BOISE — State Schools Superintendent Anne C. Fox will reject up to $2 million in federal funding for school improvements — despite warnings from House Appropriations Committee chairman Kathleen Gurnsey, R-Boise, that Idaho needs the money.

Fox told The Times-News Wednesday afternoon that she will return more than $400,000 in Goals 2000 funds already awarded to Idaho. And she won't accept the roughly $1.6 million due in 1996.

The state schools superintendent said she'll be in Washington, D.C. later this week and will personally inform U.S. Education Department officials of her decision.

"That's great news for opponents of federal education programs, but a setback for Gurnsey, who appeared surprised by Fox's announcement," Gurnsey said Fox had implied she would meet with federal officials — and the State Board of Education — before deciding on Goals 2000. The state board meets on Tuesday and has Goals 2000 on its agenda. Gurnsey says Fox should wait until they've spoken before ruling.

"If everybody else on the state board approves it and she decides not to do it, she's a pretty bad guy in my book. She's letting campaign promises interfere with dollars that could be used for education in this state," Gurnsey said.

Last week, Fox told The Times-

News she wouldn't unilaterally withdraw Idaho from Goals 2000, saying she would leave that decision to the State Board of Education. But Wednesday, Fox said she's ready to single-handedly reject the federal money.

"I feel really good about it," Fox said, after announcing her decision.

Fox made opposition to Goals 2000 a cornerstone to her 1994 campaign, but indicated shortly after her election that she might accept the

Adoptions never sever maternal tie

HAILEY — For nearly three decades, Toni Leech would daydream about the child she bore as a 17-year-old and put up for adoption.

"You don't forget birthdays, you don't forget Christmases. You wonder 'Are they still in school? Are they married? Are they alive?'" said 47-year-old Leech.

Yet, during her 1964 pregnancy and through the years, Leech never wavered from her decision. Leech said she didn't want to marry her boyfriend of more than a year, even though their parents encouraged the union. Aborting or raising a child on her own were not options.

After the daughter she gave up for adoption searched and found her, Toni Leech of Hailey was reunited with Dana Brady in Texas. They have had several reunions since.

"My choice was not to get married. I wanted a better life for myself and for my child," said Texas native Leech. "It was hard at the time, and it was a hard decision to make, but you really do have to think of the baby."

"I never regretted it. I really never regretted it. In my mind I felt — I had to feel — that everything was fine. ... I had to think I made the right choice and not dwell on it."

Nationwide, an estimated 6 percent of teen-agers who decide to give birth choose adoption, according to the National Council for Adoption. Statistics for Idaho teens are unavailable.

Some local people who advise teens of their choices — keeping their babies, adoption or abortion — said they think more should choose adoption. But, they added, it isn't an accepted option.

The pressures
Peer pressure prompts some teens to have sexual intercourse. It also prompts some to keep their babies.

Teens who go to the Pregnancy Crisis Center in Twin Falls say schoolmates call them unfeeling and uncaring for deciding to put their children up for adoption, said center Director Marilyn Scott.

"Adoption is still looked down upon," Scott said. "Many of the girls that we see feel that ... their peers condemn them."

Some teens who don't want to keep their babies choose abortion instead of adoption, said Kim Uranga, director of the Woodriver Pregnancy Center & Hotline.

"A lot of women feel they couldn't go through the pain of having a baby and giving it up," Uranga said.

Families of teens with unplanned pregnancies also feel they should take care of their own instead of putting the children up for adoption, said Linda Petersen, volunteer coordinator for Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints Social Services in Burley.

"People feel so guilty — the grandparents feel so guilty," Petersen said.

And many teens keep their babies, not realizing what financially is involved in their decision, said Mary Reis, South Central District Health Department public health nurse for Jerome and Lincoln counties.

But as teens get older — and have more babies — they realize how hard it is to make ends meet, Reis said.

"The ones that are concerned are the older ones I do pregnancy tests on because the younger ones think it's a real game," she said.

Adoption option
Adoption has changed a lot in the past five years, Scott said.

Abortions rare except in Blaine

By Julie M. McKinnon
Times-News writer

HAILEY — When it comes to pregnant south-central Idaho teens and abortion, Blaine is the only county that comes close to the national estimated teen-age abortion rate of 35 percent.

Higher incomes, awareness of the procedure, relatively liberal religious and political views, higher-educated families, and better accessibility are some of the reasons cited for the Blaine County trend.

In conservative Idaho, the anti-abortion movement prevents many doctors from performing abortions, said Will Caldwell, a member of Blaine County For Choice in Ketchum.

"The information, even where to get one, is basically under the table," said Caldwell, adding that Blaine County residents traditionally are liberal.

"They might not be as intimidated by the anti-abortion sentiments."

Kim Uranga, director of the Woodriver Pregnancy Center and Hotline in Hailey, had a different view of Blaine County residents' liberal attitudes.

"I think it's a party atmosphere, and people don't take responsibility for their actions," Uranga said.

And Ketchum native Uranga said she can personally back up her assertion: She had an abortion when she was 28.

Uranga said she doesn't regret her choice because she learned from the experience. Now she can help others by educating them about abortion and the procedure's risks, she said.

Most women who have abortions feel as if they don't have any other choice, Uranga said.

"Some of us have been there, so we can't judge anyone else," said Uranga, adding some women are never bothered by their decisions to have abortions.

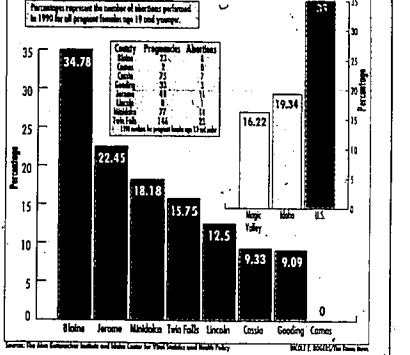

Based on 1990 data, about 35 percent of pregnant teens nationwide had abortions, according to the Alan Guttmacher Institute in New York City.

Comparatively, 19.34 percent of Idaho pregnant teens, 16.22 percent of Magic Valley pregnant teens and 34.78 percent of Blaine County pregnant teens had abortions, according to 1990 data from the Idaho Center for Vital Statistics and Health Policy.

From 1989 to 1993, 46.9 percent of pregnant Blaine County 15- to 17-year-olds had abortions.

7 armed students dismissed in Twin Falls

By Karen Tolkinen

TWIN FALLS — Despite expelling seven students since November for carrying guns or knives to school, the School Board still hasn't decided whether to allow metal detectors into schools.

"I'm waiting for them to get off their rear ends to get something done," said Twin Falls Police Sergeant Bill Hanchey, whose beat is the schools. "We've had kind of a rash of it, so it's something we're taking seriously."

The latest expulsion came Tuesday night and involved one of two junior high boys who kept swapping a pistol at an indoor basketball game three weeks ago.

School Board hasn't approved searches using metal detectors

The board expelled indefinitely the 14-year-old O'Leary Junior High School student, who has attention-deficit disorder. The other student, a Robert Stuart Junior High School student, was expelled at the last School Board meeting.

The two were arrested after students reported seeing one of them at the game with a .22-caliber semiautomatic gun, said Twin Falls Police Officer Don Hall. They had apparently gotten the gun from a friend's house and returned it before being confronted by police.

The two said they had it for protection, Hall said, although they also said it didn't work.

"One boy felt some gang members were threatening him," Hall said.

Both were charged with carrying a concealed weapon on school property.

Five other Twin Falls students have been caught with guns or knives since November, Superintendent Terrell Donicht said Wednesday.

Students have been expelled indefinitely from Perrine and Lincoln elementarys, both junior highs and the high school, Donicht said. They were reported by teachers or other students who had seen the weapons, Donicht said.

Three of the cases occurred at O'Leary Junior High. Principal Wiley Dobbs said it was the first time in five years students had been caught with weapons.

"It could be an anomaly, it could be that — gosh, just watch some TV one night and see what these kids are being introduced to just by the media," he said. "Twenty years ago the media didn't glamorize gang vio-

Fuhrman says he didn't utter racial epithet

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Under oath Wednesday, Detective Mark Fuhrman denied uttering even once in the last 10 years the racial slur that O.J. Simpson's lawyers say their witnesses stand ready to pin on him. Furthermore, the detective insisted, any person who testifies that he used the word is a liar. "All of them," defense attorney F. Lee Bailey asked. "All of them," Fuhrman said evenly.

Bailey's attack, flatly denied the accusation that has made him a lightning rod for defense claims that racism motivated him to frame Simpson for two murders. "Do you use the word nigger?" Bailey asked.

"No," the witness said firmly. Outside the jury's presence, Bailey presented the most detailed account yet of how Fuhrman might have planted a bloody glove on Simpson's property, the male of one found near the bodies of Simpson's ex-wife and her friend.

Bailey asked permission to show jurors a small plastic bag that contained a leather glove. The bag, he asserted, was identical to the type carried by all police officers in their homicide kits.

Then, drawing on his own Marine Corps experience, Bailey theorized that Fuhrman, also a former Marine, knew that "Marines tend to carry things in their socks."

Ohio Marine helped Allies take Iwo Jima

Knight-Ridder News Service

Behind the Japanese first line of fortifications on Iwo Jima was a second line.

A key position in this line was Hill 362-C which was the task of the Third Marine Division to clear. It was decided that the 9th Marine Regiment would make a surprise night assault. No artillery would be used at the attack, as the Japanese bunkers were proof against the heaviest shelling.

The assault worked, the Marines found the enemy asleep and overran the heights. But when daylight came, they discovered they were on the Hill 331, not 362-C. Yet, the mistake paid off. Hill 331 turned out to be where the enemy had concentrated his defenses. Once Hill 331 was secured, Hill 362-C would fall.

Securing Hill 331 proved costly. The Japanese counterattacked in force. Heavy fire from bunkers came at the Marines from all directions. F Company, in the center, was hit particularly hard. By the end of the first day, it was down to only 10 men. By the next day, when tanks finally reached their position, only four men were left.

It took eight days to consolidate Hill 331 and then move on to Hill 362-C. But when this was done, Japanese resistance on the island started to collapse. The enemy was now confined mainly to a small area on the northwest corner of the island. Attempts to get them to surrender were repeatedly rebuffed. They would not go out quietly, but they would go out.

On the night of March 9, a thousand Japanese made the only banzai charge of the campaign. They rushed the right flank of the 4th Marine Division in an attempt to reach Airfield One. Many of the enemy had wrapped explosive charges around their waists to become human bombs. In a savage battle, 784 of the enemy were gunned down. None reached the airfield.

The 4th Marine Division was shortly withdrawn from the island. It had suffered 1,806 men killed and another 7,292 wounded; half the division's strength.

The 5th Marine Division made the final drive on the last Japanese pocket: a gorge south of Kitano Point defended by the enemy's 145th Regiment. Powerful fortifications defended the entrance to the gorge. One blockhouse withstood direct shelling and its walls could not be holed by 40-lb demolition charges placed against them. Tanks equipped as bulldozers blocked its gunports and airvents, then three giant 1,600-lb dynamic charges were used to collapse it.

On March 21, as Marine tank and infantry teams moved through the gorge, the Japanese commander Lt. Gen. Tadachichi Kuribayashi sent out a message "We have not eaten or drunk for five days. But our fighting spirit is still running high. We are going to fight bravely to the last." Three days later, he sent his last message "All officers and men of Chichi Jima, goodbye."

The next night, 300 Japanese soldiers, many officers of Kuribayashi's headquarters, infiltrated the Marine lines in a last suicide assault. They managed to reach the U.S. Army Air Forces' newly arrived VII Fighter Command and overran its position. The airmen were not prepared to fight a night infantry battle. The enemy then encountered the 5th Marine Pioneer Battalion which threw up a firing line and counterattacked.

Key to the battalion's effort was Lt. Harry Martin, a Marine reservist from Ohio. Martin organized an ad hoc defensive line, checking the enemy advance. Spotting a group of Marines who were cut off, he rushed to their aid. He was twice wounded, but reached the surrounded Marines and covered their withdrawal. He spotted a machine-gun which had been captured and was being used by the Japanese. Armed with only his pistol, he killed all four of the enemy gunners.

Next, he spotted an enemy group massing for a new attack. He rallied his outnumbered men and charged into the middle of the enemy formation. The enemy scattered before this determined assault, but Martin was killed by a grenade. He was awarded the Medal of Honor.

This was the last pitched battle of the campaign. In all, over 21,000 Japanese had died defending Iwo Jima. The Marines lost 5,931 dead and 17,272 wounded. In addition, the Navy had 738 doctors and medics killed or wounded on the island. Nearly half the Marine casualties were from the 5th Marine Division, for whom Iwo Jima was its first and only battle of the war. They buried their dead at the base of Mount Suribachi.

Iwo Jima was the greatest fight in Marine Corps history in terms of cost and effort. As Third Marine Division commander Maj. Gen. Graves Erskine said at the time "one who did not fight side by side with those who fell can never understand." We can only try to remember and honor their valor.

Specter to kick off campaign

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican Sen. Arlen Specter will declare his presidential candidacy on March 30, he said Wednesday.

He plans a three-day tour likely to end in the Kansas childhood hometown he shares with Sen. Bob Dole.

Specter has been testing the waters for months and has made no secret of his intention to enter the 1996 race. In setting an announcement date, he said he was convinced his mix of economic conservatism and social liberalism — including support of abortion rights — had broad appeal in the Republican Party.

Specter will hold announcement events March 30 in Washington and in Harrisburg, Pa. On March 31, he will campaign in New Hampshire and also speak at a GOP dinner.

Study backs losing driving privileges

WASHINGTON — Faced with the loss of their professional and driver's licenses, absent parents are forking over millions of dollars in overdue child support.

A report Wednesday by the Department of Health and Human Services tracks the experience of 19 states that revoke professional, commercial, recreational or driver's licenses from parents who ignore court-ordered child support obligations. The department estimates that if similar programs were in place nationwide, child support collections would grow by $2.5 billion over 10 years.

Federal welfare spending would also shrink, by $146 million over the first five years, because the additional child support payments would help some low-income women and children leave public assistance, HHS said.

Research questions using own blood

BOSTON — Giving patients their own blood during operations may offer peace of mind, but it may not be worth the cost to the health care system.

A study found this common practice is much more costly than relying on ordinary donated blood, because of the extra record-keeping required and because so much of what is stored is ultimately thrown away.

Patients began storing up their own blood before operations in response to the AIDS epidemic in the early 1980s to avoid HIV and other viruses.

Dr. Jeff Etchason and colleagues analyzed the cost of the practice, known as autologous donations, at UCLA Medical Center in 1992. Their report was published in today's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

Disaster spending reaches $120 billion

WASHINGTON — Nature's blows have cost the federal government nearly $120 billion in disaster relief since 1977, and Republicans are looking for ways to reduce the flow of assistance.

A Senate report released Wednesday showed the costs to taxpayers of earthquakes, fires, floods and hurricanes have steadily spiraled as more and more places declared presidential disaster areas.

"In the budget climate we face, we must address these escalating costs to ensure the billions we are spending are being spent wisely," said Sen. Christopher Bond, R-Mo.

As recently as 1988, only 17 disasters were given federal designation by the president, which unleashes a barrage of government aid. The number of declarations has risen since then to 58 federal disasters in 1993, which cost taxpayers $6.6 billion.

Lost students found safe on mountain

TIMBERLINE LODGE, Ore. — Three college students who got caught in a snowstorm while climbing Mount Hood over spring break dug themselves a snow cave and played cards and read for two days until the sun came out Wednesday.

"They had so much food left over that they brought some back down the mountain, they said after their rescue. Fifty to 75 volunteers had been searching for the three experienced, well-equipped climbers since Tuesday night. "They were out walking when the Sno-Cat came across them," sheriff's Deputy Damon Coates said. "They all seem to be in good condition."

Reactor tops U.S.-Russia talks

WASHINGTON (AP) — Locked in a sharp dispute with Russia, the Clinton administration is considering ways to keep an advanced reactor now under development in Iran from being used in the production of nuclear weapons.

Russia, which is providing technology and scientists for the $800 million project near the Persian Gulf, would be asked to arrange for shipping out of the country for safe storage any weapons-grade material produced by the reactor, said U.S. officials flying home with Secretary of State Warren Christopher from the Middle East. The administration is loosely opposed to the deal, and Christopher will make that point emphatically to Russian Foreign Minister Andrei Kozyrev when they meet next week in Geneva.

Bosnian area short on food

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Hunger and malnutrition are rampant in northwest Bosnia, where Serbs and their allies are barring the United Nations from feeding tens of thousands of hungry people, aid officials said Wednesday.

Alemka Lisinski, a U.N. aid agency spokeswoman, said supplies bought into the region by the last food convoy Feb. 28 had been distributed to the most vulnerable of the 200,000 people trapped there, most of them Muslims.

"The situation is desperate," Lisinski said. "Our staff reports that food is very scarce and that the small quantities available for sale are very expensive and beyond the means of the people."

(The area, known as the Bihac pocket, is the site of heavy fighting between government troops and an alliance of Bosnian Serbs, Croatian Serbs and renegade Bosnian Muslims. The Serbs generally refuse to give the United Nations permission to move convoys into the region through Serb-held territory. The United Nations does not have a mandate to use force to get its humanitarian aid through.)

The U.N. World Food Program, based in Rome, said only 5,000 people in the enclave received regular meals from public kitchens. Patients in hospitals eat only one meal a day, it said.

Only an estimated 20 percent of the population trapped in the region has received any donated food at all over the past six months, the agency said.

The food shortage has led to higher miscarriage rates, an increase in the number of premature babies, and endemic anemia among pregnant women in Bihac and Cazvin towns, the agency said.

In Sarajevo, Red Cross spokeswoman Nina Winkvist said the agency's programs in the area were also being hampered by Croatian Serbs and renegade Muslims.

Germany tries to weatherproof wall murals

BERLIN (AP) — Roofs will be put up to protect murals on a Berlin Wall remnant that show a fraternal kiss between two communist bosses and an East German car bursting through to freedom.

The murals, done in 1990 after the wall opened, are weathering badly.

The remnant, known as the East Side Gallery, is the longest remaining piece of the wall, measuring slightly less than a mile. It is a strong tourist draw, and city officials have been debating how to preserve at least part of it.

Planning official Wolfgang Branoner announced Tuesday that roofs will be put over two sections of the wall, and a concrete company will test to see how crumbling may be stopped. Parts of the East Side Gallery may go into a future park, Branoner said.

One section to be protected shows Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev and East Germany's Erich Honecker kissing. The other is a cartoon of an East German Trabi car breaking through the wall.

Senator loses battle over governor's home

BOISE (AP) — It isn't often a leadership bill is rejected by the Idaho Legislature.

Republicans hold 84 of the 105 seats and when the leadership gets behind something, it usually skims through the Legislature.

But Rep. Kathleen Gurnsey, R-Boise, co-chairwoman of the Legislature's Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee, battled Senate President Pro Tem Jerry Twigg in the House State Affairs Committee Wednesday, and Gurnsey won.

The committee voted to kill legislation that would have set up another way of dealing with the problem of a new governor's residence. It had cleared the Senate on a 32-3 vote. The legislation would have given legislative leaders authority to spend the $1 million-plus in a fund for a new governor's residence without going through the Legislature or the Permanent Building Fund Council, which controls state construction dollars.

But Gurnsey told committee members that an existing seven-person committee, which she heads along with Sen. Atwell Parry, R-Melba, can deal with the issue.

Idaho has had no governor's residence since 1990 when the old home in Boise was sold and the money put toward building a new home for the state's chief executive.

Cecil Andrus, when inaugurated for his third term in 1987, decided to stay in his own Boise home, even though he lived in the North End home when he was governor in the 1970s.

The $220,000 from the home's sale, plus $780,000 in state funds, went into a fund to build a new home on state-owned land in the Boise foothills.

Boise man gets 6 months for traffic death

CALDWELL (AP) — Troy Hicks, 38, Boise, has been sentenced to six months in jail and placed on five years probation for last spring's traffic death of a Caldwell teen-ager. He was convicted of felony manslaughter but acquitted of drunken driving for the May 4, 1994, accident.

Bill targets job security for workers

BOISE (AP) — Within a matter of hours, the House and Senate on Wednesday voted to strip Idaho's equivalent of civil service job protection from a variety of government employees.

The list of 36 includes public information officers, division directors, administration budget analysts and economists and top regional environmental regulators.

"The chief executive should be able to construct a management team he has full confidence in to implement his policy," said Republican Sen. James Risch of Boise, the former Senate president who served on the transition committee of GOP Gov. Phil Batt.

The bill, endorsed by Batt, cleared the Senate on a 26-9 vote with Gary Schroeder of Moscow the only Republican joining the eight Democrats in opposing it.

Less than two hours later, the House tentatively endorsed the proposal on a 59-8 vote that saw even some Democratic support.

GOP leaders contended the vote was not a partisan attack on a government work force put in place during 24 years under Democratic governors.

A final House vote was still needed to send the Bill to Batt, who has called for more control over the state bureaucracy.

Neighbors say DEA flights invade privacy

SANDPOINT (AP) — Some Bonner County residents are asking elected officials to order an end what they say is harassment by state drug-enforcement agents flying over their property in helicopters.

The olive-green National Guard helicopters carrying Idaho Department of Law Enforcement officers on annual marijuana searches flew low enough last August to scare livestock and look in people's windows, complainants say.

"I heard a helicopter coming in low and thought it was going to crash," said Steve Cote, who lives near Sandpoint. "I ran in to grab my fire extinguisher, and to my behold, it was in front of my picture window with two guys looking at me. It scared the bejesus out of me."

But a special agent with the department says the helicopters are not armed, the agents carry only sidearms and the pilots fly by strict regulations that keep them a safe distance off the ground.

The agent, Wayne Longo, denies any harassment occurred.

"The pilots are well aware of the minimums, and I can only speak for what we did," Longo said. "Maybe these people saw some other helicopters."

'Good Christians' can't condone bad behavior

DEAR ABBY: You overlooked two important points in your recent reply to the grandmother who was upset because none of her friends sent gifts to honor the baptism of her illegitimate great-grandchild.

Consider the possibility that this woman was not the one offended, but rather the friends she is upset with.

She questions whether they are "good Christians." She seems to overlook the fact that her granddaughter has gone at least two things most "good Christians" would consider wrong: She bore an illegitimate child, then failed to put it up for adoption.

That she chose not to abort the child is commendable, but raising the child in a fatherless home is a selfish choice. Unfortunately, that is becoming more common in our increasingly permissive society, but that doesn't make it right in many people's eyes.

It seems to me that a more proper answer might have been to advise the woman to "keep a low profile" regarding her granddaughter's sexual misbehavior and go easy on her friends for not having sent any presents.

She might even call or write and apologize for putting them in an obviously awkward situation.

EARL REINKE, SEOUL, KOREA
DEAR EARL REINKE: Raising a child in a fatherless home "is not always a selfish choice; in many instances, it is a wise and courageous decision when one considers the kind of childhood some children have when the father is an abusive alcoholic or drug addict."

As for labeling a child "illegitimate," there are no illegitimate children - all children are "legitimate" in God's eyes. "Judge not, that ye be not judged." (Matthew 7:1)

DEAR ABBY: My husband travels a lot because of his job. This is fine with me, but I wish he would realize how much work is involved to keep things going smoothly at home while he is away. Almost invariably when he's out of town, one of the kids gets sick, the car needs a repair, or some other emergency needs attention. This means getting up earlier and staying up later to get everything done.

Dear Abby

When he gets home, I am glad to see him, but I am totally exhausted. Now the problem: He thinks I should be ready to have sex with him the minute I come to bed the first night he's home - even though it's been another long day for me. I just want one night of peace and quiet the first night he's home - then I'll be happy to oblige him the following night. He can't understand this and makes me feel guilty if I don't want to have sex immediately - so I give in; otherwise, I know he will be mad at me the next day.

Abby, I hate myself for giving in to him, but I can't find the words to tell him. There's no love-making - it's just "sex" to please my husband.

I feel so ashamed of myself - and so hurt that he cares so little about my feelings, I'm considering divorce. Maybe I have a low sex drive and need therapy. At this point, I just want to crawl under a rock so no one will know what a wimp I am.

FEELING USED IN WILMINGTON, DEL.

DEAR FEELING USED: Your husband needs to know how you feel - and why. If you aren't able to tell him, hand him this column. There is obviously a large communication gap in your marriage. Before you give serious consideration to seeing a divorce lawyer, please consider some joint sessions with a marriage and family therapist.

Time for Cassia schools to back up, start again

Tuesday's defeat by Cassia County voters of a proposed $21.9 million bond issue should send two messages to the Cassia County School Board.

The first is that the size of the bond issue, the largest in Magic Valley history, was just too much for the patrons of a district with 20,000 residents to swallow.

The second is that the components of the proposal, including building new high schools in Burley and Declo and turning the present Burley High into a regional vo-ed center, have merit — but in smaller doses.

The proposal got the support of five out of every nine voters who turned out Tuesday, including big majorities in Burley and Declo. That's a strong indication that Cassia County taxpayers are receptive to spending more money to improve their schools.

But a property tax increase next year of $41 for the owner of a home with a $60,000 assessed value — and an extra $10 annually for the next 17 years — turned out to be too much. That's probably why the bond issue fell short of the two-thirds support it needed.

The school district also probably erred in keeping the proposal under wraps until just a few weeks before the election. Proposals of this kind do better if citizens have a strong sense of involvement and ownership, right from the start.

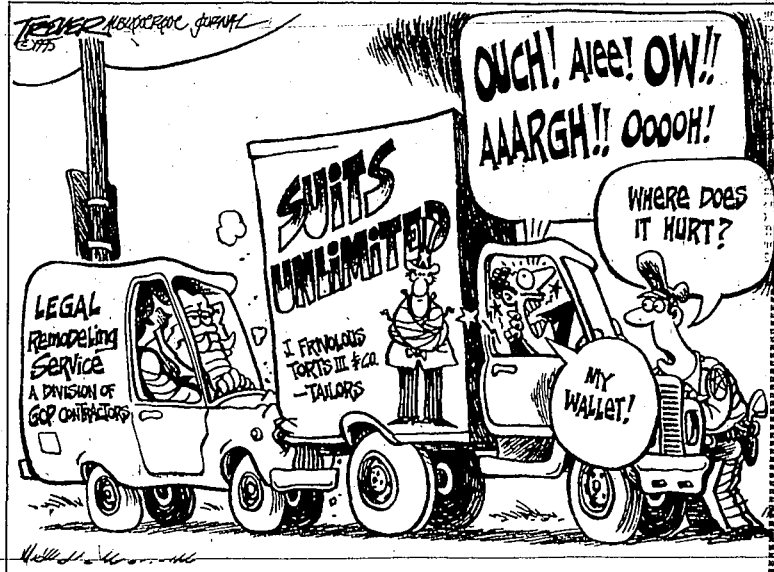

What's next? The Cassia County School Board should work with voters to create a modest proposal. A new high school for Declo, where the present facility is coming apart at the seams, should be the first priority. Building a new Burley High and converting the current high school into a vo-ed center should be next on the agenda.

The vocational center, which would cost $900,000, is an idea whose time has come. By offering high-tech instruction and vocational education in subjects such as automotive service, construction, electronics, welding and manufacturing and health education, it would prepare students for where the jobs will be in the next century.

It also would attract enrollment from surrounding school districts, many of which would be more than willing to help pay to give their students access to vocational education that they can't afford to offer on their own.

It's an innovative idea by a School Board and an administration that traditionally have kept faith with patrons. That's why Cassia County voters have a long record of supporting public education by annually approving override levies.

They're ready to support this idea as well, but without the sticker shock.

Facts prove calf was not stillborn

I would like to comment on your front-page story, "Idaho wolf did not kill calf," concerning the wolf reintroduction and subsequent shooting of Wolf B13 in central Idaho. U.S. Fish and Wildlife spokesman David Klingner was dead wrong when he stated, "The calf is believed to have been stillborn or to have died from natural causes shortly after its birth," on the front page of the March 12 Times-News. Let's get to the facts.

Fact 1: Stillborn calves do not have fully inflated, pink, healthy lungs as the videotape taken of the autopsy performed by Dr. Robert E. Cope clearly shows. Dr. Cope states that this observation is "real easy to tell." Dr. Cope has been a practicing veterinarian for 20 years, including 17 in the Salmon area, and is highly respected.

Fact 2: Inflated lungs, slightly roughened hooves and the presence of colostrum (first milk) in the calf's intestines told Layne Bangerter that the calf was born alive. Bangerter is the U.S. Department of Agriculture Animal Damage Control officer who skinned the calf after it was found. Bangerter also determined that the wolf had bitten three of the calf's legs, probably flipped it in the air a couple of times, choked its throat, then ripped into its stomach while it was still alive.

The facts prove that the calf was not stillborn as indicated by Mr. Klingner. As for dying of "natural causes shortly after birth," I suppose some people may think death from being eaten alive by a wolf is a natural cause.

Family focus makes valley great

I'd like to share my experience with you in regard to why the Magic Valley is a great place to live. Families and children are a priority to the people who live and work here!

I've been the coordinator for the Magic Valley Safe Kids Coalition for five years, and it never ceases to amaze me at how generous and supportive corporations, local businesses, churches, service clubs, individuals and families are when it concerns the welfare of children. Both the public and private sectors have realized that only in cooperating and collaborating across some very traditional barriers will we have the most impact in preventing serious and even fatal childhood injuries.

A case in point is the recent donation of child safety seats to the Safe Kids by First Interstate Bank. It started with one mom, a cashier at the First Interstate Bank in Hailey. She was concerned enough to make a difference in stopping young children from dying or being injured in motor vehicle crashes. She developed a corporate program to purchase child safety seats for families that couldn't afford one and included a distribution plan through 61 branches in four states. More than 700 seats were given away to agencies serving the targeted population. Locally, the Magic Valley Safe Kids Coalition was not the only program that received child safety seats. Other programs benefiting from First Interstate's commitment were the College of Southern Idaho Refugee Center, Crisis Pregnancy Center, South Central Health District and the Alternative High School. Barbara Dirksen at the Twin Falls Branch, with the support of her fellow employees, coordinated the safety seat give-away and a variety of events aimed at raising awareness about the No. 1 killer of our children — motor vehicle crashes.

Their example is a model for other corporations to follow in making a difference for local families. It is only with the commitment and support of many sectors, both public and private, that our community will continue to be an excellent place in which to raise children!

My sincere appreciation to those of you who make a difference.

'Filer's finest' show decency

Hats off to the Filer Police Department! As an occasional visitor from Darby, Montana, I had the pleasure of meeting one of Filer's finest in action during a stake-out near Vances' One Stop. Seems some sizzly looking character driven a brown colored van was about to knock over the place.

Since I'm the sizzly looking type, who just happen to be driving a similar vehicle, who just happen to be in the vicinity, I guess Mr. Coppelbush thought I was him. I wasn't too concerned at first, when this serious looking black and white started a huggin' my bumper. After a mile or so, of this one-on-one ... no talk relationship, I firmly decided it was time to pull over and find out what's up ... or figure on givin' up!

Since I was packin' a fully loaded Pepsi without my concealed weapons permit, I figured it was hands-up time!

"Sorry about that," he said as he approached my window. "I was looking for a GMC van instead." This well-mannered young man used up no more than three minutes of my well honed parapsychic chit-chat time and was gone.

"Now that's a decent cop!" I thought. "Always wants to protect ... not harass!" I wonder if he ever found the bad guy?

We paid high price for freedom

Civil war? Frightening and uncivilized? The political leaders, the bureaucrats don't understand such talk.

Ask Gene Hussey, Randy Weaver, Claude Dallas or anybody that has dealings with a "bureau" on any kind of business or ask someone who pays taxes. What's frightening and uncivilized?

Revolution is a bloody business, but we need to remember that our freedom was bought and paid for with the blood of the common people, and our blood is the price that we have to pay to keep our freedom. Government out of control? Is our nation run by thieves and liars? Got any "agents" hanging around your door? They want you gun!

They don't leave us very many options, do they?

Nurse assistants care, work hard

In view of the recent programs on TV and articles in the paper portraying certified nursing assistants in a negative light, I would like to tell you that I am a certified nursing assistant or CNA. I am one of a great many who care enough about our elderly, physically and mentally challenged and those who have had an extended illness, or surgery and need someone to help take care of them. That is where the CNAs come in.

We get to work at 6 a.m. for report. There is a six-week college class we are required to take. At the end of this, we are required to have worked 40 hours on the floor, had 60 hours in the class and pass a hands-on test and a written certification test. The state also requires us to take and pass a state test. We are also required to be cardiopulmonary resuscitation qualified.

We get to work at 6 a.m. for report. There we learn of any changes that have happened. Then we relieve the night shift and get the residents up and ready for breakfast. We feed them breakfast, helping those who aren't able to feed themselves. After breakfast, they are cared for and those who want to lie down and rest. The others attend various activities, depending on what day it is. Then we get them ready for lunch.

After lunch, they are again cared for and put down to rest, watch movies, TV or just visit. We also have what we call side work. This consists of making beds, helping clean the dining room, taking care of the dirty linen, trash, shaving those who need it, washing portable potty chairs, answering call lights, charting and, in general, helping those who need help.

It's a lot of hard work. We also are a lot of these people's families, their own families being too far away to get in very often. We receive and give a lot of love. A big part of our day includes getting and giving hugs, the squeezes, kisses on the cheek, a little pat on the arm, etc. It is a very fulfilling and rewarding profession. We are the eyes and ears of the nurses. We do the hands-on care and have a relationship with the resident so of like between a mother and her child. We are the first to sense when something is wrong with the resident.

When our shift ends, another begins. It is a never-ending cycle filled by people who care enough to give of themselves to other — people who are proud of the job they do. CNAs.

Anti-U.S. history has no place

Hats off to Rep. Ron Black for repudiating the politically correct, anti-American proposed national history standards.

Despite the fact that the U.S. Senate voted 99-1 against adopting the guidelines, their focus on injustices and failures in American history will find their way into classrooms across America via history textbooks.

Thanks, Rep. Black, for sounding the alarm and reminding us of our responsibility to ensure our children receive an accurate, factual, comprehensive education in American history.

Legal-notice position missed mark

I had to chuckle at the paranoia interwoven in your editorial on HB-289 allowing legal notices on electronic media. I was impressed that you felt the issue required a high-profile Sunday placement. It was obvious, however, that the editorial writer had not done his homework and was not familiar with the bill.

HB-289 prohibits the electronic publication of legal descriptions and trustee sales which your editorial used as an example. You also referenced an ad placed on TV after the Letterman show. Such time placements are also prohibited by the bill.

Communications has evolved since the printing press was invented thousands of years ago. It is time to eliminate the restrictive barriers placed on users of certain legal notices and let them onto the electronic information highway.

Electronic publishing will be the means of newspaper and magazine distribution in the near future. What will your opinion be then?

Forget baseball — 'rent seeking' is Washington's national pastime

WASHINGTON — The national pastime, at least here at the seat of the national government, is a game economists call "rent seeking." It has many permutations, one of which has produced the "perimeter rule" concerning National Airport, which sits a short drive from the Capitol, the Yankee Stadium of rent seeking.

George F. Will

Rent seeking is the attempt by a private faction, in league with compliant public officials, to bend public power to private advantage by conferring either an advantage on that faction or a disadvantage on that faction's competition. Rent seeking is usually an attempt to evade market forces so it shows inefficiencies in society's allocation of resources.

Consider the rule that planes taking off from National may not have as their final destination any airport more than 1250 miles away. Begin by drawing on a map a circle with a radius measuring 1,250 miles. The perimeter of the circle will cut just deep enough into Texas to include the Dallas-Fort Worth airport.

The perimeter rule was set at 1,250 miles in 1986, when the speaker of the House was Jim Wright of Fort Worth.

This story began in the 1960s, when airlines serving National agreed to combat congestion at National by limiting non-stop flights from there to destinations within 650 miles, with exceptions for seven more distant cities that already were receiving non-stop flights from National. The federal government, which then operated National and, much further out in Virginia, the new Dulles Airport, which had opened in 1962, supported the rule as a subsidy for Dulles: the rule conferred on the less convenient airport a monopoly of long-distance flights.

In the early 1980s the perimeter rule was revised to permit 1,000-mile flights. But by 1986 some airlines, responding to that inconvenient (as governments often consider it) idea called consumer sovereignty, were evading the perimeter rule by taking off from National, touching down briefly at Dulles about 26 miles away, then flying on to Dallas-Fort Worth.

Texas' congressional delegation proposed exempting Dallas-Fort Worth from the 1,000-mile limit. But Houston, which still would have been without non-stop flights from National, was not amused. Neither were cities within the 1,000-mile perimeter that stood to lose flights that would be rerouted to Dallas-Fort Worth.

Texas prevailed with the 1,250 perimeter rule that swept in Houston and Dallas-Fort Worth. The effect was to permit some flights to land there and to compel many others to land there. This benefited two large airports and many commercial interests. But the law in its majesty still forbids non-stop flights from National to, for example, Denver and Salt Lake City. And to Phoenix, home of Sen. John McCain, who has an old idea and a new position from which to advance it. The idea, which pertains to government involvement in the economy, is: When in doubt, get it out. His position, a result of last November's election, is the chairmanship of the aviation subcommittee of the Commerce, Science and Transportation Committee.

The perimeter rule is, 18 years after the deregulation that produced today's highly competitive airline industry, an obviously anomalous federal interference with the market's ability to reflect consumer preferences. Enacting the rule would cause a redistribution of flights between National and Dulles, and would have ripple effects, some of them disadvantageous to various interests, in cities that have been hubs for flights forced by law to terminate within 1,250 miles of National. So there is much talk about this "wrecking" air traffic patterns around Washington and around the nation and hurting Dulles as a feeder of trans-Atlantic flights, some of which, say clairvoyant pessimists, would be canceled.

This small controversy about an obscure rule illuminates how regulatory government produces resistance to the reform of itself. By making decisions that markets would not make, government creates or strengthens interests that become dependent on government not letting markets work.

These interests defend their government-enforced advantages by playing upon two impulses that are becoming stronger in reaction against conservative attempts to prune government.

One impulse is a flinching from the unpredictability of freedom's consequences. Another is to assert the entitlement mentally — interests that become dependent on government policies are entitled to have those policies continue forever. This does the perimeter rule demonstrate how activist government, responsive to rent seekers, creates, in the end, constituencies for inertia.

Magic Valley

Around the valley

Low-elevation snow disappears in February

TWIN FALLS — February's warm weather and miserly precipitation combined to melt most of the Magic Valley's low-elevation snow, according to the Twin Falls Soil and Water Conservation District.

On Feb. 1, the Salmon Falls Creek basin contained 10 percent more snow than the long-term average for that date, but the snowpack dwindled to only 81 percent of average by March 1. During the same period, Salmon Falls Creek Reservoir rose from 16,600 acre-feet to 25,380 acre-feet of water. An acre-foot is enough water to cover one acre with one foot of water — or 325,850 gallons.

City seeks comment on ways to ease Blue Lakes traffic

TWIN FALLS — Traffic got you bothered? You're not alone.

City officials are trying to figure out how to improve traffic along Blue Lakes Boulevard North. New roads between Pole Line Road and the Perrine Bridge might be part of the improvements.

A special town meeting will be at 4 p.m. today in the fire station's training room at 345 Second Ave. E. to consider some of the possible road projects. The fire station is next to City Hall.

St. Patrick's Day Parade set to head out at noon Friday

TWIN FALLS — With any luck, the Irish will be lined up and ready to go by noon Friday.

That's when the 9th Annual Twin Falls St. Patrick's Day Parade is supposed to start from the southeast end of Main Avenue and head northwest.

It's expected to include representatives from most of the Magic Valley's antique car clubs, assorted commercial floats, some Clydesdales, the drill team and pep band from Robert Stuart Junior High School, the Valley High drill team from Hazelton, pipers from Highland High School in Rosette, occasional Shriners and the odd fire truck.

The parade will wind up in the parking lot of the IGA supermarket on Main. Prizes will be awarded for the best bands, best costumes and best floats.

Entries are still being accepted for the parade. Call Tim Jones at 733-8114 or Stan Thomas at 734-4154.

Birdhouse auction garners $5,500 for homeless shelter

TWIN FALLS — The Valley House Fund-Raising Committee picked up about $5,500 Tuesday night for the new homeless shelter at the group's first annual silent auction of birdhouses.

Organizers of the auction sold 150 birdhouses, donated by Magic Valley businesses, service clubs and individuals. Two houses fetched $210 apiece.

About 300 people attended the event at the Weston Plaza. The money will go to equip and run Valley House, which opened in January.

Twin Falls School Board offers pair of seats open

TWIN FALLS — The School Board opened its political season Tuesday night by passing a resolution to hold its election on May 16.

No one has filed to run yet, district Clerk Rose Steffens said.

The two seats from the north section of town will be up for a vote — Chairman Steve Tolman's seat in the 4th District and Vera Redman's seat in the 3rd district. Tolman won't run, and Redman has said she doesn't know if she will. Candidates must file with the district office.

Take a peek at possible plans for Twin Falls County future

TWIN FALLS — Want to have a say in the future land-use planning of Twin Falls County?

Volunteers have put together a draft that spells out the county's needs and goals for the next 15 years. County residents can look at the draft at one of several open houses scheduled from 5:30 to 8:30 p.m. across the county next week.

- Tuesday, March 21 — Hansen Elementary School.
- Wednesday, March 22 — Buhl City Hall.
- Thursday, March 23 — Shields Building, College of Southern Idaho, Twin Falls.

A countywide public hearing on the comprehensive land-use plan will be March 30 at the CSI Shields Building.

'Smooth' session ready to wrap up

BOISE — Senate President Pro Tempore Jerry Twigg, R-Blackfoot, expects to have a long, exciting night Friday in Boise.

But the floors will be parquet, not marble, and the stars will don jerseys, not pin-striped suits.

Twigg has NCAA basketball tickets and he expects the Legislature to adjourn before tip-off time. Wednesday, lawmakers said they'll go home for good on Friday, thanks to taskmasters in leadership — and a good working relationship between the Legislature and Gov. Phil Batt.

"It seems to be smoother this year," state

Rep. Maxine Bell, R-Jerome, said. State Rep. Mark Stubbs, R-Twin Falls, suggested legislators have worked diligently in 1995. "This year, we were ready to go. We hit the ground running," Stubbs added.

Wednesday, lawmakers rushed through dozens of bills, hurrying to meet leadership's March 17 adjournment date.

The Idaho Senate tackled:

- Constitutional amendments: A 1975 law that required legislators to conduct a statewide advisory vote before voting to ratify constitutional amendments will be repealed, if Batt accepts the Legislature's advice. Lawmakers rejected advisory ballots, by a 22 to 11 vote.

- Funding for juvenile justice. By a 21 to 14 vote, senators approved taking $3.5 million from a drug abuse prevention fund to pay for county juvenile probation officers.

Public information officers. The Senate voted 26 to 9 to make public information officers political appointees. Only

2nd lawsuit filed against Kimberly nursing home over harassment claim

By Julie M. McKinnon
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — For the second time in six months, Mountain View Care Center in Kimberly is being sued for firing an employee who complained of sexual harassment.

Rebecca Boren of Twin Falls alleges she was illegally fired in March 1993, six days after reporting she had been sexually harassed by a co-worker. The co-worker was suspended and then fired, the lawsuit says.

Boren was fired by former Administrator James Marriot Cox Jr. for alleged insubordination, the lawsuit says. Cox and Diversified Health Services of Memphis, which manages the nursing home, were among defendants named in the lawsuit filed this month in 5th District Court.

Cox was hired in February 1993 to help clean up operations at Mountain View, which had faced repeated controversies.

State inspectors had found dozens of problems with the way the nursing home was operated, morphine had been found missing from a cabinet, and the care center's director and nursing director had been fired, all during a period of about a year.

But Cox himself was replaced as Mountain View's administrator in October of that year, according to the lawsuit previously filed against Cox, the nursing home and its management company.

LeAnn Stuart of Twin Falls sued in 5th District Court last September, alleging she had endured both verbal and physical sexual harassment from Cox shortly after he was hired. Stuart described Cox's behavior to an Idaho Human Rights Commission investigator, who was investigating another employee's complaint against Cox, the lawsuit says.

That lawsuit says Stuart was fired in October 1993 for alleged misconduct. A trial date has not been set for Stuart's case.

Mark Flynn, Diversified Health

Services' attorney, said Monday he has not yet seen a copy of Boren's lawsuit. Flynn said he cannot comment on either case.

Flynn said he also doesn't know where to reach Cox.

Boren's attorney, Jennifer L. Kroos of Rook, Rivers, Baxter & Phillips in Halley, said she and her client had no comment on the pending case.

Boren's lawsuit says the Idaho Human Rights Commission found probable cause to believe Boren was subjected to illegal retaliatory discharge for reporting sexual harassment. A "notice of right to sue" has not yet been issued by the Federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, the lawsuit says.

The lawsuit mentions no specific dollar amount but seeks "actual damages" for loss of wages and benefits; a sum to compensate for past, present and future emotional distress; and costs and attorney fees. It also asks for the right to seek "punitive damages."

Jerome honors Ridley, 3 achievers

By Steve Crump
Times-News writer

JEROME — Before there was talk radio, there was Verla Stroud.

"It was so long ago I don't even remember what year it was or how long the program lasted," said Stroud, who was honored Wednesday night with one of the Jerome Chamber of Commerce's Lifetime Achievement Awards. "But I have a picture of me in the KART studios."

In an era when radio was about as interactive as your typical cinder block wall, Stroud elicited listeners' comments, played some music and swapped recipes and household tips.

"The program didn't deal with anything very profound," she said. "But I enjoyed it, and I think the listeners did too."

Stroud was honored along with retired Jerome librarian Nita Becker and North Side Canal Co. manager Ted Diehl as lifetime achievers.

Molester faces new court as probation term nears end

By Liz Wright
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — More than one year before the end of his 10-year probation, a convicted child molester is accused of masturbating in the presence of children.

Thomas Andrew Tippets, 46, a former insurance agent of Twin Falls, is charged with violating his probation. In 1986, 5th District Judge Daniel Mechl sentenced Tippets to 25 years in prison for molesting a young boy, but suspended the sentence as long as Tippets successfully completed a decade of probation and rehabilitation, according to court documents.

In letters to Mechl in recent years, counselors and probation officials hailed Tippets as a model probationer who did "extremely well" and even considered him "least likely to re-offend," according to letters in Tippets' court file.

Last month, Tippets admitted masturbating around children "on numerous occasions," according to a Feb. 22 letter to Mechl from Idaho Department of Probation and Parole Officer Bill Graff.

Tippets denies violating his probation, according to court minutes. A hearing to determine the evidence is set for 9:30 a.m. April 11. If found in violation of probation, Tippets could spend 25 years in prison — his original sentence.

Over the years, Mechl agreed to ease up on the terms of Tippets' strict probation, allowing Tippets to telephone and write letters to his two children in June 1989, then supervised visits in Nov. 1989, according to court documents.

In 1990, Tippets remarried, and Mechl allowed him to have unsupervised contact with some children, according to court documents. One counselor recommended fewer therapy sessions, documents said.

Upon learning of Tippets' admission, probation officials separated him from his family and ordered him to have no contact with children, Graff wrote in his letter.

House kills bill calling for teacher background checks

By Frank E. Lockwood
Times-News writer

BOISE — Idaho educators won't be fingerprinted or face background checks this year.

The Idaho House of Representatives rejected legislation Tuesday, by a 37-31 vote, that would have required such checks on new school district employees.

Supporters, including — House Education Committee chairman Ron Black, R-Twin Falls, argued that House Bill 348 would provide greater protection for Idaho children.

But opponents argued the bill was too sweeping and amounted to an invasion of privacy.

Currently, Idaho doesn't require background checks on teachers, administrators, cafeteria workers or most anyone else that works in Gem State schools. But this policy has been questioned in recent weeks, after state Schools Superintendent Anne C. Fox hired employees with criminal records or inaccurate resumes.

On Feb. 8, Fox said she would push for legislation requiring background checks for all state education employees.

But the proposal was derailed after the Idaho Education Association teachers' union and several conservative Republicans who questioned the expansive language of HB 348.

Ron Black said the bill is a "good faith effort" by the Department of Education to protect children — not an effort to demean educators. "This isn't an anti-teacher bill," Black told his colleagues, saying the "yes" vote would provide "a little bit of protection for our children."

State Rep. Wendy Jaquet, D-Ketchum, supported HB 348 in committee. But she changed her vote after talking to several teachers, who told her the bill is demeaning and amounts to "harassment."

Toothpaste type upsets inmates

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — Some inmates are unhappy with a new Kootenai County Jail policy providing them with baking soda toothpaste to clean their teeth. "It's too abrasive," inmate Andre Laurent said. "I'm not going to use it because it will make my teeth worse."

"You have no way to get rid of that taste in your mouth," said another inmate. Jail officials said they switched to the powder last week to save taxpayers money and to prevent damage when inmates squirt toothpaste into the air vents of their cells.

Gloria L. King Tejeda, 62, of Twin Falls, died Tuesday, March 14, 1995, at her home, following a long illness.

She was born Dec. 5, 1932, in Twin Falls, the daughter of Lee A. and Grace E. Sinema. She received her education in Twin Falls and following graduation, she married Martin Donald King and they were later divorced. She worked for the State Department of Health and Welfare for several years. She later worked for Bickel School and in 1979, she started working for what is now Lamb Weston where she was employed until the time of her death. She was married to Hermilio Tejeda, they were later divorced.

She was a member of St. Edward's Catholic Church. She is survived by two sons, Thomas L. King and Donald L. King; and a daughter, Terry J. King Beck, all of Twin Falls; a sister, N. Jean Vader of Boise, and three grandchildren. She was preceded in death by her parents and a sister.

A vigil service with Rosary will be held at 7 p.m. Friday, March 17, 1995, at the Reynolds Memorial Chapel in Twin Falls. Funeral Mass will be held at 11 a.m. Saturday, March 18, 1995, at St. Edward's Catholic Church in Twin Falls. Burial will follow at the Twin Falls Cemetery. The family suggests memorials to St. Edward's Catholic Church, Friends of Hospice, or to the Southern Idaho Regional Cancer Center.

Esther B. Karren, 81, of Jerome, died Tuesday, March 14, 1995, at the Twin Falls Clinic & Hospital.

She was born March 21, 1913, in Cullman, Ala., the daughter of Charles and Lue Agnes Enloe Fallon. She moved with her family to Jerome in 1928. She attended schools in Alabama and Idaho.

On May 5, 1933, she married Joe Karren in Jerome. They lived in southern Idaho, working in farming and mining. She worked as a time-keeper and special pack coordinator for Marshall Produce of Jerome. In 1959, she began work as a time-keeper at Simplot's Potato Processing Plant in Burley, retiring in 1971, due to illness.

Esther was a member of the First Baptist Church in Jerome. She was also a member of the VFW Women's Auxiliary of Jerome.

Esther loved to travel with her family to California during the winter and Thermopolis, Wyo., in the summer. She also enjoyed spending time in the Stanley area. Esther loved flowers, birds and small animals. Most of all, she loved her family. She was a loving wife, mother, grandmother and friend. She will be deeply missed by her family and friends.

Esther is survived by her husband of Jerome; three daughters, Joan Walker of Jerome, Carol (Norman) Brogdon of California, and the sister, Diane of Burley; two sons, Joe (Cheri) Karren of Boise and Danny (Mary) Karren of Jerome; two brothers, Earl Fallon and Robert Fallon, both of Jerome; the sister, Marie Diesel of Burley; 16 grandchildren; and 34 great-grandchildren. She was preceded in death by her parents, three sisters and two brothers.

The funeral will be held at 2 p.m. Friday, March 17, 1995, at the Jerome First Baptist Church, with the Rev. Thomas Thompson officiating. Friends may call from 6 to 8 p.m. today at the funeral chapel in Twin Falls. Burial will be at 12:30 to 1:30 p.m. on Friday at the church.

Elva E. Clark
Elva E. Clark, 87, of Jerome, passed away Tuesday, March 14, 1995, at the Twin Falls Care Center.

Elva was born April 12, 1907, in Jell, Mo., the daughter of Thomas Jefferson and Susan Logan Bond. She married Thomas H. Clark on Oct. 11, 1928, in Tulsa, Okla., and he preceded her in death in November of 1985.

They moved to Jerome in 1930, where they lived in the old town, Raymond and stayed with friends in the Falls City area, until they rented the farm behind what is now the Jerome Labor Camp. In 1932, their second son, Norman entered this world.

The year 1936, brought a move to a farm of their own in the Appleton area, where Elva lived until she and Tom retired and moved into Jerome in 1959. Elva worked for Ore-Ida for several years until she retired.

She was a longtime member of the Methodist Church, a member of the Westfield Club and the Jerome Grange for many years. She was an accomplished seamstress and well versed in the skills of knitting, crocheting, tating and quilting. Many pieces of her handiwork can be found in the homes of her children and grandchildren. She was also fond of cooking and was an expert gardener.

Elva is survived by one brother, Granville Bond of Lyons, Kan.; two sons, Raymond G. Clark of Jerome and Norman D. Clark of Umatilla, Ore.; nine grandchildren; and 15 great-grandchildren.

A memorial service will be held at 11 a.m. Monday at the Jerome United Methodist Church, with the Rev. Jack Byrum officiating. Cremation preceded the service. The family requests no flowers and memorials be made to the American Parkinson's Disease Association, in care of Parkinson's Disease Information and Referral Center, 1055 N. Curtis Road, Boise ID 83706-1370. Arrangements are under the direction of the Howard Robertson Funeral Chapel in Jerome.

Charles W. Anderson
Charles W. (Andy) Anderson, 64, of Kimberly, died Monday, March 13, 1995, at the Magic Valley Regional Medical Center in Twin Falls.

He was born Sept. 5, 1930, in Twin Falls, the son of Herbert C. and Alta Galley Anderson. He attended schools in Twin Falls and Hazelton. Charles served in the U.S. Army during the Korean Conflict. On Jan. 24, 1953, he married Carol Jean Hutchison, who preceded him in death on Oct. 2, 1983. To this marriage were born Dale, Keith and Karen. On Feb. 25, 1967, he married Ann Melcomson and a son, Clinton was born a few years later.

Charles loved his children very much and was immensely proud of them. He loved his six grandchildren (Deacon, David, Michael, Cody, Carol Jean and Krystel) and one precious great-grandchild, Sierra. He was a sheet metal worker until illness forced his retirement in 1980.

After retirement, he became involved in volunteer work with the Kimberly Service Providers and the Twin Falls Chamber of Commerce. Charles was a member of the First United Methodist Church in Twin Falls.

Survivors include his wife Ann of Kimberly; three sons: Dale (Anita) Anderson of Los Gatos, Calif., Keith (Donette) Anderson of Jerome and Clinton Anderson, who is attending college at the University of Idaho in Moscow; one daughter, Karlan (John) Tolson of Jerome; three sisters, Thelma Losh, Leanna Silmet and Eveline Johnson; and many nieces and nephews.

He was preceded in death by his parents; his first wife, Carol Jean; and one brother, Herbert C. (Swee) Anderson.

The funeral will be held at 2:30 p.m. Saturday, March 18, 1995, at White Mortuary in Twin Falls, with the Rev. Dale Metzger officiating.

A private family burial will follow at Sunset Memorial Park in Twin Falls. Friends may call from 4 to 8 p.m. Friday at White Mortuary.

The family suggests in lieu of flowers, that memorials be given to East End Providers, a provider of services to people in need, P.O. Box 4, Kimberly ID 83341; or to the Pets for People Humane Society, Box 1163, Twin Falls ID 83303.

Governor vetoes GOP measure moving funds to local highways

BOISE (AP) — Republican Gov. Phil Batt used his veto stamp on Wednesday to reject a GOP-backed diversion of $5 million in state highway money to cities, counties and highway districts for local road work.

In his first formal confrontation with his partisan allies in the Legislature, the new governor said the cash was the state's portion of the cash used to maintain Idaho's deteriorating highway system.

"The result is that vital new improvements to our state highway system are postponed, sometimes indefinitely," Batt wrote in his veto message.

Although overwhelmingly approved by the House, the Senate majority in favor of the diversion was four votes short of the two-thirds needed to override a veto. Senate consideration of the veto was set for Thursday.

Batt, a former member of the Transportation Board, let stand the release of $5 million from a department reserve for upgrading state roads.

And members of the Senate Finance Committee were preparing last-minute legislation to release the vetoed $5 million for use on state highways as well.

The governor, apparently laying the groundwork for a request next year to increase the fuel tax or registration fees, also vetoed another bill on grounds that it would have siphoned another $150,000 from road work for paperwork. That bill would have allowed people who have sold a vehicle to register with the department so they would not be liable for traffic tickets or other adverse actions of the new owner.

While the purpose is worthy, Batt said, "I believe that they should pay for that peace of mind. It is not the responsibility of the other highway users."

It was the second straight year that local governments, which have fared well in the 1995 session, were denied a piece of the Transportation Department's $20 million reserve that was set up to take advantage of any federal highway money that might be available after lawmakers adjourn.

Batt, a former member of the Transportation Board, let stand the release of $5 million from a department reserve for upgrading state roads.

And members of the Senate Finance Committee were preparing last-minute legislation to release the vetoed $5 million for use on state highways as well.

The governor, apparently laying the groundwork for a request next year to increase the fuel tax or registration fees, also vetoed another bill on grounds that it would have siphoned another $150,000 from road work for paperwork. That bill would have allowed people who have sold a vehicle to register with the department so they would not be liable for traffic tickets or other adverse actions of the new owner.

While the purpose is worthy, Batt said, "I believe that they should pay for that peace of mind. It is not the responsibility of the other highway users."

It was the second straight year that local governments, which have fared well in the 1995 session, were denied a piece of the Transportation Department's $20 million reserve that was set up to take advantage of any federal highway money that might be available after lawmakers adjourn.

New Hansen police officer assumes duties

By Margaret Jones
Times-News correspondent

HANSEN — After several weeks without a police officer, the City Council has hired Jon Cassey.

Cassey and his family recently moved to the area from California where he had worked in law enforcement for several years.

Before the meeting this week, the council and a few residents discussed the city's comprehensive plan. Mayor George Urie expressed his disappointment with the poor turn-out of area residents. He appealed to the group to enlist volunteers. Interested persons are asked to contact the city office.

Committees will be formed to outline a plan for the city's economic development, special land use and special sites and recreation development. The City Council will serve as the steering committee. Residents are asked to express their ideas on questionnaires, which may be obtained at the city office.

In other city business:
• The council is looking for a volunteer recreation director for the summer. Bill Myers has served as the director for the baseball program since 1989 but wants to resign.

• The council accepted Gordon Paving's low bid of $32,000 to pave sections of four streets. After this project, all Hansen's streets will be paved.

• Urie and Fire Chief John Hinton discussed fireworks for the annual July 4 celebration. The past several years the council has bought a $600 display packet, but the packet was getting smaller every year, Urie said. Hinton said he heard some fireworks from businesses willing to contribute to a more elaborate fireworks display.

• Councilman Joe Ratto said the city should have a design contest for Hansen residents with a $50 prize for the winning logo. The award would be presented at the July celebration.

• The council voted to contribute $160,400 towards the insurance for the Quick Response ambulance.

• A rabies clinic for dogs and cats is planned for 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. March 25 in the fire house.

Teen will be tried as adult

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — Prosecutors have decided to charge an Idaho Falls teen-ager as an adult in the Dec. 15 shooting death of his friend.

Frank L. Dana, 15, appeared in court Tuesday on charges of involuntary manslaughter and theft by possession of stolen property.

He was arrested shortly after the shooting that killed Shawn Utchie, 16.

Cassia schools ponder vote

By Kevin Miller
Time-News writer

BURLEY — The failure of a $21.9 million bond issue Tuesday has left Cassia County School District officials without a plan to deal with school overcrowding.

Another bond proposal cannot be submitted for six months. But school district officials are regrouping.

"I'm sure we're looking at throwing together another plan," said Jim Pehrson, Cassia County School District's director of finance. The bond issue proposal got 55 percent of the votes, but failed to meet the two-thirds required for school bond issues.

It would have paid for new high schools in Burley and Declo. At Burley High School, some classes have more than 40 students, school board chairman Kent Fletcher said. The ideal class size is 30 students, he said.

The bond issue also would have paid for additions to the Raft River and Oakley high schools, a new lunchroom for the Declo school, and remodeled the current Burley High School into a Regional Education Technical Center.

"We really didn't have an alternative procedure," Fletcher said.

School officials were not sure what went wrong at the polls Tuesday. Uncertainties in the local economy, including the buyout of Amalgamated Sugar and crop and cattle prices, may have contributed to the bond issue's failure, he said.

"Our philosophy was, this is what is best, why have a plan B," Pehrson said. "We thought we wanted to solve the problem, this (the failed bond issue) is the plan to solve the problem."

At its April meeting, the School Board will discuss some short-term solutions to overcrowding, including portable classrooms, which may require an additional levy, and sending students to other schools, Fletcher said.

"I don't like those options," he added. The board also may re-mobilize its long-range planning committee, which was instrumental in developing the first bond. And it may consider short-term solutions until a 10 year plant facility levy is paid off in three years, Fletcher said.

At that point, property taxes would decrease by $1.65 per $1,000 assessed value, possibly making a bond or levy more palatable to taxpayers, he said.

Injuries claim Burley woman hit by vehicle

By Kevin Miller
Times-News writer

BURLEY — A woman hit by a car near Burley High School died of head injuries Wednesday at Bannock Regional Medical Center in Pocatello.

Marilyn Beecher Thaxton, 48, was pronounced dead early Wednesday afternoon after spending Tuesday night in intensive care, a hospital spokesperson said.

Thaxton was hit Tuesday night by a white Pontiac Fiero driven by Seth Stewart Corless, 76, of Paul. Thaxton and her husband, Gerald Thaxton, who suffered minor injuries, apparently were crossing the street in middle of the block returning from casting their votes on a school bond issue at Burley High School, Corless said.

Corless was on his way to a symphony orchestra rehearsal at the school when he hit Thaxton, he said.

"I didn't see them cross," Corless said in a telephone interview Wednesday. "I didn't see anything until they were right there. I tried to swerve."

Cassia School Board seats open

The Times-News

BURLEY — Cassia County School Board announced that two board positions will be open for election May 16.

Karla Robinson is the incumbent in zone 1, and board chairman Kent Fletcher's zone 2, will be up for election.

Zone 1 comprises from Oakley to the Milner area, and west of Park Avenue in Burley. Zone 2 includes the west side of Burley, from 9th to 27th streets.

In other business, board members announced that the annual superintendent's evaluation will take place at the April 10 board meeting during an executive session.

Board members also reported that the Burley High School academic deathline team placed second last weekend in competition among state high schools.

Woman pleads innocent to beating son; judge lowers bond to $7,500

The Times-News

DECLO — A Declo woman has pleaded innocent to beating her young son with a buggy whip.

Laurie Lynn Allred appeared in Fifth District Court in Burley on a charge of felony injury to a child.

Fifth District Judge George Gramata Jr. lowered Allred's bond from $10,000 to $7,500 following arguments from both attorneys.

She is to have no physical contact with her children.

Allred's lawyer, John Bradley, said the boy is living with his father in North Dakota. Her other two children are with relatives in Utah.

According to a Cassia County Sheriff's Department reports, the department was notified of the case by an officer in the Tremonton, Utah, Police Department, who said two Idaho children were being treated at the hospital in Ogden for child abuse the children said occurred in Declo.

An aunt said Allred suffered an anxiety attack Jan. 12 and was in Utah with family recovering.

During the stay, one of the children told the aunt that the mother had beaten him with a whip and her fist and kicked him.

Making tracks in the wild

By Stu Murrell
Times-News correspondent

JEROME - Deep in the woods, a pine squirrel scurries through the snow, leaving prints that resemble spindly human hands. The track capers merrily across the clean, white surface - then stop abruptly. The spot is marked by a depression with sharp parallel marks, where a hawk's wings have swept the snow.

There's a wildlife thriller written for those who know how to read nature's handwriting. Wild animals tend to be shy of humans, and many are nocturnal - but all of them leave evidence of their comings and goings.

For eyes that know how to see, the enjoyment of time spent afield can be heightened by knowing how to interpret wildlife spoor, or "sign." This is especially true for children, who are naturally curious about what's on the ground.

It's easy to get started with interpreting wildlife sign. Cat tracks, for example, are round with four toes; claws don't appear in tracks because they are normally retracted. They vary in size according to the animal, with tracks from a house cat measuring 1.5 inches by 1.37 inches, and mountain lion prints at 3 inches by 3 inches.

Dogs also have four toes, but their nails are always extended - which is apparent in the tracks. Because of the great variety in breeds, tracks left by domestic dogs are hard to separate from those left by a fox, coyote or wolf.

Snow, mud, dust or sand are prime surfaces for reading tracks. Once you find a set of tracks, hunker down and study them. Play detective.

How old are the tracks? Age is determined by how much the tracks have decayed since they were made. Are the edges crisp? Has any dirt or loose snow blown into the impressions?

How fast was the animal going? Are they deeply dug-in? If so, the animal was running. Are they tightly spaced, or stretched out? That's another clue to pace and gait.

How many animals were there, anyway? Pick out the track of each individual, then compare print sizes. Could it have been a mother with her young?

A wealth of animals leave spoor on the banks of the Snake River. Raccoon tracks look like tiny human

STU MURRELL/The Times-News

No matter how elusive they may be, even wily predators like this bobcat leave tracks behind.

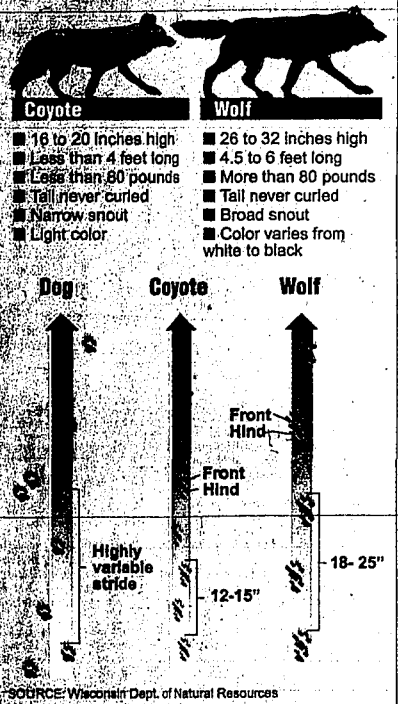

hands with long narrow fingers. Muskrat prints look like a small raccoon's, but also feature a drag mark from their rat-like tail.

Beaver have webbed feet about 7 inches long. Great blue heron prints are about 6.5 inches long, with the "slender" toes pointing forward, and one pointing backward.

Bird tracks are common, and can be separated into different classifications. Game birds - including pheasants, grouse, and chickens - have three stout toes pointing forward. Perching birds have three toes pointing forward, and one pointing backward.

Waterfowl have webbed feet. For the serious student of animal sign, scat (droppings) is just as important as tracks. Examining an animal's scat is the best way to find out what it's been eating.

Comparing wolves, coyotes, dogs

SOURCE: Wisconsin Dept. of Natural Resources

Saint Paul Pioneer Press, Knight-Ridder Tribune/DAVID HARDMAN

Coyotes are famed for the wide variety of their diet. Their scat often contains hair and bones from small mammals, grasshoppers in summer, chokecherry seeds in fall, and the remains of snakes.

Scat comes in all sizes, shapes and colors. Rabbit droppings are small, round, and brownish-tan. Deer, elk and moose are dark elongated pellets.

Tracks and scat are the most obvious clues left by wild animals, but there are other, subtler signs.

Jackrabbits neatly chew through stems, often stripping sagebrush twigs on the ground in winter. Deer and elk rip tender stems, leaving rough, twisted edges behind. Deer, elk and moose antlers are always an exciting find in the woods. What many people don't know is that antlers are partially eaten by the animals that shed them, and by rodents desirous of the minerals stored within. Sharp-toothed rodents leave small, chisel-like gouges on fallen antlers, while members of the deer family grind with blunt molars.

Even burrow entrances offer clues to the inhabitant's identity. A 1-inch hole generally favors mice, while a 3-inch hole is probably home to ground squirrels. Muskrats favor burrows with a 5-inch entry hole, while a 12-inch hole in a river bank probably leads to a beaver lodge.

Don't stick your arm in a 15-inch diameter hole, because you may come up with an obnoxious badger on the end.

There are a number of reference books on the topic of wildlife spoor, with Peterson's "Field Guide To Animal Tracks" among the most common.

A warm wish for spring ... soon

There's something mean-spirited about the end of winter.

Instead of easing gracefully into spring, Old Man Winter is as irascible as a hermit in the path of a proposed new highway. Everyone knows that change is coming - but not until the cantankerous old coot has fussed and fumed himself into a stupor.

Take last weekend. Please. For the second week running, a snow-shoeing trip was called off because the weather looked ominous. Saturday came and went, but I didn't even get my boots muddy.

Sunday would be different, I vowed. Too many hard-won weekends have been squandered; there was a grim need for some fun.

The decision came when a canoeing buddy called Saturday night. The usual suspects were planning a Hagerman run, he said. The rendezvous was set to 10 a.m.

Sunday dawned gunmetal gray with a light breeze blowing - but at least it wasn't raining. There was hope.

The day brightened considerably during the drive to Lower Salmon Dam. There were still plenty of clouds, but there were also clear patches where the sun shone brightly.

Force of Nature
William Brock

At the put-in, each of us had an important decision to make: How many layers of clothing to wear under our drysuits? Of course, the sun was beating down with a vengeance as I donned my padding garb.

Knowing how hot a drysuit can get, I needed down to a single underlayer at the last moment. My friends, one wearing four layers beneath his drysuit, were banking on conditions getting worse.

After a long winter layoff, some of us were a little shaky. There were a few anxious moments as Snake River rolled and swirled, but none of us went bottomless.

OK, I did keel over on a surf wave - surrendering my balance without a struggle. It's happened before in the exact same spot, and I now know the recovery drill by heart. I was in an eddy seconds after the flip, and back in my boat in a wink.

Another colleague came out of his boat in the middle of a long, rocky rapid. He, too, was collected and bundled into a calm eddy.

Far from intimidating, the spills were a good omen. We'd had our out-of-beat experiences, and no one lost their nerve.

The day was warm and forgiving. We pressed on with our voyage.

A couple of us even sought out the biggest hole at Frank Lloyd Wright rapid, emerging upright - but awash to the gunwales with water. We eddied out, emptied out, and paddled up to surf the wave at the top.

All the while, dark clouds were building to the southwest. We couldn't ignore them, so we stopped surfing and boiled for the take-out.

My pals chose a wise line, staying in the main current until they were abreast of the truck - then ferrying over to shore. I chose to sneak along the bank.

I was out of the moving water, but wasn't out of the wind - which roared upstream like an express train. The take-out was still hundreds of yards away, but forward progress was impossible. It was a struggle simply to hold my position.

Rain began to fall in earnest as I stepped ashore.

The outing, which began in began in warm sunshine, ended in a driving squall - with me slipping and falling on slick rocks, ignominiously towing my boat.

The rain slashed down ferociously. The wind rose. The temperature fell.

I began to wish I'd worn the second undershirt. In a deeper sense, I began to wish for spring.

Outdoors editor William Brock refuses to accept that there are two ways to predict Idaho weather - and nobody knows either of them.

British sailor missing for more than 2 weeks in Southern Pacific

The Associated Press

In today's high-powered, big bucks world of yacht racing, Harry Mitchell is a throwback. He doesn't have a sponsor, much less a media spokesman. He is not afraid to put his aging 40-foot boat on the same starting line as the new 60-foot racehorses and face the same wild storms, monster waves and passing icebergs in a round-the-world race.

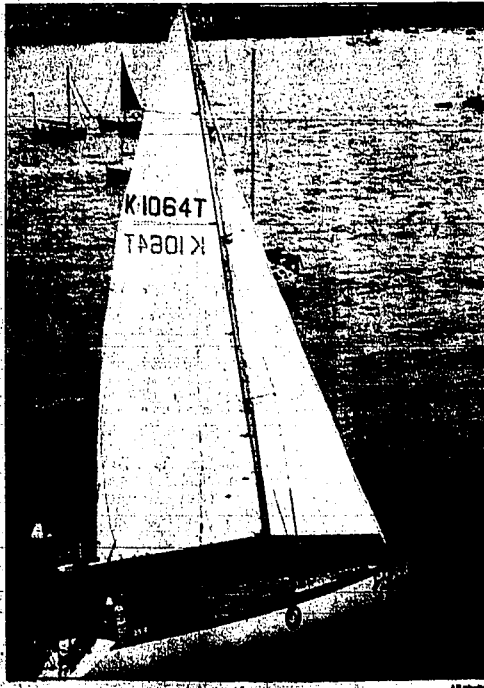

His dream is to sail solo past Cape Horn, the ornery thrust of rock on the tip of South America. That may still be his goal - but no one has seen or heard from the 70-year-old Briton in more than a week.

"I cannot just stop believing that he is all right. I have to be optimistic," his wife Diana told reporters from her home in Soubisea, 55 miles southwest of London. "I do not know when Harry is or whether he will be found. He is in the hands of God now."

Mitchell's emergency radio beacon was activated the night of March 2 and indicated he was about 1,450 miles west of Cape Horn in the frigid waters of the Southern Pacific. It was last heard early Monday morning.

Officials running the BOC Challenge solo race are now hoping against hope that Mitchell is alive, the victim of a freak accident that somehow wiped out his electrical system and knocked one of his two emergency beacons overboard.

A merchant ship, Francisca Schulte, spent several fruitless days scouring the sea this week before heavy winds said 10-foot seas made it too dangerous to continue. On Thursday, the ship headed for its original destination, the southern Chilean port of Punta Arenas, but along a source Mitchell might have taken if he was still drifting.

British yachtman Harry Mitchell pilots his boat 'Henry Hornblower' before the start of the BOC Transatlantic Challenge off Falmouth, England, in July 1994. Officials last detected distress signals from his yacht early March 6.

Snowmobiles banned from ski areas

The Times-News

KETCHUM - The area around Galena Lodge has been closed to all motorized travel to protect a network of groomed cross-country ski trails.

The closure was ordered by Sawtooth National Forest Supervisor Jack Bills. It was necessary because conflicts between skiers and snowmobilers - groups that have gotten along for years - have been on the rise recently, according to a news release from the Sawtooth Forest.

The closed area includes 6,200 acres in the Big Wood River drainage. Traditional snowmobile use in the Baker Creek area is unaffected by the closure.

The closure runs from Nov. 15 through April 30. It will remain in effect until completion of the Big Wood Ecosystem Analysis - which will settle the area's long-term travel management issues.

"The community has poured their hearts and souls into Galena Lodge," said SNRA Ranger Paul Ries. "We need to protect the community's investment as we move forward with the Big Wood Ecosystem Analysis."

The seasonal closure prohibits snowmobiling and all other motorized vehicles without a valid permit. Snowmobile permits will be issued on a case-by-case basis for trail reconnaissance during the ecosystem analysis.

Future snowmobile entry will be determined by the Sawtooth Snowmobile Club, Galena Lodge, the Blaine County Recreation District, and the Forest Service.

The area is laced with a variety of cross-country trails that have been protected for 20 years by an informal, "gentleman's" agreement between skiers and snowmobilers, according to the Forest Service. Forest officials could have closed the area to snowmobilers long ago, but chose not to because the agreement was working.

Rock climbing an uphill battle

Orange County Register

The hottest thing in boulders since the pet rock has arrived and it isn't boulderdash. Honest. People actually compete at climbing a rock.

Indoor rock climbing competitions are starting to take off in America. Crazy as it might sound, the sport is so huge in Europe, the top climbers there are recognized the way Michael Jordan is recognized here.

It probably won't ever be as big in the United States as it is across the Atlantic, but 85 competitors showed up recently at the RockReaction Sport Climbing Center in Costa Mesa, Calif., for the second annual Boulder Blast, proving the interest.

Dan England of Irvine, Calif., has watched the sport grow in the 14 years he has been competing. The Boulder Blast was his 10th indoor event.

"It seems larger every time I do a competition," said England, 27, who won the men's intermediate division. "It brings out the kids in everybody."

There's a lot of camaraderie in it. Every event I've gone to I've known somebody and you get all sorts of support. People I'm competing against are rooting you on. It's a warm, friendly competitive atmosphere."

Competitive without being cutthroat. Sometimes competition can bring out the best in climbers. Take England's girlfriend, Whitney Howard, 31, of Santa Monica. She climbed better than she ever has before at the Boulder Blast, her first competition.

"I think it's the adrenalin rush from being in competition," said Howard, who took third in the women's recreational division. "It's like looking at a puzzle and all of a sudden, you break the code."

Bouldering, the official name of this think-

'It's like looking at a puzzle and all of a sudden you break the code.'

— Whitney Howard of Santa Monica person's sport, is done with climbing shoes on your feet and a chalk bag around your waist. Chalk is used to get a grip.

No ropes are used. Spotters help break falls, as does the rubber floor padding.

In a converted warehouse at RockReaction, a steel caved structure covered with some secret mixture to make it resemble a huge boulder 13½ feet high represented the playing field for the Boulder Blast.

A short series of powerful moves designed to test the climber's strength, endurance and technical efficiency are used in solving a problem, said Mike Mason, the assistant manager at RockReaction who was in charge of the competition.

"A problem can be easy, but for the inexperienced, it can be as difficult a problem as a difficult problem would be to an experienced climber," Mason said.

You start at the bottom and climb the path using all the red (or yellow or any of the other colors used) holds to the end. Several other colored holds overlap the same route, but you can't use those.

The veteran climbers will choose a route then visualize it before starting, they knew their moves.

"It's like athletic chess on a wall," said Elie Von Schuler, 42, of Anaheim Hills, who with son Ryan Crotty, 13, is hooked on the indoor climbing.

Ryan Hunt of Fountain Valley chose a problem rated an 8 that required hanging upside-down for a portion of the route. Hunt, 20, the men's elite winner, was the only one to try it and he succeeded on his first attempt, earning a roar from the small crowd and 80 points for his scorecard.

Rhonda Moore, 21, the winner in women's recreational, received an ovation after reaching, reaching, reaching and finally grabbing a hold. She then pulled herself up toward the finish of the 5-rated route.

"Spectators had watched her fall twice before on the problem so they were rooting for her. Third time was a charm."

"I'm only 4-11," said Moore, who is from Fountain Valley. "I'm one of the shortest climbers here. Things tend to be a little out of my reach."

"See what determination does for me?"

Nordic Club sets food-filled ski tour

The Times-News

Organizers insist the food will be exceptional.

KETCHUM - If you enjoy good skiing and fine dining, then you might be interested in the Sun Valley Nordic Club's gourmet ski tour on Saturday.

The tour will begin at Baker Creek and descend gradually for 13 kilometers to the Sawtooth National Recreation Area headquarters, north of Ketchum. Famed skiers can stop at three food stations along the trail, and the final station - serving coffee and desserts - will be at the SNRA headquarters.

The event kicks off at noon, but participants are advised to meet at the SNRA building at 11:30 a.m. for transport to Baker Creek. Tickets are $22 for holders of North Valley ski trail passes, and $28 for everyone else. The event is a fund-raiser for maintenance of the North Valley ski trail system.

Tickets are available at Backwoods Mountain Sports, the Elephant's Perch, or the Ketchum Sun Valley Chamber of Commerce office. For more information, call Jenny Busden at 726-1649.

Fly-fishing seminar scheduled

The Times-News

lessons on how to cast.

BUHL - A beginning fly-fishing seminar for women is planned for April 15 at the Clear Lakes Country Club north of Buhl.

Instruction will begin with the essentials of fly fishing tackle - rods, reels, lines and leaders - and how to put it all together. Information will be given on what to wear, where to find fish in streams and lakes, and ideas on places to fish close to home.

Knowing how to play, land and release fish, and entomology - the study of bugs - will be covered before lunch. The morning will conclude with demonstrations and Afternoon sessions will be on the water, with a float tube demonstration and actual fishing on the Clear Lakes pond.

Participants should bring their own fishing gear - rods, reels, flies, waders, etc. A limited number of float tubes will be available. Awards will be given for the first, biggest, smallest and most fish caught.

Cost is $15, which includes lunch, a fishing license and instruction. Reservations are required, and registration is limited to 50. For more information, call Mick Hughes at 734-2011, Hazel Ladgallin at 734-2891 or Dena Schlaick at 543-5827.

Comment sought on river recreation commercial walk-and-wade fishing permits have been issued annually from 1990-1994.

KETCHUM - The Sawtooth National Recreation Area is seeking public comment and involvement in the Upper Main Salmon River Environmental Assessment.

The goal is to analyze potential effects of water-oriented recreational activities on the river.

The Salmon River analysis area extends from the Buckhorn Bridge, one mile north of the Sawtooth Fish Hatchery, to Thompson Creek on the northeast boundary of the SNRA, about 25 miles northeast of Stanley.

Four commercial river-rafting companies operate under a special-use permit on the Upper Main Salmon River. They provide half- and full-day river trips, floatbait equipment and guide services. Four

The assessment will analyze the need for and impacts of these permits.

A key issue is the effect of these activities, on salmon species and their designated critical habitat. Endangered Snake River spring and summer chinook, and Snake River sockeye salmon are dependent on this area for continued survival.

People wanting to participate should contact Sal Rinella, project team leader, at the SNRA headquarters by March 24. Interested people will be placed on a mailing list and will receive more detailed information about the project.

Absolut Ski Challenge planned next week

The Times-News

An apres-ski party is set for 4 to 6 p.m.

SUN VALLEY - The Absolut Ski Challenge Weekend Extravaganza is planned for March 23 at the Sun Valley Resort.

Entrants must be 21 years old to participate, and the fee is a $5 donation to The Peregrine Fund/World-Center for Birds of Prey. Registration will be held from 8:30 to noon, with the race beginning at noon at the Warm

More than 250 skiers are expected to compete on a race course of 14 gates to raise funds for The Peregrine Fund/World Center for Birds of Prey. Absolut Vodka will match, dollar-for-dollar, all proceeds from the races.

For more information, call Jennifer Zerner or Lisa Smalikin at (212) 750-7770.

Utah State hoops coach eschews UNLV to stay

LOGAN, Utah — Utah State basketball coach Larry Eustachy signed a long-term contract Tuesday to remain head coach of the Aggies.

Eustachy opted for long-term security over a comparatively lucrative offer from UNLV, Aggies' athletic director Chuck Bell said.

News reports say the Rebels offered him as much as $400,000 a year. The Salt Lake Tribune reported Tuesday that Eustachy was making $125,000 a year at USU, which included his salary, a shoe contract and clinics.

Lobo leads inaugural AP women's All-America squad

Being unselfish doesn't have to mean going unrecognized. Just look at Rebecca Lobo of Connecticut.

The 6-foot-4 senior was the leading vote-getter on The Associated Press women's All-America basketball team released Wednesday — the only player named to the first team on every ballot by a nationwide media panel.

Lobo was joined on the first team by four other seniors — Shelley Sheetz of Colorado, Nikki McCray of Tennessee, Charlotte Smith of North Carolina and Niesha Johnson of Alabama.

This is the first time The Associated Press has selected All-Americans in women's basketball.

Players, owners still quiet while NLRB issues complaint

NEW YORK — Players and owners failed to speak Wednesday about the resumption of strike talks, and the National Labor Relations Board formally issued its complaint against the teams.

Union head Donald Fehr met with about 35 top players in Orlando, Fla., but didn't speak with acting commissioner Bud Selig.

With just 2½ weeks until the scheduled start of the season, players say they are prepared to resume talks, and owners say they had been scheduled for this week at Lake Buena Vista, Fla., but owners canceled them to study the NLRB's complaint.

The NLRB's six-page complaint, announced Tuesday, set a May 22 hearing date before an administrative law judge.

Ticket seekers for Olympics jam up office phone lines

ATLANTA — People clamoring for tickets are burning up the telephone lines at the offices of the Atlanta Olympics, though seats won't go on sale for another six weeks.

Apparently unable to wait until the May 1 launch of ticket sales, hundreds of callers each day are keeping the Atlanta Committee for the Olympic Games phone operators glued to their receivers, barely able to stop long enough for a sip of coffee.

ACOG is not currently counting calls, but Becca Gussell, who runs the phone office, said Wednesday about 900 calls a day, or 60 percent, are about how to buy tickets.

Eagles still golden in Kansas

Freshmen carry the load in 89-78 victory at NJCAA tournament

By Larry Hovey
 Times-News writer

HUTCHINSON, Kan. — So much for experience, maturity and seasoning.

Freshmen Rudy Yoder and Marcus Wallace made the critical plays that carried College of Southern Idaho into Friday night's semifinals of the national junior college men's basketball tournament.

Yoder hit eight straight free throws in the last 80 seconds to pick up Wallace's second half 12-point surge to that point, icing an 89-78 decision over 15th-ranked New Mexico Junior College.

At 6 p.m. Friday, CSI will meet Okaloosa-Walton, which defeated Aquinas, Tenn., 115-81. Okaloosa is a clone of every team at the tournament, very quick and likes an uptempo game.

For most of the night, the Eagles were beaten to every loose ball and most rebounds.

"The big difference here is the quickness, not size," Yoder summarized.

But when it became ultra critical, Shawn Bankhead stepped up to provide late rebounds, key points and a pair of great assists as the Eagles took a 61-60 lead with 6:40 left and held it.

Still, they had only three points to spare with 1:10 remaining when Yoder started his free throw spree.

"I like that," he said of being the man marked by opponents for late fouling.

"I had to put a little body English on a couple.

of being the man marked by opponents for late fouling.

Then, when it got up to seven or eight in a row, I started worrying about percentages," he laughed.

Wallace, the first-night igniter with 7-7 field goal shooting, had a slam and a tip at halftime but didn't make a shot.

"Coach told me to just be intent on the basket, not take it in and try the short fade-away," Wallace said.

He went back to his baseline pull-up jumper and hit six critical shots in the mid-second half when New Mexico was trying to duplicate its first round, second-half crushing of unbeaten Eastern Arizona.

The Eagles had sparked in the opening minutes jumping into an 8-2 lead but the blush left the rose early. Within two minutes, New Mexico was back to within two and the Eagles struggled.

NFL owners reject Rams relocation

The Associated Press

PHOENIX — NFL owners voted down the Rams' move to St. Louis on Wednesday, prompting threats of lawsuits from the team owner and the state of Missouri.

Rams owner George Frontiere called the decision "arbitrary and capricious" and assailed her fellow owners as a "kangaroo court." The owners' insistence on more money from the Rams was at the heart of the overwhelming opposition.

Frontiere said she will meet with team lawyers and St. Louis officials in Los Angeles in the next few days to discuss her options and intimated a lawsuit would be next.

"As I told them in the meeting room, the last chapter has yet to be written," Frontiere said. When asked if she'd consider selling the team to a Los Angeles interest, she said: "Never."

Rams president John Shaw said he was "extremely" confident he could beat the NFL in court.

Missouri attorney general Jay Nixon also said he would file an anti-trust suit by the end of the month if the league turned down the Rams.

But Leigh Steinberg, a player agent who is co-chairman of Save the Rams, called it "a wonderful day for Southern California. We cordially welcome Georgia back."

Twenty-one owners voted against the move and six abstained. Cincinnati and Tampa Bay joined the Rams in voting for the transfer. The Raiders, Seattle, San Diego, Indianapolis, New Orleans and Atlanta abstained. Approval required assent from 75 percent (23) of the owners.

NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue didn't completely slam the door on the Rams' move, but was vague about a next step.

"We're still hopeful we can avoid litigation," he said. "We're not trying to be confrontational. We're trying to be sensible and fair."

The vote ended three days of deliberations on the subject and left St. Louis a three-time loser in the NFL wars.

Ownership problems bogged down the St. Louis expansion effort in 1993, and the city lost out to Charlotte, N.C., and Jacksonville, Fla. The thumbs-down from the owners came in the same hotel where the league approved the Cardinals move to Phoenix in 1988.

While the legal case unfolds, the Rams might have to play next season in Anaheim. Shaw said that was "distinctly a possibility."

"Whatever we have to do, we will do," Frontiere said.

Money was the big holdup to the deal. The NFL had wanted about $25 million of the $74 million in personal seat license money raised by the St. Louis group called FANS Inc. to finance the move. It also wanted the Rams to contribute about $5 million to create a trust fund for a new stadium in the Los Angeles area.

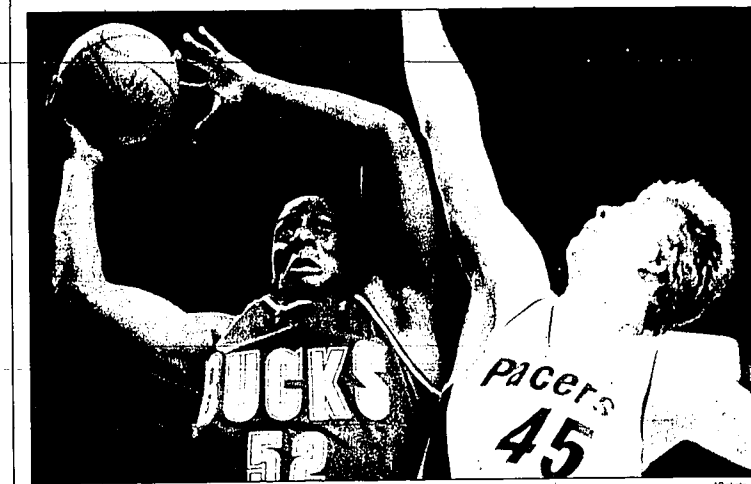

Shaw said the Rams made the league an offer, but didn't specify the terms. A league source said it was about half the desired amount.

"We thought if we put a large amount of money on the table, we could move the ball forward," Shaw said.

The Fox network's concerns about leaving the No. 2 TV market for the 18th also was cited by Tagliabue, who said Fox might demand a rebate if the Rams left. Rams president John Shaw said he was surprised about that, considering that the Rams were last in the league in attendance last year and had all but one of their games blacked out for local TV.

"The Fox situation is really unclear to me," Shaw said. "I thought Fox had no opposition to this several weeks ago."

Rich likely to get richer in NCAAs

The Associated Press

The difference between No. 1 and No. 16 in the NCAA tournament is practically zero — as is there's practically zero chance of an upset.

Colgate, Mount St. Mary's, North Carolina A&T and Florida International are the teams that face the 0-40 mark. No. 16 seeds have in the tournament since it expanded to 64 teams in 1985.

Kansas, Wake Forest, Kentucky and UCLA are the teams that will likely send the bottom four back to their campuses.

"We're college basketball players, they're college basketball players and they do the same things we do," North Carolina A&T's Phillip Allen said of Wake Forest. "There are no super heroes out there. You just go out and play with confidence and history will take care of itself."

Three of the 1-16 games will be played Thursday: Wake Forest vs. North Carolina A&T in the East; Kansas vs. Colgate in the Midwest; and Kentucky vs. Mount St. Mary's in the Southeast. UCLA and Florida International (11-18), the only team in the field with a losing record, play Friday in the West.

"No. 16's ever won, but I've never been in a 1-16 game," first-year North Carolina A&T coach Roy Thomas said. "We're not here on a vacation. I brought two suits just like coach Odum did. We're not here to shake hands; say hello and get back on a plane. There are 240 schools who would like to have my problems right now."

The No. 15 seeds can be only slightly more optimistic. Richmond's victory over No. 2 Syracuse in 1991, and Santa Clara's win over Arizona in 1993 give hope to Murray State, St. Peter's, Tennessee-Chattanooga and Texas Southern.

Colgate, with highly regarded freshman center Adonal Foyles, struggled early against teams outside the Patriot League before the Red Raiders (17-12) won the conference title. Kansas (23-5) rarely faltered in moving to the No. 1 ranking during the season and winning the Big Eight regular-season title.

"We played a tough non-conference schedule," said Colgate guard Tucker Neale, the nation's 18th-leading scorer. "We've seen the best teams in the country, we know how they play."

Street cruises to 6th ski title

The Associated Press

BORMIO, Italy — A lucky streak produced another big victory for Picabo Street on Wednesday. A streak of another kind ended for Alberto Tomba with the title he craved the most.

Street capped a stunning season by winning the women's downhill at the World Cup finals, her fifth consecutive victory and sixth of the year. She clinched the first season downhill championship by a U.S. woman last weekend.

"To tell the truth I was surprised I won today. ... It must be my lucky streak," said Street, who injured her left hand in a practice accident Monday. "I can't wait to get my hand on the crystal bowl."

Tomba, sitting in an easy chair at his home near Bologna, clinched his first men's overall World Cup title. He watched on TV as Marc Girardelli, the only skier who could still catch him, finished 17th in the men's downhill.

"I can celebrate now that mathematics show that I have won, at last," Tomba said by telephone.

Luc Alphand won the men's downhill in 1 minute, 53.50 seconds to claim the season downhill title, to American AJ Kitt runner-up, 29 of a second back in his best downhill performance this year.

Italy's Kristian Ghedina, the downhill leader going into the final race, finished sixth, 0.53 seconds behind Alphand, to finish the season in second place, 11 points behind the Frenchman.

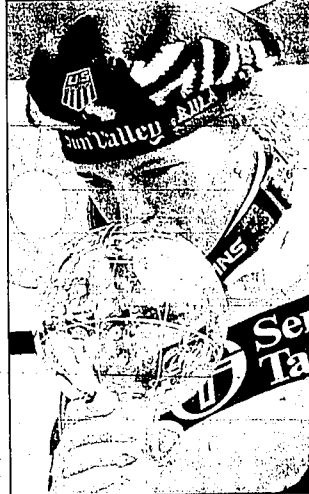

The 23-year-old Street, of Sun Valley, beat Russia's Warwara Zelenkajka by 0.09 seconds with a time of 1:38.41 on the 1½-mile course. Street clinched the United States' first World Cup downhill title Saturday, again beating Zelenkajka in Lenzerheide, Switzerland.

Street and teammate Hilary Lindh of Juneau, Alaska, combined to win eight of the nine downhills this season. Street finished with 709 points, followed by Lindh with 493 and Olympic champion Katja Seizinger of Germany with 445.

Lindh finished fourth Wednesday behind Italy's Barbara Merlin. Megan Gercy of Anchorage, Alaska, finished 13th.

Switzerland's Vreni Schneider, the defending World Cup champion and Olympic slalom champion, placed ninth in a race which is not her favorite one and leads Seizinger by 19 points in the overall standings.

"I can't yell victory yet," said Schneider, who's shooting for her third overall title. "It's a very close battle," the Swiss veteran said.

Picabo Street kisses the trophy she won in Italy for capturing a sixth World Cup title of the season, her fifth in a row.

Nope, not yet No Bull, no signs of Jordan

The Associated Press

CHICAGO — Ron Harper, feigning surprise, wanted to know which M.J. everyone was looking for. "Michael Who?" Harper asked Wednesday as another media horde descended upon a Chicago Bulls practice. "Jackson?"

The gloved one wasn't there Wednesday. Neither was Lisa Marie. And neither was Michael Jordan. It was a just a pre-game shootaround but once again rumors spread across Chicago that maybe this would be the day.

Wrong again. A team spokesman said there would be no announcement. Players denied they were told at a team meeting of Jordan's imminent return.

"Some of the staff is not true at all," said center Bill Wennington. "I haven't a clue. Michael's not here."

Jordan's return to the Bulls, talked about now for a week, is still just that — talk. "We don't know what Michael is going to do. He probably doesn't even know what he's going to do," said guard B.J. Armstrong, echoing a familiar refrain.

In Jordan still waiting until he gets in better basketball shape? Are there hangups in working out a deal?

The NBA players and owners are currently working without a collective bargaining agreement and there is a moratorium on renegotiating contracts.

cent for the night at 7-19 and was 1-5 beyond the three-point line. But Gray made some great inside penetrations to pick up eight points in the first eight minutes of the second half when the Eagles were mounting a 59-49 lead.

But again turnovers and rebounding returned to plague the Eagles along with 6th New Mexico center Doug Beatty who was 8-11 in the second half and wound up with 23 points.

"When I worried the most in when we started the game so well," said CSI coach Steve Irons with a laugh. "I was afraid our guys thought it was going to be easy. But back here you play nothing but winners and they compete the full 40 minutes.

Irons said the rebounding disparity was a surprise. "Their ability to hit the boards was in our scouting report. They had 12 offensive rebounds at halftime and that was basically the reason for the close score."

Similarly, he was frustrated on Beatty's second-half performance.

"We had a good scouting report on him that he always pivots to his right and he continues to let him," Irons said.

Irons said he felt "the two-wing positions were where we had an advantage with Bankhead and Wallace. But this game really belonged to the freshmen. Ever since we inserted Yoder and Wallace into the starting lineup we've become very solid."

Yoder had one last comment on the game, saying, "When teams make their run at us, we don't change anything and eventually they come back to us. We expected that to happen tonight and that's why we never panicked."

Tournament notes - The Eastern Arizona and its 22-0 record coming in here is that four of their five starters are too old to play NCAA basketball. That's a minimum of 24... Vincennes, Ind. is here for the second straight year but didn't bring back a starter. Four were transfers from other schools... There is speculation here that Three Rivers, Mo. will be the team to beat, mostly because the Raiders are the only ones playing decent defense.
