Chief has faith in community policing

DeVore's 'gospel': Proactive approach can help curb crime

By Kent McCreary
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Police in Twin Falls are shifting from being reactive to proactive: from chasing problems to troubleshooting.

The philosophy is a catch phrase in law enforcement. It's called community policing: getting police officers closer to the community; solving problems instead of just answering calls; and getting the community involved in preventing crimes.

Lee DeVore, Twin Falls police chief, learned the concept at his earlier jobs in southern California. Twin Falls police chief spends a fair amount of time explaining the concept to people.

"I call it preaching the gospel," DeVore said. "We're continually talking about it and trying to get the issues in front of the guys."

It's one of two major police department initiatives since DeVore was hired as chief in August 1995. The other is to reorganize the department.

DeVore doesn't just preach the philosophy of community policing.

"He walks the walk. He believes it and he teaches it," said Twin Falls police Capt. Bob Hodge.

DeVore is among about 50 police officers, civilians and community activists recruited by the Western Regional Community Policing Center to teach the philosophy to communities in eight Western states.

The teaching program is based at the Oregon State Police Academy in Monmouth, Ore., and funded by a federal COPS grant, said program manager Maria Rubio.

The program will reach a session in Twin Falls in March or April, Hodge said.

Twin Falls Police Chief Lee DeVore says the most important part of community policing is to empower officers on the street to take the initiative to solve problems.

DeVore definitely can speak to the material, Rubio said.

"We wouldn't use him if he didn't," she said.

DeVore got some of his education in community policing on the streets, working on a professional and personal level.

Walking the walk

In the spring of 1991, the city of Fullerton, Calif., launched Operation Clean-Up, a 25-week anti-gang campaign. DeVore, then a Fullerton police captain, directed the law-enforcement end of the project.

The intent was to apply city services to curb gang violence, graffiti and drug trafficking in Fullerton's bad neighborhoods, according to stories in the Los Angeles Times.

Police and firefighters, city maintenance and development departments inspected deteriorating buildings, and used community services to meet the neighborhoods' needs. Police started foot and bicycle patrols in the area; the city even increased street sweepings from once every two weeks to once a week.

Inspections for building code violations were done to force neighborhood improvements. The deteriorating buildings had led to a dramatic increase in crimes such as drug dealing.

The second area the project hit was Baker Street in Fullerton, said Sharyl Lewis, a 30-year resident. The small side street of neglected four-plex rental units had become inundated with gangs and covered with graffiti, Lewis said.

A public meeting drew more than 300 concerned neighborhood residents, said Chuck Carey, a community activist and 21-year resident of the area.

"Capt. DeVore was there, and the city manager. We said, 'We want something like Operation Clean-Up in our own neighborhood,' and they said, 'We've been getting a lot of calls, and we want it to stop.'"

Soil conservation shift stirs up controversy

Critics say they object to being 'kept in the dark'

By Karen Tolkkinen
Times-News writer

BOISE — The thing that bothers Steve Miller the most is not being included.

Not being included, not given enough notice, not enough warning.

"When you're kept in the dark, you're suspicious," said the Camas County commissioner and soil conservation district supervisor about Gov. Phil Batt's proposal to shift the Soil Conservation Commission into the Agriculture Department.

The shift is meant to more efficiently comply with a judge's order to develop a plan to clean up 962 polluted streams in Idaho.

Opponents fear the move will result in a loss of independence for local volunteers.

The commission — now appointed by the governor — assists the local, independent soil districts which work on a range of local water and soil quality issues.

Miller's criticism — and that of other farmers and soil conservationists — is reminiscent of the criticism Batt got during the nuclear waste debate of 1996. The deal, critics charged, was signed in the dark, without public involvement.

If the process had been open this time, a lot of the criticism would have been blunted, said Steve Johnson, executive director of the Idaho Grain Producers.

"I think we would have found a solution and perhaps we would have had so many opposing views on how to address the problem," he said. "That's always the best way to approach it, bring the stake holders in, define the problem and find a solution."

Members of his group also felt left out of the discussions, he said.

But other agriculture groups — including dairymen and cattlemen — support Batt's plan, and have been included in talks for the past two months.

Miller compared Batt's move to that of a corporate head, not someone who wants to win the support of volunteers. However, he did say he was notified of the meetings.

Batt's spokesman, Frank Lockwood, countered Miller's criticism.

"There was a real effort to involve people in this process," he said. "And we made certain the soil conservation community was well represented in that process."

It's not apt, he said, to compare the proposed move with the divisive nuclear waste issue of 1996.

But others see some similarity. Just as Batt moved quickly under the threat of nuclear waste shipments moving into Idaho, he acted decisively on this issue, said Lewis Eilers, president of the Idaho Dairymen's Association.

"He's a strong governor who knows what needs to be done and moves on it," he said.

And the state had to act soon after it was ordered in October to come up with a better plan to clean up polluted streams, said Bob Sears, director of the Idaho Cattle Association.

"It didn't leave us a lot of time," he said.

Several weeks after the judge's decision, Batt aide Jim Yost approached the autonomous soil conservation districts at their meeting in Moscow and told them they could choose between joining the Division of Environmental Quality or the Department of Agriculture.

Sears lauded Batt's move.

"If we'd waited for a grass-roots movement to say, 'Let's move over to the Department of Ag,' would it have ever come?"

Public hearings on the proposed move began Thursday afternoon and continued into the evening. Nobody testified in favor of the legislation. A second hearing is scheduled for Tuesday at 3 p.m.

Thursday, Kyle Howley, a soil conservation district supervisor in Latah County, said volunteers would stop working if they only got funding for the state's water quality project and local needs went ignored.

"Many of those supervisors would get angry and disgruntled and probably quit," Hawley told the Senate Agricultural Affairs Committee. "They don't get paid enough."

Dr. Dallas Murdoch hopes his new subdivision near Grace will fill soon with Utah residents looking to escape the congested Wasatch Front.

Idaho towns see opportunity in congested Wasatch Front

The Associated Press

GRACE — Dr. Dallas Murdoch gazes south. In his mind's eye, he sees a tide of Utah residents flooding into rural southeastern Idaho.

He smiles. Murdoch hopes part of that flow will settle in his new 40-acre Burton Canyon Estates subdivision that will be built in two phases on the edge of Grace. The first phase has 22 lots. Since its approval in October, one lot has been sold.

Murdoch isn't discouraged. It's only a matter of time before homeowners escaping Utah's congested Wasatch Front and filling up Preston and Malad will find Grace.

"Grace has been largely overlooked," Murdoch said. "We think there's a natural flow from Utah up to here."

People are moving into southeastern Idaho from Utah and elsewhere because they're seeking a better quality of life, low building costs and low crime rates, Murdoch said.

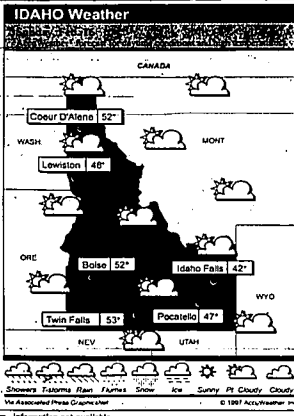

Most residential growth in the region has occurred in Preston, the county seat of Franklin County, and Malad, Oneida County's seat, during the last several years. Both towns are within a half-hour's drive of the Utah line.

"The counties have experienced growing pains with the influx of new residents, county assessors said, but for the most part residents and county leaders have welcomed the tax base increase that residential construction brings.

"You can't stop growth," Franklin County Assessor Richard Umbel said. "You want to grow."

ACROSS THE NATION

Rain pours across Southeast; snow whitens northern Plains

The Associated Press

Heavy rain fell across parts of the Southeast on Saturday, and snow was scattered over the northern Plains and around the lower Great Lakes.

Moderate to heavy rain fell early in the day along 20% of the Gulf Coast and the lower Atlantic Coast, as a cold front rolled across the region. In the 24 hours ending 7 a.m. EST, 1.99 inches of rain fell at Alma, Ga., 1.93 inches at Macon, Ga., 1.85 at Hatteras, N.C., 1.72 at Mobile, Ala., and 1.71 at Auburn, Ala.

By afternoon, the cold front had pushed out to sea and most of the rainfall had ended, although thunderstorms were still scattered in southern Florida.

A warm front over the northern Plains produced a variety of precipitation over South Dakota, with snow in the northeast an Aberdeen, and rain in the southeast in eastern South Dakota. The snow was scattered northeastward as far as Duluth, Minn.

Shiff wind blew across the western Plains, with gusts to 49 mph at Cheyenne, Wyo., and 43 at Cheyenne, Neb.

In the East, wind blew across the lower Great Lakes picking up moisture that fueled lake-effect rain fell at Alma, Ga., 1.93 inches at Macon, Ga., 1.85 at Hatteras, N.C., 1.72 at Mobile, Ala., and 1.71 at Auburn, Ala.

In Idaho, high pressure over northern Nevada through partly to mostly sunny skies for the majority of the state.

Maximum temperatures were warmest in the southwest valley, with 50s were common. Winds were 10 to 15 mph or less.

be able to do it in an orderly fashion. The county commissioners and city council look at it realistically and try to keep up with it."

Last year, Franklin County had $8.5 million in new construction. "I expect it to be about the same if not higher this year," Umbel said.

After adding figures from his most recent construction roll, he said 124 building permits have been taken out, with 91 of those for new homes.

That growth has its price, though. "It will take its toll on infrastructure," he said. "There'll be more demand for police and fire protection and schools. Our infrastructure is being taxed to the maximum."

During morning and evening when people are commuting 28 miles between Logan, Utah, and Preston along U.S. Highway 91, "it's a nightmare on the two-lane road," Umbel said. "It's a real zoo." So far, the growth hasn't been detrimental to Malad, Oneida County Assessor Kathryn Hill said.

"It may get to be a problem when it starts interfering with natural resources," she said. "You can see a little difference in downtown traffic. Schools are feeling it a little bit. Overall, I think most people are accepting it. A lot don't realize how much there is."

In 1990, only one or two new homes were added to Oneida County's tax rolls. "Since 1993, we've had about 30 new homes," she said.

A few years ago, a rancher with land on Malad Summit sold five-to-20-acre lots as recreational property. Instead of people living there during the summer, Hill said, they're staying all year.

More residential housing growth is expected. To a developer may build a 66-lot subdivision in the St.

John area near town, she said. Meanwhile, Murdoch is patiently waiting for his subdivision to fill.

"It's a lovely spot," he said, looking at McPherson and Burton canyons on both ends of the subdivision. "The view is out of this world." He believes retired farmers or plant workers from nearby Soda Springs — or Utah residents — will buy his quarter-acre to half-acre lots for $13,000 to $15,000 because they want property that will increase in value.

"This is a place for people who want restrictive covenants and want to be on the edge of town yet still close," he said.

"It's not Murdoch's first development. He built the 16-lot Monte Vista subdivision in Grace in 1968 because his family wanted a new home surrounded by other new homes so the property value would remain stable.

False

The researchers say that young children, the elderly and people with short attention spans appear most likely to concoct false memories. But even college students — who presumably spend much of their time remembering what they read and hear — can be easily tricked into swearing they recall things that never happened.

In one experiment, Loftus asked parents to list some incidents in their child's past. Then she told the children she wanted to compare their memories with the parents'.

She walked them through a series of real incidents and then threw in a fake one. As a young child, they had been lost in a shopping mall and were frightened and cried until an elderly person found them and reunited them with the parents.

With just a little gentle coaxing, Loftus said, about one-quarter of study subjects agree this happened to them. Some even go on to provide new details.

The keen-eyed telescope was upgraded Saturday with a new guidance sensor, a collection of mirrors and lenses that locate a target star and orient the huge telescope, replacing one that was nearing the end of its life.

Discovery, Hubble sidestep junk; astronauts find telescope damage

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Space shuttle Discovery sidestepped into a safer, higher orbit with the Hubble Telescope on Saturday to avoid a piece of space junk the size of a book. The fragment of an exploded rocket would have come dangerously close to Discovery, its seven astronauts and the telescope anchored in the cargo bay had the crew not steered out of the way.

NASA, meanwhile, was considering an emergency facelift for the middle-aged telescope, which has been in space for seven years.

Astronauts making the mission's second spacewalk discovered a surprising number of cracks and tears in Hubble's thin, outer insulation, as well as holes punched into the solar panels by micrometeorites.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration formed an investigative team to assess the damage, most of which seems to have occurred since the 1993 repair mission. The astronauts may be asked to patch the foil insulation during their fourth and final spacewalk Sunday night.

Spacewalk No. 3, on Saturday night, was already crowded with Hubble chores: the installation of a new computer switchboard, digital recorder and a flywheel assembly that helps aim the scope.

Hubble got a bigger boost than planned Saturday.

A few hours after Discovery's pilots steered the shuttle and the mired Hubble into a 2-mile-higher orbit to extend the lifetime of the telescope, they were ordered to go up an additional half-mile.

An 8-inch-square fragment of an exploded Pegasus rocket was due to pass within a half-mile of the shuttle and telescope, officials said, and Mission Specialist did not want to take any chances.

The Pegasus was launched in 1994 with a military research satellite, which ended up in the wrong orbit. The rocket fragment was one of 6,014 orbiting objects being tracked by the U.S. Space Command on Saturday, most of it junk.

Even before DNC, fund-raiser had official Chinese contacts

WASHINGTON (AP) — While the world's a senior Commerce Department official, prey to discredited trade briefings, John Blum regularly met and dined with Chinese Embassy officials who would have valued such information.

When Blum left Commerce to begin an commercial stint as the Democrats' top fund-raiser among Asian-Americans, he kept his Chinese contacts. Several embassy and consulate officials were listed on his Ballhaus at Democratic National Committee headquarters.

Some Republicans in Congress speak of "potential economic opporonage" in questioning whether Huang had improper contact with Chinese officials or with his former employer, the Indonesian conglomerate Lippo Group, which has business ties to China.

Huang has denied wrongdoing. Telephone messages seeking comment from his attorneys, T. Cobb and John C. Ksenyia Jr., were not returned.

Records from a few days in October 1995 indicate the kind of activities congressional investigators are focusing on:

Commerce telephone logs show Huang called Lippo Bank in Los Angeles on Oct. 10 and twice on Oct. 11. On that day, his expense report showed a $5 taxi ride to the Indonesian Embassy, apparently for a reception.

The next day Huang, who was cleared for top secret official information, was scheduled to receive an intelligence briefing from the CIA's liaison to the Commerce Department, according to Commerce documents.

On Oct. 12, the day of the classified briefing, Huang took a taxi ride from the residence of the Chinese ambassador back to his Commerce office. He called Lippo Bank two more times within the next seven days.

Fliers cheer Clinton's intervention

The Associated Press.

Pilots gasped and passengers cheered Saturday after President Clinton stepped in to keep American Airlines flying only minutes after a strike was declared.

"An hour ago it was really a serious wreck," Fred Sauer, a teacher from Wilbraham, Mass., who was planning to spend the night in the Miami airport while waiting for a flight to join her husband in the Caribbean. "Now I know I'm going to be home tomorrow and I'll be going home next week."

Clinton's decision to set up a Presidential Emergency Board implements a 90-day "cooling off" period during which the pilots can't strike. That means the airline's 90,000 employees will remain on their jobs and Americans will resume flights that ferry 200,000 people a day.

Passengers at London's Heathrow Airport who were in process of being booked on different airlines cheered when they heard of Clinton's action.

"I thought I could be struck here. It was really worried," said Tony Mundy, who had flown to London from his native Kenya on Friday and was heading to New York on business.

But for many travelers, the presidential order came too late to prevent inconvenience.

As the airline canceled flights and grounded aircraft in preparation for a possible strike, millions of travelers worldwide juggled their itineraries to salvage travel plans. Many were stranded in airports. At Chicago's O'Hare Airport alone, 33 flights were canceled Friday night.

"You mean I drove all the way over here and now everything's OK?" said Jill Marie Meier, who went to the Los Angeles International Airport to make alternate plans for her trip to Barbados on Monday.

For the pilots, there was disbelief and disappointment.

"It's like a missed approach," said Capt. Rich Rubin in Ft. Lauderdale, Fla. He was briefing reporters on the strike when he was told of the presidential order. "I was coming in for a landing and then I had to come around again."

Some pilots said they had expected Clinton to intervene but were surprised by his speed.

First Officer Mike Sauerhage, based at American's headquarters of Dallas-Fort Worth, said pilots gasped when told of the presidential move.

Phone agreement should bring $1 trillion in benefits

WASHINGTON (AP) — An agreement Saturday to open the $600 billion global telephone market to increased competition should produce more than $1 trillion in benefits to consumers from Bombay to Buffalo by providing lower rates and better service.

The deal, completed among 68 countries in Geneva, offers huge opportunities to American communication giants such as AT&T by dismantling barriers that have kept U.S. companies out of nations where phone service is provided by government-owned monopolies.

The Clinton administration struggled for four years to complete the agreement. It represents the biggest success story so far in the U.S. effort to lower trade barriers in services such as banking and telecommunications, where American companies are recognized as world leaders and where they stand to reap the biggest rewards in the 21st century.

U.S. telecommunications companies expressed eagerness to compete for business in a world where half the population has never made a phone call.

The program got the duplexes married, amended some gang members and got word-out of yards, Lewis said.

The program seems to have died down now, and gangs still inhabit the homes, Lewis said. It has had less effect on gangs.

"I think there was a lot more violence before. It has mellowed down the street scene. They're still there, but they know people are watching them," Lewis said.

The cleanup also spawned community programs that still operate. Lewis said. Ellen church sponsors an after-school learning center for neighborhood children that serves 35 to 40 students daily. A neighborhood church offers free hot meals every Monday, and hospital provides a van monthly for health services including vaccinations and blood screenings, plus classes three times a week on parenting or health.

Ellen church also has the neighborhood that the city and police could, Lewis said.

DeVore has also been involved personally in prevention efforts.

In 1984, he became involved in the Sheppards Inn, a private, non-profit ministry based in Anaheim, Calif., that provides shelter to battered, abused and homeless women. The program and shelter have been visited, beaten or abused often have nowhere to go except back to their abusers," said founder Fred Landquist, 71.

DeVore has heard of the project and wanted to help. DeVore and his wife had a real estate business on the side at the time, and DeVore applied his knowledge and his community contacts to Sheppards. Landquist said.

From one shelter Landquist started 11 years ago with proceeds from the sale of her home. Sheppards has grown to five shelters housing 15 women and their children, and operates on a $3,500,000 monthly budget entirely from donations.

"She has always had a heart for women and children, and people on the street, and he believes in what her's doing," Landquist said. "His compassion for her and those who are victims, and those who perpetrate. The world has closed in around them, and he knows they're fragmented, angry and confused, so they walk out at the woman and children closest to them."

DeVore served on Sheppards' board of directors and is still vice president. He became involved in Landquist said. DeVore also was involved in the Orange County Domestic Violence Task Force, Landquist said.

Will it walk here?

The Twin Falls Police Department always has started making the philosophy work.

"The predictions are that it can raise $20, 25 years to implement a community policing philosophy," said Sgt. Don Hall. "DeVore has only been here a year and a half. It's so we're light years ahead of where we should be."

"We're a lot further than I thought we would be. The progress to me is an indicator of the quality of people we have here," DeVore said.

Promotions reinforce the shift. Investigations Capt. Jim Massey and patrol Capt. Jim Munn both made their mark within the past five months. But have served as community services sergeant and worked in community programs.

Hall recently was promoted to sergeant. He has been D.A.R.E. officer and a school resource, officer and worked bike patrols.

"I can't say it didn't help me get where I am," Hall said. "But that's not the reason I got involved. It was not too many years ago when I was involved in all of this did not help. You couldn't be a 'kiddie officer' and get promoted."

Hall is sold on the concept. "People get into this job because they want to help. When you deal with the negative die in and day out, and your attitude changes. You've shifted your focus to 'We can't do it this way because...'

Police Chief Lee DeVore preaches the gospel of community policing to the Twin Falls department.

Hall said. "This is a breath of fresh air. It's why you get into this business in the first place."

It's part of the department's strategic plan to decrease crime rates, Munn said.

"Police have almost no success solving crime alone. The old thing of 'Just give me the facts, officers' is not very effective. It takes the community," he said.

The community approach is not soft on crime.

"When the community is involved, you're probably going to have more arrests," Munn said. "And sometimes you'll see a higher crime rate because people are more likely to report crimes."

Hall says the department is buying into a philosophy skeptics push pooped as a flash in the pan. But it's not easy.

"Some officers just have never done it that way," Hall said. "As police, we tend to look at things one way, just within the box."

Three years ago when I started, we would get in our cars, roll up the windows, put the air conditioning on and wait for calls," said Patrolman Brian Lee. "Now we're getting out of our cars, and talking to people."

DeVore calls it "working smart." Family fights can call police back to a house week after week, DeVore said.

"The officer can get at the underlying issue there," DeVore said. The key is to get other community organizations involved.

In one case, an elderly neighbor complained regularly about noise at a bar. DeVore said. Officers had to go to the bar every time and ask the band to turn down the volume.

The bandstand was on the same side of the building as the neighbor's house. The community policing solution officers came up with was to move the bandstand to the other side of the bar, DeVore said.

That reduced the noise, and ended the neighbor's calls, he said. Lee said he was recently able to solve a feud between two businesses over parking, instead of just writing tickets for parking violations then leaving.

"It boiled down to instead of penalizing them with parking tickets, I talked to the business owners. I basically acted as a mediator, and explained the other person's viewpoints to them. It took a few phone calls, and a couple of hours, but I haven't had to go back there, and to my knowledge the department hasn't been called back," Lee said.

The most important part of the concept is to empower officers on the street to take the initiative to solve problems, DeVore said. As long as it's appropriate, legal and ethical, he can do whatever they need to be said.

"Police cannot solve all problems by themselves. They're not going to be counseling alcoholics or whatever is there. But we do have access to resources that can solve problems. If it's not us solving the problem, then we need to work with the community to solve it," DeVore said.

"I'm gonna say to my patrol squads, 'OK, sergeants, there's a problem in this area, go to it, then empower them to do it,'" Munn said.

Squad sergeants direct crime prevention teams, and lead in problem solving, Munn said.

"If we have a pattern of car burglaries in an area, then we'll start problem solving. If the officers decide we need to deploy officers at different times, or if we need bike patrols, we'll do it. If we need a neighborhood watch group, we'll do it," Munn said.

Some aspects of community policing are in place:

• Neighborhood Watch groups are a most effective tool, Munn said.

"People who live in the neighborhood know what is suspicious or not. That's why it's so important for police to have a relationship with the neighborhood."

• Col. Mike Covington reviews building plans as they go through the city planning and zoning commission. Covington suggests changes to make buildings less friendly to crime.

"They can look at the environment and the design of the building for things that might make a building more susceptible or cause more crime than if they did the building another way," Hodge said. "It's also education - not leaving things out in the yard or outside the building that offer a temptation to somebody."

• See citizens academy. Munn tried to start the citizens academy several years ago. Lee said he happened to see Munn's file on it, and decided to take it up.

Community policing is a only a catch phrase for using the public to reduce crime, Lee said. Educating the public about what causes crime, and how to report it, means civilians will be better able to help police, Lee said.

"It pretty much fit right in line with the chief's philosophy," Lee said. The first academy of 10 weekly classes ran from October to December.

The class gives police a chance to teach, Lee said.

"We interact with the community at a different level than we usually do. These are people who want to talk with us," he said. "This is a more personal level, and it's a better atmosphere."

The next academy starts March 13.

Diplomat not immune on charges

ANDREWS AIR FORCE BASE, Md. (AP) — The republic of Georgia has waived diplomatic immunity for a Washington-based diplomat implicated in a car crash that killed a Maryland teenager, the State Department said Saturday.

Spokesman Nicholas Burns said the next step in the legal process facing George Makharadze is for the Justice Department to file formal charges. Burns said the State Department will transmit Georgia's official notification to Justice on Tuesday.

Makharadze's car slammed into two cars waiting at a downtown Washington stoplight on Jan. 3. A 16-year-old Maryland girl, Joviane Waltrick, died when Makharadze's car smashed on top of the one in which she was a passenger. Police said Makharadze, 35, had been drinking and appeared to have been speeding.

Notified Saturday of the waiver, Michael Foon, a spokesman for Waltrick's family, said, "Excuse?"

UAW, supplier still bargaining

DETROIT (AP) — Bargaining continued Saturday beyond the deadline set by the United Auto Workers for a strike against a major parts supplier to General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co.

American Axle & Manufacturing Inc. supplies rear- and four-wheel-drive axles for GM pickups and sport utility vehicles, and axle parts for some of Ford's light trucks.

The UAW set an 11:59 p.m. Friday strike deadline. But a union officer in Detroit said bargainers were still meeting at 5:30 a.m. today.

EDITORIAL

You won't find any gruesome photos here

News-media photographers sometimes have a lousy reputation: They cruise the streets in search of destruction and gore. They pop from bushes to snap embarrassed celebrities. They invade disaster scenes to capitalize on agony.

That reputation may be deserved in some places. But not in the Magic Valley. Here, the photographers for your hometown paper carefully respect people's privacy and maintain good taste.

You won't see grisly images on our pages. You won't see our photographers chasing ambulances or lurking where they aren't wanted. Instead, they record the events, the emotions and the spirit of community life. Like the rest of our staff, they work to be responsible community members.

So why was Times-News photographer Mike Salsbury in court last week, answering charges that he obstructed police at an accident scene?

It's a complicated and unfortunate story, with more than one side. Readers have already heard the police version - that Salsbury ventured too close to the wreckage and got in the way. Three years after the event, we think it's time to tell our side.

Our photographers don't attend many auto accidents, but they do cover the major ones. On Sept. 28, 1993, Salsbury drove to a Jerome County accident, a horrible collision that ended a local woman's life and blocked Interstate 84 for five hours.

As Salsbury worked, police officers ordered him away. He asserted his First Amendment right to photograph events in a public place. The impasse worsened, and Salsbury ended up in handcuffs.

In our view, the arrest was improper - the result of a stressful scene and poor communication. When we hired a private investigator to research the incident, he discovered that misunderstandings had contributed to the problem.

Workers on the scene were concerned that the victim's body was exposed, and that Salsbury was photographing it. In fact, Times-News policy forbids publishing such pictures, and our staff members don't take them. Salsbury wasn't doing so that day.

Salsbury wore a shirt the same color as those worn by the paramedics.

Mike Salsbury

At first, some personnel thought he was one of them. When they realized otherwise, they thought he had duped them. A rumor even circulated that Salsbury carried a wardrobe of different-colored shirts for just that purpose.

That was nonsense. The shirt was a coincidence.

Officials apparently were partly motivated by a desire to protect the privacy of victims. But privacy is a civil issue, not a criminal matter. Enforcing privacy rights isn't the job of police officers.

This newspaper has a long-standing commitment to responsible photojournalism. We respect citizens' privacy, and we try to be cooperative and courteous around emergency workers. We'll continue doing that in the future.

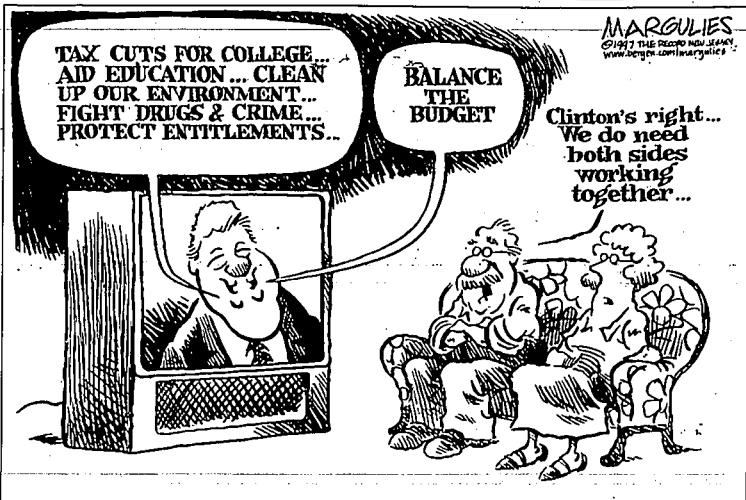

But we'll also assert our right to cover news events. Police can control the scenes of crimes and accidents, but they should not order journalists to leave altogether. Reporters and photographers are the public's ears and eyes. Among other things, they provide citizens with information about how taxpayer-supported agencies perform in emergencies.

After three years of court delays, Salsbury's misdemeanor case finally ended last week. Jerome County's new prosecutor offered a plea bargain. Having accepted an attractive career advancement out of state, Salsbury decided to end the dispute. He entered a guilty plea and was sentenced to pay a $150 fine.

We still think Salsbury did nothing wrong, and we think that even a small fine is excessive punishment for a charge that never should have been filed.

But that's all history now. Salsbury is gone with his new job, with our blessing and our pride in his success. What remains is our continuing promise to the Magic Valley to provide photographs that are informative, tasteful, compelling and compassionate.

Mike Salsbury always honored that commitment. We wish him success in his next venture.

A single letter should not condemn a life

Man," says Job, "is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward."

"Use every man after his desert," Hamlet warns, "and who should 'scape whipping?'"

Verily, we are all made of clay, right down to our feet.

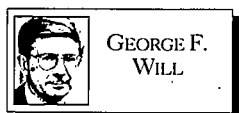

Modern man likes such leveling, deflating maxims because, by stipulating a comforting equality of common sinfulness, they spare him the pain he likes least, the pain in the neck that comes from looking up at those who are rightly on pedestals. One of those made of uncommon clay was, surely, Thomas Jefferson. It is, therefore, a measure of contemporary fears and confusions that Jefferson's greatness is continually under assault.

This week, on public television on Tuesday and Wednesday, Ken Burns, whose accolades include an acclaimed series on the Civil War and baseball, presents a timely corrective, a visually sumptuous and intellectually judicious appraisal of Jefferson.

A sulturous new biography of Jefferson asserts: "It is difficult to resist the conclusion that the twentieth century statesman whom the Thomas Jefferson of January 1793 would have admired most is Pol Pot.... We cannot even say categorically that Jefferson would have condemned the bombing of the federal building in Oklahoma City."

The author, the eminent Irish scholar and Statesman, Conor Cruise O'Brien, rests his howitzer of vituperation on the slender reed of a single private letter Jefferson wrote in 1792 concerning the French Revolution: "...rather than that it should have failed, I would have seen half the earth desolated. Were there to be an Adam and Eve left in every country, and left free, it would be better than it now is."

It is meretricious to treat an episto-

lary extravagance as an index of impeccable conviction. But then O'Brien, alighting upon the obvious - Jefferson was simultaneously a slaveholder and a paladin of political freedom - with a sense of original discovery, has perpetrated a biography of the sort that novelist Joyce Carol Oates calls "pathography," a shrill reduction of a rounded life to a catalog of dysfunctionals.

Burns, using various analysts (this columnist plays a small role), manages to be admiring without being enthralled. He recognizes that heroism is not saintliness, and proves that a cool appraising eye need not be a jaundiced one.

It is bad enough - it is simple-minded elitism - to say, as has been said, that a biographer should be his subject's "conscientious enemy." But O'Brien is conscienceless. For example, he quotes Jefferson's early judgments of blacks' inferiority, but ignores Jefferson's conclusion, 20 years later, that blacks "are on a par with ourselves. My dearest were the result of personal observation on the limited sphere of my own State, where the opportunities for the development of their genius were not favorable." Jefferson anticipated "their re-establishment on an equal footing with the other colors of the human family."

Burns examines, agnostically, the theory that Jefferson, who proclaimed equality when one-fifth of all Americans were owned by other Americans, had a long sexual relationship, and children, with a slave, Sally Hemings. The film unsparingly notes that Washington freed his slaves, as did Jefferson's cousin John Randolph and Jefferson's neighbor Edward Coles, but Jefferson never did, even as Virginia's population of free blacks was rising in a 30-year period from 2,000 to 30,000.

The film punctures Jefferson's pose of ambitionlessness. True, he canceled his newspaper subscriptions when he left Washington in 1793. But by 1801, as politically glibful as he was socially graceful, he was president. ("Ambitious as Oliver Cromwell") and "tough as a lignum nut" said John Adams, who was scurriedly attacked by a drunken editor paid by Jefferson.)

Jefferson, symbol of American optimism, died nearly destitute and was preceded in death by his wife, five of his six children and his best friend - and, in a sense, by the constitutional, political, social order he cherished. But he produced what one of Burns' interlocutors calls the nation's "making moment" - the Louisiana Purchase - and provided an enduring model of how a free man with a fine mind and great soul lives amid the world's ethical tangles.

"None of us, no, not one," said Jefferson, "is perfect; and were we to love none who had imperfections, this world would be a desert for our love." Many historians and others, in their intellectual crudity, immaturity and mean-mindedness, respond to complexity with contempt and to excellence with envy. They pander to the democratic spirit gone rancid in resentment of excellence, and they leave our national memory parched. Ken Burns, an irrigator, causes our capacity for political admiration - for love of greatness in public people - to bloom anew.

Menacing neighbor should 'fess up
The Idaho National Engineering Laboratory has changed its name to INEEL, however, it clearly has done nothing to change its arrogance.

The Times-News reported on Feb. 12 the results of a study that brain cancer rates are statistically higher in the six counties surrounding the INEEL, actually at rates that State Epidemiologist Dr. Greenblatt states are "alarmingly." The Department of Health and Welfare, Centers for Disease Control, Idaho Academy of Science and others believe there is cause for concern and follow-up on these studies. The spokesman for the INEEL, John Walsh, responded that "there is no link between the site and the cancer rates." Thanks a lot, INEEL, for your compassion and concern.

It is time Gov. Batt and the Legislature faced up to this menacing neighbor.

Police chief makes Wendell proud
I am writing to inform the citizens of Wendell and the Magic Valley of the excellent work done by the Wendell police chief. As many of your readers may have noticed in your Feb. 13 edition, the Wendell Middle School had a firearm brought by a student to school. This, unfortunately, is a trend all over the country that needs to be stopped.

Our police chief dealt with the incident so quickly that the firearm was never exposed in the building. The student was rapidly apprehended and arrested. Chief Philip Cowell showed strength, authority, acted professionally and showed compassion during a most unfortunate incident.

I'm sure the citizens of Wendell are proud of Chief Cowell's actions, just as we are at the Wendell Middle School.

I am so tired of people writing letters about abortion. I have never had an abortion and know I never will either, but that does not mean that I would not recommend it to any other woman who has been raped or a young girl who has become pregnant because of incest. I do not think that abortion should be used as contraception; there are other means of protection. However, I would never put down a woman who has had one because she didn't want the baby, couldn't afford the baby or whatever reason she had to do so.

You people should go to the children's hospitals in Salt Lake City and see the children beaten by parents who didn't want them, don't love them, can't afford to take care of them and the pressure gets too much and the parents take it out on the children. I have seen children come into the hospitals here only to be sent to Salt Lake or Boise to this exact reason.

I want to know how many of you people who are so perfect have adopted all these children or have opened up your home for foster care for these hurt children who have nobody who loves them. If these mothers wouldn't have been stopped from going to the abortion clinic by you holier-than-thou people, then these children wouldn't have been put in these hospitals or foster homes. These children who are not loved or wanted are the ones who grow up to make more unwanted children, commit murder, rape and crimes and filling up our prisons.

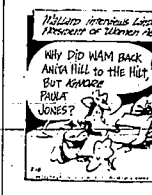

I appreciate all the babies you are trying to save. But think about how many of these babies will make it to the age of 5 or 15. How many of these babies will be raped and tortured because they are not wanted or their parents are sick? Please, think about what you're doing the next time you tell someone not to have an abortion. Are you going to take care of this child for this woman who is clamoring for whatever reason? Are you going to look in this child's eyes when they are lying in a pool of blood, beaten so bad that their grandma couldn't recognize them and say, "I'm sorry, but it could have been worse; your mother could have had an abortion?"

School uniforms strip away individual rights

This letter is in regard to the school uniform issue being debated in the Buhl School District. As concerned parents, my wife and I have taught our children that they are individuals and do not need to follow in anyone else's path. In my opinion, school uniforms are the first step in stripping away individuality from our children.

The issue is to stop children from wearing clothing inappropriate for school, then set a dress code dealing with such clothing. If the issue is to stop the theft of valuable coats or shoes, the easiest way is to stop buying them for your children.

Parents are a big problem in purchasing the most expensive clothes for their kids. If you are afraid a $100 coat or a $150 pair of shoes will be stolen, then don't buy them! If your child comes home with a new coat or new shoes not purchased for them, the parents should find out where it came from. If you choose to send your child to school in a uniform, then do so.

The biggest issue in the Buhl School District right now should be how we can replace a middle school that is not safe to send our children to, not trying to make Jimmy and Johnny and Sally and Suzie all look the same.

Caring doctor makes whole world of difference

I would like to present an interesting aside to Dr. Frederick Fitts' letter regarding the standard of care available in the Magic Valley and whether the physician in Gooding should be held to the same standards as one in Boston or Boise.

Dr. Fitts' letter contained some very real truths concerning the realities of medical care and availability of sophisticated instrumentation to the small-town physician. However, I have to smile when I consider the 20 years of medical treatment, my husband, who has serious, multiple and varied medical conditions, obtained in Seattle and Salt Lake City with continued worsening of his situation. Since relocating to Gooding more than two years ago, he has had the first clinical improvement seen in many, many years with treatment from Gooding physician John Gles.

I don't mean to question previous treatments, these were all excellent physicians, but the personal interest of an intelligent, caring physician can work wonders.

Think twice about bringing 'Care Team' into schools

One hopes the "care team" idea being floated in an area school does not get an OK from an unthinking school board. This idea reeks of governmental intrusion into the home. Since when do teachers, principals, counselors, "school resource officers" (whatever they might be) and, of all things, athletic directors, qualify to judge "interpersonal relationships" and "home/family concerns"? Talk about big brother's big nose!

Even if they did have such qualifications, they have not the right to snoop into their charges' personal relationships and their family lives; much less bureaucratically interfere in those areas. Last I looked, this was still called the United States of America, not the soviet.

Although some parents have been dumbed down by government psychological conditioning mislabeled "public education" to the point of bowing to anything the schools push, the great majority still want them to teach the true necessities to make one's way in the world. Honest reading, writing, math, etc. Such cognitive subjects seem to be the only part of "the whole child" that "educators" have no interest in promoting.

When national radio reports that 20 percent of college graduates tested, using a Western Hemisphere map, place the United States in Brazil, it's time to rein in this arrogant empire gone mad. How can our silly representatives continue to lather money and who knows how much from the federal take. It must amount to at least 90 percent of all tax money taken in Idaho. And for that huge sacrifice, we get arrogance, the parents' blamed for the schools' lack of teaching real knowledge, forever whining for even more money and, worst of all, kids whose attitudes have been changed to everything their parents fear and despise. The system gets away with it because few will admit that they invested their emotions in a turkey.

In standardized tests, public schoolers average a consistent 40 percent, home schoolers a consistent 85 percent. I highly recommend you teach your own kids. You'll love the attitude change in them, too.

WORLD

An angry Albanian woman holds local money while shouting slogans against the government during a demonstration in Vlorë Saturday.

TIRANA, Albania (AP) — On a $500 investment, Benjamin and Servete Lohja remodeled their apartment, swapping Stalinist functionality for Western comforts, and traveled abroad for the first time.

"It was like a fortune game," said Servete Lohja, 51, laughing at her good luck as she sipped thick coffee and her husband served chocolate and fruit. "I didn't care how this fortune game was organized. ... There was a mania to get rich."

The Lohjas were among the lucky ones. For most, that mania ended in disaster.

As Albania emerged from medical poverty in 1991-92, risky investment businesses promised impossibly high returns of up to 100 percent a month, offering Europe's poorest citizens comforts unknown during five decades of harsh Communist rule.

Few resisted the consumer dream. Up to 1 million of Albania's 3.2 million people poured between $1 billion and $2 billion into the pyramid schemes, which have now failed or will soon.

The collapses, which robbed thousands of people of their life savings, have fed a month of unrest against the government, which is blamed for not warning ignorant Albanians away from the temptations of the first capitalism they ever knew.

Pyramid schemes have flourished briefly all over post-communist Europe, paying off early investors with the savings of latecomers before all go belly up. But nowhere else have such a universal grip as in impoverished Albania.

The first investors received huge returns. Most redeposited the interest each month, and lost everything they had. A very few, like the Lohjas, came out ahead.

The biggest profits went to the managers of thephony investment schemes and their friends. They showed off their wealth, and launched publicity drives to attract more investors.

In one example, the owner of the Xhaferrri fund made a $350,000 contract with Argentine soccer coach Mario Kempes in hopes of lifting his hometown squad, Lushnja, to the Albanian championship. Before Kempes could coach a game, Xhaferrri had collapsed. His funds were seized by the government and owner Rrapush Xhaferrri was in jail facing up to 20 years under a new law banning pyramid schemes. Kempes went home.

Another scheme, Gjallica, laid out $1.2 million for the Miss Europe pageant in September, the first such international gala ever held in Albania. President Sali Berisha attended. It was televised throughout Europe.

But while the managers profited, most investors lost everything. The Lohjas were among the few to make a profit. They invested $500 in 1994 and used the returns to spruce up their home.

Servete Lohja was drawn into the fund by a partner, Sudjin Kademi, the first person arrested as the schemes began collapsing.

Servete doubted Kademi's business savvy, and assumed some illicit activity. But she never seriously questioned the source of her new wealth.

Benjamin, 60, had no idea how pyramid schemes worked.

Zaire cracks down -- again

KINSHASA, Zaire (AP) — Protesters defying a ban on political rallies gathered Saturday outside the home of Zaire's main opposition leader, demanding President Mobutu Sese Seko's resignation and cheering rebel leader Laurent Kabila.

Zaire banned protest strikes and political rallies Friday and warned that violators would be treated as enemy spies in an attempt to cope with mounting pressure to end its civil war.

Angered over an opposition-led strike that crippled the capital earlier this week, the government also lashed out Friday at public workers with an ultimatum: Be on the job at 8 a.m. sharp daily or face dismissal.

The government also banned private television and radio in Zaire from broadcasting foreign news accounts of the spreading rebellion in the east.

The dictates are aimed at silencing calls for peace talks with Kabila and criticism of a struggling military counteroffensive, which the government portrays as a great success. There also have been international calls for negotiations.

The latest moves against the opposition, combined with the war, raise doubt about whether presidential elections would go forward in May as promised.

What do you mean, 'Hold the guppies'?

For those of you who think that Idaho cuisine is about as exciting as Friday night at the Feed 'n Ice, here I got some salads for you.

Announcing the winners of the First Annual Don't Ask Me About Guppies Surprise Recipe Contest, dedicated to three generations of pretty darn mediocre Mormon cookery:

GOOD GOD GUPPIES JELL-O

- 3 packages Jell-O
- 3 packages strawberry-flavored Jell-O
- 1 pound ground salmon
- 1 can of creamed spinach soup
- 1 dozen live guppies
- 4 cups of water

Mix Jell-O according to instructions on package. Add salmon and soup. Refrigerate until Jell-O has congealed. Add 4 cups of water on top of Jell-O and add live guppies. Let swim for five minutes before serving.

(Editor's note: You can substitute gummy bears for the guppies and toss for the salmon. Recipe is 12, but that'll be some damn enough. Trust me on this.)

Cherie wins a certificate and a case of Jell-O of our choice. I'm thinking peach melba.

Second prize: Kacie Donlop, Twin Falls.

BARBECUE SALAD

- 1 package Jell-O, any flavor
  - 1 cup boiling water
  - 8 ounce can of tomato sauce
  - 1 1/2 tablespoons of vinegar
  - 1/2 teaspoon of salt (optional)
  - Dash of pepper
- Additional seasonings (Editor's note: Kacie is talking Idaho accent or perhaps hardscrabble here, but I wouldn't do that if you have a gas range).
- Dissolve Jell-O in boiling water. Add remaining ingredients. Pour into individual molds and 1 quart mold. Chill until firm. Unmold on crisp greens. Makes about 2 1/2 cups.
- Possible Barbecue Salad additions: 1/4 cup of mayonnaise, 1 cup of cottage cheese, 1 cup of diced celery, 1/4 cup of thinly sliced stuffed olives, 1 can of corn or cooked vegetables, 1 cup of diced cooked shrimp, 1 can of crab meat, 1 can of tuna drained.

Mrs. Frisby.

First prize, Jell-O Division: David Bell of Ketchikan.

IDaho POTATOES and GREEN JELL-O

"One day there was going to be a potluck (at the Ketchikan Fire Department) and I wasn't a great cook. However, I was inspired by seeing the potatoes and I knew that Jell-O was not just for 'meat' people. It was for hospital patients and others less fortunate that couldn't get to the Western or Louie's. The salads were turning, and it hit me like the flu."

"I do possibly blend some strips of potatoes with green Jell-O I don't remember the flavor. I don't think it matters, as long as it's green but since there is a separate prize for first place, I'll say French. It was that thick soup could even put it on their plates. I was wrong. These people eat not just at their plates, but just in their mouths. I heard them saying, 'The potatoes don't seem cooked.' And I was made the Jell-O? I was happy. At the next year's potluck, I put Styrofoam peanuts which kept under the heading of shrimp cocktail. People couldn't try anything I brought after that."

Congratulations to the winners, and the best of all possible luck to the people they cook for.

And thanks for playing. We received more than 50 recipes and I'm continuing the more conventional ones over to my colleague, Food Editor Denise Turner, who might someday run a contest for Jell-O salads that people might want to taste, sampleplace other than a family reunion.

Now, would you stop talking to your Cousin Dennis and pass the ketchup please?

Waterfowl fans flock together

By Liz Wright
 Times-News writer

HAGERMAN - Stretching its wings, a red-tailed hawk named Kyrie swung a fiery gaze around the 30-member audience Saturday at the National Park Service Fossil Beds Visitor Center in Hagerman.

Early bird gets the pancakes

The Winter Waterfowl Festival continues today with a pancake breakfast from 7 a.m. to 9 a.m. and bird walks and tours from 9 a.m. to 11 a.m. Call the National Park Service at 837-6304 for more information.

The 8-year-old bird of prey is unable to survive in the wild because someone tried to nourish Kyrie back to health years ago after an injury but fed it improperly, raptor rehabilitator Pat Smith told the audience during a workshop of the Winter Waterfowl Festival.

Kyrie is "one of the statistics" and an important lesson in what people should do upon finding an injured raptor, Smith said. The bird's "rescuer" fed it meat instead of live animals, which are an important source of calcium. Because of calcium depletion, the bones in its legs and shoulder snapped, Smith said.

For a captive bird, Kyrie seemed healthy and fierce, frightening one boy in the front row with its gaze Saturday. At one point, it lost balance on Smith's gloved arm and swung upside down, flapping its large wings wildly. But its talons are longer than most, and its upper beak curves too much over the lower one - a fatal sign the bird has been in captivity for a long time, Smith said.

healed, but not well enough to return to the wilderness. About half of all injured birds of prey found by people are put to death by veterinarians because they aren't in flight and hunting shape, said Debbie Nichols of Wendell, a raptor rehabilitation center.

"These birds are the Air Force jet fighters of the bird world," said Julie Randall of Kimberly, another raptor rehabilitator. "They have to be in perfect form to fly."

Federal law prohibits people from keeping injured or orphaned birds as pets or nursing them at home, even having a raptor feather in one's cap is cause for a citation, Randall said. People are allowed to pick up injured birds of prey as long as they seek immediate medical attention for the bird from a veterinarian or wildlife agency, she said.

Saturday's raptor rehabilitators demonstrated how to pick up injured birds of prey by using a live chicken as a model. People should throw a cloth over the bird and tuck the sides under, always reaching for the talons and never losing sight of them, they said.

If immediate medical attention isn't available, birds must be given water, either in a bowl or with a dropper placed delicately at the side of their beaks. Because of their fast metabolism, the most common problem with injured birds is rapid dehydration.

Officers credit DeVore with good changes

By Kent McCleary
 Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - With its reorganization project nearly complete, the Twin Falls Police Department is more streamlined, with a lighter management structure than ever before, officers say.

Officers say the new structure has given them a clearer picture of their roles.

"They lay much of the credit for the changes on the desk of Lee DeVore, chief of police for 18 months."

DeVore was slow to start making changes, said Capt. Bob Hodge, who served as interim chief. When DeVore actually spent the first two or three months talking to people.

"He wanted to meet all of the officers. Gradually, he got into most from everybody," Hodge said.

"There was more of a difference in the department, said Patrolman Brian Lee, just with his attitude toward police work and people."

"When he first got here, he went out and met with us, and he was open to suggestions, and receptive to the problems we've got. He boosted morale just by getting out in the cars," Lee said.

"The door to his office from the hallway is always open, and you go in there anytime," Lee said.

"It may sound like a cliché, but he's a leader, and I think you could ask anybody in the department and you'd get the same opinion," Lee said.

"He's basically a very good leader," said Sgt. Don Hall.

DeVore lets people solve the problems but likes to see a finished product.

Police teach public their philosophy

By Kent McCleary
 Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - Twin Falls police are concentrating on teaching the philosophy of community policing to their own officers. But they're making room to teach the public, too.

The police department is sending its officers to schools and training sessions on the theory and practice of that philosophy. Even clerks and detectives will attend a class sponsored by the U.S. district attorney's office Feb. 24-25 in Twin Falls, said Twin Falls Police Chief Lee DeVore.

"We're training everybody, from top to bottom, and that includes members of the community," DeVore said. "We want everybody at the same level and reading off the same page of music, and really understanding what community policing is."

Last weekend, the department sent three sergeants and three community members to a three-day school at the Idaho State Peace Officer Standards and Training academy in Mendocino.

Dave Buddecke, vice president of Senstrom Manufacturing in Twin Falls, said the program was a chance to learn how officers are being trained in community policing.

"They're looking to get the community involved. It's fantastic," Buddecke said.

The training covered dealing with organizational change, involving the community and solving problems.

DeVore helped organize Graffiti Busters, a private graffiti-removal effort.

The key to making community policing work is a community group that keeps police efforts going, said Chuck Carey of Anaheim, Calif., "... that will keep the police on their toes and bring problems to their attention. After the push is done, you have to have an ongoing relationship with police."

Carey participated in Operation Clean-Up, an anti-gang effort DeVore directed while with the Fullerton, Calif. police department. Carey is now involved with Orange County Congregation Community Organization, a group that trains neighborhoods to organize.

Buddecke agrees.

"There is no doubt that community policing is (a) double-edged sword," he said. "That's why the chief asked us to go to the training, so we would be involved, and so we could hold them accountable for their new philosophy."

It's in the community's interest to take advantage of a community policing philosophy, Carey said.

"What some police organizations don't realize in every area is that no matter how rotten or rowdy the neighborhood is, there are good families there that don't want their kids beaten up or drugs sold to them," Carey said. "Once the police get in to areas, and get to know families, police will feel like they're a part of the neighborhood."

Involvement takes time, but to keep a community liveable, it's worth the time spent, Buddecke said.

The department will start another Citizen's Police Academy session March 15.

The 10-session, once-a-week class takes participants through many aspects of police work, said Patrolman Brian Lee, who organized and leads the class.

Those interested in the classes can call DeVore at 735-2210.

Lagoon system could be Hailey's answer to sewer

By Melissa Kennedy
 Times-News correspondent

HAILEY - A Hailey sewer committee is close to pinning a $44-million bond issue to Hailey voters this May - a plan officials claim could solve Hailey's sewer crisis for the next 25 years.

Hailey's ad-hoc sewer committee Chairman Al Lindley said he will call a sleep Thursday night following a phone call from a Chicago man who owns 380 acres four miles south of the Woodside sewer treatment plant in Hailey. If a land deal can be cut - which Lindley says he thinks is likely - it could be the first step toward constructing a $6.4 million state-of-the-art lagoon sewer system, an option officials previously scrapped because of high cost and time-line.

Voters would be asked to pay $4.4 million of six-year term through a revenue bond issue, requiring 50.1 percent voter approval.

With this newest development the fear that lagoon system construction couldn't meet a 1999 Environmental Protection Agency deadline changes.

"It's the only long-term solution on the books," Lindley said. "It would take Hailey out 25 years, and no river or sewage would be dumped in the river. It answers all the concerns."

The Hailey sewer system is frozen under an EPA moratorium on new hookups, issued last fall on the city's Riverside treatment plant. The agency claims the plant was dumping unacceptable amounts of waste into the Big Wood River. The city has until 1999 to bring the plant into compliance, or face $25,000 daily fines.

Councilman Rick Davis said the lagoon system could be constructed in as much as other proposals on the table, but is far superior to other plans, both environmentally and financially.

Chief justice opposes opening juvenile records for felony arrests

BOISE (AP) — New Idaho Chief Justice Linda Copple Trout said the opposes opening juvenile records for felony arrests, contending it would not deter crime.

In fact, Trout said publishing juvenile arrests for juveniles 14-year-olds and older would make them targets for ridicule.

"I haven't seen any statistics that show opening records for juvenile cases reduces the amount of crime," she said Friday.

While she acknowledged juvenile crime has increased sharply, Trout said the open records would mark the youths as criminals and hinder their County." Ada County Prosecutor Greg Bower supports legislation to open records now being considered in the Idaho Senate. The bill would not open records for misdemeanor cases, but it would make available arrest records for all youths 14 and older on charges that would be felonies for adults.

Bower said youths committing serious crimes should be held accountable and the public should be allowed to see how the system deals with youth offenders.

"If it's a small town, they know about it anyway," Bower said.

She was born Dec. 25, 1922, in Garner, N.D., to Fred and Bertha Lavaull Foss. She married Tony R. Carlson on June 26, 1939, in Britton, S.D. They moved to the Twin Falls area in 1942. She worked for Keegans until her retirement in 1988.

She loved being with her friends and enjoyed traveling in her later years.

Survivors include two sons, Marvin J. (Sharon) and Lina Puyallup, Wash., and Stan (Martha) Carlson of Twin Falls; daughter, Mary Ellen (Gene) Weaver of Caldwell; brothers, Walter Paul, Missoula, Mont., and Bill Foss of Nevada; sisters, Rose Ploetz of Fillmore, Minn., and Lana Bronkhorst of La Habra, Calif.; seven grandchildren and 13 great-grandchildren. She was preceded in death by her parents, husband, two brothers, two sisters and a grandson.

The funeral will be held at 2 p.m. Tuesday, Feb. 18, 1997, at White Mortuary in Twin Falls, with the Rev. Jim Winkler officiating. Interment will follow at the Twin Falls Cemetery. Friends may call from 4 p.m. to 6 p.m. Monday at the funeral chapel.

Nicholas John Wagner

Nicholas John Wagner, 84, of Donner Lake, Calif., and formerly of Twin Falls, died Jan. 28, 1997, at Washoe Medical Center in Reno, Nev.

He was born Feb. 20, 1912, in American Falls, to Joseph and Mary Kokran Wagner. He moved to Twin Falls during his high school years, and then lived in San Francisco. In 1942, he moved to Burlingame, Calif., where he and his wife operated a beauty salon.

He had lived at Donner Lake, a suburb of Truckee, Calif., for the past 17 years after retiring from the San Francisco Bay area. Nick was an avid sportsman, and loved hunting and fishing with his sons. He cherished the times he would come to Idaho to hunt with his nephews, and visit his family there. He also enjoyed meeting his classmates at the '50 and Older #### reunions that were held each year in Twin Falls. He was very friendly and had a wonderful sense of humor, and all who knew him, loved him. He will be greatly missed by all his family and friends.

He is survived by his wife and best friend, Elora, whom he married in 1939, of Donner Lake; his sons, Nick of Japan, Jon and Lawrence, Calif., and Gary of Menlo Park, Calif.; a sister, Ann O'Halloran of Twin Falls; four grandchildren, one great-grandchild and numerous nieces and nephews.

He was a member of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary Catholic Church in Truckee. A memorial has been established with the church's building fund: Box 34014, Truckee CA 96160.

The funeral was held Feb. 11, 1997, in Truckee.

IDAHO FALLS

Marie McGregor

Marie McGregor, 85, of Idaho Falls and formerly of the Magic Valley, died Feb. 14, 1997, at her home, following a courageous battle with cancer.

She was born Dec. 10, 1911, in New Weimer, Russia, and came to the United States with her parents in 1912, and spent most of her childhood in Chicago, Ill. She married Joseph H. McGregor in April 1933, and was widowed at the age of 30.

A Gold Star Mother, Marie was active in War Mothers of America, the American Legion Auxiliary, and the Red Cross. She was a member of the Volunteer Program. Her philosophy of life was "I'm your interests, help and interpret to others."

She lived in northern Colorado and southeast Idaho where she was employed in food service and then provided the opportunity to meet and help others.

She managed Pond's Lodge cafe in Idaho Park, Idaho from 1969 until her retirement in 1977. She then came to Idaho Falls to manage the Riverside Senior Citizen's housing program. She left her to volunteer work, for which she was honored in 1988 and 1989 as Volunteer of the Year by the Retired Senior Citizens Volunteer Program. The program recognized her as an invaluable asset and cherished employee.

She is survived by sons and daughter, Rose Reardon of Houston, Texas, Gale McGregor of Everett, Wash., Drew McGregor of Boise, Judy Yost of Idaho Falls, Malcolm McGregor of Emmett, Idaho, and Julie Koehner of Fort Collins, Colo.; one granddaughter, Alice Solt of Rosemead, Calif.; 17 grandchildren and 28 great-grandchildren. She was preceded in death by her husband in 1954, and her oldest son, Donald, in 1963.

Our mother's bravery, courage, dignity and wonderful sense of humor were an inspiration to all who knew and loved her.

We wish to recognize and thank the loving care and compassion provided by the Good Samaritan Hospice to our mother and family.

The funeral will be held at 11 a.m. Tuesday, Feb. 18, 1997, at the Trinity United Methodist Church, 237 N. Water in Idaho Falls, with the Rev. Thomas Larson officiating. The family will visit with friends from 10 a.m. to 11 a.m. Tuesday at the church. A graveside service will be held at 2:30 p.m. Tuesday at the Paul Memorial Cemetery, Paul, Idaho.

The family suggests that instead of flowers, memorial contributions be made to Good Samaritan Hospice, 840 E. Idaho, Idaho Falls ID 83401. Arrangements are under the direction of Buck-Miller-Hann Funeral Home in Idaho Falls.

Deputies arrest Utah suspect

SUNDANCE, Utah (AP) — A 36-year-old Utah man who eluded Utah County sheriffs by hiding in and under concrete chimneys and cabins for 24 hours was arrested Saturday afternoon without struggle.

Gregory Brian Turner was taken to Utah County Jail after several outstanding warrants, including a felony charge of possession of methamphetamine, said Utah County Deputy Joe Murphy.

Turner was not immediately charged with crimes connected to his evasion of authorities, which had neighbors and visitors to the Sundance area alerted beginning Friday afternoon. Turner had a .44 Magnum handgun in his hand, but did not aim it at officers as he was arrested, Murphy said.

"It was very, very tough to locate him there. He was very crafty and got away with it," Murphy said.

Turner was finally arrested at 12:40 p.m. when he appeared in front of a cabin that earlier had been searched, she said. He squirmed a hole through a small opening and had hidden under the cabin.

The search began shortly after noon Friday, when officers pursued a man speaking in Pangu Canyon. He sneaked his car in the Sundance ski resort parking lot, and then ran from officers. He twice pointed a large bowie knife at a plain-clothed deputy who happened to be at the resort, Murphy said.

Searchers and SWAT teams from several agencies searched for an hour, but no one was seen Friday afternoon and night. At about 11:30 p.m., a person entered a condominium and came inside, saw a hand extending from under a bed, Murphy said.

The owner fled the cabin and called authorities, but there was no one in the condominium when officers arrived.

Officers continued looking through the night, and on Saturday, pulled back from the area to encourage the man to reappear. It worked, Murphy said.

He asked several cabin owners to use their telephones and even offered money for a ride out of the canyon. He did not brandish a gun, she said. "He was nice. He was pleasant," she said.

Most of the visitors on the resort were not affected by the search, although the resort was closed for about an hour Friday, keeping afternoon skiers and Valentine's Day revelers away from the slopes.

Charles Martin, a Utah County deputy who helped with traffic control, said he even had to run away San Francisco "Glen" quarterback Steve Young and his fiancée.

Counties exclude environmentalists

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — County commissioners from throughout the state met with Gov. Mike Leavitt to discuss wilderness, but excluded two environmentalists and a reporter from the meeting.

Leavitt, who had not yet arrived when the three were excluded, said he would not have opposed an open meeting.

But the governor deferred to the commissioners because the meeting was sponsored by the Utah Association of Counties.

The commissioners had called the meeting Friday because many are uncomfortable with Leavitt's latest call for an "incremental" approach to resolving the wilderness dispute.

Deputies search for Hopper

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS — Twin Falls County sheriff's deputies were searching Saturday for a man they say violated a civil protection order, but deputies on a chase through Twin Falls County Friday night, wrenched his car and fled on foot.

John Duane Hopper, 57, is 6 feet tall, weighs 260 pounds and has brown eyes and gray hair, according to a sheriff's department news release. Hopper may need medical help for his injuries, the release said. He was last seen on 3800 North between 20250 East and 20260 East roads.

Anyone with information should call the sheriff's department at 736-4100.

Law enforcement: What's Burley's fair share?

By Kevin Miller
Times-News writer

BURLEY - Crime took a significant dip in Cassia County last year, but the percentage of criminal activity in Burley relative to the rest of the county hit an all-time high.

More than 83 percent of criminal activity in Cassia County happened in the city limits of the county seat, according to figures released by the sheriff's department, which has provided Burley's law enforcement since late 1986.

Based on a 10-year-old analysis of the total number of police responses within Burley, city taxpayers foot 65 percent of the total patrol, investigation and dispatch bill expended annually by the Cassia County sheriff's office.

Essentially, taxpayers in the city are getting a discount on police services.

But the red-and-blue-light special may be near an end. A committee of city, county and law enforce-

The cost for having Cassia County sheriff's deputies patrol inside Burley city limits isn't keeping up with the amount of crime committed in the town. City and county officials meet this week to review their law enforcement consolidation contract. (Inset photo) Sheriff's office officials meet this week to review the contract, with an eye on equity because of the increasing percentage of police responses in Burley, Sheriff Billy Crystal said.

In each of the past four years, offenses in Burley relative to the entire county have increased. In 1992, 74 percent of Cassia County's crime took place in Burley; last year, the percentage reached 83.4 even though incidents dropped by 535 in the city.

Is it fair to ask Burley taxpayers to pay more for law enforcement even though less crime is being committed in the city?

"It's a hard equity decision to make," said Bill Parsons, Burley's attorney. "Just because action happens in the four corners of the city limits doesn't mean it is an isolated city problem."

On patrol

Even prior to consolidation, numbers here shown Burley has more crime than the rest of the county. Statistics from 1982 to 1985 - the years prior to the contract - showed 80.3 percent of criminal activity in Cassia County happened in Burley.

Under the contract with the county, the city gets a break. City officials argue they shouldn't pay more for law enforcement because it's not just Burley citizens who commit crimes in town.

The fact that we are the county seat doesn't mean we have to carry all the weight," he said.

Costs since consolidation

In 10 years, the amount paid by Burley taxpayers for law enforcement has more than doubled. Over the same period, the county has increased its allocation for the sheriff's department by 60 percent.

"Things have really dramatically changed," Crystal said, referring to increased crime and increased law enforcement resources.

The one thing that hasn't changed much is deputies' wages. During negotiations last year that turned sour, deputies demanded a $500 a month raise and 5 percent annual salary increase. Without the money, some deputies said they would be forced to find work elsewhere.

Burley's share of the sheriff's budget was mentioned often by disgruntled deputies as a source of more money for raises.

The city saves $106,000 to $370,000 annually by consolidating its police force with the county, money that could be proffered for higher wages, they argued.

Deputies received a 3 percent cost of living raise last year, leaving their demands for more money less than fulfilled.

But even if the contract with the city is adjusted, deputies shouldn't bank on more money coming their way, Adams said. Adjustments in the contract won't mean more money in the overall budget, just a change in responsibility.

Bird

diation - food is far less important, Nichols said.

Razor-sharp talons are always the most dangerous aspects of handling a bird of prey. Nichols once had a raptor grab her cheek with its sharp talons. Such birds will tighten their grip into flesh if they feel any flinching, she said. Luckily, she was able to very carefully pry them off with another person's help. "You learn very fast it's not something you want to deal with," Randall said.

Changes

Hodge said. The chief is good at setting time lines or dates to check up on issues, Hodge said.

Hodge said DeVore's management style is hands-off.

"He doesn't dictate how something will be done, but he wants to know how it's being done and what's being done," Hodge said.

The idea to reduce the department to three divisions already had started forming when DeVore joined the department, Hodge said.

Restructuring made a difference because everyone knows what department they work for, and what their role in that department is, Lee said.

Changes include:
• A streamlining of divisions, from five to three: uniform, investigative, and support services. An information services department works independently.
• A streamlined management structure. Two lieutenants are left: Lt. Mick Turner, who operates the computer and communications systems for police and the rest of the city, and Lt. Dennis Chambers, in charge of the crime lab. Bill Stonemetz works two days per week, doing fingerprinting and community relations.

The crime lab and records departments to the support services division. "They both support the whole department," Hodge said.

The three captains will rotate through the divisions, and slots will be shuffled every two or three years, Hodge said.

"The philosophy is that you need a well-rounded person to do all this stuff," he said.

"I've spent most of my career in uniform, and it's been a real eye-opener to get out and see why other divisions do what they do."

The changes and some attrition opened up

"We promoted four sergeants at one time. That was the most I'd ever seen in this department. It was great, because it gave an opportunity for guys to move up," Hodge said.

The next step will be to reopen a two-officer narcotics investigation unit, DeVore said. The narcotics unit will be filled from within the department.

The city has not had a narcotics unit since the Tri-County Drug Task Force was shut down in January 1995. Juan Nunez was convicted of taking money from that unit; Twin Falls officer Don Walden was acquitted of similar charges.

"It was a good decision at the time to just take hands off and let the state investigate," DeVore said. "But we may have thrown the baby out with the bath water. It's time to start up again."

DeVore also tightened down existing city policy on officers moonlighting. He must approve any outside work.

"This policy is partly to avoid conflicts of interest, or jobs that might reflect badly on the department's professionalism," DeVore said. Another reason is safety.

"They work 12-hour shifts, so we don't want them working another 40 hours," DeVore said.

"I have only not approved one outside job."

Sewer

"The other plans are patchwork solutions at best," Davis said. "We'd be back to voters in five years."

Other proposals on the table so far include expansion of the Riverside plant, estimated to cost $5.5 million, $3.3 of which would be in a bond issue.

Another option is expanding the Woodside plant. Consultants project $5.1 million for that project; voters would face a $4.1 million bond issue. However, Woodside developer Chuck Grubb has sued the city over the Woodside plant, claiming it should be used exclusively for his Woodside projects. That could stall any construction on the site, eating into crucial time.

Friday, EPA officials in Boise confirmed the newest lagoon system proposal will be approved if the land deal goes through, Lindley said.

The system on the table is patented by Sheaffer International, an Illinois corporation.

The process started in 1972, when former Sen. Edmund Muskie introduced the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, which said "streams and rivers are no longer to be considered part of the waste treatment process."

The system fully complies with the spirit of the federal clean water legislation, the main complaint levied against Hailey's Riverside plant, Lindley said. It would include a 12-acre, 25-foot-deep lined storage pond and a 50-acre winter storage facility. No wastewater would be discharged into the Big Wood River. An irrigation system is included in the price, using treated water.

Proponents claim the system has no odor, because raw sewage is never exposed to the air - rather, it's stored between 20 feet of aerated water and the surface air. The company also claims the system doesn't create sludge.

Because the plan includes an irrigation system, it could accommodate a future municipal golf course, Lindley said.

Lindley said he's talking to more than one landowner. While chances of closing a deal with the Chicago landowner are good, Lindley said, he doesn't want to put "all the eggs in one basket."

He said the system would be easily constructed and meet EPA deadlines, even if a bond issue were delayed until August.

However, this most recent development could hit a snag - some Hailey residents see a stalled sewer system as a check against uncontrolled growth. The proposed lagoon system accommodates a projected 12,000 Hailey population.

On the other hand, it pleases environmentalists and developers simultaneously, said Lindley. And now recalculated cost estimates equal other, less favored plans, he said.

Also, lagoon systems are not an untried method. In northern California, 250 miles from San Francisco, a sewage lagoon was built in Arcata, similar in concept to the one proposed for Hailey. The 154-acre site includes marshlands and a wildlife sanctuary. The system continues to be eligible for federal grant money, and meets California's strict sewer discharge programs, according to a 1993 Smithsonian article.

The system won the city a $100,000 grant from the Ford Foundation's Innovation in Government Program, and set off a flood of inquiries from mayors and town engineers throughout the country.

Lindley said the proposed Hailey lagoon system is even more earth-friendly, because no discharge to the river would occur.

But city officials acknowledge the biggest question is still up in the air: Can any plan be approved by tax-cautious Hailey voters, who soundly defeated a $1.9 million sewer/water bond issue in 1995?

Hailey residents can expect more sewer information in the mail Tuesday. Another informational open house on the town's sewer dilemma is set from 4 to 7 p.m. Wednesday in the old county courthouse.

Lawmakers in quandary over law

BOISE (AP) — Idaho legislators admit there are problems with a state system that limits the number of liquor licenses by population yet allows companies with the money to hire lobbyists to get special-use permits.

But there seems to be nothing they can do about it.

The House State Affairs Committee voted 12-8 on Friday to put up for technical changes before full House consideration of a bill granting the Clark House, a bed and breakfast at Hayden Lake, a special liquor license.

"A very, very poor way to legislate," said Rep. John "Bert" Stevenson, R-Rupert.

Lobbyists have been working for more than a year to get a special liquor permit for the Clark House. State laws say liquor permits can be issued only in incorporated areas, strictly controlled by population.

But so many exemptions have been granted that the system is almost useless, lawmakers said. Exceptions have been approved for individual ski areas, golf courses and wineries with golf courses, among others.

The Clark House is a former mansion built in 1910. At one time the estate had 1,400 acres, seven outbuildings and four miles of lakefront. The main building has 15,000 square feet, 26 rooms, 10 fireplaces and 15 bathrooms.

It went on the National Register of Historic Places in 1976 but was in such disrepair that in 1989 it was to be burned down as practice for local firefighters.

Monty Danner bought the property and restored it. Clark House now boasts lodging and dining facilities, but sponsors of the legislation said the facility needs a liquor license to compete.

"What's special about this?" asked Rep. John Tippets, R-Bennington. "This is the wrong thing to do."

Rep. Bruce Newcomb, R-Burley, said granting individual exemptions is the only way it can be handled. He said lawmakers have talked for years about changing the system but nothing has happened.

After 3 days of discussion of life on Mars: A very definite maybe

Knight-Ridder News Service

SEATTLE — Is there now — or was there ever — life on Mars?

For three days, astronomers, biologists, chemists and geologists debated the Mars question — one of the most momentous in the history of science — at a meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Scientists who six months ago reported potential evidence for ancient microbes in a Martian meteorite admitted in Seattle this week that they still don't have a definite answer. But they said it's a mistake to declare Mars dead.

Even skeptics who contend the case for Martian life is not proven agreed that a primitive form of biology is possible, even probable, not only on the Red Planet but many other heavenly bodies as well.

They simply don't believe the 3.6 billion year-old meteorite that was greeted with enormous excitement last summer clinches the argument.

Their opinions on the existence of extra-terrestrial life ranged from "very plausible" to "very likely" to "almost inevitable."

Christopher Romanek, a University of Georgia geologist and a member of the meteorite study team, said critics who sounded a death knell for Martian life last fall were wrong.

"Death knell? Nothing could be further from the truth," he said. "Pray the hell off the coffin. There's still a living, breathing hypothesis inside."

Some more recent studies have tended to strengthen the case for life on Mars, Romanek said, and some have weakened it. "It's been a step forward, and a step back," he said. "Only time will tell whether we are right or not."

John Kerridge, a chemist at the University of California, San Diego, who challenged the meteorite evidence at a congressional hearing last fall, conceded that the planet may well have once supported living organisms.

"There is a very reasonable chance that life emerged on Mars and eventually died out when the environment changed," he said. But Kerridge insisted that the apparent fossils found in the Martian meteorite, which was picked up in Antarctica in 1984, are not of biological origin, but could have come from interstellar dust or earthly contamination.

He argued that it will take 15 years of robotic missions to Mars to determine whether life ever existed there. Two such spacecraft are already en route to the planet, scheduled to arrive later this year.

Twin sisters share banking tales in book

HUNTINGTON, W.Va. (AP) — Faye Hudson and Maye Smith are still hard at work, even though they've retired from the small town savings and loan business as millionaires.

The 73-year-old twin sisters are on tour promoting their book about how they advanced from tellers to executives at the Point Pleasant Federal Savings Bank.

They sold the 102-year-old thrift in the Ohio River town in 1995 to Charleston's One Valley Bancorp. They won't say how big their share was, but shareholders received a total of about $17.5 million in stock and cash.

The book was proposed by Harper Collins Publishers of New York. "We didn't think it was a story at first," Hudson said at a recent book signing.

A year of interviews with author Leslie Whitaker resulted in "Maye and Faye's Building & Loan: The Story of a Remarkable Sisterhood, How Twin Sisters Ran the Cleanest, Kindest Bank in America and Did Right-by-a-Whole Town."

Their rise in banking began in 1952 when Smith took a job as a teller after her husband died and left her with an infant son. Her sister started as a teller about 10 years later.

Smith was president and chief executive officer, helping the thrift's assets grow to $57 million by the end of 1994, while Hudson was vice president and secretary.

While thrifths elsewhere were failing, they say they succeeded by watching every dime and treating customers as close friends.

"What we did was so simple," Hudson said.

Brown becomes published author

True life adventures of Buhl teen become stories for all to enjoy

BUHL - Kalinda Brown of Buhl has been awarded a certificate of excellence and $10 for having a story she wrote for eighth-grade language arts class published in two books.

The Stone Soup of Santa Cruz, Calif., and the Elder-Ross Elementary School book of Dubois, Ind.

Kalinda wrote the story in early 1996 and was notified in the fall that she had been chosen for the top 5 percent to be published. Her language arts teacher, Denise Mum, sent her project to the editors, and Kalinda credits her for the encouragement and support she needed to complete the story.

Kalinda's story is about a rattlesnake who visited their porch when she was 3 years old. The story relates how each family member reacted and how the snake was disposed of. Now a ninth-grader, Kalinda likes to write stories about real-life experiences at home or on the farm. She enjoys writing but prefers drawing. She plays basketball with the ninth-grade team and language arts for junior varsity. She likes the post position and rebounding. Her parents are Helen and Greg Brown.

Kalinda Brown was awarded a certificate of excellence and $10 when a story she wrote for eighth-grade language arts class was published in two books.

FOCUS ON PEOPLE

Mathis travels to D.C.

Cherie Mathis of Kimberly was chosen to attend the National Young Leaders Conference that ends today in Washington, D.C. "The Leaders of Tomorrow Meeting the Leaders of Today" was the conference theme. The conference is a unique leadership development program for high school students who have demonstrated leadership potential and scholastic ability.

Program highlights included remarks from the House of Representatives and a panel discussion with prominent journalists at the National Press Club. Scholars visited foreign embassies and received policy briefings from senior government officials.

The National Young Leaders Conference is sponsored by the Congressional Youth Leadership Council, a nonprofit, nonpartisan educational organization.

Cherie is a senior at Valley High School in Bluebonnet.

Vain receives award

Castledale High School senior Katie Vain has been chosen to receive the Primm High School Leadership Award.

Chosen as a senior at Valley High School in Bluebonnet.

Utah lawmakers backing away from concealed weapons law

SALT LAKE CITY (AP)—Just two months ago, lawmakers were clamoring to tighten the state's concealed weapons law—filing 27 gun-related bills before this year's legislative session even began.

There were questions about whether the two-year-old law would allow concealed weapons to be taken practically anywhere and if that would conflict with a statute prohibiting guns on school property.

Then, the Mormon Church said it opposed guns in chapels.

Legislators agreed there might be some revisions. But after finding themselves crunched between the interests of a powerful gun lobby and the concerns of church, school and public safety officials, many lawmakers have become more than a little gun shy.

"Maybe we're fixing something that doesn't need to be fixed," said Sen. Steve Barth, R-Salt Lake, who introduced the bill.

Former State Public Safety Director Doug Bodrero, who urged legislators last spring to clarify exactly where guns can be taken, said their waffling this year is unfair.

"They are policymakers and they need to step up on the guns and make policy and not get off out of fear of offending one side or the other," Bodrero said.

Before the state's concealed weapons law was passed in 1993, Utah residents who wanted to carry a concealed gun had to prove they were in imminent danger or their occupation required it. The new law requires the state to prove why someone shouldn't be given a concealed weapons permit.

The statute resulted in a dramatic increase in permits from 750 to about 15,000 today. It also left many wondering whether the wording that says permit holders can carry guns "without restriction" actually meant weapons could be taken everywhere.

"To me it's very clear there's a conflict and that conflict needs to be addressed," Bodrero said. "If the Legislature is to address it, they're doing a disservice to their constituents."

Sen. Mike Waddams, R-Salt Lake, sponsored the 1993 legislation and acknowledges he admitted to bring three of this year's concealed weapons bills because of concerns raised before the session began.

But now he questions whether any of his bills are really necessary. "The more information I get, the more I think we've done the right thing already," he said.

His bills would require permission from an administrator before taking a concealed weapon into a school, exempt permit holders from criminal background checks when purchasing a handgun, and specify that private property owners have a right to prohibit weapons except in areas open to the general public.

That final bill also states that churches would have the right to ban guns.

Waddams said that without his bills, a person could carry a gun anywhere, and maybe they should be allowed to do that. Residents have a right to protect themselves, and if their weapons are truly concealed, no one else would know they are carrying anyway, he said.

His bills, and another sponsored by Democratic Sen. Robert Steiner of Salt Lake, have been assigned to the Senate Judiciary Committee, but both legislators said they may not get a hearing.

Blackham connected the bills to heated issues of private property rights versus the right to bear arms and that it would be a "nightmare" if they made it to the floor for debate. But he said there has been no "hard discussion on leadership's part" near to give the bills a hearing.

Sen. Craig Taylor, R-Kaysville, who chairs the Judiciary Committee, acknowledged the bills may never come up.

"We've got a lot more important issues to deal with than spend time on one that has been blown out of proportion," Taylor said. "It's the criminals that we need to deal with."

Steiner said if his bill is not given a hearing in the Judiciary Committee, he may shop around for another. His bill would allow an employer to prohibit employees from bringing guns to work, and ban guns from schools, churches and hospitals.

Republican legislators point to the fact that there have been no violent acts involving concealed weapons crimes since the law was passed as proof additional legislation may not be needed.

"I think a good argument is, 'Show me one problem,'" Blackham said. "If you can't show me one then what's the point in making changes." Bodrero agrees there have been no major problems, but said delaying a decision may cause more trouble.

"To wait for the body count before we do anything, I don't think that's responsible," he said. Bodrero first raised the issue last year before a legislative interim committee. But lawmakers took an even closer look at the matter after The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints issued a statement that it would be "inappropriate" for anyone but police to carry weapons into a church.

The Mormon Church claims 70 percent of Utah's 1.2 million population and about 85 percent of the Utah Legislature as members.

Steve Gunn of Utahns Against Gun Violence said it would be a "cop out" for legislators to do nothing. He fears that if the law isn't clarified, it will be left up to the courts to do so.

"The fact of the matter is, the statute is ambiguous and that ambiguity ought to be cleared up instead of waiting several years for courts to decide," Gunn said.

Rob Bishop, lobbyist for the Utah Shooting Sports Council, said any limits to where guns can be taken must be crafted carefully. Private property owners already have the right to ban guns from their property, and Bishop contends churches fall into that same category.

The council supports a bill, sponsored by Rep. Steve Barth, D-Salt Lake, which would allow the Department of Public Safety to revoke a concealed weapon permit for the same crimes that would prevent someone from obtaining one. Bishop also supports prohibiting guns in restricted areas of airports. But he fears other limitations would trample on the Second Amendment right to bear arms.

Last month, a House committee passed three concealed weapons bills, including Barth's. The other two would tighten regulations involving guns at the Salt Lake City International Airport and provide for recognizing concealed-carry permits from other states.

Be intolerant of vegetables in silence

The other day, I was standing in line at a fast-food restaurant when a nice-looking, middle-aged woman came through the door, pushed in front of me and motioned for me to join her at the front of the line.

I could hardly believe my eyes. It wasn't like she didn't know what she was doing. She actually looked right at me, with a defiant expression of victory.

All for a hamburger. It reminded me the day when Bobby Ray White pushed me out of the lunch line in first grade. But everyone knew Bobby Ray was a bully. And he was the only one who ever ate Mrs. Glover's tuna surprise at school anyway.

The fast-food incident was different. This was big-time lack of manners, by someone who was old enough to know better.

Where does that start? I was raised on the Mason-Dixon line, far enough South to be knee-deep in thank-yous and yes-sirs—and thank-you notes and covered dishes for the neighbors.

No one could stand kids who were impolite.

Denise Turner

I passed along the trappings of Southern hospitality to my own kids, too.

My 19-year-old daughter has never forgiven me for making her write a thank-you note to the first-grade boy who left a bunch of flowers at our front door. I made her write it in spite of the fact that I suspected he had snatched the daisies from the Hall's yard down the street.

And I always made my kids say hello to their elementary schoolmates in malls and restaurants, even though, "No self-respecting third-grade girl would ever say hello to a boy, Mom."

My friend Jennifer, from back home, raised her children the same way. One day, she told me a story about her 6-year-old. It happened during the national crisis in Beirut.

"Jill asked me who I was going to vote for next time," Jennifer said. "She told me I shouldn't vote for President Reagan because he's always interrupting her cartoons on TV, and interrupting is impolite."

My friend Terry had a similar experience. She once heard two pre-schoolers carrying on a serious conversation: "Mom said we can never say dirty words. Do you suppose mud is a dirty word?"

I've seen kids stick out their tongues and chant, "I don't have to," while their parents stood by and laughed at the bratty little tots. I've also seen full-grown adults push people out of lines.

Somewhat, I think there is a correlation. When my friend Karen was pregnant with her second child, she made friends with a couple in her prenatal exercise class.

"Kevin is holding a tape player next to Judy's stomach and playing classical music for the baby an hour every night," Karen told me. "They think this will help the baby appreciate good music and also understand bedtime."

I suspect that baby did end up both loving music and going to bed at night, but I doubt it was because of those pre-birth bedtime concerns. Rather, I imagine it was because the baby's parents loved music and slept at night.

How do you teach a kid to be polite? Mostly, I guess, by not being the lady at the fast-food restaurant.

First, the experts say, you have to respect your children. That way, they learn to respect themselves. Then, they can respect other people.

Invite people to your home and show them hospitality, psychologists suggest, and encourage your children to do the same. Let the kids help you bake cookies for the bereaved. Take your own kids to visit a shut-in from church.

Never underestimate a random act of kindness.

I once read that the average youngster, from birth to age 5, will tolerate only six of the 29 standard vegetables.

Your job as a parent, should you choose to accept it, is to teach your children to be intolerant of those vegetables in silence—especially when they are having dinner at someone else's house.

After career in retailing, it's still hard to say no to Earl

By Steve Crump
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Earl Faulkner sat stilly in the armchair, poring.

The year was 1945, and he was waiting to meet Gen. Douglas MacArthur, conqueror of Japan and commander of United States forces in the Far East. The economy was in tatters. Families were subsisting on demmed American rations, and even skilled and educated workers were idle.

Sgt. Faulkner had a better idea, and he'd come to sell MacArthur about it. MacArthur had a reputation in the Army — and in the rest of America at the time — as being on a first-name basis with God, and Faulkner was petrified.

"Relax, sergeant," the general said as Faulkner stood at attention. "And tell me what you have in mind."

Faulkner wanted to make surplus parachute silk, which the Army had in abundance at the time, and put women to work making linens to sell in American PXs.

Through his pre-World War II connections in the states, he knew how to put sewing machines, and finding workers with the necessary skills wasn't a problem.

To his amazement, MacArthur said yes and helped launch a legendary career.

It would encompass love, humor, philanthropy, community, friendship, and most of all, the art of the deal. For above anything else through his 55 years, Earl Faulkner has been a salesman.

"When I went to work in a store (as a teen-ager), my first job was selling ladies' gloves," Faulkner said. "I loved it." Though formally trained for seven years since closing his downtown Twin Falls clothing store, Faulkner has never stopped selling. Among other things, he was principal benefactor of the Faulkner Planetarium at the 15-month-old Herrert Center for the Arts and Sciences on the campus of the College of Southern Idaho — and equally important, its principal pinchman.

"It's a $3 million facility that is largely paid for," College of Southern Idaho president Gerald Meyerhoefer said. "Earl is responsible for a big part of that."

"Most of the people I asked for money were people that I had known for a long time, people I'd worked with, my friends and customers," Faulkner said. "They knew me, and I knew them, and it wasn't hard to ask them to help out."

Earl Faulkner, a fixture of downtown Twin Falls for 38 years, was the principal benefactor for the planetarium at the College of Southern Idaho that now bears his name.

May not, but his friends and customers knew how hard it is to say no to Earl Faulkner.

For nearly 38 years, he worked the black-and-white checkered tile floor of The Paris, a dervish of accommodation and oneupmanship.

If an item didn't fit, Faulkner could always find one that did — or have it altered. If it were the wrong color, he knew how to make it right.

And if you didn't have the cash, well, Faulkner had a bright pink credit card for you and always a sale on which to use it.

"My policy was that if you missed two payments on your account, I'd take the credit card away," he said. "I don't think I had to do that with more than a few people in all my years in business."

Credit cards — especially in a small town in the middle of nowhere — were a novel idea when Faulkner bought The Paris in 1952 from the Jewish shopkeep-

"Mr. Avery (former Montgomery Ward president Sewell Avery, for whom Faulkner had worked as a wunderkind store director and regional manager after the war) warned me about doing business in small towns," Faulkner said. "He said, 'Those people will cheat you.' But I had a good feeling about it."

Maybe that's because Faulkner was a small-town boy himself, born in Meridian and working in a Boise clothing store by age 13. Carriage-trade customers were few and far between in the Idaho of the 1920s and '30s, so he

Bundle up your baby? Maybe not now

By Rebecca Irtzoka
Times-News correspondent

"The irony is, if your baby is wearing a hat, someone will tell you, 'Is it really too warm for a hat that baby's going to sneeze to death.' But the miracle you observe is, someone else will approach you, tug her finger in your face, and mumble you feel like you've committed the unpardonable sin."
— Nancy Kennedy, "Mama on the Moon"

TWIN FALLS — Most mothers want to make sure that their children are warm all the time, but forget that while infants can get colder faster than an adult, they also get warmer faster.

"I have frequently told mothers — and it's just maternal instinct, I think — that the two mistakes they usually make are they overfeed (babies) and keep them too warm," said Dr. Ben Katz of the Pediatrics Center.

"The surface area of the head is biggest on a baby," Katz explained. "If the temperature of the head shifts, it can change the temperature of the entire body."

But touching the head isn't always the best way of getting an accurate temperature, warned Katz. Parents should probably use other means of detecting the baby's body temperature.

Perspiring in below-freezing temperatures means the child is too warm, which is bad. This can cause what women of old and moms today call "heat rash."

"Occasionally, a kid comes in sick, and mom will bring him to the office all bundled up," Katz said. "If he has a fever, it may be higher by the time he gets to the office because of over-bundling."

Katz attributes this heavy dressing phenomenon to the maternal instinct to keep baby warm and dry, and protect baby from the awful elements.

In other words, Mom is being Mom.

A sign, besides perspiration or sweat, could be a flush in color on the cheeks.

The opposite of flushed, red skin is blue skin. Blue is probably not a good color for fingers and toes, because it means that the child might be too cold and on the road toward frostbite.

Katz said that he has seen young chil-

Early puberty linked to problems in girls

The Washington Post

Girls who enter puberty early have a greater risk of symptoms of depression, eating disorders and panic attacks, according to a study by Stanford University researchers.

Past research has looked at how the age of puberty affects subsequent risk of problems and found sharp gender differences. Two studies, for example, showed that early puberty gives boys — but not girls — a social advantage. Other research has found that early sexual maturation in girls is linked to distorted body image, underachievement in school and a greater likelihood of such "risky" behavior as smoking, drinking alcohol and engaging in sexual intercourse.

This study, which appears in the February issue of the Journal of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry, is the first to track a group of prepubertal girls as they approach and reach sexual maturity and to assess them for later risk of psychiatric symptoms and disorders.

Eleven hundred fifty-six girls in the sixth, seventh and eighth grades in San Jose, Calif., were enrolled in the study and evaluated using growth and development measures as well as questionnaires and interviews. The students were re-examined at various times during junior high, and several hundred participants were followed into high school.

STRATEGIES FOR SURVIVING THE '90s

Giving daughters room to grow

One way to help your teenage daughter learn the importance of making and keeping friends is to let her explore peer relationships on her own.

- Be alert if she shares her thoughts, feelings more with her friends than with you. It is natural for teens to rely more on peers and less on parents for emotional support.
- Allow her to use the phone for frequent amounts of time. Telephone talk allows her to navigate more easily through relationships with her peers.
- Suggest to your daughter that she find a "study-buddy" — someone she can discuss homework and classwork with.
- Recognize that you don't always have to stage social events for your daughter and her friends. Relaxed time with friends is as important as programmed time.

The study found that girls with early puberty were three times as likely to develop panic-attack symptoms as participants who had average or late sexual maturation. They were about twice as likely to have symptoms of eating disorders and about 1.5 times as likely to develop symptoms of depression, the study found. These effects also persisted into high school, the researchers reported. It is not known whether early sexual maturation somehow leads to psychological problems or if psychological distress somehow helps set the stage for early puberty. As children become adolescents, "there are changes in peer-group pressures, school-related stresses, sexual identity, sexual experiences, drug use, gender roles, relationships with parents and maturity," said Chris Hayward, associate professor of psychiatry at Stanford and lead author of the study. "All of these things are changing at the same time that the girls are going through puberty. It may be these factors interact more with girls who go through puberty earlier."

ON THE JOB

Square dealing

If you've gone from an office to a cubicle because your office has been redesigned, relocated or downsized, here are some pointers on cubicle etiquette. First and foremost, remember that although they don't look like one, cubicles are meant to be offices. Shouting over the partitions, even when answering a colleague, is rude, Investor's Business Daily says. Treat the cubicle opening as a door, and instead of barging in on someone in another cubicle, send e-mail or phone them first so you'll know if they have visitors or can talk.

Summer jobs

Speaking of the federal government, the Labor Department says it is sending $871 million to cities and communities across the nation to use in summer jobs programs for low-income youths. The summer job funds will restore the program to the 1995 level and reverses a 28 percent cut last year.

Jack or Jane or all trades

You're better off knowing a little about a lot than a lot about a little. That's according to the Challenger, Gray & Christmas consulting firm, which says when companies hire permanent employees these days, many are looking for generalists, who can do a variety of jobs and who are comfortable with technology. Current employees with limited skills — even if they're good workers — will be the most vulnerable if there are future layoffs.

Migrant workers

Men move, women stay put. We're not talking about job advancement, we're talking about job-hopping. A new federal Bureau of Labor Statistics report says that men have been changing jobs more frequently in recent years but women have generally defied the widely held belief that the American work force has become increasingly mobile.

Preemptive strike

Don't let that smart aleck MBA at work bug you. Without being aggressive or defensive, Men's Health magazine suggests asking about something you know everything about and he or she knows little or nothing. The little rver will spend the rest of the day questioning his or her decision-making. — Compiled from wire reports learned how to give people what they wanted. After the war, he was hired by Montgomery Ward, which at the time was America's leading retailer.

Under Avery, who had become famous for battling President Roosevelt over federal regulation of business during the New Deal and war years, Ward's was a cash cow — "the bank with the department store front." It had either a retail outlet or a catalog store in almost every town in America, and it specialized in products that were affordable and durable.

Ward's was a high-volume, no-frills operation that rewarded managers who could turn a buck, and Faulkner quickly proved his talent for it. In 1952, he was named manager of the company's State Street store in Chicago, one of its flagship outlets, and later to regional management of the company's stores in the South.

"There was no air-conditioning in those stores at that time, and the ladies who came in would smell," he said. "So I put in cologne."

But Faulkner and his wife, Hazel, a Navy WAVE whom he had married during the war, decided to go west. He took a job with Allied Store, which owned the Bon Marche, and they moved to Twin Falls.

Faulkner's first impressions of the place weren't encouraging.

"Hazel asked me after we arrived what I thought, and I said, 'Well, it's pretty small place. But I was determined to stick it out.'"

Faulkner's first boss at the Bon turned out to be a man who had been fired by Ward's while Faulkner was a manager there. He decided that his tenure with Allied would be short-lived.

"So I went over to see the fellow who owned The Paris and he offered to sell it to me," Faulkner said. "Then I went to see (banker) Harry Eaton; he agreed to lend me the money."

Their contract was a handshake, and they sealed it with a drink.

Credit cards, Faulkner's customer-service philosophy and his distinctive newspaper ads made The Paris an instant and enduring hit. Farm wives loved the new credit cards, sometimes bringing in wads of cash to pay off their accounts after the crops were sold.

At the same time, Faulkner began attracting upscale customers from the Wood River Valley, women who would make what was then a four-hour round trip drive to buy the high-end product lines that The Paris offered.

During its heyday, The Paris commanded as much as one-third of the women's clothing business in the eight counties of south-central Idaho. In a single-day fire sale, Faulkner once sold $110,000 in merchandise, replacing two broken windows in the process.

But after the Magic Valley Mall opened in 1986, taking more customers away from downtown, Faulkner decided to retire. He locked up his store for the last time on the final business day of the 1980s.

"I thought about doing some other things, like opening a Pendleton store," he said. "But I always had an interest in the college, and Hazel and I decided that's what we wanted to do with our money."

Faulkner was in on the planning of the planetarium, which evolved from Herrett Museum founder Norman Herrett's interest in astronomy. He didn't know Herrett well, but Faulkner thought the planetarium was a fine idea.

Starting in 1993, he and Herrett director Jim Woods pitched the project to anyone who would listen.

"He'd talk about the science and I'd talk about the money," Faulkner said.

When the Faulkner Planetarium in the new Herrett Center opened in November 1995, Faulkner said it was one of the proudest moments of his life. He still visits often, marveling at the gee-whiz technology.

"It's such a great thing for a community like this, and for the young people," he said. "It brings in people from all over."

Faulkner, whose wife died four years ago, said his home in northeast Twin Falls will go to CSI after his death and be used as the president's residence. His beloved dog, Bridgit, will go to Meyerhoefer's wife.

But his talent for the deal will belong forever to local legend.

"I was stopped (for a traffic violation) a while ago, and when I took out my wallet to show the officer my driver's license, he said, 'Women still show me their Paris cards.'" children with frostbite on their noses and elsewhere because Mom or Dad strapped the child into a backpack and went skiing. But, he added, frostbite isn't all that common.

Baby

While skiing with a baby in tow isn't smart, taking your child outside for very short periods in the cold weather should be OK. If you are worried about your child becoming too cold, just look for that blue, mottled or marbled skin.

Keep in mind, though, that babies tend to have a bluish hue in their extremities.

"A baby's feet may appear blue ... but the deep flow (of blood) is fine," Katz said. "You can't always judge by the extremities. Look at the color of the lips ... and areas closer to the heart."

Rosemary Casey, director of General Pediatric Faculty Practice at Children's Hospital of Philadelphia says that in cold weather, layered clothing is better than just one thick garment, and the extremities should be covered as well.

"A great deal of heat can be lost through the head," she told Knight-Ridder Newspapers. "It's extremely important to have a hat and to cover the ears," she said.

Katz added that parents should use their own particular skin temperature as a guide to dressing the baby. If Mom needs a sweater, baby might need an extra layer as well.

FAMILY LIFE

Politics aside, people want what's best for kids

Barney has reason to hug his creator Sheryl Leach; he still is considered the king by many tots.

'The Purple One' still reigns for pre-schoolers

The Allentown Morning Call

Barney haters have delighted in predicting the passing of "The Purple One," the plump and puffy television dinosaur that kiddies crave but many adults feel is a pathetic parasite sucking the brain cells from our open-minded children.

But it has been 10 years since Barney was created by a Dallas mother to star in a home video and five years since he became a special friend to millions of tube-addicted tots. And Barney is still beloved. Why?

"It's really a simple answer," said Alice Cahm, director of children's programming for Public Broadcasting System. "That is because every single day Barney tells children that he loves them and they're special and they are smart and they can make friends."

For anyone who doubts Barney is still king of the pre-school forest, consider these facts.

"Barney & Friends," with its energetic cast of fuzzy characters and happy human playmates, is the highest-rated preschool show on television, watched by 13.5 million viewers weekly. Twenty new shows are being produced for the show's fourth season, to begin in September, and "Barney & Friends" is contracted for two seasons after that.

Barney is the star of 25 home videos; the latest, "Barney's Sensational Day," was released Jan. 14. The fourth Barney recording, "Run Jump Skip and Sing," was released Jan. 18. About 750,000 people subscribe to Barney Magazine. Barney has a fan club with 1 million members.

Barney merchandise is nowhere near as hot as it was in the early 1990s, when hundreds of millions of dollars worth of Barney toys, books and stuffed animals flew off store shelves. The decline gave some the ammunition they needed to declare Barney a flash in the pan, a blip on the screen, a one-shot wonder. They were wrong. Barney's story begins in 1987, when Sheryl Leach, a former schoolteacher with a 2-year-old son fretted that she couldn't find a video to make him happy. She took matters into her own hands, writing a series of scripts about a snuggly teddy bear who came to life and interacted with children.

Leach turned Barney into a dinosaur after she saw how her son loved the dinosaurs that came to town in a traveling exhibit.

With funding from her father-in-law, chairman of Lyrick Studios, which produced videos, among other things, Leach created "Barney & the Backyard Gang" home videos. In a few short years, Barney was a hit. Barney landed on public television because he mesmerized the young daughter of an executive at Connecticut Public Television.

Critics charged Barney and his live friends were sappy and the production was poor. They said Barney didn't make children think; he just handed them candy-coated love. Some went off the deep end: Barney was even accused of being a government plant to prepare us for an alien invasion of reptiles.

The folks at Leach Productions took the high road, joking about those who went off the deep end and reminding the more stable public that Barney is designed to appeal only to preschoolers. Unlike many other shows for youngsters, it throws no bones to grown-ups.

Advocates for quality children's television such as Peggy Charren have lost their support.

"It's not that the messages are dumb or inappropriate. It's just they're not that hard to get," said Charren, now a visiting scholar at Harvard University. "Even on 'Mister Rogers' they deal with the death of a goldfish, and on 'Sesame Street,' with the death of the store owner. Barney's world is very sunny and happy and I think children need that too. You want a diversity of programs."

Los Angeles Times

The inaugural speeches are over, the kissed babies are back in their strollers and the soccer moms have vanished from the political radar screen. Or so it seems.

Down in the grass roots, the people who have been pushing for a more family-friendly government are sharpening their strategies to ensure the politicians don't forget about children's and family issues until the next election.

They say the movement is showing signs of a new constituency and new clout.

"They're more than just the liberals who are concerned about the poor children," said Santa Barbara, Calif., minister and community activist. "I think that more of us, liberals, conservatives added a Parents to the Polls project, a pilot program of the New York-based National Parenting Association, which aims to motivate parents to identify local issues and vote.

Campbell said she was so excited about getting the project up and running for the November election that she didn't stop to raise money or hire any staff. Instead she pulled together volunteer support from groups like the PTA and the League of Women Voters.

"I never had any difficulty getting things started," she said. "There's a hunger for it. People were amazed that someone asked them to come together and talk about what they felt would make it easier for them to be the good parents they want to be."

By avoiding divisive issues, and focusing on what Campbell called the "vital center," the activists got hundreds of parents in small focus groups to come up with an agenda of issues that included workplace flexibility, preschool child care and after-school programs; safe schools with good disciplining; tax relief for college; health care for children at school; and safe public transportation to and from school. The volunteers then interviewed candidates for Congress, state legislators and local school boards and published their positions in 1,500 voters' guides for parents.

There's no way of knowing, Campbell said, how much or whether the guide had an impact.

Nevertheless, they will be doing it again next year this time with funds and a director) and, she said, "We're looking to see some other communities do this."

There's a good chance others will.

The climate for such experiments is rapidly warming, said Wendy Lazarus, co-director of the Children's Partnership, a Santa Monica, Calif.-based national nonprofit organization that along with 350 other groups recently commissioned a national public opinion poll on children's issues. It showed that voters rank children's issues as a top priority.

FAMILY LIFE

Kindergarten can complicate care

Juggling act
Day care, school, activities

The Providence Journal-Bulletin

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — Susan Quinn Romano thought her life would be a little simpler — or at least a little cheaper — when her children started school. Fewer day-care worries. Lower child-care costs. She was wrong. She's now juggling day care, school and after-school programs for her three children, ages 3, 6 and 9. And she's still spending $282 a week for child care for the three, even though two are in public school.

"People used to say to me it gets worse when they get older," says Romano, of Jamestown, R.I., referring to everything from the scheduling to the finances. "I never believed it. But it's true."

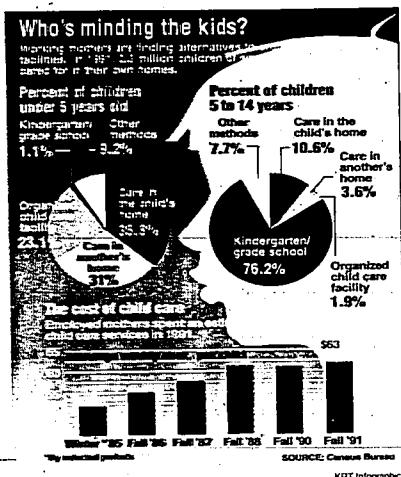

Most people, especially working parents, look forward to their children starting school, says Patricia Nolin, executive director of Options for Working Parents, a child-care referral agency sponsored by the Greater Providence Chamber of Commerce.

"They figure it will be easier on the schedule and the pocketbook, since they no longer have to worry about full-time child care."

But it can actually be harder — especially when a youngster enters kindergarten, since most kindergarten programs are half-day sessions, Nolin says. That means working parents have to come up with child care before and after school, in addition to vacations, holidays and snow days.

And child care for school-age children, especially kindergarten students, can cost at least as much as full-time child care for a preschooler, which often costs $100 to $150 a week.

Some day-care centers offer full-day kindergarten, and child care before and afterward. Many private and parochial schools offer full-day kindergarten, though not all of them offer child care before and after school.

But most working parents have to come up with their own child-care arrangements, which often involves a complex combination of friends, relatives and child-care programs to cover when the child is out of school.

"It's just nuts," says Elizabeth Burke Bryant, project director for Kids Count in Rhode Island, which monitors children's issues.

When it comes to child care for kindergarten students, Bryant says, "no matter what way you look at it, you're really trying to patch together a system of child care that in most cases can be unworkable."

That's why many experts say parents who will be sending their youngsters to school this fall should start looking for reliable child care now.

"The summer that they can line it up, the better off they're going to be," Nolin says.

"It is something that (parents) have to address in order to feel good about their kid being in school," agrees James Coffone, coordinating principal for the Cranston (R.I.) School Department.

The problem is, schools haven't changed to meet the needs of a changing society — notably that so many mothers are now in the workplace. Schools still operate only nine months a year, as they did when children were needed to work on the family farm during the summer, and classes last only five or six hours a day, with the assumption that a parent will be home afterward.

And kindergarten programs, which were begun as half-day sessions to wuan a youngster into a school setting, also haven't kept pace with the real world.

The fact is, in today's society, most 3- and 4-year-olds have already gone through some type of preschool program, whether day care, nursery school or Head Start, Nolin says. Many of those are already full-day programs, so it makes sense to go directly into a full-day kindergarten program.

Indeed, most educators and child-care experts agree that full-day kindergarten programs are best for children and their families.

"There's no question that with all-day kindergartens, kids are better prepared for Grade 1," says Joseph Renzulli, assistant superintendent for the Providence (R.I.) School Department.

Waterless bed may stop snoring

By Ray Recchi
Knight-Ridder News Service

Drip, drip, drip.
When I first heard the distinctive sound of plopping water one afternoon two weeks ago, my stomach sank. I figured the faucet in the master bathroom was leaking and I would have to call a plumber. I'm about as handy with a pipe wrench as most plumbers are with a violin. Oh, I can do simple tasks, like replacing a washer. But, for me, the solution is never to be snoring as replacing a washer.

Drip, drip, drip.
I walked into my bedroom and discovered the sound wasn't coming from a leaky faucet. But that didn't cheer me up at all. Because if it wasn't coming from the bathroom, there was only one other answer. Our waterbed had sprung a leak.

Sure enough, coming from the corner of the bed that steady drip, drip, drip. Anyone who has ever owned a waterbed knows how annoying it can be to try to patch one. Oh, it's easy enough if the leak is easily visible. But, for me, it's never as simple as that. Sure enough, the water seemed to be coming from underneath.
That meant I had to drain the bed to find the hole, and probably make a trip to the waterbed store, as I've had to do several times in the 14 years since we decided to become waterbed people.
I thought about it for a moment before making a snap decision.

"Honey," I said to my wife, "it's about time we got a new bedroom set, preferably one that doesn't require water." She agreed, as 100 out of 100 wives will.
Unfortunately, it was midweek and we couldn't possibly shop until the weekend. Since our two empire beds have only single beds, we were left with no alternative but to sleep in separate rooms until a new set was in place.

"Honey, I said to my wife, 'it's about time we got a new bedroom set, preferably one that doesn't require water.' She agreed, as 100 out of 100 wives will.

The following weekend, we went furniture shopping. Foolishly, I thought it would be easy. But then, I was just looking for a bedroom set, something sturdy, and comfortable to sleep on.
Tina, however, was looking for The Bedroom Set. "This may be the last one we ever buy," she said, turning a simple shopping trip into a quest.
Still, I thought I had caught a break when the first set we looked at seemed to meet all her criteria. It even had the canopy she has always wanted. Of course, we still had to look at every other set in the store, even the ones we wouldn't have taken if they had been giving them away. When we were done, however, we went back to that first one.

"You like it?" I asked. She did. "Enough to buy it?" I asked. Yes. Just when I was about to make a clean getaway, however, she stopped me. "Just let me look around a little more this week," she said. "If I don't see anything I like better, we'll come back." Aaaargh!

As I knew we would, we eventually went back and purchased the first set we had looked at, which will be delivered in another week, if we're lucky.

Meanwhile, we continue to kiss and go our separate ways each night. And although neither of us has admitted it (until now), I think each of us has been sleeping better than usual.
After more than 25 years of listening to Tina complain about the light every night, I can read in peace for as long as I choose. And once Tina gets to sleep, she stays asleep because I'm snoring on the other side of the house.

Sure, it's not very romantic. But then, neither are complaining and snoring.

Besides, we can take heart in the fact that soon we'll be sleeping in a brand new bed. And if that one springs a leak, we can fix it with a needle and thread.

Wife's wounded love takes time, patience, even counselors to heal

DEAR ABBY
Abby Varburton

DEAR ABBY: This letter is in response to the woman whose husband had recently confessed to an affair. She signed herself, "I Love Him With All My Heart." She said she didn't know of any marriages that had survived an affair - and I want to assure her that there are many that have.

My husband and I had been married only four months when he got re-involved with a woman he had an affair with during his first marriage. When my husband broke it off, she got so upset she told her husband, and it was my husband after that!

I told my husband that the affair had not changed my love for him, but it HAD deeply wounded me and affected my trust in him. I was willing to stay and work it out only if he was willing to go to counseling with me and work to earn my trust. He was more than willing to do so and we found a wonderful counselor who helped us achieve our goal - to heal and strengthen our relationship.

"I Love Him" expressed concern that her husband would grow tired of her pain. She's correct in that she does need someone else to confide in. Her pain is a result of a betrayal of trust. Her husband in confiding in friends is that they are usually not as objective as a counselor would be.

More than a bit of advice, as part of a couple who has successfully navigated this trauma: Find a good counselor with whom you both feel comfortable, be honest with the counselor and each other, and be patient with yourself and your husband as you both heal.

Also, if you have children, don't take for granted that you can shield them from your pain and stress. Make sure that they, too, have a counselor they can talk to.

-STRONGER BECAUSE OF IT IN ATLANTA

DEAR STRONGER: That's excellent advice from someone who's walked a mile in her mother's shoes. Your maturity and perseverance in your marriage are to be admired. And so is your generosity in speaking out about such a personal matter.

DEAR ABBY: I am so happy that I asked you to help me find my deceased wife's relatives so that I could give them her family album. Because of your column, I was able to locate a man named Hemenover who was raised together with my wife by Mrs. A. Hemenover of a bit of advice, as part of a couple who has successpatched the album to him. He is 80 years old. I hope he can identify some of the people in the pictures. I also came up with two great grandchildren, and some valuable information about my wife's background, too. (She had told me almost nothing about her family.)

Abby, the C.I.A. should put you under contract!

The response of your readers was swift, gracious and sincere. From coast to coast, they sent information and offered their help and encouragement.

I have talked to several of the Hemenovers. Abby, you have fired up a great new interest in their family background, and some amazing feat, and all in less than one month!

An observation: When my daughter suggested I contact you, she said, "Some people read sports, editorials, finance and funnies, but EVERYBODY reads Dear Abby." She was correct. So thank you very much for being there and bringing my search to a successful conclusion.

-GAYLE CHEW, MEDFORD, ORE.

DEAR MR. CHEW: I have been told that my readers are the most generous and caring people in the world - and your letter illustrates that I wasn't exaggerating. I'm pleased that your problem was so quickly and happily resolved. Thank you for a dandy day-brightener.

Chess becomes a teaching tool in many of the nation's schools

San-Sentinel, South Florida

-LIGHTHOUSE POINT, Fla. - As class began, the students shoved bookbags under seats, sat in pairs and set up chessboards on desks.

"Do you want to learn or do you want to play?" teacher Javier Pinedo said.

"Play!" shouted the second-grader with glee.

The students shook their opponents' hands, wished them good luck and began to play.
Chess, a game developed 1,500 years ago, has taken its place alongside computers as an educational tool at the North Broward School and Lighthouse Point Academy. Chess is a teaching tool now in place in many of the nation's largest public school districts, including Atlanta, Boston, Chicago and New York City.

The reason is that it strengthens the students' reasoning, logic and problem-solving abilities, while also improving memory, concentration and visualization skills, patience and determination.

According to a study conducted in New York City in 1993, students who tested below the national average on standardized tests had their scores rise significantly after learning to play chess.

At the school in Lighthouse Point, some students who were struggling with their studies have made marked improvements.

"Last year, I didn't even make the A/B honor roll and now I'm on the straight-A honor roll," said Cara Schiffer, a third-grader from Boca Raton, Fla. "I love to play."

The lessons learned from playing chess can be applied to academics and life.

Because chess has no luck involved, students quickly learn that each game depends on their skill and abilities. They can't blame failure on anyone but themselves.

The kids learn the consequences of not thinking things through and acting impulsively," said Pinedo, affectionately called "Mr. Chess" by the students.

New York's program, which teaches chess to inner-city students, began in 1986. This year, Chess in the Schools will reach more than 13,000 New York City students in 140 schools the intricacies of the game.

"We focus on inner-city schools because many of those students are not encouraged to use their minds or may not have the chance to do so," said Marley Kaplan, the national director of Chess in the Schools. "When they win, they feel good that they are using their minds, and this translates directly to their general attitude towards school."

The North Broward School and Lighthouse Point Academy, a small, private school with two academic programs, started teaching chess as an outgrowth of a counseling session between the school's president and a mischievous student. All students are required to learn chess.

"After talking with the student about a wrong choice he made, I began to think about chess and how it's a basis for good decision making," said Phil Morgaman, a lawyer. "But I said, 'This can't be chess. This can't be chess has been around forever.'"

Morgaman asked an assistant to look into using chess as a teaching tool. After doing some research, they found programs in various parts of the country in which chess was used to improve student performance.

To get the program started, the school contacted Pinedo, who is a member of the Association of Chess and Teachers in Palm Beach and lives in Palm Beach Gardens.

After Pinedo created the lesson plans, the school conducted a trial run of the chess program for eight weeks last school year. The response was so positive from the students and teachers that administrators decided to make it part of the curriculum.

Pinedo said that playing chess gives students lessons they can apply to their other subjects and to life in general.

A good example is in math. To play chess, students must have good organizational skills and be able to follow certain procedures. The same goes for solving math problems.
"In math, when you solve equations, you must go through certain steps," said Pinedo, who is also a math teacher. "If you change them, you get the wrong answer. In chess, you would lose."

Dancing in your chair can be fun, athletic

Lucille S. DeVivo

Why let advanced years or a few wrinkles stop you? Dancing is as easy as sitting in a chair in your living room in front of a video on your TV. So says Jodi Stolove, inventor of chair dancing — sometimes known as Dance Derriere.

Stolove's newest video, "Chair Dancing Around the World," is lively proof that music and dance routines help tone muscles, improve posture, build endurance and improve circulation — all this with a lift to the spirit, too.

Who can think about aches and pains when a Viennese waltz sweeps you into soaring steps that engross, edging over a wintry pond near ice-glazed trees?

And stress melts under an imaginary tropical sun as you wiggle into a Caribbean calypso, a mambo, a samba. Shake those paper plates used in these low-impact routines.

Stolove leads you, step by step, from the Mexican hot dance to Zorba the Greek, with country-western thrown in. She created chair dancing several years ago when a broken foot meant teaching her dance classes while sitting down. Strangely, it worked, and kept her in shape as well.

"Suddenly I saw the possibilities of chair dancing for people with limited movement, chronic illness or those in weight-loss or rehabilitation programs," she recalls. "I devised routines for fitness and fun."

Her videos offer three levels of participation, from intense to gentle. Viewers stop often to check their exercise heart rates against a chart, according to age. One rule: Check with your doctor first. "It looks like child's play, but it takes into account the entire bone structure, muscles and joints," says Helen Kolodny, 79, from Cardiff by the Sea, Calif. Her lectures are focused on helping after a shoulder injury and suffering pain in her knee and ankle.

Birdie Schulman, 69, of Long Beach, Calif., learned chair dancing at an Eldorado. "I never liked to exercise, but this is enjoyable," she says. "I like the idea of exercising at home. I dance several mornings a week while still in my robe and nightgown."

Another video: "Sit Down and Tone Up! Strength Training." And soon to be released: Jodi Stolove's "The Answer is Not in the Refrigerator." "You know what that's about!" Jodi Stolove has a bachelor's degree in dance and education and a master's in counseling psychology. Her lectures are featured at prominent health facilities, and she has appeared on major morning TV news programs.

For information or to order, call Chair Dancing International Inc., (800) 551-4386.

FAMILY NEWS YOU CAN USE

Babies in bunches

More and more of you are seeing double. And triple. As more American women delay childbearing and then use fertility drugs, triplets and other multiple births are becoming less of an oddity — but more of a concern, the National Center for Health Statistics reports. In 1994, triplet, quadruplet and quintuplet births occurred four times as often as they did in 1971. A higher incidence of multiple births is worrisome because babies born in sets of three or more tend to be less vigorous.

Hands-off parents

What's the matter with kids today? Parents, says syndicated radio advice-show host Laura Schlessinger. "Parents have abdicated parenting their children," she tells Detroit's Metropolitan Woman. "And the children! The arrogance we all have when we are past 15 and think we're hot stuff, we think we're grown up. And without our parents and society reinforcing that as valid and valuable, then we've got a lot of dangerous stuff going on kids doing drugs, violence, having babies. When I was in high school, nobody got pregnant. We don't have anybody saying 'no.'"

Fattened for the slaughter?

Parents beware! The cheeseburgers, french fries and milk-shakes your children eat can build up fat in their arteries that could cause heart attacks later in life. A new study at the Louisiana State Medical Center found that teen-agers and young adults who ate fat-rich diets or smoked showed higher risk factors for heart attacks than those who ate less fatty foods and didn't smoke.

Knight-Ridder News Service

Q. Why is there a five-month waiting period for Social Security disability benefits?

A. Social Security assumes that working families have access to other resources to provide support during periods of short-term disabilities, including worker's compensation, insurance, savings, and investments.

Q. What's the maximum Social Security retirement benefit? What's the average monthly Social Security benefit for a retired worker?

A. In 1997, the maximum Social Security retirement benefit for a worker retiring at age 65 is $1,326. The average monthly Social Security benefit for a retired individual is $745.

Q. My husband recently suffered a heart attack. His income is my only source of income. If he died, would I be eligible for widow's benefits? Do I have to be a certain age?

A. To answer your question, I'll assume your husband worked and earned enough credits for Social Security coverage. As a widow you would be eligible for survivors benefits at age 60, or age 50 if disabled. To find out more about your own benefits, call Social Security at 1-800-772-1213.

Take low-key action when kids play married

Q. Just the other day, I caught my 5-year-old daughter and the boy next door, also 5, playing "married." They had been playing in her room for quite some time when I went back to check. There they were, laughing and giggling with nothing but their underpants on. When I opened the door, their reaction told me they knew what they were doing wasn't right. To be honest, I didn't handle it very well. Please tell me — and other parents who may someday find themselves in similar situations — how to deal with situations of this sort.

A. To begin with, what your daughter and little friend did is not at all unusual for children that age, even give or take a year or so. Older preschoolers have lots of questions and very few inhibitions, which can make for some exciting moments, as you've already discovered.

Five-year-olds are fascinated by the beginnings of life. They want to know where babies come from, what pregnancy and birth are all about, what newborns are like and so on. Sooner or later, they begin asking questions that deal with the sexual aspect of this whole mystery. Parents should answer these questions with an emphasis on the general and simplistic because that's all their minds can grasp.

Five-year-olds are concrete thinkers, which is to say they need more than words to understand transcendental things such as sex and death and fly-fishing. They need pictures and demonstrations and other audiovisual aids. But when words are all adults will provide, and vague ones at that, they are left to their own creative devices. They feel compelled to translate the words into something concrete they can relate to. So, at the first possible opportunity, a child this age will approach a playmate — who undoubtedly has similar questions, and say, "Hey! Let's act out this whole 'Where do babies come from' thing. Then maybe we'll understand it better!" They understand it better when they and away they go, to the chagrin of parents who catch them at these truly innocent sports.

Low-key is the secret of success in situations such as these. Simply say something like, "You may not play this game, or games like it, until you are much older. Please put your clothes back on and Billy, I think it would be best if you and Laura-Ann didn't play together for the rest of the day, so I'm sending you home."

In most cases, a cooling-off period of a day or so is advisable, but it shouldn't be put to the children as a punishment. In fact, there's no reason to punish them at all, unless one or both of the children have already been told that the game is forbidden. You should let the other child's parents know what happened and how you dealt with it. Under normal circumstances, and most of these circumstances are normal, there's no need to give the children the third-degree, or rush off to the psychologist's office. However, if this kind of behavior begins happening with some regularity and is fairly graphic, I'd strongly recommend that you consult a professional.

One funny story, related to me by a single mother. One day, she caught her 6-year-old daughter and an equally young male playmate out behind the garage pretending to be "married." Obviously, the game had got a bit out of hand, so she brought her daughter inside for the rest of the day. In the ensuing discussion, the mother asked, "Did the two of you pull your pants down?" A look of panic froze the little girl's face, and she quickly answered, "No, Mommy, we were just thinking about it."

Largest student-run philanthropy keeps on dancing

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. (AP) — Call it Sleep Deprivation 101.

Pulling an all-nighter is nothing new for college kids. Students straggle with sleepless nights — and days — back-to-back without ever even sitting down is nothing new at Penn State.

For 25 years, the school's Dance Marathon has tested the staying power of its student body, pushing them past exhaustion.

Midway through the charity event Saturday, weary participants might be dancing, or they might be soaking sore feet in water buckets, or crying on a friend's shoulder — even hallucinating.

The only rule is: Dancers must remain standing.

"It's almost like being in a war," said David Dapko, who helped organize the torturous event. "You're battling from the start and it doesn't get any easier."

In a much-to crowded gymnasium, most of the 600 screaming sane college kids awaited the 7 p.m. Friday start by stretching, or just resting.

Computer room is neutral territory in gang projects

CHICAGO (AP) — The path to Michael Tolliver's computer workshop is dark and smelly, well-traveled by gang members and others just down on their luck.

Hall lights are ripped out, as they are in the other 27 buildings of the Chicago Housing Authority's Robert Taylor Homes. Windows are broken and wire mesh is stretched across balconies to keep children safe.

Behind a steel door in one of the buildings is Tolliver's workshop. The room with its 50 donated computers, comfortable chairs and good lighting is a haven from dangers of the nation's largest and some say worst — public housing project.

"This is like neutral territory," said Tolliver, who is also commander of the police department's South Side public housing unit.

It was Tolliver's idea to set up the workshop for use by anyone who lives in public housing. The computers were donated by the housing authority, and Tolliver took three computer-literate police officers off their beats and put them to work as instructors.

The workshop needs everything from better software and computers to online access, and Tolliver has to rely on donations for improvements. Still, 75 people each day use the room, including children from the nearby Beethoven Elementary School who play computer games or do their homework.

"You should see them running across the park after school to sign up for the computers," Tolliver said. "The computer room, in operation last August, also offers 10-week courses for beginners and experts."

FAMILY LIFE

Balancing home and career: Plan, plan, plan to be ready for change

Three successful women, with disparate careers, families and values.

They could all agree that it takes energy and commitment to balance family and work life.

They could agree, too, that the surprise twin sister to planning is flexibility. When you have plans, they include backups. Then, as things fall through, you don't have to fall apart.

This was just one observation shared by three University of North Dakota graduates who spoke last week to business students about balancing home and career.

One message was consistent: Families that share expectations about everyone pitching in have an easier go of it.

Ferri Bushaw Clark said her children have been raised with the question: "What have you done for the family?" It's not enough to keep your room clean. Offspring must help the household run. "In a family, everybody works until the work is done," she said.

How families divide responsibilities is up to them. But it's imperative that all family members share in the work. "It's no good if all they see is me running around, working my head off," said Clark.

Sometimes children's impressions of who's doing what are fairly skewed. She laughs now, but five years ago when her son was in first grade, his portrait of his dad and his mom wasn't so amusing. He showed his dad setting the table, doing laundry, cooking. He showed Torri sleeping in late and him tiptoeing around quietly trying not to disturb her. "I'd like I had to explain myself to his teacher!"

While not every child gets her undivided attention every day, over the course of a week, everyone gets time. She spends time with their youngest every night before he goes to sleep. And when her teenager comes home late, they always have a good talk.

Clark honed her patience, organizing and negotiating skills by raising and refereeing four kids. When she took her job at the University of North Dakota's

TIME CRUNCH
Gail Hand

Aerospace Center, it meant that her husband had to take a bigger role.

Remember to be good to yourself, however you define that. Joan McCusker of Minneapolis said that she loves to escape with some romance fiction or a novel to let herself unwind. She's a treasury manager with Alliant Technologies.

Her message to business students in the audience is that balancing home and work is an ongoing skill. "Sometimes I have to go home with a sick kid and have to miss an important meeting," she said. "Kids get sick when it's tough. So you have to be flexible. We have made a commitment to our families and to our careers."

Gail Brostrom, who works for Northern States Power in Minneapolis, says she and her husband, Mike, limit talking about work at home. Their rule is shop talk is for the ride home only. "There's work life and then there's our life," she said.

The Brostroms don't have children. But that doesn't mean they don't have obligations beyond their work life that have to be managed. She shared a cautionary tale about a man who spent many nights working into the morning, who ignored his family. His wife died, without ever telling him she had contracted cancer.

It's a lesson that questions whether workaholics are really being effective at work and productive for the company. Consider whether overworking isn't more like a symptom of problems, or lack of ability to organize than true dedication.

"Ask yourself what are you getting out of life," Brostrom challenged. "Are you putting so much into what you think is your future that you're losing sight of the present? Learn to take life in stride. Read, go to church, make time for hugs and kisses. Don't separate yourself from your values. Companies can be mean. They ask you to perform. You need to draw a line. Make yourself and your family happy. A paycheck is great. But you need balance."

Twice a month, "Time Crunch" features tips on using family time and ways to deal with time pressures on all family members. If you have comments or suggestions, write Gail Hand at the Grand Forks Herald at P.O. Box 6008, Grand Forks, N.D. 58206.

IN BRIEF

Maughan takes 2nd at Simplot Games

POCATELLO—Sharilyn Maughan of the Minidoka Track Club ran to a second-place finish in the 1600-meter run at the Simplot Games held this weekend at Holt Arena.

The Minidoka Track Club had 26 of the more than 2,900 athletes competing.

Maughan, a senior at Minico High School, finished in a time of 5:03.23, second to Canadian Christine Zawaski who finished in 5:01.1.

Maughan's time set a new Minico High School record and is the fastest time ever recorded by an Idaho High School girls athlete.

The Minidoka Track team also had a relay team place 11th. The girls' medley team of Heather Anderson, Kim Frieberger, Tyree Spaulding and Elizabeth Armstrong qualified for the finals ahead of more than 20 teams.

The team ran a combined time of 4:43.1 for the 1600-meter relay, which consists of legs of 400, 200, 200 and 800 meters.

SALT LAKE CITY—The Bruins didn't blink.

"I thought we battled tonight," CSI coach Jim Thrash said, looking over some solid statistics from the Eagles - 55 percent from the field inside the 3-point line, 71.4 percent from the free-throw line, 10 steals.

"So it wasn't terrible performance," Thrash said. "We just let them get

The Golden Eagles' on-again, off-again halfcourt defense abandoned them, especially in the second half as the Bruins broke away from a 3-33 half-time tie.

Wolves shock Hagerman in overtime at Southside

By Kevin Miller
Times-News writer

JEROME—The first blood in the boys' Southside sub-district tournament goes to the Wolves.

Castelford, the fifth seed in the six-team tournament, knocked off second seed Hagerman in the first quarter, avenging a season-ending loss from a year ago.

The Wolves met Murtaugh Monday after the Red Devils slipped by Raft River 64-56.

Only top-seed Oakley had an easy day in the opening round. The Hornets earned a second-round bye and guaranteed themselves at least a third place finish with a 54-28 win over Hansen.

"Right now, we're in a good position," Hornet coach Jeff Harech said. "I think if we play like we did tonight, we'll be pretty tough to beat."

Castelford 63, Hagerman 55 OT

Not known for their full court defense, the Wolves picked the right time to pressure the Pirates into turning over the first-round upset.

Castelford forced six fourth-quarter turnovers to make up a 12-point deficit. In the extra session, the Wolves held Hagerman scoreless, forcing three more turnovers.

"We thought we could press them," Castelford coach Andy Wiseman said. "Down by 12, I told the kids we had to be more aggressive."

The Wolves scored off four consecutive Pirate turnovers over a 90-second span in the fourth quarter, taking the lead at 55-54 after a 13-0 run.

Troy Parrin scored eight of his game-high 20 in the fourth quarter to carry Castelford.

Tanner LeMoine, who led Hagerman with 17 points, hit one of two free throws with 1:02 left to tie the game.

Castelford had ample time to get off the potential game-winning shot in regulation. But the Wolves seemed to lose track of time, setting for a desperation shot before the buzzer.

"I was a little concerned going into overtime,"

Wiseman said. "I wasn't sure we could maintain it."

But Hagerman seemed to be the team to tire, turning the ball over on its first two possessions and missing all six shots in the overtime period.

Murtaugh 64, Raft River 56

Josh Funk drained five of his six 3-point field goals in the second half to lift the Red Devils to a first-round win.

Funk's final long ball, with 3:20 left in the game, closed the door on the fourth-seeded Trojans.

In a nip-and-tuck contest, Raft River controlled most of the first half. The Trojans' Jeff Holtman scored 17 of his team-high 21 in the first two quarters.

But the second half was all Funk from beyond the arc. The junior hit 11 of 15 3-pointers. Please see SOUTHSIDE, Page D2

Murtaugh's Josh Funk puts up a shot beyond Raft River's Drew Williams, left, and Jeff Holtman during the Red Devils' 64-56 victory Saturday. Funk hit six three-point shots en route to 25 points.

Burley's post-season run halted by Bulldogs

By Damen Clow
Times-News writer

GLENS FERRY—This time, the fairy tale-like magic that put a 4-14 Burley girls' basketball team one game away from the state tournament couldn't save it.

The Nampa Bulldogs, the No. 4 seed from District 3, took care of all necessary business in the first three minutes of Saturday's district interdistrict playoff to beat the Region III runner-up Bobcats, 64-55.

"Sometimes when you want something a little too much, it's hard," said Burley coach Kim Krumm, her voice soft after an emotional second half. "But I'm proud of our girls—they worked hard all season, and look at where they came from."

Nampa scored the first 18 points of the game—taking only three minutes to do so—led by 5-foot-10 sophomore Alysson Kollman, who scored eight of the first 10 points and finished with a game-high 22 points.

"We just didn't come to play in the first half," Krumm said. "We didn't get the job done on 40 and 50 (Kollman and Smith) senior post Hilary Smith, who added 21 points. We just could not deny those two the ball."

"We went to smaller lineup so we could put our faster guards on them, and that seemed to help a little," the coach added.

Burley (8-19) crossed halfway just twice in the first two minutes and finally broke the press halfway through the quarter as Ashley Toner hit a layup for two of her team-high 18 points.

"We had the boys' varsity press us in practice the other day, and it breaks it every time," Krumm said. "I don't know what happened."

Leading by 19 early in the second quarter, the Bulldogs took a more patient approach to their offense, working the perimeter with passes and scoring just twice from the field in the period.

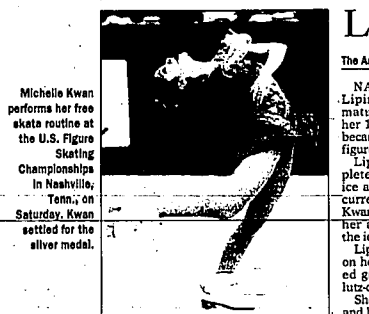

Meanwhile, Toner accounted for seven of her team's 10 points. The 6-1 sophomore had 11 of the Bobcats' 25 points in the first half.

Burley trimmed the lead to 10 on Tessa Garrett's free throw and had possession with half a minute left in the third quarter when Megan Peterson's 3-point attempt bounced off the rim and Nampa scored four points before the buzzer on fast breaks and steals.

Peterson's jump shot and a put-back and two free throws from Wendy Ramsey pulled Burley within seven points with 1:22 left in the game.

Kollman and Smith, fittingly, scored the last four points to keep the Bobcats at a safe length to run out the clock.

Melba toasts Wendell in girls' basketball playoff

By Gary Leavitt
Times-News writer

MOUNTAIN HOME—One of Wendell coach Brett Wright's strategies all year long has been an aggressive defense to key his point production.

Saturday's contest against District 3 runner-up Melba presented some new challenges and the goal of reaching the girls' State 3-A tournament as the Magic Valley's second entrant.

But one of the new challenges would be insurmountable. Her name was Caroline Wendell, 39-24.

The 6-1 Mustang senior center scored 20 points and controlled both the offensive and defensive boards as Melba defeated Wendell, 39-24.

Beus, along with 6-0 wing Kristina Leavitt, blocked three first-half shots and clogged the middle so effectively that Wendell attempted just one shot in the first two minutes of the game.

Melba coach Steve Barker was enthusiastic with the win. "She's (Beus) the reason we play such good defense and our goal, of course, is to get it inside."

Where Melba attempted only two 3-point shots, Wendell shot 13 times, but made only one. For the game, the Trojans were successful on only eight of 48 attempts.

"Shot selection really hurt us," said Wright. "And we really couldn't get into any rhythm."

After an uneventful first quarter that saw each team feeling each other out to the tune of a 6-2 lead, the game didn't turn to Melba's favor until the second quarter.

The Mustangs were able to break the Trojan press on three successive times down court with quick passes to lead player for an easy lay in.

After Melba built a 14-4 lead, Wendell never got any closer. The Mustangs were able to get the ball inside to Beus, who tallied 12 points in the second and third periods.

On the brighter side, the Trojan defense was effective at times. Wendell forced nine first-half turnovers, but converted only once for points and twice for the entire game.

"They (the Trojans) played as good a defense as we have seen all year," said Barker. "They also played us very physically."

It wasn't until the fourth quarter that Wendell mounted a run. After a 3-point by senior Angie Lancaster, Kyle Bennett stole and ball and drove the length of the court for a layup.

Another bright spot for the Trojans was the play of sophomore Janine Alred, who was promoted to varsity for the district tournament.

Standing only 4-11, Alred fought the taller players inside for three driving layups in the second half. Although she didn't score a basket, she was 3-for-5 from the foul line and did a good job of directing the offense.

Another key to the Mustang success was trips to the foul line, where Melba converted 15 of 29 free throws.

Wendell-Alred 3, Chavira 2, Bennett 4, Lancaster 2, Hester 2, Parker 2, Totals 7 13 23 24. 3 point goals: Lancaster 1, Hester 2, Leavitt 2, Beus 2, Totals 15 29 18 19. Fouled out: Leavitt

Lipinski upsets Kwan on ice, wins gold

The Associated Press

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—Tara Lipinski showed the grace and maturity of someone far beyond her 14 years Saturday night as she became the youngest U.S. women's figure skating champion.

Lipinski was a picture of complete calm when she went on the ice after defending champion and current world champion Michelle Kwan, whose nerves got the best of her as she went sprawling across the ice on two of her jumps.

Lipinski nailed a huge triple flip on her second jump, and she started grinning after a perfect triple lutz-double toe combination.

She didn't stop smiling after that, and had the crowd on its feet as she finished with a set of three flourishing spins. Lipinski bowed and began crying as the crowd roared and several people held up 6.0 signs.

Lipinski received marks of 5.8 and 5.9 for her performance, and that's the only time her marks showed. She yelped and buried her face in her hands as her marks flashed across the scoreboard.

"I just wanted to go out and do two great programs and I accomplished that," Lipinski said.

Kwan, who has been so strong the past two years, came to the event as almost a shoe-in for a second title. But she admitted the pressure of defending her title wore a little tough to handle.

"I guess I wasn't concentrating," she said. "I guess I panicked in the middle of my performance after the flip. It was just mind games and I fell off her edge, tumbling to the ice."

She fell during her practice sessions, and again in warmups. She nailed her first jump, a triple lutz-double toe, and looked as if she was going to be as good as always.

Then disaster struck. At the end of her triple toe-double toe combination, she lurched forward and fell off her edge, tumbling to the ice. A look of disbelief crossed her face and a huge gasp went up from the crowd.

She fell out of her next jump, a triple flip, but managed to keep herself from falling. She couldn't do that on the triple loop that followed, and again went crashing to the ice.

Butler, 35, under- went surgery last May to remove a tumor from his tonsils along with lymph nodes.

He began six weeks of radiation treatment June 17 and rejoined the team Aug. 26. He played just two weeks before missing the rest of the season and the playoffs because of a broken bone in his right hand sustained while attempting a bunt.

He'll know before anybody else if he can play or can't play, Dodgers manager Bill Russell said.

Moving the mound - controversy boils over

The Associated Press

Pitchers and catchers expecting to spring training will find their baseball's elevator has not yet moved the mound. The operative word here is "not."

After being lowered 5 inches in 1969, the mound could be headed in the other direction after major league general managers, past hops tired of watching singles hitters run into sluggers, asked the rules committee to raise it from the current 30 inches to 33 inches.

The theory is, this will tighten the balance between pitchers and hitters, which seems out of whack after a record 4,362 home runs were hit last season.

"We have to look at the effect the height and slope of the mound has on pitchers' bodies, their arms, backs, legs," said Bill Murray, chairman of baseball's rules committee. "A number of doctors have studied arm motion and its stress on different parts of the body, wrists, elbows, shoulders, knees, hips. We have to do a careful analysis to try and gather information. There's a lot of concern about that. It may not be resolved quickly."

There also is the matter of getting the approval of the players' association, which may not be in an approving frame of mind after the recent unpleasantness over the collective bargaining agreement.

Union attorney Gene Orza, who embraced inter-league play, is less enthusiastic about the need to raise the mound. "I don't believe the evidence exists to support that contention," he said.

What's more, Orza said, the owners have yet to raise the matter and "hopefully, they never will."

None of this was an issue the last time the rulesmakers looked at the mound and lowered it from 15 inches to 10 in 1969. That was a year after Bob Gibson had a 1.12 ERA, Denny McLain won 31 games and Carl Yastrzemski won the American League batting championship with a .301 average. The effects were immediate. The National League went from six 300 hitters in 1968 to 10 in the next year, and the American League went from one - Yastrzemski - to five. Willie McCovey led the NL with 36 home runs in 1968 and 45 in 1969. The two leagues totaled 1,995 home runs in 1968 and 3,119 in 1969.

There were other factors, however. Both leagues expanded in 1963, each going from 10 teams to 12, creating 40 major league pitchers who were laboring less before the previous year. Hitters always flourish on expansion pitching.

With no expansion last season, there has to be some other explanation for 16 batters hitting 40 or more home runs and three teams breaking the record of 240 hits in creating 40 major league pitchers who were laboring less before the previous year. Hitters always flourish on expansion pitching.

The answer, the GMS decided, was the height of the mound. And those most directly involved, the pitchers, will be interested observers of the upcoming debate. American League Cy Young winner Pat Hentgen of the Toronto Blue Jays used the geometric approach.

"What it will do is change the trajectory of the ball from a higher point," Hentgen said. "It means the ball is not as level. It will be moving on a downward plane, not just side-to-side."

Part of the idea is to speed up the game by hitting pitchers with more strikes. Hentgen questioned that theory.

"I don't think it means more strikes," he said. "I don't think pitchers are trying not to throw zone balls. It used to be that you hit the catcher in the forehead, that was a strike. Not anymore. I've talked to veteran hitters who say the strike zone has shrunk a hair. I know today's strike zone. If they want to speed up the game, all they have to do is call higher strikes."

American Lindh wins women's downhill in Italy

The Associated Press

SESTRIERE, Italy (AP) - Hilary Lindh saved her best for last - and it was good enough. Alberto Tomba saved his best for last - but it wasn't good enough. Lindh - who nearly retired a year ago - was the most surprising winner of the two-week World Alpine Ski Championships, which ended Saturday, capturing the women's downhill.

It was the first medal for the Americans, who fielded a team weakened by injuries to Tommy Moe and Picabo Street.

Switzerland's Ingebriggen got the silver and Sweden's Pernilla Wiberg took the bronze.

TENNIS IN BRIEF

Kings, Hurn advance to finals

MARSA - Morocco Kings will unseaten this year, moved into position to win the final tonight.

Anchor Huber of Germany will provide King's opposition after a 6-4, 6-3 upset of Juan Novatos in the other semifinal.

The top-seeded Kings has lost only three sets this year.

Breaking out of a 1-1 tie, the 16-year-old from Switzerland sealed off eight games in a row to beat Majoli in the first set, 6-1, and up 3-0 in the second set.

Although Majoli broke Kings to close within 3-2, it was only a brief comeback and Kings went on to win in 52 minutes.

Kings made it to her sixth consecutive final, the last two in 1996 and all four in 1997.

Rios, Enqvist win at Marseille

MARSEILLE, France - Marcelo Rios and Thomas Enqvist won the two week men's tournament and moved into the final of the Marseille Open.

Rios, No. 4, won't need to rally again to get past two-time French Open winner Sergi Bruguera 6-3, 6-7 (3-7), 6-4.

Enqvist breezed by France's Fabrice Santoro 6-4, 6-3.

Ivanisevic, Muster meet in finals

DUBAI, United Arab Emirates - Thomas Muster ousted Jim Courier in a battle of strong hitters in the final of the 31st Dubai Open Saturday and will face top-seeded Goran Ivanisevic in the final.

Muster, the No. 2 seed, beat Courier 7-6 (7-3), 2-6, 6-3 in a 2-hour, 24-minute display of power tennis.

Ivanisevic, the defending champion, defeated the Czech Republic's Jiri Novak 6-1, 6-3, 6-3 in the other semifinal.

Sampas overtakes Martin

SAN JOSE, Calif. - Using a powerful serve and precise returns, defending champion Pete Sampas advanced to the Sybase Open final with an easy 6-2, 6-3 victory Saturday over Todd Martin.

Sampas, ranked No. 14, will meet the winner of Saturday night's match between Andre Agassi and hard-serving Greg Rusedski in the final match Sunday.

Martin, ranked No. 14 and seeded fourth, had not played in a tournament since November because of tendinitis in his right knee.

Twin Falls Mazda dealer earns special recognition

TWIN FALLS—Mazda Motor of America Inc. has announced that Chris Jordan Mazda of Twin Falls, has received the Mazda "President's Award of Honor" for 1996. The award is given to Mazda dealerships that achieve special distinction in serving their customers.

"This award was created to recognize those Mazda dealerships that achieve the highest levels of customer service," said George McCabe, Senior Vice-President and General Manager of MMA.

The 1996 "President Award of Honor" is presented to dealerships with personnel who have clearly demonstrated their ability to provide customers with an outstanding ownership experience—from new cars to trade-ins.

The Mazda "President's Award of Honor" is awarded to the top 25 dealerships in each of four sales volume categories. Dealers must retail a minimum of 120 units in a given year to be eligible for the award. Mazda has approximately 900 dealerships nationwide.

Chicken Soup for the Soul seminar planned for Boise

BOISE—Chicken Soup for the Soul (CS), a one-day seminar from SkillPath based on the bestselling books of the same name by Jack Canfield and Mark Victor Hansen, is coming to Boise at the Holiday Inn Airport, 300 Vista Ave. on Wednesday from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Like the books, the seminar is based on the belief that people can create better lives for themselves by learning how others have met their own challenges and opportunities and by drawing lessons from their examples. Chicken Soup for the Soul will help you to awaken to the infinite possibilities of your own life and inspire you to live more intentionally. Live with more passion and pursue your heartfelt dreams with more energy and conviction, say organizers. For more information on this $69 seminar or to enroll, call 1-800-873-7545.

Planters recalls cashews that might contain peanuts

EAST HANOVER, N.J.—Planters Co. is recalling some bags of its Honey Roasted Cashews because they may contain peanuts, potentially fatal to people with allergies to them.

Planters said Friday that the 2 oz. bags were distributed to stores in the East, South, northern California and Hawaii. The blue metallic bags are stamped with the words "Planters" and the package ingredients do not list peanuts.

No other Planters products are affected, the company said.

Peanut allergies can cause serious or life-threatening reactions. "Planters said consumers with peanut allergies who have bought the cashews should return them to the place of purchase for a full refund.

Consumers with questions can call Planters at 1-800-622-4726.

Founders of Internet startup endow chair at Stanford

STANFORD, Calif.—Yahoo! the founders of the Internet company with the funny name have endowed a $2 million chair at Stanford University two years after they dropped out to pursue their fortune.

"We feel obligated to give back to them," Yahoo! founder David Filo said.

Filo, 30, and Jerry Yang, 28, are worth about $140 million each as a result of their Internet directory company, which went public last spring.

They are the youngest people to endow a chair at the university. The chair, the Yahoo! Founders Professor of the Stanford School of Engineering, was approved by the trustees on Wednesday. "We were delighted to have the 'Yahoo!' in the name," said Laura Bryefogle, spokeswoman for the School of Engineering.

Yang and Filo were working on their doctorates in computer science at the engineering school when they started making a list of their favorite sites on the World Wide Web. The two—working at night, dining on pizza—turned the list into an extensive page on the Web.

One night, they started using the dictionary for a name for their list. The word "yahoo"—meaning a rude, uncivilized person—jumped out. Filo and Yang decided it should be an acronym for "Yet Another Hierarchical Official Oracle."

South Park feeds on growth

By Pat Marcantonio
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS—Larry Muegerl and Lee Yarbrough grew up only a few blocks from the site of their new businesses on South Park Avenue.

"It's kind of like coming back to the old neighborhood," said Yarbrough, who opened a Me-n-Ed's restaurant next to Muegerl's remodeled South Park Lounge.

But sentimentality is not entirely what brought them back.

Grand opening

THE SOUTH Park Lounge Village Grill and Pizzeria-Burgers grand opening continues today at 117 South Park Ave. Starting at about noon events will include drawings, food samples, giveaways and karaoke throughout the day.

They are confident the south part of town will grow. "This part of town needs a lot of development and it's going to happen," said Margo Muegerl, Larry's daughter-in-law, who operates the new Village Grill next to the lounge.

"We thought this area had a lot of potential," added Larry's wife, Debbie.

A lot of cars

For at least four years, Yarbrough had been scouting a location in South Park for a second Me-n-Ed's restaurant. His other business is on Blue Lakes Boulevard North.

"I knew Lee had all my life mentioned I was building, and the next thing I turned out real nice," Muegerl said. "I'd seen a lot of cars and a lot of people in this area and thought it was something that was needed."

The owners of new South Park businesses have reason to smile with their grand openings this week. They are (left to right) Lee Yarbrough, Lue Schorzman, Margo Muegerl, Larry Muegerl and Debbie Muegerl.

The result was a 5,800-square-foot, 5400,000 building with blue roof and attractive stone work. The businesses opened the first of this year.

Along with its familiar fare of pizza and a salad bar, Me-n-Ed's has added hamburgers, including house specials or specials that allow diners to choose their own toppings.

Next door at the South Park Lounge, the horseshoe-shaped bar catches the eye. Inside, you can play pool, dancing, singing along with Karaoke, dance and have snacks or an after-hours breakfast.

One door down, the Village Grill menu features breakfast, espresso, deli sandwiches, chicken, soup and specialty hamburgers, such as the Russian burger in an enclosed bun. The recipe came from Margo Muegerl's grandmother, Toni Swenson of Twin Falls.

A three-day grand opening of drawings and discounts this week let people know about the new businesses, the owners say. They hope to draw downtown workers, area residents and other people who just don't want to drive to the north part of Twin Falls.

"It's easier to get this part of town than Blue Lakes," Yarbrough said.

He is quite at home in South Park, where he used to be a boy at a local grocery that burned down a long time ago.

The area doesn't deserve its reputation as a poor, troubled neighborhood, said the owners.

"Some awful nice people live over here," said Schorzman, who still lives only a few blocks away.

A positive thing

"Anytime you bring in more business in this area, it will help us," said Nick Fischer, manager of Swenson's Market on Shoshone Street West. "The building looks tremendous."

"It's a very positive thing," added Ken Schmidt, owner of the La Casita Mexican Restaurant on Shoshone Street. "It's so refreshing."

The restaurant has been at the same location for 30 years and has its own loyal customers, but new residential growth to the south spices up business.

Investment stars see market rise continuing

The Washington Post

Some Washington policy-makers such as Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan may be worried about a stock-market mania, but much of the smart money on Wall Street remains bullish.

Top hedge fund managers such as Stanley Druckenmiller of the Soros Organization look for the party to continue, even as they keep one eye on the door.

One of the few bears among the financial superstars is billionaire investor Laurence Tisch, a friend of Greenspan who compares today's market with 1929.

"If you are a conservative investor, sell," Tisch advised in a telephone interview from his suite at the Breakers hotel in Palm Beach, Fla. "If you are a speculator who thinks you can get out ahead of the crowd in a panic, stay in."

For his part, Tisch said he holds few stocks, with the significant exception of his nearly $2 billion holding in Loews Corp., the publicly traded insurance, hotel and tobacco conglomerate that he and his brother Preston Tisch control.

In an age when everyone has an opinion about where stocks are headed, the words and deeds of the smart money carries some weight.

Druckenmiller controls a huge pot of money—about $15 billion in the Quantum Fund, which he typically magnifies through borrowings to increase the size of his bets.

Even though Quantum had a poor 1996, Druckenmiller has an outstanding long-term track record and can move markets. It is common for big managers to trade information, or rumors, about "what Stan is up to."

For the present, Druckenmiller is a bull. "We believe the bull market is intact," he said. "And our positions reflect that."

"Druckenmiller emphasized, however, that his optimism could fade in a minute. He feels comfortable peering no further than three to six months into the future, he said. "The market feels like it has a lot of momentum," he said. "Two to three months out, we do not forecast values that would stop the momentum."

Specifically, Druckenmiller does not expect the Fed to tighten monetary policy, which would help boost short-term interest rates. "We see no reason for them to move and so assume they won't. Unlike most macroeconomists, who have no experience in the world of business, Alan Greenspan does, and he understands that at the level of the corporation, there is neither wage pressure nor price pressure."

Druckenmiller said he believes corporate America will continue to hold the line on wage increases.

"Look at American Airlines," he said. "The company is willing to take a strike, and the pilots are only asking for an 11 percent raise over four years. The point is, companies today are constantly trying to drive down costs and increase efficiency. They are focused on increasing shareholder value and the value of stock options owned by company executives."

Beyond six months, Druckenmiller won't hazard a guess at the market's direction. He knows that the market has blown through many traditional valuation benchmarks and that one of these days, it will reverse course. But if the market drops and economic fundamentals, as he sees them, remain intact, he said he will buy the dip.

Looking to buy a monitor? Size makes a difference

By Barry Cooper
The Orlando Sentinel

Shopping for a monitor? Better take along a tape measure. Many companies have stopped referring to the size of their monitors in product literature for fear of being sued. It seems that some monitors being advertised as 15-inch models offered picture tube measuring just 13.8 inches diagonally, and there were similar discrepancies in 14- and 17-inch models.

Some consumers won judgments in court, claiming false advertising. Now many companies are referring to their monitors only by model numbers. It will be up to you—write the size of your tape measure—to determine the size of the monitor. Look for trade magazines and dealers to ignore the silliness and tell shoppers the size of monitors.

If you're looking for a monitor:

- Online
- Check out the 15-inch models, but consider paying the extra $200 or so for a 17-inch model. The bigger the monitor, the more you can display on your screen without having to scroll. If you have money to burn you may be tempted by the 21-inch models, but there is another price. These suckers are huge. They're like big-screen televisions. You don't realize how big they are until you get them home. A 17-inch monitor should serve even the most avid home computer user.
  - If you're buying a monitor for an IBM-compatible PC, consider models with Plug-and-Play compatibility. The feature simplifies installation of hardware under Windows 95. Under Plug

- and Play, your monitor and computer would be able to talk to each other, and make automatic changes in monitor settings as you changed from one program to the next.
- If you're short on space, consider monitors with multimedia speakers built in. The only problem with this is that the speakers sometimes are of poor quality. Shop around.
- Check a monitor by looking from slightly above the screen or from the side. Standing in those positions will help you check the monitor for flicker. When the monitor flickers, the image flashes or jerks for a fraction of a second. The cheapest models are most likely to suffer from this.
- Choose a monitor with a bright, clear image. This whittles should be what the blacks black.
- Slide your hand across the screen. Is the picture tube curved? The flatter the screen, the better. Curved picture tubes—they're cheaper to manufacture—often lead to warped images.

Have you figured out Windows 95 yet? Forget it. Windows 97 is coming. According to industry analysts, Microsoft may release Windows 97 as early as this summer. The biggest difference will be a built-in Web browser—Internet Explorer 4.0.

Explorer is also under development and is expected to be available as a free download by spring. Explorer 4.0 reportedly will allow you to receive television and radio broadcasts over the Internet with no other software required. It also takes over for the Windows file manager, Windows Explorer.

Explorer 4.0 sees everything as a Web link, including files on your hard drive.

Schmidt said, "In the Villa Vista subdivision, there were 12 or 13 homes 10 years ago. Now the subdivision is full," he said.

Three more large subdivision projects are planned in the area, according to the city of Twin Falls. Magic Valley Ranch off of Washington Street South by the city water tower proposes 254 lots. The Birch Creek project off of Pleasant Road proposes 307 residential lots including duplexes. Parkview Estates would create 146 lots near Oregon Trail Elementary School.

"We're seeing a quite bit of development," said Lamar Orton, city planning and zoning director. "I don't think anything happened there for a long time. In the last five years or so there's been a lot more interest in that area and I think Oregon Trail made a difference out there also."

Plans and roots

The city of Twin Falls Urban Renewal Agency approved $35,000 to curb, gutter and sidewalk improvements at the South Park Lounge complex as part of Old Towne development.

Most of the focus for that development is across Rock Creek but a street light beautification project would extend from City Park into the first block of the South Park neighborhood.

Along with downtown, Rock Creek and the old warehouse district, South Park also is within the scope of the Old Town Corp., a private group directing business revitalization.

"Believe me, it will help us all," Yarbrough said.

There was one recent business casualty: Old Towne Video on Ramage Street. Still, optimism spans the Old Towne Bridge.

Fischek says it arrived with the completion of the new bridge and subdivisions, but mostly because of Oregon Trail Elementary. The school gave the community a real identity because its children remained in the area instead of going to other schools.

"It made roots for everything," he said.

When Ken Schmidt moved to Twin Falls in 1971, South Park was considered the other side of the tracks.

"That is changing," he said and the new businesses across the way aid in that transformation. "I really wish them well. I'd really like to see them succeed. It's good for all of us."

Clinton's budget increases tax break for working poor

WASHINGTON (AP) — The earned income tax credit for the working poor is worth more than ever before with the completion of a three-year expansion initiated by President Clinton's 1993 budget.

The maximum credit now is $3,556 for families with two or more children in 1996, up from $2,110 last year and more than double the $1,511 maximum before the expansion.

The maximum for families with one child is $2,152, up from $2,094 last year and $1,434 three years earlier. Tax-eligible people, the credit is $323, up from $314 last year and zero three years ago.

Republicans, who fought unsuccessfully to cut the program, point out that it's more than a tax credit. For many, it's a government income supplement. Even if your credit exceeds your tax liability, you still get it.

With inflation, the amount you can earn and still be eligible has increased for 1996. With no children, the maximum credit is reached when income hits $4,200 and starts declining when income reaches $5,300, hitting zero at income of $9,500.

With one child, the maximum credit is reached when income hits $6,300 and starts declining when income reaches $11,650.

Computers

It's a part of Microsoft's aim to allow you to use your Web browser to accomplish virtually any task on your PC. Windows 97 will offer other enhancements, including improved Plug-and-Play software that supposedly will make it easier for you to install hardware.

Here's more proof that home computing is no longer dominated by men. The Barbie Fashion Designer CD-ROM is showing up atop some software bestseller lists following its release last fall. Now Mattel Media is releasing Barbie Storymaker and Barbie hitting zero at income of $25,078. With two or more children, the maximum credit is reached when income hits $8,850 and starts declining when income reaches $11,650, hitting zero at income of $26,935.

Any credit you receive won't be used in determining your eligibility for Aid to Families with Dependent Children, Medicaid, Supplemental Security Income, food stamps and low-income housing.

Your tax return's instructions booklet has a series of questions to determine if you're eligible, plus a worksheet for determining the credit. Publication 596 has the rules in detail, but these are the basics:

A change for 1996 returns, people with investment income of more than $2,200 won't be eligible. Generally, that's the total of dividends and interest, both taxable and tax-exempt.

People who were nonresident aliens any part of 1996 also can't claim the credit, unless they are married to a U.S. citizen and choose to be treated as a resident alien.

Also, remember to put down a correct Social Security number for every person on your return — yourself, spouse and dependents — born before December, 1996. This is important. The IRS Print 'n Play.

Q. What is ergonomics?
A. Ergonomics is the science of fitting a person to his or her working environment. Translation: Practice good posture while computing. If you slouch at the keyboard or use a chair set too low you could be straining yourself up for early fatigue or even injury. You should:

- Teach each family member to adjust the furniture. "One size fits all" doesn't apply in computing. The chair your family uses for computing should be fully adjustable, including the seat, back and arm rests.
- Position your keyboard about 27 to 29 inches from the floor.

Will deny the credit if you don't. If you need to get a number, apply by filing Form SS-5 with the Social Security Administration. It takes about two weeks.

Childless people can take the credit on forms 1040EZ, 1040A and 1040. You must be at least 25 years old but younger than 65. If you're married, either you or your spouse must be between those ages. You can't be a dependent on someone else's return.

If you have a child, you can't use Form 1040EZ. Attach Schedule EIC to your return; either Form 1040A or Form 1040.

To qualify, your child must be younger than 19 at the end of the year, younger than 24 and a full-time student or permanently and totally disabled. The child must be your own son or daughter, adopted child, grandchild or stepchild and must have lived with you in the United States for at least half the year. Foster children qualify if they lived with you all year.

People who are married but file separate returns can't take the credit. Also, only one person can claim the credit when an unmarried couple lives together with a qualifying child. The person with the highest adjusted gross income is the one allowed to claim the credit.

Buy a desk with an adjustable keyboard tray.

• Keep your back straight and your elbows bent at 90-degree angles.

• Keep your feet flat on the floor and your eyes 27 to 29 inches from the screen.

• If your feet — or your kids' feet — won't reach the floor — consider a footrest.

• Watch for warning signs such as file separate returns can't take the credit. Also, only one person can claim the credit when an unmarried couple lives together with a qualifying child. The person with the highest adjusted gross income is the one allowed to claim the credit.

DON'T SELL HOUSE - SELL HOME
QUESTION: What is the most important advice to keep in mind when you're selling your house?
ANSWER: Remember this, buyers are not looking for a roof to keep the rain off their heads - they're looking for a new lifestyle. You are not selling a house - you are selling a home! So, it's important to set the stage for prospect showings.
Keep your home clean, neat and cozy at all times. You might have to show it on short notice. The kitchen is key. Everything should be spic-and-span with dishes washed and all extra paraphernalia tucked away. Beds should be made and kids' clothes stowed - not left where kids often leave them.

Success Story
I first thought that buying a house was going to be a complicated process. It was really quite simple. A good real estate agent and a good mortgage company are essential. Gem State Realty and National Mortgage of Idaho were the best combination for me. Jody Hinton found the home I wanted. Deb Andrews placed the loan that my wife and I needed to purchase the home. The people at National Mortgage of Idaho were great to work with and made the loan process quick and easy. They made my wife and I feel like a client and not a customer. National Mortgage of Idaho is the mortgage company I would recommend to anyone.

After years of work, blastoff coming

18 years later, hope blazing, founder is still launching Ramagon Toys

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Richard Gabriel describes himself sometimes as president of "the world's oldest start-up."

The Portland architect founded Ramagon Toys Inc. in 1979 after he invented and patented a construction toy that is a space-age cross between Legos and Erector Sets.

Gabriel figured the toy would blast off and soar in the national toy market. Eighteen years later, he still thinks so.

"My enthusiasm has never dampened," he said recently. "But I've had my doubts about when."

Gabriel is in the midst of his fourth attempt, and — using a third strategy — in launching Ramagon. This time he's tackling the task himself with an ample assist from his son, Randall, 30, who lives in Hong Kong.

Gabriel considered the do-it-yourself approach when he first formed Ramagon, but he didn't think he had the business experience or knowledge of the toy industry to succeed.

Now perhaps he has. He convinced Toys R Us to place Ramagon in 26 stores in five Pacific Northwest states during the recent Christmas season.

Though he isn't sure of the Christmas sales yet, Gabriel hopes the nation's largest toy store chain will want to place Ramagon sets in all 600 of its stores. He also has negotiated a deal with U.S. Space Camp, a chain of residential camps where children learn about space and science. The camps use Ramagon sets in their teaching and make the toys available for children to play with during free time. The camps also sell the sets in their gift shops.

"The kids really like it," said Lynn Brown, a camp supervisor in Mountain View, Calif. "It's really a simple toy, but they can do so much with it."

Gabriel felt sufficiently enthusiastic about Ramagon's prospects to send out a letter to Ramagon shareholders six weeks ago. It was the first time in years that he had communicated with hundreds of investors who paid 50 cents a share for 1 million Ramagon shares in a small public offering in 1983.

Gabriel didn't allow his optimism, however, to carry him into predictions of profitability. "We are still a fragile company economically," he said. "For many years, we didn't have the money to get out a market."

Gabriel invented the construction toy in 1976. Like any inventor wishing to see his creation hit the market, he faced the choice of taking on manufacturing, distribution and marketing himself or selling the right to use his patent through a licensing agreement.

"Coming out of the chute,

Richard Gabriel, who has been trying to get Ramagon Toys Inc. off the ground for 18 years, hopes persistence will turn to profits. Gabriel, shown at his home in Portland in early January, is in the midst of his fourth try in launching Ramagon.

licensing is a good way to go unless you've got good business acumen and the ability to get financing," Gabriel said.

Another reason many inventors turn to licensing is because they want to continue inventing instead of running a business.

Most licensing deals call for royalties to be paid to the patent holder based on sales made by the licensee. In 1979, Ramagon signed a deal with Highland Industries, a California company that produced plastic mementos and gifts under National Football League license. Gabriel imagined himself sitting on the beach in Bermuda while royalty checks poured in.

That didn't happen. Highland didn't know the toy industry, and the business ultimately went broke. When Highland failed to meet its contractual quota for a second year, the deal came to a halt.

Gabriel didn't come walk away empty-handed, however. Thanks to a carefully written contract, Ramagon retained the plastic injection molds used to make the toy parts. Gabriel said the company would never have survived without help from his lawyer, Charles McClung, in patents, trademarks and licensing agreements.

In 1984, Gabriel signed on with a new licensee, Bachmann Industries of Philadelphia, a respected producer of toy trains.

"We thought we had it right that time," Gabriel said. But trains proved to be far removed from construction toys. The deal ended after two years, with Ramagon Toys Inc. still bleeding red ink.

"Toys are real cutthroat," said Mike Zaha, a Portland inventor and product developer, said. "It's a tough market to get into."

Zaha said knowing in advance which licensing agreements will work is nearly impossible. He contends the two most critical ingredients are enthusiasm by the licensee and the licensee's existing distribution channels.

"If a licensee doesn't have genuine enthusiasm for your product, they're not going to take the time and effort to make it successful," he said. "The product has to be dynamic, and there's got to be a good strategic fit."

Gabriel teamed up in 1987 with Discovery Toys, a national distributor that sold toys using the Tupperware model of home parties. "We actually did quite well with them," Gabriel said. But Discovery Toys didn't want to expand the Ramagon line the way Gabriel did.

Gabriel has expanded Ramagon from its initial two building sets to nine. Retail prices run from $5 to $50, and the sets have been designed to be compatible with Legos, kingpin of the plastic construction toy field.

Gabriel started gearing up for Ramagon's fourth push a couple years ago.

That's when his son, Randall, who works in international trade, in Hong Kong, said a friend wanted to try selling Ramagon in Asian markets.

Asian distributors refused to take Ramagon, so Randall Gabriel and his friend started selling them from a kiosk in a major Hong Kong mall. "We went head to head with Legos and K'Nex in that environment, and we beat them," Richard Gabriel said.

Out-of-work executives find bigger, better salaries

By Ellen Foman
Knight-Ridder News Service

For the first time in three years, more than half of all executives who lost their jobs in downsizings are getting bigger salaries in their new positions than in the jobs they left behind.

So says outplacement agency Drake Beam Morin in its 1996 Career Transition Study.

But the jump isn't necessarily true for people of all ages. More than half of men over the age of 50 and women over 40 tended to take a pay cut when they moved on to a new job, the survey said.

Survey participants included 525 men and women who were terminated in downsizings and used outplacement services to find new jobs. "It's pretty indicative of what's going on in the market today," said Joe Bruccoleri, senior vice president of Drake Beam Morin.

People with technical experience will find themselves in demand once again, he said.

"The economy is expanding, particularly for small companies. For every 10 jobs created, we see seven of those jobs created by companies (with) under 500 employees."

But job growth is not limited to small companies, Bruccoleri said. He sees a trend defying conventional wisdom. "Corporate America was not going to hire back all those people it let go in the 1990s because of the recession. That isn't true. Hiring activities by the Fortune 1000 are expanding," he said.

Questar notes 17% jump in net income

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Questar Corp., citing higher oil and gas prices and stronger performances from its energy operations, earned a record $38.1 million or $2.39 per share in 1996.

In 1995, Questar reported net income of $83.7 million or $2.05 per share.

Company chairman R.D. Cash reported Questar had 40.8 million shares of common stock outstanding on Dec. 31, slightly more than the outstanding shares a year earlier.

Cash attributed the strong performance to the company's ability to utilize its integrated resources to take advantage of growing opportunities in the energy marketplace.

In the last quarter of 1996, Questar had a 15 percent increase in net income to $34.6 million or 84 cents per share, up from the $30.2 million or 74 cents per share in the same quarter of 1995.

Questar's Market Resources Group, which consists of its non-regulated operations, increased earnings 79 percent to $13.9 million, primarily from higher energy prices and production.

A wedding

worth waiting for

Debbie and Tom Vaughan of Heyburn were both in their late 20s at the time of their June 1996 wedding. Many modern couples are waiting to get married until each has already established an independent career and lifestyle. The shifting trend in wedding demographics has also led to changes in how the ceremonies are carried out. See story, Page E2.

Modern matrimony: Wedding trends undergoing big changes

By Cathy Walworth
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — These days Cinderella isn't hanging around Mom and Dad's palace singing "Somebody My Prince Will Come." Instead, she's packing up and moving on to a life of her own — before Prince Charming makes his debut.

Today's bride is more likely to be a woman who has been on her own for a time. She's got an education and a career, and two feet solidly planted on terra firma.

F. Charming may be in his late 20s to mid-30s with his own household, too.

Lorraine McKelvey and Dale Rapp achieved wedded bliss on Valentine's Day.

Changes are in the air: Wedding trends are beginning to reflect a move away from "Cinderella fluff" toward "sophisticated elegance," according to Diane Warner, author of "The Best Wedding Ever."

And weddings cost. That's why a lot of couples who have been living on their own for a while opt to help out Mom and Dad with some of the expenses these days, said Warner. She added that couples are changing the way the wedding itself traditionally plays.

There are more "destination weddings (getting married at your honeymoon destination), more "candid" photography, doing leftover food to food kitchens for the poor, multicolored wedding cakes, and no more plastic bride and groom cake toppers — more creative alternatives instead," Warner said.

Valentine bride Lorraine McKelvey of Twin Falls agrees. "There is no cake top," McKelvey, who is in her late 20s, said of her wedding plans a week before the big day. "Just flowers, and the words 'The Two Shall Become One' will decorate our cake."

But such weddings can be complicated. Often, the older couple has children already on the scene.

Chase McKelvey, age 3, is his mom's ring bearer. He was also chosen to help Grandpa give Mom away.

Involve your children in the wedding and reception if they want to be involved, advises Wedding Bells magazine. "Most remarrying couples want to involve their children in the celebration as much as possible. Popular ways to do this include the bride walking up the aisle with the eldest son or daughter, having the children in the wedding party and mentioning them by name during the ceremony. Don't assume your children will want to be involved. Always ask."

At the reception, Wedding Bells suggests that children be

The bachelor party

Guys, listen up: The old stag party is pretty much history. The newer trends call for a little civility and respect toward the bride. There was a time when this all-male gathering adhered closely to the codes of gentlemanly behavior. It was hosted by the groom's father or best man, and the highlight of the evening was a toast to the health of the bride-to-be.

Here are today's timely tips for those planning to host a bachelor party.

□ Where: Just in case your guests become a bit rowdy, choose someplace that can handle the noise. Book a hotel room as a base. It's a good spot to gather before you go out, and a good place for guests to sleep if they've had too much.

□ Who: The host invites the guests. Include the best man, ushers, any brothers of the bride and groom who are of legal age and the two fathers. The fathers duck out early by tradition.

□ How: These days everybody chips in to pay for the party. The easiest way is to have the party in a bar or pub, and everyone pays his own way.

□ What: Lots of times, these parties focus on raising money for the bride couple. Or, if the groom is an outdoor sports fan, try a hike or a camping weekend. Tom Vaughan of Heyburn, Idaho, says he and his friends the weekend before his wedding.

□ When: Never throw a stag party the night before the wedding if you wish to continue your friendship with the groom. He must make it to the wedding in tip-top shape. The bride will not appreciate anything less.

□ Alert a tax service to provide rides for anyone who might need it at the end of the evening.

□ Keep the guest list manageable. If guests bring other friends, things can get out of hand.

□ Make arrangements for late-night food delivery if you think the party will last into the wee hours.

□ Don't assume the groom wants a monster bash or "female entertainment." Most modern grooms-to-be are responsible men who don't want to do anything they wouldn't ordinarily do. They are also men who do not want to upset their fiancées.

□ Remember that the bride will learn what happened at the party.

seated at the head table and introduced with you as a family, along with the new bride and groom. Also consider dancing with your children after the first dance, and before you dance with the in-laws.

Giving wedding gifts can be confusing for friends and family. Cinderella and Prince already have two toasters

"At 18 you're so caught up with the ceremony that you're not as conscious of the commitment to each other, your families and to God. We're trying to celebrate the act of commitment rather than the ceremony itself."

between them. What does the well-intentioned wedding guest offer the older couple?

"We got extension cords and rakes," said Tom Vaughan, of Heyburn. "Stuff that you need and don't have, like Weed Eaters. Stuff that Mom and Dad always had and you don't think about until you have to mow the lawn."

Vaughan and his bride,

The Vaughn's back-yard wedding was 'totally traditional. We hadn't been married before, and Debbie's parents took care of everything,' Tom Vaughan said.

Expressing thanks

Newly-married couples: Send handwritten thank-you notes within three weeks of receiving a gift, no matter when it arrives. Include everyone who helped with the wedding, even your clergy, advises Deborah McCoy's "Brides A-Z."

"Never send a note with the words 'Thank you printed on the outside, or one with a verse printed on the inside. Thank-you notes written after you receive your wedding gifts are meant to be a personal expression of gratitude and should come from the heart.'"

Sign your note with the woman's name first, McCoy instructs. For example, write, "Yours truly, Betty and John Williams."

Debbie Clayville, had been on their own "for a good 10 years," he said. When they wed, they got thoughtful, useful gifts from their friends. With almost no duplications out of 400 invitations.

To register or not to register. The Vaughns registered; McKelvey didn't. She and her 30-something groom, Dale Rapp, will be combining households and have invited only their closest family and friends.

"They know not to get us a toaster," Lorraine McKelvey said. "We had to rent a storage unit to put the extra stuff in."

Wedding Bells said, "Though remarrying couples should not expect gifts, invariably they receive them. Registering for gifts is entirely appropriate."

Besides, Wedding Bells pointed out, you can register for better things than the garage-sale vintage frying pans you already have — instead, you can ask for, say, a soup tureen.

Weddings are still white. Almost anything goes, noted Wedding Bells, from a white leather cocktail dress to a dazzling jewel-toned evening gown. "Take your cue from the size and formality of the wedding ceremony."

Vaughan said, "Ours was totally traditional. We hadn't been married before, and Debbie's parents took care of everything."

The Vaughns said their vows in their own back yard, on the river.

"The dress and the rings aren't as important as the commitment," McKelvey said. "At 18 you're so caught up with the ceremony that you're not as conscious of the commitment to each other, your families and to God. We're trying to celebrate the act of commitment rather than the ceremony itself."

McKelvey planned a formal wedding, she said, and the couple wrote their own vows. She decided to carry a bouquet of red roses and white lilies.

And all that stuff in the storage unit? "We're waiting for garage sale weather," McKelvey said.

Making the most of your budget

By Dixie Thomas Reale
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS - So your daughter wants to get married and you just priced wedding dresses.

"How can they possibly get $5,000 worth of fabric and seed pearls into one dress? You must be under your breath."

Short of eloping, how do you cut costs on the wedding?

Betty McEwen of Harr's Tuxedo and Gowns advises those who are planning to get married (or pay the bill for a wedding) and are concerned about costs to understand they are not alone.

"People in the upper and upper-middle income levels typically watch their wedding budgets and use the money saved for a down payment on the house or for the honeymoon," she said. "The parent who insists on spending lavishly on a child's wedding, when the parent really can't afford to do so, should examine their motives for the lavish spending. You can have a lovely and tasteful wedding on a limited budget. I did my own daughter's wedding for $500. It was a beautiful wedding."

If you are on a budget, McEwen advises that you tell the wedding counselor up front what your budget is. The consultant can then help you stay within your budget. You can cut costs on almost everything associated with a wedding.

Wedding counselors are walking encyclopedias of information about weddings. They offer tips, calculations and equations for figuring out the nitty gritty details of planning a wedding and reception - everything from how to determine how big a tent you'll need for the number of guests you'll have at a garden wedding with outdoor reception to how many drinks you'll need for the number of people expected at the reception and when to call guests who haven't responded to your R.S.V.P.

The counselor can supply the prospective couple with dresses and tuxedos, decorations, invitations, wedding tapes and referrals to countless businesses.

McEwen offers a wedding planner book free of charge to the bride and groom. She advises the couple to set the date, time and place first. Get the invitations and the dress; everything else evolves out of those two decisions.

Both Debbie Miller of the White House and McEwen say one of the most effective ways to cut costs on the marriage ceremony is to cut back on the number of people in the wedding party. Rather than six or eight attendants, have a best man and a maid of honor only, or have a best man and one groomsman, a maid of honor and one bridesmaid. This cuts costs on the clothes, the number of bouquets and the number of thank-you gifts.

McEwen suggests the hall rental can be another area for saving.

"Use churches, lodge halls or other facilities, often free of charge to members or charging a minimal fee if you are not a member," she said. "In the summer, you can go outdoors for a garden wedding, to the park with a stream for a romantic backdrop or to the mountains. The outdoors is usually free."

Debbie Miller of the White House suggests cutting wedding costs by using a 'dummy cake' for looks and serving sheet cakes to guests.

She advises, "Be sure to furnish a canopy." "In the mountains, you will also have to make accommodations for restroom facilities."

Miller cautions couples that, "With the use of a church or lodge hall for a reception, there will probably have to be some major decorating done. These decorations must be counted into the cost of the facility. When planning an outdoor wedding, always make an alternate plan, in case of rain."

Miller suggests that food is an area for savings. "A small tiered cake can be made for the cake-cutting pictures and for the centerpiece. Make several sheet cakes, which are usually considerably cheaper than the tiered cakes, for the guests to eat."

She added, "The reception can be scheduled at a time of day when people will have already eaten their meal. Then the guests will not want a full meal; cake, nuts, mints and punch will be plenty."

McEwen said, "If a family member is talented at cake decorating, have the relative make the cake. Often relatives will give the wedding cake as a gift to the couple."

She also suggests, "The reception dinner can be made by relatives."

You can do the flowers and centerpieces yourself, if you are artistically inclined, Miller said. But be aware that doing it yourself isn't always cheaper. You have to buy the flowers and other supplies. Unless you know what you are getting into, it can cost more to do it yourself.

McEwen said, "If you have a great seamstress in the family, you can have the dresses made, or you can alter Grandma's wedding dress. Or you can put the dresses and tuxedos on layaway and pay a little each week until they are paid off."

Vicki Harney of the Wedding and Rental Shop suggests that the couple who want to cut costs not buy anything, but rent everything.

At her shop, everything is for rent: wedding dresses, tuxedos, bridesmaid dresses, flower girl dresses, slips, strapless bras, wedding music tapes, archways, tables, chairs, cake toppers, plume pens, ring pillows, flower baskets and reception halls.

Sharon Edwards at Zurchers Party and Wedding Store offers discounts on every retail price in the store. Zurchers offers a large array of decorations and party supplies: invitations, balloons, tableware, candles, books, pillows, toppers, garters, bells, etc.

Both McEwen and Miller caution couples, "Do not skimp on the photographers."

McEwen said, "Shop around, look for package deals, coupon discounts, watch the paper for photographer specials, but get a professional photographer."

She recounts a horror story about a relative assigned to do the photography who forgot to put film in the camera.

Miller stressed, "When the wedding day is over, the photographs will be all the couple will have to remind them of how beautiful everything was. You can always order a few after the wedding and go back later when you can afford it and order more."

Additional low-cost wedding ideas gleaned from wedding web sites on the Internet follow.

(1) Many brides are choosing hand-tied bouquets for their attendants. They are less expensive than traditional bouquets and are especially beautiful for spring or summer ceremonies. Purchase crystal vases to decorate the reception area, and have the attendants place their spring bouquets in them during the reception. After the reception, they take the vases with the bouquets home with them as their gift.

(2) The bride's bouquet can be a Bible or prayer book covered with ribbon. The ribbon has roses on it. The roses trail down the front of the dress on the ribbon.

(3) Rather than tossing the garter, auction it off or have the best man carry a hat around the crowd as the guests put dollar bills or larger in it. After a specified time, the garter is given to the last person to put money in the hat. The bride and groom use the money for their honeymoon.

(4) Have a dollar dance for the bride and groom. The guests have to pay a dollar to dance with either of the newlyweds.

(5) A gift for the attendants can be a T-shirt bearing the picture of the bride and groom or a design from the invitations with the sentiment, "I survived the Smith-Jones wedding."

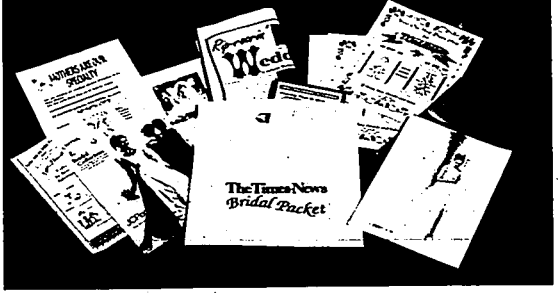

(6) Place disposable cameras on reception tables for guests to take candid photos throughout the celebration. The professional formal wedding pictures combined with the informal ones shot by guests can be assembled into an album after the wedding.

tions and mail them four weeks before the wedding.

- Get blood test and marriage license.
- Have your final dress fitting.
- Have formal bridal portrait done.
- Have final fitting for wedding attendants.
- Purchase gifts for wedding participants.
- Purchase gift for fiancé.
- Complete shopping for your trousseau.
- Have attendants' parties.
- Purchase going-away outfit.
- Ensure that your accessories (toasting goblets, garter, candles, ring pillow etc.) are in order.
- Finalize rehearsal dinner details.
- Make a calendar of events for your wedding day.
- Draw a map to direct guests to the ceremony and reception sites if necessary.

sites if necessary.

2 weeks before

- Finalizing addressing announcements to be mailed on your wedding day.
- Contact guests who have not responded.
- Pick up the wedding rings and make sure they fit properly and that engraved inscriptions are correct.
- Meet with your photographer and give him or her a list of special pictures you want taken.
- Meet with videographer and give him or her a list of special events or people you want in the videotape.
- Meet with disc jockey and give him or her a list of special music to be played that night.
- Continue writing thank-you notes for gifts received.

1 week before

- Provide the caterer with the total guest count and confirm all details.
- Provide your wedding party and out-of-town guests with timetables and maps, if necessary, for the rehearsal dinner, ceremony and reception.
- Review details of last-minute arrangements and timetables with all service companies.
- Plan seating arrangements, if used.
- Confirm all honeymoon reservations and accommodations; pick up tickets and traveler's checks.
- Discuss the details of the reception with your host and hostess.
- Assign tasks to be done on the wedding day to your wedding party.
- Practice applying makeup and styling your hair and determine the amount of time needed to do this on your wedding day.
- Make sure you have your marriage license.
- Pick up wedding attire and make sure everything fits properly.
- Keep writing thank-you

notes for gifts received.

- Pack your suitcase for your honeymoon.
- Rehearse wedding ceremony with all participants in attendance.
- Attend rehearsal dinner.
- Give the best man the officiator's fee and instruct him to deliver it on the day of the wedding.
- Get a good night's sleep the night before your wedding day.

On the wedding day

- Remain calm and try to relax.
- Don't forget to bring your wedding rings and marriage license.
- Check with florist to ensure flowers will arrive on time.
- Apply makeup and style your hair slowly.

• Start dressing 1 1/2 hours before the ceremony.

- Mail the wedding announcements.
- Have music start 30 minutes before the ceremony begins.
- Have guests seated as they arrive.
- Groom's parents should be seated five minutes before the ceremony begins.
- The bride's mother should be seated immediately before the professional and before the aisle runner is rolled out.

After the wedding:

- Write and mail all thank-you notes as soon as possible.
- Take care of business and legal affairs. (Change name if necessary on records and legal documents.)

Flowers: The finishing touch

By Rebecca Tateoka
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — He finally proposed, and it was perfect. With a single red rose and a small velvet box, he knelt on one knee and asked you the life-changing question.

You want the wedding and reception to be just as perfect and, like the proposal, flowers seem to pull the event together.

"Flowers are the finishing touch of the wedding... they set the tone, the elegance and the softness," said Lanoma Blom, owner of Rosebud's Florists in Jerome.

White roses are the classic wedding flower, and most brides will have them as part of the bouquet and other arrangements—in fact, using all white flowers has become increasingly popular.

"There are white roses, stephanotis (that's the traditional wedding flower), gardenias, Queen Anne's lace, tulips, small carnations, lily-of-the-valley, freesia, star gazer lily, Casablanca lily... almost every flower can come in white," explained Nancy Fowers, owner of Nancy's Rupert Floral.

Fowers said an all-white wedding is popular in the spring and summer months, and during the colder months the predominant color can be white with a hint of contrasting color, such as burgundy.

Fresh and natural are also more important to today's bride-to-be, and there has been less use of silks, even in a fresh bouquet.

"We used to do a lot more silks," said Blom, who still uses silks at times, if the color of the bridesmaids' dresses clashes with the color of a natural flower, for example.

Sometimes going more natural means making a formal tone for the flowers. Elizabeth Lehmann of Fox Floral in Twin Falls called this an English garden style.

"As of these weddings will be in homes or in the back yards... with more natural bouquets," Lehmann said. "We'll use larkspur, iris, tulips, peonies... quite forgiving."

In this situation, Lehmann said the family becomes more involved in the floral decorations, maybe by using fresh-cut flowers from around the yard. This can make it easier for the florist, as long as the fresh flowers match the tone of the wedding.

Although white is the predomi-

All-white floral arrangements have become increasingly popular, especially in the spring and summer months.

nant color, Fowers said she has noticed that purple is fast becoming a popular secondary color.

"I've done three purple weddings in a row," she said.

Lehmann has done several Western theme weddings using the meadow type of flowers, such as the casino aster, delphinium, dianthus and daisies.

Daisies and yellow roses work well with this type of theme, according to Lehmann.

All the florists agreed that the flowers should be a high priority on the bride's "to-do" list.

The location of the wedding and the reception should already be picked before going to the florist, they said. Having the basic design of the wedding dress and the design and color of the bridesmaid dresses is also necessary.

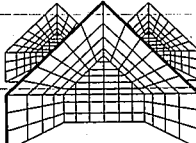

"The hardest (wedding) to do is when the bride has nothing in mind or if the florist is the first visit," said Lehmann. "A florist really can't put everything together from scratch."

Blom said she likes to see the actual bridesmaid dress.

Florists can provide the bride with a catalog of pictures for the bouquet, the garlands, centerpieces or other arrangements. Fowers suggested that pictures of weddings the bride liked or pictures in magazines are helpful, too.

Lehmann suggested that brides have a second choice in mind, in case a particular flower

Path to the altar isn't always a direct one

The Associated Press

Kary Harkin and David Stickney walked a winding path from a beach house in Fairfield, Conn., meeting each other and sharing their wedding promises in the midst of a gathering of 70 guests. Then, the newly united couple retraced their steps as the sun set over Long Island Sound.

It's not as New Age as it may seem, the Stickneys were approximating a centuries-old spiritual ceremony of following pavement labyrinths in cathedrals, a symbolic pilgrimage to the Holy Land.

Though most couples take an unswerving march down the aisle, some, like the Stickneys, have plotted a more circuitous route, perhaps echoing the course of intimate relationships.

The practice started in the Middle Ages when the crusade wars presented ordinary religious pilgrims from making a literal trip to the Holy Land. A pilgrimage was symbolized by serpentine lanes laid out around the floor of cathedrals and many other churches and churches of the period. Typically, the designs were a series of 11 (or sometimes seven) concentric pathways with a petal-shaped center. They led the traveler through many turns but to no dead ends; all had only one path which led first into a center "chamber," then out again.

Labyrinth paths are now found in canvas form at the Stickneys' Church, the First Presbyterian Church in New Canaan, Conn., created by a group called the Labyrinth Project of Connecticut. The bride's parents were involved in the group, and the groom's parents also were in a local meditation group.

Stickney recalls his first experience with the labyrinth. "On one of the early walks, I was just sitting and meditating outside the labyrinth. For a moment Kary was standing alone at the center. I knew right then that that was where I wanted to marry her."

Labyrinths of this sort were brought to the United States in the mid-1930s by Rev. Lauren Artress, canon for special ministries at Grace Cathedral in San Francisco. Inspired by the Chartres example, Artress oversaw construction of two permanent labyrinths at Grace and described the tradition in a book, "Walking a Sacred Path" (Riverhead Books, $11).

1 month before

- Finish addressing invita-

- tions and mail them four weeks before the wedding.
- Get blood test and marriage license.
- Have your final dress fitting.
- Have formal bridal portrait done.
- Have final fitting for wedding attendants.
- Purchase gifts for wedding participants.
- Purchase gift for fiancé.
- Complete shopping for your trousseau.
- Have attendants' parties.
- Purchase going-away outfit.
- Ensure that your accessories (toasting goblets, garter, candles, ring pillow etc.) are in order.
- Finalize rehearsal dinner details.
- Make a calendar of events for your wedding day.
- Draw a map to direct guests to the ceremony and reception sites if necessary.

sites if necessary.

2 weeks before

- Finishing addressing announcements to be mailed on your wedding day.
- Contact guests who have not responded.
- Pick up the wedding rings and make sure they fit properly and that engraved inscriptions are correct.
- Meet with your photographer and give him or her a list of special pictures you want taken.
- Meet with videographer and give him or her a list of special events or people you want in the videotape.
- Meet with disc jockey and give him or her a list of special music to be played that night.
- Continue writing thank-you notes for gifts received.

1 week before

- Provide the caterer with the total guest count and confirm all details.
- Provide your wedding party and out-of-town guests with timetables and maps, if necessary, for the rehearsal dinner, ceremony and reception.
- Review details of last-minute arrangements and timetables with all service companies.
- Plan seating arrangements, if used.
- Confirm all honeymoon reservations and accommodations; pick up tickets and traveler's checks.
- Discuss the details of the reception with your host and hostess.
- Assign tasks to be done on the wedding day to your wedding party.
- Practice applying makeup and styling your hair and determine the amount of time needed to do this on your wedding day.
- Make sure you have your marriage license.
- Pick up wedding attire and make sure everything fits properly.
- Keep writing thank-you

notes for gifts received.

- Pack your suitcase for your honeymoon.
- Rehearse wedding ceremony with all participants in attendance.
- Attend rehearsal dinner.
- Give the best man the officiator's fee and instruct him to deliver it on the day of the wedding.
- Get a good night's sleep the night before your wedding day.

On the wedding day

- Remain calm and try to relax.
- Don't forget to bring your wedding rings and marriage license with all participants in attendance.
- Check with florist to ensure flowers will arrive on time.
- Apply makeup and style your hair slowly.

Start dressing 1 1/2 hours before the ceremony.

- Mail the wedding announcements.
- Have music start 30 minutes before the ceremony begins.
- Have guests seated as they arrive.
- Groom's parents should be seated five minutes before the ceremony begins.
- The bride's mother should be seated immediately before the processional and before the aisle runner is called out.

After the wedding

- Write and mail all thank-you notes as soon as possible.
- Take care of business and legal affairs. (Change name if necessary on records and legal documents.)

Flowers: The finishing touch

By Rebecca Tetsko
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — He finally proposed, and it was perfect. With a single red rose and a small velvet box, he knelt on one knee and asked you the life-changing question.

You want the wedding and reception to be just as perfect and, like the proposal, flowers seem to pull the event together.

"Flowers are the finishing touch of the wedding ... they set the tone, the elegance and the softness," said Lanoma Blom, owner of Rosebud's Florists in Jerome.

White roses are the classic wedding flower, and most brides will have them as part of the bouquet and other arrangements. In fact, using all white flowers has become increasingly popular.

"There are white roses, stephanotis (that's the traditional wedding flower), gardenias, Queen Anne's lace, tulips, small carnations, lily-of-the-valley, freesia, star gazer lily, Casablanca lily ... almost every flower can come in white," explained Nancy Fowers, owner of Nancy's Rupert Floral.

Fowers said an all-white wedding is popular in the spring and summer months and during the colder months the predominant color can be white with a hint of contrasting color, such as burgundy.

Fresh and natural are also more important to today's bride-to-be, and there has been less use of silks, even in a fresh bouquet.

"We used to do a lot more silks," said Blom, who still uses silks at times, if the color of the bridesmaids' dresses clashes with the color of a natural flower, for example.

Sometimes going more natural means having a more informal tone for the flowers. Elizabeth Lehmann of Fox Floral in Twin Falls called this an English garden style.

"A lot of these weddings will be in homes or in the back yards ... with more natural bouquets," Lehmann said. "We'll use larkspur, iris, tulips, peonies ... quince, forsythia."

In this situation, Lehmann said the family becomes more involved in the floral decorations, maybe by using fresh-cut flowers from around the yard. This can make it easier for the florist, as long as the fresh flowers match the tone of the wedding.

Although white is the predomi-

All-white floral arrangements have become increasingly popular, especially in the spring and summer months.

nant color, Fowers said she has noticed that purple is fast becoming a popular secondary color.

"I've done three purple weddings in a row," she said.

Lehmann has done several Western theme weddings using the meadow type of flowers, such as the casino aster, delphinium, dianthus and daisies.

Daisies and yellow roses work well with this type of theme, according to Lehmann.

All the florists agreed that the flowers should be a high priority on the bride's "to-do" list. The location of the wedding and the reception should already be picked before going to the florist, they said. Having the basic design of the wedding dress, and the design and color of the bridesmaid dresses is also necessary.

actual bridesmaid dress.

Florists can provide the bride with a catalog of pictures for the bouquet, the garlands, centerpieces or other arrangements.

Fowers suggested that pictures of weddings the bride liked or pictures in magazines are helpful, too.

Lehmann suggested that brides have a second choice in mind, in case a particular flower

Creating a bridal dress that's ever sew special

NEW YORK (AP) — Ask people what they remember most about the Carolyn Bessette-John Kennedy wedding last season and odds are it will be The Dress—the dramatically simple slip gown of silk crepe, silk tulle veil and long silk gloves.

Simple silhouettes like that one are fashionably current, wearable, and particularly easy to sew, notes the Sewing Fashion Council, an industry group. Other uncluttered shapes are A-lines and high-waisted Empire styles. Made with luxurious fabric with fine detailing, the result can be spectacular, the council says.

It also will be highly individual and cost-efficient, whether made by the bride-to-be, a relative or friend, or a local dressmaker.

Get ideas about the best style for you by visiting stores, looking through the bridal magazines, or checking out pattern catalogs at fabric and sewing centers, the council advises.

Top designers like Carrillean Herrera, Bridgette Mathis, Helen Moseley, Christian Dior and Verna Wang are represented in collections of major pattern makers, and the catalogs will show silhouette options and advice on fabric selection. While at the sewing center, you'll often find fabrics at hand to help you visualize possible choices.

If you're hiring a dressmaker, make an appointment to look at samples and photographs of dresses she or he has made and to get references.

Choose good fabrics, because these last, retain their beauty and feel good on your body. Natural fibers such as silks, linens and cottons endure in popularity, but blends, which often offer better drape, stretch for comfort and fade- and wrinkle-resistance, are worth considering.

Some suggestions from the council include elegant white or ivory silk, veils in satin, organza, charmeuse, burnouts and shirting. Intricate chantilly, alençon, guipure and be-embroidered laces add interesting detail, and lighter fabrics like silk chiffon, tulle and stretch illusion can be used for contrast on bodices, backs and sleeves.

Older or second-time brides can sew one-of-a-kind wedding dresses in such unconventional fabrics as gold metallic lace with iridescent organza, or in plainer fabrics embellished with pearls, beading, cording, sequins or lace.

Waiting stress, reading bridal magazines or peering through pattern catalogs can help you design a picture-perfect wedding dress.

(Other possibilities include the makings of ethnically inspired celebrations. Black brides might opt for an African-style four-piece gold beaded dress that cinches at the body, accented with a flared ruffled head wrap. The council cites one bride of Scottish heritage who modified a ready-made wedding gown by changing it to a silk version of the family tartan and trimming it with plaid piping. She covered the shoes in the same fabric and sewed coordinating accessories for the groomsmen and flower girls, such as the bride's maid's velvet dresses.

The council notes that bridesmaid dresses are far more sophisticated these days, and importantly, can be made to be worn for other occasions after the wedding. Since bridal party members come in a variety of figure types and ages, choose simple dress-and-jacket and skirt-and-jacket combinations.

Tips about creating your own wedding gown are included in the variety of figure types and ages, choose simple dress-and-jacket and skirt-and-jacket combinations.

How to choose a good disc jockey

The Times-News

1. Do not try to pick a DJ (disc jockey) company based on the size of its yellow page ad or amount of its radio advertising.
2. Insist on knowing (and meeting in person) the DJ who will actually be performing at your reception. It is important that you and your DJ personally meet so there are no surprises.
3. Choose a company whose DJs are not too young to relate to the wide range of ages of your guests. Maturity level is more important than actual age.
4. When in doubt check the company's references. Client references are OK to check, but keep in mind you may be given a couple of the glowing ones. A better measurement of checking a DJ company's reputation is to ask other wedding vendors as you are interviewing them. Catering managers and reception facilities are two good sources, because they work with DJs every week.
5. Try to determine if the DJ company is using professional sound equipment or just home stereo gear. Professional equipment will sound better and is more dependable under the rigorous conditions of mobile DJ work. Exposed wires on tables and storage crates are an eyesore and can be hazardous.
6. Your DJ's attire is a visible part of the reception. You should both be comfortable with how he or she is dressed for your reception.
7. Most DJ companies will advertise a "wide variety of music." What is more important than carrying a variety is the actual ability and willingness to play it. Choose a company that is personable and willing to play your guests requests. The best DJs will have that uncanny ability to "read the crowd" and will play to the majority of the guests and not cater only to small segments of the audience.
8. Make sure your company's DJs have experience in acting as the Master of Ceremonies at wedding receptions. Having control of the music and microphone automatically puts them in a position to orchestrate your event. You will want to discuss in advance the timing of your reception to insure everything runs smoothly.
9. Find out if the DJ will be working alone or if anyone will be coming along. An assistant can be useful, but try to avoid a situation where your reception becomes a hang-out for DJ friends.

10. Use only those companies which work with written contracts and deposits.

11. In general, try to choose a professional company which operates as a full-time business, rather than a hobby. A "friend of a friend" may be cheap and a nice gesture, but do you really want to take chances on a day as important as your wedding?

12. Always remember it's your day and professional DJs should keep the spotlight on you and not them. Although they are the entertainment, they should give your reception direction and motivate your guests to have a good time at your discretion.

Keep groom involved in planning

WASHINGTON (AP) — Remember that fellow who's taking part in the wedding? You know him, the groom?

"You have to open a space and let him in," says Carleen Gray, associate professor of social work at the Catholic University of America. "He has to decide to be something more than a passive participant in the wedding. She has to make room for him to be the part of it."

The moment the couple decides to marry is when they set the tone for their life together, Gray says. "The wedding is the first thing for the couple to discuss. Critical decisions are made at this point. This is the beginning of all that's to come, styles, decision-making, partnering things."

What Gray calls gender fairness come to play, and both should be prepared to deal with them:

"If the bride, it goes all the way back to dolls play. She, and quite likely her mother, have been dreaming about the wedding dress for years. If the boys don't dream and fantasize about their weddings, they're inclined to think beyond that day, to the marriage. But for the girl, the wedding is a culmination of a long dream."

It's not that grooms are indifferent bystanders, she says. Far from it. Grooms want to direct the event as well. But by doing that they are involving their partner. "Making him a part of the wedding planning is a way to start to make the two of them a part of a unit."

Giving an unregistered gift? Here are some ideas

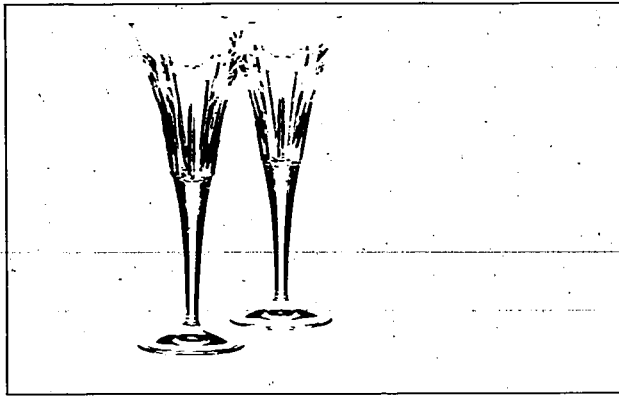

The Associated Press

While registries take some of the guesswork out of picking gifts for the bridal pair, some givers still prefer the challenge of making independent choices. Here are some possibilities:

• What wears a wedding band and administers the thank-you notes? The bride or groom, for sure, but also a new wedding accessory, the pen. The Meisterstück Wedding Pen from Montblanc comes with a solid gold ring on the cap that is detachable and engravable — perhaps a spot for a personal dedication or the wedding date. It's suggested as a ceremonial pen, such as for signing the keruba, but also for practical use later. The pen comes in two finishes and two sizes. The Classique is more delicate and streamlined and available in sterling silver ($1,000) or Montblanc's signature black precious resin ($900). The larger Le Grand is also available in sterling ($1,200) or black precious resin ($575). For dealer information, call 1 (800) 388-4810.

• If you want to give something elegant silver but something more individual than a place setting, consider sterling silver flowering pots in four sizes by Bulgari ($125 to $750). Or from the company's Centra line, choose a silver corkscrew ($350) or bottle opener ($250).

• Uncork the champagne for a pair of toasting flutes. You can find a pair in two finishes (a $98 pair). This limited design features vertical cuts curving up the stem until they form subtle heart shapes at the fill line. The bridal pair have chosen the wedding rings at Tiffany & Co. — perhaps from the new Atlas Collection, which features an emerald-cut diamond solitaire and matching wedding ring with alternating matte and diamond polished bands. To complement the rings, make a gift of a Tiffany classic Atlas watch. It comes in either a round- or square-faced version, in gold or silver and in two sizes (prices range from $995 to $2,950). It features Roman numerals on the case, has a quartz movement and is water-resistant to 99 feet.

• For that little something for the attendants, the bridal couple might take a suggestion from the Jewelry Information Center and opt for lifestyle-themed watches from Akteo ($105-$120). Among the novelty faces are designs for the gardener, with hands in the form of gardening tools; for the architect, with T-square and protractor; and for the artist, with brushes and palette.

• Classic porcelain pieces from Limoges, France, make an elegant status gift. The new white-on-white design by Regis Dubo for Philippe Deshoulières, called Frosemade (five-piece setting, $80), has detailed reliefs of flowers, ferns and leaves. Different pieces depicting different varieties and the light-play of the reliefs against the china's translucent make it fascinating to look at and use.

• In a nod to today's lifestyles, Lenox has introduced its Casual Images dinnerware. Meant to be used throughout the day and both dishwasher- and microwave-safe, these American-made patterns have cheerful floral designs — Garden Vines (five-piece setting, $57), Summer Terrace, Rose Garden, Dutch Lace, Key West, and Fruit Groves (five-piece settings, each $71).

• "Naturewood" is a new garden-theme casual china pattern from Pfaltzgraf (five-piece setting, $50) that should please the couple lucky enough to have a garden with their first home. Motifs include implements, seed packets and leaves.

• Some of the details may seem mundane, but the whole package ($150) is what makes "First Kitchen" from Metro

Marketing a smart idea. There are 77 pieces in this set that has everything to prepare, cook, and serve a meal and to store leftovers. Among them are six pieces of cookware; seven plastics, including bowls, measuring, and storage; 14 kitchen tools with Sure Grips handles; four wooden tools; and 11 gadgets, including knives, timers, openers, etc.

For dress designer Vera Wang, less is more

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Most bridal-wear designers create dresses for women looking to transform themselves into Cinderella for a day. Vera Wang designs gowns for brides who think Cinderella's fashion sense was reason enough to keep her out of the ball.

"When I first started in bridal, I don't know if anybody got out dresses, old or young. Minimalism in bridal and evening wear takes a lot of nerve," Wang says. "Most women don't want to be minimal at night. They think, 'I've got to be fancy.'"

While summertime brings an onslaught of weddings, January marks the beginning of the hunt for the perfect gown. Designers make the rounds at trunk shows and manufacturers and department stores host wedding fairs with displays featuring everything from sample gowns to souvenir matchbooks. And brides patiently and carefully sift through it all, because on that special day, when all eyes are on them, they want their dress to be unique, spectacular, perfect.

Wang's spare evening gowns worn by such high-profile clients as Sharon Stone and Holly Hunter have helped to put her name in the fashion magazines, society pages and entertainment columns. The use of sheer "illusion" netting to enhance the bodice of a formal dress has become her signature. And as the champion of understated brides, Wang, with her grown-up, sexy sensibility, has redefined the voluminous, ornate wedding day ensemble.

"We did sleeveless short dresses.

We did Carolyn Bessette-esque dresses. That was a revolution five years ago," Wang says. "The challenge is making (wedding gowns) modern but still ceremonial."

Wang does that with delicate: a delicate still life of silk flowers nestled in the small of a bride's back; a silk satin bodice virtually unmeasured by zippers, hooks or snaps; layers of fabric in subtly varying shades that combine to create a single hue.

Over the past few years, an increasing number of women have discovered Wang — women who believe that a simple jersey sheath or unadorned satin gown can be just as dramatic and stunning as a dress dripping in bangles and beads. (This is a case where less really is more — off-the-rack prices range from $2,300 to $11,000.) Recently, they came in droves to one of Wang's trunk shows, this one at her boutique at Saks-Jaenel in the Watergate Hotel here.

The designer's experiences as a retailer, senior fashion editor at Vogue and design director at Ralph Lauren have given her a sense of ease and comfort in dealing with customers, a directness at verbally expressing her point of view, and the valuable knowledge that appearances count for a lot.

Wang, dressed in a simple, sleeveless black dress, black tights and matching heels, looks the part of the minimalist designer. No detectable makeup obscures a face that can go steady with the certainty of design convictions.

She is adept at dealing not just with the bride but with the bride's entire family. Wang is attuned to details and the responsibility on her shoulders.

"If you mess up, you mess up someone's wedding," she says. Customers marvel at her focus, the way she listens intently to a woman's wedding day plans. Wang asks questions about the location, the length of the aisle, the formality of the event. And then, after pausing for a moment's contemplation, she begins a critical sentence with "Well, to be frank..."

Wang is not one to simply reassure a young woman that her favorite dress is also the most fit-tering. She tells a customer if a gown is overpowering. She advises her on whether a look is trendy, chic or classic. And her hands are in constant motion as she talks about flowers, layers of organza and veils.

Two Convenient Locations To Serve You

WEDDINGS

Guests can give gift of knowledge at book shower for bride, groom

Many of today's wedding showers take a fresh look at an old tradition, and star both partners rather than just the blushing bride. The custom of the bridal shower, originally meant to give the bride moral support from her female friends and also help supply her with pragmatic necessities for a household, is often being replaced by a mix of both partners, with friends of both sexes in attendance. And what better way to launch the happy couple's new life together than at an informal but elegant buffet shower, at which the gifts of choice are books that can develop or strengthen a couple's mutual interests or provide them with guidance.

For "green thumbs" about to move into a new apartment, a complete-reference-on-house-plants or container gardening can be given, along with a set of gardening gloves for each; a beautifully illustrated volume on baking accompanied by a few non-stick baking sheets and pans is perfect for those who love to cook; and if the celebrants have bought and older house; a do-it-yourself manual on renovation, along with a set of various sizes of screwdrivers, an electric drill or other tools, is a great choice.

To reflect the nature of the occasion, the centerpiece for the buffet table can be framed pictures of the couple together, with a few fresh flowers and bright napkins to add color. A pile of gifts nearby sets the scene for opening packages later in the evening.

Shepherd's Pie, an easy-to-serve one-dish meal that is ideal for buffet service, is bound to please, with its tempting meat and heavy mixture of meats and vegetables in a savory gravy peaking out from a cheddar cheese and mashed potato topping. The dish is also a boon to the cook, since it can be made the day before, then reheated and browned just prior to serving. All that's necessary is a green salad and Cheese Straws - tasty Parmesan-flavored dough cleverly twisted into corkscrew shapes - to make a delicious and satisfying main course.

A good time to open gifts is between the main course and dessert, since everyone will already be seated. The pile of gifts can be brought to the bride and groom so they can take turns opening the packages. Assigning the maid of honor or best man the task of listing each gift on a notepad along with the name of the giver provides an invaluable reference guide for writing thank-you notes.

The break between courses also allows time to re-set the table with an elegant dessert buffet of homemade cookies, Chocolate Cheesecake Bars are both beautiful to behold and richly-satisfying with their brownie-like base. And the dough for Chocolate Wedding Cookies - with its double burst of chocolate from a combination of cocoa and chocolate chips - can be mixed up in minutes.

For a scrumptious variation on the traditional cookie shape, sugar cookie dough is baked into miniature shells in a madeleine pan or muffin tin to hold dollops

SHEPHERD'S PIE

Meat Filling
 3 tablespoons Crisco Savory Seasonings Roasted Garlic Flavor
 2 onions, peeled and diced
 2 pounds ground lamb or beef
 4 tablespoons tomato paste
 1 1/2 cups beef gravy
 1/2 cup red wine or water
 1 package (10 ounces) frozen mixed vegetables, defrosted
 1/2 teaspoon tarragon
 Salt and freshly ground black pepper to taste

Potato Topping

1 1/2 pounds boiling potatoes
 1/2 cup grated cheddar cheese
 1/3 cup Crisco Golden Cookin' oil
 1/3 cup milk or cream
 Salt and freshly ground black pepper to taste

1. For the meat filling, heat oil in a deep-sided skillet or Dutch oven over medium-high heat. Add the onion and saute, stirring frequently, for 3 to 5 minutes, or until onions are translucent.

2. Add meat to pan, breaking up any lumps with a fork. Fry meat over medium heat until brown. Drain any excess grease, if necessary.

3. Add tomato paste, gravy and wine or water to the pan. Stir well. Simmer the mixture over medium heat, stirring often, for 20 to 30 minutes, or until thick. Add vegetables and tarragon to the pan. Simmer for 5 minutes. Season with salt and pepper to taste.

4. For the potato topping, peel potatoes and cut into 1-inch cubes. Cover potatoes with cold salted water. Boil potatoes over high heat until tender, about 15 minutes. Drain potatoes well.

5. Add cheese, oil and milk to potatoes. Beat at medium speed of electric mixer until light and fluffy. Add salt and pepper to taste.

6. Heat oven broiler. Place meat mixture in the bottom of an oven-proof casserole. Pipe potatoes around rim and top in a decorative fashion. Broil for 2 to 3 minutes, or until the potatoes are browned. Serve immediately.

Note: The dish can be prepared up to the final broiling 1 day in advance and refrigerated, tightly wrapped. Bake at 350 degrees until hot, about 15 minutes, and then broil.
 Serves 6 to 8.

CHEESE STRAWS

3 cups all-purpose flour
 3/4 teaspoon cayenne pepper
 1/2 teaspoon salt
 1 Butter Flavor Crisco Stick or 1 cup Butter Flavor Crisco all-vegetable shortening
 3 cups grated Parmesan cheese
 3 egg yolks
 4 tablespoons cold water

1. Combine flour, pepper and salt in mixing bowl. Cut in shortening using a pastry blender (or 2 knives) until mixture resembles coarse crumbs. Add cheese.

2. Beat egg yolks with water. Add to flour mixture. Toss to combine until dough forms ball. Divide dough in half. Wrap each half in plastic wrap. Refrigerate at least 1 hour.

3. Heat oven to 375 degrees. Place sheets of foil on countertop for cooling cheese straws.

4. Spread 1 tablespoon of flour on large sheet of waxed paper. Place one half of dough on floured paper. Flatten slightly with hands. Turn dough over and cover with another large sheet of waxed paper. Roll dough to 1/4-inch thickness. Remove top sheet of waxed paper. Cut into strips 1/2-inch wide. Twist strips. Transfer to ungreased baking sheet with large pancake turner. Place 1 inch apart on ungreased baking sheet. Roll out remaining dough.

5. Bake one baking sheet at a time at 375 degrees for 7 to 9 minutes. Do not overbake. Cool 2 minutes on baking sheet. Remove cheese straws to foil to cool completely.
 Makes 5 to 6 dozen.

CHOCOLATE CHEESECAKE BARS

Ceremony is prime time for a reunion

The Associated Press

Weddings are usually a supreme moment of family togetherness. Patricia Miller and Nate Molden discovered that a wedding can be even better when combined with another powerful family ritual: the family reunion.

Miller, 55, and Molden, 59, were married in a surprise ceremony before 200 family members last July at the Starling-Wilbourn family reunion in Chicago.

The family, to which Molden belongs, originated in Georgia but has spread throughout the country. Reunions have been held every other year in cities around the country for the past 25 years.

Besides being a warm and loving occasion for cementing family ties, this reunion wedding was appropriate for another reason: from the moment they met about four years ago in a park in Warren, Ohio, the couple has included their families in their life.

Miller, who lived and worked in Denver as an administration coordinator for a computer sales company, was out for a stroll with her 5-year-old granddaughter when Molden, an industrial engineer who lived in Warren, struck up a conversation.

"He seemed like a nice person, so I invited him to my granddaughter's birthday party," recalls Pat Molden, who later discovered that Molden and her son-in-law knew each other. She converted Molden's subsequent dinner invitation into a picnic with her family.

Nevertheless, romance blossomed between the two, and by last spring, a wedding was in the offing.

Pat Molden was envisioning a quiet ceremony in front of close family only. "At this stage of my life, I couldn't begin to want to go through the hassle of planning a major event," she says.

But Nate Molden was hoping to be wed in front of as much of his large, scattered family as possible.

Their inspiration was to realize that the wedding might be arranged for the family reunion in July. "At this stage of my life, I couldn't begin to want to go through the hassle of planning a major event," she says.

But Nate Molden was hoping to be wed in front of as much of his large, scattered family as possible.

Their inspiration was to realize that the wedding might be arranged for the family reunion in July. "At this stage of my life, I couldn't begin to want to go through the hassle of planning a major event," she says.

John Molden put them in touch with Joel Taylor, the minister at St. Paul Missionary Baptist Church on Chicago's south side, who would be giving the invocation at the reunion. Taylor readily agreed to conduct the service.

The couple decided to keep the wedding a secret from everyone except John Molden, his wife and the minister.

Newlyweds Pat and Nate Molden sway to the strains of 'Unforgettable' at their family reunion wedding in Chicago.

"We felt by making it a surprise, people wouldn't feel they needed to bring gifts. Also, we didn't want to take away from the rest of the reunion activities," Pat Molden says.

Eventually, the couple took Pat's two grown daughters into their confidence to assure their presence.

The couple arrived in Chicago on Thursday and quietly stole away on Friday to pick up the license. The printed program gave nothing away. The wedding was listed as a "special event" between the convocation and the meal.

Taylor gave the opening prayer. Then he asked Pat and Nate to come up to the front of the room, and he revealed their secret to the 200 family members who had assembled for the dinner at the Ramada Inn of Hyde Park. They had kept the secret well. There were exclamations of surprise, chuddes and lots of clapping.

"The excitement of everyone when they heard the news. We got a lot of cheers, hand-clapping and people snapping pictures," Nate says. "Another thrill for me was the joy in Pat's eyes during and right after the ceremony."

As soon as the ceremony was completed, the band struck up the music to "Unforgettable," a song made famous by Nat "King" Cole. The couple danced to the tune as the family watched and applauded.

Traditions are evolving

The Associated Press

Patricia Molden, who was married at a reunion of 200 family members, says she had a traditional wedding with all the fat cat cuts.

"We were married before all the people we love, and it was wonderful. But it was wonderful, at least in part, because we did not have many of the usual rituals such as 'here comes the bride,' a bridal bouquet, lots of attendants, and a wedding cake."

Molden and her husband, who find large expensive weddings somewhat lacking in the true meaning of marriage, are typical of a growing number of couples who choose to jettison aspects of tradition that do not appeal to them, while keeping those that they enjoy and find meaningful.

"Rarely do I conduct a ceremony that is completely traditional or completely novel," says John Wade Payne, pastor of the Park Avenue Christian Church in New York City. Payne, also co-author of "Happily Intermarried" (Macmillan), often officiates at interfaith ceremonies. "The services are typically on the traditional side, but couples almost always wish to include something creative or special to them."

Among novel aspects common to wedding ceremonies in many denominations are the lighting of a unity candle and the incorporation of secular words (whether of Shakespeare, Emily Dickinson, the Beatles, or a new rock group) into the service.

"The unity candle doesn't appear in any published ceremony that I am aware of," says Payne. "Yet in my experience about 50 percent of couples have it."

Top designers plunge into bridal wear

The Associated Press

Quel surprise! After decades of bridal clothes that were a stylistic hodgepodge, well-known designers now are bringing their ready-to-wear mentality to wedding attire.

Among fashion names now showing bridal collections are the Italian houses of Armani and Dolce & Gabbana, Jasper Conran based in London, and Badgley Mischka and Nicole Miller Ltd., both of New York.

Armani and Nicole Miller even include the groom and his attendants in their calculations, with tuxedos (Armani) and printed bow ties, cummerbunds, shirts and cufflinks (Miller).

Designers have, of course, always done custom bridal dresses. The difference is that the new collections are for everyone — provided in many cases that they have lots of jingle in their jeans. Armani bridal dresses start at about $5,400 and even a crinoline is $830. Badgley Mischka dresses range from $2,000 to $8,000.

The difference between a traditional dress and one of these designer gowns? In the case of Badgley-Mischka, whose gowns evening wear is worn by the likes of Winona Ryder and Sharon Stone, "the silhouettes are slinky — chiseled long columns, fistball gowns — more like ready-to-wear silhouettes," says Marzaglio.

The company's trademark opulent fabrics — hammered satin, silk netting covered in pearl and crystal, embellishments such as beadwork and embroidery — hark back to a 1930s Hollywood look.

While much of it is expensive, not all of the new bridal attire costs an arm and a leg. Designs by Nicole Miller range from about $250 to $770. The clothes are the same designs as the company's regular line in dressy fabrics such as silk dupioni and moss crepe. Satin suits, considered appropriate for a mother of the bride or groom, sell for between $250 and $400.

The Nicole Miller Company was surprised at the success of its first collection of eight bridesmaids' dresses about two years ago.

"We thought we would do $1 million worth of business, and we sold $8 million," says Lisa Brigham, national sales manager.

The pull appeared to be the fact that the dresses looked exactly like the rest of the Nicole Miller line. Brides also bought the dresses, available in ivory.

This fall, a more bride-like dress in ivory double-faced satin, for about $520, was introduced to retailers. But don't expect to identify it as a bridesmaid dress.

"We dropped the word bridesmaid from the catalog after the first collection because the dresses are suitable as evening wear and we didn't to turn possible customers off," Brigham says.

Traditionally, wedding attire has been ordered in bridal shops from samples and a wait of up to three months is required before finished dresses are ready. The ready-to-wear companies have speeded things up. Armani promises delivery within six weeks of placing the order. Nicole Miller takes about two weeks to fill orders. And Brigham says they've responded to emergencies when people needed dresses in three days.

Forces driving the innovations in design and services include the changing nature of brides and the changing nature of the apparel industry.

"Brides are older, more sophisticated and surer of their own personal tastes, and many want a dress in keeping with ready-to-wear trends with which they are familiar," says Maria McBride Mellinger, a writer on bridal subjects based in New York, whose most recent book is "The Perfect Wedding," (Harper-Collins, $40 hardcover).

A more competitive environment in the fashion industry also plays a role in the rise of new collections and the greater efforts to woo consumers, as companies more aggressively exploit all of their opportunities to make a profit.

As brides grow more fashionable, so does the rest of the bridal party. "Bridesmaid's dresses used to be frilly concoctions," Mellinger says. "Now they are sleek, and colors such as navy, black, forest green, and peach have replaced the seafoam and pink polyester taffetas and metallic teals of the past."

Look for the wedding attire in bridal salons and in the formal wear department of a number of the newer styles are included in regular collections.

The Nicole Miller catalog can be viewed by subscribers to America On Line (keyword is weddings) Or, call 1 (800) 365-4721 for a catalog or to find nearby retailers.

Put your best face forward

The Associated Press

The glowing face you want to show to the world on your wedding day doesn't develop overnight. Like everything else involved in the event, it takes pre-planning care.

"Many brides think having a facial right before the big day will magically improve their skin, when in fact it can have the opposite effect," says Glacia, consultant for Luminique Skin Care products at Vidal Sassoon Salons. "For facials and other treatments such as glycolic acid to really work, they must be done with consistency. Start having regular facials at least three months in advance."

You don't have to become engaged to start on a skin regime, but to ensure a radiant wedding day complexion, take care that your skin is consistently balanced and hydrated, she says. "Good skin creates a flawless canvas."

Two common categories of skin type are normal-to-dry and normal-to-oily, and the specialist notes that most cosmetics companies offer products tailored to work for your type and that you will like to use. Ask a trained professional for advice before using additional products such as an eye cream and glycolic acid treatment cream.

If there are bumps along the way, she has this advice: "Never, ever pick when they are left alone. Always drink lots of water and most of all, don't worry. A simple won't ruin your wedding day. You will still be beautiful."

Shower

1. Heat oven to 350 degrees. Grease a 13-by-9-inch baking pan with shortening. Place cooling rack on countertop.

2. For brownies, combine shortening, brown sugar, water and vanilla in large bowl. Beat at medium speed of electric mixer, until well blended. Beat eggs into creamed mixture.

3. Combine flour, cocoa, salt and baking soda. Mix into creamed mixture at low speed just until blended. Stir in chocolate chips. Spread mixture evenly into prepared pan.

4. For topping, combine cream cheese, eggs, sugar and vanilla in medium bowl. Beat at medium speed until well blended. Spread evenly on top of brownie mixture.

5. Bake at 350 degrees for 35 to 40 minutes, or until set. Do not overbake. Remove from oven and place on cooling rack. Run spatula around edge of pan to loosen before cooling. Cool in pan on cooling rack. Cut into 2-by-1 1/2-inch bars.

Makes 3 dozen brownies.

CHOCOLATE WEDDING COOKIES

1 1/2 cups firmly packed light brown sugar
2/3 Crisco stick or 2/3 cup Crisco all-vegetable shortening
1 tablespoon vanilla
1 teaspoon water
2 eggs

1 1/2 cup all-purpose flour
1/3 cup unsweetened baking cocoa
1/4 teaspoon baking soda
1/2 teaspoon salt

2 cups (12-ounce package) miniature semi-sweet chocolate chips
1 cup confectioners' sugar

1. Heat oven to 375 degrees. Place sheets of foil on countertop for cooling cookies.

2. Combine brown sugar, shortening, water and vanilla in large bowl. Beat at medium speed of electric mixer until well blended. Beat eggs into creamed mixture.

3. Combine flour, cocoa, baking soda and salt. Mix into creamed mixture at low speed just until blended. Stir in chocolate chips.

4. Shape dough into 1 1/4-inch balls. Roll in confectioners' sugar. Place 2 inches apart on ungreased baking sheet.

5. Bake one baking sheet at a time at 375 degrees for 7 to 9 minutes, or until cookies are set. Do not overbake. Cool 2 minutes on baking sheet. Remove cookies to foil to cool completely.

Makes about 4 dozen cookies.

COOKIE SHELLS WITH FRUIT

1 1/4 cups granulated sugar
1 Butter Flavor Crisco Stick or 1 cup Butter Flavor Crisco all-vegetable shortening
2 eggs
1/4 cup light corn syrup or regular pancake syrup

1 tablespoon vanilla
3 cup all-purpose flour (plus 4 tablespoons divided)
3/4 teaspoon baking powder
1/2 teaspoon baking soda
1/2 teaspoon salt

1. Combine sugar and shortening in large bowl. Beat at medium speed of electric mixer until well blended. Add eggs, syrup and vanilla. Beat until well blended and fluffy.

2. Combine 3 cups flour, baking powder, baking soda and salt. Add gradually to creamed mixture at low speed. Mix until well blended.

3. Divide dough into 4 quarters. Wrap each quarter of dough with plastic wrap. Refrigerate at least 1 hour. Keep refrigerated until ready to use.

4. Heat oven to 375 degrees. Place sheets of foil on countertop for cooling cookies.

5. Sprinkle 1/2 cup flour on large sheet of waxed paper. Place one quarter of dough on floured paper. Flatten slightly with hands. Turn dough over and cover with another large sheet of waxed paper. Roll dough to 1/4-inch thickness. Remove top sheet of waxed paper. Cut dough to fit into shell-shaped cookie pan or madeleine pan. Roll out remaining dough.

6. Bake one baking sheet at a time at 375 degrees for 7 to 9 minutes. Do not overbake. Cool 2 minutes on baking sheet.

7. Remove cookies to foil to cool completely.

7. Whip cream until stiff peaks form. Fill cookie shells with whipped cream.

8. Whip cream with fruit. Serve immediately.

WEDDINGS

Feast fare becoming more exotic

The Associated Press

Good news for those invited to a wedding. The food is almost sure to be tastier than the traditional rubber chicken, and it may be more exotic as well.

"As a general trend, there is more flair in cuisine and presentation," says Maria McBride-Mellinger, author of "The Perfect Wedding" (HarperCollins, $10 hardcover).

Adventurous wedding-givers may even have replaced the usual sit-down meal — where there is always a chance of being stuck next to the most boring relative — with open seating that offers an opportunity to mingle and a buffet of delicious and unusual foods.

"We are hearing about sushi in Kansas, and Spanish tapas and Chinese dim sum — formerly encountered only in big cities — are being served at small town weddings as appetizers," says Millie Bratten, editor of Bride's. "In place of plain coffee, there may be an Italian espresso bar."

The cosmopolitan nature of food at some weddings reflects the growing sophistication of some American palates and the fact that people eat out more often.

"At weddings in New York, we see the same trends as in restaurants," says Edward Magel, executive chef at Susan Holland & Co. in New York.

"There is one difference: the exotic elements are toned down because they want everybody to be happy with the food and the unusual dishes are usually presented as hors d'oeuvres."

The politically correct menu, low in red meat and other desirable food groups such as fat and sugar, is rarely presented at a wedding.

"You might think people would stick to healthy foods, but when they come to wedding receptions, they eat large quantities of food, and lots of meat," says Claire Heymann, proprietor of the Hotel St. Germain in Dallas.

Fillet mignon, breast of capon stuffed with veal tenderloin and venison braised with pistachios are among popular main courses (at $65 a person for a five-course meal) at the Hotel St. Germain.

Magel says that rack of lamb is Susan Holland's biggest seller for formal wedding meals. Favorites for informal affairs are slow-cooked meats and fowl, such as braised chicken, chardonnay, with soft polenta with walnuts, or couscous with roasted vegetables.

Caterers report that buffets that mix several ethnic traditions are growing in popularity. The Hotel St. Germain, for example, might offer the Scandinavian specialty, gravlax (cured salmon in dill sauce) on a buffet table with bruschetta with tomatoes and mozzarella cheese, tiny stuffed tomatoes, and ravioli.

Examples of ethnic blending: in one dish include Maryland lump crab prepared with Thai green curry and seared salmon; filet served in a French bouillabaisse broth (both specialties of Susan Holland).

Other ways in which the mold

An appetizer of fresh figs, served on a bed of fig leaves, might grace a stylish modern wedding feast.

is being broken include the substitution of food for a flower arrangement in the center of the table. Guests at a wedding catered by Susan Holland might find bountiful selection of olives, cheeses, bread, and salads awaiting on the table.

"This course is an icebreaker because it forces interaction among guests who may not know one another," Magel says.

In these indulgent times, dessert is an important matter.

"People who eat out a lot expect a serious dessert at a wedding," says Magel. "You can get delicious cakes that also look great, so we often serve cake with heavy accompaniments such as a fruit compote or berries and cream."

In Dallas, a dessert course in addition to the cake is normal. But especially at buffets, the wedding cake may be the star attraction. Make that wedding cakes. Typically, there are two: a white cake and a chocolate cake.

While lavish wedding menus may seem symptomatic of a new era of extravagance, the opulent meal is hardly a novelty, says William Wray Weaver, a food historian in Devon, Pa.

"By 1750, in cities such as Philadelphia, Boston and New York, the wealthiest people already were relying on caterers to do their wedding parties," Weaver says. "They also could rent suits of French furniture and silver candelabra to dress up their rooms."

Although individual dishes have changed — people no longer prepare and consume elaborate molded ice creams as they did in Victorian era, Weaver points out — selecting the most luxurious and stylish foods is a tradition.

Those who still prefer the old-fashioned menu for a wedding need not become overly concerned that tradition will entirely disappear.

"Once a bride puts on that wedding dress, a hormonal change occurs," says Susan Holland. "Almost every bride comes to us saying, 'I want a regular party, not a wedding.' But as the wedding date comes closer, things change. If they didn't want a wedding cake before, now they do. There is more concern for the comfort of other generations attending the event, and those giving the wedding tend to become more conventional."

Read all about it: Bridal books can help you plan

The Associated Press

During the months of preparation, wedding books will inevitably turn up to help the couple navigate the ocean of details.

Only a few bridal couples will be able to stage their weddings at New York City's famed Plaza Hotel, but advice for a Plaza-style celebration abounds in "A Plaza Wedding" (Villard Books, $65 hardcover), by Lawrence D. Harvey, the hotel's executive director of catering. While the book includes a traditional wedding planner, the fun is the editorial content, with pictures of real weddings (including that of the Plaza's most recent restorer, Donald Trump), lavishly decorated settings, fantastic wedding cakes, and eclectic menus recommended by the author.

"The Bridal Registry Book" (Contemporary Books, $12.95 paperback), by Leah Ingram, tells the prospective bride couple how to organize their registries, suggests some they probably haven't thought of (home improvement, sporting goods, for example), and includes detailed store listings.

"The Wedding Planner" (Chronicle books, $24.95 hardcover), by Genevieve Morgan and with photographs by John Dolan, is one version of this wedding essential with cool modern layout and design. The evocative black-and-white photographs have a documentary flavor.

"Jumping the Broom" (Owl-Henry Holt, $16.95 paperback), Harriette Cole's ground-breaking guide for black brides, is out in a new paperback version with an expanded resource guide and a companion "Jumping the Broom Wedding Workbook" (Owl-Henry Holt, $16.95 paperback with spiral binding). Both offer advice and suggestions for the wedding with African cultural influences; the workbook also is an organizer with appropriate blanks for writing in details of your wedding, plus a pocket for receipts, etc.

1st comes love, then comes the hard part: Booking a honeymoon

Newspaper
The perfect honeymoon takes as many shapes as the perfect honey.

Almost every lodging in the world offers some sort of romantic package or can invent one at a moment's notice with a quick call to the florist. In general, amenities range from "Just Married" T-shirts and a bottle of bubbly to moonlight sails (common in Florida and the Caribbean) and heart-shaped beds or tubs (a trademark of the Poconos and Niagara Falls).

Tropical retreats have raised honeymoon planning to a fine art, often making the wedding itself part of all-inclusive deals. Sandals resorts in the Caribbean and Bahamas call them "WeddingMoons". Many Caribbean islands have streamlined marriage laws for foreigners and lay on a variety of extra perks: Aruba has specially decorated taxis available to honeymooners throughout their stay.

For the best prices, try to schedule your wedding trip off-season — winter in Europe, summer in Hawaii, Mexico or the Caribbean. Some resorts also offer promotional discounts if you provide a specific credit card or another. Take time to comparison-shop carefully — by viewing videos when possible and asking lots of questions, parents can determine what each all-inclusive resort means by "all." Beware of expensive, hidden extras such as taxes and service charges, airport transfers and so on.

Here are some ideas (rates may vary by season and accommodations). Travel agents can help with arrangements and suggest countless more.

Disney
America's No. 1 honeymoon destination is also its favorite family vacation spot, Disney World. If the knot at the Orlando theme park they call home, they'll have to tie in a long line of prospective brides and grooms. More than 1,700 couples a year marry there (last May set a monthly record with 225). Prices start at $2,500 for an intimate gathering for two, an average wedding for 100 people is about $19,000.

Just want a honeymoon? Four-night cruises range from $299 per couple to the $3,439 Grand Honeymoon, which includes lodging at a deluxe resort hotel, unlimited admission to theme park attractions and recreational activities, three meals daily at your choice of Disney dining locations, private golf and tennis lessons, use of a video camera in the theme parks, use of bikes and boats at selected hotels and a photo session. Call (407) W-DISNEY.

Mexico
When it opened 40 years ago, Mexico's Las Brisas was the most romantic resort in one of the most exotic honeymoon destinations, Acapulco. Individual "casitas," most of which come with a pink-and-white jeep and a private pool that's sprinkled with fresh flowers each morning, are terraced into a hillside offering spectacular bay and ocean views. Romance packages, including a private pool, casita, jeep with gas and unlimited mileage, daily breakfast, a special dinner for two, daytime tennis, bottle of champagne, access to Capulco's beach, "temporary membership at a private beach club, gratuities and other gifts run about $1,170 per couple for three nights to $2,760 for seven nights. Call Westin Hotels & Resorts at (800) 228-3000.

Up the coast in Baja, Rosewood Hotels & Resorts feature new all-suite Las Ventanas al Paraiso scheduled to open April 15 in Los Cabos. Introductory rates will run through August. A "Pure Romance" package at this five-star resort is $3,500 per couple for seven nights in an ocean-view presidential suite. It includes champagne on arrival, full breakfast and lunch daily, dinner five nights, one-hour massage for each person and other amenities. Call (888) 225-0483.

French Polynesia
You can run away to French Polynesia for seven nights for less than $1,000 per couple — including round-trip airfare. Packages with New Frontiers include two nights in Tahiti, five nights in Moorea, central breakfast daily and the traditional Polynesian greeting with flowers and beads on arrival. The top-priced overwater bungalow the night add another $2,000. Call (800) 366-6387.

Many large resorts, such as Hawaii's Grand Hyatt in Wailea, Maui, above, offer wedding facilities that make it easy for couples to combine the ceremony and the honeymoon.

Caribbean
A new bargain in the pricey Caribbean is Cooper Island Beach Club on a private island in the British Virgin Islands. It consists of a waterfront cottage and a restaurant/bar popular with the yachting crowd. The island has no roads, one cellular phone and a rental car supply that comes from the sky. There are a dive center, water sports and boat charters but little else to do but enjoy the beach and watch the sun set over nearby Tortola (the club's boat makes the five-mile run there daily for shopping). Daily rates are $15 to $145 per couple, depending on the season; a seven-night honeymoon package with all meals is $899 in winter, $999 (with two meals daily) in summer. Call (800) 542-4624.

Bermuda
The Southampton Princess offers a three-night "Royal Dolphin Romance" package that includes a chance to swim with dolphins in the resort's lagoon, a balconied room, horse-drawn carriage ride with champagne, full breakfast daily, special-occasion cake, social activities and other perks starting at $798 per couple. Through March, guests get 10 percent off their room each day (the temperature doesn't reach 68 degrees). Call (800) 223-1818.

Florida
In trendy Miami Beach, the Eden Roc Resort has "Spa Honeymoon" packages, including numerous personal treatments — has a "Romance: Do Not Disturb" package starting at $450 daily. Awaiting couples will be a bed scattered with rose petals, a longstem rose on the pillow, champagne and one pair of monogrammed silk pajamas; also included is breakfast in bed. Call (800) 65-CLUB.

California
Tony Bennett is hardly the only romantic who left his heart in San Francisco. With its vintage cable cars and cosmopolitan restaurants, the city is brimming with urbane sophistication. The luxury downtown Clift Hotel — whose famed Redwood Room is repeatedly voted the city's most romantic spot for cocktails — has a "Romance: Do Not Disturb" package starting at $450 daily. Awaiting couples will be a bed scattered with rose petals, a longstem rose on the pillow, champagne and one pair of monogrammed silk pajamas; also included is breakfast in bed. Call (800) 65-CLUB.

Los Angeles' Hotel Inter-Continental offers an unusual perspective. At $1,200 a couple, the one-night "Cloud Nine Romance" package includes a flight-seeing tour in a private plane, with champagne, chocolate-covered strawberries and limousine transfers; lodging in the five-room presidential suite with whirlpool and grand piano; a three-course dinner; breakfast in bed and more. Call (213) 617-3300.

Hawaii
In Hawaii, a four-night "Nani Aloha" package in either the honeymoon suite ($2,021) or a standard ocean-view room ($860) at the Aston Wailea Resort on Maui includes a bottle of bubbly, a Hawaiian love poem, breakfast in bed one day, tickets to the resort's luau and other entertainment. Call (800) 922-7866.

Europe
Europe offers countless stately homes and ancient castles that ooze romantic charm (and occasional drops of rain). Scotland seems to be taking a major initiative in marketing romance, with many tour operators offering wedding packages. The Gaelic Weddings division of Virginia-based Aikar Travel has a six-night Iona Wedding/Honeymoon Package for $6,240 per couple (kilt rental is an additional $148, piper in full regalia $250). The package includes the wedding in a country house (restaurant and clergy), bride's bouquet, champagne, traditional cake, accommodations in country houses or manors, dinner car and full breakfast and rental daily. Call (804) 346-8714.

Utah
In the Utah Rockies, you can snuggle by the fire at Sundance, the arts and recreational community founded 25 years ago by Robert Redford (who makes rare appearances). No more than 1,000 skiers are allowed on the mountain at any one time — assuring everyone access to uncrowded slopes that weave through 6,800 acres of powder. Winter rates run $325 to $425 daily in cottage suites that include stone fireplaces ($195 to $275 after April 1). Call (800) 892-1500.

All-Inclusives
The following sampling of all-inclusive resorts offers packages that can be tailored to embrace everything from the marriage license to the honeymoon; some resorts offer a complimentary, basic wedding ceremony. Rates shown are per couple for a honeymoon stay, including lodging; meals, entertainment, activities; wedding ceremonies add anywhere from a few hundred to thousands of dollars more, depending on the frills and the number of guests:

Sandals (nine resorts in Jamaica, Antigua, St. Lucia and the Bahamas), $1,800 to $2,800 for three nights, $2,200 to $5,000 for seven nights, (800) SANDALS; Couples (Jamaica), $2,850 to $4,350 for seven nights, (800) COUPLES; Bixas Creek (Virgin Gorda), $3,750 to $4,975 for a seven-night "Sailaway" (five nights at the resort and two nights on a private yacht), (800) 223-1108; Marriott's Frenchman's Reef (St. Thomas), three-night honeymoon stays from $1,1216, (800) 524-2000 (honeymoons) or (800) FOR-LOVE (weddings); Sunsets Resorts (St. Lucia), complimentary wedding arrangements (no cake or photos), daily rates $360 to $510, (800) 544-2883; Radisson's Gibney (Jamaica), complimentary wedding (with photos, cake, flowers) when couples book a Honeymoon Villa Suite for at least seven nights ($5,146 per couple); three-night honeymoons start at $1,272 in a standard room, (800) 333-3333.

Resources for booking a honeymoon

Nowadays, couples register for everything

The Associated Press
China, silver and crystal aside, what do bridal couples really want?

The answers can be read in the rise of bridal registries that emphasize the practical over the pretentious. Nothing, it seems, is too plebeian to qualify as a bridal gift.

"Friends of ours threw a lawn and shower a few years ago," says Alan Fields, a Boulder, Colo.-based writer whose subject is budget weddings.

Popular selections of an equally humble but more customary nature from Target Stores' Club Wedd registry include crockpots, bath towels, table linens and muffin tins.

Discount stores such as Target are among recent entrants into the bridal registry business which started in the 1930s and 1940s when the fine china, silver and crystal departments were the selections. Since then, the types of products available have grown to include housewares and — in the 1980s — luxury items such as luggage, sporting goods, gourmet cooking utensils and antiques.

The current rise of down-to-earth selections is tied to the homespun values of the present and to the fact that couples are marrying later and often have already acquired the basics.

In what Fields refers to as a "more polite and subtle way to ask for cash," a number of recently-established registries serve as repositories for gifts of money. They include honeymoon registries run by travel agencies and bank savings deposits that encourage friends and family to add to a couple's savings.

The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) recently announced a bridal registry mortgage account for newlyweds that is available through more than 30 banking and mortgage companies nationwide. Family and friends can deposit cash directly into an interest-bearing account earmarked for a down payment on a home. If the couple's needs change, the money can be used for something else or withdrawn without penalty.

Computers are playing a bigger role in registry selections, with instant updates of the couple's list and 800 numbers to simplify purchasing.

J.C. Penney has put its gift registry onto the web at www.jcpenney.com. Most couples come to the store in the traditional fashion to make their selections. But friends and family can see the list by contacting the Penney web address on their home computer. Purchases are made by calling the toll-free number — 1 (800) 527-4438 — or, of course, by visiting a store.

Computers — the hand-held kind that scan bar-codes — are being used to streamline registry registries. Target Stores, a discount chain that is part of the Dayton-Hudson department store group, and Federated Department Stores both send bridal couples around the store with the scanner.

Here's how it works at Target: the couple check in at the guest services desk, are handed a scanning gun, and go through the store themselves, scanning in bar codes from items that they would like. They return the scanner to the desk and get a printout of their selections.

Gift-givers can obtain an updated printout of the choices at any Target store by stopping at the Club Wedd kiosk. To keep the list up to date, the customer must bring the item at the guest relations desk. As a discount store, Target does not offer wrapping or delivery service, so the customer must wrap and send the gift.

At The Bon Marche, Burdines, Goldsmith's, Lazarus, Macy's, Rich's and Stern's department stores, all part of Federated Department Stores Inc., couples also are given a hand-held computer with which they scan the bar code of their preferred items as they walk through the store. Anything in stock can be included, not just traditional china, crystal and silver. The computer cuts across store lines so a relative in New York can select a gift at Macy's gift for a niece who registered her preferences in Burdines in Miami.

Computers may have made the selection process more high tech, but they haven't answered an age-old question of etiquette: how to gracefully let invited guests know where the bride and groom are registered.

"It is a perennial concern on our electronic home pages," says Alan Fields. "The old-fashioned way is the answer for most couples; they ask relatives and close friends to spread the word."

It is tacky, agree all the bridal authorities, to include the information with the wedding invitation.

For a free brochure on the HUD bridal registry, call 1 (800) 225-5342. Reach the Alan Fields electronic bulletin boards at adfield@aol.com and www.bridal.gov.com.

YOU CAN USE

Weddings carry steep price tags

The average price of a formal wedding is $17,634, according to research estimates by Modern Bride magazine. The biggest expense is the reception, at an average $6,503, followed by the engagement ring ($2,909) and photography ($1,126). The smallest expense on a list of 18 wedding-related items was the $56 average spent on the bride's shoes.

Picking a dress: The decision of a lifetime

By Rebecca Tatroka
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS - It seems there is a dizzying array of wedding gown styles a bride can choose from these days.

The dress: it's the centerpiece from which all the rest of the decorations are created.

"We create the wedding around the dress, including the invitation style ... the flowers, even the location," said Betty McEwen, manager of Hart's Tuxedo and Gowns in Twin Falls.

Carlotta Bostrom of Christine's Clothier agreed, adding that "until the bride picks out her dress, it's hard to decide on anything else."

Flinging through magazines and catalogs will help the bride-to-be choose her dream dress, but there are trends.

"In this area, (brides) still go with the traditional big, formal wedding," explained McEwen. "That means that about 90 percent of the dresses have a traditional train."

McEwen said that if this is a first marriage for one or both parties, the bride will almost always choose a dress with some sort of train, even for an outdoor wedding or reception.

"Most brides still have trains for a garden wedding," said Bostrom. "It just drags on the ground."

The different types of trains for wedding dresses range from a smaller, more manageable train to a very long train, called a cathedral train.

"The Catholic church has a big red carpet up the center, and the brides like having large cathedral trains for that," said McEwen.

Vicki Harney, owner of the Wedding and Rental Shop in Twin Falls said that material, color and the embellishments are where she sees the trends.

"Satin for the material is very popular, and beaded gowns are doing great," she said. "Ivory (as a color) is picking up, especially for the second marriages. But some girls just look prettier in ivory; there's not much color in white."

Harney added that blush, pink is showing up on wedding gowns, either as part of the accent lace or as the base color of the entire dress.

Bostrom said she sees wedding dresses going more toward straight, tailored and fitted styles, with a little sequin or beadwork.

Silks and satins are the big wedding dress materials, but it's how those materials are shaped which makes the difference in the dress.

Most of today's styles have a slim silhouette, a body-hugging style that can either burst into fullness just below the waist or continue in a column cut.

"A few years back there were the puffy sleeves, but now it's a more slender sleeve," explained McEwen. "The empire waist is popular, and the halter top, also."

Harney said although the fitted gowns might be popular, for those in a larger size the styles are a little less body-hugging.

Bostrom said that it's best for potential brides to try at least three different styles on "to get a feel for how it looks on them. Look at the beadwork, the neckline ... just see what you look like."

And there are many dresses available for the second-time-around bride.

"There are suit styles in pastels," said Harney. "The tea-length styles are nice for this group, although it is more informal."

But the "perfect" wedding dress is going to be more a reflection of who the bride is and what she enjoys every day - and "perfect" is different for everyone.

"We have so many different groups in this area," said McEwen, noting that there are preppies, college students and the Hispanic population. "And the ranchers want a western wedding."

Some wedding customs around the world

- American Indian: The groom wraps a woolen blanket around the bride to symbolize love and protection.
- Sweden: Brides carry fragrant herb bouquets to frighten away trolls, and grooms have thyme sewn into their wedding suits.
- Bermuda: Newlyweds plant a tree in their garden. As it grows and strengthens, it symbolizes their love.
- Lithuania: Parents of the couple serve them symbols of married life: wine for joy, salt for tears and bread for work.

How to choose a sparkling-quality diamond ring

By Dixie Thomas Reale
Times-News Correspondent

TWIN FALLS — They sit wrapped in romance — glittering and brilliant in the jewelry store display case: the diamond engagement rings. You're in love; you want to get married. How do you choose a good diamond?

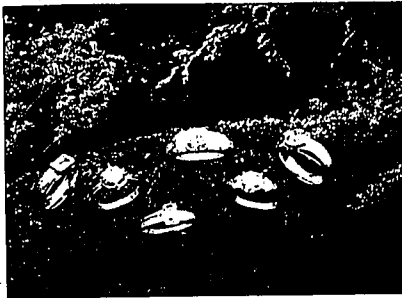

According to Greiner Electronic Publishing Inc., "Diamond is much harder than any other substance known, which makes it ideal for gem purposes. Special optical properties guarantee its preeminence among gems. Its high refractive index, or light bending ability, enables it to throw back almost all the light that enters a well-cut gem."

When choosing a diamond, local jewelers agree that the four Cs — color, cut, clarity, and carat-weight — are the guidelines to determine quality. Which of the four is more important than the others is a matter of differing opinion.

John Boyer of Boyer Jewelry said, "Not all diamonds are the same color. A perfect diamond is absolutely colorless, there is just an absence of color. Most diamonds look colorless, but there are subtle shade differences. The closer a diamond is to having no color, the more valuable it becomes. A diamond's color can vary from being colorless, just slightly from being colorless, a pale yellow or a brownish tint; or it can have a dark and intense color."

Carol Aguirre of Herrett's Jewelry said, "Generally, the white diamond, which is actually colorless, is of greater value, except when you get into the fancy colored diamonds. Then the colored stone is more valuable."

Scott Noble of Jensen Jewelers said, "If one had to single out which of the four Cs is most important in determining a diamond's value and brilliance, I would have to say it would be the cut. Everything else about a diamond matters, but if you have a bad cut, it is not a good looking stone."

Diamond rings may look very similar, but some are better quality than others. Color, cut, clarity and carat-weight are important considerations.

Boyer said, "Cut refers to the angles the stone is cut, on the pavilion (bottom), on the crown (top) and the girdle (where the crown meets the pavilion). The cut makes a difference in the light that is reflected back at you."

Aguirre said, "If a cut is not right, the diamond will leak light; it will not reflect back the maximum amount of light. It will not be as brilliant and sparkly. The term 'cut' can also refer to the diamond's shape: round, marquise, oval, pear, square and emerald cut."

Noble described a new "Hearts on Fire" diamond cut available at Jensen Jewelers. The diamond cut is produced by Di-Star, a leading diamond importer based in Boston.

The table facet angles are mathematically calculated to absolute symmetry, Noble explained. The depth is perfect, and it allows the maximum brilliance reflected out of a diamond.

The term clarity refers to how clear a diamond is.

Boyer said, "Most diamonds have tiny inclusions, which if extreme, are visible to the naked eye. Specks of carbon, the crystal structure or other internal birthmarks may show up as white frosty specks. If you can see these inclusions with the naked eye, the diamond is of poor quality. The fewer and smaller the inclusions are, the greater the diamond's value. A diamond that is completely free of both inclusions and surface flaws is very rare and very valuable. To determine a diamond's value, relative to clarity, you must view it under a 10-power magnification."

As with all precious stones, the weight and size of a diamond is expressed in carats. One carat is divided into 100 points, so that a diamond of 25 points is described as a quarter of a carat.

Aguirre offers the following general guide for a size reference: "A one-carat diamond measures about 6.5 millimeters."

Boyer said, "The more carats a diamond weighs, the greater the value. But remember, two diamonds of equal carat weight (or size) can have very unequal prices, depending on the stone's other characteristics — the quality of its cut, the color and how many inclusions it contains."

Choosing a diamond that offers the best value for the amount of money spent requires balancing the four Cs.

Boyer said, "It's difficult to talk about a universal grading system for diamonds because there are many chain stores with in-house grading systems around. These differ from one store to another. For the average layman these different and arbitrary grades make no sense. In the gem trade the Gemological Institute of America is a recognized gemstone classification institute, as is the American Gemological Society."

"If you aren't sure of the appropriate price you should spend, both Noble and Boyer suggest the groom spend two month's salary on the ring, Aguirre says three months salary is not too much.

According to Noble, DeBoers, world diamond expert, recommends two months salary set aside for the diamond. An inherited diamond is worth more today than when your grandfather received it from your grandfather.

Aguirre said, "The buyer should know the jeweler. There aren't many diamond cutters around anymore. DeBoers, the largest diamond company in the world, whose mines are located in South Africa, sends packages of diamond rough to cutters; the diamond cutters cut the diamonds, then send to the wholesalers and wholesalers send the finished diamonds to the jewelers, who set them in rings for retail sale. There are cutters in Los Angeles and New York, but the largest group of cutters in the world is in Antwerp, Belgium."

The Thompsons' home and ranch sit at the mouth of the levee along Feather River which broke Jan. 2, causing 30 feet of water to rip their ranch apart. The Thompsons were able to rescue family photos, several rifles, a few antique pocket watches and nearly a thousand dollars in cash that was intended as a bank deposit before the Jan. 2 flooding.

When will murky waters leave?

Couple waits for floodwaters to recede to begin cleanup

The Associated Press

ARBOOGA, Calif. — Jan Thompson nervously cupped a mug of tea in her hands as she paced from her front porch to the kitchen to check a batch of chocolate chip cookies.

With waters rising furiously on the nearby Feather River, she'd been on edge for several days. But something about the stillness in her rural neighborhood made her uneasy the night of Jan. 2.

It was so quiet that she could hear the voices of prisoners who'd been brought in to sandbag the nearby levee, a mound of grassy earth that stood between the frothing river and the long, flat stretches of houses and farmland in this small town 100 miles north-east of San Francisco.

On a hunch, Jan called Denise Haddix, a neighbor she hardly knew whose house stood 15 feet from the levee.

Denise's scream pierced the night.

"Get out now! It's breaking behind us! ... It was a sound like lightning hitting the earth," she shouted.

Jan threw down the phone and ran for her car as the levee crumbled.

"It was a sound like lightning hitting the earth," says Jan. Her home was literally ripped apart by a 30-foot wave of water.

Three of the eight people who perished in January's massive California floods died in Yuba County that night:

an elderly man who drowned in his home and two women who failed to out-drive the fast-running flood waters. After the water receded several days later, the women's bodies were found near their cars.

Jan's husband, Jim, was at work, and there was no time to let the couple's 80 head of cattle or four horses out of their pens. Nor was there time to find the dogs, including Rodeo, the family's beloved Australian shepherd, or Zek, their grandson's German shepherd.

"Be calm," Jan told herself. "Think clearly." The one goal she had was to drive safely into Marysville, where her husband anxiously awaited her at the E-Z Stop convenience store they own.

"It was probably just a few minutes, but it seemed like forever," says Jim, 57. "But she made it our alive. That's the main thing."

Another bright spot came when a TV crew in a helicopter plucked Rodeo from the rooftop of the couple's home. But, otherwise, it's been a long 1997 so far for the Thompsons, who've been living with their son, Brett, in nearby Marysville for the last month.

Trips by boat to the still-swamped house have revealed a gaping hole where water forced its way through their bedroom window, leaving a trail of insulation, drywall, mud and tree branches in its wake.

"Even our barn floated away," says Jim, who's searched emergency shelters for the couple's other animals.

Jan, a 55-year-old accountant, said the family will not be able to apply for assistance from the Federal Emergency Management Agency until the water goes down, allowing FEMA investigators to fully examine the damage.

Jim and Brett have been able to rescue family photos and a grandson's jacket from military school. They also used a shot to dig up several shotguns and rifles, a few antique pocket-watches and coins and nearly $1,000 in cash intended as a bank deposit.

But looters — Jan says they are "as bad as people who rob houses" — returned a constant threat. So far, thieves have stolen the contents of the couple's receptacles through the neighborhood, especially for the Haddix family, whose house was torn down by the state to make way for the levee repair.

"A little blood, a lot of sweat and some tears went into this house. I thought I'd die in this house."

Historian's lifelong career: Exposing Old West myths

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — For most of his 82 years, Brigham D. Madsen has been historical truth, chipping away layers of legend to unearth the real, often raw, compelling stories of the Old West's Indians, soldiers, explorers and settlers.

But that truth, Madsen will tell you, has proved a harsh muse. Fourteen books, numerous articles and scholarly awards are the milestones of an intellectual and spiritual journey through the region's past that has brought him both pleasure and pain.

Among the many Madsen unearthed one of the worst butcheries of Indians in the Old West, exposed as false a long-accepted account of an emigrant massacre and concluded the Mormon faith he held dear was founded on fictional, if inspirational, scripture.

"That's the historian's burden," Madsen said. "You ask yourself, 'What are going to be the results of this?' ... But you have to give the truth as you see it."

"If the evidence says such and such happened, then I'm going to tell it the way it is," he said. "History can be dangerous."

So, Madsen has proved well-suited for the job. Even in his ninth decade, he remains a rough-hewn bear of a man, as comfortable with his past as a construction worker as he is as a renowned University of Utah emeritus professor of history.

a gangly youth plowed through the local paper's accounts of the Great Depression to share an old columnist's love of western lore. By 1934, Madsen had earned a bachelor's degree and was teaching at Cheering, a mission in the University of California (Berkeley) — and a wife, Betty — over the next two years.

His teaching history at Brigham Young University in 1937, upon which he was named a lifetime academic freedom at the Mormon Church, ended shortly. For the next seven years he ran a family home-building business, that resumed teaching at Utah State University.

Madsen served as acting director for the Peace Camp in Washington in 1946-45 before finally returning — this time for good — to academia in Utah, where he was hired as an assistant professor and teacher in 1947.

His inaugural title, "The Barrenock of Idaho," came in 1958, telling the story of what had been an obscure tribe. It was the first of his many books, including the leading author on Indian-White relations and conflicts in the region.

In 1983, a year after his retirement from teaching, Madsen finished his magnum opus, "The Shoshoni Frontier and the Bear River Massacre," and "BLEH: Roberts Studies of the Book of Mormon."

His monograph on the Shoshoni exposed the 1863 "Battle of Bear River" for what it was: a massacre of 250-400 Mormon soldiers by an army under the command of a glory-hungry Col. Patrick Connor.

For Diane Yupe, coordinator of the heritage tribal office at Fort Hall, Idaho, the book was the catalyst for long-delayed justice.

"His literature ... led the tribe to begin questioning the federal agencies, to say, 'Something happened here, and we've been saying this for years and years,'" she said.

The volume won Westerners International's best book award and the prize of National Park Service historian Edwin C. Beards.

"He's a scholar, a public historian and a gentleman who is surprisingly active, modest and unassuming," said Beards, who liberally quoted Madsen's book in creating a national historical landmark at the church, but in his old age he made a study of the archaeology of middle America and South America and came to the conclusion the Book of Mormon was in his belief in the historicity of the church's founder Joseph Smith — a work of fiction," Madsen said.

"Brieg's without question the dean of Utah historians, and the most revered of our colleagues in the field," Sessions said.

"He is indeed," agreed Harold Schram, recently retired after five decades as a reporter, columnist and popular historian for The Salt Lake Tribune.

"He's a gentle man, a marvel, and an excellent teacher — and you can't say that about every academic historian."

It was Madsen's decision to edit the Roberts book that brought what he terms "thunder and lightning" in a state where 70 percent of the population belongs to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Culled from secret documents penned by Roberts prior to his death in 1933, the book showed the revered Mormon scholar an high church official had abandoned his lifelong role as the Book of Mormon as a divinely inspired, historical account of early American civilizations visited by Jesus Christ.

To Tennessee and North Carolina, still considers himself a cultural Mormon and he remains on church membership rolls. But he no longer is a believer.

"I've always in my 25 years I haven't been to church in 25 years. They know I'm an agnostic, and I've told them that straight out — but they've never done anything about it," Madsen said.

Madsen is convinced that "inevitable" that the 9 million-member church eventually will drop its insistence that its scripture is historically accurate, and use it allegorically.

"There are some wonderful lessons in the Book of Mormon," he said. "I think they ought to emphasize those things, and let the history go."

Madsen himself, though in his twilight years, has no intention of letting go of history. Since 1985, he has published several more books, including "Glory Hunter: A Biography of Patrick Edward Connor," and a tribute to the early exploration in the region, "Exploring the Great Salt Lake: The Stansbury Expedition of 1849-50."

Finally, Madsen has turned to writing his own history, tentatively titled "Wood Chips and Chalk Dust." The exercise gave him much time to ruminate on the role of historian as truth-teller.

"What is truth? What really happened? What's the historicity of historians are not liked sometimes, because we destroy myths," Madsen, a one-time church missionary

THE ACES ON BRIDGE Bobby Wolff

Dear Mr. Wolff: We are playing limit raises, is this hand too strong for a jump to three spades after partner opens one spade? I held 4-A-9-7-2, 4-A-8-5, 4-7-2, 4-K-6-5.

ANSWER: Limit raises promise four-card support and 9-11 HCP. Your hand fits the upper limit and theoretically qualifies. However, with prime values (aces and kings), I would prefer to make a stronger invitation to game. If that is not possible in your methods, a blast to game might prove best.

Dear Mr. Wolff: I open one diamond with 14 HCP, the A-5 hearts and 3-2-4-3 distribution. Partner responds one heart and I rebid one no-trump. If partner bids two hearts, am I worth a raise to three hearts?

ANSWER: Yes, most would raise. Partner's heart rebid promises a good six-card suit, and your heart fit is worth a try for game.

Dear Mr. Wolff: At duplicate, I held A-K-Q-7, 4-6, 4-K-10-9-8-5, 4-K-4-Q. Vulnerable vs. non-vulnerable, I opened one diamond after one pass. LHIO overcalled one heart, partner passed and LHIO bid two hearts. I bid two spades and the doubling began. I found partner with 3-3-4-4 distribution and only the heart jack-void. Would you blame me for suspecting I was set up? I went down 800.

ANSWER: Probably not set up, but certainly fixed. "Fix" is a term used by duplicate players to explain why they carried a zero score because of unusual actions by the opponents. Either of them might well have opened the bidding.

Dear Mr. Wolff: LHIO opened one diamond, I doubled, and partner responded one spade. How much do I need for a jump to three spades?

ANSWER: Since partner made a limited forced response, you shouldn't count on his holding even as much as six points. Therefore, the jump to three spades is a strong invitation, promising at least 20 points.

Dear Mr. Wolff: LHIO opens one no-trump, and RHIO bids a Stayman two clubs. If I bid 3 for takeout or as a showing club?

ANSWER: In general, clubs of all artificial bids should promise the suit bid. In your case, the double promises clubs and strongly suggests a club lead if LHIO plays the hand.

ANSWER: In general, clubs of all artificial bids should promise the suit bid. In your case, the double promises clubs and strongly suggests a club lead if LHIO plays the hand.

A Friend

*How to know one.
How to be one.
And how to let go.*

By Dr. Joxee Brothers

Q After seeing "Mission Impossible" and "The English Patient," I've grown curious about Kristin Scott Thomas. She's quite a looker! What can you tell me about her background? When will we see her again?—A.C., Bloomfield, N.J.

A With her ability to portray women both elegant and erotic, Kristin Scott Thomas, 36, has been compared to Greta Garbo. Born in Britain, she lost both her father (a pilot who died when she was 5) and her stepfather in plane crashes. She studied at London's Central School of Speech and Drama and in Paris at the Ecole Nationale des Arts et Techniques de Théâtre. After roles onstage, Scott Thomas made her film debut in 1986, opposite Prince in "Under the Cherry Moon." Her work in "Four Weddings and a Funeral" earned enthusiastic reviews, and fans say she deserves Oscars this year for both "Angels and Insects" and "The English Patient." Scott Thomas will next be seen as an uptight aristocrat in "Reverengers Comedies," a foreign film set for release in August. She is also appearing in Paris with her physician-husband, François Olivennes, and their children, Hannah, 8, and Joseph, 5.

The French doctor and The English Patient star: François and Kristin

Q In an recent episode of TV's "Promised Land," a poem about an angel was read at a child's funeral. Who wrote it, and where can I find a copy?—Alison Snowden, Wheatley Heights, N.Y.

A Diane Robertson, 60, a retired dental hygienist with no previous writing experience, penned those verses in 1989 after the death of her 22-year-old daughter, Marti Nichols. The poem, titled "Rise Up Slowly, Angel," began as fragmented thoughts scribbled by Robertson.

"After a while, I had a whole poembook full of these scraps of paper that I pieced together like a patchwork quilt," she tells us. "It's been a big emotional reward to know that others have been comforted by my poem." It attracted attention after the second verse was read on "Promised Land" by Wendy Phillips, who plays Gerald McRaney's wife. It begins "Rise up slowly, angel, I cannot let you drift. So drift softly midst the faces, in sorrow now bent low." The entire poem can be found in a collection called "Food for the Soul," available from Bereavement Publishing (Colorado Springs).

Walter Scott's Personality Parade

Q I saw a public-service message on TV by Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf, who implied he had been cured of prostate cancer. Because I am currently undergoing treatment for prostate cancer myself, I'd like to know what type of treatment he received. And while you're at it, how's the general doing?—Harold Turk, Montclair, N.J.

A "I was lucky, because I had an exam that found Army disease early," says "Stormin' Norman" Schwarzkopf, 63, the hero of the 1990 Gulf War. "In May of 1994, I had radical surgery at Walter Reed Army Medical Center to completely remove my prostate gland. No additional treatment, such as radiation or chemotherapy, was required." Now active in programs to promote awareness of prostate cancer, the retired general urges men over 50 to get an annual checkup. In addition, he points out that white males with a family history of cancer and all African-American men are at greater risk than the general population and should have annual prostate exams beginning at age 40. "The good news," Schwarzkopf tells us, "is that if you find the disease early, you can completely recover, as I did." Each year, 334,500 men in America are diagnosed with prostate cancer. Among the most recent was the great golfer Arnold Palmer, 67.

Q I'm interested in knowing more about the baby born. The Artist Formerly Known as Prince (TAPKAP) and his wife. Was it a boy or a girl? I recently heard that the child died. What was the cause?—Rachel Newman, Washington, D.C.

A The 23-year-old rock star (born Prince Rogers Nelson in Minneapolis) and his wife, Mayte Garcia, 23, a former belly dancer from Puerto Rico, have been reluctant to discuss the medical condition of their new baby. TAPKAP declined to give details about the child when he appeared on TV with Oprah Winfrey and Bryant Gumbel. Gregory was born prematurely last October with a rare skull deformity called Pfeiffer Syndrome Type 2, with calcium deposits in the brain. The weak, ill, 6-pound baby died at Children's Health Care in Minneapolis on Oct. 23. Officials are investigating, because of discrepancies on the death certificate involving date of death and the mother's name. Incidentally, the child's headstone is expected to be in the womb earlier this year—can you believe it?—on the song "Sex in the Summer" on TAPKAP's latest CD, Emancipation.

TAPKAP will write, formerly known as Mayte Garcia.

Q Who was the little girl with the beautiful voice in the Hallmark Hall of Fame "Mrs. Santa Claus" special with Angela Lansbury?—Shirley Varni, Rough And Ready, Calif.

Lynee Bartilson with Angela Lansbury in Mrs. Santa Claus: Fox Christmas, Santa Gave Lynee a big role

A She's Lynee Bartilson, 13, and she was spotted during a rehearsal of "Mrs. Santa Claus" by the director, Terry Hughes. "He literally plucked her out of the chorus," an in-lake source tells us. Lynee has appeared in other made-for-TV movies and sitcoms, and she now has a recurring role on the CBS show "Malcolm." The talented teen is schooled at home in Sunland, Calif., by her mom.

Q My friend and I have an argument about whether Daphne Rubin-Vega, Adam Pascal, and Anthony Rapp and Kristen Lee Kelly of the musical "Rent" have appeared in other Broadway shows. Also, where can I find the libretto for "Rent" and for composer Jonathan Larson's earlier work, "tick, tick...BOOM!"—Bridget Ducey, Winchester, Mass.

A Of the actors you mentioned, only Rapp had Broadway experience, appearing in "Six Degrees of Separation" and "Precious Sons." The "Rent" libretto will become available in June, when Rob Weisbach Books publishes an illustrated companion to the Pulitzer Prize-winning show. Jonathan Larson—who died of an aortic aneurysm at 33 before "Rent" brought fame—performed the rock monologue "tick, tick...BOOM!" onstage in New York in 1990; but it was never published.

Q Is it true that two-time Oscar-winner Meryl Streep makes only one film a year, so she can be home with her family?—G.C., Chicago, Ill.

A Her publicist tells us that Streep does indeed make a picture a year that works around the school schedules of her children, Henry, Marie, Grace and Louisa, aged 5 to 17. She also prefers projects "in her own backyard"—such as Connecticut, where she has lived for 16 years and her husband, Don Gummer, 49. But one producer says Streep, at 47, is simply in less demand in youth-oriented Hollywood: "At one point Meryl moved to L.A. to be closer to the action, but she returned to Connecticut. It's not easy for women that age to get good parts." That may be why the actress made her first TV movie since 1978—"First Do No Harm," airing tonight on ABC. She has no current film projects.

The most important people we know...

Our Friends

A FRIEND IS SOMEONE who walks in when everyone else walks out," the columnist Walter Winchell once wrote. Friendships just grow, unintended and un instructed, resting on fragilities as uncertain as life. We make no vows to a best friend, as we do to a spouse when we marry, yet we have all sorts of unstated expectations of a friend: understanding, caring, concern. We expect a friendship to last.

Yet friendship can be the most neglected relationship in our lives. It ranks with marriage and kinship as one of the most important relationships, but nobody celebrates it formally as we celebrate marriage and the birth of children.

Friendship is secured by an emotional bond and can occur anywhere—in a blood relationship or (surprise!) even in a marriage. This was the case with me. I was preoccupied in college, working on two majors at Cornell University and very interested in boys. This left me no time to seek friends.

As it happened, I met and fell in love with Milton Brothers, who became my husband not long after, and we were together 39 years—until he died eight years ago, at the age of 62, of cancer. He was my best friend, and I still miss him desperately. In fact, I find it hard to speak of him for more than a few minutes without tears coming to my eyes. Since he died, my sister, with whom I fought fiercely when we were younger, has become my close friend. I am also great friends with my daughter, Lisa, and her three children, each of whom I like to take off with, one at a time, on what we call "great adventures."

My friends were mostly my husband's friends. When he played squash, the men's wives, who didn't play, spent or the inclination, I guess, to seek new friendships. But I can learn to make new friends. You can too. You also can fix a broken or damaged friendship if you want to badly enough. And I'll tell you how.

Over the course of my career in my books and counseling and in the studies I have followed, I have had the opportunity to observe and appreciate the significance of those friendships that are not based on familial ties or the marriage contract. Friendship plays such an important role in life because we can confide in a friend—we can be the person we want to be, and the friend's acceptance affirms that self and allows us to develop as individuals.

In our transient culture, according to Ira Glick, a professor of psychiatry at Stanford University medical school, we depend more and more on friends for the things we used to get from families—emotional support and often even financial help. With so many people living away from their families, and so many people single into their 30s, friends provide essential companionship. The New York environmental psychologist Karen Fitzack found that, whether they move to the city or small towns, people are likely to develop the same number of friends—an average of five (although in cities friendships grow more slowly). It is important that people who have friends are physically healthier and likely to live longer than loners. People with too few friends tend to have lower self-esteem, feeling that they don't deserve friends.

Who are our friends? We tend to gravitate toward persons of the same intelligence, financial status, education, outlook and, often, the same religious and racial background.

Lesty Corbin Ferguson (the author of Among Friends: Who We Like, Why We Like Them, and When We Do With Others) spelled out these terms as necessary for time together. I liked and enjoyed these women, but they were not deep friendships, partly because I hadn't chosen them. Rather, circumstance had brought us together.

I find that one of the hardest parts of growing older is the extent to which we are diminished by the loss of those close to us. The friends I had with my husband have, for the most part, died. Their absence remains a hole in my life, for the rest of my life. I have not had the time good friends: loyalty, trust, generosity, acceptance and honesty. The thing she found most important in a friend was the ability to listen. And that's the key to making friends as well—showing interest in someone else. You start by learning the person's name. Then you ask questions, establish common ground and build from there. Becoming friends involves a process of sharing, a gradual reduction of vigilance over what the partners reveal to each other about themselves. This means overcoming the natural fear of involvement, which is one part of forming friendships.

areas of privacy, psychologists say. This disclosure increases vulnerability, because when you confide things about yourself, you may be revealing facts and motivations that are not always pleasant. Becoming a close friend is an act of trust. Once this trust is established, friends can learn to be sensitive as to how far and how often the veil of privacy can be appropriately parted. If friends do not share enough, their lack of intimacy will likely leave them lonely.

Friends must balance the inclination to be open and honest with one another with the need to be protective of each other's feelings. Sharing doesn't mean unloading on a person. Total disclosure does not inspire intimacy. Rather, it's an imposition and can cause even the best friendships to dissolve.

To learn more about friendships, the psychologists Janice Williams and Corolla Selms of Wake Forest University in North Carolina chose at random 22 female and 20 male freshmen as subjects for a research project. Each was rated on a loneliness scale and asked to list three "best friends" and seven "close friends."

Both those who were lonely and those who weren't had at least 10 close friends whom they trusted. But the lonely ones said they missed a sense of intimacy with their best friends. And their best friends told the researchers that they felt the same lack. For this reason, perhaps, the "best friends" often did not even include the lonely subjects when asked to list their closest friends. The people who did not share with them did not even seem like friends.

We expect a close friendship to last. So, when a friendship is broken, how can it be fixed? Should you always try to fix problems in a friendship?

If you feel a close friend has hurt or betrayed you, it is worthwhile to sit down with that friend and talk about why you feel hurt. You can say, "If I didn't care about you, I would just shrug my shoulders and go my own way. But since I do care, I'd like to straighten this out." Then talk about what has happened—not in anger, but as calmly as you can. You might find that it is just a misunderstanding. Keith Davis, a professor of psychology at the University of South Carolina, explains that a sudden ending to a friendship can be necessary, although painful, if "one friend violates something fundamental to the friendship."

Sometimes you will find that the closeness is really broken and you can never again feel as close as you did before. In that case, recognize that you had an important friendship that you learned from, but now you need to grow and learn from someone new.

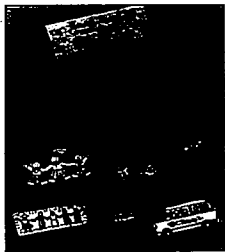

I can't say I healed a broken friendship with my sister—our sibling rivalry was nothing unusual. But in the year since Milton died, she and I have found each other, and it means so much, especially in his absence. The longer I live, the more important it becomes to me to feel, to be connected. And that is what we do through friends.

Milton was my friend. Near the end of his two-year battle with cancer, there were no words between us, and I can still cry at the thought. Then he sent me to see our new granddaughter. I held her, kissed her for both of us and went back and told him I had done this. He said, "I will always be with you, because part of me is in her, in each of our grandchildren." He died a day or so later.

We have four of those grandchildren—18, 12, 10 and 8 years old now—and what Milton said is true. I take each of them, one at a time, on adventures all over the world, and each time I find new friendships. And Milton, my best friend, is always with me. K

Buys of The Week

One way to make sure you are covered by insurance, should you have a fire, is to make photographs and videos of your possessions. Tuck them, along with written records and small mementos, in a Sentry Fire-Safe security chest. Prices start at $38 for the small chest. Find it at Wal-Mart.

These pins, rings, earrings and pendants of sterling silver by 14 karat gold-tone feature children—and help them too. A percentage of the sales (prices range from $13 to $25) benefits Save the Children, a nonprofit relief agency founded in Appalachia in 1932. The jewelry is available at department stores such as Lord & Taylor, Dayton's and Marshall Field's.

Security Kit is a high-tech identification system that includes labels and tags suited to a variety of possessions, from cellular phones to clothing. The tags are marked with bar codes that can be scanned by police stations, air terminals and the like to help reunite you with your property. The Tracker sells for $43.45 (including shipping and handling). To place an order, call 1-800-363-8722.

"Buys of the Week" is a service provided to acquaint our readers with new products, but PARADE is unable to guarantee them.

That may come as a surprise to a lot of women.

You see, our bodies continuously break down old bone and rebuild new bone. But after menopause, a deficiency of estrogen causes women to lose bone faster than it is replaced. This imbalance causes osteoporosis.

After menopause, calcium alone isn't enough to stop bone loss or make bones stronger if you have osteoporosis.

And during the first five years after menopause, some women may lose as much as 25% of their bone density. In many women, this bone loss is severe enough to make bones weak and fragile, causing them to break easily.

Calcium can play a role in maintaining bone health after menopause by slowing bone loss.

But contrary to what people think, calcium can't totally stop bone loss, and can't make your bones any stronger after menopause.

So manage your bone health. Work with your doctor, who will recommend evaluation and treatment programs that are best for you.

And ask your doctor about FOSAMAX—a breakthrough treatment for osteoporosis that's non-hormonal and proven to restore lost bone in many women past menopause. Calcium alone can't do that.

So ask your doctor if FOSAMAX is right for you.

FOSAMAX should be used with caution if you have certain stomach or digestive problems, and should not be used if you have certain disorders of the esophagus (the tube that connects your mouth with your stomach), are unable to stand or sit upright for at least 30 minutes, or have severe kidney disease, low levels of calcium in your blood, or are pregnant or nursing. Like any prescription drug, FOSAMAX may cause side effects, most commonly stomach and muscle, bone or joint pain. Generally, these have been mild and have not stopped people from taking it. However, some patients may develop serious reactions in the esophagus.

But if you're like most women with osteoporosis, FOSAMAX could be an exciting option for you. And a way to rebuild your bone strength.

FOSAMAX. The first non-hormonal treatment for osteoporosis proven to rebuild bone in women past menopause.

(alendronate sodium tablets)

Ask your doctor and call 1-800-910-4217 for more information.

Please see the Patient Information at the end of ad and discuss it with your doctor.

FOSSAMAZ (fenofibrate sodium tablets)

FOSSAMAZ (FOS) (with-minerals) For Dyslipoproteinemia

(Decreasing the faster risk of heart disease and stroke in high-risk patients)

Please read the information before you start taking FOSSAMAZ. Also, read the Patient Information booklet each time you renew your prescription. Just in case anything has changed. Remember, the booklet does not take the place of careful directions with your doctor. You and your doctor should discuss FOSSAMAZ when you start taking your medication and at regular checkups.

How should I take FOSSAMAZ?

There are the important things you must do to help make sure you will benefit from FOSSAMAZ.

1. After getting up for the first time, swallow your FOSSAMAZ tablet with a full glass (8-10 oz.) of plain water. Do not crush or chew. Do not take with grapefruit juice.
2. After swallowing your FOSSAMAZ tablet do not eat or drink—only stay fully awake, sitting or standing—for at least 20 minutes and then your first meal of the day. Do not eat or drink for at least 2 hours after you take FOSSAMAZ.
3. Do not take FOSSAMAZ at bedtime or before getting up for the day.
4. Do not take FOSSAMAZ with alcohol or before getting up for the day.
5. Do not take FOSSAMAZ with any other drugs, especially your stomach acids and help avoid irritation of your stomach (only the food that corrects your stomach acidity).
6. After swallowing your FOSSAMAZ tablet, wait at least 30 minutes before taking your first food, beverage, or other medicine of the day, including antacids, calcium supplements and vitamins.
7. FOSSAMAZ is effective only if taken when your stomach is empty.
8. If you are taking any pills or other oral contraceptives, contact your doctor. FOSSAMAZ can stop your oral contraceptives from working.
9. Take FOSSAMAZ once a day, every day.
10. It is important that you continue taking FOSSAMAZ for as long as your doctor prescribes it. FOSSAMAZ can stop your oral contraceptives only if you continue to take it.
11. If you miss a dose do not take a later one. Continue your usual schedule if 1 tablet occurs a day the next morning.

What is FOSSAMAZ?

FOSSAMAZ is for the treatment of dyslipoproteinemia (disturbance of blood lipids) in women after menopause.

What are the most important information about components at the end of this booklet?

How does FOSSAMAZ work?

FOSSAMAZ works by:

- Reducing the activity of the cells that cause too much cholesterol.
- Decreasing the faster risk of heart disease and stroke in high-risk patients.
- Increasing the amount of some of your own proteins.

These effects are seen to some extent after therapy with FOSSAMAZ has begun. These effects continue as long as you take FOSSAMAZ. The severity of some effects and the time it may take to feel the benefits. Thus, FOSSAMAZ creates the improvement of dyslipoproteinemia.

What should I tell my doctor about FOSSAMAZ?

- Current doctors of the prescription (the label that corrects your stomach with your stomach acidity).
- History of heart or kidney disease.
- Current levels of calcium in your blood.
- Recent history of alcohol.
- Allergy to FOSSAMAZ.

An auto expert shares secrets that can save you money, help avoid a breakdown—even prevent serious injury.

What You Can't Know About Your Car Could Hurt You

WHEN NEW CARS BREAK down at times, which is why we need roadside assistance, tow trucks and the army of both dealership and independent mechanics. Like it or not, any car owner is wise to know as much as possible about his or her car. What you don't know could lead to a breakdown, a costly repair or even serious injury. Here are 15 things every driver should be aware of:

1) Making antilock brakes work. Antilock-braking systems (ABS) automatically pulse the brakes in a skid situation on a slippery road. ABS is terrific, provided the driver doesn't try to pump the brake or take his or her foot off the brake. When the ABS is taking over, you generally will feel a slight drop in the brake pedal and hear a strange grinding noise. Keep your foot on the pedal.

If you release the brake or pump the pedal, you defeat the benefit of ABS, which is far safer than regular brakes.

2) Minimizing air-bag injury. Air bags can save your life in a crash if you take certain precautions. Don't put infants, children, elderly people or lightly built adults in the front passenger seat. Air bags can deploy at speeds of up to 200 mph and may cause injury, even death, as they already have in a reported 55 cases. If you are the driver, avoid hunching over the steering wheel. If you can't reach the pedals, get a pedal extension.

3) Running a well-oiled machine. You may know the SAE rating of the oil recommended for your car. It may be SWS30 or 10W30. What you may not know is that there is another rating for oil: the API rating, which is a measure of quality. Never use oil with an API rating lower than your carmaker recommends. If your car calls for an API SJ-rated oil, you must not put in an AC-rated oil, even if you have two cases left over from a previous car. Also, be sure to change your oil at regular intervals. Check your owner's manual to determine how often.

4) Tire pressure is more than hot air. If you can't remember the last time you checked the pressure in your tires, you probably need air. Air pressure needs to be checked at least once a month. Even without a leak, the air pressure in your tires will drop as the temperature drops. Tires with low pressure will overheat more easily, wear faster and waste fuel. Look in your owner's manual for the proper air pressure for your car. It may also be found on the door-jamb decals.

5) Garage doors can kill. Automatic garage doors are convenient, but they can also be dangerous if they close with a child or adult in their path. Older doors especially may not be working properly or may not have safeguards to prevent coming down on someone. Test your door's safety device by putting a plastic garbage pail in its path and seeing if it reverses direction. Note that even a

6) Car batteries can explode. Most car batteries have a label warning of the risk of explosion if a spark occurs near the battery. To keep a battery from blowing up in your face when jump-starting, here's what to do: First connect the red positive jumper cable to the positive battery terminal of the dead car. Then connect the other end to the positive battery terminal of the live car. Next connect the black negative cable to the negative battery terminal of the live car. Make the final negative cable connection to a solid metal part of the engine on the dead car, well away from the battery. Never make the final connection to the battery. Reverse the procedure when disconnecting. 7) Jump-starting could kill your computer. Electrical surges are the enemy of any onboard computer. If the battery voltage drops below 9.5, as it might if the headlights were left on all night, the battery should be disconnected and recharged to above 9.5 volts before the car is started. High-voltage starting units used by roadside service trucks may, if not properly used, allow starting voltage to rise above 17 volts, causing damage to the radio, alarm, computers and more.

8) Changing the timing belt. Many cars have a rubber timing belt similar to a modern fan belt. Most of them also have what is known as an interference engine. What that means is that when the timing belt breaks—more than just getting stuck—you are stuck with major engine repairs. Avoid this by changing the belt at the recommended interval—it's expensive, but do it anyway.

9) Polish, don't scratch. Before you attempt to clean and polish your car, you need to know what kind of finish you have. Many new cars have a clear coat over the color paint. If you attempt to polish the clear coat using an abrasive polish, perhaps like the one you used on your previous car, you may scratch and dull the clear coat. Check your owner's manual to determine which type of polish you may safely use. When you wash your car, use an appropriate car soap. Never use dish-washing soap. Use one sponge for the upper area, and wash it first. Use another sponge for the lower portions and the bumpers. This will keep the road dirt that becomes embedded in the sponge from scratching the upper portions of the body.

10) Unnecessary repairs. The introduction of longer-lasting platinum spark plugs on many newer cars has increased the replacement interval from 30,000 miles to as much as 100,000 miles. Newer transmission fluids also make it possible to go 100,000 miles without the traditional transmission fluid change. (Some carmakers advise that it never needs changing.) The life of engine coolant also has been increased. Before you routinely order a tune-up or other service you are accustomed to getting at 30,000 miles, check your owner's manual for the recommended maintenance schedule to be sure the service is really needed.

11) Exhaust fumes kill. Whenever your engine runs, it emits a killer gas from

A broken timing belt could leave you stuck on the highway—and stuck with a big repair bill.

You could scratch or dull your car's finish if you use the wrong cleaning and polishing products.

the tailpipe. A worn-out muffler or tailpipe could allow those deadly carbon monoxide fumes to leak into your car. Check for leaks at every oil change. Never run the car with the garage doors closed. Take precautions to prevent accidentally leaving the engine running when the car is in the garage. And buy a carbon monoxide leak detector for your home.

12) Costly transmission leaks. Checking the fluid level of your automatic transmission at least once a month can prevent costly repairs. There is no gauge or warning light to let you know when you have a transmission fluid leak. There may be no indication of a problem until the transmission begins to over-heat and slip. If you notice the slip early enough, you may be able to save your transmission—a small leak may be repaired for less than $50. If you wait until the symptoms are obvious, it may be too late and could cost more than $2000.

13) The right tires. Choosing the right tires for your car involves more than knowing the right size. Often, the tires that come on the car may not be ideal for your type of driving. For example, sporty ZR-rated high-speed tires may not have the traction you need and are designed for speeds far in excess of any you would even consider. Tires are rated for wear numerically—higher numbers for longer wear. A tire rated 100 will last twice as long as one rated 50. Temperature and traction capability are rated A, B and C. A being the best. Ask your tire dealer to explain the advantages of different types of treads. For more free details, call the Auto Safety Hotline: 1-800-424-9393.

14) Keeping cool. A major cause of highway breakdowns—after running out of gas and flat tires—is cooling system failure. Attention to your cooling system can head off trouble. Have your cooling system pressure tested for leaks twice a year. Change hoses and belts at the first sign of wear or when they have aged beyond five years or 50,000 miles. Check the coolant level frequently. If you need to add coolant, find out why.

15) Shocking truth. The shock absorbers or MacPherson struts on your car stabilize it as it rolls over bumps and ruts or when braking. If the shocks or struts are worn, the car will sway on turns and rock like a boat in a rolling sea. Unfortunately, shocks or struts often are changed unnecessarily. Before you replace them, especially if you don't notice a problem, make sure they really need changing by getting a second opinion from someone you trust. ■

Naproxen

Naproxen, available only by prescription, offers a novel approach to delivering naproxen for the relief of the pain and inflammation of arthritis. Naproxen provides "controlled release," which means that some of the medication is released into your body almost immediately while the rest is released gradually over time, allowing for up to 24 hours of arthritis pain relief.

With controlled-release Naproxen, two tablets taken once a day provide arthritis pain relief that lasts for up to 24 hours.

The active ingredient in Naproxen is naproxen sodium, a fast-acting form of the medicine in Naproxen® (naproxen), which has been the most prescribed brand in its class for 10 years.

Two Naproxen tablets once a day last for up to 24 hours. Naproxen tablets are typically taken twice a day.

Naproxen is not recommended for women who are pregnant or nursing. People who have an allergic reaction to any other arthritis medicine should not use Naproxen. While Naproxen is generally well-tolerated, some people may experience heartburn, diarrhea, and/or abdominal pain. In rare cases, there could be more serious side effects such as stomach ulcers and intestinal bleeding. Be sure to tell your doctor if you have stomach or intestinal problems, high blood pressure, another heart, liver, or kidney condition.

Naproxen may be used for the relief of arthritis pain and for the relief of

You know the importance of having an annual Pap smear to catch cervical cancer at an early, treatable stage. But you may not know that a lab cytotechnologist scans your Pap smear with a microscope, searching for what may be as few as a dozen abnormal cells scattered among 300,000 normal cells. It's like looking for a needle in a haystack. That's why, even if your doctor uses the finest laboratory, manual screening alone is far from perfect. * PAPANET testing is an advanced computerized test that pinpoints and magnifies precancerous cells that may have been missed by screening with the human eye. ## Lynn Minton Reports Fresh Voices

THESE NICE GUYS PHINISH THIRST

The rock band Phish, once a small-time group in Vermont, has grown into a major star status (it can fill New York's Madison Square Garden) without losing its reputation for niceness and decency.

The band members have never hyped themselves—they even chase not to do MTV videos for their new album, "Billy Breathes." They were pushed forward by their fans. They allow fans to tape their concerts—an unusual practice that could detract from their record sales.

When asked why, they've answered, "Because our fans put us where we are."

I wondered if the band members were really as nice as people say. I wondered what their values were, and what they were all like growing up. So I went to meet them: lead singer-guitarist-chief songwriter Trey Anastasio, 33; bassist Mike Gordon, 32; keyboardist Page McConnell, 34; and drummer Jon "Fish" Fishman, 32.

Trey: Growing up, I was always getting into trouble—serious trouble. I was always testing limits throughout my life. When I was about 7 or 8, I set fires, deeply worrying my parents. I remember in fifth grade taking a big black Magic Marker and writing on walls. I defaced a kid's painting and tried to tie to my way out of it. My parents so drilled it into me not to lie that now I don't know how to lie.

My parents dealt sternly with each thing as it came along, but I never got the feeling from either of them that I was a "bad kid" that I was trouble. I think that if, at any point, they'd labeled me as "a troublemaker" or "bad," I might easily have believed it and then gone off in that direction, since "that is what I am." It took five years for me to get through high school.

I remember the first day I got my driver's license—I was 17—I trashed the car. I was burning rubber in my grandfather's Buick Skylark, and my father was out for a jog—this is the God's honest truth—and I went around the corner, through a stop sign, almost hitting my father. I didn't even see him. He took my license away for two months. Then, the day I got my license back, I went to the store, and on my way back home I was looking out the window at a couple of girls—and this fire truck in front of me stopped. And I just went, Bam! Head on.

I thought my father would hit the roof. But he knew that I felt bad enough, that I'd learned my lesson. That was one of the things that always surprised me about my parents: They knew when to get mad and when not to.

All this time, I was also into music. And although my parents probably worried, "Oh, my God, all he cares about is playing electric guitar and drums in the basement—what's he going to do?" my mom would always say, "Oh, you're really creative," and this and that. She instilled a belief in myself that goes on to this day.

Mike I was a weird kid. Never played any sports or did anything like that. I planned inventions to build. A friend and I wanted to make a go-cart, and we kept drawing up the plans. Then it was going to be a sports car. We spent every day planning and drawing. Then it was going to be a line of sports cars. But we never built it. I planned things for most of my childhood, but I almost never finished a project. Which was what was peculiar about me, since I spent all my time on them. So I constantly felt like a failure.

The thing was, my dad took me seriously. One time when I was 8, I built a paddleboat with him. But when I took the boat out into the river, it sank. I don't remember exactly what my dad said, but I can imagine his voice saying, "Hey, you tried. It was really kind of a neat idea. And I'm proud of you for making it, even if it did sink."

When I was about 10 or 11, I invented a machine I called "the bubblemaker" and gave it to my little brother, who was 7 or 8, as a present. But he left it lying around the house, and after a couple of weeks of telling us to put it elsewhere, my father got very mad and said I had to take it away. Then I lost my temper, because he hadn't recognized that it was something I had finally, actually, built by myself. And that I had given it to my brother, who was responsible for it. So I walked onto the second-floor deck and threw it into the woods, and it broke into pieces.

The average father might have become even more mad at that point. But my father didn't. He felt bad, and he went and got the pieces and brought them back. He saw through my temper to how hurt I was that he hadn't taken the machine seriously. And actually, today, when there are people throwing temper tantrums, I am the one who tends to give them the benefit of the doubt. To look deeper and find the hurt behind the temper and feel compassion for the person.

Page: My father, who's a doctor, started a free clinic after he retired, staffed by retired doctors and nurses, to provide health care for people who can't afford health insurance. Both my parents are very giving people who feel it's important to give back to the community. Their lives make me feel good about what we're doing—trying to bring happiness and joy into people's lives.

Trey: My mother saved a tape of me interviewing her when I was 11. On the tape I asked her, "What would you think if your son grew up to be a musician?" She said, "The only thing that would disappoint me is if you did something just for money and not for love." When I heard that on the tape recently, I thought, "Wow, I never really realized how much I got that from her." That's so important to me. Fish: Yeah. We had this guy come over to our house one time to fix something, and he was really miserable, ornery. And I was all mad. But my dad felt sorry for the guy. I was like, "Why do you feel sorry for him? He's a jerk." But my dad said, "The reason that guy is that way is because he's unhappy—because he gets up every morning and he hates his job. And that's the worst thing." My dad would always say, "The most important thing in the world is, when you wake up in the morning, you're excited about what you do."

But when my parents found out that it was starting to become drums for me, there were times when I caught my dad saying to my mom, "We should never have gotten that kid a drum set." And it was, "Well, you should find something stable to fall back on." But I could say, "Dad, you're always the one who says, 'The most important thing is to do what you like.' Well, this is what I like." Trey: All four of us had the experience of wanting to be musicians, knowing we were musicians, at a very early age—and then running into all these people who tell you, "Oh, you've got to do something real." For me, there's never been anything else real. Except love, family.

I did an eighth-grade career day recently, along with other people in different careers, and one guy worked for a snowboard company. He felt about snowboarding the way I feel about music: It was his passion. When he did it, he was free, like I'm free when I'm playing music. It's the freest I am. And people said, "You can't make any money snowboarding." But you can't listen to people saying that. If you have a love, you have to follow it. He ended up figuring out a way—he got this marketing job at a snowboard company, and he flies around from one ski area to the next, checking in as the company's representative at the pro shops. The rest of the day, he can snowboard and ski. He was so happy. I thought that was so great.

No matter what I do, it always ties in to music. While I'm out there paddling around on a surfboard, I'm thinking, "I'm doing this because I want to get in tune with nature and the way the waves move, because the next time I get up on stage, I'll have more to draw on." Mike: We didn't plan on becoming big rock stars. We would practice in Fish's little bedroom—we had to move the bed out, the room was so tiny. And we were never, "Well, we're in a band, and maybe if we keep at it, we'll make a lot of money and be able to tour around the whole country doing it for thousands of people." What we cared about was the songs and what we could do with them. Then we had something so cool—we had these fans who only came to see us because of word of mouth. We had complete creative control over our music. We were having a good time. We could support ourselves. And we were happy.

People always said, "You have to do this," or, "You have to do that," if you want to be in the music business. But we always felt, "Would we still be happy if we did that? We're happy now."

Ask Marilyn

Will you please share with all your faithful readers your thoughts on the issue of capital punishment, including how you rate the chief news and commentary—R.W. Brifonzo, Vallejo, Calif.

In an ideal world, I would be opposed to capital punishment. The mentally ill would still commit some heinous acts, and the rest of us would lock them safely away where they could do no more harm. And because an ideal world would not be a police state, there would still be some criminals who would commit these acts. But in order to encourage a society that is above vengeance—a repellent concept in itself and one that demeans its pursuer and damages its perpetrator—I also would lock these public enemies securely away, probably for the rest of their lives, depending on the crime. Retribution will not bring justice. For a murder victim, there is no justice possible; it's too late for that.

But the world is not yet ideal. Although I believe there is no place for the death penalty in the most civilized of societies, it may be necessary in the least civilized of them. At this point, I rank our country between those two extremes. Although it is obviously highly civilized, it is just as close to deteriorating in certain significant ways.

The case against? As the ultimate act of thoroughly understandable vengeance, the death penalty encourages the violence. It is meant to stop. When we strike an enemy, however evil he may be, we invite a strike in return, if not by that one individual, then by his followers and by all those who jingle their tongues to the tune of the rapping throughout the whole underclass of violent criminals. That is, the more we kill criminals, the more they'll kill us—unless we're so broadly effective that we eliminate them entirely.

That is one of the reasons I believe it is more effective to have no death penalty at all than it is to have a weakly administered one. And it may not be possible to have a convincing death penalty administered by us gentle, segment of our society as our law-abiding citizens have become.

Moreover, vengeance is an ugly sight and causes real damage to the perpetrator. Pretend for a moment that the following terrible event occurs: Your beloved daughter's husband is senselessly murdered by an intruder. He is caught, and she is given the opportunity to legally (and without personal risk) kill him herself. Would you want her to do it? Or would she be diminished afterward? The act of killing in vengeance, no matter how justified, changes the killer—who is, in this case, your daughter. For a moment, then, don't focus on the reprehensible character who murdered your son-in-law; focus on your innocent daughter instead. Is the act of killing even a reprehensible character an experience you would want her to have? You might want to discuss this with others before coming to a conclusion.

—The case for? I can find nothing positive about the concept of capital punishment. At best, it is surely a deterrent of the strongest possible magnitude. I suggest that most people who believe otherwise are probably rationalizing an obviously justifiable abhorrence for the death penalty. When emotions are involved, it is more difficult to be free of bias, and this is a good example. My definition of bias is the inability to give credit to "the other side" when it is due, usually combined with the inability to accept debit to one's "own" side when it is due. These are the hallmarks of a biased argument. And this is why the issue of capital punishment—a highly emotional issue—bursts with bias, and why so many bad arguments are made about it.

The thought of capital punishment working as a deterrent to violent crime is sickening to those people who are revolted by the death penalty, as I am, and so they deny it. This is because belief in such deterrence requires one to take a position that one finds abhorrent. I understand this. But because I find capital murder far more abhorrent than I find capital punishment, I reluctantly support the administration of the death penalty.

I recently read an article about the scientists who mapped the surface of the Earth back in the 1950s with then-new satellite technology. It mentioned that they found high points (outcrops in the planet, actually) that they jokingly called "the four corners of the Earth." (Later studies supposedly filled in a lot more peaks and valleys.) I understand that they didn't mean this seriously, but where on a spherical globe could you possibly find four spots that you could call corners, even jokingly?

—David J., San Antonio, Tex.

The early data showed four high spots that would correspond roughly to a tetrahedron if you connected the points right through the planet, something like this:

Suppose that your daughter's husband is murdered by an intruder. The intruder is caught, and your daughter is legally allowed to kill him herself.

Would you want her to do it?

But what I find fascinating is the fact that four is also the maximum number of spots that can be located on a sphere such that each spot is the same distance (traveling on the surface) from every other spot!

When playing card games, is there any difference in the randomness if I shuffle and deal each player his or her cards all at once instead of dealing the cards one at a time around the table? My friend says the cards will be more in numerical order and clustered in suits, causing unusual hands. I say there's no difference and that the reason for dealing one at a time to each player is to make cheating more difficult. Who's right?

—Stan Szychowski, Farmers Branch, Tex.

You are, but only if you shuffle enough—seven ordinary shuffles will do it.

Fewer than that may cause unusual hands. And because people seldom shuffle that many times, dealing one at a time to each player helps mix the cards more than it helps to prevent cheating. Regardless, I'll bet that even if you shuffle those cards a dozen times, you'll drive people nuts if you insist on dealing them one at a time. Everyone's playing cards this week should try it and see. It just plain feels wrong.

Everyone tells me I should ride my bike going against the traffic. I say you should ride with the traffic. My logic is that if you are going in the same direction, that gives a car more space to slow down and gives the driver more reaction time. This could help avoid a collision or lessen the severity of one. Is my theory logical, or is it a reason I don't work for the Department of Transportation Safety?

—David Abbot, Crosswinds, Tenn.

Everyone is wrong. You should always ride your bike going with the traffic (but keep to the right of the flow, ride single-file and walk your bike across busy intersections). You should obey all the traffic laws (even such as signaling turns and stopping at lights). Safety is the most important issue. If you're going to be perched precariously on such a flimsy apparatus as a bicycle, out there on the street along with dozens of two-ton steel blocks moving at speeds of 30 or 40 mph, it only makes sense to do what they do, not the opposite! Riding against the traffic will have you sailing through red lights, cause your hand signals to be confusing and meaningless and turn dangerous enough fender-benders into lethal head-on collisions. And if that doesn't convince your friends, ask them to consider this: Would anyone think it's safer for motorists to deal and deal in the opposite direction of the traffic? Surely not. The same holds true for bicyclists.

Do people refuse to play trivia games with you?

—Anonymous

No, I refuse to play with them. I just don't enjoy competitive games anymore. I did when I was a kid, but those days are long gone.

Will you please share with all your faithful readers your thoughts on the issue of capital punishment, including how you rate the chief pros and cons?

—R.W. Brignone, Vallejo, Calif.

In an ideal world, I would be opposed to capital punishment. The mentally ill would still commit some heinous acts, and the rest of us would lock them safely away where they could do no more harm. And because an ideal world would not be a police state, there would still be some criminals, who would commit these acts. But in order to encourage a society that is above vengeance—a repellent concept in itself and one that demeans its pursuer and damages its perpetrator—I also would lock these public enemies securely away, probably for the rest of their lives, depending on the crime. Retribution will not bring justice. For a murder victim, there is no justice possible; it's too late for that.

I recently read an article about the scientists who mapped the surface of the Earth back in the 1950s with their new satellite technology. It mentioned that they found high points (bulges in the planet, actually) that they jokingly called "the four corners of the Earth." (Later studies supposedly filled in a lot more peaks and valleys.) I understand that they didn't mean this seriously, but where on a spherical globe could you possibly find four spots that you could call corners, even jokingly?

—David J., San Antonio, Tex.

The early data showed four high spots that would correspond roughly to a tetrahedron if you connected the points right through the planet, something like this:

Most actors will tell you that the meanest, most intriguing parts are the villains.

Sam Waterston sees it differently.

Why He Plays The Hero

I'VE BEEN ABLE TO DO THINGS THAT ALLOW me to hold my head up and still be popular," Sam Waterston told me. "I don't think playing a villain is my greatest talent. If I have to be typecast, I'd like it to be as Abraham Lincoln." This week, Waterston, 56, can be heard as the voice of another President in Ken Burns' new PBS documentary, Thomas Jefferson, airing on Tuesday and Wednesday (check listings for time). The film portrays Jefferson as one of the major framers of American liberty. But it does not shrink from confronting the unhappy fact that he was also a slaveowner and may have fathered children by one young slave, Sally Hemings. In his performance, Waterston conveys these contradictory aspects of Jefferson's character without flinching. Though he never appears on camera, he brings to the role the same sense of earnestness that made him a success in the Broadway production of Abe Lincoln in Illinois. "You gravitate toward things that suit you," he explained. "Wherever you come from, that's what develops your tastes. You know what the Jesuits say? 'Give me a boy before he's 7, and I'll have him for the rest of his life.' It's true."

For more than three decades, Waterston has portrayed characters who combine intelligence with a keen sense of morality. In the 1974 film The Great Gatsby, he played the narrator Nick Carraway, opposite Robert Redford in the title role. Eleven years later, he earned an Oscar nomination for portraying the morally tormented reporter Sydney Schanberg in The Killing Fields. He then played a lawyer grappling with civil rights issues in the TV series I'll Fly Away. And since 1994, he has been known as the zealous prosecutor Jack McCoy on NBC's Law & Order.

I visited Waterston on the Manhattan set of Law & Order. I wanted to find out how much of what we see on TV and in the movies reflected the real man. I remarked that moral issues have weighed heavily on his choice of acting jobs as well as his personal life.

"I guess that's right, isn't it?" Waterston answered. "But that's what it's all about. That's what's important."

"I think it's funny when people say somebody 'decided' to do something in show business. If there's any business that instructs you in the strong hand of fate, it's show business. You can plan and plan, but it's what happens to you that really determines what your career will be like."

Sam grew up in New England, the son of George Waterston, a schoolmaster from North Andover, Mass., and his wife, the painter Alice Atkinson. As a child, he acted in school productions and in plays directed by his father, an amateur dramatist.

Waterston's family was affluent though not indulgent. The world that bred him emphasized discipline. As a boy, he was sent to Groton School, an exclusive Massachusetts boarding academy known for its emphasis on personal integrity and civic responsibility.

"These schools have a hold on you sort of permanently," Waterston said. "It doesn't mean you always live out their ideals, but they bear on you all your life."

In 1958, Waterston enrolled at Yale, certain he wanted to be an actor. "In those days, an interest in the theater was sort of regarded as a disease," he said. "It was not a 'serious' occupation for a young man. My family was concerned about me making a living. But being involved in the arts is not as mathematically to them."

SEREVENT: Twice-a-day, prevention of asthma symptoms.

"When you have asthma, two puffs twice a day is a lot better than puffing all day long."

SEREVENT is the only long-acting, inhaled bronchodilator. SEREVENT is designed to help prevent your asthma symptoms before they start. When used just two puffs, twice a day - morning and evening - approximately 12 hours apart, SEREVENT helps keep air passages open so your breathing remains free and clear. Results compared to fast-acting bronchodilators:

- Less chance of waking up in the middle of the night, coughing or wheezing
- Fewer symptoms with exercise
- Fewer episodes of difficult breathing

With SEREVENT as one part of your treatment program, you may be able to reduce the number of times you have to use your fast-acting bronchodilator and get on with your life with less fear that asthma symptoms might be sneaking up on you.

SEREVENT: What you need to know.

- SEREVENT is not a substitute for fast-acting bronchodilators to treat sudden asthma symptoms and should never be taken more than twice a day. SEREVENT is a preventive medication that takes longer to be effective. So when sudden asthma symptoms occur, you will still need your fast-acting bronchodilator prescribed by your doctor.
- SEREVENT also is not a substitute for medication that controls inflammation in your lungs (inhaled or oral corticosteroids). SEREVENT can be a valuable preventive medication, but it is intended to be just one part of your treatment program.
- Do not stop or change the dosage of your other asthma medications without talking to your doctor. Even if you feel better, any change in dosage or medication could result in your condition worsening. Of course, if your condition worsens, contact your doctor immediately.

Is SEREVENT right for you? Only your doctor can decide.

SEREVENT is available by prescription only and is indicated for patients 12 and older. The most common side effects caused by SEREVENT are: headache (10%), tremor (3%), and cough (3%). Of course, no medication works unless you are committed to stick with it. So see your doctor about SEREVENT. It can help you control your asthma instead of letting your asthma control you.

few hours' work," he said, "but they come to every production. In a way, I felt I was living out things that they wouldn't want it would have been like to do these projects. They were really beautiful pieces." His mother died three years ago, his father in 1995.

After Yale, Waterston established himself on the New York stage, acting in Broadway productions of Abel Lincoln in Illinois and A Walk in the Woods. But it was his role as Nick Carraway in the film The Great Gatsby that brought him fame.

"The role was wildly coveted," he says. "I chased it aggressively. I went in there and told them, 'I know this stuff. I know this character.' If there were other actors who knew the part, I dismissed them from my imagination." Waterston's performance was critically praised, though the film drew mixed reviews.

Many actors might have used the acclaim to build a Hollywood career. But Waterston chose to do East Coast acting on Broadway and producing. She appeared in the Joseph Papp Public Theatre in Manhattan.

There also were personal reasons for staying. "Waterston had been living in New York with his first wife, Barbara Robinson-Johns, and their son, James. The two occasionally were divorced, and Waterston's youngest wife, Lynn, was a bit of a mess. They married in 1976 and decided to live in Connecticut. 'My family is my main interest in life,'" he said. "We've never lived in L.A. We've never been into the 'who's got the bigger BMW?' competition."

Waterston's son James, now 27, was graduate of from Yale and acts in the New York theater. His oldest daughter, Elizabeth, attends Yale and also is thinking of following in her father's profession. (Waterston's other children, Graham and Katherine, live at home in Connecticut.) "Outside my work," said Waterston, "I spend all my time with my family."

Over the years, he has acted in 35 movies. He played a villain in the expensive 1980 flop Heaven's Gate. But roles in the Woody Allen films Hannah and Her Sisters and Criminals and Misconductors were praised by critics. In 1995, he produced and acted in The Journey of August King, about a runaway slave girl in the antebellum South and the white man who risks his life and social standing to help her.

A high point in Waterston's career was his performance in The Killing Fields. As the reporter Sydney Schanberg—who covered Cambodia in the 1970s, during the Khmer Rouge's bloody reign—he played a mesmerizing scene in which Schanberg, back in his New York apartment, listens to a wailing Puccini aria while thinking about his friend Jim Dieth Pran, whom he left behind when the Khmer Rouge began their genocide.

The troubled conscience and grief of the character leaped off the screen. Yet Waterston declined praise for his acting.

"That character's moral dilemma was so obvious, a stone would have been moved," he told me. "I talked to Schanberg a long time. He certainly had a conscience of his own."

I asked Waterston why he took the role of Jack McCoy on Law & Order. "It couldn't have come as a better time in my life," he said. "My youngest boy is 13, and for the first 10 years of his life, I was on the road all the time. I was in Thailand when he was born. Before that I was always at my wife's side when our kids were born. I was in danger of missing a lot—not just with him, but with my whole family."

Though McCoy's single-mindedness is nothing like his own, Waterston said Law & Order's scripts mirror his view of life. "They don't wrap up the moral questions in a comfortable way," he noted. "The bad guys don't always get punished, and the good guys are not necessarily pure."

"The best shows we do are sort of indigestible," he added. "All the points of view have some place, and no resolution could be satisfying. Like life, we leave messy questions." II

She met "Jack" Waterston (top), of Law & Order, with Benjamen Svetkey, Jerry Orbach and Corey Lissick (top), before he did cost the film Killing Fields, with (top) the film's S. S. sign, John Mahoney and Julian Sands.

Taylor and the pal who'll escort her tonight

Liz Reaching Retirement Age

Elizabeth Taylor is throwing a pre-brith-day bash tonight for Elizabeth Taylor, who turns 65 on Feb. 27. Escorted by Michael Jackson, her longtime friend, Liz will be the center of attention at a black-tie gala to benefit AIDS research.

Magic Johnson, John Travolta, Shirley MacLaine and Sharon Stone will pay tribute to Taylor. Michael Jackson will sing a new song he wrote for her. "Elizabeth, I Love You," and Liza Minnelli will belt out "I Can't Give You Anything But Love, Baby." Carol Burnett, Roseanne, Ellen DeGeneres, Whoopi Goldberg, Rosie O'Donnell and Lily Tomlin will try to keep the evening irreverent.

None of Taylor's seven ex-husbands is expected (only three are still living), but she'll be surrounded by family members, including her sons Michael and Christopher Wilding; Liza Tivey, her daughter by Mike Todd; Maria Carson, the daughter she and Richard Burton adopted; her brother, Howard Taylor, and his family; plus seven grandchildren.

Hoopla aside, this $1000-a-ticket party could raise millions for the Elizabeth Taylor AIDS Foundation, which she created in 1991 to focus on care for those with the disease. (AmFAR—cofounded by Taylor in 1985 with cash donated by the late Rock Hudson—emphasizes research, not patient care.) ABC-TV also is paying big bucks for the broadcast rights. "There is no overhead on this show—the money goes directly to AIDS care," says Gary Pudney, executive producer of the ABC special. Viewers can catch it on Feb. 24.

IMITREX Tablets were created specifically for the acute treatment of migraine attacks. They not only relieve the pain but also the nausea and sensitivity to light that often accompany migraine. What's more, this unique prescription medicine, containing sumatriptan succinate, is effective even if you take it when your migraine is at its worst.

LETS YOU GET BACK TO YOUR LIFE™

Because IMITREX is not a narcotic or barbiturate, it won't interfere with your ability to function. IMITREX stops your migraine without stopping you.

MOST PRESCRIBED MIGRAINE MEDICINE IN THE U.S.!

IS IMITREX RIGHT FOR YOU?

IMITREX is appropriate for many migraine sufferers, but only your doctor or other healthcare provider can decide if IMITREX is right for you. You should not take IMITREX if you have certain types of heart disease, blood pressure that is uncontrolled, or are allergic to this medication. If you have risk factors for heart disease, such as high blood pressure, high cholesterol, diabetes, or are a smoker, you need to be evaluated by your doctor before taking IMITREX. Very rarely, people with undiagnosed heart disease have had serious heart-related problems when taking IMITREX.

If you are pregnant, nursing, or thinking about becoming pregnant, talk to your doctor. If your headaches are not migraines, IMITREX is not for you. → The most frequently seen side effects are tingling and nasal discomfort.

THE SWEDISH cinema legend Bergman habitually cast the same actors over and over in his films and plays, such as Bertil Lindström's John Ford (and to cast John Wayne) and Wiland Bend. How, then, did the talented Lena Olin escape the great Bergman after Fanny and Alexander and King Lear? And why would a young actress even want to quit the Master?

"Became his ex-chaperone to the theater," she told me. "I was a small part of it, but theater is a very closed world, and I needed to grow up and probe new worlds.
And remember, when I was with Bergman, it was very young."

She has now "graduated" her own life, and very deftly so. Her latest film, directed by Gal-moy Lerner, is Night Falls on Manhattan, co-starring Fanny Gersic and Richard Dreyfuss. Gersic is, nearly 40, an ex-D.A. and Lempija, a wealthy Manhattan lawyer drawn to the idealistic Gersic.
Then it's another film, co-starring Lena Olin herself, Polish Wedding.

Lena hadn't yet seen a final cut of Night Falls. "When the film is finished, I get some and manuever. I'll see it two or three years later."
Her early regret, she said, was not having scenes with Dreyfuss.

I guess for most non-actors
Lena came very much to life in 1985's The Unbearable Lightness of Being, an arty flick in which she made love to Daniel Day-Lewis while wearing only a kissel hat. The critics' reactions about acting in the nude, to which Ms. Olin generously responded: "Nudity is just another

Lena was at her Stockholm house when I called. "It's the cold season," she said. "Not really too cold, but I have a cold." Lena's mother and father are both actors. Her father was in numerous Ingmar Bergman films, and young Lena first met the director at a party when she was 17. After graduating from drama school,
Lena joined Sweden's Royal Dramatic Theatre and started working for Bergman both on stage and in films. It was her stage performance as Cordelia in King Lear that led to her being cast in
The Unbearable Lightness of Being. Because Lena's family has spent so much time in the U.S. and because English is taught in Swedish schools, her son August is fluent in English. Does

"Oh, yes," Lena said. "We are a five-hour drive from a ski resort that we like. I skip downhill, not cross-country.
And August is very good."
What about her husband, Lasse?
"No," she said matter-of-factly. "He's not very good."
If I write that, Lena said, "I that get her in trouble?" "Oh,

"he and I are constantly trying to work thing out."

costume." A year later, she got an Oscar nomination for Enemies. A Love Story and then was cast opposite Robert Redford in Heaven, expensive to make and heavily promoted, here flop. How big a disappointment was that?
"Disappointment is a strange word" she said, "because you believe in what you do. We started off with a very good feel and a good intuition. Redford was very good, and the director was Gal-moy Lerner. It was a great shoot."

Andy Griffith

Pure and simple, the effortless charm and homespun wisdom of Andy Griffith's recordings and appearances on stage and screen (both big and little) made him a household name. That's particularly true of Griffith's hugely popular role as Sheriff Andy Taylor in "The Andy Griffith Show" from 1960-68. But six years prior to that show's nearly decade-long reign Griffith had already starred twice on Broadway, and in four motion pictures, released a bushel of albums and earned a Top 10 hit with the spoken-word treat What It Was, Was Football.

Andy Griffith has prevailed as one of America's premiere charmers and storytellers, with a natural wit and wisdom unsurpassed by anyone else since the immortal Will Rogers.

Let It Be... Lennon!

Post Office finally honors famous singer-songwriter

Chad — When the announcement was made that the three living Beatles would be getting back together, music fans from all over the world began expressing their concern that John Lennon could become the "Nowhere Man" in all of the excitement.

"I can assure you that there is no way John Lennon will ever be forgotten," stated John Van Emden, President of the International Collectors Society. "The tiny nation of Chad has just issued a magnificent set of nine different color legal tender postage stamps that depict every stage of Lennon's life and career."

The nine stamp issue, which commemorates the anniversary of Lennon's death, is being distributed in the United States by the International Collectors Society in Owings Mills, Maryland.

Beatles fans were already upset with the U.S. Postal Service because they failed to include Lennon in their rock 'n roll rhythm and blues stamp series which featured Elvis Presley, Buddy Holly and several others. So many are now seizing the opportunity to get these stamps which are far rarer than the U.S. issue, and the most desirable legal tender stamps in the world to commemorate Lennon. "Our phones are ringing off the book," added Van Emden. "The U.S. Postal Service printed over 800 million stamps featuring rock 'n roll stars. Collectors are comparing John Lennon stamps which are that to these John Lennon stamps which are limited to just thousands of sets worldwide. It's easy to understand why these stamps have such irresistible appeal to stamp collectors and Beatles fans."

Each of the full-color stamps is about four times the size of a regular U.S. postage stamp. They are legal tender for postage in Chad and recognized by every postal authority around the world.

Gotta have 'em? They are available for a short time at $9.95 (plus $3.00 postage and handling) for the complete set of 9 stamps. You'll also receive a numbered Certificate of Authenticity and the free guide, "99 Little Known Facts About John Lennon." The most you can buy is 6 sets. Send your check or money order to ICS, 3600 Croftall Lane, Suite 100PDAM, Owings Mills, MD 21117. To order by credit card, call toll free 1-800-311-8500.
