Cranky voters get their chance

Term limits

Term limits reach 8 statewide ballots for Nov. 8

The Associated Press

Term limits, the '90s mantra of the cranky American voter, returns Nov. 8 on eight statewide ballots. If the measures pass, as expected, the endlessly incumbent politician will be marked for extinction in nearly half the states.

And a hugely successful movement will reach a turning point. Does it rest on its victories, or press on and try to make term limits the law of the land?

The reply to that question also hinges on the U.S. Supreme Court.

On Nov. 29 the court will hear arguments in an Arkansas case brought by the League of Women Voters questioning whether that state, like 16 others that enacted congressional term limits, can dictate federal officials. A ruling is expected next year.

Whatever the outcome, it's likely to be only a bump in the term limits road.

"We want to put this on the ballot for as many people as possible to vote on," said Paul Jacob, executive director of U.S. Term Limits in Washington.

Should the high court throw out congressional term limits, about half the states will already have limits on longevity for state lawmakers and other officials. And proponents of term limits say they will seek a federal law or constitutional amendment to set congressional term limits for all states.

That should be easy, judging from polls showing up to 80 percent of people favor congressional term limits.

States voting on congressional term limits this year: Alaska; Colorado; Idaho; Maine; Massachusetts; Nebraska; Nevada; and Utah (where state legislators already enacted limits for Congress and themselves).

In Colorado, where they've already approved term limits, the referendum aims to reduce the times a House member can get elected from six terms to three.

Nebraska is voting a second time because a court invalidated term limits approved in 1992.

The movement began in Oklahoma, where a successful referendum in September 1990 set limits for state lawmakers. Two months

Resolution 105 sparks hot debate

By Frank E. Lockwood
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS FALLS - If Senate Joint Resolution 105 passes on Nov. 8, a commission - not the Legislature - will be responsible for carving Idaho into legislative districts.

Supporters, including the major party candidates for governor, lieutenant governor, and attorney general, say a commission will make the process more efficient and less partisan.

Detractors, including independent gubernatorial candidate Ron Rankin, say the proposed constitutional amendment is flawed. Rankin blames the proposal on "the liberal element in the Legislature - which is legion at this point" accusing legislators of trying to abdicate responsibility for the matter.

Others, such as the League of Women Voters, have lobbied for the change for years, saying it can save money - and lengthy court fights.

Lorayne O. Smith, the League's Twin Falls chairman, said this could be the last chance to change the system before the year 2000. "Since 1960, every district plan has been challenged in court and has had to be redrawn," Smith said. "Let's see if citizens' commission can do a better job."

"While legislators like to draw the redistricting plans themselves, they can hardly be considered objective when their own seats are involved," she said. Frequently, she said, the plans end up benefiting the politicians - or the party in power - instead of the voters. Commissioners have succeeded in other states, she said, and she wants Idaho to get on board.

The proposal also has strong support from Democratic state Sen. John Peavey of Carey.

Rifleman thought he would die

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON - Francisco Martin Duran, the young Colorado gunman who sprayed the outside of the White House with rifle fire, was formally charged Sunday with possessing a firearm as a convicted felon and damaging federal property. He left what one federal source called "a semi-suicide note."

According to a federal source, Duran - an Army veteran who served 2 1/2 years in the Fort Leavenworth, Kan., penitentiary for aggravated assault with a vehicle - apparently expected to die after firing 20 to 30 rounds at the White House on Saturday. A rambling, handwritten note found among his belongings detailed how he wanted his affairs handled in the event of his death, the source said.

Duran instead was subdued by two tourists and taken into custody moments later by Secret Service officers. Although at least eight shots from his Chinese-made assault rifle struck the building, no one was injured in the shooting.

Clinton at the time was in a rear bedroom watching a college football game on television. He was not close to any of the shots although he heard the crack of gunfire, aides said.

Duran's note eventually may shed light on a possible motive in the attack, but officials said Sunday they still were not certain what motivated him to fire the rapid shots from a public sidewalk in front of the White House. The Secret Service, describing his demeanor as "completely flat," said the 26-year-old hotel worker was not cooperating with authorities.

Leon Panetta, the White House chief of staff, said, "At this point in time, there really is no indication as to what his motive was."

Duran was scheduled to be arraigned in federal court Monday. The firearms charge, upon conviction, is punishable by a maximum of 10 years in prison and fines of $250,000. The property charge carries a maximum penalty of 10 years and a $10,000 fine.

Although officials said there is no evidence at present of any assassination attempt by Duran, Ronald Noble, the Treasury Department's enforcement chief, told reporters Sunday that such a charge has not been ruled out.

Many house hunters would die for a haunted one

Chicago Tribune

Are things going bump in the night around your house?

That is to say, are random rappings, foreboding footsteps and other preternatural noises sending chills up your spine? Not to worry. It could simply be your everyday electroplasm at work, which, in psychic circles, means ghosts.

"Ghosts are all year round, not just Halloween," said Stephen Kaplan, a parapsychologist in Queens, N.Y., and executive director of the Parapsychology Institute of America. "It's not an uncommon phenomenon."

Indeed, paranormal investigators estimate that there may be as many as 1 million haunted houses in the United States. The Ghost Research Society, an organization based in Oak Lawn, Ill., that is devoted to the investigation of ghosts and hauntings, even publishes a national register of haunted houses.

The register mostly comprises landmarks, public buildings and commercial properties. Private residences investigated by the group are kept confidential, president Dale Kaczmarek said.

In the realm of real estate, haunted houses fall under the category of stigmatized properties - real estate that may have a reduced value or be less marketable for emotional or psychological reasons, despite the absence of physical defects.

Yet often a ghost will have the opposite effect and inflate the value of the property, psychic investigators say.

"There are plenty of people looking for haunted houses," said Gordon Hoener, founder of The Haunt Hunters, a St. Louis-based group of paranormal investigators.

He said he receives many inquiries, especially from celebrities, who not only want a multimillion-dollar property but a ghost to go with it. Commercial property owners often welcome ghosts because they can attract clientele.

Yet finding spirited properties isn't easy. For starters, even in the competitive world of real estate, haunted houses are not the kind of listings that brokers are dying to get.

And reports of hauntings exponentially outnumber what the experts call the real thing. "Probably less than 1 percent of all claims we investigate are bona fide hauntings," Hoener said. "We've been told about houses that were supposed to scare us to death. Well, we'd go in and be bored to death."

Many "ghosts" turn out to have perfectly normal causes - tree limbs rubbing up against electrical wires, playing the house like a violin.

How do you know when you've got the surreal thing on your hands?

Visual sightings are rare, experts say. Generally, ghosts make their presence known by sounds, such as door slammings.

Real ghostbusters not like Hollywood

Chicago Tribune

Ghostbusters of the world, officially known as psychic or paranormal investigators, say many people are happy with their own ghosts. Homeowners, mostly just want to find out why spirits are hanging around.

Unlike Hollywood, professional ghostbusters don't burst on the scene brandishing elaborate laser guns. More likely tools of the trade include a tape recorder, camera and plenty of flashlights. "You go into some pretty dark places," said Gordon Hoener, founder of The Haunt Hunters, psychic investigators in St. Louis.

Investigators often travel in groups. Stephen Kaplan, a parapsychologist in Queens, N.Y., likes to include a psychic and a photographer - "one who doesn't touch up film."

Teams can offer varying viewpoints into the nature of the haunting. Plus, there's safety in numbers.

Ghostbusters stress that screening is essential: "There are legitimate haunted houses es... but 95 percent are science fiction," said Kaplan.

Hoener used to take on every case. But after nearly three decades of ghostbusting, he takes only the more intriguing cases and leaves the banging out in cold deserted houses to those aspiring ghostbusters anxious to get experience.

Paranormal investigators interviewed said they charged little or no fees for their services, but make money on both sides of the street. Kaplan believes it is important for investigators to have other means of income.

"A ghostbuster should not be reliant on finding a ghost to justify his existence," said Kaplan, observing that the industry is full of frauds and flies on both sides of the investigators and those being investigated.

"Some people are perfectly willing to exploit their alleged spirits," said Kaplan, author of a new book "The Amityville Horror Hoax" (Hefly Books, Laceyville, Penn.). Yet, not wanting curiosity seekers to tramp through their yards, most haunted house owners keep their spirits to themselves.

Wet weather falls in Southeast, central states

The Associated Press

Thunderstorms rattled parts of the Southeast on Sunday, and advancing cold air carried a line of light showers across the middle of the country.

Strong thunderstorms with hail, gusty wind and heavy rain extended across sections of Florida during the morning and afternoon. A tornado watch was posted for parts of northern and central Florida, the National Weather Service said.

The storms developed in moist, unstable air linked to an area of low pressure over the northeastern Gulf of Mexico.

Hail as big as golf balls fell near Bunnell, northwest of Daytona Beach, Fla.

A large area of showers and thunderstorms continued northward from Florida into parts of Georgia, South Carolina and North Carolina.

Heavier rainfall totals for the six-hour period up to 1 p.m. EST were: 0.88 of an inch at Alma, Ga.; 0.79 of an inch at Brunswick, Ga.; and 0.47 of an inch at Macon, Ga., the weather service said.

Elsewhere, a cold front extended from central Colorado southward into western Texas and curved back toward Maine.

Behind the front, a large area of light rain and drizzle extended across the central Rockies, the central Plains and the middle Mississippi Valley.

Afternoon temperatures in parts of the north of the front were in the 30s and 40s, and light snow was reported in extreme western Montana and northern Idaho, the weather service said.

During the night in the Northwest, wind gusted to 36 mph at Whidbey Island, Wash., as a cold front moved into the region.

Early Sunday and late Saturday, low temperatures in the single digits and teens were reported across the northern Rockies and in parts of the northern Intermountain region. Temperatures also fell into the 20s from northern New Mexico to western North Dakota.

Overnight lows in the Southeast, southern Plains and the lower Atlantic Coast states were in the 50s and 60s, and the Florida Peninsula only cooled into the 70s. Temperatures across much of the Northeast, the Great Lakes and along the West Coast were in the 40s and 50s.

Boy burned playing with lighter fluid

RUPERT — An 8-year-old boy playing with charcoal, lighter fluid and matches Sunday afternoon was taken to Salt Lake City with burns after two teens allegedly spread more lighter fluid on the boy and threw a burning piece of paper at him, said Rupert Police Sgt. Dennis Bossert.

Bossert said the boy and a friend were trying to cook a potato in a residential area when two teen-agers came by. The boy already had some charcoal lighter fluid on his pants, he said.

The incident happened at 3:40 p.m. Bossert said it is not known who the two teen-agers are, and an investigation is continuing.

Man stabs 2 after arguing over woman

JEROME — Two cousins arguing with another man about a woman were stabbed Sunday afternoon as the three were driving to Gooding County, said Jerome Sheriff's Department Detective Dan Chatterton.

One man, Raphael Galvan, was in critical condition and undergoing surgery at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center in Twin Falls on Sunday evening after he was stabbed numerous times in the stomach, chest, face and neck, Chatterton said.

John Najanro, 22, of Twin Falls, was apprehended at gunpoint by Jerome County Deputy Lance Vandermeiden and charged with attempted murder and aggravated battery after fleeing the scene of the stabbings, Chatterton said.

Galvan was stabbed by Najanro after he chased the Twin Falls man, who had just stabbed Galvan's cousin, Antonio Galvan, Chatterton said. Antonio Galvan was treated at St. Benedict's Family Medical Center in Jerome for knife wounds after the 4:30 p.m. and released, he said.

Chatterton said citizens in 4-wheel drive vehicles directed deputies to where Najanro fled.

Limits

later, Colorado voters made theirs the first state to limit service of their congressmen as well as state lawmakers. California also set limits for state lawmakers in 1990.

Fourteen states followed in 1992 with voter landfills for congressional term limits: Arizona, Arkansas, California, Florida, Michigan, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, South Dakota, Washington and Wyoming. Maine last year adopted term limits for state lawmakers.

In a September primary this year, Oklahoma voters approved congressional term limits, two terms for senators, three for House members.

All told, they make up most of the 24 states with the citizen initiative that allows people other than legislators to make law simply by gathering enough names on a petition.

After Nov. 8, of those 24, only Mississippi and Illinois will not have voted on term limits. Mississippi's turn comes next year. In Illinois, term limits were headed for the ballot until the state Supreme Court said earlier this year that term limits were something only the Legislature could decide.

If people in the other 26 states want term limits, they will need to persuade their state lawmakers.

That may not be as hard as it sounds. Seeing pink slips, some politicians have decided to go with the flow.

It's not unusual now for candidates and even incumbents to say they favor term limits. Republicans running for the U.S. House of Representatives pledged in their so-called Contract with America to bring term limits to a vote if elected — without promising to vote for it, however.

Proponents say term limits, usually a couple of consecutive terms, prevents politicians from getting entrenched and forgetting the people who put them in office.

"With (term limits) you get more honest government, men and women who will stand up for something," said Sig Rogich, a Las Vegas political consultant and former adviser to President Bush who led the petition drive for Nevada's term limits. "I think from if you will have a candidate running on a platform of accomplishments — without having to worry about raising money the day after the elections."

Haunted

or rappings, smells, cold and hot spots, flickering lights and objects moving around.

Contrary to Hollywood's portrayal of haunted houses and ghosts as something to be feared, negative spirits are extremely rare, experts stress. Indeed, ghosts can be friendly, mischievous, even playful, they said.

"Ghosts have been badmouthed for centuries," Hoener said. His catch phrase after nearly 30 years in the ghost-busting business: "We've never met a ghost we didn't like."

Kaplan considers ghosts to be an "asset to a home." They don't eat your food, they don't use your electricity."

Plus, investigators say, spirits can be a source of wisdom and guidance — guardian angels of sorts. Kaplan tells of interviewing a man who, as a child, was awakened by a ghost and told to leave home quickly because something was about to destroy the house. The boy unsuccessfully tried to rouse his family, and finally went off by himself to sleep outside in the fields. The next morning, when he returned, he found the house had been burned to the ground by the Nazis.

Kaczmarek believes most ghosts are "earthbound" spirits who "don't know how to move onto the next realm" — much like Patrick Swazey's character in the movie "Ghost."

Some ghosts may merely replay an event while others may communicate with homeowners.

Hunter discovers drugs, 'shoppers'

The Times-News

GOODING — Four Burley area people were in Gooding County Jail on Sunday after a hunter discovered about 482 marijuana plants in the Snake River Canyon — and then found the four "shopping" as he went to call police, said Jerry Martinez, project manager of the Northside Drug Task Force of the Tri-County Drug Task Force.

Karasue Kennedy, 18, Jason Ryan Jones, 21, Darik James Noble, 19, and Jay Logan Price, 23, were discovered by the hunter with shopping bags as they were stealing the marijuana at about 6 p.m. Saturday, Martinez said.

The four were detained by the hunter until police arrived and charged them with possession of marijuana, he said. They had about three pounds of marijuana, which has a street value of about $5,400, Martinez said.

Martinez said the task force had received information earlier in the year about marijuana being grown in Gooding County but had not yet tracked down the exact location.

Who was growing isn't yet known, Martinez said, and an investigation is continuing. The task force returned Sunday to gather the plants, worth about $294,000 on the street, and sampling equipment used by the grower also was found, he said.

who is running for lieutenant governor. "I think the reapportionment commission is one of the real big accomplishments in the last several years," he said, calling past attempts at district-drawing "terrible exercises in passing ship."

Passing SJR 105 will save "time and anger and anguish. It's absolutely the way to go," Peavey added.

Most legislators agree with Peavey: The 1993 legislature backed the amendment overwhelmingly: 26-9 in the senate and 50-17 in the house. But voters must embrace the concept on election day, for it to become law.

In Idaho's early days, dividing the state into legislative districts wasn't an overwhelming task. Idaho law guaranteed each county at least one representative to the Legislature, and the biggest counties were given slightly more representation.

Today, reapportionment is far more difficult. Each district is supposed to have roughly the same number of residents — and the courts are often used to second-guess the legislative branch's political divisions.

While legislators overwhelmingly backed the proposal, three Magic Valley senators — Republicans Laird Noh, Dean Cameron, and Denton Darrington — opposed the amendment.

Noh said reapportionment lines effect the "efficiency and effectiveness of representation" and should be drafted by the people who are most familiar with "communities of interest" in Idaho. For example — a reapportionment commissioner might not realize that Owyhee County's Three Creek community has greater transportation and trade connections to Twin Falls than to its own county seat, he said.

The Republican senator also doubts a commission will remove politics from reapportionment.

"My guess is the sponsors are a little naive in expecting it will eliminate heavy-duty politics from the reapportionment process," he said.

Turned to dust

A six-story Sears, Roebuck & Co. building with its 14-story clock tower crumbles to the ground in Philadelphia Sunday after the largest demolition implosion ever. A developer has purchased 48 acres of the site and plans to build a 500,000-square-foot shopping center of discount stores.

Feds open AIDS toll-free hotline

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government is opening a toll-free telephone number Monday to provide treatment information by telephone or computer to people with AIDS, their families and health care providers.

The HIV-AIDS Treatment Information Service was scheduled to begin taking calls at 9 a.m. EST. The number is 1-800-HIV-0440 and the hours are 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. EST Monday through Friday.

The service will be staffed by health information specialists who are fluent in English and Spanish. Deaf access is included, and all calls are confidential.

The service's staff will not provide treatment advice. Staffers will, however, provide information the latest research and treatment options to physicians and patients who call.

"In addition to assisting health care providers, the AIDS Treatment Information Service will help people living with HIV-AIDS extend and improve the quality of their lives by helping them make informed decisions about their health care with their providers," said Philip L. Lee, the director of the U.S. Public Health Service.

The service's data base, which is housed at the National Library of Medicine, will be updated to include all federally approved HIV and AIDS treatment information.

The data base can be accessed free via computer. Users can call 1-800-272-4787 for directions on how to access the system with their computer.

Jury pool to include 10 victims

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The woman was near tears. Listening while other prospective jurors for the O.J. Simpson trial answered questions, she had been remembering things. Terrible things.

"Just get very emotional," said the woman, who had been beaten by her ex-husband. "It's hard to relive those memories."

She said she no longer wanted to be a juror for the murder trial, which will include testimony about the sometimes violent relationship between Simpson and his slain ex-wife.

The woman was excused from the jury pool. She was just one of many prospects who have related such experiences in response to the judge's questions. Not all of the people were dismissed; some said they could put aside their memories and judge the case fairly.

Of 38 prospects who cleared the first round of intensive questioning, 10 related experiences of domestic violence, either as victims or onlookers.

One woman said Friday that a friend once arrived at her home with bruises inflicted by her husband, a boxer. "He knew where to hit," the woman said. Later, she said, her daughter had a similar experience with an alcoholic husband. In both cases, she said, the women sought divorces and no further harm resulted.

A man who was kept in the jury pool described how, when he was 7 years old, he saw his father hit his mother. "I never would hit a woman because of seeing that," the man said. "I saw it and could not believe it happened."

Simpson is on trial for the slayings of his ex-wife, Nicole Brown Simpson, and her friend, Ronald Goldman.

Most, if not all, of the prospective jurors have heard the tape of a 911 call Ms. Simpson made in 1993 reporting that her husband was breaking down her door. And many are aware that he pleaded no contest to spousal abuse in 1989.

"O.J. has got to be scared," said Laurie Levenson, a Loyola University law professor. "He doesn't want victims of abuse sitting on his jury. On the other hand, prosecutors shouldn't automatically assume that victims of abuse will support their case."

"The concern is whether jurors will personalize events in the case through their own experiences," she said.

Although prospective jurors may say they can be unbiased, Levenson said. "The issues are so emotionally deep-rooted that they may not realize the subconscious effects."

For instance, she said, a woman who has been battered but escaped by leaving a relationship may blame a victim for staying on in an abusive marriage.

That happened in the 1980s in Napa County in the case of Sally Ann Blackwell, convicted of second-degree murder for shooting her abusive husband.

It was later discovered that one of the jurors had been abused by her husband and believed that Blackwell should have been able to walk away from the situation instead of resorting to violence.

The juror did not admit that during questioning, but her experience apparently helped sway other jurors.

Child support collections hit record, fall short

WASHINGTON (AP) — Public child support agencies collected a record $8.9 billion last year, but only managed to deliver a check to one-fifth of the families seeking payment from an absent parent, a federal report found.

Officials of the Department of Health and Human Services, which will release the study Monday, said that while progress is being made to strengthen enforcement, much more remains to be done to close a $34 billion gap in uncollected support.

"The current system has clearly not kept pace with the rising number of families who should receive child support," HHS Secretary Donna Shalala said in a statement. "As a nation, we still fail to protect the support rights of millions of children."

support needed to meet the most basic needs of food, clothing and shelter.

According to HHS, the nation's public child support agencies juggled 17 million cases last year, yet paying cases accounted for only 18.2 percent of the total.

Collections per paying case averaged $2,856 in 1993, up from $2,809 in 1992.

The report said that more than 1 million new child support orders were established last year, up from 892,586 in 1992; and that nearly 4.5 million absent parents were located, compared with 3.75 million a year earlier.

HHS also found that child support agencies are establishing paternity for growing numbers of children born out of wedlock, but that many more children do not have a legal relationship with their father.

According to HHS, paternity was established for 554,205 children last year, up from 515,887 in 1992. That still represents fewer than half of the estimated 1.3 million births to unwed mothers each year.

Establishing paternity is the first step toward setting a child support order and collecting from the absent father, and until recent years, was not a high priority for many states.

Like many of the unwed mothers, the men tend to be low-income and the prospects of collecting from them, at least early in the child's life, were considered slim.

"It was seen as a low payoff activity. The big payoff activities came from finding some rich guy who had divorced his wife and wasn't paying," said Mary Jo Kane, the assistant HHS secretary for children and families.

The government now recognizes the value of establishing paternity at the hospital, at a time when the father is often present and happy to be involved with his newborn child.

"There are tremendous losses to children from not having legal paternity established, in terms of the amount of child support they might get over time, and in terms of having the involvement of the parent — financially and emotionally," Kane said.

Congress voted last year to require states to set up paternity establishment programs in hospital maternity wards, and Kane said some of those efforts are beginning to take shape.

But Robert Rector, a welfare expert with the conservative Heritage Foundation, said child support is neither an answer to the "crisis of illegitimacy" nor an alternative to marriage.

Deadlocked governors races boost GOP

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republicans are threatening some of the country's most imposing Democrats in bitter gubernatorial contests that could produce a GOP sweep of power in states such as Texas, Florida and New York.

The political leadership of a huge swath of America hangs in the balance Nov. 8, when voters in 36 states will select governors. With little more than week to go, an AP analysis found nearly a dozen races too close to call — several of them in the nation's most populous and politically important states.

Democrats with their careers on the line include New York Gov. Mario Cuomo, who has been an eloquent national voice for a decade, and Texas Gov. Ann Richards, whose famously folksy put-downs of former President Bush are coming back to haunt her in the form of a stiff challenge from one of Bush's sons.

Some of the safest incumbents are Midwest Republicans — among them George Voinovich in Ohio, Jim Edgar in Illinois and John Engler in Michigan. Their popularity assures the GOP control of at least three of the eight largest states.

California Gov. Pete Wilson could be the fourth. He still leads Democrat Kathleen Brown in state polls despite a late-breaking decline associated with the breaking popularity of an anti-immigrant initiative he supports.

Also coming on strong are George Bush's two sons, George W. and Jeb. They've got at least even chances of topping Richards in Texas and, in Florida, Gov. Lawton Chiles, a former three-term senator who has never lost an election. Pennsylvania also could move into the GOP column.

The Republicans still seem headed for gains, particularly in key states, said independent analyst Stuart Rothenberg.

Recent polls suggest the tide may be turning slightly. Cuomo, for example, moved from certain governor to potential survivor in multiple polls last week. It was in a dead heat with Republican legislator George Pataki after months of lagging well behind.

But the overall momentum so far remains with Republicans. Their voters are energized by an array of ballot initiatives and the prospect of congressional takeovers. Democrats, struggling to rouse their traditional incumbents. There's an apathy and a cynicism that's out there."

The current governor breakdown is 29 Democrats, 20 Republicans and 1 independent. Up this year are 21 Democratic seats, 13 Republican and the single independent seat in Connecticut.

An AP review of the races shows 11 are safe or leaning Democratic; 14 are safe or leaning Republican; and 11 are too close to call. The toss-up states are Florida, Georgia, Hawaii, Idaho, Iowa, New York, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Texas and Wyoming.

"I think you'll see Republicans picking up at least six and as high as 10 states," predicted independent analyst Charles Cook.

Democrats are poised to take over three states now held by Republicans — Alaska, Arizona and Maine. Republicans expect gains in Connecticut and Democratic-held Kansas and New Mexico.

Even if Democrats end up holding more than half the states, that won't necessarily make them winners.

"All governorships are not equal," Cook said. "The raw numbers of governorships held are really fairly irrelevant. The question is, are the Republicans going to have every major state in the country?"

Republicans maintain the big toss-up states are not deadlocked as they appear in public surveys, due to the heavy GOP turnout anticipated by most experts.

"If you look further into the polling, it shows Republicans hold a strong advantage among likely voters at this point," said Chris Henick, executive director of the Republican Governors Association. "The base is solidly there, and the undecideds are trending toward Republican candidates."

Six Democratic and seven Republican incumbents this year are considered safe. Five of the seven GOP coasters are from the Midwest, and apparently are reaping credit for fiscal discipline, tax cuts and healthy economies.

House incumbents unleash taxpayer-financed mail blitz

WASHINGTON (AP) — House incumbents are unleashing their usual pre-election taxpayer-financed mail blitz, with 37 lawmakers in tough races outpouring retirees by a 3-to-1 margin, a congressional watchdog group said Sunday.

Overall, House members spent $63.9 million between Jan. 1, 1993 and last Sept. 30 on postage for newsletters, cards and letters mailed to constituents using public funds.

"This last-minute scramble shows the franking perk is being abused," said David Keating, president of the National Taxpayers Union Foundation, which conducts the study. The non-profit research organization specializes in studies of congressional finances, including mail costs and pensions for lawmakers.

The foundation said 37 incumbents, who are considered vulnerable, spent a per-person average of $129,184 in postage in the 12 months ending Sept. 30, compared to an average of $39,238 by 27 retiring House members. The per-member average for the entire House in that period was $95,895.

In July and August of this year, House incumbents spent $8.4 million on the so-called franked mail, up from $4.7 million in the same two months in 1993 — a non-election year, the study said.

A year after European Union treaty, unity remains elusive

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) —

France went ahead with its own plan for rescuing blood-soaked Rwanda. Greece unilaterally cut off trade with neighboring Macedonia. Italy held the budget hostage to its farm interests.

In the year since pledging allegiance to European unity, the dozen members of the European Union have demonstrated time and again the difficulty in forging common policies among uncommon nations.

Only haltingly have they implemented the Treaty on European Union, a grand design for a common foreign policy and single currency by 1999. The accord was put together by EU leaders in December 1992 in the Dutch town of Maastricht.

"Everything is moving very slowly," said Finn L  rson of the European Institute of Public Administration in Maastricht.

A year ago, on Nov. 1, 1993, the Maastricht treaty took effect — but just barely, after fears about a middle-class EU federal bureaucracy in Brussels nearly brought defeat for the accord in several countries.

Chastened, EU leaders have been reluctant to push the pace of integration for their 346 million people.

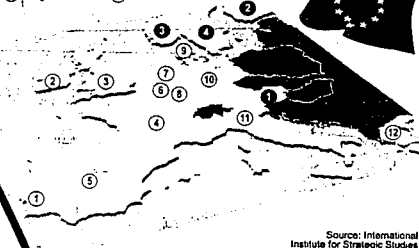

However, with the team he picked over the weekend, the next chief of the European Union's executive agency has shown he will push for an EU that is much more a political force and not just a trading bloc.

Jacques Santer of Luxembourg showed his top priorities to be common foreign policy, currency union and the strengthening of

'Major Ski' takes on double duty in Haiti as call-in radio show host

Knight-Ridder News Service

LES CAYES, Haiti — It may not be Larry King Live, as some of his troops have dubbed it, but "Major Ski" is making his own mark in Haiti's southwest.

Every Thursday shortly before 8 p.m., Maj. Doug Wisniewski, commanding officer of a 70-member U.S. Army Special Forces company headquartered in Les Cayes, arrives at the studios of FM Radio Tele M  nde du Sud to field questions from Haitians.

Topics range from the price of gasoline to the definition of democracy, from the new police force to the disposition of the old army, from the paramilitary organizations to the justice system.

Major Ski, as he is known to locals who find his Polish surname too difficult to pronounce, answers them all.

On last Thursday, the third since he began the weekly broadcasts, there is good news to report. After consulting with the mayor, the decision has been made to push back to midnight what had been an 8 p.m. to 6 a.m. curfew.

He thanks everybody who supported the curfew, which, he tells his Haitian listeners, helped protect "the good people of Les Cayes ... and enabled us to find some of the people who may not be so good."

More than an hour later after six announcements, questions from a dozen letter writers and a half-dozen telephone calls. Major Ski packs it in with praise for a meat pie that an advertiser had sent over.

"Whoever made this pie, it is absolutely delicious," Wisniewski tells his audience. "Certainly better than Army food."

Major Ski, whose father lives in Big Pine Key, Fla., says that when he and his unit got to Les Cayes he decided they needed to become more visible to the local population.

He approached Robert Teddy Constant, the operator of the city's only commercial radio station, with a suggestion for a program, and Constant jumped at the idea. Les Cayes Contact, featuring Major Ski, was born.

Les Cayes is Haiti's fourth-largest city, with an estimated population of 100,000, and the biggest in the southern peninsula. Wisniewski and his troops are providing virtually all the security from Aquin, east of Les Cayes, to J  r  me, at the peninsula's tip. In Les Cayes, joint patrols with the Haitian military began only Wednesday.

The station, which features music and talk, operates only in the evening because of a shortage of electricity, a fact dramatically brought home during Major Ski's most recent program.

All the six people who called with questions, four complained about the erratic electricity in their neighborhoods. The fifth call was interrupted by a power outage that shut down the station for several minutes.

On this night, in which the program ran 20 to 30 minutes overtime, Major Ski arrived at the station's studios in one of the U.S. military's ubiquitous Humvees. He was well guarded, just in case, with his troops making sure the studios, on the top floor of a nondescript two-story downtown building, were secure.

They were, but one of his troops in battle dress remained outside the door with automatic weapon ready.

Royals shatter mystique, but sentiment survives

DOVER, England (AP) — The military band was rehearsed to perfection, the atmosphere electric, the weather glorious, the onlookers expectant — but Queen Elizabeth II caught a cold and canceled.

No one seemed too sure about the name of the distinguished-looking local who stood in for the monarch during a day of ceremonies at Dover's Connaught Barracks.

"He looks nice enough, but he isn't royal. It just doesn't mean much," said Ernest Hitchens, 71.

For Hitchens and millions of other Britons, the royal show inspires much the same affection it did before the agonized biography of Prince Charles.

But for some, the mystique is gone, shattered by the future king's outpourings about his chilly mother, his domineering father, his loveless marriage and his mistress.

"They don't seem to be in control of anything anymore," said Leanne Dixon, an 18-year-old art student.

It didn't occur to Miss Dixon and a friend having lunch in the park to go and see the queen Friday with the Royal Green Jackets Regiment in the 12th century Dover Castle. It overlooks the English Channel with a distant view — on a clear day — of the French coast.

"You grew up to think, the royals, it's like wow," she added. "Now they're just ordinary people, not even very nice ordinary people."

Aided by years of gossip and press pursuit of the troubled private lives of the 68-year-old monarch's children, Britain's royals have tipped themselves into what many commentators see as a crisis.

Memorable royal images evoke derision or pity: Princess Diana's leaks two years ago about her unhappiness; her husband retaliating with the biography; Prince Andrew's estranged wife, the Duchess of York, cavorting topos with an American financial advisor; 12-year-old Prince William blinking in the glare of photographers' flashlights as the nation and the newscasters dissect his parents' failed marriage.

Monarchists fret about the erosion of respect for the House of Windsor, which often now looks like a satirist's dream — "Marriage is a dirty word in our family," a radio mimic explains in the queen's plummy tones.

Some royal defenders are reduced to citing royalty's role as a tourist-puller.

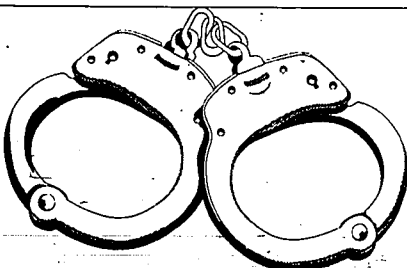

Circulation-boosting news of royal infidelity has made mere footnotes out of serious arguments about the non-political monarchy being the final safeguard against the abuse of parliamentary power in a country without a constitution.

Now, talk of getting rid of Britain's 1,000-year-old monarchy is not confined to a fringe of left-wing republicans.

"The monarchy's time has passed," the conservative-leaning and -respected weekly, The Economist, declared after The Sunday Times published the first extracts of the biography of Charles this month. "The only powerful argument against abolition is that it is not worth the trouble."

Fox will return academic excellence to Idaho's schools

For the first time in 16 years, Idahoans have an opportunity to elect a new superintendent of public instruction — the highest education post in the state. Your vote for Republican candidate Dr. Anne Fox is a vote to return to basic academic instruction, common sense funding and limited intrusion of federal bureaucracy.

As superintendent, Fox promises to put a moratorium on the state's outcome-based reform effort (known as performance-based education) which erodes academic performance. Fox advocates standardization of architectural plans for school buildings which will save taxpayers 6 percent to 8 percent of overall building costs.

Fox has promised that, as superintendent, Idaho will say, "No thanks!" to the slice of the Goals 2000 and the accompanying federal mandates that would control Idaho's education future.

Your vote for Fox on Nov. 8 will restore fiscal accountability and academic excellence to Idaho's public education system.

Letter writer cannot believe paper's endorsement of Fox

I am absolutely astonished that your newspaper would endorse Anne Fox for state school superintendent. This is so astounding that I have been pondering possible explanations and can only shake my head in wonder. The following questions keep blasting through my brain:

During the recent upset around Outcome Based Education, did the editorial board develop such strong adversarial feelings toward teachers in general that they are unable to endorse a candidate who was once a teacher? Is this anti-association bias also extended to the doctors of the American Medical Association and the lawyers of the state bar?

Jerry Evans, a Republican, has not endorsed Anne Fox to replace him. Is it possible that her viewpoints are so extreme that he is not comfortable doing so?

Anne Fox has made radical changes in her campaign positions and in her terminology. Do voters want someone whose position fluctuates to match her ever-changing audience?

Is Ms. Fox's experience as a school district superintendent a positive influence, even though she was asked to leave that position after a vote of no confidence by the teachers there?

Ms. Fox has stated many positions on issues that are not in her control of the state superintendent of public instruction. Does she plan to limit local control? If she doesn't know what the job entails, why is she running?

Those of us in contemporary studies have spent years updating our skills to include collaboration, mediation, synergistic and technological skills. Does Ms. Fox's confrontational positions represent the best in current organizational management? Does her interest in "basic skills such as calculation" indicate that she is in touch with the technological environment our future workers will enter?

Willie Sullivan is up-to-date, committed to meeting students' needs and experienced in school governance at many levels. At the state level, he has served as chair on the Legislative Committee for the State Association of School Administrators, chair of the Governor's Task Force on State Correctional Education and chair of the State Professional Standards Commission (which deals with our colleges, universities and teacher education programs). His background and approach will lead our students into the future well prepared.

Why would anyone endorse Anne Fox?

Look closely where Fox stands before casting your ballot

On Oct. 10, The Times-News reported that Anne Fox, the Republican candidate for superintendent of public instruction, stated that a new federal law authorized the state to force all public school teachers to sit aside three minutes every day for silent prayer or meditation by students. She said that any teacher who refused to do this should be fired. The article also included responses by her opponent and a representative of the American Civil Liberties Union, neither of whom had heard of such a law. A look at the record proves that she was badly mistaken.

Only two federal bills that were passed this year mentioned school prayer. The "Goals 2000: Educate America Act" (Public Law 103-227), from last March, says in section 1011: "No funds authorized to be appropriated under this act may be used by any state or local educational agency to adopt policies that prevent voluntary prayer and meditation in public schools." A section of the "Elementary and Secondary Education Amendments of 1993" (Public Law 103-382), signed into law on Oct. 20, includes language that "... denies federal funding during a noncompliance period to any state or local educational agency judged to have willfully violated a court order to remedy a violation of students' rights with respect to prayer in public schools." (Quote from the House-Senate conference report.) Students may pray, if they wish, and schools may not make policies to interfere. This is certainly not a mandate for schools or the state to structure prayer time.

I was disappointed to read The Times-News endorsement of Ms. Fox. Her statements about school law and her recent attempts to change the record of her opinion about abortion reveal her as a would-be school cop with an authoritarian message for conservatives and confusion for the rest of us. She does not stand for progress and fresh ideas, as your endorsement suggested; rather, she represents the backlash against educational innovation in our state. As Kay Jones said at the end of her fine letter last week, "Please carefully consider your vote on Election Day."

Peavy will help Idaho's students and move us into 21st century

John Peavy has been a friend of education during his years in the state Legislature. His bid for lieutenant governor is a benefit for the future of all the children of this state. We need John Peavy's legislative record working for public education as he leads the Senate in Boise.

As Idaho moves into the 21st century, this election brings a man of vision who has a proven history of active support for our public schools.

Vote for John Peavy Nov. 8.

Gooding County would do well to elect Paoli as county clerk

To you who will be voting on Nov. 8 in Gooding County, I would like to recommend Helen Paoli for county clerk. I in no way wish to interfere in your county business, and I do this only to tell you that you have a very caring person in your midst.

I worked with Helen in city government for a number of years as mayor of Jerome. Helen is a person with an infectious personality. She is always on time and always there to do the job and to help those who are looking for solutions to their problems.

Good luck to you, Helen, and good luck to the great people of Gooding County.

City council turned its back on very special fund-raiser

Concerning our city's interest and involvement in our community's drug and alcohol rehabilitation center, the Magic Valley Fellowship Hall would like to thank our city council for its lack of interest in our last joint fund-raiser with Canyon View Hospital.

It is a very sad situation when the city of Twin Falls could not see its way clear to donate the money for the use of the golf course for Magic Valley Fellowship Hall for this specific fund-raiser. Latham Motors found it in its hearts to donate $2,500 to this most needed facility for a very much needed cause, drug and alcohol awareness and rehabilitation.

The money that was received from this fund-raiser was to be donated to the Magic Valley Fellowship Hall which is a safe haven for teenagers and adults who are trying to stay clean and sober.

Support Mellon and put us on path to a positive change

In a time when people are distrustful of politicians and tired of slander, I would think it should be refreshing to have a candidate like Jon Mellon. He has run his campaign with integrity, stripping it of all the negative associations, untruths and accusations. Jon possesses no self-serving gain, he simply wants to represent the people and their needs.

We should be glad he is willing to share his finances, time and family to run for a public seat in order to protect and better our lives and that of our children. Let's not give credit to negative statements but let's look for a positive change in our future. Let's be good examples to our children and others of a better way.

Phil Batt guilty of distorting Larry EchoHawk's positions

To rectify a phrase from the 1982 Evans/Batt campaign, "There you go again, Phil, distorting the record."

It seems you should have learned in 1982 that it's hard to be elected as Idaho's Governor based on a campaign of attacks and untrue statements about your opponent. I know you know and your campaign supporters know that Larry EchoHawk is no more responsible for any drawdown of Idaho reservoirs than Prince Charles. All of us also know that the Legislature authorized any drawdown of Idaho water and that those legislators who are supporting your campaign and signing letters falsely accusing EchoHawk of such acts voted in favor of that legislation.

Another distortion — Can you really look yourself in the eye and try to convince the voters that Larry EchoHawk is pro gun control? Let's hear something positive from you for a change.

Voters urged to remain true to their roots and vote for Mellen

Sight is a terrible thing to lose, and it seems that election time inevitably brings a clouded perspective to the voters. What we seem to lose sight of is our sense of who we are — our roots. The media is the prime culprit in causing this blindness in the sense that it seems to skew our sensibilities.

We read that Jon Mellon is a "millionaire business owner," and we don't read about the multitude of businesses his opponent, Clint Stennett, is involved with. The worst thing about this media influence is that it does indeed influence us and makes us lose perspective. We shouldn't care about the rhetorical, mud-slinging descriptions but, instead, focus on what would preserve our sense of roots. This means not buying into the imported ideals of the media and Mr. Stennett.

Being exposed to a wide array of social and political perspectives has brought to light an important fact — that there are certain fundamental ideals one should not abandon. The voters of District 21 should not follow this offshore wave of Stennett's ideals. Remain true to your roots by realizing the heritage, beauty and durability of District 21. We should not be pursuing a shift in values, and Jon Mellon will ensure this.

Term limits proposition would severely harm sheriff offices

Sheriff's are concerned with the effects of term limits should Proposition 2 pass in the Nov. 8 election.

The Idaho Sheriff's Association members believe the public may misunderstand the total effect this could have as it is being represented by its sponsors. Most citizens believe it deals only with the federal level of government. In reality, the reality is that all elected officials, right down to the local mayor and council people will be impacted.

If passed, the portion pertaining to Congress, in all likelihood and supported by most people, will be found unconstitutional in the courts. However, the office of sheriff will be severely damaged by Proposition 2 if it becomes law. The sheriff is not a citizen volunteer office where one makes his or her contribution to the community and then marches on. It is a professional law enforcement job that is becoming more complex each year. It is a specialized field requiring intensive training in all aspects of law enforcement, including jail administration.

Term limits will have a direct effect on the type of people who will run for sheriff and other local elected offices in the future. The quality of those individuals seeking these offices will diminish under term limitations. Term limits, in effect, says there is no place for you when your time is up.

Another concern is, once in office, what is the incentive to do the best possible job with self-respect and commitment to the community?

The incentive for doing a good job is keeping your job. And keeping your job means that when election time rolls around again, you are running on your record, knowing you did your best for the people and the community, and you leave it up to the voters to "evaluate your performance."

THEIR MY OPPONENT GOES AGAIN!

By letting the voters decide who will hold an elected position and how long means the people are getting the kind and best person for the job, in their opinion.

I would urge you, as does the sheriff's association, to read and understand the impact of this initiative.

Once truly understood, the sheriff's feel confident that the voters will not vote for term limitations as the proposition is currently written.

Baily will provide leadership as county commissioner

I am writing this letter to support Dave Baily, candidate for District 1 county commissioner for Twin Falls County.

Dave is deeply concerned with the welfare of our young people, having served in several capacities. He has served as an adult advisor for the DeMolay youth organization on both local and state levels. He has worked extensively in the juvenile system as a juvenile hall group supervisor. Dave believes that children are shaped by the environment in which they grow. He understands the roles played by home, church and school in encouraging their development and in keeping them out of the juvenile justice system. He knows that it is crucial to support these institutions wherever possible.

Dave is concerned about the uncontrolled growth and the negative consequences of unplanned expansion. He knows that a sensible comprehensive plan is of vital importance if we are to enjoy a high quality of life into the next century.

If you are looking for a visionary leader, if you are looking for someone who cares about our young people, if you want economic growth that benefits all of Twin Falls County, cast your vote for Dave Baily for county commissioner on Nov. 8.

Newspaper article unfairly downgraded city of Jerome

This letter is in response to your recent article on the front page of The Times-News concerning Jerome. "A Magic Valley slim." I took a drive in Twin Falls on a recent Sunday afternoon and found homes with garbage spread across the lawns, abandoned automobiles and appliances scattered across the yards, peeling paint and cardboard in the windows. My question is, why does The Times-News downgrade Jerome? I continually read negative articles about our community in your newspaper.

I'd like to tell you some very positive things which have happened in Jerome. For example, our new elementary school is one of only six in Idaho that was approved for a model school grant. As a result, Jerome has one of the most technologically advanced schools in Idaho. Recently, we passed a supplemental override levy for a new Agriculture Science and Technology Center at Jerome High School.

A few years ago, our community planted trees downtown with all volunteer labor. Our parks are beautiful, and we have a great recreation center. The new industrial park is used as an example by the Idaho Department of Commerce of what a community can do to encourage business.

We don't have any more standard housing than any of the surrounding communities.

We are becoming a nation that looks for government to take care of its every need. When I was a renter, the first thing I did was clean and disinfect. As I recall, I usually bought paint on sale and did the painting myself. I did not expect my landlord to clean up my trash or exterminate the insects.

The article stated that Idaho law already requires landlords to provide adequate plumbing, electricity and weatherproofing. Cities could also pass ordinances against abandoned appliances and automobiles (normally property of the renters, not the landlords).

In conclusion, let me quote James Madison 206 years ago: "I believe there are more instances of abridgment of freedom of people by gradual and silent encroachments of those in power than by violent and sudden usurpations."

How prophetic. I cannot help but think that "gradual and silent encroachments" are the worst kind. They are the worst kind because before we realize what we stand to lose, we have already lost some of it.

District 21 voters fortunate to have Jaquet as candidate

District 21 is fortunate to have a candidate of Wendy Jaquet's caliber running for state representative. Wendy has been the executive director of the Ketchum/Sun Valley Chamber of Commerce for the last 11 years, and during that period, she has demonstrated the skills which will make her a fine representative from District 21.

Wendy has listened to the divergent views of 450 members of the chamber and, from those many views, has developed a practical, successful plan for the economic development of the area.

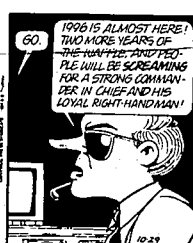

She has worked with very large budgets and is familiar with regional economic development. She has demonstrated a tremendous capacity for work and a real talent for providing practical solutions to tough problems.

Idaho faces tremendous problems regarding the funding of education and the preservation of its water resources. Wendy Jaquet is uniquely qualified to deal with these problems and to represent District 21 to the benefit of all its citizens.

We strongly urge you to vote for Wendy Jaquet for state representative in District 21 on Nov. 8.

Don't be fooled this time, choose Batt for governor

I have had the opportunity to listen in person to both gubernatorial candidates speak on two different occasions. How a candidate answers a question can often be an indication of how they are likely to govern. Long-winded, saying nothing candidates tend to be going along and get-along bureaucrats.

Larry Echolaw has a tendency to use political double-speak and go into great detail without really answering the question. In Coeur d'Alene in July, Echolaw was challenged about his commitment to fiscal responsibility if he were elected governor. He committed to freezing state spending but would exempt education and law enforcement. On the surface, that sounds great. But between 70 percent and 75 percent of the state's budget falls into those two categories. Is Echolaw really fiscally responsible? Does he support any proposal for real property tax relief?

On the other hand, Phil Batt is considerably more direct. When asked how much of Idaho's water he would allow the federal government to use, he responded, "Not one drop." On several occasions, Batt has responded with a simple "no" or "yes."

Echolaw is a lawyer-turned-politician of which we already have too many. Batt is a businessman-farmer with a proven history of success in both business and in government. By electing Echolaw's friend, Bill Clinton, in 1992, we became the victims of the greatest political bait-and-switch ever perpetrated on the American voters. Don't let it happen in Idaho. Phil Batt is best for Idaho.

Don't support candidates who won't protect flag

To all veterans and fellow workers:

Remember when you go to the polls to vote on Nov. 8 what great piece of cloth having a field of blue with 50 stars representing each state, seven red stripes and six white stripes and called Old Glory means to you.

Now ask yourself how anyone could vote for the following candidates running for office: Rep. Mark Stubbs, R-Twin Falls; Patty Nafziger, D-District 21 and John Peavey, Democrat. These were three of the few who were against passing Senate Joint Memorial Bill 102, banning flag desecration in the state of Idaho.

Mr. John Peavey tried to hold this bill in committee. After coming out of committee, the measure passed 61 to 8 to be sent to Congress. Idaho joins 28 other states calling to make it a federal offense to desecrate the flag of the United States. Mark Stubbs and Patty Nafziger were two of the eight voting against the measure.

Now I wonder how these people who voted in that way can hold up their heads before people who had sons, daughters, fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters and other relatives and friends who gave their lives and souls defending our flag and what it means to our country.

I for one cannot stoop so low as to vote for someone who thinks flag desecration is OK. Maybe we could bring up a bill in Idaho banning free tickets to these people to Cuba or Iraq. I would support that.

Chisholm will provide us a forward-thinking leader

Well, folks, it's time to try to elect some folks that will determine the course our societal life will take for the next few years. We have several choices, and everyone has an opinion. My opinion is that Bill Chisholm is our best choice.

When you look at the activism of the individuals that are running, the name that is most familiar is Bill Chisholm. He has been involved in public policy and concern for the public well being for as long as I can remember. He has been pointing out to the Magic Valley the importance of waste management for years, long before the landfill debacle. This points out that he is a future thinker.

Bill's attitude toward problems is proactive; he looks to the future and sees the land-usage and then tries to formulate a plan to deal with the problem that will make it an opportunity. Bill casts a spade a spade. This has put off some people that like to pussy-foot around issues and not want to step on toes. I'll tell you one thing. I would rather have my toes stepped on by Bill than to be run over by the bigger problem he's trying to point out.

I don't know Bill well. We exchange greetings on the street when we meet, but I can tell you that he is aware of my business and its niche in the community. He is aware of the special problems I face and the burdens placed on each of us by ineffective government. He is a people person; he cares about people and their quality of life, and the work he does isn't pointed at saving whales just for the sake of whales—it's for the sake of people and the quality of our life.

Bill has proven his mettle. He has been on the ground, duking it out for the Magic Valley for years. He has been effective in his fights, a lot of the time without much help from us. So now let's help ourselves and vote for Bill Chisholm and put some brains in the country.

In dark times, Crapo offers bright leadership

It's not easy to remain optimistic when everyday the news reveals our world is in chaos. There does, however, exist the opportunity for good people to do good things.

In a time of disappointing leadership, Idahoans are fortunate to have representing us in Congress a man who has the skills, knowledge and ability to create sensible solutions to our country's problems and gather the support of his colleagues.

The man I speak of at the polls Nov. 8 and give this man another two years in Congress. Idaho needs Mike Crapo and so does America!

Echolaw's agenda driven by special interests

My dictionary gives one definition of echo as: The repetition or reproduction of the views, style, etc., of another; of having to peddle.

If money talks, then whose views will Mr. Echolaw be selling? The environmental extremists from the Hollywood elite? The Indian gambling interests? The liberal gun-grabbing Clinton/Kennedy/Reno crowd from Washington, D.C.? The contributors from Temple Square? The Idaho Education Association?

All have given big money for Mr. Echolaw. Makes one wonder what their agenda really is. What Mr. Echolaw really stands for? Elect a proven leader for Idaho. Not an echo for special interests. Vote Batt for governor.

Take a stand, say 'no' to homosexual lifestyle

I guess accepting the homosexual lifestyle as merely another alternative is pretty trendy now. That way, Idaho could join the ranks with California and New York.

San Francisco, known as the capital for homosexuals, has those parades where men flout their sexual preferences. And New York has the homosexuals' agenda in place—it teaches it in school.

It has been said that nobody knows for sure what causes the desire for same-sex sexual relations. I heard a lesbian state on the Charlie Rose Show that she had been straight but decided that same-sex relations were more to her liking. I still don't know, but if that is the case, New York is in the process of converting. Beginning in first grade, the alternative lifestyle is being taught. It even has two textbooks, "Heather Has Two Mommies" and "Daddy's Roommate." Now remember, that's in the first grade when kids should be pretty innocent yet!

Another letter writer says he developed his moral code from his parents and church and that teachers could never override that code. No doubt that man has good parents and apparently is religious. But remember, not all people have good parents; and there is "religion" for everything.

And there's some that are intimidated by the pro-homosexual crowd. They have fears that Proposition 1 will be found unconstitutional. Hell, it's time to take a stand. The next thing you know, prostitution will be considered just another "alternative lifestyle." I can see the textbook for that now: "Heather Meets Mommy's Pimp."

Until the day I see a pregnant man being rushed to the hospital, I'll have to support Proposition 1.

Time to give something back to Idaho's migrants

I am writing in response to the letter sent by Bernice Rows of Hazelton published Oct. 23. I agree that we do need help with health care but amongst all races. However, I happen to have a strong belief in programs to help migrants.

Migrants have helped our economy greatly over the years. It is well known that migrants come from all over, including parts of Texas, Chicago, Florida, Mexico and Colorado. A migrant is a person who travels to another area to work, not just people from Mexico. They come here to do the hard work that people in our community don't want to do. It is very hard to get up every morning to be in the field by 5 o'clock to work the fields of our local farmers and ensure the success of their crops. Not only do they help out our local farmers and ranchers, but while migrants are here, they ship with our local merchants.

Migrant workers leave their community, home, family and friends and travel to a new location. There is no housing available, so they are forced to live in cars, random labor camps and in conditions too small for their families. It is not only the women who suffer from these conditions but the children as well as the children. It is not always easy to pay a medical bill.

Instead of condemning them for looking different, not learning English (in the little time they have in the evenings with their families) and needing health care (just as you and I do), we should give them a chance, a smile, a friendly "hello." Make them feel welcome, or you and our children could go work in the fields, pick the crop, have no time for your family along with watching our local merchants struggle harder than they already are and finally go out of business because of lack of business.

Think about where we would be without the migrant worker, and let's change the attitude around this valley. We need them!

JULIE HENSCHIED

Writer shows ignorance with regard to migrants

Occasionally, I will read a letter to the editor from a person who shows their true colors. In the letter on Oct. 23 by Bernice Rows of Hazelton, I was astonished by the lack of education in the manner of migrants and of the health care issues that face all of us today.

Bernice, when you speak of migrants being from Mexico, you are somewhat correct; however, there are more individuals in the migrant stream that are U.S. citizens than not. If you see a brown face and assume that the person is from Mexico, again you are in error. You assume that our American forefathers were always here. This is not so. Do you remember in your history classes how the colonists came to America and "discovered" an area that was already inhabited by Native Americans? Unless some of the blood that flows through your veins is of a Native American tribe, you have no right to say that we do not belong here. If you question that the Mexican or Mexican people come here legally, I would ask that you look in your history books and see how the Treaty of Guadalupe, written by the United States and signed by the leaders in Mexico, gave the people who were living in the northern-most region of Mexico (southern Utah, California, Arizona, New Mexico and Texas) the right to stay in the United States and become U.S. citizens.

Tonight when you eat dinner, I would challenge you to take a good look at what you are about to eat. If you eat an apple, know that it may have been harvested by a migrant in Washington.

If you have a glass of wine, recognize that the grapes may have been picked by a farm worker in Idaho or California. If you have potatoes, know that they may have been harvested by a migrant in Idaho.

If you have a salad, know that the lettuce, tomatoes, cucumbers, broccoli and cauliflower may have been in the hands of a farm worker in California. If you eat beef, look closely at the fact that someone had to feed that animal, and it may have been a farm worker. These people are over-worked, underpaid and are not even given the benefit of a worker's compensation if they are injured on the job.

Federal probe lands at Denver airport

DENVER (AP) — It's not funny anymore.

The soaring new Denver International Airport, still gathering cobwebs on the plains east of town, has worse problems than a baggage system that eats bugs. Ten independent investigations are looking into allegations of shoddy construction, influence peddling, misled bond dealers and mismanaged government funds.

But beleaguered city officials are responding to the cascade of bad news by hunkering down, trying to stifle information and turn criticism back on the critics.

Mayor Wellington Webb last month invoked executive privilege to deny a request for city records from U.S. Sen. Hank Brown, R-Colo., then had staffers deny he had done so.

One Denver radio station's legal analyst says city attorneys threatened to sue him after he reported on air this summer that the mayor's office was refusing to produce documents regarding delays at DIA.

They "said they were going after my license to practice law," said analyst Dan Caplis, host of a talk show on KOA. "That's serious. That's how I make my living."

"Nobody threatened Mr. Caplis about anything," city airport attorney Marable told The Associated Press on Thursday. "Two people can see things differently."

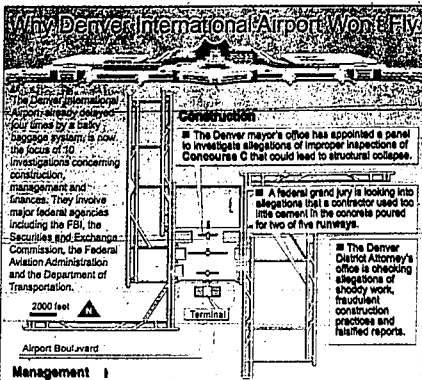

Marable said he and the two other attorneys met with Caplis to "try to narrow his focus on a pretty broad request for documents."

Caplis goes to court for the documents Nov. 4.

In August, after the AP reported former inspectors' allegations that workers cut corners on runway jobs, airport director Jim DeLong set up "listening" and "response" teams made up of city and airport employees to challenge media stories on airport problems, said Briggs Gamblin, the mayor's spokesman.

Gamblin, along with Webb and DeLong, also works to deflect media criticism of DIA as part of the city's so-called "truth squad."

The three men were dubbed the "truth squad" by reporters when they flew to New York last February to smooth over the bond market's concerns about the airport. Recently they've sent faxes to media outlets within hours of AP reports critical of the airport, some bearing such underused alms as "CORRECTION TO AN ASSOCIATED PRESS REPORT."

Management

■ The Denver District Attorney is investigating claims that an airport public relations officer was denied for objecting to the use of airport cameras and staff for city publicity.

■ The FBI is conducting an investigation stemming from testimony that an airport officer threatened by a contractor for refusing to direct concessions to money friends of the mayor.

Finances

■ The SEC is investigating at DIA bond issues from 1990 to the present to determine whether Denver misrepresented bond values by not disclosing information about the faulty baggage system to investors.

■ Denver is included in a nationwide SEC look at public officials who may have solicited political contributions from bond issues who went to handle bond sales for large public projects.

■ The General Accounting Office is looking into Denver's finances and how the city has managed the DIA project.

■ The Federal Aviation Administration is investigating allegations that Denver spent airport funds on city legal fees.

■ At the request of the FAA Director David Hinson, the U.S. Transportation Department is also investigating how the city spent federal funds earmarked for DIA.

"Often what is said is accurate, but not the whole picture," Gamblin said. "We also felt we were not getting our answers out quickly enough."

Last week, Webb, clearly irritated by the mounting bad news, seemed to indicate he thinks the complainers are more whiners than whistleblowers.

"We had more than 20,000 people working at the airport," he said. "If you take 10 percent or 1 percent of those, you have 2,000 or 200 people who have an ax to grind."

The city has done everything possible "to doctor, twist and filter the news" to make it appear DIA was on schedule and under budget, protested Mike Boyd, who runs Aviation Research Systems Inc., a local consulting firm that forecasts and analyzes passenger traffic for the airline industry.

"Then they form a truth squad," he said. "One thing this airport is short on is truth."

"This new airport is making Denver the laughing stock of the aviation world," Boyd declared.

The whole mess "is giving us a serious black eye," concurred city councilman Ted Hackworth, who says he regularly fields complaints from constituents weary of answering embarrassing questions wherever they travel.

The latest joke, he said, is that DIA stands for "Doesn't Include Airplanes."

It was not always thus.

Federico Pena was the mayor's office in 1987 on the enthusiasm generated by his slogan, "Imagine a Report: Claims of shoddy work

DENVER (AP) — Claims of shoddy construction work at the city's new airport were disputed Friday in a report by engineers who examined walls and pillars with the help of X-rays and ultrasound.

Dean Hill, a former inspector at Denver International Airport, claimed two weeks ago that he saw workers cut corners that could lead to collapsing floors, buckling walls and falling ceilings.

In response, the city hired Olsen Engineering Inc. to study Hill's three main complaints.

"We have failed to find any validation for Mr. Hill's claims," said Mike Musgrave, chief of Denver Public Works.

The study found:

• A concrete wall that forms the foundation for a mechanical shed had the necessary supports inside. Hill claimed key pieces of support metal were left out.

• A pillar supporting a concourse had been filled with metal reinforcements and concrete as part of a repair job. Hill claimed the pillar had a hole that could cause it to collapse.

• Workers have realigned a concrete elevator shaft that Hill said was out of alignment.

Great City." Part of his plan was a grand new airport to replace Stapleton International, whose check-by-jowl runways are often hostage to winter storms.

The airport, promised Pena, now U.S. transportation secretary, would pull Denver out of its economic slump and dispel forever its "cow town" image.

Ground was broken in 1989. Opening was scheduled for Oct. 31, 1993. But four opening dates have come and gone because the highly touted, British-made baggage system "can't be made to work." Members of Congress laughed when they were shown videotapes of the system chugging up and spitting out luggage.

Many bank in high-crime areas trim ATM service

NEW YORK (AP) — You need money at 3 a.m. and go to the cash machine, 24-hour ATM card in hand. Surprise.

Banks around the country are curtailing cash machine hours, especially in cities, because of the risk of getting mugged at night. A spree of 30 robberies at automated teller machines in Tampa, Fla., prompted Barnett Bank to close some ATMs there at 10 p.m. and some in neighboring St. Petersburg at 7 p.m. The machines reopen at 6 a.m. in Tampa and 7 a.m. in St. Petersburg. "The benefits of convenience were outweighed for safety reasons," said Robert Sticker, Barnett spokesman.

Other banks keep cash machines in low-traffic areas closed overnight. Wells Fargo Bank, for example, closes ATMs in downtown San Francisco in the evenings.

"During the day the area is filled with people, but at night it's deserted," said William R. Wipprecht, director of security. "We've had some complaints from people who do use the machines at night, and it's a tough trade-off, but we feel it's better to be safe."

Lincoln County race looks familiar

By Frank E. Lockwood
Times-News writer

SHOSHONE — For the third time in two years, Lincoln County Commissioner Jerry Nance, a Republican, will face Sam Harris in a race for the county commission.

Two years ago, Harris ran as a Republican and lost the primary. He then ran as a write-in and lost the general election. This time, Harris is running as a Democrat, trying yet again to top Nance.

Nance says his knowledge and experience make him a good representative for Lincoln County.

The farmer-rancher says he's running because he wants to promote planned growth while protecting local agricultural interests.

"The only real reason I'm running is I think we're in for some tough times in the next four years," he said earlier this month. With hard work and leadership, Nance says those tough times can be good times for Lincoln County. He pledges to work for "the growth and betterment of this county in the next four years."

Harris says he'll push for positive change — if elected. Noting his prior GOP affiliation, Harris said that party never gave him much support.

"If you're going to get into office, you need support from your party, and the Democratic party was very willing to give me the support that I needed," he said.

The Democrat says he wants to bring light industry — and new housing to Shoshone and work to stimulate the economy.

The Republican says he's already working to improve life in Lincoln County — fighting for water quality (and increased water quantity), serving on the regional solid waste district board, and serving on an insurance board that covers 42 Idaho counties.

"I've been on the Higwood canal board for several years and my experience in dealing with water down the road will be very beneficial to Lincoln County because Lincoln County basically doesn't have much water," Nance added.

As a county commissioner, Nance meets three to five times each month with the other commissioners. They oversaw the fair board, a convalescent center board, and other county business. It's his "interest in the welfare of Lincoln County" that keeps him involved, he said.

Harris says Lincoln County needs leadership that listens.

"I just don't feel that they listen to the public enough. I think you need to listen more to the public and see what they want the commission to do because you do work for the people," he said.

"If I think the people just want a change, I don't think it is anything personal. I just think they want a change in the county," he said.

Harris is a home builder and remodeler who would like to see an economic renewal.

"We haven't had any new major businesses come here in the last 30 years. There just hasn't been any growth other than a restaurant here or there or something like that."

He promises to work to change that.

The Democrat praises Lincoln County and says he'd like to make a real contribution. "We've got a good community, and I think I can get in there and help," he said.

City Council to consider bid to improve Blue Lakes grade

TWIN FALLS — The City Council will consider a bid of $190,000 to improve the Blue Lakes grade that starts at the top of the Snake River Canyon and ends down by the 5th hole of Blue Lakes Country Club.

The low bid was submitted by OK Paving. The project is part of the city's overhaul of its water system, in which the original source of city drinking water was diverted to an underground spring that serves Blue Lakes.

City officials say the city is responsible for 80 percent of the costs, or about $152,000. The country club will pay 10.5 percent, or almost $20,000, while the city will ask the downstream trout farmers to chip in the remaining 9.5 percent, or $18,000. The council meets at 4 p.m. today at City Hall. Also on the agenda is a contract with HLM Engineers for engineering services on the state-funded improvements to 11 Milagro housing complex.

3 women vie for Lincoln County assessor's post

By Frank E. Lockwood
Times-News writer

SHOSHONE — Nothing can derail a campaign faster than being jailed on lewd and lascivious conduct charges.

John L. Shafter, running unopposed for Lincoln County assessor, watched his own campaign disintegrate after he was arrested this June — accused of having sex with a boy repeatedly over a six-year period.

After Shafter withdrew from the contest, Lincoln County Republicans scrambled to find a new candidate, ultimately embracing 37-year-old Suzie Edwards.

But two other women, independent candi-

Soon after getting the GOP blessing, Edwards was hired as deputy assessor. "So I could get my training in process," Edwards said earlier this month. She'll have three months experience at the courthouse by election day.

19-year CSI board member hopes to hang on to position

By Karen Baumert
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Five days after the celebration of the College of Southern Idaho's 30-year anniversary, voters will choose between Fred Jaynes and incumbent Bill Babcock for a seat on the college's board of trustees.

Babcock is finishing his 19th year on the board and said he wants to focus on the continued growth of CSI.

Babcock is working with the other trustees and President Gerald Meyerhoeffer to obtain the Lamb-Weston Inc. office building for classroom and office space.

Jaynes said he finds no fault in Babcock's work, but he thinks change is good.

When Babcock first took his seat, the CSI campus consisted of the Taylor building, the Shields building, the vocational building and the gymnasium.

Voting schedule may impact CSI board election results

By Karen Baumert
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Incumbent Donna Brizee and Jerome resident Rebecca Peterson will face off Nov. 8 in the first College of Southern Idaho board of trustees election to be held in conjunction with a general election.

The scheduling — required under a state election-consolidation law — could affect voter turnout and the election outcome.

When Donna Brizee first ran for the board of trustees six years ago, she had seven opponents, and only 2,672 people voted.

This time, incumbent Brizee will have only one opponent and approximately 18,000 voters from Twin Falls and Jerome County.

Her opponent, Rebecca Peterson, will have nothing to compare it to.

Former commissioner wants old job back Assessor

By Liz Wright
Times-News writer

RUPERT — Democrat Clarence Bellem portrays his opponent John Rensberg as an indecisive member of the Minidoka County Commission who holds up projects by studying them too long.

Rensberg, a Republican, replies that that's exactly why voters should re-elect him Nov. 8 instead of choosing Bellem for the four-year term in the district three seat. "I do delay projects," Rensberg said. "I don't think we want knee-jerk reactions. We've made big mistakes before by rushing into things."

Bellem says he hears the coffee-shop talk around town that the voters have already made up their minds to choose him for commissioner. The 72-year-old former Minidoka commissioner garnered about 35 votes in the primary as a last-minute write-in candidate for the Democratic party.

If elected, Bellem said he would bring political experience, clout and an ability to make quick decisions. Since he was voted out of office in 1992, he has played an active role in government and sits on numerous committees, he said.

mial shelter are some of his main concerns, Bellem said. He opposes "fish flushes" that would help endangered sockeye salmon migrate to the ocean.

Minidoka County badly needs an animal shelter, Bellem said. His opponent, Rensberg, has delayed a shelter from being built by challenging the county's share of costs, asking for more study and suggesting that the county continue to take it's strays to the Burley Animal Shelter, he said.

"There's a lot of sentiment out there to do something about the shelter," he said.

Having the county pay 52 percent of building and running a shelter is probably honorable and equitable, Bellem said. The costs are split between the cities and county according to population size.

Rensberg said he was drawing fire from Rupert officials because he is looking for the most economical way to house the county's strays. Taxpayers don't want to pay 52 percent for a shelter, he said.

Rensberg says he is willing to stick his neck out to encourage public debate. He says he would bring more of a vision of the Mini-Cassia area's future growth than Bellem.

"I'll bring up an issue sometimes even when I don't agree with it because I think it needs to be discussed," he said. "I think that is good government."

If elected for a second term, Rensberg said he would hold town meetings to encourage people to get involved in county government. No town meetings have been held since he took office, he conceded, but that is because no specific proposals have been made.

Rensberg said the county needs to plan for pre- and post-fire increasing numbers of residents and agricultural development. In several areas of the county, neighbors are fighting proposals for several large dairies, he said.

Three feedlot owners are appealing limits imposed by the planning and zoning commission, Rensberg said. He suggests zoning areas of the county into heavy and light agricultural areas.

"People just aren't going to allow a dairy to come into the area anymore," Rensberg said.

Bellem and Rensberg are the only candidates vying for a seat on a county commission in the Mini-Cassia area. In the May 14 primary elections, John Stevenson beat Harold Rowley as the Republican candidate to replace retiring Minidoka County Commissioner Norman Seibold.

"In Cassia County, voters chose newcomers Paul Christensen and Lyle Woodbury over incumbents Weldon Beck and Norman Dayley as the Republican candidates for commissioners."

praisals and an office that works efficiently," Nielsen said. A Jerome real estate broker who unsuccessfully sought the GOP nomination this summer. "I went to the Republican party because I know everybody in the courthouse is Republican and asked if I could run under their ticket. What I was told was that I was overqualified. I sort of made up my mind I really wanted to do this — with or without their help," she said.

The independent denies that Edwards' stint at the courthouse makes thing I can tell you about that is she can't learn in three months what I've learned in 30 years. Most everything I've ever done has been real people oriented, plus the background I've got in real estate," she added.

She promises to make fair, unbiased assessments, if elected. "Everybody should be paying their fair share which I think is good for everyone involved."

Nielsen said she's comfortable with her independent label. "I'm working for everybody — no matter what their politics are," she added. Butler, the other independent candidate, never sought GOP backing. "My background in the court has always been non-partisan," she said.

"I believe that the assessor's office is a skills office, rather than a political office." When a taxpayer comes into the assessor's office, they're not to be treated as a Republican or a Democrat," she added. Butler said she believes voters will judge the candidates based on their qualifications instead of the "R" or the "I" behind their name.

Her qualifications: "I've managed the court office for the last ten years and I'm familiar with the budgeting process. I'm also cross trained in the auditor-recorder's office." She also claims the ability to be "fair and equitable."

A native of Lincoln County, Butler said she's running a door-to-door campaign that's relies more on hard work than high financing.

"If I can't be a candidate knock on every door and talk to every person then I won't be an effective assessor," she insisted.

of a junior college in our region." Babcock said about the growth CSI has experienced during his three terms.

Jaynes said he also recognizes the importance of CSI to the area, but is concerned with the growth and the impact on the youth.

"I'm afraid with the strong growth that the administration is having, it will not be able to keep up with the growth and I would like to help them do that," Jaynes said. "I can help give direction."

One of Jaynes' desires is to maintain a balance between the educational and vocational programs. He said he is excited to see the academic program grow but does not want one area to rob from the other.

Babcock said that the growth has contributed to the improvement of the college.

"CSI is the fastest-growing school in Idaho." Because of that, Babcock said that the college is able to offer courses that people want to take.

Babcock said CSI is one of the main reasons businesses come to Twin Falls. He said the college offers training of people for the businesses that need to the area. "It is a much-needed part of our education base to help businesses."

The college is the most solid industry we can have in our region," Babcock said. "It offers employment and payroll plus an educational source."

Jaynes said that he can help CSI continue grow and keep up with the growth because of his background in business.

Jaynes has been a farmer and rancher, a sales manager for an automobile dealership and currently is a loan officer.

Peterson said she wants to improve the board's communication within the college.

"I feel I'm good at communicating with college and I will be an ear and voice for the community," Peterson said. "I have a strong straightforward personality. People can tell me what they think without hurting my feelings."

Peterson, who helps run the Peterson Dairy with her husband, said she has been asked if she has an agenda to improve or institute a dairy program.

"That's one question I've been asked continually. Does the college need to do more with dairy? That's not why I'm running at all," Peterson said. "I'm running for community service. I hope I can benefit the community."

Brizee said she also wants to serve for community service. "I want to continue the mission of the college and make sure we continue to serve the diverse educational needs of the 8-county area."

She is finishing her sixth year on the board and said she feels she can offer even more the next six years because of the experience and knowledge she has gained of the college and how it runs.

"I can probably add more the next term because it takes a while to become acquainted with all aspects of the board," Brizee said. "I'm experienced now."

Since Brizee has been on the board, CSI has approved the building of a new library and planetarium, built new dorms, and added a wing to the fine arts building.

During her six-year term she also has helped with the addition of the child development center, outreach centers in Gooding, Hailey and Burley and the Center for New Direction.

Brizee also serves as the president for the CSI Foundation.

The board of trustees, Brizee said, needs "to insure excellence in education as we continue to experience a growth rate of over 6 percent."

The first thing Peterson said she wants to do if she is elected is to learn about the board and what types of things she can be involved in.

"I want to sit back and learn what needs to be done instead of coming in and changing everything," Peterson said.

Peterson wrote on her election flyer, "I believe generations build on the successes of each other. With the loss of one generation at CSI, it is time for the next generation to assume leadership."

If elected, Peterson, mother of three children, would be the second woman to sit on the board. Brizee, who has raised five children, is the first.

Brizee said that she felt she brought a female point of view to the board and a different perspective.

"I wondered what it would be like," Brizee said. "It's been a wonderful experience."

Crapo

"The problem will be the politics," he said. "There is a much more global war going on over water here, and this is just a little slice of that... The current never structure that controls natural resource issues in Washington is more inclined to push for greater federal authority."

And he said those same people see federal payment of water fees as subjugating federal authority to the state. But he contended that with a Congress more oriented toward protecting states' rights — a Congress controlled by Republicans — states' rights issues like federal payment of state adjudication fees would be favorably considered.

In addition, however, Crapo also urged the committee to seek out other western states with similar concerns to broaden the pressure on Congress for action.

With fall, comes husband harvest

A humble potato field is the setting for traditional courting season

REARDAN, Wash. (AP) — Potatoes by the ton rumble over a conveyor belt in the cool cavern of the concrete storage building. The air smells of roots and earth.

Ten women, ages 15 to 86, reach gloved hands onto the conveyor belt, tossing the largest potatoes into the center, pulling aside rocks and vines. The men who drove the trucks and the harvester in the field this morning watch them work.

Potato harvest for the Hutterite colony 20 miles west of Spokane means long, dusty days of driving for the men, hours of standing and sorting for the women.

It's also a traditional time of year for courting.

"The only thing potato harvest is good for is meeting a guy," jokes Laura Tschetter with a laugh.

She and other Hutterites from several colonies in Alberta are here to help with harvest. Visits like this are rare opportunities to meet potential mates.

The young people of the pacifist communal sect rarely marry within their own colony. The local colony contains only 51 people and most are related. First cousins don't marry, but more distant cousins sometimes do.

"In a culture where there are only 16 common last names over 464 years, it's almost impossible not to have shared ancestors," says Vance Youmans, an Eastern Washington University teacher who wrote an award-winning thesis on the Hutterites.

The group traces its roots to the 16th century Protestant Reformation. Their voices echo with the Old World accents of Switzerland, Germany and the Ukraine.

They believe in simple, communal living, although they use modern farm machinery. Women and girls wear dark dresses and head scarves. Men are clean-shaven until marriage. They don't seek converts but sometimes an outsider, intrigued with their peaceful existence, will join them.

Their lives have three turning points. At age 15, their lessons in the colony's one-room school end and their work for the community begins. Between ages 18 and 24, they make the decision to become baptized. The next step is marriage.

The local Hutterites have grown potatoes for two decades. This year's crop covered 350 acres and will be sold next spring as seed to Columbia Basin commercial growers. Seed potatoes cannot be grown too close to eating potatoes because of the threat of insects or disease, explains Dan Gross.

It's a good metaphor for the Hutterites, he says. The isolation of the colonies keeps their members safe from diseases of the soul.

Sara Anne Gross, 23, met her boyfriend five years ago at potato harvest. They've seen each other only once or twice a year since, but write letters often. Harvest is a good time to meet a boyfriend, she says.

"You work together four weeks. You get to know what he's like when he's tired, what he's like when he feels good."

"Actually there's not a character in him yet don't get to know." As she waits to sort potatoes after lunch, Laura Tschetter tells what she has been teaching the younger women about courtship. She is 28 and unmarried.

"A guy doesn't want a girl who's really a sissy," she says. "They want her to be a little outgoing. And they want a pretty girl."

In the late afternoon, with nearly 8,000 tons of potatoes stored until spring, the workers take a break for coffee, homemade apple pie and ice cream. The young women serve the men, who say "please" and "thank you" with grins and sparkling eyes. Responding to a visitor's questions, they teasingly explain the unwritten rules of courtship.

"Once you know the girls good enough, they'll kiss," says Peter Gross. "The girl has the power over the boy in that," adds Tschetter as if she's played a trump card.

After harvest, a round of winter visits begins with more chances for young people to meet and court, says Youmans, whose thesis "The Plough and the Pen" will be published as a book this winter.

"They will go ice skating and sing songs. They will serenade each other under the stars and go to bonfires."

Winking adults allow young couples time alone, trusting in their upbringing to balance the thrills of romance.

"When a young Hutterite couple starts courting almost all of the time that will be the only courtship in their lives," Youmans says. "They grow to know one another. Since they are the same in terms of their culture the only thing that could happen would be that they really dislike each other. And they're such loving people that doesn't happen. They pretty much marry whom they court."

Pumps remove millions of tons of salt from lake

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — About 695 million tons of salt were removed from the Great Salt Lake by the west-desert-pumping-project, according to a new geological study.

But the salt level in the lake is so much higher than most oceans and inland seas that few will notice the difference.

"It sounds like a big number, but I'm saying, 'So what?'" said Division of Water Resources Director Larry Anderson. "I have a hard time believing there is any less salt-to-harvest-than-there-was-before the pumping."

The report by the U.S. Geological Survey (USGS) indicates that 14.2 percent of the salt in the lake was removed. Roughly 95 million tons flowed back into the lake during the 27 months the pumps operated in the 1980s for a net loss of 60 million tons of salt.

Hydrologists believe it would take about 171 years to replace the loss naturally based on theories that about 3.5 million tons of salt enter the lake annually through stream flows.

Hydrologist Doyle Stephens said a train carrying that much salt would stretch from Salt Lake City to Sacramento.

But Lee Brown, spokesman for Magnesium Corporation of America (Magcorp), said the lost salt will have little impact given the total volume of salt in the lake.

"If all of these millions of tons of salt were removed from the lake, you should have seen a certain drop in its salinity. But it has not dropped," said Brown, whose company has solar-evaporation ponds that extract magnesium and other chemicals from the lake's southern arm.

Indeed, the lake's salinity level south of the Southern Pacific Railroad causeway was 14.3 percent on Oct. 3, and had been as high as 15.9 percent in August. The northern arm's salinity level earlier this month was 27.4 percent, which is about as high as it gets before the salt precipitates out and falls to the lake bottom.

"According to the data I have, the lake has shown no noticeable effect from the loss of salt," said David Allen, data-base administrator for the USGS water-resources division in Salt Lake City. "The lake is not more or less saline than it was before pumping."

The $60 million pumping project began in April 1987 when the Great Salt Lake's southern arm was at a historic high of 4,211.85 feet above sea level. T he pumps lifted briny water from the lake's north arm and deposited it in a 4-mile-long canal until they were shut off on June 30, 1989.

Civil rights group warns of racist alliance

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — A civil rights group warns that the militia movement in this country is attracting not only armed citizens opposed to the U.S. government but white supremacists in several states.

"In our view, this mixture of armed groups and those who hate is a recipe for disaster," said Morris Dees, director of the Southern Poverty Law Center in Montgomery, Ala.

Dees said his organization has "substantial evidence" that white supremacists are part of militias in at least six states, including Idaho and Montana.

Dees has written to U.S. Attorney General Janet Reno and state attorneys general in Idaho, Montana, Colorado, Florida, Texas and Nevada.

"There is a growing danger posed by these unauthorized militia,"

Dees said in his letter to Reno.

The Spokesman-Review newspaper reported on white supremacists and militias in its Sunday editions.

In Idaho, there are three known militias: Concerned Citizens of Idaho, Unorganized Militia of Idaho and the United States Militia Association, the newspaper said.

In Washington, the only known militia is Citizens for a Constitutional Washington, based in Puyallup. The group's literature has also shown up in Ferry County in Eastern Washington, the newspaper said.

The Militia of Montana (MOM), based in Noxon, has a full-time staff, a "Taking Aim" newsletter and a mail-order business for books and videos.

One of MOM's founders, John Trochmann, was a speaker at the 1990

Aryan Nations Congress, north of Coeur d'Alene, Idaho.

Dees called Trochmann, a "prime example" of individuals previously linked to white supremacy groups who are now involved in militias.

"I don't even want to respond to something as repulsive as that," Trochmann told The Spokesman-Review.

"They're slandering me. I didn't choose who my parents are, that my skin is white. Why should I be ashamed of who I am?"

Trochmann said he spoke about morality at the Aryan Nations meeting, but doesn't necessarily "know about their other beliefs."

"I don't claim to be a Christian, and I certainly don't share that Hitler crap they talk about over there."

Trochmann said those committed to the militia movement are patriotic Americans, unhappy with their government and worried about threats to constitutional freedoms.

The federal staves involving Randy Weaver in northern Idaho and the Branch Davidians in Waco, Texas, boosted anti-government sentiment and membership in the militias, Trochmann said.

The recent passage of the federal anti-crime bill and its ban on the sale of some military-style assault weapons also has increased anti-government sentiment, said Danny Welch, director of Klanwatch.

"Citizens have the right to form peaceful groups to protest gun legislation and to engage in target practice," Dees wrote in his letter to Reno.

Jazz star Malone lends his name to line of shirts

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Utah Jazz forward Karl Malone hopes to have a line of Mailman-endorsed cowboy clothes on store shelves across America by this spring.

The clothing line is the latest venture of the NBA All-Star who also raises cattle, trades real estate, drives a semi-truck, sells cars and dabbles in municipal bonds.

"We're talking to Sears, J.C. Penney and other major retailers," said Janet Romano, a Salt Lake clothing designer who came up with the idea for KM Western Wear, named for the cattle brand Malone uses on his off-season Arkansas ranch.

"Our goal is to go to a Mervyn's or a Kmart and get a national contract," added Greg Fullerton, sales manager for the venture and a former executive with Franklin Quest Co., the Utah-based day-planner company.

Fullerton said Malone is only lending his name to the enterprise; other investors are putting up the design and production money.

Romano said the clothing initially will be limited to shirts and then may be complemented by a line of leather goods including luggage, belts, vests and briefcases.

KM Western Wear will be marketed with "hang tags," featuring what Romano said are contrived sayings Malone likes.

Among them: "Don't squat on your spurs" and "Never love a cowboy unless he likes you better than his truck."

Man shoots woman, teen then kills self

COEUR D'ALENE, Idaho (AP) — A Kootenai County man killed a woman and a teen-age boy and then took his own life, the sheriff's office said Sunday.

When deputies arrived at the house near Coeur d'Alene just before midnight Saturday, they found a man dead in the driveway of a self-inflicted gunshot wound, Lt. Ben Wolfinger said.

Inside the home, a woman and a teen-ager were found dead from gunshot wounds, Wolfinger said.

Three young children in the home were asleep and unhurt, Wolfinger said. The children have been placed in shelter care.

The names of those involved have not been made public pending notification of relatives.

Vistors flock to Utah island for annual bison roundup

ANTELOPE ISLAND, Utah (AP) — John Percival is no cowboy but one of 400 participants riding in this year's annual Antelope Island bison roundup.

"It's a good break from everyday life," said Percival, who works for the Davis School District in the maintenance department.

More than 650 bison are expected to be funneled into corals where they will be counted, weighed, vaccinated and given blood tests. This year's roundup, which originated in 1987, began Saturday and will run through Nov. 8.

Herding buffalo is much different than herding cattle, said Cindy Percival, John's daughter-in-law. It must be done slowly and steadily to avoid scaring the bison, although sometimes that can be difficult.

"Some people say bison can't see and they are silly but it isn't true — they see, they have good memory, and are smart animals," said Mitch Larsson, Northwest region manager of Utah Division of Parks and Recreation. For 17 years — from 1977 to 1993 — Larsson was Antelope Island park manager.

"So when under these peaceful sunny skies all of a sudden they are surrounded by cowboys and four-by-fours which force them to move from their pastures, while a helicopter roars above their heads, they get really nervous."

Spokesman Mark Hadley, who has worked for the state's park division for five years, said that during each roundup a couple of unhappy bulls attack the chase truck traveling at about 35 mph.

"I don't recall any injuries, but most of our vehicles have been scratched and dented many times," Hadley said.

Becker tops Ivanisevic at Stockholm Open

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — Boris Becker, convinced this is his kind of town, beat Goran Ivanisevic in a four-set serve-and-volley duel Sunday to win the Stockholm Open for the fourth time.

“It must be something in the air in Stockholm that makes me play great here,” the German said after a 4-6, 6-4, 6-3, 7-6 (7-4) victory in the $1.72 million event on the Globe Arena’s fast carpet.

Becker, a former world No. 1 ranked sixth before this tournament, collected $244,000 for his fourth ATP singles title of the year.

He also received 235 ATP Tour points and now is assured of a berth in the ATP World Championship in Frankfurt next month.

Brazilian reprises Chicago Marathon championship

CHICAGO — Luis Antonio Dos Santos of Brazil surged into the lead with 11 miles remaining and won the Chicago Marathon for the second straight year Sunday.

On a crisp autumn day perfect for running, Dos Santos became only the second man to win two years in a row. His time was 2 hours, 11 minutes, 16 seconds.

The only other two-time men’s winner was Steve Jones of Wales in 1984 and 1985.

Dos Santos took the lead at mile 15 and held it the rest of the way.

Ed Eyestone of Layton, Utah, finished second at 2:11:51.

Flavored Cosmos Ndeti of Kenya, winner of the last two Boston Marathons, dropped out near the 19-mile mark with a foot blister. Kristy Johnston of Eugene, Ore., was the top women’s finisher at 2:31:34. Gitte Karlshof of Denmark finished second at 2:51:57.

Johnson averages 256 to lead PBA Great Lakes Classic

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. — Jimmy Johnson averaged 256 over his first six games of qualifying Sunday, including a 299 game, and has the early lead in the Professional Bowlers Association’s Great Lakes Classic.

Johnson, totalling 1,539 pins in round one and took a 60-pin lead into round two. Eugene McCune was second, four pins ahead of Walter Ray Williams.

Dave Ferraro was fourth with 1,454 pins, two ahead of Butch Soper.

Langer goes 1-under Sunday to win Volvo Masters tourney

SOTOGRADE, Spain — Bernhard Langer of Germany shot a 1-under-par 70 Sunday and won the Volvo Masters golf tournament by one shot when Seve Ballesteros of Spain bogeyed the final hole.

Langer, who collected $204,000, finished at 8-under 276. With the win, he leaped past Ballesteros into second place on the final European money list — worth a bonus of $135,500.

Close, but no cigar

Cowboys hold off fiery Bengals with field goal in final minutes

The Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Jeff Blake didn’t get the upset that would have made him part of NFL lore. He did get the thing he wanted most Sunday: respect.

Blake turned his first NFL start into a first-rate score for the Dallas Cowboys, stunning them with a pair of long touchdown passes. But the Cowboys showed why they’re two-time Super Bowl champions, regrouping from the two-touchdown deficit for a 23-20 victory over the winless Cincinnati Bengals.

Troy Aikman shook off another blow to the head just one week after sustaining a concussion and threw a pair of first-half touchdown passes. Chris Boniol kicked three second-half field goals to give Dallas (7-1) its seventh straight road win, matching the club record.

More important, it avoided a major embarrassment for the defending champions.

“I hope there won’t be any partying tonight,” coach Barry Switzer said. “There shouldn’t be. There’s not much to be damn happy about.”

Switzer warned the Cowboys all week about taking the Bengals (0-9) too lightly in this matchup between the NFL’s best and worst. Evidently, they didn’t listen.

“I told them this week ... that we don’t want to live a nightmare that becomes reality — that a team like this can win,” the first-year coach from Oklahoma said. “Even Iowa State played my rear end off several times and we had to come from behind and win.”

Blake nearly turned it into a nightmare at Riverfront Stadium.

The third-string quarterback was forced to start because of injuries to David Klingler and Don Hollas. No one expected much from the third-year pro, who had virtually no NFL game experience. He wound up with the second-best passing game this season by a Bengal.

Blake threw for 247 yards and caught the NFL’s best defense flat-footed twice. He threw touchdown passes of 67 and 55 yards to Darnay Scott — the longest passes allowed this season by the league’s best pass defense — for a 14-0 lead one play into the second quarter.

Blake completed 14 of 32 passes without an interception. Klingler, out with a sprained knee, has thrown for 247 yards only once in his career.

“We didn’t expect their offense to come out and perform the way they did today,” Aikman said. “Blake hasn’t started in the league, and you don’t expect a guy to go out and play as well as he played.”

Cincinnati Bengals receiver Darnay Scott hauls in a 67-yard touchdown pass against the Dallas Cowboys Sunday during the first quarter of their game. The Bengals built an early 14-0 lead but lost, again, 23-20.

Even though he didn’t pull a Gus Frerotte — Washington’s rookie quarterback who won his first start last week — Blake was impressive enough to make the Bengals think of him as a solid backup when Klingler is healthy.

“That’s all I really wanted, some respect,” Blake said. “I think I got that today.”

“I’m trying not to let my head get too big, because I know where I came from. I know how hard I had to work to get here. The situation I’m in now people dream of being in. I’m just grateful for it.”

Aikman started the Cowboys’ turnaround by hitting Alvin Harper in double coverage for a 27-yard touchdown pass to culminate a four-play, 65-yard drive in the second quarter.

The Bengals then reverted to bumbling late in the first half, helping the Cowboys put together a 13-play drive that ended with Aikman’s 10-yard TD pass to Michael Irvin. Linebacker James Francis hit Aikman on the chin with a forearm after he threw a fourth-down incompletion, Please see COWBOYS/B6

Broncos continue to rebound at expense of Browns

The Associated Press

John Elway and the Denver Broncos are ready to play the second half of the season.

In the past two weeks, the lowly Broncos have risen from the bottom of the AFC West to beat teams with the NFL’s best record.

Pro football

Last week, it was previously undefeated San Diego. On Sunday, it was Cleveland as Elway completed 30 of 41 passes for 349 yards and two touchdowns in a 26-14 victory over the Browns (6-2), one of three teams entering play with one loss.

“We’re slowly clawing our way back into this thing,” Elway said. “But we’ve got to get to .500 before we even think about the playoffs.”

Over the next four weeks, the Broncos (3-3) play the Los Angeles Rams and are home against Seattle, Atlanta and Cincinnati. By then the Broncos could be right back in the playoff picture.

Elway, who led the Broncos to three wins over the Browns in three AFC championship games, picked apart the Browns’ defense, which entered the game allowing the and then hit Glyn Milburn with a 17-yard TD pass for the clinching score.

Browns coach Bill Belichick said he has “seen Elway have great days before, and today was as good as any. He (his receivers) in the flat, over the middle and long. He threw the ball everywhere he could.”

Before Elway’s pass to Milburn, Mark Rypien, who replaced a dazed Vinny Testaverde late in the first half, engineered a 60-yard scoring drive and two-point conversion that cut the deficit to 20-14 early in the final quarter.

Testaverde has a mild neck sprain and his status was not known.

In other games, San Diego beat Seattle 35-15, Miami defeated New England 23-3, the Los Angeles Raiders topped Houston 17-14, Minnesota beat Tampa Bay 36-13, Indianapolis beat the New York Jets 28-25, Dallas edged Cincinnati 23-20, Buffalo beat Kansas City 44-10, Philadelphia defeated Washington 31-29 and Detroit edged the New York Giants 28-25 in overtime.

Pittsburgh played at Arizona on Sunday night.

Green Bay is at Chicago on Monday night.

The NFC West — San Francisco, Atlanta, New Orleans and the Los Angeles Rams — were off this week.

Chargers 35, Seahawks 15

At San Diego, Gale Gilbert replaced the injured Drew Humphries and threw two fourth-quarter TD passes and safety Stanley Richard forced two fumbles to set up two more scores for San Diego (7-1).

Humphries sustained a dislocated left shoulder early in the third quarter after he was tripped by linebacker Bob Spillituli and San Adams fell on him. He is questionable for Sunday.

Natronne Means rushed 26 times for 104 yards and one TD as he became the first San Diego running back to have four straight 100-yard games. John Carney kicked two field goals, extending his streak to 18 in a row.

The Seahawks (3-5) lost their fourth straight. Rick Mirer was 15 for 30 for 177 yards and was sacked three times.

Dolphins 23, Patriots 3

At Foxboro, Mass., Dan Marino outduelled Drew Bledsoe again. This time it wasn’t close. Marino threw for 193 yards and a TD on the opening drive of the second half for Miami (6-2). Bledsoe, the NFL leader in passing yards, threw for just 125 yards and three interceptions, leading to 10 Dolphins points.

McMichael seeks revenge in Chicago

The Associated Press

CHICAGO — Blood boiling, spit flying, legs churning, arms pumping, expletives spewing, hair flowing out the back of his helmet, Ming the Merciless returns to Soldier Field Monday night.

This time, Steve McMichael will be wearing the green and gold of the Green Bay Packers. The enemies. For all those years, the enemies.

Now, the Chicago Bears are on McMichael’s hate list. They threw him away after 13 seasons, told him he wasn’t good enough, and let him go up the NFC Central road.

So, in a nationally televised game between Chicago (4-3) and Green Bay (3-4), the man the Bears called Ming returns — Please see MCMICHAEL/B6

Nebraska, Penn State atop separate polls

The Associated Press

After posting their most impressive victories of the season, Penn State and Nebraska felt they deserved to be No. 1. Both got their wish Sunday.

Nebraska, which defeated previously unbeaten Colorado 24-7 Saturday, was No. 1 in The Associated Press media poll. Penn State, which trounced Ohio State 63-14, was No. 1 in the USA Today-CNN coaches’ poll.

“We definitely feel we’re No. 1,” Penn State cornerback Brian Miller said. “I’ve never been on a team like this before. It’s unbelievable.”

Nebraska linebacker Troy Dumas was just as adamant.

“We’re No. 1, plain and simple,” he said. “Everyone who downgrades us can’t do that anymore.”

Nebraska, third in the AP poll last week behind No. 1 Penn State and No. 2 Colorado, rose to first after ending the Buffaloes’ 11-game winning streak. But Penn State held on to the top spot in the coaches’ poll after handing Ohio State its worst loss in 48 years.

The polls were extremely close. In the AP, Nebraska led Penn State by five first-place votes (33-28) and six points (1,520-1,514). In the coaches’ survey, Penn State edged Nebraska by two first-place votes (32-30) and two points (1,520-1,518).

Both teams are likely to win their remaining regular-season games and, since they can’t meet in a bowl, the debate probably will rage for some time.

If they finish unbeaten, Penn State (7-0) would go to the Rose Bowl as Big Ten champion and Nebraska (9-0) would go to the Orange Bowl as Big Eight champion. Bowl victories by the Nittany Lions and Cornhuskers could result in a split national title for the third time in five years.

Neither team plays an opponent currently ranked in the AP Top 25 the rest of the way.

Nebraska is home against Kansas on Saturday, then finishes at Iowa State and Oklahoma. Penn State travels to Indiana and Illinois before closing with home games against Northwestern and Michigan State.

Auburn, which beat Arkansas 31-14 Saturday for its 19th straight victory, moved up to third in the AP poll and remained in the running for a share of the national title if Nebraska and Penn State lose. The Tigers (8-0) aren’t eligible in the coaches’ poll because of NCAA probation, which also bars them from a bowl game. Florida (6-1) is fourth in the AP, followed by Miami (6-1), Alabama (8-0), Colorado (7-1), Florida State (6-1), Utah (8-0) and Syracuse (6-1).

Rounding out the Top 25 are Texas A&M, Washington, Virginia, Colorado State, Kansas State, Washington State, Virginia Tech, Arizona, North Carolina, Michigan, Oregon, Southern California, Duke, Mississippi State and Brigham Young.

Big Sky picture clears up

The Associated Press

No. 1 Montana's fourth straight win was made even sweeter Saturday as the Grizzlies broke No. 3 Idaho's undefeated record to become the Big Sky Conference's only undefeated team.

Montana coach Don Read was thrilled with the 45-21 victory but believed the week was over.

"It's one of the best, if not the best, wins we've had in the many years I've been here," Read said. "It's the worst week I've had since I've been here. I've had 30 people on the phone. It's too much for me."

The victory improved the Grizzlies' record to 8-0 overall and took sole possession of the Big Sky Conference lead with a 4-0 lead. Idaho fell to 7-1 and 4-1.

When the pressure's on, nobody plays bigger than Dave Dickinson. The junior passed for 510 yards and three touchdowns and ran for another score.

"He's a competitive person who seems to thrive playing against high-ranked, tough teams," Read said. "Tell me how to stop that guy."

Idaho coach John L. Smith said that Dickinson "You've got to have a lot of respect for that guy. He's scary."

"We shot ourselves in the foot for too many times. We just didn't execute at important times," Idaho quarterback Eric Hisaw said.

Big Sky roundup

"We were beaten by the best team in the nation today," Hisaw said. "The thing with Montana is every team they play against they beat them," Smith said. "And then the whole game plan changes. We didn't run the ball as much as we wanted to."

"Using a lot of people is helping us stay strong," Read said. "The Grizzlies play hard all the time and don't need to worry about getting worn down."

But it is not going to get any easier.

Montana is likely to hold onto its No. 1 ranking, but has to travel to No. 14 Boise State (7-1) next Saturday.

If Montana continues its winning ways, the playoffs will follow. Things are looking brighter for the Eastern Washington Eagles after a hard-won 34-31 victory over Montana State.

Tom Zurluff's 25-yard field goal kept the Eagles in the Eastern Washington (3-5, 2-4) the leg up over Montana State (2-7, 0-6), snapping the Eagles' four-game losing streak.

"Right now we have a sense of relief," said Eastern Washington coach Mike Kramer.

"Throughout the game we were kind of relieved that we weren't hurting ourselves and blowing assignments. We hung in there and made plays," Kramer said.

"I think it was evident throughout the entire ball game that offensively we were clicking. We knew that if we kept getting an opportunity, we would get it in there."

It was Montana State's sixth straight loss, but coach Cliff Hysell tried to look at the bright side.

"I thought we played really, really well. We made some mistakes at crucial times, but it was our best effort of the last seven weeks," said Hysell.

"We seemed to be playing pretty well in the second half this week, we did dig a hole so deep in the first half that we couldn't get out."

Northern Arizona finished Big Sky Conference play with a 24-20 win over Weber State.

Northern Arizona (5-4, 4-3) struck first on a 5-yard punt return from Allen Caldwell, who had 130 rushing yards in the first quarter to lead Weber State (4-5, 1-4).

Ricks dominates Region 18 cross country as men's team notches perfect 15 score

The Times-News

PROVO, Utah — Getting a perfect 15 from its men's team, Ricks College swept the 1994 Region 18 Cross Country Championships.

Grant Stevens of Roy, Utah led a 1-through-5 sweep for the Vikings in 26:19. College of Southern Idaho — getting a team best seventh-place showing from Andy Bestwick (27:43) — finished with 56. Utah Valley and North Idaho followed with 67 and 109 points, respectively.

CSI coach Gary Sievers said a 3,500-meter, winding uphill course that finished straight down played havoc with times and results.

"Ricks ran well. We didn't run as well as we could have," Sievers said. "But it wasn't a cross country course... that was a mountain climbing course. Don't get me wrong. It was the same for everybody, but I'll bet 75-percent of the women runners felt coming down."

CSI's Denise Danielson split a pair of Ricks women for second place and Joy Phillips cracked the top 10 for the Golden Eagles as well. It was, however, not enough to keep the Vikings from a 22-51 team triumph.

Ricks' Jennifer Connell crossed the finish line first in 20:12, five seconds ahead of Danielson.

Saturday's victories send both Ricks' teams into the National Cross Country Championships at Alfred State College in upstate New York in Nov. College of Southern Idaho should know if they are going by midweek.

"There are four at-large berths given out," Sievers explained.

"Right now, our women are ranked number three, so we're virtually assured of getting a spot. On the men's side, we're probably third or fourth. Our chances are about 60-percent there. We should be receiving confirmation Tuesday or Wednesday."

Becker tops Ivanisevic at Stockholm Open

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — Boris Becker, convinced this is his kind of town, beat Goran Ivanisevic in a four-set tennis-volley duel Sunday to win the Stockholm Open for the fourth time.

“It must be something in the air in Stockholm that makes me play great here,” the German said after a 4-6, 6-4, 6-3, 7-6 (7-4) victory in the $172 million event on the Globe Arena’s fast carpet.

Becker, a former world No. 1 ranked sixth before this tournament, collected $244,000 for his fourth ATP singles title of the year.

He also received 235 ATP Tour points and now is assured of a berth in the ATP World Championship in Frankfurt next month.

Brazilian reprises Chicago Marathon championship

CHICAGO — Luis Antonio Dos Santos of Brazil surged into the lead with 11 miles remaining and won the Chicago Marathon for the second straight year Sunday.

On a crisp autumn day perfect for running, Dos Santos became only the second man to win two years in a row. His time was 2 hours, 11 minutes, 16 seconds.

The only other two-time men’s winner was Steve Jones of Wales in 1984 and 1985.

Dos Santos took the lead at mile 15 and held it the rest of the way. He edged Eyestone of Layton, Utah, finished second at 2:11:51.

Favored Cosmas Ndeti of Kenya, winner of the last two Boston Marathons, dropped out near the 19-mile mark with a foot blister. Kristy Johnson of Eugene, Ore., was the top women’s finisher at 2:31:34. Gite Karlishoj of Denmark finished second at 2:31:57.

Johnson averages 256 to lead PBA Great Lakes Classic

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. — Jimmy Johnson averaged 256 over his first six games of qualifying Sunday, including a 299 game, and has the early lead in the Professional Bowlers Association’s Great Lakes Classic.

Johnson, totalling 1,539 pins in round one and took a 60-pin lead into round two. Eugene McCune was second, four pins ahead of Walter Ray Williams.

Dave Ferraro was fourth with 1,454 pins, two ahead of Butch Soper.

Langer goes 1-under Sunday to win Volvo Masters tourney

SOTOGRADE, Spain — Bernhard Langer of Germany shot a 1-under-par 70 Sunday and won the Volvo Masters golf tournament by one shot when Seve Ballesteros of Spain bogeyed the final hole.

Langer, who collected $204,000, finished at 8-under 276. With the win, he leaped past Ballesteros into second place on the final European money list — worth a bonus of $135,500.

Close, but no cigar

Cowboys hold off fiery Bengals with field goal in final minutes

The Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Jeff Blake didn’t get the upset that would have made him part of NFL lore. He did get the thing he wanted most Sunday: respect.

Blake turned his first NFL start into a first-rate scare for the Dallas Cowboys, stunning them with a pair of long touchdown passes. But the Cowboys showed why they’re two-time Super Bowl champions, regrouping from the two-touchdown deficit for a 23-20 victory over the winless Cincinnati Bengals.

Troy Aikman shook off another blow to the head just one week after sustaining a concussion and threw a pair of first-half touchdown passes. Chris Boniol kicked three second-half field goals to give Dallas (7-1) its seventh straight road win, matching the club record.

More important, it avoided a major embarrassment for the defending champions.

“I hope there won’t be any partying tonight,” coach Barry Switzer said. “There shouldn’t be. There’s not much to be damn happy about.”

Switzer warned the Cowboys all week about taking the Bengals (0-8) too lightly in this matchup between the NFL’s best and worst. Evidently, they didn’t listen.

“I told them this week ... that we don’t want to live a nightmare that becomes reality — that a team like this can win,” the first-year coach from Oklahoma said. “Even Iowa State played my rear end off several times and we had to come from behind and win.”

Blake nearly turned it into a nightmare at Riverfront Stadium.

The third-string quarterback was forced to start because of injuries to David Klingler and Don Hollas. No one expected much from the third-year pro, who had virtually no NFL game experience. He wound up with the second-best passing game this season by a Bengal.

Blake threw for 247 yards and caught the NFL’s best defense flat-footed twice. He threw touchdown passes of 67 and 55 yards to Darnay Scott — the longest passes allowed this season by the league’s best pass defense — for a 14-0 lead one play into the second quarter.

Blake completed 14 of 32 passes without an interception. Klingler, out with a sprained knee, has thrown for 247 yards only once in his career.

“We didn’t expect their offense to come out and perform the way they did today,” Aikman said. “Blake hasn’t started in the league, and you don’t expect a guy to go out and play as well as he played.”

Even though he didn’t pull a Gus Frerotte — Washington’s rookie quarterback, back who won his first start last week — Blake was impressive enough to make the Bengals’ think of him as a solid backup when Klingler is healthy.

“That’s all I really wanted, some respect,” Blake said. “I think I got that today.”

“I’m trying not to let my head get too big, because I know where I came from. I know how hard I had to work to get here. The situation I’m in now people dream of being in. I’m just grateful for it.”

Aikman started the Cowboys’ turnaround by hitting Alvin Harper in double coverage for a 27-yard touchdown pass to culminate a four-play, 65-yard drive in the second quarter.

The Bengals then reverted to bumbling late in the first half, helping the Cowboys put together a 13-play drive that ended with Aikman’s 10-yard TD pass to Michael Irvin. Linebacker James Francis hit Aikman on the chin with a forearm after he threw a fourth-down incompletion.

Broncos continue to rebound at expense of Browns

The Associated Press

John Elway and the Denver Broncos are ready to play the second half of the season.

In the past two weeks, the lowly Broncos have risen from the bottom of the AFC West to beat teams with the NFL’s best record.

Pro football

Last week, it was previously undefeated San Diego. On Sunday, it was Cleveland as Elway completed 30 of 41 passes for 349 yards and two touchdowns in a 26-14 victory over the Browns (6-2), one of three teams entering play with one loss.

“We’re slowly clawing our way back into this thing,” Elway said. “But we’ve got to get to .500 before we even think about the playoffs.”

Over the next four weeks, the Broncos (3-5) play the Los Angeles Rams and are home against Seattle, Atlanta and Cincinnati. By then the Broncos could be right back in the playoff picture.

Elway, who led the Broncos to three wins over the Browns in three AFC championship games, picked apart the Browns’ defense, which entered the game allowing the and then hit Glyn Milburn with a 17-yard TD pass for a clinching score.

Browns coach Bill Belichick said he has “seen Elway have great days before, and today was as good as any. He hit (receivers) in the flat, over the middle and long. He threw the ball everywhere he could.”

Before Elway’s pass to Milburn, Mark Rypien, who replaced a dazed Vinny Testaverde late in the first half, engineered a 60-yard scoring drive and two-point conversion that cut the deficit to 20-14 early in the final quarter.

Testaverde has a mild neck sprain and his status was not known.

In other games, San Diego beat Seattle 35-15, Miami defeated New England 23-3, the Los Angeles Raiders topped Houston 17-14, Minnesota beat Tampa Bay 36-13, Indianapolis beat the New York Jets 28-25, Dallas edged Cincinnati 23-20, Buffalo beat Kansas City 44-10, Philadelphia defeated Washington 31-29 and Detroit edged the New York Giants 28-25 in overtime.

Pittsburgh played at Arizona on Sunday night.

Green Bay is at Chicago on Monday night.

The NFC West — San Francisco, Atlanta, New Orleans and the Los Angeles Rams — were off this week.

Chargers 35, Seahawks 15

At San Diego, Gale Gilbert replaced the injured Stan Humphries and threw two fourth-quarter TD passes and safety Stanley Richard forced two fumbles to set up two more scores for San Diego (7-1).

Humphries sustained a dislocated left shoulder early in the third quarter after he was tripped by linebacker Bob Spillit and Sam Adams fell on him. He is questionable for Sunday.

Natron Means rushed 26 times for 104 yards and one TD as he became the first San Diego running back to have four straight 100-yard games. John Carney kicked two field goals, extending his streak to 18 in a row.

The Seahawks (3-5) lost their fourth straight. Rick Mirer was 15 for 30 for 177 yards and was sacked three times.

Dolphins 23, Patriots 3

At Foxboro, Mass., Dan Marino outduelled Drew Bledsoe again. This time it wasn’t close, Marino threw for 198 yards and a TD on the opening drive of the second half for Miami (6-2). Bledsoe, the NFL leader in passing yards, threw for just 125 yards and three interceptions, leading to 10 Dolphins points.

McMichael seeks revenge in Chicago

The Associated Press

CHICAGO — Blood boiling, spitting, legs churning, arms pumping, explosives spewing, hair flowing out the back of his helmet, Ming the Merciless returns to Soldier Field Monday night.

This time, Steve McMichael will be wearing the green and gold of the Green Bay Packers. The enemies. For all those years, the enemies.

Now, the Chicago Bears are on McMichael’s hate list. They threw him away after 13 seasons, told him he wasn’t good enough, and let him go up the NFC Central road.

So, in a nationally televised game between Chicago (4-3) and Green Bay (3-4), the man the Bears called Ming returns —

Nebraska, Penn State atop separate polls

The Associated Press

After posting their most impressive victories of the season, Penn State and Nebraska felt they deserved to be No. 1. Both got their wish Sunday.

Nebraska, which defeated previously unbeaten Colorado 24-7 Saturday, was No. 1 in The Associated Press media poll. Penn State, which trounced Ohio State 63-14, was No. 1 in the USA Today/CNN coaches’ poll.

Nebraska linebacker Troy Dumas was just as adamant.

“We’re No. 1, plain and simple,” he said. “Everyone who downgrades us can’t do that anymore.”

Nebraska, third in the AP poll last week behind No. 1 Penn State and No. 2 Colorado, rose to first after ending the Buffaloes’ 11-game winning streak. But Penn State held on to the top spot in the coaches’ poll after handing Ohio State its worst loss in 48 years.

The polls were extremely close. In the AP, Nebraska led Penn State by five first-place votes (33-28) and six points (1,520-1,514). In the coaches’ survey, Penn State edged Nebraska by two first-place votes (32-30) and two points (1,520-1,518).

Both teams are likely to win their remaining regular-season games and, since they can’t meet in a bowl, the debate probably will rage for some time.

If they finish unbeaten, Penn State (7-0) would go to the Rose Bowl as Big Ten champion and Nebraska (9-0) would go to the Orange Bowl as Big Eight champion. Bowl victories by the Nittany Lions and Cornhuskers could result in a split national title for the third time in five years.

Neither team plays an opponent currently ranked in the AP Top 25 the rest of the way.

Nebraska is home against Kansas on Saturday, then finishes at Iowa State and Oklahoma. Penn State travels to Indiana and Illinois before closing with home games against Northwestern and Michigan State.

Auburn, which beat Arkansas 31-14 Saturday for its 19th straight victory, moved up to third in the AP poll and remained in the running for a share of the national title if Nebraska and Penn State lose. The Tigers (8-0) aren’t eligible in the coaches’ poll because of NCAA probation, which also bars them from a bowl game. Florida (6-1) is fourth in the AP, followed by Miami (6-1), Alabama (8-0), Colorado (7-1), Florida State (6-1), Utah (8-0) and Syracuse (6-1).

Rounding out the Top 25 are Texas A&M, Washington, Virginia, Colorado State, Kansas State, Washington State, Virginia Tech, Arizona, North Carolina, Michigan, Oregon, Southern California, Duke, Mississippi State and Brigham Young.

Big Sky picture clears up

The Associated Press

No. 1 Montana's fourth straight win was made even sweeter Saturday as the Grizzlies broke No. 3 Idaho's undefeated record to become the Big Sky Conference's only undefeated team.

Montana coach Don Read was thrilled with the 45-21 victory but relieved the week was over.

"It's one of the best, if not the best, wins we've had in the nine years I've been here," Read said. "It was the worst week I've had since I've been here. I've had 30 people on the phone. It's too much for me."

Montana improved to 8-0 overall and took sole possession of the Big Sky Conference lead with a 4-0 mark. Idaho fell to 7-1 and 4-1.

When the pressure's on, nobody plays bigger than Dave Dickinson. The junior passed for 510 yards and three touchdowns and ran for another score.

"He's a competitive person who seems to thrive playing against high-ranked, tough teams," Read said.

Idaho coach John L. Smith said of Dickinson, "You've got to have a lot of respect for that guy. He's scary."

Big Sky roundup

too many times. We just didn't execute at important times," Idaho quarterback Eric Hawley said.

"We were beaten by the best team in the nation today," Hawley said. "The thing with Montana is every team they play against they get them down." Smith said. "And then the whole game plan changes. We didn't run the ball as much as we wanted to."

"Using a lot of people is helping us stay strong," Read said. "The players play hard all the time and don't need to worry about getting worn down."

But it is not going to get any easier.

Montana is likely to hold onto its No. 1 ranking, but has to travel to No. 14 Boise State (7-1) next Saturday.

If Montana continues its winning ways, the playoffs will follow.

Things are looking brighter for the Eastern Washington Eagles after a hard-won 34-31 victory over Montana State. Zurliff's 25-yard field goal in triple overtime gave Eastern Washington (3-5, 2-4) the leg up over Montana State (2-7, 0-6), snapping the Eagles' four-game losing streak.

"Right now we have a sense of relief," said Eastern Washington coach Mike Kramer.

"Throughout the game we were kind of relieved that we weren't hurting ourselves and blowing assignments. We hung in there and made plays," Kramer said.

"I think it was evident throughout the entire ball game that offensively we were clicking. We knew that if we kept getting an opportunity, we would get it in there."

It was Montana State's sixth straight loss, but coach Cliff Hysell tried to look at the bright side.

"I thought we played really, really hard. We made some mistakes at crucial times, but it was our best effort of the last seven weeks," said Hysell.

"We seemed to be playing pretty well in the second half this week, we didn't dig a hole so deep in the first half that we couldn't get out."

Northern Arizona finished Big Sky Conference play with a 24-20 win over Weber State.

Northern Arizona (5-4, 4-3) struck first on a 5-yard punt return from Alex Caldwell with 2:20 remaining in the first quarter to lead Weber State (4-5, 1-4).

Ricks dominates Region 18 cross country as men's team notches perfect 15 score

The Times-News

PROVO, Utah — Getting a perfect 15 from 15 men's team Ricks College swept the 1994 Region 18 Cross-Country Championships Saturday.

Grant Steffen of Roy, Utah led a 1-through-15 sweep for the Vikings. Ricks' College of Southern Idaho, showing a team best seventh-place, getting from Andy Bestwick (27:43) — finished with 56, Utah Valley and North Idaho followed with 67 and 109 points, respectively.

CS coach Gary Sievers said a 3-500-meter, "winning" title, course that finished straight down played havoc with times and results.

"Ricks ran well. We didn't run as well as we could have," Sievers said. "But it wasn't a cross country course — that was a mountain climbing course. Don't get me wrong, I agree the same for everyone, but I'll bet 75-percent of the women runners fell coming down."

CS's Denise Danielson split a pair of Ricks women, for second place and Joy Phillips cracked the top 10 for the Golden Eagles as well. It was, however, not enough to keep the Vikings from a 22-51 team triumph.

Ricks' Jennifer Connell crossed the finish line first in 20:12, five seconds ahead of Danielson.

Saturday's victories send both Ricks' teams into the National Cross-Country Championships at Alfred State College in upstate New York in Nov. College of Southern Idaho should know if they are going by midweek.

"There are four, at-large berths given out," Sievers explained.

"Right now, our women are ranked number three, so we're virtually assured of getting a spot. On the men's side, we're probably third or fourth. Our chances are about 60-percent there. We should be receiving confirmation Tuesday or Wednesday."

Labonte takes home Slick 50 500

PHOENIX (AP) — The only thing Terry Labonte did wrong all week-end at Phoenix International Raceway was qualify near the middle of the pack for Sunday's Slick 50 500.

The driver just messed up and we had to start 19th, but we got through traffic pretty good and the guys kept making the car better and better as the race went on, and it wasn't bad in the first half of the race," Labonte said after a dominating victory in the desert sun.

"Early in the race we weren't as good as Mark (Martin), but the track came to us."

The 1984 Winston Cup champion took the lead for the first time on lap 192 and led 112 of the final 120 laps in the one-mile oval in capturing his third victory of the season, a career-best.

It wasn't much of a contest after the halfway point of the 312-lap race. Most of the leaders fell back into the pack and Labonte put all but two drivers — runner-up Martin and pole-sitter Sterling Marlin — a lap down.

Labonte's Hendrick Motorsports crew gave him a killer 17.9-second, green-flag pit stop on lap 283 that helped him drive his Chevrolet and we knew he got four tires, so we had to do the same thing to stay even with him," Labonte said. "It was a great stop."

After that, it was just a matter of Labonte staying out of trouble.

"The only worry I had was Mark," Labonte said. "He was always there and I figured if I got held up in traffic, he'd get around me. But everything went just right for us."

Martin, the defending race champion, said, "We were awesome today in the pits, had a great engine ... handled good and we were checked out on the next car (Marlin). But Terry just whipped us today. ... I don't think we could have outrun Terry under the best scenario."

It was Labonte's best finish at Phoenix since he was second in 1988 and 1989 — the first two Winston Cup races at the track.

He is also the sixth different winner in those seven years.

Labonte, in his first year driving for Rick Hendrick, had gone four seasons without a victory. The 37-year-old has 13 career wins and won $67,885 as he averaged a race-record 107.683 mph, breaking the mark of 105.683, set by Bill Elliott in 1989.

This was the third straight

Chevrolet, victory and fourth in the past six races after Ford, which won the 1994 NASCAR Manufacturers' Championship, had control most of the season.

Jeff Gordon wound up a lap down in fourth, followed by Ted Musgrave, Kyle Petty and Ricky Rudd, who faded after leading most of the first 100 laps.

Dale Earnhardt, who clinched his record-tying seventh Winston Cup championship a week earlier with a race victory at Rockingham, N.C., was the fourth driver eliminated from Sunday's race. A broken cylinder head ended Earnhardt's streak of seventh-place or better finishes at eight races.

The race was slowed by a 26-minute red flag after John Andretti slid through the oil from Rick Mast's blown engine and punched a hole in the third-turn wall on lap 32. Track workers had to cover the 3-square-foot area with steel boilerplate and Andretti was taken to a hospital for observation and later released.

During pits stops on the ensuing caution period, crewman Barry Swift of Hut Stricklin's team, tripped over the pit wall and injured his ankle. He was taken to a Phoenix hospital for X-rays.

giving the Cowboys a reprieve with the roughing-the-passer penalty. The Bengals also had 12 men on the field during the drive.

The hit by Francis came just one week after Arizona's Wilber Marshall knocked Aikman out with a hard hit to the chin. Francis said he was pushed into Aikman; the quarterback said the hit didn't affect him.

"He got a good lick on me, but I came out OK," Aikman said. "I feel it was a cut that was warranted."

Bonill was good from 37 and 43 yards in the third quarter, tying it at 20, and hit a 38-yarder with five minutes left for the game-winning points.

The Bengals had one more chance, but consecutive incompletions by Blake and a punt gave the ball back to Dallas. The Cowboys ran out the clock.

Aikman was 20 of 33 for 272 yards and one interception. Emmitt Smith rushed for 92 yards on 25 carries behind a banged-up offensive line missing Pro Bowl tackle Erik Williams.

It was hard to tell which was the best and which was the worst in the first half.

The Cowboys, who led the league with just seven turnovers, had a fumble and interception; Bonill was wide right on a 28-yard field-goal attempt, and the Dallas defense gave up a pair of improbable big plays.

On the Bengals' first touchdown, Blake had Russell Maryland wrapped around his legs as he let fly a floating, wobbling pass down the middle of the field. Scott caught the ball with Kevin Smith on his back, slipped free at the 30-yard line and jogged the rest of the way.

Scott got behind the coverage — cornerback Larry Brown was expecting help — for an easy 55-yard touchdown pass on the first play of the second quarter for a 14-0 lead. Blake celebrated by running down the field with index finger raised.

In the first meeting, Marino threw for 473 yards and five TDs and Bledsoe 421 yards and four TDs in the Bills' 39-35 win on Sept. 4.

Marino threw a 7-yard scoring pass to Keith Byars, whose 1-yard run had given the Dolphins a 13-3 lead seven seconds before halftime. Bernie Parmelee gained 123 yards on 25 carries a week after rushing for 150 yards against the Raiders.

third straight game — a 41-yard interception return — and Minnesota (6-2) forced five turnovers. Parker had an interception return against the New York Giants on Oct. 10 and returned a fumble for a score against Green Bay 10 days later.

Warren Moon threw for 182 yards and a TD and Fuad Revez kicked five field goals. The Bucs (2-6) outscored 11-42 in their last three games, trailed 23-7 at the half. Craig Erickson and Trent Diller shared the quarterbacking for the Bucs.

Bills 44, Chiefs 10

At Orchard Park, N.Y., Jim Kelly threw four TD passes and Bruce Smith harassed Joe Montana all day as Buffalo (5-3) showed it can still win big games.

Smith forced an interception and recovered one of Montana's two fumbles in what looked like a replay of last year's AFC championship game. In that game, Smith helped knock out Montana with a concussion early in the second half and Buffalo won 30-13 to earn its fourth consecutive Super Bowl berth.

Two of Montana's turnovers came late in the first half and turned a 21-7 deficit into 31-7. Montana was 12 of 21 for 121 yards and was sacked three times before leaving for Steve Bono in the third quarter. The Chiefs, who suffered five turnovers, non-strike loss since 1984.

Randall Cunningham had a rough start as Washington led 17-7 at the half, but he led three long scoring drives as the Eagles (6-2) won their fifth straight against the Redskins (2-7). Cunningham finished 18 of 31 for 165 yards and a TD pass to Herschel Walker, who also scored on a 1-yard run. Fretotte was 13 of 30 for 181 yards and three TD passes.

Raiders 17, Oilers 14

At Los Angeles, Jeff Hostetler threw an 11-yard TD pass to Tim Brown with 1:50 left, and the Raiders (4-4) won when Al Del Greco's 52-yard field goal attempt slammed against the crossbar and bounced back onto the field as time expired.

Colts 28, Jets 25

At Indianapolis, Don Majkowski made his first NFL start in two years a winning one, passing for one TD and running for another for the Colts (4-5), who survived five turnovers.

Mo Lewis put the Jets (4-4) back in the game when he returned an interception 18 yards for a score. A two-point conversion pass made it 21-18.

Eagles 31, Redskins 29

At Washington, Eddie Murray kicked a 30-yard field goal with 19 seconds left to lift the Eagles, who forced rookie Gus Fretotte into two interceptions and a fumble. The Redskins had taken a 29-28 lead with 3:58 left on Chip Lohmiller's 40-yard field goal.

Lions 28, Giants 25, OT

At East Rutherford, N.J., Jason Hanson kicked a 24-yard field goal with 8:17 left in overtime, and Detroit (4-4) handed New York (3-5) its fifth straight loss.

Barry Sanders had 146 yards and helped set up Hanson's winning kick in a game in which several officiating calls hurt the Giants. On the winning drive, Scott Mitchell hit Herman Moore, who had two TD receptions, for 29 yards to the Giants' 7 on a play where the receiver was knocked to a knee by Jarvis Williams at the 36.

The Oilers (1-7) had taken a 14-10 lead on Billy Joe Tolliver's 7-yard TD pass to Haywood Jeffries with 3:19 left. Tolliver started in place of the injured Cody Carlson. He finished 19 of 40 for 226 yards.

Hostetler was 15 for 29 for 151 yards with two interceptions. Harvey Williams had 128 yards rushing.

Vikings 36, Buccaneers 13

At Tampa, Fla., cornerback Anthony Parker scored a TD in his first career touchdown.

He finished 19 of 40 for 226 yards.

He finished 19 of 40 for 226 yards.

McMichael

with a chip on his shoulder.

Through McMichael declined interviews in the week leading up to the game, the Bears know he'd like nothing more than to knock them out of contention for the division title.

Safety Maurice Douglass said: "It'll be a very emotional game for him. I know he'll want to prove something to the Bears staff."

Defensive end Alonzo Spellman: "We expect a very fanatical effort out of Ming. He's always fired up for a game, but this is another level. Offensive tackle Troy Auzenne: "He's going to be on fire."

Linebacker Ron Cox: "I don't know exactly what to expect, but you know he'll be fired up. Last year against Minnesota, Ming was (upset) and he started biting a Coke can on the sideline. Bit right through it. His mouth was bleeding but he kept right on chewing. Incredible."

Incredible also describes the career of McMichael, whose 94 sacks make him the only defensive tackle ranked among the NFL's all-time leaders.

An inspirational leader, he helped the Bears win the 1986 Super Bowl, and was perhaps the dominant character on a line that also featured Refrigerator Perry, Daniland Hampton and Sack Man Dent.

"I watched McMichael and I always liked the way he played, the way he deessed, the way he acted," said Jim Flanagan, a rookie defensive tackle for the Bears who grew up in Wisconsin and whose father, Jim, played for the Packers from 1967-70.

"I always thought he was cool. With that long hair, he always reminded me of a caveman, a Neanderthal. And he's undersized, guy like myself ..."

Bears end Trace Armstrong learned a lot about life in the NFL from McMichael, who just turned 37.

"The game was so important to Ming," Armstrong said. "I can only remember him missing a couple of practices. When you see a guy out there who's 36, with fluid on both knees, and you've got a turned ankle, it's hard to say, 'I'm not going to practice today.'"

As valuable as McMichael was, he wasn't valuable enough to Bears president Michael McCaskey and coach Dave Wannstedt.

NHL owners, players still arguing salaries

The Associated Press

Are NHL teams pulling the hidden-money trick on players? The league says no and the NHL Players Association says yes.

Accounting techniques have emerged as the latest flashpoint in the NHL lockout, which reached its 30th day Sunday.

The NHLPA has expressed little faith in how owners keep track of revenues and expenses.

Players feel there are too many ways for the owners to hide money.

"To be candid, we are skeptical of the quality of the information you might provide," union head Bob Goodenow wrote to the league last week in requesting financial data dating to 1989-90. "Our skepticism suggests that there is every reason to question or doubt accuracy and/or completeness of any data regarding the finances of the league or its clubs."

suggests the URO does not accurately reflect the financial health of the league and its clubs.

Meanwhile, the league is expected to cancel more games Monday. Last Monday's NHL cut its 84-game schedule to 80 games a team.

The number of postponed games reached 168 Sunday and seven more were due to be postponed Monday.

Contract negotiations are expected to resume at an undisclosed location this week. It will be only the second time in a 100-year history that the NHL and NHL commissioner Gary Bettman have talked face to face since Oct. 10.

'If the NHL is going to make statements about its general financial health and that of its clubs, it must make an accurate statement of all revenue related to the club and all affiliated entities.'

— Bob Goodenow, head of players' union

NHL players have been locked out since the scheduled opening of the league on Oct. 1. The league and its players have been unable to reach a new collective bargaining agreement, which expired in September 1993.

NHL players continue to find work in Europe. Tomas Sandstrom of the Pittsburgh Penguins and Peter Andersson of the Florida Panthers made their debut for Vasteras in the Swedish Elite League on Sunday night before a sellout crowd of 5,924.

Peter Popovic (Montreal), Nicklas Lidstrom (Detroit) and Patrick Juhlin (Philadelphia) played their second game during the lockout and helped Vasteras to a 6-0 win over defending champion Malmo.

On Sunday night, a group of NHL players beat the Sarina Sting of the Ontario Hockey League 12-8 in an exhibition at Sarina, Ontario.

The game raised money for the Make-A-Wish Foundation, a charity for terminally ill children.

Another charity exhibition is scheduled next Sunday at Belleville, Ontario, with a team of NHL players meeting the Belleville Bulls of the OHL.

Marty McSorley, a former Belleville player now with the Los Angeles Kings, is recruiting players for the game.

Also, the NHLPA is moving ahead with plans for two charity exhibition games at Hamilton, Ontario, Nov. 10-12. Four teams will play in a round-robin tournament.

Old-growth wars come calling again

The Associated Press

ON TOP OF LAKE MOUNTAIN, Ore. — Standing in the ruins of a U.S. Forest Service fire lookout, Lou Gold told a group of schoolchildren the story of how a fawn saved the mountain from an evil demon.

He shook his rattle of deer hooves and told the children that people once lived in close touch with the spirits on their mountain, but traded the mountain to a demon for vacuum cleaners and cars.

The demon broke its promise to care for the mountain, leaving garbage like the pile of splintered boards and broken glass of this abandoned fire lookout, and scars from logging and mining. But the people were afraid to challenge it.

The fawn wasn't afraid, and tricked the demon into turning itself into a walnut. Then the fawn led the people back to the mountain.

Gold pointed to a timber sale on the distant flanks of Grayback Mountain and asked the children, from the private Dome School in nearby Taklima, to join him in a coyote howl to cement their commitment to be like the fawn.

"Hear that, President Clinton," Gold yelled as the howls echoed off the mountain. "If you don't stop the Sugarloaf sale, no one anywhere will believe in your forest plan."

Gold, a former political science professor, took up a vigil on top of Lake Mountain to pray that the Sugarloaf timber sale be withdrawn.

Environmentalists have won nearly all the other battles ever logging the Northwest's old-growth forests in court.

The northern spotted owl wasn't protected as a threatened species until a judge ordered the government to reconsider. Another judge banned logging on millions of acres of public lands until the government came up with plans to keep the owl from extinction. The result was the Clinton administration's forest plan, which cuts logging on national forests by 80 percent.

But one last battle that can't be fought in court is playing out on the Siskiyou National Forest.

Above, Lou Gold passes out colorful necklaces to children from the Dome School on top of Lake Mountain in southwestern Oregon. Gold took up a vigil to pray for President Clinton to rescind the Sugarloaf timber sale, which is located in the area of the Siskiyou National Forest that has never been logged. Right—U.S. Forest Service ecologist Tom Atzet measures a tree on the Sugarloaf timber sale on the flanks of Grayback Mountain in the forest.

ly portrayed Sugarloaf as a thinning of dense younger stands when most of the timber comes from big trees. The ads urge people to write the White House and Boise Cascade Corp., which bought the timber, asking them to leave the timber standing. Headquarters, another environmental group, is lobbying the White House. And Gold is camped atop the mountain.

At the heart of the battle is the fact that Sugarloaf stands within an area designated as an ancient forest preserve under the Clinton forest plan. Though the entire sale wouldn't qualify technically as old-growth forest—fires have left stands of various ages—none of it has ever been logged and a portion of it contains trees that could be as old as 700 years. Under the new rules, logging would be allowed only to salvage dead trees or improve the health of the forest, not to produce timber.

The controversy over Sugarloaf goes back nearly 20 years, when the Forest Service first proposed logging in the area. In 1989, Sugarloaf was one of a group of sales that Congress exempted from court challenges to provide timber while logging was tied up over the spotted owl.

Under Clinton's plan, the Forest Service must allow such sales to go forward, even in ancient forest preserves, as long as they comply with the Endangered Species Act and standards for protecting the watershed. Sold to Boise Cascade for $2.3 million, Sugarloaf has passed review on all counts.

Fearing that opponents might organize protests or drive railroad spikes into trees to stop the logging, the company won't say when it plans to harvest, but has until the end of 1997.

Mike Lunn, Siskiyou National Forest supervisor, and opponents of the sale agree that the logging can be stopped only if Clinton steps in.

Tom Tuchmann, who shepherded the forest plan as director of the U.S. Office on Forestry and Economic Development, doesn't anticipate that.

The administration is committed to honoring past commitments to provide timber, as well as making sure future timber is cut in a way that is environmentally responsible, he said.

"The Sugarloaf sale is one of the last of the old timber sales, not one of the first of the new timber sales," Tuchmann said.

Sugarloaf and sales like it represent some of the only public timber being offered in the Northwest as the Forest Service struggles to restart its timber sale program under the new forest plan, he added.

Boise Cascade argues that Sugarloaf is not old-growth forest and sees the objections raised by environmentalists as a land-raising gimmick.

When Clinton called together combatants in the Northwest timber wars in 1993 in Portland, "one of the issues he talked about was the fact that no one would be happy," said Lunn. "This is probably the epitome of the idea nobody is happy."

Where opponents disagree most strongly is over plans to log big trees. 1,100 of them over 44 inches in diameter, to provide 40 percent of the 10.5 million board feet spread over 739 acres.

"If we were to go out and do the sale fresh now, it wouldn't have the large trees in it," Lunn said. "That's not a choice I had."

But Sugarloaf has been changed in other ways. The large clearcuts planned originally are gone. Trees have been marked individually for logging. An area where a pair of spotted owls nest is left alone, along with most of the big trees where they shade a creek. Instead of building roads, the Forest Service told Boise Cascade to use helicopters to haul out the timber.

Smaller firs surrounding huge ponderosa pines will be cut to keep the pines healthy longer and give young pines room to germinate.

Silviculturist Chip Weber said he designed the logging to lessen the threat of fire and help the forest more quickly grow into the old growth favored by spotted owls.

Dave Perry, a professor of forest ecology at Oregon State University, argues that removing big trees is the wrong thing to do if the Forest Service hopes to make the stand healthier. With their thick bark and crowns hundreds of feet from the ground, they are better equipped to survive fire. Logging will create holes in the forest that allow in wind, drying the ground and the trees, and adding to the fire danger.

Gov. Barbara Roberts also has objected to the sale, noting it would be inconsistent with state plans for $5 million in restoration to streams damaged by logging in the Grayback watershed.

Until the snow drove him out last week, Gold kept his vigil on nearby Lake Mountain. He plans to return next spring.

He spent 12 summers praying for peace on Bald Mountain, the site of one of the opening salvos in the Northwest old-growth wars, where protesters in 1983 threw their bodies in front of bulldozers to stop the spread of logging on the Siskiyou.

During the winters, he crisscrossed the country lecturing about the need to save the remnants of ancient forest as a kind of Noah's Ark, which hold the secrets of forest life.

On the edge of a meadow, Gold sat in the folds of a big rock, where he had put red-shafted flicker feathers in a crack and sprinkled tobacco as a kind of altar. At night, he can look far below to the Illinois Valley and the lights of the Rough & Ready Lumber Co. sawmill.

"I suspect I'm going to be here for awhile," he said.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE

Bobby Wolff

"I do not mind lying, but I hate inaccuracy."

—Samuel Butler.

"I gave it my best shot," explained an unrepentant South. "Reverse the club honors and I lose only one trick."

"That's not quite accurate," replied North. "Your best shot for nine tricks was not the same as a play for 12."

South took dummy's spade ace to start the clubs, taking a deep finesse to West's jack. West knocked out South's spade king and South crossed to dummy in diamonds to lead another club.

East's discard was a shock and there was no longer any way to make the game. The defense took three spades, two clubs and a heart for two down. So much for South's vision for 12 tricks.

While the odds did favor finding at least one club honor onside, South had no reason to make an early commitment. The safest plan for nine tricks is to determine how many tricks are needed from the minor suits before deciding which minor to attack.

To get this information, South should first cash his three high diamonds. When the suit accumulates with a 3-3 split, South can ensure the game by going after two sure heart tricks rather than a nebulous number of club tricks. This gives him two spades, two hearts, four diamonds and only one club; a sure game and rubber instead of wistful overtricks.

ANSWER: Heart jack. Choose the solidity of the heart suit over the sketchy holding of diamond intermediates.

How to Buy a Great Used Car

There are certain basic things you should look for when you examine a car.

1. Find out the previous owner's name.
2. Automatic Transmission fluid should be pink and not smell burnt.
3. Coolant shouldn't be rusty and no green stains on the radiator.
4. No oil spots around the engine.
5. Look for rust, especially in the trunk, wheel wells and rocker panels under the doors.
6. Look for new welds, ripply body work, panels that don't match.
7. Uneven tire wear may mean an alignment problem.
8. Make sure the car comes with a useable jack and lug wrench.
9. To check shocks and suspension push down and quickly release each corner of the car. It should not bounce more than 2 times.
10. Seats shouldn't be saggy or ripped. Make sure belts and controls work.

Hangin' with Ridley in a big Idaho tree

There is a simple explanation for why I wound up dangling from a rope 75 feet in the air over a beaver dam somewhere in Idaho: I was a house guest.

You know how it is, when you're a house guest: If your host suggests an activity, you, as a polite person, tend to say "sure."

My host in this case was my good friend Ridley Pearson, who makes his living writing thriller novels, which means he spends his days thinking up sentences like: "Roger awoke in a dark room and sensed immediately that his body had been surgically removed from his head."

What I'm saying is that Ridley has some spooky closets in the mansion of his mind. This is why I should have been suspicious when, the night I arrived at his house, he casually said, "I thought that tomorrow we could climb a tree."

Dave Barry
Humor

This struck me as an odd activity for a couple of guys in their 40s. Guys our age generally prefer a more mature type of recreation, such as scratching. It was as if Ridley had said, "I thought that tomorrow we could play hide and seek." But I was a house guest, so all I said was, "Sure."

The next morning we had breakfast with Ridley's brother, Brad, and a friend named Amos Galpin, and then the four of us set off in Ridley's car to find a tree to climb. This enabled me to see some of Idaho (official motto: "Nobody Knows Where It Is"). It's a nice state, containing a tremendous quantity of scenery as well as several roads and at least one city named "Ketchum." The state license plate says "IDAHO" on the top, and on the bottom it says "I am not making this up." "FAMOUS POTATOES." Apparently this was judged to be the most alluring possible license-plate slogan, narrowly edging out "IDAHO — A WHOLE LOT OF ROCKS" and "IDAHO — YOU'LL SMELL THE COWS."

Most of Idaho is outdoors, the result being that local residents are able to enjoy year-round interaction with the natural environment, which gradually drives them insane. At least that's apparently what happened to Ridley, Brad and Amos, because they have turned tree-climbing into a serious, full-fledged sport, with special equipment and everything.

They do not climb just any tree. We drove past several million normal, sturdy, vertical trees before stopping at what had to be the most unsafe-looking tree in North America. I could not believe that the tree authorities even permitted this tree to exist. It was next to a beaver pond, and it was leaning way over at a stark angle, looking as though it would crash to the ground if a beetle climbed up it. Let alone four middle-aged guys who had recently consumed large omelets.

"Is this tree safe?" I asked the guys. "Ha ha," they reassured me. They then helped me put on the special tree-climbing equipment, which they call a "harness," although what it looks like is an enormous green athletic supporter. It has

Broad shoulders are back at European spring collections
Newsday

As full-tilt glamour returned to the runways of Europe, where the Milan London Paris ready-to-wear season ended Tuesday, one thing was for certain — and American women are likely to be overjoyed: Shoulder pads are back.

After seasons of slouch and slope, when pads by the handful were ripped out and resigned to the back of dresser drawers, influential designers as diverse as Gianni Versace, Christian Lacroix and John Galiano are again augmenting shoulders to produce an hourglass silhouette reminiscent of 1940s Hollywood.

"At this moment, it's time to be back on structure," says Versace, whose spring collection, highlighted by strong-shouldered jackets and knee-length skirts, was widely regarded as the best in Milan. Grunge is dead, he says, and deconstruction is demode. "People must look elegant and clean again. Things must be well-cut and well-structured. I want to make people believe in fashion again," he says.

Why you want to just go back to bed

Knight-Ridder News Service

It may help to know that you're not a lazy slob for feeling like hunkering down into semi-hibernation come December. Winter's shrinking daylight affects many people to varying degrees.

The National Institute of Mental Health estimates that as many as 12 million Americans suffer from SAD — Seasonal Affective Disorder — the most extreme form of a seasonal syndrome attributed to light deprivation. And another 35 million experience seasonal distress that can make them moody, listless and prone to overeating.

Sunlight entering nerves in the eyes is the most powerful stimulus for the body clock that orchestrates almost all biological functions, including sleep, metabolism, temperature, alertness, vigor, heart rate and blood pressure, says Dr. Randy Eichen, a professor of internal medicine at the University of Oklahoma.

"Our body clocks have been trained to have us sleeping when it's dark and awake when it's light," says Dr. Roger Smith, a research fellow at the Stanford Sleep Disorders Clinic who's studying the impact of circadian rhythms on athletic performance.

"What we're asking ourselves to do in the winter time is to be awake when it's still dark out. So to a certain extent, we're kind of struggling against our circadian rhythms by trying to wake up when it's pitch dark outside."

Don't let cold winter weather interrupt your battle of bulge

By Cathy Walworth
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — Frost on the windshield means you're probably going to take the time to gently warm up the car before you drive to work. Skip the warm-up and that car will make you sorry.

So warm up your muscles before you take off for your morning run, say local health and fitness experts, or your body can make you even sorer.

"It's just like starting your car. If you start it in the dead of winter and you take off at a hundred miles an hour, sometimes your car doesn't like that," said Joe Cotterell, registered physical therapist at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center. "Your body will respond the same way. It will stop usually with injury or pain."

Winter tests the commitment of even the fittest when it comes to running or biking on pitch-black, potholed roads or shoveling out for a walk after three straight days of snow.

One response, obviously, is to vegetate on the couch "ere the spring comes again, but eight-month-a-year fitness programs aren't much better than no fitness at all.

It's true that feeling the burn is harder when you can't even feel your toes, but learn to stretch yourself.

"One of the main things to watch for is not to (cause) injury," Cotterell said. "Spend a little more time stretching and warming up. It's even more important in the colder weather to stretch adequately."

Cotterell defines a good stretch as one that is steady — none of that bouncing stuff — and lasts for 30-60 seconds, with three repetitions for each leg.

"Then they still need to do some walking if they're going to jog to warm up the muscles," he said.

"If muscles are warmed up they're more ready to work and it isn't so fatiguing," Cotterell added. "Your joints will probably hurt less because you've warmed up the joint with the movement."

You could ignore Cotterell's advice. That could get you up to six weeks waiting for your pulled muscle to heal, though.

With frosty temperatures come shorter days. That means it's likely

For the health of it

The Walk for the Health of It Club affords more than physical fitness; join up and you get a membership card that contributes to your fiscal fitness, as well.

Nancy Leslie, senior connection coordinator at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center, says that walkers don't have to join the club or be seniors.

"People of all ages walk," she said, but the membership card is "used in many of the stores at the Magic Valley Mall" where they receive discounts," she said.

Mall-walkers are bound to get to know one another, Leslie said, so it only makes sense to throw in a little socialization once in a while. Once a month walkers meet at various restaurants for a leisurely meal and a chat. Club meetings are held the third Wednesday of each month in the mall concourse and a program on health issues is offered.

For more information on the Walk for the Health of It Club, Leslie can be reached at 237-2065.

"Be visible," Cotterell warned. "With all the reflective tapes, clothing and accessories in the stores for Halloween, it's an easy task to find something to brighten your reflection. But make sure your neon reflects are on the outside."

"Wear layers of clothing, such as polypropylene on the bottom and a windbreaker," Cotterell advised. "A wool sweater for when it gets really cold."

Of course, if you can't breathe, it doesn't much matter if you can't be seen.

Athletes, have to know whether their asthma is environmentally-triggered, said Rena Holdereed, supervisor of respiratory therapy at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center.

"If it's environmentally triggered, they probably should not run outside in cold weather," she said.

Health notes

A WORLD OF HURT: In pain? Nearly one-fifth of us share it. That's the percentage of the adult U.S. population that suffers from chronic pain, ranging from migraine headaches to arthritis, according to an American Medical Association poll. The survey also found that about 10 percent of pain patients are very dissatisfied with over-the-counter analgesics and about 20 percent are dissatisfied with prescription pain-relief drugs.

CIVILIAN CASUALTIES: Relatives of Persian Gulf War vets take note: Gulf War Syndrome, the mysterious collection of illnesses that has struck thousands who took part in the 1991 campaign, appears to be contagious. An ongoing survey of 1,200 veterans, conducted by Sen. Donald Riegle, D-Mich., has so far found that the disease has spread from afflicted veterans to 78 percent of their wives, 25 percent of offspring born before the war and 65 percent born since.

NO PUFF PIECES: Teen-agers, your president has two words of advice: Don't inhale. That's what he said he did when he experimented with marijuana, which he told Massachusetts high school students is "a stupid thing to do."

DESIGNER GENES: If scientists can fix genes that cause disease, why not go further and tinker with genes that enhance beauty and intelligence? To date, federal regulators have been unwavering on one point: Nobody was ready to allow researchers to dole out genes just for cosmetic purposes. But now, the Washington Post says, scientists and officials at the National Institutes of Health and the Food and Drug Administration have begun to discuss the prospect of genetic enhancement. And many researchers say it is only a matter of time before the common use of scientific expertise and public demand makes genetic enhancement not only acceptable but fashionable.

THE FEATHERS ARE FLYING: If you want your hubby to help around the house, women, take a lesson from the animal kingdom and don't have a fly-by-night affair. When it comes to a small bird called the reed bunting, Dad won't help out as much with chick-feeding when he thinks Mom has been cheating on him, researchers report in the journal Nature. The Dads had reason to be suspicious: DNA testing showed that 55 percent of the young were not their offspring.

Some good marriages began badly

DEAR ABBY: I think our son's worst-wedding scenario can top the one you printed.

It was 1970, when long, flowing chiffon gowns were in style. Two days before the big day, the manager of the country club where the reception was to be held telephoned the bride's mother to tell her the plumbing had gone bad, and she couldn't use the hall!

The bride's mother was frantic. She called several halls, but could find none available. She threatened to use the country club, so the OK'd the use of the hall, and set portable potties outside the building!

There was a July wedding, and it turned out to be the hottest day of the season — 100 degrees. At the reception, the air conditioner broke down, and a small electric fan was the only source of circulation.

around their heads, and it was too hot to dance.

Guests congregated at the picnic tables outdoors. In our long, flowing gowns, we backed gingerly into the portable potties. Yet everyone had a wonderful time. This was to be a never-to-be-forgotten wedding!

— J.J. SCHWARTZ, GERMANTOWN, WIS.

DEAR J.J. SCHWARTZ: Thank you for a picturesque recollection that brought tears (of laughter) to my eyes. Read on for another one: DEAR ABBY: Wedding Run-in — our first wedding was my wedding. The saga began four days prior to the event. I was living in Texas, and my husband-to-be was stationed in Germany. This is how it went:

Four days prior to wedding: Bride's car breaks down, and it takes two days to repair it.

Three days prior: Groom arrives East Coast on a military flight; he's unable to continue to Texas due to mechanical problems. No outgoing flights available. Groom loses wallet en route to local base. (The wedding rings — his and hers — were in his wallet for safekeeping.)

Two days prior: Groom scheduled to arrive in Texas by noon. Several thunderstorms close down airport; the flight is diverted.

One day prior: Groom arrives at 6:30 — without luggage — 18 hours before the wedding.

DEAR WEDDING DAY: Bride and groom go to local post to get groom

ID card. Bride and groom get marriage certificate.

Bride and groom attend wedding rehearsal. (This is the first time groom meets chaplain.)

Groom and father of the bride buy new wedding rings, and go to check on luggage.

Groom must rent a tuxedo because his dress uniform (which he had planned to wear) was in his luggage, which was lost.

A Texas flash flood begins. Wedding starts, but most guests are unable to attend due to the flash flood.

Bride and groom are married and are living happily ever after.

Please do not include our names because it was bad enough to live through it once.

The dirty lowdown on Norma Kamali's makeup

DEAR PAULA: The New York Times recently wrote a rather favorable article on Norma Kamali's new makeup kit. I'd love to hear your opinion on her product line. I won't invest without your input. — Barbara

DEAR BARBARA: Finding objective reviews about cosmetics in the media is like finding a needle in a haystack. The New York Times, known for its hard-nosed, meticulously candid reporting, can fall apart when it comes to beauty issues. Case in point: another New York Times article, this one concerning Revlon's Color Stay lipstick which I reviewed in the July/August 1994 issue of Cosmetics Counter Update.

The Times' article read like an advertisement (just like the Norma Kamali article), not an objective news story. From the tone of the report you would think Revlon had invented baked bread.

Cosmetics
Q&A
Paula Begoun

Revlon's lipstick is good, but it isn't that good. It doesn't come off heavily on coffee cups and with gentle peels on cheeks and lips the way other lipsticks can that aren't blotted after application, and it doesn't bleed, but the matte texture isn't for everyone and it can be rather drying, particularly in winter.

The article also didn't mention the virtually identical lipstick made by Revlon's sister company, Ultima's Lip Sexxy.

As you might have expected, in reference to Kamali's products, I'm not as thrilled with them as the New York Times reporter was. Although I'm all for simple, the Norma Kamali line is not only simple, it's incomplete, with no cleanser, sunscreen, exfoliant, or AHA product, to name just a few. The color line is the same, with very few colors and limited product types (no concealer or foundation). The three skin-care products are as impressive by any stretch of the imagination. I have not yet received the color products so I can't review the individually.

Night Oil-Free Replenisher ($34.50 for 1.6 ounces) contains mostly water, thickeners, glycerin, thickener, algae extract, soothing agent, more thickeners, several water-binding agents, thickeners, coloring agents, and preservatives. This would be a good lightweight moisturizer for someone with normal to slightly dry skin. The algae extract and water-binding agents are not unique to this product and are not necessarily exceptional or something every skin must have. It does contain two silicone oils, which aren't bad, but it isn't oil-free.

Day Oil-Free Moisturizer ($24.50 for 1.6 ounces) is almost identical to the Night Replenisher, minus the interesting water-binding agents. It also doesn't contain a sunscreen, and that's basic for any daytime moisturizer. For the money, although both are overpriced, the Night Replenisher is the only one worth considering.

Self Enhancer Moisturizing Color Glow ($19.50 for 2 ounces) is a sunless tanner that contains dihydroxyacetone, just like every other sunless tanner on the market.

Paula Begoun is the author of several books on cosmetics, including her second edition of "Don't Go to the Cosmetics Counter Without Me" (Bantam Press $13.95).

Chill

"You could wear a mask when you walk, but it inhibits the air intake too much to run with."

Usually outside air is warmed up by the time it reaches the average person's lungs when he breathes through his nose, she said.

For a rule of thumb, Holdreeder offered, "If it makes you uncomfortable, that's an indication you shouldn't do it."

But don't quit your exercise program just because you have a respiratory problem, she said. If you run, walking. If that's not comfortable, try walking the mall.

Just like changing your car's tires when the cold weather hits, shoe traction is every bit as important. If the traction's gone, it might be time to get some new shoes. If good traction still slips when the snows flies, an indoor mall comes to the rescue for a safe, climate-controlled walk.

"One lap is one-half mile," said Juanita Minard at Magic Valley Mall. Mall doors open at 6 a.m. for early risers to walk unimpeded until the stores open at 10 a.m. For the best view of the inside perimeter of the floor, start walking at your own pace, and count your laps.

Knee injuries often misdiagnosed

Knight-Ridder News Service

Doctors are finding more children with injured knees.

"Knee cartilage and ligament injuries, once considered very uncommon in children and adolescents, are now recognized as being widespread," says Dr. Carl Stanitski.

Stanitski is chief of orthopedic surgery at Children's Hospital of Michigan.

At the science writers seminar of the American Academy of Orthopedic Surgeons this month in New York City, Stanitski reported a study of 70 children and adolescents, ages 7-18, who experienced knee pain from injuries.

By examining them with arthroscopy, a surgical technique using small incisions and remote viewing devices, Stanitski found serious injuries that went undetected during physical examinations and checks with sophisticated imaging equipment such as X rays and magnetic resonance imagers.

"Non-orthopedists commonly assume a 'wait and see' attitude to knee pain in children after injury,"

A delay in diagnosis may lead to more serious injuries," Stanitski's report says.

Physical exams and imaging techniques are essential in diagnosing knee injuries, but they are often inaccurate, says Stanitski's report.

The problem is compounded because children may not recall how an injury occurred and so may not be able to help in making a diagnosis.

If a child's knee main doesn't suggest a specific diagnosis, arthroscopy is the necessary next step, Stanitski says.

Shoulders

The couturier Lacroix, whose "pagoda" jackets shown last week in Paris boasted shoulders shaped like temple roofs, says shoulder padding — what he calls "a particularly elaborate piece of architecture" — is a big part of fashion's return to ladylike clothes. "After the almost virtually soft shapes of the last few seasons, fashion is reconstructing itself," he says.

Audiences are approving.

"Construction, padding, a little bit of artifice ... I think it's a plus," says Neiman-Marcus fashion director Joan Kaner. She expects American customers will react favorably to the return of shoulder padding. As she put it, "The ladies really like it."

"It's actually very pretty," says Harper's Bazaar Editor in Chief Elizabeth

Tilberis, who last week tried on several of the new padded-shoulder jackets from various collections. "It's about a little upturn, a slight smile at the end of the shoulder line. It's sexy," she says. But, Tilberis hastens to add, "it needs a cinched waist" to make it look modern. Otherwise it's just too '80s.

Synonymous with "Dynasty" era fashion, shoulder pads have always been considered hip-reducing godsend by legions of women, many of whom were loath to give them up no matter what designers proposed in recent years. These women in particular will be pleased to know that, as Kaner says, "They're getting them back with a vengeance."

Plus-size model offers tips for large women

Knight-Ridder News Service

PHILADELPHIA — The first thing you have to do if you are a large woman, says Angel Smedley, is admit that you are a large woman. "The size should not matter," she says. "It shouldn't keep you from looking fabulous. You don't have to be a size 6 to look beautiful."

"We (big women) tend to be noticed anyway. Wouldn't it be nice to be noticed for looking fabulous?" Smedley knows what she's talking about. The director of media services for the Philadelphia College of Textiles & Science, she is also a plus-size model. Recently, she was chosen as a runway model for plus-size women at Macy's King of Prussia, Pa., store, where she presided over a show presented by six plus-size models in everything from activewear to career looks to evening clothes. And all the clothes came off the racks — in sizes 18 to 22.

With polls showing that 54 percent of women in the United States now wear sizes 14 and above, it's encouraging to see this group getting the fashion attention it deserves. Smedley's advice: "Big women start with the basics. Don't try to wear sizes that are too small, and buy good-quality foundation garments."

Getting the proper fit in bras and underwear is very important," she says. "You can have a beautiful outfit, but if the foundation isn't right, it isn't going to look good."

Next, she says, decide how you want to look — classic, trendy, businesslike or casual. Then start to build a wardrobe, bit by bit. She prefers coordinating separates rather than dresses, because they are more flexible and allow for a better fit on top and bottom.

"Pick pieces that go together," she advises, so that you can mix and match for a variety of outfits. If you buy a beige suit and blouse, for instance, you could get another jacket in a print for a completely different outfit. "Try to think about what you want; don't buy on impulse."

She also suggests that women go shopping with a friend whose opinion they trust, somebody who will tell them honestly how an outfit

'You don't have to be a size 6 to look beautiful. We (big women) tend to be noticed anyway. Wouldn't it be nice to be noticed for looking fabulous?'

— Angel Smedley, plus-size model

looks, especially from the rear. In addition, she says, it helps to find a store with competent salespeople who know how to help big women put a look together.

Although she laments the lack of trendy clothes in plus sizes — "I'm 25, I want trendy things, because I'm not all businesslike all the time," — Smedley is delighted to see more designers offering bigger sizes in fashionable and elegant clothes. Among them: Carole Little, Ellen Tracy, Jones New York (including Jones Sport), Liz Claiborne's Elisabeth line, and Jennifer Moore, Macy's own line.

Jones New York also has a petite plus size, and Elisabeth does clothes for all lifestyles in women's petite.

Retail consultant Mary Schmidt says Elisabeth uses a size 18 fit model for plus sizes, instead of the usual practice of upscaling from a size 8 for all sizes.

"It's an attempt to get better fit," says Schmidt. Scaling up proportionally from a size 8 can armholes to be way out of whack for a size 22. Using a size 18, says Schmidt, makes for more realistic proportions.

(Liz Claiborne, by the way, has been opening separate Elisabeth stores for plus sizes. Schmidt says there are already nine around the country, with several more expected to open by the end of the year. Meanwhile, the Elisabeth line is available in department stores.)

Researchers, eye prostate treatment

Knight-Ridder News Service

Six medical centers, including the University of Michigan, soon will begin a study of cryosurgery, a promising, experimental prostate cancer treatment that has triggered a major national controversy.

The research study will compare cryosurgery to radiation treatment in 150 men with locally advanced cancers — tumors considered too big for surgery but that have not spread to adjacent lymph nodes.

The study will begin Nov. 1 at the University of Michigan, where treatment for most of the men enrolled will be free. The other centers involved also may offer free treatment, although details will not be final until mid-November. The other centers are in Chicago, Atlanta, New Orleans, Indianapolis and Charlottesville, Va.

The study will be funded by Cryomedical Sciences Inc., the manufacturer of instruments for the procedure, in which a probe containing super-cooled liquid nitrogen is inserted into tumors to freeze and so destroy them.

Cryosurgery proponents say the technique appears to be as good as any other option and has fewer side effects, such as impotence and incontinence. But there are no long-term studies, and devices used in the procedure are not yet federally approved and are awaiting further research.

Earlier this year, Medicare reimbursement, which once paid for the treatment in some states, was withdrawn, ousting some prostate cancer groups and survivors.

Athletic shoes that fit women hard to find

The Washington Post

Women who don sneakers to walk to the office in comfort or lace up a pair of athletic shoes to head out often need to take some special precautions. That's because many athletic shoes are poorly designed for women, doctors report.

"Women's feet, like the rest of their bodies, are not shaped like men's," said

Carol C. Frey, associate professor of orthopedic surgery at the University of Southern California in Los Angeles. "We have a smaller forefoot, and whole lot smaller heel."

Most athletic shoes designed for men for women are scaled down versions of shoes for men, "resulting in a fit that is not proportional to most women's feet," Frey said.

In a study of 255 women ages 20 to 60, Frey and her colleagues found that 73 percent of participants had chosen to wear athletic shoes that pinched the forefoot in order to get proper heel fit. That in turn often led to foot pain and deformity. The study results were reported last week in a conference in New York sponsored by the American Academy of Orthopedic Surgeons. Poorly fitting shoes can decrease athletic performance and increase the risk of injury, the researchers said. Most women have a shorter stride than men and tend to have their ankles turned in more than men, said Francesca Thompson, an orthopedic surgeon in New York at St. Luke's-Roosevelt Hospital and co-author of the study.

An athletic shoe that fits badly places more strain on the foot as well as the ankle, knee and hip, Thompson said. "You can get away with a more-narrow shoe in a dress shoe, but you shouldn't have to in an athletic shoe," she said. Ill-fitting shoes are not a new problem for women, but this is one of the first studies to examine athletic shoes. Previous studies have documented hammer toes, bunions, corns and other disabling problems associated with poorly fitting shoes.

In 1993, a study of 356 women by Frey, Thompson and Linda Smith, a member of the American Orthopedic Foot and Ankle Society Council on Women's Shoewear, found that 86 percent of the women wore shoes that were too small for their forefoot, the widest part of the foot. Nearly three-quarters reported they also experienced some foot pain.

Women with feet that are size 8 or larger are also the most likely to have problems finding a good fit in athletic shoes, the new study found. The reason, Frey said, is that the ratio of heel size to forefoot size is more pronounced in women with larger feet, making a good fit tougher to achieve.

Athletic-shoe manufacturers said that although in the past shoes have not always been designed specifically to fit women, they are now well aware of the differences in men's and women's feet and adjusting their products.

"I would agree with Dr. Frey," said Sue Levin, a spokeswoman for Nike, the manufacturer of women's running shoes. "Nike has large amounts of morphological data that indicate on a normal, women's heels are narrower than men's."

As a result, Levin said, Nike as recent years has been making athletic footwear in a wider range of foot dimensions. Women's shoes models have been designed with lower heels.

"That's something we have been introducing over the last few years," she said. "Our women's shoes are definitely not scaled-down versions of our men's shoes."

Nike and other athletic shoe manufacturers have also added extra eyelets to allow a variety of lacing patterns that give a better fit. Trouble is, Levin said, consumers are often confused by the additional eyelets and complain about extra-long shoe laces.

The bottom line, Frey said, is for women to become more-informed consumers. "Shop for shoes after a training session or aerobics class or after running, because this is the time when your feet are the biggest," she said.

To achieve the best fit, women need to try on athletic shoes with the same type of socks they wear during workouts, Frey said. Get a shoe that fits as snugly as possible in the heel and sole that allows the foot to expand. The forefoot should not feel crowded and the front of the shoe should be ½-inch longer than the longest toe.

"Athletic shoes should be immediately comfortable from the moment you put them on," she said. "The worst piece of advice," she said, "is when a salesperson says, 'These shoes will stretch.' That's not necessarily true."

The peacoat resurfaces in bold variations

Dallas Morning News

Can anyone resist a woman in uniform?

Peacocks, the stalwart outerwear that has protected seafarers for more than 250 years, have swept back into fashion.

The Army-Navy store staple is known by its navy wool melton fabric, hip-length cut, wide collar and double-breasted row of buttons with anchor insignia. But for fall, fashion has launched a small fleet of variations.

J. Crew offers the peacoat in velvet and plaid. Cynthia Rowley likes it in curly corduroy cloth. Armani A/X cuts it close and long like a sexy dress. The late Franco Moschino showed it in a leopard print. Dolce & Gabbana offer zebra.

Indeed, the classic peacoat endures outrageousness of nearly any sort: a doubling of color; the seemingly ignominious addition of furry cuffs and collars; or a severe cropping at the waist. It's even regal enough to be recut in soft wool crepe, paired with a flirty skirt and worn as a ladylike suit.

No matter how it's interpreted, the peacoat is a classic. Fashion historians trace the jacket's civilian origins to 1830, when the double-breasted top was adopted by Regency England fops as an overcoat or suit jacket. But even then, the peacoat had been worn by British sailors for at least 100 years. It has drifted in and out of fashion ever since.

"There are certain pieces that are forever in style," says Michael Hoban, the North Beach Leather designer. "The peacoat is the outerwear version of the navy blazer." Never mind that he interprets it in streetwise leather.

"I expect that peacocks are going to be the strongest coats this season," he says.

While Hoban sticks to classic colors such as black and brown for fall and ivory for spring, outerwear manufacturer Schott Bros. Inc. is flirting with fashion colors.

"Until last year, the coat was solely done in navy melton wool. Last year, we did it in colors. It's been a staple in the line since the 1940s," says Michele Litzky, a spokeswoman for Schott.

She says the revival was confirmed when Kate Moss was photographed in a bright red Schott peacoat for the August cover of Mademoiselle.

Not since the 1970s, the last great peacoat era, has the simple classic been such a hit. The current revival began in cutting edge menswear collections two years ago when peacocks appeared as the perfect complement to the emerging outdoorsy looks. In recent months, the classic coat outgrew the outdoors and expanded into women's wear, appearing in the compatibility with schoolgirl kilts and A-line dresses. Momentum grew until it was heralded as the fall coat that best fits modern lifestyles.

"It's an easy shape. It works on most people," says Joan Kaner, senior vice president and fashion director of Neiman Marcus. "It doesn't hug the body and you don't have to be thin to wear it."

Cool looks for spring in California

Knight-Ridder News Service

LOS ANGELES — California fashion designers wait for no one.

At the same time European designers were staging spring '95 women's wear shows in Milan, London and Paris and three weeks before New York designers start their shows, 60 Golden State designers and manufacturers shared their visions of spring during two days of shows early in October at the California Mart.

Here's a look at a few key trends for spring from designers in California:

It's a wrap: The wrap skirts and wrap dresses of two decades ago are enjoying a revival. Most popular are simple wrap dresses that tie in the front. If you're thinking Diane Von Furstenberg, you're showing your age, but right on. There are also close-cousin apron dresses that wrap. Skirts range from modest to immodest, depending on the wrap overlap.

Consort: Karl Lagerfeld started it this past summer at the fall '94 haute couture shows, and now consorts are the latest lingerie-to-be-seen look. It's a fun club-wear gimmick but won't cut it at the office.

Old germs, new enemies

Soon-to-be-published book looks at battling "The Coming Plague"

Los Angeles Times

Every day the index of misery grows.

In Russia, a diphtheria outbreak has reached epidemic proportions. In Rwanda, the drug-resistant cholera that blazed through refugee camps this summer remains a killer. In the United States, once-vanished diseases such as tuberculosis and measles have returned like avenging conquerors to ravage poor, urban areas. And the latest entry from the "killer germ" front is a sobering reminder of ancient times: a plague outbreak in Western India that has killed dozens of people and caused hundreds of thousands to flee the area.

"We are in a new historical phase," says Laurie Garrett, author of the soon-to-be published, "The Coming Plague: Newly Emerging Diseases in a World Out of Balance" (Farrar, Straus & Giroux).

"Our relationship with microbes is different than ever before," she says. "I don't think it's Fantasy X, apocalyptic thinking."

Garrett's book is an exhaustively researched, often-gripping tome — covering everything from African viruses to toxic shock syndrome and AIDS.

At 730 pages, the book is a collection of "disease detective" stories as well as an ambitious history of mutant viruses and bacteria over the course of this century.

Newsweek magazine calls it a "brilliant downer (that) is most reading."

Adding to the book's impact is its timeliness. Recent cover stories by Newsweek and Time magazines have sounded the alarm on the failure of antibiotics to defeat new generations of bacteria and the overall virulence of killer bugs.

"The Hot Zone" — a book about ing phenomena in sub-Saharan Africa, Central America and the Middle East, which challenged the assumptions that the defeat of disease was science at hand.

the 1989 outbreak of Ebola virus in Virginia — is on the bestseller list, and a movie about a deadly virus gone awry — set in a star Dustin Hoffman — is also in the works.

Likewise, last June's appearance of the so-called flesh-eating bacteria — reports of which were endlessly replayed on TV news — remains fresh on many people's minds.

Garrett's interest in infection, however, is the product of a much longer gestation. A former science correspondent for National Public Radio and fellow at the Harvard Public School of Health, Garrett wrote "The Coming Plague" in 17 months after several years of observ-thought were quite common were killers, and that diseases I had never heard of were killing tens of thousands of people and taking millions of lives every year," recalls Garrett, a health and science writer at New York Newsday.

Still, the overall picture didn't come into focus for her until a 1987 gathering of scientists and researchers in Washington, D.C. There, for the first time, Garrett says, she heard experts voice grave concerns about medicine's inability to cope with the burgeoning number of virulent contagions that had suddenly manifested — fears that, in essence, validated her anecdotal experiences. That started her hunt, she says, "and by the time I had 12 file boxes (of research), I said, 'It's time for a book contract.'"

In "The Coming Plague," the litany of blame for the new onslaught of global infection is a long and complex one. Indeed, Garrett, who has an advanced degree in immunology, points out that few of the most lethal contagions facing the world — such as hantavirus and Legionnaires' disease — are new. Many have existed either in less virulent states or in local environments for years, perhaps centuries. But in the past 20 years or so, social and environmental factors have intruded to amplify the quality and quantity of their destructiveness.

Garrett and other researchers now theorize that factors such as rising intravenous drug use and the increase in gay sex in North America, and war, refugee migration and famine in Africa likely spurred the beginnings of the epidemic.

"You can't divorce our social problems from diseases of population," says Dr. Richard Wenzel, an infectious disease specialist and epidemiologist at the University of Iowa. "For an epidemic to get rolling, it has to have susceptible people."

Given this, the immediate outlook is not a hopeful one, says Garrett, adding that estimates show that by the next century, there will be an increasing number of megacities — those with populations of more than 10 million — in developing, economically disadvantaged countries.

your lower extremities. The resulting drop in blood pressure can cause lightheadedness and even fainting. A proper cool-down helps to maintain circulation. After the heart rate returns to normal, it is important to stretch all muscles involved in the activity. This can help increase flexibility, promote relaxation, and reduce muscle soreness and spasms.

Improper exercise can be harmful

Knight-Ridder News Service

Did you know that exercising improperly can actually be harmful to your health? How do you know if you are taking this simple quiz to determine if you might be making common exercise mistakes:

1. Do you ever exercise without first taking time to warm up and stretch out?

2. In working out, do you ever use improper footwear or wear clothes that don't allow your skin to breathe?

3. Do you ever forget to drink plenty of fluids, especially water, before, during and after exercise?

4. Do you ever push yourself to the point of pain or burn when working out?

5. Do you fail to lighten the intensity of your workout when you don't feel "up to par" or when your muscles are overly sore?

6. When lifting weights, do you ever use a weight that is too heavy to maintain form?

7. When taking a step aerobic class, do you place your bench too high to maintain proper posture and good body alignment?

8. Do you lock your knee or any other joint when performing an exercise?

9. Do you abuse a particular exercise by doing endless repetitions, thinking it will melt the fat away?

10. Do you ever finish a workout without an adequate cool down and stretching period?

If you have answered yes to any of these questions, you may be at risk for injury. Let's look at the reasons why you should avoid some of these exercise pitfalls.

Question 1. Warming up minimizes the risk of injury by increasing blood flow and elevating body temperature, which, in turn, helps reduce the risk of muscle tears. More blood means more oxygen and nutrients. Warming up prepares the body for a more intense effort and makes the movement easier. Warm-up muscles can move faster and generate more force. A proper warm-up should include a low-intensity rehearsal of the actual activity as well as some light stretching.

Question 2. For optimum performance and injury prevention, it is best to wear a sport-specific shoe. It is also a good idea to avoid heavy non-breathable clothing, which can zap your energy and endurance by preventing the body from cooling itself naturally.

Question 3. Proper hydration is essential for preventing heat illnesses. Symptoms of poor hydration include lightheadedness, nausea, loss of energy and extreme fatigue. Your body needs at least four ounces of water every 15 minutes during activity to prevent dehydration and a dangerous risk in body temperature. Thirst alone is a good indicator of your water needs—it's advisable to drink two glasses of water for every pound lost through sweat.

Question 4. Pain is your body's way of telling you there is something wrong. A proper exercise program has a gradual progression of overload. For advancement, you must overload your muscles as they adapt to a particular exercise. The burning sensation experienced during exercise is the result of lactic acid and other waste products building up in the muscle. At the point of "burn" a muscle's need for oxygen is greatest. To push beyond this will sacrifice exercise technique and risk possible injury.

Question 5. Not reducing the intensity of your workout when you don't feel well can rob your body of necessary protein and nutrients. You also risk compensation and injury. To push beyond this will sacrifice exercise technique and risk possible injury.

Question 6. Using momentum to lift a weight increases your risk for muscle and joint injury. Swinging weights sacrifice good technique and prevents a focused workout by recruiting other muscles to lift the load. This can result in not only strained or torn muscles, but a lack of desired results.

Question 7. According to Step Reebok, the knee should never flex beyond 90 degrees when it is weight bearing. Excessive flexion can cause your overall posture to be thrown off. For example, locking your knee joint while curling a barbell not only puts added stress on the knees, but can also strain your lower back muscles.

Question 8. Locking your joints puts added stress on the joint and can cause your overall posture to be thrown off. For example, locking your knee joint while curling a barbell not only puts added stress on the knees, but can also strain your lower back muscles.

Question 9. Excess fat is reduced only by a combination of aerobic exercise, resistance training and a low-fat healthy diet.

Question 10. Your activity should gradually decrease in intensity before completion. If you stop abruptly from aerobic exercise, blood tends to pool in

How to protect yourself

You don't have to be an infectious disease specialist to take action against "dangerous" microbes. Doing — or not doing — a few simple things can make a difference:

• Don't ask for antibiotics every time you get sick. Overuse of antibiotics is one of the main reasons bacteria are becoming resistant to drugs that used to kill them.

• If your doctor prescribes antibiotics, take them all, even if you start feeling better before you finish them. If you don't, you allow partially resistant bacteria to flourish in your body.

• Cook meat and poultry thoroughly to discourage food-borne infections. Use soap and water to wash utensils and surfaces that come in contact with raw meat and poultry, and don't let raw meat juices touch food you are about to eat.

• Practice good hygiene with diapered children in child-care facilities, to reduce transmission of microbes that can cause diarrheal diseases.

• Learn how sexually transmitted diseases are spread, and follow recommended guidelines for safer sex.

• Get rid of old tires and other containers around your property that could hold standing water. They could be breeding grounds for disease-carrying mosquitoes. — Knight-Ridder News Service

Roller skis give a wild, speedy ride

Knight-Ridder News Service

Spend two minutes on roller skis and you'll learn the major differences between them and in-line skates.

Roller skis are slower and don't have brakes, but they give a great simulation of cross-country skiing.

Dick Fultz, owner of the Country Ski Shop in Grayling, Mich., said roller skis are bought mostly by serious athletes who want to train for ski racing in the snowless months and by people who want a harder workout than in-line skates provide.

"Once you learn the basics, you'll be amazed at how well the roller skis duplicate skiing on snow," Fultz said. "The skating model gives you the same snow speed you get on ideal 20-degree days."

Roller skis, which run from $200 to $275, come in two versions: shorter skating models (about 18 inches) in which the wheels spin in both directions and simulate the skate skiing technique, and striding models (about 22 inches), whose ratcheting wheels turn forward only, to mimic the kick-and-glide motion of classical cross-country skiing.

Roller ski wheels are wider and softer than in-line wheels, offering more stability and a better ride on rough pavement.

Fultz suggests newcomers stay on the flat until they master the technique.

"And if you come to a hill that's too steep, take them off and walk down," he said. "That's what I do." He also uses a $50 option called a speed reducer that allows him to slow wheel speed before downhill.

Fultz said beginners should wear long-fingered gloves, knee and elbow pads, and a helmet, although the necessity to use ski poles precludes wearing wrist protectors.

Polyester sports new, upscale image, thanks to microfiber

Light-Rider News Service

Are you wearing polyester? Don't laugh. And don't shake your head until you check the labels in your clothes. You'll probably be surprised at how many of the fashions contain polyester.

More than 85 percent of the U.S. population wears clothes made of polyester or polyester blends, according to the Polyester Council of America. And more than 50 percent of all garments made in this country contain polyester.

In Japan, Forbes magazine reports, trendy and fashionable women are snapping up 100 percent polyester jackets for $1,100.

American designers from Bill Blase

Bloomingdale's at Willow Grove, Pa., recently teamed up with the Polyester Council to present a fashion show of desirable threads — polyester — pulled from the store's upscale racks.

Emcee was Beverly Johnson, a top model and stylist of style.

The audience, which exceeded the seating, enthusiastically applauded coats, casual wear, career clothes and evening gear. The tags flaunted the names of Calvin Klein, Liz Claiborne, Christian Dior, Ellen Tracy, Adrienne Vittadini, DKNY, Laura Ashley and Nicole Miller, among others.

What's going on here? What happened to all the leisure-suit jokes? The cheap doubleknit image? The memories of sartorial sleaze?

The cheap doubleknit image? The memories of sartorial sleaze? Microfiber happened.

Developed by Du Pont, microfiber has yanked polyester from the fashion junk pile and put it back on the designer track. Finer than silk, this polyester thread can be made to feel like almost any fabric on silk and to behave like a natural fiber. But it still retains the qualities that earned polyester the nickname "the miracle fiber" when it was introduced in the early 1950s — it is easy-care, for instance, and wrinkle- and stain-resistant.

(Microfiber yarns are produced when polyester polymer is forced through micro holes in a spinneret, producing one filament per hole. This creates a fine mesh of filaments making up the polyester microfiber yarn, which can be mixed alone or blended with cotton, silk, wool, rayon or other fibers.)

The renaissance of polyester has actually been underway for about a decade, but images die hard in the public mind.

The problem, says Bob Bruyn, Polyester Council chairman and Du Pont executive, is that people perceive the product to be what it was 20 years ago.

There was a time, in the early '80s, when manufacturers toyed with the idea of changing the generic name, according to Textile World. Instead, what became the Polyester Council of America was born, charged with promoting a positive image for the fabric in the fashion and home-furnishings industries.

But the introduction of microfiber into the ready-to-wear market in the early 1990s was the greatest boost of all.

In Japan, the high-fashion industry uses shingones, a kind of microfiber polyester gone a step further. Instead of imitating natural fibers, shingones is like a new fiber altogether. It is supple and elegant, and expensive to produce — hence those high-priced jackets.

It may also be part of the future.

A fashion forecaster quoted in Omni magazine sees microfiber as the first generation of high-tech "test-tube" textiles.

"A decade from now," the magazine said, "we'll all have wardrobes made out of fabrics that don't even exist today."

How's your flexibility?

Flexibility — the ability to move joints freely and without pain through a wide range of motion — an important component of physical fitness. Improving flexibility isn't hard; stretching will do it, says the American College of Sports Medicine.

How flexible should you be for your age and sex? The ACSM Fitness Book (Leisure Press, $11.95) endorses this test.

Warm up before you test: Walk slowly and increase your pace until you feel warm. Do some gentle stretches to loosen your back and leg muscles.

- Step 1: Place a yardstick on the floor with the zero mark closest to you. Tape the yardstick to the floor at the 15-inch mark. Have a friend help you keep your legs straight during the test but not interfere with your movements.
- Step 2: Sit on the floor with the yardstick between your extended legs, feet about 10 inches apart and heels at the 15-inch mark.
- Step 3: Place one hand over the other, with the tip of one middle finger on top of the other.
- Step 4: Slowly stretch forward without jerking or bouncing, and slide your fingertips along the yardstick as far as possible.
- Step 5: Do the test three times. Your score is the highest number you reach, to the nearest inch.

Hot colors add shot to neutral closet

Orange County Register

The mourning period is over. After fashion's somber mood turned away customers who found nothing uplifting about neutral clothes, some designers decided it was time to blast away the somberness with a surefire thing: color.

Not that they've done away with the blacks, grays and browns.

Across the best department stores in America, color is coming back in small doses, like buoys in a sea of darkness.

It's mostly found in the pale designer sections and in the trendiest parts of stores, but it will filter into the mainstream.

Among the biggest advocates of color this season are designers Gianni Versace, Donna Karan, Bill Blase, Todd Oldham, Anna Sui and Michael Kors.

Versace, Karan and Sui made strong color sizzle with slick and shiny fabrics. In patent leather, Versace's dresses, suits and trenchcoats looked like they had just been drenched in a vat of Skittles candy color — and hadn't yet dried.

Karan got raves for combining acid hues of lime and pink with wet-suit fabric — neoprene — for ballgowns, of all things.

In his fall runway show, Blase ushered the return of color with three double-faced swing coats in contrasting combinations of purple and orange, green and orange, and fuchsia with French blue.

Oldham, who has never strayed from strong color, played with rain-bow stripes and gigantic plaids in his usual tongue-in-cheek way.

Sui's cheerleaders wore orange, lime and pink nylon and spandex T-shirts as well as pale polyester skirts.

Kors lowered the intensity of color several notches for his beautifully cut collection. He used lavender, not violet, and butter, not tawny yellow. But he did not rest on his laurels, either. He mixed them with browns, grays and blacks.

What makes these designer renditions of color different from the late '80s and early '90s versions is the use of interesting fabrics. From fuzzy mohair to futuristic plastic, full color reaches out and wants not only to be seen but to be touched as well.

Why are designers bringing back happy color?

"Color has always represented optimism," said Leatrice Eiseman, executive director of the Pantone Color Institute, a color trend tracking forecasting firm. "Bright colors are like an upper. This is what designers are trying to infuse into their collections after so many dunks for the past fall and beige and no-colors for the recent spring. These two extremes reflected some of the concerns about the economy. Clothes had a pessimistic attitude. Now people are looking at things with a fresher pair of eyes — everything, generally, is better.

"With that in mind, adding bright colors can bring people back into the stores. After all, how many beige or black outfits can you own?"

With the saturation of black and other neutrals in stores is that these colors do not have any energy, said Mimi Cooper, consumer trends consultant for the Cooper Marketing Group, which tracks color trends. After a while, too many of these colors can give the feeling of blandness.

"Strong colors are the pick-me-up colors — they give an adrenalin rush," Cooper said.

Eiseman and Cooper agree that yellow seems to be the most ubiquitous of all the brights, followed by blue, then lime and orange.

Still, strong colors look best when they're tempered by neutrals.

"This fall, the designers' favorite neutral to put against color is not the usual suspect, black."

"In the designer survey I did with Pantone, we looked at the numbers of color swatches that had been sold to designers," Eiseman said. "We noted 500 of the top colors, then narrowed them to 100. What we found was, the darker grays practically pushed black out of the picture. There's no question that black is still there, but charcoal is the neutral to wear with bright color."

MTV mulls shopping

Los Angeles Times

On video shopping channels, it's not uncommon to hear hawkers describe cubic zirconia jewelry as stunning or call polyester pantsuits irresistible.

Now that Beavis and Butt-head have joined the ranks of the electronic shills, "it doesn't suck" can be added to the list of home shopping's favorite phrases.

MTV Networks — which includes VH-1, Nickelodeon and MTV — began testing the home shopping waters in August. On the distant horizon — if the tests went well — was a separate, 24-hour shopping channel that could compete for a share of a $2 billion-a-year industry. But since a wildly successful initial outing during the broadcast of Woodstock '94, complications have arisen.

"Products aren't ready, customized merchandise is late. We're walking in a world we've never been before," says Mark Rosenthal, executive vice president of MTV. "Some of the stuff we've never done before and we're having to piece it together."

There are only two major competitors in the home shopping arena: QVC (in 50 million homes), with 1993 sales of $1.22 billion and the Home Shopping Network (in 60 million homes, with 1993 sales of $1.04 billion).

But the numbers speak even louder at MTV. The music channel is in 59 million American homes and another 240 million internationally. Asia and India got their MTV this month, jacking those figures into the stratosphere. VH-1 and Nickelodeon each are in more than 50 million U.S. households and are beginning their global conquest.

Analysts say that should MTV Networks launch a shopping channel, it could be at the $1 billion mark in a few years.

"If you take a typical cable audience of 60 million homes, 8 percent have bought from QVC and Home Shopping Network," Rosenthal notes. "How do you get the other 92 percent? Either you're not reaching them, or our focus is narrow and specialized."

Yet critics from rival shopping networks say the look of MTV shopping is too entertaining, too hip and too fast-paced — folks won't buy.

Oldham says that's exactly where the critics are wrong. People don't need to be bored into a stupor to spend.

During MTV's first 30-minute shopping show, featuring Woodstock '94-related items, more than $1.5 million worth of telephone orders were taken in two days.

The 14-to-34-year-old MTV audience bought it all — T-shirts, programs, hats and a $75 package of framed ticket, backstage pass and commemorative coin. Price seemed to be no object, nor did getting their youthful hands on a credit card.

But can that success be duplicated on a 24-hour MTV shopping channel?

Rosenthal says that next year, after all the checks have cleared, the network will decide whether to start such a channel.

"If there is a future for us in electronic retailing, we will study the process, figure it out, make a prudent investment and do it."
