On the ropes

Officials seek middle ground on dairy regs but won't ignore panel's work

By John T. Huddy Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — County Commissioners said Thursday they will seek compromise with both sides of the controversial dairy debate as they re-examine a proposed county livestock ordinance. But the commissioners said they are not prepared to sign the new ordinance, as some local dairymen want. Dairy industry representatives met with commissioners to discuss the new ordinance, the possible negative effects it could have on the local dairy industry, and the problems with a continued dairy moratorium in the county. Lewis Eilers, executive director of the Idaho Dairymen's Association, said the proposed ordinance is too restrictive. "We feel like a need to negotiate with the commissioners to resolve this issue," Eilers said. "The county's existing ordinance is good enough, he said, adding the commissioners should "work with and members of the committee that drafted the ordinance, not with commissioners." Gary Grindstaff and Bill Brockman, Commissioner Marvin Hemplemar was out of the office on business and was not at the standing-room-only meeting. Commissioners have been reviewing the new ordinance. Drafted by the seven-member committee during more than six months of work, it would take the any dairy of 4,500 animal units (3,214 milk cows) or more would be required to have a professionally designed and engineered odor management and waste system. The existing ordinance has no such rule. And following state law, all dairy operations, no matter the size, must have nutrient management plans, the new ordinance says. Eilers, several local dairymen,

Summertime child injuries soar in the Magic Valley

By Jennifer Sandmann Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Magic Valley has one of the highest increases in the number of accidental injuries suffered by children during the summer.

The Magic Valley Safe Kids Coalition was among seven Safe Kids campaigns around the country to participate in a study that compares the number of unintentional childhood injuries that occur between May and August with the rest of the year. The study released Thursday urges parents to think about safety as warm weather entices children outside to play and families prepare to pile into cars for summer trips.

The National Safe Kids Campaign found that between May and August there was an 18 percent increase nationally in the number of children rushed to emergency rooms. That compares with a 23 percent increase experienced by the Magic Valley Regional Medical Center emergency department.

"We're not terribly surprised, even though it's terribly alarming," said Kyla Kelly, director of the Magic Valley Safe Kids Coalition.

Helmets and seat belts can prevent many of the injuries, she said.

National Safe Kids reports that unintentional injury remains the number one killer of children 14 and under and that car accidents, drowning, falls, pedestrian injury and bike accidents are among the leading risks to children. The Safe Kids study counted the number of children with those common injuries who were rushed to

Don't expect any tax rebate check this year, Senate budget chief says

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Congress is unlikely to approve tax rebate checks this year, seeing less of a need to stimulate the economy, Senate Finance Committee Chairman Charles Grassley said Thursday. He also said the votes aren't there to lower the highest income tax rates to 33 percent as President Bush wants.

Grassley, in an interview with Associated Press reporters and editors, said the Bush administration "is still trying to find a way" to give taxpayers some of the budget surplus through

Rep. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, said Thursday in Washington, D.C., that economic growth earlier this year has dampened interest among lawmakers for a rebate.

Report: Earth's air starts losing ability to clean self

Newaday

New measurements show that the global atmosphere's ability to keep itself clean seems to be decreasing, perhaps dangerously so, scientists warned Thursday. In the past 10 years, they said, concentrations of the air's most important cleansing chemical — the hydroxyl radical — have declined markedly in the Northern Hemisphere. Scientists have known for years that chemicals are generated in the atmosphere by forces such as ultraviolet light and lightning, and that these chemicals are highly reactive and tend to remove polluting gases. Prominent among these cleansing chemicals is the hydroxyl radical, which is essentially the water molecule minus one hydrogen atom. The absence of that hydrogen atom makes it highly reactive, so it easily interacts with pollutants. "If the trend we've seen in the past ten years continues," said atmospheric chemist Ronald Prinn, "it is something to be deeply concerned about. We may be decreasing the atmosphere's ability to clean itself." The findings came from a series of measurements, taken in relatively remote areas such as coastal California, beginning in 1978. The results are published by Prinn, at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and 12 colleagues at other research centers, in the journal Science. It is the first evidence showing a "large decrease" in the amount of this vital cleansing chemical.

Bush: Logging rules will remain

But president may alter review process later to change policy

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration has decided to let stand a Clinton administration regulation protecting 60 million acres of national forest from logging and road construction, but with the intention of reopening the rule-making process for possible significant changes in the future.

The regulation was one of the most far-reaching of former President Clinton's environmental initiatives and would protect more than a quarter of federal forests — including large tracts of Alaska's Tongass National Forest — from most commercial logging, new road construction and mining.

Under the new approach to be announced today by the Department of Agriculture and Justice Department officials, the government would grant logging, oil and gas exploration interests and local officials and residents far more say in revising the rules for governing individual national forests.

By allowing the rule to go forward while promising a logging interests and Western lawmakers the opportunity for long-term relief, the administration will for now avoid another nasty confrontation with environmental groups and a congressional Democratic over a major environmental issue. Later on, however, the administration could do much to reverse or substantially alter what Clinton has done.

Instead of imposing a blanket rule on all 60 million acres, the administration's approach would allow the U.S. Forest Service to reconsider on a park-by-park basis what rules are best for protecting roadless areas in a way that would give more weight to the concerns of local businesses, residents and government officials.

State officials of Alaska, Colorado, Idaho and Utah as well as the Boise Cascade timber company have objected in court that their objections to the Clinton plan were ignored.

An administration official said Thursday that the aim is "reaching out and listening to all the voices of people that were not listened to in the process — local people, county commissioners, state governments."

However, the Clinton era protections for roadless areas would remain in effect until each forest is analyzed, according to sources.

place of the county's existing three-year-old ordinance.

Several of the committee members, that helped draft the new ordinance think it should be scrapped.

Chairman of the three-member ordinance committee has been very frustrated with this process," said Alvin Smutny, a committee member and local dairyman. "We can't support this document as a draft."

Dave Snelson and Jack McCall, two other committee members, echoed Smutny's comments Thursday.

The committee's original intent was to create an ordinance acceptable to dairymen and regulators, concerned about the influx of large dairies locally and the lack of proper regulation. That goal was not achieved, they said.

"When this thing finally came out, I personally believe it didn't depict what the intent was,"

Grindstaff said after the meeting he would work with both sides to come up with a better compromise.

"We'll send them the dairy men the proposed ordinance so they can tell us what they don't like and then we'll talk to the other residents to see if we can't make some changes," Grindstaff said.

Hempleman said he was briefed about Thursday's meeting and was on board with the other commissioners.

"We're going to go and reach some kind of middle ground on this ordinance," he said.

The committee, made up of four members with ties to the agricultural industry and three residents, finished work on the new ordinance Thursday.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The weekly way of words between Republicans and Democrats will be delivered with a twist this Saturday. It will be in English and Spanish.

President Bush, who speaks some Spanish, will address a version of his weekly English language radio address in Spanish, Democrats said they'll respond in kind.

Minority Leader Dick Gephardt, D-Mo., and Rep. Silvestre Reyes, D-Texas, will provide the Spanish response.

"We decided a long time ago that President Bush and the Republican Party of trying to appeal to the Latino community," said Reyes, Congressional Hispanic Caucus chairman. "That's fine. We think we can compete without any problem."

The White House would not comment on the address. It was unclear whether Bush would deliver a Spanish version every week.

All eyes on Bush's missile plan

A Chinese boy looks at models of Chinese intercontinental ballistic missiles on display at an exhibition in Shanghai Thursday.

Brussels holds tongue about U.S. proposal

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — President Bush's decision to push ahead with a missile defense plan has drawn little criticism from America's skeptical European allies, who fear losing leverage with a superpower they suspect is ready to go for real.

Despite misgivings over the feasibility of the missile defense plan and the possibility of a new arms race, no major NATO power publicly condemned the plan following Bush's speech Tuesday.

Neutral Sweden offered the strongest criticism.

"There is a risk that other countries will use this decision as an excuse for improving their own nuclear weapon programs and that the world will be led into a new, spiraling arms race," Swedish Foreign Minister Anna Lindh said.

Among NATO governments, there was neither a ringing endorsement nor public condemnation.

Instead, the British, French, Germans, Italians and others took heart in Bush's pledge to consult with Washington's allies.

and with the Russians and the Chinese — as his administration develops a detailed timetable.

Some urged Bush to think carefully about the implications for arms control agreements, notably the 1972 anti-ballistic missile treaty.

"We hope these consultations will touch on all questions raised by the project," the French Foreign Ministry said Wednesday.

"Our assessment, when the time comes, will be the result of the consultations to come and the definitive shape of the project,"

North Korea pledges to keep missile moratorium

PYONGYANG, North Korea (AP) — North Korean leader Kim Jong Il pledged to keep a moratorium on missile tests until 2003, but said he would be reviewing the Korean summit as long as Washington is reviewing its policy on the North, a European delegation said Thursday.

The promise to adhere to a moratorium began in September 1999 was a significant advance in a process that has sulked amid U.S. North Korean tension.

While Kim ferried European leaders to the summit, he and his entourage with toasts from him of red wine, his government was reacting furiously to the release this week of a U.S. State Department report that again listed North Korea as sponsor of terrorism.

"Washington had better mind its own business," KCNA, the North's foreign news outlet, said in a commentary that characterized U.S. airstrikes on Iraq as an example of terrorism.

"It said the United States would be 'well advised' to wash 'its own terrorists' hands stained with blood before taking issue with others'

China warns move may spark arms race

BEIJING (AP) — China warned on Thursday that President Bush's proposed missile defense system could spark a new arms race and undermine world peace and state mega-slammed him as being a "weak" leader.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Zhu Bangqiao urged Washington not to scrap a 1972 arms control treaty placing severe limits on anti-missile systems, the state-run Xinhua News Agency said.

"We believe the Anti-Ballistic Missile treaty is the cornerstone for safeguarding global strategic balance and stability," Zhu was quoted as saying.

The brief report on Xinhua was the first official Chinese reaction since Bush outlined his plans for an anti-missile project Tuesday in Washington. It repeated previous Chinese government objections about abandoning the 1972 treaty, which the United States signed with the now defunct Soviet Union.

"If the treaty is destroyed, global strategic balance and stability will be broken, and the international arms control process and nonproliferation efforts will be impeded," the report said, paraphrasing Zhu.

The official People's Daily said Bush was pushing forward with missile defense over world objections because he fears being seen as a weak leader.

In an analysis of the new administration, the newspaper said Bush was taking a hard line to compensate for the narrow margin of his victory in last year's presidential election.

"Bush is trying to eradicate from his own mind the shadow of being a 'weak president,'" the article said.

The Bush administration is considering a missile defense system that could be rushed into operation as early as 2004, possibly relying on weapons aboard ships or planes as well as on land.

Bush administration's foreign policy line hardens

WASHINGTON (AP) — In his first three months in office, President Bush has hardened the American line on China, North Korea and Russia. This administration sees little to gain from business as usual overseas.

As Bush put it Thursday: "We've got to review all policy that we inherited."

Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld's first this week on China policy — suspending all military contacts, then adjusting that to require all future contacts to be approved in advance — demonstrated the difficulty of knowing how tough to get without crippling relations and undercutting U.S. interests abroad.

And yet, as the president also made clear this week in proposing to open a new strategic dialogue with Russia, the administration's tougher stance does not mean it sees no value in pursuing cooperation.

"The president and his team genuinely have a different degree of skepticism about the value of the diplomatic engagement with Russia, China and others that was emphasized by the Clinton administration," said Alton Frye, a foreign policy expert at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

"Once they have recalibrated a stance, then they'll do business. So this is not an end to the baseline from which business is done."

U.S. vet says risk of outbreak down

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's top veterinarian said Thursday the risk of a U.S. outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease has been sharply reduced because of stepped-up airport inspections and measures taken by Britain to end its epidemic.

"Today we're at a much lower risk than we were a month ago," said Alfonso Torres of the Agriculture Department's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service.

USDA is considering easing its ban on imports of raw meat and livestock from the European Union, Torres said. The restrictions would be lifted first for countries that have shown no signs of the disease.

President directs feds to save energy

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush on Thursday ordered all federal agencies in California to cut power use, saying "we want to be a part of any solutions" to an energy crunch that could cripple the largest state.

Bush ordered federal facilities to develop plans for confronting severe energy shortages. The administration recommends that those facilities consider raising thermostats to 78 degrees, closing "unnecessary lighting" and switching off escalators.

Federal officials in the states are required to report back to the president through Energy Secretary Spencer Abraham within 30 days.

House prepares to pass budget deal

WASHINGTON (AP) - Republicans dropped plans to exceed President Bush's spending proposals and prepared to push a final 2002 budget through the House late Thursday that would let Bush assert victory in his first protracted legislative battle.

Senate Democrats discuss the upcoming budget vote prior to a news conference on Capitol Hill Thursday where they claimed to have been left out of the budget negotiating process by Republicans. Left to right are Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., Sen. Kent Conrad, D-N.D., Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D.

It's an accomplishment because we have a president who has the principles and values of a George Bush to stay in there and hang tight, House Majority Whip Tom DeLay, R-Texas, told reporters.

As a result, overall spending for federal programs approved annually by Congress would drop to $561 billion next year, the same 4 percent boost over 2001 that Bush proposed and the House had endorsed. The spending covers everything the government does except the checks it sends recipients of Social Security and other automatically paid benefits.

Republicans also bowed to concerns by centrist Democratic senators and reworked language that could have delayed a $100 billion portion of the tax cut that is supposed to stimulate the economy this year and next.

National Safe Kids reports that unintentional injury remains the number one killer of children under and under that car accidents, drowning, falls, pedestrian injury and bike accidents are among the leading risks to children.

Free helmets are given to all children and their siblings who are treated in the emergency room. The Magic Valley Safe Kids Coalition, which has an emergency room, says the helmets cost.

Airlines work to defeat passenger measures

WASHINGTON (AP) - Under increasing criticism for flight delays and customer service, the airlines are bringing in high-powered lobbyists to thwart legislation aimed at telling the industry how to treat its passengers.

The airlines. The industry spent $16.4 million to lobby last year, a 19 percent increase over the $13.8 million it spent in 1999.

Efforts to improve technology, build new runways and open new routes for airplanes will not come fast enough to reduce delays, Inspector General Kenneth Mead told the House Appropriations transportation subcommittee.

month on legislation requiring airlines to disclose on-time performance of flights when customers buy tickets or make reservations and to establish a timetable for reducing the number of flights delayed at least 30 minutes.

Between 1995 and 1999, at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center, 6,521 children suffered injuries in one of those five leading categories. More than 41 percent of the injuries occurred between May and August. The risks for children ages 5 to 9 during those months increased most.

Other study participants and the percentage of increase they saw in summer injuries were Hartford, Conn., 24 percent; Anderson County, S.C., 13 percent; Wichita, Kan., 13 percent; Phoenix, Ariz., 5 percent; Sacramento, Calif., 9 percent; and Washington D.C., 9 percent.

Eight airlines have added outside consultants to resist bills circulating on Capitol Hill and their trade group has sought outside help. Firms headed by former Republican National Committee chairman Haley Barbour and former Democratic National Committee chairman Al Gore are among those recently registering to lobby for Meanwhile, passengers face another summer of delays unless carriers shift flights from peak travel times, the Transportation Department's Inspector General said Thursday.

Last year, more than one of every four flights was delayed, and the number of late flights during the first three months of 2001 mirrors that of 2000, Mead said.

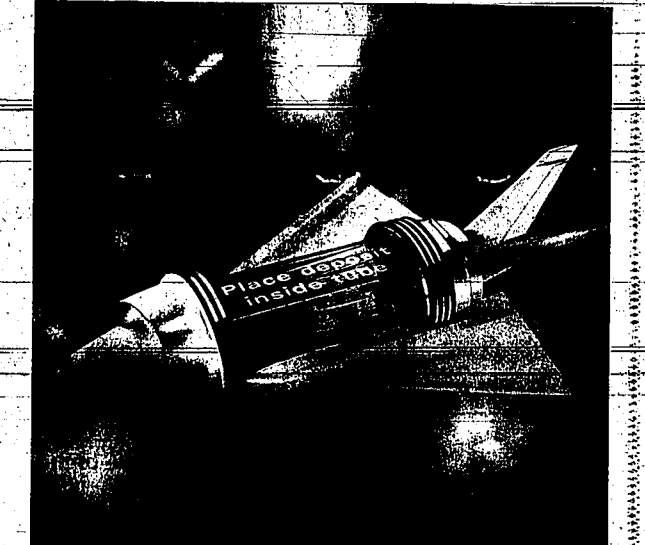

Sweeney and Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., introduced legislation Thursday requiring airlines to provide food, water and restrooms to passengers aboard a delayed plane. They also would have to allow passengers to leave planes still on the ground more than an hour after their scheduled takeoff unless they will leave within 30 minutes.

It's not clear why the increase in the number of summertime childhood injuries in this area is so much higher than it is elsewhere, Kraal said. The emergency department sees a number of children injured in falls from horses. He said helmets are being used by some, but he doesn't expect the practice will catch on quickly in a land of cowboy hats.

Scientists face charges for sharing trade secrets

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) - Two Lucent Technologies scientists and another man - all three of them Chinese-born - were arrested by the FBI on Thursday and accused of stealing Lucent software largely run by the Chinese government.

The three formed a joint venture with the Chinese company to market the product and boasted that the business would become "the Microsoft of China," prosecutors said.

Your bank may be around the corner. But who knows where your money winds up?

But he said enthusiasm for it in Congress has waned amid evidence that the U.S. economy grew 2 percent in the first quarter and questions about how the program would work.

"In order to get a compromise, we may have to accept something in that area," Grassley said. Other proposals to make the tax cuts bigger for lower- and middle-income people would also give Congress a way to provide more tax relief this year and next - even if rebate checks are not approved - by letting people keep more of their paychecks.

When you bank with us, your money's journey stops at the other end of the vacuum tube, right inside our bank. Then we put it back to work right where it started. But with many of the megabanks, your deposit keeps going. And going. Right to some corporate headquarters where nobody cares about reinvesting in our community. Or our economic health. Or our loan needs. So, if your bank isn't a community bank, come by and we'll help you move your accounts to our bank. You'll find we offer everything you need. You'll always know where your money winds up. And we'll wind up with another great local customer.

On income tax cuts, Bush has repeatedly insisted that no taxpayer should pay the federal government more than a 15 percent income. But Grassley said 12 of the 20-Finance Committee members now oppose reducing the current 39.6 percent and 36 percent rates as part of the 11-year, $1.35 trillion tax cut compromise.

Besides the income tax cuts, Grassley said the package would probably include versions of Bush's proposals to repeal the estate tax, double the child credit and ease the marriage penalty paid by millions of two-income couples. The goal is to have a bill with broad bipartisan support on the president's desk before Memorial Day, or at least out of the Senate by then, he said.

U.S. Attorney Robert Cleary said there are no allegations that the Chinese company, Datang Telecom Technology Co. of Beijing, was aware of the theft.

Democrats and moderate Republicans want more of the tax cut to flow to lower-income people, arguing that they need a greater share of the overall tax relief. Maine GOP Sen. Police say father killed two children

DALLAS (AP) - An accountant was jailed Thursday on charges of fatally shooting his 6- and 9-year-old daughters as he argued on the phone with his ex-wife.

The mother heard the older girl say "No, Daddy! No!" before hearing gunshots, police said.

The bodies of a dozen former Nocona hospital patients who may have been poisoned will be exhumed from cemeteries across North Texas and Oklahoma during the next month.

The exhumation order, signed Wednesday by a Montague County Justice of the Peace, is the latest development for the residents of Nocona, a town of about 3,000 near the Oklahoma border, who have been coping with rumors about an unusual number of deaths at the hospital.

The exhumations will begin in about 30 days and take about a week to complete, said Montague County District Attorney Tom Cole, who wouldn't say whether more bodies could be dug up.

The deceased were all patients at Nocona General Hospital at the same time a lethal drug died appeared from the facility. All 12 of the patients died between Dec. 11 and Feb. 4.

Despite the circumstantial evidence, proving that the patients were poisoned will not be easy. "It could take months," Cole said. "Let's just say it's not something that's ordinarily tested for during the course of an autopsy."

The FBI and Texas Department of Public Safety are assisting in the investigation.

Suspicion was first aroused at the 3-story, 38-bed hospital when vials of the drug Mivacron were discovered missing. Hospital officials became concerned after discovering that four to 10 vials of the drug, normally used to stop breathing while a ventilator tube is inserted, were missing.

Power trumps salmon in a short water year

Record salmon runs have returned to Idaho this spring, but that's not good enough for some environmental groups. On Thursday, they sued Uncle Sam for alleged mismanagement of hydroelectric dams along the Columbia and Snake rivers.

Never mind the fact that, by mid-April, nearly 5,000 hatchery spring chinook had moved upstream of Lower Granite Dam on the Snake River — the last dam salmon must pass before reaching Idaho. Last year, only 69 chinook had passed Lower Granite by tax day.

As electrical prices rise, the general public's enthusiasm for salmon protection will decline correspondingly. Salmon are a powerful symbol in the Northwest. For some people, the region's very boundaries are defined by migrating salmon.

The sacre-the-salmon crowd likes to dwell on bad news. Unless things are bad and getting worse, they're out of business.

But the Northwest has changed — a lot — since the days of free-flowing rivers, virgin forests and salmon runs that left waterways abrim with spawning redfish. Sadly, some of those good old days are gone for good.

There are sensible steps for salmon survival that can be taken without curtailing hydroelectric production. Sen. Mike Crapo, R-Idaho, is seeking to double the amount of federal money dedicated to salmon recovery. Congress must boost federal spending by $301 million to screen irrigation diversions, modify dams and restore salmon spawning habitat.

Crapo is right to elevate the salmon issue to a national level, because it transcends the Northwest. Idaho, Washington and Oregon are net exporters of electricity — so anything that jeopardizes power production in these three states affects more than just the Northwest.

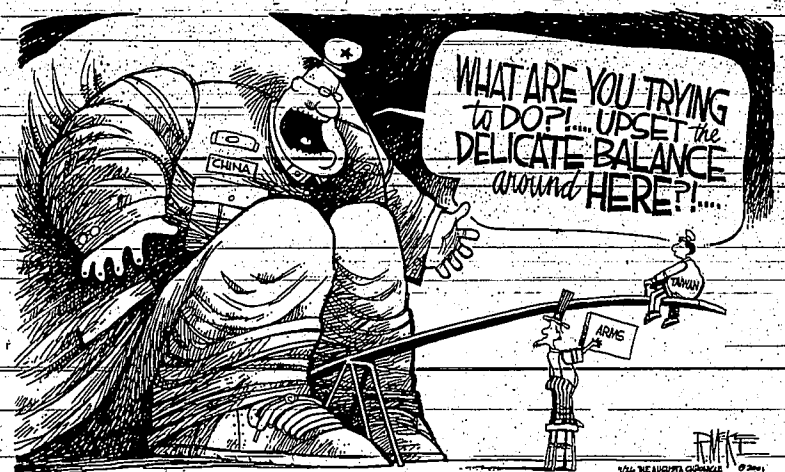

That sounds like good news, but the save-the-salmon crowd prefers to dwell on bad news. Unless things are bad and getting worse, they're out of business.

That's not to say Idaho's salmon aren't facing problems this year. Meager mountain snowpacks guarantee there won't be much water in the Northwest's rivers. With the West in a deepening electrical crisis, that water is needed to spin turbines and generate power.

The crux of the problem is that turbines are bad news for migrating salmon. They need water going through spillways — not turbines — to get around the dams.

Thus, the people who manage federal hydroelectric dams have a difficult balancing act to perform. This year, they have chosen to err on the side of power production.

That's a difficult decision, but an appropriate one. Everyone needs electricity in one way or another, but few people are vitally dependent on Idaho's salmon. (Here's a prediction:

Vietnam War erases the line between soldiers and civilians

“E”verything is very simple in war, but the simplest thing is difficult,” observed the Prussian military strategist Karl von Clausewitz. “These difficulties accumulate and produce a friction beyond the imagination of those who have not seen war.”

Conflicting reports of actions taken behind enemy lines during the height of the Vietnam War have raised anew the issue of whether soldiers carrying out a commando mission should be held accountable as war criminals.

Sunday's New York Times Magazine published the allegations of former Navy SEALs Gerhard Klann. He claimed that former Sen. Bob Kerrey, D-Nebr., now president of the New School University in New York, ordered and helped carry out the executions of more than a dozen Vietnamese civilians in a village called Thanh Phong on the night of Feb. 25, 1969.

PETER MAGUIRE.

Anders and civilians was never clear. Vietnam's greatest military commander, Gen. Vo Nguyen Giap, was quite frank about the important role played by civilians in his nation's 30-year struggle for national liberation. Giap believed that every citizen was a soldier. “The entire population participates in the armed struggle, fighting, according to the principles of guerrilla warfare, in small units.”

Philippines between 1899-1902. Most reminiscent of the Indian reservations and the Spanish policy of reconquest were the “free-fire zones” that uprooted civilians, forced them into refugee camps and declared anyone outside them “hostile.” If this policy was a violation of the Geneva Convention article that prohibits forcible deportations of protected persons from occupied territory, war does not mean make of the U.S.-sponsored Phoenix “pacification” program, which left more than 26,000 Vietnamese dead as a result of covert assassinations? What about President Nixon's secret bombing of Cambodia? Where do the questions end?

According to Klann, “We herded them together in a group. We lined them up and executed them.” Whether Vietnamese survivors supported Klann's version of events, Kerrey and the other five members of the SEAL team offered very different accounts of the same night. “We took fire from these forces and we returned fire. Knowing our presence had been compromised and that our lives were endangered, we withdrew while continuing to fire.”

This Vietnamese Rashomon has sparked an agonizing national dialogue about America's longest war and has also served to highlight the important distinction between legal guilt and moral guilt.

The Vietnam War was an unconventional one in which the line between soldiers and civilians was never clear. Vietnam's greatest military commander, Gen. Vo Nguyen Giap, was quite frank about the important role played by civilians in his nation's 30-year struggle for national liberation. Giap believed that every citizen was a soldier. “The entire population participates in the armed struggle, fighting, according to the principles of guerrilla warfare, in small units.”

The United States adopted unconventional methods and the Navy SEALs were America's most unconventional warriors. Further complicating the situation was the fact that both the North Vietnamese and the Viet Cong refused to acknowledge that they were bound by two key provisions of the 1949 Geneva Conventions on “Prisoners of War” and “Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War.”

No less an authority than the late Nuremberg prosecutor Telford Taylor, writing in his 1970 book “Nuremberg and Vietnam: An American Tragedy,” said, “Like a spy, a guerrilla may be a hero, but if he engages in combat without observing the requirements, he violates the laws of war and is subject to punishment, which may be the death penalty.”

One also cannot overlook the architects of American military strategy during the Vietnam War. They adopted military tactics first developed to fight American Indians in the western plains and honed in the jungles of the Kerrey could have come forward with this information sooner. He could have handled it better. Many have called for him to give back the Bronze Star that he was awarded for the mission. If Kerrey's unit came under fire, that it was fully justified in returning fire. The civilian casualties, as tragic as they were, do not constitute a war crime.

But legal absolusion is of little consequence. As Klann has admitted, that much, and that is the difference between legal and moral guilt. “It's far more than guilt,” Kerrey said in 1998 to the writer of the Times article. “It's the shame.”

If Klann's version of the night's events turns out to be true and Kerrey is tried for war crimes, then every infantry man who fought in Vietnam should be tried for war crimes. And what purpose would that serve? Would it bring “truth” or “reconciliation” or “closure”? No way.

Peter Maguire, an expert on war crimes, is the author of the new book, “Laws and War: An American Story.” He wrote this commentary for Newsday.

Loan sharks prey on bank-scarce immigrant community

The first time a loan shark showed up at my door, I had no idea who he was. When the well-mannered man rang our doorbell, I thought he was a salesperson. But he did the oddest thing. He asked for my mother by her first name.

“Please tell her Leo stopped by,” he said after I told him she wasn't in. He then wished me a good day and stroled away.

“Don't worry about who he is,” my mother told me later. But that week I guessed his identity as I watched her and my stepfather put together a couple of hundred dollars from their rationed salaries.

The encounter with the moneylender was seemingly harmless. There was no threat of violence. There was no impending foreclosure on anything we owned. There was simply a need not to and, once there, many wait more than an hour to receive basic services.

My community presents favorable conditions for the ever-present loan shark (or “prestatista” in Spanish). Because it lacks established banks, and because residents have an average annual household income of only $12,000 (the national median in 1999 was $40,816, according to Census figures), my community is vulnerable to these opportunistic individuals.

Last week I sat in on a personal-finance workshop at the credit union. Israel Rosario, the education director, spoke candidly to the handful of people gathered in a small classroom, eager to learn about financial independence. And he warned against the perils of using prestamistas.

My community presents favorable conditions for the ever-present loan shark (or “prestatista” in Spanish). Last week I sat in on a personal-finance workshop at the credit union. Israel Rosario, the education director, spoke candidly to the handful of people gathered in a small classroom, eager to learn about financial independence. And he warned against the perils of using prestamistas.

He said there are possibly thousands of unregulated moneylenders in Washington Heights who helped launch a large number of local businesses with funding arrangements. After $800 monthly interest payments choke many entrepreneurs out of their hair salons, livery cab companies, first homes or grocery stores, the borrowers then turn to institutional loans to pay off street collectors.

But it's hard making people understand the risks when they need money. Even when there are banks in a community, sometimes they won't lend to the poor or to immigrants who have no credit history. Sometimes immigrants are intimidated by financial institutions, especially if they think their immigration status will be questioned or scrutinized.

Oddly, among the participants at the workshop, one was a prestamista who wanted a new business from everyone in the room.

“You know, he's here to recruit,”

Rosario said. He seemed not at all surprised by the special visitor, and he made a point of introducing the loan shark as a local businessman. Rosario asked him to explain his services.

“Borrowers can get a loan at 2.5 percent per week as long as you have a recommendation from two trusted people,” said the prestamista. That's 132 percent per year, compared to 14 percent at the local credit union or 16 percent at many banks.

My enterprising yet underserved neighbors, and others like them across the country, should not be denied the chance to fulfill their dreams by a banking industry that neglects them and by loan sharks that prey on them.

Internal focus might give U.S. enemies a freer hand

There are senior men in George W. Bush's administration who, through their experience and perception of the war in Vietnam, have acquired a distaste for foreign conflicts. Bush himself may be reluctant to be drawn into overseas wars because he is influenced by events in Somalia after his father sent U.S. troops there in any case, it's natural that an incoming president should want to concentrate on domestic matters. Didn't Bill Clinton promise something similar at the start of his first presidency?

Whatever the administration's intention, the United States' security interests are not likely to be broadly categorized as a trinity of domestic, altruistic or moral, and foreign concerns. On the domestic front, the nation is, with the exception of occasional outrages such as the bombing of the World Trade Center, generally secure from foreign (if not internal) threats. As for injustices in unenlightened countries, the new Republican administration is likely to be more hard-nosed than its Democratic predecessor. But when it comes to foreign concerns, the United States, as the world's No. 1 trading power, depends upon stable and favorable trading conditions for its investments and for its business.

PETER G. HORE

So whether the solutions to crises are reached by force or diplomacy, the United States wants and expects outcomes that are friendly to its interests. This is as true of the Gulf War fought over access to oil — by a coalition assembled and led by a country which, to the amazement of many, is now said by its leadership to be suffering an energy shortage — as it is of the so-called "banana wars" within Europe.

But if the United States does tamp down its interventions abroad, not only will there be more wars, albeit between third parties, but the nation's ability to influence the outcomes of future crises in favor of U.S. big business will be weaker. This would surely not be in the overall interest of the United States. It's doubtful anyway that the nation could ignore future overseas crises because, like it or not, being the one world superpower makes it also the world's policeman. If there were fewer U.S. interventions, not only would the nation's enemies have a freer hand, but the effect on America's allies would be destabilizing, too.

The nation's current allies might be tempted to fill the vacuum created by the United States staying at home. But even the most capable allies — such as Britain and France, whose colonial histories make them most likely to indulge in expeditionary forces — are militarily less capable without access to superior U.S. technology in fields such as heavy lift and communications. Even if these two countries, maybe in the context of some European forum, could agree to act together to reach some common policy toward some unspinnable crisis in, let us say, Africa, the results would be less desirable.

For many years, British foreign policy and influence — both implicit and explicit, formal and informal — has been to foster a special relationship with the United States. Much of this effort would prove to have been wasted: The pro-European lobby in Britain would be reinforced, and Britain's role as a bridge between the United States and some United States of Europe would be diminished. This would result in a significant shift in the balance of power in Europe. French policy — which in some areas, including the current debate over the Euro army, is plainly anti-NATO (which is not much more than a code for being anti-American) — would be given a boost.

Britain and France apart, there are few other countries with appetites for foreign interventions.

In the rest of Europe, there is a liberal consciousness that is somewhat troubled by every fresh report of appalling events from dark and distant countries. But the same liberals are also intent upon reducing military expenditure to a minimum and tend to give way when push comes to shove.

So, with no country having armed forces with the leadership and technical know-how of the United States, attempts at foreign interventions will be less skilled and the results less clear-cut. On those few occasions of successful small-scale interventions, the results will not favor U.S. foreign interests. Inevitably some larger-scale interventions will be bungled and may drag in the United States willy-nilly. This pattern of events could be the New World Order about which George W. Bush's father spoke 10 years ago.

Hey, that was my suit!
To Karen Bossick:
Referring to your report of the meeting of the International Skiing History Association, I would like to correct you.

It is regarding Wolfgang Bert, who at age 83, is much too reserved to wear a neon pink stretch suit. It was me, Peter Picard, who at age 52, is more daring, wearing that suit. I bought it two years ago at the Gold Mine, as you said, not for $10 but for $25.

reinforces other research, such as the Abecedarian study, which followed children in high- and low-quality care until the age of 21. This study found that quality care makes a difference not only for school readiness but also for later reduction in juvenile delinquency and unemployment. The study reminds us why all children should be allowed to access high-quality child care that nurtures their social, emotional, cognitive and physical development.

Quality child care counts
As an early childhood professional, I would like to respond to the new study on child care and behavior.

Since 1991, the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development, a federal agency, has been studying 1,300 children in different child-care settings who spend different amounts of time in child care. The latest report from the study is being presented by the media in several ways: Children who spend more time in child care are more aggressive and have behavior problems. Children need less time away from their parents.

Quality care improves cognitive development but not the behavior issues. Although I have not seen the study, and cannot comment on the methodology or the exact findings at this time, I do know that this study shows child-care quality makes a difference. Children in high-quality care settings had better language development and other cognitive skills when they entered kindergarten. This

Everyone wants families to have more time together, but it's unrealistic to suggest that in every family one parent can be a full-time caregiver to the child. Instead of blaming parents for using child care so they can't do better, like it or not, why not make child care as good as it can be for children and families? Also, if we want children to have time with their parents, we need to expand parental leave and establish workplace policies that are more responsive to families.

It is important to note that the aggressive behavior of the children in this study, which ranged from arguing to bullying, is within the normal range of behavior. This study does not say that longer times in child care causes aggression.

There may be other factors involved (economic stress). Also, while there was a significant difference in the number of behavior issues, as aggressive, 83 percent of children in child care for more than 30 hours were not rated as more aggressive.

Fire damages Jerome barn; no livestock lost

JEROME—A fire Thursday afternoon in Jerome County did about $25,000 of damage to a horse barn, but nobody was hurt and no animals were lost.

The blaze started at about 2:30 p.m. when fire apparently jumped from a burning trash barrel to a pile of straw and then ignited the barn, said Jerome Rural Fire Department Chief Joe Robinson.

One end of the barn, owned by Art Broadhurst at 400 N., 261 E., was involved by the time fire crews arrived, Robinette said. The horses had all been evacuated without harm, he said.

Firefighters subdued the blaze in a matter of minutes, he said.

Kempthorne approves funds for public facilities

KIMBERLY—Three Magic Valley communities will be getting $1.85 million in state funds to improve public buildings and other facilities.

The money is part of $7.8 million given to 24 Idaho communities to construct sewer and water systems, housing projects, fire and emergency medical stations and senior centers.

"If businesses want to relocate or expand in Idaho, they need to know that the public infrastructure is in place to support them," Kempthorne said.

"These grants will help Idaho communities—especially those in our rural areas—have those basic public facilities in place," Kempthorne said.

Kempthorne approved the grants based on recommendations from the Idaho Economic Advisory Council, a six-member, private-sector advisory board that oversees the state's economic development effort.

Here's a breakdown of who gets what:

- Gooding County — $70,000 to construct a three-bay addition to the fire station in Hagerman.

- City of Kimberly — $450,000 to replace and rehabilitate the city sewer line.

- City of Buhl — $400,000 for street improvements, sidewalks, curbs and gutters, lighting and landscaping.

Gas leak at hotel causes evacuation of guests

TWIN FALLS—The Weston Inn at 906 Blue Lakes Blvd. N. evacuated hotel guests to the pool area about 8:45 p.m. Thursday due to a broken gas line behind the hotel, said hotel clerk Wendy Brown.

Brown said the incident began when an intoxicated man began breaking beer bottles at the Weston Plaza. She said the man walked over to the hotel and began banging on one of the hotel room doors and the family inside called the front desk. The man then went behind the hotel and broke a gas line, Brown said.

Twin Falls police and firefighters responded to the hotel. Firefighters turned off the gas and police arrested the man, Brown said. She said guests in rooms near the gas leak were moved to rooms further away or refunded their money if they chose to leave the hotel.

No other details were available at press time.

Physician PPO contracts expire

By Jennifer Sandmann
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS—Patients this week have fewer Twin Falls physicians to choose from in Blue Cross of Idaho's Preferred Provider Organization.

Blue Cross and a number of Twin Falls physicians are at odds over the PPO contract. Negotiations continue, but meanwhile a number of Twin Falls physicians have left the PPO network, a popular Blue Cross health insurance plan used by many local employers, including The Times-News. Departed doctors groups include Southern Idaho Medical Group, the Physicians Center and doctors practicing at the Twin Falls Clinic and Hospital, although the hospital remains in the PPO.

"I'm confident that some day we'll come to an agreement," said Tracy Andrus, senior vice president of marketing and provider services for Blue Cross. Andrus said Blue Cross negotiations continue with physicians and the Magic Valley Health Network. The Magic Valley Health Network is an organization of 84 Twin Falls doctors. Tony Burns is the network's executive director and spokesman for the doctors.

Blue Cross and Burns say the contract dispute is over physicians fees. In PPOs, physicians discount patient costs in exchange for the patient traffic the PPO can direct toward their medical practices. Burns said issues over the control of patient care also are involved, but Andrus disputed that claim and said negotiations have involved only fees.

PPO patients still may see any doctor they wish and might still have some coverage if they see a non-PPO provider, but their care could cost them more. Patients should check their policies and consult Blue Cross and their doctors if they have questions about their coverage.

PPO health plans come with wellness and preventive care benefits—annual physical exams. Individual insurance policies vary depending on the type of coverage, but some policies have no coverage for annual wellness checks if PPO patients see non-PPO physicians. Mammograms are the exception; they are covered no matter whether they are performed in or out of the PPO network. While there remain a number of anesthesiologists, obstetricians and radiologists in the PPO, there are fewer family doctors, pediatricians and internal medicine physicians. At least 13 family

St. Ed's students sign up for shuttle mission, web chat with John Glenn

By Loretta Burkhardt
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS—As part of the Student Signatures in Space program, students at St. Edward's Catholic School spent Thursday signing up.

In celebration of Space Day 2001, a giant poster was filed with more than 200 signatures of students, staff members and parents—names that will be sent to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration to be launched with Space Shuttle mission STS-108 in November.

The idea of the nationwide program—sponsored by NASA and Lockheed Martin Corp.—is to help students become more familiar with space by focusing their attention on past accomplishments and looking at the possibilities of space exploration "in a more involved way," sixth-grade teacher Joanne Draper said. "But the poster (itself) doesn't go into space—only the signatures."

According to the Signatures in Space program, more than half a million students from more than 500 schools across the United States—and 200 international participants—each year. All of the signed posters are photographed, but only the negatives-of-personal-signatures-are included in the mission.

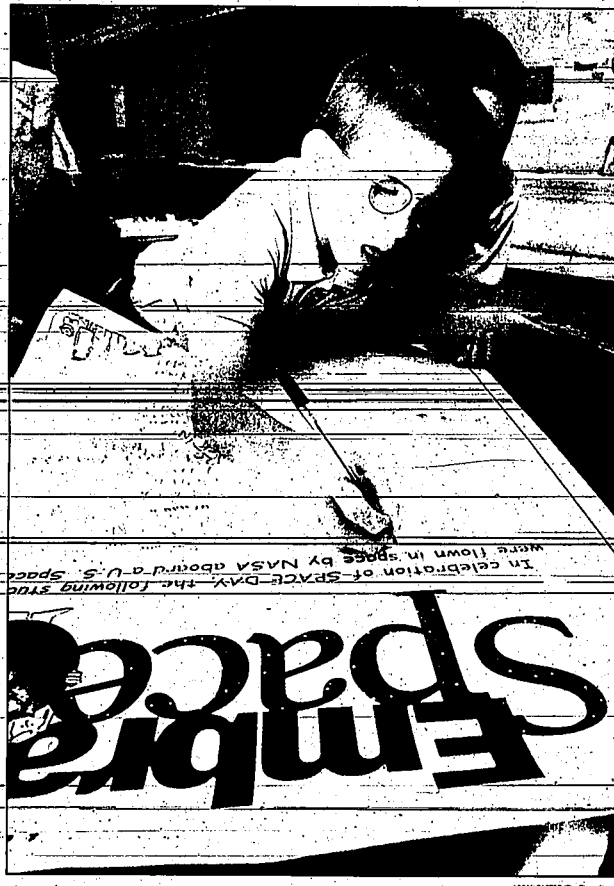

Following the flight, the posters are returned to the schools with official NASA certification of their journey, along with a photo of the crew that took their signatures into space.

Another feature of Space Day on Thursday was the fourth annual webcast live from the Smithsonian Air and Space Museum in Washington, D.C. Students at St. Edward's participated by asking questions over the Internet of experts such as former Sen. John Glenn, one of the original Mercury astronauts, and chief scientists of the International Space Station.

Sixth-grader Bennett Meeks wanted to know if it's possible to "transport air from earth to Mars?" But his friend, Kendall Turner was looking a little farther.

"Will we ever be able to leave our

Carving up the Constitution? Hailey woman seeks right to put up statue to honor dead son

By Karen Bosselock
Times-News correspondent

HAILEY—Eighteen years after losing her 8-year-old son to a hit-and-run accident in Twin Falls, Marilyn Simmons is attempting to get an angel statue to bring a measure of peace to herself and others who have lost children.

Simmons is determined to see "Our Little Angel" take wing, despite being stalled by the Hailey City Council, which is awaiting a ruling from its attorney on the constitutionality of allowing such a statue in a city park.

"I will build it with or without the city's blessing," said Simmons, who organized community-wide Thanksgiving dinners a few years ago and has been involved in a long list of civic activities, including the Chamber of Commerce, Rotary Club, Jaycees, Regional Marilyn Simmons has already planned several fundraisers to raise the $30,000 necessary to build the angel and its base and to provide for its upkeep.

Among them: the Ketchum Wide Open, a miniature golf event involving Ketchum bars and restaurants on May 8.

Other fundraisers include a street dance in Hailey on July 3, sales of glow necklaces and Viva Taqueria items at the Northern Rockies-Folk Festival Aug. 3 and 4, and proceeds from the beer garden at Bellevue's Labor Day Celebration. Shepherds face short season

Short water means abbreviated public lands grazing period

By Pat Murphy
Times-News correspondent

KETCHUM—Faced with a third consecutive year of drought, sheep ranchers using public lands in the Sawtooth National Forest probably face another abbreviated grazing season.

John Peavey, of Carey and Ketchum, a third-generation rancher who grazes some 4,000 sheep, said his bands arrived 30 to 45 days late last year and departed 30 to 45 days early because of water shortages. The 120-day grazing season in this area customarily runs between June 15 and Oct. 15.

Peavey, a former state senator, said water forages for his year seem as bad or worse than 1977, which was the worst in his memory, and trucking in water for sheep is not only expensive but also logistically difficult because of poor or inadequate roads for the heavy trucks.

"A similar pessimistic view of the summer grazing season also comes from the Ketchum district ranger, Kurt Nelson, who said the water situation in the Wood Drainage District is down to about 41 percent of capacity.

Nelson said meetings are now being held to evaluate the severity of the drought and to work with sheep ranchers in advance of the season on the water shortage problem.

Some 47,000 sheep were authorized last year for grazing the Sawtooth area, Nelson said.

Fish and Game lifts fish limits

By the Times-News and The Associated Press

BURLEY—The Fish and Game Commission on Thursday voted to lift bag, possession and size limits on five fishing areas in the drought-plagued Magic Valley.

The order, effective on Friday, covers Little Camas Reservoir in Elmore County, Thorn Creek Reservoir in Gooding County and Magic Reservoir, Lake and Fish Creek Reservoir and the creek below in Blaine County.

"The commission lifted the limits because rainbow trout stocked in the reservoirs and other game fish would likely die as water levels drop because of the drought.

Fred Wood, a Burley doctor who is also chair of the state Fish and Game Commission, said lifting the limits is the right thing to do.

"It's worth doing," Wood said. "The problem is, so many of those fish are going to perish. This is just a salvage maneuver. It's been done before and I think it's good."

Wood said in this case, it's much better if the fish are caught and then put in the fryer pan.

"You're far better off catching as many as you can and putting the protein to use instead of letting them rot," Wood said. "I would encourage all of the people that like to fish in Idaho to take advantage of this opportunity. Unfortunately, we have to do it."

Doctors discover Pole physician had heart attack

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. (AP) - A physician rescued from the South Pole underwent a procedure to clear his arteries Tuesday after doctors discovered he had suffered a heart attack in December.

lem may have not been diagnosed otherwise. "I believe pulling him out was fortunate," said Dr. Gerry Katz, physician adviser for the U.S. Antarctic program.

Dr. Ronald S. Shemanski, 59, had been scheduled to undergo gallbladder surgery Thursday, but the operation was postponed because of his heart problem, doctors said.

Doctors believe Shemanski suffered the heart attack when he complained of flu-like symptoms and chest pains in December.

The gallbladder condition was diagnosed while he was at the South Pole, and he was evacuated April 26.

The heart procedure will postpone gallbladder surgery for four to six weeks. Shemanski will return home to Oak Harbor, Ohio, to recover from the stent implant before returning to Denver for the gallbladder operation.

Tests performed Wednesday and Thursday revealed the blockage and scarring on his heart which was evidence of the heart attack.

Doctors said Shemanski was lucky to have the gallbladder condition because the heart problem may have not been diagnosed otherwise.

Hatchery accident kills 250,000 salmon smolts

LAPWAI (AP) - The Nez Perce Tribe announced late Thursday that an accident at a bludge of water intake system destroyed 250,000 coho salmon smolts that were being held for acclimation at the Salmon Bargaining Basin National Hatchery earlier this week.

The tribe said the intake became blocked on Tuesday because heavy rainfall the night before resulted in excessive silt and debris on the screens from Clear Creek. That caused the coho ponds to drain.

Bill Miller, manager for the Dworshak Fisheries Complex, said there was an alarm system intended to prevent the ponds from draining, but the alarm never activated.

We are committed to continue working with the tribe in their efforts to produce coho for the Clearwater River, Miller said.

IDAHO FALLS (AP) - Labor Secretary Elaine Chao announced on Thursday that the Idaho National Engineering and Environmental Laboratory will host a resource center for energy workers who have been exposed to radiation.

It is one of at least nine centers across the country that will help workers eligible for benefits under the Energy Employees Occupational Illness Compensation Program Act that takes effect July 31. It provides compensation and medical benefits to those suffering because of exposure to radiation, beryllium or silica.

Chao said she will be in Idaho Falls, Idaho, to meet with workers who have been wrangled by their government in the service of their country.

Rural subdivision raises concerns

CLIFF-HANGER

By Ruth Streeter
Times-News writer

BURLEY — Being agricultural through and through, the Magic Valley has never heard too many people complaining about farm odors.

And though the Cassia County Planning and Zoning Commission on Thursday approved a subdivision that neighbors a farming operation, the venture raised the concern of one commissioner.

Calvin and LaRae Merrill want to build a subdivision at 500 S. 74 E. The nine lots would be 1.5 or three acres each.

Because the property is zoned either prime ag or agricultural-residential, homeowners need to sign a waiver with the county acknowledging they are willing to put up with the nuisances that such a location might bring.

Despite the waiver and the Right to Farm Act, commission Chairman David Gerratt, who is also a Burley-area dairyman, said that often doesn't seem to matter when a farmer starts spreading manure.

"I have a real problem with subdivisions going out that far," Gerratt said. "You get enough neighbors out there and they seem to carry the vote."

LaRae Merrill said she didn't anticipate a problem among future homeowners because restrictive covenants allow a maximum of five animals per lot. So homeowners expect to live in an environment with farm animals, she said.

Although Gerratt had prepared, vote against the subdivision, he was prevented from rejecting the Merrills' plat application because the subdivision is classified as a small subdivision — less than 10 lots — and follows different permitting procedures than other subdivisions.

In other county business, commissioners discussed a conditional use permit application from Ron Kane of Burley, who is proposing a water recreation activity center on his property by the Snake River.

Kane, who runs an 80-acre farm east of Burley, said he has 1.5 acres on the river on which he wants to put the center. He has been building on it for the last 10 years, he said.

At $15 per person, Krane would take customers to the Walcott Dam and they would kayak, paddle or jet-ski down the Snake River to his docks. Krane would have 18 watercraft to rent.

Commissioners had not voted on Kane's application by press time.

Governors keep heat on California's Davis

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — A group of Republican governors, seeing an opportunity to make political headway in California during the energy crisis, elected Democratic Gov. Gray Davis on Thursday of failing to work closely enough with the rest of the West.

After a meeting in San Jose with representatives of high-tech companies, eight members of the Republican Governors Association took turns suggesting that Davis should stop expecting Washington to help.

"If we let the ball drop to a political fracas between the president and a wanna-be, we miss the boat," Wyoming Gov. Jim

— A3

Geringer said at a news conference. "We miss the true solution."

Geringer said Davis has been less willing than other governors to join conference calls or attend regional meetings to discuss the crisis.

Montana Gov. Judy Martz had been the most vocal critic, saying Davis "needs to be truthful with his constituents" about the Bush administration's reasons for opposing electricity price caps. She also said Davis "executive power is something that has not been used."

The governors had similar criticisms of Davis on Wednesday after a meeting in Beverly Hills. The other governors on hand were John Engler of Michigan, Tom Ridge of Pennsylvania, John Rowland of Connecticut, Dirk Kempthorne of Idaho, Mike Leavitt of Utah and Jane Hull of Arizona.

Davis spokesman Roger Salazar said the California governor has tried to address the power crisis as a regional issue, advocating temporary caps on wholesale electricity prices for the entire West.

"We get hit with both sides of the argument," Salazar said. "One side is, 'It's your problem, you have to figure this out by yourself.' And the other side is, 'You have to work with us.' It's kind of a schizophrenic argument."

Salazar said California is doing all it can, approving new power plants and encouraging conservation. "All we're asking is for the federal government to help in the short term," he said.

The GOP governors all indicated the energy crisis will be used against Davis in California's gubernatorial race next year.

"There's an amazing set of facts here to be talking about," Engler said.

CODY, Wyo. (AP) — After more than 1,700 miles of travel, Marvin Nash railed his 180-pound barrel into town Thursday on a tired rodeo clown.

"I think we've accomplished what we set out to do," said Nash, whose arrival ended a cross-country stunt to promote his message of personal responsibility.

Well-wishers lined the streets for Nash, who left Ocala, Fla., last December to reach Wyoming in time for a performing commitment at the Cody Nite Rodeo.

He said he plans to live in Cody.

"People have come to understand I believe in this so strongly I would walk 1,700 miles to make this point," said Nash, 46. "They know it's a bit of a wacky way to do this, but they respect it."

Nash hoped the stunt would help sell copies of his video and promote his program "Sort It Out," which teaches school children about making the right decisions in life. He spoke at a handful of schools on the trip.

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A federal judge has dismissed a lawsuit filed by the state's Public Utilities Commission by California's largest utility, Pacific Gas and Electric Co., that sought $10 billion from California ratepayers.

The U.S. District Court in San Francisco had intervened in the case, opposing the utility's request.

California's 1996 deregulation law froze electricity prices for customers of the state's three investor-owned utilities. When prices rose to record levels over the past year, PG&E was unable to recoup the higher costs from its customers' bills.

The undercollection, along with a failed deal to sell its transmission lines to the state, drove PG&E to file for federal Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection on April 6. Fellow utility Southern California Edison Co. leaders on the brink of bankruptcy, and San Diego Gas and Electric Co. faces similar financial troubles.

Federal judge dismisses $10 billion PG&E lawsuit

PG&E was banking on winning this case and using it as one of the reasons to sue the state with the government. It appears at least for now they failed.

The city of San Francisco, the state of California and The Utility Reform Network, a San Francisco-based consumer group, had intervened in the case, opposing the utility's request.

Colorado River water starts flowing into Tucson again

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) - Nearly a decade after a failed first attempt, Tucson gave Colorado River water another try. Mayor Bob Walkup turned on the pumps Thursday that will again send Central Arizona Project water flowing toward city pipes. During ceremonies at the $75-million Clearwater Westwater Resource Facility west of here, Walkup and Tucson Water officials promised there'll be no repeat of the 1992 fiasco when CAP water came out of customers' taps rusty, smelly and corrosive.

This time, the water is being pumped into the ground, where it will be filtered and blended with groundwater before finally being withdrawn again for use. "We have tested and tested and checked and checked and we are going to deliver clean and safe water to Tucson," Walkup said. With a redigged order from Walkup, technicians started up three pumps to begin the flow of recharged water for treatment and delivery to Tucson.

Crapo asks Congress to back salmon recovery program

Program would exclude breaching dams

BOISE (AP) - U.S. Sen. Michael Crapo still thinks endangered salmon and steelhead can be saved without breaching dams or draining Idaho reservoirs. Now he wants Congress to back him up with money. Crapo, Idaho's junior Republican senator, will propose an increase of more than $360 million in salmon spending in the Pacific Northwest. The money would be used for programs such as screening irrigation ditches, modifying dams, and restoring spawning habitat. "I have said for some time if we can't save the fish without breaching we should do so," Crapo said. "There are other ways to do nothing short of breaching - will work. This effort will help establish who's right and who's wrong." - Sen. Mike Crapo federal salmon plan released in December. The plan is designed to protect 12 stocks of endangered salmon and steelhead. It calls for a review of the breaching option in three, five and eight years. Crapo's proposal is designed to fund projects that biologists say are necessary to prevent the fish from going extinct and making breaching necessary. Tom Stuart of Stanley, a board member of Idaho Rivers United, said he wants to see details of Crapo's spending plan before commenting. "It's to his credit he's going to put a plan on the table," Stuart said. "He's exercising leadership in the majority party for the fish." The centerpiece of Crapo's Idaho funding would be habitat, water quality and migration improvements in the upper Salmon River. The Salmon Basin Watershed Project, based in Salmon, has been working to improve conditions in the river since before the fish were listed as endangered in 1992.

Judge charges drunk driver with manslaughter

NAMPA - A 31-year-old Nampa resident was charged with manslaughter after driving a car into a stop sign and broadside the driver's side of a car driven by Jonathan Redmond Sorrell, 23. Ralls' drivers license was suspended at the time of the wreck from his most recent drunken driving conviction. If convicted, Ralls faces a maximum of 20 years in prison and fines up to $15,000. A preliminary hearing is set for May 14.

Idaho/West in brief

Pocatello man faces indictment for growing pot - A man who had more than 1,000 pot plants growing in his house would face up to 20 years in prison if convicted on new federal charges. Cord Wilkey, 30, initially was arrested last week after police raided his house and found the basement filled with marijuana plants in various stages of growth, Assistant U.S. Attorney Mike Rice said. Wilkey was indicted by a federal grand jury this week for allegedly manufacturing a controlled substance and for possession of marijuana with intent to distribute. He was being held on Wednesday at the Bannock County Jail.

Josh and Jessica Jones are seen in the apartment they rent in Farmington, Utah, where severe winds blew down a tree and crushed the roof Thursday.

Groups to file suit in protest of salmon plan

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) - A coalition of environmental groups filed a federal lawsuit against the National Marine Fisheries Service on Thursday, claiming the federal agency's policies affecting Columbia and Snake river dams are driving endangered salmon toward extinction and "causing irreparable harm to the Northwest." The lawsuit, filed in U.S. District Court, charges that a biological opinion issued by the federal agency last December contains fundamental scientific and legal flaws that make it too easy to favor energy over saving fish. "The main point here is, we have a lot of ways to meet our energy needs," Todd True, an attorney with the Earthjustice Legal Defense Fund in Washington, D.C., said in a conference call. "These salmon only have one river forever. If we don't stop them, they will go extinct."

Community remembers Sunshine Mine disaster

BIG CREEK - Friends and relatives of the 91 men who died in the 1972 Sunshine Mine disaster gathered at the miners' Memorial to honor their sacrifice. A number of people attended Wednesday's informal ceremony even though it was the first year without an organized observance. "I lost my father, a brother and a cousin in the fire, said the appreciative support of those who turned out to honor the miners. "There are a lot of nice people in the community who have suffered through a lot," he said. The May 2, 1972, disaster - the nation's worst since 1917 - led to sweeping reforms in underground mining. They included creation of the federal Mine Safety and Health Administration and the requirement that miners carry breathing devices.

Traffic circles take Utah by storm

SALT LAKE CITY - Roundabouts, traffic circles, rotaries. Whatever you call them, get used to seeing them in Utah. In the last five years about 30 roundabouts have sprung up in the state, with dozens more planned for the future. Popular in Europe and on the East Coast, traffic circles have been a slow sell for westerners committed to the All-American stop light. "Proving a change in city ordinance two years ago to require developers to build roundabouts at any intersection that would have had a stop light, says the week Park City won an award from the Governor's office for a roundabout at a three-way intersection on state Route 224 in Old Town. Roundabouts reduce the number and severity of accidents, dilute road rage, cost less to maintain and, most importantly, they look pretty, said Bill Baranowski, transportation engineer for Seabrown, an engineering and architecture firm that designs roundabouts.

High winds sweep across Utah

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) - A wind storm swept through northern Utah early Thursday, snapping power lines and trees and leaving thousands of homes without power. The first signs of the storm kicked up Wednesday afternoon and intensified overnight, said David Toronto, warning coordination meteorologist at the National Weather Service's Salt Lake City office. The high winds are expected to continue through Thursday. About 20,000 households lost power at the height of the storm, said David Eskelsen, spokesman for Utah Power. The outages occurred in parts of Sandy, Salt Lake City, Tumble, and in Davis County. About 10,000 homes were still without power late Thursday morning. Worries about the wind prompted authorities to close Interstate 15 to tractor-trailers from 1 a.m. to 5:20 a.m., said Tammy Palmer, spokeswoman for the Department of Public Safety. However, the wind did not affect the highway. The state Transportation Department will monitor the weather Thursday to see if more closures are necessary. Overnight, Centerville reported gusts of 71 mph, while winds of 52 mph blew across the Great Salt Lake, Toronto said. In the Salt Lake suburb of Sandy, winds of 60 to 70 mph were reported. Centerville police had not received any reports of damage. In Sandy, dozens of trees limbs were downed and a 30-foot pine fell across a street, but no serious damage was reported, said Lt. Kevin Thacker. "We're making it OK," he said. The storm developed over Nevada, and while it sent the wind across Utah, it deposited blizzard conditions in some parts of Wyoming, Toronto said.

Seattle, said the lawsuit ignores the real danger of a drought this summer. Experts fear that low water levels and soaring power prices could lead to rolling blackouts. "I don't know where these people think they are. We are in the middle of a terrific drought," Gorman said. "We intentionally put a provision in there to allow the BPA to act in the event of a drought."

Fund-raising lags for Lewis and Clark center

LEWISTON - With the beginning of the three-year Lewis and Clark bicentennial less than two years off, advocates of an interpretative center at the confluence of the Clearwater and Snake rivers have a lot of work ahead of them. "This project is still in its infancy," admits Doreen Brinkmunt, who heads the five-year-old Astin County, Wash., Lewis and Clark Bicentennial Committee. Only $400,000 has been raised for the $8.4 million project slated for a site adjacent to the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers building and operations yard. The state of Washington and the federal government have added another $750,000. There will be an 18,000-square-foot center focusing on the river parts of the expedition and possibly displaying Nez Perce tribal artifacts. It will feature a sculpture commemorating the Corps of Discovery by Mia Lin, who designed the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington, D.C.

Elderly woman dies when clothing catches fire

SALT LAKE CITY - An 85-year-old Salt Lake County woman died when her clothing caught fire as she was lighting a cigarette. Firefighters found Rachel S. Jensen dead in her condominium just after 1:30 a.m. Wednesday, said county fire Capt. Jay Ziolkowski. An autopsy concluded that Jensen died of natural causes, but fire investigators found signs she tried to escape the fire, he said. A resident of the building called the fire department after hearing the smoke alarm going off in Jensen's residence, Ziolkowski said. The fire caused about $50,000 worth of smoke damage to the condominium, he said. - compiled from wire reports

Bear River may get new hydroelectric dam

PRESTON (AP) - A new company is investigating the construction of a dam on the Bear River below the existing Oneida Narrows Reservoir. Symbiotics LLC submitted a preliminary permit application to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission April 20, but it would not be granted until the preliminary permit would give Symbiotics three years to determine if a dam or other hydroelectric generation project would be feasible on the Bear River as it flows through Oneida Narrows Canyon about 10 miles northeast of Preston. Hart Evans, a spokesman for Ecosystems Research Institute, the company collecting data for Symbiotics, said Symbiotics has applied for permits at over 100 sites throughout the West in hopes of developing hydroelectric generation facilities. Evans said that if the Bear River project is feasible and environmentally sound, the construction and operation would likely fall to a local entity. Power from the facility would serve local interests, and would not be sold to large power companies like Utah Power and Idaho Power, Evans said. Symbiotics, he added, would work through the commission's permitting process and then help a local interest - such as a water district or a municipality - develop the actual project. The company would eventually profit from the facility's operation if it became a reality, Evans said. Symbiotics, according to the permit application, plans to spend between $750,000 and $1 million doing its feasibility research. According to the application, "the project would consist of an earthen dam, a concrete-lined canal, steel-penstocks and a concrete powerhouse containing hydroelectric generating units with a capacity of 12.8 megawatts." In that document, descriptions of the dam indicate it would be 715 feet long and 215 feet high. The reservoir behind the dam would have a storage capacity of 103,000 acre feet, about 30,000 acre feet smaller than Island Park Reservoir.

Barging begins at Columbia River dam

KENNEWICK, Wash. (AP) - A half million young salmon and steelhead are continuing their headlong swim to their new home in the Pacific Ocean after a brief assist from the hand of man. The release Wednesday below Bonneville Dam on the Columbia River east of Portland, Ore., marked the start of a U.S. Army Corps of Engineers program at McNary Dam to collect and barge juvenile fish around hydroelectric dams. With the region's rivers shrunken by drought and water temperatures already rising, the corps on Tuesday began its controversial fish barging program at McNary Dam 45 days earlier than usual.

Philippine president takes firm stance amid political unrest

MANILA, Philippines — President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo soothed jittery investors and reassured the public with her firm stance against coup plotters this week, revivifying her image as a relative political newcomer.

Many have questioned the capabilities of Arroyo — the well-educated daughter of a 1960s president — aides say she stayed calm and organized Tuesday when thousands of rowdy followers of ousted President Joseph Estrada tried to crash the presidential palace gates.

Gloria Arroyo

What followed was a night and day of mayhem that left at least six people dead, more than 100 wounded and a nation in shock at the brutal clashes.

Riot police fired hundreds of warning shots as the protesters battled them with stones and clubs, chanting "Down with Gloria." Within earshot of the crackling automatic weapons fire, aides say Arroyo calmly directed operations and met with her Cabinet, phone constantly in hand. At one point, she went outside the palace to inspect its defenses.

Hours later, she declared a "state of rebellion" in Manila, giving her power to use the military to quell protests and the police to make arrests without warrants. She accused opposition leaders of orchestrating the violence and ordered their arrests, refusing to rule out the possibility of declaring martial law if new riots erupted.

Taliban rejects U.N. cease-fire proposal

KABUL, Afghanistan — The ruling Taliban on Thursday rejected an appeal from the U.N.'s top refugee official for a temporary truce in Afghanistan's civil war, but said it was still open to peace talks to end the devastating conflict.

Ruud Lubbers, the U.N. high commissioner for refugees, has been pressing for a cease-fire of six months to a year during a tour of Afghanistan to see the plight of millions of Afghans driven from their homes by war and drought.

Lubbers said after his meeting Thursday with the Taliban that neither side seemed willing to be the first to stop fighting.

Both sides are known to be sending weapons and troops to the front lines for more fighting. The Taliban rule 95 percent of Afghanistan and the opposition 5 percent. Afghanistan has the world's largest internal refugee population, with more than 470,000 living in squalid camps. On the northern border with Tajikistan, another 10,000 people are stranded on a dried-up riverbed, denied entry into the neighboring country.

Milosevic refuses to accept U.N. war crimes indictment

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — A defiant Slobodan Milosevic refused to accept an arrest warrant from the U.N. war crimes tribunal delivered to his jail cell Thursday, a day after the court threatened Yugoslavia with sanctions for failing to serve it.

The warrant and a list of the war crimes charges against the former president were delivered to Belgrade's Central Prison, where Milosevic has been held since his arrest April 1. Belgrade District Court said the warrant was brought to him so he could "get acquainted with its content."

But a defense lawyer representing Milosevic told The Associated Press on condition of anonymity that Milosevic refused to accept the documents from a court official, who eventually left them tucked between the bars on the tiny window of his cell door.

Even so, the tribunal said it considered the warrant delivered, ending a long-running dispute over whether it had actually been given to Milosevic after it was formally presented to Yugoslav authorities last month by Hans Holthuis, chief registrar of the tribunal based in The Hague, Netherlands.

World in brief

The price of a new malaria drug for Africa, and a French-German company, stepped into the battle against sleeping sickness.

The offers, disclosed as the pharmaceutical industry faces pressure to provide AIDS drugs at low prices to developing countries, were welcomed by the World Health Organization.

Under pressure to reduce their prices in poor countries, drug companies have moved to cut the price of AIDS treatment in recent months. Pharmaceutical companies also supply free or low-cost drugs for a number of other diseases in developing countries.

Thousands attend funeral of Sherpa who died on Everest

KATMANDU, Nepal — Thousands of friends and admirers offered prayers Thursday at the state funeral for Babu Chhiri, a famed Sherpa guide who died on Mount Everest.

The climber's body was driven through the streets of Katmandu on an open truck until it reached the crematorium. People lined the route and tossed khadas, ceremonial cream-colored scarves used on sacred occasions.

Chhiri, 35, who set a record last year by climbing Everest in 16 hours and 56 minutes, died Sunday after falling into a crevasse on the mountain.

Hitting all THE RIGHT NOTES

The Magic Valley Symphony director Ted Hadley conducts a rehearsal Monday evening at the College of Southern Idaho's Fine Arts Center auditorium. The symphony will perform its annual pops concert tonight.

Bach, Broadway highlight symphony's concert

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS - From Baroque to Broadway, with the classics and the Can-Can, with a little Strauss and a sing-a-long thrown in for good measure, there's something for everyone at tonight's Magic Valley Symphony's pops concert. Symphony conductor and director Ted Hadley said the pops concert is in-keeping with the orchestra's year-long theme, the Four Seasons.

"The program will include a wide variety of entertaining, short pieces," Hadley said. "This is our last concert of the season and we want it to be a bit different and lots of fun."

The evening's lineup includes show-tunes including selections from "My Fair Lady" and "Man of La Mancha," along with a march and gallop. "We also have a surprise in mind, so our audience should come prepared to join in a sing-along," Hadley said.

Guest soloists will include soprano Serena Jenkins Clark and xylophonist Steve Cox. Cox will perform "Serenade for a Picket Fence," with a little help from the symphony.

He began his musical career in Twin Falls as a member of Hadley's Twin Falls High School Band. While at TFHS, Cox was Idaho's representative in the McDonalds All-American High School Band. After high school, Cox earned a degree in music from Brigham Young University in Provo, Utah.

Clark, fresh from her portrayal of Nellie Forbush in the recent Dalcrozes of the Magic Valley production of "South Pacific" will sing operatic arias from two different composers' operas based on Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet."

'The Mummy Returns': All wrapped up and nowhere to go

By Duane Dudek
Milwaukee Journal Sentinel

"The Mummy Returns" is all Cracker Jack and no prize. In the rush to digitally visualize the unimaginable, writer-director Stephen Sommers has created a sequel that is long on sensation and short on feeling.

The first film had a human warmth and an eye-winking tone, and capitalized on the affection audiences demonstrated for the serial escapism of "Raiders of the Lost Ark" a generation ago.

Continuing the comparison, then, "The Mummy Returns" is

Flix

"the equivalent of 'Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom.'"

That second film in the "Indy" series added a kid and then amplified the violence in a way that was inappropriate for the younger viewers it wanted to draw, causing the industry to create a new ratings category, PG-13.

"The Mummy Returns" also adds a kid, the 8-year-old son of archaeologists played by Brendan Fraser and Rachel Weisz from the first film. And it is also quite violent, but cheats death by appearing bloodless. After all, if you behead the risen undead army of the Mummy, again played by Arnold Vosloo, and they turn to dust, does that count? But the constant gunfights and swordplay also yield countless human victims.

The result is an "Indiana Jones" film for audiences with short attention spans.

Little time is spent investigating character, motive or backstory. People just appear - like John Hannah's greedy coward or Oded Fehr's crusading nomad with the facial tattoos - without explanation. Too, chapters' worth of exposition about Egyptian history are condensed into dense dialogue in which characters explain what's going on to each other, not to us.

References to the last film will be familiar to fanatics but may test the memory of the casual viewer and puzzle the uninitiated.

And an Egyptian warrior, played by Dwayne Johnson (known to wrestling fans as The Rock), who fills his soul to the jackal-headed god Anubis in the film's opening, returns at the end - having undergone a monstrous transformation that is left unexplained but which, not that surprising

Summer movies promise a fight to the finish for top spot

The Dallas Morning News

This summer's fight to be the box-office champ promises to be wilder than ever. The heavyweight contenders: "Pearl Harbor," "Jurassic Park III," "Tom Riddle," "Planet of the Apes," "A.I.: Artificial Intelligence" and "Atlantis: The Lost Empire."

Think big

- "A Knight's Tale" (May 11) - A shining-armor fable told to the tune of classic rock. Heath Ledger stands to make good on the promise of The Patriot. Also features a naked Chaucer.
- "Pearl Harbor" (May 25) - If the box-office figures for this high-stakes World War II spectacle fail to measure from here to eternity, a lot of people will be in "big trouble" among them. Ben Affleck, whose leap to mega-stardom the film is expected to provide. The trailer, with a bomb-eye view of the harbor, looks striking.

- "Tom Riddle" (June 15) - Oscar victory notwithstanding, Angelina Jolie has yet to have a career-defining role. The role of video game heroine Lara Croft, most handily described as a female Indiana Jones, could become her defining role. Poppa Jon Voight plays Lara's father.
- "A.I.: Artificial Intelligence" (June 29) - A movie for two-wunderkids, with Steven Spielberg taking over a project long planned by Stanley Kubrick. Solemn-faced Haley Joel Osment stars as a young robot who longs for a more human experience. Sounds like E.T. again, but buzz says it's dramatically intense rather than sweetly wistful.

We've met before

- "Dr. Dolittle 2" (June 22) - Eddie Murphy talks to the animals again, trying to mate two bears (given voice by Lisa Kudrow and Steve Zahn). Aside from the mating, the film probably explores their body functions as well. If we know Dr. Murphy's sense of humor,
- "Scary Movie 2" (July 4) -

Somehow this recycled fright-flick will have to survive without the $2 million cameo appearance of the ailing Marion Brando. Those on board are Tim Curry, Chris Elliott, various Wayne siblings and the one and only Tom Spelling.

- "Jurassic Park III" (July 18) - Joe Johnston directs under Master Spielberg's stewardship. Sam Neill, Tea Leoni and the usually indie-oriented William H. Macy are marooned on the dino-inhabited island, giving the T-Rexes something to growl about.
- "Planet of the Apes" (July 27) - Tim Burton's revisionist Sleepy Hollow was a success. Will he be equally deft handling Apes? The make-up looks plenty hairy, but Helena Bonham Carter's cosmopolitan female "ape" may raise eyebrows. Mark Wahlberg stars, with original hero Charlton Heston playing an ancient, wise simian.

- "Rush Hour 2" (Aug. 3) - Jackie Chan and Chris Tucker go to Hong Kong. But the real kicker should be Zhang Ziyi, the poignant ingenue of Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon, in a role written for a man.
- "American Pie 2" (Aug. 17) - Chris Klein, Jason Biggs, Shannon Elizabeth and all the guys are back. The guys lost their virginity in the first movie. Apparently, they've still got something left to lose. Should be good for at least an opening-weekend slice.

WEEKEND

'Me You Them,' 'Memento' hit local theaters

Combined wire services

Movies playing in south-central Idaho this weekend. Opinions are by Los Angeles Times and Associated Press reviewers. Ratings by the Motion Picture Association of America are: (G) for general audiences; (PG) parental guidance urged because of material possibly objectionable for children; (PG-13) parents are strongly cautioned to give guidance for attendance of children younger than 13; (R) restricted, younger than 17 admitted only with parent or adult guardian; (NC-17) no one younger than 17 admitted.

'Along Came A Spider'

There are both mysteries and surprises in this reasonably diverting albeit frequently improbable thriller, but the biggest mystery of all is hardly a surprise: How does star Morgan Freeman manage to give a master class in acting every time he appears on screen? The film tries its hardest to outsmart us, yet in general outline and rhythm it's fairly standard. With Monica Potter. Directed by Lee Tamahori. (1:43. R, for violence and language).

'Blow'

The problem is not so much that a film was made about a drug dealer as that once the opening section's energy has dissipated, no one could find a way to make the proceedings of even minimal interest. A film where the notion that 'drugs make you lose sight of what's important' passes for a searing insight is more tired than it knows or wants to admit. With Johnny Depp and Penelope Cruz. Directed by Ted Demme. (2:00. R, for pervasive drug content)

Big box office

- Last weekend's movie box office leaders:
1. 'Driven,' Warner Bros.

 5. 'Crocodile Dundee in Los Angeles,' Paramount.

and language, some violence and sexuality.)

'Bridget Jones's Diary'

A cheerful and cheeky confession that survives its excesses and the liberties it takes with the best-selling novel about the comic agonies of being single in a married world by smartly mixing knock-about farce with fairy tale romance. Cleverly written and, with Hugh Grant, Colin Firth and the appealing Rene Zellweger in the lead roles, ideally cast as well. (1:34. R, for language and some strong sexuality.)

'Brigham City'

Richard Dutcher's chiller about faith, love and murder in a small Utah town. Rated PG-13.

'Crocodile Dundee in Los Angeles'

The glib man wears our his welcome with a flat and listless visit to the City of Angels. Dundee and his creator, Paul Hogan, should stick to tourism. With Linda Kozlowski, Paul Rodriguez. Directed by Simon Wincer. (1:35. PG, for some language and brief violence.)

'Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon'

A film by Ang Lee that transcends categorization and reminds us simply, powerfully, indelibly — what we go to the movies for. A delightful one-of-a-kind martial arts romance, where astounding fight sequences alternate with passionate yet idealistic love duets. 'Crouching Tiger' is a fusion film from top to bottom. Starring Chow Yun Fat, Michelle Yeoh and Zhang Ziyi. (1:59. R) (12 for martial arts violence and some sexuality.)

look thrilling. Written by and starring Sylvester Stallone, with Burt Reynolds and Kip Pardue. (1:57. PG-13, for language and some intense crash sequences.)

'Enemy at the Gates'

'Enemy at the Gates' lumbers clumsily across the screen like one of its own Nazi tanks. This World War II tale of a sniper duo that parallels the bloody battle for Stalingrad has an indisputable visual power but it's nothing you'd want to have a conversation with — or, for that matter, about. Stars Jude Law and Ed Harris. With Joseph Fiennes. Directed by Jean-Jacques Annaud. (2:11. R, strong graphic war violence and some sexuality.)

'Exit Wounds'

He's clipped that silly ponytail, but Steven Seagal still delivers his mumbly brand of sadistic justice as a Detroit Dirty Harry out to nab a millionaire drug dealer (rapper DMX). No matter how furiously they're edited, Seagal's fight scenes look lazy and graceless, and the only thing number of the title is the way Canada's director forgoes a Rated R violence, profanity, nudity. 1 hour, 41 minutes.

'The Forsaken'

Putting a sardonic, postmodern kick on the undead from the expert zombie map, director-writer J.S. Cardone maneuvers his cast of ravishing kids - many from the teen TV world - through the ravages of ghoulish possession. It's an outing down 'Dawson's Creek' by way of the River Styx. With Kerr Smith and Brandon Ratter (131, R, for strong violence/gore, language and sexuality).

'Freddy Got Fingered'

Tom Green's pointless, brainless and aggressively over-the-top antics of goofball grossness shows that he may have a future in television. He plays an aspiring animator living in his parents' basement. Dad (Rip Torn) wants him out. With Julie Hagerty, Brian Coughlan, Harland Williams and a cameo by Green's spouse, Drew Barrymore, Green directs a script he wrote with Derek Haavik. (134, R, for crude sexual and bizarre humor, and for strong language.)

'Heartbreakers'

Sigourney Weaver and Jennifer Love Hewitt are terrific as a world-class mother-and-daughter con artist team who set out for the big score in 'Palm Beach' but are ultimately confronted with their need-for-love. Their high spirits are contagious yet cannot paper over the feeling that the film is overly labored and overly long. With Ray Liotta, Gene Hackman, Jason Lee and Anne Bancroft. (203, PG-13, for sex-related content, including dialogue.)

'House of Mirrors'

Verence Davies' adaptation of Edith Wharton's novel, which he calls "Jane Austen with the gloves off," is nearly as genteel-and-understanding as Martin Scorsese's "The Age of Innocence," also by Wharton. If this upper caste New Yorkers are constricted-by-etiquette-and-appearances, they're also too eager to take advantage of someone else's refusal to play by the rules. The titular victim is a socialite, played surprisingly well by Gillian Anderson, whose need to marry well causes inner conflict that culminates in tragedy. The supporting cast includes Eric Roberts as the man she could love and Anthony Quinn as her emotional violence. 2 hours, 20 minutes.

'Joe Dirt'

Lewndness, scatology and David Spade's hairdresser rule in this farcical ode to the basic goodness of white trash. Spade is a janitor who searches for his long estranged parents and gets a lot of coney things dumped on his head along the way. What are you waiting for? (129, PG-13, for crude and sex-related humor, language.)

'Jose and the Pussycats'

A sweet-toured bubblegum movie about the escapades of an all-girl band, and like those venerable Frankie and Annette beach movies, it gets a lot of mileage out of its spirited performers and their peppy music. Written and directed by Deborah Kaplan and Harry

The Brazilian comedy 'Me You Them' comes to theaters this week.

Elifont and based more on a notion than an actual plot, it's all about girls having fun and saving the world. (108, PG-13, for crude and sexual humor, language.)

'Me You Them'

'Delightful and droll Brazilian comedy about a woman who can't find everything she wants in a single man. So she opts for three of them in one household. PG-13 (sex, adult themes).

'Memento'

Christopher Nolan's exceptional new film, a haunting, nervy thriller about a man who can remember nothing at all. More than a film of ideas, however, it's a provocatively structured and thrillingly executed film noir an intricate, creative use of cinema's possibilities that pushes what can be done on screen in an unusual direction. With Guy Pearce, Carrie-Anne Moss and Joe Pantoliano. (145, R, for violence, language and some drug content.)

'The Mummy Returns'

A sequel at least as big, dumb, corny and overloaded with visual excess as its predecessor. And like 'The Mummy' a surprise hit two years ago, it's a fun, good-natured fun. Our happy couple (Brendan Fraser and Rachel Weisz), now blessed with a son who can't stay out of trouble, must again dispatch the resurrected Imhotep, who's back to fight the villainous Scorpion King (professional wrestler The Rock). The computer-generated creatures go to headache-inducing lengths this time out. But in general, these modern 'Mummy' flicks are summer popcorn fare at its best, or worst. Rapid escapism made palatable by a relentless onslaught of action and imagery and a bunch of likable, lunkheaded heroes. PG-13 for adventure action and violence. 129 minutes.

'One Night at McCool's'

Crass, ponderous, overly talky screwball femme fatale crime-comedy benefits from Liv Ullmann's lascivious and amusing vamp, who threatens to lead Matt Dillon, John Goodman and Paul Reiser to ruin. With Michael Douglas, who co-produced. (R, for violence, sexuality and language.)

'Someone Like You'

A jaunty romantic comedy that's a comfortable fit for Ashley Judd, who in turn is surrounded by a stellar supporting cast including Greg Kinnear, Hugh Jackman, Marisa Tomei and Ellen Barkin. Adapted by Elizabeth Chandler from Laura Zigman's novel.

Isaqui's Animal Husbandry, the film is so comfortable and well-paced, and director Tony Goldwyn brings to it an all-too-rare buoyancy and breeziness. (147, PG-13 for sexual content, including dialogue, and for some language.)

'See Spot Run'

The FBI's top dog hooks up with an irresponsible mailman (David Arquette) in an ex-crable comedy aimed at kids. This mangy mutt is really three movies in one, with nods to Dean Jones-era Disney, the last Adam Sandler hit, 'Big Daddy,' plus the kind of sick-gags (dog poop, flatulence) that modern comedies can't seem to live without. Rated PG; gross-out humor, comic violence. 1 hour, 34 minutes.

'Spy Kids'

An engaging premise (two pre-teens have to rescue spy parents Antonio Banderas and Gary Oldman) is made into a winning family film that's lively, imaginative and possessed of a playful sense of humor. Not what you'd expect from the maker of 'Mariachi' and 'From Justin to Kelly,' but writer-director Robert Rodriguez is apparently smart of a big kid at heart. (128, PG, for action sequences.)

'Town and Country'

A would-be romantic comedy that plays like 'Crime and Punishment' and makes as many bad choices as its increasingly desperate characters. So many, in fact, you end up feeling more sympathy for the actors trapped in than the individuals they portray. With Warren Beatty, Diane Keaton, Goldie Hawn and Garry Shandling. (144, R, for sexuality and language.)

'Emperor's New Groove' reaches shelves

The Washington Post

New videos in Twin Falls-area stores this weekend:

'The Emperor's New Groove'

Dave Spade is hilarious as the voice of the title emperor Kuzco, the brattiest of brats that ever ruled a cartoon people. And Patrick Warburton is a scene stealer as a bungling lug named Kronk. When we first meet Kuzco, he's a larval, turned into a spell-by-wicked-rooster-adviser Yzma (a wonderfully dyspeptic Eartha Kitt).

Kuzco is going to have to get over his arrogance and accept the help of a peasant named Pacha (John Goodman), who eventually walks upright again. Spade and Warburton (Puddy on the old 'Seinfeld' television series) transform a pretty standard story line into a riot fest. But their humor doesn't fly over children's heads. Kronk's childish putzance and Kuzco's goofiness will get through to any kid. Contains nothing objectionable, except maybe the consumption of squishy bug food. Rated G.

'Miss Congeniality'

Sandra Bullock may be an okay actress, but she's a lousy producer, creating such star-vehicle flops as the 1998 tear-yanker 'Hope Floats' and now 'Miss Congeniality,' an anemic made-for-TV-grade comedy about a tomboyish FBI agent (Bullock) forced to go undercover as a beauty pageant contestant to flush out terrorist. The jokes are as flat as (supposedly) her character. Gracie Hart's chest - which frankly is not that flat, but that doesn't stop the writers from trotting out a hoary sight gag about falsies. There are also stale yuks based on the stereotype of cops as coffee and doughnut-obsessed boors and blondes as empty-headed bimboes. Benjamin Bratt looks dazed and sexless as Gracie's partner/love interest, while William Shamer, playing a cheesy pageant emcee, does little more than reprise his self-parodying/priceline.com shtick. Contains mild obscenity, a bloodless shootout and ogling of women in bathing suits. Rated PG.

DVD to take audio, video to brave new world

Artists and music executives embrace this new technology

Knight Rider News Service

Since Thomas Edison unveiled his first scratchy phonographs, there's been one overriding quest in the world of recording: Make it sound as close to the real thing as possible.

We're almost there.

In December 1889, German composer Johannes Brahms sat at a piano and performed a brilliant rendition of his "Hungarian Dance No. 1." Standing nearby was an Edison associate operating a crude acoustic horn, capturing the history.

Or trying, at any rate.

The ancient cylinder recording process was replaced, with that brilliant performance recorded beneath a middle of crackle and fuzz. But the phonograph was an infant, and the Brahms session was revolutionary.

The latest Brahms recording is revolutionary, too. It's "Quiet in F Minor," recorded this summer in six-channel DVD-Audio, an emerging format with sound quality three times that of a CD. Listen, and you find yourself seated amid the ensemble. A violin bow rustles over here. A musician exhales over there.

And a rich, gorgeous halo of sound wraps around you. It's exhilarating, dazzling, even breathtaking.

With the advent of DVD technology — and its ongoing foray into the public conscious — music promises to go in dizzying new directions. DVD's intrinsic surround-sound and high fidelity mean brand-new ways to make and listen to music.

And DVD offers much more than sounds. Artists can add onscreen song information, behind-the-scenes footage and any other fireworks their creative brains can dream up.

The music business is typically chronicle by what we see on the surface — Eminem's latest imbroglio, a new corporate merger, the Napster controversy.

But the real heart of the modern music world beats in a rarely seen province: the recording studio, where the music that colors our lives and defines our culture is hatched and groomed. Artists write and perform the songs; engineers and producers convert them into the stuff we hear.

In that sense, we have arrived at one of the most important frontiers in the history of recorded music. Just as the 45-r.p.m. single spawned the 3.5-minute pop song, just as stereo technology guided the artistry of groups like the Beatles, so DVD will transform the music we make and hear.

The first landmark moment arrived this month, when Warner Music Group launched seven DVD-Audio titles, including the Stone Temple Pilots' "Push," Natalie Merchant's "Tigerlily" and Emerson, Lake & Palmer's "Brain Salad Surgery." Warner has another batch scheduled for release in December, and other big labels are right behind.

In some conservative quarters of the music business, there's skepticism — a latent fear that Even DVD aficionados concede that you can't be doing it one, crammed with graphics and numbers that take some sorting out.

Here's a quick primer.

DVD: Digital Versatile Disc. Shaped like a compact disc, it holds far more data, allowing for higher audio and video fidelity.

Destined to make the VCR obsolete and the compact disc antiquated.

More than 13.5 million players will be in U.S. homes by year's end.

Multichannel surround sound: Technology that splits an audio signal into distinct parts surrounding the listener.

With stereo, 5 mix is divided during production into two channels: left and right.

The most common DVD surround for-

About DVD

...mats, DTS and Dolby Digital, divide the mix into six channels. Listeners are enraptured by sound.

DVD-Video: An established disc format that showcases video. Sound is CD-quality and can be multichannel. When you're buying music videos, check the package: Not all releases take advantage of the surround elements.

And many titles that do, particularly older works reconfigured for DVD, are simply gooseing up the existing stereo mix — a kind of pseudo-surround.

Ideal are DVDs like Peter Dinklage's "Live in Detroit," in which the surround mix has been crafted from the original tracks recorded at Pine Knob. It's compatible with any existing or future DVD-Video player.

DVD-Audio: An emerging disc format that showcases music. Sound fidelity far surpasses CD and DVD-Video. There's multichannel capability for sound, and some disc space available for artists who wish to incorporate limited video.

Here's where it gets tricky: New DVD-Audio releases will include standard surround and stereo mixes to allow play on existing DVD machines.

But to take advantage of the newly increased fidelity — the Advanced Resolution mix — users will need a DVD-Audio player.

Despite the temptations of the holiday season, prospective DVD coolies might want to wait about six months before purchasing a player... that's when prices on dual DVD-Audio/Video players, arriving in stores now, will begin dropping from the $800-plus level.

10th Season

DVD-Audio is another gimmick, a contemporary 8-track tape destined to crash and burn.

But at the September convention of the Audio Engineering Society — the 109th annual such gathering — surround sound dominated the agenda. These are the folks who make music sound the way it sounds. They're tired of cramming music into two stereo channels and are positively pumped about the new technology's potential.

"DVD is not just a grown-up CD," says producer Mark Waldrep, whose AIX Records will release the Brahms recording early next year. "This is an entirely new art form."

Forward-thinking music executives are just as giddy.

"The CD is 17 years old. In the digital world, that's several lifetimes," says Jordan Rost, Warner's senior vice president of new technology. "But the CD is still very popular. There would be no reason to move ahead unless we could make a quantum leap forward in quality. And that's what we've done."

Just ask Neil Young. The prolific rock legend's recent, continuing work in the '80s blasting the compact disc as inferior to the LP it supplanted. But now he's among the first round of artists embracing DVD-Audio, a format that the most technology-savvy, more faithful-sounding than the loathed CD. He's jumped in head-first, with his concert album "Red Rocks Live" set for DVD-Audio release in December.

As with most new music technologies, look to audiophiles those obsessive-cared enthusiasts who invest bushels of bucks in their home theater systems — to be the first adopters of DVD-Audio equipment.

With high-end systems now more than $1,000, and a list price of $24.98 for each of Warner's new releases, accessibility for most consumers may be months down the road.

Whatever the future of DVD-Audio, curious fans can already get a dose of DVD's ability to enhance music.

While labels and manufacturers spent the late '90s battling over DVD-Audio's technical issues — namely, anti-piracy encryption — record stores began stocking music-film titles on DVD-Video, the format that has driven the DVD market since it emerged in 1997.

Savvy entertainment buffs already know the benefits of

DVD cinema: They've replaced their VHS machines with DVD players, reaping the benefits of DVD's pristine picture and digital surround sound for home movie viewing.

More than 13.5 million U.S. households will own a DVD-Video player by year's end.

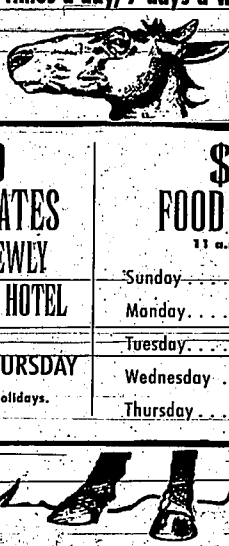

DVD-Video doesn't offer the same sonic quality that comes with DVD-Audio. The technical specifications of DVD-Video devote most of the disc space to video. But the space that's left still allows for CD-quality sound and surround mixes that can animate familiar old music.

Weed Control

DANDELION
The dandelion is a troublesome weed in bluegrass lawns. It is most troublesome in the cooler regions of the country where it persists year-round. The bright yellow flower of the dandelion appears from early spring through summer where it contrasts sharply with the color and texture of turf grasses. Dandelions are readily controlled by 2,4-D, or products containing 2,4-D, if applications are made in fall or early spring before the plants begin to flower. After flowering begins, 2,4-D will wilt and curl the leaves and flower stalks, but the plants often survive the treatment, so early treatment is desirable.

"Maybe I was pressing too hard early," Barnes said. "I started getting frustrated because I was missing the few chances that I was given..."

Going into today's series with Treasure Valley Community College, Barnes is batting .348 with three home runs...

"I like to hit in the four-or-five spot," Barnes said. "I like to be an RBI guy and that's what they've been wanting me to do..."

Barnes' no-nonsense approach and dedication to hitting has made him one of the Eagles' hottest hitters down the stretch...

One reason Barnes has found success at the plate as a freshman is because he has experience swinging a wooden bat...

"We played with wood bats during summer ball my freshman and senior year," Barnes said. "That helped me a lot. It helped me understand the game with a wood bat vs. an aluminum bat..."

"We've seen a few guys that have some decent stuff," Barnes said. "It's been pretty easy to just look fastball because we haven't seen a lot of guys that have control over their pitches..."

Question and Answer What's been your highlight this season? "Hitting a grand slam against Lane Community College..."

Was there pressure growing up with a dad that was a major leaguer? "Maybe, maybe not. I was a good guy to grow up with and listen to as far as baseball goes..."

How do you feel about the pressure of being a star player? "I don't feel any pressure from people..."

Defenders of college-betting nearly pull an upset in Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) — Backers of legal sports betting nearly pulled an upset Thursday, falling only one vote short of defeating a bill considered the chief threat in Congress to America's casino industry. The Senate Commerce Committee split 10-10 over whether to put a bill outlawing betting on college sports, which is legal only in Nevada...

Sen. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., said her initial reaction was to support the proposed ban. But after studying the issue at the request of Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev., she concluded the bill unfairly targets one state and could do more harm than good by driving legal gambling underground. Supporters of the bill include Republican Sens. John McCain, chairman of the Commerce Committee, and Sam Brownback of Kansas, along with the NCAA and a number of big-name college coaches...

Stankowski shoots course-record 61

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Late in the day, Paul Stankowski started thinking about shooting a 59. "He didn't reach golf's magic number, but with a course-and-tournament record 61, and a three-stroke lead after the first round of the $4-million, multi-day Classic, Stankowski didn't have anything to complain about Thursday. "It would have been a nice thing," said Stankowski, who just won on the PGA Tour since 1997. "But it's the first round and I'm not out here to try to shoot 59. I'm here to try to win the golf tournament. And I got myself in a good position today."

PGA Tour only by Al Geiberger, Chip Beck and David Duval, and by Annika Sorenstam after this year on the LPGA Tour — but put her in the final three holes. Stankowski, whose last victory came in the Hawaiian Open four years ago, covered the 7,116-yard Eagle Turn course one shot better than Dennis Paulson, who set the old record of 62 in the second round in 1994. Brian Watts and Kenny Perry, playing in the morning, took the early lead with 64s. Jim Carter, Keith Clearwater and Brian Wilson were one shot back. Heavy overnight rain delayed Thursday's round for four hours and 75 players did not complete 18 holes.

Senators debate sports betting

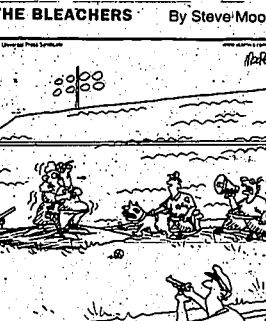

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Commerce Committee on Thursday passed a bill to legalize sports betting in Nevada, but the bill survived and now goes to the full Senate. The fact is, the momentum is clearly on our side," said Sen. John Ensign, R-Nev., who led opposition to the bill. "Two months ago we were dead in the water. We had no chance."

Sen. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., said her initial reaction was to support the proposed ban. But after studying the issue at the request of Sen. Athletics outlast Jays in 15 innings

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Frank Menechino singled in the winning run in the 15th inning as the Oakland Athletics overcame a 2-0 deficit to beat the Toronto Blue Jays 3-2 Thursday.

Toronto had loaded the bases in the top half, but Chad Bradford (3-1) struck out Jeff Foye to end the inning. Ramon Hernandez singled off Pedro Borbon in the fifth, was sacrificed to second by Johnny Damon and scored on Menechino's bounce to center. Delgado homered in the second and fourth innings off Tim Hudson. Delgado's third multi-homer game this season and the 25th of his career.

Indians 9, Royals 4

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Juan Gonzalez had three hits, increasing his average to .388, and Dave Burba (4-1) won his fourth straight start as Cleveland completed a three-game sweep. Kenny Lofton had a single, double and two-run triple for Cleveland, which has won five straight. Burba allowed four runs and nine hits in 6-1/3 innings, and Steve Karsay and Bob Wickman combined for one-hit relief. Dan Reichenher (3-2) gave up seven runs, three earned, and seven hits in five innings, hurt by four errors.

Tigers 9, Rangers 4

ARLINGTON, Texas — Dean Palmer and Juan Encarnacion homered in a five-run first as Detroit finished a three-game sweep. Dave Milicki (2-2) allowed all four runs and seven hits in eight innings and struck out nine. Rick Hilling (1-5) gave up six runs and nine hits in seven innings, his ERA falling from 8.07 to 8.01.

Yankees 7, Orioles 5

BALTIMORE — Alfonso Soriano scored the tiebreaking run on a controversial play in the sixth inning as New York overcame a grand slam by Jeff Conine to beat Baltimore.

Oakland's Ramon Hernandez, left, scores behind Toronto catcher Darin Fletcher to win the game in the 15th inning Thursday in Oakland, Calif.

Scott Brosius homered for the Yankees, who wasted a four-run lead before taking charge against the Baltimore bullpen. After Conine tied the score in the fifth inning with his fourth career slam, New York went up 6-5 in the sixth against Chad Paronto (1-1). Soriano hit a one-out double and stole third before Joe Oliver hit a liner to left. Soriano tagged Pedro Borbon in the seventh from up and barely beat the throw from Brady Anderson, but the Orioles left the base too early. The appeal was denied, and Baltimore manager Mike Hargrove was ejected by plate umpire Charlie Relton during the ensuing argument. Ramiro Mendoza (2-0) got the win and Mariano Rivera got his seventh save.

National League

appearance in a regular-season game since Oct. 3, 1999. Jones (1-3) got his first win with the Padres and Trevor Hoffman got his third save.

Phillies 7, Rockies 5

CINCINNATI — Eric Karros doubled twice and drove in four runs as Los Angeles won for the seventh time in eight games. Dion Sanders went 4-for-5 after going 3-for-3 on Tuesday night. Luke Prokopec (3-0) pitched five hitless innings before wearing out and allowing three runs in the sixth while not getting an out. He walked five and hit a batter.

Cardinals, Marlins rained out

MIAMI — St. Louis ace Darryl Kile's next start will be pushed back two days because of a Florida Marlins rainout against the Florida Marlins. "The game never started and was postponed after a delay of 1 hour, 45 minutes. It was the final night of the Cardinals' only scheduled visit to Miami.

Venus Williams eases into Barclay quarterfinal

HAMBURG, Germany (AP) — Top-seeded Venus Williams breezed into the quarterfinal of the Betty Barclay Cup with an easy 6-1, 6-2 victory over Gala Leon Garcia of Spain on Thursday. Williams, ranked No. 2 in the world and playing for the first time in a month, struggled a bit with her serve in the first set, but still had too much for the Spaniard.

Tennis

"I was hitting my serve too high in the first set. You have to be patient and aggressive at the same time on clay, and that's what I did today," said Williams, who won the tournament in 1999. Arantxa Sanchez-Vicario, the fourth-seeded Spaniard who is a three-time champion in the $565,000 event, cruised into the last eight by beating Denisa Chikanova of the Czech Republic 6-2, 6-2.

Moya to face Kiefer in Mallorca Open quarterfinals

PALMA DE MALLORCA, Spain — Third-seeded Carlos Moya reached the quarterfinals of the $500,000 Mallorca Open clay-court tournament Thursday by beating fellow Spaniard Sergi Bruguera 6-4, 4-6, 6-3. Moya next plays Nicolas Kiefer of Germany, who beat Michel Kratochvil of Switzerland 6-1, 6-4. In other action, fourth-seeded Guillermo Coria of Argentina defeated Tony Robredo of Spain 6-0, 7-5, and Juan Antonio Martin of Costa Rica eliminated Jens Knippschild of Germany 6-4, 1-6, 6-4.

Defending champion Plisnik reaches quarterfinals

BOL — Croatia — Defending champion Tina Plisnik of Slovenia beat Ai Sugiyama of Japan 7-5, 6-1 Thursday to reach the quarterfinals of the $170,000 Croatian Bol Ladies Open. Plisnik, whose only tournament title has come at this Adriatic resort, rallied from first-set deficits of 4-2 and 5-4 against the seventh-seeded Sugiyama before winning nine of 10 games for the victory. In other second-round matches, second-seeded Sandrine Testud of France beat Rita Kuti Kis of Hungary 6-2, 6-3; Pavlina Nola of Bulgaria upset eighth-seeded Nathalie Dechy of France 6-4, 6-2; Mariene Weingartner — of Germany defeated Maria Jose Martinez of Spain 6-3, 7-5; and Mariana Diaz-Oliva of Argentina downed local favorite Jelena Kostanic 6-4, 6-2.

Charlotte's Campbell could play key role in next round

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — The series hasn't even started and Charlotte-Hornets center Elden Campbell is already tired of being the Milwaukee Bucks' favorite opponent. "I got the same questions yesterday, I'll get the same questions tomorrow. I probably should just fill out a questionnaire and hang it up for everyone to 'see,'" Campbell said Thursday. With a sizable height advantage, the Hornets are expected to rely heavily on their 7-foot center when their second-round playoff series against the Bucks begins Sunday. At least that's the logical game plan for the Hornets, who went 3-1 against Milwaukee during the regular season, losing only when Campbell missed a game because of the flu. In the size department, Campbell has about two inches and 30 pounds on Milwaukee cen-Aymoui of Morocco in a second-round match. Rios was ousted by quarterfinalist Flavio Saretta of Brazil, who beat the sixth-seeded Chilean 6-3, 6-2.

The $400,000 clay court tournament already had lost top-seeded Yevgeny Kafelnikov and No. 2 Thomas Enqvist.

That leaves two-time defending champion Franco Squillari of Argentina as the only seeded player in the field at No. 3. He was not in action Thursday. Another Dupuis of France, the conqueror of No. 4 Wayne Ferreira, continued his remarkable run by defeating Anders Vinciguerra of Sweden 7-6 (5), 6-4. The matches involving Rios and Dupuis were interrupted by rain.

Fans target Knoblauch, embarrass Twins

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Chuck Knoblauch was asked to leave the clubhouse after he couldn't wait to get out of town again after being harassed throughout the New York Yankees' three-game series at the Metrodome.

MLB notes

Twins manager Tom Kelly went into the field during the first delay to plead with the fans, and later escorted Knoblauch and back to his position. Though he and Knoblauch don't get along, he was several times with the fans' behavior. Several Twins worried about retaliation when they visit Yankee Stadium for a three-game series Tuesday. "It's going to be a death trap for us," outfielder Todd Hunter said.

Yankees left fielder Chuck Knoblauch comes off the field, after the eighth inning, Wednesday night, in Minneapolis.

Twins people don't want to go to, "If people don't want to go to these games, what are we going to do?" asked Bush. "Is it our job to subsidize entertainment that is not successful?" Miami Mayor Joe Carollo and Miami-Dade Mayor Alex Penelas pushed the Legislature, which is scheduled to adjourn today, to adopt a financing plan for a 40,000-seat downtown Miami ballpark, which would not have a retractable roof. The Marlins want to build a $385 million, 40,000-seat retractable roof stadium on the Miami River. Team owner John Henry has said the roof is necessary to keep rain from causing attendance problems.

Interviewed before appearing at a news conference Thursday, Malone said he has received hundreds of calls, letters and e-mails of support and encouragement, prompting him to tell his side of the story for the first time. "There was a pattern of mis-truths, misrepresentations, negative spins, cynicism in reflection to the Dodgers, the job the organization is doing, and specifically me," he said. At the news conference, held at a Beverly Hills hotel, Malone read a brief statement and didn't take any questions. "His lawyers, Jonathan Rivers and Eric Lampel, called coverage by the Los Angeles Times in the matter 'inaccurate and unfair.'" "We went out of our way to talk to three people in an attempt to verify the story, and we never considered running a story without a comment from Kevin Malone," Times sports editor Bill Dwyre said. "Once we had three people telling us roughly the same version of the story and Kevin Malone commenting, we felt that we had done our journalism." Regarding what happened at Qualcomm Stadium on April 14, Malone said Padres season ticket-holder Jim Esterbrooks "was loud during introductions, bel-ligerent, obnoxious, rude, all over our team, our players, yelling all sorts of stuff." However, the 43-year-old Malone said, he didn't leave his seat, raise his voice or use profanity. "I remained calm throughout," he said. "I can't say what he thought. I responded in a professional manner. There were no threats issued. I did not challenge him to a fight." Reached at his San Diego home Thursday, Esterbrooks reiterated his contention that Malone told him more than once to "come over here and say that" in a comment Malone denied making.

Gordon's role as part-time closer leaves him unhappy

CHICAGO — It took just three days in Chicago for Tom Gordon to get upset with the Cubs. After making his first regular-season appearance since Oct. 3, 1999, Gordon said he wants to be the Cubs' full-time closer and doesn't want to rest between appearances. "We're having a little problem because I didn't come here to sit out there in the bullpen. If that's the case, I'd rather leave," said Gordon, who spent the last 16 months rehabbing after reconstructive elbow surgery.

Smoltz gets approval to make two starts in minors

ATLANTA — Atlanta Braves right-hander John Smoltz will make a rehabilitation start for the Double-A Greenville Braves on Saturday night as he tries to come back from elbow surgery.

Larkin leaves game hurtling; Boone gets hit on wrist

CINCINNATI — The Cincinnati Reds lost the left side of their infield Thursday when shortstop Barry Larkin had to leave the game with a tight groin and third baseman Aaron Boone was hit on the wrist by a pitch. The Reds already are missing Ken Griffey Jr., disabled by a torn hamstring. Larkin pulled his groin while sliding into base during spring training and was limited to six games. He has been craft about returning the base out of fear of aggravating the injury. Boone was hit on the left wrist by a pitch from Luke Prokopec in the second inning. He stayed in the game for one more inning, then hit for X-rays that found no fracture.

Smoltz visited Andrews for the third time in the past month. Smoltz said Andrews saw no signs of damage and advised him to take it easy.

In the size department, Campbell has about two inches and 30 pounds on Milwaukee center Ervin Johnson. In three meetings this season, he used that advantage to average 15 points and 9 rebounds — both better than his season averages (19.1-7.8). But Campbell's downplays any edge he might have. "I guess I'm a little taller than Ervin Johnson, so I expect that will draw some attention," he said. "We'll see what happens." But Campbell says he got inside from the start and see how that goes. It's normal for Campbell to shrug off the notion he might have some added responsibility in this series. One of his nicknames is "Easy" because of his relaxed attitude, and that's some times helped him because in his 10-year career. Shaquille O'Neal, who played with Campbell in Los Angeles, called him an "Easy" because of his relaxed attitude, and that's some times helped him because in his 10-year career. TWIN FALLS — It wouldn't be racing without an appearance by the American Race Trucks.

The fast-and-frenzied class makes its Magic Valley Speedway season debut Saturday with possibly the largest field ever running.

"We're hoping to see 14 (trucks)," said Dan Pehrson, a driver and Mountain States Series Director for the class.

"Pretty much everybody is going to be back from last year," Pehrson said. "We're looking for some real close, competitive racing this year."

The series starts its season opener March 31 in Las Vegas, defending Magic Valley Speedway champion Nick Lynch won the event with Twin Falls' John Newhouse finishing second. Saturday's race is the first of five at the speedway and the second of 12 races this season.

Among those returning this season are Lynch, of Burley, John and Jason Newhouse of Twin Falls, Ernie's John Wong, Pehrson and Twin Falls' Ryan Stapelman.

Two names noticeably absent from the field are Jerome driver Gregg Olsen and 1999 truck champion Randy Hadlock, of Elko, Nev.

Both men are devoting more time to their families this season, enjoy to see."

Along with the trucks, the Idaho Midget Series, the Budweiser Grand Nationals and the NAPA Auto Parts Pony Stocks will run Saturday. The green flag falls at 7 p.m.

NASCAR Touring updates

Raybestos Brakes Northwest Series, 1998 series champion Gary Lewis, of Bothell, Wash., collected the series' first win of the season April 13, winning at Evergreen Speedway in Monroe, Wash. Lewis finished second in the championship standings last season. Ron Eaton has 38 career victories in the series, second to Garrett Evans, whose best finish is third with 165 points.

After one race, Lewis leads with 180 points over defending series champion Kevin Hamlin with 170 points. Gaylor Stewart is third with 165 points.

The series hits the 375-mile South Sound Speedway in Tenino, Wash., for the Pepsi 125 on May 12.

Winston West Series Las Vegas-based driver Brendan Gaughan made a late race charge to capture the NASCAR Winston West Series Pontiac Wildcat Grand Prix, 200 at California Speedway in Fontana, Calif. on Saturday.

Gaughan, the defending series champion, grabbed the lead from Jon Wood on lap 27 and held on for the remaining three laps to score his first victory of the 2001 season. Wood, a Winston-West rookie, took second ahead of Austin Cameron, who leads the series points race with 794 after five of 14 races. Mark Reed is second with 775 points and Gaughan sits third with 712 points.

The series' next event is the Ford 4 Less 250 at the 500-mile Irwindale (Calif.) Speedway on May 12.

Featherlite Southwest Series Featherlite Southwest Series racers are preparing for one of their most challenging events of the season with the running of the Star Nursery 250 at the 375-mile "Bullring" at Las Vegas Motor Speedway on Saturday.

The event will be the longest of the season for series competitors on a short track and will require pistons.

Last season, Mark Reed, of Bakersfield, Calif., who is competing for Rookie of the Year honors in the NASCAR Winston West Series, captured the win on the high-banked oval while Craig Raudman, of Redding, Calif., took the Bud Pole Award. M.K. Kanke, of Frazier Park, Calif., is the current series points leader with 520 points, having won the last two events.

Darrell LeMoire is second in the standings with 462 points and Frank Maronick, Jr. is third with 431 points.

Wallace looks forward to racing at Richmond

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Rusty Wallace had done little of note this season before winning last weekend's NASCAR Winston Cup event in California.

Wallace's second top-five finish in 10 races, but still elevated the short-track specialist to fourth in the driver's standings with the bright lights of Richmond on the horizon.

As much as any place he races, Wallace loves Richmond. He leads all active drivers with six career victories on the three-quarter-mile oval, and he has 18 top-five and 24 top-10 finishes in 34 career starts there.

But Wallace said history means little in this strange season, where a new, harder tire has rendered last year's notebook virtually useless and thrown the championship race up for most anyone to win.

"The standings are in an uproar now," Wallace said. "It's anybody's game. We're not that far out of second with the way the points standings are bundled up now."

If not for Las Vegas, where an accident ended Wallace's day after only eight laps, he might be the Winston Cup points leader.

"That's a crazy this season has been," Wallace said.

One thing that always made Richmond unpredictable in the past was the weekend schedule, which had teams practicing in bright sunshine and qualifying and racing at night.

But the move this year to one round of qualifying allowed the track to change the schedule. Qualifying for the Pontiac 400 will be held late today, with the 90-minute final practice session beginning at 3:50 p.m. MST, when the track won't be bathed in sunshine.

John Clark/NASCAR This Week

Rusty Wallace scored his first victory of 2001 Sunday at California Speedway. Wallace now has 54 career victories.

The chance to work on race setups in conditions closer to race time makes the work less of a guessing game, driver Joe Nemechek said.

"If you have more cars able to get a good idea of track conditions in the final practice, then you're going to have more cars that should be able to run up front," Nemechek said. "It makes for a long day Friday, but I think it will make for a better race Saturday night."

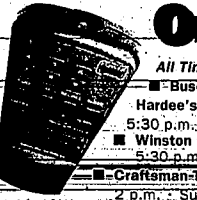

The Winston Cup weekend began with Busch Grand National qualifying Thursday night. The Hardee's 250 is tonight.

FROM LAST WEEK

WINSTON CUP

FONTANA, Calif. — Rusty Wallace won his 54th time of his career Sunday in the NAPA 500 at California Speedway.

When Wallace's friend Dale Earnhardt died earlier this year in the Daytona-500, Wallace immediately, and with manic intensity, made sure he had an Earnhardt tribute flag ready so that he could honor Earnhardt when he won Rockingham.

That was Feb. 26, and Wallace did not get to unfurl his Earnhardt flag to the adoring masses of fans because he finished seventh in that race. He, in fact, did not win until Sunday, but it did not lessen Wallace's

INTENSITY

When crewman Billy Wilburn brought it to him for a victory lap around the two-mile track.

"As it turned out, the Wallace victory carried with it a nice touch of irony. Earnhardt would have turned 50 Sunday.

"It's a special feeling," said Wallace, who led 95 of the 250 laps. "For me to have won on (Earnhardt's) birthday was very special. That was for Dale and Teresa and the whole Earnhardt family. I hope they know I did it for them."

"Dale meant a lot to me and Patti's wife. We went on a lot of vacations together, had a lot of fun. We went down to the Bahamas a lot, and I knew him off the racetrack and not only on the track."

BUSCH GRAND NATIONAL

FONTANA, Calif. — Define competition on the basis of how hard it is to win, and the Winston Cup Series is the best in the land. Define it on the basis of the number of cars capable of winning, and the Busch Series has no equal.

Hank Parker Jr. provided testimony to the latter theory with his upset victory in the Auto Club 300 on Saturday at California Speedway.

The Chevrolet driver entered the race without so much as a top-10 finish in the first nine races of the year.

CREW OF THE WEEK

■ In the Auto Club 300, crew chief Billy Naegele came up with a strategy that allowed driver Hank Parker Jr. to complete the race with one less pit stop than all the other drivers except one. As a result, Parker won for the first time on NASCAR's premier auxiliary series, Busch Grand National, crossing the finish line in near tears and screaming in joy to his team over the radio.

TOP TEN

■ NASCAR This Week writer Monte Dutton ranks the top 10 drivers heading into this weekend's race. Last week's ranking is in parentheses.

1. (1) Dale Jarrett	In a bit of a slump
2. (2) Jeff Gordon	Still going strong
3. (9) Rusty Wallace	Sixteen straight seasons with a victory
4. (4) Johnny Benson	Pedaling as hard as he can
5. (3) Sterling Marlin	Dodge boy who could use a break
6. (10) Tony Stewart	Getting closer and closer
7. (6) Steve Park	Consistency has improved
8. (7) Ricky Rudd	Consistency is getting old
9. (8) Kevin Harvick	Seems to be losing his edge

Qwest chief defends income from options

DENVER — Qwest Chief Executive Joseph Nacchio says his pay is only average by industry standards and he has no reason to apologize for the tens of millions of dollars he has made cashing in stock options.

"I know these are big numbers," Nacchio told reporters in a briefing before the company's annual stockholders meeting in Denver this week. "I'm neither apologizing for it or embarrassed by it," he said. As an aside after the press briefing, Nacchio remarked: "I should be allowed to make more than a second base salary. I create more economic value than they do."

Nacchio made $2.8 million in salary and bonuses in 2000, and $9.3 million from stock options he exercised and sold. He could make more than twice that from cashing in stock options between now and 2003.

Nacchio told stockholders he has been paid well largely because the company's stock has appreciated. He said the options in question were issued when Qwest went public in 1997 and have "nothing to do with the new company."

Albertson's launches online pharmacy system

TWIN FALLS — Astute Inc. and Albertson's, a Boise-based retail food and drug chain, said they implemented an online pharmacy system that uses Astute's Prescription eCRM (eCustomer Relationship Management) system to integrate Albertson's Savon.com e-commerce site with its network of 1,900 pharmacies.

That network includes a Twin Falls pharmacy. The result is a nationwide virtual pharmacy that provides the convenience of online ordering and enhances the relationship between consumers and their pharmacists, Albertson's said.

Consumers can order prescriptions via a form on the Savon.com site, which takes its name from one of Albertson's family of drugstores. Orders are routed through a team of customer service agents who use Astute's Prescription eCRM system to review each order and route it to one of Albertson's 1,900 pharmacies across the country or to a central fulfillment center for handling. Consumers can choose to have their prescriptions shipped directly from their local pharmacy, or can pick them up in person that day.

ARTEC looks ahead

Business development campaign might find consortium again

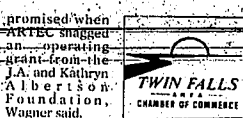

By Virginia S. Hutchins
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A high school consortium of local school districts and some businesses will get another financial boost from a local job-creation campaign — if the Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce's board gives the final OK this month.

With that approval, the Advanced Regional Technical Education Coalition would receive $40,000, toward its 2001-02 operating costs from the chamber's Business Plus II development campaign.

His campaign board this week voted to recommend the funding, but its decisions are subject to chamber board approval.

This would be the second year ARTEC gets money from Business Plus II as part of the private-sector support promised when ARTEC snagged an operating grant from the J.A. and Kathryn Albertson Foundation, Wagner said.

Here's a roundup of other Business Plus II matters from this week's meeting:

Business Plus II will invite a representative of the Atlanta-based firm National Community Development Services Inc. to Twin Falls in late summer to check up on the campaign's work force development. Wagner said.

NCDS should sound familiar — it's the firm the Twin Falls chamber hired to study feasibility of such a campaign and then to lead the fund-raising for the five-year Business Plus II effort, which started operation in August 1998.

The Atlanta firm will recommend a course of action for the second half of the campaign's life, Wagner said. And it will talk to chamber leaders and the new Southern Idaho Economic Development organization — for which Business Plus II is a major financial supporter — about regional marketing. NCDS will likely address the role it can play in Twin Falls, promote regional marketing and will discuss successful regional efforts elsewhere, "an educational process for our economic development leadership," Wagner said.

Tamara-Hamilton-Harney resigned from the campaign's board, effective in mid-June.

To fill that vacancy, the Business Plus II will identify candidates and make a recommendation for the chamber board's approval. The person must represent a company that is a Business Plus II contributor, Wagner said.

The campaign, Wagner said, chose The Times-News Web site team for development of Business Plus II's planned online site, which will focus on the area's economic development issues. The site will tell prospective employers about local water, sewer and power costs; education systems; telecommunications infrastructure; and the like.

Twin Falls company wins honor

By Virginia S. Hutchins
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A Twin Falls company that turns newspaper into insulation and mulch, and a grass-seed exporter with some Magic Valley ties, are among star players for getting made-into-Idaho products into foreign markets.

The two will claim the spotlight when the Idaho Export Council recognizes winners of the Idaho Governor's Export Marketing Awards on Thursday, at the governor's award luncheon in Boise's Double Tree Riverside Hotel, said James Holloway, the council's executive secretary.

This year, Hamilton Manufacturing Inc. of Twin Falls will receive the award for a firm with the most employees. Jacklin Seed Division of Simplot Turf and Horticulture Group gets the corresponding honor for a company with more than 100 workers. The Export Marketing Awards are given for excellence and effectiveness of individual marketing programs conducted in an effort to develop or increase export sales of Idaho products or services.

Recipients have the lifelong honor of using the award logo on all their marketing materials. The export council is a statewide nonprofit organization of volunteers working to expand exports.

Hamilton Manufacturing leaders Tamara Hamilton-Harney and Herb Harney said Wednesday they'll leave Twin Falls for Michigan in June, though the manufacturing plant and its jobs will stay in Twin Falls. Next week's honor ensures the couple will depart with a flourish.

"Their sales are increasing and the percentage of their international sales is increasing as well," said Idaho Export Council member Gary DeGrange, who works in U.S. Bank's international banking department in Boise and leads the export council's awards committee.

He also praised the Twin Falls manufacturer for securing businesses in a growing number of foreign countries and for "the amount of effort they've put into pursuing the export markets" — for instance, extensive travel to meet on-site with clients and prospects.

"Tammy's done an excellent job in building relationships, and she's also been what I'd call a great ambassador for the state, as well," DeGrange said.

Jacklin Seed, he added, has a similar list of accomplishments in sales-in-many-foreign-markets, consistently growing export sales and a busy travel schedule.

"They've been very patient and persistent in pursuing those markets," he said.

The spotlight was on Magic Valley last year, too, for the efforts of a local pork processor and an agribusiness equipment maker.

Last year, Pickett Equipment of Burley received the Export Marketing Award for small firms, and Twin Falls' Independent Food Corp., doing business as Independent Meat Co., got the large-firm honor.

Raytheon acknowledges SEC subpoena

The Associated Press

LEXINGTON, Mass. — Raytheon Co. said Thursday that the Securities and Exchange Commission has subpoenaed documents on last year's sale of its engineering and construction business to Boise-based Washington Group International.

The subpoena follows months of legal wrangling between the two companies over the final purchase price.

Washington Group, which has said the controversy may force it into bankruptcy, maintains the Lexington-based defense contractor withheld critical financial information about Raytheon

Engineers & Constructors.

The company, the successor to one-time international construction giant Morrison Knudsen Co., agreed to pay $53 million for the division and assumed, by Raytheon's calculations, $450 million in liabilities. Washington Group maintains the liabilities were actually as high as $700 million.

"We will respond to the SEC's questions and supply whatever information is requested," Raytheon Chairman Daniel Burnham said. "We have made extensive disclosures regarding Raytheon Engineers & Constructors and its disposition to WGI and believe that our policies and practices are in compliance with all regulations and laws."

Last month, an Idaho District Court judge refused to dismiss fraud claims lodged by Washington Group against Raytheon or limit the records and other information Raytheon may have to make available to Washington Group lawyers in the lawsuit.

No date has been set for trial in the case.

Raytheon, the nation's fourth-largest defense contractor, has denied the charges that it hid losses on some division projects.

Washington Group says covering those losses has created problems in securing the bonding needed to take on new projects needed to maintain its cash flow.

Author: Take advantage of bicentennial

The Associated Press

LEWISTON — Business people were encouraged to touch people's lives and make the tourist experience more than just a visit to a fast-food restaurant and a photo opportunity during the upcoming Lewis and Clark Bicentennial.

About 300 business owners and city officials from around Idaho gathered this week for the annual Governor's Tourism and Recreation Conference. They brainstormed ways of using events and locations related to the Corps of Discovery's expedition in boosting tourism.

"Idaho offers one of the last undisturbed glimpses of the trail, and residents have a tremendous opportunity to showcase the state," state Department of Commerce spokeswoman Georgia Smith said. "We need to educate people about the story. It will further our ability to help people truly understand what Idaho's all about because it's a story of friendship."

The conference continues through today.

Tourism is a $1.7 billion industry in the state, accounting for 6 percent of the state's $30 billion economy, Smith said.

Kare Anderson, a former Wall

Street Journal reporter and author of eight books on marketing, told participants they should pick one detail of the Lewis and Clark trail that people can take home with them, then create unique souvenirs to which travelers will respond on an emotional level.

Commerce Department Director Gary Mahn said tourism and recreation in the state has been growing steadily.

"If tourism isn't economic development, I don't know what is," Mahn said.

He encouraged rural communities to apply for grant money aimed at economic development.

Idaho Falls company agrees to $1.2M fine

The Associated Press

IDAHO FALLS — An Idaho Falls fuel company has agreed to pay $1.2 million to settle federal charges that it refused to clean up ground and water contamination from gasoline leaking at its facility in Preston.

Officials at the headquarters of what was formerly V-1 Oil Co. refused to comment on why they agreed to settle charges that had been fought so vigorously since they were lodged in 1996.

The company recently changed its name to V-1 Propane Co. and questions were referred to attorney Kent Gausch, who did not immediately return calls for comment.

Environmental Protection Agency Regional Administrator Chuck Findley indicated it could be the result of a change in management that he said had "stepped up to the plate" to resolve the problems.

Just last year, the company finally settled another environmental case involving a 1984 citation for failing to properly close down fuel tanks at a gasoline station it operated in Twin Falls. It paid just over $23,000 in fines.

The proposed settlement in Preston case was announced by the EPA Thursday after being filed with U.S. District Judge B. Lynn Winmill. It will be subject to public comment for 30 days after being published in the Federal Register.

The $1.2 million payment reflects $478,000 in fines for refusing to comply with the EPA cleanup order and $722,000 to cover the expense EPA incurred to clean up the contamination.

Preston residents had a problem with underground petroleum contamination since the late 1970s. But in May 1996, petroleum apparently got into the sewer system. It produced dangerous accumulations of gas dunes in homes and basements although there were no explosions or damage.

The EPA identified the underground tanks at V-1's Preston gas station as the possible source of the leak, but V-1 rejected that suggestion — and adamantly denied government officials access to the property.

Ultimately, the EPA had to get a court order to investigate. Eight months later it found that underground storage tanks at the station had holes in them.

The government eventually removed several hundred gallons of gasoline from groundwater and removed 2,000 cubic yards of contaminated soil.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE Bobby Wolff

"If he has no other burden, he'll take up a load of stones."
— Malay proverb

Today's South was fortunate to dodge an opening diamond lead. Had West divined to lead that suit, South would have had no chance. No matter. After a tepid effort to protect dummy's diamond king from direct attack, South's routine follow-up sealed his fate.

South won dummy's heart king and led a club to his king, rejecting a first-round finesse. He led a cagey low spade toward dummy, intending to insert dummy's eight if West lazily followed low. However, West alertly put up his 10, forcing South to win dummy's king. Had dummy not won, a diamond shift would have defeated the game.

Good effort so far. Regrettably, South carelessly led a club from dummy, and took a losing finesse. Back came a diamond, and South had to concede two down.

South's initial attempts to keep West off-lead were justified and well executed. But all went for naught when he took the club finesse. Why was it a silly move? If East had the guarded club queen, South could afford to give West the trick; East could not attack dummy's diamond king. And if West had the guarded club queen, there was nothing South could do about it. Accordingly, the correct play is to refuse the club finesse, willing to concede a club trick to East.

In today's example, West's doubton queen drops, and South not only scores his game, but gets a well-earned overtrick as well.
