Fugitive caught

Captured man may have clues to Krieger case

By Karen Tolkkinen
Times-News writer

Krieger

JEROME – After two days of eluding law enforcement officers, a man accused of trying to murder his common-law wife was discovered hiding in a Russian olive tree near Interstate 84 Saturday afternoon.

His arrest may provide clues to the unsolved murder of Burley teen-ager Regina Krieger last winter.

Julian Garcia Hernandez, 27, was captured Saturday after 50 state and local police officers, sheriff's deputies and state investigators swept a field where cows were grazing.

Thought to be armed and dangerous, he had no weapons when he was captured. He was the fourth arrest in the case involving his common-law wife, who claims he beat her with a tire iron and then tried to drown her near Milner Dam, said Jerome Sheriff George Silver III.

Hernandez – also known as "Bo" – has possible connections to the murder of 14-year-old Krieger, Silver said. With his arrest, people may be more willing to come forward, he said.

"This guy is very intimidating," he said. "If you're intimidating, people have a way of not wanting to say anything."

The murder case has been hampered by Krieger's teenage friends who won't talk, apparently in fear of retaliation.

Hernandez has been mentioned as a suspect in the Krieger case, Cassia County Sheriff Billy Crystal said Saturday evening. No direct evidence ties him to the murder, but more information may be coming after he is interviewed this week, Crystal said.

"We're glad Bo's in jail," said Alan Smith, chief detective for the Cassia County Sheriff's Department, which is handling the Krieger case. He refused to comment further.

Hernandez now faces charges of kidnapping and attempted murder, Silver said, and may face others.

Wearing a green vest and tan pants, Hernandez blended into the tree where he was hiding. A team of four officers and a dog walking through the stand of Russian olives missed him the first time around.

"This is the most excitement I've had in 40 years," said John Buttars, whose son-in-law owns the land where Hernandez was captured.

"Two days in a row now they screwed up my spud harvest," said Ike Dean, who owns the potato field where Hernandez spent the night. His trucks were prevented from hauling potatoes during a massive manhunt Friday night.

Dean saw Hernandez about 2 p.m. after the fugitive walked out of the cornfield to Dean's potato harvester. He asked for a ride to use the telephone in a nearby potato cellar, and walked with Dean's son-in-law, Doug Lewis, to Lewis's pickup.

"He was pretty scratched up," Dean said. "We figured out who he was pretty quick."

Hernandez called his girlfriend in Filer on the pickup's cellular phone, and she said she couldn't talk because the phone was bugged.

Lewis then picked up the phone to call 911, and Hernandez jumped out of the moving pickup and started running.

Officers got to the scene shortly after 2 p.m., closed down the surrounding roads and searched all the buildings. They posted lookouts on the highway and on hay bales before he was spotted.

Video game's message will 'uplift' – subliminally

Los Angeles Times

CALISTOGA, Calif. — First came the command, "Eat Popcorn," flashed on a movie screen too fast for the naked eye to see. Then the pronouncement, "It's OK for you to be relaxed," its endless reprise on a self-help cassette tape masked by the lapping of waves.

Now, into the murky, quirky nether world of the subliminal, where information is conveyed below the threshold of conscious perception, enter the video game "Endorfun."

A-puzzle game that aspires to be the next "Tetris," the goal of "Endorfun" is to match the colored sides of a moving cube to the corresponding squares on a series of grids.

Then there's the game's other goal. By inserting 100 subaudible messages in the background music, "Endorfun's" programmers and its publisher, Time Warner Inc., say they hope "to uplift the heart and mind of its users."

And if, after subliminally absorbing such notions as "I am powerful," "I am at peace," "I am in harmony," "I love being alive," players are uplifted to the point of telling their friends to run out and buy the game — so much the better.

The subliminal messages — Time Warner prefers the term "positive affirmations" — seem innocuous enough. And all of them will be printed on the box.

Still, the game raises questions about the use of subliminals in digital media, a new and perhaps more potent platform for a controversial method of mass communication that dates to the 1950s, when advertising executive James Vicary flashed the subliminal messages, "Hungry? Eat popcorn," and, "Drink Coke," during screenings at a drive-in.

Moviegoers, he said later, bought nearly 60 percent more popcorn than usual and almost 20 percent more Coke. Whether or not he was telling the truth — and whether or not subliminals actually work — remains a topic of debate among advertisers and psychologists.

But the concept of subliminal persuasion caught hold of America's cultural psyche, serving through the decades as a flash point for consumer suspicion of mass media even as it was embraced as a tool for self-improvement.

Like all forms of media, subliminals are taking new shape in the digital age. And the relative ease with which messages can be inserted into computer code, combined with the increasing hours people are spending in front of computer screens, leads some psychologists and media experts to believe that the potential for mind control — voluntary or involuntary — is greater in the new media than in any that came before it.

Hidden persuaders

Los Angeles Times

CALISTOGA, Calif. — Despite expert opinions that subliminal messages have no effect on behavior, as a society we seem to persist in believing in their influence. Estimated revenues for subliminal tapes promising everything from weight loss to self-esteem have climbed as high as $50 million in recent years.

Despite repeated advertiser protests to the contrary, a telephone study commissioned by Ogilvy & Mather in 1991 found that nearly two-thirds of Americans believe subliminal advertising exists, and more than half think subliminal advertising can get them to buy things they don't really want.

In the 1960s, Vance Packard, author of "Hidden Persuaders," described the bumper lumps on Cadillac convertibles as a subliminal marketing tool appealing to sexual desires.

Wilson Bryan Key's 1971 book "Subliminal Seduction," which sold more than 2 million copies, traced the letters S-E-X in the ice cubes of a magazine ad for Gilbey's gin. More recently he has seen sexual imagery in the much-maligned Joe Camel character. Because sex sells, Key contends, sexual images in advertisements are likely to make them more effective.

"They can manipulate anything from your political views to your reproductive behavior, all in the interest of making a buck," he says.

The Federal Communications Commission has banned subliminal messages in broadcast media since the 1970s, when controversy erupted over a TV ad for a memory game called Husker Du that displayed the words, "Get it," on the screen for a fraction of a second.

But software remains unregulated.

The stigma associated with trying to influence behavior covertly has always inhibited media firms from using subliminals — or at least from admitting it. But technologists note that, in digital media, subliminals would be both easier to create and harder to detect. Consumers rarely see the lines of arcane computer code that make a program run, and without being a programmer they'd be unlikely to spot the specific commands governing subliminals anyway.

At a time when there is already a creeping discomfort with the dominant role technology has in daily life, Paul Saffo, director of the Institute for the Future in Menlo Park, says fear of subliminal messages in software "plays right into this growing unease around our information tools."

Not surprisingly, Gerald Rafferty, co-author of "Subliminal: The New Channel to Personal Power" and founder of the Institute for Subliminal Studies in Santa Monica, has a more positive outlook:

"The computer medium is the perfect medium for subliminal messages, because there are so many ways to mask them that you're not worrying about the things you are

Today, juvenile justice is counties' problem

MIKE SALISBURY/The Times-News

Times-News writers

TWIN FALLS – Magic Valley county officials say they are prepared to assume responsibility today for treating and tracking juveniles under state juvenile-justice reforms.

But as they create or expand their juvenile programs, they remain uncertain about future state funding and who has responsibility for sex-offender treatment and foster care.

"It is a little premature to forecast how much better or worse the reforms are going to be," said Twin Falls County Commissioner Brent Reinke. "What we're dealing with now is just numbers of kids."

Today the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare no longer rehabilitates juveniles. The counties have been taking over the agency's caseload into their evolving systems.

Health and Welfare has probably transferred about 40 to 50 cases total to the Magic Valley counties, said Sam Giles, state liaison for the 5th Judicial District.

Meanwhile, Minidoka and Cassia counties have designed a joint system to handle young offenders, with 5th District Magistrate Larry Duff in Rupert presiding over juvenile cases in both counties.

"There is just so much to handle, not everyone is prepared. It's going to be a bumpy ride," said Minidoka County Deputy Prosecutor Clayne S. Zollinger Jr.

Grants and state money are helping the counties with their new stewardship for the first several years. But after that, county officials say they hope lawmakers are committed enough to reforms to help them with funding in later years.

"We don't know if we have in fact enough dollars," said Jerome County Commissioner Roy Prescott. "And because of that we're uncomfortable."

Twin Falls County has gained statewide attention by having already amassed a team of volunteers, probation officers, a hired volunteer coordinator and a computer system containing information on more than 1,000 juvenile offenders.

"I have to say honestly that area has had the most foresight and has done the best job at this particular point," Johnson said. "It teaches other counties not to depend on Big Brother to solve

Mountain snow falls in West while rain, wind hit Midwest

The Associated Press

Snow fell in the mountains of Wyoming, Colorado and Utah on Saturday as thunderstorms brought 80-mph winds and hail to parts of Nebraska and Kansas.

Showers and thunderstorms stretched from the northern Great Lakes across the northern and central Plains into the central Rockies.

Rain spread across western Washington and Oregon, drenching Gold Bar, Wash., with 1.4 inches in the 24 hours ending at midafternoon.

Rainfall surpassed records in some areas, including Salt Lake City, where 1.01 inches fell at the airport to break the 1950 record.

Storms moving through South Dakota poured 3.3 inches of rain onto the Arlington area and 1-inch hail pelted parts of Minnehaha County.

Winds reached 80 mph in Pretty Prairie, Kan., overnight, causing some structural damage and downing trees and power lines around Omaha, Neb.

Mountain snow fell through the northern Great Basin and Intermountain regions. Up to 6 inches fell east of Salt Lake City on Friday.

The Atlantic hurricane season's 17th tropical depression strengthened into Tropical Storm Opal as it hovered off the northern Yucatan Peninsula.

The storm was expected to produce coastal flooding along the Texas coast and scattered showers and thunderstorms in Florida.

problems ... The philosophy is the basis of the reforms. The enthusiasm that they can make a difference is infectious."

Friday, workers were putting the finishing touches on a new 24-bed minimum-security detention center in Twin Falls County. The facility, which partly opens Oct. 9, will significantly thin out the crowd of juvenile inmates at the neighboring Snake River Juvenile Detention Center, officials said.

The new building will lighten the load for many counties in the Magic Valley that contract with Twin Falls County for beds, said Camas County Judge John Varin, who handles juvenile cases for six of the eight surrounding counties.

Last Friday, 33 juveniles entered the one-year-old Snake River Juvenile Detention Center, which has only 12 beds, Varin said.

"We were swamped there all afternoon processing them," Varin said.

"Some were coming in, and we were having to release some kids to make more room."

The shift of responsibility has forced local officials to "become creative" about how they spend their money, said Paul Frick, director of Twin Falls County juvenile detention.

For example, juvenile offenders have been refurbishing old student desks donated by the Twin Falls School District. And a local church donated bright red pews for court audience seats, he said.

The Magic Valley counties probably have hired or are about to employ 18 to 20 probation officers to track juveniles through the system from arrest to detention and beyond, Giles said.

"The whole idea is to keep kids in the community," Giles said.

"Now we can't just ship them out. Now we have to think of them as part of our community and what we can do to make them into good citizens," said Blaine County Commissioner Len Harlig.

Florida boy, 14, charged with shooting death of 13-year-old

Orlando Sentinel

TAVARES, Fla. — Just before first period ended at Tavares Middle School on Friday, a friend told Joey Summerall that Keith Johnson had a gun and was planning to settle a score.

"I said to him, 'Joey, he's going to shoot you. He said he wants to kill you,'" Kristin Shearer, 12, said Saturday. "He told me, 'No, he won't do something like that.'"

Just how many other youngsters knew about the gun is unknown. Several others have acknowledged either seeing it or hearing others talk of it. But in the hour between the start of school and the shooting, no one spoke to an adult. None of the kids, Kristin said, took Keith seriously.

In a crime that has left Lake County in a state of shock, police say 14-year-old Keith gunned down 13-year-old Joey in a breezeway crowded with students heading to their second-period class.

Joey, wearing his No. 10 Tavares Youth Football jersey, lay dead on the pavement after being hit in the head and chest with 13 bullets from a 9mm semi-automatic weapon, authorities said.

After the shots rang out, panicked students dove for cover or ducked into classrooms. Officials said it was miraculous no one else was hurt.

Keith was arraigned Saturday in a juvenile detention center in Ocala, Fla. on charges of first-degree murder and carrying a concealed weapon. The youngster was still carrying the gun when police caught him after a foot chase. He was being held without bond.

Tavares Police Chief Norb Thomas said Keith, who was suspended from school four or five times last year, had been cooperating with investigators. Thomas said he did not know the motive for the shooting.

Gore's daughter cited for having beer in her hand

CHEVY CHASE, Md. (AP) — The 16-year-old daughter of Vice President Al Gore was among a group of teen-agers cited for underage possession of alcohol at a party, a spokeswoman said Saturday.

Sally Aman, a spokeswoman for the Gore family, confirmed local television reports that Sarah Gore was issued what amounts to a ticket for holding an open container of beer in a car outside a party. She said the driver of the car was not drinking.

Montgomery County Police Sergeant Wayne Jerman said several juveniles were given civil citations for possession of alcohol at a party about 9:30 Friday night, but declined to identify any of them by name because of department policy on juveniles.

Jerman said the matter was referred to the department's juvenile services division. The maximum penalty for underage drinking is a $500 fine, he said.

with film and video. This could really be a big new field."

Screen savers, those images of floating toasters and Energizer bunnies that pop up on inactive computer monitors, appear to be an attractive repository for subliminal messages.

Capistrano Beach-based Interloc Design Group has developed a "subliminal module" that allows clients to insert into screen savers text or images that flash at 1/50 of a second.

In a demonstration he has shown to representatives of prospective clients such as Nintendo of America and advertising agency Chiat/Day, Interloc founder Jeff Oster displays an apparently black screen with some random images bouncing around it.

Then, with a click of a mouse, he slows down the rate at which a message is flashing to reveal the blinking word: "Sex."

The theory is that the subconscious mind — especially in the more relaxed 'alpha' and 'theta' states when brain-wave activity slows — is more susceptible to suggestion.

Messages purportedly embedded in heavy-metal songs by Judas Priest and Ozzy Osbourne were blamed for the suicides of young listeners during two highly publicized trials in 1990. The evidence was deemed insufficient, but separately the judge in the Priest case ruled that subliminals are not protected by the First Amendment.

Several grocery store chains have acknowledged playing "do not steal" subliminals under music to discourage shoplifting, and rumors persist that U.S. troops slipped subliminals in the rock music they blared at Panamanian leader Gen. Manuel Noriega in an attempt to drive him to surrender.

Director William Friedkin says he has acknowledged inserting subliminal images in his 1973 movie "The Exorcist," and has them in his upcoming "Jade" "to induce an emotional connection in the audience that they may or may not be aware of."

And Walt Disney Co. was embarrassed last year when it was discovered that mischievous animators had sneaked X-rated scenes into the 1988 movie, "Who Framed Roger Rabbit."

"We've been bombarded by subliminal messaging for 40 years or more," says Nelson Thall, director of the McLuhan Center for Media Sciences. "It's been done in radio and TV and movies, and subliminal messaging in computers will be as potent as the technology allows."

Only recently have computer software and video games come to be seen as mass media in their own right. But experts who have studied subliminals say there is reason to believe that their natural addictiveness may make them especially potent vehicles for the transmission of subliminals. Inspiring addiction is, after all, the key to a good video game, which unlike TV shows and movies must move someone to play over and over again.

"The video game rivets attention," says Howard Shevrin, a professor of psychology at the University of Michigan. "The person is attending very intently to the screen and therefore is more susceptible to the registrations of the subliminals."

Shevrin warns that positive subliminal messages can have unintended effects.

"If you think because you put positive messages into a game or a movie or whatever that the effect will be uniformly positive, that's just not true. The effect is unpredictable, because the unconscious mind works in highly idiosyncratic, individual ways," Shevrin says. "This idea of influencing our moods, our thoughts, our feelings with our subconscious minds is a risky undertaking. You don't fool around with the unconscious."

The man behind the game

Los Angeles Times

CALISTOGA, Calif. — Watching people's addiction to the enormously popular "Tetris" computer game nearly eight years ago — when he produced a version of the game for Spectrum Holobyte — gave "Endorfun" creator Michael Feinberg the idea of producing a video game with subliminal messages.

A veteran of the game industry, founding board member of the Zen Mountain Center and onetime owner of the first commercial ginseng farm in the United States, Feinberg founded Onesong last year with partners Noah Clemence Zim, Onye Onyemaechi and Paul Coleman and a small sum of capital collected from friends and family.

"People are surrounded by negative, violent messages all day long," Feinberg says. "We said, 'Let's uplift mass consciousness by putting subliminals into the best-selling game of all time.'"

Not a New Age kind of guy, Time Warner Interactive Production Vice President David Riordan visited Onesong headquarters here and was immediately sold on "Endorfun." At a time when the market was flooded with violent action games, the cube flipping around a grid of colored squares seemed simple and addictive. And Onyemaechi, a Nigerian drummer, had written music that meshed with the graphics of the game.

In the spring, Time Warner signed the deal with Onesong. As for the subliminals in the game: "We saw it as an aspect of the artist's expression and we wanted to respect that," says Riordan — although he did ask Feinberg to remove the message, "I honor my sexual energy." "These are all positive messages. There's absolutely nothing objectionable here."

Onesong's next product may be a game for children, into which Feinberg and his partners are considering inserting messages such as, "I am good at algebra," "I am healthy," "I am safe," "I love the dark," "I love the light."

50,000 women hope to prove in court that implants caused them

The Associated Press

It was all a frightening mystery to Kimberly Thompson: the throbbing migraines, the shortness of breath, the shocking 40-pound weight gain in just three months.

"It was the worst part of my life, wondering what is happening to your body," said the 25-year-old Chicago mother of two.

"There were times I would cry and say, 'What's wrong? Is it me?'"

It was clear to Rhonda Rice something was terribly wrong when she was hospitalized five times in a year.

"I was having anxiety attacks, irregular heartbeats, fainting spells," the 31-year-old Texas woman said. "Getting up out of a chair would exhaust me. I had severe hair loss. My face would break out in boils. I had a lot of problems."

Both women hope to prove their ailments had a common source: Norplant, a contraceptive touted as a major medical advance when introduced in the United States, and now, just 4½ years later, the target of a flood of lawsuits that could jeopardize its future — and, some say, perhaps even the future of birth control research.

Norplant, the first major new contraceptive since the birth control pill came on the market 30 years ago, was hailed as a safe, effective, no-fuss form of protection.

Six matchstick-sized, silicone-coated rods are implanted under the skin of the upper arm, releasing a synthetic hormone into the bloodstream that prevents pregnancy for up to five years.

Nearly 1 million U.S. women tried Norplant. Now, 50,000 users have retained lawyers to sue over it, according to Chris Parks, a Texas attorney representing 600 women.

Most claim they weren't adequately warned of the scope and severity of side effects — including headaches, weight gain, persistent menstrual bleeding, hair growth or loss, ovarian cysts, anemia and depression — or removal problems.

"They were sold a dream and got a nightmare," Parks said. "If you tell women all the facts about Norplant they will not be interested. ... The side effects don't go away and that's what (the company) wants everyone to believe."

"Women who thought they made intelligent choices about birth control now hate themselves," said Jewel Klein, a Chicago attorney representing 4,100 women in a state class-action suit, including Mrs. Thompson, whose implants were removed after three months. She says her health improved after that.

The manufacturer, Wyeth-Ayerst Laboratories, a division of American Home Products Corp., maintains Norplant is a good contraceptive — the Food and Drug Administration recently reaffirmed its support — and claims the litigation has been orchestrated by avaricious lawyers, some of whom were involved in the $4 billion global breast implant settlement.

"We believe in Norplant and in its safety and its efficacy," said Audrey Ashby, a Wyeth-Ayerst spokeswoman. "We're going to defend the cases vigorously ... and we hope the product will be vindicated in court."

On Tuesday, attorneys head to court to ask a federal judge in Texas to certify a national class-action suit on behalf of women claiming Norplant injuries. All federal cases were consolidated last year.

The attorneys claim Norplant wasn't adequately tested (several trials were in Third World countries), doctors weren't adequately trained and women — many of them young and poor — weren't adequately counseled.

They also claim users weren't warned silicone, which has been so controversial in breast implants, could cause serious health risks.

The company says Norplant has been tested for more than 20 years — including on more than 1,000 U.S. women — and been approved for distribution in 39 countries. It also says it provided extensive training for doctors.

The silicone — less than a gram — is commonly used in medical devices, such as pacemakers, Mrs. Ashby said, adding that revised warning labels note the ingredient.

Mrs. Ashby contends the timing of the litigation isn't coincidental: While only about 20 suits were filed through 1993 when 800,000 women had Norplant, that number skyrocketed to 309 — 59 seek class-action status — in the past 1½ years.

"It's greed," said Dr. Elizabeth Connell, professor of gynecology and obstetrics at Emory University's School of Medicine in Atlanta and a contraceptive expert for 30 years. "You have a bunch of attorneys who have deep pockets. As soon as they empty one, they look for the next one. That's what's happened here."

She said attorneys have employed the same tactics as in breast implant cases: recruiting women through media advertisements, then conducting seminars on what experts to use.

And while no one disputes women are sick, the doctor said, data don't support a cause-effect relationship with Norplant.

Connell also fears this controversy could discourage companies from developing new contraceptives in what already is a shrinking U.S. industry.

While the legal battles have just begun, the publicity already has taken its toll: Daily sales have plummeted from 800 to 60, Mrs. Ashby said.

Dr. Richard Ellenbogen, a Detroit area obstetrician-gynecologist, said he has removed about three-fourths of about 75 implants he had inserted. "I don't know of any physicians putting them in anymore," he said.

Kimberly Thompson of Chicago says the use of Norplant caused her to have migraine headaches, shortness of breath and a 40-pound weight gain in three months.

Police find parents killed, stuffed in closet

UMATILLA, Fla. (AP) — When Abraham Gershon refused to return to a group home, mental health officials and sheriff's deputies went to his parents' house to talk to him.

They found him asleep Thursday in a house reeking of decomposing bodies: Gershon's parents — David and Katie Gershon, both 67 — had been killed and stuffed in a closet.

Gay rights, racial politics, other thorny issues await high court

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gay rights, the role of race in political redistricting, the fairness of census counts and gambling on Indian reservations top the agenda as the Supreme Court starts its 1995-96 term.

To the justices' lengthening docket, the Clinton administration is seeking high court endorsement of its effort to shatter the 156-year-old tradition of excluding women at the Virginia Military Institute.

The high court completed one of its most conservative terms in 40 years last June by moving aggressively to the right in dramatic rulings on affirmative action, voting rights, school desegregation, religion and privacy.

It remains to be seen when the justices reconvene Monday whether the majority that fashioned those conservative victories, most often by 5-4 votes, will hold together. Also unknown is whether new cases will provide the conservative bloc with the opportunity to continue this rightward shift.

Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist leads the court's conservative bloc. Justices Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas are its most enthusiastic members.

In key cases last term, they were joined by Justices Sandra Day O'Connor and Anthony M. Kennedy, who are considered more moderate conservatives.

Justices John Paul Stevens, David H. Souter, Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Stephen G. Breyer most often were united in dissent.

"Last term's results lead me to approach the coming term with some considerable degree of concern and anxiety," said Steven Shapiro, legal director of the American Civil Liberties Union.

"Last year, the (court's) moderate middle collapsed. The question of whether that trend will continue ... bears watching," he said.

Clint Bolick, legal director of the conservative Institute for Justice, thinks the court is ready for a less-divisive term.

On the docket

The court has also agreed to decide:

- Whether the federal government must reimburse two chemical firms the $31 million they paid to settle health claims by Vietnam veterans exposed to the defoliant Agent Orange. Lower courts said no reimbursement is necessary because federal law would have protected the companies from liability.
- What are the constitutional bounds of punitive-damage awards to punish and deter misconduct in product-liability lawsuits. At issue is a $2 million award to an Alabama man who sued over a $4,000 flaw in his luxury car.
- Whether states may try to promote sobriety by banning price advertising for liquor. A lower court upheld such a Rhode Island ban.
- If local telephone companies may enter the cable television business in their service areas. A lower court struck down the federal ban on such cross ownership, but Congress could change the law before any word comes from the justices.
- Whether innocent owners can be forced to give up property used in a crime without their knowledge. The court could clarify the forfeiture power of law enforcement agencies in the case of a Michigan woman whose family car was seized by police after her husband used it for sex with a prostitute.
- If copyright law applies to computer software. A lower court denied such protection to part of Lotus 1-2-3.

"There are no great overriding themes to the new term yet," Bolick said. "What we'll probably see are shifting majorities rather than the fairly stark division we saw last term."

The justices already have committed themselves to deciding 42 cases by next June. They will at least double that decision docket as they sort through thousands of appeals — including the VMI case — this fall and winter.

The most closely watched controversy already granted review is being called a watershed for gay rights.

At issue is whether Colorado voters may forbid their legislature and every community within the state from enacting laws and ordinances designed to protect gays from discrimination.

The Colorado Supreme Court struck down that 1992 amendment to the state constitution, ruling it denied homosexuals an equal voice in government.

The nation's highest court displayed what gay-rights advocate Matt Coles called open hostility toward homosexuals when it upheld Georgia's anti-sodomy law in 1986.

"Lower federal courts picked up on that tone, he said. "The tone of the court's ruling this term may be as important as what it says about this denial of political access."

Last term, the court jeopardized political gains made by minority candidates from Congress to City Hall by ruling in a Georgia case that election districts drawn mainly to boost black voters' electoral clout must be presumed to be unlawful.

The legal and political impact of that ruling may become clearer this term, after the court decides voting-rights disputes focusing on congressional redistricting efforts in North Carolina and Texas.

The court could use the two cases to tell the nation's judges how to go about determining whether race has been a predominant factor. The justices also might clarify when racial considerations in redistricting can be deemed valid remedies for past bias.

Political redistricting could also be affected by how the justices rule on a challenge to the 1990 census.

The 1990 census was cause for dispute even before it began, and has been argued over in numerous courts for years.

The justices likely will focus their decision on a narrow, technical issue of how the courts untangle this legal jumble.

But their ruling may determine whether the government has to adjust the census figures to make up missing some 5 million people, most of them minorities.

Pardoned prisoner savors 1st full day of freedom

AURORA, Mo. (AP) — Johnny Lee Wilson slept late, watched pro wrestling and reacquainted himself with family and friends Saturday, his first day of freedom since winning a pardon after spending 8½ years in prison for a murder he didn't commit.

"I just want to spend some time with my family and stay right where I'm at for a while," he said.

A cheering crowd welcomed Wilson home following his release from the state prison in Jefferson City. Gov. Mel Carnahan pardoned Wilson, saying investigators manipulated the mentally retarded man into confessing to a crime he didn't commit — the 1986 slaying of 79-year-old Pauline Martz.

Wilson, 30, stopped for a Big Mac and fries, then rode back to his Ozarks hometown of 6,500 in a motor home with relatives and friends. He wiped away tears as he exchanged hugs and handshakes with about 200 well-wishers.

"I never thought I had many friends," he said. "But arriving home and realizing how many people were there, it was the most marvelous day of my life."

Wilson was 20 when Martz, a close friend and bridge partner of his grandmother, was found beaten, bound and gagged in her burned house. Wilson was arrested five days later. He was eventually sentenced to life in prison without a chance for parole.

Wilson later professed his innocence. Charges that his confession was coerced, and that Kansas inmate Chris Brownfield confessed to the crime in 1988, helped bring the case national attention.

Deliberation is real burden that Simpson jury faces, experts say

Orange County Register

SANTA ANA, Calif. — As the O.J. Simpson jury gears up for deliberations, jury experts and Orange County, Calif. criminal trial lawyers predict the process won't just be tough. It could be torture.

Consider the predicament of a juror in one Orange County case. He felt so antagonized he couldn't bear to look at a fellow juror's face. Finally, he fled the jury room and hunkered down in a bathroom. From there, he continued to deliberate — right through the wall.

"The bailiff saw the juror sitting in the bathroom and said, 'You can't do this. You have to be in the same room,'" said Thomas Hafemeister, a lawyer and psychologist who has met with Simpson trial Judge Lance Ito and who spent a week in August studying jury stress in Orange County.

"But it can get to the point," said Hafemeister, of the National Center for State Courts, "where you can't stomach the sight of your fellow jurors."

Hafemeister isn't venturing any guesses as to whether the Simpson jurors can all get along.

But the researcher, who is exploring the effect of stress on juries around the country, cites a variety of high-profile cases in which agonizing jurors reached a breaking point:

In Rochester, N.Y., a juror in a highly publicized murder trial suffered a massive heart attack after being elected foreman. His widow said the trial helped kill him.

A juror in the murder trial of Jeffrey Dahmer told a researcher following the verdicts — and subsequent mental health counselors — "I think there are 14 other victims in this case, and that is the 14 jurors. ... I am beginning to think there is no such thing as normal after this."

> 'It can get to the point where you can't stomach the sight of your fellow jurors.'
> — Thomas Hafemeister, lawyer and psychologist

A juror in Washington, D.C., Mayor Marion Barry's cocaine trial had to be hospitalized for depression and stress during deliberations.

"There's lots of things in this (the Simpson case) that could contribute to high levels of stress in the jurors," Hafemeister said. "What we don't know is how these people are doing together as a group. There may be a shared value system by this point. They may be of a relatively similar mindset. On the other hand, it may be they can't stand each other."

The Simpson panel also will face what jury expert Robert Gordon calls "the Rodney King syndrome."

"There's a heightened anxiety about how the other jury will view this jury's decision," said Gordon, director of a Dallas-based think tank on jury trials. "The other jury is the American public and the world community. You're not only concerned about voting your conscience, you're also concerned about how others view your vote."

If Simpson is acquitted, Gordon said, "There are those who will say they sold out, they were manipulated, even dumb. If they find him guilty, there are some who will say they're Uncle Toms, that they accepted the brutality of the state which has plagued minority groups in this country since the founding of the nation."

Even when jurors are in general agreement over a case — which, following the nine-month Simpson trial, seems unlikely — it particularly can be hard for jurors to examine grisly evidence or graphic photographs up close once they get inside the deliberation room, experts say.

"They really do feel like they are caught in the middle of what happened, and what happened was a horrible event," Hafemeister said.

But whatever the jurors go through, the alternates might have it even worse.

"We have actually found that alternates can experience stress more than jurors, in part because they have no control, they are not part of the decision-making process, whereas the jurors are now empowered, if you will," Hafemeister said.

5th man charged with murder in toddler killing

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A fifth man was charged with shooting a 3-year-old girl to death when the car she was in strayed into gang turf.

Anthony Rodriguez, 26, was charged Friday with one count of murder and five counts of attempted murder. He was being held on $3.5 million bail, said Annie Christy, a spokeswoman for the district attorney's office.

Six people were in the car that turned onto a graffiti-scarred dead-end street where gang members congregate. Ten to 15 people surrounded the car and opened fire when driver Timothy Stone made a U-turn.

Stephanie Kuhen was shot in the head and killed. Her 2-year-old brother Joseph was shot in the foot, and Stone suffered a minor back wound. The other three weren't injured.

Marcos Antonio Luna, 23, Marvin Alejandro Pech, 18, and two unidentified 16-year-old boys were charged with murder earlier in the week.

Report: Sky diving plane had too much weight, 1 door missing

WASHINGTON (AP) — A twin-engine plane that crashed last month and killed 12 people was overweight and had a door illegally removed, federal officials said.

The plane, which crashed about 30 miles north of Williamsburg, Va., on Sept. 10, was carrying 10 parachutists and a pilot. It hit a man on the ground. All were killed.

Investigators told The Washington Post on Friday that the Beechcraft Queen Air 65's flight manual had been altered to make the plane appear to be a model 65A, which can fly safely with its door removed.

But flying a Queen Air 65 with the door off can create "an unsafe condition" because the air flow across the aircraft's tail can become turbulent, according to the Federal Aviation Administration.

Turbulence make it hard to fly the plane straight, especially when only one of the plane's two engines is working.

Kinney, Roper leave legacy of service for the valley

Civic and cultural amenities don't just spring up in communities. People have to make them happen.

Two of those people died in Twin Falls last week – people who set an example of how to leave your community a better place than you found it.

One was Mary Jane Kinney, a Filer native and longtime advocate of the fine arts in the Magic Valley. Her credits and memberships make a long list: the Magic Valley Symphony League, the Twin Falls Music Club, the Magic Valley Community Concerts Association, the Idaho State Library Board, the Idaho Commission on the Arts.

Kinney was widely known and respected as a booster, organizer and financial backer of the arts. A passion of that sort may seem misplaced in such a rural Western setting, but Kinney's zeal was paid rich dividends for the community. While country music, cowboy poetry and Dutch-oven cookoffs are fun, man does not live by cornbread alone. Kinney helped leaven our cultural loaf with sprinklings of classical music, opera, dance and literature. We all should be grateful.

If Kinney's passion was the arts, John Roper Sr.'s contributions were more diverse. He lent leadership to a variety of community organizations, and he was a formidable fund-raiser.

The Boy Scout camp near Stanley largely owes its existence to his work. And he was a key player in downtown Twin Falls' beautification efforts of the 1960s. In fact, the vision and drive of Roper and merchants of his generation continue to pay off for Twin Falls, in the form of an exceptionally vibrant, healthy downtown.

Roper's capstone achievement was the high school auditorium that bears his name. Roper, along with many others, campaigned tenaciously so that the community's young people could enjoy that facility. Roper undertook that project despite debilitating health problems that would have sidelined a less determined person.

As we mourn these two fine people, we also should think about the spirit of service that shaped their lives. It is a spirit that leads people to look beyond the routines of daily life – to give time and talent to improve the community's future. It is a realization that important work will go undone unless someone is willing to do it for free.

Mary Jane Kinney and John Roper set an example worth remembering.

Public had treat with 'Annie'

I hope everyone in the Magic Valley had an opportunity to enjoy the wonderful production of "Annie Get Your Gun."

What marvelous talent we have right here. I'm so glad you decided to have a matinee on Sunday. It was a nice way to spend a day and enjoy dinner in one of your nice restaurants afterward.

Please continue to have a matinee on the weekend.

Speak up on Clear Lakes Grade

On the evening of Sept. 11, the West Point Highway District Board held its meeting. A good number attended, concerned about closing the old Clear Lakes Grade, whose closing would amount to an abandonment of right of way, which in turn must be done by due process of law.

Those attending the meeting were divided in their opinions, so a good discussion resulted but ended with the board favoring closure. On behalf of those who were in favor of retaining the right of way and for those who were in favor of allowing time to assess the impact the new grade will have on reducing traffic on the old one, I would like to encourage everyone interested to express themselves.

We have a road, why destroy it? Something which has served the public well for more than 50 years can't be all bad, nor nearly as dangerous as has been reported. It offers an alternate route in case of emergency, as well as a very scenic drive. Come and see for yourselves.

OBE tries to dump religion

Outcome Based Education is silently being forced on public primary schools in the nation. In the elementary grades, OBE does not teach children essential reading, writing and arithmetic skills but pretends to teach them "higher-order thinking skills."

OBE tosses out traditional values and replaces them with vague and subjective "learning outcomes." Under OBE, grades have no relation to academic achievement and knowledge. Colleges will have no criteria to judge whether students are ready for admission.

The Federal Department of Education, in collusion with the Federal Department of Labor, is moving with breakneck speed to develop a databank on your child that will, control his/her ability to get a job, get a driver's license, vote or even attain a marriage license. If the student will not accept the attitude changes prescribed by his teachers, he will be classed as "unstable."

Through the use of a central computer system already in use, the DOE is collecting and storing massive data banks on every student. Complete medical records, school records, job history, even personal family history, driving records, voting history and credit history can be accessed by anyone wanting to know your life history.

The purpose of this whole program is to do away with the religious beliefs any of the values that people had to bring this nation to its greatness. It will condition the attitudes and minds of the children to be submissive to a godless authority and take away their ability to think or work out their own problems.

Federal funds are used to coerce state and local school boards to accept the program. Teachers who can see the devastation coming and refuse to knuckle under will be fired.

If you have any desire to have your children accept your values, principles, creeds or ethics, you must rise up and put a stop to it. It can be stopped if the governor and state school superintendent refuse to accept it. Find out how insidious this program is and speak out.

The consequences of more Clinton

Cal Thomas

Writing in the Oct. 2 issue of The Weekly Standard, Bryan York recommends defeat as the path to victory. York says that a second Clinton term would actually be good for Republicans because a Republican Congress would be able to press reforms without taking all of the heat from angry interest groups. Using this standard, Lincoln might have delayed the Emancipation Proclamation to help more people focus on the immorality of slavery.

Pundits are creating various scenarios in which Clinton would remain in the White House and Republicans would mostly get their way. What a crock! And what a trap. These liberals know they're about to lose it all and are trying desperately to hold on to the sinking ship.

The president, meanwhile, continues to reveal his vulnerability by conducting a public therapy session in which he is both the counselor and the patient. He tells us we're in a "funk," but when his handlers realize he might be compared to Jimmy Carter and his "malaise" speech, the president declares us healed and feeling pretty good. Having once felt our pain, he now feels our joy.

What would be the consequences of having the Clintons (we get her as well as him – one of the few campaign promises he fulfilled) for another four years? The bureaucracy would continue to be staffed by Clinton regulators and other appointees, imposing their will on the states. In the Justice Department alone, notes former Attorney General Ed Meese, "we have seen a failure to follow up on some cases" that are not viewed through the prism of political correctness. Despite carefully staged events, the military continues to loathe this president, and, says Meese, "our foreign policy is in disrepair over Bosnia," the announced "breakthrough" in negotiations notwithstanding.

Then there's the Supreme Court. Many important cases are being decided by 5-4 votes in favor of conservative positions. A second Clinton term could see between one and three new justices appointed. While a Republican Senate could thwart the most radical, a stealth liberal could sneak through nonetheless.

Jack Kemp, who ought to have run for president, says a Republican is needed in the White House to finish the revolution. "With Newt Gingrich in the House and Trent Lott as Senate Majority Leader," says Kemp, "we will have the closest thing to a parliamentary system we've ever had. Congress will drive the agenda, no matter which Republican wins."

Those who were rejoicing last November when the GOP won control of Congress, but now are in a funk, should consider what has occurred since the signing of the Contract With America a year ago. The 104th Congress has produced more changes than any Congress since the New Deal, and in the coming months Republicans intend to present to the president a balanced budget, a plan to save Medicare from bankruptcy, a true welfare reform bill and the first tax cuts for families since the Reagan administration.

Republican National Committee Chairman Haley Barbour thinks Washington pundits and pollsters are playing their usual game. "The American people last year voted to change the direction of government policy," Barbour tells me. "At no time in American history have we achieved change when it hasn't been led by the president. How could it be in our interest not to have the presidency?"

Barbour says Democrats are mistaken if they think Ross Perot's announcement will save them. "Over 70 percent of those who voted for Perot in 1992 voted Republican last year," says Barbour. "Keeping our word will keep their support. There will be no market for a third party if we fulfill our promises."

For the most part, they are. So what's the beef?

Abstinence: The best policy for all

Robert Maginnis

A Peace Corps doctor stationed in Africa was fired recently for promoting abstinence in lieu of condoms as the best way to avoid AIDS and for endorsing a no-sex policy with host country nationals.

His dismissal came in spite of testimony from AIDS-infected Peace Corps workers who claim condoms haven't worked. Dr. J. Ricker Polsdorfer was released eight months early from a 30-month contract in Zimbabwe, where 10 percent of the indigenous population is AIDS-infected and up to half the Peace Corps' contacts are afflicted.

Nearly three dozen Corps workers in Africa have contracted HIV, the virus that causes AIDS. More than 6,500 Corps volunteers serve in 93 countries today.

They promote a better understanding of the American people which, if this case is indicative, includes a liberal view of sex and the promotion of condoms as the first line of defense against sexually transmitted diseases.

A 1992 Peace Corps study found that more than 90 percent of volunteers are sexually active during their two-year tours. A Corps training video includes HIV-positive volunteers who are frank about sexual promiscuity and taking precautions. Their sex partners were often local nationals, which contributes to the risk, especially where AIDS is widespread as in Zimbabwe.

According to the World Health Organization, nearly one-quarter of the sexually active population of Zimbabwe is infected with HIV. Most men who die of AIDS in Zimbabwe are in their 30s; most women are in their 20s.

David Bellama, Peace Corps' director in Zimbabwe, criticized Polsdorfer, saying, the "most serious problem" with your approach is the "very rigid stance you have taken on HIV/AIDS. ... You have pushed this stance to the point that you promote only abstention, disapprove of the use of condoms and have openly expressed the belief that sexual relations with host country nationals should be against Peace Corps policy."

Polsdorfer has it right!

There's good reason to promote abstinence rather than condoms. Abstinence in a sex-disease-ravaged country saves lives. Condoms, even when used consistently and correctly, sometimes fail.

Numerous studies have found that young people in the heat of passion often fail to use condoms properly and consistently. Most Peace Corps volunteers are in their 20s and fall into this high-risk category. Whether because of manufacturing defects, breakage, slippage or human error, condoms do fail.

The Corps' condom-pushing philosophy can be traced to Planned Parenthood, which was hired by the Corps to train volunteer doctors. Polsdorfer, who attended the training, says the doctors were told the best line of defense against is the condom.

Polsdorfer's supervisor, Bellama, said, "When you undermine condoms as a protection against HIV/AIDS, you are not helping Peace Corps volunteers, you are hurting them. ... I cannot in good conscience say that you are performing your duties in ... a satisfactory manner."

There is a view within the Peace Corps that consensual sexual relations with host country residents is a "high road to cultural integration," Polsdorfer says, adding that "risky sexual behavior is suicidal."

He promotes a no-sex policy with host country residents. Polsdorfer says a regional director in Africa "offered to buy out my contract" to get him to leave.

He negotiated to accept the "buyout" before the Corps terminated him. Perhaps the Corps' new director, Mark Gearan, the former White House communications director, can resolve this sticky case. He ought to settle with Polsdorfer and then discard the 1960s free-sex policy.

He should also distance the Corps from Planned Parenthood, whose approach has proved disastrous here and abroad. The real answer to the current AIDS epidemic is either abstinence or channeling sexual activity into monogamous, married relationships. That is the message the U.S. government should be sending along with volunteer ambassadors.

Opinion

U.S. needs a 2nd party before a 3rd

Before Americans embark on an adventure with a third political party, they might consider the advantages of having a second political party.

At the moment, there is only one organized political force in America, and that is conservative Republicanism. The exceptional discipline shown by Republicans in Congress is only the most striking sign of this. Less noticed is the role played by Republican National Chairman Haley Barbour, who is not just a mechanic but also a broker who links policy, politics, public relations and advertising.

E.J. Dionne

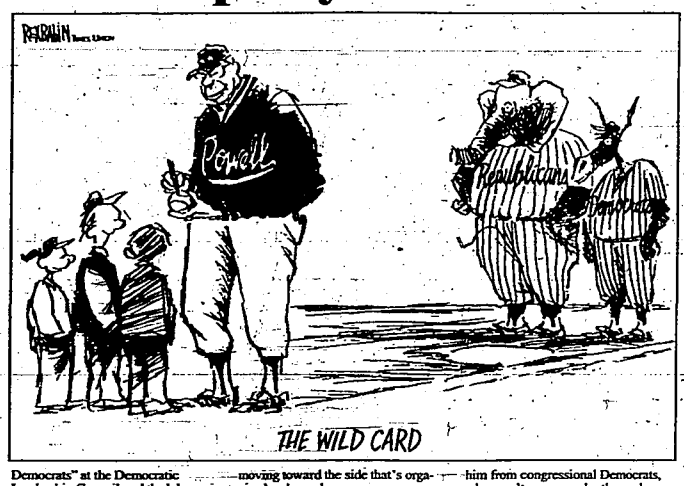
At the grass roots, conservatism thrives through the Christian Coalition, the National Rifle Association and assorted anti-tax and term-limits groups. Conservative Republicans have a loud voice in the popular debate – Rush Limbaugh's is the loudest, but he has slews of local allies and imitators. Conservative foundations spend their money with clear political goals in mind, unembarrassed by getting into the thick of partisan fights.

Above all, despite many differences of view, there is on the conservative side the sense that a common project exists and is worth pursuing: the Contract With America symbolized this even before its particulars were formulated. As the conservative writer David Brooks wrote last spring in Commentary magazine, "Even when conservatives differ over items in the Contract, there is built into the movement a sense of solidarity with the effort as a whole."

Among liberals, and among Democrats of all stripes, solidarity has become an antique notion. At the grass roots, the basic institutions of liberal and Democratic hegemony – notably the unions and the urban political machines – are in disarray, as the writer Harold Meyerson will show in a forthcoming book called "The Disorganization of America."

Pieces of the old coalition have their own sets of concerns, and there is no agreement on a common project, other than defeating Newt Gingrich. There is little unity among Democrats or on the center-left on the desirability of re-electing President Clinton.

Indeed, elements of the old coalition spend almost as much of their time attacking each other as in going after their Republican foes; witness the polemics between the "New Democrats" at the Democratic Leadership Council and the labor-oriented liberals at the Economic Policy Institute. These fights may not have a huge resonance outside Washington, but they are an important sign of the intellectual discord in the party as a whole. And, of course, there is the disjunction between the "centrist" strategy being pursued by the president and the seemingly more-traditional strategy being pursued by congressional Democrats, especially in the House.



THE WILD CARD

The contrast between liberal, Democratic disarray and conservative, Republican coherence has an impact well beyond the quest for electoral victories. It also radically redefines the country's political agenda.

The quest for sane, "centrist" policies on the budget, welfare, crime and other issues is reasonable enough. Mostly, the country wants to reform, not dismantle, government. As a rule, Americans are impatient with ideologues and don't think in sharply ideological terms.

But where is the "center" going to form if the debate is so one-sided – if a clear line of argument on the one side, backed by substantial resources, confronts poorly organized cacophony on the other? The center just keeps moving toward the side that's organized and vocal.

A perfect example of this is the welfare bill passed with overwhelming Democratic support in the Senate. Dismantling the entire system of federal guarantees for poor children would have been considered radical and dangerous even a year ago; most Republicans were against it. Now a bill that does just that is labeled "centrist" simply because the alternatives are even more radically skewed to the right.

As a result, most Senate Democrats and the president himself are going along with something they would have condemned with words such as "heartless" just a few months ago. Had Democrats been able to reach agreement on a welfare-reform bill last year, they could themselves have defined "the center." Their failure to find solidarity behind a practical measure thus had a huge substantive cost here, as also on health care and political reform.

Clinton's effort to set himself up as a "centrist" battling Republican "extremism" has helped him recover some ground in the polls, partly because a lot of what the Republicans are doing is not very popular, and partly because the strategy distances him from congressional Democrats, who aren't very popular themselves.

But this strategy only fitfully addresses the larger problem the president and the Democrats confront: that the country has no idea of what an affirmative Democratic program would look like and little confidence that Democrats could agree to pass such a program if they ever decided what it was.

The strategy also seems to accept that the political initiative will remain in Republican hands not only in Congress – that's inevitable through 1996 – but also at the level of ideas. Instead of defining the middle ground of politics, this approach risks becoming a chase for a center moved ever rightward by a skilled and well-organized ideological machine.

The risks for Clinton are twofold: If stalling the Gingrich Revolution becomes his central purpose, many voters may decide that Colin Powell could do that job as well or better. And if Clinton is re-elected, how will he govern when the Republican Party is dominant, the Democratic Party is enfeebled and third parties keep threatening to be born?

Parents must voice their concerns about movie

Parents wake up! We have a once-in-a-lifetime chance to make a positive difference in our community.

"Showgirls" is an NC-17 rated porno flick headed straight for our local theaters. NC-17 is comparable to X and has never been shown in the Magic Valley. However, if we do not voice our concerns now, it will be too late.

The content of this movie is degrading to women, containing Las Vegas strippers and gang rape. Let's keep this trash out of our local theaters.

Please join with me by expressing your concern to Mr. Roper at Interstate Amusement. He is the only one that can make the final decision, but it is our duty as parents, grandparents, schools and churches to let him know how we feel. Then we can only pray that Mr. Roper will find it in his heart as a parent and as a Christian to make the right decision.

This movie has already been refused by some theater owners in Oregon and Utah. Let's influence Mr. Roper to do the same here.

Showing 'Showgirls' is hazardous to our kids

To Mr. Roper of Interstate Amusement:

We are writing regarding the movie "Showgirls." As the Parent Teacher Student Organization of the Kimberly School District, we are opposed to this particular movie being shown in our valley. It is our responsibility as parents and citizens to nurture and help the children of the Magic Valley to become happy, productive adults. Showing a movie of this nature is in direct opposition of that goal.

The NC-17 rating of this movie is insignificant since it is inevitable that children under 17 will find a way to view the movie. It is ludicrous to disguise pornography with a rating such as NC-17. The content of this movie is offensive to us.

There comes a time for all of us that we must take a stand for what we believe in, and now is the time. In Kimberly, we feel like this valley is magic because of the community spirit that exists here.

It seems apparent that if we allow this type of blatant pornography to infect our children's lives, the magic of our valley will soon disappear.

Please, for the sake of our children, do not show this movie in your theaters.

MVAHS students want to receive good education

As a student of the Magic Valley Alternative High School, I would like to point out a few facts.

All other students and I are there because we want to be. There doesn't have to be law enforcement with guns, or chain link fences – only concerned and loving teachers and willing students who want to learn. The block system of teaching is superior; the results are superior.

I thank my parents every day for letting me have my choice of schools.

Medicare reform sizes up as fact versus fear

Paul Beckner

In war, the old saying goes, the first casualty is truth. In Washington these days, the battle of the budget is in full swing, and truth is getting harder and harder to find.

That's especially true when the subject is Medicare. Listen to the White House, and you'll hear Congress is about to execute a reverse-Robin Hood: Taking money from the Medicare account to provide a tax cut for the rich. Nice rhetoric, but not much connection with reality.

What are the facts? Yes, Congress wants to reform Medicare, and bring its costs under control. And yes, Congress wants to reduce taxes, to strengthen families and spark an economic upsurge that will come when counterproductive taxes are eased or eliminated. Both are worth doing – but neither has anything to do with the other.

The fact is simply this: What ails Medicare has nothing to do with the budget. If the federal government had a balanced budget right now, and we let Medicare run the way it runs right now, Medicare would go broke by the year 2002. Whether Congress cut taxes or not wouldn't help or hurt Medicare. Medicare is headed for bankruptcy for one reason and one reason alone: Because its costs are out of control. That's what happens eventually, when a program runs 10-plus percent cost increases year after year – the way Medicare has.

Even if that's true, what if we don't reduce Medicare spending? What would it take in higher taxes to make up the Medicare shortfall?

Try a payroll tax hike of more than 100 percent over the next seven years. Money out of every taxpayer's pocket to "feed" a program bent on outgrowing the rest of the budget. And what would you get for all those taxes? A bigger, more bloated Medicare – ready to go bankrupt.

A tax hike is no option at all. There's only one option, and Congress had the courage to take it: Reform Medicare and get its costs under control.

That's where the White House saw a political opening, a chance to score points with fear over fact. It's hard to say what President Clinton is up to. Is he saying nothing's wrong with Medicare – let whoever is in the Oval Office in 2002 deal with it? Is he saying he's ready to double payroll taxes to pay for the program with its present spending appetite? Is he defending Medicare as we know it?

Or maybe President Clinton is just looking for a way to scare the Congress off the tax cuts the American people want.

Whatever the reason, the facts are against the president. The only thing he's got going for him is fear.

So here are a few facts to bring along when you tune in to the Medicare and tax cut debate:

First, the facts about the cut. Congress wants to cut $270 billion from Medicare between now and 2002. Seven years from now, under the Congress' plan, more money will go to Medicare than it receives today. But it will be less money – $270 billion less – than Medicare would have consumed if we simply let the program spend itself into bankruptcy.

In other words, the Medicare cut is really no cut at all: It's merely saving money by slowing the rate of increased spending. Even under the Republican plan, Medicare increases each year will still more than double the rate of inflation.

Second, the facts about the number. What's the magic in $270 billion? Couldn't Congress settle for less or split the difference with the president? No, not if the idea is to save Medicare and make it solvent for the generations of Americans who are paying for it now – and who expect it to be there when they reach retirement age.

If that's your aim – and it's the only way we can truly fix the system – $270 billion in slower growth is what it takes. That's the number that brings Medicare into actuarial balance through the year 2015, when the first wave of the Baby Boomers begin to reach 65.

Third, the facts about the tax cuts. American families – and the American economy – need these cuts in order to grow the new jobs that will extend and expand opportunity in this country. Reducing the drain of money from the private sector to the federal government will push interest rates down and make investments in education, housing and business expansion more affordable.

That's the truth about Medicare and the tax cuts, and only the White House finds it frightening.

Man wins in religious deprogrammer case

SEATTLE (AP) — A man taken from his home by "deprogrammers" who tried to persuade him to leave the United Pentecostal Church has been awarded nearly $5 million by a federal court jury.

James found Friday that Jason Scott was deprived of his freedom of religion by Rick Ross, Ross' associates and the Cult Awareness Network, a Chicago-based group that monitors cults.

Scott's mother, Kathy Tonkin, contacted the defendants in 1992 when she became worried about her son's membership in the church.

Ross and others found Scott at his mother's home in the Seattle suburb of Kirkland in January 1991 and took him to the Washington coast. There, Scott contended, they held him against his will for five days while they tried to force him to renounce his faith.

Aspirin cuts risk of another kind of cancer

ATLANTA (AP) — Taking an occasional aspirin can cut your risk of esophageal cancer by 90 percent, according to a study released Sunday.

The work is the latest to find beneficial side effects of the pain reliever, which has been around more than 80 years.

Many doctors already routinely recommend that men and women over 50 take an adult-strength aspirin every other day to lower their risk of heart disease.

Two years ago, scientists suggested that aspirin may reduce the risk of dying from cancer of the esophagus, the muscular tube that propels food from the throat to the stomach.

The latest study, by researchers at University of Alabama School of Public Health and St. Jude Children's Research Hospital in Memphis, Tenn., offers evidence that aspirin reduces the risk of getting it, said Dr. Harold Frucht, director of gastroenterology at Fox Chase Cancer Center.

"Their results are the first definitive proof, in my opinion, that in fact aspirin does have an effect in reducing the risk," Frucht said. "It's a pretty dramatic number."

The study's authors warned against taking aspirin solely to avoid getting esophageal cancer, saying they did not know how much or how frequently people should take it to cut their risk.

More than 12,000 people — most over age 50 — in the United States are diagnosed with esophageal cancer each year, and nearly 11,000 people die annually, according to the American Cancer Society. The cancer is among the deadliest — only about 8 percent of its victims survive more than five years.

The cause is unknown, but doctors estimate that drinking and smoking play a role in 90 percent of cases.

That may prevent many of those at highest risk for esophageal cancer from taking aspirin, because the drug's side effects — stomach irritation and bleeding — can worsen other illnesses associated with alcohol and cigarettes, such as liver disease, Frucht said.

The new study was based on nationwide surveys of 14,407 participants followed for at least 12 years.

The researchers found a 90 percent drop in the lifetime risk of esophageal cancer, about one in 20, for those who reported at least occasionally taking aspirin sometime in the past six months.

Host to environmentalists kills protected heron

The Washington Post

If the British tabloids were writing this story, the giant headline probably would be:

BRIT BLASTS BOTHERSOME BIRD!

Or maybe:

BILLY'S BIT OF BOTHER

Or possibly even:

BILLY 1, BIRD 0.

This was the week that William Abel-Smith, a very British member of the Middleburg, Va. horse-and-fox-hunt set, took down his shotgun and blew a protected great blue heron to kingdom come.

It was especially bad timing, because Abel-Smith and his wife, Mimi, were scheduled to hold a fund-raiser Saturday for the Piedmont Environmental Council, a land preservation group, on their estate outside the Loudoun County village.

And that has tongues wagging.

"It bothered me a lot," said Marky Love, who was to have done the flower arranging for the fund-raiser but pulled out in protest. "I don't want this to ruin our friendship, but the herons belong here. The little fish do not."

The little fish, exotic golden carp, idled in Abel-Smith's pond on the farm where he and his wife raise thoroughbred horses. Each night, William Abel-Smith lovingly fed the fish.

But the heron, a tall crane-like bird, took a fancy to them. And on Monday morning, Abel-Smith sent the heron to birdie heaven.

"In a moment of rage, he got a shotgun and 'Poop!'" Mimi Abel-Smith said. "My husband is an ardent environmentalist, and he is deeply ashamed of what happened. It was an impulsive act, and he did not know the bird was protected."

Ransacked narc office faced court order

By Liz Wright
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Thirteen days before the now-defunct Tri-County Drug Task Force was mysteriously burglarized in January, a judge ordered narcotics agents there to return $2,030 to a former drug defendant.

"What happened there just smells bad," said attorney William Hollifield, who obtained the Jan. 12 order in a "civil forfeiture" case for his client, Justin Schoenauer. "Just the timing."

State attorneys will decide next week whether to file charges against anyone in connection with the burglary. In recent days, investigators have been examining the finances of the two agents who worked in the office.

The question of whether the burglary was a cover-up for missing money in the task force office has been part of the Idaho Bureau of Investigation's eight-month probe, said Deputy Attorney General Kenneth Stringfield.

The court order demanding the return of cash from the task force office, followed by the burglary "was something that (investigators) would be using in trial, if it goes to trial," Stringfield said.

Money, guns and drugs were reported missing from the Twin Falls office on Jan. 31. After seven months, state investigators still have not ruled out the possibility of wrongdoing by the former task force agents, Don Walden Sr. and John Nunez Jr., Stringfield said. Nunez is now a landscaper. Walden is still collecting a regular Twin Falls Police paycheck while on administrative lead.

Hollifield had fought for the return of $2,030 on behalf of his client Schoenauer, a recovering drug trafficker who made headlines last year by claiming he was kidnapped. On June 5, 1994, Schoenauer was arrested because police found a small amount of methamphetamine in his 1993 Pontiac Grand Am during a routine traffic stop. Nunez and other officers also found $3,200 in twenty dollar bills and electronic scales in a Twin Falls hotel room Schoenauer was staying in, according to an affidavit written by Nunez.

The case against Schoenauer was later dismissed, and in a subsequent civil forfeiture case, the Idaho Department of Law Enforcement agreed to return Schoenauer's car and $2,030 of the money confiscated by the Tri-County Drug Task Force, according to court documents.

Fifth District Judge Roger Burdick endorsed the settlement and signed an order demanding immediate return of the items to Schoenauer.

"I received the car," Hollifield said, but received no money from Nunez or Walden, despite several requests in the weeks before

Reservoirs are two-thirds full

By William Brock
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – The 1995 water year ended at midnight with Upper Snake River reservoirs nearly two-thirds full – capping a remarkable comeback from low water levels at this time last year.

"We have excellent carry-over this year," said Mike Beus, Burley-based hydrologist with the Bureau of Reclamation. Roughly 2.65 million acre-feet of water is contained in the federal reservoir system upstream of Milner Dam, he said; one acre-foot is enough to cover one acre with one foot of water, or 325,850 gallons.

Overall, the Upper Snake reservoir system can hold 4.16 million acre-feet, but it contained only 600,000 acre-feet at this time last year, Beus said.

"We were about as low as we've ever been on reservoir storage," he said.

With little storage water to rely on, southern Idaho farmers needed a better snow year than they've had in recent years – and Old Man Winter delivered the goods. Wet conditions prevailed through spring, keeping irrigation demand low, while boosting mountain snowpacks and raising reservoir levels.

"This is the year we had to make it, and we did. The snow came early, and it stayed late," said Peter Palmer, Boise-based supervisor of the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Idaho snow survey. "It was a 100 percent turn-around from conditions one year ago."

Added Beus: "It was by no means a record wet year, but it was in the top third of wet years."

Unlike the miserly winters of late, last winter deposited generous amounts of snow in central Idaho's high country.

The Wood River and Lost River drainages received alarmingly little snow two years ago, but this past year's snowpacks were far greater than average on April 1 – when they typically reach their peak. The Big Wood drainage had 24 percent more snow than the long-term average for that time of year, while the Big Lost basin held 39 percent more snow.

"We ended up with a better yield out of the snowpack than we'd anticipated," Palmer said, "and it yielded above average runoff for most of the state, and flows extended later into the season."

The strong showing in central Idaho was essential to offset another below-average snow year on the east side of the Tetons, in Wyoming.

"That's where the majority of our water comes from," Beus said, "but the snowpacks were in the 80-90 percent range when they should have peaked."

Meanwhile, in Idaho, cool and wet spring weather picked up where winter left off.

"We had late snow and an increase in snow when things normally would have been melting," Beus said. "That late snow was accompanied by rain in the valleys

Twin Falls wants meeting with Jerome

By H.R. Weixel
Times-News correspondent

JEROME – Twin Falls City Council members have asked for a meeting with the Jerome council to talk about Jerome's impact zone.

"They called us last week asking us to meet with them and now again this week," Jerome council president Elza Hall said.

A meeting has been scheduled for 10 a.m. Monday in the Jerome City Hall.

"We will listen cordially to them and be good hosts, but none of us are in a mood to be swallowed up," Mayor Gerald Ostler said.

"We have planned the impact zone carefully and for the good of the Magic Valley region. What we all need to begin to do is think regionally instead of only our own area in the valley," Ostler said. "What we do, what Twin Falls does, what Wendell, Eden and Hazelton do will have an effect on the rest of us-so why not do our planning on that basis for the good all. We'll all benefit then."

Ostler said he "didn't know exactly what the Twin Falls council would be bringing to the table, but obviously they'll bring up our impact zone."

Jerome City Attorney Robert Williams III is completing public hearing notices for final adoption of the impact zone. He said the hearings "will probably be held the last two weeks of October."

Eden and Hazelton are also completing impact zones for their cities.

"Its the right way to plan for the future and to have those plans work for us and our neighbors. We're all going to benefit from this," Ostler said.

The Monday meeting will not be a decision making event. Neither council will have a quorum present, so an officially called meeting is not necessary. The public is invited.

TWIN FALLS – The number of people permitted to carry hidden weapons in the Magic Valley has jumped nearly five-fold since 1990, according to county statistics.

"They are in fear of their lives more than anything," said Jim White of the customers he sells handguns, concealed weapon of choice. The demand for pistols where he works at Idaho Coin Galleries in Twin Falls "has just blossomed," he said.

"By far the majority of our clientele are ladies. You also see a few truck drivers and people on the road" buying handguns to protect themselves while traveling, White said.

Roughly 926 people obtained permits to carry concealed knives or guns last year in the Magic Valley, according to statistics obtained by The Times-News from the eight surrounding county sheriffs' departments.

That's a 465 percent jump in the number of permits since 1990, statistics showed.

A law enacted in 1990 required the sheriffs' departments to issue permits. Before issuing a permit, the county must have the state perform criminal background checks on potential gun owners.

The increase may simply mean more people are learning where to apply for permits under the new law, some said. Other circumstances may alter the statistics, such as people renewing their permits every four years. Yet over a three-year period since 1990, the number of weapons permits climbed 250 percent, statistics showed.

"As the word has gotten out, more people are applying for permits," said Stu Murrell, a Jerome gun safety instructor qualified by the National Rifle Association.

About half of the eight to 10 students he teachers in his two-day gun safety course are women, Murrell said.

"A nurse who drives home late from the hospital, fearful of a rape attempt, that is typical. There are also single parents, women who are home alone," Murrell said.

Many Blaine County residents apply for concealed weapons permits so they can drive to target shooting practice with their handguns hidden in the glove compartment or under the seats of their cars, Hailey gun dealers say.

According to law, any gun which is disassembled or unloaded may be concealed in a car without a permit. Permits only need

Jerome County experiments with new government

The Associated Press

BOISE – Jerome County launches an experiment in government on Monday, and the rest of Idaho will be watching.

While most county commissions meet just a few days a month to take care of business, in Jerome, commissioners have decided there's just too much going on for three part-time officials to handle.

"We have not done a particularly good job in following through one week to the next what needs to be done," says Commissioner Roy Prescott. "We have just evolved to the point we need somebody here every day to take care of the day-to-day business of the county."

So Prescott is leaving the daily business of his ranch to become a full-time commissioner.

In addition to meeting with commissioners John Toolson and Jerry Ridley each Monday to make policy decisions, Prescott will be the "day-to-day facilitator."

Since statehood, all 44 Idaho counties – from Clark and Camas with populations under 800 to Ada with a full-time commission for nearly a quarter-million residents – have been run under the same three-member county commission system.

Voters in 1994 approved a constitutional amendment allowing the Legislature to establish different forms of government for counties to adopt at their option. But last winter lawmakers hesitant to rush into change rejected a bill that would have implemented it.

An interim study committee is expected to agree on a new proposal for the Legislature's next session. If it is approved, counties can hold elections November 1996 to ask voters whether they want to adopt one of several optional forms of government.

The legislation is expected to allow for commissions with more than three members, appointed county administrators or making some county offices appointive rather than elective. Any change would not be enacted until 1997.

Jerome County couldn't wait that long and

Twin Falls

John W. Roper

John W. Roper, 76, of Twin Falls, died Wednesday, Sept. 27, 1995, at the Magic Valley Regional Medical Center in Twin Falls of natural causes.

A prominent Magic Valley businessman and civic leader, John was born in Burley on May 31, 1919, to William and Tressa Roper. He grew up in the agricultural depression which followed the First World War, when frugality was a necessity. He attended Burley schools, played scrub team football and played drums in the school band. He was also on the debate team. From the time he was tall enough to see over the counter, he worked regularly at the family clothing store, Roper's. Graduating from high school in 1937, he attended University of Idaho for two years and Northwestern University in Chicago for two years. In college he continued participating in debate and playing drums in the band. He received a bachelor of arts degree in business in 1941, and immediately enlisted in the U.S. Navy. He received officer training and served in various stations in the United States and the Pacific, including New Guinea, Guam and Okinawa. He was awarded the Bronze Star.

He married Alice Gaskill of Burley in 1942. After the war, they moved to Boise where John was in life insurance. He moved to Twin Falls and returned to the family business in 1949, when Roper's opened a new store in Twin Falls. A prodigious worker, John usually worked six days a week and did paperwork at home on part of Sunday.

He also became involved in many charitable and social organizations. In the early 60s, he was active in Community Chest, later called United Way and became chairman. He became president of Rotary in 1954. He was also involved in helping Twin Falls area children go to the Shriner's Hospital in Salt Lake. He was a devoted member of Toastmasters, attending nearly every week, regularly winning the blue pencil for his talks.

When his son was active in Boy Scouts, John became involved in fund-raising for Bradley Scout Camp. He joined in family skiing outings at Sun Valley. With his wife and son for about two years, he sang in the First United Methodist Church Choir.

He was proud of his business, and became a board member of the Menswear Retailers of America and was named Idaho Retailer of the decade from 1980-1990. He was named Twin Falls Chamber of Commerce Person of the Year for 1985. Active in Twin Falls Futures, he helped develop the Main Street Mall in downtown Twin Falls. He continued with charitable activities, assisting the Salvation Army, helping with education for developmentally disabled and musical education. John strongly supported his children in their education. First his son and then his daughter attended Harvard.

In 1980, John was diagnosed with Parkinson's disease. Then, in 1988, his wife Alice passed away. Months later John's small intestine was removed because of cancer. Yet he continued to be as active as his physical condition would permit, going in to work and participating in many community activities.

In those later years he served on the board of the Magic Valley Regional Medical Center Foundation. He also helped the school board plan a bond issue which contained funds for an auditorium, and campaigned for its passage. When the bond issue passed, he became active in a committee to raise funds so the auditorium could be enlarged from 1000 seats, and contributed himself to the effort. At the request of the high school students, the school board named the auditorium after him, which was a great honor for him.

Survivors include one son, John Roper (Jr.) of Boulder, Colo.; one daughter, Victoria Roper of Gooding; daughter-in-law, Karen Roper of Boulder; son-in-law, Gail Ator of Gooding; and grandchildren, Ingrid Roper of Madison, Wis., Elizabeth Roper and John W. N. Roper of Boulder, Eleanor Roper-Ator of Gooding, and Ashley Ator of Moscow. He is also survived by his brother, James H. Roper of Burley; sister-in-law, Bette Roper of Burley; and nephews, Jeffrey and David Roper of Burley.

Memorial services will be held at 4 p.m. Monday, Oct. 2, 1995, at the John W. Roper Auditorium at the Twin Falls High School, 1615 Filer Ave. E., with the Rev. James Frisbie officiating. Cremation took place at White Crematory and arrangements are under the direction of White Mortuary in Twin Falls.

The family suggests memorial contributions may be made to: Idaho Youth Ranch, P.O. Box 8538, Boise, ID 83707-9921; or to John W. Roper Scholarship Fund, in care of Twin Falls High School, 1615 Filer Ave. E., Twin Falls, ID 83301; or to the charity of the donor's choice.

Robert W. Schlund

Robert Wayne Schlund, 58, of Twin Falls, died Thursday, Sept. 28, 1995, at the Magic Valley Regional Medical Center in Twin Falls.

He was born July 2, 1937, in Hazelton, the son of William and Martha Peters Schlund. He served in the U.S. Marine Corps for 11 years. Bob worked in California as a roofer, and later managed B.G.'s Restaurant in Twin Falls. He enjoyed hunting, fishing and loved cooking for large groups of people. He was loved by everyone with whom he came in contact.

He is survived by his mother, Martha Schlund of Twin Falls; four daughters, Cindy (John) Larson and Renny (Emery) Treat, both of Twin Falls, Vickie Schlund, LaMirada, Calif., and Kande Sorensen of Anaheim, Calif.; two sons, Bob (Kathy) Schlund Jr. and Tim Schlund, both of Twin Falls; eight grandchildren; four great-grandchildren; two sisters, Patricia Brownell of Cut Bank, Mont., and Marcia Lynn Shaw of Twin Falls. He was preceded in death by his father and three brothers, Ronald Eugene, Richard Lee and Billy Dean Schlund.

Memorial services for Robert Wayne Schlund will be conducted at 1 p.m. Tuesday, Oct. 3, 1995, at White Mortuary in Twin Falls, with the Rev. Wayne Nigh officiating. Military rites will be provided by the Magic Valley Area Veterans and Auxiliaries. Cremation took place at White Crematory, and services are under the direction of White Mortuary in Twin Falls.

A.L. 'Dutch' Standley

A.L. "Dutch" Standley, 72, of Twin Falls, died peacefully at home on Saturday, Sept. 30, 1995.

Dutch was born in Twin Falls on March 2, 1923, the son of James and Cora Standley. He served in the Navy during World War II, in the Pacific from 1941 to 1945. Dutch returned home and married Vinnie Boatright in 1947. They opened Dutch's Furniture in 1963 and established Standley Trenching Inc. in 1967, where Dutch worked until he retired in 1988. Dutch had been ill since 1992, and his death was attributed to complications from a brain hemorrhage and diabetes.

We will remember Dutch as a man who loved life and could always be found on the golf course with a twinkle in his blue eyes.

He is survived by his wife, Vinnie; two sons, Scott (Sandi) and Kurt (Anna) Standley; two daughters, Ann Standley and Jan Standley Hall; seven grandchildren, Jennifer Lynn, Jenny Jo, Jessica, Derik "Dubs", Christopher, Joe and Lucy; three brothers, Charles, Bill and James; two sisters, Joni Peters and Hazel Fitzpatrick; and 29 nieces and nephews. He was preceded in death by his parents, three brothers and one sister.

No services are planned. Cremation took place at White Mortuary and Crematory in Twin Falls. A celebration of Dutch's life will be held at 2 p.m. Oct. 7, 1995, at the Obenchain Building in Twin Falls.

Residents force Wendell City Council to table utility, sewer fees resolution

By Steve Koehler
Times-News correspondent

WENDELL – Following a barrage of objections to proposed utility fees and a proposed sewer line, the City Council tabled a resolution that would set fees and rates for all city services.

Residents packed the Senior Center hall in a special council meeting Wednesday to question a proposed resolution that would set the fee for a new sewer connection at $1,000. They also questioned whether a proposed sewer trunk line west of the city limits should have priority over water line problems inside the city.

The proposed sewer line would run west of town from a point near Hagerman Street and 2nd Avenue West, then south to undeveloped land between the west extension of Main Street and Frontage Road. From a lift station it would connect to the trunk line to the city's lagoon.

City Engineer Scott Bybee said the city wouldn't be in the predicament it's in now if it had been charging realistic sewer connection fees all along from the time houses were first added to the original lines. People who already have sewer service will not have to pay the sewer connection fee, Bybee said; but city ordinance requires dwellings on septic systems to connect with a sewer line if within 200 feet of the line.

The $1,000 fee would stand up to a court challenge, said Bybee, who cited such a case in Hailey that went to the Idaho Supreme Court.

Frank Larson asked Bybee if the proposed sewer line was for the motel – a business that Water Works Superintendent Paul Isaacson wants to build between the extension of West Main and Frontage Road – or for the city.

Bybee responded that the issue for the new sewer line came up years ago, before Isaacson's motel plan, when state health officials cracked down on septic systems in town.

Council President Gwen Rost said she was "mortified" to realize the proposed motel would get sewer service before citizens already in town, according to the proposed sewer development plan.

Bybee responded that he was the one who designed the phases of sewer development, not Isaacson. Bybee said his decision was based on economics, including that streets would not have to be torn up for a new sewer installed outside the city.

Former Mayor George Benson said if the people on the west side of town were surveyed, the city would find they don't want the proposed sewer line.

Vi Benson asked where the money for the proposed sewer would come from.

"The decision has not been made," Mayor Lynn Nelson said.

Glenns Ferry OKs water main upgrades

By Melanie Brown
Times-News correspondent

GLENNS FERRY – The City Council has given Public Works Superintendent Butch Anderson the go-ahead on three separate water main upgrades that will replace several sections of the city's antiquated water system.

The upgrades will help the city meet state fire flow minimums, he said. As reported earlier this year, most parts of the city's water system are deficient in meeting these standards.

Existing 4-inch water lines will be replaced with 10-inch PVC pipe along the south side of East Garfield from Commercial Way east to Custer. Labor will be performed by city personnel.

At its Sept. 27 meeting, the council authorized Anderson to work with JUB Engineers in compiling bid documents. Estimated costs for materials and supplies to execute the Garfield Avenue upgrade will be about $45,000, Anderson said.

Another water system project will include the replacement of 4-inch lines from Custer, north to Cleveland and west on Cleveland to near where the senior citizens center is to be constructed. A new fire plug will be installed at the corner of East Arthur and South Custer, Anderson said.

City personnel will also lay a 10-inch line along Fifth Avenue from Lincoln to Cassia to upgrade the water system in that area. Residences in that area are currently served by a 1½-inch service line and fire flows are dangerously low. Cost of materials for the projet is estimated at $15,000.

Anderson was unable to give the start dates on any of the projects. Weather permitting, the East Garfield project will be completed by late next spring, he said.

In addition to the installation of new water lines, city personnel will also be replacing about 150 feet of 8-inch sewer line down East Garfield.

took a first step toward changes that Prescott says were inevitable.

"This is the first blush ... of what ultimately is going to happen, and it is going to come on quickly," he says. "We aren't the same way we were five, 10, 15 years ago."

Growth has driven much of the change. Jerome County leaders are working with the city of Jerome on an "area of impact" proposal that would extend city influence all the way to the Snake River Canyon.

The plan is controversial because officials in neighboring Twin Falls contend their city should control growth in the area between Interstate 84 and the canyon rim.

Jerome County leaders thought about hiring a professional administrator, but that would have cost at least $40,000 or $50,000. Prescott was selected in part because he's grown up in the area, and his father and son will help with the family ranch that runs 1,400 head of cattle east of Jerome.

He'll get $35,000 a year as a full-time commissioner while the others continue making $9,000.

Guns

to be obtained by people who enter city limits with their concealed weapon.

"It has a lot to do with what I call an attitude," said Torrey Grubbs, owner of Bob's Pawn and Lock in Hailey. "These people come from other states where they were denied a lot of their rights. Out West, they realize they can use their God-given rights."

"When I travel I always carry a firearm," Grubbs added. "People are too unpredictable these days."

A person must apply for a permit through their local county sheriff's department. In most cases, the county can perform an instant check for criminal background. Applicants must complete a gun safety course, and anyone with a felony record or mental illness may not receive a permit.

the burglary – even threats to personally sue Nunez and Walden.

"I was promised, then put off, then the burglary occurred," Hollifield said. Sometime after the burglary, Hollifield received a check from the Tri-County Drug Task Force for the amount – but it wasn't the actual cash, Hollifield said.

But Stringfield would not comment last week on whether Task Force money had been missing before the burglary, nor whether Nunez and Walden were suspects. Nunez and Walden have denied any wrongdoing and hired lawyers after investigators started questioning them.

The apparent burglary caused the dismissal of up to 12 pending drug cases in Twin Falls County court, said Twin Falls County Chief Deputy Prosecutor John Lothspeich. In several cases, defendants charged with drug crimes withdrew their guilty pleas and walked free, he said.

"It was really discouraging for us because drug cases are difficult (to prove)," Lothspeich said.

Nunez filed a tort claim in August saying he was unfairly terminated in May. He asserts that the state's suspicions weren't properly investigated before he was fired. Nunez is alleging wrongful termination and defamation of character by all the agencies and governments involved in the Tri-County Drug Task Force.

The office of the Idaho Bureau of Narcotics, which was across a courtyard from the Tri-County Task Force office in the same building, apparently hadn't been broken into during the burglary, Stringfield said. The IBN moved into another Twin Falls office this summer, but not because of the break-in, said special agent-in-charge Clark Rollins.

"We had been there since 1974," Rollins said, adding that his state agency had plans to move for "covert reasons" before their neighboring local drug agency was burglarized.

Walden has long had personal financial problems. According to court filings, 13 private and governmental claims totalling $9,149 have been filed against Walden since 1990, including demands for payment of state and federal taxes, groceries and medical bills.

Three times Walden's wages were garnisheed to pay off bills, according to court records. Walden is being paid $2,690 per month on administrative leave through the Twin Falls Police Department, while Nunez was paid $1,750 per month through the Cassia County Sheriff's Department until he was fired in May.

– so we had the compound effect of increasing supply while demand didn't develop" until later.

Overall, the weather couldn't have been better for water managers, Beus said, adding that two important facts were driven home this year.

"One is that an average (snow) year is always a good year, and the other is that demand is just as important as supply."

MAMMOGRAM SCREENING CAN BE A LIFESAVER

Regular breast self-examination is smart. Delaying a mammogram until you feel something suspicious is not. That's why Cassia Regional Medical Center, in recognition of National Breast Cancer Awareness Month, is reducing the cost of a mammogram so you can increase your chances of early detection. Statistics show that when detected early, breast cancer is about 95% curable.

Cassia Regional Medical Center Imaging Services is accredited by the American College of Radiology, FDA Certified and offers mammographers that are advanced level certified technologists.

Bruce Willis buys 2 liquor licenses in Boise for a mere $102,000

BOISE (AP) — After making his mark in Hailey by buying up a large portion of downtown, actor Bruce Willis is turning his gaze to Boise.

The movie tough guy has extended his entrepreneurial reach from the Wood River Valley to the Treasure Valley, by buying a Boise liquor license.

Willis' Valley Entertainment purchased the license from Marne and Rich Sieber in August.

The Siebers had two liquor licenses at the time. Willis paid a cool $102,000 — $2,000 more than asked.

A mammogram is the single most powerful tool in the early detection of breast cancer. And the earlier the detection, the wider a woman's options for treatment. Mammography is particularly important because it can detect breast cancers too small to be felt by physical examination.

October is National Breast Cancer Awareness Month and the 19th is National Mammography Day. As an incentive, we are again offering mammograms at a reduced price. Only $49.00. (An $88.00 value.) You can purchase your certificate at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center's Outpatient Services, located at the Professional Plaza, 526-J Shoup Ave. The certificate is valid until September 30, 1996, and the cost may even be covered by Medicare or your insurance.

An $88.00 value. $49 Mammogram Certificates, limited time offer.

All women 35 and over, especially those 50 plus, are encouraged to take advantage of this potentially life saving service. Remember, early detection is your best protection.

Protest over rape case splits Japanese

GINOWAN, Japan (AP) — Protest organizer Yoshimasa Karimata smiled as he looked out at the gymnasium overflowing with anti-U.S. military placards and 3,000 fist-waving Okinawans.

Opponents of America's military presence on this southern Japanese island are riding a wave of public outrage over a recent crime spree by U.S. servicemen, including the alleged gang rape of a 12-year-old girl.

But even as their protests swell, they are finding themselves as much at odds with the decision-makers in Tokyo as they are with the Pentagon.

"All Okinawans are outraged by what is happening," and we want the bases off our island," said Karimata, assistant director of the left-leaning Okinawan Peace Movement Center. "But all too often our voices aren't heard in Tokyo."

Japan's leaders fear that any renegotiation of the mutual defense pact under which 45,000 U.S. military personnel are stationed in the country could open a Pandora's box of politically divisive issues.

The experience of World War II has left a strong pacifist strain in the Japanese public. Japan's postwar constitution, written by U.S. occupation forces, bans the use of military force in settling international disputes — a clause that some Japanese say makes the Tokyo-Washington alliance illegal.

About 300 women from throughout Japan marched in Tokyo's business district Saturday to protest the rape, raising their fists and shouting "Condemn the U.S. soldiers!" and "U.S. military go home".

"American soldiers still think that they are occupying part of Japan," said Yoko Sumiyoshi, a member of the New Japan Women's Association, which organized the rally.

Polls indicate most Japanese support the status quo, however, and the government has stressed it is not considering any significant changes.

But on Okinawa, which bears the brunt of U.S. bases on Japanese soil, the contrasts are painfully clear.

AP photo

Women protesters march in downtown Tokyo Saturday, part of a group of about 300 who expressed their anger over 3 U.S. servicemen's alleged rape of a 12-year-old girl in Okinawa and American military existence in the country.

As Karimata led his protesters to an American base in this central Okinawa city, Japanese negotiators in New York were vowing not only their support for the U.S. military presence, but promising to pay more for their upkeep.

Even Prime Minister Tomiichi Murayama, head of the same Socialist party that on Okinawa is helping organize a protest expected to draw 30,000 or more people, has said high emotions should not be allowed to hurt the alliance.

Murayama has urged Okinawa Gov. Masahide Ota, an outspoken opponent of the U.S. military bases, to be less combative.

Ota, a historian and World War II veteran, has refused to help the central government force local landowners to renew contracts allowing the U.S. military to use their land.

At the center of the current tempest are two American Marines and a Navy seaman suspected of raping a 12-year-old Okinawan girl in early September. After three weeks in a U.S. military brig, the three were turned over to Japanese custody Friday.

Even before the rape, concern about the conduct of U.S. troops was building:

• Last May, Marine Pfc. Joshua Hill bludgeoned an Okinawan woman to death, beating her head more than 20 times with a hammer. He pleaded guilty before a Japanese court.

• In August, a brawl at Kadena Air Base put five people, mostly American servicemen, in the hospital, one with stab wounds.

• In a four-day period in September, one Navy seaman was hospitalized with multiple stab wounds after being jumped by three Americans near Kadena Air Base, and police in Okinawa City reported a sailor assaulted and an airman attacked. It was unclear who attacked them.

"There has been frustration. There is real anger over this," Col. Stuart Wagner, spokesman for the Marines on Okinawa, said in an interview. "It's a combination of a lot of things that have come together."

Another Atlantic storm brews

MIAMI (AP) — The Atlantic hurricane season's 17th tropical depression strengthened Saturday into Tropical Storm Opal as it hovered off the northern Yucatan Peninsula.

Opal, the 15th named storm of the season, marks the first time that the letter "O" has been used since forecasters began naming Atlantic storms in 1950.

"It's rolling along the north coast of the Yucatan," said Lixion Avila, hurricane specialist at the National Hurricane Center. "It's suffering from land. They don't like to be over land."

The government of Mexico issued a tropical storm warning for the northeastern portion of the Yucatan from Cozumel and Cancun to Progreso as heavy rain caused flooding and closed ports in eastern Mexico.

Rebels reported in firm control after island coup

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Foreign mercenaries and army rebels who toppled the Comoros government were reported firmly in control Saturday as life edged back toward normal in the island chain off Africa's east coast.

With increasing desperation, the overthrown government and an opposition party appealed for international help in driving out the mercenaries. But none appeared forthcoming.

Mercenaries led by Bob Denard, a 66-year-old Frenchman, seized power Thursday and captured the president. They announced they had formed a military committee to rule the country temporarily. They said they planned free elections.

A statement from the committee said people in Moroni, the capital, demonstrated "in joy and calm" in support of the coup.

"A wind of liberty is blowing over the archipelagos of the Comoros," said the statement, dated Friday and received Saturday by The Associated Press in Paris.

Halima Darwish, a spokesman for the opposition Democratic Front party, said, however, that people demonstrated against the presence of the mercenaries "and I understand more demonstrations are planned."

But she said the coup leaders appeared in complete control in Moroni and there was no evidence of resistance elsewhere.

Shops and some offices were opened Saturday, people were going on with their business and the airport was open.

The French Foreign Ministry said the Comoros Islands were "calm" Saturday.

Tourists who were evacuated Saturday on a flight to Johannesburg, South Africa, said some islanders approved of the overthrow of President Said Mohamed Djofir.

"They were quite glad that they had a coup," said Don McKenzie, 50, of Zimbabwe. "They said that the president was totally corrupt and the people were losing out."

Most of the 206 tourists had stayed at a beach resort 30 miles from the capital and saw no sign of unrest.

France, the former colonial ruler of the impoverished islands between Madagascar and Mozambique, has condemned the coup, as have the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity.

But France has refused the overthrown Comoros government's appeal to intervene militarily, although it has put its 4,000 troops in the region on full alert.

Prime Minister Mohamed Caabi el Yachroutu, who has taken refuge in the French Embassy in Moroni, was quoted by the news agency Agence France-Presse as saying intervention was "necessary because the situation is becoming increasingly dramatic."

U.S. envoy Holbrooke presses ahead with Balkan diplomacy

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Inching along a tortuous path to peace, a U.S. envoy ended inconclusive talks with the Bosnian government Saturday and went to Belgrade to try his luck with the Serbs.

Assistant Secretary of State Richard Holbrooke traveled to the Yugoslav capital to meet with President Slobodan Milosevic of Serbia, the Balkans' main power broker. Holbrooke is negotiating a cease-fire to bolster a U.S. peace plan.

"The two sides may both want a cease-fire, but they have very different ideas of what it means," Holbrooke said in Belgrade. "I caution people not to expect any direct announcements on that in the immediate future."

In Sarajevo, he left behind unresolved issues on the truce and a proposed division of Bosnia, along with a dispute over stalled plans to open new city access routes. "This is a step-by-step process. It's very slow. It's very tough. We're very daunted by the issues that lie ahead."

Holbrooke is expected to meet in Croatia with President Franjo Tudjman on Sunday, then return to Sarajevo on Monday.

Likely to further complicate his shuttle diplomacy were reports of more fighting in the north around Banja Luka, the largest city still held by Bosnian Serbs.

Hopes of further easing the siege of Sarajevo were dashed Saturday when the planned opening of a main route out of the city was called off.

The Muslim-led government objected to U.N. plans to use a rough front-line road instead of a larger road as part of a main route to Kiseljak, a town held by Bosnian Croats 30 miles west of the capital.

U.N. officials promised to secure the road for civilians, but Bosnian Prime Minister Haris Silajdzic called it "a notorious street" open to easy ambush.

U.N. officials said the larger road, part of a heavily mined and damaged highway, was too dangerous and would take at least three weeks to clear. Access to Sarajevo is key among government conditions for a cease-fire. Holbrooke urged the United Nations to open the route swiftly. "Progress has been made, major progress, but we want to see the (Sarajevo) siege lifted completely and fully," he said.

Sarajevo has been under siege throughout Bosnia's 3½-year war, which erupted when Bosnian Serbs rebelled at a vote by the Muslim-Croat majority to secede from Serb-dominated Yugoslavia.

Bosnian Serbs recently withdrew most of their siege guns in exchange for a halt to NATO airstrikes, but utilities and civilian routes remain cut off.

Holbrooke is trying to build on what Washington considers the best prospects yet for ending the war. The warring parties agreed Tuesday in in New York on a power-sharing scheme in a future government.

Earlier, they agreed to keep Bosnia as a single state, divided roughly in half between Bosnian Serb and Muslim-Croat entities. Details, however, have yet to be resolved.

While government forces were reported to be increasing pressure on northern towns around Banja Luka, Serbs claimed to be repelling the offensive.

Government teams to hunt crocodiles

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Armed with electric prods, nets and rifles, the Thai navy set off in search of crocodiles Saturday as the government confirmed fears that hundreds of the reptiles are on the loose.

The government also urged Bangkok residents to report any sightings of crocodiles in the city's murky canals. Thai television broadcast the mobile phone numbers of the navy patrols.

Crocodile fever swept Bangkok two weeks ago after reports that floods liberated some of the animals from pits at farms north and east of the capital.

The crocodiles were said to have slipped into the Chao Phraya River, which runs into Bangkok, and reportedly have bitten two villagers while they were fishing.

So far no crocodile has been caught in Bangkok, but there have been unconfirmed sightings from people living alongside the canals and river. Some have been seen searching for crocodiles at night, when the animals usually surface to feed.

AIDS, orphans create unsafe mix in Kenya

Knight-Ridder News Service

NAIROBI, Kenya — AIDS killed their parents and now it is killing their future.

As a result of the epidemic, thousands of abandoned AIDS orphans have descended into Kenya's urban jungles infested with disease, poverty, drugs, hunger, illiteracy, prostitution and crime.

The plight of this new generation threatens to inflict increased social and political instability on a region already suffering from some of the world's worst and most prolonged violence, famine and chaos.

"We see an epidemic of children just wandering around — something we never saw before in Kenya — no schools, just street kids," said Tom Mboya Okeyo, coordinator for a World Bank program studying the impact of sexual-transmitted infection in Kenya. "It is bound to be a security and political problem ... They beat people. They rob. They learn to survive."

Kenya's National AIDS Control Program projects that AIDS deaths in the east African country of 28 million will reach one million by the year 2000 and two million by 2005. AIDS orphans will total 600,000 by the year 2000 and increase to nearly one million five years later, the organization estimates.

One in seven residents living in the Kenyan capital of Nairobi is infected with the AIDS virus, according to insurance industry figures. The Kenyan military suffers an estimated 20 percent HIV infection rate.

Signs of the looming crisis are already surfacing on Nairobi's streets and in Kenya's social structure. AIDS orphans are blamed for an explosion in crime and vigilante killings that has the government worried.

Police reported that last year in Kenya, 609 people thought to be criminals were beaten or burned to death by street mobs. Many of those killed by the avenging street mobs were children and teen-agers.

Increasingly, the so-called necklace is used. Made notorious in South African townships, a necklace execution is carried out by a mob putting a tire around the victim's neck, filling it with gasoline, then striking a match to the fuel.

But the impact AIDS is having on Kenya's social traditions may have a more lasting effect than a blip in the crime rate.

Increasingly, no relative is willing to take care of AIDS orphans. Because of poverty — Kenya's per capita income is just $320 a year — and the rising cost of AIDS care, the traditional extended family that provided the social safety net for orphans is breaking down fast.

"If the extended family can't provide for children, they go to the streets," Okeyo said. "Go out to Kenyatta market (a Nairobi slum) and you will find it full of dirty street kids day or night. The extended family is overstretched. In Kenya today we have only the poor and the very rich."

The United Nations' World Health Organization says parents dying from AIDS in all of Africa will leave 10 million orphans by the turn of the century.

Medical studies show that infections from HIV, the virus that leads to AIDS, skyrocket in areas thrown into turmoil by violence.

A major concern of health officials is the much higher HIV infection rate among young women than young men. Government statistics show that among Kenyan teen-agers 15-19, three times as many females are infected with HIV as males.

Adolescent girls fall victim to the sugar daddy syndrome. Rich adult men pay girls for sex in the belief they are HIV-free.

Lillian Owiti, an assistant lecturer in the School of Sociology at the University of Nairobi, said that every night wealthy men drive into Nairobi to pick up poverty-stricken adolescent girls roaming the streets.

The Baltimore Sun

LONDON — Today, the inch dies. So does the foot and the yard. And the pound and ounce go on life support.

After more than 20 years of re-education and assimilation, the British are dumping some of the final vestiges of their old imperial measuring system and going nearly all-metric. And not everybody is thrilled.

Shoppers are griping about buying packaged British bacon by the kilo and grain, instead of the pound and ounce. Store owners are grumbling about spending millions on pamphlets to educate the public.

There's even a chartered surveyor and real estate agent from Scotland who has formed the Imperial Measures Preservation Society.

"Would you recognize a kilonewton if you fell over one in the dark?" demands Vivian Linacre, who has received 500 letters of support in the two weeks since he created the society.

In Linacre's trade, a kilonewton is used to calculate a building's floor-bearing capacity. There isn't a metric measure to gauge Linacre's anger over the changes ordered by the European Union.

U.S. is final frontier for metric system

The Baltimore Sun

LONDON — The United States, land of the 100-yard football field and the quarter-pound hamburger, remains the final frontier for the metric system.

But the United States, the last industrialized nation to rely on the imperial measuring system, is not a metric-free zone. In industries as varied as food, automotive, machine tools and commercial construction, the United States is adopting metric measurements.

In 1988, Congress declared the metrication fuss isn't just a matter of weights and measures. Britain has long had difficulty coming to grips with its loss of empire and its reliance on continental partners. The issue of Britain's place in the European Union fractured the ruling Conservatives last summer, and forced Prime Minister John Major to challenge his "Euro-skeptical" critics in a "put up or shut up" election for the party's leadership.

For a vocal and influential minority, the adoption of the metric system — forced down their throats by foreign bureaucrats of the European Union headquarters in Brussels, Belgium — is yet another blow to Britain's prestige.

"People call this progress," says Alan Sked, leader of the United Kingdom Independence Party. "But why should anyone bother. The only need to have Britain go metric is to bow to this ideology of one European everything."

metric system to be the preferred system in measurement for trade and commerce. The legislation required federal agencies to use the metric system in procurements, grants and other business-related activities. But the legislation did not mandate metric measurements for business and industry.

One barrier to full metrication, however, is educational. There is no national law to enforce metric education in the nation's elementary and primary schools. Another barrier, is tradition. Americans apparently like their road signs in miles.

Rift in Kashmir rebel group threatens factional fighting

SRINAGAR, India (AP) — Still in his 20s, pencil-thin, weakened by a heart ailment and his years in Indian prisons, Yasin Malik was the unlikely hope of the people of Kashmir to lead them peacefully to independence.

When he was released from jail 18 months ago, the former guerrilla leader called on his people to lay down their arms to allow talks with New Delhi, and he tried to unite the splintered separatist movement under his banner of moderation.

Hopes for unity faded, then virtually ended in mid-September when a militant faction broke away from Malik's Jammu-Kashmir Liberation Front and vowed to resume the war with India.

Now it seems possible that the two factions of the biggest Kashmiri rebel group will be fighting each other instead of Indian troops.

"Our movement is on the verge of a civil war," Amanuallah Khan, leader of the breakaway faction, warned this past week at a news conference in Islamabad, Pakistan.

About the same time, Malik's military commander, Rafih Ahmed Dar, bundled an Associated Press reporter and other journalists into cars and took them to a JKLF hideout in Kashmir.

Fifty guerrillas showed off machine guns and other weapons that had been hidden away after Malik was freed from prison in May 1994. Dar made clear the arsenal was being kept ready in case of fighting with Khan's faction.

The split in the JKLF was a setback for India's hopes of negotiating a settlement with Muslim militant groups that have been fighting for Kashmir's secession since 1989.

Jammu-Kashmir is the only Muslim-majority state in India, which is predominantly Hindu. It contains two-thirds of the original Kashmir, which was split between India and Pakistan after a brief war in 1948, a year after they gained independence from Britain.

The JKLF wants to combine the Indian and Pakistani portions into an independent Kashmir. Malik wants to do it by negotiations leading to a U.N.-monitored plebiscite, while Khan's followers feel war is needed.

There are numerous other rebel groups espousing widely different ideologies and pursuing wildly varying strategies. Some groups, such as Harkat ul-Ansar and Hizbul Mujahedeen, want Indian-controlled Kashmir to merge with Pakistan, a Muslim nation.

While the JKLF remains one of the most popular rebel groups, Hizbul Mujahedeen has supplanted it in the past two years as the best armed and most powerful.

India and international human rights groups say Hizbul receives arms and training from Islamabad. Pakistani officials deny helping any of the Kashmiri rebels, but groups based in Pakistan have said they send money and arms across the border.

Since the Kashmir insurrection began in late 1989, about 12,000 people have died in Jammu-Kashmir, according to official figures. Nearly daily skirmishes occur between rebels and an estimated 300,000 Indian soldiers.

The opposition that Malik faces within his own movement has become evident in recent weeks.

"The JKLF under Mr. Malik was becoming soft, almost a toy in India's hand, and we had to stop that," Shabir Sidiqui, who heads the breakaway faction's Indian chapter, said in an interview in the state capital, Srinagar. "We have the might of the gun and dedicated holy warriors."

Tropical storm triggers landslide that kills 18 in the Philippines

CAGAYAN DE ORO, Philippines (AP) — A landslide triggered by a tropical storm killed 18 people, including seven children under age 10, and injured seven others, police said Saturday.

Police Superintendent Creido Rubio, the regional disaster coordinator, said the landslide happened late Friday in the southern town of Cagayan de Oro as Tropical Storm Cybil swept inland.

Disaster relief officials said there were no other immediate reports of casualties or damage caused by the storm.

T.F. teacher earns newcomer award

– Holly A. Tingey is one of 54 teachers nationwide to receive the 1994-95 Sallie Mae First Class Teacher Award. The award recognizes outstanding performance by new elementary and secondary school teachers from every state and four of the extra-state jurisdictions. Winners receive a cash award and a trip to Washington, D.C., as well as national recognition in an advertisement in the Sept. 20 issue of USA Today.

Tingey's parents, Scott and Lani Tingey of Hansen, both teachers themselves, were honored with a Sallie Mae Teacher Tribute Award, which honors the teachers who most influenced the winning first-year teacher's decision to pursue a career in education. They each received an award certificate.

Tingey

Now in its 11th year, the awards program is sponsored by Sallie Mae, which specializes in financing student loans and other education-related services. It is administered for Sallie Mae by the American Association of School Administrators, a professional organization that represents public and private school superintendents and leaders.

Tingey is an eighth-grade language-arts teacher at O'Leary Junior High School in Twin Falls. She is a 1991 graduate of Washington University and a 1995 graduate of Boise State University.

Hall wins phys ed pro award

Jan Hall, health and physical education teacher for the Kimberly School District, has been selected by the Idaho Association of Health, Physical Education/Recreation and Dance as the 1995 IAHPERD Health Professional of the Year.

Hall will receive the award at the IAHPERD annual conference award banquet on Oct. 6 at Albertson College of Idaho in Caldwell. She has been a teacher in Kimberly since 1987 and has educated students at the middle school and high school, as well as serving as volleyball coach for several years.

Locals make ISU dean's list

Danielle L. Groves, Annette Y. McFarlin and Kelley F. Ramirez, all of Twin Falls, are listed on the 1995 summer dean's list at the Idaho State University College of Education. To be listed, students must receive a grade-point average of 3.66 or higher.

Wendell junior heads to D.C.

Lydia Koehler, a junior at Wendell High School, has been chosen as a delegate to the National Young Leaders Conference in December in Washington, D.C.

The conference is a leadership development program for high school students who have demonstrated leadership potential and scholastic merit. Throughout the six-day conference, students will interact with key leaders and newsmakers from the three branches of government, the media and diplomatic corps. They will also participate in skill-building activities and a "Mock Congress," where they will assume the roles of U.S. representatives by debating, amending and voting on proposed legislation on crime.

Koehler

National Young Leaders conferences are sponsored by the Congressional Youth Leadership Council, a nonprofit, non-partisan educational organization. Founded in 1985, the council is committed to "fostering and inspiring young people to achieve their full leadership potential." More than 300 members of the U.S. Congress are members of the council's Honorary Congressional Board of Directors. Each year, only 7,000 youth nationwide may participate in the 20 conference sessions held during the year.

Remote control boaters have the oceans at their fingertips

By Diane Burks
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — An afternoon breeze picked up, filling the sails with a wind that made the boat cut smoothly and quietly across the water.

Capt. Scott Standley adjusted the rudder and checked the position of his competition, a larger sailboat whose captain, Bob Gillespie, had given Standley a head-start. The wind shifted and both sailors scrambled to alter their sails.

They didn't have to do much. Pressure from a thumb was enough to adjust rudder or sail, for these helmsmen weren't standing in the bow in the face of a freshening nor'easter. They were quite dry at the end of the dock as they watched their boat sails catch the wind, now luff, now catch again.

Standley and Gillespie are avid radio-control sailors. Gillespie has been sailing by AM and FM for years; Standley joined him two years ago. Good friends, they sail together as often as their schedules permit, frequenting local water holes the like of Dierkes and Bass lakes.

"It's intriguing how the wind moves the boat," Gillespie said. "They are such pretty model boats."

"I find the peacefulness of sailboats an attraction," Standley said.

There isn't much noise that surrounds this sport. The tiny motors that move the rudder and sails are inaudible and the radio-controlled boxes certainly don't add any racket. The two men quietly concentrate on their boat's activity, occasionally adding a remark or suggestion.

"There's a nice breeze coming in now, Bobby" or, "You'd better tack to the right if you want to pick up speed, Scotty."

Both men belong to the Magic Valley Aeromodels, a local RC club, which has speedboat, airplane and race car enthusiasts. Gillespie also owns RC speed boats and planes. Standley run planes too, despite the challenges of "getting it back on the ground."

Most club members are airplane modellers, but the groups interact in all three areas. To their knowledge, they are the only RC sailboat operators in the area.

The interest comes primarily in building the models themselves.

"The building is really a lot of the fun," Gillespie said.

While there are a few kits available that have the model basically ready to go, there are not very many people who take advantage of them, according to Standley.

"Most people buy the kits, pop out the balsawood, pull the instructions out and put them together."

Standley's 25-inch-long boat with a 3-foot mast came as a formed body of ABS plastic that he had to clean out, apply decals to, cut sails for, and then assemble.

Gillespie's boat is considerably larger. It weighs 25 pounds, has a six-foot mast and is 38 inches long. It's made of fiberglass, which Gillespie bought already built but in dire need of restoration, rechristening it the "Bonnie Jane" after his wife ensured its safe port in Gillespie's home.

"He's a toy fanatic," Standley said.

The RC units may be built as well as the sailboats themselves. Gillespie built the unit he now uses in 1968; it was the only way he could afford to have one.

Building bluebird abodes is keeping the Buntins busy

By H. R. Weixel
Times-News correspondent

JEROME — Building bungalows for bluebirds has become a busy project for the Buntin Bunch of Jerome.

Each year two Buntin sisters, Verneta (Wisecarver) and Leta (Goedert), with the help of their "big brother" Roy, who lives in Vancouver, Wash., plan an unusual family project to do during their annual family reunion. This year, they decided to build and put up houses for mountain bluebirds, the Idaho state bird.

"I don't know why, but I've never seen one of those bluebirds around, so we decided maybe it was because of a housing shortage," Leta said.

The sisters decided they would do something about the bluebirds' need for houses and built 10 of them according to specifications found in Idaho Department of Fish and Game literature.

"We had to do a lot of research and the directions would drive you crazy," Leta said. "One set of instructions said the hole had to be 1/ inch, another place said 1¾ inch and another said 1 9/16 inch. The directions were very specific in each case. So, we being the Buntins, made some of each.

"Really, I couldn't see that it made much difference, because I didn't think bluebirds knew how to use a tape measure," she said.

After the two sisters agreed that this was a construction problem, they said, "Then we got to reading the directions again and found out the entrance hole had to be beveled.

"That wiped me out right there, 'cuz I didn't know what beveled meant," Leta said. Stumped, the two women consulted Verneta's husband, Herb, who is an expert wood-crafter. Herb explained that beveling would prevent injury to the birds.

"He not only knew what I was talking about, but he had the gigit to do it," she said.

The birdhouses were made from cedar and had grooves on the inside below the entrance hole.

"This gives the birds a toehold for easy exit," said Verneta, who did a lot of the bluebird research. "We found out we shouldn't put a dowel or perch on the outside because that's supposed to invite house sparrows to come in and we didn't think bluebirds would want that."

Deciding where to put the birdhouses was no problem for the Buntins.

"We are always looking for an excuse to go to Featherville where we were raised, so Featherville was the perfect place for the houses," Verneta said.

They carefully followed instructions and hid the homes from view, "not on the windy side of a tree," and from five to 10 feet above ground. They put them near a meadow so the birds would have insects to eat, water to drink and trees for the young to fly to.

"We made a map of where we put the birdhouses, so we can go back and see if they are being used and so we can clean them out," Leta said. "But Herb said the map wouldn't do much good — for instance, 100 feet behind which "no trespassing" sign?"

The Buntins learned that male bluebirds move into an area in March to scout out nesting places.

"But they don't nest until May, so I don't know what they do all that time from March until May," Leta said. "They raise two to three broods a year and the incubation period is from 13 to 15 days. Then after 15 to 18 days, the young leave the nest. So we expect full occupancy all through the summer."

More birdhouses are being built, after requests were received from people in the remote Featherville area of Elmore County who wanted houses to be placed on their private property.

Another family project was to repair a broken tombstone they spotted along a road near Featherville.

Getting a kick out of soccer requires a lot of work

Denise Turner

The subject is soccer. The message is ... HELP!

When I became a mother, soccer was one subject that never entered my mind. I mean, I've been busy enough trying to teach my kids to eat right and sleep well and do their homework and survive in a polluted world. But now that my 10-year-old son is spending his spare time checking out every sport on the planet, it looks as if I'm going to have to add soccer to the list.

Like most parents of my generation, I'm soccer illiterate. And most of what I'm learning about the sport just doesn't compute (they tell you to buy your kid shin guards, and then they tell the kid to hit the ball with his head).

I was raised on the nice, sensible game of baseball. At a baseball game, you can go get a hot dog and even wander around the stadium for a while and the next pitcher will still be warming up.

Soccer is like the Energizer Bunny. It never stops.

Even football has lots of timeouts — and football is definitely a game that commands your full attention.

A case in point: A friend of mine told me about her husband getting ready to watch the first football game of the year on TV this season. Before he turned on the set, he said to her, "Do you have any last words before the season begins?"

Now I can understand that. Maybe because I grew up with a dad who turned comatose every football season.

But so far, I can't get that excited about soccer.

Maybe I should just think of the growing popularity of the sport as one more example of change – and to think of change as a giant-sized part of every aspect of life in the 20th century.

I once heard about a man, at his 20-year college reunion, running into his old science professor. As the two talked about years gone by, the former student found out that the professor was still using the same questions on his exams that he had used 20 years before. When asked why each class didn't just pass along the answers to the next, the professor said they did.

"But it's no problem," he explained, "because, every year, I change the answers."

Soccer is the new game in America. I think I can get used to that.

And yet, there is the issue of safety.

Until my son signed up, I didn't realize soccer could be so rough. Though I did know enough to stay off the playing field. And I knew enough not to try running interference for my kid.

I decided to steer clear of direct involvement in my kids' sports one day after I heard Phil Donahue say we have a generation of mothers who drive their sons to first base — and after I realized that sounded reasonable to me.

But already this season, I have been banged on the head twice with a soccer ball. Both times, I was sitting on the sidelines.

Of course, at fifth-grade level, there isn't any extreme violence. Most of the injuries are caused by unlaced shoes flying off the players' feet.

And I guess I should be counting my blessings, anyway. Because I have the distinct feeling that tackle football is right around the corner.

Local graduates from ISU

Jennifer Ainsworth, an Idaho State University dental hygiene graduate, was a member of the 1995 graduation class which had 100 percent pass rates on national and regional licensure examinations and 100 percent placement into dental hygiene positions.

Ainsworth

Ainsworth and her entire class passed the National Dental Hygiene Board Examination with an impressive class average of 91 percent. The adult class also passed the Western Regional Examining Board (Clinical) Examination and the WREB Written and Clinical local Anesthesia Examination.

The WREB clinical exam is required in addition to the National Board Examination for dental hygienists to practice in Idaho, Montana, Alaska, Arizona, Oregon, Utah, Washington, New Mexico, Texas and Oklahoma. The WREB written and clinical anesthesia exam is required for professional practice in states that allow dental hygienists to administer anesthesia.

Ainsworth is the daughter of Jamie and Janice Ainsworth of Twin Falls.

"It was just out there all by itself and nobody seemed to care, so we fixed it as good as we could," Leta said.

The Buntin children grew up in Featherville. Their mother, Cora, was their teacher in a nearby one-room schoolhouse. Also nurse and janitor. One winter there were only three students — the Buntin trio. Verneta and Roy graduated from Jerome High School in 1945 and Leta followed in 1946.

Verneta and Herb, now retired, were farmers in the Burley area.

Leta married DuWayne Goedert, a career soldier whose career took him around the world. She taught in military schools in Germany, France, Virginia, Ohio and Arizona.

Both are now retired in Jerome. Brother Roy is a retired businessman in Vancouver.

Boaters

Back then, the RC kit cost $200 and took several months to assemble. Buying an already built boat would have cost him $1,000 or more.

Today's radio-controllers can benefit from improved and advanced technology, along with competitive prices. Standley's controller cost him $60, ready-built.

"The mass-produced radios are better and cheaper radios than what we can build," Gillespie said.

Though Standley doesn't sail the bigger boats, Gillespie has a full-size single-sail boat that he takes out now and then.

"What we learn on the real boats we relate to the model boats because it all works on the same principles," he said.

As in sailing "real" sailboats, one of the challenges comes in attaining the "split-sail" in which one sail billows in one direction while the other billows in the opposite way. When this happens, "the boat really moves because the wind hits more sail surface," Standley said.

There are few problems for the RC sail-boater. Other than running out of battery power, the boats can tip over. In either case, the sailors need to retrieve their stranded craft, which might entail a swim.

It doesn't happen often, Standley said.

"It has enough weight in it so that when the rudder gets high enough out of the water, the boat turns into the wind and rights itself."

"It's the only practical sailing there is in Idaho," Standley said.

Toys keep yo-yo man young at heart

Aging
Lucille S. deView

He was rocking the cradle and walking the dog.

I know a yo-yo man when I see one. And I saw one recently while waiting for a shuttle to the airport. At dawn, a bunch of us anxious fliers huddled at the curb, checking our watches and eyeing the sky for rain.

Then this jaunty man walked toward us, nonchalant as could be. He unsnapped the holster on his belt, withdrew a snappy yo-yo, and went around the world.

The trip involved flinging the yo-yo in a 360-degree circle and watching it roll up to the palm of his hand, to journey again.

Anxiety fled as we watched yo-yo man's moves.

Aboard the shuttle, we learned he is Frank Martin, 62, of San Clemente, Calif., a Western states representative of Yomega yo-yos, Tedco gyroscopes, Madame Alexander dolls and other classic toys of bygone days sold through specialty toy stores.

But the yo-yo Martin used for his flashy curbside show didn't resemble the old-time, spool-like wooden halves held together by a wooden pin around which the string was wound.

Martin's yo-yo was a clear plastic marvel through which we could see a clutch. Yes, a clutch.

"We call it the Yomega with a brain," Martin says. "The centrifugal force created by the yo-yo's spinning pushes outward two steel balls set on springs and releases the yo-yo to 'sleep' as it revolves and slows down.

"The two balls contract and act as a clutch, and the yo-yo comes up to your hand automatically. You don't have to jerk it up, the way you do the traditional kind."

Yo-yos sleep? Ah, yes. That's the term when you've let it down as far as it will go and it spins there until, if you can, you draw it up again.

"With the Omega, you can rock the cradle longer and walk the dog further," he says, referring to the rocking motion you can make with a yo-yo and the trick of extending it to the ground and walking beside it.

Yo-yos and Martin have been inseparable since childhood. The youngest of five boys in Brooklyn, he was so short when he began to perfect his yo-yo technique that he had to stand on a kitchen chair.

The toy business seemed a natural. He runs the Los Angeles showroom of Frank Martin and Associates with a certain boyishness, calling himself superboss instead of president.

Grandparents are among his favorite customers, overcome as they are with nostalgia and a yen to pass along the toys they enjoyed in childhood.

"It's not important whether a toy is new or not," Martin says. "The children are new to the world, and that's what's important."

When yo-yo man waved goodbye at the airport, the rest of us grinned. By now, we were feeling, well, pretty jaunty.

Social Security Q & A

Knight-Ridder News Service

Q. I just started working and paying Social Security taxes. I'd like to learn more about the Social Security program. Do you have any information that gives examples of benefits?

A. We have a free publication that has just the information you want. It's called "Understanding Social Security" and explains the Social Security and Medicare programs. There are tables at the end of the publication that show examples of approximate monthly benefits payable at certain earnings levels if you retire, become disabled, and survivors benefits to you family if you should die.

To order a copy of the publication, call Social Security's toll-free number, 1-800-772-1213. You can order publications 24 hours a day, including weekends and holidays, if you have a touch-tone phone.

After you've been working several years, you can call Social Security and request a Personal Earnings and Benefit Estimate Statement. This will give you an estimate of what your benefits will be based on your earnings.

Q. I have a 16-year-old girl in my neighborhood clean my home once a week. Do I need to report her wages to Social Security?

A. If you pay a household worker $1,000 or more in cash wages during the year, the work is covered by Social Security. However, earnings for household workers under 18 are exempt from the Social Security tax unless employment is the worker's primary occupation. Contact any Social Security office for more information.

Windshield banner makes good news follow the bad

Dear Abby
Abigail VanBuren

DEAR ABBY: I can't thank you enough for mentioning the "Please Call Police" banners in your column. I ordered one; then two and a half months later — in 100-degree weather — the engine of my car went dead just outside Texarkana, Texas.

I put my "Please Call Police" banner on my windshield so cars and trucks could see it as they passed. In a few minutes, a police officer showed up saying someone had called in after seeing the banner. The officer drove me to a garage, then had my car towed in and drove me home.

Abby, that banner saved my life! I am 87 years old and have a heart condition. I couldn't have lasted very long in that heat. Thank you a thousand times.

– APPRECIATIVE IN TEXAS

DEAR APPRECIATIVE: No need to thank me – that's what I'm here for. How fortunate you had the foresight to plan ahead for such an emergency...

You are not the only reader who has told me what a lifesaver these banners can be. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: Last winter, a friend of ours had a life-threatening experience. She and her three children were driving on a major highway in Indiana. It was 10 degrees below zero when her car stalled. (It had snowed 16 inches the day before.)

We had been concerned about her driving in such weather, so we gave her our "Please Call Police" banner.

Abby, she managed to get the car to the side of the highway and then she placed the banner on her windshield. She and her children sat in the car in the bitter cold only about 15 or 20 minutes before a trucker came to their aid. (A driver going the other way had seen the banner and signaled an approaching truck driver to stop and assist her.) The driver graciously helped her restart her car and followed her to a truck stop several miles down the road.

I'm writing not only to tell you how valuable the banner was, but to ask you to print the address for others who may want to order them. We plan to give them to friends and family as gifts.

– MRS. GEORGE WOLVERTON, CLARKSVILLE, IND.

DEAR MRS. WOLVERTON: Your letter highlights the importance of being prepared for highway emergencies. Many readers have written to tell me that the "Please Call Police" banners make excellent holiday stocking stuffers.

To order the banners, write to WCIL-Banners, P.O. Box 92501, Los Angeles, Calif. 90009. (WCIL is the Westside Center for Independent Living, a not-for-profit organization that helps people with disabilities live independently.)

Make your check or money order (U.S. funds only, please) payable to: WCIL-Banners. You will receive one "Please Call Police" banner as a premium for a $5 contribution, and another banner with each additional $4 contribution. Include $1 per order for postage and handling. (Many people order two banners — one for the windshield and one for the rear window.) Please allow eight weeks for delivery.

DEAR ABBY: I am 30 and have been married one year. My parents live 1,000 miles away. When I was single, I would visit my folks for two weeks at Christmas and three to six weeks in the summer. But now that I'm married, I'm lucky to get home for one week. (My parents have come to visit me for one week also.)

Here's my problem: My older brother has two little girls, ages 3½ and 1½. When I go home to stay with my parents, he comes over and brings his children, and my parents practically ignore me. Since I visit them for only a short time, I am really hurt by their lack of attention. I don't want to have to compete with those kids. I shouldn't have to!

My last visit was a disaster because of this, so I cut it short and left two days early. There I was with my new husband, hoping to have our whole family together at church. (The church is very important to me; I was baptized there and was a member until I was 26.) Do you know what Mother did? She stayed home to take care of the girls!

Ever since my marriage I have felt a gap between us. I have decided that next year I will make a special trip to my brother's, so he won't need to come to see me (and bring the girls) while I'm at the folks'.

Any other suggestions on how I can deal with this problem?

— LEFT OUT IN OREGON

DEAR LEFT OUT: Why suffer in silence? If you don't tell them, they will never know how you feel.

Your mother and father are behaving like normal doting grandparents. Be open and honest. Tell them that you feel slighted when you visit them and they devote all their time and attention to your brother's children.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I are renewing our wedding vows at a formal church wedding in November, on the occasion of our 10th wedding anniversary. We were married by a judge, and now that we can afford it, I want the formal church wedding I've always dreamed about.

I would like my best friend, "Melanie," to be in the wedding party. She just went through a painful divorce and could use the lift.

The problem is "Tony," her new boyfriend. He gets loud, foul-mouthed and obnoxious after a few drinks. Melanie has broken up with him a few times because of this, but they always get back together again.

How should I handle this awkward situation if Melanie is still going with Tony in November?

— TAKING NO CHANCES

DEAR TAKING: Be up-front with Melanie and explain your concerns, which are valid.

Let her decide whether she wants to be responsible for Tony if he gets out of hand, or celebrate this occasion without him. I hope your special day is everything you want it to be.

DEAR ABBY: My Grandmother Geraldine passed away last year. She had been twice widowed and was buried near her first husband, "James Jones." Her second husband, "Paul Smith," was buried near his first wife.

Here's my problem: I am having Granny's headstone engraved. Should I use both deceased husbands' names? Or just the last one?

— UNCERTAIN

DEAR UNCERTAIN: Since there are no firm rules of "tombstone etiquette," your local tombstone sales representative should be consulted. Customs and cemetery restrictions can vary throughout the country.

Consider using the inscription, "Geraldine Brown Jones Smith," which indicates your grandmother's maiden name as well as her married names. And below, add her dates of birth and death.

Advancing to Final Retreat

It is the assured fate of nearly all of us, but few take the time to look at old age. Perhaps this is excusable in light of the fact that none of us actually expects to ever become old. Like an accident, old age is something that happens to someone else. The fact is, however, that taking notice of it may help us to endure. In this respect, the written words of Lady Diana Cooper are most instructive. "Age wins and one must learn to grow old... I must learn to walk this long unlovely wintry way, looking for spectacles, shunning the cruel looking-glass, laughing at my clumsiness before others mistakenly condole, not expecting gallantry yet disappointed to receive none, apprehending every ache or shaft of pain, alive to blinding flashes of mortality, unarmed, totally vulnerable."

Planning ahead for one's own funeral may at first seem like a difficult task. The fact is, we may be young at heart, but we are all mortal. Choosing to prearrange your funeral will guarantee your own wishes are fulfilled. It will also remove the burden from your bereaved family members. At White Mortuary & Crematory, we can answer any questions you have regarding the decisions that need to be made surrounding a funeral and a service. We're conveniently located at 136 4th Avenue E. (733-6600).

"The best part of living is to know how to grow old gracefully."

Deaf interpreters workshop planned

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS – A Common Threads Idaho Registry of Interpreters for the Deaf workshop is planned for 12:30 to 4 p.m. Thursday and 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Friday and Saturday at the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare Building on Pole Line Road.

Featured speakers include Steve Young of Idaho Falls, speaking on ethics, and Patti Togioka of Monmouth, Ore., speaking on the developmental phases of hearing-impaired children and how language relates to these phases, role separation and self-assessment.

Kate Nelson, representative of the National Registry of Interpreters for the Deaf, will be the keynote speaker at a banquet set for 6 p.m. Friday.

All educational interpreters and other personnel who work with the deaf or hard of hearing are encouraged to attend. Cost is $35 per person. Pre-registration deadline is Monday. For more information or to register, call Maddy Hartwell at 423-5912.

How to motivate your teen-ager

Your kids

Tips for setting teens on the right path:

• Buy teen-agers a pocket-sized calendar. Encourage them to write down every assignment.

• Set a regular study time. Even if they have no homework assignment, urge them to review notes or read ahead.

• Persuade them to spend 10 minutes at night getting ready for the next day.

• Have them try something new. High school may be the last time they can try out for a play or make a sports team. If they're already into sports, suggest they check out the debate team or other such clubs to broaden their interests.

• Help them set long-term goals, such as saving money for college tuition or taking certain courses to get into college.

Anniversaries

The Novaceks

Vlasta and Thomas Novacek

BUHL — Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Novacek of Buhl will be honored at an open house Saturday in observance of their 70th wedding anniversary.

Friends and relatives are invited to call from 2 to 4 p.m. at Lincoln Courts, 1310 Main St. in Buhl. Your friendship is a cherished gift, they respectfully request no other.

Novacek and Vlasta Palat were married Nov. 24, 1925, in Twin Falls. They farmed southwest of Buhl until 1966, when they sold their farm and retired and moved to Buhl. He was also a part-time sales representative for Western Fraternal Life Association of which he is a charter member organized in Buhl in 1920. He has been a member of the Loyal Order of Moose for 46 years and served as state president in 1970. She has been a member of WFLA for over 50 years, a member of Women of the Moose for 46 years and holds a friendship and college of regents degree.

The event is being hosted by their two sons, Mr. and Mrs. Ed Novacek of Twin Falls and Stanley Novacek, also of Twin Falls; their three grandsons, Mark Novacek of Oceanside, Calif., and Rick and Ron Novacek of Buhl; and their three great-grandchildren, Kelsey, Amanda and Justin Novacek.

The Carrels

Perry and Vera Carrel

TWIN FALLS — Mr. and Mrs. Perry Carrel of Twin Falls will be honored at an open house Oct. 8 for their 50th wedding anniversary. Friends and relatives are invited to call from 1 to 5 p.m. at the Weston Plaza lobby, 1350 Blue Lakes Blvd. N.

Carrel and Vera Lee DePew were married Oct. 2, 1945, at the Twin Falls Nazarene Church. Both attended school in Kimberly and they have lived in the Twin Falls area all their married lives. He served in the South Pacific during World War II and owned and operated Carrel Electric and Carrel Underground Construction. She worked in the Twin Falls School lunch program for several years.

The event is being given by their children, Christine Loyer of Palmer, Alaska, and Tamra Armstrong of Kimberly. They have seven grandchildren and one great-grandchild. The presence of all friends and family is requested; no gifts please, but bring memories.

The Schabs

Lola and John Schab

TWIN FALLS — Mr. and Mrs. John R. Schab will be honored at a family dinner on their 50th wedding anniversary on Oct. 3.

Schab and Lola Hays Gordon were married in Elko, Nev., after working for two Smith families in Ruby, Nev. He has worked as a farmer in Nevada, Missouri and the last 42 years in Idaho. She worked as a ranch cook, cooked at the Hansen School luncheon, Blue Lakes Country Club, Holiday Inn and owned Lola's Cafe in Murtaugh for seven years. She retired after 10 years at Idaho Frozen Foods.

The couple has one daughter, Terry Boss Miller and her husband, Jack Q. Miller and one granddaughter, Donna Louise Boss.

Anyone wishing to honor the Schabs' by sending a card or letter to them may do so at 1544 Poplar, Twin Falls 83301.

Lessons the ogre taught foolish Paulo

"The Ogre And The Foolish Boy" (an Italian tale), adapted by Amy Friedman and illustrated by Jillian Gilliland

Once upon a time a poor woman lived in a tiny village with her only son, Paulo. Paulo was a loving son, but he could be very foolish and lazy.

As Paulo grew older, he grew more foolish. At last his mother came to the end of her patience. "Go away and learn your lessons on your own!" she cried one day.

Tell me a story

Paulo walked for a long time, though he had no idea where he was going or what he ought to do. After a while he could not even remember why he had left home. As he stood trying to remember, he suddenly heard a rustling sound in the grass. When he looked around, he saw an ogre. The creatures head was enormous and wrinkled, with a long pointed nose and eyes so tiny that Paulo had to squint to see them. His arms were thick and hairy, hanging almost to the ground. His skinny legs were supported by enormous webbed feet. When the ogre saw Paulo, he let out a deep growl.

Paulo scratched his head. "You're no dog or cat or lion," he said.

"I am most certainly not," the ogre replied. "Im an ogre. Why have you come to my cave?"

And that was when Paulo noticed that he was standing outside a cave.

Now Paulo was no coward, and he was not unkind. Seeing that he had trespassed upon the ogre's land, he lifted his cap and bowed low. "Forgive me, sir. I certainly didn't mean to disturb your home," he said politely.

"That's good," said the ogre. He liked the boys fine manners.

"It is very cold outside, though, don't you think?" Paulo asked.

For by now the autumn wind was blowing hard and the sky was getting dark, and he was shivering and tired. "Could you tell me how far it is from here to the place I am going?"

The ogre had never heard such a foolish question, but he was kindhearted, and so he invited the boy inside his cave. Inside Paulo found a very nice home, even if it was almost as strange-looking as the ogre, with mossy walls and odd furniture.

Paulo and the ogre drank hot cocoa and told each other a few stories. The ogre laughed a great deal, for nearly everything Paulo said was more foolish than the thing he'd said before. Still, the ogre liked the boy. At last he said, "Why don't you stay here and work for me? If you serve me well, I'll pay you the wage you deserve."

That sounded just fine to Paulo. The ogre treated him well and gave him little work. Paulo grew fat from the feasts the ogre cooked for him. And he grew cocky and bold.

After one year Paulo became homesick. The ogre said to him, "Because I love you, I will allow you to return to your mother for a visit. But promise me you'll return."

"Oh, I will," Paulo promised, though he was not certain that he would.

"Take this donkey," the ogre said. "But Paulo, whatever you do, do not say the word 'October' to the donkey before you arrive safely home."

Paulo did not even thank the ogre. He jumped onto the donkey's back and with a wave of his hand set off for his home. He hadn't gone far when he dismounted and looked into the donkey's eyes. "Well, now, it's October," he said. For Paulo had no patience at all and could not wait to see what would happen when he said the word.

The donkey opened his mouth when Paulo spoke, and out poured diamonds and emeralds. Paulo filled his satchel with the jewels, mounted the donkey, and rode on until nightfall when he came to an inn. He went straight to the innkeeper and asked for a room. "Take my donkey," he said. "Give him plenty of oats to eat. But make sure you never say 'October', to him. Here, take my satchel and hide it."

The innkeeper was no fool. He peeked into the satchel and saw the precious jewels. He quickly fed Paulo a heavy supper and made up a nice bed for him. As soon as the boy was asleep, he hurried to the stables. "October," he said to the donkey. The donkey opened his mouth and still more jewels poured out.

At dawn Paulo woke and paid the innkeeper. Then he saddled up his donkey and set off for home.

No sooner had he arrived at his mothers than he said, "Quickly, Mother, bring some sheets and spread them on the ground, and you shall see the riches I have brought you."

His mother spread her linen sheets on the frosty ground. Paulo led the donkey to them and said, "October!" But the donkey just stood there and did nothing. You see, the innkeeper had stolen the magical donkey and replaced him with another, but Paulo was too foolish to notice. Paulo tried again. "October, I said!" The donkey yawned. Paulo reached out to whip him, but the donkey reared and kicked until the linen sheets were torn to shreds.

Paulos mother began to weep. "You made a fool of me —leave at once!" she cried. Paulo turned around and sadly rode back to the ogres cave.

When the ogre saw Paulo on this strange gray donkey, he knew at once what had happened. "My boy," he said, "you are a fool." But because the ogro was so kind, he took Paulo in once again. Another year passed. Then the ogre saw that the boy again seemed sad and homesick.

"Go home for another visit," said the ogre. And this time he handed Paulo a stick. "Whatever you do, remember you have behaved very foolishly in the past. If you had remained silent and done as I asked, you would not have lost your magical donkey. Now remember never to say to this stick, Rise up stick; lie down, stick, for if you do, I can only say I wouldn't wish to be you.

This time Paulo set out on foot, carrying his stick. "I'm no fool," he said to himself, though he was impatient once again. Before he had gone even half a mile, he set the stick upon the ground and said, "Rise up, stick."

The words were barely out of his mouth when the stick rose up and began to chase him. Paulo ran as fast as he could, and as he ran he called out breathlessly, "Lie down, stick!" The stick immediately fell to the ground and lay still.

Paulo smiled to himself. "I believe I have learned my lesson," he said to himself, and he walked on, whistling and smiling. At last he came to the inn.

He greeted the innkeeper and handed him the stick. "I would like a room, sir, and please, keep my stick for me. But whatever you do, do not say, 'Rise up, stick.'"

The innkeeper remembered Paulo, and thinking he would once again find riches galore, fed Paulo a rich meal and made up a nice warm bed for him. When Paulo was asleep, the innkeeper fetched the stick. "Rise up, stick!" he said, and at once the stick began to chase and hit the innkeeper.

Paulo was not really asleep. He sat up and looked out the window and laughed at the sight before him. "You have learned a lesson, too!" he called to the innkeeper. "If you give me back my magical donkey, I will make my stick stop."

The innkeeper ran at once to the stables, followed by the stick, and led the donkey back to Paulo. Paulo called, "Lie down, stick." The stick fell to the ground.

Paulo rode home with his donkey, which he gave to his mother in thanks for all her kindness. Certain his mother was taken care of, he returned to the ogre and worked hard for one whole year to repay his friend. And afterward Paulo was not so foolish, and was kind to his family and friends. He returned each year to the ogre to thank him for the lessons he had taught a once lazy and foolish boy.

Host Vikings finish 4-1 in volleyball tourney

HAZELTON – The Valley Vikings finished second at their own volleyball tournament Saturday, posting a 4-1 record against Malad, Firth, Murtaugh, Declo and Aberdeen.

Valley's only loss came in what turned out to be the deciding match early in the day with a 2-1 loss to Malad. The Dragons finished 5-0.

Malad won the opening game of the match 15-10, but Valley blew out to a big early lead and won the second 15-6. The third game went back and forth, with Malad winning 15-11 in the quick-score format, in which a goal is scored each time the ball hits the floor regardless of which team is serving.

"Malad was on a roll," Valley coach Julian Escobedo said.

His team finished the day with wins over Declo and Firth.

The Cougars, who figure to be a force in the Class A-3 state tournament later this month, were left shorthanded by the potato harvest, which closes several schools in Eastern Idaho this time of year.

Valley beat Firth 16-14, 15-13 in the final match to seal the No. 2 finish.

"This will be good for us. We have some tough matches coming up," Escobedo said, referring to Canyon Conference clashes with Gooding and Filer this week.

Firth finished 3-2 Saturday, with Murtaugh going 2-3 and Aberdeen and Declo both finishing 1-4.

Twin Falls soccer teams drop pair to Bishop Kelly squads

BOISE – The Twin Falls boys and girls soccer teams both lost to Class A-1 power Bishop Kelly Saturday.

Twin Falls plays in Class A-2 under the soccer classification that establishes divisions based on experience rather than school population.

The girls trailed 2-0 at the half. Sundei Giesler missed a penalty kick at the end of the first half for Twin Falls' best scoring opportunity of the opening period.

The girls fall to 5-4 on the season. They host Wood River Wednesday.

The boys' team fell 3-1 to the Knights, which was a big improvement over last month's 7-0 crushing in Twin Falls.

Oscar Santos scored the game's first goal for Twin Falls with a slick move past the Bishop Kelly goalie, and the Bruins took a 1-0 lead into halftime.

But the Knights tied the game early in the second half with a penalty kick, and the go-ahead score caromed off a Twin Falls player trying to clear the ball from in front of the Bruin goal.

Wetta paces Bengals past Vandals

Idaho State victory ends 6 years of drought against cross-state rival

The Associated Press

POCATELLO — Rob Wetta threw for three touchdowns, two to Justin Young, as Idaho State held off the Idaho 26-21 Saturday afternoon to stay undefeated.

Wetta finished with 284 yards in the air, completing 20 of 33 passes with one interception for the Bengals (4-0 overall, 1-0 in the Big Sky Conference).

It was the sixth straight win going into last season for ISU, ranked 24th in the Sports Network I-AA poll. No.13 Idaho (1-2, 0-1) suffered its first loss to ISU since 1987.

Idaho State scored first on an 18-yard touchdown pass from Wetta to Young with 12:23 left in the first period. The Vandals answered with a 79-yard first period drive ending with Joel Thomas scoring on a 2-yard spurt.

ISU's James Ferrell countered with a 31-yard field goal, and Wetta then hit Young again on a 27-yard pass.

The Vandals closed out the first half scoring on a 7-yard touchdown pass from Brian Brennan to Robert Scott with 34 seconds left.

Other games – D2, D3

NORMAN, Okla. — John Hessler made Colorado history in his first career start Saturday night, throwing a school-record five touchdown passes in a 38-17 victory over No. 10 Oklahoma.

Hessler, who came off the bench last week to lead Colorado (5-0, 1-0 Big Eight) past Texas A&M, had to lead the Buffaloes back from first-half deficits of 10-0 and 17-7. The sophomore did it in style, completing 24 of 34 passes for 348 yards.

Oklahoma (3-1, 0-1) had no luck moving the ball in the second half, and now has gone seven years without beating the Buffaloes.

Hessler's five touchdowns broke the team record of four held by Darian Hagan and Kordell Stewart. It also tied a Big Eight record.

Colorado took control of the game with two third-quarter touchdowns, a 71-yarder to Rae Carruth and a nice screen pass that Lendon Henry turned into a 28-yard score.

That left the Buffaloes with a 28-17 lead after three quarters. The Colorado defense held Oklahoma to 28 yards during the period, and then the Buffaloes snuffed out any Oklahoma hopes midway through the fourth.

Oklahoma tried for a first down on fourth-and-2 at the Colorado 28, but a bad snap resulted in a 9-yard loss. Five plays later, Hessler rolled out and found Phil Savoy for a 42-yard touchdown.

His other touchdown passes came in the second quarter — a 19-yarder to Savoy and an 11-yarder to Carruth.

Schutte roars ahead at state motocross finals

By Kevin Miller
Times-News writer

RUPERT – Darrell Schutte's first state motocross championship was completely devoid of drama, pressure and celebration.

But he has no intention of returning the trophy.

The 21-year-old Eden all-terrain vehicle pro class rider raced across the finish line first-in both races Saturday at the Idaho Motocross State Championships at the Minidoka County Fairgrounds, even though he didn't need to.

More than 150 of Idaho's best motocross racers kicked up dirt and caught some air in Rupert Saturday. The three race site series concludes today at the fairgrounds.

Schutte was the only racer left in his class to compete for the state title. Other racers in the ATV pro class failed to complete the three race series.

Even back when there was competition, however, Schutte was still in the lead. He won the first two days of racing three weeks ago in Pocatello, when other racers dared test him.

"There wasn't any pressure coming in this morning," a smiley Schutte said following his tenth consecutive win.

Schutte will walk off with his first state championship title tomorrow night in a ceremony following the final day of racing. It's tough to be a winner when there is no loser, but Schutte didn't let the lack of competition slow him. "I'd rather had some competition. It makes you feel like you earned it," he said. "But by no means, I don't go out there and just slouch. I just to improve my times and ride."

KEVIN MILLER/The Times-News

Eden racer Darrell Schutte bounced his way to an Idaho Motocross State Championship on his all-terrain vehicle Saturday at the Minidoka County Fairgrounds.

Saturday, Schutte was last at the starting gates but first across the finish line. He may have been a little complacent getting there, but when the gates opened, he was off.

It helped racing in the same heat with his younger brother, Nate, who competed in the ATV novice class.

"It's a lot easier to go fast when someone is around to push you," Schutte said.

Four years ago, Schutte pushed himself into the sport. A part-time farm worker, he took up racing because he "thought it looked cool."

"My first race, I came to the track late, finished last, but I had a great time," Schutte said.

Four years later, he has sponsors (Cache Honda-Yamaha in Logan, Utah, Gary's All Sports and J&W Truck in Hazelton) and an eye on the national racing circuit.

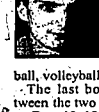
Also at the Idaho Motocross State Championships:

• Burley racer Jake Weimer is still the favorite to win the 50 cc pee wee title despite taking three spills in his final race Saturday. Weimer recovered from the first two falls and was riding in second place, but dumped his bike in the final turn on the final lap, falling back to fourth.

Weimer won the morning race and only needs to finish in the top five tomorrow to win his class.

• Hazelton's Stephan Shipley edged nearer a state title in the 50 cc 6-7 class. After finishing second overall through the two races Saturday, Shipley holds a safe lead over Donald Vawser of Kimberly.

A sting of sadness as Declo-Oakley rivalry ends



Kevin Miller
Foul territory

The Oakley High gymnasium still holds a place where signs of the names and mascots of Declo High School opponents are lined up, but there is no place on the schedule anymore for the battle of the Hornets.

Competition – in the stands, not on the court – became too hot for a high school contest. School officials, by mutual consent, agreed to cool down the fanfare fire by scratching the rivalry from the schedule four years ago.

The last Declo-Oakley football game (1991) ended 52-0 in favor of Declo, and the way things look, the two schools may never again meet in a regular season football, volleyball, or basketball game.

The last boys' basketball game between the two also went to Declo, 63-52, on Dec. 10, 1991.

"If everything fell into place, we'd take advantage of it," Oakley High School athletic director Delbert Bennett said of reviving the rivalry with Declo. "But, we're not going to tear our schedules apart to get a game with each other. It's not an issue."

From the Hornets' perspective – the Class A-3 Declo Hornets, that is – there is nothing to be gained in facing Oakley, an A-4 school. School officials insist that overbearing boosters had nothing to do with scratching Oakley from the schedule.

"We like to play within our own classification if we can," Declo athletic director Jay Darrington said. Declo has, however, maintained a regular relationship with Raft River, another Cassia County A-4 school.

But the Raft River Trojans are not the Hornets. The gymnasium does not reverberate with indiscernible but distinctly dueling cheers for the same, but opposing, mascots. The sidelines are not abuzz with excitement, nothing stirs the Hornets nest, and the teams don't trade stinging scores.

Once a great Cassia County athletic rivalry – two schools some 30 miles apart with identical mascots – is simply a fond memory of the golden years of high school sports.

"It was a good rivalry," remembered

Rockies clinch play-off spot; Mariners let chance slip

DENVER (AP) — Larry Walker and Ellis Burks drove in two runs each Saturday as the Colorado Rockies beat the San Francisco Giants 9-3 and assured themselves of at least a tie for a postseason spot.

Colorado, which can do no worse than a tie for the wild-card berth, moved within a half-game of Los Angeles in the NL West. The Dodgers played at San Diego on Saturday night.

The Rockies maintained their one-game lead over Houston in the wild-card race.

Bill Swift (9-3) allowed one run and 10 hits in 5 2-3 innings. Terry Mulholland (5-13) gave up three runs in the third and three more in the fifth.

Astros 9, Cubs 8

CHICAGO — The Astros kept their wild-card hopes alive and eliminated Chicago from the postseason picture, breaking an 8-8 tie on John Cangelosi's RBI single in the seventh off Mike Perez (2-6).

Craig Biggio, Jeff Bagwell, Derrick May and Rick Wilkins homered for Houston, which wasted leads of 4-1 and 8-6.

Greg Swindell (10-9) won in relief of Shane Reynolds. Todd Jones pitched two perfect innings before Mike Henneman worked the ninth for his eighth save.

Major leagues

Mets 8, Braves 4

NEW YORK — The New York Mets won their fifth in a row — all against playoff teams — scoring six runs in the sixth.

New York sent 11 batters to the plate in the sixth, getting six hits and taking advantage of an error by right fielder David Justice.

Cardinals 5, Pirates 1

ST. LOUIS — Alan Benes (1-2) picked up his first major league victory, striking out 10 and coming within one out of a shutout. Jose Oliva and Brian Jordan homered for St. Louis and Danny Sheaffer added a two-run triple.

Expos 6, Reds 1

MONTREAL — Kirk Rueter pitched two-hit ball over six innings and Montreal used two Cincinnati errors to score four unearned runs in the first inning as the Expos beat the Reds 6-1 Saturday night.

Rueter (5-3), who faced the minimum 15 batters through five innings, extended his shutout streak to 17 2-3 innings spanning three starts, all victories.

Phillies 3, Marlins 2

MIAMI — Heathcliff Slocumb struck out Alex Arias with the bases loaded to end the eighth inning and Philadelphia clinched at least a share of second place in the NL East by beating the Florida Marlins 3-2 Saturday night.

The crowd of 39,183 was Florida's third-largest this season at home. Some tickets for the final series of the year were priced at $1 for adults and 50 cents for children.

The defeat ended Florida's bid to overtake the Phillies for second place in the NL East. Philadelphia stopped a four-game losing streak and is assured of no worse than a tie for second with the New York Mets.

Yankees 6, Blue Jays 1

TORONTO — The New York Yankees clinched a tie for the AL wild card Saturday, moving closer to their first postseason berth since 1981 by beating the Toronto Blue Jays 6-1 on a four-hitter by Scott Kamieniecki (7-6).

The Yankees had a chance to wrap up the AL's first-ever wild card Saturday night if California lost to Oakland. If not, a victory by New York on Sunday or a loss by the Angels on the last day of the regular season would clinch it.

Paul O'Neill hit a three-run homer, his 22nd, in a four-run first inning and New York went on to its 11th straight win over Toronto. Al Leiter (11-11) allowed five runs and six hits in eight innings.

Red Sox 9, Brewers 1

MILWAUKEE — Troy O'Leary had three hits and two RBIs against his former team.

Mike Maddux (4-1) starting for just the fourth time this year, allowed one run and four hits in five innings with four strikeouts and a walk.

Indians 3, Royals 2

CLEVELAND — Albert Belle tied the game with his 50th home run, and Carlos Baerga won it with an RBI single off Jeff Montgomery (2-3) in the 10th, giving Cleveland its 99th victory.

Belle, who homered in the sixth, matched Babe Ruth's record with 17 September home runs and became the 12th major leaguer to hit 50 in a season — the first since Detroit's Cecil Fielder hit 51 in 1990. Belle did it in Cleveland's 143rd game.

Orioles 12, Tigers 0

BALTIMORE — Ben McDonald, Jimmy Haynes, and Jesse Orosco teamed to pitch Baltimore's fourth straight shutout and Brady Anderson hit his first career grand slam.

McDonald (3-6) had a no-hitter until Chris Gomez singled to center with one out in the sixth. McDonald gave up one hit and five walks in six innings for his first victory since June 10.

Twins 7, White Sox 6

CHICAGO — Marty Cordova hit his 24th homer Saturday night, tops among AL rookies, and Ron Coomer added a two-run homer to lead the Minnesota Twins to a 7-6 victory over the Chicago White Sox.

Cordova hit a two-run homer in the first, one of his three hits, and just missed another in the sixth with a fly ball to the warning track in center. He also stole his 20th base to become the third Twin with 20 homers and 20 stolen bases in a season. Larry Hisle and Kirby Puckett are the others.

Rangers 9, Mariners 2

ARLINGTON, Texas — The Seattle Mariners failed to clinch the AL West on their own Saturday night, losing 9-2 to Texas as Mickey Tettleton hit two homers and the Rangers knocked Andy Benes out in the second inning.

Seattle, which lost for only the second time in 17 games, still had a chance to clinch the first division title in its 19-year history if the California Angels lost later Saturday night against Oakland.

The Rangers got to Benes (7-2) for seven runs in 1 1-3 innings and dealt the Mariners just their second loss in Benes' 12 starts since being acquired from San Diego in late July.

Demons run over BSU

BOISE (AP) — Running back Clarence Matthews rushed for 177 yards, including a 36-yard touchdown with 1:45 remaining as Northwestern State of Louisiana surprised 11th ranked Boise State 22-17 in a non-conference football game Saturday night.

Matthews, a junior from New Orleans, also had a 54-yard touchdown run in the first quarter as the Demons improved their record to 3-2. Boise State, which was ranked as high as third among the Division I-AA schools, fell to 2-2.

Trailing 17-16 late in the game, Northwestern State started the winning drives at its own 27-yard line with 5:55 remaining. Matthews raced off right tackle for the winning score.

Boise State had taken its only lead of the game on a 5-yard run by running back Tommy Edwards giving the Broncos their 17-16 advantage with 5:36 to go in the third quarter.

In the first half, Northwestern State scored on its first two possessions to take a 13-0 lead early in the game. Quarterback Brad Laird scored on a 13-yard run and Matthews added his 54-yard score for the quick lead.

Badgers end Penn State title hopes in 17-9 upset

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. (AP) — Wisconsin was unintimidated by its first trip to Happy Valley, ending the longest winning streak in Division I-A and destroying Penn State's national title hopes with a 17-9 upset Saturday.

Darrell Bevel completed 18-of-22 with two touchdown passes for the Badgers (2-1-1, 1-0 Big Ten), as Penn State's linebackers were unable to keep up with Wisconsin's receivers and backs.

No. 6 Penn State (3-1, 0-1) could not establish a running game and Joe Paterno made two questionable coaching decisions, including a failed two-point conversion on a fake kick with Penn State trailing 17-9 and four minutes remaining.

With 20 seconds remaining in the first half and Penn State trailing 10-0, Paterno passed up a 41-yard field goal-attempt and Bobby Engram dropped Wally Richardson's short pass on fourth down. It was the first time Penn State had been shut out in the first half since 1992 against Miami, 33 games ago.

Penn State had won 20 in a row since losing to Ohio State on Oct. 30, 1993.

Syracuse 27, Rutgers 17

PISCATAWAY, N.J. — Donovan McNabb threw two touchdown passes to Marvin Harrison and Syracuse continued its domination of Rutgers by scoring 24 straight second-half points for a 27-17 victory Saturday night.

The win was the ninth straight in the series for the Orangemen (3-1, 1-0 Big East), who fell behind 17-3 and were outgained 293-67 in the first half.

In the second half, Syracuse switched to more of an option attack, scored on its first four possessions and didn't allow Rutgers (1-3, 0-1) to get closer than its 13-yard line.

Navy 30, Duke 9

DURHAM, N.C. — Chris McCoy rushed for 144 yards and a touchdown and ran Navy's option offense to near perfection Saturday night as the Midshipmen rolled over Duke 30-9, snapping the Blue Devils' 20-game non-conference home winning streak.

Navy (2-2) rebounded from a six-turnover, 30-7 loss last week to Wake Forest with a ball-control offense and a defense that held Duke to minus 1 yard rushing on 24 carries through three quarters.

A return bowl trip now appears a longshot for Duke (2-3) with road games remaining against No. 11 Virginia, Clemson and North Carolina. The Blue Devils' winning streak against non-Atlantic Coast Conference teams in Wallace Wade Stadium dated to a 56-17 defeat to Miami in October 1983.

No. 13 Auburn 42, Kentucky 21

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Patrick Nix passed for three first-half touchdowns as No. 13 Auburn built a 35-7 lead en route to a 42-21 victory over Kentucky on Saturday night.

Nix, who was 10-of-16 for 191 yards in the first half, had scoring passes of 36 yards to Andy Fuller, 32 to Stephen Davis and 44 to Robert Baker. Nix finished 18-of-27 for 262 yards and one interception.

Auburn (3-1, 2-1 Southeastern Conference) also got touchdown runs of 6 yards from Fred Beasley in the first quarter, 1 yard from Dameyune Craig in the second quarter and 2 yards from Davis in the third period in rebounding from a 12-6 loss to LSU two weeks ago.

Late college games

No. 23 Arkansas 35, Vanderbilt 7

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Madre Hill ran for two touchdowns and 200 yards and Barry Lunney threw for one TD and ran for one as No. 23 Arkansas routed Vanderbilt 35-7 Saturday night.

The Razorbacks (4-1, 3-0 Southeastern Conference) took sole possession of the SEC's Western Division lead after LSU's 20-20 tie with South Carolina earlier Saturday. Vanderbilt (0-4, 0-2), off to its worst start since going 0-6 in 1980, continued to struggle offensively. The Commodores ended a 12-quarter stretch without an offensive TD by scoring in the fourth quarter.

N. Arizona 37, Montana St. 0

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz. — Archie Amerson scored two touchdowns, Jeff Lewis threw for two more, and Kevin O'Leary kicked three field goals Saturday night as Northern Arizona pounded Montana State 37-0.

The Lumberjacks (4-1) took control from the Bobcats (3-2) early in the zgame, the Big Sky opener for both teams.

Amerson, who finished with 94 yards on 15 carries, ran for TDs of 21 and 17 yards in the first half, and O'Leary had field goals of 29 and 34 yards to help the Lumberjacks to a 20-0 halftime lead.

Air Force 27, New Mexico 24

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — Beau Morgan scored the go-ahead touchdown on a fourth-down run and safety Kelvin King's interception in the end zone secured Air Force's 27-24 Western Athletic Conference win Saturday night over New Mexico.

Air Force (3-2, 3-1 WAC) overcame four turnovers, including two muffed punts to beat the Lobos (2-2, 0-2).

Morgan, the Falcons' junior quarterback, scored on fourth-and-1 with 6:26 left in the game. He eluded New Mexico linebackers Blake Irwin and Daniel Johnson, both of whom had point-blank aim at him at the 4 and came up empty.

New Mexico got just about every bounce and break, but the interception picked off by King — the first thrown by New Mexico this season — was the difference.

Idaho

the rest of the third period and sacking Brennan in the end zone for a safety in the fourth period.

Brennan did find one chink on the ISU defense late in the game, tossing a 60-yard scoring pass to Scott with 11:25 left to play.

Brennan was 16-of-36 for 198 yards.

ISU coach Brian McNeely said his team played two different halves of football. "Our offense played well in the first half, sometimes dominated," he said. "In the second half our defense played very well, including our special teams. It takes everybody to win.

Idaho coach Chris Tormey said his team's inability to control the line contributed to the loss.

"We obviously weren't prepared to play," he said. "We knew we had to play well to beat a very good team.

Baylor edges Texas Tech

WACO, Texas (AP) — Jerod Douglas rushed for 157 yards to set up three field goals by Jarvis Van Dyke and Baylor defeated 24th-ranked Texas Tech 9-7 Saturday in the teams' final matchup as Southwest Conference members.

Douglas twisted and turned to make short gains into bigger ones, and exploded into the smallest flashes of daylight on his 25 carries, including runs of 38, 32 and 22 yards.

Southwest

The Bears (3-1, 1-0 SWC), whose defense is first in the nation against the pass and fourth overall, allowed Tech (1-2, 0-1) across midfield only twice in the second half.

The Red Raiders didn't score until quarterback Zebbie Lethridge's 1-yard sneak with five seconds to play. An onside kick failed, and Baylor ran out the clock with one final play.

No. 21 Texas 35, SMU 10

DALLAS — James Brown threw two touchdown passes and Shon Mitchell scored twice and rushed for 180 yards Saturday as No. 21 Texas rolled to a 35-10 victory over Southern Methodist in a Southwest Conference opener.

Texas (3-1) bounced back from a 55-27 loss to Notre Dame to win the 73rd and last scheduled game in a series dating to 1916. With the breakup of the Southwest Conference, Texas heads for the new Big 12 and SMU (1-4) to the Western Athletic Conference.

The sore-shouldered Brown had a bizarre day. In addition to the two touchdown passes, he had three passes intercepted by SMU cornerback Cornell Parker. He was replaced in the second half by Richard Walton, who threw a 25-yard touchdown pass to Matt Davis.

Army 21, Rice 0

WEST POINT, N.Y. — J. Parker kicked a 44-yard field goal as time expired Saturday, capping a furious last-minute drive and giving Army a 21-21 tie with Rice.

Trailing 21-7 early in the third quarter, Army (1-2-1) rebounded on two field goals by Parker and a 5-yard touchdown run by Steve Carpenter to salvage a game the Black Knights seemingly had lost.

Rice (1-2-1), coming off a 52-7 drubbing by LSU, took the second-half kickoff and scored in just 2:11 to take a two-touchdown lead. Josh LaRocca hit Jeff Venghaus with passes of 14 and 18 yards on the first two plays to move the ball quickly to the Army 33. Five plays later, Keilone Gordon scored on a 14-yard run and Army was reeling.

Southern Cal wraps up Arizona State

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Keyshawn Johnson had 13 catches for 171 yards Saturday as fifth-ranked Southern California, rocked by the suspension of three starters two days earlier, churned out a 31-0 victory over Arizona State.

Brad Otton threw for two touchdowns in the third quarter as USC (4-0, 2-0 Pacific-10) pulled away from a 10-0 lead.

West

Arizona State (2-3, 1-2) was completely bottled up by the Trojans, the nation's scoring defense leader. USC has allowed a total of just 27 points in four games.

Johnson set an NCAA record by becoming the first player with 100 or more yards in receptions in 12 consecutive games. On one of his catches, he grabbed a short pass in the left flat, then sidestepped ASU cornerback Traivon Johnson and sprinted to a 60-yard touchdown.

Arizona 20, California 15

TUCSON, Ariz. — Brady Batten replaced injured Dan White and threw the first two touchdown passes of his career Saturday as Arizona snapped a two-game skid with a 20-15 Pac-10 victory over California.

Arizona (3-2, 1-1 Pac-10) dropped out of the rankings for the first time in 39 weeks after last week's 31-10 loss to Southern Cal.

Batten, a sophomore who had attempted 19 passes in college, hit Richard Dice with scoring throws of 40 and 13 yards. Arizona also got a 13-yard scoring run from Gary Taylor and a safety en route to a 20-5 halftime lead.

Montana 41, UC-Davis 28

MISSOULA — An interception by Montana safety Ryan Palma that ended a UC Davis drive took the wind out of the Aggie's game Saturday as fifth-ranked Montana defeated the Aggies 41-28.

"We had a chance to be down 28-21 late in the second quarter, but it didn't happen," said UC Davis coach Bob Biggs.

The Aggies (2-1-1) moved from their own 24-yard line to the Grizzly 10 before Palma's interception.

Montana quarterback Dave Dickenson completed 24 of 34 passes for 469 yards and four touchdowns in just over two quarters of play.

"He's just too doggone good," Biggs said. "He's played too much and he sees the weaknesses. Then, on top of that, he's too elusive."

San Jose St. 32, Utah St. 30

SAN JOSE, Calif. — Joe Furlow's 42-yard field goal with 18 seconds left Saturday lifted San Jose State to a 32-30 Big West Conference victory over Utah State.

San Jose State (1-4, 1-1) took possession at its 48-yard line with 57 seconds left following a Utah State punt. The Spartans faced fourth-and-one at the Utah State 26. The clock ran out, but officials ruled the Aggies (0-4, 0-2) had called time out with 21 seconds left.

Furlow then kicked his game winner.

Utah State, which got 462 yards from quarterback Patrick Mullins and running back Abu Wilson, had stifled a late two-point San Jose State conversion attempt to hold a 30-29 lead with just 2:26 left.

No. 18 Washington 26, Oregon St. 16

CORVALLIS, Ore. — Damon Huard surpassed the 4,000-yard mark in career passing and 18th-ranked Washington used its kickoffs as a major weapon Saturday in a 26-16 victory over mistake-prone Oregon State.

Redshirt freshman quarterback Tim Alexander rushed for 182 yards in 24 carries, passed for 140 yards and scored two touchdowns in his first start for Oregon State.

The Beavers rushed for 348 yards and outgained the Huskies 488-369, but Oregon State couldn't overcome five turnovers and two big mistakes by the kickoff receiving team.

BYU 28, Colorado St. 21

FORT COLLINS, Colo. — Steve Sarkisian overcame an early interception with three touchdown passes to lead Brigham Young to a 28-21 victory over Western Athletic Conference foe Colorado State Saturday.

The victory was the second straight for BYU after losing the first two games of the season and ran the Cougars' record to 2-1 in the WAC.

CSU, defending WAC champion, dropped to 2-2 overall and 1-1 in the WAC.

The Rams took a 6-0 lead with 1:42 gone when cornerback Mack Craft picked off Sarkisian's first pass of the game on the BYU 30-yard-line and ran it in for a touchdown. Matt McDougal's extra point try was wide.

But after a rough first quarter in which Sarkisian completed only 3 of 9 passes for 38 yards, the BYU quarterback threw touchdown passes to Mike Johnston, Hema Heimuli and Tom Baldwin to give the Cougars a 28-6 lead midway through the fourth quarter.

The BYU defense then had to withstand a furious passing attack by Moses Moreno in the final eight minutes to survive with the victory.

South Carolina forces tie with favored LSU; Tide wins

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Shedrick Wilson, who severely sprained his left knee just before halftime, returned to catch a 19-yard touchdown pass with 1:06 left as No. 14 LSU salvaged a 20-20 tie against South Carolina on Saturday.

Wilson limped through most of the second half after getting helped off the field in the second quarter. But he sped past safety Chris Abrahams slanting toward the middle of the field for his sixth catch of the game. Andre Lafleur came right out and tied it with the extra point for LSU (3-1-1, 3-0-1 Southeastern Conference).

Kendall Cleveland ran for his sixth touchdown of the year and Lafleur made field goals of 46 and 41 yards.

South

South Carolina (1-3-1, 0-3-1), the league's worst defense, had six sacks and, except for the Tigers' final scoring drive, continually pressured Jamie Howard into mistakes and overthrows.

No. 20 Alabama 31, Georgia 0

ATHENS, Ga. — Deshea Townsend returned a blocked field goal 90 yards for a touchdown, Cedric Samuel returned a fumble 25 yards for another and Kevin Jackson scored on a 26-yard interception return, leading No. 20 Alabama to a 31-0 victory over Georgia Saturday.

The Crimson Tide (3-1, 2-1 Southeastern Conference) won with defense, coming up with six turnovers, the blocked field goal and a goal line stand that stopped Georgia twice from the 2 on the first series of the third quarter.

No. 3 Florida 28, Mississippi 10

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — Danny Wuerffel continued his touchdown barrage, throwing for three scores Saturday in No. 3 Florida's lackluster 28-10 victory over Mississippi, which kept the game close by controlling the clock.

Florida (4-0, 3-0 Southeastern Conference) also got two TDs from freshman Jacquez Green, who started in place of suspended receiver Reidel Anthony.

But the Gators defense continued to struggle, surrendering 325 yards to Ole Miss (2-2, 1-2) and leaving coach Steve Spurrier looking exasperated on the sideline.

Florida scored on its first three possessions but couldn't pull away because Ole Miss held a 10:40 advantage in time of possession.

Clemson 43, N. Carolina St. 22

RALEIGH, N.C. — Nealon Greene answered his coach's call for mistake-free football, throwing two touchdown passes and leading Clemson to a 43-22 victory over North Carolina State.

Prior to the game against the Wolfpack, Greene had thrown four interceptions and lost four fumbles. That drew criticism from coach Tommy West as well as an order to eliminate the errors.

Against N.C. State, Greene was 8-of-11 for 152 yards and a pair of scoring passes to Tony Horne. The Tigers (3-2, 2-2 Atlantic Coast Conference) also got two scoring runs from Raymond Priester, another touchdown dive from Emory Smith and a pair of field goals from Jeff Sauve.

North Carolina 62, Ohio U. 0

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — Octavus Barnes had 211 receiving yards on eight catches and tied the North Carolina record with three touchdown receptions as the Tar Heels broke out of their scoring slump with a 62-0 victory Saturday over Ohio University.

Barnes, who caught the game-winning pass in the final seconds of last week's win over Louisville, had scoring catches of 42, 56 and 23 yards as North Carolina (2-2) built a 35-point halftime lead.

No. 12 Tennessee 31, Oklahoma State 0

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — Jay Graham rushed for 108 yards and two touchdowns and Peyton Manning passed for two more scores as No. 12 Tennessee cruised to a 31-0 victory over Oklahoma State.

Buckeyes pounce on Irish turnovers in win; Huskers rip Huskies

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — After waiting 59 years for a chance to beat Notre Dame, Ohio State made the most of its opportunity.

The seventh-ranked Buckeyes scored three touchdowns following Irish turnovers during a 5½-minute span in the second half, including an 82-yard catch by Terry Glenn, and beat No. 15 Notre Dame 45-26 Saturday in the first meeting of the schools since 1936.

Midwest

Lou Holtz coached Notre Dame from the sideline for the first time since undergoing spinal surgery Sept. 12, but he couldn't prevent the Irish from giving the ball away on three straight possessions in the third quarter.

The turnovers led to touchdowns by Ohio State (4-0), which quickly turned a 20-14 deficit into a 35-20 lead that Notre Dame (3-2) couldn't overcome.

Eddie George rushed for 207 yards and two touchdowns for Ohio State and Bobby Hoying threw for 272 yards and four TDs. Glenn had four receptions for 128 yards and two scores, giving him seven TDs in his last three games.

Notre Dame's Randy Kinder ran for 143 yards and three TDs.

It was only the third game between the traditional football powers. Notre Dame beat Ohio State 18-13 in their 1935 "Game of the Century" at Columbus and won again the following year, 7-2 at South Bend.

Iowa 59, New Mexico St. 21

IOWA CITY, Iowa — Matt Sherman threw three touchdown passes and Sedrick Shaw scored twice Saturday as Iowa scored touchdowns on its first seven possessions en route to a 59-21 victory over New Mexico State.

The Hawkeyes stymied Cody Ledbetter, the nation's leading passer, while amassing 612 yards in improving to 3-0 for the first time since 1991.

No. 2 Nebraska 35, Washington St. 21

LINCOLN, Neb. — Quarterback Tommie Frazier scored three touchdowns and freshman Ahman Green ran for 176 yards and a score Saturday to lead No. 2 Nebraska to a 35-21 victory over Washington State.

The Cornhuskers (5-0) rolled up 428 rushing yards against the fourth-best rush defense in the country. Washington State, which came into the game allowing just 69.7 rushing yards, had given up 259 yards by halftime.

Junior Damon Benning started at tailback and finished with 62 yards, but it was Green who stole the spotlight. His touchdown with 27 seconds left in the third quarter came after he had already broken runs of 36 and 54 yards against a swarming Cougars defense.

No. 16 Kansas St. 44, N. Illinois 0

MANHATTAN, Kan. — Kevin Lockett broke the school record for touchdown catches and Bill Snyder became Kansas State's winningest coach Saturday as the 16th-ranked Wildcats snapped out of a first-half lethargy and rolled past Northern Illinois 44-0.

Coming off a 67-0 rout of Akron, Kansas State (4-0) led only 7-0 after a mistake-marred first half that included a pass that Lockett dropped in the end zone.

Michigan St. 25, Boston Col. 21

EAST LANSING, Mich. — Robert Shurelds had two second-half interceptions and Todd Schultz, making his first start, passed for 210 yards and two touchdowns Saturday as Michigan State overcame a 12-point deficit for a 25-21 victory over Boston College.

Schultz, forced into action after Tony Banks sprained his left ankle last week at Purdue, completed 20 of 28 passes with two interceptions for the Spartans (2-1-1).

Mark Hartsell completed 20 of 37 for 175 yards and two touchdowns with two interceptions for BC (1-3), a Big East team whose three losses have all come against Big Ten teams.

Hartsell's 4-yard scoring flip to Michael Hammert gave BC a 21-9 lead with 6:29 left in the third quarter.

No. 8 Michigan 38, Miami, Ohio 19

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — Brian Griese threw two touchdown passes in a nearly flawless first half and No. 8 Michigan went on to beat Miami of Ohio 38-19 Saturday.

The Wolverines (5-0) scored on their first five possessions of the first half to lead 31-0.

Griese, son of NFL Hall of Famer Bob Griese, was 10-of-18 for 157 yards in the first half without an interception in relief of Scott Dresibach, who suffered a severe sprain and torn ligaments in his right thumb in practice Thursday.

Bruins swim team captures meet title

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS — Saturday wasn't a great day for a dip in the pool, but the Twin Falls High School swim team took to the water just fine, in the season-opening invitational meet at the city pool.

The Bruins won the meet, at which 130 swimmers represented 11 schools, by more than 100 points over their closest rival.

Idaho Falls was runner-up, followed by Hillcrest and Jerome.

The Bruins, in their third year as a club team, have doubled their original roster to 25 this year – 19 girls and six boys.

That depth on the girls' side showed up early, as the Bruins took first, second and fourth place in the girls' medley relay to start the meet.

Joining Twin Falls in the 81-degree water were teams from Eastern Idaho and Jerome, plus individual competitors from Wood River High, Ketchum Community School and the Twin Falls Christian Academy.

"Being the home team, we needed to start with some good races," said Matt Haney, a junior on the team, after finishing second in the 200-yard freestyle.

Although the swimmers have been practicing for weeks, climbing into the outdoor pool every weekday at 5 a.m., Haney admitted the last 50 yards was a struggle.

"That last 50, you just have to give a little extra," said Haney, who started swimming competitively in the fifth grade.

JoAnna Bieri picked up a couple of individual wins for Twin Falls, taking the open 200 individual medley and open 100 fly events.

Timothy Dunne from Jerome won the boys 50-yard freestyle, and teammate Barrett Humphrey took the 100-yard freestyle.

Wood River's Jamie McLaughlin took the 100-yard backstroke and finished second in the 100-yard fly. Jaylene Burdick, Melanie Baldwin, Suzanne Miller and McCale Ashenbrener all won races for Twin Falls.

Twin Falls' next meet is Oct. 14 at Idaho Falls.

Team results:
1, Twin Falls, 837; 2, Idaho Falls, 731; 3, Hillcrest, 597; 4, Jerome, 344; 5, Rigby, 288; 6, Highland, 227.5; 7, Pocatello, 98.5; 8, Wood River, 37; 9, Ketchum CS, 31; tie, TFCA, 31; 11, Grace, 12.

Darrington, who took the field against Oakely years ago. "There was a good, competitive attitude in both schools."

On the court or playing field, the Hornets put together some memorable efforts. In 1988, for example, Oakley's football team beat Declo 12-8 en route to an 8-1 season. That marked the end of a three-year run by Oakley in a series that was then dominated by the larger school until it ended in 1991.

Oakley hasn't beaten Declo in boys' basketball since a 72-70 thriller in 1986.

But in the stands, some of the action between the two schools was obnoxious. Sometimes, the stands were more physical than the game. At football games, confrontations between fans were limited because school boosters generally sat on opposite sides of the field.

Inside the gymnasium for basketball games, though, bloodthirsty fans were eye-to-eye.

Following a girls' basketball game that some say led directly to the cancellation of the Declo-Oakley competition, two fathers had to be separated after a game filled with obscenities shouted at each other, officials, coaches and players.

The fight started between grown men when one moaned over a call against his daughter's team. The other shot back with a remark and the escalation continued until a final face off after the game.

Meanwhile, on the court, the Lady Hornets played on, trying to ignore the embarassment.

Who won? Who remembers? The unruly behavior of a few overbearing parents has erased the slate, both past and future. In a game where all that mattered was the effort of two dedicated teams of teen-agers, the antics of some pathetic parents is all that is remembered.

Sure, it took more than one incident to end the clash of the Hornets – which is even sadder. Confrontations like the one between two fathers at that girls basketball game were not unusual in this lively rivalry, but they were restricted to the stands.

One coach said the only way he envisioned the Hornets meeting again was if the doors to the gymnasium are sealed shut and no one allowed to watch. If the fans had stayed out of it, the rivalry would still be played today, he said.

High school athletics should not suffer because of the insufferable behavior of some fans. Like in a professional of collegiate sporting event, buying a ticket to a high school game does not give spectators license to be abusive. School officials should feel free to remove fans who lose control during games.

For those of us true fans of high schools athletics, spare us the idiots, but give us back our rivalries.

Dave Winfield, holding his daughter, Arielle, said at a news conference after Saturday's game against Kansas City he is 'shocked and very disappointed' in being left off Cleveland's roster.

Winfield off Indians' roster for playoffs

CLEVELAND (AP) — Dave Winfield revealed Saturday that he won't be added to the Cleveland Indians' playoff roster.

"I'm a little shocked and very disappointed," said Winfield, who has more career hits than any active player. "I'm not here throwing darts or barbs or anything like that. Coming down the stretch, I haven't had opportunities to perform or produce."

'With or without me, they're going to go far.'

— Dave Winfield, on Cleveland's chances in the post-season

Winfield has played with a sore left shoulder most of the year. Limited to occasional work as a DH and a few pinch-hitting appearances, he has batted .193 with two homers and four RBIs in 45 games.

He said his next step would be surgery. "I will have the corrective surgery and go from there. I have no comment on what I plan to do after this personally or with my career."

The Indians signed the 43-year-old Winfield as a free agent in April so he could add some stability and experience to the team, particularly during a pennant race and the postseason.

But he missed more than a month of the season in June and July because of a strained left rotator cuff. He was on the disabled list again when playoff rosters were set Aug. 31, which gave the Indians the option of adding him any time before Tuesday.

Winfield sounded somewhat bitter about the decision. "Although I haven't had a long and distinguished career with the Cleveland Indians, I have accomplished a lot of things in baseball," Winfield said.

"This year has been difficult for me. Having the injury, the season has moved slowly for me. If they felt I couldn't contribute, I certainly would have had the surgery before now."

Winfield asked the Indians to set up a news conference following Saturday's 3-2 win over Kansas City so he could reveal the team's decision.

"This team is superb. With or without me, they're going to go far," he said. "Not being able to participate, it hurts me. I always held out hope that I would be there, and I worked like the dickens to be there."

Winfield singled in his last at-bat Saturday, giving him 3,110 career hits — 14th on the all-time list. He began his career with San Diego in 1973 and has also played for the New York Yankees, California, Toronto and Minnesota.

The Indians have 12 pitchers eligible for the playoffs but are likely to carry only 11. The only other position player eligible to be added is outfielder Ruben Amaro.

Anderson expected to resign

BALTIMORE (AP) — Even if he resigns from the Detroit Tigers, Sparky Anderson intends to manage somewhere in 1996.

The Detroit Free Press reported Saturday that Anderson will resign Monday during a news conference at Tiger Stadium. Asked if he intended to manage in the major leagues in 1996, he responded: "Yeah, no question about that."

Anderson wouldn't confirm his departure from Detroit.

"I can't tell you. If I did, there wouldn't be any sense in having a press conference," he said.

Anderson, 61, said Monday's news conference was his idea.

"The Tigers didn't call it, I called it," he said, hours before the Tigers faced the Baltimore Orioles in what was probably his penultimate game with Detroit.

The Tigers lost 12-0. It was not one of his more memorable games.

"You just get a good seat and watch it," he said. "These kind, you don't even worry about. You just hope it will be over fast."

Anderson will wrap up his 17th season with the Tigers on Sunday afternoon in the regular-season finale against Baltimore.

During Anderson's tenure, the Tigers won the World Series in 1984 and the American League East title in 1987. Anderson also headed the 1989 team that lost 103 games.

Anderson has won 2,194 games with Detroit and Cincinnati.

Cards' manager may be out

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The St. Louis Cardinals are preparing for their season finale and perhaps Mike Jorgensen's last game as manager.

General manager Walt Jocketty said he'd probably make a decision next week, and added that Jorgensen could move back to director of player development if he's not retained as manager.

"Whether it's Jorgy or somebody else, we need to have that decision made and in place so we can start planning because the manager should be involved in the planning process," Jocketty said. "He'll certainly be a part of our organization, and I've told him that."

Jorgensen, who replaced Joe Torre in June, said he's not worried about it. "I'm not even going to talk about it until I sit down with Walt and find out what the situation is," Jorgensen said. "I just let him know I want to be a part of whatever's going to happen here.

"I'm a Cardinal guy. I'm not on strike for one job or the other."

CSI women notch another victory

COEUR d'ALÈNE — College of Southern Idaho ran the platoon system Saturday in claiming the North Idaho women's volleyball invitational.

Coach Ben Stroud didn't stick with basically the top guns until Ricks again appeared in the finals. The Eagles beat them 15-9, 17-16, 15-7. Ricks, ranked eighth nationally, has lost 11 games this year — nine to CSI.

Lawanda Johnson, with seven blocks, and Claudia Fonseco with five drew praise from Stroud, who noted "we got a lot out of our middle in this one." Those two also combined for 12 kills.

But the kill leaders were the usual, Paula Araugo with 14 and Katiane Simonetti with 12.

In the first-round of the single elimination windup, Michelle Floyd (12 kills), Casy Murdock (10) and Kelly McCabe (9) sparked CSI to a 15-9, 15-11, 16-17, 15-4 win over North Idaho.

Completing the pod round Saturday morning, the Eagles beat North Idaho 15-8, 15-2, 17-15 and Spkane Falls 15-8, 15-7, 15-11.

The day's results run the nationally-ranked No. 1 Eagles' record to 41-0 for the year.

Boise harriers win Firman Invitational

BOISE — Twin Falls and Minico finished in the lower half of the standings Saturday for the 20th annual Firman Cross Country Invitational.

Boise won both girls and boys divisions.

Minico placed seventh in the boys division and eighth for girls. The Spartans top scorers were Sharlyn Maughan, 8th in 20:22 and B.J. Christensen 7th in 16:49.

Twin Falls boys were 12th among 16 teams and headed by Dan Ruprecht, whose 17:36 time placed him 23rd. Twin Falls girls, headed by Brandy Clarke, were 13th. Clarke was 48th in a time of 22:25.

Middleweight McGirt says he'll hang up gloves

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Minutes after getting knocked out in a non-title bout Saturday, junior middleweight Buddy McGirt announced he was retiring from boxing.

McGirt, 31, dropped to 64-5-1 after being floored by Andrew Council in the ninth round of the scheduled 10-round bout.

"I had no excuses," said McGirt, a two-time world champion. "The punches mounted up. I knew I was definitely behind. After the first knockdown I thought, 'Who turned out the lights?' My left hand has never been the same since the operation."

McGirt filed a lawsuit Feb. 24 in U.S. District Court claiming a doctor failed to properly diagnose and treat his left shoulder two months before he lost a 12-round fight to Pernell Whitaker in March 1993.

McGirt said he was unable to use his most effective weapon, his left hook.

After announcing his retirement, McGirt said Council would be the next champion. "When you are, invite me to your victory party," he said.

McGirt, of Brentwood, N.Y., remained all business in the wake of McGirt's retirement.

"Buddy was trying to ride my jab," Council said. "I had to be careful. I had to press on him. I knew he was experienced, so I couldn't take many chances."

German retains cruiserweight title

HANNOVER, Germany — Ralf Rocchigiani of Germany pounded out a unanimous 12-round decision over Marc Randazzo on Saturday night to retain his WBO cruiserweight title and hand the American his first professional loss.

Rocchigiani jarred Randazzo repeatedly with rights, controlling the entire fight against the WBO's No. 1 challenger after a slow start.

It was the first title defense for Rocchigiani, who had been dismissed as a journeyman fighter until he took the belt of England's Carl Thompson on June 10. He improved his record to 35-8-7.

Randazzo, of Chicago, who fell to 27-1-1, tried to hit Rocchigiani with his left hand, which had produced 16 knockouts. But the blow left him exposed to the right hands by the counterpunching German.

"Back to the drawing board. Next time you see me I'll be a better fighter, God willing," Randazzo, 29, said.

Hamed hammers opponent

CARDIFF, Wales — Naseem Hamed's left hook floored WBO featherweight champion Steve Robinson in the eighth round Saturday night, giving the challenger the first of what he pledged would be a series of world titles.

The 21-year-old English-born son of a Yemeni father sent Robinson crumbling to the floor at 1:40 of the round as he won the title before 16,000 fans at Cardiff rugby stadium.

Hamed, unbeaten in 20 pro fights, weighed 125 pounds in his debut as a featherweight. Hamed, who already has graduated from bantamweight to super-bantamweight, says he is targeting world titles up through lightweight and beyond.

Funk, Stricker lead pack driving for Buick Open title

PINE MOUNTAIN, Ga. (AP) — The Southern Open became the Buick Challenge. Maybe they should have renamed it the Buick Shootout.

With 31 golfers within five shots of the lead heading into Sunday's final round, the Buick Challenge is still anybody's tournament.

Fred Funk and Steve Stricker, two players trying to get into the $3 million Tour Championship, are tied at 11-under 205.

Funk shot a 69 Saturday and Stricker, who led by two strokes after the second round, shot an even-par 72 on the Mountain View Golf Course at Callaway Gardens.

Five players — John Morse, Loren Roberts, Larry Nelson, Kirk Triplett and Jeff Sluman — are one stroke back.

"When fields are bunched like they are here, you know someone's going to get hot and shoot a low number on Sunday," Funk said. "Starting out today I sure didn't think 11 under would be leading after the round."

Currently 31st on the money list, Funk is trying to break into the required top 30 for next month's Tour Championship.

It would also qualify Funk for next year's U.S. Open, for which he does not have an exemption. He won the Idcon Classic in July for his second career victory.

Making three birdies on the back nine when everyone else seemed to be giving shots away, Funk finally took the lead with a 6-foot birdie putt on No. 17.

Earlier, Funk dropped 3-foot birdie putts on Nos. 13 and 15.

"I hit the ball poorly on the front nine, not doing anything that resembled my swing the first two days," Funk said. "I think the birdies on 13 and 15 turned things around for me."

Funk, who coached golf at the University of Maryland for eight years before joining the PGA Tour, made a birdie on No. 6 when he knocked in a 20-footer from the fringe, then bogeyed 7 to drop back to eight under.

Stricker, also in the running for a spot in the Tour Championship, made two birdies and two bogeys in his even-par round.

He is 37th on the money list, and has never won in two previous years on tour. His best career finish is a tie for second at last year's Northern Telecom Open.

"I feel fortunate to shoot even-par and still be tied for the lead," Stricker said. "Hopefully, this was my mediocre round this week and I left myself in good shape for tomorrow."

Stricker has never played in the final group in the final round. He bogeyed the first hole Saturday, then reached the par-5 7th in two shots and settled for birdie when his 15-foot eagle putt stopped inches short.

Irwin eagled the par-5, 11th to lead by as many as two strokes over Stockton, who played one group ahead. But he had to get up and down out of a bunker at No. 18 for par.

"I was in 'Hale's Bunker' for the third day in a row," Irwin said. "I don't want to say that was critical, or that was pivotal, but I'm glad that'll be behind me going into the final round. I feel that will give me some momentum."

Stockton, who earned more than $1 million on the Senior Tour so far this year, was aggressive in and around the fairways — successfully risking one shot through the trees along No. 11.

Old pros sit atop Seniors' event; hot Hobday moves up

CLEMMONS, N.C. (AP) — Senior PGA Tour money-leader Dave Stockton and three-time U.S. Open champion Hale Irwin took different paths Saturday to the lead of the $1.5 million Vantage Championship.

Stockton had a 6-under-par 66 for a 10-under 134 total that was matched by Irwin, who started the day alone at the top after an opening 66. They were two strokes ahead of Mike Hill, who shot a second-round 69, and three ahead of Gary Player, Lee Trevino and Jim Albus.

Simon Hobday shot the day's best round, a 65, to join Isao Aoki and Rocky Thompson at 138 after two rounds on the 6,680-yard Tanglewood Championship course.

Bob E. Smith, who began the second round one stroke off the lead, shot 72 to drop back into a tie for fifth place with Arnold Palmer, who shot a 68, and Ray Floyd, who had a 69.

Stockton gently carried birdies into the hole three times on both the front and back nine Saturday, while Irwin aggressively putted the ball, labelling the greens "easier" than the day before.

"I don't know what it is," Irwin said. "The greens were a little more difficult today. They just didn't hold as well."

Graham holds shaky LPGA lead

CORNELIUS, N.C. (AP) — Gail Graham was able to salvage a bogey after dropping an approach shot into the water Saturday and clung to a one-stroke lead over Hiromi Kobayashi and Tammie Green in the LPGA Fieldcrest Cannon Classic.

Graham shot a 3-under-par 69 in the third round of the inaugural $500,000 event and was at 12-under 204 heading into Sunday's final round. Green birdied three of her last five holes in a 67, while Kobayashi had a 69.

In a group at 208 were Beth Daniel, Juli Inkster, Stephanie Farwig, Brandie Burton and Britain's Karen Lunn.

Graham, a Canadian who has never won an LPGA tour event, survived the 441-yard, par-5 9th after she thunked her second approach shot into Lake Necessity. She two-putted from 50 feet to save bogey.

"I had a lot of fun out there today," said Green, one of just four players to make the cut in every LPGA event she entered this season. "All in all, I was playing tee-to-green as well as I have played all year."

Kobayashi used a consistent short game and did not make a bogey until the 400-yard, par-4 17th. Her approach helped overcome occasionally windy conditions at The Peninsula Club.

"The wind was a little bit of a problem at times," Kobayashi said. "I felt good all through the day so I am really looking forward to tomorrow. I will have to make birdies tomorrow."

Farwig shot the lowest score of the day and her 65 tied the ladies' course record. She had an eagle on the 580-yard 5th when she dropped a 162-yard approach shot.

Gang violence turns football games deadly

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — Lt. T.D. Jones is a stocky, barrel-chested police officer with a crew cut, and he doesn't so much talk as bark. On Friday nights as summer turns to fall, he commands an army of cops at the old football stadium downtown.

Wind whips through the tunnel at one of the entrance gates, and at one spot along the street there are more officers than civilians. They command a phalanx of swaggering teenagers to keep moving, watching them closely for bulges in their jackets that could be guns.

At some inner city stadiums, this is what has become of high school football. Simple games between kids have taken on the frightful atmosphere of a war zone.

'We're talking about a society where an American child under 16 is killed every two hours with a handgun. There are 1,500 high school-based gangs in the United States, and 2,000 assaults per hour in schools. To think that it will not spill over to our sports fields is naive.'

— Richard Lapchick, Northwestern University

"What's scary is that if we don't get a grip on football as we know it may change altogether," said Lt. S.M. Searcy, one of 68 officers keeping order at a game between city rivals last weekend in Montgomery.

In Alabama, where communities used to spring to life for Friday night football, the gatherings have been ruined by violence, and the threat of it. In a season only a month old, two teen-agers have been fatally shot while on their way home from games. Two other games were disrupted when shots were fired during melees in the stands, sending players rolling across the field to find cover.

Sometimes the precautions against violence are as scary as the violence itself. The stepped-up police presence at the Montgomery stadium is being copied at games in Birmingham, where some schools have employed metal detectors that scan everyone from competitors to fans to tuba players.

And it's a given that at games between city rivals, fans for each school are kept on opposite sides of the stadium, separated by a fence that's guarded by police.

"If something breaks loose in here, we just seal this place off," Jones announced in a gravelly tone more befitting an Army commander plotting a battle plan. "Nobody gets outta here."

Such a show of force at a single game in Montgomery is incredible, considering the police force for the capital city of about 200,000 people is 459.

At least one officer stands in each tunnel that leads into the stadium. Two patrol each end zone, and others roam the streets and the inner shell of Cramton Bowl, the same stadium that hosts the Blue-Gray college all-star game each Christmas Day.

"There's so many police here that we can get to the trouble quickly and get it defused before it spreads out," Jones said.

School officials in the Birmingham area, where both fatal shootings occurred, point out that they happened after the games and away from the stadiums. And in truth, sports cannot be blamed for the violence that also happens at malls or movie theaters.

But it seems the games that children play are no longer immune to it.

"We're talking about a society where an American child under 16 is killed every two hours with a handgun," said Richard Lapchick of Northeastern University's Center for the Study of Sport and Society. "There are 1,500 high school-based gangs in the United States, and 2,000 assaults per hour in schools. To think that it will not spill over to our sports fields is naive."

It appears the games were guilty only of being a magnet for lots of young people, many of whom don't need an excuse to start trouble.

"As long as you've had schools, you've had kids fighting," said Bruce Wright, superintendent of Jefferson County schools. "The difference between then and now is we have a generation of children who decide the solution to a problem is to kill somebody."

The massive police presence at games leaves little doubt that times have changed. Scarier still is the fact that this is not an exclusively urban problem. One game where shots were fired was a matchup between city rivals in Birmingham. But the other one happened the same night at a game in rural Enterprise in south Alabama.

Wright said it appeared gangs were to blame for the Birmingham incident.

"In some cases, if you have heavy gang activity that may be a place where they can strut their stuff and get some publicity," Wright said.

In Montgomery, the authorities' job is not over when the fourth quarter ends. Police make sure everyone leaves the stadium immediately, and officers sprawl out methodically over several city blocks to head off trouble.

The get-tough approach seems to be working. The only recent trouble at a city game came two weeks ago when a teen was arrested for toting a gun.

"The main thing I can see to do is what they're doing now — post the police all around," said Willie Moore, who was in the stands watching his son play. "They have to put on a clean game for the people who want to come out and enjoy it."

In other states, officials have rescheduled games from Friday night to Saturday afternoon to prevent trouble. In the South, though, Saturdays are dominated by college football.

Friday night has always belonged to high school games, with their unique pageantry and knack for bringing towns together.

"I think that to move to Saturday afternoon would probably be giving in to it," Wright said.

Moore said the problems don't originate at football games; they converge on the stadiums from the troubled homes and neighborhoods that surround them. In between mouthfuls of popcorn and cheers for his son, Moore remembered when things were different.

"We used to have little fights, but we weren't shooting each other," said Moore, who attended a nearby high school in the days when Cramton Bowl was packed with 20,000 fans for Friday night football. Now, crowds at the old stadium rarely get above 5,000, if that high.

"I think people are just afraid," he said.

Spanish, Irish runners use strong kicks to grab Fifth Avenue Mile race honors

NEW YORK (AP) — Although neither Isaac Viciosa of Spain nor Sinead Delahunty of Ireland had run the Fifth Avenue Mile before Saturday, their unfamiliarity with the course was no detriment.

The little-known, 25-year-old Viciosa, far overshadowed among middle-distance runners in Spain by 1992 Olympic 1,500-meter gold medalist Fermin Cacho, won the elite men's race in a hand-timed 3 minutes, 47.8 seconds. His clocking was less than .3 seconds of a second off the event record of 3:47.52 by Sydney Maree in the inaugural running in 1981.

Delahunty, 24, a 1993 graduate of Providence, where a long line of Irish runners — both male and female — have thrived, took the women's elite race in 4:25.2.

Both Viciosa and Delahunty won with strong performances over the final 100 meters.

Viciosa outkicked Kenya's Stephen Kipkorir, the runner-up at 3:48.2, and Italy's Gennaro DiNapoli, third at 3:50.7, in the 19-man field.

"At 1,500 meters, I decided I would go," Viciosa said through a translator, seventh-place finisher Danny Maas of Trinidad, Colo. "I attacked. They didn't respond."

Viciosa, a surprise entrant — he wasn't even on the printed start list even though he had entered a week ago — called it the biggest victory of his career, even bigger than a triumph over Cacho last year. It was worth $5,000. "Winning signifies a lot for me," Viciosa said.

He didn't think his time would be so fast. "I felt I had been competing well," said Viciosa, runner-up to Cacho in this year's European Championships and the 12th-place finisher in the World Championships at Goteborg, Sweden. "But I didn't know how well I would do. I didn't know how fast the race would be. I didn't think I could run 3:48.

"I just wanted to win."

Maas was the first American finisher — in the same position and exact same time (3:54.7) as last year.

Jason Pyrah, the 1994 winner from Provo, Utah, was 17th in 4:05.5.

Delahunty, runner-up in the mile at 4:16.68 in 1990, wound up fifth at 4:30.7 in the 10-woman field — and was delighted. "I'm as pleased as I've ever been in getting fifth," Plumer, 33, said, after running healthy for the first time in three years. "I did everything I wanted to do and then some.

"I hadn't run races. My time trials were disastrous. I was very nervous. I was worried I would come in last. I didn't know if I could break 4:40."

Eagles bench Cunningham; Panthers shuffle deck

NFC

Quarterback Rodney Peete is expected to make his first start for the Philadelphia Eagles on Sunday against the New Orleans Saints. That all but signals the end of the line in Philadelphia for Randall Cunningham, who is in the final year of his contract and never quite got the hang of the San Francisco-style offense Ray Rhodes implemented.

Cunningham did complete 61 percent of his passes, but he averaged an NFC-worst 5.08 yards per attempt. He also threw more interceptions (four) than touchdowns (three) and was benched in two games.

Peete has the patience in the pocket that Cunningham lacks, which makes him a better fit in this scheme. Peete will work his way through his progression of three or four roads on a play. Cunningham wants to scramble after the first two.

"Rodney is a feisty player," Rhodes said. "I'm looking for someone to give us a spark."

It marks the first start for Peete since last December with the Dallas Cowboys. It will give him starts in three consecutive seasons with three different teams. He also started 10 games for the Detroit Lions in 1993.

St. Louis quarterback Chris Miller has suffered four concussions in the last 13 months, including one in last week's game against Chicago. That resulted in a $12,000 fine against Bears' linebacker Vinson Smith for a blow to the head. Miller complained of some headaches last week but said he intends to play Sunday against the Indianapolis Colts.

But Rams' Coach Rich Brooks has a complaint of his own — the open season on quarterbacks that continues to exist despite rule changes this season designed to put an end to such blows to the head.

"I just expect those plays to be eliminated from the National Football League," Brooks said. "There's no place in this game for an intentional blow to somebody's head. I would hope this sends a message."

The Green Bay Packers knew they had to bite the bullet at cornerback in 1995 and dump former first-round draft pick Terrell Buckley at any cost. He's only 5-7 and had no physical presence on the field.

So the Packers traded Buckley to Miami in early April, even before they had a suitable replacement for him. That guy came along in the draft when Green Bay selected Arizona State's Craig Newsome in the first round. He's bigger (5-11, 190) and more physical than Buckley — and now the entire Green Bay secondary is playing bigger and more physical.

"He's influenced us," former Pro Bowl safety Leroy Butler said. "He was all wired up when he got here, and he's the most aggressive guy we've got. We were more finesse last year."

Quarterback Dan Marino and the Miami Dolphins face the resurgent Cincinnati Bengals Sunday in Cincinnati.

With teams picking on Buckley last season, the Packers finished 15th in the NFL in pass defense. With Newsome standing up to receivers, the Packers rank first this season. Butler credits Newsome as being the difference.

The winless Carolina Panthers are shuffling the deck for Sunday's game against the Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

There figure to be at least three changes in the starting lineup — quarterback Kerry Collins is in and Frank Reich out, guard Frank Garcia is in and rookie Andrew Peterson out, and safety Pat Terrell in and Bubba McDowell out.

Also, the Panthers plan to give running back Vince Workman, wide receiver Eric Guilford and cornerback Tyrone Poole more work on game day. Why not? The Panthers rank 29th in offense and 23rd in defense and have showed little life since their near upset of Atlanta in the opener. Carolina has been blown out by Buffalo and St. Louis since then.

The Panthers never officially named Collins as the starter as they did Garcia and Terrell. But the club's first-round draft pick took most of the snaps in practice during the bye week and virtually all the snaps in practice last week.

Tight end Rodney Holman wanted to hug Lions' Coach Wayne Fontes after Detroit's 27-24 victory last Monday night over the San Francisco 49ers. Instead, he settled on a handshake.

"He said, 'Thanks, this is the first time in my 14 years I've beaten the 49ers,'" Fontes recalled. "I said, 'That's a long time. I've beaten them a few times, so just hang in there with me.'"

Holman spent the first 11 seasons of his career with the Cincinnati Bengals and the last three with Detroit. He was 0-6 against the 49ers, including a loss in the 1989 Super Bowl.

The Rams are shooting for their first 5-0 start since 1989. They reached the NFC title game that year. ... It was bad news for the 49ers when they suffered their first loss of the season last Monday night against the Detroit Lions. But the good news for the 49ers is that, since 1985, they are 23-2 in games following Monday night appearances. ... Speaking of the 49ers, look for first-round draft pick J.J. Stokes to finally hit the field Sunday. ... Cardinals' linebacker Jamir Miller returns Sunday from his four-game, drug-related, NFL-imposed suspension.

AFC

Quarterback Jeff Blake is getting more expensive by the game for the Cincinnati Bengals. Blake is playing on a one-year contract and the Bengals hope to extend him by the end of the season. The club received agent Ralph Cindrich's contract proposal last Monday following Blake's 356-yard, three-touchdown game against the Houston Oilers.

Neither side would divulge the price tag, but it is expected to be the going rate for quarterbacks in excess of $3 million per year. Blake is currently making $714,000.

"We've got every stat and number in relation to his situation and all the rest," Cindrich said. "All I can say is look around the league and see how many quarterbacks take their teams out of games. He keeps you in every game."

Blake ranks ninth in the NFL in passing this week. His eight touchdowns and 1,138 yards top the AFC. And he'll get his chance to drive up his stock even further Sunday when he goes head-to-head against Dan Marino.

"I heard people talking a couple of weeks ago about the showdown between Drew Bledsoe and Dan Marino," Blake said. "But I want to hear people talking about the showdown between Marino and Blake.

"Marino is a Hall-of-Fame quarterback for sure, but Jeff Blake isn't going to sell himself short against anybody."

The Bills expect to get a huge boost on their special teams when Steve Tasker returns from a hamstring injury Monday night. A six-time Pro Bowl coverage player, Tasker missed the first three games of the season, and the Bills were dreadful in the kicking game. Buffalo ranks 23rd in both kickoff and punt coverage without Tasker.

"No one's the cure-all," Bills' Coach Marv Levy said. "There are 11 men out there. But Steve lends integrity to our kicking teams that spills over to other players. When you get good players on the field, the players around them become better. Steve has that effect."

Pro Bowl linebacker Greg Lloyd of the Pittsburgh Steelers was fined $12,000 for a pre-season hit on Green Bay quarterback Brett Favre. Then last month, he knocked Dan Marino out of a game with another hit. The NFL can fine him and shake its fist at Lloyd all it wants, but he has no intention of changing his aggressive style.

"They want it to be one of those games you can put on PBS and all the little kids can watch it and they can show it in the classroom," Lloyd said. "But it's not a game like that. It's a violent game. It's a game that players play with anger, frustration and emotion. And that's how I play the game. If people don't like it, so be it."

Denver likes baseball, but it loves football. The Colorado Rockies, who were chasing their first division flag, went head-to-head on television last week with the NFL's Denver Broncos. The Broncos won in a rout, drawing a 33 rating and a 60 share. The Rockies had a 9.1 rating and a 16 share. The Broncos played the San Diego Chargers, the Rockies the San Francisco Giants.

The New York Jets are 1-3 and going nowhere. They rank 19th in defense, 21st in offense and have turned the ball over a league-high 14 times. Their only victory came against an expansion team. Frustration is running high.

"It's very difficult to sleep," Jets' quarterback Boomer Esiason said.

"You can't even imagine the level of stress and frustration that's part of our households. I'm living and breathing in the middle of it. It's a firestorm, and I'm not going to back down from it.

"I know I'm not the 25-year-old I once was. But I also know that I still have a lot to give. I know there's always an edict — show us the player you are. Show us the coach you are. What have you done for us lately?"

The Jets now face a difficult two-game stretch against the Oakland Raiders at home Sunday and then at Buffalo.

Since the NFL incorporated bye weeks in the schedule in 1990, the Dolphins are 6-0 in games following the bye. They try to stay perfect Sunday against the Bengals. ... The Broncos have played the Seahawks seven times in the month of October and are 7-0. ... The Seahawks spent their bye week working on using linebackers Terry Wooden and Dudne Bickett as pass-rushing ends. That's no surprise — through three games, Seattle ends Michael Sinclair, Brent Williams, Michael McCrary and Antonio Edwards are sackless.

The Oilers signed running back Marion Butts last week after making unsuccessful runs at Barry Foster and Johnny Johnson. ... Their slow start (1-2) could be devastating for the Indianapolis Colts. They now face a stretch of four games against St. Louis, Miami, San Francisco and Oakland. They are a combined 13-2.

Cleveland quarterback Vinny Testaverde has played in the NFL for nine seasons, but has never played on Monday night. He'll make his prime-time debut this Monday night against Buffalo.

Report: Amateur athletes shorted

ATLANTA (AP) — By spending more money to support established athletes, the U.S. Olympic Committee is failing to fulfill its Congressional mandate to develop the nation's next generation of amateur athletes, The Atlanta Journal-Constitution reported.

In a series of articles in its Sunday editions, the newspaper said the lack of support for young athletes threatens to erode the country's dominance in the Olympics and other international sports competitions.

According to the report, the USOC since 1989 has given about $1 million in direct grants for community sports — about one-quarter of 1 percent of its budget.

Instead, resources go to administration, building training centers and backing athletes who already are among the world's elite. In its 1993-96 budget, the USOC earmarks $35 million to support a pool of 1,200 to 1,400 elite athletes considered prospective medal winners, the newspaper said.

The neglect toward young athletes goes beyond the USOC, the newspaper said. Organizers of the 1996 Summer Olympics in Atlanta have fallen short of their promise to establish programs and facilities for budding stars, the Journal-Constitution said.

USOC officials interviewed by the newspaper acknowledged the situation, although some said nurturing the best athletes now will establish a strong foundation for the future.

"The U.S. Olympic Committee feels very strongly that in fact it is meeting its mandate as stated in the Amateur Sports Act of 1978, relative to the development of sports in America," said spokesman Mike Moran told The Associated Press on Saturday.

"The USOC has nothing whatsoever to be embarrassed about in terms of its mission, nor its accomplishments. We acknowledge that sports in America has changed dramatically since our mandate in 1978, but the same problems which we now face in reaching future generations of athletes are shared by the entire American sports community," he said.

Unsettled issues stalls NHL-Olympics deal

NEW YORK (AP) — Swamped by the details of a three-piece puzzle, officials of the International Ice Hockey Federation, meeting in Budapest, Hungary, have delayed formal approval of NHL participation in the 1998 Olympics.

The Olympic deal is linked to the world championships and a new World Cup tournament that would replace the Canada Cup.

There are scheduling, television and site issues to be settled on each of those events.

"There are so many details to be agreed that we simply could not finish here in Budapest," IIHF spokesman Kimmo Leinonen said on Saturday.

But the delay, which was anticipated by NHL commissioner Gary Bettman, is not expected to disrupt the Olympics deal that was approved by the NHL Board of Governors on Friday. The agreement calls for the NHL to shut down its regular season for 16 days in February, 1998 to allow league players to participate in the Games at Nagano, Japan.

"The deal is not done," Bettman said. "Over the weekend, we will try to get everything concluded and we hope to be in a position Monday to say we have everything done."

Bettman was prepared to fly to Budapest and the IIHF meetings, "if my presence is constructive." But late Friday, he and Bob Goodenow, executive director of the NHL Players Association, canceled their travel plans when they were notified that they were not needed.

Like Bettman, Goodenow spoke cautiously about the Olympic deal.

"It's not final," he said on Friday. "We're trying to put it together. I think it can be put together."

The plan is for an eight-team preliminary tournament with two teams advancing to medal round play against six countries — Canada, the Czech Republic, Finland, Russia, Sweden, and the United States — whose teams would be stocked largely by NHL players.

Padres' rally prevents Dodgers from clinching

SAN DIEGO (AP) — It was all there for the Los Angeles Dodgers: protect a 5-2 lead, and they'd win the NL West.

But the San Diego Padres, intent on playing spoilers to their northern neighbors, rallied for four runs in the bottom of the eighth to beat the Dodgers 6-5 Friday night and prevent the Dodgers from clinching.

"This loss was one of the toughest," manager Tommy Lasorda said. "We had it and we let it get away. We're not going to let this stop us."

The Dodgers stayed a game ahead of Colorado in the division because the Rockies also blew a late lead and lost 10-7 to San Francisco. Los Angeles can clinch the West with one more victory in its last two games.

Los Angeles led 5-2 after 7½ innings before the Padres rallied for four runs. Jody Reed hit Ismael Valdes' first pitch for a double and Tony Gwynn, who was 3-for-4, followed with his ninth homer of the year to make it 5-4.

Reliever Antonio Osuna (2-4) loaded the bases on a single and two walks before rookie Marc Newfield, pinch-hitting for pitcher Tim Worrell (1-0), doubled into the right-field corner to give the Padres a 6-5 lead.

"You feel like you were that close and let it slip away," Brett Butler said. "When you're up 5-2, you still have to concentrate. There's no comfort in that. We have to bust it (Saturday) and go out and win."

The Dodgers, trying to make the playoffs for the first time since winning the World Series in 1988, sent Hideo Nomo to the mound Saturday night trying to wrap up the West.

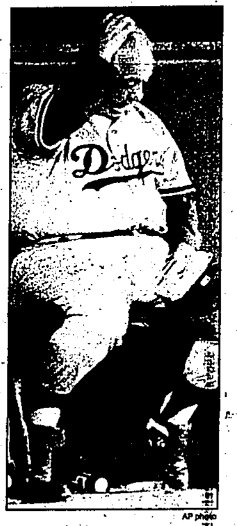
Giant gets bit of revenge on Rockies

DENVER (AP) — Mark Carreon remembered the last time he faced Curtis Leskanic, leaving the Colorado Rockies' first playoff berth in doubt.

Retired by the Colorado closer on a long fly ball to end last Sunday's 3-1 San Francisco loss, Carreon was determined to get even Friday night. The Giants slugger already had four RBIs when he hit a two-run homer in the ninth inning off Leskanic, helping rally the Giants to a 10-7 victory that damaged the Rockies' playoff hopes.

"He got us last time, but tonight it was a different story," Carreon said. "We just want to finish up strong, nothing more than that."

The Rockies, suffering their third straight loss, remained one game behind Los Angeles in the NL West but maintained a one-game lead over Houston in the wild-card race.



Dodgers manager Tommy Lasorda watches the Padres rally for four runs in the eighth inning Friday.

Mariners' fans dream of Seattle Series

SEATTLE (AP) — Mariners fans had stars in their eyes Friday night, dreaming of a hometown World Series.

"They are 40 sticks of dynamite and all their fuses are lit," said Dan Snook of Seattle. "They're one hot ball team and they're ready to explode."

Snook and other fans gathered around the television at F.X. McRory's, a restaurant and bar near the Mariners' Kingdome home field, to celebrate the team's triumph in Texas.

The Mariners snared at least a tie for the American League West title Friday night with a come-from-behind 4-3 victory over the Rangers.

Then California beat Oakland 9-6 in a late game so Seattle needs another victory Saturday or Sunday to clinch the title.

Claire McMahon had just arrived in Seattle on a business trip from New York. She said her friends wouldn't let her collect her luggage at Seattle-Tacoma International Airport until the Mariners' game concluded. Then they headed for McRory's.

"This is so exciting because baseball is a big deal in the Northwest and it's a big deal in Seattle and it's the first time the Mariners have gotten to the pennant," said her friend, Janice Phillips of Puyallup.

Pennant fever was running hot in Seattle with the Mariners playing better ball than ever in their 19-year history. "It is so tangible you can chew it," said Darrel Zarn of Vancouver, British Columbia.

His friend, Martin Kitchen of London, said, 'It is a very very nasty version of cricket.

"I don't like the sport but I like the fanatics," Kitchen added as cheers erupted in the background.

"I feel fabulous about the Mariners," said Jason Groshart, 24, of Seattle. "I've been a fan for 12 years and I feel this year they're going to win the World Series. Nobody's going to stop them.

Can cellular phones harm you?

Spate of lawsuits prompts close look at safety issues; assurances hard to come by

The Associated Press

Debbra Wright, a real estate manager for a cellular phone company in Phoenix, used to live by her portable telephone — and now has a brain tumor. She contends the hand-held models she used daily for six years are responsible.

Susan Reynard of St. Petersburg, Fla., died from brain cancer. A judge dismissed a suit blaming the makers of her pocketphone, citing a lack of scientific evidence. But her husband is not convinced. He notes that his wife's tumor formed on the side where she had held the phone.

From a Hollywood agent deal-making at poolside to a woman stranded alone with car trouble, some 12 million Americans now rely on portable cellphones, with more than a half-million new subscribers signing up each month.

Yet despite health concerns raised by at least eight lawsuits — none of which have made it to trial — scientists still can't assure consumers their phones are safe.

"Do you know what it's like to ... have your health go away?," asks Wright, 42, who has undergone multiple surgeries for her benign tumor. "It's been very hard to have pain 24 hours a day."

The first suit, filed by Reynard's husband in 1992, temporarily turned the emerging industry upside down. Users wondered if they were facing a hazard with each call. Cellular stock prices fell.

Manufacturers rushed to proclaim cellulars risk-free, although they were later taken to task by the Food and Drug Administration for saying thousands of studies over 40 years showed the phones safe.

In fact, most of those studies did not directly look at cellphones. And most of the current research to determine if the phones are dangerous is coming from a $25 million trust fund financed by the cellular industry itself.

Unlike car phones with antennae mounted outside the vehicle, hand-held cellulars like those in the Reynard and Wright cases have antennae that sit flush with the head, exposing callers to an electromagnetic field whose long-term effects remain a mystery to scientists.

"We don't have enough information to say the phones are harmful. At the same time, we really don't know enough to say they're not harmful," says Elizabeth Jacobson, deputy director for science at the FDA's Center for Devices and Radiological Health. "I think if there is a risk, it's probably small."

Dr. Ross Adey of the Loma Linda Veteran Medical Center — who is conducting cellular research funded by Motorola Inc., the world's largest manufacturer of cellphones — is worried by industrial studies linking other types of microwave exposures to cancer.

"There is some evidence that suggests the need to know more about these fields," he says, "because, after all, people are going to expose themselves ... for the rest of their lives."

Although there is no proof the phones are hazard-free, industry representatives flatly maintain that sci-

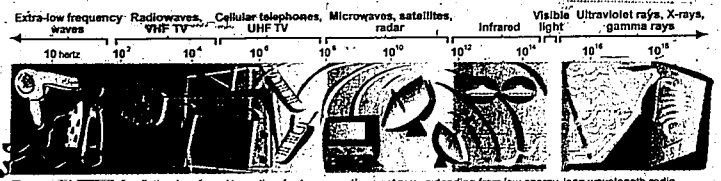
The portable cellular telephone

Radiation found in cellular telephones currently on the American market operate at about 800 to 900 megahertz, usually at 837. Microwave ovens operate at 2,450 megahertz. A new generation of personal communication devices now in development will operate in the 1,800 to 2,200 megahertz range.



The complete range of radiation is referred to as the electromagnetic spectrum, extending from low energy, long wavelength radio waves to high energy, short wavelength gamma rays. Radiation frequency is measured in units called "hertz," with one hertz representing a wave that oscillates at one cycle per second. One megahertz equals one million hertz.

Effect on pacemakers probed

The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Cellular telephone companies and the federal government are looking into how some digital cellular telephones can interfere with cardiac pacemakers, cardiac defibrillators and hearing aids.

Investigators in Italy, Switzerland and Australia have found that certain digital cellular phones can disrupt a pacemaker's signal if held too close to the chest. Last year, the findings were confirmed by doctors in the United States, where 132,000 pacemakers are implanted annually.

In Great Britain, advocates for the deaf have been warning that operating digital cellulars within a few feet of someone wearing a hearing aid can produce a loud buzz in both devices, even if the phone is on standby.

A University of Oklahoma research center formed by cellular companies began looking at that problem from an engineering perspective this summer, along with the potential problems with pacemakers and defibrillators, and the Food and Drug Administration is evaluating all three as well. Potential solutions range from design modifications to new labeling.

So far, no reports are known of serious health effects when pacemakers meet digital phones. But the FDA advises that pacemaker wearers avoid bringing a digital cellular telephone within 2 inches of the chest.

"In the pacemaker-dependent population, it is a potentially dramatic situation if the pacemaker is inhibited and does not produce the shock when the patient requires it," said Don Witters, an FDA physicist and biomedical engineer. An FDA laboratory hopes to release its pacemaker findings before year's end, he said.

The lab recently also began investigating interference with hearing aids and implantable defibrillators, which are surgically placed in the abdomen to shock a fluttering, nonpumping heart back into a strong beat.

Parallel to engineering studies are hospital investigations underwritten by Wireless Technology Research, a five-year cellular research program paid for by an industry trust.

Women captains chart new waters

The Associated Press

KINGS POINT, N.Y. — The tug's tow line snapped and the 600-foot Lyra heaved out of control toward the Frying Pan shoals off Cape Fear, N.C., powerless, crewless and loaded with 387,000 gallons of fuel.

A helicopter dropped a captain and three subordinates onto the cargo ship. After eight hours bucking 20-foot swells, they managed to anchor her and avert a catastrophe.

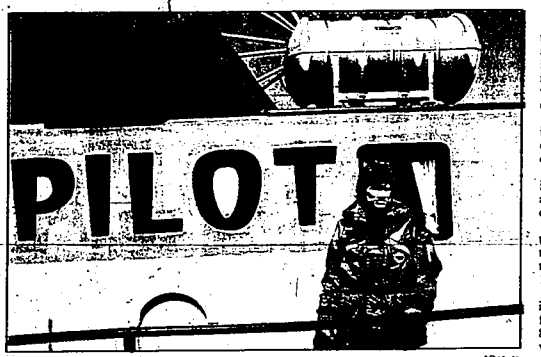
The Jan. 27, 1993 rescue of the Lyra was unusual. So was the captain.

Debbie Dempsey is one of only a dozen or so women in the United States with the highest mariner's ranking: ship's captain with an unlimited master's license. She can command any ship anywhere under any circumstances.

In the history of the real-life water world, where female images historically have been limited largely to ship names and mermaids, few women hold prominent positions. That is changing.

"Women have played a significant and unheralded role in the maritime profession," said Frank Braynard, curator of the maritime museum at the U.S. Merchant Marine Academy in this Long Island suburb.

Ironically, more women are entering the profession at a time when it is declining as a whole. The merchant marine, the nation's fleet of mostly private, commercial ships, has fallen from more than 1,000 ships at the end of World War II to about 400 now.



AP photo

Debbie Dempsey uses her pilot boat to help ships navigate a treacherous 17-mile-long bar in the Columbia River.

Foreign competition is one main reason.

Growing numbers of women are earning their stripes in the seven maritime academies from Maine to California, gaining bachelor of science degrees and third mate or third engineer's licenses, then working through the rankings to captain commercial ships.

It was only in the mid-1970s that maritime schools opened their doors to women, pressured partly by the spirit of women's equal rights movement.

Now, at Kings Point, which graduated its first women in 1978, 21 of 219 graduates were women. This year's freshman class includes 30 women.

At the Maine Maritime Academy in Castine, where Dempsey was the first woman to graduate in 1976, 8 women were among the 162 graduates this year. The class of 1999 includes 30 women.

Five percent of the Great Lakes Maritime Academy's graduating class has been female in recent years. This year, however, 8 percent of freshmen at the school in Traverse City, Mich. are women.

The opportunities for women graduates are great, said Richard Gurnon, dean of students at the Massachusetts Merchant Marine Academy.

How to make your firm stand out on Web

By Glenn Gamboa
Knight-Ridder News Service

On line

It used to be so easy.

To make it big on the World Wide Web, all you had to do was offer something interesting; toss in a few pictures, some regular information updates and get listed on Yahoo! (http://www.yahoo.com), Netscape (http://www.netscape.com) and GNN (http://www.gnn.com) so people knew you existed.

You do those things, you get noticed. You do those things well, you become a star.

In the last year, those stars — such as Hotwired (http://www.hotwired.com), NandONet (http://www.nando.net) and Internet Underground Music Archive (http://www.iuma.com) — beckoned businesses to the Web by showing how much the relatively inexpensive Internet medium could increase name recognition and sales.

Now businesses of all sizes are stampeding onto the eye-catching, easy-to-use pastures of the Web. And they all have a bigger problem:

How do you separate yourself from the herd?

Every week, more than 4,000 sites pop up on the World Wide Web, according to Brian Adler, marketing manager of Yahoo! Corp. in Mountain View, Calif.

"Businesses want an opportunity to promote their sites over and above the 3,999 other sites that were launched that week."

Different businesses have resorted to different tactics. Many have begun putting their Web site address in their regular advertising. Others take out ads in periodicals with Web-friendly readers.

But some have gone even further out.

Nicholas Graham of Joe Boxer Corp. — yes, the underwear people — hung from a crane 100 feet above Times Square this month and threw bagels with silk boxers for parachutes at the crowd to gain attention for his company's interesting web site (http://www.joeboxer.com).

John J. Harrow, of Akron's Synergy Productions, hasn't gone quite that far to plug his site (http://pages.prodigy.com/OH/siwasong/1.html). But he has probably been

New restaurant ready to open in Twin Falls

TWIN FALLS – The Taco Time Restaurant at 1517 Blue Lakes Blvd. N. is now open.

Chuck and Carla Locuson of Elko, Nev., are the owner/operators of the new store. A ribbon cutting ceremony will be at 2:30 p.m. Thursday, with representatives from the Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce Ambassadors, Taco Time Manager Wendy Tappan and Assistant Manager Rolene Dickard in attending. The store's grand opening will be Oct. 13-15.

In addition to the traditional menu, Taco Time now offers health-conscious choices like whole-wheat tortillas and low-fat sour cream to its customers. Features include dining room services and extended drive-through hours.

BSU president Ruch slated for economics luncheon talk

BOISE – The Idaho Council on Economic Education and the Boise area Chamber of Commerce are sponsoring the annual Economics America Luncheon from noon to 1:30 p.m. Wednesday at Boise Centre on the Grove.

Charles Ruch, Boise State University president, will be the speaker. His topic, "The World of 2010 and BSU," will address the role of BSU in the future economy of southwest Idaho.

Luncheon reservations are required. Cost is $15. Tickets may also be charged to a Visa or MasterCard by calling (208) 385-1193. Reservations received too late to mail will be held at the door.

October contest promotes healthy, drug-free workplace

TWIN FALLS – Businesses who want to promote making the Magic Valley a healthy and drug-free place to live can enter the fourth annual Red Ribbon Business Decorating Contest until Oct. 13.

Business exteriors must be decorated with red ribbons, banners, posters and related items from Oct. 21 to Oct. 28. Twin Falls Chamber ambassadors will judge businesses during those days.

Contact Kent Just at 733-3974, Marcia Lanting at 733-6900 or Jill Chestnut at 737-2906.

Idaho's only dealership for Gulf War vehicle opens

TWIN FALLS — Idaho's first Hummer dealership has opened to accommodate sportsmen with a lot of disposable income.

Randy Hansen of Twin Falls has opened the state's first Hummer outlet — Hansen Hummer. "The Hummer is quite simply the toughest four-by-four on Earth," Hansen said.

It is not quite a town car. At more than 7 feet wide and 11 feet long, a Hummer can barely squeeze through a drive-up window lane.

But trips to McDonald's are not really what the Hummer is for, said product manager Richard Baylis. It is an Army truck with a civilian paint job and luxury interior. The vehicle received acclaim for its role in the Persian Gulf War.

It can scale 18-inch vertical walls, climb 60-percent grades and traverse 45-percent side slopes — while carrying up to two tons of people and gear.

Hummers cost between $45,000 and $75,000.

Report: AT&T could cut 20,000 jobs in breakup

NEW YORK — AT&T Corp. may cut more than 20,000 jobs by late next year as part of its planned breakup into three companies, The Wall Street Journal reported Wednesday.

But the company said it's just beginning to consider the restructuring, which was announced last week, and couldn't say how many jobs would be lost.

women with third mate licenses," he said. "They have discriminated for so long that now they are trying to make up lost ground."

But it's not just the demand for qualified women that is encouraging women to take to the seas.

"It's easier for women now, they have the role models they didn't have in the past," said John Staples, spokesman for the Maine academy.

Some graduates already are taking their place in history alongside several handle 19th century mariners, honored by the Kings Point museum. Six of the 50 mariners in its 13-year-old Hall of Fame are women.

In 1856, Mary Patten, 19-year-old daughter of a seafaring man, took over her husband's cargo ship when he fell ill.

Four months pregnant, she put down a mutiny and guided the 1,800-ton clipper with $400,000 of cargo round Cape Horn and up the West Coast to San Francisco.

Another, Nettie Johnson, ran her own Mississippi steamer while she raised three sons. She was the first woman licensed as a master on an inland waterway and helped transport war supplies in 1917.

Ida Lewis, like her father before her the keeper of Lime Rock Light in the harbor of Newport, R.I., until her death in 1911, made 18 daring rescues, navigating her tiny rowboat through storms.

Like these women of history, many of those working on ships today are drawn to the sea despite the long hours, months offshore and the loneliness that comes from often working with no other women aboard.

The allure is the chance to see the world and salaries that start at $35,000 a year. Pay can reach into the $100,000 range for a captain.

Dempsey, who grew up on Long Island Sound in Essex, Conn., worked for several years delivering boats from all over New England to the Caribbean and elsewhere.

"Water was part of my life," said Dempsey, 46, who now works in Astoria, Ore. as a Columbia River pilot. An on-board guide, she helps ships navigate a 17-mile-long bar ranked among the world's most treacherous.

After receiving a bachelors degree from the University of Vermont, Dempsey was well poised for admission to the Maine Academy where she hoped to learn celestial navigation and other aspects of seafaring life. "They knew they would have to admit women sooner or later and I was a pretty good bet," Dempsey said.

She graduated in 1976 after 2½ years at the top of her class. Dempsey endured male harassment that she described as an occasional broken dorm-room window or "bags of choice objects" left outside her door.

Dempsey received plum jobs, first with Exxon Co., then with Lykes Bros. Steamship Co., Inc., where she worked until 1994 shipping dry cargo around the world. The Lyra was a Lykes ship.

In 1984 she was the first woman to obtain a master's license in the merchant marine, according to the U.S. Maritime Administration. Dempsey later captained the first commercial ship into the Persian Gulf during the 1991 war, carrying military helicopters and other hardware.

Before obtaining her master's license, Dempsey made a voyage as a second mate with a captain who complained bitterly to head office about her presence.

"Just work with her, you'll like her," he was told and indeed he did. They married 18 years ago.

Head of the class

entific studies to date show no health risk.

"The FDA and the EPA and the other agencies that are looking at this can't be very concerned about what they've seen so far if they're not jumping into and funding research," says Ron Nessen, vice president for public affairs and communications at the Cellular Telephone Industry Association and White House press secretary during the Ford administration.

But an industry watchdog says such remarks ignore preliminary scientific findings. "The bottom line is, you can't deny there's a possible problem," says Louis Slesin, editor of the newsletter Microwave News. "It may turn out there's no serious health risk, but the denial has to stop."

When you make a call on your cellular phone, you're relying on a form of energy closely related to what cooks food in a microwave oven.

Cellular phones and microwave ovens use the ultrahigh frequency band of radio waves.

It's part of the great electromagnetic spectrum that includes electricity running through power lines, radio signals, radar, infrared light, visible light, ultraviolet light, X-rays and gamma rays.

Some microwaves have the power to make water molecules vibrate, an action that can produce heat at high enough levels. But at the frequencies used in cellulars, it has always been believed the microwave radiation isn't capable of ionizing or breaking chemical bonds, a process that can lead to mutations and cancer.

Now, scientists are going back and trying to determine just what effects the waves might have on cells and DNA, the human genetic blueprint found within.

Most previous studies have been conducted at 2,450 megahertz, a frequency used by microwave ovens, not at the 837 megahertz frequency of U.S. cellular phones.

Scientists are unsure whether effects observed at one frequency are relevant at another. In addition, most of the work has examined short exposures to radio frequencies at high powers, not the long-term, low-level exposures associated with cellphone use.

George L. Carlo, an epidemiologist, lawyer and chairman of Health and Environmental Sciences Group in Washington, has been hired by the Cellular Telephone Industry Association to devise a comprehensive program assessing the risk and possible responses.

Under the Wireless Technology Research program he chairs, national death records will be compared against a roster of 7 million cellular subscribers.

Multiple research teams will analyze a University of Washington duo's finding of breaks in brain-cell DNA from rats exposed to two hours of microwave oven frequencies, and other scientists will develop computer models to replicate radio frequency exposure and absorption by the human body.

Cardiologists will conduct experiments to understand how holding some digital cellular models near the chest can interfere with cardiac pacemakers, and researchers also will try to estimate exposure doses — taking into account the phone's power, antenna design, call duration and the distance to the nearest cellular tower.

At the same time, federal epidemiologists at the National Cancer Institute are exploring whether there may be a connection between portable cellphone use and brain tumors.

Though Carlo is handpicked by the industry association, he insists his research program is independent. He cites a peer review board advised by Harvard University's Center for Risk Analysis and the requirement that researchers submit their work to peer-reviewed journals.

"On the surface, everything looks kosher," says Jacobson, of the FDA.

With government sources evaporating, she says she hesitates to criticize the industry's funding of research into the dangers of cellphones.

"I want to be careful," she says. "This really is an opportunity to get very needed research done. If it's handled right, I think it will be a tremendous benefit to everybody involved."

thinking about it.

Synergy Productions' main product is Say It with a Song, a service that gives customers a personalized song for $199. Harrow and his stable of songwriters write music for every occasion and in every style — from those yearning for a Neil Young twang to the deepest of house disco divas.

What Harrow wanted was a way to get samples of his work into the hands of people who might want it.

After all, one sample rap goes a long way toward deciding whether you want to do this or not:

You're a good looking babe
Hope you don't mind if we say
Jogging every day
Eating turkey different ways
For a gal that's 29
Got a figure still looks fine
Getting better every time
Just like a vintage wine
Workout

Harrow's page is pretty tame by most Web standards, and he likes it that way.

"While more advanced (and costly) sites include fancy graphics and even sound files, I am utilizing a built-in e-mail reply link that will trigger a brochure and sampler audiocassette by snail mail," he said.

"I think it's low-cost guerrilla marketing at its best."

The overhead is small — just the cost of his monthly Prodigy membership — and the possibilities are huge, Harrow said. Now, all he has to do is let people know he's out there.

At the moment, he's trying niche marketing by getting links from people at other Web pages who may be interested in his service.

"I have four different links now," he said. "That's what the Web is all about. It lets you go from point to point. I'm excited about it. It allows me to spread the word."

Companies are looking for ways to help the John Harrows of the Internet.

For example, Yahoo! has just started its Web Launch program.

For $750, Yahoo! will place your site on its Web Launch page, spotlighting it above all the other sites added to Yahoo! that week. Millions of people go through Yahoo every week and by appearing in Web Launch, businesses can get a jump on letting people know they're out there.

"To an NFL or CNN, the price is such a no-small part of their budget, it becomes a no-brainer," said Adler, of Yahoo! "We're targeting this toward small and medium business who don't have the finances of a CNN."

Adler said that the company would continue to put all the new sites it received in its regular "What's New?" listing for free.

"As everything with Yahoo!, this was grass-roots inspired," he said. "We just added the Yahoo! creative touch."

It's that touch, along with the addition of news updates and a fantastic searchable database of sites, that made Yahoo! one of the Web's must-see sites for years.

And it's creativity — combined with a way to showcase it — that will continue to be the best way to separate any company from the rest of the Web pack.

Glitch puts America Online offline

VIENNA, Va. — A software bug forced America Online to shut down for about 3½ hours as the company fixed the problem.

The computer service, one of the nation's largest with 3.5 million customers, was down Friday from 7:30 p.m. to shortly before 11 p.m., eastern time. Members already logged on were able to remain on the network for most of the period, but their service went down later. Those not logged on before 7:30 p.m. were not able to sign on.

MCI wins satellite TV license round

WASHINGTON — MCI Communications Corp. has won a victory in a Senate battle to get bidding rights for the last remaining U.S. license to provide satellite television service to homes all over the country.

The Senate, by a Friday vote of 98 to 0, passed an amendment to an appropriations bill instructing the Federal Communications Commission to auction the license for direct-broadcast satellite (DBS) television service.

ADVERSE POSSESSION

QUESTION: What is adverse possession?

ANSWER: Public policy is that land should be used and not lie idle. If you use another's land as your own - - even though you don't own it - - you could eventually become the owner.

This principle does not come into operation where the land is being leased or rented, or if permission is given by the true owner.

The possession must be open, continuous (usually a minimum of 15-20 years), exclusive, adverse and notorious.

If you own land which is being used without your permission, you could lose title to it if you wait too long.

IF YOUR LAND is being used without your permission, be aware of adverse possession.

Adams is a graduate of Jensen's Certified Professional Jeweler Program and Master Selling Program and is currently enrolled in the Gemological Institute of America's Diamond Program. Adams was incorrectly identified as the manager in the Sept. 17 Times-News.

BURLEY – Sheila B. Adams has been accepted into the Omega Tau Rho Fraternity by the Idaho Association of Realtors in recognition of her leadership skills. She was awarded a Medallion of Service as a token of the high esteem in which she is held by fellow realtors during a ceremony in Coeur d'Alene in September.

OTR is an honorary fraternity created in 1950 and is open to members who meet specific criteria. Once a medallion is awarded, the recipient is a member for life and does not receive the award again.

Adams, who works for Century 21 Riverside Realty, was recognized for her leadership in many volunteer positions, including chairman of the Risk Management Committee of the National Association of Realtors and 1994 Realtor of the Year on which her nomination to OTR was based. She has served on committees in both local and state associations, the Fair Housing and Political Affairs Committee at NAR and currently as chairman of the Real Estate Commission Education Council for Idaho. She holds the designation of Graduate of the Realtor Institute, Certified Residential Specialist and Certified Real Estate Brokerage Manager. She has been a licensed agent and member of the Realtor Association since 1977.

TWIN FALLS – The Idaho Wholesaler Marketers Association held its annual meeting recently in Twin Falls. IWMA members are Idaho-owned distributors of products, mainly to convenience stores.

Ed Prater of H&M in Twin Falls was elected president for 1995-96. Rep. Mark Stubbs spoke to the group on the upcoming Legislature and what might be expected for 1996. Several guests from Washington, D.C., reported on Congress' plans.

TWIN FALLS – Pat Brownfield has received the 1995 Meritorious Service Award from the Society of Commercial Seed Technologists at the society's annual banquet held recently in Sacramento, Calif.

Brownfield has been an active member of the society since 1983, during which time she chaired four committees and served on two others. The award recognizes her achievements as chairman of the Ethics Committee. Over the past seven years, this committee successfully completed a code of ethics and a procedures guideline for the society.

Brownfield has been employed by Rogers Seed Co. since 1978. She manages the quality assurance laboratory in Twin Falls. Rogers Seed Co. breeds, produces and markets vegetable seed for the commercial fresh market, processing and home garden industries.

TWIN FALLS – Strolberg Leavitt Insurance Agency has been selected by Oregon Mutual Insurance as a recipient of the 1995 Underwriters Choice Award, which recognizes excellence, integrity and cooperation in the insurance industry.

Strolberg Leavitt Insurance Agency is located at 705 Fillmore in Twin Falls. The phone number is 734-6644.

BOISE – Barbara Strickfaden has been elected chairman of the Western States Association Executives, one of four divisions of the American Bankers Association, representing the 13 western states.

Strickfaden is the executive director of the Idaho Bankers Association, which is included in the Western States Association Executives. She also sits on the ABA Agricultural Bankers Committee, the Board of Directors of the Northwest Banking Schools and the State Associations Division of the American Bankers Association.

The American Bankers Association is the national trade and professional association serving the United States banking community from small community banks to large bank-holding companies.

Strickfaden was born and raised, through elementary school age, in Jerome. Her father, Ron Burke, was the publisher of the North Side News for about 10 years during the 1940s. Her husband, Ed, is the superintendent of the Idaho State Police. He was the district commander for the Magic Valley area in the late 1970s and early 1980s.

TWIN FALLS – Pegan Venzon of Venzon Jewelry has sold her business, located on Main Street in downtown Twin Falls, to Dan Churchman. It will now be called Churchman Jewelry and Idaho Artistry.

Churchman has worked with Pegan since she opened the store. He has been the gold and silversmith and has been repairing jewelry, eyeglasses and other miscellaneous items for the last 10 years. He will continue to offer fine gold, sterling, gems, in-store repairs, Idaho art and unique gifts.

Public has chance to view cake decorators practice their art

TACOMA (AP) — Mary Lou Frank chats as she spins sugary forget-me-nots around a wooden pick.

She uses a pair of silver scissors to snip off the tiny frosting flowers and nestle them around wine-colored roses on a wedding cake.

"I work like an artist," says Frank, chief decorator at Mrs. Frisbee's Bakery in the Lincoln Business District.

On fancier cakes, which can take the shape of anything from a hamburger to Mount St. Helens, Frank will use a palette knife, an airbrush and even a film projector.

But until recently, her sugar wizardry was hidden from view by a wall separating the kitchen from the coffee shop at the 72-year-old bakery on South 38th Street.

The wall came tumbling down as new owners Jim and Nannette Heye took the first step of a one-week makeover of the Lincoln area institution.

The Heyes, part of Seattle's famous Borracchini baking family, bought the bakery from Gene and Nora Lindbo, who ran it for the last 10 years. The Heyes promise they won't change old favorites like Frisbee's cherry-and-cream cheese-filled cinnamon rolls.

"We're not the type that just walk in and change everything and walk out," Jim Heye said. "We're in for the long haul."

They will start baking fresh seven days a week, introduce a new line of breads and open the heart of the bakery to public view.

When all is done, customers will be able to watch Frisbee's crew of six decorators from behind a railing. A viewing platform will give younger customers a boost.

The Heyes also are replacing the bakery's pink, Bavarian decor with an Old World look.

"We're going to use lots of oak and give it a traditional European theme," Nannette Heye said.

The Heyes have retained all of Frisbee's employees and want to keep the bakery a family business.

"We still want to keep it known more as a mom and pop shop," Jim Heye said. "So people can come in and see the owners every day."

Customers also might see the couple's three boys.

"They love to come in on Sunday mornings and ice the doughnuts," Nannette Heye said. "My 11-year-old loves to ice the chocolate doughnuts. My 9-year-old is king of the sprinkle doughnuts and my 4-year-old is chief doughnut taster."

Nannette Heye got an early start in baking herself.

"I think I learned to decorate before I learned to walk," she said. "I was handed a tube and told 'Go for it.'"

Her grandfather, Mario Borracchini, immigrated to the United States from Italy in 1922 and opened Borracchini's Bakery in Seattle's Rainier area. Nannette Heye started folding boxes there in the second grade. Jim Heye started working there in high school and spent his college years smelling like a doughnut.

But Nannette didn't mind and the two married in 1982.

Nannette still laughs about their wedding day.

"The morning of our wedding Jim was over at the bakery at five o'clock in the morning and my dad went upstairs to do some mixing and found him sound asleep on the flour sacks. The Heyes, who are still part-owners of the family bakery in Seattle, plan to keep up their grueling baker's hours in Tacoma.

"We're the type of owners that like to be involved in everything," Jim Heye said.

While Nannette is spending most of her time these days keeping up the books, her real passion is decorating. Her masterpiece was a Leaning Tower of Pisa she made for an Italian heritage festival five years ago.

The cake had 52 layers and served 20,000 people.

There was nothing so grandiose at Frisbee's this recent morning. But the kitchen did rival Willie Wonka's chocolate factory as decorators hurried to finish cakes for the weekend.

Using a paper frosting tube, Nancy Rude swept graceful orange scallops onto the side of a chocolate-frosted cake that read "Happy Birthday Dad." Birthday cakes start at $15, Rude said.

The more elaborate cakes start at $1.10 per serving, said head decorator Frank.

Frank said it will take her several hours to finish an ivory-colored wedding cake dressed in delicate frosting scallops and bejeweled with strings of baby pearls.

Frank, whose brown hair was sprinkled with white specks of frosting, said there's nothing magical about cake decorating.

General's training pays off in civilian career

Retired from Army, businessman gathers comrades to run firm

NEW YORK (AP) — His troops trusted him on the front lines of the Cold War, and now more than 3,000 investors trust their life savings to him.

John C. Burney's 31-year-old money management firm handles $400 million in assets.

But investing is Burney's second career — he spent 28 years in the U.S. Army, rising to the rank of brigadier general and serving in Korea, Vietnam and Europe.

Burney, 71, is grandfatherly, not authoritarian, in describing his military commands and his firm — perhaps because the Burney Co.'s staff and clientele are replete with former military comrades and their relatives.

Seven of the general's West Point classmates joined him in civilian life as analysts and portfolio managers at the Burney Co. And the customer list has always read like "a who's who of the most well-known, most senior military admirals and generals, right up through the Gulf War," said Peter Woolston, one of the firm's portfolio managers and a former lieutenant commander in the Navy.

Burney, however, rarely plays up these military underpinnings except to emphasize that discipline has helped the Burney Co. steadily grow from its beginnings as a young cadet's hobby into a thriving investment firm.

"I think there's a sense in some people that being with this group of military people that they're with a disciplined group whom they can trust," he said.

Since its inception in 1974, the company's "master" portfolio of recommended stocks has produced an average annual return of nearly 22 percent — better than the Dow Jones industrials and the Standard & Poor's 500 over that period.

Burney entered the U.S. Military Academy at West Point in 1943 after a short stint as an enlisted man, graduating in 1946. The 28-year career that followed, mostly in tank and armored cavalry, spanned 24 assignments and 27 moves, ranging from stateside duty as a test parachute jumper at Ft. Bragg, N.C., to overseas tours in Europe, Korea and Vietnam.

The largest chunk of that time was spent in Germany, where he commanded troops in the 4th Armored Division along the Czech and East German borders, opposite the highly mechanized Iron Curtain of the former Soviet Union.

Ultimately, Burney landed at the Pentagon: "the most distasteful place of all," he quipped, smirking like a Cub Scout who's said something naughty.

His rise through the ranks climaxed with his 1970 promotion to brigadier (one-star) general. But it was during the troubling close of the Vietnam War that he became disenchanted with military service and turned his thoughts to investment management.

"The Army was downsizing and we'd given up in Vietnam. There seemed to be little opportunity for promotion, so things looked bleak," said Burney, whose affable manner would seem out-of-place in a foxhole or a trading pit.

So how did a life in the military, disciplined discipline that it is, qualify a martinet to manage money?

There were no courses in economics or security analysis in West Point's engineering-laden curriculum.

Even so, the statistical nature of those studies appealed to Cadet Burney, so he wiled away his free time reading about investing.

"I'd be outside running around the woods all day as a junior officer," he said. "I needed something to do on a rainy weekend."

The first book he read on the subject was "Security Analysis" by Benjamin Graham, an early mentor of billionaire Warren Buffet and the "granddaddy" of value investing.

"I read his book and was entranced by it, and I started to work on an investment analytical system," Burney recalled.

That system evolved into a 65-gauge barometer for calculating the intrinsic value of a company's stock.

If a firm's shares are selling at least 30 percent below that value, the company is placed on Burney's buy list.

"You can't say that the value philosophy is novel," he said.

"But our method of applying it is novel.... It's very clear that our investment approach is conservative, long-term, disciplined and patient."

By 1974, the system "was doing very well with my family investments. So I felt comfortable in leaving the Army."

Burney had also been advising some of his West Point classmates, and seven of them helped form the early core — or corps — of the Burney Co.

"None of them had any education in security analysis or financial management," said Burney, whose wife, Mary, is also part of the team.

"I was searching for intelligent people with integrity."

The business, based in Falls Church, Va., grew modestly until 1984, when an article in Money magazine highlighting portfolio managers such as the Burney Co. prompted a flood of new customers.

"We got more than we could handle and we cut off new accounts" temporarily in 1986, said Burney, who lives in Portsmouth, R.I.

These days, the company's recommendations are determined by a panel of six analysts and communicated by 19 portfolio managers.

Among Burney's original group of soldiers-turned-money managers, one has died and two have retired, but all three have been replaced by sons and daughters. Other early portfolio managers also have begun passing the mantel to family.

"The company is evolving," he said. "I would feel uncomfortable in our type of organization with a group of people that I didn't know and trust."

Railroads to share, sell track

The Washington Post

Union Pacific Railroad Co. and Southern Pacific Rail Corp. have agreed to share or sell thousands of miles of track to the soon-to-be-merged Burlington Northern-Santa Fe Corp., effectively eliminating fears that a UP-SP merger would be anti-competitive.

Burlington Northern and Santa Fe, whose merger is in the final planning stages after the Interstate Commerce Commission approved the deal earlier this year, said it would drop opposition to Union Pacific's acquisition of Southern Pacific.

If a Union Pacific-Southern Pacific merger is approved, Western railroading would be under the control of two huge rail systems.

The track-use agreement would create head-to-head competition in virtually every market west of the Mississippi River. The railroads said every shipper that would have lost the services of two railroads as a result of a Union Pacific-Southern Pacific merger now would have Burlington Northern-Santa Fe as a second service provider.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

Dear Mr. Wolff:
My RHO opened one club and I doubled for takeout. Partner cue-bid two clubs and I bid two spades, which partner passed. Doesn't the cue-bidder promise at least one more bid in this situation?

Stranded, Cherokee Village, Ark.

ANSWER: Yes, the cue-bidder does promise another bid after his forcing action. This does not preclude doubler from making a stronger response than minimum if he has values in excess of a routine takeout double.

Dear Mr. Wolff:
Defending against a no-trump game, with declarer having bid diamonds, partner won a trick and switched to the diamond 10 (dummy had a small singleton). Is there any way to tell if this was a top-of-nothing lead or if it was from an interior sequence, such as Q-10-9-8?

Code Book, Bryan, Texas

ANSWER: This can be an ambiguous area with no concrete answer. The best approach is to consider all aspects of the bidding and play to that point with a view toward visualizing the possible assets of partner and declarer. This is no time for an impulsive decision.

Dear Mr. Wolff:
At duplicate, partner opened a weak two-spade bid in third seat with favorable vulnerability. My RHO bid two no-trump and was raised to game. Holding A-J spade doubleton and Q-J-9-8-7 of clubs (little else), should I have led my clubs or partner's suit?

Clubs Win, South Lyon, Mich.

ANSWER: The odds favor leading partner's suit. If he has a true suit instead of a bogus one, it offers the best chance. A club might win, but he is more likely to have spade "material" than a club honor.

Dear Mr. Wolff:
At rubber bridge, who is entitled to the last shuffle?

My Deal, Jackson, Miss.

ANSWER: The dealer is entitled to the last shuffle. This holds regardless of how many times the deck was shuffled during preparation.

Dear Mr. Wolff:
At duplicate, partner doubles one club for takeout and I must choose from several possible responses. I held four hearts to the queen, four diamonds to the queen, two small spades and K-J-9 of clubs. How do you rate my choices?

Suit or No-trump? Rocky Mount, N.C.

ANSWER: I rate one heart 100 percent, one no-trump 60 percent and one diamond 10 percent. At duplicate, minors are usually saved for the birds.

Send bridge questions to The Aces, P.O. Box 12363, Dallas, TX 75225, with SASE for reply.

PLYMOUTH GRAND VOYAGER. THE

In redesigning the Plymouth Grand Voyager, we literally reinvented the wheel. And the seats they're part of. Our rear bench seats now glide on smooth, nylon wheels, making them a cinch to move. (We call them Easy Out Roller Seats.™ You'll call them a dream.) Two levers release a seat and raise it up on wheels in a single move

Our new roll models.

Then just roll it back, lift it out and roll it away. You won't find this capability in any other minivan, anywhere. But our seats don't sit down there. Depending on which seating package you choose, both rear and middle bench seatbacks now fold flat,* allowing you to carry a 4'x 8' sheet of plywood with the seats in and the liftgate closed. You won't find this capability on any other minivan, anywhere. (Beginning to see a pattern here?) Up front is another exclusive: cup holders that adjust to accommodate everything from a four-ounce baby bottle to a full one-liter jug. They even hold juice boxes and coffee mugs. And speaking of exclusives (and it's hard not to when the subject is Plymouth Grand Voyager), getting to and from those seats is easier than ever.

NEXT GENERATION OF THE MINIVAN.

thanks to a second sliding door now available on the driver's side. It's the only one of its kind available today. Simply put, the new Grand Voyager is better in every way. Outside, it's aerodynamically streamlined to cheat the wind. While inside, volume has been increased, giving you 11 percent more passenger and 27 percent more cargo space, more than in any other minivan. Visibility has been expanded, too, with a 32 percent larger windshield. The turning circle was reduced by more than three feet. Under the hood, Grand Voyager's available 3.3 liter engine is generous with cargo-hauling and load-pulling torque. And with its platinum-tipped spark plugs, it calls for its first scheduled tune-up at 100,000 miles. And, of course, we've maintained our position as safety role models with standard dual front air bags, four-wheel ABS and available integrated child safety seats. Walter Scott's Personality Parade

Q As a big Barbra Streisand fan, I'd like to know about her next project. Is it true she's doing a movie about plastic surgery in which she will be physically altered onscreen?—C.F., Marietta, Ga.

A Sometime this fall—four long years after "The Prince of Tides"—Barbra Streisand, 53, finally plans to return to her dual roles as director and actress in a remake of the 1959 French film "The Mirror Has Two Faces." Unlike the original, however, Streisand's version (written by Richard LaGravenese, who did the screenplay for "The Bridges of Madison County") will not deal with plastic surgery. A source close to the production tells PARADE: "It's a love story about Barbra and Jeff Bridges, who play two academics, and about how beauty and love is in the eye of the beholder. It has nothing to do with plastic surgery, because Barbra has a fear of plastic surgery and hasn't even had her ears pierced."

Barbra: Soon to take a new look at The Mirror

Q I'm curious about Martin Scorsese's next film, "Casino," which stars Robert De Niro and Sharon Stone. How many times have Scorsese and De Niro worked together? And why did a great director like Scorsese choose to cast Stone, who may be beautiful but has never displayed any great talent for acting?—D.H., Marietta, Ga.

De Niro and Stone in Casino

A Scorsese and De Niro, both 52, have collaborated on eight movies: "Mean Streets" (1973), "Taxi Driver" (1976), "New York, New York" (1977), "Raging Bull" (1980), "The King of Comedy" (1983), "GoodFellas" (1990), "Cape Fear" (1991) and "Casino," set to open in November. As for Ms. Stone, 37, Scorsese apparently saw more in the sultry blonde than what the rest of us glimpsed in "Basic Instinct." And his instincts may be right on the mark. Those who saw early edits of "Casino" say the actress is extraordinary as Ginger, De Niro's girlfriend, and could earn an Oscar nomination. Incidentally, while De Niro has two Oscars, including one for "Raging Bull," Scorsese has never won.

Q What's the real reason Judge Ito has shown such hostility toward defense attorney Barry Scheck?—M.R., Sacramento, Calif.

A "Lance Ito simply isn't used to Barry Scheck's East Coast style," explains defense attorney David Chesnoff, who is familiar with both the judge and O.J. Simpson's legal team. "Scheck is very knowledgeable and prepared, and that can intimidate a judge who is not as up on a subject as the lawyer appearing before him. What's more, Scheck's style isn't everybody's cup of tea—aggressive, somewhat patronizing. Finally, the judge was criticized for letting the lawyers go on too long, and he came down particularly hard on Scheck. But I don't think Judge Ito has anything personal against him."

Q What can you tell me about Devon Sawa, who made such a memorable appearance at the end of "Casper"?—Sarah Pitre, Houston, Tex.

Devon Sawa with Sarah Chalke (l) in Robin of Locksley

A Since he appeared in "Casper," Devon Sawa has been touted as the screen's newest hunk-in-the-making. But according to one of his friends, the 16-year-old Canadian has no intention of leaving school for Hollywood. "He's pretty grounded about his success," this friend tells PARADE. "He's just a nice, content, happy kid who's taking this all in stride." That stride includes "Robin of Locksley," a made-for-TV movie that premiered last month on Showtime, and "The Boy's Club," a feature film co-starring Christopher Penn. Meantime, Sawa is completing his senior year in high school through a combination of private tutors and classes at the Alpha Secondary School in Burnaby, British Columbia.

Jennifer Grant: hoping to follow in father's footsteps

Q Whatever became of Cary Grant's widow and daughter?—Elisa P. Siragusa, Metairie, La.

A Grant's widow, the former Barbara Harris, is now 45, runs a design business and is married to real estate mogul Richard Cohen. She splits her time between homes in California and France. Jennifer Grant, 29—whose mother is actress Dyan Cannon—graduated with honors from Stanford University, worked for a public-interest law firm in San Francisco and married movie producer Randy Zisk. She is now pursuing an acting career. When he died in 1986 at age 82, Grant left the bulk of his estate to Barbara, his fifth wife, and to Jennifer, his only child. Though the actor's worth has never been publicized, some sources put it at $60 million—a figure called "ludicrously high" by Nancy Nelson, author of "Evenings With Cary Grant."

Q Can you bring me up to date on Irish Bishop Eamonn Casey, who shocked his countrymen by admitting he had a son?—H.C., York, Pa.

A Eamonn Casey, the popular Bishop of Galway, resigned his post three years ago after confessing that he had fathered a son with an American woman named Annie Murphy and had dipped into church funds to pay her $125,000 in hush money. Rather than keep quiet, however, Murphy, 47, penned a tell-all book in 1993 titled "Forbidden Fruit: The True Story of My Secret Love Affair With Ireland's Most Powerful Bishop." Casey—never formally stripped of the rank of bishop—moved to South America, where he now ministers to a congregation in Spanish. He's in regular contact with his son, Peter, who is 20 and going to college in New England. As to whether Casey, 68, might return to his homeland, a close source tells PARADE: "I don't think" that will happen for quite some time. A lot of attention was brought to his case, and it would have to be okayed by church officials in Ireland."

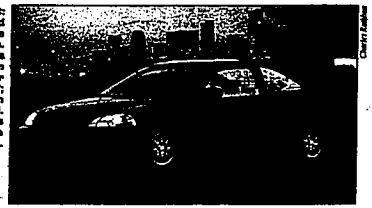
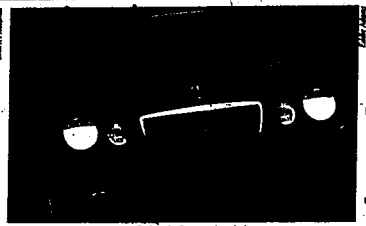
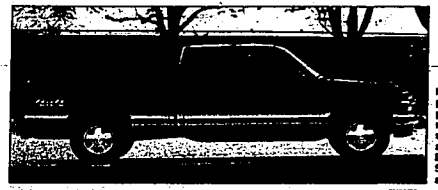
The '96 Cars&Trucks



HONDA CIVIC: Re-engineered from the ground up. Adds a keyless entry system and power moonroof; different trim levels offered. On sale this month. Price not set.

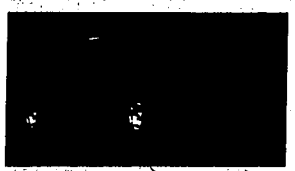


FORD F-150 XLT: Top-selling vehicle in U.S. was completely restyled and goes on sale in January. First redesigned F-series pickup will sport a super cab with a second passenger-side door for ease of entry. Standard dual airbags and V8; new Triton V8 optional. Price not set.



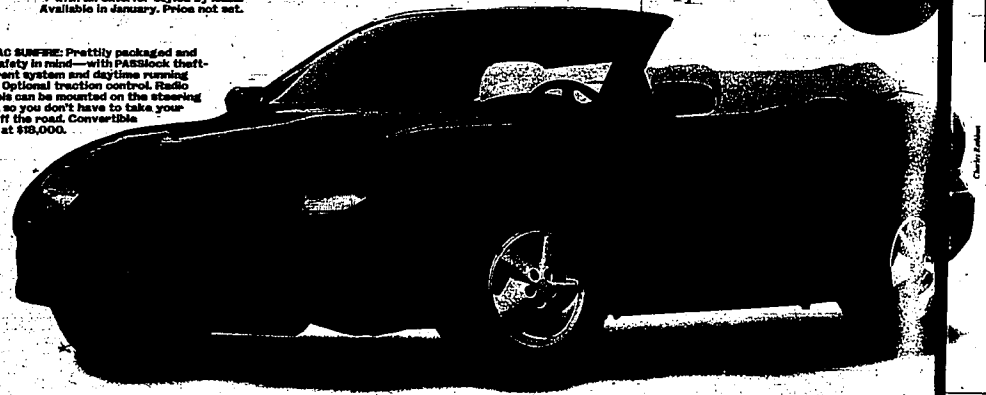
K1500: Chevy's pickup gets more power. The nation's No. 2-seller now offers a passenger-side E-Z Access System. Starts at $17,620.

MERCEDES-BENZ E320: Gained size and safety features, but lost weight. Side-impact airbags are mounted in doors. Glass sunroof is optional. Estimated at $41,000.

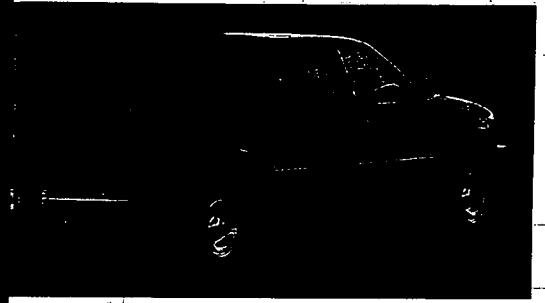


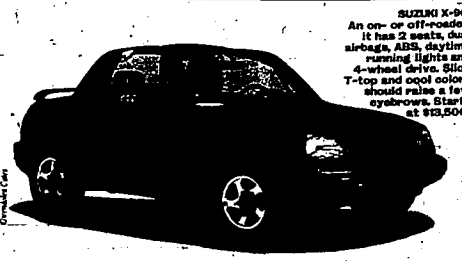
ISUZU HOMBRE: Built by GM in Shreveport, La., it's based on the Chevy S-10 pickup, with an exterior styled by Isuzu. Available in January. Price not set.

SALES OF LIGHT TRUCKS—INCLUDING PICKUPS, minivans, full-size vans and sport-utility vehicles (SUVs)—totaled 6.1 million last year. This year has been even better for SUVs, with sales up 15 percent. The Ford Explorer, Chrysler Jeep Grand Cherokee and Chevy Blazer lead the way. Cars sold well too, and automakers are building better vehicles: GM remade its Saturns; Ford reinvented its Taurus and F-150 pickup; and Chrysler redesigned its minivans. On the safety scene, more and more vehicles come with both front and side airbags, and you can get road service via satellite without leaving your vehicle. What else is new for '96? Have a look!



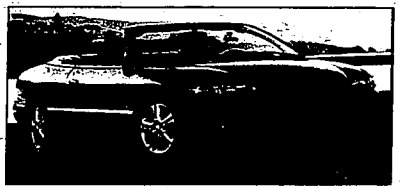
PONTIAC SUNFIRE: Prettily packaged and with safety in mind—with PASSlock theft-deterrent system and daytime running lights. Optional traction control. Radio controls can be mounted on the steering wheel, so you don't have to take your eyes off the road. Convertible starts at $18,000.



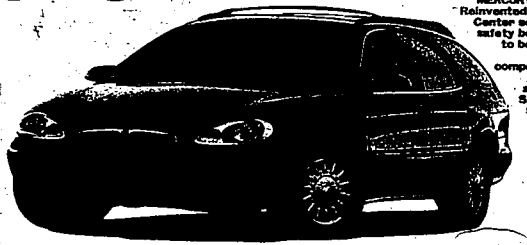


SUZUKI X-90: An on- or off-roader, it has 2 seats, dual airbags, ABS, daytime running lights and 4-wheel drive. Slick T-top and cool colors should raise a few eyebrows. Starts at $13,500.

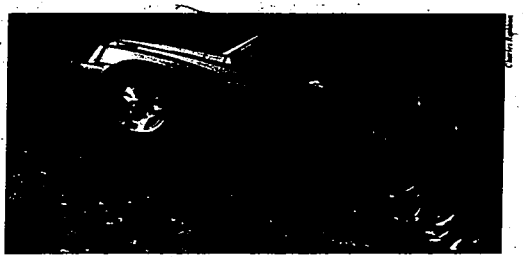
LEGACY OUTBACK: Subaru says it's the world's first sport-utility wagon. Has 4-wheel drive. Spacious like a car, with added 1.2 inches of ground clearance. Prices start at $22,000.



CHRYSLER SEBRING: A sleek and sporty front-wheel-drive convertible with a power top and glass rear window. Choose from 2 trim levels and 2 different engines. Price not yet set.

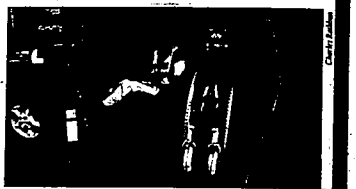


MERCURY SABLE: Reinvented for '96. Center seat with safety belt folds to become a storage compartment or an armrest. Starts at $19,755.



GEO: Chevy's retailored Tracker says, "Try me off-road!" There's a 2-door version and 2-wheel drive too. Rear door child-safety locks. Starts at $12,970.

New Conveniences



Chevy calls it an "E-Z Access System"; on GMC models, it's a "Side-Access Panel." The optional panel swings open to reveal back space on extended-cab trucks. It's $420 on full-size pickups; price not set on compacts.

The heads of the Big Three U.S. automakers talk about what they're doing to increase both the affordability and quality of the vehicles you buy.

We Want To Keep You Satisfied

BY KEN ZINO

AMERICANS APPEAR TO be willing to pay for quality. We are buying new cars and light trucks at brisk rates. American carmakers, in turn, are increasing the value consumers get for their money in the hope that we'll buy their products again and again.

It seems to be working. A poll measuring initial quality satisfaction among buyers of 1995 models found significant gains by the Big Three—General Motors, Ford and Chrysler. GM averaged fewer than one problem per vehicle, reports J.D. Power & Associates. Indications are that this magic number, long the domain of top Japanese automakers, is in sight for Chrysler and Ford too.

The Detroit leaders cite good reasons for the positive trend to continue.

Chrysler Chairman Robert Eaton says jobs and income are growing for Americans, including the nearly 7 million employed by auto-related industries.

G. Richard Wagoner Jr., president of General Motors, North American Operations, notes that inflation is in check. And interest rates, which affect monthly car payments, have dropped.

Yet the Big Three chief executive officers also are pondering why car sales decreased 4% during the first half of 1995. The modest decline of roughly 200,000 units has sparked their selective use of incentives and subsidized leases. It also has prompted a larger debate about prices. Are they too high?

Ultimately, you will deliver the answer. As Ford Chairman Alex Trotman says, "The customer, not Ford, determines how many vehicles we sell." But the car chiefs are poised for a sales battle that comparison-shoppers can exploit.

"How come all of our really hot vehicles—Explorer and super-cab pickup trucks—don't need incentives to sell them?" asks Trotman. "Our slower-selling models cost much less."

Five of the nation's 10 best-selling vehicles from January to July were Fords. Still, Trotman terms affordability "worthy of debate." And even though Lincoln is pressing Cadillac for sales leadership for the first time in 45 years, he's concerned about an industrywide slowdown in the sale of luxury cars.

"Actually, both views are right," says GM's Wagoner. People are buying. "The sport-utility market is so strong, we could have sold all of our Chevy Blazers and GMC Jimmys, even if we'd labeled them Edsels. Affordability is always an issue with some models. It will be more of one in the future." Chrysler's Eaton agrees. "Affordability is clearly on people's minds," he says.

The average price of a new car rose from $11,450 in 1984 to more than $19,200 in 1994, according to the U.S. Commerce Department. The moderate increases (and occasional decreases) of prices on major 1996 models acknowledge those buyers who are unable or unwilling to pay more, and more for new wheels. There are signs of change in the old game of setting prices high, then offering thousands of dollars in incentives when people balk.

GM's Saturn division—the leader in customer satisfaction for moderately priced cars—has steadily increased sales since its debut in 1990. This year, Saturn presents its long-awaited new sedans and station wagons. The new models will have more head room and back-seat room in a much quieter interior. The average price increase: a mere $336.

"With starting prices still under $11,000, we expect Saturn to keep growing," says Wagoner. "Our approach is to take out costs to offset the content increases people are demanding."

Ford's Taurus sedan, unchallenged as the best-selling car in the U.S for more than three years, was completely redesigned for 1996. The price for a Taurus sedan, as equipped by 75% of previous customers, is $19,390—$480 more than in '95. "Our Ford dealers were—to put it mildly—quite anxious that we stay under $20,000," says Trotman. "But the story isn't the price or even the bold styling. When word gets out just how excellent the engine, the ride and brakes of the new car are, Taurus will continue to be a winner."

Mercury Sable GS prices, starting at $19,755, are up less than 1%.

Chrysler, creator of the minivan in 1984 and still the largest seller of these "garageable" people-movers, has drastically overhauled their design. The $2.6 billion development program, code-named NS for "never stop" innovating, is the most expensive in the company's history. Plymouth Voyager '96 models start at $16,720, as did the '95s. A Dodge Caravan with antilock brakes costs just $415 more for '96. The longer Grand Caravan and Grand Voyager versions, starting at $18,000, cost less this year—up to $1195 less.

"By almost any measure—safety, comfort, convenience, quietness and, above all else, value—our redesigned minivans set new benchmarks," says Robert Eaton. "We want to give customers what they asked for and to add features which will delight them, like an optional left-side sliding door and removable rear seats with roll-away wheels in our minivans."

All the domestic car companies seem to be discovering the benefits of an open-door policy. Extended-cab pickup trucks by Chevrolet and GMC have an innovative "side-access" panel that opens from within to simplify side-loading. Really a second door with no outside handle, it's behind the passenger door on Chevrolet C/K and GMC Sierra pickups. On smaller Chevy S-Series and GMC Sonoma pickups, the access panel is on the driver's side.

In January, Ford will start to roll out its redesigned F-Series pickup trucks. Ford is splitting this distinctively American product into several vehicles, starting with a smartly styled personal-use F-150 truck. It features more room behind the front seat—something that Trotman says will appeal to people trading in a car. Buyers of traditional trucks will be offered a variety of larger and more work-oriented trucks with two new Triton V8 engines. And everyone is awaiting a rumored V10 truck.

"Affordability is always an issue with some models. It will be more of one in the future."

G. Richard Wagoner Jr., president of General Motors, North American Operations.

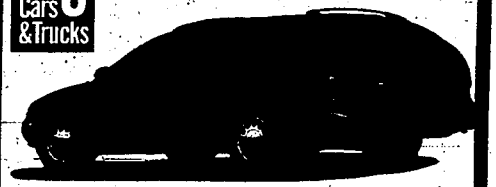
Customers want high quality—even if it costs more. "How come our really hot vehicles don't need incentives to sell them?" asks Ford's chairman.

Alex Trotman, chairman of Ford.

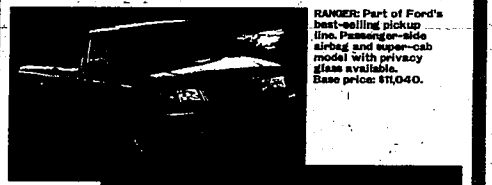
"We want to give customers what they asked for—and to add features that will delight them."

Robert Eaton, chairman of Chrysler.

'96 The Cars & Trucks

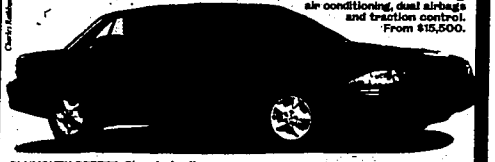


TAURUS WAGON: Ford has redesigned its top-selling cars for the first time since 1992. The wagon will have a futuristic 3D door design; new oval Integrated Control Panel puts more controls in one easy-to-use area. Starts at $20,230.



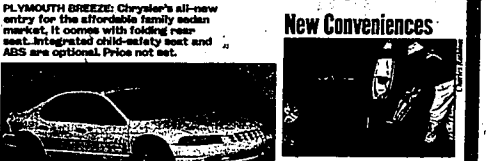
RANGER: Part of Ford's best-selling pickup line. Passenger-side airbag and super-cab model with privacy glass available. Base price: $11,040.

CHEVROLET CAVALIER LS: For driving enthusiasts—with a 2.2-liter, 4-cylinder engine, dual airbags, 4-wheel ABS and PASSlock theft-deterrent all standard. Priced from $17,500.



Charley Ballew

BUICK SKYLARK SEDAN: With lots of standard features—including air conditioning, dual airbags and traction control. From $15,500.



PLYMOUTH BREEZE: Chrysler's all-new entry for the affordable family sedan market. It comes with folding rear seat. Integrated child-safety seat and ABS are optional. Price not set.

New Conveniences

Charles Ballew

DODGE GRAND CARAVAN: Easy-Out Roller Seats fully recline. Optional sliding door on the driver's side. From $18,385.

Trotman won't provide details but admits there's a "stump-puller" on the way that's "all muscle and looks like it's all muscle." Super-cab truck models will have a passenger-side rear door to ease access into the back.

Chrysler is adding another plant for its hot-selling Dodge Ram pickup. And it's modifying others so that, by the end of 1996, Chrysler will be able to "make more Rams, Dakota pickups and Jeeps," says Eaton.

"The Jeep Grand Cherokee (No. 8 among best-selling trucks) has a luxurious new interior with dual airbags and a class-leading 220-hp V8 model," adds Eaton. Reflecting the stronger demand for upscale trucks, prices have escalated here. They start above $27,000 for a 4-wheel-drive Laredo.

"Staying first involves putting firsts in new offerings," says Eaton. He asserts that the new Chrysler Sebring convertible, starting at about $20,000, will lure former buyers of Audi and BMW convertibles into Chrysler showrooms. The new convertible is the first domestic car with front bucket seats that integrate three-point safety belts into the seat frame rather than into the pillar behind it.

"The redesigned Buick Skylark, with its new '96 front and rear," says G. Richard Wagoner Jr., "is a fully loaded, premier compact—a high-value car with a big package and a low sticker price" (about $15,500). The price includes traction control, antilock brakes, a tilt steering wheel and intermittent windshield wipers.

Despite all the challenges for safety and emissions standards, there's still gasoline in the carmakers' blood. Alex Trotman smiles as he describes the new V8 engine in the Ford Mustang. "It's just as powerful and smoother than the old one," he says, "with better emissions and fuel economy." For rapid-performance fans, there's the 305-hp Mustang Cobra.

Wagoner ticks off GM's high-performance offerings: a 280-hp Chevy Camaro, and Pontiac Firebird Trans AM and Formula models with an optional 305-hp V8 engine. For even more power, the Corvette Grand Sport is rated at 330 hp. But Chrysler leads the horsepower race with the 415-hp Dodge Viper V10.

The improvements in the products and practices of the domestic car industry will continue for one good reason: If they don't, you'll buy elsewhere. Clearly, the Big Three carmakers want to keep you coming back to them. ■

"Greatest Engineering Marvel Of The 20th Century"

PANAMA CANAL

Eighth Wonder Of The World ON HOME VIDEO

It's one of the greatest engineering marvels of the 20th century, a 50-mile-long waterway linking the world's two mightiest oceans, the Atlantic and Pacific. It boosted America to the rank of a world power, fulfilling the nation's destiny. Now on home video, here is the exciting human drama behind the construction of the Panama Canal.

THE CANAL THAT LINKED TWO OCEANS!

Learn about the vitally insurmountable obstacles the U.S faced in Panama— from savage tropical jungle with razor sharp grasses and swarms of malaria mosquitos to overflowing rivers and mountainous terrain– and how American ingenuity triumphed over them. Meet the engineers whose genius accomplished the impossible and realized the dream.

THE DREAM-TO-REALITY STORY BEHIND ITS CONSTRUCTION

Finally, go behind the scenes for a close-up look at the Canal's engineering, operations and maintenance. You'll learn how the innovative system of locks that made the Canal's success possible work, raising and lowering massive ships over 80 feet. You'll witness what happens step-by-step when a ship enters the Canal on its route from sea to sea. Don't miss out. Order your copy today. VHS. Color and B&W. 50 minutes.

Fascinating Facts About The Canal

- The Canal system includes the largest earthen dam ever built, the largest man-made lake ever created.
- The Canal's locks are the largest concrete structure on earth.
- The locks' 700-ton doors are so perfectly balanced that they may be opened by a 40-horsepower engine...the same as that used in a lawnmower!
- Ships entering the locks are lifted to the height of a 7-story building.

...And Much More!

Imports are strong, but more and more foreign cars are being made right here in North America.

What's New From Foreign Carmakers

ALMOST ALL OF THE world's automakers now build in North America, or they plan to. Many of this year's "foreign cars" actually are made in the U.S.—although interesting imports also will be available.

Honda (the first Japanese transplant, back in 1982) is building a new Civic model in East Liberty, Ohio. "With more distinctive styling and a quieter and roomier interior, we expect the Civic again to set the standard in the subcompact class," says Richard Colliver, a senior vice president of American Honda. Expected price: $11,000 to $16,000.

Honda and BMW already are building luxury cars in the U.S. In 1997, so will Mercedes-Benz.

Acura, Honda's luxury brand, will build a sport coupe code-named CL-X next year in East Liberty. "Designed, engineered and now built here, it demonstrates our commitment to the U.S. market," says Rich Thomas, Acura's executive vice president. New this fall is the 3.2TL import, Acura's V6-powered luxury sedan. Priced from $32,950.

The German carmaker BMW began making a 3-Series sedan in Spartanburg, S.C., this year. The two-seat Z-3 convertible will be in showrooms in March at about $30,000. "It has everything one expects from BMW: performance, heritage, engineering, styling and safety," says Victor Doolan, president of BMW North America.

In 1997, Mercedes-Benz will start building a sport-utility vehicle in the $30,000 range in Vance, Ala. Imported from Germany this fall is a new, slightly larger E-Class sedan, starting at about $41,000. The E-Class is the most successful luxury import car ever, with more than 2.6 million sold in the U.S.

The top-of-the-line SUV is the V8-powered Range Rover 4.6 HSE, with an estimated price of $62,000. "Stunning, quick, quiet and very exclusive," says Charles Hughes, president of Land Rover North America.

The Lexus LX 450, a 4-wheel-drive vehicle, will be imported from Japan, starting at about $45,000. Power is provided by a 4.5-liter, twin-camshaft, 212-hp, in-line 6 engine. "We're promising the highest quality, most satisfying SUV-ownership experience in the country," says Jim Press, senior vice president of Toyota's Lexus division.

RAV4, an imported SUV from Toyota, will be out early next year. It "goes far beyond small 4WD attributes," says Dave Illingworth, a Toyota senior vice president. "It has a wide stance, and stable passenger-car ride and handling."

The Nissan Pathfinder comes back this winter with a "sculpted body, wider track, dual airbags and more powerful V6 engine," says Earl Hesterberg, Nissan vice president and general manager.

Infiniti's new I30 luxury sedan, starting under $30,000, is sooner than other full-size imports. "We didn't save our best thinking for our most expensive models," says Thomas Eastwood, vice president and general manager of Nissan's Infiniti division.

"We still fun sports cars, not trucks," says Fred Schwab, the president of Porsche Cars North America. New is the 400-hp 911 Turbo with all-wheel drive, designed for going fast on pavement. "It kills bugs faster," adds Schwab. The price is about $99,000.

Since Ford bought the ailing Jaguar in 1989, a remarkable turnaround has occurred. The XJ6 sedan appeared last year to raves. Yet buyers asked for more leg room, a glove box and less noise. This fall, all three are standard in the new long-wheelbase Vanden Plas and XJ12 sedans, starting at about $65,000. "The importance of this car to our future success is greater than is apparent," says Mike Dale, president of Jaguar. "In the bad old days, it took us 10 years to change a paint color." —Ken Time

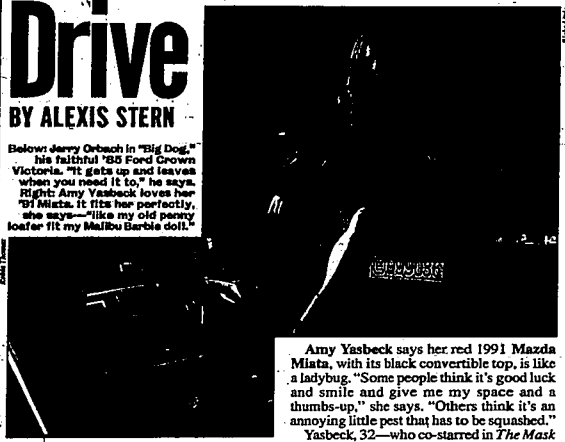
What Celebrities Drive

BY ALEXIS STERN



Below: Jerry Orbach in "Big Dog," his faithful '88 Ford Crown Victoria. "It gets up and leaves when you need it to," he says. Right: Amy Yasbeck loves her '91 Miata. It fits her perfectly, she says—"like my old penny loafer fit my Malibu Barbie doll."

Amy Yasbeck says her red 1991 Mazda Miata, with its black convertible top, is like a ladybug. "Some people think it's good luck and smile and give me my space and a thumbs-up," she says. "Others think it's an annoying little pest that has to be squashed."

Yasbeck, 32—who co-starred in The Mask and Robin Hood: Men in Tights and plays Casey Davenport, the "perfect" older sister, on the TV sitcom Wings—says her Miata is just about the only thing she likes about driving in Los Angeles. "It's so much fun!" she says. Yasbeck's love of convertibles goes back to her childhood in Cincinnati: "My mom had a Ford Excel convertible that she loved. We even drove it around right through October, which gets pretty cold in Cincinnati. My dad always thought we were nuts, but we'd crank up the heat and put on sweaters."

"As a kid, I used to put my Malibu Barbie doll in my penny loafer shoe, and...you know... vrooom!" she recalls. "I mean, it was a convertible. My Miata fits me like the loafer fit Malibu Barbie—perfectly. And there's no back seat, so you can't get in any trouble."

She laughs about a scene in The Mask where she comes to rescue Jim Carrey. "I had to drive a Mustang stick," she says, "and I don't know how to drive a stick, and I had to drive it without my glasses, at night, with squibs—which make it look like fire is coming out of the guns—being shot at us. And Jim Carrey dove into the passenger-side window with his legs sticking out, and I instinctively said, 'Seatbelts,' because I'm such a seatbelt nut. I couldn't believe they left it in the movie."

WHEN HE WAS GROWING up, Jerry Orbach had a love affair with cars: "Fast driving, stunt driving, things like that," he says. "But now I've calmed down a little." The star of TV, film and stage drives a navy-blue 1985 Ford Crown Victoria. He calls it Big Dog. "I like 'em big and safe and powerful," he explains. "It gets up and leaves when you need it to."

Orbach, 59, who plays the hard-bitten detective Lennie Briscoe on Law & Order, lives with his wife, Elaine, in Manhattan. Mostly, he drives Big Dog to golf courses and weekend retreats. After 10 years, he has racked up only 30,000 miles. "We have to remind the garage guys to start it up once in a while," he says.

People who see him in Big Dog aren't too impressed, Orbach says. "Sometimes people say things like, 'I guess they don't pay you enough on Law & Order.'" But Orbach doesn't mind. "In 10 years, all I've done is get a new battery and put on new tires," he notes. "My dealer says he never makes any money off of me. I can't bear to part with this car."

If you really want to, you can make your own potpourri fragrance by drying apple blossom, lavender and the petals of tea roses, then gently simmering the tender mixture over a slow flame for hours on end.

Or you can just hang this from your ceiling fan and call it a day.

All About Four-Wheel Drive

BY SUE MEAD

IT'S NO SECRET THAT AMERICA LOVES 4-wheel drive (4WD), even though the average American doesn't use it more than twice a year. Many drivers confess they really don't know how to use 4WD but like the idea of it. As a result, nearly 90% of sport-utility vehicles and light trucks are driven on paved roads only.

Both 4-wheel and all-wheel drive—which is designed exclusively for paved roads—provide better traction on wet and slippery pavement than regular 2-wheel drive. But how and when do you use your 4-wheel rig?

If you can find the time, practice driving on snow and ice, in sand, on steep hills and on rough terrain. There also are winter driving schools, off-road driving events and even 4-wheel-drive clinics. And your owner's manual tells you how 4-wheel drive works.

Here are a few pointers:

1) Engage "high range" on your 4-wheel drive for all slick surfaces, including rain, ice and light snow. But remember you can go faster in 4WD (so long as the surface is slick or has some wheel slip), but you cannot stop faster.

2) For deeper snow (8 inches or more), engage "low range" but do not go faster than 10 mph. Also use "low" for loose, rocky and uneven surfaces, and for sand. Always keep a firm grip on the wheel, with your thumbs on top of the wheel—not inside it.

3) If stuck in soft sand, lower the air pressure until you see a slight bulge at the base of your tires. Reinflate them as soon as you reach solid ground. Keep a tire gauge and air pump handy.

4) Carry a tow strap to pull yourself—or another motorist—out of a snowbank. Tow straps are sold at auto-parts stores. Those who regularly drive off-road should invest in winches too.

Let's review some distinctions:

• 2WD systems. In front-wheel or rear-wheel drive, a "differential" along the axle—the lowest point of your vehicle's underbelly—adjusts the speed at which the wheels turn while cornering.

• Traction-control system. This helps your vehicle grip the road when there's sand or gravel, or if it's wet and slick from rain, snow or ice.

• AWD (all-wheel drive) systems. These power all 4 wheels, usually full-time, giving good traction.

• 4WD systems. These can perform on rough terrain, and many such vehicles handle and ride like cars. To engage 4-wheel drive, a lever shift or a push button employs a transfer case to lock the front and rear axles.

• Full-time 4WD. Generally, full-time 4WD powers all wheels on all surfaces at all times through a transfer case that does not lock the front and rear axles. But there are systems that switch automatically from 2WD to "4WD high" at the demand of road conditions. Ford's Explorer, for example, has a shift on the fly system that lets the driver shift from 2WD to 4WD while driving, without stopping or shifting to reverse. But to change from 2WD to 4WD for many traditional 4WD systems, drivers must make a full stop, then get out and lock the front and rear axles by hand.

Generally, 4WD vehicles burn more fuel, and mileage varies from model to model. Top-selling 4WD sport-utility vehicles (SUVs) include the Ford Explorer, Chrysler's Jeep Grand Cherokee and GM's Chevy Blazer.

RANGE ROVER 4.6 HSE: It's said this glamorous SUV "can do everything." At $62,000, it should.

High-Tech Talk

BY PAUL A. EISENSTEIN

IMAGINE YOU'RE STUCK IN the middle of the night—so lost that you can't even tell a tow truck where to find you. No problem if you have a personal RESCU unit. Just press a button on the console of a 1996 Lincoln Continental with this optional system, and it tunes in to a network of orbiting navigation satellites, precisely pinpointing your location. Next, RESCU (short for Remote Emergency Satellite Cellular Unit) automatically dials an emergency monitoring center on the car's built-in cellular phone and summons help within seconds.

Consider this: In 1970, the average automobile contained barely $75 worth of electronic components, including that tinny radio. Today, the typical vehicle has almost $2000 in electronics onboard, making it cleaner, safer and more fuel-efficient than ever. In addition to RESCU, here's what's hot on the high-tech front:

Lost, without a clue? It's no problem if you're in a Lincoln Continental with the RESCU system: The simple touch of a button pinpoints your location and summons help in seconds.

You don't need a psychic to tell you that Mercedes-Benz has a smart idea with its new ESP. This Electronic Stability Program works much like anti-lock brakes, using a computer to lightly pump the brakes to prevent a skid, even if you enter a corner too fast.

All 1996 Cadillacs offer the new HomeLink system. Just touch a button: It not only opens up your garage but also turns on the lights in your house. HomeLink also is being offered on the Oldsmobile Bravada, Mitsubishi Eclipse and Buick Riviera.

If you've ever stood out in the rain, trying to switch the discs in your trunk's CD-changer, there's relief from Lexus this year: The 1996 LS 400 sedan has the CD-changer mounted inside the glove box.

Ford's new Taurus features a trend-setting Integrated Control Panel (ICP). Mounted on the dash, it's really a remote control for the heater and radio. The hardware is buried out of sight—where it's hard for thieves to get at.

Little things help a lot: The small heating coil buried at the base of the windshield in the new-for-'96 Chrysler minivans melts ice off the wipers, so you'll never need to squint through a streaked windshield again.

Suburbanites love the way minivans cart the kids and lug lumber. But removing the back row of seats has always been a problem—until now. Chrysler's minis use a unique "landing gear" design to allow the back and middle benches to roll in or out. And with Honda's new Odyssey, the seat simply folds into the floor.

General Motors also has an engineering breakthrough that some might not consider "high-tech." On Chevy and GMC extended-cab compact and full-size pickups, new side-access panels make it simple to reach the jump seats. There's also a plan for a storage system that automatically stows a wheelchair out of the way behind the driver's seat.

Ford is doing a worldwide test of the PremAir Catalyst System, which takes the smog-laden air that flows over the radiator and converts it into oxygen. If the 9-month trial of this futuristic air-cleaning system is successful, expect to see it go into widespread production by the decade's end.

Shopping around? Here's an additional way to get more information:

Cruising For Cars Online

BY JOHN McCORMICK

IF YOU WANT TO BUY A CAR, YOU CAN look in a magazine or newspaper, buy a paperback book on new cars, go to a dealer's showroom—or take a test drive on the Information Superhighway. For about the cost of a local phone call, you can log onto the Internet and readily gain access to lots of free information on nearly every car and truck on the market.

Carmakers increasingly are making this information available through their own sites on the World Wide Web and, indirectly, through commercial online providers such as America Online (AOL), CompuServe and Prodigy. With a few clicks of your mouse, you can flick through electronic brochures complete with vehicle specifications and photos.

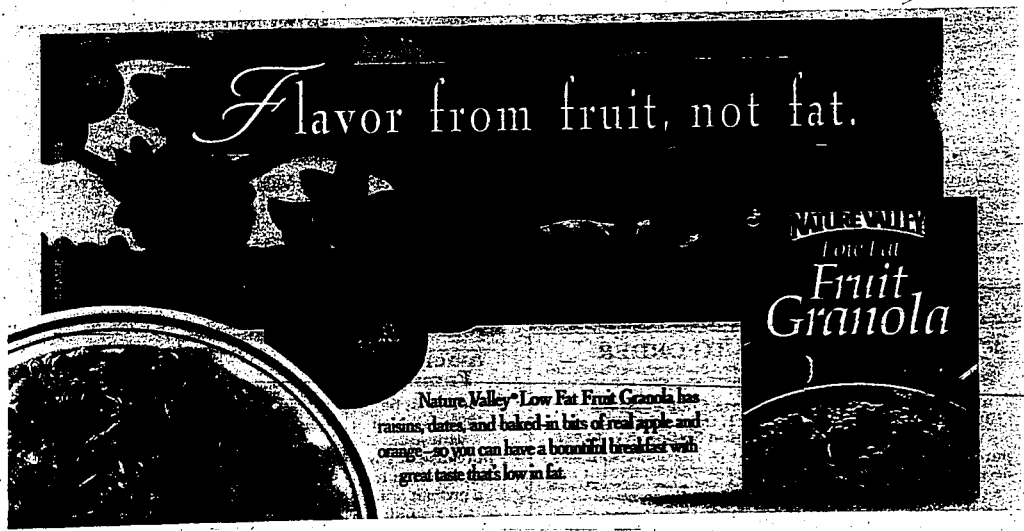
Let's say you're looking for a compact sedan and want to see what GM, Ford and Chrysler have to offer. You might start with GM's Saturn "Home page" on the World Wide Web. Once there, you can find—and print out—dimensions, options, prices and other details about the 1996 Saturns.

Facts and figures on the Ford Escort, a similar car, can be accessed via Ford's own Home page on the Web or through CompuServe or Prodigy. CompuServe will even help you calculate your monthly payments for the Escort. Chrysler's new sporty coupe, the Plymouth Neon, also has its own area on the Chrysler Web site. Chevrolet plans to have a Web site up and running by the end of the year.

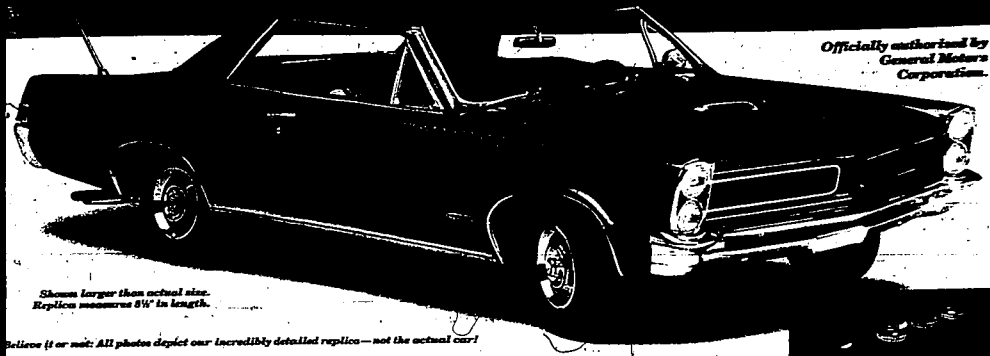
If you have a commercial online service, follow its directions to search for information. For example, you might type "Automobiles" to obtain a full listing of carmakers represented. Or type the name of an individual company. From this point, simply use your mouse and click through different displays to find what you need.

Computer bulletin boards with headings such as "Automobiles" also can be useful. But don't believe everything you see or read. Authoritative data direct from the manufacturer may be far more credible than a posting under a pseudonym on a bulletin board. If you doubt some claim about a vehicle, check its accuracy with a dealer or the manufacturer.

And remember: Although carmakers give you free information, your service provider will bill you for your time online, and you could run up significant charges. The meter is running—so set a timer!



1965 PONTIAC GTO



Officially authorized by General Motors Corporation.

Shown larger than actual size. Replica measures 8¼" in length.

Believe it or not: All photos depict our incredibly detailed replica—not the actual car!

A meticulously engineered die-cast metal replica—hand-assembled from over 150 precision parts.

It was a wolf in sheep's clothing...a clean looking two-door hardtop that could—in a heartbeat—turn into a ferocious, brutally fast muscle car. A "Tri-Power" optioned GTO, with its 389 cubic-inch V-8 engine breathing through three two-barrel carburetors, pushed out a street-pounding 360 horsepower. From 0-60 mph, it clocked 5.8 seconds and did the quarter-mile in 14.5 seconds.

Now, you can acquire an authentically detailed, die-cast metal replica of the most legendary muscle car of them all...the 1965 Pontiac GTO.

Over 150 scale parts go into making this handsome replica in the large 1:24 scale. All the major components are die-cast metal. Each replica is individually polished by hand to a showroom finish.

No risk—satisfaction guaranteed.

The 1965 Pontiac GTO is available exclusively from the Danbury Mint at just $94.50, payable in three monthly installments of $31.50. You can order at no risk because your satisfaction is guaranteed. To order, send no money now. Return your Reservation Application today!

How to protect your family:

A Parent's-Eye View Of Car Safety

BY MARCIA RUFF

MERCEDES-BENZ has been showing a concept car it developed for research purposes that can, if activated in a crash, pop 17 airbags—from the car's front, sides and top. Clearly, the luxury carmaker thinks unstinting passenger safety is a good thing. Cars today are safer than ever before. And by making smart choices when you're car-shopping, you can make your family even safer. Here are a few ways:

Crashworthiness. Most new cars have "crush zones" designed to crumple in an accident, keeping the passenger compartment intact. But which car is most crashworthy? All things being equal, the larger the vehicle, the safer it is—especially since 8000 people die and 24,000 more are seriously injured each year in side-impact collisions. A vehicle's window sticker tells if it already meets the 1997 federal side-impact protection standards.

To help prevent accidents by making your presence known to other drivers, carmakers now offer daytime running lights that turn on when the car starts. They're standard on many models from Volkswagen, Saab, Volvo and General Motors. A new kit from General Motors will fit most past or current GM cars or trucks, and it costs less than $50. Some insurance companies offer a discount for cars with daytime running lights.

Eliminate that "blind spot." More than 630,000 accidents and 225 fatalities occur each year in the United States during lane changes and merges. Try this new technique to see as much as possible: Lean your head against the left-front window and set the left mirror so you can just see your car's left side. With your head at the center of the car, adjust your right-side mirror so you can just see your car's right side in it. This gives you a constant view of traffic coming up on your right.

Child-safety seats and restraints. Correctly used, a good infant-safety seat reduces your child's chances of injury or death in an accident by about 70%. But experts estimate that 25% of such seats are misused. The California Highway Patrol has gathered statistics that show that 338 of the 408 children killed in car accidents in California since 1987 would have survived had they been properly restrained.

Chrysler, Ford, General Motors, Saab and Volvo all offer built-in infant-safety seats in some models.

A study by pediatricians at the University of Alabama Medical School found that 3-year-olds have a 64% higher injury rate than infants, because they rarely use special child-safety belts or seats for protection. Experts recommend booster seats for children at least 3 years old or at least 30 pounds.

Do it right—for your child's life:

- Take your child seat with you when car-shopping. Make sure it fits with no forward or sideways motion.
- For a tighter fit, choose automatic-locking seat belts (they lock when pulled). Avoid motorized seat belts and those that lock only upon impact.
- Try height-adjustable seat belts. Because lowering the top point of the harness is more comfortable for a child, your child will be less likely to slip it off when you're not looking. Seat belt anchors on long stalks are easy for adult use but may hold child seats too loosely.
- Read your owner's manual to learn where to place child seats in your car.
- Read your child-seat installation instructions. Need new instructions? Call the seat maker's customer-service line.
- Have specific questions about how the seat should fit? Phone your state highway safety office or the federal Auto Safety Hotline (1-800-424-9393).

For an excellent checklist, send for the brochure Shopping for a Safer Car. Write: Safe Car, P.O. Box 1420, Dept. P, Arlington, Va. 22210. Include a self-addressed stamped envelope.

A roundup of what's new in pickups, sport-utility vehicles and minivans.

Everybody Wants A Truck

NISSAN PATHFINDER: All-new SUV, the fastest-growing category of light trucks, with a longer wheelbase and more powerful V8 engine. Debuts this winter.

BY JOHN R. WHITE

WE DO LIKE OUR TRUCKS: Americans bought 3.6 million pickups, sport-utility vehicles (SUVs) and minivans January through July 1995. And the nation's top-selling vehicle, the Ford F-150 truck, has been redesigned for the first time in 16 years. It debuts in January with a new chassis, dual airbags and two new engines—a 4.2-liter V6 and 4.6-liter V8. The super-cab model will add a standard third door (for side entry behind the passenger door) and have a wider stance.

Chevrolet, meanwhile, has beefed up the engine in its full-size pickups—the No. 2 selling vehicles nationwide. Both Chevy and GMC have added a side-access swing panel to the extended cabs on their full-size and compact pickups for '96.

Changes are minor on the Ford Ranger compact truck (No. 6 on the list of best-selling vehicles) and on Chrysler's Dodge Dakota and the hot-selling Ram.

• Sport-Utility Vehicles. Not so long ago, there were only Jeeps. Then came Ford Bronco and Chevy Blazer. Today, nearly every carmaker has an SUV in its lineup—or is planning one—and your choices range from lap-of-luxury models to mini-sized economy vehicles.

Ford Explorer gets a V8 option for '96, first in a 2WD version and later in 4WD. A significant achievement for Ford is fuel mileage: The V8 matches the 6-cylinder version (17 mpg city/19 mpg hwy). Early in '96, the Explorer will be sold as a Mercury Mountaineer. GM's Chevy Blazer gets a new 5-speed transmission. Chrysler's Cherokee and Grand Cherokee return, the latter with dual airbags and full-time all-wheel drive. And Chrysler is planning a new Jeep Wrangler for '97.

The Nissan Pathfinder is all new for '96, with a wider track and dual airbags. Toyota's Land Cruiser and the Mitsubishi Montero are back with few changes. A new Toyota 4Runner arrives in the spring.

The luxury SUVs go for $30,000 and more. Range Rover tops the list at $62,000, with a bigger, more-powerful V8 engine for '96. Back after last year's hiatus is GM's Oldsmobile Bravada, with full-time all-wheel drive, 4-wheel antilock brakes and a 190-hp V6. Ford will offer a luxurious Lincoln Navigator, and Mercedes-Benz will have its own "all-activity vehicle."

The Isuzu Trooper gets a new 190-hp V6 and shift-on-the-fly 4WD capability. Coming is the Lexus LX 450—a luxury SUV based on the Toyota Land Cruiser—to be followed by an Infiniti SUV, a luxury version of the Nissan Pathfinder. Acura will add the SLX, a cushier version of the Isuzu Trooper.

The mini-SUV began with the 1985 Suzuki Samurai, a vehicle that was criticized for tipping over. Suzuki produces the larger Sidekick, also sold as a Geo Tracker. The 4-cylinder Kia Sportage comes from Korea. Minis often lack the off-road capabilities of full-size models, but they make up for it in fuel economy.

New for '96 is a 2-seat hybrid SUV, the Suzuki X-90, a sporty little coupe that can hide in the woods. And Toyota introduces the RAV4, a Recreational Active Vehicle with full-time 4WD and 4-wheel independent suspension. It comes in 2 or 4 doors, with a 2-liter, 120-hp, 4-cylinder engine.

• Minivans. Chrysler's all-new minivans—the Town & Country, Dodge Caravan and Plymouth Voyager—have a new option: a sliding door behind the driver's-side door. Chrysler minis are not so mini. They are longer, wider, roomier and more carlike than before, with much-improved handling. Ford's powered-up version of the front-wheel-drive Windstar has two new options—a 200-hp, 3.8-liter V6 and electronic traction control. The rear-drive Aerostar is again in the lineup with few changes.

The Honda Odyssey, with no sliding door, returns in '96; it also will be sold as an Isuzu Oasis.

GM will offer all-new, full-size vans for '96—the GMC Savana and Chevy Express—with more horsepower than their predecessors and comfortable, ergonomically correct interiors. But not until spring.

IMPORTANT NOTICE OF PROPOSED SETTLEMENT OF CLASS ACTION AND FAIRNESS HEARING

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF ALABAMA SOUTHERN DIVISION

Jack H. Woodward, et al. vs. NOR-AM Chemical Company

No. 94-0188-CB-C

U.S. WORKERS WITH ON-THE-JOB EXPOSURE TO FUNDAL®

and Their Spouses, Children, Other Relatives and Legal Representatives and PRICE v. CIBA-GEIGY, Civ. No. 94-0647-CB-S (S.D. Ala. 1995), SETTLEMENT CLASS MEMBERS

FUNDAL® WAS A COMMERCIAL AGRICULTURAL PESTICIDE WHICH WAS MANUFACTURED IN THE U.S. BY NOR-AM CHEMICAL COMPANY. FUNDAL® WAS SOLD MARKETED FOR RESIDENTIAL OR HOME GARDENING USE.

U.S. WORKERS WITH ON-THE-JOB EXPOSURE TO FUNDAL® MAY BE ELIGIBLE FOR FREE MEDICAL MONITORING AND/OR CASH PAYMENTS UNDER THIS PROPOSED LEGAL SETTLEMENT.

PRICE* SETTLEMENT CLASS MEMBERS ARE ALL U.S. WORKERS WITH ON-THE-JOB EXPOSURE TO GALECRON® (BICILORAN, GALECRON® AND FUNDAL®) WHO DID NOT EXCLUDE THEMSELVES FROM THE PRICE SETTLEMENT CLASS. PRICE SETTLEMENT CLASS MEMBERS MAY BE ELIGIBLE FOR CASH SETTLEMENTS UNDER THIS PROPOSED LEGAL SETTLEMENT.

PLEASE READ THIS NOTICE CAREFULLY. YOU MAY BELONG TO A CLASS OF PEOPLE COVERED BY A PROPOSED SETTLEMENT OF A LEGAL ACTION ("PROPOSED SETTLEMENT"). THE WOODWARD SETTLEMENT MAY AFFECT YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS. FOR MORE INFORMATION CALL 1-888-211-6913

By Order of the Court, a class action has been conditionally certified for settlement purposes. On January 9, 1996, a Fairness Hearing will be held at the Courthouse, United States District Court, Southern District of Alabama, 113 St. Joseph Street, Mobile, Alabama 36602, at 9 a.m. Central Time, so the Court can determine if the class action should be finally certified and if the Woodward Settlement, as summarized in this Notice, should be approved as fair, reasonable and adequate. Although participation in this settlement is voluntary, all Woodward Settlement Class Members who do not timely exclude themselves from the lawsuit will be bound by the Woodward Settlement if it is approved.

I. DEFINITION OF CLASS

Under the Woodward Settlement, Fundal® is defined as chlordimeform or any chlordimeform-containing product, either manufactured, formulated, packaged, distributed or sold by or on behalf of NOR-AM Chemical Company ("NOR-AM") or its related parties, regardless of the trade name of the product; or any metabolite of Fundal®, including the substances known as 4-COT or 5-CAT. Galecron® has the same meaning as it did in the Price v. Ciba-Geigy Corp., Civ. No. 94-0647-CB-S (S.D. Ala. 1995), Settlement ("Price Settlement"), and is thus defined as chlordimeform or any chlordimeform-containing product, either manufactured, formulated, packaged, distributed or sold by or on behalf of Ciba-Geigy Corporation or related parties, regardless of the trade name of the product; or any metabolite of Galecron®, including the substances known as 4-COT or 5-CAT.

The Woodward Settlement Class is defined as:

(1) All persons who fall into one of the following categories, and who reside in the United States as of the date of filing of the Class Action Complaint, who have been exposed in the United States to Fundal® only, but not to Fundal® and Galecron® or to Galecron® only ("NOR-AM Exposed Persons"):

a. Formulators: An individual (whether or not employed by NOR-AM Chemical Company) who in the course of his or her employment was exposed to Fundal® while at a plant or site which was involved in mixing, blending, packaging, handling or otherwise formulating pesticides which contained, in whole or in part, Fundal®;

b. Applicators: An individual (whether or not employed by NOR-AM Chemical Company) who in the course of his or her employment, was exposed to Fundal® while involved in the application of pesticides which contained, in whole or in part, Fundal®, including, without limitation, aerial and land applicators, flagmen, mixer/loaders, loaders and other individuals who handled such pesticide prior to or during the application process; or

c. Other Covered Workers: (i) An individual employed by NOR-AM Chemical Company who, in the course of his or her employment, was exposed to Fundal®; (ii) an individual who worked at Empark, Inc. in Deer Park, Texas and/or Micro Chemical in Louisiana and who was exposed to Fundal® in the course of his or her employment; (iii) or an individual who worked in a testing or research laboratory and who was exposed to Fundal® in the course of his or her employment; or

(2) The spouses, parents, children, other relatives, or legal representatives of the NOR-AM Exposed Persons described above.

(3) All members of the Price Settlement Class. The Price Settlement Class means all members of the settlement class certified by the court in Price v. Ciba-Geigy Corp., Civ. No. 94-0647-CB-S (S.D. Ala. 1995), excluding persons determined by the court to be opt-outs of that class. That settlement class then included persons residing in the United States who in the course of their employment were exposed to Galecron® or to Galecron® and Fundal® ("Ciba Exposed Persons"); and the spouses, parents, children, other relatives, or legal representatives of the Ciba Exposed Persons described above.

(Collectively "Woodward Settlement Class Members").

Note: If you are an NOR-AM Exposed Person or a Ciba Exposed Person, you are a Woodward Settlement Class Member whether or not you have been diagnosed with an illness. Spouses, parents, children, other relatives, and legal representatives are Woodward Settlement Class Members but the claims they are seeking are limited to those arising from a NOR-AM Exposed Person or Ciba Exposed Person's exposure.

II. IMPORTANT MEDICAL NOTICE

To NOR-AM Exposed Persons and Ciba Exposed Persons (as defined above):

You may have an increased risk of developing bladder cancer if you had on-the-job exposure to Fundal® and/or Galecron®. Workers exposed to Fundal® and/or Galecron® should participate in a medical monitoring program because early detection of bladder cancer can result in more effective treatment.

If you had on-the-job exposure to Fundal® and/or Galecron®, it is recommended that you or your doctor call 1-888-211-6913 to learn how you can obtain further medical information or enroll in medical monitoring.

III. PROPOSED SETTLEMENT

The Woodward Settlement provides for the establishment by NOR-AM of two funds to provide medical benefits and compensation to eligible Woodward Settlement Class Members or their legal representatives. This settlement is intended, where applicable, to work as a complement to the Price Settlement.

> The total package of benefits potentially available to a NOR-AM Exposed Person is the same as the total package of benefits potentially available to a Ciba Exposed Person. Thus, Woodward Settlement Class Members may be eligible for the same benefits whether they were occupationally exposed to Fundal® only, or to Fundal® and Galecron®, or to Galecron® only.

(1) The NOR-AM Medical Monitoring and Treatment Fund ("The NOR-AM MMT Fund"). If the Woodward Settlement is approved, NOR-AM will make an initial deposit of $3,500,000 into the NOR-AM MMT Fund, and will thereafter make additional deposits on an as-needed basis. There is no limit to the amount of money NOR-AM can be required to contribute over the life of the NOR-AM MMT Fund, which will last a minimum of 20 years.

NOR-AM Exposed Persons will be entitled to participate in the NOR-AM medical monitoring and treatment program; Ciba Exposed Persons may receive medical monitoring and treatment benefits only through the Price Settlement. The NOR-AM medical monitoring and treatment program and the medical monitoring and treatment program provided through the Price Settlement are identical. The NOR-AM MMT Fund will pay for a medical monitoring program designed to detect at an early stage the form of bladder cancer alleged to be associated with exposure to Fundal®; specifically, primary urothelial carcinoma of the urinary collecting system, i.e., renal pelvis, ureter, bladder and urethra. The NOR-AM MMT Fund also will pay for all medically necessary treatment for NOR-AM Exposed Persons.

(2) The NOR-AM Disease Compensation and Administration Fund ("The NOR-AM DCA Fund"). If the Woodward Settlement is approved, NOR-AM will also make an initial deposit of $21,000,000 into the NOR-AM DCA Fund, up to a required maximum of $30,000,000. The NOR-AM DCA Fund will make cash payments of up to $626,500 on behalf of a NOR-AM Exposed Person who, after exposure to Fundal® only, has developed or in the future develops the form of bladder cancer alleged to be associated with Fundal®. In addition, the NOR-AM DCA Fund will make cash supplements amounting to 40% of the amounts scheduled for and paid as compensatory payments pursuant to the Price settlement, up to $179,000, on behalf of a Ciba Exposed Person who, after exposure to Fundal® and Galecron® or to Galecron® only, has developed or in the future develops the form of bladder cancer alleged to be associated with Fundal® and Galecron®. The NOR-AM DCA Fund will also pay for administrative costs and class counsel's and administrative class counsel's attorney fees, costs and expenses as determined by the Court. The total attorney fee award to be requested will not exceed 20% of the benefit conferred upon the class. The benefits of the NOR-AM DCA Fund will continue as long as the NOR-AM MMT Fund continues, or until the NOR-AM DCA Fund is exhausted. If the NOR-AM DCA Fund is exhausted, NOR-AM may continue paying for compensable claims. If NOR-AM does not continue to pay for those compensable claims, Woodward Settlement Class Members will be able to opt-out of the NOR-AM DCA Fund and pursue any legal claims they may have, except for claims for medical monitoring, medical treatment, fear of illness or cancer, or increased risk of illness or cancer.

(3) Other Conditions. The Stipulation of Settlement presently provides for medical monitoring, treatment and compensation payments for certain medical conditions set forth in this Notice. In the event, however, that a Court-approved Epidemiology Panel determines to a reasonable medical certainty that any other medical condition is caused by Fundal® or Galecron® exposure, that condition will be deemed a compensable claim, and will be eligible for medical monitoring (if feasible), medical treatment, and cash payments.

(4) Release. Woodward Settlement Class Members who do not exclude themselves from the Woodward Settlement Class release all past, present and future claims (i) relating to the covered medical conditions listed above; and (ii) relating to a Woodward Settlement Class Member's exposure to Fundal® or Galecron®, including all claims alleging that any other cancers, personal injuries or risks are caused by exposure to Fundal® or Galecron®.

IV. CLASS REPRESENTATIVES AND CLASS COUNSEL

The Court has designated the following Woodward Settlement Class Members, Jack H. Woodward, Alta Woodward, Tom Loftus, Cindy Loftus and Rita Snow, as class representatives to represent all Woodward Settlement Class Members. The Court has also designated as Class Counsel the following individuals: Timothy E. Eble, S.C. Middlebrooks III, and David R. Donaldson.

V. RIGHTS AND OPTIONS OF WOODWARD SETTLEMENT CLASS MEMBERS

If you are a Woodward Settlement Class Member, you have the following options:

(1) You may do nothing and remain a Woodward Settlement Class Member. If you choose to take no action, your interests as a member of the Woodward Settlement Class will be represented by the Class Representatives and Class Counsel at no cost to you.

(2) You may remain a Woodward Settlement Class Member and either represent yourself or hire your own attorney to represent you at your own cost.

(3) You may remain a Woodward Settlement Class Member and object to the settlement.

(4) If you choose to remain a Woodward Settlement Class Member (under options 1, 2 or 3 above), you may receive the benefits afforded by this settlement within six months of the Court's Order directing this Notice.

(5) You may request exclusion from this settlement.

DEADLINES FOR ABOVE OPTIONS. The deadline for filing an Entry of Appearance if you choose to represent yourself or retain an attorney; for filing objections to this settlement; for filing a Notice of Intent to Appear at the fairness hearing; or for filing a request to be excluded from the Woodward Settlement Class is DECEMBER 1, 1995. TO LEARN MORE INFORMATION ABOUT HOW TO FILE ANY OF THE ABOVE ITEMS, PLEASE CALL 1-800-211-4913 or WRITE TO: Woodward Class Action, P.O. Box 974, Charleston, SC 29402.

VI. PROOF OF CLAIM PROCEDURE

In order for any Woodward Settlement Class Member to receive any of the benefits of this settlement, he or she must comply with the proof of claim procedure. To learn how you may receive benefits under this settlement or to obtain a Proof of Claim Form for medical monitoring, medical treatment or disease compensation, call 1-800-211-4913 or write to Woodward Class Action, Post Office Box 974, Charleston, SC 29402.

VII. FOR FURTHER INFORMATION

THIS NOTICE IS ONLY A SUMMARY. If you believe you are a Woodward Settlement Class Member you are urged to call 1-800-211-4913 or write to Woodward Class Action, Post Office Box 974, Charleston, SC 29402 to obtain further information regarding this settlement, how to exclude yourself from the class, and how to obtain benefits. DO NOT CALL THE CLERK OF COURT with questions about this Notice or this settlement.

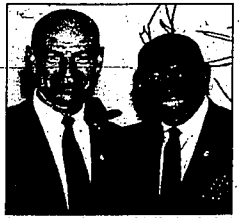
Olympic Highlights Remembered



Greenspan (l) in 1967 with the track star Jesse Owens, who died in 1980 at 66

The Atlanta Olympic committee has picked Bud Greenspan to produce the official film of the 1996 Games. A four-time Emmy Award-winner, Greenspan has been making the official films of the Olympics since 1984. This one will be financed and distributed worldwide by Turner Sports.

For those who can't wait for 1996, there's "100 Greatest Moments in Olympic History," a book by Greenspan due out Oct. 23. It begins with Jesse Owens' heroics in Berlin in 1936.

"Jesse Owens was my best friend," Greenspan told me. "Everyone remembers his four gold medals, but few remember that the first man to greet Jesse after he won the long jump was Lutz Long, his German opponent, and they walked right in front of Hitler's box. The sport transcended politics. The German people loved Jesse. The Nazi hierarchy did not."

Greenspan then recalled another great moment:

Korbut: Tears turned to gold

With her performance in Munich in 1972, Olga Korbut changed gymnastics from an obscure sport to the dream of thousands of Olga wannabes.

After the 17-year-old Soviet gymnast blew her shot in the women's all-around competition with a poor performance on the uneven bars, viewers saw her pain as she wept on-camera. It made her comeback all the more heady the next day, when she won two gold medals and a silver.

Greenspan was in Munich and saw Korbut perform, but he didn't realize how she had captivated the American audiences watching on TV. "Few people in the stadium saw her cry like the world audience saw it—with an extreme closeup," he told me. "We didn't find out about Korbut's magnetism until we got back home."

You may be entitled to free long distance calls if you paid for telephone calls to 900 number sweepstakes or credit card programs.

Class Action Notice: Read the instructions and fill out the claim form below to file your claim.

You may be eligible to make a claim and receive Certificates for free long distance calls in accordance with a class action settlement approved by the District Court in Augusta, Georgia between class plaintiffs and MCI Telecommunications Corporation ("MCI").

In order to be eligible to make a claim, you must have paid, during the period January 1, 1988 through November 1, 1994, for one or more telephone calls to 900 numbers provided by MCI in connection with programs offering:

Sweepstakes, games of chance, awards, prizes, gifts or information on unclaimed funds, AND/OR financial information services, credit cards, catalog cards, or information on obtaining credit cards or catalog cards.

The long distance company on your home telephone does not need to be MCI in order for you to claim and use a Certificate. Only 900 number calls using MCI services, and not those using AT&T, Sprint or others' services, are covered by this settlement. You will not receive Certificates for payments made for 900 number calls using AT&T, Sprint or others' services.

MCI has the right to investigate and challenge any claim and to verify the information you submit. If MCI challenges your claim, you will be notified and given the opportunity to respond. The Court will resolve any challenges.

How to Fill Out the Claim Form:

1. If you are eligible, please complete the Proof of Claim and mail it to: 900 NUMBER SETTLEMENT ADMINISTRATION, P.O. BOX 33308, WASHINGTON, DC 20033. The deadline for submitting the form is March 31, 1996.

2. Part I of the form requires information about any sweepstakes-type calls for which you are making a claim. Part II requires information about any credit card-type calls for which you are making a claim.

3. In Part I and II, please identify the home telephone number(s) used to make 900 calls and check the box showing the actual or estimated total amount you paid for the calls, less any credits or refunds you received from any source. Give your honest estimate if you do not know the exact amount. If there is not a box for the amount of your claim, place the amount of your claim on the line next to "other".

4. If you are submitting this form in a representative capacity for someone else who is eligible, you must attach proof of your authority to act as representative for the person whose claim you are submitting.

5. Be sure to sign and date the form. Unsigned forms will not be processed. By signing, you are affirming that the information you provided is true and correct to the best of your knowledge. False statements are punishable by law.

6. If you have questions about completing the Proof of Claim Form, please call (800) 421-1269, toll free.

Lynn Minton Reports

Fresh Voices

'WE CAN BE FRIENDS, IF...'

On Dec. 5, 1955, after Rosa Parks was arrested for refusing to move to the back of a bus in Montgomery, Ala., the black community, led by Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., then 26 and pastor of the Dexter Avenue Baptist Church, began a bus boycott. It lasted 381 days—until the U.S. Supreme Court ordered an end to Montgomery's bus segregation.

This year, as the 40th anniversary of that boycott approaches, we met at that same church with six teenagers—three black and three white, who were students at Robert E. Lee High School in Montgomery. We were joined by Robert D. Nesbitt Sr., 86, who worked side by side with Dr. King during those fateful days.

Lynn Minton: When I came here today, the cabdriver said he remembered coming by this church some 40 years ago, and there were white people with baseball bats in front, cars being turned over.

Mr. Nesbitt: To let you know what we went through...After Rosa Parks was arrested, a group of us began meeting here. The tension we had. When you went to bed, you didn't know whether they were going to bomb your house in the night. And you'd get telephone calls all night long—people saying nasty things and then hanging up. We went through that for 381 days.

You see, to start with, there was segregation. We had two drinking fountains in the stores. One said "Colored," and one said "White." Well, the water was the same. Wasn't no white water, wasn't no colored water. But we could not drink from that white fountain. If there were vacant seats on the bus when the back was full, we had to stand up.

Before Martin [Dr. King] came here, we didn't question anything. If you wanted to ride the bus, you knew your place. You went and you sat in it. Martin accomplished what he did because he was nonviolent. He said you love your enemies. We didn't have anybody fighting or retaliating.

Shauntice Allen, 18: If it weren't for what you all have done, I probably wouldn't be going to Robert E. Lee High School, a majority white school, right now, getting the education I am getting, and we all wouldn't be sitting here together.

But we still have a long way to go. You still see some of that tension between people. In the lunchroom, you have your black kids who sit at one table and your whites at another.

Alice Speights, 18: I know kids, both black and white, whose parents would shoot their boyfriend or girlfriend if they were not of the same race. I know kids who hang around each other but don't date because of their parents.

Shauntice

Alice

Kanika

Jennifer

William

Stanley

Kanika Walcott, 18: My great aunt told me that when my mom was about 5 years old, she got on the bus and ran and sat down in a front seat, and the bus driver reprimanded her, told her to get to the back. And my great aunt said to her, "This is how it is. Don't ask any questions. Don't say anything. Just go to the back." I think about that story, about all the things that went on. And I think, "I never could have done that."

Jennifer Griffin, 18: Me and Kanika have been in school together since elementary school. We cheered together through junior high. And if the school was just being integrated, and I saw Kanika get beaten or something because of her color, I would die. I could not stand to see it. I would try to help her.

William Bair, 18: We are living now, after all this has occurred. Yeah, we'd stick up for our black friends. But back then it was ingrained in the white people's heads that black people were inferior. You wouldn't help them. No matter how much you liked them, you just didn't do that.

Stanley Robinson, 18: I didn't experience racism until just before 10th grade, and this girl said, "Look here, nigger, you..." It just put me into a rage. I didn't expect it. And nothing could calm me down. But the thing that upset me the most is that the teacher acted toward me as if I was wrong.

Mr. Nesbitt: Was it a white or a black teacher?

Stanley: It was a black man.

Mr. Nesbitt: He was scared for his job—even in 1993.

William: It all starts in the home. This girl may have been brought up learning that there should not be equality between whites and blacks.

Stanley: True enough. But by the time you get into ninth grade, you can tell the difference between right and wrong. You need to take responsibility for your decisions.

Jennifer: It goes both ways. I've been to fast-food restaurants where the workers are black, and a lot of them have problems serving white people. I was behind a black lady, and they were like, "How many packs of ketchup would you like?" And when I got there, they didn't even say "Thank you," and they were really rude.

William: I think we should forgive those that have offended us in the past, put those things behind us. Let's try to get along.

Stanley: I have no problem forgiving George Wallace [former governor of Alabama]. His day is over. But when people are doing it to you today, it's hard to forgive. We're only human.

Shauntice: It all starts with education. But in some of the classes I'm in, I have to work 110 percent harder than a white kid does. Take physics. There are about five black kids in that class, and we have to really work hard in there to...

Kanika: Sometimes when you come into a class like that, teachers expect you to fail. So you have to do just that much more to prove yourself.

Jennifer: I don't think black students are given the same encouragement as white students—told, "Hey, you can go to this college. I think you can be a great scientist some day. Let's push you, let's get you in the higher classes in physics, anatomy and all that stuff."

Kanika: Ninety-nine percent of my teachers at Lee have been white, and they've all been encouraging to me: "Oh, Kanika, you're doing such a good job." I am the student council president, and people encourage me.

Stanley: Teachers look at Kanika, Shauntice and me differently than they do people who are not so neatly dressed or who wear baggy clothes or put their pants on backward. There are people who will say that Kanika, Shauntice and me dress like white people.

Shauntice: I do a lot of speaking in my church and also a lot of talking at my job. And people—black and white—are always like: "Shauntice, you talk white and you act white." And I'm going, "What does that mean? What is 'acting black'?"

Kanika: Most of the people who say this to me are black: I'm a cheerleader, and there are only two black cheerleaders. And some people tell me that I'm a sellout because I'm going to cheer with the white people. All this nonsense. And I "talk white" and I "dress white." Somebody had the nerve to tell me I wear silver jewelry because I want to be white.

Jennifer: There was this boy who used to go to our school. He was just known to hate black people. He'd wear rebel-flag shirts that said, "You wear your X [Malcolm], I'll wear my cross." And one time this white girl came in, and she was dressed in the big football team jacket and the baseball hat. And he goes, "Look at her. There's a wigger."

Some people say they're accused of "acting black" or "acting white." What does this mean?

Lynn Johnson

Robert D. Nesbitt Sr., 66, of Montgomery, Ala., spoke with a group of white and black teenagers about the tense early days of the civil rights struggle.

Mr. Nesbitt: I never heard that word before.

Jennifer: I turned around, "What is that?" And he said, "Oh, that girl is just trying to be a nigger." I've heard it many times since. It's supposed to be a white person acting like a black person.

Stanley: Well, what is "acting like a black person?"

Jennifer: I think it's because hip hop and the whole rap scene was brought on by black people. They have their own kind of dress, their own kind of slang. So if a white person does this, they're "acting like a black person"—they "want to be black."

Mr. Nesbitt: Change will depend on people like you. But we don't have enough of you.

In Step With ERNEST BORGNINE

BY JAMES BRADY

JOURNALISTS AREN'T supposed to admit such things, but I could sit and listen all day to Ernest Borgnine tell stories of old Hollywood.

Mr. Borgnine ("call me 'Ernie,'" he growled the moment I introduced myself) is an extraordinary actor who won the Academy Award as the year's finest actor for his 1955 film Marty, playing a simple Bronx butcher who falls in love. He's still working—these days on NBC's The Single Guy, a new sitcom starring Jonathan Silverman, which is scheduled in a Thursday-evening dream slot between Friends and Seinfeld. And, at the age of 78 and happily married to his fifth wife, he seems either blessed, or cursed, with almost total recall.

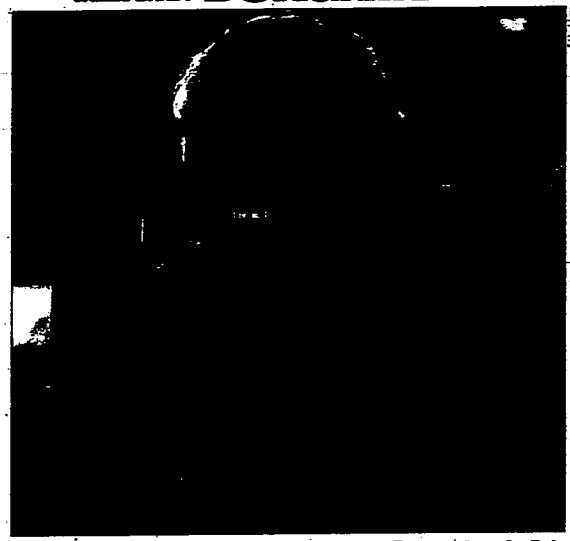
I knew that Ernie had spent 10 years in the Navy, and I wondered why he hadn't just become a 30-year man and retired on a pension? Why become an actor?

"I rose from seaman to chief gunner's mate serving on destroyers," he said, "and I got out in September of '41, and then came Pearl Harbor, and I was back in. After the war, I went home to Connecticut and got a taste of factory life. I saw these young old guys in the factory in New Haven, and I couldn't do it. I said, 'For 2 cents, I'd go back in the Navy.' But my mother said, 'You always like making a damn fool of yourself. Why don't you try acting?'

"So a pal and I went down to the Barter Theater in Virginia. He stayed one day, I stayed 5½ years. And I did everything—scenery, backstage, anything. Finally, they gave me a chance to get onstage, and the last 14 weeks I was there, I was in 14 plays. So I decided to try New York, and I starved along with everyone else, and then Brock Pemberton invited me to join Harvey on Broadway [playing a hospital attendant] opposite Joe E. Brown.

"After that, I got a break and made a movie, and a guy remembered me, and they put me in From Here to Eternity." Borgnine played the sadistic NCO "Fatso" Judson in a cast that included Burt Lancaster, Montgomery Clift and Frank Sinatra. How did they all get along?

"It wasn't a matter of getting along as much as my looking up in adoration," he said. "To me, they were all gods! And, you know, in that movie I 'killed' Sinatra [as Maggio]. I knew that, to make it, I had to be the meanest SOB around, or else I'd be selling children's clothes in Pittsburgh. And it worked. To this day, we write—Sinatra and I. He signs 'Maggio,' and I write 'Fatso.'"



Eddie Adams

Ernie Borgnine—back on the take (in, not McHale's Navy)—talks about his Oscar, his values and his "old shipmates."

Ernie got the plum role of Marty by a fluke. Rod Steiger had created the part on TV, but when the film version started, Steiger was busy making Oklahoma! In came Ernie. "People said, 'But he plays gangsters and tough guys,'" Borgnine recalled. "But someone said, 'Dop't kid yourself. He can play that role.'"

To everyone's surprise, Ernie was one of the Oscar nominees as Best Actor. "Do you remember the others?" I said. "Jimmy Cagney," he began, "Sinatra, James Dean and Spencer Tracy. And here I was in a little 92-minute black-and-white film, and when they called my name and I got up there, I stammered and stammered and cried a little, and thanked my mother and father. Later, there was a big party at the Beverly Hills Hotel, and I went down to the gentlemen's room, and I heard two guys discussing me. 'Yeah,' one said, 'but what else can he do?'"

Brady's Bits

Some fans think of Borgnine in McHale's Navy or The Dirty Dozen. I think of such films as The Wild Bunch, or Bad Day at Black Rock with Spencer Tracy. "I never met Tracy until we did that scene on the hill where I keep running into his jeep, trying to shove him off the road," Ernie recalled. "And Walter Brennan came over and said, 'D'ya mind if I watch this scene?' I got nervous. All I could see was two Academy Awards coming at me. But when it was over, Tracy said to me, 'I like the way you work, boy.'" Ernie lives in Beverly Hills with his wife, Tova, who owns a cosmetics firm. "We get along great," he said. But why did he get married so often? "Well," he said, "I never got married to get divorced—not even to that woman I was married to for 22 days." I knew "that woman" was Ethel Merman, and I said, "But she was a great singer." Ernie agreed but then added, "She sure sang the wrong song to me." He still keeps in touch with some Navy shipmates. "I served on an old destroyer, the USS Lamberton," he said, spelling it out, "and if any of them read this, tell them I'd love to hear from old shipmates." Consider it done, Ernie.

Ask Marilyn

A wife picks up her husband after work at a certain hour every day. (It takes the same amount of time to drive there as it does to drive back.) One day, the husband gets off work an hour early, so he starts walking. His wife leaves at her usual time and finds him along the way. They arrive back home 30 minutes earlier than usual. How long did the husband walk?
—E.P. Winston, Lufkin, Tex.

As they returned home 30 minutes earlier than usual, the wife saved that much travel time—15 minutes on the pickup trip and 15 minutes on the return trip. This means that she must have found her husband 15 minutes before the usual pickup time. And as he got off work an hour early, he must have been walking for 45 minutes already.

Her husband got off work early—and it created a problem.

I read that you're a very organized person—"at least mentally" was how you put it. I would like to be better organized. What do you think would be the most important item to buy in order to get started?
—Jo Ellen Fuge, Knoxville, Tenn.

A big wastebasket. The more stuff you put in it, the better organized you will be. I've found the same to be true mentally. Most of the stuff we hear is just audible junk mail.
