Idaho, feds still talking on nuclear waste issue

Batt

The Associated Press
A seven-hour meeting between Gov. Phil Batt and top federal officials Wednesday failed to produce any agreement on resumption of radioactive dumping in Idaho, but the governor said the door remains open.
"They made progress and they're meeting next week," Batt spokeswoman Amy Kleiner said after talking with Batt by telephone at the close of the closed sessions in Chicago — neutral ground demanded by the state.

Batt declined to detail what progress was made toward meeting his demands that any new waste shipments come in under a reasonable enforceable deadline for the material to be removed to another storage site outside Idaho.
Kleiner said only that next Wednesday's session would take place in Salt Lake City and again involve Energy Department Undersecretary Thomas Grumbley and Adm. Bruce DeMars, the head of the Naval Nuclear Propulsion Program.

But as Batt has indicated before, Kleiner said there remained serious problems with meeting the governor's demand for a way to enforce any deadline for ultimate waste removal if the government — as it repeatedly has in the past — fails to meet it.
"They always come and say the issue is bigger than them," Kleiner said. "It takes administrative and congressional action."

Nine-year-old Jeremy Viveros has his ears measured and photographed two days before surgery to reduce and reshape them.

Rupert boy will have ears fixed

Medicare denied, so doctors will work for free

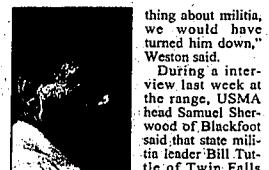

By Julie M. McKinnon
Times-News writer
RUPERT — It wasn't until the last year so that 10-year-old Jeremy Viveros realized his classmates were taunting him about his protruding ears.
Always before the developmentally delayed boy, who apparently didn't receive enough oxygen at birth, thought the name-calling was funny, said his mother, Diana Ortiz of Rupert.

But Ortiz said she knew the verbal abuse about Jeremy's ears, physical size and behavior would eventually harm his self-esteem. So, when Jeremy was 7, Ortiz took him to Twin Falls plastic surgeon Dr. H. Peter Doble II.
"He's going to have enough problems later on," Ortiz said. "It would be nice to take something away that is a problem."
"If you take one noticeable feature and fix it, maybe they won't tease him so much anymore."

Medicaid, however, denied the request for cosmetic surgery to reshape and reduce Jeremy's ears, saying it wasn't medically necessary. A 5th District Court judge and the Idaho Supreme Court affirmed the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare's decision.
But Jeremy will receive the surgery Friday, a gift from Doble and his associates, Drs. Larry D. Maxwell and Mark F. Grefenson. The surgery costs $3,200.

Jerome Gun Club mad at militia association

By H.R. Weixel
Times-News correspondent
JEROME — Gun club leaders say they are upset with the United States Militia Association for staging a target shoot in front of news reporters at the club's shooting range last week.
"The militia did not have permission to be out there and neither did the media," said Jerome Rod and Gun Club Vice President John L. Weston Sr. Wednesday.
Touted as a national training session for militiamen, Friday's shooting practice with human-silhouette targets drew more reporters and photographers than marksmen.
Since then, the club has been battling the unwanted publicity.
"We, the Jerome Rod and Gun Club, want to make it very clear that we do not belong (to) nor support any militia and they did not have approval," Weston said.
Gun club member Max Harkness of Twin Falls had only asked the club president if Harkness could borrow a "couple of target stands to use at the range," Weston said.
But he said nothing about the militia being out there. If he would have said anything about militia, we would have turned him down," Weston said.

Sherwood

During an interview last week at the range, USMA head Samuel Sherwood of Blackfoot said that state militia leader Bill Tuttle of Twin Falls had arranged the target shoot. Tuttle in turn said Harkness had made arrangements.
Harkness could not be reached for comment Wednesday.
A staff of producers and cameramen from ABC-TV's "Good Morning America," representatives from Mademoiselle Magazine, a Seattle video crew, and The Times-News covered the shooting practice.
"If you're going to do a story about our club, we need to know about it before you do it," Weston said Wednesday.
Before entering the shooting range Friday, The Times-News had contacted Bill Tuttle.

Drug may alleviate chocoholics' cravings

The Associated Press
WASHINGTON — What's so bad about being a chocoholic?
Plenty, says Adam Drewnowski, who is hunting for a drug to battle those cravings.
Chocolate is the food most desired by women who binge eat, because of a brain chemical that gives them physical pleasure from the sweet indulgence, says the University of Michigan nutritionist. So he and other scientists are pursuing drugs to block that brain chemical.
"It's possible that we may be able to control the onset of binges," Drewnowski said.
At issue are not just people who need to shed weight, but sufferers of medically defined disorders that cause severe food cravings and huge eating binges, often followed by vomiting or laxatives to fight the resulting pounds. About 1 million Americans, mostly women, suffer from one such disorder, bulimia.
Anti-depressants that affect the brain chemical serotonin offer help to some binge eaters, but not all, and they can cause side effects. So doctors are looking for better alternatives.

Women who binge most desire foods high in fat and sugar — chocolate is the No. 1 urge — while men crave foods high in fat and salt, surveys show.
The brain naturally produces opiates, drug-like chemicals that cause pleasure sensations and are linked to addictions. Animal studies show that these chemicals could be a trigger for sweet, fatty cravings. And consuming such foods made the brain produce even more of the chemicals, as shown in studies of rats given chocolate milk.
When the brain's normal opiate production was blocked, rats chose their normal feed over previously tempting sweets.
Drewnowski tested the theory on 41 women, bingers and normal eaters. They were offered their favorite foods, from pretzels and jelly beans to chocolate chip cookies and chocolate ice cream. Half received injections of naloxone, a drug used to treat heroin overdoses because it blocks brain opiate receptors.

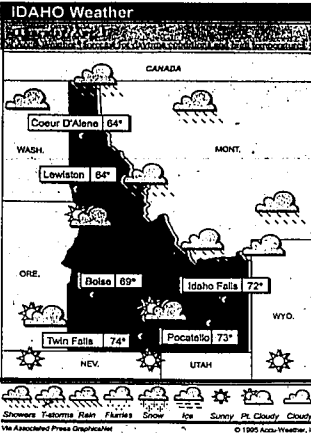

Drive seeks telephone calling area

By William Brock
Times-News writer
TWIN FALLS — Look out, U.S. West, because angry telephone users from Castleford to Shoshone are preparing to ask the Idaho Public Utilities Commission to abolish long-distance calling within Gooding, Jerome, Lincoln and Twin Falls counties.
A petition drive sprang from a meeting of about 40 people in Twin Falls Wednesday night.
Organizers are printing up hundreds of petitions, urging the commission to hold a public hearing on creation of a local calling area within one year. The Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce will print the petitions, said Kent Just, the chamber's executive director.

Petitions could be circulating at the Gooding County Fair this weekend.
The issue is fairness, said one of the organizers, Dan Mink of Jerome. A former attorney turned truck roper, Mink said his phone was disconnected because his bill was too high.
"It's unjust to ask your county sheriff and have it be a toll call," Mink told the crowd.
Others complained it's unfair to be hit with long-distance rates when calling their own county commissioners. Eden residents pay them to call Jerome, which is the county seat; similarly, Buhl residents are hit when calling their county seat in Twin Falls.
Farah Hosman, of Buhl, said her children take music lessons and dance lessons — and it's a long distance call every time they need to be picked up. It's also a toll call when she goes to the store and phones home to ask if there's enough butter.

Another organizer, Jean Duffek of Jerome, said most of today's high-tech computer services arrive by phone lines — and it gets mighty expensive for people to go "on-line."
Internet service isn't available in Jerome, so Jerome High School would have to link with Twin Falls High School to obtain Internet service, said the third organizer, Jerome cabinet-maker Lee Halper. That means taxpayers in the Jerome School District would wind up paying the school's long distance bill.
"We're doing this 911 thing as a region, so why can't we be a phone region?" Halper asked.
Idaho's public utilities commissioners are beginning to consider the statewide issue of long-distance calling inside Idaho, Halper said. The commission is holding a hearing in Boise today to develop statewide standards that will apply to local telephone disputes, he said.
Halper urged anyone with an opinion on the subject to write the commission, urging statewide standards that exempt callers in communities with close ties from paying long-distance rates. Comments about generic standards should be sent to the IPU, P.O. Box 83720, Boise, Id., 83720, with the case number, GNR-T-93-13, printed clearly on the envelope.

negotiating session countered the description of the Chicago meeting as the last chance to work out a deal before the issue would be left to a congressional resolution that most believe will go against Idaho. Idaho Democratic Chairman Bill Mauk blasted the negotiating efforts of the Republican governor. He specifically criticized their secretiveness even though former Democratic Gov. Cecil Andrus held similar secret talks while he was fighting to halt waste shipments to the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory.

"Idaho has nothing to gain from these negotiations," Mauk said. He claimed the governor walked into the talks with no support from the state's GOP congressional delegation that "likes to talk about states' rights but when push comes to shove has folded like a house of cards."

The talks, which began at a lower level two months ago, were prompted by rising congressional support to override a two-year-old federal court order barring any new shipments until a ruling on the state's claim that the Energy Department has yet to prove they can be made safely.

There is already 261 tons of radioactive material stored at INEL, and the government wants to ship another 165 tons — 1,940 shipments — over the next 40 years. About 600 of those shipments involve spent fuel rods from the Navy's nuclear warships.

Having failed so far to convince the courts that it must immediately resume dumping, the Energy Department is responsible for included in any deal — a proposal that opens up the prospect of more shipments to the INEL than under the pending congressional rider, which is limited to Navy waste and lasts for only 12 months.

Batt has pressed for some kind of deal because without it the state will wind up with nothing but more waste. He has been seeking cash to keep waste cleanup going and finance new projects that will keep INEL a part of the Idaho economy.

fight final approval of that rider on the national security budget, officials both inside and outside Idaho agree it will be enacted if pushed to a vote.

The Energy Department, under a 1998 congressional mandate to take care of storage of commercial nuclear waste, has reportedly refused to consider a deal under which the state would accept only the Navy shipments and the other 1,300 on the shipping schedule would have to be stored elsewhere.

Grumbley apparently wants at least some of the Energy Department is responsible for included in any deal — a proposal that opens up the prospect of more shipments to the INEL than under the pending congressional rider, which is limited to Navy waste and lasts for only 12 months.

Batt has pressed for some kind of deal because without it the state will wind up with nothing but more waste. He has been seeking cash to keep waste cleanup going and finance new projects that will keep INEL a part of the Idaho economy.

use individuals if necessary, but only after they had an agreement from our national headquarters and eight to 10 hours of our training," said Rick Mitchell, Red Cross state coordinating manager, in Boise. "Any agreements with groups would be made at the national level. I checked, and there is no agreement with this group."

In a telephone interview Wednesday, Sherwood said, "What we want is to help the Red Cross in case of an emergency, like the hurricane on the East Coast."

Sherwood said his group was available to teach Boy Scouts gun safety, winter survival or rappelling. "We would teach these things in schools too, if we were asked and had state approval. But we don't have the law working yet," he said.

Ito remains as Simpson judge

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Legal reasoning gave way to raw emotion in the O.J. Simpson trial Wednesday as prosecutors abruptly abandoned their bid to remove the judge and the defense accused them of trying to intimidate him.

An outraged attorney Robert Shapiro suggested that the prosecution's aborted attempt to remove Superior Court Judge Lance Ito was "payback" for the judge's brusque treatment of prosecutors in recent days as he prodded them to stop boring the jury.

"(Ito) amounted to prosecutorial extortion of the judiciary," Shapiro said in court. "This is unethical conduct at its highest, and we will pursue all remedies that the law allows."

He said prosecutor Christopher Darden should be reported to the State Bar for voicing displeasure with Ito's rulings, complaining in an off-the-record chambers conference Wednesday morning that Ito was too harsh with prosecutors Brian Kelberg and Marcia Clark.

As each side accused the other of unethical conduct and threatened reports to higher agencies, Ito sat at the center of the whirlwind, calm and determined to move the trial back on track.

"I am very concerned about the cosmetic surgeries for congenital reconstructions, he added. Sometimes cleft lips are repaired just because they look ugly, Doble said.

A full-time bookkeeper who is divorced from Jeremy's father but has since remarried, Ortiz said she was nervous about publicizing her financial situation — but she also wanted Jeremy to get the surgery.

"I really appreciate it because I think it's going to help Jeremy a lot and right now we can't afford it," Ortiz said. "It's not like we were doing it for cosmetic reasons. We were doing it for him and to help his self-esteem."

Jeremy receives Medicaid with his Social Security Administration benefits, which he gets because he is developmentally disabled. When Jeremy was an infant, Ortiz also was on welfare for three years while she attended school.

Ortiz's 5½-month-old twin boys get Supplemental Food Program for Women, Infants and Children vouchers and are covered by Medicaid.

Ortiz said she has the same feelings that many other people do. Some recipients take advantage of Medicaid.

"The people who abuse it make it durability of this jury," Ito said. "We need to proceed to a judgment by this jury."

Moving beyond the issues that had him near tears Tuesday, Ito said he had decided, with agreement from both sides, that he would rule whether jurors should hear any of the tape recordings made of Detective Mark Fuhrman spewing insults and ill will toward minorities.

But Ito said another judge must decide whether Ito's wife, Police Capt. Margaret York, is a material witness. If she is ordered to testify, Ito said he would step out.

Fuhrman reportedly denigrates York, who was his superior officer.

contributing to the death of a plant nursery worker Tuesday in the northern part of the state.

On Wednesday, the heat index — the rating that combines effects of temperature and humidity — reached 127 in Pocatello and 122 in Mary Esther, both in the Florida Panhandle. At least 18 other cities around the state registered heat indexes of 110 and up.

Birmingham, Ala., reached 101 degrees, breaking the 1990 record of 100 for the date. The temperatures also shot up in Georgia, ranging from 90 in Brunswick to 102 at Fort Benning.

Temperatures have topped 90 degrees in Ohio since Friday, contributing to three heat-related deaths in Cleveland and a fourth in a suburb. In Youngstown, the mercury reached 91 degrees Wednesday, breaking the 1987 record of 90 degrees.

Kersey was informed that a newspaper correspondent would go to the range, but nothing was said about her needing permission to be on the property.

In an interview Friday, "Good Morning America" Producer Kathleen Friery said her editor in New York had sent her to Idaho from Texas, and Friery couldn't say whether anyone had talked to the Rod and Gun Club about permission to film the militia shooting practice.

Friery said she also didn't know how her editor got information about the event.

Also during the Friday interview, Sherwood had offered the militia's help to "the city, county, Boy Scouts, Red Cross, or whoever might need us in disaster events."

Rod Lesley, director of the Snake River Area Council of the Boy Scouts of America, said Wednesday: "We would hate to be linked with any militia group. We don't approve nor disapprove of militia groups. And we would not seek militia's help. We would work through federal, state or local authorities. One of the main goals of the Boy Scouts is to teach citizenship and one thing we teach in that is to work through the proper authority."

New ancestor shows earliest evidence of walking upright

NEW YORK (AP) — A fossilized bone discovered in Kenya reveals that the forerunners of humans walked upright about a half million years earlier than scientists had shown before.

The bone shows that about 4 million years ago, a previously unknown ancestor of humans, a hairy creature that probably weighed about 120 pounds, was walking like people, researchers said.

The oldest direct evidence of upright walking had been a set of famous footprints left in wet volcanic ash some 3.6 million years ago in Tanzania.

The new report, in today's issue of the journal Nature, is based on an analysis of an incomplete shin bone from the ancestor, who lived in northwestern Kenya. A number of characteristics suggested to the researchers that the ancestor walked upright.

For example, the shaft of the bone throws less abruptly at the top than it does in a chimp, the researchers said. That suggests it could bear more weight than the shin bone of a creature that used its arms to support itself.

In addition, the bone shows the ancestor lacked the powerful, chimp-like muscles used to climb trees, indicating it spent most of its time on the ground.

The research was done by Alan Walker, a professor of anthropology and biology at Pennsylvania State University. Meave Leakey, head of the paleontology division at the National Museums of Kenya, and others.

The bone is part of a fossil trove representing the species the researchers called Australopithecus anamensis. Researchers say the fossils, discovered between 1965 and 1995, are between 3.9 million and 4.2 million years old.

Dr. Meave Leakey holds the newly found fossils of human ancestors. Discovered in Kenya's Lake Turkana basin, they are jaw and teeth fragments from a new species, Australopithecus anamensis, that lived between 3.9 and 4.1 million years ago.

Eric Delson, a professor of anthropology at Lehman College in New York, agreed the shin bone probably indicates human forerunners walked upright about 4 million years ago.

But he said other fossils had already let scientists make a "pretty good guess" that upright walking was common less than 4 million years ago, though that evidence was not as strong.

Reopened BN rail line may transport waste

YAKIMA, Wash. (AP) — Highly radioactive waste would likely be transported by rail over the Cascades and through central Washington if Burlington Northern Railroad reopens its line through Stampede Pass, state officials say.

"It's a very likely scenario," Dennis

Hamblet, rail freight manager for the state Transportation Department, said. The waste, containing bomb-grade uranium, would come from the Port of Tacoma, one of 10 U.S. ports the Energy Department is considering as an entry point for foreign spent nuclear fuel.

New rules target auto head injuries

WASHINGTON (AP) — Improved head-injury protection will be required in cars and light trucks starting in the 1999 model year. The changes could save more than 1,000 lives a year, an official said Wednesday.

Transportation Secretary Federico Peña said the regulation will help prevent injuries that occur when people strike their heads on the hard, upper interior parts of vehicles.

All occupants of a vehicle, including those in the rear seat, are included in the rule. It covers such things as pillars, side rails, roof and front and rear headrests. Exempted are frames for convertible roofs and for sunroofs.

The new rule does not specify how vehicle makers are to improve head-injury safety. Instead, it specifies that upper components must pass the same test requirements as dashboards and other items already regulated.

"This is the best auto safety news since the requirement for dual air bags," said Judith Lee Stone, president of Advocates for Highway and Auto Safety. Her group had campaigned for the rule.

The requirement will save up to 1,200 lives and prevent an estimated 975 serious injuries annually, said Dr. Ricardo Martinez, administrator of the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration.

The requirement will be phased in starting Sept. 1, 1998, when 10 percent of new automobiles, light trucks and sport utility vehicles will have to meet the standard.

The requirement will increase to 25 percent in 1999, 40 percent in 2000, 70 percent in 2001 and 100 percent on Sept. 1, 2002.

Martinez estimated the cost of the improvements at about $33 per automobile and $51 per light truck.

Current standards for cars and light trucks require protection against injury from components such as the steering wheel, seat back and instrument panels.

TV anchor Swayze dies at the age of 89

SARASOTA, Fla. (AP) — John Cameron Swayze, a pioneering television journalist who later delivered the famous line "It takes a licking and keeps on ticking" in Timex commercials, is dead at 89.

The newscaster and announcer with the folksy voice died Tuesday at his home.

After becoming host of the 15-minute "Camel News Caravan" on NBC in 1949, Swayze became one of the first popular TV personalities.

The show, sponsored by Camel cigarettes, was the forerunner of the modern newscast. It replaced a straight newsreel format with live shots, interviews and commentary.

Iowa straw poll draws all the Republican candidates — and more

AMES, Iowa (AP) — It's only a straw poll. But this is Iowa, just months before presidential caucuses. And the Republican event has taken on major importance among the candidates, who desperately want to be in the winner's circle when the results are announced Saturday night.

The straw poll is the culminating event of a daylong Republican shindig. Buy a $25 ticket, you get to vote. So there has been a frenzy of ticket buying (up to 8,000) by the candidates, who may have to scramble to find enough warm-bodies to match with tickets.

Iowa Republican Chairman Brian Kennedy

breathlessly describes it as "the largest Republican event in the nation" this year. That may be overstatement, but virtually all of the candidates are running around Iowa this week drumming up support. Many of their organizations are chartering buses and dreaming up attractions to lure supporters to a basketball arena for Saturday's voting.

Movie star Charlton Heston and football's Mike Ditka are among those attractions. Former Vice President Dan Quayle will be on hand to referee, and there's enough rhetoric to satisfy any activist.

"There may even be paratroopers coming in from somewhere for all I know," chuckled former Tennessee Gov. Lamar Alexander, who is planning country music as a lure.

Paratroopers or not, all of the major candidates have said they plan to be on hand. More than 100 journalists are signed up to cover the event.

"This straw poll is so important that everybody is going to be looking at it," said former television commentator Robert Buchanan.

Still, there's a good deal more political theater than electoral significance at stake in what's essentially a money-raiser for the Iowa Republican Party.

Activists from Iowa — or wherever else they happen to live — pay $25 for tickets to listen to hours of speeches and cast votes for their favored presidential candidates.

A similar event during the 1988 election cycle was one of the first public signs of the strength of television evangelist Pat Robertson and his religious conservative backers. Robertson stunned party regulars by announcing Bob Dole and George Bush in the straw poll.

It is not a scientific sampling of those who will attend precinct caucuses next February to begin the process that will yield a Republican presidential nominee.

Bearing witness to that, one of the stronger showings could come from a maverick businessman who most Americans don't even know is running for president. Morry Taylor, wealthy head of Quincy, Ill.-based Titan Wheel International, has been driving around Iowa for weeks in a caravan of motor homes campaigning for the GOP nomination.

He's pledged to spend $5 million of his own money and apparently has used some of that to buy tickets to Saturday's event. Aides are tight-lipped, saying only "a lot" when asked how many tickets Taylor has bought.

Bill Bradley to retire from Senate

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Calling the nation's political system "broken," Sen. Bill Bradley announced Wednesday he will not run for a fourth term next year.

He becomes the sixth Democrat retiring from the Senate.

Bradley said he will not leave public life and will continue to speak on public issues, but was not specific about his future plans.

"We live in a time when, on a basic level, politics is broken," Bradley said. "In growing numbers people have lost faith in the political process and don't see how it can help their threatened economic circumstances."

Surrounded by his family as he made the announcement to friends, supporters and reporters here, Bradley, 52, thanked voters who sent him to the Senate for three terms but said the time had come to leave.

"It's possible to lead from the Senate and to make a difference in peoples' lives. I've tried to do that. But I've concluded that the U.S. Senate is not the only place to do either of those two things," Bradley said.

The Democrat made clear that he was not happy with election of either party on the national scene.

"The Republicans are infatuated with the magic of the private sector and reflexively criticize government as the enemy of freedom, and the Democrats distrust the market, preach government as the answer to our problems, and prefer the bureaucrats they know to the consumer they can't control," Bradley said.

Earlier this year, Bradley had left open the door to challenging President Clinton in next year's primaries, and he criticized the president repeatedly on issues from Soviet policy to the budget. But at a news conference on condition of anonymity, said today that Bradley would not run against Clinton. Bradley did not mention the presidential race in his remarks.

Clinton called Bradley before his announcement this morning and the White House later issued a statement saying Bradley "has been a voice for civility and will be greatly missed."

Bradley had been mentioned as a presidential contender the last two elections.

His sudden retirement further fades Democratic hopes of regaining the Senate in 1996.

Five Democrats have already said they are retiring: Paul Simon of Illinois, David Pryor of Arkansas, Bennett Johnston of Louisiana, James Exon of Nebraska, and Howell Heflin of Alabama.

1st HEW head Hobby dies

HOUSTON (AP) — Oveta Culp Hobby, the first secretary of health, education and welfare, and the woman who ensured the Women's Army Corps was taken into service during World War II, died Wednesday at her home. She was 90.

Mrs. Hobby suffered a stroke April 17 and had been ill for a long time, said Saralee Tiede, a spokeswoman for Mrs. Hobby's son, former Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby.

On top of her work for the federal government in both Democratic and Republican administrations, she was a key executive in The Houston Post and other family enterprises.

Mrs. Hobby was helping her husband, William P. Hobby Sr., run the Post when in 1941, she was named head of the War Department's Women's Interest Section and moved to Washington.

After the war, she returned to Houston and helped run her husband's television station KPRC.

She remained active in politics, and in 1963 President Eisenhower's friend from her Army days, named her head of the Federal Security Agency. Later, the agency was renamed the Department of Health, Education and Welfare and its secretary made part of the Cabinet.

Study links overeating to brain

NEW YORK (AP) — Dieters may be driven to overeat because of low amounts of a key chemical in the brain that suppresses appetite, a study suggests.

Serotonin is made in the brain with a building block called tryptophan, which the brain gets from the bloodstream.

The new study suggests that dieting short-circuits the brain on tryptophan delivery, reducing the production of serotonin.

The shortfall in serotonin could give dieters the urge to overeat, said researchers at Littlemore Hospital in Oxford, England. The researchers describe their study in Thursday's issue of the journal Nature.

Twelve healthy women were tested before and three weeks after starting a diet of 1,000 calories a day.

The women had lower levels of tryptophan when dieting. Structures in the brain that respond to serotonin were more sensitive, suggesting there was less serotonin available.

In a dieter, the brain senses that those structures, called receptors, aren't getting enough serotonin and tries to fix the problem by creating urges to eat, said study co-author Dr. Elizabeth Clifford.

Drugs that suppress appetite by acting on the receptors are already in use, but scientists may be able to find better ones, she said.

Sarah Leibowitz, a neurobiologist at The Rockefeller University in New York, who studies how the brain controls appetite, said there may be more to why dieters feel an urge to overeat than serotonin production.

Animal studies show that restricting food also alters many other brain systems, Leibowitz said, and more research is needed to find out how important each system is in producing eating urges.

X-ray test can show faulty heart valves

BOSTON (AP) — An X-ray test can help doctors decide whether potentially defective artificial heart valves implanted in 45,000 people worldwide are likely to break and should be replaced.

The exam is intended for people who carry one brand of heart valve, widely used during the 1980s, that is prone to breaking apart, a disaster that is usually fatal.

"There has been no way to predict whether that will happen," said Dr. William P. O'Neill. "Patients have been living on the edge of their seats for years wondering whether their valve will go."

Just what to do for people with these valves has been a dilemma. About 1 percent of the valves break each year. However, doctors are reluctant to take them out as a precaution, since the replacement surgery itself is fatal in 3 percent to 5 percent of cases.

The new exam can spot a structural defect that often precedes complete failure of the valve. Doctors can then replace the valve before it breaks.

The device, called the Bjork-Shiley Convexo-Concave mitral valve, was implanted in 86,000 people between 1979 and 1986. About 45,000, one-third of them in the United States, are still alive.

So far, the valve has broken in 572 people, killing two-thirds of them.

O'Neill and colleagues at William Beaumont Hospital in Royal Oak, Mich., tried the new detection method on 315 patients. A report was published in Thursday's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

The work was financed by the valve's maker, Shiley Inc., a subsidiary of Pfizer Inc.

The valve pivots on a tiny wire strut, and a defective weld can make the strut snap. The strut has two legs, and often one leg breaks before the other.

The new test uses a high-resolution X-ray technique called cineradiography to look for a broken strut leg. The doctors assume these valves are at high risk of breaking completely.

New senator has much to prove in a short time

The Magic Valley's newest state senator has a well-regarded record of service to the Idaho Republican Party. But he'll face a new set of challenges in serving the 22nd Senate District.

Sandy

Sen. John Sandy of Hagerman was appointed recently to fill Joyce McRoberts' seat after she resigned for a state administrative job. He'll represent western Twin Falls County and a corner of Gooding County.

Republican notables, both state and local, all praise him. Thanks to an independent income, Sandy has been free to work long hours for the state GOP. Party Chairman Randy Smith says Sandy has been his fireman, dispatched to doze internal disputes around the state.

But now, instead of being the mediator from headquarters, Sandy will be answerable to voters. The electorate is always a cranky boss, but Sandy faces special challenges.

First, his base of support is narrow. The governor picked him based on an endorsement from the local central committee — 23 people. With six candidates in the race, the winner needed only a handful of votes. (We heard Sandy got seven.) As the lone Gooding County candidate, he probably collected three from the Gooding County delegation, thanks to parochial, hometown loyalty. With the Twin Falls County voters fragmented six ways, Sandy had an easy advantage.

That kind of arithmetic works in inner-circle politicking, but it leaves in question whether Sandy has the support of voters in western Twin Falls County, where the bulk of his district lies.

That's his second problem. Most of Sandy's new constituents don't even know him. More importantly, he may not know many of them. Folk in Buhl, Filer and Twin Falls may feel uneasy about being represented by someone from the north side of the river.

Sandy's unusual living arrangement could compound this problem. His residence is Hagerman, his wife's is Boise, and some voters may ask where his heart is. This question is not lethal to politicians; Bruce Newcomb and Celia Gould are husband and wife, and they successfully represent districts at opposite ends of the valley. Still, it can be tricky.

None of this suggests Sandy will be a bad senator. It does mean he'll have to prove himself. Between now and year's end, he needs to cruise the district, making himself known to his new constituents and learning about their concerns. Come January, when the Legislature opens, he must scramble to learn the Statehouse ropes — while staying in touch with folk back home.

If he doesn't do these things, and perhaps even if he does, he could be vulnerable to a primary challenge next spring. Any number of Twin Falls County Republicans will covet that seat.

On paper, Sandy has all the credentials to be a good senator. But if he wants to be one after 1996, he mustn't waste any time proving he will represent the whole district, not just the Gooding County precincts from which he comes.

'Jane Roe' again exercises right to choose

Norma McCorvey, the "Jane Roe" in Roe vs. Wade, the U.S. Supreme Court landmark decision that legalized abortion, recently announced that she has become a born-again Christian and is opposed to abortion.

Operation Rescue and other anti-abortion groups tout this as a devastating blow to those who support reproductive freedom. Their political posturing about McCorvey's decision is a clear indication that they have never truly understood the meaning of the pro-choice movement.

McCorvey's decision personally to oppose abortion is a validation, not a condemnation, of the pro-choice movement. We respect the right of every woman to make an individual choice about abortion based on her religious, moral and ethical beliefs. The decision whether to terminate a pregnancy or to carry a pregnancy to term is a private one that should be left to the woman in consultation with her family and her doctor, without government intrusion.

In 1973, McCorvey made her decision to terminate a pregnancy based on her personal situation. The government of Texas said that she had no right under state law to make that decision. Thus,

Marcela Howell

Roe vs. Wade began. But Roe vs. Wade isn't about any single person. It is about the freedom of all women to make reproductive decisions. Roe empowered women and enabled them to make family planning decisions that had not been available at that time. During these past 22 years, women have had access to accurate family planning

McCorvey's decision personally to oppose abortion is a validation, not a condemnation, of the pro-choice movement.

information and quality reproductive health care. This could not have happened without Roe, and Roe could not have happened without McCorvey. Anyone in the pro-choice movement must respect McCorvey's courage during a difficult time in her life that paved the way for American women. But people's political and religious views change. So we must also respect her right to change her position 22 years later. Many women who have opposed abortion have changed their views when they or a loved one has faced a crisis pregnancy. Under Roe vs. Wade, McCorvey has the right to support or oppose abortion, just as all women have. Her view on abortion today is a personal one. That is the true meaning of the pro-choice movement.

With so many men heading anti-choice organizations, Operation Rescue and others have been searching for a woman to display.

In McCorvey, they may have found someone to exploit for political gain.

I hope that in her new belief, McCorvey will respect the exceptional plight of other women who face crisis pregnancies and choose to exercise their rights to have an abortion. I hope that she will remember that 22 years ago, government refused to recognize her plight and took control of her body out of her hands. I hope that she does become a new in the national right's attempts to erode women's reproductive freedom.

Jailers don't consider well-being

I am locked up in the Twin Falls County Jail and forced to eat with a plastic spoon so I don't hurt someone or someone doesn't stab me, and my shoelaces are taken away so I can't hang myself. Why? Because we are "in custody" and the county is responsible for my welfare.

If the sheriff is so concerned about my well-being, why are my medical needs taken so lightly? The sheriff receives $130 per day for each inmate for our needs (food, medical, etc.) but yet the sheriff takes money from our accounts without our permission.

Before I was incarcerated, I was going to my doctor daily for an excruciating pain in my back and hip and was prescribed the medications, Magesic Noray and Vicaden. Since I have been in jail, I have been to the nurse three times for my pain and have been refused medication three times. I have asked to go to an outside doctor or to call my doctor in Mountain Home, but these requests were denied also, so I lie in bed and suffer.

Another way we are cheated is that the sheriff charges us outrageous prices for medication. If an inmate is indigent, he is not charged, but if we have any money at all in our account, the sheriff takes it. Some of the prices for medication are $7 for 14 aspirin and $9 for 15 ibuprofen. The nurse that comes in here gets $18 per hour.

Now you tell me which side of the bars the criminal is on.

Sports story just told the facts

I am writing this letter to commend Sports Editor Brad Bowlin on his well-written article on July 30 concerning the Burley vs. Marsh Valley baseball game.

As a sportswriter, Brad reported exactly what happened that day. There were 10 excellent innings of baseball played with a controversial call in the 10th inning. A poor sportswriter would have let his own personal feelings get involved. Brad could have reported that Roger Moore struck by his original call until he was pushed and shoved by a number of Marsh Valley players and coaches.

I felt sorry for Roger Moore when he was being pushed and shoved around, but now that he is making excuses and blaming Brad Bowlin, I feel even more sorry for him. As a coach, I teach my players to take responsibility for their actions on and off the field, don't blame others and never make excuses.

I don't know if Brad graduated from as prestigious a school as Roger Moore and John Struchen, but I do know he is man enough to print the facts as they happen. Thanks again, Brad, for just doing your job.

Can't stand the heat? Welcome to the future

Earlier this summer, 500 people died during an unprecedented Chicago heat wave; last month, Russian scientists reported that venomous snakes had appeared for the first time in the far north, apparently driven by a warming environment; earlier this month, a British team predicted that 1995 will be the warmest year in human history.

What's odd is not the heat — that's precisely what scientists concerned about global warming have been predicting for nearly a decade. What's odd is that no one seems to be paying attention to anything except local weather forecasts and air-conditioner ads. Certainly not to the greenhouse effect.

This summer's heat should have done it: Not only has it been widespread and deadly, it also fits perfectly with the predictions made by the global climate models that first caused widespread alarm.

As early as 1988, when he set off the greenhouse debate with testimony before Congress, NASA scientist James Hansen said that during the mid to late 1990s the warming should become visible to "the man in the street."

Since then, we've had a brief two-year cool-down, thanks to the eruption of Mount Pinatubo in the Philippines, and then a steady reheating of the atmosphere. This year, says Hansen, will quite likely beat 1990 for the world's hottest-ever year.

No one can say for certain, of course, that any particular heat wave comes from the increased carbon dioxide that our fuel-burning civilization has been adding to the atmosphere — climate is a noisy and variable system.

But one can say that this is precisely what global warming is supposed to look like in its early stages, and that it is precisely the sort of weather we can expect to see more of in the years ahead — lots more, unless we begin to take dramatic steps to deal with the problem.

Why then the quiet response to one of our first real tastes of the most important environmental problem we face as a planet?

For one thing, a small band of industry spokesmen and ideologues have fought long and hard to discredit the notion of global warming. Rush Limbaugh leads this band of what some researchers have called "confusionists," citing inaccurate and misunderstood statistics to bolster his claim that it's all a left-wing fantasy.

So even though, in the words of Environmental Defense Fund researcher Michael Oppenheimer, the "vast majority" of climate scientists now agree that the phenomenon is inevitable and serious, the public is persuaded that it's an open scientific question, something still up in the air.

There's a deeper reason, though, that we avoid this issue, and that's because all the answers to it are difficult and painful. Wrong as he is about the science, Limbaugh is right about the political meaning of global warming: Solving it will require enormous changes in how we conduct our lives.

It's not like smog, where a new filter or a new regulation will do the trick. Carbon dioxide is an inevitable byproduct of burning fossil fuels, so the only way to control it is to stop that burning. A U.N. panel estimates that we need an immediate 60 percent reduction in global fuel use to stabilize the climate.

That's not to say there aren't answers. New technologies will provide some help — renewable energy sources, for instance, that the government could help spur by raising the price of oil, gas and coal.

Even more important, however, are changes in behavior. We may need solar cars, but we definitely need a transit system that elevates trains and buses and bicycles above automobiles and airplanes. I've been in Third World cities where great bus service has cut per capita fuel use by a third — that's a pretty big start on the road we need to follow.

Some combination of hope and fear will have to propel these changes. At the moment, though, we have alarmingly little of either.

Forget metaphors — we're exactly like that famous frog in the pot of warm water. It's getting hotter and hotter, but so far we're paying no attention.

Bill McKibben's new book, "Hope, Human and Wild: True Stories of Living Lightly on the Earth" (Little Brown) will be published in October. He wrote this commentary for the Los Angeles Times.

Lugar speech on nuclear threat takes center stage in Dallas

WASHINGTON—Three interesting things happened before, during and after a weekend's political festival at the Dallas meeting of Ross Perot's United We Stand.

Beforehand, people paid $135 for the right to be in Dallas in August to hear about three dozen political speeches. It was a 19th-century sort of event, an echo of an era before electronic entertainment and big-time professional sports and other modern pastimes, when rhetoric was central.

And it was roundly panned in advance by moralists spanning the political spectrum. They said the politicians, especially Republican presidential candidates, who would go to Dallas would be pandering to Perot. Oh? When candidates address, say, the NAACP, are they "pandering" to NAACP leadership, or addressing a significant segment of black America?

The moralists may consider Perot voters as those voters do exist. In fact, Perot's constituency—more precisely, those who in 1992 found him more convincing than the two major parties—was then almost one-fifth of those voting. They produced the largest support for an independent candidate since 212, when Theodore Roosevelt received 27.4 percent of the vote.

Perot voters comprise the largest bloc of voters up for grabs in 1996.

Children mean very little in today's education debate

MINNEAPOLIS—Public education is increasingly regarded as so beyond repair that the governors of Minnesota and Wisconsin are proposing to empower parents so they, not the state, might decide where their children should be educated.

Minnesota Gov. Arne Carlson is asking his legislature to pass a school-choice measure by next year. Wisconsin's legislature, thanks to the persistence of Gov. Tommy Thompson, has already passed such a measure. The Wisconsin Supreme Court will soon decide the constitutionality of using state funds for private schools, including religious ones.

Cal Thomas

While both governors acknowledge that schools are not the only solution to improving the lot of young people, especially in urban areas, they believe what goes on in the classroom can make a significant contribution. Thompson cites the pathetic record of Milwaukee schools as an example. Nearly half of Milwaukee students don't graduate from high school, and those who do have a D-minus average. Thompson believes that poor parents should have the same opportunities to educate their children as those financially better off.

But the debate isn't about education. It is about controlling the minds and hearts of the next generation and forcing children to accept a worldview held by those who draft the curriculum and write the textbooks. Most parents don't share this view, but they are usually dismissed and branded "censors" or "bigots" or "anti-intellectual."

Over the July 4 weekend, the National Education Association (NEA) held its annual convention in Minneapolis. According to the publication Education Reporter, dozens of resolutions were approved that had nothing to do with the intellectual development of children. At least five resolutions indicate the NEA's antagonism toward parents who make private or homeschool choices. At least 15 resolutions were passed that deal with the sexual orientation issue. The NEA adopted the feminist agenda, the environmental rights' agenda and even passed resolutions calling for District of Columbia to give taxpayer benefits to illegal aliens, a national holiday honoring Cesar Chavez, ratification of the U.N. Treaty on the Rights of the Child and a change in the purpose of Thanksgiving to replace giving thanks to God with a celebration of "diversity."

In a recent speech, Gov. Thompson said: "Public schools must no longer be government-run schools. They will be schools that serve the public. School choice is more than a program. It is a philosophy. It is the belief that parents know best when it comes to their children."

Thompson has hired Whitewater Special Counsel Kenneth Starr to argue the constitutionality of his proposal before Wisconsin's Supreme Court. Meanwhile, the verdict is already in on the state of government-run education. If Minnesota and Wisconsin can win court approval, the government schools as we've known them for a century will be transformed. They will reflect the will of the people,

George F. Will

Why should candidates not seize a chance to address them, particularly considering candidates routinely cultivate the affections of groups?

The interesting occurrence during the convention was the delivery of a speech deserving of the designation "presidential." It was by Sen. Richard Lugar, the Indiana Republican, and was about a subject people would prefer not to think about.

What was interesting after the event was that next to nothing was reported about his seven-page speech, other than cursory references to his six opening paragraphs, which reiterated his promise to abolish the IRS and taxation of income.

The rest of his speech concerned the possibility that an American city will be destroyed. He said:

"The Oklahoma City terrorism killed 168. Had the World Trade Center bomb destroyed the building's structural foundation, 30,000 might have died. Nuclear terrorism is 'but one small step' away and is becoming more probable because of 'grossly inadequate' control of fissionable and the needs of the nation and its children, and not that of a tiny elite who think they, and only they, know what is best.

nuclear materials in the last three years. Last year, a pound of plutonium material in the former Soviet Union.

According to Lugar, between 1991 and 1994, the German government detected at least 350 instances of attempted nuclear smuggling. There have been 60 seizures of material in the Munich airport, and six pounds of highly enriched uranium were seized from a parked car in Prague.

When Kazakhstan asked the United States to remove and store their highly enriched uranium, our government recovered 104 percent of the inventory. "Consider," says Lugar, "the implications of a 4 percent error margin in Russian inventory accuracy."

A relatively simple weapon of a well-known design, using a bit more than 100 pounds of highly enriched uranium, could produce a 15-20 kiloton blast. (The Hiroshima bomb was 12.5 kilotons.) A quantity of plutonium the size of a grapefruit could produce a simple weapon.

Lugar warned his listeners that nuclear material removed from dismantled Russian missiles poses a greater danger than it did when it was in warheads. The leakage of such materials from secure controls, he said, "must be considered the greatest threat to national security." The next president must put this at the top of the nation's agenda because "nothing threatens the lives of American citizens more than unsecured nuclear material and weaponry in the hands of Third World fanatics and terrorist groups."

Lugar's speech struck a note in Dallas where most speakers told the audience that the biggest danger to the nation is Congress or President Clinton or taxes or deficits or NAFTA or something else. But Lugar's speech was respectful of the audience, and perhaps was presidentially shrewd.

With the Republican Congress controlling domestic policy, can Republicans defeat Clinton by talking almost exclusively about domestic policy and promising that life will be markedly different under a Republican presidency? How so? Just because of deeper cuts here or there in spending or taxes?

We shall see. Meanwhile, next time journalists lament that candidates are not as serious as, well, journalists, remember how few of them reported Lugar's speech.

Device May Increase Gas Mileage by 22% TEST DATA

BOSTON - National Fuelsaver Corp. of Boston has developed a simple automotive accessory, called the Platinum Gasaver, that increases gas mileage by 22% and meets all federal and state emission standards.

The Gasaver, which takes only ten minutes to install, releases microscopic quantities of platinum into the air-fuel mixture entering the engine.

Platinum has the unique ability to make unburnt fuel burn. With platinum in the flame zone, you increase the percentage of fuel burning in the engine from 68% to 90%.

Normally that 22% of the fuel would only burn when it came in contact with the platinum coated surfaces of the catalytic converter.

Unfortunately, the converter process takes place outside of the engine, where the energy produced cannot be harnessed to drive the vehicle.

But with platinum in the combustion chambers, 22% more of each gallon burns inside the engine so that 22% fewer gallons are required to drive the same distance.

After studying this process for five years, the government concluded: "The developer and various independent parties have used a variety of methodologies to test the value of the Gasaver.

The independent parties often make stronger claims for the Gasaver than does its developer."

Besides saving fuel, the Gasaver has been granted two additional patents: one for raising the octane of gasoline, the other for reducing smoke and NOx from diesels.

Joel Robinson, the developer, commented: "We've already sold over 250,000 Gasavers. Ironically, we find more people buy the Gasaver for its fourth benefit of cleaning out carbon to extend engine life than buy it for its fuel saving ability."

China expels Greenpeace protesters after interrogation

HONG KONG (AP) — China expelled six Greenpeace activists Wednesday after holding them for 30 hours and questioning them about their bold anti-nuclear demonstration in the heart of Beijing.

Arriving in Hong Kong, they said they were interrogated for about 12 hours, sometimes loudly, but were not maltreated. A Chinese statement said they apologized, but the environmentalists denied this and promised to keep up their campaign against China's nuclear testing.

Chinese guards raced up seconds

In an audacious job at the main nerve of the Communist state, the six Westerners lined up Tuesday under Mao Tse-tung's portrait at Tiananmen Square and unfurled a banner demanding a halt to nuclear later, ripped down the banner and detained the protesters as they produced smaller posters from their pockets.

It was the first time Greenpeace has openly taken its worldwide environmental campaign into China, where demonstrating without a permit is illegal.

Tiananmen Square is an especially sensitive location for protests because it was the center of the 1989 pro-democracy movement, which ended in bloodshed that left hundreds, perhaps thousands dead. Any demonstration there, especially by foreigners, is bound to alarm the authorities.

The Greenpeace group told reporters that during their interrogation, first at a police station and later at a government building, they were asked repeatedly if they had Chinese accomplices.

"We think this was their main concern. But we assured them that this has been completely prepared in Europe and that no Chinese person in China was involved," said Thilo Bode, the 48-year-old German who led the group.

Harald Zindler, 51, also a German, said his interrogators refused to believe he had copied the Chinese characters onto the banner by himself, insisting their quality proved they were drawn by Chinese accomplices.

Joe Keller, 47, of Seattle, said the Chinese grew angry whenever he denied having inside help. "When we would tell them that there were no Chinese citizens involved they would get upset, yell, stand up ..." he said.

Malaysia rejects 24-hour TV

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — Malaysia has rejected around-the-clock television, saying it could lead to obesity and lower work standards among viewers.

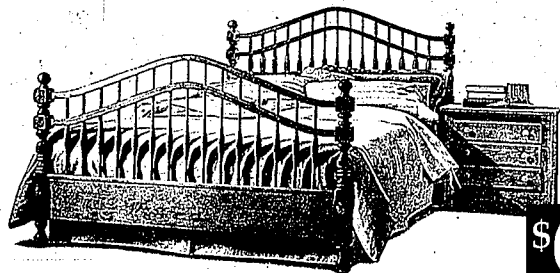

"Studies by foreign countries has shown that all-day transmission has been a major cause of obesity and plunge in productivity level," Information Minister Mohamed Rahmat said.

Quick study holds 2-stroke state lead

By Larry Hovey Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Zach Skinner of Boise learned quickly how to play Twin Falls Municipal Golf Course and because of that quick study he holds a two-stroke lead going into the final round of the Idaho State Junior Golf Championships today.

Skinner had one look at Munny, the front nine in a practice round Tuesday, and immediately saw that the best place to be on all greens was in front with all chip shots being stopped below the hole.

He felt his sand wedge was a major contributor to his success but with a four-under 64, he didn’t miss a lot of shots anywhere.

“I played pretty well on the front but this was my first look at the back nine and I didn’t do as well,” Skinner said. His 64 gives him a two-stroke lead over Will McCurdy. Boise, in the boys’ 16-17 age group as well as the aggregate scoring, McCurdy brings some tradition to the game, his mother, Kali Voyce McCurdy, being perhaps the first Burley golfer “wunderkind” many years ago and winning the state amateur championship on three occasions.

Skinner said a bigger lead would be nice. “I don’t think two strokes is enough. I don’t know what would be enough,” he said of his game plan for Thursday.

For the day, six boys managed or bettered par with the youngest being 14-year-old Sean Deacon, son of Montpelier pro Rick Deacon. Sean made a strong flight showing in the Idaho Open here two weeks ago.

Roger Flynn, 16, and Jess Hibler, 17, posted one-under 67s with Chris Reinke, 16, joining Deacon at par.

The girls’ division didn’t give off as many sparks as expected.

Rupert ace Jasmine Stanger, 15, ripped Munny for a four-under 68 in a practice round last week. She had a 78 Wednesday and held a two-stroke lead in the 14-15 girls’ division.

Boiseans Erika Towne and Jenni Rodwell, at 75 and 77, respectively, topped the girls 16-over division while two Twin Falls Bruins, Sara Thompson (78) and Niki Stover (79) rounded out the top four.

Stamina slides Seles into Canadian Open victory

Monica Seles hits a backhand during her second match at the Canadian Open tennis tournament in Toronto Wednesday.

The Associated Press

TORONTO — Now we know about Monica Seles’ stamina. Barely 17 hours after winning her first tournament match in almost 2 1/2 years, Seles came right back Wednesday for a 6-2, 6-2 wipeout of Nathalie Tauziat at the Canadian Open.

Just as in Tuesday night’s victory over Kimberly Po, Seles was never challenged by Tauziat. The difference this time was that she was playing the 17th-ranked player in the world on a punishing hot afternoon with short rest.

What should have been a major test looked more like a spried workout. Seles had all the answers for anything Tauziat tried. Everything was working — passing shots, groundstrokes, drop shots, slices.

She ran Tauziat from line to line, using just 56 minutes to finish the match. Po kept her on court for 60 minutes the night before.

Still, Seles found fault with her performance. “I played very well from the back court but my serve and volley game was not as good as it was at home.”

The complaints seemed odd considering that Tauziat managed just four points against Seles’ serve in the first set and seven in the second. She seemed stunned at the statistics. “That’s pretty good,” she said. “I’m happy if that’s the case.”

Next for Seles is the winner of Thursday’s match between No. 7 Andre Huber and No. 16 Irina Spirlin.

Seles said she had trouble sleeping after the excitement of the night before and wondered how she would perform with a 1 p.m. starting time. “I never practiced at that time because of the heat,” she said. “I haven’t played at 1 p.m. since Hamburg. I was a little worried about that.”

Later, third-seeded Arantxa Sanchez Vicario made her first appearance of the tournament and ousted Patricia Hy-Boulais 6-4, 6-3. Sanchez Vicario returns Thursday to face 13th-seeded Helena Sukova.

Earlier Wednesday, sixth-seeded Gabriela Sabatini breezed past Gila Ghimrad-Rubbi of France 6-1, 6-2 in her opening match of the tournament.

In other second-round matches, eighth-seeded Iva Majoli of Croatia defeated American Patty Fendick 6-2, 6-3. No. 10 Amy Frazier beat Romania’s Ruxandra Dragomir 6-1, 6-1; Sukova downed Japan’s Kyoko Nagatsuka 6-0, 6-0, 6-4; and Switzerland’s Martina Hingis, seeded 14th, ousted Argentina’s Florencia Labat 6-1, 6-2.

HOUSTON — Derrick May and Derek Bell hit RBI singles in the ninth inning Wednesday night, rallying the Houston Astros past Philadelphia 5-4 for the Phillies’ 16th loss in 20 games.

Kevin Elster put the Phillies ahead 4-3 with a sacrifice fly in the eighth, and Heathcliff Slocumb (2-5) relieved to protect the lead in the ninth.

Ricky Gutierrez singled to start the ninth for Houston and John Cangello walked. After Brian Hunter struck out, May tied it with a single to center.

Slocumb then walked Craig Biggio, loading the bases, and Bell lined a game-winning single to center.

Dean Hartgraves (1-0) pitched 1-3 innings for his first major league victory.

Mets 1, Expos 0

NEW YORK — Bill Pulsipher outdueled Carlos Perez in a matchup of rookie-left-handers and the New York Mets blanked the Montreal Expos 1-0 Wednesday night.

The Mets stopped a three-game losing streak and ended the Expos’ winning string at four.

Pulsipher (4-6) shut out the Expos on six hits for eight innings. The 21-year-old struck out one and walked two and allowed just one runner to reach second base.

John Franco pitched a hitless ninth for his 16th save.

Perez gave up only three hits in seven innings. The year-old struck out eight and walked one.

Marlins 8, Braves 5

ATLANTA — Andre Dawson hit his first grand slam in more than four years and also had a solo home run and double, leading the Florida Marlins to a 8-5 victory Wednesday night that ended their 10-game losing streak to the Atlanta Braves.

Dawson, 41, connected for the seventh slam of his career, capping a five-run first inning against Steve Avery (5-9). It was his first slam since April 22, 1991, while with the Chicago Cubs off Pittsburgh’s Steve Bellinga, and was the seventh slam of the season for the Marlins, all by different players.

Dawson doubled in the third and his sixth home run of the year in the eighth.

Florida won for the seventh time in nine games. The Marlins had been 0-7 against the Braves and hadn’t beaten them since July 14, 1994. Atlanta had won three in a row overall.

MINNEAPOLIS — Vince Coleman, playing his first game for Seattle, singled to start a five-run rally in the eighth inning that sent the Mariners over the Minnesota Twins 6-4 Wednesday night.

Coleman, acquired Tuesday in a trade with Kansas City, went 2-for-5, scored two runs and stole a base.

Ken Griffey Jr. got the 1,000th hit of his career with a single in the Mariners’ first. Griffey, in his second game since coming off the disabled list, at 25 became the seventh-youngest player to reach 1,000 hits.

Doug Strange hit a two-run triple and Edgar Martinez hit a two-run double to highlight the Mariners’ comeback in the eighth.

Bill Riskey (2-1) pitched one inning for the win. Dave Stevens (3-2) took the loss.

Athletics 8, Royals 4

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Jason Gimbli homered for the third straight game and scored three runs as Oakland came back from an early four-run deficit and beat Kansas City.

Todd Stottlemyre (10-5) recovered after allowing four runs in the first inning and got his first victory in his last five starts. The A’s won their first series on the road since June 27-29 at Seattle.

Cleveland Indians shortstop Omar Vizquel leaps clear of Baltimore Oriole Brad Anderson as he turns the double play in Baltimore.

Royals reliever Mike Maignante (0-1) inherited a 4-2 lead in the seventh but committed the first of Kansas City’s three eighth-inning errors on the first play of the inning. Mike Alt. Please see AMERICAN/B2

Jordan leads NBA dissident group against union

CHICAGO (AP) — A group of dissident NBA players, led by Michael Jordan and Patrick Ewing, pressed ahead Wednesday with their plans to decertify the union, saying the tentative collective bargaining agreement reached earlier this month was insufficient.

Players refused to vote on a new collective bargaining agreement in June and were locked out July 1. A new agreement was tentatively approved by union and league officials earlier this month, but it still doesn't satisfy some players' vision for the future.

Agassi continues to dominate Volvo

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — Andre Agassi continued his dominance on hard courts, overcoming a feisty Fernando Meligeni in straight sets in the second round of the Volvo International on Wednesday night.

Agassi, the top seeded player in the world coming into the tournament, beat Meligeni, an unseeded left-hander from Brazil, 6-4, 7-5, and will meet Patrick Rafter in the third round.

the revised labor pact, and results will be announced Sept. 12.

If the players vote down the deal, the union would be dissolved. A federal antitrust suit filed by Jordan, Ewing and 14 other players would block the lockout by court order and force a new set of work rules.

Jordan, who quit baseball when he was caught in the middle of that labor strife this spring, said the fans have to understand that the players want to play this season and want the lockout to end.

"The longer we're locked out and that has enabled us to try to do what we can to get the season back for the fans. The best way to solidify that is to decertify so the courts can reprimand the league and give us rules to play under," Jordan said.

"We don't want to be in the same situation as baseball players. I don't think it's fair for them to pressure us to accept a bad deal."

"What we are trying to do is put the basketball game on the court and let the courts decide what is fair for the players. We don't feel we can get that without decertification."

Kessler listed five main points that he said are wrong with the deal tentatively approved earlier this month.

He said almost all exceptions to the salary cap are eliminated, making free agency harder. He also claimed that the so-called Larry Bird Exception, which allows a team to go over the salary cap to re-sign its free agents, had been watered down in the new deal. He also said players should be in charge of licensing rights.

Throughout the negotiating conference, all clients of David Falk, stressed that the new deal would mostly be unfair — not to the superstars like themselves — but to middle-of-the-road players like Jim McElvaine of the Washington Bullets, who made a short statement.

In the new deal, players agreed to partially fund $50 million in salary cap exceptions. In one giveback, their benefits package, originally supposed to increase by $5 million annually to $59 million in the final year of the deal, will instead increase by $3 million a year.

defending champion and No. 3 seed Wayne Ferreira lost in the second round of the RCA Championships on Wednesday.

Ferreira, of South Africa, lost 6-4, 7-6 (7-4), to unseeded Richie Reneberg of Minneapolis.

In other action at the Indianapolis Tennis Center, No. 2 Grgan Ivanisevic crushed 6-4, 6-2, over Marcos Ondruska and No. 4 Thomas Enqvist defeated Jeff Tatum, 7-5, 6-1.

Ivanisevic was one of many players who suffered through another sweltering day at the ATP hardcourt tourney. The temperature reached 92 degrees by mid-afternoon.

Grg Rusedski of England retired midway through his second set with No. 15 Brett Steven, and Mark Woodford retired after losing the first set 6-4 to Cristiano Carati, both because of the heat.

Dolphin body-slams reporter
DAVIE, Fla. — Miami Dolphins safety Gene Atkins, angered by a recent newspaper column, on Wednesday body-slammed the reporter who wrote the article and later grabbed him by the throat in the locker room.

Atkins said he unintentionally bumped into the writer, Jason Cole of the Sun-Sentinel of Fort Lauderdale, but Atkins acknowledged being upset by Cole's column Sunday.

The NFL's collective bargaining agreement, Cole wrote that some Dolphins are growing about Atkins' contract, which was restructured in May and included a $1.8 million signing bonus.

The confrontation occurred moments after the column was admitted to the locker room for mid-day interviews. With a running start, Atkins slammed chest-to-chest into Cole, who landed on his back with his feet in the air.

Cole, who has been covering the Dolphins since 1992, is 5-foot-11 and weighs 242 pounds. Atkins is also 5-11 and weighs 201.

Top auto racers confirm deals
LONDON — Formula One world champion Michael Schumacher is joining Ferrari, and Damon Hill is staying put and Jacques Villeneuve is moving from Indy cars to Formula C.C.

Three of auto racing's top drivers on Wednesday confirmed multi-million-dollar deals that have been in the works.

No terms were disclosed in a three-line statement from Ferrari headquarters in Maranello, Italy. But news reports said the German will be the highest-paid driver in history, earning between $24 million and $30 million, with an option to renew for a third year.

The deal was a poorly kept secret as Giovanni Agnelli, the chairman of Ferrari's parent company Fiat, said last week that Schumacher already had been signed.

Unlike Schumacher, Hill got more money by simply staying put.

Hill signed a new one-year deal with Williams-Renault that will reportedly triple his annual salary to about $7 million.

Apartment firm drops Oly plan
ATLANTA — An apartment management company accused of rent-gouging dropped a plan Wednesday that would have forced residents either to pay $3,000 a month rent during the Olympics or be evicted.

Instead, tenants can either stay through the Games at their 1995 rents or volunteer to sublease their apartments to Olympic visitors and earn a cut of the higher rate, Intown Properties Inc. said in a statement.

Rents at most Intown apartments are between $400 and $500 a month.

Atlanta hotels are almost full for the Games, and Intown has about 300 apartments in seven properties near downtown Atlanta, where most of the 1996 Summer Olympics will be held.

Rockets, Maxwell settle fight
HOUSTON — The Houston Rockets and former guard Vernon Maxwell have dropped grievances against one another after the team bought out the veteran's contract, according to a published report.

Maxwell received a $500,000 settlement to walk away from the team without further legal action or protests, sources said in Thursday's editions of the Houston Chronicle.

He walked out on the team during the NBA playoffs, citing a hamstring injury but later admitted it was upset that newly acquired guard Clyde Drexler was taking away his playing time.

The Rockets gave Maxwell an indefinite leave of absence and then waived him June 30, a day before the NBA lockout began. On July 7, Maxwell filed a grievance with the NBA.

He believed he was due $2.1 million for the last year of his contract.

Dodgers 6, Cubs 1
LOS ANGELES — Ismael Valdes scattered seven hits and Mike Piazza hit Wallach and Eric Karros homered Wednesday as the Los Angeles Dodgers beat the Chicago Cubs 6-1 in their two-game lead over the Cubs in the NL West.

The win was the fifth in six games for the Dodgers since they forfeited a game to St. Louis in the ninth-inning last Thursday night because some fans threw snow on the baseball field.

It also was the Dodgers' 12th win in their last 15 home games.

Colorado beat Cincinnati 6-4 earlier Wednesday for only its second win on a nine-game road trip.

Rockets 6, Reds 4
CINCINNATI — Dante Bichette hit his league-leading 28th homer to lead off a three-run sixth inning and the Colorado Rockies went on to beat the Cincinnati Reds 6-4 Wednesday.

Bichette's drive to the upper deck in left field, off John Smiley (1-2) broke a scoreless tie. It was only the 19th homer to reach that level since Riverfront Stadium opened in 1970.

Ethiopia's Halle Gebreselassie raises his arms in victory in front of the scoreboard after setting a new world record in the 5,000 meters race at the Track and Field Grand Prix Meeting in Zurich Wednesday.

Gebreselassie slashes 5000m record by nearly 11 seconds

ZURICH, Switzerland (AP) — Kenya's Moses Kiptanui got the world record in the 3,000-meter steeplechase and lost another Wednesday night when Ethiopia's Halle Gebreselassie shattered his world mark in the 5,000 meters at the Weltklasse meet.

Meanwhile, Olympic champion Linford Christie, shuffling off a leg injury, won the 100 meters. Michael Johnson won his 47th consecutive 400-meter race and Algerian Noureddine Morelli fell short in his bid to break the world mile record.

Of the two world records, Gebreselassie's was the most remarkable. In clocking 12 minutes, 44.39 seconds, he lowered Kiptanui's previous mark of 12:55.30 by nearly 11 seconds.

Gebreselassie's countryman, Worku Bikila, took him through a fast 3,400 meters before letting him run the final 1,600 meters on his own, and he was up to the task. He won by more than two seconds over runner-up Dieter Baumann, who set a German record of 13:01.72.

"Two months ago when Kiptanui broke my record, I was worried," Gebreselassie said. "Today, I took my record back."

The world record came about 90 minutes after Kiptanui had become the first man to break eight minutes for the steeplechase, clocking 7:59.18.

He had set the previous record of 8:02.08 in this meet in 1992. The brilliant run by the 23-year-old Kenyan gave the three-time world champion the fourth-fastest time in his career. Kiptanui said he probably could have broken the world record in last week's World Championships at Göteborg, Sweden, but coming into the final 400 meters he had such a comfortable lead that he would save his best performance for Zurich. Again, he made it look easy in leading a sweep of the first five places by Kenyans.

Gideon Chirehir was a distant second, more than seven seconds back at 8:07.27.

"I have planned this world record since 1992," Kiptanui said. "To be the first man under eight minutes is more important for me than winning the gold medal at the World Championships."

"I didn't want any pacemakers because I was very confident and I don't like to have anybody before me. It's better to clear the hurdles as the leader."

About losing his 5,000 record, he said, "I'll get it back."

The 35-year-old Christie had injured his left leg during the 100 semifinals at the World Championships, then aggravated it while finishing sixth in the final, and was considered a doubtful starter Wednesday.

He didn't decide until Tuesday, after a workout at Lezirgrund Stadium, that he would compete.

He competed remarkably well, finishing a field that included the 1-2-3 finishers at the World Championships at Göteborg, Sweden.

Christie was timed in 10.03, his season's best, in beating world champion Donovan Bailey of Canada by nearly a meter. Bailey finished second in 10.09, with American Jon Drummond third in 10.10.

Canada's Bruny Surin, the world champion silver medalist, finished fifth in the eight-man field in 10.43, with bronze medalist Alo Boldon of Trinidad and Tobago fifth in 10.20.

"I wouldn't call myself a healthy runner," Christie said. "I'm running on painkillers."

"In the past few days, I went through hell trying to get my leg back together and trying to get my mind back together."

Johnson, the world's dominant long sprinter, continued his remarkable six-year winning streak in the 400, making his usual powerful move down the stretch and winning in 43.89.

Morelli, attempting to crack his mile record of 3:44.39, settled for a stadium record of 3:45.19, the fastest in the world this year.

Meanwhile, unheralded American Mark Crear beat the world's best in the 110-meter hurdles.

Crear, who failed to qualify for the U.S. team for the World Championships although he had the world's fastest time prior to the big meet at Göteborg, Sweden, whipped a field that included world champion Allen Johnson of the U.S., world record-holder Colin Jackson of Britain, world silver medalist Tony Jarrett of Britain and two-time Olympic gold medalist Roger Kingdom of the U.S.

Crear's time of 13.18 was far off his season's best of 13.02. Johnson's world-leading 13.00 at the Championships, but it was good enough.

Tyson, McNeely trade barbs

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Mike Tyson was answering a question when promoter Don King interrupted.

"Will you be quiet while I talk," the former undisputed heavyweight champion said Wednesday.

King was Tyson, wearing a shiny black T-shirt and black trousers was, short and to the point and sometimes sharp in answering questions at the final news conference for his comeback fight against Peter McNeely on Saturday night at the MGM Grand Garden.

In another instance, when King announced that Tyson was getting $25 million plus $500,000 in training expenses, a smiling Tyson said, "Why you telling them my business, man."

When asked to explain why if he said he thought people close to him would betray him, he went back to those people after he was released from prison, Tyson said, "I said it because I meant it. As to why I went back to them, that's none of your business."

Tyson, promoted by Don King and managed by John Horne and Rory Hollister, called the questioner, "a character killer."

Tyson refused to elaborate on a statement he made on the Black Entertainment Television that he was set up on his rape conviction.

"You never watched BET until I was on there, did you?" Tyson asked the questioner.

Asked for a prediction on the fight, for which he is a 17-1 favorite, Tyson said, "I'm just in there doing my thing. You know what I do."

Later, however, he said, "I'm going to knock out Peter McNeely."

When Tyson was asked what he thought McNeely would gain from fighting him, he said the question should be asked of McNeely.

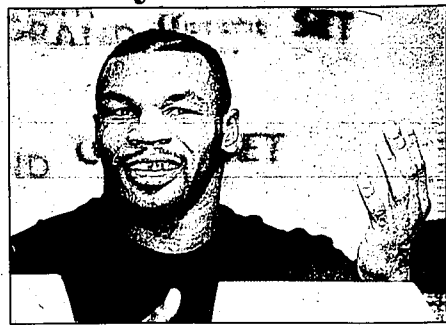

"I won't accept that question, man," McNeely snapped. "It's a stupid question."

Then he said, "obviously I got everything to gain."

Earlier McNeely read a poem, which started, "I'm Peter McNeely from Medfield, Mass., and on Saturday night I'm going to kick Mike Tyson's..."

Tyson smiled when a woman from the Dominican Republic asked if he had gotten in divorce from actress Robin Givens in her country.

"That's absolutely true, Tyson said. Tyson was relaxed, often chatting and laughing with Horne and Hollister while King introduced the dais in his usual rambling fashion during the news conference that lasted about two hours.

Former heavyweight champion Mike Tyson reacts as boxing promoter Don King discloses the amount of money Tyson will be making on his upcoming fight with Peter McNeely during a news conference Wednesday.

day night I'm going to kick Mike Tyson's..."

Tyson said he thought that was cute. Tyson, who converted to Islam while serving three years in the Indiana Youth Center, was asked how he reconciled his religion with his harsh profession?

"This is my calling from God," Tyson said of boxing. "This is what I do. It's the only thing I'm interested in doing."

"Islam is just a way of life. Islam is universal. There's nothing bushy changed about me. I'm just more concerned about my role in life."

Tyson smiled when a woman from the Dominican Republic asked if he had gotten in divorce from actress Robin Givens in her country.

"That's absolutely true, Tyson said. Tyson was relaxed, often chatting and laughing with Horne and Hollister while King introduced the dais in his usual rambling fashion during the news conference that lasted about two hours.

In introducing Joe Hipp, the challenger to WBA heavyweight champion Bruce Seldon, who was born on a Blackfeet reservation in Montana King saw fit to give a brief history of Custer and the Battle of the Little Big Horn.

"I'd like to thank the academy for all the votes. Wrong speech."

Tyson's first fight in a little less than 50 months will be the featured match on a pay-per-view television card that begins at 6 p.m. PST and includes three world title fights.

The show will open with Miguel Gonzalez of Mexico defending the WBC lightweight title against Lamar Murphy of Miami. Next will be the bout between Seldon, of Gloucester Township, N.J., and Hipp, of Yakima, Wash., followed by Tyson-McNeely and a WBC middleweight title defense by Julian Jackson of the St. Thomas, U.S. Virgin Islands, and Quincy Taylor of Dallas.

Armenian wrestlers released from jail

ATLANTA (AP) — Two Armenians who were charged with shoplifting from a department store were freed from jail at the request of an Atlanta Olympics official, then left the country, a judge said Wednesday.

The chief of Olympics security denied that the Atlanta Committee for the Olympic Games intervened in the case.

"We have not put any pressure on them," Olympic security chief Bill Rathbun said.

Arik Bagdadian and Rich Zimonian were arrested at Arich's store at post Lenox Square mall on Saturday night, charged with shoplifting Sgt. Melvin Denson of Atlanta police.

They were taken to jail and were about to be fingerprinted and photographed. But W.J. Taylor, ACOG's deputy security chief, called Municipal Court Judge Anson's office at home and persuaded him to allow jailers to release the athletes on recognizance.

"I told him... just make sure they show up in court," Mike Tyson said in an interview Wednesday. "It has just come to my attention they did not make their court appearance. That's not good, and I'm not happy."

Arrest warrants for the two had not been issued by Wednesday afternoon.

"If they don't come back I doubt any attempt will be made to reach them," said Atlanta City Solicitor Raines Carter. "We will prosecute if they ever come back."

The maximum penalty for shoplifting in Atlanta is a $1,000 fine and 90 days in jail when the value of the merchandise is less than $100. The penalty increases to a year in jail and a $1,000 fine for merchandise valued at more than $100. Police could not say what the wrestlers were accused of stealing.

The wrestlers were in Atlanta to compete in the World Freestyle Wrestling tournament, a pre-

Olympic competition that ended Sunday.

In another case, an Iranian wrestler, Yari Kalyan Behroz, was arrested Monday at the downtown Macy's store after allegedly placing 20 items in a shopping bag, the police report said.

The report indicated the store wanted to prosecute. The wrestler was taken to jail, fingerprinted and photographed. Fellow athletes were eager to pay the $1,000 bond for his release so they could catch their flight home that afternoon, city corrections director Tom Pozdek said.

But the athlete was released after four hours in jail and the case was dropped because Macy's changed its mind.

"I can't prosecute without a victim," said Carter, who believes at city clerks "should be prosecuted, no matter who it is."

Macy's officials declined comment Wednesday.

Alexander signs with Vikings for $4.8 million

The Associated Press

Defensive end Derrick Alexander, the last unsigned first-round pick in the NFL, agreed to a four-year, $4.8 million contract with the Minnesota Vikings on Wednesday.

The deal includes a $2.6 million signing bonus, some of which will be deferred over the next two seasons.

"It was just time for us to get the deal done," said Alexander, who was drafted 11th out of Florida State. "We knew Minnesota needed Derrick, and Derrick needed Minnesota. So it was just time to get it done."

The Vikings drafted the 6-foot-4, 276-pound Alexander to bolster their anemic outside pass rush. He will practice for the first time Thursday. He will play Friday night when the Vikings play host to Oakland, but he is expected to be ready for the exhibition finale Aug. 26 against Kansas City.

William Floyd, who emerged as one of the top fullbacks in the league last year and led the Super Bowl champions with five postseason touchdowns, sprained right knee ligaments during contact drills and is expected to miss three weeks.

The injury likely will keep Floyd out of the team's Sept. 3 opener at New Orleans, and 49ers coach George Seifert said the three-week estimate is a best-case scenario.

Floyd was awaiting an MRI exam Thursday for more definitive word on the extent of the injury.

Jets Middle linebacker Marvin Jones, who has been unable to stay healthy in his first two NFL seasons, suffered yet another injury that could prevent him from reaching his enormous potential.

Jones injured the right ankle at Thursday's training camp in a pileup during a slowing play toward the end of Wednesday's practice.

Jones was writhing in pain and had to be carted off the field.

But the team won't know the extent of the injury until learning the results of the examination by team physician Dr. Elliott Hersman at Thursday's training camp at Hill Hospital and a bone scan scheduled for Thursday morning.

Jones returned last season with no ill effects from a career-threatening hip injury that ended his 1993 rookie season after nine games. However, a nagging right ankle sprain during the season's second game prevented him from fulfilling the potential the 49ers saw in Florida State star flashed as the fourth pick in the 1993 draft.

Junior Seau returned to practice.

Seau has been slowed by a pulled hamstring since his first day at camp, missing most practices and the Chargers' two exhibition losses.

But Seau, looking fit and quick, is expected to play Saturday night when the Chargers face the Houston Oilers at the Astrodome.

"It's fine now," he said. "I'm happy with what we did (Wednesday) and right now I'm just working on my reads."

Running back Ernie Rhetts is offering a $1,000 reward for the return of his shoulder pads, which were stolen when the team's training camp locker room at the University of Tampa was burglarized this week.

"All they have to do is drop them off, take the money and run," said the second-year pro, who rushed for 1,011 yards last season. "I don't want to know who it was. I'm not trying to send anybody to jail."

Rhetts said he's had the shoulder pads since he was a sophomore in high school and doesn't feel comfortable in replacements issued by the Bucs.

"It's kind of scary. I'm not sure I can take a hit (in the new ones)," he said, adding he doesn't understand why anyone else would want them because "they don't smell too good."

Redskins Third-year tight end Frank Wycheck, the all-time leading receiver at Maryland, was released by Washington.

Wycheck was hampered by injuries, a suspension for steroid use and the inability to fill a position to maximize his talents in the Redskins system.

Primarily an H-back in college, the 6-foot-3, 247-pound Wycheck played the same position in his rookie year with Washington, switched to fullback last season and was moved to tight end at this year's training camp.

"The H-back guys I've been around have better speed, and he's not really big enough to be a tight end," coach Norv Turner said. "We've got other guys who can do the job better."

Giants Defensive end Mike Strahan, who suffered a sore left knee from a bone chip, did not practice. Coach Dan Reeves said the starter, who will sit out Saturday, was scheduled to be evaluated to see if surgery was necessary. Backup defensive end Coleman Rudolph will get the start.

Cardinals Arizona coach Buddy Ryan apparently isn't a big fan of left offensive tackles Ben Coleman or Ernest Dykes.

"We've been looking for a left tackle for a long time, and he just showed up today, so we appreciate you being here, Anthony," Ryan said about a visit by Fox color analyst Anthony Muñoz, a former Pro Bowl lineman with the Cincinnati Bengals.

Munoz has been assigned to the telecast of Arizona's opener Sept. 3 on the radio at the Washington Redskins.

"Our left tackle doesn't stink," Ryan went on. "He just smells bad."

Asked whether he was talking about Coleman or Dye, Ryan said: "Both of them."

2-time champ takes lead over first-timer

The Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Shannon Miller, a two-time champion trying to regain her title, was in sixth place after the compulsory with a score of 38.55.

"I was wobbly on the beam," Dawes said. "My floor was OK and I hit my bars really well."

Miller, who opened on one of her favorite events, the uneven bars, scored a 9.8 to tie Moceanu for second.

She moved into the lead after the vault, scoring a 9.825 in the floor exercise and stayed there with another 9.825 on the vault to finish with 39.275.

"All four events were crucial," Miller's coach, Steve Nunno, said. "It was nip and tuck out there the whole way."

Miller, 18, of Edmond, Okla., won the all-around title in 1992 and 1993, and was second to Dominique Dawes in the all-around at the U.S. Championships last year.

Moceanu, of Houston, who is competing in her first seniors event, stayed in second place in the first rotation with a 9.8 in the floor exercise. She scored 39.125 overall.

"I'm perfectly satisfied," said Moceanu's coach, Bela Karolyi. "It's a good start in the first competition in her life in the senior division."

Karolyi said he was happy to see Moceanu do well but not in the pressure-filled top spot.

"I'd be so mad if she had pressure on her," Karolyi said. "She has enough time next year to

'All four events were crucial. It was nip and tuck out there the whole way.'

Miller and Dawes met one another previously this year, in the compulsories at the U.S. Classic last year in Houston, Ala. Miller was first and Dawes fourth.

Jaycie Phelps of Cincinnati finished third Wednesday night at 38.975.

Despite a lack of nerves, John Roethlisberger of Minneapolis, a three-time U.S. national all-around champion, was in first place among the senior men after Wednesday's compulsories.

"Compulsories are always a little nerve-wracking. There's not a lot of room for adding. If you're a little bit off, you're in trouble."

Roethlisberger scored a high of 9.65 in the high-bar and a low of 9.2 in the parallel bars, for a 68.28.

He was followed by Mihai Bagiu of Albuquerque, N.M., with a 67.02 and Jair Lynch of Washington, with a 66.72.

In the junior women's compulsories, Mima Kiani of Oklahoma City was first with 38.15. Kristen Stucky of Milwaukee and Katie Dyson of Houston tied for second with 37.225.

Sun Valley woman wins Mackay Challenge

MACKAY — Kim Smith of Sun Valley took top honors in the women's division at the 11th annual Mackay White Knob challenge mountain bike race.

562 riders competed in the event, making it the largest bicycle event ever held in Idaho. Riders from as far away as New York and Mississippi made the trip for the 18-mile race.

Sun Valley's Danni Albright took second in the men's overall division.

Hotsy takes 2nd at state softball

IDAHO FALLS — The Hotsy Steam Store men's softball team finished second in the state slow-pitch softball tournament last week in Boise.

After overpowering its first five opponents, run-ruling three of them, Hotsy ran into too much power.

But it wasn't the power of the other team.

A rule that allows each team only one home run in a game with the second counting as an out and the third an ejection, took its toll on Hotsy.

In the championship against Western Trophy of Boise, Hotsy took a 13-5 lead before its power hurt the team.

After one player was ejected Hotsy moved positions and never got back on track as Western Trophy came back for 18-16 win.

Because of the double-elimination format, Western Trophy, which already had one less hit to play Hotsy again, Hotsy used its home run in the first inning and again faced a player ejection before losing to Western Trophy 18-8.

Blaine County Title of Ketchum took third and Roberts Elevator of Idaho Falls took fourth. All four received berths in the regional tournament in Eugene, Ore.

Hotsy finished the year with one tournament win and three second-place showings. The Steam Store also took the Twin Falls Area A League championship.

Tuesday, Hotsy will take on the league all-stars at 7:30 p.m. at Harmon. Throwing, baserunning and home run riches will follow the game.

Gooding woman critical following fire

GOODING — A 70-year-old woman was critically injured by smoke inhalation early Wednesday morning before two policemen pulled her from her burning home.

Patricia Buchanan of 1120 Utah St. in Gooding was being treated Wednesday night at the University of Utah Burn Center in Salt Lake City, according to a hospital spokeswoman.

A discarded cigarette ignited a kitchen wastebasket in her house, drawing the woman's attention just after midnight, said Gooding Fire Chief Pat Bishop. He said the woman passed out four feet from the front door of her one-story home.

Neighbor Wade Nelson called the fire department, but Gooding Police Lt. Andy Escuena and Officer Rick Cowen arrived first and pulled the unconscious woman to safety, Bishop said.

"She was in extreme danger; the fire ended up doing about $30,000 damage," Bishop said. "She would have probably expired by the time we got in and pulled her out."

Nineteen fire fighters took 15 minutes to extinguish the blaze, which damaged most of the house, Bishop said.

Twin Falls IRS office closes for some walk-in service

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls Internal Revenue Service Office will be closed for walk-in taxpayer assistance through Aug. 25, and again from Sept. 11 to Oct. 9.

Taxpayers needing assistance during these periods should call the IRS at 800-829-1040.

The closures do not affect scheduled examination or collection appointments. Regular office hours for the Twin Falls office are Monday through Wednesday, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. and from 2 to 4 p.m.

Crime prevention, watch program plans celebration

TWIN FALLS — Members of local neighborhood watch groups are invited to attend a picnic sponsored by the Twin Falls Crime Prevention Association on Saturday.

Awards will be presented to the block captains who lead the neighborhood watch groups designed to prevent crime on their blocks. Block Captain of the year also will be honored, said Joe Molyneux, association president.

Hot dogs, chips and drinks will be provided, and members may bring food as well, to the picnic at 1 p.m. at Harry Bery Park, according to a news release. Several hundred people belong to the association, he said.

For more information, call Molyneux at 733-4730.

CSI official advises early sign-up to ensure classes

TWIN FALLS — Students intending to sign up for fall classes at the College of Southern Idaho should do so soon to get classes at the time of day they want.

Jerry Beck, vice-president for academic affairs, said he expects a 5 to 10 percent student body increase over last fall. Combined with a new summer registration process, that means classes could fill up soon.

Students can register through the first week of classes, which start Aug. 28, but 75 percent of last year's enrollment has already registered. Beginning Spanish classes are already full.

If a class is full, students shouldn't give up, Beck said — they can still get the classes they want by contacting him or a counselor. Registration is monitored three times a day and he will add afternoon or evening sections of classes that fill up.

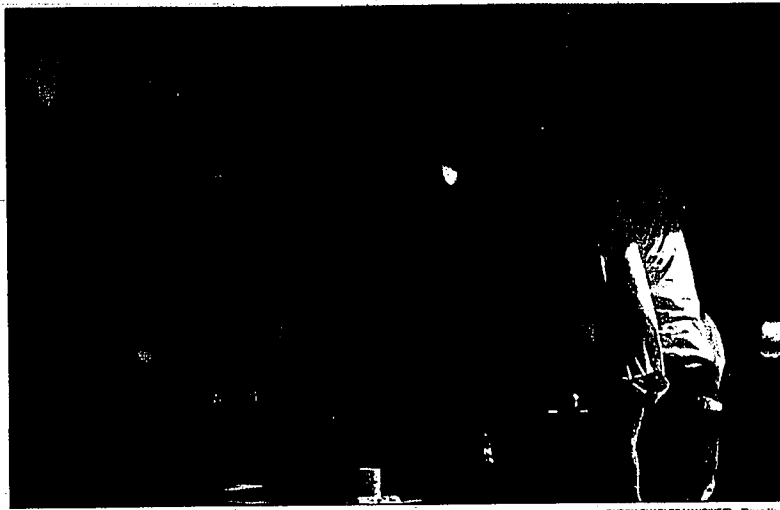

"I don't perceive that students will have a problem coming to the College of Southern Idaho," he said.

Democratic Party schedules picnic for next Saturday

Twin Falls County Commissioner Dennis Maughan attend. Tickets are $10 per family, or $5 per adult and $3 per child.

A long and loyal supporter, former Democratic candidate Donald McMurrin of Twin Falls introduces himself to Anne C. Fox at a Republican picnic.

TWIN FALLS — While Dick Pence flame-broiled 45 pounds of hamburgers and Pat Hamilton prepared two barrels of Idaho corn on the cob, state Rep. Celia Gould, R-Buhl, looked at the multitude gathered for the Republican barbecue and smiled.

"The Republican party's always been alive and well, but with the big wins (of 1994) people are encouraged, and its just growing by leaps and bounds," Gould said.

Wednesday, 171 Republicans gathered at Rock Creek Park, paying $5 per person, or $10 per family, for GOP food and fellowship.

Dessert cost an extra dollar, but ticketholders could "hassle elected officials at no extra cost."

"We're changing the course of America."

— Sen. Dirk Kempthorne

And plenty of office holders were in the audience: U.S. Sen. Dirk Kempthorne, State Schools Superintendent Anne C. Fox, Twin Falls County Commissioner Brent Reinke plus a host of state legislators and party officials.

Joe Salisbury — just back from Ross Perot's United We Stand America convention — had plenty of stories to tell about the Dallas gathering. And perennial Democratic political candidate Donald McMurrin was also on hand.

"Right now I've got more friends here than do in the local Democratic party but it's in power now," McMurrin said, while preparing corn for a butter bath.

Lee Barnes, a former state representative, said the gathering attracts farmers, bankers, architects, and optometrists — some folks you might not see otherwise.

"You have all walks of life here," he added.

After dinner, several politicians spoke. Kempthorne, just back from a congressional hearing in Wyoming, told the audience that the new Republican-controlled Congress will deliver a balanced budget and is already shrinking the federal government.

Noting that several Democratic congressmen have become Republicans this year and reminding the crowd that six Democratic senators are retiring in 1996, Kempthorne suggested that exciting times

Kempthorne, Craig plan visits to Twin Falls, Buhl, Sun Valley

By Frank E. Lockwood
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — While President Clinton vacations in Jackson, Wyo., Idaho's congressional delegation is using part of its summer vacation to visit the Magic Valley.

U.S. Senator Dirk Kempthorne, R-Idaho, arrived in Twin Falls Wednesday afternoon. Kempthorne had interviews scheduled with the Magic Valley's network television stations. He also attended a Republican party picnic at Rock Creek.

Today, Kempthorne tours the Amalgamated Sugar plant in Twin Falls, then speaks to the Buhl Rotary Club at noon at the Ramona Restaurant.

After a one-day trip to Idaho Falls, Kempthorne returns to the Magic Valley on Saturday. The state's junior senator will visit the City of Rocks and tour area dairies that day.

Meanwhile, senior U.S. Sen. Larry Craig, R-Idaho, is in Keetchikan and Sun Valley this morning. Craig is scheduled to have breakfast with Wood River Valley business leaders at Christina's Restaurant at 8 a.m.

Later today, Craig speaks to the Idaho Motor Transportation annual convention at 10:30 a.m. at the Sun Valley Inn before heading to Idaho Falls.

Craig returns to Twin Falls on Monday for a congressional hearing on reclamation-reform legislation. That hearing takes place at 9:30 a.m. at the College of Southern Idaho's cafeteria. Craig also meets with the media that day and speaks to the Bank Administrators Institute dinner at Canyon Springs Inn at 6:30 p.m.

Tuesday, Craig has breakfast with state legislators and dairymen in Twin Falls, before touring dairies in Jerome and Wendell and a cheese facility, also in Jerome.

U.S. Rep. Mike Crapo is planning to visit the Magic Valley the last week in August. His schedule wasn't available at press-time Wednesday.

Details of Twin Falls beltway draw fire at hearing; need to ease traffic doesn't

By Virginia S. Garber
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Residents who testified Wednesday about a proposed beltway corridor for eastern Twin Falls seemed uneasy about the plan's details, but most said the need for reserving such a corridor is unavoidable.

"We're going to do a lot of good by getting ahead of the game this time," resident Joe McCollum told the Twin Falls Highway District at its second open house this month.

But McCollum and several others demanded answers to their concerns about the proposed bypass, which extends from the corner of Pole Line Road and Eastland Drive to the point at which 3250 East meets Orchard Drive.

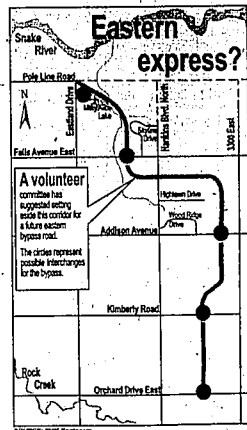

Highway district officials say a road will be built when it is deemed necessary to alleviate traffic along other north-south roads, which could be 20 years or more from now.

The proposal was designed to give future developers some flexibility, but one resident says the uncertainty in the plan is something landowners "will hate to live with for 10 or 15 years."

Gene Champlin, who farms in eastern Twin Falls, told the highway district that he's bothered by the uncertainty in a plan that reserves a 500-foot corridor for a 116-foot road right-of-way.

"That's a terrible chunk to set aside," Champlin said.

The proposal's flexibility is meant to leave landowners and developers "room to work" when specifying the exact route of the possible beltway, said Gerald Martins of EHM Engineers, hired by the highway district.

"We certainly don't have enough information to draw a hard line down to 116 feet," he said.

The first landowners who want to develop land within the 500-foot corridor would have to work with city officials to

"We're going to do a lot of good by getting ahead of the game this time."

— Joe McCollum, Twin Falls resident determine exactly where the road would be on their land, Martins said. Successive developers would be more limited in their choices, he said.

The route is designed to miss existing subdivisions, and if no road is built, the corridor won't affect farmers who continue to farm, he said.

"If you never need the dang road, it won't be built," Martins told residents who said they see no present need for a beltway to carry residential traffic in the area.

Highway commissioners will receive written comments on the northeast corridor until Aug. 25. Their address is P.O. Box 605, Twin Falls, ID 83303.

After evaluating written and video testimony, highway commissioners may recommend to the City Council a change in the city's master street plan.

City Engineer Gary Young said the city would require two to four months after the recommendation to make any alteration in the street plan or the city's comprehensive plan.

The public would have at least two more opportunities to speak in open hearings, he said.

Funding cuts loom for health districts

By Julie M. McKinnon
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The eight-county area has 13.2 percent of the state's population, yet the South Central District Health Department only gets 12.99 percent of the state's funding for health districts.

And next year it will be even less. District Director Cheryl Juntunen told district board members Wednesday that she is concerned about the drop in district funding.

The funding share is based on how much county commissioners contribute to the district; in June, the commissioners decided not to increase funding for this fiscal year.

At the board meeting Wednesday, Chairman Dr. Charles Parker of Blaine County formed a committee of board members and commissioners to look into how local funding could increase.

The board is still working with commissioners to have the counties pay part of the expenses for the health department offices in their counties.

New board member Marvin Hempleman of Twin Falls County, who is also a county commissioner, suggested the counties' shares for expenses be combined and divided up based on population and the market value of property in the counties.

Twin Falls boy dies when roulette trick fails

By Liz Wright
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Friends knew 17-year-old Jesse Flores liked to pretend to play "Russian roulette," by sticking a revolver in his mouth without a bullet in the cylinder and squeezing the trigger.

Monday, the Twin Falls boy played the game and lost in front of his younger brother and a friend, according to police reports. He died at a hospital.

The friend, Tomi Ann Clark, told police that she, Flores and his 14-year-old brother, Victor, were sitting in her pickup Monday evening when Jesse Flores pulled out his .38-caliber chrome and pearl gun and said he was going to play Russian roulette, the reports said.

Flores had pretended to play the game many times, but he always made sure there were no live cartridges when he dropped the hammer, Clark told police. That night, he spun the cylinder, put the gun into his mouth and squeezed the trigger; nothing happened. He pulled the trigger a second time and the gun fired into the roof of his mouth, the reports said.

X-rays showed a second bullet that had not been discharged down the right side of Flores' mouth or throat, which he was apparently sucking on, the reports said. Victor Flores told police that his brother removed two cartridges and spun the cylinder, then handed one of the cartridges to Clark and put the other in his mouth, the reports said.

Jesse Flores was taken to Magic Valley Regional Medical Center, where he died later.

Small fire forces evacuation of lab at INEL

IDAHO FALLS (AP) - Employees employees were evacuated from the Argonne National Laboratory-West at the INEL after a wind-blown brush fire in the southwest nearly tripled in size.

Idaho National Engineering Laboratory said. "There is no danger of the release of radiation as a result of the fire." Officials said the fire broke out before noon about four miles from the laboratory, the eastern most facility on the INEL reservation, and quickly spread to acres. The cause of the fire was unknown. The area was under fair skies at the time. A fire break was being built around the laboratory as fire crews from the INEL, Idaho Falls and the Bureau of Land Management, supported by helicopters dumping buckets of water on the hottest spots, fought to check the spread of the blaze.

Burley teachers design curriculum as part of long-term district project

By Richard Streeby
Times-News writer

BURLEY — When Cassia County teachers return to school Wednesday, they will be using a science curriculum they designed, rather than one prescribed by a textbook company. If the curriculum works as planned, every teacher in the same grade level will be teaching the same four or five essential science lessons. This will give teachers confidence that students have mastered the previous year's lessons and are ready to build on their knowledge when they progress to a new grade, said Miriam Spencer.

Spencer, a Burley Junior High Science ninth-grade teacher, coordinated the efforts of the district's science curriculum committee. The new curriculum is part of a 3-year-old district effort to develop all curricula locally.

In past years, the district has distributed lengthy science textbooks — last year's ninth-grade biology book was 1,200 pages — that a teacher couldn't possibly cover in a school year.

The district hasn't given teachers much guidance on what to emphasize. And that has resulted in inconsistent instruction based on teachers' preferences and confidence in various science topics.

"It would have been possible for a child to have one teacher and learn completely different things from what another teacher taught at the same subject level," Spencer said.

Over the past year, a committee of science teachers, administrators and parents has decided on four or five essential science lessons that students need to master at each grade level. The committee then chose focused textbooks to match their curriculum.

First-graders, for example, will study how birds and butterflies change from eggs to adults, the difference between living and non-living things, how weather changes with the seasons, and measurement.

Ninth-graders will study atoms and how they work, how they react to create new substances, forces that effect movement and machines.

Spencer said she noticed the need for a simplified, uniform curriculum when she came to Burley Junior High School in 1989.

She asked district administrators and teachers at the high school what she could expect her students to know and what she needed to teach them by the end of the year.

"The answer I got from so many of them was, 'We just act like they don't know anything and start teaching from scratch.' I thought, 'Then why am I teaching?'" she said.

The new curriculum will allow teachers to give a brief review and then begin teaching in-depth, rather than starting over, she said.

The new curriculum, is not rigid, Spencer said. "You can do as much or as little as you want to as long as you cover these goals," she said.

Spencer said some elementary school teachers who are expected to be generalists, give up on teaching science. The new curriculum, which sets clear goals and suggests projects, will give them the confidence to start again.

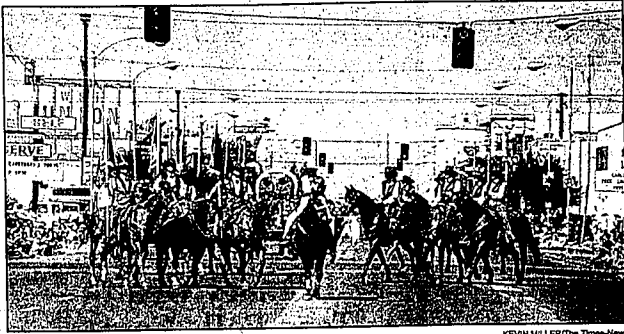

As another part of the curriculum reform effort, the district is suggesting that schools buy kits for hands-on projects. For example, a science book for kindergartners might come with an optional packet of bean seeds, pots and soil.

Jerry Doggett, the district's assistant superintendent and curriculum director, said the emphasis on hands-on projects is important.

"That's when you get the wide-eyed excitement of science," he said.

Teachers won't really know whether they've been successful in making sure students in one grade all learn the same essential science lessons until the middle of the 1996-97 school year, when students will have used the curriculum for a year and a half, Spencer said.

North Idaho town ponders newest resident - Simpson trial's Fuhrman

SANDPOINT (AP) — Residents of this north Idaho tourist town had mixed feelings Wednesday about their new neighbor, former Los Angeles Police detective Mark Fuhrman, who is accused of making racist comments on tapes.

But they're tired of having their region characterized as a haven for white supremacists. "To say that this area is hospitable to them is ludicrous, and to say that we recruit them is asinine," City Council President Ray Miller said Wednesday.

Fuhrman, a key witness in the O.J. Simpson case, testified at the trial in March and moved to Sandpoint last month.

Sandpoint has attracted its share both of retirees — many of them former Southern California police and firefighters — and white supremacists.

The neo-Nazi Aryan Nations white supremacist sect has its headquarters near Hayden Lake, about 40 miles south of Sandpoint.

Ruby Ridge, where self-proclaimed white separatist Randy Weaver's family battled federal agents in August 1992, is about 25 miles north.

Louis Beam, a former Ku Klux Klan grand dragon and Aryan Nations "ambassador-at-large" with militia ties, recently moved onto property east of town.

On Tuesday, racist, anti-Semitic statements Fuhrman allegedly made to a North Carolina professor threatened to derail the Simpson case.

Fuhrman declined to discuss the tapes Wednesday, when contacted by The Associated Press at his Sandpoint home, a neat, white three-bedroom surrounded by a white picket fence. "The record will be set straight," Fuhrman said about the tapes. "We've got trial and everything. I really can't talk."

Fuhrman's connections with Sandpoint became an issue in the Simpson trial in January, when he scuffled with a newspaper photographer at the Spokane, Wash., airport while returning from a house-burning trip here.

Fuhrman, 43, spent part of his childhood in Spokane, about 80 miles southwest of Sandpoint.

About 5,200 people live in Sandpoint, on the northern shore of 43-mile-long Lake Pend Oreille at the foot of the Selkirk Mountains.

The town is filled with restaurants, art galleries and shops, Schweitzer Mountain, a resort just outside of town, attracts skiers from throughout the region.

But the 1900 U.S. Census showed only 10 blacks and about 150 other minorities, mostly Hispanics and American Indians, live in the city. On Wednesday, some residents said they were reconsidering how they felt about having Fuhrman as a neighbor. "I'm a little more concerned, we just don't need that kind of influence," said Donna Massey, a clerk at the Little Bear Trading Co. downtown. She was hesitant to comment without knowing about the truth of the allegations.

Fuhrman had not espoused racist beliefs in public and had not made any racist comments to those of her friends who had met him, she added.

"I certainly hope all that's being hinted at is not true," said John Ennis, a resident for 18 years, who also said he would reserve judgment on Fuhrman until more information comes out about the content of the tapes.

All of those contacted said the region had been unfairly stereotyped and that white supremacists were not accepted in the community. "It doesn't make any difference what color you are. That's how most residents feel," said Wanda Nordgarden, a clerk at Kid Zone toy store. She said the town didn't need the negative publicity associated with Fuhrman.

"All this has just brought more troubles," she said.

Idaho ACT scores above U.S. average

By Karen Tolkin
Times-News writer

BOISE — Idaho's most recent American College Testing scores were slightly above the national average for the second year in a row, the Department of Education announced Wednesday.

College-bound students take the test before entering college. In this state, they scored a composite of 21.2 compared to the national composite of 20.8.

Average scores haven't budged since last year, said Sally Tiel, director of guidance, assessment and evaluation for the state.

That's surprising, she said, considering that the number of students taking the test has grown steadily over the past four years. A total of 9,275 students took the test this year, compared with 8,881 last year.

"Usually the more people you have involved in a testing environment, you're getting more students that are just regular students that aren't just top-of-the-line students, and they don't answer as many questions correctly," she said.

Idaho students scored on average 20.6 in English compared with 20.2 nationally, 20.1 in math compared with 20.2 nationally, 21.9 in reading compared with 21.3 nationally and 21.5 in science reasoning compared with 21 nationally.

Tiel said the higher-than-average scores may be due in part to Idaho's reading requirement in schools as well as classes that are more rigorous than in other parts of the country. And more students are taking it because more intend to go to college.

Around the nation, New Hampshire got the highest composite score — 22.3 out of a possible 36 points. Mississippi scored the lowest with 18.8.

Bird sparks range fire

The Times-News

BURLEY — A bird caught in a switch on a high voltage power line sparked a fire Tuesday night west of Burley that blackened about 3,000 acres of brush and grass.

"(The bird) literally burst into flames, and his burning carcass fell into the grass," Idaho Power Co. spokesman Dennis Lopez said.

Apparently a large-bodied bird had inched itself into a switch on an Idaho Power power pole and became a conductor on a high voltage transmission line, Lopez said.

That money then could be put into the fund that the state matches.

Also at Wednesday's meeting, architect Skylar Rabel discussed plans for the district's proposed building on the College of Southern Idaho's campus. CSI leased the health district 3.37 acres for a nominal fee.

The board directed Juntunen to begin the application process for a Community Development Block Grant of up to $500,000 for the Twin Falls building.

For the new Cassia County offices, the district will open bids at 3 p.m. Aug. 29 for an estimated $190,000 renovation of part of the former Cassia Memorial Hospital in Burley.

Three general contractors from Burley are interested in the project, Rabel said.

"We're changing the course of America," Kempthorne added.

Fox said that "wonderful things" have been happening in the state Legislature. New funds for reading with phonics, for discipline, and for general school building architectural designs are among this year's successes, she added.

Speeches over, there was plenty of time for homemade carrot cake or leftover corn on the cob, or camaraderie.

"The camaraderie of Republicans" is what draws state Sen. John Sandy, R-Hidalgro, to those events, he said.

"We have a good time. We don't really talk politics, we talk friendships," he said.

Busy mom to drop-in guests: Drop out

DEAR ABBY: Would the widow in Portland, Maine, whose family members drop by unannounced, like to adopt me? I have a husband, two small children and a full-time job. In the evenings it is a scramble to get dinner on the table and find time for play and baths. Yet, my in-laws and friends also "pop" in on us.

Dear Abby
Abigail VanBuren

When all is finally quiet. The last thing we want to do is put on our "company" face.

We would love to see those who have the consideration to call ahead. It would enable me to sweep up the crumbs and clear the dishes from the sink. My kids will be small for only a short time, so housework is done after they have gone to bed. Common courtesy is not a thing of the past. It would save me much embarrassment if people just stopped and picked up the phone.

DEAR FED UP: I always advise my readers to call before dropping in. However, you probably are at a disadvantage because you live in a resort area where the living is more casual. Many people don't mind

"drop-ins," especially in small towns, but for the rest of us, it certainly can disrupt a day.

DEAR ABBY: Earlier this year, you published information in your column from a Northwest Airlines official in response to a reader's inquiry about what happens on an airplane when you flush. Abby, his answer was incomplete.

While ideally the contents of the holding tanks are emptied after planes land, there have been cases when the tanks leaked, while the plane was in flight, and "blue ice" (complete with contents) fell from the sky. It happened in the St. Louis area not long ago. You can verify this with the St. Louis media.

I should add that, unlike the person who ended his letter by assuring you that he wasn't from Flushing, N.Y., I WAS born in Flushing. In addition, the very spot in the St. Louis County judges chambers in which I was married later became the ladies room of a pizza restaurant. One could say that I have previous connections to the subject.

Just sign me ...

'DUCK, CHICKEN LITTLE'
DEAR ABBY: This is for Ernestine G. and her friends in Lancaster, Ohio, who were wondering why romance novels are published in such small print.

The public library, as well as many publishers and private organizations, have large-print books available by the hundreds. This includes romance novels and almost any other subject one might enjoy.

I have been reading large-print books for many years, even though my eyesight is pretty good. It is simply easier to read a large-print book when I am walking the treadmill or riding the exercise bike (so I won't get too bored), or in the evening when the lighting isn't great.

DEAR READER: Thanks for letting me know that publishers have already gotten Ernestine's message. Now I can put my magnifying glass away and pick up some of those large-print books!

Senator asks for halt to drawdown

LEWISTON (AP) — Two weeks after the Orofino Chamber of Commerce and its allies lost their bid in federal court to halt this summer's drawdown of Dworshak Reservoir, help may be on the way.

Sen. Dirk Kempthorne, R-Idaho, is asking U.S. Commerce Secretary Ron Brown to stop any further drawdown until after Labor Day. The reservoir near Orofino is about 35 feet below full pool and dropping.

The water is intended to help endangered salmon negotiate the Snake River. But Orofino merchants say they are losing millions of dollars in tourism because boating on the reservoir becomes impossible with the lower level.

Kempthorne said he was advised the Commerce Department, which oversees the National Marine Fisheries Service, has agreed to halt further drawdowns at Libby Dam in Montana for salmon.

Mill closes doors for good; 40 employees out of work

SALMON (AP) — The Salmon Intermountain sawmill, a mainstay of Salmon's culture and economy for 50 years, has shut its doors for good and will be on the auction block in October.

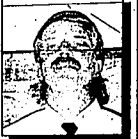

Salmon Intermountain President Dallas Olson said the 40 employees idled by the closure have been offered a two-year retraining program. Among them is Glenn Nichols, one of three people who worked at the mill since before six employees bought it from Clumpion International in 1984.

"We've made up our minds that this mill is behind us, that it's history," said Nichols, who worked at the mill for more than 15 years. "We're facing a major decision right now, trying to decide whether I'm going to apply at the mines or be retrained. It's going to be difficult."

The closure prompted by the cost and scarcity of timber also will affect log, lumber and chip truck drivers, and the Salmon businesses where they spent money on food, gas and lodging.

The cost of the mill's demise is partially hidden by a booming central Idaho economy for now, but the new Bearcraft Mine is expected to play out in seven years and a $60 million cleanup at the Blackbird Mine near Cobalt will last only a few years.

Size of transportation board causes worries

LEWISTON (AP) — Idaho's main north-south artery will not be short-changed under an expanded Idaho Transportation Board, the panel's new chairman says.

"If you think about it, you have more people affected by Highway 95 now than with the old board," Boise developer Chuck Winder said Tuesday during his first swing through Lewiston as the chairman of the seven-member board.

Winder, Meridian contractor Monte McClure, Coeur d'Alene accountant John McHugh and former Idaho Sen. Mike Mitchell of Lewiston all come from regions directly affected by the highway, he said. Mitchell was one of three members before the board was expanded two months ago.

Former Port of Lewiston manager Ron McMurray has been trumpeting his concern the highway could lose its share of transportation money under the expanded board.

He said there could be a dilution of power with one of seven members from Lewiston instead of one of three.

McMurray, general manager of the company managing the port's warehouse, has helped get the Idaho U.S. Highway 95 Association back into business and create the Greater Lewiston Area Transportation Committee.

"My feeling is if we are organized properly and present the right kind of information, it really wouldn't matter if it is a board of three or a board of seven," he said.

Winder said the board needs to look at innovative ways to improve Highway 95.

"I think there is a real need for an improved 95, both for commerce and tourism," he said. "Until we get a better Highway 95 from Canada to south-western Idaho, we haven't tied the state together."

The highway, which represents 30.2

percent of the state's principal arterial miles, has had its share of the total budget decline from 52.6 percent to 38.5 percent during the past few years, according to Idaho Transportation Department figures.

Transportation officials said that high-water mark included almost all of the $20 million Lawyer's Canyon project and a $5.2 million Parma-to-Payette project.

Swift Transportation Co. has announced it will no longer run its trucks along Highway 95 between Lewiston and Council because five of the company's most serious accidents occurred near Council.

Defendants say search turned up zero evidence

BOISE (AP) — When narcotics officers scoured the home of a Boise couple accused of making methamphetamine, they found a child's chemistry set, glassware, household cleaning items and a recipe — but no illegal drugs.

Despite the absence of key illegal ingredients or "precursors," Ada County prosecutors say they will prove Kathy Diane Ferguson, 46, and David George Ferguson Sr., 45, intended to make crack.

In the month following the June 29 bust, they filed, dropped, amended and refiled charges against the two.

The Fergusons are slated to be back in court facing charges of attempting to manufacture a controlled substance.

Deputy Prosecutor Kevin Swain acknowledged he initially believed either crack or its ingredients were found in the bust.

"The truth is there were zero drugs found, and zero precursors found: those are the things you use to make drugs," David Ferguson Sr. said from the Ada County jail.

Swain said evidence of illegal ingredients is not required to prove the Fergusons were attempting to make the drug.

"What you'd need is proof of the defendants' intent," Swain said.

Idaho Bureau of Narcotics Chief Glenn Ford had said the couple was "doing the cook" as officers entered the apartment.

"We entered based on the information that they were manufacturing meth, and that's what they found," he said.

David Ferguson Sr. had a different description.

"My wife was reading a book on the couch, and I was pecking a lunch trying to take my grandson and two of his friends on a picnic at Julia Davis Park," he said. He said he believes a paid informant, hoping to avoid drug charges, lied to Idaho Bureau of Narcotics officers.

"The told authorities we had 40 gallons of P2P — worth $2.5 million," David Ferguson Sr. said. "There was not one drop, not even the residue from any."

"I'm not saying we're pure and clean as the driven snow, but that's not justification for what they did to us," he said. "Once the bust went down, and the media was there, they didn't want to look like fools with egg on their face."

Charities fear they may be shortchanged

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — Some charities fear they might end up short on cash because of changes in the state employees' giving program.

Starting this year, the United Way will run the state's employee fund-raising campaign, in which employees donate a small amount each month to charities of their choice.

The change is designed to reduce overhead and save time by shifting responsibility for the campaign from state committees to the United Way.

State personnel director Dick Hutchison said about 30 percent of the state's 16,000 employees participated last year in a campaign that raised $60,000 for charities.

But Barbara Favocci is skeptical about the change. The state director of March of Dimes said those charities are afraid United Way will have an unfair advantage.

A Bosnian Croat woman weeps when she reaches Davor, Croatia, Wednesday, after she was expelled from her home in Serb-held Bosnia.

Croats set to battle Serbs again

ZAGREB, Croatia (AP) — Truckloads of Croatian troops headed south Wednesday to protect the medieval port of Dubrovnik from Serb guns, while Croat forces advanced on Serb-held lands in western Bosnia.

U.N. officials said Bosnian government troops appeared to win control of a strategic hill in western Bosnia on Wednesday. With the move, the Muslims and their Croat allies now threaten two towns in western Bosnia that have been held by Serbs for over three years.

A U.S. proposal to end the fighting, meanwhile, won initial positive responses from the governments of Croatia and Bosnia as well as the Bosnian Serb rebels — a feat that has not occurred with dozens of previous proposals.

More than 2,000 Croatian soldiers headed down the Adriatic coast, including 1,000 toward Dubrovnik, said U.N. spokesman Chris Gunniss.

Gunniss said a Croatian offensive could begin within days to drive back Bosnian Serb forces within artillery range of Dubrovnik. Sporadic shelling resounded from mountains beyond the city. Associated Press correspondent Shawn Pogatchnik reported Wednesday from Dubrovnik.

In Washington, State Department spokesman David Johnson urged restraint.

The United States believes that now is the time not for military offensives, now is the time to take advantage of the opportunity that's presented itself to pursue a negotiated solution to this conflict," he said.

In western Bosnia, at least 30 Croat soldiers were killed in a battle near the Serb-held town of Drvar, according to Croat military sources. Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic said his forces were holding their ground.

Taking Drvar would put the Croats within striking distance of Bosanski Petrovac, the last major Serb-held town in western Bosnia, and enable the Croats to link up with their Muslim allies in Bihac.

About 50 miles to the east, Bosnian government troops appeared to have won control of strategic heights south and east of the Serb-held town of Donji Vakuf, U.N. spokesman Lt. Col. Chris Vernon said Wednesday.

Donji Vakuf lies on the highway to Jajce, a predominantly Muslim-Croat city that fell three years ago to Serb forces. If Croats took Donji Vakuf and then Jajce, they could threaten Banja Luka, the main Serb stronghold in northern Bosnia.

Some Chechens hand over guns

GROZNY, Russia (AP) — In a step toward bringing a peace accord to life, a small band of Chechen rebels, handed in their weapons Wednesday and Russian troops began pulling away from a front line.

Fighters in the village of Zandak turned over 47 light weapons, including assault rifles and grenade launchers, said Sandor Meszaros, head of the Chechnya mission of the Organization on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

The OSCE has been mediating peace talks aimed at ending the eight-month war. On July 30, the talks produced an agreement that the Chechens would disarm and that the Russians would withdraw some of their troops.

But implementation stalled and the stalemate finally broke only after President Boris Yeltsin threatened to reignite the war unless the rebels immediately began disarming. They agreed Tuesday.

Although the Russians have not announced any troop pullouts, a long column of troops on Wednesday left the front line near Vedeno, about 25 miles southeast of Grozny, the Chechen capital.

Villagers along the route shouted "Troops out" as the Russians passed by and scooped up tank shells and grenades they left behind.

Vietnam marks start of struggle

TAN TRAO, Vietnam (AP) — Fifty years ago Wednesday, a small group of Vietnamese assembled in the rain-swept and poverty-stricken hills of northern Vietnam.

Led by communist patriarch Ho Chi Minh, they launched a 30-year struggle for unity and independence that ended only after his forces defeated both France and the United States.

"The decisive hour in the destiny of our people has struck. Let us stand up with all our strength to liberate ourselves!" Ho reportedly said at the time, inspiring delegates even though he was weakened by malaria.

On Wednesday, veterans of the Aug. 16-17, 1945, meeting journeyed over soggy roads and flooded bridges for a ceremony that kindred the Communist Party's image as torchbearer of Vietnamese nationalism.

"Celebrating the event today, it seems as if we still listen to Ho's appeal," said party leader Do Muoi, kicking off two weeks of festivities leading up to Sept. 2, the 50th anniversary of Vietnam's declaration of independence.

Vietnam's communist leaders are using the anniversaries to bolster their profile even as they try to modernize the economy and expand relations with the outside world. Conservatives worry that recent successes, such as normalization of relations with the United States, will undermine the Communist Party's grip on power.

Ho, realizing the end of World War II was creating a power vacuum, organized the congress at Tan Trao. It was held one day after the war ended. Vietnam was occupied by dispirited Japanese troops, and Ho wanted to strike for independence before France could reoccupy its former colonies in Indochina.

More than 60 communists and nationalists attended, and their "August revolution" succeeded when Ho's forces occupied Hanoi. But the French eventually returned, leading to a war that ended only with the full Saigon in 1975.

Pebbles give hours of cheap enjoyment

The Snake River Canyon has its fair share of wonders to captivate the widest spectrum of interests.

Hagerman, with its trout hatcheries and fossils, is no exception. Lower Salmon Dam, a mile or so west of town on Highway 30, has excellent boating facilities that attract many a ski boat enthusiast. I never tire of watching novice skiers fall off, then willing them up on the next try. Speed and splash create marvelous fans of spray as boat and skier run through their paces — a lot of fun and noisy revelry.

There is nothing like seeing the whole family out in the sun enjoying each other's skills and laughing at the inevitable spills. I do not own a speed boat and am not likely to, so I take pleasure in watching.

On safari!
Peter Page

A little trail heads off to the left of the Lower Salmon Dam boat dock, leading up a river — enticing my family and me to follow it. An abundance of shade under the trees that grow in profusion along this stretch had an immediate appeal to us on a recent-summer's day.

I noticed a few pebbles and picked them up, pondering their shapes and colors.

Presently, more and more lay in our path, an amazing array of variations. The artist in me came alive — marveling at the hues of red, blue, gray, brown and even white. Striped and speckled, flat and round, large and small, masses without number.

Somewhere along that path, I lost sight of and blocked out the world of motorized boating. Here, in all their simplicity, arrayed in nature's glory and assembled for our pure enjoyment lay a hillside of pebbles.

Pictures of my surfing days on some of California's pebbled beaches entered my mind, how the waves crash over them and the noise created when the water recedes.

Just for a moment, cobblestones in Europe regained my memory, the White Cliffs of Dover in England tagging along next in my reverie. For just a little while, this relatively small and insignificant area became my world of wonder. Somehow, the work place and all the stress of my business, week-dropped from my weighted shoulders.

I lost myself among the stones, juggling with one and feeling another with a rougher texture, then another that was perfect for skipping across a little stream that entered the Snake nearby. I found a bird's egg, a cannon ball and a plain odd-shaped stone. My family talked about the force of water that had tumbled them to become so round and smooth. It was a wondrous paradise for an active imagination.

Now I know some might think I'm hard up for jollies or just a simplification of the highest order. Some might even think that I have pebbles stacked up between my ears, but before you commit me to that happy place, let me say just a little more.

I, along with my family and at no great expense and with very little danger, gained an hour or two of true enjoyment. After all, that's what this generation is desperately seeking — so why not seek a heap of pebbles?

It's the little things that count if they are cherished.

May all your rocks be pebbles, and let there be no hard places at all.

Peter Page's love for the outdoors began during his childhood in the southern United States in Rhodesia, now known as Zimbabwe. He came to the United States as a young man and now lives in Jerome — where he helps manage a small market.

By attacking the journey a few hundred miles at a time, 2 Twin Falls bikers ride from coast to coast

By William Brock
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — It's taken 15 years, but Leon Smay and Jan Mittleider finally have accomplished their goal of bicycling from sea to shining sea.

They didn't make the 3,500-mile trip in a single, slow push. Instead, they tackled it in segments of a week to 10 days — knocking off hundreds of miles before returning to hearth and home in Twin Falls.

"We thought it would be an adventure and a good way to see the country," Mittleider said after completing the final leg of the journey last month. They spent five full days and two half-days in the saddle en route from Green Bay, Wis., to Buffalo, N.Y.

The transcontinental journey did a lot to restore their faith in the human condition. "You hear in the news about how the world is going to hell in a handbasket, but we found the world is still in pretty good shape," Mittleider said in a recent interview. "We found that people are still willing to help if there's a problem."

Strangers opened their doors to Smith and Mittleider, and there was an easy informality as the pair wheeled across America's vast and ever-changing landscape. Interestingly, "we found that people were nicer to us as we went east," said Mittleider. 48 Good Samaritans were continually offering lifts, cool drinks, and advice about local road conditions. Simply put, bicycling was the perfect icebreaker and it was the most satisfying way to travel.

"It's a very intimate way to see the country," Mittleider said. "It's also an effortless way to stay in shape."

For Mittleider, a physical education instructor at the College of Southern Idaho, staying in shape is a way of life. Smith, a local attorney and member of the Idaho Transportation Board, also likes to keep fit — but he doesn't get much opportunity at work.

In addition to fresh air and exercise, the pair figured bicycling "would be an adventure and a good way to see the country," said Smith, 58.

The less-is-more spirit of cycle touring meant that even the cheapest motels felt sumptuous, he said, adding, "It changes your whole perspective."

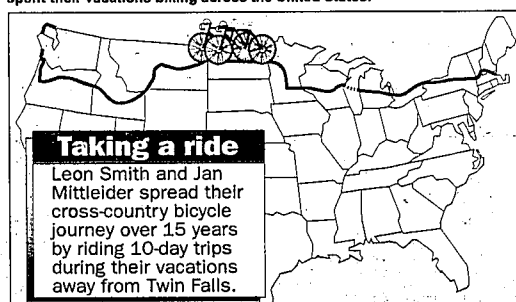

There were good times along the way — particularly in New England during the fall color spectacle, and the ride from Yellowstone National Park to Bozeman, Mont. There were bad times as well — into headwinds, driving rain, and the domain of bottle-necking racers.

Fortunately, there was only one accident. Last month, Smith took a tumble in London, Ontario — cracking his helmet, bruising his ribs and grinding away some skin on his legs and shoulders.

"We've had some close calls, but we've never been hit," he added.

Over the past 15 years, Jan Mittleider and Leon Smith of Twin Falls have spent their vacations biking across the United States.

Taking a ride

Leon Smith and Jan Mittleider spread their cross-country bicycle journey over 15 years by riding 10-day trips during their vacations away from Twin Falls.

DANA JOHNSON/The Times-News

The pair have always been big on "active" vacations, but there was a steep learning curve after they set out in 1980 on the ride from Boise to the Oregon coast. The delightful, "anything-can-happen" quality of the road emerged on the very first day — when the pair happened across a well-muscled African-American man riding, bare chested, with a green parrot on his shoulder. The trio rode together for 7 miles, then the man noticed how heavily his companions were loaded.

Today's bicycles range from mountain to beach cruisers

Mountain bikes. The most popular bike on the market today, the mountain bike is something of a misnomer. It can be used to climb — and ride down — mountains, but the bike is really the equivalent of a four-wheel-drive truck: It can take riders through woods, across sand and through thick grass.

With wide, knobby tires, a sturdy frame and shocks or suspension forks that cushion the ride, the bike can withstand loads of pounding. The mountain bike features 18 to 24 gears, giving the rider more low gears for climbing hills. And, because mountain bikes are used on rugged terrain, they are equipped with cantilever brakes, which deliver better stopping power than the side-pulled brakes found on other styles of bikes.

Handbars on mountain bikes vary: Performance mountain bikes designed for serious off-road riding come with handlebars that force the rider to lean forward and look downward the ground; inexpensive models, also known as city bikes, have handlebars that let the rider sit more upright.

Anyone planning on riding unpaved trails. And, if you live on or near dirt roads, you should consider a mountain bike too, said Glen Harston, manager of Bicycle Castle in Casselberry, Fla.

Low-end mountain bikes start at about $200, but bikers can spend up to $1,700 for a bike.

City bikes. So what should you buy if you want a bike that will do OK on roads that you also can ride down a sandy trail or through the woods every couple of months?

More than likely, says Deena Bred, co-owner at Orange Cycle in Orlando, you're looking for a low-priced mountain bike, which some people in the bike world are calling a "city bike."

Equipped with 18 to 21 gears, cantilever brakes and wider stems than those found on a performance mountain bike, the city bike can be outfitted with either a wide, knobby tire or a wide smooth tire designed for road use. The wheel rims will be sturdy but not as lightweight as those found on more expensive mountain bikes.

Though you won't be able to zip down the street on a city bike as fast as you could on a racing bike — thanks to the fat, knobby tires and the beefier frame of the city bike — the tires are safer than the skinny tires found on racing bikes. Plus, she said, people like the idea that they can occasionally go off the road.

"You can do everything with a city bike," Bred said. "It's kind of like the sport-utility vehicle like the Ford Explorer."

Road bikes. What ever happened to the 10-speed?

It matured, gained some more gears and is now known as a road, or racing, bike. These sleek, lightweight bikes with the skinny tires and distinctive drop handlebars, still are the bikes of choice for those who plan to ride anywhere from 25 to 100 miles in a day. Today, they've got 12, 14 or 16 gears and they're made from materials that make them even lighter than the racing bikes of yesterday.

The bikes are fast, but they are not terribly sturdy. Hit a pothole and you could wind up with a bent rim or a blown tire. Even a few pebbles strewn on the roadway can send you skidding — which is why serious cyclists train only on roads they know.

Nor are the bikes comfortable for the casual cyclist. The seats are narrow and the bent-over posture required by the handlebars — for good wind resistance — bothers many riders.

"People using road bikes are the ones who are using it for long-distance riding and racers or triathletes," said Harston. "These are very avid cyclists."

Road bikes range from $700 up into the thousands of dollars. Like mountain bikes, the most expensive bikes feature hand-made frames and top-of-the-line components. But most local shops don't stock bikes that cost more than $2,000.

Hybrid bikes. The hybrid is to the bike world what the old El Camino was to the auto world. While the El Camino was half-truck, half-car, the hybrid is half-mountain bike, half-racing bike. Sturdier than a racing bike, but sleeker and lighter than a mountain bike, it's damned by some and praised by others.

"Hybrids are wonderful bikes," said Martin Tyrice of Altamonte Cycling and Fitness in Altamonte Springs, Fla. He says hybrids use the technology of mountain bikes — 18 gears, cantilever brakes — on a bike designed for road use. The tires are a medium width, not as wide as the mountain bike tires, but not as skinny as those found on a road bike.

Though enough for a person to ride down unfamiliar streets — where potholes or crumbling road would deter a racing bike — but with more comfortable seat and handlebars that allow a rider to sit upright, the hybrid is becoming popular with people who want touring bikes.

But the hybrid fights a bad reputation that it's a poor mishmash of the mountain bike and racing bike. "A lot of people at bike shops people away from hybrids and toward mountain bikes," Tyrice said. "But riding a mountain bike on city streets is like driving a 4-by-4 truck in Friday 5 o'clock traffic."

The hybrid — which costs from $200 to $800 — isn't designed to go across a grass field or down a dirt road, but it can take you to do most of your riding on pavement, and that's what you want.

Beach cruisers. In the early 1980s, the bike industry introduced the beach cruiser, a traditional old-style bike with a wide, comfortable seat and fat, balloon tires.

Designed for people who want comfort, the bike is not fast and doesn't handle very well, said Harston.

Available in either one-speed or six-speed models, beach cruisers cost from $150 to $300.

The wide seats — and the low-tech nature of the bike — appeal to older riders. And, while the beach cruiser is great for riders who simply want to ride slowly around the neighborhood, the bike isn't terribly versatile.

Summer planting

Montana Fish, Wildlife and Parks plot Doug Goetz files a load of Yellowstone cutthroat trout to Fossil Lake, in the background, near Cooke City, Mont., as part of Montana's high country fish planting program. About 10,000 two-inch fish were planted in this lake. Fish are planted in a seven year rotation in lakes in the Beartooth Mountain's wilderness areas.

Utah debates definition of wilderness

The Washington Post

CANNONVILLE, Utah — From a rocky promontory overlooking an area of southern Utah known as the Paria-Hackberry, visitors get a panoramic view of the "Grand Staircase," a cascade of white, pink and vermilion cliffs that foreshadow the scenic splendor of the Grand Canyon 50 miles to the southeast.

As far as the eye can see, there is almost no sign of human presence to mar the vistas of the sandstone-rock formations characteristic of the Colorado Plateau.

But to Utah's political establishment, much of this wild and geologically rich canyon country does not qualify as wilderness.

Nearly 20 years after Congress established procedures for bestowing permanent wilderness protection upon portions of the 270 million acres controlled by the Federal Bureau of Land Management, Utah's senior elected officials have largely settled their differences about which government land should be included. And much of the Paria-Hackberry was left out of legislation unveiled in June by a majority of the state's congressional delegation.

So was Kaiparowits Plateau, a forbidding, 2,000-foot-high cliff whose plateau extends for 60 miles.

The Kaiparowits looks like what the authors of the original Wilderness Act had in mind when they described wilderness as areas "where the earth and its community of life are untrammeled by man, where man himself is a visitor who does not remain."

But with a Dutch-owned company pushing to open a huge coal mine in the heart of the 650,000-acre Kaiparowits, the congressional delegation opted not to block exploitation of the plateau's 5 billion tons of recoverable coal.

The decisions on the Kaiparowits and the Paria-Hackberry are part of a struggle that has continued throughout the West ever since President Lyndon B. Johnson signed the original Wilderness Act in 1964.

should be preserved "in their original and unchanging beauty" as Johnson said, and which should be opened up for economic uses that also benefit the public?

The creation of the 100-million-acre federal-wilderness system during the past 30 years, under the 1964 Wilderness Act and the 1976 Federal Land Policy and Management Act governing BLM lands, has been marked by epic, drawn-out political battles.

Last year's designation by Congress of nearly 8 million acres of wilderness in the California desert was almost a decade in the making, and may yet be undone by Congress, which has been taken over by Republicans since that action.

Sixty years ago, Interior Secretary Harold Ickes wanted to turn almost all of southern Utah into a single, 4.4-million-acre, national park. Outraged Utahans defeated that grandiose scheme, but remnants of it can be seen in Capitol Reef and Canyonlands National Parks.

Saving much of the remainder as wilderness — a designation that prevents commercial development, mineral and energy exploration, road construction and motorized access — has long been a dream of the conservation community, which for several years has supported legislation to protect dozens of parcels totaling 57 million acres, 10 percent of the state's area.

But the Democratic sponsor of that proposal is no longer in Congress, and a majority of the Utah congressional delegation as well as Gov. Mike Leavitt, R, are united behind legislation that would protect less than a third of that.

In the arid environment of southern Utah, residents have been struggling to wrest a living ever since Brigham Young sent Mormons south from Salt Lake City to settle the area in the 19th century.

Population growth in the region remains circumscribed by nature: Only about 40,000 people live in the six southern counties most affected by the wilderness debate.

Resource extraction — timber in the high country, cattle grazing, mining and oil and gas drilling — is an important component of the economy of these counties, which generally have higher unemployment rates than the state average and far lower median family incomes than most other Utah counties.

To many of those who live in southern Utah, protecting wilderness means locking up their land and their economic future, cutting off access to energy and mineral resources and the kinds of booms that took place during uranium's heyday.

They fear that livestock grazing will be restricted (although it is permitted in wilderness areas), that four-wheel drive roads will be closed, that a way of life will be destroyed so that a backpacking elite may sample the joys of solitude.

"We have an economy in this state that for 150 years has been very closely tied to the use of non-private lands," said Mark Walsh, an official with the Utah Association of Counties. "The kind of tourism influx you get (with wilderness) isn't the kind of tourism that supports local economies."

To wilderness advocates, southern Utah is an irreplaceable jewel that is worth far more as an unspoiled landscape than as a collection of exploitable resources.

"It's magic country," said Scott Groene, an attorney with the Southern Utah Wilderness Alliance, a regional conservation group. "It's just a choice of short-term rainbow-chasing or stepping back and not being selfish."

The Utah delegation's legislation would protect twice as much of the land as county officials would like — some of them proposed that no land from their counties be included. But it would be slightly less than the 1.9 million acres proposed during the administration of former President George Bush by the BLM. Environmentalists at the time regarded that proposal as unacceptable.

The bill would go further than any previous wilderness legislation in releasing for development land not designated as wilderness. Unlike previous laws, which have allowed such lands to receive protection at a later date if they retain wilderness characteristics, the Utah bill includes "hard release" language: The BLM is directed not to manage the lands left out in ways that would keep them suitable for wilderness designation.

'It's just a choice of short-term rainbow-chasing or stepping back and not being selfish.'

— Scott Groene, Southern Utah Wilderness Alliance attorney

Briefly

Fish, Game seeks help with planting

BUHL — The Idaho Department of Fish and Game is looking for volunteers to assist with a wetland planting project Saturday near Buhl.

Approximately 12,000 aquatic plants will be hand planted. The slow and tedious process requires each plant to be individually placed.

When completed, the wetlands project will help to improve water quality, act as an outdoor education lab and provide wildlife habitat.

It will also be used as a research facility by the University of Idaho.

Proper attire will be tennis shoes and shorts or waders, if preferred.

Any person or group that would like to participate is encouraged to meet at 9:30 a.m. at the mouth of Cedar Draw Creek. Signs will be posted.

For more information, call the regional Fish and Game office at 324-4350 or 324-4359 before 5 p.m. Friday.

Ducks Unlimited sponsors Fun Shoot

TWIN FALLS — Shotgunners from all over the Magic and Wood River valleys will converge Aug. 26 at the Twin Falls Gun Club for a Fun Shoot sponsored by Ducks Unlimited.

Entries will be accepted on the morning of the shoot and participants can sign up from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Cost is $65, which entitles the participant to a Ducks Unlimited membership and a hat.

The entry fee for Green Wing, which is the under-18 class shooting at 16-yard targets only, is $20.

Four events in rookie through expert classes are planned, and fun shoots will be held after the main events. New shooters are encouraged to attend.

Live and silent auctions will take place, and the kitchen will be open for meals and refreshments. At least four guns will be given away, along with other prizes — including Ducks Unlimited valuables and gifts.

For more information, call 733-6045.

Author Moore to tell about adventures

KETCHUM — Author Greg Moore will present a slide show about his adventures on "Idaho White Water" at 7 p.m. Aug. 17 at the Main Street Book Cafe, 211 Main St.

Moore's adventures have evolved into a book that is a paddling guide for the entire state of Idaho. For more information, call 726-3700.

Redfish Lake anglers take kokanee fish; help sockeye

STANLEY (AP) — Endangered sockeye salmon got some indirect help during an abbreviated fishing season for kokanee at Redfish Lake.

In the two weeks fishing was open, more than 300 kokanee were taken.

That made more room for the endangered sockeyes.

Kokanee seasons were closed at Redfish Lake two years ago to protect sockeye.

The sockeye salmon, which don't migrate to the Pacific Ocean, look just like adult kokanee.

Potentially, 1 percent of the fish harvested may have been residual sockeye.

Paul Kline, research biologist for the Fish and Game Department, coordinator of sockeye activities, said lakes can hold only so many fish.

"Plans for increasing juvenile sockeye survival in the lake include reducing the pounds of kokanee to make room for young sockeye, and adding fertilizer to more total pounds can be grown," he said.

The sockeye enhancement plan, developed and carried out jointly with the Shoshone-Bannock Tribes, calls for removing half of the estimated 7,000 spawning kokanee from the lake.

Biologists made close checks of what was going on during the two-week kokanee season. Besides the 300 fish harvested, another 200 were captured but released.

Anglers from as far away as Utah came specifically to fish for kokanee.

After Aug. 1, adult kokanee move from the lake to Fishhook Creek to spawn, while residual sockeye stay in the lake.

Residual and Fish and Game biologists will trap additional kokanee in Fishhook Creek before they spawn, reducing the number of young kokanee produced in each of the next four years.

Kline said Idaho hopes to get approval from the National Marine Fisheries Service to allow kokanee fishing in the lake starting Memorial Day next year.

Visitors to Redfish Lake might see a lot of dead kokanee in Fishhook Creek. Kokanee, like other salmon, die naturally after spawning.

The Redfish Lake program is part of widespread efforts to help sockeye salmon reproduce and survive in Idaho.

"We can't do the job alone, but hopefully we will see some improvement in downstream migration survival and other conditions outside Idaho which will allow this unique fish to recover and maintain itself in its life cycle between Redfish Lake and the ocean," Kline said.

Some visitors don't like Yellowstone captive wolf show

WEST YELLOWSTONE, Mont. (AP) — They'll likely never catch and kill an elk, be romanticized by Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt or get shot by folks who don't like them.

Nevertheless, they are the latest wolves to become residents of the Yellowstone area.

Operators of the Grizzly Discovery Center showcased their newest attraction this week, a 10-member wolf pack purchased for an undisclosed price from a Montana breeder.

"These are not trained circus animals," veterinarian Gale Ford told the group of about 200 who paid the $6.50 to see the show. "The only thing we ask them to do is come in and out (of their pen) and be wolves." Moments later, when a beep signaled to the animals dinner was ready, the pack broke from its pen and scurried out into the one-acre "habitat" where a mixture of chicken, fish, liver and lungs awaited.

The video cameras rolled, Instamatics snapped and visitors whispered to each other, save for a couple of recalcitrant children who chose not to heed Ford's request for quiet during the wolves' first encounter with a crowd.

The wolves remained oblivious to the human show on the opposite side of the fence, gobbling their meal and darting lightning-quick about the enclosure.

The leader of the pup pack, a 15-month-old female, kept a close eye on her three-month-old crew, as they scurried among the rocks, trees and pond at their new home.

But in 20 minutes it was all over. One of the pups strayed from the pack and tried to return to her pen. Somehow she got outside the first of three fences surrounding the facility and had to be chased down. That wolf never came into contact with the crowd.

Sensing the rest of the pack was stressed, park operators called the wolves back into their pen and out of sight from the public.

"This is not a failure," Ford said after the wolves disappeared. "It's unfortunate ... (but) it's a learning process to go forward." The crowd seemed to enjoy the short show.

"It's the first time I've seen wolves. It's nice," said Germany's Frank Friesen, who passed through Yellowstone National Park without seeing a wolf. "We've seen elk, buffalo and chipmunks. We've seen no moose. No bears. No wolves."

The center's wolf exhibit isn't built yet. Ford said a separate habitat for wolves should be completed by Nov. 1. Until then, the wolves will split time with the grizzlies in the center's only enclosure.

The two species will never appear in the enclosure at the same time. If that were to happen, the little wolves would almost certainly become sport then meal for the grizzlies.

Not everyone is thrilled about the prospect of a for-pay wolf exhibit next to Yellowstone, where last winter 14 wild Canadian wolves were released into the park.

"We feel the same about wolves that we feel about their grizzlies," Mary Hoyt, Idaho field representative for the Greater Yellowstone Coalition, said last month. "These folks aren't interested in wolves in the wild. They're interested in wolves that are fed somebody to pay to see."

Ford contends the wolves in her exhibit are good news for the wild ones in Yellowstone.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE

Many strokes overthrow the tallest oaks. —John Lyly

It's easy for a defender to recognize and to take his share of tricks. More difficult is the matter of the slow tricks. Put yourself in today's East chair to test your vision and imagination.

South wins his heart queen and loses a club finesse to East's queen. What should East do? East should count on counting his defensive winners. In today's layout, he can count on winning the trump ace and two club tricks. (West started a high-low signal in clubs.) Since three defensive winners are not enough, where should East go in search of a fourth?

The heart and club suits hold no promise and if West has an unlikely trump king, it cannot disappear. This leaves the diamond suit as the sole prospect and, in spite of dummy's major menace, East must lead it immediately.

After East wins the club queen, he shifts to the diamond eight, covered by the nine, jack and queen. South knocks out the club ace and East continues the diamond attack seven, 10, king and ace. (It doesn't matter if East leads trumps before clubs.) Desperately, South tries to discard a diamond on a high club, but it doesn't work. East ruffs and South overruffs, but when East wins his trump ace, he cashes his diamond six for the setting trick.
