Gun dealers fire back

Area firearm salesmen join boycott of Smith & Wesson

By John T. Huddy
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Several local gun dealers said they are boycotting Smith & Wesson firearms after the company put tighter restrictions on how its guns are sold.

"We don't want to carry Smith & Wesson firearms any longer," said Ryan Horsley of Red's Trading Post in Twin Falls. "Smith & Wesson basically sold out." Horsley and other dealers throughout the state have stopped ordering guns from the nation's largest maker of handguns.

While they said they will continue to sell the used guns they already have in stock, any new orders are on hold. "I will sell the used ones that I have in stock and that will be it," said Randy Ostrom of Magic Valley Pawn and Loan. "If I had any new Smith and Wesson guns in stock I would be sending them back to the manufacturer."

Smith & Wesson recently signed an agreement with the U.S. Departments of Treasury and Housing and Urban Development to be dropped as a defendant in 17 handgun liability lawsuits filed by municipalities against the firearms industry.

In the agreement, Smith & Wesson agreed to a series of safety measures, including:

- Putting trigger locks on all the guns it makes.
- Prohibiting people from leaving a store with more than one purchased Smith & Wesson firearm until after a

CANYON CRACKS

Openings along Salmon Falls canyon rim may cause cave-in

By N.S. Nokkentved
Times-News writer

BUHL — The crack is big enough to swallow a yellow 1957 Plymouth, with what looks like an old Rambler and some castoff household appliances thrown in for good measure.

Cracks along canyon rims are common in southern Idaho, as gravity, time and weather pick away at the basalt rimrock. But along the east rim of Salmon Falls Creek Canyon a crack that has shown up on aerial photos since the 1950s appears to have widened, and new cracks have formed recently.

"There's something more than just natural erosion of the canyon rim going on here, with deep cracks an eighth of a mile from the rim," said Karen Shilling, a Bureau of Land Management geologist who visited the area recently.

The cracks are in the rim along a stretch of the canyon more than two miles long, known as Sinking Canyon. The canyon below is littered with evidence of past slides and cave-ins.

The area is extremely hazardous, geologists say. The canyon is about 320 feet deep. No one can say when one of the cracks may widen or whether the whole section of the rim might sink — it could be this week, it could be 100 or 1,000 years from now, said BLM geologist Johnny Garth of Shoshone.

"You definitely don't want to be there when it does," he said. "This entire area is unstable." Five years ago, you could drive out to the canyon rim on an old road — really just a pair of tracks through the dust and sagebrush. Not anymore. The road crosses the old crack that someone tried to fill in with dirt and trash.

The old crack has widened and is spanned by some tenuous bridges of rocks, dirt and trash that don't look like they would support a human, let alone a car.

Visible artifacts in the crack include the old cars, an iron bed, a camp stove, assorted castoff appliances, old pickup truck parts and a cow carcass or two. In places the crack looks like an old mine shaft. It just disappears around Volkswagen-sized boulders in blackness more than 30 feet down.

Farther out, another crack has opened, and the end beyond now drops abruptly 10 or 12 feet. Standing on the edge, you can look down on the climb. But it is too dangerous to climb down and walk out there.

The government geologists walked gingerly, knowing that in some places the rocks below had moved apart, undermining the surface soil. You might be standing only on a tenuous earthen bridge. The ground felt eerily spongy in some places.

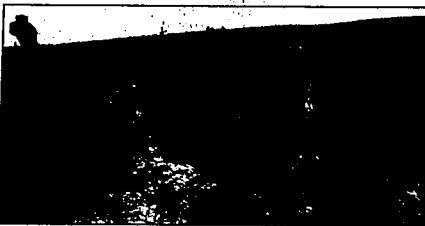

Fresh dirt here and there was damp, as though the crack had opened within the past few days.

The crack runs more than half a mile basically parallel to the canyon. Other cracks cross the 11 1/2-acre, about an eighth of a mile at the widest point. It has been grazed by livestock, and one cow was reported lost in one of the cracks recently. A tempo-

Johnny Garth stands at the north end of the cracks where the displacement is the most pronounced.

Salmon Falls Creek Canyon geology at a glance

The Times-News

The Salmon Falls Creek Canyon winds from northern Nevada nearly due north through western Twin Falls County to join the Snake River near Thousand Springs, northwest of Buhl.

The canyon walls are made up of successive layers of basalt flows, with some interbeds of lake and streambed sediments — like the creme filling in a layer cake. The layers are similar to those clearly visible in the Snake River Canyon.

Basalt is brittle and cracks readily. Blocks of basalt crack and fall from the rim to form the talus slopes at the foot of the canyon walls. This slow, continuing crumbling of the rim is a natural process that slowly widens the canyon. The process is enhanced by weather and by the deterioration of less solid and stable sediment layers. When sediments erode away, the unsupported basalt cracks and falls away.

Geologists think the process at work along a two-mile section of the Salmon Falls Canyon is more complex and may include one or more earthquake faults.

Bill Bonnichsen, a geologist with the Idaho Geological Survey at the University of Idaho, said the upper layers of basalt lie on unstable and unconsolidated sediments of an ancient lake bed. The sediments are loose and would crumble in your hand.

Groundwater may have saturated and weakened the fine-grained sediments, causing the overlying layers to settle and crack. Farmers in the area have been irrigating since about 1905.

But canyon wall slides are nothing new to this century. The hummocky terrain in the canyon is all debris from past landslides, said Bonnichsen, who grew up in Twin Falls County and has studied the area's geology.

The sediments are from an arm of an ancient lake that reached into the area. The same lake bed also formed the bluffs of the Hagerman Fossil Beds National Monument and the slippery slope of the 1993 Bliss landslide.

The deposit of loose clay and sand was eventually covered with successive lava flows from Sunset Butte, an ancient shield volcano south of the slide area.

Geologists are not certain what will happen next. Maybe nothing, and maybe the large piece of canyon rim — more than 11 acres — will slump and slide slowly into the canyon or simply topple over.

Clinton scolds Pakistan

The Associated Press

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — Amid extraordinary security of decoy limousines and a last-minute plane switch, President Clinton admonished Pakistan's military ruler Saturday for a "trafic squandering of effort, energy and wealth" on nuclear weapons and confrontations with India. But Clinton's appeal for restraint seemed to go unheeded.

"Take the right steps now to prevent escalation, avoid miscalculation and reduce the risk of war," the president urged. He provided Gen. Pervez Musharraf to restore democracy, crack down on terrorism and renew talks with India to ease their angry standoff over the Himalayan territory of Kashmir.

Clinton was the first U.S. president to visit Pakistan since 1969 and he brought a sobering warning of diplomatic isolation and worsening problems unless Islamabad changes course. It was a hard message for a nation that stood loyally with the United States through a half century of Cold War crises.

The president spelled out his concerns in a meeting at the presidential palace with Musharraf, who took power in a bloodless coup last October. Then, Clinton made an address on state-run television, asking citizens to consider whether a nuclear rivalry and border tensions with India will make Pakistan safer or improve living conditions.

"The answer to all these questions is no," he declared. Clinton's visit concluded a six-day trip to South Asia, a region he has called perhaps the most dangerous in the world. Beginning his journey home, Clinton stopped in Oman for refueling and then flew to Geneva, Switzerland, to meet Syrian President Hafeez Assad.

Oscars' big night arrives

By David Germain
The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Hollywood's finest screenwriters would have trouble matching the odd twists leading up to this year's Oscars. It's been a bit like the limo ride from hell.

The buildup to Hollywood's big night included misplaced Academy Awards ballots and stolen statues, culminating in the discovery of the missing Oscars by a salvager foraging around trash bins where the trophies had been dumped.

The Academy's cherished secrecy was threatened, first by a Web site that claimed it had an advance list of potential nominees, then by a Wall Street Journal story that polled Oscar voters to prophesy how the awards might shake out.

Then there are the nominees, as unlikely a lot as the straid. Please see OSCARS, Page A2

Judge: Snake dams must comply with law

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — A preliminary ruling that four Snake River dams may violate the federal Clean Water Act could boost efforts to breach the dams to help restore salmon runs.

U.S. District Judge Helen Frye cited evidence that the dams, operated by the Army Corps of Engineers, could violate water-quality standards by increasing the river's temperature and dissolved gases.

But the judge also requested that more records be submitted before she makes a final ruling.

"This confirms that the Clean Water Act is the law, not just an aspirational policy as the Corps has treated it for the past 30 years. We look forward to the court's review of the operation of the four lower Snake River dams," said David Cummings, attorney for the Nez Perce Tribe, one of the plaintiffs in the case.

The Corps of Engineers has denied that dam operations violate water-quality standards.

Conservationists said they were confident the final ruling would go their way. They predicted that breaching the four dams into compliance with the Clean Water Act — ranging from $460 million to $900 million.

"The court's order provides yet another reason for the government to seriously consider dam removal," said Nicole Cordan of the National Wildlife Federation, one of eight conservation groups that filed the lawsuit challenging dam operations.

Cracks

rary electric fence now keeps the cows out.

But this is not the first time a big chunk of land has calved off a glacier. A similar section slid into the canyon about 63 years ago to the north of the present cracks.

"People who lived near the Salmon Falls Creek in western Twin Falls County reported hearing loud rumbling noises emanating from the canyon during the first two weeks or so of August 1937.

Buhl area farmer Harley Robertson told news reporters at the time that about three years earlier he had felt what he thought was a slight earthquake. Then cracks began to appear on his land near the canyon.

Those cracks opened up and about five acres sank nearly 300 feet into the canyon by the end of another eight or 10 acres over the next few days.

The theories explaining the event in that day varied. Some thought the surface was underlain by lava tubes, like the ice caves north of Shoshone, and they were crumbling. Some thought the earth had been softened by years of irrigation. Some feared similar cracks would open beneath Salmon Falls Creek and swallow the entire stream.

Widespread hysteria follows 1937 event

Widespread hysteria followed the event in that day varied. Some thought the surface was underlain by lava tubes, like the ice caves north of Shoshone, and they were crumbling. Some thought the earth had been softened by years of irrigation. Some feared similar cracks would open beneath Salmon Falls Creek and swallow the entire stream.

One man thought the underground was a giant cavern 1,000 to 1,500 feet deep, separating the earth's crust from the core. The noises were from rocks falling from the roof of the cavern to lower strata "deep in the bowels of the earth," the Twin Falls News reported on Aug. 13, 1937.

Some locals earned a little extra money by offering guided tours to the Sinking Canyon. But officials posted guards to keep gawkers away from the crumbling canyon rim.

Bill Bonnichsen, now a geologist with the Idaho Geological Survey in Moscow, remembers hearing his father and grandfather talk about the event. He grew up on a farm in western Twin Falls County, not far from the Salmon Falls Creek Canyon.

They had heard the rumble the night a large chunk of canyon rim slipped into the canyon in 1937.

The event was a sensation across the country and generated interest as far away as London.

Bonnichsen said he thinks events 63 years ago are connected with the current cracks some distance to the south. The slides are comparable to the 1933 Bliss landslide when more than 100 acres of hillside west of Bliss slid into the Snake River.

"It's just another event in a long process," he said.

Though me cracks remain stable for thousands of years, the events along Salmon Falls Canyon should serve as a warning to anyone building near the canyon rim, Bonnichsen said.

Computer glitch grows into White House scandal

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — How odd, White House computer technician Daniel "Tony" Barry recalled thinking to himself. In January 1998, he was told to scour the database for e-mails concerning external Monica S. Lewinsky.

While searching for documents that had been subpoenaed, Barry came across a particular batch of correspondence that seemed to qualify — an apparent exchange of letters between Lewinsky and her friend, White House employee Ashley Raines. The curious thing was that the White House computer archive had saved on one side of what plainly was a back-and-forth conversation. For some reason, only the e-mails coming from the White House — not those entering the White House system from outside — were archived.

Barry had picked up an early rumbling of a problem that would explode into view more than two years later. What started as a programming glitch — an inadvertent error, even most foes of the Clinton White House believe — this week began to metastasize into a potentially serious political problem.

Now, the latest in a seemingly endless string of controversies over the administration's disclosure of evidence promises to shadow the balance of President Clinton's term and the presidential campaign of Vice President Gore.

Indeed, with the e-mails now front-page headlines, the White House moved Friday to hire a new contractor to reformat the e-mail documents. Officials said they had no idea how long the process would take or whether anything could be done before the election.

Even as the technicians go to work on computer backup tapes, the White House and Gore will confront numerous questions: Did the White House pressure workers to keep quiet about the computer problems? Did it ignore warnings by Barry and others about problems with the computer searches — and as a result fail to turn over subpoenaed evidence? Is there a hidden cache of electronic documents that will shed new light on Gore's role in 1996 fund-raising?

The firestorm reflects the sullenly mistrustful atmosphere in Washington in year eight of the Clinton administration. Democrats dismiss the controversy as the latest in what Gore spokesman Chris Leahane called a Republican-created "scandal-industrial complex in Washington." E. Republican such as Rep. Dan Burton (Ind.), the House Government Reform Committee chairman who has been pressing the e-mail matter, say a White House that has repeatedly been delinquent in turning over material and regularly changed its story is no longer entitled to the benefit of the doubt.

As has come to light in recent days, programming errors in two different computer systems have produced two sets of missing documents. On the Executive Office of the President computer, incoming e-mail for 500 White House officials, including top aides to the president, was not properly recorded in computer archive. The glitch meant that e-mails were missing for a 33-month period that could have included material relevant to 1996 fund-raising abuses and the Lewinsky scandal.

On Gore's computer system, White House lawyers say they discovered last week, neither internal e-mails nor those coming from outside were properly recorded for Gore and some aides from 1994 onward. That means, potentially, that large numbers of e-mails produced by Gore or senior aides were never reviewed to see if they contained material relevant to congressional and justice Department inquiries into campaign fund-raising. The problem involves a White House archiving system, known as ARMS (Automated Records Management System) set up in 1994 to comply with the legal requirement that White House e-mails-like other documents be preserved for historical purposes. But in the age of scandal, the system has become as much document production tool to respond to investigators' subpoenas as it has a resource for future historians.

On (Al) Gore's computer system, White House lawyers say they discovered last week, neither internal e-mails nor those coming from outside were properly recorded for Gore and some aides from 1994 onward.

It was in conducting a search in response to one of those subpoenas that Barry first stumbled on problems with ARMS. The fact that the system had only picked up part of the relevant e-mails was dismissed as a computer "hiccup," as White House counsel Beth Nolan described it in a statement.

Six months later, in June 1998, Northrop Grumman Corp. employee Yiman Salim, assigned to a team managing the White House computers, was the first to discover that the hiccup was a symptom of a major programming error. Incoming e-mail messages were not being scanned by the system because upper-case rather than lower-case letters were used in part of the computer code: MAIL2 instead of Mail2.

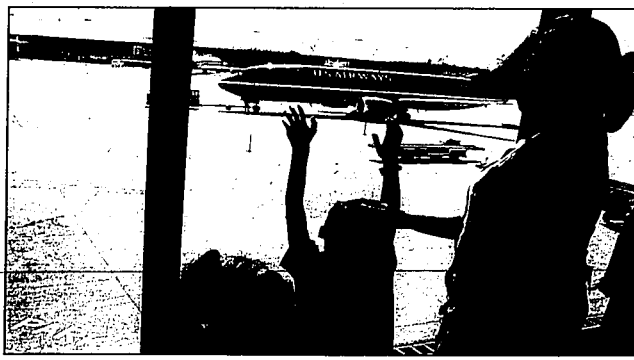

John D. Podesta, then deputy chief of staff, was quickly informed of a "technical anomaly" in the system. He asked for a briefing "on this thing," according to handwritten notes. A senior official said that Podesta "does think he had a brief meeting on it" with a lawyer from the office that handles White House records. Podesta told the lawyer "be sure that the counsel's office knows about this."

White House counsel Charles F.C. Ruff was told of a problem with the archiving system, but, Nolan's statement says, "did not think the error had an effect on previous searches or that it might affect future searches of e-mail records." As a result, Nolan said, Ruff did not think he needed to "notify investigative bodies of this error."

At Burton's hearing Thursday, several employees of Northrop Grumman, which managed the e-mail recording system, said White House officials Laura Crabtree, Callahan and Mark Lindsay told them, in what they perceived as threatening terms, that they were not to discuss the computer problems with anyone. Callahan and Lindsay denied making threats, though Callahan said she told the workers "this was a situation we needed to be careful of, because it was sensitive."

But the error persisted. Documents released by Burton's committee depict Barry's growing anxiety about the matter. "I am growing increasingly concerned about the seeming lack of movement on the Mail2 problem," Barry wrote in a September 1998 memo. "Do you know where the holdup is. We have known about this problem for four months now and not a single record has been passed to ARMS." Two weeks later, Barry again wrote that he had heard nothing. "I need to know, for my own sanity, exactly what my role in this project should be."

Deal averts US Airways strike

WASHINGTON (AP) — US Airways and the Association of Flight Attendants hailed their agreement Saturday on a tentative five-year contract that keeps planes flying and provides raises for the union's 10,000 members.

"It's an agreement that shows the company has recognized the value of the flight attendants," union negotiator Lynn Lenosky said.

The company said the pact, which the union's rank and file must approve, allows it to remain competitive.

It also meant US Airways flights were not disrupted this weekend as had been feared.

"We've got airplanes, we've got crews and we are flying a full schedule and operating normally," US Airways spokesman David Castelvetter said Saturday.

Union and airline bargainers stayed at the table with federal mediators for more than three hours past a 12:01 a.m. EST Saturday strike deadline. US Airways had said it would halt operations rather than try to weather a strike.

The tentative agreement would guarantee raises totaling 10 percent for US Airways attendants, plus some new paid holidays and a signing bonus, according to Lenosky. The attendants have not had a raise since 1996, the year their previous contract expired.

People carry an injured woman following a melee Saturday in New York City with police after the funeral of an unarmed man shot to death by undercover officers.

New Yorkers rally after wake for victim of police shooting

NEW YORK (AP) — A crowd of angry protesters threw bottles and briefly clashed with police Saturday during a funeral procession for the latest unarmed black man killed by New York officers, this time a Haitian immigrant who rebuffed an undercover officer's request for drugs.

The disturbance came after a miles-long procession of protesters and mourners followed a hearse carrying the body of 26-year-old Patrick Dorismond, who was shot to death March 16.

"It's our blood, it's not cheap. We must let them know this must stop," said Michel Eddy, a 26-year-old Haitian immigrant.

As car horns blared loudly, protesters chanted and knocked down police barricades. Many demanded the mayor's resignation over the killing — the third of an unarmed black civilian by undercover officers in the city in the past 13 months.

Two police officers were injured, one suffering a possible broken nose when barriers and people crushed him. Police did not have an immediate count of how many people had been arrested.

A car driving the wrong way on the street was plastered with banners, including one that read: "If you shoot one of my children, I shoot five of you," and others threatening Mayor Rudolph Giuliani's family.

A man walking through a crush of people shouted: "Rudy, receive a fair trial," the prosecutor said. "The tribunal was set up under the microscope of the entire world. All the nations that are U.N. members had participation of the establishment of rules and fundamental principles the tribunal would employ."

Former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark, who has represented Ntakirutimana, did not return a telephone call.

The path was cleared for Ntakirutimana to be turned over to the tribunal when the U.S. Supreme Court on Jan. 24 rejected without comment his argument that he could not be extradited because no treaty exists between the United States and the tribunal. Congress passed a 1996 law that allows Ntakirutimana's extradition.

Ntakirutimana was serving as pastor of a church at Mugonero, Rwanda, in 1994 when Hutu militants killed more than 500,000 people, primarily minority Tutsis.

"It's our blood, it's not cheap. We must let them know this must stop."

—Michael Eddy, 26, Haitian immigrant

I'll blow you up to kingdom come, cut you with a chain saw, and feed you to the dogs!

Another protester's sign named others caught up in police-linked violence: "Diallo, Louima, Baez, Bumpers, enough."

Phone calls to Giuliani's office Saturday were not immediately returned.

Dorismond, a security guard and the son of Haitian singer Andre Dorismond, was shot after an officer conducting a drug sting allegedly asked Dorismond if he would sell him marijuana. The two scuffled, backup officers arrived and one officer's gun went off, killing Dorismond.

The shooting happened just two weeks after another undercover officer fatally shot an unarmed man in the Bronx near where unarmed immigrant Amadou Diallo was shot and killed in hail of 41 police bullets last year. The four officers in the Diallo case were acquitted last month.

As Dorismond's coffin was brought out of the funeral home draped in Haitian and American flags Saturday morning, what had started as a quiet family gathering grew into a loud protest march of at least 3,000 people.

The Rev. Al Sharpton headed the procession from the funeral home to a church mass with supporters hoisting a banner that read "Justice for Patrick."

Cathy Dumont, 26, a Haitian-born Brooklyn resident, compared Haiti's decades of military rule with America's democracy.

"Mrs. Dorismond took her son out of a military regime and brought him here because she thought it would be better and safer, but Giuliani and the way he's empowered the police have proved her wrong," she said.

NAACP: Remove flag from Texas building

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — The NAACP is calling on Gov. George W. Bush to remove an image of the Confederate flag from the Texas Supreme Court building.

NAACP President Kweisi Mfume said Bush should push for the removal because it's the morally right thing to do — not because the civil rights group may organize a tourism boycott on Texas similar to one in South Carolina.

"I would hope the governor does not need the NAACP to appeal to him, but that his heart would appeal to him," Mfume said. "The intolerance the flag represents should not be condoned in any public building."

Mfume spoke Friday at a regional conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in Fort Worth. Bush, the presumptive GOP presidential nominee, has said he is studying the request. When asked in South Carolina about that state's flying of the Confederate flag from the state Capitol, Bush said voters should decide the issue.

A spokeswoman for Bush's office did not return messages seeking comment Friday. Since the NAACP called for an economic boycott of South Carolina in January, 92 organizations have withdrawn from regional and district meetings that were scheduled to be held there, Mfume said.

Ex-Rwandan leaves U.S. to stand trial for massacres

HOUSTON (AP) — A 75-year-old Rwandan clergyman accused of raking part in the massacre of refugees in his homeland has been deported to Africa to face an international tribunal.

Elizabeth Ntakirutimana, a Seventh Day Adventist pastor, is the first person arrested on U.S. soil to be turned over to a U.N. tribunal, said Assistant U.S. Attorney Don DeGabriele in Houston.

He is accused of luring refugees into his Rwandan church, where they were massacred. If convicted, he could get life in prison.

Ntakirutimana has been charged with genocide and crimes against humanity by the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, based in neighboring Tanzania.

He was arrested in 1996 in Laredo, where he had been living. His flight from Texas left Thursday for Tanzania, DeGabriele said.

"We hope and expect he will receive a fair trial," the prosecutor said. "The tribunal was set up under the microscope of the entire world. All the nations that are U.N. members had participation of the establishment of rules and fundamental principles the tribunal would employ."

Former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark, who has represented Ntakirutimana, did not return a telephone call.

To some, Bush sounds 'arrogant'

Questions arise over GOP candidate's presidential run

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Since wrapping up the GOP presidential nomination, George W. Bush has been sounding like a sore winner, making acid remarks about Al Gore and dismissing former Republican rival John McCain. Voters are starting to call pollsters the Texas governor a "cocky" and "arrogant."

With his Texas swagger and a look that some voters describe as a smirk, the governor's remarks on everything from the election to executions have renewed questions about whether he's ready for his prime-time presidential run. A new Pew Research Center poll suggests Bush is being hurt by it all. Among people who now support his Democratic rival, Vice President Al Gore, the percentage who dislike Bush because of his personality has jumped from 19 percent in October to 33 percent. The figure for Gore among Bush supporters is 22 percent, compared to 24 percent in October.

And 31 percent of all the poll's respondents chose a negative term when asked the one word that best described Bush, compared to 12 percent who thought of a negative term first a year ago.

While the majority of references to Bush were positive, the most frequently mentioned negative words were "arrogant," "dislike," "untrustworthy," "wimp," "bad" or "cocky."

The most frequently mentioned negative word for Gore was "boring," and "dull" was second, tied with "politician," undefined as to positive or negative. Next on the negative list came "dishonest" and "incompetent."

Fred C. Iustein, a political science professor at Princeton University, said Bush risks being labeled "a non-gravitas wise guy — that is something he has got to put some effort into working on or walking away from" if he is to win in November. Perceived arrogance won't necessarily hurt, said Darrell West, professor of political science at Brown University, "if it leads people to view you as a strong and effective leader."

But Bill Meyer, a political science professor at Northeastern Republican presidential candidate Texas Gov. George W. Bush speaks to Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee during an educational forum Friday at Little Rock Central High School. Bush said that four decades after a racial standoff at Central High School was resolved by Army intervention, 'access is universal, but excellence is not. All can enter our schools but unfortunately not all are learning.'

University, said that too often Bush's campaign seems to "show him off in ways that accentuate the notion that he is not very substantive ... has no great reason to appear so cocky."

In an interview published Thursday in The Washington Post, the Texas governor launched into unsolicited and repeated criticism of the vice president.

Asked directly whether Gore has the honesty and integrity to serve as president, Bush replied: "That's what I'd like to know and that's what America would like to know."

The remarks came a week after Bush got into political hot water by coming off as dismissive of McCain, his closest rival for the GOP nomination. In an interview with The New York Times, Bush was asked whether the Arizona senator had raised his consciousness about reform. Bush replied,

"No, he didn't change my views." Bush also said he had no intention of making concessions to McCain on campaign finance reform.

While the governor later softened his remarks about McCain, his initial criticism mimicked remarks from his press secretary, who said when asked about negotiating a settlement with McCain, "Negotiations? Governor Bush won." Bush didn't directly address the issue Thursday, but he touched on his approach to Gore when answering a question about Social Security. "I know people on the vice president's team don't like me to remind people that this guy will say anything to get elected, but I'm going to," Bush said at a news conference held after he spoke to students at Colonial High School here in central Florida.

"He's the man who said he invented the Internet," he didn't know as "the Body" was "that fragile."

"Most people think that a touch on the sleeve or a touch on the shoulder or a pat on the back is a good thing," she said. "But for the governor, I guess it's not a good thing."

Ventura said Molnau touched him about four times and he was uncomfortable about it. He also said he was disappointed that lawmakers made light of his sensitivity.

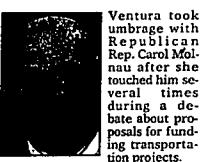

"Sexual harassment is not a one-way street," he said.

Governor reacts strongly to woman's touch

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — Please, don't touch the body. Gov. Jesse Ventura and state lawmakers took after each other on the air Friday over the governor's prickly reaction to being touched by a female lawmaker during a televised forum.

Ventura said on his weekly radio show that lawmakers could be "passing sexual harassment laws" and he "would be saying hell for it" if he had done some touching.

During the forum on KTCA-TV on Wednesday night,

Jesse Ventura

prompting Ventura to exclaim: "Don't. Please, please, I'm not touching you."

The next day, some lawmakers were sporting stickers that said "Don't touch me" and snuckering about the incident.

During a news conference granted legislators each week to rebut Ventura's hourlong show, Molnau said she was just trying to get Ventura's attention. She said she stopped the touching when he protested, and she joked that she didn't know the former professional wrestler

Presidential nominees focus on political parties

WASHINGTON — Their primary foes vanquished, George W. Bush and Al Gore are turning their attention to the political parties and making plans to shift loyal supporters to the organizations.

A senior Bush adviser, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the Texas governor's loyalists eventually will head every major Republican National Committee department, though the RNC chairman, Jim Nicholson, and other top party officials will not be asked to leave. On the Democratic side, Gore has worked closely with party leaders for seven years, but still is going to put his campaign veterans in key posts. "This isn't a hostile takeover, it's a friendly merger," Democratic consultant Peter Fenn said. While spokesmen for both campaigns said no decision had been made on who to transfer to the political party committees, party officials said Bush finance director Donald Evans and top Gore strategist Michael Whouley were likely to make the move. Top Gore fund-raiser, Eileen Kotecki, also is likely to shift to the DNC, officials said.

Republican consultant Ed Gillespie said candidates want the parties to be populated with people they know.

Judge to rule Monday in Reform Party struggle

LYNCHBURG, Va. — A federal judge who compared a power struggle within the Reform Party to a divorce said he'll decide Monday who is in charge of the organization and gets custody of millions of dollars in federal election funds.

"What we have here in this case are honorable people who are divided in beliefs on which way the party should go," U.S. District Judge Norman K. Moon said last week at the close of two days of testimony in the dispute. "The differences here are that they can't even compromise without compromising their beliefs."

Jack Gargan, who was voted out as party chairman at a raucous meeting last month in Nashville, Tenn., contends he is the real leader of the party founded by Texas billionaire Ross Perot.

Gargan told Moon the meeting was illegal because proper notice wasn't given to party members, and some who voted weren't identified as outlined in the party's constitution. Gargan also testified that the vote should be nullified because he hadn't called the meeting to order.

Presidential hopeful seeks to change party's image

SAN MATEO, Calif. — Pat Buchanan is seeking to fashion the Reform Party into a "peace party."

Buchanan wrote hawkish

Pollitics in brief speeches for President Nixon during bombings of Vietnam. But as a presidential candidate, he is promising to pull all U.S. troops out of the Balkans by the end of his first year in office and all American troops out of Europe by the end of his first term. Even sanctions against Iraq are excessively harsh-for-Buchanan, who now styles himself as "anti-interventionist."

"One day our children shall pay the price of our callous indifference to the children of Iraq," he said at a peace conference near San Francisco on Friday night. He didn't say what he thought the proper course of action was.

End of trial doesn't end fight for photos

PITTSBURGH (AP) - He photographed Joe Louis drooling after a punch in training camp and Dizzy Gillespie tutoring a young musician at an all-night jam session.

But the late Charles "Teenie" Harris - a longtime photographer of black celebrities, parties, street scenes and female impersonators - sold the rights to nearly all his photos in 1986 for $3,000 and what he thought was a fair share of profits from their sale.

Harris, who died in 1998 at age 89, worked for the Pittsburgh Courier, once the nation's biggest black newspaper, from 1936 to 1975.

His family is trying to get about 35,000 pictures back and has been encouraged by a $4.4 million jury verdict against Harris' former business partners, Dennis Morgan and Jerome Williams. "The lesson here is that you can't steal a person's life work and expect to get away with it without paying a penalty," said jury foreman Joseph McGurk. "What you have is someone taking advantage of someone else's old age."

Jurors had asked U.S. District Judge Donetta Ambrose after Tuesday's verdict if they could order Morgan, who was held responsible for $3.4 million of the damages, to return the pictures. Ambrose said no.

Attorneys for both sides said Thursday that they were working on a settlement in which the entire archive would be returned to Harris' five surviving children.

Charles Harris, shown here in March 1997, amassed a treasure-trove of pictures while he worked for the nation's biggest black newspaper, the Pittsburgh Courier from 1936 to 1975.

The attorneys for Morgan and Williams had no comment on whether damages would be reduced as part of the settlement.

Two months before Harris died, he filed a federal lawsuit accusing the men of violating copyrights and withholding money from sales of his photographs. Auditors estimated at the trial that his estate is owed $65,000.

Harris was nicknamed "One Shot" by a Pittsburgh Press photographer because that was often all he needed for an assignment, said his former boss, Courier city editor Frank W. Bolden.

"There are a lot of stories about that name, but don't believe any of them," Bolden said. "The truth is that we couldn't afford to have him take more than one shot."

Many of the images now hang on the walls of many homes and businesses across the city. One photo shows Gillespie, Sarah Vaughn, Charlie "Bird" Parker, Art Blakey and Billy Eckstine in the same band on a Pittsburgh stage in 1944. Other subjects included Louis, Thelonus Monk, Jackie Robinson, Satchel Paige and Harry S. Truman.

Morgan testified that Harris shot 100,000 pictures, although the estate's attorney, Cynthia Kernick, estimated the total at 35,000. About 13,000 of the pictures appeared in the Courier. The negatives, prints and films are at Morgan's house and at a storage business, she said.

"They're very fragile," she said. "Some of these negatives are 50 years old. Our main concern now is getting them and having them repaired and making sure they're preserved properly."

U.S. opens graphic record of 100 years

WASHINGTON - There's a shot of a young GI from the Vietnam War, gazing out soberly from under a camouflage helmet, and another of two young Hispanic women posing in front of a wall in Brooklyn full of graffiti.

There's the Easter parade along New York's Fifth Avenue in 1900, and from the 1990s there's President Clinton playing the saxophone that a grinning Boris Yeltsin has just given him at the Russian's country dacha.

All are included in a pictorial record of the United States in the 20th century that the federal government is sending around the world.

One version, 130 images from the more than 9 million in the National Archives, went on exhibit at the agency's headquarters in downtown Washington on Friday.

"Old photographs are time machines," writes curator Bruce Bustard in the catalog describing the show. "Looking at historic photographs helps us imagine what it was like when the first airplane took off, when a landing craft ramp fell open on D-day, or when the first human being stepped on the moon."

A selection from the show opened in Cairo, Egypt, March 13. It will be shown there and in the nearby port city of Alexandria until May. Then it goes to Morocco and Syria. Next year it's scheduled for eight Indian cities, and in Bahrain, Jerusalem, Kuwait and Oman. In 2002, it has dates in Saudi Arabia, Pakistan, Qatar and Jordan.

Some of the pictures were made as Cold War propaganda, like an almost impossibly white and spotless modern kitchen.

But the dark side is there too. Ten small boys and girls with their mustachioed superintendant appear in a Newton, N.C., cotton mill of 1908. John Meintz of Minnesota - no town given - shows the scars on his torso from being tarred and feathered for failing to take part in a war bond drive in 1918.

Letterman will pick up pace

Knight Ridder News Service

After a brief stint of part-time work following open-heart surgery, David Letterman is returning to his late-night CBS talk show on a full-time schedule next week.

For the first time since undergoing his quintuple bypass operation Jan. 14, Letterman plans to host five straight segments of his show next week, CBS insiders said Thursday.

However, it has not been determined whether Letterman is ready to resume his five-show-a-week schedule on a permanent basis.

An evolutionary knuckleball

New fossil analysis shows that some ancestors of humans had wrist structures similar to those found in gorillas and chimpanzees, providing evidence that humans evolved directly from an ancestor that walked around on its knuckles.

This fossil trait was found in two ancient species, including Australopithecus afarensis — known as Lucy. Both walked upright, but they lived at least a million years after the evolutionary split from apes.

Study: Human ancestors may have dragged their knuckles

The Washington Post

When humanity's early ancestors first abandoned tree-swinging for a more promising future on the ground, they didn't just stand up and take a stroll. New research suggests they started it as "knuckle-walkers," scrambling along on all fours like modern-day gorillas and chimpanzees. Scientists say the new evidence should finally resolve a long-running debate about the evolutionary relationship between humans and their two closest relatives among the great apes. At the same time, the research seems certain to sharpen arguments about whether early human ancestors were more or less "ape-like" in their behavior.

Two postdoctoral fellows from George Washington University made the new discovery almost by accident during a visit to the Smithsonian Institution, matching data from two old articles in scientific journals with the cast of a wrist bone from "Lucy," a famous human ancestor fossil 4 million to 3 million years old.

"It was a real 'eureka'!

— Brian G. Richmond, scientist

Richmond said he and Strait, like most paleoanthropologists, knew that genetic and anatomic evidence showed humans and chimpanzees are more closely related to each other than either is to gorillas.

There was no apparent anatomic evidence, however, that any early human ancestor had ever been a knuckle-walker.

What human ancestors lacked, Richmond explained, was a ridge of bone on the second of the three finger joints, a sort of "surfer's bump" to indicate that the living creature used its knuckles for weight-bearing locomotion. Richmond said it suddenly occurred to Richmond that paleoanthropologists had never looked at the wrists of Lucy or other important early human ancestors discovered since the early papers were published.

"We were at the Smithsonian, and we immediately went over to the cast collection," Richmond recalled. "We looked at the radius (forearm bone) of Lucy, and she had this classic knuckle-walking feature."

What they saw was a ridge of bone on the lower forearm that prevented Lucy's wrist, like that of a chimpanzee or gorilla, from rocking backward, but allowed it to lock in an upright position for easy knuckle-walking.

Physicists discover new material that apparently runs in reverse

The Dallas Morning News

MINNEAPOLIS — Physicists have popped through the looking glass and created a new material in which fundamental laws of nature apparently will run in reverse.

Just as Alice in Wonderland found a world where everything was curiouser and curiouser, this stuff behaves in ways that are "reverser and reverser," said Dr. Sheldon Schultz of the University of California, San Diego, in whose lab the research was done.

The material has properties never before reported in natural or artificial substances. These properties could cause microwaves to bounce through the material in completely opposite directions from how they would in ordinary materials. Such behavior would reverse, but not break, a physical law.

The possibility of such a material's existence was predicted more than 30 years ago. The work might one day lead to faster and better cellular phones, which rely on microwave transmissions. Or there may be entirely new types of applications that cannot even be imagined today, scientists said.

"Someone's got to think of something clever to do with this," Schultz said Tuesday in Minneapolis, where he announced the finding at a meeting of the American Physical Society.

The material is made of nothing fancy. It's a palm-sized array of small copper rings hung between a grid of copper rods. It is the arrangement of the rings and rods that creates the bizarre new behavior, which so far has been demonstrated only with microwaves but potentially could work in other electromagnetic wavelengths.

If the stuff plays similar tricks with visible light waves — which hasn't yet been tested and might not be possible — it could grow curiouser yet, said David Smith, the other leader of the San Diego team. For instance, Snell's law, a scientific description of how rays bend through different materials, would run in reverse: A lens made of this material would scatter, rather than focus, light.

Other physicists called the discovery exciting and potentially very important.

The Seattle Times

SEATTLE — Like so many other feats of science, this one started on a whim.

Eric Maloney, a 27-year-old graduate student at the University of Washington, had just finished analyzing how changing wind patterns over the Pacific Ocean might lead to cyclones off the west coast of Mexico.

But then he decided to look a little further east, to see whether the patterns in the Pacific might affect the tempestuous hurricanes of the western Caribbean Sea and the Gulf of Mexico.

His findings could lead to a new tool for predicting hurricanes, some of the most dangerous and costly storms in the United States. It has also earned Maloney an appearance as a lead author in the recent edition of the prestigious journal Science, a rarity for a graduate student.

Maloney's work, published with his adviser, atmospheric sciences professor Dennis Hartmann, shows that the chances of a hurricane increase fourfold under certain conditions in the eastern Pacific. Moreover, such conditions can be predicted two weeks ahead.

"It came to the realization with time that this was pretty important," Maloney, a Chicago native, said last week. The phenomenon at work in Maloney's discovery is called the Madden-Julian Oscillation, a cyclical pattern in which strong easterly winds blow for about 20 days, followed by another 20 days of strong westerly winds.

Studying climate and weather records from 1949 to 1997, Maloney and Hartmann saw that hurricanes in the Gulf and Caribbean rise dramatically as the oscillation's westerly winds reach the eastern Pacific. By watching for those winds ahead of time, as they hit the western Pacific, scientists can get a two-week jump on the storms.

Pennsylvania pledges millions to repair Wright's Fallingwater

Knights Ridder News Service

PHILADELPHIA - Frank Lloyd Wright's Fallingwater, the architectural masterpiece built over a thundering Pennsylvania waterfall and one of the state's premier tourist attractions, will receive $3.5 million from Harrisburg to help prevent a sagging terrace from crashing into the cascading waters below, Gov. Thomas Ridge announced in Pittsburgh.

The state money will help pay for a comprehensive renovation, estimated to cost $8.1 million, of the historic home. Built in 1936 for a wealthy merchant, the retreat in the Appalachian hills marked Wright's embrace of modernism and is considered one of the best examples of modern domestic architecture anywhere.

Ridge told a news conference that he was allocating money from the state's capital budget because "aside from being an architectural jewel, Fallingwater has quickly become an important player in our tourism industry." The same fund has been used to help finance projects ranging from new stadiums to public parks.

Despite Fallingwater's remote wooded-mountainside location in the hamlet of Mill Run, about 40 miles southeast of Pittsburgh, the house and grounds are a mecca for visitors. The house's popularity has only increased since its structural problems became known to the public and the weak lower terrace was buttressed with an ungainly steel brace. More than 145,000 tourists made the pilgrimage to Fallingwater in 1999, an increase of 8 percent over the previous year.

Many visitors come especially to see the renovation work, according to the Western Pennsylvania Conservancy, the preservation group that owns the house. A glass plate installed in the living room floor enables visitors to view a cross section of the weak terrace.

The house, an essay in horizontal planes, is perhaps most famous for those terraces, which appear to float over the frothing waterfall in defiance of the laws of physics. By draping the house between a boulder and the falls, Wright integrated the building into its environment in a way that was completely new. The line between inside and outside is blurred.

Because of its precarious setting, the house has always required constant maintenance. But in 1994, an engineering student preparing a thesis on the building discovered that the terraces were actually unsound. His computer models of Fallingwater revealed that the lower terrace had been built without sufficient steel reinforcement.

In designing Fallingwater, Wright chose to construct the terraces from concrete - he was among the first to use the material in a residential structure. But he seems to have miscalculated the amount of steel needed to reinforce the terraces, those horizontal bands of concrete that appear to float over the water.

Reinforcing concrete after the fact is hard enough, but doing the work on a historic building is even more arduous because its appearance cannot be altered. Inserting the necessary steel into the terrace will also be tricky because crews will perform the work while balanced over a waterfall.

A well of controversy in the Arctic

A bitter environmental battle is taking shape on the frigid Arctic Ocean off the coast of Alaska. An oil giant BP Amoco develops a drilling platform that will siphon from the rich Northstar oil field, environmental activists from Greenpeace contend nearby keep a Vigil. Upon completion of the $686 million project, daily production is expected to peak at about 60,000 barrels a day. BP Amoco officials insist they have taken precautions against spills, but beyond that potential danger, concerned environmentalists also hope to highlight the dependence on fossil fuels they say the Northstar project prolongs.

Wildlife in the way

Despite the safeguards in place, an oil-drilling project in such a volatile setting is susceptible to disaster. Here are some examples of wildlife that could be affected by a spill.

Bowhead whale This endangered species migrates through the waters surrounding the platform and would be most vulnerable to a spill.
Migratory birds More than 135 species of migratory birds assemble during the year. Both the Common Eider and the Black Guillemot, for example, use nearby islands as breeding sites.
Porcupine caribou Alaska's North Slope offers caribou herds one of the remaining spaces large enough for their migratory movement.

Arctic oil project sparks battle between BP Amoco, activists

ON THE ARCTIC OCEAN, Alaska (AP) — Tracked by truckload, BP Amoco is building the newest battleground in the war between Big Oil and environmentalists.

BP is dumping tons of gravel six miles out in the frozen Arctic Ocean to create an island that will be used as a drilling platform for an offshore oil deposit known as Northstar. The $700 million project will also include two 17-mile steel pipelines that will be partially buried under the ocean floor. Just off the five-acre island, a few activists from Greenpeace register their protest. They are so dead-set against Northstar that they have been living in tents and huts for more than a month, enduring day after day in a featureless landscape of snow and ice where wind-chill readings dip to 80 degrees below zero.

They and other environmentalists see the industry as greedily violating the pristine Arctic Ocean and setting the stage for a disastrous spill of crude into the gin-clear water. "The reason we're there is all about the need to switch from fossil fuels to renewable energy," said Dan Ritzman, of Greenpeace. "We intend to keep shining a light on

'I'm confident we have a safe pipeline here.'

'We don't want another Exxon Valdez.'

dend besides, most residents favor expanded oil exploration. Environmentalists contend a subsea pipeline is risky business because coastal waters are shallow and can freeze all the way to the bottom in the winter. They say the ice pack plows into the soft seabed — a process known as gouging — and could easily could chew up a pipeline.

BP says burying the pipe 600 feet deep will keep it out of harm's way. "I'm confident we have a safe pipeline here," said Peter Bryce, a Northstar pipeline engineer. "I will sleep at night."

Northstar as long as we can." Earlier this month, BP had Ritzman and two other Greenpeace members arrested for trespassing when they set foot on the island. The three left the Arctic as a condition of their bail, but three others replaced them. BP says it sees Northstar as a pioneering engineering effort that safely will produce nearly 200 million barrels of oil for an energy-hungry America.

Alaska's pro-growth government is solidly behind the company, and because oil pays most of the state's bills and last year yielded a $1,770-per-person divi-

Also figuring into the Northstar equation are the 6,000 Inupiat Eskimos who live along Alaska's northern edge. For thousands of years, Inupiat hunters have headed out into the Arctic in sealskin boats to pursue bowhead whales.

The whaling communities long have fought offshore oil development, fearing that drilling noise could chase away the bowheads. And then there's the specter of a spill. "There's no confidence that a large oil spill in the Arctic can be cleaned up," said Maggie Ahmaogak, executive director of the Alaska Eskimo Whaling Commission. "We don't want another Exxon Valdez."

Iraq to boost oil exports ahead of OPEC meeting

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — In an apparent attempt to grab the initiative from OPEC, senior Oil Ministry officials said Saturday that Iraq will boost exports by about 700,000 barrels a day in the coming few weeks.

Word of the plan to increase exports from 1.6 million barrels a day to at least 2.3 million barrels a day comes as major oil producers are gathering in Vienna to review output levels.

It is not clear what impact

Iraq's move will have on the Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries decisions Monday.

Ministry officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, did not hide their resentment of what they described as a U.S. policy of "muscle-twisting" to push OPEC to increase output.

Iraq's oil minister reiterated that appeal Saturday, urging the cartel not to be intimidated by Washington.

"U.S. pressures are meaningless to us. We hope OPEC members will not give in to political pressures," Iran's oil minister, Bijan Namdar Zanganeh, told state-run Tehran radio in Vienna.

Oil revenues are almost Iraq's sole source of hard cash. The United Nations closely monitors Iraqi oil exports, but Iraq can pump as much as it wants under an adjustment to U.N. sanctions imposed for its 1990 invasion of Kuwait.

Husband's book on rape stirs debate

Some say it's another violation of his wife

By Noreen S. Ahmed-Ullah
Chicago Tribune

CHICAGO - Jamie Kalven pulled back the curtain in the hospital emergency room to see his wife, lying half-upright on the bed with her eyes nearly swollen shut. Patsy Evans had been savagely beaten and sexually assaulted while training for the Chicago Marathon along a lakefront running path.

"Breathe deeply," he said to her. "Try to stay relaxed. I love you." Then, he says, he stood by her bed, holding her hand: "a man looking on."

He would adopt that quasi-observer-comforter stance over the next 11 years. He was the person she would turn to after endless nightmares, listening to her fears and bolstering her spirits.

After witnessing and experiencing firsthand the fallout of rape on their family, the couple decided to tell their story. And like many rape victims over the past several years, Evans, 54, decided to use her real identity to give the story poignancy.

Kalven's book, which was published last year, is now stirring both acclaim and controversy for its male voice in an arena that for years has been dominated by women. It's also fueling a growing debate about what role, if any, men should have in the anti-sexual violence movement.

"Men need to be able to take a back seat," said Robin Tillotson, director of women's services at Harris YWCA. "There's a role for you, but not where you come in and run it because most of the survivors are women."

Offshoots of the feminist movement, anti-rape advocates came into being in the early 1970s to combat a lack of privacy and sensitivity for victims of sexual violence in hospitals and by police. Years later, the organizations still are operated predominantly by women.

But the issue of men has surfaced again and again.

"It's been an ongoing conversation that we've had at national conferences," said Elizabeth Barnhill, a board member of the National Association of Sexual Assault Coalitions. "One of the things that happens sometimes is a man will get involved, and because there are so few men, he is pushed into a leadership position and it becomes really frustrating to women who have been working in the trenches for so many years."

Kalven's book, "Working With Available Light," is just the latest trigger in the gender debate. Critics say the book is another example of a man usurping a woman's experience. And even though Evans is the freelance photographer in the family and Kalven is the writer, she should have written the book because she's the victim, they say.

On the flip side, supporters of the book say it's about time a man spoke strongly against rape and its ripple effect.

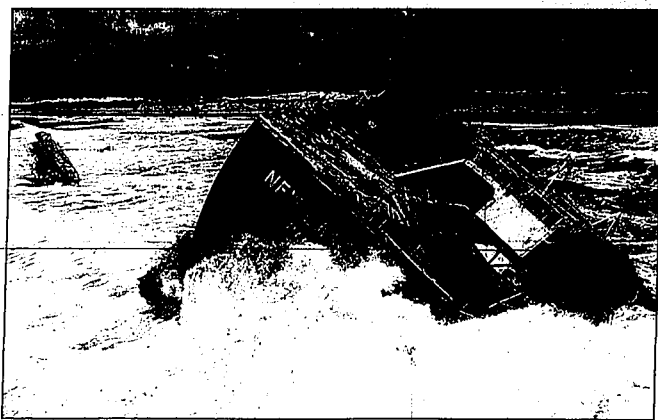

When Rape Victim Advocates, a not-for-profit group that offers social services to victims of sexual violence and raises awareness about rape, started nearly 30 years ago, it was made up of a female doctor and female medical students.

"I think we were in an unfortunate cycle," says Barbara Engel, a policy consultant on women and children's issues who ran rape crisis centers during the late 1970s and 1980s. "We were somewhat suspicious of men, and there were not a lot of men speaking out against the violence. Few men were taking accountability or saying, 'This is something we want to work on.' And so we created organizations that were very women-centric and didn't include men."

When the issue of men is brought up, there's a lot of "suffening of backs and rolling of eyes," says Jerri Lynn Fields, executive director for Rape Victim Advocates.

"All women who are raped have husbands, sons, fathers and boyfriends," said Fields, whose agency has three offices in the city. "When rape comes into their lives, they're outraged by it and want to do something about it. The challenge to the sexual assault movement is: What do we do with them?"

AROUND FOR A WHILE

Surf batters the main section of the New Carissa's stern Friday about 600 feet off the beach near Coos Bay, Ore. Once considered floatable for deep-sea burial, it is now stuck in the sand. A smaller section of the stern, at left, is almost entirely submerged and holds an unknown quantity of residual fuel.

Agency will try to cover ocean floor full of DDT

Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES - The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency plans an unprecedented experiment this summer to cover 180 acres of ocean floor off Palos Verdes Peninsula, south of Los Angeles, a potentially risky effort to deal with the world's largest deposit of the pesticide DDT.

The pilot project, in which tons of sand will be dropped into deep ocean water, is the first tangible step toward resolving a decades-old problem that haunts Southern California's marine environment.

For 25 years, through 1971, chemical manufacturer Monsanto Corp. dumped residue into the Los Angeles County sewer system, allowing 110 tons of DDT to spread across 17 square miles of the ocean floor. The chemicals, which are linked to cancer and reproductive problems, are still contaminating fish consumed by some Southern Californians and killling bald eagle chicks.

The area - the Palos Verdes Shelf - was declared a Superfund environmental cleanup site in 1996, and on Wednesday, the EPA will announce its initial plan for protecting people and wildlife from the underwater contamination.

In addition to the $5 million sand-capping experiment, the EPA is proposing to spend $22 million to enforce a no-fishing zone around the deposit and increase efforts to warn consumers to avoid eating white croaker caught near the area.

During a two-month period, the EPA plans to drop about 50,000 dump-truck loads of sand and silt two miles offshore, on four small sections of ocean floor near sewer outfall pipes.

If the test succeeds, the EPA intends to spend about $100 million more to seal much of the Palos Verdes Shelf - three or four square miles - beginning in 2002.

Never before have environmental officials tried to place a layer, called a "cap," on a hazardous waste deposit in such deep water or on such a sloped ocean bottom. Digging up the deposit would be too risky and expensive. Even if it were safely dredged up, there would be no place to dispose of so much toxic waste.

"The levels of DDT are simply not acceptable for a recreational area that is so highly used and valued," said Michael Montgomery, the EPA's chief of Superfund cleanup in California and Arizona. "Capping it is the lone technology we have that has a high possibility of working and having a great benefit. If we can't cap it, there might not be any-

Toddlers spend days at home after dad's death

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) - Two little girls, ages 2 and 14 months, apparently spent at least three days home alone after their father died in a car crash and police couldn't reach their mother away at sea.

Linda and Arianna Hoell were found by authorities at their apartment early Friday, a day after police reached their mother on the aircraft USS Dwight D. Eisenhower. Police spokesman Larry Hill said they were checked at a hospital and turned over to relatives until their mother arrives in Norfolk, scheduled for late Saturday night.

In the apartment, police found open packages of crackers, pancake mix, macaroni and cheese and milk suggested that Linda, the 2-year-old, had tried to feed herself and her sister. She also had changed Arianna's diapers.

Police initially believed the girls might have been abandoned by someone who was supposed to be caring for them. Now they believe Gary Hoell may have left his daughters alone, perhaps planning to return a short time later, Hill said.

thing we can do." The companies held responsible for the pollution say the cap will be ineffective at best and at worst could stir up the DDT and unleash even more contamination. They argue that the best option is leaving the deposit alone, allowing it to slowly degrade and be buried by natural forces.

Replica of slave ship begins voyage

MYSTIC, Conn. (AP) - More than a century ago, Sengbe Pieh led slaves aboard the Amistad in a revolt in which they overthrew their captors in an effort to return to their homeland.

On Saturday, the launching of a full-size replica of the 129-foot schooner gave Pieh's great-grandson hope for the future and optimism that his ancestor's fight for freedom would soon be heard around the world.

"It's unbelievable that an icon of slavery is being transformed in this millennium into an icon of partnership, faith in each other and of human rights for all of us," said Samuel Pieh, who runs an organization that works to improve relations between Africa and the United States.

Thousands, including American and Sierra Leone dignitaries and descendants of the Amistad captives, cheered as the vessel was lowered into the Mystic River.

The ship was christened with water from Cuba, Long Island and Sierra Leone - where the slaves were sold, captured by American authorities and finally returned home.

Shirley Yema Gbujama, the minister of social welfare, gender and children's affairs in Sierra Leone, and African-American actress Ruby Dee broke the traditional bottle of champagne over the 130-ton ship's bow.

A silver bell tolled for each of the ship's 53 captives.

The six-year, $3.1 million marked the beginning of the unending task of teaching history, forgotten stories and improving race relations, organizers said.

"She represents friendship, which is the translation of the name Amistad, cooperation ... all of the good stuff," said Warren Marr II, who began in 1976 to push for the project.

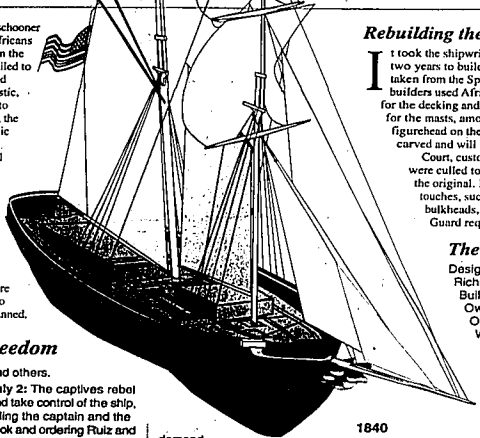

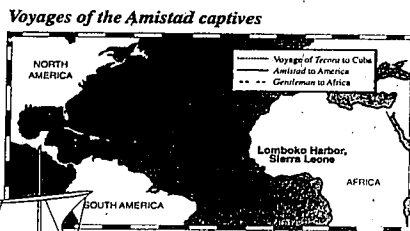

The slaves took control of the original Amistad near Cuba in 1839. Their story was depicted in a 1997 movie by Steven Spielberg.

161 years later, a living symbol of the struggle for freedom sails again

Amistad reborn

A re-created Amistad, the schooner that was carrying 53 Africans to a life of slavery when the captives rebelled and sailed to eventual freedom, will be launched Saturday at Mystic Seaport in Mystic, Conn. With bells tolling 53 times to symbolize the souls of the captives, the ship will be lowered into the Mystic River.

Then, on July 2, the Amistad will set sail from Mystic Seaport to New York Harbor for OpSail 2000. Then the boat will join hundreds of other vessels sailing to New London for OpSail Connecticut, docking there before returning to its home port of New Haven. A floating classroom, the schooner will tour the waters of Connecticut first before docking at other U.S. ports. Trips to Cuba and Sierra Leone are being planned.

Rebuilding the vessel

It took the shipwrights at Mystic Seaport nearly two years to build the replica, whose name is taken from the Spanish word for friendship. The builders used African teak from Sierra Leone for the decking and Douglas fir from Washington for the masts, among other materials. An eagle figurehead on the bow of the boat was hand-carved and will be covered with gold leaf.

Court, customhouse and shipping records were culled to create a schooner similar to the original. But the vessel has modern touches, such as engines and watertight bulkheads, to meet present-day Coast Guard requirements.

The new ship

Designed by Tri-Coastal Marine of Richmond, Calif.
Built by 125 people.
Owned by Amistad America Inc.
Overall length: 129 feet.
Weight: 138 tons.
Masts: Will be installed in April.

From captivity to freedom

January: Sengbe Pieh, later known as "Cinque," a Mende, is seized and sold into slavery in the interior of western Africa.

April: The slave brig Tocora carries the Africans across the Atlantic to Cuba, a two-month journey.

June: The Africans arrive in Havana. Sugar planter Jose Ruiz buys 49 of them; another planter, Pedro Montes, buys four children from another slave ship. They board the Amistad, bound for plantations near Puerto Principe, Cuba, on June 28.

July 1: Captain Innes Henshaw and others.

July 2: The captives rebel and take control of the ship, killing the captain and the cook and ordering Ruiz and Montes to sail to Africa. Instead, they wander up the U.S. coast.

Aug. 25: The Amistad anchors off Long Island. A shore party obtains provisions.

Aug. 26: A naval brig surveying the coast seizes the ship and takes the Africans into custody, bringing them to New London, Conn. They are held in a New Haven, Conn., jail.

Aug. 27: Henshaw and Montes demand as property the surviving Africans.

Sept. 4: Black and white Christian abolitionists form the Amistad Committee and hire a defense team to argue on the Africans' behalf that they had been illegally kidnapped and enslaved and had the right to free themselves.

Sept. 8: The Spanish minister in Washington demands that the Africans be returned to Cuba to attend trial.

January: The Africans testify in federal district court. The judge rules that they had been illegally enslaved and orders the U.S. government to return them to Africa. The government appeals, eventually, to the U.S. Supreme Court.

1841

March: The U.S. Supreme Court affirms the Africans' freedom but reverses the order to return them to Africa.

1842

January: They reach Sierra Leone.

May: On a call from the Rev. James W.C. Pennington, 43 people, including five of the Africans from the Amistad, meet in Hartford, Conn., and establish the Union Missionary Society to sponsor missions to Africa. It later becomes the American Missionary Association.

November: After raising money, the 35 surviving Africans sail home, along with several missionaries and teachers, on the ship the Gentleman.

NASA launches satellite to study magnetosphere

VANDENBERG AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) - A $154 million NASA satellite that will study the interplay of the solar wind with Earth's magnetic field successfully rocketed into orbit Saturday afternoon.

A Boeing Delta II rocket carrying the Image satellite lifted off at 12:34 p.m. for a 56-minute ride into its proper orbit. Separation from the launch vehicle took place on schedule and without any report of problems, officials said.

"It's going great," said James Burch, Image's principal investigator at the Southwest Research Institute in San Antonio. "Our orbit is perfect. We've turned on several systems on the spacecraft and we're getting data."

For the next 40 days, the probe will deploy and test its instruments, including four 820-foot wire antennas that will make Image the longest artificial object in space and give it the appearance of a celestial web cutter as it spins on its axis.

Imager for Magnetosphere-to Aural Global Exploration - or Image - is the first satellite dedicated to studying the entire magnetosphere, an invisible field that extends for thousands of miles beyond Earth. The region is where space weather occurs as particles belched from the sun run into the planet's magnetism.

It's becoming increasingly important to understand how the magnetosphere responds to changes in the solar wind as more satellites and people are sent into orbit around the Earth, scientists say.

Pope draws crowds but peace in Holy Land remains elusive

By Mort Rosenblum
The Associated Press

NAZARETH, Israel — Jesus' hometown turned out in mass to cheer John Paul II in the waning hours of his Jubilee pilgrimage, but the pope passed by yet another new quarrel in the ancient Holy Land.

Nazareth, a city of Muslim and Christian Arabs in the Jewish state, symbolizes what has been clear all along: Even for an indefatigable Holy Father respected on all sides, bringing peace to biblical lands is a tall order.

"Baba! Baba!" thousands shouted Saturday as the pope went by, sandwiched in a security convoy. They pressed against metal barriers fencing off a plaza of police. Sharpshooters with long-range binoculars lined the rooftops.

Near the Basilica of the Annunciation, built where the angel Gabriel is believed to have told Mary she would bear the son of God, the pontiff passed the cornerstone of a mosque dedicated to an Islamic hero who fought the Crusaders. Christians are angry about the planned mosque, whose towering minaret would rise high against the basilica's dome.

"The Israelis approved it as freedom of religion, but Christians say they did it to drive a wedge between us and the Muslims," said Joseph Banna, a Christian in a souvenir store he has run across from the site for 50 years.

A few doors down, in her father's memorabilia shop, Reem Mazawi, 21, said she thought the pope's visit would forestall construction of the mosque. "We are starting to feel our power as Christians," she said. "The Muslims only proved that if you just go and stay there and scream, you get what you want. That's not the right message."

Rana Fahoum, a Muslim professor at Hebrew University who came home to watch the pope pass by her father's main street cafe, blamed outside troublemakers for exaggerating the conflict and inventing extremists.

"Muslim terrorism in Nazareth," she said, rolling her eyes at what she considered an absurdity. "Excuse me? Hello."

Around Nazareth, there was dissension even among Catholics. After John Paul left town, a silent vigil in nearby Kana protested that their Wedding Church was ignored. Jesus turned water into wine there — his first miracle, the Bible says.

"This is a political issue," said Elias Zaher, the organizer. "When Pope Paul VI came in 1964, Israeli security said it was not safe for him to enter Kana. We think it is the same thing this time."

On a broader scale, such accusations and disappointments have blunted some enthusiasm for the papal pilgrimage, as reality bumps against great expectations at almost every stop.

Almost every community seemed thrilled with the visit and yet the bases of divisive strife remain unsettled.

After arriving in Israel, John Paul spent his first day in the Palestinian territories, saying Mass on Manger Square in Bethlehem, meeting with Yasser Arafat and then telling refugee children at Dheishah Camp that he understood their suffering.

Although he expressed clear sympathy for Palestinian rights, he made no clear endorsement for an independent state.

The next day, at the Yad Vashem monument to the Holocaust, he said the church was "saddened" but made no explicit apologies for a Holy See that looked the other way as Hitler systematically exterminated 6 million Jews.

"I'm not sure in the long run if this visit will leave an impact," Rana Fahoum said.

"But now, it's wonderful. People talked too much about the millennium and got little. They thought the pope would give what they missed."

Putin primed to accept mandate

Acting president appears headed for victory today

MOSCOW (AP) — Weary of chaos and government corruption, Russians are expected to give Vladimir Putin a victory in presidential elections today, hoping the ex-KGB spy can clean up the country and restore it as a world power without rolling back democratic reforms.

Border guards on the Far Eastern peninsula of Chukotka, across the Bering Strait from Alaska, were among the first to vote when polls opened in the first of Russia's 11 time zones, the TASS-Tass news agency reported.

With a Putin presidency seen as inevitable by most Russians, the question is what he plans for the world's largest nation in land mass. Putin has given few firm commitments beyond saying that restoring strong government is his top goal — a jarring idea in a nation that has endured centuries of dictatorship.

"From the very start Russia was created as a supercentralized state. This is part of its genetic code, traditions and people's mentality," Putin said.

Putin spent Saturday evening at a soccer match. Campaigning was forbidden on election eve, and workers pasted over campaign posters with new advertisements.

Troops also fanned out to polling stations around the country, guarding against possible Chechen terror attacks.

Opinion polls show Putin with about 50 percent of voters backing him, with Communist leader Gennady Zyuganov trailing with about 20 percent. The 10 other candidates are mostly unknown, with only nationalist Vladimir Zhirinovskiy and liberal Grigory Yavlinsky likely to get more than a handful of votes.

The only worry for Putin was whether voter apathy would keep turnout low. That would likely deny him the 50-percent vote he needs to avoid an April 16 runoff against the next-highest vote winner. Such a runoff would probably be against Zyuganov, with Putin virtually guaranteed victory.

The campaign has devoid of Russia's elections: A look at the candidates

The front-runner in Russia's presidential elections Sunday is acting President Vladimir Putin. The former prime minister came to power just as Russia's economic indicators wore on the rise. His critics accuse him of being vague about his strategy and plans to improve the country's 10-year recession.

His supporters praise his tough stance on Chechnya.

suspense because everyone assumes that Putin will win and most of the candidates have stayed home. But while the campaigning has been bland, few have been nostalgic for the character assassination and dirty tricks that normally besmirch Russian elections.

Many Russians hope Putin is going to clear up the corruption and deceit that swamped the final years of former president Boris Yeltsin's administration. He is the most popular leader in recent Russian history, polls show.

Others, mainly liberals and intellectuals, worry that the member of the KGB will bring back the iron controls of the Communist era and crush any dissent.

"Under Putin, a new stage in the introduction of modernized Stalinism has begun. Authoritarianism is growing harsher, society is being militarized," a group of Soviet-era dissidents said in a recent open letter.

Other analysts see Putin as a pragmatist serious about tackling Russia's problems, but lacking clear plans. And while the power of the state is likely to increase, democratic reform has gone too far to be rolled back, they add.

"Nor will Putin seek to turn Russia into a police state. Over the past decade the Russian people have learned to cherish their private property and personal freedoms," said Masha Lipman, a political analyst.

Kosovo village remembers revenge killings

CELINA, Yugoslavia (AP) — Old women placed their hands on the graves, sobbing in anguish and calling out names as they remembered the 82 ethnic Albanians — including 11 children — killed here last year by Yugoslav forces in revenge for NATO's bombing of the country.

The women were among the thousands who gathered in Celina on Saturday, about 30 miles southwest of Kosovo's capital of Pristina, to honor the dead. They say President Slobodan Milosevic's paramilitary forces began streaming in March 25, 1999, lining up the civilians, shooting them outside their homes and then burning many of the corpses.

The Celina killings were never widely reported, as they came only one day after NATO started bombing Yugoslavia, dominated by the Serbia republic. In early April, the rebel Kosovo Liberation Army, which has since disbanded, circulated reports of the killings in Celina.

Selman Zeqiri lost 10 members of his family, including his wife and two of his children. Only his 12-year-old son survived as a witness to the event.

"When we were asking for NATO air attacks we didn't believe, we didn't think that they (Serbs) would attack women and children," he said.

"The children," he repeated quietly, starting off into the distance. "This we didn't know."

Zeqiri, who was working in Germany at the time of the attack, had no ill words for the alliance, seeing the 78-day air campaign as inevitable.

"That was the only solution for us," he said. "Maybe it wouldn't have been this family, but it would have been some other."

An ethnic Albanian boy stands beside the grave of a relative Saturday in Celina, Kosovo. Forces loyal to Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic killed 82 people here last year, including 11 children, to avenge NATO's bombing campaign against his country.

Thousands of ethnic Albanians were killed in the 18-month crackdown carried out by Milosevic's forces to stop attacks by the KLA. Once NATO bombs began to fall, Milosevic's forces intensified their efforts to expel ethnic Albanians from the Serbian province.

The alliance's bombing campaign finally forced Milosevic to withdraw his troops. But in the eight months since NATO-led peacekeepers and a U.N. mission have been in charge of Kosovo, revenge-minded attacks by ethnic Albanians have chased nearly all 200,000 Serbs from the province.

NATO peacekeepers, meanwhile, detained a young ethnic Albanian on charges of killing a Russian peacekeeper.

Syria hopes Clinton brings Israeli change

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — In the end, it seems it was the telephone diplomacy that President Hafez Assad loves so much that nudged the Mideast peace process forward.

"The American effort that was made and the telephone calls between President Assad and the American president have led to the convening of this summit," a Syrian source said of today's meeting in Geneva between Assad and President Clinton.

The two leaders are widely expected to announce a resumption of the Syrian-Israeli peace negotiations, which have been stalled since January.

Syria hopes Clinton will bring him a clear comment from Israel to withdraw from the Golan Heights, a strategic plateau Israel captured in 1967. Israel has not ruled out withdrawing from the Golan, but wants to know what it would get in return.

The Syrian source, speaking on condition he not be identified, said Clinton clearly has something important to convey to Assad. Assad's presence in Geneva "represents the highest level of seriousness in dealing with the peace process," the source said.

White House officials have not discussed what Clinton plans to talk about, and some have tried to lower expectations for what the meeting will produce.

Assad has met three times with Clinton: in Geneva and in Damascus in 1994 and briefly at the funeral of Jordan's King Hussein in February 1999.

But he has never attended any of the Syrian-Israeli negotiating sessions that have been proceeding in fits and starts since the process began in 1991.

In the latest round, which came after a hiatus of almost four years, Syria did raise the rank of its representation at the talks. Foreign Minister Farouk al-Sharaif attended the Syrian team instead of Syria's ambassador to Washington, Walid Moullem.

Israel, which sent Prime Minister Ehud Barak to some of the sessions, kept pushing for Assad to attend. But Syrians argue it would be a mistake for the two leaders to bargain directly.

"The most powerful person in Syria should negotiate with the most powerful person in Israel," said George Jabbour, an adviser to Assad in 1980-89. "If they disagree, then it'll be hard for one of them to back down."

After the suspension of the U.S.-brokered Syrian-Israeli talks, tensions between the two enemies reached their highest level since Barak took office last year.

Rescuers call off search for ship crew members

HAMILTON, Bermuda — Survivors from a cargo ship that sank in the mid-Atlantic told rescuers that an enclosed life raft filled with crewmen was still attached to the vessel's hull when it slid under the water.

"They believe that when the boat went down, (the crew members) went down with it," Capt. Trent Rowlett, a Canadian helicopter navigator, said of the raft. "It obviously went down quick," said Rowlett, who was part of a helicopter crew that hoisted four of 13 survivors to safety in daring rough-water rescues.

Canadian and U.S. military vessels ended their search Friday evening for a dozen missing crew members from the Leader 1, a 776-foot bulk carrier that had 31 people on board when it sank late Thursday in heavy seas 400 miles northeast of Bermuda.

Earlier Friday, 13 sailors from the ship were rescued in a dramatic operation, with Canadian and U.S. aircraft dropping life rafts to survivors bobbing in the sea. Six bodies were recovered from the ship, which sank hours after placing a distress call.

Radio transmissions from the Leader 1 continued until just seconds before it went under Thursday night, suggesting some crew may never have escaped the vessel, said Lt. Cmdr. Glenn Chamberlain.

The ship sank after the Leader 1 placed a distress call saying that a 45-foot steel hull plate had come loose and water was flooding into the hold.

U.S. officials arrive in Libya to assess security for visits

CAIRO, Egypt — Four U.S. State Department officials arrived in Libya on Saturday on what is thought to be the first such visit since diplomatic relations were cut in 1981.

The consular officers have come to assess Libya's general security arrangements with a view to recommending whether to lift a ban on U.S. citizens visiting the country.

Their trip is opposed by some relatives of the victims of the bombing of Pan Am Flight 103, which blew up in 1988 over Lockerbie, Scotland, killing 270 people.

Libya's handling over last year of two suspects indicted in the Lockerbie bombing caused the United Nations to suspend sanctions against the country and has led to a flurry of visits by European business executives seeking trade with the oil-rich state.

Witness: Bin Laden seemed sick during recent meeting

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — Osama bin Laden seemed weak and gaunt at a meeting with President Clinton's visit to Pakistan, a witness said, and a Western intelligence official said.

The alleged terrorist leader is suffering from kidney and liver disease.

"Bin Laden has kidney failure and 'his liver is going,'" the official said, speaking on condition that neither he nor his nation be identified. He said bin Laden's followers were trying to find a kidney dialysis machine for their ailing leader.

Afghanistan's ruling Taliban militia, however, insist bin Laden is fine. "His health is good. There is no problem with his kidney or liver," said Ahmad Ullah, a Taliban spokesman in southern Kandahar, the headquarters of the religious militia.

Bin Laden, a Saudi exile accused by the United States of organizing the deadly 1998 attacks on the U.S. embassies in Kenya and Tanzania, was seen March 17 with 100 followers in a remote mountain valley in Afghanistan's eastern Laghman province, said an Afghan who attended the meeting.

Four men face charges after deaths in S.A. disco

DURBAN, South Africa — Police arrested four men on suspicion that they might be behind a tear gas attack on a nightclub in South Africa that left 12 schoolchildren dead and 150 injured.

The men were detained for questioning, Durban South police area commissioner Raj Ramasaroop said Saturday. He said the investigation was progressing and that more arrests were expected, but declined to give further details.

About 600 children were celebrating the end of the school term at a Durban nightclub Friday afternoon when someone released tear gas into the crowd, sparking a stampede, police said. A brick wall collapsed on top of several children.

Authorities have not released any details about how the children died. Earlier media reports said 13 died in the chaos.

Supermodel Moss enters hospital with kidney trouble

LONDON — Supermodel Kate Moss was hospitalized after collapsing at her home with a kidney infection, her modeling agency said today.

The 26-year-old celebrity has been treated at Princess Grace Hospital in London since Wednesday.

The high-flying celebrity has a reputation for wild partying, but Storm Models Managing Director Sarah Doukas said the illness has nothing to do with alcohol or drugs.

Her condition arose because she had not completed a course of antibiotics prescribed for an earlier kidney complaint, Doukas said.

"Kate is living a very quiet life," Doukas said. "Kate was in a lot of pain and had a high fever. She was in abject misery."

Doukas predicted Moss could be out of the hospital by Monday and back to work. "I don't think it's serious now," Doukas said.

Famed poet's diaries likely to fuel debate

Los Angeles Times

LONDON — The appalling death of American poet Sylvia Plath turned a spotlight on her tumultuous marriage to British poet Ted Hughes that has never dimmed.

In the 37 years since Plath gassed herself in the kitchen of her London flat at the age of 30 — after putting out milk and cookies for the couple's sleeping children — scholars and admirers of two of the 20th century's most famous poets have fought incessantly about who was responsible for her suicide.

It had seemed the grim argument might be put to rest with Hughes' death in 1998 of cancer. That came a few months after Hughes, Britain's poet laureate, published "Birthday Letters," his collection of passionate poems about Plath and their seven-year marriage.

But next month's publication of her uncensored diaries, "The Journals of Sylvia Plath," in Britain and the United States is certain to reignite the debate and intensify the public's fascination with modern poetry's first couple.

"They were Dionysian figures in an Apollonian time," said Peter Forbes, editor of the London-based Poetry Review. "They were larger than life. People love big love stories and, in a strange way, big tragedies. They want to get to the bottom of the mystery, but they never will."

The journals offer a few more clues. Plath published one book of poems before she took her life in 1963. A second, more powerful book, "Ariel," was published after her death, as was her autobiographical novel, "The Bell Jar." Her "Collected Poems," published in 1981, won the Pulitzer Prize, and about a third of her journals, heavily censored by Hughes, appeared in 1982.

She became a martyr to many feminists who saw Hughes as the villain who controlled Plath in life and controlled the poet's legacy after her death. Hughes left Plath for another woman shortly before his wife's suicide, something she had attempted unsuccessfully three years before they met (His second wife also killed herself — and the daughter she had with Hughes.) As the executor of Plath's estate, he was responsible for her posthumous publications.

In the journals, Plath says that the day after she met Hughes in 1956 she wrote the poem "Pursuit," in which she predicted that their relationship would be the end of her: "There is a panther stalks me down: 'One day I'll have my death of him'."

But the journals, excerpted last week in the Guardian newspaper (as well as in the New Yorker), build on "The Bell Jar" to reveal a tormented woman whose moods swung wildly between happiness, self-loathing and despair.

She also vacillates between the conventional role for women of her time and an unconventional, sexually liberated one.

Disappointing to scholars is that the new journals, being published with her children's permission, contain nothing from the tormented and fertile last years of Plath's life.

Christmas morning in March at the Idaho Legislature

A funny thing happened on the way to that tax cut our lawmakers have been talking about.

On Thursday, the Joint Finance Appropriations Committee, the Idaho Legislature's normally conservative budgetary guardians, gave the education lobby the store and everything in it.

How much? A sizzling $873.5 million, up $52.4 million or 6 percent from this year's allocation, and $2.5 million more than Gov. Dirk Kempthorne had asked for.

That budget includes enough cash to provide an average 5.5 percent increase in the state's share of teacher and school personnel salaries.

Almost 6 percent? We're betting not many Magic Valley residents can expect a pay bump of that magnitude this year.

And those who do probably will have to demonstrate they've earned it.

Have the teachers? A careful look at test scores from around south-central Idaho shows many districts lagging behind national - and even state - averages. So how about reserving windfalls for teachers whose students actually show significant improvement in test scores from year to year?

Apart from that, a $52 million increase to $873 million is simply more than the schools should get this year, given other priorities. If you think not, ask some hard-pressed farmers and wage earners if they could use a tax cut this year. And let's be clear: The Legislature is sitting on $40 million of those folks' money.

Should they get all of it back? Maybe not; the state has other commitments. But a lot of it, at least, should be returned to the taxpayers.

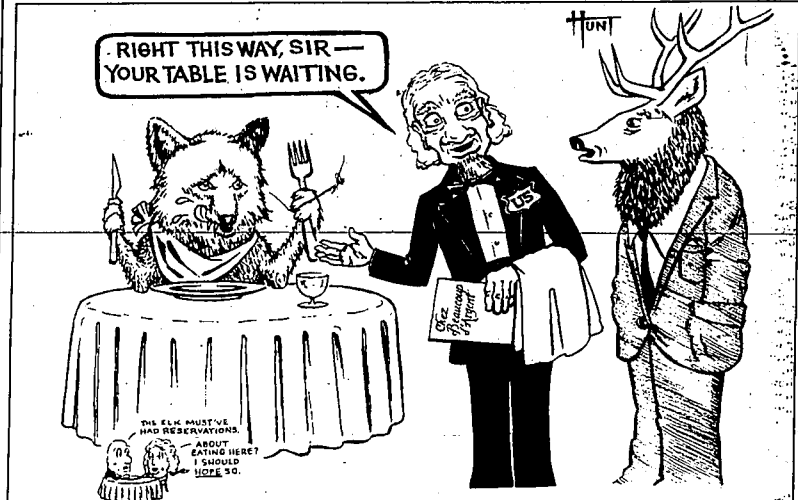

We like state Sen. Hal Bunderson's proposed 2 percent tax credit, starting in 2001. It's more modest than the $26.7 million package approved by the House of Representatives earlier, but it would benefit Idaho families nonetheless. And we're encouraged that House Speaker Bruce Newcomb and others have vowed to stick to their guns.

They understand, as some of the members of JFAC clearly do not, that a tax cut is not an act of discretionary largesse on the part of the Legislature. We elect lawmakers to spend our money wisely, to pay the bills, and to plan prudently for future needs. We don't send them to Boise to pass out candy to the most persistent supplicants, of which the education lobby is one.

Few people believe the $873 million figure will survive a House-Senate conference committee. But before the horse-trading begins, lawmakers should cross the Boise Gearsbelt one hour at a time and spend a day listening to their constituents.

The vast majority of them want real tax relief. Legislators who don't understand that have been in Boise too long this year.

It's the taxpayers' money. The taxpayers should get some of it back.

LEONARD PITTS

I never touch my kids. My students, I mean. No pats on the back for work done well, no hand on the shoulder while explaining a problem and definitely no hugs of consolation or affection. They're good kids and I have a certain fondness for them. And yet...

I never touch my kids. Nobody ever told me no. When I volunteered to teach them, nobody pulled me aside and warned me to keep hands off. It was just something I knew, instinctively. Granted, it feels unnatural, a thing I have to make myself remember. But still I never touch my kids.

If you don't understand why, ask Ronald Heller. A little over a month ago, Heller, a middle school teacher in Germantown, Md., was suspended with pay after six students leveled charges of improper sexual contact against him. They said he slapped a girl on her backside, touched the breast of another, referred to still another as "hot, sexy mama."

Weeks later, with the man's life and reputation in shambles, the kids' story fell apart. They've confessed that they had made it all up to get the teacher in trouble. The reason? They didn't like him. I never touch my kids, because we have arrived at a strange and daunting pass. Having worked so hard to teach children that their bodies belong to them and that they must report any touches that feel wrong, having endeavored to make them savvy on the subject of sexual assault, we now find that we may have done the job too well. Well enough that some of the children we sought to protect with a harmless smile. Stranger danger? We teach them. But perhaps it's not too much to ask that we also teach them - and remind ourselves - that living in fear is not living. That it's quite unlikely they'll ever encounter an adult who means them harm. That while they must never hesitate for a second to report truly improper behavior, they must also understand that reporting such a thing is not a game, not make-believe, not a way of exacting revenge upon a disliked instructor.

Because the obvious result of Ronald Heller's ordeal is that another scoutmaster, karate instructor or soccer coach now resolves to erect a safety zone between him or herself and the children. Some might say we gain from that an added measure of safety. And maybe those people are right.

But consider what we lose. We lose noogies, back slapping and hugs. We lose consolation, commiseration and caring. We lose the ability to commune as human beings do.

There are times I've seen one of my kids hug me and the most natural thing in the world would be a hand on the shoulder. But I let the moment pass, because I never touch my kids. Which is troubling to me. Our kids need protection from many things. Compassion isn't one of them.

Clear differences between Bush and Gore

DAVID S. BRODER

Whatever disappointment some voters may feel at the outcome of the presidential primaries, one thing is a cause for rejoicing. For the first time in any of the elections I have covered, we have two candidates who are ready, willing and able to talk seriously about the education needs of this nation.

Vice President Al Gore and Texas Gov. George W. Bush both know that improving schools is a huge concern for parents, and it is a subject both of them genuinely care about.

It is also a subject on which there are clear and important differences in their approaches. The details are complex, but the essential differences can be easily defined. Gore puts his emphasis on providing substantial amounts of additional federal funds to remedy some of the critical shortages in the education system, notably quality teachers and well-equipped classrooms. Bush puts his emphasis on changing the structure of education, from Washington to local districts, in order to provide greater accountability to the pupils' parents. To amplify Gore's likes to speak of bringing "a truly revolutionary change to America's schools," but the seven-point program he outlined last May largely calls for an expansion of the existing federal programs and improvements in the current school system.

He would encourage more parental involvement in the schools, more character training, stricter discipline and stronger safety measures. He would provide incentives for creating new, small high schools or breaking up mega-schools into smaller units. He would require states to identify "failing schools" and, if remedial efforts don't work, to shut them down and start over with new staff. He would encourage public school choice - but not vouchers for private schools. And he would use computers to facilitate individualized instruction.

All of this, his campaign estimates, would cost $115 billion over 10 years - drawn from projected budget surpluses. Bush would spend that over the next two years, outlined education proposals that contemplate significant changes at every level of the current system. For example, he would shift control of the Head Start program from the Department of Health and Human Services to the Department of Education and require it to emphasize reading readiness and preparation for school. Bush would require that every school receiving Title I funds for help to disadvantaged students - the single largest federal-aid program - test those students on basic academic skills every year. Schools where they are not improving would be given three years to remedy the problem. If the problem persisted, the Title I funds - about $1,500 per pupil per year - would be given to their parents for tutoring or for transfer to another school, public or private.

Bush would fold the dozens of existing federal aid programs into five broad block grants to the states, giving them wide discretion on the use of that money. At the same time, he would promulgate national standards for education achievement at various grade levels and require states - through tests they devised themselves - to measure and report to parents each school's progress or lack of progress in meeting those standards. Washington would provide financial rewards for states that do well but impose penalties on those which lag. Parents would be encouraged to shift children out of failing schools into private schools or - if the state agrees - to charter schools. To reduce state choice, Bush would have the federal government provide loan guarantees for the construction and start-up costs of new charter schools. He would expand education savings accounts to allow tax-sheltered contributions for costs, not just of college, but of tutoring or private school tuition in the elementary and secondary grades. Like Gore, he would have the federal government increase its school safety programs and encourage a more rigorous testing of every-day curriculum. Bush does not propose putting significant new federal money into the pot. Those who think the main problem is that schools are underfunded clearly would prefer Gore's approach. Those who think the big problem is a shortage of competition and accountability should look to Bush.

Those who think we need both results and rigorous measurement of results might wish these guys were discussing the issue, rather than running against each other.

110 minutes of my life, wasted

Someone owes me an apology. Well I guess it's been two years since I waited in traffic for five minutes due to the filming of "Breakfast of Champions," I rented the movie last night. DAVE WOODMANSEB, Centerville, Utah

Backyard paleontology

After reading your remarkable front-page article in the March 16 issue regarding the discovery of a few minuscule "foofbones" in a pile of "muddy rubbish," I felt compelled to go dig around in my own garden and see what might turn up. I am excited to report the following discovery: I have uncovered indisputable evidence supporting the theory that humans evolved from a tiny species of ancient primate. I was stunned to discover four small artifacts in my garden brush pile that cannot be explained away as mere pebbles of grit, but simply stand as the fossilized bones of yet another of our growing family of ancient ancestors. Despite the fact that all I was able to locate were several small particles, I've been able to determine the following:

- The creature's exact appearance including its physical size, shape, weight and shoe size. I was also able to determine that the adorable little animal's body was covered by a luxurious coat of fine fur, which proves that it once lived in a rain forest. And looked like a Furby.
- All the creature's eating habits, including the fact that it seemed to enjoy eating small crustaceans while hanging from its tail.
- The particles were examined carefully and, through radiometric dating, were determined to be 500 bazillion years old (give or take 300 trillion years).
- The gender of the animal (male), which was obvious from the extrapole of all four pieces of data available.
- The coin flip determined it beyond a reasonable doubt.
- One bone particle is a foot bone, one is a skull fragment, and there are two pieces that are either teeth, vertebrae or kneecaps. But I'm still sure they're all from the same animal. My brother-in-law is sending me a part from Oregon that seems to fit in there somewhere, too.

I am confident that this discovery will prove once and for all that evolution is the only and absolute truth. TODD SCHWARZ, Twin Falls

Peace doesn't pay

On the contrary, Mr. Holden, our crime policies have proven quite productive. These ongoing practices have virtually guaranteed that they will continue to get the petty politician re-elected, the legal professional higher fees, the young MBA that can't get a job in the corporate structure hired as an overpaid 10-cent bureaucrat and more. And these policies will continue to provide multimillion dollar government contracts and pay-offs and kickbacks for those who build jails, prisons, government offices, and provide all associated government and private services.

Today, there is little interest in solving our country's significant problems - for the benefit of the people - because a problem once solved will jeopardize all those juicy little government jobs. Thus, every war against this condition or that circumstance is nothing but notification to the taxpayer that the problem will be very expensive and will go on indefinitely.

There isn't no money in "peace and tranquility," so the objective ain't peace and tranquility. Fear, chaos and confusion pay the big bucks. When you figure that out, you'll understand why they do what they do. As for the People's Republic of California, they are the masters in the art of keeping the eyes of the constituent focused on the burning bush while the leaders steal the bacon. OPINION

Pope leads a season of repentance

A physically frail John Paul II is continuing his millennial agenda by leading the Jewish people, making his pilgrimage last week to "the land where God chose to pitch his tent." But perhaps more significant than his visit to Jordan and Israel was his unprecedented public act of repentance March 12. He asked forgiveness for errors of the church over two millennia.

"We forgive and we ask for forgiveness! We cannot (countenance) the betrayals of the Gospel committed by some of our brothers, especially during the second millennium."

The response to the papal confession—which many journalists called an apology—has been generally quite positive. Predictably, some of the lines had been more specific. But the confession was part of a Mass, and liturgical prayers are necessarily general in character. It should be noted, however, that two U.S. bishops have offered quite specific statements of repentance.

In November, Milwaukee

LEO SANDON

Archbishop Remberg G. Weckland acknowledged that centuries of anti-Semitic Catholic teaching had helped make the Holocaust possible. Early this month, Cardinal Roger M. Mahony offered a public apology for his personal failings and those of the archdiocese of Los Angeles.

Weckland's homily was directed to the Jewish community in Milwaukee and beyond. It was given in the context of the 25th anniversary of the Catholic-Jewish Conference, an organization co-sponsored by the Milwaukee Jewish Council for Human Relations and the Catholic Archdiocese of Milwaukee. His apology/confession could hardly have been more explicit.

"I confess that we Catholics contributed to the attitudes that made the Holocaust possible." He asked forgiveness for all "the teaching and preaching of the Catholic churches" that attacked and undermined the dignity of the Jewish people.

Mahony's list of those from whom he seeks forgiveness is comprehensive: organized labor (opposition toward Catholic cemetery workers' right to organize); divorced and remarried Catholics; victims of clergy sex abuse; women; homosexuals; Muslims; and others.

"I would begin," he said, "by expressing my personal apologies to everyone in the archdiocese whom I have offended in my pastoral ministry by a lack of patience and understanding, through my pride and lack of charity, and by my rush to judge others without adequately hearing others' points of view."

It is hard to read these confessions without being moved. The context for all of this self- and communal examination and repentance is the beginning of the third Christian millennium. The year 2000 is a Holy Year of Jubilee. Two of the confessions were offered during (or just before) Lent, the 40-day fast in the church calendar that leads to Easter. The themes of the season are repentance, forgiveness and reconciliation. In a sense, the Christian pilgrimage is a perpetual Lent and Easter. Repentance is a continual reformation or revolution of the mind and heart.

Some churchmen are a bit nervous about all of this. Vatican theologians want to distinguish between sins committed by individuals in the name of the church and the church itself. There have always been sinners in the ranks of the church, but the church itself is holy. How do we recognize the sinfulness of Christians—even Christian leaders—without compromising the holiness of the church? And what about papal infallibility?

Not to worry. Repentance is a recurring theme of John Paul's encyclicals, as is that of the Christ in Mark's Gospel, the first to be written. Smacks of continuity.

Deja vu

It would be well to revisit some history while discussing the plight of the ag truckers and the price of fuel.

Please harken back to the 1970s when Carter was in office and the likes of Teddy Kennedy and Tip O'Neil, following the oil crisis of the early '70s, passed laws that eliminated from oil companies their depletion allowance on corporate taxes. Later, when the price of oil skyrocketed, these same left-wing liberals once again taxed these companies for what they and the media called windfall profits.

What happened? By 1982 our U.S. oil industry had to back domestic exploration due to a lack of funds previously available from the depletion allowance and profits. The industry over the period of 1982-82 cut jobs by a quarter-million workers and the active rig count for drilling for oil and gas in the USA dropped from around 4,500 to around 900.

During the past 25-30 years, our consumption of foreign oil has gone from 46 percent to 56 percent because our oil industry is no longer drilling in the USA and has chosen, because of regulatory constraints, to go overseas for and find hydrocarbons. Even when U.S. companies are successful, it requires a foreign import to get those hydrocarbons into the USA.

It is true that the industry cut-backs were during the Reagan watch, but the harm caused by the liberal Democrats who were in control was already done before Reagan arrived inside the Beltway.

There was a bumper sticker around the oil patch during the '70s that said, "Let Teddy and Tip freeze in the dark," and 30 years later, it is happening and they are crying foul. Well, tough toasty, Mr. Kennedy, it is.

Now the point:

All this talk of breaching the dams is exactly the same play-different act.

Truckers were not converging on Washington when the liberal Democrats gutted the U.S. oil industry with the help of the Environmental Protection Agency, but nonetheless, they are paying the piper now.

The same thing will happen to jobs and lives in Idaho over this dam-breaching idea and, by the time the farmers and truckers are really hurt, it will be their children and grandchildren freezing in the dark. The trucking industry, the farming industry (all Idaho industry) needs to converge on Washington now, and the message is, "Enough is enough."

A quarter of a million people lost their jobs to protect some shellfish in California. How many lives have been destroyed over the spotted owl? Now it is the salmon. The USA needs a reality check.

arent" should be disciplined with control. I didn't see that in anything that I read about the incident. There was no control on either part.

I shop in Twin Falls and I have never been accosted by a skate-boarder. While I agree that these kids need to obey the laws and rules, I really think that we as citizens need to help them solve their problem. Not solve it for them but help them. I think we would find that the kids themselves would be more than happy to make a place for themselves if they had adult cooperation and support.

We like to gripe about how horrible they are, but where do we want them to skate? Off the canyon rim is not an option. The people of the county need to commit to help our young people instead of constantly complaining about them.

It seems that we have taken the old saying, "Children should be seen and not heard," to a corrupted version, "Children should not be seen or heard." I think it is time to see them and hear them.

Tentmaker discovers Idaho

This morning I wish to discuss with you a matter of some delicacy: You're fat. Says so right here, in a brand new report from the National Center for Chronic Disease Prevention and Health Promotion: Sixteen percent of Idahoans are obese, more than any neighboring state except Oregon.

A modest proposal for some new, more accurate state mottos for the 21st century. Alabama: "Celebrating the promise of the 19th century." Alaska: "Land of $1 gas - and $10 bread."

Arizona: "But it's a DRY heat." Arkansas: "Either way, somebody's gonna lose a trailer." California: "Eh, eh, eh!" Colorado: "Don't ski? Don't bother."

Delaware: "Loan-sharking America's future." Florida: "Supper's at 4; bedtime's at 7." Georgia: "They filmed 'Deliverance' here."

Hawaii: "Haka tiki mou sha'mi leeki toru." ("Death to tourists, but leave your cash.") Idaho: "Spuds by the hundred-weight. Griz by the sackful."

Tax measure prolongs session Lawmakers hope to return home

By Michael Jounes Times-News writer

BOISE - With just a few committees still meeting regularly, Idaho lawmakers are wading through a long list of legislation so they can wrap up the 2000 legislative session within the next week to 10 days.

Things are winding down in other areas, but the tax cut bill has become the most debated and divisive issue of the session. After being gutted by Senate leadership, the controversial $40 million tax cut is undergoing amendments in the Senate Local Government and Taxation Committee and will be sent back to the House.

Leadership to take an unusual step, convening a conference committee of three members from each house. The committee will be charged with hashing out the differences in the tax cut measures. If the committee is unsuccessful, the bill will be killed outright.

Here's a roundup what else happened at the Statehouse last week of interest to the Magic Valley:

Candidates begin to file for May's primary ballot Candidates for congressional, judicial and legislative seats and county offices have until the end of this week to file for this May's primary ballot.

Democrats Linda Pall of Moscow and Craig Williams of Boise have registered to run for Idaho's 1st and 2nd congressional district seats, respectively.

Judge Darrel Parry has registered to defend his seat on the Idaho Court of Appeals. A dozen Magic Valley legislators also filed.

Inventive teacher keeps classroom buzzing

By Jennifer Sandmann Times-News writer

DECLO - For some youngsters, it's their third time in their favorite teacher's class at Declo Elementary School. Rebecca Hunsaker, who has taught in Declo for nearly nine years, likes to teach different elementary grades. This year she is teaching fifth grade, and she taught some of this year's students in first and third grades.

What did they think when they found out they would be in her room again this year? "I jumped up and hit the ceiling," said Cameron Searle, 11, a former Hunsaker first-grader. He and his classmates point to a classroom cupboard that they say is FULL of candy. The class is fun, they say. And Mrs. Hunsaker, who is The Times-News' A+ Teacher for March, helps them understand their lessons.

"She really encourages you to read and do math," said Lindsey Burman, 11. During a recent reading lesson, Hunsaker introduced a story

Tools of the trade

By Rebecca Hunsaker

- 1. Have a sense of humor. It keeps teaching fun. 2. Have a system for everything that you do. It keeps you organized, makes for smooth transitions between things in your classroom, and it makes the students more secure in their surroundings. 3. Memory hooks. As much as possible come up with interesting and fun ways for students to remember things that they are taught. 4. Pacing. It is important to pace learning at just the right speed, not too fast and not too slow. 5. Groupings. Students need the opportunity to enjoy many different types of groupings that facilitate learning. We learn when we can claiming to have read it. As the students found their places, one girl opted to squeeze into a cardboard box. Hunsaker circled the room and listened to her students. A class discussion followed.

- 6. Teach in 30 to 35 minute segments. It helps to keep the attention focused. 7. Motivate. Figure out what gets students going and then let them go. 8. Self-monitor. Help kids to monitor their own learning so they are aware of where they need work and when they have the concept. 9. Record keeping and monitoring student progress. Keep accurate records of all student work and use it to help monitor student progress. Do it on a daily basis. 10. Evaluate and Adjust. It is important to carefully go over records on a daily basis so you always know right where each student is so that instruction can be adjusted daily to better facilitate student progress.

Hunsaker diagrammed student responses on the chalkboard as one way to help them understand what they had read.

Her questions for the class progressed in difficulty, and the students were stumped when she asked them to explain the most important thing that happened in the middle of the story. She had them find reading partners again and re-read the story. That happens often.

Officers want drivers to buckle up; campaign to increase use

By John T. Huddy Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - The firetruck's crane towered over Blue Lakes Boulevard on Saturday, a Twin Falls police officer perched on top to get a bird's-eye view of the cars passing beneath him. The officer's job was to tally up how many drivers were wearing their seat belts. Of the 350 cars checked out during the one-hour survey, people in 62 percent of the cars were wearing their seat belts, said Sgt. Matt Hicks of the Twin Falls Police Department. Officers from several law enforcement agencies participated Saturday in the Twin Falls Police Department's campaign to increase seat belt use by actively seeking out drivers not wearing seat belts and writing citations when appropriate. It was unknown just how many citations were issued at gresstime Saturday.

The last seat belt survey was done in December. Out of 382 vehicles surveyed in a 45-minute period, 61 percent of them carried people wearing seat belts. Those numbers are more encouraging than the numbers in a state survey of local drivers last summer that said Twin Falls had only a 39 percent seat belt usage rate.

But Hicks said the average rate is probably higher, most likely in the upper 50s to lower 60s. "We're not under 54 percent," Hicks said.

Local law enforcement agencies have been working on getting more people to wear their seat belts. The patrols and surveys are a way to monitor motorists and crack down on drivers who aren't buckling up.

A federal grant of several thousand dollars has also helped local officers encourage more motorists to put on their seat belts. The money was used to buy equipment and pay an officer overtime to educate the community about the importance of wearing seat belts.

But officers still struggle with seat belt enforcement, Hicks said. In Idaho, officers can't issue seat belt citations only. Police can stop a vehicle if travelers aren't wearing them, but they can't issue citations unless they can cite the driver for something else such as not having insurance.

The Idaho Legislature is reviewing a proposal to make the seat belt law a primary offense.

This would allow officers to cite a driver for not wearing a seat belt without having to cite the driver for something else.

Currently, the fine for not wearing a seat belt is $5. Hicks said though some state legislators oppose the proposal to toughen up seat belt regulations, he's hoping it will eventually get lawmakers' approval.

"They are working on it," Hicks said.

College ponders drug screening

By Jennifer Sandmann Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - A proposed drug and alcohol screening policy at the College of Southern Idaho would not include mandatory pre-employment and random employment testing.

The college's board is scheduled to decide Monday whether to adopt the policy. It would allow CSI to screen an employee or prospective employee for alcohol or drug use in certain circumstances, such as after an accident, or when supervisors have reasonable suspicion of substance abuse. CSI President Jerry Meyerhoeffer has said he has resisted mandatory pre-employment screening and random drug testing. He said he favors a narrower policy, which would give the college the ability to test when needed. CSI could have used such a policy after a problem with an employee developed in the past year, he said.

Edit Szanto, president of the faculty senate, said faculty members understand the reasoning behind the policy.

"I think it's really encouraging that President Meyerhoeffer doesn't want blanket drug testing or alcohol testing," Szanto said.

Testing under reasonable suspicion is less intrusive than mandatory pre-employment screening and random testing, she said.

CSI's drug and alcohol testing policies for student athletes and student employees are very similar to the proposed employee policy.

In other business at Monday's meeting, the board will be asked to approve increased student dorm rates. The price increases range from less than 1 percent to more than 5 percent, depending on whether students rent a single or double room and how many cafeteria meals they buy.

The cost of a double room with a 250-meat plan would rise from $1,850 this year to $1,865 next year, or 8 percent. The cost of a single room with a 100-meat plan would increase from $1,520 this year to $1,600 next year, or 5.3 percent. The board also will review final design recommendations for Fine Arts Center expansion.

HAILEY

Mary Outzs

Mary Outzs, age 99, passed away the evening of March 22, 2000, at Blaine Manor after a courageous battle against old age.
Born July 18, 1900, in Hailey, Mary was the oldest living native of Blaine County. Her parents, Michael and Annie Welch, migrated from Newbury Port, Massachusetts, in the late 1800s. Mary was the youngest of 11 children, and grew up and lived most of her life in Old East Hailey.

She was one of four seniors to graduate from Hailey High School in 1918. Due to the death of her father in a serious mine accident, she supported her mother and herself by working at Idaho's first telephone switchboard while completing her senior year. Mary married Les Outzs in 1920 when they both returned to Hailey, she from Business College in Tacoma and he from 18 months in France during World War I. Mary participated in a variety of civic organizations, but was happiest caring for her family, their home and flower gardens. She happily shared her flowers and her knowledge of local history, and she continued to enjoy historical novels well into her 90s. Mary and Les made their own winter fun with ice skating, dog races down main street, skiing down the hills out Quigley on long skis with only toe straps and flying over the spring crust behind Les' dog team. After Les retired as County Sheriff, they spent a great deal of their time together working with a small group of citizens to create the Blaine County Historical Museum. Les passed away in 1974.

Mary is the sole survivor of her large Irish family. Her pride in her Irish heritage will be kept alive by her granddaughters, who came to join her in celebrating St. Patrick's Day just passed.
Her daughter, Dorothy Ann, and her granddaughters, Jennifer and Hailey, daughters of her late son, Leslie, survive her.

If you wish, remembrances may be sent to the Blaine County Historical Museum, Box 124, Hailey, ID 83333, or to Hospice of the Wood River Valley, Box 4320, Ketchum, ID 83340. Dairy opens to low prices

By Dex Dutton
Times-News correspondent

OKLEY - After nearly nine months of planning and construction, the American Cow Milking Enterprises dairy is up and running.

The ACME dairy, which sits on 90 acres 2 1/2 miles west of Okley, is owned and operated by Oakley farmers Randy Robinson, Trent Robinson, Gary Whitley and Robert Whitley. The four also own and operate the Oakley Potato Packers packing shed.

Opened in February, the facility is now milking 600 cows and should be operating at full capacity with 2,000 cows this summer, producing nearly 140,000 pounds of milk daily. Milking 72 cows simultaneously, 15 to 20 workers will work a three-shift, 24-hour rotation to process the milk.

In addition to bearing the start-up costs of a large dairy operation, the partners must also cope with sagging milk prices.

Co-owner Robert Whitley said area milk producers have had weather record highs and lows in milk prices during the past year. "This past year has seen some of the highest and lowest milk prices for many years," Whitley said.

The current market price of 9.5 cents per pound is a 20-year low. And with 11 to 12 cents per pound being the break-even mark, dairy producers now have a lot in common with other farmers who have been feeling the pinch of low crop prices.

Despite low prices, Whitley said they plan to gradually increase production as scheduled.

"You just have to feed them and keep producing and see what happens," he said. "We have to build up to be able to hit the market. We don't expect a loss the first year but this will probably be a little more than we had expected. We don't have a lot of control over the price. We just need to concentrate on making it work."

Randy Robinson agrees with Robert Whitley, adding that he is also optimistic that area dairy men will see a turnaround in milk prices this year. "It is too late to turn back now, but I feel things will really turn around," he said.

Robinson said he feels the dairy will have a positive impact on Okley area farmers. He said it would give farmers a chance to diversify by giving them opportunities to grow feeder crops and be less dependent on the traditional Magic Valley crops of potatoes, beets and grain.

"I think it helps farmers to not have to be so focused on potatoes," Robinson said. "We wanted to diversify our own operations and we hope the dairy helps us do that. We are able to raise more of the crops like alfalfa and corn items we can market to ourselves."

Missile crashes at Utah testing range

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) - An Air Force cruise missile crashed Thursday in the remote West Desert but caused little damage, according to Hill Air Force Base officials.

Tech. Sgt. Timothy Trager said no one was hurt when the missile crashed at around 11:16 a.m. on Bureau of Land Management property near the Goshute Indian Reservation. He also said there was minimal damage to the land.

The Salt Lake Tribune reported in a copyright story that the 20-foot-long cruise missile was dropped from a B-52 bomber that took off from Barksdale Air Force Base in Louisiana and flew to the Utah Test and Training Range.

The missile was being tracked by two F-15 chase planes and a radar scope when it crashed, said Staff Sgt. Sonja Whittington, spokeswoman for the 385th Fighter Wing at Hill. She did not know its intended target.

"The pilots never lost the missile visually, but why it crashed will be determined by investigators," she said. The missile contained no explosives, and there was no fire when it crashed.

No one was near the crash site in remote Ibapah, about 185 miles west of Salt Lake City on the Utah-Nevada border.

"I want to emphasize that these tests are routed specifically to avoid populated areas," Whittington said. "We're not going to fly a cruise missile over some downtown area."

AMC, AT&T search for next generation's stars

BOISE (AP) - One high school student will win a $500 scholarship as well as a VCR for his or her school for winning a talent search put on by American Movie Classics and AT&T Cable Services.

The contest is open to all high school students in the AT&T Cable Services Boise service area. It is part of AMC's "Behind the Screen" test. AMC says it wants to reward high schoolers who exhibit the potential to become the next generation of film stars.

"What better way is there to share our passion for classic movies than by identifying and rewarding high school students who show the promise of a young Jimmy Stewart or Katharine Hepburn" said Kim Martin with American Movie Classics.

The contest requires a video presentation highlighting a student's talent. The Boise area winner will be announced by the end of April.

For information, see www.amc.tv.com/behindthe screen.

Unemployment insurance fraud nets jail time

CALDWELL (AP) - A fraud investigation conducted by the state's Labor Department recently led to a guilty plea from Donald Lott, who was charged with collecting unemployment insurance benefits.

Lott pleaded guilty to felony charges of misrepresentation to obtain benefits. He was found to have concealed his weekly earnings while receiving benefits for 15 weeks.

Lott was sentenced to two years supervised probation and 90 days jail time in addition to the felony conviction. He was given the option of serving 45 days in the Canyon County Sheriff Inmate Labor Detail in lieu of jail.

Lott also was required to pay $88.50 in court costs and make restitution to the Idaho Department of Labor in the amount of $2,070 for the unemployment benefits he illegally received.

Senate reconsiders medical examiner bill vote Friday

After voting Thursday 21-14 to kill a measure to create a state medical examiner's office, the Senate reconsidered its vote Friday. But the bill's sponsors picked up only one more favorable vote on the second go-round.

The measure would have put a Boise-based medical examiner in charge of training coroners, developing a uniform protocol for conducting death investigations, performing autopsies and providing expert testimony in criminal court cases.

Senate gives approval to a drug dealer registration bill

The Senate gave unanimous approval to a bill making drug dealers with multiple convictions susceptible to the same kind of restrictions put on sex offenders.

Called the "Drug Pusher Registration and Notification and Community Right to Know Act," Senate Bill 1524 would require annual local registration of repeat felony drug offenders. The measure also provides for a central registry to allow public access of the records.

Sandy, the bill's author, said the bill would "send a real message from Idaho that we won't accept this."

The proposal awaits debate by the House Judiciary and Rules Committee.

Fish and Game gets a step closer to fee increase

A Senate vote brought the Idaho Department of Fish and Game one step closer to its long desired hunting and fishing license and fee increase, which would raise about $4.4 million for the department's coffers.

Debate on the Senate floor turned ugly Thursday when a group of amendments to the measure, sponsored by Cameron, were not addressed. Cameron protested by forcing the reading of the full text of two bills and accused Senate leadership of underhandedly killing the amendments.

Cameron also suggested that Senate Majority Leader Jim Risch, R-Boise, opposed the amendments to curry favor with Gov. Dirk Kempthorne who may be considering Risch as a possible lieutenant governor appointee if current Lt. Gov. Butch Otter is successful in his run for Congress.

Bill to help identify theft victims makes it through

A bill to help identify theft victims received their credit standing made it through a Senate committee Wednesday.

The measure offers identify theft victims the option of presenting their credit bureau with a certified copy of a police report outlining probable cause that the person was indeed a victim of fraud. The bureau would then have to remove or decline to remove the credit information in question from the person's credit report within 30 days.

Identify theft is the unlawful use of a person's identifying information, such as credit card, driver's license or Social Security numbers.

Drafted by Reps. Randy Hansen, R-Twin Falls, and Tom Train, R-Moscow, with the help of Bill Von Tagen, the attorney general's office, the bill received unanimous backing from the Senate Judiciary and Rules Committee. The full Senate will consider the bill, which has received the House's unanimous blessing.

Committee kills attempt to amend term limits

A Senate committee Monday killed a constitutional amendment designed to render Idaho's 1994 term limits initiative unconstitutional.

The measure, sponsored by Rep. Jim Kempton, R-Albion, would have explicitly stated that qualifications for elected office can be changed only by constitutional amendment - not by statute.

The Senate State Affairs Committee decided a March 17 court decision, blocking the implementation of term limits for at least one year, rendered Kempton's amendment moot.

JFAC finds money to repair road blocks

BOISE (AP) - Legislative budget writers have come up with $725,400 to help repair and cope with a rock slide that isolated residents of the Cape Horn area along Lake Pend Oreille.

The federal government last week declined to declare a disaster, which means it will not shoulder any of the costs.

Members of the Joint Finance Appropriations Committee had plenty of questions about the costs Friday, but they voted unanimously for an emergency budget appropriation to cover them.

"I think Joint Finance members realize that these things are an act of God," said Sen. Clyde Boatright, R-Rathdrum, who serves on the committee.

The Jan. 30 slide on the shoreline road left residents with only boat access to and from Bayview. Some of their cars were brought out of the area by barge to enable residents to get to work.

Idaho's Bureau of Disaster Services asked for $784,900 to cover costs ranging from debris removal to crisis counseling. Gov. Dirk Kempthorne recommended scaling that back to $729,900, and the committee settled on a slightly lower figure, $725,400, that leaves out the $4,500 crisis counseling piece.

Budget analyst Jason Hancock said JFAC did not feel the state should pay for counseling for people with "cabin fever."

Major Gen. John Kane, chief of Disaster Services, told the committee that in addition to removing rock that slid down, crews also will have to remove more above the road that could create another block.

Studies add another twist of mystery to red tides

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Red tides, the thick blankets of algae that kill marine life and turn coastal areas into scarlet scenes from Exodus, are growing more common and the reason appears to be people.

Two recent studies show that some of the harmful algal blooms have a hunkering for urine like that found in urban storm runoff.

Those findings are making researchers rethink assumptions that the main food source is inorganic nitrogen like that found in nature and in runoff from farms. "We can't dismiss the fact that if you have a lot of urban runoff, you are going to pollute the coastal environment," said William Cochlan, a San Francisco State University researcher who co-authored a study on red tides published in the February edition of Aquatic Microbial Ecology.

Cochlan and Raphael Kudella, an assistant professor of ocean sciences at the University of California-Santa Cruz, examined single-celled organisms called dinoflagellates from a 1995 red tide that stretched more than 500 miles along the California coast. That was the biggest red tide seen off California since 1902.

They found that dinoflagellates urea, an organic nitrogen compound found in urine, more readily than inorganic forms of nitrogen such as ammonium and nitrate.

Nitrogen, whether it's organic or inorganic, is food for algae. "If you get grass, you're also going to get weeds. Harmful algae blooms are those weeds," he said.

Some of those "weeds," like the 1995 bloom, had no apparent effect on the environment, other than driving away surfers and swimmers. Other red tides - which aren't always red and have nothing to do with tides - kill fish, birds and marine mammals, like a 1998 bloom in Monterey Bay that killed more than 50 sea lions. They also can make fish and seafood unsafe to eat, although federal monitoring programs are in place to keep tainted food out of the market. Researchers trying to learn how red tides form have overlooked organic nitrogen as a food source, Cochlan and Kudella said. That's a mistake, Kudella said, because urea may represent "as much as 50 percent of the nitrogen taken up in places like Chesapeake Bay."

An examination of aquaculture ponds in Chesapeake Bay showed that dinoflagellates frequently multiplied into harmful algal blooms in water with high levels of urea, but not in water with low levels. That study was published in the December issue of Applied and Environmental Microbiology.

Teacher

Hunsaker is among the roughly 16 percent of Idaho's elementary school teachers who hold master's degrees. Her degree includes an emphasis in reading instruction, and she designed a reading instruction course to help her fellow educators meet new state certification requirements.

She started her assignment this year as the Cassia County School District's language arts curriculum director. Declo Elementary School Principal Kevin Bushman, who takes her reading class at school once a week, said he thinks that indicates the district's trust in her.

Hunsaker is "kind of one of these people you ask to do something, and then you just get out of their way," said Dan Gillett, the school district's curriculum director.

Among her strengths are her expertise in reading instruction and the fact that she has taught at various elementary levels. She knows what students are learning at the various grades and how her lessons fit into the big picture, Bushman said.

"She is taken the time to really dig into the research and find out what's effective," he said.

Hunsaker, a 24-year veteran teacher, tears up when she talks about her students. She says students know which teachers like them and which don't. Her aim is to let students know that each one is special and to help them reach their full potential.

"I tell kids once they graduate from my class that they are Hunsaker Hornets," she said.

She continues rooting for her Hornets as they grow up and play on Declo sports teams. And she'll be there clapping for them when they cross the stage to receive their high school diplomas.

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) - U.S. Sen. Mike Crapo is condemning the Environmental Protection Agency for changing the terms of its relationship with the state in the Coeur d'Alene River basin cleanup.

"In order to salvage any relationship with the state of Idaho and the local community, the EPA must halt any further attempts at unilateral Superfund actions," he said in a scathing letter to the agency on Friday.

"Without a complete reversal of its present course, the EPA clearly risks further alienation by the state and the public - a development that you must already see as detrimental to the success of any cleanup initiative in the basin."

The letter is addressed to Chuck Clarke, EPA's regional chief. It was drafted on the heels of a Friday meeting with state officials.

Officials. Crapo's staff said the Republican lawmaker is very concerned with the EPA's latest decision to split its cleanup plan for heavy metals into two parts.

The agency plans to release its decision on human health risks by December, but the rest of the cleanup plan will be announced next spring because EPA is waiting for additional data to make that decision.

EPA officials portrayed the change as an effort to gain more information and get all parties involved. The EPA agreed early in the process to let Idaho take a lead role on the human health portion of the Remedial Investigation and Feasibility Study of the basin. However, Crapo said the EPA seems to be merely looking to Idaho for technical support.

"Splitting it into two phases renders this opportunity null and void," the senator said. "If the EPA continues to disregard the state of Idaho in such a manner, the EPA can no longer assert its intent to work in partnership with the state or the local community."

Crapo spokesman Lindsay Nothern said EPA's decision blindsided many of Idaho's officials, who have been working toward a settlement with the agency and the Coeur d'Alene Tribe for nearly three months.

Crapo said the action also cripples the state's effort to develop a cleanup plan without a federal Superfund listing.

Ecosystems in Pacific Northwest remain mixed

WASHINGTON (AP) - Several Pacific Northwest ecosystems are in critical condition from sprawl, grazing and carbon dioxide emissions, according to an environmental report to be released Monday.

Not all of the news is bad, according to the report that attempts to document the "state of the Northwest" from California to Alaska. Air quality in many Northwest cities has been improving and the region has more old-growth forests than any other in North America.

The report by Seattle-based Northwest Environment Watch, an environmental research group, updates the original "state of the Northwest" report done in 1994.

The group, in releasing the original report, called the document the first state-of-the-environment report for the entire Northwest, a region the group defines as including Washington state, Oregon, Idaho, western Montana, northern California, southeastern Alaska and British Columbia, Canada.

"The overall prognosis is that we're not very healthy - our environment isn't doing too well," said John Ryan, the report's author. "We need to turn things around quickly."

One of the biggest problems is sprawl, which has doubled its pace from a decade ago, the report found. Washington loses an acre to development every 7.5 minutes, Oregon loses an acre every 17 minutes, and Idaho loses one every 22 minutes, the report said.

The region's population has grown by 2.2 million, or nearly 17 percent, since 1990, and will double in 32 years at that rate, Northwest Environment Watch said.

There are another 1.5 million cars and trucks on the road since 1990 and carbon dioxide emissions are up 13 percent. Grazing was so prevalent that unaltered grassland in the region is extremely rare, the group said.

But the 116-page report points to bright spots. While large ships dump invasive species into estuaries, Washington's Willapa Bay is one of the cleanest and least degraded large estuaries in the lower 48 states, the group found.

Puget Sound and Prince William Sound are still dominated by native species, British Columbia and Idaho have some of the largest rookeries east of North America, and southeast Alaska has the world's most dense concentration of grizzly bears and bald eagles.

Waters of the northeast Pacific Ocean are "relatively clean," although large fishing trawlers, have damaged underwater habitats, the report said.

Census campaign draws fire from opposition

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) - Some citizens don't think it's too neighborly of the federal government to warn of a $100 fine for not filling out census forms that can get a little personal.

The 52-question long forms the U.S. Census Bureau has been sending out to about one in six homes this month require about everything from personal income to the adequacy of the bathrooms in citizens' homes.

The short forms sent to most homes have just seven questions. Mickey Jarvis of the Spokane suburb of Medical Lake bristled after she and her retired husband received the long form.

"They don't need to know how much money we got," Jarvis said. She called the agency's hotline to say she wasn't going to fill out the form completely. An employee warned her of a $100 fine, she said.

"I said, 'This is America. You mean to tell me this is what my husband went to Vietnam for? This sounds like Russia,'" Jarvis said. She filed a complaint with the Washington attorney general's office, which plans to refer the complaint elsewhere. She also called the offices of a state legislator and her congressman, Rep. George Nethercutt.

Hundreds of similar complaints have poured into the offices of Nethercutt and the state's two U.S. senators, Slade Gorton and Patty Murray.

Nethercutt said he even got a complaint from his mother. "I looked at the long form and had some trepidation, too," the Republican said. But he told his mother she needs to fill it out.

The census is mandated by the Constitution and determines federal funding for infrastructure and social service programs, he said. Poorer countries can't afford to miss out on funding opportunities.

"It bothers me, but I'm still going to fill it out," Nethercutt said. Census offices also have been hearing from citizens who don't like long form questions that ask where they lived five years ago and what time they leave for work, among other things.

"Some of the antigovernment groups were putting up fliers and stating that they would rather pay the $100 than to fill out the questionnaire," said Mike Coe, manager of the Lewiston, Idaho, census office.

Protect Your Health and Your Wealth

Find out how you can avoid using property and personal savings to pay for long-term care. A serious illness or injury can jeopardize your good health, but it doesn't have to mean a financial jeopardy too. Very few health insurance policies cover the cost of long-term care, home health care or assisted living.

As a result, people often end up paying for expenses, directly out of their pockets. If you're not prepared for the possibility of needing long-term care, consider these facts.

- $100 billion was spent on nursing home care in 1994.
9% was Medicare's share of more than $100 billion
33% was paid directly out-of-pocket by patients.
76% of Americans don't expect to need long-term care.
43% of people age 65 and older actually will need it.
$40,000 is the average annual cost of nursing home care.
$65,000 is the projected annual nursing home cost in 10 years.

Come to an educational workshop and learn about your options for funding long-term care. There is NO fee for the workshop, and you'll receive a FREE 20-page workbook packed with information that will help you evaluate your need for long term care insurance.

Western lawmakers consider hearings on snowmobile ban

CODY, Wyo. — Idaho, Montana and Wyoming congressmen say they favor holding a field hearing in May to look more closely at a possible ban on snowmobiles in Yellowstone National Park.

Participants in a Friday conference call, which included officials from counties surrounding Yellowstone, also discussed going to court or seeking legislation in Congress to block any ban.

Weeks ago officials announced two parks officials are leaning toward a winter management plan for Yellowstone and Grand Teton national parks that would prohibit snowmobiles and allow only mass-transit snowcoaches.

Rep. Rick Hill, R-Mont., wants to hold the congressional hearing in West Yellowstone to examine how such a decision would affect the park's neighboring communities. Rep. Jeff Bowman, R-Idaho, Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., and Rep. Barbara Cubin, R-Wyo., also are interested in such a hearing.

Idaho town seeks safety, offers free bike helmets

ROBERTS — Eight months after a car hit 10-year-old Anna Adece Rojas while she was riding her bike, the city is planning to give out free helmets to local children.

Businesses and residents are donating money and helmets so every Roberts child from preschool through fourth grade will get a helmet April 28 when the town hosts a bike safety clinic. City Council member Roxann Ames said.

Older children will be able to buy helmets for $5. "Our goal is to get a helmet on every child," Ames said. Throughout the bike-riding season, businesses in Roberts will hand out candy and toys to children who wear their helmets, Ames said.

Rojas was in a coma for five weeks and spent nearly three months in the hospital after the accident.

Mosquito control officials work to prevent disease

NEWKIRK, Wash. — Mosquito control officials in the Northwest are worried that a potentially deadly virus that plagued New York City last summer could return this year.

"We need to watch what is going on the East Coast closely," said John Grendon, of the Washington Department of Health's disease program.

In the Tri-Cities area, officials are establishing "seringe" chicken flocks near the north mosquito breeding areas. Chickens are a favored mosquito target. "The chickens will tell us if the virus is here," Grendon said. "It's an early warning system."

Encephalitis is a potentially deadly disease that swells the brain, causes poor muscle control and flulike symptoms.

Last August, health officials started tracking a string of sicknesses that largely hit older adults in the Tri-Cities area of New York City. Despite a massive mosquito eradication effort in Queens and the Bronx, more than 60 infections and seven deaths were attributed to the disease.

Man store in Coeur d'Alene, one of six in northern Idaho. "There's no way we could have maintained a profit margin."

Earlier this month, Jorgensen learned the insurance would honor the pharmacies' original reimbursement contract. The announcement came before any Group Health customers were turned away from Medicine Man.

Utah city probably will fight speed-trap case

OGDEN, Utah — City officials said they probably will appeal a judge's dismissal of criminal charges against a man who used a sign to warn motorists about a police speed trap.

Last month, 2nd District Judge Michael Gristman threw out charges against Alan Dayton, citing First Amendment free speech guarantees and the fact prosecutors didn't prove motorists were aware of the speed trap when they saw Dayton's warning.

Lawyers for Dayton have threatened a federal lawsuit against the city.

Dayton had been charged with obstruction of justice, disorderly conduct and resisting arrest after he refused commands to put down his sign.

On Tuesday, Draper held a public hearing on two alcohol permits for the church but did not vote. The council generally wants to vote on an issue until two weeks after a public hearing, although members can override the practice.

Draper Mayor Richard Also said the City Council refused to speed up the decision on St. John's wine application because the case marks "a precedent-setting decision on single-event alcohol licenses" for the city of nearly 20,000 people.

Police arrest eighth person in Hispanic robberies

SALT LAKE CITY — Police have arrested an eighth suspect in a recent string of robberies at Hispanic businesses in Salt Lake City.

Armando Rodriguez, 21, was arrested Friday and charged with two counts of aggravated robbery. He also had two outstanding warrants on a handful of misdemeanor charges.

Salt Lake Police Lt. Phil Kirk said officers believe he was one of two men who robbed Montero Imports on March 11. The robbers took cash from the store and four customers.

Since the robberies began, local police, the Utah State Office of Hispanic Affairs and other organizations have tried to educate Hispanic business owners about safer ways to run their businesses.

Governor seeks funds to clean up closed meth labs

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gov. Dirk Kempthorne asked President Clinton to put more federal money to a Drug Enforcement Agency program that helps states clean up dangerous methamphetamine laboratories shut down by local law enforcers.

"Every time a meth lab is shut down, we're left with a toxic time bomb. And the more labs that we put out of business, the more time bombs are left ticking," Kempthorne said Saturday in the Republicans' weekly radio address.

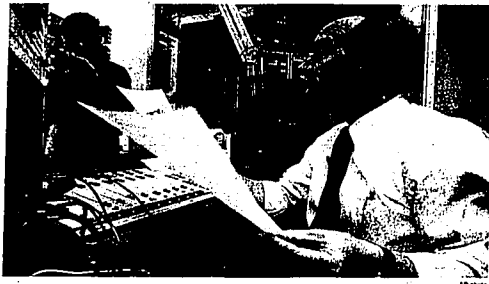

The DEA told state and local agencies this month that cleanup money supposed to last until the end of September has been used up. It can cost as much as $10,000 to dispose of chemicals and equipment left when an illegal lab is closed.

Methamphetamine, also known as meth or speed, "remains one of the most dangerous substances America has ever confronted," White House drug policy director Barry McCaffrey said at a congressional committee hearing Thursday.

DEA spokesman Terry Parham said the agency would try to work with the Department of Justice and Congress to get more money, but the outlook so far is bleak.

"DEA resources, particularly in the area of clandestine lab cleanup, are extremely limited and will be provided to state and local law enforcement agencies on a first come, first served basis," he said.

Idaho Gov. Dirk Kempthorne records a message Friday in Boise asking the administration for money to clean up meth labs in response to President Clinton's weekly national radio address Saturday.

Purer form of heroin may be making inroads into Idaho

LEWISTON (AP) — Reports of a purer form of heroin being distributed in the Lewiston-Clarkston Valley have health and law enforcement officials worried about possible lethal overdoses.

Users unfamiliar with "China White" may overdose because it is potentially more potent than the more prevalent black tar heroin.

"Four sources have told me China White is here," said Phyllis Smith, AIDS coordinator and infectious disease nurse at the Asotin County Health District in Washington. "I am concerned that this will result in more deaths and more overdoses, because users tend to use the same amount and China White is 24 percent heroin, while black tar is 7 percent."

Vertie Brown, the Clarkston, Wash., police chief, said the concerns are valid, although detectives have not found the drug in large quantities yet. "By far, the most prevalent form of heroin has been the black tar," he said. Whisman County Sheriff Steve Tomson, spokesman for the Quad Cities Drug Task Force, said some China White occasionally reaches the Palouse region and Lewiston-Clarkston Valley. But Mexican black tar is much more common, and just as deadly.

Professor and chairman of the Electrical Engineering program at Boise State University Gary Erickson stand outside the school Wednesday. Erickson will be the director of the Edwin T. James Center for Maximum Entropy and Bayesian Methods, which opens this spring.

Fire marshal assures officials that Nampa school is safe

NAMPA (AP) — Fire Marshal Doug Strosnider led a tour of Skyview High School to alleviate concerns that the campus is unsafe because of faulty fire alarms.

Strosnider met with school officials and reporters Friday to respond to references regarding Skyview's safety that surfaced among discussions by state lawmakers.

The Legislature is exploring ways to provide state money to repair or replace aging and dilapidated school buildings.

"I don't feel this is an imminent safety hazard," Strosnider said, pointing to the school's wide corridors and ready access to exits. And he said he would be comfortable having his own children, ages 7 and 10, attend the school.

Skyview's safety concerns came to the attention of legislators after two electricians filed suit last month over alleged fire safety issues in the Nampa School District.

And state Rep. Lee Gagner, R-Idaho Falls, had said the school's fire alarm system could pose an imminent danger to students.

Strosnider said that even though the school is safe, the alarm system has been plagued with problems since the school opened in 1996. Those include situations in which students and teachers in some rooms said they could not hear the alarms during routine fire drills.

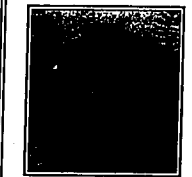

Although the 1994 fire code requires all rooms to be equipped with flashing strobe lights, some rooms did not have them at Friday's demonstration.

And a tour group crowding into a room on the second floor found no strobes and a noticeably quieter alarm. Students returning to that classroom after the fire drill said they sometimes miss the alarms until alerted.

Electricians Ralph Wright and Bruce Clark, meanwhile, contend in their lawsuit they were fired by the district in part for airing concerns over fire alarm systems and wiring that did not meet code.

University will apply complex theories to practical problems

By Adam Rush
The Associated Press

BOISE — A new research center at Boise State University could help scientists enhance pictures taken by the Hubble telescope and increase cancer patients' chances of survival.

The Edwin T. James International Center for Bayesian Methods and Maximum Entropy will help scientists create more accurate images of the stars and the human brain, even when all they have to work with is a blurry image or incomplete information.

Bayesian methods — named for British minister Thomas Bayes, who developed them — and maximum entropy are complex academic theories that allow professors and scientists to manipulate limited information.

And while the theories are commonly used for research, they also can be applied to such practical problems as catching a thief.

"A math professor and a physics professor in England used the theories to help nab a robber who was caught on camera," said Gary Erickson, chairman of Boise State's Electrical Engineering Department.

"The picture was too blurry to read the license plate number, but they knew a feature on the car that was close to the license plate was round, and when they enhanced it the license plate came into focus and they could arrest the robber."

Erickson is director of the center, which is being supported by a $1 million donation from John Burg, a retired California scientist.

Burg earned a Ph.D. from Stanford University in geophysics, attended the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and has been involved in oil seismic exploration. While at MIT he realized the theories he was learning could be applied outside mathematics.

"These theories haven't been applied to a huge number of problems that they can be applied to," Burg said. "The idea of setting up this center is to try and get more people aware of the techniques and the advantages of approaching problems from these theories. These approaches can be used very, very widely."

The theories were used in Burg's field to help in the search for oil.

"They don't actually see the oil," Erickson said. "Oil is lighter than the surrounding material, so they look for domes. There's a lot of work done on images of oil deposits before you can recognize what you're dealing with."

The Bayesian theory was used in Pennsylvania in an effort to create a better flood warning system, and a lab in New York is using it in molecular and structural biology research.

And while people have even applied both Bayesian methods and maximum entropy to the stock market, Erickson said neither approach is likely to make anyone a millionaire.

"Conditions that influence the stock market are random and unpredictable," Erickson said. "There has to be some kind of a pattern for the theories to work."

The center will set up an Internet site and a speakers series and create an award to recognize student contributions in the field of Bayesian theory. It also may publish a newsletter and textbook.

The center also will help pay for annual international conferences on Bayesian methods, and Boise State is starting a masters program for the theories in the fall.

"Students will probably be involved in calculations and image enhancement," Erickson said. "Image enhancement requires computers and fairly large programs. They'll digitize an image, do calculations and get a better picture."

An additional $20,000 in donations also will go toward the center. Funds will be generated by income from donations to the Boise State University Foundation in the center's name.

Camas rail line to shut down

LEWISTON (AP) — The Idaho Public Utilities Commission is closely watching the steps the Camas Prairie RailNet is taking to abandon its 66-mile line that runs between Spalding and Grangeville.

Four employees at the commission have been talking with shippers and elected officials in the towns the line serves, including Grangeville and Craigmont. They are also looking at what effect shifting traffic from the railroad will have on other forms of transportation.

Once the abandonment starts, events will move quickly, said Ron Law, the executive administrator of the Utilities Commission.

Enthusiast combines pipe organs

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — Recognition is not the reason Tim Metcalf comes to his storage room.

Potential earnings do not compel him to work 10- and 12-hour shifts in this lonely place, 20 times a month.

Metcalf loves music ... enjoys creating something that makes him happy.

"I've always had a great fascination for the sonic splendor of the pipe organ," said Metcalf, a 42-year-old Idaho Falls man who works as a medic for the Blackfoot Fire Department. "I think we should pursue those things that bring us joy and bring beauty."

Metcalf is doing that by combining two large pipe organs into one massive instrument. But this storage room, which sits on the second floor of a building he owns, is an unlikely place for such aspirations. Above a three-car garage, it's sparsely furnished and smells strongly of varnish. An antique dresser, worthless because of its new finish, sits in a corner. Against the wall are lawn chairs for resting and planning and watching the Saturn Avenue traffic when the work gets to be too much.

In the middle of the room, atop a reinforced floor, sit two 50-year-old pipe organs, polished now, new in appearance.

One is a reminder of another time.

Metcalf was 14 when he first played it. It was in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Ashton. The Marysville Ward.

That was 28 years ago.

When the church sold the building to the city in 1995, it gave Metcalf the organ. Metcalf's grandmother played it in the church. His aunt and uncle took care of the building, which meant looking after the organ.

Metcalf has spent the last five years working on this organ, which he has named for his aunt and uncle, Ruth and Jim Reynolds. With the help of some friends, he lugged all 219 of its pipes up a steep flight of stairs and through the storage room's glass doors.

The other organ he bought in Utah. It doesn't have the same sentimental value, but it is three times as big.

Now he is marrying the two: the old and the new. When he's finished, Metcalf's organ will weigh around 5,000 pounds, thus the reinforced floor, and be worth an estimated $200,000.

But that's not why he's doing it. Metcalf isn't going to sell the organ to the highest bidder. He just wants to bask in its sounds.

"I have no desire to do anything but play it and enjoy it," Metcalf said. "I'm just building it for me. If an interested person should want to hear it, I would show them, but I'm not planning on turning this into a recital hall."

Metcalf's organ, which won't be completely finished for another five years, has 876 pipes. A normal pipe organ is about half as big.

Metcalf's organ certainly won't be the biggest in eastern Idaho. That honor belongs to an organ

Couple takes trash fight into the streets

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — Cars whizzing by at 70 mph barely rattle the soggy litter carpeting the roadside along Interstate 90.

Inside the cars, most drivers are even less moved by the trash. "It isn't the people who litter that bother me as much as the apathy of Idaho residents," said John Nelson, a Harbor Island resident. "Many people have grown so used to the litter that they don't see it anymore — and that's the problem."

Nelson and his wife, Mary, have launched an assault on litter along northern Idaho roadways near their home. John Nelson grew up in Kellogg, and the couple retired here a few years ago after spending 25 years in Bellevue, Wash., where Nelson ran a mortgage company.

Upon returning, they were shocked the Gem State was so trashed.

Few people are willing to fetch slimy bags, half-full beer bottles and all the nasty leavings of our throwaway society, Mary Nelson said.

"Everybody just goes home, closes their doors and goes to work the next morning," Nelson said.

Every year, roadside trash emerges with the spring thaw. The I-90 corridor tends to be the worst local spot, officials agree.

That's partly because of the number of people traveling the interstate, throwing junk out windows. But it's also a product of poorly tied loads.

And this year some folks say the interstate is worse than usual.

"It's because all that snow piled up. It's a mess," said Dave Tennesson, work restitution officer for Kootenai County's juvenile probation department. "It's really bad this year."

The county's juvenile detention crews don't bright orange vests for litter details. Teens with the WILD - Work In Lieu of Detention - program sometimes pick up as many as 80 bags of trash in a day.

"My screensaver says, 'WILD thing, you make our roads clean,'" said Tennesson, who figures that his crews would easily get 80 bags of trash along I-90 in Kootenai County right now.

It's a sad sight: pop bottles and hamburger wrappers tossed from passing vehicles; sheets of plastic whipped from pickup beds; even a big roll of carpeting that probably wasn't missed until it was too late.

An army of volunteers and work crews annually clean up regional roads. More than 8,000 volunteers scooped up nearly 1.2 million pounds of litter off Idaho roadways in 1999, through the state's Adopt-A-Highway program.

In northern Idaho, roughly 250 groups have adopted 1- or 2-mile sections of state highway through the state. But cleanups occur just twice a year, generally in spring and fall, said Barbara Babic, spokeswoman for the Idaho Transportation Department's North Idaho district.

WSU proposes new rules for Greeks

SPOKANE (AP) — Washington State University officials who have struggled to curb bad behavior on Greek Row have proposed new restrictions requiring fraternities and sororities to have live-in advisers, pass safety inspections and meet tougher grade standards.

Administrators at the Pullman campus spent several months developing the guidelines with input from Greek system advisers, students and faculty.

"The values they (Greek system students) espouse are not always those that are practiced," Al Jamison, vice provost for educational development, said in a phone interview Thursday. "All we're trying to do is to get them back to where they wanted to be in the first place."

The guidelines released this week are subject to campus comment until April 10, and are expected to be implemented fall semester, Jamison said.

The restrictions follow a series of recent Greek Row incidents including fires at two fraternities. In one case, firefighters found a Sigma Nu house member, bound with duct tape, inside the house as a fire burned in another wing. Police concluded it was a case of hazing, while house members characterized it as a prank.

On March 4, bottles were thrown when hundreds of students poured into the streets near the site of a 1998 Greek Row riot. A fight the same night involving about 50 members of two fraternities left one student injured after he was struck on the head with a golf club.

The new guidelines leave unchanged university policies banning hazing and restricting Greek Row alcohol use, Jamison said.

One proposal would require every fraternity to have a live-in house director or adviser.

That's already the case at all 14 WSU sororities. But only eight of 25 fraternities have live-in advisers or directors, said Dan O'Connor, WSU's Greek affairs fraternities coordinator.

The new policies also would require semiannual spot checks of all Greek houses, Jamison said. Inspectors would look for potential fire code violations and ensure houses are not too crowded or dirty, he said.

Also, Greek chapters would be required to have 50 percent of their members maintain grade point-averages of at least 2.0, based on a scale in which 4.0 is perfect.

The average GPA is 2.63 among all WSU fraternity members and 2.89 among sorority members, Jamison said.

CSI rodeo concludes with thrills

By Matt Peterson
The Times-News

TWIN FALLS — Hats were pulled low but hopes remained high Saturday night as some of the region’s top collegiate cowboys and cowgirls took to the dusty floor of the College of Southern Idaho Expo Center for the final go-round of the 24th annual National Intercollegiate Rocky Mountain Regional rodeo.

The well-represented teams from Southern Idaho got off to a fast start as three of the top four finishers in the evening’s first event — bareback riding — wore black and gold vests. Golden Eagle rider Jessy Davis added a 73-point effort on Shady Lady to a 76-point first go-round score to win the event with 149 points.

Teammate Cody DeMers, riding in a hot pink shirt, finished just one point behind. DeMers scored 76 points on Double Feature in his final ride.

“It was wild,” DeMers said. “Great horses (tonight). You can’t ask for any better.”

As for the outrageous fashion statement, DeMers said the shirt used to belong to his father, who also used to ride bareback.

About 10 years ago, however, his dad broke his neck in a ride while wearing the shirt and the unlucky piece of apparel was “retired” to the closet. A few years later, before one of his high school rodeos, DeMers said it was the only clean shirt he had left, so he wore it in the rodeo.

Ever since, it’s been a little lucky.

“I started winning in it, so I kept on wearing it,” DeMers said.

Chuck Wunsch finished third (133) in the bareback for Southern Idaho.

The first Lady Golden Eagle to bring home a first-place finish was Kimi Wright, who tied with Salt Lake’s Darcee Mackay in the goat tying with a total score of 162 seconds.

Riding last and immediately after Mackay, Wright needed a second go-round time of 8.3 seconds to win outright, but

Third time is a walk in the Park Wisconsin, Mich. State march on to Final Four

TWIN FALLS — The third time’s looking charming for Boise golfer Dean Park.

By virtue of six sweet birdies and a redeeming eagle, the Boise golfer holds a six-stroke lead on the rest of the field entering today’s final round of the Canyon Springs Amateur at Canyon Springs Golf Course.

How good a day was it for Park, who’s golfed at Canyon Springs just three times?

He was 3 under after four holes.

What’s more, he was the only golfer in the tourney’s championship flight to make par.

“I just went on a little streak there,” Park said in the clubhouse after his sizzling Sunday round. “When I got in a bad spot, I was able to pull out of it and keep my score low.”

Canyon Springs, Vineyard Greens results — Page C3

Low was indeed the watchword through No. 7, as Park, who has now golfed at Canyon Springs just three times — and only in the Amateur — birdied No. 1 and 2, eagled 3, made par on the fourth and fifth holes and birdied 6 and 7.

The slip-up, which cost Park a little thanks to the eagle on No. 3, came on No. 9, where he settled for bogey. The tide threatened to turn altogether on No. 10 when Park hit out-of-bounds, but he took his drop and putted to make bogey.

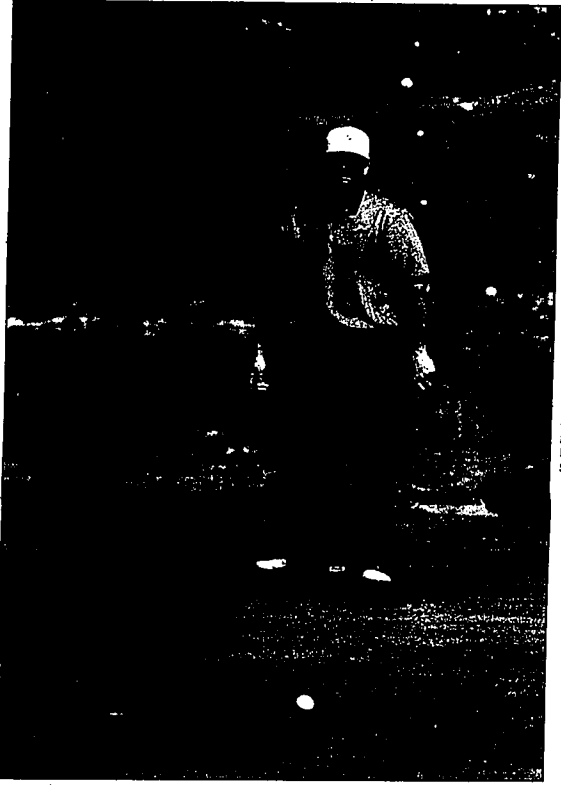

From there, it was smooth sailing for Park, who golfs more frequently at Ridgecrest. He bogeyed 11, but birdied the 14th and 17th holes and made par on the rest.

“Like I told him,” said playing partner Joe May. “I’m rooting for you, but I’m also playing against you. He had a great day.”

Now the question is can the momentum carry over this morning. “We’ll see if I can keep it going,” Park said. “If the wind stays down tomorrow, it will take another low score to win it.”

Played on greens many termed exquisite, the Canyon Springs Amateur, regarded state-wide as the kick-off to the stroke-play tour-

Chukars saddle Eagles with another split

ONTARIO, Ore. — Could be worse, could be better for the College of Southern Idaho baseball team. For the fourth outing in a row, the Golden Eagles settled for another conference doubleheader split.

This time it was Treasure Valley Community College dealing the mixed bag of results, coughing up a 9-7 loss to CSI in the opener before winning 10-0 via their mercy rule in a six-inning nightcap Saturday.

“It seems every time we get a couple runs, we give up a couple runs,” said College of Southern Idaho assistant coach Boomer Walker. “Right now, (the players) are just not taking a lot of pride in what they’re doing.”

In the opener, the sixth-place Golden Eagles (5-7 in the SWAC, 12-13 overall) used four-run rallies in the first and sixth innings to secure the win. Eric Kitchen reached base in the first on a leadoff double, Sidney de Jong singled to score him and Toby Barnett added a three-run homer.

In the sixth inning, Chris Frazier led off with a double, Ray Ruiz, Kitchen and Barnett belted base hits and Tyler Hasbrouck doubled to keep the momentum alive. Frazier finished with his first day as an Eagle, going 4-for-4 at the plate.

The Chukars (9-3, 18-12) awoke in the bottom of the seventh, getting a three-run homer from Levi

Meseberg, but Kitchen came on in relief to record the last out and earn the save — his first as a seldom-used pitcher.

But that was the lone shining moment for CSI on the mound. Starter Josh Gold and middle reliever Andy Gretz were lukewarm in comparison.

The Golden Eagles were never in the second game, with freshman starter Andrew Garretson lasting less than two innings and relievers Nick Parker, Paul Boyd and Joey Clark struggling to contain the damage.

“It just gets everybody frustrated, from the coaches, to other pitchers, to hitters,” Walker said. “They’re expecting to fall now, which isn’t a good sign.”

Steve Chamberlain homered in the first inning, and Meseberg added his second home run of the afternoon to key a six-hit second.

Buhl High School graduate Brad Ross chipped in by going 1-for-4 in the first game, and 2-for-3 with a walk in the second.

Bruins lose first game

By Kevin Hall

TWIN FALLS — Before Saturday, defense wasn’t a big concern for the Twin Falls baseball club.

Through its first five games, the Bruin offensive dynamo had opponents feeling black-and-blue, putting up 95 runs in routs of Burley, Century, Madison and Rigby.

The reality check came against the visiting Nampa High Bulldogs.

Holding a 5-3 lead into the top of the seventh inning with fast-balling closer Tyler Warburton on the mound, Twin Falls split, exploded as the suddenly hot-hitting Bulldogs sent 10 batsmen to the plate, rallying for six runs on five hits to stun their hosts, 9-5, in a non-conference game at Bruin Field.

“We’ve got to finish that game,” said Twin Falls coach Mike Federico. “That’s Tyler’s role, to come in and finish that game. It didn’t work out today.”

Warburton relieved Bruins starter Sean Bernhard, who left after giving up three runs on five hits with a strikeout through six innings.

“Sean did a great job and pitched a great game,” Federico said.

Equally impressive was Nampa lefty Chad Reynolds. After a shaky save the southpaw threw 32 pitches and gave up three runs on two walks and two hits, including a wall-banging triple by Casey Turner. Reynolds took control, relinquishing only two Bruin hits the rest of the way.

“My mechanics were bad early,” he said. “I just corrected it, took a little bit off the ball and just tried to throw to the mitt.”

He praised his teammates for picking up the slack in the seventh.

“They picked me up a lot,” he said. “They stepped it up in the seventh at the plate. It was a great rally.”

Reynolds helped his own cause in the sixth with an RBI double single to center field, pulling the Bulldogs to 5-3.

But needing at least two runs to stay in the game, Nampa (2-4) came alive in the seventh. Kemp Goodwin greeted Warburton with a first-pitch rocket back up the middle. After a walk and another single loaded the sacks, Warburton retired clean-up hitter Steve Schutte on a strikeout for the inning’s first out.

Reynolds stepped in the box and on a 2-1 fastball lashed his second RBI single of the day, scoring Casey Goodwin as the bases remained full.

Dustin Bullock next came up and sent a grounder to second baseman Jonas Brady, who picked up the ball — but instead of going to first three across to shortstop Jeremy Hudson.

Baseball openers inch closer

One big question looms: Can anybody stop the Yanks?

The Associated Press

Derek Jeter dances around the world, almost afraid it might bring a jinx.

Let others call his New York Yankees a dynasty. Let them compare this team with the ones of Ruth, DiMaggio and Mantle. He's too busy trying to achieve greatness to boast. "You don't sit and dwell on how many championships we've won in the past," Jeter said. "We've had a good run. I don't see any reason why it can't continue."

Only 25, the All-Star shortstop has earned three World Series rings. And as the Yankees try to become the first team to win three in a row since the 1927-28 Athletics, the question is: Can these Yankees be stopped?

"I'm sure a lot of people, not just us but teams in the National League, are trying to find ways to beat them," Texas general manager Doug Melvin said.

Ken Griffey Jr. hopes so. Traded from Seattle to his hometown Cincinnati Reds, he's eager to win a title and not the one for beating out Mark McGwire and Sammy Sosa in the Home Run Contest.

In fact, neither Junior, Big Mac nor Slammer Sammy seem excited about the great homer race shaping up. That's OK, because there will be plenty of tote boards keeping track.

"I just want to go out, play ball and win games," Griffey said.

John Rocker would settle for that, too. More likely, he'll hear it from crowds all over the major leagues when he sprints in from the bullpen, especially when he makes his first appearance at Shea Stadium on June 29.

Suspended for two weeks, the Atlanta reliever will miss opening day. Then again, most fans in America will miss it, too.

Baseball 2000 begins Wednesday at the Tokyo Dome when Mike Hampton makes his New York Mets debut, facing the Chicago Cubs. First pitch with the new Bud Selig-sighed balls is at 7:05 p.m. in Japan • that's 3:05 a.m. MST.

Rickey Henderson already is griping about the 7,400-mile trip for the two-game series, set up to promote international baseball. Of course, these wouldn't be the Mets without a little turmoil, would it?

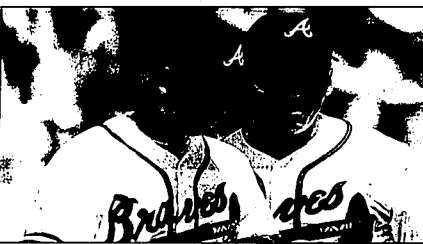

In other places, there's optimism as the opener approaches. Chalk it up to:

• Three new ballpark. Enron Field in Houston replaces the Astrodome, Comerica Park in Detroit takes over for Tiger Stadium and Pacific Bell Park in San Francisco replaces old Candlestick Park.

• Seven new managers. There's Don Baylor (Cubs), Mike Hargrove (Baltimore), Charlie Manuel (Cleveland), Davey Lopes

New York starting pitcher Orlando Hernandez gets his kick as he throws a pitch against the Florida Marlins Friday. Hernandez got the win and figures to be a big factor in New York's success or failure this season.

Atlanta's Andres Galaraga, right, reassures Braves' pitcher Bruce Chen Saturday. Galaraga will be returning to Atlanta's lineup after missing last season due to cancer.

(Milwaukee), Mike Sciosia (Anaheim), Buddy Bell (Colorado) and Phil Garner (Detroit).

• Bunches of stars in new places. Along with Griffey and Hampton, the movers included Juan Gonzalez, Shawn Green, Raul Mondesi, Chuck Finley, John Olerud, Greg Vaughn, Vinny Castilla, Dante Bichette and Darryl Kile.

"I didn't anticipate so many changes," said Colorado general manager Dan O'Dowd, who completely revamped the Rockies' roster.

Plus, there's the Comeback

Club. Kerry Wood, Andres Galaraga, Moises Alou and Kerry Ligtenberg return after missing all of 1999. Jason Kendall also returns after sitting out much of the season with a broken ankle.

Atlanta ace John Smoltz, however, will be out the whole year after tearing an elbow ligament, an injury that happened after the NL champions seemed to be getting over the controversy Rocker created with disparaging remarks about minorities, foreigners and gays.

"This club is used to dealing with adversity," MVP Chipper

Jones said.

Darryl Strawberry also is gone, suspended for the season because of a cocaine problem. His former Yankees teammates, Wade Boggs and Ed Davis, have retired. And 1999 All-Star Tony Fernandez and David Nilsson left to join teams in Japan.

Richie Garcia and Frank Pulli are absent, two of the umpires who lost their jobs last season. No telling whether any of them will ever work again, with ump's having since formed a new union.

And AL president Gene Budig and NL counterpart Len Coleman no longer are in office. Their posts were wiped out and, as a result, all baseballs will bear the signature of commissioner Selig.

There's still talk of realignment for 2001, with Arizona to the AL, Tampa Bay to the NL and Texas to the AL Central as possibilities. But for now, the focus is on the field.

That means Orioles fans counting down the nine his Cal Ripken needs for No. 3,000. And Padres fans cheering as Tony Gwynn, with 3,067 hits, moves up from 10th place on the career list.

AL Cy Young winner Pedro Martinez gave Red Sox rooters a taste of what to expect by taking part in a perfect game at spring training.

"I pitched a perfect game!" Martinez shouted after going three innings in a tuneup against Toronto.

Other things to watch:

• Nice touches at the new park. Enron Field features an uphill slope in center field, Pacific Bell Park has a fence so shallow that long drives to right field might land in San Francisco Bay and Comerica Park has the old home plate from Tiger Stadium.

• Cooperstown will be decked out in red July 23 when Sparky Anderson, Tony Perez and old-time Red Soxers are inducted into the Hall of Fame wearing Cincinnati caps. Longtime Reds announcer Marty Brennaman also goes in, along with Carlton Fisk and Negro leagues star Turkey Stearnes.

• Pete Rose and his bid for reinstatement. Selig seems dead set against it, meaning baseball's career hits leader will not be allowed to take part in championship reunions for his '75 Reds and '80 Phillies.

• Turner Field, where Rose received a prolonged ovation last October during All-Century ceremonies, will hold the All-Star game July 11 right by a quick site to see Rocker running in to pitch that night.

• Political hardball. Several Rangers want to see former team owner George W. Bush win the presidency. "I just think it would be cool to know the dude in the White House," pitcher Darren Oliver said.

Mix-and-match ump's and weird strike zones

COMMENTARY
Jayson Stark

CLEARWATER, Fla. — Some day you'll tell your grandchildren about baseball's good old days, when there used to be such things as a National League and an American League.

Technically, they both still exist, of course. But they're smushing all together now, like a giant sporting bouillabaisse. And the latest example is the newly announced mix-and-match umpiring crews that will combine umpires who formerly worked only for one league.

It seems like a simple concept. But it will change this sport more than many people realize.

We start with the strike zone. In theory, the American League has always had one. It just became so small, it was tough to tell. There has been "a tremendous difference" between AL and NL strike zones, says Phillies ace Curt Schilling. And even though baseball's new goal is to eliminate that difference, it will be confusing for hitters and pitchers alike.

"I study umpires," Schilling says. "I flip a book on umpires ... So I'll be watching a lot more games on TV this year, just to see these guys. I need to know, if I've got (former AL ump) Tim Welke or Tim McClelland coming up next start, what they call a ball and what they call a strike."

Braves pitcher Tom Glavine says it's going to take patience on everybody's part — theirs, too. Probably more on (the umpires') parts than ours, in fact. The bottom line is that we play the games. And sometimes you say things and do things in the heat of action.

Hopefully, the umpires who don't know us will give us the same benefit of the doubt that the guys who know us do.

It's a fine statement. But there will be moments when an NL pitcher throws what always has been a National League strike, and an AL umpire will call it ball four. And the resultant volcanic eruption is guaranteed to make the plays of the week. But most of the changes will be more subtle — so subtle only the players themselves will notice.

"It's going to take a year or so to weed it all out and get back to normal," Schilling says. "But in a meeting, unfortunately, these numbers count."

Stargell dodges death, returns to the Pirates

BRADENTON, Fla. (AP) — Willie Stargell is heavier now than when he played. He walks and talks more slowly. As he watches prospects at the Pittsburgh Pirates' camp, he depends on a golf cart with his No. 8 on the side to transport him from field to field.

Clearly, Stargell is more Grandpops these days than Pops, his nickname when he single-handedly willed the Pirates to an unexpected World Series title as a 39-year-old first baseman with gimp knees in 1979. But for a 60-year-old man who nearly died only a few months ago, Stargell looks very much alive, very much in charge, very much in control.

Asked recently by several concerned ex-teammates how he felt, he said, "I haven't felt this well in a long time."

The sigh of relief from Pirates fans was heard all the way back to Pittsburgh, where he is the most popular living Pirates player — a beloved reminder of the days when the town was called the City of Champions.

To Stargell, living is the operative word. Stargell, who returned to the Pirates in 1997 as a special assistant to general manager Cam Bonifay, has been in deteriorating health for several years because of a kidney disorder that requires dialysis several times a week. Dialysis is required when the organ is failing.

Schilling's doctor, Craig Morgan, said he could beat projections of returning in May by as much as two weeks. The 33-year-old ace had his right shoulder capsule tightened, and he and Morgan agreed he could come back better than ever.

After his bullpen session, Schilling watched Pedro Martinez overpower some of Philadelphia's best hitters before the Phillies came back to beat the Boston Red Sox 10-4.

Martinez struck out six in 4-2-3 innings. He allowed two runs and six hits and walked one. Afterward, he turned up the expectations in the Red Sox clubhouse just a notch.

"I've gotten pretty much everything that you can get," said Martinez, who had one of the best seasons in baseball history last year. "I've been to All-Star games, I've struggled, I've had success. I've had all kinds of things. I need to win. I want to see Boston, what it's like when we win it."

Willie Stargell

'Pops' nearly died a few months ago

ing antibiotics and around-the-clock care. About half of the infected finger was amputated.

The Pirates strictly guarded Stargell's privacy and declined to reveal the nature of his illness, and Stargell still dislikes discussing his health. When his hospitalization finally was reported, the Pirates received sacks of letters and get-well cards from fans.

"I thank them very much for their support," Stargell said.

Now, some of these same fans respectfully approach Stargell at the Pirates City complex for a picture or a scrawled signature. He almost always accommodates them, though he occasionally shoos away someone if he is in the midst of evaluating a player.

Stargell still has not totally regained his strength, and his movements are more stilted than before. But, according to general manager Cam Bonifay, his eye for talent was not affected by his illness.

"Willie Stargell knows baseball," Bonifay said. Now that Stargell has returned to work, Bonifay continues to rely heavily on his ability to assess young talent. This weekend, Stargell will fly to Arizona to watch spring training there.

Obviously, not even a brush with death could get Willie Stargell off the baseball diamond. "There is no greater icon for Pirates baseball and professionalism than Willie Stargell," Pirates owner Kevin McClatchy said.

Lofton, Schilling making quick recoveries

The Associated Press

Kenny Lofton and Curt Schilling might be returning sooner than expected.

Lofton, playing his first game since undergoing shoulder surgery in December, reached base three times and scored twice Saturday in his first action this spring as Cleveland beat Detroit 7-3 in Winter Haven, Fla.

Lofton wasn't expected to be back with the Indians until the All-Star break. But to nearly everyone's surprise, the six-time All-Star center fielder was back in the Indians' lineup, going 1-for-3 with a single, two walks and a strikeout.

"I'm feeling good physically," he said. "But it's still a day-to-day thing. I can't say I'm surprised that I came back this quickly because I've never had any kind of surgery like this before."

He had been limited to about 25 at-bats in minor league games during training camp before bating leadoff as the Indians' designated hitter against the Tigers.

Lofton began a throwing program earlier this month to strengthen the rotator cuff he

He can throw a ball about 150 feet on a line, but he isn't well enough to play center yet. But with the way he's progressing, it appears Lofton may begin the regular season on Cleveland's 25-man roster.

"He's getting close to playing, but we don't want to have a setback," Indians manager Charlie Manuel said.

Schilling continued his rapid comeback from shoulder surgery Dec. 13. He threw for 15 minutes in the bullpen in Clearwater, Fla., then announced he would face hitters for the first time Monday. He's lobbying for a chance to pitch at least an inning in the Phillies' final exhibition game

April 2 in Seattle.

"That's not going to happen," said Phillies manager Terry Francona, who added that Schilling will pitch in some kind of game in Florida "pretty soon after that."

Schilling's doctor, Craig Morgan, said he could beat projections of returning in May by as much as two weeks. The 33-year-old ace had his right shoulder capsule tightened, and he and Morgan agreed he could come back better than ever.

ing former No. 1 Carlos Moya 6-1, 6-4.

"The game I played today was about as good as it gets," Sampras said. "I really don't mind playing anyone if my game is there."

Seeded second, Sampras showed no effects from the back strain that sidelined him briefly earlier this month. He dominated with a serve peaking at 135 mph, never faced a break point and won in just 52 minutes.

Promoters touted the day's schedule as the best the sport offers in terms of talent value, with the top 13 players in the men's rankings and seven of the top 14 women in action.

Winners on the men's side included No. 6 Gustavo Kuerten, No. 7 Thomas Enqvist, No. 8 Marcelo Rios, No. 9 Nicolas Pietrangeli and No. 10 Tim Henman.

Enqvist rallied to beat 1991 champion Jim Courier 6-7 (5), 6-3, 6-4. Rios, who won the tournament in 1998 when it was known as the Lipton Championships, beat 1992 winner Michael Chang 6-4, 6-4.

In women's play, No. 2 seed Lindsay Davenport began the bid for her first Key Biscayne title by sweeping Anne-Kremmer 6-1, 6-2. Davenport beat Martina Hingis to win the Indian Wells final last week.

Parks looks to please Mr. Earnhardt

BRISTOL, Tenn. (AP) — Steve Park's boss, nine-time Bristol champion Dale Earnhardt, is a hard man to please. And Park knows that he and his team haven't done a lot of pleasing the past three seasons.

Park's Chevrolet Monte Carlo has come close to success since jumping to Winston Cup for Earnhardt three seasons ago. But Earnhardt is someone so driven that he plowed through Terry Labonte at this track in August to gain victory instead of settle for second.

Close to success is just not what The Intimidator is about. "Sometimes if you get just a half a smile from him, you know you're doing good," said Park, who won his first Winston Cup pole and will start out front for today's Food City 500. "If you do something wrong, you're out on the farm on a tractor baling hay in the hot sun."

The race Sunday at the .533-mile layout, considered one of the slipperiest in NASCAR, is the circuit's first short track stop.

Park took the "pole" in Earnhardt fashion, smashing Rusty Wallace's year-old qualifying record by more than a tenth of a second.

After Earnhardt, who qualified 11th, spoke with Park about the pole win and urged him to keep it up.

"I was glad to see him hang on," Earnhardt said.

Park said the Winston Cup circuit, especially for a young team like his, can be grueling. Relationships you expect to happen with crew members take time — or don't ever — develop. Just when something clicks, a key person or component goes elsewhere.

All of it under the pulsing, impatient glare of Earnhardt.

"I still felt like a rookie through a lot of last year," said Park, who closed the season by qualifying second at the NAPA 500 in Hampton, Ga., four months ago.

Crew chief Paul Andrews, who has worked with other young drivers like the late Alan Kulwicki and Jeremy Mayfield, sidelined Park down during the offseason and told him to see how close they were to breaking through.

Penske has the pole for CART opener

HOMESTEAD, Fla. — Team Penske had gone more than two years and 49 races since its last pole. Gil de Ferran rectified that in his first start for the once-elfie Champ Car team.

The Brazilian driver earned the seventh pole of his CART career Saturday, ridding a lap of 208.454 mph in qualifying for the season-opening Marlboro Grand Prix.

That was good enough, by just 0.006 seconds, to beat the 208.386 run by champion Juan Montoya.

De Ferran got around the 1.5-mile Homestead-Miami Speedway oval in 25.942 seconds, while Montoya was clocked at 25.948.

That was the second closest pole qualifying result since Paul Tracy, then driving for Penske, led the way on the road course in Elkhart Lake, Wis. CART scoring had to go to the fourth decimal place to determine the winner of the dual between Tracy and the team-mate Emerson Fittipaldi.

Last year, Montoya beat Helio Castro Neves, now de Ferran's teammate, for the pole in Nazareth, Pa., by 0.001.

Seattle's famous sports stadium heads for Kingdome come

SEATTLE (AP)—This morning, demolition experts will do to the Seattle Kingdome what a lot of sports fans have wanted to do for a long time: blow it to pieces.

The leaden-looking domed stadium with all the charm of a parking garage will be brought down with explosives in what will be an excuse for parties around Seattle.

Wrapped with 21.6 miles of detonation cord and drilled with 3,600 holes filled with gelatin dynamite, the Kingdome will take 17.5 seconds to collapse into a mountain of rubble up to 70 feet high.

The demolition will leave a void in the skyline at the edge of downtown Seattle. The gray concrete dome, with its ribbed roof and exposed walkways, has been a city landmark ever since it was completed in 1976 at a cost of $67 million.

"It was exciting because we were going to get baseball again," said Brian Honda, who owns the nearby Triangle Pub.

Live net coverage

<http://www.kingdome.com/preview/kingdome>

Football's Seattle Seahawks made their debut at the Dome in 1976. The Mariners came a year later.

But plenty of fans won't be sorry to see it go. "It was an ugly building," said Honda, 41.

The Kingdome has been called the concrete blister, the mushroom, the fire hydrant and the juicer.

When King County started drawing up plans for the Kingdome in 1968, multipurpose stadiums were all the rage. And domes were considered a necessity in cities where the weather was uncooperative — too muggy, as in Houston; too frigid, as in Minneapolis; or, in Seattle's case, too cool and wet.

But the somber gray ceiling, 250 feet above the diamond, seemed perpetually in need of a good scrubbing. Fans said it was like watching a game inside a parking garage.

The Kingdome also leaked. Its artificial turf was hard on players. In 1994, four acoustical tiles weighing about 20 pounds apiece crashed into the stands hours before a game, and the Kingdome had to close for four months and $70 million worth of repairs.

Moreover, the Kingdome was too small for football and lacked the intimacy of many ballparks. The teams also complained they couldn't turn a profit in the Kingdome because it had few luxury boxes and concession stands and inadequate restrooms.

"I've never cared for it from the first day," Mariners former general manager Woody Woodward said.

Still, the Kingdome had its advantages. Ken Griffey Jr. favored its home-friendly dimensions. And because of the dome's acoustics, the noise inside was incredible, earning Seahawks fans a reputation as the team's 12th player. In 1984, the Seahawks retired the No. 12 jersey in their honor.

The Kingdome stands behind fences and warning signs as work to ready the stadium for demolition continues Friday in Seattle. If all goes according to plan Sunday morning, memories — and a mountain of rubble — are all that will remain of the 24-year-old Kingdome at the southern edge of downtown.

SPORTS IN BRIEF

Metro State gamers NCAA D-II hoop title

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — DeMarcos Anzures scored 32 points and Kane Oakley had 21 as Metro State took command early and beat Kentucky Wesleyan 97-79 Saturday for its first NCAA Division II national championship.

The Roadrunners (33-4) avenged a 75-60 loss to Kentucky Wesleyan in last year's title game. They hit nine of their first 11 shots from the field — including their first five — to take a double-digit lead they never relinquished.

Suns waive West, declare Kidd injured

PHOENIX — The Phoenix Suns waived veteran center Mark West on Saturday and placed guard Jason Kidd on the injured list. Kidd broke his left ankle Wednesday night against Sacramento and will miss the rest of the regular season. His availability for the playoffs is questionable. The Suns coaxed 11-year veteran guard Kevin Johnson out of retirement Thursday, signing him to a $165,000 contract for the remainder of the season.

Padres' Martin slapped with more accusations

PITTSBURGH — San Diego Padres outfielder Al Martin, charged with hitting and threatening an Arizona woman who claims to be his wife, also is accused of being the father of a Kansas woman's two children. In documents filed in Allegheny County Common Pleas Court in December, Shelly Y. Dillard, 29, of Overland Park, Kan., says Martin is the father of her 3-year-old son and 19-month-old daughter.

Punter Royals re-signs with Bucs for three years

TAMPA, Fla. — Free agent punter Mark Royals re-signed with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, agreeing to a $3 million, three-year contract. Royals, who signed Friday, was third in the NFL last season with a club-record 43.1 yard average. He drew interest from Green Bay this winter, but made it clear early that it was his preference to remain with Tampa Bay.

Buffalo forward Peca suspended for two games

NEW YORK — Buffalo Sabres forward Michael Peca was suspended for two games by the NHL on Saturday for elbowing Valeri Bure in the head. The infraction occurred in the second period of Buffalo's 4-2 win over Calgary on Thursday night. Peca, who will forfeit $15,625 in salary, will miss Buffalo's games against Carolina on Monday and Friday.

Winless driver captures Cheez-It 250 race

BRISTOL, Tenn. — Sterling Marlin, winless in Busch Grand National competition for 10 years, avoided a rash of crashes Saturday and won the Cheez-It 250. Marlin, starting 16th, pushed his way to the front and pretty much stayed there, leading 98 of the last 116 laps. It was his second career Busch victory. The other came at Lowe's Motor Speedway in October of 1990.

Jockey Frankie Dettori, right, guides Dubai Millennium to a runaway win in the $6 million Dubai World Cup at the Nad Al Sheba course, in Dubai, United Arab Emirates, Saturday.

Dubai Millennium takes first place in rich namesake race for $3.6M

DUBAI, United Arab Emirates (AP) — Dubai Millennium, a 4-year-old British-bred who had his name changed for the sole purpose of winning the first Dubai World Cup in the millennium, did just that Saturday night.

Owned by Godolphin Racing, Inc., headed by Dubai's ruling family Al Maktoum, Dubai Millennium won the world's richest thoroughbred event by six lengths over Behrens of the United States.

Saudi-owned Public Purse, winner of the San Marcos Handicap at Santa Anita in his previous start, finished third. Puerto Ricans, third in the Santa Anita Handicap three weeks ago, was fourth over the 1.25-mile Nad al Sheba course.

Dubai Millennium, originally named Yareek, was pursued closely in the early stages by Behrens, but he found another gear at the halfway point and surged far ahead almost effortlessly.

"This is the best horse I've seen in terms of looks and action," said Dubai Millennium's owner, Sheikh Mohammed bin Rashid Al Maktoum, the crown prince of Dubai. "He didn't disappoint."

Ridden by Italian jockey Frankie Dettori, Dubai Millennium showed why Sheikh Mohammed was confident of winning the $3.6 million top prize. Before the race, Dubai Millennium had earned only $615,581.

Dettori was certain of victory long before crossing the finish line. "He wanted to go and I thought, 'OK, let's go,'" Dettori said. "It's the best horse I've ever ridden."

"I heard the cheering and thought I'd take a look. I almost broke my neck looking back."

Dubai Millennium was made the 4-7 favorite by British bookmaker Ladbrokes. Betting is forbidden in Dubai because of its Islamic laws. Wagering was permitted in other countries, including the United States, where bets could be placed in 35 states.

Dubai Millennium won six of his first seven starts on the grass in England and France, including the Queen Elizabeth II at Ascot. He then won his only start this year in the Maktoum Challenge at Nad al Sheba.

He is trained by Saeed bin Suroor of the United Arab Emirates, who won the British trainer's championships in 1996, 1998 and 1999.

Godolphin also won the race last year with Almutawakel. Behrens, trained by H. James Bond, had won his first four starts and lost his next four, before winning the Gulfstream Park Handicap Feb. 26. He finished fifth in the Dubai World Cup in 1998.

Ridden by Jorge Chavez, Behrens, a 6-year-old, earned $1.2 million for finishing second.

Favored American Rahlves captures super-G contest

JACKSON, Wyo. (AP) — One day after storming off the course in anger and frustration, Daron Rahlves was back where he belonged — surrounded by well-wishers in the finish area.

Atoning for a disappointing downhill finish the day before, Rahlves cruised to an easy victory in the men's super-G Saturday in the U.S. Alpine Ski Championships.

Rahlves, 26, of Truckee, Calif., fashioned a nearly perfect run on a technically demanding course to beat Casey Puckett by 65 seconds. Having won back-to-back World Cup downhills in Norway earlier this month for his first career victories on that circuit, Rahlves was the favorite in Friday's downhill but finished a lackluster ninth. The result didn't please him, given his new level of expectations.

"I'm not satisfied with anything but winning now," he said. "I come into these races and I feel like I shouldn't get second place. It's just like World Cup. When I ski my best, it can be the best in the world, and that's what I found out in Norway."

Until this season, Rahlves' racing career had been characterized by unfulfilled promise and a susceptibility to injuries. That seems to be behind him now.

On Saturday, the beaming Rahlves was a picture of contentment after being clocked in 1 minute, 23.95 seconds on the relatively flat but turny course.

Puckett, 27, of Crested Butte,

Colo., finished in 1:24.58, followed by Bode Miller of Franconia, N.H., in 1:24.63, and Jakub Fiala of Breckenridge, Colo., in 1:25.13.

Canadians Chad Mullen and Kevin Wert were fifth and sixth, respectively, in 1:25.28 and 1:25.50. Hometown favorite Geoff Stephenson took seventh in 1:25.71.

Both Chris Puckett of Boulder, Colo., and Darin McBeath of Canada, who finished 1:2 in the downhill, missed gates in the super-G.

"I didn't have a great run," Rahlves said. "But I had a run where I stayed ahead of it and powered it out in some turns. It felt good to come down and ski like that."

"The way this course was set, it's a challenging hill. Top to bottom, it makes you work, and that's what I like. You had to ski well, and you had to ski smart."

Rahlves blamed his downhill result on using the wrong ski.

"I never blame stuff on equipment normally, but this was the problem," he said. "When I came across the finish line and looked at the board, I was shocked. I had skied well and didn't make a mistake. My rep decided to bring out new skis, which I hadn't used since a training run in Wangen when I was really slow. He didn't want to bring out my good skis. He wanted to save them for the World Cup."

"When you lose three-tenths (of a second) at every split, that's a joke. That wasn't me. I can't go from winning World Cup downhills and being ninth in the last World Cup downhill to having a good run here and being ninth at nationals.

"I was so mad I wanted to break something yesterday. I had to get out of here and do some free skiing to clear my head."

He was back on his World Cup skis for Saturday's run.

"I told my rep I didn't want to be coming down and be out of it," he said. "I hate to lose, man."

Puckett, hoping to duplicate his brother's victory of the day before, fell just short.

"This wasn't bad, but I want No. 1," Puckett said. "An event title has eluded me in all the years I've competed in the U.S. nationals. I don't know how many second places I've had, but it's a lot. So in every race here, I'm going for the win."

Puckett won the national combined title in 1995.

"I don't care about the overall title," he said. "I'll take risks to try to win."

Miller, the third racer out of the start house, said receiving no course reports from earlier skiers hurt him, especially on a jump near the bottom that, during pre-race inspection, appeared to be rather tame.

"I made a huge mistake on the bottom," he said. "I just launched off that jump and almost landed on the next gate. I had the wrong line going into the flats, and that's a costly mistake."

The remarkable thing is that pets don't sing well

Oh no! It surely hasn't been a year yet. But I guess it has. I just received notice of this year's Advantage Search for North America's Best Singing Pet. I remember last year's news release, asking family pets who sing in the shower or sing along with the radio to come on down for a tryout. Cats and dogs who were "tail-wanted" — "tuneful tabbies and crooning canines" — were invited to "sing for Pooch-n-I". You could even enter an entire dog or cat choir (assuming you could get anyone to attend the rehearsals), and the contest was perfectly timed to coincide with the beginning of flea season. According to the sponsoring company, dogs and cats frequently "sing the praises of being flea-free" because of Advantage Topical Solution. Tucked inside last year's news release was a photo of the previous year's contest winner — an opera-singing apricot toy poodle named Pumpkin, who traveled from Ontario to New York City to sing a rousing rendition of "Pooch-n-I". I thought I had heard it all. Now, they're going to do it again. This year's news release invites "meow-sical" cats and "howl-monious" hounds to audition at various sites throughout the United States. Then, in September, 10 finalists and their "managers" will be flown to New York City to compete for "wagging rights" — along with some money, a year's supply of Advantage and — no joke — a recording session. (Log onto www.nofies.com if you're interested.) I couldn't resist visiting the web site. There, I found out that the 1997 contest winner was Regal the Beagle, singing Dean Martin's "That's Amore." And last year, first-place honors were fetched (I'm getting good at this) by a blues-singing poodle named Zippy, who performed B. B. King's "The Thrill is Gone." If you're really into these kinds of contests, you can hear the winning pets actually "singing" at the Internet site. Sometimes, human celebrities even get into the act. This year's kick-off contest, held in February in Los Angeles, featured comedienne Elaine Bosler and her dog Wiley. Personally, I've never been around a cat or a dog with much of a singing voice. And, since I can't sing either, my own pets have certainly been at a disadvantage (sorry, that was bad). I suppose voice lessons for Fido, or maybe a singing veterinarian, might help. But I imagine most people have neighbors who would complain about pets that enjoy practicing their scales. Probably you just have to grumble when choosing a musically high-achieving pet, and most of us end up with pets that couldn't carry a tune if we did the begging. A couple of years ago, I read about some greeting card companies that started offering holiday cards for veterinarians — for the pets. There were also cards for pets to send to each other (do doghouses have zip codes?) or to special people. No doubt the next step is the card featuring your pet singing "Thanks for the Memories" or something to her veterinarian. But what if you have one of those pets who persist in singing all of their arias off key? Don't despair. There is still hope. Instead of asking your pet to do the singing, you can fill every- one's life with music from another source. There are now Internet sites that advertise music uniquely produced for your pets. One even boasts of scientifically-engineered CDs with various selections of perfect music for pets who are digesting, bathing, walking, napping and — yes — even mating. Song titles include "Coyote Face," "Chicken Out" and "Choke." I'm assuming that last one is not the one that was scientifically engineered for digestion. Maybe I should have played more music for Chirpy, my first pet. He was a parakeet who was supposed to talk, but I could never even get him to chirp. I hope I'm not the problem. Denise Turner is assistant features editor at The Times-News.

Herein lies the tale of 'parenting at its well-intentioned worst'

A few months ago, I told the story of how two friends of mine had handled an incident of flammable disobedience on the part of their pre-adolescent daughter, calling it an example of "Parenting at its Best." Well, this week, courtesy of a reader somewhere south of International Falls and east of San Francisco (she requested anonymity), I have a story of "Parenting at its Well-Intentioned Worst." The writer was prompted to share this with me by a recent column in which I remarked that a significant number — perhaps the majority — of parents who think they are "mean" or "strict" are deluded. In actuality, they are wrong, which a brief look at their parenting behavior clearly reveals. I'll let my respondent describe one of the mothers in her child's playgroup:

PARENTING John Rosemond

"My friend constantly caters to her 2-year-old daughter's tantrums, begging her to tell her what's wrong. When she's not pleading with the child she continually asks 'Do you want to go to time out?' She may ask this 10 times! Sometimes the child even responds with a tearful 'Yes,' at which point my friend will say, 'Really? You want to miss all the fun with your friends? Why don't you stay here and sit in my lap?'"

"Ironically, this mom loves to philosophize about her parenting techniques and 'tough' discipline strategies. She often proclaims how 'mean' she is and seems to love giving the rest of us an earful of her 'expert' parenting advice. The worst part is my friend often brings this child to adult functions, even all-adult parties. The same tantrums and screaming ensue, of course. No one can stand it, but since this mom is actually a really sweet woman, no one has the heart to confront her. I suppose we're all guilty of not wanting to damage her self-esteem." "Now, I am not a perfect parent either, but I have discovered — as you routinely point out in your column — that following through on consequences immediately in prevention nagsging since the child in question learns quickly to listen the first time you give an instruction. I pray my friend discovers the same thing, before it's too late." The world will certainly be a better place if this mom pulls her head out of the sand of denial and begins living up to her claim to being "mean" and "strict." Remember, folks, being "mean" isn't the same as being harsh or critical. From a child's point of view, a parent is "mean" when the child discovers that the parent means exactly what she says, the first time she says it. And as my contributor points out, a truly mean parent is a far more relaxed parent!

John Rosemond is a family psychologist. Questions of general interest may be sent to him at Affirmative Parenting, 9247 N. Meridian, Indianapolis, IN 46260 and at his Web site: <http://www.rosemond.com/>

'Brockovich' best for mature viewers

The Orange County Registrar • "Erin Brockovich" (R) — Twin Cinema, Century Cinema of Burley, Sun Valley Opera House, Jerome Cinema. Best for: Mature teens to adults. What it's about: This is a based-on-fact story about Erin Brockovich (Julia Roberts), a twice-divorced, out-of-work single mother, who gets in a car accident and hires an attorney to get compensation. Her attorney, Ed Masry (Albert Finney), loses the case but to help out at his law firm. There, she uncovers medical records in a real estate case that point to a major environmental cover-up. The good: Roberts is perfectly cast as the struggling single mother who uses her determination, passion for justice and that powerful message of sacrifice. The not-so-good: Roberts' character is foul-mouthed, immature, and quick-tempered, so there are several humorous, well-written scenes that focus on those areas. The language and revealing dialogue is the reason for maturing and is more funny than offensive because it's part of her character.

And as he causes thunder to strike, oceans to roll and winds to blow, you want to say — hey, relax monster! Just focus on merchandising, and the takeover will go more quickly and smoothly. Which is pretty much what his creators have done. Each video and DVD includes a new Memoro Wizards of the Coast card. And borrowing a page from "Charlie and the Chocolate Factory" (a.k.a. "Willy Wonka and the Chocolate Factory"), five special "Golden Tickets" will be inserted into two randomly selected video packages. The winners, who must be ages 6 to 12, get a trip for two (child plus parent or guardian) to Japan, a meeting with the creator of the Pokémon card game, who will play the game with each winner. That's in addition to a $1,000 shopping spree at the Pokémon Center in Japan and a first-edition starter set of Team Rocket game cards. The game ends July 21. — Source: Dallas Morning News

No lie: The case for candor

The Messanger-Inquirer Honesty. Sincerity. Being a "real straight shooter." Who wouldn't like a reputation like that? For a lot of us, such truthfulness doesn't come naturally. From the time we're old enough to get ourselves in trouble or realize others aren't always pleased by the unvarnished truth, we're tempted to bend the facts, omit information or just outright lie to protect ourselves. Honesty is more than just telling the full truth or facing up to consequences we'd rather avoid, however. It is a basic attitude revealing a lot about our respect for ourselves and others. "When you're honest, you're sincere," writes Barbara A. Lewis in "What Do You Stand For? A Kid's Guide to Building Character." "You have a sense of honor and fairness. You're trustworthy and genuine." In truth Author Barbara Lewis offers several good reasons to always tell the truth: Q Telling the truth lets everyone know what really happened. Q The less chance of misunderstanding, confusion or conflict. Q We usually get into less trouble if we tell the truth in the first place. Q Other people trust us more if we tell the truth. Q You gain a reputation for truthfulness, a nice reputation to have. Q It helps you feel secure and peaceful inside.

Soda won't provide any birth control

DEAR ABBY: I am a Planned Parenthood member with a serious problem. I am writing in the hope that you can help me dispel the myth that Mountain Dew soft drinks prevent pregnancy. I have been working to dispel this myth for about two years — and it seems I'm paddling upstream. When I first realized that many students from fifth grade through college fervently believe that drinking Mountain Dew reduces the sperm count, I prayed that this was a local issue. I now know that this myth has circulated and is believed nationwide. During my years as a volunteer with Planned Parenthood, I have encountered several myths, but none as potentially dangerous or difficult to dispel as the myth associated with this popular soft drink. Young people continue to obtain information largely from their peers — a very unreliable source. You have often reminded your readers about birth-control education presented by Planned Parenthood. Please take this opportunity to issue that reminder again and to alert parents and teens that Mountain Dew, while tasty, does not prevent pregnancy. — MARJORIE SALTZMAN, PORTLAND, ORE.

DEAR MARJORIE: Your circulation that douching with Coca-Cola after sex would prevent pregnancy. That, too, was a myth — as many gullible parents' parents' discovered to their dismay. Let me go on record as stating that Mountain Dew — though a refreshing and enjoyable beverage — is NOT A CONTRACEPTIVE. It may give the drinker a "buzz" because of its sugar and caffeine content, but it will do NOTHING to lower the sperm count. And to allege that it will be incorrect and irresponsible. Young adults with computer access can find reliable information regarding reproductive health issues by visiting www.teenwire.com, a 24-hour, fully confidential Web site sponsored by Planned Parenthood. There they can find answers to questions they may feel uncomfortable asking parents, doctors — or even their peers. It includes a FAQs (frequently asked questions) section and a "YIKES!" page for teens with urgent issues.

Now I have a riddle for you: What do you call young men who drink Mountain Dew because they think it's contraceptive? Answer: (All together now) FATHERS!

DEAR ABBY: In a reply to a recent letter, you mentioned the devastating effects of smoking. In pledge to continue your campaign to discourage young people from starting to smoke. Here's some help: Some 50 years ago, my scoutmaster demonstrated what happens when you blow smoke through a white handkerchief. I'll never forget the ugly brown stain from just one puff. If everyone who comes in contact with young people performed this demonstration, perhaps some of them would think twice before beginning or continuing to smoke. — JOHN F. GARDNER, TULSA, CALIF.

DEAR JOHN: Thanks for the help. I remember seeing a similar demonstration many years ago. It was ages ago, at a young people who had not yet started to smoke, and one look was a convincing deterrent because of the amount of tar that appeared on the handkerchief. It took my imagination to see what smoking does to the bronchial tubes and lungs.

A pickle in your pink lemonade

The potential possibilities of any child are the most intriguing and stimulating in all creation.

—Ray L. Wilbur

Chicken Soup for the Soul

Find the profound in the simple. In this story, a young father ponders life's complexities as he watches a little boy dunk a pickle in a glass of lemonade.

ever seen. His face is covered with food; from underneath, he peers out with a look that can only be described as wonder. Normally, the sight would send chills up my back, but for some reason, it doesn't matter today. Despite my reservations, I place my tray down as my little onlooker keeps constant vigil on my every move.

I start to eat a bite of my club sandwich when suddenly the boy lets out a war whoop that would scare Gen. Custler. Out of courtesy, I smile at the boy's father, pretending not to be disturbed. I begin again with my sandwich, when the child stands up to my chair, promptly plops a pickle into the middle of his glass of pink lemonade and shakes his curly hair wildly.

Such an exhibition might be disgusting to others, but watching a youngster twist the ice in his glass around with a green, slimy pickle affects me in a way I like never before. I stare at the sight of a garnish pecking out from a soft drink, and I feel that somehow a message is hidden in it. Maybe being a financial success or a mathematical wizard isn't what life is all about. It's the little things that mean the most—the offset things, the joys, heart-breaks and sorrows. The things you see when you look past the obvious. Like watching a little man explore his world with a pickle in his glass and a gleam of delight in his eye.

Maybe things aren't as they appear. What seems to be a mess might in fact be a new beginning. Life's distractions might be new challenges; life's struggles might be new adventures.

The little boy waves his potion into the air and takes a refreshing gulp from his mixture, as if he notices my concentration and tries to bring me back to earth. Still, the irony surrounding a pickle floating but not belonging in a sea of pink consumes me.

Maybe sometimes we have to accept the bitter with the sweet. Find the good wherever it lies. Look at it as a new way. Maybe it's OK to run home in the rain. Why can't you take your shoes off and wade into a lake? Dunk your zwickback in your Bosco? Or plunk a gherkin into your lemonade?

Before I go back to my new world as a father, I walk back up in the food line and buy a glass of lemonade, grab a pickle at the condiment table and drop it in my drink. The pickle floats down to the bottom of my glass as I take a giant swallow to my special onlooker's delight. The little boy looks at me oddly and asks, "Good, huh?"

"Never tasted better," I reply as I suddenly realize why he doesn't need "no children allowed" areas.

By Harrison Kalley

"Why don't restaurants have 'no children allowed' areas? That's what I thought as young man. Let's face it — it's hard to have a romantic evening while a baby two tables over is bawling at the top of his lungs and another is creating a ski slope out of mashed potatoes.

Almost all of my dates either tried to ignore such distractions or simply ignored me. All but one. This girl was always her happiest whenever a child whimpered or blew the paper to a straw in her face. The noise of a public restaurant full of kids didn't upset her — the sight of an infant with strained pears drooling down his chin seemed to light her face with a glow that was foreign to me.

That blue-eyed joy became my wife, and less than two hours ago, she gave birth to our first child — a daughter, with 10 tiny fingers and 10 stubby toes, along with those same iridescent blue eyes.

After spending all night and half of a Sunday morning watching my wife struggle with pain to deliver our little girl, I grabbed a chance to go down to the hospital cafeteria for a quick bite to eat and pass out as many pink bubble-gum cigars as possible. Going through the food line, I am still in shock at the rapture that parent-hood brings.

The dining room is packed, with other families experiencing miracles of their own. Through the crowd, I spot a small table in the corner, next to a family with a small child who is heartily eating lunch. The boy can't be more than 3, and he stares at me with the most piercing brown eyes I've seen. His face is covered with food; from underneath, he peers out with a look that can only be described as wonder. Normally, the sight would send chills up my back, but for some reason, it doesn't matter today. Despite my reservations, I place my tray down as my little onlooker keeps constant vigil on my every move.

Cranky? Here's some possible causes

- The Washington Post
No doubt you've seen or heard it already: "24/7," an abbreviated phrase for 24 hours a day, 7 days a week — as in around-the-clock, nonstop, never closed.
When we have a word for something, it is a reflection that it's a real phenomenon," says Leslie Charles, the author of "Why Is Everyone So Cranky? The Ten Trends That Are Making Us Angry and How We Can Find Peace of Mind Instead" (Hyperion, $22.95).
Charles is a former time-management instructor who lost faith in the curriculum after realizing what her clients needed to learn was life management. Like "road rage" and "going postal," she says, 24/7 is indicative of the trends fueling America's "anger epidemic."
"I view this book as the proverbial 2-by-4, an attention-getter," says Charles, founder of Training-works, a human resource development firm in East Lansing, Mich. "I wrote the book to help people look at the little details in their lives in a discriminating way."
Charles acknowledges the major flaw in writing a 363-page self-help book about crankiness: "People who need it most may be too cranky to read it. 'The problem is,' she says, "we are too pre-occupied with 'too many things.'"
Here are the "crank" 10 trends that are driving Americans into emotional tailspins:
1. Compressed time
Symptoms include feeling hurried and rushed every day, getting annoyed at long lines, going to bed wired, waking up tired.
"We are living in an age of immediacy, impatience, urgency, interruption, and intolerance to inconvenience," says Charles.
"A lot of us are living in a just-in-time framework," she says.
"If I leave right now, I've got just enough time to make it to work, if traffic is OK." That's another trend that is pushing us to the brink.
2. Communications overload

Face up to the 'birds and bees' talk

Knight Rider News Service

We — the let-it-all-hang-out generation — fumble, stumble, even crumble when it comes to talking to our kids about sex.

Yet, today, serious issues surround this subject — AIDS, safe sex, gay rights.

But the doesn't mean chats have to be dull. They can be informative and nonstressful if you start early and feel confident about your values, says Debra W. Haffner, president of the Sexuality Information and Education Council and author of "From Diapers to Dating" (Newmarket, $23.95).

She already sees mistakes is that parents are still under the impression that there needs to be the 'Big Talk' at puberty," says Haffner, the keynote speaker at a recent parenting conference at the Dave and Mary Alper Jewish Community Center in Kendall, Fla.

"The point of my book is that it didn't work for us, and it's not going to work for our kids. We need to work early, to start a foundation," says Haffner, a Sunday School teacher who acknowledges it hasn't always been easy to discuss the subject with her two children, 13-year-old Alyssa and 5-year-old Gregory.

The seminars at the conference — including Haffner's talk about raising sexually healthy children — are tied to keeping open the communication channels between parent and child, said Dore Salty, co-chairwoman of the parenting conference.

If parents are forthright, chances are their kids will be, Salty says. And the children, in turn, will be comfortable in coming to their parents to ask questions.

"It all comes full circle," says Salty, the mother of Brandon, 5, and Jake, 3.

She already tells her sons the proper names of sexual organs and thus avoids nicknames — something Haffner recommends.

Haffner's reasoning: "You don't give nicknames to elbows." Salty also gives age-appropriate answers when her sons ask questions, especially her older son Brandon, who is becoming curious.

"He has asked about my girlfriend who just had a baby," Salty says. "I explained about two people caring for each other and planting the seed."

Haffner acknowledges it's valuable to lay the foundation early, but adds there is no need to bring up the subject in elementary school.

Still, kids are reaching puberty earlier and learning about sex earlier. For example, girls are experiencing first sex at an average age of 12 1/2, about a year earlier than girls did 40 years ago.

Justine Davidson, 13, a seventh-grader in Pinescroft, is grateful that his mom told him "maybe in second grade" about "where babies come from." When the subject came up in fifth-grade, Jose already believed because he already knew.

His mother, Beth Davidson, said her children bring home questions that are years ahead of what she knew as a kid. Consider this: Two years ago, when daughter Erica was 8, she asked her mother how lesbians have sex.

A few friends of Beth's were overheard talking about it. "We an older couple froze in shock. Davidson smoothly told her daughter they would sit down later and discuss it.

Bad jobs: Making tracks for the door

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Well, it seemed like a good idea at the time.

You chose a job that you thought was right for you, good for your career and potentially fun. But you were wrong.

We all make mistakes, and sometimes we have to shake them up to experience, then keep moving on. Take Collin Condra, 23, who currently does tech support for a local contractor. (Key word: currently.) She took a job in the Washington area. Jan. 10, she found out pretty quickly that it wasn't what she thought it was going to be. "There were things that just weren't told to me. The position I was going for, I took a step back. I expressed my issues in the beginning — and they said they would take care of it. It didn't happen."

So now what? Is it OK to leave the job after being at the company for just about six weeks? How do you leave gracefully and yet quickly? Should you suck it up for a few months so you don't look like an unskilled worker? And if you do quit, out, how do you explain it in future interviews?

For the most part, companies and career advisers would tell you not to be a hero. If you want to go, go. But how to do it so you don't look like an ungrateful, disloyal sloth to future employers.

It's a complicated and scary decision, bailing early on a job.

You may doubt your gut feeling that the job you took is all wrong and you might start asking yourself if it's just you. Or you may think that you need to give it a longer try even if you know you are unhappy. But you have to be honest with yourself.

Sit down and figure out why you think you made a bad decision, advised Bruce Tulgan, workplace expert and president of Rainmaker Thinking — a career consulting company for twentysomethings.

"People find they have been oversold on the job and the reality is not so good. In that case, I think very quickly, you need to talk with the person who hired you," he said.

ANNIVERSARY

THE BIGGSES

BURLEY - Mr. and Mrs. Lyle M. Biggs of Burley will be honored at an open house Saturday for their 50th wedding anniversary.

Friends and relatives are invited to call from 2 to 5 p.m. at the Golden Heritage Senior Center, 2421 Overland Ave. They request no gifts.

Biggs and Glenda Burgess were married Feb. 24, 1950, by Bishop Lawrence Tolman in Burley.

They have lived in Burley and now spend part of their time in Yuma, Ariz.

He learned the auto body repair business while attending high school and worked for George Crawford at Crawford Paint and Body Shop before starting two years in the U.S. Army and two years in the U.S. Navy. He returned to Burley in 1949 to care for his widowed mother and worked for Crawford. In 1952, Burgess and Crawford started Crawford Salvage on a farm southwest of Burley, and they later relocated the business to Heyburn. The Biggesses made quite the team when they took over the operations of the salvage business in 1978. They purchased the body shop in 1987 and sold both businesses in 1990 when they retired.

She worked at Western Auto before her marriage and 16 years in the Cassia County school lunch

Lyle and Glenda Biggs program before quitting to help run the salvage yard.

The event is hosted by their children, Kenna Owens of Idaho Falls, Rex (Jean) Mallory of Rupert and Julie (Brent) Germann of Burley. Their son, Marc Biggs, died at the age of 2.

They have six grandchildren, four great-grandchildren and numerous children who call them Grandpa and Grandma.

The Orange County Register

You know marriage is on the ropes when:

A) The TV show "Who Wants to Marry a Multimillionaire?" attracts 22 million viewers who watch two strangers tie the knot and then millions more who follow their headline-making breakup days later.

B) The latest in the "For Dummies" guidebook series is "Making Marriage Work for Dummies."

C) Nearly half of all U.S. marriages end in divorce, the highest rate in the world and one that has held steady since the late 1980s.

D) All of the above.

E) None of the above.

(And we didn't even get into the political firestorm fanned by the topic of same-sex marriage, or the chilling effect of the marriage tax penalty.)

Still, the answer is surprising: Try "None of the above."

While some folks are ready to ring the death knell, they'll have to wait to be heard over all the wedding bells. If you ask the experts - social scientists and psychologists and clergy and the like - most will tell you we remain a nation that prefers "I do" to "Don't bother."

True, many of them gathered recently at Brigham Young University to discuss how to revitalize and strengthen the institution of marriage.

But those other experts - married couples - consistently indicate in polls and surveys that the majority of them are quite happy, thank you.

In fact, 64 percent of husbands and wives who responded to a survey by the National Opinion Research Center in 1998 described their marriage as "very happy."

Even many of those who divorce will remarry. And why not, given the benefits of marriage? Married folks tend to describe themselves as happier than their single counterparts. They also experience fewer emotional and health problems.

Romance continues to be the driving force behind most modern marriages in Western society. Still, there is an increasing awareness that love and marriage don't always add up to till death do us part.

Consider the stories of three Southern California couples who believe in the institution of marriage as strongly as they believe in their own.

But it's not blind faith. They are as practical as they are romantic. Maybe more so.

Jan and Kristen Gustavson met at church. Their friendship grew as they trained together for a half-marathon. A year later, they started dating. Then they broke up for three months.

Back together again, marriage crossed their minds.

Were they ready for that? They weren't sure.

They didn't even want to venture into being engaged before they knew.

"We had all the emotions, the 'I'm in love with you' stuff. But I think we needed the intellectual part that says, 'Yeah, this makes sense,'" says Kristen, 25.

Jan, 27, had thought seriously about marriage once before, during a relationship in his college days.

"I thought I would never have to think about the fact that the marriage would ever break up. But that relationship ended and that caused me to be worried that love can end. It caused me to be a lot more careful."

Kristen and Jan decided to take a premarital workshop at their church, Trinity United Presbyterian in Santa Ana. They didn't tell their parents they had signed up for the six-session course, called "Saving Your Marriage Before It Starts."

"We didn't want people asking, 'When are you getting married,' because we weren't sure we were going to do that," Kristen says.

Class, culture and society have changed matrimony

The Orange County Register

Marriage is about as old as history.

That's what author E.J. Graff discovered while researching her new book "What's Marriage For? The Strange Social History of Our Most Intimate Institution."

Sometimes it's been informal; at other times formal. But it's always been.

Made to suit each society, class and culture, marriage has been anything but a static tradition, Graff says.

The ancient Egyptians had no word for marriage. They called it founding a household, she explains. And the purpose was to make descendants.

During the rule of the Roman Empire, only 30 percent of the population had the legal right to marry. The church didn't declare marriage a sacrament until 1215, Graff says.

"And even then it was different from today. Marriage became valid the moment two people said, 'I marry you.' There was no priest involved."

State control of the legal institution of marriage didn't occur until the Reformation, Graff says. "People lived under their own religion's marriage laws. They would go to separate marriage courts. The Jews to Jewish court, the Catholics to a Catholic court, etc."

As a legal institution, marriage became an important political and economic lever, says Charles Hill, a psychology professor at Whitier College.

It secured the consolidation of land, political alliances, preservation of social class, religious beliefs and other concepts. That's why it wasn't left up to romantic whims.

"Up until 1850, virtually all marriages were arranged, virtually everywhere in the world," Hill says.

Before the rise of capitalism, there were two ways to make a living, Graff says: property ownership and the sweat of labor.

"Marriage, until modern times, was about exchanging those two things."

Love - as the reason to marry - didn't enter the picture until the 20th century.

"We used to talk about money first and love last," Graff says.

"Now we start talking about love first and money last. That's why 'Who Wants to Marry a Multimillionaire' looked so shocking to us."

But so what if we can't count on money? Billionaire groom Rick Rockwell and his now-departed bride, Darva Conger among the 111 million people - 56 percent of all American adults - who are married and living with their spouses these days.

Marriage has a bright future, according to the Census Bureau, which projects an uptick in marriage vows exchanged by members of Generation X. An estimated 85 percent of the so-called cynical slacker generation is expected to be married by the end of the decade.

"Marriage is not dead. Oh God, no," says Kirsty Doig, vice president of the New York-based Youth Intelligence, a company that specializes in market research, consulting and trend forecasting focused on Generations X and Y.

Loving your job is paramount

Sunday, March 26, 2000 Times-News, Twin Falls, Idaho 25

Though education is often in the news, and the state of our youth in the area of learning is often questioned, it is a fact that America's economy is almost staggering in its opulence, and this is due in large part to the American worker - the best and most productive in the world. If that is true that surely education can take at least some of the credit. But back to the question - when one considers all those productive workers how many love their jobs?

are harvested in the fall they will be worth at least enough to get the farmer through another year. How I admire the strength of character it must take to continue on, despite low prices, high costs and little recognition.

Farmers must love the land, and they must love to work it and see it produce, for surely they could sell out for much more than they make.

I can understand that love for I too loved my work. How fortunate I was for thirty three years, to look forward every day to seeing my students, to watching them learn and grown in that learning. I loved helping them, seeing their happiness at knowing right answers and knowing that lives were turned around because of an education. I loved teaching them new things, and history was a special favorite because I could tell the students real stories of real people in real life situations and have them identify with those people and remember them. My job was fun and very rewarding.

How I wish that everyone could have a job that they looked forward to every day. I am afraid that to many their job is drudgery - something they dread. Unfortunately that dread often reflects in their attitudes at home. Being unhappy at work can't help but spill over into relationships in the family, thus having a disparaging effect on all aspects of one's life.

To you who hate your work I would only say this - no matter what it takes, no matter the effort, no matter the sacrifice, find a job that will stimulate you, that will make you happy, that will make a contribution. You will spend a large percentage of your life working and to do so in unfulfilling circumstances would be truly unfortunate. How difficult it will be if you are unhappy every day, and the only thing you look forward to is time away from your job.

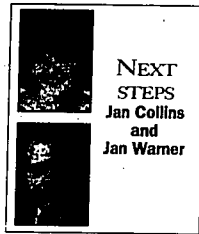

Being happy in your work means greater happiness in every aspect of your life. May you find the happiness and fulfillment that loving your work can bring.

Q. In October of last year, after privately paying for my husband's nursing home care for three years, I applied for and was approved for Medicaid benefits on his behalf. At that time, my assets had been reduced to less than the maximum in my state for a community spouse. At my age (75), I decided that since I might need care in the future, it would be a good idea for me to keep a life estate in my home and transfer the remainder interest to my two children. Not wanting to cause a problem with my husband's Medicaid benefits, I checked with the person who helped me at the county office and was told that if I made this gift, my husband would be disqualified. I live in a small town, and could not get the answer from a lawyer there. Is this correct?

A. No. Transfers by you as a community spouse after your husband has become eligible for Medicaid benefits will not affect his eligibility. Once his eligibility was determined, your resources are no longer considered "available" to him under what the "spousal impoverishment" provisions of the law.

That said, you can transfer the remainder interest in your home to your children, but be forewarned that because the remainder interest had value, this transfer could affect you in the future should you need to qualify for long-term care Medicaid benefits. For example, if your residence is worth $100,000, at your age 75, the value of the remainder interest you are going to transfer is $47,851.00. If the average monthly nursing home private pay rate in your state is $3,000, then you would be disqualified for 15 months from the date of the transfer. Should you not apply for Medicaid benefits during the period of disqualification, then you will be home free.

Another word of advice: Since you will be gifting more than $10,000 to each of your children, you will be required to file a gift tax return on April 15th of the year following this transfer. While there will be no tax due from you, the filing of the return is required.

Q. My husband qualified for Medicaid two years ago, yet every so often, I receive requests for financial information from the Medicaid office. What is the purpose of these inquiries? I was told that after he qualified, my assets made no difference?

A. While it is correct that your assets are not deemed "available" to your husband, information about your income is relevant. In many instances, since the community spouse's income is less than the amount set by the state as the minimum needs allowance, part of the nursing home spouse's income will be allocated to the community spouse to bring the community spouse's income up to the allowed level. If your income increases, then part of what may be allocated to you from your spouse's income will be taken back and paid to the facility, thus reducing the amount paid by the Medicaid program.

TIME TO GET GROWING

Over the Garden Gate

Not quite planting time? "But why?" the anxious gardener asks.

When the ground is saturated with moisture, digging will compact the soil and create poor growing conditions for your plants. It is better to wait (Patience is a virtue!) until the ground has dried out enough that the soil crumbles when squeezed. If it forms a tight ball then it is too wet for cultivation.

Service club promotes status of women

TWIN FALLS - A new service club dedicated to promoting the status of women will be chartered this week.

District Gov. Joan Knapp of Olympia, Wash., will present the charter to the Zonta Club of Twin Falls at 7 p.m. Thursday at the Cavanaugh's restaurant. There are 21 charter members under the direction of the club's co-presidents, Debi Johnson and Eileen McDevitt.

Zonta International was founded in 1919 in Buffalo, N.Y. It is a worldwide service organization of executives in business and the professions. The Zonta Club of Twin Falls joins an existing network of more than 35,000 members in 1,100 clubs in 61 countries, a press release said.

Zonta International enjoys non-governmental organizational status with the United Nations and consultative status with some of its agencies. At the local level, individual Zonta Clubs design service projects to promote the state of women, to reflect U.N. emphases and to serve community needs, the release said.

Idaho Energy Division relaxes loan requirements

BOISE - Idaho homeowners seeking to improve the efficiency of windows in their homes will find it easier to qualify for a loan from the Idaho Energy Division, because the requirements have been relaxed.

The residential sector of the Energy Conservation Loan Program includes Energy Star windows with a U value of .35 or lower.

The windows must have been rated by the National Fenestration Rating Council and carry the Energy Star logo.

"Energy Star windows are twice as efficient as the average windows manufactured just 10 years ago," said Terry Hoebel, director, energy economist with the Energy Division. They are also 40 percent more efficient than products required under most building codes.

That means homeowners making the change will use less energy to heat and cool their homes all year, resulting in lower utility bills.

The loan program also covers insulation, water heater upgrades, heating system upgrades, wood stoves, pellet stoves and gas stoves.

Homeowners can borrow up to $100,000 for five years at 4 percent interest.

Applications for the loan program and more information about Energy Star windows are available by calling (800) 334-5AVE or sending e-mail to Linda Cawley at lcawley@idwr.state.id.us.

A place they call home

Home Depot prepares to throw open its doors

By Virginia S. Hutchins
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - Orange-aproned workers dodged stacks of merchandise in the wide, warehouse-style aisles. An orientation class swelled with 50 new hires. And a designers' trainer quizzed carpet and relations departments on molding types and the proper language for describing products.

They're racing toward the April 6 opening of Twin Falls' largest home-improvement retailer, The Home Depot's store on Pole Line Road.

But at daily pep rally time, the folks in orange broke for a rousing company cheer. On bleachers at the front of the store, they gathered for briefings on damaged merchandise and on safety offenses that merit termination.

They have a lot to learn before April. They'll run a store that stocks 40,000 products and can special order 250,000 more.

What's for sale

The store stretches 115,000 square feet, plus a 15,000-square-foot garden-supply area outdoors, partly covered by a canopy for the sake of shade-loving plants, said Assistant Store Manager Eric Muniz, who transferred from the company's Meridian store. There's also a fenced area for landscaping products, where customers can load bark, blocks or the like directly into their vehicles.

The retailer's suppliers, or their representatives, are setting up 50 percent of the store, Muniz said last week. He was touring gardeners' power tools and chemicals; all manner of doors and windows; pond linings; irrigation products and racks of upscale lighting, grouped by style.

"We've got a good selection of riding mowers. You won't find a better one anywhere," he said.

Twin Falls is the first Home Depot store test marketing a new grouping: light bulbs and cleaning supplies on opposite sides of the aisle immediately inside the doors.

"We are the ones stepping outside of the circle," Muniz said.

The store aims to be a single stop for any items you might need for home-improvement projects - among them: electrical supplies, towel bars, toilets and tubs, major household appliances, rugs, cabinets, coats and air conditioners, hardware and three major lines of paint. The kitchen sink, too.

The Home Depot boasts proprietary rights to sell Ridgid power tools and Husky hand tools, and it's the only retailer in the United States selling General Electric water heaters, Muniz said.

The store will cut to size and thread hard-line plumbing. It'll offer free design help for kitchens and bathrooms. It'll sell blinds, rekey locks and install cabinets.

Muniz took particular care to point out the selection of carpet, hardwood flooring and linoleum.

In the indoor lumber yard, where weather can't warp the wood, customers can choose the individual boards for their projects, Muniz said.

For major renovations, the store stocks ladders, roofing, rain gutters, all sorts of fencing, bags of concrete mix, building block and insulation. If you're really serious about spring spruce-ups, there are power tools, shop vacuums, compressors, generators and pressure washers.

A cashier's register, separate from the others, is positioned by the lumber aisles and loading dock and guaranteed to be open whenever the store is.

At The Home Depot, Muniz admitted, it's easy to rack up a $10,000 purchase.

"I see it happen every day," he said.

Who's on staff

"Home Depot has upgraded our community in two ways: They will have any item you need to complete a project.

And two, their higher pay scale.

Teuscher - who worked seven years for Anderson Lumber Co. stores in Logan, Utah, Blackfoot and Twin Falls - started at The Home Depot three weeks ago, cross merchandising and creating aisle-end displays. She said she already has seven co-workers who used to be her colleagues at Anderson.

And The Home Depot isn't finished hiring.

"We've still got quite a few positions available," Muniz said Tuesday.

He expects the store to reach a staff of 170. About 20 are transfers from other Home Depot locations.

For the 150 new positions, Job Service alone took more than 900 applications, and the retailer is taking them, too.

Here's what to watch for Festivities kick off with an April 5 board-cutting event

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS - As a preview of its April 6 opening, The Home Depot plans a board-cutting ceremony - not your typical ribbon cutting - at 6 p.m. April 5.

The store invited major contractors and some community leaders from 6 to 9 p.m., but it won't turn anyone away from the April 5 festivities, said Eric Muniz, assistant store manager.

The following weekend, The Home Depot will bring in a miniature train to give rides to children, and it will hold its first Kids' Club in Twin Falls. The free educational program puts building projects - such as birdhouses and toolboxes - into local children's hands. Parents must be present.

Though it caters to contractors, too, the store's focus is on do-it-yourselfers, Muniz said. It will hold free weekend clinics on such topics as sprinkler installation, tile design and landscaping. More detailed topics will be offered in its four-week "Home Depot University" during winter.

The store's summer hours will be 7 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Friday; 7 a.m. to 9 p.m. Saturday; and 8 a.m. to 7 p.m. Sunday.

Viking Freight expands Canadian service

SAN JOSE, Calif. - Viking Freight Inc., a less-than-truckload carrier providing Western regional transportation service, said it has expanded its Canada service to include through-rate quotes and through-tracing via the Internet.

Now shippers can get a quick and competitive rate quote, either custom or full class, for freight moving to or from Canada and trace shipments from origin to their final Canadian destination on Viking's Web site, the company said.

"With the rapid growth in trade between the United States and Canada in recent years, we International shipping as easy as possible for LTL (less-than-truckload) shippers and employees they need,"

said Keith E. Lovetro, Viking's vice president of marketing. "Our comprehensive Canada service combines a simplified pre-shipment process and easy through-tracing with Viking's dedication to reliability and customer service responsiveness for true end-to-end accountability."

Younger people make use of 401(K)

Younger people are actively investing in their future. A new study by the Investment Company Institute and the Employee Benefit Research Institute found many 401(K) participants are approaching retirement age with substantial funds.

While the average 401(K) asset allocations vary with the participant's age, younger participants were likely to follow the footsteps of those before them favoring equity funds at first and investing in guaranteed investment contracts and bond funds later.

On average, those in their 20s invested more than half their assets (62.1 percent) in equity funds, 4.7 percent in GICs and 4.7 percent in bond funds. By comparison, people in their sixties invested 39.8 percent of their assets in equities, 20.6 percent in GICs and 9 percent in bonds.

Around the watercooler

If your monthly phone bill has towering numbers, you might be on the wrong calling plan, warns Consumer Reports.

To cut costs, the magazine suggests you first identify how much you really use the phone. If your calls are brief and infrequent, you can get by on the bare-bones service offered in your area.

But if you chat often, have multiple lines and carry a cell phone, you're better off looking for a provider with a package deal.

"We've got quite a few people from the competition," Muniz said, adding that The Home Depot relies only on applications and doesn't headhunt.

A major work draw is the array of benefits. By purchasing company stock, for example, "you can definitely come in here and be an entrepreneur," Muniz said.

A less tangible benefit is the friendly, energetic atmosphere several new employees attributed to the store.

"They really try to boost your morale. We have a pep rally every day," said Dan Blackwood of Twin Falls, who is working in the store's plumbing department because the area's building is too slow right now to provide him a steady income in his family's plumbing business.

"It's a real friendly atmosphere."

Farmers take a hit as season begins

FILER - A farmer trying to figure out what the hike in his input costs will be this year as the price of oil increases is a bit like a detective trying to solve a case with only half the facts.

"I think it is pretty obvious to everyone, that everything is going to cost more," customer-leader Les Jones of Filer said. "Everything that comes into this valley comes in and leaves by truck. Diesel cost $1 a year ago, and today it is $1.60."

But with rumors mutuating daily about what the final outcome will be from OPEC, it's anyone's guess as to how much higher fuel might be by the end of the season.

And it isn't just fuel that will cost more. All of agriculture is bracing for higher costs in petroleum-based products such as fertilizers, pesticides, and lubricants. "I worked in the fertilizer business for 11 years," said ag consultant John O'Connor of Buhl, "and I can tell you for sure that no one wants to come to a price right now. For one thing, the fertilizer companies don't know how much it's going to cost them, so they don't want to fix the price, because as soon as they do, everyone else will undercut them."

"For the time being, farmers are out there using chemicals and hoping they can trust their fertilizer dealers."

Truck liability legislation starts to pick up speed
BOISE - Legislation intended to deal with the transportation of a lawsuit over a truck tax ruled unconstitutional is now on track. After some political wrangling, a bill introduced by Rep. Roger Chase, D-Pocatello, last week is being held in the House Transportation Committee while another bill works its way through the Senate.

Rep. Jim Kempton, R-Albion, said HB 715 was held because it was never a player. The bill was needed during the negotiation phase with the American Trucking Association, the entity which sued the state of Idaho over the two-tiered ton-mile tax, to prove the state was serious about reforming the tax, said the chairman of the House of the House Transportation Committee. He and Senate Transportation Committee Chairman-Evan Frasure were part of the deal that negotiated the ATA settlement.

A Fourth Circuit Court judge

As custom-farmer Les Jones of Filer begins his season, he said he has no choice but to pass on the higher costs of fuel and petroleum-based products to the farmer.

agreed with the ATA that the two-tiered tax was unconstitutional. The Association has agreed to settle for $27 million, but as part of the settlement the ton-mile tax must be replaced by a registration fee. That's what SB 577, introduced March 17, does in addition to authorizing a one-time settlement payment from the Petroleum Clean Water Trust Fund.

Kempton said it's critical that the settlement be paid by July 1, or the state may owe an additional $8 to $10 million in interest payments. The judge ordered an interest rate of 10.2 percent on the entire $80 to $100 million of back taxes the ATA sued over. While legislators recognize the need to deal with the settlement quickly and correctly, a stickler at a time when grain prices are low and fuel prices are exploding. Grain growers in northern Idaho are taking a close look at a proposed new $122 million channel being planned for Moses Lake, but many are remaining skeptical for the time being. Moses Lake had an ethanol plant that went out of production many years ago, and two strawboard plants in the area are still struggling to make it. "If it works out, it could be a boon to the industry," said Pocatello barley grower Doug Scoville. "But it's got to get into the next phase."

Plant backers are holding meetings across the region and selling stock. The plant is expected to produce 40 million gallons of alcohol per year, to be used in both beverages and in industrial products, including gasoline additives. Byproducts include wheat gluten and animal feed. At full production, it would consume 60 percent of Washington's barley crop and about 4 million bushels of wheat per year. Production could start as soon as 2001.

An announcement by the federal Environmental Protection Agency could provide a boost to the project. The EPA is ordering a three-year phase-out of the use of MTBE (Methyl tertiary Butyl Ether) as an oxygenate additive in gasoline under the Clean Air Act. If the oxygenate requirement remains, some analysts predict the increased demand for ethanol could use 600 million bushels of corn, the most frequently used feedstock for ethanol production today. That would be welcome news for wheat and barley growers in the Pacific Northwest, even if the Moses Lake plant isn't built. A glut of cattle on the market is dragging down the price of all coarse grains.

Burley Irrigation District gains title in historic transfer

BURLEY - When irrigation water starts running through the Burley Irrigation District's canals next month, the water will look the same as it has for nearly 80 years, yet it won't quite be the same water. This irrigation season the water and the canals will belong to local irrigators. Unlike the North Side and Twin Falls canal companies, which were developed by private investors, Burley Irrigation District was formed by the federal Bureau of Reclamation. The Bureau continued to hold title to the district's canals and water rights until last month when the Burley Irrigation District became the first federal irrigation project in Idaho to receive full title and ownership of its natural water rights, pumping plants, roads and other assets.

Bill McDonald, Reclamation Region Director, called the title transfer "a watershed moment in the history of Idaho irrigated agriculture."

For Cecil Blauer, chairman of the Burley Irrigation District, the moment came sooner than he'd expected. "When word came out that the government wanted to get rid of some of the federal irrigation projects, we jumped on the opportunity," he said.

Idaho's congressional delegation responded by passing Public Law 105-351 that authorized the transfer, and President Bill Clinton signed it in 1998. The last hurdle in securing the title was the completion of an environmental assessment last December.

Blauer does not expect irrigators to notice any differences in how the system is run now that the District has title.

Knights Ridder News Service

SAN JOSE, Calif. - The five co-founders of Hokie Biotech Stationery stood nervously before a row of venture capitalists. Their chief financial officer Mackinnon Ross delivered the most compelling reason their start-up should be funded. "The cost of our supplies is low because, well, we just found them in the back yard," she said. "What did they find? Rocks. But with glue, string, paint and a dabble of creativity - what the co-founders called 'added value' - the stones are transformed into googly-eyed Pet Rocks. At the Girls' Middle School in Mountain View, where the fledgling entrepreneur-entrepreneurs are seventh-graders, Pet Rocks are hot. So is the idea of starting a business. But this is Silicon Valley, and the students were in search of a round of funding. Thursday night, they got their chance. The school, which emphasizes science and math in the high girls will enter high-tech fields, including computer scientists, investment bankers, high-tech executives and other professionals to evaluate business plans, which asked for $65 to $70. One of the role models were women.

Nine groups of students presented their business plans. They included everything from a candle-making operation looking for investors to a plant nursery. Web site that would host chat rooms but lacked a critical element - a registered domain name. "We wanted to help our girls to think about economics that apply not only to their teenage years but also for the rest of their lives. And our school philosophy is to learn by doing. What better way than to start a business?"

For 10 years, Guernsey was a spokeswoman for biotech firms. After reading a newspaper article about the Girls' Middle School, she quit her job last year and volunteered at the school. She later signed on as director of development and promptly started tinkering with a concept she called "Entrepreneurial Studies."

Every Wednesday for the past four months, the 40 girls have learned about finance, sales, marketing, business plans, teamwork, compromise and consensus-building. Thursday night's pitch for VC funding wasn't even the culmination. They still have earnings to worry about and an annual report to file in May.

Apparently, the lessons have taken hold. In the hallways of Hyatt Ritzky's in Palo Alto, the girls spewed phrases like "our profitability model shows that by May our total net profit will be $2,896" and "we plan to do lots of customer surveys to see what our customers like to eat" and "our marketing strategy starts with a raffle for the very first T-shirt we printed...it'll be worth a lot."

Before the panel and an audience of 100 parents, Drew Myers-Regulinski proudly enumerated her extensive resume: "I have a natural interest in creating businesses. At age 5, I tried to start my own business giving dance lessons. Unfortunately, no one signed up."

She tried again when she was 7. Her next enterprise, a video rental store that promised double-door delivery, yielded just one rental. But that was just the beginning of her business career.

Failure, after all, is something of a badge of honor in Silicon Valley's start-up culture. So is competitive drive. On a diagram of potential competitors, the two founders of Magic Hat ("We weave magic into your Web page") targeted Pandemic, the joint venture of tech giants and Intel Corp. "But we have a better customer service model," Divya DJari quickly assured the audibly gasping panel. "There's two of us, so we can offer one-on-one support."

At press time, the pair passed out fliers with glowing testimonials from classmates. Unlike many a dot-com, Hokie Biotech Stationery, which also sells notecards and greeting cards, can point to a fattening bottom line. At first, the girls priced their Pet Rocks at 25 cents apiece.

"We were just rocks," explained operations manager Audrey Conroy. "But they were really high in demand so we thought people would still buy if we raised the price."

Popular models now sell for $5. All nine groups were fully funded, including Hokie Biotech Stationery, which got a $65 check. The VC funding came from donations from individuals and corporations. Each team was coached by a corporate volunteer.

Together, the class decided to designate 20 percent of profits to a charity of the team's choice, another 20 percent to restock the venture fund for future students and then divide the remaining 60 percent among the team.

That's probably a little different spirit than the adults in the room next door at the Hyatt had in mind. There, a group of angel investors was busy analyzing adult start-ups that claimed to be the next big thing. Little did they know the future was literally three steps away.

Said Andrew Moley, chief financial officer of Greerings Network Inc: "If they were hire-able right now, a few of us on the panel would give them seed capital."

Haven't filed your taxes? Here's some help

By Joyce M. Rosenberg
The Associated Press

NEW YORK - With just a few weeks left before the April 17 tax deadline, millions of Americans still face the awesome task of filling out their returns or asking someone else to do it.

There are many reasons why their returns aren't done: missing documents, not enough money to pay taxes owed, being completely overwhelmed by the whole thing. Accountants and other tax preparers have used extensions to help taxpayers through the next couple of weeks.

The solution for many people may be to file for an extension of the filing deadline (which is two days later than the extension) because April 15 falls on a Saturday).

An extension means making an estimate of the tax you owe and mailing a check for that amount to the Internal Revenue Service along with Form 4868. Do that, and you won't find yourself paying 5 percent a month in the filing penalties you will, however, have a 0.5 percent per month late payment penalty on any tax you still owe).

Accountants, who expect as a matter of course that many of their clients will need extensions, say the IRS won't be prejudiced against the millions of people who ask for more time to get their returns in. They don't care when you file; they just want your money. said Doug Stives, a certified public accountant with the firm Wiss & Co. in Red Bank, N.J.

Here are solutions to some of the specific problems taxpayers face:

Problem: I haven't done my return because I'm going to owe money, and I don't have the cash.
Solution: Finish your return and file it on time. You have several options for paying your taxes.

When you file, you can ask the IRS to allow you to pay in monthly installments. You'll need to include Form 9465, Installment Agreement Request, or your own written request with your return.

Paying by installments means incurring interest charges, currently 9 percent. You'll also be charged the late payment penalty.

The IRS advises taxpayers to consider less expensive ways of coming up with the money, such as a bank loan. Along that line, you might want to consider paying your taxes by credit card. If you provided you can get a better deal than the IRS gives.

If you're filing online, the software you use can handle your credit card payment. If you're filing a paper return, you can call (888) 2PAY-TAX to pay.

However, be aware that you'll have to pay a fee ranging from about 2.5 percent to 3 percent to the company that processes your payment, Official Payments Corp.

Stives advises taxpayers to "write a check for what you can pay" when they file their returns - even if it's only $100 on a tax bill that runs into the thousands of dollars.

Problem: I don't have all my papers together.
Solution: If you're missing a 1099 form issued by a bank or brokerage, you should be able to call a customer service number and get the information you need over the phone or by fax or e-mail. As long as you had no tax withheld from the interest, dividends or other income reported on the 1099, you don't need to attach the paper itself to your return - you just need the numbers from it, Stives said.

Similarly, if you need to find out how much mortgage interest you paid because you can't find your 1098 form, call your lender.

It gets more difficult when what you need is the information from Schedule K-1, which reports income from partnerships, estates, trusts and what are called S corporations. K-1s tend to be mailed much closer to the filing deadline than W-2s in 1099s. Not only do they report various kinds of income (for example, ordinary income, capital gains, rental income), they also detail for the taxpayer which income needs to be reported on which tax schedules and forms.

You can't put together an accurate return without the numbers from a K-1 form. "If you don't have it, don't file," said Robert K. Doyle, a CPA with Spoor, Doyle & Associates in St. Petersburg, Fla., advising taxpayers in this situation to file for an extension.

You might also find you're missing canceled checks; call your bank and ask for copies. If you're missing receipts from charitable contributions, ask the organization to send you one.

If it looks like you won't be able to get the information together before the deadline, consider an extension.

If you don't have all the tax forms you need and have access to the Internet, you can download forms from the IRS Web site (<http://www.irs.gov>). If you're not online, phone the IRS now, before the end-of-the-season crunch; the toll-free number is (800) TAX-FORM.

Libraries may have forms you can photocopy, and post offices and banks may also have them (but don't count on finding all the forms you need at the last minute).

Hero to step aside

New outdoor clothier chief has big boots to fill

VENTURA, Calif. (AP) — It can't be easy to step into the shoes of someone Time magazine called a "Hero for the Planet," someone who has climbed Mount Everest and whose name is bandied about by Harrison Ford and David Letterman. Michael Crooke said he isn't even going to try.

Crooke, a former forester and Navy SEAL, is the new chief executive officer at Lost Arrow Corp., the parent company of the outdoor clothing maker Patagonia. The only other person to hold that title is Yvon Chouinard.

Yvon Chouinard pauses in his surfboard shaping room in Ventura, Calif., in this January 2000 photo. Chouinard, who founded Patagonia in 1973 and still owns it, announced he will be stepping away from day-to-day operations in the fall.

new vice president of marketing and product.

Patagonia also brought on board Bill Werlin, former president of Action Sports Group, to manage the company's operations in Japan, and Rich Hill, who was national sales manager at Kelly Packs in the mid-'90s. Crooke was Kelly's general manager and managing director at that time.

"They're bringing in some big guns. These are very well respected people in the industry," said Andrea Gabbard, senior contributing editor to Outdoor Retailer, a trade magazine.

Patagonia has the pull to bring in those sorts of executives.

The company was the leading outdoor apparel vendor in 1999, according to a survey of sales volumes by Outdoor Retailer. Sales for the specialty outdoor market reached $5 billion last year, an increase of 6 percent from 1998, according to the magazine.

Privately held Patagonia said it had sales of $182 million for fiscal year 1999.

So what will the "optimizer" do with a company that pays three employees to figure out how to give away part of its profits to environmental causes, a company that pays more to have its cotton grown organically and pays for its employees to learn to be environmental activists?

Crooke thinks those sorts of things eventually add to the bottom line and won't be going away.

"Those types of decisions have continued to reinforce in the consumer's eye that Patagonia is a company that cares about the earth, not just profits. Environmentally sensitive decisions and profit are not mutually exclusive," he said.

Crooke has the environmental credentials to fit in at Patagonia. He served as president of the Conservation Alliance, the outdoor industry's environmental grant-giving organization, until stepping down after taking the Lost Arrow position.

Crooke traces his environmental awareness to his youth in Oregon. His family spent many a weekend camping, fishing and hiking in the Mount Hood area.

"In the rivers in Oregon, the salmon ran so strong you couldn't walk across a river, it was just so thick when they were spawning. I saw the degradation of those salmon when I was growing up and was educated at an early age about that," he said.

He's also had his share of adventures. Crooke spent the better part of a month on a 300-mile walking adventure from the top of Kilimanjaro to the Eastern coast of Africa. Crooke walked about 200 of those miles.

Chouinard said Crooke was recommended by friends, and had the reputation as being "the best young businessman around."

Pearl Izumi, a cycling and outdoor apparel company, also needed someone to focus on business when it hired Crooke as its CEO about two years ago.

"He came in when the company really needed a strong leader," said Kay Martin, director of sales.

Crooke went to Pearl Izumi with a mission. The bottom line needed work and improving it meant layoffs and other changes, Martin said.

"He came through and gave every inch of the company more focus," Martin said. "He turned us all into business people."

His work at Kelly and Pearl Izumi earned him a reputation as a turnaround man, Gabbard said. But Patagonia might be in line for a turnaround rather than an overhaul, she said.

"I'm betting the corporate culture will remain intact, but we'll see new looks and directions. Things will be tightened up a bit and that's what Michael Crooke is known for," Gabbard said.

Experts: Think before getting IRA

By Joyce M. Rosenberg
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — As the deadline nears for filing income tax returns, millions of taxpayers must decide whether to open an Individual Retirement Account for 1999, and if so, which kind.

The decision must be made soon because the deadline for opening a traditional IRA and getting a deduction of up to $2,000 is April 17, the date that tax returns are due this year. But financial advisers warn taxpayers to stop and think before rushing out to get a traditional IRA.

First, you might not be eligible for that deduction. More important is the fact that the money you save now on taxes might cost you more in the long term.

"Who cares about that?" certified public accountant Ed Slott said of the tax savings on a $2,000 deduction.

Traditional IRAs have fallen from grace in the eyes of Slott and other financial advisers since the advent of the Roth IRA in 1998. While the traditional IRA gives you money back up front — if your tax rate is 28 percent, you'd get $560 on a $2,000 contribution — you'll be paying taxes on every dollar you withdraw.

With the Roth IRA, you can't deduct your contribution, but the money you withdraw after age 59.5 will be tax-free. The rules can get complicated, with compounding of interest or advances in the stock market, your gain on investments will be much, much more than $560.

But if you feel you really need the tax deduction right now, and you want a traditional IRA, be sure you're eligible to get a deduction. Several factors go into determining whether you are, including whether or not you and/or your spouse were covered by a retirement plan at work and how much money you and/or your spouse earned last year.

The rules can get complicated. The instruction booklet with Internal Revenue Service Form 1040, the individual tax return, includes a worksheet to help taxpayers determine how much of their traditional IRA contribution is deductible. Further details are in the IRS's Publication 590, Individual Retirement Arrangements. It's available online for those with Adobe Acrobat on their computer at <http://ftp.fedworld.gov/pub/irs-pdf/p590.pdf> or by phone at (800) TAX-FORM.

In one of the simplest cases, if you were single last year and earned less than $31,000, you can take a full $2,000 deduction even if you were covered by a retirement plan at work. If you earned more than $31,000 but less than $41,000, you could get a partial deduction. At $41,000, there's no deduction.

If you are married and filing a joint return, and both spouses were covered by retirement plans, you get the full deduction as long as you jointly earned less than $51,000. If you jointly earned more than $51,000 but less than $61,000, you get a partial deduction; at $61,000 there's no deduction.

Another factor is age: You must be younger than age 70.5 to open a traditional IRA (there are no age restrictions for opening a Roth IRA).

If you're going to open an IRA and have it created for the 1999 tax year, you have to have the money in the account by April 17 even if you file for an extension of the filing deadline.

Among the positives for many taxpayers and investors about the Roth IRA is that it has much higher income limits. You can contribute the full $2,000 if you earned $110,000 as a single taxpayer or $160,000 as a couple filing jointly. Above those amounts, the allowable contribution is reduced according to a formula contained in Publication 590.

You don't need to report the amount contributed to a Roth IRA, unless it was part of a conversion from a traditional IRA. In that case, you'll have to pay tax on the amount converted and file Form 8606 with your return. You need to keep records of all IRA transactions, taxable or not.

You can open a Roth IRA even if you were covered by a retirement plan at work. For some taxpayers, that begs the question — should you pay the maximum to a 401(k) plan and then open a Roth IRA, or contribute as much as possible to the Roth IRA and then contribute to the 401(k)?

Some advisers say put some money into a Roth IRA simply because there's no tax to pay down the road. While your 401(k) contributions are entirely tax-free, you'll have to pay tax on withdrawals in the future.

Slott, who edits the Rockville, Center, N.Y.-based newsletter Ed Slott's IRA Advisor, disagrees, noting that most employers match part of a worker's contribution.

"That's free money — you never want to give that up," he said, advising taxpayers to contribute the maximum to a 401(k) "then go to the Roth IRA if you have money left over."

A last decision that needs to be made is what kind of investment vehicle — a bank account, brokerage firm or mutual fund — you probably don't want to put your money into a bank IRA, Slott said. "It's safe, but it won't buy a cup of coffee in a few years," he said.

Apartment prices soar in NY

The Associated Press

Manhattan apartments keep getting more expensive, but there are plenty of people able to afford them.

Record high sales prices drove the average apartment price up 19 percent in 1999, the largest percentage gain in 11 years, according to the Corcoran Group, a real estate firm. The average two-bedroom apartment sold for $665,000, "what people in many parts of the country would pay for a very large house on a big plot of land. The biggest apartments, those with four or more bedrooms, averaged $4.5 million.

Corcoran reports the average apartment buyer is 38 years old, is more likely to be single rather than married, has an income of $342,000 a year and a net worth of $2.53 million.

CAMPBELL'S QUALITY SIDING

KNOW THE FACTS!

How do vinyl windows resist degradation?

Windows with vinyl frames help guard against the damaging effects of window condensation buildup. By using a vinyl siding value of the vinyl. Double glazed windows are far more effective than single glazed windows at reducing window condensation because they isolate higher percentages of relative humidity before condensation occurs. The higher allowable humidity level reduces drying of furnishings and improves the "comfort level" of the living space.

Note: Windows do not cause condensation. Condensation is an atmospheric moisture humidity in a home. When water or ice forms on a window, the consequences can be devastating. Freezing paint, rotting wood and mold can all result from the excess humidity. On the contrary, the right windows can be a great help in controlling and reducing it.

Once a novelty, now-essential credit card celebrates 50 years

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the 1950s, dapper men with mustaches and fedoras used them to settle their bills at Delmonico's, "21" or the Copacabana. They were a novelty for the affluent and the elite for the urban, much like jet travel, at a time of postwar economic boom and optimism.

Today, we rely on them to pay for the mundane supplies of everyday life, from groceries to gasoline.

The credit card, an idea begot 50 years ago by an absent-minded businessman dining out, left his wallet elsewhere, now provides financial convenience for an estimated 157 million Americans — close to the adult population of some 200 million.

But it's also been blamed for seducing millions of profligate spenders into credit, debt and even bankruptcy. And fraudulent charges, by crooks and cyberpirates, cost companies big time.

Still, the credit card endures as an emblem of convenience and an instrument of the democratization of credit.

It means "even the little guy can borrow," said Frederic Mishkin, a professor at Columbia University Business School in New York. In addition, he noted, "There's a tremendous convenience that gives us not to carry cash around."

For Chantal de Jonge Oudraat, of Washington, D.C., the cards' convenience means that when she goes on her frequent trips to Europe, she often takes less than $20 cash.

"There are two things I check before I go on a trip: my passport and my credit cards," she says. De Jonge Oudraat, 43, carries five or six cards — close to the U.S. average. And she uses her ATM card in machines overseas to get local currency.

Credit cards were paper, originally, like library cards. They didn't become plastic until 1959, a move by American Express to make them less vulnerable to fraud and easier to process.

The first charge card is said to have appeared in February 1950. Businessman Frank McNamara had dined at Major's Cabin Grill in Manhattan and, reaching for his wallet, realized he'd left it in his trouser suit. Fortunately, his wife paid the tab, but McNamara wondered if a different solution could be found.

At a later meal at Major's, McNamara tried paying with a signature card and Major's attorney founded Diners Club, now owned by banking giant Citigroup.

The first card was offered to 200 people, mostly McNamara's friends and acquaintances. Fourteen Manhattan restaurants initially agreed to accept it. By March 1951, the company claimed 42,000 Americans were carrying the card and more than 330 small businesses were accepting it. Membership cost $3 a year.

At first, they were all charge cards, meaning that balances had to be paid in full each month. Bank credit cards, as we know them, buy now-pay later, were introduced in 1951 by Franklin National Bank in New York, which eventually became European American Bank.

Fast-forward to 2000. There are Today, there are over 150 million credit cards in circulation in the United States. Ya, your ex is eligible for benefits

By Liz Pulliam Weston
Los Angeles Times

Question: I was married for 24 years but divorced in 1984. I continued working, but my ex-husband has not had a tax-paying job since. I got a really good job in 1987. My question is: Can my ex get Social Security benefits based on my earnings after the divorce or just on what I earned during our marriage?

Answer: Let it go, dear. He may be a shiftless bum, and you may resent that he will qualify for Social Security based on your earnings rather than his own. Any former spouse who was married at least 10 years can receive half of the ex's benefit amount if both members of the erstwhile couple are at least 62. His benefit will be based on your lifetime earnings at that point, not just the earnings during your marriage.

Note, though, that whatever he gets will not reduce your Social Security check by one dime. This is one of the few cases in which an ex-spouse gets a benefit that's not at the other's expense. So concentrate on your good fortune at having "a really good job" and don't begrudge him the few extra shooks in Social Security that your earnings will provide him.

Q: There is a wide price range for the same auto insurance coverage. In most human activities, there's no such thing as a free lunch, so that's got to be true in auto insurance as well. What's the downside if I pick a low-cost insurer?

A: That depends on which insurer you pick and what you consider a downside. If you don't mind dealing with your company over the phone rather than in person, you might not care that a company keeps its costs low by not having agents. If you can't ever get that company to answer its phones, however, you may think it's taken the low-cost thing too far.

Likewise, you may admire a company that watches the bottom line so closely that it challenges every claim — until you get rear-ended and can't get your car fixed.

Even when you eliminate the real dogs, however, you'll still find a huge range of prices for what is essentially the same insurance. That's because some companies prefer not to write certain types of insurance in certain areas, and price accordingly. Insurers also know that there's a huge inertia factor — not as many consumers shop around as they should.

That's why a married couple in Burbank (Calif.) with a good driving record might pay $2,144 a year for standard coverage from the Auto Club of Southern California, while the same policy from State Farm might cost $2,958 (those figures are from last year's California Department of Insurance premium survey). Geico, meanwhile, was charging $4,372. All three companies have good reputations for customer service and for paying claims.

The couple who go with the Auto Club could save more than $2,000 a year.

Most other states have similar minimum comparison surveys, and they all show the same thing: big price variations in what is basically the same product. For that kind of savings, it's worth doing a little research. At this point, you won't get a lot of help from those online insurance quoting services. None so far offers a truly comprehensive, up-to-date look at the market. But Consumer Reports, at (800) 224-9495, has an excellent telephone-based service that can take your specific information and give you quotes from more than 20 companies, all for $12 for the first car and $8 for each additional vehicle.

If you're too cheap to do that, you can also look at your state's premium comparison survey. Just call the insurance department's number in your local telephone book. Or you can visit its Web site. In California, that's <http://www.insurance.ca.gov>. The information will be out of date and not as customized as that from the Consumer Reports service, but you'll get an idea of which companies generally offer lower prices in your area and for your situation.

Once you've got a few companies in mind, do a little background check. Ask your coworkers about their experiences with these companies. If your state insurance department has a complaint Web site, take a look at that. (Pay particular attention to the companies that have the lowest complaint ratios and those that have the highest; these surveys tend to be significant flaws, making all the data in the middle mostly noise.) Then get the customer service and claims numbers and call them, both during the day and after hours. Better to find out before you're a customer that you'd be spending the next six months on hold.

Best to roll over your 401(k) assets

Saint Paul Pioneer Press, Minn.

Q: My employer has just changed 401(k) plans. I may transfer my old 401(k) assets into the new plan. What other choices do I have?

A: A bad choice would be to withdraw the funds and take possession of the assets. If you are not of retirement age these funds would be subject to a 10 percent early withdrawal penalty from the IRS.

If that isn't bad enough, the withdrawn funds would be taxable as income. Most taxpayers would lose another 36 percent to Minnesota and federal income taxes.

A better choice would be to

roll over the 401(k) assets to your own IRA. This would allow you to select whatever investments you deem best and continue to defer taxation. This option would likely provide you with greater investment flexibility and more investment choices than your employer's 401(k) plan.

There are advantages to the 401(k) format.

A 401(k) allows borrowing. An IRA does not.

However, most financial advisers discourage borrowing from your 401(k). If your 401(k) assets would normally be invested in stocks, borrowed funds are not invested funds and therefore cannot participate in the gains. Stocks can sometimes offer. Bond and 401(k) assets missed out on the 20 percent increase and more stock gains in the final months of 1999.

There is one other advantage of the 401(k).

In most cases, IRA withdrawals are subject to a 10 percent penalty if the account holder is under age 59 1/2. However, 401(k) withdrawals are free of this 10 percent penalty if the account holder has separated from your service with the employer at age 55 or older.

POINT OF LAW

By Tom Kershaw
THE EGGSHELL SKULL

Question: My elderly mother, walking through the park, was hit by a man riding a bicycle. She was knocked down and injured. The man's insurance company claims that she was at fault because she should have been able to get out of his way, and that most of her injuries were caused by the fact that she is old and more susceptible to being hurt. Her frail condition is not the man's fault, they say. Can this be right?

Answer: No. Over many years, the English and American courts developed what is sometimes called the "Eggshell Skull" Rule. This rule is that a negligent party takes his plaintiff as he finds her, and is responsible to pay for all injuries caused by his negligence, even if those injuries are greater because of some condition which causes her to be more susceptible than others to injury. If, for example, a person with an "eggshell skull" were struck on the head and suffered an injury when a normal person would have been unharmed, the responsible party would still have to pay for that injury, even if he did not know about the unique condition.

Similarly, your mother is only required to behave reasonably for a person in her circumstances. She will not be expected to have the speed or agility of a 20 year old in avoiding the collision.

Emery & Kershaw PC handles negligence cases.

TASTE FAR FROM HOME

Jerome resident, Julie Powell, is featured in "Taste of Home's" 2000 quick-cooking annual recipes for her Minty Chocolate Snowballs.

LOU CASITOR/The Times-News

Cook's 'snowballs' head for international magazine

By Dixie Thomas Reale
Times-News correspondent

officially retired, she caters only for close friends and family.

JEROME - Snowballs in spring? You bet. Julie Powell's "Minty Chocolate Snowballs" are included in "2000 Quick Cooking Annual Recipes," published by "Taste of Home" magazine. Powell, a field editor for "Taste of Home" since 1992, was notified of the honor recently. Reiman Publications, which publishes "Taste of Home," is the sponsor of Tuesday's Homemaker School at Roper Auditorium, hosted by The Times-News and Magic Valley AG Weekly.

Her three grown children, eight grandchildren and husband are the official taster-testers of all recipes submitted to "Taste of Home" or "Quick Cooking" magazines.

Julia Powell's Minty Chocolate Snowballs

- (20 servings)
- 2 cups whipping cream, whipped
 - 1 package (16 ounce) miniature marshmallows
 - 1/2 cup crushed peppermint candy
 - 1/2 cup chopped pecans
 - 1 package (9 ounce) chocolate wafers crushed
- In a bowl, combine the whipped cream, marshmallows, candy and pecans. Cover and chill for 3 hours or overnight. Place wafers crumbs in a shallow dish. Stir marshmallow mixture; shape by 1/2 cupfuls into balls. Roll in crumbs until coated. Chill or freeze until serving.

Although Powell grew up in St. Anthony in eastern Idaho, she's lived in Jerome for a quarter century.

"Quick Cooking" was first published in 1998 and now has nearly 3 million subscribers. The recipes featured in it are designed to be quick to fix for the busy woman, yet packed with full "from scratch" flavor.

Powell said being a field editor is not too difficult. Three - sometimes four - times a year she gets a letter from Reiman asking for suggestions for upcoming editions of the magazine. More than 1,000 field editors representing all 50 states in the United States and every province in Canada contribute recipes, cooking tips, feature ideas and suggestions to "Taste of Home" and the newer sister publication, "Quick Cooking," every month. Powell knows her way around a kitchen. She has been cooking for as long as she can remember, learned to cook from her mother and owned and operated a catering business for about 25 years. A couple of years ago she hung up her apron. Now

"2000 Quick Cooking Annual Recipes" is a compilation of the best recipes published in "Quick Cooking" during 1999. There are 742 one-of-a-kind recipes featuring home-cooked meals without spending a lot of time in the kitchen. The 356 pages are divided into 21 chapters that correspond to features found in "Quick Cooking."

To order "2000 Quick Cooking Annual Recipes," send $29.99 plus $2.50 postage and handling to "Taste of Home" Books, Suite 4329, P.O. Box 990, Greendale, Wis. 53129.

T-N food editor will emcee

Denise Turner

TWIN FALLS - Denise Turner is a natural to emcee Tuesday's Times-News/Reiman Publications Homemaker School. After all, she's presided over almost 400 weekly Food and Home sections during her tenure as assistant-features editor of the paper. Turner, an award-winning writer and columnist, has edited the food and religion sections and many special sections of The Times-News since 1993. She's also the author of two books, "Home Sweet Fishbowl" and "Scuff-Marks on the Ceiling" (both from Word Books) and has contributed to seven other books, including "The Bible for Today's Christian Woman," released by Thomas Nelson Publishers last year. She has written more than 100 magazine articles. Turner is a member of the Idaho Press Club, the Twin Falls Lions Club, the Colonial Williamsburg Foundation, the Southern Illinois University Alumni Foundation and the Twin Falls Senior Citizens Foundation Board. She is listed in "Who's Who of American Women." Turner has won several awards from The Associated Press and the Society of Professional Journalists, including one for religion reporting and one for column writing in August 1999.

School fast becomes a tradition

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS - Once again, it's SRO. The fifth annual Times-News/Magic Valley AG Weekly Homemaker School, scheduled for Tuesday, has sold out 1,300-seat Roper Auditorium on the campus of Twin Falls High School, as it does every March. Sunnie Renshaw, a home economist from Kootenai, will cook on stage. Denise Turner, assistant features editor of the Times-News and editor of the paper's Wednesday Food and Home section, will serve as master of ceremonies. This is a fast-paced program. About a dozen dishes will be prepared onstage in about two hours. Overhead monitors will give the audience a close-up view. Ingredients and preparation steps will be discussed and are listed in a full-color magazine handed out to the audience. After the cooking demonstration, the prepared dishes are given away to members of the audience as door prizes, along with bags of groceries and kitchen appliances. The school is sponsored by Reiman Publications, which publishes "Taste of Home" magazine. The Times-News and Magic Valley AG Weekly are hosting the school. It starts at 6:30 p.m.

Home economist loves to cook - on the run

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS - Call it a moveable feast. Sunnie Renshaw does. Renshaw, a home economist from the northern Idaho town of Kootenai, travels up to 50,000 miles a year, conducting recipe and appliance demonstrations throughout Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Utah, Nevada and California. She works for Homemaker Schools, LLC, which is affiliated with "Taste of Home" and "Country Woman" magazines. Other home economists conduct similar schools in 250 locations throughout the United States. The program has been in operation for nearly 50 years. The two-hour cooking clinics include on-stage demonstrations of food preparation, new food products and kitchen shortcuts. Each participant receives a free cookbook, which includes the recipes demonstrated during the program, and a free gift bag filled with coupons and other items. There are also door prizes. Using her experience as a working mother, Renshaw focuses on stress-free and economical recipes. She originally started cooking to help her own mother, trying out new recipes on her brother. She still cooks at home, she says. Renshaw holds a bachelor of science degree in family and consumer sciences with emphasis on business from the University of Idaho.

Tempting treats have yummy candy bar taste

The Times-News

Chocolate lovers can't get enough of these sweet and chewy bars. Contributed by Ardye Fiehl, a great country cook from Wisconsin Dells, Wis., the recipe for Caramel Peanut Bars is shared by the editors of "Taste of Home" magazine. Fiehl relates that these tempting treats taste like candy bars, but with irresistible homemade goodness.

Caramel Peanut Bars

- 1 1/2 cups quick-cooking oats
 - 1 1/2 cups all-purpose flour
 - 1 1/4 cups packed brown sugar
 - 3/4 teaspoon baking soda
 - 1/4 teaspoon salt
 - 3/4 cup butter OR margarine, melted
 - 1 package (14 ounces) caramels
 - 1/2 cup whipping cream
 - 1 1/2 cups (9 ounces) semisweet chocolate chips
 - 3/4 cup chopped peanuts
- In a bowl, combine the first five ingredients; stir in butter. Set aside 1 cup for topping. Press remaining mixture into a greased, 13-inch-by-9-inch-by-2-inch baking pan. Bake at 350 degrees for 10 minutes or until lightly browned. Meanwhile, combine caramels and cream in heavy saucepan or microwave-safe bowl. Cook over low heat or microwave, until melted, stirring often. Sprinkle chocolate chips and peanuts over the crust; top with caramel mixture. Sprinkle with reserved oat mixture. Bake for 15-20 minutes or until topping is golden brown. Cool completely before cutting. Makes 3 dozen.

I can't cook, but then again, am I supposed to?

It's a polite fiction that men can cook. I want you ladies to know that.

Oh, that's not to say that some few aren't trainable, but the great mass of testosterone-caddisg-time chefs are way, way out of their depth.

Not one man in 500,000 understands the concept of "blanching." Not one in a million can fold something into something else. Not one in 10 million "reserves" part of any ingredients. It either all goes into the mix with everything else, or it gets eaten right off the spoon.

Not that a guy will own up to any of that. A perceived ability to cook is considered trendy at the moment, even as larger and larger numbers of women proudly proclaim their disinclination to the culinary. A man in an apron is vaguely New Age and sensitive, which men suppose makes up for the bait bucket in the vegetable crisper.

But they're seeing only what they want to see. Spend a little time looking over a man's shoulder while he's cooking and it will make you not want to.

Men stear. Men smoke. Men toss. Men leave mysterious organic matter stuck to the ceiling.

And for what? Strip away the parsley and the palovar, and you'll have to admit that a guy's culinary repertoire consists, basically, of three things:

1. Steak, charred but not cooked.

DON'T ASK ME
Steve Crump

2. Spuds, charred but not cooked.
3. Velvetea, often disguised but never far from the surface.

Oh, he'll try to hide those facts in a blather of Tex-Mex and pseudo-Italian, but face it, girls: However you slice it, Bologna is still baloney.

I think many of you women who brag about your soulmate's prowess in the kitchen should stop biting your tongues so hard. He knows he can't cook; you know he can't cook. Your kids certainly do.

Why not just admit that he's at best a designated hitter for Marie Callender or nights when you're too pooped to pot-roast? This will not crush his delicate male ego beyond redemption; it will simply caution him to live within his limitations.

I know a fellow who cooks for himself - only when his wife is out of town - Spam with creamed corn.

That's not an abomination; it's a guy's dish. So pipe down. And call me when dinner's ready.

Times-News features editor Steve Crump reminds you that when the can of beans blows up, it's supper-time.

THE FOOLPROOF CHEF

How to survive your mistakes in the kitchen

By Steve Crump
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - Now let's be honest:

Amateur cooks and their families eat at least as many failures as successes.

"I think two of the biggest problems are meat that's overcooked and food that's not seasoned properly," said Linda Myrland, chef and co-owner of the Uptown Bistro in downtown Twin Falls.

Sounds pretty basic. "All you need is a meat thermometer," Myrland said. "And read the recipe."

Among professional cooks, the latter comes close to being the cardinal rule.

When, for example, the directions for angel food cake specify using a standing electric mixer instead of a hand-held model, there's probably a good reason, "Gourmet" magazine's food editor, Kemp Minifie, told the Washington Post. (The former does a better job of warning egg whites.)

Despite a "proliferation of cooking schools, TV food shows and an explosion of interest in food, we also have a generation or two" that isn't experienced Nice save!

Widened disasters and how to prevent them:

• A frozen egg can't be revived and made as good as before by placing it in a cup of boiling water for a few minutes.

• When broiling meat, put a few pieces of dried bread in the broiler pan to soak up dripping fat. This will stop the broiler from smoking and reduce the risk of fire.

• To keep bread fresh when freezing it, stick a paper towel in the bag with the bread or rolls. The paper towel will absorb moisture that usually makes breads mushy when thawed.

• To make thinner pie crust, coat the board or waxed paper lightly with olive oil before rolling out the dough, and it will not crumble when stretched.

• Store crisp cookies in a container with a loose cover. If tightly sealed, with everyday cooking," Minifie said. While "Gourmet" readers are tagged as bright, affluent and well-traveled, "we have to spell out a lot more than we used to."

Cooking terms such as saute are explained in greater detail, and instructions to "cream butter and sugar" have been replaced with a call to "beat butter and sugar."

Those concepts are best understood with experience, Myrland said.

"Sauteing is frying, but not really frying," she said. "You learn by doing it."

If you don't grasp cookbook terminology, Myrland suggests asking an experienced cook - professional or otherwise.

And understand that pros and experienced amateurs do some things - like not measuring everything exactly and substituting one ingredient for another - that newcomers just can't get away with.

Minifie, who calls herself a "bull terrier on recipes," echoes that making substitutions is the downfall of many readers. Low fat versions of sour cream and cream cheese don't behave the way their higher-fat siblings do, for instance. Her list continues: Wrong-size pans are used; Oil isn't brought to a high enough temperature to properly brown an ingredient. Cooks don't sharpen their knives properly.

But keep in mind that in cooking, you learn to succeed by failing.

"If you're new at this, really reading the recipe is the best way to get started right," Myrland said. "It's basic, but a lot of people don't do that."

Lasagna for people who don't have time

'Instant' noodles become a hit

Newsday

When no-boil "instant" lasagna noodles first hit supermarket shelves five years ago, some home cooks were skeptical. How can you layer sheets of raw pasta into a lasagna pan without boiling them first? Rather than risk a trayful of precious ingredients, they passed up the convenience and continued to boil their noodles the usual way.

Others threw caution to the wind and boldly substituted the stiff-as-a-board pasta into their lasagna recipes. It worked. And those home cooks have never looked back. Ronzoni, the largest U.S.-makers of "oven ready" no-boil lasagna noodles, now sells one box of no-boil for every five boxes of traditional lasagna noodles.

"Our oven-ready noodles have Little difference among brands of noodles

There are at least half a dozen brands of no-boil, oven-ready lasagna noodles on supermarket shelves, and each one looks different from the next.

Newsday tested three varieties to find out how they cooked up and which, if any, was best.

Newsday tested Ronzoni's oven-ready lasagna ($1.58 for an 8-ounce package), Barilla's oven-ready lasagna ($1.48 for a 9-ounce package) and Delverde's instant no-boil lasagna ($4.29 for a 17 1/2-ounce package that includes two aluminum foil trays).

Newsday found all three to be good stand-ins for the traditional dried lasagna noodle. No one detected a difference in taste or texture from traditional noodles. The lasagna made from Ronzoni noodles buckled somewhat between the pieces of pasta, but it still looked appealing and tasted fine.

been one of our best pasta introductions and it's an item that's growing," said Gary Lauerman,

There were no clear favorites among the three. The Barilla noodle was softer, Ronzoni and Delverde cooked up slightly firmer, drier and more al dente than Barilla.

Ronzoni and Delverde noodles are eggless, made from semolina and durum wheat. Just like regular dried pasta. But the no-boil noodle versions are then boiled, cut into sheets, and dried.

The Ronzoni comes in 7-by-13-inch sheets. You'll need about 15 sheets for an average 9-by-13-inch tray of lasagna. The Delverde noodles come in 8-inch squares, which seem inconvenient for traditional lasagna pans. But these noodles are cleverly packaged with two 9-inch disposable tins, which could easily be adapted to accommodate existing lasagna recipes for a crowd.

marketing director at Ronzoni. "It has exceeded our wildest expectations in terms of consumer acceptance."

Barilla America, the U.S. division of Italy's top dried pasta brand, introduced its instant lasagna noodles in the New York area 18 months ago and is now rolling them out nationally.

"We're off to a fast start," said Sergio Pereira, director of marketing for Barilla America. Barilla introduced the no-boil noodles three years ago in Italy, where cooks are accustomed to making their lasagna noodles by hand. Younger Italians, apparently sold on the virtues of making lasagna more quickly, have taken to the product, Pereira said.

American lasagna mavens approve of the no-boil pasta, too. Clifford Wright, author of several cookbooks, including one on lasagna, actually prefers the no-boil version to the regular supermarket one. "It's a terrific product," he said. "The traditional commercial lasagna tends to be a wee bit too thick and as a result, you get a pasty lasagna. It's nicer to have leaf-like layers like a mille-feuille" or multi-layered Napoleon.

Melanie Barnard, who writes Bon Appetit's "30-Minute Main Courses" column, said, "The no-boil thing is the cat's meow. Cooking the noodles is the absolutely worst part about making lasagna. They stick together, they slip around. Any way you can make it without having to cook the noodles is great."

Jack Bishop, a Sag Harbor,

N.Y., author of several cookbooks including one on lasagna, is more of a purist. His gold standard is the handmade lasagna noodle.

He calls the traditional dried variety only 50 percent as good and the no-boil type only 30 percent as good. But, he admits: "They've got to save you 30 to 40 minutes. If that's the difference between making lasagna and not making lasagna, then it's worth it."

Spinach, mushrooms mix with lasagna

Newsday

Spinach and Mushroom Lasagna

- 5 tablespoons olive oil, divided
- 1 medium onion, minced
- 1 pound mushrooms, trimmed and sliced
- Salt and pepper
- 10 ounces (12 cups) spinach leaves, washed, stemmed and chopped
- 2 medium garlic cloves, minced
- 1 (28-ounce) can crushed tomatoes
- 2 tablespoons chopped fresh basil or parsley leaves
- 15 dried 7-by-2 1/2-inch no-boil lasagna noodles
- 1 pound mozzarella cheese, shredded (about 4 cups)
- 5 ounces Parmesan cheese, grated (about 2 1/2 cups)
- Cooking spray for foil
- 1. Heat 2 tablespoons olive oil over medium heat in a soup kettle. Add onion, saute until translucent, about 5 minutes.
- 2. Add the mushrooms and saute until golden, about 8 minutes. Season with salt and pepper to taste. Remove the mushrooms; set aside. In the same pan, heat 1 tablespoon olive oil over medium heat; add the spinach. Cook, stirring often, until wilted, about 5 minutes. Season with salt and pepper to taste. Set aside.

3. Heat the remaining 2 tablespoons oil and the garlic in 10-inch skillet over medium heat until fragrant but not brown, about 2 minutes. Stir in the tomatoes; simmer until thickened slightly, about 10 minutes. Stir in basil or parsley and salt and pepper to taste. Pour into a large measuring cup. Add enough water to make 3 1/2 cups.

4. Spread 1/2 cup sauce evenly over bottom of greased 13-by-9-inch lasagna pan. Lay three noodles crosswise over sauce, making sure they do not touch each other or the sides of the pan. Spread 3/4 cup prepared vegetables evenly over noodles, 1/2 cup sauce evenly over vegetables, and 3/4 cup mozzarella and generous tablespoons Parmesan evenly over sauce.

5. Repeat layering of noodles, vegetables, sauce and cheeses three more times. For fifth and final layer, lay final three noodles crosswise over previous layer and top with remaining 1 cup tomato sauce, 1 cup mozzarella and 2 tablespoons Parmesan.

(At this point, the lasagna can be wrapped in plastic and aluminum foil and frozen for up to 1 month. If frozen, defrost in refrigerator and remember to remove plastic wrap before reheating.)

6. Adjust oven rack to middle position and heat the oven to 375 degrees. Cover the pan with a large sheet of foil greased with cooking spray. Bake 25 minutes (30 minutes if chilled); remove foil and continue baking until the top turns golden brown in spots, about 15 minutes. Remove pan from oven and let lasagna rest 5 minutes. Cut and serve immediately. Makes 8 to 12 servings.

FOR CENTURIES, Italian women baked breads and desserts with olive oil. Bertolli adapted this custom to the American market with the introduction of Extra Light Olive Oil, a product developed especially for the American palate. Extra Light does not mean light in calories. Like all pourable oils, Extra Light has 120 calories per tablespoon. It has been filtered to remove any odor and strong taste and is perfect for baking a variety of desserts, including cakes, cookies, biscuits and muffins.

- BERTOLLI Extra Light Olive Oil is mild and pure, with only a hint of olive flavor.
- Using BERTOLLI Olive Oil containing 77% monounsaturated fat reduces cholesterol and saturated fat content in baked goods when substituted for butter.

- Olive oil, already soluble, does not need melting and saves a step in the baking process.
- Olive oil contains Vitamin E, which sustains freshness and acts as an emulsifier, resulting in smoother and moister cakes.
- It is an ideal substitute for polyunsaturated oils like corn or safflower oil and unlike blended oils, BERTOLLI Extra Light is 100% pure olive oil.

ALMOND BAKED PEARS

- 2 teaspoons plus 1 tablespoon BERTOLLI Extra Light Olive Oil
- 5 Bosc pears, washed, halved lengthwise, core scooped out

Bertolli Olive Oil Offers A New Take On Eggs

The frittata is the Italian version of an omelet. This is a delightfully different take on a breakfast classic that also makes for a light meatless lunch or dinner. It's the last few minutes in the oven that sets this dish miles apart from the usual "morning eggs".

ASPARAGUS AND PARMESAN FRITTATA

- 1 bunch (about 12 oz.) slender asparagus spears, rinsed and trimmed
- 1 tablespoon BERTOLLI Classic Olive Oil
- 1/2 cup sliced green onions
- 1/4 cup diced red bell pepper
- 1 cup cooked long grain white rice
- 1 teaspoon fresh thyme leaves, stripped from stems or a pinch of dried thyme
- Salt and pepper to taste
- 3 large eggs
- 5 egg whites
- 2 teaspoons grated Parmesan cheese

Steam asparagus until crisp and tender, about 4 minutes. Cool. Cut 1-1/2 cups into 1/2-inch diagonal slices. Reserve remaining asparagus spears for garnish.

Preheat oven to 400°. Heat olive oil in a 10-inch skillet with heat-resistant handle; add onion and red pepper and cook 5 minutes. Stir in rice, sliced asparagus, thyme, salt and pepper. Whisk eggs, egg whites and cheese until frothy. Heat rice mixture over high heat; stir in eggs until they begin to set, about 1 minute. Lower heat and cook 2 minutes. Transfer skillet to oven and cook just until eggs are set on top, about 5 minutes.

Loosen frittata from sides and bottom of skillet with spatula. Slide out onto platter. Wipe out skillet and add reserved asparagus spears; heat through. To serve, cut frittata into wedges and garnish with asparagus.

Sargento Salad Creations - Convenient Cheese Blends For Signature Salads

SETTING a trend in cheese marketing, Sargento Foods, Inc. introduces a new and innovative line - Salad Creations - its biggest product launch in six years, complementing one of the fastest-growing categories in supermarket food-bagged salads.

SARGENTO offers three varieties of Salad Creations - Taco Salad, Chef Salad and Caesar Salad - designed to appeal specifically to cheese lovers who enjoy salads. Salad Creations make salad consumption tastier and more fun.

Designed with unprecedented input from shredded cheese consumers, Salad Creations feature unique cheese shapes and flavor blends never before available to consumers and not easily duplicated at home. Consumers actually "designed" the Salad Creations product line (including cheese flavors, blends and shapes; product names and package graphics) through multi-market research studies.

Taco Salad blend brings together Diced Pepper Jack & shredded Cheddar makes in an 8-ounce package to make a great tasting, fresh taco salad easier than ever.

The Chef Salad variety combines diced and shredded Monterey Jack and Cheddar cheeses in an 8-ounce package for an exciting, new salad sensation. Caesar Salad combination is a blend of shredded Parmesan & Romano cheeses in a 6-ounce package for a classic salad flavor.

The prepared salads category has grown dramatically in response to the convenience-driven consumer's desire for healthy, flavorful meals. Sales of bagged salad are up 33 percent over a year ago and household penetration grew from 2.9 percent in 1992 to 23 percent in 1997. Salads are the third highest use of shredded cheese (behind Mexican and Italian foods).

SARGENTO is supporting the launch of Salad Creations with extensive, national consumer support. Consumers are being made aware of the uniquely shaped product line and encouraged to try Salad Creations during the summer salad season.

"The new SARGENTO Salad Creations are expected to appeal to consumers who would use shredded cheese on salads more often if salad-specific cheese were easily available," says Brad Platoff, director of new product development for Sargento. "Our research shows us that consumers are eager to try this innovative product line to make salads at home more unique and flavorful."

"What's really unique about SARGENTO Salad Creations is the blend of cheese varieties and distinctive shapes that are not easily duplicated in the home kitchen," Platoff added. "The products are perfectly designed for convenience-minded consumers who want to be able to prepare a healthy salad fast and with added cheese flavors that appeal to the entire family."

Sargento, noted for its innovations in the industry, is a national marketer of a full line of shredded, snack and specialty cheeses and ethnic sauces.

Campbell's Cream Of Chicken Eases A Hectic Lifestyle

FOR MOST PARENTS, the daily tug-of-war between careers and children is growing at a steady rate. According to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, in 1997, 78 percent of women with children 6 to 17 years old were working mothers.

Most parents do not want to spend much time in the kitchen when they have to juggle after-school activities and homework, which puts culinary creativity to a test.

If you are one of more than 70 percent of Americans who do not have time to think about what you are having for dinner by 4 p.m., visit the Campbell Soup Company Web site at www.campbellsoup.com and register for Campbell's new Meal-mail service - a recipe e-mail service that delivers family-pleasing dinner ideas right to your home or office computer. Just around the time you start wondering what you will make for dinner, a quick meal solution will be delivered by 4 p.m. each day, or on a weekly basis, courtesy of Campbell's.

"Campbell's 15-Minute Chicken & Rice Dinner", one of the thousands of recipes from the Campbell's on-line database, requires minimal preparation and will get you out of the kitchen with time to relax. This easy-to-prepare, one-dish recipe calls for just four main ingredients - chicken, CAMPBELL'S Condensed Cream of Chicken Soup, instant rice and broccoli flowerets. It is perfectly suited for those who want a satisfying meal at home but have little time to prepare it.

CAMPBELL'S 15 MINUTE CHICKEN & RICE

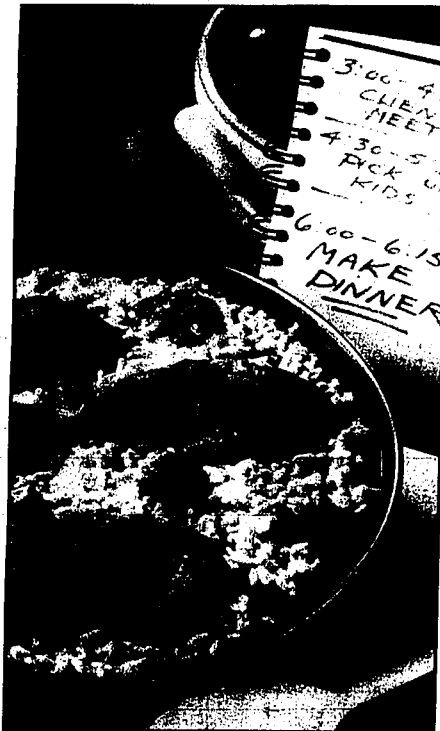

- 1 tablespoon vegetable oil
- 4 skinless boneless chicken breast halves (about 1 lb.)
- 1 can (10-3/4 oz.) CAMPBELL'S Condensed Cream of Chicken Soup or 98% Fat Free Cream of Chicken Soup*
- 1-1/2 cups water
- 1/4 teaspoon paprika
- 1/4 teaspoon pepper
- 1-1/2 cups uncooked instant rice
- 2 cups fresh or frozen broccoli flowerets

- *15-Minute Chicken & Mushroom Rice Dinner: Substitute 1 can (10-3/4) CAMPBELL'S Condensed Cream of Mushroom Soup or 98% Fat Free Cream of Mushroom Soup for the Cream of Chicken Soup.

For creamier rice, increase water to 1-2/3 cups

In medium skillet over medium-high heat, heat oil. Add chicken and cook 8 minutes or until browned, turning once. Set chicken aside. Pour off fat. Add soup, water, paprika and pepper. Heat to a boil. Stir in rice and broccoli. Place chicken on rice mixture. Season chicken with additional paprika and pepper. Reduce heat to low. Cover and cook 5 minutes or until chicken is no longer pink.

Tea Enthusiasts Join Culinary Buffs

Nestea New Addition To Taste Of Home Tour

WHAT do you get when you cross a popular cooking school tour with one of the leading tea brands in the world? Quite simply - a recipe for success. This spring, Nestlé's Nestea joins Taste of Home Cooking School on the nationwide cooking tour that's baked and blended its way into kitchens across the country. Both parties have achieved more than fifty years of expertise in pleasing palates and tantalizing taste buds. With recipes developed by Nestlé's own culinary masters, Nestea refreshes consumers with the wonders of tea.

Did you know that half of the entire U.S. population drinks tea regularly? For many, soluble tea is a summertime staple, but that doesn't mean it can't be enjoyed all year long. Throughout the Taste of Home Cooking School Recipe Collection, Nestea recipes introduce consumers an easy way to spice up their typical tea tastes, no matter what the season. They feature NESTEA Soluble Tea as the foundation for cool, crisp drinks like a "Citrus Refresher", "Orange Tea Spritzer" and "Cold Spiced Cranapple", as well as delightful hot beverages like "Two for Tea" and "Festive Hot Tea Punch" featuring Libby's Juicy Juice.

In these times of flavored teas and expensive exotic blends, the Nestea recipes offer affordable variety and refreshment using everyday food and beverage products like orange juice, club soda, lemon juice and honey. By adding a few simple ingredients to their tea, both new and veteran tea enthusiasts can create a fresh twist on an old favorite. From springtime spritzers to warm winter brews, Nestea gives consumers something to enjoy year-round.

Introduced by Nestlé in 1948, Nestea was the world's first soluble tea. Today, it is one of the leading tea brands in the U.S. and internationally, delivering quality, convenience and wonderful taste. Nestea is available in both soluble and ready-to-drink form. The soluble variety includes sweet mix, unsweetened and sugar free.

Nestea, Nestlé Toll House, another popular Nestlé product, will also be featured in the tour.

For well over a century, Nestlé has been making the very best food and beverage products for families around the world. In the U.S., Nestlé's well-known brands include: Nestlé, Carnation, Stouffer's, Nescafé, Libby's, Buitoni, Contadina, Nestea, Taster's Choice, Ortega, Nestlé Crunch, Butterfinger and Nestlé Toll House. Headquartered in Glendale, CA, Nestlé USA has 19,500 employees, $8 billion in sales and is part of Swiss-based Nestlé S.A. - the world's largest food company.

For Easy Springtime Desserts It's Keebler Pie Crust To The Rescue

WHAT'S FOR DESSERT?

Whatever the occasion, whatever variety you choose, a fabulous pie is always a popular offering.

Once known as "pye", when this favorite of American desserts crossed the Atlantic Ocean, it adopted a new spelling and a new meaning. Pie, as it is known today, is very much an American classic. In Scotland, pies are filled with meat. A Frenchman unfamiliar with the word opts for tarts. Yet in this country, pies are as American as... well... apple pie!

Now if the thought of making a pie sounds like an intimidating proposition—if the fear of pastry-making stands between you and pie-making—there is an easy, not to mention delicious, alternative. It's KEEBLER Pie Crust to the rescue!

Whether you choose a graham cracker, chocolate or shortbread flavored crust, with KEEBLER Pie Crust you can enjoy a fresh homemade pie in just minutes. There's even single-serve graham cracker crusts available as well as the larger "2 Extra Serving" size graham cracker crust to meet all your recipe needs.

According to a recent survey, more than half a billion pies are prepared at home each year. Plus, the rebirth of interest in American cooking has also meant an increased interest in pies, whether it's a classic favorite like "Lemon Cheese Pie" or a contemporary creation such as "Decadent Triple Layer Mud Pie".

Yet today's busy homemakers require fast, fabulous, foolproof recipes they know they can trust. Few cooks have the time to fuss with traditional pie recipes and that's where KEEBLER Pie Crust can help. Keebler's mission is to provide magnificent dessert recipes that can be prepared in 15 minutes or less.

The key to making these scrumptious pies is balancing flavors and textures. Rich and creamy fillings—such as pudding, yogurt, ice cream or whipped topping—can be combined with fruits, nuts, citrus zest or spices to create a palate-pleasing dessert. The possibilities are endless!

Most Keebler pie recipes are make-ahead desserts that can be chilled or frozen until you're ready to serve. That way you avoid messy, last-minute clean-up.

Here we offer a quartet of contemporary classics from KEEBLER Pie Crust. For more delicious dessert ideas from Keebler, visit their Web site at www.readycrust.com.

And remember, when the situation calls for a speedy-to-prepare pie that has great flavor and texture, the answer is KEEBLER Pie Crust. Dessert has never been easier—or more delicious.

Favorite Recipes of 1999 Selected By Fleischmann's Yeast Home Economists

AFTER much consideration, the home economists at FLEISCHMANN'S Yeast have decided on "Festive Focaccia" and "Chocolate Chocolate Crescents" as their two favorite recipes of last year.

"Festive Focaccia" was originally created as a bread machine recipe by Deby O'Gorman of Alta Loma, California. "Festive Focaccia" is a 1998 Los Angeles County Fair award winner. Fleischmann's Yeast realizes that not everyone uses a bread machine, so a second version of Deby O'Gorman's award-winning recipe has been converted by the staff at FLEISCHMANN'S Yeast for traditional bakers.

"Chocolate Chocolate Crescents" are a rich and chocolaty crescent roll with a creamy chocolate center baked right in. Chocolate times two! The mouth-watering aroma alone is reason enough to bake these tasty treats, but the flavor will make "Chocolate Chocolate Crescents" a tradition in your family for years to come.

Fleischmann's Yeast was founded in 1868 when Charles and Maximilian Fleischmann arrived in the United States from their native Austria-Hungary. Discouraged by the quality of bread available, they introduced a commercial yeast product with a remarkable leavening power.

With more than three-fourths of all U.S. consumers purchasing FLEISCHMANN'S Yeast over other brands, the company has a complete line of yeast products including Fresh Active Yeast, Active Dry Yeast, RapidRise Yeast, Bread Machine Yeast and a line of Bread Machine Mixes. FLEISCHMANN'S Yeast also has a toll-free line for those who need immediate assistance, 1-800-777-4959 and a Web site, www.breadworld.com, that is bursting with hints and recipes for both the oven and bread machine.

FESTIVE FOCACCIA BREAD MACHINE VERSION

1 cup + 3 tablespoons water
1 tablespoon olive oil
1 teaspoon salt
3 cups bread flour
1 1/2 teaspoons FLEISCHMANN'S Bread Machine Yeast
2 teaspoons chopped fresh rosemary

TOPPING:

3 tablespoons olive oil
2 tablespoons fresh rosemary
Coarse salt

Add water, oil, salt, flour, yeast and rosemary to bread machine pan in the order suggested by manufacturer. Select dough/manual cycle. When cycle is complete, remove dough from machine to a lightly floured surface. Cover; let rest 5 minutes. If necessary, knead in enough flour to make dough easy to handle. Form dough into smooth ball. Roll to 12-inch round; place on 12-inch pizza pan that has been lightly greased with olive oil. Poke dough randomly with fingertips to form dimples. Brush top with olive oil; sprinkle with rosemary and salt to taste. Cover; let rise in warm, draft-free place until almost doubled in size, about 30 minutes. Bake at 425° for 20-25 minutes or until done. Serve with olive oil and freshly ground coarse black pepper, if desired.

1/2 teaspoon salt
2/3 cup water
1 tablespoon olive oil
2 teaspoons chopped fresh rosemary
TOPPING:
3 tablespoons olive oil
2 tablespoons fresh rosemary
Coarse salt

In large bowl, combine 1 cup flour, undissolved yeast and salt. Heat water and olive oil until very warm (120°-130°). Gradually add to dry ingredients. Beat 2 minutes at medium speed of electric mixer, scraping bowl occasionally. Add 1/2 cup flour and rosemary; beat 2 minutes at high speed, scraping bowl occasionally. Stir in enough remaining flour to make a soft dough. Knead until smooth and elastic about 8-10 minutes. Cover; let rest 10 minutes.

CHOCOLATE CHOCOLATE CRESCENTS

3-1/4 to 3-1/2 cups all-purpose flour, divided
1/4 cup sugar
1 package FLEISCHMANN'S Rapid Rise Yeast
1 teaspoon salt
3/4 cup evaporated milk
1/4 cup water
1/4 cup butter or margarine
1 (1 oz.) square unsweetened chocolate
1 (1 oz.) semisweet chocolate
1 large egg
Chocolate Filling (recipe follows)
Powdered sugar

In large bowl, combine 1 cup flour, sugar, undissolved yeast and salt. In saucepan, combine milk, water, butter, unsweetened and semisweet chocolate. Heat over medium-low heat until chocolate melts and temperature reaches 120°-130°. Stir into dry ingredients. Beat 2 minutes at medium speed of electric mixer, scraping bowl occasionally. Add egg and 1/2 cup flour; beat 2 minutes at high speed. Stir in enough remaining flour to make soft dough. Knead on lightly floured surface until smooth and elastic, about 8-10 minutes. Cover; let rest 10 minutes.

Divide dough into 12 pieces. Roll each piece into 8 x 4-inch oval. Spread chocolate filling evenly over each oval. Beginning at short end, roll up tightly. Pinch seams to seal. Place rolls, seam sides down, on heavily greased baking sheets. With sharp knife, make 5 slits up top of each roll, cutting halfway through. Curve ends to form crescents. Cover; let rise in warm, draft-free place until doubled in size, about 1 hour. Bake at 375° for 15-20 minutes or until done. Remove from sheet; cool on wire rack. Sprinkle with powdered sugar.

Chocolate Filling: In small bowl, combine 1 cup sugar, 1/2 cup cocoa powder and 3 tablespoons flour. With fork or pastry blender, cut in 1/4 cup butter or margarine; blend well. Stir in 1 egg; add 1/2 cup finely chopped pecans. Stir well.

Familiar Favorite Fleischmann's Yeast Contemplates "The State Of Baking" in 2000

FLEISCHMANN'S YEAST marks the new millennium by featuring two American households. The vitality and healthy future of home bread-baking is vividly illustrated in the stories of a 54-year old grandmother in Tallahassee, Florida and a 14 year old boy in Newport, Washington.

As a tribute to home bakers everywhere, Fleischmann's Yeast presents recipes for "Cracked Wheat Bread" and "Top-Choice White Bread". "Cracked Wheat Bread" was created by Crystal Stutz for the Oregon State Fair. "Top-Choice White Bread" is the Fleischmann's Yeast test kitchen's highest rated white bread recipe. Easy to prepare and delicious to eat, "Top-Choice White Bread" is sure to be one of your family's highest rated recipes as well.

Florida Grandmother Wears out Bread Machines to Show Her Love

Her bread machines - she has three - run up to 150 days out of the year. They have for 15 years. Her favorite model still works but has been repaired dozens of times. Said Donna Fletcher, "What I wear out the most is the bread machine's center post."

Familiar Favorite Fleischmann's To Fletcher and her family, it's not just about loving the taste and aroma of home-baked bread, and that they do. It's about the way home-baked bread shows love. Said Fletcher, "There's great symbolism in homemade bread baking. When my family comes in the door, the aroma is my way of saying "welcome, I'm so happy that you're here that I made bread just for you". And it works! When the children and grandchildren enter our home, they head first to the kitchen for a slice of bread."

Her primary "bread-eaters" include her husband, retired from Florida State University (FSU) faculty; two daughters and one son and their spouses, all of whom live close to her house; and six "perfectly wonderful grandchildren". Three of her grandkids are at her house everyday after school.

Fletcher uses bread-making to focus her grandchildren's after-school creative energies. They often shape the bread dough into dogs, hearts, bunnies, peacepipes and real fat snakes, then watch it "grow" as it bakes, and eat it.

"We always have oatmeal bread and cinnamon bread with walnuts. And when we have family dinners we always use the provolone cheese bread recipe that I 'invented' years ago. The splits in the top of the loaf 'leak' a bit of provolone and it toasts and gets stiff. Over the years, my children, who are now in their thirties, have turned it into a family tradition to fight over who gets the burnt cheese. If it is someone's birthday, he or she automatically gets the burnt cheese."

Another specialty of Fletcher's is a "gator" made out of bread. (The Gator is the mascot for the University of Florida Gators, bitter rivals to Fletcher's Florida State Seminoles.) Into the bread-gator's back, Fletcher pushes an FSU "Seminoles Spear."

Donna Fletcher, 54, is an Associate Professor at FSU in the Human Services department. She said, "I have a very busy life, and the bread baking would not be possible without a machine. I use the machine only for mixing and first rise."

"My grandmother, whom I dearly loved, made the best homemade bread in the world. She made loaves twice a week, and I helped her, like my grandkids help me. Back then, it was very hard work. But her house always smelled like homemade bread. She would have loved having a bread machine! When I think of my grandmother, I think of her hugs, her smiles, her gardening, her singing and her swam, wonderful, homemade bread. I hope my grandchildren remember me the same way...well, except the singing part. I can do all the rest, but I sing like a toad."

"I still cook all of our meals, though as a modern aging couple, we did try an experiment to let my newly retired hubby take over the cooking. He finally learned to make spaghetti from canned sauce, and even managed to boil pasta and drain it. But after 14 weeks of spaghetti, I declared the experiment a failure. He never did try to make bread. It was understood that I would continue to make bread, no matter what."

TOP-CHOICE WHITE BREAD

- 5-1/2 to 6 cups all-purpose flour, divided
- 3 tablespoons sugar
- 2 packages FLEISCHMANN'S RapidRise Yeast
- 2 teaspoons salt
- 1-1/2 cups water
- 1/2 cup milk
- 2 tablespoons butter or margarine

In large bowl, combine 2 cups flour, sugar, undissolved yeast and salt. Heat water, milk and butter until very warm (120°-130°); stir into dry ingredients. Beat 2 minutes at medium speed of electric mixer, scraping bowl occasionally. Stir in 1 cup flour; beat at high speed for 2 minutes, scraping bowl occasionally. Stir in enough remaining flour to make soft dough. Knead on lightly floured surface until smooth and elastic, about 8-10 minutes. Cover; let rest 10 minutes.

Divide dough in half. Roll each half to 12 x 7-inch rectangle. Beginning at short end of each rectangle, roll up tightly as for jelly roll. Pinch seams and ends to seal. Place seam sides down, in greased 8-1/2 x 4-1/2-inch loaf pans. Cover; let rise in warm, draft free place until doubled in size, about 45 minutes. Bake at 400° for 25-30 minutes or until done. Remove from pans; cool on wire rack.

Yield: 2 loaves.

Bertolli Olive Oil Adds Flair To Mediterranean Grill Recipes

LEAVE the hot dogs and hamburgers at the ballpark, and spice up your summer grilling with Mediterranean flair! Now, more than ever, it is easier to incorporate the healthful Mediterranean diet, with its robust flavors, into the American lifestyle.

Grilling during the summer months provides the perfect opportunity to experience the Mediterranean lifestyle, centered on sharing relaxing meals with family and friends, making every meal a celebration.

The Mediterranean lifestyle is a melange of cultures and cuisines. Its diet is characterized by large quantities of fruits and vegetables, pasta, bread, rice and olive oil which is high in monounsaturated fat. For centuries people of the Mediterranean have enjoyed healthful food ingredients of the region. They have known instinctually that diet, combined with the tradition of enjoying long relaxing meals, contributes to lower stress levels, lower incidence of heart disease and longer lives. Meals uniformly start with appetizers such as tomato bruschetta. The main course in the traditional Mediterranean meal is either fish or poultry, basted in robust extra virgin olive oil and accompanied by a grain, such as pasta. Finishing a Mediterranean meal is as elemental as the lifestyle. With a cup of Italian espresso, dessert can be as simple as seasonal fresh fruit.

- 1-1/2 pounds medium shrimp, peeled and deveined
- 1 medium yellow bell pepper

- cut into 1-inch cubes
- 1 medium red bell pepper cut into 1-inch cubes
- 1-2 medium zucchini, sliced
- 1-1/4-inch thick
- Salt and pepper to taste
- 1 (12 oz.) package tomato basil linguine
- 2 tablespoons BERTOLLI Extra Virgin Olive Oil

Combine garlic, salt, bay leaves, cloves, cayenne pepper and red pepper flakes in medium bowl. Stir in 1/2 cup olive oil and shrimp; cover and refrigerate for 2-3 hours. Thread four skewers with shrimp, peppers and zucchini. Brush any remaining marinade over the shrimp skewers and season with salt and pepper.

Cook linguine according to package directions; drain. Toss with 2 tablespoons olive oil.

Grill the kabobs over medium-high heat for 2 to 2-1/2 minutes per side or until grill marks appear and shrimp are firm. Keep warm. Remove shrimp and vegetables from skewers. Serve over linguine.

Note: If using bamboo skewers, soak in cold water for 1 hour prior to grilling to prevent them from burning.
