Sawtooth Forest sets restrictions

By William Brock
Times-News writer

STANLEY — In an effort to protect some of Idaho's most popular backcountry areas, Sawtooth National Forest officials have announced new restrictions affecting livestock and campfire use in the Sawtooth Wilderness and Boulder-White Cloud mountains.

The interior restrictions do not bar livestock from any trails, but they do limit backcountry parties to no more than 25 animals. Recent proposals to bar stock animals on some Sawtooth Wilderness trails have drawn vehement opposition;

'We don't want to solve one problem in one place only to create another problem somewhere else.'

— Bill LeVere, Sawtooth National Forest supervisor those proposals will be resolved when a permanent decision is made, probably in the fall.

Until then, the new restrictions are a temporary measure to prevent trail erosion and protect trees and other vegetation, said Sawtooth Forest Supervisor Bill LeVere.

"We know there's resource damage going on out there and, even though we're in a non-decision mode, we've got to do something" to protect Sawtooth Forest resources, LeVere said Friday.

Forest Service workers will try to educate backcountry users about the new restrictions, he said, "and we're not going to be heavy handed about it."

"Visitor use in the 217,088-acre Sawtooth Wilderness has more than doubled in the past decade and the upshot is more people, more trail erosion, more litter and a diminished sense of solitude. The problems are more acute in the Sawtooth Wilderness; but forest officials opted to impose restrictions on the Boulder-White Clouds to prevent displaced wilderness users from creating problems in other nearby areas.

"We don't want to solve one problem in one place only to create another problem somewhere else," LeVere said.

Hardware chain seeks Chapter 11 protection

The Times-News and The Associated Press

SEATTLE — Ernst Home Center Inc. announced Friday it is closing more than two dozen stores and filing for federal protection from creditors while it reorganizes and tries to recover from recent operating losses.

Ernst plans to close 25 of its 83 regional hardware chain said in a news release.

The chain, which opened its first store in downtown Seattle in 1993, has outlets in nine western states, including Idaho and Utah.

The stores targeted for closure were not disclosed.

"I can tell you they're pretty much scattered throughout the nine states," said Ernst spokesman Jim Fox.

The company was not identifying the stores because "the employees have not been informed yet and I think it would be very uncomfortable for them to hear it from some other source than us," Fox said.

Managers of the Twin Falls store declined to comment and referred all inquiries to Fox, at the corporate offices in Seattle. The Twin Falls store opened in September, 1994 and presently employs about 50 people, some of them on a part-time basis.

At 67,000 square feet, the Twin Falls store is one of the chain's biggest and is one of the chain's better performers.

In addition, he said, the closure plans have not yet been approved by U.S. Bankruptcy Court.

The retailer and its wholly owned subsidiary EDC Inc. each filed voluntary petitions for protection under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code, the release said. Ernst is a publicly held company.

"The restructuring will allow us to concentrate on the core group of stores that have historically been among our most profitable," said Hal Smith, Ernst president and chief executive officer.

"This decision was a very difficult step for us to take," he said, "but on balance this was the best course available to us."

The company has an $80 million in debt.

House invalidates gay marriages

Newsday

WASHINGTON — After an emotional debate tinged with political expediency, the House Friday approved legislation that would invalidate gay marriages under federal law, even if individual states sanction them.

The "Defense of Marriage Act" was approved on a 342-57 vote. Two members voted "present," in effect abstaining. Among those voting in favor of the measure were Idaho's two-member Republican House delegation, Mike Crapo and Helen Chenoweth.

The Senate is expected to follow the House's lead and approve the bill. President Clinton has said he would sign it, although White House spokesman Mike

McCurry charged that the legislation was nothing but "gay-baiting."

The bill was rushed through the House this year even though no states currently permit same-sex marriages. Pending court action in Hawaii could allow them but is unlikely to be resolved for several years.

"This is nothing more than election-year pandering," said Rep. Martin Meehan, D-Mass., who, coincidentally, was to be married Saturday in Massachusetts. "This will prevent or stop nothing, but it does effectively divide people in America."

The legislation would create a federal definition of marriage specifying it is between one man and one woman and defining "spouse" as a person of the opposite sex. The bill would continue the federal practice of making same-sex couples ineligible for spousal benefits under Social Security, Medicare and other federal programs.

Rep. Steve Gunderson, R-Wis., one of three openly gay members of Congress, spoke to a hushed chamber in personal terms.

"Why are we so mean?" he asked. "Why shouldn't my partner of 13 years be entitled to the same health insurance and survivor benefits that some of my colleagues around here with second and third wives are able to give them?"

Gunderson did not name names, but Rep. Bob Barr, R-Ga., prime sponsor of the marriage bill, is in his third marriage.

Grain supply shrinks, food costs up

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — It's costing more to bring home the bacon — not to mention the milk, butter and bread.

And, perhaps soon, fruits and beef. Four years of relatively low food prices have come to a halt. Hot, dry weather in farm country and heavy foreign demand keep holding down supplies of American grain and other foods, thus raising prices.

Price watchers disagree over the amount, but some milk of possible 4 percent and 5 percent jumps next year. The past four years, increases have stayed well below 3 percent.

Reports Friday from the government held little promise that shortages will end despite improvements in the wheat harvest. The Labor Department said wholesale food prices took their biggest leap in more than six years in June, with fruits and red meat the cause.

Even beef prices, in a trough, are starting to push up after steps by the Clinton administration and ranchers to boost record-low cattle prices.

Store prices have definitely taken off. Bread, butter, bacon and milk all cost more than last year. Some 2 percent milk that sold for $2 a gallon last year is pushing $3 in some markets.

Shoppers like Joyce Ford say they've noticed. "It's expensive," the Washington resident.

Grow your own new heart valve

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Dr. Richard Hopkins pulls the pink ring of tissue out of a bubbling vat and slices it open to reveal a heart valve's delicate leaflets.

Hopkins is creating a way for people to literally grow new heart valves when their own give out — hoping one day to offer thousands of Americans an alternative to plastic or animal valves that work less well and wear out.

"This sounds a little like Michael Crichton... it's pretty science-fiction to people," acknowledges Hopkins, Brown University's new chief of cardiovascular surgery. "But we have all the fundamental knowledge to do this."

Over 200,000 people, including 60,000 Americans, get new heart valves each year when their own harden and fail because of disease, congenital defects or aging.

Artificial valves, or replacements from pigs or occasionally human cadavers, work well for many, but these valves cannot grow or repair themselves. And mechanical valves require patients to take blood thinners every day.

Idaho weather summary

Most Friday afternoon temperatures were a few degrees warmer than on Thursday across the state. Readings ranged from the upper 80s to the lower 90s in the lower valleys and west to higher valleys. The warmest reported location at mid-afternoon was Mountain Home at 95 degrees and coolest was Soda Springs with 82 degrees. Winds were generally light and there were no reports of rainfall.

Today's weather fact

July 3 marked the first day of "the dog days of summer." The term came from the Romans, who believed the hot weather was from heat given off by Sirius, the Dog Star, the brightest star in the sky. We know now, of course, that the heat comes from the sun and from the ground and buildings, which have been soaking-up the sun's warmth for the past couple of months. These objects continue to give off heat even when the sun sets. The "dog days of summer" last through Aug. 11.

Big, bad Bertha belts Carolina coastal islands

The Associated Press

Hurricane Bertha belted the Carolina coast Friday with powerful winds that smashed windows and ripped apart roofs. Bertha weakened, then revived over the Gulf Stream, and its top sustained winds grew to 105 mph at its center as it made landfall on North Carolina's barrier islands. By late Friday, the storm had stalled over land and its winds weakened to 85 mph. More than 186,000 customers were without power in the Carolinas. Bertha was pushing possible storm surges of 7 to 9 feet and dumping up to 5 inches of rain, quickly flooding low-lying areas. Hurricane conditions stretched from the Carolinas to southeastern Virginia. Wind gusts reaching 90-130 mph, some tornadoes and local rainfall amounts of 3 to 9 inches were possible near the coast from the Charleston, S.C., area to Norfolk, Va.

Elsewhere rain continued to fall across Oklahoma, Arkansas and Texas. Central portions of Oklahoma were plagued by flash flooding early Friday. Oklahoma City recorded 1.08 inches of rain in the 24 hours ending Friday morning, while McAlester, Okla., got 1.60 and Fort Smith, Ark., 1.10. A low pressure system moved across Minnesota and into northwestern Wisconsin Friday, bringing rain showers.

In the Ohio and Tennessee valleys, fair weather was the norm with a few light showers popping up along a trough in Indiana and Kentucky. Across the West, a stalled cold front brought another chance of hail and tornadoes across northeastern Colorado. Scattered showers fell across New Mexico and Arizona. The Pacific Northwest baked Friday with temperatures over the century mark across sections of Oregon. The mercury reached 90 in Seattle.

Fire danger

The fire danger index for public lands in south central Idaho is high. For forest lands: High. For range lands: Very high.

Sawtooth

Some of the restrictions have been in force in the Sawtooth Wilderness for more than a decade, but are now being extended to the Boulder-White Clouds. Among other things, they:

- Limit backcountry parties to no more than 20 people.
- Ban the practice of "short-cutting" trail switchbacks - on foot or with stock animals.
- Ban stock animals - including horses, mules, llamas, or anything else that carries humans or cargo - from being tethered within 100 feet of open water.
- Ban campfires within 200 yards of any lake in the Pettit Lake, Goat, Alpine Lakes and Scenic creek drainages.
- Ban campfires within 200 yards of specified lakes. The Sawtooth Wilderness has had a 100-yard limit for more than a decade, but forest officials have doubled the distance to protect the area's lakes.

In the Sawtooth Wilderness, the 200-yard restriction applies to Sawtooth, Alpine, Spoleback, Alpine and Goat lakes. In the Boulder-White Clouds, the 200-yard restriction applies to Cirque, Cove, Sapphire, Sheep, Slide, Tin Cup, Gungahoe, Four Lakes, Basin, Shallow, Castle and Chamberlain lakes. The campfire restrictions are aimed at keeping people from stripping all wood - dead or alive - away from fragile lake areas, LeVere said. Some areas are "totally devoid of dead and downed materials, so people are beginning to gather live trees and shrubs," which is unacceptable, he said. Perhaps the biggest new stock restriction is one that bars animals from being tethered to live trees for more than an hour at a time. The idea is to protect tree roots from being trampled, or bark from being rubbed off, LeVere said, adding that stock owners should picket their animals or erect a debtor-in-possession financial commitment from Congress Financial Inc. (Northwest), subject to U.S. Bankruptcy Court approval. The money will be used to meet inventory needs and for working capital. The loan would "allow us to focus on serving our loyal customers," Smith said. "Daily operations and transaction which occur in the ordinary course of business will continue as usual." Ernst also will move to streamline its operations, reduce overhead and renegotiate or cancel problem leases, the release said. Inventory from the shuttered stores will be transferred to other stores or sold, and affected employees reassigned when possible. Besides Utah, Ernst operates in Washington, Oregon, California, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, Colorado and Wyoming. Under Chapter 11, a company is freed from the threat of creditors' lawsuit while it reorganizes its finances. Its reorganization plan must be accepted by a majority of its creditors. Unless the court rules otherwise, the company remains in control of the business and its assets.

Food

Added Anna Pavlova, also buying food in downtown Washington: "It's a little bit in everything. But when you add it up it's pretty bad." Farm prices usually have little to do with store prices. But farm-level prices normally don't rise nearly 20 percent over a year, as they did in June. Corn that brought $2.50 a bushel in June 1995 brought $4.19 this year. A bushel of wheat rose from $3.84 to $5.31. High corn costs and hot, dry weather mean less milk. The Agriculture Department on Friday lowered its estimates for milk production and said prices should go up.

Big supermarket chains like The Kroger Co. have already seen the increase. The basic raw milk price should reach $1.29 a gallon this year, up from about $1 a year ago, said John Hitchell, in charge of buying milk for Kroger. "In almost all markets where we do business, milk production is down from a year ago," Hitchell said.

Taxpayer 'Bill of Rights' goes to Clinton

WASHINGTON (AP) — A "Taxpayer Bill of Rights" allowing Americans to sue for wrongdoings and providing other protections against IRS abuse is on its way to President Clinton after passage by Congress.

The Senate approved the bill by voice vote Thursday, with Democrats and Republicans reaching agreement on a day otherwise marked by partisan bickering and gridlock.

The popular measure passed the House in April, 425-0, and is backed by the Clinton administration.

It allows taxpayers to sue the Internal Revenue Service for up to $1 million for reckless collections — 10 times the current $100,000 cap on such lawsuits.

Taxpayers also would get the right to sue anyone filing a false information return, such as a Form 1099 or Form W2. In some cases, for example, contractors have filed incorrect forms for workers they have hired, resulting in the workers being assessed unjustified back taxes.

Under the bill, the IRS would have to prove in such disputes that the information it received was correct.

"When an average of 25 percent of one's earnings goes to the federal government instead of into one's own bank account, the last thing hardworking Americans deserve is an unwarranted hassle from the IRS," said Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, a co-author of the legislation. "This bill works to correct inequities in the federal tax collection system."

Grassley noted that the measure would establish an independent taxpayers' advocate at the IRS to assist consumers in dealing with the agency. The advocate would have expanded powers to require the IRS to issue refund checks and meet deadlines in performing tasks for taxpayers.

The bill also would:

- Require the IRS to notify former spouses when it begins action to collect jointly owed back taxes from the other ex-spouse.
- Make it easier for taxpayers who win lawsuits against the IRS to obtain reimbursement of legal fees and raise the cap on reimbursement from $75 to $110 an hour.
- Permit the use of private delivery services, in addition to the Postal Service, to deliver tax returns and other documents to the IRS.

- Require the IRS to give taxpayers 30 days' notice before canceling or ending installment agreements for paying taxes, interest and penalties.
- Make it easier for the IRS to remove liens from taxpayers' property and accept compromise offers to settle delinquent tax accounts.
- Require the IRS to notify tax-players annually of overdue taxes, rather than just allow penalties and interest to accumulate without notice, and contact taxpayers with in 60 days when it receives a payment that can't match with a particular account.

The legislation was previously passed by the House and Senate in December as part of a massive balanced-budget and tax-cut bill vetoed by Clinton.

Living on borrowed time, thin hope

Boy's best chance for survival is drug-addict mom

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Watching television from his crib, 2-year-old Joey Mancini wiggles his toes and squeals along with the characters from "The Lion King."

"Hakuna matata," they sing together. "It means no worries for the rest of your days."

What the toddler doesn't know is that his worries are great.

Joey's crib is in Children's Hospital, where he is being treated for a rare blood disease.

His best hope for a life-saving bone marrow transplant is his cocaine-addicted mother, a woman who police say traded the family car for drugs last month.

Since being arrested June 6 for endangering a child's welfare, a misdemeanor that carries a penalty of up to a year in jail, Gina Mancini has been in a rehabilitation center, getting treated for her addiction.

At a hearing Friday, city court Judge Robert Russell adjourned Mrs. Mancini's case for two months to see whether she can stay off cocaine.

Doctors say the 25-year-old woman could only donate her bone marrow if her child—if she remains drug-free for a year—can ensure she doesn't have any infections that can result from drug use.

But it's uncertain Joey can survive that long, and the boy's grandmother is begging people to get tested to see if their bone marrow matches the child's.

Gina Mancini is the only person whose bone marrow matches her son's.

Joey's father's marrow did not match, and he has no brothers or sisters.

"If Gina does clean up, great, but I don't have much faith in anything right now. Look at any kid in this hospital — why?

Why are they here?" said Patricia Mancini as she watched her grandson in his crib.

She often looks after Joey and takes him to his numerous doctors' appointments.

"The bottom line is Joey will die if he doesn't get a bone marrow transplant," she said.

Joey suffers from Wiskott-Aldrich syndrome, a disorder that strikes just seven or eight baby boys a year in the United States. Girls do not get the disease.

Wiskott-Aldrich damages the blood's platelets, which prevents clotting and makes patients extremely vulnerable to bleeding to death; suppresses the immune system, making patients susceptible to common infections; and causes skin rashes.

Thirty years ago the disease was usually fatal, but today bone marrow transplants can cure Wiskott-Aldrich, particularly when siblings donate the tissue, said Dr. Michael Blaese, an expert who has worked on Joey's case.

The lives of patients can also be extended through various therapies to treat the symptoms. "We still lose children in infancy and childhood and adolescence," Blaese said.

"But there have been advances made which can very significantly help the outlook for patients."

Joey has been admitted to the hospital 20 times in his short life for stays of up to 18 days.

He must wear what looks like a modified bike helmet to protect him from head injuries.

Still, the brown-eyed boy seems cheerful and unaware of his situation.

His mother became addicted to crack in the last year because she could not cope with her son's illness, Patricia Mancini believes.

She still is willing to be a bone marrow donor.

After "bouncing in and out of a drug treatment program, Gina's husband, Joseph Mancini, allowed her to return home on the condition that she stay away from drugs.

But police say she left the house on June 6 with the family car and a videotape recorder, which she traded for crack.

When officers arrested her outside a drug house, she was about to do the same thing with a child car seat.

Joseph Mancini, a grocer who declined to be interviewed, called police and asked them to arrest his wife.

Whitewater banker says Clinton didn't favor him

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — An Arkansas banker accused of Whitewater-related crimes dismissed a prosecution claim that he broke the law to win a state job from Bill Clinton as "the most ridiculous thing I ever heard."

Herby Branscum Jr., one of two bankers on trial in federal court, testified Friday that he had no need to curry favor with a politician he had known and supported for 22 years.

Branscum was appointed by then-Gov. Clinton to the influential Arkansas Highway Commission in January 1991. But from the witness chair, he painted a picture for jurors of two men with a warm relationship that began with Clinton's 1974 losing race for Congress.

He watched with a big smile as his lawyer showed jurors a photograph of a youthful Clinton after that race, with a scribbled inscription that said: "To Herby, with deep gratitude for your fine help which will yet find a better reward."

"He's been in my home. I know him well enough to know you couldn't ingratiate yourself with him," testified the former Arkansas Democratic chairman, who said he has donated his own money, raised funds from others, and worked in the campaigns of the president since the congressional race.

Addressing their theory in opening arguments, prosecutors working for Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr contended that Branscum and co-defendant Robert M. Hill sought to win Clinton's favor, to obtain state appointments.

ValuJet plane hit by truck

ATLANTA (AP) — Even with its fleet grounded, a ValuJet plane was in an accident Friday.

A delivery truck slammed into the left wing of a ValuJet DC-9 parked at a gate at Hartsfield Atlanta International Airport.

"There appears to have been quite an impact," said ValuJet spokeswoman Marcia Scott.

The accident was described as a minor fender-bender by airport officials.

The truck driver struck the plane about 5 feet in from the wing tip. The driver was taken to a hospital but was not seriously injured.

Ex-defense official gets prison term

WASHINGTON — A former Pentagon intelligence official was sentenced Friday to three years and a month in prison and ordered to repay $200,732 for hiring his unqualified girlfriend as a consultant on electronic warfare.

U.S. District Judge John Garrett Penn imposed the sentence on William D. Lanning, who had been a senior program manager with the Defense Intelligence Agency. The woman, Kay Winters, now known as Catherine Dushene, pleaded guilty to her role in the scheme and testified against Lanning at his trial.

Lanning, 63, of northern Virginia, arranged in 1989 for Winters to be hired as a $500-a-day consultant to a highly technical computer-based electronic warfare project Lanning was directing for the defense agency, the grand jury charged.

FCC still at impasse on programming

WASHINGTON — The latest impasse over a government plan to boost the amount and quality of educational television for children shows no signs of easing up.

Reed Hundt, chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, told reporters Friday that he will keep working to get a majority of the agency's four commissioners to support a plan that would require stations to air at least three hours of educational shows for children each week.

Study: S&L bailout costs much higher

WASHINGTON — A new congressional study puts the price tag of the savings and loan debacle at $480.9 billion, much higher than previous estimates of the government bailout.

Friday's General Accounting Office study arrives at the new figure by calculating indirect costs, such as the interest on government spending for the thrift rescue in the 1980s and early 1990s.

"It was very difficult from onset to determine the cost of the S&L bailout," said Dimitri Papadimitriou, executive director of The Jerome Levy Economics Institute. "I'm not surprised the numbers are as high as they are."

Sen. Nunn honored for defense service

WASHINGTON — For 24 years, Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., has made America's defense capabilities the focus of his legislative career.

On Friday, the military thanked the retiring senator with a Department of Defense Medal for Distinguished Public Service. Defense Secretary William Perry pinned the award to Nunn's lapel during an Armed Forces Full Honor Ceremony on a parade field at the Pentagon.

Nunn, who will leave office at the end of the year, has been a member of the Senate Armed Services Committee since he joined the Senate in 1973. He served as chairman from 1987 through 1994, and is now the panel's ranking Democrat.

Musician found dead of drug overdose

NEW YORK — A backup musician with the alternative rock group Smashing Pumpkins was found dead in a hotel room of an apparent heroin overdose Friday, and the group's drummer, Jimmy Chamberlin, was charged with heroin possession.

Chamberlin was with keyboard player Jonathan Melvoin when he overdosed, a police source who spoke on the condition of anonymity told The Associated Press. Police confirmed the arrest but did not immediately confirm the source's account.

Dole backs GOP abortion platform

Dole

WASHINGTON (AP) — Trying to head off a divisive convention fight, Bob Dole Friday abandoned an effort to soften the party's anti-abortion plank and instead proposed new "tolerance" language elsewhere in the platform.

The new language, recognizing a diversity of GOP viewpoints, would appear once in the platform's introduction and again in a new "Tolerance Plank."

"The Republican Party should maintain its commitment to protecting the unborn. We are also a party that is tolerant of those who do not share our view on every issue," the prospective GOP presidential nominee said.

The move appeared broadly acceptable to a wide cross section of Republicans, judging from early reviews, although it drew fire from the most outspoken on both sides of the issue.

While most anti-abortion groups welcomed the new Dole language, it drew scathing fire from renegade Republican Pat Buchanan.

Dole said the new language reflected an agreement with Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., chairman of the party's Platform Committee and a longtime outspoken abortion opponent.

Hyde praised the "good-faith" effort to bridge internal GOP differences. "I will include this language in the draft document that will go to San Diego," Hyde said, referring to next month's GOP convention.

Although Hyde's panel still must vote on the language in advance of the convention, the fact that both Hyde and Dole are embracing it all but assures its acceptance.

The new GOP plan came a day after Democrats moved to smoothly bridge their own internal differences on the issue.

Democratic platform writers in Kansas City produced a draft declaring abortion rights a "fundamental constitutional liberty" while also recognizing "the individual conscience of each American on this difficult issue."

In an overture to the religious right, the GOP plan would leave intact the strict language against all abortions contained in the abortion plank itself, a mainstay of GOP platforms since 1984.

It also adds to the abortion plank a condemnation of President Clinton's veto of legislation to ban certain late-term abortions.

Dole had earlier sought to include the so-called tolerance language in the anti-abortion plank itself. Anti-abortion delegates to the convention threatened a floor fight if Dole had stayed on such a course.

Ralph Reed, director of the Christian Coalition, "wholeheartedly and unreservedly" applauded the agreement and asserted: "We anticipate no fireworks or floor fights at the Republican Convention over the abortion issue."

However, Buchanan's sister and campaign manager, Bay Buchanan, called the tolerance plank "unacceptable as written."

"Abortion is not an issue of 'personal conscience' as this plank states. It is a matter of morality, or right and wrong, life and death." She said if the plank were not changed, "we will fight to alter it or to replace it."

Dole's move also angered some moderate Republicans who favor abortion rights and had wanted to scrap the anti-abortion language altogether.

Ann Stone, a director of the Republican for Choice Political Action Committee, likened putting the tolerance language at the end of the platform to the caboose on a train.

"Don't insult us by putting us in the caboose," she said. Stone called the new language "a disaster" and said the religious right "gor everything they wanted" at the Republican

Radio station broadcasts time-accurate signals

WASHINGTON (AP) — No more VCRs blinking 12:00 all the time. No more resetting all the clocks after a power failure.

Those are the promises — or is that threats — of the upgrade planned for radio station WVVVB in Colorado.

Operated by the National Institute of Standards and Technology, WVVVB broadcasts standard time and frequency signals used by broadcasters, government agencies, scientists and others to keep exact time.

WVVVB time signals are accurate to within a few hundredths of a second, the Commerce Department agency reports.

Currently, large antennas are needed to receive the signals at points far from the transmitter. But NIST says the signal will be easily available nationwide, thanks to a four-fold increase in power that comes from some special equipment the Navy is providing.

"This will make it possible to build automatic, WVVVB-controlled clocks into all kinds of appliances, even watches. Resetting clocks all over your house after power outages could become a thing of the past," said Don Sullivan, chief of the agency's Time and Frequency Division.

Company charged with fixing prices

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department charged Ira Green Inc. on Friday with scheming to fix prices for four years on military insignia sold to U.S. servicemen and women at bases throughout this country and abroad.

The one-count felony charge of violating the Sherman Antitrust Act was filed in U.S. District Court in Philadelphia as a criminal information. The filing of an information by federal prosecutors rather than a grand jury indictment usually means the defendant has agreed to plead guilty, but the court action was scheduled immediately.

Admitted bandit found dead in jail

COVINGTON, Ky. — A member of a Midwest bank robbery gang hanged himself in his cell Friday, nine days after he pleaded guilty to 19 holdups in seven states.

Richard Guthrie, 38, was awaiting sentencing for holdups during which he and members of the "Mid-Western Bank Bandits" wore FBI logos and held the agency in newspapers.

Prosecutors agreed to recommend Guthrie serve no more than 30 years in prison for the 1994 and 1995 robberies if he testified against three other men awaiting trial.

Guthrie, who pleaded guilty July 3, hanged himself with a bedsheet and left two notes, one to his public defender and the other to his brother, the U.S. attorney's office said.

Teacher's loan returns big dividends

ST. JOSEPH, Mo. — Henry Clay never forgot the teacher who lent him $35 when he was a schoolboy nearly 70 years ago. Now, students or his alma mater will reap dividends from the loan.

Clay and his wife, Elsie, have given a stock gift valued at $260,000 to Benton High School in memory of teacher Laura Jessie Lomax.

The Clays, now living in California, want the gift to go toward helping Benton graduates pay for college, Principal Joyce Edwards said Thursday.

"By sharing your good fortune with our children, you are continuing the (school's) tradition of caring for others," she wrote to Clay.

Tests show helicopter-pilot was drunk

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio — A helicopter pilot with a history of drunken driving was legally drunk when his helicopter crashed near a campground, killing himself and four passengers.

State police said David Faunthun, 49, of Canton, had a blood alcohol reading of 0.158 percent when the helicopter crashed Monday, according to the coroner's preliminary toxicology reports.

No one on the ground was hurt when the helicopter crashed in a farm field shortly after taking off from Salem Airport, about 20 miles southwest of Youngstown.

Black congressman decides not to run

BATON ROUGE, La. — Rep. Cleo Fields, whose majority black district was dismantled by a federal court, ruled out running for the Senate or the House Friday and signaled his interest in a Clinton administration job.

His comments at a news conference reassured Democrats they would not experience a repeat of the 1995 governor's race, in which Fields led a pack of Democrats to get into a runoff where he lost by a landslide.

The defeat of Fields last year by conservative Republican Mike Foster fulfilled predictions by political analysts that a black candidate could not win a statewide election in Louisiana.

Lamm says he can beat Ross Perot

DENVER (AP) — Offering himself as a worthy alternative to Ross Perot, former Colorado Gov. Richard Lamm said Friday he's talked with many Reform Party petition circulators who don't want Perot for president.

Lamm, who announced his bid for the Reform Party nomination on Tuesday, put his chances at 50-50 in the race and admitted there might be some "bravado" even in those odds.

"The most common comment I get is: 'I'll sign your petition, and I don't want Ross Perot for president,'" Lamm said. "They think he's come up with some good ideas, but they realize he is not the person to carry it to the next step."

Perot signaled for the first time this week that he would contest Lamm for the Reform Party nomination.

Lamm, appearing at a conference on managed health care, appeared fatigued but was nevertheless upbeat about his low-budget campaign.

"I think you can run a grassroots campaign for president, but all the precedent is against me," he said. "People have tried it before — Jerry Brown, for example."

Teacher cleared of fraud seeks job

BOSTON (AP) — A scientist whose work on mouse immune systems thrust her into a 10-year dispute over whether she had faked her results has set about to regain her teaching post and government grants.

But although Thoroza Imanishi-Kari was exonerated last month by a federal appeals judge, she fears she may never recover her reputation.

"I'm sure there will always be people who still believe I'm guilty," said Imanishi-Kari, now a research associate at the Tufts University medical school. "I don't care. If I cared, I would be dead by now."

After some thought, she added: "I do care. But there is nothing I can do about it."

Imanishi-Kari, 52, was a Massachusetts Institute of Technology professor when her work was published in the journal Cell in 1986. It indicated that introducing foreign genes in mouse cells spurred the production of a variety of antibodies, which protect the body from bacteria and viruses.

Other honors, including the Nobel Prize-winning biologist David Baltimore, speculated that the foreign genes encouraged the host animal's immune system to produce antibodies that otherwise would have occurred in smaller numbers, or not at all, in adult mice.

The finding raised the prospect that specific genes could be introduced as a way of producing antibodies to protect the body from specific viruses. That possibility had personal significance to Imanishi-Kari, who lost a sister to the genetic disease lupus and suffers herself from the disease.

But Imanishi-Kari's research was questioned by a laboratory assistant, Margot O'Toole, who could not obtain the same results when she repeated the experiment. Even before the charges were made, MIT had informed Imanishi-Kari that she wouldn't get a permanent place on the faculty, and Tufts had offered her a job.

O'Toole's charges began a series of investigations by MIT, Tufts and the National Institutes of Health, which at first found Imanishi-Kari innocent of fraud.

Still, "the perception remained in the public that there were guilty people here," said Henry Wurtis, director of the immunology program at the Tufts School of Graduate Biomedical Sciences and an Imanishi-Kari supporter. "The real question is, why did people believe that? Why did this have a 10-year run?"

He said one reason is that the public misunderstands the process of science, which draws a distinction between fact and interpretation.

"As scientists, we take as a fact something today because of what we view as the evidence we have available to us," Wurtis said.

"Tomorrow, the notion of what the truth is may change as other evidence accumulates. That doesn't mean that we were lied to or defrauded the day before."

Treasury fire traced to worker's propane torch

WASHINGTON (AP) — A multi-million-dollar fire at the historic Treasury building was caused by workers using a propane torch to repair the roof, officials said Friday. Treasury spokesman Howard Schloss said that an investigation had determined that the June 26 blaze was begun accidentally by workers on the roof.

Non-majors must be taught math, science

WASHINGTON (AP) — College math and science instructors need to engage all undergraduates, not just those destined to become researchers and engineers, says National Science Foundation report issued Friday.

Math, science, engineering and technology departments on campus should reward teachers who find ways to help students comprehend material, not just answer test questions correctly, according to the report.

"We need to revise the culture a little bit in the leading colleges and universities so that teaching and research are equally valued in the appointment and promotion process," says Donald Kennedy, chairman of the National Research Council's center for science, mathematics and engineering education.

Eric Mazur, who teaches an introductory physics course at Harvard University, thought he was doing a good job until he gave students an informal test, asking them questions that applied physics to daily life.

Shocked when his students did poorly, Mazur revamped his teaching style. Instead of lecturing 250 students, Mazur told them to read his lecture notes before class and come prepared to discuss a physics question.

The students first write down their answer to the question. Then they are told to defend it in a discussion with other classmates. Students with the right answer end up "teaching" those who got it wrong.

Guidelines issued for Iraqi oil

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. oil companies that want to compete for purchases of Iraqi oil can do so under guidelines released Friday by the Treasury Department.

Officials said the department's Office of Foreign Assets Control would issue licenses that will allow U.S. companies to import the oil into the United States if they win contracts to be awarded through the United Nations.

The U.N. Security Council last year adopted a resolution that allows Iraq to sell $2 billion worth of oil each six months. The money is to be placed in an account administered by the U.N. for the purpose of purchasing food and other humanitarian aid to help alleviate severe economic conditions inside Iraq.

Iraq had been barred from selling oil under U.N. sanctions imposed after it invaded Kuwait in 1990, touching off the Gulf War.

Give a gift to America on her birthday

Tell the truth — after the last fireworks exploded and the last "oohs" and "aahs" have been uttered and aahed, doesn't the traditional Fourth of July celebration leave you feeling just a little ... oh, I don't know ... empty?

I know it does for me. Not that I haven't tried to fill the void: fried chicken, parades, backyard barbecues, band concerts in the park, homemade ice cream, baseball, apple pie, historical pageants, frosty mugs of root beer and, of course, more fireworks than you can shake a sparkler at. I've enjoyed it all — especially the ending part. But for years, I haven't been able to shake the feeling that there's something missing from the way we observe America's birthday.

Joseph Walker ValueSpeak

Which, come to think of it, might be part of the problem right there. The Fourth of July is essentially a national birthday party, right? So ... where are the presents? On my birthday, I get presents. On other birthdays, I give presents. The getting and the giving are part of what makes those special days so ... well, special.

But the Fourth of July isn't about getting or giving as much as it is about doing. And going. And seeing. And eating. All of which are wonderful pastimes. But a birthday party? No way — at least not unless there are presents involved, too.

So I'm proposing that we establish a new tradition of giving on the Fourth of July. Not to each other, but to the birthday party itself. And just what do you give a 220-year-old democracy on her birthday? Well, I've been giving the matter some thought, and here are five simple possibilities you may want to consider for your First Annual Birthday Present to America:

1. Register to vote. And then prepare yourself to cast that vote responsibly. Study the issues and the candidates and support those that best represent your values. And if there isn't anyone running for office that you are excited about supporting ...

2. Run for office yourself. While it may be too late to enter the campaign this year, it's never too early to start the ball rolling toward the next election. If you can see things that need fixing and you aren't sure anyone else can get the job done, get involved. You can make a difference — for yourself and others.

3. Give the old girl a face lift. Sure, she'll always be "America the Beautiful." But she's 220 years old — she can use a cosmetic tune-up. Look around you — isn't there a stretch of highway that needs to be de-littered or a playground that needs to be cleaned up or some graffiti-filled walls that need to be repainted? We may not be able to eliminate urban — and suburban — blight in one weekend, but we can put a shine on our little corner of the country.

Be nice. When it comes right down to it, your mom was right: niceness counts. As simplistic as it sounds, many of America's most disturbing social concerns would be repaired if everyone would just be nice to each other. Happiness and friendliness are contagious, and you'll be giving America a great gift if you become a carrier. While it's true that kindness alone won't solve all our problems, it'll make dealing with them much more pleasant. For all of us.

5. Volunteer. One of the great things about America is activism. Whether you're concerned about drugs, pornography or violence in the streets, there are organizations out there trying to help. So instead of wringing your hands over what's wrong with America, get involved with what's right. The way I see it, no matter how much we pray for God to bless America, when it comes right down to it, he's usually going to answer those prayers through us.

Which sort of makes you God's birthday present to America, and how can anybody feel empty of the Fourth of July knowing that?

Gospel singer, bronc rider visits Jerome

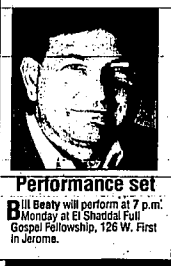

The Times-News

JEROME — Nashville recording artist Bill Beatty, raised on an Oklahoma cattle ranch, has always stayed close to his roots — and to his faith. Beatty accepted Jesus Christ as his Savior when he was 6, he said. He also developed another love — of rodeo — at a similarly early age.

Eventually, he became a bronc and bull rider and the International Country Gospel Music Association Entertainer of the Year.

Beatty won his entertainer award in 1993. To date, he has written and recorded five albums of Christian country music.

He holds a master's degree from Southwestern Oklahoma State University and was a high school teacher and basketball coach for 14 years. In his Oklahoma and Texas school systems, he began several Fellowship of Christian Athletes chapters. He married in 1973 and is now the father of three children.

Bill Beatty will perform at 7 p.m. Monday at St. Shaud's Full Gospel Fellowship, 126 W. First in Jerome.

These days, Beatty performs concerts and appears on TV shows throughout the country. During his concerts, he shares his personal Christian testimony.

Faith of the Fathers

Long among the most devout Catholics, times are changing for Idaho's Basques

By Denise Turner Times-News writer

JEROME — Inigo Echanove always wanted to be a monk. It took him 42 years to get there.

Echanove was raised in Bilbao in northern Spain — Basque country. Like most of the people he knew, he came from a family of strong Catholics. That's just the way it was back then.

Echanove served in the army under Gen. Francisco Franco, the iron-fisted Spanish dictator who ruled the country from 1938 until his death in 1975. Franco, who resented the Basques' loyalty to the elected Spanish government that he overthrew during the Spanish Civil War, abolished many of the civil rights of Basques and tried to suppress their language.

In 1974, Echanove immigrated to the United States and got a job as a shepherd in Hagerman. He brought with him his desire to serve his church.

"Since my childhood, I have had a (religious) vocation," said Echanove. "I've always had a vision of a monk."

But he would not leave the family farm to follow his calling. "When I got my card and established residency in the United States, I said, 'Forget it, sheep,'" Echanove, who never married, became

Mormon businessmen, educators acquire Southern Virginia College

The Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — Like the children of so many Mormon families, Roger Barrus' daughter looked forward to moving from her hometown in Virginia to attend a church-owned school in the West.

She had the grades and her test scores were good, plus her parents liked the idea of a school that promoted strong values and religious principles.

But because of a mix-up with her transcripts and rigorous enrollment standards, she was denied entry to Brigham Young University in Provo and Ricks College in Rexburg.

"She was devastated," Barrus said. "It's really hard, you know, when kids think there are no other alternatives than those two schools out there."

So Barrus came up with a third option. He and a group of Mormon businessmen and educators have acquired Southern Virginia College — a two-year private women's college — that they plan to turn into a four-year, co-ed school with a BYU-like honor code and an emphasis on moral and spiritual development.

It's a big change for the 130-year-old college, nestled at the edge of a forest in Buena Vista, Va., a school known for the quality of its writing and equestrian programs.

College in Virginia and Southern Virginia's new pro- and academic dean. "But it's not just LDS kids who want to come to a campus environment that supports religious principles."

Toby Anderson, a church-employed social worker and the school's new dean of students, said the goal is to enroll 400 students this fall. He already has received nearly 300 requests for application, mostly from Virginia-area Mormons.

"I am certain that prayers have been offered up for multiple decades that the church would become part of bringing higher education to the East Coast," he said. "This is a nonsectarian school, but we certainly will have a very large LDS influence."

Acquiring the school first crossed Barrus' mind when his former president, John Ripley, told him Southern Virginia was closing because it had lost its accreditation due to long-term debt of $4.5 million.

Barrus, a second-cousin in-law of the Chesterfield, Va., LDS stake, then called his stake president, Glade Knight, "who happens to be a property management-development guy" and coincidentally had been trying to find an eastern college congenial to Mormon students.

"The way that the great human resource manager above has orchestrated this is just incredible," said Anderson.

The new managers will assume the school's debt, but do not plan to raise the $11,500 yearly tuition or the $6,000 for fees, room and board. Instead, they hope to raise $50 million over five years from corporate sponsors and individuals.

"To me, it was a perfect fit," said Ripley. Please see COLLEGE/A10

Keep love of God as 'main thing'

Editor's note: The following comments were written by the Rev. Bob Stebe, commissioner to the 20th General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (USA) during the church's gathering last week in Albuquerque, N.M.

The Rev. Bob Stebe

It is Thursday morning at the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (USA) in Albuquerque, N.M. We have worshipped together, prayed together and celebrated the good work our church has done in ministry and mission in the name of Jesus Christ. Our moderator, the Rev. Dr. John Buchanan of the Fourth Presbyterian Church in Chicago, is conducting this assembly in a spirit of family commitment, one another under the banner of the love and common faith. Our desire here is to, in the words of one of our worship preachers, Frank Hamilton, "Keep the main thing the main thing." The main thing is not found in our liturgies and issues that those outside the church wish to make the focal point. The main thing is the love and grace of God in Jesus Christ that is far bigger than our issues and our differences. That is what we are discovering in the celebrations and the deliberations. May our visible witness be seen, not by decisions made by a handful of commissioners from across the country, but by the loving hands of Christ's disciples along the street.

The Rev. Bob Stebe is pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Jerome.

Buddhism finds refuge in California

STEWARTS POINT, Calif. (AP) — Like the pioneers who forged their way west to the sparkling promise of the Pacific, Tibetan Buddhism has found a refuge on a windswept outpost of California's North Coast.

Perched on what was once an overgrazed meadow, the Odyian Buddhist Center — billed as the largest Tibetan Buddhist Center in the Western Hemisphere — is a towering monument to the ancient religion, looking down over dark green firs to the endless sea.

On a clear day, the colors are dazzling — copper-plated domes burnished under an azure sky, formal gardens glowing a vivid emerald and a 113-foot gold-leafed monument brilliant as its midday sun.

Sounds emphasize the calm — the delicate chime of bells strung overhead, the snap of prayer flags billowing in the wind, the solitary cry of a bird wheeling its way to the sea.

The crew who helped create the fabulous temple see more than a piece of the Far East imported to the stunning vistas of the California coast.

"It's the phoenix rising from the ashes of the destruction of Tibetan Buddhism," says Sylvia Gretchen, who has been involved in the 21-year project since its inception.

Odyian is the branch of exiled Tibetan lama Tarrhng Tulku, who also founded Berkeley, N.Y., and the study of Buddhism as well as Dharma Publishing and Dharma Press.

Work began in 1975, with a crew of up to 50 full-time workers living on site.

The crew was short on money, which mainly came from donors and from revenues of Tulku's other projects, but long on effort and ingenuity.

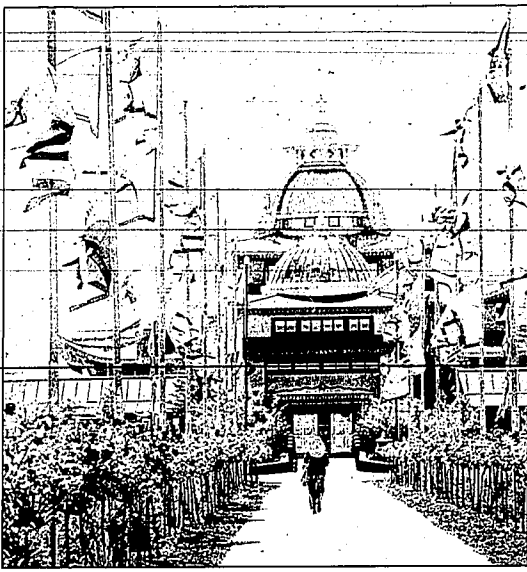

They needed lumber, so they learned to mill their own wood. They needed steel beams, so they negotiated with the state Department of Transportation for beams from a dismantled freeway. Marble flooring came from schools where it was being discarded as part of earthquake retrofitting.

"This was calling every night to donors. This was starting a little bakery to provide funds. This was selling sandwiches," says Gretchen.

Organizers estimate they spent $10 million to $12 million on materials: They say they don't have a cost estimate for the finished product, although with its unique architecture, religious meaning and rich furnishings they believe it is probably priceless.

Lumbers behind the finished product are colossal: Six major temples, a 113-foot tall stupa (a traditional Buddhist monument to enlightenment), four libraries with thousands of sacred texts, more than 800 prayer flags (brightly colored squares printed with prayers), 1,242 prayer wheels and 20,000 prayer cylinders.

The prayer wheels, large copper cylinders, are a story in themselves. Inside are about a

In a 20th-century touch, electric motors keep these prayer wheels moving, producing a smooth hum and the occasional squeak. Another modern footnote: Some smaller prayer wheels carry microfilmed mantras. The grand total? About 100 billion prayers per minute, at least according to Sally Sorenson, an Odyian student.

The complex's main building is the three-tiered Odyian Temple, built in the shape of a three-dimensional mandala, a geometric design that symbolizes balance and order. The copper-plated roofs tilt up at the corners (an architectural challenge) giving the temple a slightly flying look.

To the west stands the 11-story Vajra Temple. The octagonal building, made of steel and glass, contains statues of the founder of Tibetan Buddhism, Padmasambhava.

Pastor finds furor familiar territory

Orange County Register

BUENA PARK, Calif. — It's a recent evening at First Southern Baptist Church in Buena Park, and Brother Bob Gillis is singing hymn No. 35: "Then sings my soul, my Savior God to thee, how great thou art, How great thou art." His 83-year-old voice is all Southern comfort transforming this urban sanctuary into a dusky rural church.

The song usually brings tears to the Rev. Wiley Smead Drake's eyes, but on this sticky summer evening, he's too bustling with energy to be much overcome.

The congregation leans forward in synchronized exaltation as Drake takes the podium. The music ceases to hear how in heaven's name it happened. They've been talking about it for days in the church's soup kitchen and thrift store where they feed and clothe the down and out.

Now, they want to find out from the horse's mouth just how it came to be that that pastor of eight years went off to Baton Rouge, La., to attend the Southern Baptist Convention's annual gathering as a fairly obscure preacher and ended up in their living rooms duking it out with the Walt Disney Co. on the national news.

"If someone told me to guess which local Baptist preacher would convince 16,000 delegates to boycott a major entertainment company over family-values issues, I would guess it was me," says Wayne Derrick, head of the Orange County (Calif.) Southern Baptist Association, which represents more than 20,000 members and 100 churches.

Derrick, who pastors Orangewood Avenue Baptist Church in Garden Grove, adds, "Drake's a gadfly. No doubt about it."

Drake, scathed and pressed and wearing his fancy red tie with a majestic eagle on it, jumps to the podium and looks over his horse, modest church at a crowd that is honestly working class and elderly.

Pulling his suitcase forward over his suspenders, he thanks them for praying for his mama, who lives in his boyhood hometown of Magnolia, Ark. — a town he ran away from to join the rodeo and ride bucking bulls when he was barely 13. "I got to visit her on my trip, and we had fresh corn and peas from the garden. Prase God."

But it's not so easy Drake did on his trip that is the real food for thought. Drake got the representatives for the 16 million-strong Southern Baptists, the largest Protestant denomination in the country, to unanimously come around to his way of thinking.

At first, he had voted to merely give the Walt Disney Co. a public rebuke that bore his traits and tended his age. A third was all the human beauty he'd known till now, all the hair he'd touched.

Not certified Scripture scholar would presume as much. Price is more worried about what his own readers will think.

"I would have felt very nervous 30 years ago writing a book like this," he says. "People are likely to look at anything that smells of religion as alarming, or as an amusing and childlike pursuit."

He spent the past three decades writing novels, memoirs, essays, plays and poems, securing honors enough — including a Pulitzer Prize — to afford the risk. In this book he reveals his deeply held religious faith. More than that, he writes his essays about the Bible with the confidence of an expert.

"As an English professor," Price teaches at Duke University in North Carolina and now writes, "This is the way it is! I've been waiting for them to come after me," he says of the Bible scholars. "But I haven't run into any SOB's so far."

Instead, America magazine and the Christian Century gave Price's book positive reviews. Three months after it was published in an edition of 21,000, it is now in its fourth printing — 32,000 books in all.

down on Disney like one of those cyclones that used to churn up the grit near his paternal grandpa's sawmill.

Drake told the convention to send Disney a clear message — that there was no storm collar they could hide in if they were bent on damaging the morals of America's children. He hit a righteous chord with the messengers, as the Baptist delegates were called. They voted (unanimously) to boycott Disney products, theme parks and movies.

"Disney has increasingly been under attack by conservative religious groups, including Catholics upset about a gay cleric portrayed in 'Priest,' a movie distributed by subsidiary Miramax."

Within a week of the Southern Baptist Convention's announcement, he announced it would increase its emphasis on family values. However, the company insisted the decision had been made months ago and had nothing to do with what happened in Baton Rouge.

Soon after that, Disney announced it had named a Jesuit priest, the Rev. Leo J. O'Donovan of Georgetown University, as a board member.

"Disney's heading for the hidey-hole," a pleased Drake says.

He tells his congregation that the boycott is voluntary. In fact, he has some annual Disneyland passes that he uses when his three grandkids come to visit, and he's not about to waste all that money by tearing them up. He suggests using such passes to visit the park, just don't buy any of those "Mickey Mouse things and concession foods."

The battle with Disney has spilled over to the gay community, which calls Drake and other supporters of the boycott homophobic and un-Christian. Drake, in turn, argues the "love the sinner but hate the sin" argument. "We don't have a problem with homosexuals. It is abnormal, biologically unhealthy, as well as contrary to Bible teachings."

Over the years since, Drake seems to have managed to either endure or irritate just about everyone and deals with many praise his compassion and efforts to help the down-trodden, stamp out abortion and promote family values. But some say his stances as bullheaded and nonconformist.

Once, at a public meeting, he called Garden Grove residents "racists" when he thought they were making it too difficult for a Korean minister and congregation to find a home. In Buena Park, city officials are upset that he lets the homeless camp on church property. Teens attending mundy rap-group concerts are often met by a picketing Drake, who decries the music as ungodly. He also has picketed several movies.

A pornographic bookstore owner gave up trying to move into Drake's church's neighborhood, after Drake led his congregation in a noisy battle. And a Veterans of Foreign Wars group met a similar fate when the minister was able to raise enough public outcry against having the post, which serves alcohol, move into his neighborhood.

But there are perks to taking such a public community-activist stance. More than a few members of Drake's congregation have left because they didn't like his take-charge manners.

The 'Gospel' according to Price spelled out in new book

Los Angeles Times

With his paper coffee cup on the blue tablecloth before him, Reynolds Price reads from his new book. At first he reads innocently.

"Then they led him out to crucify him," he begins. Clearly, the line is not his own.

In "Three Gospels" (Scribner), Price crosses over from his usual place as a fiction writer to rewrite the Greek New Testament Gospels of Mark and John, with a scholarly critique of both.

The third gospel is his own. He wrote it based on Mark's account. It shows the storyteller spinning his yarn out of fact and imagination to answer some of the questions that were posed.

There is the mystery of the birth of Christ, for example. The Bible tells us that Mary conceived a son although she was a virgin promised to marry Joseph the carpenter. He did not understand but in a dream he was asked to trust. Price goes further, imagining Joseph's hidden reaction.

"Through the long wait his pallet lay apart from Mary's by the reach of his arm, and there were days that summer and fall when Joseph pressed his nails deep into his hands to let out part of the pain he felt but never told."

He expands on another authentic Gospel

Author Reynolds Price reads from his book, 'Three Gospels,' to an audience in Los Angeles.

scene in which Jesus spends 40 days in the desert struggling in all his humanness to grasp God's divine plan for him. Price imagines Jesus assailed by visions of himself as a normal man:

"Another form likewise were Jesus' face but and old and smiling with sons and daughters that bore his traits and tended his age. A third was all the human beauty he'd known till now, all the hair he'd touched."

Not certified Scripture scholar would presume as much. Price is more worried about what his own readers will think.

"I would have felt very nervous 30 years ago writing a book like this," he says. "People are likely to look at anything that smells of religion as alarming, or as an amusing and childlike pursuit."

He spent the past three decades writing novels, memoirs, essays, plays and poems, securing honors enough — including a Pulitzer Prize — to afford the risk. In this book he reveals his deeply held religious faith. More than that, he writes his essays about the Bible with the confidence of an expert.

"As an English professor," Price teaches at Duke University in North Carolina and now writes, "This is the way it is! I've been waiting for them to come after me," he says of the Bible scholars. "But I haven't run into any SOB's so far."

Instead, America magazine and the Christian Century gave Price's book positive reviews. Three months after it was published in an edition of 21,000, it is now in its fourth printing — 32,000 books in all.

Archaeologists find written evidence of biblical city

JERUSALEM (AP) — Archaeologists have found a stone block inscribed with the name of the biblical city of Ekron and its kings — the first conclusive evidence of the Philistine city burned to the ground more than 2,700 years ago.

Ekron is referred to in the biblical book of I Samuel, which tells of the Philistines capturing the Ark of the Covenant and taking it to Ekron. After a plague struck the city, the ark was sent back to Judea.

The five-line inscription, written in Phoenician script, was uncovered last week at a dig 25 miles from the ruins of a temple built around 700 B.C.

The inscription states that Achish, son of Padi, king of Ekron, built a temple dedicated to a goddess. Achish is the Phoenician version of the name Achaish, who is mentioned in 7th century B.C. Assyrian writings as the king of Ekron.

The temple, the palace it was part of and the entire city of Ekron were destroyed in 603 B.C. by the Babylonian King Nebuchadnezzar. The find confirms written accounts of the kings and the city's destruction by Seymour Gitin said Wednesday. It is also the first time archaeologists have found the name of a biblical city and its kings at the actual site where the city was believed to have existed, he said.

"Something like this comes once in a lifetime," Gitin told The Associated Press. "It helps with the identification of the site and helps to fill in a great deal of history from this very important period."

Gitin said Ekron was an important olive oil production center during most of the 7th century B.C., and was battled over by the Assyrians and the neighboring Judeans.

Ekron, which has been excavated by archaeologists from Hebrew University and the W.F. Albright Institute of Archaeological Research for the past 13 years, is one of the five major Philistine cities, along with Gaza, Ashkelon, Ashdod and Gath.

Texas billionaire blasts agencies' grazing rights

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A billionaire Texas oilman is accusing federal and state land agencies of illegally joining up with conservation groups to deprive him of grazing rights on his Utah ranch.

Oscar S. Wyatt Jr., chairman of the Coastal Corp, energy company in Houston and owner of the 354,000-acre Sweetwater Ranch in eastern Utah, filed suit late Wednesday in U.S. District Court here.

Wyatt contends that a government effort to create a wildlife preserve will hinder his ability to graze his cattle on adjacent federal, state and private lands.

The suit has implications for federal lands throughout the West, where cattlemen are at odds with environmentalists and often government agencies over allocation of grazing rights.

Named as defendants are the Department of Interior and Secretary Bruce Babbitt, the Bureau of Land Management, Utah Gov. Mike Leavitt, the state's Department of Natural Resources, the Rocky Mountain Elk Foundation, The Nature Conservancy and several government administrators.

Wyatt and his Alameda Corp. allege that the agencies violated longstanding federal laws in 1989 when they made an oral agreement with the two conservation groups.

The agreement, called the Book Cliffs Conservation Initiative, was to create a vast habitat for both wildlife and cattle in an area of eastern Utah where ranching has dominated for decades.

Wyatt contends, however, that the real motive was to push out grazing and build an elk herd that will attract trophy hunters who pay big dollars for state licenses. The initiative's goal was to reduce livestock

'The main thing they're trying to shut down is cattle grazing.'

— Phillip Lear, attorney representing Oscar S. Wyatt herds by 50 percent and boost the elk herd from 1,500 to 7,200.

"Their brochure says it was to be a 'showcase of multiple use,' but anyone reading the document can see that it's pure lip service," said Phillip Lear, the Salt Lake attorney representing Wyatt.

"The main thing they're trying to shut down is cattle grazing," he said. Rather than petitioning Congress to create a national conservation area, the federal and state agencies teamed with private groups that would buy the lands and then donate them to the government for wildlife habitat, Lear said.

Spokesmen for the government defendants said Thursday they had not seen the suit and declined comment.

The Rocky Mountain Elk Foundation's lawyer in Missoula, Mont., and a spokesman at The Nature Conservancy's Utah office said there was nothing illegal about the initiative, but they declined further comment because they had not seen the lawsuit. The elk foundation bought the Cripple Cowboy Ranch in the Book Cliffs, donated the land to the state last year and held onto the grazing rights. The BLM reallocated them as wildlife grazing rights.

The move meant the Sweetwater Ranch lost grazing rights for about 300-head-of-cattle, Lear said.

Lear and Alameda Corp. had acquired the Sweetwater Ranch in 1994 and were unaware of the initiative to boost the wildlife habitat. More than 80 percent of the Sweetwater Ranch is on federal lands where it holds the grazing rights.

Wyatt argues it is illegal for the BLM to allow non-cattle growers to hold grazing permits, even though the agency has been doing so throughout the West in the 1990s and was given such latitude by Babbitt's rangeland reforms last August.

That same argument prevailed last month in a federal court case decided in Cheyenne, Wyo. The judge there enjoined Babbitt from enforcing the rules, saying they would wreak havoc on the cattle industry. That suit was brought by livestock groups representing about 19,000 producers in 13 western states.

Moreover, Wyatt argues that Utah's natural resource managers are breaking range law because they've erected fences on the Cripple Cowboy ranch that block Sweetwater cattle from water sources and a county road from access.

Panel rules immigrant can stay; he's too Americanized to return

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A Nicaraguan immigrant has become too Americanized to return to his native country and will be allowed to stay in the United States, an immigration board ruled in a precedent-setting decision.

The ruling by the Board of Immigration Appeals overruled an immigration judge who had denied political asylum for Orlando Ordonez after he illegally crossed the U.S.-Mexico border in 1985.

The judge said the civil war in Ordonez's homeland had ended and that Ordonez had no family ties in the United States that would constitute a hardship if he were sent back to Nicaragua.

But the five-member immigration panel, based in Falls Church, Va., wrote in a decision issued June 14 that Ordonez would indeed face great hardship, personally and economically, if deported.

Ordonez — a 24-year-old truck driver who lives in Bell Gardens, 10 miles southeast of downtown Los Angeles — "is fully assimilated into American culture and society," the panel wrote. He speaks English, is a law-abiding churchgoer and "a baseball enthusiast who attends many games each year" and graduated from junior high and high schools in Southern California, the panel said.

"This assimilation makes the prospect of readjustment to life in Nicaragua much harder than would ordinarily be the case."

The panel also noted Nicaragua's stagnant economy and continued political instability as causing bleak job prospects for Ordonez.

U.S. authorities disagree with the panel's reasoning but do not plan to appeal to the federal courts, said Richard K. Rogers, the Immigration and Naturalization Service's district director in Los Angeles.

On Thursday, the INS issued documentation that will eventually lead to a green card for Ordonez, signifying legal status as a permanent resident.

"This is a dream come true," Ordonez said. "I don't know how to explain it. I'm like a new guy."

Immigration attorneys said the board's decision could help many longtime residents fight deportation. Immigration judges have the authority to suspend the deportations of people who have been in the United States for at least seven years, are of good moral character, and would suffer "extreme hardship" if expelled.

"This doesn't open the floodgates, but it's a good sign because it adds to the arguments in a particular case," said Linton Joaquin, litigation director with the Los Angeles-based National Immigration Law Center, a nonprofit group that advocates on behalf of immigrants.

But others, including four dissenters on the board, said the decision interpreted hardship too broadly and could encourage more illegal immigration.

"In general, if you get into this country it's getting increasingly difficult to remove you — even if you came here illegally," said Ira Mehlman, a spokesman for the Federation for American Immigration Reform, a group that favors reduced immigration.

Power company apologizes for threat

SPOKANE (AP) — Washington Water Power Co. is apologizing for threatening to turn off electricity to a delinquent ratepayer who is on life-support machine.

Donations have also poured in to help Marilyn Franck, 57, pay off the $339.51 she owed to the utility. "I'm so amazed what people will do," Franck said Thursday. "I thank everybody for doing it for me."

Franck is recovering from heart surgery and needs an electric-powered bedside oxygen machine all night and often during the day.

Franck learned in a noticed Tuesday that she faced loss of her power if she did not pay a portion of her delinquent $339.51 bill by Wednesday afternoon.

After news of the threatened shut off was published, WWP backed off on its threat Thursday and apologized.

"There were mistakes made," said Marc Schaffner, customer service manager for WWP.

On Wednesday, Schaffner had said it was "prudent" to turn off Franck's power because of her debt.

But Thursday, he publicly apologized to her on a radio show and then called Franck.

Schaffner said he wasn't aware of any cases in which WWP had actually shut off power to a person on a life-support machine.

Franck's doctor had intervened when he learned of the WWP action, saying she really needed the oxygen machine.

Also, several people donated groceries and offered to pay Franck's power bill.

Bon Appetit, a Spokane gourmet food service, delivered boxes of swordfish and other meats to her doorstep.

The Spokane Neighborhood Action Programs, which has an emergency fund to help the poor, pay power bills, said an anonymous donor wanted to pay off Franck's debt to WWP and donate $100 a month to her electrical needs.

Franck said her monthly income consists of about $500 from Social Security and welfare checks.

The WWP notice said she is $339.51 behind in power payments and needed to pay at least $104.87 by Wednesday.

Heirs reach settlement over composer works

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The University of Southern California has agreed to give up the world-renowned archives of composer Arnold Schoenberg to settle a bitter dispute with his heirs.

In lawsuits and court battles, the family versus USC over a 1976 contract by using the campus' Schoenberg Institute for purposes other than highlighting the work of Schoenberg and other modernist composers.

The building, near the music school, has a 200-seat recital hall. USC said it could no longer afford to reserve the space exclusively for Schoenberg-related activities, but a state court judge in January said the contract required it.

The settlement, reached Wednesday, calls on USC to pay $50,000 toward the cost of moving the collection. A satellite collection of Schoenberg items donated by third parties will also move if the individual donors agree. Most of those donors have agreed, said E. Randolph Schoenberg, the composer's grandson.

The heirs will allow USC to use the Schoenberg Institute for general music classes and activities until the Schoenbergs find a new home for the collection, which they must do by the end of 1998.

Odiaga won't receive new trial, judge rules

HALLEY - Convicted killer Mitchell John Odiaga has been denied a new trial over his mental condition at the time he gunned down two men in Ketchum.

Fifth District Judge James May on Monday dismissed a petition filed by Odiaga's attorneys that, if granted, could have moved Odiaga back into the Blaine County courtroom.

Odiaga in June 1990 randomly killed Gerald "Shenandoah" Wright, 46, of Ketchum and Bruce Schaffer, 23, of Burley. He was arrested the next day on Galena Summit north of town.

Instead, May granted Blaine County Prosecutor Doug Werth's motion to dismiss Odiaga's petition.

Odiaga's counsel maintains he was medicated for manic depression and schizophrenia during the trial, so the court could not see his mental condition at the time of the killings.

He was prescribed Lithium for the bipolar depression, but was not taking it when the shootings occurred.

To date, Odiaga's initial trial and appeals have cost county taxpayers more than $250,000.

Wendell pulls together for impressive fireworks show

WENDELL - Fire Chief Red Orr said rural and townspeople pitched in and contributed to this year's fireworks show.

"We've got a couple of elderly ladies that every year donate a dollar," Orr said. "They count out their change. If we don't stop at their doors to collect, they get upset."

In addition to the firemen's annual door-to-door collection drive through the residential area, the fire department received donations from the businesses in town and the dairies in the countryside. "When there's something going on, this community pulls together. We're off $10,000 worth of fireworks this year. The community needs to know how well they did."

Forest Service plans new trail through Smokey Mountains

KETCHUM - A new mountain trail will be constructed between two areas in the Smokey Mountains for both motorized and non-motorized use.

The Forest Service's trail construction planned for next summer will link the Greenhorn Gulch and Deer Creek drainages between Halley and Ketchum. A two-mile section of trail will be built from North Fork Deer Creek road to the upper end of the Greenhorn Gulch Trail.

"People will be able to ride or hike from the Greenhorn drainage to Deer Creek via the old Nay Aug Gulch mining access road," said Forest Service Recreation Specialist David Gordon. "However, due to its location, this road has become increasingly rutted and eroded over the years."

Plans are to close the upper end of the Nay Aug road next year for rehabilitation to provide the connection to Deer Creek via the new trail segment.

Social Security may want new information on earnings

TWIN FALLS - Those who work, collect Social Security benefits and earn more than the annual exempt amount may get a notice from Social Security sometime in August asking for an update of estimated earnings.

"Because your earnings may affect your Social Security benefits, we need to know how much you expect to earn during the year," said Eric Riedl, Twin Falls Social Security branch manager.

"We do this to help avoid paying you too much or too little in benefits during the year," he added.

Social Security also will ask for an estimate of earnings for next year.

Mum's the word as moguls arrive at Sun Valley

Times-News correspondent

KETCHUM - Even billionaires need to network.

Quiet and privacy are two qualities that bring Allen & Co., plus their famous clients and families to the annual conference at Sun Valley Resort year after year - this year marks the 14th year.

Until recently, the event has been lightly covered by the media. The press is not welcome at the conference. This year, with a feature in USA Today on July 9, and a cover story in the July 1 issue of Forbes Magazine, entitled "Herbert Allen and His 'Merry Dealers' privacy is harder to find."

Allen & Co Inc. is a privately held investment banking firm headquartered in New York City and run by president Herbert Allen. Allen specializes in developing long term relationships with clients and bringing people together for deals.

But the media blackout feeds curiosity about happenings at the retreat.

"Our main function is to keep the press out," Mark Lockwood of the Sun Valley Police Department said. The department has provided additional staff for the conference for many years, mostly in the form of plainclothes officers to keep reporters from slipping into meetings held in Sun Valley facilities.

"They can let their hair down and put on their Levi's or whatever, and walk around like a normal person," Lockwood said.

New recycling bins appear soon at Twin Cinema, on Main in Kimberly

TWIN FALLS - Twin Falls County has confirmed locations for two new county recycling bins, and negotiations on two more are in the works, said Twin Falls County Commissioner Brent Reinke.

The bins, which will hold aluminum cans, newspaper and possibly mixed paper, could be up and running in a few weeks.

Bins will be placed at the Twin Cinema 9 in Twin Falls and at the corner of Main Street and Madison Street West in Kimberly.

Additional sites are being planned for the new Fred Meyer shopping center and the Magic Valley Mall, Reinke said.

"It's not intended to interfere with the Kiwanis (bins)," Twin Falls Utility Services Director Sherry Jeff said. "We're going to try to keep a ways away from them."

Buhl budget proposals include Hispanic officer

By Mary Lou Potts
Times-News correspondent

BUHL - The city's budget process is under way with three departments presenting their budget proposals for 1996-97 to the City Council this week.

Fire Chief Mark Grimes led the trio with a proposed budget of $260,832 - of which the city's share would be $143,927. His budget includes safety equipment to bring the city up to standard and to replace worn-out gear for the firefighters. Grimes also requested funds to test safety equipment, especially ladders. Also included was software to be used with the enhanced 911 system. Updated material is necessary to keep the department informed and prepared.

The program also included enhancing the wildland capabilities, improving rural water suppliers, inter-division training and maintaining current maintenance prevention programs.

Police Chief Terry Tipton proposed a $483,787 budget - about $41,000 more than last year. His proposal included hiring a Hispanic officer to improve communications on the streets.

Other personnel changes outlined included an office manager; a co-enforcer to work with the Public Works Department and handle pet control; a part-time record transcriber; and a

Sheriff cuts service to rural areas

MOSCOW (AP) — Latah County Sheriff Joe Overstreet has ordered a reduction in service to rural areas because of budget problems, angering some residents, and confusing county commissioners and concerning the Idaho State Police.

State Police Captain Mike Fosbury found out about the cutbacks three weeks ago when the sheriff's dispatch said patrol cars would be placed in strategic locations and would respond only to emergency situations.

Sheriff's Lt. Vern Moses "told us he was going to place people in geographic locations and respond only if there was a serious emergency in progress," Fosbury said.

In a memorandum to the County Commission, Overstreet, who finished third with only 16 percent in the three-way Republican primary in May, said the cutback was the result of the vehicle repair budget being nearly exhausted. Of nearly $30,000 allocated, the department has less than $900 to last it through the spending year that ends Sept. 30.

"This will reduce our service to the citizens of the county," Overstreet wrote.

The commissioners pointed out that Overstreet still has about 20 percent of his overall office budget left with only 17 percent of the budget year remaining and could shift some cash from other areas to vehicle maintenance.

"If there isn't money, why isn't he over here talking to us?" Commissioner Tom Spangler said, citing Overstreet's recent $3,500 computer purchase.

The whole thing has Rita Blewett seething. In late June, the state liquor store Blewett runs in Kendrick was burglarized. Over $800 in liquor and $65 in cash were stolen.

The State Police handled the incident, Fosbury said, after "Latah County said they were not going to send anybody." The sheriff's office finally took the case five days later.

But that was only a relatively small change from the way a burglary a year earlier was handled, Fosbury said. The initial investigation seemed adequate, she said, but then the case got tossed from one detective to another. And while the burglar was ultimately arrested in southern Idaho, she said she was never notified directly.

"What's lacking is a sheriff," Blewett said. "We don't have one right now. We don't have a leader, a caring leader that cares about the youth in the county. We have a lame-duck sheriff with an axe to grind."

Williams, on campaign trail, blasts Chenoweth's record

The Associated Press

Democratic congressional challenger Dan Williams has been up and down Idaho's 1st District, focusing on what he views as some of Republican incumbent Helen Chenoweth's more extreme stands — votes against clean water and safe meat.

But Chenoweth press secretary Khiris Bershers claims Williams has old information that does not accurately reflect the conservative freshman's opinions, efforts or what is happening in Congress today.

Williams conceded that Chenoweth voted for final passage of the clean water bill once all the proposed changes had been considered. Bershers admitted that votes against meat and poultry inspection proposals came 18 months ago and Chenoweth has since been involved in the issue as an Agriculture Committee member. Bershers disagreed with a statement that Chenoweth had moved back on sage-grouse hunting.

Williams launched his latest assault on Chenoweth's record in northern Idaho earlier in the week and wrapped it up in Boise Friday afternoon.

"When there were big votes on what to do with increasing groundwater and surface water problems with direct impacts on health and safety, she votes to take us back to a 1970's," Williams said. "This is a classic Helen trick. She'll say she voted for the clean water and she did, but not until all the important work had been done."

He argued that it makes little sense for Chenoweth to support a $40 billion Star Wars defense program and object to spending a few million dollars on water quality programs that maintain the safety of domestic water supplies.

"Those aren't the priorities of the vast majority of the people of Idaho who don't want to see Idaho become like New Jersey," Williams said.

Bershers said that in disposing of the 43 amendments proposed to the water legislation Chenoweth voted for flexibility at the local level, reducing unfunded mandates, easing redundant and costly regulations and making bureaucrats factor cost-risk assessments into their decisions.

Chenoweth did vote in February 1995 to block an Agriculture Department regulation aimed at reducing meat and poultry bacterria that kills as many as 4,000 people a year. Precluding the inspection improvement was a spotlighted impact of the GOP's demand for a moratorium on federal rules.

Carcass-by-carcass inspections would have been replaced with bacterial testing, improved sanitation practices and changes in the way meat is handled and stored.

Only two members of the House Republican majority objected to the regulatory moratorium that blocked the change that was vehemently opposed by the meat industry as uneeded, ineffective and too expensive.

"Since then, however, Bershers said top Agriculture Department officials, including the secretary, have been before the House Agriculture Committee, allowing Chenoweth to ask about health and safety rules.

"It would be inaccurate to say that she is against safety standards for meat and poultry because she has worked specifically within the Agriculture Committee to ensure that those types of protections are provided."

The meat industry, however, continues to fight Clinton administration efforts to force testing for bacteria in meat and poultry, claiming the standards are impractical and cannot be enforced.

Commission approves new hunting rules

SODA SPRINGS (AP) — The Idaho Fish and Game Commission has approved new rules to protect the dwindling desert bird, while allowing special hunting for sandhill cranes trampling grain crops.

Sage grouse populations may be depleted as much as 90 percent in some areas, especially in the Big Desert between Arco and American Falls, wildlife biologists testified Thursday at a commission meeting.

Loss of habitat and low reproductive rates have combined to thin grouse numbers across the West.

"We're talking about a bird that has the reproduction capacity of a Tyrannosaurus Rex. They just don't make sons very well," Fish and Game biologist Jack Connelly told the commission.

"In eastern and most of southern Idaho, the season will be reduced to seven days, beginning Sept. 21, with a one-bird daily bag limit and a two-bird possession limit.

The season length is half as long as the 14 days proposed by the department.

"We wanted to be conservative and, hopefully, this is enough," Commissioner Roy Brown of Soda Springs said. "We don't want to over-protect the hunting situation and have these birds be declared threatened or endangered."

In central Idaho north of Twin Falls and in southwestern Owyhee County, there will be a two-bird daily bag limit and a four-bird possession limit with a 23-day season.

For the first time since World War I, sandhill crane hunting is legal in Idaho.

The commission approved a limited September hunt to help farmers spook the lanky birds off their crops.

State and federal wildlife agents can fine up to 20 credits this year, but commissioners said they intend to boost the harvest next year and hand it over to private hunters. It is an emergency rule change that will need further review to be made permanent next year.

The last time crane hunting was legal in Idaho was when Woodrow Wilson was president.

Commissioners acknowledged they could be sued for removing protection for the dancing bird, but they said the change offers immediate relief from a migratory population that has ballooned 20-fold in southeastern Idaho over the last 40 years.

Carmen E. Uria Hon, endead her five-month battle with cancer on Monday, July 8, 1996.

She was born Sept. 24, 1961, in Gooding, the daughter of Carmen and late Floyd Uria. She graduated from Gooding High School in 1979, and Boise State University in 1994, with a marketing degree.

Carmen married her high school sweetheart, Brent Bowman in 1980, and they were later divorced, remaining friends with him and his family.

On Aug. 18, 1990, she married Jeff Hon and they made their home near Nampan. Her greatest wish was to have a family with Jeff and on Dec. 28, 1995, she gave birth to Gabriel Joseph Hon, the light of her life. Carmen was a wonderful, loving mother, and she will live on with her family and friends on earth through this wonderful child. Like Carmen, he is greatly loved. Only God knows the reason she was taken so swiftly and so soon, but we are comforted in knowing that Gabriel already has his own guard angels to watch over him the rest of his life.

Her career included jobs with Albertson's, First Interstate Bank, and Ore-Ida Foods. She then joined Jeff as office manager and marketing director of Hon Contractors.

Carmen had a special way about her that made her loved by many. In addition to those many friends, she leaves behind her family who loved her deeply, miss and remember her always: Jeff and son, Gabriel; mother and stepfather, Carmen and Harley King; brother and fami-

Good Samaritan earns stripes in Malta

By Heidi Tuttle
Times-News correspondent

MALTA — Ted Hodges has spent his life helping those around him, and over the years he has gained a reputation as Malta's Good Samaritan.

"I just like to work, and I'm happy to have the health to do it," Hodges said.

Hodges finds enjoyment in helping others and spends many hours of his own time in the service of the people of Malta.

"I don't think there's a soul in this valley he hasn't touched," said Penny Thompson, head custodian at Raft River Elementary School.

A few days after Dwaine and Carol Southworth moved to Malta, they were met by the famed 1995 Malta windstorm, which tore the roof off of their house.

But Hodges was there the next day to help pick up the pieces.

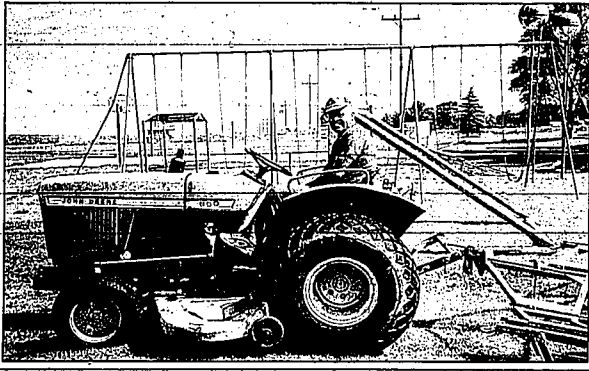

Nadynne Sundberg, a Malta resident and one of the recipients of Hodges' kindness, last year she bought a new car. Upon trying to start it before attending church one Sunday, she found "the battery dead. She called Hodges and he immediately arrived at her home, jumped the battery, and she was on her way to church."

Hodges then made the preparations for building a garage to house Sundberg's car. He drew the plans, framed the exterior, and performed the necessary pre-construction jobs so other people in the community could help with the building.

"Whenever I need something, Ted's the one I call. He's always there to do it," said Sundberg.

"If there is something he doesn't know how to do, it only takes him 15 minutes to find out," said Viola Hodges, Ted's wife of 52 years.

When the job for a part time

custodian opened at the new Raft River Elementary School in Malta, Hodges applied. With the credentials he held, including the knowledge gained by helping with the construction of the school, he got the job.

Hodges has built bookcases for teachers, assembled all the bleachers for the gymnasium and assembled the lockers for the school's older children.

Behind his twinkling eyes, a practical joke can always be found. "Almost every day I get ready to leave work, I will find my coat or jacket sleeve closed with a rubber band," said Thompson. "I don't know how many times my hand has met an abrupt stop. You'd think I would learn."

The job at Raft River

Elementary came at a time when Ted and his wife were faced with a new responsibility. After raising their family and making plans to retire and travel, the Hodges inherited seven grandchildren.

But Hodges and his wife said they were excited with the opportunities of raising the extended family.

Family is an important part in the life of Hodges. They are parents to three sons and three daughters, grandparents to 29 grandchildren and 17 great-grandchildren.

"I think the family unit is so important," said Hodges. "In fact, next week we are going to Oregon to my grandson's mission farewell."

Hodges was born in Ashton and raised by his grandparents. He milked 22 head of cows by hand twice a day among many other responsibilities.

"My two older brothers were gone. One was in the military, and the other on an LDS mission. So I was the one at home to help," said Hodges.

He left home at age 16, married Viola Beebe of Rexburg at age 17, and joined the Air Force, 5th Air Group, at age 18.

Although the Hodges family moved several times, they finally settled in Malta in May, 1959.

Hodges worked for the Raft River Highway District for 3 years. Then took a job with the state transportation department and after 25 years of keeping the highway open and repaired, Hodges retired in 1988.

Noh warns cleanup could cost taxpayers

CLAYTON (AP) — A Magic Valley legislator says he intends to sue the federal government for a batch of patent applications for the open-pit Thompson Creek mine in central Idaho.

Noh — the Clinton administration's moratorium on new patents.

State mine regulators warn if the federal land is patented or bought, oversight will be dumped on their laps. Weak state mining laws will leave them helpless if an acid drainage problem grows to an alarming size.

If underground materials such as pyrite are exposed to the air, acid begins to form. The mine is five miles up the creek from the Salvo River.

Thompson Creek is building a $3.4 million plant to pull the pyrite out of the waste.

"We're not trying to sneak around and figure out some type of way to avoid doing the right thing," said company President Tom Montgomery. "It's our advantage to us in patenting these claims is that we would take ourselves out of the arena of the day-to-day micromanagement of our activities by the federal government."

Thompson Creek is the largest single asset of the government, worth an annual payroll of $11 million.

But Sen. Laird Noh, R-Kimberly, chairman of the Senate Resources and Environment Committee, on Thursday said he wants the patent applications put on hold "until we can sort through the potential and serious implications" to the state.

The biggest issue is the state is prohibited from demanding cleanups up front for future stream cleanups at a mine site. The federal government can ask for as much money as it deems necessary.

That is critical in this case, where a U.S. Forest Service study is reviewing the potential acid problem. Cleanup could cost tens of millions of dollars and take decades to fix.

The mine's life span is predicted to be another 15 years. Mine spokeswoman Carolyn Hubble said it wants the patent because the land currently is useless to the state. "We're not trying to sneak around and figure out some type of way to avoid doing the right thing," said company President Tom Montgomery. "It's our advantage to us in patenting these claims is that we would take ourselves out of the arena of the day-to-day micromanagement of our activities by the federal government."

Idaho has had to deal with pollution from other old mines, such as the Blackbird Mine near Salmon which wiped out the salmon spawning habitat in Panther Creek.

Mine operators do not deny there is a potential problem, and say they are working vigorously on it.

Bonding to guarantee an acid cleanup after the mine's closure, as some have proposed, should not be an issue, Hubble says.

Thompson Creek already is bonded at $11 million for reclamation. The final recommendations in the Forest Service study of the acid drainage problem could bump that figure up significantly.

"At first blush, it could be interpreted as an effort by the company to work itself into a position of much softer environmental standards," Noh said of the applications.

resource officer to work with the school district. These changes would allow the officers to spend more time on the streets, Tipton said.

Tipton said officers need to dress to code standards and clearly be distinguished as police officers. He also stressed the need for a police computer to help gather information and check on details needed to make an arrest or solve a case.

Tipton's proposal also included additional police cars.

Tipton both stressed the importance of training programs to the community, and the need to offer the programs could largely result in the city keeping the trained professionals. The city has a large investment in their trained professionals, they said.

Both chiefs said they have applied for available grants to help supplement their budgets.

Public Works Director Gary Winn presented a portion of his budget, asking for about $20,000 for the Parks and Recreation Department. Winn said inflation and preventive maintenance on old equipment was the reason for his budget increases.

Parks and Recreation also has grants available as well as private donations.

The North Park project was outlined for additional baseball and soccer fields. The city would work with the school district in maintaining the project.

Winn will present the rest of his budget proposals next week.

are expected to continue coming to Sun Valley for the annual retreats.

"This is a retreat for business corporate leaders, and at the same time their families can be active," Sibbach said, but he would not comment further on the retreat.

"They come here for the weather, the activities, and because we can take care of their needs," Sibbach said. "They feel comfortable that no one will gawk over them here."

Even workers who decorated the facilities won't talk about the retreat.

"I want to keep my working relationship with these people intact," a vendor said. She declined to be identified. She would only comment that Allen and Co. had requested "flowers and things that look like Idaho, not like the city."

The retreat runs through Sunday.

The big-name guests on the invitation list for this year include: Rupert Murdoch, CEO News Corp.; Phil Knight, CEO of Nike; Sumner Redstone, Viacom CEO; Michael Eisner and Michael Owey, CEO and President of Disney, respectively; David Geffen and Jeffrey Katzenberg of Dreamworks; SWG; Edgar Bronfman, CEO of Seagram.

A chat during last year's conference led to the record breaking $19 billion deal, brokered by Allen & Co. which Disney acquired Capital Cities/ABC. When questioned on ABC's Good Morning America about the deal, Eisner said: "I literally passed Tom Murphy (of ABC in Sun Valley on the street and said 'Tom, I think it's time.'"

Other deals recently brokered by Allen & Co. include Westinghouse Electric's purchase of CBS for $5.4 billion and Seagram's acquisition of 80 percent of MCA for $5.7 billion.

"Deals just don't get done in Hollywood unless (Allen & Co.) are involved," says Barry Diller in the current issue of Forbes magazine. Diller is chairman of Silver King Communications, a broadcast television company, and an Allen & Co. client of long standing.

The Allen & Co. firm was started by Allen's father and uncle in 1919, and Allen assumed the presidency in 1966 at the age of 26. Known for his candid speech, Allen was quoted by Forbes as saying: "Over a long weekend, I could teach my dog to be an investment banker."

expects them to obey and when they can relax, she said. They wear special collars and leashes during shows that, along with her commands, let them know it's time to listen.

This is the first year Brunker has come to Burley, which has hosted United Kennel Club shows for three years. Brunker's dogs have won intermediate obedience degrees from the American Kennel Club.

The United Kennel Club is different from the American Kennel Club in that it allows mixed-breed dogs to register with the club and participate in the shows. But mixed breeders cannot participate in the United Kennel Club's competition that judges "the perfect standard of a dog." Purebreds only are allowed in that contest, while all dogs compete side by side for titles-in-obedience-training. The dogs compete at different levels ranging from novice to advanced.

Gone to the Dogs is the only United Kennel Club in Idaho, said club president Janice Harper. It was formed a few years ago by local dog lovers, she said. The club has about a dozen members.

Durfee will also present a Dutch oven demonstration on making Bannock bread — a quick bread homesteaders baked using baking powder as a rising agent instead of yeast. Those in attendance can sample the finished product.

Junior explorer days on the mornings of Saturday and Sunday are for children 12 and under. Parents are welcome to attend.

Saturday morning will feature the presentation, "Fun with wildflowers," at 9:45 a.m. It begins at the Rock with a hike to learn the basic identification of certain wildflowers found in the Park.

Silence follows end of standoff

JORDAN, Mont. (AP) — Justus Township, the Freemen's bicentennial stronghold for 81 days, sits empty and padlocked, baking in a summer silence broken only by the faint drone and chug of tractors in surrounding fields.

Armed guards still look down from the Freemen's sentry hill, but they work for the Farm-Service Agency which now owns the core of the 960-acre sanctuary that belonged to Ralph Clark. They use the same tattered horse trailer the Freemen sentries used, but the upside-down American flag that signaled the antigovernment extremists' defiance is gone.

The trailer, like every road leading to the property and most of its buildings, bears a gangly red-white-and-blue "No Trespassing" warning from the U.S. Marshals Service.

Still, sightings are rare. The bright blue wooden mailbox where the Freemen issued proclamations to reporters has escaped souvenir hunters and lies broken in a roadside ditch.

"We make the rounds every so often mainly just to break the boredom," said Dennis Hoke of the Bureau of Security, a private firm hired by the government.

Here in town, 30 miles from the Freemen compound, a different kind of silence has set in since the standoff ended a month ago, on June 13, when the last of the Freemen peacefully surrendered. "You can sit here and eat three meals a day and nobody even mentions the Freemen," said William Brown at QD's, the town's only restaurant and a social center. "It's just when it's in the news, more or less, and nobody gives a damn."

The Freemen are jailed without bond in Billings on federal charges that include conspiracy, bank-and-mail fraud involving millions in worthless checks, firearms violations and threats to kidnap and kill a federal judge. Some also face state charges.

Talk in this town of 500 faded quickly, maybe too quickly, after the last 16 antigovernment extremists surrendered to the FBI. Some say bitterness lingers.

The silence worries the Rev. Helen Young, who serves both the Lutheran and Presbyterian churches.

"To be honest, I don't really have a feel for" community attitudes, she said. "It was over, and people just clammed up and went about their ways."

County Attorney Nick Murison thinks life is just getting back to normal in a farming and ranching community.

"We're back to the problems of survival," he said. "There's been very little rain since June 1."

But Darlene Loomis says she and husband Freddie Loomis, among the nearest neighbors to the Freemen, are being ostracized, and so are others. She would not be specific.

"Let's put it this way: 20 percent of the community defended these people and 80 percent didn't."

The local members of the Clark clan, arguable people who got sucked into a scam by the outsiders who moved in last September, she said.

"Fifteen years ago it was the Clarks that came up and gave us the fuel and the seed to get a crop in the ground. It wasn't the other people in the community."

Josie Wright explained what Darlene Loomis would not. Several people have stopped hiring the Loomises to harvest hay for them.

Mrs. Wright's grandparents, Emmett and Rosie Clark, were among the last to surrender. She feels the community is punishing her for defending them, and her business, Big Dry Saddlery, is suffering. There has been nothing over. "It's just an attitude, I guess," she said.

Dear Darlene Loomis that she and her grandparents were victims, not crooks. "Those people, when they wrote those checks, they believed that money was there."

Dear Clark, the man mostly entitled to be bitter, could tell attorney Murison all about the "problems of survival."

Those tractors churning the fields day and night are driven by him and neighbors who are trying to wring a crop from the land the Freemen barred him from for nine months. He was a month late planting his spring, and has no time for interviews.

"Dean said he made the mistake of putting lights on his tractor, so now he has to work at night, too," said Tom Stanton Laughlin.

In November 1994 Clark bought 3,200 acres that had been taken in foreclosure from his grandfather, Emmett Clark, thinking to keep it in the family. He worked it last year and stored $70,000 worth of grain there.

'It was over and people just clammed up and went about their ways.'

Army: Burning is best for nerve gas

PORTLAND (AP) — Incineration is not only the best way to destroy deadly nerve gas stockpiled at the Umatilla Chemical Army depot, it is the only way, U.S. Army officials say.

Lt. Col. John Ontiveros, a project manager for the Pentagon's chemical waste disposal program, told Oregon Environmental Quality Commission Thursday that chemical neutralization efforts failed miserably at another base in the 1980s.

The effort resulted in about 8 million gallons of toxic leftovers that are still stored at the Rocky Mountain Arsenal in Colorado.

The Army plans to destroy 3,712 tons of nerve and mustard gas stored at the Umatilla depot.

Environmentalists insist that incinerators would pollute the air.

But Ontiveros said the high-tech $1.2-billion complex that the Army has in mind would emit 99.93 percent water, nitrogen, carbon dioxide and oxygen — all constituents of everyday air.

The Army's experiment with neutralization at the Rocky Mountain Arsenal a decade ago involved mixing liquid nerve gas with water and by turn it into something less harmful.

But scientists kept finding minute, still deadly amounts of the gas in the mixture.

Nerve gas is so toxic that it can kill just by touching the skin.

The Army is considering several new neutralization processes for weapons chemicals stored in bulk at military bases in Indiana and Maryland.

But Ontiveros said the Umatilla stockpile is more complex, involving nearly a quarter-million explosive rockets, artillery shells and mines, and not just bulk tanks.

Incineration, he said, is the only technology that can do the job.

Ontiveros told the commission that it would cost up to $350 million, and increase the risk to the public, to make major changes in the proposed incinerator plant.

Returning salmon numbers above average

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — One-year-old "jack" chinook salmon returned to the Columbia River this spring in numbers above the 10-year average, a sign that more salmon are surviving in the ocean, the Bonneville Power Administration said.

But fisheries experts cautioned that jack returns are not a perfect indicator of the runs' health.

"It's a little premature to suggest that we're in the midst of a trend or anything," said Rick Taylor, spokesman of the Columbia River Intertribal Fish Commission.

"With respect to this being above the 10-year average, that's not saying much," Taylor said. "It hasn't been a particularly good 10 years here."

A jack is a male chinook that returns in fresh water after one year at sea and attempts to fertilize females' eggs. Most other males and all females return to their spawning streams after two years at sea.

The number of returning jacks is one factor used to calculate run projections for the following year, Taylor said.

The jacks also are an early indicator of the strength of the next year's run, said Chip McCombs, senior fisheries scientist with the Northwest Power Planning Council.

But ocean conditions could change between now and then, he added.

Charles and Diana agree to end marriage swiftly

World's most avidly watched battle is over

LONDON (AP) — At last, the world's most avidly watched divorce battle is over.

Now, perhaps, Prince Charles and Princess Diana have a real chance of living happily ever after.

Lawyers for the couple announced Friday they have agreed to end their marriage, almost 15 years after millions watched their spectacular wedding at St. Paul's Cathedral and their shy kiss on the balcony of Buckingham Palace.

Diana will never be queen and will lose the coveted title "Her Royal Highness," but she remains a princess and instantly becomes one of the world's most eligible bachelorettes.

The divorce settlement was not disclosed but The Sun, the tabloid that broke the story of the final agreement, said she will get a lump sum of $26.35 million.

Charles gets his freedom.

Although aides have said he has no immediate plans to remarry, his old flame Camilla Parker Bowles is now also free.

The modern-day fairy tale romance of the beautiful princess and future king held endless fascination. But the real story of Charles and Diana's marriage was more like a tragedy: a mismatched couple whose problems were magnified by life in a relentless public spotlight.

British royal divorces

The Associated Press

Divorces in the family of Queen Elizabeth II:

OLDEST SON: Prince Charles and Princess Diana, married in 1981, announced agreement on divorce Friday. Could be final in about six weeks. They had two sons.

SECOND SON: Prince Andrew divorced from the former Sarah Ferguson on May 30, after 10 years of marriage. They had two daughters.

DAUGHTER: Princess Anne divorced from Capt. Mark Phillips on Apr. 23, 1992 after 19 years of marriage. They had a son and a daughter. She married Navy Cmdr. Timothy Laurence on Dec. 12, 1992.

SISTER: Princess Margaret divorced Lord Snowdon in 1978 after 18 years of marriage. They had a son and a daughter.

In a candid television interview last fall, Diana said the marriage began to founder after the 1982 birth of their first son, Prince William. She fell into postnatal depression, injured herself and took comfort in the binge-and-vomit cycle of bulimia.

She said her husband's family saw her as manipulative and temperamental and decided she was "unstable" and "mentally unbalanced" — labels she said stuck through her marriage.

When Charles renewed an affair with Mrs. Parker Bowles in 1986,

Diana said the marriage became "a bit crowded." By 1987, she and Charles were effectively leading separate private lives, but "we were a good, good team in public."

Charles admitted in 1994 to having had an affair after his marriage broke down. Diana also confessed to having an affair with retired army officer James Hewitt, whom she says she loved.

The divorce culminates years of reports on the troubled state of their marriage, ranging from best-selling books to tabloid stories leaked by friends to television interviews that riveted an international audience.

Queen Elizabeth II finally decided that enough dirty laundry had been publicly aired after Diana gave the TV interview without palace approval. In December, the queen told her son and daughter-in-law to divorce quickly.

Charles, 47, immediately agreed. Diana, 35, said yes in late February. Reports of acrimonious negotiations hit the newspapers, so the queen intervened again and final dealings were conducted privately.

On Friday, Diana was at Kensington Palace with her children, William, 14, and Prince Harry, 11. She later drove off in a car with a friend. Charles played host to visiting South African President Nelson Mandela in the morning and spent the rest of the day privately, Buckingham Palace said.

Lawyers Farrer and Co. on behalf of Charles and Michael de Reya on behalf of Diana, said in a statement that after "amicable" negotiations, the couple had agreed on divorce terms and a "confidentiality clause."

An interim divorce decree will be granted on Monday. A final decree will be issued Aug. 28, the lawyers said.

Under the settlement, Charles and Diana will continue to share responsibility for their children.

Buckingham Palace said Diana will be regarded as a member of the royal family, will continue to live at Kensington Palace, and will occasionally be invited to state and national events.

Saddam foils another coup attempt

CAIRO, Egypt — Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein has reportedly foiled a coup attempt by disgruntled military officers, the latest in several failed plots to remove him from power since the end of the 1991 Gulf war.

Iraqi dissidents and Arab sources said Friday at least 50 officers, including two commanders, were arrested last month on suspicion of preparing for a military attack to topple Saddam.

The dissidents, reached by telephone in neighboring Jordan, said all the suspects are Suni Muslims and some of them are trusted officers from Saddam's hometown of Tikrit. Hussein — also a Sunni — counts on the Sunnis as his main power base.

Aging ruler delared in good health

BAD OEYNHAUSEN, Germany — Indonesian President Suharto was declared in excellent health Friday after three days of medical tests for heart problems and a kidney stone.

Doctors at the clinic in north Germany said the 75-year-old Suharto, Asia's longest-reigning leader, was prescribed drugs to control a "negligible" heart valve problem. They said the kidney stone poses no immediate danger.

Suharto returned to the Indonesia capital, Jakarta after his checkup. Compiled from wire reports

Disguises fail to help escape

JERUSALEM (AP) — Three Islamic militants serving lengthy terms for murder and attacks on Jews tried to escape from prison Friday disguised as Muslim women.

The ruse didn't work. Dressed in veils and long floral print robes, the inmates were caught as they tried to leave prison with a group of visitors. Prison guards said they became suspicious because of the veils — not customary attire among Palestinian women — and because the three looked down as they walked by.

The inmates escaped through a hole carved in the floor of their cell, leading into the visitors' section below. They are members of Islamic Jihad, a militant group dedicated to the destruction of Israel. The Prison Authority has ordered an investigation into the incident.

Penguin has good posture

The only bird that walks altogether upright is the penguin.

During a Hollywood screen test in 1935, a sophisticated young actor named David Niven, not the late, was asked to say something outland. He recited in dry clipped British a dirty limerick about an old man from Leeds. Such be our mistake Niven goes, and the limerick hangs around.

The scholars who produced the Oxford English Dictionary hired a special editor to compile all the words beginning with "Q."

If U.S. postal workers mishandle only 15,000 pieces of mail every hour, they're still dealing properly with 99.9 percent of the mail.

Q. How much money did science-fiction author Arthur C. Clarke make on his invention of the communications satellite?

A. Exactly $40. He elected to publish his "bright idea" in "Wireless World," but did not personally try to detail its development.

If the dolphins are healthy, the sea water is still all right - dolphins make up an early warning system to detect oceanic pollution. So may the sea detectors.

Q. How many full-time flooties are on the White House staff?

A. Five. At last report.

The pack camel can be expected to cover territory just about as swiftly - 15 mph - as a 12-dog sled.

"Every year you walk, long ago gets farther away," Mark Twain said that.

Minico splits, TF wins in RBI tournament

By Kevin Miller
Times-News writer

RUPERT - Virtually unbeatable at home during non-tournament games, Minico still cannot shake the curse of the RBI Tournament.

The Spartans lost their first game of the American Legion AA-baseball tournament on Friday to Smithfield, Utah, 4-3, making it difficult for Minico to get into Sunday's championship game. The Spartans rebounded in their second game, pounding Ogden 12-7.

Twin Falls, second-place finishers in the RBI Tournament a year ago, is still in contention following a 4-3 win over Ogden. If the Cowboys can get by Smithfield at 11 a.m. this morning and Minico at 5 p.m. this afternoon at Burley, they will be in Sunday's championship game again.

5 p.m. Pocatello vs. Nampa at Burley
11 a.m. Twin Falls vs. Smithfield

An Idaho team has never won the RBI Tournament. Nampa, 12-11 winners over Treasure Valley, could change that. The winners of the B division takes on Clearfield at 11 a.m. and Pocatello at 5 p.m. at Minico.

Minico 12, Ogden 7
The Spartans rallied late to keep from being blanked on the first day of their own tournament. Brock Crystal broke open a close game with a pair of RBI doubles in the sixth and seventh innings. His first double staked Minico to a two-run lead when he drove home Ben Frank.

In the seventh, Crystal's double brought home three runs, putting the Spartans up 12-4.

His only two hits accounted for one-fourth of Minico's eight safeties in the game.

"He was about the only kid who hit it well in the first game too," Minico coach Russ Wright said.

Nathan Rich, who drove in two runs with a sixth-inning single, gave up only four hits to collect the win.

Jerome feels fencing's chivalrous allure

By Myndee Larsen
Times-News correspondent

JEROME - Imagine Errol Flynn gallantly swash-buckling his way across an elaborate Hollywood set, putting an end to a villain's reign of terror and making the heroine swoon with one mighty stroke of his sword.

Now, for the first time, the elegance of fencing will grace the stage at the First Security Games in Boise.

"It will only make the Games better because fencing rules," said Lee Carter, an avid fencer in Jerome.

Southern Idaho has developed its own fencing community, centered at the Jerome Recreation District. Jeff Frost currently heads Jerome's program, but was passed the torch by the founder, Mechelle Wood.

"Mechelle Wood fenced throughout the Northwest and felt committed enough to the sport to offer it to Jerome," explained Frost.

Commitment to the historical art of fencing demands full mental and physical attention. "It's aerobic and requires your whole body as well as a great deal of strategy," said Frost.

Despite the total body involvement, fencing is easy to learn and merely requires practice to master.

"After you learn the basics, it becomes a matter of refining the basics. All the moves are based on a core of basic things you would use," Carter said.

Competition is head-to-head combat with an opponent, but Frost explained that there is an individual element of the sports that brings great satisfaction.

"Although you fence against another person, you actually compete against yourself and how well you're prepared," Frost said. "People like that aspect of fencing."

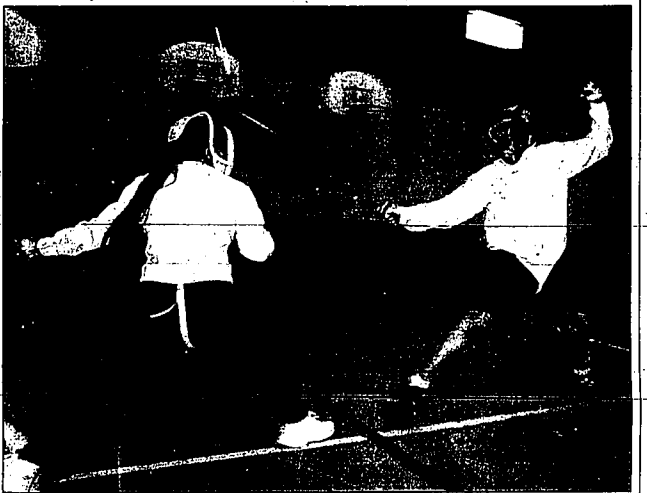

Fencers are armed with three different swords. The first is the foil, which is the weapon of practice.

Second, is the epee or weapon of intelligence. "In epee, the target is the whole body from the foot to the top of the head. So, your mind must be open and your defenses must be going," Carter said.

The saber is the third sword, called the weapon of argument because it has a reputation for settling a fight by incorporating a sense of risk and danger.

Fencing classes

The Jerome Recreation District offers fencing classes for children and adults. Classes will be held Friday nights, beginning in late September. The cost for adults is $15 for Jerome County residents and $20 for out-of-county residents. The cost for children is $12 for Jerome County residents and $15 for out-of-county residents. Adult beginning foil fencing - 8:30-9:30 p.m.; Child beginning foil fencing - 7:30-8:30 p.m.; Advanced Weapons fencing - 7:30-8:30 p.m.; Intimidation and advanced foil fencing - 8:30-9:30 p.m. Pre-registration for these classes is required. To sign up or for more information call the recreation district at 324-3389.

Fencers Michèle Schwartz, left, and Allen Mewes practice their fencing technique at the Jerome Recreation District gymnasium under the instruction of Jeff Frost.

"The saber is like true sword fighting because there is some pain involved. You are actually cutting each other and it's very fast-paced. The saber is an aggressive weapon, not for the meek," said Carter, who placed third in saber competition during the 1994 Spokane Jui Open.

Sword-fighting has experienced a recent resurgence and Jerome's club is feeling the effects.

"People are coming out of the woodwork. We have people from Hailey coming over to participate. Most people tell me they took it as a college class, but couldn't find an outlet for it after school," said Frost, who began fencing at a junior college in San Jose, Calif.

Carter was a major player in the reinstatement of fencing at the University of Montana, where the participants taught themselves. Training with Jerome's instructors has been an eye-opening experience.

"I thought I was good until I came here," admitted Carter. Frost hopes the future of fencing in Southern Idaho, will include opportunities to spark the interest of a younger generation.

"I'd like to see fencing offered at the high school level. It has some of the same benefits as some of the run-of-the-mill sports," Frost said.

An individual can get started in fencing for under $200 and the advantages last a lifetime.

"Like the martial arts, fencing teaches a wonderful tradition of etiquette, important for everyone to learn," Frost said. "I'm happy to see anything that promotes fencing."

The First Security Games will debut its fencing events today at the West Valley YMCA in Boise, beginning at 8 a.m. Frost and Carter will resume a regular fencing schedule in the fall at the Jerome Recreation District.

Undhjem 1-puts way to Kelly Invitational title

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS - When the one-putt returned on the back nine, Virginia Undhjem's victory in the annual Kelly Women's Invitational was assured.

Entering the second day of the 36-hole medal play event, Undhjem's two-shot lead began growing most immediately, although that was due more to a poor start by runner-up Shauna Robinson than Undhjem's scoring.

By the turn, Undhjem was breezing with a five-over-par lead and that's the way it ended.

"I felt I played solid golf throughout the tournament, nothing spectacular but never getting into any major trouble," said Undhjem.

She worried a little about what was happening behind her in the other title flight groups because "I had only one one-putt on the front nine. I didn't feel I was putting that badly, the ball just wasn't going in the hole," she said.

But that changed on the back nine where she had five one-putts - "a couple that saved me (pars) and a couple for birdies."

She ended the day with an even par 72 and a two-day total of 145. That put her five shots up on Sara Thompson who promised "I'm never going to take a mountlyoff from golf and then enter a tournament the first week end back."

Robinson said she was disappointed in her tournament. She opened with a 76 but Friday was simply a struggle.

"I didn't have any disastrous holes. I just kept making bogies, giving up strokes about every hole," she said. "I started back on No. 1 and it just never got any better. I never found a rhythm."

2 stand out in Men's Amateur

By Larry Hovey
Times-News writer

JEROME - Stop me if you've heard this before: David Molitor of Pocatello and Scott Masinigg of Payette tied for the opening lead in the Idaho Men's Amateur Golf Championships Friday.

Between them they've won 11 titles - Masinigg holding the edge - and they are going to be tough to chase over the Jerome Country Club today and Sunday. The championship flight draws the early start today.

Molitor and Masinigg, five-under at 67, will have more than the usual pack chasing them, too. Idaho Golf Association Executive Secretary Lyman Gallup said the group has increased those eligible for title consideration to include what for all other purposes will be the first flight.

He said under the old criteria, only championship flight members were eligible and those basically were limited to

Puckett bids baseball farewell

Eye trouble forces Twin to retire at 35

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Kirby Puckett, the roly-poly Minnesota Twin center fielder who was one of baseball's most beloved, retired Friday after an operation revealed irreversible damage to his right eye.

Puckett, 35, underwent surgery early Friday in Baltimore and then flew back to Minneapolis with his retinal specialist, Dr. Bert Glaser, for a news conference at the Metrodome to announce his retirement.

"The world is not over," said Puckett, with his ever-present smile and a bandage over his eye. "Baseball has been a great part of my life. Now I have done this chapter and go on with part two of my life."

Puckett was joined at a news conference by his wife, Toni, and several Twins teammates, many of whom had tears in their eyes as he spoke.

"Don't take it for granted," Puckett said. "Tomorrow is not promised to any of us, so enjoy yourself."

Puckett always did on the field, whether it was hitting a game-winning home run or leaping above the center-field wall to rob someone of a homer.

One of baseball's most popular players in an era of sometimes smaller stars, Puckett won two World Series titles with the Twins. He retired with a .318 average in 12 seasons, and finished his career with 2,304 hits, 207 homers and 1,087 RBIs.

Puckett awoke on March 27 and was unable to see out of his right eye. He was diagnosed with glaucoma and underwent several laser surgery treatments.

On Friday, Glaser performed a vitrectomy to remove fluid from Puckett's eye, but the damage to his retina was too severe.

"There's very little, if any, blood supply nourishing the retina and, sadly, no further treatment is available," said Glaser, of the Retinal Institute of Maryland. "Basically, the retina will not recover from this status."

A video tribute to Puckett's career was planned for the seventh inning Friday night.

"It was a pleasure for me to be able to sit and watch every game that he played," Twins manager Tom Kelly said. "How lucky am I?"

Kent Hrbek, Puckett's longtime teammate who retired in 1994, said the affable outfielder was "fun to play with and a joy to be around."

"I'm just happy I can say I played alongside of him," Hrbek said. "I had the best seat in the world to watch him. If we were, kids and he was on my block, he'd be the first guy I'd pick for my team."

"He's one of the nicest human beings in baseball," added Twins general manager Terry Ryan.

"We're never going to replace Kirby," Puckett said.

"Puckett helped the Twins win the World Series in 1987 and 1991, but said that his greatest thrill was just making it to the major leagues.

"The only regret I have about this game is that I know I could have done so much better if I could have played," Puckett said.

He told his teammates that he loved them and would miss them. He also advised them not to get discouraged.

"You can't get four hits every game. Well, maybe Knobly can, and Molly," he said, referring to teammates Chuck Knoblauch and Paul Molitor.

Puckett said his immediate plans were to buy a boat and go fishing with Hrbek. He didn't rule out coaching, but indicated that he might be more interested in broadcasting.

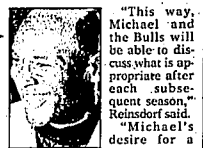

"This is the last time you're going to see Kirby Puckett in a Minnesota Twins uniform," he said. "It's a tough day for me. I've missed baseball ever since March 28."

"I was so looking forward to playing with Molly (Molitor). There's nothing I wish I could do more than hit behind Molly and Knobly."

Puckett hit 20 or more homers six times and had three seasons with 100 or more RBIs. His best year was 1988, when he hit .356 with 24 homers and 121 RBIs. The following season, he won his only batting title with a .359 average.

Jordan, Bulls agree to $25 million contract

CHICAGO (AP) — Michael Jordan will be the NBA's highest-paid player — at least for one year.

The league's premier player and the Chicago Bulls agreed to a one-year contract Friday worth at least $25 million. It is the richest one-year contract in team sports history.

"This way, Michael and the Bulls will be able to discuss what is appropriate after each subsequent season," Reinsdorf said.

"Michael's desire for a one-year contract is refreshing in this era where athletes often seek to be paid beyond their productive years," he said.

Terms of the contract were not divulged by the Bulls but a team source, who spoke on condition that he not be identified, told The Associated Press the deal was worth at least $25 million.

The contract still has not been signed.

While his agent David Falk and Bulls chairman Jerry Reinsdorf were negotiating over the phone in conversations that Reinsdorf said lasted less than an hour, Jordan was playing in a celebrity golf tournament in Lake Tahoe, Nev.

He could not immediately be reached for comment.

Jordan had said at the end of last season that he would be looking for at least $18 million per season. Falk quickly jumped in and said Jordan was worth at least $20 million to $25 million figures began to circulate.

"It is Michael's desire to be the highest-paid player in the game," Falk said earlier. Another Bulls executive, New York Knicks center Patrick Ewing, made $18.7 million last year, but that was part of a long-term contract and not a one-year deal.

Jordan's career of unparalleled excellence with the Chicago Bulls has featured four NBA titles, eight scoring championships, four MVP awards and a worldwide following.

He already makes an estimated $40 million in off-the-court endorsements but his contract had been a bargain for the Bulls, compared to other salaries for lesser players. Jordan made about $4 million in salary last season.

Reinsdorf said it was the 33-year-old Jordan who requested the one-year deal, "because he never wants to play if he is unable to meet his own high standards."

Losing Jordan would have caused a civic crisis in Chicago, where he is given deity status.

A statue of him stands in front of the United Center, proclaiming him the greatest player who ever lived. It was erected when Jordan was on a 17-month respite from basketball.

He ended his retirement after trying minor league baseball. He came back late in the 1994-95 season, then rolled to another title, winning 15 of 18 playoff games.

Jerry Krause, the team's vice president of basketball operations, said in the statement that Reinsdorf and he shared a common goal — "to do whatever it takes to bring another NBA championship to the city of Chicago. Without a doubt, today we took another giant step toward accomplishing that goal."

Falk, who has 14 NBA free agents as clients, put it this way: "This contract is the testimony to Michael's unique contribution to the Chicago Bulls franchise, the United Center and the city of Chicago."

Dancer: Irvin used drugs Man sues Barkley for bar incident

DALLAS (AP) — Michael Irvin personally strip-searched and threatened a topless dancer whose testimony he feared in his felony drug possession case, she tearfully testified Friday.

Under questioning by prosecutor Mike Gillett, Rachelle Smith, 24, told the court outside the presence of the jury that the Dallas Cowboys receiver made her remove her clothes before searching her thoroughly on two occasions after she testified before a Dallas County grand jury on March 24.

Smith testified that during the second search, as she sat on the edge of a bathtub wearing only a towel, Irvin issued a warning to her not to buy drugs from Dallas police officer John Hernandez.

"He said, 'If I suspect that you're wired or that you've screwed me, you'll never see John or the light of day again,'" Smith testified.

Irvin signed an order earlier Friday granting Smith immunity from prosecution in exchange for her testimony.

Irvin was indicted on a second-degree felony cocaine possession charge April 1. It carries a punishment ranging from probation to 20 years in prison.

The case stems from a March 4 drug bust at a motel in the Dallas suburb of Irving where police say Irvin was found with former Cowboys teammate Alfredo Roberts, a receiver who has pleaded guilty to cocaine and marijuana and cocaine. The women, Angela Beck and Jasmine Nabwangu, also were indicted on drug charges. Roberts was not.

Hernandez was arrested June 27 on a charge of trying to force Smith to have Irvin killed.

Smith also testified that on another occasion, Irvin met her and Beck at Dallas Cowboys teammate Kevin Williams' house.

Irvin told Smith he had a script of her grand jury testimony and demanded that she go back and change it, Smith said.

"He said that I should not be afraid of the district attorney's office. I should be afraid of him, because he's more powerful," Smith testified.

He just said that he would make me look like a weak witness. His lawyers would tear me apart. Everyone would hate me, and he would make a touchdown and everyone would love him again."

Smith is resting 2 1/2-hour testimony ended for the day as defense attorney Don Godwin began questioning her about her drug use, sexual practices and medical history.

Smith is to resume Monday without the jury present. Alvarez will rule on how much of Smith's testimony the jury can hear.

Smith's testimony appeared to clarify the relationships among some of the parties in the case. She said she and Beck were close friends and that Beck had periodically stayed with her and Hernandez for several months beginning in November in their house in the Dallas suburb of Cedar Hill.

Smith, Beck and Nabwangu were all topless dancers at The Men's Club, Smith testified. Smith and Beck also had danced at New Orleans Nights in Fort Worth, Smith said. Smith said she did not tell Hernandez about her relationship with Irvin until after the drug bust.

Smith, wearing an ivory silk pantsuit and high heels, testified in a soft but clear voice that her involvement with Irvin began when she and Beck rented a room Feb. 5 at the same motel where the drug bust occurred a month later.

She said that was one of three times that month that the three met there for sex and to use drugs provided by Irvin. Smith testified that she registered, sometimes under false names or addresses; paid cash; and was later reimbursed by Irvin.

The later visits occurred on Feb. 12 and Feb. 19, she said.

Smith testified that after she and Beck checked in, Irvin would come in with cocaine and marijuana. Irvin rolled up crack cocaine and chipped chips of the drug into then-smoked, she testified.

Smith admitted trying the marijuana-laced cigarettes on Feb. 12, but they made her ill, she said. On other occasions, she used only cocaine, she said.

Gillett asked Smith about sexual activity among the trio during any of their three motel stays.

"Was there any sexual activity on that night?" Gillett, referring to Feb. 12. "Yes," she responded.

CLEVELAND (AP) — A New York man sued Charles Barkley on Friday, seeking $50,000 in damages from the NBA player and the bar where they got into a fight.

Job Tyler, 23, from Spencerport, N.Y., alleges in a civil suit that Barkley punched him several times in the face and head at a Cleveland dance bar early Sunday. Barkley was in town for a game with the U.S. men's Olympic basketball team.

Barkley told police that Tyler made a loud comment to a woman who was with Barkley and fellow Dream Team player Reggie Miller, and that Tyler attacked him.

Tyler contends he was permanently injured and will require further medical care. He also claims he lost pay because he was unable to do his job as a business equipment salesman.

The lawsuit seeks $25,000 in compensatory damages from Barkley and The Basement, and the club where the fight took place. It also seeks at least $25,000 in punitive damages from Barkley, or an amount deemed appropriate by a jury.

Tyler said he decided not to seek criminal charges, partly because he did not want the legal system to interfere with Barkley's participation in the Olympics.

"There are two factors," Tyler said. "Him missing the Olympics, and me being put in the media spotlight for him missing the Olympics."

The civil suit, filed in the Cuyahoga County Court of Common Pleas, alleges that punitive damages are necessary because Barkley has been in bar fights before, in Chicago and Milwaukee.

In an earlier interview, Tyler admitted that he was in a bar fight in college.

Tyler accuses The Basement of failing to protect patrons during the fight. The suit also claims that bouncers failed to restrain Barkley and kicked Tyler out of the club, but not Barkley.

An employee in the public relations office of Barkley's NBA team, the Phoenix Suns, said she did not know if the player had received the lawsuit. She said no one was available to comment.

Barkley has said that Tyler's accusations were motivated by money, and that he would not settle.

Craven wins pole position in Jiffy

LOUDDON, N.H. (AP) — Ricky Craven made it one day back from Talladega on Friday, and he made the trip in record time as a home crowd waiting to welcome him.

"This is a perfect homecoming," he said after winning the pole for Sunday's Jiffy Lab 300 Winston Cup race at the New Hampshire International Speedway.

"This is personal. I don't know if it compares to anything. This is the most rewarding situation I've been through in Winston Cup," he gushed, before last year, he took the year's honors last year, he added. Certainly better than his other pole at Martinsville.

"This is as good as it gets. There is only one thing that can get me more excited, and you can guess what that is," he said of Sunday's race. It would be his first Winston Cup victory.

Craven began racing in neighboring Maine, and lived for a time in Concord, N.H., just down the road from the track.

The emotions of returning home with a pole showed again and again as he talked about his record run of 123.375 mph over the 1.058-mile oval.

Mark Martin held the mark of 128.815 set in qualifying last year when Craven finished a disappointing 31st.

None came close to him Friday with Bobby Hamilton his nearest challenger at 128.806 mph. Bobby Labonte was third, Kyle Petty fourth and series point leader Dale Earnhardt fifth.

Craven's fame so far comes from the spectacular crash he survived on April 28 at Talladega. The sight of his car hurtling through the air, hitting a wall, was shown over and over on television. When it came to rest, it was smashed almost everywhere except the driver's seat.

Miraculously, Craven was not seriously injured, and after a few days in the hospital, he was racing again a few weeks later.

"We were prepared to win early in the season — we came this close," he said, holding his fingers barely apart. "We were dealt a bad hand at Talladega and it set us back. This is a boost, a morale booster for us to get back in the top 10."

"A lot of this is psychological and confidence, and my confidence is at an all-time high. Now it's time to start posting a win. We need a win."

Swiss cyclist wins Tour's 12th stage

LE PUY-EN-VELAY, France (AP) — Swiss cyclist Pascal Richard outwitted a nine-man break Friday to win a Tour de France stage for the second time in his career.

Richard pulled ahead of Denmark's Jesper Skibby and Mirco Guidi of Italy to win the 89-mile stage while overall leader Bjarne Riis of Denmark kept the yellow jersey.

Riis, with a total time of 53 hours, 11 minutes, 26 seconds, led Yevgeny Berzin of Russia by 40 seconds. Tony Rominger of Switzerland, none the worst from a fall a day earlier, was third.

Richard said he pretended to be tired in the final climb in the shortest scheduled stage of this year's Tour in an otherwise unspectacular race from Valence to Le Puy-en-Velay where the overall leaders finished in the main pack, 15 minutes, 13 seconds back.

"I pretended I was blown on the last hill," said Richard, who beat American Lance Armstrong in a sprint finish in the Liege-Bastogne-Liege World Cup race in April.

"Everybody knows when I break, it's a good break," said Richard.

Five-time defending champion Miguel Indurain lost no time in the rolling stage through France's Massif Central and remained eighth overall, 4 minutes, 38 seconds back.

Switzerland's Pascal Richard leads a nine-man breakaway on his way to victory in the 12th stage of the Tour de France between Valence and Le Puy-en-Velay, central France Friday.

Floyd, Bland, Irwin share Senior lead

DEARBORN, Mich. (AP) - Ray Floyd decided he would rather work on his golf game than quit and the extra practice could be paying quick dividends.

"I said before the tournament that I had addressed my game and I was not happy," said Floyd, who shot a 6-under-par 66 Friday at the Senior Players Championship to share the 36-hole lead with John Bland and Hale Irwin.

"You've all heard me say if I don't feel competitive I'm not going to play. I was getting to the point where I wasn't competitive and of course, I don't want to quit. I'm not ready to quit so I went to work on my golf game and it's paying dividends."

The trio had a 7-under 137 total for two trips around the 6,876-yard TPC of Michigan in the four-day major tournament of the year. Irwin had a 67 Friday, while Bland had a 69.

Lee Trevino, Bruce Summerhays and Jerry McGee were another stroke back, while defending champion J.C. Mead and Bob Charles were at 139.

First-round leader Tom Weiskopf followed Thursday's 66 with a 79 that included a double-bogey 6 on No. 12 and a double-bogey 7 on 17.

The Jack Nicklaus-designed course continued to play relatively easy as 32 players broke par on the 6,876-yard layout in the second round. One of them was Joe Jimenez, who matched his age and shot a 70.

Twenty players shot 71 or better in Thursday's opening round.

Floyd, who has struggled for an official tour event since winning the Emerald Coast Classic last November, birdied No. 1 with a 10-foot putt after his tee shot ended up in a fairway bunker.

It was one of only two fairways Floyd missed in the round that included six birdies and one bogey. Floyd misjudged the wind on the par 3 8th hole and wound up with a bogey.

"Playing as well as I did today and yesterday from tee to green is feeling very good about myself. During my career I've given the effort much longer without getting any results.

"Now I expect to shoot a good round and I haven't had that feeling for quite some time."

Irwin used an eagle 3 on 13 to vault into a share of the second-round lead.

He hit a driver, then a 4-iron to the edge of the green and made a 35-foot putt.

He continued a string of 3s that began with a par on 12 with a 12-foot birdie putt on 14; a 6-foot putt for par on 15 and another 6-foot birdie putt on 16.

"I really needed something to be a momentum maker," Irwin said of the long putt. "It was a confidence builder."

Hoch leads Michelob tourney

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) - Scott Hoch was buying one of golf's oldest axioms.

Hoch's putting stroke left him but his long game returned Friday, and he's 3-and-par 68 in the second round of the Michelob Championship gave him a two-shot lead. It also put a bigger smile on his face than his 64 had on Thursday.

"Today was much better than yesterday. I just got the worst out of it after getting the best out of it yesterday," said Hoch, whose 32 putts were more than he needed Thursday on the 6,797-yard Kingsmill Golf Club.

"If you're playing well, it's easier than when you're scrambling, even if the putts are not going in," he said. "They say it all even out, and it evened out today."

Mark McCumber, the only three-time champion in the field, moved into contention at 135 after a 67.

3 tied for lead in LPGA event

WARREN, Ohio (AP) - Amy Fruhvirt, Barb Mucha and Kelly Robbins shot 5-under-par 67s Friday and were tied for the lead after the opening round of the Youngstown-Warren LPGA Classic.

Fruhvirt played a bogey-free round, while Mucha and Robbins each overcame three bogeys by making eight birdies on the 5,305-yard Avalon Lakes Golf Course.

Kim Saiki, Catrin Nilsmark, Kathy Postlewait and Tammie Green were one shot behind in the $500,000 tournament that has a winner's share of $80,000.

Defending champion Michelle McGann was three over on the front side but finished with a 71, thanks in part to an eagle 3 on the 451-yard, 18th hole.

Fruhvirt, who has never won in her three years on the LPGA tour, began play on the back nine and quickly asserted herself by making an 18-foot birdie putt on the 362-yard, par-4 10th. She made the turn at 2-under 34 and added birdies on Nos. 3, 6 and 7.

Recently she went through a stretch in which she missed four cuts in five weeks.

Woosnam holds 3-stroke lead

CARNOUSTIE, Scotland (AP) - Ian Woosnam shot a 2-under par 70 Friday to take a three-stroke lead after three rounds of the Scottish Open.

The 38-year-old Ryder Cup player is trying to win this event for the third time, and win his third European Tour event this season.

Russell Claydon of England and American Jay Townsend, tied for the lead when the round began, shot 73 and 74 respectively. The Claydon slipped to second place, and Townsend to a tie for third.

Townsend, one of just two Americans who plays regularly in Europe, had birdies at 12 and 13 and an eagle on the next hole, but then closed with three bogeys to fall four strokes off the pace.

European Tour money leader Colin Montgomerie shot a 71 to fall four strokes off the pace with Townsend. Scotland's Paul Lawrie and Rolf Muntz of the Netherlands.

Simply smashing

Yevgeny Kafelnikov of Russia returns a ball to opponent Francisco Clavet of Spain during the quarterfinal match at the Swiss Tennis Open in Gstaad Friday. Kafelnikov, the French Open champion, will face sixth seed Alberto Costa of Spain in today's semifinals. Costa, the only other seeded player left in the tournament, dispatched Italy's Renzo Furlan 7-6 (7-4), 6-2.

Edberg 2 matches from Swedish title

BASTAD, Sweden (AP) - Stefan Edberg, in his last year on the Tour, moved another step towards his first Swedish Open title Friday with a 6-3, 6-4 victory Friday over fellow Swede Thomas Johansson in a quarterfinal match.

Edberg is retiring at the end of this season.

Twice a finalist in this tournament, the former top-ranked Edberg will face yet another Swede, Magnus Gustafsson, in Saturday's semifinals.

Gustafsson, a clay court specialist seeded fourth and twice a Swedish Open champion, whipped No. 6 Tomas Carbonell of Spain 6-1, 6-1.

Carlos Costa, the second-seeded Spaniard, will play No. 5 seed Andrei Medvedev of Ukraine in the other semifinal.

Seles to meet Date in Fed Cup

NAGOYA, Japan (AP) - Monica Seles, co-ranked No. 1 among women players, will play Kimiko Date, who made it to the Wimbledon semifinals, Sunday in what figures to be highlight of the Fed Cup semifinals between the United States and Japan.

When the series begins Saturday, Date, ninth in the rankings, takes on 10th-ranked Lindsay Davenport. Seles, winner of the Australian Open in January, plays Ai Sugiyama.

On Sunday, Seles plays Date while Davenport meets Sugiyama, who reached the fourth round at Wimbledon. Seles is co-No. 1 with Steffi Graf in the WTA rankings. In the doubles match Sunday, the last event of the best-of-5 series, Sugiyama and Kyoko Nagatsuka will meet Gigi Fernandez and Davenport.

Christie loses pre-Atlanta race

LONDON (AP) - Linford Christie's Olympic buildup took another major blow Friday when he finished second to Jamaica's Michael Green in his last race before he defends the title in Atlanta.

Although running into a headwind, Christie also had a modest time as both men clocked 10.26 seconds at Crystal Palace. Green, who finished second to Christie at the Commonwealth Games two years ago, was declared the winner in the photo-finish.

On a night when world champion Allen Johnson won the 110 meters with ease and world record holder Jonathan Edwards cruised to victory in the triple jump, Christie seemed to be struggling.

Instead it was Green who had the lap of honor before the British fans while their hero made this announcement to the fans over the microphone: "I'm ready to take on Atlanta."

"I wasn't very happy with that, but Atlanta is the only one that matters," Christie said.

The words seemed a little hollow after his fourth consecutive loss and the fact that it also was against a field far below the quality he will meet in Atlanta.

There was no sign of world champion Donovan Bailey, leading American Dennis Mitchell and the possessor of the fastest time in the world this year, Frankie Fredericks. None of the other seven runners Christie raced against in front of his own fans are likely to make it to the Olympic final.

Johnson was fastest out of the blocks in the hurdles and was two meters up on a high quality field halfway through.

He was timed in 13.20, beating countrymen Jack Pierce and Terry Reese and Britain's Tony Jarrett.

who was a silver medalist at the Seoul Olympics. Pierce finished .31 behind in second place as Johnson finished two spaces clear.

The world champion has won three of his four races in Europe and now wants to put all the good parts of his performances together.

"My middle of the race was good in Lausanne and Stockholm and here I got out of the blocks extremely well," he said. "If I can put all these races together it will be a good time in Atlanta - 12 something.

Missing from the field was world record-holder Colin Jackson because the Welshman decided to miss to meet and get to Atlanta early.

Christie has certainly got it in him to run fast at Atlanta," Johnson said. "Although I bear him in Lausanne, he was with me and if he hadn't dipped too soon, he could have won."
