Frost around the falls

MIKE GALSBUURY/The Times-News

Chilly temperatures bring about the return of a frosty scene at Shoshone Falls Park, above, where an abundance of water in the Snake River provided a spectacular view on Tuesday. After viewing the falls, Twin Falls resident Fred Moran, left, does some sled-less sliding on a trail at the local park.

Forbes wins in Arizona

The Associated Press

Flat-tax champion Steve Forbes captured Arizona's winner-take-all primary Tuesday, shocking Pat Buchanan and Bob Dole to seize an improbable lead in the turbulent Republican presidential race.

Dole took some solace in winning North and South Dakota. "It's a wide open race," said Forbes as the campaign headed South to Carolina for a Saturday primary.

Forbes' Arizona win came three days after his victory in Delaware, giving him a dramatic turnaround after weak fourth-place showings in Iowa and New Hampshire. "A week ago they wrote our obituary," an ecstatic Forbes told cheering supporters in Phoenix. "Now, tonight we can perhaps write the obituary of conventional political punditry in America."

A majority of voters in Arizona cited taxes as their top concern, and Forbes, who spent more than $4 million on TV ads in the state, won much of their support. In the Dakotas the deficit mattered most, followed by taxes and jobs.

With nearly half of Arizona's vote tallied, Forbes was leading with 35 percent. Dole and Buchanan were battling for second and by slightly more than a quarter of the vote each.

In South Dakota, with all precincts counted, Dole had 45 percent of the vote, Buchanan 29 percent, Forbes 13 and Alexander 9.

With 98 percent of North Dakota precincts counted, Dole had 42 percent of the vote, Forbes 20 percent and Buchanan 18 percent. Alexander was fifth with 6 percent, trailing Sen. Phil Gramm, who dropped out of the race two weeks ago but

Lawmakers hear farmers split on comp

By Karen Tokkinen
 Times-News writer

BOISE — Debate over worker's compensation insurance has done more than pit farmworker against farmer — it has divided farmers as well.

As a House committee held the first of two public hearings on requiring farmers and ranchers to buy worker's compensation for their employees, farmers from Rupert and Jerome on opposite sides made their pitches in an attempt to sway legislation.

"I have a serious financial stake in what happens," said Rupert beet and potato grower Duane Grant. "Should I go broke slowly or take the small risk of the Tracy accident happening on my place?"

He referred to a Malta accident on Tracy Farms that dismembered a worker, Javier Telez Juarez, who is now in a Salt Lake City hospital. He was not covered by worker's compensation insurance and is now the center of debate over the issue.

But Jerome dairyman Greg Ledbetter, who spends at least $30,000 a year on worker's compensation for 20 employees, said he supports the proposal.

"If it was a perfect world we wouldn't need mandatory worker's comp," he said. "But it's not a perfect world."

His wife, Jane Ledbetter, who did not testify, said in an interview that she and her husband showed up at the hearing to demonstrate that not all farmers oppose mandatory worker's compensation insurance.

Legislators disagree - B3

She was unsympathetic to the cost concerns voiced by some farmers.

"If they can't afford it, they shouldn't be in the business," she said.

At issue is what is commonly called "the governor's bill" — legislation that would remove the agricultural exemption from otherwise mandatory worker's compensation coverage. The measure, pushed by Gov. Phil Batt, passed the Senate on Feb. 9 with a wide margin of support.

It has drawn opposition or doubts from many farmers and farm groups, who question farmers' abilities to stay in business or offer employee health insurance with the added cost of worker's compensation insurance. It's supposed to be a win-win.

Architect pitches new jail for Jerome

By Rob Lundgren
 Times-News correspondent

JEROME — A Kansas architect told commissioners Monday the county could have a 200 bed "podular" jail in 12 to 14 months and get help in securing financing to pay for the $5 million project.

Demand is so high statewide for jail space, Sheriff George W. Silver III says he could fill a 200 bed facility as soon as it opens.

Crowding in Jerome's jail and the high costs of transporting and housing prisoners in other counties have forced Silver to approach the commissioners about expanding existing facilities, or building a new, larger jail to handle expected increases in prisoners.

James Lichty, of Archetype Design Group, showed the commissioners numerous layouts of prefabricated jails built in Louisiana, shipped in "pods" and erected on-site by local contractors.

The self-contained units can be arranged in various patterns and sizes. They vary in price from just under $2 million for a 32 bed facility, to the $5 million, 200 bed facility or larger.

An apparent advantage of the pod design is that additional rooms can be added at any time, allowing an entity with limited financing options the ability to grow as demand increases.

Lichty said the pods come complete with all the required amenities. The company can offer a design-build program, or lease-purchase option. And for 1 to 2 percent of the total project cost, private financing can be secured.

A 200 bed facility can be staffed with as few as 18 people, Lichty said. Jerome's 34 bed facility requires a staff of 13.

Silver said the county pays an average of $45 per day to house adult prisoners elsewhere, and as high as $125 for juveniles.

If 125 adult beds are rented, full-time, at $45 per day, and 25 juvenile beds at $125, the county could take in more than $3 million each year.

Though the prospect that handling Jerome's crowded conditions could turn into a money-making venture for the county, Commissioner John Toolson is not convinced the county should over-build.

"I have a real concern with the rent-a-jail concept," he said in an earlier interview.

The commissioners discussed visiting a jail site, but did not specify where or when.

In other business, commissioners removed a recent ordinance establishing an airport runway zone surrounding the Jerome airport. The original ordinance was passed by previous commissioners who mistook aviation elevations for zoning lines.

Caesar, pope leap to head off calendar chaos

Fort Lauderdale Sun-Sentinel

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — Talk about leap years.

In '46 B.C., Julius Caesar added 90 days to the calendar. In 1572, Pope Gregory XIII ordered that 10 days in October be skipped.

Things should be a little smoother this year.

Thursday is leap day, a day added to every fourth February to make sure the calendar year stays in sync with the Earth's movement around the sun. Without leap days, the seasons would slowly shift until the Fourth of July would be a winter celebration.

Leap days were once the stuff of religious edicts and political intrigue.

According to tradition, leap day was the day when women could propose to men. If a man turned down the proposal, he had to pay a fee to the woman.

Pope Gregory's system for leap years removed much of the strife, and these days, things tend to take care of themselves.

Collier Smith, a spokesman at the National Institute of Standards, said he knows of no government agency that enforces leap year.

"It's more or less universally agreed on," Smith said. "It's kind of like asking someone what's the day that comes after Monday. Everyone knows it's Tuesday. But who says it's Tuesday? No one passed a law making it Tuesday."

The length of the solar year, the time it takes the Earth to make a complete revolution around the sun, has been known pretty accurately for more than 2,000 years — 365.242199 days.

A 365-day calendar year is pretty close. But it's off by about a quarter of a day a year. After four years, it's off a full day.

Without leap year, when the calendar said July 4, the heavens would say July 3. In time, say a couple of centuries, Independence Day would be celebrated in June, then May, then eventually in winter.

The Romans had a more serious leap-year problem. Their calendar had 12 months that added up to 355 days in a year. To make up for the lost days, the Romans were supposed to insert a leap month every other year.

But that's not always happen. Sometimes politicians would insert a month to extend their periods in office. Sometimes they didn't.

By the time Julius Caesar came along, things were a mess. Everything was happening at the wrong time of the year. Acting on the advice of an astronomer, Caesar dictated that the year would be 365 days, with an extra day added every fourth February.

To make up for previous errors, Caesar Please see LEAP/A2 was on North Dakota's mail-in ballots.

Tuesday's results put Forbes well ahead in the The Associated Press delegate count, with 60 so far. Buchanan had 37 and Dole 36, while Alexander had 10 delegates.

With 996 delegates needed for the nomination, the race has barely begun. Yet the roller-coaster week-to-week results and the success of the anti-establishment candidates sparked talk in Republican circles Tuesday of a contested convention. Buchanan could only be profoundly disappointed. After Louisiana and New Hampshire wins, he coveted Arizona to prove his national appeal, drew enthusiastic crowds throughout the final weekend and spoke openly of emerging as the clear front-runner.

Instead, he came away empty handed heading into Saturday's showdown in South Carolina.

Dole, on the other hand, carried North and South Dakota handily, and brushed aside his Sun Belt disappointment. "We're back in the winning column," the Senate majority leader said. "It feels good."

Dole predicted victory on Saturday, a critical contest if he is to assert himself and, in any event, the gateway to nine primaries next Tuesday, March 5. Before Tuesday's voting, Forbes was well back of Dole in South Carolina polling, while Buchanan had been inching up. Dole left no doubt he considered the more conservative Buchanan the biggest threat in the South.

Dole partisans suggested Alexander had a duty to make Dole's path a little clearer. "Lamar Alexander, I think, should put his plain shirt in mothballs," said Arizona Sen. John McCain.

Alexander scoffed at that, insisting his breakthrough would come soon, if not in South Carolina then the following Tuesday.

Leap

added 90 days to the year 46 B.C.

Caesars system worked well, but there was still a problem. The solar year actually being shorter than 365 1/4 days, the calendar, over time, started slipping again.

By the 1500s things were noticeably amiss. "I suppose a lot of people said, 'Who cares?'" said David Lindberg, a professor of the history of science at the University of Wisconsin. "The agricultural and religious events were the big problem."

Missing the start of the growing season by a week or more could be disastrous for an agrarian society.

In 1572, to bring things back in line, Pope Gregory XIII skipped 10 days in October. The Gregorian calendar called for a leap day to be added every fourth year.

And to make up for the problem Caesars had, Gregory called for centennial years, such as 1700, 1800, 1900, not to be leap years. Only the centennial years divisible by 400 are leap years. That means 2000 will be a leap year, but 2100 won't.

The system is good, but still not perfect. It still will lose about three days every 10,000 years. But since it's been around less than 500 years, we're in pretty good shape.

Ohio Valley bakes, storms hit Plains and snow rolls into West

The Associated Press

Thunderstorms rolled across the southern Plains Tuesday and temperatures rose to record highs across the Ohio Valley.

At the other extreme, snow and cold air blew across the northern Plains.

The thunderstorms, some severe, developed during the morning and early afternoon over the southern Plains and began sliding through the lower Mississippi Valley.

Hail up to 2 inches wide was reported during one storm near Commerce, Texas, and wind gusted up to 60 mph during storms in parts of Oklahoma and Arkansas.

Severe thunderstorm warnings were posted for parts of the day in southeastern Oklahoma and northeastern Texas.

In the West, rain spread into California and Oregon, with locally heavy snowfall possible in mountain areas.

In the San Francisco Bay area, snow was reported at elevations as low as 500 feet in the hills around Watsonville. Up to 4 inches of snow made some hilly roads impassable around parts of the Napa Valley. Cool air also extended into southern California, where downtown Los Angeles had a low of just 40 degrees.

There was also a chance of snow showers from Nevada into the central and southern Rockies.

The stormy weather developed along a cold front that curved across the middle of the nation. Just ahead as the front moved toward the southeast, temperatures rose to record highs in the 60s and 70s in the Ohio Valley.

The record highs for Feb. 27 included 63 at Akron, Ohio; 75 at Jackson, Ky.; 77 at Evansville, Ind.; 73 at Indianapolis; 68 at Dayton, Ohio; and 70 at Lexington, Ky. Columbus, Ohio, warmed to 68, topping a record of 65 that had stood since 1896.

Showers also moved across parts of the Ohio Valley, extending along a line ahead of the cold front and into parts of Pennsylvania and western New York state.

In the heart of the cold air mass, afternoon temperatures were only in the single digits across parts of the northern Plains.

Democrats vow to block long Whitewater probe

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Democrats moved Tuesday to block Republican plans for an indefinite extension of Senate Whitewater hearings.

vowing to block any plans for hearings stretching beyond April 3.

"Democrats will not allow Republicans to undermine the Senate's credibility by conducting an open-ended, taxpayer-funded witch hunt" aimed at embarrassing President Clinton, Minority Leader Thomas A. Daschle, D-S.D., told a news conference as the Senate prepared for debate over extending the authority for committee operations.

ported by worker advocates and some farmers who say it protects workers from wage loss and farm-to-farm lawsuits in case of on-the-job injuries.

Grant said he may have to lay off employees and remove a monthly $150 bonus he gives workers to buy health insurance, if he is forced to buy the insurance. Worker's compensation for four employees and as many as 100 seasonal workers would cost him at least an extra $20,000 a year.

He said the drawbacks of the proposal far outweigh the benefits.

"Where I have mandated employees I have to look at places to cut," he said. "I believe it's ironic that the very people this bill is designed to help will in fact be penalized."

He plans to be better protected than Tracy Farms in case of accident, he said. Bolstering his liability policy is cheaper than buying worker's compensation for his employees — only $730 more a year for each $1 million he adds. He carries a $2 million policy right now, and plans to raise that to between $3 million and $5 million.

"The Tracy's erred because they only carried a $300,000 liability policy," he said.

But Jane Ledbetter, who runs the C Bar M Dairy in Jerome with her husband, said they have always insisted on worker's compensation along with health insurance.

"It's the right thing to do," she said.

She was accompanied by herdsman Michelle Cox, who was attacked by a dehorned Holstein bull four years ago as she worked in his pen.

Cox told lawmakers how the bull charged her and rammed her against the stanchions, breaking her ribs and collarbone and puncturing her lung.

Because the single mother of three was covered by worker's compensation insurance on the Ledbetters' dairy, all of her medical and physical-therapy costs were covered. As well, she received 66 percent of her wages until she was able to return to work.

Lawmakers will conduct a final hearing Thursday when they will also vote on the bill.

Despite some speculation that the bill lacked support to get out of committee, at least three committee members believe that it will.

"I think something like this should never be held in committee," said Rep. Kathleen Gurnsey, R-Boise. Amendments are possible in the future, she said, but for now the governor's bill will reach the House floor unchanged.

Rep. John Alexander, D-Pocatello, also was confident of the bill's chances.

"I really don't believe that the committee will delay it," he said. "I think people feel that it's time."

And Rep. Ralph Gines, R-Boise, said he was "90 percent" likely to vote for the bill as it is on the House floor.

"I don't think anyone will tamper with that bill," he said.

1st daughter turns 16 without new car

WASHINGTON — Turning "sweet 16" in the White House, Chelsea Clinton was given three cars for her birthday Tuesday. But her parents turned them down faster than you can say, "Please, Mom. Pubheceeeze!"

Two radio stations called the White House with offers to ship the First Daughter cars, now that she's old enough to drive. A third, WOFX in Cincinnati, bought a 1978 Oldsmobile Riviera for $1,000 and sent its afternoon deejay on an overnight ride to Washington.

Chelsea, whose privacy is guarded closely, planned a quiet celebration with her family Tuesday night and a louder one with her pals later this week. The birthday was bittersweet for President and Mrs. Clinton, who watched their only child pass another milestone.

What did Mom and Dad give Chelsea for her birthday? The White House wasn't saying.

Counterfeit dollars on rise overseas

WASHINGTON — They've got Ben Franklin on the front and Independence Hall on the back, but more and more $100 bills aren't made in the USA.

A report released Tuesday said counterfeiting of U.S. dollars is on the rise overseas, but the General Accounting Office said it's "impossible to determine" the scope of the problem.

In the 1994 fiscal year, an estimated $208.7 million of counterfeit currency was in circulation, a tiny fraction of the $380 billion of U.S. currency in circulation, according to the GAO report.

Based on that imperfect estimate, the Treasury Department and Federal Reserve Board said counterfeiting so far doesn't pose a threat to the nation's economy.

Study: Implants linked to disease risk

CHICAGO — The biggest study to date on the health effects of breast implants indicates they may slightly increase the risk of connective-tissue diseases such as rheumatoid arthritis.

Opponents and defenders of implants immediately said the findings support their views. But the authors of the study cautioned against making too much of the conclusions and said more research is needed.

The study of nearly 400,000 female health professionals found that women with implants were 24 percent more likely to report a connective-tissue disease than women without implants.

Women without implants got connective-tissue diseases at a rate of 1.14 per 1,000 a year; for women with implants, the rate was 1.41.

Satellite has unexplained problems

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — The plot thickened Tuesday: NASA managed to communicate with the escaped satellite-on-a-cord and discovered it had a dead computer and an empty gas tank.

"There has been an event on the satellite that we do not understand yet," Mission Control told the astronauts aboard space shuttle Columbia.

NASA officials said they were uncertain whether the satellite problems were connected to Sunday night's break in the 12-mile cord.

All data indicated the satellite was fine when it broke loose from Columbia and for at least 30 minutes afterward. Stray voltage or circuitry trouble may have caused the satellite systems to malfunction, NASA said.

"It's a very interesting puzzle," said NASA's Anthony Lavioie, chief engineer for the satellite. Compiled from wire reports

Retail sales fall lowest in 6 months

WASHINGTON (AP) — Terrible weather and tight wallets added a further burden to an already weak economy with retail sales falling 0.3 percent in January, the worst performance in six months.

While the retail sales report Tuesday sparked Republican talk of a Clinton recession, private economists took heart that the sales decline wasn't even bigger. They also noted a second report showing consumer confidence making a comeback in February.

Wall Street's jitters Tuesday came despite a report on wholesale price pressures that showed only a 0.3 percent rise in January, a substantial moderation after December's 0.6 percent increase.

Analysis said Wednesday's report on prices at the retail level should show similar moderation with the Consumer Price Index rising by about 0.3 percent, the same as the producer price index.

Perot spends days on fledgling party while others run business

DALLAS (AP) — Ross Perot could afford to spend his days sitting poolside but the feisty boss with a military-style flair isn't one to lounge around.

When the 65-year-old billionaire stepped down from day-to-day management of his businesses four years ago, he threw himself into an unsuccessful attempt to become president. He's been on a political trail ever since.

The effort has gone through various incarnations of an independent third party: Perot Petitions, Perot '92, United We Stand America, and now, the developing Reform Party.

While the Republican presidential candidates scrap and grapple with one another for the right to take on President Clinton, Perot is steadily "working night and day" to get his new party certified for November balloting across the country.

Always, he insists the effort is not designed to launch a new Perot candidacy. Almost never does he flatterly tout becoming its standard-bearer.

"My job is helping create that party," Perot said during a recent swing through Iowa. "I'm not talking about a Ross Perot candidacy. We're talking about creating a new party for the American people."

The effort has not been without its bumps along the way. The certification that has finished in some states and ended up in court in places. There are warring factions within United We Stand and growing pains in the Reform effort. "It's not a pretty process," Russell Verney, the independent party's national coordinator said recently.

Though Perot is the irrepresible crusader, traveling the United States to promote the new party, and lending his voice to a separate effort to push the country toward campaign finance reform.

His influence looms over the GOP presidential race, as candidates scramble to attract "Perot voters" and hopefuls Pat Buchanan, Steve Forbes and Lamar Alexander try to style themselves as this year's version of the outsider. Perot, who got 19 percent of the 1992 presidential vote, hopes to turn the phenomenon to his advantage, using it to re-energize his base, according to those familiar with his thinking.

So far, his voters from 1992 have been dividing their allegiances in the GOP primaries. In New Hampshire, for example, 32 percent of Perot's voters supported Buchanan, 22 percent went for Alexander, and 20 percent went for Forbes.

This year's Reform Party effort won't kick into full gear until the Republicans and Democrats have nominated their candidates at the August conventions. Then, sometime around Labor Day, the Reform Party will hold its own convention, bringing in supporters from around the country via satellite, computer or telephone.

Sharon Holman, a spokeswoman for Perot, says he can afford to spend his time on politics because others spend time on his business.

"Some decisions he'll make on a daily basis, but 90 percent of his time is spent on United We Stand," Ms. Holman said.

Many of the people who run the various Perot enterprises have been on his payroll for decades. Ms. Holman, herself, first started work for Perot in 1969 as a secretary and says she's never worked for any other company.

Buchanan cashes in on early primaries

WASHINGTON (AP) — Once a pauper in the GOP's big-money chase, Pat Buchanan is cashing in on his strong early primary showings.

He's averaging $100,000 a day in contributions, more than double his pace in January.

It's a flood of money for a campaign that has finished 1995 with the smallest treasury among the five top Republican presidential contenders.

It also gives him added staying power in the crowded field.

"Grassroots are green and getting greener," Buchanan boasted Tuesday in an interview with The Associated Press in Mesa, Ariz.

His sister and campaign manager, Bay Buchanan, said the campaign expected to raise $2 million this month, more than double the $893,000 it raised in January. "I think it's going to keep up for awhile," she said.

There is a clear link between Buchanan's new fund-raising success and his stunning victory in the New Hampshire primary earlier this month — along with his second-place finish in the Iowa caucus and a pair of straw poll victories before that.

Buchanan aides said they raised $1 million in the past 10 days alone.

The former commentator raised well $7.2 million in all of 1995, well behind Bob Dole, Lamar Alexander and Phil Gramm, who recently left the race. Millionaire publisher Steve Forbes is paying for his own campaign, spending more than $20 million so far out of his fortune.

Alexander, whose fund raising lagged in January, is also seeing a surge in money after consecutive third-place showings in Iowa and New Hampshire.

The former Tennessee governor said that his campaign received more than $220,000 on Monday and that he has collected more than $100,000 in eight of the past 10 days. "We are doing very, very well," he said.

For presidential candidates, there's no fund-raising energizer quite like strong finishes in the primaries.

"When you get people who break from the pack and begin to establish themselves as possible nominees, this is what you see happening," said Herbert Alexander, a campaign-finance expert at the University of Southern California.

Both Lamar Alexander and Buchanan need the money.

During the next week, 10 states are holding primaries with 259 delegates at stake. An additional 102 delegates are up for grabs in New York's primary March 7, and then the Super Tuesday contests on March 12 will feature 374 more delegates.

And none of those states allow for inexpensive, retail politicking like Iowa and New Hampshire. The big ticket item for the campaigns now is television and radio advertising that can reach lots of voters quickly. Though his fund raising has quickened, Buchanan conceded "we don't have the money of the others" and that could be a crucial factor in the upcoming primaries.

Twin Falls' young need not be doomed to low-pay jobs

America's young people live under a barrage of cynicism about their career prospects. (The Gen X-er's motto: "You want fries with that?")

But it's not necessarily so. The 21st century will bring well-paid, rewarding jobs to those who have the right skills — and who live in wisely led communities.

The Twin Falls City Council appears to understand the importance of attracting those jobs. Last week, the council adopted as one of its goals for 1996 the recruitment of a mid-size manufacturer. By "midsize," the council means as many as 200 employees.

Growth is a dirty word for some people. But the truth is, new jobs and new population will come to the Magic Valley whether or not community leaders recruit them. Twin Falls is becoming a regional retail center, and the trend is likely to continue. We're also seeing growth in government jobs.

But growth in manufacturing jobs is fairly stagnant. Alas, retail and government jobs are the fizzle on the pop. Though espresso bars and brew pubs may enhance a community's ambience, they can't sustain an economy.

Manufacturing jobs, which create commodities with intrinsic value, and which bring fresh money into a community, are the engines of real prosperity. There are also the kind of jobs being sought by nearly every community. Twin Falls won't get them without some effort.

Last week's goal-setting sessions coincided with a one-year anniversary celebration for Seastrom Manufacturing Co. The hardware maker, which moved here to escape California's economic and social quicksand, employs 98 people and has annual sales estimated at $9 million. Landing Seastrom was the high point of Twin Falls' economic-development efforts to date.

Company executives say the move has been successful for them. It also has been good for Twin Falls. Seastrom's well-paid workers share their prosperity with those who sell them cars, homes, sofas and hamburgers. As a bonus, a number of people affiliated with the company have assumed leadership of civic projects.

One rule of thumb is that a productive factory employee generates $100,000 in revenue. The worker earns some of that money as wages; the company's vendors, shareholders and the government share the rest. All of it gets recirculated through the economy. This money isn't just good. It's yeast.

Just a few days after declaring its recruiting goal, the City Council reportedly met with representatives of an unnamed, high-tech company. Apparently, last week's statement of a goal was not idle talk.

In our view, the council is on the right track. We offer a couple of caveats: Take care (as the city has done in the past) not to recruit companies with histories of environmental or labor troubles. And don't be too picky about that 200-employee ceiling. If a larger company comes calling, the city shouldn't chase it away. But mostly, focus on those manufacturing jobs — the ones paying $8-$12 an hour or higher. The more of those we can attract, the better.

Classics relevant to conscience of America, moral education

What is it that America expects students to be able to do when they graduate from high school? As an English teacher, my answer, of course, would be to be able to read, write and think. We also want them to be able to compete in a world of the 21st century, with technology and the new ideas that go with it and to be able to handle each and every situation that arises in their lives and on the job.

But in America today, there is another issue that is even more important: America's conscience.

The reason I am concerned about the new study that came out last week about the teachers who see no purpose in reading about Shakespeare and Dickens and Steinbeck. They see that society's problems will be corrected by the students of today learning about technology and the world today. They see no relevance to the past.

Many people wonder why we study the classics in school today. After all, they argue, they were written many, many years ago. And we must teach the kids practical things, so they can get good jobs and earn lots of money and buy computers and boats and cars to keep the society going. ... Certainly the economic side of America is important, but as we look around, we see a country that is struggling to hold its moral web together. Gangs, drugs, promiscuity all ravage our cities and even Idaho's rural communities. What has been lost? I think that America has lost its conscience. The vision of America has not been transferred from generation to generation.

Reader comment

In the last 50 years, America has become a technological arena, with videos and CD-ROMs and satellites that go with it, but we have lost that which made America a great nation: a moral responsibility, a sense of right and wrong. This is not just something that has occurred in our youth but rather spans all of society.

The conscience may be buried, but we need to teach it to our children. One of the most important ways we teach about our conscience is through reading. It is in all of the great works of literature, and that's why we read them. Shakespeare, Dickens, Steinbeck, Fitzgerald and some modern ones like Amy Tan and Ethan Canin. They are there for the wanting, waiting to be read, waiting to be thought about, waiting to be discussed and waiting to be learned. America's future lies in our children. Thucydides said, "What is honored in a country will be cultivated there."

As our conscience withers, so will the nation.

It is imperative to honor the conscience of America to remain a great nation and continue to develop economically and technologically and to solve the problems which the 21st century will bring. We need to remember our roots and the ideas which lie behind them.

We can do that by introducing our children to the classics, the works that made America a great place to live, to learn and to prosper.

Gail Cushman teaches English at Gooding High School.

Sheriff has taxpayers in mind

Hoaray for Wayne Tousley!
It appears that, for once, an elected official is thinking of saving the taxpayers' money and serving the public.

The military is offering local law enforcement units a free helicopter (and maybe a couple of extras for spare parts for free).

Twin Falls Search and Rescue is a very important and much-used service for the county. A helicopter would be a godsend for rescuing people trapped or lost in our canyon lands, to say nothing of the time and money that could be saved locating fugitives hiding in cornfields!

Another bonus: There is a pilot available and already employed by the sheriff's department.

PEGGY OLUND
Twin Falls

Rethink 'need' for helicopter

I wish to express my opinion regarding Twin Falls County procuring a military surplus helicopter. I am a commercial helicopter pilot with more than 10,000 hours of helicopter experience.

The sheriff has not shown a need for such an operation. He cites three instances all last year when he had to use a helicopter. I believe these calls were for a dedicated, advanced life-support helicopter, i.e., Life Flight. It is proposing to equip this helicopter to those standards when there are four helicopter air ambulance operations within one hour's flight time of Twin Falls County?

There are two fully qualified helicopter operators in the Magic Valley that are available for search and rescue work. Both have Federal Aviation Administration certified helicopters, support equipment and pilots for operations in this area.

For a helicopter to be effective in patrol it has to be in the air. One helicopter manned by one pilot cannot give the coverage to make patrol a viable use. As for high speed chases, if the helicopter is not in the air, the chase is generally over long before the helicopter can launch.

I have personally flown "Drug Detection" flights in the South Hills in a Forest Service-leased helicopter. Total number of plants found? Zero.

Does Twin Falls County expect to do work for adjoining agencies and be reimbursed for it to help spread the cost? If so, the new FAA rules governing this type of operation require that it must certify the helicopter and maintain it to the same standards as a civilian operator. This is a much more expensive proposition than to just use it "as is."

Also, Twin Falls County would have to get a commercial operator's certificate with all of the attendant training and record-keeping requirements. Do the taxpayers of this county want to own a helicopter that is not operated and maintained to the highest standards?

I would have to see the proposed budget to comment on the $50,000-a-year cost estimate, but I can say this: Helicopters are expensive, complex machines to own, operate and maintain. Every new operator I have seen seriously underestimates the operating costs and overestimates the market.

If the sheriff's department has a spare $50,000 to spend, how about budgeting a portion of it for search and rescue and using the rest to hire another deputy or giving raises to the good people he already has?

JIM REID

Who are nation's real 'extremists'?

So, the Republican "big tent" isn't so big after all. Economic conservatives will allow social conservatives in the tent so long as they don't take control of the circus. It is a version of the game some of these people—ones played with black. We'll let you be a cook or a caddy at our country clubs, but you can't play golf.

The verbal abuse now being heaped on Pat Buchanan is only partially about his position on issues (otherwise his detractors would debate him on the merits of his ideas instead of labeling him a radical extremist). Buchanan is being attacked by those whose primary concern is how much money they have in the bank, not how little virtue remains on deposit in our culture.

Just who are the real extremists in America? The ones who want to re-establish control such as right and wrong in our schools, or those who kicked out the Bible and put in the condoms and weapon detectors?

The ones whose curriculum produced well-educated young people, or those whose ideas have given us functional illiterates who can barely read their worthless high school diplomas? Which extreme is to be blamed for verbal and physical assaults on teachers?

Which extreme should be held accountable for family breakup? Those who opposed "no-fault" divorce, or those who supported it, along with prenuptial agreements and cohabitation?

Which extreme is responsible for the growing underclass? The poverty merchants whose idea of compassion is to raise taxes and redistribute your income, or those who see much (but not all) poverty resulting from bad lifestyle choices encouraged by popular culture?

Which extreme created cities whose streets are unsafe to navigate at night? Which extreme is responsible for a judicial system that has been transformed into a servant of opinion polls and social engineers?

Which is the more extreme family role model: Ozzie and Harriet or Beavis and Butt-head? Which extreme has been in charge of culture and academia for the past four decades? These are the questions the Republican establishment should be asking.

Former Nixon counsel Charles Colson believes the Republican Party is about to split, and that isn't necessarily bad. Interviewed last Sunday on my CNBC television program, Colson said, "Eventually (the split) is coming. The economic conservatives — the old main line Republican who is a social liberal — and the religious conservatives ... eventually those two will cancel each other out. If that wing (economic conservatives) gains ascendancy this year, the Religious Right will split off."

Colson believes the future belongs to religious conservatives: "There is an emerging majority in this country that recognizes the problem of crime is that we have taken away the moral restraints, and we have a generation without conscience and they're coming over the hills. In 1998 there will be 1 million more kids in the 14-17-year-old age group than there are today. These are the children of the baby boomers. Their violent crime rate has gone up 100 percent in the last eight years. So the economic conservatives who want to ignore the social issues — who say we don't care about values, keep out of politics — are missing the heart of what it's going to take to cure the malaise affecting this country."

Colson says Buchanan's critics are missing the power of his message. "Pat is speaking to the yearnings of the heartfelt needs of the American people and, yes, he could win the nomination."

Buchanan is wrong when he prescribes conservative government as the solution to economic pain and social conservatism in government. The reason many jobs have left the country has more to do with high taxes and over regulation than trade policy. His critique of culture, however, is dead right.

It's time to tell the economic conservatives who are social liberals that they can't win without the social conservatism.

The social conservatives, who also believe in economic conservatism, must now set the agenda.

If the conservative social liberals don't like it, they can demonstrate their intolerance by reuniting to their country clubs to reminisce over martinis about how good it was in the old days when they lost most elections.

Panel reneges on 1995 arts commitment

BOISE (AP) — Legislative budget writers reneged on a 1995 promise to the Idaho Commission on the Arts Tuesday, eliminating $40,000 in payroll savings that the commission was told it could put into grants to local arts organizations.

The Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee voted 10-9 against allowing the agency to keep money it had saved by not replacing the retired assistant director last year. The vote came after several members raised questions about the commission's operations without ever being specific.

Ucon said, "I don't know if there's anything wrong going on. There seems to be some question about the way the grants are offered."

But commission supporters, led by House Appropriations Chairman Kathleen Gurnsey, R-Boise, suggested that the attack on the agency was prompted by philosophical disagreement with others' perceptions of art...

"I think it's punitive, in my opinion, to come back this year and completely remove the director's salary and keep those dollars from going to the local councils," Gurnsey said.

"We constantly talk to state agencies about reducing their administration, and they were willing to do that," she said. "The local art councils are doing a wonderful job in our rural areas."

This year, the commission awarded more than $900,000 in grants to some 400 local arts organizations throughout Idaho.

Activists bring rendezvous to Idaho

GRANGEVILLE — After four years of protests in the Nez Perce National Forest, Earth First! is bringing its national rendezvous to Idaho.

A few dozen activists have generated hundreds of arrests by going to the forest every summer since 1992 to protest logging in the Cove-Mallard area. About 500 activists are expected to descend on Dixie and Grangeville in late June for the national rendezvous.

"It's going to be in Idaho, it's going to be at Cove-Mallard and it's going to be fun," said Gary Macfarlane, a volunteer with the Cove-Mallard Coalition. He admitted there is some "cultural hostility" which "could create some interesting interaction."

Earth First! last held a national rendezvous in Idaho in 1986, on the Challis National Forest. It selected the Cove-Mallard area for 1996 because "people see it as one of the most important Earth First! campaigns," said Craig Beneville, who works for the Earth First! Journal.

Chenoweth: Respond strongly to Cuba

BOISE — Conservative Republican Congressman Helen Chenoweth lined up Tuesday with other critics who claim President Clinton has not been strong enough in responding to Cuba's downing of two unarmed U.S. civilian planes off the island nation's coast.

The Idaho freshman, who has been at odds with the Democratic administration on nearly every issue, called the Cuban action an atrocity and suggested a military response, possibly an invasion, would have been more appropriate.

Attorney general's son faces charges

BOISE — Alan Lance Jr., 19, the son of Idaho Attorney General Alan Lance, faces misdemeanor drug paraphernalia and alcohol charges.

The younger Lance had a pretrial conference Monday and is to be tried July 19 on the paraphernalia charge. He is to be represented by a public defender, said Deputy Ada County Prosecutor Patrick Owen.

The charge stems from a Sept. 7 citation and carries a maximum penalty of a year in jail and a $1,000 fine. Lance Jr. also faces an April 15 trial on a charge of illegal possession of alcohol.

"He's an adult," the attorney general said. "He doesn't reside in my household. He's subject to the law just like any other citizen of the state of Idaho."

Timber faller cuts trees in no-cut zone

BOISE — Boise Forest officials say a timber faller accidentally cut 20 trees in a no-cut zone along a dry stream channel on the Thunderbolt salvage timber sale.

The minor violation of the timber sale contract occurred Feb. 12 and was immediately reported to the company and Forest Service officials.

The trees were in a riparian zone where no cutting is allowed. There was no damage to the streamcourse, no trees entered the stream channel and no damage occurred to the surrounding area, said Steve Patterson, Forest Service representative on the sale.

Test will help alleviate jail crowding

COEUR D'ALENE — A get-out-of-jail test for local persons arrested on busy weekends and holidays this summer will relieve pressure on the overcrowded Kootenai County jail.

The program was recommended for Kootenai County by retired 1st District Court Judge Watt Prather. County commissioners recruited Prather to study various short-term solutions to overcrowding at the jail.

People with ties to the community — a permanent address, a job and relatives — can be released immediately after booking if they score high enough on a scale designed by judges.

Traditionally, those unable to make bail remain in jail until Monday afternoon, when they can ask a judge to be released on their own recognizance.

Those who are drunk or under the influence cannot be released, no matter how high they score, Prather said.

Boise man killed in head-on collision

LAPWAI — A Boise man died in a head-on collision with a semi-tractor and trailer four miles south of Lapwai on U.S. Highway 95.

Chris Dawidczik, 19, was pronounced dead at the scene. He was traveling south when his small car crossed the center line and hit a northbound truck driven by Clyn Huffaker, 36, of Lewiston, said the Idaho State Police.

Habitual escapee gets 30-month prison term

BOISE — Thomas David Martin was sentenced to 30 months in prison after pleading guilty to a federal charge of escaping from the Mini-Cassia Detention Center in Burley last September.

Martin, 36, was captured in Cisco, Texas, on Dec. 1 after he and 27-year-old Lonnie Ray Wiseman of Pocatello were spotted in Arkansas. Wiseman was arrested without incident and remains in custody in Fayetteville, Ark., on state charges. But Martin fled on foot and stole a car before being arrested in Texas the next morning.

The 30-month sentence will be served after a 150-month term he already is serving.

He and Wiseman fled the Burley jail on Sept. 12. Although he was serving a federal sentence for trying to steal guns from a Twin Falls gun merchant who hobbled him with a gunshot to the leg, Martin was in the Cassia jail awaiting the trial of a Twin Falls inmate he had accused of a crime.

Before the Burley breakout, Martin had escaped from other jails and prisons five times.

TWIN FALLS — Avonmore West Inc. plans to invest $20 million in its cheese factories in Twin Falls and Gooding.

The company hopes to produce 45 million pounds of whey protein products per year for use in infant formula, clinical and sports nutrition foods, beverages, ice cream, soups, sauces and baked goods.

The company employs about 300 people in the Magic Valley at its two plants, according to a news release. The company's sales and production in Idaho have grown four-fold since it bought out Ward's Cheese of Richfield in 1990.

Murtaugh school burglary sends students home Tuesday

MURTAUGH — Students were sent home early Tuesday so investigators could examine the evidence in a burglary at the town's grade school building early Tuesday morning.

Missing is a compact-disc player and about $20 in cash, according to Murtaugh Elementary School head teacher Carrie Brooks, who discovered the burglary when she opened the building Tuesday morning.

"At first I didn't realize that the school had been broken into," said Brooks, who teaches first grade. She soon found several interior doors that had been damaged in the burglary, and notified the Twin Falls Sheriff's Department.

Security alarms had not been installed in the building. "But there will be now," said Murtaugh School Superintendent Mike Chesley.

Chesley figures that the or thieves broke a window to get into the school sometime after midnight. They pried open doors to classrooms and offices with a crowbar or similar tool, he said.

"There's a lot of damage to the doors—probably more than $1,000," Chesley said.

Jerome planners delay action on county land-use questions

JEROME — Land-use issues covered by the Jerome County Comprehensive Plan prompted the county planning and zoning commissioners to table action on the plan.

"We didn't feel we had the time to speak what we had before us," Commissioner Dan Suh said. "Most of it is great—99 percent of it—but there's a lot of stuff that needs fine-tuning."

He cited stubble-field and leaf-burning, green belts along canal banks and increased wetlands as some of the issues that need further discussion.

The planning and zoning commission will hold a work session to discuss the plan at 7:30 p.m. March 11 in the courthouse.

Planning Administrator Art Brown said this morning will be open to the public, but no comments will be accepted.

In other business, planning commissioner tabled a request for a permit by Darrell Fairbank of Eden to extend the runway of the private airport until right of way litigation between the Hillside Highway District and Fairbank is resolved.

Twin Falls cable system for sale

US West buys Continental Cablevision, but can't keep it all

By Steve Crump
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The phone company is about to become the cable company too, but not for long.

US West on Tuesday announced acquisition of Continental Cablevision, the multi-state cable giant that serves about 16,600 households in the Magic Valley and eastern Idaho.

Soon, it will turn around and sell Continental's local operations.

"Under current law, we're prohibited from operating cable systems within our (service) territory," US West Media Group spokesman Dick McKnight said Tuesday in a telephone interview from the company's Englewood, Colo., headquarters. "So we'll either swap it or sell it."

"We really have mixed emotions about it," said Jeremy Stern, vice president and corporate legal officer for Continental Cablevision. "We've never had to sell a cable system before."

The divestiture, which is required by federal anti-trust law, will happen sometime after the end of 1996, Stern said, when the US West-Continental deal is scheduled to be completed. In the meantime, US West will seek a temporary waiver from federal regulators to continue Continental

About Continental

Based in Boston, Continental Cablevision has 4.2 million subscribers with most of them concentrated in five large markets — New England, California, Chicago, Florida and the Michigan-Ohio area.

Continental, which is privately owned, is the nation's third-largest cable company.

In Idaho, it serves about 16,600 households in the city of Twin Falls and in most of the rest of Twin Falls County, along with parts of Jerome, Gooding, Camas and Cassia counties, and American Falls and Aberdeen in eastern Idaho.

Cablevision operations in the Magic Valley.

Asked whether there would be rate increases or personnel changes in Continental's Idaho operations as a result of Tuesday's deal, Stern said, "I don't anticipate any significant changes."

About US West

US West is based in Englewood, Colo., and was one of the regional phone companies created in the breakup of AT&T's Bell System in 1981.

The company's communications division serves more than 25 million customers in 14 Midwestern and Western states, including about 68,000 in the Magic and Wood River valleys. Its media group has interest in cable TV systems both domestically and abroad.

Nor will the transaction affect service or rates for US West's telephone customers in the Magic and Wood River valleys.

The $10.8 billion sale, the first under a new federal telecommunications law that lets phone and cable companies combine more freely, is probably the just opening round of a scramble by industries to become one-stop providers of phone service, TV programming and other services.

Since US West already owns a 25 percent stake in a joint venture with Time Warner Inc. — the nation's second-biggest cable system — the takeover will give the phone company access to one of every three cable households in America.

"US West will have either direct or indirect ownership stakes in cable systems serving more than 50 percent of all cable customers and partial ownership of the lion's share of popular cable programs through the Time Warner-Turner deal," Gene Kimmelman, co-director of the Consumer Union's Washington office, told The Associated Press.

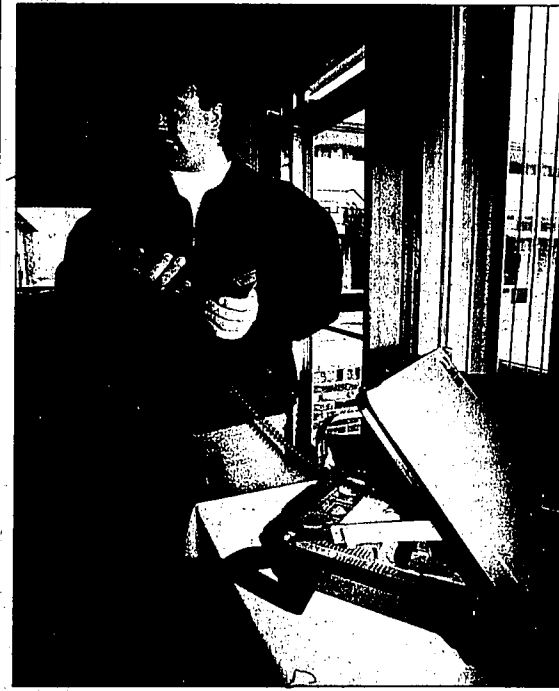

Announcement of the sale came just five months after Continental took over the Twin Falls King Videocable operation as part of its purchase of the Rhode Island-based Providence Journal cable systems.

"We've been very excited about the former Providence Journal properties, including Idaho," Stern said. "Unfortunately, in the current regulatory climate, our continued growth under US West requires that we divest it."

There are about 330,000 Continental Cablevision households in US West's service territory, most of them in Minnesota, according to McKnight.

The sale is subject to regulatory clearance and approval by Continental's owners.

Space-age communication

Justin Winsor explains the advantages of a satellite-based phone system on Tuesday in Twin Falls.

Satellite phones ring in era

By Liz Wright
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Satellite telephone sellers are hoping their space-age chat lines will strike the fancy of miners, ranchers and rural residents with cranking phone connections.

Unlike other telephones, these send calls by way of a satellite orbiting the Earth.

To talk over a satellite phone, simply dial the area code and number of the party you are calling, then press the "send" button on your satellite phone.

The message is beamed up 22,300 miles into the stratosphere to a satellite, then back to Earth to Reston, Va., where operators transfer the call to its destination — a ringing phone at the receiving end, said Jennifer Bartlett, account manager for the American Mobile Satellite Corporation, based in Reston, Va.

The speech is somewhat warped and slightly delayed, but it beats the alternative in rural Idaho — the constant risk of having telephone lines go down during a flood or windstorm, said Justin Winsor, who sells satellite phones for the Auto Phone Corporation in Twin Falls and Ketchum.

The system is also immune to lightning — unlike cellular phones.

American Red Cross rescuers borrowed satellite phones during the north Idaho floods earlier this month, a man living east of Mount Harrison

Talk about money

Satellite phones cost $1.18 per minute to use. Radio-style satellite communication costs $70 monthly for unlimited talk time. The hardware — phone, a modest satellite dish and antenna — costs up to $3,500 to purchase.

There are no additional charges: no long distance bills, no cellular service fees.

In Cassia County recently bought one for his isolated rural home; miners, medics, and search-and-rescue teams from Twin Falls and Richfield are interested in the phones, as are U.S. Forest Service firefighters and a Sun Valley outfitter, Winsor said.

Both Mitsubishi and Westinghouse offer telephones for SkyCell Satellite Telephone Service, a product of American Mobile Satellite Corporation, which is the only company offering satellite telecommunications in the United States, Winsor said.

The company offers three models; one is structured like a briefcase filled with electronic gadgets.

"We are so desert-oriented and there are people living way out there with no telephone service," Winsor said.

Wild Rose ranchers face grazing cutback

By William Brock
Times-News writer

OKALEY — They've been warned repeatedly, but now cattle ranchers in the Wild Rose Grazing Association will have to get their cows off of public land earlier than usual for the next two years.

Sawtooth National Forest Supervisor William LeVer ordered a 28-day reduction in grazing permits held by five Okaley-area ranchers. The penalty is for serious violations of terms and conditions in their federal grazing permits; the violations involved dozens of cattle in areas where they shouldn't have been, and water troughs that should have been working — but weren't.

Wild Rose ranchers could not be reached for comment Tuesday. Their permits entitle them to graze 1,849 cow-calf pairs on the forest's Goose Creek allotment in the South Hills, just north of the Nevada state line.

Violations history

Wild Rose ranchers committed serious permit violations in 1993, so forest officials effectively put them on probation for four years. The 1994 grazing season passed without major incident, but serious violations occurred in 1995.

A third year with serious violations could result in total cancellation of the Wild Rose permits; on average, three or four grazing permits are canceled every year in the Forest Service's Intermountain Region.

Rather than punishing the ranchers, LeVer said he wants to create incentives for them to improve future operations on public lands. To that end, he's offering two options that would soften the penalty in exchange

Police chief bemoans weakened graffiti law

By Karen Tolkinen
Times-News writer

BOISE — A change in an anti-graffiti bill will undermine efforts to stop graffiti in Idaho, said Twin Falls' police chief.

Chief Leland DeVore, who testified in support of the bill during Tuesday's hearing in the House Judiciary and Rules Committee, said a change from mandating judges to strip driver's licenses from graffiti offenders to giving judges that option would weaken the penalties against offenders.

"The more they water it down the less good it will do," he said.

The bill was sponsored by Rep.

Doug Jones, R-Filer, who said he was disappointed with the change. But the basic structure remains. If passed into law, the bill could remove driver's licenses from graffiti offenders for a year, or deny them from getting a license for a year.

Opponents said the bill was overly broad and unfair to those who had already paid for their crime.

Contrite mountain lion poachers get warning

By William Brock
Times-News writer

CAREY — Two men who chased a mountain lion with dogs after the hunting season was over — then killed the cat when it attacked their dogs — will not be cited or fined by state wildlife officials.

Instead, Tony Young has been warned for shooting a lion during a closed season, while Brian Brockette was warned for possessing a lion during a closed season, said Roger Olson, Hailey-based conservation officer with the Idaho Department of Fish and Game.

Pursuing the cat was legal, but killing it wasn't, Olson said.

"We decided this was a pretty odd, rare thing," Olson said. "They knew they'd done wrong when they killed that lion, but it was in the panic of the moment and they could not sit still and watch that lion kill their dogs."

Young said the incident was wholly unexpected.

"Nobody's even heard of this happening before," said Young, who lives in the Hailey area. "We had no intentions whatsoever to kill a cat; that day ... it was a split-second decision that I had to make."

Brockette could not be reached for comment.

Adversaries join forces to seek public land solutions

SPARKS, Nev. (AP) — Adversaries are joining forces across the West, away from congressional rhetoric and legal bickering, to find solutions to land and wildlife management concerns.

More than 400 environmentalists, biologists, government representatives and ranchers checked their skepticism at the door for Tuesday's opening of the Livestock-Big Game Symposium.

Their goal is to listen to each other's concerns and ideas and, in the process, to quell the animosity that has festered among them.

"Folks, it's time to share," said Herb Manig of the American Farm Bureau and chairman of the two-day conference.

Dan Daggett, an activist with the Sierra Club and author of "Beyond the Rangeland Conflict," said the battles being waged across the West over grazing, water and public lands and wildlife management will not be resolved through lawsuits or congressional successes, he said, have been won when groups come together outside the political process to make things happen.

"We have to demand results," he said. "We have to invite both sides to pup or shut up."

Mike Dembeck, acting director of the U.S. Bureau of Land Management, called the protection and management of natural resources a "white hat" business that involves everyone for the benefit of all.

"You tell me who's against better hunting, better fishing, higher water tables, increased wild game and livestock, environmentally benign energy and minerals operations, more songbirds, protecting our cultural heritage, good recreational opportunities — this is white hat business that we're in, and we've got to approach it from that direction," he said.

"You can call it holistic management, you can call it ecosystem management ... you can call it whatever you want" he continued. "But if people aren't working together on the land, we simply won't deliver."

U.S. Forest Service Chief Jack Ward Thomas said scientists, government agencies, environmentalists, recreationists and ranchers need to work together to end the strife and find land use solutions acceptable to all.

"We know we must look across the fence and rely on one another," Thomas said. "Collectively in this room we have the best talent around to resolve these issues at ground level."

"We are drowning in conflict. I am sick of it," he said. "The alternative is despair. I reject it."

The conference is a follow-up to the first one held here in 1991.

Many participants hailed the conference as a way to root an olive branch.

"If it didn't work, you couldn't even hold a conference like this," said Rita Suminski, a forest service biologist from Grants, N.M. "Things that are quietly going on in the backwaters are working."

Brian Tillemans, a rangeland-wildlife specialist with the Los Angeles Department of Water and Power in Bishop, Calif., said land is the biggest obstacle to finding land-use solutions.

The utility owns 310,000 acres and encounters the same kinds of land-use issues that are common on public lands, he said.

"People have to get away from the all-or-nothing mentality," Tillemans said. "They've got to seek middle ground."

Dan Crockett, of the Rocky Mountain Elk Foundation in Missoula, Mont., was optimistic about the conference goals.

"At the first conference there was a lot more animosity," he said, noting that since then, small groups have worked together successfully to improve wildlife habitat and rangelands.

"The human dimension of it can be pretty amazing."

Senate unanimously endorses land bill

BOISE (AP) — Legislation to spur cleanup and development of land contaminated by petroleum or other hazardous substances was unanimously approved on Tuesday by the Idaho Senate.

"It will go a long way toward improving the environment and the economy of Idaho," Sen. Gordon Crow, R-Hayden, said.

The legislation sets up a procedure under which developers can enter into an agreement with the state to voluntarily clean up a contaminated site and be protected from lawsuit by the state or liability as long as the cleanup plan is carried out. The developer would then qualify for a 50 percent property tax exemption on the value of the land — not any improvements — for the next seven years.

Called brownfield legislation, the bill was proposed by the bank, real estate and business lobbies and endorsed by the Idaho Conservation League.

The legislation assures that cleanup plans assure the long-term health protection for neighbors.

"It permits some really pro-active activity to make sure there is an attempt to avoid Superfund designation," Reed said. "This is good for that quasi-gray area where we need the increased economic activity."

Crow said there were at least 2,900 tracts of land throughout the state that have been contaminated by leaking underground fuel storage tanks that could finally be developed under the bill, and he said there are substantially more tracts contaminated by other substances.

"This will actually increase money to the general fund because of the increased economic activity," Crow said.

Carey residents may vote in May on disincorporation

By Barbara Neiwert
Times-News correspondent

What's next

If Blaine County commissioners approve the signatures on a petition, Carey residents will vote May 28 on whether to disincorporate.

Falling behind in the budget process would prohibit Carey from functioning in a timely manner during the coming fiscal year.

Monday petition organizers Ronda Hunt and Howard Royal presented the commission with an additional 30 signatures to be added to a 141-signature petition submitted three weeks ago.

At that time, controversy arose over the actual voter population counts for Carey.

With the recent discovery that Carey has been an incorporated "village" since 1919, no one, including the county commission, had an accurate population count.

Residents finally agreed on 316, making the 171-signatures adequate for the simple majority needed on the petition.

If the signatures are verified by the county, the election will be set for May 28. No additional signatures will be accepted for the petition.

If voters approve disincorporation, residents would then be in a position to re-establish city boundaries and start over in the incorporation process.

If the election fails, the appointed council would need to make any necessary boundary changes.

Commission chairman Leonard Harlig said the governor would appoint three people to the city council. These three would then select a mayor who would then, with council approval, choose the fourth member.

Any Carey resident interested in serving can submit his or her name to the governor's office for consideration, said commissioner Tom Blanchard.

No one was certain who would be responsible for footing the bill to hold the election, but the county will continue its investigation.

Cameron debunks Newcomb plan

BOISE (AP) — Sponsors of legislation to end agriculture's long exemption from Idaho's workers compensation law told a House committee on Tuesday that the program gives farmers affordable protection against accidents that could cost them their farms.

The House Human Resources Committee opened hearings on the Senate-passed bill that could be the most important measure of the 1996 session. House leaders said they were pressing for a vote on the bill at the committee's next meeting, on Thursday.

House Republican Floor Leader Bruce Newcomb, a Burley farmer, said he planned an effort to amend the bill to stipulate that farmers can offer their employees workers compensation insurance or provide equal coverage through private insurance.

Gov. Phil Batt supports the legislation and opposes Newcomb's proposed change.

Republican Sen. Dean Cameron, a Rupert insurance agent, told the House committee on Tuesday it is impossible to obtain comparable private insurance for farm workers at a price farmers could afford.

Even with a lot of insurance, Cameron said, farmers still could be subject to lawsuits by injured workers.

"You still leave yourself open to exposure," he said. Workers compensation insurance bars negligence lawsuits by those covered.

Cameron said affordability was a major consideration when Batt and his staff worked on the legislation.

He said buying workers compensation coverage for their employees would add about 10 cents per hour to the costs for farmers paying $5 per hour for labor.

"I don't think that's going to break anybody," Cameron said.

Newcomb told House members last week that he offers his farm foremen better insurance than they would get under workers compensation. He said workers compensation would cost him $2,116 per year, but he gives his workers disability, medical coverage and medical liability coverage for $978.

However, Cameron said that kind of policy carries high deductibles: The example provided by Newcomb requires the worker to pay the first $1,000 in medical expense per year, then 20 percent of the remainder.

His liability insurance pays only the first $5,000 if a worker is injured on the farm.

Cameron used the case of Malta farm worker Javier Tellez Juarez as an example of what could happen to a farmer without workers compensation insurance.

In late December, Juarez's arms and one leg were torn off in a farm accident. The farm owners had $300,000 in liability insurance, but Juarez's bills already are past $500,000.

"The Tracy family will lose their farm on this issue," Cameron said.

He said the issue of insurance for farm workers would not go away.

"It will be resolved here or in the courts or by initiative," Cameron said. "Our goal is to come up with a bill that is as farmer-friendly as possible."

Blaine County seeks way to allow yurts as permanent housing choice

By Barbara Neiwert
Times-News correspondent

'I have sympathy for these people ...'

— Blaine Commissioner Rupert House

HAILLEY — In order to get a building permit, yurts in Blaine County must be able to hold 100 pounds of snow per square foot.

These canvas-walled structures, historically used for recreational over-night camping, are beginning to crop up as alternative homes in this county where the cost of living runs high.

"I have sympathy for these people trying to build houses and have temporary quarters, especially when nothing is addressed in the ordinance," said Blaine County Commissioner Rupert House.

Monday the commission upheld an administrative ruling by building inspector Bill Dyer.

Dyer denied a building permit for Paul and Jennifer Conrad for their already-constructed yurt west of Hailley.

Without a building permit the Conrads erected the technically advanced yurt on their property to serve as a temporary residence until their home is completed next fall.

When an application for a permit was received, Dyer said it was denied because the yurt didn't have the structural support to hold a 100-pound snowload as required by county ordinances.

It was denied a second time as well for lack of structural integrity, Dyer said.

Under conditions of a conditional use permit issued by the planning and zoning commission, the Conrads had until Dec. 15 to obtain a building permit with relaxed conditions.

A study by the University of Idaho determined a structural kit could be added to the yurt to provide a 65-pound snowload capacity.

But the Conrads failed to meet the deadline, and the building permit was denied again.

"Sixty-five pounds is above and beyond the call of duty for these yurts," said Paul Conrad. He did not retrofit the support kit because of the difficulty of disassembling the yurt in the snow, he said.

Heat generated from living in the yurt, along with the rubberized roof, allow only a couple of inches to accumulate at any one time, Conrad said.

Neighbor Brian Emerick, who plans to erect a similar yurt for temporary quarters while building a frame structure, urged the commission to allow some means for the county to authorize such structures.

While upholding the administrative denial, the commissioners have produced a draft ordinance which will provide specific conditions for yurts and yurpees. This amendment to the county's building codes will come up for public hearing this spring.

For now, the Conrads will meet with county prosecutor Doug Werth and Dyer to arrive at a consensus. Possible civil or criminal actions could be filed, Werth said, but the county hopes that won't be necessary.

Commission chairman Leonard Harlig said the issue should be solved in a "humane fashion" and the ordinance amendment concluded quickly.

Poachers

comment; he also lives in the Hailley area, Olson said.

Critics said people who chase mountain lions with dogs deserve what they get when things go sour — and killing the cat is a wildlife crime that should be punished.

"What's the point of having the law?" asked Sun Valley resident Marilyn Martin, of Idaho Animal Advocates. "They were out there looking for trouble and they found it — so they should have to take their medicine."

"I think there should be some price to pay for killing that lion," Martin said, adding that a warning is little more than "letting poachers go free."

The mountain lion was killed Jan. 20, when Young, Brockette, and three used a .22-caliber pistol to kill the cat from a distance of about 4 feet, taking careful aim not to hit any of the dogs. Neither Young nor Brockette owned a dog in the fight, Olson said.

Even so, "we risked our own lives to get those dogs away from the cat," Young said.

Stunned by what had occurred, the men decided to tag the cat with a left-lion, Olson said. The men loosed their dogs, then followed on the snowmobiles, he said.

The dogs eventually treed the cat in a small alder tree in Hunting Unit-49, Olson said. With five dogs baying directly beneath it, the cat edged out on a slender branch that broke under its weight.

The dogs seized on the lion and had the better of it for a moment, Olson said, but the tide swiftly turned. Brockette was able to pull one dog aside, but the cat knocked another out of the fight — then got another in its mouth and had the final two in its front paws.

"I looked like the lion was going to kill every one of those dogs and, in the panic, (Brockette) yelled: 'Tony, shoot that lion,'" Olson said. Young used a .22-caliber pistol to kill the cat from a distance of about 4 feet, taking careful aim not to hit any of the dogs.

Neither Young nor Brockette owned a dog in the fight, Olson said.

Even so, "we risked our own lives to get those dogs away from the cat," Young said.

Stunned by what had occurred, the men decided to tag the cat with a leftover lion permit that Young had with him. Even though it wasn't valid, putting the license on the dead lion was a gesture of good faith, Olson said.

The men left the dead cat, gathered up the dogs and headed for a veterinarian's office. They called Olson later that day to report the incident, and led him and another game warden to the scene the following day.

The men were truthful with Fish and Game, Olson said, so the officers decided to issue written warnings, rather than citations.

Olson's supervisor, Gary Hompland, said the decision "could have gone either way, but frankly, everybody makes a mistake once in a while."

"We don't want to penalize someone when they make an honest mistake, then do the ethical thing and turn themselves in," Hompland said. "Still, I hope they've learned something from this."

Young said state game wardens treated him and his companions fairly. "We're all very, very saddened by this, y'know, with deep remorse," he said.

Penalty

for tangible improvements.

"I want to take this penalty and turn it into an investment in the future," LeVeré said in an interview. As things stand, the penalty calls for cows to move onto forest land two weeks later than the usual May 11 "on" date, then come off two weeks earlier than the standard Nov. 15 "off" date.

One of the options is for the ranchers to designate a single spokesman for the group, while the second is for them to hire two more cowboys to move cattle throughout the 54,000-acre grazing allotment.

If the ranchers produce a spokesman, they will face a one-week penalty in the spring — while the fall penalty will expand to three weeks. The spring penalty hurts more because ranchers must keep cows on their own land at a time when they could be growing crops.

Though basic, the idea of a designated spokesman is important because "one of the major problems we have is a lack of communication," LeVeré said.

Between them, the ranchers already employ one full-time range rider, LeVeré said, and hiring two more cowboys would go a long way toward keeping cows out of restricted areas. If forest officials can verify that extra cowboys have been hired, then LeVeré said he'll cut the 28-day penalty down to a single week in the fall.

"I don't have any authority to tell them how to run their business, so I'm giving them options," he said. The ranchers have until March 9 to decide if they'll exercise either of the options.

One option that LeVeré isn't offering is to move Twin Falls District Ranger Oman to another post — something the Wild Rose ranchers have long desired.

"It is Ranger Oman's job to enforce the terms and conditions of their grazing permits," LeVeré said. "I will move Ranger Oman if he doesn't enforce them. He manages those lands for the owners, the American public."

LeVeré's decision was fair, Oman said in an interview, "and I think Bill is bending over backwards to give them some choices."

"They've had a lot of choices along the way and could have made other decisions for years, but they didn't," Oman said, noting that Sawtooth officials documented many violations over the years, but never penalized the offenders.

Graffiti

Moreover, it gave no leeway to judges to decide when to use the penalty and interfered with parents' attempts to discipline their children, they said.

Rep. Roble King, rightness Ferry, said while the bill might be good for hard-core offenders, she opposed it because it was "fair to children who pay for their crime, straighten out and then are denied their driver's licenses years down the road."

"This legislation doesn't provide for those exceptions and that is my concern," she said.

DeVore was unhappy with the result. When tested in a California town, a similar ordinance cut graffiti incidents from 144 to zero in three months, he said. It was the strongest provision in a package of ordinances that made parents financially responsible for the graffiti damage of their children and prevented the sale of spray paint to minors, DeVore said.

Jones

David Budd-cke, director of Graffiti-Busters in Twin Falls, also showed up to testify for the bill.

Growing up in Southern California, he saw the emergence of gangs and crime, he said.

"This deterioration in my opinion began with the outbreak of graffiti," he said. "It's a visual symbol of the breakdown of society."

The bill drew support from Rep. Paul Kjellander, R-Boise, who said he would like to see even stricter provisions on juvenile crime next year — stripping drivers' licenses from not only graffiti offenders but from juvenile offenders in general.

The committee unanimously agreed to send the bill to the House floor with amendments:

Season's end near for CSI cage teams

By Larry Hovey
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — College of Southern Idaho women can sack up second in the Scenic West Conference while the men pretty much are just playing out the string against Treasure Valley tonight.

The CSI women would take second by winning today's 5:30 p.m. game in Ontario regardless of what Salt Lake does this weekend in trips to Bruins and North Idaho. CSI swept the Bruins and that would be the tie-breaker if both ended at 15-3.

On the men's side, it pretty much appears that CSI will be fourth or fifth but it will take this weekend to decide who the Eagles will be playing when the regionals open next Wednesday in Utah.

A Utah Valley win at Ricks Thursday or North Idaho Saturday would lock the tourney site into the Wolverines' new 8,000-seat palace in Orem.

The men are slated to play Wednesday, Friday and Saturday while the women will go Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

"Right now our first-round game could be Dixie, North Idaho or Eastern Utah, depending on how this last weekend works out," said Coach Steve Irons. "I feel that right now Dixie adding (6-10 Keon) Clark gives them the best starting five and most athletic five in the conference. I would feel more comfortable matching up with any team more than Dixie."

If something happens to Utah Valley — and it could on the toughest road trip in the league — the tourney could wind up at St. George and the Rebels would become a prohibitive favorite to win the title and national tournament berth.

"The key thing for us right now is to get through the Treasure Valley game without an injury and prepare for regionals. This weekend we will scout every team in the conference that could get there," he said.

With a 10-7 record, CSI doesn't go into this game over-confident, Irons said.

"Treasure has beaten a couple of good teams in Ontario this year," he said. "Emotionally they will be up. It is imperative that we take command of the game early because if they can hang around, they'll just get stronger."

TVCC has the capability in guard Sidjick Kamara to keep CSI's perimeter defense in turmoil. The Eagles haven't stopped penetration and dish-offs all year and Kamara is good at it.

The Chukars have a strong low block player in 6-9 sophomore Matt Morris. Usually the scoring comes from Ryan Hinckley who had 13 in the first meeting; and three-point shooter Jeremy Ramos, who had 18 against Snow Friday.

CSI's women rate as heavy favorites over Treasure Valley but the Eagles have shown a bad habit of playing to the level of the competition. Saturday night they scored just 16 points in the first half against Snow and added 44 more in the second.

"I would be surprised if Salt Lake could go to Ricks and North Idaho this weekend and not lose at least one," said Coach Joel Bate. "Ricks seems to be rebounding well right now from a mid-season slump and North Idaho is a very strong team — especially at home."

"But we control our fate. All we have to do is take care of business at Treasure Valley and it's over," he added.

Magic Valley Church League plays slow-pitch season

TWIN FALLS — The Magic Valley Church League will meet Tuesday, March 5, to organize for the coming slow-pitch softball season.

The meeting will start at 7 p.m. in the upstairs chapel of the First United Methodist Church at Fourth Avenue and Shoshone Street in Twin Falls, said Paul DeWitt, league president.

All churches interested in participating in the league should have a representative at the meeting, De Witt said.

Business on the agenda will include election of officers, review of the league rules and discussion of team and player fees for 1996.

Last season, the league was made up of 11 teams from churches in Twin Falls, Eden and Jerome.

Bruno: Prison didn't help wising up Tyson

LAS VEGAS — It took Frank Bruno to say what some already whispered about Mike Tyson in the year since he was released from a 3½-year prison sentence.

In doing so, he staked out his claim to the high road for their March 16 heavyweight title fight.

"I thought prison was supposed to wise you up and make you a better man," Bruno said Tuesday. "He's getting worse, to be honest, both in the ring and out of the ring."

After enduring both the catcalls from Tyson's entourage and a boorish Tyson at Tuesday's first news conference promoting the WBC title fight, Bruno was in no mood to heap praise on Tyson as had his first two post-prison opponents.

He was particularly critical of the dozen or so members of Tyson's entourage who heckled him during the news conference.

"The entourage around him are bad people," Bruno said. "There's not one ounce of class among them. And after I finish with Mike Tyson they're going to disappear."

Bruno left no doubt he was out to win the pre-fight test of wills following a news conference in which Tyson made no effort to answer questions before bringing it to an abrupt close by getting up to leave.

Jerome rides late-season surge to A-2 tourney

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News sports editor

POCATELLO — When the Jerome Tigers trot onto the gym floor at Idaho State's Reed Gym Thursday to open the Class A-2 state tournament, they'll be underdogs every step of the way.

But that's nothing new to Jerome, which was picked in the pre-season to finish second in the district.

The Tigers (15-9) struggled through the first half of the season at 2-7 before putting together an eight-game winning streak and winning 13 of 15.

The difference has been defense; Jerome surrendered an average of 54.8 points per game over the second half of the regular season and less than that during the District 4 tournament.

Offensively, the Tigers have stepped up the tempo. Fahd Ismail, the 5-7 senior track star, can run the floor, while 5-10 Brad Thompson does most of the scoring from the guard line.

Jerome is hampered by the same thing that caused problems during last year's two-and-out trip to state — a lack of overall height.

A key against taller teams could be the defense of 6-3 Andy Walgamot and 6-7 Todd Lickley.

Kellogg Wildcats (19-4)

Kellogg's top gun isn't hard to find. He's 6-7 senior Casey Fisher, a senior av-er just under 20 points per game. He threw in 39 last year in leading the Wildcats to the state consolation trophy.

Fisher, who is being eyed by the College of Southern Idaho, averages with 5-11 guard Jeremy Behm, a senior averaging 12.6 points per game.

While those two are doing the scoring, the Wildcats don't give up many points — only 49.3 per game.

Kellogg has four state titles, the most recent in 1964.

Bear Lake Bears (19-3)

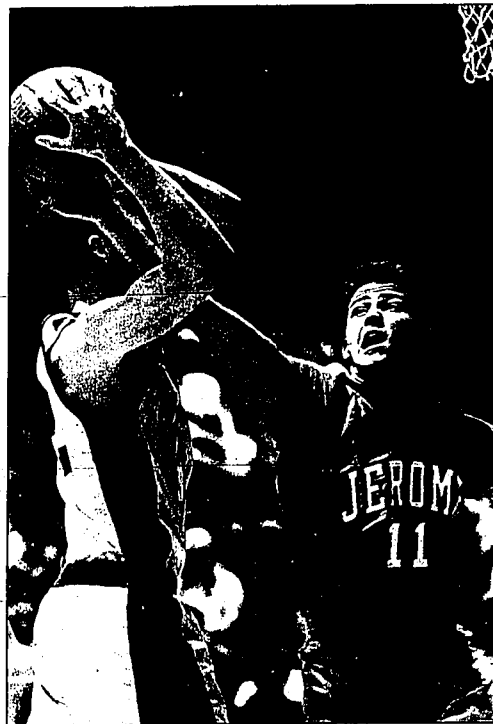

The Bears bring a good inside-outside game centered around center Brady Carlsen and forward Chet Keech.

Bear Lake may also have an emotional edge. Reserve Cody Pugmire was killed in an automobile accident late in the season, and the team has rallied around his memory during the playoffs.

No state titles; finished fourth last year.

Bishop Kelly Knights (23-0)

The unbeaten and top-ranked Knights

Playing solid defense, Jerome's Dan Walters helped the Tigers defeat Wood River and win the district title last week.

got that way with nine solid athletes.

Each one can hit the outside shot; each one can run the floor. This is primarily a team of interchangeable parts, with the possible exception of 6-6 sophomore Abe Jackson, who scored 18 points in the district title romp over Vallivue.

Bishop Kelly won its only state title in 1991.

Declo between rock, hard place in A-3 bracket

By Krvin Miller and Brad Bowlin
Times-News writers

IDAHO FALLS — The road to the Class A-3 title couldn't be any rockier for the only Magic Valley team in the tournament.

District 4 champion Declo (16-6) faces second-ranked Malad in the tournament opener. If they survive that, top-ranked Teton, will likely be waiting.

The Hornets are in a tough bracket, but they enter the tournament hot, with senior Byron Knowles burning it up in the post season. He helped Declo roll through the Canyon Conference tournament in three games.

Now at full-strength following a severe hamstring injury, Knowles averaged just nearly 22 points per game while leading Declo to the district title.

"Byron, of course, is a key to this ballclub. It was pretty obvious we weren't at the top of our level with him out," Hornet coach Loyd Garey said. "But it also let some of our other players step it up."

Controlled basketball is Declo's game. The Hornets are a good rebounding team with 6-6 Brian Fries, 6-4 Jesse Neilson and 6-4 Knowles controlling the boards.

They will need that rebounding edge and disciplined offense to counter the fast-paced firepower of Malad and likely all-state pick Bryson Vaughan.

Teton Redskins (24-0)

The defending state champs are unbeaten, ranked No. 1 in the state, and loaded with height and talent.

Kaleb Kunz, a 6-2 junior, averages 20 points per game, with classmate Kelly Nead (6-5) pitching in 14.

The Redskins like to run and force the action with a pressure defense. They go about 10 deep on the bench, with several players over six-foot tall in reserve.

Teton has six state trophies, more than any other A-3 team.

Fruitland Grizzlies (18-6)

The experienced Grizzlies are quick, athletic and can shoot from anywhere on the floor.

Matt Osburn, a 6-5 wing, is deadly from 10-15 feet, while Jeremy Yrgun, 6-3, finds gaps underneath for easy buckets.

Seniors Kris Stice and Scott Schledewitz are pure shooters, sparking a fitness-style fast-break offense.

Although Osburn poses problems inside, the Grizzlies are vulnerable defensively to strong players who can muscle their way in the paint.

Fruitland's only state title came in 1980.

Malad Dragons (22-1)

Nobody in the state has beaten Malad this year. The team's only loss came in the third game of the season to Logan, Utah. Since then, the No. 2-ranked Dragons have run off 20 straight wins including two over Jerome.

The Dragons are a small, quick team led by Bryson Vaughan's 20 points per game. Guard Kam Alder is a perpetual threat from outside.

Although they play an up-tempo style, the Dragons are a disciplined bunch. If Malad avengers Declo, a second-round matchup with Teton could determine this year's champion.

Malad won state titles in 1994, 1992 and 1985.

Jesse Neilson and the Declo Hornets will be facing the toughest opponents in their bracket right off the bat.

Potlatch Loggers (19-4)

Potlatch hopes its fifth consecutive state trip will be the one to earn the Loggers their first championship trophy.

A pair of 6-5 posts will try to take Potlatch to the next level after losing last year's title game to Teton. Jacob Vowels averages 15.9 points per game and 8.4 rebounds, while 6-5 Clayton Snodgrass averages 11.9 points and 7.1 boards.

Unlike first-round opponent Soda Springs, the Loggers like to slow the tempo.

Moscow Bears (18-3)

If you want height, you've got it in Moscow, where the boys will be looking to join the girls as state champs.

The Bears can start a lineup with five players well over six feet, although relative midget Adam Miller (5-11) usually guides the offense. He shoots well from outside and leads a team (14.2 points per game) loaded with athletic talent.

Junior Drew Owen 6-7, comes off the bench, along with 6-10 post Jason Keep. Also look for Ryan Dudley to keep the offense moving.

Moscow has won eight state titles, but none since 1980.

Marsh Valley Eagles (11-13)

The Eagles emerged from a difficult regular season to string together three solid playoff games to make the tournament.

The biggest reason for the surge was 6-3 senior center Devin Howe, who scored 29 points against Salmon in the final playoff victory over Salmon.

Marsh Valley, from Arimo, won the state title in 1988 and finished second last year.

Shelley Russets (16-6)

Expect nothing fancy from the Russets, other than a solid, experienced ballclub with seven seniors and a balanced scoring Jeremy Hess, at 11 points per game, is the leading point producer.

Shelley won its only state title in 1970. The Russets were not in last year's tourney.

Vallivue Falcons (19-5)

Three of the Caldwell team's five losses came to Bishop Kelly. Vallivue plays a team game without many standout individual performances.

The most notable Falcon is Paul Tuff, a bruising 6-5 post, who leads a strong rebounding effort that keys an up-tempo offense.

Vallivue makes its living defensively with an aggressive and balanced scoring. The Falcons' lone state title came in 1976.

Soda Springs Cardinals (15-9)

Landry White sparks the offense for the Cardinals, who are a surprise entry from District 5, ahead of third-ranked Aberdeen.

Soda Springs likes to run, and will need to force the issue in order to keep Potlatch's big-men from establishing themselves underneath.

Soda Springs won state titles in 1991 and in 1943 when two trophies — one north, one south — were awarded.

Homedale Trojans (17-6)

A good inside-outside game has brought Homedale to the state tournament for the first time in 11 years.

Seniors Dustin Bant (6-6) and Corby Garrett (6-5) combine for 34 points and 22 rebounds per game, while a trio of senior guards score from the outside.

Point Isaac Henry, 6-9, runs the offense, while Ryan Hellwege and Eric Rosberry also keep defenses from sagging inside.

Homedale's only state title came in 1969.

Grangeville Bulldogs (17-7)

Coach Skip Hall has the boys in the tournament in his first season after several years as the girls' mentor.

Leading scorer Matt Hill (13.3 points per game) is 6-4 junior center and good overall athlete, having started at quarterback for the football team the last two seasons.

Jeremiah Jones, a 6-1 senior guard, possesses the outside shooting touch good for 12.7 points per game. The Dogs run a controlled offense, and emerged from the district tournament despite entering as the No. 4 seed after shutting Lewistown in the second round.

Trio of Magic Valley teams vie for A-4 title

By Brad Bowlin and Kevin Miller

IDAHO FALLS — Although all four state boys' basketball tournaments will crown champions on Saturday, Oakley has a chance to win the Class A-4 trophy Thursday night.

None of the other teams is likely to concede the title, but the winner of the opening round battle between No. 1 Nampa Christian and No. 2 Oakley at 8 p.m. at Hillcrest High School may well decide who ends up smiling on Saturday.

After all, Oakley already has beaten three of the other teams in the field (Carey, Shoshone and North Gem), and Nampa Christian has beaten Cascade.

But what looks good on paper rarely becomes reality on the gym floor. The Hornets formed in a couple of sub-par performances here last year and will be anxious to reverse those fortunes this time around.

For Shoshone, the question will be whether the Indians can work their way through the top half of the bracket into a possible District 4 championship rematch.

And Carey is certainly no dark horse, having stretched Shoshone to the overtime twice. Coach Lee Cook's admonition to run, run, run was through the top half of the bracket into a possible District 4 championship rematch.

The answer will begin to reveal itself at 6:30 p.m. when the Panthers take on the defending state champs.

Lakeside Knights (19-4)

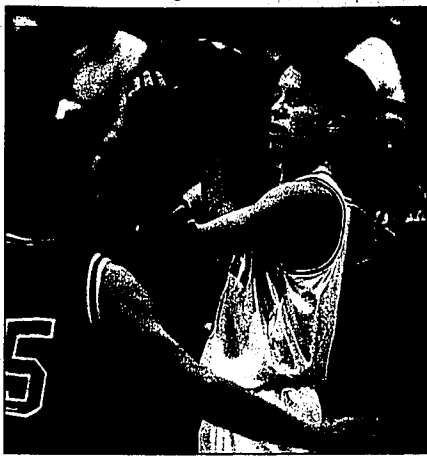

The team from Plummer is picked by many to meet Nampa Christian in the title game.

The Knights are led by guard James Tweteh at 12.3 points per game, but their strength is in numbers — a bench that goes 10 deep and carries a number of all-around players.

Defensively, Lakeside is a quick team that keeps its hands in the passing lanes and presses the whole court.

Cascade Ramblers (15-8)

Not much is known about the Ramblers, except that they played unbeaten tournament favorite Nampa Christian close in two regular-season meetings.

Haith Clark and the Oakley Hornets control their own destiny, if they can get past Nampa Christian.

Highland-Craigmont Huskies (18-6)

The Huskies won the District 2 title despite entering the tournament as the third seed. They upset Troy and Deary en route to the big dance.

Primarily responsible for that tournament run were 6-5 Phillip Way (14.4 points per game) and 6-4 Nathan Renner (12.6). Highland gets 10.9 from 6-3 Quentin Thomason, making the Huskies one of the taller teams in the bracket.

Highland plays primarily a methodical, patient offense similar to that of Shoshone. Craigmont owns titles from 1984 and 1943.

Shoshone Indians (21-4)

The Indians are short effective when they run their controlled offense, working the ball into 6-3 post Brian Ross. Teams that move to a zone defense to

North Gem Cowboys (14-9)

The Cowboys emerged from the obscurity of Bancroft to take the 1995 state title behind all-everything Justin Janney.

New 6-1 senior Matt Smith has taken the baton. He joins 6-3 senior Kevin Hebdon inside for a potent 1-2 combination.

"I'm prejudiced, but I think I have two of the best posts of any A-4 school in the state," North Gem coach Ken Christensen said.

Micha Weaver, 6-3, joins Smith and Hebdon at about 13 points per game.

The "Boys handed Oakley one of their two regular-season losses. They lost the first meeting between the two teams when North Gem's Matt Smith did not play due to illness.

North Gem owns three state titles — 1957, 1961 and 1995.

Carey Panthers (19-7)

The Panthers rely more on athletic ability and doggedness than pure basketball talent. They are at their best when the game is played at breakneck speed, with bodies — and shots — flying.

Within that semi-controlled chaos are a few players with good hands and the ability to finish the fast-break. Rich Payne, a 6-1 senior, is the team leader on and off the court. He averages 17-plus points and scored 30 in the playoff win over Cambridge.

Buddy Peterson may be the best shooter, while T.J. Dilworth is a relentless defender and offensive spark plug.

Add Anton Cook, who also had 30 points against Cambridge, and the Panthers have a shot to dethrone North Gem in the first round.

The Panthers' seven losses came at the hands of Shoshone (five, including two in overtime) and Oakley.

Carey has never won the state tournament.

Oakley Hornets (22-2)

The second-ranked Hornets haven't lost in two months, and they don't plan on stopping their streak now.

"These kids have thought they could be state champions since they were freshmen," Coach Blair Gerner said.

The Hornets pride themselves on defense. Taylor Critchfield (6-3) and Peter Wells (6-2) anchor Oakley's interior game, where the battle for a state title will likely be decided.

Oakley lost in the consolation game last year. The Hornets own four state titles, the most recent coming in 1977.

Nampa Christian Trojans (23-1)

The top-ranked Trojans have all the ingredients for a strong run at the state title.

They boast good size inside in 6-5 junior forward Matt Riste and sophomore forward Garrett Jones, 6-4. Senior guard Kurt Filmore, a 5-8 junior, ignites an offense that can run the floor or play halfcourt.

After running through most of the regular season competition with double-digit victories, the Trojans will find their first real tests at state.

Nampa Christian has never won the title, going two-and-out last year.

Centennial, Rigby shine in muddled A-1 field

By Brad Bowlin and Kevin Miller
Times-News writers

POCATELLO — Unlike last year, when Centennial and Rigby carried undefeated records into the championship game, this year's Class A-1 boys' basketball field looks wide open.

With both teams looking to defend their crown and Rigby looking for revenge, at least four teams look to have a legitimate shot at the title.

Highland Rams (17-6)

Factor in that the Rams are playing in front of their hometown fans at Holt Arena, Highland (18-6) isn't such a long shot to claim its fourth state title.

Led by head-eye-behind Tenston Triple (100.3 points this season), the District 4-5 champions can score a bundle in a hurry.

Athletic forward Shane Griggs (6-5) poses match-up problems for most teams, as does sixth-man Mike Higgins (6-8).

Coach Chris Frost goes nine deep, and got a big lift during the post-season from sophomore point guard Joe Green. The Rams' three state titles came in 1970, 1991 and 1990.

Centennial Patriots (19-4)

The centerpiece of last year's undefeated state championship team is back in Jon Harris.

The difference between being unstable and losing to sub-500 Mountain Home in the first week of the season as Centennial did this year is Harris' supporting cast.

Eagle Mustangs (13-10)

The Mustangs won't have the shiniest record in the field, but they will get the biggest send-off.

The city of Eagle is planning a parade — complete with fire trucks — to send its team to state in the school's first year of existence.

Lake City Timberwolves (18-4)

The team from Coeur d'Alene is a legitimate contender behind 6-3 guard Chadfield.

The team leaper and long-range shooter, Chadfield also can drive to the hole or post up. He averages 23 points per game. Scott Hoover, a 6-5 lefty, adds 15.3 per game and also can shoot the three.

Meridian Warriors (15-9)

Young, scrappy and short. That's an apt description of a team that lists its tallest player as 6-foot-3.

But the Warriors more than compensate with an aggressive pressure defense and outside shooting that resulted in a league-leading 67 points per game.

No single player averaged in double figures for Meridian, which has three state titles to its credit, the last coming in 1992.

Blackfoot Broncos (19-6)

The Broncos displayed their offensive might in last weekend's playoff pounding of Twin Falls (93-55). They are led by 6-3 forward Landon Kesler, who can light it up from the outside or from the post.

Corey Dahle also provides scoring punch and point guard Scott Cannon leads the offense.

Blackfoot took fourth at last year's state tournament. The Broncos' only state title came in 1939.

Rigby Trojans (18-6)

The Trojans won the District 6 title for the third straight season with an up-tempo offense and a disciplined style that makes up for a lack of height.

Coach Don Baldwin will have an excellent shooter in 6-3 Jermine Barrett and a slasher who can drive to the hole in Jake Erickson.

Rigby's only loss last season came in the state title game to Centennial. Rigby boasts seven state titles, the most recent coming in 1987 when the school moved up to Class A-1.

Capital Eagles (16-9)

Capital is another team that runs hot and cold. The Eagles have one of the best guards in the state in 5-11 junior Brad Lords.

He's lightning quick to the basket but also has the good shooting touch. Jeff Doan, a 6-3 senior center, anchors the inside game for Capital, which owns five state titles. The most recent came in 1978.

Capital won the consolation trophy last year.

Gooden, Key, Sandberg make strong debuts; Cordova signs for $6.3 million

By The Associated Press

Jimmy Key and Dwight Gooden, the major rehabilitation projects for the New York Yankees this spring, made successful debuts Tuesday by pitching two innings each in an intrasquad game.

Key, who pitched just five games last spring before season-ending shoulder surgery, allowed three runs and six hits, striking out three. Thirty-three of 48 pitches were strikes.

Gooden, coming-back following a drug-related suspension that began in June 1994, gave up two runs and three hits, struck out one, walked one and hit a batter. He threw 28 pitches in the first-inning and seven in the second.

Gooden hit Ruben Rivera in the left arm with a fastball in the first inning. Rivera stayed in the game and homered in the fifth inning off Brian Boehringer.

Melillo Perez, another Yankees pitcher who's been bothered by injuries, allowed one hit in two innings.

Ryne Sandberg got off to a good start in his comeback, going 2-for-2 in a Chicago's first intrasquad game in Mesa, Ariz.

"It was just nice to get into some game situations," said Sandberg, a 10-time All-Star second baseman. "It's just fun to be back here."

Sandberg's first hit was a line-drive single into center field off Jaime Navarro, the ace of the 1995 Cubs' staff. His second hit came on a hard groundout off Jose Guzman. After the second single, catcher Mike Hubbard threw out Sandberg trying to steal.

Pro baseball

"It's just part of the practice," Sandberg said. "I'm not making anything out of it."

Rookie of the Year Marly Cordova and the Twins agreed to a $6.3 million, four-year contract.

Cordova, who hit .277 last season with 24 homers and 84 RBIs. He gets $500,000 this season, $800,000 in 1997, $2 million in 1998 and $3 million in 1999. The Twins have a $3.75 million option for 2000.

Cordova will not be eligible for free agency until after the 2001 season.

Orlotos

After going through two weeks of tedious drills and exercises, Baltimore will play intrasquad games Wednesday and Thursday at Fort Lauderdale Stadium.

Johnson knows those three will be regulars at shortstop, second base and first base. But the six-inning game will enable him to begin the process of evaluating talent at some of the other positions.

Bobby Bonilla and B.J. Surhoff, who are battling for the starting job at third base, will see action at the position on both days.

Pitchers Arthur Rhodes and Alan Mills, who are both coming off shoulder surgery, will get the opportunity to show how far they have come.

Braves

The Atlanta Braves got a scare during batting practice when third baseman Chipper Jones injured his wrist.

Jones' first at-bat ended in pinch against one of the metal supports for the batting cage, and the ball ricocheted straight back into his wrist.

Jones went into the clubhouse to get checked out, but the injury wasn't serious. "It'll be all right," he said, trotting back to the field to finish the workout.

The injury did give him a convenient excuse when he was hounded by autograph seekers at the end of practice, however. "My hand's broke," he said mockingly, brushing past the fans.

Pirates

Pittsburgh hopes to use as many as half of the 27 pitchers in training camp in an intrasquad game Wednesday.

Chris Peters, a Pittsburgh-area native and one of the Pirates' most promising young pitchers, and 40-year-old Danny Darwin will be starting pitchers. Darwin recently signed with Pittsburgh as a minor league free agent after going 3-10 with Toronto last season.

Royals

Rookie catcher Mike Sweeney and outfielder Jon Nunnally hit home runs during an intrasquad game.

Sweeney homered to left off Bart Evans in the final inning, while Nunnally connected off J.J. Munoz.

Manager Bob Boone looked at 10 pitchers in the game, with Tom Browning and Mark Culotta the starters.

Lenon doubled off Browning in his first at-bat and singled.

Nunnally also scored from second base on a sacrifice fly by Joe Maitello to Johnny Damon in deep center.

Reds

Jose Rijo, pitched to speed up a comeback from elbow surgery that cut his season short last year, pitched a scoreless inning in Cincinnati's intrasquad game.

Rijo gave up a hit and a walk in his inning pitched for the Junkyard Dogs squad.

The right-hander wasn't expected back until late this season because of his elbow surgery. But he has made impressive progress in recent days, and the Reds are hoping he could return sooner than expected. Rijo was most valuable player of Cincinnati's 1990 World Series sweep of Oakland.

Eric Davis and Chris Sabo, two of Rijo's teammates from the 1990 championship team who are attempting comebacks with the Reds, each had two hits for the opposing Boys of Bash' squad. Sabo stole a base.

Minor leagues spend day on The Hill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Minor league baseball wants to make sure it doesn't become a sacrificial pawn if Congress considers repealing the major league's antitrust exemption. Owners and executives from more than 50 minor league teams spent Tuesday on Capitol Hill lobbying lawmakers, reminding them how vital the exemption is to the survival of many small-town clubs. North Johnson, owner and general manager of the Carolina League's Kinston Indians, said that if the exemption is removed, "My opinion is if the reserve clause is taken out through antitrust exemption, then a lot of minor league teams are going to dry up because major league teams aren't going to pay the salaries anymore."

Outfielder Belle close to big penalty

NEW YORK (AP) — Cleveland Indians outfielder Albert Belle is close to being fined — perhaps as much as $50,000 — or suspended for his behavior toward a television reporter during the World Series, baseball officials said Tuesday. There has been no final decision on disciplining Belle for berating NBC reporter Hannah Storm before Game 3, baseball officials said. The penalty was still being negotiated. "We haven't heard anything at this point," said Belle's agent, Art Tellem. "The union and the league have been talking. It's in the hands of the commissioner's office."

DiNardo suspends Faulk after fight

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — LSU tailback Kevin Faulk has been suspended for the Tigers' season opener against Houston, head coach Gerry DiNardo said Tuesday. The suspension was in response to misdemeanor charges filed against Faulk after he got into a bar fight in Carenco and allegedly shoved and punched police officers who came to cool things down. "Kevin will be held out of our game against Houston because he is in violation of team policies, principles and philosophy. I want to reiterate that as a member of this team and representative of this university, our players must have respect for authority," DiNardo said.

Packers deal with linebacker Bennett

GREEN BAY, Wis. (AP) — The Green Bay Packers, looking for an impact player in the defensive front seven, met with Buffalo's Cornelius Bennett Tuesday and plan to make him an offer soon. Bennett, 30, is a five-time Pro Bowl selection and the top inside linebacker available in free agency. He is reportedly seeking a contract worth $3.2 million and $3.5 million a year and has narrowed his list to three teams: Green Bay, Carolina and Buffalo.

Braves to move spring camp to Orlando

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The Atlanta Braves reached a deal Tuesday to relocate their spring training camp to Walt Disney World in 1991. Disney lured the Braves away from West Palm Beach, their spring training home for 34 seasons, by beginning construction of a 7,500-seat stadium as part of a multimillion-dollar sports complex. It is to open in spring 1997.

Chicago reaches 50 wins

CHICAGO (AP) — Michael Jordan scored 35 points and the Chicago Bulls reached 50 victories faster than any team in NBA history, using a strong fourth quarter Tuesday night to beat the Minnesota Timberwolves 120-99. The Bulls (50-6) reached 50 victories in 56 games, one better than the 1982-83 Philadelphia 76ers who started 50-7 en route to a 65-17 season and an NBA title.

Jordan scored 11 points in the third quarter as the Bulls tried to shake the Timberwolves, then scored eight in a 16-2 run as the Bulls went up 98-82 with just over seven minutes left in the game.

Rockets 105, Raptors 100
HOUSTON (AP) — Hakeem Olajuwon scored 35 points, including 15 in the final 6 minutes, and Kenny Smith had his second straight big game to lead Houston over Toronto. Olajuwon blocked five shots and had 15 rebounds, but his work in the final minutes pulled out the game for the Rockets as Toronto used a 14-1 run to lead 90-87 with 5:45 to play. Olajuwon then scored Houston's next eight points for a 95-93 lead with 3:27 left, and Houston led the rest of the way.

76ers 121, Mavericks 115
DALLAS (AP) — Clarence Weatherspoon scored a season-high 27 points, Vernon Maxwell had 25 and Trevor Ruffin 21 as Philadelphia snapped a seven-game losing streak. Philadelphia, the worst team in the NBA, completed a season sweep of the Mavs. The 76ers blew a 16-point lead but got two baskets by Maxwell, a big 3-point shot by Sean Higgins and a key bucket by Tim Masburg to pull away at the end with its highest point total of the season.

Hornets 88, Bucks 84
MILWAUKEE (AP) — Charlotte overcame a six-point second period and beat Milwaukee with the help of a shot tipped into the wrong basket by Glenn Robinson of the Bucks. Glen Rice scored 23 points, including two game-clinching free throws with 1:30 seconds left, and Kenny Anderson had 22. Charlotte fought off a late charge by getting four offensive rebounds in the final minute — including the mistake by Robinson.

Pro basketball

Pacers 101, Trail Blazers 87
INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Rik Smits scored 16 points as Indiana opened a 22-point lead in the first quarter and Mark Jackson had 4 season-high 15 assists as the Pacers defeated slumping Portland. Smits led the Pacers with 27 points and Indiana was never seriously threatened as it stretched its winning streak to four. The Trail Blazers came for the seventh time in eight games since the All-Star break.

Cavaliers 92, Warriors 80
CLEVELAND (AP) — Danny Ferry scored 24 points as Cleveland won for the 10th time in 12 games. Cleveland's top-ranked defense limited the Warriors to their lowest output of the season. Offensively, the Cavs made eight 3-pointers, tying their team record for 3s in a season with 398.

Heat 93, Nets 90
EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Miami won its fourth straight game, beating New Jersey in a game that ended with Shawn Bradley showing Alonzo Mourning to the floor. Bradley got the best of Mourning on the court, outscoring him 23-11. But the Heat won the game because the Nets missed three shots in the final minute while trailing 91-90.

Providence downs G'Town, 84-77

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Austin Croshere scored 18 points to lead five Providence players in double figures as the Friars upset No. 8 Georgetown 84-77 Tuesday night. In an emotion-packed final home game of the season that saw Georgetown coach John Thompson ejected, Providence (16-9, 9-8 Big East) sprang to an 11-1 lead and never trailed. Georgetown (23-6, 12-5) twice cut the deficit to two in the second half.

The Hoyas' Ya-Ya Dia rebounded a miss and scored on a layup to cut Providence's lead to 70-67 with 1:40 remaining, but the Friars' God Shammug led a driving layup and Derrick Brown made a steal and dunk to give Providence breathing room. The Friars then hit eight of 10 free throws over the last 51 seconds to seal the victory.

No. 6 Villanova 76, Boston College 71
NEWTON, Mass. — Eric Breezy scored 25 points and Alvin Williams

Men's college basketball had 24 Tuesday night as No. 6 Villanova showed it could win without Kerry Kittles, beating Boston College 76-71. Williams hit a 3-pointer with 61 seconds left to protect a one-point lead, then made six of eight free throws over the last 24 seconds. The Wildcats (24-4, 14-3 Big East) beat BC for the sixth consecutive time and improved to 1-1 since Kittles was suspended for charging $3,100 in unauthorized calls to a university credit card. He has one game remaining on the NCAA suspension.

No. 13 Wake Forest 84, No. 19 North Carolina 60
WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. — Tony Rutland and Jerry Braswell resurrected Wake Forest's long-range shooting with a first-half barrage that sent the 13th-ranked Demon Deacons to an 84-60 victory over No. 19 North Carolina on Tuesday night.

Rutland finished with 22 points and Braswell had 12 as Wake Forest, coming off its worst 3-point shooting per-

Gretzky's move made official

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Wayne Gretzky, the ambassador of hockey, has a new address: St. Louis.

Gretzky, who failed to win a Stanley Cup in Los Angeles, was traded to the St. Louis Blues on Tuesday night, ending weeks of rumor and speculation about his future. "I'm emotionally drained," Gretzky said at a new conference in Los Angeles. "I'm disappointed to be leaving Los Angeles but I'm excited to play in St. Louis. ... It's always tough when you move. Nobody likes to make changes. Sometimes it's just timing."

NHL history and a hockey icon whose name is synonymous with the sport, the Blues gave the Kings three young players — Craig Johnson, Patrice Dardif and Roman Vopat — and their No. 1 pick in the 1997 draft. The 35-year-old superstar said he expects to sign with the Blues in two to three weeks. "It wasn't a financial issue," he said. "Finances never really were a factor."

Gretzky can become a free agent after this season, and the Kings risked losing him without compensation if he failed to sign him.

formance of the season three nights earlier, matched their season high with 12 3s. Eight came in the first half, when the Demon Deacons raced to a 21-point lead on the way to extending their school record for consecutive home victories to 19. Wake Forest (19-5, 11-4 Atlantic Coast Conference) moved within a half game of league-leading Georgia Tech (18-10, 11-3). The Yellow Jackets close their regular-season schedule with games Wednesday night at Florida State and Sunday at home against Clemson. The Demon Deacons' last game is Saturday at North Carolina State.

No. 1 Kentucky 88, Auburn 73
AUBURN, Ala. (AP) — Tony Delk scored 15 points and No. 1 Kentucky extended its winning streak to 24 games with a 88-73 victory over Auburn on Tuesday night.

Backed by a raucous crowd and riding a two-game winning streak against Kentucky when the Wildcats hold the No. 1 ranking, Auburn looked like a formidable upset target for awhile. But Kentucky (23-1, 15-0 Southeastern Conference) overwhelmed the Tigers by converting turnovers into 19 points.

Will retirement's 3-legged stool still stand?

The Washington Post

After more than a decade of steady increases, employee participation in tax-deferred 401(k) retirement savings has leveled off in around three-quarters of eligible workers, according to a number of recent surveys.

The plateau came despite new federal rules designed to make 401(k) plans more attractive, intensified efforts by many companies and the Labor Department to encourage retirement savings, and a growing recognition by both baby boomers and younger workers that saving is a crucial factor in their retirement well-being.

The surveys, by large benefits consulting firms, indicate that participation has leveled off in the early 1990s, and has shown little sign of increasing for the past five years or so. The surveys generally cover the largest employers, which have had plans in place the longest, and are thus most "mature," experts said.

"In part, the leveling off represents a natural slowing as most of the people who are willing and able to participate are now doing so. But it also indicates that the growing reliance by employers on 401(k) and similar savings plans, rather than traditional pensions, holds considerable peril for a small but significant portion of the work force.

Workers who do not participate will be forced to rely in retirement on Social Security, their own savings, and their employer's traditional pension plan, if the company has one. With Social Security apparently headed for some sort of restructuring and employers growing less likely to offer a traditional pension, the outlook for nonparticipants is not good. The problem will be particularly acute for younger workers, said Chip Rosenthal of A. Foster Higgins & Co., another large benefits consulting firm.

"Traditionally, we speak of the three-legged stool (of retirement income) as Social Security, personal savings and a pension. Certainly, something is going to have to happen with Social Security," pensions are shifting to 401(k) plans and the like, "so if a person is not participating in that plan, one leg of the stool disappears, and if they are not participating, they are probably not saving on their own, either," Rosenthal said.

But with the third leg, Social Security, shrinking, "people need to be saving more through their 401(k) and on their own" because "50 to 75 percent of retirement income will need to come from the 401(k) or savings," he said.

Many companies are working to educate workers about the need to participate, but so far results seem to have been mixed.

In an effort to bring in more young workers, some companies are dropping a requirement that new employees wait a certain period, typically a year or two, before becoming eligible to enroll.

Ironically, dropping the waiting period may make it look like growth of 401(k) plans is slowing, since it would add a group with low participation rates, the pool of eligible workers, she said. Workers who aren't eligible generally aren't counted as not participating.

Some companies, said Koski, have gone so far as to make participation a "negative option" for new employees — they are automatically enrolled unless they opt out.

U.S. West to implement '888' toll-free prefix Friday

The Associated Press

DENVER — Callers might have to think twice when making toll-free calls after Friday.

That's when U.S. West Communications plans to begin assigning 888 prefixes to toll-free telephone numbers through its 14-state territory. The supply of 800 numbers is nearly depleted, due largely to growing demand for toll-free numbers.

In May 1993, slightly more than 40 percent of the 7.7 million potential 800 numbers were in use, U.S. West officials said. By November 1994, 75 percent of the numbers were in use. The Federal Communications Commission started rationing the 800 numbers in June 1995 to avoid total depletion before the 888 numbers could be implemented.

U.S. West has upgraded its switching systems to recognize the 888 numbers as toll-free codes and tested the system throughout its territory.

U.S. West officials said it is important to remember the 800 and 888 prefixes are not interchangeable. Callers are urged to check telephone numbers carefully before dialing.

Take steps to raise your 'emotional intelligence'

Editor's note: Due to a design error, part of Denise Turner's Life and Times column was deleted from Sunday's Family Life section. It is reprinted here in its entirety.

Life and Times
Denise Turner

Back in the '70s, when I was launching my first career as a department store buyer, I was asked to participate in an in-store career night for area youth. I was excited, enthusiastic ... young.

During the program, I began waxing philosophic about the expanding fashion consciousness of the American male.

"There was a time when the unfashionable man wore a drab black suit, white shirt and "skinny tie," I said.

I could feel the discomfort immediately. The other panelists were squirming in their seats. A quick glance to my right told me why.

Seated next to me was a man - a top-level executive at my firm - dressed in a "drab black suit, white shirt and skinny tie."

At that moment, it made no difference that I had graduated at the top of my class in college or that I had already demonstrated a lot of knowledge on the job. At that moment, I knew I would have to spend time perfecting my people skills if I was every going to be successful in the working world.

The January 1996 issue of Reader's Digest magazine ran a story suggesting that factors like mood management, self-awareness and people skills - lumped under the umbrella of "emotional intelligence" - may be even more important than high IQ when it comes to success in life.

Mood management. The idea is that, while we have little control over when we are swept up in our emotions, we do have some control over how long the emotions last. If the emotions are negative, we can "reframe" the situation, by looking at it in a more positive light ("maybe that jerk on the interstate cut me off because he had some emergency") or we can work toward solving any problems involved.

I remember the year when my great-grandmother decided to make a trip to visit relatives in a faraway state. Even though she wanted to go, she would be traveling alone and she was scared to death.

Everyone expected the worst. But, by the time Great-grandmother arrived at her destination, she was cheerful and relaxed. She looked great, too, except for the fact that she appeared to have gained about 200 pounds.

Her explanation: "The world's in such a fix, and I was so afraid somebody would steal my suitcase, so I wore all my clothes and filled my suitcase with tin cans."

Self-awareness. This is the ability to recognize feelings as they happen, so you can change the feelings if you want to. It's part of the process of understanding yourself and why you do the things you do.

Sometimes, the experience is a rude awakening. During her Christmas break from college, my 18-year-old daughter began screaming in her room. I ran in to see what was wrong.

"I just realized I have three lists tucked onto my bulletin board," she shrieked. "I'm turning into you!"

People skills. The Reader's Digest article referred to a study at Bell Labs, a company staffed with engineers and scientists at the apex of academic IQ tests. Some of the staff members were stars. Others were languishing. The study found that the "stars" were the ones who had established a network with a wide range of people - before they needed those people to solve any technical problems that might arise.

People are funny. Some are great at relating to others. Some are greatly lacking in social skills. A few are off the charts.

"A woman I know complained to me that the man down the street was bothering her to death. He would call her and hang up, or drive by her house several times a day. Both the man and the woman are in their 80s and widowed.

One day, the would-be suitor waited for the mailman at the woman's front walk. "Are you dating Betty?" he asked. "No, man, I'm married," the mailman replied.

"I see you around here a lot." A few weeks later, when the woman was sure that she had finally convinced her neighbor that she wasn't interested, the woman's son called her on the phone.

"Mom, your friend came into the shop today," he began. "He said, 'Did you know your mother is dating the mailman?'"

Some of us really need to work on our people skills.

Lunchtime flossing offers distasteful display

DEAR ABBY: On occasion, I lunch with a rather casual business acquaintance. Recent after finishing the meal, this lady flossed her teeth at the table. This was in the presence of other diners. I was shocked and embarrassed.

Dear Abby
Abigail VanBuren

The woman holds an important position with a reputable company. Abby, I could not believe what I was seeing! The first time this happened, I put the incident behind me, assuming it would be a one-time thing. However, she repeated the same scene at our next luncheon. And as if that were not bad enough, she laid the used dental floss on the edge of her plate.

Abby, please advise your readers that flossing is something that should be done in the privacy of one's own home, and should it be necessary to floss elsewhere, please ask to be excused and floss in the restroom.

I cannot tell this individual in person because it could mean the loss of business for me, and I can't afford such a loss at this time.

No name, initials, city or state, please. Just make up a name if you print this, or sign it.

DEAR APPELLED: It is possible that this woman doesn't know that it is very unappealing to see someone floss his or her teeth at the table, so you would be doing her an enormous favor if you told her - privately, of course.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I have been married for 12 years. We have two fine children, and I can honestly say we have about as good a marriage as anyone could hope for. So why am I writing to Dear Abby? We have moved three times during our marriage. We lived in a one-bedroom apartment for the first three years, then we moved to a small house. After our second child was born, we moved to a larger house in the suburbs.

The hope you won't think I am being petty, but my husband has kept a box of letters from a girlfriend he dated before he met me, and every time we've moved, he's moved that box with us.

This is no big deal, but it irritates me. Should I say something to him about it?

DEAR IRRITATED: Yes, say something, but not in a mean or critical way. You will have gotten this irritating subject off your chest, and he may even toss the letters.

DEAR ABBY: I read your column every day, and a while ago I saw a letter from a man who thought he was too old to go back to school. My story is similar.

After graduating from high school in 1983, I went into the Air Force. I served two four-year terms and worked a year at a job that didn't seem to be going anywhere, but I thought at 29 I was too old to go back to school. Then I saw a letter in your column from someone who said, "I've always wanted a college education, but if I go to school for four more years, I'll be 30 years old when I graduate." You said, "And how old will you be in four years if you DON'T go back to school and graduate?" That did it for me.

Thank you from the bottom of my heart for giving me the much-needed push to go back to school.

MARTY G. IN DENVER
DEAR MARTY G.: Thank you! Your letter made my day.

CONFIDENTIAL TO CURIOUS IN CHARLESTON: Men who mis-calculate are called "mathematically challenged." Women who miscalculate are called "mothers."

'Simply Stews' offers quick, elegant meals

By Jane Snow Knight-Ridder News Service

No time to simmer a hearty stew for hours? No problem.

No room-in-your-waistband-for-beef-and-vegetables swimming in gravy? No problem.

Susan Wyler has recipes for quick stews, low-fat stews, elegant stews, rich stews and even Sweet and Sour Duck Stew with Cherries. Her new book, "Simply Stews" (HarperPerennial, $10), is the last word on the subject.

"People think of stews as just beef, but there's a tremendous variety," Wyler says.

If Wyler's 100-plus recipes sound authoritative, it's because she has lived them. She gave up the elegant bistro life for the stew life six years ago, when she chucked her glamorous job as food editor of Food & Wine magazine and moved to a tiny town in northeastern Pennsylvania.

Wyler wanted to get away from the pressures of a fast-paced job and to live in a place where she could get to know her neighbors. She now edits cookbooks in a century-old farmhouse far from New York City.

Wyler not only learned to slow down, but she also learned a new way of entertaining.

"I find I entertain more frequently but much more casually," she says.

Pollucks are popular in the heartland, and even company meals are laid-back, she discovered. She is now more likely to serve a stew and a salad than wild mushroom ravioli in sage butter blanc. But as a food editor, she couldn't resist improving on the stews in cookbooks, and creating recipes of her own.

Not all of her stews are slow-cooking. She developed recipes for a number of seafood and vegetarian stews that can be on the table in 15 minutes.

Long-simmered stews have their charms, though, and should not be ignored by cooks pressed for time, Wyler says.

They make the house smell wonderful on a winter day, and require little attention beyond the initial chopping and sauteing. In addition, most can be made in advance at the leisure of the cook and frozen for later. And best of all, they're practically impossible to ruin.

Still, there are good stews and there are great stews, and Wyler knows a few tricks for turning the former into the latter.

When a recipe calls for wine, don't use Chateau Lafite, but don't use a cheap inferior wine, either, she advises. Many decent wines are available in the $7 to $10 range and will be fine for cooking. Just make sure the wine tastes good in the glass before adding it to the kettle.

Cooking stew the correct length of time is important, she says. While seafood stews can be ruined by overcooking, some meat stews will be chewy and tough if taken from the fire too soon.

Using canned chicken broth (unsalted tastes best) is OK, but canned beef broth doesn't measure up in a stew, Wyler has found. She suggests either making homemade beef broth (her book contains recipes for very easy versions) or choosing recipes in which other liquids such as wine and beer are added to the broth for flavoring.

Another of Wyler's suggestions is to saute the vegetables in a recipe before adding liquid ingredients. The sugar in the vegetables caramelizes and gives the broth a richer color and flavor.

TRIPLE-MUSTARD CHICKEN DIJON

(Serves 6)
2 pounds skinless chicken breasts on the bone
2 pounds skinless chicken thighs
2 tablespoons butter
1 medium onion, minced
1/4 cup Dijon mustard, preferably imported
3 tablespoons honey mustard
2 tablespoons coarse-grained mustard
1/2 cup dry white wine, preferably Chardonnay

1/2 cups reduced-sodium chicken broth
1/2 cup sour cream

Separate breasts if they are attached and cut each in half crosswise. Trim away any fat from chicken.

Melt butter in a large flame-proof casserole. Cook onion over moderate heat until soft, about 3 minutes. Add chicken and cook until no longer pink on the outside, 5 to 7 minutes.

In a small bowl, whisk together the mustards and wine. Pour over chicken and bring to a boil. Add broth. Simmer partially covered for 25 to 30 minutes, until chicken is tender and cooked through. Remove from heat and stir in sour cream. The stew reheats well and can be frozen for up to 3 months.

Catering and banquet facilities are available.

Kirt L. Martin, head chef, attended the Gordon Bleu school in Ottawa, Canada. Brent Jenks, assistant chef, is also French trained.

Martin claims cooking is in his blood. He is from a three-generation restaurant family in Minnesota. He lived in the Magic Valley area for 10 years before opening the Snake River Grille in April 1995. His business partner, Carol Childs, is also from Minnesota. She moved to the Magic Valley last spring when the restaurant opened. Childs and Martin have been friends for 25 years. Jenks moved down from Sun Valley.

When Martin was attending the College of Southern Idaho, studying biology, he started a catering business. It grew. He liked catering better than biology and decided to work at food service full-time.

Snake River Grille is a Bistro style French restaurant, (a working man's restaurant.) Everything is cooked fresh from scratch. Martin uses only fresh ingredients. He grows his own herbs in an herb garden on the premises, uses imported chocolate from Switzerland, fresh meat and fish and fresh fruit in season.

BUDDY CHARLES MANNING/The Times-News

Kirt Martin, left, owner and head chef of the Snake River Grille, and assistant chef Brent Jenks offer classic French cuisine (such as this sturgeon timbale with artichoke vegetables and rice pilaf) at affordable prices.

On the extensive breakfast menu, the uncontested favorite is the Snake Eye Special - hashbrowns, cheese, bacon, onion, tomatoes, sour cream, salsa, and jalapeno peppers topped with two eggs fixed the way the customer likes. The customer also gets a choice of strawberries and whipped cream or butter and bacon. Biscuits and sausage gravy are always a country favorite. Eggs Benedict will be added to the menu starting in March.

You can overcome a cluttered office

Most of the rooms in my homes are neatly arranged, but for years the office in my Connecticut house was in a state I like to refer to as "organized chaos."

It was a room in which I was the only one who knew where anything was. Every pile had its place and if someone else disturbed things, no one could find anything.

Eventually, I decided that I needed a better workplace in my home. It sounds like a big project, but the key was tearing down a wall of closets that separated the back hall from the office and removing a useless configuration of shelving and cupboards. A new wall of closets was built, each with a very specific purpose: one for stationary and office supplies; one for television, video, fax, stereo and phone equipment, one for files and mail; and one for coats.

I also had new windows installed so that I would have a better view into the garden.

What a difference! My new office has light and air, and it inspires me. I've also reorganized the office in my East Hampton home so that I have a comfortable, organized place to work at all times.

You may be thinking about creating an office in your home - whether it's to keep on top of household finances or to do work for a job you hold outside the home. I certainly recommend it. Just as it is vital for children to have a place where they can play and study, we adults need a place of our own to work and think.

It doesn't have to be a large space. The computer already permits us to consolidate greatly by allowing us to store large amounts of paperwork and even pay bills without writing checks.

And creating an office doesn't need to involve construction or major purchases. Just look at the space in your home imaginatively. I've seen wonderful, efficient offices set up in attics, tucked into alcoves and even built into closets.

An office can also be integrated into your main living space, such as the kitchen or family room - or any place you feel comfortable.

Once you've decided on the space, here are some basic tips for keeping things neat and organized:

1. Hook a plastic basket underneath the desk to neatly hold all the wires from computer equipment, lamps, and so on. Be sure to label each wire with a tag so it can be easily identified.
2. Be creative with in/out boxes. Get antique containers from tag sales or from computer equipment stores from photo supply stores. Try using cane baskets or fabric-covered shoe boxes.
3. Put file cabinets, printer stands and other accessories on casters so they can be rolled away into a closet when not in use.
4. Spray-paint metal file cabinets to match decor.
5. You don't need to purchase a traditional desk. An old table covered with a blotter can work just as well. For an economical purchase, restaurant-kitchen stainless-steel tables can be cut to measure.
6. Keep letters, memos, etc. neat and visible by covering with a fly screen made to cover dishes.
7. Wooden cubbyhole boxes are great for holding all sorts of small supplies, such as pens, pencils, Scotch tape, rulers, scissors. If you line the bottoms with felt, the boxes will slide like drawers. An old spice box can also serve this purpose.
8. Use linen or other fabric to make covers for your computer keyboard to protect it from dust.
9. If you set up in an attic, paint the floor and ceiling a bright color to help eliminate a closed-in feeling.
10. Be sure to include a bulletin board to display memos, phone numbers, photographs and such.

Observe St. Patrick's Day with a little Irish flavor: Pepper-Apricot Glazed Corned Beef, Colcannon-Style Potatoes and Irish Wheaton Bread, left, and St. Pat's Potato Pizza, above.

Celebrating a taste o' the Irish

Even if you haven't kissed the Blarney Stone or walked over rolling hills clustered with lucky shamrocks, you can still bring the tradition and charm of the Emerald Isle into your home with a celebratory feast in honor of St. Patrick. You don't need to be Irish to enjoy the time-measured taste of savory Pepper-Apricot Glazed Corned Beef. It's an easy and delicious way to share a taste o' the Irish with family and friends. Serve with a round, golden loaf of Irish Wheaton Bread and a side of Colcannon-Style Potatoes, and the celebration can begin.

Simplicity is the highlight of preparing corned beef brisket. Your secret to success is gently simmering the beef brisket until fork tender. For the finishing touch, prepare a fruity glaze with readily available ingredients - apricot preserves, red

Inquiring readers want to know

Dear Cathy,
Could you please tell me what to use on spiders and mildew on roses? Also, a good cure for slugs? Thank you.

— R.A., Gooding

Dear R.A.,
Thanks for writing. It was good to talk with you about what's bugging your garden. It's unusual for roses to have spiders on them, but now it makes sense when you tell me that they're against the house and there are large spider webs on the wall. I'm guessing that the tiny black spiders you are seeing are baby spiders, not spider mites, as I originally thought.

It seems that the aphids on your roses, and possibly spider mites, are providing a ready-made cafeteria for your spider population. The spider offspring are attracted to the aphids and spider mites, making a whole community of critters.

Cathy Wahworth
Green thumbprints

First, I would treat the soil and mulch with a granular insecticide labeled for spiders. Read and follow label directions.

Since your roses also have a mildew problem, please get some Funginex, which is a fungicide/insecticide combination for mildew and bugs. Read the entire label and follow the directions. Your lack of success in the past is a result of having no spray program in place.

In the future, mark your calendar with dates when you plan to do your follow-up fungus spraying; then do it. Early morning hours are best, and be sure to thoroughly coat the undersides of the leaves, as well as the stems. Water early in the day and don't let the rose leaves get wet, because damp environments encourage fungal growth. Slugs can be controlled with any slug bait. Put the bait in a plastic margarine container after you've cut a doorway out of the edge. Pour some slug bait onto the upside-down lid, snap the bottom on and set your slug trap in the garden upside down. Put a rock on top of the trap to keep dogs out.

If you have more questions, please let me know.

Dear Cathy,
I'm anxious to contact the local secretaries for the iris and rose societies. Can you furnish the addresses?

Keep track of scissors, pins, needles

While visiting a craft and sewing store recently, I was amazed at the wide array of sewing and craft organizers available. There were big and little ones, round and square ones, compact ones that opened up to full size — why there was even one you could design yourself. I was impressed, to say the least.

My mind began racing as I imagined how totally organized I could be. I decided to go home and think about which organizer would work best for me, although I could have easily filled and used them all. That evening I was visiting with one of my neighbors when something hanging on her wall caught my eye.

"What is that?" I asked her.
What she showed me was the simplest and most effective sewing and craft organizer I had seen anywhere. I wondered why I hadn't thought of it first. Maybe it was just too simple of an idea.

All you need to make this organizer are three main items. I am sure you have these at home already — a tape measure, a small pin cushion and a small pair of scissors. Grab your glue gun and you are ready to make this handy companion.

On one end of the tape measure, Keep up with the Times.

This handy creation keeps sewing needs close by.

you will attach the scissors. A small piece of elastic looped through one of the handles works well. You can either glue or sew the elastic onto the tape measure. Other ideas would include using ribbon or string.

To the other end of the tape measure, attach your small pin cushion, again using either glue or by hand sewing into place.

When you are finished, place the tape measure around your neck, having the scissors on one side and the pin cushion on the other. It is so easy and so efficient. Whenever you are sewing or crafting, your scissors, pins, and a tape measure are always within easy reach. No more looking and digging for them when you need them.

When not in use, simply hang your organizer on a small hook or nail in your sewing or craft room. Don't you just love simple, cheap, and clever ideas?

Interior shutters can save heat, money

Q: It gets chilly near our family room windows at night. I'm on a very limited budget. Are there any simple designs of attractive interior window shutters that I can make myself? - G. R.

A: Interior window shutters not only save energy year-round, but they provide privacy and increased security. You will be amazed at how much warmer you will feel sitting near a covered window, especially at night.

Sensible home
James Dudley

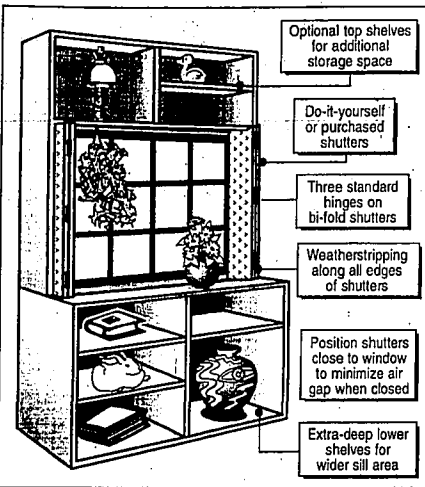

A combination bookcase/shutter is the most attractive and easiest design to build yourself. Using standard plywood and lumber keeps the cost low. It is designed so that the opened shutters fold against the sides of the bookcase.

Use inexpensive purchased or homemade shutters and build a bookcase around them. Extending the lower portion of the bookcase further from the wall provides a wider window sill and additional storage space.

For maximum comfort and efficiency, make sure to weatherstrip the gaps around the shutters and between each hinged shutter section.

Vinyl bled weatherstripping, which is nailed on, is effective and easily installed. It compresses when the shutters are closed, keeping out cold air.

Solid shutter panels are the easiest to make. Most of the energy savings is gained just by blocking room air circulation against the cold windows. Insulated shutters are somewhat more efficient, but they are thicker and are not as easily hidden when they are opened.

Bookcase/shutters save energy and increase security.

Mount the shutters close to the window. A narrower gap between the shutters and the window glass is better. With a narrower gap, less energy-wasting air currents circulate in between the shutter and the cold glass surface.

Louvered shutters are particularly attractive, but you will sacrifice some efficiency. If you install them, position the slats so, from top to bottom, they slant from indoors to outdoors. This helps keep the colder air by the window from flowing out into your room.

To make your own shutters without a bookcase, use an accordion-style bi-fold design. When opened and folded flat against the wall, they extend out from your wall only double the width of the shutter material. Insulated shutters can be made by covering thin rigid foam insulation with wood veneer.

If you use many narrow sections (instead of a bi-fold), the shutters are thicker when opened, but don't extend out as far from the wall. While these shutters look nice, they aren't as energy efficient since there are more gaps between the additional sections allowing more air leakage.

Write for Update Bulletin No. 843 showing do-it-yourself instructions, illustrations and materials list for making a combination window shutter/bookcase, simple insulated shutters and exterior storm windows. Please include $2 and a business-size SASE.

Write to James Dudley, 6906 Royalgreen Drive, Cincinnati, Ohio 45244.

Q: I have aluminum siding on my house. There is a gap between the flashing around the window and the siding. Shouldn't this gap be caulked to stop air and water leakage? - R. K.

A: The gap should not be caulked if the siding was installed properly. Metal siding, especially aluminum, expands as the temperature changes. The gap is necessary to accommodate this expansion without buckling. The flashing around the window frame probably is caulked and nailed underneath before the siding was installed. This provides the seal. Caulk the other openings without flashings, like electrical outlets and faucets.

Look closely at what sellers say are antiques

Knight-Ridder/News Service

AN OLD SCAM: If you're going out antiquing this spring, take a magnifying glass and ruler with you. They can help you spot tiny flaws that indicate the purported antique is a fake, furniture expert George Read tells Good Housekeeping magazine. For example, Read says, wood shrinks across the grain. If a round tabletop is perfectly round when measured in two directions, it's new. If the table really is old, there should be a difference of about one-eighth inch per foot. One further problem: Forgers sometimes will use genuinely old wood — from 18th century barns or houses — to make new tables billed as antiques. This is especially common with country pine furniture, Read warns.

Solutions for water in basement can range from simple to complex

If a basement takes on water when it rains, the solution can range from a few relatively simple steps to complex and expensive improvements such as French drains and sump-pump systems.

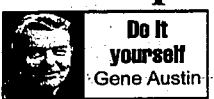

The simple steps should always be tried first, since they sometimes will either stop or greatly relieve the problem.

Effective rain gutters are the first line of defense against basement water. Gutters that overflow or leak badly, and downspouts that dump rain water close to the foundation are among the chief causes of basement flooding. Check gutters and downspouts for clogs, which are often caused by accumulated leaves, needles and twigs from surrounding trees. Scrape clogs out of gutters with a garden trowel or paint scraper. Downspouts can be freed of clogs by inserting a plumber's snake (a flexible cable or steel tape) and working it up and down.

Some downspouts empty into underground drain pipes, which, if working properly (not blocked), are effective in disposing of rainwater. Other downspouts might have only a short elbow at the bottom or empty into a so-called splash block, a channel of concrete or asphalt block. This is often inadequate for getting rain water a safe distance from the foundation. A better method is to attach a leader or extension to the bottom of the downspout so the water is carried out at least four or five feet.

Special fold-up extensions can be bought at home centers and hardware stores if permanent extensions get in the way during lawn mowing or other activities.

The best way to determine if a gutter system is working properly is to check

Do it yourself

during a heavy rain, when hidden blockages and points of poor drainage are easier to detect. In some cases, regrading of the ground close to the foundation will help prevent puddling of water in areas that will cause basement leaks. Ground close to the foundation should slope away from the house, not toward it.

Another simple step that can help keep basements dry is to repair any openings in the foundation where water can enter. Again, the best time to trace these leaks is during a heavy rain. From the inside, observe where water is entering the basement and mark the points with a piece of chalk to identify them for repair.

One common point of water entry is the joint of the basement walls and floor. Cracks between concrete blocks and openings around pipes or ducts are other vulnerable points.

Basement cracks generally are best patched with hydraulic cement, a special fast-setting cement that expands as it cures. Expansion helps lock the patch in place. Hydraulic cement also will cure even if the crack is wet or actively leaking.

Hydraulic cement is sold at many home centers and hardware stores under such brand names as Fast Plug and Waterplug. A 10-pound can of Fast Plug costs about $12. Before using hydraulic cement, read the directions carefully and follow all cautions. Cracks to be patched with hydraulic cement, or any patching cement, should be cleaned thoroughly with a wire brush to remove dirt and loose fragments. Small cracks can be patched more effectively if they are enlarged with a chisel. (Wear goggles to protect against flying fragments.)

Readers' questions and comments are welcome and should be sent to Gene Austin, the Philadelphia Inquirer, Box 861, Blue Bell, Pa. 19422. Questions cannot be answered personally.

Take time to check inside and outside your home for safety hazards. Money, time can make home safer

By Marty Hair and Lon Grossman
Knight-Ridder News Service

Safety can be cheap — especially considering the alternative.

Resolve to get to know your neighbors if you don't already. People who feel part of a neighborhood or community are more likely to take an interest — and call authorities if they see something unusual outside a home. As a group, you may want to form a neighborhood watch program; check with the local police department for specifics.

Compile a photo inventory of the house and its contents. It will help you remember what you had in case of fire or theft, and could be valuable in forming an insurance claim. Use or rent a camera or a video camera or buy a disposable camera.

Photograph everything, including contents of drawers and closets, art work, jewelry, knickknacks. If you save receipts, copy them to keep with the photo inventory. After the film is developed, put the inventory and receipts in a safe deposit box or give them to a friend or relative for safekeeping. Cost: $100 or less.

Loose carpeting can cause trips and falls. If you can't replace the carpet immediately, remove it and use the exposed flooring. Or cut a piece of matching carpet from a hidden spot, such as under a bed or sofa. Cut out the worn section and trim the new piece to fit. Secure with double-stick tape. Cost: $2.

Secure area rugs. Carpet stores carry a non-skid spray (from PDI Inc., $5.98) to apply on the underside. Another option is double-stick tape to keep the rug in place on the floor. Or buy a rubberized mat and cut to fit the rug size (the 4-by-6 foot Rug Grabber is $5.97).

Check handrails. If loose, tighten the screws and secure with wall anchors (under $1 per package of two).

Inspect all lamps and appliances, including the vacuum cleaner, for cords that are worn, frayed, cracked or brittle. Cords should bend easily without cracking. Cost: $3 to replace both cord and plug yourself, under $35 to have it done by an electrician.

Install ground fault circuit interrupters (GFCIs) in the kitchen, bathroom, garage and any place water is used (one exception: not in the outlet where the washer plugs in; the vibrations could set off the interrupter). GFCIs shut off power almost instantly to prevent electrocution. Before installing a GFCI, turn off electrical power at the circuit breaker or fuse box. Test a GFCI each month by pushing the reset button. Cost: $6 each; electricians charge an additional $50 to $75 for labor and the service call.

Twice a year, clean each circuit breaker by flipping it on and off. This gets rid of any oxidation and corrosion. Cost: $0.

Install at least two carbon monoxide detectors — one in the basement, about 15 to 20 feet from the furnace, and another outside the sleeping area. These devices alert occupants to a buildup of carbon monoxide, an odorless, colorless and potentially lethal gas produced by a gas furnace. Detectors may be battery operated, wired to the home electrical system or wired with a battery backup. Put them in the same places that are prime for smoke detectors: where the air circulates freely and at least 6 inches from a ceiling-wall corner. Cost: $30 to $70.

Installing, add or replace smoke detectors.

At a minimum, smoke detectors should be installed on the basement stairs and at the top of every stairway as well as near the bedrooms; some people put one in each bedroom. Accumulated dirt and grease may impair older smoke detectors. At this price, it's better to replace an old one than to take a risk. They are available battery operated (some guaranteed for several years) or may be wired to the house electrical system. Cost: $5 to $15 per smoke detector.

Have a family meeting to discuss what to do in case of a fire. Pick the best evacuation routes from different parts of the house. Agree on a specific spot to meet outside the house. Tell each family member never to re-enter a burning house; go to a neighbor's to call the fire department. Cost: $0.

Store lawn mowers and other gear-around equipment outside the home. In the basement, fumes could explode, even if you think the tank is empty. Cost: $0.

USE A LITTLE RESTRAINT WITH YOUR KIDS.

Sometimes you just gotta put kids in their place. And when you're on the road, that place is buckled in their own safety belts, and firmly. Do this, and your kids will be more than ready for the long road ahead of them.

YOU COULD LEARN A LOT FROM A DUMMY.

BUCKLE YOUR SAFETY BELT.

Expand horizons of taste with Finnish breads

When Hubby and I were in college, one of our favorite entertainment activities was to invite several foreign students to an international potluck dinner at our house. Each guest had to bring a dish from his or her homeland, then share a story about the food or customs of the country.

Through these international potluck dinners, we sampled food from many lands - Africa, India, Australia, Pakistan, Turkey, Sweden, Norway, Mexico, Argentina, Canada, Britain, Ireland, and Finland to name a few.

Through the years, both in college and after, we have enjoyed contact with people of other cultures. We've even hosted a few foreign exchange high school students. One young fellow, Mikko, loved to cook and treated us to many delicious homemade foods from his native Finland. His specialty was bread.

He claimed that hard, black bread was the definitive Finnish food. Finland is bread land, he said. Finnish bread has a hole in the center, like a large donut, and is usually hung on a pole to store.

After Mikko returned home, his mother sent us a collection of Finnish recipes to try. Here are three different bread recipes he liked to make.

COFFEE BREAD

- 1/4 cups milk
- 1 ounce yeast
- 1 egg
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 1/2 cup sugar
- 1/4 tablespoon cardamom
- 1 pound 1/4 ounces flour
- 3.5 ounces butter

Warm the milk to room temperature. Mix yeast into the milk. Beat the egg and add to the liquid. Add salt, sugar, and cardamom. Add flour and beat well. Add soft butter. Knead the dough till the butter is mixed in well and the dough separates from the bowl. Let it set for about 1/2 hour. Form into individual coffee loaves or large round loaf. Make a depression in the center of the large loaf. Let rise. The bread is ready when you press the surface of the dough and the depression bounces back. Bake large loaves at 375 degrees for 20 to 25 minutes or individual loaves 10 to 12 minutes.

BARLEY BREAD

- 1 pint milk or water
- 2 ounces yeast
- 2 teaspoons salt
- 2 1/2 cups barley flour
- 2 1/2 cups white flour

Warm the milk or water to room temperature and dissolve the yeast and salt. Whip in the barley flour and let it sit in a warm place for about an hour. Add the white flour and knead evenly. Let rise.

Form two round loaves. Make a hole in the center. Use plenty of flour since the dough will be soft. Let rise. Pierce with a fork and bake at 375 degrees for 25 minutes.

FINNISH BLACK BREAD

- 3 packages yeast
- 2 1/2 cups rye flour
- 2 1/2 cups white flour
- 1/2 cup molasses
- 2 tablespoons shortening
- 1 tablespoon poppy seeds
- 1 tablespoon salt

Dissolve the yeast in warm water. Combine rye flour, 1 cup white flour, molasses, shortening, poppy seeds and salt with softened yeast. Beat well. Stir in enough remaining white flour to make a stiff dough. Knead till smooth. Shape into a ball; place in greased bowl; turn once. Let rise till doubled in size. Punch down.

Divide in half. Shape into 2 balls. Make a hole in the center. Place on baking sheet. Let rise till double. Bake at 375 degrees about 30 minutes, till well browned.

Dixie Thomas Reale welcomes comments on recipes. Her address is 503 W. Eighth, Jerome, Idaho 83338.

Mayfield is filled with light

Take proper care of old mattresses

Varied roof lines, gently arched windows and a loft-covered entry create an eye-catching combination in the Mayfield, a mid-size, family-oriented home filled with light. This plan is narrow enough to fit on city lots.

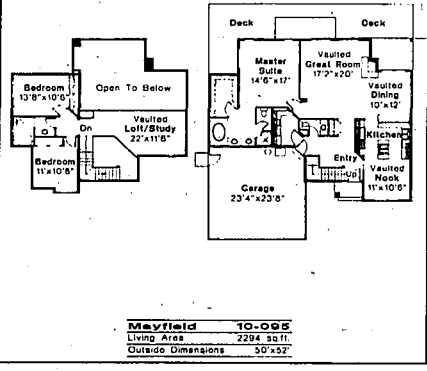

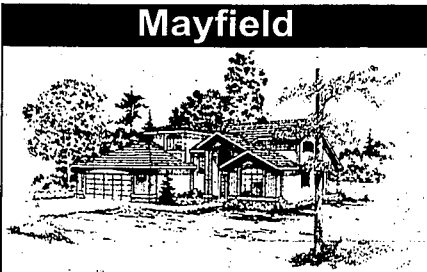

The whole right side of the main floor is devoted to family gathering spaces - great room, kitchen, nook, dining room and covered deck - creating a feeling of free-flowing openness. Sidelights flank the front door and sparkling panes of glass fill the arched transom overhead, bathing the entry hall and stairway in light. On a more practical note, a small powder room is immediately inside the front door.

Another arched window fills most of the front-facing wall in the nook. This attractive space offers an open invitation to linger awhile. Counter space in the kitchen is expanded by both a eating bar and a work island with built-in range and oven. Utilities are just across the hall. Sliders in the dining room open onto a covered deck with a large built-in planter.

Luxuries in the master suite include a large walk-in closet, an oversized neo-angle shower, a double vanity and a spa tub softly illuminated by light suffused through glass blocks.

Upstairs, two bedrooms share a bathroom and a long loft that overlooks the Mayfield's entryway as well as the great room. Arched windows on two sides make the loft a bright place for reading or studying.

For a review plan, including scaled floor plans, elevations, section and artist's conception, send $15 to Associated Designs, 1100 Jacobs Drive, Eugene Ore. 97402. Please specify the Mayfield 10-095 and include a return address when ordering. A catalog featuring more than 170 home plans is available for $12. For more information, call (800) 634-0123.

Alabama home to largest cake

Knights-Ridder News Service

FOR THE RECORD: The largest cake ever baked, according to the Guinness Book of World Records, was prepared in Fort Payne, Ala. in October 1989 to celebrate the town's 100th anniversary. It weighed 128,238 pounds.

DIETING IN GAZA: Among the several shelves of books in the Gaza office of Yasser Arafat, only one title is in English. It is "Stop Eating Now" by health food writer Jean Carper.

AN OLD DANGER: Storing an old mattress in your house? You may be adding fuel to a fire - particularly if the mattress was made before 1973, when the federal mattress flammability standard went into effect. A nationwide survey by the Sleep Products Safety Council found that two percent of respondents - representing about two million homes - said they have mattresses that predate the adoption of that standard. If you've got a mattress you need to lie on while watching the original episodes of "All in the Family," get rid of it.

The secrets of Jell-O

By Robin Eatin
The Associated Press

WOBURN, Mass. — A few years ago, it lobbyist offered to help state Rep. Carol Donovan visit the big, four-story, multi-story factory off Route 93, a few miles north of Boston.

But when Donovan appeared as scheduled, she was told she would not be given a tour. All she saw was the inside of a conference room.

"If there's nothing going on, why are they so protective and why are they keeping everyone out, and why are they so suspicious?" she asked. "It makes me suspicious of what's going on."

What is going on is not nuclear fission or top-secret weaponry. What's going on is Jell-O.

For the past 75 years, at the Atlantic Gelatin plant in Woburn, workers have been tinkering the stuff that wobbles, wiggles and jiggles, the stuff of America's Jell-O molds and Jell-O shots.

Here, in a plant that often emits odors - some pleasant, others very unpleasant - they make Jell-O. Just don't ask how. State Rep. Paul Casey, a Democrat who represents the neighboring towns of Winchester and Stoneham, was invited several years ago into a conference room to speak with factory officials - but the small room was as far as he got.

"It was like entering a concentration camp," Casey said.

Repeated requests for a plant tour by The Associated Press were refused.

"We generally don't give tours of the plant to anybody because what goes on in our plants we consider proprietary," said Nancy Daigler, spokeswoman for Kraft Foods (Atlantic is a division of Kraft, which is a subsidiary of Philip Morris, the food and tobacco conglomerate). "We are a food company and keeping things very sanitary are of utmost importance to us."

Daigler later accused a reporter who tried to visit the factory of trying to "sneak into the plant" behind one of the many gates that pass through the factory's gates. The reporter had headed an 8-foot fence, signs reading "STOP" and "no trespassing" and a security guard who said to turn around.

Obviously, this factory, with its trim landscaping, American flag blowing in the breeze and sprawling brick building, is not easily penetrable - unless you're bringing in animal parts.

Animal rendering is at the heart of the Jell-O manufacturing process. And for years now, some residents of the stable, working- and middle-class communities near the plant have been complaining that Atlantic Gelatin stinks up the neighborhoods.

Gelatin is made from the hide trimmings of cows and pigs, not from their horns, hooves or meat.

First, the skins are washed and bathed in hot water to remove the collagen. Once extracted, the collagen is soaked, filtered and purified, converting the collagen to gelatin, said Kraft spokeswoman Cathy Perm.

The gelatin extract is then evaporated and dried, and sent along with flavored powders to Dover, Del., and San Leandro, Calif. for packaging. Oils that are left in the hot water baths are sold for pharmaceutical and industrial use. Any remaining solids are removed and sold as compost.

As the hides are washed in large 70-foot vats, bits of fat, hair and skin come off into the water, said Mary Persley, an environmental analyst with the state Department of Environmental Protection and one of the few outsiders who has seen the inside of the plant.

Man's torte wins prize

DALLAS (AP) — A concoction featuring devil's food cake mix, canned sliced pears, nuts and butter-topped caramel-glaze topping meant big money today as a California dad became the first man ever to capture the grand prize in the superbowl of home baking.

Kurt Wait's Macadamia Fudge Torte garnered him $1 million in the Pillsbury Bake-off. Downing a 12th of the torte would garner YOU a whopping 460 calories.

Wait, a self-taught cook from Redwood City, Calif., competed with dozens of other cooks from around the country for the top award. Until today, 32 men had won prizes over the years, but none had walked away with the top award.

The 37th bake-off got a makeover last year when its Minnesota-based sponsor announced it was raising its grand prize from $50,000 and putting more stress on quick recipes to appeal to today's consumers.

Cooking for the national finals was done Monday at a downtown Dallas hotel. The 100 finalist measure, mix and bake from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m., each preparing their recipes two or three times.

The first bake-off, then called the Grand National Baking Contest, was held in 1949. The contest is sponsored by Pillsbury and Sears.

One slice of Kurt Wait's Macadamia Fudge Torte has 460 calories.

sausage served with three large country eggs, hashbrowns with sausage Bake-off. Downing a 12th of the torte would garner YOU a whopping 460 calories.

The lunch and dinner menu contains a wide selection of sandwiches like the Philly Sandwich — sliced roast beefed with onions, mushrooms, green peppers and melted Swiss cheese on a hoagie bun. The Meatloaf Sandwich is seasoned chicken breast filleted, char-broiled and topped with mild green chilies, melted Swiss cheese and served on a piping hot bun. All sandwiches are served with a choice of french fries, green beans, cole-slaw, potato salad or cottage cheese.

Soup is made fresh daily. Customers may order soup, soup and a sandwich or soup in a bread bowl.

There are children's, senior's, and light-eater's sections on the menu. They include small portions and half orders of many of the same dishes on the regular menu.

The dinner menu features three specials per night, which change daily.

In preparing the daily specials, Martin and Jenks experiment to create new items that may eventually find their way onto the permanent menu. The daily specials include a pasta dish, a fish dish and a meat dish. Martin likes to use a wide variety of pasta.

Such items as blue marlin and stewed mushrooms have been daily specials.

Grilled Sturgeon Fillet is the untested favorite on the dinner menu. It consists of a half-pound Hagerman sturgeon grilled to perfection and served with potato, rice pilaf, or stir-fry veggies, a dinner roll and soup or salad.

Another favorite is the Eye of Rib — a 10-ounce choice Angus ribeye steak topped with fresh sauteed mushrooms and served with potato, rice pilaf or stir-fry veggies, dinner roll and soup or salad.

Customers who prefer variety can have a combination dinner like steak and shrimp or scallops, chicken and shrimp or scallops.

Martin likes to cook light. He uses champagne for moisture in cooking rather than Pam or other pan sprays. He likes the flavor better. He says champagne is fat-free and the alcohol cooks off leaving a delicate flavor to the food or sauce. Martin goes through a case of champagne each week just for making sauces.

They make lots and lots of sauces at Snake River Grille — blueberry sauce, a 1/2 orange sauce, champagne sauce, white wine sauce, sweet and sour sauce, just to name a few.

Mushrooms are included with every meal at no extra charge.

At the Snake River Grille, gamishes have been elevated to an art form. All gamishes are fresh and edible. They include madish roses, onion roses, waffle puff pastry, butterfly potatoes and, in season, edible flowers.

The chefs at Snake River Grille do game dishes in classic French style. The customer supplies the game. For $10, the customer gets a five-course dinner. For $15, the customer gets a seven-course dinner. Call ahead to make arrangements.

Some of the game dishes Martin has made include Pheasant Ravioli with Dijon Cream Sauce, Pheasant Paté in Tomatoes, Duck Tenderloin 1/2 orange with Puff Pastry, Grilled Pheasant Breasts with Caesar Salad, Pheasant Breast 1/2 orange and Rice Pilaf and onion soup with game meat added.

When catering, Martin likes to serve between 200 and 500 people. The staff sets up portable grills, steam tables, dinner tables and chairs. If the party is outdoors, they also set up awnings and tents. The cooks dress in their white uniforms and chefs hats and put on quite a show.

Open ceiling beams, white walls, wood-paneled wainscoting and large picture windows give a wide open feeling to the restaurant. The open kitchen allows the customer to see and visit with the chefs as they prepare the food.

1 package Fleischmann's RapidRise

Cover; let rest on floured surface 10 minutes. Punch down dough. Form dough into small ball. Roll out dough to 14-inch round. Place on greased 14-inch pizza or baking sheet. Turn up edge and pinch to form 1/2-inch rim. Layer half of Swiss cheese and reserved potato mixture on dough. Bake at 400 degrees for 15 minutes on lowest oven rack.
