Agency: Breaching saves fish

But report makes no recommendation on how to save salmon

By N.S. Nokkertved
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — One federal agency Friday said clearly that the best way to recover endangered Idaho salmon would be to breach four federal dams on the lower Snake River.

"A free-flowing river is better than a dammed river, that should not be a surprise to anyone," Anne Badgley, regional director for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, told a Portland, Ore., news conference Friday morning. But Badgley noted that the

If federal officials decide to breach four federal dams on the lower Snake River, and Congress approves the idea, the earthen portion of the dams would be removed, leaving the concrete navigation locks, power house and spillway as shown in this picture taken before this lower Snake River dam was completed.

Salmon recovery will take Idaho water if dams remain

By N.S. Nokkertved
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Salmon recovery in the Northwest will take more water from southern Idaho if four federal dams on the lower Snake River stay in place, one federal official says.

The specific measures to recover endangered salmon will depend on the final decisions on the recovery efforts, said Brian Brown, assistant regional administrator for hydro operations with the National Marine Fisheries Service.

Many things have contributed to the demise of the salmon — including over-fishing, logging, grazing, mining, irrigated agriculture, dam building, hatcheries and ocean conditions.

As federal officials and scientists in the Pacific Northwest grapple with saving and recovering populations of endangered salmon in the hydroelectric dams on the Snake and Columbia rivers alone are not going to do it. And neither are improvements in habitat, restrictions on fishing and changes in hatchery operations.

Documents released Friday at a Portland, Ore., news conference suggest that a combination

REMEMBER THE NEEDY

While some bell-ringers like Teresa Fletcher say their donations are the same as last year, overall, Salvation Army officials say cash and toy donations are well below last year's pace.

Salvation Army donations lag

By Rachel Denry
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — A gift of just one toy could make a tremendous difference in the Christmas of a little boy or girl.

The Twin Falls branch of the Salvation Army distributes nearly 400 Christmas baskets to families within Twin Falls and last year distributed two gifts apiece to 720 kids.

But with donations lower this year than in years past, The Salvation Army may need to dip into other funds to cover the Christmas needs.

So far it is about $1,600 behind in donations made to the Christmas kettles outside department stores and behind in toy donations compared with the amount received by about the same time last year, The Salvation Army's administrator Maj. Ed Patterson said.

"On the whole it's behind," he said.

How to give

... the Salvation Army's Christmas kettles outside department stores. ... Any tags describe a child who needs a gift. ... For information, call 733-8720.

Every family whose application is accepted gets a basket from The Salvation Army. Last year the $27,000 raised with the Christmas kettles made up for the shortfall in toy and food donations with the remainder going to a winter-relief fund.

"What we have to buy now in Christmas toys were depending upon" for later needs, Patterson said. "The excess money goes into winter relief."

So the more money The Salvation Army spends for buying toys that weren't donated, the less money will be available to help pay for heat, food, clothing, prescriptions, lodging and utilities for needy families in the winter months.

"We depend on all of that," Patterson said. "I don't know what else we can do but appeal to the community."

The Twin Falls Salvation Army is not the only branch that's behind in Christmas donations this year; the Portland, Ore., branch also is, Patterson said.

"I don't know if that's a national trend or people are waiting to give at the last minute," he said.

Reluctance to give also may come from the misconception that the Salvation Army doesn't need local funding, Patterson said.

Donations are greatly appreciated and needed.

"I think it's important what we do here," Patterson said. "It is a fundraiser, but it also helps people celebrate Christ's birth. To help people — that's what we're here for."

Making Christmas special for children is another mission of The Salvation Army.

"Some of these kids it's the only toy they're going to get," program director Maj. Ann Patterson said. "Some of the families I'm amazed what they live on — $600 a month."

The Salvation Army also has seen a decline in "angels" being removed from Christmas trees within department stores.

The donor removes the angel tag, buys a present for the child indicated and returns the tag and gift to the store or The Salvation Army's office.

The names of 100 children still are waiting to be placed on the trees, Ann Patterson said.

"They aren't moving very well," Ed Patterson said. "All that means is we have more to buy."

Gore hits Bradley on Medicare

The Associated Press

NASHUA, N.H. — Al Gore accused Democratic presidential rival Bill Bradley of shortchanging Medicare Friday night, and Bradley shot back in campaign debate that the vice president's own health insurance plan would let some Americans go without coverage.

"Who would you leave out?" he asked.

"The answer is simple. I won't leave anybody out," Gore shot back instantly, seated a few feet away from his rival on a college stage in the nation's first presidential primary state.

The vice president and former New Jersey senator argued, as well, over education, but found common ground on other subjects in a 90-minute encounter that was contentious and cordial by turns.

They agreed, for example, that homosexuals should be allowed to serve in the military, and that now is not the time to set a timetable for a manned space mission to Mars.

Gore remains the front-runner nationally in the race for the party's nomination, as judged in the polls. But statewide surveys show Bradley even or slightly ahead in New Hampshire, where the first primary ballots will be cast on Feb. 9.

Gore has said Bradley's costly prescription for universal health care would mean not enough money would be left over for Medicare, and the issue has emerged as a flash point in their increasingly contentious battle.

He reiterated his claim midway through the debate, and Bradley had a quick rejoinder in three terms in the Senate, he said.

"I don't want to see 18 years, and coverage is the part-time worker, the worker victimized by an industry that is downsized or the 94 percent of the people who live in poverty who don't have health insurance," he said.

Gore replied: "I want to get universal health insurance with a step by step plan and neither of us has covered everyone."

Opening a new front, he added, "You canceled Medicaid," the health care program for the poor.

The superintendent said that handwriting analysis indicates that the list and the threat were written by different people. And he said the names "could very well have been a list for a party."

Despite talk of hoax, 'hit list' keeps Parma students absent

The Associated Press

PARMA — Two-thirds of the 300 high school students in this small farming community stayed home Friday after the discovery of what looked like a hit list. Those who did go to school were met by police and metal detectors.

"Although everyone has figured this was a hoax, when it comes to something as important as their children, parents certainly take a look at it," School Superintendent Val Bush said.

Last week, a list of 60 students — 30 boys and 30 girls — was found on a classroom floor. Written across the top was a threat of something violent that would happen, possibly Friday, police and school officials said. They would not disclose details.

On Friday, only about 100 high school students came to class. About a third of the 630 students at Parma's adjacent middle school and the elementary school stayed home.

Among them was high school freshman Janna Hansen, the 14-year-old daughter of the school board chairman. "Any sort of threat or hit list definitely is something to be concerned about, she said. "I think everyone pretty much felt the same concern all the way around."

Idaho: High and middle clouds were moving into Idaho this morning while fog and low clouds were prevalent in the valleys of southern and southeastern Idaho. Winds around the valley were calm to light. Elsewhere: Light snow fell on parts of the Midwest and Northeast Friday, while the Southeast had cloudy skies and snow and rain fell on the Pacific Northwest. Early to midday skies were seen over the northern Plains. A few light snow showers fell on eastern North Dakota. A storm system moving into the Pacific Northwest brought rain and mountain snow to Washington and Oregon. A large area of light to moderate rain was seen over western sections of Washington and Oregon. Snow fell above 5,000 feet in the Olympics and Cascades. Fair and dry weather dominated in the Southwest and southern Rockies.

of these efforts would be required to save the fish.
No major reductions in stored water from Idaho to increase flows in the lower Snake River are foreseeable even if dams are breached, Brown said.
But if dams are left in, the Fisheries Service would be looking at ways to increase the flows, he said.
Controversy has long surrounded the issue of using stored water from the upper Snake River, which includes southern and eastern Idaho and parts of eastern Oregon, to help endangered salmon.
The Bureau of Reclamation, which operates storage reservoirs in Idaho, releases 427,000 acre-feet from southern and eastern Idaho and 1.2 million acre-feet from Dworshak Reservoir on the Clearwater River, and Idaho Power sends about 237,000 acre-feet from Brownlee Reservoir.
An acre-foot is enough water to cover one acre, one foot deep — 325,850 gallons or 43,560 cubic feet.
Brown agreed with Idaho water users — who have criticized using Idaho water to increase flows — that the Fisheries Service is not going to recover salmon with the water available from Idaho.
Existing station records dating to 1916, when the first stations were installed, show that stream flows have remained essentially

Dams

U.S. Army Corps of Engineers' report on salmon recovery is still a draft and does not consider economic and social costs of removing the four dams.
Bridley and other federal officials spoke in a state-planned telephone conference Friday, announcing the Corps' five-year, $20 million study on breaching Ice Harbor, Lower Monumental, Little Goose and Lower Granite dams on the Snake River in southeastern Washington.
The report apparently took other federal officials of guard. Will Stelle, regional administrator of the National Marine Fisheries Service, said the science remains unclear. But to be effective any recovery plan must be comprehensive.
"The idea that we will let the salmon go extinct is not acceptable," Stelle said.
Analysis included in the Corps' report suggests that recovering salmon will take a combination of actions. It is unlikely that any of the alternatives alone, including dam breaching, could recover the salmon. Some alternatives would benefit some salmon runs more than others.
Recovery measures — restrictions on land uses that affect streams, deep cuts in fishing and changes or elimination of hatcheries — by themselves might keep fish from going extinct. But they would not recover fish, the document says. Conversely, breaching by itself will not recover salmon, but the Corps' document and federal officials did not take a stand on the direction salmon recovery should take.

Dam facts

In addition to not identifying a preferred alternative, the impact statement did not analyze the costs of other alternatives — only the cost of dam breaching. Scott Basse of Idaho Rivers United said following the conference.
"How do they expect the region to pick the best alternative, if they only put a price tag on one alternative," Basse said.
The Corps overestimated the benefits, but breaching still is an affordable alternative, he said.
One thing not covered in the impact statement was an analysis of the costs and effects of taking additional water from southern Idaho. Adding the cost of acquiring water and storage right and the lost agricultural income would make any alternative that includes increased flow in the lower river the most expensive proposal.
And if the dams stay in place the Fisheries Service will be looking for ways to increase flows in the lower Snake River. Brian Brown, assistant regional administrator for hydro operations with the Fisheries Service, said in an interview earlier this week.

Responses to the release Friday of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers' environmental impact statement on salmon recovery alternatives

Bruce Lovell, executive director, Columbia River Alliance:
"I expected a little more for $20 million," said Lovell, who was disappointed that the study did not include a preferred alternative. "Maybe we're asking the impossible."
Todd Maddock, chairman, Northwest Power Planning Council:
"The documents released Friday move the federal government in the right direction — toward a comprehensive approach to fish and wildlife recovery similar to the approach embodied in the Corps' fish and wildlife recovery plan."
Todd Klabenets, Lewiston Chamber of Commerce president:
"The report shows there isn't any simple answer to this. The lack of a clear preferred alternative doesn't surprise him, and that leaves room for more regional dialogue and more analysis of economic effects. "We need to sit down and start talking."
Sen. Larry Craig:
"The documents show there's a little salmon recovery benefit from breaching the dams," said Will Han, a spokesman for Craig. "Until the effects of ocean conditions are better understood, it's hard to make decisions about how to recover salmon in the Snake River. Meanwhile, the region should continue to pursue cost-effective measures that benefit salmon."
Sen. Mike Crapo:
"It's well-known that I don't support dam-breaching or heavy flow augmentation, I do believe there are many measures we can take in the short-term to improve the condition of these fish while we ascertain the long-term measures that will accomplish recovery."

Bad weather delays Hubble repair mission

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) - Rain and thick, low clouds forced NASA to call off Friday night's launch of space shuttle Discovery on a mission to get the Hubble Space Telescope working again.

It was the eighth delay for the flight and cost NASA $750,000 in fuel and overtime pay.

Launch managers said they would try again tonight, their last attempt before giving up for the year.

Discovery and its seven-man crew were supposed to blast off at 8:47 p.m. EST (6:47 MST), but rain and clouds prevented an on-time departure. The weather was so bad, in fact, that NASA had to postpone launching high-altitude balloons to measure the wind.

NASA said it must launch

Discovery by tonight or else give up for the year and wait until January. The space agency does not want to risk having a shuttle in orbit near year's end because of potential Y2K computer problems.

The weather outlook for tonight was only slightly better.

Although eager to have the $3 billion Hubble revived, astronomers said they did not want NASA to rush just to meet the deadline. "We intended to put no pressure on anybody, and if we have to wait until January, that's what we'll do," said David Leckrone, a Hubble scientist.

Hubble's eye to the universe has been closed since Nov. 13, when the four of six gyroscopes failed and all observations ceased.

FBI explores suspect's possible terrorist plot

SEATTLE (AP) - A man authorities said had bomb-making materials in his car as he crossed into the United States was charged Friday with bringing an explosive into the country.

Ahmed Ressaam, an Algeria citizen, was charged with bringing the flammable, explosive oil nitroglycerine into the United States from Canada. He was also charged with making false identification and having false statements to U.S. Customs Service officials.

Ressaam, 32, was arrested Tuesday at Port Angeles, on the Olympic Peninsula about 60 miles northwest of Seattle, when he fled Customs agents who sought to question him on his arrival by ferry from Victoria, British Columbia.

At a hearing Friday, Magistrate David E. Wilson authorized the destruction of two 22-ounce jars of the highly volatile and dangerous nitroglycerine. Defense lawyers wanted to test the material but the judge ordered its disposal, citing safety concerns.

Also found in Ressaam's rented vehicle were 10 plastic bags containing 110 pounds of a white powder identified as urea, a legal substance used to make explosives and fertilizers; two plastic bags containing about 24 pounds of sulfate, used as a desiccant to absorb water and keep things dry; and four small black boxes containing homemade timers - a circuit board with a Casio watch and a nine-volt battery, court papers said.

"Preliminary analysis disclosed that when these materials are combined with a detonator, it would produce a large explosive device," court documents said.

Federal authorities did not say during the court hearing what Ressaam planned to do with the materials or why he was coming to the United States. His lawyers refused to comment.

He was being held without bail pending arraignment Wednesday.

Ressaam had reserved a room Tuesday in a downtown hotel just blocks from the Space Needle and the Seattle Center, site of the city's huge millennium New Year's Eve bash.

He also had a reservation Wednesday on American Airlines flight from Seattle to New York, with a stop in Chicago, and a ticket for a connecting British Airways flight to London, according to court papers.

Customs officials at the ferry crossing became suspicious when his itinerary showed he had come from Vancouver and was heading to Seattle - a 340-mile drive that does not require a trip to Vancouver Island, a ferry ride or a stop in Port Angeles, said FBI spokesman Pat Jones in Washington, D.C.

When the inspector asked about his roundabout route, Ressaam became nervous, Jones said. He fled after inspectors searched his car and found the urea and was caught several blocks away.

Ressaam carried two Canadian driver's licenses, each in a different name, and a Canadian passport. The names were Benni Antoine Noris and Mario Roig.

FBI arrests man in Florida about Columbine threat

WASHINGTON (AP) - The FBI arrested an 18-year-old in Florida Friday and charged him with sending a threat by Internet instant mail to a Columbine High School student that led to closing the Littleton, Colo., facility for two days.

FBI agent Mark Holstlaw said the youth, Michael Jon Campbell of Cape Coral, Fla., confessed to a social networking site he used the screen name "Soup 81" to send the message over America Online's instant message system to Erin J. Walton.

He was charged with transmitting a threatening communication in interstate commerce, according to a complaint and an affidavit by Holstlaw, both released by the Justice Department here. The charge carries a maximum penalty of five years in prison and a $250,000 fine.

U.N. approves inspection plan

UNITED NATIONS (AP) - After a year of stalemate, the Security Council narrowly approved a new U.N. policy for Iraq Friday that would restrict weapons inspections and offer to suspend sanctions if Baghdad cooperates.

Russia, France, China and Malaysia abstained - a major blow to U.S. and British efforts to send Baghdad a united signal that the Security Council would stand for nothing less than full compliance with its demands.

Iraq has already indicated it would reject the resolution, saying it was an American inspired attempt to impose its "evil" will on the Security Council.

U.N. weapons inspections in Iraq ground to a halt a year ago, just before U.S. and British airstrikes that were launched to punish Iraq for failing to cooperate fully with weapons experts.

Jet scream: Quieter engines are coming

WASHINGTON (AP) — There's a kind of hush all over the skies. U.S. commercial jets have been getting quieter, and come New Year's Day, all of them have to meet a new federal noise standard.

In general, an airplane meeting the new benchmark — known as Stage 3 — will be up to 12 percent quieter than airplanes that complied with the expiring Stage 2 noise standard.

Because of the way noise accumulates over time, five airplanes meeting the new standard can operate at an airport in an hour without making the noise allowed on one plane under the old standard.

But people familiar with the issue say jetliners won't become truly quiet until airlines replace older planes with new models using modern engines.

Some airlines have merely fitted their aging jets with "hush kits" to muffle their existing engines and bring them in under the new Stage 3 limit.

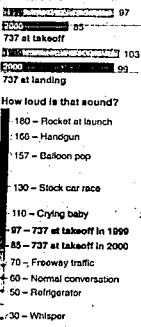

US Airways is taking a different route, replacing old Boeing 727s and McDonnell Douglas DC-9s with new Airbus A320s on its East Coast shuttle routes. It says the new planes spread their noise over an area 10 times smaller than their old planes at the airports in Boston and Washington.

Around LaGuardia Airport in New York, the noise "hot spots" are 17 times smaller. In total, US Airways expects to replace its fleet with up to 400 new planes. Other carriers are stocking up on Boeing models with similarly quiet engines.

"You can certainly hear the difference," said Rep. Joe Crowley, D-N.Y., who represents some of those living around Shhhhhhhh!

U.S. commercial jets will have to be quieter as of Jan. 1 to meet a new federal noise standard. Here is a look at some decibel levels.

Nation in brief

LaGuardia. Using hush kits meets "the letter of the law in compliance, but it's not in the spirit of the law, which is to have these airplanes become more quiet," the congressman said. Toward that end, the International Civil Aviation Organization, a Montreal-based group with roots in the United Nations, has begun work on a Stage 4 standard that would apply to all airlines worldwide early in the 21st century.

New law will help disabled with jobs, health care

WASHINGTON — President Clinton invoked the example of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, who steered the country through the Depression and World War II despite being hobbed by polio, as he signed a law letting millions of disabled Americans retain their government-funded health coverage when they take a job. Fear of losing Medicare and Medicaid benefits is a major barrier keeping disabled people from seeking employment. Many severely disabled people rely on those federal programs because they cannot otherwise afford expensive, specialized care.

Hatch: Tax code needs lots of work

WASHINGTON (AP) — The American tax system needs major changes now and a complete overhaul in the long term, Sen. Orrin Hatch Friday told an audience on the presidential campaign trail in New Hampshire.

Hatch, R-Utah, said that if he is elected president, he will appoint a commission on his second day in office that will propose the long-term changes, including eliminating the Internal Revenue Service and replacing the progressive income tax with a national sales tax.

That same day, he also would send Congress interim legislation to:

- Double the personal exemption.
- Allow a deduction for Social Security taxes paid.

Tripp lawyer hints at delay in trial date

ELICOTT CITY, Md. (AP) — Ending a week marked by trouble for Linda Tripp, her lawyer Friday suggested a possible delay in her Jan. 18 trial date, saying he needs more time to prepare her defense on state wiretapping charges.

Maryland prosecutors called their last witness in a weeklong pretrial hearing highlighted by testimony from Monica Lewinsky. Howard County Circuit Judge Diane Lease increased Mrs. Tripp's legal peril, ruling she was not protected by immunity when she gave Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr her secret tape recordings of her phone conversations with Ms. Lewinsky.

The state's final pretrial witness, assistant state prosecutor Thomas M. McDonough, expressed confidence that the case was free of taint stemming from statements Mrs. Tripp made to Starr under a grant of limited immunity.

Everyone in the Maryland prosecutor's office was told they "should not use this information" when Congress released Starr's impeachment report and the accompanying, immunized testimony of Mrs. Tripp, McDonough testified.

Saying he would waive Mrs. Tripp's right to a speedy trial, Murtha said he wanted to review the transcript of this week's hearing.

Cops say sex offender got Viagra prescription

JANESVILLE, Wis. (AP) — A man deemed a "sexual predator" by the courts is accused of obtaining a prescription for Viagra, a violation of state rules governing his stay at a halfway house.

Ervin Burris, 45, had been staying at the Rock Valley Community Programs halfway house since October 1998. He was returned this week to a state prison hospital for sexual predators.

Authorities say they don't know how Burris got the prescription but suspect he may have asked for it when he was taken to see a Bolot doctor because of a nose irritation.

Republican presidential hopeful Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, right, discusses his agenda Friday at a chamber of commerce breakfast in Nashua, N.H.

- Eliminate capital-gains taxes and exempt the first $5,000 in dividend income, or $10,000 in income for couples filing jointly.
- Eliminate the "marriage penalty" and estate and gift taxes.

Buchanan says it's time to lift trade sanctions

WASHINGTON (AP) — Presidential contender Pat Buchanan acknowledged "a dramatic departure from what I've argued and believed" in reversing his support for economic sanctions and pledging to lift all such punishments against Iran, Iraq, Cuba and other nations.

"American food, medicine and 'goods essential to a decent life' should flow freely to children in those nations, he said.

Buchanan, who is seeking the Reform Party nomination, explained the shift Thursday by citing findings of a former United Nations official who said this year that as many as 5,000 Iraqi children die every month from the sanctions' effect on their water supply, diet and medical care.

"Our sanctions are sowing seeds of hatred that will one day flower in acts of terrorism against us."

Injection may someday help kick nicotine habit

WASHINGTON — One day, folks who want to quit smoking may find help by taking a shot. Researchers sponsored by the National Institute on Drug Abuse are doing laboratory tests on a vaccine that works against nicotine, with a target of beginning human trials by 2002.

"It's not going to be a magic bullet," warned Dr. Paul Fentel of the Hennepin County Medical Center in Minneapolis. It would be part of a package designed to help people who want to stop smoking.

While the idea of vaccination is similar, combating a drug like nicotine isn't identical to battling an infectious disease, Fentel explained. "In a disease, you get a series of immunizations, and you are protected for life," he said. "We do not expect that kind of effect for nicotine. It's not clear how long the protection will last."

Clinton signs tax credit, minimum tax protection

WASHINGTON — President Clinton signed a tax bill Friday that renews a key business tax break and protects 3 million people from a complex tax trap but also consumes a bit of the politically volatile budget surplus.

Over the next 10 years, the legislation would use about $18 billion of the estimated $1-trillion budget surplus that is not set aside for Social Security.

Gingrich lies low with divorce deal

SMYRNA, Ga. (AP) — Newt Gingrich worked out a divorce agreement with his wife of 18 years on Friday, avoiding a potentially embarrassing public airing of his affair with a 33-year-old congressional aide.

The former House speaker and his wife, Marianne, reached the confidential agreement around 1:30 a.m. after a mediation session that lasted 12 hours. They left her lawyer's office without comment.

Before the settlement, Callista Blisek, with whom Gingrich admitted having an "intimate relationship" beginning in 1992, had been ordered to answer questions about Gingrich and had already turned over some gifts and documents to Mrs. Gingrich's lawyers. The settlement means Ms. Blisek will not have to answer any further questions.

Even the Amish can't escape mania over Y2K

Knights Ridden News Service

LANCASTER, Pa. — Here in the heart of Amish country, where religion requires the faithful to shun modern technology, a cartoon tucked to the wall of Rich's Quilts and Crafts shop shows just how worried people here are about the Y2K computer bug.

The cartoon shows an Amish farmer clutching a pitchfork, "Y2K ready," the caption reads.

More than 300 years ago, the Amish resolved to avoid the moral corruption of modern society by swearing off involvement in it. Today, devout Amish live a rural lifestyle little changed over the centuries. They drive horse-drawn buggies, use wither industrial tools and consequently have no fear of Y2K computer breakdowns disrupting their lives.

God is looking out for them, the Amish say.

"Whatever comes, we will take it. I'm not worried about it," said Ron Ann Rich, who operates the craft shop's battery-operated cash register. "There is plenty of food in the cellar."

In modern America has become so dependent on technology that even the Amish aren't impervious to Y2K ripple effects. Credit-card machines for tourists' use can be seen in the corners of most stores around Lancaster, and handmade Amish quilts can be ordered from www.amish-heartland.com, sold online by non-Amish middle men.

roll like waves across a grassy valley. Most of all, they come to marvel at an exotic culture that lives by its stern moral values, seemingly without temptation.

Now that the tourists' complex, hectic world is menaced by the threat of Y2K computer breakdowns, the thought of living on a quiet farm came Jan. 1 holds a special appeal for many.

"It's a much simpler, much nicer life," said an admiring Walker Round, a retired school teacher from Jermy, Pa. (Round added that his home computer is Y2K-ready.)

Amish lantern maker Jake King runs a shop near Georgetown, southeast of Lancaster, where he produces propane lamps that cost up to $600. Like most Amish, his life isn't totally independent of the outside world.

In fact, "They creatively avoid directly using the technology," said Ron Herz, a tour guide from the Mennonite Information Center in Lancaster. "The Amish are extraordinarily creative that way.... Some have cell phones, you heard."

These, in short, aren't your grandparents' Amish.

Often they are wealthy business-owners, or married workers in modern shops. Many have learned to accommodate the changing society around them, even as they maintain their distance from it. Even strict Old Order Amish, who wear the traditional hats and plain clothes, are striving to avoid communism.

Farmhouse lights run on propane. Electric appliances run on battery or compressor power. Quite a few buggies can be seen parked beside the local bank. And back in the summer of 1998, two Amish youths were caught helping an outside motorcycle gang sell drugs to Amish children.

"The general public is often surprised and disappointed when they see the discrepancy between the reality (of Amish life) and the ideal picture they have of it," said Richard A. Stevick, a professor of psychology at Messiah College in Grantham, Pa.

"Things are rarely as simple as they seem."

Only about 20,000 Amish are still trying to hold on to their traditional lifestyle amid 450,000 people in Lancaster County. Amish farms lie minutes from major outlet malls. Enormous power-line towers sprout across the rolling fields. The new watch light-rail trains to Philadelphia rock through their yards each morning.

"(Y2K) crosses their minds," said Dean Baker, manager of Amish Country Crafts near Strasburg. "It affects the different outlets they use, and the raw materials they buy. And they make 90 percent of it all (their income) from tourism. So, if they should falter after Y2K, they'll notice."

Tourists leave $1.2 billion behind annually. They come to gaze at the gentle rolling farmland lined with white fences. They come to feel the peace that rises from watching a breeze roll like waves across a grassy valley. Most of all, they come to marvel at an exotic culture that lives by its stern moral values, seemingly without temptation.

"Sometimes I think it would be nice to have a computer," he sighed, adjusting his hat and looking across his lawn. "But, we'll be fine without one."

Media will battle through, no matter what

NEW YORK (AP) — One news-paper will supply reporters with two-way radios in case Y2K kills phone service. Others have backup generators ready, while a TV station has arranged to broadcast directly on cable.

YEAR 2000 CRUNCH

News organizations covering Y2K and the arrival of the new year vow to keep publishing or broadcasting, even if power outages or other troubles strike.

That is not to say editors or news directors actually expect havoc on Jan. 1, when some computers might misread the year 2000 as 1900. The backup plans serve as insurance.

"Most papers have a contingency plan in place whatever the event might be," said Richard Wesnick, editor of The Billings Gazette in Montana. "You are committed to publishing a newspaper every day, and you go about doing that by any means."

The Muskegon Chronicle in Michigan rented a 500-kilowatt generator that can power the newsroom and printing press. Crews will warm up the generator at 11 p.m. on Dec. 31.

"It seems to me worthwhile insurance for a couple thousand dollars' worth of spending," editor Gunnar Carlson said. "If we do not publish for a day, we talk about tens of thousands of dollars in lost advertising."

The Oregonian in Portland ordered a set of two-way portable radios in case regular and cell phones fail.

Some papers will prepare inside pages ahead of time and wrap around a cover with post-midnight happenings. That way, if power fails, papers can still report developments from the rest of the world. Some chain newspapers can also publish at a sister publication.

Broadcasters will rely on plans already in place for hurricanes and other natural disasters. Most have backup generators and alternative ways of transmitting, and frequencies set aside for internal communications.

KFDM-TV in Beaumont, Texas, already has a link with the local-cable company to feed directly into the cable system if transmitters fail and the station cannot use the airwaves. The station can reach more than 70 percent of its regular audience that way.

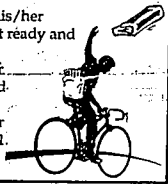

Emergency management officials will rely heavily on the broadcast media if problems occur.

Teen drug use starting to level off

WASHINGTON (AP) — Overall teenage drug use remained stable for the third consecutive year, but more high school students have been using steroids and the "club drug" ecstasy, the government reported Friday.

The annual Monitoring the Future survey examines drug, alcohol and cigarette use among eighth, 10th- and 12th-graders.

White drug use rose through most of the 1990s, this year's report marks three years of steady — and in some cases, dropping — drug and alcohol use.

"Today's report confirms that we have halted the dangerous trend of increased drug use among our young people," said Donna Shalala, secretary of health and human services.

"Our job now is to continue the momentum we have built up with local communities, parents and teachers, and to work even harder to let teenagers know the real danger of alcohol, tobacco and drugs," she said.

"The use of most illegal drugs remained steady in 1998. Cigarette smoking remained stable, although there was a small decline among eighth-graders.

Also among eighth-graders, the use of crack cocaine began to decline this year after tripling between 1991 and 1998.

While alcohol consumption generally remained stable, seniors reported a slight decrease in daily use. Their use of crystal methamphetamine also declined. Barry McCaffrey, the White House drug policy director, said the findings were encouraging and served as an indicator that the country's strategy against drug abuse is working.

"If we can prevent drug, tobacco or alcohol abuse by a child through his or her teens, statistically speaking, that child will avoid chemical dependency as an adult," McCaffrey said.

Vietnamese commandos finally get compensation

WASHINGTON — They were dropped behind enemy lines by the CIA in an espionage operation that went awry in spectacular fashion.

Lying in wait for these South Vietnamese commandos — who were recruited, and paid, by the United States in the early 1960s — were North Vietnamese units with inside information on their plans.

Those commandos who weren't killed were bailed off to military prisons, where they were brutally interrogated, starved to death or kept in shackles for years.

The more than 200 surviving "lost commandos" have engaged in recent years in another struggle — for recognition and recompense by the U.S. government.

And their persistence has begun to pay off.

Rep. Loretta Sanchez, D-Calif., whose district is home to some of the commandos, helped steer revised legislation through Congress two years ago to compel compensation by the Pentagon. A special commission established to handle the payments has just begun to parcel out funds to the men or their survivors.

But the process wasn't easy. After getting clearance for the first refugees of this ill-fated spy and sabotage mission to enter the United States five years ago, attorney John C. Mattes — a former Senate staff member — began filing lawsuits on their behalf.

Mattes sought back pay for their mission and years of captivity. But the Pentagon flatly denied any responsibility for them.

Army historians issued a report saying the commandos had been recruited by the South Vietnamese government and served under a contract with that nation. Thus, they said, the United States had no obligations to them.

Should the government sue gun makers?

Yes

It's a way to curb murder

ALLEN ROSTRON

Imagine that you discovered a group of corporations has known for years about ways to make its products safer and to prevent thousands of unnecessary deaths and injuries, but chose to ignore them.

While enjoying the profits of that decision, they managed to make taxpayers pick up the tab for billions of dollars in costs. Would you be content if government officials did nothing about it?

Some insist the government should do nothing - if the products are guns. They howled when the Clinton administration announced plans to join local governments using their legal rights to demand accountability from gun companies.

If gun manufacturers refuse to be reasonable in settlement talks with cities and counties that have sued them, public housing authorities will file a lawsuit to recover immense costs of security incurred because of gun violence.

Much of the skepticism about these lawsuits would disappear if the public understood the facts and claims asserted and if the suits' opponents stopped misrepresenting them.

Contrary to what the gun industry's lawyers and lobbyists suggest, no one contends that any company should be liable merely for making guns that sometimes hurt people.

The lawsuits' central theme is not that guns are bad or should be abolished, but that gun companies know specific ways they could make their products safer by changing the way they are designed and sold.

If gun companies negligently sell guns without vital safety features and without reasonable controls on distribution to keep them out of the wrong hands, they are violating fundamental legal obligations that apply to everyone in our society.

Public housing authorities have particularly compelling reasons to assert their legal rights.

every community, the harm it inflicts on those living in public housing is exceptionally severe - the inevitable result of gun distribution practices designed to maximize sales without regard to the flow of weapons into the hands of criminals and juveniles.

The government agencies that provide public housing would be irresponsible if they did not use their legal rights to reduce the danger and recoup some of the billions of taxpayer dollars spent over the years trying to protect residents.

The gun industry cries that the administration should not use courts to achieve its goals, but should seek relief only by passing new laws through Congress.

That objection is nonsense, because adjudication of rights and liabilities by courts has always been an integral part of our system of government.

Struggles for progress in most areas, from civil rights to auto safety, have been fought in courtrooms as well as legislatures. It is also a disingenuous argument coming from these companies, who rely on the gun lobby's stranglehold on Congress to block common-sense safety proposals.

Taxpayers will continue to pay the bill as long as gun companies refuse to take reasonable, feasible steps to make their products safer and to keep them away from those likely to misuse them.

Many families, in public housing and elsewhere, will continue to pay in tragic ways. When government officials assert legal rights against those causing this unnecessary harm, they perform a vital duty owed to us all.

The gun companies' response to the lawsuits should be to

Litigation chips at rights

H. STERLING BURNETT

Robert Reich, former Clinton administration secretary of labor, has written, "The era of big government may be over, but the era of regulation through litigation has just begun."

Confirming this prediction, the Department of Housing and threatens public safety.

Federal prosecutions for firearms crimes have fallen 44 percent and sentence lengths for firearm violations have dropped 20 percent under the Clinton Justice Department since 1992.

In addition, the Clinton administration has supported lawsuits by the federal Legal Services Corp. to stop public housing authorities from evicting criminals.

So, the same administration that wants to sue gun makers for the cost of criminal gun violence defends the right of criminals to live in public housing and refuses to prosecute them when they commit gun crimes - if that's not hypocrisy, I don't know what is.

The lawsuit attempts to replace the will of the majority as expressed through the legislature with the determination of an unelected judiciary.

President Clinton and HUD Secretary Andrew Cuomo have stated that the lawsuit is an effort to impose sales and marketing restrictions upon the gun industry.

Their threat: Do what we want or we'll bankrupt you! However, in our democratic republic, Congress alone is constitutionally empowered to regulate interstate commerce.

Since the administration has been unable to convince legislators that removing guns from the hands of law-abiding citizens will reduce crime - they are now attempting to enlist the court's help in an end-run around the Constitution.

The lawsuits also look at only one side of the ledger. Imagine suing prescription drug makers for the cost to society from overdoses, allergic reactions, intentional poisonings and instances where doctors prescribe the wrong drug, while ignoring the substantial benefits from prescription drugs.

Guns, like drugs, save lives and money.

Research shows that citizens use guns up to five times more often to prevent crimes than to commit them - for a net societal savings from defensive gun uses exceeding $38 billion annually.

Indeed, firearms are the most effective way to protect against criminals - which is why police carry guns rather than going unarmed or carrying knives.

People defending themselves with guns during an assault were injured only 12 percent of the time, compared to 25 percent for those using other weapons and 27 percent for those offering no resistance at all.

The threatened lawsuit is nothing more than election year politics. According to Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., "These suits are becoming the great American hoax... The government and trial lawyers talk about victims, innocent children and injured people, then they tried the law to file a suit for the government - not the victims."

The government gets bigger, the trial lawyers get richer and the injured people get nothing.

In the end, the true victims of these lawsuits will be voters and the public. Voters will see their choices made in the voting booth negated in the courtroom.

And the public will be less safe since criminals will face an increasingly unarmed populace as the lawsuits make firearms less available to the law-abiding.

Slow down on CAFOs

To the Times-News editorial staff: I am glad to see that the Times-News finally realizes the need to properly govern newly defined animal feeding operations. If you had sent a reporter the day the first moratorium was brought before the commissioners, you would know this already. You only sent a reporter to the rendering of the decision.

Neither I, nor any other Idaho supporter, has ever suggested that we need to entirely stop all dairies and hog farms in the Magic Valley. The moratorium is only a time-out until the county can properly deal with these issues. When a star player gets hurt, a coach must call time out to assess a new game plan. He doesn't continue, hoping things will just work out. Twin Falls County's star player is the aquifer that lies beneath it. According to the Division of Environmental Quality, it has the highest levels of nitrates in any single area of Idaho. Our star player is injured!

To continue to site CAFOs without thorough knowledge and proper regulations in place is pure stupidity. If this is such a dangerous thing, why has Cassia County used this process twice? Have the citizens of Cassia County been permanently hurt by this? Will this valley be permanently damaged because someone has to wait before they are able to make money? The only permanent damage will be to the environment here in Idaho. Once the damage is done, it is very costly if not impossible to reverse the damage. A time-out is needed so things can be done properly. Everyone needs to call the county commissioners and tell them your opinion on a moratorium, whether for or against. It is necessary for the people who live in Twin Falls County to make their wishes known on this matter. It only takes a few minutes and a phone call. Call the county commissioners at 735-4068 and let them know your opinion. Call now!

Hotel would not be a marvel
My sense is that the current canyon rim hotel proposal is flawed and thus should not be adopted by the Twin Falls City Council. Here are two obvious reasons:

1. The canyon rim development issue a few years ago. Their findings, which were approved by the City Council, protected the canyon rim by imposing a height restriction. This ordinance cannot be disregarded in the arbitrary and capricious manner developers are contending.
  2. What is great about the Snake River Canyon is not what is there but what is missing. That is why it is a landmark. It would be a "mark on the land" to construct a 10-story hotel on that location. To suggest this structure would enhance this wonderful vista is silly. A 9-foot man is not a marvel, he's a freak; a 10-story hotel on the canyon rim is not a marvel, it's a freak.
- Let's not depart from the way we are supposed to govern and manage the land.

Take action to protect good water

I am sure that you read about the Spring Cove Ranch, whose drinking water was polluted with dead animals and animal feces. That drinking water was pure for 80 years until a dairy was built a few years ago. The dairy refused to listen to the complaints. Finally, the Department of Agriculture fined the dairy. Just fining the dairy isn't enough. The pollution is still there. That spring should be restored the way it was - pure drinking water - before the dairy went in. Now the dairy sued the Spring Cove Ranch for hurting its reputation.

I have five children, and for Christmas I am sending $25 a kid to help Spring Cove Ranch. I am asking my children to write me a letter in lieu of presents at Christmas, Mother's Day, birthdays, etc. Send the money to the Idaho Rural Council. I have a friend who has four children who is doing the same thing. Are you interested? It could be your water next.

The paper makes it appear that good, honest, loyal American citizens don't need to worry about or try to correct the polluted groundwater at the risk of their own breathe. That's not true! The water pollution and stench from these large animal factories is covering Magic Valley. Anything this big needs the support of everyone! Please help! Send money to the Farm Urban Network, 1404 E. 4225 N., Buhl, ID 83316.

U.N. leader apologizes to Rwanda
Annan vows to learn from inquiry report

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Secretary-General Kofi Annan has apologized for the United Nations' role in the 1994 Rwandan genocide and has pledged to use a highly critical report to ensure that another "mass slaughter" of "civilians" doesn't occur again.

Annan acknowledged Thursday that the United Nations and its member states failed Rwanda and its people during the 100-day genocide and expressed his "deep remorse" that more wasn't done to stop it.

"Of all my aims as a secretary-general," Annan said in a statement, "there is none to which I feel more deeply committed than that of enabling the United Nations never again to fail in protecting a civilian population from genocide or mass slaughter."

Annan was responding to an independent investigation he commissioned in March to learn the truth about the U.N. role in the genocide so that the United Nations could learn lessons for the future.

The report found that the fundamental failure of the U.N. was that the organization and its members lacked the political will and resources to prevent the genocide or stop it once it was under way.

In Rwanda, officials said Annan's expression of "deep remorse" was not enough. "Is that how people apologize?" asked Rwandan government spokesman Joseph Bideri. "As far as the Rwandan people are concerned ... they were betrayed by the U.N. in their hour of need," Bideri said in the Rwandan capital, Kigali. "Expressing remorse and making a public apology are two different concepts. So we haven't had the apology."

Joseph Mutaboba, Rwanda's U.N. ambassador, called the report "objective."

Public apology is a first step, and it should be followed by a personal apology" by Annan, Mutaboba told the BBC.

An estimated 800,000 people, most of them minority Tutsis, were killed in the Hutu-sponsored genocide that began after the April 6, 1994 downing of the Rwandan president's plane.

The report singled out Annan, then chief of the U.N. peacekeeping department, for failing to alert the Security Council of key developments and to recommend the United Nations strengthen the peacekeepers on the ground once the bloodletting began.

Passenger trains collide; three die

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Two passenger trains collided about 25 miles east of Johannesburg Friday, killing at least three people and injuring at least 153 others, officials said.

More than two hours after the accident, rescue workers were still looking for trapped passengers and trying to remove the train carriages from the tracks near Kaalfontein, Provincial Police Commissioner Sharma Maharaj said.

Several yellow and gray railway cars were derailed and badly mangled. Passengers' belongings lay strewn on the floor inside.

The 153 injured included two people in critical condition and about another 50 in serious condition. But survivors were still lying on the grass next to the train, waiting to be taken to hospital.

Venezuela announces death toll of 85; thousands injured

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — Rescue workers Friday began clearing rubble and pulling bodies from beneath the debris left behind from flooding and mudslides that have killed scores of people.

The death toll, which stood at 85 early Friday, was expected to rise. More heavy rains lashed northern Venezuela, causing flooding that has sent houses crashing down hillsides and frightened residents fleeing for their lives.

Caracas Governor Hernan Gruber said that 271 people were reported missing in Caracas alone, and that all were presumed dead. Rescuers who have been concentrating their efforts on finding survivors are turning to the grim task of recovering the dead.

In the port city of La Guaira, north of Caracas, hundreds of flood survivors broke through barricades and scrambled to get their hands on food and water in containers that had been broken open by the force of raging waters.

Eastern Idaho wrestlers lead Bear-Cat tourney

One TF heavyweight advances to semifinals

By Lisa Winther Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The two-day Bear-Cat Invitational kicked off Friday afternoon in Twin Falls High School, but the co-host Bruin grapplers weren't able to use their home mats to their advantage.

In fact, Kimberly is the only local team in the top three, tied for third with Highland; American Falls and Pocatello are currently in first and second, respectively. Twin Falls and co-host Jerome finished toward the bottom of the team standings after the first day of the tournament.

"We're a young team," Twin Falls coach Dave Slotten said. "We have a long way to go, but by the end of the season we'll have made some long strides and surprised some people."

The Bruins' only member in the semifinals, which are this afternoon, is heavyweight Klint Kyngkendall. The senior wrestler pinned both opponents Friday and will challenge Highland's James Ward for a chance to advance to the final round.

"He's wrestling as tough as he's ever wrestled," Slotten said. "If he makes it he should have the kid from Declo. He beat him last year at the Buhl Invitational so it should be a good match."

Twin Falls has seven other shots for at least a third-place medal and improve their No. 13 position.

From David Roy (119), Armando Salinas (130), Jason Hamilton (135), Miller McMillen (140), Andrew Carroll (145), Adam Paxton (152) and Brent Faust (171).

"It's still early in the season and we have a long way to go," Slotten said. "Some of our seniors still have injuries and we have a lot of young kids."

CSI bounces Mavs 102-82

Arctic Circle Invitational tourney concludes tonight

By Kevin Hall Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Inspired by the 17-point, 10-rebound double-double of sophomore reserve Larz Stewart, the College of Southern Idaho men's basketball team won its third straight game on Friday, sleepwalking past Northern Oklahoma College 102-82.

The victory ensured CSI of a winning record in its annual Arctic Circle Twin Falls Invitational tournament where the Golden Eagles will try to finish the holiday break in style as they face the 14-1 Chipola Junior College Indians in today's 3 p.m. showdown inside the CSI gymnasium.

"Larz did a great job and he did exactly what I told the team at the beginning of the game, that's play hard and play together," said CSI head coach Derek Zeck.

Now the coach gets to try and figure out how to stop an athletic Indians team, led by forward Janeris Spurlock.

"It will be a great game," Zeck said. "I'll be a wax."

Cruising comfortably with a 69-47 lead at the 12-minute mark of the game, the Golden Eagles were lulled to sleep by a spate of whistles after their second half, as Northern Oklahoma crept within 10 at 84-74 with just under six minutes to go.

With the CSI starting five back in the game, the Golden Eagles reeled off a 10-3 run to re-assume control at 94-77, and as the game disintegrated into a foul-shooting contest, CSI finally put the Mavericks out of their misery with the 102-82 finish.

"It was a real physical game," said Stewart. "But I just fed off my teammates, play as hard as I can and try to let things come to me."

CSI post Matt Siebrandt led all scorers with 20 points, while Kenny Brunner chipped in 16.

In the game, CSI shot 47 percent on 26 of 55 from the field, while the Mavericks hit for 39 percent on 26-of-66 shots.

Guard Larry Reid led the Mavericks with 18 points, 12 coming from the stripe.

Opening the second half with a 49-39 lead, both teams played up-for-at basketball through the first three minutes. After a Mavericks time-out, Zeck switched his visitors into making only one basket in seven trips down the floor.

"We went zone a little bit because we had some guys in foul trouble and sometimes that's a way to cover up some people," Zeck said.

After a Jeff Newby 3-point bomb pulled Northern Oklahoma to 58-46, an array of missed opportunities by the Golden Eagles kept Stewart connect on his own 3-point shot.

College of Southern Idaho's Matt Siebrandt dunks the final points of the first half against Northern Oklahoma College Friday night. The Eagles beat the Mavericks 102-82.

followed by a Kendall Minor launch, and suddenly the lead was back to 18 at 64-46.

It soon hit 20 as Jerry Dupree finished off a 3-on-1 fast break, and from there, CSI coasted.

Siebrandt scored CSI's first five points of the game — the last three coming off a power lay-up and free throw for the 5-4 lead. The game went back-and-forth as the lead traded hands eight times, then, with the score tied at 21, the Golden Eagles took control with an 11-0 run at the 12-minute mark.

"Stewart free throw was followed by a technical foul whistled on the Northern Oklahoma bench, which Kenny Brunner used to sink two more tosses from the charity stripe for the 24-21 lead.

CSI kept its momentum when the hard-working Stewart grabbed yet another offensive board off a Brunner miss, then rocketed a pass to the guard who kissed it off the glass for the five-point lead.

Siebrandt scored another two of his first-half, game-high 14 points off a feed from Brunner on the baseline that the 6-8 post took, then spun and sank an eight-foot hook over Scott Prater for the 29-11 lead.

GRUDGE MATCH

Jilted Fresno State to meet Utah in Las Vegas Bowl

The Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — Utah coach Ron McBride understands Fresno State's hurt.

Once rivals in the same league, the teams meet today in the Las Vegas Bowl for the first time since they went their separate ways following the breakup of the Western Athletic Conference.

"It wasn't done in a professional manner," said McBride, whose school was among eight that left the WAC to form the Mountain West Conference, which played its first season this year.

"Basically they called up one day and said, 'We're not married any more. See you.' It would be like you coming home and your wife is gone, the furniture is gone. But it was also a decision that had to be made. Sixteen teams. It was too many."

Fresno State (8-4) hoped to join the splinter group but was denied and remained in the WAC, which carried on this season with eight teams, half its former complement.

Nevada is scheduled to join the league next year, with Boise State and Louisiana Tech coming into the WAC and Texas Christian leaving in July 2001.

"Everybody says, 'Well, don't you feel bad? You got left out,'" Fresno State coach Pat Hille said. "I don't think we got left out. They're the ones that left. There was a break in the Mountain West was one of (Mountain West's) co-champions to beat their 44-13. Now it's all about playing Utah. It'll be interesting."

Maier nearly falls; Ghedina wins easily

The Associated Press

VAL GARDENA, Italy — Kristian Ghedina's blazing run Friday was just too good to beat, even by the "armstrong."

The Italian attacked the fast and bumpy downhill course for his 11th World Cup win, by a whopping 1.35 seconds.

"Beating the Austrians — especially Hermann Maier, who is in superb shape — was one of my goals," Ghedina said. Today I did it, and it proves I have the potential to do it again."

Maier, nicknamed the "Hermiteer," finished a disappointing sixth — his worst result this season.

"I chose the wrong skis," Maier said. "But even if I had skied a few tenths faster, there is no way I could catch Ghedina."

Maier's balance several times, nearly falling on the final bump before the finish line. He got thrown backwards, and had to squat on his skis before regaining his tuck position.

Ghedina's third triumph on Val Gardena's Saslong course — his favorite downhill site.

Reaching speeds of 85 mph, Ghedina was timed at 2:58.59 seconds.

"I can't believe I was so fast," Ghedina said. "I got thrown back on one corner and lost a lot of time."

Kristian Ghedina of Italy takes a curve on his way to winning the World Cup men's downhill in Val Gardena, Italy, Friday.

World Cup events were second at 2:04.34. Strobl finished third earlier this month in a downhill at Lake Louise, Canada.

Ed Podivinsky of Canada — racing on the course where he tore a knee ligament last year — was a surprising third at 2:04.37.

Podivinsky's injury last year, on a frightening crash off one of the camel bumps, forced him to sit out the remainder of the season. He returned to the tour last month.

"I think about that section every time I get to it," Podivinsky said. "I probably take the widest line of anybody through those bumps."

Authorities plan Carruth's return

The Associated Press

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — With Rae Carruth behind bars again, authorities shifted their focus Friday to arranging his return to North Carolina. The victim's family arranged for her funeral.

Federal authorities said they were dropping an unlikely flight warrant naming Carruth, captured Wednesday in Wildersville, Tenn., meaning Charlotte-Mecklenburg police can pick him up on a state murder warrant.

Charlotte-Mecklenburg police Capt. Sean Mulhall said his department first must get clearance from a Tennessee state judge to transport Carruth.

"Even though Mr. Carruth has already said he will not fight extradition in the federal courts, now has to say the same thing to a state court judge," Mulhall said. Carruth told a judge Thursday he won't resist efforts to return him to Charlotte.

Since it takes at least eight hours to drive from Charlotte to western Tennessee, it likely will be Saturday afternoon at the soonest before Carruth is back in North Carolina, Mulhall said.

Authorities want to bring the former Carolina Panthers wide receiver back to the Charlotte-Mecklenburg jail to await trial on charges that he led a plot to murder Cherial Adams, his pregnant girlfriend.

Adams, 24, died Tuesday, 28 days after she was struck in the neck and chest by four bullets fired from a passing air as she drove through a south Charlotte neighborhood.

O'Neal makes good on promise

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) Shaquille O'Neal delivered on his pledge not to have back-to-back rotten nights. All he needed was an average one, by his standards, in the Lakers' 97-88 win over the Timberwolves.

O'Neal, who managed only nine points in a victory at Atlanta the night before, had 24 in Los Angeles' victory over reeling Minnesota.

Kobe Bryant's 28 points led the Lakers to their 12th victory in 13 games. They handed the Wolves their eighth straight loss, the biggest skid of the Flip Saunders era and their worst drought since the club dropped 16 straight in April 1994.

Kevin Garnett led the Wolves with 28 points and 21 rebounds.

Pacers 89, Jazz 74

INDIANAPOLIS - Reggie Miller scored 19 points and Sam Perkins added 15 as Indiana snapped Utah's seven-game winning streak, by beating the Jazz 89-74 Friday night.

Miller and Perkins fueled an 18-4 run to stretch a four-point edge to an 87-71 lead with two minutes left in the game. Perkins hit two of his five 3-pointers, and Miller scored on a fast-break layup and a baseline drive.

Both teams shot poorly in the first half. The Pacers, who led 30 at the half, went 30-of-75 (38.5 percent) from the field for the game, to 36.3 percent (29-of-80) for the Jazz.

Karl Malone scored 16 points and grabbed 13 rebounds for Utah. Jeff Hornacek added 15 points for the Jazz.

Magic 113, Raptors 98

ORLANDO, Fla. - Rookie reserves Chuckie Atkins and Corey Maggette each scored 16 points to pace Orlando over Toronto.

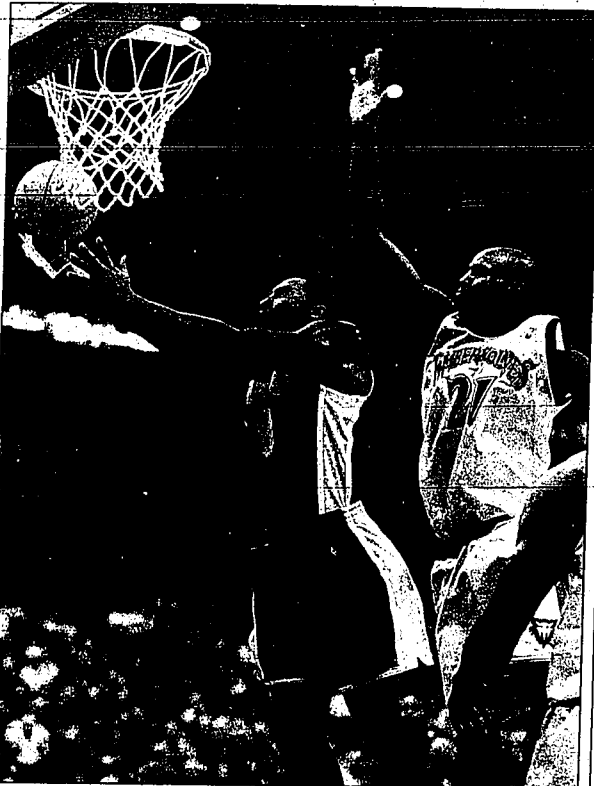

The Magic, who allowed the Raptors to score 66 points in the first half, held Toronto to just 32 points in the second half. Orlando scored 14 of the first 15 points in a decisive fourth quarter run, to take a 96-83 advantage. Toronto was just 4-for-19 in the fourth quarter.

Vince Carter scored 17 of his team-high 23 points in the first half.

76ers 77, Bulls 74

PHILADELPHIA - Eric Snow's jumper with 15.3 seconds remaining in the fourth quarter lifted Philadelphia to victory over Chicago.

Snow drove down the lane and sank a 10-footer to put Philadelphia ahead by two. Then, on the defensive end, he knocked the ball out of the hands of Ron Artest, who was driving for the tying basket. The ball hit off of Artest's knee and bounced out of bounds.

bounds.

Corey Benjamin led Chicago with 16 points as the Bulls dropped to 0-13 on the road this season.

Hornets 99, Cavaliers 86

CHARLOTTE, N.C. - Eddie Jones powered Charlotte to its seventh straight victory by nearly outscoring the Cleveland Cavaliers in the third quarter of the Hornets triumph.

Jones had 14 of his 17 points in the third quarter, when the Hornets outscored the Cavs 29-15 on the way to improving to 11-1 at the Charlotte Coliseum.

Shawn Kemp had 15 points and 10 rebounds for Cleveland, which shot 38 percent one game after shooting a season-high 56 percent.

Spurs 103, Celtics 94

SAN ANTONIO - Tim Duncan scored 22 of his 30 points in the second half as the San Antonio Spurs beat the Boston Celtics.

The Spurs, who have won three straight games, connected on 42 of 54 free throw attempts in a foul-plagued game that saw Boston commit 37 fouls. Eric Williams, Tony Battie and Calbert Cheaney all fouled out and Antoine Walker was ejected with just over five minutes remaining.

San Antonio held a double-digit lead for the entire second-half until a 16-6 Boston run against the Spurs reserves forced coach Gregg Popovich to put Duncan and center David Robinson back into the game with 1:13 to play. Duncan hit four throws in the final minute to seal the win.

Sonics get buried by Trail Blazers

SEATTLE - One quarter of the way through the season and the Sonics still haven't developed a bench.

There is no guaranteed point machine to light up the second quarter. There is no defensive stopper, no rebounding banger. Nobody to fear past the starting five.

Last night in another one of those Western Conference test cases the Sonics failed, the Portland Trail Blazers exposed Seattle as the wafer-thin team it is.

The Blazers came at the Sonics in an encircling wave. Detlef Schrempf for 24 minutes, Greg Anthony for 22, Brian Grant and Stacey Augmon for 21. A tsunami of subs.

The Sonics responded with almost nothing.

The Trail Blazers bench, which could win the Eastern Conference all by itself, outscored the Sonic bench 42-16. It outrebounded the Seattle reserves 21-4.

Portland led only 66-61 with 2:49 left in the third. Seattle hit the wall like an out-of-shape marathoner on Heartbreak Hill.

COMMENTARY
Steve Kelley

Gary Payton, obviously afraid to use the all-star point guard, Emanuel Davis, in anything other than mop-up roles.

And the smart teams, the good teams, are beating on Payton - routing different players on him, nudging him, shoving him, leaning on him, wearing him down like water dripping on a rock.

The Blazers used Steve Smith and Scottie Pippen, Augmon, Anthony and Damon Stoudamire on Payton.

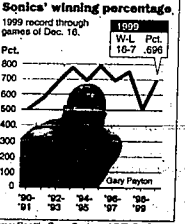

In the fourth quarter, he looked like Joe Frazier in the final rounds of the "Thrilla in Manila." He took only five shots in the second half, missing both three-pointers he took.

Your intent was wear Gary down," Portland coach Mike Dunleavy said after the 107-81 run. "Keep big bodies on him. Make him work hard to score. Get him tired for the end of the game."

Payton, who played the first 44 minutes without a break, led 12 points in the first quarter and 10 the rest of the night.

While the league buzzes about the Lakers, Blazers and Kings, the SuperSonics, who are perhaps in the toughest division in the NBA, are quietly doing what they've done best for most of the '90s - win.

He looked leg-weary. Who could blame him? Payton played 48 minutes in last Saturday's win over Miami and the first 36 minutes of Tuesday's win over Denver.

Payton has been out a break, but even the superstars have their breaking points. He's a superstar, not Superman - not Westphal can't afford to play Payton his many minutes. And he can't afford not to.

We need to get good games from every body and a lot of minutes from our starters and some good contributions from the bench," Westphal said. "We're not going to play our bench as many minutes as they (Blazers) play theirs, but we need to have good stuff from our bench and our starters have to be effective over extra minutes."

A quarter of the way through the season and the Sonics have been blown out in their last four significant Western Conference games.

They lost by 13 in Phoenix and by 24 at home to the Lakers and by 18 at Utah and by 26 last night.

The Blazers taunted them late in the game, turning the fourth quarter into a fast-breaking slambfest.

"We don't have a four of four playing on the road," Dunleavy said. "We have confidence we can play with anybody."

That's he has confidence he can play anybody on his roster.

That's the luxury the championship contenders have and the Sonics don't.

Jury rules in favor of Shinn in sex case

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) - A jury found in favor of Charlotte Hornets owner George Shinn on Friday in a lawsuit by a woman who accused him of forcing her to have sex.

The decision in the two-week civil trial ended Leslie Price's more than two-year fight. She was seeking monetary damages and contended Shinn sexually assaulted her at his Tega Cay home in 1997.

The jury decided in less than two hours. Shinn's lawyer, Bill Diehl, jumped from the defense table when the verdict was read.

Price nodded her head at the decision.

"He's gotten away with the terrible thing I did later," she said. "I didn't let him get away. He didn't pay me off... I have been browbeaten to settle, and I wouldn't do it."

Shinn was not in court for the verdict. His lawyer said he had gone to Charlotte on business.

On Friday night, Shinn attended Charlotte's game against Cleveland. He made no comment when approached by a reporter.

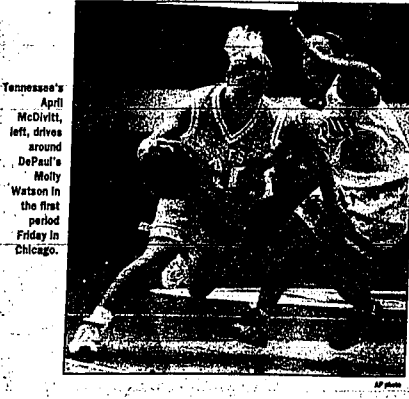

"I am personally very sorry for the embarrassment that these absurd accusations caused my family, friends, employees and the people of Charlotte," he said in a statement through the Hornets. "We all have made mistakes during our lifetime, and this is one that I hope everyone will allow me to put in the past."

Shinn had admitted a sexual encounter with Price, but said it was consensual. Prosecutors determined there was insufficient evidence to pursue criminal charges.

Price's lawyers had tried to paint Shinn as a sexual predator who had coerced other women into sex. The trial was a series of sordid testimony and legal fights about what lowlights of Shinn's and Price's life could be entered into evidence.

"I would hope that other women would not get the message that this jury is sending to them," Price said. "Fight, just fight."

Tennessee's April McDivitt, left, drives around DePaul's Molly Watson in the first period Friday in Chicago.

Catchings paces No. 2 Lady Vols over DePaul

CHICAGO (AP) - Tamika Catchings scored 21 points despite sitting out the final nine minutes with four fouls and No. 2 Tennessee beat DePaul 109-66 Friday night for its seventh straight victory.

Catchings was 9-of-13 from the field and had three steals for the Lady Volunteers (7-1), who led 15-2 five minutes into the game.

DePaul (5-3) couldn't handle the defensive pressure of the Lady Vols. Transition layups from Catchings, Semeka Randall and Kristien Clement extended the lead to as many as 27 points and Tennessee led 61-35 at halftime.

Randall finished with 18 points and Clement had 17.

Clement's jumper with 16:45 left put the Lady Vols up 10-4, and Kyra Elzy's follow of a missed free throw by Catchings with 9:20 left gave Tennessee an 82-50 lead. A layup at the buzzer

College basketball

By Sarah Edwards gave the Lady Vols their biggest lead.

Lenae Williams led DePaul with 24 points, while freshman reserve Laura Sobieszczyk added 14.

No. 7 Texas Tech 60, S. Florida 44

TAMPA, Fla. - Defense saved the day for Texas Tech.

Keitha Dickerson scored 14 of her 16 points in the second half as the seventh-ranked Lady Raiders overcame a lackluster offensive performance to beat South Florida 60-44 Friday night, the Bulls' first loss of the season.

The Lady Raiders (8-0), off to the best start in school history, forced 27 turnovers and limited South Florida to 39 percent shooting (20-of-52).

Texas Tech led by just two points at halftime, but took control with a 10-2 run to start the second half. Dickerson had eight points in the run that gave the Lady Raiders a 33-23 lead.

Monica Echeverria had 16 points for South Florida (7-1).

Men's

No. 25 Wake Forest 79, High Point 35

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. - Duke Odom has seen all the dunks and fancy offensive moves from Antwan Scott. The Wake Forest coach will now demand the entire package from his sophomore forward.

Scott posted career highs with 15 points and nine rebounds as the 25th-ranked Demon Deacons held High Point without a basket for a 14.5-minute span in a 79-35 victory Friday night.

Scott came into the game ninth on the team in minutes played, but will likely play a key role now with the loss of starter Darius Sogangala.

Sogangala, the team's second leading scorer and rebounder, sprained a ligament in his right knee during a fall into a basket less than a minute into the second half.

The 6-foot-9 sophomore, who averages 13.1 points and 5.0 rebounds, was helped to the locker room without putting much weight on his leg and did not return to action, Scott said. Sogangala's absence for Monday night's game at Arkansas and could be lost for a week to 10 days.

The point total by the Deacons was the lowest against the Demon Deacons in 102 years. Wake Forest held Atlantic Christian to 30 points during the 1947-48 season.

Paralyzed former champion says she has no regrets.

BEIJING (AP) - Sometimes, after the vault that broke her neck and robbed her of the ability to walk, Sang Lan couldn't help thinking about what might have been.

Seventeen months after her accident at the 1998 Goodwill Games in New York, the former champion Chinese gymnast still can't feel her fingers and body from the chest down. But she says she's come to terms with her injury.

No regrets, she says, just a determination to make the most of life - attending a university and getting a job.

Sang's optimism is infectious. Because of it, the most striking thing about her is not her broken body or the custom-made chair that she wheels herself around in. It's the determined twinkle in her dark eyes, the childlike lilt in her voice, her impish sense of humor.

In a two-hour interview at her Beijing home, the 18-year-old never once sounded bitter, regretful or even unhappy. Just the opposite.

When she says she expects to become a day manager who will take care for herself, you believe her. And it seems to make perfect sense when she explains that she follows a daily regimen of physical therapy in part to keep her body in shape for the day when doctors can cure paralysis - a day she says will come.

"When I had just gotten injured, I did think 'What would I be doing if I hadn't got hurt?' But now I don't think about it," she said. "Regrets are pointless. This is the way it is. I have faced up to really. I can't change it."

"Of course, I hope that I will be able to walk," she said. "That, of course, is my biggest, biggest, biggest wish."

Sang injured herself doing a warmup vault. She returned to China in May, after 10 months in the United States where she underwent surgery to stabilize her neck and began rehabilitation that helped her regain some movement and strength in her shoulders and arms.

Her life revolves around a comfortable if small Beijing flat that she shares with her mother, and a hospital across the road where physical therapists teach her how to perform tasks that used to be simple - such as putting on socks. On one wall in the flat, photos of Sang competing as a gymnast are prominently displayed. Other walls are covered with photos since the accident, including many of Sang with famous people she met in the United States - Coline Dion, George Bush, Jackie Chan, Christopher Reeve and scores of others.

Above the computer Sang uses to write her diary, plan her lesson timetable and e-mail friends and well-wishers hangs a photo of Sang looking adoringly into the eyes of Leonardo DiCaprio, who visited her in the hospital and gave her a "Titanic" poster signed: "Sang Lan, all the best in the world, love."

"He's very handsome in real life, too," she said.

Sang manipulates the computer's oversized mouse with the underside of her wrist. To type, she clips two plastic pointers, like short-off chopsticks, onto her hands with her mouth. The telephone next to the computer has a hook on the receiver to slide her hand through and oversize numbers, also dialed with her wrist. "I can't grasp a telephone because I can't move my fingers," she said as she gave a demonstration. "The big buttons make it convenient for me to dial. I wouldn't be able to press them if they were smaller."

NCAA puts Notre Dame on probation

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) - Notre Dame's storied football program got a light but embarrassing slap Friday when the NCAA put the school on probation for the first time in its history.

The Irish football team received a two-year probation from the governing body of college sports and will also lose two scholarships.

College football's governing body, however, did not touch Notre Dame's postseason eligibility, and its TV contract with NBC - worth an estimated $8 million to $9 million annually - is not affected.

Notre Dame, now the fifth Division IA football program on probation with the NCAA, said it will not appeal the ruling.

"It's a sad day," said the Rev. Edward A. Malloy, the university president. "I feel badly that this has happened, mostly because the behavior of some of our student-athletes is simply unacceptable according to Notre Dame's own standards, not because of what the NCAA says."

The penalties stem from the relationship between Irish players and former booster Kimberly Dunbar, 30, who received more than $1.2 million from her employer and then lavished the players with gifts, trips and money.

The announcement ended an almost two-year investigation into the relationship, which has been a source of embarrassment for the Roman Catholic university. Details of Dunbar's relationship with several players in some cases sexual, came to light. Dunbar, 30, has a child with former player Jarvis Edison.

Earnhardt has surgery for ruptured disc

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) - Dale Earnhardt underwent spinal column surgery Friday to remove a disc that champion driver ruptured in March, his spokesman said.

Earnhardt, a seven-time Winston Cup champion, will have to stay off the track for at least six weeks while he recovers from the two-hour operation.

"The surgery couldn't have gone any better. Dale's goal is to be prepared to race by the time the team comes to Daytona for the Daytona 500" on Feb. 20, an Earnhardt spokesman said.

Bill to shield employers gets another look

By Michael Journee
 Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - One of the state's most powerful lobby organizations is working closely with the first-term legislator given most of the credit for killing one of its top legislative priorities in 1999 - a bill limiting employers' liability for criminal acts committed by off-duty and former employees.

The bill will be back during the 2000 Legislature and both sides said they are happy with progress in rewriting the law.

"It's our No. 1 priority," said Dawn Justice, vice president for human resources at the Idaho Association of Commerce and Industry, the main force behind

The business agenda

The Idaho Association of Commerce and Industry - one of the state's most powerful lobby groups - has a list of 35 positions on its 2000 legislative agenda. Here are a few of those positions.

It is pushing for approval of bills that would:

- Make health care costs for an off-duty employee's criminal acts in the governor's office.
- Wants repeal of term limits at all levels of Idaho government.
- Opposes "assignment of benefits" for health care costs.
- Supports creating an office of threatened and endangered species in the governor's office.
- Supports establishing exit standards for high school graduates.

the bill in 1999. "Our objective is the same. We would like it defined in statute how far an employer's liability extends for acts of current and former employees."

IACI and other bill backers said the idea that an employer should be liable for the criminal action of former employees is fundamentally flawed. And Rep. Leon Smith, R-Twin Falls, the man given the lion's share of credit for killing the bill in committee earlier this year, doesn't disagree.

Smith said he agrees with the basic philosophy of the bill, but argued against it because it gave employers virtually no responsibility for off-duty or ex-employees, no matter the circumstances.

"I wasn't against the bill. I wanted it to be a good bill," Smith said.

After numerous phone conversations, meetings and trading

Smith has been in contact with Justice and IACI several times recently.

Justice said some language explaining the scope and intent of the law is being drafted. The bill was drafted largely in response to a 1998 Idaho Supreme Court decision that said a Boise hospital could be liable for a crime committed by a former worker - a physical therapist who molested a boy he first met when the boy was his patient at the hospital. Sixteen other Idaho associations aside from IACI supported the bill in 1999.

In 2000, IACI and the bill's other sponsors will be joined by the Idaho Liability Reform Coalition in support of the bill.

Grants allow teachers to return

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS - Primary school teachers lifted this year on one-year contracts paid for by federal class-size reduction grants will be able to return to the classroom at least for one more year.

Congress approved continuation of the program, championed by President Clinton, into the next school year. Idaho schools hired the teachers not knowing whether the money would be available again.

"This is good news for Idaho school districts who hired these teachers without assurances that funding would continue," said Marilyn Howard, state superintendent of public instruction. "But more important, Idaho students will continue to benefit as this complements our state reading initiative's focus on learners in grades K to three."

The State Department of Education said in a news release that reading research shows it is important that a youngster master the right skills at the right time and receive personal attention from teachers.

ing initiative's focus on learners in grades K to three."

The State Department of Education said in a news release that reading research shows it is important that a youngster master the right skills at the right time and receive personal attention from teachers.

Size determines how much of the federal money schools receive. The state's total projected share next year is about $6 million, up from this year's $5.6 million, used by districts to hire about 160 teachers.

About half of Idaho's school districts aren't large enough to receive enough money to hire a full-time teacher, the State Department of Education said. Some of those districts hired part-time instructors or used the money for teacher training.

Local districts have come up with a variety of ways to use the money. Bliss and Glenns Ferry school districts combined their grants to come up with nearly $24,000 to share one teacher on a four-day-a-week contract.

Twin Falls School District's share of the grant, about $172,500 this year, provided enough money to hire five full-time teachers, but the district didn't have the classroom space. Instead, it hired reading specialists and supplemented the grant with about $67,000 in district money to hire two more so that all seven of its elementary schools would have the special-

Deputies investigate abuse case

By Ruth Streeter
 Times-News writer

BURLEY - The Cassia County Sheriff's Department expects to file unspecified charges next week against a 76-year-old Cassia County man, after finding his wife had been kept in bed since September, as her health deteriorated.

The 72-year-old woman was able to receive medical treatment only by feigning chest pains, so her husband would call an ambulance, according to a sheriff's department press release.

The woman was taken to Minidoka Memorial Hospital Wednesday after a quick response unit and an ambulance were dispatched to the couple's home, the release said. She had requested to be taken to Minidoka Memorial.

Cassia County deputies arrived at the hospital in response to a complaint of spousal abuse, the release said. Upon examining the woman, deputies found large sores on her body and a large growth on her abdomen, has fingernails yellowed and grown up to 1 1/4 inches long, and her hair matted and dirty, the release said.

"In 30 years of law enforcement, I've never seen anything as bad as this," Cassia County Capt. Jim Higness said.

The woman told deputies her husband had kept her in a bed since September, had given her only ice and water to drink, and fed her "odds and ends" and occasionally a TV dinner, according to the release. She told deputies, however, that she was unable to eat because she did not have teeth.

The woman told deputies that her husband would not give her help when she asked and would yell at her and call her names when she did, the release said.

M-C police arrest six in drug bust

By Ruth Streeter
 Times-News writer

RUPERT - County, city and state law enforcement agencies netted six arrests in 16 hours Thursday, after a task force, headed by Sheriff's Sgt. Roger Hare, the investigation ended up involving the task force, the Idaho State Police, Minidoka and Cassia county sheriff's departments, and the Rupert Police Department.

A confidential informant and undercover detective allegedly met Rick Granillo and Melanie Granillo, husband and wife, at 310 Marina for a controlled buy, according to court documents.

Stephens and Thompson arrived later in the day, at which time Stephens allegedly sold the informant $300 worth of marijuana, court documents said.

Charges were later pressed in Cassia County against Sandra Perez-Cantu, 38, and Richard Cantu, 39, of Acquia. Sandra Perez-Cantu was charged with drug delivery and failure to affix a tax stamp and Richard Cantu was charged with possession of marijuana and failure to affix a tax stamp, Cassia County Sheriff Billy Crystal said.

Arrests had been completed by midnight Thursday, Hare said. No more arrests were expected.

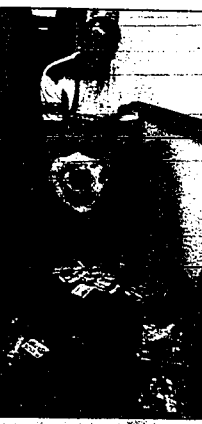

Cassia County recovered seven pounds of marijuana and three ounces of methamphetamine, Crystal said. In addition, $4,025 cash was seized, some of which came from the controlled buy.

A quarter pound of marijuana and $300 was seized by Minidoka County, prosecutor Rick Bollar said.

A car belonging to Rick Granillo was also seized, according to court documents. The car might be auctioned off if its value exceeds the owner's loan payoff, Crystal said.

All six were being held in the Mini-Cassia Criminal Justice Center Friday.

U of I Foundation to buy Rite Aid acreage

BOISE (AP) - The University of Idaho Foundation's directors on Friday approved a $1.9 million purchase of a 2.5-acre downstate parcel on which to consolidate the Moscow school's area program.

The land on Broadway Avenue between Front and Myrtle streets eventually will be the site of facilities to replace the 27,242 square feet of classroom and office space the University of Idaho now leases in the MK Plaza complex, just across Broadway, for $400,000 a year.

Roy Eiguren, a foundation board member, said the parcel is being bought from financially beleaguered Rite Aid Corp. of Camp Hill, Pa., which is selling off some of its property in the West as part of a corporate restructuring. The sale should be finalized next month, and the foundation hopes to have new facilities open by the time the MK Plaza lease expires on Oct. 1, 2002, Eiguren said.

"The land will provide the opportunity for the university to gain the efficiencies of being centered in a single location," the attorney and University of Idaho alumnus said in a statement issued by the foundation.

Official announces plans to retire from IHC

By Lorraine Cavener/
Times-News writer

BURLEY — Come February, Richard Packer plans to jump into his fifth-wheel recreational vehicle and head for Yuma, Ariz., with his wife.

Packer has been planning the Arizona trip for a long time. He just turned 62, and on Friday he announced his retirement from Cassia Regional Medical Center, where he has served as administrator for 13 years.

After serving two Intermountain Health Care assignments in Utah, he transferred to Burley in 1986. He has worked with IHC for 25 years.

Packer is proud of the time he has spent at Cassia Regional.

"My persistence and attitude have developed this new hospital. I have tried to position our health care for the future for the community," he said.

Packer has spent his days making sure services are appropriate and cost-effective, he said.

"That makes us a good partner with the community," Packer said.

Packer has been successful at the hospital because he has a good vision for our community, said Brian Hickenlooper, chief financial officer of the hospital.

"He has done a good job of leading in the right direction," Hickenlooper said. "He is very concerned about the community and people here."

Along with being instrumental in bringing a variety of health care providers here, Packer met and worked with physicians to try to help them accomplish goals, he said.

"People can get health care services locally," Hickenlooper said.

Packer led a community group in planning for the new hospital, which was completed in 1998. He was also instrumental in getting improved services and equipment to hospital.

Under Packer's leadership, the hospital's physician staff tripled and a physician-staffed 24-hour emergency room service was implemented. Services such as mammography, CT scanning, MRI, ultrasound and laparoscopic surgery were added.

He won't be idle in retirement.

"I have tons of hobbies and have not had enough time to enjoy them," Packer said. He plans to take his wife to Arizona for the winter and fish at Henrys Lake in the summer, he said.

Hunting and skiing are also on the top of his list.

But he plans to continue to call the Mini-Cassia area home.

"We like the area and the people here," he said. "We know there are good health facilities here."

Ancient Indian burial site blocks fiber-optic pathway

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — Telecommunications giant Qwest was ordered to stop constructing fiber-optic lines throughout California after state utilities regulators accused the company of ignoring laws designed to protect American Indian burial sites.

The order from the Public Utilities Commission came Thursday, after Ohlone Indians spotted a crew digging a trench the day before near a prominent burial ground in San Jose.

"They should have known it was there," said Larry Myers, executive secretary of the state's Native American Heritage Commission. "It was a recorded site."

Qwest spokesman Tyler Gronback said the Denver company believed it was acting within the law and had been working with an Indian representative on the site.

"To the best of our understanding, we were working in compliance with the law," he said. "It's just that the PUC would like to review our plan, and the Native American groups would like to see the plan too to see how we're working in these areas."

"We've engaged with a construction firm that is 60 percent owned by a Native American to work in some of these sensitive areas," he added.

Qwest, which is merging with U.S. West, has a 24,500-mile fiber-optic network that stretches into Canada and Mexico.

California's Shasta Valley is working to create a ring of fiber-optic cable so that businesses — many of them dependent upon quick Internet connections — can hook up directly to its lines.

The dispute means that construction could be stalled for as long as two months while Qwest negotiates with Indians and the PUC in only the latest concern over telecom diggers flouting state environmental laws aimed at protecting archeological sites.

Level 3 Communications, Pacific Fiber Link and Metromedia Fiber Network all were hit with similar PUC actions in the last year.

Madison School Board decides to drug-test athletes, other students

REXBURG — The Madison School Board has unanimously approved drug-testing for students in sports and other extracurricular activity that requires them to leave school grounds.

There are 24 other districts in Idaho with drug-testing programs, but some check only athletes. The board also amended the policy to include seventh graders.

It agreed that parents should be notified before their children are tested under a policy provision allowing faculty members to order a student to be tested if they believe the youth is under the influence of drugs or alcohol.

A private company will be hired to conduct the tests and choose at random the students to be tested.

Superintendent Brent Orr said having district employees or resource officers administering the tests could lead to accusations that the district is singling out particular students.

All of the test results will remain confidential and will be used to punish students academically or criminally, he said.

The consequences for students who test positive vary from not admitting to more tests and counseling to being removed from activities, depending on the number of times the student tests positive.

"Evidence gathering is not our purpose," Orr said. "We want to help kids stay away from drugs."

Debate over festival view fails to thwart phone tower

BOISE — A 150-foot cellular phone tower that Idaho Shakespeare Festival lovers complain is a blight on the foothills view from their theater seats has been installed.

Officials for Voice-Stream Wireless, which built the $200,000 tower, said relocating would be costly.

"We feel strongly if it is at all possible, they should consider mitigating or relocating it," said City Council President Carolyn Terteling. "We need to do what we can to preserve that breathtaking view. All of us have a vested interest in Shakespeare."

When VoiceStream began the permitting process, the property was in Ada County, which does not restrict cell phone towers. The property was annexed into Boise in November.

City officials received approval for the tower Sept. 29, after holding a required public meeting and notifying neighbors.

VoiceStream still is open to finding a solution, Shakespeare Festival manager Mark Hofflund said.

VoiceStream is one of the festivals sponsors, providing funds for the festival's family night and donating cell phones to the entire Shakespeare staff this year. But serving new subdivisions required that location.

U.S. Forest Service warns of avalanche conditions

ST. ANTHONY — Snow conditions in eastern Idaho are identical to those which led to the avalanche deaths of two snowmobilers two years ago near Sawtelle Peak, U.S. Forest Service officials warn.

Those heading into the backcountry this weekend are at risk, said Alan Silker, recreation specialist for the U.S. Forest Service.

"The danger is considerable right now," he said. "If the weather keeps up as it has, it is going to be an extreme danger."

He advises anyone headed into the backcountry, from snowmobilers to skiers, to stay away from ridges with a slope of more than 25 degrees.

Avalanche danger increases with new snow, more wind and a warming trend.

"Of special concern are cornices, large overhanging rims of snow created by wind as it blows over a ridge. They can break off and trigger an avalanche."

The forecast for the weekend is for several inches of new snow. There are already four to five feet built up on a loose layer from November.

American officials deny Idaho native is spy

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — Her name is Leberknight, 1981 Leberknight.

The locals know her as a 1985 Bonneville High School graduate who fought fires with the Bureau of Land Management during her summers in college and next interested in international politics.

But word from Russian officials is that the second secretary at the U.S. Embassy in Moscow works with some fairly incriminating equipment, like disappearing ink and gadgets that alert her when her conversations are being monitored.

She is concerned over the Russians that they recently kicked her out of their country, accusing her of attempting to obtain secret military information from a Russian citizen.

Jim and Mary Leberknight of Idaho Falls don't know exactly what their daughter's job entails. She doesn't talk about it.

What they do know is that she works for the State Department at the U.S. Embassy in Moscow.

"I'm comfortable with her living her life and her career. I know that in this work, as in many professions, people don't talk about their work. To me it's just part of life," Mrs. Leberknight said.

Russian officials have complained that last week's accusation of spying and the expulsion of one of their officials from Washington is retaliation for them expelling Cheri Leberknight. American officials have denied the connection.

The Leberknights, who said they haven't worried about their daughter's safety working at the U.S. Embassy for the past two years, said after her expulsion from Washington that a friend said he heard Cheri's name on the national news. An official with the State Department called Leberknight the next day to report how pleased the department is with their daughter's work.

They heard from Cheri on Dec. 4. She told them the Russian officials detained her for only a few minutes and released her back to the U.S. Embassy.

"She told us not to believe anything we read in the papers..." She said it was a bunch of hype and that it's not necessary to be afraid, Mary Leberknight said.

"I'm doing what I need to do and the department is pleased with my work."

Mary Leberknight visited her daughter in Moscow last year and said Cheri is so fluent in Russian and familiar with the culture that she often is mistaken for a native. Although the Cold War supposedly is a thing of the past, she said everybody working with the U.S. government assumes that everywhere they go there are listening devices and surveillance from Russian officials.

Jim Leberknight said family members always have enjoyed visiting Cheri and hearing the limited amount of information she does give them about her interesting life.

"We just kind of tag along on her adventures," he said. "She doesn't tell us much about the business details, though. She can write it all in her memoirs."

One of five sisters, Cheri has a degree in political science and Russian from Texas A&M University in 1983. She went on to earn a master's degree in European and international politics in 1991 from the University of Edinburgh in Scotland on a Rotary Foundation scholarship.

The Leberknights last saw their daughter in Tacoma, Wash., during Thanksgiving weekend. They said she had planned to be in Moscow for Christmas and New Year's and was due to transfer back to Washington, D.C., in July.

"We're happy," Mary Leberknight said with a laugh. "Now she'll be home for Christmas. My biggest disappointment is that I won't be able to go back and visit her in Russia."

Utah leaders plan to work New Year's Eve

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Utah Sen. Bob Bennett and Gov. Mike Leavitt plan to spend New Year's Eve working at the state's Y2K command center.

Representatives of state government, utilities, hospitals and the banking industry will also be on hand at the State Capitol. The group has been meeting throughout the year to plan Utah's strategy for handling the year change.

Bennett, R-Utah, has been working on the problem at the national level as chairman of the Senate's Special Committee on the Year 2000 Computer Problem.

But participants don't expect disaster to strike on Jan. 1, when some computers might misread the year 2000 as 1900.

In fact, Department of Public Safety spokesman Chris Kramer said there was really only one more problem to solve when the group met for the last time on Thursday.

"We need to get a count of the people planning to be here so we'll know how many to feed," said Department of Public Safety spokesman Christopher Kramer. "You wouldn't believe how hard it is to find a caterer on that night."

All joking aside, the most significant problem people can expect to see on New Year's is a swamped phone network, said S West spokesman Rpy Child.

The company expects the lines — and wireless phone networks — to exceed capacity in the hours before and after midnight and on New Year's Day as people call friends and relatives or log onto the Internet to check their computers.

Officials plan to give their first in a string of public briefings from the command center the afternoon of Dec. 31. If all goes well, they hope to shut down the center at around 2 a.m. on Jan. 1.

Bill

The coalition represents, Idaho city and county governments, public schools and other public entities. Just as IACI president Steve Ahrens said this shows wide appeal for the bill, and the importance of it.

"This is one of those rare issues that affects so many people," Ahrens said. "Anyone who is an employer and makes hiring decisions is affected by this decision."

The coalition hasn't been active for eight or nine years, said Ahrens, but the defeat of the bill in 1999 has stirred its membership back into action.

Although the employer liability issue will take up much of IACI's attention during the 2000 session, other high-priority areas include term limits at all levels of Idaho government, and getting approval for high school exit standards.

IACI's stance on exit standards is new and still in development.

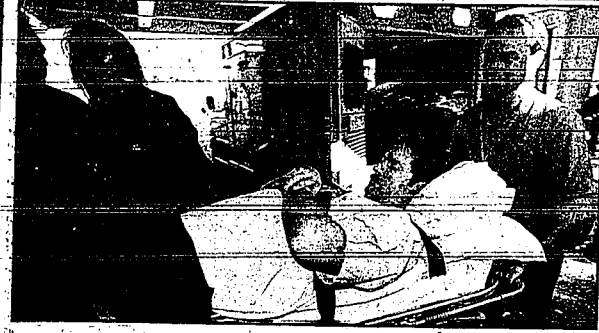

"We feel it's important," Ahrens said. "It's a major concern when high schools aren't doing basic skills in math, writing and communication."

Term limits is a familiar issue group can't put off action on the issue.

"It's hard to overstate how important this is to Idaho," Ahrens said. "If nothing happens in this 56 county commissioners around the state will be forced out of office in the next election. It's not in the three-term limits are on our docket."

Utah Highway patrolman Steven Explin is wheeled in to Utah Valley Regional Medical Center in Provo, Utah, after being shot during a routine traffic stop on I-15 near Fillmore, Utah, Friday. The shooting occurred 12:45 p.m. when three patrolmen pulled over a suspect who had six outstanding warrants for child sexual abuse, said highway patrol spokesman Chris Kramer.

Traffic stop turns deadly in Utah

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) - A routine traffic stop along Interstate 15 Friday morning turned into a shootout that left a suspect dead and two Utah Highway Patrolmen wounded.

The shooting occurred shortly after 9 a.m. a few miles south of Fillmore when three patrolmen pulled over a suspect, said highway patrol spokesman Chris Kramer.

It wasn't immediately clear why the shooting started, but Kramer said three patrolmen were at the scene and two were struck.

The shooting suspect had six outstanding warrants for child sexual abuse, Kramer said.

The scene is about 125 miles south of Salt Lake City. The suspect's name was not immediately available.

Patrolman Steve Explin, 31, of Fillmore, was taken by ambulance to Utah Valley Medical Center in Provo, where he was in fair condition and awaiting surgery to remove a .45-caliber slug. He was shot in the stomach, said Anton Garrity, a hospital spokesman.

The other injured trooper was flown to LDS hospital in Salt Lake City. He was shot in the chest and the slug exited his shoulder, said Jess Gomez, an LDS Hospital spokesman.

Gomez said the patrolman was conscious and stable. His name was not released, but Gomez said he is 35 years old.

Kunz aims to back uniforms with law

POCATELLO (AP) - Republican state Rep. Kent Kunz wants to make it a little easier for Idaho public schools to implement school uniform policies.

Kunz said he is having a bill drafted for the upcoming session that would not mandate a policy but only provide legal cover for school districts that want to require students to wear uniforms as a way of reducing some social barriers.

"In every school I've talked to, sooner or later school uniforms comes up," he said. "It's usually brought up by parents."

Elementary students at the Pocatello Community Charter School already are required to wear khaki pants, skirts and shorts and blue polo shirts.

"It's done what we hoped it would do. It's leveled the playing field as far as socioeconomic difference between the children," said Marjann Hule, the school's founder, chairman of its governing board and mother of two students. "You've got to get rid of some of the peer pressure from things that don't matter. We wanted to focus on academics."

Kunz said uniforms also have been shown to help reduce violence in schools. In a $8,500-student school district in Long Beach, Calif., with school uniforms, crime fell by 36 percent and weapons offenses by 74 percent.

But not every parent, student and administrator is convinced school uniforms provide all the benefits proponents claim.

"It hasn't necessarily been proven that uniforms improve student educational performance," Pocatello School Board member Tom Bernasek said. "After all, that's what we're all about."

He said some parents and students also are concerned that uniforms decrease individual freedom, while others welcome help in avoiding the high price of teen fashion.

"You can read reports on both sides of the issues," Bernasek said. "None of them are conclusive in my mind."

Howard scraps AIDS grant policy

LEWISTON (AP) - Idaho Schools Superintendent Marilyn Howard has done away with her predecessor's controversial policy of requiring school districts seeking federal AIDS education grants to submit abstinence-only proposals.

But Rep. Max Mortensen, R-St. Anthony, said he plans legislation requiring the Idaho Department of Education to spread an abstinence-only message to the classrooms.

Howard said she is heading the U.S. Centers for Disease Control's advice to give the largest school districts federal funds to expand and improve AIDS education programs rather than continue with the grant competition.

"Idaho law is clear in that the responsibility for these programs rests solely with the local community and school districts working with parents," she said.

Democrat Howard, a former

Moscow elementary school principal, said her department's role is to provide technical assistance and information about available resources.

The state receives about $230,000 each year from the U.S. Centers to educate youth about sexually-transmitted diseases. Most has been spent on training workshops for educators and parents, technical assistance to the schools and other costs.

Babbitt urges states to be patient forming water plan

LAS VEGAS (AP) - Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt on Friday called for a "burst of creative energy" to balance the needs of the seven states that share Colorado River water.

Babbitt said California must continue trying to cut its demand of water, while the other states with river allocations need to be patient with the biggest user as they try to adjust California's entitlement.

"We've made enormous progress on this issue, but the boat isn't in the harbor and I think we need to get creative," Babbitt said in an address to the annual conference of the Colorado River Water Users Association.

Babbitt credited California with recognizing in the past several years that its demand for Colorado River water has to change. But for California to change the way it uses water, he said, the other states must allow California a reasonable transition to its entitlement of water.

"What we need now is a burst of creative energy that can bring about that seven-state consensus," he said.

In October, Southern California water districts announced an agreement on how to efficiently split their Colorado River allocation between booming coastal regions and agricultural interests. The plan still needs federal, state and public approval.

Under the decades-old Colorado River Compact, California is allocated 4.4 million acre-feet of the river's water annually. But the state has been using up to 5.5 million acre-feet each year.

An acre-foot is about 326,000 gallons, or enough water for eight people a year.

The California agreement also established the basis for petitioning Babbitt to issue surplus guidelines to ease California through a 15-year transition period of reducing its reliance on the Colorado River.

On Dec. 7 Babbitt issued a notice of intent to prepare an environmental impact study on the guidelines. He said he will issue a decision on the guidelines a year from now.

"We still have time, but we don't have time to waste," Babbitt said.

The six other basin states offered California's deal a veto which would allow the state to use certain surpluses from the river. The idea was that California could buy time in curbing its appetite for Colorado River water, and settle disputes between various water agencies in the state.

New York critics tag 'Topsy Turvy' as best

NEW YORK (AP) — "Topsy Turvy," a Victorian-age story about comic opera's Gilbert and Sullivan, has been named the best film of the year by the New York Film Critics Circle.

Directed by Mike Leigh, the movie is "a one-of-a-kind period piece that is thrilling, incredibly entertaining to watch and incredibly profound," said Entertainment Weekly critic Owen Gleiberman, circle chairman.

The film, which opens today, is about a moment late in the careers of Sir Arthur Sullivan and W.S. Gilbert.

Richard Farnsworth was named best actor for his role in "The Straight Story," and Hilary Swank was voted best actress for "Boys Don't Cry." Spike Jonze won for best first film for his "Being John Malkovich."

In a first this year, the circle introduced an award for best animated film. The winner was "South Park: Bigger, Longer and Uncut."

We don't know for sure if whales scrape bottom

Hardly anybody, even anybody who has a VHS recorder, remembers that VHS stands for Video Home System.

On six out of every 10 appointments with your doctor, where the averages hold, you'll be scheduled for another appointment.

Q. Is there any proof to the claim that whales scrape themselves against the sea bottom to get rid of the barnacles?

A. None known here, but it's certainly plausible. I'd do it if I were a whale, wouldn't you?

The back of your hand is the opposite.

Q. What is Michael Jordan who so popularized the name Michael?

A. Didn't hurt it, but Michael Jeffrey Jordan was born in 1963, and the name Michael first ranked No. 1 among U.S. boys' monikers in 1953.

Police arrest elderly man for sabotage of art display

NEW YORK (AP) — A 72-year-old man has been arrested after he smeared white paint on a controversial painting of the Virgin Mary decorated with elephant dung.

Danny Heiner was immediately surrounded by security guards and taken into police custody after Thursday's incident at the Brooklyn Museum of Art. He was charged with criminal mischief, a felony.

Heiner called the art blasphemous, witnesses said. His wife, Helena Heiner, told the New York Post the couple considered

Program helps inmates prepare for the trials of freedom

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Hard luck, bad breaks. Sometimes, a series of misadventures can land people in a place they never expected they'd be — incarcerated. The downward spiral usually continues after serving their time because of the stigma and mistrust that accompany a criminal record.

HELP of Southern Nevada seeks to change the circumstances of former inmates by providing them with the skills and opportunities they need to succeed in society. For more than a year and a half, the Displaced Homemaker Program sponsored by the agency has been offering classes at the Southern Nevada Women's Correctional Facility in North Las Vegas.

The program is a state-funded course designed to help people who have lost their source of income. Whether it is because of death, divorce, disability of a spouse, unemployment for more than six months or underemployment, the course recruits people back into the workplace. The program fits into that definition. While the classes are not exclusive to women, it focuses primarily on them. The program Laramie Roberts started has done so well that the state Department of Employment and Training Rehabilitation has resubmitted a grant for it to continue full time.

"It has worked out even better than we anticipated, which attributes to a lower recidivism rate," says Roberts, the manager of the program. "The classes are provided to the prison and are available to women who are due to be released or paroled within six months. We try to take care of their training before they get out of prison so when they are out and going to a job interview, they will be eligible for clothing, gas vouchers and bus tokens — those types of things."

The prison program lasts eight weeks and meets once a week. Some of the subjects covered include business etiquette, the job search, filling out applications, writing resumes and dressing for success. Guest speakers with groups such as Consumer Credit Counseling are encouraged to talk about finances and responsible credit use. The heads of human resource departments from local casinos attend to discuss what they look for in a job applicant.

"We give them recommendations for further schooling," Roberts says. "There's a lot available through the Community College of Southern Nevada) at the Cheyenne campus. They have a pre-apprenticeship training program to help women understand how to take the apprenticeship test for many different fields including electrician, sheet metal, plumbing and carpentry. That way they can join an apprenticeship program which pays good money once they're accepted."

Because of the setting the women in the prison program are coming out of, Roberts also counsels the inmates on housing matters and other general concerns. "They're leaving a very structured environment and are being thrown out into total freedom. We try to teach them to take things very slow and not try to regain what they lost too quickly because it usually results in committing another crime."

Roberts says she successfully reaches most of the women in the prison program because of the way she teaches the class. She leads them to realize their bad habits and negative attitudes by seeing their behavior from another perspective.

"We do a lot of interactive games so that it is more interesting for the class," Roberts says.

Rhyme fighting crime; inmates learn poetry

WALLACE (AP) — Because they dream of a better life, or maybe just want to break in routine, orange-clad prisoners at the Shoshone County jail meet with writer Mike Shaw.

"They're out of their cells but not necessarily out of their shells. They can be sullen and withdrawn, Shaw said. So he was amazed by their enthusiastic response when he asked if they'd like to do some creative writing.

"I said, 'I'll see if I can get it published,'" Shaw recalled. "The first time I went in and behold, they had sheaves of poetry waiting for me."

"That doesn't surprise Lake Puett. "There's nothing quite like seeing your name in print," said Puett, whose magazine, published in the Silver Valley, has featured the inmates' writing for the past three months.

The appearance of their work in The Voice has added a new spark of interest to the only educational opportunity offered to prisoners in Shoshone County.

"Now, instead of watching TV or lying in his bunk reading his Bible, Aaron Ayala of Sandpoint spends some evenings carefully penning verses on white paper.

The 30-year-old, convicted of grand theft, sat in the jail recreation room last week and read a poem he'd written for his lady friend. He calls it, "An Eagle Screams."

"His steady voice echoed in the sterile room as he began to read. "As I sit here with these four walls that surround me, my heart and soul yearn for you and the things we do."

"If these four walls should happen to fall, I would spread my wings like an eagle and fly in the air without a moment to spare."

Richard Howde, 26, said his poems reflect his mood. "If I'm depressed, I write a depressed one. If I'm feeling happy, I write a happy one."

Convicted of burglary and forgery, Howde wants to go to college. He dropped out of school after ninth grade.

Reading breathlessly fast, Howde recited a poem titled "Missing you."

The eight writers so far have submitted so many love poems that Puett has headlined their first offerings: "Jailhouse Residents Write Their Hearts Out."

The project is especially important to state prisoners such as Ayala and Howde, who are being housed in Shoshone County because of overcrowding in the prisons in Boise and Coeur d'Alene.

Idaho College employee, they could face years in Wallace with no educational opportunities.

"It's a very worthwhile program," Sheriff Dan Schlerman said. "It gives these folks that are incarcerated the opportunity to make something of their lives."

The state provides programs at its facilities to help inmates learn basic skills and earn a GED, the equivalent of a high school diploma. There's no requirement that counties do the same.

The Adult Basic Education program at North Idaho College, which serves dropouts and other adults who want to improve their skills, reached 1,653 students in 1998-99. Of those, 118 were prisoners. Right now there are tutors in the Boundary, Kootenai and Shoshone jails.

Some students who had been enrolled in the community learning centers end up in jail, and continue studying there. Or they get tutoring as inmates and return to the learning centers once they're free.

Shaw is a retiree who works part-time at the learning center in Kellogg. He visits the jail twice a week.

The Voice is based in Silverton and has been published for nearly nine years. Its stories, poems and artwork are contributed by freelance writers. It's printed in newspaper tabloid format, and its 15,000 copies are distributed throughout the Inland Northwest. So the Shoshone inmates have a wide audience for their words.

Puett has labeled the prisoners' writing "Voices Inside."

"My ad person is selling ads for that page," she said. "Sometimes, the writers add notes to their work, to explain why they are in jail."

Bryan Crofts of Idaho Falls says he stole a car to run away from his problems with drugs; now he's working hard to get his GED.

Brad Tranmer sent clippings from The Voice home to his children in Boise. He's written maybe 20 poems.

"I wrote a poem for the lady in the kitchen the other day. She had an operation on her foot. We like her."

Tranmer, 38, got through ninth grade. He doesn't remember why he dropped out. There is much in his past life that he can't pull out of his brain.

Convicted of manufacturing a controlled substance, he said his poetry reflects his change of attitude from disillusioned to hopeful, a change he attributes to "being off drugs enough to see that there really is something else in life."

High country physicians fly to make house calls

Medical center sends specialists to isolated spots around West

WRAY, Colo. (AP) - Macular degeneration has stolen Eugene Stone's eyesight. The retiree also sees a cardiologist for a heart condition.

His wife, Ruth, is able to drive him to his doctors' appointments, but she doesn't care to maneuver through the busy streets of Greeley, Fort Collins and Denver anymore. In the winter, it could be downright impossible for the couple to make the nearly 140-mile trip from Wray - a town of 2,000 people in northeastern Colorado - to Greeley to Stone to see the doctor.

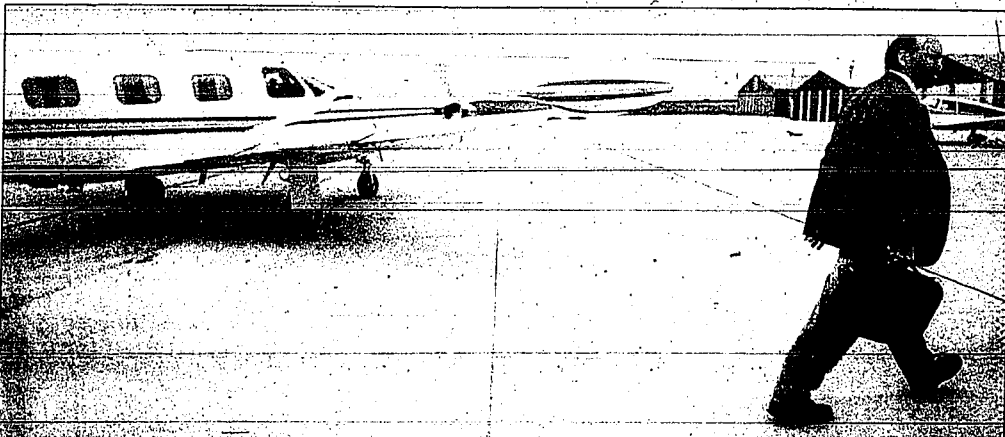

Much like doctors of the Old West, however, a group of physicians from North Colorado Medical Center is making house calls. Although these modern-day physicians travel by airplane and car instead of on horseback, the concept is the same - meeting the needs of people where they are at and delivering the highest quality of care possible.

"It sure saves a lot of driving time, and when you get older, it gets harder and harder to get into town," Mrs. Stone said. The outreach program began about 15 years ago when physicians like cardiologist Randall Marsh started holding clinics in outlying areas.

"A doctor in Akron called me back in 1984 and asked me if I could start seeing patients once a week," Marsh said. "It was desperate. They had nobody even close who could do cardiology."

In 1986, the program became an official arm of NCMC, and was adopted nationwide by Western Plains Health Network in 1995 after NCMC's board of directors signed a 20-year management agreement with Banner Health Systems, formerly Lutheran Health Systems.

"The need for the program was simply defined by travel. If I didn't go out there, all the patients would have to come here," Marsh said. "It just makes more sense for one doctor to go out there than for 20 to 30

Dr. Paul Hurst leaves the plane that carried him from Greeley to Wray, Colo., on his way to visit patients in September. He is one of several North Colorado Medical Center specialists who make house calls via air travel in Colorado and neighboring states.

patients to come to Greeley." More than 45 physicians system-wide now conduct specialty medical clinics in more than 20 communities in eastern Colorado, eastern Wyoming and western Nebraska. Increasing competition in the health care industry has driven many hospitals to establish such programs, said Richard West, director of outreach services for Western Plains.

Other regional hospitals, such as Poudre Valley Hospital in Fort Collins, conduct outreach programs, but NCMC and Western Plains offer the largest number of specialty clinics in western Nebraska and eastern Colorado, hospital officials said.

"Our patients have access to these specialty services they otherwise wouldn't have," said Dan Dennis, administrator of the Wray Community Hospital.

Not only does the program make care more accessible for patients, it allows community hospitals, such as the one in Wray, to keep their doors open by serving residents at home.

While NCMC and other Western Plains members, such as McKee Hospital in Loveland, gain referrals for procedures that can't be done at a patient's home hospital or clinic, follow-up care can often be done locally through the outreach clinics.

"If the care can be done locally, people want it done locally," West said. "All of the rural hospials we serve are critical, and the more successful they are, the healthier our network will be."

"I think it's important with these outreach programs our focus not be on gaining referrals, but improving the status of care in the region we serve and helping smaller communities retain and improve the services they can offer."

Lawmakers mull public television

BOISE - Before Idaho Public Television gets approval to spend $13 million upgrading its system statewide, legislators want to know if taxpayers think it is worth the investment.

Rep. Fred Tilman, House Education Committee chairman, will hold hearings next month to assess support for upgrading to digital transmission. Public television systems around the country must change from 50-year-old analog broadcasting technology to digital by 2003.

If they do not, the system could be shut down by 2006 when the old broadcasting channels are removed.

Digital broadcasting would allow the system to broadcast on more than one channel and provide high-definition reception.

The hearings, however, could become a referendum on how well residents think public television does its job. The Idaho Christian Coalition, which battled with public television over broadcasting a program on discussing gay issues in the classroom this fall, thinks the public stations are not needed any longer.

Deal ends cattle grazing leases at Great Basin park longer graze in the meadows of Great Basin National Park because the grazing permits of three ranchers have been bought out.

"It's good for the park, good for the ranchers and certainly good for the land and visitors who will come to Great Basin," said Mike Fork after the deal was finalized Thursday. Fork is Nevada representative for The Conservation Fund, a nonprofit group that helped orchestrate the complex arrangement.

Great Basin National Park, located 370 miles east of Reno near the Utah line, was created in 1906. The grazing permits predated the park's existence. In establishing the park, Congress said the permits would remain valid in perpetuity.

But Dean Baker, one rancher who relinquished his permits, said livestock, tourists and the Park Service's agenda don't mix. "It wasn't working," Baker said. "It became obvious that it was no longer a possibility to graze on the park with the conflicts between people and cattle and the attitude of the Park Service."

Leavitt says he won't push gun control this session

SALT LAKE CITY - Gov. Mike Leavitt says he won't push for more restrictive gun control, an acknowledgment that most lawmakers don't agree with his views.

Leavitt spokeswoman Vicki Varela said the governor's decision to stay away from gun control isn't a signal that his views have changed. "He's had exactly the same position for the last four years and that position is black and white: No guns in our churches and no guns in our schools, and he feels very strongly about that," Varela said Friday.

Leavitt's announcement Thursday comes days after he patched up his relationship with House Speaker Mary Stepien, who had toyed with the idea of challenging the popular incumbent for governor.

Caroling is for the birds

It isn't that I don't like Christmas caroling. No, I like that back in the day. The problem is that I don't like it one bit. Never have, and I don't suppose that I ever will. Perhaps I was frightened by an early version of "Angels I Have Heard on High." Maybe as a child of the Cold War, I was confused by the notion of three Orientals and a "good King Wenceslas" (good? how could he be good? Wenceslas sounds so... Russian).

Maybe it was the whole "you better not bring in Santa Claus is Coming to Town" — you know, the one about how Santa is "making a list and checking it twice" in order to "find out who's naughty and nice"? To a little boy who did all the "you better not" regularly and sort of specialized in "naughty," not "nice," the possibility of being on the wrong list loomed large, and hardly seemed to be worth singing about.

More likely, it's just the whole

VALUESPEAK
Joseph Walker

caroling scenario that I find unappealing. Tramping through the cold and snow. Walking up to neighbor's houses uninvited. Making them stand there with their doors open, letting the wind in, while we spend the first half of the song trying to get in tune, and the second half trying to remember the words. The problem is not caroling... something, something green... something, something, something, something, something, something... or something else. It's part trick-or-treating, part street mime, part terrorism. And it's all painful. At least, it is to me.

But one member of my family seems to enjoy it (I won't name names, but you wouldn't be wrong if you guessed my wife, Anita), and so we go caroling every year with another family in our neighborhood. It's a tradition, and at this time of year, tradition must be served no matter how little actual sense it makes (like singing "Auld Lang Syne" — does anybody even know what that song means? For all we know, those words could be pornographic, but we keep singing it every New Year's Eve because it's a tradition, and tradition must be served).

Last night was the night of the annual caroling catastrophe... er, party, and I guess my attitude was showing. As we were bundling up in a futile attempt to keep my eldest son, Joe, put an arm around me and whispered in my ear: "Just remember what you say when you talk to me."

"What's that? You mean, if your friends all jumped off a bridge, would you jump too?"

"No, I'm the only one who said, 'Whenever you were going to make us go somewhere that we didn't want to go, you'd always say, 'Look, you can't miserable, or you can't leave try to have a good time. It's up to you. Your attitude will determine whether or not you have any fun.'"

"I'm not saying that I have a good attitude about it, I'll actually enjoy caroling?"

"Not necessarily," he said. "But I'll bet you'll have more fun if you go with a bad attitude. At least, that's what you always used to say to me."

"Don't you just hate it when you are trapped by your own words? So what choice did I have? I had to at least try to have fun. And you know what? It wasn't bad. Don't get me wrong — I'm not ready to go out caroling again tonight or anytime during the next 364 days, give or take a lifetime. But we had a pretty good time. It was cool. We sang the key. We didn't remember all the words to all the songs. One neighbor actually closed their door on us. But we had a lot, and we were a lot closer as we made a few new memories. And it didn't hurt that Anita made sweet-and-sour meatballs a pot-canning day."

With the help of a little attitude adjustment — and a couple of meatballs — a good time, as they say, was had by all.

Even the man who doesn't like caroling.

Twin Falls church looks for permanent place to hold services

By Joan Bean
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — Before she moved to Twin Falls six years ago, Monica Tognetti had attended the Unitarian Universalist Church in Hawaii. When she found there was no church of this denomination in the Magic Valley, she set out to find others of the same faith.

"There's an organization of the UU church called the Church of the Larger Fellowship, in which individuals, who, for one reason or other can't get to a church—no church available, they're ill, etc.," Tognetti said. "I got their names and wrote to them."

The congregation began with a small group gathered in Tognetti's living room. Since then, the UU Fellowship of Twin Falls has outgrown the small chapel it rents at the YPCA, with more than 40 adults and a number of young people currently involved.

In fact, when the group located at the YPCA eight months ago, after a succession of moves, the congregation was already too large for the chapel, according to Kaycee O'Connor, secretary and teen youth group leader. Members of the fellowship are now looking for a suitable permanent facility.

But they are a small, fairly young group. "We haven't had a minister," O'Connor said. "We're not even a church yet, we're not small yet; we're a fellowship; we're working our way up the church hierarchy." Julie Fanslow, past president and one of the founding members of the local fellowship, said the group is in its fifth facility. She said they are at 95 percent capacity every Sunday.

"If everybody showed up on the same Sunday, we'd have a problem, because we don't have enough room," she said.

But she said members will sit on the floor to make room, if necessary.

The growth has not yet been fast enough to hire a full-time minister, said board president Rhonda Leach Schiff.

"When you're small, a lot of times you'd

Congregation gets consulting minister from Moscow

By Joan Bean
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — The lay-led Unitarian Universalist Fellowship of Twin Falls now has a consulting minister. The Rev. David Rankin has agreed to travel to Twin Falls once a month for about a year to lead Sunday services.

Rankin, semi-retired and living in Moscow, ministered for 35 years to large and small congregations in Massachusetts, California, Georgia and Michigan. The author of several books and a former associate editor of The North American Review, he is known as an eloquent speaker.

The local congregation is in the process of finding a permanent building for their place of worship. As consulting minister, Rankin will assist with this and other aspects of church development.

"There are about 40 adults in this group, and they want to establish a Unitarian Universalist church here," he said. "My job then is to help them think about what kind of building they need and how they can hire their first minister and do some organizational planning."

As a consultant, Rankin will cooperate with the fellowship's board of trustees, which is in charge of the direction the church will take.

Rankin is married and has three grown children and four grandchildren. His wife teaches in the Title I program.

Unitarian Universalists appeal to a more diverse America

By Brian Lewis
Knight Rider News Service

WICHITA, Kan. — When Kay Meyer was a student at Baylor University, she attended a Baptist church and often knocked on doors to help her faith with strangers. After graduating in 1968, she drifted away from Christianity and learned about other religions.

"I started to wonder: 'Why do I have to look to say someone's going to hell just because they believe something different than I do?'"

"I found a Unitarian Universalist and has become comfortable sharing her new faith."

"I don't go door-knocking like I used to when I was going to the Baptist church, but if it comes up in conversation, I'm more likely to talk about it than not," she said. "I feel like I'm becoming an evangelical Unitarian."

Respect for the individual's search for truth is a theme that Unitarians have championed through the years. In celebrating their freethinking heritage, many also acknowledge a change in their liberal denomination. In the past, leaders and laypeople say, talking about

The Unitarian Universalist (UU) Church welcomes all people of all faiths.

"Members believe there is wisdom in all religious teaching and, there is no one right way to believe," explained Rhonda Leach Schiff, president of the board of the Twin Falls Fellowship.

"If there's a lot of people who might be in a marriage where somebody was raised Jewish and somebody was raised Catholic, for instance, it's kind of a nice situation because the whole family can have their own personal beliefs, but still be part of a community," she said.

The Rev. David Rankin, the local fellowships' consulting minister, said UU is a very old church, coming out of the Protestant Reformation in the 1500s, emerging at about the same time as the Lutheran and Reformed churches in the Netherlands, Poland, Romania and later, Great Britain, making its way to the United States in the 1600s.

Rankin said UU is one of what are called liberal churches, with no creedal statements as foundation. The institute is democratically run, and has no bishops.

"Most people are used to churches where they're told what to believe," he said. "This is one where you're told to believe in yourself and to have some authority over your own theology."

"Julie Fanslow, past president of the local UU Fellowship, said people from dramatically different religious backgrounds can believe in the same things."

"In our religious education program, just as in the church as a whole, we talk about and we draw from the good in all religions," Fanslow said. "And so this time of year, you could just as likely see our church people lighting a Menorah for Hanukkah, and yet we have a Christmas Eve candlelight service. The membership is open to everyone — Christians, Jews, Buddhists, as well as agnostics and atheists."

Schiff said anyone interested in becoming a member is encouraged to attend several services before deciding.

"After taking part in the fellowship for a while, it makes sure the right, for you, friends and you could then speak to board member about joining and signing a membership book.

"A couple of times a year, we have a Sunday that we kind of celebrate when people join and affirm that they're becoming part of our congregation," she said.

UU Principles:

- We, the member congregations of the Unitarian Universalist Association, covenant to affirm and promote:
- The inherent worth and dignity of every person;
- Justice, equity and compassion in human relations;
- Acceptance of one another and encouragement to spiritual growth in our congregations;
- A free and responsible search for truth and meaning;
- The right of conscience and the use of the democratic process within our congregations and in society at large;
- The goal of world community with peace, liberty and justice for all.

Mayor says Bethlehem is ready for flood of visitors

By Mark Lewis
The Associated Press

BETHLEHEM, West Bank — After a major renovation, the city where tradition says Jesus was born is ready for a flood of visitors during the last Christmas of the millennium, Mayor Hannu Nasser said Tuesday.

He said more than 50,000 pilgrims and tourists are expected on Christmas Day, and 2.5 million visitors during 2000, more than twice the average of recent years.

On Tuesday, there was little sign of a tourism boom. Manger Square, in front of the Church of the Nativity, was almost empty.

Veteran tour guide Tawfik Kanawati was unimpressed.

"It always slows down before Christmas," he said, wearing a hat and scarf against the cold wind. "Around the 20th it picks up."

Manger Square's facelift is nearing completion. The square, which used to be the city's central parking lot, is now an attractive plaza for tourists, with small trees jutting out of the stone tiles next to wooden benches.

A clock on top of a row of shops along one side of the square counts down toward the millennium. Bethlehem's timepiece aims toward its own special moment — midnight on Christmas Eve.

Nabil Qassis, in charge of "Bethlehem 2000," the city's renovation and celebration program for the millennium, said security would be adequate on Christmas Eve, but would give no details. Ten days before the holiday, there was no sign of Palestinian police patrols in the city or other security measures.

Qassis said Bethlehem hired the French team that planned the World Cup football

Astronomer says star of Bethlehem wasn't a star at all

By Julia Lieblich
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — His friend told him he'd paid $50 for a coin that was worth about $10, but Michael Molnar didn't care.

"I like to collect coins with stars and moons," says Molnar, an astronomer for formerly with the Rutgers University physics lab. "This was a coin with Ariet's ram and had to have it."

A few months later, Molnar looked through some coin books to learn more about his new find and he discovered that Ariet appeared on money for the first time in A.D., and that his coin was from Antioch, Syria. And Ariet, he learned from a Roman astrological text, symbolized Judea, which had been annexed by the Romans.

It seemed like a simple enough find, except that Molnar made an odd assumption. He thought of most compelling of cosmic mysteries: the Star of Bethlehem that guided the Magi, the wise men of Christmas songs and stories, to Christ's manger in Judea.

In a moment, he concluded that the theory that had prevailed for four centuries — that the star had appeared in the sign of Pices, the fish — had been wrong. Instead, he said, the Magi and other astrologers 2,000 years ago would have looked to Ariet for stars revealing the upcoming birth of a king, an event foretold in biblical prophecies.

"It came like a flash out of the blue," Molnar said in a phone interview. "The Star of Bethlehem: The Legacy of the Magi," Molnar goes on to argue that the "star" was not a single star at all, but a gathering of planets and stars forming a "star" or "Jupiter," when the planet was in the east and was eclipsed by the moon. It was also an astrological sign that told the Romans "to be on their guard for a king."

By the first century B.C., Molnar says, astronomy was becoming relatively advanced. Despite the belief that the earth was the center of the solar system, astronomers were able to make reasonable predictions about the movement of celestial bodies. Furthermore, they made use of their own best astronomical astrology. Like today's astrologers, they used the positions of the stars to guide daily life and predict the future. And their

Only four verses in the Gospel of Matthew mention the star, including the most famous (Matthew 2:2): "Where is he who has been born king of the Jews? For we have seen his star in the East, and have come to worship him."

Many have sought to explain the celestial wonder. In 1609, astronomer Johannes Kepler proposed that the star was a conjunction of Mars, Jupiter and Saturn. And since then scientists have said it could be a pernova, a comet, and an eclipse of Jupiter. Molnar, who described the conditions of the date — with the sun, moon and several planets in especially favorable positions — as being the birth of a "divine and immortal" person.

Such an eclipse, he says, "wasn't a big exploding apparition in the sky, but for these ancient people this was astonishing. On that day it indicated whomever was born in Judea was going to be a great king." That, he says, is why the Magi left their homes. They were not actually following the star across the sky, Molnar says.

"They understand that Ariet indicated a birth in Judea," and so they went there. "What about the fact that no one in Judea had sighted the star? Molnar says that the Jews in Judea generally did not practice astrology. "Hence," he says, "they would miss the always subtle geometric relations between the planets prized by astrologers.

"The Magi paid attention only to their mathematical calculations and rarely looked up. Comets and exploding stars were ignored in their horoscopes." Comets, he adds, were viewed as signs of danger, which makes Molnar reject outright suggestions the Bethlehem star was a comet.

Harvard University professor Owen Gingerich calls Molnar's theory "the most original and important contribution of the entire 20th century" about the Magi's star. Writing in Sky and Telescope magazine, Yale University professor Bradley Schaefer says Molnar's theory makes old astronomical views irrelevant.

Molnar also says he's heard positive responses from Christians of different denominations.

"I had a visit from a Mormon who said he thinks it's wonderful to show that there is a historical basis for the star of Bethlehem," Schaaf said.

"His revelation, he says, shouldn't bring about changes in the annual portrayal in Christmas pageants of the Magi's star, whose glittering cardboard cutouts hang over the creche. "Children can show a nice big star, a beautiful symbol of what happened," he says. "Just don't make it a comet."

like to have a minister — a minister that will help you grow — but you have to get big enough to afford a minister," she said. "So it's a challenge."

However, the group has been able to raise enough money to hire a consulting minister. The Rev. David Rardin, of Moscow, will soon be traveling to Twin Falls every other month for about a year to provide professional leadership.

"Usually, a small congregation starts with 10 people and then, over a period of years, depending on how you grow, you can hire a full-time minister," Schaaf said.

She added, "At the end of the year, the hope is we'll be able to hire a part-time minister. Hopefully, we'll be large enough at that point that we'll be able to get more help through the UU organization."

their beliefs with others was rare.

Today, as America becomes more diverse, Unitarian Universalists say they are finding more and more people willing to hear their message of tolerance, justice and respect for all.

And the results can be seen in an increase of members in Unitarian Universalist churches. In each of the last 16 years, the Unitarian Universalist Association's membership has increased, said John Hurley, spokesman for the denomination, last reported in Boston.

In 1989, there were 185,000 members nationally. Currently, there are 215,000 members.

But he said he thinks there are several reasons membership has increased.

• Baby boomers who left mainline Protestant denominations in the '60s and '70s want to instill ethics and values in their children in a less "dogmatic setting."

• Women have an active role in the Unitarian Church. The first female minister in the United States, ordained in 1863, was Olympia Brown. She was a Unitarian. Currently, 51 percent of Unitarian Universalist ministers are women.

• Social justice issues, from civil rights to gay rights, have been in the forefront of the church's mission.

Moreover, Unitarian Universalism is a religion with no dogma and no creeds. Members include former Muslims, Christians and Jews as well as people who continue to identify themselves in those terms.

Pagans, Buddhists, atheists, agnostics and secular humanists also are in the Unitarian Universalist fold.

BILLY GRAHAM: ONE THING REMAINS CONSTANT

Humanity's quest for salvation

By Richard N. Ostling
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The Rev. Billy Graham has lived through 81 of the 20th century's 100 years and experienced its vicissitudes and upheavals: technological wizardry, antibiotics, transatlantic flight, war and rampant evil, Christian and Muslim advancement and serious cultural challenges to religion.

But one thing hasn't changed, says America's best-known religious leader: humanity's quest for salvation.

During a New York trip to address a banquet for United Nations donors this week, Graham reflected on religious developments during an astonishing century, and he looked ahead.

The 21st century will be the same spiritually as the 20th because "man's heart has not changed. God has not changed," he asserted in an interview with The Associated Press. "Some of the things I've heard are going to happen technologically are way beyond anything I can think about. I don't think that's going to change society. Society is made up of people, and people are the same the world over."

In the early 1900s, he reflected, optimism reigned among liberal Christians. "Some forecast that this would be 'The Christian Century.' A magazine was named that. They believed things would get better and better in the world."

Then came World War II, which "threw a lot of this. It was as devastating a war as the world has ever known, with the atomic bomb and so forth, and had a great impact on all religions." People developed a deeper sense of sin, he suggested, and looked beyond political nostrums for answers.

He finds the social location of religion has changed dramatically.

"I grew up in the South, and church was a big thing in our lives. I suppose it was throughout the country. In the schools, ministers were brought in to preach sermons, and the Bible was read every day. We had prayer in high school classes. This helped mold my character and my thinking. I knew some things were wrong and some things were right. We've lost that."

The Rev. Billy Graham begins his message 'Just as I Am' to a full house at the RCA Dome in Indianapolis June 3, 1998, to open a four-day crusade. This month, Graham, 81, said the one constant he has observed in the 20th century is humanity's quest for salvation.

U.S. Supreme Court rulings in the 1960s banished such religious exercises from public schools, and other cultural shifts brought a greater secularization of society. And yet Graham, the still-active evangelist, finds the century ending with ever growing religious interest.

"I see people believing more and more and more in Christ. Maybe not to surrender their lives to him, but they believe he is the only answer to life's problems."

He thinks young Americans especially are "searching for something. They may not know that it is, but a great segment of youth are on this spiritual quest." He noted that high school students are forming their own prayer and Bible clubs, even though "the culture is not with them."

Simultaneously, Graham believes American youth is in serious trouble morally. For example, he finds reports of widespread cheating among high school and college students disheartening.

The way out? "Repentance of our sin and faith in God, the same way that Mr. Clinton says he has taken."

Asked what he makes of the president's efforts, Graham simply quoted Scripture: "Jesus said, 'By their fruits ye shall know them.'"

Surveying changes the century brought to America, he pointed to the end of racial segregation, which "was an accepted part of the culture" when he was a farm boy near Charlotte, N.C. The racial lines persist in churches, Graham observed, and he believes different styles of worship between black and white churches have been "a barrier to coming together."

Other barriers have broken down. "The ecumenical movement began to bring Christians together from different backgrounds and theologies." The change in Catholic attitudes toward Protestants is "like night and day," he said.

If Graham were to pick the man of the century it might be Pope John Paul II. He "has brought the greatest impact of any pope in the last 200 years," Graham thinks.

Another huge change is improved relations between Christians and Jews. "We have grown. The two don't see the vast differences and hold the prejudice they did. People have friends across all kinds of lines."

Looking at the global scene, Graham says Islam's spread is one of the century's major trends.

Technology has opened great opportunities for faith, he thinks. Electronic amplification, something we take for granted, has made preaching far easier, and broadcasting also provides evangelistic opportunities.

Balance gift-giving with spiritual aspects

We love people. That's why we want to buy them gifts at Christmas.

My earliest memories of Christmas have to do with getting surprise gifts that were hard to come by — a red wagon, magnificent toy firetruck my Dad saw me looking at in a store room window.

It was not the biggest or the finest toy firetruck in the world. But it seemed that way to me. Later, I received three footballs during one Christmas and loved them all.

Some of my most unforgettable Christmases have been those when I managed to surprise a loved one with a gift that was really wanted.

But during this time of great material wealth many Americans believe that extravagant gift-giving is defiling the true meaning of the holiday commemorating the birth of Jesus.

All that is the finding of a recent nationwide survey commissioned by Lutheran Brotherhood.

"For many people, commercialism dilutes the religious significance of the holidays," said Lutheran spokesman Todd Gillingham. "We are constantly bombarded by messages to spend, spend, spend, yet spending can undermine our holiday celebrations."

The poll indicates Americans may be saying one thing and doing another.

The survey of 1,000 people by YankeeDoll Partners noted that 70 percent stated that being with family and friends was their favorite part of the Christmas holiday. Only 3 percent listed shopping as their favorite activity. Yet almost 30 percent said that if money were more plentiful, they would spend a lot more on Christmas gifts than they do now.

"There's a holiday tug of war in society today," Gillingham said. "People say that spending time with family is most important to them (during Christmas), yet they feel pulled by the desire to spend more on gifts."

COMMENTARY

Sixty-one percent of people interviewed said Christmas has less religious significance than it did when they were growing up. Fifty-four percent said the reason for the decline is the increased emphasis on shopping and gift-giving.

One group that has been around since 1973, Alternatives for Simple Living, produces a variety of written materials to combat the over-commercialization of the Christmas holidays. The goal of the Christian-based organization from Sioux City, Iowa, is "equipping people of all four corners of the world, live justly and celebrate responsibly."

"It has issued a brochure titled 'Who's Birthday Is It Anyway?' that offers tips for having a more meaningful Christmas. Some examples:

- Avoid debt. Refuse to be pressured by advertising to over-spend.
- Avoid stress. Give to yourself. Don't assume that things have to be the way they've always been.
- Give appropriate gifts. Get to know the recipient. Give what they want to receive, not what you want to buy.
- Draw names rather than giving something to everyone in your giving circle. Set a ceiling for each recipient. Give children one thing they really want rather than too many gifts.
- All of the above national ideas. Don't expect gift-giving to die out. The Christian festival, after all, focuses on the birth of a child who many believe was a gift to the whole world.

Jim Jones is editor-in-chief of the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

If Graham were to pick the man of the century it might be Pope John Paul II.

Satan twists God's words

Satan's activities are in the spiritual sphere. His battlefield is not sin arising from human corruption, but in unlearned minds.

Satan's works appear in the newspapers, finding ready admission. Christ's divine truth is rigidly excluded as being "controversial" likewise in our schools, and elected leaders. Through religion, politics, education, financing, Satan battles for souls.

Look in church pulpits and their wise men, (who like the Sanhedrin in Christ's time) established their own doctrines and rules. Leading God's people away from truth. Wherever God's word is taught there we see the trail of that "old serpent."

Satan's content the Bible is accepted. He himself used scriptures (Psalms 91:1-12) changing what is written by misquoting or misapplying: (Matthew 4:5-6) His object is perverting the "snake" and the "apple." (Genesis 3) "Why" because it ministers to his lie. Hiding God's truth, supporting man's delusions, stumbling blocks for unbelievers.

Churches campaign against global warming

EUGENE, Ore. (AP) — Church leaders have launched a campaign to lead the planet by involving their congregations in the environmental movement.

The Oregon Global Warming Campaign is the first of 17 similar efforts nationwide to be organized by ministers, rabbis and other religious leaders.

"We intend to move the challenge of climate change from the laboratories of science and halls of diplomacy to the pulpits and pews of the American heartland," said the Rev. John Huerstler, a leader of the Presbyterian Church in Oregon. "Global warming will hurt creation."

Part pagan, part Christian

Varying forces shape Christmas celebration

By Dan Gallagher
The Associated Press

BOISE — What began as a pagan celebration and evolved over a millennium into a Christian observance appears to be reverting to its roots.

Part pagan, part Christian, a religion, and the Bible was read every day. We had prayer in high school classes. This helped mold my character and my thinking. I knew some things were wrong and some things were right. We've lost that."

lose sex that went along with pagan festivals," Odahl said.

Constantine sent his pious mother, Helena, on a pilgrimage to the Holy Land in 326. She established basilicas at important sites in Christ's life, including his birth in a cave for horses above Bethlehem. Interest in Helena's trek prompted the first official Christmas in 336 A.D. in Rome.

No one knew Christ's exact birth date, but the celebration of the sun god Sol was Dec. 25, so that day was used. Some pagan trappings were retained. Candles honoring the sun god also represented Christ's light. Green wreaths, special feasts and gifts that had marked the harvest of the god of agriculture, Saturn, became Christian traditions as well.

Santa Claus evolved from a religious figure in ancient Asia known as "Father Time" to an imaginary toy-maker from the North Pole. The real Nicholas was a bishop known for helping sailors who landed in his seaside town and using his church's community chest to pay the dowries of the young girls in his parishes.

"Up to modern times, if you didn't have a dowry, you didn't get married and you might be forced into prostitution," Odahl said.

Nicholas became the patron saint of gift-giving and over the centuries his legend spread to Germany and Scandinavia.

The manger scene was popularized by St. Francis of Assisi at his Italian church, Odahl said, after the Christmas tree emerged several hundred years earlier in the 8th century as St. Boniface from England set about converting the people in northeastern Germany who worshipped Odin as god of the forest.

"He literally cut down Odin's fir tree to show them it had no power and encouraged the Germans to bring the tree and candles inside and worship the baby Jesus," Odahl said.

In the waning centuries of the second millennium, Americans began adding glitter to the holiday that has been musing its religious message.

In 1822, Clement Moore wrote what actually originated as "A Visit From St. Nicholas" but came to be called "Twas the Night Before Christmas."

"Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer" was recorded by Gene Autry in 1949. And in the 1950s, the silver artificial trees reflecting the hues from a revolving colored plastic prism came on the scene.

But while the religious aspects may not be as prominent, Odahl still finds some redeeming value in a season that focuses more and more on the exchange of billions of dollars in presents but gets friends and relatives together.

"It's become something that all people can appreciate whether they want to celebrate Christmas or not," Odahl said.

Holiday cards provide way to share beliefs

By Allison Kennedy
Knight Rider News Service

COLUMBUS, Ga. — Every Christmas brings another opportunity for Minnie Besaw. A time to "plant seeds," as she calls it.

In layman's terms, that means sending out subtle messages about God — messages that, for Christians like her, Jesus was the messiah.

"The seeds" Besaw scatters come in the form of Christmas cards. Call it a messianic message with a 3-cent stamp.

Her cards go to friends, relatives and other people she doesn't see very often.

"I let them know something we call the Lord," said Besaw, a member of "Promised Land Christian Ministries." "I'm just planting seeds."

Besaw isn't alone. Between Christmas and Easter, evangelism via greeting cards is a huge industry.

Michelle Buckley, a Hallmark Cards spokeswoman, said last week that her company sees $2.6 billion in card sales at Christmas each year. Of all Hallmark cards — Christmas is just all other occasions — a full 30 percent contain religious or spiritual messages.

"As we near the millennium, we are seeing that increase," Buckley said in a phone interview from Kansas City, Kan. "People are taking stock of their lives and spiritual issues."

But Christmas cards aren't only about evangelism, she noted. "It's also an expression of who (the card-senders) are," she said. "For instance, a younger Christian will usually want to express the Christmas message in a more contemporary way."

A new line of Hallmark cards fits that bill — kids with candies, one with a picture of a red bird that reads, "Life's simple."

The spiritual message is subtle, but there.

"We see that spiritually peak most at Christmas," Buckley said.

Agency sets price for Old Towne land

TWIN FALLS - Old Towne might become a more entertaining place.

Twin Falls' Urban Renewal Agency has agreed on a price for Old Towne land it is considering selling to Treasure Cove Golf-N-Games Inc. for a family entertainment center, on a portion of the site where the former Twin Falls Feed & Ice burned down.

The business' owners haven't yet submitted an application for the development, but they've indicated their intent. Urban Renewal is looking at selling Treasure Cove 18,750 square feet at Shoshone Street and Fifth Avenue South for $9 cents per square foot, or a total of $9,375, Twin Falls' Economic Development Director Dave McAlindin said.

If the deal goes through, Treasure Cove would build a 16,000-square-foot family entertainment center costing about $300,000 as a new home for its existing Blue Lakes Boulevard North business, he said. Urban Renewal in return would construct a public parking lot big enough to serve the new facility.

That parking lot, McAlindin said, also would fulfill the parking requirements related to special-use permits for two other new Old Towne businesses - Bob Nora's Sax Fifth Avenue bar and music club and David Woodhead's Lamphouse Theatre art cinema.

Urban Renewal plans a joint, closed executive session with the City Council at 5 p.m. Monday to discuss a purchase of property, but that issue has nothing to do with Treasure Cove, McAlindin said.

Company plans to build 55-room hotel in Riggins

RIGGINS - Magic Valley sportsmen and recreationists will have a new place to stay when they head north.

Noise-based Brown's Industries Inc. said it has begun construction on a new 55-room Best Western hotel along the Salmon River in Riggins.

The Salmon Rapids Lodge is on U.S. Highway 95, at a stopping place between northern and southern Idaho.

Hotel amenities will include a large indoor swimming pool, exercise room, outdoor spa and patios and conference rooms with views of the Salmon River and Little Salmon River, the company said. The "great room" will feature a two-story fireplace.

Guest rooms will include standard, business, deluxe and full-suite types.

Large wood timbers and stone finishes will be designed "to complement the landscape and culture of the Idaho experience," Brown's said.

The area is a destination for family recreation, whitewater rafting, hunting, year-round fishing, jet boating and skiing.

The lodge is expected to employ 12-16 people and will open in May, the company said.

Landing new business

Lands' End workers process orders in the company's warehouse in Dodgeville, Wis., earlier this month. Lands' End, the catalog company best known for its "classic clothes," is quickly becoming a major player in cyberspace.

Firm makes online push to bolster catalog sales

The Associated Press

DODGEVILLE, Wis. - When people talk about shopping on the Internet, names like Amazon.com, eBay and eToys frequently come to mind.

But what about Lands' End? Yes, the catalog company best known for its classic clothes is quickly becoming a major player in cyberspace. In fact, Lands' End is one of the top sellers of clothes on the Web today and has been lauded for its superb online customer service.

This year, analysts expect big growth in sales at www.landsend.com, especially during the holiday season.

"They have a well-developed e-commerce site that is better than many of the well-known sites out there," said Kenneth Gassman, an analyst at the Richmond, Va.-based investment firm Davenport & Co. "The Internet has the potential to become a significant portion of their business."

Its success online is good news for 36-year-old Lands' End, which has been struggling in the past year with disappointing sales and profits.

Earlier this month, Lands' End said its overall sales fell by 18 percent in the first five weeks of the fourth quarter, a much steeper decline than Wall Street analysts had forecast.

The drop-off comes amid a year-long effort by the company to scale back the number of catalogs it sends to customers and reduce the numbers of pages within each catalog.

While trimming back the paper, it's bulking up its presence on the Web. Online sales more than tripled last year from 1997 to $61 million, and many analysts expect sales to top $100 million this year.

In October, more than 1.1 million unique visitors came to the Lands' End Web site, more than those sites run by rivals Gap, J. Crew, Eddie Bauer or Macy's, according to New York-based Media Matrix, which tracks online traffic.

Many credit its dominance online to the solid order and distribution system the company already had in place for selling products through its catalog.

Lands' End already knows how to process an order, operate a warehouse and ship goods quickly; something Web startups and many of the brick-and-mortar retailers with online stores are struggling to build.

In fact, the company uses the same warehouses for its online and catalog operations. Inside the massive facility - the size of 16 football fields - workers sort merchandise at a rate of 10,000 pieces an hour. Lands' End ships up to 150,000 orders on its busiest days.

"A lot of the new e-commerce retailers have had to set up infrastructure from scratch," Gassman said. But Lands' End already has "the ability to handle thousands and thousands of incoming orders daily."

While Lands' End is turning more high-tech, nothing is changing about its product mix.

Visitors to its Web site will find the same classic clothes, including khaki pants, bright-colored T-shirts and luggage, that have long been standards at the Dodgeville, Wis.-based company.

Chamber looks to diversify income

By Virginia S. Hutchins Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - Diversification is smart business sense, even for the local chamber.

The Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce is trying to position itself to depend less on income from special events - which can succeed or falter at the whim of the weather, for example - and more on a stable, growing membership base.

The chamber's budget committee this week gave the business group's board an interim report, previewing a budget to be finished about the first of January after a few more meetings, said Kent Just, the chamber's executive.

The group is trying to "de-emphasize" financially speaking - some events that have been big money-makers in the past but might not always be, Just said. To stabilize itself and depend less on events such as its annual late-summer picnic and auction, the chamber will increase emphasis on getting members.

The chamber hiked its base-rate fee for membership by 2 percent this year - the third of five planned 2 percent increases - to bring the base rate to $182, he said.

Member totals themselves are up about 8 percent over a year ago.

With about 700 members now, chamber leaders think could have about 800, "certainly within two years it's very feasible," Just said.

No concerted membership drive is planned, but staffers, board members and other chamber members will be asked to make referrals.

Three other items of interest emerged from this week's chamber board meeting.

The Twin Falls business organization officially endorsed the Magic Valley Economic Council, an unfunded volunteer group.

With several times with the goal of coordinating and cooperatively leading job-development efforts in area communities.

Right now, Just said, the eco-

Internet funds spread risk for investors

NEW YORK (AP) - It seems most investors would rather bet on the broad potential of the Internet than gamble on the fortunes of a single Web-related company.

Evidence of this preference can be found in the proliferation of Internet stock mutual funds in the last four years, and in the vast amount of cash flowing into these funds.

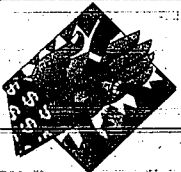

Consider the following statistics compiled by Wiesenberger, a Rockville, Md., firm that studies mutual fund trends:

There are now 12 mutual funds that focus primarily on Internet-related companies, up from two in 1996. And 16 more have filed registration papers with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The amount of money invested in Internet funds has grown to $4.3 billion as of Sept. 30, 1999, up from just $2.6 million at the end of 1996.

Assets in these funds grew by 1,250 percent in 1999. Meanwhile, assets in all mutual funds grew by a scant 9 percent.

The numbers, while staggering, make sense, mutual fund experts say, given the Internet-induced euphoria that has swept Wall Street.

OF MUTUAL INTEREST

"Individual investors see value in the Internet and a lot of them want to participate in it in some small way," said David Kugler, president of Monument Internet Fund.

But investing in individual Internet companies can be risky, so investors have opted to reduce their risk by putting money into funds that focus on a diverse array of online firms. That way, if one stock turns out to be "dud," the loss will be offset by the success of another.

That hedging quality inherent to mutual funds is expected to come in handy as the nascent Internet sector evolves. There simply isn't enough room for all the companies that hope to succeed on the Web, and analysts expect a shakeout in the coming years as some companies fail and others are swallowed up via mergers and acquisitions.

Volatility is another issue fund managers and investors have to contend with. Internet stocks are notorious for soaring up and then tumbling in tandem with investors' often arbitrary mood swings.

Most fund managers have tried to address both the unpredictability and volatility that frequently plague the sector by including a broad array of stocks in their funds. Kugler's Internet fund, for example, includes 52 stocks, ranging from startups like Dr. Koop.com, a health care information Web site, to such blue-chip companies as computer network firm Cisco Systems and discount broker Charles Schwab.

Nonetheless, no one expects Internet funds to continue to perform at their current blistering paces. On average, the funds have risen nearly 107 percent in 1999, according to Wiesenberger. That's just a shade below the 112 percent average gain in 1998.

"Investors have to ask themselves, 'How repeatable are these numbers?" said Christine Benz, an analyst at Morningstar Inc., a Chicago firm that tracks mutual funds.

Benz noted that the Internet funds with the best short-term returns tend to be those that narrowly focused on a specific online niche.

Those funds pose the biggest risks for investors, however, since they depend on the success of a small sector of the Web. If that sector falters - or merely falls out of favor with investors - a fund that concentrates on that area will plummet in value.

"Money managers who have chosen to focus on a narrow area of the Web have nowhere else to go if their favorite sectors turn sour," Benz said.

Finally, it's highly unlikely investors will always be willing to pay large sums of money for the shares of untested and unprofitable Internet startup companies. When the demand cools, Internet stock prices are expected to fall in line with the rest of the stock market.

The problem is that no one knows when the industry shakeout will occur, or when the demand for Internet stocks will decrease and let some air out of the bubble.

Stocks erase early gains but end mostly higher

NEW YORK (AP) - Reports of a slowing economy and strong corporate profit growth sparked a wave of buying on Wall Street Friday, briefly pushing the three major market averages into record territory. But in a highly volatile session, only the Nasdaq composite index closed with a new record.

The Dow Jones industrial average rose 12.54 to close at 11,257.43. In earlier trading, the Dow rose as much as 138 points, easily surpassing its Aug. 25 closing record of 11,325.04.

The Standard & Poor's 500 rose 2.27 to 1,421.05. The Nasdaq composite index rose 38.00 to 3,753.06, topping Thursday's record close to secure its 25th new high since Oct. 29. The index, which lists a large share of technology companies, is now up more than 70 percent so far this year.

General Electric, the world's second-largest company in terms of market capitalization, led the market higher Friday after announcing a 3-for-1 stock split. GE also said it will raise its dividend and increase its stock repurchase program. Analysts applauded ed GE's growth prospects, saying the giant conglomerate is now building market share in every business line in every region of the world.

GE rose 3.875 to 151.5. Stock splits alone don't guarantee a boost for share prices, but many investors consider them a vote of confidence from a company's board. GE stock has risen nearly 20 percent in the year-to-date.

"People are chasing the big stocks," said Brian G. Belski, chief investment strategist at George K. Baum & Co. in Kansas City, Mo. "There's lots of demand and not a lot of supply, so prices keep going up."

But after weeks of frothy gains for a handful of top companies, Friday's rally impressed analysts with its breadth and energy. On the New York Stock Exchange, more stocks rose than fell, a rare occurrence in recent weeks.

Volume on the NYSE hit an all-time high, with 1.35 billion shares changing hands in the regular session. Friday was a triple trading session, a once-a-quarter event when contracts on stock options, index options, and index futures all expire.

Online

Lands' End has also worked hard to make the Web site look much like its popular catalogs, using the same color scheme and written descriptions.

But the Web site also provides customers with a shopping experience they can't get through the catalog.

Online, women can "try on" outfits by building an interactive 3D model with their exact measurements. The Web site also gives style advice and recommends figure-flattering clothes.

For men, there's "Order Express," where shoppers can select shirts by color, fabric, cut, sleeve type and collar. The effect is building a shirt from the ground up, making adjustments as you go along.

The Web site also uses interactive software that connects a customer service representative to a shopper via on-screen "chat." A two-way dialogue that appears in a tiny box when the shopper clicks on an icon.

The agent then synchronizes her computer screen with the customer and can "push" pages of the Web site with the requested information before the shopper's eyes, in addition to answering questions about sizing, availability and billing.

"We hear a lot from novices every day," said Darcia Torres, one of the personal shoppers. "Probably a year from now there will be a lot of experts out there."

THE ACES ON BRIDGE Bobby Waltz. If you're out to beat a dog, you're sure to find a critic. - Yiddish proverb

"Your timing was wrong," observed a critical North. "After drawing trumps, you would have been better off taking the diamonds before committing yourself in hearts. However, since West had the diamond jack, you couldn't make the game anyway."

With no attractive lead, West chose the neutral lead of a trump. South won, drew one more round and then tried hearts. He led a heart to dummy's ace and finessed the king, losing to West's queen. West exited with a third heart, and South had with one more chance - he had to hold his diamonds and pass to only two. This he couldn't manage, and in the end, he won only nine tricks.

It was right to play diamonds before hearts, but not before playing clubs. For his best chance, South should immediately cash one club and ruff a club high. At trick five, he could use dummy's trump king and finesse in diamonds. West wins his three diamonds but South has the trump king. If he does after he wins the jack West can exit safely in diamonds, but the clubs are temporary. After the defenders win two diamonds, they remain in trouble. A minor-suit exit offers South a ruff and shift, and a heart exit gives South two aces and two heart tricks. If West leads hearts, South enjoys a free finesse. And if East leads the suit, dummy's nine forces West's queen for the same result.
