County imposes moratorium

By John T. Huddy
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Twin Falls County Monday imposed a 90-day moratorium on new or expanding livestock operations. The decision gives time for a committee of residents to review the county's livestock ordinance that some say is flawed. And some people say it is the first step towards victory in the long-running battle against large livestock operations in the county. It is the county's first livestock BURLEY — One other Magic Valley county is operating under a livestock moratorium, for now, while a Mini-Cassia county had a moratorium in place for nearly a year.

Officials in Gooding and Cassia counties had little to say about Twin Falls County's decision to set a three-month livestock moratorium — but one Cassia County official said the move seemed to make sense.

"I guess it's my feeling that an opportunity to call time out and evaluate ordinances and regulations at a county level can be a good thing," Cassia County Commissioner Paul Christensen said.

Cassia County called a six-month livestock moratorium in April 1999 on larger confined animal feeding operations after Ketchum developer Ron Aches expressed interest in building a large-scale hog farm in eastern Cassia County.

When the county extended the moratorium another six months in October 1999, commissioners received flak from Burley officials and other locals who said the partial ban discriminated all

Clinton rates Israeli-Palestinian conflict as most difficult dispute in the world

Leaders come to Camp David for summit

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — About to kick off a last-ditch summit, President Clinton said Monday there is no more difficult conflict in the world than the dispute he will try to settle between Israel and the Palestinians.

Clinton also encouraged Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak to not be distracted by his political woes at home.

"This is really, I think, a matter of trying to come to grips with the issues on the merits," Clinton said — in an exchange with reporters before flying to Pennsylvania for a governors' conference.

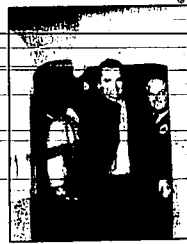

Barak barely survived a no-confidence motion in the 120-member Israeli parliament Monday.

The opposition, anxious about his projected concessions to Yasser Arafat on territory and Jerusalem, outpolled the government, 54-52, but it could not muster the 61 votes needed. Clinton, possibly referring to a recent poll, said a solid majority of Israelis "want him to come and want him to pursue peace." In the same vein, Secretary of State Madeleine Albright said the prime minister can make peace despite the defection of three political parties from his government.

"He is not going to make an agreement that jeopardizes his people," Albright said in an Associated Press interview.

Big blaze destroys truck stop

The Times-News

MOUNTAIN HOME — A fire Monday morning caused an estimated $2 million in damage to a truck stop off Interstate 84 in Mountain Home.

No one was hurt in the blaze. The fire most likely started in the janitor's room, and investigators are confident that the fire was not the result of arson, said Phil Gridley, fire chief for the volunteer Mountain Home Fire Department.

The fire destroyed the Pilot Corp. gas station, formerly known as the Gear Jammer truck stop, and the Great American Buffet restaurant, Gridley said.

About five businesses were located within the Pilot Corp. station building, such as an Arctic Circle restaurant, Gridley said. Most of the businesses were destroyed in the fire.

About 80 employees worked at the businesses. The fire was reported at about 7:40 a.m. Monday and was extinguished at 9:30 a.m. About 40 firefighters doused the blaze with 5,000 gallons of water a minute for nearly two hours.

"We are about 90 percent certain the fire started in the janitor's room of the Pilot Corp. building," Gridley said.

Wiring had been put in the vent of a dryer. The wiring, coupled with a buildup of lint in the vent, prevented hot air from escaping, he said.

It's unknown who did the wiring, or when.

A local fire insurance companies will investigate the fire.

Revolutionary War epic miffs Britons

The Associated Press

LONDON — Already smarting from Hollywood's revisionist bent in a succession of quasi-historical films, Britons are demanding a public apology and a retraction from the makers of Mel Gibson's latest blockbuster, "The Patriot."

The Revolutionary War saga doesn't open here until August, but British historians and journalists already have savaged the epic for its flag-waving simplification of events.

"With their own record of killing 12 million American Indians and supporting slavery for four decades after the British project their historical guilt onto someone else," historian Andrew Roberts wrote in the Daily Express newspaper.

"Truth is the first casualty in Hollywood's war," the Daily Telegraph chimed in.

The controversy comes on the heels of other questionable film revisions, including "Saving Private Ryan," which ignored the D-Day contributions of Britain and other countries, and the recent "U-571," which showed Americans capturing a German Enigma coding machine to break Nazi communications. The feat actually was accomplished by the Brits in 1941 — before the United States entered World War II.

"The Patriot," released in the United States in time for the July 4th box-office bonanza, is set during the 1775-1781 American War of Independence. Gibson plays the fictional Benjamin Martin, a reluctant rebel swept into the war when his family is threatened by King George III's nasty British Redcoats.

The film's main villain is Col. William Tavington, who in one scene shoots a child and in another rounds up screaming fugitives, locks them in a church and torches them alive.

The Liverpool City Council, incensed by what it called the "character assassination" of native son Banastre Tarleton — a former Liverpool lawmaker and Green Dragon leader on whom Tavington is based — has fired off a letter to Columbia Pictures demanding a public apology.

"Hollywood has a lab of taking away the character of noble English people and demonizing them," Liverpool Mayor Kevin Clin said. "We know it happened with 'Braveheart' and it is readily accepted with 'Titanic.' It's annoying this happens when the Americans make a film purporting to be factual."

Mel Gibson as Benjamin Martin totes Old Glory in the middle of a battle scene from the new Columbia TriStar film "The Patriot." Britons are demanding a public apology and a retraction over Gibson's latest blockbuster as British historians and journalists have savaged the supposedly authentic film.

CAFOs from setting up shop in the county.

However, the moratorium was a good move, Christensen said.

Christensen said it's difficult to say whether Twin Falls made the right decision in having a moratorium that includes CAFOs of all sizes, but he said the decision seems "appropriate based on the issues they have to deal with."

Meanwhile, Gooding County could lift its 2-month-old moratorium by the end of the month.

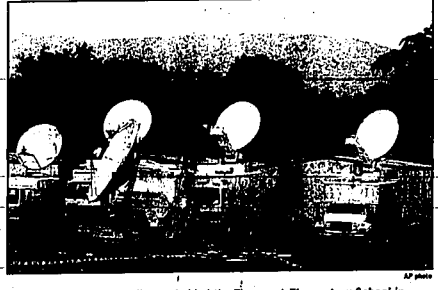

That's when Gooding County should have a new livestock ordinance in place, Commissioner Tom Faulkner said. When that ordinance is passed, the county would rescind the four-month moratorium.

Pediatricians often must guess how to use medications originally developed for adults - from allergy relievers and antibiotics to pain killers - in their tiniest patients.

That's finally changing: Clinical trials of medications in children are suddenly booming, and the Food and Drug Administration expects more than 18,000 young patients to participate in the next few years.

But how do families pick a safe study? After all, the government recently shut down several adult clinical trials for breaking vital patient-safety rules, including one study that killed an 18-year-old.

Children's studies also broach new ethical questions. Already, researchers are offering enticements like gift certificates to Toys plans to review the new ordinance at a hearing Monday night, he said.

Faulkner had no comment about the decision in Twin Falls County, but he said his county's moratorium has served its purpose well.

"I think it's a good way to give yourself some time to get a new ordinance in place if you need one," Faulkner said. "Once you start working on (a new ordinance), people tend to try to rush things in at the last minute. That's where a moratorium is helpful."

Summit

In a poll published Sunday by the Yediot Aharon newspaper, 52 percent of Israelis said Barak should go to the summit while 45 percent said he should stay home.

Barak's foreign minister, David Levy, will be remaining in Israel. Levy has served in both Likud and Labor governments, and is considered a barometer of Israeli public opinion.

Barak, in a statement before his departure for the summit, told the Israeli people that "this is the time to take decisions and to bequest a better future to our children."

"He said the negotiations would be "heart-rending" and that "no deal is perfect."

"The reality of life is highly complicated," he said.

Clinton, nearing the end of an eight-year presidency in which he has dealt with conflict in the Balkans, Ireland and the Persian Gulf, said the Israeli-Palestinian dispute "is perhaps the most difficult of all the peace problems in the world, certainly dealing with the most difficult issues of the whole Middle East peace process."

But, he said, Barak and Arafat both "have the vision, the knowledge, the experience and the ability and sheer guts to do what it takes, I think, to reach an agreement, and then to take it back to their people and see if they can sell it."

And, he said, "I am going to try to help them."

In a statement designed to bolster Barak's already-considerable confidence and resolve, Clinton said the prime minister was able to negotiate with the knowledge the Israeli public would have the final say in a referendum.

Last week, the President said he hoped an overall settlement could be reached within a few days. He is due to fly to Japan for an economic conference with the leaders of seven other countries on July 19.

On Monday, Clinton said the two sides already "have a pretty clear idea of what the various options are" and it's not as if we don't know what's out there to be done."

Jury convicts Utah doctor

FARMINGTON, Utah (AP) - Psychiatrist Robert Allen Weitzel has been convicted of two counts of manslaughter and three counts of negligent homicide in the deaths of five elderly patients.

Prosecutors contended the five died as a result of medication overdoses, the experience and the verdict was returned late Monday following a 19-day trial. Sentencing was set for Aug. 17.

Manslaughter is punishable by one to 15 years in prison and negligent homicide by zero to five years in prison.

Weitzel's attorneys argued that the patients were terminally ill and the doctor was merely trying to ease their pain in their final moments.

Davis County Attorney Mel Wilson told the jury that Weitzel had a definite "pattern of euthanasia," which is illegal in Utah, in dealing with five patients who died in a 16-day period beginning in December 1995.

He said the doctor "blasted" four of the five patients with anti-psychotic drugs until they seemed to be near death, then administered lethal doses of morphine.

"You have to use your common sense and you have to look at these patterns of conduct this doctor has engaged in," Wilson told the jurors.

Moratorium

comes in the wake of several fiery meetings between county commissioners and residents who have complained about the smell of some local dairies and their possible environmental effects.

The most recent meeting in June was attended by the commissioners - drew a large crowd to the Filer Middle School auditorium. All of the speakers advocated a moratorium. A petition circulated at the meeting got more than 100 signatures in support of a moratorium.

The reason for Monday's decision was twofold - partly to give the committee time to form and partly to consider concerns about congestion of livestock operations in the county, Commissioner Gary Grindstaff said. Some parts of the county already are crowded with livestock operations.

"That's what I'm really concerned about," he said.

Residents have suggested changing the sphere of influence requirements in the ordinance to several miles instead of one mile. The sphere of influence is the amount of space required between an operation and its closest neighbors.

The moratorium is the latest chapter in a long-running saga about large livestock operations in the county. Residents and some county leaders have said the large operations pose health threats to residents.

Several people have requested a moratorium in the past. Buhl activist Bill Chisholm has asked for a moratorium repeatedly since 1994.

But commissioners turned down those requests arguing that there were no imminent threats to the health and welfare of county residents.

Grindstaff said that argument is still true.

"Nobody has proved it," he said. "This moratorium is not for those factors."

Residents continued to pressure the commissioners. But pressure did not play much of a part in Monday's decision, Grindstaff said.

"Pressure shouldn't really matter, it's just doing the right thing," he said.

Commissioners Bill Brockman and Marvin Hempleman said Monday that 90 percent should be enough for a citizens' committee to form and review the county ordinance - which they agreed needs to be revised. "The committee will make up of seven to 10 people, including county residents and dairy and cattle industry representatives."

The committee will recommend ordinance changes to the county planning and zoning commission.

"The idea is that we don't drag on for a year trying to get something together," Hempleman said.

Brockman agreed.

"If (the committee) needs 10 more days then we might grant it but if they asked for 90 more days, that probably wouldn't happen," he said.

Monday's decision is not aimed at dairy dairies or other livestock operations, Brockman said.

"We're not putting anyone out of business," he said.

No new applications can be submitted to the county's planning and zoning director, said new permit applications have come in.

"As of now, we don't have anything new before us," he said.

The moratorium is a step in the right direction, said James DeKleinmans of Buhl, who, along with longtime Twin Falls resident and former banker David Mead, recently requested a moratorium.

"I think it's very courageous that the commissioners will do it," DeKleinmans said after Monday's meeting.

Florida smokers want cash from big tobacco

MIAMI (AP) — Smokers in a landmark case asked for up to $196 billion in punitive damages from the tobacco industry Monday to punish it for ruining the lives of millions of sick and addicted customers.

"This industry has left a half-century trail of deceit which has decimated millions of Americans," Stanley Rosenblatt said as closing arguments started in the two-year trial. "Never have so few caused so much harm to so many for so long, and the day of reckoning has arrived."

Each side has two days to summarize the disassociation case on behalf of 300,000 to 700,000 sick Florida smokers against the nation's five biggest cigarette makers.

The same six-member jury already has decided that the industry makes a deadly, defective product and awarded $12.7 million in compensatory damages to three representative smokers.

Rosenblatt called $154 billion an "appropriate" just number but suggested jurors consider a range of $123 billion to $196 billion. Witnesses for smokers testified the defendants could afford $150 billion to $157 billion.

Clinton resolves to stockpile heating oil

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton moved Monday to stockpile 2 million barrels of heating oil in the Northeast as politicians, eyeing the November election, looked for political costs in a sign of a respite of last winter's sharp price spike in home heating costs.

Heating oil stocks are alarmingly low for this time of year as refiners concentrate on pumping out as much gasoline as possible, raising concern of another supply crunch in the Northeast.

Bush: GOP hasn't always been friendly

BALTIMORE (AP) — George W. Bush, facing a skeptical audience, told the NAACP on Monday he recognizes the Republican Party has not always been seen as friendly toward blacks. He promised to work to improve relations, saying, "Our nation is harmed when we let our differences divide us."

"Some in my party have avoided the NAACP and ... some in the NAACP have avoided my party,"

Bush said, pausing between the two statements, drawing laughter and applause. "Before we get to the future, we must acknowledge our past."

There was a disruption just before the Texas governor was introduced when several protesters shouting "Remember Gary Graham" held up signs picturing the Texas death row inmate who was executed last month.

The NAACP has called the execution a "gross travesty of justice," but Bush said after his speech that organization officials told him the protesters were "outsiders."

Bush's appearance before the NAACP national convention was the first for a GOP presidential candidate since his father spoke to the convention during his 1988 campaign. In 1996 Bob Dole caused a flap when he declined an invitation.

"I have been looking forward to this," Bush told audience members, many of whom stood and clapped as he took the podium. In a 20-minute speech before an estimated 3,500, Bush said that "racism, despite all our progress, still exists."

"For my party, there's no escaping the reality that the party of Lincoln has not always carried the mantle of Lincoln," said Bush.

Veterans secretary resigns

WASHINGTON — (AP) — Veterans Affairs Secretary Togo West Jr., whose two-year tenure was marred by accusations of mismanagement, is stepping down with less than seven months left in the Clinton administration.

Under his leadership, the VA has begun to confront some long-neglected problems head-on, reaching out to more than 400,000 veterans who were exposed to Agent Orange, pressing for answers to the Gulf War syndrome and proper care for those who suffer from it, President Clinton said Monday at the White House.

West, a former Army secretary and lobbyist who plans to return to the private sector, will be succeeded by his deputy, Hershel Gober of Monticello, Ark., a veteran of both the Army and the Marine Corps.

Big Money

Florida smokers' request for punitive damages from tobacco industry:

- Philip Morris Inc. $75 billion-$118.5 billion
- R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. $19.6 billion-$37.5 billion
- Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp. $15 billion-$22 billion
- Lorillard Tobacco Co. $12.5 billion-$17 billion
- Liggett Group Inc. $900 million-$1.8 billion

Tobacco companies have argued they should not be required to pay any more than their combined net worth of $15.3 billion, the difference between assets and liabilities on financial balance sheets.

But Circuit Judge Robert Kaye refused to set any limit on possible damages. Florida law says a punitive verdict cannot put a company out of business, and judges are required to reduce any award that would.

The first smokers' class-action case to go to trial is expected to go to the jury late this week.

Albertson's launches e-marketing network

BOISE — InterAct Electronic Marketing Inc. and Boise-based Albertson's, America's second-largest retail grocer, announced a multi-year agreement for the first U.S. installation of the InterAct e-Marketing Network that does not require a frequent shopper card. InterAct's technology will be deployed in 500 Albertson's stores in California and Nevada. Albertson's shoppers there will be able to access customized purchase incentives and information before they shop by utilizing in-store web portals operated by InterAct.

Jabil Circuit Inc.'s growth may add 800-plus jobs

MERIDIAN — Jabil Circuit Inc. executives say the company's Treasure Valley expansion has potential to add more than 800 jobs. Jabil began operating in Idaho in 1998, when Hewlett-Packard Co. sold its printed circuit-board manufacturing operations in Boise and Bergamo, Italy, to Jabil for $80 million. Late last month, the St. Petersburg, Fla.-based Jabil said it would expand its Meridian manufacturing facility.

Randy Della, senior director of operations, said ground-breaking is scheduled this month, and construction would last for about six months. The current site includes about 170,000 square feet of manufacturing and office space. Della said Jabil will add about 58,000 square feet — about 75,000 square feet of which will be manufacturing space.

Already, plant employment has grown to about 700 people. That is expected to increase to about 1,000 by the year's end and between 1,500 and 1,700 by the end of 2001.

SEC warns audit firms to adopt new guidelines

NEW YORK — Securities and Exchange Commission Chairman Arthur Levitt warned the audit industry Monday it should move to meet SEC and court recommendations aimed at increasing independence from its clients, or Congress might have to step into the arena. "If this doesn't work, the next step will be a legislative solution," Levitt said at a public hearing in New York on audit effectiveness. "If I were the industry I would fear a legislative solution."

Levitt added the industry has opportunity to raise self-regulation without threat of legislative action. The SEC chairman made his comments in testimony to the Panel on Audit Effectiveness, an eight-member independent public panel charged with conducting a top-to-bottom review of the effectiveness of the auditing process.

The PAE began the first of two days of hearings in New York on its recently issued exposure draft that offered a number of recommendations to the audit industry. "The public's interest in the area has been disregarded for too long," Levitt said. "I implore the firms and the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants to heed the work of this panel... the cost-of-loss-of-investor-confidence cannot be overstated."

Valley construction hits pothole

Building industry growth takes a slide in April

By Virginia S. Hutchins
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Despite the beginning of a huge municipal construction project, April was no blockbuster month for Magic Valley's building industry, which launched just $18-million-worth of activity.

The estimated value of projects receiving building permits in April fell short of April 1999's total by $1.24 million — that's a 6.4 percent drop — for combined construction types in selected areas of the Magic Valley, according to data compiled in First Security Bank's recently released statewide report.

That performance was a disappointment after the valley's first quarter 2000, which topped first quarter 1999 construction values by $9 million, or 26 percent. In April, Gooding, Hailey, Blaine County, Shoshone, Cassia County and Twin Falls County and its namesake city improved on their year-earlier total values for combined construction types. Ketchum, Jerome, Rupert and the rest of Minidoka County lost ground in April.

A few parts of the valley routinely are not included in the bank's survey. And for April, Sun Valley as well is excluded from the report. See CONSTRUCTION, Page A6

Heinz's old red standby goes green

The Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — In an uncertain world, there always seemed to be a few things you could count on: the sky being blue, grass growing green and ketchup pouring out red.

But the world seems a little less certain after a jolt from Heinz: The company so thick into ketchup its own logo is red is introducing the unthinkable — green ketchup.

"Green is going to be a shocker for a lot of adults. But kids don't have those hangups," said Casey Keller, the point man on a worldwide push to reintroduce ketchup as a hip part of everyday meals for H.J. Heinz Co.

The new green ketchup tastes just like the old red stuff, even if it is the color of spinach. Company executives are hoping its unexpected color and plastic bottle, which squirts a stream so thin kids can draw with it, will pack in the fans.

"The core idea is to give kids more control and fun over their food," Keller said.

"Kids do, after all, eat more than half of all ketchup in the United States, he said.

The 131-year-old food company last year embarked on a new ketchup campaign after its share of the U.S. ketchup market dropped to about 43 percent in the late 1990s. Rather than going after adults who buy the ketchup, Heinz targeted teens, pitching it during breaks in shows like "Dawson's Creek," "Party of Five" and on MTV.

Heinz' market share rose to 51 percent, and last month the company announced a 5 percent increase in profits for the fourth quarter, due in part to increased ketchup sales.

The new color in its thin-stream bottle is just the latest push. The company also added Vitamin C to encourage parents to buy it. John McMillin, a food analyst with Prudential Securities in New York, said the product illustrates the company's effort to be innovative, particularly with an established product.

Timothy Heinz, 10, decorates a hamburger with squirts of Heinz's new EZ Squirt bottled green ketchup at a commercial photo shoot in Pittsburgh. "A lot of kids are going to love it," Heinz said. "I told one guy about it, and he'll like, 'No way! I'll draw stuff with it and eat a lot more ketchup.'"

The new green ketchup will be in stores by October at a price about 20 cents higher than the red stuff.

Cellular companies move toward digital

New contender to enter local market

By Rachel Denny
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — Analog is on its way out and digital is on its way in.

Although a few cellular phone customers still prefer analog service, a number of cellular phone companies are recognizing an increasing segment of their customers prefer digital, said Donnie Castleman, president and chief operating officer of Newcom Wireless LLC.

"The biggest difference with analog is you're limited with the services with that technology," he said. "Analog is much easier to be cavedropped on. If customers want caller ID, message-waiting indicator and wireless Internet, they are only available on digital. Talk time is triple with digital."

Castleman has a reason to spread that news—Newcom Wireless, based in Bend, Ore., will begin offering local service in December or January. Newcom is a wireless affiliate with AT&T.

It will have offices in Twin Falls, Jerome, Burley, Sun Valley, Idaho Falls and Rexburg and will build a switching facility in Pocatello. Right now the company is trying to pin down office space, negotiating for use of existing communications towers and soliciting applications for employment, Castleman said.

More than 60 employees will staff those offices in Idaho, with 30 percent of AT&T's Twin Falls, Castleman said. He didn't know yet how many the company would hire in its other Magic Valley locations.

"What you see with Newcom is we have been involved with wireless carriers that deliver a good system, quality rates and good customer service," Castleman said. "We have advantages in people being able to travel nationwide with one rate."

Other cellular phone companies in the Twin Falls area have begun switching their services from analog to digital, including Tri-Cellular and Paging and U.S. Cellular.

Both of these companies still provide analog service, whereas Newcom is strictly digital.

"There are advantages for both," said Kim Jorgensen, co-owner of Tri-Cellular and Paging. "It depends on the needs of the customer."

Some customers have stayed with analog because it fits their needs better, said Ruth Bowers, U.S. Cellular's interim retail sales manager for Hailey, Burley and Lewiston.

"We always have some customers who don't like digital," she said. "We won't force those customers onto digital. Any company that goes with purely one type is not looking at their customers and what they want. We're not pushing our customers off analog."

The trend shows customers prefer digital for the most part; 80 percent of AT&T's customers choose digital over analog service, Castleman said.

With Newcom's entrance into Twin Falls, cellular phone customers will have one more choice. A couple of current providers said they welcome Newcom.

"Competition isn't necessarily bad," Jorgensen said. "It will meet the needs that one company might not, but we're not going to roll over and play dead."

"It's a good opportunity for us to remain competitive," Bowers said. "Different companies offer different products that are needed by the customers. They shouldn't be with a service that's not taking care of their needs. We try to offer as much as we can and increase technology whenever it's available to us."

Low closes to mixed stocks in quiet trading

NEW YORK (AP) - Stocks were mixed in a quiet session Monday as investors moved cautiously in advance of second-quarter earnings reports that will begin in earnest late this week. High-tech issues fell amid profit-taking. The Dow Jones industrial average rose 10.49 to 10,488.8, while the S&P 500 advanced 0.10 to 1,006.75. The Nasdaq composite index slipped 42.91 to 3,880.29. The Standard & Poor's 500 index fell 3.28 to 1,375.62. 'Everybody is kind of waiting and watching until corporate earnings announcements will full stride the end of this week,' said Alan Ackerman, senior vice president at Falmestock & Co. 'When the first three-quarter reports, reported profits that were 2 cents per share above Wall Street expectations. Investors rewarded the announcement, sending its stock up $2.06 to $29.68. Investors sold technology stocks after a brief run-up last week. 'It was some hedge-profiting-tail with the techs,' said Bryan Piskrowski, a market analyst with Prudential Securities. 'It's earnings season now and these companies have to either put up or shut up.' Microsoft slipped $2.56 to $79.438 and Intel fell $1.50 to $37.183. Yahoo!, scheduled to release its earnings on Tuesday, fell $6.50 to $140. Investors were still digesting a positive jobs report from the government on Friday. The report gave the latest evidence that the U.S. economy is slowing in response to the Federal Reserve's six interest rate increases since last June. Most economists now expect the Fed to leave rates unchanged for the next few months. While that's good news for investors who were unimpressed earlier this year by the Fed's actions, there is still a great deal of concern in the market that the cumulative effect of the rate hikes will mean a drop in corporate profits. Retailers that have been battered in 2000 due to slowing sales had a turnaround Monday after Prudential Securities upgraded its rating on several downtown merchants. Best Buy rose $3.75 to $74.125, Gap up $2.75 to $37.875 and Home Depot gained $2.75 to $57.75. Meanwhile, Monday's early announcement by JDS Uniphase, a big fiber-optics company, that it was buying rival SDL for $41 billion, sent JDS tumbling $15.06, or 13 percent to $101.125. SDO rose $25.375, or 9 percent, to $280.625. Lehman Brothers upgraded its rating of computer chip maker Applied MicroDevices, which rose $2.125 to $84.125. Yahoo!, scheduled to release its earnings on Tuesday, fell $6.50 to $140.

George Swan deserves everyone's best wishes

News that George Swan is battling cancer stopped us cold last week. Swan, the GOP candidate to succeed Randy Hansen in the Idaho Legislature, is one tough cowboy. And he's only 50 years old.

We hope Swan wins every round of this fight. We'll assume, as he does, that he'll corral his ailment and be able to serve in office. When he does, we're confident he'll serve with distinction. Like many others, we are praying for his full and timely recovery.

Meanwhile, unseemly politicking to succeed him is both premature and tasteless. It is likely to backfire.

Drug testing makes sense

The Buhl School District is wise to accommodate random drug testing on students whose parents approve. The program is voluntary, so parents who don't want their children tested are free to decline.

All across America, people are taking substantive steps toward stamping out illegal drug use. What's happening in Buhl is another good step.

But it begs an important question: Why aren't teachers subject to random drug tests? Many workers in the private sector must submit to random drug tests, as do many public employees. Public school teachers, who are powerful role models for our children, shouldn't be exempt.

Immunize your children

There's no good reason for the immunization rate for Idaho's children to be going down. Nationally, the immunization rate is going up — but in Idaho, it's falling. The state's immunization rate of around 70 percent is among the lowest in the nation.

Modern medicine can protect today's children from measles, mumps, chicken pox, polio. If parents would simply immunize their children, these and other common diseases could be a thing of the past.

Part of the problem is ignorance. Many immunization critics say, truthfully, that their non-immunized kids haven't gotten sick. That's because their non-immunized children are largely surrounded by children who have been immunized. If everyone followed the critics' example, we'd have rampant and cemeteries were filled with tiny graves.

We'll concede that, in rare instances, immunization shots can pose a threat to youngsters. So does lightning. Most sensible people stay off the roof during lightning storms. Similarly, most sensible people weigh the risks — and then immunize their children.

Story brings war experience home

Upon reading Parade in the July 2 Times-News, "Something worth defending," I was reminded of my World War II experiences in 1945-46 in the Philippines.

Between 40 and 50 Signal Corps Specialists (electronic) were based at a relocation depot approximately 30 miles from Manila, camped out on a hard-baked rice paddy. It was nearly impossible to stake tents, and digging latrines was horrendous.

At any rate, my buddies and I watched the relocation depot inhabitants pile into trucks for the "front" and come back the next day as human cord wood stacked in the back of trucks.

My Signal Corps buddies were very sure that our orders to Manila from New Guinea were lost. Also with us were some very well-trained paratroopers. We figured that they were lost, too.

I hitched a ride into the Army headquarters area and out-faxed a second lieutenant to request the general for two minutes of his precious time. He said that he didn't have a telephone on his desk! Further, that I and my Signal Corps buddies were misplaced or our papers were lost.

Within 24 hours, papers had been cut and our Signal Corps group was in Manila.

We found warehouses full of radio receivers, transmitters and field telephones inoperable and electronic parts scattered. In a few weeks, the Signal Corps had things repaired and back in the field. My Signal Corps buddies worked extremely hard and well to replace or repair the field equipment for the Army, thereby doing their part for freedom.

In the process, my ratings went from Cpl. Tech 5 to master sergeant. As a grandson said, "Well, Grandpa, ratings in war are faster than in peace time."

The well-trained paratroopers were relocated also and were instrumental in retaking Corregidor.

All in all, it takes excellent mental, physical and emotional abilities to wage and win a war.

Corporate world exploits war

Are the wars forgotten? For those persons who actually fight in them, or even if they have only deployed within the theater, war is remembered with extreme clarity. War is a unique experience and highly personal. Most veterans can easily relate to another veteran's war, because even though each is different, they are all the same. War is simple: it's kill and continue to kill until somebody quits.

But for the wealthy industrialists and politicians who have profited by our civilized method of slaughter, they wish war to be forgotten. They wish war to be forgotten so they can resurrect it in myth and monument. They wish to remanufacture the reality so they can beat the drum and get on with the next profitable venture they — and their own sons and daughters — don't have to fight in.

General Butler, United States Marine Corps, said it best: "There are only two things to fight for: Your home and the Bill of Rights. Everything else is a racket." No truer words were ever said, but in America, those are the two things we don't fight for. We fight, not for liberty and freedom, but for our profits and petty loads. So remember, when your sons or daughters die in war, it's so someone can make a profit and someone can have a job. Wave the flag? Go ahead. I'll keep my hands in my pockets.

Dems aren't giving up on Al Gore — yet

When the nation's governors met here this week on the campus of Penn State, the outnumbered Democrats understandably felt a little bit like an undermanned Northwestern squad coming in to play Joe Paterno's Nittany Lion.

Only seven Democratic governors got here early enough for a Saturday strategy session with Bill Daley, the outgoing commerce secretary, who has just taken over as manager of Vice President Gore's White House campaign. Reinforcements arrived the next day, but, even in the absence of Texas Gov. George W. Bush and his brother, Florida Gov. Jeb Bush, Republicans heavily outnumbered Democrats at the National Governors' Association conference table.

The Republicans were predictably bullish on Bush. Seventeen months ago, at a similar gathering in Washington, D.C., close to half the 31 Republican governors made an unprecedented early bet on the Texas governor for the GOP nomination. They are more than satisfied that he comes into the Republican convention in Philadelphia leading Vice President Gore in almost every poll.

Bush has targeted a number of states with Republican governors that President Clinton won't touch: Indiana, Wisconsin Gov. Tommy Thompson, who was unable to carry his state for either President Bush or Bob Dole, when they ran against Clinton, said with seeming assurance that this time, "I think we're winning. And if we're winning in Wisconsin, it means Al Gore is in some kind of trouble."

Given the euphoria in Republican ranks about Bush's prospects, the surprise of the NGA meeting was the show of confidence from the Democrats. Delicately, as well as publicly, they insist that Gore is far from a cooked goose. Daley had to do little handholding, and found no mutinies to quell.

One reason for the relatively sanguine view — less panicky than one hears from Democrats in Washington — is that some of these governors have seen Gore campaign in their states and have come away impressed. Iowa Gov. Tom Vilsack was publicly neutral when former Sen. Bill Bradley challenged Gore in the Iowa caucuses, though his wife was helping Gore. "When he focuses on an opponent and their differences on the issues, he is really strong," Vilsack says.

A second reason is that they have seen this situation before — but in reverse. Kentucky Gov. Paul Patton says he can recall that "in the summer of 1988, the incumbent vice president was running behind a very popular, new face governor," but by November, that governor, Democrat Michael Dukakis, had blown his lead and was badly beaten by the elder George Bush.

North Carolina Gov. Jim Hunt concedes there is no reason to think the current Bush will be as inept a campaigner as Dukakis. "There may not be as much of a falloff," Hunt says, but he and others say they're convinced that when voters learn more about Texas' poor standing among the leaders on health care and other vital issues, some of the gloss will come off Bush's reputation.

But perhaps the biggest reason they believe that Gore can recover and win is, that they have won races they were supposed to lose themselves. Vilsack, for example, says, "Gore's campaign reminds me so much of my own race," when he was running for governor in 1998. "I came out of a very tough primary, and I was running behind an opponent (Jim Ross Lightfoot) who was better known and better financed than I was. The summer was very frustrating, because no one was paying attention and nothing I did seemed to work."

"It's the same way for Gore now. I just finished five days of walking 20 to 25 miles a day, talking with hundreds of Iowans. And they are not talking or thinking about politics. But that will change in the fall. It did in 1998 and it will again this year."

Maryland Gov. Parris Glendening says that he was lagging behind Republican opponent Ellen Sauerbrey well into October of 1998. "And then we finally got people to focus on her record, rather than her rhetoric." Some of Glendening's political consultants are now in the Gore campaign, and the tough attacks they launched on Sauerbrey — distortions, in the view of Maryland Republicans — may well prestage a similar barrage of anti-Bush ads from the Gore campaign and the Democratic Party.

But talking with two retiring Democratic governors who are candidates in close Senate races in presidential battleground states, Mel Carnahan of Missouri and Tom Carper of Delaware, provided the most convincing evidence that Democrats are not bailing out on Gore.

LETTER

Help HealthNet support youth

On July 4 in the Target parking lot, I saw a group of youth demonstrating their form of recreation and talent. They were skateboarding to garner support for the skateboard park. There were many people watching this demonstration. If they were like me, they were admiring the skills and talents these youth possess.

The Twin Falls County HealthNet Coalition is working to improve the community for youth. HealthNet uses the results of the asset survey that youth have completed to direct the activities of the coalition in directions that will meet the gaps.

When youth completed the asset survey in 1998, they reported that opportunities for constructive use of time were low. The HealthNet Coalition feels that the skateboard park is a wonderful opportunity to improve our community for youth, which are our customers, future business owners and, ultimately, future parents and decision-makers.

The skateboard park will offer the opportunity to build many assets for our youth. It will demonstrate how our community values its youth. It will provide a safe place for youth to go to do what they enjoy. It will offer the opportunity for youth to learn from other youth. It will provide a location for youth to exercise and breathe clean air. As an adult, I hope to strap on my roller blades, pads and helmet and give it a try.

Please support the efforts of the youth and adults to get the skateboard park. The HealthNet Coalition is supporting the efforts monetarily, as well as garnering public support. Anything that you can provide is needed. Please show that you support Twin Falls County youth by supporting the skateboard park. The present and future youth appreciate the opportunity to learn how to skateboard, roller blade and/or roller skate.

I want to thank you, in advance, for your support of this much-needed opportunity.

America should guard closely against global resentment

The extraordinary preponderance in world affairs that America now enjoys is a problem rather than a blessing. A main theme for other nations is to build counterweights to American power.

The Russians and Chinese have made this a central theme of their foreign policies. Our European allies, as well, see it as one of the main purposes of the growing European Union — to be a counterweight to the United States. A number of Third World countries openly declare their unhappiness with a world that is now "unbalanced" since the demise of the Soviet Union.

Most likely, this will last for a long time. There is no center that will be able to build the scale and range of America's global preponderance for the foreseeable future. But this does not exhaust the problem of American foreign policy in the real world, our predominant strength is not enough by itself to ensure against a range of potential disasters.

Whether America's physical preponderance translates into predominant influence over events depends, for one thing, on a variety of intangibles — like political will and staying power, the credibility of commitments, our perceived willingness or unwillingness to take risks, our reputation for reliability and competence.

All these depend on our actual performance over time — and could be badly undermined by a policy fiasco (such as a failed military intervention).

Even if we remain No. 1 in the GDP standings for a long time, both we and the international system are more vulnerable than we seem to realize. In the military dimension, there are potential adversaries attempting to zero in on our weaknesses. Some, for example, are pursuing (by either advanced conventional weapons or weapons of mass destruction) to raise the risk of American casualties and thereby to deter us from intervening against regional challenges.

In the economic sphere, the Asian crisis was a warning of the fragility of the international financial system, and the present prosperity remains vulnerable to crisis. In the political realm, relations among all the world's major powers are much more precarious than they were a decade ago in the first euphoric years after the Cold War.

The United States can defuse some of the international resentments by a foreign policy based on the American national interest, rather than a Wilsonian mission of global improvement. Given the scale of American preeminence, our assertiveness in any cause, no matter how selfless we perceive it to be, is seen by others — including our friends — as an assertion of our power. How else to explain the paradox that resentment of the United States seems to be so high in the time of an administration so eager to be virtuous?

A policy grounded in the American national interest, paradoxically, implies less sweeping American claims and thus a greater possibility of fruitful collaboration with friendly countries.

Strategically, the United States is in a central, pivotal position. All other powers either need us for something (protection, economic ties), or are afraid to cross us, or are afraid to leave us in bed with another power they fear as a more immediate rival.

In addition to maintaining our military strength, therefore, this central position furnishes the essence of a political strategy for the American superpower: It gives us flexibility and leverage, and the possibility of having better relations with the world's other powers than they have with each other. It will help us preserve our position of advantage over the long term.

Despite its predominant power, the United States would be smart to conduct itself as a good internationalist — helping maintain the world economic system, meeting its responsibility to preserve the balance of power, working in concert with capable and like-minded nations and international institutions wherever possible. On security matters, too, we should prefer to consult and work with allies. Building and leading an international consensus is a task at which the United States has demonstrated great skill over the postwar period.

Yet there are some important security issues on which we will not be able to sacrifice our freedom of action even if it means being accused of "unilateralism." If international pressures on us seem not based on serious strategic analysis (e.g., to ban all land mines, or to ease pressures on Iraq, or to constrain all missile defenses) we have a responsibility to say no. Whether we will be indulged on this score by our friends, in return for our more dutiful internationalism on all the other issues — as a new "grand bargain" — remains to be seen.

School district plans bleacher inspection

TWIN FALLS - The Twin Falls School Board today will be briefed on district plans to inspect bleachers at Twin Falls High School's Bruin Stadium.

One of the bleachers' wooden steps gave way during the Shriners All-Star football game in late May, Superintendent Terrell Donichit said. No one was seriously hurt, he said.

The district will have engineers inspect the wooden steps and the planks in the seating area.

In other business, the School Board will review a study on parking conditions at Morningstar Elementary School; review a school radon inspection report that met environmental safety guidelines; and decide whether to name the old high Twin Falls High School gym in memory of Richard Baun, teacher and high school administrator from 1956 until 1988. Baun died in December. He was 73.

The board will swear in re-elected board members Bryan Matsuoka and Mike McIntyre. The board also will elect its leadership for the next year.

The board will meet at 7 p.m. in the district office, 201 Main Ave. W.

National group honors three Jerome deputies

JEROME - A national law enforcement association will award three local deputy sheriffs for bravery and dedication in maintaining justice in the county.

Deputy sheriffs Daniel Hamrick, Stuart Smith and Rodney Wolverton of the Jerome County Sheriff's Department will receive the TOP COPS Award from the National Association of Police Organizations.

The officers were nominated by Sheriff Jim Weaver for the award for their work during a Sept. 19, 1999, standoff.

The officers responded to a domestic violence call. Smith and Hamrick were wounded in a barrage of gunfire. Wolverton served as the mediator between the wounded officers and a suspect, Erik Buchanan, who was taken into custody after a negotiation with local SWAT units.

Buchanan later pleaded guilty to aggravated battery and two counts of aggravated battery on a peace officer.

The officers will be honored at a ceremony in Washington, D.C., on Aug. 5.

The TOP COPS awards pay tribute to law enforcement officers from across the country for outstanding service to their communities during the preceding year.

Buhl voters to decide on school levy today

BUHL - Voters today will decide the fate of a two-year, $500,000 school levy.

Polls will be open from noon to 8 p.m. All voting will be at Buhl High School, 525 Sawtooth, and absentee ballots must be received by the district clerk by 8 p.m.

The levy - which requires a simple majority to pass - would raise $250,000 per school year.

The current levy in Buhl is $0.04856261 per $1,000 of taxable value. If the levy is passed, that figure would increase to .005568735. The supplemental levy could cover a range of programs requested by residents and staff.

Hagerman School Board to discuss recall date

HAGERMAN - The Hagerman School Board will meet at 8 p.m. today at 342 N. Second Ave.

Board members will discuss a recall election date and could set a date, said district clerk Bette Reed. Other business includes interview dates for applicants for high school principal; the ouster of former principal Wayne Ills has triggered the recall drive.

Blaine commissioners discuss medical services

HAILEY - Blaine County commissioners will meet at 10 a.m. today in the third floor meeting room of the old county courthouse.

Commissioners will discuss emergency medical services with fire and ambulance districts and Mike Williams, from the Abaris Group.

At 1:30 p.m., commissioners will attend a presentation by Northwest Bee-Corp on medical administration strategies.

'Conflict defenders' prepare for court

By Brandon Flate Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - One man charged in connection with an escape from the Twin Falls County Jail was arraigned in District Court Monday.

Arraignment for a second suspect was delayed. Randall D. McCullough, 29, and Kevin John Scheer, 22, are in jail awaiting additional hearings.

McCullough pleaded innocent to charges of escape, robbery and eluding a police officer, said Roger Harris, a public defender assigned to the case. A hearing for McCullough will be held July 31.

"I expect McCullough's case to be resolved short of trial," Harris said.

Scheer's arraignment was continued until July 17. He faces two escape charges, and has pleaded guilty to one of the charges, said Tim Williams, the public defender representing Scheer.

Scheer earlier pleaded guilty to walking away from the Community Work Center, a minimum-security program that allows inmates to work during the day. The other escape charge has been continued, Williams said.

McCullough, Scheer and 22-year-old Phillip Conrad Gleason were charged in connection with an April 29 escape from the jail, and police say the three later stole a car across the street at City Park.

Gleason and McCullough were later apprehended after a car chase from Murtough to Jackpot, Nev.

Scheer was arrested at the Holiday Motel on Addison Avenue West. Gleason and McCullough were both awaiting sentencing at the time of the escape - Gleason on charges of drug possession and a felony charge of eluding police, and McCullough on forgery charges. At the time, Scheer was scheduled to appear in court to plead guilty to the charge of walking away from the Community Work Center; he has since pleaded guilty to that charge.

Harris and Williams are known as "conflict defenders," attorneys who take cases if the regular public defender could have a conflict of interest, said

Judge Daniel Meehl, who arraigned McCullough.

"Because there are other guys involved in the escape, there could be a conflict of interest," said Williams, a private attorney who has a public defender conflict contract with Harris. "If they start pointing fingers at each other, or have divergent interests, there could be a conflict."

Harris and Williams are not working together on the cases.

Commissioners will consider options on proposed settlement

By Karen Terrell Times-News correspondent

ELKO, Nev. - County commissioners will consider five options Wednesday, when they resume discussion on a proposed settlement with the federal government over South Canyon Road near Jarbidge.

A vote on accepting or denying the agreement was tabled last month, until after a self-proclaimed Shovel Brigade "could protest at the road site. About 500 volunteers last week dug out 300 feet of a washed-out 900-foot section of road.

The county's options are as follows: • Approving it. • Disapproving it. • Sending the agreement back to the mediation panel.

• Placing the proposed agreement on the ballot. During a lengthy public meeting last month, some people favored rejecting the agreement because the road's owner, and the federal government did not guarantee it would rebuild the road.

Residents question air ambulance change

By Jay Hovsar Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - Members of the county hospital board knew they would have to serve with the public last month, and that notion was reaffirmed Monday.

Several area residents showed up at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center's regular board meeting Monday evening to voice their concern about the board's recent decision to change air ambulance services.

Last month, the board voted to replace the Life Flight program, sponsored by Saint Alphonsus Regional Medical Center in Boise, to Access Air Ambulance, also based in Boise.

Life Flight has provided emergency air ambulance service here since September 1998 and has built a strong reputation among those who used the service.

Before the vote, board members had received many telephone calls, faxes and letters from people supporting the Life Flight program. Continuing the show of support for the Life Flight service, Magic Valley residents told the board Monday how much they value the program.

Marge Mason, a nurse at St. Benedict's Family Medical Center in Jerome, said she is concerned patients will be losing a valuable asset if Life Flight is replaced. She explained that things get pretty hectic in the emergency room she works in, but amid the chaos Life Flight workers are quick to step in and ask how they can help.

"I can't say enough good things about them. I think switching services at this point would be a sad disservice to the residents of this valley," Mason said.

Castleford resident Terry Kramer agreed. Though a farmer by profession, he works with the Castleford Quick Response Unit, and he said that group's association with Life Flight has been invaluable.

He said Life Flight surgical nurses have given training to his unit, which serves the area west of Castleford about 35 miles into the Brunner Desert - an area that is mostly inaccessible from the ground.

Kramer said he recalled a time when the Life Flight team waited for about 10 hours for an injured girl to stabilize enough to be taken to Saint Alphonsus. Kramer said this example shows how Life Flight has proven its remarkable dedication to the well-being of its patients.

"Anyone can drive a helicopter from point A to point B, but Life Flight has a history of being intricately involved in the health-care system," he said. "We think this is really important and we trust Life Flight to provide this service for us. We would like you to seriously reconsider your switching."

When asked why the change was made, Board Chair Terry Schultz said the reason was primarily twofold: first, to take advantage of an opportunity to expand the hospital's presence into Elko County; and second, to develop a partnership with Boise-based St. Luke's Regional Medical Center, which is allied with Access Air.

Schultz said the board viewed Access Air as an equal service to Life Flight, and the board simply felt more comfortable entering into a multi-million-dollar partnership with St. Luke's than Saint Alphonsus.

Life Flight Director Chris Marselle said she is not surprised by the show of support Monday night.

"We have an extremely supportive membership, and I wouldn't expect anything different. They know quality when they see it, and we have a very loyal base," she said.

Twin Falls City Council mulls downtown study

By John T. Huddy Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - The City Council Monday approved a proposed downtown study - with one condition.

The council discussed a proposal from Tim Jones, the city's Business Improvement District director, to support a downtown market study by Tom Hudson of the Moscow-based Hudson and Company.

The $55,423 study would be done over six months. The council would pay $25,000, and the city's Urban Renewal Agency would kick in another $25,000. The remaining $5,423 would be donated by the city's business districts.

The study would give the district a strategic business plan, Jones said.

"This new proposal will give us the tools to move ahead," he told the council Monday.

The study would include the definition of target markets and market niches, business recruitment and retention programs, marketing strategies and an estimated budget for all strategic elements, a city

Hudson helped draft a strategic plan for the city to revitalize the downtown in the early 1990s.

"The Business Development Guide will be a hard-copy document designed to direct and implement strategic business development in Downtown and Old Towne, Twin Falls. The guide will provide concrete, specific directions for strategic programming in the city center," Hudson said in a letter to Dave McAlindin, the city's economic development director.

The council approved Jones' request on condition that a proposal for a north Main Street Local Improvement District plan is supported by downtown merchants.

That plan failed last year because of a lack of petition signatures. To form the LID, two-thirds of the owners of property subject to assessment must sign a petition.

Of 25 property owners in the 200 and 300 blocks of Main Avenue North and a few blocks of Second "ns," 17 "ccals" were required. The

Divining for water Glens Ferry taps into treatment facility

By Michael Jounree Times-News writer

GLENS FERRY - Finally, this thirsty city has found a drinking water solution that residents can swallow.

After 50 years of struggling with their water supply, including recent violations of the Safe Water Drinking Act and several years of a modified boil-water order, Glens Ferry residents will soon be able to count on clean water coming from their taps.

The final piece of a $5 million puzzle snapped into place Monday when Glens Ferry announced that federal, state and local funders would help pay for a new 2-million-gallon-per-day water treatment facility for the city.

The final piece in the puzzle was a $1-million grant and loan combination from the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Rural Development program and another $500,000 from the state Department of Commerce.

That $1.5 million added to $3.6 million in state and federal loans and grants brings the total to $5.1 million for the plant that should be running by December 2001.

The new plant will draw water from the Snake River for municipal use. Coupled with the soon-to-be city-owned pull from its nitrate-tainted spring source, city Clerk David Hahn hopes the plant will allow Glens Ferry to pull out of its decades of long drought.

"We've had our share of water problems, and I think this funding is finally going to allow that cloud to vanish," Hahn said.

Judge grants order barring logging on 'Hole in the Headwaters'

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A judge on Monday barred the Pacific Lumber Co. from using huge helicopters to pluck trees from private land surrounded by the Headwaters Forest Reserve.

The Sierra Club and another group sued to block the logging plan for "the hole in the Headwaters," a 705-acre parcel that Pacific Lumber got last year as part of the $480 million deal to create the new reserve.

Judge Quentin Kopp, who heard one day of arguments in Eureka earlier this month, issued a temporary restraining order pending a full trial later this summer. He said "irreparable injury will occur to the public interest" if the area is logged without first the public's ability to enforce the law.

Pacific Lumber had asked for a bond of $1 million or more. In a statement, the company said it "was obviously disappointed with the ruling."

"However, we are confident that we will prevail on the merits of the case during the upcoming trial," Pacific Lumber Chief Executive John Campbell said. "Our inability to operate on this plan will result in hardship for the company and our employees, as the judge recognized in his requirement that a bond be posted."

Saint Alphonsus Regional Medical Center receives recognition for clinical excellence

BOISE (AP) — For the third time in seven months, Saint Alphonsus Regional Medical Center has been recognized as one of the top 100 hospitals in the nation for clinical excellence.

Saint Alphonsus was the only Idaho hospital to make the list. Its cardiac programs were recognized for "outstanding perfor-

Security breach halts work at DOE lab

YAKIMA, Wash. (AP) — Classified work at the Pacific Northwest National Laboratory was temporarily halted after a secret document was mistakenly photocopied and left in an unsecured but locked office.

The security breach occurred June 29 when an employee at the lab in Richland copied several unclassified drawings along with a classified one in a secure area, then took the papers to an office outside the secure area and left them locked up there, lab spokesman Greg Koller said Monday.

involving classified projects, was ordered July 3. Some classified work has resumed and the remainder should start again later this week, Koller said.

The security flap comes on the heels of the national uproar over a security breach at the Los Alamos National Laboratory in New Mexico, where two computer hard drives with information used to disable nuclear weapons were determined to be missing in June before turning up mysteriously the next day. The breach was not reported to DOE for more than three weeks.

The incident occurred as a range fire swept across the nearby Hanford nuclear reservation, but the security lapse was unrelated to the blaze, Koller said.

Cassia grants tax cut, in part

By Ruth Stretcher
Times-News writer

BURLEY — Cassia County commissioners Monday approved a 10 percent decrease in a Burley chemical company's property valuation, a reduction considerably less than what the company had requested.

Tessenderlo Kerley, which produces the fumigant metam sodium, appealed the county's 1999 property appraisal, made after the company bought Sundance Ag in September 1999. The company wanted the county to reduce the assessed value of the property to about 40 percent of its current assessed value of about $6.8 million.

Tessenderlo Kerley said the county had built "intangible values" into the new assessed value, "because the purchase cost of the assets has increased over the historic cost of the assets," according to an affidavit signed Friday by Bruce A. Fathery with the accounting firm Deloitte & Touche, an Austin, Texas firm representing Tessenderlo Kerley. But Tessenderlo Kerley has not provided a list of those intangible values, county attorney Kerry McMurray told Cassia County commissioners in a Monday tax appeal hearing. McMurray said the company was asked to provide that list, but hasn't.

No representatives from the company were present at Monday's hearing.

"We don't believe they have provided any evidence that says we have been wrong in our values," McMurray said.

In 1996, the county assessor valued the property of Sundance Ag at $2.7 million. After Tessenderlo Kerley acquired Sundance Ag, Tessenderlo Kerley reported it rebooked costs to the county, and the county in turn valued the property as reported, "without adjustment for historic cost or actual age," the affidavit said. The assessor's reassessment to about $6.8 million.

Tessenderlo Kerley is requesting the value be reduced to

"what it would have been had the sale not taken place," an assessed value of about $2.6 million.

A $6.8 million assessment means an estimated $79,514 in taxes, while a $2.6 million assessment means an estimated $30,557.66 bill, according to the Cassia County treasurer's office.

"That is only an estimated amount based on 1999 levies.

In a "goodwill" gesture that he said acknowledges possible intangibles in property value, McMurray recommended a 10 percent tax cut. That would reduce the property's valuation to just over $6.1 million, and reduce the company's property taxes by $7,951.

Upon hearing of the commissioners' decision, Fathery said Monday that the company had hoped for the reduction it had proposed.

Bywater likely will resign before new prosecutor takes office

By Ruth Stretcher
Times-News writer

BURLEY — Cassia County Prosecutor Stephen Bywater, who lost the May primary election to former prosecutor Al Barrus, appeared poised to resign before January 2001, when his elected term would expire.

Bywater hasn't yet submitted an official resignation, Cassia County commissioners said. But commissioners were discussing Bywater's anticipated resignation with Barrus in Monday's commissioners' meeting.

Bywater was in a jury trial Monday. He could not be reached for comment and has a unlisted home telephone number.

Barrus met with commissioners Monday to go over aspects of the transition. Commission Chair Christensen told Barrus the sooner he could come on as prosecutor, the better.

If Bywater resigns, the Cassia County Republican Committee would have 15 days to recommend to the commissioners up to three candidates for interim prosecutor. Then the commissioners would have another 15 days to select someone to take charge until Barrus takes office.

In his first challenge race in 16 years as prosecutor, Bywater narrowly lost the Republican primary. Barrus won with 1,984 1,920, or 49 percent.

Bywater was deputy prosecutor in 1984 when his Barrus, his then boss, decided not to seek reelection. Bywater was elected that year and Barrus became deputy prosecutor until 1994, when he left to pursue private practice.

Forest Service says it will abandon Deadwood River roadless area initiative

BOISE (AP) — Faced with continued controversy and a change in federal policy, Boise National Forest Supervisor Dave Rittenhouse announced on Monday that he is abandoning a four-year-old management initiative in the Deadwood River roadless area near Lowman.

"There is still an urgent need to increase the resistance and resilience of the ecosystem in the Deadwood area," Rittenhouse said in a statement. But "I do not believe that continued analysis ... would be the most effective and responsible use of forest funds and personnel."

He said the forest would make new management proposals over the next several months to address some of the issues the 1996 initiative was aimed at.

The Boise National Forest had proposed a combination of prescribed fires and logging to thin the 150,000-acre Deadwood area to return fire density to the historic level of a century ago with a significantly greater proportion of trees traditionally resistant to wild fire. Land managers said the tree density is currently 10 times the historic level and heavily comprised of shade-tolerant species. That, they say, has made the area susceptible to disease and insect infestation and wild-fire.

The forest also intended to stabilize the Deadwood River road that was damaged three years ago by a thunderstorm and has been leaching sediment into the river.

But conservationists have gone to court repeatedly against attempts to log the area, claiming the Forest Service had given insufficient consideration to the impact of logging on sensitive species.

Rittenhouse cited the court battles along with President Clinton's roadless initiative and the protection of bull trout and Canada lynx under the Endangered Species Act as prompting the abandonment of the 1996 proposal. He said they made the past Forest Service environmental analysis outdated.

And while the roadless initiative does allow helicopter logging, Rittenhouse said not enough of that could be done in the Deadwood area to markedly improve the forest's condition.

Water

whether their tap water is safe, the city has been unable to foster serious economic development efforts because their spring water simply cannot produce enough water.

"It better be a call company or something like that where it's just going to be a bunch of computers and a bathroom and that's it," Hahn said. "Any major industry that wants to use our system would sink us."

Combining water from the Snake and water pumped from the spring the city has used as its only water source for decades should do two things: reduce nitrate levels in the city's drinking water by diluting the tainted spring water with Snake River water and give the city much more growing room in respect to water resources.

The city is trying to secure more Snake River water rights through the Kings Hill Irrigation District. The proposal is being considered by the state Department of Water Resources. Hahn said it is likely to be approved.

"We want to be in a position where when and if that spring source runs dry we're not sitting in a bad position," he said. "We want to make sure we have enough for growth. We don't want to just get by, by the skin of our teeth. That's what we've been doing for 50 years."

Glenns Ferry began discussing a new treatment plant in 1997 when it was discovered the Snake River had infiltrated the city's spring source during a historic flood that year.

Early in 1998, Glenns Ferry residents voted overwhelmingly in favor of a $1 million bond issue to install a disinfecting and filtration system on the spring. That bond issue and another $500,000 bond issue passed in February of this year were bought by the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

In November last year, the city discovered that the spring's nitrate levels had increased significantly almost to the maximum level allowed under federal drinking water standards, forcing the city to back-step and find solutions to the new problem.

A severe drop in the water available from the spring in March 1999, prompted Gov. Dirk Kempthorne to form a task force made up of city and state agency officials to study alternative water sources for the city.

The task force's recommendation was to begin pumping water from the Snake, which runs by the city.

Summer heats up grazing rights battles

LEWISTON (AP) — A battle for grazing rights on Idaho endowment lands likely will take place later this summer on the Weippe Prairie.

On one front, Christopher Clark and other members of the Lacey Creek Grazing Association say they will fight for their financial futures and a way of life.

On the other side, Jan Marvel of the privately funded Idaho Watersheds Project says his organization is part of a larger campaign to rid public lands of livestock grazing that has been conducted at environmental and taxpayer expense.

Caught in the middle is the Idaho Department of Lands. Agency officials are expected to hold an oral auction in late August, with the highest bidder winning rights to more than 25,000 acres of land in five grazing allotments.

If the cattlemen win, they will continue to graze their animals as they have done for decades in quest of profits. If Marvel wins, he has vowed to liberate the land of livestock.

The acreage, most of it cut-over timber ground, sits near where Lewis and Clark made contact with the Nez Perce Indians two centuries ago.

Whoever wins the auction must file a management plan with the state. The Idaho Lands Board has final say as to whether the lease will be awarded to the highest bidder. In the past, Marvel has been denied leases he has won. But recent court decisions have overruled the board and Marvel continues to pursue more acreage.

Road

South Canyon Road could be rebuilt. The Forest Service would then build an elevated roadway and turn maintenance over to the county, under a permanent right of way. The cost to the county would be $150,000 for road work and $50,000 to improve fish habitat in the river.

Commissioners Nolan Lloyd, Brad Roberts and Dan Leeper have said they cannot endorse the plan as written.

Commission chairman Roberta Skelton, a member of the court-ordered mediation team drafting the agreement, said she would like to see changes.

Commissioner Mike Nannini, another mediation team member, wants the matter settled and said the cost of fighting the issue in court would probably exceed $1 million. He also said the question could be put before Elko County voters in November.

Nannini said several residents have called him urging passage of the measure and putting an end to the legal battle between the local and federal government.

petition had 15 valid signatures.

Under the plan, property owners within the district would pay $75 per linear foot fronting Main Avenue North and $35 per linear foot on Second and Third streets for improvements.

Jones said he will aggressively pursue the necessary signatures within the next 30 days.

Get ready to boo the villain

Theater company presents funny, musical melodrama

By Dare Jensen
Times-News correspondent

BUHL — The actors of the West End Theatre Company expect the audience to boo and hiss their latest production, "Face on the Barroom Floor."

The hilarious slapstick spoof of old time melodrama, inspired by H. Antoine D'Arcy's famous poem, begins one snowy night in Central City, Colo., the theater company says. The cast of characters is stranded in the lobby of the Teller House Hotel.

Here's the story: Hero Jack "Toulouse" Goodhart shares the tale of how he fell from a semi-successful painter to a bum. He confesses his love for the heroine, a singing chamber maid, Madeline Mockingbird, who has also attracted the attention of villain Roderick Rodent because of her inheritance of a miner's fortune.

Rodent takes Madeline to Denver, where she builds a theater and Rodent presents her operatic debut. Failing to get Madeline to sign over her hotel, Rodent forces her to marry him.

All is resolved back in Central City, where the story takes a wild turn and Roderick Rodent is defeated in a slambang Keystone Kops finale.

Cast members include Becca Lawrence as Annie Quackenbush, Noah Heck as Check Dogtemper, Dan Thom as Herbie Rainwater, Janie Larson as Mrs. Van Cleve, Liz Woods as Little Gloria, Misty Pietersma as Fatima, Jill Hosman as Bella Yukon, Sam Gaiza as Roderick Rodent, Jill Hosman as Bella Yukon, Tristan Griffin as Judge Fleesum, Bonnie Richards as Sweet, Madeline Mockingbird, Dallas Thom as Jack "Toulouse" Goodhart and Jeff Van Sickle.

Cassia tech students get life lessons

TWIN FALLS — Cassia Regional Technical Center students applied school lessons to real-life situations. Students in the second year computer aided drafting and design class obtained price estimates and contract bids for a home they designed in class April 17 at Home Depot in Twin Falls.

Home Depot employees assisted students in their efforts and offered a hands-on look at the process of selecting supplies and getting the best prices for quality products, organizers say. Students were assigned to small groups, each with a list of home construction supplies to price. For example, two students were assigned to meet with a Home Depot employee and take a 3-D computer walk through the cabinet choices, then obtain quotes for cabinets for the class home project.

Students then selected an architectural plan to "build," added up the prices of all home construction supplies and arrived at a total construction cost. Students chose a floor plan with two levels and five bathrooms. When students estimate the building costs of their proposed architectural plan, they are surprised by how quickly even little supplies add up, instructor Patty Metts says.

The project is an event students look forward to all year, but it takes more time to prepare than the students realize, Metts says.

The field trip to the Home Depot will be followed by another tour of a construction site, and is part of the many "hands-on" types of training offered at Cassia Regional Technical Center, coordinators say.

Minico Future Farmers of America members put the finishing touches on a flower bed. The team participated in a project created by the Rupert Renaissance campaign to beautify the square, especially for the Fourth of July celebration, team members say. FFA members and adviser, Steve Bott planned the landscaping, planted flowers and other plants and laid down wood chips in an already developed raised bed. The FFA purchased many of the plants and the greenhouse management class at Minico furnished the remaining flowers. The FFA is an organization which focuses on agriculture education but also teaches business and technology skills.

Hagerman artist creates new from old

By Moriah Rai
Times-News correspondent

HAGERMAN — Just call him Cactus Rob.

Hagerman artist Rob Huddleston runs Idaho Custom Furniture at 330 South Street East in Hagerman. He has been featured in Phoenix Home and Garden magazine, Muscle Car Classics magazine and dozens of Arizona newspapers.

Huddleston started out as a welder in Phoenix, Ariz. from 1983 until 1990.

"It was a great job," he says, "but I was burned out. One day I was driving through the desert and I noticed the dead cacti were being burned. I thought, 'I could make things with that. At the time I'd never even heard of a 'saguaro lamp.'"

Huddleston started collecting cactus. "I'd go shopping for cholla or saguaro," he says.

In each unique piece, he would see his artwork — a lamp, a table, a bed — "I'd see it and 'cut' it to size."

Huddleston says, "right there in the desert."

Huddleston's unique work found an art gallery buyer and he made lamps, beds, mirrors, cabinets, benches, chests, desks and coat racks, among other items. "I dreamed a lot of my pieces," he says. "When I woke up, I sketch what I saw."

Huddleston soon made a name for himself — Cactus Rob. He became the largest supplier for the art gallery over the next five years, he says.

At the height of his success, he sold everything he owned and walked away from his career, he says. He returned to Idaho, where he was raised.

"When my Dad died, I moved to Lava Hot Springs to help care for my mother, Huddleston says.

After a while, he felt the pull of the land and the desire to start collecting for new art. He discovered "barn wood" — colored by the sun and sharpened by the wind and rain. He also found horse shoes, old rail road spikes and browsed through many of the second-hand shops scattered throughout Idaho's small towns. Huddleston created a new style with his Idaho treasures.

Last February he moved to the Hagerman valley.

"I love the people here and the country," he says. "I plan on staying here."

He says he loves making people happy. "They seem to like my work and I like making it for them. I make a living off the land — I recycle and create whatever I want," he says. "That's total freedom."

Twin Falls woman is doll artist

By Heather Abel
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — Ten years ago, Norma Williamson Kunz began making porcelain dolls — the kind she always wanted as a child.

"I wasn't satisfied with it," Williamson Kunz says of her first effort. "But a lady came along and wanted to buy it. I sold it to her and bought (the materials for) two more."

After that, she bought a kiln, some molds and now, her house is filled with dolls and dolls "in progress."

Mostly, she makes Indian dolls, but will make others on request.

She makes a Sacajawea doll, White Buffalo Woman, Cynthia Ann Parker and Blue Eyed Sue, to name a few.

She turned her garage into a shop where she pours the porcelain into molds. She sews the moccasins and clothing, sometimes designing the clothes and beadwork. She also paints the faces and accessories of the dolls.

hours than most people," she says. She sells the dolls to stores in Jackson Hole, Wyo.; Sedona, Ariz.; Branson, Mo.; Oklahoma and Pennsylvania. The dolls range in price from $90 to $1,200.

"I don't think you'll find any nicer Indian dolls," Williamson Kunz says. "They're collectibles."

Williamson Kunz says she didn't know doll making would turn out to be her career.

"But I'm sure glad it did," She says. "I've had real good luck with wherever they've gone."

Services reveal importance of domain names

How to obtain a domain name

Find an available domain name: The Web site of your Internet service provider, and sites such as Network Solutions.com, Register.com, Domain Registry.com, NameSectors.com and BuyDomains.com will search the central database of domain names to see if the one you want is available. If it is not, try:

Alternative extensions: If the ".com" name you want is taken, try using a different extension, such as ".net" or ".org."

Alternative names: Some Web sites, including nameboy.com and BuyDomains.com will even suggest alternative names that you might be interested in. Or they may offer names that are already taken, but available for sale by their owners.

Register the name: Most of the same sites that search for available names are set up to guide you through the registration process. Costs will vary. Expect to pay $17 (at BuyDomains.com) to $35 per year.

Free offers: Sites that offer "free" domain name registration may gloss over other charges. Read the fine print.

Last step: Create a Web page to wow those who find your Web address. This is the hardest part, according to the experts, but many of the sites that offer domain registration can also guide customers through the basics of creating Web pages, or set you up to receive e-mail under your new domain name.

Knight Ridder News Service

PHILADELPHIA - On the Internet, you can think you have a Web page, an e-mail account or two, and maybe even a list of sexy online pseudonyms for use in the chat rooms.

But you still could be a cyber dud without your very own custom dot-com address, as in "yahoo.com" or "yournamehere.com," that Net surfers can type into the browser, usually after the "http://".

It is the pitch, anyway, from a growing number of services that help customers find and reserve Internet addresses, otherwise known as domain names.

"There is no reason not to get a domain name," said Larry Erlich, head of DomainRegistry.com, a Bensalem, Pa., business that registers the names for $30 a year.

He and others in the domain trade insist that a catchy or descriptive domain name can turn anyone into an Internet brand.

If you have an Uncle Joe, for example, he might have a home page languishing at a Web address generated for him by his Internet service provider, something like "joe@provider.com/~joechlow/index.html".

Instead, he could have a Web site named simply "www.unclejoe.com" to show family pictures, get e-mail addressed to joe@unclejoe.com, or sell his stuffed deer heads - that is if the unclejoe.com domain wasn't taken, which it is.

"It's kind of like having... an easy 800 number that spells something, as opposed to a long, complex" Web address, said Michael F. Mann, founder of the self-explanatory BuyDomains.com in Bethesda, Md.

In addition, in the not-too-distant future, domain names will be critical for managing home networks, said Jeff Field, a Searthmore, Pa., native who runs NameSecure.com, a domain registrar based in Contra Costa, Calif.

A memorable domain name for use by the entire household will make it easier to program the microwave from the car or office, Field said. Perhaps "ourhouse.com" or "honestwest-home.com" would work nicely, if they weren't already taken, which they are.

Consumers who change

Internet access providers, as is common, can take their domain names with them when they move. There would be no need to change Web or e-mail addresses. "A domain name basically gives you portability," Field said.

Organizers of Internet address books consider new suffixes

The Associated Press

NEW YORK - Dot-movie. Dot-prince. Even dot-sex?

The organization that coordinates the Internet's address books meets this week in Yokohama, Japan, to consider adding domain names such as these to the familiar .com, .net and .org.

If the Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers succeeds, the Net will stay easy to navigate. Otherwise, like a telephone system ringing only some phones, some sites may be out of reach. Or, as simple addresses run out, users may flounder online.

So just as our growing phone system constantly needs more area codes, the Internet needs more domain names. Adding them is as effortless as changing a few lines of programming code, but agreeing to do so is tough.

"There really are people with different interests," says Esther Dyson, ICANN's chairwoman. "We need to reconcile this in a way so that even if you lose something, you feel the process is fair."

The hurdle is the latest for ICANN, chosen by the U.S. government in 1998 to take over Internet naming duties. Growing pains come as a surprise. It is a coalition of non-government volunteers trying to assume government functions, without any power to enforce policies.

"There's very little in the way of a road map," says Don Simon, general counsel for Common Cause in Washington.

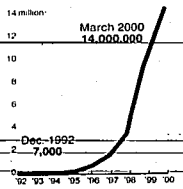

Disputes are inevitable, acknowledges Richard Forman, chief executive of Register.com, a New York company that registers Internet addresses.

"There was a lot of acrimony among the states negotiating and signing the Declaration of Independence," he says. "Every time you work on something revolutionary, it's not easy to do."

Last month, several countries complained of taxation without representation when ICANN tried to collect nearly $1.5 million for domain suffixes specific to countries, such as ".uk" for United Kingdom. The money makes up almost one-third of ICANN's budget.

Then Afternic.com, which brokers existing domain names in the United States, sued ICANN over permission to register new ones. In a settlement announced Friday, ICANN agreed to the request, with conditions.

Larger issues are contentious as well. When ICANN proposed a council to appoint its board, civic groups complained the process was undemocratic. ICANN caved in and will let Internet users directly elect five of 19 board members.

Other critics, citing delays getting new domain names, complain that ICANN favors businesses over individuals. Large corporations with valuable trademarks have resisted new names because of cybersquatters - individuals who grab domain names for up to $35 apiece for resale at thousands, even millions of dollars.

Looking over monitors

Marlin Zimmerman
The Dallas Morning News

When considering the purchase of a monitor, you have to ask yourself: "Flat-screen-or-cathode-ray tube?" After a two-week trial of IBM's new T54 15-inch flat-screen monitor, I'd have to answer "CRT." This space is your primary consideration, there's no point in spending $979 on an ultracompact, ultrathin monitor when a hefty 17-inch CRT model for $300 or less works just as well. Not that the T54 doesn't give good performance. If you've got more money than space, this sleek, black number will give your workstation that cutting-edge look. The screen is 15 full inches and bright with extremely saturated colors. Graphics are presented crisply, and there's little of the shadowing that was so annoying in earlier liquid crystal displays. Text is a different matter. Boldface text was a bit chunky, especially when using America Online. And unless you're a long-time laptop user, the image "bleaching" that occurs when you view the screen from a side angle is annoying. As for ergonomics, most of the controls are black-on-black and hard to make out, though they're easy to use once you identify what you want. IBM touts the T54's energy savings, but until the energy crisis returns, I think I'll save the money and stick with my trusty old CRT.

Delete suspicious e-mail without opening it

By Jim Coates
Chicago Tribune

Q. With all the viruses being passed around these days, the advice seems to be "Don't open a suspicious e-mail." I use Netscape for my mail. To check for mail, I click the mail icon, and it then tells me the names of each e-mail item and the sender. My question is how do I delete a suspicious e-mail without opening it? Every time I try, the e-mail opens up whether I right-click or left-click. —Joe McMahon

A. The answer, which is simply to highlight the item and then hit the delete key, only seems painfully obvious once you hear it for the first time. You are attempting to use the Microsoft Windows convention that responds to a right-click of the mouse by popping up a command box with choices, including delete.

Computer Q&A

something that prevents AOL from knocking customers offline after a few minutes — very annoying. I know you covered this information, but I'm hoping you will one more time... please? —John Ferdinand, Wilmette, Ill.

A. Your question is most timely because I've got good news about Download Wonder, your antidote for America Online's maddening hang-up-on-the-customer feature. This misguided effort by AOL to keep customers from staying online for an extended period has spoiled countless hundreds of thousands of downloading sessions, as AOL users attempt to take advantage of the wealth of large files offering sounds, images and software now commonly banded about the Web. When I first touted this superb fix, it was a commercial program, but the company now offers it free for the taking as a lure to visit its Web site, where other software is for sale. The company is Great Neck, N.Y.-based Forty Software Inc. (www.forty.com). In addition to sending AOL a frequent beep to keep it from signing off during a download, this software checks downloads for viruses and creates a database of all the things a user has downloaded. It's a real keeper.

Q. Reading your recent answer regarding The Bat e-mail software and Microsoft Outlook Express, I believe I disagree with your suggestion to uninstall, then reinstall Outlook Express.

In Outlook Express, if you click Tools, then Options, then the General tab, there will be an option to "Make Outlook Express the Default Mail Program." That should've taken care of the writer's problem, True? —David Fleischer

A. You are absolutely correct in suggesting that fix for people whose computers somehow get configured for third party e-mail, such as The Bat, and then they decide they want to go back to Microsoft's own Outlook Express, which is tightly integrated into the Windows operating system. While my solution about uninstalling and then reinstalling Outlook Express will indeed work, yours is far easier and well worth passing on to PC users everywhere.

Platinum 2001 puts world in your hands

Chicago Tribune

Before you say "ho hum, just another computer-mapping CD," whip out your Palm and/or GPS receiver and drink deeply of a real taste of the future. If you use a Windows Pocket PC, you can take that handheld maps came in the box in the form of a pocket version of Microsoft Streets and Maps. Depth of content aside, the technologically exciting feature in Platinum 2001 is its ability to move the kernels of maps and data from a desktop computer's huge hard drive into a pocket-size personal digital assistant. Users run the software and plan a trip using what has become a traditional visual interface for PC mapping programs. Next, one orders the software to prepare a written itinerary and export it as a note file on devices running the Palm operating system, making it very easy for a messenger to read out loud. The icing on this particular sugar cake is that the software creates bit-mapped pictures of traditional road and street maps along the way, a particular boon if you miss a turn and need a course correction. Terminal gadget-lovers will also find software in the box that lets one connect a global positioning satellite radio to the Palm and use the handheld to display the vehicle's moving location on those maps.

Some non-Microsoft-friendly software, however, doesn't respond to a Windows-style right mouse click and instead treats it like a left-click, as you encountered in whatever version of Netscape you have. So in the future, Mr. M., just say delete. Q. I misplaced one of your past columns about how to download

Boomer and Torre, together again

The Associated Press

ATLANTA — Joe Torre always could count on Boomer in big spots. So in an All-Star game hit by so many injuries that it's become the "All-Star" game, the New York Yankees manager had no trouble picking a starting pitcher for the American League. He chose David Wells, naturally. The same guy who went 4-0 for the Yankees in the 1998 post-season and then was traded away for Roger Clemens. The same character who leads the majors with 15 wins for Toronto. "I don't think there's a point to prove," Wells said Monday.

His shaved head gleaming, Wells turned to Torre and added with a playful grin peeking out from his bushy mustache: "I know what I'm capable of doing at any time and right now, if I wanted to, I could strangle Joe." Chances are, Torre probably wishes he could have Wells for the rest of the season. The two-time World Series champions are full of problems in their rotation — and that before

Sammy delights at Derby

Chicago's Sammy Sosa watches a home run at the All-Star Home Run Derby Monday in Atlanta. Sosa defeated Ken Griffey Jr. 9-2 in the final round to win the Derby.

ATLANTA — Step aside Junior, Sammy's the man. Slammin' Sammy Sosa ended Ken Griffey Jr.'s two-year reign as Home Run Derby champion, hitting the longest, loudest and largest number of shots at Turner Field on Monday night. Sosa beat Griffey 9-2 in the finals and hit 26 overall, including a pair of 508-foot shots — one to the 755 Club in the left-field upper deck and one that came to rest atop the second green batter's backdrop-in-straightaway center, below the scoreboard.

"I came here to put on a show. I didn't necessarily come here to get the win, but I guess I got the win," Sosa said.

With injuries to Mark McGwire, Barry Bonds and Manny Ramirez, there wasn't nearly the drama of last year, when Griffey won but McGwire conquered the Green Monster at Fenway Park, with hundreds of fans lining Lansdowne Street to catch the balls. Before Monday's competition, scalpers were dumping tickets with $50 face value for $10 each. "Mark McGwire is one of the guys everybody is looking at,"

Armstrong climbs to lead in mountains

The Associated Press

LOURDES-HAUTACAM, France — This was where Lance Armstrong wanted to be, in the mountains and in striking distance of the lead in the Tour de France. He didn't waste the chance. Armstrong surged through the Pyrenees and into first place Monday, grabbing the leader's yellow jersey for the first time in defense of the title he won last year after coming back from cancer.

The U.S. Postal Service team rider from Austin, Texas, used a dramatic attack in the final climb to finish second in the day's stage, a 127-mile trek from Lax that was the first mountain portion of the race and 10th of 21 stages overall. In rain and cold, Armstrong — starting the day in 16th place — stormed past challengers, turning a deficit of almost six minutes into a lead of 4:14 over second-place Jan Ullrich, the 1997 champion. Spain's Javier Ochoa emerged from the clouds, shrouded in steam, to hold off Armstrong by 42 seconds. But the 28-year-old

Monday on the Tour

A look at Monday's 10th stage of the 87th Tour de France: Stage 4: 127-mile route through the Pyrenees from Dax to Lourdes. Winner: Javier Ochoa of Spain, in 6 hours, 9 minutes, 32 sec. 0:05. Leader: Defending champion Lance Armstrong (finished second, 42 seconds behind Ochoa, to jump from 16th to first place overall). He leads Jan Ullrich, the 1997 champion, by 4:14. Quote of the day: "Armstrong came past like a plane." — Richard Virenque, who finished fourth Monday. Today's stage: 11th stage is 135 miles from Bagneres-de-Bigorre to Revel.

Texan, who said before the Tour began that the race really started with the mountains on July 10, was the big winner for the day. "Today was about good tactics," Armstrong said. "It was a good day for me. I like these conditions." Although the other main contenders were well back, Armstrong wasn't looking too far ahead.

Stage 11: Bagneres-de-Bigorre/Revel

"With two weeks to go, the Tour de France is still anybody's race," he said. "The Tour de France is very tough this year, so I am not counting on anything." Armstrong's powerful late surge took him past 1998 winner Marco Pantani, 1999 third-place finisher Fernando Escarot and Richard Virenque, and was reminiscent of his blistering form a year ago. It also made him the overwhelming favorite to retain the title. Armstrong took the lead last year in the eighth stage, a time trial, and never let it go as the Tour wound through the mountains and finished on the Champs-Élysées.

Aaron to Rocker: Shut up

The Associated Press

Just play! Hank Aaron has tried to counsel John Rocker in the months since the reliever disparaged minorities, gays and foreigners in a magazine interview. Aaron isn't sure Rocker listened.

"The thing that bothers me is the fact that he keeps talking about it more and more and more," baseball's home-run king, also an Atlanta Braves executive, said Sunday on NBC's "Meet the Press."

"If he would just be quiet, play baseball, and do the thing that he can do best, and that's pitch and relieve for the Braves, I think things will be better," Aaron said.

Should have been: This marks the second straight All-Star game not played at the site originally selected.

On June 27, 1997, the commissioner's office announced the 2000 game would be played at Joe Robbie Stadium in Miami, the home of the Florida Marlins.

By Dec. 1, 1998, baseball's tune had changed. The Marlins had just sold off most of their stars and gone 54-108, the worst record ever for a World Series champion. Attendance plummeted.

Last year's game, originally scheduled for Milwaukee, was moved to Boston's Fenway Park when it became clear Miller Park wouldn't be ready.

No Coke: Usually, Coca-Cola dominates in Atlanta's home. Not when the All-Star game is in town.

Only Pepsi was served at the Braves' All-Star gala Sunday night. That's because Pepsi is a corporate sponsor of Major League Baseball.

Cowboys' Irvin retires after injury

The Associated Press

IRVING, Texas — The spinal injury that ended Michael Irvin's 1999 season has forced the Dallas Cowboys' receiver into retirement. The announcement, which has been expected for months, will become official with a news conference today at Texas Stadium. It comes a month after longtime teammate and coach Irvin also called it a career because of a neck injury during a week before Dallas opens training camp. Irvin finished his 12-year career with 750 catches, tied for ninth in NFL history, for 11,904 yards, also ninth all-time. He holds nearly every major career or single-season receiving record in Cowboys history.

Teammates remember Lane for game, pranks

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Fred Lane was remembered Monday by his former NFL teammates and coaches for the football field and a penchant for locker-room pranks.

"He was a lot of fun," Carolina Panthers offensive-line coach Tony Wise said at a church visitation for Lane, 24, who was shot to death last week. "He and I used to rib each other a lot in practice. He just had a great attitude." Former Panthers head coach Dom Capers, linebackers coach Sam Mills, cornerback Doug Evans and several other members of the team were among about 500 mourners. "This kid had a chance to do something special," offensive tackle Clarence Jones said outside the church. "I'm disappointed he won't ever get the chance."

Lane, the Panthers' career-rushing leader who joined the Indianapolis Colts this offseason, was killed Thursday inside his home on the city's south side. Police said Lane's wife, Deidra, shot him, but no charges have been filed in the case.

He will be buried Tuesday in his hometown of Franklin, Tenn. Capers spent a few moments at the open casket before talking to other mourners inside University Park Baptist Church. Visibly shaken, he declined to comment as he walked to his car.

Most of the mourners were fans, including one young man who entered the church wearing Lane's No. 32 Panthers jersey. "Football fans just loved him," said Walter Truesdale, who called himself a friend of Lane. "He was an all-around great guy with the million-dollar smile."

Deidra Lane did not attend the visitation.

Funeral services were held Monday for Colts running back Fred Lane, who was found shot to death last Thursday.
