School district tackles Internet smut liability

By Liz Wright
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — School officials are proposing an agreement that holds families responsible if students download smut on the Internet this winter.

To keep students from accessing adult literature, schools will electronically filter and monitor their computers, said Dale Thornberry, director of operations for the Twin Falls School District.

Still, nothing is foolproof, computer ex-

When and where

The proposal is slated as an agenda item for Tuesday's 7 p.m. meeting of the Twin Falls School Board at the district administrative office. The office is located at 201 Main Avenue West, Twin Falls. Call 733-6900 for more information.

Even the best computer censors can be subverted by students determined to browse adult literature.

"Some kids are pretty creative," Thornberry said. "If they really wanted to, there is nothing to prevent us from having that happen."

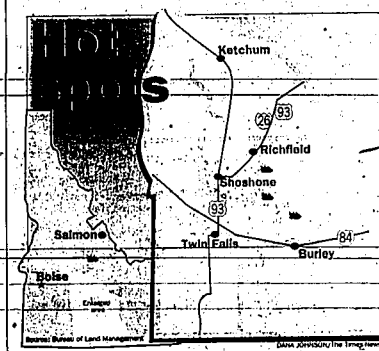

The Twin Falls School District doesn't yet have access to the Internet. This winter, Twin Falls schools may begin to give students access to the Internet for research purposes. Teachers have been offered training in how to use computers in their curriculums.

According to the Twin Falls proposal, parents and students would sign a contract agreeing to abide by the district's guidelines. Any student who breaks the rules will lose their computer privileges.

Proper usage of the computer includes anything related to curriculum. It means not invading other people's files, posting anonymous e-mail messages or installing private software into the computers.

The Twin Falls School District also assumes no responsibility or liability if documents are lost or damaged on the computers, nor responsibility for security vio-

Fire crews battle 3 S. Idaho blazes

The Times-News

RICHFELD — Federal firefighters were battling fire with fire Friday by burning lines to halt a desert blaze that already had "consumed more than 80,000 acres by late afternoon."

Three airplanes also were dropping fire retardant on the burning federal land east of Richfield, and three helicopters — two that could dump water — were surveying the area, said Pam Wallace, spokeswoman for the Bureau of Land Management, in Shoshone.

"Winds are still a continuing problem out here," said Wallace by telephone from the fire's command post late Friday afternoon. "Right now, the (burned) lines that they're doing are working."

By Friday evening, 90 firefighters were battling the wildfire that was blowing across the desert through acres of cheat grass and wild rye. Blaz officials had hoped to contain the flames by Friday night, but that estimate was pushed back to Saturday.

Firefighters have "made a firebreaks-on-the-wind-fanned flames, Wallace said. No buildings were threatened by the Richfield-area fire. The fire moved through abundant and dry cheat grass, a species not native to Idaho, as it headed toward the Great Rift, Wallace said.

"It's just burned right through the cheat grass," Wallace said.

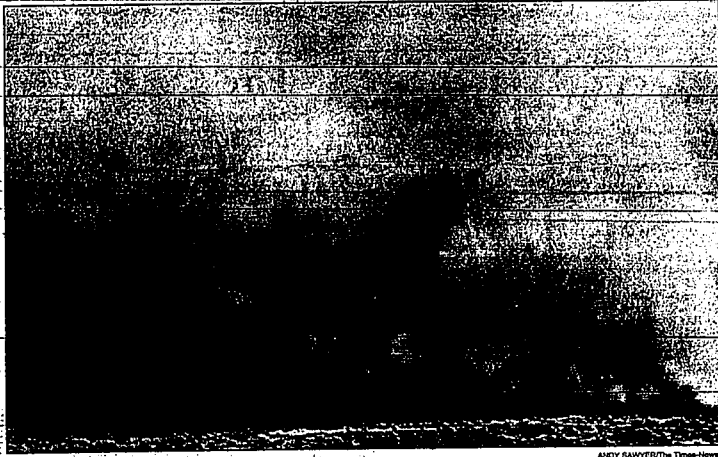

Four other significant fires were reported as still burning in Idaho Friday evening.

• About 18 firefighters contained a 1,000-acre blaze 49 miles northwest of Burley; the fire should be controlled today, Wallace said. That fire — dubbed the Centor Fire — threatened buildings Thursday but ended up harming no structures.

• The German Lake fire, 31 miles northeast of Burley, was burning through thick brush and rough terrain. It reached 600 acres before fire officials declared it controlled at 5:30 p.m.

• The Jack Creek fire, 50 miles southwest of Salmon, posed a different set of problems for firefighters, burning through heavy timber on steep slopes. Fire crews anticipated containing that 200-acre blaze by late Friday.

• The Mud-Lake fire — 10 miles southwest of Carey — was contained Thursday night and controlled on Friday after burning 400 acres.

Wind fans flames from the Richfield South fire near Highway 93 about five miles east of Richfield Friday afternoon.

Lab creates technology to help fight wildfires

Rod Linn works on a computer simulation of fire behavior at Los Alamos National Laboratory.

The Associated Press

LOS ALAMOS, N.M. — Inspired partly by a firefighting tragedy, scientists are harnessing supercomputers to try to help foresters in their battle against wildfires.

"The ultimate goal is to save lives and property," said Rod Linn, who is doing doctoral research at Los Alamos National Laboratory's theoretical division.

Rugged terrain and capricious winds can combine to turn a wildfire in seconds. Two years ago, on July 1, 1994, 14 firefighters died near Glenwood Springs, Colo., when flames whipped by high winds raced up a steep hillside.

Linn and his mentor, laboratory fellow Frank Harlow, are putting their minds toward preventing another tragedy like that at Storm King Mountain.

They want to better predict how wildfires and prescribed burns will behave. They plan to use the laboratory's massively parallel computers, which can run thousands of complex equations simultaneously.

"We're trying to capture the gross behavior of the fire, not necessarily the small-scale details," Linn said.

"We can't predict what certain leaves or branches will catch fire, but we'd like to be able to predict the average propagation rate or the average heat production rate," he said.

The research is being refined and probably won't be used for another year at the earliest. Linn, who is doing his work through New Mexico State University's mechanical engineering program, said he hopes to have a working model by December.

Currently available to firefighting officials is Farsite, a fire prediction model compatible with personal computers. The program weighs general weather and terrain variables, but it's not as sophisticated as what the Los Alamos team has envisioned.

"We're not at the stage yet where data will always be available for any given fire," said Don Latham, supervisory research meteorologist at the

Congressional term limit vote makes Gem ballot

The Associated Press

BOISE — Backers of a term limits initiative turned in more than 47,000 signatures of registered voters, making it on the November general election ballot Friday afternoon just hours before a deadline.

Members of Citizens for Federal Term Limits turned the names in, capping what they said was an intense, eight-week drive.

Election workers in the secretary of state's office counted the signatures and said they turned in 47,608, well over the 41,335 signatures required to make the ballot.

Friday's deadline came with just four initiatives making the ballot out of more than a dozen proposed in recent months. Voters also will decide a proposed constitutional amendment on health facility financing.

Supporters of an initiative calling for voter approval or rejection of Gov. Phil Batt's nuclear waste agreement with the federal government, who made it on the ballot earlier in the week, on Friday turned in enough names to reach 52,423, the most of any of the four ballot issues that will go before voters.

Those sponsoring an initiative to limit bear hunting also turned in more signatures, making their total 46,784.

Idaho voters in 1994 approved a term limit initiative. But the U.S. Supreme Court made it clear that state term limit laws don't apply to federal officers.

The newest initiative seeks to pressure Congress into calling a constitutional convention to propose a federal-term-limits law. One of the methods is placing information next to an incumbent or challenger's name on the election ballot that the person did not support efforts to enact a federal term limit.

State legal officers say that's of doubtful constitutional validity.

"Today we begin the process of ending business as usual in Washington, D.C.," said Donna Weaver, Hayden Lake, chairman of the group. "Long-term career politicians in Washington have muzzled America's future with a mountain of debt for a bloated, intrusive and expensive federal bureaucracy."

She said it cost about $70,000 for the campaign and she provided about half that amount personally through direct contributions and loans.

Southernland sizzles, swelters in triple-digit heat

Temperatures soared in the southern Plains and California Friday while cool, moist air blanketed parts of the Midwest and Southeast.

The Northeast enjoyed a breezy day with temperatures in the 70s and 80s.

Brooklyn, N.C., was the state's hot spot for the third consecutive day with temperatures reaching 113 degrees.

Red Rock in north-central Oklahoma came in second at 112. Selma, Buffalo, Guthrie, Breckinridge and Medford, Okla., all posted high readings of 111.

Residents stayed close to the air conditioning.

"If someone's breaks, we just go to the neighbor's house — you don't go without," said Sharon Walker, president of Freedom's Chamber of Commerce.

Showers and thunderstorms moved across South Carolina, Georgia and much of Florida, while temperatures elsewhere in the Southeast reached record lows.

Raleigh, N.C., had a temperature of 54, breaking the 1963 record of 56. Jackson, Ky., had a low of 56, breaking the 1985 low of 63; and the temperature in Meridian, Miss., dipped to 61, breaking the previous record of 62, set in 1968.

Strong winds hampered the crews for a second day as they battled a 2,600-acre wildfire southeast of Carson City, Nev. Winds also were slowing attempts to douse a 400-acre blaze 4.5 miles east of Fallon, Nev., in the northern part of the state.

In Florida, the holiday weekend started on a note as severe thunderstorms developed Thursday and generated a series of lightning strikes that killed one man and injured 22 other people.

The dead man — who was standing in ankle deep water — and three others near him in a wide burst were waiting for a fireworks display to begin in Brevard County, Fla.

Tape shows 'Viper' practice

PHOENIX (AP) — The Viper Militia, accused in a plot to attack government buildings, practiced blowing things up in the remote woods and deserts of Arizona, cheering as the explosions sent plumes of smoke into the air.

"It felt good," one of them exclaims in a 20-minute videotape of the practice sessions, which prosecutors played in court Friday.

Authorities say the tape shows some of the 12 militia members arrested Monday practicing detonating bombs and firing machine guns. Now, a federal magistrate must decide whether they will be released before trial.

Prosecutors decided not to show a second videotape in which a militia member purportedly describes how to "collapse" the local IRS headquarters and notes that taking over the Phoenix Police Department would be a "major political statement."

Defense attorneys had demanded a hearing over that tape, saying it would prejudice potential jurors.

Earlier Friday, the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco

& Firearms agent who supervised the investigation presented the first videotape, which shows group members in outings to two sites in the desert and woods.

In one segment the tape showed a man lighting a fuse and then running closer to the camera. A loud bang was followed by gray smoke drifting into the woods and group members could be heard cheering.

Another segment filmed in the woods showed two members carrying a bucket-size container across a clearing. The tape's narrator described it as "the largest firecracker we've ever made."

The two members of the unofficial militia were arrested Monday following a seven-month investigation, and charged with conspiring to make bombs and other weapons charges. All 12 have pleaded innocent.

Agents recovered at least 50 weapons from the house of defendant Gary Bauer, as well as truckloads of shotguns, rifles, grenades, gas masks, body armor and thousands of rounds of ammunition from the homes of militia members.

Fire technology springs from Cold War research

U.S. Forest Service's fire sciences laboratory in Missoula, Mont.

Here's how Los Alamos' effort would work:

First, firefighting officials would put in information about a wildfire — the location, the terrain, the wind direction, the type of vegetation, and so on.

The information would be fed into the supercomputer, which was originally created to simulate the atmospheric effects of nuclear blasts. Harlow said the supercomputer would tap into a national databank to retrieve a three-dimensional map of the burning area.

Other factors the computer would consider: vegetation and moisture content, weather patterns over spans of several years, and weather patterns of the last 30 days.

Then, the fire could be simulated in a virtual environment. Anyone directing firefighting operations could run simulations to test different firefighting strategies.

"These computers can pull up all the data and commence calculating, and then calculate it much faster than the fire is actually progressing," Harlow said.

So far, the research has produced simulations in real time, meaning it takes a full hour to demonstrate one hour of simulated fire behavior. The next challenge is to accelerate the process.

"The goal is five to six times faster than real time," Linn said.

Once things are faster, scientists will try to program the computer to analyze information from fire

Fire technology springs from Cold War research

LOS ALAMOS, N.M. (AP) — Technology being developed to help firefighters by researchers at Los Alamos National Laboratory sprung from efforts to monitor effects of nuclear blasts.

Years ago, computers were programmed with statistical information to simulate an atomic explosion — intentional or accidental.

Researchers now are applying the principles of fire behavior to the programs.

Besides helping firefighters determine the best way to attack a wildfire, laboratory fellow Frank Harlow said, the research has helped develop better internal combustion engines, improved metal casting and better ways to extract geothermal energy.

Supercomputing models also can be set up to project the behavior of large crowds or to study the stock market or economic trends.

"Since we don't have the same weapons needs as they had in the past, what should the national labs be pushing?" asked Rod Linn, a Los Alamos researcher pursuing a doctoral degree in theoretics.

"Among the obvious ideas are things that benefit the public, but aren't going to be funded by private companies. It's not directly profitable for private companies to spend a lot of R&D money on it," Linn said.

Officials, even suggesting the best firefighting strategies.

"We could use it to better predict the best place to drop slurry or where you want people to be or not to be," Linn said.

The researchers often study the Los Alamos fire. Had the Los Alamos technology been available, "it might have been possible to guide the people who got killed in that fire to a safer spot," Linn said.

Harlow and Linn got a close-up look at fire behavior in April, lators, beyond simply punishing violators. The schools can sue violators or prosecute for illegal acts "to the full extent of the law," according to the proposed policy.

Educators say the Internet is an exceptional tool for students to expand their academic horizons. But often foul language and sexual references dominate the global medium, and many schools are trying to rein in its access.

"It's really new ground for us and most school districts," Thornberry said.

In Jerome, students cannot access newsgroups and chat lines on the Internet because of crude language and inaccurate data posted by other computer users, said Chris Gibson, director of technology in Jerome School District.

Teachers must be vigilant — they cannot leave students unattended on the Internet, Gibson said.

The district is planning to purchase a "local server" that allows teachers to screen and edit Internet material, then channel it into the district's own censored version of the Internet before students view it, he said.

"I can never foresee a student sitting unsupervised surfing the net," Gibson said. "There's nothing valuable in the Internet."

"There is a degree of anonymity on the computer, Gibson said. "I'm not sure what kind of inhibitions that could bring out in people."

Without computer censorship any child that knows the word "sex" can access Internet pornography, said 17-year-old Robert Lange, a Twin Falls High School student who uses the Internet at home.

Typing up the word "sex" on the screen can bring up 20,000 different sexually explicit "websites," including pictures and videos — and most of them are free, Lange said.

"I guess that's what people want," he said.

The outbreak is an example of how vulnerable the United States is to new diseases, scientists say, especially ones that catch a ride on the food supply.

"We did get lucky" with cyclospora because a few alert doctors sounded the alarm early, said Dr. Stephen Ostroff of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Cyclospora is a single-celled parasite that invades the small intestine and causes diarrhoea, vomiting, weight loss, fatigue and muscle aches.

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A 19-year-old man was killed in an apparent gang shooting early Friday while running after a pickup truck, police say.

"The pedestrian was chasing the pickup truck on foot and the truck stopped and fired a large number of shots at the victim," police Sgt. Diamond. Police recovered some 20 spent shell casings.

Millionaire candidates flex fiscal muscle

WASHINGTON (AP) — Millionaire software entrepreneur Tom Bruggere spent more than $800,000 of his own money to catapult himself from political unknown to Oregon's Democratic nominee for the U.S. Senate.

But it's unlikely his Republican rival will accuse Bruggere of trying to buy a Senate seat. Gordon Smith, the owner of a frozen foods company, used $2 million of his own to rev up his political career last year.

Smith Bruggere

Oregon hardly has cornered the market on deep-pocket candidates. At least 134 Senate and House candidates have dipped deeply into their own wallets to lend or give their campaigns $50,000 or more. This election cycle, according to a computer analysis of Federal Election Commission records through the end of May, seven Senate candidates helped themselves with at least $1 million.

The totals for the first 15 months of the 1996 election cycle already are well above those at the same point in 1994, when Californian Michael Huffington made history by spending $2.7 million of his own money in an unsuccessful bid for the Senate.

This year's free spenders run the gamut, from TV Guide fortune heir Douglas Kahn, who has spent at least $400,000 of his own for a California House seat, to 27-year-old Michela Al Gore, a former aide to Vice President Al Gore. She has lent her California House campaign at least $300,000 from the settlement of a lawsuit after a ski lift accident left her unable to walk.

Congress has always attracted wealthy candidates. But with the price of campaigns rising, the political parties are increasingly seeking out candidates who can compete financially on their own.

"They ask you can you raise a million dollars or can you write a check for a million dollars?" said retiring Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., in a speech at the campaign's limits. "Money is determining not just who wins an election but who runs."

So far this season, Senate candidates have given or loaned their campaigns $13.8 million, compared to $9.3 million during the same period in 1994. Self-financing in the House is up to $15.7 million from $12.6 million, the FEC report said.

Many candidates loan their campaigns money, knowing if they win a seat in Congress they can easily see the contributions to pay themselves back.

"If I'm going to use my own money I don't see any conflict in paying myself back," said attorney Max Simeon, a Texas Democrat who has loaned his campaign $626,000, the most of any House candidate this year. He called the cost of campaigning "an expense." But he added: "Whatever it takes

Deputy: Suspect is 'kind of slow'

PROCTORVILLE, Ohio (AP) — As a teenager, Todd Hall fell off a skateboard and bit his head.

Surgeons operated twice, the second time giving him a lobotomy. He was never the same after that.

As an adult, neighbors say, Hall had the mind of a 12-year-old. He would wander into homes uninvited, peep through the window, ride his bike on neighbors' lawns.

On Friday, the 24-year-old Hall posed like a delighted child and mugged for the cameras as he was arraigned on charges of involuntary manslaughter for allegedly starting a fire that killed eight people at a fireworks store.

"He doesn't appear that he knows what he done," said sheriff's Deputy John Tordiff. "What he is is kind of slow."

Todd Hall flashes a peace sign in court Friday before being arraigned on eight charges of involuntary manslaughter.

Investigators said Hall, egged on by a few friends, lit a box of firecrackers at the crowded Ohio River Fireworks store in Scottown on Wednesday. Customers stampeded toward a door as flames erupted and firecrackers and bottle rockets exploded.

Prosecutor J.B. Collier Jr. would not rule out charges against the friends and said investigators were getting conflicting reports about who was with Hall that day.

In court, Hall giggled as photographers snapped his picture.

"Let me do my hate first," he joked. Flanked by two deputies as he sat in the jury box, he flashed the peace sign.

"But I didn't do it. It's not fair," Hall complained, interrupting Municipal Judge Don Capper as he explained the charges against him.

Hall was ordered held on $500,000 bail for a hearing July 12 and was appointed a lawyer. He will be examined to determine if he is competent to stand trial.

Hall has behaved strangely for years, neighbors say.

"He's the biggest nuisance you've ever seen in your life," said Glen Stiltner, owner of a gas station and convenience store near Hall's home. Workers at Stiltner's store said Hall would harass customers and steal cigarettes and lighters.

Neighbor Tom Nibert said Hall's behavior had become more troublesome recently. He would ride his bike through other people's property and walk into the Niberts' manufacturer, retailers and West Virginia University Hospitals. The lawsuit was settled in 1994. The amount was unclear, but Todd Hall that same year bought a house for $125,000, apparently without taking a mortgage. The deed said Hall was incompetent and under guardianship.

Hall's attorney in the case refused to comment Friday.

The lawsuit said James Hall was appointed the younger Hall's guardian in 1990. Probate Court records show that Juhdah-Lynn Newman and Nicholas Hall applied for guardianship last November. No records show any action was taken on the application. The identities of Newman and Hall were not immediately clear.

The attorney listed for Newman and Hall was the same judge who presided over Hall's court appearance Friday. Capper said through his secretary that he did not know about the application, and he refused further comment.

In 1994, Hall was charged with domestic violence against his father. The charge was dismissed after James Hall said his son was incompetent, court records said. No further information was immediately available.

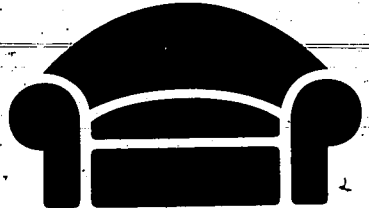

The older Hall on Friday would say only that his son was becoming physically aggressive.

Meanwhile, three victims of the fire remained in critical condition, and authorities were using dental records to confirm the identities of the dead.

Clinton signs audit legislation

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton signed legislation Friday he said will reduce for state and local governments the burden and cost of complying with federal audit requirements.

The new law also applies to non-profit organizations receiving federal assistance.

Clinton said the new law will help save millions of dollars "by reducing the need for costly audits without reducing essential federal oversight."

Only grants of more than $300,000 would be audited under the terms of the law. This is an increase from the current $25,000 threshold.

There also will be less-frequent audits for well-run programs, those with management controls able to assure the proper use of federal funds. The new law directs most audits at programs representing the greatest financial risks.

As in Beirut, Saudi bombing foreshadowed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thirteen years after the devastating Marine barracks bombing in Beirut, the U.S. military again faces questions about why it seemed unprepared for an attack foreshadowed months earlier. Both last week's truck bombing of an eight-story apartment building in Saudi Arabia and the truck bombing of a four-story Marine Corps barracks in Lebanon came after smaller attacks.

"There are great parallels," said Benis Frankel, the U.S. Marine Corps historian and author of a book on the Beirut bombing. "One of the things that the people in Saudi Arabia should have learned from is that you just don't put crowds of people in a building like that."

On April 18, 1983, a delivery van packed with explosives drove to the entrance of the U.S. Embassy in the Lebanese capital and exploded, killing 62 people including 17 Americans. It was a smaller-scale version of the barracks attack that would kill 240 Marines and one sailor.

Similarly, U.S. forces in Saudi Arabia got a brutal wake-up call seven months before the June 25 bombing in Dhahran that killed 19 U.S. servicemen and wounded dozens more. Last Nov. 13, a car bomb exploded in a parking lot outside a military training center in Riyadh, killing five Americans and two Indians.

In all four incidents, investigators pointed to the sophisticated nature of the explosives as an indication that hostile governments may have been involved.

The first attacks in Beirut and Saudi Arabia caught U.S. officials off guard.

"It seemed like an inexplicable aberration," retired Army Gen. John Vessey Jr., who was chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff at the time, said years later of the initial Beirut bombing.

And Navy Capt. Michael Doubleday, a Pentagon spokesman, said of the Riyadh attack: "In the Kingdom (of Saudi Arabia) there had never before been any kind of terrorist attack."

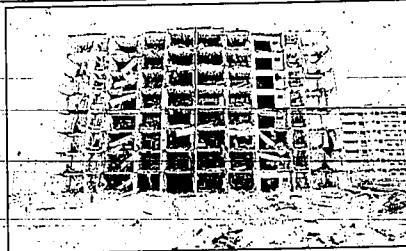

Indeed, before the bombing in Riyadh, seven years had elapsed since the last Mideast-related fatal terrorist attack directed at Americans — the bombing of Pan Am Flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland.

Warnings about followup attacks abounded following the first attacks in Lebanon and Saudi Arabia. An investigative report on the Beirut bombing, "No surprise to anybody that it happened," said Andy Messing, a former U.S. Special Forces officer and head of the National Defense Council Foundation, an independent research group.

But the scale of the attack seemed to have caught some in the Pentagon off guard. Defense Secretary William Perry noted that the second Saudi bomb was more than 10 times as powerful as the first.

Above, rescue workers sift through the rubble of the U.S. Marine base in Beirut on Oct. 23, 1983 following the bomb blast that killed 241 American servicemen. Thirteen years later, at right, the U.S. military complex damaged by a truck bomb on Tuesday, June 25, 1996, killing 19 U.S. servicemen and injuring hundreds of people.

Similarly, a Pentagon commission had written of the Beirut bombing that, from a terrorist's point of view, "the true genius of this attack is that the objective and the means of attack were beyond the imagination of those responsible for Marine security."

No senior Reagan administration officials were punished in 1983 in connection with the Beirut bombing, though two Marine commanders at the scene were issued "letters of instruction" upbraiding them for concentrating 350 troops in a single building.

Perry: U.S. taking steps to protect U. S. troops in Saudi Arabia

WASHINGTON (AP) — Days before a potentially contentious hearing on the bombing in Saudi Arabia, Defense Secretary William Perry said the Air Force is moving personnel away from exposed rooms and installing blast-resistant material on military apartments.

Perry

In a letter to lawmakers, Perry also outlined security steps taken before the blast — sure to be a subject of tough questions at the hearing next week — and said anew that Saudi government is cooperating with U.S. investigators and that the United States remains committed to the region.

The military men and women he met on a quick visit Tuesday understand that the security of the region is vital to the United States," Perry said in the letter addressed to Sen. Thurmond, R-G.C., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee. The letter was made public Friday.

"I saw firsthand the appalling devastation of the bomb attack," said Perry, who will testify before the panel along with Gen. John Shinkenski, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and Gen. Binford Peay, head of the U.S. Central Command.

Since the bombing, Perry said, additional security steps include:

- Extending the concrete Jersey barrier line at the Khobar Towers apartment complex in Dhahran out to about 400 feet.
- Removing personnel from the buildings near the perimeter of the buildings or to rooms that do not face the perimeter.
- Extending buffer zones "to the maximum extent possible" at other U.S. military residential and work sites in Saudi Arabia.
- Installing blast resistant Mylar on exposed buildings.
- Taking additional security measures at Bahrain, a small Persian Gulf nation just off the Saudi coast, and Jiddah, a major Saudi city on the Red Sea.

The documents did not discuss possible relocation of troops in the Persian Gulf region, something Perry now says he is considering to get personnel out of cities where they are more vulnerable to terrorists.

Anticipating tough questioning from lawmakers next week about how the terrorists could have pulled their explosives-laden truck close to the apartment complex, Perry provided Thurmond with a detailed list of security measures taken prior to the blast.

The documents note that guards posted on the roof of building 131, which bore the brunt of the explosion, saw the attack unfolding and managed to clear the top two floors before the truck exploded.

"Security measures in place kept the truck 35 yards away from the building which significantly reduced the number of casualties," according to the documents accompanying Perry's letter. The letter notes that a building 100 yards away also was damaged and one person inside killed, suggesting that a larger buffer zone may not have prevented casualties.

Following the bombing, lawmakers were especially concerned at reports that Saudi officials had refused two U.S. requests to expand the buffer zone out to 400 feet, or 133 yards.

The Pentagon released a aerial photo of the Khobar Towers complex showing the apartment building with its exposed outer wall blasted away. The photo also shows a parking lot that the Saudis would have had to close to expand the buffer zone, restricting access to a nearby public park.

Documents accompanying Perry's letter detailed the overall casualties as well as steps taken since to increase security.

The blast, which killed 19 U.S. Air Force enlisted men and officers, also wounded 450 Americans, most of them Air Force personnel. Fourteen remain hospitalized.

Safety advisers urge NASA: 'Halt and regroup' on shuttles

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Members of an aerospace safety panel are urging NASA to slow down as the space agency cuts costs and turns over more and more shuttle duties to private industry.

"It's time to call a halt and regroup," said Norman Parmet, a member of the Aerospace Safety Advisory Panel and former TWA executive.

"We find out where you are before you do any more. That's the message," Parmet said Friday. "We're not saying it's unsafe. But we're saying that if you cut more than what you've already done, you may get to the position where you are unsafe."

After 15 years of shuttle flight, Columbia is now on mission No. 78 — NASA is cutting its work force and switching day-to-day shuttle operations to private industry to save money and improve efficiency.

Parmet and four or five other panel members visited the Kennedy Space Center this spring and interviewed more than 300 workers as a followup to the panel's annual report in February, which also pointed out "the potential to increase risk." More visits are planned later this year.

"From the lowest of the low, so

'Hey, find out where you are before you do any more. That's the message.'

— Norman Parmet, member of the Aerospace Safety Advisory Panel to speak, on the totem pole to the senior managers, the message that came through, although it was couched in different language, was the same at the top," said panel member Seymour Himmel, a former NASA official. "So much is going on people don't know from day to day what the devil is going to happen to them."

While all those workers interviewed are dedicated to doing the best job they can, they're only human and are afraid "they may be distracted and somehow screw up," Himmel said. "The answer is: Make haste slowly."

A month ago, the White House asked the independent panel to determine whether shuttle safety has been affected by recent management changes and cutbacks at NASA. That report is due at the end of November.

Gas leaks in the solid-fuel rocket boosters used to launch Columbia on to be related to any cutbacks. Rather, the chief suspect is a new joint adhesive flow for the first time on Columbia.

NASA is investigating the problem and trying to determine its effect on the next shuttle flight. Atlantis is supposed to blast off July 31 for the Russian space station Mir and pick up NASA astronaut Shannon Lucid, who has been living there since March.

Season's 2nd storm, Bertha, forms in far eastern Atlantic ocean

MIAMI (AP) — Tropical Storm Bertha formed today in the far eastern Atlantic Ocean, on a westward trek keeping it temporarily out of harm's way.

At 11 a.m. Friday, Bertha's strongest winds of near 40 mph were measured roughly near latitude 11.1 north, longitude 40.2

west, or about 1,150 miles east-of the Lesser Antilles.

The storm formed from a tropical depression that swirled into being Thursday east of the Cape Verde islands off the northwest coast of Africa.

It was moving toward the west-northwest near 21 mph and was expected to stay on that course through much of the weekend while gaining some strength, said Jerry Jarrell, deputy director of the National Hurricane Center. Tropical depressions become named storms if their winds exceed 39 mph. Storms become hurricanes at 74 mph.

Earthquake reports from northern Utah

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The University of Utah Seismograph Stations measured a small earthquake in the mountains west-southwest of Tremonton.

The 3.8-magnitude earthquake occurred about 9 p.m. Thursday, said seismologist Sue Nava.

Nava said the epicenter of the shock was in the Blue Spring Mountains, where quakes occur frequently. She said the tremor was felt locally, however, law enforcement officials in Box Elder County, Brigham City and Tremonton said they had no reports of injuries or property damage.

JOHN GRISHAM

THE RUNAWAY JURY
By John Grisham
Doubleday, $26.95

In his latest novel, John Grisham returns to his favorite theme: cleverness vs. the pros. He's also still hooked on the legal and scores big. "The Runaway Jury" follows several uniquely developed characters as they attempt to manipulate the jurors in a high-stakes lawsuit against a tobacco company. Much of this plot is legal or realistic, but it is, of course, clever. Mr. Grisham has an unfortunate habit of concealing information and then revealing it for a quick plot jolt. This was less irritating in earlier novels like "The Firm," in which there was also a point of view, a distinctive voice and some character development. On the other hand, this book's quality matters, with a first printing of 2.5 million copies. Mr. Grisham, it seems, is living proof of his favorite theme.

Germans guard their beer genes

BONN, Germany (AP) — Five centuries ago, Bavarian Duke, Wilhelm IV laid down the Reinheitsgebot, or purity law, for German beer.

No one has dared mess with it since. At least not until genetic engineering came along.

German lawmakers in the European Parliament are furious that the body wouldn't ban the use of genetically altered ingredients, or at least make brewers tell the consumer on the label.

"We don't object to genetic engineering in general, but the Reinheitsgebot is our culture, our tradition," lawmaker Willi Goerlach said Thursday at a news conference in Bonn. Beer, of course, was served.

Killed another deputy, Dagmar Roth-Behrendt: "People need to feel that there are things you can rely on."

With 1,200 breweries and 5,000 brands of beer, Germans have always been careful about what goes into their second-favorite beverage after coffee.

In 1987, the then-West German government tried to ban foreign beers that don't follow the Reinheitsgebot, which dates to 1516 and allows nothing but water, barley malt, hops and yeast for brewing.

Members of the Christian Social Union enjoy beer in Passau, Germany, dressed in traditional Bavarian clothing earlier this year.

The European Union's High Court in Luxembourg rejected the ban, but brands not brewed according to the purity law still have practically no chance in the German market.

In May, the European Parliament rejected a German motion to require EU states to label foods with genetically altered ingredients. Goerlach and Roth-Behrendt are now trying to get the German parliament to require breweries to disclose any genetic engineering on their labels.

Scientists know how to genetic-ly alter the traditional ingredients of beer — especially yeast — to save time and cost for brewers.

Erich Dederichs of the German Brewers' Association said such changes could let breweries double their production.

Most American mass-produced beers use additives to enhance the foam, clarify the beer and improve the body. In addition, most popular beers contain rice and corn — it's cheaper and has a different flavor.

But none use genetically altered ingredients, according to Deb Carey, founder of New Glarus Brewing, a microbrewery in New Glarus, Wis. She said higher temperatures and other additives can accomplish much of the same.

The German Brewers' Association still hasn't taken an official position on genetic engineering, but Dederichs said German breweries value purity over the possible advantages of genetic changes.

"With genetically engineered yeast, you can stabilize the froth" so beer keeps its head longer, Dederichs said. "But who wants to sit 20 minutes with a glass of keisel" he asked, referring to a regional brand from Cologne served in small glasses that are constantly refilled.

1 million Chinese stranded by floods

BEIJING (AP) — Chinese soldiers and police struggled Friday to rescue some of the 1 million people stranded by surging floods that have killed at least 237 people.

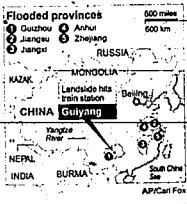

Soldiers have evacuated 563,000 people and brought food, water and medicine to tens of thousands of flood victims, the Civil Affairs Ministry said Friday.

Some 3.2 million acres of farmland have been damaged, as well as thousands of homes, factories and businesses.

In all, China says 10 million people have been injured or suffered property losses in the floods, which stretch from the province of Zhejiang on the east coast to Sichuan in the west.

Flooding also was reported in Shandong in the northeast. The highest death toll was in the southwestern province of Guizhou, one of China's poorest areas, where 136 people were reported killed, many of them by landslides.

Damage is reported at $1.2 billion from seasons of heavy rain on nine provinces along the Yangtze River since last weekend.

Li Jiansheng of the National Flood-Control Command warned that while the Yangtze and other rivers were flowing at normal levels, they could rise if rains continue, the Xinhua News Agency reported.

Flooding strikes every summer in southern China, where centuries of intensive farming has stripped away vegetation and damaged soils needed to catch rain. Flood-control systems are poorly maintained.

In Paris, the international aid group Doctors Without Borders said Friday it would send several charter flights to hard-hit flood areas in China.

Child-eating wolves hunted in India

NEW DELHI, India — Hunters are on the prowl for a pack of wolves blamed for killing as many as 20 children in four months in India's northern Uttar Pradesh state.

The body of the latest victim, a 2-year-old, was found half eaten earlier this week about a half-mile from his home, the Indian Express newspaper reported.

Villagers near the city of Lucknow, about 350 miles west of New Delhi, the capital, say the wolves have been sneaking into neighborhoods and snatching children from their beds in open air huts.

On Tuesday, hunters tracked the animals to a clearing in Uttar Pradesh's Kusfura forest, where they killed one of the wolves, Express reported.

Ex-cult member pleads guilty to attacks

TOKYO — A former Japanese doomsday cult member pleaded guilty Friday to carrying out three attacks with VX nerve gas, killing one person and injuring two.

The attacks by former Aum Shinri Kyo member Akira Yamagata, 30, came prior to the March 20, 1995, attack on Tokyo subways, in which other Aum followers are accused of killing 12 people with a different nerve gas, sarin.

According to prosecution charges, Yamagata sprayed nerve gas at Radio Hamaguchi, a businessman-the cult suspected of being a police spy, Hamaguchi later died.

Huge World War II bomb detonated

MAGDEBURG, Germany — Weapons experts detonated a 1,000-pound American bomb left over from World War II Friday after evacuating about 1,000 residents and closing rail lines and a main highway.

The bomb was found about 10 feet underground Thursday in Magdeburg, 75 miles southeast of Berlin. Damaged fuses made disarming it on site impossible, so it was transported Friday morning to a dump about a third of a mile away, where it was detonated.

Police said the state of Saxony-Anhalt, of which Magdeburg is the capital, still has many unexploded bombs and other munitions. Last year, bomb squads found almost 2,900 such devices from World War II.

Wife: Dissident's detention lengthened

BEIJING — A veteran labor activist who is being detained without trial has been held more than an extra year at a labor farm, his wife said Friday.

Chu Hailian argued that her husband, Liu Nianchun, 48, should be released because he has broken no laws.

She has had no word from him since police took him into custody in May 1995. She said she has learned he is being held in a prison farm outside Beijing, but has not been allowed to see him.

Chu, who has urged the United Nations to help secure her husband's release, went to the authorities for information about him on Friday.

Survivor details escape from massacres

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — He survived by playing dead under a pile of corpses, and as he peered through the "bleeding" bushes he saw Bosnian Serb Gen. Ratko Mladic watching the slaughter.

The man identified as Witness A testified Friday how he lived through a mass execution of Muslim men after Bosnian Serb soldiers overran the U.N.-protected enclave of Srebrenica in July 1995.

"I saw him (Mladic) watching Serb soldiers bringing us there, lining us up, and killing us," the witness told the Yugoslav war crimes tribunal. He said he had seen Mladic five other times in the enclave after its fall.

Witness-A's testimony came at an evidence hearing against Mladic and Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic designed to put more international pressure on them to surrender.

The U.N. tribunal has indicted them for genocide and crimes against humanity for allegedly masterminding a wave of atrocities during the 3-year Bosnian conflict.

Witness A's testimony provided the most direct link so far of Mladic's alleged involvement.

Both men remain at large in Bosnian Serb territory, where they continue to wield influence and undermine the Dayton peace accord.

Mladic has been singled out as the man who orchestrated the alleged massacres at Srebrenica, which his indictment called "the most horrendous, unimaginable war crimes committed in Europe since the end of World War II."

More than 6,000 Muslim refugees from the area are still missing, believed slaughtered by rebel Serbs and buried in mass graves.

The tribunal said the examination of suspected mass graves in Bosnia and Croatia would begin this weekend, starting with the examination of suspected sites near Srebrenica on Sunday.

The examinations, which could provide prosecutors with new evidence to bolster their cases against Karadzic and Mladic, are expected to last up to three months.

Los Angeles County woman 1st in U.S. with rare form of AIDS

ATLANTA (AP) — Health officials have found the first person in the United States to carry a rare form of HIV, and they said Friday that new AIDS tests should be ready within a year to better detect the rare strain. The woman, who lives in Los Angeles County, is infected with a strain of HIV known as Group O, although she tested negative for the virus that causes AIDS, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention said. Current HIV screening tests detect the unusual strain in about four of five cases, a CDC study determined. However, officials at the Atlanta-based CDC and the Food and Drug Administration, which licenses HIV tests, said Group O poses little threat to the nation's blood supply. Reconfiguring blood tests to screen for Group O will take about a year, said Jay Epstein, director of the FDA's blood research program. "The blood supply is no less safe today than it was yesterday because of one report of one case," Epstein said. Dr. Patrick Sullivan, a member of the CDC's HIV tracking team, said: "There's every indication, based on AIDS surveillance evidence, that this is an exceedingly rare condition in the United States. In fact, this is the only case that we're aware of." The unidentified woman in her early 20s immigrated to the United States in 1994 from West Africa, where the unusual HIV strain is found much more frequently than in other locations. The California woman apparently was infected in West Africa, the CDC said.

United States; and the woman has had one sexual partner since arriving.

tested, he said. CDC epidemiologists discovered the woman recently through a series of checks begun two years ago after Group O showed up in Europe. The CDC plans a presentation next week at the 11th International AIDS Conference under way in Vancouver, Canada. Group O was first identified in West Africa in 1989 by researchers charting the genetic makeup of HIV. The virus has genetic differences from the common Group M strains responsible for the AIDS pandemic. Since 1989, 100 Group O cases have been studied. Researchers say the disease progresses in the same manner with Group O as with more common strains and doesn't appear any deadlier.

Some congressmen know what's shaking back home

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Even when they're on Capitol Hill, California congressmen know what's shaking back home. Some of the lawmakers have computer linkups in their offices to alert them immediately when an earthquake strikes in California. A quake-monitoring system operated by the California Institute of Technology in Pasadena and the U.S. Geological Survey sends out the location and magnitude within minutes. Southern California utilities, railroads and governments use the same system, which involves 250 seismometers for detecting ground movement. "When a major earthquake hits Southern California, minutes matter," said Rep. Jerry Lewis, chairman of the appropriations subcommittee overseeing the Federal Emergency Management Agency. Rep. George E. Brown Jr. was the first to get the linkup. Others soon followed. "I never knew there were so many earthquakes in California," said Bill Grady, a Brown aide. "We just had a staff meeting and it went off twice. It makes a little beeping sound and the computer screen starts flashing." The system isn't perfect. It missed a big one — the Los Angeles quake in 1995 — because the seismic waves hitting the instruments were so strong the computer mistook them for interference.

Tom Sawyer's fence whitewash becomes environmentally friendly

HANNIBAL, Mo. (AP) — It's a safe bet Tom Sawyer wouldn't have cottoned to political correctness when it came to sloshing whitewash on his Aunt Polly's fence. But organizers of the annual Tom Sawyer Days in this Mississippi river town do. So they're making sure the whitewash for this year's fence-painting contest is environmentally friendly. In years past, the Hannibal Jaycees have used a watered-down latex paint for the Fourth of July contest, which pits Tom Sawyer lookalikes in a race to slop whitewash over a few fence boards. But organizer Sandy White said the paint could have been harmful to the young participants and to the environment, when it gets washed down the storm sewer afterward. "This paint you don't have to worry about," White said. "It's safe to the environment and safe to the body." A company called Sawyer Finn of Kansas City, Mo., has stepped in to donate 30 gallons of what it calls natural paint. White said it's even safe enough to drink.

St. George dig open to public

ST. GEORGE, Utah (AP) — In St. George, anyone can be Indiana Jones for a day.

Archaeologists are opening up an active dig to the public until July 20. A small clan of Anasazi Indians is believed to have lived on the two-to-four-acre site.

Visitors will have a chance to see how archaeologists sift through sand for chips of pottery, strands of cloth, tools, seeds and other clues into the lifestyle of the ancient culture.

University of Nevada Las Vegas graduate student Laurie Perry said the dig is being opened to the public so people will appreciate the need for learning about the past.

"They can even come out for a day and we will find them a spot to dig," she said.

The project is being conducted by UNLV in cooperation with the Desert Research Institute, part of the University and Community College System of Nevada. Perry and four other students at the site are being instructed in fundamental archaeological field work.

The Green Valley site is being excavated at the invitation of a family who is developing the land. When Ord heard of the ruins, he contracted with Desert Research for the two-year project to study the site. Any artifacts found will be donated to Southern Utah University in Cedar City.

The White House ruins — so named because the development planned for the area will bear the Spanish equivalent, Casa Blanca — are believed to have been made by a group of Anasazi known as the Virgin branch because they settled near southern Utah's Virgin River. Their modern descendants are believed to include the Hopi and Pueblo Indians of the Southwest.

David Madsen, who until a year ago was Utah's state archaeologist and who now works for the Utah Geographical Survey, is glad to see the work being done.

While thousands of Anasazi sites in the region surrounding Mesa Verde National Park in south-western Colorado have been investigated, Madsen says only about 50 Virgin branch sites have been excavated and scientifically documented.

"We're still just piecing together what went on with the Virgin branch," said Madsen.

Madsen praised the developer for taking the time and expense to let the excavation work proceed. It brings attention to the problem of ruins being lost to modern development, especially in the rapidly growing St. George area, he said.

Gang clothing ban nets no citations

CLEARFIELD, Utah (AP) — A ban on gang clothing during Clearfield's Fourth of July celebration generated national publicity, but no citations.

"It's been pretty quiet," said Police Chief Morton Sparks. He intended to give police another tool in thwarting youth gangs; Executive Order No. 96-1 targeted bandannas, sweat bands, baggy clothes and baseball caps.

Sparks insisted that the order, which expired at midnight Thursday, was misunderstood. The chief said police would enforce the order only if "a combination of things" were present: a large gathering of youths, intimidating behavior and the wearing of gang clothes.

The order does state that a person could be issued a citation if found to be in violation "of any one or more" of its provisions.

If the police had made a crackdown on everyone who flaunted the order, they would have had to cite the mayor's grandson, Jerry Hamblin.

Researchers: Days lengthen as moon recedes

WASHINGTON (AP) — If your day seems to be getting longer and longer, it is.

Tidal forces from the gravitational pull of the moon have caused the rotation of the Earth to slow over millions of years, a change that gradually is making each day a fractional second longer than the one before, according to a new study measuring changes in the motion of the planet.

The change can't be measured by an ordinary clock, but over eons, the lengthening day does make a difference, said Charles F. Sonett, co-author of the study published Friday in the journal Science.

"About 900 million years ago, the Earth's day was only 18 hours long," Sonett, regents professor of planetary sciences at the University of Arizona in Tucson, led a team that measured the historic changes in sideways by microscopically examining sediments laid down over millions of years at sea beds in the United States and in Australia.

University of Utah geologist Marjorie Chan was one of the researchers. She analyzed sediments in Big Cottonwood Canyon southeast of Salt Lake City.

The sediments, called "tidalites," were deposited in ancient channels and estuaries in patterns that reflected the tidal influence of the moon and the sun on the ocean.

Tides change throughout a month, ranging from neap, or lowest tides, to the spring tides, which occur when the sun, Earth and moon are nearly aligned. These changes are reflected in the thickness of the sediments.

By measuring the sediment layers, said Sonett, it is possible to calculate the frequency of the neap and spring tides. This, in turn, allows the researchers to calculate the length of the day — the time it takes the Earth to rotate on its axis. The same data also reflect the distance between the Earth and the moon.

"The slowing of the Earth is primarily the effect of the moon's tidal force," said Sonett. The gravitational pull of the moon, he said, "acts like a brake on the Earth. It is like putting a wrench against a spinning wheel."

A tidalite sediment laid down 900 million years ago in what is now Utah shows that the Earth's rotation was about 25 percent faster than it is now, giving the planet an 18-hour day, said Sonett.

The moon, now 240,000 miles away, was then closer to the Earth, he said, and the lunar month was only 29 days, compared to the present 29.5 days. Sonett said the moon is receding from the Earth at the rate of about 1 1/2 inches a year.

This affects the lunar month, which is the time it takes the moon to orbit the Earth and the period from one full moon to the next. As the moon's orbit grows, the lunar month lengthens.

Sonett said that in theory, the moon will continue to recede from the Earth and the Earth will continue to slow its spin for at least another 15 billion years. At that point, the moon and Earth would be in synchronous orbit, about 336,000 miles apart. The moon would be locked into a fixed point above the Earth and the planet would show the same side to the moon constantly, he said.

"That's not really ever going to happen, though," said Sonett, reassuringly. "Long before 15 billion years, in maybe three billion years or so, the sun will change into a red giant and the solar system will be destroyed."

Accused man undergoes psychiatric exam

By Kevin Miller
Times-News writer

BURLEY — A man who told police he thought he was stabbing a demon — his wife is undergoing a state psychiatric evaluation to determine if he is mentally competent to stand trial on a second-degree murder charge.

Based upon that evaluation, a judge will rule if Jose Gonzales, 47, is mentally able to appear in court.

"We won't know until we get the reports," Cassia County Deputy Prosecutor Howard Smyser said.

Gonzales is charged with stabbing 45-year-old Maria Gonzales to death in front of their children last month.

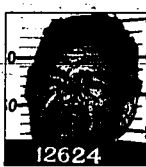

"It appears Mr. Gonzales may suffer from mental health problems," Smyser wrote in a letter filed in the murder case.

A preliminary hearing scheduled for last Tuesday was postponed until August 6, pending the results of the psychiatric exam, Smyser said. That date could be pushed back even further.

Gonzales is being examined at the request of public defender Doug Whipple. Whipple could not be reached for comment on Friday.

If Gonzales is found mentally incompetent to stand trial, he could be institutionalized indefinitely until he is deemed capable of understanding the trial proceedings.

Idaho law no longer allows for an insanity defense.

Gonzales

Five days before he was arrested and charged with stabbing his wife, Gonzales went to the Cassia Regional Medical Center's emergency room for treatment.

As recorded in court records, Gonzales told Tracy that "the saw in (Maria Gonzales) the face of a demon and it was the demon he was trying to stab, and did not realize it was Maria until he had stabbed her."

Before the incident, Jose Gonzales told his children he was going to die that evening, an affidavit states.

Resident forced to move for lung transplant

By Julie M. McKinnon
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Six years ago, Janette Hayes moved from California to the Magic Valley, so she could live and work near family.

This weekend, 54-year-old Hayes is moving back to the Napa Valley because she can't find another way to get a needed lung transplant.

Medi-Cal, California's health-insurance program for the needy and disabled, pays for the $175,000 to $225,000 Stanford University Medical Center operation.

Idaho's Medicaid program doesn't cover it. "I just think they're behind times, I really do," said the Twin Falls woman, who was diagnosed with disabling chronic lung disease in August 1994. "The main thing that I hate about it is that once I'm down there and I'm on the (transplant) list, whatever happens up here, I can't come back."

Lung transplants were deemed safe and effective by the medical community more than a year ago, and Medi-Cal has covered them for about two years. But while a federal mandate requires Medicaid programs nationwide to pay for lung transplants for those 21 and under who qualify, adult Idahoans still aren't covered.

Since October 1991, Idaho has paid for heart, liver, bone-marrow and kidney transplants for qualifying Medicaid recipients, said Robbie Charlton, supervisor of the rates and reimbursement section of Idaho's Bureau of Medicaid Policy and Reimbursement.

"It's just a risky and costly procedure, and we have not included any more than we have," said Charlton, adding that

You can help

If you want to help out with housing, three months of post-operative care not covered by Medi-Cal, and other costs associated with Janette Hayes' lung transplant, tax-deductible donations may be sent to: The National Transplant Assistance Fund, Friends of Janette Hayes Fund, P.O. Box 258, Twin Falls, ID 83401. Funds will go to another transplant recipient if Hayes dies before getting a transplant or if she doesn't use all of the money.

three adult Medicaid recipients have requested lung transplants in the last three years.

Adding another transplant to the state's list of covered services is a time-consuming process requiring approval from the federal Health Care Financing Administration and the Idaho Legislature, she said.

And even though Idaho has considered adding lung transplants to its list, the current trend in Idaho and elsewhere is not to expand services, Charlton said. Gov. Phil Batt's Medicaid Reform Advisory Council recently finished holding meetings statewide to get public input on Medicaid, and council members are starting to formulate their proposals. The public will be able to comment on their ideas this fall.

Hayes, meanwhile, needs to get a transplant before her health slips too far. She's already cut a walk to the back door without running out of breath. She has been on oxygen since December 1994. And every bronchial infection weakens her condition. Julie Altinger, transplant coordinator for Stanford Health Services in Stanford, Calif., said tests so far show that Hayes is a good candidate for a single-lung transplant, and those with her survival usually do well. The one-year survival rate for all lung-transplant recipients is 70 percent to 85 percent, while the five-year rate is 50 percent to 60 percent, she said. Those numbers may be scary, Altinger said, but transplant candidates don't really have other options.

"Most of the people we're dealing with are living with a pretty terminal disease," Altinger said. "The ideal

Ketchum Commission looking for potential land

By Cathryn Wild
Times-News correspondent

KETCHUM — Members of the city's newly formed Community Housing Commission will take to the streets next week to look for potential land for affordable housing.

Planning and Zoning Administrator Lisa Majdiak divided up the town map at the commissioners' meeting this week. To create an inventory of possible sites, each commission member will walk the streets of their designated zone.

The walking inventory is the commission's initial step to answer a list of questions developed in its first meeting last month.

northern Blaine County? • What is available here already? • What is the definition of affordable housing? • What is its likely cost? • What is the income range of the buyers?"

Commission members were unable to come up with a definition of "affordable housing." They considered the definition developed by Aspen and Pitkin County in Colorado, which says affordable housing is "housing which people in a community can rent or make mortgage payments at no more than 28% of their gross monthly income."

The 1995 median family income in Blaine County was $46,900. But commission members say this figure may not be representative of actual earnings by average workers in Blaine County.

A variety of strategies to create affordable housing were discussed, including land trusts, selective zoning changes for increased density, and incentives for developers. None have been ruled out. "I think we're going to have to be a lot more creative," commission member Hal McNeel said.

The Community Housing Commission is charged with creating affordable housing for local workers within Ketchum city limits or its zone of impact. The commission replaces the Ketchum Housing Authority, which was disbanded.

Majdiak told commissioners that 17 resumes had been received for the recently created position of Community Housing Planner, and interviews had been offered to the top seven candidates.

These applicants will be interviewed by Ketchum Mayor Guy Coles, members of the City Council and housing commission members.

The selection process is expected to be completed by the end of July. City Councilwoman Sue Noel presented an update on a proposal from Blaine County to share staff and resources with Ketchum to create a county-wide approach to affordable housing.

Discussion between Blaine County Commissioner Len Harlin and the City Council broke down earlier this week over specifics of the plan.

Officials to work out agreement

By Margaret Workman
Times-News correspondent

GOODING — Gooding County officials want to pay for housing juvenile offenders in a Twin Falls County facility under an old contract rate.

Twin Falls County Commissioner Brent Reinke told Gooding County Commissioners last week that the fees have gone up.

The two sides have agreed to work out a new contract. Two Falls County charges $125.26 per day per juvenile for secured detention in the Snake River Juvenile Detention Center — an increase of more than $30 increase over the last contracted price set in 1993. Because a new contract hadn't been signed, Gooding County wanted to continue to pay the 1993 price.

Reinke said that regardless of what Gooding paid, the cost to house the youths is $125.26, and Twin Falls County taxpayers shouldn't have to foot the bill for Gooding County juveniles, he said.

In the 1993 contract, Twin Falls County agreed to charge less than either of the least expensive detention centers in Idaho: Ada County and St. Anthony's. Since then, St. Anthony's has closed its doors to county delinquents and houses only state juveniles. Reinke says that they need to continue to undercut their fees since they no longer accept county youth.

County Prosecutor Paul Brown suggested that simply because St. Anthony's does not accept county youths is no reason to omit them from the formula to determine reasonable charges for detaining juveniles. He suggested renegotiating the contract. This was accepted by all.

In the meantime Gooding County will pay $97 per day per youth matching Jerome county's payments.

Granddaughter of novelist to be buried today in Ketchum

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Services were scheduled in Ketchum today for a actress-model, Margaux Hemingway, whose body was found Monday in her Santa Monica apartment.

David Mirisch, her personal manager for seven years, said Hemingway's stepmother, Angela, told him the 11 a.m. services at the Ketchum Cemetery will be open to the public.

Her body was cremated and the ashes were flown to Idaho.

Hemingway, the oldest of two actress granddaughters of Ernest Hemingway, had not been seen for several days before her body was found. A cause of death has not been determined and officials said she had a history of epilepsy.

She was born in Portland, Ore., on Feb. 19, 1955.

Hemingway had publicized bouts with alcoholism and bulimia. "At this end, we have to believe it (the cause of death) was an epileptic seizure," Mirisch said. "Until something else comes up that's what we're assuming — her epilepsy. There was no evidence of pills, drugs or whatever."

He said he did not believe it was a suicide, or related to the suicide of her famous grandfather on July 2, 1961.

Twin Falls Canal sued over chemical exposure

By Julie M. McKinnon
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A former colleague of Southern Idaho student and employer is claiming she got toxic poisoning — and lost all of her hair — after being exposed to a herbicide by the Twin Falls Canal Company.

Marguerite Johnston, now of Pocatello, was doing yard work at CSI in August 1992 when she was exposed to chemical fumes, according to a lawsuit Johnston filed against the Twin Falls Canal Company last month in 5th District Court. Company employees were on CSI's campus to spray their herbicide on bushes. Magnitude H along canal banks; said Johnston's attorney, M. Lynn Dunlap of Twin Falls. They permitted a "flash off" while purging a hose, allowing some of the chemical to escape into the air, the lawsuit says.

Canal company Manager Vince Alberdi, who was not at the company in August 1992, referred questions about the lawsuit to Sedwick James insurance company in Boise. Sedwick James claims manager Becky Smith said the company cannot comment on litigation.

After Johnston was treated at Magpie Valley Regional Medical Center in Twin Falls and released, she returned to work, the lawsuit says. Johnston started noticing she was losing a lot of hair — and eventually she lost it all, it says.

"She didn't even think of this incident being a cause of it," said Dunlap, adding that Johnston also was having problems with nausea. Johnston went to doctors for help, but it was until November 1995 that she was told that toxic poisoning was causing her condition, the lawsuit says.

Dunlap said he is advising Johnston not to talk about the lawsuit because of potential publicity. Johnston, who is in her 30s, also is pursuing a workers' compensation claim against the college, he said.

Johnston is asking for more than $3,000. Please see CHEMICAL/B3

Salt Lake Valley construction grows

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The Salt Lake Valley's construction boom continues unabated, with Salt Lake City logging a record $373 million in new construction during the budget year that ended Friday. Several other cities also report records that broke last year's records. Salt Lake City has set new construction records every year since 1992 and its neighbors are following a similar pattern. "May was the best May we've had in 10 years. Almost every month has been that way," said Roger Evans, director of building services and licensing for the city. The cranes that break the city's skyline tell the tale of commercial construction: But 48 percent of the city's construction in the past year was residential and there are 2,000 new apartments. Draper did a record $80 million in residential construction last year and approved permits for 722 new apartments, condos and homes. "Only six months into the year, we have already outpaced that by a long shot," said Draper City Planner Rob Smetana. "Draper is like Sandy was 20 years ago, a wide-open residential boom," said Sandy planner George Shaw. Sandy's building peak is in the past, Shaw said. Once a hotbed of new homes, Sandy saw only $45 million worth of new houses go up this past year. "I'm not sure why residential construction stopped. We're not built out yet. There are some big chunks of property left, but they aren't moving." South Jordan and West Jordan are sharing Draper's residential explosion.

Hang time

Ralph Hyde of Lakewood, Ore., soars over the mountains surrounding Goose Lake after launching from Sugar Hill in Lake County, Ore., Monday.

Lots of room to land makes Lakeview hang gliding heaven

LAKEVIEW, Ore. (AP) — When Dave Baleria wants to soar like an eagle, he hauls his hang glider to this small town in the heart of Oregon's high desert. "With the lift from the ridges and the thermals, flying there is pretty good and you can land everywhere," said Baleria, a Jackson County sheriff's sergeant. Good flying conditions, abundant places to land and friendly townsfolk who welcome glider pilots have helped make Lakeview the self-proclaimed "hang gliding capital of the West. Baleria, along with dozens of pilots from as far away as Germany and New Zealand, are in Lakeview this week for the annual Festival of Foot-Launched Flight.

Lake County's geography and weather offer glider pilots excellent opportunities to soar for hours, and on a good day, fly more than a hundred miles — a rare treat for fliers who hail from heavily populated areas where landing sites can be scarce. "The open flat fields make flying cross-country much safer than other places I've flown," said Larry Lessard, an environmental engineer from Massachusetts. Rogue Valley glider pilots played a major role in the U.S. Lakeview an internationally recognized site among hang gliding cognoscenti. When the sport was new in the 1970s, their informal midsummer gatherings in Lakeview became the model for the festival, which has become a major event in Lake County. "Merchants say before the hang gliders came, you could throw a bowling ball down Main Street on Fourth of July and not hit any one," said Barbara Gover, executive director of the Lake County Chamber of Commerce. "Now it's one of our busiest weekends." Gover said business leaders sought local residents' approval before they actively promoted hang gliding as a way to boost the Lake County economy, which nose dived when timber harvests on federal lands plummeted in the early 1990s. Baleria and other pilots from other states, where angry landowners have been known to threaten fliers who touch down on private property. "In California, when you land, you might get a shotgun in your face," said Medford pilot Mike Stevenson. "In Lakeview they give you a beer." Several pilots have moved to Lakeview when they retired. "I came in '87 for the flying, but I stayed for the people," said Jules Gilpatrick, who built a home in Lakeview when he sold his business interests in California. Ralph Hyde, a retired computer data processor from California, said Lake County's variety of launch sites and low cost of living convinced him to settle. "We would drive 100 miles to a flying site and think nothing of it," Hyde said. "Now my flying sites are 10 minutes away." One of the most popular flying sites during this holiday weekend is Sugar Hill, a bald knob a few miles south of the Oregon-California border. Half a mile above the valley floor and near Goose Lake, Sugar Hill's altitude gives pilots plenty of glide time to find rising air currents. At the mountain's base, thousands of acres of pasture provide countless landing sites if thermals fail. "If you don't catch a thermal, you can drop down into one of the fields in 10 minutes, break down (your glider) and get back (to the launch site) in 35 or 40 minutes," Stevenson said.

Victim's rights law survives appeal

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Utah's new Victim's Rights amendment survived its first legal challenge, but attorneys on both sides of the issue said Friday's decision by the Utah Court of Appeals hasn't settled the debate. In an unanimous decision, the court found the constitutional rights of a convicted rapist were not violated when the court allowed the victim to attend the trial, which has become a major event in Lake County. "Merchants say before the hang gliders came, you could throw a bowling ball down Main Street on Fourth of July and not hit any one," said Barbara Gover, have been adopted in 20 other states and a move is underway to add a similar provision to the Bill of Rights. But victims' rights advocates and the attorney who lost the appeal, referring to a footnote in the opinion, agree the Utah decision failed to give victims' blanket protection to attend the trial of their accused assailants. "We are concerned our analysis may give rise to constitutional challenge every time a victim is allowed to remain in the courtroom during a criminal trial," Judge Pamela T. Greenwood wrote in a footnote to her decision. She is signed by Judges Russell W. Bench and Judith M. Billings. Felix had appealed his jury conviction on aggravated robbery, kidnap-ing and sexual assault charges, claiming the victim's attendance violated his Fifth Amendment right to a fair trial. Felix was accused of helping rob a South Ogden jewelry store in 1994 and sodomizing a female clerk at gunpoint in front of her co-workers. His attorneys unsuccessfully objected to the woman's attendance before the trial. The prosecution mentioned her daily attendance to the jury, referring to her as "our victim," and called her as its final witness. Felix claimed the victim's attendance resulted in her own testimony being different than what it would have been had she been sequestered and unable to hear other witnesses testify.

Malta EMT on the receiving end

By Heidi Tuttle
 Times-News correspondent

MALTA — Emergency Medical Technician Rick Neff is always quick to answer a call for help, but on June 14 he was the one calling for help.

Neff owns and operates a repair shop 13 miles outside Malta. He was fixing a steel cashier's box for a local business when the grinder he was using kicked a piece of steel back into his face.

"I thought it had just hit me hard, but when I looked down at all the blood on the floor, I knew I had a problem," he said.

His wife, Margie Neff, is a registered nurse at Minidoka Memorial Hospital and was working on the day of the accident. She received a phone call from one of her children telling her that her husband had been hurt at work.

Then she heard over the emergency room radio that the Malta ambulance was coming in with a bleeder, and when the ambulance pulled in she knew her husband had a serious injury.

The piece of steel that flew up into Neff's face cut the tissue under his cheek bone and into his mouth. A nurse said the roots of his teeth were exposed and it took about 200 stitches to close the wound.

 Neff went back to work the next day but he said the accident taught him a lesson about being careful.

"You can follow all of the safety precautions and something can still go wrong," he said.

Being a volunteer EMT is time consuming, demanding, sometimes frightening and rewarding, Malta EMT Joyce Rigby said.
 "We have handled farm machinery accidents; to fires; to car crashes to you name it," she said.
 Rigby is one of the EMT's who responded to Neff's call for help on June 14.

The Malta ambulance now covers the same area as the Malta Fire District including Elba Malta, several miles down the Naf Road, parts of Highway 77 and part of Interstate 84. Residents of remote areas away from hospitals should become knowledgeable in all areas of basic first-aid, including cardio-pulmonary resuscitation, burn treatment, cuts, broken bones, and allergic reactions, Rigby said.

"When you choose to live 34 miles from the nearest hospital, this knowledge may save a life while waiting for us to respond,"

Reife wore reversed for Malta Emergency Medical Technician Rick Neff recently. He was injured in a shop accident on June 14, and on that day he was the one calling for emergency assistance.

Board refuses to act

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The Air Quality Board has refused to act on a request by the Utah County Commission to keep the oxygen in the county's fuel at the same level as oxygenated fuel. The county wants to pump a more potent version of oxygenated fuel this winter until spring.

The state Division of Air Quality (DAQ) wants to raise the oxygen content in winter fuel to 3.1 percent, while the County Commission wants to leave the level at 2.7 percent.

The state DAQ wants to raise the oxygen content in winter fuel to 3.1 percent, while the County Commission wants to leave the level at 2.7 percent.

Fuel companies fear that if the level is increased, their costs will go up.

Neil A. Moyer, air quality programs project manager for Texaco Inc., says that oxygenated fuel would penalize his and other companies that do not use grain alcohol in oxygenated fuel.

Texaco and Amoco both use MTBE, a petroleum-based oxygenating substance, which can only be mixed in proportions that produce 2.7 percent oxygen content.

By comparison, grain-alcohol can be added in concentrations up to 3.5 percent oxygen. The rule would force MTBE retailers out of the Utah County market or into costly arrangements to band-aid pollution reduction credits from grain alcohol blenders.

plan, which is awaiting U.S. Environmental Protection Agency approval — calls for boosting the oxygen content if enhanced emissions testing was implemented by January 1995. The contingency also would be triggered if projected vehicle use exceeds the plan's estimates, driving up air pollution.

Kimes said both conditions were met, thus the contingency plan was triggered.

The county refused to implement the enhanced emissions testing program until it could prove that alternatives — such as the use of remote sensors and strict enforcement of the existing testing program — were effective.

The Mountainland Association of Governments also projected vehicle use in the area would exceed the carbon monoxide plan's limits by 12.5 percent in 1996.

Critics claim oxygenated fuel increases particulate levels by generating more nitrogen oxide in a car's exhaust. Nitrogen oxide combines with other pollutants to form particulates.

Commission Chairman Jerry D. Grover, for instance, does not think the slight increase in oxygen would make a difference in the carbon monoxide levels, but it could push the fine over the limit for PM10, or the area particulate matter.

"If we maintain 2.7 percent, we may be able to meet both standards," he said.

A broader vision would result in additional controls, such as lowering speed limits and requiring businesses to reduce more pollution than is produced at the site.

Department directed to investigate the reasons for the power outage

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton has directed the Energy Department to investigate the reasons for the widespread power outage earlier this week affecting 15 million people across 15 western states.

The president in a memorandum asked Energy Secretary Hazel O'Leary to give him a report within 30 days on the cause of the outage, its impact, and "analyze whether the outage could have been prevented."

The department also is to examine whether the Western Systems Coordinating Council, which manages overseas electrical service reliability across the western power grid, responded as it should have after the initial power interruption.

The outage caused numerous problems throughout the region, including disruptions of train service, traffic problems, loss of air conditioning (and) interruption of telephone service," the president wrote. He said the investigation is to "assure the reliability of the nation's electricity infrastructure."

Clinton sent the memo to O'Leary late Wednesday.

The power-outage hit Tuesday with between 1.5 million and 2 million people affected in the western states as well as parts of Canada and Mexico. In most cases power was out for a brief period, but had a wide affect on everything from elevators to subway cars and for a time darkened gambling casinos in Nevada.

Another 30-minute power interruption hit Wednesday affecting more than 700,000 customers in parts of Idaho. Investigators are looking into whether a short circuit involving a Wyoming power plant might have triggered a string of events that caused the outages.

Company apologizes for offensive thesaurus

REDMOND, Wash. (AP) — Microsoft Corp. issued a public apology in Spain and Mexico Friday for a Spanish-language version of a software product that offered "savage" and "man-eater" as synonyms for the word "Indian."

The problems popped up in the thesaurus for Microsoft Word 6.0.

"One month ago in Spain, it was discovered in Word 6.0 that when one was searching for a synonym for the word 'Indian,' there were some offensive terms that were given as options in the thesaurus," said Howard Barokas, a Microsoft spokesman in Bellevue.

"Those who made this dictionary of synonyms are imbeciles and cretins," Fernando Benitez, a noted journalist and historian, told La Jornada.

"The synonyms that describe Indians as savages, cannibals, primitives — these are falsehoods of a racist character," Benitez added.

Microsoft apologized in a press release in Mexico City Friday and also took out newspaper ads in Mexico and Spain promising to make new software available for free.

The corrected software should be ready for downloading within five weeks from the company's World Wide Web page.

"Between now and the next five weeks, Microsoft will be searching every word in the Spanish version of the Word thesaurus to make sure there are no more offensive terms," Barokas said.

 The former Cactus Pete's waitress gets a $484-a-month disability payment from the Social Security Administration but she no longer affords private insurance.

Hayes won't be eligible for Medicare until February 1997, two years after leaving her first job for retirement.

she was accepted into the insurance program earlier this year. "I couldn't even afford my medication if it wasn't for Medicaid," she said.

The former smoker, who also has an inherited form of emphysema, has arranged to pay rent and stay with friends while waiting a transplant.

"I'm not really sure I can even get on (Medi-Cal), but I'm hoping I can," Hayes said. "I've thought about it ever since I was turned down by Medicaid here because it says to be my only hope."

Hayes isn't the first Idahoan who has moved elsewhere to get a lung transplant, Altinger said. She also isn't the first person to try to get Medi-Cal to pay for many transplants.

"The situation is not limited to Idaho. The situation is people coming from the four corners of the Earth," including other states, Asia, Russia, South America and the Middle East, said Dr. T. George Wilson, chief of medical policy for California's Department of Health Services.

Medi-Cal officials try to be careful when determining whether people requesting coverage for transplants are legitimate California residents, Wilson said. "I think we ought to be in deference to the taxpayers of California, but it's very difficult," he added.

Company consents to injunction

BOISE — A Post Falls-based corporation that promotes refrigerators which contain no chlorofluorocarbons must offer to pay back all its investors' money, the Idaho Department of Finance reports.

Fourth District Judge Robert Newhouse has entered a permanent injunction against OZ Technology, Inc. It develops and promotes refrigerators as a replacement for Freon. Chlorofluorocarbons rob the atmosphere of ozone.

The complaint alleged OZ President Gary Lindgren solicited investments in "OZ-12," saying it required no re-designing or retooling of an existing refrigeration system.

Lindgren knew as early as May 1993 of concerns by the state of Washington of the product's flammability.

Farmers use twice as much power

BOISE — May brought cool weather with rain and even snow, but Idaho Power Co. irrigation customers nearly doubled their demand for electricity compared with May of 1995.

Pumpers used 110,149 megawatt-hours of electricity in May, compared with 57,233 for the same period a year ago — a 92 percent jump. The highest electricity consumption during the first five months of 1996 was 120,940 megawatt-hours. That is 76 percent more than the 68,696 used January-through-May, 1995.

Idaho Power provides electricity to more than 13,000 irrigation accounts in its three-state service area.

Senator joins school technology panel

BOISE — Republican Sen. Larry Craig has joined the Senate's Education Technology Working Group that is focusing on technological enhancement of America's classrooms.

Craig said technology is particularly important for rural states like Idaho because it can make available to all students opportunities they would not have otherwise.

The bipartisan group has pledged to promote policies encouraging collaboration between business and education so students have access to the best available information technology as they prepare to enter a competitive global market.

United Way money wasn't mismanaged

POCATELLO — An official of Camp Fire Boys and Girls says the agency's financial problems involve fund-raising revenue that can't be accounted for, not money the agency received from United Way of Southeastern Idaho.

United Way announced it was cutting off funding to Camp Fire. The nonprofit agency has received $4,312 this year but won't get the rest of its $26,000 annual allocation from United Way.

Former Camp Fire executive director Debra Ann Johnson, 46, has been charged with grand theft in what investigators say is $28,000 missing from Camp Fire.

Andy Guerra, board president, said Camp Fire always has used United Way funds only for operating expenses such as rent, staff salaries, postage, phones and office supplies.

Chinook runs off to slow start

LEWISTON — Spring chinook salmon finally are starting to find their way home to Dworshak National Fish Hatchery along the Clearwater River.

U.S. Fish and Wildlife biologists hope the run is just behind schedule and won't fall short of predictions. The prediction is 1,200 chinook will return to the Dworshak and Kootsika national fish hatcheries.

Bill Miller, Dworshak manager, said this year's spring salmon run got off to a slow start because of high water in the Clearwater River's North Fork. That could have made the hatchery's fish ladder, basically an artificial stream, harder for chinook to find.

Through Tuesday, the total was close to 300 adult chinook that will spawn in the next run. At the Kootsika hatchery, farther up the Clearwater, 124 chinook have returned, including 42 adults.

All 5 quintuplets off respirators

SPOKANE — Quintuplets born two weeks ago to a Richland couple are all off respirators and are doing well, their parents say.

The first live quint in state history were born June 20 at Sacred Heart Medical Center. They could be released from the hospital in six to eight weeks.

"They've made amazing progress," father Roger Bowman said this week. "The state is amazed. The insurance company is amazed."

Joyce Bowman, 39, became pregnant through in vitro fertilization, and gave birth to four girls and a boy.

The babies were delivered by Caesarean section after 30 weeks in the womb, and are listed in serious but stable condition, said hospital spokeswoman Pat Servino.

Families file claims for $23 million

GLENNWOOD SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — Relatives of 10 of the 14 firefighters killed on Storm King Mountain have filed wrongful death claims, demanding $23 million from the U.S. Forest Service.

Some relatives and others plan to gather for a small ceremony honoring the firefighters Saturday, the second anniversary of their death.

"This is something I've wanted to file for a long time. The things the government has done to us as parents of Don, we have been totally disregarded as if we don't breathe air," said Nadine Mackey, mother of Missoula, Mont., smokejumper Don Mackey. The firefighters died July 6, 1994, when winds turned a small fire into a raging inferno that trapped them on the mountain west of Glenwood Springs.

The death claims were filed at the Regional Forester's office in Ogden, Utah. The first claim was filed last April with the Forest Service, which has its own procedure for such claims, says it will conduct an investigation after that.

was the possibility, everybody let the other families know, if they wanted to do it or not."

Don Mackey's father, Bob, criticized the federal officials for failing to notify them of their rights.

"All that time and there was not a soul that ever came to help us, and advise us," Bob Mackey said. "I feel I owe it to Don to do this. I owe Don to do everything possible to help his two kids."

The U.S. Bureau of Land Management was in charge of the fire, but the claims were filed with the Forest Service because the firefighters were Forest Service employees.

The claims allege the BLM should have controlled the Storm King fire when it first broke out, and that once firefighters were assigned to it they should have been given more resources. The fire was left to burn for two days, officials said, because all available equipment and firefighters were deployed fighting dozens of other fires.

"Don was arguing with the dispatcher to try to get things for the Storm King fire and they told him not even to ask for the stuff," said Bob Mackey.

Jeannie Holby, mother of Hotshot Bonnie Holby, was among the families that declined to file a claim.

"My personal feeling is, what happened happened, and if you put in a wrongful death claim you are first of all questioning the integrity of the individuals that were doing their jobs," she said. "They knew what they were doing was hazardous professions, but they were doing what they loved to do."

Challenge to historic water rights rejected

BOISE (AP) — The Idaho Supreme Court has rejected a challenge to a historic water rights agreement between the Shoshone-Bannock Tribes, the state and federal government.

The court ruled unanimously on Friday that the Fort Hall Water Users Association, made up of 2,000 non-Indian water users in the Fort Hall area, had no standing to file objections to a 1990 agreement.

In a ruling written by Justice Cathy Silak, the court said it was obvious that the federal government is the owner of the water rights in question, and the water users association to use a contractual agreement to use the water. The court said that means only the government is a "claimant" which can file objections to the water rights agreement. Under the agreement, the Shoshone-Bannock tribes receive 581,000 acre-feet of water for the Fort Hall Irrigation Project. The project serves about 2,000 acres of non-Indian land near Pocatello under contract.

Non-Indian water users alleged the United States didn't claim enough water to serve the lands. The Supreme Court said it is "clear that the United States is claiming ownership of the water rights on its own behalf, and that the non-Indian individuals that are served by the Fort Hall Irrigation Project may only have use of the water rights."

Leave the ears alone; CATV is on the fritz

LOGAN, Utah (AP) — Cache Valley residents can stop wiggling the rabbit ears and jiggling the control knobs.

The television sets are not the problem.

City officials said a contractor apparently accidentally knocked out power to the television translator on Mount Pisgah, near the summit of Wellsville Canyon, making TV viewing fuzzy at best for residents without cable service.

Officials said viewers ought to consider stocking up on videos, because the damage might take days to repair.

Mike Nilson, assistant to the county executive, said he's received hundreds of complaints since Wednesday, which is when the power apparently got pulled.

"There is extensive damage up there," he said.

Mother accepts plea bargain in daughter's death

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — A woman whose 2-year-old daughter died after being abused will be sentenced Aug. 30 after pleading guilty in a plea bargain that could see her out of jail four months after sentencing.

Eileen Campanelli, 32, Hayden, pleaded guilty Tuesday to misdemeanor injury to a child, admitting that she placed her daughter, Christina, in a dangerous situation.

The child died last September of head injuries. Doctors found the toddler with a broken leg and bruises. They also found swelling and bleeding in her brain.

At the time of the child, her mother and another sister were living with Federico Cortez, 35, Rathdrum.

After the death, Cortez and Campanelli were charged with felony abuse of a child. Cortez was convicted and faces up to 10 years in prison when he's sentenced Oct. 8.

Campanelli can get no more than six months in jail, and probably will get credit for two months already served.

First District Judge James Judson said he had his reservations about the plea bargain. "I have some concerns over this issue," he said.

But Chief Deputy Prosecutor Cansing Hoyes said after the hearing that it was the right decision. "Nobody knows the case as intimately as we do," he said.

Cowboys ride out comeback

By Larry Hovey
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - Twin Falls and Skyline of Utah put together a couple of strong comeback wins to highlight the second day of the Twin Falls Cowboys AA Legion Classic Saturday.

Skyline, down 10-4 after two innings, came back to beat Alpenrose Dairy of Portland 14-13 in eight innings - although it was tied 12-12 in the third.

Twin Falls, quieted by the assortment of soft stuff from pitcher Tom Carey, came from four runs back to beat the Boise Senators on Matt Thompson's single in the bottom of the seventh inning.

Earlier, Boise topped Lethbridge 8-7 for its fourth win of the season and Bingham run-ruled Lethbridge 9-1.

Twin Falls will have two games today, meeting Bingham at 1 p.m. and Alpenrose Dairy at 7 p.m. at Frontier field. Lethbridge and Skyline open play at 10 a.m. and Boise and Alpenrose meet at 4 p.m.

Twin Falls 6, Boise 5

TWIN FALLS - "We were able to get a lot of people into the game and they all contributed. We had the bench, the fans, everyone caught up in this one and they enjoyed themselves," said Twin Falls coach Don Hornbeck.

Twin Falls' Relvy Salinas puts the pick on at third in the third inning of the second day of the Cowboy Classic Legion AA baseball tournament.

The most fun went to Thompson whose single ended a nail-biting rally.

Thompson took a low, outside-fastball into right field but said he wasn't particularly looking for it there.

His was the third single of the inning, which started on a walk to Jeff Hanthey and continued when Luke Mickelson lived on an error, Jamie Hyde singled in one run and pinch-hitter Thad Merritt lined one-er-up the middle to score Mickelson. After Wes Bauer was intentionally walked, Thompson stroked his game-winner.

The Senators had led from the lead-off batter on, Tyler Kent scoring after opening the game with a double. They added three more in the fourth when Ben Marconi and Brian Wiscombe singled and Josh Walters and Beau Sisk doubled.

After Twin Falls had cut the deficit to 4-3 in the sixth, Brandon Crox singled home Dave Hawks in the top of the seventh. But the Senators couldn't hold it.

Rainbow gymnasts poised for chance at world competition

By Kevin Miller
Times-News writer

HEYBURN - If Lacey Perkins can keep from stepping on anyone's tails, and Danielle West can concentrate on something other than the boys, both Magic Valley gymnasts could be competing in the world championships.

Both girls are in the running for a position on the U.S. team if they can finish as one of the top two in the double mini trampoline competition this week in the National Trampoline and Trampoline Championships in Phoenix, Ariz.

West, a 14-year-old freshman at Declo High School, is sitting solidly in second going into the Thursday event starting today.

Perkins, 11, from Murtaugh, is in third place in her age group. She finished fourth in the national last year.

Both compete for Rainbow Gymnastics in Heyburn.

But all eyes are on the two girls who have a chance to represent their country.

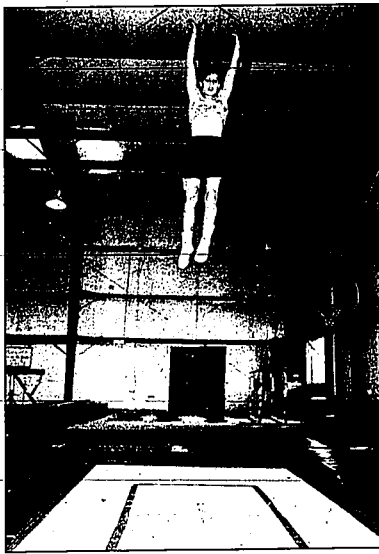

"I feel a lot of pressure," said Perkins, who's walking a little gingerly after stepping on her right toe her last foot last week. She has practiced on the injured foot and says it will be fine for competition.

The key for West, who missed a trip to the national meet last year, is simple: "If I can't sleep, concentrate and not look at any boys while I'm there, I'll have a chance to win it," she said.

Four exercises are judged in trampoline and tumbling tournaments. In the double mini trampoline, which West and Perkins are competing in, athletes perform acrobatics off a pair of small trampolines set at different levels.

Trampoline and tumbling athletes also compete in competition trampoline, power tumbling and synchronized trampoline.

In all, 17 athletes from Rainbow Gymnastics have been invited to compete in Phoenix. In addition to West and Perkins, other local competitors are Anna Strunk, Lyda Strunk, Sarah Bellon, Amy Fage, Megan Schenk, Nick Silcock, Derrick Thornton, Josh Garn, Megan Grigsby, Jussim Muir, Jerica Zollinger, Staci McCoy, Tiffany Bell and Tyler Bell.

Ranked second in the nation on the double mini-tramp, Danielle West of Declo is competing this weekend for a chance to represent the U.S. in the world tumbling and trampoline championship.

Armstrong out of Tour with illness

The Associated Press

AIX-LES-BAINS, France - Complaining of a worsening cold and possible bronchitis, Lance Armstrong pulled out of the Tour de France one-third of the way into Friday's rain-drenched sixth stage.

Stephane Heulot of France held his overall lead after Friday's stage, which was won by Dutchman Michael Boogerd. He has led for three days.

Armstrong, a U.S. Olympic cyclist, had fallen about two minutes behind the main pack when he pulled out. He was 51st in the overall standings at the time.

"I think I've got bronchitis and even if the Olympics weren't coming up, I'd still have abandoned because I'm feeling so bad," said Armstrong, 24, who is given a shot at a gold medal in the Olympics road race July 31.

"I don't know what we're going to do. We've got to find out what's wrong first," said a scratchy-voiced Armstrong.

Poor weather has plagued the Tour de France since its start June 25, with rain and heavy winds every day. Forecasters said there was a chance of snow Saturday as the race heads into the French Alps.

Motorola team manager Jim Ochowicz denied Armstrong pulled out to save his strength for the Olympics, when professional cyclists will compete for the first time.

"That doesn't have anything to do with it," Ochowicz said. "The weather has been a big problem for us. Lance felt some bronchitis coming on last night. He doesn't stop unless there's a reason."

Armstrong's departure is a big loss to the Motorola team, racing in its last Tour under the Motorola name. The company announced in May it was ending its five-year sponsorship of America's top cycling team.

Armstrong went down in a minor spill in Thursday's fifth stage. He wasn't seriously injured and finished with the main pack.

Graf rallies to win at 'Swimbleton'

The Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England - Given a reprieve she desperately needed, defending champion Steffi Graf made the most of rare sunshine Friday to reach her eighth final before a deluge turned Wimbledon back into Swimbleton.

Graf, who will play Arantxa Sanchez Vicario again for the title, took only 26 minutes to close out a 6-2, 6-6, 6-3 victory over Japan's Kimiko Date - 147 hours after Date swept the last six games of the second set Thursday.

The women's final will be played Saturday, if weather permits.

So far this week, weather hasn't permitted much: "Rain drenches the courts four days, and bleak forecasts for the weekend raised the likelihood that the tournament - the wettest Wimbledon since 1991 - will be extended past Sunday for the 14th time.

The men's semifinal between No. 13 Todd Martin and No. 12 Andre Agassi was interrupted twice by rain Friday, the second and last time for 4 1/2 hours after the two Americans split the first four sets. Martin won the first set 7-5, Washington then double-faulted.

In the tiebreaker, played through an increasingly heavy shower, Washington came back from a 6-3 deficit to tie it 6-6 when Martin double faulted again. But Martin then cracked on an ace and gained the set when Washington tipped a volley into the net.

There was a 32-minute rain interruption before the start of the fourth set. Washington broke Martin in the sixth game with the help of two excellent returns on the last two points. Washington was now, frequently embarrassing Martin with subtle touch and decisive volleying.

Washington appeared to have the momentum to reach his first Grand Slam final when the rain suddenly reappeared in the last game of the set, and wiped out the rest of the day.

The other men's semifinal, Richard Krajicek vs. Jason Stoltenberg, never started. It was rescheduled to Saturday and moved from Centre Court to Court 1 at 11 a.m., the same time as the planned resumption of the Martin-Washington match on Centre Court.

Johnson loses 200 at Bislett Games

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Frankie Fredericks edged Michael Johnson at the wire Friday night to win the men's 200 meters at the Bislett Games, snapping the American world champion's winning streak of 21 races.

Fredericks, a Namibian who missed the world 100-meter record by just 0.01 Wednesday in Lausanne, Switzerland, was timed in 19.92 seconds.

Johnson, who broke the world 200-meter record with a time of 19.66 in the U.S. Olympic trials 12 days ago, was three hundredths of a second behind.

"I had nothing to lose," said Fredericks, who has broken three African and Commonwealth records in 11 days. "I knew I could do it here. I felt strong, like they would say: 'well, we expected that.'"

Johnson, meanwhile, had a terrible start.

"His body has his bad day," he said. "This was mine. I hate to lose. When you give Frankie a lot of meters at the start you have to lose."

Jeff Williams, another American, was third in 20.44 followed by countrymen Alvis Whitted and Kevin Little.

It was the first time this year the two Olympic contenders met in the 200. Fredericks, the 1992 Olympic silver medalist, said prior to the race that he would not compete again before the Olympics.

Fredericks was the fastest out of the blocks and still led coming out of the bend. On the straightaway, Johnson almost caught Fredericks but the Namibian fought off the challenge towards the end.

While Johnson's streak in the 200 was ended, he still has one going in the 400, which went to 54 finalis this week.

Dennis Mitchell, another medal contender for the Olympics took the men's 100, leading an American sweep of the top three places.

Mitchell was clocked in a light headwind in 10.10. Tim Harden was second in 10.11, and Jeff Williams in 10.20.

"Under these conditions I'm very satisfied with the race," Mitchell said. "10.10 here is very respectable. I feel strong, have no problems with my health and feel ready for the Olympics."

Sonia O'Sullivan of Ireland and Fernanda Ribeiro of Portugal set world seasonal bests in the opening meet of track and field's Golden Four series.

O'Sullivan, last year's world champion at 5,000 meters and considered the world's fastest woman, won the 1,500 in 3 minutes, 59.91 seconds on a chilly night at Bislett Stadium. Kelly Holmes of Britain was second in 4:01.13.

An hour earlier, Ribeiro held off Gabriela Szabo of Romania by .05 seconds to win the 5,000 in 14:41.07. Ribeiro's time was the third fastest ever.

Marko Ottey, the 36-year-old veteran from Jamaica, captured the women's 100 in 10.95 ahead of Americans, Inger Miller, Gwen Torrence and Chryste Gaines.

Russian-born Ludmila Engquist, who was cleared to compete for Sweden earlier Friday in the Olympics, continued her strong comeback by winning the women's 100-meter hurdles in a wind-aided 12.48 seconds.

The Bislett meet is the first meet of the Grand Slam of international track and field that also includes events in Moscow, Zurich, Brussels and Berlin. In addition to cash prizes, the winners of all four meets in their respective Golden Events share the Golden Four jackpot of 20 gold bars.

Stricker, Blake share Western lead

LEMONT, Ill. (AP) — Through 13 holes, a frustrated Steve Stricker snapped at Nicki, his wife and caddy. She kept encouraging him, however, and he finished with a flourish Friday at the Jay Dunshee for the Western Open lead after two birdies.

Stricker had four birdies and an eagle on his final five holes, matching the PGA Tour's season high for consecutive below-par holes. Looney tied in 10.20.

Lee Janzen was one stroke back while Justin Leonard reached the midway point two behind the leaders in the Motorola-sponsored $2 million event.

Davis Love III, Joe Ozaki, Jeff Maggert and Jeff Sluman were three back and a six-player group that included John Daly trailed by four.

It was another beautiful day, with winds still light, so scores stayed unusually low. Nevertheless, Greg Norman and Nick Faldo were among those who couldn't make the cut of 1-under 143, the lowest since the event moved to Cop Hill's Dubsdread Course in 1995.

Norman, who finished second in each of his previous three Western appearances, shot a 75 Friday that included an 8 on the par-4 8th hole and was at 146.

Faldo, playing Dubsdread for the first time, double-bogeyed his last two holes in a 73 and missed the cut by one stroke.

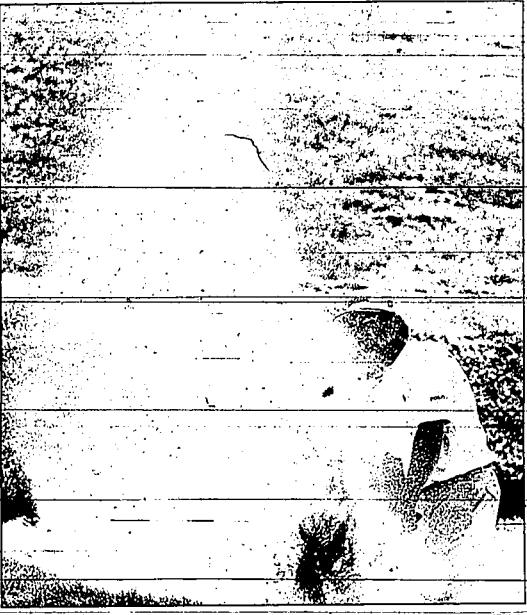

Brad Bryant, the first-round leader with a near-record 64, followed with a 75 Friday. "He's at five under, along with defending champion Billy Mayfair and four others."

Stricker was seven under until he double-bogeyed No. 7. He also bogeyed No. 9. After he three-putted 13 for a bogey, he said, "I was almost over the edge."

Nicki told him not to give up, but Stricker wasn't interested in her optimism as they waited on the 14th tee.

"My fuse is pretty short. I kind of snapped at her," said Stricker, whose victory at the Kemper Open in May was his first title in his third season on tour. "I didn't yell. I just was so angry and I wanted to play so well that I was getting a little testy."

"She knows how I take out my frustration. She goes completely opposite and tries to get me thinking about all the good things — and that we did really have five holes left."

Davis Love III blasts out of the sand trap on the 14th hole at the Western Open Friday. Love is at 7 under par, three strokes off the lead.

Stockton passes Charles on closing holes

BEACHWOOD, Ohio (AP) — Dave Stockton won 11 times in his years on the PGA Tour, including a couple of major championships.

But he says he has been a player now at age 54 than he ever was three decades ago.

He may have proved it Friday by holing four long birdie putts on the back nine, including a 22-footer on the 10th hole.

Stockton was one hole away from a one-stroke lead through two rounds of the U.S. Senior Open.

"I think my game is an awful lot better," Stockton said. "I drive the ball farther. I have always been a good short-iron player and I still retain that. Putting, I'm one of the best, so I have the basis for it."

Stockton's uphill birdie putt on the closing hole pushed him into a tie with Charles. A three-stroke lead melted away in the final three holes when Charles missed his 10-foot uphill putt for par.

"I was just a miserable day from the first hole to the last," said Charles, who led by three shots after tying the course record with his opening 66. "I had a dream round yesterday and today was a bit of a nightmare."

Stockton's 5-under-par 67 after an opening 70 left him at 7 under 137 at the midpoint at Canterbury Golf Club.

"Not a whole lot of adventure on the Western state," he said with a grin. "A pretty relaxing round."

It was a pleasure to watch a master craftsman at work on the greens like that. He was quite incredible. He drained everything he looked at," Charles said.

Charles countered five birdies with five bogeys for a 72 that left him at 138.

No one else was within four strokes of the lead. Only 11 players are under par.

Montgomery holds lead in Irish

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — Colin Montgomerie of Scotland shot a 2-under par 69 Friday to take a one-shot lead midway through the lightning-plagued Irish Open.

Montgomerie has a two-round total of 138, one stroke better than Sweden's Peter Hedblom and Spain's Miguel Angel Martin, who both shot 68 Friday.

Bernhard Langer of Germany followed his opening round 67 with a 76 to fall five strokes off the lead.

Montgomerie said officials waited too long to call players off the course after lightning began.

"The flashes were too close to be playing golf," he said. "With our steel shafts, it's 'hit me if you can' and something will happen one day. It will be too late then."

"I picked my ball up on the 13th and stopped when I heard the lightning. But it was two minutes later that the siren went."

Montgomerie had just birdied the 10th, 11th and 12th when play was halted for one hour. He played the remaining six holes at 1-over par.

Strawberry says he'll pay child support

LOS ANGELES (AP) — One day after signing with the New York Yankees, Darryl Strawberry agreed Friday to hand over his $260,000 signing bonus as partial payment of support owed to his wife and their children.

Strawberry was not in Municipal Court but his attorney, Milton Grimes, said the ballplayer will have the money ready by Monday.

Grimes said Strawberry's one-year deal with the Yankees was key to the settlement, which allowed Strawberry to avoid trial Friday before Los Angeles Municipal Court Commissioner Joseph Bierman.

Grimes confirmed that the $260,000 was Strawberry's signing bonus.

"Without this type of employment, he was making $2,000 a month with the employment where he was," Grimes said, referring to Strawberry's pay with the minor league St. Paul Saints, a Minnesota-based independent league.

Deputy District Attorney Mark Goldman said the $260,000 was supposed to have arrived Friday but there was a problem.

"The check just hadn't gotten here. It's my understanding that it's coming directly from the New York Yankees," he said.

Strawberry could have faced two years in jail and a month with a demerol willful non-payment of child support and contempt of court. He was charged after missing a June 24 deadline to pay $300,000 in child support to his ex-wife Lisa and their children, David Jr., 10 and Diamond Nicole, 7.

He had to agree to that payment in April.

On Friday, Strawberry was or-

dored into a two-year diversion program with the condition as long as he pays certain conditions, said Goldman.

"Our records show he owes about $540,000 in back child support. He's paying $20,000 and now he's got to a month for 24 months," Goldman said. That is in addition to his court-ordered child and spousal support payments of $34,000 a month.

He also must perform 100 hours of community service at county orphanages.

"The point is for Darryl... to see children who don't have any parents," Goldman said. "And maybe make him stop and think about parents who ignored their children."

Prosecutors can end the diversion program at any time if Strawberry fails to meet his obligations.

"We're really holding trial over his head for two years," Goldman said.

Strawberry, 34, was an eight-time National League All-Star. He has played with the Yankees, the Los Angeles Dodgers, New York Mets and San Francisco Giants, but his career has been plagued by cocaine, alcohol, tax and domestic troubles.

Mallon seeks 3rd win this year

SYLVANIA, Ohio (AP) — Meg Mallon had plenty of fans and family to please during the first round of LPGA Jamie Farr Kroger Classic. She didn't disappoint.

Mallon, who grew up in Michigan and attended Ohio State, shot a 6-under-par 65 Friday for a one-shot lead at the 6,319-yard Highland Meadows Golf Club in suburban Toledo, just one mile from the site of the two staves.

"I have a lot of friends in the area," Mallon said.

Mallon, who has won twice this year, she left 15 gate passes for family and friends and intended to leave more on Saturday.

"Everybody is getting along in the gallery. You can tell it's not football season," she said, referring to the Michigan-Ohio State rivalry.

Mallon had a birdie-bogey start, then added three more birdies on the front nine.

"I started with a birdie, then three-putted for a bogey. I had a funny feeling on how my putting would be," Mallon said.

Atlanta's Smoltz streaks downward

Atlanta pitcher John Smoltz is optimistic despite his losing streak.

ATLANTA (AP) — In the past, this would have been a time when doubts started creeping into John Smoltz's mind.

No longer.

Despite the three straight losses, the Atlanta Braves pitcher prefers to focus on his first half as a whole. After all, he still leads the major leagues with 14 wins and is the likely NL starter at Tuesday's All-Star Game.

"I'm not dejected. I'm not mentally down," Smoltz said Thursday night after he lasted only four innings in a 5-2 loss to the Houston Astros. "Those days are over. My focus is on the last couple of innings and I'm looking forward to my next start after the break."

After a team-record 14 consecutive victories, Smoltz (14-4) has been knocked around in his last three starts: In 14 1/3 innings, he gave up 26 hits and 17 earned runs, sending his ERA above 3.00 (3.16) for the first time since the opening weeks of the season.

"Sure, everybody will talk about what's wrong with Smoltz," he said. "I no longer care what they think. I'm looking at a 14-4 first half. Others can talk about the last three starts. I'd tell you if something was wrong, but there's not. Bad stretches happen to all of us."

Against Houston, the bad stretch happened in one inning. Barring around in the second, the Astros had six of their eight hits against Smoltz. Two were infield singles, and the big blow was a two-run double by Mike Timmons — was a liner that just got over the glove of shortstop Jeff Blauser and wound up rolling all the way to the wall.

"They really didn't hit me hard in that inning," Smoltz said. "I'm just a hard thrower. It's just a few pitches here and there."

Smoltz retired the last seven Astros he faced, but the Braves were forced to go to pinch hitter Dwight Smith while trailing 4-0 in the bottom of the fourth. Smith struck out with the bases loaded.

"Honestly, I feel no different than I did during the winning streak," Smoltz said. "Maybe too much was made of the streak. Some of the publicity built me up more than it should have. I did have some close calls in there."

Smoltz's teammates don't seem concerned by his slump.

"That's baseball," said first baseman Fred McGriff, who is probably more worried about his own hitting woes (11-of-86 in his last 24 games). "The last few starts, the breaks have been going against him. We have to go out and pinch him up."

The Braves have scored only seven runs in Smoltz's last three starts, after averaging nearly seven runs a game during his winning streak.

"Our big guys aren't swinging the bats," third baseman Chipper Jones said. "I'm not sure Fred's not lining up are struggling."

So is Smoltz, but he insists that he won't start playing mind games. He readily admits that he used to spend too much time worrying about what other people were writing and saying.

"He's not about to make the same mistake," Smoltz said. "I've lost three in a row, but I'm not going to lose myself," he said. "I'm going to drill ball games. I'm not going to go 30-1. The mechanics are sound. I just have to make better pitches."

"I have no doubts I'll get back to form."

Rodriguez takes short road to All-Star game

SEATTLE (AP) — Now, that didn't take long, did it?

Alex Rodriguez, the kid from Miami, will play in his first All-Star game in Philadelphia on Tuesday.

"I think I've done some good things, but I think there's a lot of room for improvement," Rodriguez said. "I still have a lot of work to do."

There were questions in the spring about Rodriguez's hitting. Skaky five games into his first full season with the Mariners, all the questions had been answered.

Going into a Wednesday game with Oakland, the Mariners' slick-fielding shortstop with the strong arm and accurate arm and good range was the American League's No. 6 hitter at 340.

He had 15 home runs and 58 RBIs, a franchise record for runs driven in by a shortstop.

The second youngest player in the major leagues, 11 days older than Florida's Edgar Renteria, will be the 14th youngest to play in an All-Star game.

"I've hit well and I think I'll continue to hit," Rodriguez said. "But what I have to do to stay in the top leagues is play good defense. Whatever I hit is a bonus to me."

Sports Illustrated put him on its cover this week, calling him "the game's next superstar." But he has a way to go to catch teammate Ken Griffey Jr., who has been on five covers.

Manager Lou Piniella gave Rodriguez the Mariners' shortstop's job this spring, with an asterisk: You have to make the routine fielding plays and you have to hit some, too.

In his first 65 games this season, Rodriguez committed seven errors. He made eight in 48 games for the Mariners last year when he was shuttled between Seattle and Triple-A Tacoma.

A year ago in Seattle, Rodriguez hit .232 with five homers and 19 RBIs.

Burgess will stay on swim team

ATLANTA (AP) — Greg Burgess will not be kicked off the U.S. Olympic team because of an arrest for public drinking, a rival swimmer's manager said Friday.

Ron Karnaugh, the first alternate for the 200-meter individual medley, sought to have Burgess dismissed from the team because of the arrest.

The U.S. Olympic Committee had declined to penalize Burgess, who won the 200 M during the Olympic trials, Karnaugh manager

Bennett Raffor said Friday after the American Arbitration Association held an all-day hearing. Raffor said the panel decided to require Burgess to perform 80 hours of community service.

"We never set our sights on getting him kicked off the team. We had set our sights on making the Olympic Committee issue a penalty," Raffor said. "We wanted a ruling that said it's the law and you (the USOC) are not above the law."

Women's softball team pitcher Lisa Fernandez throw a perfect first game of their recent nationwide tour.

USA softball: The other Dream Team

ATLANTA (AP) — They blow away their opponents, piling up numbers that seem beyond belief. A glance at their roster reveals a lineup with seemingly no weaknesses.

The Dream Team? No, it's the U.S. women's softball team, which is almost as sure a bet for Olympic gold as the NBA stars who'll take the court in Atlanta in a couple of weeks.

Team USA — a.k.a. The Other Dream Team — completed its pre-Olympic tour with two more victories Thursday night, giving the Americans a nearly perfect 60-1 record in the grueling series of games that began April 14. After a week of travel, they'll return to Columbus, where the inaugural Olympic softball competition begins July 21.

"Anything but gold would be a disappointment," shortstop Dot Richardson said. The Americans completed their nationwide tour with a 9-0 victory over the Atlanta All-Stars and a 2-0 win over the Tennessee All-Stars, two teams comprised of current and former college players.

In the first game, Lisa Fernandez pitched a perfect game, striking out 12 of the 15 batters she faced and not allowing a ball out of the infield. Against the team from Tennessee, Michele Smith was nearly as good, allowing just one hit before Gillian Boxx ended the game with a two-out, two-run homer in the bottom of the eighth.

Neither Fernandez nor Smith allowed an earned run during the pre-Olympic tour. Overall, Team USA outscored its opponents 441-3 and the pitchers struck out more than 70 percent of the batters they faced.

Of course, the Americans spent most of the time playing teams that seemed more like adoring fans than credible opponents.

Cuban boxers fight for prize of freedom

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Security was tight at the training camp in Candleridge, N.C., where 12 members of the Cuban boxing team were preparing last month for this summer's Olympics in Atlanta.

In addition to two Cuban security men, Mexican federal agents patrolled the grounds. Athletes were allowed to leave for a nearby store or someone's house, but only under limited circumstances. They'd get a lecture about the dangers of talking to people on the outside.

"There was always a watchful eye," said boxer Ramon Garbey. "It was watchful enough. The 12-member team is tiny."

Garbey, 25, perhaps the world's best boxer in his weight class, left the camp June 22 for a dinner with a friend and never came back.

Five days later, another boxer, Joel Casamayor, a gold medalist for Cuba at Barcelona in 1992, went for a walk to get a drink — and kept on walking.

The two left the Cuban camp independently, but with a shared goal: To escape Castro's communism and get political asylum in the United States.

To their surprise, they were reunited in Tijuana, where they met with a firm pulling strings behind the scenes. After a harrowing van ride through Tijuana, they crossed the border together at San Ysidro on Sunday.

They left behind their families, their homes, their hopes of winning

Atlanta 1996

Olympic gold, all for the biggest prize of their careers: freedom. Their applications for asylum are pending. An immigration judge will consider the cases.

On Friday, they were tired and still overwhelmed by the past frantic few weeks — and a great deal of uncertainty to come. But neither voiced even the slightest of regrets.

"I feel free now," Garbey said through an interpreter. "I'm awfully from communism. I feel more independent."

They have been boxers for almost as long as they can remember, Garbey starting at age 5, Casamayor at age 8. They both came from poor families and went through Cuba's regimented sports academies. Both had won national titles by the time they were 13.

As they grew older, they both grew increasingly frustrated with communism. Both refused to register for the youth party organization; both paid the price. They encountered through an interpreter on their travel and other activities.

Garbey, a 175-pound light heavy, weight with a powerful jaw and facial scars, said he was suspended from the national team in 1994 and was jailed for three months.

Casamayor, a 119-pound bantamweight who looks — and fights — like Sugar Ray Leonard, said that when he was 17, he was arrested for minutes for him in Cuba, as long as he refused to register for the party. He said he got none of the special treatment, the cars, the money, the hofies, afforded to other athletes.

Dream Team training ends; 2 games planned

CHICAGO (AP) — If Tim Duncan and Oscar Schmidt were on the same team, maybe they'd have the slightest of chances against the Dream Team.

Instead, they'll have to take their beatings 24 hours apart.

The U.S. Olympic men's basketball team will play the U.S. junior team, led by Duncan of Wake Forest, on Saturday at Auburn Hills, Mich., before traveling to Cleveland for an exhibition game Sunday against Brazil, led, by the 38-year-old Schmidt.

"We're tired of beating up each other, we want to beat somebody else up for a change," Karl Malone said Friday as the U.S. Olympic team closed out a five-day training camp at Moody Bible Institute with a 40-minute scrimmage.

The "blue" team, led by Shaquille O'Neal, beat the "white" team, led by Charles Barkley, 62-45.

"One team played extremely well, Shaquille's team," coach Lenny Wilkens said.

"But it this way, I was 4-for-4 from the line today," O'Neal said.

"I think I have a good feel for the players now, and that really helps," Wilkens said. "As we go through the exhibitions, we'll try different combinations."

Wilkens planned to go over the scouting reports on the junior team during the flight to Detroit.

"I don't think it's anything to be concerned about," Wilkens said. "We have a videotape of Brazil that we edited down to six minutes. We'll watch it and discuss what they players like to do, their defenses, etc."

The junior team includes Toby Battley, of UCLA, Louis Bullock, of Michigan, Brevin Knight of Stanford, Austin Croshere of Providence, Shea Seals of Tulsa and Duncan. Duncan opted to stay in school for his senior season rather than enter the NBA draft, where many feel he would have been the overall No. 1 pick.

"I'm not too concerned about him, especially after what I've seen from our big guys," Stockton said.

Brazil is led by Schmidt, the leading scorer at the Barcelona Olympics who also led his country to a victory over the U.S. at the 1987 Pan American Games.

"He didn't miss too many shots that game," Robinson said. "We led by 17 or 20, then I got into foul trouble and watched the lead dwindle. That was a terrible experience."

Schmidt, now playing full-time in Brazil after an 11-year career in Europe, also was the leading scorer at an Olympic qualifying tournament in Argentina.

"I expect to see the same thing out of him that I see every time," Wilkens said. "He plays with great enthusiasm, he loves the game and he hasn't seen a shot that he doesn't like."

Olympic drug lab finally wins accreditation

ATLANTA (AP) — The laboratory that will test athletes for drug abuse during the Summer Olympics has been accredited, ending a major unresolved issue that was hanging over the heads of games organizers.

The International Olympic Committee notified the Atlanta Committee for the Olympic Games of its decision Wednesday. The letter from Prince Alexandre de Merode, chairman of the IOC's medical commission, was released Friday.

The performance of three high-resolution mass spectrometers, the expensive and advanced machines used to detect the use of banned anabolic steroids, was "remarkable" in a test last month, de Merode said.

"We're just pleased to have this behind us so we can move ahead and do what we need to do during the games," said Dr. John Cantwell, chief medical officer at ACOG.

Ordinarily completed long before the games, the accreditation of the doping lab for Atlanta dragged on for months, partly because it was not agreed until February that the ACOG lab would use the high-resolution mass spectrometers.

The lengthy process of leasing the $450,000 devices, installing them and inspecting them meant the lab could not undergo a pre-games test at a major athletic event such as last month's U.S. Olympic track and field trials.

Hillary's myths not our business

Hillary Rodham Clinton is in trouble again. This time it's because she consulted with well-known psychologist Jean Houston, who helped Clinton with her book, "It Takes a Village."

This awful secret was revealed in a book by the Washington Post's Bob Woodward in his new book, "The Choice." Then one of the news magazines picked up on it and called those meetings "scenes."

Actually, it's no secret at all. The first lady herself has openly talked about those sessions with Jean Houston and how she had conversations in her mind with Eleanor Roosevelt.

Clark Murrell
Faith today

Houston is no slouch. She runs workshops for all kinds of groups, and those sessions are aimed at helping people get their lives in order. She does workshops for government agencies, churches, corporations, and just about any organization that needs some help.

Houston has earned two doctorate degrees, one in anthropology and one in psychology, and has written three books. She has studied cultures all over the world. Sounds like an excellent person to be advising the first lady.

What ticks me off is that the irresponsible press takes an innocent conversation between two powerful women and turns it into a scandal. I'm not saying all members of the press are irresponsible, but some are, and the spin Woodward put on Clinton's contact with Houston is irresponsible.

The first lady is a United Methodist and very committed to the social justice emphasis that Methodism espouses. She believes it is her duty to do what she can for children. That is her focus and she does it well.

But the press has to get to her eventually, being in the White House and being under constant scrutiny by the working press, the Republican Party and various committees investigating every aspect of her past.

Hence the need for some conversations with psychologist Houston. What Houston does in her workshops is tell people that everything in their lives converges to make them into a unique human being. That includes personal heroes, such as Eleanor Roosevelt. It also includes ancestors, mothers and fathers, siblings, friends. Every experience we have molds us in some way. That includes myths that we perceive to be true in some spiritual way.

Let me tell you a myth that shapes me. When I was about 10 years old the most important thing in my life was baseball. I wasn't very good but I loved the game.

My team was from Nora Springs, Iowa, my hometown. One day, playing a team from Rockford, Iowa, I hit a home run that cleared the fence and rolled into the street. I hit that ball so hard I broke the bat. The coach gave me the bat and my father and I repaired it.

Every time I remember that incident I feel better. It has been a sign to me that I can accomplish heroic things. But it has been so long ago that I'm not even sure it's true. I'm pretty sure I broke the bat. But I don't know if the ball rolled into the street. It's a myth that is in my memory, and I don't really care whether it's true.

If you believe there is a world beyond what we see and hear on earth, then you have to believe that myths exist to make us better people — centered, loving, forgiving and attached intimately to others.

Hillary Clinton obviously believes there is a world beyond earth, and she is doing what she can to stay connected. Where is the scandal in that? Would you want a first lady who did nothing to remain connected?

This entire episode is a nonstory. It also occurs to me that the first lady's spiritual life is nobody's business.

Why do we insist on knowing every detail of our celebrity's lives? Do we live such unimaginative and boring lives that we have to live vicariously through famous people?

I ask you to reject this idiosyncrasy and take the irresponsible press to task.

Singing & signing

By H.R. Weisard
Times-News correspondent

GOODING — A singing heart and signing hands are used by a Gooding couple to bring glory to their Lord.

Harold and Beulah Blades have combined Harold's talent for writing and singing gospel songs and his wife's experience in sign language as they perform for audiences around the Magic Valley.

Harold Blades started writing songs based on Scripture and his life experiences about 10 years ago.

"The words just came to me and I start singing," he said. "If I don't write the words down as soon as I think of them, I have never been able to recall them at a later time."

Putting the rhyming words to music "comes naturally because the type of tune has to fit the way I write." The songwriter doesn't play a musical instrument and usually sings without accompaniment.

"I just sing from my heart — it comes so easy," he said.

He would like to find someone to compose the musical notes for the more than 15 songs he has written, but for now, "God gives me a song and I sing it — it's that simple."

The Gooding man has a strong resemblance to Allen Funt, of TV's " Candid Camera" fame. And his kindly manners and relaxed attitude as he bursts into song while visiting in homes or at social gatherings bring candid reactions from his audiences.

"Some people stare, others cry and laugh and most of them nod in agreement" to the gospel message Blades tells through song.

Beulah Blades uses sign language to illustrate the songs.

A child at a recent concert by the Blades said, "I can't understand sign language, but I could see the pictures she was making with her hands."

Beulah Blades, recently retired, taught at the Idaho School for the Deaf and the Blind in Gooding for 30 years.

"Singing has changed many times over the years," she said. "It's better now than ever before. Children who are deaf are usually very quick to learn and understand signing."

The Blades owned and operated a saddle shop in Gooding for many years, but Harold Blades said he got too busy shoeing horses and had to give it up. Now a farmer, Blades said he learned the trade from his father.

"My dad got so busy he couldn't shoe my horse, so I had to do it," he said.

He also deborns cattle and sings at funerals.

Blades learned Scriptures to use in his songwriting from his parents, who taught their eight children about the Bible and took them to church. Born in Springfield, Mo., the Blades family struck out for Oregon in 1936 when the drought years made it necessary for them to move.

"We hauled barrels of water from a creek to water the cattle, but they drank it up so fast and still needed more," Harold Blades said. "We split wood and sold it for two dollars a cord. But my folks always made sure we got enough to eat and went to church. My mom baked fresh biscuits three times a day. My dad was a Baptist and Mom a Methodist, but it didn't matter which church we attended, whichever one was closest was where we went."

Harold was 10 years old when the Blades family moved west.

"We got as far as Twin Falls and stopped at a shop run by a minister named Claude Pratt," he recalled. "He took us in and we became such good friends we never left."

The Blades attend the Nazarene Church in Gooding where the musical man has taught a class for 9- and 10-year-old boys for about 20 years. He writes songs for both adults and children. The children like to climb up on his lap or sit at his feet and listen to his catchy songs.

Western Kansas features distinctive church

A full moon looms over St. Fidelis Catholic Church which dominates the skyline in the small western Kansas town of Victoria.

The Associated Press

VICTORIA, Kan. — The Cathedral of the Plains is a remarkable testament to the piety of 19th-century immigrants and the hardy missionary friars who came to the Kansas plains to minister to them.

This Catholic church is officially called St. Fidelis Church, and it is not officially a cathedral, which is a bishop's church. But the imposing structure, visible for miles from nearby Interstate 70, is one of the state's most-recognized buildings and attracts more than 10,000 visitors a year.

"One of the popes once referred to us as the Marines of the church," said the Rev. David Songy, a Capuchin friar who joined the order in 1982 and was ordained a priest in 1987. "We go where nobody else wants to go and try to serve the poor and needy."

The Capuchines are a branch of the Roman Catholic religious order founded by St. Francis of Assisi. They take vows of poverty, chastity and obedience, Songy said, and their history in Kansas is intertwined with the settling of Ellis County and the construction of the church.

St. Fidelis Church, in a community of about 1,300 residents just east of Hays, is in the shape of a cross and changes color throughout the day as its limestone exterior reflects the sunlight.

It was nicknamed Cathedral of the Plains by William Jennings Bryan, a three-time Democratic presidential candidate who visited the church in 1912.

The church is 220 feet long and 110 feet wide and is topped by a statue of St. Fidelis on the rooftop some 75 feet above the ground.

The town was settled in 1873 by English immigrants who named the village for their queen. Two years later, the gentlemen farmers were joined by poor Volga Germans fleeing Russia to avoid forced military service in the czar's army.

The new arrivals built a sod-hut village, and when the English found pioneer life too difficult and left, the Germans stayed on. Their village, named Herzog, absorbed the old one and took its name in 1913.

The mostly Catholic Germans at first worshiped around a large wooden cross in the center of the village. Their first church was a lean-to attached to a home. Traveling missionary priests came to celebrate Mass, and soon a permanent church was built.

The Capuchin friars arrived in Ellis County in 1878 and preached on the Kansas Pacific Railway to donate 10 acres of land for a third church for the growing congregation. That church stood for nearly 30 years, but its 600 seats were too few at a time when large families were common.

Construction began in 1908 on the current church, and it was finished in 1911. And it still is an active parish, with Saturday night and Sunday morning services each filling about three-fourths of the church, Grinko said.

The church was named for its patron saint, St. Fidelis of Sigmaringen, a Capuchin who was martyred in 1622. The Cathedral of the Plains, which is currently being renovated and repaired, is listed in the National Register of Historic Places as a building of "architectural significance."

Atheist's disappearance causing a crisis of faith

Los Angeles Times

AUSTIN, Texas — There is a crisis of faith in the atheist world.

Madalyn Murray O'Hair — the cantankerous grande dame of godlessness, the self-designated "most-hated woman in America," the driving force behind the U.S. Supreme Court's landmark 1963 decision banning school prayer — has disappeared.

Vanished. Literally without a trace. It's been almost nine months since anyone has heard from the sharp-tongued, 77-year-old nonbeliever. Or from her son, Jon Garth Murray, 41, and granddaughters, Robin Murray O'Hair, 20 — both of whom helped her run the American Atheists Inc. headquarters here in a fenced, unmarked building shielded by mirrored glass.

For more than three decades, O'Hair has devoted her life to the cause of secularism, picking unpopular fights and waging them as zealously as any evangelist. Given such an obstreperous history, her prolonged silence is not just odd, but ominous. It has thrown the atheist movement into no small turmoil, halting many of the organization's activities and leading her flock to conclude that whatever explanation eventually surfaces, it is doubtful to be good news.

"If she ever shows up, I'm going to chew her butt off for putting me through hell," said Orin "Spike" Tyson, the group's executive director, straying from the atheist lexicon.

Since last August, when O'Hair posted a note outside the headquarters saying her family had been called out of town "on an emergency basis," rumors have jelled into hunches, and hunches have solidified into theories. But so far, there is no more evidence backing the plausible scenarios than there is in discrediting the fantastic ones.

Not even Phil Donahue could come up with an answer, despite hiring a private investigator to track down O'Hair, whom he wanted as his final guest last May, 29 years after she appeared on his inaugural show.

For those inclined to speculate, the possibilities are tantalizing. At first, American Atheist officials kept in touch with O'Hair by cellular phone, reporting that she was merely on a prolonged vacation from her manic, seven-days-a-week schedule. Then, on Sept. 28, communication broke off. Three plane tickets to New York, where O'Hair was planning to protest Pope John Paul II's visit the following week, were never used.

One of the earliest explanations surmised that O'Hair, who has diabetes, was gravely ill or already dead. Worried that Christ would pray for her soul — or, worse, claim she had experienced a

Presbyterians help Southern churches

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS — Magie Valley Presbyterian churches are responding to the plight of three black churches destroyed by fire. More than 60 churches have been burned in recent weeks, with the majority in the southeastern region of the United States. Churches of African American congregations have been the most widely targeted, and many of these churches were located in rural areas and were uninsured.

A check for $1,900 is being sent to the Greene County Emergency Fund by Presbyterian churches in Twin Falls. Jerome and Wendell to help churches in Alabama rebuild their houses of worship.

The Rev. Paul C. Reeves, who pastors the Twin Falls Church, said members of the local church want to take a stand against the burnings and want to stand with those who are suffering. "I know Idahoan Christians all grieve over these acts, want them to stop — and the perpetrators bear the legal consequences of their actions," Reeves said. Those who want to join the effort may call the church at 733-7023.

In a related matter, the General Mills Foundation has issued a call to every American, corporation and foundation to join in the task of rebuilding burned churches.

The Foundation will provide a matching grant of $100,000 to the Burned Churches Fund of the National Council of Churches and will organize a drive to raise a total of $200,000 or more to finance construction of churches destroyed by fire during the recent wave of arson.

Contributions should be sent to Burned Churches Fund, National Council of Churches, 475 Riverside Drive, New York, N.Y. 10115.

Promise Keepers still struggling in appeal to African-American men

Chicago Tribune

CHICAGO — Six years after a college football coach decided that Christian men needed their own, new kind of ministry, the evangelical Promise Keepers movement has swept past obstacles like a halfback on the loose.

Men — more than 1 million already this year — fill stadium after stadium for weekends of sermons, tears and exuberance. Money — $100 million this year — fuels a staff of 600 and a 22-city summer tour. Detractors — primarily women's groups and gay rights activists — have failed to slow the phenomenon.

But as Promise Keepers arrived in Chicago last weekend for the first time, it came eye to eye with an old and implacable opponent — the difficulty in bringing races together.

Soldier Field was packed with 66,950 men Friday night, and there were groups of black and Hispanic men among the predominantly white, short-sleeved-crowd.

But after more than a year of efforts to reach out to minorities here, Promise Keepers hardly tapped the core of Chicago's black evangelical churches — men whose beliefs are nearly identical to white evangelicals but whose culture is worlds apart.

In the last year, masses of black Christian men rallied around the Million Man March's themes of spiritual renewal and family responsibility — the cornerstones of the Promise Keepers movement.

But as participants in last weekend's conference head back to their homes, sweat-stained and tear-streaked, two questions are lingering: Can faith triumph over racial division? And if so, on whose terms?

Jesus' call to love thy neighbor is a foundation for Christians of all races and denominations. And at moments of intense racial upheaval, from the fight over slavery to the civil rights movement, churches have helped build temporary bridges between black and white. The rash of church burnings in the South again has people reaching out across faiths and races.

At the same time, however, ministers are quick to say that Sunday morning remains the most segregated part of the week. Culture and politics seem to prevent the links from holding.

nized that when they made ethnic reconciliation one of the seven promises that members are asked to make. But last year, the group acknowledged that it was the one goal that has consistently stumped them.

Last winter, when some Chicago-area members tried to enlist participants of last year's Million Man March, the Rev. James Demos, local coordinator of the march, said he was contacted by Promise Keepers, which wanted to tap into the network of Christian men from the march.

Promise Keepers backed off, however, after Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan, who led the Million Man March, visited Libyan President Moammar Gadhafi and other controversial leaders in Africa and the Middle East in February.

Atheist

Continued from C1 deathbed conversion — O'Hair had long ago stated her desire to be privately cremated, away from funeral parlors and other quasi-religious trappings.

"I don't want any damn Christ praying over the body or even putting his hands on it," she wrote in a 1986 article titled, "Plotting Atheist Funerals." That included her estranged son, William J. Murray, the young plaintiff in her anti-prayer lawsuit, but now a Christian activist who describes his mother as "dysfunctional."

The merits of that version, although it seemed promising last fall, have dissipated with time.

Surely, her body would have been disposed of by now and a death certificate issued. It also fails to account for the whereabouts of her son and granddaughter.

Less charitable observers have focused attention on her money, suggesting that O'Hair is either living the good life or running from the law. Even before she disappeared, finances at American Atheists Inc. were rocky. The organization had spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in a continuing legal battle to claim the multimillion-dollar estate of James Hervey Johnson, a religion-hating San Diego eccentric who died in 1988.

O'Hair's son and granddaughter also were being hounded by the Internal Revenue Service, which contended they used atheist money to buy everything from luxury cars to the northwest Austin home.

Although she hardly seems like a threat to social order, O'Hair's name is still capable of ranking the faithful, every few years, an old rumor pops up that she is petitioning the Federal Communications Commission to ban religious broadcasting — a spurious story that, as recently as 1995, was swamping the FCC with millions of mailed protests.

"If you're an adult," said Austin Police Department spokesman Mike Burgess, "it's not against the law to disappear."

overseas accounts, including a New Zealand fund worth nearly $1 million.

The final theory is that the trio were the victims of foul play. # Catholics plot recruitment strategy

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — For the first time this century — and perhaps the first time ever — a year will pass in which no priests will be ordained in the Roman Catholic Diocese of Providence.

The lack of candidates, in a state with the highest per capita Catholic population in the country, is another example of the dwindling number of priests nationwide.

To fill the gap, some Catholics want the church to ordain women and allow priests to marry. But a group of bishops has a different strategy, one that embraces modern marketing while leaving church traditions intact.

The National Conference of Catholic Bishops has launched its first national campaign to recruit young Catholics to the priesthood and other religious work.

The strategy — one part public relations, one part headhunting — aims to combat negative images of priests in news reports, while using computer tracking systems, including one called "The Recruiter," to find and hold priest candidates.

"Our goal is to listen and to walk with potential candidates for the priesthood, but not to put pressure on them to follow a certain path," said Bishop Peter J. Casaretto of Ogdensburg, N.Y., chairman of the NCCB Committee on Vocations.

In 1966, 8,325 men completed training to be ordained in U.S. churches. In 1995, the figure dropped to 3,172, according to the Center for Applied Research in the Apostolate — at Georgetown University.

As fewer young men have entered the priesthood, the age of practicing priests has increased. Now, 60 percent of priests serving in U.S. dioceses are 55 or older.

Civil and criminal lawsuits charging priests with sexual misconduct haven't helped.

But in a new document, presented June 21 at the bishop's annual spring meeting in Oregon, church leaders blamed other outside forces like materialism, promiscuity and an unwillingness among young Catholics to make long-term commitments.

As part of the national campaign, parishioners will be asked to form an army of recruiters, pray for priest candidates or offer support as informal as a word of encouragement to a particularly gifted young man.

On the high-tech side, the bishops are pushing a computer program called the Ministry Potential Discerner, which scores people on their intelligence, maturity and spirituality.

Those with potential get their scores entered into "The Recruiter," a computer tracking system that allows church officials to keep tabs on prospective recruits.

End-of-life issues prompt soul searching

Dallas Morning News

DALLAS — An electronic message announcing Kit Short's decision to die moved across the Internet last summer from a hospital room at Baylor Medical Center in Dallas.

"Kit ... woke up from her morphine sleep yesterday afternoon and told us that she wanted to go ahead-and-quit, that she was tired of fighting, and that she didn't want to go another round," Andrew Short wrote from his wife's bedside to a cancer discussion group somewhere in cyberspace.

Four days later, after honoring his wife's wishes and with hold food, water and life-saving treatment, he typed the words: "Kit died yesterday."

The life and death questions continually spinning in the moments he entered his two computer messages are issues that each year face many of the hundreds of thousands of American families whose loved ones succumb to long-term illnesses.

Since the U.S. Supreme Court ruled in 1990 that a terminally ill person may refuse life-sustaining medical treatment, many patients and their families have grappled with right-to-die issues. Some, such as Short, have a consistent assisted suicide in their search to hasten an end to a slow and agonizing death.

Among the soul-searching questions that Short and others have asked are whether lingering pain and suffering outweigh the need to prolong life. And if refusing certain medical treatments somehow compromises moral and religious convictions.

Theologians and medical experts say end-of-life issues are becoming more common. Contributing to the trend, they say, are the rising number of AIDS cases combined with the fact that many people afflicted with terminal diseases.

Statistics from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention office in Hyattsville, Md., reveal that of 1.75 million patients diagnosed in 1994 with serious illnesses — among them heart disease, stroke, AIDS and various forms of cancer — 379,252 died of that illness. The center could not determine, however, how many of these cases were sudden deaths.

Experts also say that right-to-die issues become more widespread as medical advancements and successions extend life. But, in most cases, they say, these breakthroughs fail to restore the patient's quality of life.

Eugene Bianchi of Emory University in Atlanta, an expert on death-and-dying, said recent federal court rulings upholding the right to die and assist suicide do not contribute to the growing trend.

"The right to die and assisted suicide are two separate issues," said Bianchi.

consistently speaking, the difference is that the right to die has implied that people shouldn't be kept alive by extraordinary means but that they be allowed to die. Assisted suicide is a more direct intervention to end life.

But, he said, the religious experiences of families face in these situations are varied as the diseases that afflict their loved-ones.

Short, a Presbyterian, said he hadn't thought about his religious convictions as he considered assisted suicide to end his wife's pain and suffering. He said he didn't pursue it because the practice is illegal in Texas.

"I was not concerned at the time about what God would think about that decision," said Short, 57, who runs the Texas Homeless Network in Austin.

"I was thinking more about being with dignity. In cases like Kit's, people don't die with dignity."

Short said his wife's affliction with multiple myeloma, a form of bone cancer, and her subsequent death, has shaken his faith. Ten months after her funeral, he says he is still angered and hurt.

"It wouldn't return to me that God abandoned me in my hour of need," he said. "It's more like I abandoned God."

Homosexuality sparks battle in religious community

Knight-Ridder News Service

LONG BEACH, Calif. — The battle over homosexuality is being led by Christian soldiers on both sides, with religious leaders staunchly denouncing or defending the gay lifestyle.

The battle lines could not be clearer.

"God loves homosexuals but he hates homosexuality," says the Rev. Stephen Pearson of Grant AME Church in Long Beach. "I don't bash gays. I pray for them."

"The thrust of the Bible is justice," says the Rev. Mary Ed Kasper of the First Christian Church in downtown Long Beach. "I don't consider homosexuality a sin. There's so much pain in this world who cares if two men want to be together? Who cares?"

It's not a debate unique to Long Beach, and it's not limited to Christians. Across the religious spectrum, in pulpits across the nation, churches and temples are struggling with the same questions: Is homosexuality a sin? Should gays and lesbians be allowed to marry, to preach, to worship?

"Homosexuality and abortion are the two big issues in religion today," says Keith Hartman, an Atlanta journalist whose book "Congregations in Conflict: The Battle over Homosexuality" was published by Rutgers University Press in February. "The agonizing over homosexuality is going on in basically every denomination. I think it's based in the need for religion to have an opponent. Today you're seeing the backlash against gays because of the progress in gay rights."

The Long Beach controversy was touched off by Councilman Jerry Shultz's speech June 11, in which he characterized homosexuality as abnormal and immoral. The issue, before the City Council was domestic partnerships a proposed support for unmarried couples to officially register their relationships. But Shultz's comments instantly shifted the focus to homosexuality.

When Shultz was condemned for being homophobic and overly graphic, a host of conservative Christian ministers flew to the councilman's defense.

Some clergy have no trouble defining homosexuality as a serious sin. They point to two Biblical verses in Leviticus (18:22 and 20:13) that describe sexual relations between men as evil, a sin ranking with adultery and incest. And they note that Adam and Eve were a heterosexual couple set on Earth to be fruitful and multiply to create children.

The Church of Latter Day Saints condemns any sexual behavior outside of marriage.

"We make a clear distinction between sexual orientation and sexual behavior," says Steve F. Gilliland, a spokesman for the church. "We reach out in love to all people, regardless of their orientation, and try to help them achieve a Christ-centered life. Sexual behavior outside the bond of a traditional marriage is condemned whether it be homosexual or heterosexual."

The debate is unlikely to be resolved soon, but author Hartman believes its intensity will eventually abate.

"The churches I looked at there's a generational shift that foretells major change," Hartman says. "I found that people over 50 weren't comfortable even talking about homosexuality. The younger generation, even conservative people, are much more comfortable. Oddly enough, seeing gay characters regularly in television sitcoms has helped a lot."

British library finds ancient Buddhist scrolls

LONDON (AP) — The British Library has acquired ancient bark scrolls believed to be the oldest surviving Buddhist manuscripts — dating to within five or six centuries of Buddha himself.

Although virtually nothing is known about their origin, the library said Wednesday that the scrolls' authenticity has been confirmed by Richard Gombrich, a professor at the University of Washington in Seattle.

Salomon, a top scholar of the ancient Indian script that is used in the scrolls, is leading a project to identify them. He said the scrolls are older than anything previously discovered. The library said they date from the end of the 1st century or the early 2nd century.

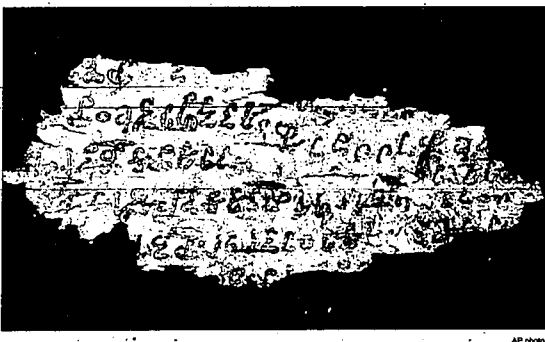

"They will allow scholars to get nearer to what Buddha said than ever before," said Graham Shaw, deputy director of the library's Oriental and India Office Collections.

But Salomon said they offer "no great shocks" — no major diversions from known Buddhist teachings.

The 60 fragments of about 25 texts from various parts of the Buddhist canon include Buddha's sermons, poems and treatises on the psychology of perception, the library said.

The library bought them from an undisclosed amount believed to be in the tens of thousands of dollars, with help from an anonymous donor.

"The scrolls are written in Gandhari, the language of the ancient region of Gandhara, an important center of early Buddhism with links to east Asia along the old silk route to China."

This scroll fragment contains some of the earliest known writings on the life and teachings of Buddha.

Shaw said little is known about the scrolls origin, except that they were probably found in Gandhara, an ancient region in Afghanistan. Their value, he said, is incalculable.

Buddha, born Siddhartha Gautama, taught that right-thinking and self-denial will enable the soul to reach Nirvana. He died in 486 B.C., and his teachings were initially passed on orally.

There are now more than 130 million Buddhists across the world.

Abortion, money worry religious hospitals in mergers

BOSTON (AP) — The religious principles that have guided Carney Hospital since it opened during the Civil War are proving to be a stumbling block in the current health care business climate.

The 133-year-old, Roman Catholic facility recently abandoned plans to merge with city-owned Quincy Hospital, primarily because the latter performs abortions said Quincy birth-control services.

As hospitals merge to cut costs and remain competitive, religious hospitals face the additional challenge of maintaining their identities.

"Most of these mergers are shotgun weddings or partnerships made in heaven, primarily because the latter CEO of Baptist Community Health in New Orleans. "Those relationships tend to unravel when the only basis for joining was the economic issue."

In 1984 there were about 5,759 community hospitals nationwide; that number dropped to 5,261 in 1993, according to the American Hospital Association. As religious hospitals seek to save themselves through mergers, they also must juggle a number of issues.

"I think it's a fact that there are certain services such as birth control that are contrary to Catholic teachings and that Catholic organizations are not allowed to provide," said Richard O'Brien, a spokesman for The Daughters of Charity National Health System-Northeast of St. Louis, which runs Carney Hospital.

Also, there are the values of the organizations and how they view their resources.

The Moline (Ill.) Public Hospital and Lutheran Hospital of Moline merged in 1989 and became United Medical Center. The facility then joined with Franciscan Medical Center in 1990 to become Trinity Medical Center.

Dr. Richard O'Brien, vice president of health sciences at Creighton University, a Jesuit school in Omaha, Neb., said he sees no problem when a religious hospital merges with a for-profit facility.

St. Joseph Hospital in Omaha remains its Catholic identity even though 74 percent of the hospital is owned by a for-profit system and 26 percent by Creighton University, he said.

But Steve Shinsky, associate vice president for corporate communications for Mercy Health Services in Farmington Hills, Mich., said he believes religious hospitals should have nothing to do with for-profit systems. The organization is affiliated with 38 nonprofit hospitals in Michigan and Iowa.

"I think fundamentally it runs counter to the mission of the institution. ... How do you value the assets of the nonprofits and protect their assets and protect the community when the nature of the for-profit is to pay the stockholders?" he asked.

Some say the for-profit systems are seeking an aura of legitimacy when they want to merge with a religious hospital.

One solution is to leave health care. Another solution is to merge with taxpayer-supported, nonprofit public hospitals, which brings the argument back to reproductive rights issues.

Rabbi says Lubavitcher leader left map for sect

Knight-Ridder News Service

PHILADELPHIA — Rabbi Adin Steinsaltz jokingly refers to himself as "a commuter between heaven and earth."

His admirers aren't 100 percent sure he's joking. The author of 58 books on physics, mysticism, his autobiography, Rabbi Menachem Steinsaltz is a giant in Jewish thought whom some compare to Maimonides and Rashi, the great medieval Jewish thinkers. In 1990, he was awarded the Israel Prize, that nation's highest award.

"But if future generations utter Steinsaltz's name in the same breath with Rashi and Maimonides, it will be for his translation of the Talmud, the ancient book of commentaries on Jewish law that is, in Judaism, second in importance only to the Torah.

His lucid, streamlined translations into Hebrew and English (a 13-volume English edition is published by Random House) have been hailed by scholars as the best in centuries.

The "Steinsaltz Talmud" has sold more than a million copies in Israel.

And when the Lubavitcher sect of Hasidic Judaism invited him to speak at the second anniversary of the death of its longtime spiritual leader, Rabbi Menachem Schneerson, close to 1,000 people came to the Hotel Atrium Bellevue.

Schneerson, known to Lubavitchers as the "rebbe," died in New York on June 12, 1994, at 92 after leading the Lubavitchers for 44 years.

Under his leadership, this small Eastern European sect virtually wiped out in the Holocaust — grew into a worldwide community. Based in Brooklyn, the Lubavitchers have created thousands of teaching centers around the world.

White-haired and white-bearded at 58, Steinsaltz looks about 75 but scampered up the steps to his Philadelphia office. He is a Lubavitcher and friend of the late rebbe.

Virtually all Lubavitchers believe Schneerson is still with them, spiritually, and a few believe he will return as "moshiach," the messiah who will usher in the divine era on Earth.

"Virtual friendship is not my idea of reality."

"Real flesh-and-blood

friends were what

I was looking for.

It took patience,

but I found a place where

I could make a difference."
