Dennis Moore, likely Jerome's next mayor, says he grew up on a farm and still feels comfortable behind the wheel of a potato truck.

Moore looks to stay busy

Jerome's only mayoral candidate lives at a fast pace

By Mark Helz Times-News writer

JEROME — Dennis Moore's pace might actually slow down a little if he becomes the next mayor of Jerome.

A recent rainstorm kept him inside, when he would have rather been behind the wheel of the potato truck he'd been driving all-week-for-a-farmer-north-of-town.

"I'm still a farm boy, I still like to be out in the field getting my hands dirty," he said.

Appointed to the Jerome City Council in 1993 and elected to the council in 1995, Moore is now the sole candidate to replace Mayor Gerald Ostler, who won't

Dennis Moore

While putting 10 to 15 hours a week into council work, he has done landscaping at the Jerome Cheese plant, worked in his own flower garden and stayed active with several civic organizations.

"I'm busier now than I ever was running the business," said Moore, 52.

Born and raised on a farm near Jerome, Moore left in 1963 to attend Idaho State University. He graduated in 1967 with a degree in electronics and went to work for the Atomic Energy Commission in Las Vegas.

But after just two years, his father became ill and couldn't run the appliance store, so Moore returned and took over the business.

"Dennis has a direct approach toward getting things done. He finishes what he starts," said Steve Woodland, who worked 18 years for Moore at the appliance store.

Moore said he sold the business to Woodland because he thought he'd finished what he wanted to accomplish there.

"The challenge was gone," he said. "If Moore becomes mayor, agencies will need to justify every dollar spent, said someone who knows him, because Moore is well-known to be extremely cautious with money."

That's why the appliance store continued to do well when a tumble in the local economy hit so many other Jerome businesses packing, Woodland said.

City Councilman Ralph Peters said he remembers Moore standing firm against a proposed 10 percent budget increase city staff brought before the council.

"He staunchly argued against 10 per-

Constitutional issues barred in federal court trial

The Times-News

SUN VALLEY — Professional figure skater Gary Beacom, a Sun Valley-area resident, faces up to 11 years in prison for skating around tax laws.

But Beacom, a Canadian citizen and resident alien, claims the federal government did not prove he even owed income tax until the Constitution and didn't allow him to make that argument at the trial.

Beacom, 37, was convicted in a federal court in Boise of failing to file a 1992 income tax return and an excise tax for 1993 and 1994, the U.S. attorney's office reported.

He will be sentenced Dec. 8 in Boise. Evidence presented at trial showed Beacom earned $65,655 in gross income in the U.S. between 1992 to 1994, but paid very little, if any, federal income taxes on those earnings, federal attorneys said.

The jury found Beacom willfully failed to file an income tax return for 1992 and didn't file returns for 1993 and 1994. The total tax owed for the three-year period was $187,578, federal attorneys said.

Jurors agreed with prosecutors that Beacom attempted to evade taxes by closing his bank account in March 1993; opening accounts in April and July 1993; and a company operating as a bank which avoided using client names, and attempting to have those who paid him income to stop filing the required tax forms or to file them under names other than his own during 1993 and 1994.

The skater also faces a fine of up to $225,000.

Beacom said he realizes he has taken a risk by taking on the government over income taxes.

"It's a completely formidable adversary because everyone covers before them," he said. "If I don't win... I'll pick up the pieces and move on. I had a duty to see this thing through."

He said he filed a motion this week in federal court asking for an acquittal and has several appealable issues he will take to the 9th Circuit Court in San Francisco. He claims he wasn't given his choice of counsel. He defended himself at the trial.

Beacom also claims he wasn't allowed a trial where the jurors had the right to see this thing through."

Overnighters didn't violate law

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Justice Department investigators have no evidence President Clinton violated the law with White House coffees and overnight stays for big contributors, Attorney General Janet Reno said Friday.

In addition, she extended a probe of Vice President Al Gore's telephone fund raising.

Reno's decision on Gore sends the Justice Department further into a tangled thicket of factual and legal questions. But in a letter discussing Clinton, she provided her fullest explanation to date of why the department has not taken a similar investigative step against the president.

In a two-paragraph announcement approved by a special court, Reno said Friday she was moving from a 30-day review to a 60-day preliminary inquiry in Gore's case because of the complexity of the factual and legal issues presented by this matter.

"I have been unable to determine whether there is sufficient specific and credible evidence to suggest a violation of federal criminal law," she wrote.

Later in a letter to Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., the House Judiciary Committee chairman, Reno refused to seek an independent counsel to investigate Hyde's allegations that Clinton violated the law by having financial supporters as guests at White House coffees or overnight in the Lincoln bedroom.

"We are aware of no evidence... the president requested or received a contribution" during those visits, she wrote.

Her decision on Gore had been awaited by Republicans and Democrats hoping to capitalize on or manage the political damage from the campaign finance affair.

Justice officials emphasized it did not foretell whether she would ultimately seek appointment of a special prosecutor.

"We will continue to cooperate fully and completely," Gore said. "I remain confident everything I did was legal and correct."

Gore said he did not consider it

Rock 'n' roll toll: Hearing aids for Clinton

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — A half-century of marching bands, rock-and-roll music and campaign events has taken such a toll on President Clinton's ears that doctors fitted him for hearing aids Friday.

"For years, Clinton has suffered from a high-frequency hearing loss that makes it difficult to discern what people are saying in the din of a crowded room. But the condition has worsened to the point where the president even complained that he could not make out what hecklers were shouting at him during recent speeches.

"It interferes with his understanding of certain words," said James Suen, the hearing specialist who examined Clinton Friday. The president will receive one device for each ear, but will only have to use them in settings where he typically has had trouble hearing, such as receptions or political fund-raisers. The versions chosen for Clinton are so hidden that most people around him will not know when he is wearing them.

While Ronald Reagan used them during his years at the White House, Clinton at 51 is far younger and the image of a baby boomer president with hearing aids could have widespread impact, medical experts said.

What is rare is that someone of his age would so readily accept the inevitability of needing artificial help. Of 26 million Americans with hearing loss, only an estimated 6 million wear hearing aids.

Reagan began using them, and industry representatives predicted Friday that Clinton will make it even more socially acceptable for a generation that was the first raised on rock music and is now suffering the consequences.

Aides at the White House immediately saw another benefit: Now when reporters about unspecified questions, Clinton can mimic the trademark Reagan gesture of cupping his hand to his ear and shaking his head to indicate he did not understand.

The results of his audiotape called an otherwise generally upbeat annual physical check-up for the president, Friday.

After six hours of tests at Bethesda Naval Hospital, doctors pronounced Clinton in excellent shape.

New hearing aids and all, President Clinton shows how he feels after his annual physical checkup on his return to the White House Friday.

Potential juror says no death penalty

Knightrider News Service

DENVER — The self-described pacifist son of African missionaries was among prospective jurors questioned Friday as the first week of Terry Nichols' Oklahoma City bombing trial drew to a close.

The jury candidate said that even if he voted to convict Nichols, he could not vote for the death penalty, which the government is seeking for the Michigan native.

"I can't in good conscience sentence anyone to death any more than I could shoot them," said the man, a physical therapist and the 22nd prospective juror called since Nichols' trial began Monday.

Under federal law, jurors who serve in the bombing case must be willing to impose the death penalty.

After Friday's questioning, several of the jury candidates were expected to be dropped from the pool during a late-afternoon hearing called by U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch at the request of Nichols' lawyers.

cent, and it ended up being something like 5 percent."

Convincing Moore to change his mind is no easy task.

"He does enough research on an issue to know what he's talking about," O'Leary said.

"If he thinks he's right, he'll hang in there to the very end," Woodland said.

But even in the midst of a debate, Moore won't lose his manner.

"He's low-key," Woodland said. "He's very fair."

Without the distraction of a full-time job outside City Hall, Moore could jump-start things that have been on hold, Peters said. A much-needed upgrade of the city's water and sewer system, for instance, calls for someone with Moore's time, energy and attention to detail.

Moore said lagging public interest in local government troubles him, especially when only a few people show up for even the most important city hearings.

He's like to change that by making city government to be more accessible, and promised to have an open office at City Hall. Moore also said he'd invite participation through advisory councils.

Memories of Jerome as a quiet farming community — where neighbors often gathered to play cards and spin yarn — are a strong anchor for Moore. But he doesn't let those memories cloud his vision of a competitive, growing Jerome that isn't afraid to change.

Visions of Jerome's growth should be tempered with a realistic view of the town's place in the Magic Valley. But Moore also scoffs at the suspicious attitude some old-timers have toward newcomers.

"You don't have to be born and raised in Jerome to have something to add," he said.

A setback because analysts had predicted it would take more than 30 days just to review the bulk of paperwork.

Republicans were critical. "Appointment of an independent counsel to investigate both the president and vice president is inevitable," Hyde said. "The longer her delay in doing this, the longer it will take to get answers the American people deserve."

Meantime, Reno's move left her recently expanded staff force of 120 Justice and FBI lawyers, agents and analysts with a flock of tasks.

A wave of interviews that likely will include Gore himself.

A decision on whether Gore's dialing for dollars from his office to private citizens at home and work is barred by the 114-year-old Pendleton Act, passed just seven years after the

Idaho misses welfare benchmark but won't feel big federal penalty

BOISE (AP) — Idaho will be penalized $1.1 million for failing to meet the first benchmark of federal welfare reform, state welfare officials said.

They added the dramatic decline in the caseload since the state implemented its own reform plan more than compensates for the penalty.

"Even if we take a hit, we're going to be able to continue at the same service level," said Boise attorney Denise Baird, a member of the special task force that formulated the welfare reform program Gov. Phil Batt adopted in late 1995.

Idaho is among 19 states that will not meet the federal requirement that 75 percent of two-parent welfare families be working or obtaining education or training this year.

The penalty is 5 percent of the federal grant for the first year and 2 percent for each year that capped at a total of 21 percent. The federal law requires the state to make up from its own funds the federal cash denied through penalties. But Mary Anne Saunders, special deputy for welfare reform, said the leeway in the amount of the state contribution under the block grant reform scheme should blunt the need for any additional cash.

In addition, the number of Aid to Families With Dependent Children cases dropped from 9,300 in April 1996 to under 2,300 last month.

The state's failure to meet the so-called work requirement is to a great extent because it has not sought to exempt from the work requirement parents of children under 6.

To maintain equitable treatment throughout, the state plan requires work or training of parents of children older than 12 weeks old. It also does not require the level of work or training that meets the federal standards.

"The combination means more people who fail to meet the requirement are included in determining whether Idaho has met the standard."

Saunders said the decision in May that community service work be paid at minimum wage also reduced work options in Idaho.

Members of the Batt task force did express some concern that the so-called diversionary cash assistance program they backed had only been used 30 times in three months. The program was intended to provide immediate cash help for people who could stay off welfare if they could get their car fixed or just pay the month's rent.

judged not only the facts, but the law, how it was applied.

1876 invention of the telephone and well before its general availability. The law was designed to keep federal officials from shaking down subordinates at work for contributions, congressional researchers say.

A determination of whether Gore or President Clinton was aware that some "soft money" they ostensibly raised for issue and general party advertising was later used by Democratic National Committee officials to support specific candidates.

Reno has said Congress removed soft money from the coverage of campaign finance laws in 1979 over Justice's objections.

In her letter to Hyde, Reno said her federal law would require a crime for politicians to provide "access-for-political contributions." To be a crime, politicians must promise a job, compensation, a contract or other benefit in return.

Big gambling craps out in Big Easy

Casinos keep going under in New Orleans

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — It seemed a sure bet: casino gambling in Big Easy.

Instead, big gambling has crapped out in the Big Easy. An $830 million casino under construction next to the French Quarter is half-finished, the project all but dead. And the last riverboat casino in downtown New Orleans closed this week.

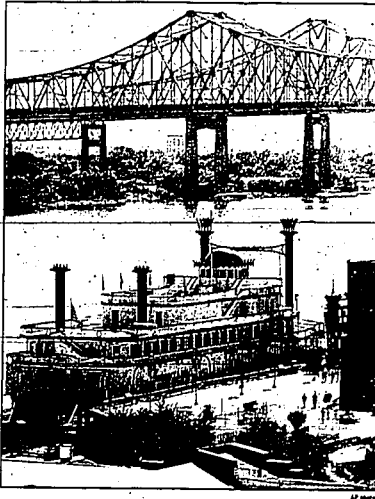

The casino people put gambling in New Orleans on the basis of "build it and they will come," said C.B. Forgotson, a lawyer who led the casino opposition from the start. "What they missed is that the casino cannot compete with the existing attractions of New Orleans."

Unlike Las Vegas, which was just a railroad junction in the desert before casinos came, or Atlantic City, N.J., which was a run-down beach resort, New Orleans was already a tourist mecca without slots, blackjack and poker.

It attracted visitors who wanted to stroll the French Quarter, listen to jazz, eat in world-class restaurants or just drink themselves blind. Gambling, it seemed, was in the shuffle.

In a survey conducted this year by the New Orleans Convention and Visitors Bureau, 68 percent of tourists questioned said casino gambling was "not important at all" to their decision to visit the city.

"Everyone overestimated the extent to which the tourists would go to the casinos," said

The Flamingo Casino is moved at the Mississippi River in New Orleans Friday. The casino's license to operate expired Wednesday, making it the third casino in New Orleans to close in the last 2 1/2 years.

Louisiana State University economist David Johnson. "Secondly, we knew it would be a problem, but we thought more people would come from the suburban areas to downtown. But very few people did."

When the Legislature approved casino gambling in the early 1990s, backers envisioned a land casino and a string of riverboats in the city and its suburbs.

But the Harrah's Jazz Co. casino project is at a standstill, the basement populated by stray cats. Casino giant Harrah's

Entertainment Inc. cut off financing Tuesday and pulled out of the project after an enormous cost overrun and what may have been overly optimistic predictions of how much money it would pull in.

After Tuesday's closing of the Flamingo riverboat, the city is left with one floating casino on Lake Pontchartrain, far from the hot tourist area. The Flamingo was the fourth riverboat to open and close in the city in less than four years.

While suburban riverboats are flourishing, with one planning to expand gambling in the French Quarter is now limited to video poker machines in bars or an off-track betting parlor on a side street.

"This, in a city world-famous for indulging people's vices," former Gov. Edwin Edwards first pushed for the casino during an unsuccessful re-election bid in 1987. At the time, he pointed out that the 100,000-square-foot mecca would be virtually the only casino between New Jersey and Nevada.

But the turf had changed radically by the time the casino was approved in 1992. Mississippi was on the way to creating its beach-front casino strip, while riverboat gambling had been approved the year before in Louisiana under Gov. Edwin Edwards.

Now the casino project is on the brink of liquidation.

State Sen. Frances Heitmeier, who wrote the riverboat gambling bill, still supports a big casino in New Orleans.

"New Orleans should be at the top of the gaming destinations," he said. "We didn't do it right. We didn't handle it right. I would love to go back and start over again."

Atlantis leaves American aboard Mir for 4 months

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Space shuttle Atlantis and its crew pulled away from Mir for the flight home Friday.

They left behind an American astronaut as well as a new computer that should make his four-month stay safer and more productive.

Mir's newest astronaut, David Wolf, watched quietly as Atlantis backed away in darkness, 250 miles above Russia. Aboard the shuttle was Michael Foale, head-of-home after an often-stressful 12 months aboard the run-down Russian space station.

The crews wished each other good luck in Russian.

The shuttle astronaut's stuck around the neighborhood for a little bit to try to find the holes in Mir that were caused by a collision last June with a runaway cargo ship.

With Atlantis hovering 240 feet away, the Mir cosmonauts twice ejected a burst of air into the sealed-off lab module that was punctured during the collision. The shuttle crew aimed zoom lenses at the module in hopes of seeing any particles that might be forced out the holes.

Moments after the first blast of air—Atlantis astronaut-as-well as a Mir cosmonaut saw particles floating from the base of the solar panel that was damaged in the accident. Only one piece of debris was spotted after the second blast.

Prospects for free trade initiative look better

WASHINGTON (AP) — Prospects for President Clinton's free trade initiative, judged only a few days ago, may be looking up, although the momentum is still seen few and far between.

Administration officials said Friday they see an increasingly good sign in the strong bipartisan support demonstrated when the Senate Finance Committee approved compromise language after all-night negotiations between committee and administration staffers.

That committee vote on Wednesday followed dire warnings just the day before by both Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott and House Speaker Newt Gingrich that fast-track trade legislation was in serious trouble in Congress. Fast-track allows the president to negotiate trade agreements without congressional approval.

"We feel better now, but there is still a long way to go," said Jay Byrum, who is heading the White House lobbying effort on the issue.

Dick Gephardt

"The president is spending a lot of time, energy and (political) capital on this fight," Commerce Secretary William Daley said. "We are way ahead of where we were in 1993."

Daley, who headed the administration's 1993 fight to win approval of the North American Free Trade Agreement with Mexico, said the White House would forcefully make the case that American workers will only lose if the president does not have authority to negotiate new free trade agreements with other countries in Latin America and beyond.

The battle will move next week to the House Ways and Means Committee, which is scheduled to take up a measure being drafted by Chairman Bill Archer, R-Texas, next Wednesday.

Republican staffers on the committee say Archer has told the administration it needs to come up with five to seven Democrats on the committee willing to support Clinton. But White House officials concede that so far they only have two certain Democratic votes — Rep. Robert Matsui of California, who is leading Clinton's effort in the House, and Rep. John Tanner, of Tennessee.

In an effort to secure more Democrats, administration officials spent Friday negotiating with Archer's aides over language in the Ways and Means draft. They were pushing Archer to move closer to the compromise language approved by the Senate on the issues of labor and the environment.

House Democrats, led by Minority Leader Dick Gephardt, have insisted that any future free trade agreements contain enforceable provisions protecting worker rights and the environment.

Labor unions and environmental groups, two key Democratic constituencies, argue that without these safeguards, American companies will shift more jobs to developing nations that exploit their workers and the environment.

But Republicans, backed by big corporations, object to including those provisions in free trade measures, arguing that it raises the prospect that negotiations designed to lower trade barriers will be used by protectionist forces to raise barriers.

To meet Republican objections, the administration agreed in the Senate bill to keep most labor and environmental issues out of the fast-track process, although Clinton could deal with these issues in side agreements not covered by fast-track. In an effort to pick up Democratic support, White House negotiators were able to add language reauthorizing for two years programs that aid workers who lose their jobs as a result of competition from imports.

Latest '97 deficit estimate drops to $23 billion

WASHINGTON (AP) — Continuing a yearlong trend of falling deficit forecasts, the Congressional Budget Office said Friday it expects a fiscal 1997 federal shortfall of about $23 billion, $11 billion smaller than it estimated just a month ago.

Final figures for fiscal 1997, which ended Sept. 30, should be available this month. But for now, the new estimate is the latest unexpectedly favorable twist in a year that began with the Clinton administration and nonpartisan CBO projecting shortfalls of $125 billion.

The latest, lower figure can only intensify the jockeying among members of Congress over budget surpluses that may emerge in a few years. In recent weeks, leaders and rank-and-file lawmakers have unveiled proposals to use the money for cutting taxes again, building highways and reducing the accumulated federal debt.

While the biggest reason for this year's shrinking estimates has been an unexpected rise in pension collections, CBO reduced its projection this month almost entirely because a wide range of federal programs seem to be spending less than anticipated. These include Medicare, Medicaid, family support programs, the Postal Service and the Pentagon.

"It's a lot of little different things," said James Blum, CBO's deputy director.

None of the reductions has anything to do with the budget deal President Clinton and Congress enacted in August, which was aimed at eliminating federal deficits by 2002.

Oregon pot law appears headed to voters

SALEM, Ore. — A law that would restore criminal penalties for possessing small amounts of marijuana was blocked Friday when more than 90,000 petition signatures were turned in to the state. The law, passed by the 1997 Legislature, was to have taken effect Saturday. It would make it a crime with a potential 30-day jail term to possess less than an ounce of the drug. The offense now is a civil violation carrying a maximum $1,000 fine. The signatures turned in Friday were almost twice as many as the 48,841 needed to block the law and refer the issue to voters in November 1998.

USDA: S. Korea not blocking beef imports

WASHINGTON — U.S. agriculture officials said Friday that South Korea has not suspended imports of beef from Nebraska or any other state because of fears of E. coli contamination. Agriculture Department spokesman Johna Pierce said the agency's trade officials have determined there is no ban, even though a minister of the South government said a day earlier it was blocking Nebraska beef from customs clearance until it could be tested and found safe. The South Koreans began testing beef from Nebraska after a shipment of frozen and sliced beef from meatpacker BPF Inc. was apparently found to have E. coli contamination on the surface.

U.S.-Chinese relations may clear hurdle

WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration expects to make a declaration at this month's summit that China isn't helping other nations make nuclear weapons, a statement that would signal an important improvement in U.S.-Chinese relations. Opponents in Congress and arms control groups argue that a certification of U.S.-Chinese nuclear cooperation is premature. And administration officials, in fact, are telling lawmakers in private that they are working to overcome the hurdle of China's long-term cooperation with Iran, according to a senior administration official. The official said, however, that prospects for a breakthrough are good, and Kurt Campbell, deputy assistant secretary of defense for East Asia, said the nuclear agreement could be the highlight of the Oct. 29 Washington summit meeting of President Clinton and Chinese President Jiang Zemin. The Clinton-Jiang meeting will be the first Sino-U.S. summit since the crackdown on democracy demonstrators at Tiananmen Square in 1989 upset relations. Clinton is to visit China next year.

Report: Measure would gut log-export ban

WASHINGTON — A log-export provision blocked by Washington's two senators would "effectively gut" a 1990 ban on exports of unprocessed timber from federal forests, an Agriculture Department report said Friday. The review by the USDA Inspector General's Rural Development and Natural Resources Division is the latest opinion offered in an ongoing fight over the effects of the measure offered by Sens. Slade Gorton, R-Wash., and Pat Murray, D-Wash., and opposed by Rep. Peter DeFazio, D-Ore. Backers of the Gorton-Murray position say the official who prepared the review is wrong and doesn't understand existing export practices in the Pacific Northwest. The leader of one trade group in Seattle said it's part of a "vendetta" DeFazio carries against big log exporters in the region. But DeFazio said Friday it's further evidence that President Clinton should veto the provision as it appears in the Interior Department appropriation bill making its way through Congress.

Utah jury convicts immigrant of murder

OGDEN, Utah — It took a jury an hour-and-a-half to find 23-year-old Ba Quang Tran guilty of first-degree murder for the slaying of an estranged girlfriend. Tran was crying and motionless as jury forewoman Anne Kendrick read the unanimous verdict. Thursday convicting the Vietnamese immigrant of the Dec. 22, 1996, stabbing and strangulation of 32-year-old Kim Lein Thi Vo. The jury also convicted Tran of violating a protective order Vo had filed just 10 days earlier. Tran, who will be sentenced Nov. 5, likely faces five years to life in prison.

Atlanta authorities look for bearded man

ATLANTA — A federal task force is trying to identify a bearded man seen at a gay night club before a bomb exploded there in February. The man, who is the wanted as a witness and not as a suspect, may or may not be the same person seen near an abortion clinic bombed five weeks earlier, agents said. The task force is investigating the nightclub and abortion clinic bombings and the July 1996 bombing at Centennial Olympic Park that killed one person and injured more than 100 during the Atlanta Games. A dozen people were injured in the other two bombings. A $50,000 reward is being offered for information leading to an arrest in any of the bombings.

Navy carrier departs early for Persian Gulf

WASHINGTON — The aircraft carrier USS Nimitz has been ordered to skip a port call at Singapore in order to get to the Persian Gulf ahead of schedule, officials said Friday. The hurry-up apparently is linked to U.S. warnings to Iran earlier this week not to repeat its cross-border air attacks into southern Iraq. U.S. warplanes based in Bahrain and Saudi Arabia are patrolling the skies over southern Iraq to enforce a "no-fly" zone that was created after the 1991 Gulf War. The Nimitz, with a regular complement of fighter aircraft aboard, was scheduled to be on station in the Gulf later this month. It was ordered to skip the Singapore visit in order to arrive in the Gulf four or five days early, said a Pentagon official who spoke on condition of anonymity. The last U.S. air-to-air encounter in the no-fly zone was in 1993, Bacon said.

Czech leader says war danger remains

WASHINGTON — Czech President Vaclav Havel said Friday the danger of war still exists and expanding NATO is worth the cost if it contributes to greater security in Europe. Opponents of the expansion that would bring his country, Poland and Hungary into the 16-nation alliance are "extremely naive, short-sighted and even dangerous," Havel said. With Czech-born Secretary of State Madeleine Albright listening and hearings on NATO enlargement due to start in the Senate next week, Havel said his country is ready to pay for pushing the alliance's borders eastward toward Russia. "Any judicious person must admit that such expenditure is worth it," he said. "Has it not been established beyond doubt that even the most costly preventive security is cheaper than the cheapest war?"

Crash blamed on workers' errors

The Baltimore Sun

WASHINGTON — An Air Force safety board has determined that an F-117A fighter crashed in Baltimore County last month because workers incorrectly installed a part in the left wing, leading to the sky in front of thousands of spectators, officials and sources said. The board made its determination as it nears completion of a report on the Sept. 14 crash. Pentagon sources said Thursday night. "They're pretty much there," one source said. "A support structure appears to have been put in incorrectly." Another Air Force crash investigation board began working this week and will determine whether maintenance workers should be held liable, the sources said. As a result of the safety board's findings, the wing support structures in the remaining 23 F-117As are being inspected. Already, two of the inspected jets were back flying Thursday afternoon, officially ending the grounding of the Air Force plane.

Air Force pilot Maj. Bryan Knight discusses the crash of his F-117 during a press conference in Middle River, Md., Friday. Knight was the pilot of an F-117 stealth fighter during an air show at Martin State Airport Sunday, Sept. 14, that crashed in the neighborhood.

"We lifted the stand-down today," said Col. Ron Rand, a spokesman for the Air Combat Command, based at Langley Air Force Base, Va., which operates the jets. Rand said last night that the decision was made by Gen. Dick Hawley, the unit's commander, who reviewed the safety board's work. The crash of the arrow-shaped F-117A Nighthawk occurred during an air show at Martin State Airport. A piece of its left wing had snapped off. The 543 million plane crashed less than a half-mile from the airport, where 12,000 people had gathered to watch the show.

The pilot, Maj. Bryan Knight, ejected and safely parachuted from the plane just before it slammed onto a residential driveway.

about 2,700 hours of flying time and 500 hours of experience in the cockpit of F-117As. Knight suffered minor neck and back injuries. There were no serious injuries to anyone on the ground. The plane, similar to those that flew the firm's missions in the Persian Gulf war against the mos-heavily defended Iraqi targets, had completed three passes over the airport when trouble became apparent.

About 150 fire, police and military officials cordoned the site in the hours after the crash, which sent several firefighters to area hospitals for treatment of nausea and inhalation of smoke from the fumes of the fighters.

So far, 33 of the F-117As have been inspected, and none has been found to have a problem, Rand said. Most of the planes are at Holloman Air Force Base, near Alamogordo, N.M., with the others at Nellis Air Force Base, Las Vegas, Nev., and Palmdale, Calif., home of Lockheed, the plane's manufacturer.

All the planes, developed in the late 1970s and early 1980s, were modified with the wing structure seven or eight years ago. Air Force officials said the plane that crashed in Baltimore was worked on by an Air Force maintenance team at a test-range airfield at Tonopah, Nev.

"There is a possibility we would have had someone at the airfield," said an Air Force source. "It will not happen until both boards are completed."

Also Thursday, a Navy F-14 Tomcat fighter jet on a routine training flight crashed in the Atlantic Ocean off the East Coast. The Navy said one crew member was rescued, and a search was continuing Saturday for another. But crew members ejected from the plane.

It was the seventh military plane crash since Sept. 13. The six earlier crashes occurred within a week and led to a one-day stop in training flights for a safety review by all the military services.

U.S. to fire laser bursts at orbiting satellites

Knight-Ridder News Service

WASHINGTON — The United States for the first time will fire a laser at an orbiting satellite, breaking a longstanding tradition in the military's effort to take control of space. The Defense Department, in announcing the decision Thursday by Defense Secretary William Cohen, described the test as merely defensive, designed to collect data to protect U.S. satellites from a laser attack by other countries. But Pentagon documents describing the test, obtained by Knight-Ridder, detail a much broader effort to experiment in satellite warfare.

A one-second burst will attempt to trigger sensors that detect an attack. A second 10-second burst will attempt to overload the sensors.

While the laser is not expected to damage the satellite, there are some risks. The laser beam, jutting off MS113, could pose "potential damage to personnel" in the vicinity, the documents said. And there is still a small chance of damage to the satellite and debris from it, according to the documents.

The third stage of the project is even more ambitious. Instead of testing the defensive sensors of an active U.S. satellite, a laser would be fired at "non-cooperative targets," such as an incoming satellite. Planners are currently trying to locate such a target.

The test is merely the tip of a large spear now aimed at space. Defense planners are working on ways to protect military and civilian satellites from foreign countries that might want to jam or disable them. As communications and information become more central to armies and civilian economies, countries launch more satellites. And they are increasingly valuable as territory in orbit to protect, defend and destroy. The Air Force projects as many as 1,500 satellites going into orbit in the next decade — valued at least at $1 trillion.

The Air Force is developing multi-orbit space net constellations are competing to build an expensive network for linking military satellites into space. The service is developing two space-based platforms to beam guided ballistic missiles. And it has drafted plans for a space jumbo capable of ferrying troops into orbit. The service last year adopted plans to become more than just an Air Force but an air and space force in the coming years.

Satellites are so central, said a Pentagon spokesman, that strategic vulnerability has become a major skin-in-the-game issue for the United States. The Indian government is jamming a satellite launched by Hong Kong. The Indian government reportedly believes that the satellite is in an orbit reserved for Indian satellites.

But the test in the New Mexico desert has prompted concerns that there is no cabinet agency guarding the U.S. military's more space.

"It hasn't been a good, comprehensive plan by the Defense Department as to what it's going to do on the whole issue of space control," said Sen. Jeff Bingaman, D-N.M., a longtime sponsor of the MRACE legislation and the ranking member of the Senate Armed Services strategic forces subcommittee. "I would feel more comfortable if I knew where this did fit into the larger strategy and whether it fit into a one-day stop in training flights for a safety review."

Some Democrats in Congress have objected to the tests, arguing that it might provoke Russia to begin testing its ability to destroy satellites. In the 1970s and 1980s, Russia launched ballistic missiles at satellites. Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, recently asked the administration to scrap the tests.

But Bingaman defends the test as "legitimate."

"As far as I know there's nothing about this test that goes beyond measuring how a satellite responds to attack," he said. "The test does break a longstanding U.S. practice of not testing weapons against satellites. Since the United States has had the most satellites in orbit, it has shied away from tests that might provoke other nations to learn how to shoot them down."

In the first stage, technicians learn to track satellite targets more precisely than they have in the past. In the second stage, they will fire a chemical laser, known as MIRACL, at the Air Force's MS113 satellite. They must do so before the satellite, which has surveyed the earth, disappears over the horizon.

Monument to women in armed forces breaks down barriers

Cost of major D.C. memorials

Costs for the new World War II memorials in Washington, D.C., are being tallied. The cost of the World War II Memorial is $1.2 billion, the Vietnam Veterans Memorial is $7 million, the Korean War Memorial is $22 million, the Persian Gulf War Memorial is $25 million, and the U.S. Navy Memorial is $22 million.

for those who can't afford it — have been disappointed. They had hoped some 500,000 of the 1.2 million living women veterans would register, so far about 200,000 have done so.

"I'm inclined to think when people have an opportunity to see this, they will be a stream of money," Vaughn said.

That sanguine vision is shared by the Weiss and Manfredi, a husband-and-wife team from New York who won a 1989 competition to design a four-acre site that forms the end of a visual axis tying the Lincoln Memorial to the government mall above it; the mansion of Robert E. Lee.

Initially, they encountered a dreary, nondescript wall whose chief function seemed to be as home to a security guard who ordered motorists to turn around. Their design has turned it into a plaza of water and light, which they said will invite visitors to hear the stories of mothers and sisters, daughters and aunts who served their nation in a man's military.

"What's been amazing about the stories we've heard from the women is they're very modest," Manfredi, whose mother was a World War II Army captain, said during a recent tour of the site. "There's none of this macho, 'I want a full ride' kind — I want it bigger than anybody else's. It's been a series of quiet voices, quiet struggles, and we were respectful of that idea."

The designers have struggled, too. Their original plan for 10 39-foot-tall glass spires atop the terrace that caps the site was rejected. "Too far out" for the taste of official Washington. So the architects started again and came up with what is certain to be the memorial's signature element.

The terrace is now topped with tilted, cast-glass tablets — a skylight that will be inscribed with quotations by and about the women, testifying to the service-women's contribution to their country. Sunlight will carry the words from the skylight to the walls and floor of an exhibit gallery below.

Cosmic cooperation evolves from U.S.-Russian space race

Father of Soviet space program remembers 'great days'

MOSCOW (AP) — Arkady Ostashev's brown eyes are glazed from age. But they come alive when his mind rewinds 40 years, back to the desert outpost in Central Asia where a team of elite Soviet scientists took the first dramatic strides of the space race.

Working in obsessive secrecy, the Soviets propelled the Sputnik satellite into space on Oct. 4, 1957, making it the first man-made object to reach the limits of the earth's gravity.

But as fierce as the dueling scorpions. But in these post-Cold War days, the final frontier has evolved into a sphere of cooperation.

For the past week, Russia's beleaguered Mir space station and the U.S. shuttle Atlantis has become locked in a cosmic embrace.

David Wolf is now the sixth American to live on the Mir.

But the night of the big event, he and his Moscow colleagues were on a phone to Balkonar.

"I got an update every 10 seconds," he said. "There were probably 70 people crammed into our office."

There was absolute silence until the first "bleep-bleep" became audible, and then the buttoned-down men of science exploded with joy.

They celebrated with tea and cream, washed down with brandy. Every 45 minutes the gang fell silent, then ears tilted toward a radio as Sputnik passed overhead. Each day over ignited a fresh round of celebrations that lasted through the night.

Unbeknownst to the West, Soviet scientists were not only racing against the Americans, they also were battling their own military.

Congratulations, the road to the stars is now open," Sergei Korolyov, father of the Soviet space program, told Ostashev and his colleagues after their triumph.

It mattered not that the small, silver orb had little purpose beyond achieving orbit and sending back a monotonous "bleep-bleep" as it circled the globe every 95 minutes during its three-month existence.

At the height of the Cold War, Sputnik was one of the Soviet Union's most glorious victories and it touched off near panic in the United States, where political and military leaders forecast grave consequences if America lagged behind.

"Those were great days. It was a lot of fun," recalled Ostashev, who was responsible for testing the rockets that sent the Sputnik aloft.

Ostashev, 72, lives in a modest apartment in Korolyov, a town on the outskirts of Moscow that's named after the Soviet space pioneer. His compact living room is filled with miniature models of Soviet spacecraft. A letter of thanks from President Boris Yeltsin sits atop his television.

Four decades ago, Ostashev was part of Korolyov's hand-picked team that haled for testing railway cars in Balkonar, Kazakhstan, a compound carved out of the vast emptiness of Central Asia. It was chosen precisely because it was so removed from any human settlement.

"We were so secretive," Ostashev said. "Secretive beyond all reason."

This high-powered group was so isolated and desperate for entertainment that at night they gathered on Balkonar's only paved road, caught scorpions, put them in glass jars and watched them fight to the death.

At the time, the U.S.-Soviet space competition seemed every Cosmonaut Vladimir Titov is a member of the shuttle crew, a fact that barely rates a mention in most newspaper stories about the U.S. space agency NASA has a semi-permanent office at Russia's Mission Control.

The Russian space program still strikes fear in the hearts of some members of the U.S. Congress, but only for the dangers it presents to astronauts living on the accident-prone Mir-Mir military leaders forecast grave consequences if America lagged behind.

Such camaraderie was unthinkable in 1957, when both the Americans and the Soviets announced plans to launch satellites.

Unbeknownst to the West, Soviet scientists were not only racing against the Americans, they also were battling their own military.

Korolyov understood the public relations coup of being first in space. He wanted to focus on a small satellite, such as Sputnik, which was roughly the size of a beach ball and relatively easy to fire into space. In contrast, the military's priority was huge rockets capable of delivering large bombs.

"The military was concerned with size, it didn't care about prestige," Ostashev said. "But Korolyov knew that being first would bring glory, so the government supported his idea of a simple satellite."

Days before the Sputnik launch, Ostashev was urgently called back to Moscow to work on new missile guidance systems.

U.N.: Congo expels refugee agencies

UNITED NATIONS — Congo is expelling all refugee agencies out of the eastern part of the country and closing the border there with Rwanda, U.N. officials said today. The order, which is of unclear nature, was effective immediately, U.N. spokesman Peter Hain said. "We respect this decision, but our obligations are unambiguous," he said. Wednesday, the United Nations ordered refugees streaming out of the country, saying it wanted assurance they could freely probe massacres allegedly committed by the current government's forces. Western nations have threatened to withdraw and United Nations Laurent Kabila allows the team to investigate charges that his forces slaughtered thousands of Rwandans from refugees during their last year's rebellion against the late dictator Mobutu Sese Sese.

Premier's indictment less likely after probe

ROME — A team of expert consultants they found no evidence of wrongdoing in a case made when Premier Romano Prodi headed a major bank-building company, a finding that lessens the chances Prodi will be indicted. The investigation into allegations of a bribe at an office center on the side of the Carlo Bertelli bank company, which was spun off four years ago by the state holding company IRI, was a state-owned industrial IRI. Prodi was IRI's chairman at the time. A prosecution has alleged that Carlo Bertelli was paid an unusually low price. Prodi has denied any wrongdoing and said he would not resign if indicted.

Anti-drug chiefs sent to jail on drug charges

MADRID, Spain — Spain's National Court sentenced two former heads of the Civil Guard, anti-drug unit and 12 others to prison Friday for paying off informant with drugs, new reports said. Civil Guard Commander Jose Antonio Pardo and Colonel Francis Garmier were each sentenced to seven years of prison on charges that included drug trafficking, state television reported. Four Civil Guard officers received jail sentences of 10 years, two others got two years in prison, and the rest were given suspended sentences. The court handed down the sentences after a four-month trial.

Officials allow airport to exceed noise limit

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands — In an accommodation given Amsterdam's Schiphol Airport — one of Europe's busiest — a waiver from the government Friday allows it to exceed noise limits. The decision came after months of debate over the future of the airport, which has been questioned because of nearby airports and international airlines supporting it, grown. The government said the airport will be allowed to exceed the local noise limits during the day, but two of its four runways will be closed two hours earlier to reduce nighttime noise. No detailed figures were given for how loud the planes could be.

Indonesia cracks down on fire starters

JAKARTA, Indonesia — Indonesian began cracking down Friday on companies suspected of starting the fire and bomb fires that have shredded much of Southeast Asia with an ever-increasing pace for weeks. The Forestry Ministry revoked the operating permit of 20 companies after they failed to respond to accusations they started illegal fires, the official Antara news agency said. Hundreds of fires set to clear land illegally have been burning out of control across Indonesia for two months. A thick smog cloud has drifted to neighboring Malaysia, southern Thailand and parts of the Philippines, as well as Singapore and Brunei, causing air quality problems that have threatened the health of millions. The ministry had given the suspected plantation and timber companies until Thursday to file reports on their operations.

Fresh quakes strike Italy, inflict new damage

ASSISI, Italy — More earthquakes shook central Italy Friday, sending people fleeing into the street and inflicting new damage on an area hard hit by a pair of strong tremors last week, including the Basilica of St. Francis of Assisi. "People can't take it anymore," said Giancarlo Sarcinola, a civil defense official in Fabriano, where one telephone man jumped from a second-story window. He was uninjured but at least 20 other people suffered minor injuries after the first and strongest of today's quakes, which struck at 10:55 a.m. with a magnitude of 5.5. A series of aftershocks followed, including a quake with a magnitude of 3.5 at 1:41 p.m. and another almost a strong about 40 minutes later. The tremors, struck in experts' were cataloging pieces of rubble in the famed basilica and studying ways to reconstruct its structure.

China tightens controls on ousted leader

BEIJING — China's leaders tightened restrictions on the movements of a former Communist Party official they suspect them to consider their new role of the Tiananmen Square pro-democracy movement, a human rights group said Friday. Zhao Ziyang is no longer allowed to leave his guarded compound in central Beijing, use the telephone or receive visitors, Human Rights in China said.

Diana merchandise brings big money

LONDON (AP) — Hunted in life, marketed in death. Barely six weeks after Princess Diana died in a Paris car wreck, the race is on to merchandise — and make — her memory, with sales ranging from glossy picture books to memorial coins to less-than-tasteful stickers declaring "Bye Bye Di."

The favorite princess who hosted British tourism and fashion during her lifetime has spawned an industry of her own: Diana-bia.

Days after Diana's death, poorly printed T-shirts hit the streets for 50 cents, featuring her picture and various slogans, including "Born a Princess, Died a Saint." Those who blamed pursuing photographers for the tragedy could buy a T-shirt with the word "paparazi" above the image of a skull.

Now, more than a dozen Diana tribute books are in print — seven are in the top 50 — and videos and CDs celebrating her life are climbing the charts, most notably Elton John's smash record version of "Candle in the Wind."

Mail order companies are offering a range of porcelain plates and medals with Diana's likeness, and many of the princess are selling out and a set of stamps will be issued later this year.

"She is an icon, and there are very few icons about," said Dallas Manderson, sales director for the parent company of J.W. Welford.

David Norton, who pitched out the first Diana tribute book just 13 days after the Aug. 31 tragedy.

"Diana — A Tribute" priced at $20, has sold 570,000 copies in Britain, South Africa, Australia and New Zealand since hitting the shelves Sept. 12. That figure was expected to streak above 1 million after the book went on sale this week in the United States and Canada.

As with many other tributes, part of the profits will go to the Diana, Princess of Wales Memorial Fund, set up to aid Diana's favorite cause, which already has received $15.2 million in cash alone. In such cases, fund directors must decide whether to sanction a product. They plan to produce a Diana tape to show the public which projects the fund endorses.

Royal biographer Andrew Morton poses with his book, "Diana: Her True Story," detailing the life of the Princess of Wales. The author has been criticized for his release of the updated book entitled "Diana: Her True Story," detailing the life of the Princess of Wales.

Biographer details secret interviews

NEW YORK (AP) — Princess Diana had doubts before she wed Prince Charles, but her sisters told her it was "too late to chicken out," according to a book being updated by her royal biographer.

In the new version, Diana also blamed Charles for her bulimia and said he was disappointed their second child wasn't a girl.

The princess reportedly was the main source for the 1992 best-selling book, "Diana: Her True Story," by Andrew Morton, which exposed the myth of her idyllic marriage. The book's new title includes the phrase "In Her Own Words." People magazine this week published the first of two articles detailing excerpts from Morton's interviews with Diana.

Diana, who died Aug. 31 in a car crash in Paris, spoke of having doubts before her wedding because of Charles' love for Camilla Parker Bowles.

"So I had lunch with my sisters and said, 'I can't marry him, I can't do this, this is absolutely unbelievable.' They were wonderful and they said, 'Well, bad luck, Duch (her childhood nickname), your face is on the tea towels, so you're too late to chicken out.' So we made light of it," she is quoted as saying.

Diana also said she was obsessed with Parker Bowles. "Obsessed by Camilla totally. Didn't trust him, though every five minutes he was ringing her up asking how to handle his marriage," she said.

Diana accused Charles of caring more about polo than the birth of their first child, Prince William.

"When we had William we had to find a date in the diary that suited Charles and his polo. William had to be induced because I couldn't handle the press pressure any longer," she is quoted as saying.

She also said Charles was disappointed when Prince Harry was born because he had wanted a girl. "Harry arrived. First comment was, 'Oh, God it's a boy.' Second comment, 'And he's even got red hair.'" But Diana also said Harry was a joy and "is actually closer to his father than William — at the moment."

Saudi soldier to start peace march

RIVADH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — Saudi Arabia has given a soldier permission to walk to Jerusalem to promote what he calls a far Arab-Israeli peace.

Saudi Arabia, which supports the Middle East peace process, is officially at war with Israel, and Saudi citizens cannot visit there. East Jerusalem, the site of Islam's third-holiest shrine, was seized by Israel in the 1967 Mideast war.

National guard sergeant Mukhlad bin Khalid Al-Otaibi will leave Saturday from Mecca, Islam's holiest city, on a walk that is expected to last 40 days, the official Saudi Press Agency reported Thursday.

He plans to walk about 30 miles a day, passing through Jordan on his way to Jerusalem on a 1,200-mile journey.

The walk is being sponsored by Saudi billionaire Prince Al-Walid bin Talal, the agency said.

Fish & Game, environmentalists pan bear strategy

The Associated Press

Both the Idaho Fish and Game Commission and environmentalists Friday knocked the federal government's preferred alternative to restore grizzly bears in Idaho by transplanting them in the Selway-Bitterroot Wilderness.

The commissioners meeting in Boise threw their unanimous support behind sending a letter to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service which reiterates their qualms about releasing up to 25 grizzlies from Canada over five years into a 5,785-square-mile area. The goal would be to build a population of 280 bears.

The letter would be included in the record-as-fish-and-wildlife makes its final decision, and could be part of an appeal by the state.

Fish and Game staff said the transplants might be a danger to humans, endangered salmon and even their own survival if they are moved to a zone without a proper food source.

"If you introduce it in areas where the chance of survival is poor, you put that bear at risk," Fish and Game Director Stephen Mealey said. "It's a question of uncertainty."

Mealey maintains the recovery plan has a fatal flaw in that the draft environmental impact statement fails to match a study that led to the current proposal.

Earlier research found north-central Idaho could support grizzlies after examining habitat from Kelly Creek southward.

An interagency committee decided in 1991 the Selway-Bitterroot was a suitable recovery zone, which led to Fish and Wildlife's reintroduction proposal.

But it fails to follow the earlier survey, Mealey said, because it cuts off the northern part of the study area, the richest bear habitat for food sources.

The grizzlies could eventually reach drainages where they would eat endangered salmon, sufficing with federal recovery efforts, said Wayne Melquist, Fish and Game nongame manager.

Fish and Wildlife's preferred option reflects a compromise between wildlife and timber industry groups. The bears released would be considered an experimental, nonessential population and could be shot in self-defense or removed if threatening livestock. A citizen committee would guide management of the bears.

Friday's letter to Chris Serbensen, Fish and Wildlife grizzly project leader, said the commission questions if that citizen committee has any real clout while Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt could override its decisions if he thinks they imperil recovery.

"It really flaws the process and that puts the process and the bear in jeopardy," Melquist said, adding Fish and Game would support the natural recovery of the Bitterroot population.

That is the part of the approach backed by the Sierra Club and Alliance for the Wild Rockies. They also favor protecting roadless areas as travel corridors for the bear from the Panhandle to the central part of the state. Grizzlies would also keep full protection under the Endangered Species Act.

Don Smith of the alliance said Fish and Wildlife's preference eventually would shrink central Idaho's mountains into an island of habitat, which will increase the chance of encounters with man.

More than 200 people turned out Thursday for the second Fish and Wildlife hearing in Idaho on the draft.

Although Lewiston is the home of the Resource Organization On Timber Supply, one of the groups that developed the preferred option, more of those testing wanted the natural recovery favored by the Sierra Club.

But Attorney General Alan Lince chastised Fish and Wildlife for even conducting the hearing in the face of virtually unanimous opposition to reintroduction from Idaho's government leaders.

"If you had been hearing the state of Idaho, we would not be here tonight," Lince said.

IDAHO IN BRIEF

Coeur d'Alene attorney named to judgeship

COEUR D'ALENE — Attorney Charles Hosack has been appointed to the newly created district judgeship for the Idaho Panhandle.

Hosack was selected from a Judicial Council panel of three nominees that included Kootenai County Magistrate John Luster and Coeur d'Alene attorney John Mitchell.

"Each of the candidates submitted to me by the Judicial Council is well qualified," Gov. Phil Batt said. "However, I can appoint only one of them to the bench. Mr. Hosack is well respected by his peers as well as by his community."

Hosack, a partner in the Coeur d'Alene firm of Lukins & Amis, will take the bench in January. The new judgeship was created to help the 1st District deal with an exploding case-load.

Leak temporarily shuts down INEEL facility

IDAHO FALLS — A nitric acid leak at the Idaho National Engineering and Environmental Laboratory's New Waste Calcining Facility shut down the facility temporarily.

The leak was contained in a shielded room and posed no risk to workers, officials at the U.S. Department of Energy site said Thursday.

The acid is part of a scrubbing solution that removes particulates from the incinerator's emissions. The New Waste Calcining Facility is used to dehydrate liquid radioactive wastes into a powder form considered safer for storage.

Blood tests find improvement in Silver Valley

KELLOGG — The most recent blood tests of children in the Silver Valley found efforts to reduce lead contamination from the Bunker Hill Superfund site are succeeding.

But a number of children in the historic mining and smelting district still have elevated lead levels in their blood, including some in an area recontaminated by flooding along Milo Creek, the Bunker Hill Superfund Task Force reported Thursday.

Of 325 children tested in August, 39 children in Kellogg, Slocumville, Page and Wandor had blood-lead levels between 22 and 10 micrograms per 100 milliliters. The rest were below the 10-microgram safety standard.

But 29 of the 39 children with elevated blood-lead levels lived in Kellogg and 19 of those were from an area affected by the Milo Creek flooding.

Officials said the Milo Creek flooding last winter recontaminated more than 40 yards where lead-tainted soil had been replaced.

Health care association, members drop lawsuit

BOISE (AP) — The Idaho Health Care Association and two of its members have dropped their court challenge to new state policies they claim cut nearly $6 million a year from nursing home reimbursement for caring for the elderly poor.

Association spokesman Scott Spears said the federal lawsuit was negotiated when Congress repealed effective this week the law that essentially protected nursing homes from state-Medicaid budget cuts. Elimination of the so-called Boren Amendment was part of the latest budget-balancing deal.

"The points that we brought up in the lawsuit and the reason we brought the lawsuit are still there," Spears said. "We saw a reduction in the rate effective July 1 on average of seven dollars a day. The fact that we dropped the lawsuit does not reverse that impact."

The state revised its reimbursement method this summer to eliminate what it called double-dipping by the industry. Until July, the state Health and Welfare Department had been reimbursing nursing homes through the state-run Medicaid program for elderly poor patients without regard to any reimbursement the homes received through the federally run Medicare program.

The new policy offsets any Medicaid reimbursement by amounts a nursing home receives through Medicare.

The policy affects about 3,000 senior citizens being cared for in the state's 85 nursing homes.

"Even with the new accounting practice, nursing home reimbursement is higher than ever," Medicaid Division Administrator DeAnne Moore said. "The reimbursement level is high enough to maintain quality of care in Idaho's nursing homes, which is our highest concern."

The average rate is $91.34 a day, up from $88.29 last year, but Spears disputed any suggestion that existing rates are adequate. The prospect for curtailed reimbursements, especially for rural patients requiring more than the normal care, remains, he said.

"At this point, we will just have to see what happens as the states, counties, their newfound freedom to impose reimbursement reductions on the nursing home industry, Spears said.

"We'll have to see what happens to the 1996 rate," he said. "There are some facilities that are on the margin."

The state has claimed those kinds of statements from the industry in the past were nothing more than scare tactics to continue taking advantage of taxpayers.

Job growth slows in September; unemployment rate remains low

WASHINGTON — The economy snatched out relatively few new jobs in September, leaving the nation's unemployment rate unchanged at 4.9 percent.

That pleased inflation-wary Wall Street, but some analysts saw problems ahead with a shortage of qualified workers.

September's seasonally adjusted unemployment rate matched the August rate, just a shade above the 4.8 percent of July and May, which had been the lowest since 1973, the Labor Department said Friday.

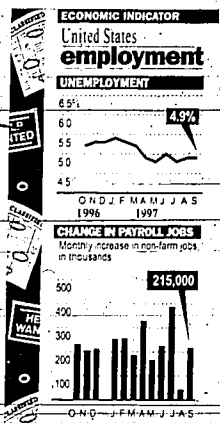

Employers added 215,000 jobs to their payrolls in September, up from a paltry 40,000 in August, the fewest in 11 months. However, the United Parcel Service strike and an early return of many school employees skewed both numbers.

The strike cut 162,000 jobs from the August figure and its settlement added an equal number in September. Seasonal adjustment difficulties raised the report's count of local education jobs by 64,000 in August and decreased it by 47,000 in September.

Without those factors, payrolls increased 18,000 in August and 100,000 in September, modest gains when compared with the 254,000 monthly average from January through July.

Meanwhile, the average workweek slipped to 34.5 hours in September from 34.6 hours a month earlier.

dampening dose of higher interest rates from the Federal Reserve.

But, unlike stock and bond traders, economists weren't as quick to see the report as a sign of muted inflation pressures.

"Jobs are going begging. That's why we're seeing slower job creation," said economist Mark Zandi of Regional Financial Associates in West Chester, Pa. "Particularly in the Midwest, where unemployment is 2 percent to 2.5 percent, there are no available bodies."

A September survey of small firms by the National Federation of Independent Business found 12 percent reporting "finding qualified labor" as their most important problem, the highest level in 25 years. Twenty-eight percent reported "hard to fill" job openings.

The modest overall job creation rate in September masked a fairly brisk increase in services, up 229,000. Computer, engineering and management services all posted healthy gains.

And mining employment, which has been falling long term, rose by 3,000 jobs, mostly in the oil and gas industry. However, manufacturers shed 16,000 jobs, with the declines concentrated at auto plants and clothing factories.

Among demographic groups, unemployment in September was 4.1 percent for adult men and 4.4 percent for teen-agers, up from 16.4 percent; 4.3 percent for whites, up from 4.2 percent; 5.6 percent for blacks, up from 9.3 percent, and 7.6 percent for Hispanics, up from 7.2 percent.

'Shadowing' offers on-the-job learning

CHICAGO — Job shadowing sounds like undercover work. And, in a way, it is. Except that it's out in the open.

Job shadowing is a new way to gain more information about a chosen profession by spending a few hours with a professional at the workplace and observing firsthand what the job entails.

It's not an informational or job interview but provides access, information and contacts.

"Job shadowing is relatively new," said Barry Lawrence of the Society for Human Resource Management, based in Alexandria, Va. "It gives a taste for the real world of work."

Job shadowing is so important at least one career counselor specializes in it. Nancy G. Hemphill is a job shadowing specialist in the cooperative education and career services department of the College of DuPage in Glen Ellyn, Ill.

"Our job shadowing program started in 1996," said Hemphill, also an academic counselor and career counselor at DuPage. "We were looking for a way to create a step after informational interviews and before internships for career exploration."

Hemphill spends 20 hours a week consulting with students and lining up companies and professionals to give students a four-hour "shadowing" opportunity. Since last January, 20 students have been involved.

"I meet with the students to make sure they're headed on the right path," said Hemphill, who has a master's degree in counseling psychology from Benedictine College in Lisle, Ill. "I advise them to be a sponge and absorb as much information as they can."

Last March, Mary Rose Rivo, 21, an engineering computer science major at DuPage, job-shadowed with Clifford Kraft, an electrical engineer, and Mark Carwright, a project engineer, at Lucent Technologies, Inc., in Naperville, Ill. It convinced Rivo, who was invited back to shadow for an additional 12 hours, that she had chosen the right career.

In July, Rameesh Srivastava, 33, who wants to be a database manager, spent time with Tan-Lin, a database administrator at Nalco Chemical Co., also in Naperville. He says he now feels confident about his career choice and learned the steps he needs to make.

Angele Landas, 36, shadowed Colleen Gehan, a physical therapist at Paulson Rehab Network in Hinsdale, Ill., last July. She saw firsthand the difference between physical and occupational therapy.

Dow gives back most gains on Midwest fears

Other indexes set records on Friday

NEW YORK (AP) — Fears of a turn in the Middle East spurred a rally in the Dow Jones industrial average Friday, briefly causing a 188-point selloff in the bluest of the blue-chip indexes.

The Dow ended with a modest gain, while broader-market measures and small-stock averages all closed the week at all-time highs.

The Dow industrials rose 11.05 to 8,038.50, to bring its gains for the week to 116.40 points. But it was a rougher road Friday for the average of 30 stocks.

The Dow was up as much as 11.61 points in an early trading session, but then was pulled back by an employment report that reinforced a belief that inflation remains tame despite a healthy economy.

While such impressive signs of strength in the economy often lead to price inflation, traders were relieved that Friday's report was not stronger.

The report offered no new signs that the nation's best performance in containing inflation in three decades was in jeopardy.

The Federal Reserve, the nation's inflation watchdog, passed up a chance Tuesday to raise the federal funds rate.

It was the third straight close above 8,000, but the Dow still was shy of the record 8,259.31 set Aug. 6.

The latest window in financial markets was a 99-cent-a-barrel surge in crude oil prices on the New York Mercantile Exchanges.

On new that Washington had ordered the U.S. to start the Persian Gulf amid mounting tensions in the region.

The aircraft carrier's orders were linked to U.S. warnings to Iran earlier this week not to repeat its cross-border air attacks into southern Iraq.

"Until the Iraq situation is clarified, there are too many unknowns" for many investors, said Ricky Harrington, technical analyst at Interstate/Johnson Lane in Charlotte, N.C.

Stocks had opened higher, following a big surge in bond prices as the Labor Department reported the unemployment rate was unchanged at 4.9 percent in September, near a 24-year low.

After shadowing confirmed for Landes, who has an associate degree in DuPage, her decision to go on for a bachelor's degree in physical therapy.

Shadowing also is part of formal internships: Last June, Carlos Revelo, an industrial engineering student at the University of Illinois at Chicago, was shadowing a professional engineer.

Harris Bank/Bank of Montreal through a minority investment program sponsored by the Building Owners and Managers Association of Chicago. A brief aspect of the internship, paid for by Harris, was job shadowing.

Revelo spent a day with the building's engineer and other tradespeople.

Steven G. Silverman, vice president of U.S. property management for Harris, says the carefully planned internship included the shadowing because "it's the only way you can understand the job. Revelo had the chance to watch and understand the things behind what we do."

"If you don't have someone to set up a shadowing session for you, first ask for a brief informational interview and, during it, ask to shadow some time in the future."

Police continue to get clues in homicide case

TWIN FALLS - The investigation of the homicide of Wayne Lafferty is progressing - but slowly, Twin Falls police detectives say.

Lafferty, 61, was found dead by a hiker Sept. 6 in the South Hills about 25 miles south of Hansen, his body wrapped in a tarp. Police say Lafferty was killed in this home after being hit on the back of the head with a blunt object.

Detectives say they continue to receive tips and information about Lafferty from people who knew him, and say they're doggedly following up each tip and talking to people familiar with his home.

Meanwhile, physical evidence collected from the scene of the homicide and from where Lafferty's body was found is being tested by state technicians, detectives say. Conclusions from the evidence probably won't be returned for several more weeks, detectives say.

Detectives seek anyone with information on Lafferty to contact them. Call detective Gary Rinehart at 736-2215, Sgt. Chuck Dudley at 736-2213 or Sgt. Bill Hanchey at 736-2223.

Police cite Twin Falls man on suspicion of intimidation

TWIN FALLS - A Twin Falls man charged with plumbing without a license has been cited on suspicion of intimidation, a witness.

Rick Van Wagner, 38, is to face trial this month on three charges of plumbing without a certificate of competency for work he did in September 1996, according to Twin Falls County court records.

A witness in the case, who works for the state Plumbing Bureau, reportedly told police that Van Wagner drove slowly by his home at about 10:30 p.m. Thursday night, pulled forward to neighbor's driveway, turned around and tried to go around behind the witness's house, Twin Falls police reports say.

Van Wagner has been harassing the witness's family for months, the reports say. Twin Falls police issued the misdemeanor citation to Van Wagner Thursday night, a police report said.

Energy Department awards nuclear grant to U of I

IDAHO FALLS - The U.S. Department of Energy has awarded a three-year grant of more than $1 million to research collaboration between the University of Idaho and the Idaho National Engineering and Environmental Laboratory.

John Crepeau, assistant professor of mechanical engineering for UI at University Place in Idaho Falls, said the project will help engineers understand the best way to inject treatment gases into spent nuclear fuel canisters.

The research is intended to provide better, more efficient ways of treating the large amount of spent nuclear fuel stored at the INEL, Crepeau said.

Twin Falls Citizens On Patrol classes are filling up fast

TWIN FALLS - Citizens training the fifth group of volunteer classes to assist Twin Falls police are filling up.

The Citizens On Patrol program will train people to serve as eyes and ears for police, said program organizer Sgt. Bill Hanchey. Participants are not armed and do not try to arrest suspects. They will be equipped with radios and patrol vests in the city and report suspicious activity to police, Hanchey said.

A group of 10 students is to begin training Nov. 4, Hanchey said. They'll take five weeks of classes, meeting twice a week for three hours.

The classes will cover all areas of law enforcement, Hanchey said, including the criminal law process and crime prevention. Applications for the program are available from Hanchey at 736-2223.

Harvest time lowers jobless rate

But layoffs show

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS - Harvesting the bounty of the fields helped keep September's jobless rates down in each of the region's four counties.

In Twin Falls County, the rate was unchanged between September and August. But in Cassia, Minidoka and Jerome counties, unemployment rates went up.

In the Magic Valley, the jobless rate in the Mini-Cassia area, layoffs at the J.R. Simplot potato processing plant in Heyburn began to show up in September employment figures.

For Cassia and Minidoka counties, the seasonally adjusted unemployment rates for September were higher this year than last year at the same time, and up from August. The Labor Department projected that 999 people were out of work in Minidoka County in September, and 762 people were out of work in Cassia County.

If not for the busy harvest season, the unemployment picture in those two counties might have been worse, because of the layoff of 175 workers at the Simplot plant, says Janell Hyer, Department of Labor market analyst in Boise.

Traditionally, September and October are among the busiest employment months in agriculture, but dependent areas, labor officials say.

During those months, workers are needed in processing plants and potato packing sheds, and drivers are needed to carry crops out of the field, Hyer said. Employment opportunities will drop in November when harvest is completed, then pick up again for the holidays.

Compared with other regions of the state, the Magic Valley had a 4.4 percent jobless rate for September. The lowest rate was in Lewiston's seaport area, at 3.8 percent. The highest jobless rate was 8.2 percent in northern Idaho.

The state jobless rate for September was 5 percent, down two-tenths of a percentage point from August and one-tenth of a percentage point from September 1996. The rate is slightly higher than the national rate of 4.9 percent, unchanged from the previous month.

Over 1,400 more people were working in September compared with August. The rehiring of seasonal workers in potato processing and fresh-pack warehouses were reasons for the change under the state, the Labor Department says.

The state figure also reflects Idaho's stable economy, which held during the first three quarters of the year, labor officials say.

"We're not booming like we were, but still showing slow but steady growth," Hyer said.

Unfortunately, a lot of that growth is taking place in more populated areas and not where it is needed such as in places like Butte, she added.

Woman accused of embezzling $665,000

By Kent McCreary Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - A Twin Falls woman is charged with stealing more than $665,000 from her employer.

Debbie Kay Westburg, 41, is charged with altering 117 checks to C.L. Stutzman Excavation Inc. and routing them to accounts in her name, a Twin Falls County sheriff's report said. The alleged checks totaled $665,915.29, the report said.

Stutzman Excavation officials told Twin Falls County sheriff's investigators they had earlier confronted Westburg about $17,000 worth of embezzlement from the business between March 1993 and August 1997, the report said. The company officials said Westburg admitted to the theft and signed an agreement to repay the money, then was fired, the report said.

The company continued to receive back checks that had been transferred to Westburg's accounts, the report said, and contacted investigators.

Westburg and her attorney, Eric Clark, met with investigators this week, and she admitted to altering the checks, the sheriff's report said.

Westburg told investigators she altered the payroll lines on checks and the account number on the back, and altered the memo line for jobs or supplies that she knew Stutzman's used, the report said. Westburg sent the checks to 10 different accounts, including accounts with the name of her husband, Ward, on them, the report said.

After the checks had gone through the bank, Westburg told investigators, she would retrieve them from the bank statement and alter the checks back to payees that Stutzman did business with, the report said.

Clark said he could not comment on the case until charges were more definite.

Currently, Westburg is charged with one count of grand theft for the whole sum, prosecutors say. She was released from Twin Falls County jail on $10,000 bond, jail records say.

Westburg also was arrested on a fugitive warrant issued in January 1992 from Ravalli County, Mont., for a theft charge, court records say. Ravalli County records say the charge related to alleged theft of money from an employer.

Clark said Friday the warrant was issued because a portion of a fine was unpaid. The fine has been paid, and the warrant has been dropped, Clark said.

Stover Friday referred comment to county prosecutors.

Mixed signal: Traffic stop nets backpack full of drugs

By Kent McCreary Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - David Homolka must have been writing on the wall.

An Idaho State Police Trooper stopped the Kimberly man early Friday morning, citing him for failing to signal for a right turn, ISP reports say. The trooper told Homolka he was free to go, the report said.

The trooper also asked Homolka if he would consent to a search of his pickup, the report said.

Whereupon Homolka pulled a small plastic package from his hand and handed it to the trooper, telling him it was cocaine.

After arresting Homolka, the trooper searched the pickup, and found a backpack with 50.4 grams of cocaine and methamphetamine in five different bags, the report said. The trooper also found scales, a pipe and heating equipment, the report said.

Homolka had $954.71 in cash in his front pockets and two notebooks with names and numbers, the report said.

Troopers also found a black plastic pouch with three unexploded blasting caps inside, the report said.

Homolka was arraigned Friday on two felony counts of possession of a controlled substance with intent to deliver, and a misdemeanor charge of possession of explosives, to which he pleaded innocent.

Homolka, 37, was sentenced in January to 180 days in the Community Work Center and parole for a conviction on two felony counts of possession of a controlled substance.

A felony charge of driving under the influence against Homolka is also pending, ISP reports say.

Shoshone Falls gamers national attention

By Jennifer Staley Times-News contributor

TWIN FALLS - The Snake River and its falls are getting national recognition.

Shoshone Falls will be featured in Sunset magazine, and the NBC show "Incredible Idaho" will feature a journey from the river to today's program.

"These are the falls from underneath, you have no idea of their aesthetic beauty," said Olin Gardner. He and his wife, Shelley, are licensed river rafters and own and operate Idaho Guide Service out of Twin Falls.

Together they guided the photographers and reporters on the raft trip that sparked this interest.

The Gardners took them on their favorite route from Centennial Park to the base of Shoshone Falls.

"The trip is visually fantastic," Gardner said. "There are awesome canyon walls and the unique geological formations are just beautiful, it is hard to believe that Blue Lakes Boulevard is so close by."

Glen Oakley is a professional photographer from Boise with 18 years' experience in the industry. Oakley expects Sunset magazine to feature the Snake River and Shoshone Falls in its February issue.

Sunset magazine to take some pictures of the river and the falls.

"I was basically just trying to get the coolest shots that I could get," Oakley said. "I wasn't working with a writer on this shoot so I had the freedom to shoot the things I liked."

Oakley expects Sunset magazine to feature the Snake River and Shoshone Falls in its February issue.

High court orders new arguments on surface-ground water rights

BOISE (AP) — The Idaho Supreme Court Friday backed the decision of the judge handling the Snake River Basin Adjudication to delete some general statements from general provisions governing water rights. But the court deferred any decision on the controversial proposal to manage surface and ground water as a single resource until after hearing another round of legal arguments. With changing majorities, the high court upheld 5th District Judge Daniel Hurlbut's decision to delete — from general provisions that would apply to all water rights adjudicated in the basin — a definition of early and late irrigation seasons and incidental stock watering and the handling of excess water.

McDevitt said state law already declares stock watering as a beneficial use of water with the Water Resources Department director defining incidental use administratively. And he said provisions for handling excess water are not needed because if it water that is outside of any designated right to water can be prior reclamation. But the court reversed Hurlbut and upheld inclusion in the general provisions of firefighting as an acceptable alternate use of a water right. McDevitt also disagreed with Hurlbut that a general provision must be that it applies to every water right, holding that it "generally applies to water rights."

Justice Byron Johnson dissented with McDevitt on both those questions, and Justice Cathy Skalk joined by senior Justice Stephen Deschler, disagreed on the excess water issue. While excess water is not created by a water right, Skalk pointed out, this administration of it when that water has been judicially administered in Idaho. In this case, she said the issue should have been returned to Hurlbut to determine whether such water is necessary for efficient administration of the water rights affected. The ruling is only the most recent in a series of appeals from Hurlbut rulings as he continues to wade through the complex process of sorting out 130,000 water rights throughout most of the state. The adjudication, the largest case undertaken in the West, already has taken more than $20 million and is expected to take as much as another 10 years and $20 million more.

NASA boosts number of Utah X-33 landings

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Space agency officials have increased the number of landings in Utah of the experimental remote-controlled $1.15 billion X-33 space plane.

National Aeronautic and Space Administration scientists had initially planned for seven landings of the half-size supersonic glider, which if successful may be the successor to the space shuttle.

Now, that number likely will be increased to 10.

Space Flight Center in Huntsville, Ala.

McCaleb is head of the team that analyzed the proposal.

The 63-foot-tall X33 will blast off vertically from Edwards Air Force Base, Calif., powered by liquid oxygen and liquid hydrogen. It won't have a crew and won't fly into space. It will climb 50 miles high and fly at speeds up to 15 times the speed of sound before gliding to an unpurposed landing.

The addition of three flights, starting in 1999, was one of the biggest surprises of the project's final environmental impact statement released by NASA last week.

NASA had been looking at three landing sites, but eliminated landings at Silurian Lake, Calif., said Rebecca McCaleb, director of environmental engineering and management at NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center in Huntsville, Ala.

McCaleb is head of the team that analyzed the proposal.

That change added three landings to Dugway, a remote Army proving ground 40 miles southwest of Salt Lake City.

The plan does not recommend changing the five landings planned for Malmstrom Air Force Base, Mont., for longer distance flights.

A formal decision on the EIS recommendations won't be made until next month.

The wedge-shaped X-33 is being built under a cooperative agreement between NASA and Lockheed Martin Skunk Works of Palmdale, Calif., with NASA investing $941 million and Lockheed Martin at $272 million.

If X-33 succeeds, the full-scale project, a vehicle named Venture Star, should be built by Lockheed Martin within a decade. The Venture Star, designed as a "reusable launch vehicle," could replace the shuttle and would slash the cost of lunar cargo into space from $10,000 to roughly $1,000 per pound, or to $1,000 a pound.

Man complains of being hit by car, but police find no evidence of it

By Penelope Reedy Times-News writer

BURLEY — A drunken, inebriated man was found lying on the south side of West Main Street Thursday night, a Cassia County police report said.

The man, identified only as "Larry" on the report, was shouting that he had been hit by a car.

Emergency Medical Technicians Doug Adams, left, Craig Rinehart and Alan Garrett assess the injuries of a man found drunk in the middle of Main Street Thursday night.

Police could find no evidence that "Larry" had been hit by a vehicle.

Officer Stuart Smith said Friday a teen-age girl arrived at the scene first and saw one man standing over another. She pulled her into the street lane to avoid hitting them, and as she did so, the standing man ran away.

Two other witnesses, which police reports identify as Roy Herrera and Sergio Basista, said "Larry" had been in a fight and was not hit by a car.

"When we first arrived, the man was lying in the street with no shirt," Smith said. "We didn't know what we had."

Officers searched Conant Avenue and the surrounding area near where the victim's pickup was parked and found a set of keys four feet from the truck, a baseball cap across the street, and a sweatshirt in the parking lot behind Mr. Burger. Smith said these items strewn about reinforced the witness' story about the fight.

An ambulance crew examined

"Larry" and determined some of his abrasions were consistent with having fallen over a parking block during the fight, the reports said. He was taken to Cassia Memorial Hospital.

Appellate court orders hearing into validity of murder verdict

BOISE (AP) — Citing a record that seriously questions defense competence, the Idaho Court of Appeals on Friday ordered a hearing on claims that convicted killer Brian Jay Milburn's attorneys botched his trial.

"On the record before us, we conclude that Milburn has made a prima facie showing that the result of his trial is unreliable due to constitutionally deficient performance by his counsel," Chief Judge Karen Lansing wrote of the unanimous court.

Milburn was convicted of second-degree murder for the 1992 shooting death of 22-year-old Carey Shaddy of Middleton. He was sentenced to 12 years to life in prison.

The case against Milburn was based on the claim that he was the last person seen with Shaddy before the murder, testimony that he told an acquaintance that he killed Shaddy and evidence that his gun was the murder weapon. Defense attorney Klaus Wiebe presented no defense witnesses at the trial, instead using his cross-examination of prosecution witnesses in the effort to clear his client.

Shaddy and Milburn were seen leaving a Middleton tavern late on March 31, 1992. Shaddy's body was found in a burned out irrigation ditch on April 11. An expert put the time of death on or before April 2.

"We are not confident, however, that the ballistics evidence alone, with other components of the state's case seriously compromised, would have led the jury to find Milburn guilty."

— Idaho Court of Appeals

feared challenging the expert's time of death would destroy any defense credibility with the jury.

But the court pointed out that Milburn had found a number of other people who said they saw Shaddy alive between April 5 and April 7.

Normally a court does not second-guess trial strategy, Lansing wrote, but "on the record before us, this claim that counsel unreasonably failed to use exculpatory evidence cannot properly be summarily dismissed on the basis that counsel's decision was one of trial strategy."

She said failing to try to impeach Pickering and run down information that would have shown Milburn was not the last person seen with Shaddy before the murder raised doubts about the "wisdom and competence" of the Milburn defense.

The evidence showing that Milburn's gun was the murder weapon was uncontroverted, the three-judge panel conceded.

"We are not confident, however, that the ballistics evidence alone, with other components of the state's case seriously compromised would have led the jury to find Milburn guilty," the court said.

The hearing on Milburn's claim that he was denied an effective defense will be before 3rd District Judge Gerald Weston.

Soldier of Fortune enthusiasts gather for convention

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Hundreds of Soldier of Fortune enthusiasts, some in fatigues, tried out firearms and knives Friday at their annual convention, while magazine publisher Robert Brown disputed allegations over the sale of weapons used by Los Angeles police officers to stop heavily armed bank robbers in Hollywood.

The six guns in question will be auctioned this evening at a Soldier of Fortune banquet. Officers finding themselves out-gunned during the Feb. 28 shootout at a North Hollywood Bank of America, had to rush to a nearby gun store, B&B Sales, for more firepower. Both robbers were killed and at least 13 civilians and officers were injured.

The department recently acquired 600 military surplus M-16 rifles to increase firepower against heavily armed suspects.

Inside the exhibit hall, it was clear the botched bank robbery has created big business for some companies.

"L.A. Tactical sold 'Shootouts in North Hollywood' T-shirts for $15. The back of the shirt featured a map of the shootout area with black dots pinpointing the positions of the robbers and police.

Besides offering a peek of the guns being auctioned, B&B Sales was also selling videos of the shootout.

"Not my style," said Randall Jensen, 42, of Overton, Nev. "I just enjoy trying to find a few accessories for the guns I have."

Soldier of Fortune had placed two advertisements in the Las Vegas Sun and the Las Vegas Review-Journal this week, saying the weapons from the shootout would be auctioned during the trade show. One ad said the proceeds would go toward the Los Angeles Police Department Memorial Fund, while the other said the money would go to the LAPD Survivor's Fund.

LAPD Officer Mike Partain told the Las Vegas Sun for a story in Thursday's paper that the survivor's fund doesn't exist and a criminal investigation into the ad had been launched.

Brown, publisher of the Boulder, Colo. magazine, called a news conference Friday to dispute the story.

Nez Perce assume management of health clinics

KAMIAH (AP) — The Nez Perce Tribe will take over management of the U.S. Indian Health Service's clinics in Kamiah and Lapwai and merge them with their own program to create an independent agency. They hope the Nez Perce Tribal Health Authority will mean more local control by tribal members and more flexibility with budgets.

"Hopefully, as a patient, you won't notice any changes in service as of Nov. 1," JoAnn Kauffman of Kamiah told leaders during the recent meeting of the tribe's General Council.

A survey showed residents want health services separated from politics, she said.

Indian Health Service employees will have the same salaries and same positions under the new authority, Kauffman said. It will pay bills sooner and hopefully negotiate better rates, she said.

Testimony

She testified that Lasek came over mornings before school to help her get out of bed.

"I'd trust him with my life, and I guess I did," she said.

Lasek's mother, Cynthia Pinchford, told the court Lasek had helped another older woman, Alta Penrod, and was instrumental in saving her from a house fire. She said Lasek was a good student and faculty selected him senior student of the year during his senior year at Declo High School.

Deputy Prosecutor Boyd

Baggett expressed concern over the fact that Lasek hadn't held a steady job since graduating from high school in 1996. He also said he was worried Lasek might try to leave the area.

"Burglary is a substantial problem in our community," Baggett said. "We need to make sure people face these charges."

The bond was reduced on the condition that Lasek live at his mother's residence in Albion and maintain curfew hours of 7 p.m. to 7 a.m. He may not associate, either in person or by telephone, with cohorts Wes Anderson and Ryan Christiansen.

Court records say officers saw two suspects, believed to be Lasek and Anderson, run from the back door of Price's Cafe on July 24. Lasek's mother's car, a 1987 Subaru, was found nearby with black clothing and a crowbar in the back seat.

Lasek pleaded innocent Sept. 11 to burglary charges.

'Road rage' takes on new meaning

Juneau doesn't have a highway, but that quirk may soon change

Los Angeles Times

JUNEAU, Alaska — The Boeing 737 plunges down through a blanket of drizzle in search of the runway that lies below two high, tree-topped ridges.

No luck. Passengers sigh as the captain guns the engines and circles around for another try.

This time, bingo: A blanket of city lights peeps into view, and the jet rolls into a low-level swoop toward the runway. Welcome to one of the most nerve-racking air approaches in the country. It is also one of the few ways to arrive in Juneau — the only state capital in North America you can't get to by road, because there isn't one.

Two hundred scheduled airline flights didn't make it into Juneau last year, fodder for the long-running debate over whether the Legislature should head for the state's population center — Anchorage.

No matter that 96 percent of the flights did land successfully, or that there's pretty reliable ferry service, or that a sizable portion of residents aren't even sure they want to make it easier for the world to come knocking, Juneau, landlocked too long, is thinking hard about a road.

An environmental impact study, making the route at public hearings this month, says a 65-mile highway could be punched through to Skagway. From there, it's only 832 road miles to Anchorage, 710 to Fairbanks.

The proposal, which also looks at stepped-up, high-speed ferry service into Juneau, is drawing attention because it calls up all the old conflicts about what Alaska is and what people want, looking for when they moved here.

A behemoth of a state whose grandeur is largely hidden away, Alaska has prided itself on the idea that those who succeed in getting somewhere do so by their own brawn, cunning or perseverance.

There is a word in Alaska for the lowest form of life on the planet: "Winnabago."

That word pops up in the debate over whether the state Department of Transportation should build the two-lane, $222-million highway along the west side of Lynn Canal, as in how many ways, Winnabago could Juneau's narrow, winding, one-way streets handle as new summer hordes flood in from points north.

"It's kind of a two-edged sword," admitted city manager Dave Palmer, whose city has done battle for years against ballot measures to move the capital to Anchorage. Twice, Alaska residents have voted to move the capital. Twice, Juneau and others have beaten the idea back. The city of 30,000 spends half a million dollars a year on free parking passes for state legislators, television broadcasts of legislative sessions and other efforts to keep the capital here.

A road, built largely with federal highway funds, would be a crowning achievement. Yet even Juneau officialdom is having doubts.

"You know, this is the only place we'd be having this discussion. Should we build a road to our town? But if it's built, Juneau's going to be the end of it," Palmer said. "The question is, what are we going to do with all those buses and trailers and Winnabagos once they get here?"

On the other hand, city officials say, think of the commercial prospects of a road in a city that now has to barge in most of its heavy freight from Seattle. "If nothing else, as a species, we need to be able to get out of here," said Fred Morris, head of Alaska's Better Access, a pro-road group. "Have you ever heard of cabin fever? To be able to know that without a great expense, you can get in your car and go somewhere."

Susan Ransse says it's often too expensive to fly the whole family out for a trip, and taking the ferry to Haines in the summer can require reservations months in advance. The 4-1/2-hour trip often leaves in the middle of the night.

On the other hand, say critics, driving would cut only about two hours off the ferry commute. For that, they say, motorists would have to pay a $25 toll and negotiate a road that will traverse 58 known avalanches, rendering it prone to frequent closures.

And the road, says the Southeast Alaska Conservation Council, would stave off pristine areas, critical to fly, threatened Steller sea lion and other species.

Judge: Kaczynski trial jury to stay anonymous

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — The public will not know the names, ages or occupations of jurors in the trial of Unabomber suspect Theodore Kaczynski until after the trial has ended, a judge ruled Friday.

U.S. District Judge Garland Burrell Jr. issued the order a day after a hearing at which defense lawyers and prosecutors alike said a "kook factor" surrounds the case because of the extensive news coverage. Potential witnesses in the case had been threatened, prosecutors said.

Burrell wrote in an order filed this morning that there was a good probability that jurors would be contacted if they weren't anonymous. He cited "the extensive publicity the trial has received, the media's efforts to interrogate any and all individuals connected to the trial and the efforts by the public to contact and threaten witnesses."

A coalition of media organizations, including The Associated Press, had objected to the anonymous jury, noting that public confidence in the jury trial system is based on its remaining an open process.

Burrell said the names could be released after the trial had ended.

The judge also ruled that the media could not photograph, sketch or otherwise identify prospective jurors on courthouse grounds and said the jurors would meet each day at a secret location to be transported to the courthouse by the U.S. Marshall's Service.

Kaczynski, 55, faces trial in four California bombings, two of them fatal. He is also charged separately in a trial of a fatal bombing in New Jersey.

The former math professor turned recluse has pleaded innocent to all charges. If convicted, he could get the death penalty.

Jury selection is scheduled to begin Nov. 12. The trial could take months.

At the hearing Thursday, prosecutors did not describe the nature or date of the alleged threats against potential witnesses, or their names. But they said it reflected the "strange things that can happen" when intense news coverage is directed at an event.

The defense team agreed. Federal Judge Order Quin Davy said the media attention had created a "kook factor" which was attracting strange people to the case.

Radiation registry planned at Gonzaga University

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — An archive of people who believe they are hurt by radiation from the Hanford nuclear reservation will expand to collect data on anyone in the world who may have been exposed to radiation.

The proposed Radiation Health Effects Archives will be formally announced Oct. 11 at Gonzaga University's Foley Center Library, which also houses the Hanford Health Information Archives.

The new archives will collect health histories of people from around the world for others to study, said Tom Carter, the administrator of both archives.

They will try to obtain stories, health records and other information from people exposed to radiation at Hiroshima, Nagasaki, Chernobyl, Nevada, the South Pacific and other areas.

The Radiation Health Effects Archives is being set up as a non-profit organization and will have to raise its own money, Carter said.

The Hanford Health Information Archives is funded by the federal government until Sept. 30, 1998. After that, the Hanford archives are also likely to have to find their own funding, Carter said.

A preliminary estimate is the two archives would cost about $200,000 a year to operate, Carter said.

The Hanford archive contains medical records, oral histories, journals, photos and other information from people who lived downwind from Hanford's radiation releases from 1943 to 1972. Hanford is located near the Tri-Cities in south-central Washington.

The radiation was released as Hanford made plutonium for nuclear weapons.

The Hanford archives have gathered information from about 1,100 people who lived downwind of the Hanford site.

The Hanford archives are available on the Internet at <http://www.foley.gonzaga.edu/hhi/shome.html>.

Eagles smash Snow in 3 straight

By Karen Baumert
Times-News staff

TWIN FALLS — When nearly 30 percent of your points come off of blocks, there is little need for offense. The College of Southern Idaho volleyball team didn't need much offense to clobber Region 18 opponent Snow College 15-10, 15-2, 15-1 Friday.

"Really, our block was so good we didn't get many swings," said CSI coach Ben Stroud of his team's 14 blocks — 13 for points.

Still, the coach of the four-time defending national champions expects a little more out of his charges.

"I thought we were a little sluggish to start off the match," Stroud said. "We've got to change our warmup. We've got to get ready to play."

Snow coach JoAnn Jeppson noticed the difference in the Golden Eagles of game one and the Golden Eagles in the final two games.

"The first game kinda surprised us. A quiet gym isn't typical for CSI," Jeppson said. "The second game, my kids acted scared and (the Golden Eagles) played to the crowd."

Both coaches agreed that the dominant CSI block in the last two games was key.

"After the first game, we showed our block in and we blocked a million balls after that," Stroud said.

Jeppson said she knew the Golden Eagles were going to win because her team worked all week on using it. But the much smaller Badgers couldn't seem to get a ball past the block or hit the ball into the block out of bounds.

"That's the whole difference," Jeppson said.

Marlins cut Giants down to size, 6-2

The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — This time, Florida didn't wait until the bottom of the ninth to finish off the Giants.

Devon White hit a grand slam in the sixth inning, and pitcher Tim Lincecum pitched seven strong innings as the Marlins defeated San Francisco 6-2 Friday night to complete a three-game sweep of their NL division series.

Florida, in possession for the first time in its five-season history, advanced to the NL championship series against the Braves — who swept the Houston Astros — starting Tuesday at Atlanta.

The Florida-Atlanta series will feature the clubs with the two biggest payrolls in the NL. The Marlins went 8-4 in the season series against the Braves.

Florida scored a run in the bottom of the ninth to win each of the first two games against the Giants. White made sure Florida's game, on a chilly San Francisco evening, would not be as dramatic.

With two outs in the sixth and the Giants leading 3-0, Minceum allowed a single to center fielder Juan Rivera. Rivera pitched three innings as the Marlins defeated San Francisco 6-2 Friday night to complete a three-game sweep of their NL division series.

Jerome pummels Wood River, 52-0

By John Deer

Times-News staff

JEROME — In what may be the last time Wood River will travel to Jerome for a high school football game, the Tigers gave the Wolverines something to remember.

With a dominating defense and a new-found offense, Jerome grabbed the early lead in the Class A-2 District 4 conference football standings with a 52-0 rout.

Jerome improved to 23 on the season and 10 in conference. The Tigers, who are expected to move up a division to Class A-1 next year, have scored 81 points in the past two weeks after getting just 12 in the first three. Wood River remains winless at 0-5 and 0-1 in conference.

Sean Roberts led the offensive charge with 107 yards on the ground. The senior has seen more time at the wide-out position this year than in the backfield. That changed Friday as Roberts got the ball 19 times.

"Our offense has changed because we have new people and a brand new line and quarterback," said Roberts about the change. The Jerome coaches were reminding the speedster to turn it upfield when he ran the ball. "I tend to go outside with my speed; I need to get used to cutting up."

Colton Swan chipped in 76 yards on the ground while Ty Matthews collected 50. Jerome also found a passing attack with three scores in the air.

Wood River ended the night with negative four yards on the ground, but recorded 178 passing yards on 18 of 36 attempts. The Wolverine defense

Running brings new life to Oakley trio's aging legs

By Karen E. Malczek

OAKLEY — With 62-year-old arthritis feet, Oakley runner Duff Woodhouse knows the importance of a good pair running shoes.

That's why on Wednesday, Woodhouse was breaking in a new pair of blue and gray New Balance shoes just 72 hours ahead of today's St. George Marathon.

Woodhouse is running what is commonly billed as America's fastest marathon with his buddies Richard Hardy, 51, and Doug Cranney, 49.

"I was running in a pair of Reeboks, but I felt my feet rolling around in them so I got these," said Woodhouse, with his feet propped up on his white sofa. "I've had Nikes and Asics, but this is my first pair of New Balance so we'll see how they work."

The three runners are known to some as "The Oakley Connection," but Hardy said they prefer to be called "The Oakley Dam Running Club" because quite frankly they're "The Best Dam Running Club in Oakley."

"We got that name because we used to run out by the dam," said Hardy who has run with Woodhouse and Cranney for the past six years. "I don't really know why we're called the Oakley Connection except that we're all old guys."

St. George will be the first marathon for Hardy and Cranney, who didn't start running until he was 50.

Five years ago, Hardy spent the better part of the spring trying to convince Woodhouse to go beyond the 10K (6.2-mile) events they had done and go for a 26.2-mile marathon.

Oregon defense could be sitting Ducks against WSU

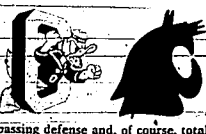

The Associated Press

EUGENE, Ore. — After giving up 98 points and 1,020 yards in two games, the Oregon defense would seem to be sitting Ducks for high-powered Washington State.

With a straight face, WSU coach Mike Price says, "Their defense seems to be sitting and run to the ball well."

And the star quarterback of the 15th-ranked Cougars, Ryan Leaf, echoes that Oregon has "a hard-working defense that's not going to take kindly."

Still, this is a team that ranks dead last in the Pac-10 in rushing defense, passing defense and, of course, total defense. And Washington State (4-0) is the conference leader, and is ranked fourth nationally, on offense.

When the two Northwest rivals meet Saturday, the 6-foot-5 Leaf could have a big day tossing passes to his "Fab Five" receivers, and fullback Michael Black could be headed for yet another 100-plus yards in rushing.

Since Oregon's offense has been almost as productive as Washington State's, the Ducks' best hope could be for a shutout. WSU would prefer otherwise.

"I don't want a 65-61 type of game or anything like that," Leaf said. "I want to go out there and play a solid, error-free game. If we score a lot of points, the way our defense is playing, hopefully they can shut down Oregon's offense."

After Pac-10 victories over UCLA and Southern California, WSU is thinking about its first Rose Bowl appearance since 1992.

The Cougars' offense is rolling along at 498 yards per game.

Oregon, on the other hand, is averaging 442 yards per game. Last week, the Ducks (3-1 overall, 1-1 Pac-10) surrendered up 578 yards in a wild 58-49 loss at Stanford.

Oregon actually began the season with a good defensive performance in a 16-9 win over Arizona. Since then,

Malone criticizes management, teammates for off-season decisions

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Karl Malone is never one to hide his displeasure, and the NBA's Most Valuable Player began the 1997-98 season with some pre-emptive venting at his own team.

Malone took several unnamed teammates to task for not working hard enough during the off-season and reporting to camp overweight and out of shape.

Malone said, "I'm an old man, but I'm coming into the camp in the best shape of my life. You look at some of these (players) weights and it's a damn shame," Malone said.

It took a lot of coaxing to convince Woodhouse who was nearing age 60, but two weeks before the Pomerale Marathon the pair signed up to run.

Cranny is quick to credit his friends.

"If it hadn't been for them I'd quit about a million times," Cranny said. "And I think if I had to run alone I probably wouldn't do it."

In July, during the 10K Deseret News Cranny Furniture race, the Oakley runners said they got a reality check when a 42-year-old runner just behind them collapsed and died 50 yards before the finish line.

Such things worry friends and family members who think these three are nuts to be running a marathon at their ages.
"My uncle told me the good lord only gives us so many heartbeats," said Woodhouse. "But mine beats once for his every two. And I no longer have heartburn because running blesses the blood with oxygen."

Defending state champs hammer Hornets, 34-6

By Karen E. Naleznik Times-Herald Staff

OAKLEY - A hard hit sent Mackay High School fullback Josh Peluso into surgery for an hour Friday night to set his dislocated left elbow.

That was about the only damage the Oakley Hornets could do to the defending Class A-4 high school football state champions, who manhandled Oakley's offense en route to a 34-6 victory Friday night.

"We got our butts kicked tonight," Oakley coach Larry Findley said. "We got out-blocked, out-tackled and out-coached. We seemed to be in this funk and I don't know why."

The Hornets' only score came with 8:17 left in the first half, when senior halfback Russell Gardner hit the end zone from seven yards out on his second carry of the night. "When the point-after attempt went wide right Oakley trailed, 14-6."

For Mackay, which improves to 3-2, the first two scores came in the first quarter. The Miners used 10 plays to go 49 yards on their opening drive before quarterback Josh Whitworth hit senior wide receiver Erik Peterson for a 10-yard TD pass. Whitworth hit Heston Williams for the two-point conversion in the endzone.

The second touchdown came six minutes later, when Josh Felton, who racked up 123 yards rushing in the first half, ran three yards straight up the middle.

Oakley started the first half on the right foot. After the kickoff sailed into the end zone for a touchback, the Hornets found little on the ground, but quarterback Brian Findley found sophomore Trevor Cranney for a 37-yard reception on third-and-five.

From the Mackay 45-yard line, Oakley could muster just a 1-yard run and three incomplete passes, turning the ball over on downs.

Mackay scored soon after when Whitworth took the ball in on a 16-yard touchdown run.

Teammate Brian Crawford scored the final TD with an 8-yard reverse.

"We lost Nick Nelson to a brain disease and he was really the heart of this team," said Findley, whose team drops to 2-3, 0-1 in the conference. "We knew exactly what they were going to do but we're just playing inside ourselves. We're not tackling and we're not hitting, we need to pull ourselves out of this funk before it's too late."

The Hornets (2-3 overall, 0-1 conference) will try to snap a three-game losing streak when they travel to Murrough next week for another Magic Valley Conference contest.

Pitching is Key for Baltimore

BALTIMORE (AP) - Jimmy Key, who has made a habit of eliminating himself from the playoffs, gets the chance to do it again Sunday.

Key, who has 16 games for the Baltimore Orioles this season, will start as a starter, the Orioles' manager said. The Orioles' manager in Game 3 of the best-of-5 AL division series. He was last year's World Series MVP for the New York Yankees.

So when the 35-year-old veteran had a long second half this year? Key is at his best in the playoffs. - 5-2 with a 3.32 ERA in 11 career postseason games.

"I've been in this position a lot, but now we're in the postseason and that's what I've been eyeing all year," he said. The 1987 starter was 5-9 with a 4.15 ERA over his last 20 starts during the regular season, a slump the attributes to a struggle with his control.

Key will be appearing in his ninth playoff series, and he expects to draw upon that experience when he walks to the mound before a sellout crowd at Camden Yards.

"The ball games in the postseason and I'm going to use that as a confidence builder," he said. "You like to find a way to feel good about yourself and things you have done in the past. Anytime you have success in a certain situation, then you get in that situation again, you can feel that."

Key's success in the postseason is a big reason why the Orioles lured him away from the Yankees and gave him a two-year contract during the offseason.

He started off 8-0 and was 11-1 after his first 14 starts but finished 16-11 going 1-8 with a 5.21 ERA over his last 11 starts at home since May 7.

That doesn't matter to Orioles manager Davey Johnson, who was appreciative of Key's 21 1/3 innings - the most he's pitched since 1993.

"I think the world of Jimmy Key," Johnson said. "I love having him on the mound. I think the admiral of the situation will find him going. He's going to give me five or six innings, and that's what I'm looking for. I can't think of anybody else that I would want out there."

Key will be opposed by Jeff Fassero, who went 16-9 but has never appeared in a playoff game. If the Orioles left-handed hurler problems, the focus will turn to a Seattle bullpen that has a 10.80

ERA in the first two games of the series.

"We've just got to stop the bleeding," reliever Paul Spoljaric said. "I don't want to put pressure on myself because it seems that when you do that your good and pitcher bad games." Fassero said. "I just want to go out there relaxed and throw my game."

"This match is certain: the Orioles aren't going to play their game in the playoffs after struggling through a 13-16 September.

"This is a month ballclub. For the first four months it was a very driven ballclub," Johnson said. "We got to almost 40 games over 500 and then we seemed to let down a little bit or relax a little bit. Some guys were banged up during that stretch and I think we just tried to kind of coast on it."

"I wasn't really that concerned in that I knew we'd play very well. But I didn't know we'd play this well."

The Mariners, on the other hand, have not looked like a team that won 90 games and the AL West title. But manager Lou Piniella is confident that things will get better in Baltimore because, well, they certainly couldn't get any worse. "We've played well on the road all year. There's no quit here and no Cleveland's playoff run." He said. "We knew this wasn't going to be a picnic."

Braves advance to league championship, sweep Astros

HOUSTON (AP) - Meet the new Mr. October, John Smoltz.

Smoltz pitched a three-hitter in one of his most dominating post-season performances, and the Atlanta Braves cruised into an unprecedented sixth straight NL championship series with a 4-1 victory Friday over the Houston Astros.

"When October comes, it's my month," said Smoltz, who won his 10th postseason game and tied the record held by Whitey Ford and Dave Stewart. "There's nobody I trust more than myself. When I get in the car, I want to drive. When I put on the uniform, I want to pitch."

Smoltz, who helped the Braves complete a three-game sweep, feels a little like the original Mr. October and he said he felt the same way I do now."

"Certain people just feel that way," Smoltz said. "I've talked with Reggie about it. He's Mr. October and he said he felt the same way I do now."

The Braves, who had 101 victories during the regular season and became the first team in baseball history with six straight postseason appearances, were simply too strong for the Astros, who won the Central Division with an 84-78 record, worst among playoff teams.

After the final out, the Braves celebrated briefly on the field much like they would after a regular-season victory. In the clubhouse, a few bottles of champagne were popped and a few cigars were lit, but the players realize there's much more work to do in the league championship series and the World Series.

"You didn't see a lot of jubilation," said Chipper Jones, who silenced the record Astrodome crowd with a long first-inning homer. "There are four steps. We've achieved two (winning the NL East and the division series), we've got two more to go." Despite their amazing run of success in the 1990s, the Braves have captured only one World Series title. They will play Florida or San Francisco starting Tuesday as they try to win their fifth NL pennant in six completed seasons. "I think the guys are looking for a successful World Series," Jones said. "That's the only way you achieve what we set out in spring training to do."

It's not the Bronx, but Yankees call Jacobs Field home, anyway

CLEVELAND (AP) - In all likelihood, Jacobs Field will not shake in the gutters and lose full cups of beer during home runs deep from the upper deck. The New York Yankees can call it home, anyway.

As the AL division series shifts to Cleveland and F-8, the Indians must be wondering "What horns-field advantage?" New York's 15-5 on Jacobs Field, and the Bronx Braveros have bunched Game 3 winner Charles Gwynn every time they've faced him this season.

As far as owner Wimpol is concerned, if the Indians held their own against New York in the zombie atmosphere of Yankee Stadium, they should be fine in their own park.

"I hope the fans will be crazy like New York, to tell you the truth," said Wimpol, 64, in the series with his eighth in the series with his eighth in the series. "They might get one of their players out of focus. We've got a good crowd. I think they deserve a championship."

The ownership of age-old legends - from real life in the golden years to the movie screen in the '80s - got even more interesting with Cleveland's comeback victory in Game 2. Rookie Jaret

Wright ensured that AL Central champion Indians would not come home in a 2-0 hole for the second straight season.

Instead, the defending World Series champs must win two of three on the road to keep their repeat drive alive.

"We've been a pretty good road team all year, so that doesn't really devastate us," Yankees manager Joe Torre said.

The Yankees got more bad news on Friday when they learned ace David Cone was lost for the rest of the series. Cone, who struggled in Game 1, was scratched from his scheduled start Sunday in Game 4 after feeling a "snap" in his right shoulder near the end of a 10-minute throwing session on Thursday.

Cone, one of baseball's top postseason aces, vowed to pitch out of the bullpen in an emergency. Yankees doctors were not optimistic.

"The best case scenario is he could be back in the next round if the Yankees advance," team orthopedist Stuart Herndon said. Dwight Gooden, 5-0 in five career starts against the Indians, will start in Cone's place against either Orel Hershiser, Chad Ogea or the untested Jeff Juden.

With everyone buzzing about Cone and Game 4, it was easy to forget the importance of Saturday's game. New York's David Wells (16-10) against Cleveland's Charles Nagy (15-11) will be the most intriguing of the series.

"In Game 3, it's a little pivotal. Game 3 is a little pivotal," said Torre, whose World Series victory ride last October began with a Game 3 triumph by Cone after the Atlanta Braves won the first two games.

When Wells was with Baltimore last year, he faced Nagy twice in the division series. The Orioles won both games and ousted the Indians in four.

The Game 4 matchup was brilliant, with Nagy striking out 12 only to watch Roberto Alomar hit a 12th-inning homer off Jose Mesa to end Cleveland's playoff run. Wells was all business when he met the media Friday, just as he is on the mound in big games. He detected one question about his wild reputation, fueled by wild fluctuations with George Steinbrenner and pitching with a cap worn by Babe Ruth.

"I don't think that's relevant to what we're trying to do here," Wells said. "We're here for baseball, so we'll talk about baseball. When I go out between the lines, I'm all business," he added.

You can teach an old husband a new trick

You'd think, after 20-plus years of marriage that I would have figured out all of the potential pitfalls in dialogue between husband and wife. But I stumbled into a new one last weekend, and I'm still feeling a little foolish that I didn't see it coming.

Actually, I thought I was being pretty noble at the time. There were some important football games on TV that afternoon, I had some leftover work to do and I really needed to find some time to visit my dad. But Anita had volunteered to spend the day supervising at the high school choir's garage sale, and she was concerned about what to do with our two youngest children, Jon and Elizabeth — especially since Elizabeth had a soccer game that afternoon.

"I'll baby-sit," I said. "We'll go to Elizabeth's game, and then we'll go to see Dad."

VALUESPEAK

Now, I wasn't expecting cheers or praise or anything like that. But I was kind of hoping for some acknowledgement of my willingness to help out. Instead, I got "The Look" — you know, the one that says, "Who are you and what exactly was it that I saw in you 20 years ago?"

Let's pause in our narrative to take a pop quiz. By show of hands, how many of you know what I said to make Anita wonder if she wouldn't have been better off with Hairy Gary, the former suitor who became a successful dentist, or No-Pants Vance, the former suitor who may have become a felon? OK, now look around. Notice how many of the hands that are being held up are sporting fingernail polish? The rest of you guys are probably still as clueless as I was.

"You'll baby-sit?" she asked, icily.

"Sure." It was at about this point that I began to sense a certain coolness in the air — you know, sort of like what Admiral Byrd felt at the North Pole. So I asked, "Is there a problem?"

"Define 'baby-sitting,'" Anita said.

This had to be a trick question, in the same league with "Do I look heavy in this outfit?" and "Do you remember what tomorrow is?" I considered pleading temporary insanity, but I knew she wouldn't buy it — at least not the "temporary" part. So I picked my words carefully. "Well, I'll be ... you know ... taking care of the children. Feeding them. Watching them. Taking them places. Making sure they're safe."

"You mean, like what I do all day every day?"

Another trick question. Land mines everywhere. Step 6-o-f-ty: "Well ... yeah."

"I don't call that 'baby-sitting,'" she said. "To me, that's just being a mom."

Good! — direct hit! Body parts every-where retreat.

"Yeah, that's what I meant," I said. "How silly of me. I'm not going to baby-sit. I'm going to be their dad. Not that I'm not their dad other times, but today I'm really going to be their dad. Yes, sir — we're going to do stuff! We're gonna go places! We're gonna have fun!"

"And you're going to get some work done around the house, too?" Anita suggested. "I don't want to be the only parent who makes them work."

"No, of course not," I said, confident that I had successfully negotiated the obstacle course. We'll help you with the work around the house first, and then we'll ...

"Help me? So it's my work? Funny, I thought it was our job to take care of our house."

You'd think, after 20 years of marriage, that I'd have figured that out. Wouldn't you?

Man builds rock-solid faith

While creating a statue for a Jerome church, an artist found himself and his faith again

By Karma M. Fitzgerald
Times-News correspondent

JEROME — Picture in your mind a column of cement. See it 6 feet high, 20 inches in diameter.

To many, it would just be a column of cement. To Peter Page, it's a religious experience.

The Jerome artist and sculptor says he had a calling to create a statue, but, as he chipped away at the concrete, he found not only a work of art, he found himself.

"I wanted to do a statue of St. Francis," Page said, "but if I did it and put it in my yard, it would be vandalized."

So Peter Page picked up the phone and called a friend, Mary Vogel of Jerome.

"I thought it was a wonderful idea," she said. "He approached me with the idea of working with Ascension Priory. He knew I was Catholic and he didn't know anybody out there."

The timing couldn't have been better.

A Boy Scout troop had just finished building a rock wall in the priory courtyard.

"I was struck by the grace of God," said Fr. Jude. "We had asked the Boy Scouts to put a niche in the wall. We thought we might put a statue of St. Benedict there — someday — it's hard to find a statue of Saint Benedict."

The day the Boy Scouts finished the wall, Page contacted the priory.

But Page had a statue of St. Francis in his head, and in his heart — and the Ascension monks are Benedictine.

St. Francis had become a symbol of the religious life Page felt he was missing. A Pentecostal minister, he had become disenchanted.

"In the face of what I see as modern, shallow Christian evangelists, St. Francis was a man standing in the middle stream," Page said. "On the far side is the word of God, and on the outbank is gospel that is inept because man had made it inept."

But Page took up the study of St. Benedict and found there were few pictures of the monk, who died in 540.

Peter Page watches as Fr. Jude of Ascension Priory puts the finishing touches on a statue of St. Benedict.

Promise Keepers has growing pains

By Deb Riechmann

WASHINGTON — The Promise Keepers are sparing no expense at their $10 million weekend rally on the National Mall. But leaders hope the offering buckets will bring in enough cash today to keep the Christian men's group going strong into the new year.

Leaders say the 7-year-old Denver-based ministry founded by former University of Colorado football coach Bill McCartney, which has attracted more than 2 million men to stadium events nationwide, is existing hand-to-mouth. Spending has been cut. Rally attendance is down. Summer brought a round of layoffs.

"We're not sitting on a pile of cash," says Paul Edwards, a vice president.

Any claims of financial hardship are dismissed by some liberal groups that view Promise Keepers as a religious right wolf in sheep's clothing.

"It's hard to be sympathetic about someone saying they're living month to month when they have a $100 million budget," said Elizabeth Toledo, a vice president of the National Organization for Women.

The squeeze at the all-male ministry began early this year. Tickets were not selling fast. Were supporters thinking, "Been there, done that. Got the T-shirt?" Edwards wondered. Was the ministry not responding to the needs of its following?

A survey by the group indicated that supporters simply were waiting to attend this year's main event — the free six-hour marathon of prayer and worship in the nation's capital, Edwards said.

While thankful for the interest in the Washington rally, the group was fighting

FILER — Dog batters, taffy pulls, unfinished cleaning, mortgage burning and nurse services at Shoshone Falls were a few of the memories that surfaced during the 90th anniversary celebration at the Filer United Methodist Church last weekend.

Plastic houses put priest on priest

STANVILLE, Ky. (AP) — In the Gospels, the apostle Mark tells of a "foolish man who built his house upon the sand ... and great was the fall of it."

If the Rev. Al Fritsch were writing that parable today, he might substitute in the word "foolish."

Fritsch, a Jesuit priest who preaches the virtues of composting toilets and organic gardens, is winking in near horror as a fellow man of God prepares to sprinkle the mountains of eastern Kentucky with homes made largely from polyethylene sheeting.

Monignor Ralph Beiting and his Christian Appalachian Project see them as affordable, durable, well-insulated homes made from materials that might otherwise end up in a landfill. Fritsch fears polyesters flung from the walls of houses that will lose value with age and leave their owners with little to show for their investment.

"We're going to find answers for this 10-year down the line," says Fritsch, whose non-profit Appalachia-Science in the Public Interest promotes environmentally friendly practices from a research center in Rockcastle County. "Should the field-testing be done by the poor?"

Beiting has ordered 65 houses from Eagle Plastics Systems Inc. in hopes of convincing the company to move its manufacturing plant from Pompano Beach, Fla., to the mountains.

"I think he's wrong," Beiting said of Fritsch.

Eagle President Bill Kane has been marketing his plastic houses overseas since 1993, mainly in developing and Third World countries. He's worked with disaster relief organizations and with missionaries the likes of Billy Graham.

"I thought this would be an ideal opportunity to introduce these affordable housing units in the United States," said Kane. Kane says about 40 percent of the materials in the homes consist of corrugated polyethylene sheeting, the same kind of plastic used in milk jugs.

That total doesn't count the vinyl siding and some PVC plastic used to join the panels. The sheeting is screwed over insulation onto metal wall and ceiling studs, then covered with sheetrock.

The flooring is standard plywood, and the roofs are made from vinyl sheet metal. The cost is about $40 a square foot.

Fritsch worries about "off-gassing" from the plastics in a tightly insulated environment.

Charles Beatty, a professor of material science and engineering at the University of Florida, says Fritsch is thinking about materials that are no longer in use.

But Charlie Gray, a toxics campaigner for Greenpeace in Chicago who is leery of using so much plastic in homes, says the PVC used in the buildings gives off toxic dioxin and furans when burned.

Bob Thompson, an engineer in the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's indoor environments division, feels it's best not to use petrochemical products extensively in housing.

But he says the plastic houses are a building material that is being more for more in Appalachia's damp climate.

Beiting says a manufacturing plant with up to 200 positions could come to job-starved eastern Kentucky if he can get orders up to 120 units a year.

Jon Rivers. the leading voice in Christian radio, keeps the ride funny, not preachy

By Berta Delgado
The Dallas Morning News

MONTAGUE COUNTY, Texas — Out here, on 70 acres tucked into the gentle roll of the North Texas hills, the man who has ruled the voice of Christian music says he best hears the voice of God.

Jon Rivers hears him among the hungry horses trotting and the barn at feeding time, and in the crowing of a bright Brazilian oyster named Flash, and in the soft moan of the wind as it brushes past the trees dotting his land, 80 miles northwest of Dallas.

Out here, the radio voice that is heard throughout the country and around the world has a muted the voice of Christian music says he best hears the voice of God.

"I don't see my relationship with God as real formal anyway. He's there all the time for anyone who talks to him. But for me, it just seems easier here. It's just a little more natural here," Rivers says.

Rivers is program director of morning shows here on KLTJ-FM, a Dallas radio station considered by industry experts and artists to be the best Christian music station in the country. The radio veteran also hosts a weekly countdown of the top 20 adult contemporary Christian songs. "Twenty: The Countdown Magazine" has an 150 radio stations throughout the country and more than 200 countries on the Armed Forces Radio Network.

It's just before 5:30 a.m. on a breezy August morning and Rivers' day is closing in on its third hour.

He pulls into the studio parking lot off John W. Carpenter Freeway in a tough diesel Ram truck, fitting for a man who weighs more than 250 pounds and sports a size 14EEE boot.

He wears a light button-down shirt and khaki pants tucked into tan boots that he believes are water buffalo, but can't say for sure.

He carries a bottle of Naya Water and a red, aluminum firecracker-his-wife gave him for his birthday.

He just carries a big jar of vitamins, five apples and two pears. A vegetarian for years, the 49-year-old says it's his wife who eats meat.

Of course, listeners know that, just as they know about the goings on at the ranch, because Sherry's a frequent caller in the morning.

Marty, the wife for the second time, Rivers has five children from a previous marriage. He loves to talk about his kids, the youngest of whom is 15. One son was drafted this year by the Marine Corps and plays offensive left tackle.

At 5:55 a.m., Rivers gets ready for the "Jon Rivers and the Morning Show." Rivers, who has worked with Tucker for years, is the wisecracking, news-delivering sidekick. (Rebecca Flores, who is half the age of the two men, coordinated the program until leaving the station last month to return to college for her journalism degree. Dan Ratcliffe has replaced her as part of the gang.)

During the three-hour show, the gang chats on air between uplifting, upbeat music that moves them to sing along and even dance a bit. And not a day goes by without a countdown to Christmas.

In one week, according to Brad Burkha, publisher of Christian Research Report in Atlanta, more than 250,000 people listen to KLTJ, the largest audience in the world for contemporary Christian stations.

The supplies for the project added up to $300, which Page had planned to pay off in installments. But two anonymous donors took care of that worry. Lyons stumbles through 1 brush fire after another

By Mary Bell The Orlando Sentinel

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — A framed verse from Isaiah hangs outside the church office of the Rev. Henry Lyons. "Raise up the standard for the people," it reads.

The St. Petersburg pastor adopted those words as the theme for his successful 1984 campaign for the presidency of the 8.5 million-member National Baptist Convention U.S.A. Inc. Today, Lyons, 55, still talks about raising up a standard — for education, for social programs, for the way the convention conducts its own business — but the words of the prophet ring with irony.

Henry Lyons

Lyons had used church funds to buy an expensive diamond ring with Edwards and a $135,000 Mercedes-Benz, as well as the waterfront house at Pinellas County's exclusive Tierra Verde island. Adding more fuel, a special ethics commission appointed by the convention concluded at the group's annual meeting in Denver that its own rules did not prevent Lyons from making the lavish purchases. Jubilant delegates gave Lyons his "errors in judgment" and voted to retain him. But others were incensed, calling the investigation a sham. New there's a lawsuit in Tennessee. Congressional criticism in Washington. A branch of trust in New York. A long shadow on one of his newest ventures. Critics, both outside and inside the religious organization, denounce Lyons for corroding the credibility of the largest black church group in the nation and of black churches in general. Lyons concedes he made mistakes but insists he broke no rules and no laws. Other black religious leaders worry that the public might draw false conclusions about the culture of black churches. "The entire episode does damage to the confidence and trust in black clergy," said the Rev. Robert M. Franklin, president of the Interdenominational Theological Center in Atlanta. He and others think Lyons' refusal to step aside until the cloud clears will hinder the ability of many black churches to raise money for needed social programs and missionary work. It's already happening within the convention, which claims 33,000 of the estimated 70,000-plus black churches in the United States. A number of ministers say they will withhold future donations to the convention. Several reacted with denunciation to a letter Lyons wrote five days after surviving the challenge to his office. "I asked churches to help him meet a $600,000 deficit. The Sept. 3 vote to retain Lyons was made against a highly charged atmosphere of racial hostility toward what the group sees still as a mainstream white media effort to get Lyons. It came after the internal 13-member ethics commission abruptly curbed its investigation, angering many delegates and prompting two commission members to quit in protest. The commission absolved Lyons of violating convention rules, accepting his resignation that the money he and Edwards spent did not come from the convention but from their own companies, which earned an average yearly profit of $1 million. Lyons had turned Edwards to direct the convention's corporate relations. He has denied having an affair with her, and has described the affair as a "passionate" love affair. Lyons' corporate relationships and the "mistake" as a "gift" from Edwards. Convicted of embezzling $300,000 from a Milwaukee bank school for art teacher, Edwards, 40, had been married to her husband, a businessman and a successful attorney. On June 3, Lyons' wife of 25 years was charged with setting fire to the home of the couple's 11-year-old son, the Rev. John B. Edwards, 45, a self-described recovering alcoholic.

old police she set the house ablaze after finding papers listing her husband and Edwards as the owners. The next day, she changed her story, claiming the accidental fire dropped a match. A hearing on the arson charge is Oct. 20. Lyons' hometown paper, The St. Petersburg Times, has chronicled a number of personal and financial irregularities. Among them: In 1971, Lyons reported $85,000 to a local bank to avoid federal tax charges. Though he has been married three times, papers for the second home he bought with Edwards identified him as the single. An Auto-Defamation League in New York City blasted Lyons for distributing only $30,000 of the $244,200 the Jewish organization gave him last November to rebuild churches that burned over the past few years. And the Union Planters Bank of Middle Tennessee sued the convention for failing to repay a $200,000 loan.

Warren Sichel, right, his wife, Diane, and their two sons, Jason, top left, and Aaron, of St. Marys, Kan., are among thousands of Jewish families living in small towns and rural areas.

Jews keep the faith in rural areas

By Maria Sudekum Fisher The Associated Press ST. MARYS, Kan. — Warren Sichel was quivering in his boots the first time he told his big secret to anyone in the tiny northeast Kansas town where he had recently moved. "I tried to hide it, but that only worked for about two days," Sichel said as he remembered his move from Kansas City, Mo., to Centralia, 20 years ago. "They were very curious what congregation we belonged to, and then I just told them: 'I'm Jewish.' After that seemed like an eternity of silence, this person said, 'Well I think you're the first Jew to live in Nemaha County.' Two years later, Sichel and his wife, Diane, both 43, moved to their new town, St. Marys. The Sichels have since had two sons, now 15 and 16, and say that while there have been challenges, they have never regretted their decision to live in St. Marys, a predominantly Catholic town of 2,000, about 95 miles west of Kansas City. While about 95 percent of the United States' 6 million Jews live in metropolitan areas, the Sichels are among thousands of Jewish families who will celebrate this month's High Holy Days in America's traditionally Christian small towns and rural areas. Bernard Reisman, Klutznick professor of contemporary Jewish studies at Brandeis University in Waltham, Mass., says the flow of Jews away from the Northeast and into smaller Western and Midwestern towns is higher than that of non-Jews to rural areas. "Some Jews in rural areas face hated and anti-Semitism. Others find acceptance. Rabbi Stephen Forstein of Sioux Falls, S.D., said he knows of no other ordained rabbi in the state. He moved to the Midwest from New York City about 30 years ago. Forstein saw such a growing need for dialogue among rural Jews that he started a mailing list and then a Web site — Olam Katan, which means "small world" — aimed at the "Jewishly isolated." Olam Katan now has about 300 subscribers. Sichel and his family attend weekly services at a Topeka synagogue about 30 miles from their St. Marys home. Sichel, who teaches music and runs the St. Marys schools, says his sons have a strong Jewish identity and have helped educate the community about Judaism.

Preacher school sticks to the basics

Knights-Ridder News Service BEDFORD, Texas — It is first thing in the morning, and a few in the audience seem as if they could use a little caffeine. Down the hall, a broken air conditioner is rattling the classroom he is headed for into a sweatshop. His wife and a couple of his teachers are watching. "As he stands behind the pulpit at Brown Trail School of Preaching's daily chapel service, second-year student Clint Brown is not concerned about any of that. He is concerned about moral relativism. "It's not a matter of choice. If you expect to be pleasing to God," he says, "you do what the Bible demands, you don't worry about the world's truth." — Student Clint Brown

Brown Trail School of Preaching is not only willing to be different, it is proud to be different. Roy Deaver, who was once the church's preacher, had a simple vision for the school he founded. And for 32 years, the small congregation at Brown Trail Church of Christ has lovingly tended the product of that vision. This term's enrollment stands at a record high of 43. The 400-member congregation scrapes together the bulk of the money it takes to run the school. But about 400 Church of Christ congregations, mostly in North Texas, chip in by helping sponsor a student during the two years of study. The students pay no tuition. Curriculum at Brown Trail remains largely true to Deaver's design, unencumbered by courses in counseling or psychology or budgeting or any of the other issues that can get crowded into seminary curriculum. There are classes on the New Testament books of Mark, Luke, Acts and Galatians. There is one on Bible geography, another described as a "general survey of God's plan for man's redemption." There is a two-part Old Testament overview, an introduction to the Hebrew language, a class in "personal evangelism" and one titled "Preacher's Life and Work." Those classes, and the rest of the two-year curriculum, are open to applicants with at least a high school diploma and "unquestioned Christian character." No women are enrolled in the school; never have been, though women may audit the courses. There is no outright prohibition of women behind the pulpit in the largely autonomous congregations of the Church of Christ, but they are a rarity.

Send me an angel Christian dining service pairs up true believers

The Dallas Morning News DALLAS — Nancy is not looking for someone perfect. "Only one was perfect," she says, "and he's my son-in-law." But Nancy is looking for someone who exemplifies biblical values, so she has joined a growing number of Dallas-area residents using Christian dating services. The one Nancy selected is Equally Yoked, which has 30 offices nationwide. The Dallas-based group's name plays off a verse in 1 Corinthians: "Be ye not yoked together with unbelievers." In the loose-joint listings, an Equally Yoked, there are no photos but lots of religious anagrams. Women can request a "fully Yoked" man to look for a "Proverbs 31 lady," a term that refers to a biblical passage on a wife's virtues. Many add that it doesn't hurt if she likes the Cowboys. "Then they're really, you see, someone who knows how to stuff a frank, who desires a character-type with pointed terminals ... (with) with ... (Frank's name, like those of our dating service clients, has been changed.) Equally Yoked says it screens applicants carefully to make sure they have the right stuff. If you want to join, you must provide the name of your pastor and two "faith references," friends who can testify to the depth of your faith. You also must recount your experience of becoming a Christian. Divorced members must prove that their divorce has been finalized. "We don't even hesitate to reject people," says Len McMillan, who owns Equally Yoked with Rich Thomas. At the same time, McMillan says, "We don't attract super-duper right-wing Bible thumpers; those people believe God is going to drop their names in their laps." Until this summer, Equally Yoked members also had to make a pledge that they would remain celibate. McMillan says the dating service reluctantly dropped this requirement in recognition of the tolerance of many churches toward sex in a committed relationship. Gary Gray, editor of Living Splo magazine, has conducted a survey of Christian singles. He says Christian singles organizations — both church groups and those dating services that screen members carefully — serve a "critical function in a place for them to meet people with similar views on sex. But Sandra Shelton, who runs a Christian singles consulting firm called Exuberantly Single, is skeptical. "I expect the secular world to parade people like animals," she says. "When we're doing something parallel to the secular world, hold back."

Working together to keep kids safe

JEROME - Each year in the Magic Valley, nearly 20 children under the age of 17 die as motor vehicle passengers and an additional 400 are injured severely enough to require medical treatment. The staff of Con Paulus Chevrolet-Pontiac-GMC in Jerome joined the staff of the Magic Valley Safe Kids Coalition in strengthening their effort to reduce these deaths and serious injuries.

More than 30 staff members at Con Paulus attended a four-hour child safety seat training workshop with trainers from the coalition in August. The training they received will support the effort to educate parents and caregivers about the importance of properly restraining children on every ride. This workshop prepares the staff to inform their customers and the public of the proper use of car seats and safety belts.

The staff of Con Paulus Chevrolet-Pontiac-GMC in Jerome recently joined with the Magic Valley Safe Kids Coalition to learn more about the proper way to buckle children in car safety seats.

Schoeder fund set up

ETHEL - A special fund has been established for Sherry Schroeder, who suffered severe burns from an accident at her home on Sept. 13.

Funds will be used to help pay medical expenses not covered by insurance, funds needed for recovery when Schroeder returns home and for travel expense for the family. Contributions may be made at any branch of Farmers National Bank or mailed to Farmers National Bank, 914 Main St., Buhl, ID 83316.

Schroeder was taking trash to the burn barrel when an aerosol can exploded and caught her clothing on fire. She dropped to the ground and rolled, then went for the house to put out the fire around the barrel. Realizing her clothes were still burning, she dropped and rolled again. She was taken to Magic Valley Regional Medical Center and flown to the University of Utah Burn Center in Salt Lake City. Schroeder suffered first, second and third-degree burns to 22 percent of her body. Skin grafts have been done in five areas, and she remains in intensive care to guard against infection. She will probably be in Salt Lake City for another month and will be starting physical therapy when her condition improves.

Lloyd Miller stands on part of his 600-acre Jerome ranch that is now managed by his son-in-law, David Hamilton.

Celebrating a lifetime of creating

TWIN FALLS - An open house to celebrate the 85th birthday of Lloyd Miller is planned from 5 to 8 p.m. Tuesday at 1749 Dora St. N. in Twin Falls.

Farming was Miller's first occupation. In 1936 he bought some land in Weston and in 1942 he broke up land in the Hunt area while starting his building career. His first building job was the Lynwood shopping center in Twin Falls. From there he moved on to commercial buildings.

Miller was partners with Ray Nielson for a time and later became partners with his son Richard. The partnership was cut short when Richard was killed in a plane crash going to a job site in Lime, Ore.

Some of Miller's building projects include the Canal Bridge in Gooding, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints Anake Center in Twin Falls, the Heyburn Interchange, Filer Elementary School, Burley East Overpass, the Amalgamated-Sugar-Plant-in-Rupert, Idaho First Bank in Jerome, the Canal Bridge in Declo, the Twin Falls Interchange, the Wendell West Bridge, the cement work on the Perrine Bridge, the first phases of the College of Southern Idaho campus and many more.

"He is a very versatile man," said Miller's wife Donnie. "He is a rancher, faggot builder, golfer and a great father and grandfather. His ranch in Jerome was once sagebrush and is now cultivated and worth much more than when he first began."

Miller is now retired from ranching. His son-in-law, David Hamilton, manages their Jerome ranch. Miller has 25 grandchildren and 17 great-grandchildren.

PEOPLE IN THE NEWS

The Associated Press

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — Chastity Bone thinks it's unfair that the movie ratings board has given a new film about gay men in Nazi Germany the adults-only rating... The Motion Picture Association of America said it gave "Bent" the most restrictive rating...

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — Socialite Marilyn Whitney exchanged vows with a former aide to ex-Gov. Walter J. Hickel, and this time it was the groom who insisted on the prenuptial.

Famed adventurer Norman Vaughan gave the 73-year-old bride away Wednesday at Girardown, a skillful community of 50 miles southwest of Alaska's largest city.

It's the third marriage for Whitney, the widow of Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney, who died in 1992 at the age of 93. She is retaining her name.

"We've come a long way, but the next step for gays and lesbians in media is to be able to be physical with each other, and to show the same type of intimacy on-screen that is completely accepted between people of the opposite sex."

—Chastity Bone

Hickel, who officiated at the wedding and introduced the couple three years ago.

Whitney announced their engagement last August at a fancy dress ball she hosts each year at Saratoga Springs, N.Y., but Hickel had insisted to wait "informal" until he got married during lunch at Buckingham Palace in June.

Hickel said the couple signed a prenuptial agreement at his insistence: "If something happens, I don't want her to be able to take my terms."

COLLEGE, Ohio — First he went to outer space, then four terms in the U.S. Senate. Now John Glenn is headed for perhaps his most daunting mission yet: the college classroom.

The Ohio Democrat announced Friday that he will take a teaching position at Ohio State University after retiring from the Senate next year, saying he wants to help combat cynicism among today's students.

"I think that's something public officials don't often have the opportunity to do, but the odds are very good," he said.

Glenn also will donate to the school his personal papers and artifacts, ranging from his Mercury space capsule thruster and control stick to his father's World War I helmet and mask kit.

SAN FRANCISCO — Blues legend John Lee Hooker joined friends and family in celebrating the opening of his new Boom Room blues club.

"The Boogie Man" and others plan to breathe new life into the once popular nightclub, formerly known as Jack's. Bluesman Robert Cray and slide guitar great Roy Rogers dropped by Thursday to help Hooker celebrate the grand opening.

"It'll be nice for the neighborhood," said Hooker, a part owner of the club. "They'll be pouring in."

And just what kind of music can patrons expect from a club named after an 80-year-old blues man who has inspired musicians from Eric Clapton to Keith Richards?

"No hard rock. Just blues and boogie," Hooker said.

FORT WORTH, Texas — Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison, who's more accustomed to fighting Democrats on Capitol Hill, has faced off against a Texas Ranger.

But the Texas Republican, who played herself in a guest appearance on "Walker, Texas Ranger" opposite Chuck Norris, had only a few tense moments during the taping for the CBS show — when her makeup needed a touchup.

"I don't mind 'lipstick,'" Mrs. Hutchison said as she left the set in search of a makeup artist. "I have no lipstick."

In the scene, Norris, who plays a Texas Ranger in the series, pleads for funding for a young offender's prison boot camp.

Mrs. Hutchison, a longtime friend of Norris, said she hadn't acted since a high school play. But Norris said she had a natural delivery.

The episode will air in six to eight weeks.

Starved child's parents allowed to go to funeral

Hospital workers raise money for tombstone

PADUCAH, Ky. (AP) — A couple accused of starving their 2-year-old son to death were released from jail briefly to attend the boy's funeral Friday.

Several local businesses and families have contributed money toward the funeral and burial of Jeffrey Mitchell, who died Tuesday of malnutrition. The boy weighed just 10 pounds — 3 pounds over his birth weight — when he died.

He was to be buried at Mount Carmel Cemetery, and authorities granted his parents' request to attend. An autopsy showed no evidence the boy suffered any injuries or medical problems other than malnutrition, Coroner Dan Sims said Thursday.

Emergency-room workers at Western Baptist Hospital, where the boy was pronounced dead, are raising money to buy a tombstone, spokeswoman Bonnie Schrock said Thursday.

"They struggled to get through this," she said. "They did not want this child's grave to go unmarked."

Billy Mitchell, 45, and his wife, Susan, 37, each are charged with murder and wanted endangerment in their son's death and allegedly allowing two daughters to become severely malnourished. They were held on $1.1 million bond.

McCracken County Commonwealth's Attorney Tim Keenan back said he expects to take the case to the grand jury Friday. He said he has not ruled out seeking the death penalty.

Billy Mitchell told police that he had had perhaps $50 left from his monthly $1,429 Air Force pension to spend on food after he paid his bills. He told police his minimum payments on four credit cards exceeded $800 a month and that his check also was being garnished.

Court records show that the couple, whose only income was Mitchell's pension, had amassed credit card debts of $40,000 to $60,000 and owed $10,000 on their 5-year-old car. They were also up-to-date on premiums for $60,000 life insurance policies on their children.

Mitchell told police he did not know where to get aid and had been advised that his pension disqualified him for food stamps. But Gary Willis, a spokesman for the state Cabinet for Families and Children, said there is no record Mitchell applied for food stamps. The family would have qualified for at least $98 a month in food stamps, Willis said.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE

- Bobby Wolff -

"If the prodigal quits life in debt to others, the miser quits it still deeper in debt to himself."
- Charles Caleb Colton

There are times to cling to a sure winner, and there are times to sacrifice for a better prospect. A born miser, today's East couldn't be expected to unlead a dead spade king - a play that would have defeated the game.

West led his spade jack, dummy played low, and the miser had to make a decision. For him, the decision was a difficult one, alerting everyone that he had the king. However, since he was a miser, there was scant chance he would unblock. He played low, holding on to his sure winner.

South took his spade ace and played diamonds. West winning his king. West continued with his spade 10, but after a few agonizing study at trick one, South didn't misguess. He played low from dummy and East's king fell on air. The rest was easy. South won East's return, knocked out the diamond ace, and scored an overtrick.

How does the game go down? East must sacrifice his "sure trick" at trick one and cover West's spade king with his king, an unblocking play. South will duck but it will do little good. East continues the suit, leaving South with only one more stopper, and West will unblock. With high diamonds ensure him two entries, and a sure road to collecting three spade winners for one down.

A tribute to Mother Teresa

If the timing seems uncanon, a new cable movie already was finished before the recent death of The Saint of the Gutters. Making a rare TV appearance, Geraldine Chaplin stars Sunday 7 p.m. ET in the Family Channel biopic "Mother Teresa: In the Name of God's Poor," a dramatization of the Calcutta-based nun and missionary's lifelong dedication to the impoverished and abandoned.

The teleplay traces her founding of the religious order that became the Missionaries of Charity, her establishment of shelters for lepers, and her receipt of the 1979 Nobel Peace Prize. The international cast also includes William Katt as a composite character, a reporter covering Mother Teresa's efforts.

"I still can't really believe it," Chaplin says from her Switzerland home about the death of Mother Teresa. "I feel that she's still alive, and in fact, I'm really quite mad that she died. She shouldn't have. She was so stubborn, it was almost as if she wasn't mortal. Thank goodness she didn't die the day before or the day after this was shown."

"Chaplin tried to imitate the real Mother Teresa. Obviously, there are huge limitations in portraying someone with that appearance, voice and gestures. As well-known, I don't know those right technically, and I am not myself as well as she was. I was acting with a will that followed her through 10 years of her life."

"I'd have that on my morning news on tonight, and I just kept trying to imitate her. I covered all my nerves, so I couldn't see myself doing, because I feared I'd look ridiculous. Once I got that over, it was just a matter of bringing me, especially working in San Lanka with such destitute people. They were touching me and calling me 'Mama,' so it seemed very natural."

Evidently, it wasn't authentic enough for others, too. Chaplin recalls, "At one point during the filming, one of the crew actresses told me that a driver said to her, 'I've taken Geraldine Chaplin all over Sri Lanka.' Well, it wasn't me. I had been working the whole time."

Fred Savage is 'Working' for a Living

Fred Savage's tumultuous turn in "The Wonder Years" is the bridge years, but he's winning again.

And his new work happens to be called "Working."

Premiering Wednesday, October 22 on NBC, the comedy stars the young actor as well-known, a former of absence from the Standard. Comedy studies — as the newest employees of a large company. The actor's main purpose never is made clear, but what transpires there, reality situations that occur in more offices.

"Working" plays a rather incompetent boss with "Ed" regular Yvonne Strainburg as his second-in-command. "Another way, really, was never on the agenda for me," Savage says. "It wasn't something I was actually seeking. I was, especially because I wanted to do actual. I had the opportunity to read a lot of scripts lately, and the just stood head and simply read over any pilot script I had read in years. It seemed odd to seek something like this."

Celebrity gossip

Q: I read something about a lawsuit in Jon Bon Jovi's family, but I didn't get the details. What's happening? — K.R.
A: The rocker and his second cousin, Anthony Bonjovio, filed lawsuits against each other several weeks ago over ownership of the singer's early material. It seems that Bonjovio, who uses the family's original spelling, claims to own songs that his famous cousin recorded in his recording studio in the early 1980s.

Bon Jovi, 35, naturally, sees the matter in an entirely different light and released the songs in an album last summer called "John Bonjovio: The Power Station Years," says a source.

Q: Is Amy Grant set to return to Christian music? — G.R.
A: Grant, 36, is a devout Christian and continues to do musical work. Her album, though, which went through a radical and to some controversial, study to pop an RMI with "Honor of Milton," have continued to evolve, reflecting what's going on in her life.

At the will of actress-entertainer Gary Chapman and mother of three young children, she explores many different aspects of life in her songs. Her most recent album, "Honor of Milton," an attempt to explore life more deeply, a departure from the lighter pop songs of the early '80s.

Q: Will Mike Sillars be working on anything new? — B.Z.
A: The actor, who was 70 in a few days, is putting the disappointment "Excess Baggage" behind him. That movie was part of a production deal with pay-per-view producer, as well as a low-budget film. Sillars recently filmed a movie with Peter Onorati, as well as a comedy on the "Hill Country" "Three Amigos" are Martin Brundin, Mike Sorrento, Charlie Simon and Donald Sutherland. The movie should be ready for release next year.

Q: The only new Eric Roberts in a few days, but I am a special admirer of his. Can you name one of the movies he's been in? — E.P.
A: Roberts, 57, started his movie in the 1974 film "Tom of the Tompkins" and the 1976 film "Tom of the Tompkins" and the 1978 film "Tom of the Tompkins" and the 1980 film "Tom of the Tompkins" and the Josh Taylor: A noble Roman - or not!

Soap sums Set Groves

On a soap, fans know it's wise not to assume anything. For example, don't assume that the daughter who was just blown up in an explosion so hot it turned the Gobi Desert into a sea of glass, won't return in a later story line.

The same is true for actors, but in another way: play Don't assume a role played for years by someone else unless you're prepared for the toughest challenge of your soap career.

Josh Taylor, who recently joined "Days of Our Lives" to take on the venerable character of Roman Brady, doesn't deny that it's a real challenge in trying to persuade an audience to accept you in a role long associated with another actor.

"But the process isn't as difficult as it sounds," says Taylor. "The most important thing is the story. Of course, for me to play Roman, I have to become Roman in my own mind. But the way to get the audience to accept me (as the character) is to know what my story is — and perform honestly."

Taylor, who was on "Days" several years ago as Chris Kostichek, the brilliant inventor-brother of the murderous Jake Kostichek (Jack Coleman) is the third actor to play Roman Brady. The first was Wayne Northrop, who is currently Rex on "Port Charles." Roman, who has "died" on "Days" almost as often as his long-time nemesis, Stefano (Joe Mascolo), experienced one of his disappearances/demises when Northrop left to join "Dallas." Later, actor Drake Hogestyn repeated the role, but when Northrop returned, Hogestyn's character featured as well as someone called "John Black," a member of the new family, whose memories were taken by Stefano, and replaced with those of Roman.

Roman — who had only recently again been declared (and presumed) dead — has returned to Salem just as John and Mariena (Deirdre Hall, Roman's former wife, whom he was hoping for a future together. This time, however, Roman may be dying for real, unless Stefano's promised "cure" really works.

Meanwhile, how does Josh play Roman with sympathy and yet, resist being maudlin about this man's plight? "That's where the real challenge lies," Josh said. "The one thing you don't want is to allow self-pity to come in. If that happens, the character — loses credibility. I go back to what one of my teachers said: 'Emphasize the story line,' he'd say. 'The writing will tell you — as the actor — what to do. It's up to you to take that story and make it so much a part of you that when you perform it, you do it as if you were living it, not playing it.'"

He also said, "Don't exaggerate, but believe in the exaggaration." You see that in the movies, for example, with Harrison Ford. When he is hanging out of an airplane, he believes what the story tells him, that it's not going to suck him out, and in that way he makes the audience believe it too.

"With 'Days,' which is a story-driven show," Taylor continued, "you commit to — and perform every instance on the page, and the story takes care of itself."
