Past haunts new principal at Filer

By Liz Wright
 Times-News writer

FILER — Months before becoming Filer Elementary School principal, Robbie Robinson pleaded guilty to a misdemeanor charge of furnishing the reputations of three Evanston, Wyo., school employees, a crime he says he didn't commit.

Surprised Filer officials, who hired Robinson this summer, said they support Robinson and believe his account of his legal battle — that politics railroaded him into court and that he struck a plea bargain to avoid lawyer fees.

"It's not significant enough to impair his ability at Filer Elementary School," said Bill Feusabers, Filer School District superintendent. "We still feel he has the backing of the district, the staff and the community."

Robinson was sentenced in July to one year's probation, on a charge of "intent to maliciously cause harm to another." If Robinson successfully completes his probation, the charge will be permanently erased from his record.

Until recently, Filer officials knew nothing about the charge. Robinson said he never told anyone in Idaho of his legal battle, and Filer officials said no one in Evanston told them about the flap.

Last week, the Idaho Professional Standards Commission renewed Robinson's school license after state-required FBI fingerprinting records showed his criminal record clear.

"I just understand that there is nothing present in this life," said Roger Hanshaw, Idaho supervisor of teacher certification and administrator of the commission. "This (fingerprinting law) provides a safety net to the degree that it can."

The letter

Prosecutor Mike Greer of Uinta County, Wyo., told The Times-News he believes Robinson is lying about his innocence to Filer officials.

Greer said Robinson faxed a bogus letter from his district office on March 7 portraying three members of the local teachers' union as congratulating the rank-and-file for preventing Robinson's close friend from becoming district superintendent.

The letter, sent during a politically tumultuous period for the Evanston School District, was faxed to the local newspaper, city hall and county library. Robinson was district personnel director at the time, Greer said.

Greer said there was strong evidence that Robinson committed the crime — and he had a motive.

"It was extremely clear that first of all the fax had been sent out had in fact come from the fax machine in his office," Greer said. Robinson had the opportunity to make up the letter, Greer said. At least one signature on the letter matched a signature on a document in one union member's personnel file — and Robinson had access to the file.

The plea bargain, arranged by Greer and Robinson's attorney, would essentially protect his record because he was a first-time offender, Greer said.

Some members of the Evanston Education Association want to press civil slander charges against Robinson. Nothing has been filed in court yet. Greer said his office could press perjury charges if Robinson gives an account of the witness stand similar to what he told Filer officials.

"People who talked to me about him told me he was a great principal and a great guy to work with and so on, but I don't know," Greer said. "This whole thing split the community wide open and Evanston is not a particularly large community. The amount of pain and suffering was incredible. This community was just boiling over with this, month after month after month."

Medical experts dubious about chemical castration bill

Drug wouldn't aid some offenders

By Karen Tolckhenn
 The Associated Press

HAGERMAN — If Idaho lawmakers want to lull the countryside into feeling safe, then force chemical castration on all sex offenders, some top doctors say. "It'll only work for a few offenders."

"It's misleading," said Robert Prentky, the clinical and forensic director of the Joseph J. Peters Institute in Philadelphia, which treats sexual offenders and victims. "It gives us this false sense of security, that because you're giving all sex offenders a pill, you're rendering them harmless... That's not true."

Republican Sen. John Sandy of Hagerman has proposed mandating chemical castration for pedophiles. Based on a new California law, it would permit judges to sentence first-time child molesters to regular doses of Depo-Provera, and require it for all child molesters on a second offense.

The measure could work for some offenders, especially those whose sexual appetites drive them to molest children or rape women.

The drug, a female hormone, suppresses testosterone levels if taken regularly.

It does cause side effects such as depression and high blood pressure, but the drug's effects are reversible if the doses stop.

In August, the Associated Press reported the story of a Danish man who opted for the treatment after four sex-crime convictions in six years. His sexual fantasies had vanished, and he hoped to settle down and get married.

In Denmark, 16 prisoners since 1989 had received the treatment before they were released on probation; only one had committed another offense. Germany and Sweden have offered the treatment for decades.

In the United States, Texas, Massachusetts, Florida and Wisconsin have considered chemical castration.

It would not work on criminals who are mentally retarded, or those who commit sex crimes out of aggression or anger or under the influence of drugs or alcohol.

"It won't work for the guy that's just lacking a sense of conscience and social responsibility," said Fred Berlin, founder of the Johns Hopkins Sexual Disorders Clinic. "There are many reasons why people commit sex offenses."

Sandy could not be reached for comment Friday.

Doctors such as Berlin and Prentky don't completely oppose the use of Depo-Provera, as suggested in Sandy's bill.

But they say it should be used only

O.J.'s courtroom refrain: 'Absolutely not'

Simpson tells story initial time before civil jury

The Associated Press

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — O.J. Simpson sat in the witness chair, stared jurors in the eyes and told them Friday it was "absolutely not true" that he killed his ex-wife and her friend.

Answering rapid-fire questions from an attorney determined to prove him responsible for the bloody slayings, Simpson was intense, but restrained his emotions as he was asked if he had taken gloves, a hat and a knife to Nicole Brown Simpson's condo and committed murder the night of June 12, 1994.

"That is absolutely not true," Simpson said.

Telling his story to a jury for the first time, Simpson frequently seemed exasperated. He pursed his lips, sighed heavily, breathed hard and even clenched his fists during the tense confrontation with a plaintiffs' lawyer in the wrongful death lawsuit.

"You confronted Nicole Brown Simpson and you killed her, didn't you?" attorney Daniel Petrocelli asked.

"That is absolutely not true," Simpson said.

"And you killed Ronald Goldman, didn't you?" the attorney barked.

"That is absolutely not true," Simpson said.

He was turned in the seat toward the jury box and addressed all his comments to jurors. They returned his stare.

At times it appeared that tears were welling in his eyes, but he delivered his answers in a firm, clear voice.

He continued to repeat "absolutely not true" as Petrocelli summarized the plaintiffs' case point by point: Simpson rushed back to his estate to meet a waiting limousine, he bumped into a wall, and he bled on a wire near an air conditioner at the back of his house.

"Between 9:35 p.m. and 10:55 p.m., there is not a single human being that you can identify that saw you?" the attorney asked.

"That's absolutely true," Simpson said.

Petrocelli's questioning took Simpson through every major day of the killings, detailing his efforts to reach his girlfriend, Paula Barbieri, his trip to a dance recital where his daughter performed, his encounter there with his ex-wife and her family, his exclusion from a dinner they planned afterward.

He questioned Simpson about a trip to McDonald's with house guest Brian "Kato" Kaelin, then made the series of accusations about what happened during the missing 80 minutes after he arrived home and the time he was picked up by a limousine driver for a trip to the airport.

Petrocelli wound up the first day of his inquiry by accusing Simpson of dripping blood in his driveway and in his Bronco, and Simpson answered once again, "That's absolutely untrue."

At one point during the afternoon session, there was a flash of Simpson's humor, which had not come through during the grim exchanges with his relentless inquisitor.

When asking about the McDonald's trip, Petrocelli wanted to know if Simpson asked Kaelin where he wanted to go for hamburgers.

"No," Simpson answered. "I didn't have a date with Kato," he said, drawing laughter from spectators.

"You think this is funny, sir," Petrocelli said.

"No," Simpson bristled. "I don't think any of this is funny. I wish I was anywhere but here."

O.J. Simpson hurries to lunch after a morning of testimony in the wrongful death civil suit against him. The Superior Court case is being tried in Santa Monica, Calif.

ACROSS THE NATION

Rain splatters Plains as storm systems roll eastward

The Associated Press

Rain caused some flash flooding in the Plains Friday, while it was mainly cloudy and cold in the East.

More snow fell in parts of the Pacific Northwest, providing little respite for people recovering from an ice storm.

A strong storm system moved out of the Southwest into the Plains, causing heavy rain to fall from Salt Lake City to Las Vegas, and into Southern California.

Areas of flash flooding were reported from Las Vegas to Moapa, Nev. This area has seen between three-quarters of an inch and 1.25 inches of rain with in 12 hours.

Shallow arctic air pushed against the mountains of western Montana, northern Wyoming, and into the Nebraska panhandle.

Warm, moist air began to push over the top of this air mass, resulting in freezing rain and light snow. Crews worked to restore electricity to tens of thousands still shivering Friday through what meteorologists called the Northwest's worst ice storm in 60 years. The death toll stood at 11 in Washington and Oregon.

Several people were treated for carbon-monoxide poisoning after trying to keep warm by improving heating systems using charcoal.

More snow fell on the region, and U.S. 195 between Spokane and Pullman was closed by accidents and icy conditions Friday morning. But later in the day, temperatures rose above freezing in the Spokane area.

A late-arrival storm blanketed northern Utah's high mountains with new snow Friday while pelting the valleys with rain, forcing postponement of a World Cup ski event.

In an affidavit, Robinson said he sent out the bogus letter, Greer added.

"Nobody twisted his arm and the evidence shows him squarely guilty," Greer said. "That disturbs me and I think that's what the district should be disturbed about, not that he made a mistake, but that he weaseled his way out of it. I would have had a lot more respect for him if he had said, 'Yep, it was a dumb thing to do. Let's move on.' But he didn't."

Differing accounts

Filer superintendent Feusahrens called the Times-News this week to head off rumors about Robinson's charges and to express support for him.

Feusahrens said he never knew about Robinson's case until he received an envelope, sent anonymously, containing an article about Robinson's charges that was prepared in a Wyoming newspaper.

Feusahrens then said he called the prosecutor who leveled charges against Robinson. He said he learned that Greer, the prosecutor, was under tremendous political pressure to bring charges against Robinson.

Feusahrens said Greer also characterized the case as "a closed issue" and that people "still held him in high esteem in the community and had a lot of respect for what he had done" as an elementary school principal.

Greer declined to say whether he discussed Robinson's case with anyone.

Robinson, 53, became Filer Elementary School principal five months ago after retiring early from the Evanston School District, partly over the flap.

Since that time, employees say, he is a breath of fresh air in Frentley criticized the laws as too lenient.

"These kinds of laws make no sense," he said. "They're silly. They're reflexive laws that try to provide a silver bullet to solve a highly complex problem."

Berlin suggested politicians leave the decision in the hands of wisest persons.

"With all due respect, they're not qualified to make those judgments," he said.

Then, it should be given only to prisoners whom it could help, and only with other forms of therapy.

These provisions are not part of California law.

"I'm not at all confident that it will be effective in the way it's been implemented in California," Berlin said. "I don't see this as a panacea or a cure by any means, so I'm concerned about it being used in that fashion."

NATION IN BRIEF

Church spokesman admits to abuse

SALT LAKE CITY — A spokesman for the Mormon Church who denied the evils of sexual abuse on his nationally syndicated radio show pleaded guilty to molesting a 14-year-old girl and resigned Friday.

Lloyd Gerald Pond, 51, tearfully apologized to his victim and the church.

Authorities said Pond took the girl to a parking lot Nov. 6 behind a radio station where he worked, showed her pornography, photographed her in her underwear and coerced her to perform oral sex. The girl told a school counselor, and Pond was arrested two days later.

Pond could get up to 15 years in prison and a $10,000 fine at sentencing Feb. 3, but attorneys said he will probably be given probation and ordered to undergo therapy.

Several Kennedys visit JFK's grave

WASHINGTON — Sen. Edward Kennedy and several Kennedy family members marked the 33rd anniversary of President Kennedy's assassination with a visit to Arlington National Cemetery Friday.

Kennedy, D-Mass., was accompanied by his wife, Victoria Reggie, his sister Eunice Kennedy Shriver, her husband, Sargent Shriver, and Ethel Kennedy, widow of Robert Kennedy.

The group stood at President Kennedy's grave site for several minutes, their heads bowed. They left flowers on the graves of the president and his wife, Jacqueline.

The family also visited Robert Kennedy's grave and left flowers there. Robert Kennedy was assassinated in 1968. Wednesday would have been his 71st birthday.

Unabomber trial set November 1997

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — A judge Friday gave defense lawyers for Unabomber suspect Theodore Kaczynski nearly a year to prepare their case, setting a Nov. 12, 1997, date for the start of Kaczynski's trial on explosives charges.

Federal prosecutors had asked U.S. District Judge Garland Burrell to schedule the trial for no later than September. But federal defenders Quin Denvir and Judy Clarke said they would need extensive time to prepare their case.

"The case we're talking ... is just a monster case," Denvir said. "It is like a huge antitrust case."

Kaczynski, 54, was present for the morning hearing, the first time he has attended his own court proceedings since June 25. That was when he was arraigned and pleaded innocent to a 10-count indictment accusing him of four Unabomber attacks that killed two people and maimed two others.

He also faces charges in New Jersey in the death of an advertising executive there. He is scheduled to be arraigned on those charges next month.

1 satellite out, 1 more to go for crew

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Columbia's astronauts geared up Friday for the release of another science satellite, this one to grow thin semiconductor film in the ultra-clean vacuum of space.

As the space shuttle soared 220 miles above Earth, crewman Thomas Jones used the orbiter's robot arm to latch onto the 12-foot-diameter steel disk, called the Wake Shield Facility, in preparation for Friday night's release.

On Tuesday, the shuttle crew dropped off an ultraviolet telescope to observe stars. The telescope was expected to be 50 to 60 miles from Columbia when the Wake Shield was set loose for three days of free flight.

The release would mark the first time a space shuttle flew in formation with two satellites.

FDA advisers divided on AIDS drug

GAITHERSBURG, Md. — Scientific advisers deadlocked Friday over whether to allow AIDS patients to buy a new drug, citing conflicting evidence over whether it works and who should use it.

Pharmacia & Upjohn had argued that didanosine would help kill the HIV virus in early-stage patients' blood and slightly boost their immune system when used in combination with older medicines.

But the improvement was so slight — and the drug failed to do any good for late-stage patients — that advisers to the Food and Drug Administration were left wondering how any doctor would know how to prescribe didanosine.

"We're in a tough position," said Dr. Wayne Greaves of Howard University Hospital, before the panel voted 4-4 on whether the drug should be approved. "There are still patients who need additional drugs."

Federal deficit soars in October

WASHINGTON — After celebrating the best deficit news in 15 years in September, the federal government opened its new fiscal year in October with a 78 percent bigger imbalance than in the same month a year earlier.

The Treasury Department said Friday the red ink totaled $40.3 billion, up from $22.6 billion in October 1995 when the government was facing shutdowns and budget stalemates.

Although the revenue of nearly $100 billion was an improvement over the $95.7 billion in October 1995, the government spent $140.2 billion that October compared with just $118.3 billion a year earlier.

The deficit is the difference between receipts and expenditures. It peaked at $290.4 billion in fiscal year 1992 and had fallen every year since then.

Steps aim to solve air bag problems

Motorists soon may be able to disconnect them

WASHINGTON (AP) — Motorists who don't want air bags may soon be able to disconnect them under federal rule changes that also clear the way for bags that inflate less forcefully.

Consumers also will soon see five brightly colored and strongly worded warning labels about air bags in new cars — both on the visors and dash.

Air bags deploy at up to 200 mph in the blink of an eye, and have been blamed for the deaths of 31 children and 20 adults — mostly smaller women — in low-speed crashes they otherwise would have survived.

Yet, air bags have saved about 1,600 lives and "are saving lives every day" in more serious accidents, said Dr. Ricardo Martinez, head of the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration.

"Here's the bottom line: Air bags enhance safety (in a car crash) but they must be improved," Martinez said Friday.

In announcing five steps the agency was taking to allay growing public concern about air bags, "There is no single solution," he said. "It's a comprehensive strategy."

The strategy also includes a required phase-in of the next generation of "smart" technology air bags by the 1999 model year.

The agency believes sophisticated air bag systems that are able to sense the position or weight of the passenger and adjust deployment to provide the best protection are the best long-term solution, and they are pushing manufacturers to develop them quickly.

But for now, the agency has ordered the brighter labels and erated of "smart" technology air bags by the 1999 model year.

The agency believes sophisticated air bag systems that are able to sense the position or weight of the passenger and adjust deployment to provide the best protection are the best long-term solution, and they are pushing manufacturers to develop them quickly.

But for now, the agency has ordered the brighter labels and final ruling.

The red, yellow and black labels tell parents that children 12 and under can be killed by the air bag and that the safest place for children is in the back seat.

"The label (wording) is very strong — strong enough for me," said Richard Sanders of Baltimore, whose 7-year-old daughter was killed last year when the passenger-side air bag deployed in a low-speed accident.

Sanders helped form a coalition of parents whose children had been killed by air bags, and they have pushed for strong warning labels.

The labels also warn to always use seat belts and never put a rear-facing child seat in the front seat.

Most of the children killed by air bags were not wearing seat belts or were using them improperly. Nine of the children killed were infants in rear-facing infant seats.

Within a year, officials at the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration want the air bags in millions of new cars sold each year to be less explosively powerful.

Agency officials believe if air bags deploy with about 20 percent to 35 percent less power, fewer children and smaller adults will be killed by them in low-speed accidents they otherwise would have survived.

The Big Three automakers said Friday they support the agency's proposals in general.

has extended the time automakers can install cutoff switches for passenger-air bags in vehicles with no rear seat until Dec. 1, 2000.

Ford has the cutoff switch on the dashboard of its new Ranger and F150 pickup trucks. And GM will soon install the switches in its new pickups.

The agency is proposing the other steps and will seek public comment before making a review the role of commanders and said he is creating a nine-member panel to consider changing the service's policies on sexual harassment and its training procedures.

Army secretary orders 2 studies of sex abuse

WASHINGTON (AP) — Army Secretary Togo West pledged Friday a "no stone will go where the evidence takes us" as he ordered investigations into what senior commanders may have known — and should have known — about sex allegations at Army training sites.

The investigations will also attempt to assess whether the Army's military "culture" fosters an atmosphere that condones such conduct, and if changes should be instituted in the service's approach to sex harassment, said the service's top civilian leader.

"We can't put our heads in the sand," West said. "I will not give you a statement today that says we are going to go out headhunting. We will go where the evidence takes us."

West's announcement came as the largest military service struggled to respond to recent charges of sexual harassment and rape at a training base in Aberdeen, Md., and elsewhere.

The complaints involve primarily noncommissioned officers and young female trainees under their charge.

The Aberdeen incident touched off thousands of phone calls to a hot line at the base, prompting Army leaders to consider making a hot line a permanent fixture, West said.

At a Pentagon briefing, West announced he has asked for the Army's inspector general to

EPA weighs tougher smog rules

WASHINGTON (AP)—In a decision that could have broad health and economic implications, the Environmental Protection Agency is considering tougher air-quality rules that could compel many cities to begin new smog controls.

The proposal, expected within days, has been the focus of much lobbying from both environmentalists and business groups. They disagree whether the current air pollution rules are adequate to protect Americans' health.

If the EPA reduces the allowed levels of smog-causing ozone and microscopic dust in the air, states and cities might have to impose draconian pollution controls, including traffic restrictions, wider use of clean-burning gasoline, mandatory car pooling, construction caps and curbs on the use of everything from pleasure boats to lawn mowers, opponents say.

The proposal could cost "many billions of dollars" and more than triple the areas unable to meet federal standards, argues Alan Charles Ravels, an attorney representing the American Automobile Manufacturers Association.

"The implications... are potentially enormous for state and local governments and for virtually the entire industrial sector of the economy," Ravels says.

Yet, many health experts argue that even communities meeting the current federal standards have air that is harmful to children, the elderly and those with lung problems such as asthma.

"The federal standards are not doing the job in protecting the public health, especially among children and the elderly with chronic heart and lung diseases," said Ronald White of the American Lung Association, which, through a lawsuit, forced the EPA to review the standards.

In recent years, state and local officials have struggled to meet the existing standards, forcing factories and auto makers to spend billions in pollution controls.

Even so, many of the nation's largest cities still fall short of meeting the ozone standard. Seventy-four metropolitan areas—down from 98 six years ago—are still not in compliance. In addition, about 40 areas now do not meet the federal standard for fine dust, or particulates.

Air pollution facts

Facts about federal air pollution standards:

□ AIR QUALITY STANDARDS—The Environmental Protection Agency sets national ambient air quality standards for six pollutants: ozone, sulfur dioxide, nitrogen oxide, carbon monoxide, lead and particulates. State and local officials must fashion pollution controls to meet the minimum standards.

□ OZONE—Formed when nitrogen oxide and hydrocarbons combine in the presence of sunlight. It is a major component of smog. To meet federal health standards ozone cannot exceed 0.12 parts per million cubic feet of air. Currently, 74 urban areas do not meet the federal standard, which was set in 1979.

□ PARTICULATES—Tiny matter suspended in the air. The EPA currently regulates only particles of 10 microns in diameter, which generally include dust and soot from farming, roads and construction. Smaller particles are not regulated. Currently, 40 areas of the country fail to meet the federal standard.

□ HEALTH IMPACT—Ozone and particulates in the air have been linked to increased respiratory ailments, asthma attacks, allergies and increased likelihood of premature death. Some research has shown that people with asthma, children, the elderly and asthmatics suffer from ozone or particulate pollution.

□ PROPOSAL—The American Lung Association argues the federal standards for ozone and particulates should be tightened. The EPA is considering tightening the standard for ozone to 0.08 parts per million from 0.12. It also is considering a standard for the first time for microscopic particles of 2.5 microns in diameter. A micron is equal to one-millionth of a meter.

□ CRITICISM—A coalition of business groups maintains that significant progress has been made in reducing air pollution and that tightening the ozone standards would not produce significant health protection, while requiring billions of dollars in new pollution controls. It contends that more research is needed into the effect of particulates of less than 10 microns.

—The Associated Press

The proposal before the EPA would require communities to cut ozone levels by an additional one-third, to 0.08 parts per million cubic feet of air from 0.12.

The agency also is considering for the first time regulating minute particles of dust, down to 2.5 microns in diameter. Current standards apply only to particles of 10 microns or larger.

Health experts argue the smaller particles—many of which come from industrial or utility smokestacks—cause the most harm because they lodge deep in the lungs.

Either way, the EPA is under a court order to decide by month's end. Its technical staff already has recommended tightening two of the standards.

Among opponents have been the National Association of Manufacturers, the American Petroleum Institute and a Utah steel company long a target of environmental groups because of alleged air pollution in the Utah Valley.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Mother Teresa meets with missionaries

CALCUTTA, India — Nobel laureate Mother Teresa slipped and talked to fellow missionaries Friday, a day after being hospitalized for the fourth time this year because of a recurring heart problem. But doctors said the 89-year-old Roman Catholic nun is out of danger after awakening early with chest pains. Nearly 150 nuns and volunteers of her order, the Missionaries of Charity, assembled at her home to pray for her recovery. Later in the day, after receiving antibiotics, Mother Teresa was well enough to chat with some of them at her hospital bed. Chief Minister Jyoti Basu, the head of West Bengal's state, who arrived with a bouquet of flowers, told reporters "she is looking better and cheerful."

Romania validates new president

BUCHAREST, Romania — The Constitutional Court on Friday confirmed former geology professor Emil Constantinescu as Romania's new president. Constantinescu will be sworn in Dec. 1, Romania's national day, in the Transylvanian city of Alba Iulia, where modern Romania was born on that day in 1918. Soon afterward, he will formally appoint Bucharest mayor Victor Goebu as premier. Goebu will then appoint his Cabinet.

Jet flies past exploding missile after error

LONDON — A British Airways jumbo jet flew past an exploding missile in Thursday's first serious airborne activity in the air war left out of the information used to make Britain, the airline said Friday. The Boeing 747 en route from Islamabad, Pakistan, to Manchester, England, was about five miles from the missile and 10,000 feet above it when the missile exploded north of Iceland on June 4. Passengers probably were unaware of the missile, but Turkish air traffic controllers alerted the pilot, who was changing course when the missile went off, British Airways spokesman Dave Wilson said.

Indonesian tiger on brink of extinction

JAKARTA, Indonesia — The Sumatran tiger, Indonesia's last surviving tiger species, will become extinct within 30 years if the government doesn't stop poachers, an environmental group said Friday. Only 500 of the tigers are left in their shrinking habitat on the island of Sumatra, said Ron Lilley of the World Wide Fund for Nature. "If it's not conserved, let's say it will disappear within 30 years, maybe even faster," he was quoted as saying by the official Antara news agency. The Bali tiger became extinct in the 1950s and the last Java tiger died in the 1980s, Lilley said.

Ekeus says Iraqi official blocked inspectors

DUBAI, United Arab Emirates — The U.N. official in charge of destroying Iraq's most lethal weapons said inspectors published Friday that a top Iraqi official had blocked efforts to inspect parts of old Scud missiles. Rafi Ekeus said that on Nov. 15, Iraq deputy prime minister Tariq Aziz "blocked our team as they were trying to transport the missile parts to our center in Baghdad after dropping them out of the ground." Ekeus said U.N. inspectors had left Iraq due to the incident. "But before they left, they were jostled by security men who tried to search their cars," the English language newspaper quoted Ekeus as saying. Copyrighted from wire reports

Clinton snorkels with wife, Secret Service

PORT DOUGLAS, Australia (AP) — Thirty miles from shore, President Clinton pulled flippers onto his feet, adjusted his face mask, bit down on a snorkel tube and plunged into the tropical blue-green waters of the Coral Sea. Hillary Rodham Clinton jumped in, too. And so did several Secret Service agents, intent on protecting the first family from any underwater danger. The Clintons explored the exotic waters around the Great Barrier Reef on Friday, snapping pictures with their underwater cameras. They spotted a giant clam but didn't see the four-foot shark that startled some of the president's staff. By any stretch of the imagination, this was not a typical snorkeling excursion.

An Australian naval cruiser accompanied the president's flotilla. A White House team brought along high-tech satellite equipment in case the president needed to take an emergency call. "Magnificent," the president declared. "This was just an unforgettable day." Before heading back to land, the Clintons dashed off a postcard to their daughter, Chelsea, to be mailed home from a floating platform with a "Great Barrier Reef" postmark. Today, Clinton flies to the Philippines for a summit in Manila with leaders of Pacific Rim nations. Security tensions were high in Manila, and the United States warned its diplomats to beware of "possible threats" during the meeting.

Miss World contest holds dress rehearsal

BANGALORE, India (AP) — Elephants marched in a grand procession and beauty queens preened Friday during a dress rehearsal for the Miss World beauty pageant. Squads of riot police watched over it all, wary of the increasingly vehement protests surrounding the contest. Armed with tear gas, the police patrolled outside the Chinnaswamy cricket stadium where the pageant's final event is to be held Saturday in the southern city of Bangalore. Police also arrested 35 members of a right-wing group, concerned they might try to disrupt the pageant.

Opponents who see the Miss World contest as demeaning to women appealed to spectators to boycott the event and threatened to blockade roads to the stadium. In the weeks leading up to the pageant, a dozen groups ranging from political parties to communists have held demonstrations, blocked roads and burned effigies to protest the pageant. Some trashed a showroom of the chief sponsor and smeared coal tar and cow dung on its products. One group called for a general strike to cripple the city's public transport. "The pageant has never faced this sort of protests," Eric Morley, chairman of the Miss World Pageant, told The Associated Press.

Storm pelts Utah with rain; snow delays ski race

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A late-autumn storm blanketed northern Utah's high mountains with new snow Friday while pelting the valleys with rain, forcing postponement of a World Cup ski event.

The men's giant slalom ski race was rescheduled for Monday as rain soaked slopes in the resort community of Park City, about 25 miles east of Salt Lake.

The rest of the four-race America's Opening program was to continue on schedule. A women's slalom, featuring reigning World Cup slalom champion Eli Edler of Austria, is scheduled today, with a men's slalom on Sunday.

The storm rolled into the state following a record-breaking warm spell. On Thursday, Salt Lake City reached 65 degrees, the warmest Nov. 21 on record. On Tuesday, 12 high temperature records were broken, including a 73-degree reading in Tooele.

The Utah Highway Patrol

reported no serious weather-related accidents as of Friday afternoon, a dispatcher said.

No roads had been closed due to the storm, according to the Utah Department of Transportation.

Zion National Park reported 1.18 inches of rainfall by Friday morning, while Manti and St. George registered nearly an inch. Alta had 58-hundredths of an inch, Cedar City and Richfield 28-hundredths, and Salt Lake 24-hundredths of an inch.

"Bill Alder, chief meteorologist with the National Weather Service office in Salt Lake City, said the storm was being blamed on the so-called 'Pineapple Connection.'"

"It's what we refer to when we get a tremendous influx of tropical moisture from the West Coast," he said. "It hit southern California and went eastward and started raining in southern Utah — the St. George and Santa Clara area — midafternoon Thursday.

Actual cost of Freeman standoff is $3.8 million

WASHINGTON (AP) — Last spring's 81-day Freeman standoff at a remote Montana ranch cost about $7.5 million, about half of which would have been spent anyway, the government says.

Using FBI figures, the General Accounting Office said $3.7 million of the amount went to salaries and benefits for agents who participated in the episode, recurring expenses under the FBI's regular annual budget.

The other $3.8 million went for such expenses as overtime, travel, food, rental of search lights and the lease and modification of light armored vehicles, said the report issued Thursday.

Also included is a $43,075 payment to Garland County, Mont., farmer Dean Clark, who sued the FBI for sealing off his land and denying him access during the incident.

The $7.5 million estimate, compiled at the request of Sen. John Warner, R-Va., is not precise because the FBI does not usually break out costs of individual operations, the GAO, Congress' investigative arm, said. "Its accounting system was not designed to readily produce these data," the agency said.

The siege began on March 25, when Freeman, racist, anti-government militant barricaded on a farm north of Billings in eastern Montana, rejected an FBI request that they surrender. Three colleagues already had been arrested.

The group held that the federal government had usurped the powers of local governments. A federal grand jury had indicted members on an array of charges including bank fraud, illegal weapons possession, armed robbery and threatening federal officials.

Officer shoots, kills man

BOISE (AP) — A local man with three outstanding arrest warrants died several hours after being shot in the head early Friday by a police officer who reportedly returned fire while trying to arrest him.

Scott James Moody, 28, died at St. Alphonsus Regional Medical Center late Friday morning after undergoing surgery. Authorities would not identify the officer, a 12-year law enforcement veteran who also received a minor wound.

Police Chief Larry Paulson said Moody had outstanding arrest warrants for a probation violation and failure to appear, both misdemeanors, and writing bad checks, a felony. Ada County Coroner Erwin Sonnenberg said evidence of amphetamine and marijuana use was found in his body.

It was the city's fourth police shooting this year and second this month.

Lt. Jim Tibbs, Boise Police Department spokesman, said the shooting occurred about 4:30 a.m. on the city's west side after a patrol officer spotted two men standing near a van.

Since the officer lives in the neighborhood, he suspected they might be burglarizing vehicles and stopped to investigate. Tibbs said the van's driver, Loyd Robeson, 18, of Boise, was arrested for driving without privileges.

Robeson was being watched by a backup officer and the first officer was trying to take Moody into custody when Moody allegedly pulled a semiautomatic pistol from his waistband and fired over his shoulder, grazing the officer's right hip with the shot.

DUI director arrested in officer injury

POCATELLO (AP) — A director of the local Interagency DUI Task Force has been arrested on a drunken driving charge after a Pocatello policeman was allegedly dragged by his car.

Bryan W. Yowell, marketing director for the Greater Pocatello Chamber of Commerce, also was charged with battery and eluding an officer. Thursday was his 33rd birthday.

Patrol Sgt. Kenneth Linn found Yowell sitting in his car vomiting outside its door at about 11:30 p.m., police reports said. The car's engine was running, and Linn reached inside to turn off the ignition.

Yowell accelerated, catching Linn's arm in the steering wheel and dragging him for a short distance. Linn's foot was run over by the car's rear tire, the report said.

Linn freed himself and radioed for assistance. Yowell continued driving erratically without his car's lights on. Capt. Kirk Nelson said. Yowell was stopped by another officer, and was taken to Hanneck County Jail where he posted bond.

Linn was taken to the hospital and treated for possible ligament damage to his arm and injury to his foot. His arm is in a cast.

Westmond man wins $1 million in lottery

WESTMOND (AP) — The computer picked the right six numbers, and a Westmond man is $1 million richer.

The Idaho Lottery Commission said Thursday the man, who did not want to be identified, bought a $3 quick pick in Wednesday night's Tri-West Lottery, just an hour before numbers were drawn.

The winner will receive about $764,000 after taxes. Westmond is an unincorporated community on U.S. 95 just south of Coeur d'Alene.

Sixth-grader faces expulsion for carrying pistol to school

BOISE (AP) — An elementary student faces expulsion after taking a loaded pistol to school.

The sixth-grader was caught at Amity Elementary School early Thursday after the parent of another student tipped off school officials. Another student had seen the boy take a gun to school Tuesday and told a parent, who informed the school.

The 12-year-old boy was separated from other students, and school staff members confiscated the gun. Officials said the .380-caliber semiautomatic pistol was in his backpack.

Ada County sheriff's deputies took the boy into custody and said they would charge him with carrying a weapon on school property, a misdemeanor that carries a maximum penalty of 120 days in juvenile detention. His name was not released because he is a minor.

The boy later was released into his mother's custody. The gun was the first firearm found on a Boise campus this year.

Charges pending in auto accident injuring man

EDEN - A Jerome man was injured Thursday afternoon when he lost control of his car at the intersection of state highways 25 and 50, at 4:17 p.m.

Brandon D. Heitz, 23, entered the curve of the intersection too fast and lost control of his car, according to an Idaho State Police report. The car slid sideways then flipped onto its top, the report said.

Heitz was not wearing a seat belt, the report said. Charges are pending in the accident, it said.

He was taken to Magic Valley Regional Medical Center, treated for injuries and released.

Pair of collisions blocks traffic on I-84 to U.S. 93

JEROME - A pair of collisions clogged the exits from Interstate 84 to U.S. Highway 93 Thursday.

The first, between two tractor-trailers, happened about 1 p.m. and partially blocked the off ramp for a little more than an hour.

The second, at 8:11 p.m., also took about an hour to clear.

Idaho State Police reports say a car driven by Grace Anderson, 73, of Fairview, Mont., failed to stop at the off-ramp stop sign. Her car collided with a car driven by Jerry Haney, 69, of Jerome.

Anderson and her passenger were taken to Magic Valley Regional Medical Center.

Anderson was listed in fair condition Friday. Haney was transported to St. Benedict's Family Medical Center.

Spaghetti dinner proceeds will go to Valley House

TWIN FALLS - The Our Savior Lutheran Youth are holding a spaghetti dinner at 5:30 p.m. Sunday at the newly renovated Valley Christian Center/Our Savior Lutheran Church.

There is no charge to attend, but a free-will donation is suggested.

All proceeds will go to Valley House homeless shelter for more information, call the church office at 733-3222.

Holiday plans at Magic Valley Manor are announced

WENDELL - Relatives of Magic Valley Manor residents are invited to a Thanksgiving dinner today at noon at the Manor.

At 7 p.m. Dec. 6 the Manor will hold its annual grounds Christmas-lighting ceremony.

The resident and family Christmas party will be at 2 p.m. Dec. 22.

Manor administrator Roger King said a drop box will be available for anyone who wishes to donate used toys or canned food to be distributed to the area's needy during the holidays.

The Manor is seeking volunteers to help decorate the facility, visit, read and play word games with residents; play piano; and do ladies' nails.

For more information, call King at 536-6623.

Gooding to hold 3rd annual Nickel Toy Sale in December

GOODING - Gooding County residents who need a little help with Christmas are invited to the third annual Nickel Toy Sale sponsored by the Gooding Ministerial Association.

The toy sale will be held Dec. 18-20, at the round building on the Idaho State School for the Deaf and the Blind campus.

Avonmore cited as industrial recycler of the year

GOODING - Southern Idaho Solid Waste will honor Avonmore West, operator of cheese factories at Gooding and Richfield, as its Industrial Recycler of the Year.

Avonmore's Gooding plant has recycled cardboard since 1980 and is expected to eliminate 500 cubic yards of trash sent to the landfill by May.

"By recycling their cardboard, the Avonmore plants have not only made a significant reduction in their waste but they also saved a considerable amount of money in avoided landfill costs," said Terry Schultz, executive director of Southern Idaho Solid Waste.

The recycling also saves Gooding County tax dollars because the county's financial contribution to the six-county solid waste district is based on the amount of waste received at the landfill from the county's transfer station.

The award ceremony will be 2 p.m. Monday at the Gooding plant.

McGovern: Get between your kids, alcohol

By Steve Crump
Times-News writer

George McGovern

TWIN FALLS - George McGovern may have been the most powerful Democrat in the country at the time, but he didn't know what was happening underneath his own roof.

"I didn't know until later that my children were drinking when they were teenagers," the former South Dakota senator and presidential candidate told an audience at the College of Southern Idaho Friday night. "And that's only because they told me."

Two years ago, McGovern's 45-year-old daughter, Terry, staggered out of a Wisconsin bar, passed out in an alley and froze to death.

"It was a pretty relaxed attitude in our home when our children were growing up," said McGovern, who wrote a book about his daughter's alcoholism, titled "Terry." "If I had it to do over again, I'd have done anything to keep my children away from alcohol and I would have started when they were in junior high school."

McGovern, the 1972 Democratic nominee for president, spoke to about 400 people gathered to celebrate the 20th anniversary of the Walker Center, a Gooding-based group of alcohol- and drug-treatment centers.

"If I look back on my 18 years in the United States Senate, I can't think of a single speech that I gave about alcoholism," he said. "I was much more interested in ending the destructive war in Vietnam, which cost the lives of 58,000 young Americans."

"And yet we lose twice that many people to alcohol in a single year," he said. "Every day, another 300 Terry McGovern dies. They're not as famous as Terry was, but they're no less precious."

McGovern, now 74, was defeated for re-election to a fourth term in the Senate 16 years ago and spends his time lecturing, mostly on alcoholism. He's critical of what he sees as the federal government's neglect of funds for substance-abuse treatment.

"Alcohol costs this country about $100 billion a year," McGovern said. "Name Please see MCGOVERN, Page B3

After more than 30 years, Job Service moves into larger office

By Pat Marcantonio
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - Jean Anton wiped down her computer Friday morning as Job Service employees prepared to move.

"We're going to a nice, new office. I should clean my computer," she said, and took another swipe with a cloth.

Since 1958, the state employment office has been in a building on Fourth Avenue North. On Monday, it begins operations at 771 N. College Road.

The largest challenge is transferring the computerized data system that keeps track of client information, said regional manager Pam Petersen. Idaho Department of Labor specialists will work this weekend so the system will be on line by Monday morning.

The brick building is 12,773 square feet, compared with the elder building's 4,800 square feet. With the additional space, the employment office can offer state-of-the-art aid at 28 computer stations, Petersen said. For example, clients will be able to register for services, tap into job information or prepare resumes.

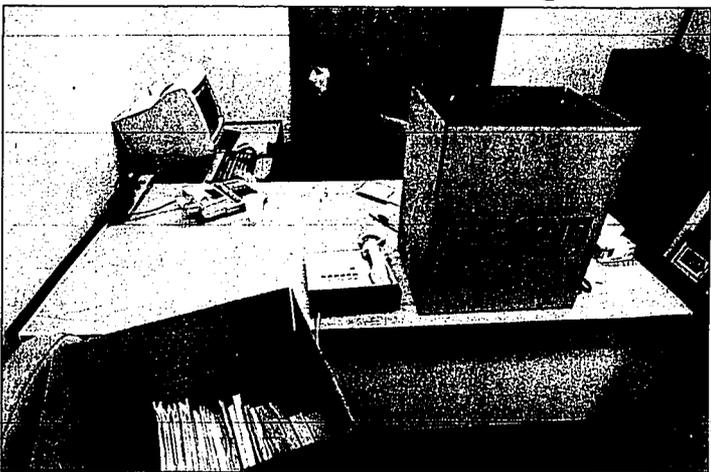

"It's really a customer service to applicants," she said. There also will be more room for employers to interview prospective employees. In the elder building, interviews took place in the "coffee machine rooms" or aisles, Petersen said.

"We easily see 150 people every day," Petersen said.

Twin Falls County purchased the Fourth Avenue building from the city for $210,000 in December; the county will move vehicle license registrations, veterans' services and the driver's license bureau there. People seeking job information seemed only mildly curious at the activity.

Meanwhile at the new building, the smell of new carpet and paint was overpowering. Workers finished last-minute chores under the eyes of Mary Garner.

Garner is the department's facilities manager, who oversaw this 10-year project from planning to finish.

Job Service tax representative Cheryl Harrington keeps things working despite boxes on and around her desk during the center's move to its new location on 771 N. College Road Friday.

"Because the programs are federally funded, one delay was finding enough money for the $1.2 million project, she said. The department bought the two acres of land on North College Road but used a complex procedure for a first-of-its-kind lease-purchase agreement with a Boise developer.

The first year's cost, which includes lease payment, new telephone system and moving costs, is $300,000, Garner said.

"We try to make good use of taxpayer money and I think we did," she said.

Naming the building the Magic Valley Job Service office, Petersen said, was to emphasize the large area it serves.

"It's always been known as the Twin Falls Job Service office. We want to stress the office services Jerome, Gooding, Twin Falls and Lincoln counties," said Petersen, who also administers operations in Hailey and Burley.

"It's been very hectic because we've had to continue work as usual," said Evelyn Allen, among the 26 office employees.

But she looks forward to more space and privacy for clients.

"The move also cleared items accumulated over the years, employees said.

Troubled past haunts new Filer principal

By Liz Wright
Times-News writer

FILER - Months before becoming Filer Elementary School principal, Robbie Robinson pleaded guilty to a misdemeanor charge of furnishing the reputations of three Evanston, Wyo., school employees, a crime he says he didn't commit.

Surprised-Filer officials, who hired Robinson this summer, said they support Robinson and believe his account of his legal battle - that politics railroaded him into court and that he struck a plea bargain to avoid lawyer fees.

"It's not significant enough to impair his ability at Filer Elementary School," said Bill Fuesahrens, Filer School District superintendent. "We still feel he has the backing of the district, the staff and the community."

Robinson was sentenced in July to one year's probation, on a charge of "intent to maliciously cause harm to another." If Robinson successfully completes his probation, the charge will be permanently erased from his record.

Until recently, Filer officials knew nothing about the charge. Robinson said he never told anyone in Idaho of his legal battle, and Filer officials said no one in Evanson told them about the flap.

Last week, the Idaho Professional Standards Commission renewed Robinson's school license after state-required FBI fingerprinting records showed his criminal record cleared.

"I just understand that there is nothing perfect in this life," said Roger Hanshaw, Idaho supervisor of teacher

Neighbors say E911 failed to respond to first calls on fire

By Kent McCreary
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - Fire damaged a Twin Falls house Friday evening, and neighbors who reported the blaze say their initial 911 calls didn't draw a response.

Officials at the new E911 dispatch center said their recordings show a proper response.

The fire at 430 Oak St. started from a wood stove, according to Twin Falls Fire Department reports. The homeowner, Santiago Leyda, had started a fire in his wood stove, and left the stove door open while he went outside to split wood, the report said.

Leyda could not re-enter the house because of the fire, the report said. The fire started on the carpet and spread to a couch, then to wood paneling on the walls.

At least two neighbors called 911 to report the fire. They say their initial calls, answered by the Southern Idaho Regional Communications Center, drew no response.

Nancy Banyai, who lives nearby, said she called the E911 center initially, then walked over the house.

"I came all the way over here. I had to make sure my two kids weren't in the house. I got over there, and didn't hear any sirens," she said. "I called back between seven and 10 minutes later, and the dispatcher said they had just dispatched the fire department."

SIRCOMM Communications Manager Mary Rizzolo said Banyai's call came in at 5:28:27 p.m., and was preceded by another neighbor's call at 5:28 p.m.

SIRCOMM dispatchers hung up with Banyai at 5:30:10, and with the other call at 5:31:32 p.m. Rizzolo said. Banyai called back in less than four minutes.

Jerome officer pushes new plan to curb juvenile crime

By Dixie Thomas Reale
Times-News correspondent

JEROME - Jerome County Juvenile Probation Officer Charles Cooper is designing a prevention program to help keep high-risk juvenile lawbreakers out of jail.

Jerome County commissioners and Cooper traveled to the Idaho State Department of Corrections in Boise this week to look at a rehabilitation program, in use in Colorado, which Cooper wants to tailor to Idaho and Jerome County youth.

"It is not a scare-the-straight program," Cooper said. But it is a program designed to help juveniles and their families identify their problems - and motivate them by giving them an inside look at prison life.

Cooper got training in the Colorado program in June, then recommended it to the Jerome commissioners. He would

The Colorado program, SHAPE UP, is geared toward 13- to 18-year-olds. It gives juveniles and their parents a glimpse of incarceration, through the eyes of carefully selected and trained inmates.

Buhl raises substitute teachers' wage

By Mary Lou Potts
Times-News correspondent

BUHL - The Buhl School Board voted to increase substitute teachers' wage $5 per day for both certified and noncertified personnel.

The board was acting unanimously upon an administration recommendation to keep Buhl competitive with other school districts. The wage increase will be effective Jan. 1.

Next year, the board will discuss the possibility of permanent substitutes, who would always be on call.

Also at Tuesday's meeting, Superintendent Rick Hill presented his projects and goals for the next year, including development of a comprehensive performance assessment for teachers and certified employees who are new to the district. Also on the list is development of a fixed-asset inventory system.

Other projects on Hill's list include organizing a district School-to-Work program; building a district public relations/communications program; possibly starting foreign language classes; and forming a community task force to review the district's graduation requirements and establish guidelines.

In other School Board business, Transportation Director Grant Atkinson reported on the prebid conference meeting held Nov. 12 to answer questions about bidding on the transportation contract. Atkinson said five bus companies were represented then and more bids may appear by the noon Dec. 2 deadline.

The board voted to hold a special meeting Dec. 2 to discuss the bids. The meeting will start at 6:15 p.m. to review a student problem; bid review is at 7 p.m.

The project for a new middle school roof will be re-advised for bids, Larry Finstad said. Bids considered on the first call were not satisfactory to the district. The district will have to patch and repair through the winter and delay the complete project until spring, to allow time for thorough bid examination.

The next board meeting will be held Dec. 17. The time has been moved from 7 p.m. to 5 p.m. to let board members attend a basketball game.

National broadcaster calls for stability

BOISE (AP) - American politics are an outrage, and this country has an urgent need to restore a sense of stability and common welfare, NBC anchorman Tom Brokaw says.

"We are at a time of benign blandness. We have a remarkable opportunity to do something about the vexing problems at the core of this country."

"We can no longer judge by stereotypical pigmentation," Brokaw said. "Another problem is the presidential elections, and Brokaw offered suggestions for change."

He did a nationwide broadcast from Boise Thursday night, then spoke to about 900 people at Boise State University.
"We are at a time of benign blandness," he said. "We have a remarkable opportunity to do something about the vexing problems at the core of this country."
As he sees it, one of those problems is race relations. The 21st century, he said, will see a huge change in demographics, with higher percentages of Latinos and Asians.

Students learn by cooking traditional dinner

MERIDIAN (AP) - The smell of baking turkey filled through the room as Maria McCormick and Desiree Gumm stared blankly at a box of Janet Lee stuffing mix.
"I'm lost," McCormick said. "I've never made stuffing before."
Social studies teacher David Falash came to the rescue by getting water boiling on the stove. The young chefs were impressed. "You could be that frugal guy," McCormick said, referring to television's "Frugal Gourmet."
The 13-year-old and other consumer science students at Lake Hazel Middle School in the Meridian School District got an early taste of their Thanksgiving feast on Thursday. Teacher Merianne Williams put her classes through the paces of preparing a holiday meal so they'd be able to help out at home next week.

She also hopes to give them a sense that they can continue family traditions of their own.
"If they don't like it now, they won't want to do it later," she said. "I want them to see that it can be fun to have a big gathering."
The smell of fresh-baked rolls and a spirit of teamwork created a festive atmosphere as the middle school students worked on green-bean casseroles, cut squares of pumpkin cake and apple pie and made stuffing and mashed potatoes. John Graybill, 13, and co-workers spent several minutes putting together their green bean casserole.
"We're supposed to spread them evenly over the top," he explained. Not everything has gone so smoothly for Graybill. While making an apple pie, he misunderstood one of the directions and had to go into kitchen action to save the dessert.

"It said to put a cube of butter in it, so I did," he said. "But then the teacher said, 'No, that's for the topping!' So I had to pick it out."
After a couple of hours work, the dinner took shape. Seventh-graders rushed to collect their dessert while older students finished the mashed potatoes. Angela Hastings, 13, put on a valiant effort at creating her potatoes. Beginning with a huge bowl of boiled spuds, she used a hand mixer, butter and milk to make the savory comfort food.
"It's kind of hard with this mixer," she said, struggling to push shards of potato goo from spraying around the room. "I've done this before, but we have better equipment at home."

Blast injures 3 at Mormon temple

IDAHO FALLS (AP) - One man remained in serious condition Friday after a boiler blew up in the Mormon Church's Idaho Falls Temple.
The explosion occurred at 3:20 p.m. Thursday, while three men tried to change over from one boiler to another. Apparently they were having trouble lighting one of them up, police said.
The boiler door and smoke stack blew off, power lines were damaged in the boiler room and nicks were found in the walls, police said.

John Vandyke, 49, a temple employee, remained in serious but stable condition Friday at Columbia Eastern Idaho Regional Medical Center. Police believe he may have been kicked out from the explosion because he could not remember the incident.
Jeff Jardine, 50, a temple employee, and Howard Bines, 40, an employee of Rocky Mountain Boiler, were treated and released for minor burns and lacerations, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Robert Nield, assistant to the temple recorder, characterized the accident as a "light explosion."
"Those of us who were away from the basement maintenance area didn't feel anything," Temple Matron Emma Jane Nelson said.
Nelson said auxiliary electric baseboard units were being used for heat, and an investigation into the cause of the blast was under way.

Jury acquits deputy of manslaughter in crash

IDAHO FALLS (AP) - Jefferson County Sheriff's Sgt. Ken Havlicak faces one less nightmare after being acquitted in the death of a man he ran into during a high-speed chase.
A jury acquitted him Thursday of misdemeanor vehicular manslaughter following a collision at a rural intersection which killed 65-year-old Kent Jeppesen, of Idaho Falls.
On the night of April 11, the deputy was in a high-speed pursuit of motorcyclist Casey Hoyer, 29, who was piloting his stream-lined "bullet" bike on the road in Rigby. Havlicak ran the stop sign and collided with Jeppesen's GMC Jimmy while in Bonneville County.
The jury agreed Havlicak was coming up on a blind intersection and he could not see him.
Jeppesen never regained consciousness and was removed from life support three weeks later.

His mother said the verdict sends a signal: "It's OK for police officers to kill innocent victims," said Judy Jeppesen.
Hoyer later was arrested and pleaded guilty to one count of involuntary manslaughter. He is awaiting sentencing.
"I had an accident and I had to deal with his death. And then I've had to deal with this portion of it," Havlicak said about the trial. "The death I'll have to deal with for the rest of my life."
A civil suit against the county is a "definite possibility," Judy Jeppesen said. The family has filed a lawsuit with Jefferson County's insurance company.
Havlicak believes the county will settle with the Jeppesens. No one, he said, "holds any animosity, nothing but sympathy" for the family.
Attorneys from both sides told the jury the verdict will have a big impact in future police procedure.

Search for missing man resumes

The Times-News
CAREY - Blaine County Sheriff's Department officials said the search for Richard Bendele will resume this morning.
 Bendele, 29, of Burley, has been missing since Sunday. The desert pickup truck was found in the northeast corner of Bendele's pickup today and send searchers into areas where Bendele is less likely to have gone.
 The search has involved as many as two dozen people from the Blaine County Sheriff's Department, and searchers from Lincoln and Minidoka counties, officials said.
 Minidoka County launched the search, but Blaine County combated the area. Blaine County officials expect to take four teams of tracking dogs into the bleak, hard country today and send searchers into areas where Bendele is less likely to have gone.

 Minidoka County launched the search, but Blaine County authorities took over the search earlier this week, when it was determined that Bendele's pickup had broken down in a remote corner of Blaine County.

 Bendele, apparently on a hunting trip, left the pickup behind when it broke down.
 On Sunday, he called his mother from a cellular phone rigged up in the car and said he was walking to Carey.
 That was Bendele's last reported contact with anyone.

Irrigation district project under way to eliminate need for injection wells

By Lori Bethneski
 Times-News writer

A&B Irrigation District Manager Virgil Temple discusses construction plans with Yvonne Daniel, newly assigned to the Bureau of Reclamation in Burley, far right, as crews work on building a pond near Rupert. The pond will eventually eliminate five injection wells that discharge untreated agricultural wastewater into the Snake River Plain Aquifer.

RUPERT - Working today to protect the Snake River Plain Aquifer tomorrow will become a top priority for local officials who've developed a plan to replenish the aquifer while reducing contamination.
 In its North Side Drainwater Management Plan, the A&B Irrigation District and the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation are working on alternatives to dispose of agricultural runoff, instead of continuing to discharge untreated runoff directly into the aquifer through injection wells.
 The project's primary goal is to replace the wells with a system that reduces the chance of directly contaminating the aquifer, if a natural amount of nitrates, fecal bacteria or fertilizers develops in area runoff, said Virgil Temple, A&B district manager.
 A series of ponds is being developed where runoff can be piped into and retained while it naturally filters back into the ground and recharges the aquifer.
 "This filtration method will allow the water entering into the ponds to be cleaner while creating several acres of wildlife habitat," said Chris Ketchum, wildlife biologist for the Bureau of Reclamation. "And if we should encounter pollutants in the future, they'll be much easier to deal with on the surface than in wells."
 The A&B Irrigation District is building a large holding pond near 600 N. 400 East in Minidoka County to collect return flows from about 6,500 acres. From there, the water will be pumped out to a series of ponds being developed about 2,800 feet away.
 "This will eliminate five injection wells, take care of irrigation runoff from farms and eliminate dumping untreated water straight into the aquifer without any filtration method," Temple said.
 The ponds will be located on BuRec-owned land, unfit for farming but suitable for wetland development, Ketchum said. Depending on the terrain, some ponds will produce recharge farmland in Minidoka and Jerome counties. Sixty injection wells are used to collect irrigation runoff.

 When the district was formed in 1954, injection wells were considered a viable solution to address the problem of having no natural surface drainage outlets to the Snake River, Temple said. Since then, federal regulations have made them difficult and expensive to maintain.
 Temple said the wells are subject to regulation through the federal Safe Drinking Water Act. The aquifer was also designated by the Environmental Protection Agency as a sole source of drinking water in 1991, which means contamination would represent a significant hazard to public health.
 "We're not going to be able to get rid of them all, but we're hoping we can continue expanding this plan into other areas to eliminate as many injection wells as possible and to protect our aquifer for future generations to come," Temple said.
 BuRec will continue funding the North Side Drainwater Management Plan through the year 2000, Ketchum said.
 "At that point, we'll see where we're at and decide what we need to do next," he said.

Drivers tired of bouncing along damaged chunks of Highway 24 will have to wait until spring before resurfacing projects begin. Heavy flooding in northern Idaho diverted gas-tax funds originally earmarked for such improvements.

Road repair projects delayed

By Ken Levy
 Times-News correspondent

RUPERT - Residents weary of the choppy ride along State Highway 24 between Rupert and Acaecia must put up with it at least until spring.
 They can blame devastating floods that wallowed northern Idaho earlier this year for the almost yearlong delay in getting the project moving, said Andrea Storjohann, resident engineer for the Idaho Transportation Department.
 Funding for those projects, due to come out of a 4 percent gas-tax increase enacted in April, was diverted to aid projects that wallowed road projects didn't start rolling into state coffers again until July 1, she said.
 That delayed bidding on the Highway 24 project until late fall, Storjohann said.

 "We don't like to put projects out to bid until we know the money is going to be there," she said.
 Gordon Paving was the successful bidder on the four-mile, $318,000 project.
 But crews can't start work until April 1, assuming weather cooperates. Storjohann said this year's paving season ended Oct. 1.
 A press release from the governor's office last June attributed the road damage to "spring breakup."
 Bill Dermody, public affairs specialist for the state Department of Transportation in Boise, said some of the project didn't come from the gas-tax increase, but from money generated by salary savings within the department through the elimination of some positions.
 However, he wasn't sure of the reason for the construction delay. More information will be available Monday, he said.
 Other proposed road projects for next year include an eight-mile stretch of Highway 24 running from Acaecia to Minidoka if the money is available, Storjohann said. No cost estimate was available.
 Another four-mile stretch of repaving, due to go out to bid Dec. 5, would run from the north end of Albion to about 500 South, which is a continuation of a 6.5-mile project completed Oct. 1.
 The finished stretch, from Pomarelle Road to Albion on Highway 77, was funded through state highway money, she said.
 The $558,000 work was done by Hunziker Corp. of Pocatello.

"The call was handled properly, as far as I am concerned," Rizolo said.
 Firefighters knocked down the blaze within about three minutes, but the fire caused extensive smoke damage to Ten firefighters responded, with three engines and one command vehicle.

 No injuries were reported.

 "My wife, Eleanor, joined me for my last few weeks in Mountain Home, and she began to get sick," McGovern said. "She was nauseated, so she went to see an (Army) Air Force doctor, and he couldn't find what was wrong with her. Finally a senior doctor diagnosed it as diabetes, and put her on insulin. But she continued to get sicker, so finally I got a four-day pass to take her back to South Dakota.

"We arrived in Mitchell (the town where McGovern grew up) and I took Eleanor home and then took the letter from the Air Force doctor to the doctor in town," he continued. "He read the letter and started to frown. This doctor out in Idaho is an idiot," he told me. "Your wife doesn't have diabetes, she's pregnant."
 "It's the only time before or since that I've heard one doctor call another an idiot."

 youth services providers can refer young people to the program.
 Inmate teams deliver the program. The youth and his or her partners are prematched with an inmate with a similar criminal history, ethnic background and family history.
 The youths' names are never revealed and the sessions are confidential. The program consists of two six-hour days, including one or two hours a day of individual and family sessions.
 These individual and group discussions prepare the youth for family communication later.
 The program has three phases: experiencing the sights and sounds of prison; thinking about the prison experience; and talking about the experience.

 The prison environment is used to demonstrate the realities of life behind bars, the importance of positive decision-making, individuality and constructive family relationships.
 Through this service in the prison, juveniles and parents are motivated to do what is necessary to stay out of prison. The program is designed to get families to work together on their problems through open communication.
 Family discussions focus on bringing families together around sensitive issues, releasing and clarifying feelings, family support, respecting each other's ideas, empowerment and constructive parenting, and developing self-help statements.

 Along with an Idaho version of the Colorado program, Cooper wants to set up a victim-offender mediation program.
 The victim of a crime and offender get to meet face-to-face to discuss what happened and the effect the crime had on the victim.
 The offender can see what he or she did to another person, and gets to say what needs to be done to make the situation right again.
 The goal of the meeting is to put a face to the crime, and make it immediate and human. Both the victim and the offender get to see the other person as human.

The letter

Prosecutor Mike Greer of Lata County, Wyo., told The Times-News he believes Robinson is lying about his innocence to Filer officials.
 Greer said Robinson faxed a letter to the district office on March 7 portraying three members of the local teachers' union as congratulating the rank-and-file for preventing Robinson's close friend from becoming district superintendent.
 The letter, sent during a politically tumultuous period for the Evanston School District, was faxed to the local newspaper, city hall and county library, Robinson was under tremendous political pressure to bring charges against Robinson.
 Greer said Robinson committed the crime - and he had a motive.
 "It was extremely clear that first of all the fax that had been sent out had in fact come from the fax machine in his office," Greer said.
 Robinson had the opportunity to make up the letter, Greer said. At least one signature on the letter matched a signature on a document in one union member's personnel file - and Robinson had access to the files.
 The plea bargain, arranged by Greer and Robinson's attorneys, would essentially protect his record because he was a first-time offender, Greer said.
 Some members of the Evanston Education Association want to press criminal charges against Robinson. Nothing has been filed in court yet. Greer said his office could press perjury charges if Robinson gives an account on the witness stand similar to what he told Filer officials.
 "People who talked to me about him told me he was a great principal and a great guy to work with and so on, but I don't know," Greer said. "This whole thing split the community wide open and Evanston is not a particularly large community. The amount of pain and suffering was incredible. This community was just boiling over with this, month after month after month."
 In an affidavit, Robinson said he sent out the bogus letter, Greer added.
 "Nobody twisted his arm and the evidence shows him squarely guilty," Greer said. "That disturbs me and I think that's what the district should be disturbed about, not

Differing accounts

Filer superintendent Foushahrens called The Times-News this week to head off rumors about Robinson's charges and to express support for the plea bargain.
 Foushahrens said he never knew about Robinson's case until he received an envelope, sent anonymously, containing an article about Robinson's charges that appeared in a Wyoming newspaper.
 Foushahrens then said he called the prosecutor who leveled charges against Robinson. He said he learned that Greer, the prosecutor, was under tremendous political pressure to bring charges against Robinson.
 Foushahrens said Greer also characterized the case as "a closed issue" and that people "still held him in high esteem in the community and had a lot of respect for what he had done" as an elementary school principal.
 Greer declined to say whether he discussed Robinson's case with anyone.
 Robinson, 53, became Filer Elementary School principal five months ago after retiring early from the Evanston School District, partly over the flap.
 Since that time, employees say, he is a breath of fresh air in a school that had been bogged down in misaligned curriculums, frustrated employees and lack of leadership.
 "You can't imagine the difference he has brought to the community," said Jill Hudson, secretary at Filer Elementary School. "It's such a difference. He's very involved ... and making sure that education is most important."
 Robinson said he was neck-deep in a battle over budget cuts in the Evanston district when people started investigating him over the letter.
 Robinson said the courts never proved the letter was sent from his office fax machine - and the letter could have come from another machine in the district building.
 Robinson had created controversy before. He once sent a letter supporting his friend Doug McCormick in his bid for superintendent. The letter said the application process might influence by "the misguided religious people from other churches."
 Robinson, who is Mormon, said he only meant to say that religious affiliations shouldn't get in the way of smart choices.

But when Robinson interviewed for the principal's job, he didn't tell the officials or the district's screening committee about pending charges in Wyoming.
 Upon the advice of his lawyer, Robinson said he would confuse Filer officials to explain his innocence. Because of the plea bargain, the charge wouldn't be on his record anyway.
 "It's so complicated," Robinson said. "It's difficult enough to get a job ... I did say my most negative quality is that I tend to be opinionated and outspoken and that is not always a positive quality."
 The Wyoming Professional Teaching Standards Board is investigating whether to revoke or suspend Robinson's teaching credentials, director Linda Stowers said. The board is expected to discuss the issue in December; and often issues written reprimands in such cases.
 Meanwhile, Idaho and Filer officials didn't know Robinson was charged with anything until the Wyoming newspaper crossed Foushahrens' desk.
 "We had ringing endorsements," said Filer School Board Chairman Dave Ramseyer. "So far, that has played out true. He's an excellent administrator."
 Ramseyer said part of the problem could be that Filer officials are hired during the summer - when few school officials are available to provide background information.
 "We made several calls to the school district, but a case like this hadn't come to trial yet," Ramseyer said.
 Evanston School Board members couldn't be reached for comment this week, and the judge who sentenced Robinson, Thomas Mealey, refused comment.
 A teachers' union official said he couldn't comment because a civil suit could be filed against Robinson.
 But Filer Elementary School employees said they felt sorry for Robinson when he explained the charges to them this week. They said they want to him to stay.
 "It kind of is a personal matter," said Vicki Leach, a physical education teacher and special education director at the Filer Elementary School. "I don't fault him for not disclosing that, because nothing had been sent at that time."
 "You have to know the dynamics and makeup of a community and we can only be in Filer and hope to understand," Leach said.

Parma dethrones Glens Ferry

2-time state champ falls, 26-6

By Kevin Miller
Times-News writer

POCAELLO - In the classroom, Glens Ferry is still the champion, but on the football field Parma is the new king.

The Pilots defended their academic state championship, but those smarts didn't help them hold on to the football crown they have owned the past two years. The Panthers controlled the ball, the line of scrimmage and the game on Friday, winning their first football state championship, 26-6.

"Up front, they just dominated us all game," Glens Ferry quarterback Shane Allen said. "We couldn't do anything up front, offensively or defensively."

Parma's John Sexton rushed for 140 yards and reached the end zone three times in the first half.

Glens Ferry was poised for a comeback in the second half, taking their opening possession down to the Panther 1-yard line. But on 4th-and-goal at the 1, Cory Mills was cut down at the line of scrimmage.

Parma marched back, driving 99 yards on 14 plays in a clock-killing series. Von Sitts caught Tony Haddock's only pass of the game for a 16-yard touchdown, making the score 26-0 for the Panthers.

The two-time defending state champion Pilots moved the ball for 332 total yards offensively, but turned the ball over three times inside the Panther red zone.

Tony Haddock of Parma gets fired up after a second-half sack of Glens Ferry quarterback Shane Allen.

Before Friday, the last time Glens Ferry lost was in the 1993 state finals to Fruitland. Since then, the Pilots had won 34 straight games, including consecutive state titles.

"We just didn't know if we underestimated them or what. We just picked the wrong game to come out without our heads on straight," Allen said.

"We felt like we were ready to play," said Pilot coach Bill Bruck. "I don't think there's any explanation for it, other than they out-executed us. We couldn't get in the end zone and we couldn't stop them from getting into the end zone."

That was evident from the start. Parma took the opening kick-off and drove 73 yards on 11 plays, all on the ground. Four different running backs carried the ball during the drive, which ended with a 16-yard scoring run by Sexton.

As easy as the Panther's first offensive possession was, Glens Ferry's was proportionately poor.

In a drive consuming just 50 seconds, the Pilots gained two yards and missed two passes.

Parma showed no sympathy for Glens Ferry's offensive woes, scoring again on a Sexton run from 3-yards out.

The Pilots moved the ball on their following possession. Riding the strong legs of Mills, Glens Ferry drove down to the Parma 8-yard line. Mills carried seven times for 39 yards to get the Pilots into scoring position.

On 2nd-and-goal from the 8, Allen looked for Kurt Hougland in the end zone. The pass was underthrown, though, and Nick Sarich intercepted the ball to turn back Glens Ferry's best drive of the half.

The Pilots didn't get that close to the end zone until the second half when Mills was tackled at the goal line.

Glens Ferry finally scored with no time left in the game. Allen's desperation pass bounced off the hands

Broadway paces CSI's 69-46 victory

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - The College of Southern Idaho unleashed its inside game Friday night, punishing Pasadena City College, 69-46, to remain unbeaten. The victory pits CSI (5-0) against Eastern Wyoming (5-2) in a battle of K&T Steel Tournament unbeaten teams tonight at 8 p.m. The Lancers pulled away late from Napa Valley Community College for a 69-57 victory. Napa and Pasadena will meet at 6 p.m. tonight.

Travon Broadway, playing his second game for CSI, ignited the CSI offense

Friday, scoring the first 10 Eagle points of the second half. The 63 sophomore transfer from San Jacinto, Texas, repeatedly cut to the heart of Pasadena's six CSI receivers during the second half, drawing 21 fouls from the visitors while committing just seven.

"We were trying to hammer the ball inside," CSI coach Jim Thrash said. "And Tray produced once he got the ball in there."

So Broadway kept taking the ball to the hoop—and to the free-throw line. After scoring six points—all from the field—in the first half, Broadway hit 12 of 17 from the charity stripe in the second. He led all scorers with 22.

After being whistled for nine fouls in the first half to Pasadena's six, CSI reversed that in the second half, drawing 21 fouls from the visitors while committing just seven.

"We were trying to hammer the ball inside," CSI coach Jim Thrash said. "And Tray produced once he got the ball in there."

Golden Eagles' coach feels the heat at tourney luncheon

Let's just think the mantle of coaching men's basketball at the College of Southern Idaho is light, consider this:

The K&T Steel Tournament, which finishes tonight at the CSI gym, is in its 19th year—the longest-running junior-college tournament in the nation except for the nationals. During that span, the Golden Eagles have lost just one game in the K&T.

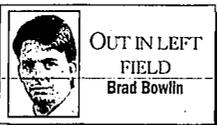

Tournament founder and steel company owner Bill Koch, Sr., pointed that out to first-year CSI coach Jim Thrash at Friday's luncheon for Eagle boosters, media and tournament coaches.

"And I don't think I even remember that coach's name," Koch said, drawing laughter from the crowd.

"Thrash is the only one of the four coaches at this year's tourney who hasn't been here before. He laughed at Koch's comment along with the rest of us, but made it clear later that he gets the message.

A coach's job, especially at the junior college level, is to help his players make the transition from boys to men, Thrash said.

"Basketball is really a pretty small part of their life," Thrash said. Few junior players go on to major college programs, and fewer still to the NBA or a lesser pro league. (Even in the storied annals of CSI basketball, only a handful of players have made it to the big time.) So, Thrash said, teaching character and other things less tangible than numbers on a scoreboard are the primary goal for him and his staff.

"Along the way, I understand that here at CSI, you also have to win games," Thrash said, smiling. "That is no secret."

CSI has never suffered a losing season, and Thrash doesn't figure to break that string. No Eagle team has ever gone unbeaten, however, and his wife isn't looking forward to that first loss. Thrash said he and wife, Denise, have been pleased with the service they have received from workmen working on their new home.

But Denise wanted to know: "Is this going to continue after you lose a game?"

While the College of Southern Idaho recruits athletes from across the country and beyond, the Eagles' competitors from California - Napa Valley and Pasadena City College - are limited to regions established by the state. To draw high school players from outside those regions, the college must be contacted by the athletes first. So Napa Valley actively recruits from just five nearby high schools, and Pasadena City College from nine.

The K&T Steel tournament has a decidedly rural flavor, with Eastern Wyoming (from Torrington - "almost the middle of nowhere," according to coach Bob Davis), having the smallest enrollment - about 400. Napa Valley, from California's wine country, is next with 1,500 full-time students. CSI recorded 4,469 this semester, although many of those are part-time students. Pasadena, a picturesque city north of Los Angeles best known for the Tournament of Roses parade and the Rose Bowl, boasts 20,000 students.

Pasadena coach George Terzian is whistling UCLA and ESPN for interference in his team's opening-round loss to Eastern Wyoming.

The players had a 3 a.m. wake-up call Thursday morning in order to make it to Twin Falls in time for the game. Many didn't get to bed until 1 a.m., however, because they stayed up watching the fifth-ranked Bruins lose to Tulsa in overtime.

"We were in slow motion," Terzian said.

Pasadena assistant coach Larry Harter said he was amazed at the attendance (1,295) for Thursday's games.

"This is like Hoosierland," the Indiana native said. "This is big time."

Sonics win 10th straight Men's giant slalom postponed by rain

BOSTON (AP) — The Seattle Sonics have won 10 straight games but knew they can't play tonight. They didn't have to Friday night against the injury-plagued Boston Celtics.

Shawn Kemp and Gary Payton scored 22 points each and the Sonics led by at least nine throughout the last 24 quarters of their third longest winning streak in club history.

"We're not fazed yet," Seattle coach George Karl said. "We still have a few weeks from playing our best basketball we can play."

Boston, which had four substitutes in uniform and four players in street clothes all sitting on the bench, lost its 28th straight game.

before the Sonics took control. Seattle made 15 shots in the second quarter, just 12 fewer than Boston sank for the entire game. The Sonics hit 52 percent of their shots, while the Celtics made only 32.5 percent.

"It was absolutely ridiculous that they got so many shots in the second quarter," Celtics coach M.L. Carr said.

Boston fell to 2-8, with seven of the losses by at least 10 points. The Celtics have scored more than 100 points just three times all season.

"Every game is hard. You can't change your approach to a game because you are playing a certain team," Kemp said. "I thought the first quarter was even, and we took control in the second quarter with better defense."

The Celtics, who trailed 62-45 at halftime, pulled a 60-71 behind the Sonics' lead in the third quarter with a 7-0 run to ahead 87-71. Seattle led by at least 16 points the rest of the way.

Boston has been routed in its last three games, losing by 14 and 25 points. Seattle has scored 21 points in Seattle, Rick Fox scored 21 points and Todd Day had 17.

Bullets 88, 76ers 76

LANOVER, Md. — Jovan Howard had 18 points and 10 rebounds, and the Washington Bullets limited Philadelphia to 25 percent shooting and forced 26 turnovers.

Chris Webber and Rod Strickland had 13 points each for the Bullets, who never trailed in winning for only the third time in eight games. Washington closed the first half with a 100 run to up 48-35, then began the third quarter with a 10-2 run to increase the margin to 19.

Bonilla

Continued from B5 "He's a father figure for myself," Bonilla said Friday after agreeing to a $23.3 million, four-year contract. "He taught me a lot about the game."

Leyland, who was in Pittsburgh on Friday preparing for his move to Florida, said he always appreciated Bonilla's work ethic during their six seasons in Pittsburgh.

"It's great to be reunited with Bobby," he said. "He and I have always had a great relationship." Bonilla, who turns 34 in February, fills several of the Marlins' needs. He's a switch-hitter who will bat behind Gary Sheffield, whose 142 walks last season were second in the NL.

And Bonilla is coming off his best season since 1990: .287 with 28 homers and 116 RBIs for the Baltimore Orioles.

"We had a problem with people pitching around Sheffield," Marlins general manager Dave Dombrowski said. "Now, they'll be pitching to Bobby B."

The Marlins also wanted a third baseman and either a left fielder or a first baseman. Bonilla can play all three positions, though Dombrowski said he will most likely stick to third base.

"As long as I'm not DH'ing I don't have a problem," Bonilla said, joking. After starting last season as the Orioles' DH, the career 284-hitter slumped until he was moved to right field full-time.

Dombrowski said Florida was pleased with the financial terms of Bonilla's contract. The team recent warm temperatures meant that the precipitation fell as rain rather than snow, which organizers could have handled. The morning temperature was in the 40s. The rest of the four-acre

America's Opening program is to continue on schedule. A women's slalom and a reigning World Cup slalom champion, Eder of Austria, is scheduled Saturday, with a men's slalom on Sunday.

Woods gets it together; Klein leads LPGA

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — Overcoming gusty winds and driving rain, Tiger Woods shot a par 72 Friday to almost certainly make the cut for the final two rounds of the Australian Open.

"I've always been creative and you need to be creative today," said Woods, the three-time U.S. Amateur champion who won two late-season PGA Tour events. You got to play some shots you don't play every day.

"It was brutal out there. It was a tough day, but it was a tough day for all of us. I wanted to shoot under par, but given the conditions I had to play 72. My putting hasn't been good, but my iron has been bad and my line has been bad."

Woods, who opened the tournament with a 7-over 79, was nine strokes behind clubhouse leader Rolf Muntz of the Netherlands on a day when 38 players, including leader Greg Norman, didn't finish because of the rain.

Woods, making his first pro appearance in the United States Open title, was even par through 16 holes and Sunday for the tournament when rain halted play for the third and final time. He had a one-stroke lead over Sweden's Kias Eriksson, who completed 15 holes.

Muntz, who had three top-10 finishes this year on the PGA European Tour, shot a 71 for a 2-under 142 total.

Pro golf

"We had a lot of weather like this in Hawaii, but it was still difficult," Muntz said.

LPGA Tour Champion LPGA VEGAS — Emilee Klein can't keep up with Karrie Webb and Laura Davies off the tee. After two rounds of the LPGA Tour Championship, however, she's ahead of them on the scoreboard.

The steady Klein, who has yet to make a bogey in two days, shot a 4-under 68 in Sunday's final round to take a one-shot lead over Juli Inkster midway through the season-ending $700,000 tournament.

Two shots back were Webb and Davies, a pair of long hitters who are battling not only for the season money title, but the chance to become the first LPGA golfer to win $1 million in a single season on the tour.

UP FOR GRABS

Parma's Nick Sanchez intercepts the ball Friday against Glenns Ferry's Kurt Hoagland in the end zone to rob the Pilots of a scoring opportunity.

VALLEY 34, HAGERMAN 29

Game summary: The host Hagerman Pirates were victimized by poor shooting all night long while Valley played a more patient ball control game to claim the victory.

Senior center Tanya Romer lead the Viking attack with 11 points and 14 rebounds. Two other seniors, Kaysee Bruning and Katie Erickson, added 16 points and some timely rebounds to bring Valley's record to 2-1 on the year.

Hagerman converted only 11 of 51 field goal attempts, while Valley hit 14 of 25 shots.

The Vikings took an early 10-4 first quarter lead behind the scoring of Romer, who had 6 points and 3 rebounds. The Vikings enjoyed its biggest lead at 24-13 in the third quarter.

Player of the game: Romer pulled down several key rebounds in the fourth quarter when Hagerman mounted a drive to come within five points on three occasions. Romer also converted two key free throws down the stretch to ice the victory.

Turning point: Hagerman's inability to find the basket started from the opening tipoff. The Pirates were successful on only 5-of-23 first half shots. Hagerman successfully attempted to full-court press in the second quarter and the start of the third quarter, but couldn't convert many of the turnovers. Coach quote: Valley coach Brian Hardy called a time out late in the fourth quarter after Hagerman started its last run. "We had to settle our girls down," he said. "It apparently worked." After turning the ball over three straight times down the court, we had to go back to looking for good shots."

Game notes: Despite the poor shooting performance by Hagerman, the Pirates never let up. Trailing by as much as 11 points in the third quarter, Hagerman came back several times to draw within 5 points. Pirate center Renae Coleman led all scorers with 12 points, while teammates Jelinda Knight and Camille Karrels combined for 12 rebounds. Hagerman debuted its new scoreboard but a program malfunction with two minutes remaining stopped play for 15 minutes until the referees decided to continue play with a stop watch.

CSI women win in 1st round of T-Bird Invite

The Times-News

CASPER, Wyo. — Things didn't start well Friday for the CSI Golden Eagle women's basketball team against Treasure Valley. They trailed 8-0 in the opening minutes of the game and had already lost a player to injury. Still, the Eagles rallied back to lead at halftime and opened up that lead throughout the second half to win in the first round of the T-Bird Invitational, 75-58. Kimberly native Tracy Arnesa went down early in the first half with a knee injury, the extent of which was not immediately known. The Eagles are nine members strong, until LaWanda Johnson and Robinson return from the national volleyball championships in Miami, but all who played on Friday's contest put one on the board. "We're just trying to keep every-one healthy and putting fresh players in, and everyone is contributing," CSI coach Joel Bate said.

The Eagles faced a sharpshoot-ing Treasure Valley offense in the first half but emerged with a 38-33 lead at the break.

"They were hot," Bate said. "They must have shot the ball 75 percent in the first half. Then we were able to turn up the pressure in the second half."

Casy Murdock led the Golden Eagles with 14 points. Courtnie Stoor finished with 11 and Charlotte Normoyle 10.

CSI faces Casper today at 6 p.m. Casper defeated Salt Lake City in Friday's other contest, 79-68.

"We'll see how good we are (Saturday) night," Bate said. "That's a good team we're going to play."

Francis Junger and Floyd Farrow also contributed inside, and Thrash credited the perimeter players with making good passes.

Pasadena's last lead of the ball game was at 16-15 with 7:37 left in the opening half. Rich Brown's follow shot gave the Eagles the lead for good, although CSI led by just three at halftime.

Jared Frey's steal and dunk got Pasadena with 28-27 to open the second half. On the next CSI possession, however, the big part of the Lancer offense went to the bench when 6-4, 190-pound freshman post Marcus Traylor sat down with four fouls.

Broadway took over after that. His hanging jump-shot attempt drew the fifth Pasadena team foul of the half with less than three minutes gone by.

Broadway made seven consecutive free throws, then converted a three-point play on a pretty drive down the left side of the lane with 15:03 remaining.

That gave CSI its first 10-point margin of the game at 38-28. Pasadena battled back from long range, however.

Bradley Lamar nailed a 3-point-er, then converted two free throws after being fouled on the fast break.

After Farrow following his own miss for CSI, Frey hit from 30 feet land, narrowing the gap to 40-36.

The CSI lead grew steadily thereafter Broadway stopped the charge with an under-the-rim throw. Farrow tossed in a shot crossing the key, and Broadway fed Junger for an easy bucket underneath.

After that, it was a matter of CSI's defense holding its fifth straight opponent to under 50 points.

"I think they had 38 points when we went to the matchup defense," Thrash said. "They had eight points the rest of the way, so I think we did a good job."

Hansen defeats TFCA, 51-21; Middleton beats Buhl

The Times-News

BLISS — In the first game of Friday's Bliss Invitational, the Huskies used strong defense to upend Twin Falls' Christian Academy, 51-21.

"Our girls moved their feet well, and played a good half-court defense," Husky coach Brent Bjorn said.

TFCA will meet Bliss in the consolation game today at 6 p.m., with Hansen and Castletford playing for the title afterward.

BUHL — The Vikings' second-half attack proved too much for the hometown Indians Friday, as Middleton outscored their hosts 33-43 in the decisive final two quarters.

Pocatello (AP) — Senior Nick Whitworth rushed for 143 yards and three touchdowns Friday to lead Mackay to a 40-14 victory over Nampa Christian for the Idaho A-4 high school football championship.

Whitworth also caught three passes for 41 yards, sacked the Vikings quarterback three times for losses of 33 yards and intercepted a pass in the title game at Idaho State University's Holt Arena.

He finished Mackay's 10-0 season with 1,809 yards rushing and 29 touchdowns.

The Miners also got plenty of help Friday from Whitworth's younger brother Josh, a sophomore quarterback. He completed 11 of 16

Iowa State back Davis shoots for milestone

MANHATTAN, Kan. (AP) — Iowa State's Troy Davis needs only 40 yards to reach 2,000 in the Cyclones' season finale Saturday at 14th-ranked Kansas State.

Davis reached the milestone last season, but he had a much heavier burden then: He needed 170 yards going into the final game.

Davis is trying to become the first back in college history to rush for 2,000 yards in consecutive seasons.

Mackay hammers its way to A-4 title season at 7-5, the only score came in the second quarter when Spencer Sautter kicked a 22-yard field goal.

Rice, a senior, had 92 yards rushing on 15 carries and Laki Ahl added 77 yards including touchdowns of 1 and 5 yards.

Lewiston, undefeated at 12-0, intercepted Bonneville quarterback Tony Jackson three times and held the Bees to 54 yards on the ground and 97 yards rushing.

MOSCOW — Lewiston's Brad Rice led the Cougars to a 27-0 victory over Matt Squire for another score as the Bengals won the state A-1 Division 2 football championship 37-0 over Bonneville.

BYU looks to end 3-game skid vs. Utes

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — You couldn't blame LaVell Edwards for being a bit livid when it comes to the number "34."

During a 3-point slide against arch-rival Utah, eighth-ranked Brigham Young lost 34-31 in both 1993 and 1994, and 34-17 last year.

As BYU (10-1 overall, 7-0 Western Athletic Conference) prepared for Saturday's showdown with Utah (8-2, 6-1) for the WAC's Mountain Division title, Edwards was convinced the Cougars could counter any Utes-run numerology box this time around.

"There's not a psychological thing for us with Utah winning three in a row," said the coach.

Holtz bids farewell to Golden Dome

The Associated Press

The cheers will echo on at Notre Dame, but Lou Holtz will hear them no more.

On Saturday against an over-matched opponent, Holtz says goodbye to South Bend after 11 years of chasing the greatest leg-end of the Fighting Irish.

Tenth-ranked Notre Dame entertains Rutgers, a 41-point underdog, and the most successful part of the afternoon may be whether Holtz takes a microphone to address the 59,000 fans after what should be his 100th victory at the school and his last at home.

He announced this week that he won't be back after this season, which ends in Los Angeles against Southern California next week and an expected appearance in a major bowl game New Year's Day.

Saturday's game also is the last at Notre Dame Stadium before a 22,000-seat expansion is completed. The departing coach wants that to be what people remember.

"I'm not taking a victory lap. There will be nothing mentioned about Lou Holtz or anything else," he said. "We're playing a football game. It will be the last football game in that stadium per se. That alone is the only thing that carries significance about this game. Nothing else."

Holtz's farewell under the Golden Dome is the focal point of the last big Saturday of the season, with traditional matchups galore and national rankings on the line.

At Columbus, Ohio, and Tucson, Ariz., a Rose Bowl of unbeaten hangs in the balance. No. 2 Ohio State, already assured of the Big Ten berth at Pasadena, entertains No. 21 Michigan, while No. 4 Arizona State, the Pac-10 champ, plays Arizona.

No. 3 Florida State, with a season-ending showdown against top-ranked Florida a week away, plays Maryland at Miami. No. 7 Penn State, a possible Fiesta Bowl foe for Notre Dame, is at Michigan State. No. 8 Brigham Young is at Utah and No. 9 Tennessee is home against Kentucky.

In other games involving Top 25 teams, No. 12 Washington is at Washington State. No. 13 North Carolina is at Duke. No. 14 Kansas State visits Iowa State. No. 15 Alabama hosts Auburn. No. 16 Syracuse is at Temple. No. 17 Virginia Tech hosts No. 23 West

Head football coach Fred Goetz, right, and his 0-10 Duke Blue Devils will try to avoid becoming the first ACC team to finish an 11-game season without a victory when they take on North Carolina on Saturday.

Virginia. No. 18 LSU hosts Tulane. No. 22 Clemson hosts South Carolina. No. 24 Iowa is at Minnesota, and No. 25 Miami hosts Boston College.

Florida is also, along with No. 5 Nebraska, No. 6 Colorado, No. 11 Northwestern, No. 19 Virginia and No. 20 Wyoming.

Holtz said he was quitting as Notre Dame's coach because it was "the right thing to do" and he had no desire to break Kenne Ruckins's

Notre Dame record of 105 victories. Holtz wouldn't discuss his future, but there are reports that he could be coaching the Minnesota Vikings next season.

Against Rutgers, the Fighting Irish (7-2) meet a team with only two victories this season, including a come-from-behind win over Division I-AA Villanova.

"I would be willing to bet that 99 percent of our student body or faculty or whoever probably thinks that we're going to get blown out," said Mike Stephens, the Scarlet Knights quarterback.

College football

Ohio State knows it will be back in the Rose Bowl for the first time since the 1984 season, but that has little meaning when it plays Michigan. This is always the biggest game of the year for each team, and for the second year in a row it could determine if the Buckeyes (10-4) have a shot at the national championship. Last year, the Wolverines ended second-ranked Ohio State's unbeaten season with a 31-23 victory.

Arizona State (10-0) also has national title hopes and will try to complete its first unbeaten regular season since 1975. Ten years ago, with the last previous Rose Bowl berth assured, the Sun Devils' unbeaten season ended with a 34-17 loss to the Wildcats.

Florida State's game against Maryland is a classic case of trying to stay focused on this week's game. The Seminoles (9-0) are 34-point favorites and have averaged 60 points per game against the Terrapins (5-5), who may be playing their final game under coach Mark Duffner. But coach Bobby Bowden says his team is hurting and must play its best.

"We are a beat-up team," Bowden said. "The danger of looking ahead still looms."

In other games of note:

• Troy Davis of Iowa State needs only 40 yards on the ground against Kansas State to become the first player in NCAA history to rush for 2,000 yards in consecutive seasons.

• Duke must beat North Carolina to avoid being the first Atlantic Coast Conference school to finish an 11-game season without a victory. The Blue Devils also would be just the fifth winless ACC team and the first since Maryland went 0-9 in 1957.

• Boston College tries to end a season of controversy on a winning note. The Eagles' athletic program was jared earlier this month when local prosecutors said 13 BC players admitted betting on sports events, including two who wagered against their own team. All the players were suspended and coach Dan Hennings's future at BC was left in limbo.

Steve Young returns for Niners against Redskins

The Associated Press

When San Francisco visits RFK Stadium Sunday, Steve Young will be back as the starting quarterback after missing most of two games with a concussion. And he'll be looking for Jerry Rice to burn a pass defense that has been atrociously all season.

After hanging on for a victory over NFL East rival Philadelphia last Sunday, and with two games against the Cowboys coming up, the Redskins' look at the game against the NFC West-leading 49ers as a chance to show they can win when necessary.

Broncos at Vikings

Denver takes an NFL-best 10-1 record and a seven-game winning streak into the Metrodome, where Terrell Davis hopes to get even closer to the team single-season rushing record. But the Vikings, 6-5 after a 4-9 start, must also contain John Elway, having one of his finest seasons.

Chargers at Chiefs

Both teams are hurting as they chase Denver in the AFC West. The Chiefs (8-3) are seeking revenge for a 22-19 loss in the team's first game this year. The Chargers (6-5) have lost tight end Alfred Pupunui and center Courtney Lawl for the season.

Colts at Patriots

The Patriots (7-4), who have bounced back all year, are coming off a 34-8 whipping by Denver and must win to stay close to Buffalo in the AFC East. The Colts, who lost to the Pats in their first meeting, can climb to 7-5 and the New England with a victory.

Jets at Bills

Last week's 34-29 loss to the Colts was New York's 10th of the season and fourth straight by five points or less. Buffalo quarterback Jim Kelly has four TDs and only three interceptions over the past four games and will face the third-worst team in the league against the pass.

Cowboys at Giants

For charging Dallas, this is a "trap" game. The Giants are 4-7 and slumping, but have proven tough against the Cowboys in their second meetings of the season. Dallas won their first game 27-0, holding New York to 93 yards total offense.

Packers at Rams

Two straight losses have left the Packers tied for the best record in the NFC and vulnerable on offense. They have averaged just 16 points the past four games, and Brett Favro, while still the NFL's leading passer, has struggled. This week, they added former Pro Bowl receiver Andre Rison, hoping for an immediate impact.

Eagles at Cardinals

Philadelphia is 7-4 with two straight losses after a big victory over Dallas. Arizona, meanwhile, has moved to 5-6 behind veteran quarterback Boomer Esiason and a victory would be his third in a row.

Lions at Bears

Barry Sanders is only 18 yards away from an NFL-record eighth straight 1,000-yard rushing season for the Lions (5-6). He'll try to get it against a Chicago defense that has yielded only 13.5 points per game the past four weeks. Unfortunately for the Bears (4-7), their offense has averaged a point less than that over the same span.

Panthers at Oilers

Houston (6-5) has lost three games by a total of five points, but it doesn't get easier against Carolina. The Panthers (7-4), looking for a playoff spot in only their second season, have allowed an NFL-low 43 second-half points.

Falcons at Bengals

Both coaches, Bruce Coslet of the Bengals (4-7) and June Jones of the Falcons (2-9), are uncertain returnees next season, although Cincinnati is 3-1 since Coslet replaced Dave Shula. Atlanta has lost nine in a row on the road.

Jaguars at Ravens

Whether in Cleveland or Baltimore, the expansion Jaguars (4-7) never have lost to the franchise that is now the Ravens. Two weeks ago, they rallied for a 30-27 victory after trailing by 11 with 6:12 minutes to play.

Saints at Bucs

What's this? A winning streak in Tampa? The Buccaneers (3-8) have won two in a row, the first signs of a turnaround under coach Tony Dungy. The Saints (2-9) have a four-game losing streak, including all three under new coach Rick Venturi.

Raiders at Seahawks

Rich Mize, benched by coach Dennis Erickson, will be back, replacing the injured John Friesz at quarterback for the Seahawks (5-6). Oakland (4-7) has lost three straight but is 10-2 against Seattle this decade.

Sampras beats Kafelnikov to reach ATP semifinals

HANOVER, Germany (AP) — It was a day for celebrations at the ATP Tour World Championship Friday.

Top-ranked Pete Sampras reached the semifinals and gained his 500th career singles victory, beating Yevgeny Kafelnikov 6-4, 6-4.

Boris Becker, the defending champion, celebrated his 29th birthday, but the occasion turned a bit sour when Becker lost 5-3, 7-6 (7-1) to Thomas Enqvist. Becker already was assured of a place in the semifinals.

The $3.3 million event brings together the top eight players in the world, with the two top finishers from each four-man group advancing to the semifinals.

In Saturday's semifinals, Sampras will face Goran Ivanisevic, ranked No. 4 in the world.

Becker will meet Wimbledon champion Richard Krajicek, who finished with two straight aces in beating Thomas Muster 7-6 (7-4), 6-7 (5-7), 6-3. Krajicek had 23 aces in the match.

Sampras recovered quickly from his loss to Becker on Thursday.

Yevgeny Kafelnikov

Experienced the agony of defeat

"It's not easy to play after losing such a tough match like yesterday," Sampras said. "It was mentally draining. But I got up, put Boris behind me and I got off to a great start in today's match."

"The loss yesterday was obviously disappointing. But today ...

I thought I played very well. "In order to win here, you need to beat four, five guys in the top eight in the world. It would have been nice to have a day to rest."

The U.S. Open champion is now fourth among active players in victories. Becker has 664, Mats Wilander 571 and Muster 539.

Stefan Edberg has 805, but he is retiring at the end of the year. Sampras has won a tour-high seven tournaments this season, an honor he shares with Muster, and has lost only 11 matches. He will finish the year as No. 1 for the fourth successive season. The last player to accomplish that was John McEnroe, ending in 1984.

Sampras, like Becker seeking a record third title, broke Kafelnikov in the first game. That edge helped him cruise through the first set, although he had to save three break points in the sixth game.

The second followed a similar pattern, with Sampras gaining a break for a 2-1 lead. But Kafelnikov hit a superb backhand winner to break back and even at 4-4.

"The Russian's rally didn't last long. He saved four break points in the next game, but hit a backhand lode to drop his serve."

Serving for the match, Sampras double-faulted to face two break points. A service winner and an ace got him out of trouble, a smash gave him match point and Sampras converted it with a soft, slice volley.

"It was close to going to a tiebreak, but I don't think I was close to losing it," he said. "I wanted to win in straight sets."

"We were playing some long points and I was feeling it a little." Kafelnikov, the French Open champion who has risen to No. 3 in the world, said Sampras won all the big points.

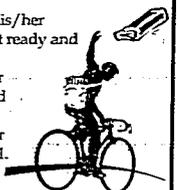

"I feel I played a great match, but he is the No. 1 and he proved it at crucial moments," he said.

Fired pastors demanding financial parachutes

When a congregation becomes dissatisfied with its pastor, can the members vote to dismiss their spiritual mentor without severance pay?

You bet they can, and it has happened often enough in the past decade that some clergy are fighting back. In fact, the firing of pastors has become an epidemic in the United States among some Protestant denominations. Surveys of clergy groups show that 30 percent to 40 percent say they have been given their walking papers sometime during their career.

FAITH TODAY
Clark Morphet

The result is a fractured congregation, a demoralized member of the clergy and a power group within the church that believes it can run over anybody without a reason.

These mean-spirited church conflicts usually begin with a small group within the congregation complaining among themselves about the pastor; and then moving the discussion into ever-widening circles. They begin with small complaints, such as preaching skills or a botched program, and then escalate the conflict by raising dozens of complaints.

The pastor is helpless in this kind of maelstrom. To make a defense from the pulpit and ask for support would be career suicide.

Meeting with the grippers might be possible if they are reasonable people. But by the time the conflict arrives at the pastor's doorstep, the power group is usually stirred into a righteous frenzy and acting like crusaders advancing on a holy task.

So the pastor hopes the conflict will pass over like a dark cloud on a rainy day. Perhaps the bishop or conference executive is notified, but there isn't much he or she can do. The minister can turn to prestigious places for concrete help.

And once the decision has been made, clergy walk out of the congregation with a hymnal in one hand and an empty billfold in the other. That's why ministers are now more aware of how to leave the area. They have families to support and, often, huge debts to pay off after years of seminary education.

And they have watched too many of their neighboring clergy trying to slog through the repair work to be comfortable when the arrows of discontent begin to fly in their own congregation.

Therefore, increasingly when a conflict erupts, clergy are retaining attorneys who will not only slow down the process but force the congregation to think twice about the consequences of firing the pastor.

What exactly does a lawyer do for a clergy client?

He or she might write a letter to the congregational president informing the church council that the Rev. Glum is now a client and all communication should proceed through the attorney's office.

An attorney might also ask for a schedule of meetings that pertain to the conflict. The attorney then can drop in unannounced and offer some protection for the client.

Finally, an attorney might suggest that the Rev. Glum is not leaving that church without a substantial severance package.

This is all necessary because ministers are smart people who have set out in life to hurt no one and to help as many people as is humanly possible. Fighting is not their strength. Further, as these fights come to climax, the pastor is sure to disintegrate that reasonable thinking is simply not possible.

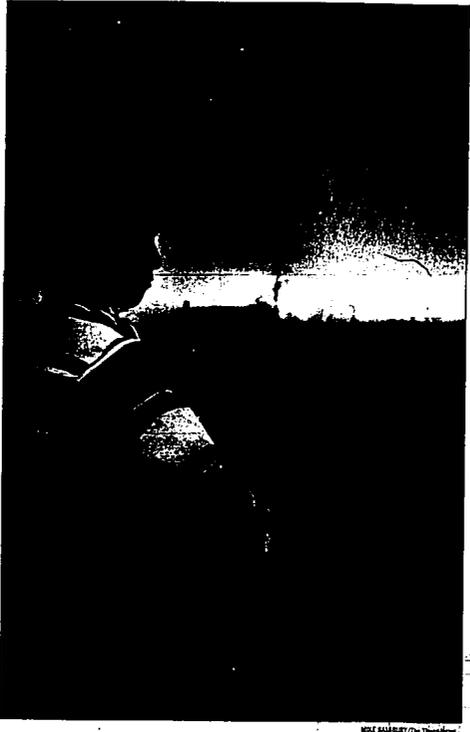

So, congregational leaders, let me warn you: The days are over when you could dismiss a pastor without offering a severance package. If you want to kick your minister out of your church's pulpit, it's going to cost you dearly.

I've heard of severance packages as high as $300,000 and as low as six months' pay. Some of these discontented congregations also are being forced to continue fringe benefits until the fired pastor finds another parish.

You may not think that's a just situation. But any pastor who has ever been dismissed will see the value of the package that it has fiscally come to this: Bloodthirsty congregations have to pay.

Carrying a song in his heart...

Jerome teenager Andrew Wiersma, who started his gospel singing career in a local church, recently returned from auditions in Nashville.

Jerome's 15-year-old gospel singer delivers joyous message

By H.R. Welzel
Times-News correspondent

JEROME - A tiny 4-year-old boy in a pinstripe suit stood bravely in front of an audience and enchanted the listeners with a Hank Williams song.

This began the singing career of Andrew Wiersma, Jerome's 15-year-old country gospel musician.

The young man returned last week from Nashville, where, by special invitation, he auditioned for Capital and Sony recording representatives.

"I bought a Hank Williams tape at a yard sale years ago, stuck it in the car tape recorder as we drove to Twin Falls and Andy just loved it," said Estelle Wiersma, Andrew's mother.

"He memorized the whole song! I couldn't believe a little boy like that could do it. He had such a big voice even then."

She continued, "From then on, the Lord really touched him. He has something to share locally and, who knows, maybe nationally."

The young singer has spread his message of God's joy and love by using his singing talents at church worship services, graduations, pageants, fairs and other community events.

"I go wherever I'm asked," he said. "I never change my singing."

Recently, Andy was the guest musician at the Flying Eagles Christian Coffee House in Jerome, where he presided a one-hour concert of country gospel music.

The Wiersma family attend the Reformed Church of Twin Falls, where Andy often sings solos.

"I got into gospel singing at church when I was about 8 years old," he said.

"I don't know where the Lord will lead Andy next," his mother added.

"Each step is a chance for him to grow in what he's doing for God. Maybe the Lord will bring the right people together and he can form a band."

Until that happens, the Jerome High School student uses a tape for background music as he sings.

The boy has been invited to audition in Nashville several times. He has been heard by major recording labels, such as SKB Productions, an affiliate of 21st Century Records. He has also auditioned for Emma, Grandillo of Capital Records.

Estelle Wiersma said Grandillo told the family that Andy looks very good and has good pitch, control and an easiness.

Tammy Brown, a representative from Sony Records said, "You're definitely country. You have passion. Keep going for it."

The young singer is scheduled to return to Nashville in April to make a six-song tape for the two recording companies.

"In Nashville, the younger you are the better your chances," Estelle Wiersma said. "If you are chosen, the major recording company will groom you."

Andy has gone through the voice change and now has a rich bass voice. One requirement for any song he selects is that it must have a strong message for the listeners. Then, he injects his own flavor into each song.

Andy said he would like to help other young people learn what they can do with music.

"There are a lot of kids out there with a lot of talent, but they don't know how to use it," he said. "If I ever I sing about God can touch just one or two people, it will be worth it."

Lloyd Wiersma, Andy's father, said, "I'm pretty proud of that kid. He's always loved music. I remember when he was real little, he'd sit between us in the car and really sing to us in his little big voice."

Carter tries to keep faith, not politics, in forefront

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Before Bill Clinton and Ronald Reagan — presidents whose talk of faith did not stop some from questioning their religious commitment — there was Jimmy Carter.

An openly born-again Christian, Carter started the revival of evangelical interest in politics.

Unlike Clinton and Reagan, history did not accord him a second term of president. The Iran hostage crisis — and Carter's unpopular decision not to punish the revolutionary new government and thereby risk the lives of the captured diplomats — blunted his re-election effort.

But Carter remained at peace before God with his decision, an action of valuing human life he still defends, he explains in a new book discussing the intersection of faith and public life.

"I remain convinced that the wisest course for a mighty nation when confronted with a challenge like the hostage crisis is one of caution and restraint," Carter writes in "Living Faith" from Times Books.

For a person of faith, in particular, I believe that all decisions of war and peace must be made with the awareness that human life is never to be lightly sacrificed."

The book traces Carter's personal spiritual journey from boyhood to the presidency and beyond.

As a teen-ager and into young adulthood, worried that he would someday be separated from his parents, Carter said he would recognize his own doubts by ending every prayer with the words, "And God, please help me believe in the resurrection."

When he lost the Georgia governor's election in 1966 to Lester Maddox, a segregationist, Carter says he was tempted to abandon his faith, but he continued to search for God's will, finding that Jesus would be with him in times of trouble.

At this point in his life, Carter said in a recent interview, "Having faith, for me at least, is at the core of my existence."

Given the public's tolerance for scandal in politicians today, it is hard for some to grasp how badly Carter was hurt by the 1976 Playboy interview in which he admitted having lusted in his heart.

In his book, Carter said the interview caused a precipitous drop in his popularity and almost cost him the election.

Two decades later, he flashes his famous smile in an interview as he recounts how a number of famous pastors and television evangelists later denied ever having sexual thoughts in their minds or hearts, except about their wives.

But it was the Iran hostage crisis — what Carter calls the worst political experience of his life — that eventually sealed the end of his career as an elected public official.

In his book, Carter said he knew ordering military action against Iran would be the easy and popular thing to do.

And he also said he sent Iran a secret message saying the United States would respond militarily if any hostages were harmed.

But in his prayers — and he never prayed as much as he did when he was president — Carter said he would ask God for sound judgment and the ability to alleviate suffering.

He added that he never prayed for higher popularity ratings or to be re-elected.

During that time, Carter also said he would keep the memory of each hostage alive, frequently meeting with their families. In the end, the hostages were released unharmed, but not before Reagan won election.

Since then, the former Georgia peanut farmer has been busy with the Carter Center, established in 1982 to promote democracy and resolve civil strife, and with groups such as Habitat for Humanity, building houses worldwide.

In his latest book, he urges others to have a "living" faith.

Spiritual issues becoming entrenched in politics

The Associated Press

GREENSBORO, N.C. — U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms said a lot about the state of secular politics when he declared after his recent victory over Harvey Gantt: "I am about as Baptist as you can get."

Faith and values, issues which have long been discussed at religious gatherings, are becoming entrenched in mainstream politics.

"He's a preacher as well as a politician," University of North Carolina-Charlotte political scientist Ted Arrington said about Helms, the Republican who won his fifth term Nov. 5.

All the talk during the campaign about morals and values suited many delegates at last week's Baptist State Convention, who called it a sign that more voters are realizing the need for a spiritual rebirth in the nation.

"This has to be addressed," said the Rev. Phillip Davis, who made history at the 160th meeting of the state's largest religious denomination as the first black candidate to win statewide office. "Our nation as a whole is in a desperate state of affairs."

Davis, the conservative pastor of Nations Ford Baptist Church in Charlotte, won his race for first vice president over incumbent Ann Smith, a moderate.

Bernardin's successor will be in same moderate tradition

The Associated Press

CHICAGO — Will the new leader of the nation's second-largest Catholic diocese be a moderate, such as the late Cardinal Joseph Bernardin, loyal to church teachings but willing to agree that people can disagree?

Or will the pope select a conservative who holds that Catholic doctrine isn't open to debate?

The answer could indicate whether the Vatican believes the late cardinal's conciliatory, compromise-oriented leadership was progressive thinking or wrong.

"There aren't that many Bernardins around," said the Rev. Richard McElrath, a Roman Catholic priest and theology professor at Notre Dame University.

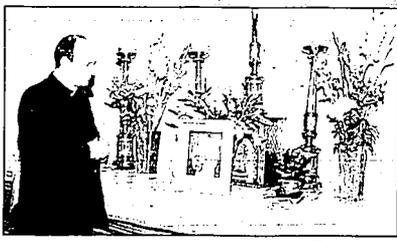

"But what Chicago needs is an appointment that won't just totally demoralize the archdiocese."

Bernardin, who died of pancreatic cancer last week, became Chicago's bishop in 1982 after the death of Cardinal John Cody, a conservative with an autocratic reputation.

Cody once closed five inner-city parochial schools without consulting the school board; he also retired 44 other pastors based on age and against some priests' wishes.

"It will be a disaster, an absolute disaster, if they appoint someone like Cardinal Cody," said the Rev. Thomas Reese, senior fellow at the Woodstock Theological Center at Georgetown University.

To replace Bernardin, the pope's representative in Washington — Archbishop Agostino Casacivillan — will consult with Illinois church officials and the National Conference of Catholic Bishops before recommending three candidates to the Vatican's Congregation for Bishops. One name will be passed on to the pope, whose final decision is not expected before the end of January.

From the start of Bernardin's tenure as leader of the 2.3 million Roman Catholics in the Chicago area, he encouraged openness and social involvement, though he never openly opposed any position taken by the pope.

For example, when the pope said girls should not be allowed to be altar attendants during Mass, Bernardin told his churches to adhere to the ban. "But he also lobbied very strongly in Rome to change that position," Reese added.

This year, Bernardin began the Catholic Common Ground Project, an effort to communicate with Catholics who disagree with church teachings on such issues as birth control, celibacy of priests and ordination of women.

Bernardin's actions weren't always received well by Catholic conservatives. Several prominent bishops argued the Common Ground Project's discussion of birth control would confuse rank-and-file Catholics.

Politics

Continued from C1 to God. Politicians realize this by addressing the issues of faith and values," said Davis, who aligned himself with conservative president Greg Mathis of Hendersonville, who won a second one-year term.

Other delegates at the convention warned of the risks involved when politics and religion become too intertwined.

"I feel overall there needs to be a separation of church and state," said Keith Laney, minister of music at Chapman Memorial Baptist Church in Charlotte.

"We don't want to mix politics and religion," said Ed McKewon, an associate pastor at Salem Baptist Church in Apex. "I feel you put your faith in action when you vote."

As it has in past elections, the conservative Christian Coalition distributed copies of its voter guides at churches across North Carolina. In Buncombe County, some 10,000 of the guides were distributed.

Founded in 1989 by religious broadcaster Pat Robertson, the Christian Coalition now claims 1.7 million members nationwide and has grown to be one of the most formidable forces in conservative politics.

Despite the group's efforts, some candidates don't want to be identified too closely with the religious right, Arrington said.

"Those on the religious right feel intensely about the policies they favor, but they also have a bad image," he said.

Large numbers of the general public have negative views about them.

Even the ultraconservative Helms treads lightly when it comes to allying himself with the religious right, Arrington said.

"He doesn't run away from it, and that's the main story," Arrington said. "But he has never fully trusted them."

While Helms proudly calls himself a conservative Baptist, he has never reached out to religious charismatics, including those who supported Robertson's failed presidential bid in 1988.

Still, exit polls conducted during the election showed four out of 10 voters that helped send Helms back to the Senate for a fifth term came from members of the religious right.

After shunning politics for many years, conservative Christians became active when the U.S. Supreme Court struck down state laws restricting abortions in 1973.

Other issues on the conservative Christian agenda include tougher laws against pornography, tax vouchers for parents who want to send their kids to private schools, and lower taxes.

China replacing Japan as top American trade headache

The Associated Press

FALLS CHURCH, Va. — What could be more American than this: Down the aisles-of Toys-'R-Us comes Karen Barnes, suburban mother of two, intent on her holiday shopping.

What could be more Chinese than this: Her shopping cart is piled high with stuffed puppy dogs, a Batman doll and the biggest catch of all, a Great Adventures Pirate Ship, the latest thing for the toddler set. And all the colorful packages bear in tiny letters these words: "Made in China."

Mrs. Barnes was astonished to hear it. "It looks like I don't have anything not made in China," she said. But she quickly added, "you've got to go for what you see on TV and what their friends have."

Across America this holiday season, shoppers will stroll past floor-to-ceiling shelves jammed with Mattel's 101

Dalmatians Basket O' Puppies, the Playmate Fun from Fisher-Price and the ever-popular Ken and Barbie dolls — all Chinese imports.

Fact is, three out of four toys sold in America are foreign-made and 60 percent of those imports come from China.

And it's not just kids' stuff. The situation is even more lopsided at the shoe store — 60 percent of all shoes sold in America come from China.

In a startling change, perhaps as early as next year, China will firmly displace Japan as the country giving America its biggest trade deficits.

The 1996 deficit with Japan was still higher through September. But in three months this year the deficit with China was higher, the first time that has happened.

The long-term change, analysts believe, will mean less White House emphasis on Japanese trade barriers and more attention focused on breaking into the huge Chinese market of 1.2 billion people.

"China will become the top priority in the president's second term," said C. Fred Bergsten, head of the Institute for International Economics. He calls China "the most difficult but most important issue facing the world economy."

When President Clinton meets Sunday in the Philippines with Chinese President Jiang Zemin, officials say trade will be a priority along with foreign policy issues such as human rights, Taiwan and nuclear proliferation.

After their meeting, the two men are expected to announce an acceleration of talks concerning China's application to become a member of the World Trade Organization.

China has been trying for more than two years to join the WTO, the General

But the United States has blocked the effort.

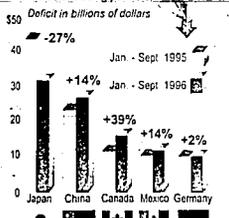

The U.S. says China has done far too little to meet WTO requirements of dismantling trade barriers. Indeed, it says those barriers that U.S. officials blame for America's poor showing in exporting to China.

Through the first nine months of this year, imports to the United States, of all goods from China were 10 percent of the same period a year ago, to $37.2 billion. During the same period, sales of American products to China were down 2.5 percent to $8.2 billion.

The difference between those two figures, the trade deficit, is $29 billion for this year, up 14 percent from last year. In contrast, the U.S.-Japan deficit was $34.1 billion through September, 27 percent lower than last year.

U.S. companies export diversity

The Associated Press

When Julie England, a quality manager for Texas Instruments, visited a plant in the Philippines two years ago, a local supervisor approached her. He'd read of a seminar she'd attended in the States and was baffled.

"He asked, 'What is sexual harassment?'" she recalled. "I could tell by the look on his face he was dumbfounded."

Welcome to the era of the melting pot work force.

After spending years working to first hire and then better utilize a more varied work force at home through affirmative action and other programs, U.S. companies and their managers such as England are setting their sights on "diversity" abroad.

They're dispatching more women and minorities overseas. They're trying to sensitize foreigners about American concerns such as sexual harassment, sexual orientation and hiring minorities.

Yet they're not exporting diversity just because it's the right thing to do. Companies that adopted such programs at home for ethical reasons have also found that diversity makes good business sense.

When gaps are bridged, diverse workers inspire more creativity in the workplace, companies have found. And with the growing global economy, U.S. firms are finding that they have more incentive than ever to get divergent employees to work together.

"That doesn't make it easy. In many countries, equal opportunity is not respected."

"We can't go in and say, 'Your culture has been doing this for 40 centuries and effective Tuesday, you're going to change,'" said Bob Hanon, a diversity consultant at Dupont Co. "It takes time and steady work to get past some of this."

Nor is the learning one-way. Americans are also trying to drop their once-precious assumptions that Yankee know best.

Beth Bull, director of finance for Texas Instruments in Asia, said that since moving to Taiwan she's had to adjust her attitudes about one of the dominant tenets of business life — meetings.

Americans readily offer suggestions during meetings, but Asian employees usually defer to higher-ups unless asked for their opinion, she said.

"If you aren't aware of that, you'll miss that diversity of thought," said Bull, who's learned during 2 1/2 years in Taipei to solicit opinions from all corners of the room.

Another companies have been wrestling with questions of workplace diversity for years, from the efficacy of affirmative action quotas to how best to use the women, minorities and others now increasingly being hired.

Most major corporations now have one, two or more people devoted to diversity work, although more remains to be done, as recent headlines about Texaco Inc. attest.

The oil company recently settled an employee discrimination case amid a furor over allegations of racism.

Even some companies without public relations fires to douse say that for now their U.S. diversity efforts remain a top priority.

Diversity dos and don'ts

Advice for companies that want to export diversity programs from Cornelius Grove, a Brooklyn, N.Y.-based consultant who specializes in multicultural training.

General: Choose modest objectives and stick to lengthy timetables. Know the local culture and recognizes its limits of tolerance for the changes you propose. Use local methods for building agreement in favor of change.

Hiring: Hiring someone who doesn't fit into an existing workplace could be disruptive. Make a big effort to pave the way for his or her acceptance by co-workers and/or superiors.

Promotions: Age and seniority often play a big role overseas. Jumping the queue can upset everyone.

Compensation and benefits: It may be better to cast such issues in group, rather than individual, terms. In less individualistic societies, employees may prefer compensation — monetary or otherwise — that promotes community or religious interests.

Eastman Kodak Co.'s overseas divisions have been studying diversity, and seminars have been held in Europe on gender issues and on attracting more varied customers.

But Kodak is most concerned with diversity programs, particularly in manufacturing, said Mike Streeter, leader of diversity initiatives.

"We would have more credibility overseas if we demonstrate that we are actually making a difference," he said.

Nonetheless, underscoring Kodak's interest, Streeter was among 60 managers and executives who recently crowded into a seminar to hear a consultant's cautions on exporting diversity.

The seminar, also attended by executives from The Boeing Co., GTE Corp., and Merrill Lynch & Co., was one of the most popular at a Washington, D.C. conference on workplace diversity.

Cornelius Grove, the consultant, divided the audience into four parts and asked each group to pretend that they worked in a Japanese, German, Mexican or British subsidiary and had been given a mandate from America to accept U.S.-style diversity programs. In a nutshell, they learned what not to do.

First, don't export diversity for ethical reasons, said Grove. Resistance to U.S. diversity efforts can be strong, and in some countries background can mean more than achievement.

Go slow and know the other culture well, Grove also warned. "Don't just march in with those ideas that sound good in New Jersey," he said.

Julie England, who promotes women's advancements globally for Texas Instruments, notes that her diversity work often takes place informally. She said she asks if more women or minorities can be included on her overseas teams, and adds, "my presence alone is sending a diversity message."

sumers have reported illness, the company said Friday. The following products are being removed from shelves:

Pepperidge Farm Fat Free Pretzel Mix in 9.25 oz. boxes and 1.5 oz. vending packages marked Feb. 15, 1997.

Pepperidge Farm Seasoned Snack Mix in 9.25 oz. boxes marked Feb. 15, 1997.

Programs fall short in combating corporate racism

NEW YORK (AP) — After consultant Robert Hayles made a recent presentation to a Midwest corporation, an audience member approached him. "You're pretty smart for a black person," the participant said.

Hayles was speaking about diversity in the work force. From the degrading comments Hayles says he routinely hears to a "glass ceiling" keeping minorities below management, blacks and other minorities face daily debasement in the workplace — even as their numbers in companies grow.

To many in corporate America, the debate at Texaco Inc. comes as no surprise.

"Racism is alive and well in society. Why should corporate America be any different?" asks Jacquelyn B. Gates, vice president of the Office of Ethics and Business Conduct at Nyxem Corp., a regional telephone company.

Texaco's chairman and chief executive, Peter I. Bijur, says the bigotry at his company represents just the "tip of the iceberg" of corporate prejudice nationwide.

An estimated 70 percent of the largest 1,000 corporations now have programs to help diversify the work force and enable different employees to work well together. Most consist of training sessions that last only a few days.

"There is a lot of lip service," says Sondra Thiedeman, a San Diego-based consultant who has been working on such issues for 15 years. She said that corporations often seem open to diversity at meetings.

"Then you encounter these people over dinner and a drink and their attitude begins to slip," she says. "The jokes come out."

She sees a backlash against diversity across society due to downsizing and the tough economic times of a few years ago. "People feel their jobs were taken away from them," she says.

Attacks have mounted on welfare, immigration and affirmative action. This month, California voters overwhelmingly approved a ban on affirmative action programs in public hiring, contracting and college enrollments.

Yet companies have grown more diverse. Groups other than white males in the work force have increased 63 percent during the last decade because of affirmative action and demographics, says the Society of Human Resource Management.

Jacquelyn B. Gates, president of a minority management support group called EDGE, meets with her organization Wednesday in New York. "Racism is alive and well in society. Why should corporate America be any different?" asks Gates, vice president of the Office of Ethics and Business Conduct at Nyxem Corp.

Still, white men accounted for 90 percent of the senior ranks of all occupations last year, even though they made up 41 percent of the entire work force, according to the federal Bureau of Labor Statistics. By 2005, white men will have even less of a role in the workplace, representing just 38 percent of the nation's workers, the government agency estimates.

Corporate racism doesn't often surface as dramatically as it did at Texaco, where a secret tape recording of executives belittling blacks led to a $176 million race-discrimination settlement, the biggest on record.

Patricia Digh of the Society for Human Resource Management says whites may not even know they have prejudices. "I may not have told a racist joke, but I may have laughed at some," she says.

"Racism is not always an overt act."

At Texaco, top executives last year attended a two-day diversity "learning experience" that was given to managers. The White Plains, N.Y.-based company also has given managers equal opportunity and sexual harassment seminars.

Under the settlement, the company will pay $35 million to set up a court-monitored task force that will create company-wide diversity, mentoring and ombudsman programs.

The company will change its employee appraisal system and post more jobs nationwide to help break down the glass ceiling for minorities.

Minorities currently make up 6.4 percent of Texaco's executives, up from 2 percent in 1991. Blacks make up only 2 percent of executives.

Successful diversity programs, advocates say, should not only bring more diverse people into the work force but make full use of all workers' talents.

Diversity leaders such as DuPont Co. report greater productivity and innovation from work teams that bring together a variety of people.

Other firms find a better rapport with a greater spectrum of customers.

"We recognize that clients are more responsive to a work force that is more like the larger community," says Steve Young, manager of work force diversity at Merrill Lynch & Co., the nation's biggest brokerage.

Successful diversity programs also have teeth. The compensation of senior management at Nyxem, and a select few other companies, is tied to meeting diversity goals. And Nyxem managers are evaluated not only by supervisors but by peers and underlings.

Days after the settlement, Nyxem's chairman sat down for a previously scheduled meeting with Gates and others from employee resource groups. Texaco was at the top of the agenda.

"We committed that night to not rest on any of our laurels," says Gates. "We've done a lot, but there's always room for improvement."

Government pension agency raises limit on monthly payments

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government agency that insures workers' pensions is increasing by 4.5 percent the maximum guaranteed monthly payment to participants in failed defined-benefit plans in 1997. The Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp. said the maximum payment will rise to $2,761.36 from $2,642.05 this year for retired workers aged 65 and older if their single-employer plans are terminated next year. Guarantees are reduced for workers taking early retirement or electing survivors' benefits. The $33,136.32 annual guarantee covers more than 42 million workers and retirees participating in about 55,000 plans. The amount is adjusted each year based on changes in the Social Security tax and benefit base.

China

"We have made some progress in opening markets in China but we have a long way to go," said Commerce Secretary Mickey Kantor. "We want a level playing field. If we had that situation, we would be doing very well with China."

U.S. officials say the Clinton administration won't drop its insistence that China's membership in the World Trade Organization be on a "commercially acceptable basis."

But what that term means is open to debate. Brookings Institution scholar Nicholas Lardy contends China's high trade barriers protect inefficient, state-run companies that still employ two-thirds of urban workers. China might decide the pain of ending that wouldn't be worth the smaller gains of joining WTO.

"We have made some progress in opening markets in China but we have a long way to go."

— Mickey Kantor, U.S. Commerce secretary

Yet Greg Mastel of Washington's Economic Strategy Institute insists that if the administration relents, it will lose a critical opportunity to reform an economy that sometime early next century will pass the U.S. to become the world's biggest.

"Given the strength of the Chinese economy — and the relative decline of U.S. industry — the WTO may be the only chance we have to force significant economic and trade changes in China," Mastel says.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE Bobby Wolff

Dear Mr. Wolff: LHO opened one spade, partner bid two diamonds and RHO bid three hearts.

ANSWER: Three hearts is fore and emphasis. First priority goes to bidding three no-trump with a club stopper.

Dear Mr. Wolff: Playing Limit Major-Suit Raises (9 to 11 HCP), after partner raises my one-spade opening to three.

ANSWER: Visualize partner's hand as a dummy opposite your hand. You expect 10 trumps and about 10 HCP.

Dear Mr. Wolff: At duplicate, using Jacoby Transfers, partner opened one no-trump and my RHO bid two diamonds.

ANSWER: You should have a partnership agreement. Most drop transfers after interference would treat two hearts as a competitive no-forcing bid.

Dear Mr. Wolff: How would you interpret partner's three heart bid after this sequence? I open one spade and partner bids two diamonds.

ANSWER: Yes, he loses all his points. His card in question may play that may be irregular.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE

Bobbi Wolff

"When everyone is wrong, everyone is right."
— Pierre Claude Nouvelle

"I'll wager 98 percent of bridge players would play the hand as I did," expounded a defeated South.

"Perhaps," replied North. "And they will all be just as misguided as you were."

Can you find anything wrong with South's play?

South took his heart king, drew trumps and took a losing diamond finesse. East's club switch trapped South's king, and South lost two clubs and two diamonds, sending the game one down.

Did South lose his game because of his minor-suit cards were offside, or could he have bought some cheap insurance to improve his chances?

At the cost of a possible over-trick, South could have increased his probability of success. After drawing trumps, South should cash dummy's diamond ace and the ace and queen of hearts. Next, South leads a low diamond toward dummy and ducks when West plays his remaining honor. West is now out of safe leads and must either lead to South's club king or offer a ruff and stall.

What if West held K-J-10 of diamonds? South's prudence would have cost only an over-trick: West would still be endangered, and if West held K-10, the safety play would have cost nothing. South would make his over-trick.
