Filer man seeks millions from county, state agencies

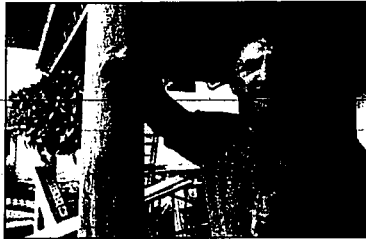

By Brian Hayes
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS—A tort claim, submitted by a Filer man, is seeking $4 million from four state and county agencies that the man says wrongly took away an 8-year-old girl he was caring for because of unfounded allegations of molestation.

Orville Winslow is seeking $500,000 each from the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare and the Twin Falls County commissioners, the sheriff's office and prosecutor's office. The girl is named as a co-claimant and is seeking identi-

Agency officials made no direct comments about the events spelled out in Winslow's tort claim, filed Monday. But Sheriff Wayne Touseley Tuesday defended his deputies and downplayed the claim. "I feel the tort claim is totally frivolous," Touseley said. The agencies have 90 days from Monday to respond to the claim. Page A2

Livestock rep offers assistance

County officials would benefit from help, he says

By John T. Huddy

TWIN FALLS—A technical support team to help Magic Valley counties analyze potential livestock sites would be a good step, an industry representative said.

Lewis Eilers, head of the Idaho Dairymen's Association, said he supports creating a team of experts to help counties determine if large confined animal feeding operations, or CAFOs, are right for their area. Eilers, a former dairy farmer, said a team would help give people accurate information about a proposed operation.

"What happens in most of these sitings is that people get the wrong information," Eilers said.

The team would be made up of experts from regional governmental offices including the Department of Agriculture, the Division of Environmental Quality and the Environmental Protection Agency.

Eilers, who helped initiate the idea proposed recently at an Idaho Association of Counties meeting, said a support team would help counties make better decisions.

"If the county planning and zoning people feel like they're not getting enough information, then I said, 'Why don't you put a technical support team together to get the proper survey?'"

The team would survey a CAFO application and the proposed site. The team would make its determinations based on technical and scientific evidence. If a site is not environmentally sound or is inadequate in any way, the team would report its findings to a county's planning and zoning commission.

Planning and zoning commissions lack the scientific knowledge to determine if an operation or site is safe for an area. Commissions get help from state agencies, but the agencies usually remain neutral in their opinions, Eilers said.

"Sometimes an agency's technical people are a little hesitant to say this is a bad site," he said. "Yes, this is a good site," he said. "If a team is created, their job would not be based on opinion, but on scientific evidence."

"This would get down to the scientific level," he said. "The team would raise the questions if an operation is environmentally right and scientifically right."

While county officials and industry representatives agree a technical team may be a good idea, others involved in the CAFO issue say more steps must be taken first.

NUCLEAR POWERS CLASH

Pakistani Navy personnel look over a map amidst scattered wreckage of a military plane India has shot down Tuesday.

Tension rises between India, Pakistan

Pakistan vows retaliation after India shoots down reconnaissance plane, killing all 16

The Associated Press

LAKHPAT, India—Tensions reignited between the world's newest nuclear powers Tuesday after India shot down a Pakistani reconnaissance plane and Pakistan threatened retaliation.

Pakistan said the attack killed 16 of its servicemen. The two countries disputed where the plane was shot down and on whose territory its wreckage landed.

India said the surveillance aircraft was shot down after it veered six miles into Indian airspace and failed to respond to warnings. An air force spokesman said the wreckage of the plane had been retrieved from India's territory.

Pakistan Foreign Minister Saraj Aziz said the French-built Atlantique aircraft was on a training mission when it was shot down near a small coastal town in Pakistan.

An Indian air force plane flew part of the wreckage into New Delhi early today. Officials said the wreckage was retrieved from Indian territory along the India-Pakistan border.

Pakistan's navy distributed photographs and video pictures of smoldering wreckage it said was from an unidentified location near Badin, 110 miles east of the border with India. No journalists were taken to the site except a cameraman from the state-run Pakistan TV. Indian air force spokesman Squadron Leader R.K. Dhingra said it was possible the wreckage fell on both sides of the India-Pakistan border.

Pakistan suggested international observers be called in to see where the wreckage had fallen, but India rejected the idea.

The clash dispelled any immediate hope of moving relations between the two powers back onto a peaceful track.

India and Pakistan have fought three wars since they gained independence from Britain in 1947. This was the first aerial clash since they last went to war in 1971.

ABOLISH OR REVIVE?

Congress considers the draft

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON—Twenty-six years after the last young American was drafted, legislators to abolish the Selective Service System is quietly advancing in Congress.

But a showdown seems certain with some lawmakers who support a return to military conscription.

A provision to shut down the 23-year-old agency, which continues to register 18-year-old males for a potential military call-up, is tucked in a spending bill to be taken up when the House returns after Labor Day.

The House Appropriations Committee approved the agency-termination before the August recess with little debate, which surprised many military-minded lawmakers—and the agency.

If endorsed by the full House and the Senate, the move would slash the system's current $2.4 million budget by $17.4 million in the fiscal year that begins Oct. 1, providing only $7 million for "termination costs."

Abolition supporters suggest that, if Congress and the president decide to authorize a return to the draft, the system could be re-established quickly.

Few on Capitol Hill foresee Congress and the president reviving the draft. But there has been a recent increase in demands, particularly among Republicans on major military committees, for at-least-consideration of such a move.

School/gun incidents fall in most states; Idaho numbers rise to 42

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON—For all the attention given recent school shootings, fewer guns are being taken onto schoolgrounds, federal officials said Tuesday, pointing to new figures showing a decline in the number of students expelled for having firearms.

"America's schools should be safe havens for all children. By and large we have done a good job of reaching that standard," Education Secretary Richard Riley said. "I believe that all of us—parents, educators, students, all citizens—can look to this new school year with hope, not with fear."

The report came even as a new shooting incident occurred, with three young boys among the wounded at a summer camp at a Jewish community center in California.

The number of students kicked out of school for bringing weapons dropped by nearly a third during the 1997-98 school year—the year before the Columbine rampage in Colorado, Riley's department said. Fifty states, the District of Columbia and five U.S. territories reported that 2,590 students were expelled for bringing weapons that year, down from 5,724 weapons-related expulsions in 1996-97. There are about 52 million students in U.S. public schools.

It didn't take long for the natural father to make allegations of sexual abuse.

State livestock oversight agencies like idea of suggestions from the industry

TWIN FALLS — Experts from government agencies like the idea of a livestock technical support team, if I don't get tied up in red tape.

"Conceptually I think the team is a good idea if the details can be worked out," Marv Patten, chief of the Idaho State Department of Agriculture's Bureau of Dairying, said of an idea to create a regional support team to help counties determine if confined animal feeding operations are right for their area.

The support group has not been approved. The team could take funding and direction from the Legislature, which would ultimately approve its creation.

Buhl activist Bill Chisholm said the state should declare an emergency moratorium on CAFOs, while a team is created.

"In Twin Falls, part of the Idaho Association of Counties CAFO task force have identified serious shortcomings in terms of technical information available to counties," Chisholm said. Darcy Thornbrow, a Buhl resident who has lived near several large operations, said it's important to get agency experts and local people involved.

Governors tell Congress to keep hands off state money

ST. LOUIS (AP) - The nation's governors told Congress on Tuesday that state tax cuts should not be raided to pay for federal tax cuts, closing a four-day meeting that found Republican governors seeking more control over the GOP political agenda.

The National Governors' Association also urged to urge President Clinton and Washington lawmakers to move quickly to aid struggling farmers.

A resolution approved without debate said Congress must maintain the "fiscal integrity" of its relationship with governors by funding welfare and other social programs at levels promised by the lawmakers.

The measure grew out of concerns expressed by Republican and Democratic governors with the GOP-led Congress' tax cut plan. Republican governors support tax cuts, but strongly objected to reports that congressional leaders wanted to use state welfare money to help pay for the Republican governors strongly objected to reports that congressional leaders wanted to use state welfare money to help pay for the $792 billion (tax cut) package.

$792 billion package.

They also expressed concern that Congress may be tempted to use the money to help keep the federal budget within spending caps. "A deal is a deal," said Massachusetts Gov. Paul Cellucci, a Republican who is pushing tax cuts in his own state.

Republican Sen. Don Nickles of Oklahoma promised governors Sunday that the leadership would not seek the state money. Though the governors are still unsure of the leadership's plans, their anger ebbed after Nickles' remarks, confrontational language was edited out of drafts of the resolution.

Without explicitly mentioning tax cuts, the resolution says governors are "deeply concerned about the potential impact that proposed cuts would have on states' ability to provide key human services."

Democratic aides said the word "cuts" referred to the tax plan. Republican aides said it referred to possible program cuts, not the tax-cut package.

The tax debate was part of a broader effort by GOP governors to seize more control over the party's national agenda. In private meetings, they discussed using their influence to put like-minded Republicans on the committee that will write the party's platform in 2000.

With a fellow governor, George W. Bush of Texas, emerging as the leading Republican presidential candidate, the state leaders want the platform to reflect their pragmatic approach to governing.

Shatner's wife drowns accidentally

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Actor William Shatner's wife drowned in their pool while home alone, and police said Tuesday the death was accidental.

Former model Nerine Shatner, 40, and the "Star Trek" star had been married less than two years. "My beautiful wife is dead," Shatner, 68, said tearfully when he briefly stepped out of his gated hillside estate in the affluent Studio City neighborhood. "She meant everything to me."

Her laughter, her tears and her joy will remain with me the rest of my life."

Shatner told police he came home about 9:30 p.m. Monday and found his wife at the bottom of the deep end of the pool.

U.S., South Korea plan military exercise; North warns Japan

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) - The United States and South Korea said Tuesday they will conduct a joint military exercise next week amid rising tensions with North Korea and fears that the isolated communist nation will test its new ballistic missile.

The allies' annual exercise is likely to draw fresh condemnation from North Korea. This week, it accused the United States of conspiring to start another war on the Korean peninsula by insisting the communist country put off the test missile launch. On Tuesday, North Korea turned its rhetoric on Japan, threatening "merciless retaliation" if Tokyo tries anything provocative.

Japan, South Korea and the United States have warned of economic penalties against the North's government if it goes ahead with a long-range missile launch.

North Korea says it has a sovereign right to test the missile.

Last year, North Korea rattled Tokyo by firing a rocket over Japan into the Pacific Ocean. The new missile that is reportedly being developed is said to be able to reach Alaska and Hawaii.

The U.S.-South Korean military exercise, code-named Ulji Focus Lens, will run for 12 days starting Monday and include 14,000 U.S. soldiers and 56,000 South Korean troops. The exercise is one of the largest of several conducted annually by the armed forces of the two countries.

It largely involves computer simulations, but there will also be troop movements.

Rudeness at work grows

CHICAGO (AP) - Rude behavior is on the rise in the workplace and men are the ones to blame, a new study says.

Although men and women are targets of disrespect and rudeness—in equal numbers, researchers say men instigate the rudeness 70 percent of the time.

"Our goal is to make organizations aware of this," said study co-author Christine M. Pearson, a management professor at the University of North Carolina business school. "You can calculate the costs."

Twelve percent of the people who experience rude behavior quit their jobs to avoid the perpetrator, the researchers found. Fifty-two percent reported losing work time worrying and 22 percent deliberately decreased their work effort.

The number of babies who developed AIDS after being infected before or during birth dropped dramatically, mainly due to increased prenatal treatment.

Court rules in favor of minority groups

DETROIT (AP) — A federal appeals court ruled Tuesday that organizations representing minorities be allowed to fight lawsuits that challenge the University of Michigan's affirmative action policies for admissions.

In a 2-1 ruling, the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati said lower federal courts erred when they said the groups could not help the university fight the lawsuits.

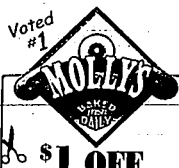

The groups include minority students who attend or plan to apply to the University of Michigan's undergraduate college or law school, and organizations that support affirmative action.

The lawsuits against the university, filed by three whites in 1997, challenge race-based policies used to help determine admissions at Michigan. Separate trial-level courts have handled the two suits, one challenging undergraduate admissions policies, the other the law school admissions policies.

The appeals court's opinion said the minority groups met the legal burden for joining the case, and that they could be harmed if the university's loses.

"There is little room for doubt that access to the University for African-American and Latino/a students will be impaired to some extent and that a substantial decline in the enrollment of these students may well result if the university is precluded from considering race as a factor in admissions," the court said.

Number of AIDS babies plummets

CHICAGO (AP) — The number of babies who got AIDS from their mothers dropped by two-thirds between 1992 and 1997, largely because of prenatal treatment with the drug AZT, a new study found.

An expert who was not involved in the study said it suggests the possibility of virtually eliminating mother-to-child HIV transmission in the United States, an idea that was almost unimaginable a few years ago.

"This is a remarkable success story for ... everybody involved in caring for these women and the women themselves," said the study's lead author, Dr. Mary Lou Lindgren, an epidemiologist with the Federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in Atlanta.

"We still have more to go, but we've been dramatically successful," she said.

The number of babies who developed AIDS after being infected with HIV before or during birth peaked at 907 in 1992, then declined 87 percent over the next five years, to 207 in 1997, the researchers reported in Annals of the American Medical Association.

The researchers believe the number of babies born HIV-infected is higher, since it can take years for HIV to develop into AIDS.

Only 32 states collect information on HIV infection in newborns, but the CDC estimates that 1,650 babies caught the virus from their mothers in 1991, at the epidemic's peak. By 1996, that number had fallen to 480, a 71 percent drop, Lindgren said.

Scientists discovered in 1994 that treatment with AZT, now called zidovudine, reduced a newborn's risk of catching HIV from 26 percent to 8 percent. In that study, the drug was given to HIV-infected women during pregnancy and labor and to the newborn for the first six weeks of life, said Dr. Lynn M. Mofenson of the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development.

Since then, doctors have found that prenatal AZT can actually reduce the risk to as low as 2 percent, Mofenson noted in an editorial accompanying the study. Delivering at-risk babies by Caesarian section lowers the risk further, she said.

Also, if women are getting treatment with powerful AIDS-fighting drug regimens that can reduce virus levels in the blood to undetectable amounts, the risk may fall to less than 1 percent, she said, citing other research.

Hair samples reveal truth about Andrew Jackson's death

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) - Historians have long believed that Andrew Jackson slowly died of mercury and lead poisoning from two bullets in his body and the 19th-century medications he took for intestinal problems.

Now, two strands of the seventh president's hair appear to have proven otherwise - 154 years after Jackson's death. Instead, researchers said, Old Hickory died of kidney failure at age 78.

The researchers analyzed hair clipped from Jackson in 1815 and 1839 and preserved by

The Hermitage, his Tennessee plantation.

While the mercury and lead levels found in the hair samples were "significantly elevated," they were not toxic, said Dr. Ludwig M. Deppisch, a pathologist with Northeastern Ohio Universities College of Medicine and Forensic Health. The research is published in today's edition of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Jackson, who served from 1829-37, was among the sickest of all presidents. Many of his symptoms were consistent with mercury and lead poisoning, including excessive salivation, rapid heart rate, ulcers, diarrhea, hand tremor, irritability, mood swings and paranoia.

Some historians believed Jackson's frequent ingestion of calomel (mercurous chloride) and opium and "lead acetate" - medicines he took for stomach ailments - caused the symptoms and led to his death.

"We didn't thought he was going to have mercury poisoning because of his kidney failure and neurological and psychiatric problems," Deppisch said.

More money for education? Tie increase to improvement

Marilyn Howard knows how to think big. Now if only she could think realistically.

The state's superintendent of public instruction has unveiled a pie-in-the-sky budget for the 2000-2001 school year that totals a staggering $882.6 million. Her request for a 7.5-percent increase - roughly twice the rate of inflation - pencils out to a $61.5 million increase.

Yes, those are millions of tax dollars. But, no, Howard's dream budget doesn't stand a chance of being fully funded. Gov. Dirk Kempthorne has already telegraphed his disapproval, and Idaho's conservative Legislature is unlikely to shovel that much money onto the bonfires of public education.

Predictably, Howard is dancing with those who brought her to public office: the Idaho Education Association, state school administrators and the Democratic Party.

Her proposal seeks to boost the state-funded share of Idaho's teacher salaries by 52 percent. It's worth noting that Howard's handout would follow a 3-percent hike in teacher salaries for the 1999-2000 school year.

It's also worth noting that public education currently chews through half of Idaho's general tax receipts.

Howard says she's trying to pull Idaho's teacher salaries toward parity with the paychecks of teachers in other states. But comparing Idaho's teacher salaries against regional and national indexes is disingenuous, because school districts rarely hire from a national pool of applicants.

The average teacher salary in Idaho is nearly $30,000. Is that so bad for nine months of work, less virtually every holiday and three-day weekend ever conceived?

The question isn't how well educators are being paid, but how well students are being educated. Judging by the test scores we've seen, many Idaho schools aren't yet teaching reading, writing and arithmetic very well. For this we should be giving blanket raises to teachers?

If Howard wants to build support for increased education spending, she should devise a system of merit-based raises for individual teachers who deserve them.

Measurable improvements in teaching performance should be rewarded with measurable salary raises.

The IEA, of course, will oppose anything that smacks of a merit-based system. By their very nature, unions promote collective mediocrity, not individual accountability. Asking the IEA to embrace a merit-based system for salary hikes is like asking a vampire to embrace Daylight Saving Time.

Instead of a creative approach that links spending to improved quality, Howard is taking the predictable road of simply demanding more money. Her optimistic budget is only an opening bid, which is why Kempthorne and the Legislature will strike an equitable balance at less cost.

The question isn't how well educators are being paid, but how well students are being educated.

Accidents do happen

In response to a letter written on July 26, I would like to respond to the first and second paragraph of that letter.

I am the catcher for the opposing team of the young lady who got her nose broken.

In response to the first paragraph, Craig and Janet Fisher stated that their daughter was hit as she walked into the batter's box. When actually she walked through the batter's box. Most people know that you are supposed to walk around the batter's box and then enter. In addition to this, she walked through the batter's box with her head down. The pitcher and I were exchanging jesters to decide who was going to throw the ball first in order to make the exchange. If she had been paying attention, she would have seen that there was indeed an exchange happening.

In the second paragraph, Craig and Linda Fisher state that simple logic dictates that the pitcher should not throw (overhand) when a person is walking up to bat. If you enter the batter's box correctly, then it doesn't matter how the ball is exchanged.

My pitcher did nothing malicious, and if you knew him, you would know he would never do anything to hurt anyone. It is unfortunate that accidents happen. EULA MARTINEZ, Twin Falls training? Of course he did.

If you don't think the wife of Florida's governor got special treatment when she tried to pass $20,000 worth of Paris purchases through customs without declaring it, let your wife try the same thing.

Was Al Gore's rise through Congress to vice president helped because of his father's fame as a senator? You bet it was!

Are politicians' votes influenced by lobbyists and big money? Absolutely! Why else would a few Western senior senators fight so hard for an old, outdated mining law? And the list goes on. The National Rifle Association, tobacco, oil companies, banking, etc. When they give big money, they expect and get value received.

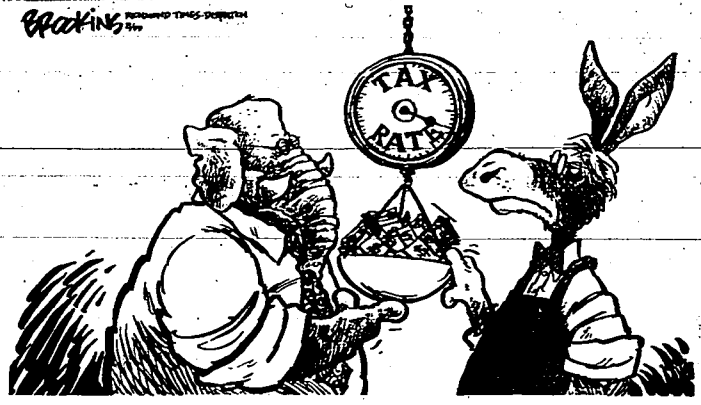

We all agree the death of John Kennedy was a tragedy. But if that had been LeRoy Kennedy from Flat Rock, Va., would the Coast Guard have put out the same effort to find him? I doubt it! They say they would, but I doubt if old LeRoy would've been allowed to fly that close to Maryland's vineyard.

The point I'm trying to make is we all know that money and influence talks loud and clear. Maybe there is nothing wrong with it. I don't know. If not, why do those with the money and influence fight so hard to deny it?

If you don't believe any of this, I've got a real deal for you. I've got some shares for sale on a nice little bridge north of Hansen.

When we get them all sold we'll put toll booths on both ends and start charging. We'll get rich! At last we will be part of the rich and famous, maybe even have our own politician.

KENNETH P. GOLLER, Twin Falls

Be sure to see movie with an open mind

Unlike the editorial staff at The Times-News, I have actually seen "Breakfast of Champions."

Bruce Willis for denouncing Phil Burt's nuclear waste agreement. Therefore, what I have to say about the film might be based more on merit, less on emotion.

The point The Times-News seems never to grasp is that "Breakfast of Champions" was filmed in Twin Falls - it's not about Twin Falls. It's not a travesty of the chamber of commerce used to lure still more fast food and department store chains to town. It's not propaganda. The parts of Twin which depict Midland City pretty much represent Anytown, USA (which could be negative, I suppose). Those that depict Cohes, N.Y., do sometimes look pretty seedy. Could it possibly be that that's what the script called for? Incidentally, in case you haven't looked in awhile, the

READER COMMENT

Dave Woodhead

Amalgamated Sugar Factory does look eerily like Idaho!

But what about the movie? Was it worth twenty bucks? You bet. Alan Rudolph has succeeded in bringing this rather silly classic to the screen. Vonnegut's still there, but so is Rudolph. As they said of a Russian adaptation: "It's not better, it's more." Rudolph, besides directing, also wrote the screenplay. His script ties up a few loose ends and gives the story more closure.

This accomplishment is largely the result of character development. And credit for that must be shared with the cast. Bruce Willis, Nick Nolte and Albert Finney are particularly well cast. Willis provides a witty portrayal of a man at the edge, uncertain of his place in the world, neither wacko nor well. And Nolte's performance as the cross-dressing sales manager alone was worth the price of admission.

But Finney was the real bonus. No complaints here about his rendition of Vonnegut's alter ego, Kilgore Trout. From our first view of him talking to his parolee to that last bitter-sweet moment in the mirror, he breathes life into this literary gem.

"Breakfast of Champions," by the way, has nothing to do with Hollywood. It's an irony in every sense of the word. The kind of film we should see more often. And I hate to disappoint The Times-News, but they'll have to watch something else to find "sex, violence, gutter language." Next time they pass a film, I hope they take the time to see it first.

Dave Woodhead hopes to open an art house cinema in Old Towne later this year.

Retirement security for every generation

Nothing is more sacred to seniors and working Americans than their health and retirement security. That's why the House passed Social Security and Medicare "lockbox" legislation to lock away $2 trillion of the budget surplus to share up these crucial retirement programs.

Seniors and future retirees can now rest assured that their health and retirement security will be there when they need it. But we don't plan on stopping there.

Republicans are increasing every American's control over their retirement security. We think it's time to secure America's future for both current and future generations of seniors by allowing them to keep more of their hard-earned income.

Today's seniors suffer under an oppressive tax burden. Their retirement savings are taxed, their investments are taxed, their food is taxed and their prescription drugs are taxed. In fact, federal taxation today accounts for 22 percent of GDP - more than the previous record set during World War II. The same Americans who secured the shores of Normandy now pay more in taxes than ever before. It doesn't have to be this way.

We now know that Americans are overpaying the federal government to the tune of $3.3 trillion. The debate is about how government should spend the surplus. Republicans believe the bulk of the surplus should be used to shore up Social Security and Medicare and pay down the debt. And we have done so with the "lockbox."

But what about the rest of the overpayment? If we don't reinvest the overpayment, it will just get spent in Washington on more big government. The responsible thing to do is give Americans a surplus refund, so they can control their own retirement security.

Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan agrees with us. So do four Democrat senators - Landrieu, Breaux,

J. DENNIS HASTERT AND DICK ARMEY

Kerrey, and Torricelli - who voted for the Republican tax plan because they share our concern for the overtaxed American senior.

The tax debate centers on the principle of fairness. It isn't fair that the government double taxes savings and investment.

President Clinton's own Commerce Department reported just a few days ago that Americans have a savings rate of negative 1.0 percent. We have to act now to encourage every generation to save for a brighter, more prosperous future.

To spur savings we have included significant capital gains tax relief in our tax plan. And even more exciting, we increase the amount you can contribute to tax-free Individual Retirement Accounts because the government should encourage you to save, not double-tax you for responsibly thinking ahead.

Our plan increases the amount you can contribute to your retirement plan, allowing workers 50 years or older to compensate, or "catch up," for years when they either were not employed or were not able to save.

This provision is especially important to women who have returned to the workforce after taking time away to raise children or care for elderly relatives.

We also reform the pension plan process to give every worker more access to a pension plan.

We increased portability, so employees can take their retirement savings from one job to the next free of penalty from the government.

We simplify the pension system to help businesses both large and small improve their plans for their employees. Seniors - especially women who have longer life expectancies - want the peace of mind that comes from knowing they will have access to the health care they need as they grow older.

That's why our tax relief plan provides a tax deduction for long-term care premiums.

And if a family member takes in an elderly relative, to provide care in the comfort of their home, we provide an additional $2,750 personal exemption to help with those expenses.

Finally, it isn't fair for the government to tax death. Our tax plan goes a long way toward eliminating the dreaded inheritance tax because you shouldn't be forced to meet the under-taker and the IRS on the same day. Our tax plan goes a long way toward eliminating the dreaded inheritance tax because you shouldn't be forced to meet the under-taker and the IRS on the same day.

We want to help ensure that millions of Americans will be able to pass along their farms and small businesses to family members instead of having to sell these precious bonuses just to pay their tax bill.

The government should never deprive a family of its legacy.

Republicans have locked away 75 cents of every surplus dollar to strengthen Social Security and Medicare, pay down the debt and boost education and defense.

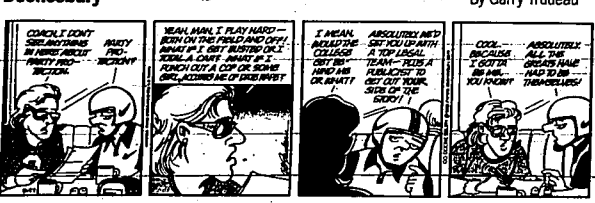

By investing the remaining quarter of the surplus on tax relief for seniors and workers, we can give Americans more direct control over their retirement security.

Our vision of America is a nation where everyone has more opportunity to provide for his or her future care and comfort.

Seniors should be free to spend more time with their grandchildren, not be forced to spend more time with their accountants to pay Uncle Sam an overcharge.

J. Dennis Hastert, R-Ill., is speaker of the House. Dick Armev, R-Texas, is House majority leader.

Weaker dollar could derail our economic locomotive

The latest threat to America's economic boom is a weaker dollar. A weaker dollar? By and large, Americans don't pay attention to exchange rates. Why should they? At any moment, only a tiny fraction of Americans go abroad and are aware of different currency values. As a result, few realize that a strong dollar has favored the boom — and that a weaker dollar could undermine it. To understand why shows how the economy's good fortune depends on many forces that are not easily controlled.

Consider how the strong dollar has helped. Between April 1995 and June 1997, the dollar rose 28 percent against an index of currencies of 34 countries. This meant that Americans could buy imports less expensively. Cheap imports in turn helped hold down inflation and interest rates. Consumer buying power and buying rose. Strong spending offset the depressing effect of larger trade deficits. For the United States, a virtuous circle ensued. High prices for stock prices attracted foreign investment. In 1998, private foreign investors bought $265 billion worth of U.S. stocks, bonds and other securities, estimates the Commerce Department. They also made $196 billion in "direct investments" — funds to build factories and offices or buy U.S. companies. These investments propped up U.S. stock prices and the dollar's exchange rate.

Now suppose the dollar weakens significantly. Well, the process could swing into reverse. Imports become more expensive. Inflation worsens a bit. Consumer spending suffers. Foreign economies export less and do less. A weaker economy might also make the United States less attractive to foreign investors. This might depress the stock market. With foreigners buying fewer dollars (for stocks or direct investments), the dollar's exchange rate might slip further.

Hardly anyone expects a full-scale currency crisis. This would happen if investors lost confidence in the dollar. Then they'd dump dollar investments and convert their funds into other currencies. The dollar would plunge. Asian currencies suffered this fate in 1997. But the dollar isn't the Thai baht. As for a milder drop, the odds are unclear. In recent weeks, the dollar has declined. Some economists think it will go further. The investment banking firm of Goldman Sachs forecasts it will fall about 13 percent against the euro and 10 percent against the yen in the next year. But there's no consensus.

This prognosis is easy to explain.

ROBERT J. SAMUELSON

Exchange rates react to so many influences that it's hard to know which will prevail. In most economies, trade flows were once decisive. A large trade deficit caused a country's currency to lose value. Exports didn't generate enough foreign exchange to pay for imports. Traders had to sell more local currency to buy foreign currency. This imbalance depressed the currency's value. If that were all that mattered, the dollar would now drop sharply, because the U.S. trade deficit has mushroomed. Between 1987 and 1998, it jumped from $198 billion to $248 billion, and it continues to rise.

But exchange rates also increasingly respond to capital flows. Shifts of investment funds across borders. These have recently favored the dollar. In 1998, Americans invested about $298 billion abroad. (This sum includes the purchase of foreign stocks and bonds, direct investments and bank loans to foreigners.) But foreign private investors put $565 billion in the United States. Many regard the United States as a stable "safe haven." Still, any shift in capital flows away from American investments could hurt the dollar.

Finally, foreign exchange traders — banks, investment houses, companies — buy and sell currencies just like stocks. The volume is huge. In 1998, currency trading averaged $1.5 trillion a day. Traders constantly guess which way a currency will go in an effort to make a quick profit. Their frenzied trading sets daily currency rates. All this is a cautionary tale. We don't know where the dollar is headed and what the effects will be. For example, a lower dollar would also aid U.S. exports by making them more competitive. This could spur the economy. The larger lesson is that the economy still resembles a finely tuned machine. All the parts must work smoothly for the machine to run fast. Low inflation sustains optimism and strong consumer spending. This bolsters corporate profits, investment and stock prices. Good growth attracts foreign investment, which breaks the dollar strong. If any part breaks or weakens, the machine will slow.

It might even — unhappily — slip into reverse.

Tragedy strikes Taylor Street

On July 29, I was sitting on my front porch visiting with Lucy Pullman, my neighbor who I have lived across the street from for the last six years. She came over to visit often when I was working in my front yard. That Thursday, we were busy discussing the rose-colored hollyhock bush that had come up wild near her mail box. We were trying to decide if seed from my hollyhocks had blown into her yard. My hollyhocks have wiles and warts, doesn't it. So we had decided that it had to have come from somewhere else. Perhaps a bird had brought it to her yard. We often talked about flowers and gardening and the battle we were both fighting with weeds.

The next time I saw Lucy Pullman, I was kneeling in the dirt next to her. In shock, I was trying to find a pulse or any sign of life as my heart was telling me that she had already passed from this world. My first thought as I now stood there next to her was "this could have been one of my children. This could have been me. This could have been anyone who lives on Taylor Street West laying dead in front of their home. This was an accident waiting to happen. It doesn't matter how close she was to the side of the road. It doesn't matter if she's in the center of the street. She was a woman with probably another 20 years of life in her. She had been digging weeds along the ditch behind her hollyhock bush when I had been talking about just the day before.

Residents of Taylor Street West are grieving, each in their own way. People have brought flowers and a cross to mark the place where Mrs. Pullman died. Children are not being allowed to ride their bikes or play in their front yards without adult supervision. I pray that everyone that drives down Taylor Street slows down and thinks a minute about how precious life is. And that this gift can be taken in one quick second. I will never again be able to talk about hollyhocks or weeds with Lucy, and I am angry. And I hope that we on Taylor Street West never have to experience another tragedy like we have this last week. Get out and vote

A few years ago, we heard the Republicans saying, "We must reduce the national debt!" This year, we don't hear that. We hear, "We need a pay raise and we must reduce taxes for the rich! The fact that hurts the middle class and the poor is so important. The rich give us donations and have powerful lobbyists." If the middle class and poor would vote, we could get people in the Congress who want to reduce the national debt so we could reduce taxes for everyone. President Clinton has cleaned up the mess Ronald Reagan left and is trying to keep the country economically sound. The shortsightedness and greed of the Republican Congress is making it very difficult. MERLE STODDARD Twin Falls

Starr calls Lewinsky immature

WASHINGTON (AP) — Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr says Monica Lewinsky was "very immature" and failing to understand the seriousness of her role in a scandal that "cost the country terribly."

Interviewed Tuesday morning on NBC's "Today" program, Starr also praised the career staff of the Justice Department, while pointedly refusing to say the same for their boss, Attorney General Janet Reno.

Kenneth Starr

Starr, who has spent five years investigating President Clinton and his wife, Hillary, lamented that his work was viewed as "a match between two individuals" — himself and the president. Starr said he had acted professionally, but "in the process of running silent, we allowed a sense to develop that there were other motivations at work."

Asked his thoughts about Ms. Lewinsky, whose sexual relationship with Clinton was at the heart of the investigation, Starr said, "She was very immature and I think failed to, in any way, appreciate the gravity of what she was doing, including, frankly, assisting in the process of putting our leader — who has to accept his own responsibility — in the most unfortunate situation."

When it comes to discussing Reno, Starr may have mastered the art of saying a lot without saying anything.

Question: "Do you think that the attorney general has conducted herself properly during all this?"

Answer: "I don't want to comment."

Q: "Some have said that she has protected the president."

A: "I don't want to comment. Let me say this. I believe that the career people at the Justice Department are honorable, decent people. We have a very good relationship with them over the past five years."

Q: "So you won't say the same thing about the attorney general?"

A: "I'm not going to comment."

Q: "You leave the impression that you do not believe that she's been honorable and decent throughout?"

A: "I'm simply not going to comment."

Black lawyers ask chief justice to drop 'offensive' song

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's largest organization of black lawyers wants Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist to quit singing "Dixie," a song it calls a "symbol of slavery and oppression."

The 18,000-member National Bar Association passed a resolution at its recent convention in Philadelphia urging Rehnquist to "quit from such offensive behavior in the future."

A Supreme Court spokesman said Tuesday that Rehnquist had no comment on the resolution.

Rehnquist, the nation's top federal judge, led judges and lawyers in a rendition of "Dixie" during a conference in Hot Springs, Va., in late June. He attends the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals conference each year, and each year lends a singing along.

Senator urges conservatives to follow lead

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — Four weeks after he left the Republican Party, U.S. Sen. Bob Smith found a new home Tuesday with the U.S. Taxpayers Party, and urged fellow conservatives to join him.

Smith quit the Republican Party on July 13, saying it had abandoned its conservative platform on key issues such as abortion and gun control. Instead, the senator from New Hampshire plans to run for president as the candidate of the U.S. Taxpayers Party.

"If conservatives believe in the right to life, the Second Amendment, a strong constitutional government going to our constitutional rights, I believe I'm your person," he said in a telephone news conference Tuesday morning. "Come home conservatives, and Bob Smith will be the next president of the United States."

Party chairman William Shearer said he expected Smith to win the party's nomination at its convention next month. Smith also wants the party to change its name to the Conservative Party.

Missed stop sign causes two-car crash

TWIN FALLS - A driver who ran a stop sign caused a two-vehicle crash Tuesday evening that sent two people to the hospital. The crash occurred when Melissa Gonzalez, 25, ran a stop sign at the intersection of U.S. Highway 93 and 3700 North, which is Orchard Drive, said Nancy Howell of the Twin Falls County Sheriff's Office. Gonzalez's car clipped the back of a Chevrolet Blazer heading north, causing the Blazer to roll on its top, she said. The driver of the Blazer, 39-year-old Mark Bogges of Hollister, and a passenger were taken to Magic Valley Regional Medical Center where they were treated and released. Gonzalez, who is from Blackfoot, was cited for inattentive driving, Howell said.

Commissioner applies for job with H & W

TWIN FALLS - County Commissioner Dave Maughan has applied for a full-time position with the Idaho State Department of Health and Welfare. Maughan said he applied for the Department of Welfare's Region 5 Director after Joyce McRoberts resigned recently. "I had a conversation with Joyce on July 1 when she resigned from the job. On July 14 she asked me if I would submit my resume and I said 'would,' Maughan said on Tuesday. "It provides a wonderful opportunity and challenge to work collaboratively with other agencies in bringing service to the people."

Maughan, who has been a commissioner since 1995, said he would have to resign from his $37,500-a-year county position to take the full-time job. He did not know exactly how much the new position would pay, but said it might be in the high 50's. McRoberts started at $57,000 per year. Maughan said he has tried to keep his application quiet. "I've run into some people over the last couple of weeks who have said, 'I've heard,' and I've said 'it's true. But I'm not advertising it,'" Maughan said. "I feel like if it's an opportunity that looks good I don't want to let it by talking about it." Maughan said he did not know when he would hear back on his application, or how many other people have applied.

He said he has experience in health and welfare issues, having helped start a management team for mental health care cases as a county commissioner.

McRoberts is now the department's deputy director. Her new position pays $75,000 a year.

Officials question dairies' water threat

By Brandon Flala and N.S. Nekkentved Times-News writers

TWIN FALLS - Three recently approved dairies east of Jerome with permits for about 11,500 animal units are located about two miles from a city well, but any threats to the well are unknown. City officials can't tell if the well would be affected until a groundwater study is completed for a wellhead protection ordinance the city is hoping the county will adopt. The airport and an agricultural spraying operation are also located near the Peters well and are a cause for concern, City Administrator Cecil said. But the dairies and the well are outside the city's impact area and beyond the city's control, he said.

Jerome leaders remain unsure about well contamination

Jerome County officials earlier this month approved permits for:
• The Heldemann dairy at 150 North, 500 East with 2,600 animal units on 1,265 acres.
• The Gilmer dairy at 100 South, 500 East with 5,880 animal units on 750 acres.
• The Forsyth dairy on U.S. Highway 93 with 3,000 animal units on 1,500 acres. An adult dairy cow equals 1.4 animal units. In an effort to protect the quality of its water supply, Jerome has adopted a wellhead protection ordinance. City officials would like the county to adopt a similar ordinance, Public Works Director Bob Culver said. But first the city wants to complete a groundwater study that shows the direction of and how fast the water travels to determine where the protection zone needs to be. "Until the study is done, it is not possible to say what is and what is not a threat to the Peters well. The city doesn't want to county to put additional restraints on farmers, "but our principal concern is to protect our water," Culver said. For its part, the county would consider a wellhead protection ordinance, but only if it were well thought out. County Commission Chairman Roy Prescott said. Wellhead protection zones for wells in the county could potentially affect 70 to 80 percent of the private property in the county. Wellhead protection, as well as siting dairies and other land uses, should be well documented and based on science, he said. "The process we have now in place, with looking at all the agencies, the EPA, DEQ, aerial company and school districts, we feel we have enough of a scientific and not emotional basis to make sound decisions," Prescott said. During recent hearings on the dairy permits, some local residents raised concerns that additional cows in Jerome County could create groundwater problems. Please see DAIRIES, Page B3

TF School Board gives MVAC its blessing

By Jennifer Sandmann Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - Magic Valley arts supporters received the Twin Falls School Board's blessing Tuesday to search out ways to increase community use of Roper Auditorium could be increased. The Magic Valley Arts Council, faced with the bookings at the College of Southern Idaho's Fine Arts Center, is concerned that Roper Auditorium isn't being used enough by community groups. That could be attributed to the cost of using the auditorium compared with fees charged by other arts centers, said Dr. Chris Scholes, arts council vice president. CSI's Fine Arts Center - with 949 seats - charges a rental fee of $300 per performance. If admission is charged and $200 if it is not, it also charges $35 an hour to prepare for events and rehearsals. The school district charges $450 a day or $100 an hour for use of Roper Auditorium - a 1,330 seat building. The School Board agreed that the school district would help the arts council gather the information it needed about the auditorium use and cost.

"We're trying to make this a zero-sum game," Scholes said. The council will look for a way to decrease costs to groups without increasing district charges. Whether that is possible remains to be seen. Please see BOARD, Page B3

Tech center celebrates first anniversary

By Lorraine Cavenar Times-News writer

BURLEY - Things have changed a lot since Dean Baker first walked into a bare electronics classroom at Burley High School 27 years ago. Since then, the electronics technology department, now located at Cassia Regional Technical Center, has not only grown, but was recently presented with one of two outstanding secondary training program of the year awards given in the state.

When Baker came from California in 1973 after working on NASA's Apollo project, the classroom had a telephone plugged into the wall and nothing more, he said. Baker was hired to develop a program which has grown to a 1,200-square-foot class and a laboratory of the same size featuring about $200,000 worth of state-of-the-art equipment, said Gaylen Smeyers, director of a laboratory, who nominated Baker to receive the award. While utilizing state-developed curricula, he enables students to leave the Cassia program - with 19 College of Southern Idaho credits, Baker uses computer-assisted instruction, modules and electronics testing equipment to prepare students for jobs with companies such as Micron and Hewlett-Packard, he said.

With the help of an advisory committee, Baker has developed a technical support team to repair and maintain Cassia County School District's computers and computer system. When Baker works with students he tries to make sure they have what they need to obtain a

Idaho following last week's packed calendar of votes on everything from farm legislation to tax cuts. Idaho Sen. Larry Craig will hold town meetings throughout the state, including one planned for Burley in early September, to discuss a bill that provides $7.5 billion in emergency relief to

McGuire recalls beer cans, bumper stickers

TWIN FALLS - The Images have stuck with Joan McGuire for 25 years.

The 62-year-old Twin Falls woman recently described driving into Shoshone Falls Park during Evel Knievel's "Jump Week." "It was her brother's idea. She brought along her 6-year-old daughter. 'I'd never seen anything like it,' she said recently. "There were beer cans stacked like mountains all around," she said. "Women didn't have clothes on - they had bumper stickers on. A large hairy man jumped on their car and lay spread-eagled on the hood. Finally, a biker in a tall stove-pipe hat looked through the window and saw McGuire's young daughter. "Back off," he said. "They've got their kids with them." But McGuire didn't forget why she was there in the first place. "Man," she recalled, "I was so mad at my brother."

Remembering the big jump

Sept. 8 marks the 25th anniversary of Evel Knievel's ill-fated jump over the Snake River Canyon.

MY BEAUTIFUL IDAHO
written by Sue Ann Schwartz

My Idaho, my Idaho, so beautiful and unique,
From the lovely winding rivers to the magnificent snow capped peaks,
Its secrets and its mysteries are lost in the singing pines and the volcanic ashes, it tells of days gone by.
Then there's the glorious sunset that looks up to a blazing sky with colors so bright taking the eye could not describe.
The stars have an extra sparkle, the moon an extra glow,
Where could you find that? Only in my beautiful Idaho!

She will be greatly missed by family and friends!

Hansen council OKs controversial alley

By Margaret Jones Times-News correspondent

HANSEN — Hansen will soon have a new alley, even though some residents are against it.

Residents will have to move their belongings from the easement and they will be able to use the alley as long as they are not encroaching on the property.

Mayor Jon Ratto said he was obligated to protect the city against any liability. Since this problem had been brought to the city's attention he had no choice but to have the alley opened up, even though he would rather have the money—between $2,000 and $3,000, for other projects.

The conflict started in June when Darlene Miller asked to gravel the alley area behind her house on the east end of the easement so she could park vehicles behind her house. She was told the area had an alley easement and could be used as such.

Other residents next to the easement between Maple and Railroad avenue, who had annexed this undeveloped alley into their property, were against the easement plan.

This brought the subject of city liability to Ratto's attention. This area has inadequate access for fire protection due to the location of fire hydrants, utilities blocked off due to gardens and fences.

When the town had been originally laid out this area was set aside as an industrial area with the alley easement available for a railroad spur if needed. However, the area was rezoned residential.

In other business:

The council discussed the tampering of headgates in the irrigation system. City Attorney Bill Hoffield said a state law dealt with tampering of irrigation systems, and guilty parties could be prosecuted.

The council approved a storage shed for Brad Ward and construction for Clay and Carla Robinson at 215 Third Street East.

The council adopted the budget for the fiscal year 1999-2000.

Heyburn gets go ahead for development near Exit 208

By Ruth Streeter
Times-News writer

HEYBURN — City planning is difficult when no one is sure who owns what.

The city of Heyburn had begun to consider the annexing the western part of land near Exit 208 recently, only to learn the area was already within the city of Heyburn's impact area.

That means Heyburn will have no competition if it decides to annex the area near the exit, an issue to be discussed at tonight's City Council meeting, slated for 7 p.m.

Heyburn is seriously considering annexing the exit, said Paul Aron, head of Minidoka County's building and zoning department.

Minidoka County has been interested in developing the area, and annexation would be required in order to provide necessary city sewer and water services.

For the county to provide those services through a private supplier would be expensive, Aron said.

A concern for the city if annexation would be creating the area for development. The area is zoned agricultural.

The expansion had of the exit, east of Idaho Highway 24, was annexed to the city three years ago.

Burley's planning and zoning department will meet at 7:30 p.m. tonight in City Council chambers to discuss the West Heyburn impact area and rezone East 16th Street.

Burley has already expanded its impact area one mile west and will engage in preliminary zoning discussions tonight. Plans will also be a request for the commercial rezoning of East 16th Street between Marshall Avenue West and Orchard Avenue.

FHA wams city officials that oversight must meet regulations

POCAHELLO (AP) — City officials hoping to build a two-stage connector have been told by the Federal Highway Administration that the project will have to meet environmental regulations.

Officials hoped a proposal to build a new overpass between a highway and an avenue combined with a separately funded bypass could evade federal regulations that prohibit road building in environmentally sensitive areas.

The Highway Administration sent a letter to city officials Wednesday saying it would cost the two-stage connector an extra project requiring a full environmental audit.

It also warned the City Council that it could not narrow the study of a two-stage connector to a handful of possible alternatives.

"All alternatives... need to be evaluated to determine which one would either have least environmental impacts or would include effective mitigation for the environmental effects," environmental officer Bruce Gray wrote.

The letter was prompted by a council's decision Thursday to table a decision to direct an engineering firm to study alternatives for a cheaper two-stage connector.

NEW PROTECTION

The Boeing Co. in Everett, Wash., began assembling a 747-400 freighter to carry the Air Force's flying laser, a powerful 'death ray' intended to shoot down missiles from hundreds of miles away. The Air Force is specifically designed to combat short-range ballistic missiles, such as Scuds used by the Iraqis in the Persian Gulf war or the missiles now being developed by North Korea. Boeing is building the plane under a $1.1 billion contract it shares with TRW, the manufacturer of the laser, and Lockheed Martin, which is making the electronics to track targets, fire and control the beam.

Second inmate dies after hanging himself

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The second of two Salt Lake County Jail inmates who killed themselves with bedclothes on the same day last week has died.

Troy Hobbs, 27, died Friday evening at LDS Hospital of injuries suffered following a self-inflicted hanging at the jail on Aug. 3, a hospital spokesman said Monday.

The other Salt Lake County Jail inmate, Eric Barkley, also 27, died Thursday at Salt Lake Regional Hospital, said Lt. Troy Dial of the Salt Lake County Sheriff's Department.

The men were being housed in the same section of the jail but each had only been there a short time. They were not cellmates, Dial said.

A corrections officer found Hobbs in his cell about 4:45 p.m. on Aug. 3. An inmate cleaning the cellblock found Barkley about 9 p.m. and alerted officers.

On average, about three inmates attempt suicide annually in the jail, mental health unit director Allen Rice said. The Salt Lake County Jail has not had a suicide in more than two years.

Hobbs was booked into jail for investigation of retail theft and aggravated sexual assault.

Jail officials crack down after mistake release

SPOKANE (AP) — Embarrassed Spokane County Sheriff's officials have changed procedures and said a corrections officer faces disciplinary action after he mistakenly released the wrong inmate.

There have been three incidents of inmates gaining early release by lying about their identity in the past three months.

Jail Lt. Steve Jackson on Monday would not release the name of the jailer involved in the latest incident Friday, when Raymond L. Hurst, 20, walked out of the lockup by assuming the identity of a sleeping cellmate.

The jailer could receive a letter of reprimand or other sanctions, Jackson said.

"Jail commanders are temporarily requiring at least two corrections officers to sign off on inmate releases to prevent a recurrence and are reviewing other policies and procedures, Jackson said.

"Letting the wrong people out of jail is a very serious offense," Jackson said. "It's our job to keep them in."

Hurst's inmate claimed to be sleeping when the officer came to the cell to release him.

Rancher criticizes activists for threatening suit

JACKSON, Wyo. (AP) — A task force charged with preventing development near Grand Teton National Park is being thwarted by conservationist threats of a lawsuit, a task force member said.

Rancher Brad Mead said environmentalists have undermined any cooperation by demanding that his cattle be moved away from a wolf den south of Moran.

"If that wolf starts preying on the cattle, it is going to teach its young, and most likely it is going to die," said Steve Thomas of the Greater Yellowstone Coalition.

The coalition along with the Jackson Hole Conservation Alliance and the Predator Project announced last month they intend to sue the park within 60 days if the cattle are not moved.

Mead's family is permitted to graze about 600 cattle in the park near the Elk Ranch Reservoir. The task force is studying ways to preserve Mead's land south of the park from development.

Mead said the groups never advised him of their concerns before publicly announcing plans to sue, which he called an attempt to inflame the public about cattle grazing in the park.

"He wants to give Idaho farmers the chance to approach him with their questions and concerns," said Craig spokesman Will Craig.

Craig also plans to discuss the Republican plan to slash taxes by $792 billion over the next 10 years, which passed in Congress Thursday.

Sen. Mike Crapo, R-Idaho, started the break early when he missed a vote on the $600-million tax cut, which passed by a narrow 50-49 margin. The reason for Crapo's absence was the Friday marriage of his daughter Michelle in Idaho Falls.

Idaho Falls voters have supported the bill and plans to stamp for the GOP tax-cut plan, aides said.

"He let the leadership know which way he was going to vote before the tax cut bill became an issue," Susan Wheeler, Crapo's spokeswoman, said in explanation of Crapo's absence.

Rep. Mike Simpson, R-Idaho, will hold a news conference Thursday with Boise Mayor Brent Coles to announce an airport funding measure that passed in the House June 15.

The bill, cosponsored by Simpson, would provide Twin Falls with $1 million in additional airport funding. Boise would receive an additional $2 million.

"They're going to talk about why the Senate should pass this bill, when it will do for Idaho, and for Boise in particular," said Simpson spokeswoman Luci Willis.

Simpson will hold a town meeting Monday in Glendale to discuss the bill's progress and will file Willis said. Those meetings on school safety are scheduled for Sept. 1 and 2 in Pocatello and Idaho Falls, respectively.

Rep. Helen Chenoweth, R-Idaho, will spend the recess on vacation until the last week in August, when she will be in Idaho Falls business in her district offices. She will also prepare for the upcoming hearing to reauthorize cattle rancher Wayne Hoge, 61, in the fall, a spokesperson said.

On Aug. 6, he has not released the date of the wedding or details of the honeymoon.

"She's going to be right in the middle of a session so she will probably come right back to Washington with her new husband," Chenoweth spokesman Kyle Key said.

Buhl city, school officials dig into well issue Valley School Board works way to rec district agreement

By Mary Lou Potts Times-News correspondent

BUHL - Water well number 10 is working, but the city wants to drill another well on school property.

Superintendent Rick Hill presented the City Council Monday with a contract for a 51-year lease. City Attorney William Nungester will read the contract before presenting it to the council for approval.

Meeting with school officials last week, the council proposed the lease and the right to use the existing building for the Advanced Regional Technical Education Coalition program in exchange for the right to drill a well on specified locations at North Park Complex at Savenor, Boulevard and Clear Lakes Road. The School Board approved the proposal.

City Engineer Scott Bybee presented the council with a preliminary cost sheet to drill well #10. Acquiring an Idaho Community Development Block Grant and money from the state revolving fund will enable the city to start a test well as soon as a site is approved. The council voted to apply for $1,427,000 from the revolving fund to complete the project.

In other business, approval was given for Public Works Director Gary Winn and Sewer Maintenance Director Pete Pleticha to sign daily discharge monitoring reports concerning wastewater.

NRHC gets grant for Jackpot medical clinic

By Sam Feltman Times-News correspondent

JACKPOT - Nevada Rural Health Center Inc. has been approved for a $200,000 Health Grant to staff two Nevada medical clinics, one in West Wendover and the other in Jackpot.

Ken McBean of NRHC Inc. said two doctors and a physician's assistant have already been hired for the West Wendover Clinic and will take over the clinic on Sept. 3. He said interviews to staff the Jackpot Clinic will begin in September and the clinic should be up and running before the end of the year.

McBean said that NRHC is asking Jackpot for help. "We have submitted a request to the Jackpot Advisory Board to purchase an X-ray system for $25,000," McBean said. "We feel that is an essential part of the clinic operation."

McBean said if a child falls off a slide and needs assistance the Jackpot clinic will be able to take X-rays and put on a cast. Without an X-ray, a child would have to travel to Twin Falls.

"If we have the capital money to take X-rays, it saves," McBean said. "I said the existing building, vacated by Family Health Services, is a sufficient room for an X-ray machine."

Jackpot Fire Chief and Ambulance Director David Hutchinson said he welcomes the clinic opening. "Any help is a help," Hutchinson said. "One of our biggest problems is people calling the emergency medical technicians for things that are not really emergencies."

Simpson continues to pay off debt

BOISE (AP) - Republican Michael Simpson, the Blackfoot dentist who made a substantial contribution to the campaign to win a hotly-contested four-way congressional primary, continues to pay off his 1998 campaign debt.

Marked success in attracting contributions during his first month - in office - the freshman congressman still owes the bank $86,000 on a $100,000 loan.

Although he had operating cash of over $64,000 when July began, according to his latest campaign finance disclosure statement.

"Raising campaign funds for me is the hardest part of elective office," Simpson said in a statement. "It's gratifying to have so many folks willing to support our efforts in the Congress."

Simpson, who spent $1 million to defeat former Democratic Congressman Richard Stalling's comeback bid, raised $165,000 during the first half of 1999. It was enough to cover left over expenses from the 1998 campaign and reduce his $100,000 personally guaranteed bank loan to $86,000.

Two-thirds of the cash came from special interest political action committees ranging from health care, agriculture and natural resources to the National Rifle Association. Nearly all the rest came from Idaho contributors.

Hunter loses license for life

BOISE (AP) - An Adams County man has lost his hunting license for life and must serve 90 days in jail for poaching elk.

Robert F. Baker pleaded guilty Tuesday to two charges of unlawful possession of game to two elk. Third District Judge Stephen Dressler also sentenced him to four years probation, $6,500 in fines and restitution, and he must give up his hunting rifle.

Baker, 67, was hunting last October with Scott Fouser of Nampa in the Indian Valley area of southwestern Idaho.

The pair entered in the field. Fouser found Baker had three elk down - two cows and a spike bull. He helped him field-dress the game and they left for the evening.

"They returned the next day with smiles to park out the meat, but Idaho Department of Fish and Game officer Lester McDonald and Adams County Sheriff's deputies were there to arrest them. Fouser will be sentenced to a year in jail."

The Idaho attorney general's office prosecuted the case. "Judge Dressler sent a strong and clear with this sentence," Attorney General Al Lance said. "Any misguided individuals who view poaching as their right" would be wise to think again. Poaching is a serious crime, with serious consequences."

Richfield council postpones meeting due to lack of quorum

By Sandra L. Calkins Times-News correspondent

RICHFIELD - The Richfield City Council's regular meeting did not draw a quorum, but the council discussed a variety of issues.

No decisions were made, and the meeting was rescheduled for 7 p.m. Monday.

Among the items discussed, or put on hold:

• Bids to repair the Richfield water tower will remain sealed until the next meeting.

• Cotton Riley, a member of the Richfield Cemetery District Board, had a request to use the city's new lawn mower. The cemetery district has an older mower which has just had a new motor installed. This smaller mower could be used as a backup.

The cemetery district would be willing to pay toward the city's mower. However, tax money collected for its budget barely pays wages.

Police patrol railroad intersections

IDAHO FALLS (AP) - Fire Idaho law enforcement agencies have agreed to send about 30 motorists who drive across railroad tracks Monday after lights and crossing signals were approaching trains.

The stations and crossings are part of Operation Livesaver, a program designed to curb railroad-related accidents.

Last year, four people in Idaho were killed in collisions with trains.

Sgt. Ishmael Gonzales of the Idaho State Police participated in the program Monday. He rode inside a train from Idaho Falls to Reznburg and back.

About 15 officers helped by stationing themselves near roadway intersections, pulling those over who did not stop at crossing once red lights began flashing.

Gonzales' job was to radio officers whenever he spotted a violator.

"It was shocking. Several cars crossed when they should not have," Gonzales said. "Maybe they don't know, but once a train is on the tracks, you better take a good quarter of a mile before the train can stop."

Gonzales, who has been a police officer for 12 years, said he has seen more than a dozen train-related accidents.

He has participated in the stopper sidekick program for many years. About 30 cars are pulled over daily.

Court accepts fear of bodily harm defense

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — Fear of even minor injury is enough to justify self-defense arguments against a misdemeanor battery charge, the Idaho Court of Appeals said in vacating a Boise man's conviction.

In a unanimous ruling issued Tuesday, the three-judge court said Ada County Magistrate Carolyn Minder was wrong to admit hearsay evidence against Shawn Hansen and in refusing to instruct the jury on self-defense.

Judge Karen Lansing wrote that evidence should have been submitted to the jury indicating Hansen might have shoved his girlfriend, Cynthia Slagel, onto a couch on June 20, 1997, only after she had slapped him twice.

Minder was upheld by 4th District Judge Robert Newhouse in her conclusion that a self-defense instruction required Hansen to show he faced "imminent danger of great bodily harm." She also ruled that the instruction required Hansen to testify about the danger he felt, and that Slagel's testimony about the slapping was not enough.

The Court of Appeals said Minder was wrong on both points, and that "evidence of reasonable fear of some level of bodily harm will suffice."

"Nor is it necessary that this evidence come through the defendant's own testimony as the trial court indicated," Lansing wrote. "A defendant is entitled to have the jury instructed on his theory of the case whenever there is some supportive evidence for that theory."

In addition, the appellate court said Minder was wrong to admit into evidence Hansen's trial oral and written out-of-court statements from Slagel.

The statements, which Slagel made to a police officer at the time of the incident, were in stark contrast to her testimony at Hansen's trial. She testified that Hansen did not push her through a door, as she had previously written, but only "put his arm on my back and I walked in before him."

Slagel also testified that Hansen pushed her onto the couch of her home only once instead of repeatedly, as she had written in her police statement. And she testified that she slapped Hansen twice before he pushed her, something to which her written statement made no reference.

Minder admitted the out-of-court statements because she agreed with prosecutors that they fit the "excited utterance hearsay exception" to Idaho's rules of evidence.

County faces health insurance hike

LEWISTON (AP) — Nex Perce County is facing a 21 percent rate hike from Blue Cross of Idaho for its employees' medical insurance in the next budget year unless benefits are changed.

The proposed increase could cost the county $7,000 to $8,000 more each month starting in October, said Joseph Lee, the Lewiston-based district sales manager for Blue Cross of Idaho.

All groups are seeing large increases in medical insurance premiums from Blue Cross of Idaho and Regence BlueShield of Idaho, he said.

Ed Martinson, who owns Martinson's Insurance in Lewiston, said prescription drug benefits are also running high for county employees.

Prescription drug claims made up 23 percent of the total claims between May 1998 and April of this year, Blue Cross officials said. And people are asking their doctors for heavily advertised brand name prescription drugs that are more expensive than the generic brands.

"If you put a little more burden on the employees' shoulders, they will choose the less expensive generic drug," Lee told county commissioners Monday.

Lee said the increased use of medical insurance, the shifting of Medicare costs to private parties and other trends are contributing to rising costs.

"Everything goes into the whole puzzle for a 21 percent increase," he said.

Nex Perce County saved money after purchasing medical insurance through Blue Cross of Idaho instead of Regence BlueShield of Idaho two years ago, Lee said. Blue Cross's proposed rates for the next budget year are similar to what Regence was seeking a few years ago.

Employers are starting to increase deductibles and impose copayments to slow down rising medical insurance rates, he said.

There are very few $100 deductible plans left on the street," Lee said.

Charter schools seek space, race clock

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Two of Utah's eight charter schools are desperately seeking space, and time is running short.

Pinnacle Canyon Academy in Carbon County is looking for space before school starts in two weeks. And Success School in Granite County needs a home and a bookkeeper by September 15.

Pinnacle Canyon was planning to temporarily locate in a Mormon chapel in Price until another building is finished in January. But the church's gymnasium does not have the indoor sprinklers required to house 160 schoolchildren.

"We would have to redesign the church building," said Roberts Hardy, the school's chief administrative officer and a community planner for the Carbon School District.

Hardy said she is certain her school will open on time Aug. 23 and is looking to the school district for help.

Carbon Board of Education President Jim Leonard said charter schools are not the board's responsibility, but added that the best interest of the kids must be served.

"We don't have the funding, but we will ... find a way to make sure those kids have classrooms," he said.

Meanwhile, near Salt Lake City, Success School director Ron Muir is looking for a bookkeeper and a building for his secondary school for teens on probation.

The school, which is governed by juvenile court, state and local education officials and parents, was negotiating for space in Kearns, where juvenile probation officers meet. But rent is too steep unless the school finds a benefactor, Muir said.

"It's been very difficult not to give charter schools more money and expect us to do the job," Muir said.

He also met last week with the Granite School District to see if it could keep the school's financial books, but it declined, saying the entities should remain separate.

The three-year pilot charter schools established by the 1998 Legislature, received $62,500 in start-up funds, and will get a share of the regular state-funding per-pupil and some local school dollars when fall head counts are in.

Seven of Utah's eight pilot schools will debut this fall; another chartered by University of Utah faculty will open in next year.

Police probe connection of murders

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Police are investigating whether a man suspected of raping and murdering a Taylorsville woman may also have been linked to the unsolved murder of a 10-year-old girl.

While stressing it is preliminary, Salt Lake Police Homicide Sgt. Jerry Mendez said police looking at whether Robert Overstreet was connected to the slaying of Anna Palmer.

Palmer, 10, was stabbed in the neck on the front porch of her home.

Mendez said Monday the crimes Overstreet is accused of committing are bizarre enough to merit a link.

"It's a long shot, but we have nothing to lose," he said.

Danielle Omer was raped and murdered on June 28 in her Taylorsville home, which was then set on fire. Her body was discovered by firefighters on Aug. 4. Overstreet, 34, was charged with capital murder and aggravated arson in connection with Omer's death.

He was also charged with three first-degree felony sex offenses in the June 26 rape of a Taylorsville woman.

Overstreet was linked to the crimes through matching DNA samples, prosecutors say.

"We're going to compare notes with the sheriff's office," Mendez said.

He said any attacker who cuts a female victim will be checked out as Palmer's killer.

That also includes Cary Stayner, who confessed to behaving a naturalist in Yosemite National Park.

California rocket company eyes Montana for possible test site

BILLINGS, Mont. (AP) — A private rocket company is close to a deal bringing hundreds of jobs to Montana for a new space vehicle operation, a company spokesman says.

Ronary Rocket Co. of Redwood City, Calif., may use a Montana facility to build, test and launch its reusable space vehicle that is being developed in California, said Mike Gold, a Washington, D.C. consultant for the company.

In the short term, Gold said, the move would create up to 70 jobs. Later, when manufacturing begins, the state could see 400 new jobs and possibly more as the program matures.

The company rolled out its prototype in March. The reusable spaceship would be powered by liquid instead of costly hydrogen, which the firm hopes will cut launch costs by 90 percent. It has been designed to launch like a rocket, then deploy a propeller

Ketchum Library Tour samples a variety of upscale architecture

The Times-News

KETCHUM—This year's Community Library Tour of Homes offers a variety of architectural styles and includes a showcase of the nationally renowned Taylor Garden.

Here's a sneak preview of what's in store for this year's home lovers.

Daverman home

Owners: Wendy and Jim Daverman
This log lodge, built by Dembergh Construction Inc., is bordered by the Big Wood River. The doors and dormers are framed with log sections. An open log stairway and massive rock wall make up the house's entryway. Antique recycled oak floors are accented by scattered Kilim rugs. The symmetrical structure of the house is reinforced by a north and south wing of bedrooms. Amenities, such as natural linen window shades, log beds with blue plaid comforters and railroad spike towel hooks give the Daverman home a unique Western flavor.

Griffin home

Owners: Wayne and Cynnie Griffin
Constructed by David Wilson, this 11,000-square-foot residence is structured to accommodate many visitors. The living room is decorated with antique music boxes, stone sculptures and eclectic paintings. A stonework fireplace and a front credenza table with ancient tiles from Burgundy stand amid an arrangement of chenille upholstered sofas and chairs. Complete with two office areas, hot tub/jacuzzi and a 1,200-square-foot detached guest house, the residence is nestled next to the Big Wood River on a 220-acre lot.

Johnson home

Owners: Tim and Candy Johnson
This log cabin, built by Bob Voertman/Engleman Construction, resembles a New England house with its elegant front entrance and a side entrance leading to a mud room with slate floors.

Both the front door and the side door are painted in Chinese red, setting the house apart from other log cabins. The master suite is on the ground floor leaving two upstairs rooms for house guests. The kitchen is decorated with rounded by Shaker-blue walls.

Leendertsen home

Owners: Howard and Mischa Leendertsen
The Leendertsens bought this Provence-style country house, built by Ron Miller Construction, in 1994. Their residence has since been transformed into a replica of a European farmhouse surrounded by wildflowers and patio and picnic areas. The landscape design includes a pond and Boise sandstone and stucco walls. The house was built in two phases, and the two structures are joined by a breezeway. The second phase is complete with a master suite that has arched 48-foot ceilings and an iron and crystal chandelier. Handrails and metal work are set off by the subtle lighting of alabaster sconces.

Forstmann/Burke home

Owners: Stoney Burke and Candy Forstmann
A walled courtyard decorated with a fountain and an herb and lettuce garden serves as the entrance to this home, built by Felipe Zabala. The entry hallway leads to the guest bedroom wing and the kitchen/dining/den wing. The entrance leads straight into the living room. Saltillo tiles are covered by Oriental and braided rugs. American 18th- and 19th-century oil and watercolors line the walls. The master bedroom and bath are located upstairs. Furnishings include old quilts, a pine bureau with flame-mahogany veneer and a tiger-temple and cherry night stand.

Taylor home

Owners: Wynnon and Betty Taylor
The Taylor residence, built by Phil Ritau, was constructed in 1972 on 14 acres on the Big Wood River. Natural woods including weathered barn boards. Furnishings include a Basque bench and a dry sink from Scotland. A pool and pool house are located across the lawn. A Dutch door leads to a 700-square-foot guest house with a living room, kitchen, bedroom and bath. This is the last home on the tour, and the Taylors will provide tea for their visitors in their renowned garden. The garden is surrounded by a perennial border designed by Betty Taylor, who implemented the entire garden. The garden has been photographed by the

Remember, it's alkaline out here in the high desert

DEAR CATHY: I have a peach tree about five years old with some nice peaches on it but it's turning really yellow. I have put fertilizer stakes for fruit trees around it. I believe it gets enough water. I also put some nitrogen around it. Is losing leaves.

I have a European Mountain Ash that is yellow, too; the leaves are turning brown around the edges, and falling off. I have put fertilizer stakes around it too, and some Ironite.

Another problem is funny-looking leaves on some of my roses and conifers. They are not developing, but are real thin and sort of curly.

What's going on with Mother Nature this year? I live by the

GREEN-THUMBPRINTS
Cathy Walworth

Snake River, but my cousin in Utah is having the same problem. Thanks.

-HAVE IT ALL IN HAGERMAN

DEAR HAVIE: Let's get the easy one out of the way first. Your rose problem sounds like a virus. Just like people-virus, there is no known cure for virus in roses. You must dig them out and put them in the garbage, not the compost. Sterilize all your tools afterward.

Now for your yellow leaves. I don't like fertilizer stakes because there's usually just some nitrogen in them. Trees don't usually need a lot of nitrogen, but all plants in the arid West are hungry for iron, which they can't get to in the alkaline soil. Iron deficiency shows up as green veins surrounded by yellow leaves. If the problem is iron deficiency because of the soil pH being too high, then you must acidify the soil by adding organic mulches and sulfur an' lots of water. You can have the soil tested to see if that's the problem.

Without seeing the trees and their living conditions, it's impossible to say whether you just have iron deficiency, or there might also be some salt or heat stress as well. Potassium deficiency looks a lot like you describe, too. Don't pay a couple bucks for a cheapie soil test kit at the hardware store. Go to the extension service and ask about getting a real soil test done. Then you'll know exactly how to correct the problem. Thanks for writing.

DEAR CATHY: We have recently moved to a home with a hedge of Tartarian Honeycreeper. The hedge is scraggly and all the growth is at the top with bare branches at the bottom. Help?

What can I do to make this an attractive hedge again?

-SCRAGGLY AND BARE

DEAR SCRAGGLY: That's the trouble with hedges: Most people think you ought to shave off the top and call it good. But when you do that, you cause thicker branching where you made the cuts and no sunlight gets to the rest of the plant. It is better to shape hedges so that they are narrower at the top than the bottom. That way, more leaves can see the sun.

For now, though, you've got to prune off everything that looks dead.

And decide if you want a solid hedge or prune to create healthy individual bushes. This honeycreeper does better if pruned severely every couple of years. Water it well, and it will reward you with lots of fragrant flowers next spring.

Food poisoning spurs changes

Public health officer trains food handlers

By Coreen Hart
Times-News correspondent

BURLEY—Fast-food munchers are safer these days. So are deli customers and restaurantgoers. That's because recent outbreaks of food poisoning have caused changes in how food is processed and handled in business establishments.

According to the South Central District Health Department, 57 percent of foodborne illness comes from eating in restaurants. The other 43 percent comes from eating at home.

Cassia County's public health officer, Scott Arnell, conducts a bi-monthly food handlers course to update and train local personnel. His tips are helpful for home cooks, too.

At the July session, he told his students that a coli outbreak has put the spotlight on gaps in hamburger preparation and juice bottling, and rules have tightened as a result.

According to Don Brothers, food protection program supervisor for the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare, an incident seven years ago at Jack-in-the-Box restaurants in four states led to improvements in ground beef processing.

Changes of a coli O157:H7 began appearing in November 1992 and continued through the end of February 1993 in Idaho, Nevada, Washington and Oregon. They totaled more than 500 laboratory-confirmed cases and four associated deaths.

"It may have been that the heat was too high and the meat browned so quickly that its internal temperature did not get high enough to kill e. coli," Brothers said Tuesday. "We don't know. But internal temperatures should reach 155 degrees now. That way, we know the organism is killed."

Jack-in-the-Box weathered customer mistrust, and he chain revamped its cooking methods. Eventually, it recovered its business.

The same O157:H7 strain appeared a few years later in unpasteurized juices. This time, it had come from an animal source. In the affected orchards, cattle were being allowed to graze beneath the fruit trees. Cow manure was the contaminant, Brothers said.

Though most states have adopted interim measures requiring higher temperatures and the pasteurization of fruit juices, Congress is considering legislation making the safer handling methods mandatory.

Brett Morrison, a public health officer in Minidoka County, receives periodic calls from people concerned about food service in public places. Recently, he learned of someone selling soup without preparing it in an inspected kitchen. He talked with the individuals involved, he said, and they have decided to

Food safety tips

1. Food professionals can't be held out for home cooks. Don't eat at home restaurants.
2. Cook meat thoroughly. That's at least 165 degrees Fahrenheit for ground beef, 195 degrees F. for pork and poultry and 145 degrees F. for unground beef, lamb, fish and eggs. For rare roast beef, you can use 130 degrees as a guideline, assuming you know it has been handled in a sanitary environment. Otherwise, don't risk it.
3. Avoid contaminating the food by keeping hands and counter/cutting board surfaces clean. Sanitize with a mix of one capful of bleach with two gallons of water. Use hand sanitizer if you're out.
4. Use separate cutting boards for meats and vegetables.
5. Store raw meats on the bottom of the refrigerator so they can't drip onto other foods.
6. Keep flies away from food. This means taking the garbage out regularly and keeping a lid on anything that attracts flies in the kitchen.

7. After food is cooked, don't leave it on the stovetop overnight. It takes only two to four hours at room temperature for bacteria to multiply to dangerous levels. Put food in the refrigerator as soon as possible after cooking.
8. When you reheat food, make sure it gets hot—about 165 degrees F. or hotter. That will kill most risky bacteria. If it's liquid, such as soup, allow it to come to a boil.
9. Use separate cutting boards for meats and vegetables.
10. Store raw meats on the bottom of the refrigerator so they can't drip onto other foods.
11. Keep flies away from food. This means taking the garbage out regularly and keeping a lid on anything that attracts flies in the kitchen.

purchase a kitchen which can be licensed.

"That's one of the good cases," Morrison noted.

Window film reduces heat, glare

DEAR JIM: My budget is limited, but I have to do something to block the sun's heat and glare through our windows. It is ruining our carpeting too. What do you think of the low-cost, nearly clear window film kits?

-PAM II
DEAR PAM: Applying window film is a good solution to over-heating and fading even if you were not on a limited budget.

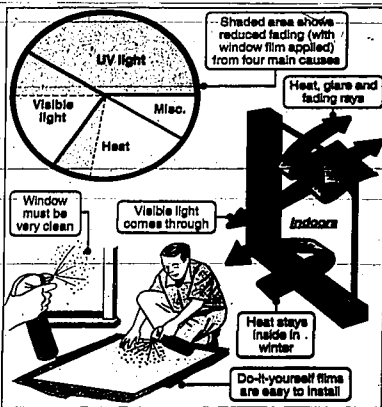

You will also be surprised at how pleasant it is to be in a room without harsh glare from windows. With normal window care and cleaning, the film may last 10 to 15 years. Many of the newer window films, especially the do-it-yourself low-emissivity (low-e) film kits, are nearly clear. If you walked into a room with the film installed on all the windows, you would not be able to notice it. The reduced glare and no need to squirt would be your only hint.

The reduction in your air-conditioning electric costs will be noticeable. Generally, with the intense radiant heat and glare from windows, you can be very comfortable with the thermostat set several degrees higher. This can result in up to a 10 percent electricity savings.

Furniture and curtain fading has many causes other than just ultraviolet (UV) rays. These include visible light, heat and other factors. Window film will block nearly all of the UV rays and varying percentages of the other causes depending on the tint and properties of the film that you select.

You can buy either do-it-yourself film kits or have it professionally installed. Many of the professional films use a sputter method of applying microscopic metal particles. They are invisible, but they block heat.

The lower-cost films use an aluminum vacuum deposit method. This makes the film slightly more reflective, but very effective. It creates a low-e coating similar to new replacement windows. Low-e properties work in reverse in the winter and keep heat indoors for year-round savings. If you can wash a window, then you can easily install a window film kit yourself. The film has a water-activated adhesive on one side. Film can be easily removed years later using water or a special film removal solution.

Although they look identical at the home center store, not all window film kits perform the same. Be sure to compare their properties - emissivity, shading coefficient and visible light transmission. Lower emissivity films are best for year-round comfort and savings. Lower shading coefficient films block more heat. Lower visible light transmission films block more glare, but can make the window darker. All window films make glass shatter-resistant for safety during storms or around your children.

973 - buyer's guide of do-it-yourself (plus a small sample) and professional films, properties, prices and installation instructions. Please include $3 and a business-size SASE. Write to James Dulley, 6906 Royalgreen Drive, Cincinnati, Ohio 45244.

DEAR JIM: Our roof has a few leaks and should probably be replaced soon. I really like a dark color, but I know that it gets hotter than light gray. If I install plenty of roof vents, will black be okay?

-RON W.
DEAR RON: Don't wait too long to repair your roof if it is leaking. If you found the leaks because of discolored spots on the ceiling below, it may be doing permanent damage. It is probably leaking in more spots than you see. A lighter color is always better. Although adequate ventilation will carry away hot air, much of the heat that you feel in your house is radiating from the hot roof. Ventilation only helps a little to reduce the radiant heat.

Racism defies black-and-white answers

DEAR ABBY: I am a teacher. One of the first things I tell students when we discuss examinations is "Answer the question!" Your reply to the question, "Why is it OK to be a racist if you're black?" had nothing to do with the question. Want to try again?

—CINCINNATI EDUCATOR

DEAR ABBY: I am now retired, but during my 33 years of teaching American history at four universities, my primary research field was the history of race relations in the United States. One of my books, "The Arrangement of Faith, Christianity and Race in America From the Colonial Era to the Twentieth Century" (Knopf, 1990), was selected for the Cleveland Foundation's Amisfeld-Wolf award, and the publisher nominated it for a Pulitzer Prize.

Racism is a complex idea and can mean different things to different people. The definition that has worked best for me is: "A belief in an innate inequality among races, and conduct in accordance with that belief." Civil rights laws can control conduct but they cannot legislate belief. Changing beliefs comes only with education, and that takes time.

"My Kid's Mom" said her daughter wondered why it "... is OK to be racist if you're black." Well, it's not OK. Discrimination by blacks toward whites is no more acceptable than the reverse, but it might be helpful if more people understood why it exists.

I know of no dark-skinned people who believe they are innately superior to light-skinned people, at least not those living in Western societies. But for five centuries, Europeans (and later Americans), driven by religious beliefs and supported by economic and military superiority, systematically oppressed — including enslavement and extermination — the aboriginal populations of undeveloped cultures. Today, dark-skinned people have the power to retaliate. As long as white racism exists, they will exercise that power.

—FORREST G. WOOD, BAKERSFIELD, CALIF.

DEAR CINCINNATI: All right, racism is never "OK," regardless of the skin color of the bigot. Not all people are alike, and it is wrong to assume that you can prejudge a person because of skin color. You can't. There are no shortcuts. You have to get to know people before you can make intelligent judgments about them. To do otherwise is narrow-minded and shortsighted.

The letter from "My Kid's Mom" generated some thoughtful responses. Read on:

DEAR FORREST: The subject of bigotry is an emotional one for me, and I thank you for putting it into a scholarly perspective. I agree with your conclusion. Viewed from a historical perspective, reverse racism is understandable. But that doesn't make it any the less unfortunate. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: As a proud African-American man, father and citizen, I wish to respond to the letter from "My Kid's Mom." There is no racism in the African-American community in the United States. What you see is the anguish of being black in a white country. What whites see as racism is, in reality, the pain of being discriminated against on a daily basis because of our color. It's a defense mechanism in order to be ready for any contingency that arises.

Oppressed people do what they have to do for survival in a hostile and unfriendly, dangerous country like we have here in America.

I teach my kids to be tough and smart, for a black person is always surrounded by whites with racist attitudes. Never let your guard down.

—THOMAS ANTHONY JONES SR., IN GEORGIA

DEAR THOMAS: You have laid it on the line, and the message is clear. However, I recall a wonderful statement attributed to Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.: "We may have come here on different ships, but we're all in the same boat."

With words, indeed!

Q. If every distinct ethnic group could break away from its current country to set up its own nation, how many nations would that be?

A. About 5,000, say the scholars.

Tom Mix, a pioneer prevaricator of western motion pictures, proclaimed he survived combat during four wars — in Cuba, 1899; Philippines, 1899; China, 1900, and South Africa, circa 1901. In fact, researchers say, he served for a short time only in the U.S. Army, then deserted. And although he saw gunplay in his 92 movies, filmdom's footnotes indicate the only person who ever really shot Mix was his wife.

Fresh corn stays sweeter longer if kept cool

Knight Ridder News Service

Sal Ciaramitaro of Ciaramitaro Bros. Inc., a produce merchant at Eastern Market in Detroit and president of the Eastern Market Merchants Association, advises consumers to choose sweet corn with a crisp, bright-green husk. That indicates it's fresh. The end of the corn should be moist, not dried out.

If the kernels haven't developed all along the ear, Ciaramitaro says it's a sign the corn hasn't fully matured. "It's edible, but it doesn't look good," he says.

Once the corn is snapped off the stalk, the sugars start converting to starches so be sure to hurry the corn into the fridge. Keeping it cold slows the conversion process and improves the shelf life, Marks says. Corn should keep about five days in a plastic or paper bag in the refrigerator.

The simplest, fastest way to cook corn is to bring a pot of water to a boil and add the corn. It should be ready in 5 to 7 minutes.

If you plan to freeze the corn, blanch it in boiling water for a couple of minutes and cool it quickly in a bowl of ice water so it doesn't take on the taste of the cob. Then remove the kernels and freeze.

Cory Bergstrom exudes warmth, welcome.

Bergstrom fits a family

Square wooden columns resting on stone-studded support piers give a distinctive look to the Bergstrom. Its wide window bay and trio of gables heighten the image of warmth and welcome. The covered porch is more open than most, and practically cries out for installation of an old-fashioned wood swing on the right-hand side.

Designed for construction on a narrow lot, this single-level plan is easily adapted for wheelchair accessibility.

Family living spaces fill the right side of the home, where all but the front room are joined in one comfortably large, informal living area. That bayed front room can be furnished as a study, parlor, library or whatever suits your fancy. If having a home office fits into your plans, adding interior and/or exterior doors would make this space ideal.

The kitchen is both large and efficient. Sink, stove and refrigerator form a tight triangle, while counter space wraps around three sides. A step-in pantry boosts storage space, and the short peninsula could be outfitted as an eating bar, if desired.

Sliders in the dining area open onto a small side patio. Wooden columns, similar to those out front, mark the boundary between the dining room and the spacious, vaulted living room. The fireplace, nestled in a rear corner, provides warmth and color on dreary days and long dark nights. Nearby slides access a larger, partially covered patio, also accessible from the master suite.

The Bergstrom's centrally located bathroom and laundry room provide sound buffering between sleeping areas and gathering spaces. The pass-through utility room doubles as a mudroom and comes in handy for unloading groceries in the dark or in inclement weather.

For a review plan, including sealed floor plans, elevations, section and artist's conception, send $20 for Associated Designs, 1100 Jacobs Drive, Eugene, Ore. 97402. Please specify the Bergstrom-30-206 and include a return address when ordered. A catalog featuring nearly 300 home plans is available for $12. For more information, call (800) 634-0123.

Spam fan celebrates the luncheon loaf

Scholarly book roots out the essence of the hammy food

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — For all of the encyclopedic tomes ever written on critical issues confronting mankind, never before has there been an in-depth examination-of-that-pillar-of-American-culture, luncheon meat.

Author, philosopher and woman-about-town Carolyn Wyman has produced the definitive treatise on the subject, "SPAM: A Biography." Wyman says the tribute to the pink, gelatinous brick-in-a-can is long overdue.

"This is a work of serious Spam scholarship," said Wyman, a graduate of Brown University. "By my nature, my training, my education, I'm into looking at every aspect. I examine Spam in a very comprehensive way, and I think I really have a handle on my subject matter."

Wyman, a nationally syndicated food columnist, is considered by many to be the world's foremost authority on convenience foods such as Spam, Twinkies and Jell-O.

Her previous works include, "I'm a Spam Fan," which is a history of more than 100 brand-name supermarket food products, and "The Kitchen Sink Cookbook: Offbeat Recipes From 'Unusual Ingredients.'"

Her latest volume, published by Harcourt Brace & Co., delves into the very essence of Spam — its history, its socioeconomic implications, how it earned a place in the Smithsonian Institution, its cult following on the Internet, its place in poetry and prose and the rise of a Spam religion. And yes, she also includes recipes for gourmet fare.

Nationally syndicated food columnist Carolyn Wyman digs into a plate of Spam at her office in New Haven, Conn. Wyman, something of a purist, often takes her Spam straight out of the can.

Wyman, something of a purist, takes her Spam straight-up, fresh out of the can. As that pungent Spam odor wafts through the air, she waxes poetic about that taste of something-like-ham-but-not-quite.

"The taste is incredibly distinct. It's salty. It's hammy. It's soft. It's mushy, sort of, like butter," she said, licking her lips.

"It tastes even better fried," she enthuses.

Incidentally, Wyman's work is an unauthorized biography of as "an all-encompassing historical review." The company estimates that 120 million cans are sold worldwide each year.

Wyman, 43, majored in English at Brown. She grew up in Cumberland, R.I., and became a fan of good writing — and Spam — through the influence of her father, James Wyman, the retired executive editor of the Providence Journal-Bulletin.

"SPAM: A Biography" came out in July with an initial press run of 50,000 books. "I'm a Spam Fan" sold out its first and second press runs. But there were mixed results with "The Kitchen Sink Cookbook."

Wyman contends that Spam is the quintessential-American processed food, endearing because it is so far from its original state that it no longer resembles anything found in nature.

"Americans have tamed our foods just as surely as we've tamed the West," she said.

The name "Spam" was derived from a combination of words, Wyman says. Citing sources she does not identify, Wyman says the name comes from the words "spiced ham." However, another theory points to the words "shoulder of pork and ham."

Fruit ripening fast? Pectin gets you out of a jam

Making jam is not difficult, but with any food that you intend to store, safety is of the utmost importance. Before you begin, it's essential that you read up on proper canning techniques. If you have any questions, contact the Ball and Kerr Home Canning Helpline at (800) 240-3340.

The basics

Many recipes call for only two ingredients - fruit and sugar. Pectin, a substance found naturally in fruit that binds sugar with acid, makes the jam gel.

Many fruits, including apples, quinces and most unripe fruits, contain plenty of pectin. Fruits that don't contain pectin can be supplemented with a commercially produced variety. Pectin can be found in the baking section of most supermarkets. Note that instructions for the use of liquid and powder pectins differ.

When choosing fruit for jam, look for firm, slightly under-ripe pieces. Strawberries, for instance, should be small and have some white patches on the stem end. Don't remove the white areas because they contain pectin. Prepare the fruit by washing it under cold running water. Drain, pit and peel the fruit as necessary. Large fruits should be cut into 1/2-to-1-inch pieces for even cooking.

Since pectin levels and sugar-to-acid ratios vary widely from fruit to fruit, use a jam recipe written specifically for the fruit you have selected.

The equipment

Use large stockpots for cooking the jam and for processing the jars. Place round, wire cake racks in the bottoms of the pots to keep the jars from coming in contact with direct heat, which could cause them to crack.

A candy thermometer will tell you when the jam reaches the right temperature for setting. A stainless-steel canning funnel or soup ladle will help you fill the jars.

Use wide-mouthed mason jars with two-piece metal jar caps to can the jam. These jars are available in a variety of sizes and will provide the secure seal necessary for long-term storage. You will also need a jar lifter - similar to long-handled rubber tongs - to keep jars from slipping. You'll also want a long-handled wooden spoon and a large cooling rack.

The process

The fruit mixture should be cooked at an even temperature. Watch carefully to avoid overcooking. If you are adding a large amount of sugar, slightly heat the sugar first to avoid cooling the fruit.

Even if you want to produce a large amount of jam, make several small batches instead of one big one. Cooking jam in a heavy, shallow pot is best for fast boiling and even cooking.

To ensure that your finished jam is clear, skim away foam from the surface of the fruit as it cooks. To see if jam has gelled properly, you can perform a wrinkle test: When the jam has reached the desired temperature on a candy thermometer, about 220 degrees, ladle a small amount onto a chilled plate. Set the plate in the freezer for a minute or two, then remove and gently push the jam with your finger. If it wrinkles, it is ready. If not, cook a few minutes longer, then test again.

Sterilizing jars

Properly stored, jam can be kept up to a year. To ensure both freshness and safety, however, it is essential that the jars be sterilized and sealed airtight to eliminate contaminants.

When you're ready to make jam, place a cake rack in the bottom of each of two large stockpots. Fill with water and bring one to a simmer; the other to a boil. Start your jam according to the recipe. While it is cooking, heat your jars and the flat lids (not the screw bands) in the simmering water for at least 10 minutes or until you are ready to use them.

After you've filled the jars and covered them with hot, sterilized lids, use a jar lifter to set them into the boiling water in the second stockpot. Make sure the water covers the tops of the jars by at least an inch, and that the jars are spaced an inch apart.

Cover the pot and boil for 10 minutes to process the jam and sterilize the jars. Lift jars from water and set on a rack to cool completely. After 24 hours, test the seal by pressing on the center of the lid. If it does not flex up and down, the seal is secure. If the lid moves, the seal is not secure and the jam should be refrigerated immediately and used within a week or two.

FOOD & HOME

How to keep your cool while cooking

Nowaday
It's so hot, you want a cool best salad. Maybe you're going to a picnic and you want to take a potato salad. Or perhaps you're having a barbecue and the kids want beans with their franks.

How do you cook your favorite summer foods when your kitchen is like an sauna? We're not talking about grilling. You already know how to do that. No, not raw salads. We mean real cooked food.

The answer may be right on your countertop. Many appliances we already own — the microwave, Crock-Pot, even the coffeemaker and the dishwasher — can cook favorite summer foods without melting down the cook.

Lora Brody, author of "Plugged In: The Definitive Guide to the 20 Best Kitchen Appliances" (Morrow, $25), is an appliance junkie who never met one she didn't like. "Things to use during the summer to keep your kitchen cool?" she asked. "OK. Ready? The rice cooker, bread machine and Crock-Pot. Those three things are going to save your life."

The rice cooker can make the obvious rice and risotto, but also lentils, chicken soup and mashed potatoes. "It emits almost no heat at all," she said. "You wouldn't even know it's on."

The bread machine can make pizza dough for cooking on the grill, in addition to jam and quick breads. The Crock-Pot can make terrific baked beans, but Brody's favorite dish is Vidalia onions that she peels and places whole into a slow cooker with a stick of butter and cooks on low for 24 hours until they take on a rich, golden brown color. "Strangers will be knocking on your door," she said.

But for most home cooks, the logical starting place is the microwave.

The vast majority of American families — 83 percent — own microwave ovens. Yet less than 25 percent actually use them regularly to cook meals, according to a 1997 Department of Energy report. Most people relegate the microwave to reheating leftovers and popping an occasional bag of popcorn.

But many appliance experts and food professionals who must cook during the worst heat waves claim a microwave is a lifesaver. Cookbook writer Linda Eckhardt lives in an unair-conditioned home in New Jersey that is so hot, she said "we could steam vegetables by waving them in the air."

She has written two books on microwave cooking and one chapter on it in her first book, "Savish One-Dish Dinners" (Doubleday, $25), is devoted to the appliance. It's called "And Don't Forget the Much-Maligned Microwave.

The problem with microwaves, she said, is too many people are encouraged to expect to cook meats and whole items in them 15 to 20 years ago. "That's totally stupid," she said.

"The microwave is really best with small volume and wet grains, especially soups and potenta." Make sure to use a deep, round dish and use care during the middle of the process, she said.

Joe Moss, Daniel, a senior product development manager at Sharp Electronics, said newer microwaves with automatic features and heat sensors are easier to use, but many cooks remain leary. "People haven't gotten their confidence back yet," she said. It's not bad, because the microwave can make summer favorites such as chicken salad and corn-on-the-cob.

The thought of rereading (or even trying to find) your microwave's instruction booklet may seem daunting, Daniel suggests starting small. "Now is the time to learn to do one thing with your microwave oven," she said, particularly for owners of newer ovens with sensors to read the humidity of food.

WCW stars stop in Burley

By Matt Peterson
Times-News writer

Bill Goldberg signs autographs Tuesday in Burley.

BURLEY — Employees at JB's Big Boy Family Restaurant in Burley might have seen their biggest lunch hour rush ever Tuesday.

Locally,

Inside, chowing down burgers, sandwiches and salads, sat a bevy of WCW superstars among those 6-foot-11-inch, 285-pound Bill Goldberg and 6-5, 253-pound Diamond Dallas Page. Also with the group were Rick Steiner, David Flair, Kendall and Barry Windham and Sunny O'neo, among others. In all, the party numbered about 60 people.

While the wrestlers ate lunch, a small but excited crowd gathered near the restaurant's entrance. Some peered through the building's shaded windows while others paced anxiously clutching their cameras, pens and paper. One woman held a life-size cardboard cutout of Goldberg.

The wrestlers, who performed Monday at the Idaho Center in Nampa, stopped for little over an hour in Burley before continuing on their way to Sturgis, S.D., where they will take part in the Aug. 14, pay-per-view event, Road Wild.

"They were great," said restaurant manager Daniel Lage. "They signed a few autographs in the building and were very nice."

Lage said WCW officials had planned the stop about two weeks ago and even called from Hagerman to let the restaurant know when to expect the party. "It was nice, a lot of people don't even call," Lage said.

After eating, Goldberg and Page signed autographs and posed for pictures for about 10 minutes before leaving. Goldberg, accompanied by a young blonde woman in a leather vest and chaps, roared off on a white Harley-Davidson.

Several black tour buses and a dozen motorcycles, supplied by Road Wild tour sponsor, American Ironhorse Motorcycles, comprised the caravan. Various wrestlers will take turns riding the motorcycles between Boise and Sturgis, said American Ironhorse employee Crig Leckey. One of the motorcycles will then be photographed and given away at the Road Wild event.

Monday's crowd at the Idaho Center ranked among the best WCW has seen, said WCW security guard Doug Dellinger.

"We totally love Boise, Idaho," Dellinger said. "They have some of the greatest fans we've had."

About 9,000 fans turned out for the filming of Monday Nitro, said Idaho Center director Rod Orrison.

"I really worked hard. People were excited. We had a very into it crowd," Orrison said. "This is a great building to do something like this in. WCW is a real class act to work with."

About six million people watch Nitro on television, Orrison said, adding that Idaho ranked near the top in attendance on the WCW tour. There has already been some conversation about a future WCW visit to the area, Orrison said.

After an overnight stop in Jackson Hole, Wyo., the wrestlers plan on arriving in Sturgis Thursday afternoon, Leckey said.

The Road Wild event begins Saturday, Aug. 14, at 6 p.m., MST. The main event will feature Hollywood Hogan going against Kevin Nash. Goldberg will square off against Steiner.

Fall leaves 'Catfish' in critical condition

The Associated Press

GREENVILLE, N.C. — Baseball Hall of Famer Jim "Catfish" Hunter was unconscious and in critical condition in a memory-intensive care unit after falling and hitting his head, a hospital spokesman said Tuesday.

Hunter, 51, who suffers from asymptomatic lateral sclerosis — an irreversible degeneration of the muscles — fell Sunday while negotiating a steep ramp outside his home in Bedford, a friend said.

"We just need everybody to keep him in your prayers," Hunter's wife, Helen, said.

Tuesday. "We need everybody's prayers right now."

Hunter was taken to a hospital in Eden and transferred early Monday to Furr County Memorial Hospital, which serves the East Carolina University medical school.

Hunter was unconscious and on a ventilator Tuesday, said hospital spokesman Doug Boyd. His condition was downgraded to critical from severe Monday, when he was awake, Boyd said.

Hunter's family says he is hospitalized with their minister, Boyd said. "The family is very private right now," he said.

Childhood friend Charles Woodard said Hunter fell around 5:30 p.m. Sunday.

"He was outside seeing off a friend and was going back up the steps to his house when his feet got tangled," said Woodard, who owns Woodard's Pharmacy. "He just fell backward and hit his head."

The former major league pitcher was diagnosed in September with ALS, or Lou Gehrig's disease, a neurological disease that interferes with the signals the brain sends to the muscles. Over time, the muscles degenerate. The cause is unknown, and there is no cure.

Hunter pitched for 15 years, winning 224 games, including a perfect game. He received five World Series rings while playing for the Oakland Athletics and New York Yankees.

Boyd said Hunter hasn't undergone surgery since he was admitted to the hospital.

"The specialists up there are trying to support him as best they can," he said.

In May, residents of Hunter's hometown turned out for a ceremony to honor him and kick off a foundation to aid people with ALS.

Jazz vice president takes job in NY

The Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — Scott Layden, who succeeded Club Jazz personnel manager for 11 seasons, accepted a job Tuesday with the New York Knicks.

The move is a homecoming for Layden, who was born in New York, and transports him from the NBA's smallest market to its largest.

"It comes as a really good decision to move on, but it just feels like the right thing to do," Layden, 41, said. "I need to move on and get up a little bit."

It was clear as soon as Jazz owner Larry Miller sat down, his eyes lit and smiling with tears before a usual work session, that Layden wasn't staying.

"From a personal, selfish standpoint and from a standpoint of wanting my job as owner of the Jazz, I wish we weren't here today talking about this," Miller said.

Layden declined to discuss the Knicks position, saying details would come during a news conference today in New York. He likely will be introduced as the successor of fired general manager Ernie Grunfeld.

Layden met last weekend with Madison Square Garden president Dave Checketts about the Knicks' general manager's job, which has been vacant since Grunfeld was dismissed in April.

On Monday, Layden met with Miller and other Jazz officials, who were unable to convince him to stay.

"On the one hand, we hate more than I can express to see him go," Miller said. "On the other hand, I wish him well."

Layden said the deciding factor was his family's enthusiasm for living in New York. He and his wife, Arsha, are supporters of the Mars and Layden lived in New York through his teenage years.

The boy's father, who also said he's eager to prove himself in a way he could not in Utah, where he lived in the shadow of his father, former coach Frank Layden.

"I've really felt like I've been on the outskirts of some brilliant people — coaches, players, owners and the people who work in this organization," said Layden, who spent 18 years with the Jazz.

News reports indicated Layden could be paid about $1.5 million in New York, four times his Utah salary. He wouldn't talk about the fee, said JAZZ, Page D2

Big Sky looks toward North Dakota State

The Associated Press

FARGO, N.D. — North Dakota State University may be in a good position to graduate to Division I, but doing so could be a rough transition, the head of the Big Sky Conference says.

Doug Fullerton, commissioner of the conference, met with athletic officials from NDSU and a number of other North Central Conference schools in Fargo on Tuesday to discuss the feasibility of moving to a higher level of college sports.

Schools now in the Big Sky include California State-Sacramento, California State-Northridge, Weber State, Montana, Montana State, Idaho State, Northern Arizona, Eastern Washington and Portland State.

Fullerton said his talks were not meant to either encourage or discourage the schools from considering the change, but to inform them of the work involved in doing so.

"It has to be an institutional decision, and I would hate to encourage someone and have them come back in five years and say 'what did you get us into?'" Fullerton said at a brief news conference. "My job here was to come in and give an honest accounting. ... There are some hard issues."

NDSU athletic director Bob Enton invited Fullerton to meet with officials from NDSU, North Dakota and Northern Colorado to discuss jumping to NCAA Division I and joining Fullerton's conference.

Big Sky Conference teams play football in Division I-AA and all other sports in Division I.

NDSU currently competes in NCAA Division II in all sports except hockey, where it fields a club team.

Schools wanting to move into Division I must apply to the NCAA for a change in status. The waiting period to become a full-fledged NCAA Division I school is two years from the time of application.

Enton said the talks with Fullerton, which began Monday, were "eye-opening."

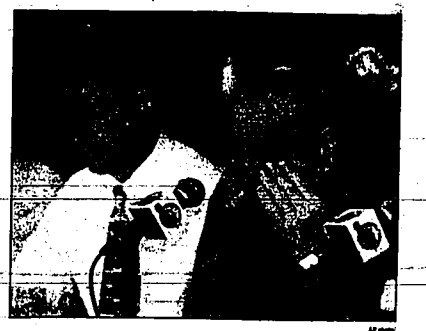

"There's an awful lot to consider," he said. "What it would require on our part is a huge commitment, mostly financial, if we decided to make the jump."

But he said the school plans to continue attempting to upgrade its athletics programs in case officials decide later on to make the switch.

Fullerton said NDSU's athletics budget of about $4.3 million is in line with the average $4.8 million budget of Big Sky Conference schools. But he said it is much more difficult for a single school to make the jump than it would be for a group of schools to do so.

Still, Fullerton said the nine-school conference is not currently soliciting for new members.

"We're not looking to expand right now," he said. "But I would never say never."

Utah Jazz owner Larry Miller, right, wipes away tears as he talks about the release of Scott Layden, vice president of operations for the team.

SPORTS

Jazz

Continued from D1 money but denied it was the reason he's leaving. "It was all about money, I would have moved on long ago," he said. As Utah's vice president of basketball operations, Layden opened a reputation as a skilled evaluator of talent. Two of Utah's recent second-round draft selections, Bryon Russell and Shannon Anderson, contributed greatly to the team's runs-to-the-NBA-Finals-in-1997 and 1998. Layden also has had trouble making trades, and his signing of center Greg Oden to a six-year, $39 million contract was widely ridiculed around the league. There may have been more reasons for Layden to leave than stay.

For one, the Jazz's aging trio of Karl Malone, John Stockton and Jeff Hornacek are each over 35. There's also Sal Lake's clean-cut — some would say boring — image. Layden engineered deals in recent years for players like Ron Seely and Derek Harper, but neither would report. Layden denied those factors contributed to his decision. "My only means was that the case. This whole thing came up fast and it was an opportunity I felt couldn't pass up," he said. Knicks player personnel director Ed Taubert has been performing the general manager's duties on an interim basis. New York's only player moves this off-season were the signing of free agent forward John Wallace and the drafting of French center Frederic Weis.

Voting for All-Century team stays mostly unchanged

NEW YORK (AP) — There were almost no changes this week in the voting for baseball's All-Century team, with Pete Rose still in the ninth and final outfield spot. Active players Roger Clemens, Ken Griffey Jr. and Cal Ripken were among the leaders in totals through Aug. 9. Fans vote for the top two players at each infield position, nine outfielders and six pitchers, a total of 25. Hank Aaron (252,074) led outfielders, followed by Babe Ruth (249,877), Ted Williams (243,961), Willie Mays (242,983), Joe DiMaggio (229,303), Mickey Mantle (216,833), Ty Cobb (168,328), Griffey (142,072) and Rose (133,140), who was banned from baseball and the Hall of Fame.

The top nine voters retained the same top 10 choices from the first week of totals released Aug. 2. Roberto Clemente (222,006) moved past Sam Rice (171,830) into 10th place, followed by Shoeless Joe Jackson (70,164), Reggie Jackson (64,588), Tony Gwynn (59,476), Carl Yastrzemski (48,762) and Frank Robinson (46,124). Gwynn got his 3,000th hit last Friday. Nolan Ryan (217,833), inducted into the Hall of Fame last month, increased his lead at pitcher from about 500 votes to more than 1,000 ahead of Sandy Koufax (211,718). They were followed by Cy Young (188,729) and Bob Gibson (122,707).

Clemens (405,452) overtook Walter Johnson (400,171) for sixth place. Next came Greg Maddux (92,634), Satchel Paige (86,338), Steve Carlton (84,820), Warren Spahn (72,460) and Tom Seaver (71,281). Johnny Bench (216,522) led catchers, followed by Yogi Berra (156,003) and Carlton Fisk (69,405). Roy Campanella (52,337) moved past Josh Gibson (49,503) to fourth. Lou Gehrig (262,321) topped all players. He was trailed at first base by Mark McGwire (112,653), who hit his 500th home run last week, and Jimmie Foxx (79,986). Jackie Robinson (174,444) was ahead at second base, followed by Rogers Hornsby (135,638), Joe Morgan (128,075) and Rod Carew (93,272). Ripken led shortstops at 150,832. Ozzie Smith (129,462) moved ahead of Ernie Banks (128,384) into second, and Honus Wagner (112,048) was fourth. Mike Schmidt (181,899) was tops among third basemen, trailed by Brooks Robinson (164,783) and George Brett (146,622), who was also inducted into the Hall of Fame last month. Voting, which is sponsored by MasterCard International, runs through Sept. 15 and the team will be announced before the World Series opener. If there are oversights in balloting, a panel could be authorized to add up to five players to the team.

Umpires union withdraws lawsuit against MLB

NEW YORK—The umpires' union withdrew its lawsuit against baseball Tuesday, leaving the National Labor Relations Board as the last hope for 22 umpires who want their jobs back.

The move came just before the American and National leagues were to file a motion to dismiss the case. The leagues, claiming the suit was frivolous, had planned to ask for legal sanctions against the umpires' union and its lawyers.

Umpires filed the case July 26 in federal court in Philadelphia, hoping to get a restraining order blocking baseball from accepting their resignations, effective Sept. 2.

Van Dyken, Hall Jr. complete comebacks

MINNEAPOLIS—After a year away from competition, Amy Van Dyken resumed her medal-filled career Tuesday by winning the 50-meter freestyle on the final day of the National Swimming Championships.

And with Van Dyken cheering him on from the deck, Gary Hall Jr. completed his own comeback in the men's race.

Van Dyken, 26, finished the sprint in 25.13 seconds at the University of Minnesota Aquatic Center to earn her fourth national title. The Lone Tree, Colo., native hadn't competed in a national meet since the spring of 1998 after undergoing shoulder surgery. Van Dyken will resume her training regimen and continue rehabilitating her shoulder in lieu of traveling to Sydney, Australia for the Pan Pacific Games.

Hall, a three-time medalist in the 1996 Olympics, finished the 50 in 22.13 to earn his fourth national championship. Hall, 24, was diagnosed with diabetes in March, missing the spring nationals, and was bedridden with the flu just five days ago. His time was fast enough to qualify for the Pan Pacific Games, but he wasn't sure whether he'd go.

High school senior surprises U.S. amateur field

ASHEVILLE, N.C.—High school senior Natalie Gulbis had her dream round Tuesday at the U.S. Women's Amateur.

The 16-year-old Gulbis, the fifth youngest of 144 players entered, surprised the field by shooting a career-best 6-under-par 66 en route to the event's 35-hole medalist record.

The two-day, 7-under total of 137 by Gulbis, of Citrus Heights, Calif., broke the record set last year by Kellee Booth. Gulbis' bogey-free afternoon round tied the lowest 18-hole score, also set by Booth last year.

There are two rounds of match play today and Thursday and an 18-hole semifinal match Friday. The two finalists will play 36 holes for the championship on Saturday. Since 1970, only three medalists have won the title.

NASCAR drivers fire two team members for prank

NASCAR stars Terry Labonte and Derrick Cope fired two employees for a racial prank in which one of their workers wore a sheet over his head like a Klansman and confronted a black colleague.

Witnesses characterized the July 8 episode at the New Hampshire International Speedway as a joke by two white motor-coach drivers that went too far.

"It just needs to be understood that there is a line that cannot be crossed, joking or otherwise," said Kevin Triplett, NASCAR's director of operations.

Sampras outlasts rain, 20-point tiebreaker

MASON, Ohio (AP)—Pete Sampras outlasted a thunderstorm delay and a 20-point tiebreaker to beat Jan Siemerink of the Netherlands 7-6 (11-9), 6-4 Tuesday night in a second-round match at the $2.45 million ATP Championship.

Sampras, ranked No. 1 in the world for a record 272 weeks, has won 18 consecutive matches, the fourth-longest streak of his career. He's collected three titles in that span, including Wimbledon.

"I've been on a pretty good roll," said Sampras, who had to rally after a sluggish start. "The run's not going to last forever. But I hope it lasts another 3-4 weeks."

That would put Sampras through the U.S. Open, which he has made a prime target of this year's campaign.

Sampras got into trouble when he failed to hold serve in game three of the first set. But with Sampras trailing 4-3, he was at double-break point against Siemerink when the deluge hit the ATP Tennis Center just north of Cincinnati.

When play resumed 64 minutes later, Sampras won the break point to get back on serve and set the course toward the tie-breaker.

"I had some trouble after the rain break with the humidity," Siemerink said. "I just couldn't get my first serve in any more. Against Pete, that is very important."

Pete Sampras returns a shot to Jan Siemerink Tuesday in Mason, Ohio.

Even then, Sampras had to rally from triple-set point in the tie-breaker. Siemerink helped with a double-fault, and Sampras won a point on what he called "one of the few backhand job winners I've hit in my career."

Sampras started the second set in the same rocky fashion as the first. He missed the ball entirely on a jumping overhead attempt in game two and failed to hold serve. But he broke Siemerink right back in the third game three and again in the fifth and both players held the rest of the way. Match point was a leaping overhead by Sampras—the same shot he had missed earlier.

In other evening matches, fifth-seeded Tim Henman of Britain beat John van Lottum of the Netherlands 6-2, 6-1, and sixth-seeded Gustavo Kuerten of Brazil beat Alberto Martin of Spain 6-2, 6-3.

Sampras, Henman and Kuerten advanced to the round of 16, along with seventh-seeded Richard Krajicek of the Netherlands, who beat Ivan Ljubicic of Croatia 6-1, 6-3 in the second round.

Schett wins in California

MANHATTAN BEACH, Calif.—Seventh-seeded Barbara Schett of Austria beat Ines Gorrochategui of Argentina 6-3, 6-2 and No. 8 Sandrine Testud of France was upset 6-1, 6-3 by doubles specialist Corina Morariu on Tuesday in the opening round of the $50,000 Acura Classic.

Morariu, a 21-year-old from Boca Raton, Fla., teamed with Lindsay Davenport to win the doubles title at Wimbledon in July. They have since followed that with titles at Stanford and La Costa.

"It was my game plan to be as aggressive as I could," Morariu said after the hour-long match. "I beat her before and I know that works."

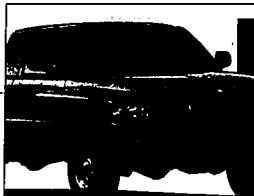

It was the third meeting between the two and Morariu has won twice.

"She served unbelievable. It was too much for me today. I'm not used to waking up early and playing an early match," the 27-year-old Testud said of the morning match played at the Manhattan Country Club.

"I don't think anybody likes to play at 10 in the morning," Morariu said. "We're all in the same boat here."

Lisa Raymond, celebrated her 25th birthday by eliminating Wimbledon semifinalist Mirjana Lucic of Croatia, 6-3, 6-1. Raymond, a qualifier, needed only 55 minutes to beat her 17-year-old opponent.

In other first-round matches Tuesday, Ruxandra Dragomir of Romania rallied to beat Anne Kremer of Luxembourg, 2-6, 7-6 (10-8), 6-2; Patty Schnyder of Switzerland beat Magui Serra of Spain, 6-3, 6-4; and Natasha Zvereva of Belarus outlasted Irina Spilner of Romania, 6-4, 6-7 (7-4), 7-5.

Odds favor Woods to win second major in the PGA Championship

MEDINAH, Ill. (AP) — It's hard to remember what came first, the gaudy expectations or the marketing blitz.

Tiger Woods was going to be the player to top Jack Nicklaus' 18 major championships. He'd win 10 green jackets at Augusta. The rest of the field would have to settle for second whenever he was around.

"It's now year four of the Tiger, and 10 majors have come and gone without his name on a trophy. When the 81st PGA Championship begins Tuesday at Medinah Country Club, though, Woods will be a favorite again."

"Right now, I'm honestly playing pretty good," he said Tuesday. "I've played pretty good since the Byron Nelson. My worst finish has been seventh, and I'm very positive and feel like my game is rounding into shape."

Woods may not have won a major since steamrolling through the Masters in 1997, but his game has never been better. Since tying for seventh in the Byron Nelson in May, he's won three tournaments, including a European PGA event.

His victory in the Western Open last month was his third in four tournaments. He leads the PGA in top-three finishes this year with six. He dropped to No. 2 in the world this week, only because of a quirk in the way the rankings are figured.

Even last year, when he struggled to adjust to changes he made in his swing, he held the No. 1 ranking and led the tour with 13 top-10 finishes despite missing "cutty," one PGA Tour event.

"All I can do is keep giving myself chances and I've come close a couple of times this year," said Woods, who had an outside shot at the Masters entering the final round, tied for third in the U.S. Open and tied for seventh in the British Open. "You can't win every time you're in the hunt. You'd like to win, but it just doesn't happen that way."

"I look at Jack's career and Jack finished a second-in-19 majors. How did he feel about losing that many times?" he added. "The key is to keep giving yourself chances and eventually you're going to win a few."

There's another thing to remember about Nicklaus, Greg Norman said. The intensity of the game has increased tremendously in the last few years, let alone the last 30. While Nicklaus was popular, he didn't have the hordes of people following him wherever he went.

When Woods won the 1997 Western Open, thousands of people broke through the security ropes and followed him up the 18th fairway. When he left the interview room Tuesday after a 30-minute question-and-answer session, he spent another 20 minutes answering questions outside.

"It's easy for us to sit here and say, 'Yeah, it's just another golf tournament.' You can wrap your self in a cocoon and say, 'I'm not going to read the paper.' But it builds up," Norman said. "Any young individual coming out nowadays has to be an extremely, extremely, extremely individual and have the ability to deal with it."

The depth of talent Woods faces is tougher than what Nicklaus saw. Not only was he playing against guys like David Duval, Payne Stewart and Phil Mickelson. And if that's not hard enough, some no-name always seems to break out and win one of the majors.

Look at this year's British Open. Winner Paul Lawrie was ranked 12th and had to qualify to get into the tournament. The guy who had the tournament won wasn't even in the top 100. Jean Van de Velde, was 23rd on the European PGA Tour last year.

"Is it a possibility? Well, yeah," Woods said of breaking Nicklaus' record. "How realistic is it? I don't know."

And he isn't so sure if he's having five or six majors on his résumé. "I'm not sure if I'm a record breaker or not. The pressures of 1997 weigh so intense that only one other person in the world, his 'big brother' — Michael Jordan, could relate to

Jamal Anderson cancels meeting with Falcons

The Associated Press

Jamal Anderson wasn't around Tuesday to witness the stir he created in the Atlanta Falcons camp.

Anderson, refusing to report to training camp until he receives a new contract, had indicated that he planned to meet Tuesday with coach Dan Reeves and general manager Harold Richardson.

Dozens of reporters converged on sleepy Furman University, hoping to get a glimpse of the man who played a key role in the Falcons' Super Bowl season. But the player's California-based agent, Jim Sims, said he couldn't make it to Greenville, S.C., until Wednesday, so the meeting was delayed.

Reeves seemed perturbed by all the attention devoted to his star running back, who is refusing to play out the final year of his current contract for $2.6 million.

Anderson wants a long-term deal in line with the NFL's other top runners after rushing for a franchise-record 1,826 yards and setting a league mark with 410 carries.

"They just want more publicity and I'll be doing a great job of giving it to them," Reeves grouched to reporters.

The coach, who has final say on contract matters, continued to draw a line in the sand over Anderson's demands. He said the running back should accept the Falcons' offer or live up to his contract and become a free agent at the end of the season.

"I don't see anything being different just because we're meeting face to face... instead of talking on the phone," Reeves said. "We've stated our stance and that's not going to change."

He did concede a willingness to shift some money to earlier years in the contract. While the sides have basically agreed on a five-year deal worth $28 million to $30 million, Anderson is reportedly seeking $13 million in the first three years and the Falcons have offered $11 million.

Also, the Falcons have offered a $7 million signing bonus, while Anderson is seeking at least $7.5 million after initially asking for $10 million.

Broncos

Coach Mike Shanahan dispelled rumors of a developing quarterback controversy with one word Tuesday. "Ridiculous," he said.

Even though his first pass was intercepted and he went 2-for-7 for 13 yards gain in Denver's exhibition opener, Shanahan said Bubby Brister is the Broncos' first-string quarterback. Period.

While Brister's performance in Saturday's 20-17 victory over San

NFL training camps

Diego was disappointing, third-string quarterback Chris Miller played brilliantly. In his first game since concussions forced him out of the NFL in December 1995, the 10-year veteran was 11-of-13 for 137 yards.

But while offensive coordinator Gary Kubiak praised Miller, he cautioned that he was playing against San Diego's reserves.

"He's working with second- and third-string guys, so he's going to rip those guys apart," Kubiak said.

Dolphins

Placekicker Olindo Mare is a candidate for the punting job, too.

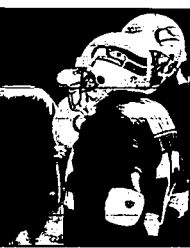

The word came from coach Jimmy Johnson, who is searching for a punter to replace the departed Klaus Wilmsmeyer. "He just asked me if I could give it a shot," Mare said. "I'm getting a fair warning to get some practice in."

Two others are also contending for the job - Brent Bartholomew, a sixth-round draft choice from Ohio State, and free-agent acquisition Nick Gallery, who has been with four NFL teams the past three years.

Patriots

No rookies will start in New England's exhibition opener Friday night against Washington.

"They'll get a ton of playing time, but I'd like to even out all the snaps for all the guys in all of these head-to-head competitive situations, including the center spot and tailback," coach Pete Carroll said.

Two NFL players in action during a game.

Tuesday. But rookies could eventually star.

At center, the competition is between second-year man Jason Anderson and first-round draft pick Damien Woody of Boston College. And at tailback, the veteran is former Colts backup Lamont Warren, who is battling second-round pick Kevin Faulk.

AT&T plans to reduce in-state business rates

BOISE - AT&T Corp. announced Tuesday price reductions for in-state long distance business calls effective Aug. 14 are projected to save Idaho businesses $1.2 million annually.

AT&T is reducing prices as a result of the Idaho Public Utilities Commission's ruling to lower access charges, the fees AT&T and other long distance carriers pay to all local telephone companies to begin and end long distance calls.

Price changes will vary by service. The reductions are spread across small, medium and large business services and result in up to a 15 percent overall reduction.

Tuesday's announcement follows AT&T's reduction in residential rates in May and from the introduction of low cost calling plans.

"We're passing along to our customers the savings we get when the access charges we must pay to local telephone companies are reduced," said Eileen Benner, AT&T assistant vice president, Idaho government affairs. "As intended by the Legislature, all customers are benefiting from the law passed two years ago requiring local telephone companies to reduce their access charges. AT&T will continue to share the savings if the PUC continues to enforce the law and the subsequent reduction of access fees charged by the local telephone companies."

MCI network flaw cripples some ATMs, data services

CHICAGO - A glitch in MCI WorldCom Inc.'s data transmission network has partially disabled thousands of automated teller machines and restricted market trading of corn, soybeans and financial futures.

The problem began late last week and has caused extensive delays to nearly 30 percent of MCI WorldCom's global data network customers worldwide, company spokeswoman Linda Laughlin said Tuesday.

"Our network did not go down, but in some large metropolitan areas, customers couldn't get their traffic into a particular switch," Laughlin said. "Our technicians are still investigating what caused the problem and are working to identify all the service interruptions."

Laughlin said she did not know when service would be returned to normal.

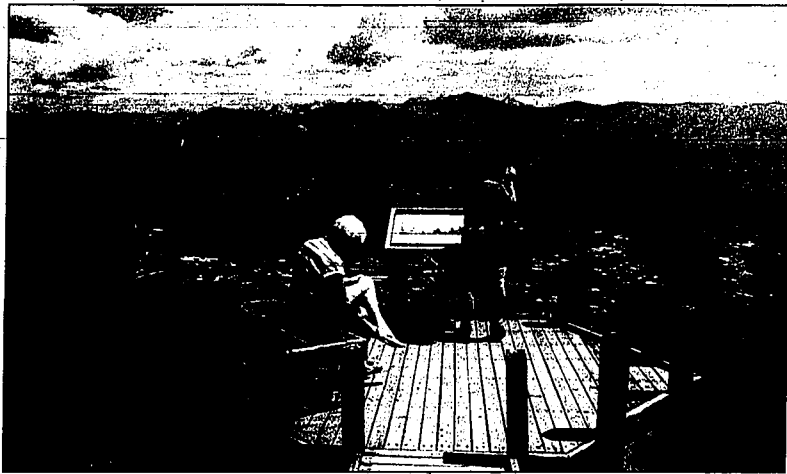

The problems did not affect MCI WorldCom's long-distance telephone service.

MCI WorldCom was upgrading network software Thursday night when network customers began experiencing problems in cities including New York, Boston, Chicago, Los Angeles and San Francisco, Laughlin said.

ATMs nationwide - and some outside the United States - had intermittent trouble dispensing money because the disruption prevented the machines from communicating and determining a customer's balance. Some Internet services also became backlogged.

At the Chicago Board of Trade, the world's largest futures exchange, electronic trading terminals known as Project A shut down across the globe.

Sun Valley in the summer

Year-round plan starts to pay off

By Barb Newert

SUN VALLEY - Snow isn't the only thing that draws visitors to Sun Valley.

Moderate temperatures, good food, entertainment and recreation all are part of the mix that brings people in droves during summer months and keeps them coming back to town.

"Over the 20 years I've been watching (the Sun Valley area), I've seen continuous strengthening of the summer season," said Lon McDonald, labor market analyst for Job Service in Twin Falls. "That's very good for the retail sector and all aspects of the economy up there."

plan to promote the Ketchum/Sun Valley area.

"It's definitely paid off," said Carol Waller, executive director of the chamber of commerce.

The group developed a marketing fund to promote the area's attractions, such as the Sun Valley Summer Symphony, Jazz on the Green at Elkhorn Resort, Saturday night ice shows at Sun Valley Resort, Wagon Days celebration, gallery walks, musical and theatrical presentations, antique and crafts shows, and an annual writers conference.

From railroads to small shops, GOP tax bill helps businesses

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - From railroads to neighborhood markets to huge multinational companies, the $792 billion tax cut package pushed through Congress by Republicans has help for businesses large and small.

Roughly $72 billion of the total cut over 10 years would directly benefit business, and many stand a good chance of eventually becoming law even if President Clinton vetoes this version of the bill as he has promised.

"Once you've gotten into the bill, you can go back up to the Hill and say, 'This is non-provisional because it's been passed by either the House or Senate,'" said Evan Liddiard, a partner at the KPMG accounting firm's national tax office. "You've gotten a foot in the water."

Some of the breaks are big and complicated, such as a $24 billion change in the arcane world of international taxes to allow U.S.-based companies a new global way of calculating credits for interest expenses incurred while operating in a foreign country. General Motors Co. led the lobbying effort for that measure.

Some are simple and much smaller. A provision with negligible cost inserted by Rep. Dave Camp, a Republican whose Michigan district is prime hunting territory, would allow makers of specialty big-game arrowheads to pay a lower excise tax because they would no longer be defined as "essential components" of standard arrows.

For business lobbyists, the changes merely rectify unfair or onerous portions of the tax code, even if they primarily benefit single industries or just one company.

"It redresses many inequities of the current tax law that needlessly restrict small business growth, stability and job creation," said Nilsen Litterst of the National Federation of Independent Business.

But even some Republicans recoiled at the numerous provisions aimed at specific interests.

"For years, and this bill is no exception, we have ... put tax loopholes for special interests ahead of tax relief for working families," said Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., who nonethe-

Online games

Bettors play free on Boise gambling site

BOISE (AP) - A Boise-based Internet company is taking a new approach to online gambling with a site that could give away $3 million each week.

WebMillion.com Inc. launched its game this week. The site lets players pick six numbers three times a day. The game, with long odds and payoff time, does not charge players to select numbers.

"We are going to be the first-ever free multimillion-dollar Web site," Chief Executive Tony Hauser said. "Already our traffic has gone through the roof."

The prizes are paid for by advertisers. Banner ads flash in the top section of each page.

Other Web sites, such as www.freelotto.com, give away large sums of money, but industry analysts say WebMillion.com has the biggest purse.

To play, participants must sign up to become members at www.webmillion.com and provide personal information such as street address, e-mail address and birth date. But the company said it is not selling member information to advertisers.

After becoming a member, players pick six numbers from the 94 available. That makes the odds 1 in 814,216,767. The Idaho Lottery's Powerball odds are 1 in 80,089,128.

The winning numbers are picked by an accounting firm's computer program on Monday evenings, and posted Tuesday morning. The first numbers will be drawn next week, and winners will collect the $3 million prize in annual payments of $75,000 for 40 years.

Hauser said everything his company is doing is legal. And the Idaho attorney general's office said WebMillion does not require state registration because it is not a pay-to-play game.

The game is banned in Florida where state law does not allow that type of sweepstakes.

less voted for the bill.

The sheer size of the tax cut, which would be the largest since 1981, ensured that lobbyists stood a good chance of getting their provisions included.

Railroads and inland waterway barge companies, for example, objected to laws forcing them to continue paying a 4.3-cent-a-gallon fuel excise tax to help reduce the federal budget deficit a deficit that no longer exists. Excise taxes, they argued, are normally earmarked for a specific purpose, and this tax no

Kansas City (AP) — Cargill Inc., the largest U.S. agribusiness company and the biggest private firm in the nation, on Tuesday blamed a slumping U.S. farm economy and litigation with rival seedmaker Pioneer Hi-Bred International Inc. for cutting operating profits during its 1999 fiscal year by 53 percent.

Although the company's overall earnings climbed to $597 million, operating profits equaled $220 million, down from $468 million in fiscal 1998. Remaining profit derived from the sale of its international seed business to Monsanto Co., which has companies in Idaho, for $1.4 billion.

Russians take control of some territory held by rebels

MAKHACHKALA, Russia — Russian forces Tuesday drove Islamic rebels out of two villages, and surrounded the militants in two others in the turbulent Caucasus Mountains, officials said.

The Russian troops and the rebels have been skirmishing for four days in the southern republic of Dagestan, and the Russians appeared to be gaining the upper hand.

The Russians cleared the militants from two villages in the southwest Tsamindinsky district and had encircled the rebels in two villages in the Botlikh region, according to Dagestan officials. The fighting was relatively light, the officials said.

"The situation in Dagestan has changed and is controllable now," Anatoly Kvashinin, the chief of the army's general staff, was quoted as saying by the ITAR-Tass news agency.

In Moscow, acting Prime Minister Vladimir Putin estimated it would take two weeks to end the standoff, according to the ITAR-Tass news agency.

The Dagestan government said four Russian pilots were killed Tuesday when their helicopters were shot down over Botlikh. Four rebels and two Russian soldiers were killed Monday, and both sides suffered a number of wounded, according to Dagestan television and the Interior Ministry.

Russia has been amassing forces in the region, and the troops have far more firepower than the rebels, who seized the villages on Saturday after marching across the border from the breakaway republic of Chechnya. After the disastrous 1994 war in Chechnya, Russia appears wary of igniting a larger conflict. Still, Russian military and political leaders have insisted that the rebel forces must be crushed.

All hostages freed in Sierra Leone, officials says

FREETOWN, Sierra Leone — Former junta soldiers freed their remaining prisoners Tuesday, ending a five-day hostage crisis, Sierra Leone's information minister said.

Spencer said at news conference that the rogue rebels had freed 15 West African Intervention force soldiers, a U.N. military observer and some 200 civilians.

A former junta official returned to his ex-colleagues' camp

Monday night to negotiate the release of hostages. The kidnapping highlighted divisions among Sierra Leone's rebels, who fought an 8-year civil war for control of the West African nation.

Taiwan confirms Chinese planes crossed airspace

TAIPEI, Taiwan — Taiwanese officials did an about-face Tuesday and confirmed that Chinese warplanes crossed into Taiwan's military airspace twice last month. The Defense Ministry said it had previously denied the crossings because they appeared to have been accidental.

The ministry denied the crossings as recently as Tuesday morning, but then released a statement after President Lee Teng-hui mentioned the planes at a government seminar.

The announcement came amid tensions between Beijing and Taipei that have risen to their highest level in years, causing international concern over the possibility of a confrontation.

Dutch government aims to legalize mercy killing

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands — The Dutch government published plans Tuesday to legalize mercy killing under strict guidelines, which would allow children as young as 12 to demand and receive euthanasia.

The plans are expected to gain parliamentary approval next year, which would make the Netherlands the first country in the world to legalize mercy killing. Under the new law, which formalizes practices already widely accepted and carried out in the Netherlands, euthanasia and physician-assisted suicide would be legal only if carried out under strict guidelines.

Three die as violence returns to Algerian capital

ALGIERS, Algeria — Three people died and 30 were wounded in two blasts in Algiers — the first such attacks since President Abdelaziz Bouteflika took office four months ago, officials said Tuesday.

A bomb exploded Monday near government offices in the city center, killing three people and wounding eight.

Earlier Monday, an explosion rocked the popular Bab El Ghazi neighborhood on Monday. Hospital officials said Tuesday that two people were wounded, one of them seriously.

There were no claims of responsibility. In an unusual step, the security services did not issue any statements condemning, or acknowledging, the attacks.

Forensic experts exume bodies of 250 victims

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Forensic experts, reconstructing a 1995 massacre in the Bosnian enclave of Srebrenica, have finished exhuming about 250 bodies from a mass grave, U.N. officials said Tuesday. An estimated 800,000 people total have been killed since 1992.

"Although the grave was disturbed, remains of approximately 250 persons were found, some with their hands tied behind their backs," Kelly Moore, the spokeswoman for the United Nations in Bosnia, said in Sarajevo.

Eclipse conjures up God, had spirits in Romania

RAMNICU VALCEA, Romania — In the rolling hills of central Romania, a south-southwest breeze Tuesday to chase out the demons of greed and scientists made final adjustments on their telescopes in expectation of the last solar eclipse of the millennium.

"We will ring bells and make loud noises to scare away the bad spirits," said Cherrighe Popu, representing an ancient Romanian legend about eclipses.

Today (4:30 a.m. EDT), the moon is expected to totally eclipse the sun in Romania. Former President Nicolae Ceausescu, about 100 miles northwest of Bucharest, the eclipse will be seen for two minutes and 23 seconds — the longest anywhere on Earth.

Argentine rancher Edmundo Moore handles cattle with farmhand Mauricio Altavista, left, in Lobos, Argentina. With global commodity prices slumping to their lowest in years, farmers across Argentina — like their counterparts far away as the American Midwest — are feeling the pinch.

Slack crop prices, high taxes trouble farmers on the Argentine Pampas

LOBOS, Argentina (AP) — Gazing out over rolling pastures, beyond-stout cattle chomping on grass, rancher Edmundo Moore is unmoved by what he's seeing in the Argentine countryside.

"More and more I see land up for sale, plus changing hands," he laments, pausing to scrape the mud from his leather boots. "Fields are landing in hands of people who don't know anything about farming."

Moore, 74 himself is struggling to find buyers for the cattle, corn, sunflowers and wheat he produces on his 1,400-acre spread called "El Pinos," Spanish for "The Pines."

With global commodity prices slumping in their lowest in years, farmers across Argentina — like their counterparts in the United States — are feeling the pinch.

60 miles northeast of Buenos Aires, "El Pinos" has been in Moore's family for generations. His ancestors arrived from Ireland by way of the United States in 1827 — part of a wave of European immigrants drawn to Argentina's abundant countryside.

"This is the worst I've seen it," he said.

Argentine farmers say their condition is bleak. Already saddled with some $7 billion in debt, the value of their crops has dropped some 50 percent in the past three years, they say.

Moore has been working feverishly to restructure his own debt, a figure he was reluctant to give, and making arrangements with creditors.

time for Argentine farmers" said Horacio Delgado, president of the farm association Frente Agrario Nacional. "Our backs are really up against the wall."

Making matters worse, demand for Argentine products has slackened after the country's biggest customer, Brazil, devalued its currency in January. The devaluation made Argentine products more expensive in Brazil.

Flooding earlier this year also caused hundreds of millions of dollars in damage across this heartland.

Frustrated, Argentine farmers have staged a series of protests, urging the government to provide relief. Thousands of striking farm workers descended on Buenos Aires late last month, calling on President Carlos Menem to lower taxes and help farmers fight mounting debts.
