River seeps into residents' lives

Upper Snake basin awash in century's biggest water year

By William Brock
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Upper Snake River basin has broken a century-old record for total volume of water — and water managers predict flows downstream of Milner Dam could soon wash away records that have stood for more than 75 years.

From a scenic standpoint, the show at Shoshone Falls and other cataracts should eclipse anything since the 1920s — but residents of flood-prone areas are sobering to the fact that the worst is yet to come.

"On projections are increasing by the hour," Mike Beus, lead hydrologic engineer for the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation in Burley, said at 4 p.m. Wednesday afternoon.

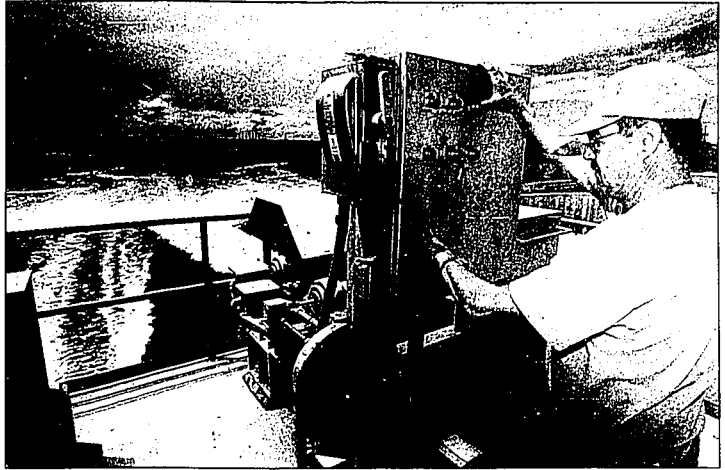

Snake River flows at Milner Dam topped 20,000 cubic feet per second on Wednesday. They are expected to exceed 20,000 cfs for another 10 days; one cfs equals 449 gallons per minute, so more than 9 million gallons will be on the move every minute.

"I think 30,000 cfs at Milner is very possible," said Nengjin Liu, hydrologic engineer for Idaho Power Co. "The reservoirs are full and there's no room to control flows anymore."

"What's going in will have to come out," Liu said. "Beus predicted peak flows of about 25,000 cfs at Milner, but conceded that he and other water managers were 'shooting at a moving target.'"

The torrential heavy flows can't go on forever, experts agree. "The snow-line is reducing every day and we're getting close to the point where the snow just can't sustain those kinds of flows," said Peter Palmer, Idaho

Please see AWASH, Page A2

Part of Joe Yost's job is to adjust the spillway gates of the Milner Dam. Record flows are expected to hit the dam by Saturday.

Residents need to watch water level closely

Erin Bännef, left, and her sister Megan pile sandbags with Brett Jensen in the Snake River, along a submerged retaining wall behind Cliff Smith's Hayburn home. More than 30 youths from the First and Second Hayburn Mormon Church wards worked all day Tuesday and Wednesday to help neighbors protect their homes from the rising river.

Times-News writer

HEYBURN — As residents on the rising Snake River sandbag to protect their property, a disaster worker says they should also watch the numbers.

And the numbers aren't encouraging. The Bureau of Reclamation increased flows by 2,000 cubic feet per second at Minidoka Dam to 27,000 cfs Wednesday, equalling record 1985 flows. Mark Croghan, a Bureau of Reclamation hydrologist, said flows at Minidoka would increase by

Regatta — C1

3,000 cfs to 4,000 cfs today and again Friday.

And more water might need to be released over the weekend. The numbers offer a gauge to riverside landowners. Gauging water levels and comparing them with increased releases from Minidoka will help people learn what to expect in the days to come, said Mike Sweeney of Idaho Bureau of Disaster Services said.

Retreating: GOP ready to yield on disaster aid

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Signaling retreat, congressional Republicans tentatively agreed Wednesday to scrap or soften provisions that sparked President Clinton's veto of an $8.6 billion disaster aid bill.

Determined to prevail, Democrats brought the Senate to a standstill for a second straight day. "We want people to know we're not going to give up" until there is agreement on a replacement bill, said the party's leader, Sen. Tom Daschle of South Dakota.

Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, in comments backed by House GOP leadership aides, said he was ready to drop a provision designed to avert a government shutdown and handle it in separate legislation.

On a second contested provision, House Republicans backed off their demand to ban statistical sampling in the 2000 census. Under an emerging compromise, accord to officials who spoke on condition of anonymity, the administration would be required to conduct a hurry-up study of the feasibility of physically counting all Americans — a feat the Census Bureau maintains is impossible.

The final price tag of the measure seemed fluid. Lott at one point suggested $3.9 billion, but by evening, the number seemed more likely to be $6 billion or slightly more. Some of the money earmarked in the vetoed bill for the Federal Emergency Management Agency would be deferred, but Republicans would agree in writing to make it available when needed without demanding offsetting cuts in other programs.

Lott and House aides said it was possible a measure could be brought to the floor of the House or Senate on Thursday, but there was no final agreement, either on the specifics of legislation or on procedure.

Compromise supporters see new polling results as positive

The Associated Press

BOISE — Advocates of compromise took heart Wednesday in new polling results they believe show growing public support of their proposal for grizzly bear reintroduction in the central Idaho wilderness.

"We have an evolving process where people are becoming more and more informed," said Hank Fischer of the Defenders of Wildlife. "As people learn more about this, their opinions do change. That's whether it's Joe Public or Joe Congressman."

Fischer and others conceded that there remains fervent opposition to grizzly reintroduction in the Selway-Bitterroot Wilderness, including that of Gov. Phil Batt.

But they maintain the plan they have worked out with the timber industry for citizen management of relocated Canadian grizzlies is changing minds.

According to a telephone poll during the second week of April of 209 Idaho residents statewide and 45 Montana residents in the border counties of Missoula, Ravalli and Mineral, 45 percent supported reintroduction and 35 percent opposed it. The rest were undecided.

But after being advised of the citizen management proposal that includes moving bears out of populated areas and preserving existing resource uses, opposition slipped to 30 percent while support, drawing heavily from the undecided ranks, rose to 62 percent.

At the same time, however, the survey showed that 21 percent of those questioned were against reintroduction under any circumstances.

The National Forest Service has already confirmed that its draft environmental analysis of reintroduction being released next month will recommend the conservation-industry compromise.

"The governor and others have been concerned that they have not heard from Idahoans who support reintroduction," Fischer said. The poll shows "there are many people who think this can work."

Army closes hospital unit that inspired film, TV series

The Associated Press

CAMP HUMPHREYS, South Korea — Maj. Charles Winchester III waded a cake knife Wednesday instead of a doctor's scalpel.

And Maj. Frank Burns celebrated with his wife, not "Holips" Hoolihan.

But as on TV, it was a little zany and a little sad when the U.S. military closed the Mobile Army Surgical Hospital that inspired the movie "M*A*S*H" and the long-running television series of the same name.

"Today you are joining us in making history ... saying farewell to America's MASH," unit commander Col. Ronald A. Maul said in deactivation ceremonies at this camp 35 miles south of Seoul.

Members of the audience — which included actors from the hit TV series — wiped tears from their eyes as a color guard retired the unit's flag Wednesday. An Army band played the theme song from the TV show that immortalized the wisecracking but dedicated doctors and nurses who served at the front lines in the 1950-53 Korean War.

The show, filmed in Southern California, touched a chord with civilians and soldiers alike with its portrayal of wacky humanity in the midst of mayhem. Some of the themes it addressed are still considered taboo in the military.

"We were like a Boy Scout training film in terms of what's going on today," the show's writer-producer Larry Gelbart said of the fictional adulterous affair between the character of Maj. Burns and nurse Hoolihan. "But we were pretty risqué in our time."

The MASH was among only four left in the world. The units are being phased out to make way for what the military says is a smaller, faster, more efficient medical group called the Forward Surgical Team.

Attending the ceremony, and later signing autographs and cutting the farewell cake, were three actors from the TV series that ran from 1972 to 1983 and is still being shown in reruns around the world.

First Sgt. Kenneth Hall, left, furts the unit flag of the 43rd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital, the unit that inspired the movie and television series "M*A*S*H," at deactivation ceremonies in Korea Wednesday. Col. Ronald Maul, unit commander, holds the flag. At his right is Col. David C. Jackson, who once served in the unit.

ACROSS THE NATION

Storms pound southern wheat belt with rain, hail, high wind

The Associated Press

Thunderstorms battered the southern Plains Wednesday with large hail and wind to 65 mph.

Scattered showers fell from the upper Great Lakes all the way to Florida.

The most active weather during the afternoon was across western and central Oklahoma, where thunderstorms kicked up wind gusts of more than 65 mph, along with intense lightning and large hail. During the morning, that group of storms had worked its way across southwestern Kansas, hammering the Ashland area with hail.

Thunderstorms also were reported across the Texas and Oklahoma panhandles into Kansas, Missouri and Nebraska, and in parts of eastern Colorado and New Mexico.

Showers were widely scattered from northeastern

Minnesota across the Ohio and Tennessee valleys into the Southeast and along the length of Florida.

Moderate to occasionally heavy showers and thunderstorms were likely along the Gulf Coast from Louisiana to Florida.

A low pressure area over South Dakota created showers and thunderstorms from that state into eastern Nebraska.

Fast-moving thunderstorms produced 50 mph wind, marbled hail and heavy rain in southeastern Nebraska. Minor wind damage was reported in Fairmont.

A few light to moderate showers extended westward from South Dakota into Wyoming and Montana, and occasional showers developed over Oregon, Washington and Idaho.

Wednesday's lowest wind chill was 27 at Ely, Nev. The highest heat index was 102 at Homestead, Fla.

snow survey supervisor for the U.S. Natural Resources Conservation Service. He said on Wednesday, mountain snowpacks lingering in the Snake River drainage upstream of Palisades Reservoir were still 34 percent larger than average for this time of year, Palmer said. Snowpacks in the Henrys Fork and Teton river basins were 24 bigger than average, he said.

The seemingly limitless supply of snow has been and others scratching their heads.

"If you take our forecasts from six weeks ago and subtract what's already run off, then we should be dried up by now," he said.

Rise from being dried up, projected inflows for June and July at Palisades Reservoir are 74 percent greater than normal, Palmer said. He estimated that 5 feet of snow still remains on the ground in the southern reaches of Yellowstone National Park.

Overall, the total volume of water in the Upper Snake River basin has broken all records since 1894, he said.

Record keeping was pretty sketchy back then, so the total volume from 1894 is unknown.

The Upper Snake's federal reservoir system can hold back a lot of water, but the record volume - eventually - will lead to record flows.

The coming deluge is unlikely to eclipse Minner Dam's all-time high-water mark of 39,800 cfs, set on June 21, 1918. However, it could surge into third place if it exceeds the 31,500 cfs mark set on June 8, 1914.

It's the rising water, Beus said, that those records were set before the Upper Snake's two biggest reservoirs - American Falls and Palisades - were constructed. American Falls was finished in 1927, while Palisades was completed in 1957.

The Bureau of Reclamation has known for months that a big water year was brewing, so water managers unceremoniously drained and drained them to record-low levels to prepare for spring runoff.

Palisades Reservoir, the second largest, was only 3 percent full on May 6. Jackson Lake Reservoir, the third-largest, was 50 percent full that day. American Falls reached its nadir - 64 percent full - on April 19.

"We've never reserved that much space at American Falls," Beus said. "We made all the space available that we're authorized for at Palisades and we exceeded our authority to make space available in Jackson Lake."

Space holders at Jackson Lake Reservoir didn't object, but the reservoirs quickly refilled.

On Wednesday, Palisades was 98 percent full. American Falls was 100 percent full and Jackson Lake was 3 percent over capacity.

TEXAS sets yearly record for executions

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — A man convicted of killing a couple at a lovers' lane during a $15 robbery became on Wednesday the 21st person to be put to death in Texas this year, surpassing the state's annual record set in 1935.

Earl Behringer, 33, was condemned for the 1986 shooting deaths of Daniel Meyer Jr., 22, an Army lieutenant, and Meyer's fiancée, Janet Hancock, 21, a high school and college classmate of Behringer.

The couple was parked in a remote area of Mansfield, southeast of Fort Worth, when they were ambushed, robbed and gunned down. An accomplice who testified against Behringer and received a life sentence said Behringer shot the couple after realizing Ms. Hancock recognized him.

Before his execution by injection, Behringer said: "It's a good day to die. I walked in here like a man. I am leaving here a man."

Behringer, with a Bible in his chest, thanked family members and friends and then turned to the six members of his victims' families who watched.

"I am sorry for any pain I have caused you," he said. "If my death gives you any peace, so be it."

He added that he was thankful to the Dallas Cowboys football team "for giving me a lot of enjoyment these past years."

Afterward, Meyer's mother, Catherine, said she was surprised by his comments directed to her family, but noted Behringer did not really acknowledge the killings.

"I'm glad it's over and we have peace of mind knowing he won't kill anyone again," she said. "I doubt I will feel better. I do know I don't have to worry about him."

Texas leads the nation in executions and accounts for more than one-third of all executions in the United States since the Supreme Court allowed the death penalty to resume in 1976.

"You've been stupid in 100 languages," Gelbart told actor Larry Linville, who played the fraternity-winning Burns, at a reception following the ceremony.

"I think it was popular because it placed people visibly in positions we are in every day - being asked to do something without the resources, being asked to do a task that seems hopeless," said David Ogden Stiers, who played the wealthy and often snotty Maj. Winchester.

The soldiers agreed.

"In a physician and I like the fact that it showed the human side of doctors - that we get tired, that we have compassion for our patients," said Maul, of Canby, Ore.

"I'm a fan," said Col. Steve Wilson of Colesburg, Iowa, who can quote lines from the show. "His uniform, discipline, fraternization - it poked fun at all the things that get people fired today. It gave me a chance to laugh."

Though Hollywood named its medical center from the 407th Army, the real unit was the 43rd. It consisted of 100 soldiers who staffed two operating rooms and a 36-bed hospital - often packing up in 39 vehicles and moving closer to the battlefields to provide lifesaving medical help.

Of three MASH units remaining, the two in the United States will be deactivated this year and one in Bosnia will likely continue only as long as the U.S. mission stays there.

The unit deactivated Wednesday served in India, Burma, Algeria and China during World War II, and on the Korean peninsula continuously since the Korean War.

During that war, the hospital and living quarters were tents that provided little protection from sweltering or freezing weather. Some of the bloodiest times saw doctors operating on over 150 patients a day - once more than 300 in one day, officers said.

"It's humbling to be here," said Linville, the actor.

Flood

Heyburn resident Nick Cozokos doesn't have to look far to see the results of the increased flows. He said the river had risen 3 inches at his home by noon Wednesday.

Cozokos' wife, Vera, said this is the highest she has seen the river in the 25 years she has lived there. The Cozokos' sandbagged their property Tuesday.

Clark and Denny Curtis planned to sandbag their Heyburn property Wednesday. The house is set back away from the river and did not appear to be in danger.

"They are worried about their retaining wall. Seepage could cause a problem elsewhere on the property, Clark Curtis said. The rising Snake River brings with it a rise in subsurface water.

"We can't do anything about the sub. We could put 200 bags (on the river), but if the sub wants to come up, it comes up," he said.

The city of Heyburn is hauling free sand to residents, and anyone who needs it should not hesitate to call the city office, Mayor Glen Loveland said. The city has

Flood precautions

- The National Weather Service has issued a flood warning between American Falls and Miller dams, up from a flood watch. A warning means flooding is occurring or imminent.
- The Snake River is closed temporarily to boating between Minidoka Dam to one mile above Keller Dam because of the potential damage and erosion boat wakes can cause to nearby property. The order will be rescinded as soon as possible.
- Recorded messages with daily updates of river flows are available by calling the Bureau of Reclamation at 678-0491 or toll free at 1-800-658-5774.

Heavy snow melt into Palisades Reservoir could the Henrys Fork is causing the high waters.

While areas along the Snake River near Blackfoot already have passed flood stage, the water service does not have a gauge for gleaning such information locally, Mellema said.

"There's really never been a need for it before on the mid-Snake," she said.

Parents plead for McVeigh's life; defense ends testimony

DENVER (AP) — Timothy McVeigh wiped his eye as his parents pleaded for his life Wednesday, using home movies to remember him as a good son, "not the monster" that has been portrayed.

Jurors sat grim-faced through the testimony, the last in the trial's penalty phase. After closing arguments today, jurors will begin deliberating whether McVeigh should die by injection for the April 19, 1995, bombing of the Oklahoma City federal building that killed 168 people.

"I still to this very day cannot believe he could have caused this devastation," Mildred Frazer said as she read from a brief statement. "He was a loving son and a happy child as he grew up. He was a child and a mother could be proud of."

Choking back tears, she read on: "He is not the monster he has been portrayed as. ... Yes, I am pleading for my son's life. He is a human being just as we all are."

McVeigh clasped his hands tightly in front of him and listened intently as his mother spoke, moving only to wipe his hand under his right eye, even though no tears could be seen.

He wiped at his eye again as his father, William McVeigh, took the stand and introduced a poignant 15-minute videotape showing still pictures and home movies of his son as a child, happily climbing onto Santa's lap, playing with toy trains and riding on a tractor.

Bill McVeigh, Mildred Frazer, right, and Jennifer McVeigh walk together outside the U.S. Courthouse in Denver Wednesday after the defense rested on the fourth day of testimony in the penalty phase of the Timothy McVeigh bombing trial.

Defense attorney Richard Burr asked him to comment on a picture of the smiling father and son arm in arm several years ago. "It's a happy Tim. It's the time I remember most of my life," William McVeigh said.

"Do you love the Tim in this picture?" Burr asked. "Yes, I love Tim." "Do you love the Tim in this courtroom?"

"Do you want him to stay alive?" Burr asked in the last question before the defense rested its case.

"Yes." McVeigh's sister, Jennifer, who sat near her brother inside the courtroom, wept throughout the testimony, and as she left she told reporters through tears: "I just want him to live."

McVeigh's sister, Jennifer, who sat near her brother inside the courtroom, wept throughout the testimony, and as she left she told reporters through tears: "I just want him to live."

"It's hard to raise a son through all his life and ... then you as a parent have to look at him, and you wonder," Tomlin said. "I'm sure they're wondering what went wrong, you know, like we are."

In rebuttal, prosecutors offered just one piece of evidence: a letter McVeigh wrote to a New York newspaper in 1992 complaining about crime and no fear of punishment.

"We have no proverbial tea to dump ... Is civil war imminent? Do we have to shed blood to reform the system? I hope it doesn't come to that, but it might," he wrote.

The seven-man, five-woman panel that last week convicted McVeigh of murder and conspiracy must be unanimous in a finding for the death penalty, or the sentence will be life in prison without parole.

Although all of the jurors told attorneys they could consider the death penalty, Colorado jurists as a rule have been reluctant to impose the ultimate punishment. The state has five people on death row, among the lowest number in the country, and hasn't executed anybody since 1967.

In the defense's fourth day bid to save McVeigh's life, it called 27 witnesses to portray him as a friendly child and first-rate Army soldier who left the Gulf War disillusioned and restless, becoming consumed with what he saw as the injustice of the 1993 Waco siege.

The defense suggested the Waco fire continued to burn in McVeigh — the same contention made by prosecutors, who allege that McVeigh blew up the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building to avenge the Waco siege and start a second American Revolution.

Unlike the prosecution penalty case, which brought jurors to tears with gripping accounts of the horror of the blast, no jurors cried during the defense case.

McVeigh's parents were called as the last defense witnesses in an attempt to finish with an emotional punch.

Ms. Frazer, who divorced William McVeigh in 1986 and later moved to Florida, where she now lives, whispered "Hi" to her son as she took the stand. McVeigh didn't respond.

She then spent about 10 minutes reading the statement she admitted she struggled to write the night before.

In her last words, she called on jurors to think carefully about the fate of someone who is still "a mother and father's son."

"You must make this very difficult decision on my son's life or death and I hope and pray that God helps you make the right one."

GOP wants to compel 19 donors to testify

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Republicans investigating campaign fund raising want to compel testimony by granting limited immunity to 19 witnesses, including donors at a Buddhist temple fund-raiser attended by Vice President Al Gore, Senate aides said Wednesday.

The prospective witnesses are described as low-level figures in the investigation, mostly people suspected of being "straw donors" for others trying to hide their contributions, said Senate aides who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Senate Minority Leader Thomas Daschle, D-S.D., signaled that Democrats might not provide the votes that would be needed to approve the limited immunity from prosecution.

"There are so many unanswered questions I don't really expect Democrats are going to be in a position to be very helpful," Daschle told reporters.

The Senate Governmental Affairs Committee was scheduled to vote Thursday on additional subpoenas and on the proposal by the chairman, Sen. Fred Thompson, R-Tenn., to issue the grants of immunity from prosecution based on testimony to Congress.

Under committee rules, the panel's nine Republicans need to pick up two votes from Democrats to win a necessary two-thirds vote to grant immunity.

The list includes donors who gave money at a Democratic National Committee fund-raiser at the Hsi Lai Buddhist Temple in California. The DNC has pledged to return nearly half the $166,000 it raised at the event because it could not verify the source of the money. It also reimbursed the tax-exempt temple $15,000 to cover its expenses. Gore, who originally described the event as "community outreach," later acknowledged he knew it was a fund-raiser.

The panel's Republicans also want to give limited immunity to an associate of Democratic fundraiser Yah Lin "Charlie" Trie, Senate aides said.

Keshi Zhan, a modestly paid county government employee in Arlington, Va., gave $12,500 to the DNC and $1,000 to House Minority Leader Dick Gephardt, D-Mo. Zhan acted as a hostess for Trie.

Her lawyer, Breckinridge L. Wilcox, has said family money enabled Ms. Zhan to make the donations. She could provide valuable information about Trie, who has left the country and stated he won't cooperate with the investigation.

Wilcox has told the Senate Zhan would invoke the Fifth Amendment and refuse to testify if subpoenaed, aides said.

Democrats on the committee, led by Sen. John Glenn of Ohio, were to discuss whether to block the immunity grants until Republicans approve subpoenas Democrats seek for GOP donors, aides said.

Glenn and his colleagues have accused Republicans of using the investigation to wage a partisan attack on Democrats and to stymie any inquiries into GOP fund-raising abuses.

Justice Department prosecutors are still reviewing the list of people that Thompson's staff wants to immunize and have raised some objections, aides said. Bert Brandenburg, a Justice Department spokesman, refused to comment.

Plan would raise Medicare eligibility age

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Republicans plan to propose gradually raising the eligibility age for Medicare from 65 to 70, and charging $5 for each home visit by health-care workers as they overhaul the medical insurance program for the elderly.

In addition, a draft of the Senate GOP's plans for Medicaid omits any of the $1.5 billion that Clinton administration and congressional budget bargainers agreed to provide to help the elderly poor pay monthly premiums for Medicare coverage.

White House officials expressed opposition to all three ideas. But they avoided threatening a veto, a strategy they are following as Congress begins writing bills implementing last month's bipartisan budget-balancing accord.

"We're particularly concerned it does not include premium protections for low-income Medicare beneficiaries," said Lawrence Haas, spokesman for the White House Office of Management and Budget.

The drafts, obtained by The Associated Press, were prepared by Senate Finance Committee Chairman William Roth, R-Dele., for briefings he is holding this week with members of his panel.

Its details — including plans to spend $16 billion to expand health insurance coverage for up to 5 million children — could change before Roth formally presents them to his committee for votes next week.

In Medicare, Roth would slowly raise the eligibility age for Medicare from 65 today to 67 by 2027, the same gradual increase already enacted for Social Security.

"That change would produce billions of dollars in long-term savings for Medicare, whose costs are projected to skyrocket as the massive baby boom generation begins retiring in 2008."

"It's a long-term issue," said Roth spokeswoman Virginia Koops. Haas said the administration believes that proposal should await future attempts to address the long-range financing problems faced by Medicare.

Objections also came from the American Association of Retired Persons, the largest advocacy group of older Americans, Chief lobbyist John Rother said the idea means that people who retire at age 65 could face two years without health insurance or facing expensive payments to cover themselves.

Boise slips to 215th best place to live in U.S.

NEW YORK (AP) — And you thought exciting things only happened to New Hampshire every four years.

An annual ranking of the best places to live in the United States, released today by Money magazine, has three cities from the Granite State among the top six spots.

Ranked No. 1 overall is Nashua, N.H., a former mill town along the Massachusetts border with a booming economy and surrounding areas that "ooze classic Yankee charm," Money said in its July issue.

In fifth place is Portsmouth, a picturesque community along New Hampshire's short Atlantic coastline. Manchester, the state's biggest city with a population of only about 100,000, is sixth.

Boise, which has been struggling with development issues, slipped into the bottom third of the 300 cities. Money's new ranking put Boise at 215, down from 157 a year ago.

Salt Lake City slipped to 99th place from 77th and Seattle dropped to 11th place from 9th a year ago.

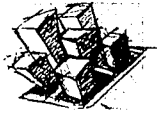

Davenport, Iowa, ranked last among the 300 largest U.S. metropolitan areas. Money said Davenport is still struggling from a farm recession of the mid-1980s and has a high violent-crime rate.

"Even so, residents feel their place is a pretty darn fine spot to live," Money said diplomatically.

In second place this year was Rochester, Minn. (No. 3 on last year's list), followed by the area including Monmouth and Ocean counties, N.J. (38); and Punta Gorda, Fla. (2).

Money's list has been generating more and more attention over the years, making it a source of civic pride for some cities and embarrassment for others. Money compiles it by asking readers to name factors most important to them and collecting relevant data for the 300 largest metropolitan areas.

America's best...

The best places to live, as ranked by Money magazine.

Of the 300 largest cities in the U.S. Numbers in parentheses show 1996 ranking.

- 1 Nashua, N.H. (42)
- 2 Rochester, Minn. (3)
- 3 Monmouth/Ocean counties, N.J. (38)
- 4 Punta Gorda, Fla. (2)
- 5 Portsmouth, N.H. (44)
- 6 Manchester, N.H. (60)
- 7 Madison, Wis. (1)
- 8 San Jose, Calif. (19)
- 9 Jacksonville, Fla. (28)
- 10 Fort Walton Beach, Fla. (18)

...and worst cities

- 291 Youngstown, Ohio (224)
- 292 Waterloo, Iowa (274)
- 293 Jackson, Kan. (11)
- 294 Billings, Mont. (272)
- 295 Decatur, Ill. (287)
- 296 Sioux City, Iowa (288)
- 297 Lima, Ohio (296)
- 298 Anniston, Ala. (226)
- 299 Rockford, Ill. (300)
- 300 Davenport, Iowa (297)

Among the key criteria listed this year were low crime, clean water and air, good schools and inexpensive living. Surprisingly, living near a big city or major airport were low on the list.

Hosting the first presidential primary was not a factor, so the New Hampshire cities had to rely on their other attributes.

Nashua, which jumped all the way from No. 42 last year, was No. 1 when Money's first list came out in 1987, but fell steadily down the list as its economy suffered in the early 1990s.

But a surge in high-tech jobs helped lower the area's unemployment rate from a high of 8 percent in 1991 to its current 2.4 percent.

Other key elements: New Hampshire doesn't levy any state or local income taxes, and the crime rate in Nashua is a whopping 84 percent below the national average.

However, the magazine did criticize the lack of racial diversity in Nashua, which is 96 percent white. It also said "no one will mistake the area for a cultural and culinary hotbed."

Completing the top 10 were last year's winner, Madison, Wis.; San Jose, Calif. (19); Jacksonville, Fla. (28); and Fort Walton Beach, Fla. (18).

There were some amazing moves elsewhere. Fargo, N.D., fell from 14 to 186, and not because of the eerie movie that shares its name. The area including Bergen and Passaic counties, N.J., jumped from 228 to 70.

One researcher who has studied Money magazine's list in previous years said big moves such as these indicate the report is flawed and misleading.

Thomas Guterbock, director of survey research at the University of Virginia, said Money relies more on short-term economic factors than it admits.

"It's really a poll about America's financially hot places to live. And if you can read it that way, you'll be able to track these dizzying changes and it will make sense," Guterbock said.

Time, CBS join forces to name most influential person of century

NEW YORK (AP) — Time magazine and CBS News are joining forces to produce six special magazines and television shows that will culminate in Time's selection of the most influential person of the century. The process mirrors Time's annual Man or Woman of the Year choice but on a grander scale, one its editors hope will provoke wide debate and interest.

Amateur astronomers contribute to research

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — A small army of backyard astronomers with telescopes that match some used by the pros are patrolling the nighttime skies, hoping to add their names to scientific discoveries or perhaps to alert the Earth to incoming asteroids.

Engineers, office workers or technicians by day, the astronomy irregulars make serious contributions to the scientific literature and often detect new objects in the heavens not seen by professionals with multimillion-dollar equipment.

"There are some fields of astronomy where amateurs are crucial now," said Steve Maran, a NASA astronomer. "I here is quite a trend now of professionals getting amateurs to make observations and help solve particular problems in astronomy."

By some estimates, there are more than 300,000 amateur astronomers actively scanning the skies over the U.S. nightly, and a similar number worldwide.

Many are organized in clubs where money is pooled to buy highly sophisticated equipment.

Thomas Droge of Batavia, Ill., a physicist by day, has spent $50,000 to build telescope cameras that he gives away to amateurs who join his group of backyard observers.

His goal, said Droge, is to map a small sliver of the sky and precisely measure variable stars, a job impossible for big observatories.

He also hoped to lure computer programmers into astronomy so some of them would write software that could help the survey. The free telescopes were the bait, Droge said.

"This is the Field of Dreams" scholastic of management," said Droge, referring to the baseball movie. "If you build telescopes, then the software will come. It has now appeared."

His network of 22 observers, using his instruments and the new software, now regularly scan the skies, taking 5,000 star measurements an hour. They file their findings to him on the Internet.

"Most professionals use large telescopes to look at tiny areas of the sky," he said. "We use tiny telescopes to look at large areas of the sky."

Droge presented a paper on one discovery by the group to the national meeting of the American Astronomical Society this week.

Amateurs have played a role in the discovery of most of the bright comets in recent decades — including the recent Hale-Bopp comet, discovered on the same July night in 1995 by both Alan Hale of the Southwest Institute for Space Research in Cloudcroft, N.M., and Thomas Bopp, an amateur astronomer from Glendale, Ariz.

Army lieutenants listen to instructions at the Chemical Decontamination Training Facility at Fort McClellan near Anniston, Ala., recently. The Army conducts live chemical training there.

Army refines defenses against chemical weapons

Emphasis turns toward detection devices, communication

FORT McCLELLAN, Ala. (AP) — He's big, he's green and his red glass eyes hold a menacing glare.

He's a dragon, a fire-breathing symbol of the Army Chemical Corps and the evolving nature of chemical combat in the post-Cold War era.

The mythical monster stands in the entry way at Silbert Hall, nerve center of the Chemical School where officers are refining the Army's approach to chemical defense — an approach which assumes U.S. soldiers abroad and citizens at home will be threatened by chemical arms despite a new treaty banning them.

The Army's emphasis is on more accurate detection devices, better communication of chemical warnings and alerts, and better training with the Air Force, Marines and Navy in conducting combat in and around chemical hazard areas.

The military also is putting more emphasis on responding to peacetime threats — mainly small-scale attacks on civilians with chemical or biological agents.

The Chemical School at this fort in northeastern Alabama, near Anniston, is the focal point of the Army's training in chemical defense. It includes what the Army calls the world's only known live-agent facility — a series of sealed rooms in which troops in protective gear encounter nerve agents in amounts just below what is officially labeled "immediately dangerous to life and health."

The United States and more than 160 other countries have sworn using nerve gases and other chemical warfare agents, but the Army is pouring hundreds of millions of dollars into new technologies for defending against them.

"The threat is real," says Col. Daniel Oyesugi, and he now comes more from shadowy terrorists who loyalties cross national boundaries than from traditional enemies who could be targeted and deterred from using them in the first place. Oyesugi is director of combat development at the Chemical School.

"It is a much more divergent threat than when we faced the Soviet Union," says Lt. Col. Krisma DeWitt, chief of the school's doctrine division.

Detering chemical attacks by threatening to respond in kind is no longer an option. The United States is destroying all its chemical weapons, including more than 600,000 that are stored near here at Anniston Army Depot.

From the European battlefields of World War I, where troops suffered gas attacks by the Germans, to the desert sands of Kuwait, where Iraqi forces ignited oil well fires during the Gulf War, the nature and scope of chemical warfare has changed.

Today's military leaders worry that nations such as North Korea or Iran will use ballistic or cruise missiles to deliver chemical or biological strikes.

The need for better chemical defenses was exposed in the 1991 Gulf War. U.S. forces lacked the means to determine with full confidence whether they had encountered Iraqi chemical munitions on the Kuwaiti battlefield. In at least one case American soldiers may have been unknowingly exposed to a cloud of nerve gas after they demolished an Iraqi ammunition depot at the war's end.

The dragon, featured on the insignia of the Chemical Corps, is an apt image: the use of chemical agents in war is widely considered inhumane; just the thought of the agonizing wounds and death they cause make them a weapon of terror.

"It's the fear," says Oyesugi, that makes chemical weapons "bigger than life."

The fear factor is what convinces the Army that chemical training must be realistic. It is why the Army says it will spend tens of millions of dollars to build a new live-agent facility at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., when Fort McClellan closes in 1999 and its chemical defense training is moved to the Missouri base.

Being told your mask and other gear will block the invisible vapors of deadly toxins does not instill confidence like having worn it in the presence of real agents. Small amounts of chemicals are produced here for use in the training, and so Fort McClellan itself is subject to inspection under the Chemical Weapons Convention that was ratified by the Senate and took effect April 29.

On a recent afternoon Sgt. Jose Rivera, 28, of Caguas, Puerto Rico, was one of eight soldiers making their first run through the live-agent training. Amid nervous chatter with his comrades Rivera repeatedly adjusted his black mask as they waited for an Army scientist to prepare the day's dose of nerve agents.

"This is the fear of everybody: Will it work?" he said. It did.

The 17-acre live-agent facility here was built 10 years ago for $17 million. It is so contaminated with VX and sarin nerve agents that once abandoned, the building would have to be taken apart and incinerated, officials said. The building's operators have their own motto: "We've got the nerve."

The move to Fort Leonard Wood also will mean reconfiguring there a special building to train soldiers in chemical decontamination. The 55,000 square foot, $2.7 million decontamination building at Fort McClellan just opened in 1994.

Chemical training is put to the test in the Dragon Warfighter Center, a $1 million complex here where soldiers use computers to simulate combat operations in which their forces encounter chemical "attacks." They must advise commanders on the nature and precise location of the chemicals, and figure ways to move friendly forces around or through the contaminated area.

Such training is central to the Army's philosophy of minimizing the number of its troops who must don the cumbersome protective gear for chemical combat. The more precise and timely the information about chemical hazards on the battlefield, the less a commander must depend on his troops and slow his attack.

"It is a much more divergent threat than when we faced the Soviet Union."

—Lt. Col. Krisma DeWitt, Chemical School chief

NATION IN BRIEF

Christian Coalition names new leadership

WASHINGTON — Television evangelist Pat Robertson picked a former congressman as executive director of the Christian Coalition Wednesday and named a former Reagan administration official president of the political group.

Robertson said his successor as president, Don Hodel, and the executive director, Randy Tate, were "grass-roots conservative leaders who are uniquely equipped to lead this organization into the next century."

Robertson said Hodel, 62, who served in President Reagan's Cabinet as secretary of the interior and secretary of energy, will be responsible for the coalition's day-to-day management and strategic direction.

Tate, 31, was elected to one term in Congress in 1994 before being defeated. Tate replaces Ralph Reed, who is leaving to start a political consulting firm. Robertson moves up from president to chairman of the board.

Gene may protect girls against autism

NEW YORK — Girls might outdo boys at some social skills and be less vulnerable to autism because of a gene they inherit from their fathers, a study suggests.

The gene apparently fine-tunes a part of the brain involved in social abilities, like interpreting facial expressions and body language, researcher Dr. David Skuse said.

It might also give girls some protection against attention deficit hyperactivity disorder or ADHD, some experts said.

Skuse has not identified this proposed gene or tested it in autism, a condition that impairs a person's communication and interaction with others. The evidence that it exists comes from a study of girls and women with a genetic disorder.

Costly drug improves angioplasty results

BOSTON — An anti-clotting drug substantially reduces the risk of routine angioplasties, but its high cost may discourage its use, researchers say.

The medicine, called ReoPro, was initially approved for angioplasties in patients who were at high risk of heart attack and other complications. However, many doctors were reluctant to give it to run-of-the-mill angioplasty patients, in part because it increased the possibility of unwanted bleeding.

Now, a study in Thursday's issue of the New England Journal shows that the drug can safely be given for routine angioplasties, and during the first month of recovery it cuts major complications in half.

St. Louis bus goes out of control; 4 killed

NORMANDY, Mo. — A city bus being driven by a student driver went out of control Wednesday and struck a crowded train platform on the University of Missouri-St. Louis campus, killing at least four people.

Two people died at the scene and two were pronounced dead at DePaul Health Center, said Wendell Payne, an investigator for the county medical examiner's office.

Several other people were seriously injured in this St. Louis suburb, said Linda Hancock, spokeswoman for the Bi-State Development Agency, which operates both the buses and the light-rail MetroLink train system.

Emergency crews were working to determine whether others were trapped underneath the bus. A number of the injured were taken to nearby Normandy Community Hospital, but officials could not immediately comment on how many were being treated.

Cut cockpit wiring found on airliner

NEW YORK — Cut wires were found underneath the cockpit of a Pan Am plane undergoing routine maintenance checks at Kennedy Airport Wednesday, but the safety of the plane was not compromised, officials said.

Pan Am spokesman Jeff Krienderler would not say which wires had been cut. But he said the A300 Airbus "would not have left the gate. It would have been discovered by the cockpit. The systems would not have worked."

However, a law enforcement source said the tampering apparently took place earlier in the week, since a problem was noticed Sunday.

Krienderler said the cut wires were discovered in the belly of the plane, beneath the cockpit, in the middle of the night by maintenance workers and authorities were immediately notified.

Emir asks Clinton to ease Iran, Iraq policies

WASHINGTON — President Clinton and the emir of Qatar, an important Arab ally to America, exchanged polite but strong differences of opinion Wednesday over hard-line U.S. policies on Iran and Iraq.

In his first visit to the White House, Sheik Hamad bin Khalifa pressed the president to consider easing up on his Persian Gulf neighbors, arguing that "people have suffered enough."

But the White House reaffirmed its strategy of trying to contain what the administration sees as terrorist and security threats in the region.

"We think our strategy for bringing the international community's concerns to bear on both countries ... because of their reprehensible policies is a correct one," presidential spokesman Mike McCurry said.

FDA warns AIDS patients of drug side effect

WASHINGTON — AIDS patients taking the powerful new drugs called protease inhibitors should be monitored closely for indications of diabetes, a surprising but serious new side effect, the government warned today.

In letters to thousands of doctors, the Food and Drug Administration stressed diabetes appears to occur rarely and that patients should not stop taking their AIDS medicines.

Protease inhibitors have revolutionized AIDS care, reducing thousands of patients' HIV virus to undetectable levels.

Russia joins capitalism summit

Boris Yeltsin

WASHINGTON (AP) — Capitalism's premier summit meeting will play down economics this year as world leaders gather in Denver to embrace Boris Yeltsin as a full participant in crafting a new global order.

The G-7 is giving way to the P-8, "P" as in politics, "8" as in Russia.

The economic debates over interest rates and currency values that have occupied leaders' attention for the past 22 years will be relegated to one hour of talk on Saturday afternoon without Yeltsin present.

For the rest of the three days of meetings next week, Yeltsin will be a full-fledged participant discussing geopolitical problems at what is being called the Summit of the Eight.

While not as dramatic as the collapse of the Berlin Wall, the decision to make a bigger place at the summit table for Russia does carry its own symbolism.

"With Russia's participation in the summit and the enlargement of NATO, we are leaving the era of the Cold War even further behind and taking two important steps into a new era of ever-widening and deepening global integration," Deputy Treasury Secretary Lawrence Summers said.

The world's seven richest industrial nations — the United States, Japan, Germany, France, Britain, Italy and Canada — have used their annual G-7 meetings over the past two decades as an unofficial steering committee for the global economy.

An increased role for Russia at this year's summit was a consolation prize President Clinton offered Yeltsin at a meeting in Helsinki, Finland, in March. Clinton hoped it would be enough of an inducement to persuade the Russian leader to drop his determined opposition to the addition of new members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Yeltsin did relent and in May participated in a signing ceremony in Paris for an accord designed to assure Russia that it has nothing to fear from NATO's plan to take in new members that were once aligned with Russia in the Warsaw Pact.

Beginning in 1991, when then-Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev attended the London economic summit as a guest of the Group of Seven countries, Russia has been playing an ever larger role. In 1994 in Naples, Italy, the political discussions were renamed the P-8 to formalize Russia's participation in those closing discussions.

But in Denver, Yeltsin will arrive when the rest of the leaders do, participate in the opening dinner discussion on June 20 and hold a closing news conference like the other leaders on June 22.

The normal highlight of previous summits — the economic communique — is being replaced by a political communique with the joint economic declaration being relegated to a lesser "statement" by the Group of Seven. That statement will include the issues of interest rates, trade deficits and currency values that are the subject of the three-a-year gatherings of finance ministers and central bank presidents of the seven countries.

The political discussions involving Russia will cover such issues as terrorism, drug smuggling, nuclear proliferation, global warming and China's takeover of Hong Kong — as well as some economic issues such as aid to Africa and government bribery in which Russia is seen as having a role to play.

President, rival leader order cease fire in Republic of Congo fighting

BRAZZAVILLE, Republic of Congo (AP) — President Pascal Lissouba and his rival, the country's former dictator, agreed Wednesday to a cease-fire between their forces to end the fighting that has devastated the capital.

"I'm ordering a cease-fire from this moment," Lissouba said on national radio. Gen. Denis Sassou-Nguesso made a similar announcement on his own private radio station.

French soldiers, journalists and hundreds of civilians had to dive for cover at the airport when a burst of automatic rifle fire erupted shortly after the radio broadcasts.

A 10-year-old boy's hand was struck by a bullet. The fright reduced some of the 400 civilians — already badly shaken by a week of fierce fighting — to tears.

Sassou-Nguesso's private radio station continued broadcasting anti-government statements and urging government soldiers to defect to the militia.

Fighting broke out in the capital of Brazzaville on Thursday, when Lissouba sent in troops to disarm Sassou-Nguesso's private militia, fearing it would disrupt next month's presidential election. Both men and other militia leader, Bernard Kolelas, are running.

The violence has forced thousands — residents and foreigners alike — to flee the capital of this Central African nation, a former French colony.

French soldiers have found the bodies of a dozen civilians each day in their street patrols. Sassou-Nguesso's camp told Radio France-Info the number of dead was in the hundreds. The number was impossible to verify.

Heavy fighting with mortars, machine guns and grenades pounded Brazzaville last night and this morning.

French troops ventured into the city to pick up stranded civilians, including many crowded at the French ambassador's residence, and took them to the airport.

The bullets that flew through airport today may have been errant shots from nearby fighting or an effort to provoke the French soldiers and sabotage peace efforts, said a French military spokesman, Col. Henry Pelissier.

"What we don't want is to be forced into firing onto one side or the other, because then we will be accused of taking sides," he said.

The French picked up 1,500 people from 52 nations Monday and Tuesday, bringing them by boat or military convoy to the airport. At least 1,000 have flown out of the country.

Libya will hand over suspects

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Libyan leader Mouammar Gadhafi says he is prepared to hand over two suspects wanted in connection with the 1988 Pan Am bombing for trial anywhere in the world except the United States and Britain.

"Apart from these two places, Libya will agree on any place suggested by the international community," Gadhafi said in a speech monitored by the British Broadcasting Corp.

The BBC said Wednesday he made the speech in the Mediterranean port of Daraa during celebrations commemorating the 27th anniversary of the evacuation of U.S. military personnel from Wheelus Air Base near Tripoli on June 11, 1970.

A total of 270 people were killed in the bombing of the Pan Am jet over Lockerbie, Scotland, which led to the 1991 indictment in the United States of Libyan intelligence agents Abdel Basset Megrahi and Lamen Khalifa Fhimah.

The two have long been on the FBI's "Most Wanted" list but are believed to be in Libya. The United States wants the two men extradited to face trial here.

The U.N. imposed sanctions on Libya in 1992 for refusing to turn the two suspects over. The sanctions ban air travel to and from the North African nation and forbid oil exports.

"It does not matter whether the two suspects have been charged or not, the important thing is the trial," Gadhafi said, according to the BBC. "This is the request of the families of the victims ... it is also our request. The suspects in the Lockerbie case must be brought to justice."

China to move 340,000 people

BEIJING (AP) — Authorities in China's southwestern city of Chongqing plan to relocate another 337,000 people by 2009 from areas to be flooded by the giant Three Gorges Dam.

The resettlement of all 1.2 million people from the area should be complete by 2009, the official Xinhua News Agency said Wednesday.

Environmentalists and human rights activists have criticized the dam because of the vast scope of its damage to the surrounding countryside, archaeological sites and the lives of evicted residents.

Some of those already moved have complained that they received inferior farmland and inadequate compensation for their homes.

Xinhua said the Chinese government had spent the equivalent of $410 million by the end of 1996 to relocate 28,000 residents.

Jordan, U.S. end war games

QATRANA, Jordan (AP) — With a live-fire display for visiting officials, U.S. and Jordanian forces ended three weeks of joint military exercises aimed at improving desert war tactics Wednesday.

"Infinite Moonlight 97" was the second exercise this year as part of a U.S. pledge to reward Jordan militarily for signing a peace treaty with Israel in 1994.

Tanks scurried across the sands, fighter jets whizzed through the sky and artillery pounded a dummy target as more than 1,500 U.S. Marines and sailors of the U.S. 5th Fleet joined 500 Jordanian soldiers.

President Clinton, who has pledged to help strengthen Jordan's 100,000-man army, spent Jordan $100 million worth of military equipment last year. In December, Washington also is expected to give Jordan 16 F-16 jet fighters worth $200 million.

El Toro runs scared; bullfight fans see red over inferior bulls

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Bulls or chickens? Bullfight aficionados are wondering about the nature of the beasts that appeared in Madrid's bullring during the world's foremost bullfighting festival.

It was as if the five-week Fiesta de San Isidro, which ended Friday, featured clones of Ferdinand, the peace-loving bull of the children's story.

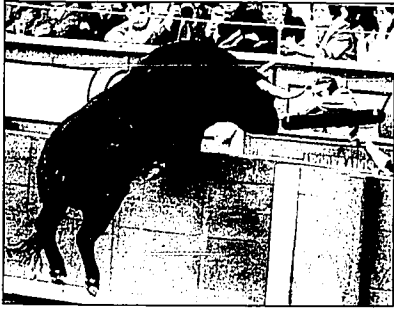

Some bulls were reluctant to charge. Others fell when they charged or were so hefty and lumbering that a bullfight critic for El Pais, Spain's most widely read newspaper, suggested they'd be better on the menu than on the sands of Madrid's Plaza de Toros de Las Ventas.

"Another scandal, and again because of the bulls," Joaquin Vidal wrote after the bulls once again acted anything but bullish.

Normally, six bulls are killed in an evening's bullfight, or corrida. Inferior bulls can be rejected and replaced with any of three substitute bulls.

At one corrida during San Isidro, three bulls were rejected. A fourth would have been sent away, but there were no more substitutes. Jeering spectators hurled their seat cushions into the ring in protest.

Adolfo Rodriguez, who verifies bloodlines for the National Association of Bull Breeders, said inferior bulls wind up in the ring because bullfight organizers buy cheaper bulls to save money and top bullfighters don't want to put themselves at too much risk.

"They tell the organizers they want a comfortable bull — a big bull with little ferocity and agility bred into it," Rodriguez said in an interview.

Bullfighters and the organizers blame the breeders.

"The bullfighter can choose what breed to use, but it's the breeder who raises the bulls," matador Jose Tomas Roman told El Pais.

Charles Jockelson, publisher of the bullfighting magazine 6 Toros 6, says using inferior bulls puts bullfighting at risk.

"The essence of bullfighting is emotion," Jockelson said. "If you don't fear for the life of the bullfighter, there is no emotion."

Brazilian land reform advocate sentenced

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — Brazil's best-known land reform advocate was sentenced to 26 1/2 years in prison Wednesday for the killings of two men during a botched land takeover attempt eight years ago.

Jose Rainha, Jr., was accused of leading landless farmworkers in storming a farm in the eastern state of Espirito Santo on May 30, 1989, to pressure the government to speed up its agrarian reform program.

Fighting broke out when the farm's owner, Jose Machado Neto, and several hired gunmen opened fire on the squatters, according to members of Rainha's land reform movement. Machado and one of the gunmen, an off-duty policeman, were killed and four squatters were wounded.

Besides arguing the squatters acted in self-defense, Rainha testified he was in another state at the time of the killings, and the defense brought in witnesses, who corroborated his account.

Still, the seven jurors voted 4-3 to convict Rainha of taking part in the killings.

"I had no doubt about the outcome when I saw the jury chosen," Rainha said after the verdict. "My struggle continues."

The defense had requested a delay on grounds that 14 members of the 21-member jury pool had links with local farmers and three were related to the victims, but the motion was denied.

Weeping broke out in the courtroom Wednesday when the judge read the sentence to nearly 3,000 of Rainha's supporters who came from across Brazil to attend the trial in the small town of Pedro Canario, 375 miles northeast of Rio de Janeiro.

The sentence was largely symbolic because under Brazilian law, anyone sentenced to more than 20 years for a single crime is automatically granted a retrial.

Russian Orthodox leader cancels meeting with pope

VATICAN CITY (AP) — The head of the Russian Orthodox church has canceled a meeting with the pope that would have been the first between the heads of the two churches, the Vatican said Wednesday.

Patriarch Alexy II has canceled on the pope before, and the Vatican had viewed the June 21 meeting in Austria as tentative.

Alexy and Pope John Paul II were to meet at a Cistercian monastery outside Vienna two days before the opening of the second European Ecumenical Assembly.

On Wednesday, Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Vals said there "were some difficulties in realizing this plan on June 21."

An invitation to meet with the pope in Hungary, reportedly because of pressure from conservatives alarmed by Roman Catholic missionary efforts in Russia. The Vatican had hoped the meeting would lead to a historic visit to Moscow for John Paul.

The Vatican refused to speculate Wednesday on the reasons for the latest cancellation.

Diplomatic impasse shows complexity of salmon issue

If you want to know why the issue of saving Idaho's endangered salmon seems so intractable, look no farther than the easy little cold war going on between the U.S. and Canada over West Coast salmon fisheries.

Twelve years ago, the two governments signed the Pacific Salmon Treaty, designed to prevent destruction of salmon runs in the waters off Oregon, Washington, British Columbia and Alaska.

Ever since, they've been busy accusing each other over overfishing and other violations of the treaty. The Canadians finally broke off talks just before their recent national elections.

Both sides say they'll begin talking again, but that's not going to change the stubborn fact that there seem to be fewer salmon in the Pacific than there were when the U.S. and Canada decided to rescue them more than a decade ago.

Meanwhile, American politicians and federal bureaucrats continue their never-ending minutiae about upstream solutions to save salmon and steelhead that spawn in Idaho. The latest proposal is to knock out a few Columbia River dams to make the journey easier.

But it's just possible that taking out all the dams might not help at all.

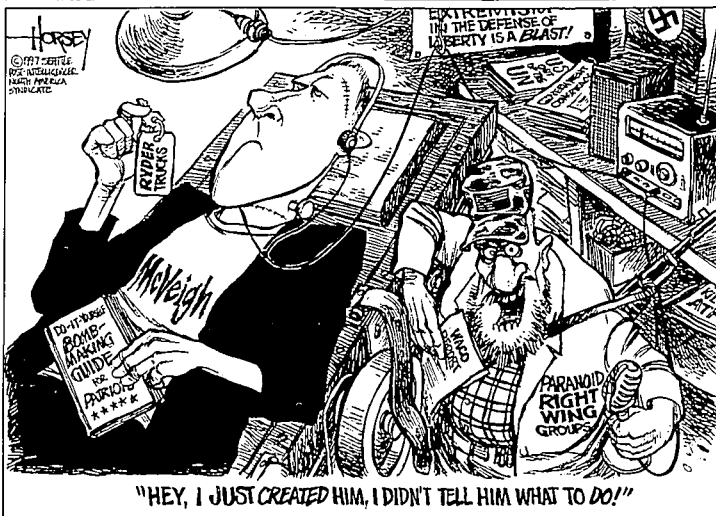

Idaho Sen. Larry Craig has long argued that commercial and Indian fisheries may be as much to blame for the salmon's decline as low stream flows and power-plant turbines. The current diplomatic impasse would seem to lend credence to that position.

The point, Craig says, is that there's isn't yet enough understanding about the true causes of the salmon's disappearance to declare with certainty that radical changes in the Upper Columbia Basin would save the fish.

At the moment, those facts are as vague as a diplomat's smile. And until the U.S. and Canada sign an enforceable treaty, there's no guarantee that there will be Pacific Coast salmon runs for anyone to save.

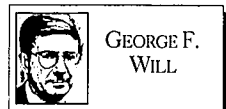

Even Idaho irrigators.

Before asking sacrifices of upstream users, the federal government ought at least to be sure of its facts. At the moment, those facts are as vague as a diplomat's smile. And until the U.S. and Canada sign an enforceable treaty, there's no guarantee that there will be Pacific Coast salmon runs for anyone to save.

Wicked act points to evil abortion culture

"The Unforgiven" by Metallica was the song 16-year-old Melissa Drederick asked the disc jockey at her New Jersey prom to play when she returned to the dance floor. She had just tossed her 6-pound-6-ounce baby boy into a trash bin next to the bloodstained stall in the restroom where she had given birth.

GEORGE F. WILL

Metallica's song begins, "New blood joins the earth and quickly he's subdued." It is just another song of adolescent self-pity, the not altogether intelligible gist of which is the usual of that genre: Society is the unforgiving — oppressive, subduing the new blood of youth. But the society that shaped Ms. Drederick seems not to have inhibited her noticeably. "She seemed to be enjoying herself," said a friend about Drederick's postpartum dancing.

Medical examiners have determined that the baby was alive during the birthing process, which occurred early in the prom. He was soon discovered by a maintenance worker who thought the trash bag was unusually heavy. Unsuccessful attempts were made to resuscitate him.

Ms. Drederick will be charged with something. Maybe murder. Maybe endangering a child. Maybe conducting a partial-birth abortion at a prom without a license.

Who taught Ms. Drederick to think, or not think, in a way that caused her to regard her newborn baby as disposable trash? Many people and things, no doubt.

She has grown up in a society that does not stress deferral of gratification, and it's not her fault that the baby arrived during the prom, for Pete's sake. She has come of age in a society where condom-dispensing schools teach sex education in the modern manner, which has been well-described as plumbing for hedonists.

If she is like millions of other young adults, she has spent thousands of hours watching movies and television programs not designed to encourage delicacy of feelings or to suggest that sensuality has morally complex dimensions and serious consequences.

If she is like millions of other young adults, she has pumped into her ears thousands of hours of the coarsening lyrics of popular music. And she certainly has grown up in a social atmosphere saturated with journalistic approbation of, and collaboration with, the political program of reducing abortion — the killing of something — to a mere "choice," like choosing to smoke a cigarette, only not nearly as serious.

However, foremost among the moral tutors who prepared Ms. Drederick to act as she did is the Supreme Court. By pretending in Roe v. Wade not to know when life begins, the Court encouraged looking away from the stark fact that abortion kills something, ignoring elementary science, the Court said, preposterously, that a fetus is "potential life." But as Walker Percy, an M.D. as well as a novelist, wrote, it is a commonplace of modern biology that life begins "when the chromosomes of the sperm fuse with the chromosomes of the ovum to form a new DNA complex that therefrom directs the ontogenesis of the organism." Percy continued: "The onset of individual life is not a dogma of the church but a fact of science. How much more convenient if we lived in the thirteenth century, when no one knew anything about microbiology and arguments about the onset of life were legitimate."

Biology does not allow the abortion argument to be about, or anyone to be agnostic about, when life begins. Conscienceless people can disagree about the appropriate moral and legal steps to be accorded the life that aborts ends. But science compels — to say no more — the "pro-choice" movement's project of making the world safe for the likes of Ms. Drederick, the project of presenting the ending of an inconceivable young life as akin to a bowel movement.

Pregnancy is a continuum. What begins at conception will, if there is no natural misfortune or deliberate attack, become a child. If it becomes a child at a prom, it must be attacked quickly, lest the whole night be a burn.

The barbarism at the prom is being termed a "tragedy" calling for "compassion" all around. No, an earthquake is a tragedy. This was an act of wickedness — a wicked choice — and a society incapable of anger about it is simply decadent.

Perhaps the brevity and brutality of the life of Ms. Drederick will accelerate the transformation of the nation's vague unrest into a vivid consciousness that today's abortion culture, with its casual creation and destruction of life, is evil.

George F. Will is a Washington Post columnist.

LETTERS

Books outnumber TV channels

The Times-News editorial of June 6 admonishing readers to "put down that remote and pick up a book" made several excellent points concerning the advent of reading over television watching.

One additional advantage — readers have an abundance of choices. The Twin Falls Public Library alone has more than 130,000 books. Can any satellite dish offer that number of options for television viewing?

KARA KRAL

Study leads to understanding

Your May 20 editorial lauded the Idaho Board of Education for denying a grant requesting to study the history of homosexuality in the Northwest. You assert that it "doesn't have a legitimate academic application" and might reignite anti-gay activities.

It is disturbing that The Times-News presumes to judge which aspects of history are worthy of study. And although most Idahoans probably don't wish another initiative on gay rights, the unfolding stream of letters on your editorial page is testimony to the fascination, if not obsession, which the subject arouses in your readership.

Conservatives perceive homosexuality in terms of biblical proscriptions; liberals see the issue primarily as one of social discrimination. The arguable fact is that a small percentage of human beings do not experience attraction to the opposite sex; scientists are busily researching hormonal influences, differences in brain anatomy and prenatal factors.

Although the origin is unknown, the effect is powerful; neither societal condemnation nor internal conflict seems to deter its expression. Meanwhile, some historians and sociologists and even ordinary citizens might wonder how a virtually invisible, albeit despised, subculture survived in the hostile atmosphere of the West. Should such study be prohibited because that hostility persists today? Should the civil rights movement be off limits out of fear that recent sentiments might be inflamed? Might the study of Jewish history kindle a rebirth in Nazism?

Unrelenting opposition by Americans to the persecution of any group will preserve civil liberties.

But new insights into the nature of homosexuality, from both biological and social perspectives, will lead to greater understanding and tolerance. Restricting the range of intellectual inquiry in hopes of appeasing an intolerant but strident minority is a disservice to both causes.

Majority should retain chairmanship

Upon reading Sunday's editorial, I again felt frustration that so many people in Twin Falls had once again missed the point in the issue of the chairmanship of the county commission. A democracy is the rule of the majority, and allowing the lone Democrat to hold the position of chairman goes against that.

While the editors pointed out the juvenile detention programs and dairy cows are not partisan, good decisions for this county must be founded on fiscally conservative values, an area traditionally held by the Republicans, not the Democrats. While I believe Commissioner Maughan to be a nice man and a hard worker, he made a conscious decision to become a Democrat, and his party does not represent the majority's values.

Furthermore, the editors' suggestion that the Republican commissioners should not let parry "bosses" rule their decisions is nothing short of absurd. Twin Falls is no Tammany Hall, and the Twin Falls Republican Party does not have "bosses." It is, instead, filled with local citizens who donate their time and money to help make Twin Falls County the best place on earth to live.

We have the right to suggest that the majority retain the chairmanship. By the time that this letter is in the paper, the issue will have been decided. However, I hope that those who have allowed this issue to become sensationalized will realize that this had nothing to do with partisan power retention and everything to do with the desire to be accurately represented in our local government.

MELISSA F. BUSCHIER

Poor start for new commissioner

I attended the county commission meeting Monday, and Commissioner Dennis Maughan led the few assembled in the Pledge of Allegiance to the flag. The former commission had the practice of sharing or rotating the chair, and Maughan was next in line. The Republican Party, in replacing Reinke, say it necessary to oppose this practice, even though it had the 2-1 majority. It was clearly partisanship at its worst and foolishly extreme.

Sheriff Tousey spoke opposition, and I joined after, observing how few took part in city or county affairs; even though some preach that local government is closest to the people, the reality is few people participate or seem interested in any level of government.

Our pledge to "one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all" was quickly replaced by division and injustice. Really a poor start for the new commission, with Carla Reed forcing the chair on a very honorable Hemphlem, who one could clearly tell had little appetite for this forced affair. The R's are shooting themselves in the foot with this sort of thing, and though the wound may not be mortal, it clearly supports the fact that absolute ### power ultimately corrupts absolutely.

After all, the chairmanship may not mean all that much, and had the new commissioner differed just a bit, she could have easily become vice chair and certainly the two of us from the "public" who spoke were agreed. Did the R's really want Partisanship out of the Supreme Court, American citizenship and the good of all rather than narrow, self-serving, "I've got the power so let's do it" with no respect for anyone with another idea of better government. The plague of our time sees this same petty stuff acted out over and over at all levels of government with no end in sight.

When the Republican Party sees its own people, its own newspaper, say, "Whoa, wait a minute," it might be smart to hold up and look where you are headed.

Remembrance for Rosemary

Rosemary Evans, coordinator of the volunteers for SHBA (Senior Health Insurance Benefit Advisers) program and personal volunteer, will be greatly missed throughout the Magic Valley. As a coordinator, Rosemary touched

many senior citizens with her expertise and compassion for their problems. Her volunteers received encouragement and personal "thank you's" for the skills they provided. In addition, as a personal volunteer with VITA (tax volunteer), Rosemary served many people, young and old from every corner of our community, with her dedication to others. She eased the anxiety of many at tax time.

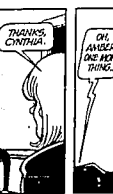

Rosemary touched the lives and hearts of many as a mentor, friend and volunteer. Her professionalism, with every hat she wore, coordinator or volunteer, continued regardless of her own health issues.

In essence, we can truly say Rosemary Evans was an ideal example of a friend and volunteer. Her expertise and knowledge will be missed. Rosemary's dedicated compassion for others can truly be classified as "above and beyond the call of duty."

Rosemary, as members of our local communities, we can only strive to follow your example: thus, we can build a better life for ourselves and others around us.

Rosemary, we will truly miss you.

IN BRIEF

CSI volleyball signs Brazilian middle blocker

TWIN FALLS — The College of Southern Idaho volleyball team is a step closer to completing its roster for the 1997 season. After a trip to Brazil, CSI coach Ben Stroud signed racema Kilianna de Lima Silva.

Silva, a 6-foot, 34-inch middle blocker, is described by Stroud as similar to present Golden Eagle Flavia Gabinio. Gabinio was named Volleyball Magazine's Player of the Year for the 1996 season for junior colleges. Gabinio played setter/outside hitter and is known for her power.

The signing of Silva takes the number of total players to 13 for this season. The four-time defending national championship team will try to extend its 161-game winning streak when the Golden Eagles open action August 28 at Utah Valley.

Ailing Jordan paces Bulls to 3-2 series lead

The Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — Flu-ridden and dehydrated, so sick you could see the distress in his eyes, Michael Jordan still managed to show how the best basketball player on the planet can take over the biggest game.

Jordan, playing despite a virus that had him vomiting until just before game time, scored 38 points and made a huge 3-pointer with 25 seconds left to lead the Chicago Bulls to a 90-88 victory over the Utah Jazz on Wednesday night in Game 5 of the NBA Finals.

"I've played a lot of seasons with Michael and I've never seen him so sick," Scottie Pippen said. "I didn't know if he would even put his uniform on."

"He's the greatest, and definitely the MVP in my mind."

Jordan scored 15 points in the final quarter and moved the Bulls within one victory of their fifth championship this

Big 3 fail to come through for Jazz

The Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — Karl Malone, John Stockton and Jeff Hornacek have carried the Utah Jazz all season. They lost their grip at the most crucial time Wednesday night.

In the biggest game ever played in the Delta Center, not one of the Jazz's big three could put together a big night. Not even the noisiest crowd in the NBA could pull the Jazz through.

"I don't practice lying," Malone said. "I'm really heartbroken as a player in a position like this."

The Jazz fumbled, fouled, misfired and otherwise missed a chance to pull Utah within one victory of the NBA title.

They watched the game's master, Michael Jordan, lift Chicago to a 90-88 victory and send the series back to the Windy City with the Bulls up 3-2.

The giddiness that had pervaded Utah this week evaporated quicker than Utah's 16-point second-quarter lead. For just the fourth time in 52 games this season, the Jazz lost at home. The Bulls broke Utah's 23-game homecourt win-

Free agency musical chairs await Utah team

The Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — While the talk is whether the Chicago Bulls will break up after the season, the Utah Jazz is in a similar spot.

Utah has six players who will be free agents this summer, including starters Jeff Hornacek and Bryon Russell.

"One of the hallmarks we've had is to keep our players, and not many of them have gotten away even when they've been free agents," Jazz owner Larry Miller said Wednesday. "It's our intent this summer to keep this team intact, but the overriding thing is that it has to work economically, too."

The Jazz has four others eligible for free agency: rookie swingman Shandon Anderson, backup center Antoine Carr, backup point guard Howard Eskinley and 12th man Stephen Howard.

"We won't allow any player to get into a salary situation that's disruptive to the team, but at the same time we understand that you have to pay good players good money," Miller said.

"We've never tried to plead poverty, just have it all make economic sense and fit together. We expect there will be a lot of discussions taking place this summer, but our intent is to come out of it intact."

Utah's unsettled free agency has drawn little attention in contrast to the hand-wringing in Chicago over the futures of coach Phil Jackson and players Michael Jordan, Scottie Pippen and Dennis Rodman.

Will Masterful Woods have an Open game?

The Associated Press

BETHESDA, Md. — There will be no 12-stroke victory at the U.S. Open. No one will shoot 18 under par at Congressional Country Club.

If Tiger Woods is to follow his Masters victory with a win this weekend, it will take a completely different kind of effort.

While Augusta National is a free-swinging course off the tee that gets tricky around the greens, the U.S. Open requires patience and precision on every shot during the 72-hole test of will that begins Thursday.

"It's just a good, long, solid, honest all-in-front-of-you golf course," Nick Faldo said Wednesday. "There is no let-up, no easy holes."

Woods won the Masters in a runaway in part because the wide fairways and nearly complete lack of rough enabled him to unleash his awesome length off the tee without worry of the consequences of an errant shot.

"At Augusta, it was like a driving range, bombs away on the driving," Woods said.

That is no longer the case. These fairways are narrow and the rough is often only 5 inches high but thick because of the cool, damp spring in this area.

Buhl Legion sweeps pair from Burley

Tribe takes squeaker after easy opening win

By Karen E. Nalezinek
Times-News writer

BURLEY — After a first-game 7-2 loss because of Burley errors, the Bobcats pushed Buhl to eight innings in the second before coming up a run short in a 13-12 American Legion baseball loss Wednesday.

Buhl's Aric Reynolds got the game-winning RBI in the eighth when he doubled home Troy Partin. Buhl reliever Jeremy Walker finished off the game by allowing no runs in the eighth and striking out two of the last three batters.

It was the second time in as many days the Burley squad lost by one run in the nightcap. Only the first game counts in league standings, however.

Buhl (4-1) scored first in the opener when Brett Ross scampered home from third on a double steal in the third inning.

The Tribe went on to score five more in the fourth to take the 6-0 advantage, after two Buhl batters were hit by pitches and three others singled. Two catcher errors overthrowing second base also proved costly.

Burley's Mitch Adams broke the ice for the Bobcats by singling to score Derek Wilkinson in the fourth. Second baseman Brandon Clegg was responsible for Burley's second score when his single plated Wilkinson, aboard with a double.

The Bobcats (2-4) completed better in game two, scoring four in the third inning to tie the game 4-4. Two runs came on RBI singles by Jesse Smith and Andy Burdette. J.T. Linnert and Adam Hope scored on sacrifice flies by Wilkinson and Kyle Redder.

After another tie at 6-6, the Tribe went on a hitting spree in the sixth to score five runs, two of which were unearned. Partin, who proved to be a hitting force for Buhl by going 3-for-5, scored his team's 10th run with his third single of the game.

"I think we hit better in the second game. We just didn't make adjustments soon enough," said Buhl coach Dave Slatten, who watched his team lose a 12-8 lead that sent the game into an extra inning. "(Burley) battled back and completed well. We just didn't have the courage to get the job done."

Down by four at their final at-bat, Bobcat Morgan Anderson hit a solid shot past second and then beat the throw to second base. Teammate Bartome followed with a double to score Anderson. Buhl then got two consecutive outs before Linyr hit a double of his own and Hope singled to score two more runs.

The tying run came on a Buhl error when Wilson's ground ball to second was thrown past first base, allowing Hope to score.

"This showed we have guts," said Burley head coach Matt Harr. "We just played guys way out of position because I'm trying to give everyone a chance while we slowly get to our lineup."

means the player can't go for the green but must merely pitch out of the rough with an 8-iron or less and hope for a one-putt par.

"You're in 6-iron, 4-iron, 3-iron range a lot on this golf course," Faldo said, referring to the demanding approach shots Congressional requires. Those are clubs that can't be hit out of this rough.

While Augusta was made for Woods, the U.S. Open was made for players like Faldo, Colin Montgomerie, Greg Norman, Nick Price, Tom Lehman, Ernie Els and — among the best long shots — Jim Furyk.

That group of players drives the ball with accuracy and they all have the composure to deal with the frustrations of U.S. Open play.

"The winner will make many bogeys, and likely will have a double bogey or higher on his card."

It is those inevitable disasters at the Open that require the patience to know that par is a good score, a very good score.

expires after the finals, has been listening to offers from other teams and has been noncommittal over whether he intends to remain with the Bulls.

Jordan has said he won't return unless Jackson does. Pippen says he expects to be traded and Rodman is expected to be told to take his act elsewhere.

The Jazz have managed to keep their future out of the spotlight despite having nearly as many unsettled issues.

Miller and coach Jerry Sloan are confident that Horacek, who makes $2.4 million, will return.

"Jeff's values, what he's looking for at this point in his career and after his career, fit absolutely parallel to what the team's doing," Miller said. "I'm confident when Jeff and I sit down to talk it will work itself out."

But the futures of Russell, Anderson, Carr and Easley aren't as clear cut.

Russell, a third-year small forward, is looking for a major raise from his current salary of $385,000.

He figures to get several offers from other teams impressed by his well-rounded offensive game and the defense he has played against Jordan during this series.

Russell is considered by many to be the ideal, elusive link that would connect Utah to the top in the Western Conference.

"They wouldn't want to get rid of their missing link," he said.

His preference, he said, is to stay in Utah for a long time. Anderson, a second-round

The player the Bulls can thank for getting them this close to Jordan, who sucked the life out of a wild crowd and sapped the resolve from the Jazz by making clutch play after clutch play down the stretch.

Even when he had his one mortal moment, missing a go-ahead foul shot in the final minute, Jordan made up for it by scrambling for the offensive rebound to set up his big 3-pointer.

"Sometimes you've got to come out and do what you've got to do," Jordan said. "We wanted it real bad, and me as a leader had to do my best, and hopefully the team would have to rally around me."

The Jazz, who had taken over the momentum in the series by winning the two previous games, got a lesson in making big plays at the big moments.

streak and the heart of an entire state.

Malone, the league's MVP, couldn't overcome foul trouble and a ferocious Chicago defense that kept him away from the basket all night.

"It makes me feel bad because I didn't do some things for the team," he said. "I didn't recognize a lot of stuff."

He scored a team-high 19 points but was 1-for-6 from the field in the second half and had just one point in the fourth quarter.

We forced Malone a couple of

And they learned it the hard way by repeatedly botching things down the stretch to have their 23-game home winning streak broken by one when Jordan went to the free throw line with 46 seconds left. He made the first and missed the second, then charged into the lane and picked up the loose ball after it was batted around.

Karl Malone scored only one basket in the second half, shot an airball — a bad airball — on his final attempt with about a minute left and then failed to commit a foul when Utah needed to stop the clock.

Jeff Hornacek missed a 3-pointer with three seconds left that would have tied it and John Stockton, needing to make his first free throw and intentionally missed the second as the Jazz trailed by three with 0.2 seconds left, didn't even make the first.

"I had a bad game, but the sun will still come up tomorrow," Malone said, his voice nearly cracking with emotion. "I'll be all right. I won't do anything crazy, but I have a quiet place I have to get away to right now."

After coming back from a 16-point deficit in the first half and an 8-point hole early in the fourth quarter, the Bulls found themselves broken by one when Jordan went to the free throw line with 46 seconds left. He made the first and missed the second, then charged into the lane and picked up the loose ball after it was batted around.

The Bulls reset their offense and passed the ball inside to Pippen posting up, and he threw it out to Jordan when he was about to be double-teamed.

Jordan calmly swished the 3-pointer to give Chicago an 88-85 lead.

"This was a desperation game for us and we just had to commit this team better than we did," Pippen said. "We had to deal with the sickness and injuries and somehow he was able to give us that effort."

Greg Ostertag scored on a dunk to cut Chicago's lead to 88-87 with 15 seconds left, and the Jazz then seemed to brink out under the pressure.

The Bulls rebounded to Pippen in the backcourt and Malone had a chance to foul him and stop the clock.

But Malone, perhaps not wanting to pick up his fifth foul, let Pippen dribble past him.

Before the Jazz knew it, Luc Longley had the ball under the basket for a dunk that restored the three-point lead.

All Utah could do after that was try for a 3-pointer, and Horacek had to attempt an off-balance one with three seconds left.

After Stockton missed his free throw with 0.2 seconds left, the raucous crowd at the Delta Center filed out silently, knowing that their franchise's best chance for its first title had probably passed.

feet out from where he's much more comfortable shooting the ball," Chicago's Scottie Pippen said, "and it made the difference."

The Bulls double-teamed the first pick of Stockton all night, holding the game's career assist leader to five assists, just one in the fourth quarter.

Stockton did manage a crucial 3-pointer as the shot clock wound down to put the Jazz up 84-81 with 3:05 left.

But with 0.2 seconds to go and Utah down 90-87, he missed the first of two free throws to end the night. He hopes that the Jazz could foul it when

None of the big three struggled more than Horacek, who drew two fouls in the game's first 22 seconds and didn't recover. He was 2-for-11 from the field under Pippen's relentless defense.

The "other" Jazz kept Utah close. Greg Ostertag had 13 points and 15 rebounds. Chris Morris and Bryon Russell each were 3-for-5 from 3-point range and each scored 11 points.

But the Jazz shot just 24 percent in the fourth quarter (4-for-17). Malone, Stockton and Horacek were a combined 2-for-10. The Jazz blamed themselves.

"We jumped off to a 14, 16-point lead. We were doing everything that we're capable of doing," Malone said. "The thing about it, when you stop playing defense, your offense doesn't come as easily."

The Jazz' false precision attack fell apart like a cheap watch.

"When we don't do what we're supposed to do as a group, we end up taking a lot of outside shots, a lot of desperation shots," Stockton said.

Even the Delta fan was less than its usual ear-splitting self, and when Jordan hit the 3-pointer that put Utah up 88-85 with 25 seconds left, the sudden silence was deafening.

IN THE BLEACHERS

By Stuvo Moore

Chicago's bullpen was shaky in the first half, but they settled down in the second half to secure the win.

"There's another one!"

Surgery could finish Graf's tennis career

VIENNA, Austria (AP) - Steffi Graf, once the preeminent champion of women's tennis, could be done as a top player, her career in danger following knee surgery.

The surgeon who operated on her left knee — a procedure that will sideline her four to six months — said there is no guarantee she can resume playing on the tour.

"That is certainly our aim," Dr. Reinhard Weinstabl told The Associated Press by telephone. "Whether that aim can be reached one cannot say now."

Graf, winner of 21 Grand Slam events, underwent two hours of surgery Tuesday to repair cartilage and tendon damage.

She will definitely miss the next two Grand Slam events, Wimbledon and the U.S. Open, in which she is the defending champion in both, and could be out for the year.

Graf, who will be 28 Saturday, released a statement after the operation saying she was "confident that I will return to the sport which I love so much — and in good health."

However, Weinstabl was less certain about such prospects. He said the German star's long history of problems with her left knee complicated her recovery. Graf was out three months earlier this year after arthroscopic surgery on the knee.

She was transferred Wednesday from a private clinic in Weinstabl said Graf will return often during her rehab to the Wiener Privatklinik, the private hospital where he operated on her.

Huffins takes early lead in decathlon

Indiana native competes without Dan O'Brien, who is injured

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) - Without having to contend with Dan O'Brien, Chris Huffins is thriving at the USA Track and Field Championships in his 43rd neighborhood.

Huffins, who grew up five minutes from where the five-day meet is being held, at Indiana University Track and Field Stadium, surged into the lead Wednesday after three events of the decathlon with 2,521 points.

The first three finishers in the event — and nearly all the other events at the championships — will qualify for the U.S. team that will compete at the world championships in Greece in August.

O'Brien, the world record-holder, three-time world champion and 1996 Olympic gold medalist, missed the meet because of a stress fracture in his right leg, opening the way for someone to end his four-year reign as national champion.

The most logical candidates were Steve Fritz and Huffins, the 2-3 finishers behind O'Brien at last year's Olympic trials.

"This is the first time since I've been a decathlete that I've prepared so hard to win," said Huffins, the 10th-place finisher at the Atlanta Games. "There's no added pressure because the goal has always been to be first, second or third."

"But I started the season with the goal of winning the national championships, whether Dan was here or not. I think I'm the favorite, but I thought I was the favorite even two weeks ago (before O'Brien withdrew)."

"I do a lot of visualization. I'm running races in my head and talking to myself all the time, much to the chagrin of my finances." Huffins, the decathlon world record-holder in the 100 meters with a clocking of 10.22 seconds at last year's trials, opened competition Wednesday by posting the fastest time in the sprint, 10.16.

He followed that with the best long jump among 20 competitors, leaping 26 feet, 6 3/4 inches, and threw 49-11 in the shot put, second best behind 1988 Olympian Gary Kinder's 51-5 3/4.

Chris Huffins of Brooklyn, N.Y., competes in the shot put at the USA Track and Field Championships Wednesday in Indianapolis. He grew up minutes away from the site of the meet.

Mario Satagna was in second place with 2,623 points and Fritz, the fourth-place finisher at the Olympics, was third with 2,610 points.

Still to be contested Wednesday were the high jump and 400 meters. The decathlon competition will be completed Thursday with the 110 hurdles, discus, pole vault, javelin and 1,500 meters. The heptathlon, the women's multievent competition, also began Wednesday, and it too was missing its biggest star — Jackie Joyner-Kersey, the two-time Olympic and world champion, the five-time national champion and world record-holder, who is competing only in the long jump.

SPORTS IN BRIEF

Slaney suspension befuddles lawyer

INDIANAPOLIS - The latest saga in the Mary Slaney mystery took another wild turn Wednesday, when USA Track & Field suspended her from the national championships, but couldn't tell her lawyer why.

A track and field source, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, said USA's five-member drug custodial board had taken the action against Slaney on Tuesday night.

Meanwhile, Slaney's lawyer, Jim Coleman, said by telephone from Durham, N.C., he had received a letter from USAITF saying that she had tested positive for high levels of testosterone was incorrect.

Coleman said he then asked USAITF what was the problem and didn't get a satisfactory answer.

BoSox player charged with assault on wife

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. - Boston Red Sox outfielder Wilfredo Cordero threatened to kill his wife as police arrested him after an early morning altercation that left her nose bloodied, according to court testimony Wednesday.

As he was being led away, Cordero asked the police officer if he could kiss his daughter goodbye. But when Cordero went to kiss the 9-month-old, he also "forcefully" said something in Spanish to his wife, officer Sean Tierney said.

"We said to Mrs. Cordero, 'What did he just say to you,'" Tierney testified before Judge Arthur Sherman decided not to keep Cordero in custody. "She said, 'He said he's going to kill me.'"

"We asked the 15-year-old son what he said. He said, 'He's going to kill her.'"

An innocent plea was entered on Cordero's behalf at his arraignment Wednesday, and Cordero was released on bail provided he stays away from his wife.

Sampras smokes opponent on grass

LONDON - Pete Sampras, playing his first singles match on grass this year, beat Javier Frana of Argentina 6-3, 6-2 Wednesday to move into the third round of the Queen's Club tournament.

But No. 2 seed Michael Chang was ousted by Australia's Scott Draper, 6-3, 2-6, 7-6 (8-6). No. 3 Goran Ivanisevic fared better, advancing to the third round with a 7-6 (7-1), 6-3 win over Leander Paes of India.

LB Greene faces fine for missing camp

CHARLOTTE, N.C. - Kevin Greene was a no-show as the Carolina Panthers opened a three-day minicamp Wednesday, and the team said it would fine the 1996 NFL sack leader for his absence.

The action meant that Greene, who joined the Panthers last year and quickly became a fan favorite, had his arm-waving, fist-jumping style, is the first player in franchise history to face sanctions for sleeping practice.

Seahawks ink pact with BYU tight end

SEATTLE - Iula Mill, chosen by the Seattle Seahawks as the sixth round of the NFL draft despite a knee injury, has become the first of the club's five picks to sign a contract.

The 6-foot-4, 265-pound Brigham Young tight end agreed Tuesday to accept a $532,000 deal that runs three years and includes a $41,000 signing bonus.

Cal State Northridge cuts men's programs

LOS ANGELES - California State University, Northridge, on Wednesday cut four men's varsity sports programs — baseball, volleyball, soccer and swimming and diving — due to budget and gender-equity concerns.

The sports will be discontinued effective for the 1997-98 season. Cal State Northridge will continue development of its men's golf program, which had earlier been placed on the potential chopping block.

Gender-equity regulations taking effect in fall 1998 would have forced CSUN to add at least three women's sports to maintain all of its men's sports programs.

The sports department is already $800,000 in debt so adding women's sports was out of the question.

Harper could earn $3.5 million as Redskin

ASHBURN, Va. - The Washington Redskins took a gamble Wednesday that wide receiver Alvin Harper can flourish once again in coach Norv Turner's offensive system.

Harper, who helped Dallas win consecutive Super Bowls while Turner was the Cowboys' offensive coordinator, signed a three-year deal with the Redskins that could pay him $3.5 million.

Cubbies snap bad streak; Rockies bomb Braves

CHICAGO (AP) - Scott Servais cheered the go-ahead run on a wild pitch by Greg McMichael with two outs in the eighth inning Wednesday, and the Chicago Cubs stopped a six-game losing streak with a 5-4 win over the New York Mets.

After John Olerud hit a three-run homer to the chair in the top of the eighth that made it 4-all, the Cubs came back.

Servais led off with a single, moved up on Roy Sanchez's sacrifice and took third on a ground-out. But McMichael (3-5) threw a wild pitch with a 1-2 count on Doug Glanville.

Terry Adams (1-3) pitched 1 2-3 innings and got the win. The Mets lost for only the fifth time in their last 13 games.

Rockies 9, Braves 6

DENVER - Andres Galarraga and Jeff Reed each hit two-run homers as the Colorado Rockies won successive home games for the first time since late May.

Galarraga had three hits and led the majors with 68 RBIs. Reed had three hits and drove in three runs. Fred McGriff, Chipper Jones and Eddie Perez homered for Atlanta.

Marlins 6, Giants 3

SAN FRANCISCO - A day after Kevin Brown pitched a no-hitter against San Francisco, the Florida Marlins relied on their bats to beat the Giants.

Bobby Bonilla homered and drove in four runs and Moises Alou had three hits as the Marlins rebounded.

Reds 2, Pirates 1

CINCINNATI - Terry Pendleton's

pinch double broke a seventh-inning tie as the Cincinnati Reds came from behind for the second consecutive night.

Expos 4, Phillies 3

MONTREAL - Mark Grudizlanek's RBI double with two outs in the eighth inning lifted Montreal to its sixth straight victory.

In the eighth, F.P. Santangelo singled with one out off Jerry Spradlin (1-3) and Mike Lansing grounded into a fielder's choice. Grudizlanek followed with a liner into the left field corner. Jim Bullinger (4-5) allowed three runs and six hits in eight innings and won his second straight start.

Mariners hand Clemens 1st loss; Indians edge Brewers

TORONTO (AP) - Roger Clemens lost Wednesday for the first time after 11 victories this season when the Seattle Mariners beat the Toronto Blue Jays 5-1.

Jeff Fassero (6-2) allowed five hits in one run, struck out seven and walked two.

Clemens suffered his first loss since the New York Yankees beat him 4-2 at Fenway Park on Sept. 28, 1996, when he was with the Boston Red Sox. Clemens (11-1) gave up five runs, four earned on seven hits with five strikeouts and three walks over seven 1/2 innings.

Tigers 4, Athletics 2

DETROIT - Curtis Priddy's two-run single in the eighth helped rally Detroit over Oakland.

Priddy's bases-loaded single off Mike Muller capped a three-run rally that gave the Tigers a sweep of the two-game series.

Royals 6, Angels 1

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Gill Davis drove in three runs in three hits, including his fourth home run in five games, and Jose Rosado (6-3) allowed one run in eight innings for Kansas City. Davis' 10th homer, a 420-foot shot to left-center on an 0-1 pitch in the third, put him 70th on the all-time home run list and continued his torrid week at the plate.

Rangers 9, Twins 6

MINNEAPOLIS - Juan Gonzalez broke out of a terrible slump with two home runs and a double as Texas stopped its season-high losing streak at four games with a 9-6 win over the Minnesota on Wednesday night.

Reinke will discuss new role while on talk show

TWIN FALLS - Brent Reinke will appear tonight and Sunday on Idaho Public Television's public affairs talk show, "Dialogue," to discuss his new role as head of the Idaho Department of Juvenile Corrections.

Reinke, who left the Twin Falls County Commission in May, will talk to host Joan Curran-Hansen about his solutions to the difficult issues facing the agency - more juvenile offenders, smaller budgets and embarrassments that plagued the previous administration - said a news release from public television.

Viewers may call in with questions at 1-800-973-9800. The show will air at 8:30 p.m. today. A rerun will air at 5:30 p.m. Sunday. There are no call-ins on Sunday. Call 373-7388 for more information.

Rollover pickup accident seriously injures Jerome man

WENDELL - A Jerome man was seriously injured when his pickup rolled north of Wendell Wednesday.

William B. Harvey, 18, was driving on state Highway 46 when he fell asleep, drove off the road and rolled his pickup, the report said. The wreck was at about 6:09 a.m., S 172 north of Interstate 84, the report said.

Harvey was taken by helicopter to St. Alphonsus Regional Medical Center in Boise with a broken pelvis and head injuries, the report said. Harvey was listed in serious condition Wednesday night.

Residents break up burglary attempt at minimart in Buhl

BUHL - Sharp-eyed residents broke up an attempt to break into The Corner Mart early Wednesday.

A Buhl police report said a group of people were spotted trying to get into the convenience store at 1212 a.m. They broke glass on a rear window on the building at 551 Broadway Ave. S. but did not get into the store.

They were scared off by the witnesses, who were from the store, the report said.

Tuesday morning at 5:15 a.m., a clerk at the Circle K store, 229 Broadway Ave. N., reported hearing banging on a back storage room door, Buhl police said. No one was wakened when the clerk checked on the noise, but a back storage room had been broken into.

Twin Falls Municipal Band performs tonight in City Park

TWIN FALLS - The Twin Falls Municipal band performs at 8 p.m. tonight in City Park.

Under the direction of guest conductor Dr. George Haisel, the band will present music from the 1910s. Selections include medleys of ragtime and Tin Pan Alley, Sousa marches and a Gustav Holst suite. A special march will be performed, written to honor Twin Falls by the band's first conductor.

The band's free weekly concerts are held every Thursday through Aug. 7.

Wendell seeks construction bids for city water projects

WENDELL - Wendell city officials will open bids Friday on two city construction projects for improving its water service.

One project involves installing 1,919 feet of 6-inch waterline, including valves and fittings. The 1910s. Selections include medleys of ragtime and Tin Pan Alley, Sousa marches and a Gustav Holst suite. A special march will be performed, written to honor Twin Falls by the band's first conductor.

The other project involves constructing an 80,000-gallon water storage tank and pump house, plus installing booster pumps, chlorination equipment, control system, and a pump and motor into an existing 350-foot-diameter tank.

The property to be annexed consists of the city sewer layout, 17.4 acres of city property currently leased by a private individual and the three Island State Park.

Rollover car accident east of Fairfield injures 2 people

FAIRFIELD - A car rollover east of Fairfield Tuesday afternoon injured two people.

A Camas County Sheriff's Department report said a car driven by Patricia Autrey, 65, of Salmon, went off the road on U.S. Highway 20, overcorrected, came back on the road, went back off and rolled.

The wreck was at 1:38 p.m. near the entrance Mine Road, the report said.

Autrey and a 10-year-old girl passenger were taken to Wood River Medical Center in Prineville by Camas County Ambulance, the report said. Autrey was treated for her injuries and released from the hospital.

No food stamps for community service

By Pat Marcantonio Times-News writer

- BOISE - The working poor has gained new meaning, with welfare reform's emphasis on employment.

But a federal act has nipped the state's efforts to change the definition of work in the food-stamp program to include community service.

The state wanted to allow recipients to work 20 hours in a paid job or 20 hours in unpaid community service and remain eligible.

But according to the federal Fair Labor Standards Act, recipients must be paid at least minimum wage for any work, said Patti Campbell, the food-stamp bureau chief in Boise. The federal government funds 100 percent of the food-stamp program in the state.

"We're kind of back at square one,"

she said.

Under a federal requirement that went into effect in December, food-stamp recipients 18 to 50 years old, able-bodied and without dependents must work an average of 20 hours each week to remain eligible for the public benefit.

Now, Idaho's community-service idea might go back to the state advisory committee that came up with it.

Allowing community service would provide more employment opportunities for food-stamp recipients, said Rep. Wendy Jaquet, D-Ketchum, a member of the advisory committee.

"I would allow people in communities where there weren't jobs to get ready to move to another job and not be cut off (of food stamps) at three months," she said.

When she headed the Sun Valley-Ketchum Chamber of Commerce she worked with community-service workers.

"We often hired them because they got there on time and did the job and we were grateful," Jaquet said.

Paid or unpaid work is valuable in state and federal attempts to get welfare recipients to work, added Bill

Walker with the Department of Health and Welfare in Boise.

"And therefore it helps improve a participant's employability so they can move toward being self-reliant," he said.

Food-stamp recipients can lose their benefits, if they quit a job or reduce their number of work hours without good cause.

The average number of people receiving food stamps in Idaho has increased over the past five years, Health and Welfare says.

During the 1991 budget year, an average of 65,052 people received the benefit. During the 1995 budget year, 86,763 people were on the food-stamp rolls.

In 1996, the number of recipients dropped to 86,007.

Junction overhaul: Temporary danger for future safety

By John Rupprecht Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - Massive road construction at the junction of U.S. highways 93 and 30 is transforming the historically dangerous and inconvenient intersection into a state-of-the-art interchange, complete with on and off ramps and an overpass.

But until construction is completed in late October, the junction may be more dangerous than ever.

At least four accidents near the intersection west of Twin Falls during the last two weeks have prompted officials to urge motorists to slow down.

"There's nothing tricky about it," said Cpl. Robert Bingham of the Idaho State Police. Drivers are "just inattentive, totally inattentive."

The temporary diversion routes traffic around the work area, and motorists on Highway 30 have met unexpected curves and short delays. The speed limit for the construction area is 40 mph, with a recommended speed of 25-35 mph on curves, the Idaho Transportation Department said.

And because the construction area is an enhanced speeding zone, tickets will cost motorists $77.50, Bingham said.

"Probably the biggest thing is to slow down so you can negotiate the turns and see the oncoming traffic," ITD Project Coordinator Connie Jones said, offering tips to drivers dealing with the diversion. "We've made some adjustments in the striping and some adjustments in the signing. Hopefully that will help the situation."

The $6.5 million project will improve the heavily traveled intersection which handles traffic between Filer and Twin Falls and also serves as a junction to Jackpot and Wells, Nev.

Highway 30 was dangerous and improvements directly needed because power poles right on the edge of the road left no room for a shoulder, decreasing drivers' maneuverability and increasing accidents with motorists who had car trouble, Jones said.

The absence of a turning lane at the junction with Highway 93 was also perilous, she said.

When the interchange is complete, traffic will be much improved and motorists will be treated to smoother, more gradual turns, thanks in part to on and off ramps and an overpass, the ITD said.

"You won't end up with a blinking light type of thing - you get to avoid all that," Jones said. "Nobody will be crossing in front of anybody. (Motorists will) avoid those situations where somebody gets T-boned."

In addition to the interchange, a mile of Highway 30 from the junction east, and a mile of Highway 93 from the junction south, are being replaced, the ITD said.

In 1998, four miles of Highway 30 from Curry Crossing to Twin Falls will be reconstructed in a $5-7.5 million project. One mile of Highway 30 from Filer to the junction was realigned and widened last year.

Regatta under green flag despite high water level

By Karen E. Noleznak Times-News writer

BUURLEY - The rising Snake River is a concern but not a problem as Minnicassia area officials gear up for the 21st Annual Idaho Regatta June 27-29.

Longtime regatta planner Mark Maier said the regatta committee had to deal with the high water level in 1996, but the river went down before the boat races began.

"Unless we have disastrous storms that would cause a lot more water we should be OK," said Maier, chairman of the committee. "In 1988 the water came over the retaining walls about the same time of year, but they went back down and the water went on as normal."

He's hoping for the same outcome this year, since no other place can handle the event on short notice.

Cassia County Sheriff's Captain Terry Bingham said there's always a chance high waters could affect the regatta, but the department is going ahead with plans as scheduled.

Water levels are at 26,900 cubic feet per second below Minidoka Dam and 35,000 cfs below Pallasades Dam, according to the National Weather Service in Pocatello. Bingham said the flow below Minidoka was expected to peak at 38,000 cfs Monday.

"When we had this same situation in 1998 some of the area was soggy so we just moved people back 10 to 20 feet," Bingham said. "And we'll do that again this year if we need to."

For now, Maier said all organizers can do is wait for Mother Nature to do her job and continue preparing for the event that brings in around $3.5 million to the community.

"It's nationally televised - as it was in 1995 and will be again in 1998 - about 70 competitors in six different classes are expected to race June 28 and 29.

For the first time, the regatta will host a free admission "happy hour" June 27 at 5 p.m. Boat testing and tuning will take place between 11 a.m. and 5 p.m. before a last-chance qualifying race begins at 4:45 p.m.

"It's modeled after NASCAR racing where sprint car qualifying is determined by timed laps that places them in a field," Maier said.

Another first for the event will be a golf scramble June 26 at the Fondrosas Golf Course.

"That will hopefully start bringing people in on Wednesday which means even more outside dollars for the community," Maier said.

In an attempt to promote family attendance, Maier said the committee is

County hires consultant for planning commission

By N.S. Nohkventevd Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - Twin Falls County has hired a consultant to make sure the planning and zoning commission makes progress on a new zoning ordinance.

"We want it to go, whatever it takes," county Commissioner Marvin Hupleman said.

County commissioners thought the process was getting bogged down, he said. They wanted to keep it moving along, but they are not trying to force it.

To that end, the county hired consultant Mike Pepper to act as "facilitator." Pepper will help the planning commission reach a decision efficiently and still address everyone's concerns, Pepper said.

The cost to the county will be an estimated $7,150. Pepper's contract is based on a number of meetings and preparation time at a rate of $50 an hour. But there may be more meetings than in the estimate, he said.

Pepper brought a proposed time schedule to the planning and zoning commission's Wednesday lunch workshop. The commission has suspended work on the zoning ordinance over the past few months, to focus on its livestock confinement operations segment.

Pepper's time line lists public hearings on the revised zoning ordinance by mid-July. He suggested the commission identify points of concern that need to be changed in the ordinance, rather than getting bogged down in endless discussion of a particular issue's details.

With suggested changes incorporated in a revised ordinance draft, the commission could make decisions on those changes at its next workshop June 26.

Once the livestock ordinance is complete, the planning commission would tackle the main body of the zoning ordinance again. Commissioners Wednesday discussed the possibility of scrapping the ordinance, which got substantial criticism during public hearings last fall.

The alternative would be to amend the county's existing ordinance to follow the comprehensive plan passed in 1995.

Low-flying Air Force planes rattle Spokane residents

SPOKANE (AP) — The Air Force apologized Wednesday after residents of the city's South Hill complained they were startled late at night by low-flying cargo planes. "I've never been so scared in my life," said Susanne Hatcher, who was folding laundry and watching television at 11 p.m. Tuesday when the planes rumbled overhead. "I thought a plane was crashing into my house." The Air Force will investigate whether the 10 C-341 and C-330 planes violated Federal Aviation Administration rules, said Maj. Matt Durham from the Air Force's Special Operations Command in Jacksonville, Fla. Aircraft are required to fly at least 1,000 feet over populated areas.

The planes are from McChord Air Force Base outside Tacoma. They were taking part in an Army Ranger exercise that will continue through Thursday at Fairchild Air Force Base outside Spokane.

Crews of the cargo planes have been ordered to ensure that they fly above 1,000 feet when they make another flight over the Spokane area Thursday night, Durham said.

"The Air Force apologizes for any disruption caused by our aircraft," he said.

Regatta

Continued from C1 continuing to make "the party along the river" more enjoyable for families.

The separate family viewing area, created three years ago, will again be available and more activities will be available for children, such as Burger King's whopper hopper, a cardboard maze made by Declo High School seniors and a tot tent for children ages three to five.

"This is a professional sporting event that benefits the whole community," Maier said. "I hope that families that may have heard negative things or had a bad experience in the past will come out and give it another try."

Family-pack tickets, which cover two adults and children under 12, can be purchased for $23 in advance or $26 at the gate. Adults will be charged $10 in advance or $12 when the events begin, and children under 12 can get in for $5 in advance and $7 at the gate.

Times-News staff writer Karen E. Nalecznik can be reached in Burley at 677-1042.

Consultant

Continued from C1 The comprehensive plan calls for limits on rural residential development, sets residential density in agricultural areas and calls for density limits on dairies and feedlots.

"One planning commissioner criticized the process. "We're not doing what we're supposed to be doing," Stan Watts said.

The group was charged with telling folks where to build dairies or subdivisions, not how to build them — there are regulatory agencies that do that already, he said. Planners also discussed the merits of passing the livestock ordinance separately. But most favor completing each segment and then combining the two before attempting to get them adopted.

The final ordinance would be reviewed by the county commissioners, who may hold public hearings of their own, before the ordinance becomes law.

VALLEY IN BRIEF

Wreck injures 2 Oregon residents

TWIN FALLS — A car rolled and wrecked on Interstate 84 early Wednesday, injuring two Oregon people.

Idaho State Police reports said the car rolled at 2:07 a.m. after the driver fell asleep and drifted off the road near milepost 177. The car overcorrected, skidded and rolled off the road.
Willow Decker, 20, and Rebecca Davis, 21, both of Eugene, Ore., were taken to Magic Valley Regional Medical Center by ambulance. Both were treated for injuries and released.

Bridge ice detectors go in today

TWIN FALLS — Installation of ice detectors on the Perrine and Hansen bridges is expected to begin today, the Idaho Transportation Department said.

The ice detectors will be operational for the winter of 1997-98.
They will use new technology to enhance public safety and aid maintenance crews on the bridges connecting Twin Falls to communities to the north and east. The detectors will help determine when sanding or other maintenance is necessary for motorists' safety.

Shotwells Inc. of Twin Falls is the contractor for the $222,000 project.

Bellevue council meets tonight

BELLEVUE — The Bellevue City Council will meet at 7 p.m. today at City Hall.

Agenda items include: a water/sewer-line extension; the Bergin lot-line shift; the Muldoon Subdivision; resolution to create a local improvement district from Spruce Street North on the east side of Highway 75 for curbs, gutters, sidewalks and street lamps; a resolution establishing water and sewer hookup payments; an ordinance to amend the local drinking age in the old city code; second reading of the proposed manufactured housing and townhouse ordinances; and activity in the parks.

TWIN FALLS

M. Ray Larsen

God looked around his garden and He found an empty place. He then looked down upon His earth...

He broke our hearts to love you, but you didn't go alone. For part of us went with you, the day God called you home.

He was born Feb. 3, 1921, in Twin Falls, to Marion and Lena Larson. He was raised in the Magic Valley area...

He is survived by his son, Russell Larson; three daughters, Lana (Robert) Sorenson, Lisa (Andrew) Snyder, and Lynne (Richard) Larson...

L.V. Triplett

L.V. Triplett, 86, of Twin Falls, died Monday, June 9, 1997, at St. Luke's Regional Medical Center in Boise.

He was born July 19, 1911, in Peggos, Okla., to Louis Everett and Minnie Belle Johnson Triplett.

He was raised in Pryor, Okla., where he also married Goldie Cain in 1931.

Oklahoma to Filer in 1933, where they farmed. Goldie preceded Virgil's death in August 1941.

Virgil was a member of the Filer Church of the Nazarene and helped build the church building in Filer, serving on the Board; Sunday School superintendent for 27 years...

Survivors include his wife, Ida; children, Robert J. (Reba) Triplet of Vernon, Ala., Janet L. (Ray) Johnson of Pasco, Wash., and Victor T. (Laird) Graham of Meridian; seven grandchildren...

Virgil came to know the Lord as his personal Savior as a young man at the age of 21 at a tent revival in Pryor, Okla.

He fully enjoyed his many friends and loved ones. Probably most treasured of all were his seven grandchildren and five great-grandchildren.

He will meet and you forget me, you have lost nothing; but if you meet JESUS CHRIST and forget Him you have lost everything.

Southern Idaho Cancer Center, P.O. Box 409, Twin Falls ID 83303-0409.

Low-flying Air Force planes rattle Spokane residents

SPOKANE (AP) — The Air Force apologized Wednesday after residents of the city's South Hill complained they were startled late at night by low-flying cargo planes. "I've never been so scared in my life," said Suzanne Hatcher, who was folding laundry and watching television at 11 p.m. Tuesday when the planes rumbled overhead. "I thought a plane was crashing into my house." The Air Force will investigate whether the 10 C-141 and C-130 planes violated Federal Aviation Administration rules, said Maj. Matt Durham from the Air Force's Special Operations Command in Jacksonville, Fla. Aircraft are required to fly at least 1,000 feet over populated areas.

The planes are from McChord Air Force Base outside Tacoma. They were taking part in an Army Ranger exercise that will continue through Thursday at Fairchild Air Force Base outside Spokane. Crews of the cargo planes have been ordered to ensure that they fly above 1,000 feet when they make another flight over the Spokane area Thursday night, Durham said. "The Air Force apologizes for any disruption caused by our aircraft," he said.

continuing to make "the party along the river" more enjoyable for families. The separate family viewing area, created three years ago, will again be available, and more activities will be available for children, such as Burger King's whopper hopper, a cardboard maze made by Declo High School seniors and a tent for children ages three to five. "This is a professional sporting event that benefits the whole community," Maier said. "I hope that families that may have heard negative things or had a bad experience in the past will come out and give it another try." Family-pack tickets, which cover two adults and children under 12, can be purchased for $23 in advance or $26 at the gate. Adults will be charged $10 in advance or $12 when the events begin, and children under 12 can get in for $5 in advance and $7 at the gate. Times-News staff writer Karen E. Nalcinok can be reached in Burley at 677-4042.

The comprehensive plan calls for limits on rural residential development, sets residential density in agricultural areas and calls for density limits on dairies and feedlots. One planning commissioner criticized the process. "We're not doing what we're supposed to be doing," Stan Watts said. The group was charged with telling folks where to build dairies or subdivisions; not how to build them — there are regulatory agencies that do that already, he said. Planners also discussed the merits of passing the livestock ordinance separately. But most favor completing each segment and then combining the two before attempting to get them adopted. The final ordinance would be reviewed by the county commissioners, who may hold public hearings of their own, before the ordinance becomes law. Times-News staff writer N.S. Nohkntvoel can be reached at 733-0931, Ext. 237.

VALLEY IN BRIEF

Wreck injures 2 Oregon residents
TWIN FALLS — A car rolled and wrecked on Interstate 84 early Wednesday, injuring two Oregon people. Idaho State Police reports said the car rolled at 2:07 a.m. after the driver fell asleep and drifted off the road near milepost 177. The car overcorrected, skidded and rolled off the road. Willow Decker, 20, and Rebecca Davis, 21, both of Eugene, Ore., were taken to Magic Valley Regional Medical Center by ambulance. Both were treated for injuries and released.

Bridge ice detectors go in today
TWIN FALLS — Installation of ice detectors on the Perrine and Hansen bridges is expected to begin today, the Idaho Transportation Department said. The ice detectors will be operational for the winter of 1997-98. They will use new technology to enhance public safety and aid maintenance crews on the bridges connecting Twin Falls to communities to the north and east. The detectors will help determine when sanding or other maintenance is necessary for motorists' safety. Shotwells Inc. of Twin Falls is the contractor for the $222,000 project.

Bellevue council meets tonight
BELLEVUE — The Bellevue City Council will meet at 7 p.m. today at City Hall. Agenda items include: a water/sewer-line extension; the Bergin lot-line shift; the Muldoon Subdivision; resolution to create a local improvement district from Spruce Street North on the east side of Highway 75 for curbs, gutters, sidewalks and street lamps; a resolution establishing water and sewer hookup payments; an ordinance to amend the legal drinking age in the old city code; second reading of the proposed manufactured housing and township ordinances; and activity in the parks. GOODING

Sarah E. Glauner 93, of Gooding, died Tuesday, June 10, 1997, at her granddaughter's, (Johanna and Dar' Wheeler's) residence in Hansen.

Sarah was born Aug. 10, 1903, in Oxford, Idaho, near Soda Springs, the daughter of Frank and Sarah (Clemens) Wheeler. She married Ben F. Glauner on Feb. 14, 1923, at Clover Creek, Idaho. Sadly, as her friends and family know, she was dedicated to her husband and family. She spent many years on the family farm south of Gooding. She was very active in community affairs, including being a 50-year member of the Gooding Grange.

She is survived by two sons, William Glauner of Seattle, Wash., and LeRoy (Wilma) Glauner of Gooding; four sisters, Lucy, Vera, Marna, and Jean; one brother, Fred; five grandchildren; seven great-grandchildren; and one great-great-grandchild. Sarah was preceded in death by her husband, Ben in 1984; a daughter, Erma Coder; and a grandson, Richard Coder. She will be dearly missed by her friends and family. The funeral will be held at 2 p.m. Friday at Demary's Gooding.

OBITUARIES

Chapel with the Rev. Andy Morris officiating. Burial will follow at the Elmwood Cemetery in Gooding. Friends may call from 1 to 7 p.m. today at the funeral chapel.

HAILEY

Donna Jo King 58, died Monday June 9, 1997, of natural causes at the home of her daughter, north of Hailey. She was born Oct. 6, 1938, in Englewood, Colo., the daughter of Donald and Roxie Pearl Cole. She received her B.A. degree from the University of Northern Colorado at Greeley, and her master's degree from the Department of English at Louisiana State University at Baton Rouge. Donna was a teacher from 1960 until 1988 in junior high, high school and college programs. She also worked in marketing and real estate in Colorado, Nevada and Florida. ### Low-flying Air Force planes rattle Spokane residents

SPOKANE (AP) — The Air Force apologized Wednesday after residents of the city's South Hill complained they were startled late at night by low-flying cargo planes. "We've never been so scared in my life," said Suzanne Hatcher, who was folding laundry and watching television at 11 p.m. Tuesday when the planes rumbled overhead. "I thought a plane was crashing into my house." The Air Force will investigate whether the 10 C-141 and C-130 planes violated Federal Aviation Administration rules, said Maj. Matt Durham from the Air Force's Special Operations Command in Jacksonville, Fla. Aircraft are required to fly at least 1,000 feet over populated areas.

The planes are from McChord Air Force Base outside Tacoma. They were taking part in an Army Ranger exercise that will continue through Thursday at Fairchild Air Force Base outside Spokane. Crews of the cargo planes have been ordered to ensure that they fly above 1,000 feet when they make another flight over the Spokane area Thursday night, Durham said.

"The Air Force apologizes for any disruption caused by our aircraft," he said.

The separate family viewing area, created three years ago, will again be available and more activities will be available for children, such as Burger King's whopper hopper, a cardboard maze made by Declo High School seniors and a tot tent for children ages three to five. "This is a professional sporting event that benefits the whole community," Maier said. "I hope that families that may have heard negative things or had a bad experience in the past will come out and give it another try." Family-pack tickets, which cover two adults and children under 12, can be purchased for $23 in advance or $26 at the gate. Adults will be charged $10 in advance or $12 when the events begin, and children under 12 can get in for $5 in advance and $7 at the gate. Times-News staff writer Karen E. The comprehensive plan calls for limits on rural residential development, sets residential density in agricultural areas and calls for density limits on dairies and feedlots. One planning commissioner criticized the process. "We're not doing what we're supposed to be doing," Stan Watts said. The group was charged with telling folks where to build dairies or subdivisions, not how to build them — there are regulatory agencies that do that already, he said. Planners also discussed the merits of passing the livestock ordinance separately. But most favor completing each segment and then combining the two before attempting to get them adopted. The final ordinance would be reviewed by the county commissioners, who may hold public hearings of their own, before the ordinance becomes law. Times-News staff writer N.S. ## VALLEY IN BRIEF

TWIN FALLS — A car rolled and wrecked on Interstate 84 early Wednesday, injuring two Oregon people. Idaho State Police reports said the car rolled at 2:07 a.m. after the driver fell asleep and drifted off the road near milepost 177. The car overcorrected, skidded and rolled off the road. Willow Decker, 20, and Rebecca Davis, 21, both of Eugene, Ore., were taken to Magic Valley Regional Medical Center by ambulance. Both were treated for injuries and released.
Bridge ice detectors go in today
TWIN FALLS — Installation of ice detectors on the Perrine and Hansen bridges is expected to begin today, the Idaho Transportation Department said. The ice detectors will be operational for the winter of 1997-98. They will use new technology to enhance public safety and aid maintenance crews on the bridges connecting Twin Falls to communities to the north and east. The detectors will help determine when sanding or other maintenance is necessary for motorists' safety. Showells Inc. of Twin Falls is the contractor for the $222,000 project.

Bellevue council meets tonight
BELLEVUE — The Bellevue City Council will meet at 7 p.m. today at City Hall. Agenda items include: a water/sewer-line extension; the Bergin lot-line shift; the Muldoon Subdivision resolution to create a local improvement district from Spruce Street North on the east side of Highway 75 for curbs, gutters, sidewalks and street lamps; a resolution establishing water and sewer hookup payments; an ordinance to amend the local drinking age in the old city code; second reading of the proposed manufactured housing and townhouse ordinances; and activity in the parks. Health agency seeks new quarters

By Mark Helz Times-News writer

JEROME - The steep wooden stairs leading to the basement storage room in the South Central District Health Department's Jerome office are a clear example of why the agency needs a new building here, Cheryl Juntunen said Wednesday.

"We shouldn't send our staff down here at all. Somebody could fall on these stairs and die," she said.

Juntunen, health district director, said the district's board of directors soon may lay plans to build a new Jerome office, even as a new central office is being built on the College of Southern Idaho campus in Twin Falls.

In Jerome, the agency has a good supply of expertise and programs, as well as an assessment of demand from the public and local government.

The problem is that the 1,600 or so square feet the agency has occupied for about five years in its office on South Lincoln just isn't enough anymore, she said.

"We're not looking for the Taj Mahal, but we'd like a place that's about twice as big as this one," she said.

Formed in 1971, the South Central District Health Department serves Blaine, Gooding, Camas, Cassia, Jerome, Lincoln, Minidoka and Twin Falls counties. The agency's two main purposes are preventive health-care programs - such as health screenings for seniors and immunizations - and environmental health services such as restaurant inspections.

What's next?

The South Central District Board of Health will discuss possible construction of a new Jerome office at 1:30 p.m. June 25 in the conference room at the district's Twin Falls office, 324 Second St. E.

Health department board Chairman Charles Parker said the population increase in the Magic Valley has put more demand on the agency.

The department has tried to expand its services in all the counties, but Twin Falls and Jerome have been earmarked for new buildings since an assessment of the district's needs about four years ago, he said.

The new building in Twin Falls, which should open in early December, will house basic services for Twin Falls County, as well as special services for the entire health district, Parker said. Special services include programs for disabled children, he said.

About $1.7 million probably will be spent on the new Twin Falls office, while preliminary estimates for the Jerome project are around $250,000, Parker said.

Linda Montgomery, Jerome County's health board representative, said people from Lincoln and Gooding counties have been coming to the already cramped Jerome office in increasing numbers.

Juntunen said one of the health district's most pressing needs in Jerome is for a planned parent/child clinic, as Jerome County has Idaho's second-highest teen pregnancy rate.

More space also is needed in Jerome for large meetings, such as training sessions for restaurant employees, she said.

Parker said the board first considered looking for an existing building in Jerome to rent or buy, but nothing adequate could be found. He said the health district may try to buy some of the seven acres now owned by the Southern Idaho Regional Communications Center for the new Jerome office.

SIRCOMM Manager Al Sunder said his agency and the health board have discussed a possible land purchase, but formal offers haven't been made.

Juntunen said the health district has saved money over the past four years for the construction projects. A grant from the Idaho Health Facility Authority could help pay for the new Twin Falls office, and the health district also might apply for a community development block grant for the Jerome project.

Parker said the health district has put its four old buildings in Twin Falls up for sale and would put the money from a sale toward the construction projects.

Times-News staff writer Mark Helz can be reached in Jerome at 324-6962.

IDAHO

Gem State site could end up being plutonium 'pits' depository

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — The U.S. Department of Energy is considering what to do with its plutonium "pits" — the spherical cores used to trigger hydrogen bombs.

And although it is unlikely, the Idaho National Engineering and Environmental Laboratory could be where they are broken apart and ground into fuel for commercial power reactors.

Energy Department officials visited Tuesday to gather information for an environmental impact statement that will address where plutonium from the Pantex weapons plant in Texas is to go.

In January, the agency decided 50 metric tons of weapons-grade plutonium was to be "immobilized" in ceramic logs or made into fuel by blending it with degraded uranium. The object is to render plutonium useless to terrorists or rogue nations that might want to build weapons.

If the INEEL were chosen, plutonium pits would be disassembled at the Fuel Processing Facility, part of the Idaho Chemical Processing Plant. A new plant would be needed to make mixed oxide fuel.

Plant construction would employ up to 1,400 people, said Dave Nulton of the Energy Department's office of fissile materials disposition. The operation itself would employ 2,000 to 2,500 people, he said.

If the Energy Department does nothing, the pits would remain intact at the Pantex plant and weapons-grade plutonium at all Energy Department sites except Rocky Flats would stay put. There are between two and three metric tons of weapons-grade plutonium at the INEEL, at Argonne National Laboratory.

If the INEEL is not chosen, one of the 11 other options is shipping the material to Hanford, Wash., where there are facilities to disassemble the pits, refine the mixed oxide fuel and create ceramic logs.

The Energy Department's Savannah River site also has the ability to immobilize plutonium. Rocky Flats materials are being sent there.

Mixed oxide fuel has some problems, mainly economic, Nulton said.

Uranium is much less expensive, he said, so there is no reason for commercial nuclear operators to want mixed oxide fuel. But as the nuclear weapons stockpile is reduced in size, the plutonium has to go somewhere.

"We know it's going to cost more, but it may be our only option," Nulton said.

A big factor in considering whether the INEEL gets the work is whether the state views weapons-grade plutonium as waste.

"If it is waste, it's transuranic waste, which would come under the Batt agreement," Nulton said. "We're not going to try to cram this down the state's throat."

Association, students back recall of trustees

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — The Kootenai County Property Owners Association has joined the North Idaho College student body in supporting a recall of the school's board of trustees.

President Dee Lawless said the association will back students in the recall effort over the board's firing of President Bob Bennett last week.

"It's really infuriating to taxpayers," Lawless said Tuesday.

Renee Scott, president of the Associated Students of NIC, said students decided to go ahead with the recall effort after concluding trustees never gave them adequate answers about Bennett's dismissal.

"We still feel trustees are blowing smoke," Scott said. "It's still very confusing."

Trustee Jeanne Givens made only cryptic comments about the decision to fire Bennett in a written statement published a few days after the board's action. She cited the agreement that Bennett be paid off and that the school be protected from legal action as well as attorney advice that trustees remain silent on the cause of the ouster beyond simply blaming communication problems.

Givens, who has already announced she will not seek reelection as a trustee, said the board wanted "to put this matter behind us and avoid further embarrassment and humiliation for Robert Bennett."

"Our silence is also the result of the potential threat of a lengthy, costly lawsuit that would harm the school," she wrote. "There could have been a lengthy public blood letting where heated camps took sides."

"But in the long run it would have harmed the institution," she wrote. "Until Idaho law is changed to grant immunity from lawsuits to institutions and boards of trustees in such situations, we must live by the agreement."

Once a recall petition is filed with the county, students must collect 14,827 signatures from registered voters to list each trustee on the next election ballot. This figure represents 50 percent of all votes cast in the last general election.

Camas Prairie Railroad will go up for sale

LEWISTON (AP) — The Burlington Northern and Santa Fe Railway Co. said it plans to put the Lewiston-based Camas Prairie Railroad up for sale this summer.

Union Pacific Railroad, which jointly owns the Camas Prairie, said late in April that it would call for bids this summer. The Burlington Northern Santa Fe Railway Co. said at that time it had not yet decided but announced Monday that it would put the railroad up for sale by July.

The Camas Prairie Railroad has some 256 miles of track and carries grain for a number of the region's farmers as well as freight for Potlatch Corp. to and from the Joyce mill at Pierce.

Included in the sale is about 172 miles of BNSF-owned track in Lewiston and east of Lewiston, and 70 miles of track west of Lewiston, owned by Union Pacific. The Lewiston yard property and a variety of freight cars also are being sold.

The railroad stretches from the Potlatch Corp. mill at Pierce west to Riparia, Wash., and south to Grangeville and Kooiks.

WATCO Inc. of Pittsburg, Kan., has expressed an interest in buying the Camas Prairie. It owns other short-line railroads, including Blue Mountain at Walla Walla, Wash., and the Palouse River & Coulece City Railroad in Colfax, Wash.

Man documents rock art's demise

SANTA FE, N.M. (AP) — Loran Meares tells stories about what happens to Indian rock art and historic sites when nobody's watching.

They are stories of thieves using power tools to chisel petroglyphs from the rock, of vandals spray-painting over 100-year-old pictographs, of developers and mining companies obliterating ancient sacred sites.

For the past 10 years, Meares and his wife, Charlotte, have crossed North America, photographing the vandalism, destruction and looting of art and artifacts at hundreds of sites of American Indian culture.

The Elkhorn, Neb., couple travels to the Southwest every summer, often at the invitation of Indian groups or individuals.

They visit sites and document their demise. They photograph the sites as fine art in one-of-a-kind, often colorfully lighted scenes, which they "light paint" by means of homemade spotlights at night.

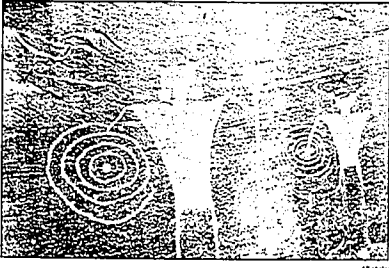

"It's his personal commitment — he just enjoys doing it. He doesn't expect any profit on it," said Zuni muralist Alex Seotewa, who worked with Meares to produce a poster of Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church on the Zuni Reservation.

The poster has helped the tribe raise money to maintain the historic structure and its interior murals.

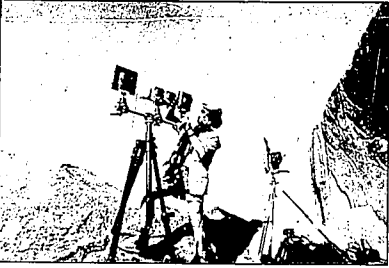

Joe Pachak, a Blanding, Utah, sculptor who documents rock art for preservation archaeologists in Utah, said Meares' "exquisite" photos have "taught a lot of people the appreciation of both rock art and Anasazi ruins" in the Southwest.

"I think there's an intrinsic value to his photography — it is a record of the way it was, the way the ruins and rock art happened to be. They're very, very crisp, clean images," Pachak said.

For Meares, photographing sacred Indian sites is personal. It's a means of expressing the loss he feels at the disappearance of the natural surroundings of his youth. Meares, 49, grew up in Tampa, Fla., after World War II, where developers drained swamps and phosphate mines killed rivers. When he began photographing sacred sites, the remembrance of that loss

Above, bullet holes pock this exquisite Fremont Culture petroglyph near Moab, Utah. For the past 10 years, Loran Meares, below, and his wife, Charlotte, have crossed the continent, photographing vandalism of art and artifacts at hundreds of sites important to American Indian culture.

"was paramount on my mind." Meares began taking pictures in high school and became serious about photography as an undergraduate at Mercer University, a small private college in Macon, Ga., where he studied zoology.

A show featuring Meares' stereo prints caught the attention of the National Park Service, which in 1989 commissioned him to create posters for Chaco Culture National Historic Park's United-Nations designation as a World Heritage Site.

"That was the start of the whole thing," Meares said. Meares began traveling frequently to the Southwest on pho-

Indian cultural sites.

Work for the committee took Meares each summer to sites plundered by relic hunters and grave robbers. Meares photographed many of the sites for the committee, the U.S. Forest Service and the federal Bureau of Land Management.

The photographs, around which Meares built slide shows on the subject of preservation, soon became his way of making people aware of the need to preserve the sites. The slide shows, as well as trips Meares continues to lead to the sites, also have encouraged students to begin photographing sites for preservation.

In 1993, the Sierra Club produced a photo calendar of Meares' sacred sites fine art work, which won the Curator's Choice award as best single-photographer calendar of the year from the Roger Tory Peterson Institute of Natural History in Jamestown, N.Y.

Jim Colhee, a senior editor at Sierra Club Books in San Francisco, which produced the calendar, said it was one of the more popular — and unusual — calendars the organization has published.

"He's a visionary guy. I was terribly impressed with what he did," Colhee said. "I think he wanted to prove to people that he was standing in spiritual places, and I think he did that very well."

Profits from the calendars or Meares' own prints go to preservation efforts.

Meares said the biggest peril to sacred sites these days comes from "the sheer magnitude of population growth," such as a road project proposed for Petroglyph National Monument on Albuquerque's west side and the pressures placed on sites by mining.

Meares began taking photography expeditions, both with classes and on his own. Soon the Sierra Club offered him a spot on its Native American Sites Committee, formed to preserve

Idahoan sues state over license suspension law

CALDWELL (AP) — A real estate agent is suing the state of Idaho for suspending his business and driver's licenses because he is more than $13,000 behind in child support payments.

Rodney Hoskins, 49, of Caldwell contended that the new law allowing license suspension for violating court orders on child support or child visitation is unconstitutional and not rationally linked to helping deadbeat parents pay back support.

Named in the suit filed in 3rd District Court are the Department of Health and Welfare, the Idaho Real Estate Commission and the Department of Transportation.

Hoskins is the second to legally challenge the law that took effect last January as part of the state's attempt to get families off welfare by forcing the noncustodial parent to pay up back child support and stay current. His attempt to get an immediate restraining order against the state was rejected earlier this week by Judge Dennis Goff.

In the past five months, the state has suspended licenses of 422 parents not owed nearly $6.3 million in back support for 843 children.

Under the law, the Health and Welfare Department can seek suspension of driver's, hunting and fishing licenses or any professional license of anyone who is at least 90 days or $2,000 in arrears on child support.

But Ada County Magistrate Russell Comstock raised serious questions about the law's validity when he essentially invalidated its definition of license.

While the new statute says a license does not constitute a property interest, previous court decisions have held that there are property interests in driver's and professional licenses.

The ramifications of that ruling remain unclear.

Chenoweth wants U.S. out of U.N.

SPOKANE (AP) — Rep. George Nethercutt, who is pondering a run for the Republican Senate nomination next year, wants the United States to pull out of the United Nations.

Nethercutt and Rep. Helen Chenoweth, R-Idaho, were among just 54 House members who voted in favor of leaving the United Nations and then exiting the body from its New York City headquarters.

Both described their votes — on an amendment to the Foreign Relations Appropriations bill — as a way to "send a message" to the United Nations.

The amendment failed on a 54-369 vote last week. "The U.N. should rein in the bureaucracy and show the same fiscal restraint as federal agencies," Nethercutt said through a spokesman Tuesday.

Chenoweth chief of staff Keith Rupp said Chenoweth questions the effectiveness of the United Nations and doesn't believe the country's tax dollars should be spent there.

Incident prompts Nevada to call for halt to transfers

LAS VEGAS (AP) — A loose container lid during a routine shipment of nuclear waste from Ohio to Nevada has sparked a demand that the Energy Department stop the transfers.

Bob Loux, executive director of the Nevada Agency for Nuclear Projects, asked that all shipments of radioactive material from the Fernald plant in Ohio to Nevada be suspended pending an in-depth investigation of the incident.

And Republican congressmen Jim Gibbons and John Ensign sent a letter to Energy Secretary Federico Pena Tuesday, objecting to the shipments.

The container, holding 19 55-gallon drums of low-level radioactive wastes was part of hundreds of shipments to the Nevada Test Site every year for disposal.

Fernald spokesman David Kosloski confirmed that emergency crews saw white dust or smoke coming from the container on May 22.

Loux said that apparently pressure inside the container caused enough smoke to trigger the site's emergency operations center.

No radiation was released and no one was injured, according to Fernald's preliminary report. But, Las Vegas Mayor Jan Jones said, "This further substantiates that what the government says is safe is not."

In their letter to Pena, Gibbons and Ensign said the department did not consider community impact and safety issues involved in the transfer.

"We find it disturbing that DOE would choose a route through the Las Vegas Valley, seemingly without consideration to the public health and safety risks, for transportation of radioactive waste," the letter said. "In concern for the safety of our citizens, we are asking you to suspend further action."

Jury convicts Post Falls man of murdering ex-girlfriend

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — A Kootenai County jury found Stephen A. Cherry guilty of first-degree murder for last year's shooting death of his ex-girlfriend in her Hauser Lake home.

Prosecutor Bill Douglas said he would consult with Susan Foutz's family before deciding whether to seek the death penalty or life in prison at Cherry's sentencing before 1st District Judge James Judd.

No sentencing date was set Tuesday.

Cherry, 47, of Post Falls, also was convicted of aggravated battery, aggravated assault and using a weapon in the commission of the crimes. That could add an additional 35 years to his prison sentence.

Cherry was found guilty of killing Foutz, 42, and shooting Charles R. Babb, 40, of Post Falls, in the arm and stomach as he sat next to Foutz in her car during the June 2, 1996, slaying.

Cherry was convicted of aggravated assault for threatening Tammy Hoover, 32, after Foutz was murdered. Hoover claimed she witnessed the killing of her roommate and then ran from Cherry as he came after her.

when he lost control on a curve and crashed.

Howard died of head injuries at the scene. Six other young people, including Quintana, were hurt.

"I'm guilty because I was driving the vehicle when it wrecked," Quintana told 2nd District Judge Ida Rudolph Leggett Tuesday.

Donations help children

TWIN FALLS - Blockbuster Video is co-sponsoring a fund-raiser through Sunday to raise money for the Caring Program for Children.

Participating businesses are selling Caring Program Bears for a suggested donation of at least $1. Donors' names are printed on donation cards to be displayed at the store. No purchase or rental is required to make a donation.

All funds raised will be donated to the Caring Program for Children and used for scholarships to help expand the number of children that may enroll. Cost for a full year of coverage for one child is $300. Donations are tax deductible.

The Caring Program is funded by Blue Cross of Idaho and MSB-Blue Shield of Idaho and provided free primary health care benefits to Idaho's uninsured children of low-income families who do not qualify for government assistance such as Medicaid. Benefits the program covers include well-child examinations, physician office visits for illness or injury, emergency medical and accident care and prescription drugs.

A child must be an Idaho resident under the age of 18 who is not eligible for public health assistance and not covered under a private health insurance plan to be eligible. The parents' annual income must meet eligibility guidelines, and school-age children must attend class regularly. To apply for the Caring Program for Children, an application for enrollment must be filled out and returned to Blue Cross of Idaho or MSB-Blue Shield of Idaho. For more information or to apply, call 1-800-365-2345 or 1-800-632-2022 or a local Blue Cross of Idaho or MSB-Blue Shield of Idaho office.

Mom's verbal assault of son brings father to defense

DEAR ABBY: I am deeply concerned about my 9-year-old son's self-esteem. My wife is constantly yelling and calling him names over trivial things. She is a perfectionist, so anything not perfect is cause for a verbal assault.

DEAR ABBY
Abby VanBuren

A recent example is a misplaced 39-cent notepad. My son was called an idiot, stupid and an ass in her trade. I feel this assault is not good for his emotional well-being, but I am unable to stop her. She becomes irate when I even suggest that she is less than a good mother. She does not do this in public, but I still think it is hurtful to my son's self-esteem. She does the same sort of thing with me, but I've had counseling to deal with it. What can I do for my son?

inability to control her temper can have lasting effects on your son's self-esteem. Children form their sense of worth from messages (verbal and nonverbal) their parents give them.

When a parent tells a child he's an idiot, stupid or an ass, that is how he will perceive himself. On some level he will blame himself for the abuse. Unless something is done now to break this cycle, as your son grows up he may be unable to shrug off the guilt and sense of inadequacy his mother is placing on his shoulders. The label for what your wife is doing is "verbal abuse." It may take psychological counseling for her to learn to cope with her temper in a more appropriate manner. Urge her to seek it.

You didn't say how long the verbal battery has been going on, but if the pattern is well-established, counseling is also in order for you, son.

Our society has come a long way in recognizing the need to protect children from sexual and physical abuse. It's unfortunate that so little can be done for the child who is verbally abused, because as it stands — unless a concerned adult steps in to defend him — he is all alone.

DEAR ABBY: I offer this true story for your collection of acts of kindness.

Toward the end of World War II, my grandfather, Eugen Irenkauf, then 10 years old, lived in Salach, a small village near Goppingen in southwest Germany.

Every day, seven American P-51 Mustang fighters flew over the area shooting at German soldiers. Because they came so often and seemed to be the same group flying over a war zone, the German civilians called them "the Lucky Seven."

One afternoon, my grandfather was flying his kite in a field when the Lucky Seven appeared in the sky. His father yelled for his son to let go of the kite and run. The son refused to do so.

One of the Lucky Seven left the group and headed for my grandfather and the kite. My great-grandfather was sure that the pilot would kill his son. Instead, the pilot dipped his wings and flew on.

My grandfather has told me this story many times. It has been his lifelong wish to meet this pilot.

My grandfather's address is: Herr Eugen Irenkauf, Austrasse 5, Salach, Germany, 73084.

— ERIKA AND HAMISH HALL, TUCSON, ARIZ.

DEAR ERIKA AND HAMISH: Thank you for a poignant addition to this column. I hope your grandfather's wish comes true.

DEAR ABBY: I was amused by your column that dealt with the infantry in World War II using condoms to keep their socks dry. I have a story that was told to me by my first husband, who served in the 82nd Airborne during the war.

He told me that they were each issued a gross of condoms periodically that they tied together in a rubber-band type apparatus, and that is how they kept their trousers so neatly in their boots.

How the other services managed, I don't know, but the paratroopers kept that great look in this manner. Yankee ingenuity strikes again.

— EX-WIFE OF W. TORRINGTON, CONN.

DEAR EX-WIFE: This is news to me. I once heard an anthropologist say that two things distinguish men from apes: our opposable thumbs and the ability to invent tools.

For Abby's favorite family recipe, send a large, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Cookbooklet No. 1, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054-0447. (Postage is included.)

ANNIVERSARY

THE CROSSES

HAGERMAN — Mr. and Mrs. Leslie A. Cross of Hagerman, will be honored at an open house Saturday in observance of their 50th wedding anniversary.

Friends and relatives are invited to call from 7 to 9 p.m. at the Hagerman LDS Church.

Cross and Carmo Stanley were married June 14, 1947, in Boulder City, Nev. They have lived in Westminster, Calif. He worked at Cross Radio in Garden Grove, Calif., and she worked at Hughes Aircraft Co. in Fullerton, Calif.

They have been active in radio and camping clubs, and various Leslie and Carmo Cross church organizations. The couple has three children and five grandchildren.

Jazz fans have a store

The Orlando Sentinel

JAZZ: Jazz fans often complain there's no store for them. That's not the case with The Jazz Store, which calls itself "the largest catalog ever devoted exclusively to jazz music products."

In additions to thousands of jazz recordings, the catalog includes jazz posters, T-shirts, books, instructional materials, even stationery. There is a 12-page section of videos and laser discs on dozens of jazz greats, from Louis Armstrong and Bix Beiderbecke to Sarah Vaughan and Lester Young.

You can order the catalog by calling 1-800-558-9513. It will cost you $3 initially, but you'll be given $3 off on your first purchase.

RECALL: About 7,700 Pier 1 Imports large and small work sets have been recalled because their support ring stands have extremely sharp edges that pose a laceration hazard. At least one injury has been reported. A consumer received a deep finger cut from the ring stand.

The sets were sold nationwide from April 1993 through April 1997.

Consumers should return the sets to the place of purchase for a full refund or store credit. For more information call Pier 1 Imports at 1-800-245-4595.

ENGAGEMENT

HAYDEN-FALKNER

DECLIO — Shelby and Frances Hayden of Declo, announce the engagement of their daughter, Kara Hayden, to Randall Falkner, son of Steven and Paula Falkner of Ogden, Utah.

Hayden is attending and employed at Weber State College in Ogden.

Falkner is an instructor at Salt Lake Community College in Salt Lake City and is employed part-time as a computer support technician.

The wedding is planned for today at the Beautiful LDS Temple, Bountiful, Utah. A recep-

Randall Falkner and Kara Hayden tion in their honor will be held from 7 to 9 p.m. Friday at the Westagon House, 298 24th St., Ogden.

Street Journal reports. One family-friendly company found that 30 percent of employees struggled with work-life conflict at least weekly; 42 percent had looked for another job because of it. And contrary to the common belief that it's women with families who are most affected, it was singles and childless dual earners who were among the most likely to consider job changes.

Here's a personal briefing on life at work

Knight-Ridder News Service

NEATNESS COUNTS: If a job interview is being conducted at a restaurant, don't order anything that could wind up on your tie or your lap. Select a meal that doesn't require twirling, cracking, digging, sawing, picking or finger-licking, and avoid things that splash, squirt, drip, form viscusous strings or roll around on your plate. National Business Employment Weekly says.

ALL WORK AND NO PLAY: You don't have to be a family man or woman to have work versus personal life conflicts. They're hitting employees of all kinds, and having a deeper impact on the workplace than most employers think. The Wall

Rancher kills wolf attacking sheep

BILLINGS, Mont. (AP) — A Montana rancher has killed a Yellowstone National Park wolf attacking his sheep in what a federal official says may be the first legal killing since wolf reintroduction began in 1995.

Kevin Halverson of Sweetgrass County said federal agents informed him he would not be prosecuted because he acted within the rules that allow ranchers to kill wolves caught in the act of attacking livestock.

Several wolves reintroduced in the park and the central Idaho wilderness have been killed — accidentally hit by cars, shot by biologists, or illegally killed. But until now, none has been lawfully killed by a rancher protecting livestock.

"This would be the first one," said Ed Bangs, head of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service program. "That's exactly what the rules are designed for, and if they worked in this case, then that's great."

Within a month of the first release in 1995, a wolf was shot in Lemhi County, Idaho, as it was feeding on what was later determined to be a dead calf. But the rancher, who would have been the only one with legal authority to kill the predator, has steadfastly maintained he was not the one who shot the animal.

The Fish and Wildlife regional office in Denver said it could not confirm Halverson's account because the case remains under investigation.

The wolf was shot near Greycliff last Friday, Halverson said that when he first saw the animal biting at a lamb, he thought it was a coyote, and he went home about a half-mile away for his rifle.

He returned to find that the predator had left the lamb and was moving through some trees. He shot it with a rifle from about 150 yards. He said that when he realized it was a wolf, he notified predator control agents, who contacted Fish and Wildlife.

The lamb was so badly wounded it had to be killed, Halverson said. Another lamb was found dead nearby, but its carcass had been scavenged, leaving little evidence to prove a wolf had killed it. Halverson said two other lambs were injured by predators earlier in the week. Nearby sheep ranchers had also reported wolf attacks.

While the Defenders of Wildlife will compensate ranchers for livestock losses to wolves, Halverson said he was "more worried about killing a wolf than I am about recovery money for the dead stuff."

The wolf was a yearling female from a group of 10 pups moved to the park after the adult members of their pack were destroyed for attacking cattle.

Coordinator won't be charged for ordering animal shooting

RIVERTON, Wyo. (AP) — The coordinator of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's wolf recovery program will not be prosecuted for ordering the shooting of a wolf-like animal near Cody earlier this year.

John Schneider, the U.S. Attorney for North Dakota, declined to press charges against Ed Bangs partially because there was no way to prove the animal was a wolf and protected under the Endangered Species Act.

Bangs said he ordered the March 4 shooting after determining from his behavior that it was a wolf raised in captivity or a wolf-dog hybrid.

He later said he realized the action had violated federal rules covering the wolf reintroduction experimental population zone.

Schneider said Monday he would consider prosecuting Bangs only if the animal were proved to be a full-blooded wolf because federal laws protecting wolves do not cover wolf-dog hybrids.

But genetic analysis and other testing did not provide conclusive proof of the animal's species.

"We couldn't prove beyond a reasonable doubt this was a wolf," said Schneider, who was asked by the U.S. Attorney for Wyoming to handle the case to head off any possibility of a conflict of interest. U.S. Attorney David Freudenenthal's office is counsel for the Fish and Wildlife Service in a civil challenge to wolf reintroduction still pending in federal court in Casper.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Chet Atkins has his finger in his remission — but that's not the big news.

The man known as "Mr. Guitar" canceled several of his regular Monday night concerts in March for what he called minor surgery. He says he's fine now, and wants attention to focus on the upcoming Chet Atkins Musicians Days.

"I don't want my health to overshadow (Musicians Days) when the focus needs to be on the musical growth of our youngsters," Atkins, 72, said in a statement Tuesday. "I've had my battle with cancer and won."

"Now that it's behind me, I'd like to see the focus go back to what matters most to me, the many musicians across the world."

Susan Andrews, a spokeswoman for the music festival June 23-29, said X-rays have shown no cancer remains in Atkins' body, but she didn't know specifically what type of cancer he had. Atkins had a tumor removed from his colon in 1973.

HILLSBOROUGH, Northern Ireland — Any royal wedding anniversary in the double digits is worth noting these days, so Queen Elizabeth II's upcoming 50th called for a special party.

Great Britain's queen and her husband, Prince Philip, visited Northern Ireland on Wednesday and greeted 300 couples who are also celebrating their golden anniversaries this year.

Una and Peter Duffy from Coleraine moved their wedding ahead one day so they could be married at the same time as Elizabeth and Philip on Nov. 20, 1947.

"We have always felt a special bond with the queen and Prince Philip," Mrs. Duffy said after meeting the queen at the garden party at Hillsborough Castle.

"She was so nice and really natural and very easy to talk to. She congratulated us on our anniversary and I wished her well. She said it was a great achievement, 50 years of marriage."

The frenetic character was introduced Tuesday as the mascot for the U.S. Snowboard Team. The sport makes its Olympic debut at the Winter Games in Nagano, Japan, next February.

Jim Henson Productions, creator of the popular Muppet troupe that includes Kermit the Frog and Miss Piggy, said it was the first time a Muppet has been designated as an official mascot for a team.

"Snowboarding is an individual sport and Animal's definitely the most individual of the Muppets," said halfpipe specialist Rob Kingwill of Jackson, Wyo., a World Championships bronze medalist.

"I'm really stoked about being teamed with him."

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — Barbara Bush says she can't fathom how child abuse happens. Still, she sees hope of stopping it.

for sexually abused children, stopping to admire a painting of a tiny child.

"So sweet," she said. "How a mother can fail to protect a daughter, a father to protect a son, is more than I can understand. Yet we read about it happening every day."

"As a grandmother of 14, none of whom have been abused, I am pleased to say, I am really concerned about the thousands of other children out there who are."

Mrs. Bush toured the Childhelp Children's Advocacy Center on Tuesday and predicted such programs will help to reverse the cycle of abuse.

"With so many people working, putting in so much time to solve the problem... I feel in 10 years, America will be blossoming again," Mrs. Bush said.

Battleship to relocate to Hawaii

Knight-Ridder News Service

SEATTLE — The Navy will stick by its decision to move the legendary battleship USS Missouri to Pearl Harbor, despite an appeal by Rep. Norm Dicks, D-Wash., to keep it in Bremerton, Wash.

Navy Secretary John Dalton denied the request in a letter Tuesday, saying it was a "tough decision."

"I remain confident that my selection of Pearl Harbor was in the best interest of the Navy and our nation, based on the impartial review," Dalton said.

The review was based on a report by the General Accounting Office, which determined that the Navy could have done a better job communicating to bidding cities that would new evaluation criteria — public affairs benefits and historical significance — would weigh heavily in selecting a home for the ship affectionately known as "Mighty Mo."

The Navy decided in August to move the Missouri from Bremerton to Pearl Harbor, six miles west of Honolulu, Hawaii.

It is to open Oct. 1, 1998 — 50 years after the Arizona Memorial commemorating the attack that brought America into World War II.

The Missouri was assigned to Bremerton Group, U.S. Pacific Reserve Fleet, in 1955. After several tours of duty, including one in the Persian Gulf War, it was moved to the Puget Sound Naval Shipyard in Bremerton upon being decommissioned in 1992.

The Kitsap County economic-development office said keeping the battleship in Bremerton would have meant 23 full-time jobs and drawn roughly 400,000 visitors to the city.

Estimates of the impact on the local economy ranged from $1.7 million to $12.1 million, said Earl Smith, president of the economic development office.

The ship, which is famous for numerous battles and is beloved by servicemen, is best known for being the site of Japan's unconditional surrender, ending World War II on Sept. 2, 1945, in Tokyo Bay.

Along with the battleships Iowa, New Jersey and Wisconsin, the 887-foot Missouri was considered one of the stars of the Navy's fleet.

It was able to fire projectiles weighing 2,700 pounds up to 25 miles away.

It once survived a Japanese kamikaze crash. It also served during the Korean War, when it was known as "Mudflat Mom" after running aground on a mudflat in Chesapeake Bay on route to the Far East after that conflict began.

Besides Bremerton, San Francisco and Long Beach applied to dock the 53-year-old ship as a museum.

During the selection process, some veterans groups complained that the ship would be too far from the mainland if sent to Hawaii.

"I had hoped that in a new competition with mutually agreed-upon criteria, we would have been able to demonstrate more clearly the importance of keeping the Missouri on the mainland, and in particular, Bremerton," Dicks wrote in a statement.

He added that there is not enough support in Congress to overturn the Navy's decision. Bremerton may still attract one of the other Iowa-class battleships, but a spokesman for Dicks said that is unlikely.

Math hounds could run wild in Vegas

Field's lips were moving, so I knew he was talking.
"How many things can a dog learn?" I heard him say. "Do you think they can keep 25 commands straight?"
"Let's count them: Sit. Stay. Come. Fetch. Lie down. No. Get my shoes. Get the newspaper. Get your bowl. Get in. Get."
"Sit 'em. Heal. Good dog. Down boy. Roll over. Back. Who's been in the garbage? Who's been in the bed? Whose been in (fill in the blank)? OK."
"Let's go. Kennel. Whoa. Woofsie want some dinner?"

DOG-EARED TALES
By Bill Studebaker

"There's 25 - and that doesn't even include the opening of a car door, nor the ruff of a beer can. None of that finer stuff even makes the list."

"Yep, dogs learn a lot.
"Say any of those commands to a cat and you'll get the dumbest look God ever put on an animal. Sure, they'll perk up at the sound of the refrigerator door if they're hungry. But try the harder stuff, like "sit 'em" or "get the newspaper" and you'll be looking stupid right in the eye."
"They're just a whole lot smarter than cats. Heck, they can even count - at least to three."

"I had Patty, Dirk, and Gyper in the house the other day and I started feeding them peanuts. I'd give one to Patty, then one to Dirk, then one to Gyper."
"I was fair. One each."

"But then I dropped one of Dirk's - and I gave him another. After taking it, he leaned down and scarfed up the dropped nut."

"I handed one over to Gyper. She took it, then nudged my hand. I looked at her and she nudged my hand again. So I gave her another nut."

"She didn't nudge after getting her second nut."

"I started around again. I gave Patty one and Dirk two and Gyper one."

"Gyper nudged my hand. Patty raised a front leg, put a paw on my knee, and started digging into my eyes. I gave each another nut. Gyper didn't nudge and Patty put her paw down."

"Patty didn't paw me the first time because she probably figured I'd even things out as I went around, but she up and pawed me when I did it."

"That's almost double-smart - having manners, too."

"I tried various combinations, but Patty and Gyper caught me every time. Oh! Dirk didn't catch me any way or another."

"I asked Chloia about this and she said, 'Well, Dirk's a male.' As if that's supposed to mean something."

"Even when I mixed up the order, it didn't confuse Patty or Gyper. Those two never lost count."

"I was going to try it with three and four, but I lost count myself. I figured I'd proven the point and would let the facts stand: Dogs can count."

"Try that with any three cats and see what happens. Not one of them will catch you. Truth is, it's not much fun trying to trick a cat."

"Dogs also like hide-and-seek."

"Take a ball, a stick, a shoe - almost anything - and get them playing with it, then hide it. Start with an easy hiding place, then move on to harder places. Pretty soon, they'll be tearing up the house looking for that darn shoe."

"I figure dogs can count and they can reason. That's why I take an interactive approach when I'm training. I talk to them, work on their sensitive side, and make them part of the program."

"Yes sir, every dog deserves respect."

Field had dropped on for so long that he'd plumb exhausted himself. Me, I felt like I'd survived a verbal stampede.

Field couldn't help himself. He was just wound up.

I stood there, dumbly, with an apparently empty head. I hadn't gotten a word in edgewise, so I said the obvious thing.

"Dogs are smart," I said. "I know that."

When he isn't stopping and fetching for his own dogs, Bill Studebaker can be found teaching English at the College of Southern Idaho - or on a whitewater river.

Gopher snakes often are mistaken for rattlers

By Stu Murrell
Times-News correspondent

JEROME - Idaho's largest reptile has many names - gopher snake, bull snake or blow snake - but it is a single-minded killer and consumer of rodents.

Big gopher snakes can exceed 6 feet in length, making them the Gem State's largest snake. With the exception of the Panhandle, they are widely distributed at lower elevations.

Their markings resemble a rattlesnake's, primarily tan with dark brown blotches scattered along the back. Their aggressive behavior - including coiling and hissing - prompts humans to kill many of them every year.

However, gopher snakes are among the most beneficial and harmless reptiles because their primary diet consists of mice, rats and ground squirrels. They also are skillful climbers and will gobble down eggs and young birds if they can locate a nest.

Gopher snakes are active daytime hunters that are often seen by backpackers, hikers and other outdoor enthusiasts.

They can be distinguished from poisonous rattlers by their smooth-sided heads (the rattler's head is more triangular in shape) and lack of rattles. However, when disturbed, they will coil, hiss loudly - hence "blow snake" - and shake their tails to simulate rattler behavior.

They will even strike if a person attempts to pick them up. Their small, sharp teeth can cause shallow scratches.

Gopher snakes emerge from hibernation in May or June, then deposit their eggs in communal nests with other members of their species. The eggs hatch in late June or July and the young are on their own immediately.

They are cold-blooded animals, so their body temperature is regulated by the outside environment. They like to bask on warm roads when the air temperature is cool, which makes them vulnerable to vehicles. On the other hand, they will be found in the shade when temperatures reach the 90s.

Snakes hibernate during the winter in Idaho, and studies on gopher snake survival show winter can be a hazardous time of year - with adult mortality ranging from 25 to 50 percent.

As with all snakes, the gopher snake's forked tongue is a sensory organ that helps it locate prey. They kill by constriction, just like a boa constrictor and, with their hinged jaws, can consume prey much larger than their size would suggest.

Snakes move by pushing their large belly scales - called scutes - with muscular contractions along a surface. This happens so quickly that it appears to be one continuous, sliding motion. It is fascinating to see how smoothly and quickly they can glide over varied terrain.

Gopher snakes will go down holes in quest of rodents, so people often refer to small holes as "snake holes."

However, snakes do not possess any digging equipment - so they leave the digging to others.

The next time you see a gopher snake in your outdoor pursuits, remember it occupies an important niche in the web of life - and leave it alone.

Unusual disease kills Western Washington deer

The Associated Press

TACOMA, Wash. - Wildlife officials are puzzling by the source of a disease afflicting many deer in Western Washington.

The condition is characterized by large bald patches, bluish skin and white blotches on the fur that remains.

The Washington Department of Fish and Wildlife has received reports of sick animals in Anacortes, Buckley, Centralia and Grays Harbor.

On Indian Island, near Port Townsend, all the deer are showing symptoms, said Fish and Wildlife Department veterinarian Briggs Hall.

A helicopter survey near the town of Fall City east of Seattle showed that about 60 percent of the deer were ailing, district wildlife biologist Rocky Spencer said.

The disease has proven fatal in some cases, particularly to yearlings.

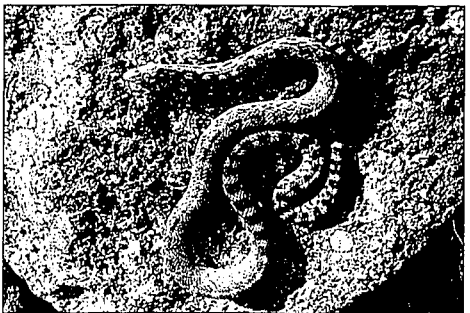

"We have anecdotal evidence of deer dying, but we don't know if the disease is killing them, or whether it's the loss of hair, which makes them more vulnerable to weather and parasites," Hall said.

No limit on how far poachers will go for thrills and profit

The Associated Press

BOISE - For years they made their fall pilgrimage from Florida to central Idaho - some to camp and soak up the majestic Selway-Bitterroot Wilderness, others to bag an elk, deer, bear or all three.

Each of these hunters - Seminole Indians whose homeland is the swamps of Florida - paid $2,000 for a shot at the big game inhabiting the south side of Idaho's Lochsa River. Trouble was, these hunters were also on the south side of the law.

Fourteen Seminoles, including tribal council chairman James Billie, wound up pleading guilty to state and federal wildlife charges. Some flew to Idaho to face the music last year.

"They were looking to shoot whatever they could," said Paul Weyland, special agent at the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's Division of Law Enforcement. "There were some nice animals killed."

The defendants in this case are typical of the commercial poaching operations that are bleeding Idaho of its big game. For years, the Seminoles had paid Gordon Frost and his Warm Springs Outfitters to organize their illegal hunting trips.

Frost was sentenced in February to six months in jail. Billie got two years of probation and was fined $3,000, while 21 other defendants - including guides and hunters - received fines and probation totaling $16,000 and 38 years.

The case demonstrates there are no limits to how far poachers will come and how much they will pay for thrills or profit. And it demonstrates how little regard they have for the toll poachings takes on Idahoans' chances to hunt, photograph or simply watch big game and birds of prey.

"The amount of opportunity we make available to legal hunters is reduced by whatever level of poaching we have," said John Beecham, wildlife game and research manager for the state Department of Fish and Game. "If it (poaching) is extremely high, then obviously the opportunity we can offer to legal hunters is less."

Fish and Game computes the number and quality of animals taken each year when it sets harvest limits and dates for the following fall season.

Faced with declining numbers of mature bull elk, the department cut a drastic step in March: It will restrict each hunter to just one of Idaho's 28 hunting zones. The shrinking zones and seasons are driven in part by those who flout them.

"The unlawful commercial operator has the ability to go wherever the bigger animals are whenever he wants, day or night," said Gary Power, regional Fish and Game supervisor in Salmon.

"If the success rates are high and they're creaming the resource, it doesn't take a lot to have an impact."

Even in spring, with the fall deer and elk hunt half a year away, poachers will descend on Idaho to snatch big game antlers that will soon be covered in valuable spring velvet. The blood-filled skin covers growing antlers and is sought by Asian, and even some American, health enthusiasts.

WWII bombs pose wilderness danger

Heed this advice: Don't step on the explosives

DOLLY SODS WILDERNESS, W.Va. (AP) — The thousands who trek through this rugged area of the Monongahela National Forest must heed a few rules:

Don't litter. Don't feed the wildlife.

And don't step on the bombs. More than a half-century ago, when swing bands were on the radio and the Germans and Japanese were across the battlefields, soldiers used these mountains for training exercises. Their legacy: Scores of explosive devices, lying in wait for unsuspecting hikers.

Wally Dean was 17 years old, on his first hunting trip, when a member of his party found a mortar round. The man looked it over and then either dropped or tossed it on the ground.

The next thing I knew I was wrapped around a tree," Dean said.

He suffered nine shrapnel wounds to his left leg and right foot, along with phosphorus burns on his legs; his Winchester rifle put to use as a splint, Dean was taken to the hospital.

That happened more than 45 years ago, on Dec. 3, 1951. Today,

Dean — his foot still wired together, and metal plates embedded in his leg — is environmental project manager for the Army Corps of Engineers, and is thus in charge of cleaning up this lingering World War II mess.

"I wouldn't want anyone to go through what I went through if I could prevent it," he said.

Ordnance experts say Dolly Sods is one of 2,136 places across the United States where people may be exposed to live ordnance, the remnants of training for past conflicts.

The bombs may seem innocuous: soda bottle-size and rusty with age. But they're still dangerous and they can become more volatile with age, experts say.

"These bombs, you have to remind people, were meant to kill," said Kim Speer, a spokeswoman for the U.S. Army Engineering and Support Center in Huntsville, Ala.

The Dolly Sods Wilderness and adjacent Dolly Sods North are among 50 sites funded for cleanup by the Army, she said. The Dolly Sods project will cost $1.3 million, and is scheduled for this summer.

The two areas, together about 16,000 acres of the Monongahela National Forest, some 100 miles south of Pittsburgh, are barren because of clear-cutting, forest fires and grazing around the turn of the century.

The wind-whipped fires burned

so hot that the humus layer of the soil was consumed, exposing beautiful rock formations.

Spruce are one-sided because of the strong westerly winds. Few trees grow taller than shoulder high in the harsh highest elevations, where the annual snowfall exceeds 100 inches.

From the Army's perspective, the brush and brambles between 3,000 and 4,000 feet was a perfect place for artillerymen to hone their skills.

While elite rock climbers from the 10th Mountain Division trained nearby at Seneca Rocks, other Army units hurled 57 mm projectiles, 60 mm and 81 mm mortar rounds and 155 mm howitzer shells into this area.

After the war, the areas were visited by few people other than hunters. Their backpacks discovered the peaceful ranges and panoramic vistas.

Now upward of 20,000 hikers, hunters and others use the two areas each year, so many that the areas are sometimes crowded on summer weekends and in the fall when leaves change colors and wild blueberries ripen.

George Voelmer was clearing his way through Dolly Sods underbrush 10 years ago when he discovered the tail of a mortar shell jutting from the ground. He plucked it from the dirt and tossed it in his backpack as a souvenir.

The projectile bounced around the back of his Datsun S10 as he returned to his home near Bombs similar to those have been found in the Dolly Sods Wilderness area of Grant County, W. Va.

Washington, D.C. "I thought it would be a pretty cool thing to have," he said. "It sort of rattled around when we drove home."

Voelmer did not know the projectile might contain a live round; he believed only dummy rounds were fired in Dolly Sods. His mother made him call the local bomb squad, which destroyed it.

"I was young and immortal," Voelmer said. "You do stupid things when you were 19."

The cleanup is no simple matter. This spring, workers using magnetometers began surveying trails and land used as campsites to remove unexploded projectiles, said Rick Meadows, the Army Corps project manager.

NMFS claims barging helps spring salmon run

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Thousands of endangered salmon are making their way to spawning grounds in the Columbia and Snake river tributaries.

"We're very excited," said Rob Jones, spokesman for the National Marine Fisheries Service. "We expect this year's run to be way up."

And the fisheries service believes that barging the young fish around the dams on the initial migration to the ocean in recent years, though highly criticized by sportsmen and conservation groups, is paying off.

Scientists estimate that more than 12,000 native spring and summer chinook salmon, listed as endangered, will make it up into the Snake River to spawn.

They are coming back at a rate three times greater than last year. While low compared to historical numbers, it is enough to make biologists hope the fish will not become extinct.

Some officials contend this year's counts of tagged fish show that barging young fish out to sea, instead of having them maneuver through 11 dams on the two rivers, is giving wild fish a greater chance of returning to spawn.

Wild fish that were barged a few years ago are returning to the river at a rate of 2.5 fish for every one nonbarged fish, according to one study.

Jones and others at the fisheries service are cautious about interpreting this initial study, especially because earlier panels found better survival rates for fish that moved down river naturally.

"It's good news" that runs are up, said Jim Myron of Oregon Trout. "But we need to do as much as possible to return to a natural river system if we want to do anything much for fish."

Myron and others said barging is one of many other factors that affect fish survival, including ocean conditions and predation rates.

Keith Wolf of the Washington Department of Fish and Wildlife said salmon have a better chance to imprint, or remember the river, when they are not barged. That should lead to more salmon returning home to spawn.

This year, the fisheries service is barging around 60 percent of the young fish migrating to the ocean despite calls by regional Indian tribes and some state officials to rely more heavily on natural flows that are running extremely high because of the heavy runoff from record and near-record snowpacks.

"The jury is still out on barging," Wolf admitted. By 1999, the agency hopes to have a decision on whether barging, dam removal or other methods are best for the fish.

Fish advocates say some dams should be removed to allow rivers to be operated naturally.

But farmers, ship operators and industrial water users would face severe economic hardships if they could not rely on water stored in the reservoirs behind these dams.

OUTDOORS IN BRIEF

Silhouette Shooters set weekend event

JEROME — The Snake River Handgun Silhouette Shooters will hold a handgun match and old-time rifle shoot from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday and Sunday at their range.

Courses of fire are available for both 22 and big-bore pistols for each 40-round match. Competitors with lever-action or single-shot rifles that shoot cartridges developed in or before 1894 are welcome to test their skill.

The range is located one-quarter mile east of mile post 64 on Highway 93, northeast of Jerome. For more information, call Stu Murrell at 324-5960, or Mark Bulcher at 734-3923.

Jerome rod, gun club schedules benefit

JEROME — The Jerome County Rod and Gun Club will host a sporting clays shoot on Saturday to benefit the Helping Hands Freedom Trails. Proceeds will be used to provide a camping trip for the disabled.

Poaching

"Essentially, what they're doing is stealing from the legitimate person," Power said.

There's no way to tell how much impact poaching has on hunting year, sightseeing. No one believes the activity is making a serious dent yet statewide in species numbers. There are more than 100,000 elk in Idaho, and about 25,000 black bears.

"In our modern system of wildlife law enforcement and regulations, my feeling is with elk or most of the deer populations, commercial or illegal activity isn't significant enough to cause a decline in quality on a big scale," said Fish and Game senior conservation officer Greg Johnson of Bonners Ferry.

But poaching can decimate a wildlife population in specific regions. Idaho has 86 elk-management areas where herds need 10 mature bull elk and 100 cows to produce healthy offspring and maintain populations.

The same is true in isolated pockets where less populous species live, like signers sheep and moose. Bill Goodnight, formerly of Idaho Fish and Game and now of the Idaho Wildlife Federation, is one observer who discusses the impact of poaching on wildlife.

Goodnight said the issue is one of simple fairness.

He cites as an example a poaching incident that drew a statewide outcry last year when a party from Oregon killed four elk out of season, including one that was among the largest ever taken by hunters in Idaho.

"People apply all their lives," Goodnight said, "to try to get one of the few permits available in Owyhee County — without success. And then someone totally disregards the laws and runs down there and takes four of them."

"Culturally, this is just outrageous," added Maurice Hornocker, founder of the Hornocker Wildlife Institute in Moscow.

Trashing forests a repulsive rite of spring

RACO, Mich. (AP) — It's springtime in the woods of Michigan's Upper Peninsula, and here's the view.

A couple of soggy, soiled mattresses are slumped against a dented washing machine, their faded yellow stuffing showing through gaping holes in the fabric.

Scattered nearby are a rusty set of bedsprings, two deep freezers, two refrigerators, a water heater, battered easy chair, color television with broken picture tube, and other castoffs partially buried under what remains of the snow.

"What a mess," U.S. Forest Service ranger Joe Hart sighs, gazing at the unsightly scene in a clearing near Raco, a former logging village a few miles south of Lake Superior in Chippewa County.

U.S. Forest Ranger Don Mikel looks over a dumped appliance at the Hiawatha National Forest in Raco, Mich., recently. As temperatures rise and snow begins to melt, people sneak into the woods and deposit loads of worn-out furniture, appliances and household garbage.

To get worse

It's soon to get worse as temperatures rise and the snowpack melts. That's when people once again will sneak into the woods and deposit loads of worn-out furniture, appliances, household garbage and other trash.

"It's just repulsive," says Chris Orlando of Mount Pleasant, nearly 200 miles south of Raco. She and other members of a group of four-wheel drive owners regularly clean dump sites they find while exploring the Au Sable State Forest.

"You come out there to save your sanity, go fishing, relax, enjoy the outdoors any way you can and there that stuff is."

The trashing of Michigan forests creates not just eyesores in the midst of beauty, but also environmental hazards.

Toxic liquids such as paint thinner or refrigerator coolant seep into groundwater. Wild animals get caught in wire step on broken glass or eat harmful plastics.

When hazardous materials such as lead-based paint or asbestos are discovered, a licensed contractor must remove them. That can cost the government up to $2,000 each time, says Orlando. Supt. of the Forest Service office in Escanaba.

"It's money that could be used toward opening a campground or maintaining a snowmobile trail," says Sue Alexander, a Hiawatha National Forest spokeswoman in Rapid River.

The problem has been going on for as long as anyone can remember. But it appeared to worsen after the state's Solid Waste Management Act was enacted in 1989. The act's tough anti-pollution standards for landfills put hundreds of substandard local dumps out of business.

Since then, state and federal officials have teamed with outdoor enthusiasts in a campaign to halt the littering and clean up illegal dumping sites. How successful they have been isn't entirely clear. No one knows how much junk is out there, and statistics can be misleading.

Example: In 1991, volunteers picked up 1,204 cubic yards of trash in Michigan woods. In 1995, the total was 3,000 cubic yards.

At first glance, that would suggest a dramatic increase in dumping. But this five-year period also saw state and federal cleanup efforts shift into high gear. With more people logging for illicit dumps and helping clean them up, it's logical that more trash would be collected.

A hopeful sign is that much of the trash that volunteers are finding appears to have been discarded many years ago, says Ada Takacs, project manager for the Department of Environmental Quality's Adopt-A-Forest program for the Lower Peninsula.

"The progress reports people turn in tend to talk about older trash," Ms. Takacs says. "So even though more gets picked up every year, it doesn't necessarily mean there's lots more dumping."

In times past, dumping was largely the product of ignorance, according to Ann Wilson, a spokeswoman for the state Department of Natural Resources. People figured there was no harm in hauling an old piece of furniture or a few tires to the woods, or leaving behind their garbage from a weekend camping trip instead of logging it home.

In some cases, the sites actually were recognized as the township or county dump.

Habits die hard

"All of those old 'dumps' are legally closed, although we find that some habits die hard," Ms. Wilson says. "Those who used to dump their trash in a certain location every Saturday for years still want to go to the same place for the same purpose."

Tougher landfill standards have made it less convenient to legally get rid of bulky or toxic refuse. Still, there are 64 landfills in Michigan that accept household waste and 39 that take construction and demolition debris, which people often need to get rid of in springtime, when home improvement projects get under way.

And there are 53 transfer stations, where people can take virtually any kind of trash, which is shipped to the appropriate recycling or disposal facility.

But some people will not take the time to haul trash to landfills and pay their fees when it's so easy to sneak into the woods. That brings up another reason dumping remains a problem, one that officials hate to admit: Chances are you'll get away with it.

The state has abundant woodlands and a vast network of two-track rural roads, many cut by loggers decades ago and seldom used today except by snowmobiles and off-road vehicles.

Violators hard to catch

"You look at these piles and think we'd be able to catch these folks," says Don Mikel, a Forest Service ranger in Sault Ste. Marie. "But with nights, weekends, the huge territory, thin staff, it's very hard to do."

Hart, based at the Forest Service office in St. Ignace, is more blunt: "It's like hitting the lottery."

While catching people in the act is rare, officers sometimes get tips. Or they might sift through a garbage bag, find a bill with someone's name on it, confront the person and win a confession.

Fines for illegal dumping on federal land range from $250 to $5,000. On the state level, a law enacted two years ago authorized fines ranging from $100 to $5,000 plus additional civil penalties, such as impounding of vehicles used for illegal dumping by repeat offenders.

The law is to expire next year, although the Legislature is considering a bill to make it permanent.

In the long run, the answer is to educate people and change their attitudes, Ms. Wilson says. That's the goal of the Michigan Coalition for Clean Forests, which brings together state and federal agencies and groups representing business, environmentalists, law enforcement and others.

Formed three years ago, the coalition has developed a slide program, brochures and other materials to get the word out. There also are two "trash teams" that organize volunteer cleanups, which puts groups in charge of keeping specific areas clean. They removed 60 tons of scrap metal and 200 freezers and refrigerators, among other trash, from state land last year.

Tom and Billie Briggs of Royal Oak were put in charge of volunteer cleanup in Mackinac County after complaining to the Forest Service about trash near their hunting cabin north of St. Ignace. In the six years since, most of the county's roughly 30 known sites have been cleaned.

"It's very offensive to me that some people have so little respect for nature," Tom Briggs says. "I think it's a small minority of huns that make it bad for everybody."

Keep your boat's color in the pink

The Orlando Sentinel

There are lots of things to consider when buying a boat. How will you use it — skiing or fishing? How big an engine horsepower? And then there's the color.

Color? That's right, color. When it comes to the wind, water and sun, some colors don't hold up as well as others. Red is the least, white the least. You want your boat looking its best. It's not also a matter of pride but also a matter of dollars — how well your boat holds up will affect its resale value.

The keys to keeping your boat's color from fading are protective covers and wax. But what if your boat's fiberglass finish needs work and you want to try out an electric buffer? Here are some tips:

- If your boat is badly faded, start with a marine rubbing compound. This is a rough paste and quickly will remove oxidation.

- Instead of a buffer, use a power random orbit polisher. This machine constantly changes its pattern and is less likely to wear the finish than a buffer. Even so, it still can wear through the finish so don't stay in one spot too long.

- After buffing, take a clean buffing pad and apply a high-grade marine wax. This will seal the finish.

In addition to fading colors, aging vinyl surfaces of a boat can look tacky. Sycamore Inc. says its Seymour vinyl spray paint will give your boat's old vinyl new look.

The vinyl paint contains UV-stable pigments that guard against fading and offer excellent adhesion to vinyl and leather. When used with Seymour adhesion promoter, the paint also adheres to the plastic consoles found on many contemporary powerboats. One coat of the Seymour vinyl paint is sufficient for most jobs.

The paint also can be used on inflatable boats, boat fenders and boat carpeting. When the paint dries, simply brush the carpet with a stiff brush to restore the original texture.

The paint comes in several colors and contains no ozone-depleting CFCs. Suggested retail price is $3.95 for a 16-ounce can. For more information write Sycamore Inc., 317 Crosby Ave., Sycamore, Ill. 60178, or call (815) 895-9101.

Montana mountaineers mark new route on McKinley

BUTTE (AP) — When the winds died down to a constant 30 mph, and blue sky cleared away the clouds, Jim Wilson and Jim Blow packed up their storm-ravaged camp and climbed a new route to the top of North America.

Miles of tundra, endless sky and one of the grandest panoramas in the world greeted the two Butte climbers on May 21 as they stood atop Alaska's Mount McKinley after outlasting a 10-day, 39-day trip up to 20,320 feet fulfilled a lifelong dream for Wilson, and was the first ice and rock adventure for Blow — who graduated from novice to expert after making the first ascent of the new route.

"It had been my goal, and my nemesis for seven years," Wilson said. "It was the culmination of my climbing career. It was my Mount Everest."

He had failed to complete the same trip twice before.

Walking around his Pipestone Mountaineering office like an arthritic older man without a cane, the 43-year-old Wilson recalled the triumphs of their climb and describes the tempest that kept them sealed inside their tent.

After 28 days of skiing on glaciers, becoming the first people to climb the 4,000-foot rock and ice cliff called Karsten's Spur on the way up the mountain and camping in the midnight sun of interior Alaska, the two crashed into a storm whose 100 mph-plus winds ushered in temperatures that dropped the mercury past minus-30 degrees.

Cramped inside a small tent for the next 10 days at about 16,500 feet, the two pondered their chances of summiting the mountain while the wind howled like a jet engine inside a bedroom, and snowed sneaked through closed zipper seals.

"It's when you forget about dreams and goals, that's when it became frustrating," Wilson said.

"It was like we were locked in a two-man prison cell. We couldn't get out and there's nothing we could do about."

Added Blow: "It was too loud to sleep, too loud sometimes to talk to each other, and it was cold. If you put a water bottle in the sleeping bag with your feet, it would freeze."

The wind blew so hard that several small rocks were picked up and blown through the tent walls like bullets. And snowdrifts piled against the tents walls, squeezing the climbing companions in a Gore-Tex vice until the winds shifted and moved the drifts.

Rationing food for one meal per day and laying in frozen sleeping bags, the two had to wait for the storm to clear before they could determine whether to scurry down Harper's Glacier into more temperate territory, and push on to the mountain summit.

"Life becomes so basic: eat, drink, sleep ... Everything was hard," Blow, 27, said while finishing french fries and burger from Wendy's. "We almost gave up the idea of doing the summit."

But after 10 long days, the winds quit trying to tear apart the camp and sun rays warmed the tent.

Battling crampy limbs and frozen hands, the two packed and resumed their climb to Denali Pass, an 18,200-foot passageway between the east and west sides of the mountain just

Once camp was established, they liked to the top where Wilson used a cellular phone to call his wife Karen in Butte. The phone call lasted about 40 seconds before the batteries froze and the line went dead.

After a few minutes and pictures on top, they walked back to camp, borrowed some food from some other mountaineers and tried to sleep.

The next day, they descended the West Buttress route past hordes of climbers on the easier path and eventually waited for an airplane to land on a glacier and pick them up.

"I would take Jim to the bottom of hell and back with confidence because I know he'd be a good partner," Wilson said. "My goals were met because of his ability to take on the scary things he did."

For his part, the taste of such mountain adventure has Blow looking ahead.

"Like Jim said, I feel like we've almost been to hell and back," Blow said. "I'd love to do it again."

Scientists monitor growth of undersea volcano

Structure won't break ocean's surface for 50,000 more years

HONOLULU (AP) — Just off the beaches of the island of Hawaii, a new island is slowly forming from a volcano 3,000 feet below the ocean's surface.

Researchers using a three-person diving craft are monitoring the volcano named Loihi — or "Long One" in Hawaiian — about 20 miles off the southern tip of the largest and southernmost island in the Hawaiian chain.

"It's an adrenalin-charged trip," said Alexander Malahoff, director of the Hawaii Undersea Research Laboratory. "You have to be extremely cautious and careful."

The small craft, similar to an undersea spaceship, collects such material as rock and water samples. The battery-driven craft also deploys instruments and takes photographs in the sunless depths. A normal trip lasts eight hours.

Scientists have made about 60 dives in the submersible PICES V and taken 40 additional dives in other submersibles.

Loihi was discovered in 1955, but it wasn't until the 1970s that a series of earthquakes led scientists to believe it was more than an elongated, inactive seamount.

The young volcano is growing so slowly that it will not break the ocean's surface for 50,000 years, Malahoff said.

Last summer, Loihi, which is about 13,000 feet high, put on a show, registering more than 4,000 earthquakes in a five-week span, said Fred Duennbeier, a professor of geology and geophysics at the University of Hawaii.

More than 40 of the quakes registered a magnitude of 4.0 or more, according to the U.S. Geological Survey's Hawaiian Volcano Observatory. A quake of magnitude 2.5 to 3 is the smallest people generally can feel.

The earthquakes toppled Loihi's summit, an area called Pele's cone and named after the Hawaiian goddess of volcanoes. The cone collapsed into a pit crater 1,000 feet deep. The crater filled with 300 million tons of rock, the equivalent of 50 million dump truck loads, Malahoff said.

"The whole summit had been crushed," he said. "Lava flows were destroyed. The whole landscape had changed."

Scientists believe magma — underground lava — drained down from a chamber inside the volcano. When that happened, the summit collapsed. It could have caused a tidal wave, but didn't because the breakdown happened over three days, Malahoff said.

The drastic change produced new hydrothermal vents, where inagma-heated water escaped into the ocean, overhangs and cliffs.

The colors of the volcano's surface reflects the activity within. Reddish tones came from iron-rich minerals. White, fluffy material, primarily around the vent regions, is a mat of bacteria. Newly deposited lava is black and shiny, while older lava is a duller, reddish-brown color, said Jim Cowan, a professor of oceanography at the university.

Water temperatures around the vents can reach up to 140 degrees. Normal ocean temperatures at that depth are near freezing, Cowan said.

Loihi shares a "hot spot," or volcanic cone firing source, with its larger active siblings, Mauna Loa and Kilauea, both on the Hawaiian island.

Research on Loihi is funded by the federal government, primarily the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. NOAA contributes $2.5 million to $3.5 million a year for the Hawaii Undersea Research Laboratory.

Researchers hope to improve their information-gathering techniques by laying an AT&T-donated fiberoptic cable from the volcano to a small lab on the Big Island's east coast. The system will create the Hawaii Undersea Geo-observatory, or HUGO.

The cable will stretch about 30 miles and will serve as a power source for experiments. Researchers will be able to glean information about earthquakes, tsunamis (earthquake generate waves), temperatures and various underwater sounds through an underwater microphone, Duennbeier said.

"I've done an awful lot of work on the ocean floor and I've literally had to throw experiments off the side of the ship and hope they work," Duennbeier said.

HUGO, a $2 million project funded by the National Science Foundation, will provide data faster and easier than the old methods, he said. The cable is expected to be laid in September and the experiments can begin immediately afterward, Duennbeier said.

New scanners aim for greater security Futuristic technology identifies people by hands, eyes or voice with another record

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Forget your bank card? No sweat. The automated teller machine puts a camera across your eyeballs to verify your identity. Checking out of work? Just press your palm on the surface, and your hours are clocked.

What sounds like high-tech fantasy is starting to show up in real life, giving rise to a new class of futuristic gadgets that can scan a person's eyes, hands or voice and instantly verify identity.

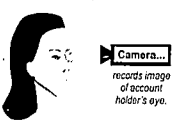

Among other uses, the "biometric identity" devices are being tested in automated teller machines as a substitute for plastic bank cards and personal identification numbers.

The trend is driven by improvements in technology that are pushing down costs, as well as by heightened fears about security.

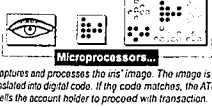

Indeed, the recent tort-revamping of Jonathan Levin — a New York City high school teacher and son of Time Warner chief Gerald Levin — apparently for his bank card number, has emphasized the need for a better method of screening bank account holders.

"I think it's going to make people think a little bit more about security," said Erik Bowman, an industry analyst with Personal Identification News, an industry newsletter.

"Biometrics is a way to solve that." Demand for the scanning devices, while still small, is growing rapidly. Up to $25 million in biometric identity devices are expected to be sold this year, up 45 percent from 1996, according to Personal Identification News. That is expected to double by 1999.

A variety of factors are at work. Improvements in technology are driving down prices for the devices, making them more affordable to banks and other security-conscious businesses. And word is spreading about the benefits at a time of heightened concern about flaws in traditional methods such as ATM bank cards.

New technology uses sophisticated scanning devices to identify people, instead of bank cards and PIN numbers.

Currently being tested by Citicorp and other banks is a gadget developed by Sensar Inc., that enables an ATM to read a person's iris to verify their identity.

Sensar's Irisident system uses special cameras to scan the bank holder's face. A computer processes the image and reduces its components to digital code, figuring out which part of the face is actually the iris. The code for the iris and all its unique physical characteristics — representing everything from color to tiny indentations in the tissue — is matched against a database of codes for all bank holders.

No match, no transaction.

NEW YORK — The Dow Jones rolled to its fourth straight record Wednesday, as investors remained optimistic that mild inflation and strong corporate profits will further boost stock values.

The Dow average rose 36.56 points to nearly 7,575.83, closing in on the 7,600 mark just one day after the blue-chip barometer's first close above 7,500.

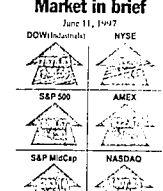

Up 17.5 percent on the year, investors were seeking those more than 300 points over the past five sessions.

Broad-market indexes also edged further into record territory. The technology-heavy Nasdaq market turned higher in the afternoon after struggling through much of the session.

Analysts called the continued rise a vote of confidence in the economy's mild growth. "The market believes the economy is slowing, and in the meanwhile profits will be good and any increase in interest rates will be muted," said A. Marshall Auloff Jr., Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co.

"Wall Street isn't too concerned about the economy," Heavy industrial shares, which have lagged other popular sectors such as techpolony and drugs, posted a strong performance for the second straight day. With popular market averages closing at record highs for three and four days in a row, investors were seeking those sectors that haven't grown too freely.

The day's advance also came despite uncertainty about whether Thursday's report on retail sales will reinforce recent signs that the economy may be slowing enough to keep inflation under control.

Key banking senator targets higher fees at certain ATMs

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Armed with new evidence that surcharges for automated teller machines are increasing sharply, the chairman of the Senate Banking Committee threatened ATM networks with subpoenas if they don't provide data on transaction costs.

A spokesman for one of the biggest networks, Cirrus, said it does not have such information.

The Banking Committee chairman, Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., also proposed legislation Wednesday to ban double charges by banks on ATM transactions.

Surcharges paid to the bank operating an ATM come on top of fees many customers pay their own bank when they use another bank's machine.

In a report released Wednesday, congressional investigators found that ATM surcharges more than tripled in the 14 months ending in February.

Banks "have decided to soak consumers with multiple fees every time they need to take money out of their accounts," D'Amato said at a Banking Committee hearing. "The people who are getting hit the hardest are the ones who can least afford it."

"A $3 fee on a $200 withdrawal is a nuisance," he said, "but taking a $3 bite out of a $20 withdrawal is an outrage."

Software foes join forces over privacy issue

WASHINGTON (AP) — Most people who browse the World Wide Web don't know that every time they visit a web page they are handing over personal information about them, but federal regulators are closing eyes on such privacy intrusions.

The focus is on new rules developed by Netscape and Compaq and Netscape Communications Corp. but their rivalry aside Wednesday to announce a joint plan to help safeguard consumer data on the Web.

The proposal by the two largest makers of software for browsing the Internet was the latest in a steady stream of programs aimed at catching the attention of consumers worried about a government crackdown.

But the fact that archivists Netscape and Microsoft lowered their swords was likely to catch the eye of Federal Trade Commission officials at a hearing this week in Washington, D.C. The two companies are locked in battle for supremacy on the Internet, with each trying to make its own software standards prevail.

Their agreement to a common privacy format reflected the deepened concern among Internet companies that federal rules could stifle electronic commerce.

Netscape's Navigator and Microsoft's Internet Explorer software basically control the portholes for how millions of Americans search for information on the Web. Some products ranging from books to computers. Privacy advocates are pushing for government curbs in part because of the increased use of technology. Some of them track a computer user's recent visited Web sites, the pages the user looked at and other information about the person's hobbies and other interests. It also would enable the creation of a "digital certificate" — information stored on the computer user's hard drive that immediately identifies a user when clicking on a Web site.

Microsoft and Netscape officials said they have submitted the plan to the World Wide Web Consortium, a nonprofit group that sets standards for Internet technology.

and two other Internet software companies two weeks ago. About 100 Internet browsers were listed as members of the proposal.

Their "open profiling standard" envisions new Web software that would allow computer users to determine what sort of personal information they are willing to share and with which Web sites.

For example, users could specify on their browsers whether they want to reveal their hobbies and other interests. It also would enable the creation of a "digital certificate" — information stored on the computer user's hard drive that immediately identifies a user when clicking on a Web site.

Microsoft and Netscape officials said they have submitted the plan to the World Wide Web Consortium, a nonprofit group that sets standards for Internet technology.

Feds OK new Pocatello bank

POCATELLO (AP) — It took three years, but Citizens Community Bank has finally secured state and federal authorization to open by the end of June.

It is the first newly chartered commercial bank in Pocatello since Idaho Bank & Trust Co. was chartered in December 1933.

The Department of Finance approved a state charter for Citizens Community Bank on Friday. Federal deposit insurance was approved Thursday. The bank will open June 26.

Organizers raised $3.6 million from investors to capitalize the bank, exceeding the minimum required amount by 5 percent.

Steve Hochkiss is the bank's president and chief executive officer. Thomas Holmes is its chairman.

Late mortgage payments increase

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of homeowners behind in their mortgage payments increased again in the January-March quarter and could continue to climb through 1997, an industry group said Wednesday.

The Mortgage Bankers Association said the seasonally adjusted delinquency rate is one-to-four month homes was 4.36 percent, up from 4.32 percent in the October-December quarter, when overdue payments rose 12 basis points.

That number declines followed two quarterly advances but remained 11 basis points below the recent high of 4.47 percent in the first three months of 1996.

AN ORDINANCE OF THE CITY OF HANSEN, IDAHO, REGULATING AND REQUIRING REMOVAL OF WEEDS, GRASS AND RUBBISH FROM PRIVATE PROPERTY AND PARKING WITHIN CURB ADJUTING SAME, PROVIDING DATES FOR REMOVAL OF WEEDS, GRASS, AND RUBBISH; AUTHORIZING THE CITY TO REMOVE SAME AND FOR ASSESSMENT AGAINST PROPERTY CLEARLY DECLARING FAILURE TO CUT AND REMOVE WEEDS, GRASS AND RUBBISH AS A PUBLIC NUISANCE; A PENALTY FOR VIOLATION THEREOF; AND PROVIDING FOR REPEAL OF CONFLICTING PROVISIONS. BE IT ORDAINED BY THE MAYOR AND COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF HANSEN, IDAHO, THAT:

SECTION 1. There is hereby added to the Municipal Code of the City of Hansen, Idaho, Chapter 6.07, which is read as follows:

6.06 Removal of Weeds, Grass and Rubbish. (A) Every owner, tenant or occupant of private property within the City shall cut and remove the weeds, grass and rubbish upon and from such private property to center of any street or alley along or in front of such property including the parking within and the curbing abutting such property and the same shall be done every year, and to cut and remove the same as often thereafter during each year and every year as may be necessary and essential to prevent their growth and spreading, up until October 1st of said year.

(B) Should any owner, tenant or occupant of private property within the City fail to cut and remove the weeds, grass and rubbish as herein required, the City may then have its proper officers or employees cut and remove such weeds, grass and rubbish and assess the cost of such cutting and removal against such property and the same shall be a lien thereon. Such assessment to be verified to the County Assessor or other proper county officer having charge of making up of the assessment rolls and such assessment to be placed on the assessment rolls and collected in the same manner as other municipal taxes are collected.

(C) Further, the City can bring an action in the district court against any owner, tenant or occupant of private property for judgment for the costs of cutting and removal of the weeds, grass and rubbish incurred by the City, including attorney fees and costs of suit. Said judgment will be a lien against said real property and can be enforced according to law.

(D) The failure to cut and remove the weeds, grass and rubbish as hereinabove provided for, is hereby declared to be a public nuisance, detrimental to the public health, safety and welfare.

(E) A violation of any provision herein shall be punished as set forth in Chapter 1.12 of the Municipal Code.

SECTION 2. All ordinances and Sections of the Municipal Code of the City of Hansen, Idaho, which conflict herewith are repealed.

SECTION 3. All ordinances and Sections of the Municipal Code of the City of Hansen, Idaho, which conflict herewith are repealed.

SECTION 4. This Ordinance shall be in full force and effect from and after the date of its adoption by the City of Hansen Council held on the 12th day of May, 1997.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE

Bobby Wolff

"He has the greatest blind side that you thinks he has none" — Dutch proverb

South anticipates an easy over-trick in today's spade game. Unfortunately, he made a careless error which might make West the play to see if you can spot the way to guarantee 10 winners.

South took his diamond ace and quickly established a trump. He planned on six trumps, two diamonds, the club ace and two diamond ruffs in dummy. Fearlessly, he tried to cash his diamond king and his plans collapsed. West had been switched to a trump limiting South to only one diamond ruff in dummy.

Refusing to surrender, South overtook dummy's trump 10 and tried the club finesse. It lost, the defense cashed the ace of hearts, and South could win only nine tricks. (His low diamonds would go on the heart queen and club ace if West led a second trump.)

To guarantee his game, South needs only one diamond ruff in dummy — provided, of course, that he doesn't expose his diamond king to a ruff. To guard against this possibility, South must lead a low diamond after he wins his diamond ace. West can ruff or not, but it won't matter. Assured of one diamond ruff in dummy, South holds his losers to only two hearts and a diamond, and he brings home a safe 10 tricks.

Was unlucky for South that he suffered the unlikely ruff? Yes and no. He risked 620 points in an effort to score an extra 30. Those are long odds to lay in any game.
