Population change might be toward older residents

By Michael Journee
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The count isn't yet official, but it is out.

And Twin Falls, like most larger cities in Idaho, has grown considerably over the past decade. Preliminary census figures put the city's population at 34,316, making it the fifth largest city in the state.

It also ranks Twin Falls as No. 87 in the nation.

But while Twin Falls has nearly

Where's the growth?

The U.S. Census Bureau Friday released population estimates for cities with populations of more than 10,000. The report released numbers for only two southern Idaho cities: Twin Falls and Mountain Home.

Here are the new numbers, and how Idaho cities rank.

City	1990 population	1990 population	Increase	% change
1. Boise	168,370	135,150	33,220	24.6
2. Pocatello	82,781	46,091	6,690	14.5
3. Idaho Falls	48,627	44,235	4,392	9.9
4. Nampa	46,125	29,899	16,226	54.3
5. Twin Falls	34,316	28,098	6,221	22.1
6. Coeur d'Alene	33,859	24,480	9,179	37.5
7. Lewiston	30,597	28,309	2,288	8.1
8. Meridian	27,690	10,220	17,470	170.9
9. Caldwell	23,373	18,930	4,443	23.5
10. Moscow	19,905	18,630	1,275	6.8
13. Mountain Home	10,743	8,173	2,570	31.4

22.1 percent growth in the last decade keeps it securely among the state's most viable destinations for moving families, it's unclear exactly where that growth is coming from.

Twin Falls School District officials have said that despite the community's growth, the decline in student enrollment indicates that the population is getting older. Some suggest the city may be in transition to becoming a retirement community.

Jacquie Nix, director of the Twin Falls Senior Citizen Center, certainly thinks that's the trend. "Absolutely," she said. "A lot of people are coming in because their children want them closer, the weather is good, and California and Las Vegas are getting too crowded."

ALL JAZZED UP

Utah State University students Trisha Losee and Kevin Jones swing to the music of 'Kinda Dixie' Friday. When the two aren't on the dance floor, they sing with the 'Sunburst Singers,' one of the many bands at the 11th annual Swing 'n' Dixie Jazz Jamboree in Sun Valley.

SUN VALLEY — There's no heavy metal, unless you count brass. And there's more Count Basie than Shania Twain.

But that hasn't kept young people from turning out this week at Sun Valley's Swing 'n' Dixie Jazz Jamboree.

"The music gets inside of you and you want to dance," said 16-year-old Aspen Wenglikowski, who had made a special trip to Boise to buy a 1920s-style flapper dress for the occasion.

Jumpin' and Jivin'

The Jazz Jamboree will continue today and Sunday.

Badges good for a full day and night of music are $25 today and $30 Sunday and are available at the indoor ice rink behind the Sun Valley Lodge. Students 13 through 17 can buy $10 badges good for both days. Children 12 and under are admitted free with parents.

Today's highlights include a marching band salute at 10 a.m., a swing dance class at 11 a.m., a tribute to Louis Armstrong at 11 a.m., a performance exploring the roots of jazz at 6:30 p.m., and a trombone tribute at 11 p.m.

Sunday's highlights include a hymn sing at 9:30 a.m. and gospel performances at 11 a.m. A new generation gets jazzed.

When the Jazz Jamboree started 11 years ago, most of the spectators were 60-plus. Wood River High School band teacher Bart

Bailey had trouble recruiting players for the school jazz band when he started it several years ago. But then the youngsters caught on to the fun their elders were having. Now, about 500 attend each year, according to organizer Tom Hazzard.

"They saw people having a blast and they were hooked," Bailey said.

The kids like the high energy of the music, which features such styles as ragtime and Dixieland. They like the fact that they can

Navy alters account of ship attack

New version raises security questions

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The Navy Friday gave a new account of the terrorist attack on the USS Cole, saying the destroyer had already moored and was refueling when it was approached by a small boat laden with explosives in Yemen eight days ago.

The revision casts doubt on previous assertions by top Navy commanders that the bombing was virtually unpreventable because the small boat blended in with harbor workboats helping the U.S. warship tie up to a fueling station in the port of Aden.

In fact, the Navy now says, the apparent suicide attack took place more than an hour and a half after the mooring had been completed. At that point, as the ship was already refueling, there was no reason for a small boat to approach the Cole. Sailors with guns had been posted on the deck.

The new account also raises questions about the extent to which the attack was an "inside operation." While the terrorists may have had advance knowledge of the ship's arrival, it is unclear whether they had infiltrated the port's work force. Investigators now believe the boat may have been launched from the shores and may have had no connection to the Yemenese company contracted to perform the refueling.

Ex-soldier pleads guilty in bombings

Newsday

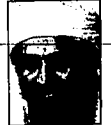

NEW YORK — A key intelligence officer for alleged Saudi terrorist Osama bin Laden charged Friday that bin Laden personally selected the spot that a truck bomber should use in a suicide attack upon the U.S. Embassy in Nairobi, Kenya, in 1998.

The allegation came from Ali A. Mohamed, 48, a U.S. citizen and former U.S. Army and Egyptian Army sergeant, as he entered a guilty plea at a surprise proceeding before U.S. District Court Judge Leonard Samt.

Scientists find salmon adapt quickly to change

The Associated Press

SEATTLE — Researchers have found that salmon, the endangered fish that has embroiled the Northwest in a debate over breaching lower Snake River dams, show an impressive ability to adapt to changes in their environment.

The trait may help hope for efforts to revive the fish population. "I am by nature an optimist, and I see in our work evidence that if you have a sufficient number of salmon, they will adapt to the habitats that are available to them," said University of Washington professor Tom Quinn, a co-author of the study Friday in the journal Science.

Researchers found that in just 60 years, or 13 generations, sockeye salmon of the same stock evolved into two distinct populations in Seattle's Lake Washington and the Cedar River. In some other creatures, such as insects, similar transformations can take 200 generations.

In the river, male salmon have developed more streamlined bodies, which help them navigate fast currents and keep them from being stranded or snags by predators when water levels fall.

The females are larger than average, allowing them to bury eggs deeper in the riverbed, where the eggs are less likely to be swept away by gushing flood waters.

In the lake, male salmon are bulkier and have developed large humps on their backs, which make them more attractive to females and help them fight off other males.

House seeks health-care tax breaks

WASHINGTON - Striving for a last-minute election-year accomplishment, House Republicans are negotiating with President Clinton on tax breaks to help people pay for long-term care for the elderly and disabled as well as their own insurance premiums.

The long-term care issue is one of several health-related tax measures that could emerge in a final package Congress is expected to move next week, some of them linked to a $1 increase in the minimum wage sought by the president.

With powerful opposition in the own ranks to Clinton's proposed $3,000 tax credit for long-term health care, House GOP leaders have outlined an alternative letting people claim a tax deduction on up to $10,000 a year in long-term care expenses, Republican leadership sources said Friday, speaking on condition of anonymity. The bottom-line benefit of the deduction would vary based on a taxpayer's income.

House Speaker Dennis Hastert, R-Ill., is also insisting on a new tax deduction for people who pay at least 50 percent of their own health insurance premiums. The nonpartisan Joint Committee on Taxation estimates this could help 26 million people when fully effective in 2007 - including 1.6 million people who previously couldn't afford health insurance.

The break would apply "above the line," meaning people could claim it on Internal Revenue Service forms whether or not they itemize their tax deductions.

Jimmy Carter breaks ties to Southern Baptists

ATLANTA - The Southern Baptists, already suffering from defections because of the denomination's conservative positions, have lost one of their best-known members: Jimmy Carter.

The former president, whose evangelical Christian faith figured prominently in his 1976 White House campaign, said in a letter mailed to fellow Baptists that he is cutting ties to the Southern Baptist Convention after struggling with the "increasingly rigid" creed of the nation's largest Protestant denomination.

Nation in brief

Some of the group's positions, including recent decisions barring women pastors and declaring that wives should "submit graciously" to their husbands, "violate the basic premises of my Christian faith," Carter wrote.

Gunman kills himself after shooting two others

YREKA, Calif. - A man on trial on sex charges pulled a gun in a courthouse hallway Friday and shot one of his alleged victims, then killed himself as sheriff's deputies closed in on him.

The jury had just begun deliberations in the case against Edward Lansdale, 68, when he fired at least three shots into Amber Pearce, an Oklahoma woman who was brought to Yreka to testify against Lansdale.

Pearce's husband, Jeffrey, also was wounded. Husband and wife, both 26, were hospitalized in stable condition.

Lansdale had been on trial all week, charged with taking two girls into his home when they were teens and having sexual intercourse with them over an extended period of time.

Man sentenced to 20 years in girl's drowning

HERNANDO, Miss. - A man convicted of manslaughter for pulling the life jacket off a 7-year-old girl and leaving her to drown was sentenced to 20 years in prison Friday for what a judge called "one of the most cowardly of acts I have every heard of."

Troy Lee Carlisle, 28, received the maximum sentence in the death of Dallas Reinhardt at a lake last May.

"I was thinking I was going to die or she was going to die," Carlisle told police. "I didn't really want both of us to die, so I figured I'd take it off her and put it around my arm ... but she slipped out of my hand."

FDA tells how to avoid prostate treatment burns

WASHINGTON - A therapy that shrinks enlarged prostates by microwaving the gland can cause a rare but serious injury, occasionally burning men's tissue enough to require a colostomy or other surgery, the Food and Drug Administration warned doctors Friday.

Microwave therapy for enlarged prostates is a highly effective outpatient treatment to relieve urinary symptoms, and some doctors consider it safer than traditional prostate surgery.

But the FDA has learned of 16 men injured when the microwave temperature got too high or microwaves beamed onto the wrong spot. In six cases, burns damaged the penis or urethra.

Former Nader 'raiders' urge him not to hurt Gore

WASHINGTON - A dozen old "Nader's Raiders" are urging the Green Party candidate to reassess his presidential campaign, saying he could cost Democrat Al Gore the election.

Ralph Nader currently draws 3 or 4 percent in national polls, more in some states. And some Democrats fear that he could win enough votes from the vice president in some close states to push those states into Republican George W. Bush's column.

WINNING PHOTOGRAPH

This photograph of Memphis firefighters consoling one another after being ambushed at a house fire March 8 in Memphis, Tenn., was chosen Friday as the Member Showcase Photo of the Year at the Associated Press managing editors conference in San Antonio. Firefighters responding to a house fire were ambushed by a gunman who stepped out of the garage and opened fire. Four people were killed and two others wounded. The annual award includes a $1,000 cash honorarium. A.J. Wolfe of the Commercial Appeal in Memphis took the photograph.

Woman spends hours in well before rescue

PERRIS, Calif. (AP) - A 73-year-old woman fell 20 feet down an abandoned well and was trapped for seven hours before firefighters were able to lift her out.

"She's a great gal," said firefighter Mark Defina, who was lowered into the well to slip a harness around the woman late Thursday. Rachel Chandler was in fair condition at Riverside County Regional Medical Center. She remained calm throughout the ordeal, Defina said.

Chandler tumbled into the 40-inch-diameter brick-lined structure in her daughter's back yard Thursday afternoon, said Capt. Andrew Bennett of the Riverside County Fire Department. A rotted wooden cover apparently gave way, and a twin-sized bed frame tumbled down with her when she fell.

"Nobody knew the well was there. There was 6 inches of dirt covering it," Bennett said.

She wasn't spotted for 3.5 hours, and it took firefighters another 3.5 hours to complete the rescue.

After figuring out how to rig up some cable to get her out, rescuers lowered Defina into the well from a ladder truck.

Defina, 43, is part of a team trained to rescue people from confined spaces.

The shaft was illuminated by flashlight and emergency lights, but falling dust and dirt still made it difficult to see, he said.

Hemophiliac AIDS victim dies at 22

SARASOTA, Fla. (AP) - Robert Ray - one of three AIDS-exposed hemophiliac brothers who won a court battle to go to school 13 years ago, only to be burned out of their home by an arsonist - died Friday. He was 22.

Ray, infected through contaminated blood products used to treat his hemophilia, died at All Children's Hospital of complications from both diseases, the St.

Petersburg hospital said in a statement.

Ray had become engaged earlier this year, and he and his fiancée had postponed nuptials that had been planned for December.

"He just wanted to be a husband and a father. It wasn't like he wanted something great out of life. He just wanted to be normal," his father, Clifford Ray, told the Sarasota Herald-Tribune.

Robert, Ricky and Randy Ray gained widespread attention in 1986 when they were barred from attending class with other students in Arcadia in southwest Florida after their parents told school officials of their condition.

They returned to school under court order in 1987. Angry parents distributed petitions and sponsored rallies in a vain attempt to keep the boys out of regular classes, and days later, the Ray home was gutted in an arson fire.

Discovery leaves station, returns home

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) - Space shuttle Discovery and its astronauts left the international space station on Friday after a weeklong mission to add new sections and prepare for the arrival of the first full-time crew.

The shuttle was docked seven days to the space station and due to return to Earth Sunday. The crew spent four of those days doing construction work outside, in four challenging spacewalks.

On Thursday, the crew transferred a few supplies and wiped down the station's walls with a fungicide to prevent mold and mildew. They also tested four motion-control gyroscopes they installed earlier in the mission, with help from Mission Control.

The massive gyroscopes, used to aim the station, were spun briefly at 100 revolutions per minute, well below the 6,500 rpm that will be required for operations early next year. They worked as expected, NASA said.

Gore race encounters Clinton

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) - Al Gore said Friday he'd welcome homestretch help from President Clinton but everyone should remember, "This is a campaign that I am running on my own."

For his part, the president said he wasn't sure how much he could influence the election, less than three weeks away.

"People make their decisions independently, so it would only matter if I had an argument to make (that) people would listen to," Clinton said after he and Gore attended a memorial service for the late Gov. Mel Carnahan. Asked if he could do more for Gore, Clinton told reporters, "I don't know. I think it's not time yet, you know?"

Some supporters have been urging Gore to ask for more help from the man he's served with for the past eight years. However, the two are not expected to campaign together.

"The president is my friend and I appreciate his help in the campaign," Gore said in a brief interview with The Associated Press on Friday. "We've had a chance to work together and we've been able to accomplish a lot of good things on behalf of the American people."

Bush aide's wife registers as lobbyist

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON - Gov. George W. Bush may bash Washington ways as he campaigns for president, but the wife of his campaign manager apparently is comfortable enough working Capitol Hill and the regulatory agencies.

M. Diane Allbaugh, wife of Joe Allbaugh, the Republican's campaign manager, registered with the Senate last month to lobby on behalf of three major Texas-based utilities. She listed "general legislative and regulatory matters involving utility and energy issues."

Four years ago, Bush established new rules to curb lobbying by former staffers after reports were published about three top aides quitting to become lobbyists and about Diane Allbaugh's hiring by utility interests. Allbaugh, a lawyer whose husband was then the governor's executive assistant, quit as a lobbyist, denying any impropriety but telling Bush in a letter at the time that she wanted "to remove any possibility of further questions regarding the perception of a conflict."

Fight puts Gooding man in ICU, police say

GOODING - A Gooding man police said beat another man so badly it put him in critical condition in the hospital was being held in the Gooding County Jail Friday on a charge of aggravated battery, court documents say.

Ricky Allen Connell, 32, was arrested on the charge Friday and was being held on a $25,000 cash-only bond, according to court documents.

Police responded late Monday to a report of a fight behind the Lincoln Inn in Gooding, said Gooding Police Det. Rick Cowen. Officers found Joe McCarthy, 31, on the ground behind the Inn, Cowen said.

McCarthy was taken to Gooding County Memorial Hospital and then LifeFlighted to Saint Alphonsus Regional Medical Center in Boise where he was listed in critical condition, Cowen said.

McCarthy's condition was upgraded Friday to serious, but he remained in the Saint Alphonsus intensive care unit, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Officers arrested Connell Thursday, Cowen said.

Cowen said Friday he was still investigating the fight, and did not want to speculate about what sparked it. The fight apparently did not involve weapons, Cowen said.

Connell faces an Oct. 30 preliminary hearing in Gooding.

Robbery suspect remains in jail without bond

BOISE - A Washington man suspected of robbing the U.S. Bank Branch in Glenns Ferry earlier this month was still being held without bond Friday in a Boise jail, according to a spokesman for the U.S. Department of Justice.

John Edward Crowley, 40, this week did not contest a federal detention order during a hearing in federal court in Boise, according to the justice department.

Crowley has not yet been officially charged with armed robbery, but the case will soon go before a grand jury, the spokesman said.

The jury's decision on the case might not come until early next month, according to the justice department.

Police say Crowley robbed the bank at gunpoint before being stopped on Interstate 84 east of Glenns Ferry and arrested by Gooding County sheriff's deputies.

The Skagit, County, Wash. sheriff's department is also investigating Crowley's possible involvement in the shooting death of his brother a few days before the robbery, Sgt. Dave Willard of the department told the Times-News earlier.

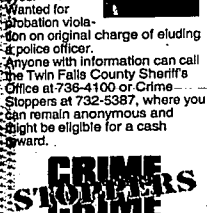

Willard said Crowley's 68-year-old mother was found dead in her Lake McMurray, Wash. home. Falls to Willard Friday were not named.

Crowley's court-appointed attorney, Tyler Smith of Boise, could not be reached Friday for comment.

Livestock panel sees signs of hope

By John T. Huddy
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - Despite a heated exchange between two members at a recent meeting, a sharply divided committee reviewing county livestock rules says it will stay at its task.

Committee members agree they have to set aside their differences and work together on a solution.

"We did actually make some progress," said Jim DeKleinhaus, committee chairman. "We're just going to have to see if we can't work together on these things."

DeKleinhaus clashed at Thursday's meeting with fellow committee member Jack McCall. McCall questioned DeKleinhaus's statement about closely split committee votes, which appeared in a recent newspaper article.

McCall said DeKleinhaus had been wrong, but DeKleinhaus defended his statement.

The committee was formed in July to draft a new livestock ordinance, after the county commissioners declared a three-month livestock moratorium. Several committee members, including DeKleinhaus, conceded to the commissioners recently that the committee's progress had been slow.

Differences of opinion among committee members on various issues, including setback requirements and odor control, have disrupted their work, and DeKleinhaus has questioned the group's future. In a news article two weeks ago, he said the group often has split 4-3, with the majority sympathetic to the dairy industry.

The seven-member committee has three members with ties to the dairy or cattle industry: Dave Gondolfo and Alvin Smutny, who own dairy operations; and McCall, a rancher and farmer. Dave Snelson, who has sparred with DeKleinhaus over issues including setback distances and odor control, is a poultry farmer turned insurance agent.

Eager skiers shop at the ski swap

Sale of equipment runs through Sunday

By Karen Bossack
Times-News correspondent

HAILEY - Shoppers were ready for the ski season to start Friday. Dozens of skiers and skiers' parents lined up Friday outside the Hailey Army for the start of the annual Hailey Ski Team Ski Swap.

The sale of new and used ski and snowboard equipment and winter clothes, which runs through Sunday, is the first of several each year in southern Idaho.

"We've always been the first. We've always had it the third weekend of October," said Nancie Kranakalla.

About 1,500 people turned out last year. This year's swap got an extra boost from three snowfalls in Sun Valley since Labor Day weekend.

Each left three inches or more on Baldy. Ski swaps help skiers cut costs, while recycling outgrown equipment and clothing.

Ski shops use the Hailey swap as a forum to sell last year's demo items and unsold inventory.

One family, which moved to the area from Alabama a few weeks ago, outfitted the entire family in skis and ski clothing Friday.

Another woman walked out with two pairs of new adult Volant skis, still in their wrappers, for $99 each.

Twenty percent of each sale is given to the Hailey Ski Team, which has about 100 skiers ages 8 through 14.

Money from the sale makes up more than half of the team's budget, said Anne Brown.

America's top alpine skier,

Ron Dalley, who drove from Fairfold to make the opening day of the Hailey Ski Team Ski Swap, adds another pair of skis to his collection. Both winter and summer sporting gear will be sold to benefit the team at the Idaho National Guard Armory in Hailey through Sunday.

Picabo Street, who grew up in the Hailey area, seems to come through with a few items to help the ski team each year.

This year's donations included 20 salutes at World Cup races.

The ski swap continues from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. today and from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. Sunday.

Admission is $1 for adults and free for children.

Tips for shopping at ski swaps

Size - Make sure you don't buy boots too big. If they feel "super comfortable," they're probably going to be too loose to allow proper control.

Soles - Check the bottom of boots to make sure they aren't too worn. Toe and heel plates can be replaced, but if the boot won't work well with bindings if the wear has extended to the body of the boot.

Rebound - Put the bottoms of the skis together to see if they have space between them under the binding. If they lay perfectly flat against each other, they have no energy or rebound.

Damage - Check the base for holes and gouges, which can cost $10 an inch to repair.

Sid tape - Check the top of each ski or snowboard to make sure the plastic covering isn't peeling off, allowing water to get in and ruin the equipment.

Friends remember support group founder

KETCHUM - Laura Evans lived life by the motto on her license plate: NOMTN2HL.

But, in the end, there was one cancer too wide, too deep, too pervasive even for a woman who had successfully defeated a breast cancer that almost took her life 10 years ago.

But family and friends said Evans' death late Tuesday from a brain tumor will not derail Expedition Inspiration and the other breast cancer-fighting efforts that Evans instigated.

"Laura gave us a tough fight but the terminal brain cancer dealt Laura a hand of cards that even she couldn't play," said Roger Evans, her husband. "But Expedition Inspiration will go forward in her memory no less determined to bring about a cure for breast cancer."

Family and friends have planned a memorial service at 2 p.m. Oct. 29 in the Sawtooth Ballroom at Elkhorn Resort. The service will feature a 90-second video of Laura, some slides and time for telling "Laura stories." It is expected to be attended by breast cancer survivors, doctors and admirers of Evans from all

It was breast cancer that thrust the Ketchum woman into the limelight 10 years ago, stage of breast cancer, she volunteered for a risky procedure that was considered cutting edge treatment at that time - that is, taking bone marrow out of her body, injecting her body with a jolt of chemotherapy so high that it nearly killed her and then putting the bone marrow back.

The women's sportswear designer battled back and then vowed to battle breast cancer with the zeal of Gen. George Patton. She started what is believed to be Idaho's first support group for women with breast cancer. And she challenged other breast cancer survivors to join her in the passion she had discovered just a few years earlier - mountain climbing - to draw attention to breast cancer and raise research funds.

The organization's first trek up Argentina's 22,841-foot Aconcagua, the highest peak in the Western Hemisphere, raised $2.3 million and earned Evans a trip to the White House where she was honored by First Lady Hillary Clinton and U.S. Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor.

"Nobody loved life more than she did. She loved to be physically active and she loved to have a good time," said Nancy Hongola, a friend of the Evans for more than 30 years. "She and her husband decided early on - even

Sheriff's candidates focus on turnovers

By Brandon Flata
Times-News writer

JEROME - The Jerome County sheriff's race is centered on department turnover and communication.

Incumbent Republican Jim Weaver said he should be re-elected based on his accomplishments during four years as sheriff.

"Crime is down 33 percent. Candidate Q&A since I took office," he said.

But independent candidates Wayne Childers and Jerry Martinez said Weaver has contributed to the department's high turnover by a lack of communication.

"Turnover is a huge, huge problem," Childers said. "Forty-four full-time officers have quit since he's been there."

"His figures are inaccurate and not factual," Weaver said. "My deputies are highly sought after because I have tremendous training program."

Weaver says his deputies are recruited to high-ranking positions in other law enforcement agencies. That's common in small sheriff's departments, Weaver said.

"The state of Idaho has mandated a 3 percent cap on my budget each year," he said. "I try to direct all of that to salaries to keep them competitive."

Childers sees it differently. "It directly relates to (Weaver) and his management," he said. "I try to direct all of that to salaries to keep them competitive."

Martinez also said turnover is a problem.

"There's a lack of communication between the administration and the troops, and strong leadership could take care of the problem," he said.

The communication gap

Looking for clues

TWIN FALLS - An upscale enclave west of town is a little less serene since an armed intruder was reported at the home of Times-News Publisher Stephen Hartgen.

"Quite frankly, we're learning how to lock our doors," said Allen Starley, a 23-year resident who has lived across a private lane from Hartgen for about a decade.

"We used to be in a community, particularly in our area here, where we felt comfortable leaving our doors open."

Starley also is concerned for his friend Hartgen, whose wife and daughter fled from the gunman on the evening of Oct. 3.

Hartgen, an outspoken advocate of the public's right to know, has been silent about the delivery of what investigators consider a threat related to his newspaper's editorial policy.

An envelope reportedly left in Hartgen's home by the intruder contained a clipping from The Times-News, listing registered sex offenders living in the small

Jerome sheriff's race

Incumbent Jim Weaver will face independent challengers Wayne Childers and Jerry Martinez for the four-year Jerome County sheriff's seat in the Nov. 7 election.

The sheriff's job is a full-time position which will pay $40,680. Weaver defeated Bill Reid in the May 23 Republican primary.

Jim Weaver

About the candidates

Jim Weaver, Republican
Age: 59.
Education: High school graduate; attended Hardin-Simmons University in Abilene, Texas, on a football scholarship, did not graduate. Job experience: Graduated from Los Angeles Police Department Academy in 1963; retired from LAPD in 1984 after serving in various capacities, including patrol, accident investigation, traffic enforcement, juvenile crime, detective work and training. Elected Jerome County sheriff in November 1996.

What would you do to address turnover at the Jerome County Sheriff's Department?

"The Jerome County Sheriff's Office has one of the best training courses in the state, and every week we have a new program, such as fingerprinting. Due to the fact my deputies are highly trained they are also highly sought after in the state. That's the main reason for the turnover."

What would be your main priority if elected sheriff?

"I'll continue the war on drugs. We have one certified drug dog, another which will be certified shortly, and one in training to be certified later. This will add to our emphasis on countering drug trafficking in the county."

What would you do to improve cooperation with area law enforcement agencies?

"I recently deputized the new chief of police in Hazelton. He's available if we need help in the east end. Eden has long relied on the sheriff's office and we'll continue that service. The city of Jerome has needed our drug dogs, which we have provided two or three times in the past week. We roll on any calls in Jerome, and after two of my deputies were shot last year while responding to a call from Jerome, there's no question we cooperate."

What kind of crime is the biggest problem in Jerome County, and how would you reduce it?

"The biggest problem is narcotics, methamphetamine use. About 85 to 90 percent of all crime is directly related to drug trafficking, and that's why I'm working to add two additional drug dogs to counter the problem. But overall, crime has dropped 33 percent."

Wayne Childers

Wayne Childers, Independent
Age: 54.
Education: Graduated from Jerome High School in 1965, attended Albion College from 1966 to 1967, graduated from the College of Southern Idaho with degrees in law enforcement and business in 1990.
Job experience: Jerome County deputy, 1989-95; private security work, 1996-99; part-time Lincoln County patrol deputy, 1998-99; Wendell patrol officer 1999-current.

"Better management. ... Many deputies have quit because of a conflict with Weaver. He needs to work with the officers but instead he has a philosophy of my way or the highway." Since Weaver's claims of 144 department drug busts during his term, Childers says the department has carried out only eight drug-related busts this year. "The last drug arrest was May 8, which is unacceptable."

"Rebuilding the department, which has been decimated by turnover. We need to get the sheriff department working together again. Citing Weaver's claims of 144 department drug busts during his term, Childers says the department has carried out only eight drug-related busts this year. "The last drug arrest was May 8, which is unacceptable."

"Generally, conflict comes from the administration. We're all there for the same purpose, taking the crook off the street. We need to mend fences that have been burned. Usually this is a personality problem, but if there's a problem with area enforcement I will meet with the person and immediately resolve it. It doesn't matter who gets the credit, and I don't have any problems with area officers."

"Drugs are all over the county, and are a major contributor to crime. There are laws on the books that aren't being used, and I will use them to fight drugs. I'll also work with kids in the schools to help stop the problem here. I want to go in the schools and gain the respect of the students."

Jerry Martinez

Jerry Martinez, Independent
Age: 48.
Education: Graduated from high school, receiving General Educational Development diploma; graduated from Treasure Valley Community College in Oregon with law enforcement degree.
Job experience: Worked for Payette County Sheriff's Office in various capacities, including jailer, dispatcher, patrol officer, detective and director of the drug county task force, 1979-88; Jerome County Sheriff's Office, patrol officer, detective, director of Northside drug task force, patrol officer, detective, 1989-present.

"We need stronger communication between the administration and the troops. There is not enough communication now, and it needs to follow the chain of command."

"Education. We need to be better trained and educated to serve the public. We need to educate the troops, getting back to the basics, including and serving the public. That seems to be lacking. Communication needs to be improved, and we need to be fair to the troops and the public."

"I've talked to the chief of police in Hazelton, and I'm glad to see they have their own police department. ... I will cooperate with the chief of police and keep him deputized because they can respond to some areas faster than we can. I'm also strongly looking at placing a resident deputy in the Eden-Hazelton area. There's no reason an officer should have to come back to Jerome to write a report, and that way he or she can stay in the area they're assigned to."

"Recently, what we're seeing now are gangs and drug addicts. Little people want to be gang members, and too often they are. We have to teach the public how to recognize this and we need to attack the problem. We need to educate the public to recognize gangs and know what's going on in their neighborhoods. People should notify law enforcement."

Snake River water level to drop

By Aaron Brock
Times-News writer

HEYBURN — Residents along the Snake River will get a chance to see water-edge structural repairs in the next few weeks.

The river will be lowered by about 5 feet between Wednesday and Nov. 3, and will remain at this level until Dec. 10.

This is the second year the water level will be lowered. Twin Falls Canal Co. general manager Vince Alberdi said. As riverfront homeowners use the decreased level to repair docks or boat ramps, the company will also repair Milner Dam.

"It's always nice (when the water level goes down). If people have repair work to do, it's their best time for it," said Dennis Curtis, a Heyburn resident who lives on the river.

Curtis said he has no repairs planned, but the lower water levels will allow him to inspect his retaining walls and other equipment.

Milner Dam, on the Snake River between Burley and Murtaugh, is a diversion dam, meaning it forces water into the irrigating canals.

"This is a good time to lower the river, because the irrigation season is basically over, Alberdi said.

Program helps Hispanic students

By Aaron Brock
Times-News writer

RUPERT — Young Hispanic children of migrant families start school with many disadvantages.

Their surroundings are new, their friends are new and — for most of them — even the language is basically brand new.

But over the past four years, English as a Second Language programs have been helping the area's Spanish-speaking kindergarten students pick up English.

This program is at all four Minidoka elementary schools, involving nearly 80 students, or close to 90 percent of all Hispanic kindergartners, said Minidoka County School District federal programs director Pete Espinoza.

Espinoza started the local branch of the national ESL program four years ago, at Accequia. The child of a migrant family who came to the area in the 1950s, he understands migrant students' needs. He helped start a federally funded migrant education program in 1968, his first year teaching in the district.

ESL differs from simple language instruction. ESL students attend regular kindergarten classes every morning, then spend afternoons receiving intensive English training.

By still making part in the regular kindergarten classes each morning, the students do not fall behind while acquiring English skills. If they were to concentrate only on language, then they may be 9 years old before they are ready for kindergarten, Espinoza said.

Pat Hernandez has been teaching this program for two years at Memorial Elementary School and is impressed with the results.

"It works really well," she said. "They are really exposed to English."

Most of Hernandez's students are limited when they first come to her class.

At the beginning of last year, whenever she said something in Spanish, she had to repeat it in English, she said. By the end of the year, most of the student-teacher conversations were in English.

Her class this year is full, with 18 students, with a waiting list.

"There is a big demand for this program," she said.

Man breathes new life into old cars

By Aaron Brock
Times-News writer

MALTA — Armed with skilled hands and a little patience, a car fanatic can work wonders. Rusting, discarded pieces of metal.

For Gale Ward, many of these bits and pieces represent another step toward completing the restoration of an antique car, or the first step toward starting a whole new project.

"It's a lot of fun to take a pile of rust and make it run," he said.

What Ward considers valuable, many people consider junk.

"A lot of people will be cleaning up their farmyards and they'll find an old rear axle or something," said Ward, 69.

From the looks of the acres behind his house near Malta, Ward knows the identity of a lot of old car parts. His property is covered with rusty pieces of ancient vehicles.

On a patch of land are the remains of old Model T bodies, and near them are a few decrepit Model A carcasses. Ancient tractors — among them a 1916 Fordson Tractor, one of the first ever built, he says — adorn another section of his property.

A long shed behind his house is filled with old cars and old-car paraphernalia. Among the cars are a 1949 Willys Jeep, and several sedans from the same era.

The walls of the shed are littered with old crankshafts, engine blocks and oil pans.

While the selection appears haphazard, Ward knows where everything is. As he strolls past shelves of a random-looking parts, he spots history and lore about the occasional piece, often wiping away rust and grime to point out distinguishing characteristics.

"To see these old cars are history," he said.

He still remembers hearing about when his grandmother, who lived in Elba, first got a Model T.

Before that, he says, she would take a covered wagon to Burley to purchase goods. The trip there would take a full day, she would shop for a day, and then spend a whole day coming back. With a Model T, the expedition took only one day.

Ties to Model T's run deep. Ward's first car was a Model T that he drove in high school, and he has been accumulating parts ever since.

He recently completed a project to restore a 1921 Ford Model T, the third such vehicle he has finished. He rebuilt the first two in the 1960s and sold them, he said. But he plans to hold onto this one.

"I don't need the money, but if someone offered me a fabulous amount I'd be a fool not to take it," he said. "I can always build another."

Indeed, Ward estimates his collection has the parts to construct three or four more Model T's.

The 1921 Model T is authentic, he says, but he has added his own touch. All original Model T's were black, and he has painted his a light gray.

"I wanted to be a little different on the color," he said.

Road officials agree to repair problems

By Ruth Streater
Times-News writer

RUPERT — Local road officials agreed Friday to help reduce a recent project's harm to a Rupert woman's property.

Earlier this year, the Minidoka County Highway District completed a project to make safer a canal bridge at the intersection of 100 North and 300 West.

The project included widening the bridge, relocating two stop signs and elevating the roads as they lead to the bridge.

District Superintendent Jesse

Miller said the changes have made the intersection much safer.

But Anna Abrams said the job has caused problems at her home of 62 years.

Abrams and her family said ground that was used to raise the road has encroached onto the property, and moving the signs created a hazard on the road that passes her driveway.

Also, there are no guardrails to prevent cars from flipping into her yard.

With the stop signs gone, there is nothing to slow cars traveling 55 mph as they pass Abrams' driveway, which is north of the bridge, Abrams' lawyer Kent Fletcher told highway commissioners Friday.

Miller rejected the idea of installing a four-way stop at the intersection, because that could create new problems.

But Commissioner Robert Dockter said the district could lower the speed limit to 45 mph outside Abrams' driveway.

Commissioners didn't commit to all of the family's requests, such as installing a guardrail, but they agreed to work toward finding remedies.

Hearing continues for man accused of attack

Valley in brief

JEROME — A preliminary hearing for a 35-year-old Jerome man charged with the use of a firearm in the commission of a felony and misdemeanor charges has been continued, court documents say.

A hearing Dickie Roy Craner scheduled last Thursday in Jerome was rescheduled for Oct. 25.

Craner faces two felony counts of aggravated assault and one count of unlawful possession of a firearm, according to court records. Craner was also arraigned on two counts of misdemeanor domestic battery, malicious injury to property, disturbing the peace and two counts of resisting arrest, records say.

Craner is accused of trying to fight with Jerome County sheriff's deputies who responded earlier this month to a disturbance in public school records say. He is also accused of attacking his mother, Idella Craner, brother Robert Craner and family friend Cecilio Madrona, documents say.

TWIN FALLS — Standardized testing is offered this week to dually enrolled secondary students who live in the Twin Falls School District and wish to participate in public school extracurricular activities sanctioned by the Idaho High School Activities Association.

These dually enrolled students — students who attend private schools or are home schooled — are invited by the school district to participate in the statewide standardized testing program. Testing continues through Oct. 30.

To make testing arrangements, contact Larry Watson at 733-6551, Ext. 3031.

Burley could get sewer improvement

The Times-News

BURLEY — A bill that would fund $15 million in sewer improvements for Burley has earned House approval.

The U.S. Senate is expected to vote on the 2000-01 appropriations bill later this week. If it passes, then it will be sent to President Clinton.

Rep. Mike Simpson, R-Idaho, specifically requested $15 million for sewer improvements in Burley.

While this money would help, it will pay only a small percentage on a $12 million to $15 million project, City Administrator Mark Mitton said.

"We need a complete rebuild of our sewage treatment plant," he said.

The city is hoping to get funds from other federal sources, pass a local bond issue and several other areas.

"All together, there will probably be six or seven different funding sources by the time we're done," Mitton said.

The city recently completed a feasibility study, and plans to start engineering work this winter, with construction starting this summer.

Other Magic Valley cities which stand to get money from this bill include:

- Glenns Ferry, which would receive $750,000 for its water improvement project.
- Hailey, which would receive $750,000 for water and wastewater infrastructure improvements.

Sheriff

extends to the community, Martinez said.

"I've been out campaigning and the general public is disappointed in the sheriff's office," he said. "More training is needed so the troopers know what they can and cannot do. There's a lack of support, and the troopers don't have leadership they can rely on."

But Weaver said there's no communication problem.

"I have an open-door policy, and the troopers are welcome to come in and they do," he said.

Weaver said some of his successes include a water detail program, a war on drugs, town meetings and the successful capture and prosecution of homicide cases.

Children, however, questioned the sheriff's department war on drugs.

"They have had no large-scale drug arrests when we are crawling in drugs," he said.

Weaver said his war on drugs has resulted in 158 drug arrests since he took office, along with substantial seizures of drugs and paraphernalia.

"I've hit the drug scene really hard for the first three years and we made a tremendous dent," Weaver said. "Drug arrests naturally slow down due to the fact that we run many of the drug users out of the county."

Weaver said he has successfully enforced the most serious crimes in Jerome County, including two homicide cases that ended with one man, Jimmie Vurel Thomas, is facing the death penalty in connection with a 1997 slaying.

But Martinez said it's time for a change.

"I've been in the Jerome County sheriff's office for 11 years, and I've seen the do's and don'ts," he said. "I feel that's why I can do the job. I've been on the inside and have seen the best of what former sheriffs have done."

Children said he also brings experience, plus an ability to rebuild trust in the sheriff's department.

"I'll make the officers part of the department and part of the team," he said. "The deputies will work with me, not for me."

List

Sheriff's Office spokeswoman Nancy Howell said, "You have what was found in the envelope that gives us a direction. It has to probably be related to this. Somebody has to be upset about this, but we're not sure."

Deputy Sheriff Tonye Tynley declined a request from The Associated Press to review investigators' reports.

Hartgen has refused to discuss the incident about a potential danger against the rights of offenders trying to get on with their lives.

"You hate to see these types of intimidation factors used to get in the way of publishing information that the public may very well need to know," said Kyle Elyse Niederprum, national president of the Society of Professional Journalists and an assistant city editor at the Idaho Statesman.

"No doubt, some publishers will look at this incident and think, 'How do I protect my staff?' And no doubt many of them will be talking to their lawyers about it and adjusting the way they think."

Complaints and threats when sex offender registries are published appear to be rare but not unheard of.

The editor of the Calaveras

Ledger-Dispatch in Angels Camp, Calif., received a death threat in 1998, soon after the small twice-weekly paper became the first in its state to print the names of serious offenders in the county.

The law, signed by President Clinton in May 1996, requires all states to provide some type of notification to communities when convicted sex offenders move into or are living in their area.

Texas went further than most, enacting a requirement that local law enforcement agencies regularly buy newspaper space for sex offender information. That shifts the liability away from the paper.

Widespread Internet availability may have convinced many editors and publishers elsewhere that the risk is not worth the minimal benefit of providing another source for the information.

While Idaho is not among them, at least 23 states — including Texas — post their registries on the Internet.

"But we certainly don't want the newspapers chilled. This is legitimate public information," said Jay Howell, a Jacksonville Beach, Fla. lawyer and former U.S. Senate investigator who has helped write legislation promoting public disclosure of sex offender information.

"We're still in the testing our way through. The first set of issues raised by these releases. We're on the cutting edge of a new type of public safety policy here."

Nancy Howell, also a victim assistance coordinator for the sheriff's office, said that as a mother she hopes The Times-News keeps publishing the list. It has been printed three times since mid-1998 and is always available on the paper's Web page.

By helping parents protect their children, Howell said, a paper provides a service that outweighs any discomfort it might cause even the most earnestly reformed offenders.

Aly Colon, member of the ethics faculty at the Poynter Institute for Media Studies in St. Petersburg, Fla., said decisions about publishing sex offender registries should be made with great care.

Newspaper officials should consider what they are trying to accomplish, what the public truly needs to know, how that information might be most usefully conveyed and how it might affect offenders and their families, Colon said.

Alternatives to publication also should be considered to avoid unnecessary risk, he said. For instance, one Idaho newspaper let its readers know the list would be available for public review in its offices.

Still, risk comes with the territory in journalism.

"Newspapers are not in the business of making people happy," Niederprum said. "That's the potential every time we publish something that some maladjusted person who doesn't get it will take their psychotic thoughts out on the messengers of the news. That's the potential of a single day in this business."

The Times-News, in a June 17, 1998, editorial announcing it would begin publishing the list, acknowledged sex offenders might harass, that vigilantes might force them out of their neighborhoods or worse.

"We didn't come to these decisions lightly," the editorial said. "There's a lot of concern as the Idaho Legislature knew when it passed these new laws — that publishing this information can have unintended consequences."

Thursday's meeting, to give University of Idaho extension agents time to review a draft of a Minnesota program for establishing setbacks. The program estimates the needed distance between livestock operations and other rural land uses, same system could be used in the Magic Valley.

DeKleinhaus said he did not want to go into detail about his exchange with McCall. But he said he thinks some progress was made, McCall agreed.

"We made more positive progress Thursday than we did in the last two months. I think Jim and I have come to the conclusion that it is going to take compromise between us," McCall said Friday. "It appeared to me that we were not going to come to an agreement that is one-sided. I was forced to absolutely compromise on a couple of issues yesterday and so were the other folks."

Ed Smith echoed his fellow negotiator's optimism.

"All parties have a point of view on a particular issue and with anything," Smith said. "I think yesterday was a positive indication of that. I would be hopeful that we could continue on."

A long road is still ahead, however, Smith said.

"I think we have some tough issues ahead of us that we still have to review," he added. "From my point of view it's always been a quality of life issue."

Flower, also a breast cancer survivor. "We were coming down a steep slope in East Fork Canyon one time and I remembered the dog and she talked me down. She said, 'Don't look at getting down the whole section. Just bite off the first 10 feet, then the next 10 feet.'"

"She was a great encourager, too. I had a chance to go rock climbing in Italy six weeks before she was diagnosed with brain cancer and, again, I was scared to death even though I was roped up between Laura and the guide. When we finished, she couldn't stop telling everybody how proud she was of me."

Even though doctors were not able to remove all of her brain tumor nearly a year ago, Evans was determined she was going to beat the cancer and return to leading treks, giving motivational speeches and overseeing her breast cancer symposium, which brings researchers together to brainstorm ways to prevent and cure breast cancer.

"No one ever gave up on Laura because she never gave up on herself," Dale said. Doctors told her that no one ever gets well from this kind of cancer, but she kept pretty soon she had all of us believing right along with her."

During a two-week cruise in the South Pacific in 2001, she suffered a blood clot and her health deteriorated rapidly after that.

"Even then, she was so upbeat," Flower said. "She spoke to her cruise as if it were Christmas. And when I told her I was going to go to San Francisco for my yearly mammogram a few days before she died, she said, 'Oh yes, and your mammogram's going to be fine.'"

"That was Laura. She was so intent on showing women that there is life after breast cancer. Never once did she complain. 'Why me? Why did I get cancer twice?' She showed me the importance of living and making every moment count."

Youth camp emphasizes nature

By Mickey Brown
Times-News correspondent

FILER - The razor wire has been taken down and the front security gates are no longer locked, said Ron Merchant, manager of the facility now called Anasazi at Magic Hot Springs Youth Camp. Merchant talked to the School Board Wednesday about the practice and philosophy of the camp's new management that took over in July. The Anasazi Foundation uses remote outdoor settings in its treatment program for young people with substance abuse and emotional and behavioral concerns, Merchant said. Currently, there are 13 students in the program at the facility located 13 miles northeast of Jackpot, Nev. The program begins with a 42-day wilderness trip under constant but discrete supervision, Merchant said. Students attend several classes a day after returning to camp and also participate in non-confrontational therapy, he said. The school district provides a certified teacher and curriculum materials. "The philosophy of the camp has changed, but be assured the students are under constant watch," Merchant said. "We want all the neighbors, as remote as that area is, to feel safe with this program."

GOODING - Dean Gooding will serve the last year of the term of former councilman Robert Reed who recently passed away. City Council member Isabel Cahoon on Monday nominated Gooding to serve out the last year of Reed's term. The council approved the appointment and Gooding was sworn in. Descended from the family after whom the town is named, Gooding and his wife moved to Gooding and purchased the Gooding Hotel Bed and Breakfast in the 1990s.

Also Monday, the council heard a first reading of an ordinance regarding the donation of 3.6 acres of land that was once the home of the old tuberculosis hospital to the Gooding Recreation District. The Gooding Basque Association plans to lease the land from the city and build a

World economy suffers from regional rivalries

ROBERT J. SAMUELSON

The violence in Israel and the West Bank - however it turns out - has provided a sobering tutorial in the vulnerabilities of the global economy. The look at the disturbing possibility that nationalism, religious hatreds and old-fashioned regional rivalries could disrupt world trade and investment. But this is obviously so.

Geopolitics and global economics are colliding in ways that we resist contemplating because the possible consequences are too upsetting and confusing. Oil is the largest flash point but not the only one. This is globalization's dark side.

Of course, oil's strategic importance is no secret. The world now uses about 76 million barrels a day (mbd) of oil. In September, about 21 mbd of that came from the Persian Gulf. Saudi Arabia was the biggest producer (8.9 mbd), followed by Iran (3.7 mbd), Iraq (2.9 mbd), the United Arab Emirates (2.3 mbd), Kuwait (2.2 mbd) and Qatar (0.7 mbd). Any sizable reduction might raise prices sharply and even trigger a recession. Global stock markets are naturally nervous.

Nor are the Mideast's politics any secret. Crises occur with depressing regularity. Despite this history, the hazards have recently been minimized.

Globalization presumes that materialism refashions world politics. Countries that trade and invest together accommodate political difference. In the Persian Gulf, Iran and Iraq remain hostile to the West. But even they need oil revenues. Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and other producers invest heavily in world stock markets.

They don't want to damage the economies of their biggest customers. And the Saudis and Kuwaitis rely on the U.S. military for security. So oil won't be used as a political weapon.

These arguments make some sense - but only up to a point. They also rationalize wishful thinking by ignoring the potential for chaos, which may force governments to do things they would ordinarily reject.

"There's a hair trigger between the Israeli crisis and the (Persian) Gulf," says Geoffrey Kemp, a Mideast expert at the Nixon Center, a bipartisan think tank. The man who could pull the trigger is Saddam Hussein. One possibility would be "to shut down (some or all) oil production in sympathy with the Palestinian people. He'd become a hero."

The Saudis have spare capacity of about 1.6 million barrels a day, estimates the International Energy Agency. That's not enough to offset a full Iraqi shutdown. But Kemp wonders whether the Saudis would offset even a partial Iraqi cutback. "In the passion of the moment, the Saudis have to be sensitive to the street," he says. "They're superb survivors. They're not going to defy the consensus of the Arab world."

Oil-consuming nations are not entirely defenseless. "The Europeans, the United States and Japan have 1.2 billion barrels in strategic (oil) reserves," says oil economist Philip Verleger. A quick release of these reserves, he says, could neutralize any Iraqi cutback. Existing stocks could offset a 3 mbd loss for slightly more than a year.

But the larger point is that no strategic reserve, regardless of how large, can erase the basic conflict. The world inevitably depends on Persian Gulf oil. It was fought to keep oil supplies in friendly hands.

World trade and investment are constantly redefining national security and economic stability. Asia's 1997-98 financial crisis showed that bad investments made in distant countries can boomerang on the advanced world. Similarly, changing production patterns can make global industries vulnerable to local disruptions. Consider electronics. Components from one country are assembled with components from another to create final products. Taiwan is the world leader in 10 computer products, including circuit boards and modems. China has increasingly become a supplier of components. In 1999, U.S. electronic imports were nearly $20 billion from China and almost $18 billion from Taiwan.

Political upheaval in China or a war over Taiwan would affect world electronics production - especially if the war involved the United States. Some production losses could be replaced fairly quickly. "Printed circuit boards are not highly complex," says economist Kenneth Flamm of the University of Texas.

He estimates that new factories could be built elsewhere within a year. But U.S.-China trade develops the complex, highly complex," says economist Kenneth Flamm of the University of Texas.

Hardly anyone discusses these issues because they do not suggest obvious answers. Once a country decides to join the world economy (as China did), it is not easily excluded. Too many other countries want its business.

The U.S. economy is now so intertwined with the global economy that unilateralism is unimaginable. But Americans fear relying on trade with countries that are unfriendly, if not always downright hostile. And other peoples are as uneasy with these ambiguous relationships as are Americans.

The promise of globalization is that mutual dependence will prevent conflict and inspire cooperation. But it's just a promise.

Grindstaff shows conservation ethic

I have known Gary Grindstaff for many years, and I can't believe the untruths and half-truths I've been reading about him. I first met Gary in 1989 when he was chosen by the Twin Falls County commissioners to sit on the Middle Snake Study Group. This was a group put together by Gooding, Jerome, Lincoln and Twin Falls counties to develop a plan to clean up the Middle Snake. Gary was chosen because of his knowledge of soil conservation techniques and his activism in the soil conservation districts at the local, regional and state level.

It was my honor to chair the Middle Snake Study Group, so I know, up close and personal, the experience and expertise that Gary brought to the group. For three years, he helped the group by working relentlessly to convince state and federal agencies, the Legislature and the governor that the Middle Snake was not a lost cause and that, with a lot of effort, we really could clean it up. It was the efforts of that group that put us well on the way to cleaner above-ground water resources in the Magic Valley.

The study group was turned into a regional commission in 1992, and its name was changed to the Middle Snake Regional Water Resource Commission. Once again, in 1998, Gary was picked by their representatives to be one of the commissioners. Until Gary was appointed to the position of Twin Falls County commissioner, he worked diligently with the other Middle Snake commissioners to collect sufficient data to begin a groundwater protection planning effort which has its kick-off this month. Even as a county commissioner, Gary continues to attend the Middle Snake commission meeting and sits on the commission's executive committee.

When I read that Gary isn't concerned or doesn't care about the environment, it raises my hackles because I know better. Gary is concerned, but as a county commissioner must also follow existing law until the law, or non-existence thereof, is corrected. If I were a citizen of Twin Falls County, I would put my trust in Gary because, as a man of principle, he will work hard to make your county a better place to live for everyone. He deserves your vote.

Meetings facilitate civil dialogue

To Gary Grindstaff, Twin Falls County commissioner, and Bill Crafton, Twin Falls Planning and Zoning director.

We would like to take this opportunity to express our appreciation to both of you and the concerned citizens of the Hagerman Valley area who took the time from their lives to attend a meeting in our home on Tuesday morning to discuss the continuing concerns regarding the proliferation of the dairy industry in our area. We understand that each participant put this meeting as a priority in their schedules.

We appreciate the constraints on the county commissioners and planning and zoning which are dictated by the ordinances now in effect, and we also appreciate the concern displayed by the commissioners when they put in place a moratorium and established a committee to write new ordinances and implement an inspection procedure for protecting all citizens and the environment. We are hopeful that meetings such as this will facilitate a more civil dialog between all who are affected by this problem - homeowners, lawmakers, dairy owners - and encourage all parties to work for the same goals: the promotion of business in Idaho, the protection of our environment and the public good. If we work together, perhaps we can expediently manner and prevent future problems.

Again, we thank each of the people who participated in the meeting.

Mega-dairies are target of scrutiny

This letter is in regard to the dairy dilemma that is happening four miles south of Filer.

The two "mega dairies," DeGroot and Hafliger, are causing problems for their neighbors. At present, some of the problems that these mega dairies are creating are excessive dust, flies, increased traffic and possible water contamination.

Hafliger's mega dairy, in particular, is emitting odors that aren't normal for a dairy. Although he claims to be making changes in his operational procedures in that area, the effect has yet to be felt. The point needs to be made that the Filer Environmental Protection Committee is not against all dairies. It only has qualms with the industrial dairies (more than 100 cows) because they are almost impossible to regulate.

In reply to a letter sent to the editor on Oct. 8, the odor problem connected with the mega dairies is a huge issue for the community that it affects, and it is not a problem that is easily corrected. The candidates who will make a difference in this area are Bill Chisholm and Mike Ihler (write-in candidate).

Accident deserves forgiveness

I have empathy, as well as sympathy, for little Janessa's parents.

Twenty years ago, a co-worker of mine lost their little girl when a heavy welding tank fell over in their garage, killing their little girl; 52 years ago the day after Christmas, our little daughter had her arm scalded when she pulled the cord on our electric percolator as she sat in her high chair, which was moved closer to the stove the evening before to accommodate guests. Thousands of children are lost or killed annually because their parents took their eyes off of them for just seconds. I am not blaming the mother of Janessa for her daughter's death, nor am I blaming Home Depot. The article in the paper states that Mrs. Horner remembers her daughter running toward her, which means that, as little children do, she had run away from her too, which is quite natural for a child to do. On the other hand, Home Depot had closed off the aisle where the accident happened. I, myself, have had to wait for an aisle to open up where a forklift was operating.

We can always find fault in others, but face it, no one plans accidents. To continue to seek vengeance by wanting people to boycott Home Depot will never bring Janessa back, nor will a settlement of any amount of money. I'm sure Home Depot will continue to spend many of its dollars of profit on finding more ways to prevent such tragedies and may change the use of forklifts during open hours to the public.

As for making headline news to the media blaming Home Depot, I'm sure the mother wouldn't want the same kind of reminder broadcast blaming her for the accident. I personally recommend that forgiveness be the uppermost thought in everyone's mind concerning the tragedy and allow Home Depot to do whatever it can to ease the pain. I believe if little Janessa were to be able to do so, she would say, "Mommy, I'm sorry I left your side, but please don't be mad at anyone for what happened."

New facilities are necessary

I'm sure there is no one in the Wendell School District that doesn't realize we have a critical need for a new school in our community. The need has reached emergency proportions so as a longtime resident (72 years), I'm urging you and being, if necessary, for a "yes" vote on the $6.1 million bond on Tuesday. Having graduated from Wendell High School myself, along with two sisters, five of our own sons and daughters, granddaughters and cousins by the dozens, I add our support to the bond issue and likewise ask your support.

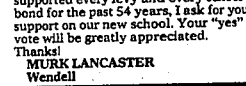

I realize that many are on set incomes, as my wife and I are, but somehow we will be able to make it and meet the need for a facility that is conducive to learning for the children of our community. I also realize that our farmers are having a difficult and hard time this year, but somehow, I also think this should pass.

Some may have all feelings toward the school administration, the school board, a member of the committee or other reasons, but please remember the new school is for our kids and none of the aforementioned.

In the meetings I have attended, I have found that everyone involved has been honest and forthright and are, without doubt, interested in providing a facility for the kids that all the community will be proud of.

So may I once again remind everyone that the new school is for our kids and supported every levy and every school bond for the past 54 years, I ask for your support on our new school. Your "yes" vote will be greatly appreciated.
Thanks!

Mideast truce collapses amid fresh gunbattles

JERUSALEM - The Israeli-Palestinian truce brokered by President Clinton collapsed in a hall of gunfire Friday, with Israeli troops killing nine Palestinians and wounding 67. Amid the worst fighting in two weeks, Israel's prime minister said he will call a timeout to rethink Israel's commitment to peace talks.

Friday's most vicious clash came in the West Bank town of Nablus. Just moments after 4 p.m. - the deadline Israel set for a cease-fire to take hold - tanks and soldiers belonging to the Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat's Fatah movement fired on Israeli soldiers from behind olive trees and a Palestinian police checkpoint.

Massive Israeli return fire - bursts instead of the usual single shots - killed four Palestinians and wounded 20 in an intense 10-minute firefight across the West Bank's main thoroughfare. A Palestinian man, his head covered with blood, was carried by his hands and legs down a rocky slope by frantic bystanders.

The deaths brought to 113 the number of people killed in three weeks of fighting. The vast majority have been Palestinians. Each side swiftly accused the other of breaking promises to Clinton, who had prodded both to work toward a cease-fire before the weekend, when Arab nations are holding a summit with the aim of unifying their positions toward Israel.

Fire at Mexico City disco kills at least 19

MEXICO CITY - A fire ripped through one of Mexico City's largest nightclubs on Friday, killing at least 19 people.

The city attorney general's office said 19 bodies had been recovered from the LoboHombo nightclub and at least 24 people were injured. Workers were still searching the club at midmorning. The cause was not immediately known, but firefighters said witnesses reported hearing several explosions.

Divers arrive at sub disaster site for recovery effort

MOSCOW - British, Scandinavian and Russian divers arrived Friday at the site where the Kursk nuclear submarine sank, and began preparations for recovering the remains of its 118 crewmen, officials said.

Top Russian military officials, however, warned that safety concerns might force the Navy to call off the complex underwater work.

Russian Deputy Prime Minister Ilya Klebanov said Friday it would take until Monday to conclude preparations for the rescue work, with the operation likely to start Tuesday or Wednesday.

Yeltsin plugs memoir at Frankfurt Book Fair

FRANKFURT, Germany - A stiff and halting Boris Yeltsin was mobbed at a major book fair Friday when he plugged his new memoir, which includes a nod to former German leader Helmut Kohl for inspiring him to step down gracefully as Russian president.

Yeltsin, who met Kohl near Frankfurt on Thursday before his cameo appearance at the Frankfurt Book Fair, spoke deliberately during his two-minute delivery, a crisp blue suit adding to his rigid appearance.

Publisher Propylaeen is banking on the former Russian president's role in seeing through German unification to boost sales of the German translation of his 370-page memoir: The book touches on his relations with Kohl and the merger of former communist East Germany with the West.

Bruins rule Walcott

Twin doubles up, qualifies both teams

By Matt Peterson
Times-News writer

RUPERT — When the Twin Falls High cross-country team boards the bus bound for Eagle next Saturday, there will be a little less room than last year.

This season, the state meet involves everyone.

With help from Amy Conover's first-place finish and Adam Miller's third-place showing, the Bruins qualified both their boys' and girls' teams for state at the Class A-1, Div. I Region III cross-country meet.

A-1, Div. I Friday afternoon at Walcott State Park

The Bruin boys (45 points) finished second to Highland (23), while the Bruin girls (26) easily bested Pocatello (49).

"I'm very pleased," said Twin Falls coach Larry Lewis. "They've been working hard for it and we just kind of came to the agreement that this is the last one that they really had to run hard to get to state and they just came together finally."

Conover, running in her last Region III competition, led Friday's race start to finish. The whole way, however, she had Minico's Malorie Sunderland lurking just a few paces behind.

"(Malorie's) really tough," said Conover, who finished with a winning time of 19 minutes, 45 seconds. "She's been my main competition this year and I've been really trying to beat her. She pushed a good pace and she kept me thinking, 'She's going to get me. She's right there.' So she made me push it really hard."

Sunderland finished second, eight seconds behind Conover.

"I think my first mile was bad," said Sunderland, who was the only Spartan girl to qualify for state Friday. "And then I lost focus during that and didn't stay with her as good as I should of. I had enough left (at the end), but she had enough left too."

In the boys' race, Highland's Matt Knoff beat teammate Wray Kunz early, but pulled away in the last half to win by nearly 30 seconds. The sophomore finished with a time of 16:11.

"I was happy (with the time)," Knoff said. "The course was pretty easy and fast, but when it's flat you really have to push yourself all the time."

Miller was the top local finisher. He came in more than a minute behind Knoff and placed third. Teammates Estevan Chapa and Brett Kleinkopf finished sixth and eight, respectively.

Minico's Fernando Lemus secured himself a spot in the state meet with a ninth-place finish.

"Fernando's dropped off and it's going to

Twin Falls' Amy Conover leads Minico's Malorie Sunderland (background) near the halfway point of Friday afternoon's Region III high school cross-country meet at Walcott State Park. Conover went on to win the race in 19 minutes, 45 seconds. Sunderland finished second.

take us a while to get back up," said Minico coach Wes Patterson. "I don't know how. I don't know (why) at all. But at least we're qualified to where we're going to be going to state."

The 11, eight girls, and the 10 boys, qualified individually for the state meet. The top two boys' and girls' teams also qualified.

The state meet will be next Saturday at Eagle Island State Park in Eagle. It is scheduled to start at 11 a.m. with the Class A-2 girls' race.

Jerome leads Div. II charge to state

By Jeff Rosen and Joe Sunnen
Times-News writers

TWIN FALLS — Those Tiger runners just keep streaking, tightening their stranglehold on southern Idaho's cross-country ranks.

Friday afternoon found them sweeping through the Class A-1, Div. II regional state-qualifying meet with ease, placing one of their own in the winners circle in both the boys' and girls' races and capturing the boys' and girls' team titles.

The wins mean both Jerome High teams will be heading to state. The Burley boys' team is too, having finished second in the Tigers. The top three boys' teams qualified, with Blackfoot rounding out the field.

The top two girls' teams advanced, with the Jerome girls and second-place right to attend. Burley finished the fourth out of four teams.

Jerome sophomore Craig Paulin was unstoppable in the boys' 3.1-mile race at the College of Southern Idaho, crossing the finish line in a sizzling 17 minutes, 48 seconds — more than 20 seconds ahead of runner-up and teammate Tyler

Laurel. "I was really pushing myself to get first at this meet. I didn't really have anyone to push me, so that was kind of different. I usually have somebody to try and run against..."

Just to make sure no one could challenge their claim as the boys' regional crown, Tiger

Nick Mink raced across the finish line in third place. Jerome's Tyler Mortenson took seventh.

Canyon clincher: Wendell rumbles into state

The Times-News

WENDELL — The first half of the Wendell-vs.-Glenns Ferry high school football match was the type of game Woody Hayes would have loved. The second half was the type of game that only his mother could.

Both teams kept the ball on the ground and pounded the line of scrimmage as if the forward pass were a trick play. But when the dust cleared, it was Wendell that rumbled into the state playoffs.

Wendell used a ground attack to take a 13-6 lead into half-time and held on to drop the Pilots 20-12. Wendell improved to 6-2 with the win and will host New Plymouth in the opening round of the Class A-3 state playoff next Friday.

The Pilots dropped to 6-2 and go home for the season.

"This was a big game," Wendell coach Jerry Diehl said. "We only have two conference games and both of them are huge. This was a playoff atmosphere and the kids played tough."

Things didn't start off as well as they ended for Wendell. Glenns Ferry's Corey Wendell opened the scoring with an 8-yard plunge up the middle late on the Pilots' first possession. Glenns Ferry missed the point-after kick to lead 6-0.

The bruising junior carried most of the night, amassing 136 yards on 27 carries, including 35 yards in the first quarter alone.

Wendell answered in the second with two touchdowns. The first came on a 33-yard scamper by junior Skylar Stevenson on an off-tackle yard rumble up the gut by senior Zak Cutler. The two combined for 158 yards rushing on 35 attempts.

"The line did a great job opening up holes," Cutler said. "This was the biggest game of my life so far. We have four more and then there will be a bigger one."

The Trojans struck again to start the third quarter.

Sophomore running back Dea Beorchia took the opening-half kickoff 99 yards to the end zone, then kicked the extra point to give Wendell a 20-6 edge. The return proved to be the game-winning margin for the Trojans and per-

Yankees await Mets

Subway Series pulls out of station tonight

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Here's two words you don't see together much: Yankees and -underdog.

Too old, too tired. The New York Yankees have heard it too often.

"I think a lot of people had written us off," Andy Pettitte said Friday, a day before starting Game 1 of the World Series against the New York Mets.

They ended the season with 15 losses in 18 games, dropping their final seven. They lost the opener to host Oakland and Seattle in the AL playoffs.

Each time, they bounced back.

"We'd had some magic stuff stay with us for a long time," manager Joe Torre said. "This year, it hasn't been as easy, but I never noticed anybody getting frustrated to the point of thinking they couldn't do it anyway. And that's why I probably most admire and am most proud of with this team: their resolve and grittiness."

New York has won 12 straight World Series games, coming back from an 0-2 deficit to win in 1996 against Atlanta, then sweeping San Diego in 1998 and the Braves last year.

Only three teams have won three or more World Series in a row: the Yankees from 1936-39, the Yankees from 1949-53 and the Oakland Athletics from 1972-74.

While Las Vegas odds makers say the Yankees are favorites to beat the Mets, the Yankees aren't talking like it. They feel like they aren't proving people wrong.

"I don't think we're too old to win another championship," Pettitte said. "I know that there were a lot of doubts being arisen. This year has been especially gratifying, how hard it was at the end of the year."

With 87 wins, the Yankees had the fewest of any team in the postseason. During the playoffs, they won two series despite a 21-inning scoreless streak — their longest in the postseason since 1921-22 — and two stretches where they didn't score for eight innings each.

"People didn't expect us to be here," said Paul O'Neill, who didn't have a three-run RBI game from Sept. 2 until the pennant-clincher against Seattle. "We've had a lot of ups and downs."

MUST-WIN REMATCH

CSI meet Ricks in Rexburg

By Joe Sunnen
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Another week, another must-win matchup against one of the top 10 teams in the nation.

That's the routine the College of Southern Idaho volleyball team seems to have fallen into.

The Eagles face Ricks College today in a contest that neither team can afford to lose if their hopes of hosting the Region 18 tournament are to stay alive.

The Vikings are 7-1 in the Scenic West Athletic Conference and 35-7 overall after placing second at the Illinois Central Tournament last weekend. Ricks' only conference loss came two weeks ago at CSI.

"If I love this game there is no way in the world that we will host regionals," CSI sophomore Kara Hymas said. "We just want to prove something to them ... If we beat them again, it's going to be in their heads, and when regional time comes they are going to be a little more scared."

The Eagles dominated Ricks the last time these two met on Oct. 7 at CSI. That day's loss knocked the Vikings from No. 3 to No. 7 in the national poll and evened the teams' SWAC record at one loss each.

The contest was supposed to be a close match between two national powers but an uncharacteristic number of errors by Ricks turned it into a blowout.

Andrew Golota pushes his trainer as he quits the fight before the start of the third round against Mike Tyson Friday at the Palace in Auburn Hills, Mich.

Tyson wins when Golota quits

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. (AP) - Mike Tyson won amid a chorus of boos that poured down when Andrew Golota quit before the start of the third round in their heavyweight fight on Friday night in the Palace of Auburn Hills.

Golota was knocked down by a right hand late in the first round but got through the second round.

Then, just before the start of the third round, Golota left his corner and was told to return to by referee Frank Garza. He pushed the referee, and Golota then signaled he was finished.

It was a very unsatisfactory ending to what had the makings of an interesting fight.

The crowd of 16,228 continued to voice its displeasure when Tyson was announced as the winner. At Certo hollered to Golota, "What are you doing?" when Golota left the ring.

The fight started as all Tyson bouts do with the former undisputed heavyweight champion charging out seeking to end it quickly.

He was wild at first, but he opened a cut over Golota's left eye. Then, with 12 seconds remaining in the round, Tyson crashed a right hand to the head that toppled Golota.

Golota got up immediately and took the mandatory eight count, then the bell saved him from further punishment.

The second round was marked by a lot of clinching, although Tyson got in a couple of hard head shots and one solid left jab to the face.

There were no dirty tactics by either fighter, who have earned reputations for breaking the rules.

"I plan to fight clean as much as possible," Golota said before the fight.

It turned out he didn't have much fight in him - clean or dirty - at all.

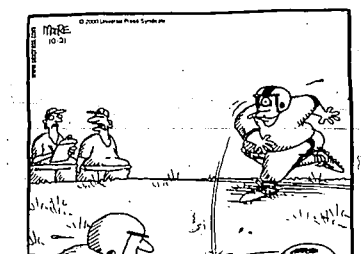

The fight wasn't the kind Tyson was looking for, but it was a victory and he fought hard.

The loss has to end Golota's status as a contender of an attraction in the heavyweight division.

The 32-year-old native of Poland living in Chicago also quit against Michael Grant after being knocked down in the 10th round of a fight Golota was winning last Nov. 20.

Sizing up the Series

The Associated Press
For the first time in 44 years, the World Series features two teams from the same city. In Game 1 today, the Mets' Al Leiter pitches against Andy Pettitte of the Yankees, who hope to become the first team since the 1972-74 Oakland A's to win three straight titles.

Nostalgia
The World Series was played entirely in New York seven times from 1947-56. ... In Game 5 of the '56 Series, Don Larsen retired every Dodgers batter he faced, striking out pinch-hitter Dale Mitchell to complete the only no-hitter in World Series history.

Split loyalties
In honor of the start of the World Series, the two stone lions flanking the massive staircase at the New York Public Library sported black baseball caps — one for the Yankees, the other the Mets, bound by steel cords to the cats' chins.

Series moves
The Mets said Al Leiter will pitch today's Game 1 instead of Mike Hampton, who started Game 1 in the NL playoff series against San Francisco and St. Louis. ... The Yankees' Jose Canseco was added to the World Series roster after being left off for the AL championship series.

Scalpers' delight
"With both the Mets and the Yankees in the World Series, tickets are rare and expensive. On Internet sites, box seats officially priced at $160 were already going for more than $1,000 apiece, with prices expected to escalate before tonight's first pitch at Yankee Stadium.

He said it
"Finally, we're gonna see what it comes down to, who's the better team. This is the real deal. Roger Will Cruz, 24, sporting a Yankee jacket on the No. 7 train in New York.

Turk to Rocket
Mets reliever-Turk-Wendell issued a warning to the Yankees: "Don't hit our batters or your teammates will pay the price."

With Clemens not starting at Shea Stadium, where he would have to bat, the Mets won't have an opportunity to get revenge for the Rocket's beaming of Mike Piazza in July.
But Wendell said if another Met gets hit, by Clemens, the Yankees won't get it without retaliation.
"If he wants to take the chance of hitting somebody else, he's going to have to face the reality that his team is going to have to pay the piper," Wendell said.

Series memories
Some memorable moments on this date in World Series history:
1973 — Bert Campaneris and Reggie Jackson hit two-run homers in the third inning as the Oakland A's defeated the New York Mets 5-2 in Game 7 of the World Series.
1975 — Carlton Fisk broke up one of the best games in Series history with a homer in the 12th inning to give the Boston Red Sox a 7-6 victory against the Cincinnati Reds, forcing a seventh game.

1976 — The Cincinnati Reds won the World Series in four games with a 7-2 victory over the New York Yankees. Johnny Bench had two home runs for five RBIs. It was the Reds' second straight championship and marked the first time a team had swept the playoffs and World Series.
1980 — The Philadelphia Phillies became World Series champions for the first time in their 98-year history with a 4-1 triumph over the Kansas City Royals in Game 6.
1998 — The New York Yankees closed out their historic season with a 3-0 victory at San Diego, sweeping the Padres in four games to win their record 24th World Series championship. The Game 4 victory gave the Yankees 15 wins against 50 losses — for a .714 winning percentage, the best in the majors since their Murderers' Row club of 1927.

Mets don't buy the hype

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Mets did not walk onto the field at Yankee Stadium on Friday with a look of amazement that some players have when they come to baseball's cathedral.
Mike Piazza didn't take a tour of Monument Park to soak in the history of a stadium that was home to Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig, Joe DiMaggio and Mickey Mantle.

Ben there, done that.
Unlike many National League teams that come to New York for the World Series, Yankee Stadium is nothing new to the Mets.

"We're fortunate that we played here during the year and experienced all that already," Piazza said before the Mets worked out for Game 1 of the World Series. "It would probably be a surprise to me to do that in the World Series because of all the hype involved."

"This is still an awesome place. You can't help but notice the energy here," he said.
It's just not much different than it was in June and July when the Mets were here earlier this season. The only noticeable changes are the World Series logos on the field, the bunting hanging from the stands and extra microphones placed around the field to record almost every word.

Oh, and a horde of media and a higher pressure.
"I'm glad I've had some experience at Yankee Stadium," said Todd Pratt, who will start at catcher in Game 1 of the World Series against the Yankees. "All the mystique and all the history and just walking into it and seeing the fans and how rowdy they get. I'm glad our team has some experience walking in there. It can be a little intimidating at times. We're still on enemy turf, but I don't think we're in awe."

The Mets won't be any more the enemy than they were earlier this season. And the large number of corporate types in the stands might even make the crowd a little less intense than usual.
They've heard the chants and dodged the flying objects. If New York is the jungle, the Mets are quite used to it. They play in a similar atmosphere every home game.
"Just having experienced New York City is helpful to some degree," said Todd Zeile, who has lost to the Yankees twice in the postseason with Texas and once with Baltimore. "If you come from other parts of the country, it's a little bit overwhelming."

Not all teams come into Yankee Stadium as relaxed — especially in the World Series. Two years ago, the San Diego Padres looked beaten before even playing Game 1 of the World Series.

Tony Gwynn took his tour of Monument Park, then sat in the dugout soaking in all the history. Other players started around the stadium in awe. That's not how the Mets acted. "Most guys won't admit it, but it can be an intimidating thing your first few times here," said Garret I starter Al Leiter, who made his major league debut with the Yankees. "All the lore of the stadium and the mystique can be difficult to deal with."
The last handful of times I've started there, I haven't been as nervous or intimidated there. I can't say I felt that comfortable eight or nine years ago."

The Mets have played nine times at Yankee Stadium since interleague play began in 1997. They've won three — two by Leiter — and know all the ins and outs of the stadium.
The visitors' clubhouse is familiar. They've used the weight room and the batting cages. While that might seem trivial, it is just another unknown factor eliminated. "Yankee Stadium? I don't give a hoot about it," reliever Turk Wendell said. "We've played there before. It won't be a surprise."

Pratt, Vizcaino earn Game 1 nods

NEW YORK (AP) — With Mike Piazza starting in front of him, Todd Pratt hasn't gotten many opportunities to play in the postseason.

That's until the designated hitter came into play. New York Mets manager Bobby Valentine decided to start Pratt at catcher in Game 1 of the World Series tonight against the New York Yankees.
"I think he's our next best right-handed hitter," Valentine said. "Todd Pratt's been a big part of this team for two years and more."

The move leaves the Mets with no catcher on the bench for Game 1, which could cause a problem late in the game.
"I had an idea it could happen," Pratt said. "I thought it was low man on the pole only because of the two-catcher factor. I knew it was a possibility, but I thought it was the slimmest of possibilities."
Piazza, for his part, is glad to take a break from the wear and tear of being behind the plate.
"After some of those games catching, you feel like you just took the S.A.T.s," Piazza said. "I know I'm going to get my action behind the plate at Shea."

Yankees manager Joe Torre decided to give Jose Vizcaino his first start of the postseason. Vizcaino will play second base instead of Luis Sojo, while Chuck Knoblauch remains at DH.
"He and Sojo are interchangeable for me as far as defensive ability," Torre said. "What jumped out at me are the numbers he had against Al (Leiter, Game 1 starter)."

Benny says Mets in five
As soon as Benny Agabayani said the morning paper, he knew he had made a mistake.
In a high-profile appearance on Howard Stern's radio show, Agabayani predicted the Mets despite a 1-0 lead in Game 1 of the World Series. "I feel Cook said, 'The only way I wouldn't be on the roster was if I couldn't walk. At least that was my feeling.'"

Valentine flowers for Bobby
Bobby Valentine has been called many things as a manager, but probably only he would compare himself to a flower.
"I think a flower comes out of the ground and it changes until

Alling Cook clutches up

Mets reliever Dennis Cook will pitch in the World Series despite a kidney stone that has contributed to a sore back all week.
Cook saw a doctor Thursday and plans to have the stone removed with laser treatment after the World Series. "I feel better today than yesterday," Cook said. "The only way I wouldn't be on the roster was if I couldn't walk. At least that was my feeling."

Seven cheers for the Subway Series

NEW YORK — We all know why we should hate the idea of this New York-New York World Series. The villains are out there to embrace it, one for every potential game we have to endure Donald Trump:

1. Timo Perez. Every World Series needs an inspiring ragtime story, and the strange saga of Timo Perez is a particularly compelling version. He's a 23-year-old outfielder from San Cristobal, Dominican Republic, by way of the Hiroshima Carp of the Japanese League, where he played four seasons.

The Mets signed him this spring after the Carp released him, and he began the year with Port St. Lucie of the Class A Florida State League. He moved up to AAA New York in June, hit .357, and was called up to the Mets on Aug. 30, the last day to be eligible for the postseason. Perez might have remained merely a footnote, but when Derek Bell sprained his ankle in the division series, Perez became the Mets' regular right fielder and leadoff hitter, batting .304 with eight runs in the National League Championship Series. He might be the only Dominican ballplayer who speaks Japanese, but no English.

"He's the best thing to come out of Japan since the VCR," teammate Mike Piazza said.
2. Roger Clemens. The Rocket combines two qualities that can't be beat in a pitcher — a magical, ageless right arm, and a mean streak. The combination led to a memorable one-hitter last Saturday against the Mariners, when he low-briided Alex Rodriguez twice in the first inning and dominated the rest of the game. He could easily have had a no-hitter if Tino Martinez's vertical leap was an inch higher.

3. Mike Piazza. It's always fun to see how great players respond on the national stage, and Piazza is the ranking superstar in this first of two home runs. Every Piazza at-bat will bring heightened tension, but the real drama will be ...
4. Clemens vs. Piazza. We're not saying that Fox executives are hoping for a baseball war to boost viewer interest, but one of their producers was seen yesterday telling Piazza that Clemens had insulted his mother.

COMMENTARY

Larry Stone
The Piazza-Clemens subplot will be a powerful one, dating back to July 8, when Piazza was nailed in the helmet by a 92 mph league game at Yankee Stadium. Piazza suffered a concussion, then held a press conference the next day to accuse Clemens of throwing at him intentionally. The Mets were hardly hasty, when Yankee Manager Joe Torre told Clemens to pitch Game 2 — in which he won't have to bat — and also a potential Game 6, also at Yankee Stadium. But don't think the Mets have forgotten, or forgiven.

"It's fresh," Todd Zeile said at Tuesday's Mets workout.
"We actually like their team," added catcher Todd Pratt. "Or at least 24 of the guys. We all lost respect for Roger at that point."
There hasn't been a brushback incident in the World Series since Philadelphia's Dickie Noles decked George Brett in 1980. But if Clemens tries to pull an A-Rod, you can bet that the Mets won't take it lying down.

5. John Franco. No longer the Mets' closer, he is now their spiritual leader. One of the best stories this week is Franco, the kid from the housing projects in Brooklyn who grew up rooting for the Mets, finally making it to the World Series after 17 years in the major leagues. On Tuesday, Mike Hampton showed his esteem for Franco by presenting him with the game ball from the NLCS — the ball Perez caught for the final out.

6. Yankee dynasty. Love them or hate them, the current Yankees will go down as one of baseball's greatest teams, and if they cannot a three-peat — baseball's first since the Oakland A's from 1971-73 — their place in history will be enhanced.

7. The Steinbrenner factor. That being said, if the Yankees don't win the World Series, the Steinbrenner factor will be happy. In fact, losing to the hated Mets and having to spend the winter getting his nose rubbed in it could incite the mother of all Steinbrenner tantrums. As George King wrote in Wednesday's New York Post, "No team in the history of sports is under the amount of pressure the Yankees are today."
8. Anticipate endless camera shots of Steinbrenner grinning and screaming in his luxury suite after every Yankee flub.
And what a beautiful thing that will be.

Wildcats live up to lower expectations

Los Angeles Times

Take a nap, put on a pot of coffee and let the kids stay up for this late-night October surprise in the Pacific 10 Conference.

The surprise isn't Oregon, the Pac-10's most fundamentally sound program for the last five years under Coach Mike Bellardi.

The surprise is Arizona, picked to finish eighth in a preseason media poll after leading the conference into the abyss last year.

The two tonight at 8:15 on Fox Sports Net.

You remember Arizona, no? The Wildcats began 1999 as the nation's No. 4 team after a 12-1 season, lost to Penn State in the opener, 41-7, and finished 6-6.

With lowered expectations this year, Arizona has thrived. Despite having given up 47 points in last week's triple-overtime win over Washington State, Arizona's young defense has held opponents to 16.3 points a game and has caused 25 turnovers.

Unfortunately, a win at Oregon will give Arizona the inside track to the Rose Bowl, unseating reminders that Arizona remains the only team from the Pac-10 or Big Ten never to have played in a Rose Bowl game.

But let's not jump too far ahead. The chances of Arizona upsetting Oregon at Autzen Stadium are about as good as UCLA's and Washington's earlier this year.

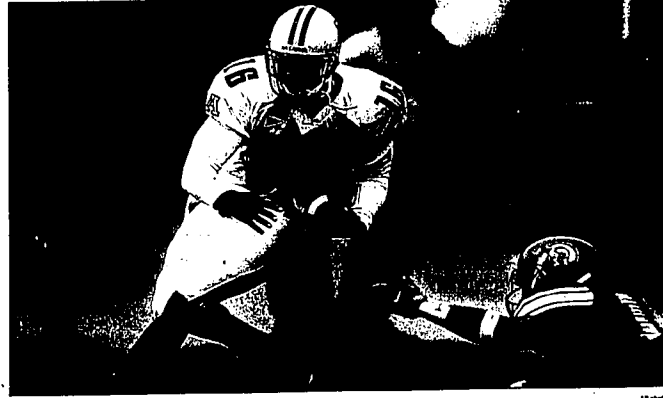

Oregon is the team to beat in the Pac-10. The Ducks have won Oregon quarterback Joey Harrington, right, passes the ball while teammate Maurice Morris opens Southern California's Zeke Moreno Oct. 14 in Los Angeles.

18 consecutive games at home and have already dispatched three of their toughest conference foes, UCLA, Washington and UCLA. After Arizona, Oregon plays at Arizona State and Washington State, hosts California on Nov. 11 and then visits Oregon State on Nov. 18 with the Pac-10 title and a Rose Bowl berth possible at stake.

A few other games to watch: No. 20 Notre Dame (4-2) at West Virginia (4-2), 10 a.m., CBS. His job safe for now, Bob Davie leads Irish toward the slippery slopes of Morgantown. Tulane (3-3) at Army (0-6), 10 a.m., Fox Sports Net. Bush says the fact Army and Navy are a combined 0-12 is proof U.S. armed forces have been stretched too thin. No. 17 Purdue (5-2) at Wisconsin (4-3), 10 a.m., ESPN. This could be like spitting into the wind for Purdue quarterback Drew Brees, 0-2 against the Badger defense. Illinois (4-2) at Penn State (2-5), 10 a.m., ESPN. Penn State used the bye week to replace every player or its roster. No. 5 Clemson (7-0) at North Carolina (3-3), 3:30 p.m., ESPN.

Arizona quarterback Ortege Jenkins, left, rushes for no gain as USC's Kori Dickerson attempts the tackle Oct. 7 in Los Angeles. Jenkins will be a key factor for the Wildcats today.

Some writers attending game only to pick up feature story on new Tar Heels' basketball Coach Matt Doherty. No. 2 Virginia Tech (6-0) at Syracuse (3-3), 5 p.m., ESPN. For what it's worth, the home team has won the last nine games in series.

Vandals plot their move to 2-0 season

The Associated Press

Neither team has a winning record, but Idaho coach Tom Cable recognizes the stakes are high in the Big West Conference as the Vandals travel to play Utah State today.

"It's a chance for us to get to 2-0 in the conference," Cable said. "It's a chance for us to get to .500. It's a chance for us to go on the road and prove we can win."

Utah State's Idaho series is dead even. The Vandals (3-4) and Aggies (2-4) have won 13 games each, along with two ties.

Like Cable, Utah State coach Mike Denneny is looking at the bottom line. Although the Aggies struggled early in the season, they're also 1-0 in the Big West after beating North Texas last weekend.

"It is great to play in front of our home fans in a game as big as this game is," he said.

Utah State has a chance to win a conference championship, we have got to be able to compete against teams like the University of Idaho. We are very excited to have the opportunity," Denneny said.

It won't be easy. Utah State has won its Big West home opener four of the last five years, but it was the Vandals who spoiled the streak two years ago.

Idaho's Willie Alderson is averaging 107 yards a game and John Welsh has completed 56 percent of his passes. The Vandals, who beat Arkansas State last week, are averaging almost 32 points a game.

Alderson is the Big West's leading rusher this season and is ranked among the top pass catchers as well. He ranks in the top 25 nationally in rushing yardage and all-purpose running. He was Big West Co-Player of the Week on the strength of an overwhelming rushing attack against the Indians, in which he rushed a career-high 28 times for 135 yards, just five yards short of his personal best. The four rushing touchdowns he scored are a school record set back in 1965 by Ray McDonald against Montana State.

"Willie Alderson has come in and done a very good job for them," Cable said. "They're running the football, but as an experienced pass receiver coming out of the backfield as well," Denneny said.

Utah State is what to expect when the Aggies are on defense.

"They've been two different teams this year," he said. "They played one front most of the season and then again. By they changed their defense completely. Then against North Texas and the option, they went back to what they had been playing."

White, who ranks among the top 50 nationally in three categories. He's second in all-purpose yardage at 194.2 yards a game.

Ernest White, their tailback, is probably as good or better than anybody in the league in all-purpose running," Cable said. "More so in the kicking game, as he's also running for about 90 yards a game."

Will the real Bengals stand up?

By Jared Eborn

Idaho State Journal

POCATELLO — So, which Idaho State football team is the "real" Idaho State football team? Are the Bengals that have gritty victories over Northern Arizona and Sacramento State the real team wearing black and orange? Or is it the team that dropped lopsided games to Eastern Washington and Portland State?

Bengal fans will likely get a solid indication this afternoon when the 4-3 Bengals take on the 2-4 Southern Utah Thunderbirds at Holt Arena in their annual homecoming game today.

"This is a big game for us," said ISU coach Larry Lewis. "Every game is a big game, even if it's not a conference game."

The Bengals are trying to put last week's 59-21 pounding at the hands of Portland State behind them. And hosting another offensive juggernaut might not be the best way to do that.

However, for all the offensive weapons the Thunderbirds have, they also come to Pocatello with defensive liabilities. SUU has the second-ranked rushing offense in all of IAA with nearly 350 yards per game on the ground. The Thunderbirds have one of the best weapons in the country in Matt Cannon, but have a hard time stopping anyone. Through six games, SUU ranks No. 107 in pass defense. No. 105 in scoring defense and like to turn the ball over with a No. 103 ranked turnover ratio of minus-1.17.

But the Birds do enjoy making things a little crazy on the field. "This could be a real shootout," said SUU coach C. Ray Gregory. "Both teams scored a bucket of points last year in Cedar City and they're better than they were last year."

Gregory said he was especially concerned about his teams' inability to stop opponents' passing games.

BSU's Koetter makes no apologies

The Associated Press

and The Times-News

Broncos coach Dirk Koetter has created a minor problem as Boise State continues to improve. He's starting to face the wrath of fans who expect his team to play well and win.

Boise State was sloppy at times during last week's 41-23 victory over Division I-AA Eastern Washington.

"I refuse to apologize for an 18-point homecoming win when three years ago we would have paid a million dollars to beat anybody," Koetter said.

The Broncos will have a chance to sharpen their play today against Texas (1-5), which ranks last nationally in total offense. The Mean Green is averaging only 217.5 yards a game.

North Texas has been hurt by a shoulder injury to Ja'Quay Wilburn, who had a 1,000-yard rushing season one year ago but is averaging only 39.2 yards a game since last week. Koetter said his players are "probably never going to please me, but I get a little nervous when I hear people in the crowd getting upset at them when we're winning like we were."

The Broncos (4-2) began the season as favorites to win a second straight Big West title. The New York Times ranked Boise State 15th in its preseason poll.

Some fans predicted an undefeated season.

"The expectation level has definitely been raised at Boise State, and that's a good thing," Koetter said. "I hope the fans trust me and trust the rest of the coaches 'at we're more than on top of it. We're doing everything in our power to make it right.'"

And the news isn't really so bad for the Broncos. The blue turf has been kind to Boise State, as the team has won 10 straight games and 12 of the last 13 outings dating back to the 1998 season. During the Broncos' current nine-game home winning streak, the team has averaged 40 points per game (399 total points) while allowing just 19 points per game (187 total points), for an average

"They throw the ball a lot," Gregory said. "We didn't do much to stop (Division II) UC Davis (last week's opponent), which probably makes Idaho State feel pretty good. We have corners one-on-one against their receivers or rush four guys and play zone in the secondary."

Whatever they do, ISU will still mix with what it does best. That would be passing the ball first and mixing things up with occasional running plays from Nick Whitworth.

One good thing about the game is the lack of hostility that has accompanied the series in the past. Gregory has done everything from accuse ISU coaches of running up the score to swearing off potatoes for a year in an effort to rally his troops for the game.

But this season, the budding rivalry is more calm.

"That was a different (ISU) coaching staff," Lewis said of the previous year. "They have a program down there and I know this will be a good game."

Even winning, TCU may lose

The Associated Press

Of the five major college teams that were unbeaten entering the weekend, No. 11 TCU had the easiest road to a perfect season but the toughest obstacles to overcome to earn a shot at the national title.

Welcome to the world of the Bowl Championship Series.

According to BCS bylaws, six of its eight bowl spots are guaranteed to champions from the Atlantic Coast, Big East, Big Ten, Big 12, Pacific-10 and Southeastern conferences. The others are reserved for at-large entries, conference runners-up and other league champions. The first official BCS standings will be released Monday.

Bestfoods Baking expands recall

TWIN FALLS — Bestfoods Baking of Bay Shore, N.Y., is expanding its previously announced recall in Idaho to include all Oroweat Super Onion Bagel packages with the October code date because they may contain undeclared hazelnuts.

People who have an allergy or severe sensitivity to hazelnuts run the risk of serious or life-threatening allergic reaction if they consume these products, the company said.

No other Oroweat Bagels are affected.

The Oroweat Super Onion Bagels were distributed in 20-ounce packages with six bagels per bag bearing UPC code 73130 00804.

No hassles have been reported to date, Bestfoods said. Consumers who have purchased the recalled bagels should return them to the place of purchase for a full refund. Direct any questions to a company representative at 1-800-356-3314.

President of Idaho Falls chamber resigns

IDaho FALLS — The Greater Idaho Falls Chamber of Commerce will be looking for a new president in the wake of Fred Sica's announcement that he is leaving to become director of the Henry's Fork Foundation.

Sica, who has headed the chamber since 1993, was offered the job as executive director of the conservation group Tuesday night.

"Sica is a dream for me," said Sica, a river guide and avid fly-fisherman. "Nothing could get me away from this chamber except this. I'm going to be able to mix my passion with my vocation."

Sica will start sometime before Jan. 1. The chamber has appointed a search committee for his replacement, which will get to work after the organization holds a retreat this weekend.

Ron Frazell, who became the chamber's chairman Oct. 1, said Sica will be leaving an organization that is substantially stronger than when he took over. In the past seven years, the chamber has doubled its membership to more than 1,000. It has a reputation for being one of the most active chambers in Idaho.

As it seeks to protect the ecological integrity of Henry's Fork, one of the world's top trout streams, the foundation is looking for someone to build consensus on the Henry's Fork Watershed Council. Building membership for the foundation, which has about 2,000 people paying annual dues of $20, and finding donors are also important tasks.

Avista CEO leaves after two years in post

SPOKANE, Wash. — Avista Corp. Chairman and Chief Executive Officer Tom Matthews, whose two-year tenure has been marked by steep energy trading losses and contentious relations with Washington regulators, is leaving the diversified energy company.

Effective immediately, the former Texas oil industry executive is being replaced on an interim basis by Executive Vice President Gary Ely, the Spokane-based company said Thursday.

The company's stock closed at 19.81 on Friday. Matthews was given a $750,000 bonus, plus a $1 million signing bonus and stock options potentially worth millions more.

But his early successes in reforming the firm turned sour this year, as Avista lost as much as $140 million through trades on the open electricity market.

The company initially blamed most of those losses on Roger Scholten, an energy trader who killed himself in April. But after the explanation was greeted by skepticism from Wall Street analysts, the company made an about face, saying the losses were solely the responsibility of management.

The losses triggered several lawsuits from investors who said they were misled about the risks of buying Avista stock.

Ameristar to buy Missouri casino

The Times-News and combined wire reports

JACKPOT, Nev. — A major Magic Valley employer is overhauling its gaming portfolio elsewhere in the country to concentrate on Midwest riverboats.

Riverboat gaming operator Ameristar Casinos Inc., which has operations in Jackpot, said this week it signed definitive agreements to acquire Station Casinos Inc.'s Missouri properties in Kansas and St. Charles for $475 million.

Ameristar also said it would sell its Henderson, Nev., property, The Reserve, to Station Casinos for $70 million in cash. However, Ameristar said it would retain several members of The Reserve management team.

"The sale of this property will allow management to devote more attention to the company's core riverboat gaming operations," Ameristar President and Chief Executive Craig H. Neilsen said.

The Missouri acquisitions, expected to close by the end of 2000, expand Ameristar's riverboat operations in Iowa and Mississippi. Meanwhile, The Reserve sale in suburban Las Vegas is expected to close in fourth quarter 2000 or first quarter 2001.

Las Vegas, Nev.-based Ameristar owns and operates Cactus Pines Resort Casino and

The Horses Hotel & Casino in Jupiter, Ameristar Casino Hotel Vicksburg in Vicksburg, Miss., and Ameristar Casino Hotel Council Bluffs in Council Bluffs, Iowa.

Regulators in those states said Wednesday Ameristar had no significant fines or disciplinary actions on its record.

The addition of the Reserve would give Station seven casinos in the Las Vegas area with two others in development. Moreover, the deal would get Station out of Missouri, where it has run into trouble with regulators.

The Ameristar deal brings an abrupt end to the proposed $475 million sale of Station's Missouri properties to a group of Station executives based in the state. That management group, headed by Station Midwest President John V. Finamore, is expected to remain in place.

"Certainly, it's disappointing," Finamore said of the failed purchase. "But this is an exciting new beginning."

Finamore also said Ameristar is expected to retain the two casinos' full complement of more than 3,000 workers.

"We're looking for a smooth transition with no changes in staffing or operating philosophy," he said.

The deal is contingent on approval by Missouri and Nevada regulators.

Ameristar has a head start on its proposed Missouri licensing with its unsuccessful bid earlier this year to build a riverboat casino in Lemay, Mo., in suburban St. Louis. In that hotly contested process to expand the St. Louis marketplace, the commission selected Mississippi-based Isle of Capri Casinos Inc. to open a new casino in Kimmickville, Mo., south of St. Louis.

In a statement, Neilsen said: "The Missouri acquisitions provide Ameristar with the ideal opportunity to further leverage the company's expertise in riverboat operation (and) cross-market the combined four Midwest properties under the Ameristar name." See page AMERISTAR, Page B9

Salt Lake City company makes casts of computer scans

The Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — Scott McMillan, co-owner of Javelin, a technology company that turns Ideas and designs into 3-D images and models, holds a 'phantom master' that illustrates the size and place of a patient's tumor. The medical model is then used for surgical navigation.

It is, he explains, an exact replica of the skeleton of a cone joined to a bunch of what looks like bones, though closer inspection will show it's a model made of cornstarch and wax.

They have also, over the years, worked with artists to reproduce sculptures on the computer and turn them into actual models. It is the medical potential that keeps McMillan and Emory excited.

For instance, a surgeon could cut a couple of hours out of a delicate brain surgery by studying the replica of what he would encounter in flesh and planning out the operation.

Rendering a scan into a model, whether taken from a CT scan, MRI or even an image taken from a microscope, has also helped diagnose problems, Emory said. She talks about the man who had a bone fracture. The doctor suspected, because of cate brain surgery by studying the replica of what he would encounter in flesh and planning out the operation.

Rendering a scan into a model, whether taken from a CT scan, MRI or even an image taken from a microscope, has also helped diagnose problems, Emory said. She talks about the man who had a bone fracture. The doctor suspected, because of the level of pain that persisted, that there was another fracture, albeit a tiny one, in the bone. Scans didn't show it clearly to the human eye. By putting the scan into the computer and then building a clear, resin-based model, the fracture was clearly visible. Physicians can use the prototype brain tumors for calibration to make computer-guided surgery more precise. The system can be used to calibrate equipment and medical devices and easily merges data from different sources, like the skull data from a CT scan and the tumor (tissue) data from an MRI.

Or the models can be sent to a titanium house to have medical parts, which have been approved for use in humans. Made so precisely that, thanks to the mold, they'll fit without adjustment.

'Offer a compromise' process breaks

IRS tax settlement plan overwhelms the agency

Los Angeles Times

The IRS' much-touted plan for settling tax debts — a key result of congressional investigations into taxpayer abuses three years ago — is so overwhelmed with applications that the agency is unable to cope.

As a result, the "offer in compromise" process often takes so long that some tax preparers are advising their clients to file for bankruptcy rather than attempt to pay any of their tax debt — exactly the result Congress was trying to avoid when it ordered the IRS to reform the program.

"The offer process is broken," Dale Hart, an IRS deputy commissioner, told a group of tax practitioners in Los Angeles last week, adding that the service has been "overwhelmed" trying to deal with more than 100,000 compromise requests.

At the direction of Congress, the IRS loosened its criteria last year for accepting offers in compromise, which are formal pleas from cash-strapped taxpayers to pay less than what they owe — typically 12 to 13 cents on the dollar. The idea was for the IRS to settle up and allow taxpayers who had been hounded for years by collection agents to start over with a clean slate. The taxpayers could regain their financial stability, and the IRS could stop worrying about uncollectable taxes.

But the agency failed to add needed staff to meet the surge in demand and IRS officials say most offers aren't being handled within the agency's target time frame of six months. Only 40 percent of offers nationwide get processed that fast, IRS spokeswoman Michelle Lamishau said.

Attrition and a tight budget have prevented the IRS from hiring more agents to handle the deluge, she said. The agency got more money from Congress for the new fiscal year, but has no specific plans to boost offer-in-compromise staffing, Lamishau said.

The IRS' procedures for handling offers in compromise worked fine when only a few such cases were considered each year, said Hart, who made her remarks to the UCLA Extension Tax Controversy Institute. But the procedures "don't work when you have a whole lot of (cases)," Hart said. "This huge inventory mushroomed out of nowhere."

For years, the IRS rejected far more applications than it accepted. The agency typically accepted requests only if it was unlikely that the full amount could ever be collected. But after a series of dramatic and highly publicized hearings in 1997 and 1998 that detailed a raft of IRS abuses, Congress decided the agency should be more flexible in dealing with taxpayers who were sincerely trying to pay their tax debts.

In the 1998 hearings, the Senate Finance Committee heard testimony that IRS collection agents browbeat some taxpayers for years in cases where the families had no hope of ever paying off their past tax bills.

Lawmakers hoped that a more lenient compromise process would prevent some taxpayers from seeking protection in bankruptcy, where some tax debts can be erased. Congress also hoped that leniency would ultimately result in the government collecting more money. The IRS estimates it was owed $34 billion in back taxes, penalties and interest in 1998, the last year for which figures are available.

The resulting IRS Restructuring and Reform Act of 1998 was designed to make it easier for taxpayers to qualify for relief. The act required the agency to consider the taxpayer's financial situation and ability to pay, as well as the odds of collecting the entire bill.

The new law found a ready

Wall Street pulls back-to-back rallies

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices rose for a second straight Friday as big gains in technology stocks...

The advance, the first since Labor Day that Wall Street pulled together back-to-back rallies, helped the market rebound from a turbulent week that included Wednesday's 433-point intraday plunge in the Dow Jones industrials...

After spending the early part of Friday's session in negative territory, the Dow recovered to close up $3.61 at 10,226.59. For the week, the Dow rose 34.41.

Broader indicators were also higher. The Nasdaq composite index rose 64.54 to 3,433.14, giving it a 1.89 percent gain and a 166.37-point advance for the week.

The Standard and Poor's 500 index was up 8.17 at 1,396.93, giving the S&P a weekly gain of 22.76.

Most of the bad news is out of the way. We're having a rally based on stocks being as cheap as they've been in a long time," said Barry Berman, head trader for Robert W. Baird & Co.

Technology issues continued their upward trek, lifting the Nasdaq. Microsoft traded up $3.31 at $65.19, extending a nearly 70 percent gain since the beginning of the session.

Internet prices also gained. Fiber optic company JDS Uniphase jumped $12.44 to $102.38, Ciena climbed $9.61 to $149.50 and America Online gained $1.11 to $46.55.

Much of the activity in the Dow appeared related to talk that United Technologies was considering buying out Honeywell for $40 billion. Both companies are Dow components.

Stock traders also continued their focus on corporate earnings. A warning from Circuit City of lower than expected quarterly earnings set the retailer's stock $13.88.

Analysts said the selloff in blue chip stocks early Friday was typical for the session immediately following a strong move upward.

"This is just daily trading noise," said John Cleland, chief investment strategist at Security Benefit Group.

Financial planners can help guide spending, savings, giving decisions

By Ellen Alt Powell The Associated Press

NEW YORK — A young couple trying to figure out how to save for their children's education. A small business owner worried that he's not protecting his partner or himself.

Tips on choosing a financial planner

Following are some of the things to ask when choosing a financial planner:

- What are your qualifications to be a planner?
• What services do you offer?
• Will there be other experts working with us?
• How are you paid? If so, are you paid by the hour, a set fee or commissions on products you recommend to me?
• Can I have the offer in writing?

Harris Interactive Inc. for the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants found that the majority of respondents say they are spending more time thinking about their finances, but less than a third are confident they can manage their money as well as they might with the help of a financial planner.

"My argument is that the most expensive thing you can do is not doing proper planning," said Laurence Foster, chairman of the AICPA's personal financial specialist credential and exam committee.

with medical bills or college expenses for their children.

Planners, of course, cost money. Some charge flat fees for specified services. Others charge hourly rates. Still others work as commissions they earn from products they sell you. Is one method better than the other?

Patricia Houlihan, chairman of the Certified Financial Planner Board of Standards, says the key is that whatever the form of payment, "it should be disclosed fully and up front."

Houlihan, who runs her own financial planning firm in Oakland, Va., also notes that there are some 200,000 to 300,000 individuals in the United States who call themselves "financial planners" but would be classified as unqualified if they're hiring is qualified.

Among the many professional designations planners might have are Certified Financial Planner, Chartered Financial Consultant or Personal Financial Specialist — all awarded after completion of training courses and exams.

A number of associations will help you find planners in their areas. They include the Financial Planning Association, 800-282-PLAN or www.fpanet.org; the AICPA, 888-999-9256 or www.aicpa.org; the Association of Personal Financial Advisors, 888-FEE-ONLY or www.napfa.org; and the Society of Financial Service Professionals, 888-243-2259 or www.financialpros.org.

Professional fee planning services also is offered by experts in banks, insurance companies, mutual fund companies and brokerage houses. Some are generalists, while others specialize in the products their company is selling.

Making Your Money Count

Has that money you got for your birthday or earned doing chores outgrown your piggy bank? Maybe it's time to think about opening your own bank account.

To save money safely, open a savings account at a local bank or savings and loan. The bank keeps your money and gives you an account number and book, called a passbook, to keep track of what you have saved. You can add money, or deposit it, any time the bank is open.

When you decide to deposit money, take the money to the bank with your passbook and give it to a bank teller who stands behind a long desk. Once your money is added, your passbook will show the total, or balance, of your account.

In addition to the money you have put in your account, the bank will give you some money, too. This money is called interest, and the bank gives it to you as payment for using your money while it is there.

If you decide to use some of the money, you may withdraw it. However, you cannot take out more money than you have put in your account.

The United Nations

This month, the United Nations will celebrate a birthday. The organization was developed in 1945 by 51 countries. Today, 188 countries belong to the United Nations.

The United Nations is not a world government and does not make laws. It was set up for four purposes: to keep international peace and security, to develop friendly relations among nations, to solve international problems and promote respect for human rights and to help unify the actions of nations.

Throughout the world, the United Nations works to clear land mines, improve drinking water, help countries produce more food and loan money to developing countries.

There are six parts to the United Nations:

'Exorcist' revival feeds hoax

Demons, devils and the religious act known as exorcism, or the casting out of evil spirits, may be the biggest hoax ever visited on modern believers. But in the next few weeks, countless people will be entertaining imaginary demons and acting as if their naughty spirits were human and real. This is all because of the re-release of an old film, "The Exorcist," which made audiences in the early 1970s tremble with fear.

People retired to their secure homes after viewing the film, convinced that demons had either invaded their homes, bodies or rascally children. I was a parish pastor in those days, struggling with everyday problems. Overnight, the mood of the congregation changed, and instead of human turnout, I was suddenly dealing with problems that allegedly came from a supernatural realm.

A young mother called, interrupting a meeting of Sunday school teachers with her screams and pleas for release. I rushed to her sister's home, where I and her sister said she was possessed by a demon.

I asked the sister to leave the room, then went into my counseling office and brought a man to her feet in a matter of minutes. She went home to her children, her devils allegedly trailing behind in a benign parade of mockery. The sister said she was genuine, in truth, all I did was assure her that demons had no power over a spiritual person. I still believe that is true.

A college student came to my office one morning. His face was ashen, his young hands slightly trembling. The night before, he had masterminded a summons of demons into his dorm room. With the help of a dozen naive students, he had murdered a cat, carried it to his room, and then, as the candles burned and the students chanted, my young parishioners whispered incantations and curses over the corpse.

Suddenly a door blew open, he said. A blast of cold air filled the room. The candles flickered, and he believed the dead beast stirred as if to leave the table. Students scrambled for the door. Candles tipped and fell, starting the dead cat on fire. The smell filled the halls, and in seconds the entire dormitory was emptied. The next morning, the campus police found the charred hide of the cat.

The young fellow believed a demon had invaded the impromptu ritual. I asked him how many times he had seen the film, "The Exorcist." He answered six, but the first two times he said his eyes were mostly shut. Go back to your dorm, I told him, apologize to everybody and forget about conjuring demons and spirits. His night of terror was over.

A woman called. She implored me to come to her house, and within minutes I arrived ready to battle another demon. We sat in the kitchen, and she told me about the imaginary demon that she believed was living in her home. Her fear was so complete, so emotional and clarified that I began to feel uneasy. I looked in the closet where she said it was. I walked to it, pulled it open with force and said, "Be gone, in the name of Jesus Christ."

I stood in 'em inside at the boots, mittens and heavy winter coats. She sat at the table with her hands over her mouth, her eyes wide and watery. I said to her, "The demon is gone." She slumped onto the table, relieved.

I drove back to my church knowing I had betrayed my understanding of the spirit world and yet conged that only the name of Jesus Christ could have given her comfort. I am sure I did the only thing that could have worked for that particular person.

There were other supernatural events during 1973, and I plodded through them. I just want to tell those who see this film for the first time. It's just a movie, and the demons are Hollywood creations.

Church plants a firm rock

By Julie Pence
Times-News correspondent

KIMBERLY - A casual conversation at the county fair led to a new church - and maybe a new way of life - for many Hispanic people in Twin Falls County.

During Labor Day weekend, while attending the Twin Falls County Fair, a Roca Firme (Spanish for "firm rock") minister named Bob Gomes hooked up with a member of the Kimberly Church of the Nazarene. It seems the Nazarene congregation had been praying for a way to open the church doors to the area's growing Hispanic population.

Gomes believes this was no chance encounter.

Gomes' senior pastor, Dagoberto Martinez of Rupert, had talked many times about the need to minister to unchurched Hispanics in Twin Falls County.

"We felt we had a need for a lot of Spanish people in the Kimberly area," said Martinez, who started the first Roca Firme church in Rupert five years ago.

Members of Roca Firme - which is now five churches strong - had been praying about how to pull the Twin Falls County Hispanic community together to share friendship and spiritual guidance.

Soon Gomes and Martinez were making plans to meet with Kimberly Nazarene minister Michael Seward. With no Spanish-speaking members in the Kimberly Nazarene congregation and no site for a Roca Firme church in Kimberly, each church had something the other needed.

Congregations from different denominations don't often cross lines, but the ministers say they are only interested in gathering people together to learn the word of God through the Bible.

"This is a joint venture between the two churches," said Pastor Mark Burgess, who will serve the new congregation. "Our goal isn't so much to see separate churches grow as to see the kingdom of God grow through the gospel of Jesus Christ."

To prepare for the new church's first official event, set for Friday, members from both churches are going door to door telling Hispanics about the event, Martinez said. Church members have already visited area dairies and farms and advertised on radio and television and in newspapers.

Martinez, who came from Mexico more than 30 years ago, knows that the language barrier and a foreign culture can make Hispanics feel isolated. As a member of the First Assembly of God, five years ago, he said he was called by God to provide a place of comfort to Southcentral Idaho's growing Spanish-speaking population.

Pastors Nettle and Mark Burgess of the Roca Firme Pentecostes are launching a new ministry on Friday at the Kimberly Church of the Nazarene. The two churches are working together to give area Hispanics a new place where they can study the Word of God in their own language with people who understand the Spanish culture.

As a member of the First Assembly of God, five years ago, he said he was called by God to provide a place of comfort to Southcentral Idaho's growing Spanish-speaking population.

Thus began Roca Firme, a Pentecostal church close to the Assembly of God in tenets.

Martinez said many Hispanics don't want to go to Anglo churches because they feel they don't fit in. And Burgess pointed out that there is a significant population of Spanish-speaking men who send most of their money back to their home countries with the intention of returning there someday.

These men are especially vulnerable to loneliness and destructive behavior when they don't have a church to specifically address their needs, Burgess said.

Burgess and Gomes have a natural affinity for the Spanish culture because both are married to Hispanic women.

"Unless you're involved in the culture, you can't know the culture," said Burgess, who was ordained to the ministry in March. "They need a place to go where they can feel comfortable. I want them to know there are Anglos who really care about them. If people go where they are feeling comfortable in seeking the Word of God, they will grow."

Gomes, who will be assisting Burgess in Kimberly, said Hispanics are yearning for a service in their heart language.

"We're going to teach and preach to them in their culture," he said.

Then Gomes added, with a laugh, "They know that Brother Gomes is a Gringo, but in his heart he's a Mexican."

Christian author helps people with tough issues

By Jim Remsen
The Philadelphia Inquirer

Philip Yancey, best-selling Christian author, was just back from a book tour to the distant Philippines. It was new territory to him - but even there, he recalled wryly, he couldn't escape the familiar hot seat.

There was a campus talk, and the young intellectuals and skeptics were out in force, Yancey said in a recent interview. "They started in with the questions: Will Muslims go to heaven? Is it possible for an atheist to be loved by God? Is Jesus about suffering? Let's love? Why does God allow suffering? They're looking at me as the one to answer them. But I have many of those same questions. So, many times, I stand up and say, 'I am not God. I don't know about suffering. Let's start with what I do know. What I do know is the revelation of God, especially as a Christian, that I see in Jesus. The primary characteristics are fairness, mercy, compassion and trustworthiness, so let's start there.'"

It was classic Yancey. The Colorado-based writer has developed a reputation as a disarmingly openhanded point man for Evangelicalism who helps people with the tough issues of doubt, failure, suffering and other conundrums. He calls his core constituency "people on the edge" and says he can speak to them with easy compassion because, in many ways, he is one of them.

Yancey, 50, editor at large for Christianity Today magazine, is a self-described introvert who moves lightly and speaks in quiet, measured tones. His most remarkable feature is a halo of bushy hair, which accentuates his lanky height. Old-timers would call him a long sip of water.

Thirsty readers apparently regard him as cool water, too. His last 10 books - with evocative titles such as "Where Is God When It Hurts?" "Disappointment With God," "The Gift of Pain," and "What's So Amazing About Grace?" - have sold more than 4 million copies and garnered numerous Christian awards. They are a staple of seminary syllabuses, book clubs and church study groups, and have crossed over into mainstream bookstore displays.

Yancey's latest book, "Reaching for the Invisible God: What Can We Expect to Find?" was published in August. His publisher, Zondervan, reports sales of 94,000 copies in its first month alone.

In "Reaching," he renews an overarching message - one he says is drawn from Scripture and the wisdom of "historic Christianity" - that God's goodness does not mean we will get hurt, not in this fallen world at least. His goodness goes deeper than pain and grief, incorporating both. Further, Yancey concludes, while God is "confusing and variable," there, particularly in the "hinge moments" of crisis, and desires the trusting pursuit of Him.

Yancey was brought up in an independent Bible church in Atlanta that he describes as stern, graceless, even "cultic." He recounts hearing fearful testimonials that were patently false, strident prophecies from the pastor, church preaching in strident opposition to the civil-rights movement all around it.

"People come and want to shock me with their bad experiences with the church. I say, 'Oh, man, it's a lot worse than that. Let me tell you my stories,'" Yancey said. "Because I had to overcome the church to come to God. I learned to question those who claimed the voice of God."

Yancey broke away from his Please see AUTHOR, Page C2.

Next president's court appointees could rewrite church-state policy

By Richard N. Ostling
The Associated Press

NEW YORK - During the first presidential debate, Al Gore said the Constitution "ought to be interpreted as a document that grows with our country and our history," while George W. Bush countered that the Supreme Court shouldn't supplant legislatures and "use the bench to write social policy."

What will the candidates' views mean for Supreme Court rulings on church and state if, as expected, the next president names up to three new members? Two justices have survived cancer scares; three are 70 or above. The oldest, 80-year-old

John Paul Stevens, has consistently voted to limit government accommodation of religion, court-watchers say.

The next appointments will "make a huge difference for the far future" because the court is so narrowly divided on so many religiously contentious matters, says American Jewish Congress attorney Marc Stern, who favors strict separation of church and state.

For instance, the candidates flatly disagree on vouchers to support pupils in religious schools. So analysts on both sides say a single Bush appointee could make vouchers legal while Gore justices might prevent this. The issue for the Supreme Court in such cases is the First Amendment's prohibition of "an establishment of religion." The justices must also interpret the constitutional guarantee of "free exercise" of faith.

Over the past 15 years, the court has inched toward accepting public aid to religious schools. Justice Clarence Thomas' plurality opinion last June allowing grants of computers and other equipment presented a sweeping pro-aid doctrine. But Thomas won only three supporters, so the court majority endorsed a more limited concept.

"You have five votes to go further, and certainly four to go a whole lot further," observes H. Please see COURT, Page C2

'Commandments Judge' seeks chief justice job

By Jay Reeves The Associated Press

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. - Christian conservatives who have spent years opposing court rulings that limit religion in American public life have a new goal: electing one of their most vocal champions as chief justice of the Alabama Supreme Court.

Roy Moore

Moore's Ten Commandments case, which began in the mid-1990s, has inspired Christians to fight for similar displays in other states.

Moore's typical campaign speech relies heavily on long passages of court rulings, Colonial-era writings and 1770s speeches he has memorized.

The problem in our nation today is that judges are legislating right and wrong," he said. "There is an absolute truth, and the truth is in the Bible. It represents the truth upon which this nation was founded and is the basis of the laws of our nation."

Moore, a West Point graduate and Vietnam veteran, supports prayer in school and opposes abortion and homosexuality as sins.

Moore's Ten Commandments case, which began in the mid-1990s, has inspired Christians to fight for similar displays in other states. Now, if elected to Alabama's highest court, Moore promises to restore the "moral foundation" of American law - Christian principles and beliefs - to society. He says no court has the right to limit the worship of God.

prayer in school and opposes abortion and homosexuality as sins. A poet in his spare time, he has written verse referring to the United States as a nation that has become a "moral slum" as it banished God from public view.

Yates, in her campaign biographical materials, advertises her own church membership. She has avoided criticizing Moore's position on matters of faith.

"I don't have a problem with his position on the Ten Commandments," she says.

While virtually all of Yates' campaign donors are from Alabama, scores of people from other states have given to Moore's campaign. The out-of-state donors include John and Beverly Trimmell of Liberal, Kan. The couple, conservative Christians who heard Moore speak at a conference in Texas, gave him $2,000 out of their belief that judges should be "righteous," Mrs. Trimmell said.

The focus on religion in a judicial race worries some.

Jim Evans, a Southern Baptist minister in suburban Birmingham, says he fears that the focus on religion - Christianity in particular - could become a "litmus test" for state candidates.

The most recent poll, conducted in late August, showed the race close, with Moore at 41 percent support, Yates with 35 percent and 23 percent undecided. The margin of error was 5 percentage points.

The office of chief justice is particularly powerful in Alabama, which the American Bar Association lists as one of only eight states to elect judges in partisan elections. Alabama's nine-member Supreme Court is split into two divisions that hear cases. Each panel consists of two associate justices and the chief justice who is the only member of the court to consider every case.

"The chief justice sets the tone for the administration of the entire court system," says E.C. "Sonny" Hornsby, who formerly held the post.

community as a young adult and entered the inner spiritual disarray that he knows many of his readers feel today. His reclaiming of faith is the basis of the soul-searching book "The Jesus I Never Knew."

Fortunately, Yancey, a philosopher and a credits new-found Christian writers - Henri Nouwen, C.S. Lewis, G.K. Chesterton and others - with lighting his way.

He said, "The great gift of Evangelicalism and Pietism is its personal relationship with God. But to me it's often over-sold. What is presented in order to get people into this relationship doesn't reflect the reality of the spiritual experience many people encounter.

So does he reject "Spirit-filled" words and even doubt that God does speak to people?

"I would say I have never heard the voice of God in the way that people like that describe it," he said. "I do know there are a lot of preachers and speakers who are very careless about their language. They'll say 'God says' and 'God says' to me that, and it's just their shorthand way of saying 'I believe this is true.' My guidance from God most of the time is very subtle and indirect and is in reflective ways."

Also, he said, "coming out of Southern emotionalism and revivalism, I became pretty resistant to the devices the churches often use to get people into the fold."

Despite that criticism, Christian charismatics and Pietists are still seen to be fans of Yancey's writing - and many of them are on guard themselves against the movement's founder, J. Lee Grigg, editor of the Florida-based church magazine Charisma.

In the end, said Yancey, there is no truer model of faith than the life of John Bunyan's 17th-century allegory "The Pilgrim's Progress."

"That was the guidebook for people for how to live with God is," he said. "There are a lot of detours and wrong choices. There's the Slough of Despond. There's Vanity Fair. There are a lot of distractions. The pilgrim almost commits suicide at one point and gets lost. But he eventually does arrive there."

The message? "The journey itself is the getting to know God. You don't get to know God and then make the journey. The journey is the getting to know God. That's a different image of the Christian life than the average evangelical church teaches."

Court

Douglas Laycock of the University of Texas School of Law. Since "there's a limit to how much equipment you can shove into one school," the "serious money" involves vouchers, he remains school prayer, Stern says, the challenges usually arise in Southern states that oppose the Supreme Court's rules.

Democratic-appointed justices generally oppose these nationwide dictates while "Bush will look for judges to interfere less with the states," he expects.

In a Texas case, Bush filed a lawsuit challenging the legality of student-led prayers and expressed disappointment when the Supreme Court voted 6-3 to forbid officially organized football game invocations. A spokesman said Gore opposes government-sponsored prayers and thinks pre-game invocations are "not truly voluntary."

A leading conservative, Michael W. McConnell of the University of Utah College of Law, thinks judges have all but settled this issue. The consensus forbids prayers, but not at school officials but lets students pray publicly on their own initiative - for instance, in a graduation speech not cleared with the principal.

Stern says a case on the current Supreme Court docket typifies the "establishment of religion" theories. At issue: Whether an elementary school must host a student Christian club if it lets other community groups use its building.

The answer is clearly no for those like him who think religion warrants special treatment, Stern explains. Others advance generally the special advantages nor disadvantages.

Then there are the numerous pending arguments over, symbolically, things like the Ten Commandments displays in public places or religious words in state mottoes.

Laycock thinks this area is "a mess, because the court is unwilling to draw a bright line and simply say government shouldn't be in this business. A lot of folks would be unhappy, but you wouldn't necessarily have these cases popping up."

A Supreme Court decision on gay rights which could have a religious application - is a case in point. In June, the Justices in a 5-4 vote allowed the Boy Scouts to bar openly gay leaders. That narrow margin was a surprise, because the nation has long tradition of "vigorous freedom of association."

If future Supreme Court appointees reject that tradition, he says, "there's no obvious reason why churches should not be forced to comply with discrimination laws" on hiring homosexuals or women clergy.

Until recently, there was such a reason. The court had traditionally interpreted the "free exercise" clause as shielding churches from government interference - except in extreme situations where there was a "compelling state interest." But a 1990 decision eliminated that strict standard, and the court later rejected an attempt by Congress to restore it.

Here's the twist, McConnell notes that 1990 ruling was written by Justice Antonin Scalia and joined by Chief Justice William Rehnquist, but conservative Republicans who are usually friendly toward religious belief, while three liberal justices argued for stronger religious liberty.

Books that open minds and sculs

By Bill Broadway
The Washington Post

If you're wondering where to find religion, the answer is everywhere: in politics, in history, in the West in the East, on the Internet, in science and literature, and in the mind of a child.

Nowhere is this more evident than the religion-spirituality section of bookstores. The subjects are so varied, the titles so enticing, the colors so vibrant that it's easy to think you're on a hallucinogenic high — or gone to New Age Heaven.

This sampling of new books reflects, like a hall of mirrors, the many forms of religious inquiry and expression today. Do these eclectic offerings suggest heresy or enlightenment? Tickle's for you to decide.

• LOOKING FOR GOD: A SEEKER'S GUIDE TO RELIGIOUS AND SPIRITUAL GROUPS OF THE WORLD, by Steven Sadler (Perigee, paperback, $15.95). This concise introduction to dozens of Christian and non-Christian faiths includes histories, definitions, readings, addresses and Web sites.

• THE MARK, by Jerry B. Jenkins and Tim LaHaye (Nov. 14, Tyndale, $22.99). The eighth of 12 planned installments in the apocalyptic "Left Behind" series, which has sold 27 million copies in May with the 2.1-million-copy release of "The Indwelling," Jenkins and LaHaye joined the ethereal realm of J.K. Rowling, Tom Clancy and John Grisham. "The Mark" will have a first printing of 2.5 million copies.

• RAISING FAITH-FILLED KIDS: ORDINARY OPPORTUNITIES TO NURTURE SPIRITUALITY AT HOME, by Tom McGrath (Loyola, paperback, $12.95). McGrath, editor of U.S. Catholic magazine and author of "Stress Therapy," offers tips on teaching children about prayer, the sacred nature of everyday life, the meaning of religious objects and the importance of forgiveness.

• THE CATHOLIC MARTYRS OF THE TWENTIETH CENTURY, by Robert Royal (Crossroad, $39.95). Royal, president of the

A sampling of new books on religion and spirituality, clockwise from top left: "Raising Faith-Filled Kids: Ordinary Opportunities to Nurture Spirituality at Home," by Tom McGrath; "The Mark," by Jerry B. Jenkins and Tim LaHaye; "The Illustrated Rumi: A Treasury of Wisdom From the Poet of the Soul," by Philip Dunn, Manuela Dunn Mascetti and R.A. Nicholson; "Looking for God: A Seeker's Guide to Religious and Spiritual Groups of the World," by Steven Sadler.

Faith and Reason Institute, chronicles the "brutal spectacle" of Catholics killed in such countries as China, France, India, Albania, Spain, Korea and Algeria.

• CLEANSING THE DOORS OF PERCEPTION: THE RELIGIOUS SIGNIFICANCE OF ENTHEOGENIC PLANTS AND CHEMICALS, by Huston Smith (Tarcher/Putnam, $22.95). Smith, renowned historian of world religions and friend of the late Aldous Huxley and Timothy Leary, argues that the proper use of mind-altering drugs — something not always achieved in the 1960s — can enhance spirituality by revealing the "sacred unconscious."

• COLORING YOUR PRAYERS: AN INSPIRATIONAL COLORING BOOK FOR MAKING DREAMS COME TRUE, by Carolyn Manzi (Harmony, $17.95). Manzi opens the doors of perception in a different way, providing an activities and coloring guide (hardcover) for exploring the spiritual imagination.

• GOD'S NAME IN VAIN: THE WRONGS AND RIGHTS OF RELIGION IN POLITICS, by Stephen L. Carter (Basic, $26). Carter, author of the best-selling "Culture of Disbelief," defends the involvement of religious people in politics but warns that religious institutions, not government, will be the losers if reasonable church-state walls disappear.

• THE ILLUSTRATED RUMI: A TREASURY OF WISDOM FROM THE POET OF THE SOUL, a new translation by Philip Dunn, Manuela Dunn Mascetti and R.A. Nicholson (Harper/San Francisco, $29.95). Beautifully illustrated stories by Rumi, a 13th-century Sufi mystic who has become one of America's best-selling poets and a cornerstone of contemporary spirituality.

• ROGUE MESSIAHS: TALES OF SELF-PROCLAIMED SAVIORS, by Colin Wilson (Hampton Roads, $22.95). Wilson's "gallery of spiritual fakers" includes, among more than 20 others, David Koresh, the Rev. Jim Jones and Rock Theriault, a French Canadian sentenced in 1993 to life imprisonment for murdering one female disciple and mutilating another. Others, like Sigmund Freud and theosophist Rudolph Steiner, contributed to society despite having overblown opinions of themselves.

• SACRED QUEST: THE EVOLUTION AND FUTURE OF THE HUMAN SOUL, by L. Robert Keck (Chrysalis, $24.95). People who fret about the persistent inhumanity of the human race will welcome this hopeful, evolutionary view of the soul. Keck, formerly a United Methodist minister, describes three spiritual epochs: nature-connected childhood, 35,000 to 10,000 years ago; rebellious adolescence, 10,000 years ago through the present; and maturity, which may have begun in the Paleolithic.

Keck's third epoch is characterized by the soul's reconnection with nature, the unity of science, religion and the human search for meaning, the end of discrimination, an optimism, and the "democratization" (sharing) of religious and political power.

COMMENTARY

What are the odds your teenager cheated on a school test? Or lied to you or a teacher? Or hit someone? Or showed up drunk at school? Odds are that your child did at least one of those unethical acts, according to a nationwide teen character study released this week.

Called "Report Card on the Ethics of American Youth," the study looked at the behavior of 8,600 teens. Here are some of the findings:

• Seven in 10 students surveyed admitted cheating on a test at least once in the past year.

• Ninety-two percent said they lied to their parents in the past year; 78 percent said they had lied to a teacher.

• Nearly one in six students said they had shown up for class drunk at least once in the past year.

• Sixty-eight percent admitted they had hit someone because they were angry.

"This data reveals a hole in the moral ozone," said Michael Josephson, founder and president of the Joseph & Edna Josephson Institute of Ethics in California, which commissioned the study. Whose fault is it for this state of student affairs?

Josephson avoids the blame game while urging parents, teachers and coaches to get more involved with young people. Perhaps, but they would still be up against:

• A relativistic ethic, coursing through our culture for at least 30 years, that has undermined any authority greater than self for deciding matters of right and wrong.

• Freedom of expression that is no longer simply a political right but personal permission for any and all behavior.

• Consumerism that fuels a desire to want more and to have it now at the expense of self-discipline and frugality, seen as antiquated and naive.

To further debase positive values, our culture serves up obscene and misogynistic lyrics in pop music, lewd and extremely violent content in movies, and an almost nonchalant attitude toward life, from beginning to end.

Less than five years ago, such a litany would have been dismissed by a large segment of society as the rantings of cultural old fogies. But the times, they are a changing. The voices of those who believe they can make a positive difference are increasing.

Long-standing groups — Boys & Girls Clubs, YMCA, La Raza, 4-H, Little League, scouting programs, to name a few — continue to be integral to the development of the moral integrity of young people. And religious groups of every stripe are coming up with innovative ways to provide young people the moral foundation they'll need to transform the culture they inherit.

All of these efforts depend on parents and other adults taking the lead in working with young people — setting positive examples, serving as mentors and counselors, seeking new ways to interact with them so they develop the moral compass needed to navigate in treacherous waters.

If you haven't connected with one of the organizations I've mentioned, check out the opportunities they have to offer. Or seek out other groups. At the very least, get involved in a positive way in the lives of young people. In the end, that's how we report to our Creator: one child, one adult working together.

Tom Schaefer writes about religion and ethics for the Wichita (Kan.) Eagle.

"VeggieTales: Esther — The Girl Who Became Queen" (37 minutes, Big Idea). This retelling of the Book of Esther doesn't literally follow the biblical version — you never hear the word "Jews" — but there are enough basic facts for kids to get the gist of the story. Instead of slaughtering all Jews living in Persia, the Veggie plot is to send Esther, her cousin Mordecai and his family to the Isle of Persepolis. Ticking. This scheming is done by Haman, a sinister gourd and the king's right-hand man.

The drama is one of VeggieTales' best-crafted products, offering a nice blend of humor, music and drama. Mordecai is a grandpa-figure, a warmhearted grape with a crusty voice. Esther is courageous but a much too demure leek. She's a slender, beautiful Cinderella figure with a lot of faith but not a lot of backbone — until the end.

The humor works when it's off-beat, subtle and surprising. Early in the show, the camera passes over a sign that reads, "Public transportation. Why wait until A.D.?" Later, while playing a trivia game, the king wrongly guesses that Tio was the youngest Jackson.

The humor doesn't work when it plays on tiresome stereotypes of women. The first queen is thrown out when she refuses to make the king a sandwich. The king calls Esther his "little queenie pooh." And the patronizing narrator says of her, "What a gall!" Parents will appreciate the moral message that the story lends, Esther learns that she wasn't born for greatness but that it can come to any ordinary kid. All she had to do was trust God. And that she did.

MUSIC

"A Little Lower Than the Angels," by Crystal Thornton (Crystal Records, 30 minutes). It's hard to tell that this CD is really the product of Thornton's hobby, not a passionate one. The local television news anchor produced the seven-track CD, then put it on her own label. It's a testament to the talents of the Topeka, Kan., native, who wants to produce a Christmas CD for the 2001 holiday season. The way she belts out "His Eye Is on the Sparrow" and "Through the Storm" tells you she's far from an amateur. And though the CD is definitely gospel, Thornton also

Board game evokes the goddess within

By Janice Gallagher
The Miami Herald

MIAMI — Ruth Robles, Elaine Berkowitz and Kelly Werner had it all — Ivy League educations and the luxuries afforded by high-powered careers, grand homes and loving families. But something was missing. Fast-paced lifestyles left schroed no allow time to even meet for lunch.

Soon, the women discovered a deeper quest: exploring the common meaning of life. They made a pact to meet at least once a month, love, fears, children — anything and everything. Eventually they called themselves the Goddess Group. "Goddess is what we all have inside of us. It's about bringing out the best of yourself and what's all around you," Werner said.

Wanting other women to experience sharing and unity, they developed a forum — a thought-provoking board game being readied for national distribution by Barnes & Noble and Borders for $39.95.

Thus the game, Go Goddess, first issued in 1999 for $50 at a few upscale stores. Packaged in a purple hat box, the game uses the colors of the seven chakras, or energy centers of the body.

Players ask open-ended questions that reveal personal information and deal with dreams, disappointments, self-image and "what if" situations. Go Goddess begins with a meditation instructing players to relax, trust and have confidence in themselves and one another. Together all cards that were answered are used to make a circle, and when the circle is complete, puzzle pieces are solved, candles are lit and the game ends. The game closes with a silent reflection of answers, and each player must ask herself what she wishes to change, and together the players blow out the candles.

tifications of pollen species. He says Frei should have applied chemicals to remove surface coatings that obscure details of the pollen.

Latest dispute over Turin Shroud: Plant pollen

WASHINGTON (AP) — An article in Biblical Archaeology Review disputes claims that plant pollen embedded in the shroud of Turin supports belief in the Italian relic as the actual burial cloth of Jesus Christ.

Author Vaughn M. Bryant Jr., director of the pollen laboratory at Texas A&M University, says he and "most other serious pollenists" will remain unconvinced until new pollen samples from the cloth are studied under stricter conditions.

Last year the Missouri Botanical Garden in St. Louis published "Flora of the Shroud of Turin," written by four U.S. and Israeli scientists who re-examined Frei's evidence and largely supported his conclusions.

However, Bryant writes that all the tests were inadequate because they used a conventional microscope, not a scanning electron microscope or transmission electron microscope that would provide more precise iden-

The oldest graduates attending were Agnes Satchwell Meyers, class of 1930; Vic Barrett, class of 1930, and Delmar Engelbring, class of 1931. The only faculty member present, Clare Coppick Peterson, was presented an original painting by Ray Newman. Price read the list of graduates who died during the past two years and a moment of silence followed.

Alumni also reminisced about school days and decided to hold the reunion annually starting next year.

Ray Baumgartner awarded items he had made to several attendees to recognize a special honor, service or talent.

The class of 1950 celebrated its 50th reunion the evening before the school reunion with a dinner meeting at the Albion Cafe. Twelve of the 17 class members attended the event arranged by Helen Barker Sorenson. Several family "mini-reunions" were also held during the weekend.

American pianist and conductor dies at 50

MILAN, Italy (AP) - The renowned American pianist and chamber music conductor David Golub has died of lung cancer at the age of 50.

Golub died Monday at his Milan home and was buried Thursday, said a spokeswoman for the Padua Chamber Orchestra, Alessandra Canella. His funeral will be held at the Basilica of San Simpliciano in Milan.

An acclaimed chamber ensemble performer - most notably with the Golub-Kaplan-Car Trio - Golub led the Padua Chamber Orchestra during the 1994-95 season and took it on tour in the United States in 1999.

Born in Chicago, Golub grew up in Dallas, where he began learning the piano. In 1969 he moved to New York and spent his student years honing his technique at New York's Juilliard School of Music. He also began conducting during summer breaks at Vermont's Marlboro festival.

In 1979, he accompanied violinist Isaac Stern on a tour of China. A film about the tour, "From Mao to Mozart," won the 1980 Academy Award for Best Documentary.

As a performer, Golub was perhaps best known for his work with violinist Mark Kaplan and cellist Colin Carr in the trio they formed in 1982.

In the late 1980s, Golub began cultivating his interest in opera. Under his leadership, the Padua Chamber Orchestra recorded some of Haydn's least-known work for opera.

He is survived by his wife, Maria Majno.

Takes 15 days for an aphid to grow up.

Q. Any reason for the oddball claim that heavy smoking causes wrinkles around the eyes?
A. Nicotine is known to constrict the capillaries. So it cuts down the circulation, presumably. That this leads to wrinkles is still a matter for debate.

Q. Where and when did diking get started as a sport?

A. In Norway. About 1843. Same year the first YMCA confirmed plans to set up in England. The Londoner Henry Cole sent out the wondrous first Christmas cards. Dickens' "A Christmas Carol" turned up in print. And a 24-year-old named J. I. Case came up with a threshing machine that really worked.

Ryan Norton of Los Angeles makes a contribution to the gum-littered wall of 'Bubble Gum Alley'; an unusual community attraction in San Luis Obispo, Calif.

'Bubble Gum Alley' disgusts, delights visitors

Los Angeles Times

SAN LUIS OBISPO, Calif. — As cultural monuments go, Bubble Gum Alley has proved its staying power. Like a wad of Bazooka Joe subliminally struck on a shoe, it has hung on for almost 50 years.

"On a regular day, we get about 300 to 400 visitors," said James Anderson, the assistant director of information services for the Chamber of Commerce here in this central California city. There's always "a handful" who say their visit wouldn't be complete without a trip down Bubble Gum Alley.

And proving that bad manners is a universal language, many of those searching out the alley in this conservative community are visitors from abroad. The word itself, meant the same thing no matter what country you're in.

"That word is 'ewew,'" said Lauren Tobin, 21, as she scanned the gum-covered walls. Taking a shot at the local California Polytechnic State University students, the biology student from the University of California at Davis said, "It probably reflects the student population."

As the name implies, Bubble Gum Alley is an alley in which the facing walls of two downtown commercial buildings are encrusted with gum. It doesn't resemble anything, but what it is, tens of thousands of wads of multicolored gum squished one on top of another in a masticated mosaic 70 feet long and 15 feet high. At the top, the gobs have been blackened by age and weather.

Some have left messages in mudlage. "Jesus Loves," "Porkey" and the sweetly simple "Hi." Others have used the brick facades as canvases for their artworks. There are flowers, an American flag and several impressionistic figures that may or may not be human forms. Two cigarette butts protrude from one gummy mass, embracing at once the two oral habits that mothers warned generations of children against.

The city's historical society says the genesis is sketchy, but the alley was created sometime in the 1950s.

High school students started putting gum on the walls, Cal Poly students soon followed suit, and by the '60s the alley had become part of the local color.

Over the years, San Luis Obispo's attitude toward Bubble Gum Alley has vacillated. On one hand, the Chamber of Commerce lists it as a "special attraction," and the city has posted a sign on the site. On the other, residents have periodically united in anti-gum crusades.

"One year, the Fire Department hosed it down," said Deborah Holley, administrator of the Downtown Association. Instead of just falling down and washing away, thousands of pieces of old gum shot high into the sky. People ran waving their arms from a gum-storm that day, Holley said.

Holley entered Gum Alley in a national civic competition for unusual community monuments a few years back. A banquet room in Portland, Ore., was filled with representatives of hundreds of cities when pictures of the alley flashed on the screen.

"Eeww, gross," the audience said in unison.

It's hard to say what Bubble Gum Alley says about San Luis Obispo, or gum, for that matter. Maybe it says something about the stubbornness of local traditions, because the alley seems here to stay.

"It's interesting to watch tourists," said Holley. "There's this attraction-repulsion thing."

You could see it in the face of Ryan Norton, 24, of Los Angeles. He and his 23-year-old wife, Angela, were in town on a recent afternoon celebrating their first anniversary.

To him, the alley was equal parts fun and disgusting; his wife pronounced it "great. I don't know if it's an expression of art. Maybe this will keep people from throwing their gum on the ground."

Ryan Norton overcame his repulsion and decided the couple should leave their own mark on the wall. And so, as they plighted their troth, they merged their gum. Stopping, he etched their initials in the wad with a piece of broken glass he found on the asphalt.

"We'll come back every year and put our gum here," he proclaimed.

As anniversary traditions go, it might not be the most elevating, or hygienic. But the wads of gum have already outlasted many marriages.

St. Paul's Snoopys go to unknown doghouses

Knight Ridder News Service

ST. F. UL, Minn. — Snoopy fans are experiencing withdrawal symptoms.

Since June, Snoopy mania brought thousands of visitors downtown and to St. Paul neighborhoods to admire and photograph the colorful 5-foot polystyrene "Peanuts on Parade" statues.

For many, the goal was to photograph all 101 Snoopys, and area film processors joked that they did not have to visit the dogs because they had already seen them all hundreds of times.

The statues — St. Paul's tribute to the late hometown cartoonist Charles Schulz — were a mega-hit. Many suffered lost tails, broken ears or cracked legs from being hugged by rambunctious kids. Noses lost, paint from being rubbed so often.

But now many of the dogs are gone from city streets. Forty have been auctioned, and 20 more will be sold via the Internet after Thanksgiving. They will be scattered across the country, but a complete accounting of where they all go will likely be impossible. "It broke my heart when 'World Citizen' was sold," said Lois West Duffy of Ecobal. The company sponsored two Snoopys, donating "World Citizen" for the auctions and keeping the other one, "Joe Clean."

"World Citizen" went for $24,000 — six times what Ecobal paid — and its buyer has not been identified publicly.

The world-famous Sotheby's auction house, which conducted the bidding, will not reveal the identities of the successful bidders from the Oct. 1 auction. Neither will the St. Paul Foundation, which is handling the $823,000 in auction proceeds through the creation of a Charles M. Schulz Fund. Proceeds will go to pay for a bronze sculpture downtown to honor Schulz and to two area art schools.
