Ketchum hitches good times to annual Wagon Days festival

By Liz Wright
Times-News writer

KETCHUM—Even an army of shovelers couldn't defuse every land mine planted by well-fed animals Saturday during the Wagon Days parade.

A tough job, that of exorcising a determination. But it didn't faze Nick Portillo, 18, of Bellevue, one of roughly 20 workers who cleaned in the wake of dozens of equine-drawn wagons.

"I'm one of the few, the proud, the poop-scoopers," Portillo said.

The audience cheered and groaned as giggling baton twirlers and high school marching bands stepped—and misstepped—their way down Sun Valley Road and Main Street Saturday.

Between the human entries, wagons of nearly every size wound their way around town. A quack pushed his medicine on the laughing-crowds-Musicians on large horse-drawn flatbeds played country-fiddle tunes and old-time jazz.

"Those look like American people," exclaimed Haley Johnson, 5, of Hailey, pointing to the Democratic party wagon festooned with flags and political signs.

Many people said they came to see the famed "ore wagons," the towering, narrow wooden haulers that carried ore from mines to smelters in Ketchum about a century ago.

The wagons symbolize the city's history, a time when Blaine County dug silver for a living. The wagons hauled "galena"—lead—and silver ore—to the Philadelphia Smelter in Ketchum from the surrounding hills.

"To think they came over Trail Creek," said Mary Romano, of Vienna, Va., who was born in Bellevue. "It's very

Fighting Idaho fire with fire sparks debate

GATTIN RANCH—The computer models didn't predict this. Ash fell steadily from the smoke-filled sky, and fire hoses snaked around Bert Wohlschlegel's cabin. Fire was raging through the forest beyond a ridge four miles away and, if the wind kicked up, firefighters told Wohlschlegel, the fire could hit Gattin Ranch within hours.

Wohlschlegel stood by his log cabin and surveyed a yard full of memories. He pointed to a ring of stones around some foot-high pines—a memorial to his daughter, Becky, who died three years ago at age 23. How she loved those little trees, he said.

What if all this burned?

Wohlschlegel didn't want to talk about it. He gazed up at the smoke-shrouded sun, blood red at midday.

Camp Albion—B3

"Damn smoke," he muttered.

The West is burning as it hasn't in nearly three decades, and among the biggest blazes is one called the Sweet Creek Fire, in the Bitterroot National Forest along the Idaho-Montana border.

It is no ordinary fire. Sparked by lightning July 9 in the Frank Church-River of No Return Wilderness, it was designated a "prescribed natural fire" by Forest Service officials.

Instead of dousing it, they planned to let it burn for the good of the forest. Their computer models showed that even a worst-case scenario would char no more than 18,000 acres, all within the wilderness. But the fire had its own design. Over the past

Veto likely awaits bill keeping waste out of Idaho

By N.S. Niekentved
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS—A controversial bill that would open a temporary storage site in Nevada for highly radioactive waste, such as some waste stored in Idaho, is expected to pass in the House this month.

Even then, the fight is far from over. President Clinton has vowed to veto the Nuclear Waste Policy Act of 1996. The Nevada delegation is fighting it tooth and nail. The Energy Department doesn't think much of it either.

For the time being, though, the battleground is the House, which will reconvene this month prior to adjourning for the fall elections. The bill, introduced in the House by Idaho Republican Rep. Mike Crapo, has 186 co-sponsors and is expected to pass, Crapo spokeswoman Susan Wheeler said.

A similar bill, sponsored by Idaho Sen. Larry Craig, passed the Senate on July 31.

Craig says the bill would move spent reactor fuel and other high-level waste now stored at the Idaho National

Iraqi-Kurd clashes put U.S. on alert

President orders military to prepare for possible deployment to Gulf

Newsday

WASHINGTON—In a cautious response to Iraq's bold conquest of a key Kurdish city in U.S.-protected northern Iraq, President Clinton placed U.S. forces in the region on high alert Saturday and sent in reinforcements, but did not order any military action.

Clinton, who was on a four-state, post-convention bus tour, said at a small rally in Troy, Tenn., that the attack Saturday by 30,000 to 40,000 Iraqi troops caused "high grave concern" but said it was "highly premature to speculate on any response."

White House officials said the attack on Irbil, the headquarters for international humanitarian aid, violated a U.N. resolution setting up a safe haven for Kurds in northern Iraq. "It is a very bold and very aggressive move that cannot be overlooked or ignored," said a senior U.S. official.

Clinton's response, with elections just two months away, is bound to have political implications at home, particularly if Iraqi troops take additional territory.

A top Clinton aide said the main focus in the coming days will be diplomatic steps, perhaps with help from Mideast leaders.

But there was no sign that Clinton intended to use force to wrest the city from Iraqi control. The administration has not called for a session of the U.N. Security Council or urgent special con-

Man critical after evening shooting in Twin Falls

By Liz Wright
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS—A man was shot and critically wounded at the intersection of Shoshone and Second streets Saturday night.

Police hadn't arrested anyone by 9:30 p.m., and didn't know the name of the victim, who they said was in critical condition at a hospital.

Saturday evening, as onlookers gathered, police interviewed witnesses and chronicled the evidence—namely, a pool of blood and a pair of black sneakers in the middle of Shoshone Street.

Witnesses said they heard a gunshot, then saw a man lying in the middle of the street. Seconds later, a silver low-rider pickup with a blue stripe drove up, and two men got out of the truck, loaded the shooting victim into the pickup bed and drove off, said Emily McKenzie, 23, of Twin Falls.

"His leg was hanging over the trailer and they drove off," said McKenzie, who was sitting nearby with her friend when she heard a gunshot. "It was fast, very fast."

"I've never seen anything like this happen," McKenzie said. "To see it happen here, it's sad."

What's next?

The House is expected to consider the Nuclear Waste Policy Act of 1996 in September.

Craig is confident that he can muster enough votes to override a veto, spokesman Bryan Wilkes said this week. The bill passed July 31 corrects most of the concerns raised by critics of an earlier version of the bill.

But Clinton has not changed his mind and remains adamantly opposed to the bill. Brian Johnson of the White House Council on Environmental Quality said in a telephone interview Friday afternoon.

One Nevada official thinks Craig is bluffing to pressure the president. "We don't think he has the votes to

Chicago Tribune

CHICAGO — The two grand spectacles have ended. A few hundred million dollars have been spent to rally the obvious. The ritual roll of the states has been called. The cascade of balloons has been released from on high and on cue.

And voters are left with this: The last presidential election before the dawn of a new century will be decided on the small stuff. Small does not necessarily mean unimportant; some of the issues raised could have a direct effect on aspects of the lives of millions of Americans. But the two national political conventions in Chicago and San Diego were more remarkable for their sameness than for their differences.

Though Labor Day launches the traditional, quadrennial sprint for the White House, the race has been under way for at least two years. Now, both the Democratic incumbent, President Clinton, and his Republican challenger, Bob Dole, are attempting to win over an estimated one-quarter of the electorate that hasn't made up its mind.

"The campaign is obviously one for the hearts and minds of independent voters," said Stephen Wayne, a Georgetown University professor who specializes in studying the presidency and elections.

During the conventions, each side took the activist portion of its party and locked it in the moment. The Republicans' right wing, dominated by highly motivated social conservatives, prevailed on the party platform only to have Dole run away from it when he formally was nominated.

Democrats allowed Clinton's critics some brief stage time, but they secured their place because they also agreed to heartily endorse him. It took Jesse Jackson fewer than 12 hours after his speech to revert to form and vigorously deride Clinton's decision to sign the new welfare legislation.

The conventions were sanitized, vanilla shows, three days of prelude before the one hour of speaking by the presidential candidates.

"They are so anachronistic in some ways," said Chicago-based political consultant David Axelrod. "Basically, they are presidential campaign rallies, not nomination conventions. The roll calls have become painful to watch."

Residents of West Viola, Ky., cheer on Bill Clinton's entourage as the president's 'On the Road to the 21st Century' heartland bus tour rolls past on Highway 45.

Clinton and Dole tried to carve a great divide to persuade voters, but their agendas in most respects differ only at the margins. This is the first presidential election where the echoes of the Cold War are so distant, and the threat of a single, menacing enemy is so faint that voters will not cast their ballot based on who they believe would be the finest commander in chief.

And the economy, though laced with strong strains of anxiety, is relatively stable with low inflation and low unemployment. So the targets of opportunity to move voters are smaller.

Clinton and his Democrats have appropriated some traditionally Republican themes such as tax cuts, concerns for inflation and reducing the role of the federal government. Dole and his Republicans tried to market themselves as the party of diversity and compassion, butwork hallmarks of the Democrats for at least 30 years. Dole and Clinton both have offered a tax cut. Dole's would cut individual income tax rates by 15 percent over three years. Clinton's targets a capital gains tax cut on the sale of a home. Both favor a $500-per-child tax credit.

On foreign policy, rarely a determining factor in a time of peace, Dole and Clinton also do not have profound differences. Moreover, neither is devoting much attention to his party's either retaining or retaking control of the Congress.

"All this leaves the two parties and the two candidates neutralized to a certain degree and what's going to make the difference of who wins and who loses is how people feel compared to four years ago, and who really has his sights on the future," said Bruce Newman, a DePaul University professor who studies political strategies. "You have two candidates with similar packages to offer."

The scripts for each convention were notable in the words they almost entirely omitted, namely Republican and Democrat. "Two of the words most disliked in the English language are Republican and Democrat," said Frank Luntz, a Republican pollster.

Instead of ideas, each party played heavily on sentimental themes bordering on exploitation. "The convention compassion derby may help each party marginally, but basically they come out with the same images they had before: The Republicans want to cut the budget and there are a lot of social conservatives on the GOP side, while the Democrats are more likely to favor spending and Clinton is not as liberal as the other Democrats," said John Pimey, a professor of political science at Claremont-McKenna College in California.

Dole fine tunes anti-drug plan

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Accusing President Clinton of sending his "a two big deal" message on drug use, Republican nominee Bob Dole worked Saturday to complete his plan to use the military and National Guard in an all-out assault on illegal drugs.

While Dole was at his Washington, D.C., headquarters hammering out specifics to be unveiled Sunday before the National Guard Association, his running mate, Jack Kemp, was promoting the GOP economic package and its $548 billion in tax cuts.

Meeting with some 200 workers at a Phoenix manufacturing plant, Kemp lambasted Clinton's initiatives — including targeted tax cuts for education and homeowners — as "2,700 new programs to micromanage the economy, to socially engineer our society."

Fire

eight weeks, it has swept across more than 34,000 acres and still is going strong. Officials say it may burn until the snow flies.

Out of the wilderness and out of control, the Sweet Creek Fire is testing the government's commitment to a dangerous enterprise — restoring fire to the Western landscape.

For a month, the fire behaved as if it had read the 45-page burn plan prepared for it by Forest Service managers.

From the 7,000-foot-high ridge where it started, the fire crept to way slowly downhill through lodgepole pines to Sweet Creek, then climbed uphill to join another small lightning-sparked fire. Flames jumped across the Selway River on Aug. 10, right on schedule.

The fire missed some spots and burned others lightly, creating a mosaic of scorched and green areas that will provide diverse wildlife habitats in years ahead. It was just the thing managers agreed, for an overgrown forest clogged with dead wood from decades of overzealous fire suppression.

Then came the wind — three days of wind, gusting to 40 mph from the southwest. It fanned the crackling fire to a thunderous roar and pushed it through valleys filled with tinder-dry logs. Flames shot 200 feet high. While mountainsides turned black, bushy pines became charred poles poking up from the ash.

The fire raced eastward, eight miles in three days, and managers looked ahead on the map to a highly flammable Idaho and Montana. Maybe that will stop the fire, they thought.

It didn't. Wind tossed embers over the ridge, and the blaze ran downslope, past the wilderness boundary and out of the "maximum manageable area," the zone within which managers believed the fire could safely burn.

On Aug. 14, the fire was declared a wildfire, to be fought with whatever resources were at hand. But by then, it was too late. The blaze had grown too big to stop, and there were precious few resources at hand.

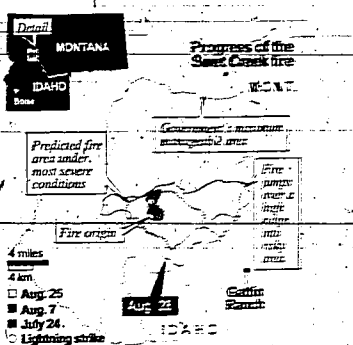

Other fires were breaking out across the West, stretching fire crews thin. For three days, there wasn't even a helicopter to be spared for the Sweet Creek Fire.

The weather gave firefighters a week-long respite — cool and humid, with a sprinkling of rain. But by Aug. 23, the fire had reawakened. Temperatures soared into the 90s, and relative humidity dropped into the teens. The eastern edge of the fire resumed its downhill march, torching into trees and repeatedly flinging embers over lines dug by firefighters.

Along its southern flank, meanwhile, the fire bulged out into heavy timber. A mile-wide wall of burning trees sent a smoke column 20,000 feet up — so high it formed an anvil-shaped ice cap like those atop thunder clouds.

Dick Hodge, incident commander for the firefighting effort, flew over the fire last weekend. From a helicopter, he pointed to flames boiling up from the trees, and to sun-dried logs stacked in front of the fire like kindling.

"If you had somebody out in front of that, they wouldn't have a chance," Hodge said. "We can't put any people there. It's not defensible."

By Sunday, Aug. 25, firefighters were laying hoses around the seven homes at Gattin Ranch, a 100-acre patch of private land at the edge of the wilderness.

As yellow-shirted firefighters uncoiled hoses down to House Creek, homeowners dashed around their yards, clearing debris and wetting down walls. Bert Wohlschlegel, 55, handled branches into the forest as his son, Perry, 35, shovelled up a big lodgepole pine lying by the driveway.

Fire has a place in the woods, the Wohlschlegels agreed. But the Forest Service ought to be more careful about which fires to allow, they said.

"If it's September, late in the year, that would make more sense," Bert said. "Then the fire wouldn't have time to spread."

"When it's a bad fire season, they ought to catch a fire when it's small," Perry said. "This fire's so big now, there's nothing they can do."

They aren't the only ones with complaints about the federal government's growing use of deliberate fires, including California's, and the federal government is one candidate about prescribed fire's threat to populated areas.

And no fire official can forget 1988, when fire swept across more than a million acres of Yellowstone National Park. Politicians made scapegoats of managers who had authorized lightning-sparked prescribed blazes there.

Yet even in an incendiary year like this, in which the area burned nationwide has surpassed 1988's 5 million acres, federal land managers are forging ahead with plans to greatly expand their use of prescribed fire.

Why so bold? Stephen Kelly, Ritzman supervisor and one of three officials who authorized the Sweet Creek Fire, explained that for all the arguments against prescribed fire, there is one big argument for it: The West is meant to burn. "This is risky business," Kelly said. "But you risk it now, or risk it later."

Last week, the weather gave firefighters on the Sweet Creek Fire another break. Daytime temperatures dropped out of the 90s, and a thunderstorm brought a light rain. The fire slowed its advance, nibbling mostly at unburned patches within.

But the fire hoses remained in place at Gattin Ranch, and nobody was relaxing. Any day, the wind could return. Any day, the temperatures might soar again. Only the cool weather of autumn will slow this fire, and only the first snows will put it out for certain. "We could be done by mid-September," fire behavior analyst Mark Woods said. "Or we might be here through the end of October."

While the daily forecast is not certain, the long-range outlook is, Woods said. Just look at the hills, where young pines crowd around the charred trunks of trees killed in past conflagrations. "Fire has been here before, and it's going to come again," Woods said. "When you look at the old fire patterns out there, you realize we ain't touched nothing yet."

Source: TWA crash investigators puzzled by chemical location

SMITHTOWN, N.Y. (AP) — Investigators are perplexed by the latest discovery of explosive traces on wreckage of TWA Flight 800, a source said Saturday as approaching Hurricane Edouard forced divers and ships to leave the area.

The newest chemical trace was not in the same area as an earlier discovery, the Washington source said The Associated Press.

The second finding of chemical residue was announced Friday by the FBI and the National Transportation Safety Board. Though authorities would not officially identify the chemical, two sources identified it to the AP as RDX.

A week earlier, sources said the FBI had discovered traces of another common explosive ingredient, PETN, on a piece of flooring from the center section of the plane, which exploded 11 1/2 minutes after leaving Kennedy Airport for Paris on July 17. The crash killed all 230 people on board.

"This is from a different area," the Washington source, speaking on condition of anonymity, said of the newest discovery. "And it's on a different piece of wreckage from the plane."

Our fabulous fest in Filer — it's summer's last stand

Visiting the Twin Falls County Fair this year is like seeing your favorite aunt with a new hairdo—she's familiar and beloved, but she's spiffed up. The fair is the climax of summer in these parts. Like the bride in a wedding, it makes its entrance after the other festivals of a Magic Valley summer. It's a grand final fling before autumn's gravity drags us into a long, steepening slide to the solstice.

We gather at the fair each year to admire the prize livestock and to eat the kind of food our moms never cooked at home. We clap for the rodeo cowboys because, "There's all the pay he's gonna get 't'night, folks." We loiter on the grass for catch-up conversations with friends we too seldom see.

We want the fair to last and last, because we know that shorter days and colder nights are revving up behind it. This year's fair has all the traditional delights of a rural fair. The livestock. The pies. The dutch-oven chicken. The antique tractors.

But there are new things this year, too, reflecting our own slow shift toward urbanness and (dare we say it?) sophistication. The Imagination

Gallery offers children some whiz-bang science lessons, along with a chance to touch a snake bigger than you'd care to meet at home.

This year's rodeo had a classy new name—Magic Valley Stampede—and new features such as the wild horse races. Also video screens for instant replay. Are we going big-time, or what?

This year's fair even includes a touch of the exotic. Emus. Jugglers. Alaskan salmon.

A year ago, the fair's leadership was in turmoil over unhappy exhibitors and the politics of rodeo-queen pageants.

The jury is still out on the success of this year's fair under its new manager, John Pitz, but early impressions seem positive.

What matters, though, isn't the gate count or the administrative details. It's the sound of the midway, the smell of the corn dogs and the bittersweet goodbyes of 4-H kids selling their sheep and pigs.

It all makes summer worthwhile and winter bearable. Only two days left. See you in Filer.

In defense of IEA's position on fingerprinting

Monica Beaudoin

In what seems to be its semi-monthly swipe at the Idaho Education Association, The Times-News editorial staff has hit a new low. And, as usual, The Times-News editors have half cooked up a batch of "facts" and laid them out for all of us to chew on as the whole meal.

While I know it won't change any of their minds, their sloppy reporting and conclusion-drawing cannot be left unchallenged, especially when they tell you we're against kids and for criminals.

As a classroom teacher who has dedicated the past 31 years of my life to teaching junior high and high school students in Sandpoint, Idaho, I find their accusations insulting, mean-spirited and downright dumb.

Here's the real truth with regard to the development of Idaho's new fingerprint bill for school employees. The IEA supports it. We support the call for fingerprinting educators during their first five years of employment. And we also support the local control that the Legislature has decided to decide if they want to fingerprint everyone else.

Would asking a 30-year Twin Falls first-grade teacher who's "appropriately" hugged hundreds of 6-year-olds to march down to the local police station and smack her fingers on the stamp pad be professionally demeaning? How about unnecessary? Even ridiculous?

Well, the Legislature happened to agree with the IEA on this one, in spite of the over-the-top reaction it probably knew would come from The Times-News editors. Said legislators: Communities know what's best for them. Let them decide if they want to check every teacher, regardless of her age, experience or proven service to her students and their parents.

And by the way, Times-News, that decision is left up to local school boards—not the teachers' association. So, if a district decides not to check everyone, we guess that's how the decision-making process we call local control works. Funny how that ranks The Times-News editors.

Finally, if The Times-News folks had bothered to call and talk with me about this issue instead of simply contemplating their own contrived set of facts, they would have found that even before the Legislature adjourned, I had written to all of the IEA's local associations to say this about the new law: "We are an organization of people who care deeply for our state's students, and we place their safety above all else. While we stand tall for ensuring all education employees receive due process protections, we are anxious to rid our profession of those who might choose to abuse their positions of power and authority."

"We ask each of you to work collegially with trustees, administrators and parents to ensure that the goals of safe schools for children and fair treatment for educators will be achieved in every Idaho school district."

So, next month, when The Times-News editorial staff spews out its latest half-baked opinion of the IEA, we suggest readers do what we do: chuckle, shake your heads and pray that no one ever asks if the authors are graduates of Idaho's public schools!

Monica Beaudoin is the president of the Idaho Education Association.

The world according to IEA

If you believe Monica Beaudoin, black is white and up is down.

Beaudoin is president of Idaho's teachers union. In a Reader Comment elsewhere on this page, Beaudoin righteously insists that her union "supports" the new law requiring criminal background checks and fingerprinting for school employees.

Sure. After successfully fighting to water down the bill, the union supported it. Does Beaudoin want a medal?

Under the new law, employees with more than five years on the job don't have to be fingerprinted. That leaves a huge loophole that convicted child abusers and other criminals may slip through.

Why? Because of intense lobbying by the state's most powerful union, that's why. Because Monica Beaudoin argued that fingerprinting veteran teachers would be "professionally demeaning."

Yet Beaudoin piously brags about putting the safety of students "above all else." For shame.

Beaudoin is right about one thing. Until the Legislature plugs the union-backed loophole in state law, it's up to local school boards to make sure all employees get checked.

Ask your local school board members whether they required fingerprinting for all employees this fall. If they didn't, demand to know why not.

Coroner decision not informed

Regarding our recent decision to reduce the Twin Falls County coroner's office budget by $20,000—I thought it important to share with our citizens how this decision was made.

First, I did a survey of counties larger than Twin Falls (Ada, Kootenai, Canyon, Bonneville and Bannock) of salaries and annual budgets.

I then used Bannock County as a comparison because it most resembled Twin Falls in size. According to its coroner, the budget is $44,000 with a part-time coroner and three deputies.

Twin Falls County's coroner's budget is $62,000, with a full-time coroner, six deputies and a part-time secretary. Our coroner's salary—$32,500; Bannock's—$15,077.

According to the Bureau of Vital Statistics, Twin Falls County total deaths from 1991 to 1995 have increased by 83 deaths. Cases requiring certification from the coroner has averaged 123 per year or 10 per month.

Based on this information and conferences with Mr. Turley, we made an informed decision based on fact and not on emotion.

Mr. Turley and his staff do a fine job, and he should be commended for vol- unteering his time to educate the youth on the effects of using smokeless tobacco.

But our citizens, time and time again, remind us that we must operate in the most efficient manner we can.

Examples of other areas where we have reduced staff or saved money in changing operations are: treasurer's, solid waste and assessor's offices.

We centralized all county purchasing of office supplies and have saved more than $50,000 and centralized long-distance service and saved more than 25 percent.

Decisions like these are difficult because they affect real people. Nonetheless, as a commissioner, I am ever mindful of using your money wisely.

Clinton 'vision' is blind to real problems

The wife of the man who says the era of big government is over told convening Democrats that helping Americans find time to get their dogs to vets is a first responsibility (see paragraphs 20 and 21 of her speech), so the nation needs a new element, to "flex time" for employees. No one laughed. What the nation really needs is a blue ribbon commission to study the death of America's sense of humor.

Her husband, whose recent rhetoric suggests that government is becoming the caliber of the families from which its pupils come. The crucial variable is family structure—not the pupil-teacher ratio but the parent-pupil ratio. Family disintegration, now producing social regression in the midst of rising prosperity, is the problem driving most other serious problems, and Thursday night Clinton simply had nothing serious to say about it.

Although he supposedly has a hearty appetite for policy arguments, he evidently missed the last 30 years of them. In the mid-1960s there was an intellectual consensus: As Pat Moynihan ruefully remembers, "everyone knew" that economic conditions determine social conditions. Then two lines on a graph crossed ominously—one showing decreasing unemployment, the other showing increasing welfare dependency. Full employment, the fundamental goal of social policy at the beginning of the postwar period, would not suffice.

Instead of offering the country a statesmanlike, measured, sober, appraisal of the disproportion between today's problem and any proven solutions, Clinton breezily served up some hardy, perennial money for jobs programs and for (mostly Democratic) mayors, tax incentives for companies to hire welfare recipients.

However, the last 30 years have taught how few problems can be engineered away by adjusting monetary incentives.

GEORGE F. WILL

And evidently Clinton does not know what we do not know, which is how to bring jobs back to blighted neighborhoods, or how to make the currently dependent competent to fill them. Hence the banality of his legislative laundry list.

Well, the tumult and the shouting dies, the captains and the kings depart, and perhaps the banality of contemporary politics should be a national boast. The definition of politics is not a bad coda to this century.

However, government, although now despised, has had substantial domestic successes. Far from producing "uncontrollable" deficits, its revenues now match outlays for programs—the budget would be in balance, but for debt service. Inflation, once considered a disease endemic to democracy, is controlled, as are business cycles, which used to produce surges of unemployment huge enough to threaten social stability.

We are sadder but wiser than in 1966 when Sargent Shriver, head of President Johnson's "war on poverty," was asked how long it would take to win the war and replied "about 10 years." However, we have largely eliminated one kind of poverty—financial distress among that portion of the population possessing the accumulated social capital of good habits.

Still, as Moynihan says, there is more social dysfunction in the United States than in any other industrial nation.

"The central conservative truth," he writes, "is that it is culture, not politics, that determines the success of a society. The central liberal truth is that politics can change a culture and save it from itself." About that latter truth, the leader of liberalism's party, has, on the evidence of Thursday night, nothing plausible to offer.

President 'Bull' Clinton: A (toll) bridge to the 21st century

In his acceptance speech, President Clinton spoke of building a bridge to the 21st century. Given the proposals for new projects, programs and spending, he apparently has a toll bridge in mind.

The speech was vintage Clinton—all form and little substance with just enough truth to mask the deception. If the era of big government is over, then Bill Clinton wants to replace it with a giant orphanage that will care for citizens' every need and every dream without regard to race, creed or character.

Notice how the character question was handled in the midst of the publicity surrounding his former campaign adviser Dick Morris' alleged fling with a prostitute. The president said when he was growing up, parents whipped children who talked disparagingly about other people's character. Does he recall the bigger whipping kids got for behavior that called their character into question?

In view of the large proportion of teachers union members in the crowd, wasn't it curious that the president promised to send volunteers into the schools to teach kids how to read? Shouldn't his statement be interpreted as an indictment of the public school system and teachers that have failed to teach kids to read properly?

Incredibly, they cheered him as if he had just told them they were doing a great job. Speaking of kids, who is going to pay for all those computers the president wants students to have by the next century? And what about the millions of costs for venturing into cyberspace? When government wants to spend your money, it is doing something noble. When you want to keep more of your money, you're greedy.

It was Christmas in August as Santa Clinton started throwing money around like Mylar confetti. He proposed a "GI Bill" for American workers but only for two-year community colleges. He wants a tax deduction of up to $10,000 per year for college tuition costs and tax-free IRAs for college. And on and on it went. How much of this does Clinton believe and what will he really push for? On the ride to Chicago, the president attempted to railroad the voters by promising $10 billion in new government spending.

The goody bag aside, there were plenty of factual errors and laughable assertions in the president's speech.

Clinton, who hired Joveyln Elders as surgeon general (a woman who believed in legalizing cocaine and marijuana), smokes cigars and told MTV if he had it to do over again he would have inhaled his marijuana cigarette, claimed, "It is very painful to me that drug use among young people is up."

Clinton wants credit for 10 million new jobs, a lower job-growth rate than the 1980s. The Wall Street Journal reported that a third of the new jobs paid workers 80 percent or less of what they had previously been earning. And nearly 10 percent of the new jobs are temporary positions. The president ignored the decline in earnings for many, the result of higher taxes which necessitate two income earners in a family when many would prefer only one to work outside the home.

The president again claimed "we're putting 100,000 police on the streets." In fact, Attorney General Janet Reno admitted three months ago that "there are only 17,000 officers that can be identified as being on the streets."

Crime? The president announced that the crime rate has declined for the last four years. According to the Department of Justice, violent crime victimizations are up by more than 500,000 and juvenile crime is up 12 percent. This includes a 17 percent increase in robberies, an 11 percent increase in aggravated assault and an 8 percent increase in murder.

The president took credit for "40 million Americans with more pension security, a tax cut for 15 million of our hardest working, hardest pressed Americans and all small businesses."

In fact, according to Investors Business Daily, the tax burden has increased under Clinton. Tax Freedom Day was April 30 in 1992, marking the end of a five-year decline from 1987. But it's been advancing ever since, with both 1996 and 1995 record-breaking years for high taxation.

There's so much more, but space does not permit. Clinton and company produced more bull during his party's convention than Chicago's old Union Stockyard.

Nuclear waste agreement is short-sighted foolishness

If a store owner were to tell his clients that his current prices would not go up for 40 years, you would think that person was either ignorant or a fool. The same thought would go through your mind if someone agreed to not raise or lower banking rates for the next 40 years.

Forty years is a long time, and it is impossible to anticipate what things will be like that far in the future.

It seems to me that to make a deal such as our nuclear waste agreement that holds no one accountable for 40 years is just as foolish.

Apparently, our governor and attorney general are not only elected officials but also magicians because they have looked 40 years into the future and they see "no problems."

My problem with this hocus-pocus is that it is not based on reality or a historical perspective of any kind. Anyone who can take some time for research and study will find that promises made by governments are broken.

Thus, we have the term "sovereign immunity," which means that the government cannot be held accountable for any unfortunate accidents or breaches of contract. The halls of Congress ring with the words: "That was then, this is now."

When Gov. Batt was elected, I photocopied the best of about eight years of research/study and sent it to him. The postage was more than $6, but I knew that if he would just read the facts, he would continue to block the waste shipments. He signed the agreement, without public input, before my package even made it to Boise.

Batt must have looked into the future... and saw a $200 an hour consultation fee. Why not? That's what McClure and Andrus are getting.

Nunez article nothing but sensationalism

As a member of this community and a subscriber to The Times-News, I am appalled at the so-called information that was plastered across the front page of Sunday's paper, Aug. 18, concerning John Nunez. It was something I'd expect to read in the "Enquirer."

I know John Nunez to be a good man who treats others with the utmost respect and kindness. His first concern is for his family, who are also decent people living a sincere lifestyle.

This article, filled with grasping accusations and unsubstantiated claims, did nothing but lay a cloud of suspicion over his family and place unfair burden on the shoulders of his children.

One can only assume the purpose of this article was to use sensationalism to sell papers by butchering the integrity of one man.

I was under the impression from numerous journalism classes that the intent of the "news" paper was to print the facts, unbiased and true. I was grossly under the impression that people were deemed innocent until proven guilty in a court of law.

Apparently, our board members have been sadly mistaken.

Snake River Sugar Co. being misrepresented

It is distressing to see your reporter repeatedly misrepresenting the Snake River Sugar Co. in reporting the coming buyout of Amalgamated Sugar Co. by a local farmers' cooperative.

Election letters

Because of the Labor Day holiday, we're extending the deadline for letters about Jerome's school bond issue.

Letters about the election should be delivered to our office by noon Tuesday.

John Thompson, in his story in Friday's paper, says, and I quote: "The 223,000-acre figure includes 10,000 acres that the company will purchase... and make available to growers" in the Nysa-Nampa area.

That statement is incorrect, as Thompson could have learned had he listened to plans of the Snake River Sugar Co. The company will not purchase any of the available acres, according to board member Tom Garrard, although some individual members of the company may purchase acres and lease them to other growers.

I believe this is the same reporter who, at least three times over the past few weeks, misrepresented the cost of shares to the growers. I read statements in The Times-News at least three times in which it was stated that the grower would have to pay $50 per share down, and $350 per share in the fall, plus something like $60 per share each year over the next six or seven years.

This is absolutely false, as even growers know. To tell the public that the growers were going to have to pay this kind of money to grow sugar beets for the cooperative is inexcusable.

And now this misrepresentation in today's paper. May I suggest that someone who knows what is going on be assigned to edit this reporter's incredibly inaccurate reporting.

Overcrowding hampers learning at Jerome schools

We would like to encourage all who are able to vote in the Jerome School District to vote in favor of the bond issue set for Sept. 5.

Jerome High School's capacity was supposed to be 600 students. Presently, early numbers reveal that enrollment for the 1996-1997 school year approaches 1,000. To say that the high school is overcrowded is an understatement. Students indicate the hallways are so crowded that getting to the next class can become one of their greatest challenges.

While at school, we expect our children to learn. Overcrowding makes that responsibility much more difficult for those who are expected to discharge same.

We expect the school to maintain discipline and order. This becomes an almost impossible task when enrollment is almost 400 above capacity.

While we don't know how much overcrowding affects the drop-out rate, we do know that Jerome has the highest drop-out rate of almost any school around. A new school certainly could not make that problem any worse. Finally, it simply is not wise to continue to mix 14-year-old freshmen with 18-year-old seniors. This must change.

Is the proposed bond issue perfect? Probably not. However, it is close enough to be supported. If you read this paper, you have been told that interest rates are not likely to go down any time soon. Certainly construction costs will continue to increase, not decrease. Waiting will not bring the cost down.

We hope you will join us in voting in favor of the school bond. We believe we are responsible to take care of and see that needs of the Jerome students are met.

JAMES C. AND CHERIE MESSERVY
Jerome

'Yes' vote will give students opportunities they need

Let me urge the patrons of the Jerome School District to vote in favor of the bond levy on Thursday, Sept. 5. The levy will produce the funds for a new middle school and improve existing school facilities.

Our existing middle school and high school are severely overcrowded. Such conditions are not conducive to learning, thus depriving our students of maximum opportunities for success in our competitive world, as well as wasting money in the process.

The board of trustees and the administration have developed a reasonable plan to alleviate the situation and they need our support to put it into effect.

Let's give our support by voting "yes" for the school bond issue on Thursday, Sept. 5.

Eileen McGann says she will support husband Dick Morris.

Morris' wife intends to stand by her man

WASHINGTON (AP) — Eileen McGann says she has accepted the apology of husband Dick Morris — the former Clinton political consultant who abruptly resigned last week in a sex scandal — and wants to help him get through the crisis.

"This is a 20-year relationship. People have painful times in relationships, and this is one of them," she said in a Time magazine interview released Saturday. "I said, 'Let him who is without sin cast the first stone.' My advice was that we just had to get past it."

Neither McGann, 37, nor her 48-year-old husband commented on whether the allegations of a yearlong relationship with a call girl were true.

Morris repeatedly refused to discuss the scandal in a separate interview with Time. He said he has spoken to the president, Vice President Al Gore and the first lady by telephone, but refused to disclose the contents of the conversations.

"They were all very, very kind," Morris told Time. "I'm not going to say anymore."

Morris also said he will not be offering advice to Clinton informally during the presidential campaign.

"I've sent myself out of the game," he said. "I'm not going to run the campaign from the locker room. I told the president that."

Morris' relationship with Sherry Rowlands, 42, of Lake Ridge, Va., was disclosed after Rowlands sold her story to the supermarket tabloid the Star for an undisclosed sum of between $12,000 and $50,000.

Rowlands told the Star that on several occasions when she was with Morris he would let her listen in on telephone calls with the president. Morris also let her read Mrs. Clinton's prepared speech to the Democratic National Convention days before it was delivered Thursday, she said.

Meanwhile, two in three voters say the Morris scandal did not make them doubt Clinton's commitment to family values, according to a Newsweek poll released Saturday. The magazine said Princeton Survey Research Associates, the firm that conducted the poll, interviewed 401 registered voters by telephone on Thursday. The overall margin of error was plus or minus 5 percentage points.

Titanic expedition set to return with smaller relics than planned

BOSTON (AP) — The $5 million expedition that tried but failed to raise a large piece of the Titanic isn't returning empty-handed, and some of its collection goes on display Sunday.

The salvage operation ended Friday after lines used to lift a 21-ton piece of the Titanic's hull to within 70 yards of the ocean's surface snapped, dropping the huge piece of steel back to the sea floor. Expedition members decided to give up for at least a year.

But organizers had brought up several other artifacts from the ocean bottom — ranging from beer bottles to telegraph equipment — and planned to display some of them Sunday at news conferences in Boston and New York.

"At this point, we've got a pretty strong collection, so when they go out they're very selective about what they take," Todd Tarantino, spokesman for RMS Titanic Inc., said Saturday.

The "unsinkable" Titanic, then the world's biggest ocean liner, sank on April 14, 1912, after hitting an iceberg on its maiden voyage from England to New York. More than 1,500 of the 2,200 passengers and crew died. The wreckage was located in 1985 about 420 miles southeast of Newfoundland.

Vox pop: Four fingers or nothing

You folks who thought the two-fingered rodeo queen salute was the wave of the future have been a spendin' your spare time up to your withers in locoweed.

The results of the Don't Ask Me survey of Magic Valley attitudes toward rodeo royalty gestures are in, and it's a four-fingered triumph.

Of the 20 responses, 18 said they'd just as leave that rodeo princesses showed them the palms of their hands.

Here's a sampling of opinion:

□ "I definitely like the four-finger wave; would even vote to leave the thumb out to share in the glory. Where I grew up in Halfway, Ore., there was (an index-finger) wave always inside the windshield not far from the steering wheel. My uncle from eastern Idaho called it the 'Pine Valley Salute.' ... I think a full hand shows your openness and friendly intentions."

□ "I would like to see the rodeo queen and Miss Poise-and-Personality wave with four fingers. The others could ride in with the reins in their mouths and show their feelings on the judges' choice by waving to them with two fingers - (one) on each hand."

□ "Looks more like a wave, not a peace sign. The whole hand is more congenial."

□ "I compete in rodeo princess contests. Four fingers attracts more cute cowboys with Wrangler buns."

One of the two dissenters was Brent Crump of Heyburn, who wrote:

"Some queens have lost fingers while roping goats."

Ouch.

How come the Twin Falls County Fair doesn't have a competition for lawn ornaments?

I got me some terra-cotta dancing hippos that are just purrder than a calico bonnet on a day-old sow.

Plus some wooden luteins with tails that twirl in the wind, and a birdbath complete with a statuette of Betty Boop skinny-dipping.

And that's to say nothing of the four-piece quartet of Jack Russell terriers playing liar's poker.

Here I am, the Guggenheim of garden treasures, I got nobody to show them off to but the dog, who visits them frequently.

I was thinkin' about maybe charging admission to let folks see them, but sure as shootin', somebody would swipe the gargoyles.

And I just can't afford to lose them: They're the only things warding off the watching plastic skunks on the back porch.

Steve Crump, Times-News features editor, reminds you that sculptor Francois-Auguste Rodin's statue is French for, "pink plastic flamingos standing on one leg."

Filer man shot outside of home

FILER - A Filer man was shot in the arm Friday night during a fight outside of a home on Fair Avenue.

Jody Benitez, 26, was briefly hospitalized after someone fired a shotgun twice from a pickup that was leaving the fight, said Detective Sgt. Cliff Johnson of the Filer Police Department.

Local law enforcement stopped the pickup as it drove toward Twin Falls on U.S. Highway 30, Johnson said. Three men were arrested in connection with the 11:57 p.m. shooting: Paul F. Penna, 21, Ralph Compher, 21, and Jesus A. Mendoza, 20, Johnson said.

Filer police continue to investigate.

Gradually, a miracle reshapes El Milagro

Residents say clean homes, smoother streets have replaced labor-camp squalor

By Pat Marcantonio
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - Josefina Valenzuela expertly slips corn-flour dough between her two small hands until it becomes a tortilla. Then she places it on a griddle over the stove in her home at the El Milagro Housing Project on South Washington Street.

For 21 years, Valenzuela has lived there and has witnessed the squalor of a labor camp turn into what she says is a cleaner neighborhood of flowers and familia.

"I love it here," she said, as the tortilla turns golden.

Changes

The transformation began in 1988 when the Idaho Migrant Council purchased the Twin Falls Labor Center from growers who faced financial struggles with the camp.

Over the years, apartments with siding and storm windows have replaced barracks of splintered wood with holes in the roof. Burners and lights hanging by wiring have given way to modern appliances. With such changes, the project seems to have fulfilled its name, milagro, the miracle.

Manager Rudy Rodriguez says 428 people live in the 101 houses and apartments at El Milagro, which is open to low-income families.

There are 24 units for homeless single people and other apartments for migrants who work in farm fields, as well as emergency, temporary housing. Rent varies from $175 per month to $319 monthly for a three-bedroom apartment.

More than 90 percent of the residents stay year-round instead of traveling to different states for farm work, Rodriguez said. The change reflects what residents say is happening in agriculture - fewer jobs in the fields.

But that's OK with her children, says Bertha Hernandez, who lives next door to her mother, Josefina.

"They don't want to be in the sun. They want better jobs. That's why I tell them to go to school," Hernandez said, with a large smile like her mother's.

Hernandez remembers arriving at the then-labor camp when she was 17.

"That was when we had to go outside to the bathroom or the showers," she said.

Now bathrooms are inside, along with washers and dryers. Her mother's house has become an unofficial showplace with its display of zinnias and marigolds.

Valenzuela does miss the wood stoves from the old labor camp, which she says were better for making tortillas than the electric appliance. But she doesn't miss the noise.

"I like it when it's quiet, no fights, nada, nothing," she said.

Pride and freedom

As the buildings were repaired and barracks replaced, the residents took more pride in their homes.

"People didn't care (then)," said Maria Ordaz, who lives a few doors down from Valenzuela. "When they moved, they just trashed the place."

"It's a lot cleaner," said her husband, Ricardo, who still works in the fields in the summer.

On another street, Antonio Ortega cares for a huge garden in the backyard of his white and blue-trimmed house. With Rodriguez as his translator, Ortega said the housing project is much better

Top, Josefina Valenzuela shapes a corn tortilla in her house at the El Milagro Housing Project on Washington Street South, where she has lived for 21 years. Above, Andrew Hernandez, 11, goes for a jam while playing basketball with his brother, Steve, 9, in their grandmother's backyard. than those he was used to when he worked in the fields.

"I feel better. I have the freedom to put in a garden," Ortega said.

As if on cue, his son-in-law pulls out a giant squash from the lush greenhouse.

On streets and sidewalks, children enjoy the smoother streets at El Milagro, made possible by a $1 million project funded through a block grant. Gone are the dirt streets with holes large enough "to lose a car," as one person described them.

The city also installed new sewer and water systems in 1992.

Total costs of the renovations weren't available from the Migrant Council.

Near Washington Street, about 84 children of migrant workers play and learn at a Head Start summer program.

Although the buildings are located at El Milagro, most of the children come from as far away as Hazelton, said the program's Elmer Burnham.

Problems

Still, there have been problems at El Milagro.

Migrant worker Gustavo Quezada was shot to death during an October 1995 fight. In July, Oscar Jaco was sentenced to 15 years in prison for the death.

The next month, a man was wounded in a shooting.

In September 1995, former manager Alfonso Hernandez Jr. was convicted of embezzling rent money.

"And people don't know each other as well as they did in the old days."

The housing center used to seem more family-oriented, said Sister Rose Mary Boessen, who ministers to Hispanics. She remembers when the place was beautiful in the 1970s then deteriorated in the 1980s.

Even now, in the midst of a rebirth, some yards at the housing project are still messy, some parking areas are unpaved and weeds dot the 40-plus-acre project. Work continues on the community center, which used to house showers of urinals, plumbing.

There are plans to plant more grass, add a park and build more housing. "Little by little, you know," Rodriguez said.

"The Migrant Council has been steadily improving it, but it's taken them a lot of time to do it," Boessen said. "It's much better now."

"People are really enjoying it here,"

Queen Novak

The Times-News

FILER - Contestants from Hailey and Nampa rode away with crowns Saturday night at the Magic Valley Stampede.

Solbi Ann Board, 19, of Hailey, is the senior Miss Magic Valley Stampede after winning the horse-manship and appearance categories.

Don and Linda Board.

The first attendant in the senior contest is Ledi Gail Wolery, 18, of Payette, who won in public speaking and rodeo knowledge.

Wolery is a College of Southern Idaho student majoring in equine studies, with an emphasis in communications. She is the daughter of Jim and Linda Wolery.

Tiffany Novak, 16, of Nampa, netted the junior queen crown with a win in the speaking category.

She is a junior at Eagle High School and the daughter of Tom and Valerie Novak of Nampa.

The junior first attendant is Johanna Stasia Verkerk, 17, of Kuna, who took top honors in appearance.

A Twin Falls 14-year-old, Jenny Kinsey, won the congeniality and horsemanship categories in the junior contest and is the second attendant. She is a student at Vera C. O'Leary Junior High School and the daughter of Chris and Jan Knbs.

Microsoft founder funds frathouse

PULLMAN, Wash. (AP) — The incubator of the future is distinguished by its many parties or food signs, but access to the Internet and a communal computer center.

And the star isn't from the cast of the 1973 classic "Animal House" — it's Bill Gates, Microsoft's co-founder Paul Allen.

Gates' new may never be the same.

Allen spent $2.1 million to build Phi Kappa Theta's new high-tech frathouse at Washington State University.

"This house is a specialized house for the 21st century," said Phil Hauk, president of the Phi Kappa local chapter.

"We're wired up to the world." The phrase was repeated in the case of Bush Works in June August, when WSU's 41 fraternities and sororities recruit new members from incoming students.

"Glad the freshmen are going to this house," Hauk said. "People out in the world are coming through to see it."

There's plenty to see: Each of the sleeping rooms in the four-story house has built-in jacks to transmit voice, data and cable television, and link the two occupants to the Internet and the entire world of cyberspace.

Each room has a multi-line business-style telephone system that includes an intercom. We're still trying to figure out how it works," Hauk said.

It is the only frat house on campus with an elevator, in part to make it fully accessible to the handicapped.

The computer center contains six high-speed Gateway 2000 Pentium computers, available on a first-come basis.

There is central air conditioning, and each room has an individual climate control system, which also provides the outside temperature for appropriate dressing.

The parking lot has an underground heating system equipped with sensors triggered by cold, to ensure the lot stays ice-free in Pullman's chilly winter.

The lighted outdoor basketball court includes markings of the Portland Trail Blazers, the NBA team owned by Allen. There is a built-in barbecue pit.

There is a guest bedroom, called the Allen Room, for visiting alumni.

Interior decorators picked the furniture and carpeting. Wooden wainscoting is everywhere.

The 17,500-square-foot house, with a big-screen television and a pool table, will provide housing for 52 people in two-person rooms twice as large as those in other WSU frat houses.

And the monthly cost for residents, $425 for room and board, is cheaper than most because Allen donated the building and there is no mortgage to pay, said Hauk, a finance major from Olympia.

Allen attended WSU — and was a member of the Phi Kappa Theta fraternity — in the early 1970s before dropping out to join boyhood friend Bill Gates, a Harvard dropout, in founding a profitable little business known as Microsoft.

The fraternity fell on hard times in 1979, when its old student house was condemned as a fire trap. The structure was eventually torn down and the fraternity was defunct here until 1992, when a member from another campus transferred to WSU and decided to revive it.

The national organization awarded the WSU group a charter in 1995, even though they did not yet have a house.

Then Allen got involved, eager to give something back to his old school. He bought the lot where the old fraternity house had been and rebuilt on the same site.

"I never thought it would be this good," said Mark Blawie, founding member of the new fraternity. He graduated last year and now works for Microsoft as a software tester.

But he was back in the frat house last week helping members move in. The red-brick house, with white trim, large windows and a white cupola on the roof, evokes college buildings of the past.

But inside it is strictly the future. Damon Hahn of White Salmon was sitting in the computer center recently, playing a CD-ROM game called Command and Conquer.

"I plan to spend a lot of time here," Hahn said.

Cows welcome politicians are not welcome

PULLMAN, Wash. (AP) — Pigs and cows are welcome at the Whitman County Fair, but a forum of politicians is not.

The fair board decided this week that they would not allow a political candidates' forum at next week's fair because it was not in keeping with the agricultural nature of the event.

"It's a family atmosphere, and we just didn't feel it was the place for that sort of thing," fair manager Debbie Wells said.

"We have to do it, but the board just felt we want to focus on the kids, family and fun aspect," she said.

Wells said local Democrat and Republican political parties already rent booths at the fair to pitch their platforms, and candidates are welcome to greet voters there.

"I think everyone is disappointed and has some frustration," said Karen Kiessling, president of the Pullman League of Women Voters, which set up the forum. She said the fair was a natural location for a candidate forum.

"It's balloons and flags and a rural setting. This is Americana, and it's a great place to hold a fair. It's judging of pigs and cows — and politicians."

There's a lot more than sagebrush

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — So you think most of the eastern Idaho is covered with nothing more than sagebrush?

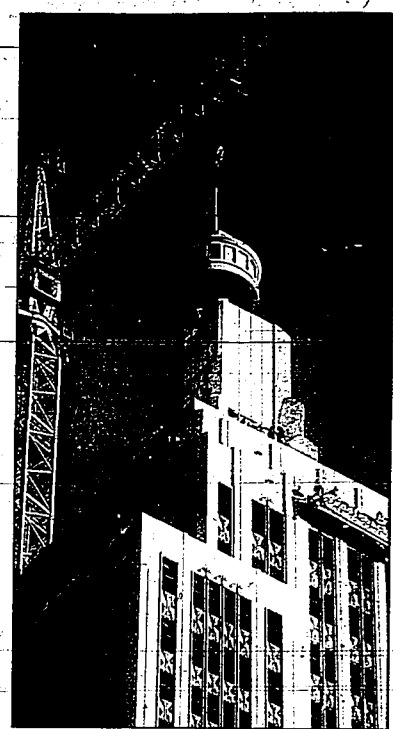

Think again. A team of plant specialists has found 472 species of plants on the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory, the immediately adjacent foothills of the Lost River and Lemhi mountain ranges and on the slopes of Big Southern Butte.

The Environmental Science and Research Foundation said plant specialists feel that the 550,000-acre federal research facility on the eastern Idaho desert includes the largest protected area of sagebrush steppe in the American West.

A report was published by the foundation. Affiliates from Idaho State University, with assistance from the prime site contractor, Lockheed Martin Idaho Technologies Co., wrote the report, released on Saturday.

"The INEL supports a rich diversity of native plants," said Jay Anderson, a foundation university affiliate and professor of ecology at Idaho State. He was primary author of the plant study.

"Because this area supports healthy populations of so many native species, it serves as a reserve of the genetic diversity of sagebrush steppe ecosystems. Such a high-quality expanse of undeveloped sagebrush steppe

A crane hoists the top of the Empire State Building in place Friday, topping off the 530-foot structure which is a part of the new New York Hotel & Casino resort in Las Vegas. Workers took 45 minutes to raise the 18,000-pound object which capped the $460 million project, jointly owned by MGM Grand Inc. and Primadonna Resorts Inc.

before the funeral on Tuesday at the church. Interment will be at the Mountain View Cemetery.

Memorials may be given in Jerrold's memory to a special family trust fund.

SHOSHONE

Henriette M. Newell

Henriette M. Newell, 86, a Shoshone resident, died Saturday, Aug. 31, 1996, at her residence in Shoshone.

Henriette was born March 30, 1910, at the family fruit ranch on Grand Island in the Sacramento Delta, Calif. She attended schools in Courtland and Shoshone and graduated at Castlejolla in Palo Alto, Calif. She married C.M. (Bud) Newell in 1933.

"They moved to a cattle ranch in Lincoln, Calif. In 1971, they moved to Shoshone where she had since resided."

Henriette is survived by her son, Charles of Shoshone; a daughter, Barbara, in-law, Donny, a grandson, Monte McNally of Ovation, Mont.

The family invites friends to join them at their home in Shoshone for a memorial celebration of Henriette's life at 2 p.m. Wednesday, Sept. 4, 1996.

In lieu of flowers, the family suggests remembrances be sent to Hospice Visions, 1300 Kimberly Road, No. 11, Twin Falls, ID 83301. Arrangements are under the direction of Demaray's Shoshone Chapel.

Maps' common names

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — What's in a name? Plenty, if it happens to be "Mill Creek" or "Spring Creek."

They are the most common names of geographic features appearing on U.S. maps, according to the Department of the Interior. In all, Mill Creek appears 1,473 times, just ahead of Spring Creek at 1,312.

The study said there are 10 categories of plant communities, ranging from lava rock to juniper woodlands.

Typically, native vegetation can be pictured as having two stories. Underneath a canopy of sagebrush are hundreds of species of lower-growing herbs.

About 40 percent of INEL has not been grazed by livestock for nearly 50 years. Lessening the impact of grazing has allowed the restricted area to remain much of southern Idaho's native flora.

Researchers found 85 percent of the plant species were natives.

"The INEL supports a rich diversity of native plants," said Jay Anderson, a foundation university affiliate and professor of ecology at Idaho State. He was primary author of the plant study.

"Because this area supports healthy populations of so many native species, it serves as a reserve of the genetic diversity of sagebrush steppe ecosystems. Such a high-quality expanse of undeveloped sagebrush steppe would be difficult to find elsewhere."

Firefighters need support too

By Jennifer Bunch
Times News writer

ALBION — Firefighters don't just measure a fire season's severity in numbers of scorched acres. They measure it in rolls of Dr. Scholl's.

After a week of battling the Elba fire, firefighters had used only half a roll of "Dr. Scholl's MoleSkin," the stuff that helps prevent foot blisters.

Typically, fire camp medics say, at least an entire roll is used each day.

The reason for firefighters' tough feet? Chalk it up to a busy fire season.

Nearly 200 firefighters and planners from around the country have camped out at the Albion State Normal School since Tuesday — day two of the Elba fire, which by Saturday had charred 11,300 acres of forest and range land and faced toward homes, ranches and Pomerelle Ski Area.

Today, officials expect to have it controlled.

The fire is just one of several blazing throughout the West. By the end of the week, more than 22,000 firefighters were battling more than 609,000 acres of fire, according to the National Interagency Fire Center in Boise. The national center searches its computer data bases to find available fire crews and engines to work major fires.

At the Albion fire camp, out-of-state crews are expected to begin heading home Monday after a week of sleeping in tents and using a horse trailer for a shower house.

"The camp isn't plush, but it's not too shabby for firefighters who wake at sunrise and don't return to camp until dusk. At the end of the day, crews march single file back into camp, with axes over their shoulders and the whites of their eyes shining through soot-covered faces."

"About all you look forward to is washing off the top layer, getting something in your stomach and hitting the sack," firefighter Mike Jarvis said.

Jarvis, who manages timber land at the Camp Lejeune Marine Corps base in North Carolina, has been a firefighter for 15 years. Elba is his first trip out west.

At sunrise, firefighters line up at a blue and white school bus for breakfast. At 7 a.m. they are briefed on the status of the fire and given instructions for the day's work before marching out to fight fire.

Often the work is tedious, said firefighter Rick Michol of Baker City, Ore. Among other duties, Dave Stich, left, Rick Michel and Ron Leroue attack a hot spot at the edge of the Elba fire's burn area. The three-man team is from Baker City, Ore.

Michel and fellow crew members Dave Stich and Ron Leroue have been "mopping up" — or hosing down and stirring — smoking ground to make sure no hot spots flare into flames.

Michel describes driving over an expanse of blackened range and looking for smoke. It's much different than Michel's usual line of work, logging. Yet fire fighting is a boost when the logging season slows, he said. The fire danger in eastern Oregon has been too high for much logging, so he and his crew have put away their chain saws and pulled out their fire hats. They have fought fires in eastern Oregon, and now in Idaho, since the end of July.

Back in camp, members of the Seagulls Wildfire Suppression team say they check postings of the latest football scores and national weather reports from USA Today. The young men are from Ogden, Utah, and are participating in a federal program that allows them to earn general equivalency or high school diplomas.

For this crew, Elba has been anything but dull.

The fire trapped the men Tuesday when it flared up and raced near homes in Elba and Connor Creek. They were digging a fire line when the winds picked up.

"The wind just came around

and blew up everything," Roger Martinez said.

Crew members ran to safety by crossing back into burned area and got far enough away from the fire, Lonnie Moffitt said. They had to wait for nearly an hour before the fire burned down, he said.

They watched while another crew found a break in the wall of flame and jumped through it to safety, then waited while firefighters downwind beat the fire away from homes.

"Why do firefighters continue to risk their lives? Jarvis says fire is simply "in his blood."

The camaraderie among firefighters and the chance to travel, he said, basically make a fire trip a paid vacation.

Pediatrician moves to Mini-Cassia

By Jennifer Bunch
Times News writer

BURLEY — The growing Mini-Cassia area has attracted its first children's doctor.

Recruitment of a pediatrician has been a top priority within the past year for medical staff at Cassia Regional Medical Center — at the community's request, hospital Administrator Richard Packer said.

Dr. Paul Genser, 48, from Tustin, Calif., expects to open his practice in an office suite at Parke View Care and Rehabilitation Center by the middle of the September.

Recruiting a pediatrician into a rural setting hasn't been simple, Packer said. The hospital has worked at it for a few years, while chipping away at meeting other local health care needs, he said.

Rural Idaho counties without specialists is typical, said Krista Kotz of the Department of Health and Welfare's Rural Health Division. Often, there simply aren't enough patients to keep a specialist busy, she said.

"What you're left with is the general practitioner trying to meet all your needs, which can be a very demanding requirement," Kotz said.

So people travel out of town for specialized care, she said.

Dr. Ben E. Katz, a Twin Falls pediatrician who sees patients from Burley and Rupert, said the Mini-Cassia community has grown enough to attract a pediatrician and has broadened its medical services to support a specialist.

General practitioners are extremely capable of handling many children's health problems, but a pediatrician has more training for handling complex cases, Katz said.

It's good news for the people in all the small towns like Albion and Oakley. Many of these people make long drives to seek pediatric help," Katz said.

Albion alumni celebrate past, ponder future

By Ken Levy
Times News correspondent

ALBION — Albion Normal School alumni gathered on campus Saturday to celebrate the school's 100-year history and ponder options for its future.

Highlights of the fourth annual Albion Campus Festival included farmers' markets, food and craft booths, plays, entertainment, demonstrations and a 28-mile bike race — which followed the 1901 race of messengers sent to deliver Diamondfield Jack's story of execution.

The Cassia County Sheriff's Department won the bike race, with Bryce Johnson crossing the line first.

Albion Normal School's birth was due largely to the vision of Sen. Josiah Miller and Rep. Saul Worthington in 1893, according to Verlene Powell, whose revised book, "Albion State Normal: No Ordinary School," was released in June.

"This was an important town and it was the county seat before Burley came along," said Powell. "The city had the first three school districts in the county, and the normal school was set up to train teachers so the common, public schools would have good teachers."

Using a federal land grant for normal schools Idaho obtained when it became a state in 1890, Miller and other Albion residents began putting the dream to work, Powell said.

The school's founding was remembered Saturday in "The Ghost of Miller Hall," a skit depicting Miller's vision, with Sen. Denton Darrington as the ghost.

Once in full swing, the school averaged 300 students a year until 1940, when it peaked at about 450. Second-year trainees became teachers for grade-school students, and the school also offered high-school classes.

"The college kids trained on the grade-schoolers, and the teachers were in demand throughout Idaho and the Pacific Northwest," Powell said.

Despite that demand, she said, the influence of "a few men in political position" led to the demise of normal schools here and in Lewiston.

Her book, she said, tells of the political maneuvers of the men who would convince then-Gov. Len B.

Jordan to close both schools in 1951.

Since then, discussions have continued on how best to use the Albion property.

About $1 million a year has been diverted from the state's Albion fund to Idaho State University since then, according to Sen. Jim Kempton, project officer for the Campus Restoration Committee.

One plan for the campus, he said, would develop it as a field institute.

Kempton said such an institute, centrally located to attractions including the City of Rocks, wildlife refuges, fossil beds, mountains and other natural settings, would provide a base for art, photography and other educational excursions into the region.

New University of Idaho president meets with faculty, discusses finances

MOSCOW (AP) — The University of Idaho is competing for state funding with state activities such as prisons, highways and health care, new University of Idaho President Robert Hoover says, but the other state college and universities.

Hoover spoke to faculty members on Thursday, his first meeting with the entire faculty.

To avoid a shift from oversight to micromanagement of university procedures, the school must learn to justify its expenditures to state bureaucrats and the Board of Education, Hoover said. To protect, and support its faculty, there must be a reallocation of resources.

Hoover pitched himself as a leader and the Moscow school as the state's leading educational institution.

Praising the faculty as the major cog in a machine that produced a $518 million economic impact last year, Hoover said one of the major challenges in the next decade is attracting, then keeping, quality faculty with fewer dollars from the state.

One solution would be to produce a greater research windfall. Hoover praised the faculty for helping the university rank among the 100 best college buys in 1997-98 and for its ranking among U.S. News and World Report's top 150 universities for the past five years.

But the address ended with two notes of apprehension from the ranks.

James Foster, assistant professor in computer science, wanted to know who would win and who would lose under Hoover's allocations.

And while attracting the best and the brightest teachers and scientists is a commendable goal, foreign languages Professor Alan Roske said he was "more concerned about the dim ones still here."

"Your eyes are not dim," he told Hoover, "but unfortunately you can't see my paycheck."

Hoover said he had the same concerns when he was a faculty member.

"I was a faculty member, and I cursed those administrators day in and day out," he said. "We didn't get into our problem in one afternoon; we're not going to get out of it in one afternoon."

After the meeting, Faculty Council Chairman William Voerman said faculty members always have believed they had answers to surviving reduced funding.

"They'd like to see more money go to them," he said. "You can hardly ask a question like that and expect an immediate answer. (Hoover) was brave enough to say in the future you could expect reallocations, but not what or when; he's more interested in getting the process started."

2 plead guilty in series of attacks

LEWISTON (AP) — Two youths involved in a series of assaults in Lewiston and Clarkston, Wash., including attacks on Japanese students, are serving time in detention centers.

A 16-year-old and 17-year-old pleaded guilty to felony malicious harassment for "unprovoked attacks on Japanese students near Lewis-Clark State College. One of the students was admitted to the Lewiston hospital after being repeatedly kicked in the head.

The incidents sparked concern among the international community at the school. Lewiston officers met with students to assure them they would be protected.

The specific Washington charges in the cases were not available.

The juvenile justice systems on both sides of the Snake River cooperated to come up with sentences for the youths, Nez Perce County Prosecutor Denise Rosen said.

"Both states have a hold on them for a good long time," she said.

At Filer, the rhythms of fairtime come full circle

Dudley Watson of Mattawa, Wash., jokes brother, Dan, of Coeur d'Alene for some carnival games. After an absence of over twenty years, the 2-former Buhl residents had a reunion with the fair on Thursday.

With a hand to hold on to for reassurance, the start of a carousel ride means plenty of fun for one family making memories at the Twin Falls County Fair.

Side by Side

Seasons change, a fair remains the same

By Steve Crump
Times-News writer

FILER — There's an odd dichotomy to the all-American phenomenon of county fairs.

E.B. White — whose "Charlotte's Web" made fairgoing a mystical adventure even for city-dwelling Americans who had never met a pig, much less a radiant one — put it best.

Fairs, he wrote, are an alchemy of beauty and blim-blam, nurture and mendacity, civility and show. As imagined by the country people who invented it, fairtime was the time season of the year when egg money could be squandered and not repented, when everyone went home a little hung over and much the better for it.

They were, White believed, the occasions when the circle of rural American life was squared — a convergence of memories and pipe dreams, a moment when a beloved prize steer could be dispatched to the slaughterhouse without remorse but for the passage of the seasons.

Fairs were temporary license, during hard times and good, for country folks to be silly, even wistful — to buy rickshaws and to make themselves sick on candy, candy, cherry soda and the centripetal force of a Ferris wheel bigger than the whole town square.

They were chances to rub sleeves with the exotic, scary world of rascals and con games — aliens with a strange power to force sensible people to spend their nickels throwing baseballs at stacks of milk bottles that never seemed to fall over.

Best of all, White said, fairs were good positive to rural Americans who felt inferior that they really were somebody after all — the best cook, the best baker, the best gardener. Movie star Clara Bow might have had "It," but Clarabel had a blue ribbon.

That's how come nostalgia winds itself around fairtime like morning glory about a garden gate and, why, according to Phil Strong, on whose book "Rogers" and Hammersheim's "State Fair" was based, that country-bred folks never tire of coming back.

Dan Watson of Coeur d'Alene and his brother, Dudley, of Mattawa, Wash., returned to the Twin Falls County Fair on Thursday after a more-than-20-year absence. They were visiting Buhl, where they grew up, and they came home — when else? — at fair time.

The Filer High School Class of '36 picked this weekend of a dozen other summer Samplings for its 60th reunion.

Filer City Park was the scene, but the fair was the setting, and after the old friends reunited in the afternoon, many headed for the miles in the evening.

Side by side they walked the midway, its cadences largely unchanged from a time when the Great Depression was left to fulminate outside the front gate.

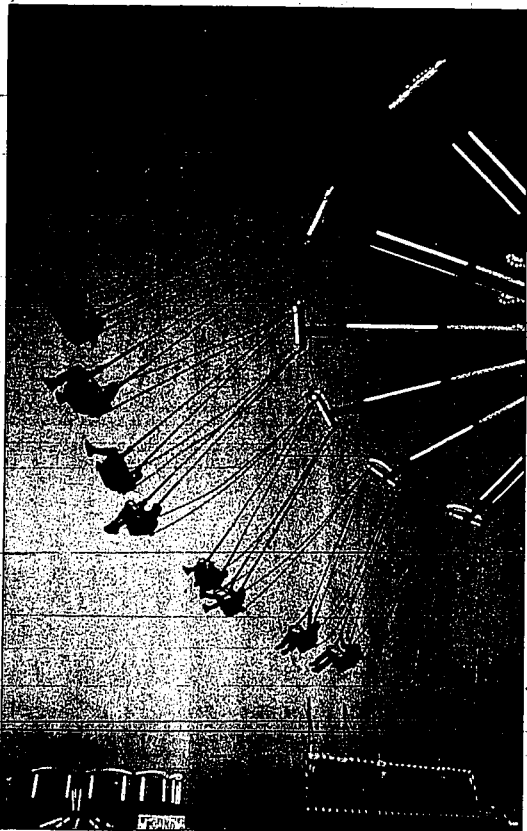

If there's a certain circadian rhythm to festivals of overripe fruit and overripe hope, that's unaltered by failures of farms or imagination.

Beyond the chain-link boundaries of the fairgrounds, life may rub the soul raw.

But inside, the rhythms are always blue, the camps always better than last year's, and the corn dogs always above average.

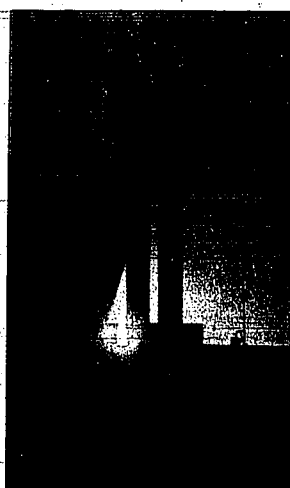

It's over thus. Again.

Inset: Strolling outside the goat barn, Tia Melko pauses with her pygmy goat, Jasmine, so new-found friend Robin Settle can get a snuggle. The Yo-Yo, a classic ride, provides a dizzying view of the fairgrounds.

Honesty best policy with sex

DEAR READERS: A few weeks ago, I printed a letter from a counselor in Pasadena, Calif., who was alarmed by the number of teen-agers who get pregnant. At her suggestion, I asked my readers to tell me how they just said "No" to sex. I was unprepared for the flood of letters that poured in from women of all ages (and even some men) eager to share not only their ideas, but also their experiences. I regret that space limitations prevent me from printing all of their letters. Read on.

DEAR ABBY: In college in the mid-'70s, I heard what I considered the best response ever. A friend of mine rejected the advances of a classmate by informing him that she had the opportunity to inherit a million dollars—but only if she remained a virgin until age 25. After college, I used that play on more than one occasion (adjusting the age upward as necessary), and it worked for me, too. One young man even offered to help me remain a virgin if I'd cut him in for a percentage.

But the way my daughter handled the situation was even better. She recently attended her second junior high school dance, where she was introduced to a young man from another high school. While dancing and conversing, the boy became "grabby." My daughter mentioned it to me at breakfast the next morning, and I asked how she handled it.

She said, "I told him I wasn't ready for that kind of relationship and furthermore he was making me very uncomfortable, so to please stop it!" He promptly stopped. They continued dancing, and talking, and a week later the boy called to invite her to a dance at his school.

DEAR ABBY

This proves she didn't have to be rude or lie; the truth works, and good guys appreciate honesty and nice girls.

Young women shouldn't fear that they'll lose a good man if they refuse inappropriate sexual advances. The guys that "just don't get it" are not the ones a girl could have a meaningful relationship with anyway.

—FEMALE ATTORNEY, MELBOURNE, FLA.

DEAR ABBY: You asked how to say no to sex. For me it was easy. I told them, "If I have sex with you and get pregnant, you'll leave me. But my mother will KILL me." It worked every time, and the bonus was they continued to date me and respect me.

—BEEBIE

IN PHOENIX

DEAR ABBY: As a Christian, I don't believe Jesus approves of premarital sex. So when I was dating, I reminded myself that Jesus was sitting there with me—and I would ask myself if he would approve of what I was doing. Sure, it was hard sometimes. But I figured if he would rise from the dead for me, it was the very least I could do for him. Needless to say, I remained a virgin until I married.

Even if you have already slept with someone, it's never too late to say no—and after that, don't ever put yourself in a tempting situation again.

The campaign called "True Love Waits" is a great way for young people to make the commitment to either remain a virgin or to become "secondary virgins." A "secondary virgin" is one who promises to abstain from sex (from that point on until marriage). Most Baptist churches (as well as other denominations) have information on this campaign. Spread the word, Abby. It's worth the wait.

GLAD I WAITED IN MISSISSIPPI

DEAR ABBY: Diplomacy is nice, but in matters of sex, it's better to be blunt. "No" is all you need to say, and "Because I don't want to" is the only argument you need to give.

On three separate occasions, different men told me I needed to see a psychologist and get some therapy. Apparently they believed that any woman who would pass up sex with them must be emotionally disturbed.

I'm now 29 years old and still a virgin. I haven't had to deal with gonorrhea, genital herpes, chlamydia, pregnancy or AIDS. In spite of the fact that I still haven't seen a therapist, I'm very happy.

As for the three men who were concerned about my mental health, I never saw any of them again. I can't even remember their names.

—SHARON IN STATE COLLEGE, PA.

DEAR READERS: More on this topic.

DEAR ABBY: If you would like your letter considered for publication, please include your name, area code and telephone number.

Lunchroom chic

In this corner of the cafeteria, kids, The Hunchback of Notre Dame, and Goosebumps. And in this corner, Winnie The Pooh and Pocahontas. The battle for supremacy in the cut-throat school lunch box market has begun.

Aladdin Industries has licensing rights to the Hunchback and Goosebumps lunchboxes. Thermos Co. has Winnie the Pooh and Pocahontas. "This year, we think we've got the hot properties," says Aladdin chairman Fred Meyer.

Lunchroom ennui

Speaking of school lunches, the government has figured out why Johnny doesn't eat. It's too busy talking, and he doesn't like the food.

The General Accounting Office, the investigative arm of Congress, surveyed school cafeteria managers during the past year to find out why kids throw away their federally subsidized food. The No. 1 reason: Their attention is on recess, free time or socializing.

The second most free time cause: They don't like the food.

Give them a shot

Parents, federal officials say immunizations against dangerous disease are just as important for teens as they are for little children, and parents should make sure all their children are up to date before classes begin.

In addition to standard inoculations, teens should be immunized against hepatitis B, which can be sexually transmitted and in some cases eventually leads to serious complications like liver cancer or cirrhosis.

Family health tree

You know what your great-grandparents died of? As doctors search for hereditary links for a growing number of diseases, the Wall Street Journal reports that genealogy is playing an ever-larger medical role. Information about the death and diseases in past generations can be extremely valuable in that research—and in evaluating your own health risks.

The American Medical Association recommends that every family maintain some kind of health history.

Divorce Magazine

If you're divorced, there's a new magazine for you. Divorce Magazine has launched its first American edition in Chicago. Canadian publisher Dan Couvrette says local editions of the quarterly magazine will be launched in New York in October, and several other cities next year.

Nominate an Everyday Hero

The Times-News

Do you know an everyday hero? Someone who works with kids, gives his or her time and resources, helps a stranger in need—without taking any credit? We'd like to hear about such people.

The Times-News is beginning a series of articles about the amazing heroes in the Magic and Wood River valleys. We'll publish them as a regular feature. Anyone who does something extraordinarily—neighbors, accountants, church group members, hospital volunteers, tutors—without getting paid for it, qualifies. So do professionals, such as caregivers and teachers, who contribute something extra.

Send your nominations to Everyday Heroes, The Times-News, P.O. Box 548, Twin Falls 83303. We'll need your name, phone number, the name of your Everyday Hero, and a few sentences about the person and what he or she does.

FAMILY LIFE

SOMEBODY NEEDS YOU

• The Twin Falls Public Library has several positions available for volunteers. We have a need for a person who is interested, skilled or a craftsman in repairing non-book materials. These include video tapes, unwinding cassettes, and polishing compact audio discs. Also, we are looking for a person with typing or computer ability. Other volunteer opportunities are obtainable. If you would like to share your time and talents with us, please call Maretha Wright at the Twin Falls Public Library at (208) 733-2564.

• Do you want to do something that really makes a difference? Senior Companions are needed to assist homebound at-risk elderly people in the Twin Falls area. The program pays a stipend, travel reimbursement, some meals and other benefits. If you can help, call Marlene or Teresa at (208) 736-2122, or stop by the College of Southern Idaho Office on Aging.

• The College of Southern Idaho Adult Basic Education program is in need of volunteer tutors for adult students in reading, English, math and English as a second language. For more information, call Ruth Scott at (208) 733-5554, ext. 2536.

• The Community Action Agency in Jerome is in need of a large capacity refrigerator/freezer for food storage for their food program. If you can donate, call Bonnie at (208) 324-8856.

• A family of six on a limited income with large medical expenses needs a wood-burning stove. If you can help, call Carolyn Burton at (208) 733-9351, ext. 3039.

• The College of Southern Idaho Refugee Center assists family and individuals in transition. Currently, the center is in need of the following items: seasonal clothing for adults and children, and blankets, quilts or bedspreads in good condition. We are also in need of children's toys for seasonal gift giving. If you can donate, call Gail Hancock at (208) 736-2166.

• Hospice volunteers are needed in the Magic Valley for Magic Valley Staffing. Hospice provides a special kind of care for the terminally ill patient and their families.

Hospice volunteers are helpful to the caregiver by doing various chores or errands, or they can be of assistance to the patient. Volunteers are also helpful in the office doing special mailings or other similar tasks. Both men and women are encouraged to volunteer. Hospice volunteers can also help with fundraisers too.

Special volunteer, hospice training will begin Sept. 24. The training will last for three weeks, meeting from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. on Tuesdays and Wednesdays, ending Oct. 9.

For more information, call Susan Harris, volunteer coordinator at Magic Valley Staffing, Hospice Division, at (208) 734-0600, or outside the Twin Falls area at 1-800-303-0602. Hospice and CHA training is offered every second Wednesday of each month.

This public service column is designed to reach out to the communities of the eight counties in the Magic Valley, with volunteer help. If you need a volunteer, call Judy Tipton at the College of Southern Idaho, 736-2122, to have it appear in this column. It is requested that persons submitting items for this column, should call Tipton before 4:30 p.m. on Wednesday for Sunday publication. Call Tipton weekly to retain request.

Musings on parenthood, family

PARENTING
John Rosemond

If there's one valuable lesson the proponents of democratic, child-centered families have taught us, it's that authority is not inherent to being a parent. Rather, authority must be claimed and then acted upon. Furthermore, following this self-confirmation, it must be constantly asserted lest it fade away. The authoritative parent must affirm, on a daily basis, that he/she is in command of himself, the child, and the circumstances of the child's life.

This daily renewal constitutes the core of the parent's commitment to provide for and protect the child under any and all circumstances. It forms the essence of the child's sense of security. Intuitively, a child understands that a parent who will not claim and affirm his or her own authority is a parent who cannot be relied upon for anything and has no "right," therefore, to respect, as measured by deference and obedience.

Without intention, nouveau parenting "experts" provided legions of profit to this very effect. Parents who followed their well-intentioned advice were persuaded not to claim their authority. It would have been just if the price to be paid had been relied upon for anything and has no "right," therefore, to respect, as measured by deference and obedience.

There are no quick fixes in child rearing. You can get a meal in a minute at McDonald's but there's no such thing as McParenting. I have often had the feeling, during conversations with parents who are seeing solutions to child-rearing problems, that they think psychologists can perform feats of time-defying magic.

A typical encounter goes thusly: Parents describe a problem, I propose a means of solving it, and the parents counter with, "Oh, we tried that already, and it didn't work." It is almost inevitable that upon further investigation I discover that "it" didn't work simply because the parents didn't work at it. Thus, they believe in McParenting.

If, when your child forgets his lunch money, you run after the bus, your child has no reason to ever remember his lunch money. If, when your child does something "bad," you feel bad about it — as in, you feel guilty, anxious, and otherwise in a tizzy — your child has no reason to feel bad about it himself and no reason, therefore, to correct the problem. The fact is, a child will correct a problem (and mind you, there are very few academic or behavior problems a child is incapable of solving) if, and only if, the problem inconveniences him and he is made to feel bad about it. In the above example, the parent waves goodbye to the bus and shrugs her shoulders when the child complains of having to go without lunch that day, the child will start remembering his lunch money. His "forgetfulness" or "Attention Deficit Disorder" or whatever will suddenly go into remission.

A parent who finds himself frequently saying, "How many times have I told you to do (or not to do) so-and-so?" needs to realize this simply means he has failed to convince the child that he meant business the very first time he said it. This is clearly not a child problem. It is a parent problem, and the parent in question will be forever complaining of having to say the same things over and over again until he accepts that humbling fact.

It's important that the worlds of adults and children be distinct and often exclusive. In other words, adults should be involved primarily with other adults, not with children, and children, likewise, should be involved primarily with other children, not adults. The more adults become involved with children, the more children want to be involved with adults, and the less able adults are to distinguish themselves.

Adults who fail to distinguish themselves reap what the sow: their children fail to pay attention to them and learn to manipulate them instead of coming to respect them. Unfortunately, if a farmer fails to properly tend a plant, the plant suffers far more than does the farmer.

Concert set in Hagerman

The Times-News

HAGERMAN — Snop, the Shippers, the group trying to save Gov. Phil Batt's nuclear waste-storage deal with the federal government, will hold a benefit concert Sept. 7 at Hagerman City Park.

Scheduled from 10:30 a.m. to 10 p.m., the concert will include southern Idaho bands and solo artists, including The New Electric Peaches, The Rob Nova Band, Get Bent, Slow Children Playing, Smiling Johnson, The Idaho Radio Band, The Buds, County Line, David DeBolt and Jamie, Delta Lee, Nancy Monahan and Mark & Anita. Tickets are $6 at the gate or $5 in advance, available at Miracle

Hot Springs and The Cosmic Jolt in Ruhl; Mike's Mini Mart and The Little Big Cafe in Hagerman; Sunrise Cakes in Shoshone; Ace Printing, the General Round, Sager's, the Microfilm Cafe & Bakery, Dan's Donuts in Jerome; The Music in Filer, and the Lincoln Inn in Gooding, or from Canyon Blvd. at 6:30-8:30.

Snop the Shippers gathered enough signatures to get an initiative on the November ballot. Proposition 3 — calling for reauthorization of the nuclear waste agreement.

IN BRIEF

Sun Valley, Schweitzer rank high in top resorts

NEW YORK — Sun Valley and Schweitzer were ranked ninth and 33rd overall by Snow Country magazine's top 50 ski resorts in North America.

In North America, Sun Valley ranked second for its food, third for its seven lifts, fourth for making snow and fifth for “dining around town.”

Schweitzer received “A” grades for its scenery, terrain and children's programs.

Gymnast Strug to participate in ‘Magic Tour’

LOS ANGELES — Olympic gymnast hero Kerri Strug is going in a different direction than her gold medal-winning teammates.

Strug, who vaulted into prominence in one of the defining moments of the Atlanta games, has decided to participate in a gymnastics tour as well as the Ice Capades, her agent, Leigh Steinberg, told The Associated Press on Saturday.

Both will fit into her school schedule, Steinberg said. Strug, 18, has enrolled at UCLA and will begin her freshman year Sept. 23, attending classes Monday through Thursday.

Sanders out 2-3 weeks with thumb injury

CINCINNATI — Cincinnati Reds outfielder Reggie Sanders will be sidelined two to three weeks after injuring his right thumb. Sanders tore the radial ligament in the thumb when he slid into second base in the Aug. 25 game against the Florida Marlins. Sanders has only 10 hits in his last 64 at-bats, a .156 average. For the season, he is hitting .251 with 14 homers and 33 RBIs.

Lou Gehrig's contract with Yankees found

NEW YORK — Lou Gehrig's 1932 Yankees contract — stolen nearly two years ago — was recovered on Saturday when police arrested a New Jersey man allegedly trying to sell the document back to its owner.

The baseball Hall of Famer's one-year, $25,000 contract is back in the hands of Queens memorabilia collector Les Wolf, 42, who met the suspect at a Fresh Meadows, Queens, ice cream parlor as detectives watched nearby.

Ropin' good time

Saturday's Stampede ranks at top of week's performances

By Ron Gates
Times-News writer

FILER — Good, better and best. Rodeo fans attending the 1996 Magic Valley Stampede might have rated Thursday's performance good, Friday's better, and — with two dozen of the Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association's top 20 winners on hand — Saturday the best of the three-day run.

Defending world bareback champion and current points leader Marvin Garrett proved his ranking well deserved, recording 79 points to tie Thursday's winner, Bill Boyd, for first place money.

Unranked Chance Henderson, Colorado Springs, Colo., eclipsed the arena calf roping record in 7.8 seconds to win that event, while team roping leaders Charles Pogue and Allen Bach, missed another standard when their 5.7 became 15.7 when Pogue broke the barrier a bit early.

Jason Elguren, who placed in calf roping as well, hooked up with Ira Walker to win the team roping despite the presence of 10 top 20 cowboys, including defending header champ Bobby Hurley. Todd Fike, No. 19, in his specialty beat Idahoan Travis Angell 74-72 in saddle bronc, No. 18 barrel racer Barbara Merrill toured the cloverleaf in a victorious 17.64 seconds, while Shawn Ramirez, ranked 17th in bull riding, tied with Dodge City, Kansas cowboy Pete Hesson on Saturday.

It was, however, bulls 14, cowboys 2 as only Ramirez and Hesson managed to remain aboard for the required eight seconds.

Dillon Mont, hand Bart Brower, the last of 10 contestants entered in steer wrestling pushed PRCA bulldogging leader Marvin Garrett into a second place tie.

Hailey's Selbi Ann Board, who won awards for horsemanship and appearance last year, was named in 1997 Magic Valley Stampede Queen. Lesli Gall Wolery of Payette, the victor in public speaking and rodeo knowledge is first runner up.

Tiffant Novak of Nampa was the junior winner, seconded by Twin Falls Jenny Kinney — who drew awards for congeniality and horsemanship — was first attendant, Johanna Verkerk, Kunni, will act as second attendant.

CSI nabs UVSC Invitational

The Times-News

OREM, Ut. — Saturday was a day of championships for the Golden Eagle volleyball team.

The semifinal morning match featured the Eagles downing Ricks 15-11, 15-0, 15-7, advancing CSI into the championship.

However, Coach Ben Stroud did not like the look of the team in the early going. Ricks scored points by capitalizing on unnecessary mistakes made by the Eagles.

“The first match was full of unforced errors but then we just played really solid,” said Stroud.

Yavapai was the victim of the Eagles’ improved play and suffered a 15-7, 15-2, 15-4 defeat. Everything was in sync as Stroud’s team headed into the winner’s circle.

“We blocked well, played great defense and just really hit the spot of, out them,” said Stroud of the championship game.

The key to locking up the title match was a collective effort from the service line. The Eagles racked up easy points serving aces and keeping Yavapai on their heels.

“We served tough and I don’t know how many aces we had in that game but it was a ton,” said Stroud.

The team championship was also accompanied by individual accolades presented to members of the Eagle squad whose distinguished play caught the eye of coaches during the course of the tournament.

Lavanda Johnson and Flavia Gabinio were named to the UVSC Invitational first tournament team. Claudia Fonseca was given top honors as the invitational’s MVP. Stroud also felt Lillie Robinson was deserving of individual honor.

“I thought Lillie deserved to be on the tournament team,” said Stroud, “She had a great day.”

The Eagles head back to Twin Falls and defend on their home court Sept. 6 against Dixie at 7 p.m. and serve it up again Sept. 7 against Snow at 1 p.m.

A-3 Butte shows it's a team to beat

The Times-News

BUHL — The Butte County volleyball team showed it would be a force come Class A-3 district and state tournament time.

Saturday, Four Class A-2 teams and four Class A-3 teams battled in the Buhl Invitational tournament. The only Magic Valley team competing was Buhl.

For all the teams present, it was the opening day of volleyball competition this season.

After a morning of pool play, the eight teams were placed in a single-elimination tournament.

In the end, Butte County beat Class A-2 Middleton in the championship 15-12, 10-15, 19-17.

Until that match, Butte County had not lost a game. Earlier in the day, Butte dominated Middleton 11-6, 11-3 in pool play so the marathon match was unexpected.

Tigers favorites to take A-2

By John Derr
Times-News writer

JEROME — Jerome again heads into the football season as a heavy favorite in A-2, District 4 while Buhl and Wood River look to battle for the second berth in the state playoffs, a shot the Wolverines got last year.

The teams open play Friday, with league games scheduled for mid-October.

Jerome Tigers

The Tigers do not look as good on paper this year, losing several quality skill players off last year's senior-dominated team. Stan Richter resigned shortly after the season to spend more time with his family, but remains in the program as an assistant.

New coach Elmer Musgrave said his players will work hard in practice to develop the experience necessary, especially at the skill positions.

position. Junior track standout Sean Roberts joins him in the backfield while Cody Grove will battle for starting position at running back.

Orioles' 3 homers down Mariners, 7-6

The Associated Press

SEATTLE — Eddie Murray failed to hit his 500th home run, but the Baltimore Orioles hit three homers to set a single-season record with 215 in a 7-6 victory over the Seattle Mariners on Saturday.

Pete Incaviglia, Brady Anderson and Bobby Bonilla hit homers for the Orioles, who remained in a virtual tie with Chicago in the race for the AL wild card.

AL, NL capsules — D3

Murray, who hit his 499th homer Friday night, had a pair of singles in five at-bats. He is bidding to become the 15th player to hit 500 homers.

Bonilla hit his third home run of the series and his 22nd of the season in the fifth inning, a two-run shot off reliever Chris Bosio (4-4) that broke a 4-4 tie.

Scott Erickson (9-11) earned his first

Kingdom victory — after six losses — and fourth in five decisions by going 6 1-3 in six innings.

He gave up five runs on six hits, and was replaced after walking Rich Amaral in the seventh.

Alan Mills pitched 1 1-3 innings before Armando Benitez struck out Edgar Martinez with a runner on first for his first save this season.

Ken Griffey Jr. singled, doubled and hit his 41st home run for Seattle.

Chang ekes by; Agassi rolls

NEW YORK (AP) - Unable to sit for fear of cramping all over his body, Michael Chang paced slowly back and forth like a wounded, tethered animal, his breathing labored and his thoughts disjointed.

"To be honest with you," he said, "I don't really know how I was able to win today's match. I really don't."

In truth, neither did most of the U.S. Open crowd or the man on the other side of the net, Vince Spadea, who served for the match in the fourth set Saturday, only to be broken in the game and in spirit by Chang's indomitable will.

Chang, the ultimate tennis survivor, looked as if he could barely lift his feet between points, yet on and on he scrambled until he wore down Spadea and secured a 6-4, 5-7, 7-6, 7-5, 6-3 victory in 3 hours, 50 minutes of mutual punishment.

In a week at the Open when defending champion Pete Sampras struggled to win a five-setter and 1994 champion Andre Agassi had to fend off a hot player in four sets, Chang had the closest call of all.

Agassi, on a collision course to meet Chang in the semifinals, had an easier match this time, in a 6-4, 6-2, 7-5 (9-7) victory over Jan Siemerink.

Third-seeded Thomas Muster romped at night, beating Sergi Bruguera 6-2, 6-4, 6-3. No. 13 Thomas Enqvist also won in straight sets against Pablo Campana. Alex O'Brien, a giant-killer most of the summer, finally lost to David Wheaton, 16, 75, 61, 62.

Defending women's champion Steffi Graf beat Natasha Zvereva 6-4, 6-2. No. 3 Arantxa Sanchez-Vicario beat Elena Likhovtseva 6-1, 6-0. No. 7 Jana Novotna beat Tami Whitlinger-Jones 6-2, 6-3, and No. 16 Martina Hingis beat Naoko Kijimuta 6-2, 6-2.

Unseeded 15-year-old Anna Kournikova again showed tremendous potential as an aggressive all-court player in her Grand Slam debut as she upset No. 14 Barbara Paulus 3-6, 6-2, 6-4. Kournikova goes up next in the fourth round against Graf, the player she most resembles in style.

In heat as fierce as a day in the desert, Chang and Spadea slugged thousands of balls from the baseline in one long rally after another, the momentum of the match shifting with each tiny surge of confidence by one or the other.

Spadea knew he had the second-seeded Chang beaten in the fourth set, was absolutely certain of it, then saw that certainty evaporate like sweat drops on the court.

Tiger Woods blasts out of the sand at the Greater Milwaukee Open's ninth hole Saturday.

Woods struggles at Milwaukee

MILWAUKEE (AP) - Tiger Woods started the Greater Milwaukee Open aiming to win his first pro tournament. Now the 20-year-old rookie is just looking to make a small step toward ending his PGA Tour slump.

After struggling to the second-highest score of Saturday's third round - a 2-over-par 73 that put him 15 strokes behind leader Jesper Parnevik - earning enough money over the season's last six weeks to avoid qualifying school seems a tall order.

Woods needs to win a PGA event or land among the top 125 on the money list, and it will take in the neighborhood of $12,000 to do the latter. Only $2,200 to $2,300 in prize money from the GM's $1.2 million purse awaits Woods unless he is able to move up from 76th place in Sunday's final round.

Parnevik surged ahead of the pack with an 8-under-par 63 in the third round and was at 19-under 194 for 54 holes. That was one stroke ahead of Nolan Henke, who shot a 67 Saturday after leading the first two rounds, including a course-record 62 on Thursday.

"Woods said it's still possible to earn a card, especially if he can put the hype surrounding his pro debut behind him by the time he plays at next week's Canadian Open."

Woods described the past week, in which he won his third straight U.S. Amateur title and signed a Nike endorsement deal reportedly worth $40 million, a "big mental drain" that has hurt him on the course.

"It's actually hard to find 110 percent on each and every shot," he said.

On Saturday, Woods hit his first tee shot into the right rough behind a bunch of trees at Brown Deer Park golf course, took another two shots to reach the green then missed for bogey. "Things got better, then a lot worse,"

Woods finished the par-4, 417-yard second hole after a drive about 240 yards down the center of the fairway, an iron shot that placed the ball pin-high and on easy put.

He followed with a string of pars, several on saves following tee shots into the rough, a bogey and a double bogey. The low point came at the par-4, 359-yard 5th.

Woods hit a 3-iron off the tee about 240 yards into the deep left rough, hit it only three feet with a full 6-iron swing on his second shot, then sent the ball flying across the fairway into the right bunker. He then chipped onto the green and two-putted for the double-bogey 6.

He started the back nine with another bogey, before collecting two birdies, one on the final hole after missing a 6-foot eagle putt.

"For as bad as I played, it would have been nice to finish with an eagle," Woods said. "The way it was going, I could never string together a couple of good holes in a row. I could only string together a couple shots, and that's about all I needed today."

Woods started the third round eight strokes off the lead after shooting a four-under 67 in the opening round and a 69 Friday. He made the cut by three strokes.

"I threw away so many shots the first few days of play, I was very snippy," Woods said. "At least I'll make a check, so it's a step in the right direction."

Parnevik, who had one bogey and nine birdies, including five in a row at one point, changed his grip after shooting a 66 Friday.

"I can't remember when I putted this well," said Parnevik, whose best finish this year is a tie for fifth in the PGA Championship.

"Every time I had a 12-footer, I was disappointed if I didn't make it. Yesterday, I'll stand over a 3-footer, I was very happy if I made it."

Loren Roberts, who had a 66, was at 19-under 194, was four off the lead after a 67.

The third round featured two holes-in-one.

Jeff Gallagher had one on the 192-yard 14th hole with a 5-iron, while Richard Zokol's come-around shot of a 153-yard 8-iron shot on No. 5.

Jacobs shoots 69 to take lead at Franklin Quest

PARK CITY, Utah (AP) - John Jacobs shot a 5-under-par 69 Saturday to take a one-stroke lead in the $500,000 Franklin Quest Championship.

Jacobs stands at 19-under 135 after 36 holes and goes into the final round with a one-stroke lead over Australian Graham Marsh and Jack Kiefer on the wind-whipped, 7,104-yard Park Meadows Golf Club course.

First-round leader Gary Player shot a 74 and left four strokes off the lead.

Jacobs, who trailed Player by one stroke following the first round, continued his ascent on the course's ninth hole, making two eagles Saturday. He finished all four in Friday's first round.

"I just wish the entire course were all par-5s," he said.

There are 16 players within four shots of the lead heading into final round and the winner gets $120,000.

Jacobs' round was not without trouble. He double-bogeyed the par-4 12th and his second shot on the 16th found the greenside bunker and he failed to save par.

His putting continued to be streaky, as it was Friday.

Today, I hit puts and they broke the ball opposite way."

Jacobs is winless on the Senior PGA Tour this year, but is 34th on the money list with $276,000.

Jacobs thinks he'll have to shoot at least as well Sunday as he did in the second round to win.

"I'd imagine I would have to shoot 13 to 15 under par to win. There will be four or five holes that are key to my winning this thing," he said.

Kiefer, who has placed in the top 10 of this tournament for the past five years, had a second-round 67 that included a near-disaster just before the turn.

"It was gut-check time on the seventh hole where I made double bogey," he said. "My round was like a yo-yo today."

Marsh, who had a 65 Saturday, may be the most comfortable playing Park Meadows with its swirling winds and high altitude.

"The long hitters have the advantage here, but playing all these years in Australia has helped," he said. "We are pretty good wind players."

Royals' Linton shuts down Tigers, 3-1

DETROIT (AP) - Doug Linton outduelled Felipe Lira to keep Detroit in their first winning month in over a year, scattering three hits in 6 1/3 innings Saturday as the Kansas City Royals beat the Tigers 3-1.

Linton (6-9) struck out a career-high nine and walked one to prevent the Tigers, who finished August with a 14-15 record, from having their first winning month since June 1995.

Craig Parquette homered for Kansas City, which won for the fourth time in 13 games.

Jeff Montgomery loaded the bases with two hits in the ninth, but got Phil Nevin on a come-backer for his 24th save.

White Sox 5, Blue Jays 1

TORONTO - Danny Tartabull hit a two-run double and Wilson Alvarez scattered seven hits over eight innings.

The Blue Jays' Olden Nixon was called out after trying to stretch a single into a double against the White Sox Saturday.

Alvarez (15-7) struck out four and walked three for the White Sox, who came into the game one percentage point behind the Baltimore Orioles in the race for the AL wild-card berth.

Robin Ventura and Ray Durham each had two hits and scored two runs as Chicago won its third straight, Roberto Hernandez struck out the side in the ninth.

Brewers 3, Twins 2

MILWAUKEE - Matt Mieske's pinch-hit, two-run homer in the eighth inning lifted the Milwaukee Brewers over the Minnesota Twins.

Mieske, batting for David Hulse, tied a career high with his 12th homer, a one-out shot off Rich Robertson (6-13).

Rangers 6, Indians 3

ARLINGTON, Texas - Darren Oliver and the Texas Rangers beat Cleveland again, and Juan Gonzalez extended his hitting streak to 21 games with a pair of RBI singles.

Oliver (11-6) won his third game this season against Cleveland and improved to 4-0 lifetime against the Indians by scattering nine hits in 8 1/3 innings. He struck out seven and walked none as the Rangers beat the Indians for the seventh time in eight games and improved to 8-3 this season against the defending AL champions.

Cubs blank Braves, 12-0; Astros edge Pirates

CHICAGO (AP) - Frank Castillo allowed two hits in 6 1/3 innings and the Chicago Cubs spoiled Benny Neagle's Atlanta debut by beating the Braves 12-0 Saturday.

It was Atlanta's most lopsided defeat of the season.

Ernie Miller hit a two-run homer in the third inning off Neagle, who left trailing only 3-0 after 5 2/3 innings. But the Cubs routed relievers Brad Clontz and Dean Hargreaves, with Luis Gonzalez and Ozzie Timmons homering off Hargreaves.

Neagle (14-7), acquired Wednesday from Pittsburgh as the Braves stockpile talent to defend their World Series title, gave up three hits in 5 2/3 innings. He had won his previous five decisions against the Cubs.

Astros 5, Pirates 4

PITTSBURGH - Pinch-hitter Tony Eusebio hit a two-run single to cap Houston's three-run ninth inning, and the Astros ruined Francisco Cordova's first major league start by beating the Pittsburgh Pirates.

With Houston trailing 3-2 following Jerome Alexander's go-ahead homer in the eighth, Jeff Bagwell and Derek Bell quickly tied with consecutive doubles off John Ericks (3-4).

James Mouton's single and Derrick May's walk preceded Eusebio's ground single up the middle, his third hit in nine at-bats as a pinch-hitter.

Mets 7, Giants 2

NEW YORK - New York gave new manager Bobby Valentine his first victory in five games and the Mets snapped an eight-game losing streak by beating the San Francisco Giants.

Roberto Petagine and Alvaro Espinoza hit consecutive homers in the sixth inning for the Mets, who had lost three one-run games since Valentine took over for the fired Dallas Green.

Robert Person (3-5), who was 0-2 with a 10.80 ERA in his previous three starts, allowed one run and four hits in 5 2/3 innings. Doug Henry got six outs for his ninth save.

Cardinals 2, Rockies 1

ST. LOUIS - Andy Benos allowed four hits in eight innings and Ray Lankford hit a two-run home for St. Louis.

Benos (15-9) avenged a poor performance against Denver on Aug. 21, when the Rockies hammered him for 13 hits and seven runs in 2 2/3 innings. That was his only loss in his last 13 decisions.

Danys Eckerley got the final two outs for his 25th save.

The Rockies failed to hit a homer, breaking their streak of 16 straight games with at least one homer.

Dodgers 11, Phillies 7

PHILADELPHIA - Raul Mondesi's two-run homer capped an eight-run fourth inning and Ismael Valdes won his first game since July 23.

Wayne Kirby and Raul Mondesi each had three hits and every Dodgers starter had at least one. Los Angeles finished with 18 hits, two short of its season high, against five Phillies pitchers.

Valdes (12-7), who was 0-2 with four no-decisions in his previous six starts, allowed six runs and nine hits in seven innings.

Expos 4, Padres 2

MONTREAL - Omar Daal won his first major league start, combining with two Montreal relievers on a four-hitter as the Expos snapped San Diego's six-game winning streak.

F.P. Santangelo hit an RBI triple in the fourth off Bob Tewksbury (10-9) for a 1-0 lead and Mark Grudzielanek's run-scoring double in the sixth gave Montreal a 4-0 cushion.

Daal (3-2), who has pitched 61 innings in 57 games as a reliever, allowed one hit in five innings. He struck out eight and walked three before leaving for a pinch hitter in the fifth.

Reds 22, Marlins 8

MONTREAL - Omar Daal won his first major league start, combining with two Montreal relievers on a four-hitter as the Expos snapped San Diego's six-game winning streak.

F.P. Santangelo hit an RBI triple in the fourth off Bob Tewksbury (10-9) for a 1-0 lead and Mark Grudzielanek's run-scoring double in the sixth gave Montreal a 4-0 cushion.

Daal (3-2), who has pitched 61 innings in 57 games as a reliever, allowed one hit in five innings. He struck out eight and walked three before leaving for a pinch hitter in the fifth.

Reliever Ugueth Urbina, who started the sixth, allowed two runs and two hits in 2 2/3 innings.

Colorado, Michigan win openers

The Associated Press

Colorado's Koy Detmer and Michigan's Scott Dreisbach, a pair of injured quarterbacks last season, were back on the field and leading their teams to season-opening victories Saturday.

Miami, meanwhile, managed quite well without suspended starters Danyell Ferguson and Yatil Green in beating Memphis 30-7.

Detmer, who missed the last six games of the '95 season after right knee surgery, threw three touchdown passes and ran for another score as the No. 5 Buffaloes beat Washington State 37-19.

Dreisbach, who led Michigan to a 4-0 record before a thumb injury ended his '95 season, ran 72 yards for a TD and added a scoring pass in the fourth quarter in the 12th-ranked Wolverines' 20-8 win over Illinois.

"I think that's the longest I've run in my career," Dreisbach said. "I didn't want somebody to come up behind me and strip the ball, so I looked back and double checked, but nobody was there."

Detmer didn't make it to the end against the Cougars. After a 34-yard scramble in the third quarter, he was winded and John Hessler took over. By then, the Buffs were safely ahead.

"Koy got so nervous before the game he didn't eat anything and when he made the long run he about passed out," Colorado coach Rick Neuheisel said. "He was light-headed, and that's why we didn't put him back in the game."

At Memphis, Magic Benton, replacing Green at wideout, returned a punt 67 yards for a TD and caught a 73-yard scoring pass for the Hurricanes.

"I look at myself as a starter," Benton said. "We play a lot of different receivers. Every receiver we have is good enough to be a starter, so second-team is no problem."

In other Top 25 games, it was No. 13 Alabama 21, Bowling Green 7 and No. 21 Kansas State 21, Texas Tech 14.

Later games, it was UNLV at No. 2 Tennessee, Southwestern Louisiana at No. 4 Florida, Missouri at No. 8 Texas, Alabama-Birmingham at No. 16 Auburn and Arkansas State at No. 19 Auburn Young.

On Thursday night, No. 25 Kansas beat Ball State 35-10.

No. 5 Colorado 37, Washington St. 19

At Boulder, Colo., Detmer completed 20 of 33 passes for 254 yards, with TD passes of 7 yards to James Kidd, 43 yards to Chris Anderson and 25 yards to Russell Troutman as the Buffs built a 31-6 lead early in the third quarter.

No. 11 Miami 30, Memphis 7

Miami led 3-0 at halftime, but coach Butch Davis' special teams got the Hurricanes going in the second half. Booker Pickens blocked Drew Fairman's punt and, two plays later, quarterback Ryan Clement ran it in. Seventy seconds later, Benton went 57 yards on his punt return and Miami led 17-0.

Clement was 17-of-26 for 205 yards, while Benton had nine catches for 147 yards. Dyrall McMillan, who replaced Ferguson, had 24 carries for 119 yards.

No. 12 Michigan 20, Illinois 8

At Ann Arbor, Mich., Dreisbach was 11-of-23 for 117 yards, including a 10-yard TD pass to Russell Shaw that put the Wolverines ahead 17-8 early in the fourth quarter. The attendance was 115,922.

No. 13 Alabama 21, Bowling Green 7

At Birmingham, Ala., Freddie Kitchens' 50-yard pass to Calvin Hall set up Curtis Alexander's 1-yard TD run in the third quarter as the Crimson Tide opened with a sluggish performance.

The Tide held Bowling Green to seven first downs and 177 total yards. Kenneth Frazier, who briefly replaced Kitchens in the second quarter, threw a 6-yard scoring pass to Marcell West to put Alabama ahead 14-0 with 2:20 left in the half.

No. 21 Kansas St. 21, Texas Tech 14

At Manhattan, Kan., Brian Kavanagh threw for one TD and ran for another as the Wildcats survived a wild finish in the first Big 12 Conference game.

The Red Raiders scored 11 points in the final 6:39, but Zebbie Lettrich's fourth-down pass from the K-State 21 fell incomplete with 44 seconds left.

Byron Hunsford had 115 yards on 21 carries for Texas Tech.

Former coach got Boise State off to good start

BOISE (AP) — If you ever doubt the impact Lyle Smith has on Boise State football, look at the field.

His name is in it. Or watch the genteel 80-year-old wander the Varsity Center and notice how everyone stops to say hello. "So how is the legend doing today?" interim coach Tom Mason asks. Smith chuckles in embarrassment, then talks about his golf game.

Lyle Smith is BSU football. He's the coach. The legend. And he was waiting for BSU's first taste of the big-time Saturday night, for decades.

Smith walked two blocks from his home, smile at revealing tailgaters to join about 19,000 fans in Bronco Stadium. Together they will celebrate as the Broncos enter Lyle Smith Field and Boise State's birth into I-A football.

"We used to dream about this," Smith said. "We used to think about what it would be like, how it would be, and in a lot of ways this has exceeded our dreams. It's really exciting. A lot of it I didn't think I'd be here for, but it's happened."

"I'm glad I am alive to see it." The season-opener game was the stadium's first between two I-A schools. Technically BSU joined I-A football on July 1, but it hasn't been tangible. How do you get excited about a sport you haven't seen?

Smith says he was waiting for the moment for 50 years. In 1946 the handsome young World War II vet was hired by Boise Junior College. The school had 600 students, three permanent buildings and one assistant coach: Lyle Smith.

A year later he was the head coach — and he led the Broncos until 1967, the school's final season of junior-college play.

As coach, when games were played in front of 300 fans, many of them parents. Smith was athletics director from 1947-1981. He orchestrated the construction of Bronco Stadium in 1970, wears a ring from the 1980 national championship team and claims to have seen every home game since the '50s. He pushed the program from JC play to Division-II, from Division-II to I-AA.

"It's going to be interesting to see," Smith said. "We always thought this would happen eventually, and it's really exciting. I don't think we've ever faced as many obstacles as this year, but who is to say? Maybe the young men will rise up and make us proud."

Smith knows the team will struggle this season. A look at other schools that have made the I-A jump shows growing pains usually hit. It takes time to build a competitive program.

Yet he says it is the right thing to do. The fans want it. And they should have it.

And he says, in many ways, the atmosphere is similar to when Boise Junior College became four-year Boise State in 1967. There was a sense of anticipation, a curiosity about what was to come.

"Things were a little different than it is today," Smith said. "Let me say that in a lot of ways we had the best of it. There wasn't so much pressure upon us. The money is so important now. It really puts more pressure upon everyone."

Smith isn't the type who lives in the past. He's proud of the school's history, quickly passing credit to boosters and administrators who made things easy for him, but is as proud of the present BSU program.

"I think they've got a great job down there," he said. "I try to help out, but I don't even think I can speak the language anymore."

Maybe not. But he understands the significance of I-A as opposed to I-AA. He can't wait for the Sept. 21 road trip to Honolulu.

That's BSU's first I-A road trip. And it is where Lyle Smith will visit some of his former players, Hawaiians who spent four years playing for a legend. The former players are grandparents now, many retired, half graced with gray.

Ousted Cal coach denies allegations of sexual phone calls

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Ousted California basketball coach Todd Bozeman is turning the tables on a former student of the school who accused him of threatening her and making sexual telephone calls to her.

Bozeman, who resigned under pressure Wednesday after 3 1/2 years with the school, said Friday that Suzanne M. Wilson, now 32, said she lied to him about what she would do with $2,000 he loaned her for law school tuition.

With his arm around his wife at a court hearing, Bozeman said the only threat he ever made against Wilson was that he would tell the police and FBI about her participation in an alleged pyramid scheme in which he said he lost money.

Wilson, a 22-year-old first-year student at Hastings College of the Law, obtained a temporary restraining order against Bozeman on Aug. 14 after complaining that he made threatening telephone calls and that some calls took on a sexual nature.

A few days later, Bozeman, 32, resigned in the shadow of her claims and an investigation of the basketball program he took to three NCAA tournament appearances.

The program is under investigation for major rules violations and faces penalties that could be announced as early as next month.

In a response to Wilson's court claim, Bozeman said "several of the basketball players" had told him of having sexual relations with Wilson.

"A very good friend of hers will testify that she in fact was the one who was sleeping with several of the players," he said.

years to try to do that," he told reporters after Friday's hearing.

According to Bozeman's court files, Wilson told him in May that she wanted to go to law school but didn't have enough money for tuition. She asked him several times to loan her $2,000 for a nonpayment of tuition.

Bozeman said he finally gave in, making Wilson promise to return the amount within six weeks. He later found out the club was illegal and demanded it back immediately.

Bozeman said he tried to call Wilson several times to demand the money back, but she would not return his messages. He finally found her on campus and threatened to report her to the police.

Wilson left the courthouse Friday without commenting.

Her lawyer, Erik Larson, said, "I have no comment other than this shall be tried in the court, not in the press, and my client stands by her initial pleadings."

Her version is that Bozeman made unwelcome sexual advances as many as three calls a day "under the pretense of his interest in the activity of the club, but the conversations had sexual connotations," according to her complaint.

Seahawks open against nemesis Chargers

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Rick Mirer was a sophomore at Notre Dame the last time the Seattle Seahawks won at San Diego.

Fast forward six seasons and Mirer and the rest of the Seahawks would love to continue the momentum from last season's second-half run by knocking off the AFC West rival Chargers in the season opener Sunday.

"We've got our share of problems in our own division, and that's why we haven't been in the playoffs in the last seven years," said Mirer, entering his first season as Seattle's starting quarterback. "Our start is figuring out how to beat those teams and do it consistently, we don't have a chance. I think that's really the point we're at now."

"We've seen San Diego and Denver and Oakland and Kansas City hold an appeal hearing each next week. Until the matter is resolved, we must protect Delon's best interests and therefore we can't comment further."

Southern Cal's next two games are at Illinois on Sept. 7 and at home against Oregon State on Sept. 14. The Oregon State game is the Trojans' Pacific-10 Conference opener.

Washington became Southern Cal's first 1,000-yard rusher since 1990 when he gained 1,109 yards on 236 carries last season.

His 92.4-yard per game average ranked second in the Pac-10. He had five 200-yard rushing games.

Southern Cal announced Aug. 20 that it was suspending Washington for one game — the Kansas State game.

"There's not two miles I can say," Washington said in a statement issued by the school at that time. "I'll persevere. All I can do is accept the situation and just go on. I'll cheer on my teammates in the opener and prepare myself for the next game."

As a freshman two years ago, Washington gained 119 yards on 10 carries in a 24-17 season-opening victory over Washington, and then led the Trojans in rushing with 44 yards on nine carries in 38-14 loss at Penn State.

Before the season's third game, Southern Cal decided to withhold him from competition while questions regarding his eligibility, which was certified by the NCAA, were being resolved.

Those questions weren't cleared up until late in the season, and Washington didn't play again until the Trojans' 55-14 victory over Texas Tech in the Cotton Bowl.

NCAA adds 2 days to USC rusher's suspension

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Southern California plans to appeal an NCAA ruling that tailback Delon Washington, the team's leading rusher last season, must sit out two more games for an alleged "ethical violation."

The NCAA informed the school Friday that Washington must miss a total of three games. The junior from Dallas already sat out the Trojans' 24-7 loss to Kentucky last Sunday in the Kickoff Classic at East Rutherford, N.J.

"USC believes this penalty is excessive and unwarranted," Robert Lane, the school's general counsel, said in a news release. "We are attempting to have the NCAA hold an appeal hearing early next week. Until the matter is resolved, we must protect Delon's best interests and therefore we can't comment further."

Southern Cal's next two games are at Illinois on Sept. 7 and at home against Oregon State on Sept. 14. The Oregon State game is the Trojans' Pacific-10 Conference opener.

Washington became Southern Cal's first 1,000-yard rusher since 1990 when he gained 1,109 yards on 236 carries last season.

Ravens debut in Baltimore against Oakland Raiders

The Associated Press

The last official NFL game in Baltimore was Dec. 18, 1983, when the Baltimore Colts beat the Houston Oilers 20-10 before 18,000 fans at Memorial Stadium. A couple months later, Bob Ivey lined up the Mayflower moving vans and took the Colts to Indianapolis.

There will be 47,000 more people in attendance Sunday, when Art Modell's transplanted Cleveland Browns make their debut as the Baltimore Ravens. The opponent is appropriate — the Raiders, sometimes Oakland, sometimes Los Angeles, currently back on the east side of San Francisco Bay.

This is truly the Mayflower FFA Bowl (for franchise free agency), the perfect way to start the 1996 NFL season.

It's a vastly different league than it was two years ago. There are two expansion teams, three clubs that have relocated (the Ravens, Rams and Raiders), and the Houston Oilers are beginning a lame-duck season before moving to Tennessee.

Dallas (12-4) at Chicago (9-7) (Monday night)

The state of the Cowboys as defined by 330-pound philosopher Nate Newton:

"We've got to quit whining. It's time to start playing football and quit worrying about who is here. It's time to rock and get nasty and mean."

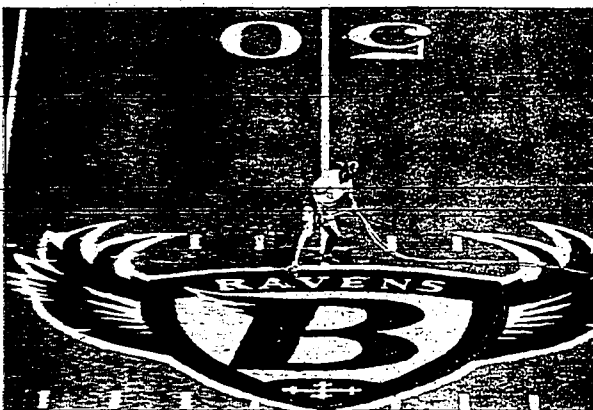

A lot of the whining comes from Barry Switzer, who calls Dallas the thinnest team in the league because of the money spent to sign stars Emmitt Smith, Deion Sanders, Troy Aikman and Michael Irvin, who is starting a five-game suspension.

Irvin's not the only one missing. Injuries have claimed the top three tight ends, Jay Novacek, Kendall Watkins and Eric Bjornson. And Smith has a sprained knee.

New England (6-10) at Miami (9-7)

Drew Bledsoe and Dan Marino isn't a bad show, but this one's really about coaches — Jimmy Johnson, making his regular-season debut in Miami, and Bill Parcells, one of the few colleagues to whom Johnson gives his due.

Johnson has 24 new players on the 53-man roster from the team he inherited from Don Shula, and Ryan VanWinkle of Poughkeepsie, Ohio, gets ready to put the final touches on the Baltimore Ravens' mid-field logo Saturday.

Five rookies could star

Remember this: Johnson was 1-15 his first year in Dallas. Remember also that he didn't have Marino there.

"Some of all the new players, we're going to have some bumps in the road early," he said. "The last half of the schedule we'll be playing outstanding football."

Pittsburgh (11-5) at Jacksonville (4-12)

The Steelers break in QB Jim

Miller now that Neil O'Donnell's run off to the Jets for $25 million. So look for the Jaguars to throw a lot of blitzes at him; they came out blitzing even in their exhibition opener.

Under Bill Cowher, the Steelers have survived change well at running back, from Tim Worley to Barry Foster to Ram Morris and now to Jerome Bettis and Eric Decker. Playing Miller keeps Mike Tomczak in his career slot as a backup and allows Kordell Stewart to play his multiple "Suck" roles.

Kansas City (13-3) at Houston (7-9)

The first of 16 "road" games for the Oilers, who will be playing before 30,000 or more empty seats.

That's a shame, because Jeff Fisher has the makings of a good young team, led by quarterback Steve McNair and running back Eddie George. Chris Chandler and Rodney Thomas may be the minimal starters, but not for long.

Green Bay (11-5) at Tampa Bay (7-9)

A new coach for the Bucs, Tony Dungy, and a lot of new talent. But Trent Dilfer's still the quarterback in an offense that remains without holdout RB Ernie Rhee.

Tuesday is the referendum to provide money for a new stadium for Tampa. A win or good showing might produce a few more "Yes" votes, a loss the opposite.

This is the first regular-season game for Brett Favre since the Green Bay quarterback spent 46 days in rehab overcoming an addiction to painkillers. The Pack carries a heavy load as the preseason Super Bowl favorite of many, but they have the tools, including pass-rushing defensive tackle Santana Dotson, a former Buc.

New Orleans (4-9) at San Francisco (11-5)

A tradition continues. This is the fourth time in nine years these two have opened against each other, although the previous three times it was in New Orleans. The Niners won those by a total of four points.

The San Francisco offensive line is hurting. So is the New Orleans defensive line — so much so that Brady Smith, a third-round rookie pass rusher, may play full time at end.

Buffalo (10-6) at New York Giants (5-11)

Just when everything seemed fine in Buffalo, Bruce Smith began to yell about not getting a contract extension. But that's just a blip on what could be a fifth trip to the Super Bowl in seven years — and perhaps the last shot for Smith, Jim Kelly, Thurman Thomas, Andre Reed, Steve Tasker and Ken Heil.

Seattle (8-8) at San Diego (9-7)

Well, at least the Seahawks still are in Seattle and will remain so if Paul Allen can find a place bigger than a microchip to build a stadium. A good team would help, and this could be one if quarterback Rick Mirer reverses last year's slide. He has Joey Galloway and Brian Blades to throw to and Chris Warren to run.

The Chargers are the tortoise in the tortoise-hare race. They won their last five to make the playoffs last year and, like most Bobby Beathard teams, remain largely anonymous, except for Stan Humphries and Junior Seau.

New York Jets (3-13) at Denver (8-8)

Both teams have high expectations that may be a bit unjustified — the Jets because of the spending spree that got them Neil O'Donnell, Jumbo Elliott and some lesser-priced free agents, the Broncos because they think six new starters finally means a defense that can stop somebody.

John Mobley, the first-round draft choice, will start at outside linebacker and could be Denver's first defensive impact player in nearly a decade. O'Donnell has some targets, notably Keyshawn Johnson, the first overall pick in the draft, but there's still a long way to go.

Atlanta (9-7) at Carolina (7-9)

The Panthers open their new facility. Their team, best in expansion history, is not bad, either. Carolina almost opened with a win last year, losing 23-20 in overtime at Atlanta.

The offense has improved. Tshimanga Biakaburuka looks like the running back they need and Kerry Collins keeps learning at quarterback. But they live or die on defense, where only one starter, cornerback Tyrone Poole, is younger than 28.

Arizona (4-12) at Indianapolis (9-7)

Vince Tobin makes his head coaching debut against an Indianapolis team whose defense

he molded. He does it with a team that is either:

Desperate, because it's starting rookies Simon Ruff at defensive end and Leonard McElroy at running back barely a week after they signed.

So laden with talented rookies that Rice and McElroy are good enough to start.

The Colts have high expectations after almost getting to the Super Bowl last year: Lindy Infante is the new coach and needs QB Jim Harbaugh to have another season like 1995.

Detroit (10-6) at Minnesota (8-8)

The Lions won seven straight last year to make the playoffs and save Wayne Fontes' job. But the operative numbers are 58-37, the score of the wild-card game which they lost to Philadelphia. They also beat Minnesota 44-38 last year, an indication of what these two teams are about.

Both teams are hurting at line-backer. Pepper Johnson was brought in to spell injured Michael Brooks in the middle after Detroit let Chris Spielman leave as a free agent. The Vikings lost outside LB Ed McClellan with a knee injury early in camp, brought in Darrell Talley and now Talley's hurt.

Philadelphia (10-6) at Washington (6-10)

Both have designs on playoff spots and could raise their sights if the Cowboys continue to fall.

The Eagles will have Rodney Peete back at quarterback, bruised knee and all, and the Redskins will play Gus Frerotte, leaving Heath Shuler on the bench with bruised feelings.

Cincinnati (7-9) at St. Louis (7-9)

Two teams that hope they're on the way up. The Bengals have to be to save Dave Shula's job.

This is the regular-season unveiling for the Bengals' Ki-Jana Carter, who missed all of last season with a knee injury. But more important to Cincinnati may be another No. 1 overall draft pick, DT Don Williams, who needs to play up to his potential.

Miami tries to cope with life without Shula

MIAMI (AP) — In the late 1960s, Bubba Smith played for a coach who seemed to be a permanent part of the NFL.

Off a nuclear bomb, he was ever dropped on the United States, Smith said, "the only things that will survive are Astroturf and Don Shula."

As it turns out, Astroturf outlived Shula. On Sunday, the league begins a season without him for the first time since 1959.

When the Miami Dolphins take the field for their opener against the New England Patriots, the focus will be on Shula's successor, Jimmy Johnson. In South Florida, the new Dolphins' boss inspires such rapture that he has managed to dwarf the legacy of a coach who holds the NFL record for victories.

But if the Dolphins don't miss Shula, he misses them. And he acknowledges that Sunday will be a difficult day.

"Everything else I've been able to handle in real life," said Shula, 66. "My wife and I have enjoyed being busy and traveling. Now that a new season starts, the reality of not being on the sideline for the first time in 30 years is going to sink in."

Shula won't attend the Dolphins' opener.

"He'll live through it, but it's tough," said New York Giants general manager George Young, one of Shula's best friends in the NFL. "It's been his whole life. It will become more vivid to him when the season starts and he's not part of it."

Shula joined the league in 1951 as a cornerback for the Cleveland Browns. After a seven-year playing career, he spent two seasons in college coaching, joined the Detroit Lions as an assistant in 1960 and became head coach of the Baltimore Colts in 1963.

He went on to win 347 games. Should Johnson go undefeated for the next 15 years, he would still say of 1960 total.

"I've posted my numbers," Shula said, "and I'm very proud of them."

Now he becomes a fan waiting for Cincinnati and Tampa Bay, along with Miami. Older son David is "the Bengals' head coach; younger son Mike is the offensive coordinator for the Buccaneers. Dad said he'll likely monitor the opening weekend on television for his summer home in North Carolina.

The Dolphins will have him Sept. 12 with a black tie dinner for 750 guests, including Florida Gov. Lawton Chiles and NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue. But Shula has generally kept his distance from the Dolphins since retiring, perhaps in part because of his strained relationship with Johnson.

Shula attended both home pre-season games, but has yet to visit practice, and he skipped the team's annual awards banquet in April. Dolphins owner Wayne Huizenga gave him a new position, vice chairman, but no duties.

"We're going to have a meeting sometime this next month, and I'll learn more about it," Shula said. "I'm not involved in any of the day-to-day operations."

Instead, Shula has spent much of the year on the road and on the golf course. A bogey golfer, he shot an 88 at Turnberry, Scotland. Shula and his wife, Mary Anne, made their first visit to Sunnyside, and they saw Carl Lewis, Michael Johnson and the Dream Team in action at the Olympics.

Some imagine Shula acquaintances say he's bitter, because he decided to retire impulsively at Huizenga's urging after a disappointing '97 season. When asked about the public perception regarding his departure in January, Shula responds with a growl long familiar to reporters covering the Dolphins.

"I don't know what the public perception is," he said. "I'm comfortable and feel I made the right decision. I'm at peace with myself and want to enjoy the year."

Seahawks talks move to private rooms

SEATTLE (AP) — Two days after King County Executive Gary Locke and the prospective owners of Seattle Seahawks held rival press conferences denouncing each other, the two sides began talking again in private.

A meeting Friday between Paul Allen's Football Northwest Inc. representatives and Locke moved the discussion of the Seahawks' Kingdom lease out of the public eye.

All participants emerged from the private meeting with smiles.

"We resumed communicating," said Locke.

On Wednesday, Locke called a press conference, without Allen's participation, to release to the media a letter he sent to Metropolitan King County Councilman Jane Hague. The letter outlined conditions Locke would offer the Seahawks in their Kingdom lease if Allen bought the team. The offer included a three-year lease that would replace the current 10-year lease if the Seahawks commit to staying in the Seattle area until 2005.

At a counter press conference later Wednesday, Allen representative Bob Whitsett said Locke reneged on a promise of an unconditional three-year lease. He also said that if Locke had set the same conditions on a new Seahawks lease in March as he is setting now, Allen would never have bought the option he holds to purchase the team from current owner Ken Behring before July 1997.

"I'm confident we'll keep the Seahawks in the Puget Sound region," Locke said after Friday's meeting.

Locke can use the 10-year Kingdom lease as a weapon to keep Behring from moving the team or selling to a new owner outside the state.

Helping workers stay fit

BRIEFLY IN BUSINESS

Course on Wall Street offered at CSI Sept. 7

TWIN FALLS — "Guide to the Wall Street Journal," a beginning investor's course, will be held from 9 a.m. to noon Sept. 7 in the Evergreen Building at the College of Southern Idaho.

John Hurley, chairman of the Business Department, will review the Journal for money and investing, the market place and economic indicators that affect business and investment decisions. Participants may be offered a subscription to the Wall Street Journal at a reduced rate.

The fee for the class is $35, and anyone interested can register in the Taylor Building Records Office.

Drug company agrees to change painkiller ads

NEW YORK — The maker of the painkiller Oridis KT has agreed to change the language of its television commercials that claimed doctors preferred the drug over others.

American Home Products Corp. no longer runs the commercials, and said it would have different language in future commercials, the Better Business Bureau said Thursday.

The company said the ads were truthful, but Johnson & Johnson, which makes Tylenol, had complained that the ads misled consumers.

"There are many prescription pain medicines and a doctor can prescribe any of them," the ad said. "Yet 82 percent of doctors surveyed have prescribed Oridis."

The preference rate for Oridis KT was not contrasted with prescription rates of other painkillers.

The ads also said that Oridis is "so potent, just 25 milligrams is as effective as 400 milligrams of Motrin IB, 440 of Aleve or 1,000 milligrams of Extra Strength Tylenol."

Johnson & Johnson argued that just because patients take a lower amount of Oridis doesn't mean it is better than other drugs, and arbiters with the Better Business Bureau agreed.

Industrial group reports swing back to profits

FRANKFURT, Germany — Daimler-Benz AG said Thursday it returned to profitability in the first half of this year, crediting a restructuring and a renewed focus on core businesses.

The company, based in Stuttgart, Germany, earned the equivalent of $532 million compared with a loss of $1.1 billion in the same period last year. Sales rose 1.3 percent to $33.4 billion.

"By reducing the group from 35 to 25 highly focused business units, we are already a leaner, more productive and more profitable company," chairman Juergen Schrempp said in a news conference in London.

Wall Street mostly ignored the results, with Daimler-Benz shares losing 37 cents at $54.62 each in afternoon trading on the New York Stock Exchange.

Daimler is one of the world's largest industrial conglomerates. It businesses include Mercedes-Benz vehicles manufacturing unit, Daimler-Benz Aerospace, financial services unit Daimler-Benz InterServices, as well as some remaining businesses units from the breakup of its AEG electronics subsidiary.

Bond market weak after reports on economy

WASHINGTON — The bond market had a bad week as an upward revision in second-quarter gross domestic product and some other data convinced investors that economic growth is not slowing as much as had been expected.

As a result, many analysts are now predicting the Fed will raise short-term rates in September, and some Fed officials indicated they might do just that. A lot will depend on the strength shown in Friday's report on August employment.

Delayed by Labor Day, the Treasury will sell $12 billion each in three- and six-month bills on Tuesday. In when issued trading Friday, the bills yielded 5.28 percent and 5.52 percent.

Dunken's owner plans to tap his last keg

By Pat Marcantonio
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Tim Jones smiles with memories — like the time he stole a parking-space sign from a nearby attorney to decorate his then-new Dunken's Draught House.

Along with the lifted sign, a lot of Jones' personality hangs on the walls at the bar he opened in July 1990 on Main Street out of a love of beer.

Jones still loves beer, but he is selling the popular business. In late September, new owners will take over.

He declined to name the buyers or sale price. Jones says the place will probably remain Dunken's, Jones' mother's maiden name.

"It was time for me to make a change in my life," he said. His second-year wedding anniversary to wife, Karen, was coming up and he found himself "drinking too much of my own product."

"I just wanted to do something different lifestyle-wise, better than the bar business," Jones said.

Jones is leaving a market that has become more crowded in the six years since Dunken's opened its doors.

Jones started Dunken's to offer a variety of beers then unavailable in Twin Falls. Because some beer could not be obtained locally, he used to make beer runs to Boise almost weekly.

Rock Creek owner Stan Thomas says his bar and restaurant first started selling a few imported beers. Jones, a friend and former employee, expanded on it.

Dunken's did suffer a little with the opening of Muggers Brewpub, a microbrewery, but business returned so that is not the reason he is leaving, Jones said.

Thomas gives Jones credit for giving residents a taste for different beers, which may have paved the way for Muggers and others as micro-brewed beers became more popular.

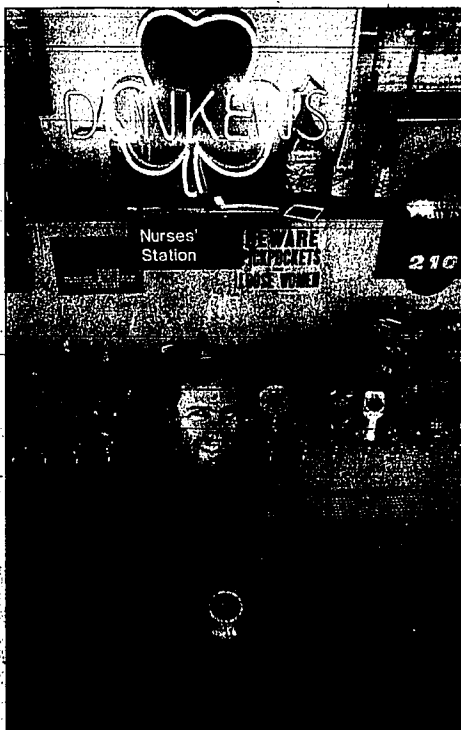

"He was the key guy," Thomas said. "He had a novel idea."

The novel idea grew from Jones' love of beer. These days, Dunkens boasts 71 varieties on tap and imported beers in the bottle or can from English lagers to German pilsners. He can recite the history of beer-like others know the Civil War.

"Beer is my beverage of choice," he said confidently. With a polished-tan and ale logo on his shirt, Jones is surrounded by the

Idaho mulls spousal accommodation policy

The Associated Press

MOSCOW — In 1987 Eileen Hitchingham came to the University of Idaho as the dean of library services.

In 1990 she and her family left because her husband Clay could not find a job.

"We both made the decision (to come to Idaho) knowing my husband didn't have a job when I accepted the position," said Hitchingham from her home in Blacksburg, Va. "He was willing to look for opportunities."

But after three years of searching, Clay couldn't find an engineering job and, reluctantly, the Hitchinghams left to pursue other job offers.

Hitchingham said her family liked Moscow and the UI and would have preferred staying. A formal policy on spousal accommodation may have kept Hitchingham at the school, and she believes such a policy would help others.

"It definitely would make a greater attraction for many couples," she said.

However, when jobs are filled by the new recruit's spouse without a search, it creates resentment among other university employees denied the chance for advancement.

"With no official policy, spousal accommodation can run afoul of the university's claim of equal opportunity employment. But does the race for highly sought administrators and faculty take precedent over fairness to current staff members?"

"We recognize the importance and the need for having spousal accommodations to ensure we do get those qualified people," said Jane Baillargeon, program evaluation analyst and president of the Staff Affairs Committee.

"The problem is, the issue is a two-sided coin. We have to weigh which side we are coming down on, and I'm not convinced that we can stand that coin on its edge and hit both sides." In May, SAC unanimously recommended a succinct policy on spousal accommodation to then-interim President Thomas Bell and new President Bob Hoover. "Normal recruiting and hiring procedures shall never be circumvented," the policy reads.

The policy says spousal/partner accommodation trends on the intent of equal opportunity laws, threatens career advancement of current staff, only benefits the administration and upper level faculty and destroys staff morale.

The UI Faculty Council's Affirmative Action Committee has also been busy creating a spousal/partner accommodation policy. But AAC's proposed policy favors accommodation in certain instances.

David Barber, associate professor of English and former AAC chairman, said the proposed policy would be far better than no policy which leaves it open for misuse.

"The university has morale problems anyway and evidently the staff have a great deal of morale problems," he said. "For them, (spousal/partner accommodation) is seen as a kick in the face."

A few passing thoughts from the stupidest guy in the room

By Dan Gillmor
Knight-Ridder News Service

On line

One thing hadn't changed: I'm pretty sure I was still the intellectual midget in the crowd. But while the conversation dealt with Big Issues — such as the implications and future of worldwide networks — people also were talking about how to truly make it all happen, in the legal and social senses, not just technically.

That's not a small thing. Visionaries make us think, but other people tend to make it real.

One of the most practical things I saw at the workshop (don't let the yawn-inducing title, "New Paradigms for Using Computers," fool you) was the way microphones made their way to people in the audience who wanted to ask questions. At many conferences, the standard method is for staff members to run around, handing the microphones to questioners, or forcing questioners to line up in the aisles.

The solution: Mount a wireless mike and antenna on a small, rubber football and literally throw it to questioners. "We will be passing around the mike, so to speak," joked IBM's Ted Selker, the workshop organizer (and a prodigious human idea factory). There were glitches, of course: People weren't certain which end of the football to talk into, and the football mikes weren't of the highest fidelity.

Stretching it a bit, you might imagine objects of affection for the bar, an eclectic collection of the reverent and irreverent. License plates. An old pair of boots. Fish flag. A deer head wearing baseball caps. Over the beer taps a sign reading, "Nurses station." When he opened the door, there were stark white walls, so he borrowed the attorney sign. His customers donated other memorabilia.

"Things just started to appear. Let's just say I let it decorate itself," Jones said.

Aside from the beer, Jones says he wanted Dunken's to be a place for people to meet and talk.

"It's a great sound to hear people talking and laughing together," Jones said. "It's wonderful."

He'll miss that. Standing behind a bar offered a microcosm of life as he served up regulars, friends and "a few late night guys you had to throw out."

Dunken's and owner are almost synonymous to Twin Falls attorney Ken Pedersen, whose rock-band often played there.

"People go to a bar like that, not just to have a beer, but go there for a certain atmosphere and Tim's personality. His friendly, genuinely friendly personality is really what made that bar a success," said Pedersen. "It's very much a neighborhood bar, like Cheers. Tim made it that way."

He's entertaining. People gravitate toward him," Thomas added.

Marla Larson of neighboring Larson Arts says Jones has also been a great supporter of downtown.

"He has a great sense of humor and knows all his customer's names," Larson said. "It's been a very friendly and comfortable place to go. He personally will be missed."

Among his joys are community projects, Jones said. He and Thomas started a still-going-strong St. Patrick's Day parade. This spring, Dunkens sponsored a race and donated $1,000 to a Rock Creek restoration project.

A longtime home brewer of beer, Jones says he has had discussions with a regional micro-brewery to work in marketing and sales.

"It's really been kind of fun to continue in the beer business on a bigger scale," he said.

Jones will remain in Twin Falls after the sale and he'll return to Dunken's, this time as a customer.

"Oh," he said, "it's the best beer in town."

Gigantic mergers resurface

The Associated Press

The mega-merger is back, two companies tidy up and the current reading (subject to change anytime) on the economy.

What happened in business this past week:

The re-emergence of mergers

It's been pretty quiet in the mergers and acquisitions business lately, at least as far as mega-mega-deals are concerned, but the vacation ended this past week as two big mergers, one in telecommunications and the other in banking, were announced.

the football as a partial metaphor for today's Internet. The usefulness of the Net and World Wide Web is obvious. The practical reality, so far, is that things don't work very well some of the time, and the barriers to truly widespread use of this medium remain fairly high.

The growing sluggishness on the Net, largely because users (and content providers) tend to assume that they have first call on what are actually shared resources, is only one problem.

The sheer variety of information is another. "We're going to be drowning in media fragments," observed Ted Nelson, one of the early gurus of this technology. Nelson is credited with com-

Safety report says kids should avoid airbags

Knight-Ridder News Service

WASHINGTON — Motorists on the nation's highways this Labor Day weekend will be seeing rolling reminders that air bags can kill and injure people, especially children.

To reduce deaths and injuries from the powerful deployment of air bags, trucks with billboards mounted on their sides will take to major highways as part of an education campaign funded by the National Automotive Occupant Protection Campaign, a coalition of automakers, insurers and safety groups.

Targeted to reach the record

33 million travelers expected to hit the roads this weekend, the billboards warn: "Alert. Air Bag Safety. Everyone buckled. Kids in Back."

The danger behind the somewhat cryptic message is deadly serious. Since 1993, 24 children have been killed by air bags. Most of the children were either not wearing seat belts or were seated too close to the air bag when it deployed, federal safety officials say.

At least seven were infants killed because they were in rear-facing child seats.

Rear-facing child seats should never be put in the front seat of a vehicle with air bags, safety officials say.

The deaths of 18 adults also have been blamed on air bags. Most of the adults who died also were not wearing seat belts or were frail or elderly adults seated too close to the air bag, according to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA).

In crashes, even in minor ones, air bags explode from dashboards at speeds of 200 miles per hour. While the bags have been credited with saving 1,500 lives since 1987, that force has proved most deadly for some children. Seat belts and child safety seats help protect children from air bags.

Profit margin falling for many U.S. companies

Still, economy remains robust and healthy

NEW YORK (AP) — Away from the financial markets' nail-biting about whether the Federal Reserve will raise interest rates lies an equally important concern: Profit gains are stealthily narrowing at many American corporations, and they are doing so at a time of strong economic growth.

One reason this has not been obvious is that profits by and large have exceeded the dire predictions of analysts, who continue to forecast Armageddon when the facts may indicate only a minor skirmish.

But it is a skirmish that bears watching. "Comparisons in the second quarter were a little better than expected," said Arnold Kaufman, editor of The Outlook at Standard & Poor's Corp. "I think the same will be true of the third quarter. But the actual amount of profits being earned is flattening out."

Companies are still profitable; they are just less profitable than they used to be. And profit margins have contracted even as the economy hums along.

In the second quarter of this year, the nation's gross domestic product expanded at a robust annualized rate of 4.8 percent. But profits rose only 2 percent over the second quarter of 1995. That was less than half the 4.6 percent year-over-year gain in profits in the first quarter of 1996. And annualized at 8 percent is still significantly below the 11 percent earnings gain that companies posted for all of 1995, and a far cry from the 22 percent growth logged in 1994.

Many analysts are projecting much slower earnings growth than that in future years. "If we make 4 percent in 1997, we'll be lucky," said Hugh Johnson, chief market strategist at Fidelity Asset Corp.

Market experts cite several reasons for the slowdown. The most obvious is that profits were very high last year, so year-over-year comparisons are tough.

Associates Inc. in Wilmington, Del.

Second, companies are able to squeeze less and less profitability out of the downsizing trend, points out Ben Zacks, executive vice president at Zacks Investment Service in Chicago.

They cannot expand profit margins by cutting costs any more. Instead, they must sell more widgets.

Selling more widgets in many cases requires expanding production, and that is expensive and difficult for the many industries that are already operating very close to maximum capacity, points out John Lonski, senior economist at Moody's Investors Service.

There is also the problem of finding qualified workers, and then hiring them at wages that will not prove inflationary.

And to keep profits growing, companies have to charge more for the widgets they sell. That is another stumbling block in an economy of penny-pinching consumers who are insecure about their ability to keep their jobs.

"Probably the reason the earnings aren't growing more is that (companies) haven't been able to pass through price increases as they would have done in previous cycle," Zacks said.

U.S.-based international companies are counting on overseas economic growth to boost their profits. Moody's, for example, is forecasting 1997 growth in the European Union of 2.5 percent, compared with 1.5 percent in 1996.

Merger

WorldCom Inc., the nation's fourth-largest long-distance provider, agreed to buy MFS Communications Co. in a $1.4 billion deal that will create a company involved in local calling, long-distance and Internet access. If the deal goes through, it will be the fifth-biggest corporate merger in U.S. history.

MFS is a company relatively few Americans know. It provides companies and other institutions with high-capacity phone systems that link them cheaply with long-distance providers. The two firms combined would be a big power in the market for business communications.

Meanwhile, NationsBank Corp. plans to buy Boatmen's Bancshares Inc. for $8.7 billion. The merger, which would create the nation's fourth-biggest banking company, is part of the continuing consolidation in the industry, driven by the need to cut costs to remain competitive.

There's no huge significance in the fact that these two big deals were announced within days of each other and following a period of semi-dormancy in mammoth mergers. But they do show that companies remain on the lookout for mergers that make sense, and that they're willing to wait until the really right partner comes along.

Tying up some loose ends

Two companies belatedly by losses moved closer to resolving their problems during the past week.

A bankruptcy judge approved a reorganization plan for Morrison Knudsen Corp. under which the engineering and construction company will merge with Washington Construction Group Inc., a smaller company based in Highland, Calif. The plan will leave Morrison Knudsen substantially debt-free as its creditors are reimbursed with stock in the merged company, which will be called Morrison Knudsen.

Morrison Knudsen ran into trouble when chief executive William Agre tried to move it into rail car manufacturing. Lloyd's of London, meanwhile, was contending with problems caused by natural as well as man-made disasters. The famed insurance market, shaken by $12.4 billion in losses for five years ending in 1992, said it had persuaded enough of its investors to approve a rescue package to keep Lloyd's in business.

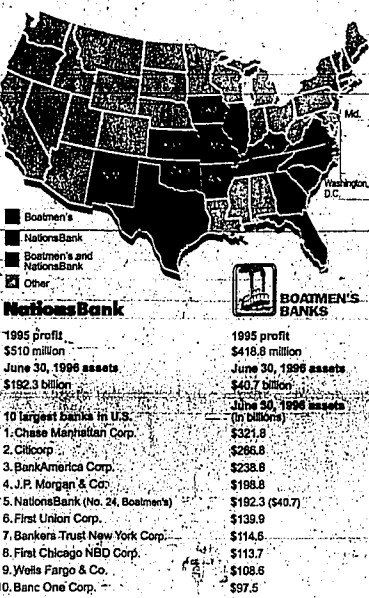

There are still some final details to be worked out, including approval from the British government. Lloyd's said it hoped to resolve the remaining issues by the end of the coming week.

The sure thing du jour

Now it appears interest rates are going up after all. A batch of new statistics showed the economy may be stronger than everyone thought just a week ago — new home sales were up sharply and so were factory orders, and two surveys showed that consumer confidence is up again.

So of course the financial markets took a couple of hits as some of the people who mellowed out after the Federal Reserve's inaction on interest rates the previous week decided it was time to hit the panic button after all. The Fed's policy-makers are meeting Sept. 24 and of course they're going to raise rates, or so the current conventional wisdom goes.

Winners, losers in between WINNERS: Dunlop Tire Corp., which reported it expects to make a profit this year after suffering losses for the last nine years in a row.

LOSERS: Robert J. Frankenberg, unable to integrate WordPerfect Corp. and other newly-purchased companies into software maker Novell Inc. Frankenberg resigned this past week as the company's chairman, chief executive and president.

IN BETWEEN: Many of the hot rod freaks hoping to buy Chrysler Corp.'s upcoming 1997 Plymouth Prowler. The automaker says it will sell only 2,500 of the purple roadsters in the United States and 250 in Canada next year, shutting down the plans of many enthusiasts who hoped to get one of the cars.

Tickler

Insurance company Conoco Inc. acquired all or parts of four life and health insurance companies for $2.04 billion — Three foreign-owned companies and three executives agreed to pay more than $20 million in fines for scheming to raise prices for lysine, an animal feed additive — Caterpillar Inc., at loggerheads with the United Auto Workers over a new contract since mid-1994, warned it would implement new employment terms unless talks resume.

That's entertainment?

No, that's retailing, and stores have found a new marketing tool

The Associated Press

In an Incredible Universe electronics store, customers applied as two top-hatted employees sing along with a karaoke video. In a Disney store, children watch "The Lion King" on an oversized screen.

And in a Barnes & Noble store, book browsers play out cassettes to read.

All of these shoppers are in these stores with the expectation of buying something. But they're also there because these stores are entertaining.

The marriage of merchandise and entertainment is one of the biggest strategies in retailing today. It is how retailers — small stores and national chains — set themselves apart from the competition.

Entertainment doesn't have to be music, videos, fashion shows or great appearances by soap opera stars. Entertainment is anything that makes shoppers have a good time, that stimulates their senses or emotions — and that gets them into a store, keeps them there and encourages them to buy.

At Incredible Universe brings bright colors, flashing lights, videos, music and performing sales people to electronics retailing. Customers notice the difference between these stores operated by Tandy Corp. and their more sedate competitors.

"Everybody has the same stuff, but you come in here, and hear the music ... you don't mind spending money here," said Mike Mulady, visiting a just-opened Incredible Universe in Elizabeth, N.J., near New York City.

Another shopper, Marie Lefina, seated in her 3-year-old car, said she was in a video game. "My husband loves it," she said of the store. "We've been here for an hour and 20 minutes and I haven't seen him."

Equally entertaining to other shoppers are the quiet, comfortable couches and cafes of bookstores and combination book and music retailers such as Barnes & Noble, Borders and Media Play. Or the Gershwin tunes emanating from the piano in a Nordstrom's atrium.

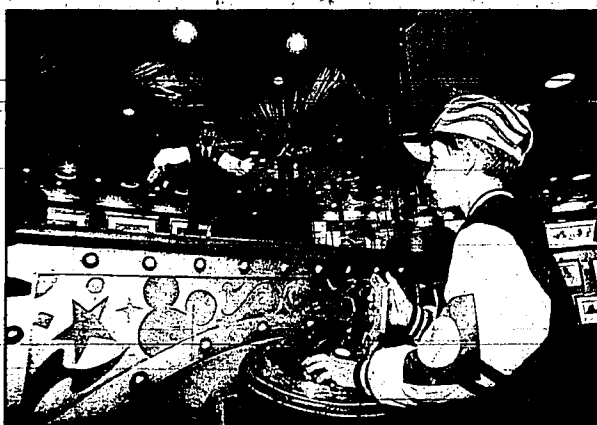

But it is flash and glitz that catches the attention of many customers, particularly younger ones. They're drawn to the walls of video screens in clothing stores, and these restaurants like Hard Rock Cafe, Harley Davidson Cafe and Rainforest Cafe that turn eating a hamburger and fries into an experience.

Disney and Warner Bros. Studio stores are inherently tied to entertainment by selling merchandise based on cartoon and movie characters. But these retailers leave nothing to chance, using videos, music and decor that look like it could have served as a backdrop for an animated film like "Beauty and the Beast" or "Snow White."

"People flock to these stores because they enjoy them," said Walter Lohr, a longtime retailing analyst and consultant.

The increased focus on entertainment in retailing is due in part to the influence of MTV and the growth of the entertainment industry in general as a part of our lives. Equally important is that retailers have to find a way to differentiate. They have to give consumers a compelling reason for coming into their stores.

"If they're happy, they may browse more, they may buy more, they won't go to the competition," said Aradhna Krishna, associate professor of marketing at Columbia University's Graduate School of Business.

Keeping customers entertained doesn't necessarily mean higher prices. Incredible Universe, for example, promotes itself on the basis of low prices rather than entertainment.

Janine Misdem, a partner in the market research firm Sputnik, said the big innovators in entertainment have been specialty stores that carved out their own niche. "They know they need to create a reason for people to return," she said.

Retailers of the most mundane merchandise can find ways to bring entertainment in.

The Daily Planet, a restaurant in LaGrangeville, N.Y., about midway between New York City and the state capital, Albany, could have been just another roadside diner.

But instead of going for the standard furniture tables and rubber plants, the owners gave the restaurant a nostalgia theme with movie and cartoon posters, clips from old films on TV screens and a juke box.

The three brothers who own The Daily Planet "knew they have to do something other than just have food," said Elizabeth Vankitiris, wife of one of the brothers, Doug Vankitiris.

The restaurant draws families, Little League teams and adults. And like big-city theme restaurants, it sells Daily Planet merchandise such as T-shirts and water bottles.

Larry's Shoes, a small chain of stores in Colorado and Texas, has installed cappuccino bars and gives free foot massages.

Playing rock music has long been a staple in stores catering to teens and young adults. The video wall followed. But as this innovation becomes more commonplace, it will be replaced by the next generation of entertainment — competition and the consumer's appetite for something new keeps upping the ante.

"There's no turning back now that we are producing consumers from the MTV generation and sensual stimulation is throughout our everyday lives more than it's ever been before," said Cynthia Cohen Turk, president of Marketplace 2000, a Miami-based consulting firm.

"Retailers have to keep up with a standard that keeps being raised." But that doesn't mean the decibel level in a store has to go up. What young consumers are looking for a place they can call their own, Misdem said.

She pointed to stores that sell skating or surfing equipment and that turn into meeting places for their customers. "All these stores have couches because the kids come and sit there all day long. It's like a club," she said.

Retailers don't worry that their customers drop in without buying anything. "When these kids want a T-shirt or a new board, they'll buy them in that store," she said.

Cybercafes, giving customers a chance to connect to the Internet while getting coffee and something to eat, are another new form of entertainment retailing, she said.

The people who design stores find ways to add what's known as entertainment value even to stores without high-tech gimmicks. They just take a more subtle approach.

At Crate & Barrel, the home furnishings store, the performers are the creative merchandise displays, said Tony Camilletti, vice president of visual communications with Jon Greenberg & Associates Inc., a firm that designs stores.

"How they hang their price signs or how they stack things, or how they fold things — all the little visual things they apply is just as entertaining. It sucks you in and appeals to an inanimate object that doesn't have a video screen."

Department stores, meanwhile, keep succeeding with events including fashion shows, bridal fairs and cooking demonstrations. Some are mammoth events, like the two-week flower show in Macy's big Manhattan store.

At Sears stores, Bob Vila, famed for his appearances on the PBS series "This Old House" and now a pitchman for Craftsman tools, draws a crowd when he shows up. Sears spokesman Ron Culp said, So do soap opera stars.

Dayton Hudson Corp.'s department stores brought in golf experts and installed putting greens to help customers with their game, and to help sell golf clothes. The company's largest discount stores also have events such as Toytrif, which allows children and their parents to try out toys before they buy them.

Sometimes the special events border on the bizarre, but if they work, who cares?

One of Sears' big recent successes was a promotion in which women were able to speak first with a consultant about their pantyhose size, and then with an

Malls continue to grow as entertainment centers

The Associated Press

It's getting harder to tell what's the biggest draw of a big regional shopping mall — the stores or the entertainment.

When mall developers began adding multiplex movie theaters and food courts to their plans, they helped change in the public's mind what shopping centers were all about. You didn't go there just for a shopping spree; you went there to have a great time.

Many malls have video game parlors, others have carousels, and the biggest mall in the country, Minnesota's Mall of America, has its own theme park, Camp Snoopy.

Entertainment, in particular movies, has helped retail sales increase significantly at shopping centers. Sales and shopper traffic have been up in the double digits at Mission Valley Mall in San Diego since AMC Entertainment opened a 20-screen theater last December, according to Scott Turcotte, the mall's general manager.

The mall, which has 100 stores including four "anchors," big retailers including Robinson's

Both involve reading charts, but Culp admitted that "your pantyhose size is not related to your sign."

Nude dancers unionize at San Fran club

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — It wasn't your typical young, toothy, sitting at the end of a desk of peep show doors, and a sign advertising "Nasty Nymphs" and "Nude Nymphs."

But it served its purpose for the dancers at the Lusty Lady, the women who wage nightly for 25 cents a look over 57-15 to join a union, apparently the only nude dancers to do so in the nation.

"This is a historical moment, fantastic for sex workers everywhere," said Dawn Pessar, co-founder of the Erotic Dancers Alliance, an advocacy group that joined — with the Service Employees International Union, Local 998 — to endorse the vote.

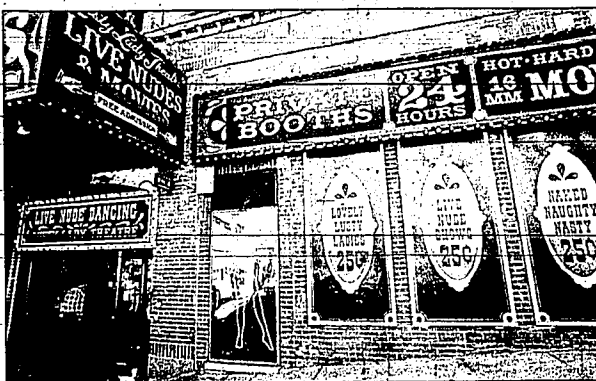

"I think it's great, although I'm not surprised we won," said a dancer who identified herself as Jane. "It was kind of anticlimactic, after fighting for it so long. Watching them count the votes was really unreal."

"(Management) is not going to be able to do things without us anymore," Jane said. "They'll have to be more concrete and consistent."

The employees of the Lusty Lady, a fixture in the city's red light district for 15 years, are not the first in the industry to unionize. Dancers at a similar club in San Diego voted to unionize several years ago, but new workers later voted to decertify that union.

Lusty Lady general manager, June Cade, who had publicly fought the union, said she was pleased after the results of Friday's vote were announced, and several dancers gave her hugs and words of encouragement.

"I'm satisfied that this is really what people wanted," Cade said. "So it's a new world, a new start. We'll just go on from here."

An unidentified man walks into San Francisco's Lusty Lady Theatre, where the strippers voted late Friday to unionize.

Sandra Steinbauer, the dancers' representative at Local 998, said negotiations for a contract should begin within two weeks.

Steinbauer said the dancers asked her to concentrate on developing a concrete schedule of raises and raising salaries of beginning dancers. The dancers currently earn $11 to $24 per hour.

Dancers also have said they are concerned about health care and sick leave benefits, favoritism and inconsistency in scheduling, Steinbauer said.

"For most people, it's not a career," said a dancer with the stage name Amnesia. "So people think that because you're a sex worker, you should care."

But she said the issue that really started the drive to unionize was windows.

Lusty Lady customers sit in 12 private booths, and used to be able to watch the dancers through one-way glass.

But when the dancers discovered that some customers were photographing and videotaping them, they demanded two-way glass so they could see out.

"Some dancers had spoken to general management about their concerns with confidentiality," Amnesia said. "It was something that had been addressed several thousand times without any response."

Cade eventually replaced the glass with see-through windows. Even some of the pro-union dancers said the Lusty Lady is among the better places in the industry.

"I love the place, mostly because I love my co-workers," Amnesia said.

And that was enough for one of the dancers who voted against the union.

"I've been working here on and off since I was 18," said Chloe, 24. "I really love the company, and although I'm for unions in general, I think this is the best place I've ever worked."

Miss America crown has quite a colorful history

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Phyllis George dropped her. Susan Perkins used a podium and tried to wig her hair and was found out in front of "Tonight Show" cameras.

Minnie Bergamini was stolen. And poor Lee Meriwether — her crown just disappeared.

The Miss America crown, a rhinestone-studded headpiece given to the winner of the world's most famous beauty pageant, endures as its most recognizable symbol.

"It's part of the magic," said the reigning Miss America, Shanelle Smith.

Comebackers trying to take over her title arrive in Atlantic City on Monday for this year's Miss America Pageant.

The crown, plated with rhodium and decorated with 650 round and oval-shaped rhinestones, weighs 6.5 ounces and is valued at about $1,000.

While the one given to Miss America during her coronation is hers to keep, a backup is kept at pageant offices here, just in case.

The backup was first made in 1954, after Virginia Williams was forced to resign because Miss America 1953, says her crown was stolen from her hotel room the same night she won. She never recovered it.

Crowns are more often damaged, mainly because Miss America typically travels about 20,000 miles a month, and that usually means four or five repairs during the year.

"They get into a car and forget they're wearing it and it gets knocked off. That or they just drop it," said Barbara Schoppa-Talman, owner of William Schoppa Trophy Co., a small publisher in suburban Lincolnwood.

Former Miss America Phyllis George carries her crown — which fell off her head — down the runway after winning the 1974 pageant.

that applies the crowns for free. Another problem is keeping the crown in place.

George's crown tumbled off her head as she walked down the runway following her 1971 coronation. She bent over, picked it up and carried it.

"I thought, 'Oh, great, now what do I do? I can't just leave this on the runway. It was so embarrassing,'" George remembers.

George, 47, says the problem was the hairpiece she used in an effort to combat the humid salt air. That meant outgoing Miss America Pamela Eldred, who crowned her, could not get bobby pins to hold.

"But if I hadn't done it, my hair would have been long and straight and looked terrible, because the humidity in Atlantic City is terrible," she said.

Though the accident horrified George, some saw it as endearing.

"The fact that a Miss America could drop a crown, and have it roll down the runway like that, dropping stones along the way, is part of the magic," said Ann-Marie Bivans, a former pageant judge and author.

Another embarrassing moment was the "Tonight Show" appearance by Susan Perkins, Miss America 1978. When Johnny Carson asked to see her crown, she produced it wrapped in a towel from the Barclay Hotel, and Carson was more interested in how she got the towel.

Meriwether, Miss America 1955, was somehow left in the lurch.

The crown was redesigned during her reign, so when it was time for the coronation of her successor in 1955, the crown she had been wearing was replaced with the new model.

While she was on stage putting the new crown on the head of Sharon Ritchie, her old crown disappeared. She mentioned to pageant officials several years later that she never got one to keep.

Muslims gather for show of unity

Thousands attend Islamic Society convention in Columbus, Ohio

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Looking for a taste of Islamic rap music?

Or maybe toothpaste and soap declared "haram," permitted for use by Muslims because they contain no animal fat?

How about a video of Islamic cartoons, an Islamic road map to help you locate mosques throughout the United States, an alarm clock to wake you with a tinny "Allahu Akbar?"

It's all available with much more Islamic paraphernalia — and a lot of Muslim pride — at a four-day convention where thousands of Muslims have gathered in this heartland city from all over the United States and Canada.

They're taking the opportunity not only to shop but to show their enthusiasm for their religion, discuss problems common to Muslim Americans and demonstrate that they're here to stay.

"We are American Muslims," said Jawad Rahman, an organizer. "This is home and we plan to make a constructive contribution and bring Islam to this country."

"When you come here and you see everybody else in the same boat, it gives you a great source of pride and recharges your batteries and lets you realize that you're not on your own," Rahman, a development assistant for the organizing Islamic Society of North America, said.

The society's 33rd convention in the United States, which began Friday, gives a snapshot of a Muslim community on the continent that Islamic leaders number at about 6 million.

Emigrants who came for higher education founded the society. Many stayed, either for opportunities available here or because of fear of persecution at home.

As they developed, the conventions grew from meager gatherings of a few hundred to those of recent years, drawing more than 10,000 Muslims a year.

One attraction of the convention is its bazaar, where vendors sell Islamic products that make the Muslim community less dependent on U.S. markets for food, literature and other Islamic goods.

"When you're in this country, you don't want to wear T-shirts that say Coca-Cola and AT&T all the time," said Shammout, of Columbus. "We want to offer something modern with Islamic tones."

He said the T-shirts, Islamic mouspides featuring the Islamic village design and mugs inscribed with verses from the Koran have been big sellers.

"Facing cancer with faith, growing garden roses."

"These are issues that give women self-esteem, build their character and make them full-fledged, productive members of this society," said Junjo.

NOT ONLY A TOY

The kite is surely one of the most family remembered toys of childhood. But when the kite was invented by the Chinese, it was not among its many uses.

Kites were used for religious purposes, for fishing, signaling, and for carrying aloft larderfly flies. Indeed, the kite can be considered the first true aircraft, preceding the hot air balloon by almost 3 thousand years.

Europeans rediscovered the kite's usefulness in the late 18th century. The box kite, a recent invention, was used by the British Army for observations. A series of connected kites was sent up, one of which carried a soldier with field glasses, to watch for enemy movements. Few volunteered.

Remember the three little pigs and the wolf that blew and blew until he blew down the flimsy straw and wooden houses! Recent hurricanes have taught us that the best protection against a big wind is still a well-built structure.

During the devastation wrought by Hurricane Andrew back in '92, as much as 20 to 40 percent of the damage was blamed on shoddy construction, inferior building materials and poor design.

Older, low slung stucco houses that were designed to withstand wind survived. Newer wood-frame homes were flattened.

The roof's plywood sheathing should be nailed, not stapled, into the trusses at 6-inch intervals to keep the roof from flying.

The three little pigs couldn't get insurance...but you can.

Saddam sends forces to capture Kurdish 'safe haven'

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Saddam Hussein launched his biggest military offensive in five years, sending tanks, troops and helicopters into northern Iraq on Saturday to capture a key city in the Kurdish "safe haven" protected by U.S.-led forces. The move came despite strong U.S. warnings.

The Iraqi forces, allied with the Kurdistan Democratic Party, had Saturday night taken most of all of Irbil, the main Kurdish city in the north, according to various reports. But the rival Patriotic Union of Kurdistan said it was resisting the onslaught and still held at least part of the city.

Iraq struck because the Kurdish group had been cooperating with Iran, Iraq's longtime enemy, the state-run Iraqi News Agency said. Iraqi forces "would return to their former positions very soon," the news agency said, but gave no timetable.

A quick withdrawal could avert a showdown with Western forces, which have policed the Kurdish enclave since the end of the Persian Gulf War in 1991. Iraq's internal campaign against the Kurds is not as clear-cut a provocation as its invasion of Kuwait, and Western leaders' choices this time are much more ambiguous.

President Clinton, campaigning in Tennessee, said his administration's U.S. forces in the Persian Gulf will be placed on "high alert," and "they are now being reinforced."

Iraqi President Saddam Hussein launched his biggest military offensive in five years, sending tanks, troops and helicopters into northern Iraq on Saturday.

The Kurdistan Democratic Party's radio station said the group had captured Irbil, but did not mention receiving any help from the Iraqis. Christopher Lee, speaking from the office of the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees in Baghdad, told The Associated Press that the city had fallen with little resistance.

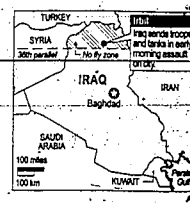

However, PUK spokesman Adnan al-Mufti said Saturday night from London that "fighting is still going on and people are resisting."

"Hundreds of (Iraqi) tanks are inside the city. The army is storming houses and arresting people," he said.

He acknowledged the Iraqi army had captured about 70 percent of the city, which is 180 miles north of Baghdad. PUK leader Jalal Talabani, speaking on CNN, said Iraqi forces occupied the main base used by Western relief agencies in the western part of Irbil and the university campus in the south of the city.

The PUK said 540 Iraqi tanks, as well as helicopter gunships, were involved in the offensive. It said that 30,000 Iraqi forces had massed in recent days in preparation for the attack.

The group urgently appealed for help from the Western forces based in Turkey and the Persian Gulf, and reported "scores of civilians casualties." Others were fleeing in droves, it said.

It said the attack could be a prelude to the revival of the Iraqi government's "genocidal war" against the Kurds — a 3.5-million-member ethnic minority seeking independence from Baghdad.

The offensive was the largest military campaign by the Iraqi army since it crushed simultaneous revolts by the Kurds in the north and Shiite Muslims in the south shortly after Iraq's defeat in the Gulf War.

Iraq regards the Kurdish safe haven as an impediment in its domestic affairs, but Saddam generally has observed guidelines set down by a U.N. resolution and refrained from launching a major strike to bring it back under his control until Saturday. The Western countries set up the safe area in northern Iraq including a no-fly zone to keep out Iraqi military flights — to protect the Kurds from Saddam's military after the 1991 rebellion in which the KDP and PUK joined forces. They turned on each other after the enclave was established.

There's "no justification for any provocative action from Saddam Hussein," said White House press secretary Michael McCurry. "Any military action in this region works against the purposes of U.N. Security Council resolutions" designed to protect northern Iraq's Kurds.

A Western diplomat in Ankara, Turkey, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the AP that allied aircraft flew over northern Iraq on Saturday and that flights would continue Sunday and Monday.

One U.S. administration official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the Air Force had notified members of an "air expeditionary force" with 30-40 fighter-planes to be prepared to deploy in the Middle East.

The Pentagon said it had received no instructions to send troops to the area.

Iraq's Deputy Prime Minister

Tariq Aziz said his country "decided to launch a limited military operation in defense of our sovereignty, our people and their properties."

Aziz said Kurdistan Democratic Party leader Massoud Barzani pleaded with Saddam in an Aug. 22 letter to intervene to "end the treachery of Jalal Talabani."

Iraq has also accused rival Iran of sending troops into the safe haven recently to help the Patriotic Union of Kurdistan.

Aziz rallied against the U.S., British and French forces that monitor northern Iraq. He accused them of bringing "to the Kurds nothing but death, destruction, anarchy and the loss of opportunities for development and decent living."

A KDP official in Turkey, Fakir Nuri, said it was "highly unlikely" that his group, which has long opposed the Iraqi government, would have asked for help in Saturday's offensive.

"Iraq has seen the Iranian intervention and has used this as a pretext to intervene itself. ... We ourselves are concerned about this Iraqi intervention," he told the AP.

The United States mediated a cease-fire last year, but it collapsed Aug. 17 when the two factions resumed fighting amid differences over customs revenues from a road between Turkey and northern Iraq.

Mexico's president vows to crush rebel insurgency

MEXICO CITY — President Ernesto Zedillo has vowed to crush a rebel insurgency that has created a security crisis for his government, raising fears in political activists Saturday of a crackdown on civil dissent.

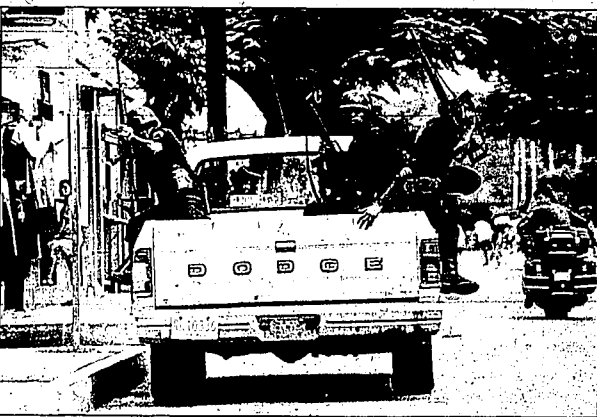

Troops and police fanned out across the country as Zedillo prepared to deliver a state-of-the-nation address Sunday, two days after he said he would suppress the rebels.

Many say they fear that opposition groups could be caught up in the crackdown on a group the president called "criminal, violent and cowardly."

Troops and police set up checkpoints on highways and patrolled mountain roads to prevent new attacks by the Popular Revolutionary Army, whose attacks on troops, police, and other targets last week killed 14 people.

The attacks in five states — the most widespread guerrilla attacks in Mexico in decades — prompted both Mexican and U.S. officials to insist in bulletins that Mexico remained politically stable.

Zedillo warned that the rebel group, known by its Spanish initials EPR, hopes to provoke officials into "the error of violating the rights of others," and creating Mexican Navy sailors spring into action Friday in the resort town of Bahías de Huatulco.

"social sympathy for their cause," Zedillo is expected to stress Mexico's recovery from economic crisis and efforts at political reform. But in the TV interview Friday, he seemed at pains to ease fears the government would use the crisis to repress dissent. "Everything done to pursue these delinquents has to be done within the framework of the law, without violating individual guarantees, respecting human rights," Zedillo said.

Even so, political activists throughout Mexico are already voicing alarm at official claims that the EPR has links to above-ground dissident groups across the country.

"What worries us now is that the government is going to look for a way to blame us, to link us with this group," said Constantino Mendonces Sanchez of the Committee for the Defense of Peoples' Rights in Tlaxcala.

"I am very worried that they are beginning to connect (other) organizations," said Maricela Acosta, head of the Mexican Commission for the Defense and Promotion of Human Rights, in Mexico City.

Zedillo admitted grounds for such fears, saying wars against guerrillas in the 1970s left "open wounds" in the country.

"There are still organizations (in Mexico) ... demanding the appearance of those who disappeared in the 1970s," he said.

Yeltsin shows skepticism about accord

GROZNY, Russia (AP) — President Boris Yeltsin cast doubt Saturday on the validity of a peace accord signed by its security chief and Chechen rebel leaders, saying the document demanded "additional evaluation and assessment."

The skeptical statement from Yeltsin came just hours after Alexander Lebed and the top separatist commander, Aslan Maskhadov, declared an end to the 20-month war in Chechnya that has killed more than 30,000 people and ravaged the tiny southern republic.

Despite the doubts, the two sides continued withdrawing their forces from Grozny, leaving the capital in the hands of Russian-Chechen patrols.

Nearly all Russian and separatist forces pulled out Saturday from the charred and crumbling city, fueling hope that the bloodshed might be ending.

"It's a very important day for peace," said Col. Vladimir Kostenkov, a Russian representative of the joint command.

It's Jerry Lewis Telethon Time...

BY JERRY LEWIS

YOU ALL KNOW THAT OLD Broadway song, "Another Opening, Another Show." I guess I ought to be singing it as another Muscular Dystrophy Association Telethon rolls around. After all, this will be my 31st, unless I've lost count while with me, as my friends would tell me, is certainly possible.

But somehow that kind of routine attitude just doesn't fit my feelings as I approach this year's show. The MDA Telethon every Labor Day weekend always has been something very special for me. It means one more chance to enlist your support for what I have made the central cause of my life—to help the thousands of kids (and older folks too) who are affected by muscular dystrophy and the many related neuromuscular diseases included in the MDA program. When you've worked as closely as I have for so many years with these bright and brave people, you realize the urgent need they have of support and services. That's what the Muscular Dystrophy Association brings them, along with the ongoing scientific research work that is bringing us ever so much closer to a cure.

This year I've gotten to know Benjamin Cumbo, our 1996 National Goodwill Ambassador, along with his wonderful parents and sisters. They—along with all other youngsters, adults and their families served by the MDA—deserve the best we can do for them. In 1995, our Telethon raised an all-time high of $47.8 million. This year we want to continue our practice of breaking the previous record. So, once again, I'm asking you to help. Tune in! Dig in! We need you! We're waiting for you! And, again, thanks from all of us.

A Parade of Stars—And You

The Jerry Lewis MDA Telethon is back on tonight at 8 p.m. EST for one hour and then tomorrow on more than 300 stations nationwide. One night from CBS Television City in Hollywood, the telecast will offer 21 hours of entertainment featuring some of the greatest names in show business. And among the many performers will be the singing Elaine Dion and Glen Campbell and the comedians Jeff Foxworthy and Rose O'Donoghue.

Jerry, who is on leave this month from his starring role in the new comedy film Johnny D. of Danny Zerkow, will preside. He'll be joined by longtime Telethon anchor Ed McMahon, with co-hosts Mariette Hartley, Jerry Springer, Jann Cagle and Norm Crosby. Please call your local station to see the MDA or you can make your contribution to the MDA. Please make yours payable to MDA and send it to: MDA, P.O. Box 66002, Tucson, AZ 85708-6002.

Benjamin Cumbo, this year's MDA Poststar Child, and Jerry Lewis are on the same team, sharing not only a uniform but also a hope—a cure for muscular dystrophy.

"When you've worked as closely as I have for so many years with these bright and brave people, you realize the urgent need they have of support and services...They and their families deserve the best we can do for them."

And A 9-Year-Old Child Leads The Way

Family Love Helps This Boy Meet His Challenges

PARADISE Island, Barbados: Camilo, a member of a family of Benjamin Camilo, the 1996 MDA National Goodwill Ambassador, is one of the boys whose family support played a crucial role in helping him pursue the difficulties caused by muscular dystrophy.

BY DEBORAH CUMBO

MY SON BENJAMIN was a late walker. There's nothing unusual about that: lots of kids are late walkers. So, even though Benjamin, our only son (we have two daughters), seemed particularly clumsy and fell quite a lot after he finally began to walk at around 13 or 14 months, my husband and I thought he'd outgrown the problem.

But when he was around 3, we were visiting with a couple whose child was enrolled in the same preschool as Benjamin. The kids were in the basement, playing and going up and down the steps. Our host, who happened to be a pediatrician, remarked that Benjamin seemed to be pulling himself up stairs with his arms, more than walking up on his legs. He suggested that we visit the Muscular Dystrophy Association Clinic at Children's Hospital in Washington and have him examined.

That's when we began our years of tribulation...and of hope. After a number of tests, including a muscle biopsy, we got the word: Our son had muscular dystrophy, and the most severe kind—Duchenne. The doctor was gentle with us, but he told us that, in our current state of knowledge about the disease, the likelihood was that Benjamin would have to use a wheelchair in his early adolescence, probably, wouldn't he be walking at all in his teenage years, and that his life expectancy might not reach beyond the early to the mid-20s.

My husband and I were devastated. We didn't want to believe it. We just sat there and cried. For the first three years of his life, Benjamin had been a happy, playful child—and from outward appearances, a healthy one. How we miss anything more? The crime time

We thought we weren't going to see him walk to the school bus, head into whatever career he chose. But he's doing these things and more.

I was pregnant. I did everything I was supposed to do—drink the milk, took the vitamins, watched my diet. Still, you feel guilt. You ask yourself if there was something you could have done to prevent this from happening.

The doctor said no. She explained that there are two ways the disease can come about—through a gene passed down through the mother or through a new mutation. I suspected genetic testing, and the results came back negative. So the cause was a new mutation, which is unacceptable at this point. Benjamin has happened to be the child who had the best response to do-veloped Duchenne muscular dystrophy. So, even though for Benjamin, almost every parent thinks—had to undergo a severe change. We thought we weren't going to see him grow up to run around with the other kids, to ride a bike, to walk to the school bus, to head into whatever career he chose. But he's doing these things and more. Yes, some things have been a challenge for him and us, but these challenges are faced head-on, and we handle each day as it comes.

Benjamin, now 9, is doing quite well. He's an active boy who still walks and participates in sports. He'll be starting fourth grade and studying hard. He has grown up and made us proud of him.

We're very grateful for the help, support and encouragement we've received from the good people of the Muscular Dystrophy Association. MDA has provided us with physical therapy for Benjamin, as well as many other services. I think their support group is the thing my husband and I have benefited from the most. It helps us to understand that there are other families out there who share the same fears and problems. It's ironic that, when a new family comes in, we find ourselves in the support role for them.

We've also learned from MDA of the increasing research into the disease and of the nearness to a cure. The scientists have now isolated the essential dystrophin gene (which, if defective, causes Duchenne) and are seeking a way to get a normal gene into the body. It is our strongest belief that Benjamin and all children will realize the results of this vital and significant research.

As we wait and hope, we continue to admire and take strength from the courage and commitment of youngsters all over the world who, like our Benjamin, are living under the shadow of muscular dystrophy without really letting it darken their lives. Our oldest daughter, Erin, 16, accompanied her brother to MDA's summer camp to be his camp counselor. And she made a comment my husband and I have always remembered. She said she has never met a child with muscular dystrophy who wasn't a wonderful person. With their physical challenge, their life challenge, they maintain an attitude and an air that makes them very, very special.

To us, our Benjamin will always be that very, very special person. UD

Parade's guide to Better Fitness

I'm a physical education teacher who's very concerned about the poor level of fitness of my elementary school students. I'd like to get them started on a running program, but frankly I don't know the best way. Are there any resources out there to help me?

Calling all physical education teachers, parents, older brothers and sisters, baby-sitters and everyone else who coaches young runners! The Road Runners Club of America (RCCA) has the ideal book for you. Called Children's Running: A Guide for Teachers and Coaches ($5), it provides step-by-step instructions in eight lessons on how to teach kids noncompetitive long-distance running, incorporating such topics as basic stretching, proper form, games and keeping a journal. The book also includes certificates of achievement and a suggested reading list. Another bonus: Tucked inside is a booklet, "Children's Running: A Guide for Parents and Kids," which can be purchased separately for $2. And for more ideas on running programs for children, including how best to sponsor a kids' race, the RCCA has a video, Children's Running: Fun! ($5).

To order the book, the booklet and/or the video, send a check or money order, payable to RCCA, to: Road Runners Club of America, 1150 S. Washington St., Suite 250, Dept. P, Alexandria, Va. 22314. (To order the booklet alone at a discounted bulk rate or to find out how the schools in your district can obtain copies for only the cost of shipping, call 1-703-836-0558.)

It was the toughest confrontation of her life says Brooke Shields, but her hopes for the future depended on it.

"In That Moment, I Grew Up A Lot"

By Gail Buchalter

I WAS 28 AND RECUPERATING from foot surgery," recalled the model-actress Brooke Shields. "I looked at my life, and I was shocked. I never anticipated finding myself at a place where I was unhappy. Even worse, I didn't see change as possible."

Yet just three years later, Shields is starring in her own new TV series, Suddenly Susan, slated between the NBC megahits Seinfeld and ER, and she is engaged to the tennis star Andre Agassi, 36. How did she turn her life around? Part of the answer may lie in Brooke's relationship with her mother.

Turn Shields had directed her daughter's entire career and much of her personal life since Brooke was a baby. To most people—and especially to Brooke, her life looked glamorous. She had because that would have been abusive, and I could easily say it was wrong. Yet here was a woman who loved me and only abused herself."

Brooke remains fiercely loyal to her mother. Any mention that Teri was the quintessential single mother brings a resounding denial from her daughter: "I never felt pushed by her," Brooke insisted. "Countless times I'd say I didn't want to do something, and she listened. There were no other kids, no husband. It was just us, and we formed a little team."

Teri and her husband, Frank, a businessman, separated when Brooke was only 5 months old. Brooke's modeling assignments grew out of Teri's friendship with several photographers and her daughter's desire to do nothing but please.

"As a kid I didn't say, 'No,'" Brooke said with a rueful laugh. "I went through my Terrible 2s in a week. I was never a fan of confrontation. My childhood felt turbulent enough. But the one thing I don't remember is being unhappy."

Brooke attended school full-time and made movies during her summer vacations. "We would pick a part according to where it would take us for the summer," she explained. "I never thought about acting as a career."

Pretty Baby, which Brooke made when she was 13, brought her instant celebrity—but more for playing a child prostitute than for her acting talents. She defended Teri's decision to allow her to play that part, which remains Brooke's favorite performance: "I wasn't aware of the effect I was having," she said. "I was just a kid playing dress-up. When the director [Louis Malle] yelled, 'Cut,' I'd make a funny face and run to my trailer to play. I've always been able to compartmentalize my life."

Brooke left her mother for the first time when she started Princeton in 1983. "I was one of those sobbing freshmen," she admitted. "I missed my mom. And then people tried so hard to give me my space that I was alone all the time. But that forced me to be inside my own head. I got to figure out how my mind really works and acknowledge the introspective part of myself."

She also entered into her first serious relationship, with a fellow classmate. Ironically, Brooke—who earlier had made The Blue Lagoon and Endless Love— been a successful model since infancy and a movie star since 13. But Brooke had become a celebrity instead of a respected actress—someone who was taken to parties rather than taken seriously. Now 31, Brooke was sitting in her publicist's office, explaining why she had relinquished the control of her life. "As the child of an alcoholic [mother]," she said gently, "I was so busy creating an environment in which I felt safe that I never had time to explore things on my own. Daily, it was meeting someone you didn't recognize. One personality was incredible, and the other was devastating. I found the inconsistency so difficult that I was constantly trying to create order, because I was surrounded by the opposite. "Sometimes I think it would have been easier if my mother had beaten me,

THE BLUE LAGOON (1980). In this remake of the 1949 film, Brooke Shields and Christopher Atkins play two youths who become sexually aware of each other after being shipwrecked on an island for several years.

At 20, Brooke wrote a book titled On Your Own. "I wrote about not being ashamed to be a virgin," she said. "It was an honest thing to say, but it was confusing because of my image."

films dealing with the loss of innocence—had not only remained a virgin but even had written about it in a book. On Your Own. "I basically wrote about not being ashamed to be a virgin—it's not a stigma to wait," she said. "It was an honest thing to say, but I'm sure it was confusing because of my image."

"I had a very difficult time committing," she added. "I preferred crushes and unrequited love, because a real romance threatened my relationship with my mother. To me, she was the single closest friend in my life. I was terrified of being vulnerable with anyone else."

Brooke returned to Teri after graduation. She finally was taking her career seriously—was devastated to realize no one really cared. Her 1992 film Brenda Starr failed. She stayed aloof doing print ads and commercials, mostly in Europe. At this point, Brooke entered the hospital to have foot surgery. Recovering gave her time to think. She had been seeing a therapist. She also had been corresponding for three months with Andre Agassi, whom she had met through a mutual friend. "Andre was one of the first people who told me my life can be anything I want it to be," Brooke said. With his support, she did what previously would have been unthinkable.

Brooke was alone the day she confronted her mother. "It was the single most difficult day of my life can remember," she said. "I realized I wanted my life to be different, my career to be different—but how do you say it? I went to the main source of my approval and told her I wanted to redefine our relationship. I grew up a lot in that moment. Changing our relationship is the biggest task I've ever taken on, and I will always maintain that it will work out. Now I think she's genuinely happy for me. She came to the taping of Suddenly Susan."

Meanwhile, Brooke's partnership with Agassi solidified. "At first I fought our being together," she said. "I kept thinking, 'This is where I belt and say things for the experience.' Instead, we became engaged. We haven't set a date, but we will not be one of those perpetually engaged couples."

As soon as Brooke changed her life, she began working. In 1994, she appeared on Broadway in the musical Grease!, playing the streetwise Rizzo. "I was terrified by the challenge," Brooke said, "but the more frightened I am of something, the more I have to do it. I figured the worst that could happen is I could learn a great deal from the experience."

Once Hollywood noticed her flair for comedy, Brooke was offered a guest appearance on NBC's hit series Friends last year. That led to Suddenly Susan, in which Brooke plays a woman who suddenly views herself not as a daughter or a girlfriend but as an independent woman with her own identity.

"The idea that you didn't give something your best shot is one of the most frightening concepts to me," Brooke said. "I'm lucky I was afforded the time to figure out my life and change it." IE

Coming of Age Onscreen

PRETTY BABY (1978). Brooke (1) created a stir in the role of a New Orleans prostitute, daughter of Susan Sarandon, in the controversial Louis Malle film.

ENDLESS LOVE (1981). Her sexy, loss-of-innocence films—such as this one with Martin Hewitt—conflicted with Brooks's personal stand on virginity.

BRENDA STARR (1992). After college, Brooke tried to ignite her movie career but this film about the comic-strip reporter, with Timothy Dalton, flopped.

SUDDENLY SUSAN (1996). Brooke's comic flair gets wide play in a new NBC sitcom about a young career woman coming into her own.

R.L.S. As He Was

Robert Louis Stevenson is a writer who attracts admiration both from those who know only a few of his tales, such as Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde or Treasure Island, and from those who are fascinated by the bold and indomitable life that ended with his death on Samoa in 1894 at the age of 44. Both groups should find enlightenment and interest in Robert Louis Stevenson: Interviews and Recollections, edited by R.C. Terry (University of Iowa Press, $24.95). The text consists of contemporary accounts both by people who knew him well and by those who met him casually. They add up to a remarkably well-rounded portrait of an author who put a unique personal stamp on almost everything he wrote and whose own life was his greatest adventure.

Not all the voices, incidentally, are lifted in praise. William Ernest Henley, a friend who turned antagonist, has a bitter and rather unfair essay which nevertheless contains such striking truths as: "There is as much virtue in making a shirt, or finishing a gross of match-boxes... as there is in polishing a weapon, or completing a chapter in a novel."

Interviews and Recollections

Civil War, Short Form

As James L. Stokesbury, a Canadian professor, notes, histories of the American Civil War keep coming out endlessly. Stokesbury calls his own contribution A Short History of the Civil War (Morrow, $25).

That doesn't mean you can absorb it in one sitting: The book runs over 350 pages, has maps worth looking at and contains 10 pages of suggestions for further reading. But it is a crisply written history with surprisingly detailed accounts of the great battles and their leaders, plus a solid grasp of the fundamental struggle as a war of attrition rather than one of Napoleonic-style routs and victories.

Although the emphasis is necessarily on military matters, the author doesn't altogether neglect the political, economic and social aspects of the war. This provides a welcome element of depth and helps to make the book notable among short histories.

A recent review in this space of David Donald's new biography of Abraham Lincoln suggested that it be read with "a good history of the Civil War by your side." Stokesbury's is just such a book.

The Biggest Spenders in Congress

The average Democrat in the House of Representatives spent $38,700 more last year than the average Republican to run his offices on Capitol Hill and in his home district, according to the National Taxpayers Union, a nonprofit watchdog group.

Each House member is given an annual allowance based on such factors as the average rent for office space in his district.

The National Taxpayers Union bases its rankings on the percentage of that allowance which actually was used. The biggest spender was Rep. Walter Tucker (D., Calif.), who used 100% of his allowance—$383,931—to run his offices in 1995. And Tucker didn't even finish the year in office. He resigned in December after being convicted of extortion and income-tax fraud.

Rounding out the top five were Rep. Harold Ford (D., Tenn.), who spent $845,655 in 1995; Rep. David Bonior (D., Mich.), $866,813; Rep. Richard Baker (R., La.), $883,203; and Rep. Connie Morella (R., Md.), $851,041. The most frugal House member was a Democrat too: Rep. Andy Jacobs of Indiana, who spent $494,041 to run his offices last year—just 58% of his allowance. If other members of the House had followed Jacobs' lead, overall office spending would have been cut by 35%. As it was, last year's total ($341.8 million) was down from 1994, though just 2%. The average expenditure for each U.S. Representative was $759,165.

THE HOLLYWOOD NAMES GAME

The days are over when they said, "Get me an Italian to play this gangster," Robert Loggia told PARADE. And while he did appear in Scarface and Prizzi's Honor, the 66-year-old actor is not stuck with wiseguy roles anymore.

Hollywood's attitude today is a healthy improvement over the era when ethnic actors changed their names to avoid stereotyping, noted Loggia. While Kirk Douglas in the '40s, current actors like Jeff Goldblum, Loggia's Independence Day co-star, have kept their own names.

As a general, Loggia helps move the world in Independence Day. "In Independence Day," added Loggia, "nobody said, 'Will Smith is a black fighter pilot.' He's a fighter pilot."

Loggia's first acting job after leaving the Army in 1953 was a role in a live TV show starring Hume Cronyn. His father, who once made shoes for film stars, had advised him to change his name to Robert Logan. "You don't look like a Logan," said Cronyn. "What is your real name?" When Loggia told him, Cronyn roared: "Change it right back. Be proud of your name and your heritage."

This fall Loggia plays the head of the CIA in the TV miniseries Pandora's Clock. And he just finished filming a role as Julia Ormond's father in Smilla's Sense of the Snow, set in Denmark. With such a wide range of roles, Loggia—who has made more than 60 films—said his career has legs: "I'll act until I die. I'll be the male Jessica Tandy."

PRECAUTIONS: Caution: Patients with poor response or total inefficiency (ITT = 0%) should be given a lower initial dose (10 mg every other day) because they might be at increased risk of adverse effects.

Dosing Information: Lactulose (10 g twice daily) has been safely administered with digoxin. There is no pharmacokinetic, pharmacodynamic, or clinical drug-pharmacology studies. Although increased plasma digoxin concentrations (AUC 0-24 h) of lactulose were observed, there was no clinical evidence of overdosage of lactulose with either of these drugs. Caution: Lactulose (30 g, 30 mL) was seen to clinically increase changes in the safety profile of lactulose, including hypotension, bradycardia, pruritus, clinical laboratory tests, vital signs, and adverse events. There was no significant effects on QTc intervals, and no reports of arrhythmia or syncope. Its effects on plasma concentrations of digoxin or lactulose were observed. Plasma concentrations (AUC 0-24 h) of digoxin were increased by 37% after 10 days of treatment. There does not appear to be an increase in adverse events in subjects who received both intrathecal and intramuscular and intrathecal.

Contraception, Weight Gain, and Improvement of Quality of Life: In a 28-week, randomized, placebo-controlled, and 1-year study in 142 healthy men, testosterone was administered on the 1st of each week for 10–40 mg/kg; week 28 and 25 mg/kg [40]. In the testosterone-treated group, de novo hypercholesterolemia, hypertriglyceridemia, and hypercholesterolemia occurred less frequently in the ALE than in the placebo group. The incidence of these parameters was 1.6 (testosterone) and 14 (placebo) respectively. These higher rates in the testosterone group were associated with a decrease in total cholesterol and triglyceride levels. The incidence of these parameters was 1.6 (testosterone) and 14 (placebo) respectively. These higher rates in the testosterone group were associated with a decrease in total cholesterol and triglyceride levels. The incidence of these parameters was 1.6 (testosterone) and 14 (placebo) respectively. In multiple studies, there was no difference in the proportion of patients with a positive result on the (CHC-PCR) assay, or in the assay for DNA damage (The Polymerase Chain Reaction DNA Assay) or in the assay for chromosome alterations (Fusion Polymerase Chain Reaction Chromosome Assay and the Whole Genome Microarray/Chromosome Microarray Assay). In the Whole Genome Microarray Assay, a positive finding occurred in the same individual but was not detected in the other findings.

Decreased urinary excretion of ^{14}C was observed in human trials (approximately 50% decrease in excretion rate). In rats, urinary excretion of ^{14}C was decreased by 54 mg/kg and was reversible with treatment of 10 mg/kg. Lactation did not affect excretion of human lactation or reproduction in the rat at doses of approximately 20 mg/kg.

amount of locustidine and pseudocitrulline was secreted into the lumen, with a pronounced effect of 450 pmol (45 hours). A decision should be made whether to discontinue feeding or to discontinue the drug, taking into account the importance of the drug to the patient. Diphtheria toxin is secreted into the lumen, and is secreted into a feeding tube.

ADVERSE REACTIONS: Approximately 31,000 subjects received 33.3/33.3/100 mg, were fully controlled and experienced studies. Placebo-controlled clinical trials at the recommended dose of 10 mg once a day varied from 2 weeks to 6 months' duration. The rate of placebo-related adverse events was approximately 7% in both the treated and placebo groups.

Adverse event rates did not appear to differ significantly between groups, and a post hoc analysis of non-white subjects was not statistically significant.

Do you have a champ in your midst? Can you capture that spirit of a winner in a photograph? If you hurry, you can still beat the deadline for the Parade/Kodak Champions '96 Photography Contest. We're looking for photos that show what it means to be a champ. And—as you can tell from the three pictures shown here—the spirit is alive just about anywhere you look!

For tethered rubers Andrew Coil and James Brownlie, it's all about staying afloat on a fast and wild ride. For Jennifer Snowden, becoming a ballerina is the dream. Her years of hard work paid off with a full scholarship in the trainee program at the Pacific Northwest Ballet. Of course, when it comes to having "good, clean fun," playmates Matthew, Andrew, Paige and Tyson (far right) can't be beat.

So who's a champ to you? Here's your chance to show us! If our judges choose your photograph, you'll take home $100 or more. And that photo you snapped could be seen by millions. So pull out that camera, take a few shots and send us your best. Remember: That championship picture just could be yours!

THE RULES

• Anyone is eligible, except employees of Parade Publications Inc. or Eastman Kodak Co. and members of their families.

• No entry fee is required for participation. Entries must be received no later than Sept. 13, 1996, and the winners will be announced in Parade on Dec. 8. We cannot accept postage due mail.

• All photographs or slides must be taken with Kodak film, and all prints submitted must be on Kodak paper. The contestant's name, address and phone number must be written clearly in ink on the back of the photo. Each submission must be taken by the contestant. Prints no larger than 8 1/2 x 10 inches may be submitted, made from slides or negatives, in color or black-and-white. Contestants should not send their original slides or negatives. Mail your entry to Champions '96 Photography Contest, c/o Parade/Kodak, P.O. Box 4719, Grand Central Station, New York, N.Y. 10163-4719.

• Winners also will be required to sign and deliver to Parade a publicity release, permission to reprint the photograph in various media and an affidavit of eligibility.

• All entries become the property of Parade Publications and will not be acknowledged or returned. Parade assumes no responsibility for photographs.

• Late, mutilated or previously published photographs are not eligible and will not be considered. The Contest Manager's determination regarding late, mutilated, lost or previously published entries shall be final.

• One hundred photographs shall be selected for awards. Winners will be determined by a panel of judges, based on pictorial composition, originality, interest of subject matter, visual appeal and consistency with the theme of Champions '96. The decisions of the judges shall be final.

• Each winner shall receive a $100 cash prize and an award certificate. If a winner's photo is published in our Dec. 8 issue, the contestant shall receive an additional $200. Taxes are the responsibility of the winner.

• Contestants formally designated as award-winners will be required to supply the original negative or transparency of the winning photo and a release that includes the names and addresses of all identifiable persons in the photograph.

• Acceptance of prize constitutes consent by winners to the use of their photographs, names and likeness by Parade and/or Kodak and their licensees for editorial purposes concerning the contest or succeeding contests in Parade, books and elsewhere, and for publicity and advertising purposes in connection with promoting Parade magazine and/or the contest or succeeding contests. Winners also may be requested to grant Parade and/or Kodak consent to use their photograph for other editorial, trade and/or advertising purposes at a compensation to be mutually agreed upon.

• The contest is void where prohibited.

• Contestants' names may be used for mailing-list purposes.

Lynn Minton Reports Fresh Voices

HAVE YOU EVER SHOPLIFTED?

Teenagers often tell us they are treated suspiciously at the mall. These responses to our question help explain the feelings of teenagers and store owners.

A friend first introduced me to the "joy" of stealing at the mall. We were in a store, and she shoved a hair accessory up her long sleeve. I smiled and foolishly did the same. Then we went someplace else and took several necklaces each and got away with it. I felt invincible.

At school, we "lifted" things from the cafeteria and took sodas during after-school games. Soon, some kids turned us in, and I got in-school suspension.

But I didn't stop. Stealing is like a drug. You feel "high" and good about yourself. It makes up for being heavy or ugly. You become "cool."

"Pillfied" things from friends' homes. Then one day I went with a group and took jewelry from one store, keychains and junk from another, sunglasses from another. I felt such a rush from stealing and not being caught.

But as a friend and I headed for the door, a security guard blocked us. I began to shake. Still, we managed to hide what we'd taken, so they didn't find anything on us and they let us go, banning us from the store. We were very lucky.

We felt that the whole experience was a warning from God and vowed never to take anything again. I am not proud of what I did. As a kid, I was a good Christian and never dreamed of doing anything like this. I'm still sorry.

—Jen Woolston, 14, Bensalem, Pa.

Shoplifting was the stupidest, most irresponsible thing I've ever done. I never thought of it as a serious crime. And when you're shoplifting, you never think you're going to get caught. When two security officers asked my friend and me to stop aside one day, I figured they

Sleep Like This

CARDURA®

The fast, easy treatment for frequent nighttime urination due to BPH.

Frequent nighttime urination is a common and bothersome symptom of benign prostatic hyperplasia (BPH), a noncancerous enlargement of the prostate gland occurring most often in men over the age of 50.

Cardura is a simple, once-daily tablet that quickly relieves urination problems caused by BPH, meaning your bladder can empty completely and you won't have to wake up as often at night to go to the bathroom.

Cardura may begin to improve urinary flow—day and night—in as little as 1 to 2 weeks.

Cardura is available only by prescription. So ask your physician if Cardura is right for you—if it is, your doctor can provide you with a trial pack to get you started.

Cardura can cause a sudden drop in blood pressure at the beginning of treatment or if you miss doses and then start taking the medication again. You may feel dizzy, faint, or light-headed, particularly after getting up from a chair or bed. Speak to your doctor about oral medications like Cardura and other treatment options for BPH such as regular monitoring of the condition or surgery.

Please see important information on the next page.

...we're just going to ask for the item we'd taken and let us go. But they took us into a long hallway and began questioning us. They asked if we had any weapons on us, like we were hardened criminals. The sheriff handcuffed us and threw us into the squad car.

At the police station, my friend and I were separated and there was more questioning. The officer then took me to call my room. I got a mug photo taken and got fingerprinted. Then I was taken to an empty room, small, cold and dark, with a metal table connected to the wall and two chairs. I sat in that room and cried for about an hour.

We both paid a $35.75 ticket. My parents took away most of my luxury possessions. All that's left is my alarm clock and bed, until I'm 18. I have a criminal record until then, which makes it harder for me to get a job. I lost my friend and the respect of others and myself.

—Dusty Smith, 24, Williamsburg, Va.

No, I've never shoplifted in my life. To me, if you don't have enough money, wait until you get more. I'm not saying I've never thought about it, but I have a little bit more respect for others as well as myself.

—Suzanne Townsend, 23, Portsmouth, Va.

Many of my friends have shoplifted. I've had guys come over to my house after stealing 30 packs of beer. A guy I know walked out of a grocery store with a cart full of groceries for a camping trip we were all going on.

Anything can be stolen. I've seen a kid steal CDs, guns, posters, shot glasses—all in one store. I would never ever consider opening a convenience store without cameras at every square inch. Kids steal.

—Bryant Robinson, 21, Randolph, Mass.

I have never shoplifted and I never will, and I am appalled at your choice of topic. I get enough harassment just going into a store now.

Adults will read the letters from teenagers who have shoplifted and feel their perspective against teenagers are justified. Adults steal also.

—Danielle Delgado, 26, Worktown, Va.

PATIENT INFORMATION ABOUT CARDURA® Generic Name:
doxazosin mesylate
FOR BENIGN PROSTATIC HYPERPLASIA (BPH)

Read this information:

- before you start taking CARDURA®
- each time you get a new prescription.

You and your doctor should discuss this treatment and your BPH symptoms before you start taking CARDURA® and at your regular checkups. This information does NOT take the place of discussions with your doctor.

CARDURA® is used to treat both benign prostatic hyperplasia (BPH) and high blood pressure (hypertension). This information describes CARDURA® as treatment for BPH (although you may be taking CARDURA® for both your BPH and high blood pressure).

What is BPH?

BPH is an enlargement of the prostate gland. This gland surrounds the tube that drains the urine from the bladder. The symptoms of BPH can be caused by a swelling of the enlarged muscle in the prostate gland which blocks the passage of urine. This can lead to such symptoms as:

- a weak or start-and-stop stream when urinating
- a feeling that the bladder is not completely emptied after urination
- a delay or difficulty in the beginning of urination
- a need to urinate often during the day and especially at night
- a feeling that you must urinate immediately.

Treatment Options for BPH

The four main treatment options for BPH are:

- If you are not bothered by your symptoms, you and your doctor may decide on a program of "watchful waiting." It is not an active treatment like taking medication or surgery but involves having regular checkups to see if your condition is getting worse or causing problems.
- Treatment with CARDURA® or other similar drugs. CARDURA® is the medication your doctor has prescribed for you. See "What CARDURA® Does" below.
- Treatment with the medication class of 5-alpha reductase inhibitors (e.g. Proscar®). It can cause the prostate to shrink. It may take 6 months or more for the full benefit of Proscar® to be seen.
- Various surgical procedures. Your doctor can describe these procedures to you. The best procedure for you depends on your BPH symptoms and medical condition.

What CARDURA® Does

CARDURA® works on a specific type of muscle found in the prostate, causing it to relax. This in turn decreases the pressure within the prostate, thus improving the flow of urine and your symptoms.

- CARDURA® helps reduce the symptoms of BPH (weak stream, start-and-stop stream, a feeling that your bladder is not completely empty, delay in beginning of urination, need to urinate often during the day and especially at night, and feeling that you must urinate immediately). It does not change the size of the prostate. The prostate may continue to grow; however, a larger prostate is not necessarily related to more symptoms or to worse symptoms. CARDURA® can decrease your symptoms and improve urinary flow, without decreasing the size of the prostate.
- If CARDURA® is helping you, you should notice an effect within 1 to 2 weeks after you start your medication. CARDURA® has been studied in over 500 patients for up to 2 years and the drug has been shown to continue to work during long-term treatment.
- Even though you take CARDURA® and it may help you, CARDURA® may not prevent the need for surgery in the future.
- CARDURA® does not affect PSA levels. PSA is the abbreviation for Prostate Specific Antigen. Your doctor may have done a blood test called PSA. You may want to ask your doctor more about this if you have had a PSA test done.

Other Important Facts

- You should use an improvement of your symptoms within 1 to 2 weeks. In addition to your other regular checkups you will need to continue seeing your doctor regularly to check your progress regarding your BPH and to monitor your blood pressure.
- CARDURA® (doxazosin mesylate) is not a treatment for prostate cancer. Your doctor has prescribed CARDURA® for your BPH and not for prostate cancer; however, a man can have BPH and prostate cancer at the same time. Doctors usually recommend that men be checked for prostate cancer once a year when they are 50 or 55 (or 40 if a family member has had prostate cancer). A higher incidence of prostate cancer has been noted in men of African-American descent. These checks should continue even if you are taking CARDURA®.

How To Take CARDURA® and What You Should Know While Taking CARDURA® for BPH

CARDURA® Can Cause a Sudden Drop in Blood Pressure After the VERY FIRST DOSE. You may feel dizzy, faint or "light-headed," especially after you stand up from lying or sitting position. This is most likely to occur after you've taken the first few doses or if you increase your dose, but can occur at any time while you are taking the drug. It can also occur if you stop taking the drug and then restart treatment. If you feel very dizzy, faint or "light-headed," you should contact your doctor. Your doctor will discuss with you how often you need to rest and how often your blood pressure should be checked.

Your blood pressure should be checked when you start taking CARDURA® even if you do not have high blood pressure (hypertension). Your doctor will discuss with you the details of blood pressure measurement.

Blood Pressure Measurement: Whatever equipment is used, it is usual for your blood pressure to be measured in the following way: measure your blood pressure after lying quietly on your back for five minutes. Then, after standing for two minutes measure your blood pressure again. Your blood pressure with you after other times during the day your blood pressure should be taken, such as two to six hours after a dose, before bedtime or after waking up in the morning. Note that moderate to high-intensity exercise can, over a period of time, lower your average blood pressure.

You can take CARDURA® either in the morning or at bedtime and it will be equally effective. If you take CARDURA® at bedtime but need to get up three times to go to the bathroom, get up slowly and cautiously until you are sure how the medication affects you. It is important to get up slowly from a chair or bed at any time you learn how you need to take CARDURA®. You should not drive until the unexpected side effects are used to the effects of the medication. If you begin to feel dizzy, sit or lie down until you feel better.

- You will start with a 1 mg dose of CARDURA® once daily. Then the once daily dose will be increased as your body gets used to the effects of the medication. Follow your doctor's instructions about how to take CARDURA®. You must take it every day at the dose prescribed. Talk with your doctor if you don't take it for a few days for some reason; you may then need to restart the medication at a 1 mg dose, increase your dose gradually and again be cautious about possible dizziness. Do not share CARDURA® with anyone else; it was prescribed only for you.
- Other side effects you could have while taking CARDURA®: In addition to lowering of the blood pressure, include: dizziness, fatigue (tiredness), swelling of the feet and shortness of breath. Most side effects are mild. However, you should discuss any unexpected effects you notice with your doctor.
- Keep CARDURA® and all medicines out of the reach of children.

Bright Ideas To Make Life Better

Makeup Tips From a Master

A woman's makeup should not be the first thing you notice when you look at her, says Gale Hayman, a co-founder of the Giorgio Beverly Hills boutique. In her new book, How Do I Look? (Random House, $25), due out next month, Hayman offers some tips for those with less-than-perfect features:

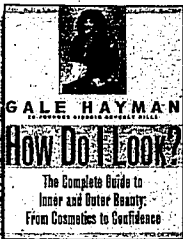

- To make small lips look larger, apply Vaseline or lip gloss to the middle of the bottom lip.
- To make large lips look smaller, use lipstick in a deeper color and a matte (not glossy) formula.
- For eyes that are too close together, open up your eyebrows by plucking a few hairs from the inside corners.
- For eyes that are too far apart, bring brows in with a brow pencil to close the area just a bit.
- If your eyeliner line looks too harsh, apply a light touch of nude, bronze or taupe eye shadow over it for a soft, smoky effect.

- For very pale lashes, if it's too difficult to get the mascara wand into the lash base, fill in lashes with eyeliner. This works especially well for lower lashes.
- To make wayward eyebrows stay put, spray some hairspray on a brow brush or an old toothbrush, then apply it to brows to keep them in place.

• If your makeup has been looking washed-out this summer, bronzing makeup can help. Apply it just as you do any foundation, blending very carefully, since the bronze will be a different color than your skin.

You also can perk up your appearance by turning again to your palette: Pinks, corals, terra-cottas, browns, brown-pinks, brown-reds and brown-corals are great looks for summer.

Gale Hayman's book offers women guidance in developing their own style based on their budget and lifestyle.

THIS WEEK ON PBS, Chris Cooper stars as a Union officer on hostile ground in Pharaoh's Army, a drama about the Civil War that is getting powerful word-of-mouth, because of Cooper's recent work in Lone Star—a performance and a movie we may be hearing about at Oscar time next spring.

If you don't know Cooper's name, that's not surprising. He's one of those hardworking and totally professional actors who's anything but "a movie star." He shows up, does the job and isn't a pretty boy who gets on magazine covers.

That may now be changing. And if it is, you can't say Cooper hasn't paid his dues. A decade ago, he seemed on the brink of stardom in Matwuan, which got great reviews but didn't sell tickets. He played opposite Robert De Niro in Gully by Suspicion and This Boy's Life. He starred in Thousand Pieces of Gold, which won him an award from the National Cowboy Hall of Fame. He was an aristocrat in the controversial Money Train and a deputy in the John Grisham hit A Time To Kill. And he appeared in Boys with Winona Ryder.

Has Cooper now made it? "I was foolish enough with Matwuan to think that," he said. "This time, I dunno. But I hope so." He ticked off the ways he'd made the rent money over the years:

"I used to chauffeur in my hard times. Worked as a janitor for an architects' building. As a street-corner barker for wholesale menswear. I had worked in Kansas City building the K.C. Chiefs' stadium and the K.C.

Royals' stadium. I was a trained carpenter, so I was able to work on small demolitions and apartments on [New York's] upper East Side. My brother and I built some homes in Kansas City. He's still in the business."

Cooper and his wife, Marianna, have a son and live "on the way to Cape Cod" in Massachusetts. "She's an Italian-American actress," he said about his wife, "and always plays the 'aunt' in Mafia movies." She's also a writer, and Cooper may be acting in a script she wrote, Elvis Heals.

Listen how he got the leading role in Pharaoh's Army: "I was in London doing the Tennessee Williams play Sweet Bird of Youth, and on my one day off I flew to New York, auditioned, flew back, got a three-hour nap and was back onstage. But I got the part!"

A powerful actor named Chris Cooper seems on the edge of stardom. Catch him this week on PBS in a Civil War drama called Pharaoh's Army.

And the significance of the title Pharaoh's Army? "It's a biblical reference to invading forces," Cooper said. "It's a folktale in which I play the captain of a small Union force that's never seen battle, and we set up camp on a Kentucky farm owned by a woman whose husband is away fighting in the Confederate Army, and we get to realize we're both just people." BB

When we spoke, Chris was on a movie set in Sarasota, Fla., doing an updated version of the Dickens classic Great Expectations. It's set in a fishing port in Florida. Sound sort of nutty? Well, that's what I thought. But here's how Chris described it: "I play the original Uncle Joe character, a fisherman on hard times because they've banned fishing nets. All our names have changed, but the characters are still there. Robert De Niro plays the convict, Gwyneth Paltrow [star of Emma] has the Estella role, Anne Bancroft is Miss Havisham, and Ethan Hawke plays the grown Pip." With that cast and a Dickens story, how can it miss? Has there been a pickup of interest in him since Lone Star? "If there has, it hasn't come to my attention," Chris said. His finest moment prior to Lone Star? "Matwuan was a dream come true," Chris said. "I was in New York doing stage work. I said I'd like to work with someone like John Sayles [Matwuan's writer and director], and I did." That name John Sayles looked the role of the week in Lone Star specifically for Chris.

Ask Marilyn

I've heard that you can take real data and prove that people with longer hands perform better at math. I could believe longer hands and the piano or even bigger heads and math. But people with longer hands perform better at math? Come on!

—D.R., Columbia, S.C.

It's true in a misleading way, and this is an excellent example of how easy it is to reach totally worthless conclusions through the use of statistics. You can even "prove" that people with bigger ears perform better at math. Just take a random sampling of the population and have a neutral examiner measure their ears and give them math tests. Without knowing anything else about the people (to avoid bias, of course!), you'll find a strong correlation between ear size and math ability. Why? Because a random sampling will include babies and children. When we take anything out of context—whether it's percentages or people—we lose our opportunity to see the whole truth.

Can you figure out this riddle? When it's light, I'm dark; when it's dark, I'm gone; when I'm gone for good, so are you. What am I?

—Ananda Battaglia, Staten Island, N.Y.

You are my shadow.
