK (AP) — While the last trees were topped 15 months ago, the dispute over a timber sale at Farragut State Park lingers.

The Idaho Department of Fish and Game may yet sell more trees out of its wildlife management area within the park. Agency managers contend the "cutting was needed to reduce fire danger and improve deer habitat."

Mike Lee of Bayview, who calls himself a "freelance rabble rouser," has addressed a complaint to the Idaho Department of Lands and any other agency which might have an interest.

Lee and the Audubon Society initially challenged the sale, concerned about the loss of nesting habitat for birds. They lost the battle, but won concessions such as fewer trees being removed and a detailed logging plan focused on cutting the sickly trees.

Lee charges the state did not follow its plan.

The idea was that they'd be really careful to take trees out that were impeding the growth of the healthier trees, he said. "They did the opposite. It's obvious they went out and high-graded a bunch of very expensive trees."

Fish and Game forester Steve Narolski denies any high-grading or deception. In fact, he points out the Farragut job as a demonstration of good forest management.

"I'm very, very proud of it. I haven't heard one negative thing about it other than Mike Lee," he said. "He does agree that two remaining pieces of logging debris should have been removed by now. The state was responsible for cleaning it up after Louisiana-Pacific, which bought the trees, burned most of the slash."

Narolski intends to burn it when the fire season is over.

Most complaints center on one of six logging areas, the farthest from public view. It is also the unit that Narolski hopes to log again, if annual surveys show it would not harm the breeding bird population.

Idaho Fish and Game Commissioner Richard Hansen, a consulting forester, feels the timber sale should be judged on the whole, not just one unit. But he agrees the one area is unsightly.

Lee said the skid trails for logs do not follow the safe plan, he points out scores of large stumps that apparently were not marked for cutting. Narolski said he was working like crazy to mark the trees to stay ahead of the loggers.

Lee hopes the Department of Lands will act as a referee.

Teen-age killer wants sentence commuted

BOISE (AP) — Jeremy Broadhead, who ambushed and murdered his father in 1989 at age 14, wants out of prison.

A petition asking that his sentence be commuted was received Thursday by the Idaho Commission for Pardons and Parole, director Olivia Craven said.

The commission considers commutations in January, April, July and October. Thursday was the last day Broadhead could ask the commission to consider his request in July.

Broadhead's attorney, Michael Flannagan of Boise, declined comment.

The commission will review the request and send a recommendation to Gov. Cecil Andrus. If the commission recommends commutation, Andrus will have 30 days to act on the recommendation.

Broadhead has lived at the Idaho Youth Services Center in St. Anthony since being charged as an adult with first-degree murder for the shooting of his father, John Steven Broadhead, in February 1989.

The youth pleaded guilty to second-degree murder and was sentenced to at least 15 years in prison. The Idaho Department of Correction agreed to let Broadhead stay in St. Anthony, which is run by the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare, until he was deemed ready for the main state penitentiary.

Correction officials and Health and Welfare have begun talks on the transfer of Broadhead, now 19. But Correction spokeswoman Ann Thompson said this week that officials are in no hurry to send him to prison as long as he is doing well at St. Anthony. The state could have ordered him sent to prison when he turned 18, he can stay at St. Anthony until he turns 21.

Kurt Friedlander, director of the Youth Services Center, said Broadhead has done well. An eighth-grader when he arrived, he has earned his high school equivalency diploma and is taking college classes by correspondence.

His behavior has been very stable and he has been highly motivated, Friedlander said.

If he goes to prison, Broadhead would be the first juvenile to pass from the custody of Health and Welfare to the Department of Correction.

Paying some to attend summer school, charging others questioned as unfair

BOISE (AP) — Some 400 Boise School District students who are at risk of dropping out are paid as much as $300 to attend summer school.

Meanwhile, more than 1,300 students are paying up to $230 to take summer school classes they could not fit in the regular school year, to graduate early, or to improve their grades.

Critics call it unfair. But students and teachers in the Summer Plus program say it is an effective way to keep troubled young people in school so they can get a diploma.

"The reason they don't charge us is that a lot of kids can't afford to pay for it," says 18-year-old student

Misty Sizemore. "A lot of parents won't pay for it. A lot of parents don't even care."

Sizemore and other students contend the money is important because they often are on their own and need financial support. They say the cost to taxpayers is less than the price of letting young people drop out.

"If a person doesn't finish high school, they're really not going to be good in life," she says. "It's going to cost the country more later for welfare and the court system if they don't get an education."

It costs an average of $15,500 a year to house an Idaho prisoner inmate. Summer Plus has operated in Boise for four years as a partnership between the school district and the Southwest Idaho Private Industry Council.

About $200,000 is paid by the state through the school district's budget and $100,000 is from the U.S. Department of Labor through the industry council budget.

The program pays students $50 for each course they pass with a "C" or better grade. They can take up to four courses over the summer. It also pays them $25 per course if they have perfect attendance and no tardies.

"What we try to do also is encourage discouraged learners so they find out they can be successful," Principal Carolyn Rapp says.

BYU mostly Mormons

PROVO, Utah (AP) — The enrollment of nonmember students at Mormon Church-owned Brigham Young University has dropped by half during the past five years.

Non-Mormon students made up 21 percent of enrollees in 1989, but only account for 1.1 percent of the student body this year.

Senators oppose bid for water

LEWISTON (AP) — The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers has received a formal request to draw Dworshak Reservoir down another 30 feet this summer to help flush young migrating salmon downstream.

Sen. Dirk Kempthorne, R-Idaho, said the corps notified him late Thursday that the National Marine Fisheries Service has asked for additional water from the reservoir near Orofino.

The additional demand on Dworshak is not expected to affect reservoir levels until next week, after the Fourth of July weekend. That means holiday boaters will see Dworshak Reservoir as high as its going to get this summer.

All boat ramps were in operation this week as the reservoir level hovered at an elevation of 1,568 feet — 32 feet below full. The corps could begin pulling as much as 20,000 cubic feet per second of water from the reservoir next week, dropping the water behind Dworshak Dam as much as two feet a day.

But Kempthorne said that will not happen if he and Sen. Larry Craig, R-Idaho, have their way. Both formally criticized the plan as soon as it was announced.

The proposal to draw Dworshak Reservoir down to 110 feet below full drew angry criticism at a meeting last week sponsored by corps and fisheries service officials in Orofino.

Original plans called for drawing Dworshak down by as much as 80 feet this summer to help flush migrating salmon toward the ocean. The reservoir level was dropped 60 feet for the same purpose last summer.

Kempthorne said the blame rests solely with the fisheries service. "It is NMFS making that call, not the corps," he said.

Both senators said they want the agency to outline its rationale for demanding the additional water and how it would address the impact.

"I believe that should happen before the draining of the reservoir should take place," Kempthorne said.

Historical society wants steamboat paid for, moved

LEWISTON (AP) — The winning bidder for the steamboat Jean has been given until July 19 to pay for the boat and until Aug. 1 to find a new moorage.

An extension might be granted for removing the paddle wheeler from Hells Gate State Park in Lewiston if progress is being made toward finding a new site, John Hill, director of the Idaho State Historical Society in Boise, said Thursday.

But Hill said the $23,799 that Lifestyle Health Services of Clarkston, Wash., bid to purchase it must be paid by the deadline.

The original deadline for payment was June 30, but the purchaser asked for a 45-day extension that started when the request was made in early June, Hill said.

Douglas Ammon of Clarkston, president of Lifestyle Health Services, has said his group wants to use the Jean for a wellness center that would house a number of health-related activities.

Ammon has talked with Washington's Asotin County commissioners, the Asotin City Council and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers about a shoreline permit to move the Jean to the Swallows Park area near Clarkston or farther upstream near Asotin.

Sandpoint mayor turns to business

SANDPOINT (AP) — Controversial Sandpoint Mayor Dwight Sheffler has resigned, citing the demands of business opportunities.

Sheffler made his announcement Thursday, effective immediately. He said a commitment with Sandpoint Title has paid off and opportunities relating to the business need his attention.

"They are such that it behooves me to make the move today," he said. "Opportunities like this just don't come along all the time. You have to make the most of it."

Sheffler said criticism of his administration following a proposed $7,000-acre annexation and a possible recall attempt, as well as dissension on the Sandpoint City Council, had no role in his decision to resign.

"If that's what makes them feel good, then so be it," he said. "But it has nothing to do with the annexation."

Former radio host dies in motorcycle accident

SHOSHONE - A motorcyclist died instantly Friday afternoon when he was hit head-on by a pickup off U.S. Highway 93. Dennis Conrad, 39, of Twin Falls was found dead on the scene by state police at 2:20 p.m. Conrad spent many years as the morning radio personality for KLOX-AM in Twin Falls. The driver of the truck, Tyler Gumb, 24, of Twin Falls, was not injured. Conrad was northbound on U.S. Highway 93 about three miles south of Shoshone. Gumb was headed south in a one-ton pickup pulling a trailer, when a driver's education vehicle in front of him stopped in the road to make a left turn. ISP dispatcher Dee Silver said. The driver's education car had a left turn signal flashing, but Gumb was unable to stop in time and pulled into the northbound lane where he hit Conrad, Silver said. No citations were issued Friday evening as state police continued their investigation.

Twin Falls County landfill will close Monday for holiday

BUHL - The county's main landfill west of Buhl will be closed Monday in observance of the national holiday. County Solid Waste Director Dattell Heider advises county residents that federal law prohibits the landfill from accepting any liquid waste or land acid batteries. Oil filters can be accepted if the filters have been punctured and drained for at least 24 hours, Heider said.

Woman's sex abuse case moves to District Court

TWIN FALLS - Three boys testified on court Friday that a 20-year-old woman performed a striptease and let them touch her in a sexual manner. Lena J. Caudill of Twin Falls was bound over to District Court for trial on four charges of lewd conduct after a preliminary hearing before 5th District Magistrate R. Michael Redman. Caudill has pleaded innocent to the charges and remains in the Twin Falls County jail on $10,000 bond. Public Defender Michael Wood unsuccessfully asked Redman to dismiss the charges because of "insufficient evidence." According to an affidavit by Twin Falls police Detective Chuck Dudley, four boys under the age of 16 reported the incident happened April 29, 1994. Three of the boys testified they went to Caudill's house to watch movies. The boys said Caudill turned on some music and began dancing and stripping. They took turns touching her breasts and genital area with their hands and mouths, the boys said.

Independent candidates file for Blaine County offices

HAILEY - Three independent candidates filed petitions last week announcing their bids for three elected positions in Blaine County. John Fell Stevenson, a Blaine County rancher and a son of former Presidential candidate Adlai Stevenson, will run for county commissioner for District 1. He will face incumbent Tom Blanchard in November. Lila Walker West of Ketchum will challenge incumbent Leonard Harlig for a seat on the third district. The third independent, Price R. Collinsworth, has been a county appraiser for the past three years and will challenge Assessor Ted Uhrig.

Buhl businesses oppose truck route moves out of downtown

BUHL - A proposal by the Buhl Chamber of Commerce to move the truck route out of downtown is receiving opposition from local businesses. Buhl has a winding truck route that partially goes through the downtown area. Some truckers have complained about the route's access to highways. So the chamber proposed a new, safer truck route that would avoid downtown, said chamber Vice President Barbara Gietzen. The idea isn't receiving much support. The state won't pay the $1 million-a-mile tab and many downtown business owners don't like it. "The businesses are for a truck route but they're afraid the tourist traffic will follow the trucks. We're trying to survive in Buhl, too," Gietzen said. So the chamber will hold more public meetings about what Buhl can do about its traffic problems. She said the state Department of Transportation has projected that Buhl will triple in the next 10 years due to growth in tourism, agriculture and population.

Fireworks land shopkeeper in court

By Mick Normington
Times-News writer

SHOSHONE - A Lincoln County businesswoman is going to court for doing what she's done for years - selling fireworks before the Fourth of July - even though a county commissioner supports the enterprise. Lois Peterson, owner of Johnny's Country Store four miles north of Shoshone, was issued a citation on selling "dangerous" fireworks in violation of a state law. On Thursday, Hailey Fire Chief Mike Chapman went into her store and bought about $30 worth of fireworks. He then went to Lincoln County Sheriff Stephen South-wick and filed a complaint against her. Southwick issued her a citation, and she's scheduled to appear in court July 11. "I don't need a lawyer, I didn't do anything wrong," Peterson said. Lincoln County commissioners have supported her right as a business person to sell fireworks. Lincoln County doesn't have a fireworks ordinance.

'During the Fourth of July this place can look like Beirut. We've counted 200 different aerial displays by people in one night.'

— Hailey Fire Chief Mike Chapman

she's using the money from the fireworks sale to get her fuel pumps up to federal standards. But the story goes back to 1984. Peterson and her husband bought Johnny's Country Store 10 years ago. She said that one summer day soon after they bought the store a truck arrived filled with fireworks; the driver claimed that such a delivery had been made for more than 20 years. So the Petersons accepted the fireworks and sold them. Nearby Blaine County has strict laws against fireworks, but fireworks use has been rising. Chapman said he estimated that most of the fireworks sold in Lincoln County were getting set off in Blaine County. "During the Fourth of July this place can look like Beirut. We've counted 200 different aerial displays by people in one night," Chapman said.

Lane Startin is a rarity in Twin Falls—a Democrat who holds statewide office.

Twin Falls man leads young state Dem group

By Frank E. Lockwood
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS - Lane Startin is a 20-year-old with political ambitions, a youth who speaks in sound bites and who dreams of serving in the U.S. Senate. He's also a small-business man, driving his own ice cream truck down the streets of Twin Falls. When he's not selling frozen confections to youngsters, Startin is peddling Democratic politics to his parents. In a conservative state, that's not always an easy sell, but Startin is not easily deterred. Late last month at the Democratic State Convention in Idaho Falls, Startin was elected to lead the state's Young Democrats. Billing himself as "a voice for Young Idaho," Startin topped Willamette University student Tobias Beat of Boise by four votes. Startin ran as a "very pro-choice, (anti-)Idaho Citizens Alliance," pro-life, anti-right-to-work moderate. He pledged to "do all I can to spread the 17th message of tolerance, equality, and political activism throughout every corner of this great state."

Armed with an endorsement from gubernatorial candidate Ron Beitelbacher and a lengthy political resume, Startin promised to expand the organization, reaching out not only to Democratic insiders, but to anyone who's "passionate about politics." Now, he's working to fulfill that pledge. "I find people don't know we even exist," Startin says. That's a problem he plans to fix. For starters, Startin is planning a monthly column that he'll distribute to Idaho's daily papers. He also hopes Young Democrats will take a ride on the "information superhighway," using on-line computer networks to spread the Democratic message. Idaho Democrats are perennial underdogs, and Startin himself is no stranger to defeat. Startin founded a Young Democrats group at Twin Falls High School, but lost three straight runs for student body officer. At Idaho State, where he studies mass communications, Startin lost a bid for the Student Senate by just one vote. But the losses didn't deter this Democrat, who chuckles while recalling earlier setbacks. "I guess politics is in me," he says. If the Generation X stereotype is true, today's college students can name more brands of beer than they can name members of Congress. Startin, however, is the exception. "I've met (Nebraska Sen.) Bob Kerrey (Iowa Sen.) Tom Harkin. I've met (Gov.) Cecil Andrus many times, and I know most of the statewide candidates on a first-name basis," he says.

Shooting probe stalls

By Maria Stafford
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - The Twin Falls County prosecutor still does not know whether a suspected thief was fleeing or fighting when a gun store owner shot him last month. Without medical records, Prosecutor G. Richard Bevan said Friday that he did not know whether the store owner acted illegally when he shot the intruder on June 12 or whether the prosecutor's office would take legal action against Hazen. Bevan said he has subpoenaed a medical report and police reports that might help him determine whether Tony Diaz of Mexico was running away when Floyd Hazen, owner of Blue Lakes Sporting Goods, shot him in the leg. "Until I get a complete file of medical records, from the police and hospital can I make an informed analysis and determine what actually occurred," Bevan said. The prosecutor said he hoped to get that information sometime next week. Hazen refused Friday to be interviewed on the matter. Diaz, represented by Twin Falls County Public Defender Michael Wood, waived a preliminary hearing Friday and faces a felony charge of burglary. He is in custody at the Twin Falls County jail on $10,000 bond. Bevan said he will recommend to a 5th District Court judge that Diaz be allowed to change his plea of innocent to guilty and be deported to Mexico on probation under the condition that he does not return to the United States. "Rather than send him to prison for one to two to three years and then deport him, it is clearly better to deport him on probation," Bevan said. "As an illegal alien, he should never return." Police were called to Blue Lakes Sporting Goods, 1236 Blue Lakes Blvd. N., just before 3 a.m. on June 12. The back door had been pried open. According to a police affidavit, Officer Brian Kneer arrived on the scene and heard an argument between two people. He saw a man, Tony Diaz, who was running away from the store. Kneer followed him to the south fence outside his business. Kneer climbed the fence and followed a bloody trail to a garage about a block from the shop. A police dog scratched at the garage door. When police opened it, they found Diaz lying face down on the floor, with blood-soaked pants. "Another officer had found several handguns belonging to the store stashed in the bushes behind the store. Hazen, who lives in the building, had told officers that he had come down to the store to check an alarm that had gone off. When he confronted the burglar, Hazen told him to lay down. The burglar said he would return the stolen items and headed for the back door. Hazen followed and an argument ensued, according to his statement in the police affidavit.

Sex charges liven Lincoln race

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News writer

SHOSHONE - The man who was in line to become Lincoln County's next assessor won't be on the November ballot after being charged last month with sexually abusing a boy. Instead, three women will compete for the position. John L. Shaffer, a 52-year-old former Shoshone police chief, has withdrawn his name from the election. Deputy Recorder Helen Jackson said. Shaffer is charged with four counts of lewd conduct with a boy over an eight-year period beginning in 1984. Shaffer was arrested June 23 and charged in Lincoln and Blaine counties. He was released from the Blaine County jail after posting $20,000 bond earlier this week. He was the Republican nominee for assessor and was unchallenged in the November election. After Shaffer withdrew, the county's GOP central committee selected Steve Edwards of District 1 to replace him on the ballot, Jackson said. Two independent candidates, Brenda Butler of Richfield and JoAnn Nielson of Shoshone, filed for the office before the June 24 deadline. Shaffer spent 15 years on the Shoshone police force and was head of the department in 1986, when he resigned. He was employed as a deputy county assessor, when officers arrested him at his Shoshone home June 24. A preliminary hearing on the lewd-conduct charges is set for July 8 in Blaine County. If convicted, Shaffer could face life in prison.

Business scams emerge in Valley

By Mick Norvington
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS—The Idaho attorney general's office is warning Magic Valley business that they're the targets of three scams.

The scams are a new but have recently appeared in the Magic Valley and other areas of the state.

The scams are:

"Fakeskins" for-profit magazines that claim to be supporting social issues.

"Toner bandits," who sell inferior or overpriced office supplies over the telephone.

"Phony Yellow Pages" advertisements for non-local phone directories.

"Businesses are getting ripped off left and right," said Prudy Barnes of the Consumer Protection Division of the attorney general's office.

"We've had such an increase in complaints from businesses that we're now concentrating on them, and we're trying to speak to business groups about this to warn them," she said.

Complaints of "fakeskins" have been especially heavy. Business owners get calls from a salesperson for a magazine that is purportedly dedicated to social causes such as drug education or the local ambulance.

lance service. The business owners are told if they care about their communities they should buy an advertisement in the magazine.

Later the business owner is mailed a copy of the magazine containing his advertisement, but the magazine isn't circulated to the public and money from advertising doesn't go to the social cause.

Last week, the Attorney General sent an advisory letter to judges. Larry Echols, who got a judge running a fakeskin called "Health Watch." The Community Action Magazine, Echols argued the Boise-based publishers of the magazine had deceived and misled the magazine's advertisers.

In the "toner bandits" scam, a business gets a call from somebody claiming to be a local supplier of office products. But unsuspecting buyers receive low-quality or overpriced goods.

Under the phony Yellow Pages scam, businesses receive bills for a phone directory advertisement. The bill has the "walking finger" image so it looks legitimate. But small print at the bottom of the bill explains that the business owner doesn't have to pay the bill, but payment will ensure that an advertisement will appear in some phone directory. That directory is then not generally circulated.

14-year-old slashing suspect escapes motel, eludes deputies

By H.R. Weibel
Times-News correspondent

JEROME—A young fugitive arrested Tuesday and charged with slashing another boy remained at large Friday night after escaping from a guarded motel room.

A Jerome man was arrested early Friday morning and charged with helping the boy escape. The boy, who was under arrest on a charge of aggravated battery for reportedly slashing the car of an older boy from Billings, Mont., was under guard in a motel south of Jerome.

Juvenile prisoners are frequently kept under guard in motel rooms until they can be moved to other facilities because state and federal laws prevent them from being held in adult jails.

The boy told deputies he was going to take a shower, and while the guard waited outside the bathroom, the young man squeezed through a small window, Jerome County Detective Gerald Brant said.

An all-out search followed, with city and county officers and jail employees scouring the area for the boy.

The search was called off at 3 a.m. Friday when a tip led officers to a Jerome home where the escapee may have taken refuge.

Kevin T. Kinyon, 20, was arrested there and charged with helping the boy escape. The boy's name has not been released because of court records.

According to court records, Kinyon denied helping the boy escape. After the boy's clothes were found in Kinyon's home, however, he admitted assisting the boy, court records say.

Authorities say Kinyon took the boy to Twin Falls Thursday night. He was arraigned Friday by 5th District Magistrate Thomas H. Borsen, who set bond at $2,500.

The missing boy and a 17-year-old companion apparently began arguing about money Tuesday afternoon when the younger boy attacked him with a butcher knife, police say.

The older boy chased his attacker with a frying pan, but the boy hid inside a nearby house, where police found him a short time later.

Courthouse search turns up illegal pistol

By Maria Stafford
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS—Just one day after the Twin Falls County Courthouse was searched for a handgun, a Montana woman was arrested Thursday at the Twin Falls County Courthouse when a security officer found a semi-automatic pistol concealed in her purse.

Mary Eileen Hamilton, 35, of Battle Mountain, pleaded guilty to carrying a concealed weapon without a permit. She paid a $300 bond and will be sentenced July 26.

Hamilton entered the courthouse with a man and three small children. When she was asked to hand her purse to the security officer, she wouldn't leave it, according to an affidavit by Freire.

"I held onto the purse in the interest of court security and my own personal safety," Freire said.

When Freire asked Hamilton if she had a gun in the purse she said, "Yes, do. I travel a lot with my kids and I meet a lot of weird people," Freire wrote.

The man with her told Freire that they were going to leave the gun in the car, but didn't want to take the chance of leaving it with the other children waiting in the car, according to the affidavit.

Manufacturer pulls pesticide blamed for Washington illnesses off market

YAKIMA, Wash. (AP)—The manufacturer of a pesticide blamed for the illnesses of 27 farm workers in Eastern Washington last year has agreed to voluntarily withdraw the product from the market, officials said Friday.

The pesticide, mevinphos, known under the trade name Phosdrin, is a highly toxic chemical used to control aphids.

The state Agriculture Department permanently banned Phosdrin use on apples and pears this year, but allowed continued use on fresh peas in Western Washington, and vegetable and seed crops.

AMVAC Chemical Co. of Los Angeles, a subsidiary of American Vanguard Co., also of Los Angeles, chose to withdraw the pesticide rather than wait for the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to ban it. AMVAC said the Steve Schatzow from Washington, D.C.

AMVAC stopped production of the pesticide on Thursday, but will continue to sell its remaining stock through December, Schatzow said.

The company will continue to manufacture and sell the pesticide to foreign markets.

The EPA had ruled that the use of

'The overwhelming evidence of the risks of poisoning to agricultural workers from the use of mevinphos presents little choice but to remove mevinphos from the marketplace.'

—Lynn Goldman, EPA assistant administrator

Phosdrin was an "unacceptable hazard to applicators, mixers and loaders, as well as other agricultural workers."

"The overwhelming evidence of the risks of poisoning to agricultural workers from the use of mevinphos presents little choice but to remove mevinphos from the marketplace," said Lynn Goldman, EPA assistant administrator.

Kurt Petersen, spokesman of the United Farmworkers of Washington State, said the union has actively called for a ban on Phosdrin since 1972.

year in, Grant, Benton, Franklin and Walla-Walla counties had to seek medical treatment.

"We consider it a victory," Petersen said. "However, it's tragic it took so many people, so many farm workers, who had to be poisoned to reach this moment. Then, of course, the company is still allowed to export the product where farm workers will not doubt suffer the consequences in other countries."

Schatzow said the EPA has known of the dangers of the pesticide since it was registered in 1957.

"There's no news here," he said. "The product is acutely toxic."

But he said the problem that sparked controversy over the pesticide in Washington state was when it was used for apples and pears, "uses that historically have not been made of the product."

Mineral claims are invalid, BLM says

FRUITLAND (AP)—Fruitland residents are closer to erasing mineral claims a man and his mother filed under as many as 300 residential parcels on the east side of town.

The U.S. Bureau of Land Management has notified a Fruitland citizen's committee that the claims are all on private land and invalid. However, only an appeal to state district court will clear landowners' titles of the claims.

James and Gloria Smallwood filed the claims with Payette County in December on up to four square miles of property.

"If you try to re-finance or sell your home, you'd have a cloud-up on the title," said Jerry Taylor, heading up the committee. "That's the rub. It's a false claim. It's not valid, but it would be enough to unnerve a bank."

"The Smallwoods apparently were trying to take advantage of the 1872 Mining Law when they drove around Fruitland, placing claim markers on phone poles and stop signs. On Dec. 22, they filed 14 claim documents."

"Filing an affidavit of locators is one step one would follow to comply with the federal mining law," Taylor said. "The Smallwoods filed for federal mineral reserves under private land. It so happens under the private land there are no mineral reserves."

The committee contacted the BLM in Boise and found no record of the Smallwood claims.

"They did not file the proper paperwork, and they had no intent to do exploration," Taylor said. On a private parcel, the landowner has the right to its minerals.

Payette County Sheriff Bob Barowsky said an investigation into the Smallwoods' documentation turned up no criminal activity, although he advised their posting notices on stop signs and power poles is illegal.

Fireworks

Last year the Blaine County fire chiefs filed a complaint with the state police against L. L. Loeble and his wife, who were charged with filing a state law that makes all but "safe and sane" fireworks illegal.

Essentially, any fireworks that fly or have a loud explosion are illegal in Idaho. That means such popular fireworks as "bottle rockets" and "cherry bombs" are outlawed.

Chapman said last summer Peterson received a warning, and a citation was given to the owners of the Shoshone Ice Caves for selling 8-inch "mortars" and other illegal fireworks.

The penalty was a $600 fine.

This year, Southwest reminded Peterson of the law and gave her descriptions of what kinds of fireworks weren't considered "safe and sane."

But she again took shipment of the illegal fireworks and sold them, she said.

"I don't sell drugs or anything that's dangerous. I didn't start this. I inherited it. I have never thought that I have done anything wrong," she said. "I don't sell very, very well."

Peterson said most of the fireworks are bought by adult males. And she only sells to children if they are accompanied by an adult. She said people come from all over the state to buy fireworks from her.

Chapman said he sympathizes with Peterson, but fireworks are illegal and can injure people and property.

"I understand why people want to have their own aerial display, especially in Halley where we don't have a fireworks display. But we're too built up and too residential here. It's not safe," Chapman said. "Very rarely do people who play with fireworks catch their own houses on fire."

Last year on the Fourth of July, fire chiefs across the country halted 13,000 people who had to go to hospital emergency rooms due to fireworks injuries, Chapman said.

Dem

Andrus is one of Starnin's favorite statesmen, a veteran politician who commands his respect. "I very much admire people who don't sugarcoat things, and tell it like it is," he says.

He places President Clinton in that group, but concedes the Arkansas was "waffled a few times since taking office. I don't particularly like what he does, when he flip-flops," Starnin admits. "I think he lets himself get pushed around too much" when he needs to "stand firm" and face his critics.

Despite these criticisms, Starnin calls Clinton "the best Democrat we've had at least as long as I've been around" and praises him for passing progressive legislation and fighting to change.

Earlier this year, Starnin mullied a run for the state Legislature, and "very nearly filed." He knew the race was a long shot, but considered challenging an incumbent anyway.

Ultimately, a Democratic leader helped dissuade him, convincing him there were other ways he could leave his mark.

"I was running to make a statement, which I intend to do now" as Idaho Young Democrats President, Starnin adds.

Alice Osterhout says she no longer keeps her doors and windows open because of the stench of a nearby waste pond north of Paul.

Residents turn up noses at smelly waste

By Liz Wright
Times-News writer

RUPERT — Alice Osterhout and her family first smelled a sour, rotten odor coming from their home when they returned from a weekend of camping last fall.

"We thought the cat had gotten sick or something," she said. "We checked everywhere and it smelled so bad. You would lean back on the couch and just smell it in the material."

Soon they discovered the smell's origin — a shallow wastewater pond built two years ago on nearby farmland by Magic Valley Foods Inc. of Rupert.

Carried by easterly winds, the smell of rotting potato scraps and other debris reaches Osterhout's home one-third of a mile away. Often the odor finds a way inside, she said.

This summer, the stench of rotting waste has gotten stronger and more frequent, Osterhout said. The family no longer goes outside and has been forced to shut their doors and windows.

Flies have increased, she said. "You have to be locked in the house on a nice summer evening, but that's

Public interest group targets Idaho reactor

The Associated Press

Now that the Superconducting Super Collider project in Texas is out of the way, Idaho's Integral Fast-Reactor project is the chief target of opponents as a money-waster, they say. Anna Aurilio, a staff scientist with the Washington-based Public Interest Resource Groups, said Friday the strategy is to hype the reactor as this year's major money pit. The administration's support should make that easier, she said.

"This year we are the big project where the House and Senate disagree," Aurilio said. "We'd like the House to send a message."

The huge coalition to study subatomic particles was the major disagreement in Department of Energy appropriations last year, she said, and the House decided to stand its ground and kill it. To reject two conference agreements could have cost too much politically for the House.

Though the scenario looks bleak for last year, when the Senate ultimately prevailed, Aurilio said there is one major difference: The collider project is out of the way.

The Senate on Thursday voted 52-46 to restore about $100 million for the Integral Fast-Reactor, although the House made it clear earlier it wants to end the research. The project employs hundreds of people in Idaho, plus more in Illinois.

The money was part of a $20.7 billion measure financing defense and civilian energy research, nuclear waste cleanup and water projects next year. The overall bill was approved 91-8, leaving House-Senate negotiators the task of working out a compromise.

Even if the House-Senate conference committee agrees to pay for the project, the fight could continue. Rep. Mike Crapo, R-Idaho, believes it could face at least one more battle on the House floor.

"Since they succeeded last year by such a large margin, they will probably take advantage of the support they will be getting from the administration this year," Crapo said of the reactor opponents.

all we can do, is shut everything up," she said.

Prompted by recent complaints by neighbors, state officials from the Division of Environmental Quality examined the ponds earlier this week. "The odors indicate that it hasn't been managed properly," said Mike McMasters, prevention and certification supervisor for the Division of Environmental Quality in Twin Falls.

The pond, at 750 West, 800 North is about one fourth of an acre wide, McMasters said.

Magic Valley Foods built the pond several years ago for storing potato scraps and other debris to use as cattle feed, company vice-president Bill Scow said.

Scow said to his knowledge, only one neighbor, Randy Gillette, has complained to the company about the smell. Last year Scow offered to sell the land to Gillette. In exchange, the company would take their waste elsewhere.

Gillette, who employs Osterhout's husband on his farm, said he liked the offer, and wants to save up enough money to buy the company's land. As a result, he dropped his complaint, he said. "I've kept really low-key on this," Gillette said. "But something needs to be done."

Osterhout wishes someone had warned her about the waste pond before it was built.

"Where's all the regulations? Where's the government? They should be taking care of us," she said.

State requirements aimed at preventing the smell of decomposing waste from bothering neighbors are limited to cities, McMasters said. The state doesn't require private waste facilities to obey odor control rules in rural areas, he said.

It's up to the company to take care of the odor, he said.

The zoning ordinance in Minidoka County also places no odor requirements on waste ponds, said Paul Aston, the county building and zoning administrator.

Unless the facility carries some health hazard, the county is required to inform the public or give citizens a chance to protest a waste pond before it is built, he said.

"What does a farmer do when he has a cellar full of rotten potatoes? He hauls it out and buries it," Aston said. "I don't think they should be required to file for a special use permit every time."

The company acknowledges the problem and will work toward a solution, Scow said.

State officials and the company will meet next week to develop a plan to take care of the odor, McMasters said. The odor could be taken care of by pumping oxygen into the waste, for example, he said.

"It's probably a minor problem that the company will have to address," McMasters said. There's risk to surface water, he added.

The waste collects at the company and is hauled to the ponds, McMasters said. Between harvest seasons, the waste is spread over farmland and used as fertile soil for crops, he said.

But Osterhout said she never has seen any waste removed.

5-year-old Burley boy hit by pickup

BURLEY — A 5-year-old Burley boy was injured Thursday when he was struck by a pickup in the middle of 500 South Road.

Clark Willard Turpin was taken to Cassia Memorial Hospital with a broken leg. He was later moved to Primary Children's Medical Center in Salt Lake City, where doctors are monitoring him for a previous medical condition, said his 18-year-old brother, Spencer Turpin.

Clark Turpin had been disobeying his 13-year-old sister by backing into the middle of the road when the pickup hit him, Spencer Turpin said.

Travis Tegan, 15, of Burley, was driving east when he hit Turpin at 1:40 p.m. between 250 and 150 East roads, according to an accident report.

Tegan was unharmed and was not cited.

Transient's fire burns 20,000 acres

MINIDOKA — A range fire that burned 20,000 acres of scrubland three miles north of Minidoka was caused by a transient's cooking fire, a Bureau of Land Management fire official said Friday.

The transient will be charged with setting the blaze, said Dave Dunnell, adding that he did not know the man's name.

The fire was 90 percent contained Friday evening, Dunnell said, "but I don't think we'll have it wrapped up tonight."

The company acknowledges the problem and will work toward a solution, Scow said.

State officials and the company will meet next week to develop a plan to take care of the odor, McMasters said. The odor could be taken care of by pumping oxygen into the waste, for example, he said.

"It's probably a minor problem that the company will have to address," McMasters said. There's risk to surface water, he added.

The waste collects at the company and is hauled to the ponds, McMasters said. Between harvest seasons, the waste is spread over farmland and used as fertile soil for crops, he said.

But Osterhout said she never has seen any waste removed.

The fire was burning sagebrush, with no structures threatened. "There's not a whole lot out there," Mitchell said.

A one-man barbecue started the fire shortly before 8 p.m., Dunnell said. Authorities arrested the man suspected of causing the fire.

Bob Clark, state fire management officer for the BLM in Boise, said the fire was unusually fierce for this time of year.

Such fires don't usually occur until August — and that doesn't bode well for the rest of the summer, Clark said.

"I'm really, really nervous," he said.

Release of salmon shouldn't effect boating

BOISE (AP) — Idaho Power Co. has started to increase the water it releases in the Hells Canyon hydroelectric complex to aid in the salmon migration.

But all the boat ramps on Brownlee Reservoir should be accessible through the holiday week.

The utility on Friday began raising the flow from Hells Canyon Dam to 5,000 cubic feet per second, above the rate water is flowing into Brownlee farther upstream on the Snake River, meaning a net decline in storage.

Senate OKs research helping salmon

The Associated Press

The U.S. Senate is backing a $500,000 expenditure to develop hydroelectric turbines less lethal to Idaho's dwindling salmon stocks.

It adopted a budget amendment Thursday by Sen. Dirk Kempthorne, R-Idaho, to fund research on a turbine that would kill fewer fish at dams on the Columbia and lower Snake rivers.

The theory a turbine could put less pressure on passing fish while increasing the generating capacity came from the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory, and Kempthorne wants the research dollars to go there.

"It's important in the Pacific Northwest where we are engaged in a multimillion-dollar salmon recovery effort, and it's important for the eastern states where the Atlantic salmon is listed as an endangered species," Kempthorne said.

"It is important for every state that has hydropower as part of its energy mix."

Its application on the East Coast could be the project's savior in the House when the amendment goes to conference, Kempthorne spokesman Mark Snider said Sunday, including Northwestern and Eastern power suppliers, has pledged $500,000 for the project.

Snider said scientists believe they can decrease pressure in the turbines, and possibly reduce nitrogen gas saturation below the dams. The nitrogen created during spills can cause a disease in the fish like deep-sea divers' bends.

The Snake River sockeye has been declared an endangered species and the Snake River chinook are listed as threatened.

Snider said the conceptual development probably would occur partly at INEL over the next four years, and then scientists would build a prototype at a working hydro plant.

Democratic Gov. Cecil Andrus on Thursday told the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Service Subcommittee that the Snake River Salmon Recovery Team's recommendations to save the runs will only maintain the status quo and erase the species.

Andrus has championed a drawdown strategy, where the lower Snake dams would be drawn down for a couple months in the spring, creating a strong current in the reservoirs—the young salmon could follow to the sea. All the rest is window dressing.

"Many factors have contributed to the decline of Snake River salmon runs," Andrus said in a statement to the subcommittee.

But only one — the eight federal dams, and the intransigent agencies that operate them — put them at the brink of extinction.

Quale tied for most wins in Pacific region

SCOTT'S VALLEY, Calif. — Although he ranks only 22nd overall, Bruce Quale of Twin Falls is tied for the leadership in win in the Pacific Coast Region of the NASCAR Winston Racing Series. Quale has seven wins in nine starts at Magic Valley Speedway. The competition counts a driver's 20 best finishes during the season. Scott Budy of Martinez, Calif., also has seven victories. He has more 19 times and stands second overall, behind Tom Pinkowsky of Vancouver, Wash., who has won three races in 20 starts, but has 18 top 10 finishes.

Next in victories is Chuck Ogle of Peshastin, Wash., with six wins in 11 starts.

Cowboys win Classic opener

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS — Boise, Taiwan and Twin Falls came through perfect after the first day of the 1994 Cowboy Classic Friday. There will be one less on the unbeaten list after Saturday when Boise plays Taiwan.

Lethbridge second baseman Ryan Ferguson suffered a broken leg during a collision in his team's opener, but Ferguson's Elks teammates felt another kind of pain in his journey.

Salt Lake City meets Calgary at 11 a.m. in today's opener. Lethbridge follows against Salt Lake City at 2 p.m. Boise tests Taiwan three hours later with the Cowboys again closing out the day's fare at 8 p.m., this time against Calgary.

Taiwan 7, Calgary 3

Tournament favorite Taiwan gave up three runs in the top of the first, but bounced back to down Calgary in a game shortened to five innings because of the two-hour time limit. Taiwan scored three times in the first and three more in the second.

Calgary committed three errors to none by Taiwan.

Calgary 9, Lethbridge 7

Calgary, its pitching a near disaster after replacing starter Jay Marasco to start the fifth inning, recovered well enough to hold off Lethbridge in an all-Canadian contest. Errors cost the Elks a two-run first-inning deficit. Calgary added another unearned run in the third and two more in the third on the last of six Lethbridge miscues.

Ryan Guenter, whose three hits included a pair of doubles, drove in two runs with a single in the Lethbridge third, then added two RBIs to lift the Elks within five runs, 4-9, in the fifth inning.

Boise 9, Lethbridge 2

Gem right-hander Brent Alvord yielded just three hits while striking out nine and battery mate Ben Florence provided all the offense Boise would need in getting past the Elks.

Boise carried a 1-0 lead into its half of the second inning, then loaded the bases with only one out. That set up Florence who drove a Ken Wright fastball to the fence, clearing the bases and sparking a five-run inning.

Ryan Young's ground ball and a single by Chris Ford accounted for Lethbridge's sole replies, those coming back-up-back in the bottom of the inning.

Florence finished 3-for-4 at the plate and Tom Peters produced a pair of run scoring singles to pace the Beasens.

Hobday clinches 2-shot lead in Senior Open

The Associated Press

PINEHURST, N.C. — Simon Hobday, playing at a record pace on rain-soaked greens, grabbed a two-shot overnight lead Friday in the storm-disrupted and uncompleted second round of the U.S. Senior Open.

The free-spirited South African was 9-under-par for the tournament — matching the Senior Open record for 36 holes — when he was halted by darkness at 8:30 p.m., EDT.

Now he will have to wait until Saturday to see if he can match or beat the record.

He was among 33 players still on the rain-soaked No. 2 course when darkness fell at the Pinehurst Country Club. They marked their positions and were due to return at 7 a.m. to complete second-round play.

The third round is set for Saturday afternoon.

An afternoon thunderstorm not only caused a 2-hour, 35-minute delay and forced an overnight suspension of play, it also contributed to an abrupt reshuffling of the leaderboard.

Jim Albis, who shared the first-round lead with Hobday, completed a 69 and was the clubhouse leader at 7-under-par 135, and Australian Graham Marsh was next at 136.

The rain softened the greens, smoothed out the spike marks and provided the late starters with a major advantage.

"No question about it," Marsh said after completing a bogey-free, 3-under-par 68.

"After the storm, it was throwing darts stuff out there. The late players definitely had a major advantage."

"It made the greens so soft that if you had your irons zeroed in, you could go right for the flag. But the biggest advantage was that the rains smoothed out the greens," he said.

The leaderboard reflected the advantage of the late starters as the top three players and six of the top nine played after the storm came.

Hobday, who won the Senior Players Championship last winter, was 4-under-par for the day and needed a par on the final hole for a 67.

A par also would enable him to tie the Senior Open record set in 1992 by Dave Stockton.

Hobday was less than enthusiastic about the early morning return.

"I'm not a pretty sight at 7 in the morning," he said, "but that's how the cookie crumbles."

"I would like to have finished. It was just getting better and better out there today and when you're 50 years old, you never know what tomorrow will bring."

Tom Weiskopf, also among the leaders, did not finish. Weiskopf, in the same threesome with Hobday, was 4-under-par for the tournament — 5-under for the round — with one hole to play.

Defending champion Jack Nicklaus and Ray Floyd each shot 68 and reached the tournament halfway point at 137.

Of the three at 139, only former amateur champion Jay Sigel, with a 66, played in the morning. His total was matched by Gary Player, who had a 67 after the rains, and Tom War-g, who had a 70.

Hobday broke out of a tie for the lead with a 5-foot birdie putt on the 10th, birdied the 12th from about six feet and the 13th from 15 feet.

A 20-footer on the 15th put him within reach of the Senior Open two-round scoring record.

Navratilova tries to defy English odds

The Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — Against big odds — the London bookmakers had it as 16-1 before Wimbledon began — Martina Navratilova bids for a 10th title in her final singles match at the All England Club Saturday.

Standing in her way is Conchita Martinez, who was born in 1972; the year before Navratilova played her first Wimbledon.

In her final season before retirement, the 37-year-old Navratilova arrived at Wimbledon a little shaky. She had washed out of the French Open in the first round, so disgraced by her play that she smashed her racket and dumped it in a trash can. She was seeded fourth here, largely on reputation and a history of flourishing on grass.

Then strange things began happening all around her. Promising Mary Pierce withdrew on the eve of the tournament. Top seed and defending champion Steffi Graf lost in the first round. No. 2 seed Arantxa Sanchez Vicario also lost. With emotional crowds urging her on, Navratilova weaved her way through the draw to reach her goal — one more final at Centre Court.

"This is what I wanted last year," she said. "I wanted that one more chance and I'm there. This is what I dreamed about. This is what I wanted — to go out in style. So I'm tickled."

It has not been an easy trip.

"I've won a lot of matches during this tournament where I just hung in and got the

Sampras wins despite sprained ankle

The Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — Pete Sampras shrieked in pain, his right ankle twisted, his easy run toward a second straight Wimbledon championship suddenly in doubt as he lay motionless on a hard, tawny patch of grass.

He rose slowly, dropped his first set of the tournament, then furiously pounded out aces and service winners to beat Todd Martin, 6-4, 6-4, 3-6, 6-3, and reach Sunday's title match against Goran Ivanisevic.

Unlike Martina Navratilova, thrilled to be playing in the women's final Saturday against Conchita Martinez, win or lose, Sampras will be satisfied with only one title.

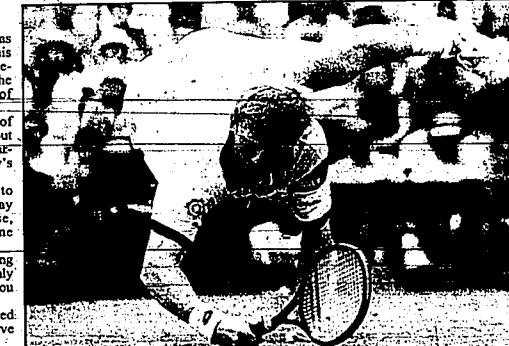

"There's a huge difference between winning and losing the final," he said. "Everyone only remembers the winner. You get so close, you want to be holding up that trophy."

The winner in the men's final, predicted Boris Becker, will be "the first one to serve 40 aces."

Becker may not be far off. The three-time champion fell the sting of 22 aces in a 6-2, 7-6 (8-6), 6-4 loss Friday to Ivanisevic, who has a total of 140 aces in his six matches. Impressive as that is, Ivanisevic is slightly off the pace of the record 206 aces while losing the final to Andre Agassi.

Sampras, seeking to become the first man to win back-to-back Wimbledon titles since Becker did it in 1985 and 1986, has notched 100 aces so far. But the key for him has been lining, producing tremendous serves to get out of trouble and close out sets as he did against Martin.

"I really didn't serve well the entire match, but I did serve well on the big points," Sampras said. "I was down five break points in the last game and came in with some really good, tough serves. On break points throughout the match, I really served well. But throughout the whole match, the rhythm wasn't there. It didn't click like it has been."

Germany's Boris Becker returns a shot to Goran Ivanisevic, Friday at Wimbledon. Ivanisevic won 6-2, 7-6 (8-6), 6-4.

Martin is tall and rangy, with long arms that allow him to cover the court almost from sideline to sideline while stationed in the middle. That size helps him just as much when he's serving and receiving.

"He's one of the best returners in the world, and he's 6-foot-6, and he's got a lot of wingspan, so it's tough to get a big ace by him," Sampras said.

Ivanisevic, at 6-4, is built much the same way, and he's going into the match brimming with confidence about playing Sampras.

"He's No. 1, but he's not unbeatable. I think I can beat him," said Ivanisevic, who will move up to No. 2 behind Sampras in the next ATP rankings on Monday no matter what happens in the final. "I have a good score against him (five wins to three). Pete can also beat me easy, but he doesn't like lefty serves here. He always has problems with the lefty. He's very confident at the moment. But I saw him in his match today, and he's also a human being. He can make mistakes."

"I'm playing much better than a year ago. I'm volleying much better and mentally I'm much more cooler. I let Agassi beat me. I mean, I beat myself."

Jazz release former NBA all-star Chambers Buhl wins 2 by 1 in rule at Legion tournament

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Former NBA all-star Tom Chambers was released Friday by the Utah Jazz following a rollercoaster 13th year in the league. The Jazz also released former all-star and two-time NBA MVP player of the year Mark Eaton, who sat out the season with injuries. The team extended qualifying offers to three other players, including rookie standout Bryon Russell, and decided to pick up an option year on the contract of backup point guard John Gentry. Chambers, 35, came to the Jazz as a free agent from Phoenix, where he played five years. "I didn't wanted a small forward with the ability to score consistently off the bench, especially from the perimeter to balance Karl Malone's inside game. "I wanted more of a scoring wing player who averaged 11.1 points and about 23 minutes per game. He averaged 3.2 points a game as Utah was eliminated by Houston in five games in the Western Conference finals this year. In the last two games, he was held scoreless in 18 minutes of play. "Chambers, a 1983 graduate of Utah, now becomes an unrestricted free agent. He played two years with San Diego and five with Seattle before joining Phoenix, where in 1990 he averaged 27.2 points a game while shooting better than 50 percent. In 1987, he was named the Most Valuable Player in the All-Star Game. He currently stands 27th on the career scoring list with more than 18,000 points. Eaton, 37, played 11 years with Utah, averaging 6 points, 7.9 rebounds and 3.3 blocks a game. He had three league four-doubles and is second only to Kareem Abdul Jabbar in career blocks. He was twice named NBA defensive player of the year.

BUHL — Central of Grand Junction, Colo., won a pair of run-rule games to highlight the Buhl American Legion baseball tournament Friday. Action continues today at 8:30 p.m. Five games will be played today and four more Sunday. Central blasted Buell 12-2 and Caldwell 14-2, with both games lasting only four innings. In the final game of the day, Buhl scored five times in the bottom of the sixth inning to top Buell 11-6. Winning pitcher Dan Strickler led off the third inning with a home run.

Lightfoot becomes free agent for Continental

MOSCOW (AP) — The Big Sky Conference's leading recruit, wasn't picked in the National Basketball Association draft this week, but he's looking at free agent tryouts, the Continental Basketball Association or even playing in Europe. "I haven't decided yet, but I thought about it (the draft) at all," Lightfoot said. "I've just been thinking about everyday stuff. To tell you the truth, I haven't even worried about it," Lightfoot said. Lightfoot in a three-year career with the University of Idaho scored 2,102 points in 91 games. He easily surpassed the Big Sky record of 2,019 points scored by Weber State's Bruce Collins through 1980. Larry Krzykowski of Montana scored two points less in a career that ended in 1985. Both played in 120 games, 29 more than Lightfoot. Lightfoot was a three-time all-conference selection and averaged 25.4 points per game last season, more than seven points ahead of No. 2 scorer Jim Potter of Idaho State. He also holds the Big Sky break," she said. "I am happy with how I was able to overcome the nerves and get my game together. I played the way I know I'm capable of playing. I've been doing it since I started being in some matches, but I have not done it consistently and I have not done it in big tournaments. "So I'm not going to say I'm proud of myself, but I'm pleased with the way I'm playing and the way I'm handling everything. "Only one more to go. "It will be the 32nd Grand Slam singles final for Navratilova, who has won 18 singles titles, half of them at Wimbledon. She won her record ninth Wimbledon title in 1990. The 18 championships tie her with Chris Evert, only one behind Helen Williams Moody and six behind Margaret Court. Including doubles, Navratilova has accumulated 55 Grand Slam championships, second only to Billie Jean King's 62. Martina is the first Spanish woman to reach the Wimbledon final since 1928 when Lili de Alvarez was runner-up to the third straight year. She has played in round and didn't lose a set in the last six years. "I've had a tendency in the past to really get down on myself and mope around," Sampras said of matches when his service was not going well. "Today, even though I lost the first set, I'm still up one set. You have to look at the positives. "That's exactly what he did, bearing down on returns to break Martina for a 3-1 lead, then zipping through the next two service games with the loss of only a single point. And when Sampras faced the five break points while serving out the set, he came up with the answers he needed: two aces, two service winners, and a backhand that kicked the chalk on the sideline.

Martina

Pepsi 400 promises excitement, drama

Knight-Ridder Newspapers

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — You want excitement?

Dale Earnhardt is starting from the pole in Saturday's Pepsi 400, attempting to make it two in a row. Rusty Wallace is going for his fourth straight, and points leader Ernie Irvan says those two are close enough that he can feel the hot breath on his neck.

You've seen drama? Earnhardt's won three of the 15 races in which he's started in the pole position. "It's getting ready to be four wins from the pole," Earnhardt said Friday. "I know it's been 20 years since anyone's won back-to-back pole races at Daytona, but we're here to beat the odds. That's what racing is all about."

Odds-wise, things look better for Wallace's chances of winning his fourth race in a row. That feat has been accomplished by three drivers in each of the last three editions of the race. Last year, Bill Elliott in 1992 and Harry Gant's four-for-September run in 1991. Wallace had three consecutive wins last year.

But there's the super-speedway factor working against him. Wallace has had plenty of car for the past few races at Daytona (and Talladega, NASCAR's other 2.5-mile track), but his luck has been incredibly bad.

Wallace has been involved in spectacular crashes at both tracks lately and has already wrecked in the two races this year at Daytona and Talladega.

"It seems like my car gets magnetized when I get out there," Wallace said. "Everybody wants to... either I get myself in a wreck, or I slow down to avoid a wreck and get rear-ended. If I can just stop that, I've got to tell you, I'm real optimistic for this race."

Irvan, on the other hand, has dropped 65 points in the last two races to second-place Earnhardt in the Winston Cup championship.

Gant sees end of racing career

Knight-Ridder Newspapers

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — Saturday's Pepsi 400 at Daytona International Speedway marks the beginning of the end for Harry Gant as a race driver.

"When Gant gets the green flag at 11 a.m. in the Winston Cup event, it'll be for the last time at the famous 2.5-mile track."

Gant, 54, a popular veteran from Taylorsville, is retiring at the end of the 1994 tour, so each time he visits tracks in the 16 races remaining after Saturday, it'll be his final at those layouts as a driver.

"I hadn't really thought much about all the last times coming up until now," chase. Irvan leads Earnhardt by a mere 78 points, and Wallace has closed to within 224.

Irvan has won three races this season, but has finished the two previous races on seven cylinders, seventh at Pocono and 18th at Michigan.

"The guys have been really working hard in the motor shop to find out what the problems were," Irvan said. "But the way it goes sometimes, they went so long without any problems, but sometimes little things just come up and bite you."

"But I really feel confident that they'll get any problem solved and we'll have really good stuff the rest of the year."

That's the kind of confidence, he said, that enables him to laugh at the rumors of his demise.

"They can talk all they want," Irvan said. "Only one thing matters as far as this championship goes. We can win it, or we can lose it. It doesn't really matter what anyone else does."

Irvan's Ford was good enough on Thursday to earn the fifth-place starting position, with only Earnhardt, rookie Loy Allen, Jimmy Spencer and Daytona 500 winner Sterling Marlin ahead of him.

Wallace, who has yet to win a pole in 1994, is solidly in the field in the 13th starting spot, and likes his chances.

The last six or seven races (at Daytona and Talladega), I've had a car. I thought was capable of winning the race, I really did," Wallace said.

"I've got a car here that's fast again. I've qualified better than I usually do."

"I don't expect to win four in a row, though as a driver I don't go to any race unless I think I can win it. I definitely have the car and the capability and the roll — the roll we're on — to do it. I hope it works."

Well, Earnhardt and Irvan — and about 40 others — hope it doesn't.

Pirates walk the plank in Cincy

PITTSBURGH (AP) — John Roper remained unbeaten this season, stopping Pittsburgh's eight-game home winning streak by constantly pitching out of trouble as the Cincinnati Reds beat the Pirates 4-2 Friday night.

Roper (5-0) pitched out of jams in the first two innings, then settled down to allow only solo homers by Orlando Merced and Andy Van Slyke as the Reds won for the ninth time in his 10 appearances. Jeff Brantley got two outs for his ninth save.

Thomas Howard's run-scoring double and Hal Morris' RBI single keyed a two-run fifth inning against Paul Wagner (5-6) as the Reds twice set up scoring opportunities with stolen bases.

Marlins 3, Braves 3, 11 innings — Kurt Abbott lined an RBI single in the 11th inning to lift the Florida Marlins to a 4-3 victory over the Atlanta Braves.

Abbott drove home Greg Colburn, who had led off with a single off reliever Chad Olson (8-1) and inspired a two-run fifth inning to second on Benito Santiago's sac-bat second and third with two out as the Cubs won for the eighth time in 12 games.

Doug Drabek (10-5) failed in his second straight attempt to win 11 games. Sammy Sosa hit his 17th home run for the Cubs.

Cardinals 11, Rockies 4 — ST. LOUIS, Mo. — Gregg Jefferies returned to the lineup after a six-game absence with a 4-for-4 day, including two home runs and three RBIs, as the St. Louis Cardinals beat the Colorado Rockies 11-4 Friday night.

It was the fifth straight victory for the Cardinals, who hit five home runs and set season highs for runs and hits (17). They've scored 37 runs during the streak. The Rockies have lost four straight and have allowed 20 homers in their last nine games.

Jefferies hadn't started since getting spiked in his right heel on a play at first base June 22, an injury that required six stitches. Four stitches were removed on Thursday but two were left in and trainers customized his glove by removing the back and replacing it with a plastic plate to relieve pressure.

American League

California Angels tied a major-league record by combining for 11 home runs Friday night in the Orioles' 11-1 victory.

Jeffrey Hammonds hit two homers for Baltimore and Mike Mussina got his 12th victory despite giving up five home runs in five innings. Rafael Palmeiro, Leo Gomez, Cal Ripken and Chris Heston also homered for the Orioles.

Rangers 10, Tigers 6 — ARLINGTON, Texas — Juan Gonzalez hit a grand slam in the eighth inning Friday night, helping Texas rally from a six-run deficit and leading the Rangers to a 10-6 victory over Detroit in the first of a doubleheader.

Texas snuffed a six-game home losing streak and won for only the fifth time in the last 16 games.

The Tigers had a 6-0 lead in the fifth, but Texas scored three runs in the fifth, one in the sixth and six in the eighth.

Athletics 6, Red Sox 3 — BOSTON — The resurgent Oakland Athletics won their eighth straight game Friday, beating the Boston Red Sox 6-3 with a five-run first inning and eight strong innings from Ron Darling.

The winning streak is Oakland's longest since it won 10 in a row in September 1993, and the A's broke an 11-game losing streak against the Red Sox. Boston has won just seven of its last 27 games.

Indians 6, Twins 1 — CLEVELAND — Jack Morris pitched 3 1/2 innings for his 25th career victory and Eddie Murray hit his 43rd career home run Friday night as the Cleveland Indians beat the Minnesota Twins 6-1.

Morris (7-5) struck out six, walked none and retired 15 of his last 19 batters. He tied his first complete-game victory since last Aug. 1. He improved to 6-1 in 10 starts since he shaved his mustache.

Boston Red Sox Manager Butch Hobson is restrained after being ejected from Friday's game against Athletics.

Griffey drives winning run to beat Yanks

NEW YORK (AP) — Ken Griffey drove in the winning run with a ninth-inning single and Jay Buhner ended the game with a great running catch as Seattle beat New York 4-3.

Bobby Ayala (3-1) picked up the win despite allowing the Yankees to tie it in the eighth inning. Xavier Hernandez (3-4) took the loss.

Griffey ripped Steve Howe's 0-2 pitch toward second baseman Dave Silvestri, who failed to get in front of the ball. It went into right field, scoring Rich Annett.

The Yankees had a chance in the bottom of the ninth when Bernie Williams walked with two outs. Randy Velarde, who had three hits, hit a liner to deep right, and Buhner leaped and grabbed it before crashing into the wall.

Royals 4, Blue Jays 3, 12 innings — KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Brian McRae hit a two-out RBI single in the 12th inning Friday night, giving the Kansas City Royals a 4-3 victory over Toronto and sending the Blue Jays to their 12th loss in 13 games.

McRae's single was the third straight two-out hit in the 12th off Woody Williams (1-3), who pitched four innings of relief.

Jeff Montgomery (2-3) pitched one-third of an inning for the win.

White Sox 8, Brewers 0 — CHICAGO — Jack McDowell threw a seven-hit shutout and Jeff Franco had five RBIs Friday night, leading the Chicago White Sox to an 8-0 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers.

Franco went 2-for-4 with a two-run homer, a two-run single and an RBI groundout. He hit his 13th home run, matching his career high.

Orioles 14, Angels 7 — BALTIMORE — The Baltimore Orioles and Defending champion Nick Price saved par on his fourth hole with a miraculous shot from the bunker Friday. It may have been the shot that saved his whole round.

Price went on to finish with his second straight 5-under-par 67 to take a one-stroke lead after two rounds of the Western Open.

"It was the biggest par of my life, one shot, 10,000. It set up my whole day," said Price, now 10-under on the 7,073-yard Dubsbreed course at Cog Hill Golf and Country Club.

Price's drive on the par-4, 416-yard fourth hole went into the water. After a drop into the rough, his third shot skidded into the bunker and then he blasted in from about 40 feet to save par.

Booyed by that shot, Price got an eagle 3 on the 325-yard fifth, the very next hole. He completed the round without a bogey on a windy, sunny day that dried out the greens.

Phil Mickelson, who shared the first-round lead with four others, trails Price by a single stroke after shooting a 3-under 69.

Two shots back at 136 are Larry Mize, Bill Glasson and Scott

Hoch. Mize had a 5-under while Glasson shot 70 to go with his opening-round 66 that had tied him for the lead. Hoch shot a 69 Friday.

There were also six others within three shots of Price, including three-time Western Open champion Tom Watson.

Watson's 67 on Friday included two bunkers, blasts far birdies, including an 80-footer on the par-5 15th.

Price may have known how Watson felt after making such an improbable shot.

"I feel like I stole something, like I got away with something, shouldn't have," Price said of his shot on No. 4.

"I didn't get greedy. I had some solid pars and that was a key to my round. The conditions made it really hard today. The greens and sand and you couldn't get the ball close."

Price said he will play the course not the competition the remaining two days, much as he did last year when he won the tournament.

Price is paired Saturday with the 24-year-old Mickelson. "Nick hits it so solid and so straight-on-a-string. When you see a good player making putts, he's got to do the same," said Mickelson, satisfied with his round Friday.

"I took advantage of the holes I was supposed to and then I got through the tough holes for par," he said.

Mize's round included a 30-foot chip for a birdie on the par-5 11th and a 20-foot bunker shot for another birdie two holes later. That was two tough shots in his first four holes after beginning on No. 10.

"That got me off to a nice start," he said. "I didn't get here until Tuesday and I played Wednesday and my putter felt good in my hands."

Glasson is playing in just his second tournament following two months vacation in which he relaxed and concentrated on his second career as an airplane pilot. He flies to most of his tournaments.

"I don't know what to expect from my game. I'm just getting back into it," he said after a round with four birdies and two bogeys. "I'm patient right now. I've been off two months and I'm mentally prepared to take it easy."

Cherry defies odds, returns to Seniors Open

PINEHURST, N.C. — When Corbin Cherry had his left leg blown off in Vietnam, the first thing he thought about was his golf game. How was he going to play on one leg?

Well, the former Army chaplain couldn't choke back tears Friday as he walked out to his 18th hole during the U.S. Senior Open at Pinehurst's No. 2 course.

Many in the gallery surrounding the green whispered as Cherry's score was posted. Some laughed. Others who knew his story gave him a round of applause after he had hacked his way out of some high rough en route to his fourth 7 of his kind of 95 — that's 24-over-par.

It didn't matter that he had shot a whopping 43-over-par for two rounds and missed the cut. He was here. He had defied the odds.

"We had people getting a little uptight out there today, and I guess I should have been one of them, but it's too great a privilege to get up and to throw clubs," Cherry said about playing in the major tournament.

Cherry's left leg was rubbed raw by two days of walking in 90-degree heat and humidity, but it was the moment that made the amateur qualifier from Mill Valley, Calif., sob like a baby, not pain or his rounds of 90 and 95.

"My wife tells me I shouldn't worry about being emotional but I am," Cherry said, while rubbing his eyes with a towel. "This is such a sense of fulfillment to be here with all these great athletes."

Cherry, who was a late entry as an alternate, hardly ever walks when he plays in San Francisco, where he is a minister in a veteran's hospital. He also changes a sock every three holes to absorb some of the shock and friction from his artificial leg.

But the pace of play prevented Cherry, 55, from changing his stumpy socks, and his leg became inflamed and eventually raw. But he trudged on.

"The man has the best attitude of anyone out here," said Jim Helton, who carried Cherry's bag for two days. "We caddied on the Senior Tour before and I have had some of the guys you (reporters) point as heroes and they are jerks. This guy is a saint."

He was a team captain at all times. He never complained. He never took it out on anybody else."

Cherry, who gave a signed ball to a boy with an artificial leg on the course, thought back to 1969, the year he lost his leg.

"I remember the day I got wounded," he said. "It was about a year after I had been blown off and I was lying a tourniquet on my leg. One of the sergeants from my unit got to me and he said, 'Are you OK?' I said the only thing I was concerned about was how was I going to be able to play golf with one leg. And he said, 'What!'"

"I didn't think about my family or my job or dying. I worried about how I was going to be able to play golf with one leg."

Despite the highest score in the tourney, Cherry was taking off qualifying for the event next year.

"I told one of the people in the gallery this was like a dream turned into a nightmare," he said. "But I was just joking. It is wonderful to be here."

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio (AP) — There is nothing quite like home cooking for Tammy Green, who shot a 5-under-par 67 on Friday for a one-shot lead in the Youngstown-Warren LPGA Classic at Avalon Lake Golf Course.

A 50-foot birdie putt on the 381-yard, par-4 ninth hole was a high-light for Green and helped her overcome bogeys at Nos. 6 and 8. She had four of her seven birdies on the back nine.

The 34-year-old, seven-year pro credits her improving performance to playing near home.

"It's all because of mom's home cooking," Green said. "Like her pot roast with potatoes and carrots, and Mom always makes that."

A week of rain gave way to sunny skies and warm temperatures Friday. But the greens remained damp and soft, enabling players to shoot for the pin on most approaches.

"It was pretty much like throwing darts," said Jean Zedlitz, one of six players a stroke off the lead. "I was just getting the yardage for the flag and throwing it right up there."

Julie Larsen, who also shot 68, agreed with Zedlitz's assessment. "I felt I could hit it right at the pin. The greens were nice and soft."

Also at 68 were Tina Tombs, Dottie Moehre, Colleen Walker and Caroline Keggi.

Zedlitz and Tombs said changes in their swings paid off.

Zedlitz had a backache early in the week which forced her into a slower backswing.

"Maybe I should do that for the rest of the year," said Zedlitz, yet to crack the top 20 in 1994.

Few favored among 189 cyclists for Tour title

LILLE, France (AP) — The Tour de France, cycling's most prestigious event, begins today with 189 riders, only two of whom are considered to have a chance for the title.

They are three-time defending champion Miguel Indurain of Spain and Tony Rominger of Switzerland.

World champion Lance Armstrong of the United States, who last year at 21 became the youngest rider to win a stage in the Tour de France, has been slowed by the after-effects of an insect bite on his leg. He is not considered a threat for the overall title, but is expected to challenge for stage victories.

A 4.3-mile sprint from the Grand Palais in Lille to the business complex of Eurallille begins the 91st Tour. The race ends July 24 at Paris after covering a course of 2,467 miles.

The first full stage is Sunday, 142 miles from Lille to Armentières. Indurain, solid in winning the Tour de France the past three years, has faltered a little in his placing, third in the Tour of Italy. But he said he would be ready for the Tour de France.

"The Tour is a completely different story, nothing like Italy," Indurain said following his defeat. "The strategy is different."

The winner of the Tour of Italy, Yevgeny Berzin, is not entered in the Tour de France.

Rominger has been strong throughout the season. He won his third Tour of Spain and has spent the past six weeks training in high altitude in the Rockies in the United States.

He was not among the leaders when the Tour of Switzerland ended last week, but he wasn't worried.

"Even if the Tour of Switzerland was just a preparation for me, I felt as strong as the others," Rominger said. "I pushed harder when it was necessary in the last hour of the race."

Armstrong, meanwhile, has missed training because of his injury.

Jim Ochowicz, head of the Motorola team, said Armstrong should be ready for the opening sprint.

"We feel it was in his best interest to stay off his feet," Ochowicz said Friday. "We saw an infection had started there and it looked very serious."

Wednesday he couldn't train with the team. It was a very serious problem two days ago. It looks like he'll be able to ride."

Last year, Armstrong dropped out before the end of the Alps, as his coaches had planned, but came back to win the one-day world championship in September.

Another American, Andy Hampsten, last year's eighth-place finisher, will miss the Tour this year. Hampsten fell in training last week, injuring his shoulders, bruising a knee and requiring three stitches.

"He blacked out and fell off his bike," Ochowicz said.

The battle for third place should be among Switzerland's Alex Zülle, Italians Gianni Bugno and Claudio Chiappucci and Armstrong's Motorola teammate, Alvaro Mejia of Colombia, who was fourth last year.

The prologue should give an early indication of the battle for the title. Indurain, not usually considered a speed specialist, won the prologue the past two years.

Security intensified at Olympic Festival

ST. LOUIS (AP) — At the Olympic Festival, it's 10 days of competition for athletes of all ages, in 37 sports ranging from archery to wrestling, in a relaxed, low-key setting. Well, fairly low-key.

This year, for the first time at the festival, photo credentials are required of athletes, volunteers and the media. Visitors to the athletes' village at Washington University are greeted by Highway Patrol troopers.

"It's a heightened awareness of security issues, obviously brought to the forefront with the Harding and Kerrigan incidents," Gary Alexander, director of Olympic Festivals for the U.S. Olympic Committee, said Friday.

"It's not a situation where we (the USOC) felt there was a huge need to beef up security. It came from more of an interest of having athletes feel comfortable. And it does. It adds a great deal."

Alexander said the local organizing committee was approached by two St. Louis-area men who wanted to help with security. Through their contacts, the men got others interested in helping out. And it built from there.

Mike Dyer, president of the local organizing committee, said the enhanced security efforts reflect "the overall things that are happening in sports these days."

"We want to protect the athletes; they're the reason we do all of this," he said. "It's not obstructive to the athletes. It's just secure. We're just trying to make sure it's a safe environment. The athletes can come and go as they need to, and the spectators are where they're supposed to be."

The festival began Friday with only one event, tennis, on the schedule. The opening ceremony under the St. Louis Gateway Arch — the event that officially kicks off the festival — was scheduled Friday night.

Things pick up Saturday with competition in 17 sports, including figure skating, boxing, basketball and swimming.

Dyer said that as of early Friday, the festival had generated $2,461,000 in ticket sales. He expects this festival will sell more tickets than any of the previous 12. The record of $3.4 million in sales was set in 1990 at Minnesota's St. Paul, but included revenue from the opening ceremony; admission was free Friday night.

"It's going to be an operational success; it's going to be an emotional success, and I'm happy to tell you, it's going to be a financial success," said Duane Christensen, chairman of the local organizing committee.

Dyer said that, "barring any unforeseen major expenses," organizers will be able to pay all the bills and perhaps have a little left over. "The icing on the cake would be something left over to help put on future events," he said.

As always, the Olympic Festival has drawn more than its share of unknowns among the 3,000 athletes who will compete since many of the sports' governing bodies use the festival as a developmental tool.

However, this fest also has attracted many well-known athletes. The festival roster includes more than 80 Olympians, led by Jackie Joyner-Kersey, who will compete in the 100-meter hurdles.

Among the other athletes of note are diver Kent Ferguson, who is competing in his ninth festival; archer David Pace and Rick McKinney, both four-time Olympians, and two-time Olympian Connie Price-Smith, who will compete in the shot put.

Soccer players World Cup seeks sports pantheon do it for kids

The Associated Press

That is a popular refrain in the soccer world, particularly in the United States, where soccer ranks second to basketball in youth participation.

Players at the World Cup take that policy seriously. The Belgian and German teams sponsor orphanages in Mexico, while several other national squads are making donations to charities benefiting children.

"It is important that we help," says German star Jürgen Klinsmann. "It is important that we give."

The Germans and Belgians began giving after the 1986 World Cup in Mexico.

Belgium had its best World Cup ever in '86, reaching the semifinals before losing to Argentina. The team was based in Toluca, where the poverty really struck a chord.

"The team officials and all the players, we were really moved when we saw all these poor children living in the streets," Belgian soccer federation president Michel D'Hooghe said.

Wanting to give something back to Mexico, the team decided to donate part of its earnings at the tournament to take care of some orphans. Accommodations were arranged and 26 street children found a home in Casa Hogar.

With bills reaching $177,000 a year to keep the project running, several fundraising drives were set up in Belgium. The "Red Devils' Casa Hogar Campaign" was so successful that a new $342,000 building was built and opened in 1992. It has 10 bedrooms, a library and a reading room, a large kitchen and a staff that includes three teachers.

Whenever Belgium participates in an international event, it uses funds from the tournament to help Casa Hogar. At the World Cup any Belgian who wins the FIFA MasterCard Award — given to the player providing the most memorable moment of each game — sends his money to the orphanage.

Already, $2,000 has gone to Casa Hogar in the name of Marc Degryse and Philippe Albert for winning the award.

The Associated Press

The big shots are there. So are the little guys. This World Cup isn't all that different from the NCAA basketball tournament.

Except, of course, the first world soccer championship ever held in the United States is an unknown commodity seeking a spot in the American sports pantheon. The NCAA is an established winner.

As an attention-grabber thus far, the World Cup has come through. Of course, not all the headlines have been positive — the drug suspension of Argentine superstar Diego Maradona and the flop of pre-tournament favorite Colombia come to mind.

Still, when the second round begins Saturday with defending champion Germany against Belgium at Chicago and Spain playing Switzerland at Washington, the tournament has many things going for it.

Such as the presence of the United States, which plays powerhouse Brazil at Stanford, Calif., on the Fourth of July.

Such as Saudi Arabia and Nigeria, like the U.S. team a decided underdog that came through the first round in style.

Such as a knockout game tied after 90 minutes of regulation and a full 30 minutes of overtime goes to a shootout. Americans could be entranced by that.

"Now it's elimination," Brazil coach Carlos Alberto Parreira. "Make a mistake and you're out."

"We're prepared," U.S. goalkeeper Tony Meola said. "I'm sure Brazil doesn't want to be part of a penalty kick shootout in the final 16. They want to win in regulation."

Yes they do. The Brazilians, under more pressure than anyone in this event — which everyone back home expects them to win playing majestic soccer — aren't real anxious to meet the hosts.

"They are a very difficult team; despite their lack of soccer tradition," said midfielder Dunga. "They are greatly improved, with players from Germany and England. The crowd will be with them."

The crowds also figure to embrace the Saudis and Nigerians, whose persistence and flair — if not their technical skills — were evident throughout an opening round filled with surprises.

Saudi Arabia plays Sweden on Sunday at Dallas. Nigeria takes on Italy at Foxboro, Mass., on Tuesday.

The Saudis already appear to have an edge. Just listen to the Swedes.

"I really didn't want to face the Saudis in the second round, because they're so used to playing in the heat," Kenneth Andersson said.

And Nigeria? After coming through in the final seconds of its ninth festival, win Group D, anything is possible.

"I have seen every team in this competition and no one is unbeatable," said Samson Siasia. "No one is unbeatable."

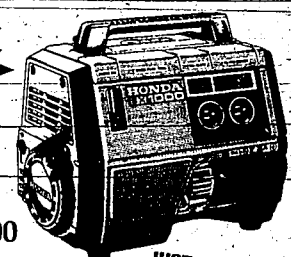

Only Brazil, Germany, Sweden and Spain went through the first round unbeaten. But Siasia is right, none of them looked invincible.

The other second-round games have Romania vs. Argentina on Sunday at Pasadena, Calif.; the Netherlands vs. Ireland at Orlando, Fla., on Monday; and Mexico against Bulgaria at East Rutherford, N.J., on Tuesday.

The art of nonverbal actions

It was well past bedtime when Dad finally arrived home after a frustrating day of single-handedly trying to keep the entire life insurance industry viable. The children were down for the night, and Mom was telling Dad about how cross Wanda Lynne had been and how she hoped both she and the baby would now get some much-needed rest.

Mom was just putting Dad's warmed-up pork chops on the table when a distinctive sound wafted down the huge staircase and into the kitchen: giggling, of the proto-age girl variety. Dad strode to the foot of the stairs. "Jean Ellen," he called out as loudly as he dared, without waking the baby, "are you in Helen's room again?"

"There was a pause, then a sheepish, 'Yes, Daddy. But we'll be quiet. I promise.'"

"See that you are. That baby needs her rest. And so do you. Now get to sleep."

"Yes, Daddy."

Joseph Walker
ValueSpeak

Dad returned to his pork chops. But he had scarcely laid down when Mom's rich milk gravy on a slice of her favorite bread was when another gale of giggles whirled down the staircase. He hurried halfway up the stairs.

"Girls!" he admonished sternly, his voice a bit louder and a lot more threatening. "If you wake that baby up, there's going to be serious trouble."

Jean and Helen struggled to compose themselves. "Yes, Daddy!" they sang out in a chorus that sent them filtering into their pillows again.

Confident that peace had been restored, Dad returned to the kitchen just as Mom was putting his meal back in the oven. "It's cold," she said. "It'll only take a..."

Mom was interrupted by the outbreak of the Mother of All Pillow Fights. It had started innocently. Jean thrust her pillow into Helen's face to smother her giggling. But Helen interpreted it as a declaration of war, and she replied with a pillow to Jean's head. Jean couldn't ignore such blatant aggression, so she retaliated and the battle was on.

But it stopped abruptly when the girls heard the ominous sounds of Dad's feet bounding up the stairs. They saw him really angry because he was taking them three at a time. They froze, confident that the next thing they would hear would be the sound of the Peary Gards swinging open to let them in.

Instead, they heard Dad's footsteps stop, followed by an agonizing moan. They saw him, followed by a frenzied series of thumps at the top of the stairs. You see, Dad had remembered Wanda Lynne, sleeping peacefully in the room next to Helen's. He knew that any form of punishment at this point would start the girls howling loud enough to awaken the entire house, including the cranky baby. So Dad gave up on his mission in the only way he could think of at the moment. He clenched his fists, gritted his teeth and started jumping up and down at the top of the stairs.

As it turned out, it was probably the best thing he could have done. When Jean and Helen peeked out their door and saw their controlled, dignified father literally hopping mad, his green eyes flashing and his red hair bouncing, it was enough to frighten them both into a sober night's sleep.

No matter how good we may be with words, we often teach our most powerful lessons without them. They're the way we act, the clothes we wear, our consideration of other people's rights and feelings all communicate far more clearly than we could ever hope to articulate verbally. Which is why we need to consider the unspoken messages we send out as carefully as we do the ones we speak.

Are we really teaching what we wish to teach when we speak out loud for hitting another? How seriously should we take the complaints of "concerned" citizens who don't bother to vote? And what do we make of corporations that claim to be discouraging young people from smoking and drinking while creating elaborate advertising campaigns for cigarettes and alcoholic beverages featuring cartoon characters and euphemistic sensibilities?

"The influence of man is not just in what he says but what he does," said the poet, T.S. Eliot. Mahatma Gandhi put it even more succinctly: "My life is my message."

If you're not sure that your life is being clearly seen and understood, it may be because you're sending out mixed messages. Take a close look at your actions and make sure they accurately reflect what you say you stand for. If not, it may be time to make some changes — even if you have to hop to it do it.

Church leaders ponder wonders of religious faith

By Frank E. Lockwood
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — When Jesus Christ sent out his disciples, he created one of history's most remarkable job descriptions. "Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils," he told them, according to Matthew 10:8.

For 2,000 years, Christians have been invoking the name of Jesus while seeking release from physical affliction.

But few healings have gotten more attention — or raised more eyebrows — than the purported healing of heavyweight boxer Evander Holyfield last month at an evangelical rally in Philadelphia. Holyfield, an Olympic gold medalist and former professional champion, had been recently diagnosed with a heart ailment that threatened to end his career in the ring.

The faith healer who ministered to Holyfield, charismatic TV evangelist Benny Hinn, accepted a $265,000 donation from Holyfield soon after the alleged miracle occurred.

And, though doctors noted "some improvement" in the former heavyweight champion of the world, they refused to proclaim him "healed" — or ready for the ring.

The doctors aren't the only skeptics. Hank Hanegraaff, president of the California-based Christian Research Institute, said Hinn and his associates become "strangely elusive" when investigators seek evidence of medically-verifiable miracles.

Locally, Christian ministers aren't about to declare Holyfield healed, but many who work and live in the Magic Valley say they've seen God move in miraculous ways.

One of those ministers is Assembly of God pastor Dave Long of Hazelton. When he saw a 16-year-old daughter, Rebekah, who was "born with spinal meningitis," he said, "I was born with spinal meningitis." A doctor told her parents they would know within the first 48 hours of her life whether or not she would live or die. The doctor also told the Longs live or die: "Sixteen years later, she's still here."

And yet, in Long's words, "I don't know where she is. Dave Long shares his belief in God's healing power."

His belief, Long worries about evangelists who make their livings from faith-healing ministries.

"Some of them seem to have lost touch with the people and with the simplicity of Christ," Long said. "There's some chicanery, some chicanery out there."

The purpose of healing ministries shouldn't be to make millions or capture the spotlight, Long said.

"(When people come for healing) I got my bread, even little children pray," he said. "I want to go, everybody praying, because I want people to know that God can heal."

Pastor Dave Long and his wife, Alice believe in miracles when they look at their daughter, Rebekah who was born with spinal meningitis. The Longs feel with the belief in God's power their daughter survived.

When praying for the sick, Long relies on James 5:14-15: "Is any sick among you? Let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up."

That's a familiar verse to the Rev. James C. Hicks, too. The retired prizefighter and pastor who lives in Jerome and ministers part-time at the First Assembly of God Church of Twin Falls, said he saw incredible miracles of healing on mission in Tonga.

"Some of the things that we've seen, a lot of people wouldn't believe," Hicks said. "When you see dead people raised, when you've seen blind eyes opened, the doubts and disbelief melt away."

And God's power isn't limited to foreign soil, Hicks said. While ministering in Yakima, Wash., he played a seemingly unsuccessful-for-dying woman.

The doctor examined her, closed her eyes, and pulled the sheet over her head," Hicks said.

After a physician declared the woman dead, and summoned morticians, the woman revived, according to Hicks. She was later released and testified at Hicks' church.

Hicks said he is well aware that such stories can offend 20th century sensibilities, but he isn't one of the doubters. "I've been there," he said.

Pastor Scott Thomas, of Cornerstone Baptist Church in Twin Falls, is another pastor who preaches God's power to heal. But, after witnessing several faith-healing services, he said, he's "leery" of self-proclaimed faith healers.

"God does heal, but he chooses who he heals," Thomas said. "For an individual to stand up and say 'You will be healed' is not valid."

This doesn't mean healings never occur in faith-healing services, said Thomas, who noted that many people have psychosomatic illnesses that can be cured by faith healers.

"If they believe, they might really be healed, but it was all in their mind to begin with," he said.

God gave the apostles the power to heal, as a sign to give validity to what they were teaching, but now that the New Testament has been given to the church, the gifts of healing and of speaking in unknown tongues are no longer given to men, Thomas contends.

The Baptist approach to healing is somewhat different than Catholic doctrine. Father James Keller, a Catholic priest at St. Charles Borromeo in Hailey-Bellevue, regularly performs "the sacrament of anointing the sick." During daily mass, Catholics ask God to touch those who need healing.

Christians take the "power of Christ" and use it to minister to the afflicted, Keller said. When someone is suffering, Keller prays with them and with their families. He asks not only for healing, but that the skills of the doctors will be used for the glory of God.

Prayer for healing also plays an important role at the Reformed Church of Twin Falls. When someone needs healing, said Pastor Brian Vriesman, a prayer chain that stretches across the Magic Valley is activated.

"Within an hour, we can have 60 or 70 families praying," he said.

Vriesman's church also holds monthly, 24-hour prayer vigils.

Though Vriesman said there's "evidence of fraud" in the realm of faith healing, he's still an advocate of divine healing.

"I've witnessed things personally that I can't explain outside the realm of faith," he said.

Members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints also believe God miraculously heals. But Twin Falls Stake President Monte Carlson was troubled by the media reports involving Holyfield and the faith healer.

Carlson said he can't speak for all Mormons on the topic, but he is skeptical about instances of healing for show" and very suspicious whenever money is involved.

"We believe medical healings do take place and we testify to each other about such instances in our own lives, but we deem such things as really rather sacred," Carlson said. "We don't go around testifying about such things to outsiders. Rather we kind of keep it sacred and confidential."

To Mormons, healing is "a sign of the priesthood and a sign of the true church."

But Carlson doesn't believe you have to be male — or Mormon — to hear from the Almighty.

He points to James 5:16: "The effectual, fervent prayer of a righteous (person) availeth much."

It's a matter of faith. "It would be believe that all healing is predicated on a person's faith," Carlson said.

Democrats suddenly begin counterattack on right

By Jill Lawrence
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — For months, President Clinton and his party have turned the other cheek in the face of scorching, sometimes outlandish onslaughts by religious and cultural conservatives.

But within the past two weeks, the president, his surrogates and Democratic consultants have gone out front with criticism of "the radical right" and its "extreme agenda."

The apparently uncoordinated counterattacks signal a new and potentially risky strategy of Democratic engagement. Even carefully calibrated critiques are being characterized by conservatives as religious bigotry.

Oliver North, who won the Republican nomination for Senate in Virginia with strong backing from religious conservatives, applied the phrase "hostile night to Clinton's outburst last week against 'violent personal attacks' cloaked in the mantle of religion."

"I think that's a great case of religious bigotry," North said on CNN's "Larry King Live." "I think that the comment by President Clinton, and it was echoed by other leaders of that party, was a direct attack on people who work hard, pay the taxes and go to church."

Religious conservatives have been gaining influence in state Republican parties. Clinton, meanwhile, has been turned as anti-family, immoral and worse in conservative religious publications and religious broadcasts almost since the day he took office.

Still, the administration started off in a conciliatory mode. David Wilhelm, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, spoke last year to the million-member Christian Coalition. Clinton invited evangelical clergy to the White House.

Analysts point to several developments that may have triggered the Democratic counteroffensive: the approach of midterm elections; the dominance of religious conservatives in Minnesota, Texas and Virginia; and a videotape that accuses the president of murder.

The tape, produced and sold by the Rev. Jerry Falwell, features the stunning — and unsubstantiated — charge that the Clintons arranged the murder of an Arkansas man who allegedly had a fire documenting extramarital affairs by Some recent attacks on President Clinton by conservative activists.

The Rev. Jerry Falwell is publicizing unsubstantiated charges against the president of murder and violence in a videotape called "Bill and Hillary Clinton's Circle of Power." In the tape, produced by Falwell, Jerry Parks accuses Clinton of arranging the murder of his father, an investigator who allegedly had a file on alleged extramarital affairs by Clinton.

"Yes, They Are Guilty," says a headline in the April issue of The American Conservative magazine. "When they got into financial trouble with Whitewater and other deals, they used laws to steal from the taxpayers. And, while we doubt that Hillary is much of a wife — or Bill much of a husband — there is no excuse for a married governor to be using state troopers to facilitate extra-marital affairs."

Christian publishing attracts attention

Colorado Springs Gazette Telegraph
The Christian publishing industry is attracting growing mainstream attention as people attending the 45th annual Christian Booksellers Association convention this week in Denver.
Simon & Schuster, a New York-based publisher, bought both space for the "first time at this year's convention," which ends Thursday at the Colorado Convention Center.
"We believe this is an important market, and we needed to come and find out more about it," said Nina Olmsted, a spokeswoman with the firm.
The firm is one of hundreds of exhibitors marketing products ranging from books and Bibles to new cushions and anti-Bill Clinton videos among more than six acres of booths.
Representatives of the booming Christian music industry are especially upbeat.
This week Christian stores will begin transmitting electronic sales data to SoundScan, a company that compiles figures for bestseller lists used by Billboard magazine and throughout the industry.
Wes Farrell, chairman of the Benson Music Group, said he believes that Christian recordings will begin appearing on national album charts, generating increased sales and exposure for Christian artists.
"It will just be the beginning of dramatically increased attention for our artists, many of whom outside some of the mainstream artists," said Farrell.
The convention is the biggest event of the year for the $3 billion Christian retailing industry.

Thanks for March for Jesus coverage

I want to thank each and everyone who covered the March for Jesus. My Lord and my God will be very pleased with your coverage as I am.
I want to deal with small towns not being safe from crime because the Holy Bible, God's divine word, covers every aspect of human need and understanding. My Lord Jesus Christ invites every single one of his children to take up their cross and follow him.
Jesus said, "I am the bread of life. I will never turn away anyone who comes to me, for I am the living God, sent from Heaven to do the will of God the Father, that all who see the son and believe in him should have eternal life, and I will raise them to life on the last day."
Turning our lives over to Jesus is a personal decision that each and everyone has to make. If we choose not to accept Jesus Christ as our Lord and savior, we will pay the price of sin—and that is death.
The Bible uses many words to describe sin: It is rebellion against God; failing to do what God requires; God put on earth Adam and Eve. He created them, blessed them, put them over all his creations and forbid them to eat of the tree that gives knowledge.
Human nature chose the way of sin and knowledge. Only Jesus Christ can set us free from the bondage of sin when we obey his holy and wisdom, the divine truth found in the Bible.

Missing the point of previous letter

I must reply to Ron Blizard's letter, as he missed the point completely when he read my letter with the heading, "Science, religion are good mix for life."
Instead, he writes about miracles and states that natural science can never disprove the existence of miracles.
The word "miracle" is usually used by someone who does not know the answer or understand why some things happen as they do. Therefore, what is a miracle to some people would not be a miracle to everyone else.
Mr. Blizard, there always have been some people who know things and some people who believed things. There is a great difference between the two; you can't prove or disprove that two and two makes four to someone who hasn't learned how to count.

Initial impression is lasting

First impressions do last. Experiences last even longer.
A year after my arrival in Jerome, a wonderful sensation confirmed by the experience of being welcomed—is still blinking in my heart.
People inside and outside the Catholic community gave me a warm sign of Christian hospitality. And when I hear about the "Tragic Valley," I tell myself that "Cordial Valley" would be a more appropriate title.
The wind is one of the Bible's favorite symbols of the spirit of God. Under this sign, the world was created (Genesis 1:2) and the church was born (Acts 2:1-13). I find this element in our valley as a powerful prophecy of our common calling from God: to become one family by receiving and breathing the same "wind."
I see the vocation of all churches to be "houses for all who seek God." To receive all in the name of and with the spirit of our God and to build out of many and different peoples the very family of God is their very mission and identity.

About Father Jesus Camacho

Father Jesus Camacho is the pastor at St. Jerome's Catholic Church in Jerome.
He was born in Guadalajara, Mexico, in 1944 and ordained in Veracruz, Mexico, in 1975. He came to Idaho in 1981 as a loan for the Roman Catholic Diocese of Boise. He was assigned to Blackfoot, Boise and Homedale before coming to Jerome.
Camacho learned English at the Mount Angel Seminary in Oregon and has studied the culture and history of the Mexican-American people in San Antonio, Texas. He also studied radio and audio telecommunications in Dayton, Ohio, and earned a master's degree in multicultural theology and ministry from the Jesuit School of Theology in Berkeley, Calif. Since arriving in Idaho, he has been broadcasting a weekly radio program in Spanish titled "La Voz Catolica de Idaho" (The Catholic Voice of Idaho).

The winds of hospitality blew upon me. Hopefully, the same winds will blow upon everyone else who comes to this "Cordial Valley."
Thank you very much. Muchas gracias. Obrigado. Blessed be God and the people of the "Magie Valley."

Artist Mauricia Jenkins works on a mural of black Christ at Ebenezer A.M.E. Church in Fort Washington, Md.

More churches depict Christ as black

By Laurie Goodstein
The Washington Post
WASHINGTON—The outstretched hand of Jesus is taking shape in a new African Methodist Episcopal Church, still under construction in Fort Washington, Md., where Jenkins finishes here, he will begin work on several more recent requests from ministers eager to have black-Christ paintings and murals in their churches—more requests than ever before.
Black-Christ images are appearing in stained-glass windows, statues, murals and paintings in churches from New Jersey to California. But the trend signals a change much deeper than the color of Jesus's skin.
"We look at this as a major movement," Jenkins said. "The slave trade took away our culture and our religion, and now this is a natural progression for the black church to revitalize the African traditions that were taken away."

Entire congregations turn out for church dressed in African finery on "African Awareness Sundays." Even at regular Sunday services, Ghanaian kente-cloth outfits are replacing Easter frocks and somber suits.
The impact of these changes is still being felt, but one is already clear: Some African Americans who dismissed Christianity years ago as a "white man's religion" are now returning, captivated by Pentecostalism, N.J., "these are people who were born in the Christian faith, then became alienated from the church because they saw it as irrelevant."

Many black churches remain untouched by the movement, and in many it has met resistance. Nevertheless, the Afrocentric approach—which puts Africa at a heart of history and culture, shunning the Western bias toward Europe as the cradle of civilization—is being adopted by individual churches of many denominations in a variety of ways.

The difference now is that Afrocentric scholars are fast popularizing research that they say proves that the "Jesus of history" was a man of color—an "Afro-Asiatic Jew." Ministers who say they would have been uncomfortable having black-Christ images in their churches even five years ago now do so, saying such depictions are "historically accurate."

While he was in prison, Bakker was divorced by his wife of 30 years, Tammy. She later remarried.
Bakker, 53, was convicted in October 1989 of defrauding followers who sent him $148 million for partnerships in PTL's Heritage USA vacation park and retreat in Fort Mill, S.C.
Bakker's original 45-year sentence was reduced by an appellate judge, who said a federal judge made inappropriate remarks about the case.
Clinton—The Freedom Alliance, headed by former GOP Sen. Steve Symms, tells potential contributors the Clinton White House is working day and night to implement a "dangerous anti-family agenda" and "blackmail the Boy Scouts into accepting homosexual scoutmasters."
However, it's not clear what Clinton stands to gain by drawing attention to the battering he and his aides are taking in conservative broadcasts and direct-mail appeals.
Exhibit A is the "Falwell videotape, once familiar only to devotees of his 'Old Time Gospel Hour' and readers of a few conservative publications. But since Clinton remarked on it as 'scurrilous and false charges,' it's been a staple of columns, articles and talk shows.

When Jenkins finishes here, he will begin work on several more recent requests from ministers eager to have black-Christ paintings and murals in their churches—more requests than ever before.
Black-Christ images are appearing in stained-glass windows, statues, murals and paintings in churches from New Jersey to California. But the trend signals a change much deeper than the color of Jesus's skin.

Episcopal bishops ask flock to embrace gays, lesbians

By David Briggs
The Associated Press

In 1991, a Presbyterian committee created an uproar when it said sex outside of marriage between genuinely consenting adults was okay. Its report was overwhelmingly rejected at the church's annual meeting.

Last fall, when an Evangelical Lutheran Church in America (not Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod) committee on sexuality released a draft statement urging members to challenge traditional biblical condemnations of homosexuality, the church reacted to the subsequent backlash by appointing a new writing panel and assuring members that any official policy would stand on biblical foundations and the confessional tradition of the church.

Now U.S. Episcopal bishops are trying what they hope will be a less contentious approach to sexuality with a draft statement that asks the church to uphold an ideal of lifelong faithful unions for both heterosexual and homosexual couples, and greet gays and lesbians with hospitality rather than hostility.

"As it can be for heterosexual persons, the experience of steadfast love can be for homosexual persons an experience of God," the bishops say in the fourth draft of their proposed pastoral teaching on human sexuality.

At the same time, the document also relates traditional church teaching that sex is reserved for heterosexual marriages and stops short of advocating changes in church law on the issues of gay ordinations or the blessing of same-sex unions.

"The document doesn't take a stand one way or the other, basically," said the Rev. Jane N. Garrett, a member of the drafting committee. "It leaves everything open for a continuation of the dialogue."

But Bishop William Frey, dean of Trinity Episcopal School for Ministry, said presenting different points of view is not pastoral teaching, but a reflection of the chaos in the church on these issues today.

"The nicest thing I can say is that parts of it remind me of theology by Oprah and Donahue," he said. "In its present form, it would be the most embarrassing document the bishops have ever produced."

In an attempt to avoid the Lutherans' fate, the bishops had decided to bypass the pews in the drafting process by keeping the document confidential until the denomination's General Convention beginning Aug. 24 in Indianapolis. But the fourth draft of the report was released recently by Episcopalians United, a conservative group.

"Several bishops and laity from the theological left and right have questioned this clandestine process," said the Rev. Todd Weitzel, the group's executive director. "It seems the only people pleased with this secrecy are those who have the most to gain from it."

A drafting committee is now polishing up a fifth draft that is expected to be circulated to all the bishops within a couple of weeks.

Committee members would not comment on the contents of the final draft, but said it would not shake up the church.

"It's not going to be a particularly radical document," said Bishop Frank Allen of Atlanta. "If people want to get rattled by it, they can get rattled by something else."

In the Episcopal Church, the denomination's legislative body has declared both homosexuals are children of God who have a full and equal claim with all other persons upon the church and that physical sexual expression is appropriate only within the lifelong, monogamous union of husband and wife.

The church has said it is not appropriate to ordain practicing gays or lesbians, but several bishops have gone ahead and publicly or quietly ordained homosexuals.

At the 1991 General Convention in Phoenix, the House of Bishops was ordered to prepare a pastoral teaching on sexuality.

The fourth draft of "Continuing the Dialogue: A Pastoral Teaching of the House of Bishops to the Church as it Considers Issues of Human Sexuality" notes both traditional church teachings that sex is appropriate only within marriage and the expertise of gays and lesbians identifying their love with Jesus Christ in long-term, committed relationships.

In a section on Scripture, two interpretations are offered. One interpretation said the biblical texts condemning homosexuality should be taken at their word. "Sexual activity of any kind comes to be seen as sinful, and homosexual practice as especially dishonorable."

The other interpretation said the texts can also be viewed in the larger context of the spirit of the law upholding love for all and that texts written in a period with a different understanding of homosexuality should not be used "to demean and perhaps exclude a whole group of disciples."

The United Church of Christ is the only major Protestant group to allow the ordination of active homosexuals.

Sewage sours some creek baptisms

By Allen G. Broed
The Associated Press

META, Ky. — When it came time for Christine Murphy to be baptized, the water in the creek was so foul that she had to be baptized in a tub.

"You just feel like you're more closer to God in the creek than you would inside a church," said the 21-year-old Pike County woman, who was dunked in the creek in the waters of Johns Creek. "It's just like being in a bathtub in the other place."

But if cleanliness is truly next to godliness, a lot of pastors say, creek baptisms are not the place to go any more.

There's none of them fit to baptize a dog in, to be honest with you," said the Rev. James Kelly Caudill, pastor of the Tom's Creek Free Will Baptist Church at Nippa in nearby Boone County.

"It's sad to say, but it's true," he said. "Evangelical churches have been slowly switching from outdoor baptisms to indoor ceremonies during the last few decades, mostly for convenience sake. But open dumping of raw sewage from remote households seem to have speeded up the changeover in some areas, pastors say."

"My reasoning was if you walk into a river or stream and you've got dead animals, you've got open sewers and all other types of debris," said Pastor Dick VanHose of the Salyersville Free Will Baptist Church, who has been moderator of the Kentucky State Association of Free Will Baptists for the past six years.

"That just in my opinion makes it unsafe to take someone for water baptism."

About 29 percent of the nation's stream miles were at least partially unfit for swimming because of pollution, according to the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's National Water Quality Inventory, released in March. The report said another 3 percent were threatened if no pollution-control actions were taken.

In Kentucky, 82 percent of the stream miles assessed in 1992-93 were at least somewhat impaired, said spokeswoman Maleva Chamberlain of the state Division of Water. Most of that was because of fecal-matter contamination, she said.

"So, you've got a 50-50 chance of being exposed to something that could make you sick," she said.

But the Bible says Jesus Christ was baptized in the flowing waters of the Jordan River. And there are some denominations for whom water quality isn't a real issue.

"Don't mind the stuff that's in it," said Elder Joe Evans at the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. "It's not what the water is, it's what you're doing."

baptism is all about — to clean your body — Jesus has nothing to do with pollution."

"I believe God makes it pure when one of his goes in," said Elder John Thacker of the Philadelphia Old Regular Baptist Church at Pompey in Pike County, near the Kentucky-Virginia border.

Evans said stream pollution is "a part of life" in Appalachia.

"You've got everybody up and down this creek running their sewers in it," he said. "What are you going to do? They've got no place else to put it. It's a vast problem."

But the problem is not so widespread that it has caught the attention of national church leaders.

"That's the first I've heard of it," said Jack Williams, convention coordinator of the National Association of Free Will Baptists in Antioch, Tenn.

Others question whether it is a problem at all.

"The act of baptism is so quick that there's not much exposure to it whatever you do," said Mark Compagner, vice president of the Southern Baptist Convention in Nashville, which has 15 million members nationwide.

"You lay them back into the water and lift them up," he said.

"It's not as though you're immersing them in a ton of period of time and can soak in whatever is there."

Prime time television takes religious twist

By Lynn Elber
The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Television has suddenly gotten religion.

"Picket Fences" grapples with issues of faith. "L.A. Law" introduces an evangelical attorney into its secular ranks. On "Northern Exposure," a rabbi counsels a Jewish man vexed by an interreligious romance.

"Christy," the story of a young teacher at a Quaker-run school in Appalachia, finds a home on TV after a producer's fruitless, two-decade quest to turn the popular Catherine Marshall novel into a movie.

"Something's happening out there," says E. Brent Bozell, chairman of the conservative Media Research Center, which in a study of 1993-TV programs found religion to be nearly invisible.

"It has been a year when religion and faith were accessed a lot more than we intended at the beginning," says David E. Kelley, creator of "Picket Fences," the CBS drama about a small town's life and residents.

The reasons cited for the surge vary, as do the reactions to it. Some religious leaders consider the attention a mixed blessing. It is also a clear change from past TV seasons.

Media Research Center's study found religion was mentioned or dealt with just 116 times in more than 1,000 hours of entertainment programming in 1993. Believers were depicted negatively 68 percent of the time, the study found.

In other years, television usually ventured no further than shows that were cosmetically religious but devoid of religious content.

Series like "Amen" and "Father Dowling Mysteries" used their characters' faith merely as window dressing. Serious consideration of religious values was absent.

Some suggest that America was finally ready — if not overdue — for such depictions of faith on TV.

"It's not surprising that we're seeing a reaching out for examples after the excesses of the 1980s," says Ken Wiles, producer of CBS' "Christy."

"I think reality is hitting Hollywood," Bozell says, "in the sense that Hollywood can't escape society and the devastating condition of society. All they have to do is get in their limousines and drive a few blocks to the inner city, South Central L.A."

Alexander Powers, who plays the evangelical Jane Halliday on NBC's "L.A. Law," says she's gotten letters praising the character's devout, intelligent and nonpreachy nature.

"I became aware of the need for this type of character," he says. "There are so many Christians who feel they don't have a voice in the media or on television, and I think a lot of people related to her."

Networks, finding old criticism over TV violence, also are seen as eager to move toward what Bozell deems "family values" programs that embrace moral work in "Picket Fences."

"We don't sit back here as producers and say it's time to start proffering family values, so much as you are trying to proffer entertainment drama that may provoke people to think and feel," he says.

"Religion and faith" have given us the occasion to explore our characters further," Kelley says.

The network has been supportive of the nonsecular story lines, he says.

"We rarely try to declare final judgments on any issue, so maybe we've been vested with some trust by the network," he says. "We never come at religion or faith from the perspective of endorsement of one discipline versus another."

Despite its thoughtful approach, the series has drawn criticism. Catholic leaders objected to an episode in which a judge chastises a priest for the church's birth control stance.

But Father Gregory Coiro, of the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Los Angeles, generally credits the show with sensitivity to religious issues. He reserves harsh words for the series' handling of the "Roseanne" episode.

A recent "Roseanne" on ABC, he says, showed a young son struggling to understand faith and his family's lack of religious commitment, but coming in for ridicule as well as compassion.

Meanwhile, mom Roseanne is ripping off a company that mistakenly filled a mail order with, and getting away with it, says Coiro says — disingenuously non-Christian behavior.

Also disquieting is the lack of the simple gestures of faith that are a part of many people's everyday life, he says.

"In most programs, we never see families going to church or synagogue," Coiro says. "We never see them saying grace before meals or showing any kind of devotion."

"If a character is facing some sort of crisis, there are millions of people who, in that situation, the first thing they would do is pray."

Bozell says the television industry is so careful to avoid offending its mass audience, and so wrapped up in its own view of the world, that it can't help but approach the topic gingerly.

He recalls complimenting one network executive on a new family oriented show with religious themes and mentioning a study showing that 91 percent of Americans believe in God.

"Look, we're not talking God here — we're talking religion," the alarmed executive replied.

Vacation Bible school still going strong

By Tom Schaefer
Knight-Ridder News Service

Shorts from the world of religion:

VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL: I still remember going to Vacation Bible School as a youngster, and for the most part, having a good time.

There were handicraft projects (Popsicle sticks were the primary resources for our nouveau-art) movies and filmstrips (no videos back then), Kool-Aid and cookies (the chocolate chips were always the first to be devoured), and lots of Bible stories. Oh, yes. There was also blond, blue-eyed Janet Gill, but that's another story.

This summer, 100 years after the first Vacation Bible School was organized in this country, the schools are still going strong. To celebrate the centennial, the National Council of Churches has put together a packet of useful information. To get a packet, send a self-addressed stamped envelope with three 29-cent stamps to: Art Munson, Judson Press, P.O. Box 851, Valley Forge, Pa. 19482-0851.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH: The national convention of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) was recently in Wichita, Kan. Lots of wrangling and handwringing, charges and counter-charges over several hot issues. Like most mainline Protestant churches, the Presbyterian Church is going through a real identity crisis.

One of the more telling incidents that shows how a once-unity church has fractured: As reported by The Wichita Eagle, the 60-member Evangelism and Church Development Committee met — and had virtually no agenda.

Presbyterians were packed in another committee room speaking out on the controversial Reimagining conference that was a primary focus of the week-long gathering. Meanwhile, the subject of missions and evangelism — matters that a growing church should be discussing — was largely ignored.

The evangelism committee chairwoman said the lack of interest in her committee's work was a "sorry and sad indictment" of the denomination's priorities.

GROWING OLD: Growing old in America is increasingly thought to be a fate worse than death. (Is that why the Jack Kevorkians of the world are in the ascendant?)

The thinking used to be that you retire at age 65 — earlier, if you're lucky — and then kick back and do what you've always wanted to do.

Today, you are fortunate to hold on to your job until age 65, and then you may find that you have new and unexpected responsibilities. (Are you one of the many who are raising their children's children?)

For those fortunate enough to have fewer responsibilities, Drew Leder, professor of philosophy at Loyola College in Maryland, thinks that older adults should consider a few lessons from Hindu cultures.

In the newsletter "Centerline," Leder said Hindu tend to look at aging as a time for spiritual development, which made him wonder "if we could come to view aging more in this light."

Leder began to seek inspiration in the monastic tradition and retreat centers and came up with a new idea for older people to restructure their lives.

"I envision individuals coming together in a residential setting to support one another in spiritual development," he said. "I would hope for a strong sense of community loneliness is often the greatest cause of suffering and deterioration among the elderly."

Besides being a place for contemplative withdrawal, it also might offer opportunities for service — for example, staffing a day-care center or mentoring young people.

Instead of thinking of older people as dependent and in need of care, Leder said people need to look to them for their wisdom and for what they can still contribute to society.

Many communities already have retreat centers that provide a range of opportunities for both young and old.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE

Bobby Wolff

"He is the best actor who can steal within fewest points of the wind, and exact a motive power of the greatest obstacles."

—Thoreau

West and South are at the helm for today's game. If South gets careless and finds trouble, he can recover by making an inspired play. But only if West misses an inspired play of this man.

So South wins the first heart and tries two top diamonds. West's discard brings bad news. South can no longer cash diamond winners without giving East the lead for the fatal heart switch. So South leads a club, hoping for luck in that suit. Dummy's jack wins as West plays his nine, and with no way back to his hand to lead clubs again, South returns a desperate low club to West's remaining ace. Luckily, four club winners are assured, giving South his nine winners.

How does West beat the game after South's careless start in diamonds? West must discard his club ace on the second high diamond. Dummy's club can no longer run without giving the lead to East, and the game must fail.

What careful plan by South ensures the game? Placing the club with West because of his opening bid, South wins the first heart and leads a club to dummy's jack, holding the trick. South leads a diamond back to his ace and plays a second club toward dummy. West's ace appears and South now has clear sailing to land his game.
