THE MONEY GAME

Where does campaign money come from and go?

By Michael Journee

Donations - D5-6

TWIN FALLS - Money makes the political world go round.

And the Magic Valley has done its part to keep things spinning.

To the tune of more than $350,000 during the 2000 federal election cycle, Magic Valley contributors dug into their pockets in an effort to influence Tuesday's elections.

That's not particularly surprising in itself. But where much of that money came from - and where it went - might be surprising. The Wood River Valley tossed in just more than $255,000 of the region's total contributions.

While Idaho's campaigns, such as U.S. Rep. Mike Simpson's reelection bid, got their share of the cash, many contributors chose to spend their money in more closely contested races, or with their favorite party or political action committee.

As a result, out-of-state congressional candidates claimed nearly $30,000 of the Magic Valley's money.

Topping that list, with $10,950 in contributions, is U.S. Rep. Rick Lazio, R-New York, whose high-profile U.S. Senate race with First Lady Hillary Clinton has captured many supporters' attention across the nation.

In contrast, Clinton had only one $200 donation from the Magic Valley.

"We shared our donor mailing list with Lazio simply because we know our donors really do not like Hillary Clinton, and would be interested in supporting the candidate running against her," said state GOP Chairman Trent Clark.

Clinton's former opponent, New York Mayor Rudy Giuliani, also gathered several Magic Valley donations, before he pulled out of the race after he was diagnosed with cancer.

Putting the pieces together

Ex-judge gets on track after battle with cancer

By N.S. Niekentved
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - When Dan Hurlbutt resigned as the presiding judge over the Snake River Basin Adjudication at the end of 1998, he thought it was time to pursue other goals.

But after 19 years on the bench - and 25 years in the legal field - his plans to change his life were sidetracked by a battle with cancer, less than a year after leaving the court.

Hurlbutt, now 51, has since recovered and is beginning to pick up the pieces again with the help of his wife, Barbara, family members, friends and the community. While the state wades through the complex process of Snake River Basin Adjudication - considering 150,000 water-right claims in 35 of Idaho's 44 counties - Dan Hurlbutt could be back on the bench in the months ahead, looking at a different caseload.

Diagnosis

When Hurlbutt stepped down, he wanted to pursue private law practice, service as a pro tem judge, business endeavors and teaching.

In the fall of 1999, he had just begun teaching a class on water law at the College of Southern Idaho when he was diagnosed with Burkitt's lymphoma - a rare form of non-Hodgkins lymphoma that is even rarer in adults.

The cancer is fast-growing and treatment had to begin as soon as possible after diagnosis. But because it grows rapidly, that also means it's treatable, Hurlbutt said. He was forced to stop teaching, and a colleague took over the class.

Within about a week of the diagnosis, he was checked into St. Luke's Regional Medical Center in Boise. But after chemotherapy, he lost his hair, his toenails and fingernails, and the already slender man lost about 45 pounds. The chemicals kill rapidly dividing cells, but they don't differentiate healthy cells from cancer cells. He lost skin cells, his sense of taste and his appetite.

It was a long, awful winter of treatment, he said. He had read enough to know what to expect - it would be difficult, but the prognosis was good.

There were times when he couldn't focus on anything. Hurlbutt is an avid reader, but at times it was all he could do to read newspaper headlines. He watched television, but he couldn't focus on it and had no memory of what he watched.

The chemicals take over the body physically and emotionally, he said. It's a little like a whitewater river trip - you can help steer through the rapids some, but mostly you're along for the ride.

A serious bicycle rider, Hurlbutt was heartened by the example of bicycle racer Lance Armstrong, who recovered from testicular cancer to win the Tour

Wages on the farm

Study's initial results show most workers make minimum wage

By Michael Journee
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - Preliminary results of a survey issued by the Idaho Department of Labor, show agricultural industry claims that only a small percentage of farm workers don't receive minimum wage may be true.

But farm worker advocates, including

even if one farm worker is not too many and that arguing about numbers is missing the point.

A panel of lawmakers last month concluded several summer meetings discussing draft legislation that would guarantee farm workers would make minimum wage.

This winter, the committee will recommend the Legislature pass a law that making state minimum wage laws mirror the federal Fair Labor Standards Act as far as farm workers are concerned.

But the committee's proposal falls far short of putting all Idaho farm workers under a minimum-wage, as their advocates wanted. Farm workers are the only major workers' group without minimum wage protection in Idaho.

During this summer's meetings there was wide disagreement on how much of the exemption to repeal. The main point of contention was the concept of "piece work" - the practice of basing workers' pay on the amount of work done, rather than the amount of time spent in the field.

Farm worker advocates insist even piece-work laborers should be guaranteed the $5.15 an hour most other workers can count on.

But the ag industry says piece-

Candidates keep up brisk pace

George W. Bush is ready for a 'fresh start'

The Dallas Morning News

Praise the Lord, pass the ammunition - and crank up the phone banks. With less than 100 hours to go in the presidential race, both candidates wrapped their campaigns Saturday in the trappings of God and patriotism.

Vice President Al Gore crooned "We Shall Overcome," clapping hands with black ministers at a prayer breakfast in his home state of Tennessee.

Gov. George W. Bush rallied supporters in Michigan with an American flag at his back and former Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman Colin Powell at his side.

"We're coming down the stretch," Bush told several thousand cheering, placard-waving supporters huddled in the chilly sunshine in Dearborn.

"I want you to man those phones," he said. "I want you calling not only Republicans but open-minded Democrats and independents to turn out that vote next Tuesday so we can send a clear message: America is ready for a fresh start."

The governor also hinted broadly that Powell, a hero of the Gulf War, would have a role in a Bush administration.

Gore, at the prayer breakfast in Memphis, urged the largely black gathering of nearly 1,000 ministers to "take your souls to the polls." And, baring his own soul a bit, he pleaded for their votes.

Clinton vetoes anti-leak bill

Legislation would criminalize leaking government secrets

NEW YORK (AP) — President Clinton on Saturday vetoed a bill that would have criminalized the leaking of government secrets. The legislation, he said, might "chill legitimate activities that are at the heart of a democracy."

The proposal had drawn criticism from news organizations which said it would stifle their ability to obtain information vital to the public.

"We must never forget that the free flow of information is essential to a democratic society," Clinton said in a statement.

He cited the "badly flawed provision" as the reason he vetoed a bill that authorizes spending for the CIA, National Security

President Bill Clinton

$30 billion.

The president urged Congress "to pursue a more narrowly drawn provision tested in public hearings so that those they represent can also be heard on this important issue."

The provision would have extended penalties that now exist for leaking classified, national defense information, to the leaking of other classified, but nondefense data that could harm the United States if made public or given to foreign governments.

Clinton said he agreed with congressional sponsors of the legislation that unauthorized disclosures of classified information "can be extraordinarily harmful to United States national security and that too many such disclosures occur."

"Those who disclose classified information inappropriately commit a gross breach of the public trust and may recklessly put our national security at risk," he said. Clinton, however, said that in dispute was not the seriousness of the problem but the best way to respond to it.

"As president ... it is my responsibility to protect not only our government's vital information from improper disclosure but also to protect the rights of citizens to receive the information necessary for democracy to work," he said.

The president said it takes a careful balance to reconcile the goals of protecting national security and the public's right to know.

"This legislation does not achieve the proper balance," Clinton said.

D.C. new license plates protest voting rights

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than 300 District of Columbia residents, who pay federal taxes but have no voice in Congress, traded in their old license plates Saturday for ones that will take that message on the road — literally.

"Taxation Without Representation," say the new plates, which replace the "Celebrate and Discover" design. District leaders used their debut to call for full voting rights on Capitol Hill.

"This is no drive-by," said Eleanor Holmes Norton, the district's delegate to Congress. "We want our rights now."

The first motorist arrived at the Department of Motor Vehicles at 3:30 a.m. and others showed up as early as 6:30 a.m. The doors did not open until 9 a.m.

Norton said most people in the United States do not realize district residents, despite paying $2 billion a year in federal income taxes, have no voting rights in Congress. Norton is permitted to vote in committee but not on the House floor.

"We don't have voting rights," said district resident Tracy Filzer. "But at least we have the right to express our opinion."

D.C. Council Chairwoman Linda Cropp said the inequity amounted to "tyranny."

"We need to drive members of Congress to a state of reason," Cropp said.

One dead and six hurt in Amtrak wreck in California

MOORPARK, Calif. (AP) — An Amtrak train carrying 88 people derailed Saturday after striking a truck on the tracks, killing one person and injuring six others, a fire department spokeswoman said.

Three of the five passenger cars derailed in the crash, said Ventura County Fire Department spokeswoman Sindi Wells.

One person was pronounced dead at the scene, and six people were taken to area hospitals, one in critical condition, Wells said. Wells said the train struck a tree-rimmed truck at a crossing on private property three miles west of Moorpark, which is about 50 miles northwest of Los Angeles.

The crossing was marked with a sign but had no gates or lights, she said.

The train was traveling west from Los Angeles to Santa Barbara on Amtrak's second busiest route.

RAPID

Weight Loss Formula

Proven In Clinical Trials!

"Quick Start™" Formula Six Times Stronger and We've Got The Studies To Prove It!

In a well-controlled double-blind clinical trial, reported in the October, 1997 edition of the Journal of the American College of Nutrition, Vol. 16, No. 5, p. 501 (H116), overweight patients who took the active ThermoGenics Plus® "Quick Start" formula for 6 weeks lost six times more body weight (4.13% to be exact) than an identical group of overweight patients who didn't. But that's not all! More than two thirds of the weight lost consisted of pure, unhealthy excess body fat! And there's more! The significant rapid loss of excess body fat occurred just by taking the "Quick Start" formula... without following a calorie restricted diet or exercise program! That's right! The study concludes that the active "Quick Start" compound "appears to be a safe and effective intervention for weight loss and positive body composition changes over a 6-week period in non-exercising or calorie control conditions."

Triple Pack

Which of These Costly Homeseller Mistakes Will You Make When You Sell Your Home?

SOUTHERN IDAHO — A new report has just been released which reveals 7 costly mistakes that most homeowners make when selling their home, and a 9 Step System that can help you sell your home fast and for the most amount of money.

This industry report shows clearly how the traditional ways of selling homes have become increasingly less and less effective in today's market. The fact of the matter is that fully three quarters of homesellers don't get what they want for their homes and become disillusioned and — worse — financially disadvantaged when they put their home on the market.

As this report uncovers, most homesellers make 7 deadly mistakes that cost them literally thousands of dollars. The good news is that each and every one of these mistakes is entirely preventable.

In answer to this issue, industry insiders have prepared a free special report entitled "The 9 Step System to Get Your Home Sold Fast and For Top Dollar."

MAGIC VALLEY

In addition the Republican Party held a fund-raiser for Lazio in Sun Valley this summer, which accounted for the lion's share of his Idaho contributions.

One Lazio supporter, former Idaho House Speaker T.W. Stivers of Twin Falls, met Lazio at the Sun Valley event. Stivers illustrates the draw many Idaho contributors feel to the New York race.

"I'd like to see someone beat Hillary Clinton," Stivers said. "I don't like her, and I'd like to see someone beat her."

And given the volume of political contributions coming from the Wood River Valley, taking Lazio to Sun Valley was no mistake.

"Everybody in Idaho goes to Sun Valley (to raise campaign cash)," Idaho Democratic Chairman Carolyn Boyce said.

But unlike most of the rest of Idaho, the Wood River Valley is bipartisan in its contributions. Despite its reputation as a Democratic mountain stronghold, it is the most fertile campaign contribution ground in Idaho for Democrats and Republicans.

Evidence of that is the $50,000 contribution to the Democratic National Committee by Bellevue resident Thomas O'Connor and the $45,000 in contributions given to the Republican National Committee by Michael Quinn of Sun Valley. O'Connor and Quinn were the top individual contributors in the region.

Another example of Sun Valley's campaign fund potential: While much of Lazio's Idaho money came from the area, U.S. Sen. Jim Kerry, D-Mass., whose wife owns a condo in the upscale resort area, also holds fund-raisers in the Wood River Valley, Boyce said.

"There's money there - liberal money," Boyce said.

Despite living in the 2nd Congressional District, Magic Valley contributors also gave nearly $16,000 to 1st Congressional District candidates. Lt. Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter topped that list with just over $12,000 in contributions from the Magic Valley.

One contribution to the 1st Congressional District, however, was political payback.

Twin Falls attorney Mark Stubbs gave Otter's Republican primary opponent, the conservative Dennis Mansfield, a $1,000 donation. Mansfield supported Stubbs' 1998 run in the 2nd Congressional District, against Simpson.

"He put out a call for help and I helped him," Stubbs said. "He went out of his way to help me with my campaign - so it's payback time."

The donations to out-of-state or out-of-district candidates is no surprise to Clark.

"For instance, a person who is anti-abortion would like to support as many candidates in favor of their cause as possible," Clark said.

Former presidential hopeful Lyndon LaRouche was one dark-horse candidate that gathered a lot of surprise support from Magic Valley contributors.

The office Democrat took in about $5,900 in donations from what Gore called "anti-government Democrats."

Clark offered a partisan twist. "I would not attribute that to large support for LaRouche in Idaho. I would attribute that to the fact that Gore is very unpopular even among Democrats here in Idaho," Clark said.

Although candidates such as Bush, Gore and Lazio did well, certain PACs representing Magic Valley special interests also took in a lot of money.

Sugar beet industry PACs - the American Sugarbeet Growers Association and the Snake River Sugar Co. - took in $8,598 between them, most of it from Mini-Cassia.

Other special interest groups that did well include the National Automobile Dealers Association and medical industry PACs.

Magic Valley donations - D-56

While individual personal interest drives many donations, many donations from the Magic Valley were "soft money" donations to the individual parties to use as they see fit.

But for most, their donations seem to have stemmed from been personal preference.

That's why Charles Harris of Twin Falls gave $3,000 to candidates and PACs he said represent his views - including former presidential hopeful Gary Bauer.

"I've to the people I thought were the people we needed in office," Harris said.

He knew Bauer's chance of getting the Republican nomination was slim, but he wanted to give as much as he could at the time. Since his first choice won't be on Tuesday's ballot, and since he dislikes both major party candidates, Harris will vote for the Reform Party's Pat Buchanan.

Scientific advancements spark interest in philosophy issues

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Here's what many folks think when they hear the word "philosophy": Professors perched high in ivory towers, pondering such things as realism and whether we can infer naturalism from skepticism (maybe yes, maybe no).

Consider these images: Philosophers counseling clients about moral dilemmas. Late sippers chatting in philosophy cafes. Microsoft engineer crediting his philosophy education for his success. A wrongful death lawsuit filed against an ethics professor. Philosophy, that abstruse academic discipline, is enjoying a popular renaissance as revolutions in technology and genetics raise fundamental questions about the future of our life in the new millennium.

There used to be "a widespread sense that philosophy had become detached from real-world problems," said Bill Galton, director of the Institute for Philosophy and Public Policy at the University of Maryland at College Park.

Not anymore. In a movement that would have pleased Socrates, the viewed philosophy as essential to public life, scholars are trying to apply the wisdom of the great thinkers to today's issues. And courses marrying technology and philosophy are a current feature of many students' education. Daniel Rothbart, a philosophy professor at George Mason University, teaches a junior-level philosophy of science course in which 80 percent of the students are computer science majors. John Arz, a professor of management science at George Washington University, teaches a number of philosophy/technology courses. "What people don't realize is that Socrates, Aristotle and Plato had a lot to say about the value of information systems," Arz said.

Though traditionalists view "applied philosophy" as a distant cousin of the real thing, it is where the action is. When the University of Maryland Institute was founded in 1976, it was one of the first such centers in the country. Now there are dozens of them, dealing with debates over medical and scientific experimentation, gene therapy, abortion and assisted suicide. Their scholars write papers, give speeches, lobby politicians and confer with business executives.

"The whole business about philosophy and public policy is booming," said R. Paul Churchill, head of the GWU philosophy department. Churchill recently participated in a symposium on NATO peacekeeping in Bosnia, arguing that peace should be seen in terms of justice and reconciliation, and not as simply the absence of war.

Galton teaches a University of Maryland graduate course called the Moral Dimensions of Public Policy. The class studies questions that revolve around honesty and lying.

Center of Bioethics at the University of Pennsylvania opened in 1994 with one staff member; now it has 14. It started out without a master's program and now has 100 students working toward master's degrees.

"Bioethics has become the way Americans can talk to one another about ethical and value issues," said Arthur Caplan, the center's director. "Cloning. What do we think of Dr. Kevorkian? Who should own your genes? Is it all right to dig up Abraham Lincoln and see if he had a genetic disease? ... I actually believe that bioethics has become America's moral tale."

Caplan is involved in a morality play of his own, having been named in a lawsuit filed against the University of Pennsylvania by the family of an 18-year-old man who died as part of a genetic experiment. Caplan had discussed the case with the patient's doctors.

Though traditional philosophy courses have been cut back at some colleges, the number of students studying the subject through other departments — religion, political science, literature — has risen dramatically. The number of philosophy majors also has increased in recent years after declining in the 1980s and early 1990s, and they are winding up in many professions.

"Revolutions in technology and genetics raise fundamental questions about the nature of our life in the new millennium."

Sieglepp is a 26-year-old GMU senior majoring in philosophy and Russian and planning to become a Marine Corps officer. The reasoning skills he has learned from studying the great thinkers is good preparation for a military career, he said. "You need a firm basis for your beliefs. Philosophy really helped me with that."

John Mueller, 31, a software test engineer for Microsoft Corp., was a philosophy major at GWU. Because of the logic he learned in philosophy classes, he said, "I can go through a computer program and think about, at each step, what are the assumptions and expectations for this function or for this procedure."

The subject also is being studied at more high schools. In Philadelphia, for example, about a dozen high schools have recently started offering courses in bioethics. At Walter Johnson High School in Bethesda, Md., teacher Carrie D'Amour last year started the equivalent of Philosophy 101.

Democrat may thwart own party

Trafican's vote would be historic
Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON—Every legislative body seems to have one. Congress' gadfly is Ohio Rep. James A. Trafican Jr., a free spirit who single-handedly could help Republicans keep control of the House.

Never mind that he is a Democrat.

The renegade lawmaker has pledged to vote for Rep. J. Dennis Hastert, R-Ill., as speaker of the House in the new Congress, a move that could put Trafican into the history books. If Tuesday's election leaves the GOP one seat shy of a majority in the chamber.

The tight battle for the House is not all that's on Trafican's mind: He expects to be indicted any day on federal corruption charges. He denies any wrongdoing.

Democratic leaders shudder at the thought that their political fortunes could be upended by Trafican, a 16-year congressman best known for his blustery speeches that end with the line:

James A. Trafican Jr., D-Ohio speaks at Hyde Park in Youngstown, Ohio.

"Beam me up."

"Only in America, huh?" said Thomas E. Mann, a political scientist at the nonpartisan Brookings Institution think tank in Washington.

"It's symbolic of the political moment in Washington that someone who in any other circumstances couldn't be taken seriously has the potential to decide who controls the House," added Marshall Wittmann, senior fellow for the conservative Hudson Institute.

2-by-4 with the words, "Bangin' Away in D.C.," is among a handful of lawmakers who could play pivotal roles in deciding control of the House.

Republicans now hold a seven-vote majority. If the parties are divided by even fewer seats after Tuesday, "you're going to see the political equivalent of 'Let's Make a Deal,'" said Amy Walter, an analyst for the Cook Political Report newsletter.

In that event, the party controlling the House may not be known until January, when its members convene for their next session and vote for a speaker. In the interim, both parties could be expected to court lawmakers from across the aisle with offers of prized committee assignments and other perquisites.

The courtship of Trafican, 59, is well under way. GOP leaders recently provided $25 million for a community center in his Youngstown district. And while the House has been locked in partisan warfare, Republicans have made a point of praising him from the House floor.

Trafican said that he decided to support Hastert because the speaker helped him pass a bill dealing with one of his pet causes: abuses by the Internal Revenue Service.

He charges that Democratic leaders, by contrast, have sought to derail his political career. He attributed that to "my independent voting record."

Trafican earlier this year announced that he was the target of a federal investigation — and then proceeded to win a four-way Democratic primary. He is a heavy favorite to win reelection. He has pledged to fight the anticipated charges against him "like a junkyard dog," contending that the Justice Department is conducting a political vendetta against him because of his frequent criticism of the agency.

As Mahoning County sheriff, Trafican was tried in 1983 on charges of taking bribes from mobsters. But, acting as his own attorney, even though he has no law degree, he won acquittal.

Also as sheriff, he went to jail for three days rather than serve laid-off factory workers with foreclosure notices, an act that endeared him to voters in his blue-collar district.

He frequently targets his colleagues for barbs. He once said that many lawmakers are "so damn dumb, they could throw themselves on the ground and miss."

New York's Senate race goes to wire

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — She's up! He's up! It's all even. New York's high-profile Senate race between Hillary Rodham Clinton and Rep. Rick Lazio is going down to the wire.

The race is so volatile that the candidate in the lead seems to change with each new poll — and most show the two in a dead heat.

"We expected this race to be very close," Clinton spokesman Howard Wolfson said.

And so did the Lazio camp, said spokesman Dan McLagan.

Some undecided voters liked the notion of a tight race.

"It would be nice if it's close, you know, back and forth, so we don't really know before we vote who's going to win," Duke Drogin, a law student, said at the Sea Star dinner in White Plains.

The most recent poll released Wednesday night — a survey by Newsday/WB11 of 1,103 likely voters — have the two candidates about even, with Clinton at 48 percent and Lazio at 47 percent. The poll had a margin of error of 4 percentage points.

A poll from Marist College released earlier Wednesday gave Clinton a slim lead with 50 percent to Lazio's 46 percent among 516 likely voters. That poll has a margin of error of 4.5 percent.

But a poll out Tuesday that had earlier showed Clinton with a slim lead over Lazio indicated his attacks over some contributions made to her campaign by Muslim donors may be hurting her.

The Quinnipiac University poll had Clinton at 47 percent and Lazio at 44 percent. Its Oct. 18 poll had Clinton leading, 50 percent to 43 percent.

Further clouding the picture was a Zogby tracking poll out Wednesday in the New York Post with Lazio slightly ahead of the Clinton, 48 percent to 43 percent, a gap barely wider than the poll's 4 percentage-point margin of error.

DUI reaction: Initial indifference

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Voters have initially reacted with indifference to news that Texas Gov. George W. Bush had been arrested for drunken driving more than two decades ago, according to the latest Washington Post tracking survey.

Interviews with likely voters conducted Friday suggest that only one in six voters say the drunk driving arrest in 1976 was relevant to the current presidential campaign. Even fewer say it will make them less likely to vote for the Republican nominee.

As a consequence, the overall presidential race remains largely unchanged from where it was immediately before the story broke late Thursday: Bush with a narrow lead in a contest that remains too close to call.

But these first impressions could quickly change if additional damaging details emerge about the incident or as voters weigh the judgments of the media and others about its significance.

And in an election as close as this one, even small shifts in the vote in a few key states could tilt the election to one candidate or the other.

A total of 598 likely voters nationwide were interviewed Friday night as part of the Post's ongoing tracking poll.

Margin of sampling error for the results is plus or minus 4 percentage points. Results based on a single night of interviewing also are susceptible to other sources of error and therefore should be interpreted cautiously.

The basic details of the DUI story have been instantly absorbed by the electorate. On Friday night, barely 24 hours after the story first broke on Fox News, nine in 10 likely voters say they had read or heard about Bush's arrest.

One in six voters 15 percent said the arrest raised at least some doubt in their minds about whether Bush is qualified to serve as president, and 7 percent said the disclosure raised "serious" questions about Bush's fitness to serve.

But the survey also found that relatively few voters say the news made them less likely to vote for Bush.

Eight percent of those interviewed Friday said they were less likely to vote for Bush as a result of his drunk driving arrest.

Nevada knocks Kentucky out of the top spot on the smoking list

ATLANTA (AP) — Nevada, home to Sin City and its 24-hour, smoke-friendly bars and casinos, has knocked Kentucky out of the top spot on the government's list of states with the highest smoking rates.

Nearly a third of Nevada residents smoke, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention reported last week.

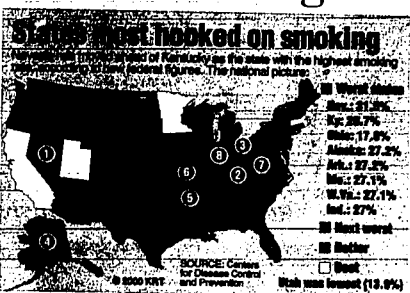

The numbers didn't surprise Danielle Dreitzer of the American Cancer Society's office in Las Vegas, where smoking is allowed almost anywhere there's gambling. Even in grocery stores, waiters light up while they play the slots.

"We jokingly say Nevada's the smoking section for California," Dreitzer said.

The CDC put Nevada's smoking rate at 31.5 percent. Kentucky, a major tobacco producer that had topped the list since 1995, was second at 29.7 percent.

The lowest rates were 13.7 percent in Puerto Rico and 13.9 percent in Utah, where the Mormon Church's opposition to smoking has been credited with keeping rates low.

Idaho, which also has a large

Mormon population, ranked 37th, tied with Oregon at 21.5 percent.

Dr. Linda Pederson, an epidemiologist for the CDC's Office of Smoking and Health, downplayed Nevada overtaking Kentucky, noting that the survey's margin of error of 3 percentage points was greater than the 1.8-point difference separating the two states.

The CDC also cautioned that the Puerto Rico numbers could be skewed because 25 percent of homes don't have telephones and were excluded from the survey.

The CDC has estimated that roughly 25 percent American adults smoke — a rate that held steady throughout the 1990s.

The CDC surveyed adults in all 50 states, plus the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico, about their smoking habits. People were considered smokers if they smoked almost every day and had smoked more than 100 cigarettes in their life.

Blood banks call on pets for donations

MILWAUKEE (AP) — The nation's in desperate need of blood donors — even the furry, four-legged kind.

Advances in veterinary medicine and pet owners increasingly willing to spend large sums on the family dog or cat have caused a nationwide shortage of blood for critically ill animals.

The country's four national animal blood banks all have back orders, with a two-month waiting list for hard-to-come-by cat plasma and up to a six-week wait for dog plasma.

The blood banks ship blood and blood products to clinics around the country, often on a moment's notice, so doctors can perform emergency surgery when Spot's been hit by a car or Felix needs a kidney transplant.

"If you say you need the blood and I say I don't have it, chances are that dog's going to die," said Valerie Courtwright, associate director of a Michigan clinic that held three dog blood drives last month to help boost supplies.

The Animal Blood Bank in Dixon, Calif., the country's largest animal blood supplier, ships between 1,600 and 2,000 units a month to 3,000 clinics throughout the United States and Canada.

"There's more dogs that need blood than there are dogs to give it," director Pat Kaufman said. "We just can't keep up."

One-attorney town looks for prosecutor | Texas flooding

CARSON, N.D. (AP) - Grant County's chief prosecutor hasn't spent one day on the job in two years. He hasn't filed a single brief or prosecuted a case. In fact, he never even wanted the job.

But Ronald Welkum is the last attorney left in this county of about 2,850 people. A single voter wrote his name on the ballot for county prosecutor in a primary election, and before he knew it he had the job.

After the last election, Welkum, who has a private practice, appointed Jim Gion, already the state's attorney in neighboring Hettringer County, to do the job in Grant County as well.

The three county commissioners would like to avoid a similar situation in the future. They are asking voters to decide Tuesday whether they can appoint an out-of-county attorney to officially

"I think the other counties are saying, 'Grant is really taking the lead here, let's see how it plays out there before we do something,'" Terry Traynor, the North Dakota Association of Counties director, said of Tuesday's county ballot measure.

Grant County

isn't the only county lacking lawyers, or other people for that matter. North Dakota has 17 counties with fewer than 3,000 residents. Grant County has lost 25 percent of its population since 1990 of about 2,100, already has switched to an appointed state's attorney.

On the state's western border, Slope County, with population of about 900, has an elected prosecutor that also runs for office in neighboring Adams County. A recent change to North Dakota's candidate eligibility rules now bars that arrangement. Slope County Auditor Renita Braun said the commission has yet to reconsider the issue.

Go in now travels between Grant and Hottinger counties, an area more than 100 miles wide and nearly as long, for such duties as interpreting fence line disputes, prosecuting drunken driving offenses and counseling city residents.

"It's kind of like riding the circuit back in the mid-1800s," Gion said. "Judges and attorneys would ride from town to town. The traveling courtroom would decide a case, then pack up and ride to the next town."

Texas flooding claims five lives

AUSTIN (AP) — Relentless thunderstorms have rumbled across central Texas for more than two days, causing severe

Don Rogers, a spokesman for the Texas Division of Emergency Management, said Saturday that more storms were moving

"It's similar to what we already have," Rogers said. "But when this started a couple of days ago the ground wasn't saturated."

On Saturday, the Llano River in Junction, about 140 miles west of Austin, crested 20 feet above flood stage. The water seeped into basements, damaged cars and took out what Kimble County Judge Delbert Roberts estimated to be some 200 miles

George Bush deserves support from Westerners

Texas Gov. George W. Bush is a wise presidential choice for America in general and the American West in particular. If elected, he would see that the region's needs are met - and then leave it alone.

We like that conservative approach. We think most Westerners do, too; which is why they should support Bush on Tuesday.

There are plenty of reasons for Westerners to support Bush. If elected, they can expect him to:

- Leave four dams standing on the Lower Snake River in Washington.
- Stop "saving" vast swamps of public land with little public discussion.
- Include Homo sapiens in the equation when applying the Endangered Species Act.
- End the stalemate on permanent storage of nuclear waste.

Even Bush's choice of running mates bespeaks a commitment to Western issues. Dick Cheney is from Wyoming, while the Democrats' No. 2 hails from Connecticut.

In a broader sense, Bush is a genuine leader. Rather than immerse himself in the fine-print policy details at the bottom of the optometrist's chart, he is focused on the big capital letters at the top of the chart.

As president, Bush would trust individual Americans to make important decisions for themselves. For instance, he supports returning much of the projected federal surplus by cutting tax rates for most Americans - not just the "wealthiest 1 percent." He supports empowering workers to invest a share of their Social Security withholdings in the stock market. He supports reforming America's under-achieving public schools by injecting a dose of competition.

Simply put, Bush favors ownership over entitlement.

His approach would buff up the tracks for the American economy, not derail it. We're confident the nation's financial prosperity would continue under Bush, because he instinctively keeps his hands off of things that are working well.

As for his ethical suitability to lead the nation, it's worth remembering that Bush hasn't been tarnished by the waves of scandal that continue to break over the White House and its inhabitants. Bush's moral compass is already pointing in the right direction. It doesn't need recalibration. Much has been said about some of the excesses in Bush's past - most recently the revelation of a drunken driving arrest nearly 25 years ago. Plainly, Bush, like many Americans, has overcome a personal weakness. The experience seems to have left him a wiser, stronger and probably more compassionate person.

This campaign's most striking impression is that Bush is a fundamentally decent guy. He pursues agreement and progress rather than confrontation and discord. That's why he's been able to reach across party lines to work effectively with Democrats in Texas. His deft, bipartisan skills have allowed him to raise the quality of public education in Texas.

Did Bush do this all by his lonesome? Of course not - and that's a strength, not a weakness. Rather than pretending to know all the answers to every question, Bush surrounds himself with wise public servants.

As president, Bush would cut taxes, strengthen education, reduce American military involvement in foreign lands, and safeguard our remarkable economy. We think American voters support those ambitions. That's why American voters should support George W. Bush on Election Day.

If elected president, George W. Bush would resist the urge to 'save' the American West.

C'mon America, who do you like?

The presidential contest of 2000 is winding up in a blaze of charges and countercharges, reflecting both the closeness of the race and the strategic necessities of rivals Al Gore and George W. Bush. Because both their campaigns are intelligently managed, there is a logic in what they are doing - and also an explanation for the reluctance of the nation's voters to choose between them.

The essential clue to the dynamic of this battle was given to me way back last winter by an esteemed colleague, Ron Brownstein of the Los Angeles Times. He wasn't even talking about the Bush-Gore contest. We were on a panel in Los Angeles, sponsored by the Public Policy Institute of California, shortly before the March 7 primary, and Brownstein was explaining the appeal of Arizona Sen. John McCain, the upset winner of the Republican presidential primaries in New Hampshire and Michigan.

What voters liked about McCain, Brownstein said, in addition to his candid and humorous personality and his war hero biography, was this: McCain was promising to change Washington a lot, but the country not a great deal. He said he would clean up the "corruption" of the capital, symbolized by wholesale campaign finance abuses and profligate pork-barrel spending. But he was not talking about any major changes in economic or social policy that would upset anyone's apple cart.

It was a shrewd analysis - and an original one on the part of a very observant political reporter. A few days later, McCain was out of the race, having lost primaries in California, New York, Ohio and Georgia on March 7 - a development that did not shock Brownstein or myself. The Republican Establishment wanted Bush, and did what was necessary to secure his nomination, just as the Democratic Establishment did for Gore. Bush's essential argument would have to be this: If you want to change the culture of Washington, its crass partisanship, its endemic duplicity, then you can't vote for a guy like Gore, who is not only part of the current scene but literally a lifetime product of that environment - born and raised in the heart of the legislative-lobbying swamp.

And Gore's essential response would have to be this: Bush may promise to raise the standards of Washington, but don't think that's what he's really about. He will change the direction of national policy in ways you won't like.

He'll bring back deficits with his reckless tax cuts, undermine consumer and environmental protections to please his corporate sponsors, name Supreme Court justices who will overturn Roe vs. Wade to satisfy the right-wingers, and, yes, deface the great monuments of Social Security and Medicare my party built.

Sure enough, that is what we have seen. Bush has cleverly planted the idea that if you court our current national leaders are poor role models, you better vote for their guy.

Gore, for his part, has grabbed every available weapon - from a selective rendering of Bush's Texas record to a dissection of the governor's tax and Medicare and Social Security proposals to drive home the argument that Bush's election would endanger everything from the quality of the air we breathe to our prospects of a secure retirement.

Because there is broad public agreement that Washington could use a little house uplift, Bush has been able to present himself largely in positive terms. Because there was little public knowledge of his Bush's record and little understanding of his major proposals, Gore has been forced to take a more negative tack - something that cost him in their first debate. But the public is torn between conflicting desires - wanting to change the tone of Washington but not to change fundamental economic or social policy.

McCain promised both, and if he were on the ballot, I think he would win easily. What kind of a president he would make is another question entirely, given his pugnaic temperament and tendency to personalize disagreements. But for the voters who want to change Washington but preserve current policies, this is a helluva tough choice. It's no wonder the nation is living a hard time, making up its mind.

Every vote counts this election

Just a message to the young voters and older voters alike:

You don't think your one vote will count to determine a winner. Well, as close as this election for president is, your one vote counts. I am a Democrat, but I have a lot of Republican friends and relatives, too, who are in limbo as to which candidate to vote for. But please remove all doubt when you go to the polls to vote on Tuesday. Take the needle, punch and punch the hole under the Gore candidate. You'll make yourself feel good, along with me and millions more.

According to various statistics, Bush's ability to govern the state of Texas has been poorly demonstrated. We Democrats think, with his lack of experience, he would not be a good candidate to lead our nation.

He advocates fixing and reforming the Social Security program. It's worked for 95 years and is fine where it is. Don't let him put his mitts on it. It is our federal old age benefit. We have and will be paying the premiums through the payroll deduction program. It is our money (insurance money), not the government's.

Please cast a vote in the right direction. We don't need any more "I don't remember" and "Read my lips" presidents.

Editorial slings mud

I'm quite surprised by your editorial Sunday - not by the fact that you are backing Sheriff Touseley but by what you said about Mr. Packer. How is this a clean race that neither candidate was saying bad things about each other, which they are both to be commended on as this doesn't happen much anymore! But this is where my amazement starts. Sheriff Touseley doesn't have to sling mud. The Times-News does it for him!

You told us mistakes Mr. Packer has made with his job. We are all human and, therefore, we all make mistakes in our lives that come back to haunt us. Which is what's happening now. But don't you think both sides should be put into the same light?

Let's remember a few things that have happened under Sheriff Touseley:

1. The Sheriff, Jesse Thrush, who was one of his deputies that shook the baby girl and brought about her death. I'm sure her family has not forgotten what happened. The sheriff works out of the same building, maybe 75 feet from where his deputies work, so I'm sure he must see them quite often.

What about the suicide that happened in his jail? That's in the same block as he works in; he can walk to it. They have cameras in each cell block so they can see what is happening at all times, so someone wasn't doing their job.

On a lighter side, what about the ruckus over the Drug Awareness Resistance Education card?

If you stop and think about it, there are other things as well. So please, Times-News, give us accurate information on both candidates so we can cast our ballot the way we choose. Casting them wisely with facts behind our choice.

One last thing I know that when you back someone you want to bring out only the best in that person. But shouldn't we be unbiased as a newspaper and let Twin Falls County voters choose for themselves based on information from all sides. On both, not just the candidate that you back. Let's play fair!

Touseley's qualified to continue

Tuesday is a day to support your sheriff.

Sheriff Wayne Touseley has been your sheriff for the last eight years. He has worked for Twin Falls County for the last 22 years. During that time, he has been the jail administrator, head of court security and a patrolman. Wayne knows the ins and outs of the sheriff's office, and with his experience, knowledge and leadership, he is very qualified to continue being the sheriff of Twin Falls County.

Wayne is very supportive of every resident in the county and is very concerned about our future.

We are all in this together, and without the leadership of Sheriff Wayne Touseley, the outcome of our future will be forever changed.

Please join us on Tuesday and re-elect Wayne Touseley sheriff of Twin Falls County.

Pick write-ins to right MV history

In a speech to the House of Commons in 1934, Winston Churchill said, "... want of foresight, unwillingness to act when action would be simple and effective, lack of clear thinking, confusion of counsel until the emergency comes, until self-preservation strikes its jarring gong - these are the features which constitute the endless repetition of history..."

Decisions made by elected county officials have written the recent history (25 to 30 years) of Magic Valley. These decisions have brought a jarring gong to the peace and serenity of much of this beautiful landscape.

What shall be written of Magic Valley's history at the end of the next decade? Breathing clean air and drinking pure water are paramount to good health.

The two who come to mind when thinking of these matters are Bill Chisholm and Mike Ihler (write-in).

Touseley chases his tail

Some questions the Twin Falls County voters need to ask:

Why is Twin Falls County Sheriff Wayne Touseley historically the most expensive sheriff that Twin Falls County has ever had? Has Twin Falls County experienced such a tremendous explosion in the crime rate that would justify the excessive overspending of the budget? Why did it take the sheriff five days to recapture three prisoners that had escaped from the Twin Falls County Jail after a witness in the park across the street called the sheriff's office to inform them that prisoners were climbing out of the roof of the jail? (All that manpower for five days is very expensive.)

Apparently the fox was chasing his tail.

Childers' facts are fiction

I have read and heard Mr. Childers' "facts" for weeks. Tuesday, he was on a talk program stating that Sheriff Weaver had accepted a check to pay for a trip to New York for police training. A caller asked if he knew that the money had been returned. The answer was "yes." Another of his accusations is that the sheriff is not Police Officers Standards and Training certified. Sheriff Weaver has stated he has completed POST certification in Idaho. POST officials confirm that statement.

Sheriff Weaver has made drug arrests since May 8, in spite of Mr. Childers' claim. Makes me wonder about the truth in the other "facts" (?) of Mr. Childers' campaign.

Give Halper a try

Hopefully, there haven't been too many of you Jerome voters sucked in to the tune of the "Wayne Childers for Jerome County Sheriff Fact (fak) Sheet." Not only did Childers pass out his fak sheet at public gatherings but he bought up a quarter page of space in the Oct. 29 Times-News. (Now them's big bucks, he would say.) On this one-quarter page, he once more fed the public another round of his so-called fact (fak) sheet.

Why I keep referring to it as his "fak sheet" is only because it is not a quarter page of facts but incorrect statements taking cheap shots at Sheriff Weaver's past term of office. Just plain cheap fak and statements far from the truth. On the KLXX morning talk show, Childers admitted himself that most of his "Fact Sheet" came from computerized printouts that were available to anyone at the county courthouse. Be honest now, Wayne, just how much time did you spend looking for discrepancies in your so-called "fact sheet." I always like to think of something a little unique, I'm sure we've all heard or read of this government. "Hey, neighbor, watch out, you might shoot yourself in the foot."

Now I must open another can of worms concerning two friends who are both running for the same seat of Jerome County commissioner - Veronica Lierman and Lee Halper. The last time I voted for Veronica and was satisfied with her work. She sure held her's with Sheriff Gold during her term of office. I wonder just how she'll get along with our Sheriff Weaver. Now comes along another friend, a young buck, Lee Halper. As long as I have known him, he has been working the inside of our government, and I sincerely believe with his thoughts and intentions for "we, the citizens." Veronica, you are a good friend and a great grandma. I think your grandkids need you more than the voters do. I really feel this young buck, Lee Halper, will give the commissioner's seat his best shot, and he'll be out there working long and hard for us voters. Let's give him a try. I will.

Election rife with questions

Are you as voters bothering to ask some real questions about who you're voting for?

Here are some you should be finding out about just in case you can't think of any yourself before you make any decisions in regard to the county commissioners' race.

If any confined animal feeding operation ordinance goes into effect, will all (even small dairies) have to abide by the ordinance? Will the small dairies have the financial ability to bring their dairies into compliance? I don't think the county can legally enforce any ordinance (including odor) that apply to cows, crops, property and processing facilities (including city sewers). If the ordinance doesn't apply to all straight across the board. Would that leave the county open to class-action lawsuits?

The qualifications listed in Mr. Chisholm's ad seem pretty impressive if you are looking for someone who doesn't seem to have a stable financial background in supporting the county through taxes.

Where do Mr. Chisholm and Mr. Ihler get their campaign money?

Are they getting any monies from the financially powerful national environmental organizations (like the guilt-producing Greenpeace and People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals groups) who have managed to get the federal government to give the courts permission to bypass the democratic process through the use of the Environmental Protection Agency or locally?

If Twin Falls County is 55 percent owned by the federal government, will Mr. Chisholm and Mr. Ihler be able to get the feds to pay their fair share of taxes to help operate the county budget for all, why has he managed to divide and pit small farmers against large dairies? Is it possible he then could ride the coattails of the dairy industry to get himself elected to a financially stable earnings job? Or will he donate his salary back to the county? There are many more issues that need to be addressed both in the local and national campaigns.

The country has gone way beyond what is right and equitable for all. The rights to govern ourselves are taken away every day. Even the right to operate your own business legally.

I didn't leave California because of the environmental laws. I left because of the people who get on the environmental bandwagons to get elected to public offices.

(Editor's note: According to their campaign finance reports, neither Bill Chisholm, nor Mike Ihler have accepted campaign contributions from Greenpeace or People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals.)

Beware last-minute claims

Just a short little word to the wise: Be wary of those candidates who make claims and accusations by way of fliers or newspaper ads on the eve or the day of the election when their opponents have no opportunity to respond.

Also, be careful to note glowing candidate endorsements which are suspiciously identical to endorsements printed 10 or more years ago and reprinted just before each election. They pull these last-minute shenanigans for a reason, and it isn't to make you a more informed voter.

Return Ridinger to House

To the readers of The Times-News:

I ask you to return Rep. Tim Ridinger to the Idaho House of Representatives by casting your vote for him on Tuesday.

I have worked with Tim for the past 15 years and appreciate his knowledge of local government and fiscal responsibility. Tim sincerely cares about the residents of Blaine, Camas, Elmore, Gooding and Lincoln counties and has the knowledge of the issues that are important to this area of Idaho in order to represent them well on a state level. With Tim's years of experience in local and state government, he has the close association of respected leaders and the advantage of ease in working relationships with them.

Let's retain our experienced leader in Legislative District 21. Vote for Rep. Tim Ridinger, House Sen. 21B, this Tuesday.

'Good ol' boys' have to go

When you are about to make your choice in the voting booth, ask yourself a couple questions:

"Would I vote for someone who approved the new construction of a foul-smelling business down the street from my house, without considering how it affected me?" Ask yourself, "Would I vote for a person who then told me that there was no public hearing because it was not legally required?"

The substance of who will be elected to serve as county commissioners in Twin Falls, Jerome and Gooding has become personal! Our quality of life is at risk! The DeCrot, Hagler and Giltner dairies are just the beginning. The development of confined animal feeding operations in the Magic Valley is sure to continue in order to feed the voracious appetites of the local cheese processors. The misfortune and loss of property value that has come to those families in Filer, who are now suffering from the horrific air pollution of confined animal feeding operations. This is not an anti-dairy letter. Dairies are an important part of a healthy agricultural community. This letter is about CAFOs and the kind of future we want for the Magic Valley. I'm sure Grinstead and Brockman are good old boys, known by lots of folks and are pleasant pat-on-the-back coffee group companions.

But things are changing. It is time we end "good-old-boy" politics in the Magic Valley. This year, let's not vote for them simply because we know their names. Let's not vote for them because they've been around a long while. But more importantly, let's not vote for them because they have caused a lot of hurt for a lot of people when they decided to support new CAFO developments and turned their backs on families in the affected areas. Maybe it did not happen to you, but it could one day.

Vote to protect our quality of life in the Magic Valley. In Twin Falls, vote for Bill Chisholm and Mike Ihler. In Jerome, vote for Lee Halper.

One day, you will be glad you did! On Tuesday, our quality of life is on the ballot.

MICHAEL JOHNSON

Chisholm deserves chance

1. Your newspaper recently called Bill Chisholm a one-issue candidate, saying the dairy question is all he cares about. I'd agree Bill is a one-issue guy, but the issue is quality of life. For years now, Bill has been steadfast in his efforts to keep southern Idaho a good place to live. He's smart, dedicated, and he definitely deserves a chance as county commissioner.

2. Anyone who's disgusted by politics as usual needs to take a look at Craig Williams, who is running for the seat held by Rep. Mike Simpson. Williams is strong on agriculture and education, and he may be the only major-party candidate for Congress who is telling people not to send him any money. His website is at www.craig-williams2000.com, and he has my vote.

3. George Bush seems to be a nice guy, but I am appalled that someone with his lack of credentials could soon be our president. I can only quote what the strenuously moderate New Republic magazine said in its Oct. 30 issue endorsing Al Gore: "America faces a choice between a presidential candidate whose persona it enjoys but whose substance it doubts and a candidate whose persona makes it uncomfortable but whose substance is beyond dispute. Al Gore may not be the most charming man in politics, but on many of the critical questions of our time from his warnings about global warming to his hostility to Slobodan Milosevic, from his insistence on deficit reduction to his support for welfare reform, he has not simply been right, he has been right before much of the rest of the political class even started paying attention. If he loses on Nov. 7, it will not simply set America on an ideological course that we consider perilous and unworthy of our best traditions. It will be a sign that we are not living in a serious age."

4. Steven Hill's column on Oct. 30 was right. No matter what happens Tuesday, we need to get up and reform the Electoral College. This antiquated winner-take-all system is, I think, the main reason why people feel so powerless. Either we abolish the Electoral College entirely and have a direct vote (the best solution), or we go to the proportional system Hill mentioned, where presidential candidates would earn electoral votes based on the percentage of votes they received.

GOP threatens health-care

For those of us who have lived more than three-fourths of the 20th century and who have been blessed with most of our memory bank still intact, we remember more of that part of our country's history than most of the political news journalists, analysts, commentators and pundits.

Thus, we can discard all the untruths and garbage many of them have been spewing out and honestly make up our minds as for whom we are going to vote.

So what is the dumbest campaign rhetoric I've heard to date? It's that the compassionate conservative Republicans are going to save Social Security and Medicare. (To me, that sounds like putting the fox in charge of the hen house.)

Historically, the Republicans in general (with a few exceptions) and the right-wing in particular have never believed in either of these programs. Of course, their biggest concern was for poor corporate America having to pay its share of contributions, thereby cutting into their chief executive officers' multimillion-dollar salaries and pensions and their stockholders' dividends.

What's their solution? Getting their foot in the door of the complete privatization of Social Security by letting today's younger workers gamble a partial amount of their current contribution in the stock market.

We heard quite a bit about privatization prior to the 1988 election. Starting in the early '80s, many from the Republican Party started to pit the young against the old by using the scare tactic of telling baby boomers they would never get Social Security.

Now George W. is accusing Al Gore of using scare tactics on older Americans. But that's not true.

Most of us know that Mr. Gore is telling the truth—especially those of us who remember what the late, great congressman from Florida, Claude Pepper, told us many years ago: "... That in a complex 20th century, the truth is, no one and nothing except government is big enough, powerful enough and universal enough to make life bearable for the masses of citizens. Voices cry from high places that the private sector do it. Fine, if it can and will. But the truth is, it cannot and will not."

To all you good Democrats and more-enlightened Republicans, please remember to get out and vote for Al Gore and Joe Lieberman.

America's booming economy carried us to the start of the 21st century. Let's keep it that way!

Mum's the word on the key issues

One of the enduring questions about democracies is whether they can prudently prepare for the future—that is, whether they can take steps to minimize problems that reasonable people can anticipate. No one watching this presidential campaign can feel optimistic about the prospect. Al Gore and George W. Bush have blimed the country with proposals on education, health care and taxes. But both have failed to speak with candor or clarity on two problems that will profoundly shape America's future: immigration and an aging population.

These matters intersect, possibly in disturbing ways. On the one hand, the United States is in the midst of the largest wave of immigration since the early 1900s. In 1999, almost 10 percent of the U.S. population consisted of immigrants, double the 1970 level (4.7 percent). Even this understates the social impact. More than 90 percent of immigrants are 18 or over, and once here, many have children—where, of course, U.S. citizens. Together, immigrants and their children represent about 20 percent of the population. Although many are skilled and are adjusting quickly, others have problems. Among immigrants from Latin America, the poverty rate was nearly 25 percent in 1998.

On the other hand, the graying of America continues. In 1999, there were slightly more than three workers for every retiree. By 2030, there will be about two workers per retiree, even assuming stable immigration. The Congressional Budget Office recently estimated future spending on the major federal retirement programs: Social Security, Medicare and Medicaid. In 1999, they cost about 7.5 percent of gross domestic product. By 2030, CBO projects the costs at more than 14 percent of GDP.

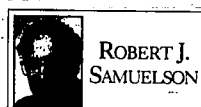

Together, these population shifts may imperil economic fairness and social peace. The costs of retirement programs are paid mainly by workers, through payroll or income taxes. Tomorrow's workers—today's children and young adults—will bear a heavy burden to subsidize the retirement of baby boomers. Given immigration, many workers may have fairly low incomes. They may be poorer than many of the retirees they are subsidizing. They will also be more heavily Latino and Asian than the retirees, who will be mainly white and African-American. The possibilities for economic, social and ethnic tensions and resentments are obvious.

Even without immigration, a strong case exists for gradually overhauling federal retirement programs. Because Americans live longer and are healthier, it makes sense to raise the retirement age further (under current law, it rises to 66 by 2009 and 67 by 2027). For wealthier retirees, it makes sense to trim Social Security benefits and require that they pay more for Medicare coverage. These steps would preserve the safety net for the poor elderly while moderating workers' future taxes. Even without aging, a strong case exists for overhauling immigration policies. Americans are justifiably proud of their history as a melting pot. But the melting is rarely painless or instantaneous. There are economic and cultural conflicts, which have sometimes slipped into ugliness and violence. The less skilled the immigrants, the worse their employment prospects, the bigger the burden on schools and the greater the demand for social services. It is common sense to favor better-educated immigrants. The present immigration laws (despite some preferences for skilled workers) generally don't.

If the campaign were about the future, these questions would be the center of attention. But of course, they're not.

There has been little candor. Indeed, immigration has hardly been discussed. All this makes perfect political sense. No one wants to see retirees—present or future—by threatening their benefits. Gore says Bush would reduce benefits; Bush retorts that Gore is trying to win on fear. Immigration is the same story. To suggest refashioning today's immigration policies might offend Latino, Asian, American or Arab-American voters.

So the inconvenient questions aren't asked or answered. Although this makes political sense, it may not bode well for the country. There are times when democratic societies need to accept small, unpleasant changes sooner to avoid larger and more disruptive changes later. In this campaign, the loudest silences concern a future that Americans refuse to face. One day, the silences may return to haunt us.

Barak wants end to violence

Ehud Barak

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak made an impassioned plea to Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat on Saturday to return to the negotiating table and stop the Palestinian-Israeli bloodshed for the sake of peace.

"I call on Yasser Arafat: Don't let the radicals lead you along the path of pain and suffering for both peoples. You are able to stop the deterioration and bloodshed," Barak said to the applause of more than 50,000 Israelis at a peace rally.

"From here, tonight, now I call on you to put an end to violence and stretch your hand to peace."

French food in spotlight due to mad cow scare

PARIS (AP) — The beloved cote de boeuf — a grand and delicious cut of beef savored by meat-eaters — faces an uncertain future in France, where fears over the deadly mad cow disease are reaching beyond farms and into schools, grocery stores and restaurants.

The Agriculture Ministry said Friday tests are being conducted to determine whether the sales of beef that include parts of the animal's vertebrae as a precaution against the human form of the disease, which has claimed the lives of 81 people in Britain.

Those cuts include T-bone and cote de boeuf, which is similar to the American standing rib and often served bloody rare with a touch of salt.

AFSSA, France's food safety agency, is conducting the tests and will forward a recommendation to the French Agriculture Ministry. The ultimate decision on imposing a ban rests with the nation's health, agriculture and consumer ministers.

"AFSSA is studying the problem," said a ministry spokesman who asked not to be named. "We are not about to ban it next week. The government won't take any action until there is scientific certainty."

of the brave, of respecting and implementing agreements," he said.

It was Barak's first such appeal to Arafat since Israel's 1993 Palestinian violence broke out more than five weeks ago. The violence has claimed close to 170 lives, most of them Palestinian, in the worst bloodshed since the sides began peace talks in 1993.

Meanwhile, the violence showed some signs of abating after President Clinton called the warring sides' leaders to Washington for talks in a bid to end the bloodshed. Both Barak and Arafat accepted the invitations for separate meetings, most likely to be held next week end, officials said Saturday. Despite the violence, Barak insisted that peace was the only option.

"Our vision is one of peace. Our path is clear and our vision is certain," he said.

Barak, surrounded by guards, addressed Israeli peace supporters who flocked to a rally marking the fifth anniversary of the assassination of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, the warrior who led his nation to accept the inevitability of peace with the Palestinians.

The demonstration on the former Kings of Israel Square in downtown Tel Aviv, now Rabin Square, was meant to send a strong message that Rabin's dream was not killed by the recent bloodshed.

Singapore Airlines offers settlement

TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — Families of people killed in the Singapore Airlines crash in Taiwan will each be offered $400,000, the airline said Saturday, a sum more than five times the amount the company is required to give in liability cases.

Under a steady drizzle, four busloads of victims' relatives were taken Saturday to the crash site at Chiang Kai-shek airport outside Taipei, where some knelt down and prayed, while others just stared at the heaps of metal that were once part of the Los Angeles-bound plane.

The compensation announcement came a day after the investigators said that the pilot of Flight 60006 mistakenly took off Tuesday night on a closed runway filled with construction equipment, including digging cranes and concrete blocks.

After colliding with objects on the airstrip, the Boeing 747-400 burst into flames and split into three pieces, killing 81 of the 179 people on board during bad weather caused by an approaching typhoon.

The airline had already offered $25,000 to the families of those who died and $5,000 to the injured to cover any immediate costs. The new $400,000 payment is separate from any earlier compensation.

This is a very sad situation, and the airline hopes to help families through this terrible period by offering compensation without delay," the company said in a statement.

Important Notice of Pendency of Class Action And Parents Patriae Consumers Suit Proposed Partial Settlement and Fairness Hearing

If you bought replacement contact lenses made by Johnson & Johnson Vision Products (Vistakon), Bausch & Lomb, or CIBA Vision at any time since January 1, 1988, please read this notice carefully: it may affect your rights.

Idaho Attorney General Alan G. Lance, private counsel acting on behalf of a certified nationwide class of consumers, and the Attorney Generals of 31 other States, have brought lawsuits pending in Jacksonville, Florida alleging that retail prices of replacement contact lenses were too high because certain lens manufacturers agreed with the American Optometric Association, in violation of the antitrust laws, that their lenses would only be available from eye care professionals or retail optical and mass merchandisers. The Court has not ruled on the merits of the allegations. Classes have been certified on behalf of consumers, except those who purchased replacement lenses while they were residents of either Georgia or Tennessee, who purchased replacement contact lenses made by Vistakon, Bausch & Lomb or CIBA Vision. Replacement lenses are those sold or dispensed to replace the initial lens. The classes consist of 1) a national class consisting of consumers in all states excepting Florida, Georgia and Tennessee, 2) a Florida class of residents represented by their Attorney General, and 3) the residents of thirty-one (31) States represented by their respective Attorneys General.

A proposed settlement on behalf of the class, residents of the 32 states and residents of Georgia and Tennessee has been reached with one of the defendants, CIBA Vision, with three principal components: (1) a $5 million, interest-bearing cash fund; (2) a Benefit Package consisting of coupons for various CIBA Vision products and a $35.00 cash rebate on the future purchase of certain CIBA Vision lenses; and (3) Injunctive relief. The decision whether to approve the settlement will be considered by the Court at a hearing which will take place on Tuesday, February 27, 2001, at 9:30 a.m. If you want to request exclusion from the class or the lawsuits or the proposed settlement, you must take timely action to exclude yourself. ## Sticks, Bricks, and Home Equity Loans.

Or, the Real Story Behind the Three Little Pigs.

Okay, so everybody has heard how the three little pigs were chased from straw house to stick house, and finally to brick house—where they were safe from the big bad wolf. But what you may not know is the third pig remodeled his home with bricks, sturdy doors, and a new natural gas fireplace thanks to a Fixed Rate Home Equity Loan from First Security.

Of course, getting the loan was easy. He received all of his money up front, he knew his exact monthly payment and when the loan would be paid off. When he asked about origination fees, we said, "Not by the hair of our chinny, chin, chins." And, because he had automatic payment from his First Security checking account and another account at First Security, he qualified for our lowest fixed rate, currently 9.5% APR*. Best of all, the loan might be tax deductible (consult your own tax advisor for details).

So the next time you're squealing for money for home improvements, to pay down debts, or to make the holidays a little brighter—don't huff and puff. Stop by your local First Security branch or call 1-800-LEND-FSB. And live a little more happily-ever-after.

I'm not ready for geezerhood

I got a letter from the AARP the other day.

How did they get my name? More to the point, how did they get my age?

The American Association of Retired Persons admits I'm heck, they eagerly recruit - folks 50 and older. I'm not eligible yet, but I'm close - and now I'm in a database.

Somehow to me that it's just a short shuffle from there on to the mailing lists for denture adhesives and burial plots.

There's a certain chronological imperative to the AARP - you qualify simply by maintaining a pulse. But what's more disturbing is what's impending AARP membership implies.

It implies that you're becoming your parents.

My mother was big on the AARP - Medicare was the issue when she turned 50. But she was also big on Tony Bennett, double-knit polyester and platform rockers.

And I find that those things appall me a lot less than they used to.

There was a famous "Saturday Night Live" sketch in which Julia Sweeney's thirtysomething character transmogrified into her mother right before her horrified husband's eyes.

"I'm going shopping for a pantsuit," she squeaked in her best hearing-impaired-senior-citizen falsetto. "Something really something with-it."

If you're under 50, I defy you to watch that scene without the hair on the back of your neck standing up.

And implicit in that fear, I think, is the sneaking suspicion that genetics always, always trumps good intentions.

Look no further than your family album. I'm betting that an impartial observer could very quickly find a dead-ringer for you among the faces of your superannuated kin.

And, some of those kids will clean out your attic and discover that passbook to your savings account that paid 2 percent interest. And those old bumper stickers will be a dead giveaway that you voted for Reagan before you were 23 years old.

"Don't care how long your sideburns or how tall your platform shoes once were. You're busted. You're Mom. You're Dad."

And I'm here this morning to warn you that it's an insidious process.

I was cleaning house the other Saturday and the towees were on the PBS station. The program had been half-watching ended and a re-run of "The Lawrence Welk Show" took its place.

Now any self-respecting Baby Boomer would have set a world record sprinting to change the channel, but I let it ride - through "Bubbles in the Wine" past a treacherous "Baby, It's Cold Outside" and into an all-star quarter's rendition of Jim Croce's "Bad, Bad Leroy Brown."

They butchered that streetwise bad like a hog in a rendering plant, but I found it incredibly compelling. After all, it takes a certain amount of courage to sing funk in a taffeta gown.

So I ended up watching the rest of the show, transfixed. It felt so, well, comfortable.

I kept telling myself that any minute, Dick Dale and MaryLu Metzger might break into hip-hop, but in my heart, I knew he left.

Compared to Lawrence Welk, Guy Lombardo played techno-fusion.

Yet by the time the credits rolled, I didn't care. God was in his heaven and Champagne Music was being beamed to the far corners of the cosmos - eternity in 3/4 time.

But don't tell my kids about this: Their eyes would roll, and I'd be forced to admit that the AARP has some pretty good ideas about Medicaid insurance.

I had occasion recently to visit an old neighbor of mine who now lives in an assisted-living center. He left some stuff in my garage when he moved, and I wanted to make sure he remembered it was still there.

It happened to be the noon hour, and fistfists and noodles were on the menu. He invited me to stay for lunch.

I did, but here's the troubling part: I went back for seconds.

Times-News features editor Steve Crump suspects that the word "hip" is not going to mean the same thing in 20 years from now as it did 20 years ago.

Speakers discuss Jarbidge

Chenoweth-Hage, others call it part of a larger picture

By Michael Journee
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Jarbidge Shovel Brigade sympathizers were told Saturday night that efforts by the U.S. Forest Service to close a dirt road near Jarbidge, Nev., is part of a much larger plan to erase the nation's sovereignty and individual rights.

U.S. Rep. Helen Chenoweth-Hage, R-Idaho, and globalization opponent Dr. Michael Coffman told the group of about 500 dinner guests the recent wrestling match over the South Canyon Road near Jarbidge, Nev., and other environmental and land use flash points are only a small part of a bigger struggle between globalization and local sovereignty.

"What you're seeing with the Jarbidge road is an attempt by the international community to control every life in every country," Coffman told the group over their $35 a plate prime rib dinners.

Coffman laid out his vision of a wide-ranging conspiracy by the United Nations and United States officials that since 1946 has been working to place the United States under the control of a world government using control of land and fear of degradation of the environment.

Chenoweth-Hage, an outspoken opponent of land use restrictions, told the group that the federal government's continued interest in restricting access to public lands is just a cover-up for gaining equity to pay the nation's debts.

"The nation's debt is much greater than has been admitted because of pension plans and other things, and the government has had to secure land as a collateral base for the debt we own," she said. "I don't say this in public much, but that's what's happening."

She also praised the Elko County Commission and the Shovel Brigade for its challenge to the federal government.

The group made national news this summer when they symbolically reclaimed and repaired a washed-out road formerly maintained by the U.S. Forest Service in the Humboldt-Toiyabe National Forest on July 4 and 5.

The brigade challenged the Forest Service's contention that the South Canyon Road was federal property, saying Elko County had possession of it well before the National Forest there was established.

Forest Service representatives and environmentalists say reestablishing the road would endanger the threatened bull trout in the Jarbidge River and said anyone who attempts to fix the road without proper permits will be doing so illegally.

Voting for the future

Bruce Newcomb, R-Burley, and Cella Gould, R-Buhl, were joined by their 4-year-old nephew, Sam Gould, at a Republican rally Saturday afternoon at Joslin Field, Magic Valley Regional Airport. Gov. Dirk Kempthorne and Sen. Mike Simpson spent the day traveling around the state drumming up support for local Republican candidates and Republican presidential candidate George W. Bush.

GOP urges voter turnout in Tuesday's election

By Ruth Streeter
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — At a seeming crossroads for Western lands, education and Social Security, Idaho's GOP leaders Saturday urged a strong Republican showing in what they say will be a pivotal election on Tuesday.

"This race truly is critical," Gov. Dirk Kempthorne told a Republican audience at a rally at Joslin Field, Magic Valley Regional Airport in one of several stops around the state Saturday.

He and others pushed Texas Gov. George W. Bush's approach to significant issues such as Social Security, education, state sovereignty and eliminating the death tax.

With crucial partisan issues expected to go before the U.S.

Supreme Court, Republicans cringe at the thought of Democratic Vice President Al Gore appointing up to three new justices.

"That ought to scare us and keep us awake (at night)," said Idaho Attorney General Al Lance. U.S. Congressman Mike Simpson, who is seeking re-election, said "this is one of those elections that can fundamentally change the future."

In what's expected to be the tightest race in history, Kempthorne challenged voters to cast the highest number of Republican votes in the nation.

Following the Twin Falls stop, Kempthorne and other GOP officials flew on to Boise, Lewiston and Coeur d'Alene.

While many of Idaho's Republican races are considered a sure thing, Bush's shot is at the presidency leaves fewer Republicans at ease.

"I'm really concerned, but I'm cautiously optimistic," said House Speaker Bruce Newcomb, R-Burley. "I think he's going to win the popular vote but I'm concerned about the electoral college."

Newcomb, who has been traveling and hadn't heard about Bush's recently publicized 24-year-old misdemeanor DUI conviction, considers the timing of the news in bad taste.

"I think that looks pretty trashy coming at this point," he said.

Many Republicans, including Kempthorne, think the revelation will have minimal impact on the election because Bush didn't duck the issue.

"I don't think it's going to have an effect because he was very straightforward" when the news broke, Kempthorne said. Kempthorne said the incident was significant 24 years ago but he commended Bush's candor once the offense was brought to light.

It was the issues that brought Republicans to Saturday's rally - issues involving public lands, family values, government morality and local and state sovereignty.

"I believe in what the Republicans believe in, and the candidates we have are great candidates," said Twin Falls County Republican Committee President Mike Matthews. "I think we're going to win all our races."

Workshop focuses on tourism

By Karen Bossick
Times-News correspondent

SUN VALLEY — Idaho could do itself a favor by focusing more attention on the international visitor market, one of the state's top tourism gurus told those attending a Idaho Department of Commerce Tourism 2000 workshop in Sun Valley this week.

Not only is the international tourist market growing more than its domestic counterpart but international tourists spend far more than domestic tourists, department spokesman Carl Wilgus said.

Latin Americans, for instance, go to Disney World in Orlando, Fla., and take home refrigerators as "souvenirs." Conversely, it's no secret that the huge Mall of America is located in Minnesota, near the Canadian border. Wilgus said. Canadians make up only 30 percent of the visitors to the mall but 60 percent of the sales.

Tapping into the international market could mean big bucks for Idaho, whose third leading industry is tourism. International tourism hedges against bad times, when a big company like Microsoft goes bankrupt, for instance, and regional tourism goes soft. It bolsters the economy without impacting resources. Foreign tourists enhance the vacation experience for domestic visitors and give locals a good feeling about their community. And Europeans, who get an average of five weeks of government-mandated vacation days and 16 mandated public holidays, often

911 dispatch centers struggle to keep their staff from leaving

By Ruth Streeter
Times-News writer

BURLEY — These people answer the most critical phone calls a person can make.

The unsung heroes of emergency services, 311 dispatchers are often hard to find and hard to keep. Since 1996, 16 Cassia County dispatchers have left their jobs, after an average tenure of about 20 months.

The sheriff's department doesn't track reasons people give for leaving, but it's often stress-related, Cassia County sheriff's Capt. Jim Hignens said.

"I've seen one of our dispatchers give instructions for CPR to a mother whose baby stopped breathing and then when it's all over, when the ambulance arrived, (the dispatcher) broke down and cried," Hignens said.

Some dispatchers resign because they don't like shift work. Others are unhappy with management, some have babies and others take higher-paying jobs elsewhere, Hignens said.

It's a job that Hignens says is more stressful than being a patrol deputy. Life often hangs in the balance while 911 dispatchers take crucial information and send help.

Former Cassia County dispatcher Ginger Pockel, who served the county from 1989 to 1994, said that as much as she enjoyed work, a physician advised her to quit.

"I wasn't one who could walk away and leave it at work," Pockel said.

Cassia County's dispatch center has jobs for eight dispatchers; seven are currently filled. Of those seven, the senior dispatcher has eight years' experience, but only two have worked more than 16 months. Four dispatchers have worked less than six months.

It's the same situation at SIR-COMM, the regional dispatch center for Twin Falls, Jerome, Gooding and Lincoln counties.

Woman launches Ride Share program

By Karen Bossick
Times-News correspondent

KETCHUM — Beth Callister realizes her agenda could make her one of the most unpopular people in the Wood River Valley.

But years from now, she could be heralded as the savior of the Wood River Valley for what she is about to do.

Callister, a fresh-scrubbed 27-year-old with a master's degree in transportation planning from the University of British Columbia, is about to launch a new Ride Share program in the Wood River Valley.

To help encourage commuters to share a ride, she is even suggesting that Ketchum charge for parking to get commuters to leave their cars at home.

"I may end up being the least popular person in town. But if you manage parking, you can manage a lot of transportation problems," she said. "People have to be responsible for the resources they use."

Callister's new Ride Share program kicks off from 6:30 to 9 a.m. Monday, Nov. 6 at Cucina Caffé on Main Street in Hailey. Callister will be giving potential carpoolers a free travel mug for driving up and signing up for a ride-match program.

Beth Callister, who rides her bike to work weather permitting, says the Wood River Valley needs a comprehensive traffic plan so fewer people need to commute from other towns.

Carpooling can benefit a person's health and pocketbook. Here are some interesting facts from "Divorce Your Car" by Beth Callister:

- Studies in Seattle and Switzerland showed cancer rates along busy roads to be two to nine times higher than those on quieter streets.

- Every tire on a car in use loses about a pound a year of rubber dust into the air, soil and water.

- Any more than 10 seconds of idling uses more fuel than shutting off and restarting the engine.

- For more information on carpooling, contact Wood River Ride Share at 725-0963 or e-mail Beth Callister at bcallister@svdnet.net.

"Ride sharing is a very small first step to relieving the congestion on Highway 75," she said. "It's not for everyone. But it's an easy way to move into place where you don't need an infrastructure."

Callister was visiting Sun Valley.

The oldest child of Alphonse Bergin and Ruth Pease Bergin, Joseph was born on April 25, 1923, just south of Bellevue at the family ranch in C. Idaho. He attended schools in Wendland and Bellevue, graduating from Bellevue High School in 1941. After high school, Joe pursued a technical education at the Intermountain Institute in Wiser, Idaho. ### Researchers: Global warming could increase wildfire risk

RENO, Nev. (AP) — Global warming could accelerate the spread of exotic plant species, crowding out native varieties and increasing the risk of devastating wildfires in Nevada and other arid regions of the West, a team of Nevada researchers says.

The six researchers from Nevada's higher education system released the findings of a three-year study in an article in the science journal Nature.

"Looking ahead it's just scary," said James Coleman, vice president of research and business development at the Reno-based Desert Research Institute. "We're talking about a massive change of that whole ecosystem."

At a facility near the Nevada Test Site in Southern Nevada, the team studied how desert vegetation would react to elevated levels of carbon dioxide expected in the atmosphere in 2050.

Scientists sprayed high concentrations of carbon dioxide — about 50 percent higher than what's now found in the air — across plots of desert plants.

The elevated levels of carbon dioxide accelerated growth of both native and non-native species as expected, but the growth of exotic grasses was particularly surprising, researchers said.

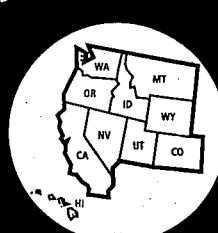

The non-native annual grass red brome experienced a more than twofold increase in production, far outpacing native desert plants.

The finding suggests that as emissions pour more carbon dioxide into the atmosphere in coming decades, red brome will spread readily across Southern Nevada while non-native cheatgrass will do the same in Northern Nevada, researchers said.

Impacts would range from the loss of native plants and the wildlife that depend on them to increasing wildfire danger.

Cheatgrass and red brome received much of the blame for Nevada's record 1999 fire season when 1.6 million acres were blackened. Wildland fires burned 650,000 acres in Nevada this season.

A tanker burns on Interstate 15 near Centerville, Utah, Saturday morning. The diesel fuel the tanker carried burned for several hours, stopping traffic in both directions for the majority of the day. Nobody was injured.

Gasoline tanker explodes after crash

CENTERVILLE, Utah (AP)—A tractor-trailer crashed Saturday on an urban stretch of Interstate 15, igniting the trailer's 7,000 gallons of unleaded gasoline in a massive fireball.

Authorities said there were no injuries. Northbound lanes were closed after the crash was reported at 9:44 a.m., some 10 miles north of Salt Lake City. The fire burned about five hours, state Highway Patrol spokesman Doug McCleve said.

Damage to the four-lane roadway was severe, extending some 600 feet from the charred remains of the trailer to blackened sound barriers and concrete lane barricades.

"It was a very big fire," McCleve said.

The driver told investigators the trailer fishtailed after he was cut off by a car but swerved to avoid a collision. The driver escaped from his truck and fled on foot shortly before the gasoline exploded.

Firefighters from South Davis County, Bountiful, Farmington and Salt Lake helped extinguish the flames. A truck came from the Salt Lake City airport to spray foam.

Residents within one mile were evacuated for just under an hour, McCleve said. They were allowed to return to their homes when authorities determined there were no burning toxins.

The freeway's southbound lanes were reopened after the flames were put out around 2 p.m., McCleve said. The northbound lanes remained closed late Saturday.

Council requires all households to own guns

SALT LAKE CITY (AP)—A tiny southern Utah town has passed an ordinance that requires every household to own a gun and ammunition so residents can protect themselves against aggressors.

Jay Lee, the Mayor of Virgin, a town of 350 people just north of the Arizona border, told KSL TV that most of the town's 350 residents already own firearms so there's lots of support for the initiative.

The town council passed the ordinance after residents expressed fear that their 2nd amendment right to bear arms was under fire.

The move has some Utah residents perplexed.

"The state legislature hasn't addressed guns on any basis," said Kim DeMille, of Utah's Safe to Learn, Safe to Worship Coalition, which is fighting to keep guns out of schools and churches. "I don't know why they would think their second amendment rights are being taken away."

Jurors to visit scene of double homicide

MOSCOW (AP) — After performing parts of jury selection behind closed doors in October, Judge John Stegner has decided to close another portion of a double murder trial from public view.

On Monday, the jury will visit the scene of the deaths of Donna Fontaine, 44, and her boyfriend, Fred Palahniuk, 59, in the southeast corner of Latah County.

In May 1999, the couple was shot and their bodies burned in a garage on property owned by Fontaine's brother, Gary Fontaine.

Donna Fontaine's ex-husband, Dale Carter-Shackelford, 38, is on trial in Latah County 2nd District Court for the murders and arson.

The jury is traveling to the site outside of Kendrick to see where the fire occurred and where the bodies and two guns were found. The jurors may also see where sheriff's deputies found Fontaine's truck and spent shotgun shells.

Stegner chose to close the visit to the public and the press for security reasons, he said Friday. The only people present will be the jury, the judge, the prosecution and defense attorneys and Dale Shackelford, Stegner said.

Sheriff's deputies in plain clothes will be nearby to maintain a security perimeter. The judge is allowing the jury to view evidence privately. Normally they would see evidence in an open courtroom where the public could watch.

Shackelford is charged two counts of first-degree murder and one each of first-degree arson, conspiring to commit murder and arson and preparing false evidence. He faces the death penalty if convicted of the murders.

Donna Fontaine was the only witness against Shackelford on a rape charge she lodged in Missouri for an incident that occurred shortly before the two were divorced in 1998. Authorities contend that is why Shackelford killed her. The pair met while Shackelford was serving a prison sentence for sodomy and Fontaine was teaching a junior college class for inmates.

He had been running a trucking business in Ironton, Mo., at the time of the murders, and a former employee has already admitted conspiring with him to murder Fontaine.

Also charged in the case are Shackelford's fiancée, Sonja Abitz, 31, of Kendrick, and her mother, Mary Abitz, 54, of Kendrick. Perjury charges against her father, John Abitz, 56, were dropped.

On Friday in court, Mary Abitz's brother, Ted Meske, who lives near the site bodies were found, testified that he heard gun shots on the day of the alleged murders.

Friday's court session concluded the first full week in Shackelford's trial. The attorneys have estimated that because of the complicated evidence and the number of witnesses, the trial could last another eight weeks.

IMPORTANT ISSUES

INDUSTRIAL CAFO'S

Twin Falls County has several large CAFO'S in operation and more under construction. There have already been extreme odor problems with some CAFO'S already in operation. Existing CAFO'S with problems need to be cleaned up before new permits or expansion is allowed. An inventory of available land and acceptable locations is needed before further expansion is allowed.

COUNTY BUDGET

Constant monitoring of the budget is needed to provide proper service to the residents of Twin Falls County. Cost cutting and new sources of revenue need to be explored. County fees need to be adjusted to keep up with inflation.

POLLUTION

We are seeing an increase of pollution of our air and water with the rapid growth in Twin Falls County. We must begin to address these problems before pollution becomes a serious problem. Once our water and air are polluted, it is very costly and sometimes impossible to correct the problem. Proper planning and regulations need to be implemented before problems become worse. We must make every effort to protect and preserve the beauty of Twin Falls County and the Magic Valley for future generations.

TRANSPORTATION &amp; FUTURE GROWTH

The need for another bridge over the Snake River to help with the increased flow of traffic in Twin Falls City is very evident. Alternate routes within the county need to be improved also. Proper planning for future growth is needed to insure a balance with industry, housing and agriculture.

Director tells story behind his movie

REXBURG (AP) — Directing a film takes a lot of heart. And money. And a few miracles along the way.

According to director Clay Essig, it also takes a willingness to dedicate your life to what you're doing.

"I make it a point not to have a second job. I see other directors who have a second job and that becomes their job. You have to give it your heart," said Essig, director of the film "Fortune Cookie."

The movie is one of more than a dozen full-length films that were screened at the three-day Family Favorites Film Festival, brought to the Upper Valley through the efforts of Robert Bratt, an Ashton-based film and documentary maker.

In its first year, the festival attracted more than 50 films, which were screened in Rexburg and Driggs last month.

"The toughest thing to do is to find good material to produce," Essig said. "Everyone has great ideas, but until it's in a script it doesn't do us any good."

The second-toughest thing, Essig said, is finding the money you need to put the script in front of the camera.

"We never did find the money," Essig said, laughing. "I mortgaged my house to the hilt and maxed out my credit cards."

And we rounded up talent. "Fortune Cookie" premiered a few years ago at the Hollywood Film Festival, where it received favorable reviews from Variety and the Hollywood Reporter, two major movie industry publications.

To coax a distributor into buying their film, Essig, now living in Salt Lake City, and producer Steve Thompson, a Logan, Utah, native, have taken the film to a number of film festivals across the United States.

After Essig graduated from the University of Southern California Film School, he immediately began searching for good material for his first post-school production. That search took him to Austin, Texas, where, through a roommate referral service, he met up with Rob Thomas, a novelist just finishing his first book.

"He's a brilliant writer. So I asked him if he'd ever thought about writing a screenplay."

Thomas hadn't, and told Essig quite frankly he was content with his budding career as a novelist.

"We lost touch," Essig said. "But a year later he tracked me down and said, 'I think I'm ready to write a script.'"

Hurricanes hammer Tech, ailing Vick

The Associated Press

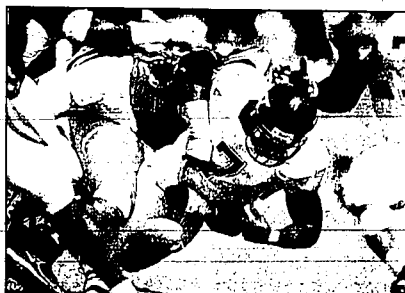

MIAMI — Whether he was healthy or hurt, No. 3 Miami was ready for Michael Vick. "We wanted to show him," linebacker Dan Morgan said, "that he wasn't going to work his magic against us." Hobbled by a sprained right ankle that limited him to 19 first-half plays, Vick sat on the bench with a white towel draped over his head in the second half and watched the Hurricanes beat No. 2 Virginia Tech 41-21 on Saturday.

"It was disappointing. This was a big game. It determined our season," Vick said. "It hurt me inside — deep inside." Ken Dorsey threw three long touchdown passes — two to Santana Moss — and James Jackson ran for 145 yards and a score as Miami (7-1, 4-0 Big East) took a giant step toward playing for the national championship back in the Orange Bowl on Jan. 3. Virginia Tech (8-1, 6-1) saw its 19-game regular-season winning streak end along with its bid to return to the title game. The Hokies were beaten 46-29 by Florida State in last season's championship game at the Sugar Bowl. In ending a five-game losing streak to Virginia Tech, Miami is poised to replace Virginia Tech at No. 2 in the AP media poll, while the Hurricanes hope to move up in the Bowl Championship Series standings, where they were in fifth place. The Hokies were second in the standings that will determine who plays in the BCS' title game. "Whatever they're going to do in the BCS, they're going to do," Miami defensive tackle Damione Lewis said.

Ferguson's 28 keys rout

By Kevin Hall
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — What a difference three days make. Looking very unlike the nation's No. 1 junior college team in Wednesday's staid, 102-70 win over the Northwest All-Stars, the College of Southern Idaho rebounded Saturday with a 117-57, dunk-punctuated pasting of overwhelmed Dawson Community College.

Playing a harassing, denial-type defense unseen throughout last season, the Eagles (2-0) produced an astounding 30 steals. Led by Ricky Clemens' six, every player except Jason Burns had at least one theft. By contrast, the Buccaneers (0-1) had only eight steals of CSI's 15 total turnovers.

"We played defense," said Southern Idaho head coach Derek Zeck. "Our defense is very, very quick — quick to the ball, quick to rotate, quick to help, quick to close out on shooters." The team hardly missed 7-foot centers Ben Eze, Kostas Avgerinos and Uche Okafor — the latter two were nursing injuries, and Eze was serving the second of a two-game suspension.

Making his season debut, sophomore forward Blandon Ferguson paced the Eagles with a game-high 28 points and seven rebounds. Freshman guard Tony Bobbitt scored 23 and Clemens chipped in with 16 while Marka Popovic added 13. J.C. Howe and Austin McCollough each had 10 points to lead Dawson.

Ferguson, who is battling the flu, said he was just looking for a strong start to the season.

"I just wanted to come out and play hard," he said. "Scoring, defense, rebounding, it didn't matter. I just wanted to play hard and show the fans what I can do."

What he and the rest of the Golden Eagles showed was a season's worth of spectacular slam dunks, catlike quickness in the open floor and a tenacity unmatched by the awestruck visitors from Glendive, Mont.

"They're very athletic and they're deep," said Dawson assistant coach Matt Preussery. They just kept coming after you off the bench. When you can do that and put the hustle into it like they did, you're going to accomplish a lot."

Southern Idaho's Blandon Ferguson dunks the ball during the first half of the Golden Eagles' 117-57 blowout of Glendive, Mont.'s Dawson Community College Saturday night.

Clemens, who added seven assists to his six steals and 16 points, said the team wanted to make up for its lackluster night against the All-Stars.

"Coach just wanted us to play hard and that's what we did," Clemens said. "We picked up the defense and today we got turnovers."

Eagles drop Dixie in three

Four sophomores say good-bye

By Joe Sunnen
The Times-News

TWIN FALLS — The College of Southern Idaho volleyball team ended its regular season in sweeping fashion Saturday.

For the third straight match, the Eagles downed their opponent in three games, this time defeating Dixie State College 15-6, 15-4, 15-6.

The win locked up second place in the Scenic West Athletic Conference for CSI and moved the team's overall record to 43-5, 11-2 in SWAC matches. Dixie fell to 9-23 (3-1 in conference).

The match also marked the last home contest for the Eagles' four sophomores. With flower bouquets in their arms and waves to the crowd, Kara Erickson, Kara Hymas, Tamekia Moore and Stephanie Martin bid farewell to the court they have called home. "They have won a lot of matches here over the last two years," CSI coach Ben Stroud said. "Hopefully they'll win the last one they play. Those kids are going to be hard to replace."

If one player were to be singled out as being the most difficult to replace, it might be Martin. The 6-foot-3 middle blocker has been steady as a rock for the Eagles this season, and Saturday's match was no exception. Martin led the team in blocks with six and chipped in six kills. She also added an assist, gathered two digs and was a major reason the Rebels finished with only 18 kills in the match.

"I wish this match would have been against a better team,"

Wolves advance to state semis

By John Derr

CASTLEFORD — With the wind howling at 30 miles an hour and rain pounding down, the Castleford and Carey high school football teams each lost a part of their offense.

The Wolves were unable to run the option with three fumbles in the first half. The Panthers found their potent passing game ineffective for much of the game.

So it came down to who controlled the line of scrimmage. And Castleford was able to dominate up front as the Wolves shut down Carey after falling behind early, earning a berth in the Class A-4, 8-man state semifinals with a 28-10 victory Saturday evening.

The Wolves (10-0) host Idaho City next weekend.

"We didn't play very good and are lucky to get out of here with a win," said Castleford coach Shawn Scow, whose team advances to the round of four for the second straight year. "It took us a while to wake up."

Elvis Medina: did most of the damage, finishing with an unofficial 257 yards rushing. Medina was quick to pass the credit to others.

"Our offensive line is the best in the state. They deserve the credit," Medina said. "The wind got to us a little and we weren't executing it, but we shut them down defensively."

After an afternoon that saw the Magic Valley covered in sunshine, almost on cue the clouds grew dark at the start of the game. The stadium lights flickered several times and some wondered how long they would last.

But the Panthers were not distracted early. They took the opening kickoff at their own 45 and started moving the ball. Quarterback Lee Cook found Jonathan Rivera for a 12-yard gain, and the two connected again for eight more moments later. However, a fumble ended their drive.

COLLEGE HOOPS PREVIEW

Season starts minus two familiar faces

The Associated Press

New coaches, new officiating, new NCAA tournament.

Changes are expected in college basketball, of course, but the 2000-01 season offers some of the most startling in recent years.

Bob Knight lost his temper one time too many, then lost his job as coach of Indiana after 29 seasons. And Bill Cartledge surprised North Carolina by retiring as coach after 33 years on the Tar Heels' sideline.

That's not all.

When the season tips off Thursday, referees will be calling games tighter to try to crack down on rough play. Some schools will be in different conferences, while others will have new coaches with familiar names. And the 318 Division I schools will all try to become part of the NCAA tournament's expanded field of 65.

Knight's reign at Indiana ended Sept. 10 after three national championships, 11 Big Ten titles and one broken zero-tolerance policy. His final run-in was with a freshman whom Knight grabbed and lectured for addressing the coach only by his last name. With 763 victories, 116 behind career leader Dean Smith, many believe Knight will return to coaching, but if he does it will be as the same old Bob Knight.

"I've always felt I've got to be me. I can't be something that someone's trying to construct," he said after being fired. "I try to be fair, try to be honest. My philosophy and approach to things is just different than some people and situations."

He was replaced by assistant Mike Davis, who steps into his first head coaching job trying to prove he's not Knight.

"One thing that's not going to happen this year is we aren't going to lose games in the last five minutes," Davis said. "In five of our nine losses last year we looked tired at the end. That's

TITLE GAME REVISITED

Broncos and Jets meet today for AFC rematch

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J.—Among the many tapes the New York Jets perused while preparing for today's game against Denver were films of the 1998 AFC title game. The viewing got Curtis Martin and Vinny Testaverde reminiscing.

The Jets' offensive stars aren't about to forget the 23-10 loss at Mile High Stadium that cost the team its first trip to the Super Bowl in three decades. Instead, the Broncos went on to their second straight NFL crown.

"We recognize that," said Martin, the Jets' versatile running back and main weapon. "It would be a lie to say one recognizes that when we watch film of that game. It is on our mind what they kept us from.

"It used to hurt. I think I'm over it now," Testaverde, who has struggled with errant throws despite his team's 6-2 start and his fourth-quarter heroics this year, also doesn't dwell on that defeat. But he doesn't ignore it, either.

"Man, we were so close in '98, that's the first thought," Testaverde said. "But once you turn on the film, it's a matter of breaking down their defense and trying to get ready for this game."

Corey Dillon did a masterful job of breaking down Denver's defense two weeks ago. Heading into a bye, the Broncos looked like they already had taken a Sunday "off," losing 31-21 at Cincinnati as Dillon set an NFL record with 278 yards rushing.

The Broncos (4-4) have had two weeks to stew. Quarterback Brian Griese was arrested under suspicion of driving under the influence of alcohol last week-end.

Denver is hopeful of getting back Terrell Davis, whose left foot and ankle were injured in an opening loss to St. Louis. He barely has played since, and rookie Mike Anderson has 676 yards rushing and five touchdowns.

"It is the line and the scheme and the running backs we have and the mentality we have," said Davis, who missed most of last season after tearing up his right knee vs. the Jets in Week 4. "When you buy into that philosophy, a back looks good when put into this system. Everything is all tied into one."

WACO, Texas (AP)—Josh Heupel passed for 313 yards and three touchdowns in the first half as the Sooners rocked Baylor 56-7.

With Heupel throwing against the Sooners' 104th-rated defense and Curtis Gandy catching two TD passes, the Sooners led 42-0 at halftime. Heupel also ran for a TD in the first quarter.

Oklahoma improved to 8-0 (5-0 in the Big 12).

No. 4 Florida St. 54, No. 10 Clemson 7—TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Chris Weinke threw for 521 yards, and Bobby Bowden kept his starters on the field well into the fourth quarter in his second coaching matchup against son Tommy Bowden.

The Seminoles (9-1, 7-0 ACC) improved to 37-0 in home conference games and clinched the title for the ninth straight time. The Seminoles had 771 yards, the most ever achieved by Clemson (82-6-2).

No. 5 Nebraska 56, Kansas 17—LINCOLN, Neb. — Eric Crouch became the first quarterback in Nebraska history, running for 127 yards on 15 carries to boost his career total to 2,152.

Crouch, who tied a school quarterback record with four touchdown runs and also threw for a score, broke the rushing record of 2,125 set by Steve Taylor.

No. 6 Florida 43, Vanderbilt 20—NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Rex Grossman survived some early mistakes to throw for a career-high 334 yards and two touchdowns. Florida (8-1, 6-1 SEC) also intercepted five passes en route to its 10th straight victory over Vanderbilt. The Gators will play No. 22 South Carolina next week for the SEC's Eastern Division title.

No. 7 Oregon 27, Washington St. 24—PULLMAN, Wash. — Josh Frankel kicked a career-best 47-yard field goal for Oregon's second consecutive overtime victory. After Frankel's kick, Jed Boice blocked Anoush Wilkison's 39-yard field goal attempt. The Ducks (8-1, 6-0 Pac-10) edged Arizona 56-35 in double overtime last week.

No. 8 Washington St. 35, Arizona 32—SEATTLE — Marques Tuiasoli scored on a 2-yard run with 1:10 left, and Anthony Vontour blocked Sean Keel's 51-yard field goal attempt as time ran out. Willie Hurst scored on a 65-yard run, and led the Huskies (8-1, 5-1 Pac-10) with 116 yards on eight carries.

No. 21 Northwestern 54, No. 12 Michigan 51—EVANSTON, Ill. — Northwestern's Zak Kuskoff threw an 11-yard touchdown pass to Sam Simmons with 20 seconds left. Michigan's Hayden Epstein attempted a 57-yard field goal on the last play, but the ball went through the hands of the holder.

Louisville 49.

No. 13 South Miss. 28, Hattiesburg 28—MISSISSIPPI — Dave Ragone ran for two touchdowns and threw for two more as Louisville beat Southern Mississippi. Jeff Kelly threw four interceptions as Southern Miss (6-2, 3-1 Conference USA) allowed more touchdowns (7) than it had in its first seven games (6).

No. 14 Oregon St. 38, California 32—BERKELEY, Calif. — Ken Simonson ran for 125 yards and three touchdowns to help Oregon State to its first 8-1 start. The nation's fifth-ranked rushing going into the game, Simonson ran 64 yards on his first carry to move to sixth in the Pacific-10 Conference's career rushing list.

No. 16 Ohio St. 27, Michigan St. 13—COLUMBUS, Ohio — Derek Combs ran for 153 yards and two touchdowns, and Michael Doss scored on a 73-yard fumble return. After giving up 115 yards in the first quarter, the Buckeyes (7-2, 4-2 Big Ten) allowed 96 yards in the final three periods.

No. 18 Mississippi St. 35, Kentucky 17—LEXINGTON, Ky. — Dilemon Miller and Dontae Walker each ran for more than 100 yards and a touchdown, and Mississippi State forced seven turnovers and returned two for scores. Miller carried 19 times for 117 yards and had an 11-yard touchdown run.

No. 19 Kansas St. 56, Iowa St. 10—MANHATTAN, Kan. — Josh Seeley ran for 149 yards and four touchdowns as Kansas State piled up 583 total yards. Kansas State (8-2, 4-2 Big 12), which had lost two of its last three games and tumbled 17 spots in AP poll, scored on five of its first seven possessions.

No. 20 Texas 29, Texas Tech 17—DALLAS, Texas — Hodges Mitchell ran for 229 yards and two touchdowns and Kris Stockton tied a school record with five field goals. Texas has won four straight games since the embarrassing 63-14 loss to top-ranked Oklahoma, which had 534 total yards, including 289 passing.

No. 24 Texas A&M 21, Oklahoma St. 16—STILLWATER, Okla. — Mark Farris threw for 246 yards and a touchdown, and Texas A&M stopped Oklahoma State at the 15 in the final minute. The Aggies (7-5, 1 Big 12) won their fourth straight to stay in the thick of the Big 12 South Division race.

Lion wide receiver Hume Moore is stunned: "Right now, if you ask me that it is well, or what is the identity of the Detroit Lions' offense, I would tell you, I know it's an offense that wants to be physical, but what is our forte? What is our bread and butter? What is it that we consistently do on a regular basis with teams here? What is it that we consistently do on a regular basis? Buffalo radio station WGR is asking listeners to get out the vote and make their choice to the man they want quarterbacking their beloved Bills, Doug Flutie or Rob Johnson. This they can do by taking the FLUTIE and JOHNSON signs printed by the station and planning them in their front yards.

Bears (1-7)

Bad news, Bears. Now you are being trashed by the 1959 Bears, who were also 1-7 on route to a 1-13 finish. "That '59 team would beat this year's Bears' team," 79-year-old Gale Sayers told the Chicago Sun-Times, suggesting he'd be a reason why. "Mainly because we had a running back on offense and a great linebacker in Dick Butkus on defense." Added Doug Flutie, linebacker, class of '69, "I'm not saying which is a sorry statement on the current team. Many of those '59 Bears are now pushing 60."

11 a.m. Line Indianapolis by 7.
The L.A. Times picks: Indianapolis. Jim Miller might help Bears while Wade McNamee is out, but kicking defense to slow down Colts is too much.

11 a.m.
Bucs (4-4)

Finally, Keyshawn Johnson put that mouth of his to good use. Last Wednesday, with a must-win game against Minnesota on the schedule, the Tampa Bay wide receiver paid a visit to Shaun King's home, on the theory that if you can't make the quarterback come to you, you then must go to the quarterback. "I told him to let 19 and 28 eat till they're full," Johnson said, referring to his jersey number and running back Warren Dunbar. Fresh out of cold cuts, King was at a loss, ready to give Domino's, until Johnson explained he meant the football.

The L.A. Times picks: Tampa Bay. After victory over Minnesota, Tampa Bay schedule plodders Buccaneers for second-half turnaround.

Eagles (5-4)

The Eagles kicked in running back Natrone Means, just released by Carolina, for a physical and a workout this week. But after a look-see, the coaching staff said thanks, but no. "I feel I still have something left," Means said. "It's just a matter of finding the right situation." Apparently, Tins running back Eddie George has been watching "Monty Python and the Holy Grail" instead of studying. In game films, Remember the never-the-less Black Knight in "The Holy Grail," cursing and yelling to fight on ("Just a flesh wound") at each of his limbs is lopped off. That's a real good thing.

11 a.m. Line Tennessee by 7.5.
The L.A. Times picks: Tennessee. Whatever it takes — defense, Eddie George, Steve McNair, spectacular returns — tough Titans usually find a way.

11 a.m.
Giants (6-2)

Might a rift be developing between the Browns' overrated defense and their point-very-40-minutes offense? "It's time for me to stop talking," cornerback Corey Fuller said after last Sunday's 23-10 loss to Cincinnati. "I tell you what I really want to tell you, they might cut me."

11 a.m.
49ers (2-7)

Steve Mariucci sees dead people. Well, not really dead, not in the literal sense. But the San Francisco coach sees the ghosts of other past, names such as Lawrence Phillips, Tommy Vardell and Gabe Wilkins, no longer on the 49er roster, but with salaries still counting against the team's current salary-cap allowance.

2:05 p.m.

Election Tuesday could be a long night for Al Gore and the Cardinals. In the last 15 presidential elections, it has been like clockwork. Denver quarterback Brian Griese's blood-alcohol level was mid-high last Saturday night — 0.149 percent, according to the Denver Post. That's the legal equivalent of a 200-pound man — Griese is 215 — drinking seven to 10 12-ounce bottles of beer, or six ounces of wine, in an hour. That's a lot of drinking. ## UIeakes out late win in Texas

After missing a 30-yard field goal at the beginning of the fourth quarter, he kicked a 21-yard field goal with four seconds left to give his team a 16-14 victory over North Texas on Saturday.

"I don't know if I won the game," Davis said. "I should have put it away earlier in the fourth quarter when I missed the field goal. Our offense did a good job of getting down the field and affording me the opportunity to make a play."

The play was set up by a 49-yard pass from John Welsh to Josh Jelmberg. Jelmberg caught the pass near the 15 and ran to 3. Only two minutes before Davis hit the game-winning field goal, the Eagles pulled ahead on Scott Hall's 60-yard touchdown pass to George Marshall.

His touchdown reception was his first reception of any kind since a 38-0 loss to UNLV on Sept. 16.

The Vandals (4-5, 2-1 Big West) started their six-play, 73-yard final drive with only 40 seconds remaining and no timeouts.

On the possession before the Vandals' final drive, North Texas decided to go for the first down instead of a field goal after Idaho turned the ball over on downs, but came up short of the four yards needed.

North Texas coach Darrell Dickey said a botched field goal in the second quarter swayed his decision.

"The thinking there was that we hadn't been good at snapping," Dickey said. "We did not want to take that chance. If we get the first down that game is over. If we did not make it, defensively we might be able to hold them and make them go 75 yards with no timeouts. They ended up exceeding expectations."

Idaho, which had 265 yards of total first-half offense to the Eagles' 66, finished with 469 yards to North Texas' 279.

Hall struggled in the first half for North Texas (2-7, 0-3) but finally was able to get an advantage of the Vandals' secondary, which had starting cornerbacks Cleavon Bradshaw and Doyal Semster kicked off the team for rule violations.

"We played well on defense, we only gave up one big play," Idaho coach Tom Cable said. "They weren't stopping us, but we kept shooting ourselves in the foot. Overall we just found a way to win in the end."

Bengal offense drops the ball

By Jared Ebon

Idaho State Journal

MISSOULA — How's this for a change? Idaho State went to Montana, played the third-ranked Grizzlies, and lost 38-21 despite wasn't necessary.

The Bengal defense, with the exception of a few big plays, brought its A-game to Washington-Grizzly Stadium, but got little support from the usually potent ISU offense.

The end result was Montana took advantage of great field position, timely big plays and a raucous crowd of 18,943 to hand the Bengals their fourth consecutive loss.

"I credit Idaho State," said Montana coach Joe Glenn. "They never gave up and played us about as tough as anybody this year."

Montana, normally one of the most powerful offenses in the nation, didn't exactly overwhelm the Bengals. They didn't exactly need to, though, as Idaho State (4-5 overall, 3-4 Big Sky) struggled to score early in the game from Miller to Oelkers made the score 21-0 less than a minute into the second quarter.

The Hendricks Show rolls over Indians

JONESBORO, Ark. (AP) — Bart Hendricks threw for three touchdowns and ran for a fourth Saturday to lead Boise State to a 42-14 Big West Conference victory over Arkansas State.

Hendricks completed 19-of-27 passes, with only one interception, for 291 yards.

The Broncos (7-2, 3-0 BWC) went up 21-0 before Arkansas State (0-10, 0-4) got on the board.

Brook Forester scored first on a 5-yard run in the opening period, followed by Hendricks' first scoring pass, 24 yards to Andre Banks.

Hendricks threw for another TD early in the second period, 4 yards to Davy Malayhong.

The Indians' first score came on a 4-yard pass from Glen Clemens to Jonathan Adams with 1:07 remaining before halftime, for a 21-7 lead by Boise State at intermission.

ASU closed within 7 points in the third quarter when Lemon threw to Alvin Powell for a touchdown on a play starting on Boise State's 20.

But the Broncos widened the gap with two touchdowns in the fourth — one on a Hendricks pass to Forester that was good for 79 yards, and the other on a 4-yard run by David Mikkil.

Hendricks added the final score for the visitors, keeping the Broncos in the Big West race with a 63-31 lead in the fourth quarter.

Forester led the Broncos' ground attack, rushing 33 times for 139 yards.

Adams was the big ground-gainer for ASU, with 69 yards in 17 carries. The Broncos' Lemon was 19-of-28 in the air for 219 yards.

PREVIEW

One of the charms of college basketball is that it always has been a sport of change. The usual slew of underclassmen left early for the NBA and coaches and players switched schools just like any other year. But the 2000-01 season features two of the biggest changes in decades: Bob Knight is no longer coaching at Indiana and Bill Guthridge has left North Carolina. Here is a look at the more notable coaching changes, top transfer talents and the games to watch in the NCAA men's 2000-01 season.

Coaching changes NEW LEADERS TO WATCH

Delaware
David Henderson steps in with no head coaching experience but neither did former Mike Krzyzewski assistant Tommy Amaker at Duke nor Quinn Snyder at Missouri.

Northwestern
Mike Carmody's gaudy 92-25 record in four seasons at Princeton is going to take a hit but it will be interesting to see if he keeps the same style in the Big Ten.

Memphis
John Calipari is back from the NBA and a basketball court city wants to get back into the national championship picture.

Indiana
Mike Davis' first head job will be under a microscope as he follows Bob Knight.

Illinois
Bill Self heads the season of a lifetime last year at Tulsa and he inherits a team here with a lot more talent.

Calipari
John Calipari is back from the NBA and a basketball court city wants to get back into the national championship picture.

Big games NON-CONFERENCE

Pepperdine at Indiana Nov. 14

This first-round Preseason NIT game will be Indiana's first without coach Bob Knight in charge and it also is a rematch of the last game he coached for the Hoosiers, a 20-point loss in the opening round of the NCAA tournament.

Temple at Memphis Nov. 17

Both teams have to win first-round games in the Preseason NIT, but if they do it's another chance for John Chaney and John Calipari to meet at a postgame news conference.

Illinois vs. Duke at Greensboro, N.C. Nov. 28

This is the premier matchup of the ACC-Big Ten Challenge.

Florida at Michigan State Dec. 6

Xavier at Cincinnati Dec. 14

This is one of the best intricately rivalries and Cincinnati will remember how the Xavier fans celebrated when the Musketeers beat the then-No. 1 Boacats last season.

Arizona vs. Illinois at Chicago Dec. 16

A week earlier Arizona will have played at Connecticut so those teams will be well-tested by this one.

Michigan State at Seton Hall Dec. 19

One of the games in the Jimmy V Classic pits two of the best freshman classes in the country.

College

not going to happen again." When Guthridge unexpectedly retired on June 30, it was assumed the job would stay in the Carolina family because just three men had been head coaches at North Carolina since 1952 — Frank McGuire, Smith and Guthridge. Former North Carolina assistant Roy Williams thought hard about moving from Kansas before deciding not to succeed Guthridge, who was 80-28 with two Final Four appearances in three seasons as head coach. Finally, the job went to Matt Doherty, a member of North Carolina's 1982 national championship team who was coming off his first season as head coach at Notre Dame.

"I just wanted someone who had played here or who had coached here to be the head coach because this is a special place," Doherty said. "Someone from the outside would not understand what it means to have played here. They don't understand the effort it takes to maintain the ties with the former players."

As for the officiating, the NCAA Men's Basketball Rules Committee has made it clear to the refs that rough play must be eliminated.

"This will be the most significant change in college basketball in 30 years," point shot was introduced," Big East commissioner Mike Tranghese said. "Coaches know what to expect and they've spent the preseason trying to convince players that more whistles and fouls are coming."

"This will be tough on everyone and the fans are going to react," Stanford coach Mike Montgomery said. "We're all going to be in this together. But there is one question that players are getting too rough. The rules are there, the officials just aren't calling the game."

Fifty schools have new coaches, two of whom have the same names as coaches who won national championships. John Thompson III took over for Bill Carmody at Princeton and doesn't appear worried about comparisons with his father, who was the coach at Georgetown for 27 years and won the national championship in 1984.

"I've been at John Thompson's son for 34 years now and I've grown used to being John Thompson's son," he said. Nolan Richardson III, an assistant to his father when Arkansas won the national championship in 1994, credited him when he took the head coaching job at Tennessee State.

"He opened doors. He gave me the opportunities. Now I have to do it," the 35-year-old Richardson said. Elsewhere, Virginia Tech is one of several schools to move to another conference, switching to the Big East. Middle Tennessee State, New Mexico State and North Texas went to the Sun Belt, and Nevada moved to the Western Athletic Conference.

Those schools, along with every other one, will have a slightly better chance at getting into the NCAA tournament, which added a game and a team to its field of 64.

The additional team will be invited because 31 conferences have qualified for automatic bids (the Mountain West gets its first and the WAC gets its back). The rules call for 34 at-large teams, so that means 65 total.

The champions of the two lowest-ranked conferences, according to the computer rankings, will meet the Tuesday after Selection Sunday, with the winner playing a No. 1 seeded team when the tournament begins. The two schools in the opening round will receive full tournament shares and be considered part of the field.

Defending national champion Michigan State starts the season with the longest winning streak, 11 games, while Utah's 52-game home winning streak is the longest. The Coaches vs. Cancer Classic starts it all Thursday night in New York with Kansas playing UCLA and Kentucky facing St. John's.

Woods dusts Duval for share of lead

ATLANTA (AP) — Each round of the Tour Championship brings out a new rival for Tiger Woods. The only ones who matter are not at East Lake Golf Club, but in the record books.

And Woods is only 18 holes away from joining them. After knocking down the flags and then getting a few good bounces out of the trees, Woods blew away David Duval on Saturday and finished with a 4-under 66, giving him a share of the lead with Masters champion Vijay Singh.

A victory Sunday — and Woods has won 19 straight PGA Tour events when leading after 54 holes — would put him in the books with Byron Nelson, Ben Hogan and Sam Snead as the only players to win 10 times in one year.

"I moved up in the standings, and that's the whole idea," Woods said.

Despite a three-putt from about 30 feet on No. 17, Woods finished tied with Singh at 10-under 200 on an East Lake course that was softened slightly by afternoon showers.

Woods and Singh share at least one thing in common. Both can post a good score and complain about it. Singh might have had reason Saturday, missing only one green and a lot of birdie chances in his round of 65. "I'm disappointed with a 65 — how about that?" Singh said.

Phil Mickelson saved par on the last two holes with putts of 20 and 12 feet and also had a bogey-free 65 to finish one stroke out of the lead. The only other player who can keep the final round from becoming a three-man race is Ernie Els.

He bogeyed the 18th for a 68 and was four strokes out of the lead. "It will be a fun day for a few guys," Mickelson said.

There's rarely a dull moment when Woods is involved. Three of his first four birdies came from inside 18 inches, including an 8-iron that nearly went in the hole on the par-3 sixth. Even his bad shots were interesting — two on the back nine bounced through the trees and into the first cut of rough, away from danger.

Healthy and inspired by playing in the final group with Woods, he floundered on the back nine and wound up with a 74, dropping him seven shots out of the lead.

"I didn't get many breaks today," Duval said. "I got an awful lot of breaks for a long time a few years ago, but this year a lot of breaks haven't gone my way."

He was paired with Woods for the sixth time in their careers, and Woods has outplayed him on the last five occasions.

Next up for Woods is Singh, and they also have some baggage. Two weeks ago in the Presidents Cup, Singh's caddy had "Tiger Who?" stitched into the back of his cap for their singles match, which Woods won, 2 and 1.

Singh joked that he would fire caddy Paul Tesori if he did the same thing today.

"My goal is to go out and win tomorrow," Singh said. "If I hit the ball like I am and make some putts, nobody is going to beat me."

Watson makes run at Senior Championship

MURRELLS INLET, S.C. (AP) — Tom Watson, a wisecracking veteran on the Senior PGA Tour, says he doesn't look back at his amazing career. But for a few holes Saturday, Watson happily took everyone back to his championship days with a feat he had never accomplished.

"I've had some pretty good play and streaks, and some pretty good putting streaks," said Watson, who had six straight birdies on the back nine and stood two strokes off the lead at the Senior Tour Championships. "And I made six birdies in a row, which is the most I've ever made. So there's a first for Watson here."

It's hard to think that one of golf's greatest with eight majors hadn't ever had a better stretch before. "I've been 8-under after 10 and 7-under after eight, but I've never had six in a row," Watson said. And it brought to life a Grand Stand gallery and season-ending golf tournament that needed a kick of personality. Leonard Thompson, who grabbed the lead at 14-under with his second straight 66, was asked — If Watson's awakening worried him for Sunday.

"He's only won, what, 12 majors, $42 million? Why would he have an advantage? He's one of the best players ever," Thompson said with a bit of sarcasm. "I've always said if you're going to win a golf tournament, why not win when the best are there? And he is one of the best, one of the best who has ever been."

Lowery is steady on soft SFBC greens

MADISON, Miss. — Steve Lowery shot a 65 on Saturday, leaving him 20-under par after three rounds and extending his lead to three strokes at the Southern Farm Bureau Classic.

The 40-year-old Lowery doubts he'll be able to coast to his second career PGA victory.

"It doesn't look like you can play conservative and win," he said. Soft greens, made even softer by intermittent rain the past three days, and little wind have left the par-72, 7,199-yard course at Annandale Golf Club defenseless against the field. The average round has been 69.8 through three rounds. There have been 1,426 birdies and just 630 bogeys. Fred Funk moved into contention with a third-round 4, placing him in a tie for second with Kenny Perry and Billy Andrade at 17-under 199.

Gustafson maintains share of Mizuno lead

OTSU, Japan — Vicki Goetze-Ackerman, seeking her first LPGA victory, fired a career-best 6-under-par 66 Saturday to share a one-shot lead with Sophie Gustafson entering the final round of the Mizuno Classic. Goetze-Ackerman, who last won as a mini-tour player in 1994, was tied at 9-under-par 135. Gustafson, a Swede tied for

Tiznow upstages Fu Peg at Breeders'

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — The Breeders' Cup Classic was supposed to be a farewell party for Kentucky Derby hero Fusaichi Pegasus, who will now stand at stud. In the end, it looked as if he hadn't even been invited.

Tiznow was the horse of the moment for jockey Chris McCarron in the $4.77 million race Saturday at Churchill Downs, while Fusaichi Pegasus was never in contention and finished sixth. Tiznow ($20.40) led a four-horse parade of 3-year-olds home, finishing a neck ahead of England-based Giant's Causeway, who was 3 1/4 lengths in front of Captain Steve.

Albert the Great finished fourth ahead of 4-year-old Lemon Drop Kid. Cur Thiel, last year's upset Classic winner, was seventh in the 13-horse field.

"I thought he was as good as a horse could be," said winning trainer Jay R. Zayat. "He was a Macho Uno who was numero uno in the juvenile and faces the jinx of this race's winner — never winning the Kentucky Derby."

The Breeders' Cup program opened with a shock when trainer B. Wayne Lukas finished 1-2 with Spain ($113.80) and Surfside ($9.20) in the Distaff. Ribolotta, Tiznow, with Chris McCarron up, outpaces Giant's Causeway to win the Breeders' Cup Classic Saturday at Churchill Downs in Louisville, Ky.

the odds-on favorite who had won six straight stakes and was supplemented to the race for $400,000, finished seventh in nine-horse. Last year's winner, Beautiful Pleasure, finished sixth. There also was a big upset in the juvenile fillies when Caressing won and paid $96.

The next three winners were War Chant ($9), who won a four-horse blanket finish in the Mile on the grass; Kona Gold ($5.40), who won the six-furlong Sprint in a stalling 1:07 3/5; and Perfect Sing. Tiznow led for the first half mile, but was second, a length behind Albert the Great, with a half mile remaining. He was back in front at the quarterpole. Then Giant's Causeway, making his dirt track debut with Michael Kinane aboard, looked as if he was going to pass Tiznow. If fact, he might have stuck his nose in front nearing the finish, but Tiznow would not be denied.

"He kicked in," said McCarron, winning his fourth Classic. "If he has enough energy left, you're not going to get by him. What a fighter." A crowd of 76,043 watched Tiznow win in 2:00.35 and earn $2,480,400 for his fifth victory in nine starts this year. The day wasn't a complete loss for Fusaichi Pegasus' trainer Neil Drysdale. He won the Mile with War Chant.

Two-time winners return to NY

NEW YORK (AP) — To Tega Lorupe, "New York is like home. It's like family." Gerardo Silva has the same feeling because of the way New Yorkers have adored him. New Yorkers began embracing the two marathoners 1994. That year, Silva won the New York City Marathon despite making a wrong turn heading toward the finish in Central Park and Lorupe won the women's division in her marathon debut, becoming the first female African winner of a major 26.2-mile race.

A year later, they repeated as champions. Since then, Lorupe has run the New York City Marathon three times and Silva twice. "They felt like two little kids when they stood on either side of me," race director Allan Steinfield said of the awards ceremony when Lorupe and Silva were champions. "New York has adopted them."

Lorupe, now the world record-holder, again heads the women's field for today's race, the 25th through the city's five boroughs, and Silva is among the top men's contenders. "I would love to see a repeat of '94 and '95," Steinfield said. "That would be a three-peat, although not in a row."

Lorupe's most difficult competition is expected from defending champion Adriana Fernandez of Mexico, 1998 winner Franca Fiacconi of Italy, and 1992 Olympic silver medalist and 1996 bronze medalist Yuko Arimori of Japan.

A look at their lives

jobs of ag workers

By Virginia S. Hutchins
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS—Almost half of irrigators in Idaho farm fields are paid by the pipe, or by the line.

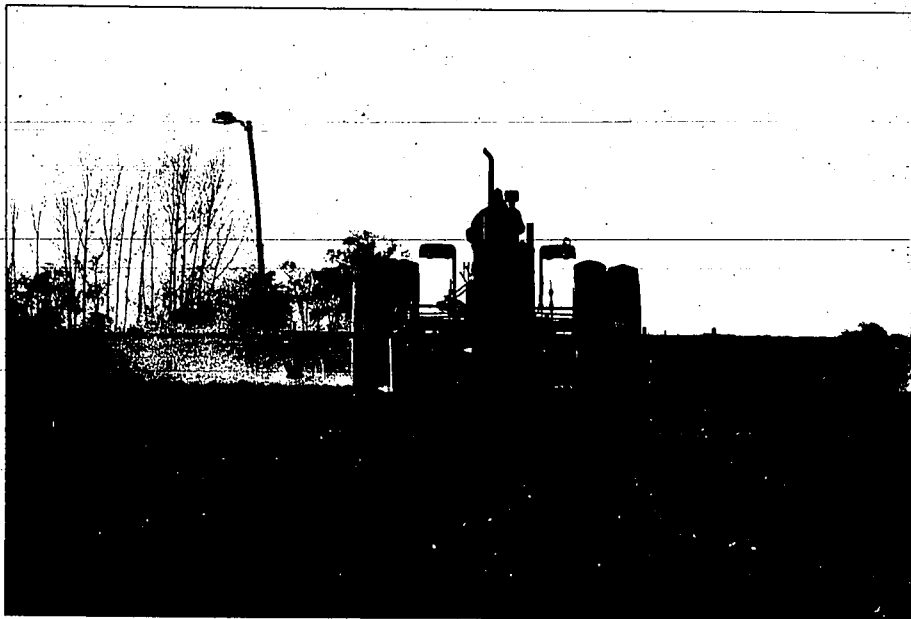

Sheepherders on average work more than 12 hours a day to fulfill their responsibilities for flocks on mountain pastures or desert ranges.

Only a tiny percentage of the state's farmworkers in diversified crops earn less than the federal minimum wage of $5.15 per hour. Those are among the preliminary conclusions in the Idaho Department of Labor's just-released survey of agricultural wages and practices.

In the department's Twin Falls office—as elsewhere in the state—employment services workers who deal with migrant and farm laborers started work at 5 or 6 every morning for a few weeks in June, conducting telephone interviews with farmers and their workers, and visiting work sites to gather data from both types of sources.

It's the first time in a long time the department has studied the farm sector so extensively. In the Magic Valley alone—not including Minicassia—the Labor Department talked to 165 farmers and probably a couple of hundred workers, said Greg Rogers, the department's Magic Valley labor market analyst.

"They tried to get as many as they could, but they wanted to get a representative sample, as well, of 10 percent" of the work force, he added.

Ira Bryant digs irrigation furrows in an 18-acre field of winter wheat south of Twin Falls. The Idaho Department of Labor has released a new preliminary study which examines the amounts farmworkers are paid.

Published here in six boxes are the Labor Department's findings for six occupational categories. For the benefit of readers who never have sheared a sheep, started a field sprinkler or hoed a row, we have included detailed descriptions of some farmworkers' daily tasks.

The preliminary report—which the department's Boise spokesman said should be released in its final version in a month or so—was a direct result of the Legislature's consideration of minimum-wage regulations for farmworkers.

"We wanted to get good data so the Legislature could be as well informed as possible," Rogers said.

But lawmakers aren't likely to be the only ones interested.

TWIN FALLS - At an isolated nuclear research lab in the New Mexico desert, scientists simulated a nuclear meltdown last month by pumping the heart of a nuclear reactor full of gas and heating it until it popped like a balloon.

Researchers at the U.S. Department of Energy's Sandia National Laboratories tested a heavy steel dome that holds the uranium core after a meltdown.

op better computer models of how pressure vessels react during reactor-core meltdowns.

"It was pretty dramatic," said Larry Humphries, one of the principal researchers, in a Wired News report. "It was glowing cherry red."

"It's a very energetic release when it finally goes," Humphries said. "It was a pretty loud bang."

Humphries was born in Twin Falls and is a graduate of Buhl High School.

Over the next year, the researchers will perform similar experiments with five other pressure vessels. Each experiment will simulate a different type of accident and potential response by plant managers.

The Sandia labs are a few miles outside Albuquerque, N.M. The labs were established in 1949 as an offshoot of the Manhattan Project, which developed the first nuclear weapon. Sandia is charged with developing and maintaining the U.S. nuclear arsenal and supporting the nuclear energy industry.

Idaho agency puts on workshops for landlords

BURLEY - Current or potential landlords in southwest Idaho are invited to a free landlord workshop in Burley or Twin Falls sponsored by the Idaho Housing and Finance Association.

The Burley workshop will be held from 10 a.m. to noon Nov. 14 at the Burley Public Meeting Hall, 1401 Overland.

The Twin Falls workshop will be held from 2 to 4 p.m. Nov. 14 at the KMYT Community Room, 1100 Blue Lakes Blvd. N.

Seating is limited at both events. To attend, reserve space by calling the IHFA's Twin Falls office at 734-8531.

Lisa Stevens, IHFA Rental Assistance manager, will discuss the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development's new lead-based paint regulations that went into effect Sept. 15 for all Section 8 units. These new regulations are much more stringent than past regulations regarding lead-based paint and are part of a nationwide effort to stop lead poisoning of the nation's children, the Idaho association said. These changes affect all federally owned residential property and housing receiving federal assistance.

At the Burley workshop only, an Idaho State Police representative will address the dangers and repercussions of having a meth lab on your property. Julie Williams, IHFA vice president of Community Housing Services, said "Meth labs have become a serious threat to communities statewide. Landlords and property owners need to know what action to take when a meth lab is discovered on their property. They may be surprised at their scope of financial responsibility."

IHFA administers Section 8 programs on behalf of HUD in 34 of Idaho's 44 counties. Last fiscal year, IHFA administered more than $8 million in Housing Assistance Payments to participating landlords in the Section 8 program. This benefits more than 2,400 low-income households each month.

To be eligible for rental assistance, households must qualify under HUD income limits and pay 30 percent of their adjusted gross monthly income for rent and utilities.

IHFA's four branch offices, in Coeur d'Alene, Lewiston, Twin Falls and Idaho Falls, administer the Section 8 program. Landlord workshops are coordinated semi-annually by each office.

Shepherd

Occupation description: Hard sheep — encompassing total care of flocks on mountain pastures or desert ranges.

Survey sample: An estimated 60 employees are within the shepherd occupation. This survey sampled about 70 percent of the total employee population. Peak activity occurs in early spring or late summer, but due to inaccessibility of many sheep camps, the optimal time for interviewing employees is early spring. Before flocks are moved, data was collected from March 27 to April 1, by mail with telephone follow-up.

Wages: It is estimated shepherders work on average more than 12 hours per day to accomplish the shepherding responsibilities. The average wage is $17.00 per hour, ranging from $5.00 to $1.650 per month. Most shepherders are paid below the federal minimum wage; that finding is based on the hours worked, which are extremely difficult to define.

Bonus: While 32.3 percent do not receive bonus pay, 7.7 percent do receive bonuses from $100 to $1,200 per year.

Wages given do not reflect other compensation.

Transportation: A full 100 percent of the workers pay their own transportation; 56.4 percent of these, however, do receive transportation compensation but are required to pay back the employer.

Meals: Among employers, 62.25 percent supply food, while 17.5 percent have their employees pay for their own food.

Workers

Many Magic Valley employers, particularly in the service sector, seem to use farm and other agricultural incomes as a reference point for the wages those employers pay for unskilled or semi-skilled work in entry-level jobs, Rogers said. Local business and civic leaders, too, need to know what individual farmworkers are earning, he added.

The Labor Department itself will use the 2000 surveys as a benchmark to build a more accurate database of wage information on Idaho farmworkers, he said. Rogers will use the surveys' insights on the state's farm economy to help him gauge the Magic Valley's overall economic health.

Even before this report, Rogers thought the majority of farmworkers make more than minimum wage.

"Really, it didn't surprise us," he said.

One drawback, he added, is the difficulty in calculating what piece-rate workers actually earn in an hour.

Sheep shearer

Occupation description: Shears ewes, lambs and bucks. Peak activity is in early spring; however, some activity is reported in the fall at higher altitudes.

Survey sample: Idaho has around 12 employers employing close to 35 domestic sheep shearers. This survey sampled about 66.67 percent of the total employee population, which includes independent sheep shearers who work alone. Data was collected from April 24 to May 5 by mail, with telephone follow-up.

Wages: For shearing lambs, average pay is $1.54 per head. For ewes,

Wages given do not reflect other compensation.

Housing: Among sheep shearers, 100 percent are provided with housing.

Transportation: Of the shearers, 100 percent are provided with daily transportation to the place of work.

POINT OF LAW

By Tom Kershaw

Question: I came up the stairs from my basement the other day and found two police officers standing inside my kitchen door. They said they had a warrant to search my house for bank records, and they showed me a piece of paper.

I told them to go ahead and search. In the course of this search they discovered, in my gun cabinet, a shotgun which is illegal because the barrel is too short. I am now charged with a crime. I later discovered that the name and address on the warrant were those of the next door neighbor. What can I do?

Answer: Generally, your house can only be searched if you give consent, or if there is a warrant signed by a judge who is convinced that there is evidence of a crime to be found. The warrant must accurately describe the place to be searched and the items for which the search may be made. The police officers must announce their identity and intention, and be refused admittance before they break into an outer or inner door.

Once inside, the police may search only for those items listed on the warrant. If they see evidence of other crimes in "plain view," those items may be seized and used as evidence.

In your case, the warrant was invalid, the police may have failed to announce themselves and your consent was obtained by showing you the invalid warrant. For these and other reasons, the evidence was illegally seized and cannot be used against you. The charge will have to be dismissed. You should get rid of the gun.

Survey uncovers woes of wealth

The Associated Press

Everybody should be lucky enough to have such problems: A new survey finds many individuals with a net worth between $1 million and $4 million do not feel wealthy, merely "comfortable."

In 1,275 online interviews conducted with millionaires, respondents defined wealth as one or two financial steps above their existing net worth, according to Yankelovich Partners Inc., which conducted the survey for Phoenix Home Life Mutual Insurance Co.

Just 9 percent of these high net-worth individuals described themselves as "wealthy." Forty-six percent said they feel "very comfortable" and 43 percent said they feel "comfortable."

Among other woes, these well-off individuals said they feel time-deprived and concerned about the potential harm their monetary success might have on the work ethic of their children.

When asked what it would take to feel wealthy, respondents replied: $5 million.

Losing to supply and demand — again

By Julie Pence.
Ag Weekly correspondent

RUPERT — Mountains of spuds have besieged southern Idaho. And it's a fair bet they'll diminish but they won't disappear entirely by harvest 2001.

"We're still selling potatoes from last year, and it will definitely happen again next year," said the head of marketing and development for Rolland Jones, Doug Jones. Rolland Jones, based in Rupert, is a family-owned company with several businesses. One business handles fresh pack and two others process potatoes into flakes and hash browns.

Jones said Idaho's acreage for 2000 is probably up from last year by 5 percent — or about 20,000 acres — and because Mother Nature was so kind, yields are up about 15 percent. The combination has glutted the open market.

In fact, Jones confirmed rumors that some farmers aren't even hitherto, to harvest because oversupply has driven prices down to record lows.

"We're estimating that some 10-15 million hundredweight are left in the ground (in Idaho) or won't find a home," he said.

As snow and rain immersed the Mini-Cassia area in mud mid-week, Jones said he is sure the few local fields not dug would remain undisturbed. With open-market potatoes currently selling for between 50 cents and $1.50 per hundredweight and storage getting tight, farmers view the effort as a waste of time.

Potato growers report higher yields, lower prices

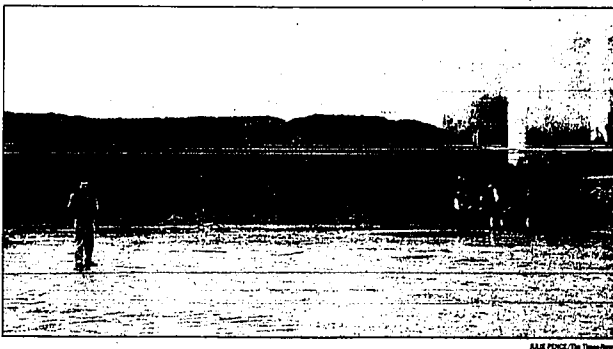

BLACKFOOT — As the 2000 harvest draws to a close, the Potato Growers of Idaho reports yields are up yet again.

"Yields on spuds are up a bit this year. Overall it looks like a good crop," said University of Idaho extension educator for Hingham County, Brian Finnigan.

In the Gooding, Burley and Tuba Falls areas, yields are up by 10 percent, with about 98 percent of the crop out of the ground. In Bonanza, Jefferson, Power, Bingham, and Bannock Counties, yields are up overall, though individual yields are all over the scale.

Perfect weather turned out pretty close to perfect in most areas, though rain did cause delay harvest near American

Twenty-five-foot mounds of potatoes tower above Doug Jones of Rolland Jones Potatoes in Rupert. Every year for the last six, the plant has been forced to store potatoes outside, but this year's piles are the largest yet, Jones said. Outside storage is always a sign of low prices, he said.

Farmbeat
Highlights of this week's Magic Valley Ag Weekly, The Times-News' weekly report on agriculture.

Falls by three days, and by as much as a week near Idaho Falls and Jefferson County, Thompson said.

Cold temperatures at night meant some late starts for harvest crews all over southeastern Idaho, but the delays seem to have had little impact on harvest results.

In spite of another good crop, grower returns continue to be down.

According to the Idaho State Department of Agriculture Statistics Service, process grade potatoes are returning about $4.50 cents per hundredweight to growers, compared to $4.80 in September 1999. Fresh potato prices are even worse, sitting at $2.90 compared to $4.90 last year.

Rough potatoes might not make it in fresh market

BLACKFOOT — Thanks to a hot, dry summer, potatoes are coming out of the ground a bit bumpy.

Roughness is being seen in fields all over, particularly in southeastern Idaho, according to the Potato Growers of Idaho.

"There's quite a bit of roughness out there, which appears to be a factor of the hot weather this year and not being able to keep enough water on," said PGI Communication Director John Thompson.

According to University of Idaho Cooperative Extension educator for Bingham County Brian Finnigan, roughness is caused by rapid growth in tubers that stops and then restarts again.

With this summer's high heat, dry weather, as well as a late summer cold snap followed by a return of warm temperatures, rough potatoes are not a surprise, said U of I potato expert Bill Bohl. However, he disagrees that there is more roughness than usual.

"My impression is it is a nice crop. There may be some roughness in some select fields, but in any year you find a whole range of problems because of local conditions. I don't think there is anything widespread this year," he said.

Rough potatoes are not typically usable on the fresh market, which requires a smoother tuber. While they can be used for processing, fry makers usually knock down the price to compensate for the extra work involved whitening off bumps so potatoes can run through machinery.

"Roughness really affects quality on the fresh market. Processors might do some discounting because there is more prep work needed," Finnigan said.

Investigation into Canadian trading practices widens

BOISE — Action taken to protect wheat entering the United States from Canada has developed into an investigation of Canadian trade practices.

The U.S. Trade Representative announced last week that the office is investigating marketing practices of the Canadian Wheat Board and its sale of wheat in the United States and third-country markets at prices below the cost of production. The investigation is in response to a petition from the North Dakota Wheat Commission and the urging of other agriculture and trade groups.

Idaho grain farmers, although not directly involved in the fight, are watching closely.

"We're very supportive," said Steve Johnson, executive director of the Idaho Grain Producers Association. While dumping wheat prompted the complaints, the secrecy of the Canadian Wheat Board seems to have caught the U.S. Trade Representative's attention. Some buyers of U.S. wheat have told U.S. grain buyers that the Canadian Wheat Board does not tender a bid, just offers to pay $5 to $7 per ton less than the U.S. bid.

If that's true, "it's not really a fair way to do business on the international market," Johnson said.

Deals remain amid rising fares

Knight Ridder News Service

Travelers trying to book flights for the upcoming holidays can expect fares that, on average, are 13 percent higher than last year, according to a study by AAA.

However, deals are out there for consumers willing to do some research and juggle their schedules.

"You need to be flexible," said AAA spokeswoman Colleen Healey. Healey blamed most of the increases on higher fuel prices.

The AAA study, which looked at 20 major U.S. destinations, found that air travel is up 6 percent this year with planes flying more than 72 percent full.

The cost of tickets on routes such as San Francisco to Los Angeles and Philadelphia to Miami are up more than 40 percent.

Healey said travelers can usually find the best rates by avoiding peak travel days before and after Thanksgiving and Christmas Q the two busiest air travel periods of the year.

On the Net

For a list of their Web sites, try www.airlines.com. You can also find links to Internet sites that offer discounted plane tickets on the travel guide at [Willis-Barre/Scranton/airport's Web site](http://Willis-Barre/Scranton/airport's Web site), www.flyvnp.com.

For finding the best airfares, the federal Aviation Consumer Protection Division also advises: percent Asking the ticketing agent what the lowest fare is and what you need to do to qualify for it.

Some discounts are blocked out during holiday periods, and others have an advance-purchase requirement.

For example, if you are flying to southeast Florida and plan to rent a car, you might not care whether you land in Miami or Ft. Lauderdale.

Many agents do not charge a fee, they draw a commission from the airlines, and some have special deals with particular airlines.

Man loses money, but won't face drug charges in Utah

ST. GEORGE, Utah (AP) — In December 1998, St. George police seized a judge later forfeited $983 from a man after a drug dog indicated the cash had recently been near controlled substances.

According to court records, Washington County Drug Task Force officers got a warrant to search Falandors Lee Burris after they had heard that he was taking methamphetamine to St. George for sale. Officers didn't find any drugs, but they did find $983 in Burris' pants pocket.

A drug dog smelled the odor of controlled substances on the money, officers said.

When officers asked Burris about the cash, he said it was from his paycheck, but his last paycheck was only for $300 and his year-to-date earnings were $14,000.

Because the drug dog indicated the money had recently been near drugs and because the man couldn't explain where it came from, police seized the cash.

Overseas voters get help via the Net

SALT LAKE CITY (AP)—When you're defending freedom, voting can be such a headache.

In past elections, absentee ballots cast by military personnel overseas have spent so much time in the mail that by the time clerks get them, the votes have already been tallied and winners decided.

But a program being tested Tuesday may chart a course for on-line absentee voting in future elections, ensuring overseas voters aren't disenfranchised.

"For our military people, I think this is wonderful, because just breaks my heart" when ballots don't get counted because of delays, said Pat Hollarn, supervisor of elections for Okaloosa County, Fla., one of five jurisdictions taking part in the test.

Weber County, Utah; Dallas County, Texas; Orange County, Fla. and South Carolina are also taking part. South Carolina was in a unique situation since its voter registration is done statewide,

"I'm real excited about it. I think its a great project," said Marti Taylor, who is overseeing the project for the South Carolina Elections Commission.

Absentee ballots are already trickling into South Carolina, Florida and Utah from overseas soldiers, sailors and airmen. Applications were taken for as many a 200 volunteers interested in participating, although a good deal of the spots are going unfilled. Organizers won't know how many people participated in the project for several more days.

In Dallas County, only two people now stationed in Turkey will be voting because Texas law only lets military personnel in combat

Sure you're up to senior citizenship?

One evening, my husband and I went out to dinner with two other couples. We were in a brand new van, but the inside lights wouldn't go off when we closed the doors. At the first stop light, all of us started opening and closing our doors, in search of the problem.

Suddenly someone said, "I bet people think we're trying to play that fire drill game like the teen-agers do, except we're too old to run around the car."

It was just a joke. We can still run. Really!

From what I'm reading, my generation of Baby Boomers (those 76 million Americans born between 1946 and 1964) are tackling the senior years with the same kind of bulldozer enthusiasm with which we have faced down the other stages of life.

Midriff bulges and wrinkles? None for us, thank you.

Just about any magazine on today's racks is fully capable of telling us how to look and feel younger. Get your rest and exercise, eat sensibly, give up the cigarettes, sign up for flu shots.

All of us want to die at age 88 on the tennis courts, a gerontology professor was once quoted as saying. The Baby Boomers all seem to think it's possible.

But until last week, when I read about a new book titled "Aging Defiantly," I hadn't heard anyone speak out quite so bluntly about the need to attack the culture of aging in America.

The authors of the book, Richard and Peggy Purdie, have been married for 50 years and have six children and almost every conceivable problem of aging. They also have masters degrees from Columbia University.

Twenty years ago, the Purdies decided they wanted to get old defiantly and they set out to do just that. They also set out to spread the word to others.

When I first read about their book, I wasn't sure about it. I mean, I'm prone to feeling huge amounts of anger over most stuff, and I always thought that was a good thing. I wondered how mad I would have to get to age defiantly.

But I don't think it's like that. In their book, the Purdies share their findings about the mental and physical ills of aging and they say that most of these are only tendencies, not inevitable reality. They further contend that the tendencies are susceptible to defensive measures that defy society's expectations.

The book is being sold at www.superbooks.com, if you want to know more. In today's world, it just might become a best-seller.

Already, by striking a blow to the process of aging miserably, our society has upped the life expectancy from 48 in 1900 to 79 in 1986. And the National Institute on Aging is projecting that the number will top 91 by the year 2040.

In addition to that, the Baby Boomers have emerged as the most affluent, best educated and healthiest generation in the nation's history. In fact, according to the American Association of Retired Persons, the group of people who started turning 50 on Jan. 1, 1996, are now in the process of rewriting the entire story of aging.

So, what's up? Here in the trenches of life. Are we getting older or are we getting better?

I am old enough to remember when there were no pantofoles, or gasoline credit cards. And I've noticed that terms like "Medicare eligibility" and "senior citizen discount" have begun to creep into my vocabulary. But I don't feel old. Not most days, anyway.

Three years ago, on my husband's birthday, he asked for a gift certificate for golf lessons. At the time, I thought of the request as his concession to getting older, and finally deciding to stop playing softball because everyone kept telling him people his age shouldn't slide.

But I also thought it was his way of facing the future and choosing to keep on having fun.

Now, I guess I should think of this sort of thing as a middle-aged wife's battle cry -- as in, "CHARGE! If we have to go out, we'll go out with a hole in one!"

It would just seem so much more convincing if they would carry their own golf clubs.

TWIN FALLS — "In Japan, a single test taken in high school can determine whether you get the opportunity to push the envelope for the rest of your life. Or push a broom.

And it occurred to Albertson College of Idaho dean of admissions Dennis Bergvall the other day that things aren't completely different in the United States. "I was having lunch with some Japanese students here, and they were describing what they had to go through to get into college," Bergvall said in a telephone interview from his Caldwell office. "And I thought, 'This sounds kind of familiar.'"

It's Bergvall's job to pore over college admissions test scores — the Scholastic Aptitude Test and the ACT, formerly the American College Test. The vast majority of college-bound Americans take one, the other or both sometimes during their junior and senior years in high school.

Do well on the tests, and you'll find that college is a buyer's market. Do poorly and, well, your options get limited.

"These are not make-or-break tests in terms of getting into college," Bergvall said. "For any one who applies to college there are probably at least a dozen different alternatives that would fit. But in terms of getting the schools you want, these scores

Sample questions

SAT
This type of question consists of two quantities, one in Column A and one in Column B. You are to compare the two quantities and decide on the choice that best describes how the two quantities compare. A symbol that appears in both columns represents the same thing. Letters such as x, y, and z stand for real numbers.

Column A	Column B
$x + y$	$y + z$

1. The quantity in Column A is greater
2. The quantity in Column B is greater
3. The two quantities are equal
4. The relationship cannot be determined are important.

"College is competitive," he added. "So is life."

"If you graduate from high school with acceptable grades, an aptitude test score probably won't determine whether or not you get into college," said Dan Davenport, dean of admissions and financial aid at the University of Idaho. "We don't use the scores by themselves. But they are used for placement purposes, and they can be important in deciding who gets scholarships."

Autumn is the hurricane season for college aptitude testing, and Carolyn Watts is at its vortex. As a counselor at Twin Falls High School, it's part of her job to help students prepare to take the tests — and to deal with the consequences.

"There is a lot of stress on students over these tests," she said.

ACT
Solve each problem and choose the correct answer. You are permitted to use a calculator on this test.

1. Which of the following is divisible by 3 (with no remainder)?

A. 2,725
B. 4,210
C. 4,482
D. 6,203
E. 8,105

2. Which of the following statements completely describes the solution set for  $3(x - 4) = 3x - 12$ ?

F.  $x = 3$  only
G.  $x = 0$  only
H.  $x = -12$  only
J. There are no solutions for x.

K. All real numbers are solutions for x.

"Students want to get into the best college they can, and they put a lot of pressure on themselves."

Although an entire industry exists offering help in preparing for the ACT and SAT, Watts is a firm believer that students can't cram for these tests.

"I think the quality and the breadth of the classes you take in high school is the most important thing in doing well on the ACT and the SAT," she said. "Do you have the math background? The English? The science? These tests measure what you know, and you can't learn it all in a couple of weeks."

The ACT — a four-section test of that knowledge — predominates in Idaho, largely because the state's four-year colleges used to require it exclusively. Three-fifths of graduating Idaho seniors take the ACT, on average. Locally, only one in 20 takes the two-section (it measures math and English skills) Scholastic Aptitude Test, but the SAT is required by many colleges nationwide — and especially by highly selective universities.

Kalinda Brown, valedictorian at Buhl High School last year and a freshman at the University of Notre Dame, found the tests fair, by in large.

"They measure different things," she said in a telephone interview from South Bend, Ind. "Do they reflect what you've learned in high school? I think they probably do."

Both the ACT and the SAT had their critics among a dozen current and former Magic Valley high school students interviewed for this story.

"It's not really fair," said Twin Falls High School senior Chris Kolouch, who began taking the ACT in his junior year. "A test doesn't really represent what you've learned in high school. And it really hurts if you don't take tests well."

But Bergvall and Davenport say that smart kids who do poorly on the ACT and SAT aren't hard to spot, once you look at a high school transcript of their grades.

"Sometimes, a mediocre ACT or SAT score and good high school grades tells you this is a student who works hard," Bergvall said.

Although Albertson College is selective — a 20 composite score on the ACT, 500 on each section of the SAT as a minimum requirement — Bergvall said test scores are often trumped by other factors in the admissions process.

"Is there a math class on that transcript beyond / algebra II? Please see TEST, Page E2

Teens hope for killer SAT score

The Orange County Register

COSTA MESA, Calif. — A few weeks from now, Chardonne Mota will be sitting in a desk holding the weight of her world. A No. 2 pencil.

She'll be taking the Scholastic Aptitude Test.

For the Costa Mesa 17-year-old and millions of college-bound teens, the future rides on the SAT.

You want to go to a four-year university? Take the SAT. You want to go to a prestigious four-year university? Score high on the SAT. You want to score higher? Keep taking it.

Three grueling hours of multiple choice. Math and verbal. Chardonne knows she needs to do better than the 1220 she scored last year if she wants to get into the college of her dreams — the University of California at Berkeley — or any of the other places she plans to apply: Harvard, Yale, Stanford.

She is all of 14, an exceptional student who started reading by the time she was 2, skipped two grades, and will graduate from high school two months after she turns 16.

Her mother, a paralegal, raised Chardonne alone until she married five years ago. She didn't push her only child. Still, there was never any question about going to college.

For all that, Chardonne is just like any other high school junior when it comes to the SAT: hoping for a killer score.

How to avoid hyper-parenting Etc...

• Limit activities. Weigh benefits against cost — time, energy, stress and expense — to you, your child and your family.

• Be unproductive. A life of endless activities demonstrates to our children that we expect them to be hyperactive workaholics. Spend unproductive time together — shooting hoops, taking walks, playing games, sitting and talking, reading. The fact that you enjoy spending time with your children with no apparent goal tells them you find them interesting. Nothing bolsters self-esteem more.

• Trust yourself. Don't believe the experts who tell you they know how you ought to raise your child. In the words of Dr. Benjamin Spock, "Trust yourself. You know more than you think you do."

My mother and the potato masher

"He is the best physician who is the most ingenious inspirer of hope."

— Samuel Taylor Coleridge

By Patricia Bunin

"You won't be forgetting to bring the potato masher, will you?" I said to my mother on the phone after telling her I had to have a mastectomy. Even at age 82 and 3,000 miles away on a long-distance line, she knew exactly what I meant: soupy mashed potatoes. This was the last she had made for any illness or mishap of my childhood — served in a soup bowl with a nice, round spoon. But I had been lucky as a child and was rarely sick. Most often the potato masher soothed disappointment or nourished a mild cold. This time I was seriously ill. Arriving on the midnight plane from Tigrina, Mom looked fresh as a daisy when she walked through the front door of my home in California the day after I came home from the hospital. I could barely keep my eyes open, but the last thing I saw before I fell asleep was Mom unzipping her carefully packed suitcase and taking out her 60-year-old potato masher — the one she received as a shower gift, with the worn, wooden handle and the years of memories. She was mashing potatoes in my kitchen the day I told her fearfully that I would have to undergo chemotherapy. She put the masher down and looked me squarely in the eye. "I'll stay with you, however long it takes," she told me. "There is nothing more important I have to do in my life than help you get well." I had always thought I was the stubborn one in my family, but in the five months that followed, I saw that I came by my trait honestly. Mom had decided that I would not pre-decease her. She simply would not have it. She took me on daily walks even when I couldn't get any farther than my driveway. She crushed the pills I had to take and put them in jam, because even in middle age, with a grown daughter of my own, I couldn't swallow pills any better than when I was a child. When my hair started to fall out, she bought me cute hats. She was down, I must have been a mess. She never let me see it. And, in the end, I got well. I went back to my writing. I have discovered that Mother's Day doesn't happen some Sunday in May but every day you are lucky enough to have a mother around to love you.

'Pay It Forward' celebrates kindness

Chicago Tribune

In the new Kevin Spacey movie "Pay It Forward," a sad-eyed seventh-grader in Las Vegas comes up with a mathematical formula for spreading kindness. He even plots it on the blackboard. If he did a good deed for three people, helping them accomplish something they couldn't do on their own, and they each "paid it forward" by doing a good turn for three other people, the acts of kindness would multiply and gather momentum. That first good deed would be a lone pebble that pings down a mountain and sets in motion a thundering avalanche. You don't pay back a good deed. You pay it forward. Whether that makes you want to roll your eyes or go out and do good depends on your view of the world. With its high concept and melodramatic ending, set to the lyrics of "Calling All Angels," the movie seems designed to be a call to action, a cousin to what sometimes is called the Random Acts of Kindness movement. But the funny thing about the Random Acts of Kindness movement, though: It's not so random. Consider this month's oxymoron of planned spontaneity: the Sixth Annual Random Acts of Kindness Week. Sixth annual? A designated week? (Today through Saturday.) Sounds more like planned kindness than random kindness. Perhaps it is a sign of the times that efforts to promote individual acts of kindness are organized to the point that we have the Pay It Forward Foundation, the Random Acts of Kindness Foundation, and Kindness Inc., another non-profit promoting demonstrations of kindness. All were formed within the last several years.

Like child's play, simple acts of kindness would seem to be the kind of natural, even impulsive, thing that is immune from being scheduled, organized, institutionalized. Isn't this just something people take it upon themselves to do for their neighbors, their relatives, the occasional stranger on the train? But then look at how, in just a few generations, modern life has transformed play from spontaneous pick-up ball on the corner to kids' soccer leagues and play dates. "Earlier generations did this just out of normal, everyday courtesy and they didn't have to be told about committing an act of kindness," said Chuck Wall, a business professor and leading proponent of the acts-of-kindness movement. "A neighbor needed help, you helped," Wall said. "It has (become) more difficult because we live almost anonymously in very densely populated communities. We don't even know our neighbors ... People don't reach out like they used to to help each other."

Wall garnered national attention in 1993, when he assigned his business class at Bakersfield College in California to go out and commit "senseless acts of kindness" and then write about the experience. The assignment struck a chord and made the news. "I was like, 'I'm blind, got the idea while listening to the radio. When a newscaster reported another "act of senseless violence," Wall wondered what would happen if he substituted "kindness" for "violence" that question. In the time, Oprah Winfrey caught the fever and had Wall on the show to spread his message to her millions. Popular books by other authors promoted similar ideas. It remains to be seen what new "pay-it-forward" projects are in the offing. Some schools already have taken up the idea.

Test

Are there four years of English and three years of foreign language in many years of science are there, and what kind? These things tell you a lot about a kid. The U of S slips test scores into the admission equation when students apply with less than a B average from high school. "We use them on a sliding scale," Davenport said. "But we look at a lot of different things. How active has this student been in school activities? How have their grades changed from the ninth grade through the senior year?" Both agree that picking college students can be a subjective process — one in which an objective measurement such as ACT and SAT scores can provide at best part of the picture. "Are SAT and ACT scores a good predictor of how a student will do in college? Yes," Bergvall said. "But not as good a predictor as high school grades."

the first time in their junior years. In the case of the SAT, there's a preliminary exam — the PSAT — offered to juniors to get them used to the SAT. And although SAT and ACT preparatory courses of the kind that abound on the Internet can significantly boost a score, according to Bergvall, they aren't necessarily a guarantee of success. In fact, college admissions counselors can sometimes get an inkling that scores have been artificially inflated by the commercial ACT and SAT prep techniques. "There's really no substitute for knowledge in doing well on these tests," Watts said. Read enough about the tests to know what to expect, they advise. Then sharpen enough No. 2 pencils, relax and trust your instincts. "These tests measure what you know on a day of your life," Bergvall said. "If it turns out to be a bad day, it's not the end of the world."

'Bedazzled' is aimed at teens and adults

The Orange County Register

"Bedazzled" (PG-13) — The Orpheum of Twin Falls, Century Cinema of Burley. Best for: Mature teens to adults. What it's about: Elliot Richards (Brendan Fraser) is a goofy office worker who is an outcast with his co-workers, until he meets the devil (Elizabeth Hurley) who grants him seven wishes in exchange for Elliot's soul. Every wish takes him on a journey pursuing fame, riches, power, emotional sensitivity, physical and mental superiority and ultimately his love, Alison (Frances O'Connor). Miriam Shor, Orlando Jones, Paul Adelstein and Toby Huss. The good: Hurley is perfectly gorgeous as the devil incarnate. In the end, her explanation of God and the devil, good and evil, and how all of us have the ability to "choose whom we will serve" rings with truth. Even though this isn't as light as the original 1967 "Bedazzled" with Dudley Moore, there's a balanced message that's entertaining and convincing. The not-so-good: Since this is a comedy about selling your soul, there's an abundance of innuendoes, funny dialogue and mature jokes adults will "get." There are no sexual situations, no nudity, minimal comic violence but lots of adult themes. If Fraser wants to be "well endowed" to please women, a gay lover confronts Fraser, a female sports reporter tries to peek at a towel-dressed player that may be too mature for kids but OK for more mature teens. Offensive language: Dialogue insinuating a desire for sex, references to body parts, comedic scenarios between Fraser and O'Connor. Sexual situations: None. Violence: Drug lords battle each other with guns. Parental advisory: This is a comedy aimed at teens and adults who will understand the mature themes. Entertainment value: B

Family flicks

How to cover the gap in insurance

Chicago Tribune

CHICAGO — Tony Metcalf basically is bypassing college, and his mother couldn't be prouder. A graduate of Zion-Benton High School this year at 17, Tony has begun a machinist apprenticeship that in four years will launch him into a profession that, according to job-market observer J. Michael Farr, has increasingly difficulty finding qualified workers. "This is something he really likes," Mary Metcalf said. "I'm glad he found something he enjoys. There's a lot of call for it now. The average age of a machinist is in the 50s."

She had seen this coming since he was a mechanically inclined youngster, and she saw no reason to fight him about going to college. Well spoken and with an obvious sense of direction, he will be doing some college work, he said, but only what is necessary to get his machinist certificate in four years, time during which he is being paid by his employer to learn. "I'm not stupid. I've been in accelerated classes since my freshman year," he said. "But just because you have a degree doesn't mean you get a job." "I got into the trade because I'm a real gearhead. I wanted to build my own car parts and get into the custom car field." That's not to say he won't change direction someday. With more schooling later in life, "I could slide right into mechanical engineering," he explained. Tony Metcalf would seem to represent something of an anomaly in today's educational climate of college first, college last, college forever.

Yet he certainly is not alone among Americans who either do not attend college, postpone it or pick and choose from what it has to offer. Only about one-fourth of students who began post-secondary education in the 1989-90 academic year received a bachelor's degree or higher by 1994, according to a survey by the College Board, a national, not-for-profit association of universities and other educational organizations. More broadly, only 24.4 percent of Americans 25 and older had completed a bachelor's degree or more by 1998, according to the U.S. Census Bureau. If the child is excluded from the policy, there are a couple of options. If the child is going to work in a service program such as AmeriCorps, the organization provides health insurance. Too, the child may be eligible for insurance within other groups, Coorsh said, such as B'nai B'rith or the Knights of Columbus. "Last year, you may be able to buy an individual health insurance policy for the child. A sampling on Quotemath.com for an 18-year-old male showed premiums ranging from $55 to $172 a month with a $250 deductible. Prices for a female range from $10 to $25 more per month. This is due to increased risks and costs associated with the childbearing years," Coorsh said.

Chalk up fascination to imagination

Q. My 5-year-old son has a fascination with pregnancy. He has been putting pillows in his clothing in order to appear pregnant. Last night, I found him asleep in bed with a big orange bouncy ball kangaroo toy under his nightshirt and clutching a doll. Should I be concerned?

A. This is, admittedly, a new one on me. I did a search of the literature and was unable to find any research or even theoretical writings on the subject of little boys who pretend to be pregnant. Since I think it unlikely that your son has invented a hitherto unknown psychological disorder (Pregnancy Envy?), I'm confident you can chalk this up to a very vivid imagination. Your description of the most recent incident, however, caused me to think that perhaps he is actually pretending to be a pregnant kangaroo.

Still, this should only be considered a problem if he begins bounding around the house and wanting to box with other members of the family.

Around this age, children begin to realize that human life has a beginning and an end. Lacking the sophistication of language necessary to pose some of their questions, they often "act out" their curiosity in baffling and sometimes exasperating ways (i.e., playing "doctor"). Parents can, and sometimes do, make mountains out of molehills by overreacting to this sort of creative innocence. In the final analysis, orange bouncy balls under nightshirts are no more indicative of psychological problems than games of "you show me yours and I'll show you mine."

PARENTING

Your concern reflects the tendency on the part of today's parents to attribute esoteric psychological causes to behaviors that do not fit some preconceived notion of what is "normal." In this fashion, parents often scare themselves witless worrying about things that deserve nothing more than a chuckle. The fact is, sometimes a young child will do something for no reason at all other than it occurred to him to do it, in which case, the "something" in question means nothing at all.

The problem, of course, is that today's parents trust "experts" more than they trust their own common sense, and we experts have roped our rapt audience into believing that "parenting" is a science of sorts, or at the least, a perilous process fraught with psychological pitfalls. As a consequence, it is the rare person today who is truly appreciative of the innocence and simplicity of a child and in possession of a full measure of common sense and intuition where children are concerned. As regards creative, imaginative, fantasy-oriented behavior of the sort you describe, the proper question is rarely "What does it mean?" but rather "What, if anything, should I do?" And by the way, if no answer to the latter question poses to mind, then it may be best to do nothing, to take an old-fashioned "wait and see." Left alone, most behavior of this sort will run its course in due time.

In the case of your son's fantasies, my suggestion is you do nothing except have a camera ready for the next time a precious, priceless example of pregnancy envy or wallaby wannabe occurs.

Dogs prefer the dirty, disgusting scents

Each morning, our black Labrador retriever Sirloin accompanies my wife Teresa and I on our walk to the horse barn. While we carry a cup of coffee, Sirloin usually carries a toy, a tree branch or something dead in his mouth.

Once we get to the barn, Sirloin is ready to top off his rummy tank with some canine haute cuisine and routinely dives head first into a fresh pile of horse dung. After cleansing his palate, he then flops down and rolls around as if he has a really bad itch on his back and the horse apples are a bed of nails.

The menu at Cafe McMurtus features dead mice, dead birds, assorted dung, the skeletal remains of various forest animals, and, oh yeah, his regular course of Science Diet Maintenance. I understand that these dietary indiscretions might freak some people out, but having lived on a ranch my whole life, I have thought of them as kind of cute.

Until recently that is, when Sirloin went too far in his journey to smell hell.

Early one morning, I glanced out the kitchen window and noticed Sirloin gnawing on something black and furry. At first I thought it was just one of his toys. Later, while on my way to take son to school, I walked over to investigate. As I approached, Sirloin abandoned his snack and raced over to greet me wiggling with delight. He jumped up and

Marty

gave me a wet kiss. While this type of greeting is routine, this time his breath was revolting. Instantly, I smelled skunk.

Sirloin then ran ahead and retrieved his newest chew toy. It was a rotten skunk carcass teeming with maggots. Let me tell you, it was enough to turn even the cast iron stomach of this veteran veterinarian.

As I ran off in horror, Sirloin followed. It was as if he were thinking, "Aren't ya proud of me, dad? Isn't this just the neatest thing I've ever brought home?" Sirloin of course, didn't think the dead skunk stunk - to him it was just another sample of Ken-nel No. 5.

While veterinary behaviorists aren't sure why dogs like to roll in stinky stuff and eat rotten things, others believe that pets are marking themselves with their most prized possessions and seeking to impress of their two-legged and four-legged friends.

It's like wearing he's Olympic gold medals when he rolls in horse poop or skunk stink; it's being a furry-Fabio with a big gold chain around his neck and the shirt unbuttoned to below the rib cage. Weasels stinky stuff is designer labels for pets.

Dogs not only have millions more scent receptors than we do, they are polar opposites from their human companions when it comes to choosing scents that attract rather than repel. While we humans like aromas that are fresh, floral and fragrant, our dogs prefer the dirty, dead and disgusting.

Just as Teresa enjoys dabbling herself with a favorite perfume, Sirloin enjoys dousing himself with his favorite scent - skunk. Teresa puts on perfume to impress her friends. Sirloin puts on barnyard bouquet to impress his friends, too.

Forget trying to prevent your dog from Dumpster diving or digging up dinner. To you it's disgusting, to them, it's divine. With thousands of years of practice, dogs will continue to go boldly where no man, or woman, has gone before on their journey to find the scent-sational.

Paranoia strikes deep in parents' hearts

The Orange County Register

Maybe fear is why the most gut-wrenching numbers a parent can see - the statistics of childhood death - are a lot less scary than they were only a generation ago.

The big four of childhood mortality - car wrecks, drownings, malignancies, murder - are all less likely to take a child's life today than they were in the early 1980s. And, overall, a California kid is less than half as likely to die before his 15th birthday as he or she was 20 years ago, according to the National Center for Health Statistics.

Murray, 46, of Aliso Viejo, Calif., describes the health and safety and future of his 4-year-old daughter, Sarah, as his "primary preoccupations."

He worries about little things ("Is she going to be good at sports?") and he worries about big things ("Her health, violent world.")

He even worries about his worrying.

"Maybe it's too much," Murray says, laughing. "But I'm a parent. It's what I do."

Murray's fear is just a form of love for his kid. It's a reason he straps her into a car seat every time they drive together. And he says, it's a reason that, as Sarah splashes in a pool near her house, she wears not one but four safety devices, an inflatable float on each arm, another around her neck and an intricate web of state-of-the-art foam floats woven into the chest of her bathing suit.

Murray's daughter is a giggling buoy, unlikely to sink but also unable to move her arms enough to try a few swim strokes.

"We'll do the swim lessons next year," Murray says. "Until then, we're gonna be safe."

But such fear-based protection might be Sarah's biggest problem, according to two new books that describe, in detail, the state of modern children and their not-so-modern parents.

By virtually every statistical measure, the generation born after 1982 is healthier and happier than kids of the previous two generations. Not only are they more likely to survive childhood, they're also less violent, less drug-addicted and more optimistic than any generation that's come of age since the mid-1960s.

Still, most parents have yet to get that message.

In numerous opinion polls, baby boomer and Gen-X-age parents repeatedly express fears for and about children. Though they typically project their fear to one people's kids, adult parents typically see youth culture as more violent, more sexually active and dumber than it is proving to be, say the authors of both books.

Worse, add the authors, well-intended boomer and Gen-X parents shower their kids with the manifestations of their fear.

Kids worlds have in recent years become adult-organized and adult-supervised (often by people other than their parents) to the hilt. And unstructured free time (for kids, not for grown-ups) is seen by many parents as a potential for trouble and harm, but an opportunity for creative play.

Also, kids face increasingly stringent adult expectations, standards for academic performance and maturity much higher than anything the boomers or Gen-X'ers saw when they were tykes.

"Parental fear does make things safer for kids, in terms of more use of car seats and swim lessons and better scrutiny of children's issues in general," says William Strauss, co-author of "Millennials Rising: The Next Great Generation."

But parental fear is also the root of a lot of stress for kids," Strauss adds.

DEAR ABBY: I'm writing about your response to "Disappointed in Seattle" regarding security in marriage. You above all should know that marriage does not necessarily mean security. You have printed enough letters from victims of marriages to have responded differently.

Abby, there are con-men, gamblers, alcoholics, abusers, and people who just abandon mates and children. Finding security in marriage is like catching a feather in the wind — some catch it, most don't, no matter how hard they try. Want security? Get your own job, open a bank account, and earn some self-esteem and confidence. Don't rely on someone else for your security.

—JOAN C. IN BAY SHORE, N.Y.
DEAR JOAN: While I agree that a marriage certificate is not a one-way ticket to easy street, the kind of security to which I was referring were rights of inheritance and, should illness strike, the authority to instruct doctors about each other's wishes.

DEAR ABBY: I am a registered nurse employed in a hospital. My daughter passed away in December from breast cancer. I worked up until two weeks prior to my daughter's death.

During that time, I made no mention to my co-workers about my daughter's grave condition. It was just too sad. Three weeks before my daughter died, my supervisor called me into her office and told me I had a "bad attitude."

I admit that I had kept my feelings to myself, and of course my demeanor reflected a sad expression, but my attitude was never "bad." I quickly responded to my supervisor, in my defense, that my daughter was dying and asked her how I was supposed to act. She told me there were other nurses who had gravely ill children, but they didn't behave the way I did. I replied that she should walk a mile in my shoes. She reiterated that I had a "bad attitude." I responded that since she seemed to be such an authority on behavior and dying children, perhaps she could enlighten me on how to "act," because I really didn't know. I have since returned to work, and I now have a strong dislike for this person. I see her daily, and she has the nerve to speak to me after that unpleasant encounter. Abby, how do I get past this? She has apologized for her comments, but the damage has already been done.

—FURIOUS R.N. IN THE NORTHWEST
DEAR FURIOUS: It's unfortunate that your behavior was misunderstood, but since your colleagues had no way of knowing what you were going through at the time, your supervisor was only doing his job. Please accept her apology and find it in your heart to forgive her. If you cannot, professional counseling to help you rechannel your grief and anger may be in order. Life is too precious to harbor resentments.

DEAR ABBY: This is just for you: Do you know the difference between a sewing machine and a kiss? A sewing machine sews nice seams, but a kiss seems so nice!

You can credit my sweet, late mother, Tillie M. Brehl, with that one.

—ILENE R. BEXLEY, OHIO
DEAR ILENE: Many thanks for the witty dicty. Your mother was a sweetheart, and so are you.

The delicate balance of power

How much government regulation is too much? This is a question that is a constant in practically every segment of our society. What laws do we want the government to pass, and for whose protection?

One of the beauties of this country is that we are always in a process of fine-tuning our liberties. This is a delicate balance act between too much regulation and not enough, to curb the elements on the fringe who constantly push their limits.

For example - in the early part of this century corporations became gigantic and monopolistic, and Teddy Roosevelt, the great "trustbuster," shepherded legislation to break up these monopolies for the benefit of the consumer.

Left unchecked business will consolidate until there is only one producer, which obviously eliminates all competition. The opposite end of the scale is in the former Soviet Union where regulation was so heavy-handed that business lost its incentive to produce, and the production of goods, particularly those used for war, almost ruined the nation's environment.

Special-interest groups often assail Congress with their own agendas, each believing that, though others should be strictly regulated, they themselves should be allowed free rein to do exactly as they please. And often what they want is based purely on greed, not what is best for the rest of society.

AFTER CLASS

Lobbyists work for these special-interest groups and campaign contributions are used, almost as bribes, to get Congress to do as each wishes. For those Congress people who cooperate there is also the granting of lucrative pork for their particular districts.

There are those who would use our native resources, forgetting about future generations, and those who would turn everything back to the way it was when our forefathers first came here - mainly wilderness and largely unspoiled. Both of these groups must have regulations.

Somewhere Congress must step in and find a middle ground. Both sides need to give a little in order that all may benefit. Every time a law is passed it limits somebody from doing something, so the problem has always been

What can we, as ordinary people on neither end of the scale do?

Our recourse is the voting booth. We can, as much as possible, insist that our candidates be upright and honest, not prone to give in to special interests. We can vote for a candidate, not just because we happened to hear their name on TV, but because of what they stand for.

We can follow up by voting for a candidate, not because we know it or she will be swayed in our particular direction, but because they will stand up for what is the right thing to do for the majority of Americans.

Perhaps lobbyists and campaign contributions have their place, but we must, in this election year, insist on campaign reform so that our candidates will get back to representing all of us, not just some of us.

Americans have always believed that the majority rules and minorities have rights. We must get back to that ideal soon before our choices become so limited we no longer have representation, and the old cliché "Might makes right," becomes a reality.

Your lawyer should review financial consultant's plan

Q. My wife and I, who are in our mid-60s, attended an educational seminar about estate planning that was advertised as a way to protect our assets, save taxes and avoid probate. The program was presented by a financial planner and an insurance agent who used charts and handouts to demonstrate to about 40 of us how we could use trusts, wills, and other legal documents to protect ourselves and our assets.

Later, we met with the planner and were given a written proposal recommending that we use certain wills and trusts, buy life insurance on, and turn over to the financial planner our assets for investment.

A lawyer we consulted told us we would be foolish to follow such a plan, and now we're confused.

A. The proliferation of such seminars is causing widespread confusion among senior Americans. While we recognize the popularity of financial planners, insurance agents and others using public seminars about "estate planning," "asset protection" and "probate avoidance" as marketing and sales tools, a nonlawyer may not give legal advice, offer legal explanations, or make legal recommendations to members of the public.

The practice of law includes the use of professional judgment to give legal advice and counsel to clients on their rights and obligations under the law. In an effort to protect the public from unlicensed and unauthorized legal advice, each state limits the herein lies the trap for the unwary.

When nonlawyers provide information and answer questions about revocable and irrevocable trusts, credit shelter trusts, qualified terminable interest property trusts, charitable trusts, qualified personal residence trusts and generation skipping trusts - and then create an estate plan after gathering financial information - they are exercising legal judgment for the purpose of soliciting business.

For example, although a living trust may be a useful estate-planning device under some circumstances, many individuals who attended free seminars were given erroneous advice from nonlawyers about the effect of these trusts on estate taxes. In some instances, the documents were ineffective because they were improperly witnessed or acknowledged.

Taking the NextStep: Whether a living trust or other estate planning strategy is appropriate in a given set of circumstances calls for the exercise of independent professional judgment by a lawyer. The Rules of Professional Responsibility prohibit lawyers from assisting nonlawyers in the unauthorized practice of law and from allowing others to control the exercise of his or her independent judgment. A lawyer's professional judgment should be exercised within the bounds of the law, solely for the benefit of the client and free of compromising influences and loyalties.

That said, you were wise to seek a second opinion, and we suggest no plan be implemented without the review of an independent attorney who represents your interests.

Senior citizens continue to experience intimacy

The Dallas Morning News

DALLAS - When Philip was a newlywed, he often drew his wife nude.

"I was enamored of that body," he says.

Almost 40 years later, he still is. Philip and his wife, Sarah, (who asked that their real names not be used) are nearing 70. They talk freely with each other about sex. And while some aspects of their lovemaking have changed, they still enjoy a healthy sex life.

"Intercourse is something that should last as long as you can manage it, and most people can always manage it," Philip says. "I don't have a lot of patience with celibacy."

Depending on your age, you're either blushing or picking your chin up off the floor. But, hey, generations ahead of you have as much right to sex as anyone. And yes, much as you might not want to think about it, your own mind and dad probably had sex more than just the one time that resulted in you. They're probably still having sex. And (splash cold water on your face for this one) there's a good chance they enjoy it - perhaps more than ever.

"Many seniors feel it's important," says Kevan Namazi, associate professor and chair of the gerontology department at the University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center at Dallas. "Many still want and seek orgasms in sexual experiences when they're in their 70s and 80s."

Various studies by the National Council on Aging and the AARP back him up.

In addition, several books have been published about sex and seniors, including a novel, "Julie

Sex over 50 in America

In recent research projects, the AARP and the National Council on Aging have learned the following about senior citizens and sex:

From the AARP/Modern Maturity Sexuality Study of 1,384 men and women older than 45:

- About 30 percent of men and 24 percent of women ages 60 to 74 reported having sex at least once a week. About half of 45- to 59-year-olds did.
- More than 70 percent of the men and women surveyed who had regular partners engage in sexual intercourse at least once or twice a month.
- About two-thirds of the 1,384 men and women polled were very or extremely satisfied with their physical relationships.
- Three-tenths of men and about half as many women indicated that better health would increase their satisfaction with their sex lives.

- More than half of men older than 75 admitted to being moderately or completely impotent.

From the National Council on the Aging's "Healthy Sexuality and Vital Aging" survey of more than 1,292 adults older 60:

- Among those with partners, 80 percent reported being sexually active.
- Of all participants surveyed (both with and without partners), 39 percent reported being satisfied with the frequency of sex. About 30 percent said they wanted sex more often.
- Almost half (47 percent) of respondents disagreed with this statement: "As you get older, it is as natural to have less interest in sex as it is to get wrinkles and gray hair." Thirty-one percent agreed; 16 percent were unsure.

and Romeo," by a sixtiesomething Tennessee nurse.

Patrice Blanchard, a regional manager for the southwest region of AARP, regularly gives talks on sexuality.

The American Health Care Association in Washington, D.C., is publishing a curriculum to help long-term health care facilities develop policies about sexual activity. A new AARP magazine, set for spring publication and geared toward the 50- to 60-year-old age group, will feature a regular department on sexuality and aging.

"We (as a society) think you have to be young to do everything, which certainly isn't true," says Marion Dunn, director of the Center for Human Sexuality at the Brooklyn campus of State University of New York (SUNY).

She remembers her mother and aunts talking about how women would lose desire at menopause. Society doesn't think that any more, she says.

"Back then, there were no models, no movie stars, no celebrities who married late and had energy in their romantic relationships," she says. "... Americans now are living longer and are in better health. Sex as a continued quality of life issue becomes very important. It's a way adults express intimacy and play and affection."

Take care when picking retirement age

Q. If I choose to retire with reduced benefits at age 62, will my monthly benefit increase automatically to a full retirement benefit when I become 65 or will it stay the same?

A. Your retirement benefit amount is affected by your age at the time you start receiving benefits. If you start your retirement benefits at age 62 (the earliest possible retirement age), your benefit will be permanently reduced.

Beginning in January 2000, the normal retirement age has increased and will continue to increase in gradual steps. The year you were born will determine the increase in the retirement age for you. You can call

Q. My wife recently died of cancer leaving me to support myself and our two children, ages 5 and 7. A concerned friend told me to go to the local Social Security office and ask about survivors benefits. What should I take with me when I go to the Social Security office?

A. When applying for survivors benefits for you and your children, you should have your and your children's birth certificates, your and your wife's Social Security numbers and the children's Social Security numbers. You will also need to provide evidence of your wife's death and your marriage. It's best to call Social Security's toll-free telephone number first to set up an appointment so you won't have to wait.
