Officers known for battling drug war find themselves under attack

By Liz Wright Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – In their heyday, detectives Don Walden and Juan Nunez grabbed headlines as soldiers in the war on drugs.

Their drug stings, marijuana and cocaine seinures, and drugslord arrests net their drugs of the standing strates.

Last week, the headlines were ess flattering. The two men were acrossed in court of pretending that their antidrug office had been burglarized.

They also are accused of trying to cover up the disappearance of $40,000 that largely had been seized from suspects and was in the detective's safekeeping, according to a grand jury's inditment against the two.

Another jury will likely decide whether the two men are guilty as charged. They've pleaded innocent.

Experts see a familiar pattern in the failure of the Tri-County Drug Task Force, which operated outside the direct leadership of any established police force.

"Almost all cases like this occur when there is inept accountability," said Neal Trautman of the National Institute of Ethics, a non-profit organization that trains police in ethics. "They are an island unto themselves."

Indeed, no one except the two detectives was keeping watch over the money that Nunez and Walden seized from citizens or suspects, according to officials close to the investigation.

Parts of the drought-stricken southern Plains got enough rain Saturday to cause lowland flooding, while thunderstorms produced a rare funnel cloud and even snowflakes in Arizona.

Heavy rain fell in the Oklahoma Panhandle, where some areas have had virtually no rainfall since October. Up to 5 inches fell around Guymon, with 5.6 inches at Turpin. Flooding briefly closed one highway near Guymon.

Walden's S2,690 monthly salary was suspended May 17 pending the outcome of his criminal case, according to city personnel director Susan Harris. Walden, like any other employee accused of wrongdoing, will be investigated by the Twin Falls Police Department no matter the outcome of his criminal case, De-Vore said.

Another employee, Detective David Heidemann, also will be investigated by the department, De-Vore said, because the indictment against Walden mentioned that Heidemann oversaw an auction that awarded a seized weapon to a fellow law officer—the lowest, rather than the highest, bidder.

Heidemann, reached at home by The Times-News, threatened to visit the newspaper's office with his lawyer if he was quoted in this story. Heidemann said he had nothing to hide, but couldn't comment because he didn't want to jeopardize the criminal case against Walden and hadn't sought permission from DeVore to comment.

dited as a matter of routine. Outside accountants try to ensure that agencies' internal record keeping is accurate, horsest and lawful.

The task force faced audits too, but not of the money that detectives seized in arrests. Only funds that were received from other government entities came under the oversight of auditors.

"Up until now, no one had reason to do it," said Richard Bevan, Twin Falls County prosecutor and recent member of the task force board.

"The board thought audits were being done (by the state), but all the state was doing was checking for state compliance with the grants," Bevan added.

According to the indictment against Walden and Nunez, some of the money came from drug arrests, and other money was withdrawn from the task force bank account and never accounted for. State investigators tallied up more than $40,000, plus guns and drugs, missing from the task force.

That is so unbelievable," said Kara Peterson, a clerk for Cascia County.
The task force secretary "kept meticulous records and I helped her come up with the balance each year."

"I would have never known" that money was missing, Peterson said.
"What we knew is what they brought us. If they had $100,000 and they gave us $50,000, we would have never known that it was coming up short."

History

The task force was formed eight years ago with federal tax money to fight the spread of drugs in the Magic Valley. The idea as to ensure that law enforcement agencies would cooperate with each other and share tactics and information on their local drug communities.

One of the first in Idaho, the agency offered its policies and procedures as a model for other task forces starting up across Idaho.

Despite its successes, there were also constant problems: Some local law-enforcement agencies complained they weren't reaping any benefits from the force, and dwindling federal funds kept manpower and operations to a bare minimum. The task force changed its name - from the Magic Valley Drug Task Force. Financial oversight shifted to the city of Twin Falls, then Casia County.

The task force paid for undercover drug buys, confidential informants, agents' salaries and other expenses with seized money, federal tax dollars, money forfeited by drug dealers and restitution ordered by judges to be paid by convicted drug defendants.

In a typical operation, Tri-County Drug Task Force agents would raid a drug house, then store money and other evidence collected at the scene in lockers that they had sole responsibility for, according to officials who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The agents were required to log the evidence in reports, which were filed or sent to prosecutors to press charges against drug suspects. But they also had plenty of opportunity to take money out of the lockers at any time, and had keys to open the other of the control of the collection. Last week, Walden and Nunet vert indicted on a combined total of nine charges, including netketering, missing public money and conspiracy to conceal evidence. Both have pleaded innocent to the charges.

Temptation

Temptation

According to national crime and ethics experts, narrotics investigations present the highest temptation for graft.

"Imagine a career of violence and distrust, then imagine getting caught in a squeeze financially and saying to yourself, 'Hey it doesn't matter anymore, and you slip over the line." said Eric Sterling, of the Criminal Justice Policy Foundation in Washington D.C.

Sterling, a former criminal defense lawyer, professor and overseer of drug enforcement policies for the U.S. House of Representatives, said that unlike patrol officers, undercover narcotics agents spend their careers trying to betray trust within drug circles "like a con man," Sterling said.

"Its a form of acting." Sterling said. "To become a convincing dope dealer, the temptation to break the law in order to create a believable fiction often really tempts you over the line.

"You can become in some ways self-loating." Sterling said. "You started out trying to be a good guy, now you look in mirror and you dress; look and talk like a criminal! How different are you from a criminal? You may begin to think its doesn't make any difference. You whole life becomes a lie. Its a very tough business."

Plus, he added, "no matter how many people you bust, you don't stop the problem. The demand is so great. Narcotics officers may realize it doesn't make a difference if they seize this pound of marijuana, it's not going to mean fever pot smakers in Idaho.

There becomes that kind of cynicism - and the money is enormous," Sterling said. "He may begin to say it doesn't make a difference in law it informants, people who labalism with informants, people who labalism with informants, people who labalism with informants, people who labalism of the street of not. Also you are constantly dealing with informants, people who labalism with informants, people who labalism with informants, people who labalism with the constant of addition of investigators and the money of the street of not. Also you are constantly dealing and agents keeping different bours, a sid. Although they're ostengin to any degree the forces have a different building and agents keeping different bours, a it's more difficult to supervise, rather than a detective that is working right next to you everyday." Trautman said.

Clean careers

Before January 1995, detectives Walden and Nunez had no appar-ent problems during their careers in law enforcement.

Walden is a long-time Twin Falls policeman who grew up mostly in Filer, the son of a farmer and canal company employee. After graduating from Filer High School in 1958, he left for California and spent 12 years rising through the rauks of the San Francisco Police Department.

During his tenure in San Francisco. Walden won three bronze medals for valor and a commendation from the police commission, said Capt. Charles Hoenisch of the San Francisco Police Department.

Twin Falls County Courthouse records reveal that Walden had occasional financial troubles. At least three times since 1990, the courts have ordered his wages garnisheed to pay minor personal debts.

"Just because there were some bills I couldn't pay, it certainly doesn't mean you are a thief," Walden has said.

Nuner also spent time in California: he worked for the Dos Palos Police Department from 1977 to 1981 before moving to the Magic Valley, where his extended family lives, said his attorney. Tim Walams of Twin Falls.

The Walden has a said.

For Holice Department from 1983 to 1985, then Juned the Bull Police Department from 1981 to 1985, then Juned the Bull Police Department Filer Police Chief Donald Barkley said he was "unprised, having known both of them." Nuner always did his job property, followed instructions and was "easy to get along with," he said.

As for Walden, "Tve known Don Walden for 15 years, and I knew, him as a good supervisor," Barkley said. "It was shocking ... anytime an officer is accused of something it is disappointing."

Nunez is fighting back with charges of his own, spring Cassia County, Twin Falls city and Twin Falls County failed "to provide acqueste training and supervision," according to a $100,000 tort chaim which alleges wrongful termination and defamation.

"These gentlemen aren't account.

But Dole was absent a lot. A story often told has Robin writing a note to her father asking if she can get her ears pierced, and he answering "maybe" by chocking a box. But she says now that from her perspective, Dole was an attentive father.

There were some special times: dinners with President Nixon at the White House and a two-week trip to Europe when Robin was 13, including her first visit to the Italian town where Dole was wounded in 1945. Dole taught Robin how to drive; her mother was too nervous.

When Robin was a senior in high school, her parents diwreed. She said it wasn't an acrimonious split; The former Mrs. Dole has appeared at past Dole campaign events to demonstrate their cordiality.

Clinton vows to maintain strong military

Strong military

WASHINGTON (AP) —
President Clinton, honoring the men and women who died in military service, defended on Saurday America's global military role, saying it "is making our people safer and the world more secure."

As the Memorial Day weekend began, Clinton devoted his weekly radio address to honoring members of the U.S. armed forces are the best trained, best requipped, best, prepared in the world and I am determined to keep them that way," he said from the Oval Office in the White House, "This is the surest guarantee of our security and our freedom."

Despite the end of the Cold War, the president said America's soldiers, airmen and sailors continue to play an essential role and "are the backbone of the American leadership that is the source of strength at home and our success around the world."

"Whether preventing conflict in the Persian Gulf, reducing the nuclear threat as we have done in North Korea, working with other nations to fight common dangers like terrorism, drug trafficking and organized crime, strengthening our alliances in Asia and Europe, or isolating rogue nations like Libya and Iraq, steady strong American leadership is making our people safer and the world more secure, 'said Clinton.

The president will formally mark Memorial Day on Monday at a wreath-laying ceremony at Arlington National Cemetery.

Fireworks tariff

Fireworks tariff nearly doubled by provision

Dy provision

Washington (AP) — Mickey
Mouse is doing a dow burn.

An obscure provision in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, a worldwide pact that took effect last year, more than doubled the tariff on imported fireworks, most of which are made in China.

Now The Walt Disney Co, one of the nation's higgest user of display fireworks, and a group of family-owned businesses that put on fireworks shows are adsing Corquest to cut the tariff for fireworks used in displays.

The higher duty costs the industry an estimated $400,000 a year, mere pocket change for Disney.
But officials in the industry, say the higher cost could scale back traditional July 4 fireworks displays.

"Upwards of 70 percent of the customers of these fireworks companies are states and local governments," said Ron Olenick, a lawyer for the American Pyrotechnics Association.

Elusive factors cause accidents

The Associated Press

The crash of ValuJet Flight 592 has put the spotlight on a grim irony of modern aviation. Decades of advances in air safety have made the causes of dissaters more difficult to unravel and prevent.

At one time, when an airliner crashed, investigators could often point to a single, overriding cause—failure of a crucial piece of equipment or a caustamphic error by the pilot.

But accidents now tend to occur when a string of clusive factors line up like a grotesque version of the cherries on a Las Vegas slot machine.

"It takes a very large chain of events that may start years before the accident occurs for an accident occurs for an accident to happen," said Paul Russell, an aeronautics englineer who heads safety analysis for Boeing Co. "The links in these accident chains are extremely hard to identify and elimination of the control of the property of the propert

"The system has gotten safer because we fixed the obvious problems," said R. John Hansman, director of the Aeronautical Systems Laboratory at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

A few minutes before the arrest, a naked man walked up to the trash bin in a shopping district near the University of Oklahoma and threw a bloody knapsack inside, witness Mike Kelly said:

A second witness saw the naked man walk down a nearby alley and enter the rooming house's back door, Pearo said.

Thekla Mednico, Smith's landfort, said that she had ordered him to leave earlier in the week because he had been acting erratically and was tearing down walls.

WASHINGTON — Insect infestation, fetid air and stacked bodies plague the District of Columbia morgue, the latest city office to fall victim to the mounting cash shortage in the nation's capital.

City officials said that it will cost about $800,000 to make immediate repairs and that $3 million will ultimately be needed to improve conditions at the morgue. But that may be hard to come by for a city with an accumulated deficit of $378 million. "We should have these body bags, but we don't," said autopsy technician Andrew Mason. "What is a morgue without a body bag? We have to use sheets."

A text of Rehnquist's speech was made available to reporters.

"This observation, that the practice of law'is today a business where once it was a profession, has considerable truth," he said.

Urging the law school graduates to consider options other than joining large law firms in large cities, Rehnquist drew a dismal picture despite calling the law with most satisfying way of making a living that I know of."

"Large firms simply cannot economically justify taking on small matters, and so they end up with only large clients, he said. "Large clients," he said. "Large clients," he said. and their clients, Rehnquist suggested.

In earlier times, said the head of the Supreme Court, there was fan element of trust and understanding between a law firm and its long-term clients. That relationship may be diminishing today," he added.

"Clients regarded lawyers as supplying a sort of service different in kind from that supplied by their vendor of office supplies or raw materials," Rehnquist said.

"But if the law firm simply counts the number of hours spent and send a bill for that amount, perhaps there isn't any great difference between the law firm... and the office supply vendor who simply counts the number of pencils furnished and sends a bil."

The chief justice reminded his audience that "in choosing a job, you are very likely choosing a lifestyle."

First lady wants another child

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hillary Rodham Clinton says that "it would be terrifie" if she and the president had another child and that they also have been discussing the possibility of adoption, according to a published report.

Mrs Clinton in the past has acknowledged difficulties huving children and has been a strong activist on behalf of adoption.

But in an interview with Time magazine, the said that she continues to hope for a shiring for 16-year old Obelesa. "I would be surprised, but not disappointed. My friends would be

Mrs. Clinton, 48, said she and the president also "continue to talk about" adopting a child, but that those talks aren't likely to get serious until after the November election.

"There's just too much going on on our lives right now," she said in the interview. "I just think that giving a child a chance and sharing what you have with a child is one of the greatest gifts you can give yourself, as well as a child.

Train buffs gather just to watch

GLENDALE, Calif. (AP) — When Gene Kramer saw her long, slender frame for the first time, it was love at first sight.

She was the most beautiful thing he had ever seen and he couldn't take his eyes off her.

He tried to get her attention and waved, but it was no use. She didn't even slow down. After all, this train had passengers to take somewhere and she wasn't going to stop for a little kid.

Since that day 50 years ago, when Kramer saw a locomotive for the first time, his love affair with trains has only grown. He's one of about a dozen longtime enthusiasts who gather almost every morning at the Glendale train station to watch locomotives as they can through the depot.

And if there's ever a day he doesn't feel like going, his wife provides the proper motivation.

"If there's a day that I'm thinking about not going, she'll say, 'Go'down there and talk to them of' buzzards,' "Hawkins said." Otherwise, I'd sit around the house and watch TV. This is better than going down to the beer joint."

Hunger strike ends with freed computers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Three protesters ended a 94-day hunger strike early Saturday morning when the Treasury Department released more than 300 computers it had seized as an illegal shipment to Cuban medical centers.

The computers won't straight to Cuba. Under a federal agreement signed late Friday, the United Methodis Church pets custody of them until the government decides if they meet requirements for humanitarian aid.

"We see this as progress," said the Rev. Lucius Walker, the director of Pastors for Peace, after ending his fast. "Will they ultimately get to Cuba? I believe so."

The Methodist church, which volunteered as an intermediary in the dispute, agreed to ensure the equipment "is not exported to Cuba in the absence of a license, says the deal drawn up by Treasury.

How ironic – and how sad – that this organization, that did so much to further the cause of racial justice during the 1950s and of basic civil liberties during the early '60s, ought to have transformed itself from the decil's advocate into his lawyer.

The ACLU's operating theory in the '90s, it seems to us, can be sum-marized in the "liberation" philoso-phy that lawyer William Kunstler and other radicals articulated dur-me the '60s'.

Once — just once — wouldn't it be refreshing to see the ACLU go to bat for, say, the victims of street crime?

Maybe, perish the thought, it might even consider using its well-honed guerrilla legal skills against a gang, in defense of the law-abiding residents of a neighborhood being terrorized by gang members.

But don't hold your breath.

Passionate indignation for the plight of the Willie Hortons of this world plays much better at the white-wine-and-brie fund-raisers favored by the limousine liberals and eggheads who give the ACLU both its money and its mission.

The unfortunate part is that the ACLU is, in the long run, harming the very rights it purports to defend.

Thirty years ago, in the wake of the U.S. Supreme Court's landmark ruling on Arizona vs. Miranda that established the right to be treated fairly if you're arrested for a crime, there was broad public support for defending civil liberties.

Nowadays, polls have shown, most Americans think street-wise criminals and their bleeding-heart lawyers abuse Miranda and the exclusionary rule to get away with murder.

Court resorts to 'substantive due process'

Court resorts

In 1914, early in a career that established him as America's greatest jurist never elevated to the Supreme Court. Learned Hand, a believer in democracy and hence in judicial extriction to the Supreme Court. Learned Hand, a believer in democracy and hence in judicial establishment, and the constitution's guarantee of "due process of law" to overturn laws that regulated economic transactions. This was "substantive due process, the tendentious doctrine that many government actions distasteful to judges can be baddly declared to be the results of constitutionally impermissible processes.

This doctrine caused Hand to declare "contempt" for what "pose by the name of Constitutional Law". "I can scarcely think of a matter to which the human mind has been applied with less credit to itself than that. Last week the Court again resorted to "substantive due process." It did so by investing with constitutional significance the raising of judicial eyelrows.

The case concerned a 52 million punitive damage award teut from $4 million by a judge by an Alabama jury to the purchaser of a BMW who had not been told that, because of minor paint damage in supment, but had been partially repainted. The out of the purchaser of the purchaser of the supplies of the sup

The fairness of awards must be measured against the reprehensible nature of the offense, against the harm suffered by the plaintiff, and against teglisated sanctions for comparable misconduct. But these guide lines only give a patina of principle to an idea resistant to principled application – that "unconstitutional" is a sponym for "unfair," as justices intuit "fairness" day to day.

This usurpation of state legislatures' responsibilities for another aspect of the nation's legal affairs – this discovery of a constitutional guarantee that damage awards will not be "excessive" – might at least be understandable, Scalia said, if the Court 'had something useful to say." But the Court's guidelines – "criss-crossing platitudes," Scalia called them – provide no principled guidance. Instead, by the logic of its decision the Court affirmed what Scalia calls the "stupefy-

e due process
ing principle" that "every dispute as to evidentiary sufficiency in a state evil suit poses a question of constitutional moment, subject to review in this Court." The Court has now told plaintiffs that if they can convince it that their treatment has been very unfair, the Court will call that treatment unconstitutional.

A silver liming: Perhaps the Court has now made so much new "substantive due process" work for itself, it will be too busy to wreck the rest of the Constitution.

In moving to monitor punitive awards, the Court has trespassed on a responsibility of the states, announcing (as it has regarding abortion, homosexuals rights and other matters) that it will decide things. And it has done this at a moment when democracy is working, justice Ginsburg, joined in dissent by Rechaptix, notes that many legislatures are reforming punitive damage procedures. But, then, the Court may resent rived legislatures are reforming punitive damage procedures. But, then, the Court may resent rived legislatures are reforming punitive damage procedures. But, then, the Court may resent rived legislatures are reforming the process of the democracy. And many period democracy. And many the research of the democracy of the research of the democracy of the research of the democracy of the research of the democracy in the second policies.

In 1984, in his 87th year, Learned Hand, lecturing at Harvard in praise of judicial modesty, declared, "Il would be most irksome to be ruled by a bevy of Platonic Guardians." Because of judicial imperialism, we are increasingly so ruled, and democracy is or debilitated that Americans no longer seem to find such rule irksome.

Gough knows who he works for Cough Knows who he works for The residents of Gooding County will soon be given the opportunity that has long been needed, the chance to pick the right man for a tough and important job. Shaun Googh's campaign for Gooding County sheriff is the first in a number of years that trally offers Gooding County a can-didate that has the required background, along with the youthful energy that is an ab-solute must for today's law enforcement needs.

solute must for today's law enforcement needs.

Shaun is a graduate of the Intermountain Law Enforcement Executive Command College. This program is written by the FBI and modified by the Idaho Department of Law Enforcement to ensure that it meets the needs of Idaho's small counties and cities. During Gough's years at the sheriff's office, he has learned how to make limited budgets stretch, as well as how to avoid "budget disasters" because of jail and field operations liabilities or inaccurate record keeping.

I worked as a law enforcement administrator with Shaun Gough for years. His integrity or with Shaun Gough for years. His integrity

I worked as a law enforcement administra tor with Sham Gough for years. His integrity is the highest; he listens to and understands the people he works for. And he has the de-sire to exceed the standard of duty required for Gooding County sheriff. Most importantly, Shaun Gough knows how to get the job done and who he works learned how to work together in give and take.

That has not stopped either of us from pushing what we believe in as best.

The discussion of whether Don McMurrain is a Democrat or not shouldn't be gauged by whether he has followed the party line, attended all the meetings or agreed with the Democratic Party chairman all the time. The discussion should be whether or not he has chosen to become involved, and my experience with him over the years is that he has repeatedly made that choice. The choice for the local individual Democratic voter is whether or not he, as a Democratic candidate, reflects their values and principles. There are many shades of candidates within every party. Putting tags on them becomes a very difficult chore for someone so inclined. Don McMurrain has been a tireless advocate for many issues, the most recent or - the people of Gooding County.

Officer recommends Weaver

This letter is intended as a strong recommendation for the selection of Jim Weaver as sheriff of Jerome County.

Weaver would make fine sheriff
It is my pleasure to recommend Mr. Jim Weaver for sheriff of Jerome County. I have personally known Jim for more than 25 year through our mutual tenure with the Los Angeles Police Department.

Throughout these many years, I have always found Jim to be a hard-working, dedicated, law enforcement professional who took tremendous pride in all aspects of his profession. Jim's honesty and integrity were never questioned, and he could be trusted with any assignment.

As a professional law enforcement officer,
Jim has worked in every assignment generaljim has worked in every assignment.

As a professional law enforcement officer, lim has worked in every assignment generally available, including partol, traffic, vice/narrotics and an instructor at the police academy. In his last assignment at the police academy, Jim was responsible for a variety of management tasks and was a successful administrator.

It is clear from Jim's experience and commitment to excellence that he would make a fine sheriff for Jerome County.

We don't need family circus -

We don't need family circus
All in the family?
During the primary campaign, many issues and situations are cussed and discussed. One that particularly disturbs me is the presence of so many Gough family members in the Gooding sheriff's office/courthouse.
Shaun Gough is currently a deputy and supposedly the sergeant. His mother, Chris Koyle, is head office clerk, and a brother is one of the jailers. His uncle is Jack Gough, who is currently running for re-election as a Gooding County commissioner.

Does this smell like nepotism? What will happen to mother and brother if Shaut is elected sherif? Appears to me this family circus would just compound the challenges and problems the sheriff will encounter, and I don't think we need it.

Keep Gough in his car

Wow! After reading Diane Houser's glowing letter about Shaun Gough, I can only conclude that he must be the best deputy that Gooding County has ever had! Wouldn't it be a waste not to have this capable person out there helping the people?

The Gooding County sheriff's office needs a mature, experienced person to administer it and manage the employees and the budşet. Jim Finch is the man for this job. Many of the past and present problems in the sheri

more diligent administration.
Let's keep Deputy Gough in his car where he belongs and elect Jim Finch as our sheriff.

For the past several years, I have had the privilege of representing a group of Idaho small business people, including being involved with industry and government. I was able to view our state Legislature up front. I found many honest, hardworking public servaints trying to represent the majority of the citizens. Many times, they have to vote against their personal feelings to achieve this end. Sen. Denton Darrington was very supportive and concerned with our problems. He is willing to ask citizens for their position on an issue and for advice. He has demonstrated his only agenda - the best for the most citizens with the means available. He has proved sensible, sincere service and effective leadership. He has the respect of his peers on both sides of the uside.

Giving misleading information to get people to sign that Idaho Citizens Alliance's petition seems childish and underhanded to me. If people would allow themselves to become educated on the subject, most wouldn't sign on.

The message I keep hearing on Will's and Walton's writings is "marriage is for man and woman so they can have children." Should marriage hopefuls be tested for impotency so those that are won't be allowed love and companion to be allowed love and companion hip because they can't have children? It all makes about as much sense as the story about the queen who wanted a law passed to prohibit sex by anyone but royalty as she felt it was much too enjoyable for the common people.

Marriage is a union of two people in love - to share the good and bad times, to live their lives in peace and harmony. How can we deny that to a part of society because we refuse to learn so we can understand? By the way, homosexuals can produce children and also be wonderful parents.

Make a positive choice Tuesday for Darrington

Tuesday for Darrington
There is an important decision to should represent the people of Cassia County.

We have already made a commitment to public education by passing the recent bond for new

Kelly Walton supports the taxcredit bill that would allow state

This bill would take $6 mil-lion out of public education just to support students already enrolled in Idaho's private schools. This would leave the same number of students in public schools but with far less money to support school programs.

Denton Darrington does not support the tax-credit bill. He support sublic education. He has proven his commitment to education not only by his work in the state Senate but by his 30 years of teaching.

In these times, we need a leader to bring us together, not separate us. A leader who will focus on our common humanity, not our differences. Tuesday, let's make a positive choice, a choice for our children's future. Please re-elect Sen. Denton Darrington. enton Darrington. CYNTHIA SAMUELSON

Darrington doesn't know about tax credit initiative

about tax credit initiative In response to the brochure that landed in my mail from Denton Darrington, Darrington either has not read or cannot comprehend the Tax Credit for Non Use of Public Schools Initiative. our state senator. Durrington would be careless and misrepresent an issue before the voters. The initiative is not a fution tax credit, nor is it a voucher, as Darrington espouses. Because it is neither, the constitutionality of it as addressed by Attorney General Al Lance in his Certificate of Review says. "... the proposed initiative's grant of the tax credit to parents of all non-public school students – home-schooled, private non-sectarian and private parochial – coupled with the absence of a direct financial benefit to parochial schools, makes it probable this proposal will be upheld under the U.S. Constitution." And concerning the Idaho State Constitution, the attorney general says. "". Presuming Idaho Code 63-3029A is constitutional," and "... given that any benefit to parochial schools is remote, it follows that this proposed initiative is likewise constitutional," and "... given that any benefit to parochial schools is remote, it follows that the proposed credit may well pass constitutional master," and "Neither the purpose nor the effect of the proposed initiative is likewise constitutional muster," and "Neither the purpose nor the effect of the proposed initiative is not proposed initiative appear to violate Idaho's proscription regarding aid to religious or sectarian schools."

Darrington says this will end up costing our education department. Wrong again! # 4 killed, 50 injured in renewed violence

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Troops opened fire on Kashmiris who gathered in the streets of a regional capital Saturday to protest attempts by pro-govern-ment groups to force young men to fight insurgents. At least one person son was killed. At least one people were killed and more than 50 injured in violent incidents in the separatist state of Jammu-Kashmir on Saturday, news media reported. Kashmiris are in the midst of voting in national parliamentary elections, the first election on their territory since separatists began fighting in 1989. Many describe the vote as unfair, charging that Indian troops are forcing voters to the polls. India denies the charges.

The shooting occurred as residents demonstrated against attempts by pro-government groups to force young men to join gaugs of surrendered militants who fight alongside Indian troops against the rebels, Press Trust of India news agency said quoting officials.

The insurgents, who have ordered Kashmirs to boycott the elections, want Kashmir, the only predominstely Mustim state in India, to become independent or join neighboring Islamic Pakistan. One person was killed and four were injured in the shooting in Srinagar, the winter capital of Kashmir, Press Trust of India said.

CASTLEFORD – The tractors look like they just came from the showroom. But in this case they are going back-after years of use.

After 41 years on a 120-acre farm a mile and a half west of Castleford, Van Reed is through with farming. At age 50, Reed plans to "take a rest."

Though he is giving up farming, he won't be leaving the farm. He has leased out the land. His home, which he now shares with his only sister, Sandra, wasn't part of the deal.

But the farm equipment is going back to the dealer.

"And after all the years of use, they still look just like they did when they came from the factory." Twin Falls Tractor and Implement owner Gene Gleen said.

"And I guess it does bother me to see them go," Reed admitted.

Though he didn't grow up in Castleford, Reed's family roots run deep here: From grandfather, Tom Reed, to father, Emest Reed, to son-all via great-uncle Dr. Tandy Wiglesworth - also known as "Father of Castleford" - who acquired the landunder the Carey Act in 1903. But farming wasn't second-nature to Reed. He was bom in Hollywood during the perpression to entertainer-musician parents whose fulents kept them away from the farm for years.

Reed's father, Emest, loamed to play woodwinds while attending school in Twin Falls. After graduation in 1922 be attended college and played with various orchestras. In 1927 he married Blanche Mayer of Spokane, also a musician.

But he was not prepared for the cows and chickens that would come with his acquired estate when his family moved back to the farm. If it were ever up to him, the livestock would have to go.

And within a few years it was up to him. He was 21 when his father died, leaving Reed responsible for the farm and family. He had attended business college in Twin Falls, but his only outside employment consisted of three haying seasons, working for Art. Reese.

In Salt Lake.

But at the same time, he noted, it's not clear whether ads would provide any one retailer with a competitive edge, given that the state still would control actual liquor prices.

The Supreme Court found that Rhode Island's ban on liquor price advertising did not advane the state's interest of reducing alcohol consumption. And the justices said the tiny New England state has other options to promote temperance, such as higher liquor taxes or drinker education programs.

But Feam said Utah can make a stronger case that its laws do reduce

"You can read this narrowly or read it broadly, depending on your viewpoint," Fenn, a Salt Lake City attorney, said this week. "It's going to be some time before everything shakes out on it."

Added Thom Roberts, assistant attorney general assigned to advise "the liquor board: "Yes, it affects Utah law, and we're all trying to figure out how."

Utah Hquor commissioners, four of five of whom are lawyers, will discuss the ruling at a Friday meeting. As in Utah, state government in Rhode Island regulates all liquor sales. But where Rhode Island restricted price advertising, Utah law prohibits "advertising or use of any means or media to induce persons to buy liquor," with a few narrow exceptions.

Kent Knowley, head of the Utah Hospitality 'Association, a group representing the state's private clubs, said many cub owners are eager to have the advertising laws eased.

anniversary, and I'm already in serious trouble.
I'm out'a ideas, but worse, I'm out'a memory. I have trouble recalling what I got my wife last year. Or the year before. Or, for that matter, at any time since I met her.

("OK --- don't tell me ---'I seem to remember something about a ring.")

This is a grave matter because my wife's knowledge of compara-tive gifting during our 23-year relationship (or is it 242) is ency-

" ("And would you not agree, Dear, that the pot holders you gave me on our seventh anniversary were pathetic.") ("But they were asbestos!")

Steve Crump Don't ask me

For women, there's a strict Hierarchy of Acknowledgement about this anniversary business. Thoughtful gift-giving requires a gradual progression of endearments, culminating — one would suppose — with the Diamond Anniversary at the 60-year mark. By that time, of course, you'll be gumming your Cheerios, wearing your pants up under your armpits, and calling your male nurse, "Dearie."

Tve never actually forgotten an anniversary, but I have violated the Hierarchy of Acknowledgement, much to my peril.

But we guys are slow learners. Being the crazy kid that I was, I celebrated our Tin Anniversary (that's the 10th, stupid) by giving her a roll of aluminum foil. She was only slightly less amused than on our Iron Anniversary (No. 6), when I thoughtfully gave her an iron.

Next year is our China Anniversary, and I know she thinks she's getting a cruise to Hong Kong. Will she be surprised by breakfast at the Wok n Grill?

I doubt it, and therein lies the dilemma of men and anniversaries: To us, it's just a date. To our spouses, it's a point on a tra-jectory, a chart of the state of the relationship.

I've been considering hiring one of those singing telegram florists to show up and sing to her on our anniversary, but Bo a little wary. It didn't work out so well for a buddy of mine, whom I'll call Fred.

Fred was the regional sales manager for a computer software distributor in Salt Lake City, and he had a secretary named Donna.

Fred's anniversary three years ago happened to fall on National Secretaries Day, so he ordered up a naughty little singing telegram for his wife, named Ten, and flowers for Donna.

But the florist got mixed up, so Teri got the flowers — with a card addressed to Donna attached to them.

And Donna got the singing

Deputies' raise would make pay among highest

By Jennifer Bunch
Times-News writer

BURLEY - A pay raise requested by Cassia County Sheriff's deputies would make the starting pay among the highest in the eight counties of the Magic Valley.

Cassia County Sheriff's Deputies Jeff Sklar and Chris Jensen recently took their fellow officers' request for a pay raise to Barley and Cassia County.

The deputies have asked for a 5500 monthly raise for every employee in the sheriff's department, as well as a 5 percent annual raise. They have set aside other issues of overtime compensation to ask for a raise instead, they say.

Starring pay for deputies in Cassia County is $11,550. With a $500 raise they would make $2,050. The highest starting pay for deputies now is Blaine County at $2,000. The average for the Magic Valley is $1,580.

Two years ago starting pay in Twin Falls County, with a population of $6,000, was $1,350.

It is now $1,700 - the state average.

Burley and Cassia County are just beginning to draft their budgets for the 1997 fiscal year, and no decisions have been made about whether to give the officers raises.

crystal said he supports his deputies' request for a raise. "I believe that they certainly deserve the money they are asking for. I agree 100 percent they are justified in making the request, and that they have done so in a professional manner," Crystal said. The officers have suggested that the city of Burley contribute more to the funding of the sheriff's department, because more crimes and accidents are occurring within city limits. About 80 percent of the calls that came into office in 1995 came from Burley, according to department figures.

80 percent of the calls that came into office in 1995 came from Burley, according to department figures.

The city pays 60 to 62 percent of the department's budget, Crystal said. The city and county determine their shares of the bill by analyzing the number of calls that come from the city or county, Crystal said.

City Attorney Bill Parsons said the county and city pay nearly equal amounts of the administrative costs of running the sheriff's office. The city pays more for dispatch and patrol, and the county pays for the jail.

According to Parsons, the city shouldn't have to pay for county residents coming into the city and committing crimes.

"I disagree that the city should pay more. We have a lot of people coming in and out of here, and I don't think the city of Burley should have to pay for that, "he said.

It doesn't matter how many county residents come into Burley and commit a crime, Crystal said. The city would need to pay the cost for parrolling within its boundaries if it didn't have a contract with the county, he said.

The deputes have hired Twin Falls lawyer Mark Stubbs, a Republican state representative in Twin Falls, who specializes in employment law. Earlier this month, they told Cassia County commissioners that many of the 13 deputies have other jobs and may leave the department tax. PHOENIX.—"They sherriff Joe a little bit of coffeed be nice," an immate suggests.

Maricopa County Sheriff Joe Arpaio barely stops to answer. Bustling through a row of bunk beds in one of the notorious jail-lents he erected here, the man who describes himself as "America's toughest sheriff tosses the immate a look of part-confusion, part-disgust.

"Caw-fee?" he says, the word sounding foreign to him. End of discussion.

Grabbing the flap of the Army surplus tent, the sheriff exits the makeshift jail cell into Arizona's bright morning sun. "I don't need to explain anything to them." he says.

to expain anything to them, no says.

Forger the Bastille. With jails in dozens of communities around the country facing unprecedented shortages of beds, Arpaio's "Tent City" solution has become a mod-ern-day symbol of the "make 'em miscrable" school of jailing. Inmates and civil libertarians loathe him. Some jailers around the country.

"He's become something of a folk hero," said Jenny Gainsborough, public policy coordinator for the National Prison Project in Washington. "He makes all this noise about how he's tough on crime, and he's doing this for the honest God-fearing American taxpayer. But it does very little to deter crime. It's a distraction."

In Phoenix, rehabilitation means:

• As many as 1,000 inmanes sleep nighty in surplus ents, sweating out 110-degree temperatures during the summer and plugging holes with toothpaste during the rains: ("If our soldiers could survive in tents in Kuwait, why can't these guys?" Arpsio demands.)

• The lunch bologna — part of a God expenditure that Arpsio grudg-ingly saw rise from 30 cents to 35 cents a day for each immate — reputedly comes in an infamous shade of green. ("Even if it isn'," the sheriff says.," I want them to think it is.")

• Coffee, cigarettes and some, magazines are banned, and Arpaio began airing. "Old Yeller" and more allowed the same of th medical care, use of force, and access to lawyers at the juls.

"You don't think I'm worried about it, do you?" Arpaio says of the probe. "I think we have the best-run juil in the country... No one's died."

Indeed, even some of Arpaio's critics acknowledge his tremendous popularity among a public demanding a get-tough-on-crime approach.

dous popularity among a public demanding a get-tough-on-crime approach.

"He's certainly wildly popular in the community," concedes Ted Jarvi, a Tempe lawyer who represents inmates. "People delight in hearing that (inmates) have lost more civil liberties. I've quit even discussing that issue. I'm just concerned about basic human needs.

So were many inmates one recent morning at the fent facility, as they besieged a reporter with complaints about overcrowding, rodents, hygiene and other problems that they say make the place unlivable.

Complained Lester Rees, a 24-year-old graffiti vandal from Mesa: "This is like the kind of prisons they had in the 18th century. Aren't we supposed to have advanced?"

But if Arpaio's intent is to discourage repeat visitors, it just might be working.

"I guarantee I won't do county time next time." one 21-year-old inmate said as he milled around his tent bunk. "Til go straight to state prison."

The execution about 90 miles' from Salt Lake City, begun this spring, is a rare one. It's the first significant cave execution in Utah in more than 20 years and holds the potential of turning up evidence of inhabitants 10,000 or 11,000 years ago. Thatwould put it in the company of only two or three such Utah sites. It's rare in other ways as well: The cave is smack in the middle of an Army base the size of Rhodel Island, 800,000 acres where the military tests artillery and smoke of the company of Dugway Proving Ground, Utan left behind charcoal hearths sand-wiched between layers of dirt deposited over the centuries. Granding stones and broken tools also were left behind.

Madsen said they found one broken arrow tip next to a stool-sized rock and hearth, and he visualized an earlier inhabitant sitting by the fire, replacing the broken tip with a new one.

When people live at a site a long time, they clean up after them-selves and leave fewer traces, Madsen said. "All the surface deposits get churned up," he said.
The cave was discovered in 1986 when the Utah Geological Survey, working on a Defense Department grant, surveyed half-acre spots

Near the front of the cave they found a rock wall that a sheep-herder probably constructed to keep out the elements around the turn of the century. He also left behind a tomato can and bones of sheep that had been butchered.

Three years ago, sate archaeologists did a small excavation and sent probes down another? I cet. They found evidence of hearths at several levels, and the charcosal has been carbon-dated to 3,600 years ago, 6,100 years ago and 7,400 years ago.

Archaeologists had to lie on their bellies to clear the sticks and clod debris left by the wood pack rat, who occasionally pokes his head out to scold the diggers.
After weeks of excavation, the cave is as big as a small room, shaped like an open envelope.

But as the archaeologists dig deeper, they expect it will turn out to be a much larger care, with a floor 8 feet or more lower than it is now, said Dave Schmitt, a Utah State Historical Society archaeologist who is supervising the dirty and exacting work.

Chairman resigns from embattled agency

BOISE (AP) — Robert Hudgins, chairman of the board for the embattled Boise City/Ada County Housing Authority, has resigned, citing poor health.

Officials said in a news release Friday that Hudgins' resignation takes effect at the end of next week. Hudgins, who has avoided fellow board members in recent days, had been ordered by local officials to tend to the authority's business or step down.

He resigned after signing financial documents for the agency on Friday, providing $7.5 million in credit for a low-income housing project, Hudgins Place.

Earlier in the day, affordable housing chief Judith Worrell-Payne derailed a special housing board meeting. That left her free to travel to a housing conference on the East Coast on Monday without getting permission from the board.

A quorum of board members

Cleanup. counterclaim filed

COEUR d'ALENE (AP) — Hecla Mining Co. and Asurco Inc. have filed a countersuit against a federal lawsuit alleging eight mining companies are liable for an estimated $600 million cleanup of the Coeur d'Alene River Basin. The action, filed in U.S. District Court in Boise, responds to a suit filed by the federal government earlier this year. The government earlier this year. The government earlier this year. The government claims operations by the mining companies caused extensive environmental damage to 1.500 square miles of the basin.
Sunshine Mining and Refining Co. of Boise and Coeur d'Alene Mines Corp. filed an answer to the suit before the May 17 deadline, but Coeur d'Alene Mines did'not file a countersuit.

but Coeur d'Alene Mines did'nor file a countersuit.

The remaining companies listed in the federal suit are either former subsidiaries of the four mining companies or companies they subsequently have absorbed.

The countersuit claims the government had substantial control over mining activity in the Silver Valley during World War II and the Korean War and therefore shares in any cleanup liability, said Holly Houston. Coeur d'Alene Basin Mining Information Office executive director.

The countersuit strategy will, in effect, turn the federal government into a defendant in the case, Hecla general counsel Michael White said.

Bolse (AP) — Only 27 candidates for the Idaho Legislature, including six incumbents, signed promises to oppose any effort and the change or repeal the term limits initiative approved by voters in 1994.

Beau Parent, director of Idahoans for Term Limit Defense, told a news conference Friday that all 234 legislative candidates were asked to pledge to protect the term limit law. He said he was disappointed with the result.

"Signers of the pledge promise to respect the will of the people," he said. "Why have the vast majority of candidates refused to sign this pledge?"

He maintained that ever since term limits were approved by voters by 73,955 say their city lost its youth in what they call a "Massacre of the Innocents."

It was the deadliest Serb shell in the entire 3-1/2-year war, slamming into a popular Old Town rendexvous spot for the northern city's youth. The average age of those killed was 20.

People gathered Saturday at a special cemetery in a former park where about 50 of the victims—Muslims, Croats and Serbs alike—were buried together. The mourners prayed, wept and placed flowers and candles.

The first visitors were mostly young people, including some using wheelchairs or crutches because of the wounds from that shell.

Safet Dedajic, a popular local folksinger, sobbed. "I haven't been here since the funeral For many years lest up microphones to sing to people. That night I set up for the funeral of my finered children," he said.

All three religions were observing the anniversary, with Croats having a Roman Catholic mass, Serbs an Orthodox solemn liturgy and Muslims funeral prayers. Church bells were set to toll at the time the shell had hit.

A year ago Saturday, the Serbs were in a showdown with NATO.

The Serbs had ignored an order from the United Nations the day that hit the city during the war.

Later that evening the perfume of flowers was still strong in the fresh, air, and young lovers strolled in the gathering dusk. Sirnes had earlier warned of possible Serb attack, but nobody took it very seriously. With little more than an hour left before the 10 p.m. curfew, about 500 teenagers and young adults crowded into Kapija Square. They sat at sickwalk cafes or walked eating poporin and ice cream bought from street vendors.

week-old army mutiny said Saturday he would ask his followers to return to barracks after the president meets some of their demands.

President Ange-Felix Patasse, making his first public appearance since the start of the uprising, said he would not fire the head of his presidential guard, as mutineers insisted.

But at a news conference at his home Saturday afternoon, Patasse promised, amnesty to renegade soldiers and said he would fire another military leader they had targeted, his deputy chief of staff. The mutineers have had little room to maneuver since France, the former colonial power, sent troops to back Patasse's government. One rebel leader, chief warrant officer Mathurin Dokods aid he would ask the estimated 200 mutineers to return to barracks but could not guarantee they would.

Family Life

Dealing with 'terrible twos' sets stage for teen years

Burton White, author of "The First Three Years of Life," compared the early teen years to toddlerhood, terming the latter "the first adolescence." Indeed, the parallels are many Both stages are typified by loud emotional outbursts, a certain amount of self-centeredness, and stubborn, unreasoning opposition to authority. The most significant point of comparison, however, is not that the "terrible twos" seem to presage the "terrible tweens," but that the most precedent-setting transition in the parent-child relationship occur during these two stages.

Parenting John Rosemond

During the first of these potentially perilous passages, the parents' task is that of taking the child out of the center of their attention and establishing themselves at the center of the child's. The toddler, feeling himself to be losing themselves at the center of the child's. The toddler, feeling himself to be losing contrel of his parents (and therefore his world) — which, from his perspective, he has enjoyed for nearly two years — screams in protest, defies them at seemingly every turn, and employs desperate means to re-establish his primacy in the family. If, and only if, his parents stay the course through this wailing and gnashing of teeth — which many, unfortunately, fail to do — he will be on the road of good citizenship (which, remember, begins at home) by the time he is three. For some eight years thereafter, the child puts his parents at the center of his attention, looks to them for definitions of right and wrong, and wants to please them.

But the honeymoon of middle child-

But the honeymoon of middle childhood is not destined to last forever. As hood is not destined to last forever, despins its increasant drumbeat, the youngster begins transferring allegiance from parents to peer group. Much to their chagrin his parents wake up one morning to discover that they've been rudely displaced. Other pre-adolescents have taken their place at the center of his attention, he's looking to them for definitions of right and wrong, and that he seems interested only in pleasing them. His parents feel themselves to be losing control, something they've enjoyed for too long to give up without a fight.

The fact is, most young teens want more freedom than they can responsibly handle. Equally true, however, is that many, if not most, parents of young teens are guilty of not giving their children enough freedom, enough opportunity to learn by trial-and-error how to make good personal and social choices. Almost inevitably, parents who see it as their job to prevent their youngsters from making errors are those whose children end up making the most, and worst, errors.

Double time Waiting for twins? Prepare, but don't panic

TWIN FALLS - Twins rarely show up unannounced in the delivery room any-more. They do, however, provide excite-ment when they are discovered during their mon's first ultrasound.

Allen said the rule of thumb is whatever can go wrong with one pregnancy goes double for twins.

For example, he said one twin might not grow at the same rate as the other. When there is nothing that can be done to stop this, the babies are observed frequently with ultrasound and their heartbeats monitored. They are brought as close to term as possible, then delivered.

Exchange of blood between twins can happen in the womb. Allen said one twin can actually transfuse into the other because of their cords having become a common vascularure.

If they are close enough to term, delivery can be induced. Or if it is too early in the pregnancy, a special kind of laser may be used on the common vessel between the two to enable each to have his own.

Burkett said early prenantal care is important. The mother fieeds to be told the symptoms to watch for and what she needs to do in order to maintain good health.

"Some families have quite a bit of support and some don't, so they may not have two bassinets or the clothing," she said. after a vaginal delivery. It's very hard to do that."

For a twin delivery, she said it's very important that the parents be flexible with their birth plan but that they have it established both in writing and verbally with the nurses what they want to do with the babies.

"It's a very exceptional moment and, ideally, it think what we'd like to see is one baby be born, put up on Mom's chest and dried off by the family; the next baby be born and be put right up there." she said. "And then, those two babies say in the same crib in the room with Mom at all times."

Dr. David Allen, a Twin Falls obstetrician and generologist, said the hospital team is exactly double for twins and we almost always deliver them in the opportunity of the property of the property

She would have some swelling and notice that.

It was hard to miss for Brown when she developed pregnancy induced hypertension during her seventh month.

"I was so poofs I couldn't bend my fingers, and I couldn't touch my toes," she said. "I was so poofs I couldn't bend my fingers, and I couldn't touch my toes," she said. "I was a ness."

She was taken off salt and starchy foods, And she was also told to drink an abundance of water.

Consuming enough water (one-half gallom'a day) is important in any pregnancy, but a little more so with twins. Allen said.

"People that are pregnant tend to get dehydrated a little more, and that leads to pre-term contractions," he said. "And also drinking more water) helps alleviate fluid."

pains and discomforts with two.

Not so for Brown's sister-in-law, Kim Brutke, who expects to deliver twin boys next month. She said she has had a really good pregnancy up until now.

"Twe felt really good the whole time," she said "I haven't even thrown up once through the whole pregnancy, so Fin Jappy."

Burkett said monitoring movement of twins is pretty much the same as with a single gestation. The mother needs to feel movement every two hours - four at the maximum.

"And most definitely if they have any of the symptoms that indicate them to be high risk." Burkett said. "And that would be lower back pain and if she's having contractions. We tell women that are high risk if they have four contractions in an hour, they need to be seen."

At the time of birth, about 50 percent of wins are both in a head-down position and eady for normal delivery, Allen said. The est are brought into the world by cesarean periors.

Or one twin may be delivered vaginally and the other by C-section because he is in a breech position. He said the mother could deliver them both, but it would be danger-

Twins occur in about 1 in 90 pregnancies.

Allen said if one egg is fertilized and splits in two, that's called monozygotic or identical. Dizygotic is where two different eggs are fertilized.

Because the monozygotic infants are in one sack, he said there's a much higher risk that the infants could get tangled around each other's cords and one of them have a cord accident.

cord accident.

Brutke said she has been told her twins are in separate sacks and so are not identical. Brown said they don't know for sure if their girls are identical or not, but folks have trouble telling them apart.

The Brown infants are 5 months old now, which has given their Aunt Kim and Uncle Lonnie time to pick up pointers about caring for twins.

"They have the advantage that they get to baby-sit ours anytime they want; they get to practice," Brown said, "We never had that advantage."

How to tell kids about suicide

Only in the past decade or so have mental health experts researched how best to cope with the impact of a parent's or loved one's suicide on a child's life.

Though more than 30,000 people die from suicide in the United States each year, shame and guilt often motivate families to treat it as a burden to bear but not to air — certainly not to the children.

So culturally biased is our society against talking openly about suicide that when a prominent proposition of the control of th

Loss and Grief Therapy, in Maryland.

"Between 7,000 and 12,000 children a year have a parent commit suicide. It is the second leading cause of death of young people between ages 15.24. And yet for young children, there is no way to talk about it ... The parent thinks it is unspeakable to tell the child."

The author of "Breaking the Silence," a guide to helping children with grief that is complicated by suicide, homicide, AIDS and other traumatic deaths (scheduled for publication in July), Goldman believes bottomline coping with suicide — for adults and children — starts with alking honesty about it. "Not only will it help the children whose families are affected, but it will also help ing," she said. "But it is easy to accomplish if that is one of her main

the atrisk children."

Telling children the truth about a suicide helps to guard them from imagining more damaging things. Henry Seiden, a psychologist in Forrest Hills, N.Y., and author of "Silent Grieft Living in the Wake of Suicide," says that "covering it up, denying and lying, or not dealing with it, only opens the door for the kids' own fantasies and speculation about what happened—which invariably are as bad or worse than the situation itself."

Seiden cautions, however, that you "don't want to cram it down a child's throat. You offer a little to a child, and then when they have questions, you respond to their questions."

When working with children traumatized by suicide, Goldman says helping them to separate the person who died and their love for that person from the way that person died is critical.

She recalls a sixth-grade girl she counseled who had been told the truth about her father's suicide but not helped through the rest of the trauma.

"She'd say to me, 'I can't tell my friends that my father died because then I'd have to tell them the "Nobody knows quite what to say so nobody says anything.' Because she couldn't speak the truth, she couldn't speak the truth, she couldn't grieve, the death of her dad."

Compounding a child's problem when a parent commits suicide is that the surviving parent usually is overwhelmed with y guilt, anger and grief, and can't function fully as a parent.

"In the short run, that parent is not going to be available to the child in the same loving and caring and nurturing way as before the death," says Alan Berman, executive director of the Washington, D.C.-based American Association of Suicidology.

"So the child is at the same time losing the second parent. Neighbors and friends generally don't have a repertoire of comfortable responses to suicide. ... People who are severely wounded very much need to be accepted and supported. That means not treating this like a typical death. It means recognizing that the family is going to have a longer and harder time getting over this. In the best mental health sense, the more open one can discuss the suicide, the better."

Graduating from school may require course in self-defense

DEAR ABBY: You were way off the mark in your response to "Scared in Pennsylvania," the sev-enth-grader whose school was full of weapons and drugs. Since "Scared" wanted advice on how to protect him or herself, I hope you will publish the following tips as soon as possible. Platitudes like the brave" mean squat when you're facing a knife or worse. Kids do need to know these skills, whether or not adults consider it necessary.

whether or not adults consider it necessary.

(1) First, take a self-defense course at your local YMCA or community college. If it's not offered, they'll know where it's available. Your school might offer, something similar, maybe boxing or karate. I was no athlete, but neither was I known as a couch potato. Make certain you aren't perceived as physically vulnerable, especially if you're a grif (1 am.)

(2) When someone approaches you about drugs, don't look at him or her if you can avoid it. Shake your head, say no, and keep walk-sing. Be matter-of-fact, calm, and don't worry about appearing impolitic. Politeness isn't important to people like that.

(3) Same with fights GET OUT OF THERE! You might not know whether the involved parties have weapons, but don't stay to find out. "Cool" kids will probably warch, but smart ones wort. (Gawkers can pet shot or stabbed just as easily as the idiots who are fighting.) NOW is the time to tell an adult – any adult – but don't offer your name to that person if you can avoid it. A simple, "There's a fight down there." and a pointed finger will do.

(4) Learn which adults are cool about not naming names and get to know them. Those are the ones to trust in a tough spot. But be selective about how often you fill them in. If you're pegged a snitch, the rest of your time in that school will be miserable, if not dangerous. (5) On the other hand, if you're ever backed into a corner, scream your head off! It will draw attention and make you a less easy victim. If you're shy, or afraid you won't be able to scream, PRACTICE. (Just warn your family before you start.) (6) Finally, be alert. If you see hands flashing in ways you don't understand, go the other way. Don't go in or stay in stainvells or restrooms alone; even if you're nor with a friend, walk quietly behind a group. If you can't avoid being alone, be prepared to walk into a classroom if you're followed. It's hard to do if you're followed. It's hard to do if you're followed. It's hard to do if you're followed.

DEAR ABBY: You don't deserve "10 whacks with a wet diaper ..." for your advice to "'016/Fashioned Grandma" concerning mixed-generation showering. You said that she was not old-fashioned, that "a she was not old-fashioned, that she was not old-fashioned, shower or bathe with a parent of the opposite sex ..." Surely-you know that because some activity is popular for a time, it is not necessarily wise. I think you were right. You just-have to be prepared to be unpopular in some circles - for a while.

Lions clubs thank Johnny Horizon Day volunteers

The county and Twin Falls Lions ub wish to thank all those who participated and gave of their time to help with the Johnny Horizon-cleanup of the county's highways and byways on May 4.

Many thanks to the coordinators of each city, the various leaders and groups, individuals and families. To Magic Valley Recyclers for donating the cans and proups individuals and families. To Magic Valley Recyclers for donating the cans and prizes and Skateland for donating skating passes. To the various truck companies who furnished their trucks and drivers and to the drivers for their time and assistance. And individuals from each area who donated their vehicles. Each year, there is less trash reported along the roads from the Johnny Horizon clean-up crews. We are hopeful that more people will be aware of your efforts and resist throwing trash out of the windows.

Again, thanks to all; and we hope to see you next year.

Battling Bella has lesson for feminists

Bella Abrug, where are you?

I miss seeing you in the newspaper in your trademark hars, miss your saxy remarks to pompous legislators who believed women, you sepecially, belong in the house, not the House of Representatives.

I saw you only once in the six years you served, but you taught me an important lesson.

In the early days of the women's movement, I was racing around Detroit, reporting on women's movement, I was racing around Detroit, reporting on women's many struggles for equality, especially the need for equal pay and yromotions, an issue still with us.
Today, women account for 46 percent of the work force but earn 73 cents on average for each dollar earned by men in all occupations and education leves, Women with college degrees earn only $2,000 per year more than men with high school diplomas.

And a recent bigartisan study family; many are heads of house-holds.

Still, things are better by far than when you were elected to Congress in 1970 and became known as "Battling Bella" for your many fights on behalf of the human family: child care, welfare reform, civil rights, the anti-war movement.

In Doris Faber's book, "Bella Abrug," you said you were considered 'onc of the most radical people in the Congress. But actually, I'm an idealist, I really believe in the Constitution. I've fought for it ever since I can remember."

Women like you, who called yourselves feminists, were often mocked; called strident, manhaters and more. What, I wondered, were you really like? When I was assigned to report on a women's political caucus, friends joked that it would probably be a rowdy gathering of tough broads.

You were there, Bella, but the only thing broad was your hat brim. And you were tough only in that you felt strongly that more women should be in politics to make laws that strengthen family life.

I was stunned at your kindly, genteel manner. You spoke sofly, offered coffee, passed trays of sweet rolls, introduced guests to one another.
Heavens, I thought, this is like my mother's coffee klarches, Indeed, you reminded me of my mother's coffee that cherished her wife-mother-homemaker role.
You lived that double life, too cherished her wife-mother-home-maker role.

You lived that double life, 100, Bella, as a lawyer raising five daugh-ters you adored and with the support of a loving husband. You showed me that being a ferminist was based on a love of family and humankind; that it comes from the heart.

I was proud, then, to call myself feminist. I still am. Peace, Bella. And thanks.

helped with food drive

We at the Salvation Army would like to thank members of the Postal Workers Union and the local grocery stores for their tremendous effort in the recent Ppstal Workers Food Drive. The williamness of the postal workers to take on this extra responsibility and to increase their work load samificantly has resulted in the gathering of much-needed food for local food banks.

My understanding is this program is up to the discretion of the local post office, and we should be proud as a community that our postal carriers not only participate but did such an outstanding job.

It is never too late to be good to yourself When we left, the woman looked at us with hope in her eyes. "Will you come again?" she asked my friend. Of course she would. The good life is all about helping each other.

I once read a newspaper article in which a group of psychiatrists were contemplating women's greatest fears. All of the fears had something to do with aging: losing your looks and health, being unable to support yourself in old age and being eventually rejected by loved ones. The experts suggested that women compensate for the loss of youth by keeping their bodies in shaper, improving their skills and abilities, focusing on the positive and becoming more independent and less sensitive to other people's opinions.

Sometimes, you have to buck society to do this.

I'll never forget the day, about 15 years ago, when I was reserving a book at a Midwestern public library. Happened to glane at the information about me in the library records.

"Denise Turner, housewife," it said. "Reference: Revis."

I had filled out the original form "occupation: freelance writerfauthor." I had allready writerwithor." I had allready writers.

"Denise Turner, housewite, it said, "Reference: Revis."

I had filled out the original form "occupation."
I suspect the record-keeping system at that library is different now. But many of us continue to allow other people to play too big a part in defining, who we are.

Often, when I have addressed groups, I have used an exercise I borrowed from an old David C. Cook self-esteem study guide. I have asked my audience to close their veys and visualize their best friends, their spouses, the President of the United States, comedian Boh Hope.

That I mage is never as clear. Because we spend our lives seeing ourselves reflected – in mirrors, or off other people.

Twe thought about this a lot as I've gotten older. I probably should have thought about it sooner.

The rosts of old age are planted arily in life; according to Frank Sings, a professor I knew when I lived in Lasisville, Ky, Aging is not something that begins at 60 or 70 or beyond. The quality of person-hood in old age is seldom, if ever, determined by choices made in advanced age.

A friend of mine in Illinois says he often visualizes a very old man stiting in a rocking-shari looking back on what he's done with his life.

and when Sneakers were not snazy and when nobody had ever heard the term "shopping mall." I felt really old watching the Cincinnati Reds on TV last week, because I couldn't remember exactly when the ballplayers started looking like kids to me.

But I figure it's never too late to be good to yourself. So I really am trying to eat right and exercise enough and read good books and participate in activities that make me feel happy and positive and fulfilled - and I am trying to reach out to those who are fearful and alone.

When I was a young mother in Ohio, my family was sinvited to share Thanksgiving dinner with a friend. The friend had invited to share Thanksgiving dinner with a friend. The friend had invited an elderly widow who lived down to street to come, too, but she didn't want to leave her home. So my friend decided to take some food to the woman, and I decided to take some food to the woman, and I decided to take some food to the woman was sitting in the dark in her nightgown, czying, She hadn't felt well the night before, she said, and she was afraid she was dying. She had put her house keys in an envelope and labeled them, just in case. She was useless and unwanted anyway, she told us.

My friend held the old woman's hand and talked to her about the days when she had been active and happy. The woman began to perk up.

She told us about her first hus-band's death, and about her remar-riage to a boarder at her home.

"He wanted to marry me for a long time, but I didn't want to marry again," she said. "I finally did, and we were married 18 years before he died, but I wish I would have said yes sooner."

Jerome High graduate hammers away at Olympic dream

By John Derr Times-News writer

Times-News writer

[EROME - Since she was a child. Wendy Matthews dreamed of competing in the Olympics.

Three weeks from now, in Atlanta, the 1991 Jerome High School graduate will get her chance. She will compete against the nation's top 16 hammer throwers for one of three spots on the United States Olympic Tream. The qualifying mark to make the Olympic Trials is 53 meters (about 170 feet; her best throws this season have topped 56 meters (about 184 feet) and placed her fourth in the national rankings.

fopped as the fourth in the national rankings.

"I have always seen athletes like Carl Lewis competing and now! I am at the same meets he is," said the Utah State University senior, now married to Jerome native Paul Egbert.

Matthews Egbert tuned up for next Saturday's NCAA meet in Eugene, Ore, by setting school records in winning the discuss and hammer events during the recent Big West Conference meet.

One of the biggest disappointments of her career came near the end of the meet, however. She was disqualified from the shot put for the first time ever when her foot crossed the line foul line.

"She left the stadium pretty unhappy despite what she accomplished in the other events," said John Lewandowski, Utah the state's assistant athletic director. "But that same day, she won Robins Award, so it was a nice finish."

The Robins Award is given annually to the university's top family to the university's top family to the university's top family to the compus coaches.

Despite the misstep in the shot, Matthews-Egbert remains on track to contend for the Olympic team in an event that is one of the most obscure in track and field.

DENVER (AP) - Defenseman Uwe Krupp scored a power-play goal early in the third period and goallender Partick Roy rebounded from his worst game of the playoffs as Colorado bear Detroit 4-2 Saturday night to move within one victory of the Stanley Cup finals.

Roy, who had an off-night in Detroit's 6-4 victory in Game 3 Thursday night, had 29 saves this time as Colorado tooka 31 lead in the best-of-7 western Conference final series, with Game 5 set for Deroit on Monday night.

A critical four-minute penalty on Deroit's Dino Ciccarelli helped Colorado get its game-winning third goal. Ciccareli was assessed a double-minor penalty for high-sticking and unsportsmanlike conduct at 19-31, and the Red Wings purch 19-31, and the Red Wings purch 19-31, and the Red Wings nearly killed it off.

Some things will look the same but don't be fooled.
As usual, more than 400,000 pepel are expected at the Indianapolis Motor Bpeedway for Sunday's race. As usual, the start of the world's richest and most prestigious race will be perhaps the most dangerous moment in sports.
As usual, Jim Nabors will sing "Back Home Again in Indiana." the acrid smell of methanof lued will fill the air, and the sights and sounds at the sprawling speedway will make it seem as though its business as usual. It's not.

the air, and the signis and sources at the sprawing speedway will make it seem as though its business as usual. It's not.

The front row trio of Tony Stewart, Davy Jones and Eliseo Salazar is hardly recognizable to anyone but the most dedicated fan.

In fact, the 17 rookies, and many of the veterans, are virtual strangers. In this year of schism in the open-wheel sport, the most powerful Indycar teams and the biggest stars are in Michigan. And in the wake of the crash that took the life of two-time Indy pole-winner Scott Brayton, fears heightened for the safety of the inexperienced field.

The war was precipitated by speedway president Tony George, who is seen by some as a power-hungry villam who is destroying the race and the Indy-car sport.

Others see him as a man of integrity who is restoring Indy racing to its traditional oval-track roots.

George, grandson of the late speedway owner Tony Hulman, said he acted on his belief that the sport was devoid of opportunity for young drivers and moving in the direction of uncontrollable costs,

He invented the Indy Racing League to challenge the established PPG Indy Car World Series. Then he

Fate, luck, history will determine winner

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) -- With so many new drivers in the Indianapolis 500 on Sunday, how do you pick a winner?

iis 500 on Sunday, how do you pick a winner?

Let's work backwards and see who won't win.

The pole-starter normally is a reasonable favorite, but the deadly circumstances that shaped this year's lineup put mokie Tony Srewart in that spot by default.

Stewart is using a Menard, an engine that has finished the 500 miles only twice. And only six first-time drivers have won the race, none since Graham Hill 30 years ago. So scratch Stewart from the list of likely winners.

Cross out Danny Ongais, too.

drivers have mon the drivers have mon the list of like syminers.

Cross out Danny Ongais, too.

Sure, he has 10 years experience and one of the fastest cars with the pole-winning Lola he inherited when Scott Brayton was killed-in practice. But that's Menard-powered, too, and as a substitute driver Ongais must start from the rear, in the 33rd spot.

No one has ever won from that far back.

There has never been a winner from farther back than 28th in the starting lineup. If history is a guide—and tradition means everything around here — that eliminates veteran Hideshi Matsuda and rookies Johnny O'Connell, Joe Gosek and Scott Harrington.

Even with the Championship Auto Racing Teams boycott and the rival U.S. Soo in Michigan, there's still an Unser in the Indy lineup. But don't look for rookie Johnny Unser to bring home the 10th win here for his famous clan.

He's starting in the 16th spot, on the inside of the sixth row, and no one ever has won from that position.

the inside of the SALM DAY, and so one every has won from that position.

Then there's Lyn St. James.

A woman has never won Indy, and in seven previous starts for St. James and former driver Janet Guthrie, neither finished higher than ninth. St. James also is starting 18th, and no one ever has won the race from that position.

Dayy Jones, who has never before started higher than 28th, could be a contender with one of the fastest cars in the field. But look where he's airting: the middle of the front row. That spot hasn't produced a winner since 1969 with Mario Andretti, and everyone knows of the Andretti junx at Indianapolis, Jones is guilty by association.

"I think almost every day we were the fastest car out there ... in all kinds of situations; weather-wise, heatwise." he said. "Still we have to stay on top of things and not get complacent, and (not) make missikes like we did on pole day."

Folks might wonder how Luyendyk took the meanest machine here, a Reynard-built Ford Cosworth XII, and managed to get a sventhrow starting position. BROOKLYN, Mich. – The bustle and congestion of Indianapolis is just a couple of hundred miles from the lush green hills and placid lakes of this rural southeastern Michigan community.

The difference in driving experience, though, is light-years.

Sunday's inaugural U.S. 500 (noon MDT, ESPN), born out of a dispute between Championship Auto Racing Teams and Indianapolis Motor Speedway president Tony George, might be an unwelcome guest for traditionalists who count the Indy 500 as essential to their Memorial Day weekend celebrations.

Like it or not, a sellout crowd of more than 100,000 is expected and the established stars and the top-of-the-line cars will be on Michigan International Speedway's two-mile, high-banked, D-shaped oval.

Among those disappointed by the rift in America's open-wheel circuit is Greg Moore, a 21-year-04 Canadian who has enjoyed an exceptional start in his rooks easons and stands fourth in the PPG Indy Car World Series.

"I grew up watching all the Indy car races on television, especially the Indy 500," Moore said. "I said. I want to do that when I grow up. But the way I look at it, if I went to Indy and won (this year), people would say, "Yeah, but who did you win agains?"

Moore will start on the sixth row Sunday, out of the 17th position.

Talk-show host David Letterman, who came on as a part-owner with Bobby Rahal's team this season, is an Indianapolis native who was weased on the Indy 500 but is counted in the U.S. 500 camp.

Bulls are laughing their way to the NBA Finals, cruising past an Orlando team that has too few healthy bodies and too many sickly shousers. We can't have come to the many sickly shousers and too many sickly shousers. We can't have come to the second-lowest point total in league playoff history and won 86-67 Saturday to move within a victory of sweeping the Eastern Conference finals. "We have to go ahead and try to close this our as quickly as possible." Game 4 of the best-off series is Monday at the Orlando Arena, where the Magic went 374 this season and had been 50 in the playoffs. But coming home certainly didn't help Orlando this time. Not only did the Magic miss a majority of their shots – going 3-0-f18 in the fourth quarter, when the Bulls pulled away – but their injury situation worsened. They learned before the game that top reserve Brian Shaw would be out with muscle spasms in his neck. Then, in the fourth quarter, Nick Anderson went down with a sprained right wrist. It's unknown if either will play Monday or if they will be in street clothes next to power forward Horace Grant, who has missed two straight games with an elbow injury. "Everybody still has the fire there. If we just have enough bodies to play, we'll be able to get a win," said created and the street way in the side. "We don't want to get swept." matchups in decades? That's another matter.

In order to become the first team in NBA history to rally from a 3-d deficit, Orlando must win four successive games against a Chicago team that has followed a 72-10 regular season with a 10-1 postseason. The Bulls had only one losing streak of two games all season.

"This is our year. We have to have this year," said Dennis Rodman, who had 16 rebounds as Chicago beat Orlando for the sixth straight time. That team is very young. They have a long way to go."

Scottie Pippen scored 27 points for the Bulls, who are seeking to return to the Finals for the fourth time in six years. Chicago won championships in 1991, 1992 and 1993 before Michael Jordan retired for 17 months.

Jordan, who returned last year only to lose to Orlando in the second round of the playoffs, had 17 points before twisting his ankle late in the game.

Orlando guard Nick Anderson sprains his wrist in the fo quarter of the Magic's 86-67 loss.

Braunskill's case went to an IAAF arbitration hearing after U.S. Track and Field, the national governing body, contended the correct procedure wasn't followed in the utrialysis.

The IAAF said Braunskill, a former world junior 200-meter champion who has not been active in major events for the past year, tested positive May 22, 1994 at the New York Games and his urine sample was sent to an IOC-accredited laboratory in Los Angeles.

The IAAF decided that a doping offense had been committed and that Braunskill, 28, would be ineligible test until May 21, 1998.

The positive test came at a time when Braunskill was running at his best, placing fifth in the 1994 U.S. national championships at Knoxville, Tenn. and ranked a career-high eighth in the world for 200 meters.

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — The U.S. women's basketball team will attempt to extend its unbeaten streak to 47 games Sunday against a Cuba team it will play in its opening game of the Summer Olympics in Adanta.

The American women beat Cuba twice earlier this month in Australia.

Lisa Leslie, the team's leading score (17-3), said the unbeaten streak has not burdened a team that is the overwhelming favorite to win the gold.

"I don't think it adds any pressure because we don't think about our record at all," said Leslie, a 6-foot-5 centre-foward who graduated from USC in 1994.

"Our main goal is to win the gold. To do that we have to keep improving. The fact we haven't lost doesn't mean we don't have to work on things."

The U.S. team is looking to rebound from the disappointment of a bronze-medal finish at, the 1992 Olympics in Barcelona.

The Americans are 24-0 against international opponents, including 60 against Cuba, and have outscored opponents by an average of 32 points.
"Our practices are a lo harder than our games. We just want to keep that up and stay injury-free," Leslie said.

PARIS (AP) — The French Open seems curved before it has eyen begun. A rush of withdrawala mingures has ravaged the field of the Grand Slam event starting Monday. Several hig names, including Boris Becker and Gabriels Sabatini, are already out. Others — Pete Sampras, Monico Seles and Thomas Muster—are hurting and may not be able to go the distance.

Never in recent years has the French Open been so jinxed, Virtually every day this week has brought news of more casualies.

"It really opens up the draw for many players," tournament director Patrice Clerc said, trying to put the best face on the situation. "But at this time of the season, we always have players injured."

Up until a few days ago, the only certainty seemed to be that Muster was a big favorite to retain his men's tile. Now even that is questionable. Muster suffered a badly sprained ankle in practice Thursday and had to pull out of a tournament in St. Poelten, Austria, ending his run of five successful clay court title defenses this year.

The Austrian, seeded and ranked No. 2 behind Sampras, was later pronounced fit to play in Paris, but there must be serious doubts about whether his ankle can hold up through grueling, five-set matches.

 Irlina Spirlea, a strong clay-court player, withdrew with a foot injury. Among the men, No. 3 Andree Agassi is the only player ranked in the top 5 who has not reported any injury problems of late. But even he is a big question mark.
 Agassi played only one clay-court rournament this spring and the results were no tryonising. He was whisted off court after giving a half-hearted effort in a 6-2, 6-1 loss in Monte Carlo to Spain's Alberto Costa, a strong French Open contender. tice at Roland Garros and could be dangerous it be gets through the first few rounds.

The road looks tougher for Sampras, who also skipped most of the clay-court season. His rustiness showed when he lost to unheralded Bohdan Ulhrach in Duesseldorf. That was Sampras' first match since the death from brain cancer on May 3 of Tim Gullikson, the coach and confidant who guided him to six Grand Slam titles in three years. Sampras, who lost in the first round last year to Gilbert Schaller, got no favors in the draw. He faces Sweden's Magnus Gustafsson in the first round, with Bruguera and Mats Wilander looming in the next two rounds.

Wilander looming in the next two rounds.

"Last year I was on clay courts so long I lost a bit of my serve-and-volley game," Sampras said. "This year I want to play on my terms and still be aggressive on the big points."

By winning the French. Agassi and Sampras can become the first American since Bog. Budge in 1938 to win all four Grand'Slams.
"I think if's difficult to come over and expect to do well without having played much on clay," fellow American Todd Martin said. "But if anyone can do it, those two can. I think Pete will be OK. and Andre always seems to get by with as lintle preparation as he puts in. It's amazing but that's how talented he is."

Can we talk? World Wide Web is popular alternative

The World Wide Web wasn't made for chatting, but do you think that stops anyone? Not when you consider that the Web is the most popular part of the Internet.

Web is the most popular part of the Internet.

Web charting is a curious but increasingly common phenomenon across the Internet. It is intended for those who want to connect through cyberspace without fooling around with software downloads or network server addresses. From what I've seen, Web chat seems more popular with teens and young adults than it is with the crowd who is 30-something and over. I spent several days crusing through Web chat sites, and I can tell you they definitely are not your father's chat service.

When you chat using IRC — or America Online, Prodigy or CompuServe — what you see is text that scrolls up your screen as you and others type and hit the return key. You follow — with practice — the thread of the conversation as the text goes blipping by.

When you chat at a Web site, you type what you want to say into a blank field on your screen and then click on a button that usually is tagged "Refresh."

Your comments are submitted to the Web site, which sends back a new Web page showing what you and others have said. To keep the conversation going, such as to to keep clicking on the Refresh button.

It's a little cumbersome, it requires you to click with the mouse instead of hitting the return key. # New manager won't rescue Magellan

It was much ado about nothing on Wall, Street Thursday, Portfolio manager Jeffrey Vinik resigned as head of Fidelity Magellan, the world's biggest mutual fund, and the mutual fund world trembled. But the significance of the changing of the guard was wildly exaggeraer will be lucky to rival — let alone exceed — the performance of the overall marke. In essence, Magellan, whose performance has sagged hadly this year, has attracted too much money to be managed successfully, several mutual fund experts say. That single-fund-is worth 556-billionmore than the assess in 90 percent of the nation's fund families, which commonly include at least 10 mutual tunds. "It's impossible for a mutual fund to do well when it manages such a big pile of money," said Gerald Perritt, editor of the Mutual Fund Letter in Chicago. "If I were a Magellan investor, I would sell my shores."

Magellan investor, I would sell my shares.

Magellan attracts enormous attention because its strategies can castly move the market.

Vinik, for example, sold nearly $20 billion worth of technology stocks last fall, contributing to the worst technology stocks leaff in years. Technically, the stocks could have absorbed the Magellan selling without declining. But word leaked without declining, But word leaked that a major player was suddenly unbasding millions of shares. Magellan's influence will continue under Stansky, the highlyregarded manager of the $7.5 $7.5billion Fidelity Grawth Company made an unusually big bet on bonds.

Some mutual fund experts argue that Magellan is still a superior fund despite its unwieldy size. Last year, for example, it ross 56.8 percent, nearly a point less than the Standard and Poor's 500 but still more than roughly 75 percent of U.S. stock funds. Since Vinik took over Magellan in July 1992, the fund has appreciated 83.7 percent, compared with 77.8 percent for the S&P, according to Lipper Analytical Services Inc.

Between 1976 and 1985, Magellan returned an average of 34 percent annually, compared with 143 percent of the S&P 300, and it beat the S&P and of those 39 years. By contract of the S&P 300, and it beat the S&P and of 1995, Magellan experiented an average of 34 percent, or the S&P, and it beat the S&P in only five of those 1995, Magellan's average annual gain of 16.5 percent ror the S&P, and it beat the S&P in only five of those 10 years.

10 years.

10 the five-year period ended in April, Magellan's average annual gain of 16.5 percent ranked only 14th among the 23 diversified domestic funds Fidelity ran then. Meanwhile, its assets grew from S14 billion just six years ago.

Magellan may also be a harbinger of problems in other Fidelity funds. Perritt says any fund becomes unwieldy once its assets exceed $10 billion, and nine of the 20 domestic stock funds that have done so are members of the Fidelity family.

In addition, there have been many portfolio management shuffles at Fidelity. Stansky will become Magellan's fourth manager in six years, following Vinik, Morris-Smith and Peter-Lynch. The managers of 26 other smaller funds were reassigned in March, which means their investors can't look at past fund performance for clues about future performance.

Several mutual fund experts say Stansky is better suited to manage Magellan than Vinik, who is said to be leaving voluntarily to start his own investment firm. Stansky favors bigger stocks and changes his mind less often, analysts say, and that should trim the fund's say.

In funds, past losses can be a future plus

NEW YORK (AP) — When investors look at mutual funds that invest in Latin American stocks, one of the attractions they might see right now begins with a minus sign.

It represents the aftereffects of losses suffered during and after the Mexican peso crisis in late 1994, which sent the prices of many Latin American stocks tumbling.

To investors who owned shares of those funds through that period, the selfoff was painful and costly, depressing the funds' net asset values as the markets fell. But to somebody who is just now considering an investment in those sanie funds, the remaints of that misadventure represent a potential tax break.

This situation arises because funds, which are required to pass through substantially all the capital gains they realize to their shareholders each year in the form of distributions, cannot pass through net losses in the same way.

What they can do is to use those not pass same same way. What they can do is to use those losses to offset taxes on net gains real-sound, it's possible to overvature is importance.

When gains can accumulate inside a fund rather than being distributed each year, you get the benefit of defering taxes, but you don't avoid them entirely. Rather, you postpone them until you decide to sell your shares.

At that time, you will owe capital gains tax on the full appreciation gains tax on the full appreciation gives investment, as determined by the difference between what your shares cost to buy and the price you receive for them.

If you receive taxable distributions snares cost to buy and the price you receive for them.

If you receive taxable distributions year by year along the way and automatically reinvest them, the amount of each reinvestment is added to your "cost basis." That way, you don't have to pay gains taxes again on distributions that were taxed in the year you received them.

Putting off the day of tax reckoning is of no benefit at all to investors operating through individual retirement accounts, 401(k) plans and other programs that already defer taxes until money is withdrawn from the account.

Also, sometimes a large loss carryforward can be fool's gold. Quite a few of the individual funds that have the biggest negative tax liabilities today got to that position by making bad investments in the midst of a rearing bull market.

Poor past management is normally a powerful reason to stay away from a fund, forgetting any question of tax angles.

a powerful reason to the fund, forgetting any question of tax angles. However, it can be argued that Latin American losses were the result not of any sort of bad fund management, but rather of a special situation that may not recur in the future—though just about everybody agrees that Latin American stocks remain a high-risk proposition.

"The key question is, what events caused the fund to accumulate net losses, and what is the current outlook," Ernst & Young says.

"Taxes shouldn't be the driving force behind your investment decisions," the accounting firm concludes. "But considering these variables can help you realize the maximum benefit from your future mutual fund investments."

New farm programs signed into law this year will benefit rural Idaho in the next seen years, but farmers without diverse crop choices may sruggle under it after the transition period is up, Idaho's Farm Service Agency head said Monday. "In the early years of the program, it's going to be a tremendous boost for rural Idaho," Dick Rush said Monday.

It took only 40 to 50 complaints for the U.S. Department of Agriculture to cancel a new lamb and wool promotion program set to begin July 1.

The department's Agricultural Marketing Service said the problem was not with the order, the law or the rules and regulations. The problem was simply inconsistencies with how the February 6 referendum was conducted in county Extension offices.

aluJet's accident rate exceeds the average

The president of ValuJet trlines, Lewis Jordan, bought his recutive desk for $100 at Office epot. He built it on a Sunday

Depot. He built it on a Sunday afternoon.

Jordan applied the same thriftiness to his young company and its fleet of secondhand DC-9 jets, whose average age is the oldest in the industry, and to its pilots, whose average salaries are less than half what major airlines pay. Ticketless travel. Subcontracted repairmen. No in flight meads. By finding duzens of ways to cut costs and lower prices, Valujet tapped into the public's appetite for bargain travel, officing air fares as low as bus fares and exident coeding sensitionally where other discounters had failed.

Investigators say they will now scrutinize records of incidents, accidents, "service difficulties" and enforcement sanctions involving Valujet since its birth in 1993. Those reports number more than 300 and describe everything from the routine — door cracks plugged during inspections — to the unsettling—flights returned to airports because of mechanical problems, aborted takeoffs, a fire on the runway.

because of mechanical problems, aborted takeoffs, a fire on the runway.

As they pore through reams of paperwork, asking a host of questions about an airline whose meteoric rise may have presaged its most tragic moment, investigators will examine whether the upstart's passion for penny-pinching somehow weakened its safety record, and whether maintenance, operations or judgment errors contributed to the crash that killed all 110 people aboard the 25-year-old ValuJet DC-9 on May 11. The plane plunged nose first into a swamp after the pilot reported smoke in the cockpit.

At the same time, the crash has focused an intense spotlight on questions about ValuJet and the other small airlines that began in the last three years and fly older jets — and about the government's ability to be an effective watchdog over airlines large and small.

Jordan, a Southerner who speaks with the ease and eloquence of a Baptist preacher, said he was ready to reexamine what his company had done.

"If I had any control over the past, we wouldn't have had the hor-ValuJet President Lewis Jordan, I directors, at ValuJet's shareholder rible tragedy we did last Saturday..., Perhaps we grew too fast," he said quietly at a news conference in Atlanta. "We think it's appropriate to rethink everything we do." On its first day, Oct. 26, 1993, ValuJet had a fleet consisting of three old DC-9s bought from the manufacturer McDonnell Douglas Corp, for S2 million each. It was all ValuJet could afford, A 747 jumbo H. Said and Said Corp. for S2 million each. It was all ValuJet could afford, A 747 jumbo H. Gore, and of the Corp. for S2 million. Experts say buying old airplanes makes sense and involves little risk. — if the planes are well-maintained. Big airlines do it, too.

Morton S. Beyer, a McLean, Va., consultant and former airline executive, said that, at 18 percent, ValuJet spends a greater portion of its operating expenses on maintenance than most carriers. But that's mostly due to much lower labor costs than an older carrier, like Delta, he said.

Contracting out meintenance work, as ValuJet does everywhere except in Atlanta, also is common, Beyer said. In his view, ValuJet did not cut corners on repairs.

"I don't think they are any better or worse than any other airline," he said. "They aren't shorting maintenance to make money."

In the days since Flight 592 crashed, the words "smoke in the cockpit" have taken on new importance. For Valuet and other air-lines using old DC-9s, the words were already familiar.

An FAA service advisory issued last year requires any airline with the old planes to inspect and rein-sulate overhead wiring bundles "to 'prevent the potential for fire and uncontrolled smoke throughout the cockpit."

prevent the potential for fire and uncontrolled smoke throughout the cockpit."

The FAA has acknowledged the DC-9 that crashed in the Everglades was among those facing inspection this year for possibly chafed wiring. Whether it had undergone such a check has not been reported. Citing the National Transportation Safety Board's investigation, a Valulyet spokesman declined to talk about the crashed plane's history.

A review of 284 service-difficulty reports filed by Valulyet and obtained by The Inquirer shows that smoke was reported in the cockpit seven times and in the cabin nine times in the last three years. The FAA requires the filing of service-difficulty reports whenever equipment on a commercial airliner fails to operate properly.

While the 16 instances of smoke were attributed to a multitude of causes — from malfunctioning coffeemakers to shortcircuits on the instrument panel — the presence of smoke triggered two, declared feemakers to shortcircuits on the instrument panel — the presence of smoke triggered two declared emergencies.

The service-difficulty reports also contain 19 incidents involving problems in the aircraft cabin — including sudden depressurization, triggering the drup down of coygen—masks from overhead compartments — and situations in which the cabin failed to pressurize at all. The reports also note 10 aborted takeoffs, four aborted approaches, and many instances in which planes had to be returned to aircraft.

and many instances in which planes had to be returned to airplanes had to be returned to airplanes had to be returned to airpost.

Stafety experts caution against drawing inferences from the raw number of service-difficulty reports, called SDRs. Others point to ValuJet's frequency of aborting flights and returning to airports.

More troubling than the SDRs is ValuJet's history of 10 incidents or accidents, including a June 1995 engine failure that started a fire on a DC-9 as it tried to take off from Atlanta. Seven people, were injured, including a flight attendant who suffered birms on 30 percent of her body and was hit by shrapnel from the engine.

These and other examples were included in the analysis released Thursday, in which the FAA's Office of Accident Investigation compared ValuJet's safety record to other airlines and concluded: "ValuJet dominates the accident data with five accidents and three serious accidents in the carrier's relatively short history."

The FAA has also taken enforcement action against ValuJet 43 times since 1993, including fines

"You get talled by the personal of Lloyd's," agreed Calvin Gaddis, who along with atomesy Robert S. Campbell, David K. Watkiss and James R. Kruse have signed affidavits saying they were misted. The affidavits were attached to the state's complain.

When Gaddis agreed to unlimited liability he felt reassured by the fabled history of the company. If Lloyd's had been operating under the same rules for so long, he reasoned, who was he to question them? "You get to the point where you

"You get to the point where you think 'unlimited' in name and not in fact. These people talk so nicely. Nobody who talks like that could ever be devious," said Gadds.

Gotta ever be devrous," said Goddis.

Romney had similar reasons for being interested in Lloyd's.

"I am an Anglophile. I love-England. I have gone over there over 40 times," said Romney, a retired real estate consultant who served a two-year Mormon mission in Great Britain 50 years ago. "That was a part of it." Now that love could prove Romney's ruin.

Unlike many of the other Utah names, he doesn't have stop-loss insurance and if Lloyd's collects only part of what they say he owes, Romney will lose everything.

Especially difficult for Romney has been facing his family, which thought his decision to become a name was a mistake from the beginning. Romney's wife, Janet, worries about the family's finances constantly.

"It's always' gnawing at you because it never comes to a close," she said

But not all of the Utah names have had such a bad experience.
Frank Suitter, the new state Republican Party chairman, said he is still making money with Lloyd's and has asked that his name be removed from the state's lawsuit.
Suitter, who has adequate stoploss coverage, feels that many of the Utah names would not be faring so poorly if they hadn't tried to pull out of the company.
"The reason I have come out of this better, than anyone else is because I rode on through," he said. "If they had continued writing with Lloyd's, they would be pleased today."

The usually guarded host of Late Show With David Letterman reveals his feelings about his father, his loves, fishing, Indiana and whether he'll quit late-night TV.

I've read a lot about Lionel Richie's return to the music world after a nine-year absence, with the album "Louder Than Words," It made me wonder. Whatever happened to Diane Alexander, the young model his wife caught him having an affair with?-Q.B., Detroit, Mich.

Lionel Richie, 45, and model-Adancer Diane Alexander, 30. never called it quits after the violent encounter that occurred when the pop singer's wife, Brenda, caught the pair in Alexander's Beverly Hills apartment in the wee hours of June 29, 1988. The ruckus brought the police and led to the arrest of Brenda, but she never was prosecuted. Since his divorce in 1992 Lionel has been living with Diane (who apparently has managed to avoid photographersquite a feat for a model), and they have a 2-yearold son named Miles. Incidentally, Lionel has made amends to Brenda, 43, and they now share custody of their adopted daughter, Nicole, 14,

I've been a fan of Andie MocDowell's ever since "sex, lies, and videotape" and "Four Weddings and a Funeral." But I never see much about her in the press. Why does she have such a low of profile?—Maryann Kardos, Placerville, Calif.

But she has refused to live the life of a typical Hollywood star. In an industry known for frequent divorces, she has been married for 10 years to the same man-Paul Qualley. a builder. They have three children: Justin, 10: Rainey, 7; and Sarah Margaret, I. Even more important, the two have chosen to live a very private life on a ranch in Montana, which is about as far from the glitz of Hollywood as you can get. "My husband and I love the outdoors, and we wanted to live someplace where we can enjoy nature," she tells PARADE. Still, the actress occasionally

The National Rifle Association is one of the most effective lobbying groups in America. Are the members of this organization as adamantly onposed to any and all gun restraints as they appear? -B.H. Plano, Tex.

Steven Seagal has starred in all of his movies. Why did he take a secondary role in "Executive Decision"? -Art Glazebrook, Shawnee, Kan.

For the money. A Hollywood insider tells PARADE that Seagal. 45, took second billing to Kurt Russell because Warner Bros, paid him generously, though less than the $7 million Russell received. (Sengal's normal asking price is $10 million.) Why did Warners dole out a bundle for a cameo by the martial-arts expert? Possible hits: "The Rock," with Sean Connery and Nicolas Cage, and Eddie Murphy's remake of "The Nutty Professor." Three likely bombs: "Cable Guy." with Jim Carrey ("very dark, not very funny," says our source); "Striptease," with Demi Moore ("more salacious than you want Demi to be"); and "Tin Cup," a golf film with Kevin Costner ("a dud").

'I Love Nothing More Than

BY DOTSON RADER

"THE ONLY THING I WAS EVER REALLY GOOD at was making people laugh." David Letterman said.

"There was nothing else that I could do. I was not much of an athlete. I was a bad student. Everything in the classroom was such a struggle, so dull and confusing I just didn't get it.

"I remember the first day in high school speech class. That to give an impromptu introductory speech, and I did it so easily and so readily that I was praised for it that day. I can remember the exact moment, thinking to myself. I wooder if somebody would pay myself. I wooder if somebody would pay worked in radia and television since I was 19."

I visited David Letterman, 49, in his offices at the Ed Sullivan Theater on Broadway, a building purchased for his use as part of the deal that brought him to CBS in 1993 for a reported salary of $16 million. From the very first broadcast, on Aug. 30, 1993. Late Show With David Letterman was a hit, winning its time slot against NBC's The Tonight Show With Jay Leno for 90 weeks. In the last year, however, the fortunes of, Letterman's program have been reversed.

Late Show now consistently trails in the late-night ratings. It was in the context of this ratings decline, after such heady success, that I spent time with Letterman and found this famously private man unusually forthcoming about the personal journey that brought him to prominence. I started by asking about his beginnings in Indiana.

"My father owned a flower shop all his adult life." Letterman said. "He liked the fact that something he loved also provided a living. It didn't come casy life was constantly chasing financial comfort for us I give a lot of credit to my parents for making us happy in other ways, so the shortage of money was never really a consideration."

David is the second child of the late Joseph Letterman and his wife, Dorothy, a church secretary and homemaker. He has two sisters.

"I often think about my father," he commented.

"He had his first heart attack when he was 36. That's really unbelievably young. When I came home from school for lunch, I sensed right away something was wrong. I was told my dad was in the hospital, and so for a couple of weeks we lived with terror. When he got over it, in the back of my mind was this fear that it could happen again.

"My dad and I used to go fishing. When I was really young, we'd go to my grandparents' house in southwestern Indiana, where the abandoned stripmining pits were filled with water and stocked with fish. I was like 7 years old. I'd never been fishing. We had these old bamboo poles and 5 cent plastic bobbers, and we tossed them in there. To me this was terribly exciting, like a safari in Kenya. I can remember him explaining to me that what I had to keep my eye on was when the bobber goes down in the water: Get ready, because that signals action. You could be pulled in. You just don't know. So tie yourself to a tree " and hang on!

"I'm hanging on to that pole, and pretty soon it happens. The bobber goes down, myheartbeat goes up, and he says. Okay, if it goes down again, just pull it up. So I did, and—oh; my God—I pulled up a bluegill, a kind of pan fish. It was the most exhilarating thing that had happened to me. The fish was not a keeper, wasn't big enough, but we kept it anyway.

"We had such good times fishing," he went on, "That was something we'd do together. And through adolescence it was still exciting and fun. Then, later in his life, my dad was a heavy drinker. I was also a heavy drinker.

It was like we were hopelessly lost but making good time. By the time I was an adult and working back in Indianapolis, the purpose of our fishing excursions had just become. 'Let's go out and get drunk."

'My dad was 53 when he died. I was 27. I didn't get to spend enough time with this man. He was always, always working, I sometimes wonder what it would be like if he were still around-this kind of introspective thing that accumulates as you get older. I have pictures of him in the house. I look at him and see myself. When I look in a mirror, I see my dad, and I wonder, 'Wouldn't we have grown really, really close if he had lived?" "And what about your mother?" I prompted.

"At home Mom was the brains of the operation," he replied, "and Dad was the nerve center. He made all the noise while she quietly called the shots. She took care of everything, cooked, got us to school. Then, when he was out of the picture, everything got really, really quiet. Suddenly it was just my mom, and Mom is very tacitum, very undemonstrative, just plain quiet."

After high school in Indianapolis, Letterman attended Ball State University in Muncie, majoring in broadcasting and disregarding his mother's advice that he forget academics and enroll in a trade school. In 1969, he married his college sweetheart, Michelle Cook. The following year, after graduation, he was hired by WLWI, the ABC-TV affiliate in Indianapolis.

"I've been very fortunate, because at an early age I knew what I wanted to do, and when I got out of college I found a way to do it." Letterman told me. "I was single-minded about that. All I wanted to do was get a job at a station

He worked as an announcer, as the host of a 4-H program, Clover Power, and as a news reader and weekend weatherman. ("In the event that harm came to the regular weatherman, I was just a heartbeat away. Letterman joked.) Early on, he displayed the antic humor that became his trademark-such things as announcing that Guam had bought the beloved war memorial in Indianapolis and painted it green because it resembled the island's national vegetable. the asparagus. Or that the Indianapolis 500 would be held on Highway 1-70 to allow more seats on the straightaway. Or describing "hailstones as big as canned hams" falling on Indiana.

By 1975, restless for a larger career, Letterman pulled up stakes and went to Los Angeles, I asked him about the move.

"I was really nervous about it," he said. "I talked myself into it because I honestly believed that if things didn't go well. I could come home. It was a comforting notion to me.

"I have such fondness for Indiana. If I make fun of being from Indiana, it's an extension of making fun of myself, and Lord knows there's endless material. There's something about Indiana-a lack of suspicion or anxiety or edginess in the people-that you don't get here. When I go back home now, they just couldn't be more openly warm and friendly. Today, whenever I leave Indianapolis, as the plane is taxiing down the runway getting ready to take off. I have real sadness about it, and I always wonder if I could return and live there. And something tells me that, 'No, I can't,'

To Letterman's relief, he quickly found work writing jokes for the comedian Jimmy Walker at $150 a week. He also did freelance TV writing and developed his act in clubs like The Cornedy Store.

"It was only humiliating when you bombed," he said, referring to life as a stand-up comic. "Then it was so humiliating. It just redefined humiliation. Public humiliation. People who are drunk, and you can't even get them to laugh."

In 1977, his marriage to Michelle Cook ended in divorce, an event he talked about reluctantly.

"I misbehaved," he told me, "There's no getting around that. The responsibility for the end of our marriage is squarely on my shoulders. I have a measure of ongoing guilt about that. Fortunately she's now remarried and has a happy life. I'm very, very pleased about that. In our marriage I was very immature and acted badly, and I'm said about that. The next year Letterman was part of the east of

Mary, a TV variety show starring Mary Tyler Moore. Through it he met Merrill Markoe, a writer for the show, While Mary only survived two months, his rocontinued mantic relationship with Markoe lasted a decade.

On Nov. 24, 1978, Letterman made the first of his 2 guest appearances on The Tonight Show with 10 plonny Carson. Over the years, he also would be a guest host on the show 50 times. Carson was the television figure he most admired and wanted most to emulate and whose approval he sought.

It was precisely because of his Tonight Show appearances that NBC in 1980 gave Letterman his first network show, a morning comedy/variety program. The David Letterman Show. It bombed after four months but still won two Ermpys for the comedian. Two years later, when NBC launched Lute Night With David Letterman immediately following The Tonight Show, it was Johnny Carson's company that produced the program. For 11'y years, Letterman's show was a commercial and critical success.

Letterman was widely considered Carson's heir apparent. But when Carson retired, the job went instead to Jay Leno. Leno is one of Letterman's oldest show-business friends, and today both men speak with fondness of the other and. I think sincerely, wish each other well as they compete nightly for the same audience.

"Undeniably Carson is the mark." he said. "I wish I could achieve that status. I have not and will not. Everybody would like to be Johnny Carson. I'd be surprised if anybody ever assumed that position again. It's the pinnacle, isn't it? To be that kind of voice, to help people decide how they feel about things just by raising an eyebrow or giving a look into the camera."

I asked Letterman when, like Carson, it would be time for him to quit late-night television?

"I wish I were smart enough to tell you," he replied.
"Oh, in four years or two years, i just don't know if I'm going to be that smart. If you look at Carson, he did this thing for 30 years. Should he have done this for that long? Probably not. I'd like to think at 50 I'm done. Because it's a job for a younger man, and at that point I will have done it for 20 odd years, and then I'll go on to find out other things about myself.

"The truth of it is this job is still a great deal of fun. Looking back on things, if I were to fall down the elevator shaft when we got done chatting here, by and large I'd be pleased with what I've been lucky enough to accomplish. Still, when it stops being fun..."

I spent nearly four hours with David Letterman, our conversation taking place in the loftlike space he uses as his office. With the exception of a few swivel chairs and a table, his room is devoid of furnishings. There are no personal items to identify the place as his. The feeling is one of a hired, vacant hall. I was struck by an aura of solitude about him, not loneliness as much as aloneness. I knew that his first marriage had failed. as had his romance with Merrill Markoe, and that there were thought to be strains in his current relationship with Regina Lasko, whom he met in 1989 when she was a production manager for Saturday Night Live. Now she lives in his Manhattan apartment while he stays in his Connecticut house. And so I asked why his public career seemed so much more successful than his private life.

"For one thing, this job is all-consuming," he replied, "And then there's this other dynamic. The single most powerful motivating force is this desire to succeed and prevail. What does it say about some-body who, at 49, is continually seeking the approval of a mass American television audience? I do recognize it is out of balance, and maybe one day I'll get it under control. I think, unfortunately, until you reach a place of satisfaction in having attained that everything else is going to get second attention. I know it's not fair to these women in my life, but that is just the way it-seems to be.

"Everyone understands what it's like to have a relationship fall apart, Believe me, I love nothing move than being in love. That siry feeling where it is term-bly exciting and nearly addictive to have that sort of buzz in the air about it. And when that goes away, I don't think anybody needs me to call attention to how hearthreaking that really is. Like everybody cless who has drawn breath today. I have gone through that.

"When I was doing comedy," he told me, "it seemed to me there were two kinds of people doing stand-up comedy, both driven. As a child they enther did not get enough attention or got way too much. I'm probably in the former. Every night you're trying to prove your self-worth. It's like meeting your girlfriend's family for the first time. You want to be the absolute best, wittiest, smartest, most charming, best smelling version of yourself you can possibly be. That's how I feel every night I go down there to the Ed Sullivan Theater. If I can make these 500 people enjoy the experience and have a higher regard for me when I'm finished, it makes me feel like an entire person. If I've come short of that, I'm not happy. How things go for me every night is how I feel about myself for the next 24 hours. Because I'm not playing a character. I'm trying to give you the best version of myself. If things go well, it's the most exhilarating thing I've ever done in my life. If not. there's nobody to blame but me.

David Letterman smiled. "That said, I have a job that's a great deal of fun and that I continue to love." he observed. "I work with smart, talented people I'm fond of. So I have so much more than I ever knew I even wanted or could ever have. I am so very, very lucky."

What's Up This Week

Fall-Scale Back Floor

Mark Twain's Adventures of Huckleberry Firm has been regarded as a classic—or maybe the classic—American novel for so long that it's sartling to be told that we really haven't been reading it the way he originally wrote it. But that's what Random House says in its new edition of the great tale of Huck and Jim's unforgettable raft trip down the Mississippi, which includes four cpisodes deleted by Twain before publication and recently rediscovered in a long-lost manuscript.

It's nice to have these portions—including a ghost story and a depiction of raffsmen's life—restored, and there also are some interesting annotations by a Twain scholar, Victor Doyno. But the new material really isn't very significant, and Twain lost little by making the cuts, probably for reasons of length. However, any excuse for rereading this masterpiece is a good one, and the new edition (325) is adorned with the delightfully atmospheric first-edition illustrations of Edward Windsor Kemble and reproductions of 29 pages of the original handwritten manuscript. Plus, of course, the marvelous story itself.

Post-Hempty Dunnets

Would you think it possible for anyone to come up with a sequel to the tale of Humpty Dumpty that would be imaginative, attractive and perfectly logical to children? That's what Miko Imai has done in Lttte Lumpty, which is aimed at the age? 4 and up crowd and is now available in paperback (Candlewick Press, $5.59).

MICE (TESS, 33.79).
This story is about a little egg-shaped kid named Lumpty, who knows what happened to old Humpty years ago but nevertheless is fascinated by the challenge of climbing a high wall near his house. His terror when he can't get down is sympathetically porturyed, and you'll share his relief (and his mother's mother's joy) when, unlike his predecessor, he makes it safely back thanks to the timely intervention of the townsfolk. The pictures are perfectly charming and the happy ending is thoroughly satisfying. INTERIOR SECTION DICKIES ASSESSED IN idel Castro turns 70 on Aug. 13. No other current world leader has held power as long. Since 1959, he has kept an iron grip on Cuba, intimidating, jailing and executing opponens. He has survived more than 30 assassination attempts, some initiated by the CIA. A few anti-Castro plots were ridiculous, like the CIA "Sampson scheme" to give him a poison that would make his beard fall out, destroying his virile image.

Fidel in Paris in a fancy suit: He must have been meeting with an investor Castro keeps his private life secret. There is no visible "First Family" of Cubs, though in Hawana I was told he has a wife and three or four child/81. (His only confirmed marriage, 10 Mirta Diaz-Balart, ended in 1955 after seven years.) He also disappears from view for months on end, perhaps to cultivate a sense of mystery. (A former official told me Castro once explained: "If everything I do is visible to the people, they will turn against me." Yet his presence is everywhere. "All social and political policies are his." sad the official. "We are his guinea pig."

Despite his secrecy, Castro has recorded his life on videotape. He recently permitted Estela Bravo, an American filmmaker who has been in and out of Cuba for 32 years, access to these tapes to make a documentary about him. She showed me a preview in Hawana. The video attest to Castro's warm meetings over the years with Americans from David Rockefeller to Whoopi Goldberg.

Incidentally, Cube's "Maximum Leader" lately has shed his trademan military uniform in favor of elegant suits when visiting foreign investors. But even if he wore nothing, you can be sure none of his subjects would dare say. "The emperor has no clothes."

The little-known story of the courageous Japanese-American heroes of World War II:

Our Parents Told Us, This Is Your Country'

BY JAMES ZUMWALT

out the war and even at times communicating openly in Japanese, confident that they would not be understood. They knew nothing about our existence.

"In one incident, two Japanese messages had been intercepted by the Army. One was coded and one was not. The coded message said that Admiral Yamamoto (who planned the attack on Pearl Harbor) would be touring the Solomon Islands and included the admiral's arrival and departure times. The uncoded message communicated the same thing. But because it had been transmitted in the open, the U.S. commander feared a trap. Only after receiving critical translations and assessments of both messages from the Nisci were American aircraft sent to shoot down Yamamoto." Growing up as an American. Born in Berkeley.

Calif., Sunao Ishio was raised in Salt Lake City, where his father owned a Laundromat. In 1938, his grand-father decided to return to Japan and asked Sunao to go with him. He did, studying in Tokyo until one day in April 1941, when he was summoned by the U.S.

Embassy. "I was told the situation between the U.S. and Japan was very bad and that I should go back to the U.S.," he recalled. "I took the next ship back."

The seeds of Ishio's loyalty to America had been planted long before his trip to Tokyo. Ishio's mother and father. like the parents of other Nisei, were not American citizens. But these immigrants, known as Isse' (literally. "first generation"), communicated an important message to their children

"Our parents instilled in us what had been instilled in them by their parents." Ishio explained. "Loyalty, devotion to country and carrying out one's responsibilities. They told us. 'You were born here—this is your country.' We were able to serve our country and leave such a record largely due to the values they gave us."

Ishio points out that concern over the Nisei's loyalty should have been dispelled with their intelligence training. The U.S. Army had prepared a syllabus which was to include a "refresher" course in Japanese. But the Army soon discovered that "a very small number of Nisei had any competency in the language." Ishio said. "They didn't realize how Americanized we were." Many of these "enemy aliens" had to be taught the basics of the enemy's language.

By early 1943, the ban against them serving was lifted, and the first Nisei MIS language-school graduates were sent to Guadalcanal. They would go on to serve in every major offensive campaign of the Pacific war. In Hawaii, where the Army wanted to recruit 1000 to 2000 Nisei, more than 10,000 signed up. At least 30,000 would end up serving in both Europe and the Pacific. They included Daniel Inouye, now a U.S. Senator from Hawaii.

Saving a battalion in Europe. The Nisei who fought in Europe were assigned to the 100th/442nd Regimental Combat Team. This unit distinguished itself by serving in seven campaigns—but it did so as a segregated fighting force, kept separate from Caucasian soldiers. It helped to liberate the concentration camp at Docatua and suffered the highest casualty rate of any American combat unit in Europe. Its members were awarded thousands of Purple Hearts and Brouze Sars, as well as dozens of other medals.

One of the unit's most memorable and costly feas was rescuing the U.S. Army's "lost battalion" in France. This battalion of Caucasian soldiers had been surrounded by a superior number of German forces, which had orders to annihilate them. Prior rescue attempts had been unsuccessful. The 442nd Regiment was then assigned the job. Five days later, 710 Nisci troops—out of a total of 4500—lay wounded and 140 were dead, having rescued 211 of the 275 members of the lost battalion.

Witnessing the surrender of the lost outsides. Witnessing the surrender of Japan. Tom Sakamoto. Rs. was one of three Nisci on board the battleship Missouri on Sept. 2, 1945, to witness the signing of the Japanese surrender. He told me how he felt, watching his country of ancestry concede defeat.

"I was 30 feet from the desk where the surrender was to be signed." Sakamoto recalled. "Every available space was occupied by sailors. The atmosphere was one of celebration. But this festive moment abrupily turned to silence as the Japanese delegation arrived. They were stripped of their swords. One could hear a pin drop. The delegation was left standing alone for 15 minutes, subject to hostile starring. It was as if a huge lion had cornered a tiny mouse in a cage.

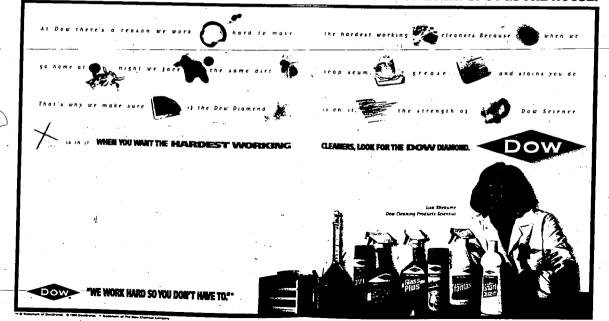

"If there was ever a scene that brough home to me how sad a defeated nation can be, this was it. Of the total surrender ceremony, this 15 minutes of cruel si-lence and abusive staring impacted me more than any other portion of the ceremony. I recalled the four years of my high school education in Japan; of the once proud Jamato Damashii [Japanese spirit] Bushii Do [way of the samurai] mentality of the Japanese military; and, as a Nisci, of my parents' pride in those things Japanese, now vanished at that moment on the deck of the Missouri in a total defeat and in disgrace for the Japanese people and the nation."

After the war, while most Americans returned home, many Nisei felt bound to fulfill an obligation to Japan. They volunteered to remain, helping the Japanese to make the transition to peace. These Nisei, says Sunso Ishio, recognized that their efforts would provide the foundation upon which a strong relationship between the two countries could be built.

In 1992, Congress approved a memorial in Washington, D.C., that will be dedicated to the Japanese-Americans who served in the war and to those interned in camps. As President Clinton told PARADE, "All Americans are proud of the skill and dedication with which the Nisei defended America. Hobbled by preju-

CLEANERS FOR EVERY SPOT IN THE HOUSE.

ARLY IN WORLD WAR II, SHORTLY after the bombing of Pearl Harboron, more than 120,000 Japanese-Americans were stripped of their civil rights, reclassified as "enemy aliens" and placed in interment camps. Even so, their sons later went on to fight gallaintly for this country in both Europe and the Pacific, where they ultimately were given credit for shortening the war by at least two years. These soldiers were Nieri seeond-generation Japanese-Americans, born in the U.S. to alien-resident parents. Their exploits in Europe—where they became the most decorated unit in U.S. military history, based on size and length of service—have received much attention. What has gone largely untold is the story of the Nisei who fought in the Pacific.

Working secretly for the Military Intelligence Service (MIS), more than 6000 Nisei helped to decode Japanese messages and provided crucial information on Japanese military operations. Many served in some of the most important offensive campaigns of the war. And they were instrumental in helping to destroy the plane of Adm. Isoroku Yamamoto, who was killed in the attack, delivering a major setback to Japan's morale and military.

Unfortunately, the Nisei's work in the Pacific received little public attention. Though President Nison lifted a 50-year secrecy ban on their exploits in 1972, the passage of time—coupled with the fact that the Vennam War was then claiming American lives—made their stories back-page news. As a result, they never have been recognized fully for their exemplary service.

This Memorial Day, as we commemorate the men and women who fought for America, it is worth noting that the story of the Nisci encompasses tales of courage, self-sucrifice and loyalty. And they speak as much about fighting for this country as they do about fighting hard to change perceptions within it.

Esplonage In the Pacific. The intelligence efforts of the Nissi primarily were aimed at translating captured documents and interrogating Japanese prisoners of war, Sunao Ishio, a retired U.S. Army colonel, explained how his unit's success hinged on Tokyo's lack of knowledge about its esistence.

"Japanese is a difficult language." said Ishio, now 78. "When war broke out, the U.S. had a limited Japanese-language capability. And the Japanese relied on this U.S. limitation, using the same codes through-

Say that a women and a man (who are unrealized) each has two children. We know that at least one of the woman's children is a boy and that the man's oldest child is a boy. Can you explain why the chances that the women has two boys do not equal the chances that the man has two boys?

My algebra teacher insists that the probbility is greater that the man has two boys, but I think the chances may be the same. What do you think?

ir is 117

- Michelle Minikel, Brookfield, Wis,

I agree with your algebra teacher. The woman may have at least one boy in the three following ways: 1) older boy, younger boy: or 3) older boy, younger boy but the man's children may be distributed in only how ways: 1) older boy.

younger girl: or 2) older boy, younger boy. So the chances are only I out of 3 that the woman has two boys, but the chances are I out of 2 that the man has two boys.

Is it just a little heartburn or something more serious?

They come to me complaining of a burning sensation in the esophagus, right behind the breastbone, two or more times a week, often at night. There's a sour, acid taste in the mouth. They can't sleep, they feel miserable.

"So why didn't they see a doctor sooner? Many of these people don't realize what they have isn't simple heartburn. It's a more serious physical condition called GERD, or gastroesophageal reflux disease. They ury to treat their "heartburn" on their own with frequent doses of nonprescription medicines. These work fine for ordinary heartburn. But with chronic cases, they only put the "fire" out for a short time. To be symptom-free, you may require something more powerful, available only by prescription from your doctor.

"One more thing. If you over-indulge in spicy foods, alcohol or smoking, you know your doctor will ask you to stop. But you should also know that while these can be contributing factors, modifying your lifestyle habits alone will not get rid of GERD. Only working with your doctor can do that."

For a free brochure about heartburn and GERD, call the American College of Gastroenterology at 1-800-HRT-BURN. And if your heartburn flares up two or more times a week or if you still have symptoms on your over-the-counter or prescription medicine, see your doctor. #### Parade's guide to Better Finess

I just had twins, and they take up all of my time. What tips do you have for me to get back in shape?

Get a jogging stroller. They come in a variety of shapes and sizes, including strollers for twins, triplets and for children with physical disabilities. Regardiess of the model you choose, the stroller should have standard safety features, such as a deep seat with a seat belt, a locking brake and a wrist strap to keep the stroller from breaking free.

Before you purchase one, get clearance from your child's pediatrician. And never lose sight that it's your responsibility to use the stroller safely. Along those lines. Always use the parking brake when helping your child into and out of the stroller. Always wear the writs strape. Use the stroller only for walking and jogging—never use it when you are, skaring or rollerblading, because you can easily lose control. Sterring these stroll-

Mary Jo Copeland, a mother of 12, founded Sharing & Caring Hands after she decided that the life she was leading had to change:

'When I See People In Need, I See A Mirror Of Myself'

T WAS 9:30 IN THE morning, and Mary Jo Copeland was looking out at a line of people that had formed around the block. She was about to open the doors of Sharing & Caring Hands, her nonprofit organization for the homeless and poor in Minneapolis, and people were waiting to come in for a hot breakfast. As the line surged forward, Copeland yelled, "Settle down!" She then stood at the door and greeted every person.

for a haircut. "You can get day labor and earn the money," she told him sternly. Then she looked at me and added, "You've got to tell it like it is."

Mary Jo Copeland, 53, a married mother of 12, founded Sharing & Caring Hands II years ago. She is there 10 hours a day, four days a week, helping to provide meals, clothing, dental and medical care, social services and motivation of the more than 5000 people who show up each week.

I spent several days at Copeland's organization. I asked her how she got startct, what motivated her and how she developed what is now the most successful private organization for the homeless in Minneapolis.

"When I see people in need, I see a mirror of myself," she said. "For years, I myself was an emotionally destroyed person." Copeland grew up in a home where her father beat her mother. Their house was so rundown and dirty that she couldn't bathe properly, causing her classmates to taunt her. "I never drought much of myself, because my ded thought much of myself, because my ded told me I was a nobody," she explained.

"When you're told you're a nobody for a long time, you begin to believe it."

At 15, Mary Jo met her future husband, Dick Copeland, the 16-year-old son of a newspaper production manager. Four years later, in 1961, they were married. Dick became a food company executive, and the couple had 12 children together during the next 15 years. They had enough money to live comfortably, and Mary Jo spent almost all of her time at home, taking care of the children.

Yet, by the time her final child was born in 1977, the isolation of her lifestyle had left her depressed, and she became addicted to tranquilizers. After five years, Copeland decided she had Enjoy $100 of DIRECTV Programming had enough. During a painful three-month period in 1982, she beat her drug habit through withdrawal, support from her husband and prayer, she said.

Then she called a family meeting. "I got the kids together," she explained.
"and I told them, 'I have given you all I can. I love you, and I will always be there for you. But it's time for me to give to the world."

At that point, she told me, most of her children were old enough to take care of themselves, and Copeland began volunteering for Catholic Charities in Minneapolis in 1982 but soon became frustrated with the bureaucracy. She started handing out clothing and food from the back of her car. which she would park behind a tough bar in the inner city.

Three years later, Copeland received a $2200 award from a TV station for her fund-raising efforts and charity work. She gave half of the award money to a church and used the remainder of the money to start Sharing & Caring Hands. She rented a storefront in downtown Minneapolis and bought food, clothing and other supplies to distribute among the needy.

Last year, Copeland spent 43 weekends speaking at churches and private groups to raise the $150,000 a month needed to run her organization. In the last three years, she has raised $6 million from churches, businesses and other groups to help build a tempomry housing complex for homeless families. Ninety-five percent of the funds she collects goes to the poor. She receives no salary or government assistance but has more than 1000 volunteers.

One of the organization's three salaried employees is Copeland's son Mark, 28, who left his job at a gas and electric company to work full-time as a manager at the shelter. His fiancée. Shelly, also works as a manager there.

When my mom asked me to come here, I quit my job the next day," Mark said, "I think I'll be here for the rest of my life."

He isn't the only family member helping out. The Copelands have six sons and six daughters, ranging in age from 19 to 34, who all work at the shelter. "We raised a big family," Dick Copeland said, "and working here has brought us closer together In fact, many of the people Mary Jo has helped are now volunteers. Brenda Sigafoos, 32, was homeless at 12 and has had problems with drugs and alcohol. "Without this woman. I probably would not be alive today." Brenda said. "I love her more than my own mother."

Mary Jo then told me about Brian Philbrick, a drifter for most of his 35 years. When she met him, he was carrying a loaded handgun. She persuaded him to give it up, one bullet at a time. "There aren't many people who would have helped a person like me," he said. Some of the volunteers had felt so threatened by him, they demanded that he be asked to leave. But Copeland said "no." Today, Philbrick volunteers at the shelter.

I asked Mary Jo why she stood by a man many would have named away. "Compassion comes from feeling another's pain," she told me, "But to give and not count the cost-that is real compassion."

"I tell others to just reach out to one hurting person in your home, your neighborhood, your community," she added. "That person might be like a drop in the ocean. But without that drop. the ocean wouldn't be complete." [E

ARE AMENTS

Lynn Minton Reports

Many people-both teens and adults-offered their views. Here are excernes:

THE TERMAGERS

I think that most adults are scared of teenagers. They see how we dress, hear the music we listen to, and they think we are all up to no good. While walking down the street, adults can't even look me in the eye. They'll just put their heads down and won't respond to my "hello." Seldom do I even get a "thank you" for opening a door for an adult.

I recently went to a bowling alley with friends, and we all had to give them our IDs to make sure that we wouldn't walk off without paying or returning our shoes. Do they think we are all thieves?

I am in favor of lowering the voting age to 16. I've had a job since I was 14. I've paid my taxes just like everyone else. Shouldn't I have had a say then on how my tax money was spent? -John Laszewski, 18, Columbus, Wis.

When I was 16, I got a job, bought my own vehicle and was paying my own insurance—yet the stereotype of young, irresponsible and stupid was still pinned to me. But now I am in Marine Corps boot camp, and responsibilities have just been poured upon me. I've been taught how to kill people with rifles, grenades, grenade launchers, anti-tank weapons and in hand-to-hand combat. And the possibility of going to Bosnia after boot camp is

I believe civic responsibility should be gradually introduced to a teenager, beginning when he starts to pay taxes. If students could vote for who goes on the school board, the administration might actually start caring about how they treat the students, knowing that their careers sit in the hands of the students.

-Pvt. Gregory K. Evana, 19, Cyprus, Tax.

When adults are discussing something with me, a common comment is, "You'll understand in a few years." They don't seem to realize that just because I'm younger than 20 or so, it doesn't mean that I can't still have mature viewpoints and experiences. -Sonia Mariano, 15, Mercer Island, Wash.

I'm sick and tired of being followed around at a store, with the employees watching every move I make, I'm 17, a B student and NOT a criminal. If I see something I like, I'll buy it.

There are a few people who steal, adults and youths alike. But just because I'm young doesn't mean that I'm a horrible person with no conscience. -Laura Partiow, 17, Dover, Pa.

cause we are between 13 and 19. Teenagers, who are also consumers and customers of this mall, are broken up if they arrive in groups of more than four. This procedure is supposedly for the safety of everyone in the mall, but I feel very offended.

it's gotten so that I don't even stop to talk to my own friends if I'm already in a group of four, because I don't want to be harassed.

Being teenagers means we are unfairly stereotyped as dangerous. lazy, stupid and irresponsible. As a teenager, I beg to differ. Sure, there are some bad apples out there. But that certainly doesn't mean that all of us should be branded that way

If I keep getting bothered while minding my own business at the mall, then maybe they don't need my business anymore. -Adia Moore, 14. Galesburg, III.

If any other age group (the elderly, for example) were treated the way the young are, there would be a revolution in the streets inside of a week. We even get hassled just walking down the street at night. They call it a cur-few-a euphemism for locking up a quarter of the population seven hours a day -Dave Skamel, 19. Carson City, Nev.

I am 15 and a volunteer karate teacher. One day, a lady asked if I knew where the office was, I replied, "Yes, ma'am, over there." It summised me when she turned back to me and said. 'Thank you, sir." For a moment, I thought she was being facetious. But she wasn't. I have learned that you can get treated the way you want by treating others that way. While there are people out there who are incouth, most people return courtesy with equal -Kyle Maclauchtan, 15. Midlothian, Va.

THE ADULTS

The reason adults view teenagers the way they do is because they are rowdy, reckless and irresponsible. Not all teenagers, but a majority. Look at teen violence, suicide, pregnancy and high school dropout rates: They are relatively high compared to 50 years ago. We as adults need to face that our teens are getting worse, not better. And we need to do something to help. Just imagine if every adult cared as much about children and teens as they did about professional sports.

I do think it's a good idea to allow 16-year-olds to vote in local and school board elections: Why not, when they are permitted to hold a steady job, pay taxes, drive and in some states even get married? -Leena M. Sumitra, 21, Richmond, Va.

I view most teens as responsible and considerate of others. They treat me, an elderly widow, like I'm someone special. They help me with my chores, bring me small gifts and show me respect. I think it isn't fair that responsible teens are charged extremely high prices for car insurance and sometimes have to pay for what irresponsible teens do. If teenagers are trusted and treated with the respect they deserve. I think most would try to live up to that reputation. -Ermine Duffin, 79, Clinton, Utah

In response to an Illinois teenager who said that when she kisses a guy, it may be just a "friendly kiss"—or it may mean something sore and curry with it certain expectations—three readers offered their views.

What's all this talk about "friendly kisses"? If you don't like the guy (as in boyfriend material), don't kiss him! No confusion. No hurt feelings. I don't go and minimize continued in our mention. I done to a gray who was just a first three is not with a first three is no who was just a first three is no who was just a first three is no who was just a first three is not who was just a first three is not was just three because it focks tight at the time. It's the same as a sex—don't do it of the tight was the same as a sex—don't do it.

For some tecnagers, kissing is a form of emotional communication. Sometimes it is purely a form of physical communication. But, in either case, it's okay to kiss someone before you've made long-term living

When your date ends, and you want to see the person again, and you believe he had a great time too, give him a nice "thank you for a great time" kiss—which is longer than a peck but definitely shorter than an "I love you right now kiss. Most guys will get it, if it's done right!

The NBC sponscaster Hannah Storm has three: "King Richard" Petry. the race-car driver; Nolan Ryan. the retired pitch. er and all-time strikeout leader; and Hakeem Olajuwon, the Nigerian-born center of the Houston Rockets. The difference between Hannah and the rest of us is that she really knows these guys, and she has reported their triumphs and their defeats.

At the Olympic Games in Atlanta this July, Hanrah will be telling us about other wins and losses, other heroes and heroines, as she joins Bob Costas, Jim Lampley and Greg Gumbel in the NBC anchor booth. She and Lampley will handle the late-night chores, while Costas and Gumbel (Bryant's brother) will handle the daytime. It's the same assignment Hannah had four years ago at the Barcelona Games, and I cracked that her career didn't seem to be getting anywhere. "Well," Hannah said, "the trouble is there's this guy Costas. and he's ahead of me.

"Unfortunately, I won't get out to many of the venues. We have to be in the studio." Nor will she see much of her husband, the NBC sportscaster Dan Hicks. Oh, he'll be in Atlanta, all right. But he'll be out covering the swimming and diving events, while Hannah of pre-game and Jim work late at the studio. and post-game

Hannah was working for CNN when, in 1992, NBC reportedly offered her more than $600,000 for three years. As perhaps the premiere woman sportscaster, it's reasonable to assume she has gotten a substantial raise since. Last fall, whatever she was making didn't seem enough. That was when Albert Belle, the Cleveland Indians' star, lost it during the World Series and verbally and vulgarly abused her on camera. "He's a wonderfully talented and very intelligent man who has the world at his feet," Storm said. "I hope someday he finds peace, and I hope he quashes whatever demons he has. Did any of Belle's teammates apologize for his outburst? "No teammate came up." Hannah said, "but coach Dave Nelson did

And on that positive note, why are Petry, Ryan and Olajuwon so special? There were no women covering NASCAR," Hannah said. and the drivers really are good of boys who explained things and helped me out, and 'King Richard' was the best of all. Ryan, because I was really young and covering the Astros, and he just treats everyone with dignity and respect. Hakeem? I came into broadcasting his rookie year, so I feel like we grew up together. He's a very religious man, always striving to be a better person.

A RESOURCE FOR FAMILIES

f you or a family member has advanced prostate cancer, you should know that many men go about their normal routines without substantial discomfort or interruption from the disease

Although advanced prostate cancer means that the disease has begun to spread, it may take years before the symptoms of the disease are felt. When taken in conjuction with an LHRH agonist or castration, EULEXIN Capsules have been clinically proven to prolong the period without the disease's symptoms. EULEXIN has also been clinically proven to extend lives

One in seven patients experience diarrhea while taking EULEXIN Capsules. Diarrhea should be managed through a change in diet, taking the drug at the times prescribed, and/or the use of antidiarrheals. Liver problems occur in less than 1% of patients

EULEXIN therapy has enabled thousands of men to live life in ways they've always lived it - enjoying their favorite activities with families and friends

If you have someone dear to you with prostate cancer, encourage him to ask his doctor about EULEXIN therapy.
