False tale of 'Hispanic kidnapper' rekindles smoldering racial suspicions

By William Brock and Penelope Reedy
Times-News writers

TWIN FALLS — It was the stuff of nightmares when a white couple from Jerome accused an armed Hispanic man of a kidnapping.

It was pure hogwash, criminal investigators say. The "Hispanic kidnapper" was a red herring, intended to throw them off the track.

It was pure calumny, local Hispanics say. The couple needed to concoct a menacing kidnapper, and trotted out a familiar stereotype: "the Hispanic hoodlum."

Every time a Hispanic is falsely accused, it drives another wedge of suspicion between English- and Spanish-speaking people — and everyone is cheapened by the experience.

"America is really off track that the race war is over," said Richard Baker, a sociology professor at Boise State University and a keen observer of southern Idaho's Hispanic community.

"Social scientists overwhelmingly say that America is still a racist society and we are in incredible denial," Baker said.

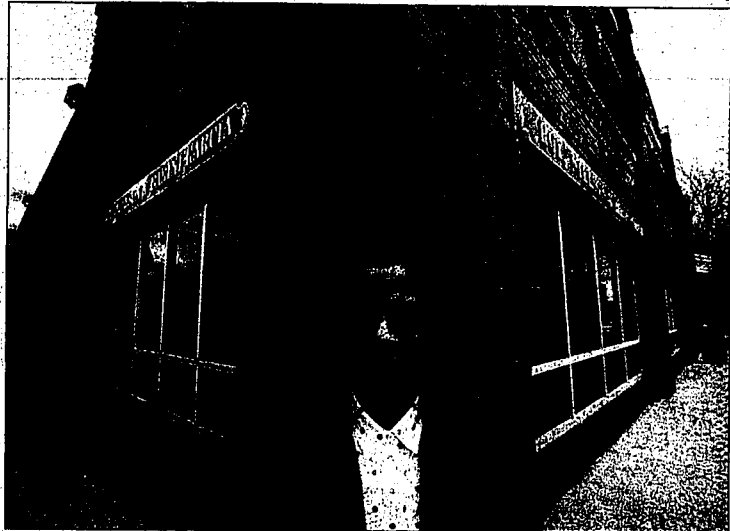

A presumption of guilt?

When she learned the "kidnapper" was Elmer E. Erickson, Penelope Reedy said her first reaction was "Oh no, more Hispanic people giving us a bad name."

"People made it sound like a typical thing for Hispanics to do," said Loya, a deputy civil clerk for Cassia County.

"We portray these young guys with the baggy pants and hats on backwards as 'criminals,'" he said, "and the fear is definitely there, when you walk out of the 7-Eleven at midnight and they're standing around."

Please see RACISM, Page A7

Twin Falls attorney Lisa Barin Garcia says even acts of bigotry are wrong, but Hispanics and other people of color still confront subtle forms of prejudice every day.

Police employ sixth sense, sensitive tools to sort out stones during investigations

By Brian Haynes
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — When a Jerome couple accused a Hispanic man of kidnapping a baby, Hispanic community leaders voiced their displeasure about being the target of police suspicion.

Investigators use intuition, and sometimes high-tech help, to search for facts first, regardless of race. And when they investigate a crime, they begin with the assumption that the victim is telling the truth, Twin Falls Police Sgt. Steve Ryan said.

"Only when inconsistencies arise in people's stories do police begin suspecting someone is lying, Ryan said. Those inconsistencies are often small details that change from one version of the story to the next, but the smallest change puts police on notice.

Police also consider the suspect's motive and stability, and history of similar cases, he said.

Protective insurance laws falter

Many fear loss of health coverage

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Breast cancer is so common in Bonnie Lee Tucker's family that she often sees her relatives in doctors' offices, in hospital corridors and, wrenchingly, in funeral homes.

Mrs. Tucker, one of nine women in three generations to develop the disease, Laura, want to take a test to learn if they carry a gene mutation that can cause it. But they fear the test would cost Laura the health insurance she might need later for treatment.

"My doctor said to me, 'If you have this test done, your daughter is not going to get insurance,'" said Mrs. Tucker, 48, of Hampden, Maine.

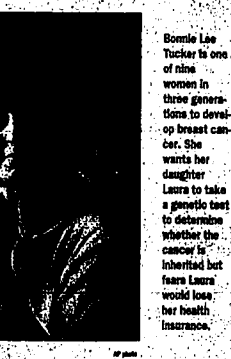

So, like thousands of patients who wonder if they carry genes linked to dozens of diseases, they're waiting to be tested until Congress passes a law barring insurers from using their genetic makeup against them.

They won't be making an appointment soon.

Last year, it appeared a spate of new laws would encourage testing by barring insurers from using genetic data against policy holders.

President Clinton and Vice President Gore backed calls for change from breast cancer groups. So did Francis Collins, head of the federal government's gene-mapping Human Genome Project. Lori Andrews, head of a National Institutes of Health ethics panel, warned of a future "genetic underclass."

Then a drug trade group, Pharmaceutical Research & Manufacturers of America, warned that Bonnie Lee Tucker is one of nine women in three generations to develop breast cancer. She wants her daughter Laura to take a genetic test to determine whether the cancer is inherited but fears Laura would lose her health insurance.

GOP's question Kempthorne's bond proposal

The Associated Press

LEWISTON — Republican U.S. Sen. Dirk Kempthorne, the frontrunner in the race to succeed retiring GOP Gov. Phil Batt, has run into opposition from within his own party to his plan for reducing the state's two-thirds vote requirement for approving school bond issues.

Kempthorne has vowed to lead a campaign to reduce the supermajority requirement to 60 percent for school bond proposals considered in conjunction with statewide elections, citing the deplorable conditions of some schools.

"I'm not in support of that," Geneseo School Board Chairman Ralph Stout, owner of Stout Flying Service at the Lewiston-Nez Perce County Airport, said of the proposal that was rejected in an Idaho House committee during the Legislature's 1998 session.

"I feel that property taxes are an unfair tax for funding all of school buildings," Stout said. "I think a partial funding by a sales tax or other income tax would be a fairer tax."

Sex crackdown leads to revolt in Colorado town

The Associated Press

GLENDALE, Colo. — City leaders went too far when they tried to crack down on strip joints and taverns in this low-income town. Now they're feeling the wrath of the Glendale Tea Party.

The newly formed party, which claimed town leaders were running roughshod over individual and property rights by trying to restrict the clubs, won all three seats that were contested in last Tuesday's nonpartisan city council election.

"I don't think they realized people like the club," said Shotgun Willie's owner, Debbie Matthews, whose business is located in a community dominated by businesses, apartment complexes and condominiums. "The support we had was heartening."

Small business owners backed the Tea Party candidates: a landscape project design manager, a nurse and a print-shop owner.

The losing candidates, supported by Glendale Mayor Joe Rice and other local leaders, wanted the city to attract families and more permanent residents. They contended the Ten Party was a political machine that spent thousands on the campaign.

The most publicized issue was a proposed ordinance to tighten strip club regulations. The club owners said the law would have quickly put them out of business.

"We were being taxed. We had representation that did not give a fig about us, but was putting our property in jeopardy," said John Hill, owner of Mile High Saloon, the other strip club.

Built on roughly a square mile surrounded by south Denver, Glendale has about 4,000 mostly low-income residents, who typically stay less than a year. The city has just three single-family homes.

Glendale's daytime population swells to about 25,000 workers in Debbie Matthews, who owns a strip club in the Denver suburb of Glendale, Colo., joined forces with other small business owners in the community to fend off restrictions on the clubs and win three city council seats in this week's election.

Across the Nation

Idaho: An upper level disturbance over California and Nevada continued to pump moisture over Idaho Sunday afternoon.

The moisture, coupled with warmer air over western and southern Idaho, developed showers and isolated thunderstorms in those areas.

West: Rain sped into California on Saturday, turning to snow in the mountains, and brisk wind blew across the Plains. Farther north along the West Coast, light rain showers were scattered across parts of Oregon and Washington, with snow showers in the Cascades.

Shower also were scattered eastward through northern Nevada and Idaho into sections of western Montana, northern Utah and western Wyoming.

Plains: Low pressure sitting across the western Plains combined with high pressure over the lower Missouri Valley to produce fairly steady westerly blowing from the Texas Panhandle to Nebraska.

Midwest: A few light rain showers were scattered across southern Wisconsin, eastern Iowa and northern Illinois.

Question

Lewisburg said he hopes to make Kemphre more aware of the property tax burden in Nez Perce County so he will better understand the impact of his bond issue proposal.

Joe Stegner of Lewiston, a Republican trying to succeed retiring Democratic state Sen. Bruce Sweeney in the Idaho Senate, said he supports Kemphre's efforts to get money for school facilities.

"But I'm not a fan of doing that through property taxes," Stegner said, calling instead for a state move to broaden the sales tax base.

Kemphre said he does not intend to raise state taxes if he is elected governor, but he would mull it out.

"It would be an absolute last resort, and I don't think we are going to exercise it," he said. "I think there are a few areas where you can do some trimming."

Looking presidential

Travels let Clinton bask in new image

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — The president's foreign and domestic road show, which began three weeks ago, is scheduled to continue at least through a trip to China in June, has given him a welcome opportunity to look presidential amid the allegations of sex and cover-up that have pummeled him most of the year.

But around the country, many Americans wonder, despite Clinton's key role in the peace and partnership agreement in Northern Ireland, if there is not a certain "Wag the Dog" quality to Clinton's travels — an effort to divert attention from his troubles at home, if not by manufacturing an international crisis, as in the recent movie, than at least by calling attention to other concerns.

Father-son tobacco-growing team of Gilbert and Leroy Cannon, for example, took a cynical view of the president's hey-Tin-statesman-not-a-jerk campaign. "It's tobacco country, it looks like he's traveling down (to Carrollton, Ky.) here just to distract attention from Paula Jones and all that mess," said Gilbert Cannon, 57, a tobacco farmer who turned out for Clinton's visit here Thursday by protesting Senate legislation (which Clinton supports) that would impose new costs and regulations on tobacco.

"Tobacco is a diversion," added his 36-year-old son, Leroy. After returning from Africa, Clinton traveled last week to Kansas City, Chicago and Carrollton. He plans another domestic trip this week before leaving Wednesday for Chile.

After a day in Europe, Clinton, at a Chicago fund-raising dinner Tuesday, convened during a rain storm in a tent at a private home, the president explained the philosophy that keeps him going despite all his troubles this year.

"I was thinking when all this storm came up, when the tent began to leak, I thought, 'I live every day in Washington,'" Clinton said, rousing the laughter of the crowd. "Believe me, I've found that if you just keep standing up most of the time the tent won't fall. And if the storm blows over you, you won't melt. Ninety percent of it is just showing up every day. It gratifies your friends and confounds your enemies." The president has tried to keep this strategy through the past difficult months but recently he has been able to get the microphone working on his bully pulpit.

President Clinton talks with National Security Adviser Sandy Berger Friday after making a statement about the Northern Ireland peace agreement. Clinton is in the midst of a 3-week travel schedule that has softened interest in the sex and cover-up allegations he faced most of the year.

His goal for last week — particularly because Congress was out of session — was to conduct a conversation "straight from the Oval (Office) desk to the kitchen table," presidential adviser Rahm Emanuel said.

So, the president launched a dialogue in Kansas City about reforming Social Security, highlighted plans for improving school buildings while in Chicago and went to tobacco country to discuss the need to increase taxes on the lifeblood industry there. All were issues with broad middle-class appeal.

To be sure, with the dismissal of the Paula Jones suit and a bid by independent counsel Kenneth W. Starr's investigation, the Clinton sex allegations that have monopolized the media for most of the year subsided substantially. "What he's been able to do... is to recapture the bully pulpit," said Norman Ornstein, a political analyst at the American Enterprise Institute, a conservative Washington-based think tank.

It was a "combination of skill and some luck" that enabled him to fill the vacuum with his agenda, Ornstein said.

But even as the president appeared to be regaining his stride, White House officials were quick with reminders that more stormy days lie ahead. Starr continues his probe of Clinton's dealings with former White House intern Monica S. Lewinsky, and his report to Congress is likely to produce a new wave of trouble for the president.

"He's pretty much like a boxer who has taken a pummeling in an early round. His handlers have put gummi under his nose and sent him back into the ring. He's doing better, but the 15th round hasn't come — so we don't know what the decision will be," said Ross Baker, political scientist from Rutgers University.

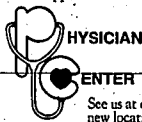

Trying to run a presidency despite the onslaught of controversies is nothing new for Clinton or his team of advisers.

"This is the classic two-track Clinton presidency," said Larry Sabato, a professor of government at the University of Virginia. "You run a train down the policy track while at the same time another steam engine is on the second track of scandal."

Starr witness says jurors clapped when she complained about probe

New York Daily News

A former White House intern who testified last week before Kenneth Starr's grand jury said jurors laughed and clapped when she complained that she was dragged in to "spread gossip" about Monica Lewinsky.

Nicole Maffeo, 24, a Boston public relations consultant, said she didn't appear voluntarily at the White House three years ago.

In testimony on Monday, Maffeo said she was asked why she didn't appear voluntarily. Maffeo, who was subpoenaed, said she believed she had nothing to add to the investigation.

Then she added: "I also never thought in a million years that the independent counsel would spend the taxpayers money to fly me down here so I could spread my gossip to the grand jury."

Maffeo said in an interview shown on MSNBC. "At that point, everyone in the grand jury started laughing and clapping."

Maffeo's account offered a rare glimpse into the 23-member panel hearing Starr's evidence of possible obstruction of justice and perjury charges against President Clinton concerning the Lewinsky affair.

Stephen Gillers, a law professor at New York University, said Maffeo's account could bolster

White House charges that the independent counsel's $25 million investigation is wasteful and out of control.

But Gillers cautioned that interpreting the grand jury's reaction is "like reading tea leaves" and might reveal nothing more than "gallows humor."

A new poll, meanwhile, indicated that 54 percent of Americans believe Starr's prospective report on the scandal will be biased with manipulated facts to make a case against Clinton. But the Time magazine/CNN survey, released Saturday, also showed that two-thirds of respondents believe Lewinsky should be prosecuted if she lied under oath.

'Express line rage' results in charge

MILWAUKEE (AP) — A supermarket customer was charged Saturday with cutting off part of a woman's nose after that woman went to an express checkout lane with too many items.

Etharine Pettigrew, 41, was charged with second-degree recklessly endangering safety, which carries a maximum sentence of a $10,000 fine and two years in prison.

The victim, 27-year-old Vickie Lemons, was slashed with a pocket knife in a parking lot Wednesday, police Capt. Joseph Purperro said.

She lost about half her nose and had to undergo surgery, said James Powell. A counter clerk whose lane was free motioned to Lemons even though she had more than the 10 items allowed at that cash register. Police said Pettigrew followed Lemons to the lane and got angry because she had too many items.

Pettigrew was being held Saturday in the Milwaukee County Jail on $1,000 bail.

Senate panel investigates IRS criminal powers

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new report is challenging the fairness of Internal Revenue Service criminal prosecutions, pointing out cases where small U.S. cities had more convictions per capita than major business centers.

The Senate Finance Committee, which is preparing another series of high profile hearings looking into IRS horror stories, is expected to review the report just two weeks after the April 15 tax filing deadline.

The committee also is expected to hear cases alleging IRS agents abused citizens' rights in criminal tax cases, according to several sources who have met with Senate investigators.

The study by the Transactional Records Access Clearinghouse, or TRAC, reported per capita tax convictions were twice the national average in IRS offices in Pensacola, Fla.; Greensboro, N.C.; Memphis, Tenn.; and Charleston, W.Va.

But major business centers, including Los Angeles, Chicago, Boston and Detroit, reported lower than average criminal convictions, TRAC said.

The IRS said the TRAC data and the study's conclusions are flawed. But David Burnham, an author and research professor with Syracuse University who helped prepare the study, said the variation raises troubling questions about management of IRS criminal matters.

"You can see large and hard-to-explain variations on the criminal side that I think raise questions about fairness and effectiveness of the agency," Burnham said.

Burnham said he's been asked to testify about his findings during the Senate hearings this month; committee staff decline to discuss witnesses.

The TRAC statistics are drawn from Justice Department and Administrative Office of the Courts computer records; the IRS won't supply its records to Burnham, saying they contain confidential details about investigations.

A senior IRS official criticized the TRAC report.

"We think there are a number of issues there that make that data incorrect," said Ted F. Brown, IRS assistant commissioner for criminal investigations.

Brown said problems with the TRAC data result in "conclusions that are misleading."

Brown said one problem is the study uses Justice Department computer records, which don't match IRS computer systems. An analysis of this Justice data might show regional disparities since the districts of U.S. Attorneys don't align with the 33 IRS districts nationwide, he said.

In addition, IRS criminal cases take several years to bring because of the complex analysis of financial records.

"We may invest a lot of time one year in the investigative stage so you don't have any prosecutions and convictions. And next year, they suddenly come out of the pipeline and the district jumps up," Brown said.

Honor Your Mom

What better way to honor your Mother on Mother's Day than by placing her on The Times-News "Mother's Honor Roll '98"?

Although we rarely express it, our Mothers maintain a special place in our hearts forever. After all, who else always loves you just the way you are? Take advantage of this great opportunity to tell Mom how much you appreciate her and how proud you are of her by showing her off to the world! We'll also include a FREE laminated copy of her picture. Submit your Mom's name and a photo (a good black & white glossy works best, but a sharp color print will work well) and up to 30 words of admiration along with a self-addressed stamped envelope (for photo return) by noon, May 6, 1997.

Photos may be dropped off at the Times-News offices at 132 3rd Street West in Twin Falls, or mail to Mother's Honor Roll '98, The Times-News, P.O. Box 548, Twin Falls, ID 83303-0548

In Burley you may drop the photo off or mail it to: The Times-News, 325 1/2 E. 5th No., Burley ID 83318

Sierra Club considers immigration plan

DALLAS (AP) — A major environmental group may take a stand against the migration patterns of humans.

The 550,000 U.S. members of the Sierra Club are being asked to vote on a proposal that favors trying to slow the flow of immigrants to the country. Supporters say overpopulation caused by immigration hurts the environment. Opponents say the measure is racist and xenophobic.

The proposal would require the 102-year-old environmental group to develop a policy advocating immigration restrictions and to lobby Congress on the idea. Member have until April 18 to return their ballots, which also provides an alternative that reaffirms a 1996 leadership decision to remain neutral on immigration policy. Results are expected later this month.

Rita Beving of the Dallas Sierra Club said she probably won't vote for the measure because "it's political suicide." But she doubted it was ever meant to be racist.

Garbage deal?

Poor town welcomes incinerator, but discovers it gets less in return

The Washington Post

ROBBINS, Ill. — The first meeting was nearly a decade ago, but Barry Neal remembers it vividly. When you are in the business of buying garbage — by the ton, no less — it is not every day that a town rolls out the red carpet.

The mayor of this Chicago suburb named Neal to act if the Pennsylvania company he worked for would consider building a mammoth garbage burner here. In return for cash, jobs and a few college scholarships, this desperately poor, all-black town of 7,000 people was more than willing to provide a home for a new incinerator. But, Robbins courted it. And when environmentalists and other nearby suburbs argued that the burner was unsafe and mounted a campaign to stop it, Robbins fought back. At a hearing six years ago, scores of supporters showed up wearing painters' caps that read: "Yes In My Back Yard."

As a result, Robbins, south of Chicago's heroic skyline, the Robbins Resource Recovery Facility opened a year ago. Its waste can crackle towers over an archipelago of aging communities "like the Washington monument of Chicago's south suburbs," says Rep. Jesse L. Jackson Jr., the town's congressional district includes Robbins.

But things have not gone as planned. Months before the plant opened, environmental groups provided Illinois lawmakers to repeal a generous tax subsidy for incinerators like it. Without that, the firm that owns the garbage burner, Foster Wheeler Corp., is unable to turn a profit and Robbins, in turn, has collected only a fraction of the money that town officials had been counting on as part of the deal.

As a result, the town is arguably worse off than before. The plant's location has strained further the uneasy relationship between Robbins and its more prosperous neighbors. Already barren of any real economic development, the town is saddled with a soaring, smoke-belching trash burner that shoots away commercial investment like a scarecrow guarding a cornfield.

"Nobody wants to be next to an incinerator," Jackson said. "It's not development. It's de-development."

This hamlet's futile efforts to salvage a future from other people's garbage offers lessons on environmental discrimination and the placement of disproportionate numbers of unwanted waste facilities, chemical plants and refineries in poor, minority communities. Complicated by history, contorted by racial suspicions, Robbins' struggle for solvency challenges past definitions of victimhood and capitalism.

"Everybody got in an uproar when we said we wanted to bring Foster Wheeler in here," said Robbins Mayor Irene Brodie, a soft-spoken but blunt woman who lobbied for the incinerator. "They said it was bad for the environment and all, but hmmm..."

She paused for a second, then continued resolutely. "Didn't nobody ever come out and protest the fact that we were

Tough times

Founded in 1917, Robbins, Ill. is the oldest all-black community in the North. Its first private airport was the first in the nation owned and managed by African Americans, but a widespread tipped the community in 1923. The town has been grandfathered into, according to the old-timers here. It is, according to U.S. Census Bureau figures, among the poorest suburbs in America.

Commercial development in Robbins consists mostly of run-down liquor stores that open as early as 6 a.m., men-and-poop convenience stores and the underground bazaar of pimps, prostitutes and drug dealers. The big employer here is a nursing home. It has 125 employees.

Between 1970 and 1990, Robbins lost a third of its population. The town collects roughly $270,000 annually in property taxes.

Over the years, Robbins Mayor Irene Brodie said, she and her predecessors have courted drug stores, grocers, shopping malls, banks and services. None came. Hoping to erect health care workers, the town built a medical clinic. The building was never occupied. Robbins tore it down.

Business interested in building homes or opening businesses, here have historically been discouraged from doing so by area politicians, according to economists, historians and elected officials. Area banks typically either refused to lend money for commercial projects in Robbins or redirected development to neighboring white communities such as Blue Island, Midlothian or Alsip, said Larry McCallister, a sociology professor and director of the South Metropolitan Leadership Center at Governors State University in Illinois.

poor? How come nobody ever protested that?

The paradox of Robbins' deferred dreams is this: Outside the plant's gates sit burned-out, abandoned clapboard houses with narrow front yards that are used as siting dumps by passers-by. Like the aftermath of a hellish parade, streams of trash, rubber tires, broken furniture and plastic bottles lie scattered only a few feet away from a state-of-the-art, $385 million-dollar waste disposal. The city cannot easily afford to clean up the mess.

Executives from Foster Wheeler left their 1988 meeting with Robbins' elected officials slightly stunned, but clearly intrigued by the possibilities.

Foster Wheeler officials did the math and calculated that a taxpayer subsidy could boost annual profits from a plant in Robbins to $23 million. A deal was struck. From its profits, Foster Wheeler would pay its host nearly $2 million annually in rent, doubling the town's yearly revenue.

But the proposal quickly hatched a force of organized campaign to keep the incinerator from ever opening in Robbins. Greenpeace and other environmental activists said that an incinerator burning 1,600 tons of refuse a day would release dangerous levels of mercury and other pollutants. Robbins' neighbors joined the protests, arguing that their homes and families were in harm's way.

Foster Wheeler used its deep pockets to buy billboard and newspaper ads, and the painters' caps worn by Robbins residents in support of the proposed facilities. Company executives assured residents that they planned to install the safest, state-of-the-art equipment available at the Robbins plant.

But rallies and public hearings were contentious, and attended at times by hundreds of supporters and opponents. Not everyone from Robbins endorsed the incinerator. Clergymen and others decried what they characterized as the exploitation of a destitute town, desperate for development of any kind.

Environmental activists failed to keep the incinerator from opening, but their campaign was two-pronged. With the help of fiscally conservative Democrats and Republicans in the Illinois legislature, they successfully lobbied for a repeal of the substantive taxpayer subsidy — nearly $360 million over 20 years — that made the conversion of trash to energy so appealing in the first place.

"It was a license to print money at taxpayer expense," said Jeff Tangel, an organizer of the anti-burner campaign. "Taxpayers were paying for their own poisoning."

The repeal, and the refusal of more than a dozen of Robbins' neighbors to send their refuse to the incinerator, is causing Foster Wheeler to lose roughly $1 million a month at its Robbins operation, according to the company. Because Robbins' rent payments from the incinerator are based on the incinerator's profitability, the town is scheduled to collect only about $400,000 of the nearly $2 million windfall it had expected.

Foster Wheeler has sued the state, arguing that because its plant was under construction when lawmakers repealed the tax incentive, the Robbins plant should have been "grandfathered" in. But company executives acknowledge that they cannot operate indefinitely a plant that is losing money.

Your Home Runs On Electricity. You Don't.

At home, there's more than just a roof over your head. You may have power lines overhead as well. So before you step out into the yard this spring, keep these safety tips from Idaho Power in mind:

First and foremost — look up! Know where the power lines are near your home. Keep ladders, kites, sticks, antennas and other objects away from them. Also, when trimming trees on your property, be especially careful near power lines. Do not touch overhead lines with tools or let cut limbs fall on them.

The bottom line — always look up to avoid power lines. If you don't, you could be seriously injured or even killed. Because it's your home that runs on electricity, not you.

 up to 250 bills in 44 state legislatures would remove limits on access to genetic information. Insurers lobbied Congress and legislators. Drug makers carded 20 reports to a Senate Health & CA's lab-panels-outside-Philadelphia to explain how the bills could hamper researchers developing drugs.

—32 percent of women asked to take part in a study on testing for the breast cancer gene declined. Most cited fear of discrimination and lost privacy.

So the Tuckers wait, and they're not alone. A National Institutes of Health study found that 32 percent of women asked to take part in a study on testing for the breast cancer gene declined. Most cited fear of discrimination and lost privacy.

Individual cases of genetic discrimination are hard to verify. Activists say most discrimination goes undetected because insurers can deny a policy or quibble its cost without saying why. But discrimination has a history.

In the 1970s, several insurers denied coverage to blacks who carried the gene for sickle cell anemia. The Lawrence Berkeley National Laboratory in California secretly tested workers for sickle cell trait and other genetic disorders from the 1960s through 1993; workers were told it was routine cholesterol screening. And a federal court ruled last year that the Defense Department could legally discharge two Marines who refused to give DNA samples, which the Pentagon said it uses in criminal cases and to identify soldiers' bodies.

Insurers say they need access to any information a policy holder has about risk. Otherwise, high-risk patients would have an incentive to buy more coverage without paying their fair share.

There can be little doubt that some people will game the system if those with genetic faults can keep this knowledge to themselves and still apply for insurance, Lincoln Benefit Life Co. vice president Thomas Ashley wrote in the trade publication National Underwriter.

The issue mostly affects the 13 million Americans who buy individual health care policies. The 150 million Americans insured at work have protections. A 1996 law bars insurers from considering a genetic predisposition as a "pre-existing condition" for anyone who buys through a group plan, unless the disease is active when the person signs up.

Twenty-four states restrict what insurers can do with genetic information, but those laws don't cover self-insured plans, which are governed exclusively by federal law. Fear of discrimination also appears to have stalled an expected boom in the genetic testing industry. Gaithersburg, Md.-based Oncomed Inc. last year processed 1,000 tests for genes linked to cancer, far fewer than when the company began genetic testing in 1995, said spokeswoman Leslie Alexander.

"The sad thing about the discrimination issue," she said, "is that the people who could potentially benefit from this information are afraid to take advantage of it."

Police

 It's not long before a police officer's "sixth sense" tells him the person is not being completely honest, he said.

Officers are left with conflicting stories and suspicions, they turn to technology to find the truth.

Since December 1997, Twin Falls police have used a lie stress analyzer to determine when someone is lying. The new system is faster, more accurate and more reliable than the polygraph test the department used before, detective Curtis Gambrel said.

The analyzer is computer software that uses a microphone to measure changes in witnesses' voices when they lie.

Results of the test can be interpreted immediately by one of the two trained officers at the Twin Falls Police Department, Gambrel said.

The speed and reliability of the voice stress analyzer gives police a powerful tool in finding the truth, Gambrel said.

The test is more reliable than a polygraph test and can be completed in one day because Twin Falls' own detectives give the tests, Gambrel said.

It can take six weeks to two months to schedule a polygraph examiner, Gambrel said.

Neither a polygraph nor voice stress analyzer was necessary in the Jerome kidnaping case.

investigation techniques to find out the couple was lying.

Ryan said the couple — Michael and Cynthia Grissom, now charged in connection with the death of Cynthia Grissom's infant son — wasn't too smart in making the kidnapping allegations.

"They were pretty foolish," he said. "They're going to bring a high-level investigation with that kind of story."

Racism

 They are intimidating because they are a group of idle young men, Fuentes said, but the threat to society is no different if they are English-speaking Anglo-Americans or Spanish-speaking Hispanics.

Trouble is, young Hispanic men stand out more than young white men in southern Idaho, Fuentes said. They get singled out by citizens in general and law officers in particular.

"It all comes down to selective enforcement and who gets ticked on," he said. "Feds go down to the courthouse on a Monday morning and see who got picked up over the weekend for running a stop sign or running a red light." Fuentes said the presumption of innocence doesn't always run as deep for Hispanics as it does for whites, agreed Twin Falls detective Alexander. "I see a Hispanic as a Hispanic," he said. "I think the legal system and the law enforcement system is quick to assume it."

Law officers say the justice system is blind to race.

"From a law enforcement point of view, we arrest white, black, Hispanic, all races," Twin Falls police detective Felix Garcia said. "It doesn't matter what you look like ... If you're breaking the law, you're going to get it."

Subtle prejudice

"It's hard for (Hispanics) to rise above the stereotypes," Barini-Garcia said. "But I know there's a whole population that gets up every morning, gets kids off to school, goes to work, pays their bills — and we don't hear much about them.

"But I know they're out there because I see them at church and at the supermarkets," Barini-Garcia said.

Loya, who grew up in Burley, routinely sat on the floor of her school bus because white students wouldn't let her sit among them. That kind of ostracism left its mark.

"I never let my kids ride buses until they were older — junior-high age," Loya said, "but things aren't as bad now as they were when I was little."

Overt bigotry is waning, Barini-Garcia agreed, warning. "If this were the 1950s, I would never be sitting here, a partner in a law firm."

Still, subtle acts of prejudice are never far away.

Loya was unusual at all for people in stores not to look me in the eye," Barini-Garcia said, "and the result is that I go back to the stores where the help is." And he is increasingly beset by juvenile crime — could learn a thing or two from Hispanic culture, say Fuentes and Barini-Garcia.

Throughout the Hispanic world, people often gather in their town square at night to stroll, chat and take an interest in community affairs. Everyone participates — from grandparents to teens to toddlers — and that has a direct effect on at-risk youth.

"(They) end up being chaperoned by everyone," Barini-Garcia said.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Country singer Loretta Lynn is warning women about the dangers of silicone breast implants.

"You women out there that have breast implants, it is dangerous. Have them jerked out," Lynn says in the April 21 issue of Country Weekly magazine.

The 63-year-old entertainer had her 25-year-old implants removed in January because of leaking silicone that had attached to nerve endings, her rib cage, backbone and tissue.

"It was a mess. It went all over," Lynn said. "Without surgery, I would have died."

Last week, Dow Corning Corp. entered private settlement negotiations with women who sued over silicone breast implants, sparking the company's bankruptcy filing. The company has offered $2 billion to settle 177,000 worldwide breast implant claims, but the women say it's not enough for the surgeries and illnesses they endured.

The Food and Drug Administration in 1992 restricted silicone gel implants to mastectomy patients in medical experiments. Saline-filled implants are still available for use in cosmetic and reconstructive surgery.

Lynn's hits include "I Wanna Be Free" and "Coal Miner's Daughter."

NEW YORK — Andrea Bocelli, the blind Italian opera singer whose album "Romanza" is an international chart topper, has already gotten more fame than he ever bargained for.

"If tomorrow the success goes away for me, it's not a problem," Bocelli says in the April 17 Entertainment Weekly. "I could read, because I love very much to read books. Before I had success I read a lot, and now I don't find the time."

A glaucoma sufferer since birth, the 39-year-old Bocelli went completely blind at age 12 after a head injury in a soccer game. Never bowing to the disability, he went on to study law at the University of Pisa.

"Law was not for me," he said. "Because I was thinking always about the singing."

His duet with British singer Sarah Brightman "Time to Say Goodbye" was a European hit in 1996, but his success in America came later, following a 1997 PBS concert "A Night in Tuscany," which launched "Romanza" into the CD sales stratosphere.

The singer trusts his luck over any passionless career plan. "I just sort of allow my life to unfold," he said. "I haven't planned it out this way. It's just happened to me."

NEW YORK — Jada Pinkett created a stir at the Golden Globe Awards by doing something women do all the time — at least outside Hollywood.

The newlywed bride of Will Smith stunned fans, family and friends with her introduction as Jada Smith.

"I did it for Will," she says in the May issue of InStyle magazine. "It was my own introduction to our married life. He didn't know I was doing it. He didn't go to the awards, so he saw it on TV."

Boston magazine headline ignites controversy

Los Angeles Times

BOSTON — The 17,000-word profile of Henry Louis Gates Jr. in this month's Boston magazine was harmless enough. But in a city where racial sensitivities run high, the headline on the story about this country's leading scholar of African American studies has set off a dispute about race and the use of language.

"Head Negro in Charge" is "part of the vernacular of black writers and journalists," suggested Boston magazine Editor Craig Unger, who liked the phrase so much that he placed it not only above five-line writer Cheryl Bernstein's story, but also on the magazine's April edition cover.

Within days of its appearance, Mayor Thomas Menino was asking the magazine to apologize. The Rev. Charles Smith, a prominent Boston minister and the Clinton administration's ambassador-designate to Tanzania, went further. Accompanied by delegates from the Massachusetts Urban League and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Smith demanded a meeting with Unger. But when he showed up at the magazine's headquarters, he was met by another well-known black minister: the Rev. Gene Rivers, who called out, "Why are we playing the race card today?" The encounter soon degenerated into a sidewalk shouting match. Local television crews were only too happy to capture the entire scene.

Gates, for his part, has issued an apologetic. Peter Glenshaw, his colleague at Harvard's W.E.B. DuBois Institute, said Gates was out of control, judging the Pulitzer Prize. Rev. Glenshaw did describe the entire fracas as "an embarrassment to the city."

Boston Globe columnist Eileen McNamara, herself a Pulitzer Prize winner, agreed. When Smith stood on the sidewalk "all best suggesting that Rivers is an Uncle Tom," and Rivers retaliated by urging Smith to hurry up and move to Tanzania, their much-publicized squabble "did more to damage the image of black leadership than any headline in a glossy magazine pitched to affluent, white suburbanites preoccupied with their kitchen renovations," McNamara wrote.

This is Archibald J. Motley Jr.'s 1929 painting entitled "Blues," which is part of an exhibit called "Rhapsodies in Black" that opened Saturday at Washington's Corcoran Gallery of Art. Chicago artist Motley, who died in 1981, has eight paintings in the show. In Paris he painted "Blues," an image of dancers, musicians and instruments reflecting French enthusiasm for "le jazz hot."

Harlem Renaissance retrospective opens

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Harlem Renaissance, the cultural explosion of jazz, dance, film, poetry and painting that swept the United States, western Europe and the Caribbean 75 years ago, is getting its first major retrospective in this country.

"Rhapsodies in Black," a bow to George Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue," opened Saturday at the Corcoran Gallery of Art. "It explores the Harlem Renaissance not as a phenomenon confined to a few square miles of Manhattan, but as an historical moment of global significance," says the foreword to the catalog, written by Susan Felperger Brades, director of the Corcoran, and Roger Malbert, senior curator of London's Hayward Gallery.

The show begins with two films from the 1920s. One, about a lynching, was made by black novelist-turned-filmmaker Oscar Micheaux. The other, by French director Jean Renoir, is a fantasy about a black grace traveler and a white woman, who expertly dances the Charleston.

Chicago artist Archibald J. Motley Jr., who died in 1981, has eight paintings in the show. In Paris, he painted the one called "Blues," picked for the cover of the catalog. Its tight image of dancers, musicians and instruments reflects French enthusiasm for "le jazz hot."

One of the most striking sculptures in the show is by Edna Manley, the late wife and mother of prime ministers in the Caribbean republic of Jamaica.

Manley, the late wife and mother of prime ministers in the Caribbean republic of Jamaica. The black unit was headed by John Houseman. One production was Orson Welles' landmark version of Shakespeare's "Macbeth," set in Haiti instead of Scotland, and performed with an all-black cast.

Henry Louis Gates Jr., a leader in black studies at Harvard, has also cited the "Black Arts Movement" of the 1960s and early 1970 as a new version of the Harlem Renaissance.

"Almost two decades later," he wrote in 1994, "black writers and artists, musicians, dancers and actors find themselves in an era of creativity unrivaled in American history."

Mountaintop land goes to Taos film festival winner

TAOS, N.M. (AP) — Studded with trees and dotted with elk hoof prints, it's not an ordinary film festival trophy.

Five acres of mountaintop land is the coveted prize at the Taos Talking Picture Festival. It has made the fledgling event singular among the nation's film festivals.

"Nobody else gives you part of the community," says Jeff Jackson, an independent filmmaker who came up with the idea and donated the land a few miles from Rio Grande Gorge.

Jackson owns the flattened top of Cerro Montoso, a remote promontory about 20 miles north-west of Taos. For the third year, a five-acre plot on the mountain will be awarded to the most innovative filmmaker at the festival.

"I don't think there's anything else like it," said Joshua Bryant, the festival's founding director. "The filmmakers find it absolutely thrilling." About 130 films and videos from 15 countries — including about 40 feature-length films — will be shown during next week's festival.

"There's a real good buzz and spirit here during the course of it," said Bryant, a veteran actor whose credits include "M.A.S.H." He has lived in Taos about a decade.

Long a haven for painters, writers and other artists, the town has embraced the film festival, Bryant said. "I think it fits this community. Film and video are art forms that include all other art forms," he said.

California democratic race remains wide open

Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — The race for California governor is wide open just seven weeks before the primary, with Democrats bunched in their closest nomination fight in a generation, according to a new Los Angeles Times Poll. Ronissemum Al Checchi topped the Democratic field among registered voters with 23 percent support, compared with 19 percent for U.S. Rep. Jane Harman and 13 percent for Lt. Gov. Gray Davis. Among the voters most likely to turn out for the June 2 primary, Harman was slightly ahead with 24 percent to Checchi's 22 percent and 13 percent for Davis.

Mary Doherty, left, walks with her daughters Emma and Amanda along the Falls Road in a Catholic neighborhood of Belfast Saturday. An agreement for peace in Northern Ireland was reached at the all-party talks at Stormont Castle in Belfast, Friday.

Key leader wins vote

Protestant divisions threaten peace accord

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — The leader of Northern Ireland's biggest political party on Saturday outmaneuvered rebels within his ranks who are trying to destroy the compromise peace accord he just reluctantly accepted. The executive committee of the Ulster Unionist Party — which represents half of Northern Ireland's pro-British Protestant members — voted 55-23 to support the historic agreement and their leader, David Trimble.

But outside Ulster Unionist headquarters, police held back Protestant hard-liners shouting "Traitor!" at the departing Trimble, who faces a less certain battle to win Protestant hearts and minds.

The agreement to end 30 years of violence was struck Friday among eight parties — including Trimble's bitter enemy, the IRA-allied Sinn Fein party. It would create a new local government for Northern Ireland, but require its members to cooperate with the predominantly Catholic rest of Ireland.

Other aspects of the agreement, such as a promise to parole several hundred Irish Republican Army prisoners within two years, have angered many Protestants. Trimble acknowledged the vote fell short of a clear-cut endorsement, but cleared the way for a more difficult vote next Saturday involving more than 700 members of the party's governing Ulster Unionist Council. He suggested the dissent was a healthy sign of democracy.

"We are not some Stalinist party," he said. "We allow people to express their views freely."

During the acrimonious five-hour meeting, Trimble took the audience through the 67-page agreement paragraph by paragraph, noting points that favored their shared aim of defending Northern Ireland's union with Britain. Trimble said he won the vote in part because of his argument that "to be effective as a party, we must remain united." Afterward, half of the party's 10 members in the British Parliament said they remained critical of the accord, which must be passed by a referendum in Northern Ireland on May 22.

Clinton promises support, prayers

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton, promising America's "aid, support, encouragement and prayers" for Northern Ireland, celebrated its historic peace pact as an Easter gift akin to Christ's triumph of life over death. The president's weekly radio address — broadcast Saturday but taped on Friday just hours after the peace agreement was announced — underscored his personal stake in the success of the U.S.-brokered accord to end 30 years of sectarian warfare.

"FEN-PHEN" REDUX DIET DRUG USERS

Officials estimate that 1.2 million to 4.7 million Americans used the prescription drugs fenfluramine ("fen-phen") and dexfenfluramine ("Redux"), which have been linked to heart valve damage. Preliminary evidence suggests that about 30 percent of those who used the drugs have heart valve abnormalities that can allow blood to flow back into one or both of the heart's pumping chambers. Damaged heart valves are susceptible to a potentially fatal infection, and serious valve damage can lead to heart failure.

If you or a family member took one of these drugs, experienced attorneys can help you learn more about your legal rights and, if appropriate, help you obtain compensation for any resulting injuries. We have represented victims in national and local lawsuits.

Relatives of victims of sectarian violence: The fight goes on

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — While a divided province digests news that it is to get its own government, Agnes Mulvenna laid flowers Saturday on the grave of her son James, an IRA member killed by British forces — and said his campaign for a united Ireland goes on.

"Look at all these graves, all young men — and heroes," said Mrs. Mulvenna, 69, gesturing across rows of gravestones in west Belfast's Milltown cemetery where many leaders of the struggle against British rule are buried. "We've suffered too much to give up now."

A cross town, Protestant Sandra Peacock came close to breaking down at the thought that under Friday's peace agreement, both Irish Republican Army killers and the pro-British gunmen who killed her husband in September, 1955 soon could be freed. Neither Protestant paramilitary groups nor the IRA have been required to give assurances that they will relinquish their arms.

"We have chosen the terrorists and I feel sick," said Mrs. Peacock, who cradled her prison officer husband, Jim, as he died. "It is just devastating and morally wrong. You cannot release convicted killers."

Leaders of eight political parties who thrashed out Friday's compromise deal that would give Northern Ireland its own 108-seat assembly and a new cross-border council face a tough task trying to sell it to their party workers and electors.

Those who regularly visit the graves of their loved ones lost in nearly 30 years of sectarian butchery are among the hardest to convince. More than 3,000 victims of the "troubles" are buried across the province, and many more have been injured in the cross fire.

Lord Tebbit, a former Conservative Party lawmaker and Cabinet member whose wife was paralyzed when the IRA bombed a Brighton hotel occupied by Tory leaders in 1984, said the agreement was "a considerable victory for the IRA."

"They have their command structure intact. They have their weapons and shortly they will regain those who are currently in prison," Tebbit said.

Every week for 23 years, Margaret Allsop has visited the windswept Milltown Cemetery where her brother Robert lies with James Mulvenna and other IRA "volunteers," including three gunned down by British forces in Gibraltar on March 6, 1988.

A member of the IRA's youth

Edward Street in Portadown, Northern Ireland, lays in ruins Feb. 24 after a massive car bomb exploded on Feb. 23. The Irish Republican Army has sidestepped responsibility for bombing. The IRA has fought to remove British influences from Northern Ireland. Politicians reached a comprehensive accord Friday on governing British-ruled Northern Ireland, heralding a new era of cooperation in a land torn by competing national allegiances and religions. This second losses British ties with Northern Ireland.

wing, 15-year-old Robert was shot by unidentified Protestant gunmen as he prepared to go to a disco near his home in the Catholic New Lodge neighborhood of west Belfast.

"I hope for peace, but that won't change how I feel about my brother's death," Ms. Allsop said. "Nothing is worth a life."

Mulvenna was killed by British soldiers at age 28 while he and two others were trying to blow up a post office in the Protestant Shankill area. His mother, also a frequent visitor to the cemetery, said she wants to read the agreement before making up her mind whether to support it.

Across town, in the predominantly Protestant Rosslawn Cemetery, the five Bickerstaff brothers tended the grave of their mother, who died a year ago of cancer.

They are Protestants, but can summon no sympathy for the Protestant gunmen who lie buried here, their graves covered in sectarian symbols and tributes such as "Murdered by the enemies of Ulster" and "Here lies a soldier."

"Pathetic — and for what?" said the eldest, Roy. "I can't understand those who use violence."

He agreed with Ms. Allsop that "only time will tell" if peace takes root here. The next generation offers hope.

Wife of war crime suspect denies he plans to give up

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Radovan Karadzic will never surrender to stand trial on war crimes charges and, if arrested, would implicate Western leaders in wars committed in Bosnia, his wife said in comments reported Saturday.

Ljiljana Zelen-Karadzic's comments followed increasing speculation that her husband, the No. 1 war crimes suspect in Bosnia — was caving in to Western pressure and negotiating terms of his surrender.

"He will never willingly surrender and will resist any arrest," she was quoted as telling SRNA, the Bosnian Serb news agency.

The Washington Post reported Saturday that Karadzic wanted assurance he could serve any prison term in an Orthodox Christian country before he would surrender to the U.N. war crimes tribunals in The Hague, Netherlands.

The newspaper said he was prepared to NATO twice in recent weeks to surrender to peacekeepers for extradition, but the transfers fell through at the last minute.

SRNA quoted Mrs. Zelen-Karadzic as warning foreign powers — a clear reference to the United States and other countries pushing to have Karadzic stand Radovan Karadzic's comments and their prominent personalities that would reflect badly on them, she was quoted as telling SRNA. She did not elaborate.

Like other state-run institutions, SRNA is split between Karadzic backers and those supporting the more moderate Bosnian Serb leadership that succeeded him.

The U.N. tribunal has indicted Karadzic on two counts of genocide, including charges that he is responsible for the deaths of thousands of non-Serbs during the 3 1/2-year Bosnian war that ended in 1995.

Mrs. Zelen-Karadzic did not divulge her husband's whereabouts — another point of speculation — with various rumors putting him in Russia, Montenegro, or the Bosnian highlands.

Government officials of 2 Koreas conclude 1st round of talks

BEIJING (AP) — North and South Korea held their first direct government talks in almost four years Saturday, with both sides saying they hoped to end the stalemate that has trapped the countries in Cold War antagonism.

After two hours of talks that South Korean officials described as "very sincere and friendly," the two sides agreed to resume meeting Sunday morning.

South Korea's top negotiator, Deputy Unification Minister Jeong Se-hyun, gave an upbeat assessment, saying North Korea appeared willing to work on thorny issues such as reuniting families divided by the animosity between the rival governments.

Overtures from the government of newly elected South Korean President Kim Dae-jung appeared to have encouraged the North to resume official talks that were suspended after the death of North Korean leader Kim Il Sung in 1994.

"North Korea is sending a positive signal to our new government's approach to the North. They are offering to have more cooperation," Jeong told reporters after the meeting.

At North Korea's request, South Korea offered to provide fertilizer as well as seeds and agricultural equipment to help build up North Korea's crumbling farm sector and stave off famine.

Human rights violations increase in Central Asia

ALMATY, Kazakhstan (AP) — They burst into the room in the middle of the night, faces hidden by masks, clubs gripped tight in their fists. The four intruders beat the sleeping man over the head. Then they turned to his screaming wife and hit her.

The attack left Pyotr Svoik, one of Kazakhstan's leading opposition politicians, with a concussion and the conviction that his country's leaders are growing increasingly nervous about his activism.

"They don't know what to do with us," Svoik said.

Human rights violations are on the rise across the five former Soviet republics of Central Asia, as rulers increase their powers and try to muffle any opposition. These leaders value stability over democracy, and they are banking on the assumption that citizens of the region do, too.

"For most, democracy is an empty word," said Nurbulat Masanov, a political scientist in Almaty.

It also could be described as a foreign concept in a region that over the centuries never had any experience with democracy. These days, the conqueror Tamurlane is a national hero once more in Uzbekistan, never mind his nasty habit of leaving mountains of skulls behind in the cities he captured in the 14th century.

In Kyrgyzstan, considered the most democratic country in the region, the government has used libel laws against journalists to stifle critical reporting and has filed criminal charges against opposition leaders and demonstrators.

Kazakhstan has clamped down on opposition demonstrations and reportedly has jailed, beaten and otherwise intimidated activists.

Uzbekistan, Turkmenistan and Tajikistan hold political prisoners, and some dissenters have disappeared in mysterious circumstances.

Kyrgyzstan's president, Askar Askayev, is the only Central Asian leader to be elected to a second term in a contested election. His counterparts in Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan and Kazakhstan had their terms extended by referendum until 2000 or later.

"These are highly controlled and highly authoritarian regimes that have dispensed with any sort of meaningful electoral process," said Erkki Daitley, a Central Asia expert at the New York-based group Human Rights Watch.

General Notice To Control Noxious Weeds

Notice is hereby given this 12th day of April, 1998, pursuant to State of Idaho Noxious Weed Law, Section 22-2401, Idaho Code, to every property owner in Twin Falls County. Noxious Weeds shall be controlled throughout the year and as often as necessary to prevent them from blooming and maturing to seed or spreading by root system or other means. Control methods may entail, but are not limited to, cutting, tillage, cropping, pasturing, or chemical treatment. Weed specific information can be supplied by Twin Falls County Weed Superintendent, Sheila Huizar, 734-9000.

If minimal or no attempt is made to control noxious weeds on your property, the County Weed Department may proceed pursuant to the law to have the weeds destroyed by necessary methods. The property owner will incur the expense or it shall constitute a lien and be entered as a tax against the land to be collected as other real estate taxes are collected.

Noxious Weeds Known to Infest Twin Falls County include:

Priests receive poisoned wine

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Police found at least two bottles of cyanide-laced wine sent to priests in Easter gift packages after a priest and a woman died, and warned Saturday that a Satanic cult might be behind the crimes.

The wine was sent to 12 churches in central Colombia by mail, along with chocolates and sweets.

"Satanic sects could be involved, or criminal elements that want to hurt the church," Gen. Luis Enrique Montenegro, head of Colombia's security police, told Radionet radio.

Mir cosmonauts discard old engine

MOSCOW (AP) — Russian cosmonauts tossed a spent thruster engine into space and examined a faulty valve Saturday during the first of three spacewalks designed to keep the aging space station running smoothly and pointing toward the sun.

The two cosmonauts spent more than six hours creeping along a 46-foot girder to the engine, detaching it, and shoving it away from the station.

The engine ran out of fuel during a spacewalk last week, forcing the cosmonauts to rush back to the station and switch on another engine that restored the Mir's orientation.

Russian space officials said they expect the spent thruster to remain in orbit for about a year before falling toward Earth and burning up in the atmosphere.

The thruster had been in operation since 1992. Orientation engines are not rechargeable and need to be replaced when fuel runs out.

Courtroom picture tells a tale of human tragedy

Look again at the picture of Cynthia Grissom. Photographed in court last week, clad in jailhouse scrubs, she is a person in anguish. A mother whose baby has died under suspicious circumstances, she stands charged as an accessory to murder.

She has admitted to seeing that she participated in hiding the child's body, because she feared an autopsy might show traces of methamphetamine, transmitted to the baby in Grissom's own breast milk.

Can you imagine a worse nightmare for any mother?

Much remains to be learned about the circumstances of Canaan Reiger Barnett's death, and about his mother, and about the life she shared with Michael Grissom, the man charged with inflicting Canaan's death.

Skill, the scraps of information that have come forth about Cynthia Grissom's life contain some striking lessons - lessons worth discussing with whomever young people may live in your town.

The most obvious lesson is the effect of drug abuse. The community has talked a great deal lately about methamphetamine, and especially about the harm it does to teenagers. But adults are not immune to its power.

We are told that Grissom, 34, jugged the drug into her arms while she was pregnant with Canaan, and that she continued doing so after he was born. People who have not experienced this would only guess at the power that drug could seduce a mother (not a nurse) to do, but a mother, again, experienced in child-rearing) to endanger her baby in this way.

Another lesson is the profound impact of crimes made lightly in youth. Cynthia Grissom was a teen-ager when her first child was born. We don't know the specific circumstances, but we know the pattern. Girls who begin families in their middle teens are less likely to complete their educations, more likely to be poor, and more vulnerable to abuse and victimhood of all kinds.

We are told that, long before her current troubles, Cynthia Grissom had complained that her husband had beaten her and one of her children; that she had obtained a protection order to keep him away, and that she eventually reconciled with him and let the charges against him drop.

All of that fits the pattern. Yet another lesson is how problems tend to multiply and to intermingle. Personal decisions about such things as sex and drugs are the raw material of today's welfare debate, and of family breakdowns, and of child-welfare problems. Most of these issues intersect in the person of Cynthia Grissom.

Whatever mistakes she may have made, Cynthia Grissom evokes sympathy from anyone whose own life is less than perfect.

Jerome mayor, council propose law enforcement policy changes

RALPH B. PETERS

After gathering information from lawyers, judges and local law enforcement officials, the mayor and City Council members of the city of Jerome feel there are several areas that need to be addressed and more effectively implemented by the Jerome Police Department.

The Jerome Police Department must recognize its obligation to help maintain a safe and secure community, acknowledging its contribution to our local quality of life with the highest professional standards as its primary aspiration. The chief of police is the administrative head of the police department and is responsible for planning, organizing and directing. Upon him rests the final responsibility for determining departmental policies. The chief is also fully responsible for the complete discharge of all duties imposed on him by state law, local ordinance or resolution of the Jerome City Council.

Employees on duty are expected to wear uniforms and other equipment in accordance with the established departmental policies. Except when acting under orders from proper authority, employees on duty shall maintain a neat, well-groomed appearance.

Employees of the Jerome Police Department shall conduct themselves at all times, both on and off duty, in such a manner as to reflect most favorably to the department and the city of Jerome.

Firearms will be drawn only in inspection or for use during training and in the performance of duty. Officers shall not display or brandish any firearm, whether in jest or otherwise in such a manner which could be construed as careless, threatening or dangerous. Officers of the Jerome Police Department will not discharge a firearm under any circumstance such as a warning or in a misdemeanor case.

No officer of the Jerome Police Department shall overlook a traffic violation committed in his or her presence. The public will be guided in their conduct by the enforcement of the traffic laws, especially when violations are committed in the presence of officers.

Officers must bear in mind that warnings to chronic violators do not deter them from their offenses or meet the purpose of traffic law enforcement.

Officers of the Jerome Police Department are encouraged to make use of written warnings to advise citizens of parking, animal, vehicle equipment, etc., violations that can be quickly remedied by notification of the problem.

Jerome Police Department officers' demeanor shall be courteous, but decisive in their interaction with the public. They must be positive of the identity of a violator and the elements of the violation. They must act decisively, while maintaining self-control at all times. We expect that our officers will be courteous in their behavior, language and tone of voice. They shall avoid a flippant attitude and language designed to belittle, ridicule or embarrass any members of the public.

Finally, a citing officer shall inform the alleged violator of the reason for stopping him or her and the contemplated action. The officer shall answer all proper questions, but shall not give unolicited explanations. In no case will the officer become involved in an argument over the alleged violation. Under normal conditions, a violator should not be detained for an extended period of time waiting for a warrant check return. After releasing the violator, the officer shall not follow the violator.

Ralph B. Peters is a Jerome City Council member and the city's police commissioner. This letter was delivered to the Jerome Police Department on Friday. A news story about the letter appears in today's local news section.

Is an entry fee legal?

The city sets a golden money pot in Shoshone Falls' rainbow, but is an entry fee legal? Why not charge an entry fee at all city parks? The city and county asked for and received considerable volunteer labor at Rock Creek Park. Is this entry fee a reasonable reward to volunteers?

How much money will Idaho Power Co. shell out in this escalating shell game as well as the Idaho Public Utilities Commission go along? Under the new Americans with Disabilities Act, will it be accepted practice to allow healthy hikers and bikers to freely enter the parks but demand fees from those with hearts, lungs and limbs that require transport?

If the city can't live with the terms of the free-access requirement in the original deed and lacks funds for park improvements, would it be better to deed this park to the state, which has much broader ability to fund this natural wonder?

These are all questions the "seven dwarfs" should find answers for before taking on the duties of the "old troll!" We see again the Rotary clubs (who can find no other way to raise funds) receive permission for another beer day at City Park. Last year, the Rotaries tried to use the Raymond tragedy as an excuse to raise funds in this manner. The Rotary ought to find a better area if it must stoop to this ethical and moral low to raise money.

It's a bit like saying, "Let us do evil so good may abound." None of the churches or church leaders in Twin Falls seem to object. Their silence is deafening, so keep the barrels rolling, very few seem to care.

Supermajority rule is unfair

Your April 1 editorial was a low point in our poor history of supporting education in the communities of the Magic Valley. As a newcomer to the Jerome School District, I read with interest the articles and letters which preceded the recent bond election. There were two letters opposed to the bond. Neither one of them criticized the proposed plan. Neither one of them denied the perceived need. Both spoke of the need to fund school buildings, other than through property taxes. Unfortunately, Idaho law provides administrators no other alternatives. I also did not see any article in your newspaper questioning either the need or the plan.

Now that the bond election has failed, you have chosen to blame the school leaders? You mention the "one-time approval" that I worked successfully for Wendell. As part of the community team that worked on that bond issue, I felt, as did the other team members, that we had to keep presenting the same concept over and over to convince the community that the need was real. On the other hand, I watched the Bull School District seek community input and change its plan three times over three elections, only to lose them all.

The truth of the matter is that you do have the right reason for the bond failure noted in your editorial, but you fail to recognize it for what it is. Thirty-eight percent of voters "don't like high taxes." Is that what you mean by "something approaching community consensus"?

I think the community consensus is pretty clear. More than 60 percent of the community favored the plan that the school leaders developed. Unfortunately, our Legislature and your editorial staff are unable to see the unfairness of allowing the minority to dictate what should be spent for educational opportunity for our state's children.

Given the reality behind this and many other bond failures in this state, I find it appalling that you should blame the school leaders. Jim Cobble is one of the most respected educational leaders in the Magic Valley. His contribution to the improvement of Jerome schools deserves far better from The Times-News.

Oh, and if you still don't understand the unfairness of the two-thirds majority, I suggest that next time you want to raise the price of your newspaper, you wait for two-thirds of your subscribers to approve the price raise before you put it into effect.

It shouldn't take money to visit falls

Once again, I am sorely amazed at the small-minded city planners who think by raising an entrance fee to a wonderful scenic resource by nature alone will help solve the falls' urban renewal projects they have spent time and money developing.

This community is growing; it will continue to grow whether or not some residents who care not for growth like it or not. My firm belief is that anyone should be able to see the falls or visit the area around the lake. I am open willing to concede that if you have children, there should be no charge, but that is as far as it will go.

I can tell the city planners this: Since they have begun charging to visit Shoshone Falls, I can count on one hand the number of times I have been there, and only to show visiting relatives a point of interest. We have gone into other areas of the state to enjoy the many other breathtaking views nature has to offer, and I can promise you there are no fees there.

Get your minds out of your wallets, city planners, and into your residents' interests for a change.

Money alone not the answer

A Jan. 18 commentary by Leon E. Smith Jr. states: "High turnover rate alarms Transportation Board." Mr. Smith is a member of the Idaho Transportation Board and is concerned about the high turnover of mostly engineering staff in the Transportation Department and recommends an increase in employee compensation. Another Times-News item Feb. 12 indicates the Legislature has approved a $1.1 million pay raise for state employees and also directed a follow-up $8 million or $9 million pay raise at a later undetermined date.

This raises a question. Have all Transportation Department employees earned this pay increase? I doubt it. I believe pay raises, in general, should be based on individual merit and performance. Our highways and other state roads represent the final results of their efforts on the job and, in my opinion, these roads show signs of poor design, inferior quality and low lifespan.

The lifespan of our roads and highways is only five to 10 years at best, and there is a $4.1 billion backlog of badly needed road improvements. Even worse, this backlog is rapidly rising to an estimated $6 billion by the year 2000. Should all Transportation Department employees be given a pay raise for doing such shoddy work? I don't think so.

I believe the Transportation Department engineers are very capable and could design and oversee construction of long-lifespan highways if given a fair chance and if adequate funds were available. In my opinion, the basic problem is not management and insufficient funds to design and build the highways properly. This could adversely affect the attitudes of the engineers because, without adequate funds, they would essentially be required to do inferior design work.

Even though the initial cost would be higher, let's let the Transportation Department engineers build our roads for the long haul. This would eventually save us millions of dollars.

I believe the blanket pay raise for all state employees does not achieve the desired results. Money alone does not solve all the problems. Job satisfaction is also extremely important regarding the high turnover rate mentioned by Mr. Smith.

I do believe the Transportation Department, and especially the director, have earned their recent pay raise unless they can prove they can build long-lifespan highways at a reasonable cost and without wasting limited highway funds.

Blue Lakes is dangerous

South Blue Lakes Boulevard is an accident waiting to happen. The next time you drive in from the south, just look at all the skid marks on the road as you come to the intersections of Orchard and Blue Lakes and 3600 North and Blue Lakes. The two reasons for this are the excessive speed of most drivers that are coming into town and the inconsiderate drivers that pull out into traffic to make a left-hand turn in front of cars and trucks that are doing at least 55 mph, not safely judging the distance they have to make that turn.

If you ever have to go through the Orchard intersecting during the rush hours, 6:30 to 8 a.m. and 3:30 to 5:30 p.m., you would see how unsafe one can feel. People are rushing to and from work.

thinking only of getting there and not gauging the speed of trash trucks and county trucks racing back to town. Believe me, they don't do 55 mph! They are the worst offenders of the speed limit, no matter what they tell their bosses.

They are not the only ones who speed. A lot of people who are hurrying back from Jackpot and the South Hills ignore the limit, too. A lot of big semi-trucks turn left from 3600 North onto Blue Lakes at a snail's pace. When you come off of the Low Line Canal speeding, it is a fast intersection that will come up on you. Most semi-truck drivers don't know it's a 55 mph highway that they are turning onto, much less that some people drive faster than the posted limit on the road.

My point is: Please slow down when approaching these intersections. Be considerate when entering onto the highway. How much time will you save by dashing across the road — two seconds? If the city and county would actually spend some time monitoring these two intersections and the speed on South Blue Lakes, they would see that there is a problem and an accident waiting to happen!

Ranchers don't back plan

The Blaine Ranchers Association does not support downzoning Blaine County's productive agricultural lands from A-20 to A-160. Moreover, we are disappointed that a hole now has been blown in the trust south county farmers and ranchers have endeavored to build, especially the many who have labored to create creative, win-win planning solutions aimed at saving both farmland and property rights and values.

The A-20 zoning may not be perfect. No one is more acutely aware of that fact than this organization. But it is a balance and a bargain struck more than 20 years ago with the implementation of one of the county's first zoning ordinances.

All zoning rules confer certain value on the lands at which they are targeted. The loss from A-20 to A-160 zoning is just too radical and amounts to near-total taking of value from one segment of the population, farmowners, at an unacceptably high level. It also removes crucial financial incentives for granting conservation-type easements, whether to The Nature Conservancy by landowners in the Silver Creek area — 9,000 acres so far and counting — or involving other organizations that can build on this legacy if given the chance.

Although downzoning has occurred elsewhere in Idaho, it is wrong for this time and this place. It is a betrayal of promises that have been made and understandings that have been reached. It is inflexible where flexibility is warranted and possible.

A transfer of development rights program may not be a golden bullet, but it is what is on the table right now. It is premature at this stage to declare TDRs unworkable. They have worked successfully elsewhere in the United States, and county residents have just begun to discuss the matter. If we in Blaine County work together, if there are shared goals, we can accomplish something worthwhile.

Today's youth may have outgrown suitability of high school teaching

Three great civilizations of American civilization in the 19th century were judicial review, the curvball and high school. The first two are still robust. However, the time is ripe for rethinking the third.

For various reasons, some rooted in American history and others reflecting recent developments, education has become, for the moment, the most salient social concern and therefore the most potent political issue. The world is less meaning than at any time since the 1920s. Social learning about fiscal, monetary and regulatory management has helped reduce the frequency and severity of business cycles. Demography (fewer young males), better polling and more prison cells have helped reduce crime.

As a result, public attention is concentrated, even more than usual, on the Jeffersonian faith in education as the crucial ingredient in personal independence and upward mobility. The focus of today's anxiety is the highest institution from which a majority of Americans — more than 75 percent — graduate. It is the sea of denim and hormones called high school.

America's education debates usually run in deep ruts. Liberals want more money spent on schools, although there is scant evidence of a positive correlation between increased financial inputs and increased cognitive outputs from schools — as currently constituted. More constructively but still inadequately, conservatives call for mechanisms to expand parental choice among schools as currently constituted.

Now comes Leon Botstein with a radical argument for abolishing the high school as we know it. He argues that puberty is not what it once was, therefore high schools should not be what they have been since taking their cur-

GEORGE F. WILL

This is particularly so in today's adolescent culture, where money — meaning shopping — and ease of travel facilitate the young person's "self-declaration of independence."

Thus "today's first-year college students have lived the external appearances of an adult life for many more years than their counterparts 50 years ago did." Therefore, "what we have traditionally associated with the intellectual awakening during the college years must now occur in the high school."

Age 18 is too old for the intellectual regimentation and social confinements of today's high school. As a result, teachers are demoralized by the demands of keeping order. And age 18 is too old for starting serious education.

It is too old to begin acquiring a love of reading, a level of comfort with mathematics and science, and good habits of concentration and memory.

Botstein believes that "linking learning to life in age-appropriate ways" requires "treating adolescents as young as 13 and 14 more the way we do college students and adults and less as children." Actually, he wants to abolish junior high and he wants students in high school — which he would end at 10th grade — treated better than college students often are, with classes including many seminars, that are smaller than those in grade school.

Botstein is a Roman candle of ideas about curriculum reform and other matters, but every one of them likely would strain the sclerotic educational system's capacity for adaptation. Still, the fact that the changes he proposes are probably impossible does not mean that his thinking is wrong, or that lesser reforms will be satisfactory.

No kitten: Cats are taking over

I got into all kinds of trouble two weeks ago for insulting bass fishermen, so for those of you who weren't truly offended by that, let me try again:

There are just too darned many cats in the Magic Valley.

You could look it up: According to Lifestyle Market Analyst 1997, a marketing publication that measures leisure-time preferences for newspapers, cat ownership is the eighth-most popular way to have fun in Twin Falls, ranking ahead of sewing and needlework.

Back in 1991, feline ownership wasn't even on the list. The combined category of pet ownership ranked 15th out of 56 categories, and only 34 percent of the households in the local market were owned by any kind of pet. Now, it's 38 percent for cats alone.

Kids scramble for Easter eggs

Children imagine Easter bunny's habits

By Jennifer Sandmann
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — It was a mad scramble Saturday morning at City Park when a siren signaled the start of the annual Easter egg hunt.

For more about Easter traditions visit The Times-News Online at <http://www.magicvalley.com> and click on NewsLinks.

Children ages 10 and under clutched Easter baskets of every variety — wicker, plastic or bunny-shaped cloth — and rushed to gather as many eggs as they could carry.

In about one minute everything was over.

But some children took time to imagine what the Easter bunny might be like.

Tony Sanchez, 6, explained that girl bunnies help the Easter bunny color so many eggs.

"I think he lives in a hole, like bunnies do," Sanchez said.

His friend Jacob Wheeler, 7, agreed that the Easter bunny must live in a hole. He said the bunny has chickens who lay eggs for Easter.

Christopher Riley, 9, imagined that the Easter bunny collects eggs all year from the chickens. The bunny flies on rocket boosters on Easter to deliver the eggs to so many children in one day.

"He flies around with a little fairy who has a magic stick," he said.

Eggs appear when the fairy waves her stick.

Christopher Riley's sisters Patricia, 8, and Erica, 5, giggled and joined in the speculation of how a bunny possibly could deliver all the Easter eggs.

Patricia Riley said the bunny drives a car with a huge Easter basket attached to the top.

The Easter bunny did have help the nearly 300 dozen eggs for the hunt in City Park.

Tyler Dixon clambers over a piece of playground equipment at City Park in Twin Falls Saturday in search of hidden Easter eggs. The Optimist club and the Twin Falls Parks and Recreation Department scattered 300 dozen hard-boiled eggs around the park for children to gather.

Local groceries donated 350 dozen or 4,200 eggs, the Depot Grill boiled them and residents at Heritage and Woodstone retirement centers colored them, said Dennis Bowyer, superintendent of Twin Falls' Parks and Recreation Department. The parks department and Twin Falls Optimist Club organize the egg hunt, said Bowyer, who is also an Optimist.

Between 50 and 60 dozen eggs were broken during preparation.

Optimist Ken Colner said the annual egg hunt at City Park is a longtime community tradition.

"I think when I was a kid we used to come out and do this," he said.

Organizers split the hunt into four areas for different age groups. Three golden eggs hidden in each area yielded a $2 bill for the lucky finder.

Bridgeview files plan to handle problems

Complaint leads to state investigation, discovery of deficiencies

By Pat Marcantonia
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — BridgeView Estates filed a plan with the state recently outlining how it will correct problems at its long-term care center.

The Twin Falls business has been running on provisional state license since early March which bans admissions to its 116-bed long-term operation. But the administrator says they plan to be in full compliance by next month if not before.

"BridgeView is happy to work with the state to quickly correct all of the deficiencies they perceived we need to do," Administrator David Farnes said.

The provisional license was issued Feb. 27 by the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare after problems were found by a state survey team, said John Hathaway, facilities standards division supervisor.

BridgeView, owned by Health Resources Inc. of Portland, filed its correction plan and reported it will be in compliance by May 18. The operation has hired a consultant as required to assist in the proposed remedies, Farnes said.

BridgeView Estates also planned to increase training and review existing policies and add new ones in response to several problems.

The next step is an unannounced survey by a state team. If the operation is in compliance, its regular license will be restored. However, the business can face fines if the "deficiencies" haven't been corrected, Hathaway said.

The problems occurred late last year and earlier this year, the state report said. The team conducted interviews of residents and staff, made observations and checked records.

Among the deficiencies cited by the state, BridgeView:

- Failed to thoroughly investigate causes of injuries, identify how to prevent them or determine if they were caused by abuse in seven of 21 sampled cases.
- Failed to develop comprehensive care plans related to managing pain, falls, injuries and other services in 11 of 21 sampled cases.
- Bridgeview states it has implemented a new pain management policy, among other corrections.
- Staff members failed to quickly respond to residents' "call lights" in two of eight sampled cases.
- Required the family or friends of residents to sign a statement personally guaranteeing payments, as part of the admission process. Regulations say an operation can only ask a person with legal access to the resident's income to sign a contract saying the income will be used for the payments without making the representative personally responsible.

BridgeView said its admission forms will be revised and replace older contracts for all residents.

- Failed to ensure resident grievances, mostly missing items, were resolved either formally or informally.
- BridgeView said it will begin to track the use of the grievance policy and log all grievances and actions taken to resolve them.
- Failed to protect against the possibility of food contamination.
- Failed to ensure in six of 21 sampled cases that impaired residents were not exposed to hazards, such as chemicals, higher water temperatures and torn equipment.
- Failed to provide adequate supervision or devices to residents to prevent accidents in five of 19 sampled cases.

Inadequate record keeping and training of staff members were other deficiencies, the state report said. In addition, five problem areas were repeats from a previous survey.

BridgeView has asked the state for an informal hearing for discussion and clarification of some parts of the report, Farnes said. He declined to say which ones.

BridgeView opened in 1992 and includes independent living apartments and an assisted living complex.

Kids, teachers give new math approach good reviews

Big Valley students advance according to levels of skill

By Jennifer Sandmann
Times-News writer

RUPERT — Class lines at Big Valley Elementary School become blurred during fourth- and fifth-grade morning math lessons.

The school began in January grouping third-through sixth-grade students by skill within their own grades for math class.

Last week Big Valley advanced its test by grouping fourth- and fifth-graders together by skill. It's a long-standing educational practice called multi-age learning. "Some fourth-graders already have started the fifth-grade math book, while some of their classmates haven't advanced as quickly.

The district in the fall embarked on a school improvement project. It explored "EPG" curriculum — named for ecology, future and global education — that groups students by skill rather than grade level. Big Valley used only that component of the EPG model.

than reading the Bible. That has to be the clearest sign so far that the apocalypse is upon us.

Look, I don't mean to be dogmatic, but felices are big trouble. If you doubt that, visit the "Treasures of King Tut" exhibit that's currently at the Magic Valley Mall.

There you will find that the ancient Egyptians were absolutely hair above care, estimating Burtons more than Omar Sharif, Boutrous Boutrous Ghali or even Sam Sham and the Pharos.

The Lord wasn't especially amused by that. See Reigns Over.

And I don't think it was so much that the Nile-dwellers treated Tabby like a demigod as they were so damnably oblivious about it.

They put cats on coins, pyramids, postcards, Big Gulp cups, key chains and lottery tickets — never pausing to spy or sneeze. Wasn't long before Cairo was hip-deep in cat-corn.

So it came as no surprise at all to Moses that when he went to the pharaoh and demanded that the Israelites be freed, the monarch tossed in a little god pro quo.

The road to Canaan is wide open. Big Mo' provided everybody takes a half dozen kittens along.

Moses was nobody's fool. Given the chance he would have included and wandered for 40 years in the desert, he opted for the scenic route. He never personally made it to the Promised Land, but then neither did the cats.

They found their way here, though. A dozen of 'em live on my street, much to the annoyance of our cranky Lhasa Apsos, whose name is Petunia.

She has issues with a tough-looking gray tomcat who lives across the street. Whenever our garage door is open, he speaks inside and uses the premises as kitty litter — in fact, he usually goes on the lawn mower bag.

Once the winner, Big Gray even captured a startling and consuming fire on the hood of the Toyota, leaving behind only feathers and paw prints on the wax job.

And last week, he elected to pitch two to a ladyfriend on our front porch at about 3 a.m. in the morning. Petunia pitched a fit.

She sneaked out of the backyard and caught the cat burglars out by the garbage cans. I'm sorry to report that Petunia lost two falls out of three, but she sustained the moral victory.

During the mele, one of the trash cans tipped over and the metal lid fell squarely on the tomcat's tail, scaring off at least 6 3/4 of his nine lives.

Catbert hasn't been back since, but I'm sure it's just a temporary reprieve. I swept out the garage last weekend and bought a new lawn mower bag.

Worse, I washed the Toyota.

Steve Crump, the Times-News features editor, reminds you that cats like box.

Who needs El Niño? Killer currents can strike any time

SANTA ANA, Calif. (AP) — Treacherous surf claimed at least six lives along the California coast even before summer got under way, but lifeguards struck off the notion that El Niño has whipped up some special new threat.

The real dangers for swimmers, surfers and even shoreline strollers remain close at hand, said lifeguard John Beebe of Huntington Beach. They include unpredictable waves, shifting currents and failure to stay alert.

"Surf conditions are always dangerous," said Beebe. "This isn't particularly bad season."

It has been a bad week for two teens at the beach in Huntington, Southern California's "Surf City" of song and board lore.

Divers and beach patrols searched Friday for Brandon Paul Bandas of Toluca Lake. The 19-year-old fell of the city pier Thursday night, said police Lt. Luis Ochoa. Investigators believe he may have leaned over the railing while clowning around with friends.

Nelson Nguyen, a 17-year-old from Riverside County, went under while boogie boarding Wednesday afternoon and didn't come up again. He was feared drowned.

"The ocean's very cold, about 58 degrees," Ochoa said. "And the waves have been pretty large most of the year, because of El Niño. I guess. We do have rips (currents) from time to time."

This winter's storms, combined to the Pacific warming trend known as El Niño, have sent mountains of earth down slopes and streams, flooding streets, cars, porches, appliances and waterfalls from brush on the beach.

Beach fatalities this year include a Utah college student caught in surf in advance in California Beach in south Orange County, Ventura Harbor Patrol Officer Paul Korber died trying to rescue three people from a rip current at South Jetty Beach.

A woman near Carmel and another at Seaside Bay were swept from shore by huge waves.

Last year, surfwatchers counted 250 rip current events and 20 drownings in California, a tragic but tiny percentage of the 115 million beach visitors in 1997. Of the deaths, only eight involved white flag-rated waters on day.

Experts recommend that less experienced swimmers venture no farther than shoulder depth and stay in front of ground waves. Swimmers caught in a rip current shouldn't fight it, but try to swim with it parallel to the shore until they escape the flow.

"I would say that any time, coast watchers say, it doesn't take a dramatic force like Pacific swells to sweep people off their feet."

"And if the ocean is constantly changing," said Beebe. "After big storms and really large sand, our bottom — almost entirely sand — is left with a rip current and a little bit changed."

These are the conditions can create underwaves and rip currents. There's no telling where or when.

Seismologist finds flaws in earthquake hazard estimates

BOISE (AP) — When the Lewis and Clark Expedition in 1805 crossed into what would become Idaho, it marked the beginning of written records about this part of the West.

But the nearly two centuries since are little more than the blink of an eye in geologic terms.

And there is far too little historical information about the dates and places where colossal earthquakes have hit to gauge whether future tremors will crumple buildings in the rapidly growing West, Boise State University seismologist James Zallweg said.

"We probably have a lot of active faults, but people have only been around here for 200 years to write down their experiences," he said. "It means we in the West, and in the East in some respects, have had a very small amount of experiencing the largest quakes, which may occur hundreds to thousands of years apart."

In fact, Zallweg believes the potential of all too many faults has been underestimated, raising questions about the adequacy of building codes and other modern anti-quake measures.

The "largest" two recorded quakes to shake Idaho were in 1929 centered at Helen Lake in the Yellowstone Region and in 1983 at Borah Peak in central Idaho's Lost River Range.

The Helen Lake quake killed 29 people and unleashed a landslide of 80 million tons of rock and debris. It packed a magnitude of 7.5.

The Borah Peak quake measured 7.3. It caused $12 million in damage and was felt hundreds of miles away. Two Challis children were killed by the crumbling facade of a 19th century building.

Seismologists inspect the geological features from prehistoric earthquakes to determine the potential strength of future events. But a strong tremor may not always produce much visible evidence on the surface, Zallweg said.

Scientists assume that the more miles of surface fault an earthquake creates, the greater its magnitude. In turn, that estimated magnitude is used to calculate how buildings and other structures like dams must be built to withstand future quakes.

The trouble is that erosion, human development or unseen subsurface activity can hide the miles of visible fault lines, or scarps, that are created as one block of the earth's crust rises or falls in relation to another.

In the Borah Peak quake, the block to the west of Idaho's highest mountain dropped 10 feet or more while the peak jumped 2 feet. The visible scarp runs about 20 miles across the mountain's foothills.

Some fault lines may be only a couple of miles long, suggesting a quake magnitude of 6 when the height of the scarp indicates a much more severe tremor.

After studying earthquakes worldwide, Zallweg recently proposed to seismologists meeting in Colorado a mathematical formula which takes the scarp height and divides it by the length of the fault. The result in many cases is a substantially greater — and potentially more deadly — quake magnitude than indicated by the old method.

Math

Students and teachers give it good reviews.

Fifth-grader Wendy Meiners, 11, said she likes working at her own pace better than waiting for her teacher to cover the same unit for everybody.

"I was getting bored with what she was teaching, because I already knew it," Meiners said.

Fourth-grader Vernon Newcomb, 9, who has started the fifth-grade math book, said he likes the new math lessons better.

"I think it makes the day go along faster," he said. Melody Wyosang, a fifth-grade teacher, likened the approach to letting go of a horse's reins. Students push themselves to improve. It becomes their responsibility to learn the material so they can advance.

"I have seen students further this year than I have ever taken them in 20 years," she said.

Assistant Principal Terry Garner said if the program is as successful as expected for the fourth and fifth grades, it will be used to teach math in all grades. Big Valley is considering using the same approach in its language arts classes and already does somewhat in reading.

One of the biggest drawbacks has been the amount of teacher time required to start it, Garner said. But a greater problem feared at Big Valley hasn't materialized.

"We were worried kids would be trapped into levels or groups, not being able to advance. We're not seeing that happen," he said.

Fourth-grader Silvio Reyes, 10, said he has more time to understand his math.

Jayne Jensen, a fourth-grade teacher, said teachers had expected students to advance to a new unit every two weeks. But many students have needed only one week.

Some students still are working on basic math skills and division skills, Jensen said. But these students would have had to advance with the rest of their class in the traditional setting whether they understood the concepts or not. Now they can remain at that level until they learn it. And when only a few students remain at a given level, it's easier to pinpoint what is holding them back.

Fourth-grade teacher Teresa White said students who don't advance after several weeks begin to ask to take practice sheets home or work at recess so they can learn a concept and move ahead.

One student who breezed through math lessons actually came to her saying she didn't understand how to subtract fractions, White said.

"We finally got her to the point of an understanding. We finally challenged her," she said.

Changes in the core half of the district are exploring the same type of project as Big Valley, Superintendent Nick Hallert said. West-side schools are experimenting with improvement differently, but he said he thinks the two district efforts likely will overlap.

Eventually, the district wants to have "strategic learning" occur at all grades. Hallert said it needs to be incorporated only in the basic skills subjects such as math and language arts.

Studies show student performance improves if students are placed at the appropriate skill level, Hallert said. Typically, math skills in a fifth-grade class range from second- to eighth-grade. Reading levels typically span from the second- to 10th-grade.

designed to belittle, ridicule or embarrass any members of the public."

Peters said some of the subjects covered in the letter came up during recent council meetings and during hearings with attorneys, judges and other officials.

The letter doesn't represent any policy changes, Councilman Joe Skaug said.

Peters "is just quoting the city manual" in the letter, Skaug said. "It's based on comments made to him at City Hall in the courthouse and on the street," Skaug said.

Police Chief Jim Dahl said he knew Peters was gathering information and comments about the department, but he wasn't told a letter would be released.

"I know that Ralph talked to a whole lot of people," Dahl said. "There's no specifics about anything (in the letter), so I don't know what it reflects."

Councilman Charles Correll said he didn't think the letter was prompted by any particular complaint or comment about the police department.

"Whenever comments or complaints come from news kept anonymous," Correll said. The letter ties in with a skill-unscheduled performance audit of the police department, Peters said.

City officials late last year decided an audit was needed in the wake of failed attempts to consolidate some of the police department's operations with the Jerome County Sheriff's Department. Controversy over then Mayor-elect Dennis Moore's decision not to re-appoint Dahl also prompted calls for an audit. Moore later reversed his decision.

Skaug said Peters' letter is timely, considering recent controversy over council officer Stan Conway. A number of citizens had complained that Conway was overpaid on his traffic enforcement.

"I would think it is to be hard practice and realistic, in light of the large amount of publicity our police department has gotten this year," Skaug said.

Peters also sent a copy to The Idaho News in the form of a letter to the editor. It appears on today's "Opinion" page.

Olivia Jaquay, shown in downtown Portland, Ore., says she finally feels like a woman in every sense of the word, except one — Jaquay is one surgery short of her transformation from a male to a female and she wants the state to cover the cost. On Friday, a committee will consider if sex-change operations should be covered under the state health plan serving low-income residents

Oregon considers paying for sex-change operations

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Her long legs crossed, Olivia Jaquay settles into a chair at a downtown coffeehouse, drawing an interested glance from a man in a business suit at the next table.

Brushing her hair back with fuchsia fingernails, she talks of her love of vintage clothing, a penchant for rubies and her pending nuptials to a man who truly understands her. At 42, she says she finally feels like a woman in every sense of the word. Except one.

Jaquay must have one last reconstructive surgery to make the transformation from a male to female, and she wants taxpayers to pay for it under the state's health insurance plan.

She contends she suffers from a gender identity disorder, and without the surgery would be left in a frustrating netherworld between the sexes. "I do not want to live in purgatory any more," Jaquay said. On April 17, Jaquay plans to testify before a state panel that will help decide if sex-change operations should be covered by the Oregon Health Plan.

Transsexualism is 688 on the list of 745 treatments and ailments. Only the top 574 are available to the 270,000 low income residents enrolled in the plan.

Oregon, which in February became the first to approve coverage for assisted suicide, would not be the first to fund sex changes. Minnesota has covered such surgeries since 1977, though lawmakers are considering a bill to put a stop to it.

The issue has polarized the medical community, which is split on whether sex-change surgery is elective or corrective. "It's a complex issue," said Dr. Kathleen Weaver, medical director of the Oregon Health Plan Policy and Research. "This is a real thing for these people. But there is also some concern that doing the surgery is not going to correct anything."

The surgery is not a cure-all. Some studies have shown high rates of depression and suicide following sex changes.

"It's like people thinking, 'if only my nose weren't so big,'" Weaver said. "After they have the surgery, they realize that isn't the whole answer."

But Jaquay said it saved her life. "If I had not had that surgery, I would be dead," said Jaquay, who has attempted to kill herself several times.

When she was turned down for coverage last fall, it came as a shock.

She had gone through years of hormone therapy paid for by her health maintenance organization. Officials of the HMO, who said they thought Jaquay was a woman, declined to pay for the sex-change operation.

So last October, Jaquay hooked her Monte Carlo, sold some jewelry and had a sex change anyway.

Jury rules against Idaho firm

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — A Kootenai County Jury has awarded nearly $2 million to a Canadian woman who claimed a local software manufacturer broke its contract and intentionally drove her out of business.

Jeanette Stremble of Fredrick, Ontario, had exclusive rights to distribute Advanced Relational Technology software in Canada.

The Idaho company manufactures home-designing software that was sold for $600 as "Chief Architect." But jurors found Advanced Relational Technology sold the same product under the name "3D Home" for $60 from 1993 to 1995 in violation of its distribution agreement with Stremble.

Her Spokane, Wash., attorney, Matthew Andersen, said the verdict that came last week after a three-week trial before 1st District Judge James Judd could set a precedent for the software industry.

"The issue was whether the two products were the same," Andersen said. "The computer industry has a practice of targeting a niche market with different price points for different market niches. Computer companies that are engaging in that practice should take a hard look at this case."

The judgment included more than $1 million for lost profits, $800,000 for damage to Stremble's reputation and $100,000 for other damages.

Andersen said the company's actions were aimed at putting Stremble out of business "after she made an enormous financial investment and worked without pay for three years."

Officials close forest to off-road vehicles

ST. ANTHONY (AP) — Targhee National Forest officials have ordered some of the eastern Idaho forest closed to motorized off-road use while they rework a travel plan.

The closure order leaves only 7 percent of the 1.8 million-acre forest open to off-road and off-trail use this summer — a significant decrease from last year when about 50 percent of the Targhee was open to motorized cross-country use.

However, the order does not mean the forest is closed.

"There is still good access to most of the forest," said Alan Silker, recreation director for the Targhee.

Impact statement on the Targhee travel plan is expected to be issued in July.

The decision to reduce off-road travel comes three months after Intermountain Region Forester Jack Troyer reversed a decision by Targhee National Forest Supervisor Jerry Reese to close 400 miles of forest roads.

Friends mourn loss of BSU student

Police continue hunt for assailant

BOISE (AP) — Friends at Kay Lynn Jackson's funeral looked for hope amid the distress over her killing.

Pastor Armond Taylor said Friday that the publicity surrounding her slaying on the Greenbelt last week has done more evangelical work than the quiet girl who attended the First Baptist Church ever could have.

"It drew the valley into discussion further than Kay or I could ever imagine," he said.

Jackson was raped, choked and fatally stabbed as she walked to church Sunday. A fisherman found her body. Police have no suspect in the case despite 700 calls from residents after a composite drawing was circulated.

A transient matching the description went to Jackson's funeral.

"A detective was there and talked to him," police spokesman Lt. Jim Tibbs said. "He was not the man we were looking for. He just felt bad for the family."

Taylor related a story about how Jackson, a night auditor for a downtown motel, was disappeared two weeks ago when she was not chosen in her hotel training program.

"I told her something serious was going to happen to her in the next few days," Taylor said. "God did the most wonderful thing — tragic as it is. He called her home."

Pilgrims trek to miracles church

CHIMAYO, N.M. (AP) — As thousands of pilgrims passed through these scenic New Mexican hills, their souls watched from his wheelchair, shaded by a massive mushroom.

Anita, four years older than the 30-year-old man, has watched the same scene every Good Friday for decades: people walking from all directions to see the 200-year-old adobe shrine known for its holy dirt and miracles.

As his grandson translates the old man's Spanish, Anita remembers some of the marvels he has seen living a block from the church in this northern New Mexican village.

"She says there was a lady from Nebraska many years ago who came with bad asthma. She came to holy dirt from the church with some water and drank it," says Arthur Munoz, 48. "The next year... she was cured."

Every Easter weekend, tens of thousands of pilgrims, many hoping for similar miracles, journey miles on crutches, wheelchairs or tired feet to El Santuario de Chimayo. The church is nestled among Chimayo's macrow, tree-lined lanes in a valley west of the unincorporated Sangre de Cristo Mountains.

Pilgrims may walk days without food or rest here. Some carry their wooden crosses on their backs.

Doriel Lucero, 64, marched alone during his 8-mile journey with a silk scarf depicting Our Lady of Guadalupe, draped across his back. He came from Chaparral where he does part work for the elderly.

"I walked for them — those who are too old or who can't walk themselves," Lucero said.

Bill Donnelly of Philadelphia carried a three-foot white wooden cross on his shoulders as he hiked 30 miles from Santa Fe.

"Just to see the young and old alike walking side by side, it's amazing," Donnelly said.

In honor of the sacrament, hundreds of people lined up with plastic bags and glass jars hoping to take home some of the holy dirt from a pile in the liner of a mass adjacent to the sanctuary.

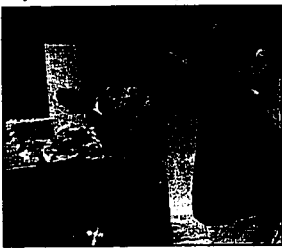

Many believe the dirt benefits. Left in the moon and catches insects of those who now walk and streams of rosaries from those who believe.

Community pastor Levit Chavez says he has witnessed many miracles while working in the church, including one he believes saved his mother.

Five years ago, doctors in Santa Fe told Chavez his mother would survive 30 days after she suffered a stroke. They said she needed around-the-clock care.

Five-year-old Rachel Rivera stands under a wooden cross following her family's pilgrimage to El Santuario de Chimayo, Friday, in Chimayo, N.M. Every Easter weekend, tens of thousands of faithful pilgrims journey for miles to the small 200-year-old church known for its holy dirt and miracles.

Nine-year-old Rosa Maria Lujan walks with her father, Bernard, during their pilgrimage to the Santuario de Chimayo on Friday in Chimayo, N.M.

"She didn't want to go to a nursing home. She insisted she go back and live next to the church in Chimayo," he recalled. "She has stayed alive ever since."

Chavez, whose great-grandfather helped build the church, has taken care of it for 25 years. Before him, his mother and father did the work.

He helps lead three to four truckloads of dirt from the hills of Chimayo to the Roman Catholic church every year to prepare for the event.

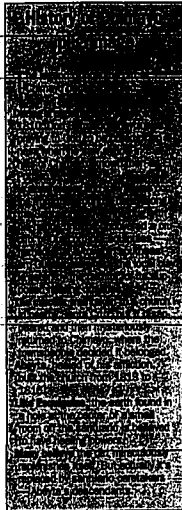

"Many people believe the dirt replenishes itself, but that's a misconception," he says. "We replenish it, and the priests bless it."

It's the faith, not the dirt, that brings the healing, Chavez says. But he believes miracles happen here.

Last year, three sisters came from Chicago to visit the church. One was deaf and mute and had been in a wheelchair for 25 years with arthritis, Chavez says.

"I was cleaning outside when one of them comes running out crying and yelling that her sister could talk and hear. Soon enough, that woman comes walking out of there on her own, two

Hundreds of photographs of babies, brothers and whole families are kept near the entrance to the church as a request for God to grant them health or safe passage to heaven or to perform a miracle.

Chavez hasn't experienced one directly, but his mother's miracle was more than enough evidence for him to keep his faith.

"I never think I deserve everything I have, yet I have this beautiful family. That's enough for me," he says. "My momma is still alive, and that smile she gives me everyday is worth a million dollars to me."

Commissioners OK raise for Fish and Game director

BOISE (AP) — Despite sportsmen's calls for his resignation, Idaho Department of Fish and Game Director Stephen Mealey has received a raise from the agency's commission.

The commission, meeting Friday at Fish and Game's Boise headquarters, approved a 3.7 percent raise, nearly $2,700, for Mealey for an overall performance during the past year rated as exceeding expectations.

Earlier in the week, the Region 1 Idaho Wildlife Council in the Panhandle and the Idaho State Bowhunters had called on the commissioners to replace Mealey, saying he has no credibility left.

They are disillusioned for several reasons, including Mealey mooting a piece of art last year at Lake Pend Oreille and a statement that he would not kill a trout bear or lion week's after sportsmen spent more than $500,000 to defuse an initiative in 1995 that would have outlawed some bear hunting practices.

They are also critical of his handling of a new elk management plan, the department's stance on an Air Force training range, the department's troubled efforts to raise money and a proposal to log part of the South Fork of the Salmon River.

The commission did not specifically address the letters from the groups. The 3.7 percent raise puts Mealey in the middle of the department's top pay on salary increases this year, said Commissioner Keith Carlson of Lewiston.

Commission settles on elk formula

BOISE (AP) — The Idaho Fish and Game Commission has settled on a formula for distributing the 1,600 elk hunting permits available in the Lolo Zone of northern Idaho this fall.

The formula divides game units 10 and 12 along the Lochsa River and North Fork of the Clearwater.

Commissioner Keith Carlson of Lewiston proposed giving hunters 246 of the 312 tags that will be available for nonresident rifle hunters pursuing bull elk. After that motion failed, Commissioner Nancy Hadley Hanson of Sandpoint proposed cutting the outfitter quota to 223 tags.

The seven-member panel finally decided on a compromise: allocating 236 tags for outfitters and 76 for others.

Under a sweeping change in elk hunting regulations that will be put in place this fall statewide, Idaho is split into 28 zones. Hunters will pick a single zone in which to hunt, such as the Lolo Zone, then pick between two types of tags.

Downtown residential hotel blaze claims 2 lives, injures 8

KAMPA (AP) — Two people were killed and eight were injured early Saturday morning by a fire in a low-rise residential hotel downtown.

About two dozen people were evacuated from the three-story Greystone Hotel to a temporary shelter at the police station. One half a block away while the Red Cross and Salvation Army worked to find them housing. Assistant Police Chief Alan Creech said.

Sheriff's were still trying to identify one of the victims, and Creech said the names would be withheld until relatives were named.

Firefighters got the alarm about 3 a.m. The Meridian and Star Fire departments were called in to assist local crews battling the blaze, which crews said did extensive damage to the hotel's interior before it was brought under control.

Eight people were treated for one of the older downtown buildings in the southwestern Idaho city of roughly 30,000 people about 20 miles west of Boise.

"But the building did have smoke detectors in it, and they did work," Creech said.

The Greystone Hotel, owned by local resident Ken Marrs, is one of the older downtown buildings in the southwestern Idaho city of roughly 30,000 people about 20 miles west of Boise.

"But the building did have smoke detectors in it, and they did work," Creech said.

TF down but not out in sweep

By Karen Baumert
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — When Twin Falls softball coach Ted Larsen looks down his depleted bench, there aren’t a whole lot of choices.

Fortunately, he doesn’t need many. The Bruins, playing with two of their top five batters out injured and their ace unable to pitch, swept Minico 5-1 and 7-2 Saturday in a Region III double-header.

Pitcher Mandi Edwards, who led Twin Falls to a third-place finish at state last year, did not take the mound but played shortstop for the injured Angela Turley. Turley and Laura Milam are both out with ankle injuries.

While the Bruins managed enough offensive power without Turley and Milam, they also had a strong showing on the mound without Edwards.

“We need (Edwards), but we need her more at the end of the year, at tournament time, than we do right now,” Larsen said. “We’re going to give her some time off to see if she can’t get back to her normal style. Fortunately, we’re blessed with three great pitchers.”

Kristen Heideman pitched the opener for the Bruins, giving up just one run on four hits and no walks. It was Heideman’s first appearance on the mound this season.

The first game ended up a pitchers’ dual. Minico’s Stacy Warburton gave up only two hits, walked eight and struck out four in the hour-long contest.

In the nightcap, Janet Campbell gave up five hits for two runs in a winning effort for Twin Falls.

Twin Falls 6, Minico 1

The Bruins took advantage of three Minico errors in the first two innings to jump out to a 2-0 lead.

“That hurt us,” said Minico coach Kelly Foscoen. “We chased a couple of runners. But still it was a close ball game after that too.”

The two teams battled through two scoreless innings before Twin Falls broke open the game in the fifth.

With one out, Bruin Sarah Jensen took first on a walk. She advanced to second on a stolen base. Emily Irish, the next batter, also walked. Both advanced

TF beats Meridian

TWIN FALLS — Twin Falls won two baseball games in two very different ways Saturday.

In Game 1, the Bruins beat the Meridian Warriors 4-1 behind a three-hit complete game by Chad Wilcox. In the nightcap, Twin Falls used an 11-run fifth inning to 10-run the Warriors, 15-5.

Twin Falls improved its record to 10-4.

Twin Falls 10, Meridian 4

Wilcox pitched the first seven-inning complete game of the year for the Bruins, striking out five with an assortment of off-speed pitches.

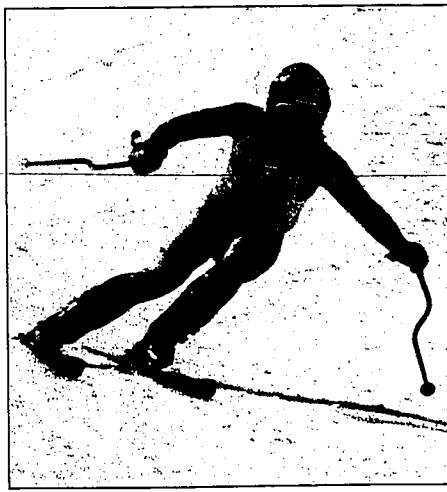

“Chad was large in the first game,” said Twin Falls coach Mike Federico. “He established himself and stepped up when we needed it. He had three pitches working for him and kept the hitters off balance.”

The Bruins jumped out to a 4-0 lead in the bottom of the fourth when they scored four runs on three hits. The big hit of the inning came from No. 9 hitter Scott Leavitt, who slugged a two-out double to the gap in left-center to drive in two runs.

Twin Falls used three Meridian errors to score two more runs in the third to go up 6-0. The Warriors committed five errors in all and never seriously threatened the Bruins, nor the wily Wilcox.

Local skiers do well against international set

By Julie Casey Lynn
Times-News correspondent

SUN VALLEY — Top US and International alpine ski racers competed for FIS (International Ski Federation) points this week during the 1998 Western Region Spring Series at Bald Mountain.

The series drew more than 200 men and women from nine countries. Racers competed in the super G, giant slalom and slalom. Besides squaring off for prized world cup gold, silver and bronze medals, competitors’ jockeyed for FIS points which could determine their seeding in world cup races next season.

Slalom

New Hampshire native Bode Miller clinched the third win of the series Saturday, edging Kentaro Minagawa, of Japan, in a rutted, difficult slalom race.

Sun Valley’s own Jeff Sarchett placed third. Miller won a giant slalom at the U.S. Nationals, and competed in the 1998 Winter Olympic Games in Nagano.

“After that I couldn’t have a bad season,” he said. So stacking up three more wins was just gravy on a great season for the 20-year-old.

In the women’s slalom race, soft rutted snow conditions left only 27 of 62 skiers standing after the first run. Jagora’s Rina Seki and Masumi Negi skied to gold and silver. U.S. Ski Team member April Mancuso racked up another medal performance with the bronze. Teammate Maggie Acker finished her racing season with a solid 15th place.

During Friday’s slalom race, Sun Valley was the host.

Couples leaves competition behind with 2-stroke lead

More Masters — C4

Couples had the lead at 6-under-par 210 going into the final round, but hovering a reachable five strokes behind were Woods and the 58-year-old Nicklaus.

And Nicklaus, the winner of six green Masters jackets, and the young man he predicted would win 10 times at Augusta National both sounded like they were only too ready for whatever today might bring.

Woods’ 65 in the third round last year, but the tournament away by giving him a nine-stroke lead going into the final round. Asked if he may have lost the Masters on Saturday this year with a mediocre 72 Woods said, “I haven’t lost anything. I’m right there, bud. I’m pretty confident.”

Nicklaus, playing in his 40th Masters, also felt that five strokes was not too many to pick up — even at his age. “I certainly wouldn’t count Tiger out,” Nicklaus said. “That’s the same score I have.”

The smile that covered Nicklaus’ face said it all.

“The competitor inside of me says I can still play and win,” Nicklaus said. “I have to think that way.”

Player after player moved into the red numbers in the third round, led by Couples, whose bold 3-0 from 204 yards on No. 13 for a near-gimme eagle

Twin Falls added two more in the bottom of the sixth and held on for the win.

"We hit a little better in the second game," Larsen said. "I was really pleased with our defense, though. Yesterday in two games against Borah we had 12 or 13 errors, and today we had two or three in both games combined."

In Game 2, the Bruins exploded in the fifth inning, which they entered trailing, 5-4. Twin Falls smacked six hits, including two home runs. The big hit came from pinch-hitter Joe Durham...

The big swing of the inning came from Durham. Hitting that two-strike pitch over the right fielders head broke it open for us," Federico said.

Robertson followed Durham's hit with a hard line to the gap in right center. He circled the bases for a dramatic inside-the-park home run when the relay man slightly bobbled the ball.

Robertson's shot drove in three more for the Bruins, putting them up 10-5. After Dillon Mayes was hit by a pitch, Blackwood rocked a ball off the center field fence to drive in another run. Ryan Jund ended the game moments later with a three-run blast over the center field fence.

In all, the Bruins sent 34 men to the plate in the bottom of the fifth, though the inning didn't last more than 20 minutes. Before the fifth, the Bruins had managed only two hits and appeared over-anxious at the plate.

"We were getting out of our plan at the plate (before the fifth)," Federico said. "And when we stuck to our plan, we're a pretty good team."

Kyle Parron, who pitched the fifth inning for the Bruins, was the pitcher of record.

Twin Falls has three regional games this week. The Bruins play one game at Burley on Tuesday and head to Pocatello for a doubleheader on Saturday.

Valley's own Jeff Sarchett raced to the gold. Sarchett finished more than a half a second ahead of Japan's Masami Kudo and Akira Saeki, who won the silver and bronze medals, respectively.

On Thursday, Spencer clinched another gold medal by a half-second over Japan's Minagawa. U.S. Ski Team's Kevin Stoll won the bronze medal.

In the women's giant slalom on Wednesday, American Aimee Mulken eked out a gold medal with the surprise victory over Slovakia's Jana Jagercikova. U.S. Ski Team member, Megan Ganong won the bronze medal.

On Thursday, Italy's Marika Fave took the gold medal from American Libby Ludlow by nearly half a second.

On Wednesday and Thursday, the giant slalom was the main event. Skiers raced under sunny skies. The colder snow conditions meant the course was hard packed.

Wednesday, U.S. Ski team member Dane Spencer took the gold medal with a 42-second lead over Japan's Kentaro Minagawa.

American Andrew J. Martin won the bronze medal. Local brothers Jeff and Robin Sarchett placed fifth and 13th, respectively, in a field of about 120 racers.

19 to 62: Golf's for all ages at Masters

Scott Hoch, of Orlando, Fla., reacts to missing a birdie putt on the eighth green during the third round of the 1988 Masters in Augusta, Ga., Saturday.

Tough Augusta dampens talk of course as obsolete

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — A year after being mauling by a Tiger, Augusta National Golf Club hit back, and its wedge shots slid into water hazards and wind gusts blew approaches off line, gone was the talk of poor, helpless Augusta. "The course is winning," said Fred Couples, who played in the final group Saturday. "Augusta National is doing what it's supposed to do. It's very tough. ... You just have to hang in there."

Masters at a glance

- AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — A quick look at the third round Saturday of the 53rd Masters, played on the 3,635-yard, par-72 Augusta National Golf Club (all times EDT):
- Leading: Fred Couples (71) at 6-under-par 210.
- Chasing: Mark O'Meara (69), Phil Mickelson (69) and Paul Azinger (69) at 6-2.
- Growing: Tiger Woods (72) and Jack Nicklaus (70) are at 215.
- Quits of the day: "I hope I'm not a mental midgut tomorrow," — Couples.
- Notes of the day: There were 12 rounds in the 60s, compared with four in the first two rounds combined.
- Shot of the day: Davis Love III holed a wedge from 125 yards for only the third eagle on No. 17 in Masters history.
- Prize money: $576,000 for the winner, up from $486,000 in 1997.
- Key statistical: Woods had not had a three-putt at Augusta National over the past 113 holes. He did it twice Saturday.
- Key package: Couples and O'Meara, 1:10 p.m.; Azinger and Mickelson, 1 p.m.; Woods and Ernie Els, 12:20 p.m.; Nicklaus and Per-Ulv Johansson, 12:10 p.m.

by Jack Nicklaus in the 1955 Masters and matched by Raymond Floyd in 1976. But what few people remember is that the year after Nicklaus' record-setting victory, he won the Masters again — with a total of par 283. The other factor the course's doubters forget is that last year's field scoring average of 74.3 strokes per round was the highest since 1989. Through two rounds this year, the average score was 75.4. On 13 out of 18 holes, the scoring average was higher this year than the historical average of 13 or 18 holes. With the winds only faint Saturday, Augusta appeared more player-friendly. But the putting greens were becoming progressively firmer and faster, always Augusta's last line of defense against low scoring. Nicklaus, a surprising 1-over through two rounds, said that without wind, Augusta would be susceptible to low scores. Phil Mickelson, who hadn't been born when Nicklaus shot 271, said Woods' performance proved, rather than undercut, Augusta's status.

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — Gary Player won his third Masters in 1973, the same year Matt Kuchar was born. Both Jack Nicklaus tried on the most recent of his six green jackets in 1966, Joel Kribbel was a third-grader.

There was generational overlap, but so many years had passed by a common sport, have come together on the final weekend of the Masters. "It just shows this game can be played at any age, and played very well," said Kribbel, a 21-year-old junior at Stanford. "Gary Player has been playing great. He showed he's still plenty. And I know, Matt and I were both capable of making the cut." Indeed, golf is an endeavor that can bridge a couple of generations gaps. Just look at these four players who made the cut at Augusta National. Player, the oldest man in Masters history to get past the second round at 62 years, 5 months, beating by seven months the record held by Sam Snead. Nicklaus, the six-time Masters winner who not only made the cut as a 59-year-old but was improbably in contention after a 2-under-par 70 on Saturday, putting him five shots behind leader Couples. Kuchar, a 19-year-old Georgia Tech sophomore who won the U.S. Amateur championship eight months ago and stood at even par after his first three rounds at Augusta National. Kribbel, runner-up to Kuchar in this country's not-for-guy Championship, now joining his young rival to give the Masters two amateurs on the weekend for the first time since 1959. "I never thought I'd be here at age 62," Player admitted. "This is supposed to be for the young, strong guys, the old, weak guys." Literally, there's room for both. Kuchar shot a 4-under-68 on Saturday, topping around the course with sort of a dramatic grin on his face. Please, nobody pinch him. "This is so unbelievably flattering," said his father, a teacher, then a doctor. The elder Tiger Woods-Elk hearing that had taken to his son as they headed into the hollow known as Amen Corner. "I don't know what he's doing, but I hope he keeps it up."

made a long putt at No. 18 to save par, then looked skyward and whispered "Thank you," while the gallery cascaded down the rolling hills and through the gently waffling pine trees. "If I can get the putter to continue going like it was on the back nine," he said, "I might give someone a bit of a run." Kribbel and Player were at the bottom of the scoreboard after their performances in the third round. Kribbel shot an adventurous 76 — six pars, six bogeys, five birdies and a triple bogey at No. 16 — and was noticeably upset with himself when he finished with a 10-over total of 226. "That was ugly," he said. "The conditions were very, very good for scoring. But my short game was absolutely horrendous." Then Kribbel pondered the alternative. After all, he was still firing away at Augusta National on the weekend, while players like Greg Norman and Nick Faldo were watching the tournament on television. Besides, Kribbel will have some great stories to tell when he arrives back at Stanford for a 10 a.m. economics class on Monday. "I'd rather be here playing bad," he said, "than not playing at all." Then there was Player, who shot his worst round of the tournament, a 6-over-78, even though conditions were much better for scoring Saturday. But the man in black didn't seem to mind a bit, doffing his hat to the crowd when he arrived at the 18th green. "I think this was sort of an anticlimax for me after making the cut," said Player, whose three-round total of 228 was the worst score among those still playing. "But I really enjoyed myself today. It was a thrill the way the people received me. Unbelievable." He gazed on the rolling expanse of slick, green grass, knowing he would be back for another round of golf today. Please, nobody pinch him. "If they have a golf course like this in heaven, I want to be the head pro," Player said. "But I'm not ready to tee off there just yet."

The only thing missing is a soundtrack

COMMENTARY Jim Litke

AUGUSTA, Ga. — A college sophomore is a half-dozen strokes off the lead at the Masters. His dad sees his golf bag tagged August National, scratching his grandfather once dreamed of doing. The kid smiles like Tom Cruise did at 18. The only thing missing is a soundtrack. But maybe not far long. At the race Matt Kuchar is gobbling up audience share, he could be the host of his own TV show by Monday. How does "Matt Kuchar on Golf" sound? Or "Matt Kuchar Ranks the PGA's Top Buffs?" Depending on how the rest of his week goes, Kuchar could do either. Or both. He already has testimonials to that effect. "I'm impressed with his golf game," veteran pro Davis Love III said, "and by how much he can't."

He got more natural charisma than I ever dreamed about having," his dad said. When he started school at nearby Georgia Tech two years ago, he was cramming to bench press 125 pounds. Now he does 240 with ease. It is a big reason why he won the U.S. Amateur last summer, which in turn is how he got a Masters invitation in the mail. It is also why he is at even par, the first amateur in contention on the final day in more than a dozen years. "Weights have added 40 yards to his game. He hit wedge where he used to hit 7-iron and 7-iron where he used to hit 4," said Georgia Tech coach Bruce Heppner. As reigning U.S. Amateur champ, the kid also gets invitations to the U.S. Open, the British Open and a handful of PGA stops. A few weeks ago at the tour stop at Bay Hill, he wandered into the luncheon and couldn't believe his eyes. "They have the most wonderful buffet you can imagine," he said. "So I had to take advantage of that." Someone asked whether that meant seconds or thirds. "Something like that," Kuchar said. And then he grinned. Jim Litke is a sports columnist for the Associated Press.

Azinger comes back from depths

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — After Paul Azinger battled cancer, those twisting 5-foot putts no longer seemed quite as important — and it showed. On Saturday, for the first time since he won the PGA Championship in 1993, Azinger played himself into contention in a major, firing a 3-under 69 for a three-round total of 4-under, two shots behind Masters leader Fred Couples. Azinger looked intense and felt nervous, and that, he said, was a good sign for his golf game. For too long after undergoing treatment for lymphoma in his right shoulder blade, he found it difficult to get worked up over a round of golf. Now things are changing. "In a sense, agonizing over a missed 5-footer had been one of life's little pleasures for Azinger. Following an excellent start that could have been several strokes lower but for some missed putts, Azinger said it felt good to care again about so small a matter as draining a short one for par.

Masters

Confused from CI? Heed these 1998 Masters winner's word to a 71 to be at 6-under-par 210, two strokes ahead of Phil Mickelson, Paul Azinger and Mark O'Meara. "I've made a few mistakes, but I started the day tied for the lead with David Dornal. Now I'm two ahead of whoever," Couples said. "There are a lot more guys in the lead. I can't get out and maybe shoot the same score I did today and win." Indeed, a bunch of big names were within five strokes, well within scoring distance, including Ernie Els, Colin Montgomerie and Jose Maria Olazábal along with Woods and Nicklaus. "I hope I shoot low," Couples said. "I hope I'm not a mental midgut tomorrow."

His erratic iron play finally caught up with him. He missed half the greens in the first two rounds and lived by his putter. The magic with the blade finally came. Suddenly all those warring pars were not finding the cup. His streak of 113 consecutive holes at Augusta National without a three-putt, green ended on the very first hole. He was four over par through the first six holes — including a double bogey — but rallied with booming chasers that echoed over the hills and through the brilliant saffers and magnolias. But nothing was as electric as when Nicklaus made consecutive birdies on Nos. 15 and 16 and his name appeared on the leaderboard. Nicklaus walked to the 18th green with his hat off, acknowledging a wild ovation reminiscent of the one a 54-year-old Ben Hogan got on Saturday in 1967 when he shot a 30 on the back nine and a 86 in the last round by one of the greatest golfers ever. Nicklaus rolled in a 25-foot putt to make par on the final hole, using the ball in with a pumped fist and then raising his eyes to the heavens as the massive gallery again roared its approval — and perhaps disbelief. "I had to thank the man upstairs for that one," Nicklaus said. "If it had missed the hole it would still be rolling." His third round 70 put Nicklaus at 215, tied with Woods. "I was in sort of the same at 145. I was in back in '86 on the 15th hole for an eagle and shot a 67 to get back to even par 216." "The conditions were there to score today," he said. With all the talk about Els, Mickelson, Furyk and Woods, the best of the talented group of under-30 players in the Masters on Saturday might have been a 19-year-old. Matt Kuchar, the U.S. Amateur champion from Georgia Tech, made birdies on four of the first seven holes and shot a 68 to even par on today's final round at even par.

As for Couples, he was among the best players in the world when he picked up his green jacket here in 1992 and he still plays on that level when a sore back doesn't flare up.

Coulthard grabs southern pole slot

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Michael Schumacher and Formula 1's Michael Schumacher filled the front row for the Argentine Grand Prix Saturday, making the pole position for the McLaren team the pole position for the season's first two races.

Coulthard's pole for the final minutes of qualifying to secure the position for today's race with his fastest lap of 1 minute, 25.950 seconds around the 2.630-mile Oscar Alfredo Gálvez circuit.

The Scot was .239 seconds faster than two-time world champion Schumacher, who will occupy the No. 2 position. The German's fastest lap was 1:26.189.

Coulthard's Finnish teammate, Mika Hakkinen, posted a first lap of 1:26.572 for third. Formula 1's Eddie Irvine of Ireland was fourth at 1:26.730 and Ralf Schumacher of the Jordan team was fifth at 1:26.827.

Coulthard, who was second on the grid in Australia and Brazil, was eighth.

"This is an excellent start and I can hold on to it (the lead) Sunday," he said. "It is a much closer result than in the last two races, but we still have a small advantage."

However, he surprised of the "bumpy and tricky" circuit which caused several cars to slide into the grass pits.

Schumacher criticized his performance in "the car's setup and to Goodyear's new wider front tire."

"Being between the two Mika's and not far behind the pole is like a miracle," Schumacher said. "I feel that maybe now we can go where we want to go."

Schumacher often has said that Ferrari would catch up with the McLaren, to which Hakkinen has responded. "They will get closer, but never catch up. That would be a miracle."

"I am not very pleased," Hakkinen said after Saturday's qualifying. "Not one lap went the way I wanted. Being third is not what I was looking for, but I am extremely happy for David, who got the pole position."

"I had some problems coming out of corners and made a couple of driving mistakes, but overall I am very confident with our chances for tomorrow (today)."

Defending champion Jacques Villeneuve, who qualified seventh in a Williams, said: "We just have to get the car working a little better to be more competitive. At least we seemed to have solved the oversteering we had all season, but now we have some understeer."

His teammate, Heinz-Harald Frentzen, who qualified sixth, "I am disappointed with my position on the grid. The tests in Barcelona went well and I expected at least a second row result. We made a step forward with the new Goodyears, yet other teams with them appeared to have made even bigger improvements."

Byron Black of Zimbabwe returns the ball to Canadian Sebastian Larreau during their Salem Open semifinals match at Hong Kong's Victoria Park Saturday. Black beat Larreau 6-7 (4-7), 7-5, 7-6 (4-7).

Carlsen and Black advance to Salem final

HONG KONG (AP) — Kenneth Carlsen of Denmark upset third seed Thomas Johansson of Sweden 6-2, 6-2 Saturday to advance to the final of the Salem Open against Zimbabwe's Byron Black.

Black saved a match point in the second set and rallied to beat Canadian Sebastian Larreau 6-7 (5-7), 7-5, 7-6 (4-7).

Carlsen, the No. 8 seed, was the only seeded player to survive into the championship match.

This Salem Open is the first of a limited number of ATP tournaments in which players were allowed to receive on-court coaching.

Carlsen said he did not need his coach to come on court because "I was playing well."

"I did not make many mistakes," he said.

Black saved a match point in the 10th game in the second set, broke the Canadian in the next game, and went on to win the set.

Black was leading 5-2 in the third set when Larreau stormed back to take it to another break, which the Zimbabwean won 7-4.

Defending champion Michael Chang was ousted in the first round.

Muxter, Berasategui win Estoril semifinals

ESTORIL, Portugal — Thomas Muster of Austria struggled Saturday to beat Karim Alami of Morocco 3-6, 6-2, 6-4 in the semifinals of the Estoril Open.

Muster's opponent in the title match will be third-seeded Alberto Berasategui, who breezed past Spaniard Carlos Moyá 6-1, 6-1.

Unseeded Alami, who eliminated the No. 1 and seventh seeds, came out aggressively to beat the sixth-seeded Muster in the opening set.

But Muster, a clay-court specialist, who won this tournament in 1993 and 1996, was able to gain the advantage when Alami seemed to lose his nerve and played a more cautious game in the last two sets.

Rafter, Tillsstrom reach Gold Flake final

MADRAS, India — Top-seeded Patrick Rafter of Australia and defending champion Mikael Tillstrom of Sweden scored straight-set victories Saturday to advance to the final of the Gold Flake Open.

Rafter, the U.S. Open champion, beat India's Leander Paes 6-3, 7-6 (7-5), while the fifth-seeded Tillstrom upset No. 2 Todd Woodbridge of Australia 6-2, 6-2.

After losing the first set rather tamely, Paes tried to make a match of the second, but he was let down by his inconsistency.

Woodbridge committed too many errors and looked helpless as Tillstrom pounded forehand balls that prey much upon his frail ball.

Former starting quarterback Tim Alexander has been named to wide receiver.

Alexander started every game at quarterback last year but agreed to the switch so he would not have to take a year off.

Pierce, Martinez progress in Amelia Island final

Pierce's Mary Pierce celebrates her 4-6, 6-3, 6-3 victory over the world's top-ranked Lindsay Davenport Saturday at the Bausch & Lomb Championships at Amelia Island, Fla. Pierce will meet Spain's Conchita Martinez in today's final.

AMELIA ISLAND, Fla. (AP) — One thing is missing from Mary Pierce's impressive three-year run through the Bausch & Lomb Championships — a first-place finish.

Runnerup in the $450,000 clay-court event the past two springs, Pierce will get another shot at the elusive title after upsetting defending champion Lindsay Davenport 4-6, 6-3, 6-3 in Saturday's semifinals.

After losing to Irina Spirlea in 1996 and dropping last year's final to Davenport, who's ranked second in the world, the sixth-ranked Pierce vowed to return to Amelia Island and finally win the crown.

She'll face ninth-ranked Conchita Martinez, a 6-4, 6-0 winner over fourth-ranked Amanda Coetzer, with today's winner earning $79,000.

Asked what she needs to do differently to leave with the title this time, the 1995 Australian Open champion said, "Nothing."

"Win, hopefully," she said. "The last two years, I've just had tough opponents."

Pierce won the first three games of the second set to take control against Davenport, who admitted to becoming too passive when her opponent began to dictate the pace.

And when the top seed tried to fight back, Pierce had all the answers — broke the defending champion for a 4-3 lead in the second set before saving four break points in the ninth game that to even the match.

"Obviously it's disappointing," Davenport said. "I was playing well coming into today, Mary and I play similar-style games, and she played it better today."

Pierce beat Davenport for the first time in three career meetings on clay and ended a four-match losing streak to her overall, dating to the 1994 Federation Cup. Her only victory in five previous matches came in the 1993 Australian Open.

"She's really a tough opponent for me. She has the kind of game that I dislike playing against," Pierce, the fourth seed, said.

"I don't feel in total control (against her). I don't feel dominated either. But when I don't feel like I'm in control of the points I used to tend to panic a little bit, and not know what to do. I think the key to going up against somebody like Lindsay is to just go out there with a game plan and stick to it."

Davenport was not as aggressive as she was in attacking Anna Kournikova in Friday's quarterfinals. Another factor was Pierce's ability to play her best on the most important points.

"I thought she might make a few errors. I think she made a lot less than the previous matches against me," Davenport said.

"I didn't convert many of the break points I had, especially in the second set and a couple in the third. A couple of times she hit some great shots, and maybe I needed to take a few more risks and just go for it."

Despite the disparity between their rankings, the result of the Martinez-Coetzer semifinal was not a big surprise.

Martinez, the sixth seed, is 12-1 lifetime against Coetzer, who was the No. 2 seed. Eleven of those victories have come in straight sets.

"It seems like I have the same match against her every time," said Coetzer, last week's winner at Hilton Head, S.C. "The history, I think, has been printed in my mind and I run out of answers to what I can do out there."

McEnroe and Borg in seniors' Qatar final

DOHA, Qatar — More than a decade after they ruled tennis, John McEnroe and Bjorn Borg meet another final, this one at the $500,000 ATP Senior Tour of Champions event.

Borg booked his spot with a 6-4, 1-6, 10-6 victory Saturday over fellow Swede Anders Jarryd.

McEnroe, by contrast, cruised to a 6-1, 6-4 victory over French Davis Cup captain Yannick Noah.

With Wilson's help, Southern Utah won two American West Conference championships, and in 1994 led the NCAA in 3-point shooting percentage.

A native of New York City, Wilson joined Southern Utah in 1992 as a part-time coach. He arrived in Cedar City after working as an assistant to Alaska High School coaching legend Chuck White at Anchorage East High School.

Wilson played at Trenton Junior College in Missouri and William Jewell College in Kansas City.

Doug Oliver completes basketball coaching staff

POCATELLO (AP) — Former Southern Utah University assistant coach Doug Oliver has been hired to complete new head basketball coach Doug Oliver's staff at Idaho State University.

Oliver is a longtime Stanford assistant who was hired last month to succeed Herb Williams, who left under fire. He announced Friday that Wilson would join him and Jay McMillin on the Bengals' bench.

Wilson spent the last six years at Southern Utah, responsible for defensive coordination, individual skill development, scouting, academic monitoring and recruiting.

Jockey Alex Solis (5) raises his whip aboard Victory Gallop after crossing the finish line ahead of Hanuman Highway, right, with jockey David Flores, and Favorite Trick with Pat Day up, Saturday. Solis and Victory Gallop take the $500,000 pot at Arkansas Derby at Oaklawn Park in Hot Springs, Ark.

Halory Hunter passes Lil's Lad by 2 1/2 lengths in Blue Grass

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — The Kentucky Wildcats gave Rick Pitino a national college basketball championship and now a chestnut colt named Halory Hunter has given him a shot at the Kentucky Derby.

Halory Hunter took the lead from Lil's Lad in the upper stretch and won the Blue Grass Stakes by 2 1/2 lengths on Saturday at Keeneland. The victory put Halory Hunter solidly into the Derby picture and he could even be the favorite for the famed race May 2, especially in light of horse of the year Favorite Trick's first defeat in 10 races in the Arkansas Derby at Oaklawn Park.

"The coach is absolutely ecstatic," said Rick Avare, one of three members of Celtic Pride Stable, managed by Pitino, now coach of the Boston Celtics. Celtic Pride Stable owns 66 percent of the colt.

Pitino watched the race from the turf club at Suffolk Downs outside Boston. "He wouldn't have missed it," Avare said. "He had all the confidence in the world in (trainer) Nick (Zito) and the horse."

Pitino, reached in Boston, said, "Nick told me this horse loves Kentucky and I think he'll upset Lil's Lad."

Halory Hunter was purchased for $130,000 in a 2-year-old training sale in 1997 at Keeneland. "I keep saying it was like deja vu," said Zito, who won the 1991 Blue Grass with Strike the Gold, who went on to give the trainer the first of his two Derby victories.

The race, on paper, looked like a sure thing for front-running Lil's Lad, who was the only speed in the race. But jockey Gary Stevens rode a brilliant race, keeping Halory Hunter on the rail for most of the 1-1/8 miles.

"What can I say about Gary Stevens?" Zito said. "It's self-explanatory. He's the best rider in the world."

Two weeks ago, Stevens won the $4 million Dubai World Cup with Silver Charm. Last Saturday, he won the Santa Anita Derby with Indian Charlie. For good measure, he also won the Commonwealth Breeders Cup, the race preceding the Blue Grass, on Saturday.

Stevens said he hasn't committed to ride a horse in the Derby and would talk to Zito and Bob Baffert, trainer of Indian Charlie, over the weekend and would make a decision as soon as possible.

Favorite Trick couldn't pull a good stunt at derby

HOT SPRINGS, Ark. (AP) — Favorite Trick won't be going to the Kentucky Derby undefeated after losing to Victory Gallop on Saturday in the Arkansas Derby.

It was the first loss in 10 career starts for Favorite Trick, the 25 choice in the $500,000 race at Oaklawn. He ran near the front from the start under Pat Day, but wore down in deep stretch and wound up third behind Hanuman Highway.

Victory Gallop, the son of Cryptoclearance, covered the 1-1/16 miles in 1:49.45 while winning for the fifth time in seven career starts.

Favorite Trick broke alertly, took the lead in the far turn and opened a clear advantage at the top of the stretch. But he could not hold off Victory Gallop and Hanuman Highway, and wound up a length back.

Victory Gallop, ridden by Alex Solis and trained by Elliott Walden, was a half-length better than Hanuman Highway. The winner paid $17.60, $7.20 and $3.20. Hanuman Highway paid $18.60 and $5.20. Favorite Trick returned $2.20 to show.

It was the second start in 1998 for Favorite Trick — Horse of the Year in 1997. He was idle from Nov. 1 until March 21, when he took the Rebel Stakes at Oaklawn by a head.

Victory Gallop was outrun in the first start of his career. After adding the anti-bleeder medication Lasix, he reeled off three straight victories before ending 1997 with a 1 3/4-length loss to Fight For M'Lady in the Laurel Futurity.

Favorite Trick was attempting to become the third unbeaten starter in the May 2 Kentucky Derby. Santa Anita Derby winner Indian Charlie and Jim Beam winner Event of the Year are 4-0 heading into the race.

Favorite Trick was named Horse of the Year after winning all eight of his races as a 2-year-old. Patrick Byrne trained Favorite Trick last year, but Bill Mott took over when Byrne went to work for Canadian industrialist Frank Stronach.

Favorite Trick made his 1998 debut in the seven-furlong Swale and won by almost two lengths.

"My Backaches Are Gone!"

For nearly a year I have had a constant nagging low back pain ever since I lifted some heavy books. These one night I was lifting again and it really flared up. I couldn't even stand up straight! I was afraid I would never be able to lift or even straighten up again. A friend of mine said he thought Dr. Williams could help me. I had never been to a chiropractor, but I was really tired of the constant pain so I decided to give it a try. I am sure glad I did.

Kenney Shaffer
"I was able to lift and walk again!"

I found great and fast results from Dr. Williams. Within a few days, the pain I have had for a year was gone! The treatments are completely painless and really feel good. I would recommend that if you are having any back problems or any other problems, give the Williams Chiropractic Pain Relief Clinic a try. They can really help you get rid of those annoying backaches and help you feel better than you have in years!

DEADLY SEASON

Three tornado outbreaks have killed about 100 people, more than double the average number of fatalities nationwide through this time of year.

Bill Reid burns lumber and damaged furniture from his home in Pratt City, Ala., which was destroyed by tornadoes Friday.

More tornadoes loom this week

Computers predict additional storms in the Deep South

Knight Ridder News Service

"El Nino is as strong as ever," he said.

It simply cannot get any warmer, he added. Water temperatures are not as much above normal as they were during the winter. Storm residents were left to wonder how they would piece their lives back together.

The warm water over thousands of miles of ocean, as much

In all, three tornadoes roared through Alabama, said Tim Coleman of the National Weather Service office in Birmingham. The biggest, an F5 on the scale of 1 to 5 developed by researcher Theodore Fujita, packed winds of about 300 m.p.h., ranking it among the strongest storms on Earth. That tornado, which touched down in twilight, moved west to east for 22 miles and stopped just two miles from Birmingham, Coleman said.

As of Friday afternoon, the storm death toll in Alabama, Mississippi and Georgia had reached 43, pushing the annual death toll past 100 for the first time since 1984, when 122 people died, Grice said.

'This has been an unusual year. The tornadoes have been occurring in the wrong place.'

—Gary Grice, tornado expert

As 10 degrees above normal, has heard and agitated the overlying air, disrupting worldwide weather patterns. The warm air leads to storminess that incites the jet stream, the upper-level west-to-east wind that carries weather to and across the United States.

The jet stream and El Nino could well form their own support group. As is El Nino, the jet stream is often misunderstood and blamed for almost everything bad that happens. Jet streams are bands of high-speed winds embedded with even higher-speed winds, sometimes as high as 200 m.p.h.

Storms form beneath jet streams and move along their currents. The strong winds of the jet stream help give storms their spin — and an extra kick. As the winds blow across the top of storms, they have a lifting effect, the way winds draw air out of a chimney.

Tornado-producing thunderstorms often grow under the influence of a strong jet stream. That's what happened in Florida in February, when six to eight tornadoes skipped across the state in the middle of the night. Three of them killed more than 25 people, Grice said. The Alabama storm was of a different nature. He said one supercell thunderstorm spawned the tornadoes.

Before this year, tornado deaths for more than a decade had been well below the annual average. Grice said the lull in fatalities might have had something to do with better warnings and the high-resolution radar installed as part of the National Weather Service's $4 billion modernization program. He added, however, that the lull could have been a matter of luck, that perhaps the tornadoes were ripping up hayfields.

"This has been an unusual year," Grice said. "The tornadoes have been occurring in the wrong place."

None of this year's storms has approached the devastation of a tornado that struck on March 18, 1925. That one, Schaefer said, traveled 219 miles, from Missouri to Indiana, and killed 689 people.

El Niño: A shock heard round the world

The El Niño weather pattern develops every four to seven years. The intensive studies of the 1997-98 El Niño have given scientists a new appreciation of Earth's complex, interlocking weather systems.

Wet weather in Australia and West Pacific

Dry weather prevails along South America's Pacific Coast

Trade winds blow westward

El Niño ecology

Microscopic plankton grow well in the nutrient-rich cold water, supply food for animals farther up the food chain.

The rush of warm water returns South America and turns north and south along the coast, setting off heavy rainstorms as far north as Mexico.

Plankton population drops, bringing down the rest of the food chain.

Normal Conditions

- Prevailing "trade winds" push warm surface water westward
- Cold water rises from depths
- Rain clouds form in west, bring rains
- W. Pacific rains pull in air; trade winds strengthen

El Niño Years

- Trade winds decrease and warm water flows eastward
- Warm water piles up along S. America
- Rain clouds form farther east than usual
- Trade winds become disrupted and weaken

How El Niño's effect spreads

If it were not for high-altitude winds called jet streams, El Niño would only affect South America and Australia. However, jet streams can move storm systems great distances.

- S. American storms push North American jet streams out of place
- Cold winds blowing southward over Rockies
- Eastward-blowing winds strengthen in the Caribbean

SOURCES: NASA; NOAA; U.S. Geological Survey; Department of Atmospheric Sciences at Univ. of Illinois; Univ. of Washington; Climate Prediction Center, University of Colorado at Boulder

Plans for observing future El Niños

- Satellites will collect data on sea temperature.
- Pacific buoys will provide real time weather data and monitor ocean conditions as much as 1,000 feet underwater.
- Commercial ships crossing the Pacific will record weather data.

After tornado, Alabama community travels path of recovery, renewal

The Washington Post

OAK GROVE, Ala. — Allen Cunningham was on his way to Oak Grove High School to pick up his daughter from cheerleading practice when a killer tornado struck this rural community outside Birmingham.

"I could hear it coming," recalled Cunningham, who changed directions to avoid the storm's path, hoping to reach the school on a back road. But he was stopped by sheriff's deputies, who told him the school had been hit and the road to it was impassable.

"They said I couldn't go in there," Cunningham said, "but then someone said the girls were still in there, so I yelled, 'I'm coming through,'" and he and the school's principal, Alan Pruden, who also had just arrived, ran the 100 yards to the building.

"The gym was gone," Cunningham said. "I was frantic, and I panicked, until someone told me the girls had been taken to a convenience store down the road."

There, moments later, Cunningham and his daughter, Vicki, 14, were reunited.

"He gave me a big hug," Vicki said Friday, as she and her father returned to the school to view the devastation.

Vicki, a tiny four-foot-something, said she and her six cheer squad mates were just finishing practice Wednesday night when "the lights went out and a siren went off."

"We dove to the floor, and then I heard the walls crack," Vicki said, "so I threw my backpack over some other kids."

After a minute of "keeping my eyes shut and holding a hand" of another girl, Vicki looked up "and saw the roof was down on us."

The seven girls and four adults then picked their way through the debris to the roof, and walked to the store where Vicki's dad found her.

Three nearby Oak Grove residents did not escape death, however, and were among 31 Jefferson County residents who died in the storm.

But in what many in this God-fearing Bible Belt area took as proof of the promise of Easter, there were signs of recovery and renewal in the midst of the death and destruction.

About a mile from Oak Grove High, for instance, two girls fashioned a swing from the branch of an uprooted tree and two others played ball, using a piece of siding torn from their house as a bat.

While many yards here were strewn with uprooted cars, mattresses in trees and washers and dryers in ditches, one home site that was spared damage was decorated with gaily colored Easter eggs and bunnies-busied by parishioners for Sunday Easter services.

Questions about Jesus come down to faith

This Easter everything about the life of Jesus is being called into question, including the resurrection, by a two-hour PBS documentary called "From Jesus to Christ."

This second-guessing of the Gospel account is nothing new. Theological scholars have been speculating about the truth of the New Testament narrative for decades, and they likely will continue. They do their speculating by studying writing styles, the culture at the time the Gospel was written, comparing narratives and studying the writings of ancient historians.

And they have concluded, for instance, that Jesus never spoke the Lord's Prayer. They have concluded that Jesus was not born of a virgin. Instead, they say, after his death, Jesus' disciples spread the rumor to compete with a king of the time who, the king's followers said, was born of a virgin.

FAITH TODAY
Clark Morpew

Finally, they have decided that the resurrection never happened. Rather, they say, Jesus' body was probably left on the garbage heap called Golgotha.

Who are these people who feel they have the right to ravage the Gospel stories? They are respected scholars and university and seminary professors who finally decided the public ought to know this stuff.

Most of you were probably just as happy not to know. But, when scholars get organized, it's tough stopping them.

They are organized through the Jesus Seminar, a California-based inquiry group studying the life of Jesus. They meet several times a year — more than 100 scholars who hear lectures, discuss the finer points of history and then vote on various Gospel passages.

They use marbles, dropping a white marble into a box if they believe the passage is definitely believed to be the words of Jesus, a red marble if the passage is somewhat likely, a gray marble if it is probably not authentic and a black marble if it is definitely not the word of Jesus.

That's simple enough, unless you take into account the years of study each of these men and women have invested in their discipline. If we knew all they have sacrificed to reach this zenith in their careers, we might be inclined to believe them.

But after all, this stuff is only speculation. I mean, these are all nice people and they might even still go to church once in a while. But one wonders why the world says this historical scholarship. They say their work will strengthen their people's faith because it will get them into their Bibles again. But as another scholar told me, "Faith in what?" In effect, they are gutting the word of meaning. What do we have left of Jesus, after the Jesus Seminar finishes with him, is a half-crazed Jewish zealot wandering a barren desert. He is arrested for preaching ideas contrary to the prevailing religion. Then he is tortured and killed in the most degrading way. I know that's not your idea of the kind of God you want. That is also not the kind of divine being I would worship.

But this isn't about facts — it's about faith, and that is a mysterious concept. Do we believe because we have proof? Or do we believe precisely because we do not have all the facts?

Not having the facts makes faith not only possible but necessary. There would be no religion if we had all the facts. For instance, Buddhists believe Buddha emerged at birth talking a blue streak. In every religion there are things we might call into question.

In the end, we will see that the Jesus Seminar was probably necessary and that it enlightened us at least a bit. In fact, this stuff is fascinating, and if you watched the "Frontline" program this week, you know for yourself how puzzling and complex history can be.

So let's not get too excited. For Christians, the resurrection really happened. If you feel it's important to believe in a bodily resurrection, go ahead. What it boils down to is whom you will believe — the people who lived at the time Jesus was alive or a band of theological scholars who are digging in an obscure history.

THE POWER OF Faith

For it is by grace you have been saved, through faith — and this is not from yourselves, it is the gift of God. —Ephesians 2:8 (NIV)

By Denise Turner
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — On the eve of Easter, everyone seems to be talking about faith. But what is faith, really? And where does faith fit into everyday life?

Hebrews 11 defines faith as the "substance of things hoped for" and the "evidence of things not seen." The dictionary says faith is a belief, but Ephesians 2 says it is a gift from God, and a prerequisite to salvation.

Many Christians define faith as a hope against hope — an assurance that God is there, even when he is silent — a leap of — well — faith.

Faith is a complex issue.

According to "The Splendor of Easter," compiled by Floyd W. Thatcher, the French thinker Auguste Comte once told British historian Thomas Carlyle that he was going to start a new religion that would replace Christianity.

"Very good," Carlyle replied. "All you will have to do is be crucified, rise again the third day and get the world to believe you are still alive. Then your new religion will have a chance."

Said Monte Carlson, outgoing Twin Falls Snake President in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, "This year we are studying the Old Testament and we are talking about Abraham taking Isaac to the mountain and about Rebekah leaving her family and marrying someone she had never seen before — the faith in God that things will come out right."

Carlson has seen faith applied big-time closer to home, too.

"I have seen sickness healed and families in big trouble do better miraculously and powerfully," said Carlson, who noted that Easter is a significant day in the LDS religion and that faith in the resurrection of Jesus is the central message in the Book of Mormon.

But Carlson is quick to point out that our prayers will not necessarily be answered the way we might want. This is about God's will, not man's, he explained, "and nobody — even those of great faith — is always promised smooth sailing."

Mike and Debbie Burr of Twin Falls are happy to have 8-month-old Megan in their home. Doctors didn't think the couple could conceive a child without extensive fertility treatments.

Couple trusts in God in birth of miracle baby

By Denise Turner
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — When she was a teen-ager Debbie Burr was told she would probably never have children. She has polycystic ovarian disease, for which she has undergone several surgeries.

She had been married for two years when she and her husband, Mike, a Twin Falls CPA, started thinking about having a family.

In the end, the Burrs decided to just put their faith in God.

"I said, if God wanted me to get pregnant, I would," explained Debbie Burr, now 33, who has been a Christian all her life.

The result is 8-month-old Megan — friendly and happy, the first baby born into the new Rock Creek Community Church, where Debbie Burr plays piano and directs music.

Even Megan's birth was miraculous.

"Her umbilical cord was only about 12 inches long, and it was a difficult birth," Megan's mom recalled. "Everyone was praying for us then, and we believe the hand of God was there."

Today, Debbie Burr is a second-year pharmacy student, driving back and forth to Idaho State University. The family lives in a cozy country home on Mike Burr's grandfather's property in Twin Falls. Next door are the built-in baby-sitters, Mike Burr's parents.

At church are more baby-sitters, ready to pass Megan around and dote on her this Easter Sunday.

Debbie Burr is planning to play some special Easter music on the piano that day. Her new music book has a beautiful arrangement of "He Lives," she said.

Everyone agrees it's the perfect song.

'Everyone, have faith in God.'

Twin Falls man checks with a higher authority

By Denise Turner
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — "The doctors said they couldn't see any way I could live," said Dale Davis, 65, of Twin Falls.

But Davis checked with a higher authority.

Six years ago, when he was near death from lymphoma, Davis said he had a blessing and was told that wasn't his time. After that, through faith and prayer, Davis and his wife, Gay, never doubted he would live.

There were surgeries and chemotherapy and even recurrences of the cancer, but the Davises kept on praying, and believing.

So did the members of their church, at the Twin Falls 13th Ward of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. And Gay Davis read the Scriptures a lot, especially a passage in Hebrews 11: "... without faith it is impossible to please God."

tumor was everywhere: "They didn't touch it. They just stapled me up."

Through it all, faith was a constant companion in the Davis household, just as it had always been.

Gay Davis had lost her father to a car accident when she was in sixth grade. Dale Davis had watched friends die of cancer the same year he was diagnosed.

But the sun kept on coming up every morning.

Today, Davis is retired from his job with the Social Security Administration, and he enjoys spending time with his four grown children and 10 grandchildren.

And, oh yes, the tumor stopped growing, and is now just a pesky lump in Davis' stomach.

He survived. Just as he believed he would, and he now has a message for others.

"Everyone, have faith in God," he said, "and believe in faith and prayers, because the Lord does answer them."

The tornadoes ripped buildings apart, hurled vehicles into houses, tossed people from their homes, and shredded trailer parks. Stunned residents were left to wonder how they would piece their lives back together.

Alabama? Actually, this was central Florida, right outside Disney World, on Feb. 23. And it bore a distressing similarity to what happened last month in Georgia and last week outside Birmingham, Ala.

"El Niño is as strong as ever," he said.

It simply cannot get any warmer, he added. Water temperatures are not as much above normal as they were during the winter, simply because the average temperatures are now higher with the change of seasons.

In all, three tornadoes roared through Alabama, said Tim Coleman of the National Weather Service office in Birmingham. The biggest, an F5 on the scale of 1 to 5 developed by researcher Theodore Fujita, packed winds of about 300 m.p.h., ranking it among the strongest storms on Earth. That tornado, which touched down in twilight, moved west to east for 22 miles and west to east for 22 miles and topped just two miles from Birmingham, Coleman said.

As of Friday afternoon, the storm death toll in Alabama, Mississippi and Georgia had reached 43, pushing the annual death toll past 100 for the first time since 1984, when 122 people died, Grice said.

Before this year, tornado deaths for more than a decade had been well below the annual average. Grice said the toll in fatalities might have had something to do with better warnings and the high-resolution radar installed as part of the National Weather Service's $4 billion modernization program. He added, however, that the toll could have been a matter of luck, that perhaps the tornadoes were ripping up layfields.

While this cannot continue, the outlook for the coming week is disturbing, said Gary Grice, a tornado expert with the government's Storm Prediction Center. The computers see a strong possibility of more severe storms across populated regions of the Deep South.

That would be unusual. Ordinarily, the tornado zone should be migrating north by now, into less-populated areas of the Plains, the experts say.

Before this year, tornado deaths for more than a decade had been well below the annual average. He added, however, that the toll could have been a matter of luck, that perhaps the tornadoes were ripping up layfields.

Fatalities in any given year have little to do with the number of tornadoes.

"There's no real relationship," said Joe Schaefer, director of the storm center. "If a tornado touched down on the Sunday before Memorial Day, we'd have 50,000 dead."

But the tornadoes are not cooperating.

"They are not moving up," Grice said. "They're staying south."

Fatalities in any given year have little to do with the number of tornadoes.

"There's no real relationship," said Joe Schaefer, director of the storm center. "If a tornado touched down on the Sunday before Memorial Day, we'd have 50,000 dead."

In 1986, 15 people died in 765 confirmed tornadoes, compared with about 100 in the three Southern outbreaks, according to the weather service.

"This has been an unusual year," Grice said. "The tornadoes have been occurring in the wrong place."

As tiresome as it might sound by now, El Niño is a factor, though its influence on North America ordinarily wanes in the spring and though it is all but impossible to blame it for any one storm. Well over a year since its onset, El Niño continues to brew warm water in the equatorial Pacific and to create climatic upheaval, said Vernon Koussky, the El Niño specialist with the Climate Prediction Center.

In 1986, 15 people died in 765 confirmed tornadoes, compared with about 100 in the three Southern outbreaks, according to the weather service.

"This has been an unusual year," Grice said. "The tornadoes have been occurring in the wrong place."

None of this year's storms has approached the devastation of a tornado that struck on March 18, 1925. That one, Schaefer said, traveled 245 miles, from Missouri to Indiana, and killed 689 people.

After tornado, Alabama community travels path of recovery, renewal

The Washington Post

OAK GROVE, Ala. — Allen Cunningham was on his way to Oak Grove High School to pick up his daughter from cheerleading practice when a killer tornado struck this rural community outside Birmingham.

"I could hear it coming," recalled Cunningham, who changed directions to avoid the storm's path, hoping to reach the school on a back road. But he was stopped by shrapnel's debris, who told him the school had been hit and the road to it was impassable.

"They said I couldn't go in there," Cunningham said, "but then someone said the girls were still in there, so I yelled, 'The coming through,'" and he and the school's principal, Alan Pruden, who also had just arrived, ran the 100 yards to the building.

"The gym was gone," Cunningham said. "I was frantic, and I panicked, until someone told me the girls had been taken to a convenience store down the road."

There, moments later, Cunningham and his daughter, Vicki, 14, were reunited.

"He gave me a big hug," Vicki said Friday, as she and her father returned to the school to view the devastation.

Vicki, a tiny four-foot-something, said she and her six cheerleading squad mates were just finishing practice Wednesday night when "the lights went out and a siren went off."

"We dove to the floor, and then I heard the walls crack," Vicki said, "so I threw my backpack over some other kids'."

After a minute of "keeping my eyes shut and holding a hand" of another girl, Vicki looked up "and saw the roof was down on us."

The seven girls and four adults then picked their way through the debris to the road, and walked to the store where Vicki's dad found her.

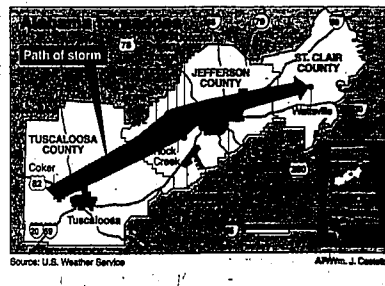

Three nearby Oak Grove residents did not escape death, however, and were among 31 Jefferson County residents who died in the storm.

But in what many in this God-fearing Bible Belt area took as proof of the promise of Easter, there were signs of recovery and renewal in the midst of the death and destruction.

About a mile from Oak Grove High, for instance, two girls fashioned a swing from the branch of an uprooted tree and two others played ball, using a piece of sliding torn from their house as a bat.

While many yards here were strewn with upside-down cars, mattresses in trees and washers and dryers in ditches, one home site that was spared damage was decorated with gaily colored Easter eggs and human-sized bunnies. And several damaged churches were being spruced up by parishioners for Sunday Easter services.

Hasty filing may trigger an IRS audit

The Orange County Register

Need to avoid an audit? Who doesn't? Here are tips offered by various tax experts to avoid IRS audits by being audited and increase your chances of surviving intact if you are:

• Triple-check your return. That includes going over your work, checking all Social Security numbers, including all relevant forms, making sure you sign in all the right places, and sending your returns in the right envelopes to the right addresses.

• Include all your income. Some omissions are easy for the IRS to catch by matching W-2 and 1099 forms issued by businesses. Other omissions aren't tough for the IRS to figure out.

• Don't represent yourself. If you are audited, consider sending a qualified, IRS-savvy tax preparer to represent you, advises Marty Kaplan, the CPA author of "What the IRS Doesn't Tell You."

several helpful guides. Some of the best-selling ones include "J.K. Lasser's Your Income Tax 1998" ($14.95), "The Ernst & Young Tax Guide 1998" ($15.95), "Cash Payments: Earning, Taxing, and Investing" ($12.95) and "Taxes for Dummies" ($14.99).

These resources are best used when you have a fairly standard tax situation. If yours are complex, if you have a laundry of questions or if you need help, consider looking for a tax preparer to help you.

Need a tax preparer? Chances are that most certified public accountants, enrolled agents and other full-time tax preparation professionals are booked solid. For future reference, you can call the National Association of Enrolled Agents at (800) 424-4339. (Enrolled agents are tax enters your bank accounts and keep scrupulous records. Because self-employed people have more opportunities to claim, the IRS is more likely to audit them.

• Itemize with care. If you file a Schedule A, you're more likely to get audited. Make sure you can back up every deduction.

• Explain the unusual. The IRS is more likely to audit complex investment and business transactions that aren't clearly described. Big deductions that seem out of proportion to your income, such as a large charitable gift, should be explained as well.

• Don't represent yourself. If you are audited, consider sending a qualified, IRS-savvy tax preparer to represent you, advises Marty Kaplan, the CPA author of "What the IRS Doesn't Tell You."

specialists who are authorized to represent taxpayers before the IRS.) You can troll the phone book for accountants and CPAs; look for those who specialize in preparing individual tax returns.

Your best bet may be H&R Block, Jackson Hewitt and other tax preparers. You can call your local phone office or use the office locators at their Web sites (www.handrblock.com, for example). Prices start at $200.

Make sure your tax preparer is qualified to do business in your state. In California, for example, if the preparer is not an attorney, CPA or Enrolled Agent, he or she must have a certificate from the California Tax Education Council. This ensures the preparer meets minimum education requirements and is covered by a $5,000 bond. Several CPAs offer online tax preparation services that include personal phone consultation and a W-2A format. Returns are mailed to you by two-day delivery, so you have to get crackin'.

You can also figure and file your return using tax software, including the popular TurboTax or TaxCut. IRS spokesman Chris Conley said he prepared his 1040 with a Schedule A for itemized deductions in less than a minute.

• Need a fast refund? Opt for direct deposit, which allows the IRS and the FTB to plunk your check directly into your bank account.

Some people worry about the check going awry, or shy away from direct deposit because they don't want the IRS to know their bank account numbers, said Joni Tegrens Santuz. The fact that a check is more likely to be stolen in the mail, and that the IRS already knows their account numbers—thanks to 1099s and other reporting forms—often fails to reassure them, she said.

Consumer advocates advise against applying for one of those "instant refund" loans offered by some tax preparation chains. The implicit interest rates can be huge; it's far better to wait a few extra days.

Next year, try to file early. Tax preparers notice refunds come a lot quicker for returns filed in February than for returns filed during the April crush.

Over the past three years, the large-cap stocks of the S&P 500 have returned 135 percent while the small-caps of the Russell 2000 have returned 102 percent.

manager, Bert Mullins, has been running the fund since it began 10 years ago under the aegis of the Mellon Bank Corp., a conservative Pittsburgh-based institution that merged recently with Dreyfus. Mellon had only a few funds, which were excellent but were poorly marketed. Dreyfus had lots of funds, many of which were not stellar performers but were brilliantly sold. It was a match made in Wall Street heaven.

"I'll get to the "disciplined" part of the title in a second, but first, the performance: At risk levels lower than the market as a whole, DDS (as we'll call it) has returned 50.3 percent over the past year, or slightly better than the Standard & Poor's 500-Stock Index at 48.9 percent. Over the past three years, Dreyfus has returned 33.5 percent vs. 33.2 percent for the S&P; and over the past five, 22.9 percent vs. 23.2 percent. DDS is also nearly a full point better than the S&P over 10 years.

That is a remarkable record, when you consider that the average growth-and-income fund, the category into which DDS falls, has returned between three and six percentage points less than the S&P.

Also, despite its fine figures, DDS is relatively unowned. Total assets are $1.7 billion — up from just $222 billion in 1994, before the Dreyfus-Mellon deal, but far below the likes of Fidelity Growth and Income ($37 billion) or Investment Co. of America ($40 billion). There's no load, and expenses are about 1.6 percent annually — 20 percent below average, according to the Value Line Mutual Fund Survey.

Mullins turns over his portfolio fewer than the typical fund manager — at a rate of 65 percent annually, rather than close to 100 percent. In other words, he holds the typical stock for 18 months, which is still too briefly for my taste.

The other attraction of DDS is that it's roughly equally balanced between growth stocks, which are fast-moving companies that investors are bidding up, and value stocks, which are being shunned by the market and trading at bargain prices.

A good mutual fund portfolio should include at least one value fund and one aggressive growth fund, but with DDS, you get both in a single package.

Randal Walker, director of the Clark County Department of Aviation, speaks Wednesday about the decrease in airline traffic at McCarran International Airport in Las Vegas.

New carrier hopes to fill void as Las Vegas air traffic declines

LAS VEGAS (AP) — For nearly a decade, Las Vegas gambling moguls have bet on the "Field of Dreams" axiom — they built it and they will come.

Now, faced with a 25 percent increase in hotel rooms over three years and declining air traffic, the question isn't "Will they come?" but "How will they get here?"

Since the opening of The Mirage in November 1989, Las Vegas has experienced a multibillion-dollar explosion of megaresorts, with room inventory jumping from 67,391 to the current 103,347. Some 6,000 rooms have come on line the past year, with 20,000 more expected the next two years.

The visitor volume jumped 15.6 percent after the opening of The Mirage, and 19.9 percent after the opening of the Luxor, Treasure Island and MGM Grand hotels-casinos in late 1993. Since then, volume growth has dropped to less than 3 percent annually, pushing room occupancy rates from the lower 90s to the upper 80s.

Exacerbating the problem in recent months has been a decline in airline traffic here for the first time since 1984 as major airlines cut back on Las Vegas flights in favor of more lucrative business routes.

Airline traffic was down 4.3 percent at McCarran International Airport the first two months of 1998, compared to the same period a year ago. American West Airlines reported a drop of 13.8 percent in February, and Southwest Airlines was down 13 percent. The two airlines are responsible for 53 percent of the scheduled airline passenger traffic into Las Vegas.

Mike Conway, a co-founder and former chief executive officer of America West, says he saw the problem coming two years ago.

He's close to completing $50 million in financing for a new airline that will focus on Las Vegas traffic, particularly long-haul flights from the East Coast.

"The Vegas philosophy has been 'If you build it, they will come,'" Conway said, referring to the famous film line. "If you build it, they'll want to come. They won't necessarily be able to get here."

Conway hopes to have his new airline operating by the fourth quarter of this year, using four Boeing 757s with 175 seats each. His goal is to expand to a fleet of 12 757s by the end of the first operating year, by the end of the fifth year. He says the four jets would generate 46,600 new Las Vegas passengers monthly; the 12 would bring in 126,000 monthly.

The passenger count at McCarran was down 35,000 in February — 2,345,720 this year compared with 2,380,764 in February 1997. Conway's initial focus is on four major Las Vegas markets — Los Angeles, San Francisco, New York City and Miami. He plans to expand service to nine more cities by the end of the first year, adding Seattle, Denver, Chicago, Detroit, Boston, Newark, Atlanta, Orlando and Tampa. His goal is to be in 22 major markets by the fifth year of operation.

Las Vegas' decrease in airline traffic began in late 1997, and the outlook isn't rosy. "I don't see anything on the horizon that is going to change that dramatically," said Randal Walker, director of the Clark County Department of Aviation.

Conway agrees. "The airlines today are in a golden age of profitability," he said in an interview at his office a mile west of the Las Vegas Strip.

"In order to sustain that, it's highly unlikely they'll switch to lower-yield markets."

Sen. Richard Bryan, D-Nev., a member of the Senate Commerce Committee, hopes he can come up with some answers when he holds a hearing on the issue here April 16. The meeting will include airline, resort and tourism executives.

"Business fares are much higher than recreational fares, so with the economy sagging the airlines have shifted capacity to business routes, and that has hurt our air service in Las Vegas," Bryan said.

"We've talked to airline people and their point is that this is a business driven by how to maximize their profits for their shareholders, and business travel generates more revenue," Bryan said. "This is not a case of lack of confidence in Las Vegas."

Bryan said the city also needs to re-energize its charter market and travel to generate more international travel — a move that involves diplomatic hurdles. He said the city cleared one on Wednesday with the announcement that Northwest Airlines was adding direct service between Las Vegas and Tokyo.

"The proposed new carrier is part of the equation as well," Bryan said of Conway's company. "It would provide service to markets we think are under-served."

Walker believes at some point someone will step forward to fill the current void, and believes Conway's concept "will be helpful."

Conway said his company's goal is to restore lost business, not take business away from existing Las Vegas carriers.

"Our success is not dependent on taking market share from other carriers," Conway said.

HONOLULU (AP) — For sale: a South Pacific island with a small airstrip and no neighbors. Available immediately. $47 million.

Honolulu's Fullard-Leo family has put a "For Sale" sign on Palmyra Atoll, an uninhabited island about 1,000 miles south of Hawaii and 350 miles north of the equator.

The 13-square-mile atoll is the northernmost part of the Line Islands. It receives more than 13 feet of rain a year and is dotted with 90-foot balsa-like trees.

The atoll is a U.S. possession. It was annexed by the Hawaiian Islands in 1862, granted to Honolulu Judge Henry Cooper in 1912 and sold to the Fullard-Leo family in 1922.

From 1940 to 1947, the island was occupied by the U.S. Navy, which dredged a channel, built a runway connecting the atoll and constructed a 6,000-foot runway.

The island has been uninhabited since 1951.

Doug Fothall, an agent for the real estate firm Monroe & Friedlander, said preliminary discussions have been held with representatives for Microsoft Corp. Chairman Bill Gates.

Country takes action for 2nd day in a row and intervened in foreign exchange markets with the blessings of the United States. The dollar initially fell Thursday but nearly recovered by the end of U.S. trading.

Friday, the Japanese were more successful in lowering the dollar off balance. Although the dollar fell 2 3/4 yen early on, it still was 2 1/2 yen lower by day's end, creeping upward during the European and U.S. trading sessions.

"My quick take is that, while they have been bashing (the dollar) down and may even continue keeping it down, it was basically the shock effect" of intervention that sent the dollar lower "with this U.S. markets exaggerating the size," Andrew Fodge, a foreign exchange vice president at Bank Brussels Lambert.

Dollar-trading against the yen has also drawn investors' concentration on the yen.

Q: As I approach retirement, at what point should I begin changing my investment portfolio from a growth-style emphasizing stocks to a fixed-income style focused on bonds?

A: There used to be an easy rule of thumb: Subtract your age from 100 and use the result as the percentage of your portfolio that should be invested in stocks. Most of the rest would go into bonds, the remainder would be kept as cash.

While the rule has proved to be simplistic, the general notion is sound. As you get older, you probably want a smaller and smaller portion of your portfolio exposed to the risks of the stock market. So you move money out of stocks, or mutual funds that invest in stocks, and into safe bonds such as U.S. Treasuries.

Note that even with this traditional approach, people in or nearing retirement still have a substantial investment in stocks, none of it in high-risk stocks. Over periods of five years or longer, stocks almost always outperform bonds.

It means the risk of investing in stocks is not great if you don't need that money for the next five years or longer. You can enjoy the higher return from stocks without much danger of having to sell during a downturn just because you need money to live on.

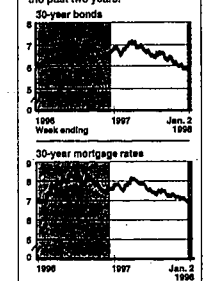

Today, if you retire at 65, there's a good chance you'll live another 30 years. If you have a conservative entire portfolio to bonds earning only 6 or 7 percent, money could get pretty tight later on. So a large portion should remain in stocks or stock funds with hopes of earning 8, 10 or 12 percent, or even more.

Here's the basic strategy I plan to use, assuming the markets don't change dramatically. Keep enough cash on hand to pay all living costs for the next one or two years. Most of this would be kept in a money-market account or fund that allows you to write checks. With this cushion, you don't have to worry about selling stocks and losing value during ordinary expenses.

Keep enough money in bonds to pay living costs for about five years. The best way to have a range of maturities from one, two, five years and so on. Bonds with longer maturities would pay higher yields but be at greater risk of losing value if interest rates rise. But you wouldn't have to worry about that too much. With this "laddering" approach, some bonds mature each year. Those principal repayments would replenish the maturity you need to draw on for regular expenses. That way you need not worry about having to sell bonds before maturity to raise money, which could mean a loss if interest rates rise and bond prices fall.

Bond yield hits all-time low

Mortgage rates tend to fall when the yield on the Treasury's 30-year bond drops, and rise when the yield climbs. A look at how the two interest rates have compared over the past two years:

Source: Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp. AP

The rest of the portfolio goes into stocks and stock funds. Since you won't need any of that money for at least five years, you won't be forced to sell in a temporary downturn; you can ride out the stock market's inevitable dips.

Stock market risks can also be reduced by diversifying among a wide variety of stocks and funds, ranging from small, high-dividend-paying utility stocks to riskier growth and foreign stocks.

Each year, a portion of the stock and stock-fund portfolio would be sold to replenish the bond portfolio. If interest rates fell, for example, your bond portfolio would rise dramatically in value, leaving you with more cash than you need. So you could sell some bonds and put the profits into stocks.

The key to planning for retirement, I think, is to realize that, with today's long life expectancy, retirees can't expect to just sit on a portfolio of bonds and clip coupons. They need the better profit-producing potential of stocks to assure they keep ahead of inflation and have enough when they enter their 80s and 90s.

But nobody wants to sweat about a next month's grocery money. With a good mix of cash, bonds and stocks, you should be able to get a good overall return—and sleep at night.

Q: My co-worker drives me nuts. Even though we have an employee cafeteria, he regularly eats foul-smelling food at his desk. I want to ask him to stop, but I can't think of a good way to do it. He says he'll find a solution soon. I'm going to smack him.

A: First, no hitting. If you club him over the head with your phone handset, you may have to go to jail. Instead, you can talk to your supervisor about the problem.

"Be prepared for the worst-case scenario," Hull says. "That means you may have to live with it." Or at the least get a new job assignment.

Another strategy would be to invite him to lunch. After all, he might eat at his desk because he doesn't have anyone to eat with. You don't have to go to a restaurant. You can take your brown bags and go outside and eat on a bench.

Eventually, he might start to enjoy his lunchtime breaks away from the office and stop fouling your workstation.

Want teen-agers on the payroll? Try offering flexible hours and a shuttle bus to work, a University of Central Florida study says.

Since turnover among temp-park workers averages 20 percent a year, employers should make at least some effort to keep workers happy, says Aedy Milman, an associate professor in UCF's hospitality management department.

By improving working conditions and meeting the needs of teen workers, employers can cut that rate down," he says.

Last summer Milman surveyed 250 working and non-working high school age teens. Half of those surveyed were still working their first jobs. The other half had left their previous jobs because of poor pay, conflicts with supervisors or because of schoolwork.

Not surprisingly, the study showed teens like working for well-respected companies that have clear rules and procedures and a friendly work force. They also liked earning paychecks from companies that were close to home, or that offered transportation services that made it easier for carefree teens to get to work.

Glueless about networking? A new book, Power Moves by Marc Kenner, offers tricks on making contacts at business functions, writing introductory and follow-up letters, and developing relationships via trade associations and networking groups. The book is available for $12.95 paperback by calling (847) 679-5500 or writing N T C / Contemporary Publishing, Company at 4255 W. Touhy Ave., Lincolnwood, Ill., 60464-1975. Despite a wealth of information, the book still won't help you survive rubber-chicken lunch-meets with boring people.

Job hunters might get lucky by clicking on www.headhunter.net, an online recruiting site. Free to all, the site offers a constant stream of 100,000 jobs—including hundreds of new ones daily—and 15,000 resumes. And since it's hyperlinked to dozens of other Web pages, it's the key to a wealth of online information.

For every $1 permanent, full-time worker earns, the average temporary worker gets between 75 cents and 83 cents, a recent survey from the National Association of Part-Time and Temporary Employees in Kansas reports.

Despite a constant stream toward corporate downsizing, 75 percent of employed Americans aren't worried about being fired or laid off in the next year, a Lutheran Brotherhood survey of 1,000 people says. Those who earn $15,000 or less are most likely to fear losing their jobs by the end of 1998.

PARADISE

LEONARDO'S FACE OF JESUS

The central figure in "The Last Supper," one of the world's most beloved works of art, is seen here the way Leonardo da Vinci painted it 500 years ago. Between then and now, the masterpiece had been disfigured by grime, vandals and misguided restorers who altered the look of Jesus. It is only today—following an intensely precise 20-year effort at restoration—that the artist's original image emerges, giving our age a new understanding of the Jesus that Leonardo envisioned at this crucial moment in the story of Christianity.

After years of painstaking effort, Leonardo's face of Jesus in The Last Supper re-emerges on the wall of a Dominican cloister in Milan. Says the restorer:

'Nobody Expected Anything Like This'

BY CURTIS BILL PEPPER

A 20-YEAR EFFORT to restore Leonardo da Vinci's The Last Supper—the world-famous painting showing Jesus at his final Passover meal with his 12 Apostles—is nearing completion in the dining hall of Santa Maria delle Grazie, a Dominican cloister in Milan, Italy.

Using high-powered microscopes, surgical scalpels and special solvents, Dr. Pinin Brambilla Barcilon has sought to recover Leonardo's original painting, buried under 500 years of grime, glue, plaster and the disfiguring paint of past restorers. Where nothing remains, she lays in an easily removed, low-hued watercolor to unify an otherwise blotchy image. The painting is 15 feet high and 28 feet long. Each day, she restores an area the size of a postage stamp.

Against remarkable odds—and considerable skepticism—she has succeeded in an extraordinary recovery of the face of Jesus as Leonardo painted it. Authorities feared there would be little to recover after Napoleon's troops shot arrows into the face, threw stones and gouged out the eyes of some of the Apostles in 1796. Even the former prior of the Milan convent, Father Angelo Caccin, declared: "I fear if we remove this face, we'll have a blank spot."

The painting's tragic odyssey began on the day of its completion in 1498. Milan's humidity seeped into the wall on which Leonardo worked, causing the paint to flake and disappear under a white mold. When the worried friars hung a protective canvas before it, condensed water ran down its face, which they mopped with towels, lifting away further paint. Incompetent restorers added to the ruin: One gave St. James six fingers. Then it barely escaped destruction by bombs in World War II.

BEFORE: The disfigured face of Jesus is swollen as though beaten and dazed. The brow is wrinkled, the bloated lips are slightly parted, and the half-closed eyes stare in different directions, while the hair looks like a wig.

The hidden face has at last reappeared. "This is the first Christ in the history of art where we see a movement of the mind and the soul," said Dr. Pietro Marani, director of the Lombard Superintendency for Art and History.

AFTER: The forehead has lost its wrinkles, the nose appears straight and viable, the bloated lips have become soft and full, and the mouth is that of a young man. The eyes, which were looking in two directions, have come into focus.

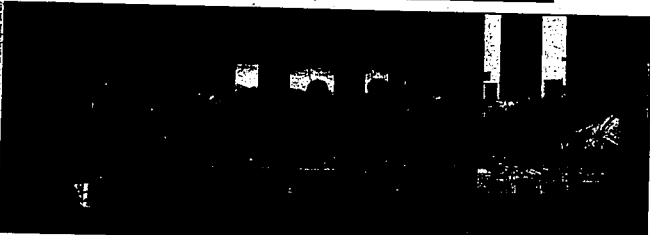

Dr. Brambilla Barcilon recalled finding small yet dramatic particulars in her journey into the layered regions of the face. "We began with the hair," she said. "Beneath the dark matting, we found it was curly and a light russet color, falling to the shoulders. Then, 'little by little, we went into the flesh, starting with the neck because it appeared to be the best preserved. From there, we went up slowly into the face.'" She smiled and glanced at the figure as though it were listening.

"As you can see," added Dr. Brambilla Barcilon, "the eyes are downcast toward that piece of bread, but you feel they are also turned inward. Finally, the cheeks emerged in a gray half-light, which surprised us. Nobody expected anything like this—in the middle of these agitated Apostles, we have this pale, pathetic figure who is with them yet not with them."

She had recovered many images of Jesus in her career, but never like this. "He's very dolce," she said, meaning gentle more than sweet. "Re-signed and filled with pity. You feel close to him, to his intense awareness of what it means to be human, because he also knows he's going to die."

Much of the right half of the painting has now been cleaned and restored. A humidity sensor can be seen at the left of the full painting, as it appeared in 1983 (below). Leonardo did the work between 1483 and 1498 for Duke Ludovico Sforza of Milan, as a gift to the Dominicans. From left, behind the monitor, are Bartholomew, James the Younger and Andrew, Judas, Peter and John. Then Jesus, Thomas (finger raised) and James, brother of John, and Philip. At the far right are the restored Matthew, Thaddeus and Simon.

Theologians and art historians generally agree that this Jesus of Leonardo has begun his Passion—the events surrounding his imminent torture and death.

Carlo Bertelli, an art historian, noted: "The betrayal and Eucharist have been left on the table. This Christ is turning toward his destiny. He takes leave of his followers with sadness. The light behind him is an evening light. The colors are cold. His head is inclined as though already on the Cross, where he will ask God his father why He has abandoned His son. That's the human Christ we see. So this

Last Supper is not a psychodrama centered on one moment of betrayal. Rather, like a parable, it proliferates into various levels of meaning."

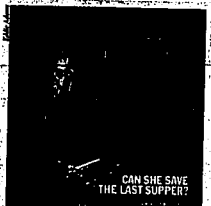

To enter the heart of Jesus at this moment, Carlo Cardinal Martini, the archbishop of Milan and a biblical scholar, pointed first to the position of Jesus at the supper table. "His arms," said the cardinal in a rare interview, "are open and extended toward the bread and wine in full awareness of his impending death and with a willingness to meet it with love and obedience to his father." He then noted that Jesus' manhood, as frail as our own, was not without the fears and trepidations of any mortal.

"In his human nature," added the cardinal, "he will shortly fall to the ground in the Garden of Gethsemane. His sweat will be like great drops of blood, and he will ask that the cup of suffering be taken from him. But in his divine nature, he knows that he and he alone can make the expiatory sacrifice which will deliver the world from sin. So he offers himself, saying, 'Not what I will, but what thou wilt.'

"When an artist is truly profound, he can gather many elements together and create a total harmonic effect suggesting other future moments. The Eucharist, a meal in its outward form, becomes a rendering of Christ's death on the Cross. Jesus, in washing the feet of his disciples, foretells the gift of his life. So, in looking now at this face, we see other moments yet to come—his betrayal, his arrest, his imminent death and his will to meet this with love and obedience." Dr. Brambilla Barolton has returned to five of the disciples on the left side of the table. Her work, financed by the Olivetti Corporation, will require another year.

"This is the hardest part," she explained. "I'm growing old with Leonardo, but I think he understands this and is patient with me. When you work with an artist like this, you get to know him. Leonardo was an extraordinarily refined man. I believe he suffered greatly to realize his thoughts. So what I am suffering here is nothing really. At first, I wondered how Leonardo felt about a woman touching him. Now he's used to it, and who knows?" She laughed. "He might say, 'Finally, here's a woman who understands me!'"

CAN SHE SAVE THE LAST SUPPER?

Dr. Pinin Brambilla Barolton (left) as she was pictured on our cover in 1982, before the restored figure of Jesus, and in a recent photo. The art historian Carlo Bertelli cited "the patience, devotion and love" she has brought to the task.

On Aug. 8, 1982—almost 16 years ago—PARADE published a report by Herbert Kupferberg on Dr. Pinin Brambilla Barolton's effort to save The Last Supper. Kupferberg wrote, "She expects the effort to take another two years." In response to his account of the desperate need for an air-conditioning system to protect the painting, PARADE readers sent 1700 letters and $39,000. Paolo Franzoi, former counselor to the Friends of the Brera, the Milan museum, said recently: "We installed air-conditioning and maintained a clean environment against the influx of visitors. We are very grateful to PARADE and its readers for this help."

Fresh Voices

WHAT I WANT TO KNOW ABOUT THE OPPOSITE SEX IS...

Now you can have FRESH VOICES: THE T-SHIRT! Starting today, every teen whose comments appear in "Fresh Voices" will receive a T-shirt—and so will every teacher whose students' comments we print.

A PARENT'S TEMPER: WHAT WORRIES TEENS

What upsets teenagers most is when a parent's anger is inconsistent or unpredictable, say two readers from Houston:

The person who has the worst temper in our family is my dad. And it's kind of strange. Whenever I get in trouble, he gets angry and sends me to my room. But then, a couple of minutes later, he comes and says I'm off punishment. This is really weird, because first he becomes angry at me and then he becomes friendly. It's hard to keep up with my dad's temper.

—Lee, 14

I worry about my mom's temper, because she changes her moods all the time. One minute she's happy and nice, and the next minute she's picking on you or yelling at you for no reason. Like last night at dinner, she yelled at me.

—Stephanie, 14

absorbent carpeting and draperies—this can be unpleasant. But, on the other hand, the resonance of some bathrooms happens to lie close to the resonance of some male voices, so "Ol' Man River" comes out sounding far more rich and powerful.

Opera singers—who don't use microphones—sound like this even when they're not in the shower. But rock singers—who are dependent on abundant amplification—have voices that are hardly different from yours and mine.

A person of your intelligence must surely play chess. What is your rating? There is only one woman among the world's top 100 chess players. The International Chess Federation (FIDE) has lowered the performance level required for women to earn titles. Women can now earn titles such as Woman Grandmaster. How do you feel about this?

ugh. I find the idea of women's chess repulsive, but I'm sure a fine organization like FIDE means well. Regardless, I wonder why so few women are successful in chess. Do they lack the intellectual prowess? Do they lack the emotional fortitude? Or do they just lack interest? As for myself, I've never played chess, mainly because I find sedentary games tedious. Even when I was a kid, I was far more interested in physical activity, like ice-skating (my favorite), swimming and playing tennis.

Please settle a dispute. The business where my husband works has always been open Tuesday through Saturday, closed on Sunday and Monday. But on Monday, March 5, it changed to a new schedule: open Monday through Saturday, closed only on Sunday. Also beginning on March 9, my husband would work Monday through Friday, off Saturday and Sunday. He thought he should be off on Saturday, March 7, but his employer insisted it wouldn't be fair. What is your take on this situation? —Laura Fleig, Redding, Calif.

I think your husband's employer is right. It's not fair that he should work for four days and get paid for five. Instead, see this as your husband stopping his "old job" at the end of the day on Saturday (March 7), being off on Sunday (March 8) and then starting a "new job" early on Monday (March 9). Then, by working Monday through Friday, he earns a full week's pay a day sooner (on Friday) than he did before (on Saturday). That's how he gets paid for working on Monday, March 9, which would have been a day off otherwise.

Why is it only men who love to sing in the shower? Is it because they're naturally narcissistic? —Cindy B., Seattle, Wash.

No, any enclosure (including everything from audio speakers to auditoriums) has a natural rate of vibration, and this has an impact on any sound waves that occur inside the enclosure. # "Every day they're discovering more about estrogen loss. That's why I'm glad I take my Premarin."

RELIEVES HOT FLASHES

RELIEVES VAGINAL DRYNESS

HELPS PREVENT OSTEOPOROSIS

"I started taking Premarin a number of years ago. My hot flashes went away, and I've felt wonderful ever since. My doctor and I agreed that I should keep taking it, not just to keep my symptoms from coming back, but also to prevent bone loss. Recently, I heard about new research. It's comforting to know that they're discovering even more about estrogen loss and menopause."

Premarin offers you many benefits. It relieves the symptoms of menopause. The hot flashes that can disrupt your days. The night sweats that can interrupt your sleep and make you tired and irritable the next day. The vaginal dryness that can be uncomfortable and interfere with sexual intimacy. These symptoms may return if you stop taking your Premarin. Premarin also helps to prevent bone loss by protecting against osteoporosis, and helps to ensure you'll stay active in the years to come.

Premarin has earned your confidence. Premarin has been prescribed for more than 50 years. The most studied of all estrogens, Premarin has earned the confidence of generation after generation of women all over the world. Today, Premarin is taken by more than 9,000,000 women in the U.S. alone. Of the 40 billion tablets sold, not one has been recalled. Ever.

New research keeps Premarin at the forefront. Discoveries in medical science continue to reveal additional benefits of Premarin throughout menopause—and beyond. For example, in recent years it was learned that Premarin increases your levels of "good" cholesterol (LDLs) and decreases your levels of "bad" cholesterol (HDLs). And more is being learned every day.

New research into estrogen loss and the effects of menopause. Wyeth-Ayerst, the maker of Premarin, has established the Women's Health Research Institute (WHRI). WHRI is dedicated to the discovery and development of medicines that help women live longer, healthier lives, and to ongoing research into the effects of estrogen loss and estrogen replacement therapy. A heritage of confidence—a commitment to your future. Good reasons why Premarin is an important part of your life...now more than ever.

There can be side effects with hormones. One side effect of estrogen replacement therapy is the possibility of developing cancer of the uterus. If you have had a hysterectomy, you don't have this risk. Adding the hormone progesterin to your estrogen greatly reduces this risk.

When you discuss hormone replacement therapy with your doctor or health care provider, be sure to discuss your personal and family history of breast cancer, breast lumps, abnormal vaginal bleeding, abnormal blood clotting, or heart disease. Women who are pregnant should not take hormone replacement therapy because of possible risk to the fetus. If you have any questions about your Premarin prescription, speak with your doctor or health care provider.

Estrogens have several important uses but also some risks. They treat disorders with your doctor, whether the risks of estrogens are acceptable or not. If your doctor decides to treat long-term, check with your doctor to make sure the gains will be based on possible benefits. The high-dose estrogens used depend upon the reason for use. They should also be discussed with your doctor.

RISKS OF ESTROGEN

To reduce symptoms of menopause, Estrogens are hormones produced by the ovaries. The decrease in the amount of estrogen that occurs after menopause usually begins after age 40 and 50. It causes the symptoms. Sometimes the signs are prevented by an artificial, "synthetic" hormone replacement. The amount of estrogen begins to decrease after menopause. However, developing very advanced symptoms are not prevented by hormone therapy. The amount of estrogen begins to decrease after menopause. Have you spotted a funny, strange or incongruous road sign on your trips down the highway? PARADE invites you to enter it in our first ever

WHOA ROAD SIGN Contest

Just submit a snapshot of the road sign by June 29, 1998, and you could be one of 10 winners selected. Winners will get $100 each and have their entries featured in our Oct. 4 automotive issue.

- Send your entry to: Road Sign Contest, c/o PARADE, P.O. Box 5099, Grand Central Station, New York, N.Y. 10163-5099.
- Clearly write your name, address and phone number on the back of the photo.
- In the event of duplicate entries, only the entry with the earliest postmark will be considered.

CONTEST RULES

- Contest is open to U.S. residents, except those of Puerto Rico. (Employees of Parade Publications Inc. and members of their families are not eligible.)
- No purchase or entry fee is required for participation.
- Each photo entered must be a picture of an actual road sign. It must be taken by the contestant, or the contestant, if a winner, must provide written permission from the photographer that the photo can be published. The contestant's name, address and phone number must be written clearly in ink on the back of the photo. Mail your entry to Road Sign Contest, c/o PARADE, P.O. Box 5099, Grand Central Station, New York, N.Y. 10163-5099. We cannot accept postage-due mail. Entries must be received no later than June 29. We are not responsible for lost, late or misdirected mail. Winners will be announced in PARADE on Oct. 4.
- All entries become the property of Parade Publications and will not be acknowledged or returned.
- Ten winners shall be selected for awards by PARADE's editors based on humor, novelty and charm. The decision of the editors shall be final.
- Each winner shall receive a $100 prize. Each winning entry will be published in our Oct. 4 issue. Income and other taxes, if any, are the responsibility of the winner. In the event of duplicate winning submissions, only the one with the earliest postmark will be designated as a winner.
- The contest is void where prohibited and subject to all federal, state and local laws and regulations.
- Contestants' names may be used for mailing-list purposes.
- Acceptance of prize constitutes consent to use a winner's name, likeness and winning entry for editorial, advertising and publicity purposes. Winners may be required to sign an affidavit of eligibility and a liability/publicity/permission release, which must be returned within 14 days from date of notification or an alternate winner may be chosen. If a minor wins a prize, it will be awarded to his or her parent or legal guardian, who must execute the necessary affidavits and releases.

THE CIVIL WAR, after four bloody years, had just ended with Lee's surrender. In Washington, President Lincoln and his wife, Mary, felt sufficiently relaxed to be able to attend a stage play. It was on April 14, 1865, at Ford's Theatre that President Lincoln was shot by John Wilkes Booth. He would die the next morning. Tonight, the TNT cable television channel marks the event by bringing us a two-hour drama, The Day Lincoln Was Shot, starring Lance Henriksen as Lincoln, Rob Morrow as Booth, and Donna Murphy as the First Lady, Mary Todd Lincoln.

I talked with Ms. Murphy, a Tony Award-winning stage and screen actress, about the story and the real-life character of Mary Lincoln.

The teleplay, based on a best-seller by Jim Bishop, focuses on the conspiracy to assassinate the President, Donna said. "The other thing is that when [director] John Gray and I first met, we agreed on wanting a loving relationship to be established. We have an image of a shrewish woman, unjustifiably neurotic. I wanted to give a more sympathetic view."

"The research I did showed what was responsible for her behavior," Donna added. "Mary had suffered so much already, two of her boys having died before the President. There had been threats on Lincoln's life even before he was first elected. She was protective of him, even paranoid. She had premonitions of his death. She became involved in the occult. Lincoln was so central to her life, she later referred to him as, and I'm probably misquoting, 'her father, husband, brother, her everything." And she was only 46 when he died."

I know how Lincoln's life ended but was less clear about Mary Lincoln's after the assassination. Did she end badly?

Unfortunately, yes. "She did fall apart later on," Donna said. "And eventually her only surviving son had to have her committed."

Which is why, I guess, material about the story of how Lincoln was shot refers to his widow as "the other victim." ■

the intense scenes from the debut of seven kids in Queen, Queen, in New York. Her stage career was launched in the musical hit They're Playing Our Song. Since then, she has won two Tony Awards—for Private on Parade in 1989 and as Anna in The King and I in 1996. Donna lives in Manhattan with her husband, Shawn Elliott. They have no children, but she is the great stepmother of Shawn's daughter, Jessica, 21, an actress and singing director. Across the Street was Donna's first movie (and another play) the role of an actress. Johnny Depp costarred in Another Day, tentatively titled October 22, is already in the can. Barbra? "Let's say my role is that of a woman being as really bad as." Among her TV roles was President Clinton on ABC's Mirror Club. Donna's latest shows a British spy called Pravda on Foxnet. "I played the only woman in it," she recalled, "a lesbian called Stanley White. To me, it appears India, I was in full-body makeup. Which is a good thing, because it was my first and only role in the movie. I felt somewhat elated."

The single quickest way to reduce crime in this country is to keep violent criminals in jail for their full sentences," said Fred Goldman, whose son, Ron, was slain along with Nicole Brown Simpson in 1994. Goldman was in New York to support "Jenna's Law," a bill proposed by Governor Pataki that would deny parole to violent first-time offenders. It was named for Jenna Grieshaber, a nursing student slain last year. Her accused killer was on parole at the time after a term in prison for a stabbing.

Goldman's campaign for tougher laws is the subject of Search for Justice With Fred Goldman, a TV special airing next Wednesday on the UPN affiliates. "I haven't slept much since Ron died," he told us. "But it's important to bring some sort of positive out of all this horror."

Czech Politics Ignores Sex Scandals
After only eight years of democracy, Czechs are calling for campaign finance reform, said Jaroslav David-Moserova, the vice president of the Czech Senate. But sex scandals "are not an issue," she told us. "A reporter wrote about a sexual affair, it would reflect badly on him and his publication, but not on the politician."

Why you should pay $349 for this radio.

Obviously, it better not be just another radio. This one isn't. Quite simply, the Bose® Wave® radio gives you sound that's richer, more natural, more lifelike than you've ever heard from a radio. Many people think it actually sounds more like a stereo system. It's no exaggeration to say you have to hear it to believe it.

Finally, Bose sound from a small radio.

The Wave radio is from Bose, one of the world's leading makers of audio equipment. A few years ago, we undertook the task of getting Bose quality sound from a small radio. To do it, we used our patented acoustic waveguide speaker technology. Just as a flute strengthens a breath of air to fill an entire concert hall, the waveguide produces room-filling sound from a small enclosure.

Touch a button and hear your favorite music come alive in rich, lifelike stereo sound—sound that lets you hear every note the way it's meant to be heard.

Which is why it's well worth $349. No matter what kind of music you enjoy, the Wave radio will truly increase your listening pleasure. Consider that Popular Science honored the Wave radio with a "Best of What's New" award. Business Week named it a "Best New Product of 1994." And it measures just 4 1/2"H x 14"W x 8 1/2"D, so it's small enough to fit almost anywhere. You can listen in your bedroom, living room, kitchen, or any room. And with your choice of graphite gray or imperial white, the Wave radio not only fits any room, it fits any decor.

Great sound made easy.

In addition to great sound, we built in an array of easy-to-use features no other radio gives you. Operate the radio from across the room with the credit card-sized remote control. Preset your favorite six AM and six FM stations and switch between them at the touch of a button. Bring great sound to your favorite recordings by connecting the Wave radio to your CD or cassette player. Or connect your TV or VCR to make your favorite programs and movies come alive.

Call now and make six interest-free payments.

We don't expect you to take our word for how good the Wave radio sounds. You really have to hear it to believe it. The Wave radio is available directly from Bose. So call 1-800-681-BOSE, ext. R7576, to learn more about our in-home trial and satisfaction guarantee. When you call, ask about our six-month installment payment plan. Or, if you prefer, return the coupon below.

You've had a lot of radios—small radios, portable radios. It's time you owned the best-sounding radio—the Bose Wave radio.

Are You Ready For TV-Turnoff Week?

BY MICHAEL RYAN

‘YOU’VE GOT TO be mad,” Kim McKugh of Glenmont, N.Y., remembered her children saying when she suggested that they go without TV for a week. “But they got through it,” she said. “They even did well.”

Kim, her husband, Bernie, and their three reluctant offspring were among the 4 million participants in National TV-Turnoff Week last year. Organizers expect even more participants for this year’s fourth-annual event, which begins on April 22. I spoke with dozens of people from across the country to find out why they chose to keep their TVs off and how the experience had made a difference in their lives.

“To me, the issue is not what happens when you’re watching TV but what doesn’t happen,” said Bill Lind of Jasper, Ark., a community college teacher. “It’s the projects you don’t get involved in, the music you don’t play, the fact that you don’t try to score or draw.”

The average American today spends four hours daily in front of the tube, according to Henry Labalme, the executive director and co-founder of TV-Free America, the national nonprofit group that organizes National TV-Turnoff Week. At that rate, the person will have watched more than eight years of TV by age 65. Labalme and co-founder Matt Pawa hope that, in a generation or so, TV-Free America can help shorten the time the average person spends watching TV to just two hours a day. Evidence indicates that the majority of past participants tended to watch much less TV even after TV-Turnoff Week.

“We want to encourage Americans not just to give up TV for a week but to get involved in their communities,” said Labalme. Since its first National TV-Turnoff Week in 1995, his organization has attracted the support of groups ranging from the American Medical Association to the Children’s Defense Fund.

One of their commitments has been to improve literacy, an effort recognized and supported by the Literacy Volunteers of America and educators nationwide. TV-Turnoff Week is now observed in 50,000 schools throughout the country, with organizers providing a variety of activities for students and their families.

At P.S. 51 in the Bronx, N.Y., Principal Esther Forrest and her teachers handed out ribbons for children to tape across the screens of their TV sets —a reminder that the tube will offer limits for a week. "We asked kids to keep a journal of what they did during the week," Forrest said. "Our school has a heavy emphasis on writing and reading." She believes that overexposure to TV can harm her students' ability to learn. "Things move so fast on TV," Forrest explained. "I think it shortens kids' attention spans."

Linda Jewett, the coordinator of library media services for the Sacramento City Unified School District, seized the opportunity to promote literacy among schoolchildren. "Many of our kids do not have any printed matter in their home," she said. Jewett offered a free book to every child who pledged to turn off the TV for a week. "When the children came in to pick up their books, they were absolutely thrilled to have a book they could take home," she said.

Many young people I spoke with took a dim view of overinvolvement with TV. "No one I know who's really active and involved watches TV," said Lisa Hendrickson, 18, of Madison, Wis., a freshman at the University of Wisconsin. "Anyone who did well in school and athletics or other activities practically never watched TV."

Henry Labalme does not argue that all TV programming is without merit. The real problem, he explained, is the amount of time Americans spend chafed to their sets. "Television promises that it would be this marvelous new world where all you have to do is sit back and be entertained," he said. "But people who turn off their TVs begin to discover how marvelous the real world is."

What did Kim McElhugh's daughter Heather, 8, think about her TV-free week? "It was sort of boring," she said at first, but then Heather grew enthusiastic when she recalled what she'd done. "We played outside more than usual. And I read more than five books that week!"

For more information, write to TV-Free America, Dept. P, Suite 28, 16311 Cornerstone Ave., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20009; or call 1-800-629-6757.

Brendan, Jacqueline, Kim, Heather and Bernice McElhugh (l-r) have discovered other ways to spend their time together in front of the tube.

High School Girls Basketball Team

BY MICHAEL O'SHEA

TAMIKA WILLIAMS, A 6-foot-1 forward from Dayton, Ohio, has been chosen Player of the Year on PARADE's 22nd annual All-America High School Girls Basketball Team. Forty players from 21 states were selected by coaches, scouts and recruiters. Pennsylvania leads, with four players; Indiana, Ohio, Texas and Washington follow, with three each. There are six repeaters this year. Besides Tamika Williams, they are Swin Cash of McKeespoot, Pa.; Asjha Jones of Piscataway, N.J.; Takeisha Lewis of Lisbon, La.; Tawanna McDonald of Flint, Mich.; and Nina Smith of Waterloo, Iowa.

Tamika Williams follows in the footsteps of some other great PARADE Players of the Year, including Lisa Leslie, who went on to star in college, the Olympics and the pros. Tamika's coach at Chaminade-Julienne High School, Frank Goldsberry, says, "Tamika is cat-quik and an ultimate team player. She has the ability and will-ingness to play any position." Tamika averaged 19 points, 12 rebounds, 4 assists, 2 blocked shots and 3 steals a game this season. In her career, she has more than 1870 points, 1000 rebounds, 250 assists, 200 blocked shots and 260 steals. Tamika has a 3.2 grade-point average and will attend the University of Connecticut.

Lindsey Yamasaki's coach at Oregon City High, Brad Smith, says: "You don't find many 6-foot-2 guards with Lindsey's skills and quickness—and she can shoot the three. Lindsey has played on three high school teams which were ranked as national cham-pions, and she was the only high school player, among college players, selected as an alternate on the junior national team." Lindsey averaged 24 points, 11 rebounds, 4 assists and 4 steals a game this season. In her career, she has 1988 points, 827 rebounds, 326 assists and 324 steals. Lindsey has a 3.6 grade-point average and will attend Stanford University.

Swin Cash, a 6-foot-3 center, "is our school's all-time leading point scorer—boy or girl," says her coach, Gerald Grayson of McKeespoot Area South. "In one game, Swin had 50 points, 28 rebounds and 21 blocked shots." This season, she averaged 30 points, 17 rebounds, 3 as-sists, 6 blocked shots and 4 steals a game. In her career, she has 2678 points, 1782 rebounds, 263 assists, 566 blocked shots and 399 steals. Swin has a 3.0 grade-point average and will attend the University of Connecticut.

Takeisha Lewis, a 6-foot-2-center, "is unique in her leaping ability," says her coach, Teresia Hudson. "Takeisha can dunk, and she is very strong and aggressive. She hates to lose. The rest of the team looks to her for leadership and guidance. She is our team leader." Takeisha averaged 30 points, 19 rebounds, 5 assists, 5 blocked shots and 6 steals a game this season. In her career, she has 2976 points, 1696 rebounds, 512 assists, 384 blocked shots and 448 steals. She will attend Louisiana Tech.

Ranking No. 5 on our First Team is Donnette Snow, a 6-foot-5 center. Her coach, Allison Davis of Pensacola High in Florida, says: "Donnette has a true gift of athleticism and finesse, and she has great leaping ability. She plays the inside post well and can also shoot the jumper from the outside." This year, Donnette averaged 22 points, 16 rebounds, 4 assists and 5 blocks a game. In her career, she has 2016 points, 1456 rebounds, 224 assists and 448 blocked shots. Donnette has a 3.5 grade-point average and will attend the University of Tennessee. She plans to study medicine.

Asjha Jones, a 6-foot-1 forward, is "extremely versatile," says her coach, Beverly Hall of Piscataway High in New Jersey. "Asjha can slash to the hoop, and she has footwork like NBA superstar Hakeem

Olanjuwon, which allows her to back away as she shoots. She also has a nice outside shot and can handle the ball well." Last year, Asjha led her team to the Group IV state championship. Asjha averaged 22 points, 11 rebounds, 4 assists, 3 blocked shots and 3 steals a game this season. In her career, she has more than 2150 points, 1100 rebounds, 270 assists, 370 blocked shots and 285 steals.

Asjha has a 3.1 grade-point average. In addition to Tamika Williams and Swin Cash, Asjha will attend the University of Connecticut in the fall, along with two more of our top-10 players—Sue Bird and Keirsten Walters. Talk about an impressive freshman roster!

The college commitments for our other all-Americans include: Shondra Johnson, Alabama; Amy Wright, Arkansas; Brienne Stepherson, Boston College; Britt Harshorn, Colorado; Krista Gingrich, Duke; Brandi McCain, Florida; April Traylor, Florida State; Tawana McDonald, Georgia; Cindy Dallas, Illinois; Selena Scott, Kansas; Ayana Anderson and Brooke Lassiter, Louisiana Tech; Sherisha Hills, Notre Dame; Tiffany Thompson, Old Dominion; Kelly Komara, Purdue; Cori Enghusen and Lauren St. Clair, Stanford; Shalon Pillow, Tennessee; Michelle Greco, UCLA; Jillian Danker, Vanderbilt; Sheila Lambert, Washington; and Tamara Moore, Wisconsin.

Photographs of the 10 players on our First Team will be displayed for a year, beginning in June, at the Basketball Hall of Fame in Springfield, Mass.
