With snow coming fast and furious already this winter, some Wood River Valley cars will stay put until spring.

Let it snow, let it snow

Wood River Valley relishes an unusually White Christmas

By Barbara Nelwert
 Times-News correspondent

HAILEY — While holiday travelers curse the winter weather conditions that strand them at airports and make highway travel a white-knuckle affair, Wood River Valley residents are singing songs of praise.

"The amount of snow has definitely made our reservations phone ring more often," said Sun Valley Co. publicist Jack Siebach.

While the snow continues to pile up, word of mouth continues to spread about excellent snow conditions in Sun Valley.

As of Monday, the snowpack in the Wood River drainage tallied 181 percent of normal for this time of year.

Snowpack is 190 percent of normal at Galena Summit and 230 percent of normal for Lost Wood Divide at Trail Creek Pass.

"That equates to a whopping 70 inches of snow on Galena Summit, compared to the normal of 37 inches. The Lost Wood Divide reports 87.5 inches of snow when the normal should be 38 inches.

It's unclear, though, whether these snow figures will mean spring flooding. "This early in the year, one snowstorm can change those percentages immensely," said Gale Roberts, district conservationist with the National Resource Conservation Service. "We can go a month or six weeks without any snow, and that can impact the figures."

While snow is a fact of life in the Wood River Valley, these record amounts of snow have had some side effects.

Hailey police have recorded a slightly higher number of automobile accidents with an average of one fender bender a day. One of these accidents, though, involved a city snowplow running a stop sign and crashing into a Suburban. The city has since reversed its snowplow policy to allow snowplows to run stop signs to minimize plowing time.

While the Blaine County School District has not had to close school yet this year due to snowfall, officials are watching wind conditions carefully.

"We haven't had much wind — that's when we'll really be in trouble, especially down south (of Bellevue)," said school superintendent Phil Elmer.

Students always hope new snowfall will close schools. Journal Link, a record-keeping message service which notifies students and parents of school closures.

With Mother Nature uncooperative, kids might have tried to take measures into their own hands.

School buses are hooked up each night to engine block heaters so the buses will start up each morning. Twice this month, the engine heaters have been disconnected. As the theory goes, if the buses don't start, no one can go to school.

"It didn't work," Elmer said. "All the buses were out of commission." See SNOW Page A2

America's mega-rich give multimillions in annual donations

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — If it's more blessed to give than to receive, how come we know the names of the glitziest and wealthiest Americans — but not the most generous?

Well, maybe over Madonna. Step aside, Michael Jordan. Wipe that smile off your face, Michael Ovitz. Charitable giving just got a lot more glamorous — and you snark-timers aren't even on the list.

Slate Magazine, Microsoft's venture into online publishing, has listed the names of America's most generous. The scale of their philanthropy is breathtaking: a $5 million gift was the minimum to qualify. And most of them are people you never even heard of. (This year's champions: Samuel and Aline

Critics see tie between Utah land protection, donations to Clinton

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — When President Clinton designated 1.7 million acres of Utah wilderness as a national monument, the dashed plans to tap a huge reserve of environment-friendly coal.

The White House says the president acted to preserve a beautiful, exotic place, named Kaiparowits by the Paiute Indians. Critics see a connection to Indonesia, which already mines such cleaner fuel.

Amallex Resources, a U.S. mining company owned by a British family, holds leases on Kaiparowits and was nearly ready to break ground on a Utah mine that would produce about 3 million tons of coal. It reversed course with Clinton's announcement in September.

"Our position is that the monument designation makes the coal mine project unfeasible," said David Shaver, project manager at Amallex.

The 62 billion tons of coal found beneath the area's red-rock cliffs burns hot but emits far less polluting sulphur than most coal mined in the United States. It's known as "super compliance" coal because its properties meet Clean Air Act standards. Similar coal is mined in Indonesia.

A far-robe publication and some politically conservative talk shows have raised questions in recent weeks about whether Clinton's decision might benefit Indonesia and its Lipco Group, a conglomerate at the center of a controversy over campaign contributions to the Democratic Party.

Lippo's founder, billionaire Mochtar Raddy, his family members and associates have contributed heavily to Clinton and the Democrats.

Tolerance for disruptive airline passengers going down

Knight-Ridder News Service

A Savannah, Ga. federal judge has issued one of the toughest penalties ever in a case involving the increasing tendency of airline passengers to behave disruptively.

U.S. District Court Judge William Moore last week sentenced Gary Lee Lougee of Pooler, Ga. to 51 months in jail for assaulting a USAir flight attendant on a Savannah-Charlotte trip last summer.

In addition, Lougee, who is 40, will have to perform 200 hours of community

"This is a wake-up call!" — Dan Drake, U.S. attorney spokesman, on a ruling against a disruptive passenger service on his release, submit to drug and alcohol testing and pay USAir $611.35 restitution for the expense of turning the airplane around and returning to Savannah.

"This is a wake-up call," said Dan Drake, spokesman for the U.S. attorney's office in Savannah. "If people want to continue to do this kind of thing on airplanes, they will be looking at fairly stiff sentences in the federal system."

Alfred James Goodman, spokesman for the Association of Professional Flight Attendants: "This sentence, which may be the scariest I have seen, really shows that tolerance for this type of behavior is becoming slimmer and slimmer — as it should."

Dennis Harris, a USAir pilot and union official who was involved in pursuing the Savannah case, said Lougee boarded Flight 292 from Savannah to Charlotte, N.C. on July 6. He had apparently been drinking, Harris said, but told gate agents he would not drink any more. Within minutes, flight attendants twice denied his request for bourbon and cola.

Soon after the Boeing 737 jet took off, Lougee grabbed the lead flight attendant's arms, threw her against the cockpit door and pounded violently against it, on either side of her head, Harris said.

When the flight attendant tried to call

Greyhound carrying folks home for holidays leaves Oregon road

STANFIELD, Ore. (AP) — A Greyhound bus traveling through freezing rain to take people home for the holidays slid on frozen Interstate 84 in Eastern Oregon, injuring 28 people on Christmas Eve.

One person remained hospitalized Wednesday in critical condition with pelvic and neck injuries. A man with a head injury was upgraded from critical to stable condition, and three others were listed in fair condition.

The remainder of those injured were released or expected to be released shortly.

The bus rolled onto its side near the Stanfield exit, about 165 miles east of Portland.

It began to slide after going down a slight downhill grade about 10:20 a.m.

The bus went sideways on an icy bridge, swung around, rolled once and came to rest in the center median, Oregon State police Lt. T. McLain said. "It was a slippery road and the bus driver just lost it, man," said Phillip Misner, 48, an aviation contractor who was heading to Portland on the bus for a job. "It was asleep when I felt the back end starting to swerve," Misner said from Good Shepherd Community Hospital in Hermiston, where he was being treated for a badly cut face. "He gassed it to try to get it back in control and then it flipped. It was like the movie, 'Speed'."

He said a representative from the bus company had been by the hospital offering to pay all medical bills. Derek King, 23, a furniture delivery driver from Weiser, Idaho, boarded the bus in Ontario and was on his way to his family's home in Yamhill.

King, who suffered a back injury, said that a few minutes before the accident a large sign on the interstate warned of very icy conditions. "When the bus started to slide, somebody yelled 'Hold on!' and it got really quiet," King said. "When it slammed, women and all kinds of little kids started screaming."

After the accident, people got off the bus in orderly fashion through the broken windshield and emergency crews quickly came to the frozen scene.

Spying remains a hot game

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Surveillance cameras are permanently trained on the Russian Embassy in Washington, recording all who enter and leave the building.

Teams of FBI agents in the street outside keep a discreet eye on suspected Russian agents.

Russian diplomats and journalists in Washington are no longer required to notify the State Department every time they travel more than 24 miles from the Capitol, as was the case before the disintegration of the Soviet Union in 1991. But in other respects, according to independent experts and American and Russian participants in the espionage wars of the past few years, the scale of U.S. surveillance and counterintelligence efforts actually may have increased.

The spy game certainly has become more sophisticated.

In contrast to the gumshoe detective methods used to catch Soviet agents at the height of the Cold War, today's spy-catchers can make use of high-tech electronic devices, including planes and spy satellites, to keep track of Russian agents. They can comb through the financial records of alleged American moles without alerting suspects in advance. And they are able to take advantage of a treasure trove of information made available by Soviet bloc defectors following the collapse of Communism.

In testimony last week before a Senate subcommittee on Terrorism, FBI Director Louis B. Freeh insisted that there has been no let-up in the espionage war between America and Russia.

"We are No. 1 on the radar list of the SVRR," said Freeh, referring to the Russian successor agency to the Soviet KGB. "We have to ensure that our defenses are better than they ever were and that our countermeasures work."

According to Ronald Kessler, an independent intelligence expert and author of "Spy vs. Spy," up to 20 percent of the 11,000 agents employed by the FBI are involved in counterintelligence work. He says it is reasonable to assume that roughly half these agents, or about 1,000 people, devote most of their time to Russia and surveillance of Russian diplomatic missions in Washington, New York and San Francisco.

"This is always going to be a very labor-intensive business," said former CIA director R. James Woolsey, who headed the agency between 1993 and 1995. "If you suspect that there are KGB officers trying to recruit Americans, you are obliged to employ a lot of people to keep track of them."

While there clearly has been some reduction in the size of the Russian spy presence in America over the past five years, most intelligence experts doubt that the drop has been very dramatic. According to Yuri Shvets, a former KGB major who served in Washington between 1985 and 1990 in the guise of a Soviet journalist, there used to be 35 active-duty KGB officers in the Washington residency. He believes the number may be down to 25 or so SVRR agents today.

We vote Republican to protect our Western interests

Will Rogers spun a story about a Midwest senator who told a small-town constituent that the fellow was "a patriot if you vote for me and a reprobate if you don't."

The fellow scratched his three-day beard and replied:

"That's where you and I are different, senator. You'll still be a reprobate whether I vote for you or not."

Those sentiments must feel familiar to Western liberals and their environmentalist allies this day. One of them, Colorado newspaper publisher Ed Marston, recently bemoaned the demise of like-minded Democrats in last November's election.

"The 1996 election means that environmentalists who live in the region's towns and small cities can only influence the federal land by begging help from East or West Coast congresspeople to create a wilderness, or from a federal judge to stop a logging project, or from President Clinton to buy out a mine," Marston wrote in High Country News.

"It works, but it doesn't build a local base. And it creates a sense that the West is under outside attack ..."

It's a pretty well-founded sense, in our view. Hating the Sierra Club or loving Newt Gingrich isn't why Westerners vote Republican. They vote for GOP candidates because they don't want East and West Coast congressmen, federal judges and Bill Clinton determining their destiny.

Fact is, most folks out West are sort of enamored of having a say in how the land on which they live is run.

But that fact is largely lost on the greens and their allies in the federal bureaucracy, who suppose that most Westerners have the sensibilities of Helen Chenoweth and would vote to stripmine Yellowstone in a heartbeat.

Maybe that's why Bruce Babbitt runs the Interior Department like a 12th century castle - always careful to keep the drawbridge up lest the peasants come calling with pitchforks.

When Clinton turned Utah's sprawling Kaiparowits Plateau from a coalfield into a national monument last summer, he did so with Babbitt at his side - and from a safe distance in Arizona's Grand Canyon National Park.

Utahns, who a generation ago used to elect as many Democrats as Republicans to state and federal office, were furious, and they turned their last Utah Democratic congressman out to pasture in November.

Tellingly, the eco-liberals were genuinely bemused by that reaction. Hmmm, they reflected: Must be another symptom of galloping greed.

Greedy? Is it greed to believe that your livelihood deserves at least as much consideration as a visitor's lifestyle? Is it cupidity to suppose that a landowner should have a voice in deciding whether his children will be able to stay on his land?

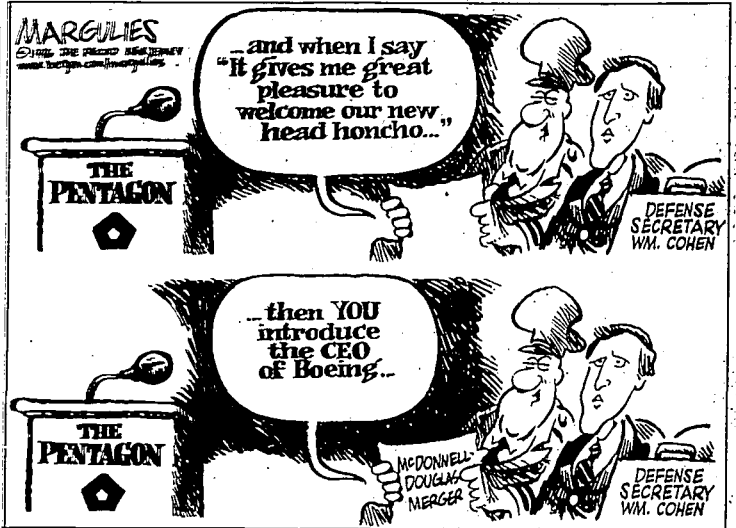

Is it craven to suggest that your right to make a living off the land has at least as much value as the government's right to preserve the scenery?

Is it really such a mystery why Westerners tend to vote Republican these days?

Once upon a time, Western Democrats who got elected were a different breed: tough, pragmatic and gifted with a healthy skepticism of grand schemes, deficit spending and Washington solutions.

But Cecil Andrus, Scott Matheson, John Melcher, Mo Udall, Scoop Jackson, Lee Metcalf and the rest of their high-caliber, moderate-to-conservative breed are gone, supplanted by ideologues who just know the government has a better idea.

No, it doesn't. And that's the real reason Democrats, liberals and their environmentalist allies are in eclipse out here in the high country.

Size, global dominance don't ensure job security

ROBERT E. SCOTT

The Boeing Co.'s planned acquisition of McDonnell Douglas Corp. is certainly good business. But over the next five to 10 years, the deal could eliminate many jobs in the United States and accelerate the transfer of technology to foreign companies undermining U.S. leadership in the commercial airliner industry.

And, strange as it may seem, given Boeing's dominance of the global market for commercial aircraft, the merger could ultimately hurt a manufacturing sector that has long been a mainstay of the U.S. economy.

Once the merger is completed by the federal government - a necessary step, there will be only one remaining commercial aircraft company, Boeing and Airbus Industrie, the European consortium. As a result, most analysts expect that airlines prices will fall up, leading to higher profits. But this is not the only possible outcome.

Governments in Europe are much more willing to subsidize research and development than is the United States. In the next cycle of aircraft design, this could put Boeing at a significant disadvantage. In addition, subsidies could spill over into other sales and lead to a pricing war. The United States will never be able to compete with the willingness or ability of European governments to buy sales with subsidies.

Ironically, Boeing's dominance of the market could also be a source of future weakness. Together, Boeing and McDonnell manufactured 69 percent of all commercial jetliners sold this year, with Airbus getting the remainder. Some airlines may increase their purchases of Airbus planes simply to maintain Boeing's hand.

This is especially true of airlines in such countries as Japan and Singapore. They would seek to avoid dependency on a single supplier to obviate the risk of future price increases.

Price wars and lost sales to Airbus could, over time, eat into Boeing's market share, leading to falling output, employment and U.S. exports. But any such effects would not occur for years, because aircraft production involves long lead times and sales are currently robust.

Any increase in Airbus' market share would not immediately reduce employment, either. The current recovery obscures such risks.

But the merger could accelerate losses already occurring in industries that make aircraft parts. Offsets are export-sales agreements that require a company to perform a certain amount of work in the purchasing country. In recent years, they have resulted in a rise in parts imports and a transfer of production to foreign markets, especially in Asia. The Boeing-McDonnell merger could reinforce and promote this trend.

The sales deals often include technology transfers, which require U.S. companies to share proprietary information with foreign companies and help them learn to use it. These "performance requirements" are increasingly common in defense and commercial aerospace production. Combined with the general tendency to outsource production, they have definite consequences: almost 30 percent of the new Boeing 777 is composed of foreign-made parts and components.

China has aggressively sought offsets. It has used the huge appetites of its national airlines to entice Airbus and Boeing into bidding wars, which have cost jobs and critical technologies. The terms of the competition, however, are not limited to jobs and technology transfers. The companies are urged to lobby their own governments to adopt various trade and foreign policies. Last spring in China, Boeing's board met and held conversations with Chinese Premier Li Peng. Afterward, Boeing's chief executive officer, Philip M. Condit, endorsed the premier's views on U.S. trade policy.

Offsets are hollowing out U.S. supplier industries. Imports of parts are rising rapidly and constitute a growing share of commercial-aircraft production. If past trends continue, the import share of domestic output could rise from 11 percent in 1994 to 14 percent in the year 2000.

Up to 25,000 jobs in aircraft parts could be eliminated if these trends continue. The Boeing deal probably will accelerate the outsourcing problem as well. Intensified competition with Airbus may pressure Boeing to make greater concessions to the Chinese to ensure sales; other countries may demand more offsets, too. The Long Beach, Calif., commercial plant could also face closure, unless Boeing makes investments needed to boost its competitiveness.

So, while some jobs may be preserved at some existing plants, many others in associated small- and medium-sized businesses may disappear. Corporations such as General Electric, which makes aircraft engines, and Bendix, which makes brakes, may face new pressures from Boeing to move production overseas and set up joint ventures in China and other countries that demand offsets.

Overall, at least 250,000 jobs are at risk in the aerospace and related industries in the next four years as a consequence of these trends. The jobs could disappear outright if Airbus captures a bigger share of the world market and imports continue to grow.

Such a gloomy prospect demands that we take a broader look at public policy connected to the aerospace industry.

Craig's comments 'self-serving'

I enjoyed your Dec. 21 article on the new chief of the Forest Service, Mike Donohue. Sen. Larry Craig's comments were of particular interest to me about his past disagreement with Donohue for supporting the administration's grazing reform legislation.

I believe Sen. Craig's comments are self-serving and may even show a conflict of interest in regard to the senate influencing any grazing reform legislation. Sen. Craig's family holds grazing permits on federal land in the Midvale area, so he has a personal interest in maintaining the current system. JIM FRUNTY, Twin Falls

Woman's lack of caution appalling

I'm sure you've heard it said, "There's an accident waiting to happen." If you open your eyes, you can see them all over. Like that young migrant worker sometime back getting a few rounds with a tractor-driven post-hole digger; two arms, one leg down the tubes.

A short time ago, I had reason to enter a potato processing plant. As I stood there waiting, I was in a position where I could see a young female working at a bagging machine. Her job was to place an empty sack on the hooks of the spinning potato filling machine. The hooks spun around in front of her at about her eye level. Her back was to me and, of course, other than what I could see, in my mind I could not do that. "There's an accident waiting to happen."

No, I'm not some sort of psychic, but I do feel I have common sense enough to pick apart a situation such as I was observing at this time. No doubt my biggest mistake is that I haven't written this letter sooner. Hopefully and prayerfully, there has been no accident to the young girl at that machine.

What I observed was that this young lady had beautiful long brown or auburn-colored hair. It lay down her back to just about her waist line. No, my thoughts were not that of a "dirty old man." My only thought, as I watched her work was, "Suppose she were to turn around sharply and that long hair was to get caught on the hooks of that machine?" Her head was only a matter of inches from the machine as it spun around. From where I stood, that possibility stood out like a sore thumb.

There was the possibility that there was some sort of safety shut off should such a thing occur. Truthfully, though, what would her chances of survival be? Why wasn't she herself aware enough to have her hair up into some sort of hat or net? Some responsibility is this whole situation?

How would I feel were I to read about such an accident at the processing plant? CHARLIE HALLERAN, Jerome

Captain Marvel, please go away

I agree with one thing Jim Marvel said, or should I say, "Captain Marvel" in his commentary, "Local paper ignores problem." The problem is Captain Marvel, the savior to all.

If the paper would give him attention, he would go away. The only thing he wants and needs is attention.

He is not trying to help anybody, just draw attention to himself and spend his $100 million in needless court cases and maintenance of paperwork that will benefit no one. Since the same, I would like to know what Captain Marvel has done for the environment and all the other so-called environmental activities said this year, with Airbus getting the remainder. Some airlines may increase their purchases of Airbus planes simply to maintain Boeing's hand.

don't make it. Even a rancher and proud of it. The Old West is gone, unfortunately, or we would be handling this problem a lot differently.

I do know one thing: the ranchers and farmers are not sitting around complaining they're too busy trying to keep things alive as you can enjoy the wildlife and also have a full belly.

Too bad we don't have time to go to Rhine County where all your architectural "Marvels" are screwing up one of Idaho's elk-wintering grounds. I remember what Ketchum, Sun Valley and Idaho looked like before you changed it for your environmental conveniences.

So, Captain Marvel, get a life and really do something for mankind. Shut up and give thanks for the Merry Christmas.

I need your help. Would anyone out there who has had a favorable experience with an insurance company please contact me at P.O. Box 664, Jackpot, NV 89825 or phone (702) 755-2310.

No, no, not any more horror stories, please. I already have a roomful of them. What I need is just one case where someone purchases an insurance policy for a particular reason. Then proceeded to send in the premiums and, after a length of time, lo and behold, they filed a claim and the claim was handled with absolutely no hassle from the insurance company. Peterson's letter raises numerous questions

In regard to Mr. Vaughn Peterson's letter, I have a few questions.

What about the towns without a railroad within 25 miles? How are you going to move farm commodities from field to market? How are you going to move heavy equipment around to build new roads?

These are just a few of the questions that will plague you. I have a lot more that I would like answers to.

I have run long haul and short haul for more than 10 years. I have more than 1 million miles with no accidents. Of all the crashes I have been around, some idiot in a car of a pickup has done something to cause the accident. But if you have all the answers, maybe you should run for office.

On the average, a truck pays $7,000 to $11,000 per year for road taxes alone in Idaho.

The Times-News welcomes letters from readers on subjects of public interest. Each letter should include the writer's signature, mailing address and telephone number.

One last comment: A truck will lose a destination at the same time as a train will. The truck will deliver an 80 percent of the time it takes a train.

So when your head comes out of what you want, don't sit and complain because of this brilliant idea.

Marvel, Mike Waterford Project don't speak for state

This letter is responding to the continued scripping of the well-known article of the Idaho Waterfowl Project and its president, Jon Wilson.

The article that was published in this state and many others was a well-written and interesting article. However, the article was not meant to speak for the state. It was only the opinion of the author and the project.

It is not speaking for the state, but it is speaking for the people who agree with them. Just like I speak for the people who agree with me.

people who agree with them. Just like I speak for the people who agree with me.

The reason I'm against IWP getting licenses is simply because of the environment where their president hunts from. The Wood River Valley, in my opinion, is an environmental disaster, and it isn't taken 120 years to become this. It's happened in the last 20 to three decades. And it's not been from cattle ranching. I know you're thinking yes, but this is private land, which is true. But it all began with the clear cutting of trees on Bald Mountain, which is public land to this day. That started this whole environmental mess that we see up there today. So ask yourself, Marvel, why would I and the people that agree with me want you and your organization to watch over any public land when you, as far as I'm concerned, could care less about your immediate environment? We don't want another Stanley

Basin. What I mean by that is, in my lifetime in this state, which has been all of my life, the Stanley Basin has gone from having cattle ranching, salmon, few automobiles and the chance for a more personal getaway to very few cattle, nearly no salmon, plus several hundred thousand people every summer. And I may be wrong, but from some other things I've read, it seems that many environmental groups applaud this type of turnaround because it promotes the so-called clean industry of tourism. I'm no scientist, but I'll bet a cowpie can biodegrade faster than aluminum cans, plastic and carbon monoxide. So you probably know by now that you'll never sell your line of crap to me. ROB BLACK

Co-ed wrestling: Boycotted matches spawn Texas lawsuit

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — After two rounds of locks, throws and counters, Marcos Venegas used his experience and 3-inch height advantage to pin opponent Ashley King. For King, the wrestling match was tough.

But the duel earlier this month against Venegas was nothing like going to the mat with Texas referees and those governing high school wrestling in the state.

Ashley is a girl, and the Texas Wrestling Officials Association recently decided to boycott co-ed matches, prompting a discrimination lawsuit.

"It's really about old-fashioned Texas tradition and sexism," said King, a 17-year-old Arlington High School junior. "The girls that wrestle are ready for guys to be rough and they'll be rough right back."

The association went so far as to disband a few weeks ago rather than be forced by a judge to referee girl vs. boy matches.

"They can't make us do this," said John Rizutti, the association's former president. "Hell will freeze over before I officiate girls being brutalized by guys."

On Tuesday, the mothers of two girl wrestlers sued the referee association and the sports governing agency, the Texas Interscholastic Wrestling Association. Raj Barnett and Karen Herring seek $10,000 in damages and an order forcing the two groups to allow girls to wrestle.

Arlington Martin High School wrestler Courtney Barnett, top, competes against teammate Dana Gansor at a meet in Arlington, Texas, last Thursday.

The girls' attorney Anthony Hume said Wednesday that the officials were included because he had no evidence the association had disbanded. The American Civil Liberties

Union said the case shows clear discrimination. But wrestling association executive director Jim Giunta believes the lawsuit will be thrown out because the policy against mixed wrestling is consistent with policies in other high school sports.

The legal maneuvers mark an escalation in a controversy over a sport that now has 20 female participants statewide.

Girls have wrestled for several years in Texas, just as in about 20 other states, and typically are on a school's mostly male team. They wrestle boys or other girls in their weight class in matches established by the coaches at the start of a meet.

Because the wrestling association does not recognize female wrestlers or their matches, referees until now either have ignored the matches or officiated without posting points for the team. The debate boiled over in September when members of the referees' association began refusing to officiate.

Rizutti, a 10-year official, cites safety reasons. "There's one guy I call the Punisher. If a girl fought him, I'd tell them to call an ambulance — she's going to the hospital," he said.

"What in heaven's name are parents teaching these girls where they want to jump into the ring with bruises?" Then there are the legal ramifications, Rizutti said.

"Many times we have to grab wrestlers when they fall off the mat, or things are too physical," he said. "We have no protection against sexual harassment charges if some girl is offended by the way we touch her."

Eddie Nelson, the only association member who supports mixed wrestling, said no female wrestler has ever complained about harassment. "This is just another conspiracy aimed at keeping girls from wrestling," he said.

Dusty Barton doesn't mind wrestling with girls, but many of his male teammates at Arlington Martin High School see it as a loss-of-life situation.

"If you win, they say you only won because you're a boy," Barton said. "If you lose, they make fun of you because you lost to a girl."

Man rescued after fall inside 4-story-deep cave

ASHEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Just before losing his grip on a rope ladder deep inside a cave and falling the equivalent of four stories, Gary Lynn Adams thought his wife was going to spend Christmas planning his funeral.

He survived the fall, and thanks to dozens of rescuers he was in a hospital Wednesday anxious to get home for dinner.

Adams and two friends went into the Blowing Springs Cave in Nantahala Gorge on Monday to explore a waterfall deep inside the cavern.

About 700 feet inside, he and a co-worker climbed down a rope ladder into a 50-foot-deep chamber. They heard the waterfall but couldn't find it, so they started back up the ladder.

He got to within six rungs, or six feet, of the top but was exhausted from pulling up his 220-pound frame and could climb no more.

"You get to that point when you know you can't hold on any more and it's a long way down because it's a long way down," Adams said Wednesday in a telephone interview from his hospital room. "My first feeling when I left the rope was 'I'm going to die,' because I knew how far it was."

KISS is top '96 concert draw

NEW YORK (AP) — It wasn't a particularly good year for people in the concert industry unless you happened to breathe fire, spit blood and wear a lot of greasepaint.

KISS' reunion tour was the top money-earner for 1996, taking in $43.6 million and beating acts like Garth Brooks, Neil Diamond and Rod Stewart, the concert industry trade publication Pollstar reported Wednesday.

Consumers spent an estimated $1.05 billion on concerts during 1996, Pollstar said. That's up slightly from the $950 million in 1995 but not approaching the record $1.4 billion set in 1994.

The increased dollar volume was largely due to higher ticket prices and masked a particularly weak showing for many veteran artists out on the road, said Gary Borgiovanni, Pollstar editor.

KISS was the spectacular exception. The band reunited its original members, donned the customary costumes and used truckloads of special effects for 92 dates — leaving sellouts in their wake.

Christmas package explodes, injuring 10-year-old girl

CLIFTON PARK, N.Y. (AP) — State police stood guard Wednesday at the hospital room of a 10-year-old girl severely injured when a package bomb blew up in her face on Christmas Eve.

Police refused to speculate about the bomber's motive, but concluded from what was left of the package that it was intended for the home of Jude and Mary Reardon, state police Capt. Jeffrey Himes said.

He said it was routine that a state police detail was with them as they watched over their daughter at her bedside.

Jordan Reardon suffered second-degree burns and cuts when she opened the package about 10 p.m. Tuesday, and her family's home was badly damaged. "It's uninhaleable," state police Capt. William Sickinger said.

The girl was listed in good condition at Westchester Medical Center, but was expected to remain in the burn unit for 10 days and undergo minor plastic surgery, hospital administrator Jon Mackler said.

Doctors said gunpowder from the explosion burned her face, hands and chest. But her glasses — and the fact that she put her hands over her face at the moment of the blast — saved her eyes.

Pornography charges dropped; proof lacking

TWIN FALLS - Prosecutors Tuesday dropped charges against a Castleford man arrested last week on a charge of possession of pornography.

Twin Falls County Prosecutor Rich Bevan said charges were dropped while the investigation continues, because additional charges could not be proved.

James Ross, Jr., 32, was arrested Dec. 19 and charged with one count of sexual exploitation of a child, and one count of sexual abuse of a child, according to court documents. Ross posted bond and was freed.

"It's my understanding charges are going to be dismissed in the interest of justice based on a lack of evidence," said Ross's attorney, Michael Wood.

Prosecutors say Ross had taken pornographic photographs of children.

"The sexual exploitation charge was for possessing the photos. The abuse charge was for taking photos. Whether there was commercial activity involved by him getting photographs made up from negatives is what is being investigated," Bevan said. "We didn't want to go on one count when we thought we might have more."

"It would be far too speculative to start talking about what they might have or hope to have for evidence," Wood said.

Bevan said his office notified the victims they know of, and did not believe Ross was a flight risk.

Horizon adds larger planes beginning early next year

TWIN FALLS - Coffee, tea or 37 seats? Starting Feb. 9, Horizon Air will replace the 18-seat Metroliner aircraft with 37-seat turboprops on two of three daily flights from Twin Falls to Boise.

The larger deHavilland Dash 8 plane will increase the number of seats Horizon offers daily from Twin Falls by 50 percent, the company said. Customers will see no price increase directly related to the larger planes, said Dan Russo, Horizon Air spokesman.

A third Metroliner flight will continue in Twin Falls after Feb. 9 until additional Dash 8s are acquired.

The airline plans to eventually to replace all Metroliners and 31-seat Donner planes with the larger Dash 8 airplanes for ease of training and maintenance, Russo said.

The Dash 8 features two seats on each side. The cabin of the larger aircraft includes overhead storage bins and a restroom. There also will be a flight attendant on board.

About 25 Dash 8 aircraft will be added to Horizon's fleet this year, Russo said.

Horizon Air will serve Twin Falls since 1983 and serves 40 cities throughout California, Idaho, Montana, Washington, Wyoming, British Columbia and Alberta.

Reconstruction of U.S. 30 - U.S. 93 starts in February

FILER - A junction with one of the highest accident rates in the region will be reconstructed starting in February.

Construction will start on the U.S. 30-U.S. 93 junction as part of the continued work on U.S. 30 between Twin Falls and Filer, announced the Idaho Transportation Department.

In the second stage, an interchange will be constructed to replace the 90-degree T-junction at the junction. A mile of U.S. 30 east and south of the junction also will be reconstructed.

The junction's high accident rate is due to vehicle speeds, lack of turning lanes, increased traffic and limited sight distance, reports the department. The new interchange will eliminate traffic conflicts and provide drivers a smoother, gradual turn.

The project is expected to be complete in 1998. Then, the third stage begins in which four miles of the roadway from Curry Crossing to Twin Falls will be reconstructed.

Stage one cost $3.6 million and was completed in August. It involved realigning and widening one mile of U.S. 30.

Give environment a clean gift Much Christmas refuse is recyclable

By N.S. Nekkettved
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - After Christmas Day is over, and it's time to clean up the mess, don't start cramming everything into a garbage can.

Though dry and losing its needles, the tree still has most of its organic value, and most of the paper and cardboard accumulated over the holidays have value if they are recycled.

But the best place to start recycling after Christmas comes after reading the newspaper. The paper and all the advertisements inserted in those flat holiday papers can be recycled.

Next, some recyclers will give you money for the cardboard boxes that all those presents came in. Most Christmas wrapping paper also can be recycled.

That leaves the tree - it probably makes up the largest volume of post-Christmas consumer waste. But the tree can be ground up and turned into compost. One person in Buhl feeds used Christmas trees to a herd of goats.

A number of places throughout Magic Valley will take Christmas trees to be ground up - but take off the ornaments, lights and stands.

In Twin Falls recyclers will take most of the rest of the Christmas trash.

Pacific Steel and Recycling and Magic Valley Recycling will take newspaper, office and school paper and Christmas wrapping paper. They will take aluminum and tin cans and aluminum foil. They include the disposable roasting pan you used to cook the turkey - but it must be clean.

Pacific Steel and Recycling also will take cardboard and plastic pop and milk bottles, but not the foil wrapping paper or paper that is waxed.

Magic Valley Recycling takes all kinds of paper, including magazines and Four years ago, Bo Leo Miller, center, got his Christmas wish, and was adopted by Bonnie, right, and Harold Miller of Buhl.

Adoption brings joy to a Buhl couple, children

By Loretta Burkhardt
Times-News correspondent

BUHL - A few years ago, when a 7-year-old boy was asked what he wanted for Christmas, his answer was much the same as his brother's had been many years before: "My adoption papers."

Now, almost four years after that last wish was granted, Bo Miller was asking Santa for a set of tools, "Just like my dad's."

"So when Dad's dead (a tool) I can just run get him one of mine," says Bo Miller, now 11 and an armadillo waiting to happen.

For about 30 years, the Millers have opened their home to children who need a home. For the superintendent of the Buhl Highway District, and his wife, an artist, it has been a way of life.

In the mid-1960s, the Millers had been married for less than a year. Bonnie Miller's sister had died of cancer, so the Millers took in her two sons, 9 and 10 years old.

After the boys grew up, the Millers still wanted to have children in their home. So they signed up to adopt.

Another set of brothers came to the Miller home in the early 1980s, but this time things were different.

The boys, then 11 and 12, had been abandoned seven years ago. They needed much more love than the Millers could provide. Both boys stayed at the

"I still wish we could have kept them together, but we couldn't," Bonnie Miller said with a tear in her eye.

A few years later, the Millers received an urgent call from the Department of Health and Welfare's Boise office. A boy needed help, said Health and Welfare worker, who asked if the Millers could come to the office that day.

The Millers came that day. After six difficult months, he was adopted.

"If anyone can help a person, Bonnie can."

- Harold Miller, Bonnie's husband, father of adopted children

"If anyone can help a person, Bonnie can," Harold Miller said.

When these two boys had been raised and were on their own, when the Millers thought they were finished raising children, they got another call. This call was about Bo.

It was love at first sight.

"He was the cutest little guy you've ever seen," Bonnie Miller recalled.

Bo lived with the Millers for more than a year before the adoption was final. In January of 1993, shortly after Christmas, the adoption went through.

Bo has been "a handful," Bonnie Miller said, but the family has loved the adoption experience.

It was a long wait, and he (Bo) wanted it (adoption) as much as we did," Bonnie Miller said.

Minidoka schools prepare to go on line through Project Mutual Telephone

By Lori Bethelnek
Times-News writer

RUPERT - Wires are being crossed and tested throughout the Minidoka County School District as Project Mutual Telephone Co. prepares to link every school to the Internet.

PMT Marketing Director Pat Campbell said wiring is being installed inside several schools as the company waits for more connection equipment to arrive.

"It's quite a big project we're starting on here," Campbell said. "We sent two people off this week for training to learn more about how to link the schools together."

The school district recently signed a three-year contract with PMT that enables the district to receive free Internet services for three years. After the first year, the district must pay $16,596 a year to keep the system operational.

Compared with other school districts, operational costs are considerably lower in Minidoka County, according to Kent Jackson, technology coordinator for the district.

"In most other districts, schools can only bring on about three sites for that price," Jackson said. "We're bringing on 15."

A one-time state grant gives the district $180,000 to set up a districtwide technology system. Project Mutual has offered to serve as the district's provider, for about half that amount.

"We're committed to providing them with the services they need at a cost we believe is more than reasonable," Campbell said.

Campbell said he expects the first group of schools to be connected within 60 to 90 days.

Once the system is installed throughout the district, every student and teacher will have access to the Internet, e-mail services and a direct link to neighboring schools.

Jackson said the system will also enable the district to become fully automated by developing an integrated system where work orders and other items can be submitted electronically.

"This will cut down on a lot of paperwork and time while providing schools with a way to pass things quickly between one building and another," he said.

Jackson said access to the Internet in each school will provide more up-to-date information than they can find in their school libraries.

"If they use the Encyclopedia Britannica on-line, they'll find information that is up-to-the minute," he said. "It's also a lot cheaper than buying their CDs because of the upgrades you have to keep purchasing to stay current."

Jackson said a policy must be approved by the School Board and reviewed by each student that explains what material is inappropriate for student access before they are allowed access to the Internet.

Net browsing doesn't clog phone lines

By Mark Helz
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - Internet use hasn't yet clogged the Magic Valley's phone system, but communications experts said the load on the lines is going to keep getting heavier.

"The way people use their phones now is far different than even two years ago," said Clint Berry, a spokesman for US West. "The whole network was designed for people making seven to five minute calls and then hanging up."

Now, the system must handle people logging on to the Internet for hours at a time, he said. Cellular call transfers, call waiting, card identification and fax lines have added to the load.

All that demand has been too much for phone lines in some urban centers, where calls have been blocked as phone companies scramble to add more lines, an Idaho Public Utilities Commission official said.

So far, the PUC hasn't gotten many complaints about overloaded lines, he said.

"It doesn't seem at this point to have caused any significant problems in Idaho," said telecommunications section supervisor Joe Cusick. "It is up to the phone companies to adjust to the changes. We keep an eye on the complaints from users."

US West has spent a lot of money to keep its system up to speed, Berry said. Over the past 10 years, about $500 million has been spent on new lines, including fiber optic. US West also recently spent about $2.5 million to upgrade call processing centers in Jerome, Declo and Burley.

Berry said the Legislature's telecommunications department of 1988 made systems easier for his company to get a jump on new technology.

To help pay for the improvements, US West will probably raise the price of a basic residential service, which has been about $12 per month, Berry said. The company has proposed a monthly hike of $10 to $12, which the PUC must approve.

US West will probably cut the cost of interstate long distance, because deregulation and technology has attracted a lot of competition to Idaho, he said.

Upgrades aside, Internet service providers in Twin Falls say users can expect things to move slowly when they log on.

Since most Magic Valley lines are analog, not digital, "everything slows down," said MagicNet General Manager Phil Jones.

But customers don't seem to mind too much.

"For the most part, users understand that we live in an area where the lines are older," Jones said.

The speed of the Internet is also relative to the user, said Emily Gomez, telecommunications director for Lightspeed, a Twin Falls-based Internet service provider.

Gomez has his personal computer linked directly to the Internet.

"If I go over to a friend's house and he is using a modem to dial in, even if it's the fastest one available, it seems slow to me," he said.

He and Jones also said people in outlying areas can expect some difficulty using the Internet.

"The quality tends to taper off the farther away you get from Twin Falls," Gomez said.

They had mixed reactions to US West's plans to expand the local calling area in the Magic Valley. Jones said it will let him centralize his operation and improve service to customers, while Gomez said he worries it might put too much strain on the Twin Falls-based line system.

Despite their concerns, both think US West is doing all it can to keep up.

"The technicians that work on the lines are consistently working as hard and as fast as they can," Gomez said.

SNOQUALMIE PASS, Wash. (AP) — The bodies of two 19-year-old hikers were found buried in snow Wednesday, two days after they failed to return from an overnight hike in the Cascade Mountains in Washington.

Classifieds jammed with Elmo profiteer hopefuls

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Utah found itself no exception to the national frenzy over the Tickle Me Elmo doll this Christmas. The giggling monster moppet has been jailed, baited, auctioned, bartered, hawked, sold and resold, panhandled, even donated.

Back in Utah, Johnson hawked the dolls on street corners, making enough money to pay for his trip. He sold the last one late Christmas Eve from his downtown Salt Lake Post outside the ZCM Mall. It went for $100 to Bryan Damon, who planned to give it to his girlfriend, Leesha Cardwell. The doll's normal retail price is around $23.

Scores of people, hoping to cash in big on the doll, placed classified advertisements in local newspapers. In the Deseret News, Salt Lake's afternoon daily, more than 80 such ads ran on Sunday. Asking prices ranged from $3,000 to "best offer."

Doris Jane Jones

Doris Jane Jones, 70, of Kimberly, died at her home Dec. 23, 1996, after an extended battle with cancer.

She was born July 29, 1926, in Lapoint, Utah, the daughter of Erash and Eva Palmer. The family moved to Foch, Idaho, where Doris was raised on a farm with her eight brothers and sisters. On March 3, 1942, she married Floyd Jones of Pocatello, Idaho, and they resided in Pocatello until 1960, when they moved to Corinne, Utah. Church defies order to evict the homeless

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A downtown church has defied a city building inspector's order to stop providing shelter for the homeless.

The Rev. Wayne Wilson let about 35 homeless people sleep on the carpet and the battered wooden pews Christmas Eve. "I can't throw these people out," the Pentecostal minister said. "There comes a time when you have to disobey. ... Jesus said the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life."

His church, the Spectacular Ministries of the Lord's Servants, is in one of the city's roughest neighborhoods. Wilson has allowed homeless people to camp along on the floor and in the pews for the past three years.

He says it's biblical compassion, but the city says it's violating zoning ordinances.

"This structure is only to be used as a church — no sleeping out on any spot on the premises day or night," city building inspector Sherrie B. Reich wrote in her report. "This is a violation of the SLC zoning ordinance, please cease and desist or a citation will be issued."

City Planning Director William Wright said he wasn't aware of Tuesday's order, but the church is in an area zoned CG, for "general commercial" and any conditional homeless shelter would need approval from the city Planning Commission, which the church does not have.

The inspection report indicated the visit was in response to a complaint, but it did not say who made the complaint.

Wilson would like to have asked Ms. Reich about it, but he wasn't there when she came by to issue the order. He and his wife were making preparations for the turkey dinner they served to about 35 homeless men Tuesday night.

"It's kind of like throwing Jesus out — there wasn't room for him at the inn," said Wilson.

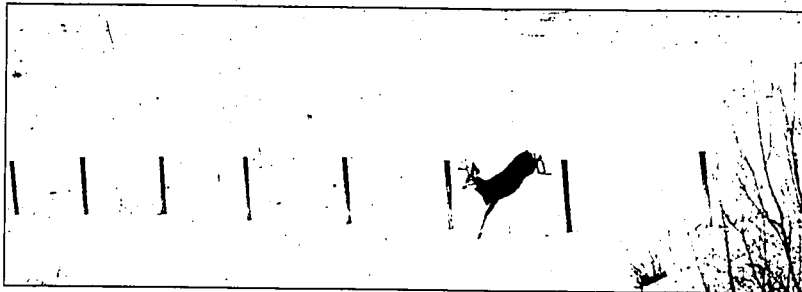

Wilson views the city's order as an attempt to harass him out of the charity business.

Wilson says he can open their doors to the homeless when disasters like fires and earthquakes strike, Wilson says. Why shouldn't he be able to open his church when it's dangerously cold outside?

Wright said anybody needing emergency shelter can go to the Salt Lake Community Shelter and Resource Center across the street from Wilson's church.

There were still four available beds in the main shelter late Tuesday and many more in reserve at a nearby overflow shelter.

OVER THE VALLEY AND THROUGH THE WOODS

A whitetail buck clears a fence to reunite with a herd of does that crossed before him. The buck was spotted near state Highway 31 east of Idaho Falls earlier this month.

Idaho farmer surprises wife with windmill gift

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — The wind shifts and catches its tail while the blades begin to spin slowly. It has been decades since the 40-foot Chicago Airmaster windmill has felt the breeze pass through its galvanized steel frame.

Betty Rude peers out her living room window with a quiet smile. The wind charger towers over her yard, making this Christmas Day like the ones she experienced as young girl.

"They're just really homey, and family means a lot to me," she said, staring out at her Christmas gift while snow blanketed its braces.

Her husband, Don, comes up behind her and puts his arm around his wife's small shoulders.

"I just wanted to get her a special gift," he said. "Instead of buying gifts, I thought it would be nice to make something for each other."

The Dalton Gardens couple has had their minds set on a traditional windmill for the past two years. In October, Don and his two brothers traveled to Sobeys, Mont., located in the northeast part of the state. Being a North Dakota farm boy, he knew where to begin searching for his wife's dream gift.

"I got up early and went to the restaurant where all the farmers and ranchers hang out," he said. "They asked us who we were and I told them what I was looking for."

Rude met a local rancher who happened to have an old wind tower lying in his fields. However, was just scraps of rusted metal, with some pieces twisted and bent, and others missing completely.

"It was probably built at the turn-of-the-century," he said.

Nevertheless, Rude, who recently restored a 1947 Ford dump truck and a 1906 bobbed, knew he was up to the task.

"We had three pickup trucks with trailers and we made two trips to the ranch to pick up the windmill and some other things," he said.

For a month, Rude sanded, bent and painted each brace. He custom-made his own parts to replace the ones that were broken or missing. He had a sheet metal shop cut new blades and a rhombus tail for the windmill.

Then, he assembled the renovated pieces in his backyard workshop. All of the real workings of the windmill, including the water pump system and brake for stopping the blades, were restored to working condition.

"Like two kids trying to impress their mother, Rude and his brother raised the steel structure when Mrs. Rude was out of town for the weekend.

"We used tractors to stand it up on the concrete base," he said.

His brother pulled on the windmill with one tractor while Rude guided it from the other end with another tractor to prevent it from falling backwards.

Grit puts burned ski shop back in business

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Flames took their downtown building, but grit and the generosity of their employees and neighboring hotelier had Utah Ski and Golf back up for the holiday rush.

Five days before Christmas, shop owners Jeff and Tracy Allison watched as their business — the largest specialty ski company in the state — went up in flames.

The cause of the fire, which destroyed $1 million in skis, boots and other gear destined for Utah's snow-laden slopes, remained under investigation.

"It was heart-wrenching," Tracy Allison said. "The 14 years it took us to get it where it is today, and then to see it go like that..."

The timing of the blaze, at the height of the ski-retailing season, seemed to be disastrous.

"Of the 52 weeks in the year, this is the worst week ever (for a fire)," said Rick Allison, Tracy's brother-in-law and general manager of the store. "Every day you lose — we're sitting here right now losing thousands dollars."

At 3 a.m. Sunday, four hours after the fire started, the Allisons met with employees at the Olympus Hotel across the street. Should they focus on their smaller satellite stores at the airport and Park City? Relocate? Give up?

The answer came later that day from Olympus general manager

Douglas Rigoni, who offered space in his hotel as a temporary home. By Christmas Eve a smaller but thriving Utah Ski and Golf was doing business out of the Zion Room of the Olympus Hotel.

During the two days the shop was homeless, employees conducted business out of vans in the burned building's parking lot.

"I guess we could have fallen apart and done nothing, but we have 50, 60 employees that need jobs," Allison said. "(The fire) is going to hurt us, but we're just hoping to pay the bills and stay open."

The employees are volunteering their time while the business gets back on its feet. Customers and friends called from as far away as Florida, asking to help. Even competitors called offering inventory and assistance.

Rigoni said helping the Allisons was the decent thing to do. Besides, "it's a definite benefit to our guests (who ski), and that's a good thing."

Christmas fan re-creates Santa's shop

OREM, Utah (AP) — Sandy "Claus" Pusey just may be the biggest fan of Christmas, next to Santa Claus.

Just walk into her home in this northern Utah community and you'll find yourself transported to the North Pole; four rooms of her house are devoted to the holiday year-round.

Pusey's re-created Santa's workshop, the Jolly Old Elf's living room and bedroom, and — mindful of the holiday's origins — the path to Bethlehem, complete with life-size nativity scene figures and the baby Jesus in her basement.

Never mind that the animals are stuffed toys, the doll came from the shelves of a charitable second-hand store, Deseret Industries, or that Joseph and Mary are actually refurbished store mannequins.

Her entire collection is a creative mix of antique objects and bits and pieces Pusey has pulled together to match the storybook, "The Story of Santa Claus" by Scribner's.

She has a workbench filled with toys and a Dickens village in three layers with a nativity set on the lowest layer for short children to find after they watch the train chug by.

Recycle

junk mail, and sells it to a company that turns it into insulation. It also takes No. 2 plastic milk jugs and colored plastic detergent bottles, clear plastic, clear glass and plastic bags.

But the real key to recycling Christmas is planning for next year, says Terry Shultz, director of Southern Idaho Solid Waste. Many things can be done to reduce the amount of trash thrown out after the holiday season — without any changes in lifestyle.

Shultz suggests buying things with less packaging, including presents such as gift certificates.

Buying wrapping paper and Christmas cards made from recycled paper helps create a market, since economics ultimately drive recycling.

If it costs more to recycle than throw it in the trash, it will wind up in the trash. But products made from recycled material create a value for that material and pay for collecting and recycling a resource that would otherwise be trash.

Another factor is the cost of building and operating a trash landfill. The less trash that goes into the landfill, the less it will cost taxpayers in the long run.

Shultz said keeping the first 20 to 30 percent out of the landfill is easy, but beyond that the cost to recover material is higher than simply treating it as trash.

Grinding and composting Christmas trees is good example of diverting trash from the landfill, Shultz said. Other inert material such as concrete rubble and dirt also can be diverted.

Clean wood waste can be chipped up, mixed with manure and turned into compost. And any organic material can be composted — except meat, fats or animal protein, which smell bad and don't break down easily. But vegetable scraps, coffee grounds, eggshells and such make great compost.

Recycling opportunities are growing in the Magic Valley, Shultz said. But some things will take a change in lifestyle.

Many things are thrown away and hauled to the landfill, not because they are broken or worn out — simply because they are no longer needed, Shultz said.

But they don't need to take up landfill space either. Still usable items can be donated to thrift stores, including the Idaho Youth Ranch, Salvation Army, Deseret Industries and St. Vincent DePaul, which support a variety of charitable efforts.

Sheriff speaks out against new gun law

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — Kenneth Curry Sheriff Pierce says a legal opinion about a new federal law that disarms anyone with misdemeanor domestic violence convictions, including policemen and soldiers, is not a deterrent to the ranks of his department. But he takes a dim view of the law's potential effect, the same rank effect in September, and Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms Director John DeLoach notified police departments nationwide about the new rules. "I don't condone domestic violence, but our job is to protect people's rights," he said. "You take a young couple. A situation develops, were law enforcement gets involved."

"Thirty years later, they're working things out and they're happily married, yet they lose their gun rights."

He has asked attorneys for a review of the law and accompanying Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms regulations.

Albertson's will pay 2.3 million to man's heirs

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Albertson Inc. has agreed to pay $2.3 million over the next 20 years to the sons of a man who died while being restrained by store employees who accused him of shoplifting.

The civil settlement was reached Tuesday by the Boise-based nationwide grocery and drug store chain and the family of William Alexander, 32, who died of a heart attack on Aug. 5, 1995.

while eight workers pinned him down because they suspected him of stealing toothpaste and a toothbrush.

"This is not any admission of guilt," Albertson spokesman Michael Reut said of the settlement. "We've said from the beginning that this was a set of tragic circumstances. There was never any criminal conduct on anyone's part."

Richard Schirler, whose law firm initially represented Alexander's family, said Albertson had wanted to settle the civil case for some time.

U of I wants to improve image

MOSCOW (AP) — The University of Idaho is working to improve its image.

The school has announced nine Idaho advertising and public relations agencies about the possibility of a major statewide image project.

President Robert Hoover announced that the school has requested information from the companies, but said he doesn't know how much the university is prepared to spend on the campaign.

In charge of the project is Bob Hietanen, former Boise hospital executive, who in July was appointed special to the president for marketing. "We are looking for a firm to work with us and enhance our statewide image over several years and help us ultimately better serve the state," Hoover said.

Jerry Wallace, the vice president for finance and administration, said the requests are to determine what it would cost to put together a marketing effort.

This fiscal year, only $100,000 was budgeted for marketing. "We won't be building a budget until later in the spring so it is actually part of the process of determining what you need," Hoover said.

Miner wants to reopen Golden Hand mine

BOISE (AP) — A miner has applied for a permit to reopen a gold mine in the Frank Church-River of No Return Wilderness.

Jack Walker, owner of American Independence Mines and Minerals Inc. of Big Creek, proposes reconstructing 2.7 miles of road to the Golden Hand Mine so he can explore and reopen the underground mine 40 miles northeast of McCall.

Federal wilderness areas are closed to vehicle traffic. But, valid existing mining claims are protected.

Walker successfully fought a 15-year battle to prove the claim valid. Now, the Forest Service must provide "reasonable access," said Jim Egnew, Payette Forest mineral program manager. But that does not mean it has to allow trucks. "It could be a backpack or horse case," he said. "There is a long way to go before this is going to happen."

Walker has a small mill on private land outside the wilderness.

For Holmberg, who mines in central Idaho and knows Walker, said the Forest Service would be breaking the law if it prevented Walker from mining his claim.

"Jack is an honest man trying to make an honest living and being harassed by every possible thing that could be put in his way," Holmberg said. "If they can stall long enough for people to run out of money or die, they'll have won the battle."

Yellowstone braces for loss

JACKSON, Wyo. (AP) — An idea that was supposed to raise $5.7 million for Yellowstone National Park over three years overlooked a special national pass.

The oversight might take a $1 million bite out of expected revenues, park officials said.

Arise is the experimental fee program that went into effect on Dec. 20 at many national parks. The fee program was authorized by Congress and put into place at certain sites managed by the Interior Department.

But there was a problem with the $25 Golden Eagle pass, which is good for a year of admission to all national parks and other attractions across the nation, officials said.

"The $6.7 million estimate includes the assumption that the Golden Eagle would go to $50," said Yellowstone spokeswoman Martina Korte.

Thieves play 'Scrooge' in Utah

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Thieves looted the Salvation Army's Salt Lake City offices of between $7,000 and $8,000 in charitable donations.

The cash stolen early Tuesday came from proceeds collected in kettles, staffed by bell ringers outside retail outlets, said the organization's director of social services, Jerry Miller.

Burglars ransacked a window screen and put into place an open about 30 canvas bags of money were stolen from a metal cage.

Officials now plan to secure the cash differently.

Miller believed insurance would cover the loss, which was to be used to buy Christmas presents for needy children.

Utah's state workers may feel downside impact

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — After five years of riding Utah's rising economic wave, state workers may fall under the shadow of the two-headed specter of performance-based salaries and downsizing.

Legislators are drafting bills with those goals, touting the need to introduce more businesslike efficiency standards to the state's work force.

Meanwhile, Gov. Mike Leavitt has proposed holding back $100 million a year in state funds to help pay for a massive renovation and expansion of highways and freeways over the next 10 years.

If the economy, rapidly growing for most of this decade, should cool off, Leavitt's cash commitment could mean budget cutbacks.

"These are very dangerous times for state employees," warned Nancy Sechrest, director of the Utah Public Employees Association. "It constantly remind our members that every time that gavel drops (to open the Legislature) in January, every one of them could be eliminated."

Utah's 15,000 workers have received salary and benefit increases averaging 4 percent each of the past five years. But Leavitt and legislative leaders are recommending a 3 percent increase for next year.

Yet at a cost of $66 million, even that compensation package is not assured — not with the tax increases being proposed to kick-start the decade-long, $2.6 billion highway-construction program.

Some lawmakers are leery about Leavitt's plan for a 7.5-cent gas-tax increase phased in over three years and a near-doubling in the annual vehicle-registration fee. Critics prefer the state siphon dollars from current budgets before hitting up the taxpayers for more of their pay.

State employee expenses are an obvious target: Personnel account for nearly 30 percent of expenditures in most departments, Sechrest said.

"To find state dollars (for highway construction) if we have a downturn in the economy will be ugly," Sechrest predicted. "State employees will not pay twice for the I-15 construction; they will not pay the tax increases and take a cut in pay."

Millworker voted AFL-CIO president

LEWISTON (AP) — Potlatch Corp. millworker David Whaley has his work cut out for him as the Idaho AFL-CIO's new president.

"I plan to get this labor movement back on its feet," Whaley said, and plans to keep to the course set by his predecessor, Randy Ambuehl.

After an election campaign bruising for Idaho's labor movement, Ambuehl resigned earlier this month.

He said he wanted to spend more time with his family and let someone else fight organized labor's battles.

Judge: Jetboat limits won't revert on river

LEWISTON (AP) — A federal judge has scuttled conservationists' immediate hopes for turning back the clock on jetboat limits in the Hells Canyon National Recreation Area.

U.S. District Judge James Redden of Portland has dismissed a lawsuit filed by the Hells Canyon Preservation Council and other groups.

"Of course, we're delighted," said Sandra Mitchell, Hells Canyon Alliance director. The alliance has fought for ample jetboat trips in the canyon during the summer.

The Forest Service this month decided a proposal to limit jetboats in the summer season will remain, despite the alliance's state tour and a $100,000 media campaign.

Redden ruled the suit was premature because the Forest Service still must consider administrative appeals pending against parts of the plan.

He rejected the conservationists' contention the Forest Service should be forced to regulate jetboat use based on 1975 levels. The alliance argued the courts should not consider the issues until the plan is completed and appeals resolved, Mitchell said.

Utah files suit under 'lemon law'

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — American Isuzu Motors Inc. is the target of a state lawsuit filed under Utah's lemon law on behalf of a consumer who can't drive her new truck.

Court documents state Melinda White finally parked her 1995 Isuzu Rodeo last April after at least 14 trips to several dealerships, none of which succeeded in repairing a severe steering problem.

White bought the vehicle from a local dealership in July 1995. Two weeks later, White contacted the dealer and pulled her out to the right when traveling over 50 mph. Moderate wind also made driving very unsafe, she charged.

After her numerous visits to mechanics failed to correct the problem, she finally contacted the Better Business Bureau.

FAMILY LIFE

Grandma's advice sounds like criticism to young mom's ears

DEAR ABBY
Abigail Varburton

DEAR ABBY: I have read your column every day for a long time, and I need an honest and objective opinion, which I'm sure you will give me.

I am almost 20 and have been married to "Todd" for nearly a year. We have a beautiful 9-month-old daughter named "Claire." We are living with my parents until we can get on our feet.

Todd's mother, stepfather and grandparents all live with us. My problem: Between my mother and my mother-in-law, I get comments of some sort on the way we are raising our daughter.

I disagree with many of the techniques they used when they were raising children. What seems like advice or ideas to them seems like criticism to me. My mother especially is always saying that I should be doing this or that. Both Mom and my mother-in-law think that because they have been through it, they know what is best for our daughter.

I love our daughter with all my heart and consider myself a good mother.

Although Todd's mother and mine did very well raising us, now it's my turn to raise my daughter the way her father and I think is best.

I love Mom and Todd's mother very much, and I have tried to talk to them about constantly giving me advice, but they get defensive and remind me that they have been parents for more than 20 years. Both insist that I should listen to them.

Abby, I know Claire better than anyone else, so shouldn't I know the best way to be a parent to her?

—YOUNG MOTHER IN PENNSYLVANIA

DEAR YOUNG MOTHER: Yes. Now all you need is the courage of your convictions. Stick to your guns and don't be pressured by all the unsolicited advice you're getting. You need not apologize for doing things your way.

DEAR ABBY: I work in a small office, seven women and one man. The holiday tradition is that the boss and his wife host a holiday dinner in their home for the staff. Last year was my first time to attend.

I was taught from childhood that when you go to someone's home for a party, you bring the hostess a gift. These gifts were not very expensive and our hosts seemed to be appreciative. The staff contributed to a joint gift for the boss.

Upon returning to the office the next work day, I was told by one of the longtime employees, "We don't buy gifts for the boss's wife and daughter." When you work in an environment of female employees, there can be a lot of back-stabbing, which I don't want to be a part of in any way. Now I don't know what to do about this this year. I would feel very awkward.

—ENGAGEMENT—

Nichole Aston and Micah Christensen
Aston — Christensen

BURLEY — Paul and Susan Aston of Burley announce the engagement of their daughter, Nichole, to Micah LeGrande Christensen, son of Chris and Michele Christensen of Townsend, Mont.

Aston is a 1995 graduate of Burley High School and is currently a sophomore at Ricks College, majoring in English.

Christensen is a 1991 graduate of Broadwater County High School. He served a two-year LDS Mission in the Alabama, Birmingham mission. He graduated from Ricks College in construction management in 1996, and is currently employed at Edelmeier's Construction in Rexburg.

The wedding is planned for Saturday in the Logan, Utah, LDS Temple. A reception will be held that evening from 7 to 9 p.m. at the Burley 2nd, 4th and 10th Ward LDS Church.

The couple will reside in Rexburg.

ward arriving empty-handed, and yet I don't want it to look like I'm seeking brownie points.

Although I won't be comfortable with this decision, I won't take a gift this year, but what should I do next year? Help me if you can please.

—SHOULD ETIQUETTE PREVAIL?

DEAR SHOULD: It is gracious to give the hostess a gift, but in order to avoid conflict with your co-workers, you could send it a day or two after the party.

(And though it's also thoughtful to send the child a gift, it's not necessary.)

DEAR ABBY: I disagree with your advice that "Fed Up in Milwaukee" (the woman who received only three responses to 45 invitations) should call everyone she invited and ask whether or not they plan to attend.

Abby, why is it her responsibility to track down all those ill-mannered people who are too lazy to pick up the phone?

Perhaps a suggestion for "Fed Up": Call the three people who did respond and cancel the party, with apologies. Then plan something nice for you and your husband for that date: a play, a special dinner, anything so you are not at home that evening. Wait for the surprised reactions of those who didn't respond but showed up at your house expecting a party.

I did this once. After that, those who were invited to my home and wanted to come let me know in advance, just as my invitation requested.

—SENIOR IN SAN CLEMENTE, CALIF.
DEAR SENIOR: Although not everyone would be comfortable following your suggestion, it shows creativity plus a healthy dose of "chutzpah," and teaches a valuable lesson.

Cowboy fans backlash through ticket sales

IRVING, Texas - Are Dallas Cowboys fans beginning to lash back at their wayward team? Fans may be showing their disapproval of Dallas' on- and off-field woes by taking their time buying tickets for Saturday's wild-card game against the Minnesota Vikings.

Under 1,000 seats remained when ticket windows closed Tuesday and none was sold Wednesday because of the holiday. If any tickets are unsold as of close of business Thursday, the game won't be televised locally - something that hasn't happened in years.

Team spokesman Rich Dalrymple blamed the slow sales on fans not being accustomed to a first-round playoff game. This is the first game Dallas has played in the wild-card round since 1991, and that one was on the road.

Despite a fifth straight division title, the defending Super Bowl champions haven't given fans much to cheer this season. Disappointments have ranged from the drug-related suspensions of Michael Irvin, Shane Carver and Leon Lett to an offense that did not score a touchdown in three of its last six games.

At 10-6, the Cowboys have the worst record of the three division champions in the NFC, meaning this is likely to be the only playoff game at Texas Stadium this postseason.

The only way Dallas will play another game at Texas Stadium this season will be if both the Cowboys and San Francisco 49ers make it to the NFC championship game. As a wild-card team, the 49ers must travel to any game against a division champion, even though they have a better record than the Cowboys.

Holiday spirit grips Florida fishing rodeo

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. - When Vince and Patti Carr hosted the Pompano Beach Fishing Rodeo Christmas party at their home on Dec. 18, they weren't expecting gifts. So imagine how they felt when three of the guests promised to donate $30,000 to one of the Rodeo's educational projects.

At the Rodeo party, executive director Patti Carr told her guests about her plans. As soon as she finished, Frank Johnson of Mold Craft Products, which makes soft plastic offshore fishing lures, said Mold Craft was in for $10,000. Then Carl and Tonia Herndon of Blackfin, which builds sportfishing boats, pledged $10,000. Then Charles and Laura Seitz of Sands Harbor Hotel & Marina, the site of the Rodeo weigh-in and awards ceremony, pledged $10,000.

Middies outlast Bears, 42-38

The Associated Press

HONOLULU - Quarterback Ben Foy ran for two fourth-quarter touchdowns and Navy had 646 yards of total offense in a 42-38 victory over California in the Aloha Bowl on Wednesday.

The kick-scoring game was a contest in halves. The two teams exchanged for 63 points in the first half with California (6-6) holding a 35-28 lead.

Over the final two periods, the only scoring came on Foy's two TDs and a 41-yard field goal by Cal's Ryan Longwell.

Foy scored on runs of 2 and 20 yards and completed 5 of 8 passes for 115 yards. Foy was set up by his biggest pass play of the game, a 55-yarder to Cory Schemm with two minutes left.

The Bears appeared to have the game in hand as they staved the fourth period with a 38-28 lead. Ben Foy led the Middies on scoring drives of 80 and 84 yards.

Cal totaled 434 yards of offense. Pat Barnes completed 27 of 37 passes for 313 yards and three touchdowns.

California's Debrah O'Neal set the tone for the see-saw game by winning the opening kickoff, a 60-yarder for 100 yards. It beat out the previous mark of 94 yards set by Hanna Heiman of BYU in 1992.

After missing a field goal on its first possession, Navy got a 7-yard run by Tim Canham after O'Neal set up the score with a 40-yard pass.

A 6-yard pass from Barnes to Bobby Shaw gave the Bears a short-lived 13-7 lead. The Middies responded with two scores - a 1-yard plunge by Chris McCoy and 4-yard run by Ross Scott.

University of California defenders swarm Navy quarterback Chris McCoy, center, during the first quarter of the Aloha Bowl in Honolulu on Wednesday.

California bounced back with two scores to move ahead, 28-21, on a 20-yard pass from Barnes to Sean Balluff and 31-yard run by O'Neal.

Navy tied it at 28-28 on McCoy's 2-yard run that capped a 75-yard drive highlighted by a 62-yard hookup from McCoy to Schemm.

With seconds remaining in the half, the Bears countered with a 20-yard pass from Barnes to Shaw that made it 35-28 at the half.

Lakers 'toy with' Phoenix on Christmas

The Associated Press

PHOENIX - A national television audience got a chance to see two rival teams Wednesday.

With the Lakers, they saw just how dominant Shaquille O'Neal can be when the other team has no one who can defend him.

With the Suns, they saw how so much talent and so few minutes aren't such a great combination.

O'Neal had 25 points - one less than the Suns' starting five - and 15 rebounds to lead the Lakers to a 108-87 victory, their sixth straight over the Suns and their third this season.

'They had Robert Horry on me. I don't know what that was about.'

-Shaquille O'Neal

Phoenix Suns forward Robert Horry gets tied up with Rick Van Vleet of the Los Angeles Lakers, causing a jump ball during the first quarter of play Wednesday in Phoenix.

"They were just trying with us out there," Horry said. "We tried to crack him right before, but they just went down into Shaq in the post."

The defending NBA champions won their eighth straight game, improving to a league-best 25-3.

Grant Hill tied his season-high with 27 points for Detroit (20-6), which came in with the NBA's second-best record.

Bulls 95, Pistons 83

CHICAGO - Scottie Pippen scored 27 points, Michael Jordan added 23 and Dennis Rodman pulled down 22 rebounds Wednesday night as the Chicago Bulls rolled to their 14th consecutive victory over Detroit, 95-83.

Instead of establishing themselves as legitimate threats, however, the Pistons fell four games behind Chicago in the Central Division. They have been outscored by 30 points in their two losses to the Bulls.

George goes from Heisman to top AP NFL achievement

The Associated Press

NEW YORK - Eddie George took a quick path from the Heisman Trophy to The Associated Press NFL Offensive Rookie of the Year.

The star running back was just as sensational with the Houston Oilers as he was at Ohio State. He gained 1,368 yards on 335 carries, a 4.1 average and scored eight touchdowns.

That was good enough to easily win the balloting by a unanimous panel of sports writers announced Wednesday by the AP. George received 74 of 83 votes, far ahead of New England rookie Terrell Davis, who had eight. George and Glenn were teammates at Ohio State. Third was fullback Mike Almon of Tampa Bay with six, followed by wide receiver-kick returner Eddie Kennison of St. Louis and guard Jonathan Ogden of Baltimore with two.

"I know like that are everything a kid sees now," George said. "The Heisman, Rookie of the Year, Super Bowl MVP. I think everyone shoots for those things, usually. I want someday to be up there with the best of them, players like Emmitt Smith, Barry Sanders, Michael Eric, Brent Farris and all of them."

NBA mom forms support group for courtside mothers

The Associated Press

CLEVELAND - Cleveland Cavaliers guard Terrell Brandon wants his mother to take it easy and watch him do all the work on the basketball court.

But Charlotte Brandon just isn't that kind of mom.

"He just wants me to go get a pedicure, a manicure or a body wrap and go sit on the bench in the Bahamas," she said. "But I tell him, 'You sorry, I can't sit on the beach all day. I've got work to do.'"

Last August, Charlotte Brandon founded the Mothers of Professional Basketball Players, a support group for women whose sons or daughters play in the NBA or upcoming Women's NBA.

It occupies much of her time, which makes her son grumpy. But she's proud of what she's accomplished.

"I want her to rest now," she said. "But I think it's a great idea and I've been backing her up 100 percent the whole time."

Charlotte Brandon noticed there wasn't much interaction among NBA mothers when she started attending her son's games. After having lunch with the mothers of Shawn Kemp, Gary Payton, Jerry Stackhouse, Alonzo Mourning and Jason Kidd, she decided to form the MPBB.

The second half saw the reserves take the floor with Gina Hestberg hitting a pair of shots inside for Jerome.

"Everybody stepped up and played hard. We had four good quarters of basketball," said Jerome coach Julie Schoen. "It is an accomplishment in itself to finish 15-0."

Other team members included Patricia Anderson, Kelecy Collins, Nichole Ganges, Nicole Pauls, Anna Lott, Shannon German, Samantha VanderMeulen, Erin Landers and Allison Marshall.

Bowls offer more than just a title game

The bowl alliance met its goal of matching the two highest ranked teams available. Unfortunately, No. 2 Arizona State won't meet its goal.

In the Holiday Bowl, where there's no WAC champ involved for a change, it's No. 13 Washington and running back George Holton vs. No. 8 Colorado and quarterback Roy Demme.

Even before the major postseason begins, there already are winners and losers: Among the winners: The Big 12 Conference placed two teams - Nebraska and Texas - in top athletic games (each team receives $8.5 million).

What's the deal with Larry? Is he chased or did he just get the water knocked out of him?

Elephants, whiskey and bamboo rafts

Things were going well until the elephant was riding began to wander off the trail and uproot succulent young trees. I didn't mind, but my guide began lashing the beast with a vengeance. The elephant responded by bellowing and stamping his feet in an obvious show of disapproval.

From my vantage, high atop the animal's neck, lusty application of the whip seemed a surprisingly bad idea. My guide, who was aloof, appeared indifferent to the elephant's emotional state.

"Why," I asked myself, "do I wind up in these situations?"

It was March, 1990, and I was "killing a few days" in northern Thailand. I never would've ventured into the wilds of the Golden Triangle on my own, so I joined an outfitter who promised four days of hiking, elephant rides and whitewater adventure on bamboo rafts.

FORCE OF NATURE
William Brock

My companions were the standard multi-national flotam one expects to see in a back eddy near Laos and Burma. There was an Irishman and his Scots wife, a young German couple, a Londoner and "Aman Express Ed" - a maniac from New York.

Our guides were two brothers from a displaced Karen hill tribe that originally hailed from Burma. "Bojo" was a capable 17-year-old, but his younger brother was clearly a loose cannon.

We hiked most of the first day, stopping only to lounge in an al fresco hot spring. After cresting a pass, we descended to a simple Karen village for the night.

Built on stilts, the wooden homes were devoid of furniture, running water and electricity; basic sanitation was not a point of civic pride. Water buffaloes lounged beneath the buildings and creased old women sat nearby, wearily puffing their pipes.

Fortified with Maetang whiskey - a foul brew deservingly unfit for export - we drifted off to sleep. Our dreams were shattered before dawn when a dead old crane began slamming away on a primeval rice thresher directly beneath the house.

Needless to say, we got an early start and a mid-afternoon found us clambering aboard a string of elephants. I, of course, drew the rogue.

Bojo's little brother, who introduced himself as "Homeboy," passed the rest of the afternoon subtly goading my elephant. I tolerated it until he began openly whipping the beast.

"Homeboy! Whip no good!" I yelled. "Wild elephants must whip," he replied. "You see."

I failed to see how whipping my elephant made things any better, but I humored him. A riped-up Homeboy would doubtless produce a riled-up elephant.

The pachyderm procession finally ended at a village on the banks of the Maetang River. There were plenty of other Western trekkers about and at least a dozen bamboo rafts under construction. I saw Bojo slip a few hundred baht into one of the shipwrights.

After another rough bivouac, we commandeered a raft for the final leg of the journey. It consisted of a dozen bamboo poles, each about 35 feet long and 6 inches across; the butt ends were lashed together to form a sturdy, square bow while the ends tapered away to a useless, pointed stem.

With Bojo at the bow and Homeboy ankle-deep in water at the back, we embarked on a race to a lovely riverside inn, miles downstream. "Very nice place, but very small," Bojo said, gesturing toward the armada of rival rafts. "We go fast, get there first. Go slow, others first."

We opted for speed and Bojo did us proud, leaping around like a 140-pound pole vaulter as he guided the bow-pole low-water hazards. Homeboy, also armed with a pole, kept things tidy at the back.

As the miles unfolded, we passed countless wrecked rafts - broached in every conceivable manner on sharp river rocks. Many had come to grief high above the water, 15 or 20 feet up the banks, causing me to wonder at how much bigger the Maetang got.

Another raft drew alongside and Wilhelm, the big German, snatched up a spare pole and nudged the rival captain into the river. Then, like a scene from Huckleberry Finn, he pushed the skipperless craft into a rocky channel - dooming its crew to hours of wading. We cheered lustily and fended off all comers as we made our way to the enchanted riverside inn. We spent one last disreputable evening together, then scattered to the winds.

Taking a shot at chukars

Elusive game birds hide on hard-to-reach hillsides

By James Krunich
Times-News correspondent

Heading for the ridge, I noticed a green patch of cheat grass beneath a rocky outcrop. In the dull light of late December, the small green strip looked inviting.

About 30 yards below the greenery, Ebony's tail began to bent with excitement. Bruce's rhythm also increased from a slow, tired trudge to a full-tail gallop. He skirted the edge of the grass and steadied himself at the bottom of the outcrop.

"Birds!" Bruce yelled as a covey erupted into flight.

Our shotguns barked out a greeting and a pair of chukars fell to earth. The survivors swooped across the canyon to safety.

We collected the fallen birds, then plotted our next assault.

"Let's drive along the canyon and glass the slopes for more green grass," Bruce suggested. "I'll save time and our legs."

His strategy proved a winning one. We discovered two more patches of green grass and each contained chukars.

The moral from this hunt, and many others over the years, is that green grass is an almost-sure bet for chukars toward the end of the season.

Like any other animals, they've got to eat

Take a good look because these chukars may be the only ones you'll ever see on level ground. Chukars prefer to spend their time on canyon walls - and the steeper and rockier it is, the better they like it. Hurting chukars requires the footwork of a mountain goat and the stamina of an ox. In many cases, hunters end up shooting with one foot 2 or 3 feet higher than the other.

The moral from this hunt, and many others over the years, is that green grass is an almost-sure bet for chukars toward the end of the season. Like any other animals, they've got to eat and green grass beats dead, brown grass any day.

and green grass beats dead, brown grass any day.

There are two reasons why green grass is a virtual oasis for chukars.

First, it has much more nutritional value than the brown stuff. Secondly, grass must be exposed to be green - therefore easy pickings for a meal; no digging or scratching is required, so the birds save valuable energy.

Successful chukar hunters also pay a lot of attention to the sun. Chukars tend to haunt south-facing hillsides and canyon walls that get the most sun - and warmth - on short winter days. The southern exposure also means less snow, which means more opportunity for grass to sprout.

Binooculars aren't essential, but they're never a bad idea for hunters who need to cover a lot of ground with their eyes.

Small patches of green can easily be overlooked by the naked eye, particularly on cloudy or drizzly days.

Another virtue to binoculars is that they save a lot of energy. Chukars can be spotted before they're speoked by hunters, which allows shooters to make tactical maneuvers before the birds scatter to the four winds.

Because they favor steep, rocky country, chukars aren't the easiest animals to hunt - but there are a few simple techniques for coming home with a bird in the hand.

Please keep In mind...

Chukar season ends Dec. 31. The daily bag limit is eight and hunters cannot have more than 16 birds in their possession.

Elk hunts may give state's ranchers new life

The Associated Press

BOISE - It's an old story in the New West.

The government makes a move to improve battered rangelands. Ranchers fight back. Environmentalists and sportsmen jump into the fray, and the whole mess ends up in a federal court or Congress.

The latest battleground is Owyhee County, and the issue is cattle and elk. At stake are the health of the range and the survival of ranchers. "I don't think it's been any worse than this since the Great Depression," said Mike Hanley, a cattle rancher from Jordan Valley, Ore. "We're getting more and more restrictions on the land, and more people making demands to make their demands fit together."

But there is hope of a happy ending, one that appeals to ranchers and wildlife lovers alike. In places such as the Sangre de Cristo Mountains of Colorado, the sides are finding ways to make their demands fit together.

One way is by paying ranchers to raise wild elk instead of domesticated cattle. "It works extremely well for us," said Ty Ryland, ranch manager on the Forbes-Trinchera ranch at Fort Gardner, Colo. "It gives us the opportunity to work our private ranch, and it gives the public a chance to come on our land and hunt."

There's a lot of money in the Jim Bass, 38, carries feed for his horses from a shed on his ranch in Owyhee County southwest of Boise. Bass is one of the many Owyhee ranchers who might benefit from a program paying them to raise elk instead of cattle.

Ranching for Wildlife program for ranchers; some get as much as $8,000 from their private hunts. Hunters like it, too.

The program opens up vast tracts of game-rich private land that often was off-limits before.

The idea sounds appealing to Hanley and other Owyhee County ranchers. It might do the most good in the Reynolds Creek area, where ranchers have pooled more than 12,000 acres of private land.

There, Jim Bass, who ranches with his father, Dick, has established a guide business for deer and elk. Few hunters are allowed into the area now unless they pay a trespass fee. He thinks a version of Ranching for Wildlife could work in Idaho.

"I don't see why it wouldn't," he said. "I think it's time the ranchers get something out of the wildlife."

But Idaho's Department of Fish and Game is leery of changing the traditional ban on private interests selling public wildlife.

"I think we are a ways away from that," said Tracey Trent, Idaho Department of Fish and Game southwest regional supervisor.

The department is giving landowners permits to hunt elk on their own land, which they can share with their family. It also is considering allowing ranchers to give the permits to sportsmen, who would pay a trespass fee for hunting on the land.

However, the program leaves out the hunter who can't afford to pay the big fees. Tom Hinkle hunts elk in the Owyhee Mountains and is angry about the lack of free access to the best hunting areas.

He said he likes the idea of trading fee public access and management for elk tags, even if ranchers make a lot of money.

"I'm just one guy, but there ought to be a solution out there other than eliminating the whole herd," he said.

Even though they're not very smart, cobia are worth tagging

Knight-Ridder News Service

MIAMI - Cobia are not exactly the rocket scientists of the fishing world. They swim up to fishing boats, watch the anglers rig baits, then bite them nonetheless. Captain Lori Parker caught and released the same cobia twice in one hour in Key West Harbor.

What endears the lumbering brown game fish to Parker and her charter customers is its twisting, jumping, never-say-die pugilism - a boxer short on talent but long on heart.

"They ain't too bright," Parker said.

The guide and her clients have adopted several hundred cobia that school on Key West's Gulf wrecks during the winter months. Whenever a client baits a cobia, Parker inserts an identification tag below its ridgeback dorsal fin. The tag bears the names of angler and guide, tells where and when the fish was caught and gives its overall and fork lengths. The tags are provided free by Jim Franks at Gulf Coast Research Laboratory in Ocean Springs, Miss.

Franks says the eight-year-old tagging program has yielded a wealth of information.

Fishing Rodeo nets cash

Knight-Ridder News Service

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. - When Vince and Patti Carr hosted the Pompano Beach Fishing Rodeo Christmas party at their house on Dec. 18, they weren't expecting gifts. So imagine how they felt when three of the guests promised to donate $30,000 to one of the Rodeo's educational projects.

"I was totally blown away," said Patti Carr, executive director of the Rodeo. Since 1978, the Rodeo has donated more than $400,000 to conservation, education and community programs and sunk 24 artificial reefs. Among the organizations that have benefited is the International Game Fish Association.

My idea was to see if I could get any corporate people to match our $10,000 donation and see if we could make a much bigger contribution.

Bird deaths plaguing Salton Sea end — for now

SAN DIEGO (AP) — For the first time in months, the murky water of California's largest lake is free from dead birds felled by a mysterious outbreak of avian botulism, federal researchers announced Thursday.

Over-estimated 20,000 birds, including 20 percent of the water's endangered brown pelican population, are believed to have died at the Salton Sea. And it's not a matter of whether there will be another disaster — but when.

"It will occur," said Clark Bloom, refuge manager of the Salton Sea National Wildlife Refuge about 160 miles southeast of Los Angeles. "I don't know if it will be the same magnitude and local causes is under-studied. They also found that they were dealing with sick fish as well as dying birds."

The strongest theory suggests the birds were infected by the fish, primarily tilapia, who were eating algae on bacterial infections. But did the stressed fish get sick as a result of the sea's rising salinity, bacteria, pollution from Mexico, temperature or other factors?

"We're dealing with delicate balances," said Mike Friend, director of the National Wildlife Health Center in Madison, Wis. "As these become disrupted in different ways, it facilitates ... different diseases."

Researchers plan to conduct lab tests to determine whether there is a link between the sick fish and dead birds. They also hope to study the lake's entire ecosystem, similar research conducted on the nation's bays.

But that could cost millions of dollars — money nobodies can afford. "We're all short on budgets with cut-backs over the last couple years," said

Frank Shipley, director of the Northwest Biological Sciences Center in Seattle. "While we acknowledge, this is a real important problem, we've got lots of other real important problems."

Added Bloom, whose refuge spent $250,000 on the recent disaster: "The cause of the botulism, but it wasn't there to begin with. It had to be taken out of other pots, so to speak."

From Aug. 15 to Nov. 15, more than 14,000 birds were concentrated or banded in mass graves, including 11,125 terns and 8,525 winter pelicans. About 5,000 more were from different species. Others decomposed in the hot weather and never recovered.

Only about 1,000 birds were taken to a restoration project in Orange County. So far, about 300 of those have died and only 350 have been released back into the wild.

"I can't think of any event anywhere that has killed so many endangered species in the Pacific Ocean area," said Shipley. "The science can find a tool to answer the question, but the public policy must find the resources."

Massive die-offs of both fish and birds have repeatedly plagued the sea that was created in the early 1900s by water-hungry developers who made an ill-conceived cut in the Colorado River.

The water quickly filled the current sea area, which is about 277 feet below sea level and is 35 miles long by 15 miles wide at its widest point.

The break has long since been fixed, but runoff from nearby farms continues to provide water. Seepage, a closed-off lake, water only escapes through evaporation, further concentrating salts and other contaminants.

The lake is now more than 30 percent saltier than the Pacific Ocean water. Federal researchers hope the latest disaster will bring some attention — and funds — to the sea's problems.

How to Buy a Great Used Car

There are certain basic things you should look for when you examine a car.

1. Find out the previous owner's name.
2. Automatic Transmission fluid should be pink and not smell burnt.
3. Coolant shouldn't be rusty and no green stains on the radiator.
4. No oil spots around the engine.
5. Look for rust, especially in the trunk, wheel wells and rocker panels under the doors.
6. Look for new wheels, ripply body work, panels that don't match.
7. Uneven tire wear may mean an alignment problem.
8. Make sure the car comes with a service book and logbook.
9. To check shocks and suspension push down and quickly release each corner of the car. It should not bounce more than 2 times.
10. Seats shouldn't be saggy or ripped. Make sure belts and controls work.
