Carter mission tries luck in Haiti

Haitians pile aboard a truck at the Port-au-Prince bus station Friday, heading for the country and presumed safety in event of an invasion led by United States forces.

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — In a last-minute overture to avert an invasion, President Clinton authorized former President Carter Friday to lead a delegation to Haiti to persuade its defiant military leaders to surrender power and leave.

Army Chief Raoul Cedras and his cohorts agreed to receive the delegation, which also will include retired Gen. Colin Powell, former chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee. They are expected to go to Haiti today.

"President Clinton wished an alternative that would allow (the Haitian leaders) to leave without bloodshed," a senior administration official said at a White House podium moments after National Security Adviser Anthony Lake publicly announced the mission.

The only purpose of the discussion with the Haitians is "the means of their departure," the official said. The discussions would involve guarantees about the military leaders' assets, travel arrangements and destination.

"This does not alter by one minute or one second the timetable of our military preparations, our preparedness to act or the urgency of the situation in general," the official said.

Administration officials said an invasion force was ready to strike. Yet, it was certain that troops would not go in at least until the delegation has completed its business.

Independent of the White House, Carter has been in touch for some time with Cedras, the junta's leader, the official said. Carter contacted Clinton and said he thought direct talks would be worthwhile.

The official said "it would be wrong to assume" that Cedras had signaled a willingness to surrender power, but added that the junta leaders understand that their departure is the only thing the delegation is authorized

Rainbow's end

For tiny, scenic Palau, it may end up a black hole filled with U.S. nuclear wastes

The Associated Press

KOROR, Palau (AP) — With a bright smile, the tour guide gestures to a dense, rolling thicket of emerald mangrove that slopes to meet a glittering blue bay.

"It's beautiful, isn't it?" says Lazarenna Yosinao Ubedei.

And then, with equal pride: "Pretty soon it will all be a hotel."

Like Ubedei, who makes her living introducing tourists to Palau's tropical charms, many Palauans believe that true to their tiny republic's slogan — "the rainbow's end" — the future promises a pot of gold.

But others fear Palau's leaders, lured by the promise of nearly $500 million in U.S. aid in exchange for military access and the option of building nuclear or toxic dump sites here, may have already traded the future away.

On first glance, it would appear that the march of progress never quite made it to Palau in the westernmost Caroline Islands of the western Pacific.

Potholes and coconut shells outnumber ears on its narrow main street, and tin-and-wood homes nestle along the edges of its jungles.

To Palauans, however, signs of their secluded country's budding transformation to a modern tourist state are everywhere.

Construction workers are giving the capital's dilapidated airport a face-lift and a duty-free shop, as officials try to win direct flights from Japan, Asia's premier source of tourists.

Construction is to begin soon on the hotel by the bay where Ubedei stood.

There's even talk of a billion-dollar resort complete with a couple of five-star hotels, a 600-boat marina, a floating casino and golf course.

Every week, it seems, a new group of potential investors from Japan, Taiwan or Australia can be seen surveying Palau's better-known attractions — Rock Island, Jellyfish Lake, Turtle Cove.

"I have been very surprised by the amount of interest," President Kunio Nakamura told The Associated Press. "We have enough interest, in fact, that we have the luxury of being choosy."

Nakamura said the investors began looking in earnest last year, after Palau concluded the Compact of Free Association with the United States, which makes Palau an independent country and ends its political limbo as the United Nations' last trust territory in the Pacific.

Moore may delay Jerome shutdown

By Mick Normington
Times-News writer

JEROME — Moore Business Forms is too busy to shut down.

On July 28, the company announced it would be closing its plant in Jerome some time around February. In the meantime, the plant would be giving its equipment to a local charity and gradually laying off its 190 employees.

But now everything is on hold, said Plant Manager Jerry Alexander.

The plant prints custom business forms and documents. In August, the plant shipped one of its printing presses to a sister Moore Forms plant and was going to immediately ship away the rest of the presses and equipment.

Alexander got orders not to ship out any more presses at least until January.

"My guess would be that we'll be operating another four months. But that's strictly a guess," Alexander said Friday.

Layoffs had begun in August with 10 people losing their jobs.

But more business has come in. "August was an excellent production month and we're real busy right now," Alexander said. So no layoffs are planned, and some of the 180 remaining Jerome employees have had to work overtime for the plant to keep up.

Moore had planned to shift work to sister plants in California and Utah.

Meanwhile, Twin Falls Realtors Steve Kohnopp and Steve DiLuca have set up a toll-free phone line to help find a company to replace Moore Forms in the Jerome building.

Kohnopp and DiLuca have the listing to sell the 137,700-square-foot Moore Forms plant, which is near the Jerome Industrial Park. Their phone line is 1-800-658-3882.

"We have several leads that we're following up on," Kohnopp said. "We have no plant anywhere in Idaho of this size that's available."

They are working with Moore Forms, the Idaho Department of Commerce and the economic development directors in Jerome and Twin Falls to find a new company to come in and provide jobs.

Moore Forms is a subsidiary of Moore Corp. Ltd. of Toronto and has 100 plants across the world. The company is trying to consolidate some of its smaller plants, such as Jerome's, to streamline its operations.

Jury slaps Exxon with $5 billion oil spill penalty

The Associated Press

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — Exxon Corp. was ordered to pay $5 billion in punitive damages Friday to commercial fishermen, Alaska natives, property owners and others harmed by the 1989 Exxon Valdez oil spill.

The federal jury also ordered the tanker's captain, Joseph Hazelwood, to pay $5,000. The 11-member jury returned the verdict after more than 12 days of deliberations.

The plaintiffs in the class-action lawsuit — an estimated 12,000 to 14,000 people — had asked for $15 billion.

Exxon lawyers urged the jury not to award punitive damages. They said that the oil giant had learned its lesson in spending $3 billion to clean up the spill and to settle lawsuits filed by the state and federal governments in the aftermath of the nation's worst oil spill.

Exxon vowed to appeal, as did Michael Chalos, an attorney for Hazelwood.

Hazelwood "is emotionally and financially worse off than he was five years ago," Chalos said, adding that he would ask the judge to set aside the verdict against his client or lower the amount.

Exxon lawyer Patrick Lynch called the verdict shocking.

"It's a total misunderstanding based on the efforts Exxon made to make good since then," Lynch said.

Brinn O'Neill, one of about 150 lawyers representing the plaintiffs, said he was "ecstatic."

The amount is the second largest damage award in a civil case, after a December 1985 award of $11.12 billion to Pennzoil Co. The judgment against Texaco Inc., over its unethical tactics in trying to break up a merger between Pennzoil and Getty Oil Co., was later reduced to $5.5 billion, in an out-of-court settlement.

The station didn't have a tape-delay mechanism.

Frost said about 80 percent of the calls to the station had been in favor of airing the scene.

The station did not play the tape during later broadcasts and turned down requests from other stations for copies of the video.

Televised suicide raises questions

The Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — Viewers watched in horror as the scene unfolded on live TV. A deputy sheriff who hours earlier had gunned down his wife placed the barrel of a .45 in his jaw and fired. Blood splattered. His body slumped.

"At first, I didn't think it was real," said Diane Ryland, who was watching the broadcast at home Thursday. "I couldn't believe they had shot it. That should have been cut away. It was very insensitive."

The broadcast by the station in Alexandria, about 175 miles northwest of New Orleans, has stirred debate over whether KALB acted responsibly.

The drama began after Paul Broussard, a 38-year-old deputy who had been suspended a day earlier when his estranged wife, Andrea Baden Broussard, obtained a restraining order against him for beating her, shot and killed the woman, then ran across the street to the courtyard of an Alexandria bank.

Police swarmed into the downtown area, evacuating people from several buildings and blocking off streets. Cameras rolled as Broussard, sitting on a bench, agonized with a priest for 2½ hours, then shot himself.

The camera was so close that viewers could see the bullet hole.

"We did not televise a suicide," KALB news director Jack Frost said Friday. "The incident we televised was a situation that put the downtown area in danger, and our public needed to be aware of that."

"We didn't know if he was going to erupt again into violence," Frost said. "We prayed to God that that would not happen. Unfortunately, it did."

He said the station wasn't able to cut away because he didn't have a tape-delay mechanism.

Frost said about 80 percent of the calls to the station had been in favor of airing the scene.

Monsignor Ronald Hoppe, right, tries to convince Paul Broussard not to shoot himself.

Coalition launches campaign

WASHINGTON (AP) — The million-plus member Christian Coalition opened its annual conference Friday with vows to stop the Clinton administration in its tracks with a massive turnout of religious conservatives at the polls.

The White House took hit after hit from a lineup of prominent Republicans — and one disaffected Democrat — in a foreshadowing of what the president can expect in the 1996 campaign.

"We are fed up with Clinton-style liberalism and in six weeks it comes to an end," Ralph Reed, executive director of the coalition, told several thousand delegates at the start of the two-day conference. Reed and evangelist Pat Robertson, president of the coalition, predicted a record turnout of anti-Clinton, pro-family voters.

"We are seeing the Christian Coalition rise to where God intends it to be in this nation — as one of the most powerful political forces that's ever been in the history of America," said Robertson. "The polls are turning. The tide is turning. The nation is saying we're right."

The conference agenda Friday featured three 1996 presidential prospects — Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Tex.; former Tennessee Gov. Lamar Alexander and former Vice President Dan Quayle. Former Defense Secretary Dick Cheney was slated for Saturday night.

Gramm, chairman of the GOP Senate campaign committee, said to wild applause that his objective at the polls in November is "shutting down the Clinton taxing and regulating and spending machine."

Alexander, once a Clinton ally on education reform, said the president "gave us five minutes of hope" and then "created a hole a mile wide for new leadership in 1994 and 1996."

Coming under repeated attack by speakers were Clinton's now-dead health plan, his attempt to end the ban on gays in the military, his 1993 package of tax increases and deficit reduction, his foreign policy and his values.

Reed charged that the administration has "chronic schizophrenia" that Clinton preaches morals and family values at churches but that his White House "has not been friendly to families or values."

The Clinton appointee who drew the most fire was Surgeon General Joycelyn Elders, an outspoken liberal who has said she favors studying the impact of legalizing drugs.

Former Education Secretary William Bennett said that in continuing to support Elders "the administration has forfeited its right to moral seriousness." The audience rose to its feet when Reed suggested Clinton fire her.

Democratic Party Chairman David Bonior, who addressed the coalition last year and was not well received, said at a news conference of his own Friday that he objected to the implication that anyone who disagreed with the Christian Coalition was somehow a bad Christian or godless.

Search begins for new Breck girl

PHOENIX (AP) — The Breck Girl beckons again. A wave of nostalgia for the long-running pastel portrait campaign for hair products prompted the Dial Corp. to bring back the Breck Girl.

"There's a lot of good feeling out there for the Breck Girl," said Greg Murtagh, manager of the brand for the Dial Corp.

The ads ran from the mid-1930s through the 1970s, when they were stopped by the company that owned it. Dial realized the appeal of the ad campaign when they dusted off 1950s portraits of the Breck Girl, hung them up in the corporate lobby and watched the crowds filter through.

"The Breck Girl has been around for a long time and it's been an icon of American beauty for a long, long time," Murtagh said.

Astronaut Mark Lee maneuvers around the robot arm while testing a new, $7 million jet pack Friday. The pack is designed as a rescue device, should an astronaut become untethered.

Discovery astronauts cut loose, fly in space with new jet packs

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Two jet-propelled astronauts unhooked their lifelines to space shuttle Discovery and flew free 150 miles above Earth on Friday in the first untethered spacewalk in 10 years.

Mark Lee and Carl Meade had only one jet pack between them and took turns flying with the one-of-a-kind, $7 million unit. The jet pack is meant to be a life preserver for space station crews of the future.

"This thing works like a champ," Lee said as he hovered over Discovery's cargo bay, firing tiny jets to guide his way.

He was only the seventh person to fly free in space. Meade was No. 8.

The next step was even more dramatic. With a brilliant blue Earth as a backdrop, Lee and Meade stood at the end of Discovery's 50-foot mechanical arm. Meade, his feet secured to the crane, shoved Lee into a head-over-heels tumble of the sort a spacewalker might experience in an emergency.

Meade apparently didn't realize his own strength, and Lee somersaulted again and again. Lee asked him to be more gentle. Meade obliged, and this time Lee did a slow-motion pirouette.

When it became Lee's turn, he joked: "There's no baseball going on. Carl, so I guess I'll have to catch you, huh?"

The trickiest exercise had each spacewalker propel himself along the length of the shuttle arm, which was bent at a sharp angle. They scooted from the shoulder to the elbow, around the bend, up to the end and then back down again — never using their hands.

Looking down at Earth, Lee said: "I'd like to say hello to all my classmates at the 20th reunion at the Air Force Academy. I wish I could be there, but as you see someone's got to be high cover for all of you."

Until Friday, only six astronauts had walked in space without a lifeline to the mother ship, all in 1984. The first was NASA's Bruce McCandless.

Each of the first six human satellites used NASA's massive manned "mattress" units, which were mothballed because of their size and expense.

The new jet pack, called Safer — for Simplified Aid for Extravehicular Activity Rescue — weighs just 83 pounds on Earth but, like everything else, nothing in space. It is not nearly as thick or cumbersome as the old one. There are 24 tiny nitrogen gas jets, and the spacewalker guides himself with a joystick.

The rules for the spacewalk were simple: No flying more than 25 feet from Discovery and no speeding. And only one spacewalker untethered at a time.

The average speed of each jet-propelled spacewalker was just one-half foot per second, or a measly one-third mph. The maximum speed of the jet pack is 7 mph.

Discovery's commander, Richard Richards, closely watched the spacewalkers, ready to come to the rescue if the jet pack failed.

Spacewalkers will require a lightweight jet pack like Safer when building the space station. A shuttle docked to a station wouldn't be able to undock fast enough to save a spacewalker from floating off into the void.

Discovery's 10-day mission is due to end Monday.

Friday, choking back tears.

Beaver County Coroner Wayne Tatalovich, who heads the recovery and identification effort, said 100 people are working at the crash site and 150 at a makeshift morgue near the Pittsburgh airport.

The identification team includes dentists, X-ray technicians, an FBI fingerprint team and specialists from the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology.

The coroner would not say how many victims have been identified, but he said about 95 percent of the remains have been recovered.

Missing remains compound grief

PITTSBURGH (AP) — When Denise Mirlovich bid a final farewell to her husband, David, at a church service, a family photograph surrounded by roses took the place of a casket.

For Mrs. Mirlovich and the couple's three children — as well as the families of many of the 131 other victims of USAir Flight 427 — grieving has been made more difficult by the absence so far of any remains.

"To some family members, the crash victims, in effect, have simply evaporated," said Florida State University psychologist Charles

Figley. "You don't believe anything until you have proof."

Mirlovich, 38, was on his way home from a business trip Sept. 8 when the jet slammed into a ravine at 300 mph, killing everyone aboard.

The plane and the victims were so torn apart that experts are still trying to identify the victims. None of the remains have been turned over to families, and some may never be identified.

"It makes it tough on my kids. They want to know where their father is. They ask me every day," Mrs. Mirlovich said.

Postal Service deletes smoking from stamps

WASHINGTON (AP) — Pro-smoking groups are outraged that the U.S. Postal Service is commemorating jazz guitarist Robert Johnson minus his cigarette.

The artist who prepared the new stamp, being issued to honor the cigarette-smoking bluesman, deleted the cigarette that appeared in the photo of Johnson used as a basis for the design.

A citizens committee that advises the Postal Service on stamp designs had recommended the action "because they don't want the stamps to be perceived as promoting cigarettes," said post office spokeswoman Monica Hand.

But Thomas Humber, president of the pro-smoking National Smoker's Alliance, complained in a letter to Postmaster General Marvin Runyon that the decision is "an affront to the more than 50 million Americans who choose to smoke."

Hand pointed out that there was no cigarette on a recent stamp honoring journalist Edward R. Murrow, who was rarely seen without a smoke; and labor leader George Meany was pictured without his ever-present cigar.

Johnson, who was murdered in 1938 at age 27, is among the jazz and blues greats being honored in a set of stamps the Postal Service is unveiling at the Mississippi Delta Blues Festival in Greenville. His image on the stamp is based on a photo by Stephen C. LaVerre.

Nation Order seen as too costly

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Legislators have balked at spending the money to comply with a court order to unseal more than 100,000 pages of documents from a now-defunct state agency that worked covertly to preserve segregation.

In May, a federal judge gave the state Department of Archives and History one year to collate and index the records of the Sovereignty Commission, which employed a network of informers and agents to spread propaganda, infiltrate civil rights groups and feed police information on people deemed subversive.

Money for this project, about $315,000, was approved the Senate but died in the House Appropriations Committee earlier this year. Gov. Kirk Fordice refused to put the matter on the agenda of a special legislative session last month.

"I think the opening of those files will achieve no purpose but open old wounds that are 40 years old or over and have been forgotten," said Rep. Charlie Capps, chairman of the Appropriations Committee.

Capps said lawmakers may consider a special appropriation when they reconvene in January.

In the meantime, Elbert Hilliard, director of the archives department, is spending money he doesn't have. "I feel uneasy about this whole situation," he said after pleading with the Legislative Budget Committee last week for money to buy imaging equipment and for three employees to handle the files.

The records fill six filing cabinets in a sealed vault. Hilliard said he has received two $100,000 bids for imaging equipment needed to index and edit the files. He has reassigned one employee to go through the records by hand.

Hilliard warned lawmakers the state will face fines if it does not follow U.S. District Judge William Barbour's ruling.

"Some of the old-timers don't want to give up, but a court order is a court order. The records will be opened one way or the other. We'll either do it right or sloppy," said Rims Barber, a plaintiff in the lawsuit that won the court order. "I hope the Legislature chooses to do it right."

Ivy League leads national college ranks

WASHINGTON (AP) — Three Ivy League universities — Harvard, Princeton and Yale — were rated America's best national universities in U.S. News & World Report's eighth annual college ranking.

The magazine ranked schools in several categories: national universities, national liberal arts colleges, regional colleges and universities, regional liberal arts colleges and specialized institutions.

The magazine asked presidents, deans and admissions directors at about 1,400 colleges and universities to rate schools in the same category as their own institutions. Sixty-six percent of the schools participated, the magazine said.

Harvard has led the magazine's ranking for five consecutive years. In its ranking of national liberal arts colleges, the magazine said Amherst and Williams colleges in Massachusetts and Swarthmore College in Pennsylvania headed the list. This was Amherst's second year in the top spot for liberal arts colleges.

In regional rankings, Villanova University of Pennsylvania was rated best in the North, Valparaiso University of Indiana in the Midwest, University of Richmond in the South, and Trinity University of Texas in the West.

Explosion at air bag plant injures 7

MESA, Ariz. (AP) — An explosion rocked an automobile air-bag manufacturing plant Friday, injuring seven people, including at least two critically, authorities said.

The explosion occurred about 8:30 a.m. MDT in the press area of the TRW plant where chemicals are mixed, said Cliff Puckett, a spokesman for the Mesa Fire Department.

The cause of the explosion was not immediately known.

TRW was in the process of upgrading equipment and workers were removing equipment at the time, Puckett said.

He said two victims were transported from the scene in extremely critical condition.

Hot economy prompts fears of Fed cooldown

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The nation's industrial production surged in August and output figures for previous months were revised upward as well, stirring interest rate fears and sending stock and bond prices tumbling.

The Federal Reserve also said Friday that the economy is operating near capacity, at its highest rate in more than five years.

The report, showing sharply higher production of cars and business equipment, suggested earlier hints of a slowdown may only have been a pause in the economic expansion.

The Federal Reserve said industrial production rose 0.7 percent last month, the 15th straight advance and the biggest since the index climbed 0.8 percent in March.

Once again, the good news for the economy troubled Wall Street, which worries the economy could overheat and cause rapid inflation.

Bond prices were down sharply and the Dow Jones industrial average, after closing at a seven-month high Thursday, fell 20 points Friday. "We've been bullish on the economy, and this surprised me," said economist Eugene Sherman of M.A. Schapiro & Co., a Wall Street investment firm.

"The numbers were shockingly strong," said David Jones of Aubrey G. Lamson & Co., a New York government securities dealer.

He said they practically assure the Federal Reserve will raise short-term interest rates a sixth time this year, and possibly before its November meeting.

Handwriting is on the wall," he said. "We're certainly in territory that bodes ill on the inflation front. Companies will be making their price increases stick."

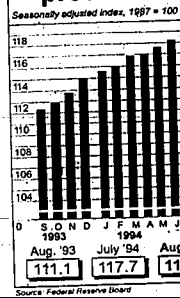

"Basically the economy has a lot of underlying vigor," said Robert Dedrick of the Northern Trust Co. Chicago — "It's been able to shrug off the rate hikes. What would it have been like without them?"

The Federal Open Market Committee, the Fed's policy-making arm, next meets Sept. 21. Analysts said they still expect the central bank not to act until its post-election 15, meeting but cautioned that Chairman Alan Greenspan could initiate a rate rise between meetings.

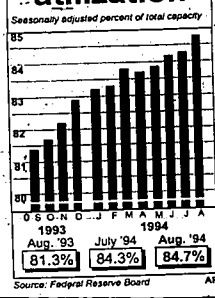

The economic expansion is now in its fourth year, and analysts said from the interest-rate-sensitive housing market appears to have a way to go.

The August production figures are particularly noteworthy because output at mines, oil wells and utilities declined as unusually cool weather lowered demand for air conditioning.

Court backs judgement

CHICAGO — Quaker Oats Co. must pay for using a Vermont company's trademark to sell its Gatorade sports drink but not the nearly $27 million ordered by a lower court, a federal court ruled.

The appeals court agreed that Quaker should pay $10.3 million for using the "Thirst Aid" slogan owned by a Vermont-based company. The appeals court also awarded more than $6 million in interest.

A lower court had figured the total award by calculating royalties, that might have been paid by Quaker. It then doubled the figure as a deterrent.

But the 7th Circuit Court of Appeals said federal trademark law does not allow for penalties in trademark-infringement lawsuits.

TV coverage planned

Knight-Ridder News Service

WASHINGTON — If the United States invades Haiti, TV viewers should get a front-row view of the action from both sides of the battle.

ABC, CBS, NBC and CNN plan to interrupt programming to deliver live coverage, if only for a few hours. Network executives say their correspondents are free to report from Haiti. They also say Pentagon officials are covering the invasion force will permit more access than during the Persian Gulf War.

"From everything I'm being told, I cannot imagine that they are going to try to pull the plug or impose restrictions," said CBS News anchor Dan Rather.

Paradise or peril? Cedras' future is 'disposal problem'

CBS anchor Dan Rather interviews Haitian strongman Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras in Port-au-Prince, Haiti, Thursday.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Shah of Iran wound up in Egypt. Nicaragua's Anastasio Somoza found a haven in Paraguay. For the Philippines' Ferdinand Marcos, it was Hawaii. So where will Haiti's Army Chief Raoul Cedras end up?

When the time is up for an unpopular strongman, diplomats often find themselves dealing with what they like to call "the disposal problem" — one that now faces the Clinton administration.

There is little doubt that Cedras and his companions are at the end of their three-year stint ruling Haiti, but their next address is something of a mystery. Will it be a morgue or splendid exile?

In some ways, Cedras is in a stronger position than the Shah, Somoza, Marcos or, for that matter, former Haitian President Jean-Claude Duvalier, who was deposed in 1986 and has been living in comfortable retirement in southern France ever since.

In each case, their departure was forced in large measure by popular uprising. None had any significant leverage.

By contrast, Cedras and his allies face minimal domestic unrest and they are also in a position to determine whether the U.S.-led invasion force has to shoot its way in or shows up with little or no resistance. That is no small consideration for the Clinton administration.

If they refuse to leave, casualties — including American — are considered inevitable if Clinton orders an invasion. If they leave before-hand, a peaceful intervention is regarded as far more likely.

Administration officials, worried about U.S. battlefield deaths, clearly prefer the latter option, and have been encouraging the generals to depart peacefully.

"If they decide to leave, we'll help them with the arrangements," says Secretary of State Warren Christopher.

The State Department indicated Friday that efforts have been made to find a foreign country for Cedras and his friends where they need not fear extradition back to Haiti.

As a further inducement for them to depart, the administration has said the invading force will turn them over, if they are found, to the elected civilian authorities once democracy is reinstated.

But Cedras & Co. show no willingness to leave. "I am ... prepared to fight with my people," Cedras told CBS-TV Thursday night.

Frustrated U.S. officials say Cedras, by refusing to leave, wants to be seen as an unbending foe of foreign intervention in Haiti despite the risks to himself and the army he leads.

U.S. forces in the Caribbean

The bulk of an invasion force will be in and around Haiti as early as this weekend, U.S. defense officials say. An over-growing fleet assigned to Haiti could be bolstered by other warships already in the Caribbean.

Haiti army declares resistance to invasion

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — As the army's chief of staff declared "we will resist" an invasion of Haiti, nervous auxiliary soldiers begged their superiors for weapons Friday night.

Haiti's army chief of staff, Brig. Gen. Philippe Biamby, declared "absolutely false" reports of a compromise in which he, army chief Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras and police chief Lt. Col. Michel Francois would step down if the invasion were called off and safety guarantees were given to them and 600 supporters.

Jamaica's former prime minister, Edward Seaga, who had helped negotiate the 1986 flight of former dictator Jean-Claude Duvalier, said in Kingston that he spoke to a Cedras aide two days ago to urge a peace settlement. Seaga said that the plan was derailed by public exposure.

Chanting in cadence, thousands of young men — members of Haiti's auxiliary army — jogged through the capital in a show of force Friday morning. A relaxed-looking Biamby led the exercise.

Massing at army headquarters afterward, the sweaty recruits demanded weapons. Military officials said they would be provided, but didn't say when.

An army official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said later there were about 30,000 weapons, which would be handed out after training. The arms were seized from the Tonton Macoute militia after the 1991 election.

It was not clear, however, what type or in what condition the weapons were. Shortly after Clinton spoke Thursday night, a C-130 warplane buzzed low over the city, dropping packages of portable radios so the United States could keep Haitians informed as the expected invasion unfolded. On Friday, planes dropped a batch of leaflets touting the virtues of democracy.

Many Haitians were afraid to pick up the fliers or the radios for fear of military retaliation.

Haiti's president, President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, who was ousted by an army coup three years ago, said at the White House that he would seek reconciliation, not revenge, once he is reinstated after an invasion.

He also pledged to hold elections as scheduled next year and hand over power to an elected successor in early 1996.

Revenge may spark more slaughter

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — If Rwanda's killers are not brought to justice soon, the country could see a wave of revenge slayings against death squad members, Rwanda's new president warned Friday.

"We have convinced people to wait for an international tribunal, but they are becoming impatient," President Pasteur Bizimungu told The Associated Press.

Bizimungu has been pushing for a U.N. war crimes court to prosecute Hutu extremists who murdered thousands of men, women and children — perhaps as many as 1 million — in three months of slaughter aimed at wiping out the minority Tutsis.

"The people of Rwanda must see justice done, or they will take their own measures," said Bizimungu, in The Hague to address European and African leaders at a Council of Europe conference on Rwandan reconciliation.

"Some people have lost up to 100 relatives. The wounds start there in the face every day."

Aid workers reporting on conditions in Rwandan refugee camps in Africa joined the president's appeal, warning that the disease and violence which shocked the international community into a massive relief action a month ago will return if the killers are not apprehended.

But the plea is falling on deaf ears abroad, according to U.N. human rights officials, who say that despite horror at the massacres, there is almost no support for a war crimes commission.

Britain ends ban of airing IRA voices

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Britain brushed aside a ban Friday that kept IRA voices off British airwaves, but promised Northern Ireland's fearful Protestants a referendum on any negotiated political settlement.

The measures were the latest in a series of initiatives by Britain, Ireland and the Irish Republican Army to resolve the bloody 24-year conflict over British-ruled Northern Ireland.

The end of the 6-year-old ban, which affected supporters of the IRA and other paramilitary groups, signaled Britain's growing confidence that the IRA cease-fire, announced Aug. 31, will last.

But British Prime Minister John Major, in lifting the ban, also reassured Northern Ireland's majority Protestants that any deal made on self-government for Northern Ireland would be put to a referendum in the province.

"Let me say to all the people of Northern Ireland: The referendum means that it will be your choice whether to accept the outcome," Major told reporters after a surprise trip to Belfast.

"My commitment means that no one can go behind your backs. Not today. Not tomorrow. Not at any time. You can forget this talk of secret deals. It will be for you to decide."

The sudden end of the broadcast ban delighted Sinn Fein, the IRA's political partners, while even the most hard-line Protestant leaders were heartened by the promised referendum.

"The prime minister has addressed the right issue for the people of Northern Ireland when he mentions consent. The people want to be certain about their own future in the United Kingdom," said Peter Robinson, deputy leader of the Democratic Unionist Party.

Family-owned D.L. Evans Bank turns 90

By Mick Normington
Times-News writer

BURLEY — John Evans Sr.'s voice was hoarse Friday from talking to customers and accepting congratulations on the 90th birthday of his family's bank.

Such longevity is unusual in these modern times of bank mergers, buy-outs and collapses.

But from starting a family bank in 1904 serving the people of Albion, the D.L. Evans Bank has grown to a prosperous financial institution of south-central Idaho.

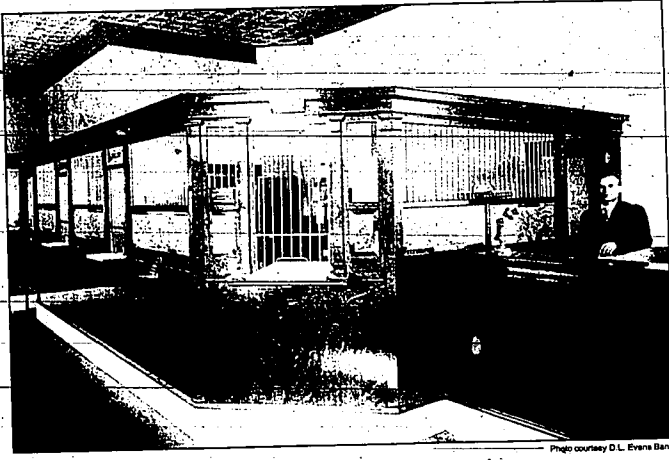

"It's because of our conservative philosophies and strong customer backing," said bank President John Evans Sr.

In 1904, Idaho had its sixth governor, John Morrison. The World Series was cancelled, and Theodore Roosevelt was re-elected president, on the promise he would fight big corporations that controlled business operations across much of the nation.

The D.L. Evans Bank has gone on to challenge the bigger regional banks with the support of Magic Valley farmers, business people and residents who like the idea of the banking with a small, independent bank where they can talk to the bank president.

The bank started with Evans' grandfather, D.L. Evans, and later associates each putting $5,000 to start the bank. When it started, the one-room bank had only a teller and a cashier, who was Robert Lounsbury.

"Ninety years ago, Albion was the commercial center of the Magic Valley. The valley below was just covered with sagebrush," Evans said. "Many of the pioneer families of this area were borrowing money to purchase a cow or a farm or seeds. We also had the small businesses come in here to borrow money for supplies."

Most customers then came to the bank by horseback or stage coach.

"There were very meager deposits in those days, lots of loans for $2 and $3. People were very conservative and frugal with their money back then," Evans said.

Evans joined his father at the bank after college, and at a 1951 board of directors meeting he suggested the bank add a branch in Burley. Evans said some directors said Burley was too far away and their bank couldn't compete with the bigger state banks that had branches in Burley.

When Evans and his son, John Evans Jr., took the helm of the D.L. Evans Bank they proved those directors wrong — and Evans would go on to become Idaho's 24th governor.

The bank opened a Burley branch in 1979, a Rupert branch in 1991 and a Twin Falls branch in 1993. And now the D.L. Evans Bank has $92 million in assets.

Evans is now working to set up a bank holding company, which would be a parent company to the bank and its branches. The holding company would allow the D.L. Evans Bank to merge with other banks, set up an insurance subsidiary, and make it easier to create investment and trust departments, he said.

"If a merger opportunities comes along it allows us to bring a new bank into the D.L. Evans Bank family," Evans said.

And the bank stresses family in its operations. Evans' grandchildren have worked as intern tellers in the bank — making five generations of Evans family members who have worked in the bank.

Hearing postponed in Farm Labor Camp slaying

By Liz Wright
Times-News writer

BURLEY — A preliminary hearing was postponed Thursday for a 22-year-old Texas man accused of killing a man at the Cassia County Farm Labor Camp.

Alfredo Romayor's lawyer, James Annett, argued for a later hearing, saying he hadn't had enough time to prepare.

Romayor hired Annett two days before the hearing because he was concerned that his public defender, Kerry McMurray, may have a conflict of interest, Annett said.

McMurray tried to withdraw from the case during Romayor's Sept. 2 arraignment, arguing that he was representing one of the prosecutor's witnesses, Cathy Moussou, on a different case, Annett said.

Magistrate Nathan Elger denied his motion, Annett said.

Typically, a magistrate judge appoints a public defender to someone after researching whether the person can afford to hire his or her own attorney, Cassia County Deputy Prosecutor Howard Smyser said.

Romayor dropped public defender McMurray and his family pooled their resources to hire Annett, a private attorney, Annett said.

Magistrate Roy Holloway reset the preliminary hearing for 11 a.m. Friday.

Romayor has been charged with first-degree murder and enhanced penalties for using a firearm, according to an amended criminal complaint filed Sept. 9 by Cassia County Prosecutor Stephen Bywater.

Romayor is being held without bond in the Mini-Cassia jail. Bywater has decided not to seek the death penalty for Romayor, according to a Sept. 10 letter he wrote to Holloway and the public defender's office.

According to Bywater's affidavit, Romayor shot Miguel Elizando-Salazar, 21, of Mexico, in the early morning of Sept. 2 outside the labor camp.

Police found Elizando-Salazar slouched in the driver's seat of a yellow car with a bullet hole on the left side of his neck, Alan Garrett of the Cassia County Sheriff's Department said in an affidavit.

Moussou told police she had followed Romayor as he left the house with a loaded gun, Garrett's affidavit said. When Moussou heard a shot, she ran back into the house.

Romayor came back into the house and told Moussou the gun had accidentally gone off, the affidavit said.

Witnesses told police Elizando-Salazar had been driving recklessly through Labor Camp before the shooting, Cassia County Sheriff Billy Crystal said.

A man stopped the car, approached and began hitting a man sitting in the passenger seat of the car, Crystal said. Elizando-Salazar drove away, he said. Later he was shot once in the neck.

The victim and the suspect both lived at the camp, but apparently were not well acquainted with each other, Crystal said.

The slaying came one day after the Burley Labor Camp had been scheduled to close. The Cassia Labor Association had decided to give up on the deteriorating facility, but a representative of the Region IV Development Commission found a way to keep the camp open through Oct. 12.

Trash-dumping a problem in Paul

By Deana M. Carver
Times-News correspondent

PAUL — County residents dumping their garbage in the city's trash bins may be doing up the city's garbage collection cost, officials say.

Councilwoman Melanie Haynes reported to the City Council Wednesday in an informal meeting with other city governments.

One of the biggest concerns is the increase in garbage coming from the country to the city. She said perhaps the problem is people don't know about the county's transfer station.

"They are too well informed and that's why they come to town," Mayor M. Gene Haman said. The Minidoka County trash transfer station is four miles outside of Paul. From the station, trash is hauled to a regional landfill at Milner Butte.

The problem is that it may be more convenient for some people to use the city's trash bins, said Terry Schultz, director of the Southern Idaho Regional Solid Waste District.

"It's just not a good idea for people to dump garbage in other people's trash bins," Schultz said Friday.

The increase of garbage in the city will lead to an increase in the cost of garbage collection, which will lead to an increase in taxes.

The problem is common to many southern Idaho cities, Schultz said. Councilman Randy Jones said he had received several complaints about the odor and flies from the "feedlot," he said the source of the problem was "dry beet pulp that was stored there."

Hansen said he didn't think it was in the city's area of impact and the county would have to deal with it.

8 centenarians but only 1 man still alive since Gem centennial

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — Holly Ferguson of Coeur d'Alene will be 106 Saturday, one of only eight Idaho centenarians still alive since the state celebrated its first 100 years in mid-1990 and the only man.

"The guys are all gone, except for Holly," said John O'Hara Kirk, who chronicled the lives of Ferguson and 154 other centenarians for his centennial book "Idaho 100: Stories from Idaho Century Centennials."

"The so-called weaker sex whips them all," said Kirk, a 70-year-old Boise writer who has kept track of his subjects.

Since presenting each of them with a copy of the book, Kirk has carefully noted their deaths through a newspaper clipping service and letters from their children.

"They were close to my heart," Kirk said. "No person could be as lucky as I was to be with them, all the way from wagon wheels to automobiles."

Of the seven women still living, Anna Bean of Kellogg is the oldest at 110.

Kirk plans a sequel that will include the "wild side" stories he left out of the first one for reasons of decorum.

One is an example of wilderness justice — the confession of a father who killed his twin sons. The boys, determined to make their way to Alaska, had

I can't tell you what the secret is. ... One smoked four packs of Camels while I interviewed him.

— John O'Hara Kirk, writer asked for their share of the family inheritance before leaving, Kirk said.

The father refused but gave his sons a wagon and a eight-sided tent. Dissatisfied, they robbed their father, who in turn hanged them down, then shot one and hung the other, Kirk said.

Others will share the heartache of women who admitted they were glad they lived long enough to outlast their husbands.

"Thank God," one woman told Kirk. "I had my husband. I would have shot him."

Based on interviews with people in the book, Kirk decided life was harder for pioneer women than it was for men.

Often alone in secluded cabins, they rocked dying children in their arms; combating illness with just soup and a prayer.

And one, Mary Molly Pierce of Salmon, had to contend with rattlesnakes that slithered out of the walls of her potato-cellar home.

But Kirk never discovered a common thread in the lives of the state's 155 oldest citizens.

"I can't tell you what the secret is," he said. "Some drank whiskey clear to the end. One smoked four packs of Camels while I interviewed him."

But, he said, most were Swedish, and most came from the Panhandle.

Excavation of mammoth fossils at north Idaho lake no easy task

GRANGEVILLE (AP) — The discovery of a growing number of mammoth fossils at Tolo Lake poses a logistics problem for state officials, they say, might take until next year to resolve.

State archaeologist Robert Yohe II said Thursday he believes the effort to recover the Ice Age fossils from the dry lake bed probably should be suspended until next spring.

"We have a massive bone pile, which is one of the complications we have to deal with. I've called it the Tolo mud pits," Yohe said. "The eagerness has slowed down a little because you see all that bone out there and realize it's not going to be an easy task getting it out of there."

Yohe said he has begun to think of the site as the north-central Idaho equivalent of Southern California's famous La Brea tar pits. The problem facing those trying to excavate the fossils, since the first were discovered Sept. 2, is that every time they try to dig under one, they find another.

'We have a massive bone pile. ... I've called it the Tolo mud pits.'

— Robert Yohe II, state archaeologist

"I think we've reached the limit of our capabilities," Yohe said. He and William Akersten, vertebrate paleontology curator at the Idaho Museum of Natural History, said the few weeks before fall rains set in and their commitments to spend time with other projects lead them to favor putting the excavation off until next spring.

Neither the museum nor the Idaho State Historical Society has the money to pursue the excavation. The issue will be discussed at a meeting next week in Grangeville.

Akersten said after visiting the site Thursday that fossils identified so far appear to come from Jefferson, Imperial or Columbian mammoths. He said there also is a task at Tolo Lake that may have come from a woolly mammoth, but that identification is not confirmed.

Mammoths ranged across North America from about 2 million years ago to about 11,000 years ago. The earliest indications of man's presence on the continent date back only about 15,000 years, Akersten said.

Tolo Lake is dry to allow an Idaho Department of Fish and Game project to deepen it and add waterfowl nesting island. Fish and Game had planned to begin refilling the lake this fall and next spring.

Fish and Game spokesman Gregg Losinski in Lewiston said officials recognized the complication the fossil discovery could pose for lake rehabilitation plans.

Boise to join U.S. in diabetes research

BOISE (AP) — Boise's medical experts are about to help pave the way for discoveries into the treatment of diabetes.

Staff at the Humphreys Diabetes Center will screen immediate family members of diabetes patients in Boise as part of a nationwide effort to determine whether the disease can be delayed or prevented in people who are at high risk of developing diabetes.

There are about 5,000 insulin-dependent diabetes patients in Idaho. Doctors hope to test at least 1,000 people in Boise and 60,000 are expected to be tested nationwide.

"This allows us in Idaho to have access to what's going on," said Dr. Cynthia Clinkbeard, an endocrinologist and medical director of the Humphreys Center. "We're testing people at risk. There's some evidence that if you can identify patients at risk, there are certain interventions you can make to prevent it."

Insulin-dependent or Type 1 diabetes affects people who have a deficiency of insulin, a hormone made by the pancreas that helps turn food into energy. Type 1 sufferers must watch their diet and receive daily doses of insulin and perform blood-sugar tests.

Doctors will start the study today at a Humphreys Center open house. Parents, siblings and children of Type 1 sufferers who decide to participate will have their blood tested.

Samples will be sent to diabetes researchers at the University of Washington, where doctors will look for an antibody associated with the disease. Anyone with that antibody in their blood may be considered for the second phase of the study.

Over the next five to seven years, 10 diabetes centers nationwide will divide subjects into two treatment groups, each of which will include some people who will not be tested at all.

Simplot considers museum

NAMPA (AP) — Idaho industrialist J.R. Simplot is considering building a museum near Nampa to preserve the heritage of the state's agricultural and mining industries.

"I'm working with people over there to see if they can get it put together," Simplot said Thursday.

"I'm just looking for a spot right now. I haven't made any commitments," Simplot said. "But if I do it, it will be something worth the time. It will be an attraction."

Mayor W. L. Goering said Simplot has discussed the concept with city officials. The project would include a working, turn-of-the-century farm where crops are planned and harvested, he said.

"It's a great idea. What J.R. wants to do is show how an actual horse-drawn plow works, how a grain drill works. Those things are nostalgic and totally foreign to people today," Goering said.

The museum also may include an old mining town display. Simplot is the former owner of the Yankee Fork dredge near Stanley which was converted into a museum after he donated it to the Forest Service.

The city of Nampa would be involved in long-range planning of the Simplot museum, but would not be the developer, the mayor said.

"It would be a great thing. It's got a tremendously good chance of happening. The right people are involved," he said.

Goering said the museum could be partially staffed by volunteers and would be a natural link between a new Snake River Stampede rodeo pavilion and a Boise State University technology center, two other projects that may be built near Nampa.

All three projects could be located in the same area northeast of town, but property has not been acquired yet, Goering said.

If the museum were to be built, the city would likely help developers plan residential subdivisions and hotels surrounding the complex, Goering said.

"If this happens it will be a tremendous legacy," he said.

Idaho Falls man dies in car accident

IDAHO FALLS — An Idaho Falls man has been killed in a one-car rollover in Bonneville County.

William Bleak, 34, was pronounced dead on arrival after an accident early Friday morning. Investigating officers said he was thrown from the pickup truck he was driving when it failed to make a curve.

A passenger, John Curtis Beamon Jr., 26, Idaho Falls, also was thrown from the truck, but he was not seriously injured. Bleak was found dead down in a ditch with about six inches of water, a Bonneville County report said.

Bleak and Beamon left the Rocking Horse Bar a short time before the accident, where witnesses said they were in a fight with two other men, according to a police report.

Boundary County picks new sheriff

BONNERS FERRY — The Boundary County Commission has picked Sheriff's Lt. Greg Sprungl from among three candidates to succeed Sheriff Bruce Whitaker, who resigned in late July.

"I'm feeling very good about it, excited and eager to start," Sprungl, who joined the sheriff's office in June 1990, said Thursday.

"Obviously, it's quite a career move," he said. "I was a career man. Each candidate for about 30 minutes. Chief Deputy Ron Navarro and Deputy John Macoutel were the other two finalists."

Man receives prison term in shooting

COEUR D'ALENE — A Kootenai County man has been sentenced to six to 10 years in prison for firing a .357-caliber revolver into an Athol-area home occupied by his stepchildren last fall.

Chuck Harper, 34, pleaded guilty in April to first-degree attempted manslaughter. He later tried to withdraw the plea, contending he was mentally incompetent when he admitted his guilt.

A judge agreed Thursday that Harper has mental problems, but said the condition was exaggerated to "gain advantage in court proceedings." Harper's two stepchildren and two adults escaped injury last Nov. 21 when Harper — enraged over a custody battle — opened fire on a rural Athol home.

Police leaders call for more Hispanics

BOISE — Leaders in law enforcement say more Hispanics should get into the field.

At Thursday's Hispanic Issues Training Conference, officials said Hispanics who are bilingual can help bridge gaps.

Caldwell Police Chief Bob Sobba said recruiting and retaining Hispanic and bilingual police officers has been a priority for the department for the last decade, but the effort has proven frustrating.

"We get them trained, and then someone else can hire them away and pay them much more money," Sobba said.

Utah trades Corbin to Atlanta for Keefe

SALT LAKE CITY — The Utah Jazz traded veteran forward Tyrone Corbin to the Atlanta Hawks on Friday in exchange for forward Adam Keefe.

The Jazz also sent a second round draft choice in 1995 to the Hawks.

Corbin, 31, played almost three seasons with Utah. Last season, the 6-foot-6 small forward was one of three Jazz players to play all 82 regular season games. Keefe, 6-9, has been a disappointment since being drafted out of Stanford in 1992. In 145 games, he averaged just 5.6 points.

Maradona quits, but will help coach Argentine soccer team

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina — Soccer star Diego Maradona, his playing days behind him, said Friday he will begin a coaching career as an unpaid assistant with his former Argentine league team.

Maradona, 33, was scheduled to begin work with Boca Juniors coach Cesar Menotti on Saturday. Menotti coached Argentina to its first World Cup in 1978 and to the quarterfinals in 1982.

Maradona has played in four World Cups, leading Argentina to the title in 1986 and the final in 1990.

In this year's Cup he tested positive for the use of the stimulant ephedrine. FIFA, world soccer's governing body, kicked him out of the tournament. Maradona said two weeks ago that he was “almost certainly” retiring from professional play.

Former player, father indicted for point-shaving scheme

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — A federal grand jury indicted two men Friday in a point-shaving scheme in a 1990 basketball game involving the University of Central Florida and Stanford.

Kelly Michael Hunter, 26, and his father, Larry H. Hunter, 50, were charged with conspiracy to commit sports bribery and attempted sports bribery.

The grand jury indictment alleges the Hunters tried to bribe “one or more players” from Central Florida in the game against Stanford on Dec. 29, 1990, in Orlando.

Former heavyweight boxing champion Muhammad Ali orders at the McDonald's he frequents in Berrien Springs, Mich., Thursday. Ali was named the most influential sports figure of the past four decades by Sports Illustrated magazine.

Still the greatest

Article puts Ali back in spotlight

The Associated Press

BERRIEN SPRINGS, Mich. — Sports Illustrated's most influential sports figure is just another resident in this southwestern Michigan village, Muhammad Ali and the 2,000 citizens who live here like him. Ali, named the most influential sports figure of the past four decades on a list of 40 released by Sports Illustrated on Wednesday, is a regular in the local McDonald's.

“That M stands for Muhammad,” Ali says, nodding toward the golden arches before ordering a quarter-pounder with cheese and large fries.

Ali, 52, has lived since 1987 in the village 10 miles east of Lake Michigan. He was courted by kings and presidents when he traveled the globe, dazzling crowds with his persona and boastful pride, often speaking in rhyme. He now travels with a two-person entourage — Yolande, his wife of nine years, and his secretary Kim.

“We appreciate the solitude,” said Yolande Ali. “This community is filled with normal, regular people and they treat you like normal, regular people.”

While Sports Illustrated and NBC-TV made a fuss over him this week, the folks in Berrien Springs are used to Ali. Parkinson's disease has robbed him of some physical prowess and agility that mesmerized fight spectators in the 1960s and 1970s, when he won 56 heavyweight fights and lost five.

But the town doesn't make an open boast of its favorite son. The sign welcoming visitors to Berrien Springs proclaims it “Home of Natasha Bell, Miss Blossomtime 1993.” It also touts Andrews University, Michigan's oldest courthouse, and the girls' 1980 class C softball champs.

Nothing for The Greatest, who was boxing champ from 1964-67 and 1974-78.

“Muhammad doesn't want that,” said Pete Geldhoff, 28, whose family owns the local hardware store. “That (fanfare) would probably be a good way to tick him off and make him pack up and move.”

Situated on 31 acres, Ali's $155,000 farmhouse was built in 1938. The 2,100-square-foot building includes four bedrooms and two bathrooms. Outside are a swimming pool, tennis court and staff quarters.

Jerome rallies to win

By Brad Breland
Times-News writer

JEROME — It's Miller time. Workhorse Dustin Miller rushed for 174 yards and scored twice as Jerome erased a 20-6 Mountain Home advantage and won 33-20 in a non-conference game Friday night.

Down 13-6 at the half, Jerome came out in the second half and scored four touchdowns and erupted for 20 points in the fourth quarter.

“I haven't seen them play like that all year,” said Jerome coach Stan Richter. “We challenged them at half.”

But it was Miller again and again frustrating the Mountain Home defense.

“Dustin Miller did a heck of a job running the football,” Richter said. Miller started the second half comeback with 3:24 left in the third quarter. Miller rushed in the ball and with the kick by Lewis Glassett, the lead was cut to 10-13.

Miller set up the next score with a 38-yard run, and Dan Walters hit Mark Scofield for a score. The kick was blocked and Jerome trailed by a point.

After another Jerome defensive stop, it was Miller again setting up the next touchdown with a big 25-yard run to midfield. He kept the drive alive by rushing for a first down to the 22-yard line.

An offside penalty pushed the ball to the 17-yard line where Walters found Don Lee for the go-ahead score.

Miller capped off the win as Jerome drove 28 yards for the final score. He carried the ball five of the eight plays on the drive and ran the ball in from nine yards out with less than a minute to go.

The victory was the second in a row for Jerome and broke a two-year losing streak against Mountain Home.

Steel curtain may go up for Pirates

The Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — The Rooney family is among the 10 potential buyers for the Pittsburgh Pirates, a list that will soon be cut to two or three finalists, Mayor Tom Murphy said Friday.

“We want to move rapidly,” Murphy said. “We want some definite proposals ... and want them in the next several weeks so we can begin the very serious negotiations.”

The Rooneys, the Steelers' owners for nearly 60 years, are emerging as a surprise entrant in the Pirates' derby. The family has hired an investment firm to analyze the Pirates' financial records. An Rooney II, a prominent Pittsburgh attorney and Dan Rooney's heir apparent as the Steelers' president, confirmed on Thursday the family's interest in the Pirates.

The Rooneys would be the front-runners if they make a bid. The four-time Super Bowl champion Steelers are one of America's most successful pro sports franchises — they turned an estimated $10 million profit last year — and are worth an estimated $145 million.

“The Rooneys would blow everybody else out of the water,” a city official who did not want to be identified said.

Kimberly mows down rival Valley

The Times-News

KIMBERLY — Friday night's Canyon Conference battle between Valley and Kimberly was a tale of two halves.

The Vikings won the first two quarters 14-8, but the Bulldogs reded off 35 unanswered points in the second half to secure a 43-14 homecoming victory.

Things didn't start well for Kimberly. Junior quarterback Luke Mickelson fumbled — one of four recovered by Valley — on the second play from scrimmage, and the Vikings were in business at the Bulldog 43-yard line.

But Valley turned the favor two plays later, with Joseph Stubbs coughing it up. Valley turned the ball over four times during the game, but the Vikings were able to grab an 87-yard lead in the first quarter when sophomore signal-caller Dylan Lish hit senior Mike Tilly with an 11-yard scoring strike. Lish, filling in for the injured Joe Okelberry, added a conversion pass to sophomore Andy Kelso for the early lead.

The Bulldogs tied it up at 9-9 in the second quarter when Mickelson, who was 9-17 passing on 138 yards and added 78 rushing yards on 13 carries, snuck in from three yards out. Jordan Beard, who added 47 rushing yards to his 5-for-125 receiving performance, ran in the conversion for the 8-8 tie.

Valley took the lead at 4:56 of the second quarter when Lish hit Kelso with a 25-yard scoring strike following a Kimberly fumble.

But the rest of the game belonged to the Bulldogs, and Coach Kirby Bright credited the entire team with the victory.

“The offensive line — from Sam Kelsey to Joe Dille to Colter Hodge to Randy Lockwood to Logan Mullins — they did a good job,” Bright said. “We finally got it done tonight.”

“... special teams ... the defensive line.”

It was the defense that controlled the second half. Lish was limited to just two completions and 10 yards passing, and two of his attempts were intercepted and run back for touchdowns by Danny Davis and Matt Oser in the fourth quarter.

In the third quarter, however, the Bulldog defense “finally got fired up,” Bright said.

Huskies post 1st win over Raft River since 1980

By Amy Denton
Times-News writer

HANSEN — Raft River has made a habit of ruining Hansen's football season. But the Huskies didn't let it happen this year, dropping the Trojans 14-6 in a Magic Valley Conference play Friday night.

The last time Hansen beat Raft River was 1980.

An early loss to Raft River has gotten the Huskies off to a slow start in past years, and this win gives Hansen a chance to be competitive in the conference, Hansen coach Brent Bjorn explained. “The kids got up and did what they needed to do,” he said.

The Huskies' two scores resulted from passes from quarterback Brad Myers. Bryan Wright received the first touchdown pass within the first five seconds of the second quarter. Chad Lee got the second from the Raft River 11-yard line on a first-down play.

Hansen's defensive line halted Raft River on the start of the fourth quarter, when Jeff Rigby ran 53 yards for the only Trojan touchdown. Hansen had only 10 players on the field at the time. The Huskies were missing a linebacker and Raft River ran the play at that position.

Otherwise, Hansen frustrated the Trojan offense, also stopping them on several fourth-down plays.

“Our line was able to put enough pressure on their quarterback so that they couldn't run what they wanted,” Bjorn said.

The Huskies' first scoring drive covered 56 yards and was keyed by a third down pass from Brad Myers to B.J. Myers and an illegal participation penalty on a punt attempt.

A 29-yard pass to B.J. Myers set up Lee's touchdown reception with 1:34 left in the third quarter.

Raft River answered that touchdown on its next possession. A fumble recovery, by Kody Young and key hits from Chet Stone and Ryan Gunnell thwarted the Trojans' last three scoring attempts.

Nation's top 2 teams face first real tests today

The Associated Press

It's put-up-or-shut-up time for the Florida Gators.

After flinching from No. 1 to No. 2 and back again, the Gators can either earn the top spot or show they don't belong Saturday when they play No. 15 Tennessee in a night game in Knoxville, Tenn.

It promises to be ugly, and not just because rain is forecast. The schools' teams come to really dislike each other since they became SEC divisional rivals five years ago.

“If we were 100th in the country and Florida was 99th, this would be a hostile game,” Tennessee guard Kevin Mays said.

“The last four years the tradition has been built. It's a very intense game,” he said.

In Gator country, the feeling is the same. “I think our fans have come to despise Tennessee in a way, and that atmosphere kind of carries over onto the field,” Florida wide receiver Chris Doering said. “It'll be a heated matchup.”

Other featured matchups Saturday involving top-ranked teams have No. 13 UCLA visiting No. 2 Nebraska and No. 10 Wisconsin visiting No. 7 Colorado.

Elsewhere in the Top Ten, No. 3 Florida State is at Wake Forest, No. 6 Penn State plays host to Iowa and No. 8 Notre Dame is at Michigan State.

The top 25 schedule also has LSU at No. 11 Auburn, No. 12 Alabama at Arkansas, Tulane at No. 16 North Carolina, No. 18 Virginia Tech at Boston College, Texas Tech at No. 21 Oklahoma, Colorado State at No. 22 BYU, and Pittsburgh at No. 23 Ohio State.

Florida (2-0) also will be trying to beat a ranked team on the road for the first time in eight tries under Steve Spurrier. Two of the losses came against Tennessee, and neither was close: the Vols won 45-3 in 1990 and 34-14 in 1992.

“In the '90 and '92 games we lost up there, Tennessee probably at that time in the season may have been a little better team,”

Spurrier said. “I think this is the best team we've taken up there.”

IRS will watch Stakes outcome

NEW YORK (AP) — H. Allen Jenkins, a Hall of Fame thoroughbred trainer, was in his barn at Saratoga when the IRS burst in.

"There were two women and nine or 10 guys," Jenkins recalled. It was several days before the $350,000 Whitney Handicap on Aug. 27, and Jenkins was feeding his veteran racehorse, Devil His Due.

"I told them not to get too close, and I think he took a nip out of one of them," Jenkins said.

The Internal Revenue Service was investigating any possible ownership ties between Edith LiButti, the listed owner of Devil His Due, and her father, who is embroiled in a tax dispute with the revenues.

The IRS tagged Devil His Due and took him under temporary control while the dispute is in court. Now, Jenkins gets his feed money from the IRS, which has set up an escrow account to hold the earnings.

On Saturday, Jenkins will saddle Devil His Due for the feds in the $500,000 Woodward, one of six Grade 1 stakes at Belmont Park that day.

I asked them what they were going to do with the horse. I mean, you can't just put him in a box like a little puppy," Jenkins said. "They said, 'Oh, we'll have you take care of him.'"

It was then up to Jenkins to give the IRS a quick lesson in horse racing economics. The agents apparently thought that if Devil His Due was the Whitney, which he didn't, they could take the $350,000 and call it even.

"I had to explain to them we don't get the whole $350,000," Jenkins said.

Only 60 percent goes to the horse owner. Of that, 10 percent goes to the jockey, 10 percent to the trainer and lesser percentages go to the groom, the stable and the vet. And you don't get any of the entry fees back if you don't win.

"One of them asked me, 'How do you make any money in this business?' I told him we were learning," Jenkins said.

Devil His Due will be one of eight in the 16-mile Woodward, and all have won Grade 1 stakes.

"It's the race of the year, so far," said Seott-Sehulhofer, who will Holy Bull gets a post-workout scrubbing from groomer Bob Coffey Friday in preparation for today's running of the $300,000 Woodward Stakes in New York City.

The older horses will carry 126 pounds under weight-for-age conditions, while the two 3-year-olds, Go for Gin and Holy Bull, get 121 pounds. The race is worth $300,000 to the winner.

The West Coast-based Bertrando won last year's Woodward by 14 lengths in the mud, and he returns from the breeding shed and arthroscopic knee surgery to defend it. Bertrando could force Holy Bull, another front-runner, into a quick early pace, the hope of the handlers of stretch runners like Devil His Due.

This time of year in New York you never know what Mother Nature has in store for you, and our horse is doing real well," said owner Ed Nahom. "I know he's a superior mud horse... Nobody can run with him in the mud."

"The highlight of the earlier stakes could be the duel between Sky Beauty and Dispute.

Sky Beauty, also trained by Jenkins, has raced only four times this year, winning all four, including the Go For Wand at Saratoga on July 24 her last time out. She has won 13 of 16 lifetime starts and has been victorious in all 10 of her races at Belmont Park.

Dispute, trained by Shug McGaughey, won an allowance race at Saratoga on Aug. 5, then was third in the John A. Morris Handicap 16 days later. Dispute gets a huge weight advantage of 13 pounds, drawing 117 to 130 for Sky Beauty.

According to Belmont Park records, no filly or mare has carried 130 pounds under normal handicap conditions in this country since Waya finished seventh in the Sheepshead Bay in 1979 with that impost.

Earlier in the year, Waya won a stakes at Santa Anita under 131 pounds, however, and in 1987 Lady's Secret won the Ruffian under 129.

"It was really surprising," McGaughey's assistant, Buzzy Tenney, said. "That's an awful lot of weight to get, and last year they were talking about these fillies in the same breath."

Oklahoman in European football

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Jim Thorpe starred at the 1912 Olympics and was later honored with a plaque on the ivy-clad walls at Stockholm's Olympic Stadium.

Mike Wyatt came to the Swedish capital a lot less known than his fellow American, but may be linked with Thorpe someday.

The burly, bearded Oklahoman has coached the Stockholm Nordic Vikings to a 10-1 record and within one victory of the inaugural title in the fledgling Football League of Europe.

So instead of a plaque, the Jim Thorpe Trophy will have to do.

Thorpe goes to the winner... of Saturday's championship in Germany, between the Viking and the Hamburg Blue Devils, who split their regular-season games.

The league, funded through corporate sponsor money and private investors, started this season with eight teams from five European countries.

"Next year, they're actually having the guy that did the sculptures at the Pro Football Hall of Fame do a miniature sculpture of Thorpe for the league trophy," Wyatt says.

It will be either a bust or a full body sculpture.

"It's fitting that the new league named its championship trophy after Thorpe. After winning two gold medals at the Stockholm Olympics, Thorpe went on to play professional football with the Canton Bulldogs and in 1920 was named president of the American Professional Football Association, the predecessor of the NFL.

He was inducted into the Hall of Fame in Canton, Ohio, in 1963, 10 years after he died.

Thorpe, who accepted his Olympic medals from Swedish monarch Gustav V with a rather unceremonious "Thanks, King," was also a native Oklahoman and American Indian.

The naturally makes Olympic Stadium a very special place for Wyatt, who claims Cherokee heritage.

"Thorpe was a native American and grew-up in Oklahoma," Wyatt says. "It makes me very proud. It's almost as you can feel the presence when you walk into that stadium. I think it's the same for a Swedish player."

"To be honest, when we played our semifinal at another stadium in Stockholm, I don't think we had the same aura as we do when we play in Olympic Stadium just because it has such a historic significance in sports."

Wyatt won Oklahoma all-state high school honors as a lineman, and a scholarship to the University of Tennessee-Chattanooga, where personal problems cut his career short. He later coached at the University of Wisconsin-Stout and Oklahoma Panhandle State and coached semi-pro ball in Oklahoma City and Wichita Falls, Texas, before heading to Europe.

In Sweden, Wyatt has been reunited with Wisconsin-Stout quarterback Tim Petersen, who became the No. 2 all-time NCAA Division III total offense leader. Petersen led the Football League of Europe in passing (3,027 yards) and touchdowns (37) this season. The Nordic Vikings roster includes six other Americans. They're the only ones getting paid: $1,000 per month plus free accommodation.

"There were three factors that we considered when we brought in the American players," Wyatt says. "We considered their character, that they would be good people; we considered their playing ability obviously, but we also wanted them to be good coaches. A lot of credit has to go to those American players for helping develop our Swedish talent."

The NFL's World League will return with an all-European setup next year, but Wyatt believes that both leagues can co-exist.

New-look Colts will join Steelers in donning old NFL uniforms

The Associated Press

The Indianapolis Colts and Pittsburgh Steelers will don old-style uniforms when they play Sunday. The Colts also hope to utilize an old-style offense: a running game.

"It's a throwback to the old days and it will be fun," Steelers offensive tackle John Jackson said of the uniforms, which are worn all over the league this weekend in honor of the NFL's 75th anniversary.

The Steelers' uniforms are patterned after those of the 1933 football Pirates, the city's original NFL franchise. The Colts will wear duds similar to those Johnny Unitas wore in leading the '58 Colts to the championship.

In other games Sunday, it will be Arizona at Cleveland, Buffalo at Houston, Green Bay at Philadelphia, Minnesota at Chicago, New England at Cincinnati, New Orleans at Tampa Bay, the New York Jets at Miami, the Dallas Cowboys at San Diego, the Los Angeles Raiders at Denver, San Francisco at Seattle, Washington at the Los Angeles Rams, and Washington at the New York Giants, and Kansas City at Atlanta.

On Monday night, Detroit will be at Dallas. The Colts (1-1) have had problems winning in Pittsburgh, and they've never won at Three Rivers Stadium. Since the Steelers (1-1) moved there in 1970, they have beaten the Colts in seven straight, including a 1987 replacement game and a 1974 playoff game played in a blizzard.

But that was before Marshall Faulk arrived in Indianapolis.

Faulk, a rookie, leads the AFC in rushing and has the Colts' first consecutive 100-yard game since Eric Dickerson in 1989. A week after he was named the last Colts rookie to run for 100 yards in each of his first two games.

"This guy can break tackles," Steelers coach Bill Cowher said. "We have to defend the run better than we did against Dallas, and the Colts are going to come in and test us."

Pittsburgh has experience with good runners. In the season opener against Dallas, Emmitt Smith shredded the Steelers' defense for 171 rushing yards.

Even on a team that is next-to-last in the league in rushing defense, theories abound on how to stop Faulk.

"We're going to bang, bang, bang on him all day," linebacker Levan Kirkland said. "You have to know where he's at." Cowher said. "They're going to find a lot of different ways to get the ball in his hands."

Faulk says he's used to attracting such attention. "Everyone has their own idea how to stop me," he said. "I wouldn't even try."

When the Jets take on the Dolphins at Joe Robbie Stadium in Miami, both the longtime AFC East rivals will be bidding for a 3-0 record and sole possession of first place.

"It's hard to win three games in a row in this league starting off the season," first-year Jets coach Pete Carroll said. "I think this is a great matchup."

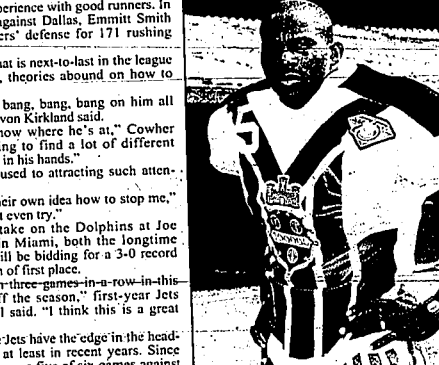

Surprisingly, the Jets have the edge in the head-to-head meetings, at least in recent years. Since 1991, the two teams won five of six games against Miami, including both meetings last season.

"For some reason we just don't play well against them," Dolphins defensive end Jeff Cross said. "There's no excuse for losing to this team twice last year."

Miami has lost more games to the Jets than to any other team. The series record stands at 28-28-1. At Joe Robbie Stadium, New York is 4-3.

"It's a pretty intense rivalry," Miami guard Keith Sims said. "I remember watching the Dolphins and Jets when I was a little kid and it would be 43-42, those kinds of games."

Keeping the ball away from Dan Marino could be the key for New York. The Dolphins' quarterback is off to the best start of his 12-year career with seven touchdown passes and just one interception — on a deflected pass.

"He's about as good as somebody can be," Carroll said. "We're in trouble if he can get his rhythm and get comfortable, then we're going to have our problems."

Marino has thrown for 5,724 yards and 49 touchdowns against New York, more than against any other team. Since 1990, though, he's had nine 300-yard games, but none against New York.

Herzog among possible new Royals managers

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Hank Robinson has a list. George Brett has a list.

Everybody in the Kansas City Royals' front office seems to be carrying around a list of people who might be considered as a successor to Hal McRae as field manager for a team that will start leaning heavily on youth.

"It's hard to say who has what names on what list because we've all got a list," Robinson said when he was announced Thursday that McRae had been fired.

The name Whitey Herzog immediately came to mind. The Royals talked to the one-time Royals manager and longtime Kansas City resident last summer about the job. Herzog managed the Royals to AL West titles in 1976, 1977 and 1978, but was fired after the 1979 season when he was 49.

Herzog went on to manage the St. Louis Cardinals to one of its most successful eras and later worked for the California Angels.

"The name Herzog was his if he wants it," Robinson said. "Does he want it?"

"George and I had conversations with Whitey Herzog this summer," Robinson said. "We didn't specifically offer him a job. But simply put, at that time Whitey was not interested in returning to Kansas City."

Brett, who played for Herzog and is now the Royals' vice president, said he would be getting back in touch with his old manager.

"I would like to have another conversation with him, yes," Brett said. "Back when we visited with him, he was very positive. But he called back the next day or two days later and said he wasn't interested."

Robinson insists the Royals don't have anyone in mind. As for the quality of the team they're looking for, among them would be communication skills — something McRae admittedly lacked.

Jeff Cox, who's successfully managed the Royals' Omaha club, has been mentioned in speculation. But his time may be down the road.

"It's all due respect, I think we're looking at Jeff as a coach right now," Robinson said.

What about Bruce Kison or Jamie Quirk, who were on McRae's staff? "I don't think so," Robinson said. "In all honesty, we have no one in mind to describe the perfect candidate because we don't have any body in mind."

Controversy swirls around continued switching of Olympic sites

ATLANTA (AP) — Coastal Georgia's Tybee Island was dropped Friday as the site for the 1996 Olympic beach volleyball competition, the latest of several Atlanta Games venues to be switched — at times under a cloud of controversy.

With Tybee Island officials charging that local politics took precedence over suitability, Olympic officials announced they were moving beach volleyball to Clayton County's Atlanta Beach, a private recreation facility, about 15 miles south of Atlanta.

The Atlanta Committee for the Olympic Games made the switch after Ruben Acosta, executive director of the International Volleyball Federation, objected to the Tybee site.

While Acosta had endorsed the island near Savannah a year ago, "more thorough study of the venue by his technical staff led him to conclude that the interest of the athletes and the Olympic Games would be best served at another site," said ACOG sports director Dave Maggard.

Among other things, Acosta had said the site was accessible only by a two-lane causeway. Acosta acknowledged Friday that he also wanted to be closer to Atlanta, in part to attract greater media attention to the sport, which has only exhibition status at the 1996 Games.

The Tybee site, about 230 miles from where Atlanta was designated as host for the 1996 Summer Games, Friday's decision leaves the Savannah area with only one Olympic event — yachting.

"I'm extremely upset with ACOG and the Olympic community for the way they have jerked Savannah in general and Tybee Island in specific around with beach volleyball," said state Sen.-elect Eric Johnson, R-Savannah.

The announcement Friday follows by two months ACOG's decision to move the indoor volleyball preliminaries to Athens from Cobb County after nearly a year of protests over that county's anti-gay resolution.

Later last year, ACOG decided to move rowing from a lake in Rockdale County to Lake Lanier near Gainesville after the rowing federation urged the switch. Officials had chosen Rockdale County after deciding it was too expensive to excavate an island at the original Stone Mountain Park site, a project that had been opposed by environmentalists.

Also in 1993, ACOG dropped golf from the 1996 schedule after the proposed site, the Augusta National Golf Club, drew protests over its predominantly white male membership. The International Olympic Committee had also resisted adding a new sport to the program.

And ACOG came close to scrapping plans for its 80,000-seat centerpiece stadium after neighborhood residents and Fulton County commissioners opposed the plans.

Changes also have been made in the sites for badminton, equestrian events, gymnastics, shooting, tennis and weightlifting.

Organizing officials and veterans of past Games say venue changes are a part of staging something as large as the Olympic Games.

"It's not unusual," said Rich Perelman, who runs an event management firm in Los Angeles and was vice president for press operations at the 1984 Summer Games. "Stories of stadiums being nailed together on the day before are legion."

For example, Perelman said Los Angeles Games officials switched their shooting venue five times and didn't finalize it until 1984.

Moving beach volleyball is not a cause for concern, he said. "What people think in 1994 and 1995 is completely irrelevant. What's important is what people see on July 20, 1996."

Despite the disputes, most-of-the-line changes have been made to address logistical or athletic issues, Maggard said.

"These have had specific reasons for being made," Maggard said. "And I think all of these changes have certainly been changes that have been planned."

Taylor relishes end of long road back to top

LAS VEGAS (AP)—Two years ago, the rematch would have been a mismatch.

When Julio Cesar Chavez and Meldrick Taylor met again Saturday night, however, time may have proven a great equalizer.

"I recognize I'm older, but I'm still good," said the 34-year-old Chavez. "I feel very good, very strong, very young."

Chavez, the once invincible Mexican champion, is no longer the swaggering, undefeated fighter who staged an incredible 12th-round rally to stop Taylor 4½ years ago in their controversial split decision bout.

A draw a year ago with Pernell Whitaker in a fight most thought Whitaker won, a loss Jan. 29 to Frankie Randall and a disputed win May 7 in his rematch with Randall has tarnished his once unblemished image.

"I've been the target of a lot of criticism of my last three fights, but I ask why," said Chavez, whose WBC super lightweight title will be at stake. "I never said I was a robot, a superman or a super being. Why is there so much criticism over a loss?"

Perhaps because Chavez, in 90 fights leading up to the first Randall bout, had never lost.

Even when Taylor was on the verge of ending his unbeaten streak March 17, 1990, Chavez somehow found a way to hurt Taylor and then knock him down before referee Richard Steele stopped the fight with only two seconds left.

Lately, however, there has been so much magic. Except for some generous scoring, Chavez might have lost not only to Whitaker but both fights to Randall. And that has boxing experts wondering if this time has finally come.

"It's difficult for me to say if he's slipped or not," said Emanuel Steward, the veteran trainer Chavez brought in after his loss to Randall. "He's had trouble with fast fighters throughout his career. And all his recent bouts have been with fast fighters."

Taylor, a 3-1 underdog, will be no exception. Against Chavez in their first fight, he used his boxing skills and was well ahead on two of the three ringside scorecards when the fight was abruptly stopped.

Taylor's career crumbled after suffering his first loss to Chavez, reaching its low point in 1992 when he was stopped in successive fights by Terry Norris and Cristian Espinoza.

But after swearing off junk food and hooking up with new handlers, Taylor has won three straight fights by knockout and appears much more relaxed and fit than he has in years.

"I'm reincarnated," said Taylor, who is back at 140 pounds after moving up to welterweight, then super welterweight, following his loss to Chavez. "You're going to see the Meldrick you saw in the Olympics. I have much more balance, much more accuracy. My pace has slowed down. I throw punches with more meaning, not just to be throwing them."

Taylor (32-3-1) had Chavez beat in their first fight before he was knocked down by the first round and Steele made a controversial call to end the fight with only two seconds left.

Taylor (32-3-1) never appeared the same after the Chavez loss, a setback he has been aching to avenge.

"Not to have gotten the rematch would have been the black mark on my career," Taylor said. "If I never did anything else, I wanted to avenge that fight. Now they'll have to identify me with the second fight instead of the first. It will be the first time someone's lost to Chavez and comes back and redeems himself."

The Chavez-Taylor fight tops a crowded card filled with six title fights at the MGM Grand hotel.

Among those fighting will be Randall, who thought he was going to get a rubber match with Chavez but ended up in a title fight against WBA junior welterweight champion Juan Coggi of Argentina.

The winners of the two fights are tentatively set to fight in December.

"This unfinished business should start with me," Randall said. "I gave Chavez the opportunity when he lost his title to me. Now I need to knock Coggi out to get back to Chavez."

Other title fights include Puerto Rico's Felix Trinidad defending his IBF welterweight title against Luis Ramon Campas of Mexico; Jesse James Leija of San Antonio defending his WBC super featherweight crown against Gabriel Ruelas of Sylmar, Calif.; Italy's Gianfranco Rosi in an IBF junior middleweight title defense against Vincent Pettway of Baltimore, and WBC strawweight champion Ricardo Lopez of Mexico against Yodanis "Su Saengmorokot" of Thailand.

The Lopez-Saengmorokot and Rossi-Pettway fights will be televised by the Showtime network, while the other four fights will be pay-per-view. The Chavez-Taylor fight is expected to start about 9 p.m. PDT.

Super lightweight Meldrick Taylor battles Julio Cesar Chavez tonight in a rematch of their 1990 bout, won by Chavez.

Nike pays NBA fines for tour

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Nike is sending Orlando's Anfernee Hardaway, Charlotte's Alonzo Mourning and three other players to the Far East to play in exhibition games that are not approved by the NBA.

Dallas rookie Jason Kidd is joining the squad for its last stop in Japan.

Jerome Kersey of Portland, Walt Williams of Sacramento and Lindsey Hunter of Detroit also are on the trip, which comes less than a month before the start of NBA training camps.

Kersey, at 32 the oldest salesman of the group, said he's being fined $20,000 by the Trail Blazers for going on the trip.

Sacramento general manager Geoff Petric said he gave Williams permission to take part in the trip.

"He's been working real hard this summer, rehabilitating himself from some injuries last year and wants to get into good shape for the start of camp," Petric said. "I just thought the opportunity for him to play with some NBA-caliber players was probably good for him. Guys can't get better if they don't play."

Nike spokesman Keith Peters declined to say if any other players were being penalized. But he said the company, the country's No. 1 manufacturer of athletic shoes, would pay any fines.

"The reactions are between the NBA or the team and the player," he said Friday. "The appearances are made between Nike and the player, so we make good on that."

NBA spokesman Jan Hubbard said the players are subject to league fines for participating in games not sanctioned. But no decision has been made by the NBA to penalize anyone.

"There is a good relationship between Nike and the NBA," Hubbard said. "Nike is not promoting this as an NBA tour. It's primarily an appearance tour where the players also are playing some basketball."

Team officials at Orlando, Charlotte, Detroit and Portland did not return phone calls Friday.

The players are to leave Sunday and will play in games in China, South Korea and Japan.

The five-team play the Chinese national team — in Beijing — on Wednesday and the Hyundai team at Seoul, South Korea on Sept. 23. The final stop will be in Yokohama, Japan, where the delegation will split into groups of three to play in exhibition games Sept. 25 as teammates of Japanese players, Peters said.

In addition, the group will conduct clinics in the three countries and will dedicate a public basketball court built by Nike in Seoul.

Peters said Nike has had several similar tours in the past, some of them featuring Michael Jordan and Charles Barkley, but he was unsure whether this was the first time the players had participated in games.

He said he didn't know if local players would be used as substitutes in China and South Korea. Since only five NBA players will be there.

"It's all part of our effort to go into parts of the world that either have a great appreciation for basketball, like Europe, or go into corners of the world where basketball is just beginning to develop a following and expose people to it," Peters said.

China is especially important to Nike, because the company has greatly expanded its shoe manufacturing there and has designs on the huge market the country represents.

Peters said the players obviously will be a big draw in the Far East.

"They're idolized there just like they are here," he said, "and they do stand out in a crowd."

Bodine hits record speed in SplitFire 500 qualification

DOVER, Del. (AP) — After breaking the track record, Geoff Bodine talked about the only thing going wrong with his qualifying run Friday at Dover Downs International Speedway — the driver.

"I didn't run as fast as I practiced," he said after breaking Ernie Irvan's three-month-old mark with a lap of 152:840 mph that gave him the pole for Sunday's SplitFire 500. "Don't ask me how I did it."

The pole was Bodine's fifth this season and the 10th achieved on Hoosier tires, which is waging war this year with Goodyear on the Winston Cup circuit.

Goodyear has taken the top qualifying position in 13 races.

"I was going down the backstretch and I didn't have my hands on the right place on the steering wheel," Bodine said. "Teamwork, not the driver, won the pole."

Bodine, who also owns the Ford Thunderbird he drives, told Irvan for the most poles this season, Irvan is recovering from injuries received last month in a crash at Michigan, turned a lap of 151:556 in winning the pole for the Budweiser 500 in June.

Bodine's record-setting effort came on the day Irvan was transferred from a Michigan hospital to be closer to his Charlotte, N.C., home.

"We're just overwhelmed with 'I was going down the backstretch and I didn't have my hands on the right place on the steering wheel.'"

— Geoff Bodine

"I pushed off of four and about knocked the wall down," said Trickle, whose Chevrolet Lumina qualified at 152:730. "I got sideways and probably lost about 15 hundredths. That would have been a new track record for sure."

Burton will occupy the inside of the second row in Sunday's $935,461 race. He lapped at 152:685 in a Chevrolet.

Defending race champion Rusty Wallace, who also won the Budweiser 500 in June, didn't do as well as expected. He wound up 10th in a Ford.

The 40th is far better than Winston Cup points leader Dale Earnhardt, who failed to make the field in the first day of qualifying. The first 20 cars locked in spots. The remainder, including Earnhardt, 27th in a Chevrolet, must qualify Saturday, when positions 21 through 40 will be filled.

Mark Martin, third in the points race behind Earnhardt and Wallace, qualified fourth in a Ford at 151:912.

Bodine's brothers, Brett and Todd, also put their cars near the front of the field: Brett was fifth and Todd ninth.

Indy racer preps for grand prix

NAZARETH, Pa. (AP) — Robby Gordon says he isn't quite as brave as he used to be.

But he got the wrong idea. The change is simply a measure of the growing maturity in the 25-year-old Indy-car driver.

"I was a braver driver three years ago," the movie-star handsome Gordon said Friday between practice sessions at Nazareth Speedway for Sunday's Bosch Spark Plug Grand Prix.

"I feel I'm a better driver today in taking calculated risks instead of just making instant decisions," he added. "Most of all, though, I want to win races. When it comes to the last 20 laps, we're going to just suck it up and go for it."

With two races remaining, Gordon, in his second full season on the PPG Cup circuit, is locked in a tight battle with Michael Andretti and Paul Tracy for third place in the season standings.

Al Unser Jr., winner of eight of 14 races this season, already has locked up the season title, while Emerson

Fitipaldi is virtually assured of second place with 151 points.

Gordon's qualifying on the one-mile oval, Andretti, a former series champion, holds third place with 114 points, followed by Tracy 109 and Gordon 104. Nigel Mansell, the defending series champion who will return to Formula One following the end of the Indy-car season, is a longshot for third place with 83 points and a maximum of 84 remaining.

Unser, Fitipaldi and Tracy are teammates on the powerful Marlboro Team Penske, and Gordon said, "If you can split the Penskes, you've definitely done something with a class chassis this year. And to be ahead of Mansell, who is using the same equipment, well, that tells you what a great job the guys on the Walker Racing team have done this year."

Gordon feels so good about the way the team has developed this year that he has signed a two-year contract extension with an option year in 1997. And it wasn't for lack of other opportunities.

"I was talking to Carl (Haas), talking to Chip (Ganassi), talking to a bunch of people," Gordon said. "They were all great opportunities, but (team sponsor) Valvoline and Derrick (Walker) have been real good to me. It was only fair to sign with them."

Gordon has won his first two career poles and has six top-five finishes, including a career-best second, so far this season.

"I feel this team can win," he said. "Look at what we've been doing on a relatively small budget. The budget for my car is a third of what Carl (Haas) is spending on each of his cars."

Both Valvoline and Cummins are upping the ante next year and what's going to happen if we're going to get an equal budget to some of the top teams — maybe a championship."

What's most important to Gordon right now is getting to Victory Lane.

"We're shooting for third in the championship, but we've been in the pole, led races and we've gotten points," Gordon said. "Now I'd like to win a race."

NHL, players seek contract accord

NEW YORK (AP) — The NHL and its players union met Friday afternoon in their continuing negotiations over a contract, NHL commissioner Gary Bettman refused to say what came up, but did say what didn't.

"The issue of the rollbacks never came up," Bettman told reporters after the first bargaining session with the NHL Players Association in more than a week.

Bettman referred to his 19-point plan to cut back on players' benefits in training camp, including travel expenses, meal money and insurance. The sanctions angered players, but didn't stop them from reporting to training camp at their own expense.

NHL players don't start receiving their paychecks until the season starts Oct. 1.

The week's NHLPA told the team's 26 public relations directors that players cannot attend any commercial activities to promote their clubs during training camp.

Pittsburgh Penguins players on Tuesday refused to make television appearances to promote ticket and merchandise sales. The players declined extended interviews with KBL, the Pittsburgh cable television company that owns the team's broadcast rights.

Charitable causes will be assessed on a case-by-case basis. The NHLPA asked the teams to fax details and dates of charity events and the union will determine what, if any, player participation would be appropriate.

Bettman indicated that his rollback plan, included in an Aug. 1 letter to the NHLPA, was responsible for getting the union to the bargaining table.

"I believe it was the letter that jump-started the meetings," Bettman said following Friday's five-hour session. "Up until then, there was a complete unwillingness (on the union's behalf) to negotiate."

Bettman said Friday's meeting was intended by the whole bargaining group. Along with Bettman, that included NHLPA executive director Bob Goodenow and Toronto's Mike Gartner, president of the NHLPA.

At the end of the session, Goodenow left hurriedly and wouldn't stop to talk to reporters. Presumably, he was on his way back to Toronto.

Bettman, by contrast, came out to talk even though he didn't have much to say.

"I'm not going to characterize the meetings," Bettman said. "Bob Goodenow had no more information than that, and I apologize (for Goodenow leaving so quickly)."

Bettman said he would be talking by phone with Goodenow over the weekend and "schedule something for next week."

Asked if anything positive came out of Friday's meeting, Bettman said: "It's better to be meeting than not meeting. As long as we're talking and continue to meet, that's good. You can't make a deal without meeting."

Bettman repeated the company line that he has used over the course of the negotiations.

"We're working hard and continue to work hard to make a deal," Bettman said.

Then, alluding to the baseball season which has been canceled in the wake of a players' strike, Bettman added:

"What happened in baseball is unfortunate. I've repeatedly said I don't want to be in that position."

The players were expected Friday to make a counterproposal to the owners' stated desire to link revenues and salaries. Players hope to have salaries set by the open market.

The players' ultimate goal is more liberalized free agency. They fear the owners will lock them out unless an agreement is reached by the opening of the season.

Once again, Bettman rejected any such notion.

"I have never said anything about a lockout by the league," Bettman said.

He added:

"We're going to do the best we can (to work out an agreement). We will leave no stone unturned."

Churches that teach reach young

Several times in the past months, young people in their 20s have asked me to recommend churches where they can learn about the faith.

There are two reasons for this, I think, and I'll let you decide if they are their own. First, this is a generation that has more than its share of curiosity. They travel widely, study earnestly and ask a lot of questions. They will not be denied information, and they will go to great lengths to find sources that will enrich their lives.

Second, the church has failed to educate this generation. As a result, they feel inadequate in their knowledge of the Bible and faith issues. For some reason, Christianity ceased up on this group of people in terms of their education.

Clark Morphey
Faith today

Memorizing Bible verses was seen as educationally backward, and sometimes Sunday school and summer camps and schools became nothing more than opportunities to make a pair of Jesus sandals and play with water balloons.

So, they are hungry to learn. But this hunger comes exactly at a time when many congregations have folded up their Bible studies and tucked them away in the closet.

But here is a tip for church leaders everywhere: It will be the learning churches that will succeed with the twenty-something generation. If the church can't teach, these young people will stay home and read on their own.

It is not an unusual phenomenon. Suddenly corporations are striving to become learning organizations because they know if their workers do not develop new skills and improve their knowledge base, the company is not going to grow, expand and improve. And the second big reason to become a learning organization is to achieve a quality product.

So, corporations are setting up in-house training programs that teach workers new skills and company values and reinforce safety and quality standards. All of that is aimed at making the corporation a healthier and happier place to work.

You may wonder what this has to do with the church. My contention is this: The church that stops learning becomes a petty and stagnant place and eventually will feel the effect through the loss of members and revenue.

But the problem is, churches have a difficult time getting people to learn. The biggest reason is time. People are busy, and a midweek Bible study is simply not going to draw huge crowds.

That means clergy have to take advantage of the Sunday-morning worship hour. Sometimes these teaching moments will be very brief, a few moments to impart an enduring message.

For instance, your worship bulletin can be used as a teaching tool. Print a two-paragraph explanation of a biblical text. Or write about a hymn.

If you make announcements during the service, take the opportunity to explain one of the doctrines of the church. Call it the "Did You Know Minute."

Explain, for instance, what your denomination believes concerning holy communion, baptism, marriage or death. While those church practices and doctrines are complicated, you can come up with a two-minute explanation and then add to it during subsequent worship services.

Keep all of your teaching short and simple. Never tell the people more than they want or need to know because they will shift into a selective hearing mode. In other words, they will stop listening.

Of course, the best and most leisurely moment for teaching is during the sermon. There may be Sundays when you will want to preach an expository sermon, but is making the preaching text line by line with interpretation and application to human life. But some preachers will find that method of preaching awkward.

So you may want to do a breakout in the middle of the sermon. When you've made an interesting point, you may stop and give a little more explanation of the circumstances in the society at the time the Bible verse was written, for instance.

The important thing is to keep those parishioners learning. Use every conceivable method and moment. Set up a committee of teachers who will help you come up with teachable moments. Now's your chance. The twenty-somethings are begging to learn.

Silent Sundays?

By Steve Crump
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A caramel-colored B-flat swells up from a bank of pipes and gathers force as it rises, as to heaven, resolving into a chord.

The chord hangs at the apex of the chapel like an unkempt promise, redolent with unfinished business. For if it's anything, the music of a pipe organ is the music of expectation.

That expectation is of a feeling both familiar and visceral, of a million Sunday mornings gone by that were filled with best clothes and best intentions. Bach or Brahms or Schubert preserved them in the amber of sacred music, to be recalled from memories impossibly old or a heartbeat distant.

But maybe not forever.

"Being a church organist is not a way to make a living, not in a small town," said Clarence Dudley, music director of Twin Falls First United Methodist Church, and steward of perhaps the Magic Valley's most historic pipe organ. "For so many people, organ music is a part of the tradition of going to church, but the reality is that in many churches, it may be much longer."

There are 324 churches, chapels, meeting halls, wards and stake houses in the Magic Valley, about 35 percent of which have organs. And there just aren't enough organists to go around.

"I have one organ student right now," said Don Oakes, professor of music at Boise State University. "But I know of many music schools that have discontinued organ instruction because there aren't any."

That may be the BSU program's fate soon. A check of Twin Falls-area piano and organ teachers failed to turn up a single organ student.

"I just don't see much interest in it," said Barbara Mix, piano teacher and organist at the First Presbyterian Church in Twin Falls. "When I go to competitions, the young organists I see are mostly men, and most of them look like they come from a Princeton background. We just don't have many people like that around here."

"If you have good piano skills, you can be a good organist, but not many people take the time any more," said Helen Allen, a Twin Falls piano teacher and retired church organist. "They're too busy, or it's too difficult."

That's put churches in a bind, but it may be temporary.

The truth of the matter is that churches don't need organs any more," said Dennis McCracken, organist and music director of the Episcopal Church of the Ascension in Twin Falls. "There are guitars, electronic keyboards, all kinds of alternatives. Congregations are going to find that it's harder to maintain and justify organs — especially traditional congregations that are used to it."

The truth of the matter is that churches don't need organs any more," said Dennis McCracken, organist and music director of the Episcopal Church of the Ascension in Twin Falls. "There are guitars, electronic keyboards, all kinds of alternatives. Congregations are going to find that it's harder to maintain and justify organs — especially traditional congregations that are used to it."

That's certainly the case in the Twin Falls Methodist Church, where the 1920 Austin pipe organ is the centerpiece of an historic church building in which its members take great pride.

Since 1985, they've raised and spent more than $20,000 on the restoration project, and they'll need at least $10,000 more. "We've replaced the console, added and replaced several ranks of pipes and revoiced the reed pipes," Dudley said. "The leather wind regulator was replaced, and we've replaced the leather pouches controlling the air for each pipe are very fragile and need to be replaced in the next few years."

Dudley said support for the restoration project from the congregation has been enthusiastic, and that the church's current organist, Sara Benton, is committed and talented. But he worries about the generation that will follow her.

"If you come out of a college program, you go to your first job interview and they say, 'Well, we can give you $300 a month. Can you live on that?'"

"The truth is," he added, "that there are fewer and fewer organists and they're being spread thinner and thinner."

"I'm very happy where I am," McCracken said, "but in general, compensation for church organists is a joke. The fact is that churches could be paying organists more; they just don't choose to do so."

The rule of thumb is that churches should be spending 10 percent of their budgets on organists," Oakes said. "The reality is more like 1 to 3 percent."

That means that most church organists, Oakes included, make a living doing something else.

"It's a part-time job that requires almost a full-time commitment," said Jan Olsen, organist at St. Edward's Catholic Church in Twin Falls. "There are one or two more services on Sunday, sometimes services in the middle of the week, practices, weddings and funerals."

All of that, McCracken said, for what's increasingly becoming just part of the equation of sacred music.

In more and more churches, you see separate services, one of which is for guitars and jazz and rock and the other which is for more traditional sacred music," he said.

"It's possible for someone with a little musical training to get by on an electronic keyboard or a digital piano," said Milo Price, who owns a Twin Falls organ repair-business. "And those things cost a lot less than an electronic organ or a pipe organ. I even know of a pastor in one church who conducts the service and does the music, too."

Even the full-sized Allen and Rogers electronic organs, equipped with sound cards, are being built to closely mimic the deeper, richer, full sound of the pipe organs.

"On my organ at church, I have the capability of recording the music for an entire service," McCracken said. "I don't even have to be there; somebody just has to be there to punch the buttons."

That distresses lovers of pipe organs like Dudley, who sense something precious at risk.

"I think there's a big difference between an instrument that's basically a recorder and one that can produce the sounds a pipe organ can make," he said. "I think that's worth keeping."

Area farmer will now sow seeds of salvation

TWIN FALLS — Kelley Golay has made the move from harvesting crops to harvesting souls.

Golay, 34, has been a farmer just about all his life. But last Sunday, he was installed as Director of Education and Discipleship at the Twin Falls Reformed Church.

"While I was farming, I decided God was leading me into the ministry," said Golay, who was raised on a farm in Jerome.

He had graduated from Liberty University in Lynchburg, Va., in 1987. That's where he had college friends by Jerry Fallwell.

"He's a very normal guy," said Golay of the well-known evangelist.

Both Golay and his wife had often dreamed of going into the ministry together.

When the staff position opened up, the Golays knew the time was right for them to follow their hearts.

Kelley Golay will be in charge of adult and children's education at the church and will do some preaching. Janette Golay will help her husband however she can.

Brian Vriesman is senior pastor at the church.

Since Golay has been farming with his father, he won't need to sell off any land. In fact, he might not leave the tractor too far behind.

"I still love farming," he said. "I might help Mom and Dad on my day off."

There are all kinds of harvests.

Russian missionary asks where to start

By H.R. Weixel
Times-News correspondent

CHELIVABINSK, Russia — A man "without a passport" at the lobby of a magnificent hotel in Moscow. Although a Russian businessman, he spoke fluent English as he greeted us who were obviously Americans. His name is Sergei Kespokov, age 55. His home is in St. Petersburg.

Kespokov readily gave his opinions about economic conditions in Russia and America. He spoke about world trade, high technology involved in satellite transmissions and abortion. There was an eagerness in his voice as he talked about possibilities for establishing a form of government in his country that would stabilize his great nation and improve living conditions for the people.

Seizing the wide-open opportunity to bring God's power and love into the conversation, I asked, "Mr. Kespokov, what do you think about God and the people's need of a savior?"

She is working with a team of five other Americans, teaching scriptural principles in elementary schools. She is living in a commune, out of a backpack, waiting for an apartment to become available.

struggling for what he wanted to say in reply. Then he said, "I didn't study anything about gods, so I know of nothing to say about that subject."

I tried again to break through the blank look on his face and bring back the enthusiastic conversation we had been having.

"What about creation — the stars and moon, the earth, trees, animals, mankind — you and I — somehow all this had to be created."

Kespokov said, "I am here now; it is nothing to think about."

With that, he stood and walked into the large crowd of people milling around the lobby. I never saw him again.

This was the challenge I needed as I boarded a train for Chelivabinsk about 1,100 miles east of Moscow. Chelivabinsk is a town that was once only known by a number. No one left nor entered the closely guarded city except approved officials.

Once in Chelivabinsk, the challenge to bring hope, to a wonderful people who know no hope by teaching Russian teachers how to teach the Bible will become even more real. The question is, "Where does one start?"

These teachers know nothing of Jesus. For 70 years, they have been taught there is no God, and they sincerely believe that fact. They have never even held a Bible, much less read one.

My interpreter said if I tell them about this Jesus, they will think it is a fairy tale.

and spoke very strongly against it," Davis said.

One person has left the church over the vote, and another family said they were considering it, he said.

"I am concerned about those people," Davis said. "It's heartbreaking to have people leave or threaten to leave."

"But there's a larger issue. We as Christians expect our way to be easy, that everything in our church should be calm. In effort to preserve the calm, we ignore important issues and lose our relevance to the larger world."

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints was formed in 1860 following a split from the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, or Mormon Church.

Sorting out the truth

can be tough today
Clergy corner

"The truth" becomes confusing when everybody seems to have it, and none of it agrees ...

This bit of wisdom from an old cowboy makes a good bit of sense in our day as so many contrary voices try to speak for God, the Bible and the world. It is a real question that Pilate did when Jesus was brought to him for judgment, "What is truth?"

That is a very good question to ask in today's world of lightning-bolt information and even quicker dissemination of news can we know what is the truth about God when there are so many different ideas, ranging from New Age philosophies to biblical fundamentalism?

Without pretending to join the ranks of the modern, let us state the way the guidelines that I use to judge the credibility of the ideas and opinions I hear.

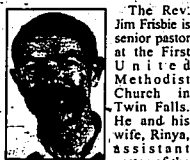

First, when I meet someone who seems to have all the answers, I quickly draw the conclusion that the truth in them is that they are wrong. The world has few sages. The one I met in Africa turned out to be a pot smoker. I haven't met another one since.

Second, real truth such as Jesus taught has a consistent sense of paradox that drives the phases of this world nuts. Sayings like, "The first shall be last and the last shall be first" and "Those who find their life will lose it, and those who lose their life for my sake will find it," tend to twist our minds into pretzels.

Third, real truth most often opens up more questions than it answers. Those who use the Bible as a doctrinal encyclopedia miss the mind-stretching potential of such writings as the Book of Job or Paul's letter to the Romans.

Whenever I am tempted to accept the easy words of some anti-gay doctrinal system, I remember that any "god" that I can fully understand has to be intellectually smaller than I am. So I listen to the loud and preposterous with a nod and a smile, then walk away, convinced that the real truth of God revealed through Jesus Christ is rich with mind-expanding mystery and paradox.

In that, I can rejoice in what I know — and what I don't know!

Church offers largely gay congregation home

BOISE (AP) — The Metropolitan Community Church, a largely gay congregation that was blocked from meeting in a historic chapel at Boise State University, may finally have a home.

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, which is different from the Mormon Church — has offered the use of its Boise sanctuary. An RLDS leader said Proposition One, the anti-gay rights initiative on Idaho's Nov. 8 ballot, played into the decision.

"It seemed like an appropriate time in our community to make a statement of love and caring and hospitality for a group of people whose lives are being made more difficult because of Proposition One," said Paul Davis, RLDS branch president. "This is the right thing to do at any time."

Metropolitan Community Church's board unanimously accepted the lease offer on Tuesday, Pastor Tyrone Sweeting said the congregation will vote on the offer after services Sunday.

"We've very excited and hopeful of this opportunity," Sweeting said. "It will certainly give an atmosphere that's pretty conducive to prayerful worship."

Sunday evening services in the new church could begin Oct. 2. The RLDS church has offered a lease of $150 a month plus $35 for each special event, such as a wedding or Christmas service.

Metropolitan Community Church has been looking for a sanctuary for five years. The church had expected to meet in Christ Chapel, the small church at Boise State University, last July. But the building's governing board blocked the move, saying regular services could not be held in the building. The decision was based on a 30-year-old policy restricting denominational use of the building. Only weddings and other special services are allowed there.

Sweeting said at the time, "Homophobia played a role in the decision." But Christ Chapel's governing board said the type of congregation had nothing to do with the decision.

The Metropolitan Community Church now meets at a community theater.

The RLDS congregation voted 31-24 to invite Metropolitan members to worship in their church, but the decision was not easy.

"Some people felt strongly we should not let them use the building

Catholic priests preach against doctor-assisted suicide measure

PORTLAND, Ore. — Roman Catholic priests in Oregon will preach against a doctor-assisted suicide ballot measure, and then they will pass around the collection plate to get money to defeat the initiative.

Archbishop William J. Levada of the Diocese of Portland and Bishop Thomas J. Connolly of the Diocese of Baker have instructed their priests to take these actions against the Ballot Measure 16.

Former Rams star Grier promotes Habitat for Humanity

DAYTON, Ohio — Former Los Angeles Rams star Roosevelt Grier urged a church congregation to help to make a difference in the community.

Grier visited the Salem Church of God in suburban Clayton recently to help start a home-building project with Habitat for Humanity. He played the guitar, sang and told stories to youngsters.

Grier said people must understand that everyone is valuable.

"But where do you give that? How do you let the other guy know he's important to the team?" Grier asked the 2,000 people attending.

"I earnestly ask our Catholic people to contribute generously to this 'in-new' collection, and I hope that our efforts will be levieds throughout the state of Oregon," Levada said.

In 1992, California Catholics gave $1.6 million in special collections to defeat a similar assisted-suicide measure.

Measure 16, on the Nov. 8 ballot, would allow terminally ill patients to take prescriptions to end their lives. The law would be the first of its kind in the country.

Catholic teaching has long held that life is sacred from conception and that suicide is a sin.

Boise churches join to pray for healing of anti-gay bitterness

BOISE — A coalition of Boise church leaders will conduct special services every Friday through the Nov. 8 election to "heal" the bitterness and misunderstanding surrounding Idaho's anti-gay rights initiative.

About 30 people joined Fink in prayer last week at the Ahavath-Beth Israel Synagogue. The group attending the noon service represented about 10 different faiths, Fink said.

Voices of Faith, an interdenominational group, is sponsoring weekly services at the synagogue that will be led by representatives from various local churches. The group maintains "religion is being wrongly used as a political tool in the debate over Proposition 1."

The measure sponsored by the Idaho Citizens Alliance would prohibit state laws or local ordinances protecting homosexuals from discrimination. It also would ban same-sex marriages, which are not recognized by Idaho law, preclude the use of public money to portray homosexuality as acceptable, and require libraries to segregate books on homosexuality from minors.

Voices of Faith was formed in February 1992. It is opposed to Proposition One, but representatives said that is not the only item on the agenda.

Catholic bishop wants to stop bingo, gambling to raise money

WINONA, Minn. — A Roman Catholic bishop in southern Minnesota has called on churches and parochial schools to stop using bingo and other forms of gambling to raise money.

"We consider gambling as a regular source of church income to be inappropriate," Bishop John Vlazny says in a letter published in the September edition of the Diocese of Winona's newspaper.

"Dependence on gambling as a regular fund-raising activity detracts from the spiritual blessings received from sacrificial giving," he wrote.

The Winona diocese includes 20 counties spanning the width of southern Minnesota. Vlazny's statement is strongly worded, but carries no absolute mandate for the 123 parishes and 29 Catholic schools in the diocese.

To make up for lost gambling revenue, the diocese plans to do more to encourage greater giving by parishioners.

Financial lawsuit of Christian Science Church will proceed

BOSTON — A lawsuit alleging financial mismanagement by the directors of the Christian Science Church will be allowed to proceed over church objections that civil court lacks jurisdiction over religious organizations.

Suffolk Superior Court Judge J. Harold Flannery rejected a motion Wednesday to dismiss the case.

Several church members, calling themselves Members for the Manual, filed suit Dec. 30 against 14 present and former church members, accusing them of spending hundreds of millions of dollars in church assets on highly-speculative projects. Only two of the members are identified by name; the rest have remained anonymous.

The sect's attorneys had argued that the case should be dismissed because the First Amendment prevented civil courts from interfering in a religious group's internal affairs. They also argued that individual members of the church had no standing to sue the mother church or its directors.

The church spent more than $300 million on a real estate network and other media enterprises. The Mother Church was shut down in the midst of growing member opposition in 1992.

Gays, lesbians not a new movement

Gays and lesbians have been around for a long time. They are not a new movement, organization or fad. These people are becoming more bold and open concerning their lifestyle and how they think they should be treated in society.

Romans 1:26-27: "Even their women exchanged natural relations for unnatural ones. In the same way, the men also abandoned natural relations with women and were inflamed with lust for one another. Men committed indecent acts with other men."

The God who created the heavens and the earth and who loved man so much that he sent his only begotten son to die for his sins. God says if you will humble yourselves and turn from your wicked ways, I will heal your land. If the homosexuals turn from their wicked ways and repent, God shall forgive them.

God desires that all men and women be saved. The end is nigh, come and see. Be ready.

Noisy congregation lands minister in jail

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — A minister whose noisy congregation landed him in jail said praising God loudly is no reason to be prosecuted.

"It's been quite embarrassing," said the Rev. Robert Wesley Hill, who left jail last Saturday after making bail. They went to quite a lot of trouble all because of worship."

Residents in the quiet Linden Hills neighborhood have registered 72 complaints to the city about the True Apostolic Assembly Church since August 1992.

Some neighbors say they don't like the singing, preaching and amplified music from the 150-member congregation — especially in summer, when the church windows are open. The singing has been accompanied by electric guitar and drums.

Lyonel Norris, an attorney who lives across the street from the church, said he has had trouble working from home because of the constant noise. His 3-year-old daughter calls the church "the singing house" and doesn't want to go to sleep at night when she hears it.

"I don't care if it's Pink Floyd, the Rolling Stones, Lee Cube or Rev. Hill's church," Norris said. "For me, and for the vast majority of people who live in this neighborhood, the issue is only noise."

But church members say the neighborhood doesn't understand their joyful style of worship.

"This is lively, praising worshipping. We don't feel like our praise of God should be limited by man," said Marie Hill, the pastor's wife. "I don't think people understand the kind of worship service we have."

Hill has been ticketed a number of times for violating the city noise ordinance. After he failed to show up for court date in August, authorities issued a bench warrant for his arrest. Hill said he was out of town at the time of his court appearance.

Neighbors say the problem could be resolved simply by the church turning down the volume.

Pollution control inspectors have checked out the noise levels during the services. In a recent report, an inspector recorded decibel levels between 68 and 80, let alone the city's limit of 55 over this neighborhood. The city can register around 90 decibels, according to city officials.

City Council member Steve Minn has arranged for the installation of storm windows at no cost to the church and is raising funds for air conditioning so that church members won't need to open windows on hot days.

Not everyone in the neighborhood complains about the noise, however.

"It's beautiful," said neighbor Tracey Kacette. "It's gorgeous. I happen to love it. I hear happy, happy voices and great music. It's loud, but it's not obnoxious. It's not like a jackhammer."

Sexual exhibit opens, closes at gallery run by nuns

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Sculptures of genitalia. A painting of an angel having intercourse on an altar. Madonna's next book? Try the latest exhibit at an art gallery run by Roman Catholic nuns.

The nuns and the Archdiocese of San Antonio have been besieged by critics of the exhibit. The archbishop has declared himself "highly offended, insulted and hurt at this art."

And on Tuesday, one day after the exhibit opened, it was shut down until further notice for review by the religious order that operates the gallery.

"We apologize for any confusion or hurt that the community has felt," said Edna Perez-Vega, spokeswoman for the Sisters of Charity of the Incarnate Word, an order of about 500 nuns, throughout the United States and Peru.

The exhibit of works by Houston artist Donell Hill, titled "Spiritual, Sensual, Sexual," opened on Monday at a renovated century-old bannell called "A Center For Spirituality and Art."

Sister Alice Heiden, the gallery's director, said she prayed before the exhibit went up and decided the work should be shown because "sexuality is a tremendous gift from God."

"I am very much opposed to pornography," she said. "Yet, I do not believe this exhibit is pornography. It's a sacred rendition of the beauty of sexuality."

John Gallaher, a 65-year-old Catholic who saw a photo of the work in the newspaper, had a different take on it.

"I've never seen such a sacrilegious pornographic display in a Catholic institution in my life," he said. Gallaher showed up at the gallery Tuesday to see the work for himself but found the gallery closed.

The order received about 100 angry calls Monday and Tuesday. The archdiocese, which doesn't oversee the nuns, said it received hundreds.

"I was personally shocked to see on television and in the printed media the nuns' gallery exhibit links sex and faith," Archbishop Patrick F. Flores said in a statement.

"I was highly offended, insulted and hurt at this art," being exhibited under the umbrella of the works of the Sisters of Charity of the Incarnate Word.

Among the works are flesh-colored clay sculptures of genitalia in flowerlike formations, and oil paintings depicting sexual intercourse. The painting, "Initiation," depicts an angel having intercourse at an altar.

The exhibit also includes a collection of nuns' letters about AIDS, depicting the plight of people with AIDS. One painting shows a man burning on a cross; another depicts a woman with her children next to a brick wall with syringes overhead.

Ms. Hill acknowledged she was surprised the nuns wanted to exhibit her work. "They're so in tune with their higher selves. They know that not believe this exhibit is pornography. It's a sacred rendition of the beauty of sexuality."

Ms. Hill said she was disappointed with the decision to close the exhibit, even temporarily. But she added: "I understand where they are coming from. They have their faith. I am without judgment."

The Rev. Henry Lyons of St. Petersburg, Fla., center, newly elected president of National Baptist Convention U.S.A., Inc., moves through a congratulatory crowd following the group's election at the New Orleans Convention Center.

President heeds 'Divine mandate'

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The Rev. Henry J. Lyons says he was first told around age 11 by his pastor that he would one day be president of the National Baptist Convention U.S.A. Inc.

In 1966, during his seminary training at Morehouse School of Religion in Atlanta, "God quite emphatically gave me my marching orders."

Before he was married 23 years ago, he asked his wife if she could live with the rigors of being married to the head of the nation's largest black church. And prior to assuming the pulpit at Bethel Metropolitan Baptist Church in St. Petersburg, Fla., he gave his congregation the same warning about his intentions.

So in a sense it was a prophecy fulfilled when Lyons narrowly defeated the Rev. W. Franklyn Richardson, convention general secretary, and three other candidates last week to become the convention's third president in the last 42 years.

Now comes the hard part. Lyons takes over the convention presidency at a time when many black colleges are in trouble, black youths are turning to drugs in significant numbers and Islam, crime and violence have reached a crisis stage in many communities where the convention's 33,000 churches are located.

"I come to this moment with a lot of humility. I really do have a sense of service," said the 52-year-old Lyons, president of the Florida General Baptist Convention.

Having received just over a third of the total vote, the first thing Lyons did after his victory was announced was to pray for unity.

"I don't have a minute for reprisal," Lyons said in a later interview. "We've got to lift the ground running."

In restructuring the convention, the Florida pastor has said he wants to expand the Home Mission Board to address issues such as AIDS, economic discrimination and other issues of importance to black Americans.

On the political front, Lyons said the 8 million-member convention will be a more active force in Washington, working closely with the president and groups such as the Congressional Black Caucus.

"We've got to let it be known we will not be taken for granted," Lyons said.

In particular, one project Lyons said he would like to see the convention take the lead on is to help develop mentoring programs pairing adult church members with youths in the community.

"I don't mean some football player," Lyons said. "I mean some John Doe who gets up to go to work every morning." Lyons said, "We have to get to our children.

That's our first priority."

Another priority promised by Lyons is to increase financial aid to struggling black schools.

But to finance his proposals and to make the church a major player on the American religious scene, Lyons also realizes the convention is going to have to reach a lot deeper into the tills of its 33,000 churches.

To replace the current system in which churches pay a set fee ranging from $100 for smaller churches to $1,200 for the largest churches to register with the convention, Lyons is proposing a system more like the Southern Baptist Convention, where churches give a percentage of income to a national cooperative program.

The money will come, Lyons said, as the convention also offers its members regular, audited financial reports that show how the funds are being spent.

For 50 years, Cursillo helps people renew their faith

Dallas Morning News

He prays. He reflects. He reveals. With his hands clasped together at his lap, Daniel Segovia thanks God for another day of living. He says he must devote his life to helping others.

The faithful have on this summer evening gathered at a meeting hall next to Our Lady of Lourdes, a church in West Dallas. The murmur of voices is not unlike that of the confessional.

Segovia, a dark-haired, somber man, and about 60 people converse in small groups. They are participating in a monthly reunion of local Spanish-speaking followers of Cursillo, an international movement in the Roman Catholic Church whose national headquarters are in Dallas.

With origins in Spain, Cursillo means "short course" in Spanish, and the weekend of Aug. 20 marked its 50th anniversary.

Men and women in single-sex groups are introduced to Cursillo through short courses, or three-day retreats, and for years afterward they meet regularly as a way to energize their faith.

"I found meaning to everything. I do in my life," says Segovia, 41, a maintenance worker who joined Cursillo in 1988. "What happens can be good or bad, but God is there at all moments."

The movement's first unofficial meeting took place a half-century ago on the island of Mallorca, Spain, says Tom Sarg, executive director of the National Cursillo Center.

The movement, he says, has about 850,000 followers worldwide. It operates in more than 180 dioceses across the United States.

In the Catholic Church of the 1940s, in Spain and elsewhere, "the role of the laity was very limited," says Sarg, referring to church members not included in the clergy. He describes it this way: "The Catholic Church was: Sit in the pews and pray your dues. Or pray, pray and obey."

The Cursillo movement came as a response to that, he says. A group of lay people in Spain looked for a way to make religion come alive for young people.

In 1957, Cursillo was introduced to the United States by two Spanish army men who were stationed in Waco (Texas) Sarg says. "In 1962, the first English Cursillo was held in San Antonio, Texas."

The National Cursillo Center is recognized as one of about 100 Catholic lay organizations in the United States, says Sheila Garcia, a special assistant at the National Conference of Catholic Bishops in Washington.

The Cursillo retreats are for discussing Scripture. In a series of presentations, lay people, priests, deacons and nuns talk about what it means to be a human being and what motivates us.

Participants learn about God's will, and what they can do to help make the world a better place. They also receive spiritual faith on faith, grace and living as a Christian.

Outside of the curriculum, personal testimonies are given, say members of Our Lady of Lourdes. People admit to their flaws and vices, sometimes confessing to neglect of spouses, parents or children.

BOSTON (AP) — She's 24 years old, an MIT graduate working on a doctorate in cell biology at Tufts University. She's friendly, personable and religious.

And at many colleges, Eliza Mak is not welcome. Mak belongs to the Boston Church of Christ, which in 15 years has swelled from 30 members to about 50,000 worldwide.

It is how it became one of the nation's fastest growing churches has stirred criticism and prompted dozens of colleges to ban it.

Members say the church has flourished because of the appeal of its back-to-basics approach to religion. People tired of the pomp and ritual of traditional churches are drawn to the Boston church's pure dedication to the Bible.

But critics say they are being duped. They say the church is obsessed with growth and will do almost anything to achieve it.

The critics, including former members, say the church smoothes recruits with false friendships — "love bombing," they call it — to lure them into the church and keep them there. It dominates their lives and, they say, threatens them with eternal damnation if they leave.

Church members recruit wherever they can — on the street, in parking lots, and especially on college campuses. They say they are following God's command to proselytize, but their efforts have buttressed the arguments of those who call the church a cult.

But is it a cult? Even some critics don't like the term. The Boston Church isn't like many cults of the past 25 years. Kip McKean, its 40-year-old leader, calls the shots, observers say, but he hasn't made himself a highly visible, charismatic guru. Critics haven't charged him with living luxuriously.

There's no serious concern that the Boston Church of Christ will turn violent, and members don't walk around in trance-like stupors. Indeed, Mak is a more typical member: intelligent, likable, unassumingly polite.

"They are all the things your mother would like you to be," said Robert Randall, associate dean for student affairs at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. "That's one of the biggest problems about them. They're extremely nice people."

The danger critics see are more subtle: a loss of individuality, estrangement from friends and family and members losing control of their lives.

Sherrie Morrill remembers her first encounter with the church. She was approached by a friendly young woman on a New York City street in 1992; she welcomed the woman into her home. She was 28, a special supervisor, and the woman was 21, a home care worker, lonely and struggling to live on a small salary in the big city.

When the woman invited her to church, Morrill said no. "I thought, what are you, some kind of Jehovah's Witness?" But the woman kept calling her and Morrill attended a service.

"I thought it was the most beautiful thing I had ever seen," she said. "People holding hands, praising God. I thought this was really it."

She joined, moved in with members and tithe 10 percent of her gross wages. Her life revolved around the church, with services, Bible studies and little time to rest.

In her free time — on bike rides or Staten Island Ferry trips — she was expected to invite strangers to church, she said. On dates with church members, she and her companion might invite a waiter.

"They told me that everyone else that doesn't belong to this kingdom, everyone else on the outside is not saved, is going to hell," she said.

But when she came home for Christmas, her family had arranged for her to meet an ex-counselor. After three 12-hour sessions, she returned to New York, quit the church and her job and headed home.

Morrill's experience was typical, church critics say. They say the church preys on the weak and lonely to make them feel wanted. It identifies weaknesses of members — perhaps a history of failed romances or drinking problem — and convinces them the problems will recur if they leave.

Society hungry for moral values latches onto book, 'Forrest Gump'

By Tom Schaefer
Knight-Ridder News Service

It's the lack of moral values, stupid. — In case you've been living in a cave, or are brain dead from having watched too many reruns on television, then you may have overlooked two cultural phenomena.

One is William Bennett's "The Book of Virtues" (Simon & Schuster, $27.50), which continues to ride high on several lists of best sellers. And the other is the hit movie "Forrest Gump."

What's the connection? Well, it doesn't take a genius to figure out that more and more people are searching for solid moral values. Both the book and the movie remind us that even though certain truths of life are ignored or ridiculed, they endure.

In "Virtues," Bennett compiles 800-plus pages of poems, stories and essays that underscore what he believes are the values needed for cultural renewal: self-discipline, compassion, responsibility, friendship, courage, perseverance, honesty, loyalty and faith.

Bennett offers parents a way to train hearts and minds and provide a "moral education" — toward the good.

In "Forrest Gump," the main character, who is born with an IQ of 75 and has to wear leg braces as a child, overcomes his "disadvantages" to become a football star, a war hero, a table tennis champion and a self-made millionaire and philanthropist.

Yet, despite his successes, Gump remains a loyal and honest soul; utterly guileless, who never forgets the very same moral teachings that the "Book of Virtues" extols.

No wonder people have latched on to both the book and the movie. In today's culture, such virtues seem fresh and new. The bad news is that we no longer agree on what constitutes virtue and death and what distinguishes truth and error. And without a common framework of reality, we are finding ourselves increasingly confused about moral values.

Cynthia Crossen underscores that point in her book "Tainted Truth: The Manipulation of Truth in America" (Simon & Schuster, $23). She states that our society has become so saturated with data, especially polls and surveys, that people are unable to distinguish self-interest from the public good. The result is a "tacit acceptance of untruth in daily life" and an eroding away of a better in right and wrong.

Other sciences also suffer from this distrust. Was Alar a cancer risk or just a bad hype? Is global warming a threat to humanity or a partial blessing? Are electromagnetic fields a new health hazard or an unwarranted environmental fear?

Who knows? The data, and how we interpret the information, keep changing. The confusion spills over into schools as they try to promote tolerance, but not permissiveness; to be inclusive of ideas and beliefs, but not pious or overly religious; to stress self-esteem, while not undermining the criteria of academic excellence. In that mix, truth and error, right and wrong are often compromised or lost.

And now comes Forrest Gump. The mentally challenged throwback to a simpler age takes on the frenetic '60s and '70s and ends up a winner without ever betraying his roots or his core beliefs.

Gump practices the virtues that Bennett contends for: self-discipline, compassion, responsibility, friendship, work, courage, perseverance, honesty, loyalty and faith. He is sweet when the norm today is to be sour. He is civil when others are acerbic. He is generous while others are selfish. And even in his grief, when those he loves die, he does not succumb to bitterness or despair.

Despite the lack of sophistication and of so-called narrow intelligence, Gump conveys the values many people long to reclaim and to embrace. And they are exactly the values that need to be taught again in our homes, churches, synagogues and schools and to be established as the foundation blocks of our society.
