LOCAL HERO REMEMBERS

Paul Nutting, left, receives a thank-you handshake from Fred Mohr at a medal ceremony at the National Guard armory in Twin Falls on Monday. Mohr's uncle, Merrill Romans, received two posthumous medals for service in the Korean war. Nutting did all of the research and submitted the applications for the medals.

Vet searches for clues to others' sacrifice

By Michael Journee
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — He's always looking for new clues that might lead him to past heroes. "Twin Falls is full of heroes," Paul Nutting said.

He should know. After a North Vietnamese mortar took out his Marine machine gun crew June 15, 1968, Nutting was taken for dead like the rest of his buddies. Only when he began moaning among the bodies on the chopper carrying the squad out of the Vietnam bush did medics realize he was alive.

Today, Nutting is completely disabled by the deafness caused by the head wound he suffered that day in 1968. But his heart hears one thing few others seem to hear: His need to remember. "It keeps me running," Nutting said. "I don't know why I do it, really. I guess I've gotta do it because it seems like nobody else cares about it."

Since he woke up in a DaNang Army hospital four days after being wounded, Nutting has worked so that any vet who didn't make it home will be remembered.

ings of soldiers, such as uniforms, service patches and medals, Nutting has gathered most of the known details of Twin Falls area veterans who didn't make it home. And most of it, all the way back to the Spanish-American War, is either cataloged in his head or on a library of 8-by-5-inch index cards at his house.

U.S. readies Russian proposal

Los Angeles Times

MESA, Ariz. — Moving to soften Moscow's opposition to the missile-defense system that is central to its military strategy, the Bush administration will offer Russia military aid and participation in anti-missile exercises, administration officials said Monday.

The plan may also include the sale of Russian weapons to the United States. At the center of the purchase would be Russian S-300 surface-to-air missiles.

A Bush administration official said that U.S. officials have talked to "our friends and allies" and the Russians — about a broad range of areas of potential cooperation with regard to missile defense.

These include efforts to provide early warning of missile attacks and the potential U.S. purchase of Russian-made components of a missile-defense system.

"The Russians have invested heavily for years in advanced air defense and missile technology that may be of help to us in our deployment" of missile defenses, said the official, who spoke on the condition of anonymity.

In Moscow, Russian Defense Minister Sergei B. Ivanov said the Bush administration had not yet made any such offer. And even if it does, he said, "it would not solve the issues related to (the) missile-defense problem."

The defense system would assist the abrogation of the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty, a linchpin of the nuclear balance between the United States and

Forest chief moves in, makes a few changes

New agency head says he supports roadless values

The Associated Press

Dale Bosworth lived in Missoula, Mont., and ran a region that included 12 forests and four grasslands before President Bush nominated him as the nation's top forester.

WASHINGTON — The double doors to the Forest Service chief's office are gone, their removal one of Dale Bosworth's first acts after he took over the agency.

To some, the move symbolizes a return to tradition, with the chief communicating directly with local officials around the country. But it's not clear yet how much the veteran forester — whose forest career started in 1966 — will listen to environmentalists, who are already taking aim at his policies.

Bosworth, 57, says he plans more than cosmetic changes at his agency, which oversees about 192 million acres of national forests and grasslands.

He said he's comfortable with the direction taken in the past 10 to 15 years toward improving ecosystems and watersheds and away from big timber sales, which have declined more than 80 percent since 1990.

But Bosworth wants agency employees and citizens who live near forests to have a greater say on forest management.

And he sees room to offer more timber from federal forests for sale, though he won't talk numbers.

"In perhaps his most high-profile undertaking, he is working with Agriculture Secretary Ann Veneman to revise the "roadless rule" — a Clinton administration ban on logging and road-building on a third of the nation's most pristine federal forests.

Bosworth wants to ensure that people who live in remote places and know about roadless areas have a voice in crafting the policy.

"I generally support protecting roadless values," he said in his

FBI didn't pursue tip it had a spy

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — A former FBI agent who pleaded guilty to spying for Moscow suggested nearly four years ago that Robert F. Hansen might be a spy, but officials dismissed the tip after a brief inquiry, the bureau confirmed Monday.

Only three years later did the FBI begin the investigation that led to Hansen's arrest.

Former agent Earl Pitts, who pleaded guilty to espionage charges and is serving a 27-year federal prison term in Ashland, Ky., told the FBI during questioning in June 1997 that he suspected Hansen might be "trying to collect information covertly," bureau spokeswoman Michelle Palmer said.

Hansen, a counterintelligence agent, was arrested in February and charged with spying for Russia for the past 15 years. The FBI has been criticized for failing to act diligently to prevent such security breaches.

Genome pioneer targets disease

ROCKVILLE, Md. — The second-floor protein factory at Celera Genomics Corp. bears little resemblance to an industrial site.

A row of desk-size machines churns away silently in the one-room lab, surrounded by unpacked crates and technicians. Much of the floor space is empty.

But the small machines are working on an industrial genetic scale, hunting for the thousands of proteins that do everything from construct body tissue to color hair.

Those proteins are made under instructions from genes. When genes and their instructions are billions.

That's why Celera opened this second-floor lab, which began operating last month. "This is the next phase for us," said Celera president J. Craig Venter. "This is equipment that didn't exist before — it's not cutting-edge, it's bleeding-edge technology."

It was Celera's radical approach to biology that put Venter and Celera in the spotlight as the company deciphered the human genetic code at breakneck speed.

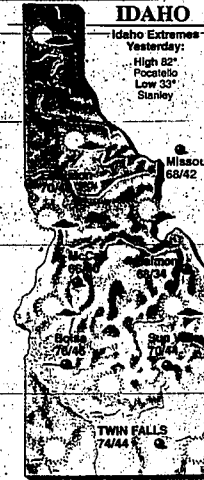

Venter plans to use the same bold methods that made Celera a biotech maverick to challenge the pharmaceutical world.

 Celera, which has been focusing on selling access to its gene database, is starting to read that genetic library for clues to finding new drugs and disease therapies to drug companies for potentially huge royalties. Celera is going to be a discovery outsourcing company, and their prospects for succeeding are high.
 Winton Gibbons, an analyst with William Blair & Co.
 The company's methods have, however, drawn criticism from scientific peers. Questions linger about Celera's "shotgun" approach to gene sequencing, one that other scientists claim has left huge gaps in the genetic map.
 A recent article in the journal Nature found evidence of errors in Celera's deciphering of the fruit fly genetic code. The study's author, Stanford researcher Samuel Karlin, suggested Celera's rush to publish was to blame.
 Celera's competitors have also pounced on those alleged mistakes, saying they will hamstring the company's future drug development.
 The urge to be first has been a driving force behind Celera since Venter, a former National Institutes of Health researcher, formed it in 1998 and promptly announced he was going to decipher the human genome by 2001.
 Using supercomputers and a small team of top geneticists, Venter finished the job last summer, a year ahead of schedule.
 That success transformed the biotech upstart into a major industry player, with revenues expected to push $100 million this fiscal year and a market capitalization of around $3 billion.

 Scientists at the federally funded Human Genome Project, which raced Celera to "decode" the genome, object to Celera's decision to sell most of its research. They give their findings away for free.
 Celera officials say they always planned to move from gene sequencing into drug discovery, but needed the genetic map first.
 With that in hand, the company now is working to identify genetic markers for four forms of cancer — breast, colon, pancreatic and lung — and plans to add about 25 diseases to that list.
 Celera is also in a joint venture with sister company Applied Biosystems that will focus on using genetics to help scientists diagnose illnesses.
 Dr. Samuel Bender, Celera's chief medical officer, says the pharmaceutical industry has been operating largely by trial and error and that Celera's research can potential save it millions in development costs.
 "We will be able to dramatically increase not only the creativity and scope of what is being developed, but also the likelihood that any one product will succeed," Bender is banking on a $1 billion in cash reserves raised in a secondary offering last year to provide some independence.
 While most cash-strapped biotech companies have to sign one-sided deals with pharmaceutical companies, Celera expects to be an equal partner in future agreements.

 Investigators were "completely satisfied that Pitts had not raised any issues beyond what was already known" about Hansen's alleged 1992 break-in to the computer of a senior FBI counterintelligence official, according to FBI spokesman John Collingwood.
 He stressed that Pitts had never directly implicated Hansen as a spy or raised any evidence of which the bureau was not already aware.

 Because Romans' death wasn't on a battlefield, he isn't listed among the Korean War's casualties.

 The administration is on course to offer amendments to the rule in June and then allow more public comment.
 "In a Utah lawsuit challenging the roadless initiative, the state claims the policy circumvented the usual public comment procedure."
 The Forest Service did conduct hundreds of meetings on the plan, but Utah officials argue those meetings came before detailed maps of the roadless areas had been charted.
 The Bush administration has defended the roadless policy against court challenges, including one in Idaho. But environmentalists say the federal attorneys said a bad job arguing the case that the Idaho judge used their language when he blocked the ban from taking effect earlier this month.
 The administration hasn't decided if it will appeal, as environmental groups have, Bosworth said.

U.S., Chinese officials strike deal on U.S. spy plane

WASHINGTON (AP) — A crippled U.S. spy plane stranded in China will be coming home in pieces, possibly aboard a huge Russian-designed cargo aircraft, under a tentative agreement between U.S. and Chinese officials.

The two nations are still negotiating details of the return, officials cautioned Monday, but it appeared the impasse has been broken in the incident that soured U.S.-Chinese relations.

The United States has been demanding return of the lumbering EP-3 since it landed in China on April 1 following a collision with a Chinese jet fighter.

"People are talking about the AN-124" to fly the spy plane out, a U.S. administration official said, speaking on condition of anonymity. The transport plane is identified on military Internet sites as the world's largest cargo aircraft.

The EP-3's wings and tail section could be placed alongside the fuselage aboard one or two of the cargo planes. The pieces could be reassembled later in a plane that is roughly the size of a Boeing 737 passenger jet.

The AN-124, which first flew under the Soviet flag in 1982, is made both in the Ukraine and Russia and used commercially.

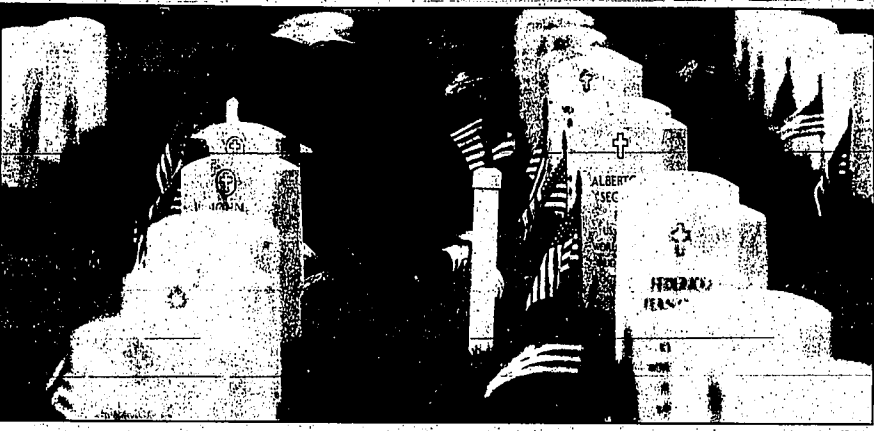

In China, Foreign Ministry spokesman

Zhu Bangzao was quoted by the official Xinhua News Agency as saying the United States would be permitted "in principle" to send an Antonov-124 to pick up the plane.

Asked how long it would take to get the plane home, the U.S. official said: "What we said was we wanted to get the plane back via the quickest possible means. This is one way to get it out in an expedited way. We don't have a timeline."

The Navy plane has been at a Chinese air base on the southern island of Hainan since the collision above the South China Sea, a crash that cost the life of the Chinese pilot. After the crippled U.S. plane was spotted, it was called an unauthorized emergency landing, the crew of 24 was held for 11 days while each country blamed the other for the accident.

Americans mark Memorial Day with tributes

Americans across the country marked Memorial Day with solemn remembrance by making pilgrimages to gravesides, bearing flowers and flags to honor soldiers who sacrificed their lives in battle.

"It means a lot to me, coming out here and seeing the veterans," said Boy Scout Lee Booker, 15, as he helped place miniature American flags at the foot of 46,850 veterans' headstones at the Memphis National Cemetery in Tennessee.

Booker was one of 200,000 Scouts nationwide who decorated veteran cemeteries on the Saturday before Memorial Day.

Dale Jefferson of Bentonville, Ark., an 85-year-old veteran of World War II, has set out flags every Memorial Day since 1946.

"My brother Ray and I go to the Centerton, Oakley Chapel and Bland cemeteries with the flags. And about 10 of us set them out in the Bentonville Cemetery," Jefferson said.

First recognized in 1868, Memorial Day was originally called Decoration Day for the wreaths, crosses and bouquets left on veterans' graves. The name was later changed, and the day was declared a national holiday in 1971.

In Washington, President Bush on Monday signed legislation to construct a World War II monument on the National Mall.

"I will make sure the monument gets built," the president told applauding veterans, among them former Sen. Bob Dole.

In New York City, sailors unfurled a 100-foot-long American flag, and four ceremonial wreaths were dropped into the Hudson River as more than 1,200 guests and dignitaries observed from the flight deck of the floating military museum USS Intrepid.

"We cannot forget what the heroes of Gettysburg, the heroes of the Imperial Valley, our veterans, living and dead, who went in harm's way and risked everything, have done for us, for our comrades, for our country," said Deputy Defense Secretary Paul Wolfowitz.

Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton marched in a parade in her adopted home town of Chappaqua, greeting veterans and posing for pictures.

Senior Chief Petty Officer Nicholas Mellos, who was on the Navy spy plane that made an emergency landing on Hainan island after a mid-air collision with a Chinese fighter jet last month, led a parade in Dearborn, Mich., his home state.

Immigrants come to end at deadly stretch of border

HOLTVILLE, Calif. (AP) — The tractor buries two men in a dirt lot at the edge of the Southern California desert, its engine rumbling during what might otherwise be a solemn moment.

A long path and tall bushes set their graves apart from the ornate headstones at the local cemetery. No relatives are present as the men are buried in less than 15 minutes on a May morning.

No one knows who they are. Authorities believe they were illegal immigrants from Mexico, two more among the hundreds who die each year while trying to cross into the United States.

"I'm sure their families are waiting for them to return home, and here they are today being buried," said Bibi Jaime, an apprentice funeral director who read a brief prayer before the tractor's engine was started.

Unidentified immigrants are filling the Holtville pauper's cemetery, which opened in 1995, two months after a U.S. border crackdown began in San Diego that pushed migrants eastward to the deserts of Southern California and Arizona.

Since then, Imperial County has buried 122 unidentified immigrants, said Dennis Jones, superintendent of the cemetery district that manages the one-acre site in Holtville, a farm town 120 miles east of San Diego.

Jaime, an immigrant from Mexico, has presided over several dozen John Doe funerals in the past three years. He expects to see more as immigrants continue to risk desert crossings.

"I wish we could do something to stop them coming across the way they do," he said. "I wish they could see what goes on out here."

Bodies of immigrants known to be from a certain country are generally returned there, often with that nation paying some of the cost. But many don't carry identification or it is lost or stolen during their journey.

Of the 491 immigrants who died entering the United States last year through Mexico, 114 were classified as unidentified, according to a Mexican government report.

Immigrant deaths happen regularly in the Imperial Valley, a sparsely populated region of deserts and mountains that supports an agricultural economy via a network of canals that carries Colorado River water to the area.

Sen. Jefford's switch emboldens moderates

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Vermont Sen. James Jefford's defection from the Republican Party has emboldened congressional GOP moderates, who say they hope to use their new leverage to force a shift in administration policies in such areas as health care, energy and the environment.

Senate and House moderates said Jefford's announcement Thursday that he will become an independent, putting the Senate under Democratic control, has forced the White House to take notice of them. Some say they have felt marginalized since President Bush took office.

"The leadership and the White House need to know they can no longer have a Republican agenda and make a few concessions. They have to add a few things to the agenda," said Rep. Mike Castle, R-Del., who named managed care reform and prescription drug coverage for seniors as pressing issues largely ignored by senior Republicans.

Even without Jefford's switch, the administration was likely to face more resistance from moderates — especially in the House, where Republicans hold a 221-210 majority. There are two independents and two seats are vacant.

House moderates have backed the president almost uniformly since he took office, helping to deliver a series of budget and tax victories for the White House.

All House Republicans, for example, voted in favor of the tax-reduction bill on Saturday.

But as the agenda shifts to areas such as the environment and health care, the discipline exhibited so far under the Bush administration could fracture, lawmakers say.

With the Senate in Democratic hands, House moderates will be even more inclined to oppose such presidential proposals as drilling for oil in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge (ANWR) or supporting efforts to restrict abortion, said Rep. James Greenwood, R-Pa.

"Or issues like the environment and abortion, we'll be less able and willing to give the president a better bargaining position with the Senate when it means abandoning principles" we've been talking about, said Sen. Lincoln Chafee, R-R.I., a moderate who has been at odds with the White House, said the very fact that the GOP just lost the majority in the Senate will empower moderates.

"I think more people are feeling perhaps more freedom to say, 'No, I'm not willing to support you on this vote.' That's really where it all starts, on the calling of the roll," Chafee said. "Others are going to be telling the party, 'No, you don't have the votes, you don't have the votes for drilling in ANWR,' or for a controversial Supreme Court nominee or whatever else comes down the road."

Powell affirms Balkans backing

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — Secretary of State Colin Powell on Monday dismissed reports that the United States might pull peacekeeping troops out of the Balkans, saying "we are not going to bail out of our commitments."

The United States and its allies went into the Balkans together, "and we'll come out together," Powell told reporters, saying, "There isn't a big split" within the administration on the issue.

Powell said President Bush, Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld and he are all committed to "not pulling U.S. troops out of Bosnia and Kosovo prematurely — even if he and Rumsfeld have different perspectives."

The secretary of state arrived here late Monday after a four-nation tour of Africa. He is attending meetings of NATO ministers Tuesday and Wednesday.

Peacekeeping levels are likely to be discussed Tuesday. Powell said he expected a vote further, cut the overall force size there.

He is also planned to present the Bush administration's latest thinking on a national missile defense.

Despite comments by Bush during last year's presidential campaign on the desirability of pulling U.S. forces out of Balkans, and Rumsfeld's comments on reducing U.S. commitments, Powell said the administration is unified.

Massachusetts lawmaker dies

BETHESDA, Md. (AP) — Rep. Joseph Moakley, D-Mass., whose political career took him from the poor streets of South Boston to Capitol Hill, died Monday from complications of leukemia.

Moakley, who announced in February that he suffered from an incurable form of leukemia, died at the Bethesda Naval Hospital in suburban Washington, according to a family member.

He was 74 years old.

The affable Moakley was the quintessential, old-time Boston Irish politician. After narrowly winning his first congressional election in 1972, he proceeded to serve 15 terms in Congress. He was the top Democrat on the powerful House Rules Committee.

Moakley entered the hospital on May 21 for a routine blood transfusion that normally lasted a couple of days. But he remained hospitalized and on Sunday was described as being in grave condition. His family and friends were close by when he died.

Moakley has had a history of illness. He previously had a liver transplant, a kidney removed and his hip replaced.

Rob Nicolino stands next to his "BraBall" that he pulls around with a pink Cadillac in San Francisco April 27.

Conceptual artists battle over giant balls made from bras

EL CERRITO, Calif. (AP) — Hers weighs 650 pounds, his weighs 1,300 pounds, but when it comes to a competition between two giant balls of bras, does size really matter?

Artists Emily Duffy and Ron Nicolino are more concerned with copyrighting their creations than cup size and cleavage. They've retained lawyers and traded threatening letters over who owns the bra ball concept.

Meanwhile, their collections keep growing — huge spheres of lace, silk and padding, bras of all colors, shapes and sizes.

Nicolino has used 14,000 bras from an abandoned project to hook them across the Grand Canyon. Now he's pulling his 5-foot-wide ball to Los Angeles behind his 1963 flamingo pink Cadillac, looking for a worldwide tour sponsor.

"It's making commentary as it's driving along. It's about making dialogue about body image," Nicolino said.

Nicolino acknowledges that Duffy came up with the idea. He said he was planning to collaborate with Duffy but dropped her when she proposed using only some bras and sealing them with silicone.

Duffy, who accuses Nicolino of stealing her idea, counters that his roadside attraction is really about exploiting women.

"The only reason I'm doing this is that I just don't want to be another case of a man getting one over on a woman," said Duffy.

She approached Nicolino for bras to decorate her Vain Van, a minivan festooned with black bras, Barbie doll busts, high-heeled shoes, curlers and a pink steering wheel that says "Princess."

She later proposed the bra ball idea. Shortly thereafter, he said he wanted to do the project alone.

In protest, Duffy sent for a copyright and launched

a mass e-mail to friends, requesting bras to build her own "BraBall."

Now it's 5,850 bras thick and about 3.5 feet in diameter. There are well-worn bras, milk-stained nursing bras, furry bras and plain ones of all sizes.

"It's a monument to the average American woman who is so strong, and yet no one talks about that," Duffy said. "She is solid in a very dense way, the way the ball is. Women hold this world together."

Non-surgical bypass turns veins to artery

DALLAS (AP) — A bypass procedure that transforms veins into arteries without opening the chest cavity could one day offer treatment for patients with severe coronary artery disease who cannot undergo traditional bypass surgery or angioplasty, experts said.

A case study being published in today's Circulation, a journal of the American Heart Association, documents the first nonsurgical bypass using catheters to make the coronary vein a conduit for blood flow around the diseased coronary artery. The catheters are inserted in a leg and threaded into the coronary arteries.

Dr. Stephen Oesterle, director of invasive cardiology services at Massachusetts General Hospital and his researchers successfully conducted the new procedure, called percutaneous in-situ coronary venous arterIALIZATION, or PIVCA, in November 1999 in Germany.

"This is newsworthy because we have explored using the coronary veins. We have shown that the technology can be used in humans," Oesterle said.

The study patient, a 53-year-old German man, had severe chest pain from a heart artery blocked by atherosclerosis, a buildup of fatty deposits in vessel walls. He was not a candidate for bypass surgery or angioplasty because his artery was almost completely blocked, Oesterle said.

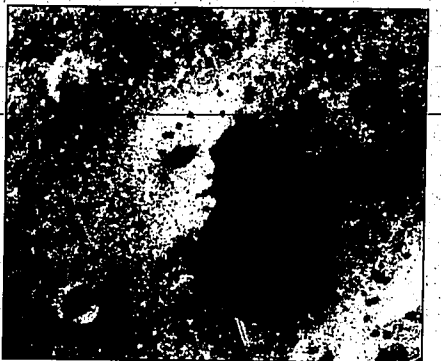

Now, more than a year after the procedure, the patient remains pain free, he said.

The new procedure is considered safer and less painful than traditional bypass surgery, which requires opening the patient's chest, temporarily stopping the heart and harvesting vessels from the leg or chest.

But Oesterle warns that the procedure would not necessarily be preferable to angioplasty or bypass surgery.

"If we could do angioplasty, we would do it," he said. "But there are 400,000 patients who can't do it because their arteries are badly diseased or too damaged. We think we can capture a lot of patients who are not candidates for angioplasty or bypass surgery."

LOSING FACE

Nearly 25 years after NASA's Viking spacecraft captured an image on the Martian surface that some people thought showed a face, above, the agency released a higher-resolution image from the Mars Global Surveyor, taken in April. This image, at top, shows the area in far sharper detail but reduces any resemblance to a humanlike extraterrestrial. One NASA official described the surface 'item as a 'hill'.

Van crash kills girl, injures 13

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A speeding van crammed with children on their way home from a party plowed into several cars and flipped over, killing a 4-year-old girl and injuring 12 other children and one adult.

Police later impounded 50-year-old Willis Mitchell and said he was the van's driver. Mitchell, who police said fled after the crash Sunday night, was hospitalized with minor injuries and was being questioned by detectives. No charges had been filed Monday afternoon.

"There were just kids everywhere," resident Kevin Smith told WPVI-TV. "Kids who couldn't move. Kids who were passed out. Kids who were lying in pools of their own blood."

Four children, ranging in age from 4 to 12, were ejected. Two children remained hospitalized Monday.

"There was a lot of kids hurt, but she was the only one dead," Cerita Kelly, the 4-year-old's grandmother, told WPVI-TV. "And she died instantly and now she's gone."

The van struck several parked cars, hit a construction trash bin and overturned, Philadelphia police Capt. Ted Sideras said. Detectives later said the van was speeding down a narrow, rain-slicked street.

A 7-year-old boy with a skull fracture was in fair condition Monday at Children's Hospital of Philadelphia, hospital spokeswoman Joey McCool said. A 5-year-old boy also was at the hospital in fair condition with minor injuries, such as cuts and bruises.

Court summons Kissinger to testify in Pinochet case

PARIS (AP) — Former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger has been asked to appear as a witness in the investigation into French citizens who disappeared under the iron rule of former Chilean dictator Augusto Pinochet, police officials told The Associated Press on Monday.

A summons to appear as a witness was delivered to a hotel in Paris where Kissinger is currently staying, the officials said. Kissinger, who served as secretary of state under Presidents Richard Nixon and Gerald Ford, is in the French capital on a private visit. He is under no legal obligation to answer the summons.

The summons was issued at the request of William Bourdon, a lawyer for families of French citizens who disappeared during Pinochet's 1973-1990 dictatorship.

Bourdon said he believes Kissinger's testimony is "essential" to the case because of numerous exchanges between the secret service agencies of the United States and Chile after the 1973 coup that brought Pinochet to power.

Kissinger could not immediately be reached for comment.

Judge Roger Le Loire has questioned dozens of witnesses in the French investigation of the former Chilean dictator. The judge is investigating allegations that five French citizens, who disappeared in Chile during Pinochet's military dictatorship, were kidnapped and tortured.

Is your banker really the decision-maker? Or is a higher power pulling the strings?

When you do business with the big banks, you're never really sure you're talking to the real decision-maker. That can be pretty frustrating when you need a quick answer on a loan. Or if you need to know by how much your checking account was overdrawn. Or why your mortgage loan hasn't been approved. The problem is that most of the big banks are pulling all the strings from some distant location. So, they don't always understand your situation. Sometimes they don't even care. All of which makes our bank a good place to take your business. We live, work, and play right here in the community. We probably know you and your family. We care about your business and are eager to serve you. And if anybody is going to be pulling any strings around here, it's going to be you.

City of Twin Falls is wise to ease out of SIRCOMM

If the city of Twin Falls thinks it can do a better job of summoning emergency help to where it's needed, and do so more economically, more power to it.

Six and a half years after handing its dispatching duties over to the Southern Idaho Regional Communications Center, the city wants to start handling its own 911 calls.

Twin Falls city leaders want to set up their own emergency 911 dispatching center, saying SIRCOMM, the regional dispatching center serving Twin Falls, Jerome, Lincoln and Gooding counties, costs too much money and functions poorly.

When the idea of a regional 911 dispatch center was first tossed around back in 1990, it had a lot of supporters. In fact, the publisher of this newspaper was on a committee of supporters. It seemed everyone had high hopes for SIRCOMM when it first opened its doors in Jerome in the fall of 1996 and took over the duty of dispatching police, fire and ambulance crews in the four-county area. Agencies could hand over their dispatching duties to someone else and small towns were able to receive service that alone they couldn't afford.

As with any new operation, especially one as complex as SIRCOMM, there were some bugs to be worked out. There were problems with computer hardware, radio equipment and clogged frequencies. The center was short-staffed and it wasn't long before frazzled dispatchers started handing in resignations. The high turnover meant SIRCOMM had to constantly train new, inexperienced dispatchers in a job where there is little room for mistakes.

Blame shouldn't be placed on the hardworking dispatchers who are doing the best they can in a pressure-cooker environment. Instead, SIRCOMM's basic structure is at fault - a mismatched partnership that includes everything from the smallest rural fire department to the valley's biggest police force.

And then there's the problem of divvying up the bill. The city of Twin Falls pays the lion's share of that bill. This year, the city wrote a check to SIRCOMM for $222,900. The bill for 2001-2002 will be even higher - $233,251.

As regional dispatching becomes more expensive, it makes sense for the city of Twin Falls to resume its own 911 dispatching.

Twin Falls county commissioners argue that the city gets charged more because it generates 40 percent of SIRCOMM's call load. But the city points out that it took some of the call load off SIRCOMM a year ago when it opened an after-hours community service center in the lobby of the police department and began handling non-emergency calls. Still, the city's SIRCOMM bill continues to climb, says City Councilman Chris Talkington.

If the city hails out, it will put a big dent in SIRCOMM budget. Don't cry for SIRCOMM, though, because city residents are still being charged a state-imposed $1 fee on their monthly phone bills.

But it seems the city of Twin Falls has discovered it can provide better service on its own. Maybe the lesson is that bigger isn't always better.

PPO system save patients money

I would like to take this opportunity to clarify some of the misleading statements I have read lately concerning Preferred Provider Organizations. This has been repeatedly compared to "managed health care," which it is not. Under a PPO health insurance plan, the patient purchases a health insurance plan that if the patient chooses a doctor who has agreed to participate as a PPO provider, then the patient only has to pay a small co-pay for an office visit (in our case $20) instead of the usual $45 to $80, regardless of whether the patient has met their deductible or not, for a significantly reduced premium. For the patients (customers) who are basically healthy and rarely meet their deductible, this is a very attractive benefit. However, PPO patients are not restricted to using PPO providers only. If you choose to see a non-participating doctor, the approved fees are applied to the deductible. Once the deductible is met, then the plan pays a reduced percentage of the bill (in our case 60 percent instead of 80 percent). In reality, our choices are broadened, not restricted.

READER COMMENT
Marsha E. Capps

currently manage the health benefits of more than 300 full-time employees in Jerome. Our employees are offered both the PPO and traditional plans. Due to the recent abandonment of the PPO plan by some of the physicians in Twin Falls, we offered an open enrollment plan where employees could change from one plan to the other. The result - 80 percent chose to remain on the PPO plan and only 20 percent chose the traditional plan. I am quite dismayed when an employee contacts me and tells me their doctor has advised them to switch from their PPO plan to a traditional plan since this doctor has chosen not to participate as a PPO provider any longer.

Translation: This doctor is asking a family of four to pay $612 per year more in premium, meet the $500 deductible per person (maximum of $1,000 per family) before they would ever realize a benefit payment.

For a basically healthy family, this is a significant request expecting a family to expend approximately $1,612 per year more just to remain as their patient so that this doctor may receive larger payments from the insurance company. The only way this would benefit any family is if someone became extremely ill or injured - a sad situation to rely on.

There is definitely a need for both plans. However, there are still plenty of extremely competent and qualified doctors participating. There has been one group in Twin Falls that has chosen to leave. This group's withdrawal has reduced the participation in Twin Falls to approximately 48 percent. However, more than 100 qualified physicians in Twin Falls still participate. The surrounding areas in Jerome, Wendell, Ketchum and Boise have an 80 percent to 90 percent participation. The overall participation statewide averages 80 percent of the physicians. This makes me wonder why 80 percent of the doctors throughout the state deem this an acceptable plan, and this particular group in Twin Falls says they cannot function within the same plan.

Dr. Humphrey compared his friend who bought a Yugo to those of us who have purchased the PPO plan. Perhaps Dr. Humphrey has overlooked the possibility that a Yugo is all some of us can afford. I wish I could afford a Mercedes, but I can't. I cannot afford to pay $1,600 a year more when there are many competent and equally qualified physicians still out there willing to offer a discount.

Is this a war between the employees and the physicians? Absolutely not. Nothing would thrill me more than to see this issue resolved. However, until then, there are many who are willing to pay $25 to drive to Boise if necessary rather than pay out an additional $1,600 per year. We do not question your proven medical expertise or flawless medical reputation. However, instead of seeking new, affluent patients, perhaps, Dr. Humphrey, you should be seeking a new business adviser.

Media missed out on motorcycles

Where was the media?
On May 5, the Twin Falls chapters of the Christian Motorcyclists Association, Gold Wing Riders, the Harley Owners Group, Idaho Coalition of Motorcycle Safety, Idaho Motorcycle Club and two chapters of the BMS Club all met at the College of Southern Idaho for what was deemed as the all-club ride. Elaine S. Steele, mayor for the city of Twin Falls, proclaimed May as motorcycle awareness month. Where was the media? They were not there.

There were 100 to 150 motorcycles present, not including the Twin Falls city police or the Twin Falls County Sheriff's motorcycles. The motorcycles paraded through Twin Falls with police escort to the freeway. It was a sight to see. Where was the media?

These motorcycles met in Meridian with the Idaho Coalition for Motorcycle Safety for the Safety Awareness Ride. Eight hundred and fifty-five motorcycles were counted leaving the parade to a state capital building. Where was the media? The police shut down the freeway and the connector to downtown Boise. The parade is miles long. No one knows how long because the media was not there. Those of us in the parade could not see the beginning or the end. At the capital building, Gov. Dirk Kempthorne's proclamation was read, declaring May as motorcycle awareness month.

Where were KMYT, KIVL, KTUV and The Times-News? There were similar rallies in Idaho Falls and Coeur d'Alene. With these motorcycles all over the state, the local media only had a small article by the Associated Press and a 10-second segment on one television station. Where were the pictures? Eight hundred and fifty-five motorcycles in one parade or in one place was an awesome sight to see. It was so awesome that one picture could not contain it all. It seems odd that the media is more interested in reporting one motorcycle accident than 855 motorcyclists trying to prevent one. Where was the media?

Let's beautify as well as improve

My wife and I were headed home along Pole Line Road Saturday morning, turning south onto Washington Street and enjoying a great spring day. I guess since we travel this route a lot, we've become immune to the fact that the view along this route has become completely cluttered with telephone poles and wires. It looks terrible!

I would like to invite our city leaders and transportation officials to take a good look at the intersections and see what a cluster has been created.

Since this route is an extension of Highway 93 and is going to be widened to four lanes anyway, I feel it would behoove them to see whether plans for underground utilities could be incorporated into the roadway plans and eliminate the unsightly mess that people are greeted to as they travel this stretch of Twin Falls. The ground is going to be torn up anyway, so let's do the right thing and beautify as well as improve our city.

Heck, bury some optic cable while it's opened up and we'll be ahead of the game too.

Don't destroy natural beauty

Being a relatively new resident to Idaho, I have taken much pride in the natural beauty of our state and our city. Last weekend while having friends visiting me in Nampa, I was showing off some of our most beautiful and natural wonders, the falls, the springs, the mountains, the canyon, the hot springs, the lava flows. My heart sank when toward the end of our tour, we ended up by the rock formations near the golf course at the bottom of the canyon in Twin Falls. There at the top, we found the rocks defaced with vulgar graffiti, fast food wrappers, Coke, etc. We spent about 20 minutes picking up what trash we could find and disposing of it. About six months ago when I was there with my family, I did the same thing.

Explain to me how you can be so disrespectful to the beauty that surrounds us. Explain to me why you feel that you need to litter the side of our back lava roads with your old washing machines and car parts. Explain to me why you feel it is neat to express to the world who you love or you think is a whore on the sides of rocks that were here much before humans ever walked this valley. Explain to me how you can be so lazy not to remove your trash when you are done using the land around us.

It deeply saddens me and disgusts me to think some people would exploit and take advantage of the wonders around us that most people in this world do not have the benefit of having every day.

Look at all suspects in fires

Referring to your May 23 editorial, "Fires sink credibility of all dairy opponents":

What makes you assume only "dairy opponents" can start fires?
Who would not be tempted by tens of thousands of dollars worth of damage to your opponents' credibility at the expense of your insurance company?

No dairy supporter would ever get so frustrated that he would commit a "cowardly" act that puts a "stain on the fabric of civil society."

And even if he did, it wouldn't be effective without the active participation of the local media.

MVRMC has done a good job
Magic Valley Regional Medical Center has done a good job for Magic Valley residents. It is a place where high quality health care is delivered by dedicated employees who care about the welfare of those unfortunate enough to be sick.

It is puzzling to see MVRMC become a lively topic for The Times-News editorial board or a scary competitor to other health care providers. Most puzzling of all is that the Twin Falls County commissioners view it as a commodity, like so many beans in a warehouse.

County commissioners have announced that they are seeking the highest bid they can get from companies that would run MVRMC for profit. What about the sick people? They are so much more than beans in a warehouse to be used as a revenue source for the county commissioners.

This attitude victimizes sick people. First they are victims of illness, then they are used as a revenue source for non-health related county bills. They deserve continuing high quality health care from dedicated health-care workers - the kind of care they receive at MVRMC now. Let's not destroy that!

NOT PRACTICAL... GIVE MOST US. SCHOOLKIDS A MAP...

Robin Ellins, proprietor of Friendly Stranger cannabis culture shop, is shown in the display window of his store in Toronto, Canada, Wednesday.

Canada moves toward decriminalizing drug

TORONTO (AP) — The Friendly Stranger used to be up a narrow stairway in a back room, a crowded little shop offering water pipes, T-shirts and other products of the cannabis — or marijuana — culture.

Now proprietor Robin Ellins has a prominent storefront on busy Queen Street and plenty of room to display everything from hempseed oil and chips to a full line of hemp clothing and elaborate smoking accessories.

The transformation from hidden emporium to thriving commercial venture is part of Canada's slow but clear shift toward decriminalizing marijuana.

Justice Minister Anne McLellan says the issue should be studied, and a new Parliament committee on drug matters will look at decriminalization. Conservative Party leader Joe Clark is urging the elimination of criminal penalties for possessing a small amount of pot.

"It's unjust to see someone, because of one decision one night in their youth, carry the stigma — to be barred from studying medicine, law, architecture or other fields where a criminal record could present an obstacle," Clark said last week.

The government has proposed expanding medicinal use of marijuana and the Canadian Medical Association Journal recently supported full decriminalization. Canada's Supreme Court will consider a case this year that contends criminal charges for the personal use of marijuana violate constitutional rights. Making possession and use of small amounts of marijuana a civil offense — akin to a traffic fine — instead of a criminal violation would move Canadian policy closer to attitudes in The Netherlands and away from the United States, its neighbor and biggest trade partner.

That worries U.S. anti-drug activists like Robert Maginnis of the Family Research Council. "It will have a residual effect in this country of depressing prices and making marijuana more available," he said.

He also knows a shift by Canada would boost the arguments of American advocates for easing U.S. drug laws. "We find our allies are piling up on us and making it more difficult" to fight drug use, Maginnis said.

Joseph A. Califano Jr., president of the National Center on Addiction and Substance Abuse at Columbia University, is skeptical about that.

Califano, a former U.S. secretary of health and human services, said increasing medical evidence on the harm caused by marijuana makes it unlikely that a change in Canadian law will affect U.S. policy. "I don't think it means much," he said.

Canada already has a legal industry for hemp — cannabis cultivated with very low amounts of the chemical that produces the high sought by marijuana smokers — while the U.S. federal government prohibits hemp production.

Caller claims responsibility for kidnappings

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — A Muslim extremist group, on Monday, issued a veiled threat to harm 20 kidnapped tourists — including three Americans — while the Philippines president said she would use everything in her power to "crush" the insurgents.

One of the leaders of the Abu Sayyaf rebel group that kidnapped the tourists claimed responsibility in a satellite telephone call to a local radio station Monday. The rebel, named Abu Sabaya, asked American Martin Burnham and another hostage to speak too.

"We are safe and we are appealing for a peaceful negotiations," Burnham said. "They are treating us well."

President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo said she would not give in to any ransom demands and instead offered $2 million in rewards for the capture of rebel leaders.

The group kidnapped three Americans and 17 Filipinos from the upscale Dos Palmas Island Resort in Palawan province on Sunday.

The same group seized 10 foreign tourists 13 months ago from a Malaysian resort. Most were released for large ransoms, reportedly paid by Libya. The story was in the headlines for months, hurting the tourism industry and undercutting investor confidence.

Guerrillas held by about 20 hostages, including 3 Americans, are shown in a photograph.

Community leaders call for calm after British racial riot

OLDHAM, England (AP) — In this hard-scrabble former mill town, they were sweeping broken glass and piling heaps of shattered bricks on Monday, cleaning up after Britain's worst outbreak of racial violence in years.

Harder to rebuild, community leaders say, will be the harmony they insist Oldham — a one-time textile center of about 220,000 people on the outskirts of the northern city of Manchester — can enjoy.

After two nights of fierce rioting, police and activists alike called for calm — and laid much of the blame on far-right groups they say exploited tensions between the town's whites and its large population of immigrants from the Indian subcontinent and their descendants.

Police, who were pelted with bricks and firebombs during fighting that raged Saturday and Sunday nights and into the early morning hours, warned they would be out in force Monday night and would act with resolve to quell any new violence.

The clashes, reminiscent in their ferocity of riots that tore through areas like the London district of Brixton in the 1980s, came less than two weeks before Britain's June 7 general election.

Oldham has been the scene of growing racial tensions in recent months — greatly exacerbated, community leaders said, by the presence of the National Front, a small but vocal extremist group, and British National Party, another right-wing group that is fielding two candidates from Oldham in the coming parliamentary elections.

Macedonians blast rebel strongholds

SKOPJE, Macedonia (AP) — A key European Union envoy failed Monday to persuade Macedonia's divided political leaders to resume talks, as security forces pushed ethnic Albanian rebels to the outskirts of a contested northern village.

The EU foreign policy chief, Javier Solana insisted, however, that Macedonian Slav and ethnic Albanian political leaders were "very close" to resolving a political deadlock that has blocked the work of Macedonia's recently formed coalition government.

Turmoil erupted last week when the main ethnic Albanian parties signed a peace agreement with the militants, angering their Slav partners in the Cabinet and triggering fears that the government could fall apart.

"Everybody is committed to bridging the differences," Solana said. "But differences still remain."

Council will hear hospital update

Members will also mull appointments to historical group

By Michael Journee
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - The City Council today will hear an update on the status of the county-owned Magic Valley Regional Medical Center from County Prosecutor Grant Loebs.

County commissioners on Friday appointed a seven-member advisory board to help the county sort through lease options for the hospital.

Meeting set
The Twin Falls City Council will meet at 5 p.m. today at City Hall.

The county and the hospital board have been considering a number of options for the hospital, including a 501(c)(3) agreement with St. Luke's Medical Center in Boise. However, commissioners have decided to examine other options before making a decision on which route to take. Council members will also consider appointments to the Twin Falls City Historical Preservation Alliance.

Paul Smith, chairman of the commission, has nominated Twin Falls residents Doug Follow and Fran Frost to fill the two vacancies on the panel.

Follow, a local accountant, is a self-described architecture buff who is interested in restoring the city's older structures to make them functional.

Frost, a former history teacher, is a board member of the Magic Valley Arts Council, the Twin Falls Public Library Foundation, and is president of three local parent-teachers associations, the AFS Student Exchange Program and the Medical Auxiliary Alliance.

Council members will also consider bids for the city's annual street seal-coating project. The low bidder for the project was Emery Inc., which proposed $158,387.92 for the job. City administration will recommend Emery get the contract.

Council members will also hold an executive session to discuss buying property for the city.

Hailey man envisions multisports facility

By Karen Bossick
Times-News correspondent

HAILEY - A Hailey man has approached the Blaine County Recreation District with the idea of a public-private partnership to build a multisports recreation facility in Hailey or north of Hailey.

Reamy Goodwin, who has run sports camps at Stanford University for the past three years, said he has long been interested in developing a YMCA-type facility that would cater to children and their families.

The facility, as he envisions it, would have an ice rink, pool, gym for indoor soccer, volleyball and tennis, weight room, aerobics room, walking and jogging track and dorm rooms for overnight camp.

Recreation District Board President Keith Perry indicated he would be willing to explore the idea, saying he'd like to get a facility built before his own children have become adults.

But, he cautioned he'd like to bring all the players interested in building recreation centers together to discuss what facilities are needed and where they should be built before considering throwing the district's support behind an independent group's proposal.

Fragmenting has killed most good recreation center projects in the valley, noted Recreation District Director Mary Austin Crofts.

The other main proposal on the table right now is the proposed Bill Janss Activity Center in Ketchum. Representatives of that project are expected to make a presentation to the Ketchum City Council on June 4.

Mike Wolters, who is heading up the $15 million Janss center effort, said he was familiar with Goodwin's endeavors but didn't feel it would be appropriate to be involved in discussions about it until after he had met with the City Council.

Is it feasible to build two centers in the valley?

"I don't know," he said.

Goodwin said he feels Hailey should have its own facility regardless of whether the Janss Activity Center gets built in Ketchum. He received a show of support from Hailey-Mom Becky Stokes.

"Something in Hailey's crucial, as the bulk of the population growth is down here," she said.

Goodwin said his board has raised enough seed money donations of $10,000 and $25,000.

STAR GAZER

TF teen hopes to turn hobby into a career

Inside the heart of 18-year-old Michelle Hartwell hides the soul of a poet. Not the kind of poet who speaks of the vagaries of love or the pleasures of a bucolic pond, Hartwell's poetry is at once more basic and more profound.

IMAGES
Bruce Shields

"Mathematics," she says, "is the language of the universe."

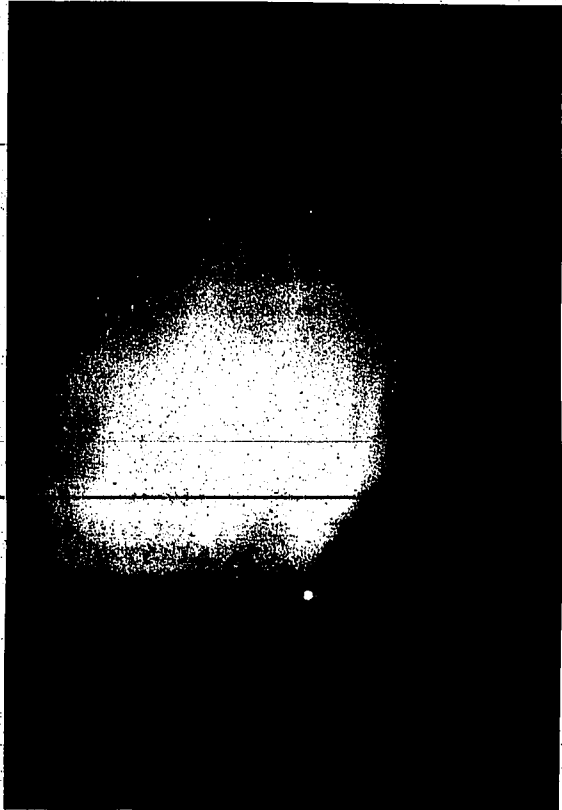

And the universe, or at least the portion she can see of it in her telescope is an old friend of Hartwell's. At least three or four nights a month during the summer she can be found at her telescope. She knows where everything is, all of the nebula and galaxies and multiple star systems. When she gives tours of the night sky, as she so often does at star parties, she always begins at the big dipper.

"You take the arc of the handle and follow that curve to Arcturus which is in the constellation Bootes," she says. "If you keep following the arc you reach that bright star over there called Spica which is in the constellation Virgo."

She became interested in astronomy through the influence of her father Jay Hartwell when she was about 13-years old. It was the beginning of a love affair that she hopes will lead to a career. It is, she says, like a disease; when you become infected it consumes you, so much so that she will graduate from high school with 55 college credits in physics. With just one more year at the College of Southern Idaho she will earn her associate's degree and begin her march toward a doctorate degree and hopefully a job with NASA.

But her passion for science doesn't come from contemplating the big questions of life, it comes from a childlike wonder at the little questions most people take for granted. Questions like "why is the sky blue," and "why is the grass green."

And for one who spends so much time in the dark, her future is likely to be bright, indeed.

BRUCE SHIELDS/The Times-News

To say she is an astronomy buff is a vast understatement. She hopes one day to work for NASA.

Ag classes help teach Hispanic workers field skills

Farmworkers Invited

Spanish-speaking farmworkers are invited to an agricultural training clinic Wednesday in Rupert. The free, three-hour workshop covers soils and irrigation, potato diseases and pesticide safety. The workshop will be from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. at the Mindok County Cooperative Extension Office's McGregor Center, at 85 E. Baseline. For information, call the extension office at 436-7184.

Farm employees now have more responsibilities

By Ruth Streater
Times-News writer

RUPERT - With farm sizes growing, it behooves the farmer to have workers who can tend to disease in a field of spuds themselves.

Knowing that, the University of Idaho Cooperative Extension System is conducting Spanish-language agricultural training clinics around the state.

A clinic in Rupert

Wednesday morning is free and includes a certification of completion.

The first clinic was in January in Pocatello as part of the 2001 Potato Conference. There was such a good response that the cooperative extension system decided to expand opportunities throughout the state, said Matt Schuster, the Mindok County extension specialist.

Farming has changed much in the past 10 years, Schuster said. When farms were smaller, farmers and workers had more one-on-one communication, he said.

Now that there isn't always that contact, it's up to the workers - who are often the first ones in the fields to notice a problem - to address certain situations, Schuster said.

The clinic teaches workers how to irrigate various soils, manage potato diseases and manage pesticides.

Instructors include extension educators from other Idaho counties, as well as specialists with the Idaho Department of Agriculture.

Hispanics fill a significant role in the farm economy of Mindok County, where Hispanics are a quarter of the county's population.

The issue is callable on 06/15/05 and any date thereafter upon 10 business days prior notice. In the event interest rates decline during the life of the bond, the bond will likely be called and investors may lose the opportunity to lock in higher rates. REXBURG (AP) — For the eighth year, the Idaho Department of Fish and Game will restrict access to ponds at the Sand Creek Wildlife Management Area to protect nesting trumpeter swans.

There are two nesting pairs in the area. Public access to the two ponds where the birds are nesting will be restricted until July 1.

Restrictions are in place during nesting season because disturbance by humans can cause the waterfowl to abandon their nests.

Successful nesting is important because the swans are listed as a priority species under the Endangered Species Act.

Young swans have been produced every year since restrictions were imposed and the Sand Creek area has been key in building the local trumpeter swan population.

Classic cars will shine at Cassia fairgrounds

By Correen Hart
Times-News correspondent

BURLEY - A glowing lineup of classic cars ranging from very new to very old will be on display at the Cassia County Fairgrounds this weekend.

The Mini-Cassia Car Club has sent out registration forms, and it's anything like last year there will be more than 100 lovingly restored vehicles displayed for public admiration.

Car Club President Frieda Flowers will enter her 1966 Buick Riviera, a long, luxurious sweep of pearly powder, blue, a prized possession.

"People ask us how we can afford these cars," Flowers said. "But we don't bar hop, we don't chase around, and I'm getting too weak to lift a bowling ball. We just stay home and take care of our cars. And they're maybe not the most expensive cars we could find, but they're ours."

Because people can register the morning of the show, organizers won't know the actual number of cars until then, said club member Peggy Oliver.

"But there will be cars of every description, and even bicycles," Oliver said.

Oliver's husband, Carl, will enter his yellow and black 1969 Dodge Dart GT.

"My husband just loves his car," Oliver said.

"While some car shows are selective, the Mini-Cassia Car Club lets anyone enter, Flowers said.

"We have some in-progress exhibits, and you don't have to have the fanciest in the world to enter," she said. "We're open to everyone who loves cars."

Flowers said that this year the club ordered a pedal car kit, a small pedal-powered car for children. One member who is a mechanic assembled the child's dream toy, and members are selling tickets for $1, or six tickets for $5.

Every year cars are entered from Nevada and Utah and all over Idaho. Sponsors such as Goos Motors and Royce and Sons donate cash, trophies and door prizes. Three trophies are in every category, and there are plenty of categories.

"Best car 1930 to 1939, best car 1940 to 1949, you get the idea," Flowers said.

Jim Flowers, the club secretary, will enter his silver-toned 1953 Citroen, a European car with "suicide doors" that open backward, and an old black and white license plate.

Lawmaker helps save vets' history

IDAHO FALLS (AP) - A new program will make sure that the memories of those who fought for their country will be recorded for future generations.

Sen. Mike Crapo, who is sponsoring the program with the Idaho Education Association and the Library of Congress, said one goal is to gather a number of veterans' stories by Veterans Day 2001.

Veterans groups, scouting groups, veterans' family members and others are invited to join the collection effort.

High school juniors and seniors will be at the forefront of gathering information. Students will collect stories and other information from the veterans on videotape, audiotape, pictures, manuscripts and other sources.

The association and member teachers will help assign projects as part of classroom credit.

Utah victims meet young offenders

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) - Juvenile courts in Utah are expanding a program that sits crime victims down with the young criminals.

"It's an opportunity for a victim to have a voice in the process," said Marilyn Patterson of the state Administrative Office of the Courts. "The victim can ask questions only the offender can answer. Usually that starts with 'Why me?'" The answer often is reassuring to the victims.

"When they meet the kid who did it, he can explain why he did it and that's usually just a car door act," said Mike Zenovieff, the juvenile court probation supervisor who will head the program in Brigham City. "They see he's a kid and they see, 'Oh yeah, you've got problems.'"

The idea of "restorative justice" began in Ohio, spearheaded by the Mentorite religious orders there, Patterson said.

One key to the program is training the volunteer facilitators who preside over the face-to-face mediations. They broker the restitution agreements offenders sign off on. If the violators don't follow through, they're back in front of a judge.

Restitution has included things such as a lawyer's pay to recover a damaged car dashboard and one who swept the floor of the convenience store he robbed.

Sunday crash injures pair of Jerome residents

JEROME - One Jerome resident is in stable condition after a Sunday evening crash in rural Jerome County.

Hose T. Villa-Hernandes, 24, of Jerome, was in stable condition, but still in intensive care at Boise's Saint Alphonsus Medical Center Monday evening after the accident.

Villa-Hernandes was driving his 1970 Chevrolet pickup on 300 North Road, when he lost control, went off the road, over a ditch and through a fence. The pickup became airborne and rolled at least one time, landing upside down, according to a report from the Idaho State Police.

Villa-Hernandes was ejected. It is unknown if his passenger, Luis Garcia, 21, also of Jerome, was ejected. Neither person was wearing a seat belt.

Both were taken to Magic Valley Regional Medical Center for treatment. Garcia was later released. Villa-Hernandes was flown to Saint Alphonsus by medical helicopter.

Library association seeks nominations

BOISE - The Idaho Library Association is soliciting nominations for its 16th annual book award.

or setting must relate to Idaho. The deadline for nominations is June 30, 2001.

Carol Silvers, chairman of the Book Award Committee, said the type of book the committee is seeking is wide open.

"It could be fiction or nonfiction, prose or poetry, intended for an adult or juvenile audience. We look for strong writing, clear presentation and significant Idaho content," she said.

Silvers said award-winning books also are recorded for the Idaho State Library's Talking Book program.

The award will be presented at the Idaho Library

Searchers hunt for possible drowning victims

KUNA (AP) - Searchers continued to look Monday for a father and daughter who may have drowned this weekend in the Snake River.

The pair disappeared about 3 miles downstream from Swan Falls Dam, south of Kuna. Fire and law enforcement personnel spent nearly three hours patrolling the river and its banks but could not locate the missing people Sunday.

Details were sketchy Sunday night, as searchers tried to piece together what happened while a group or family was enjoying the hot Memorial Day weekend weather on the river's north bank. Authorities were summoned Sunday evening. Bob Levandusky, a Boise Fire Department battalion chief, said a teenage girl either fell into the river or experienced trouble while swimming. Her father jumped into the cold river to try to help her, Levandusky said. Neither was seen again.

Authorities know little about the girl and her father, such as where they lived. Names were not released. Levandusky said searchers shifted their focus from a rescue to recovery mode Monday.

Current Snake River water flows are lower than at peak times. The flow near Swan Falls Dam was recorded at 6,410 cubic feet per second on Sunday. The median flow for a May 27 is about 14,000 cfs, according to 86 years of BLM records.

"It's still swift. You can get pulled into the main part of the current," Levandusky said.

Boise Fire Department dive team members took turns working in the river Sunday. Ada County sheriff's deputies used personal watercraft to search the river, and a helicopter joined the hunt. Efforts were suspended when it became dark to search.

Roy, Bourque put up strong defense against Devils

The Associated Press

DENVER — The line of defense designed to prevent a Colorado Avalanche lead-in Game 2 of the Stanley Cup Finals formed Monday behind—who else?—Ray Bourque and Patrick Roy.

The Avalanche can go up 2-0 by beating New Jersey tonight, a fact Roy and Bourque repeatedly emphasized Monday following an animated practice that was as vigorous as some teams' training camp workouts.

"There's a big difference going to New Jersey up 2-0 than tied at 1," Roy said.

As if to signal just how important, Bourque, a 22-year veteran still searching for that elusive first cup, and Roy, who seems as intent on winning a fourth one as he did his first in 1986, practiced as long and as hard as anyone else.

"We know it (the Avalanche's 5-0 victory Saturday) was only one game, and we've got to get that game out of our minds," defenseman Rob Blake said. "That's why the guys were so upbeat out there. We've got to move on to the next game. You don't win the cup by winning one game, you win it by winning four."

Bucks' frustrations surface big-time

New York Daily News

MILWAUKEE — Ray Allen nearly came to blows with Aaron McKie before later throwing an elbow at Allen Iverson's face.

Glenn Robinson kept arguing with officials until he was ejected from the game with less than a minute to go.

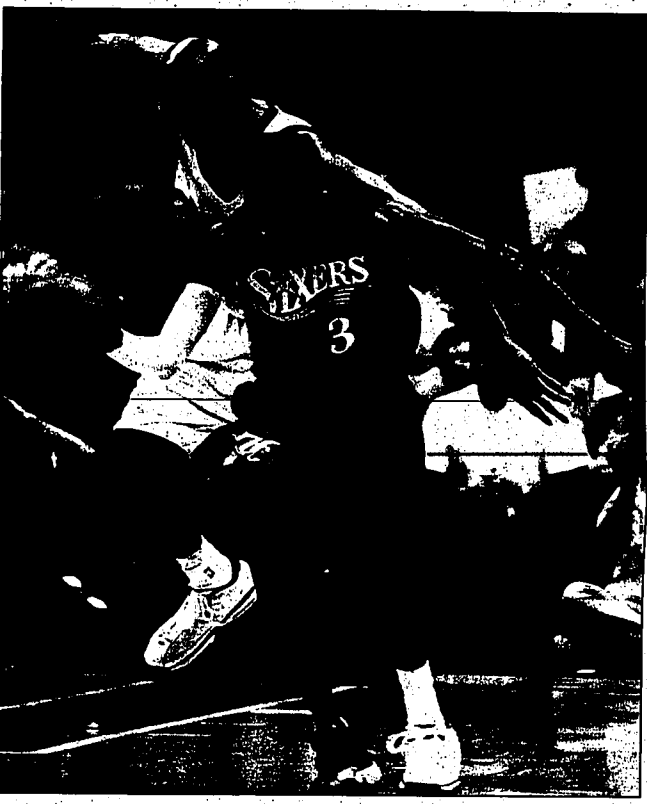

The Bucks were frustrated and it showed down the stretch of Monday's 89-83 loss to Philadelphia in Game 4 at the Bradley Center. The Eastern Conference finals are tied at two games apiece with Game 5 Wednesday at Philadelphia.

After watching the Sixers go to the free-throw line 22 times compared to the Bucks' 11 on Monday, Milwaukee players blew off some steam after the game.

Allen even went as far as to say that he didn't think Iverson, who sat out Game 3 with a bruised tailbone, was hurt at all. "Everybody is talking about Iverson being hurt, but I don't think there is anything wrong," Allen said after watching Iverson score 28 points. "If you would have asked me a day or two ago, I would have said he was hurting but not after today."

Allen, who was shadowed by either McKie or Eric Snow the entire game and scored just 14 points, was frustrated all game long. In the second quarter, Allen said he took an elbow to the stomach from McKie. The two were called for a double foul as officials separated them. Then, late in the fourth, Allen said Iverson was clutching and grabbing at his jersey when he nailed his elbow to get Iverson off of him. The elbow struck Iverson in the mouth at left him bloodied and dazed with two minutes remaining.

The home run champion had missed about 1.5 months after a setback in his recovery from off-season surgery for tendinitis in his right knee.

PISCATAWAY, N.J. — Even though Syracuse carried the momentum into overtime of the NCAA lacrosse championship, the smart money was still on Princeton.

Prager's goal came after Syracuse's Michael Powell tied the game with 16 seconds left in regulation. Princeton had blown leads of 8-4 and 9-8 in the fourth quarter.

"We never lost confidence," Prager said. "We were worried that they had the momentum, but we knew that we had the best defense and the best goalies."

Lickliter holds on for Kemper Open title

The Washington Post

POTOMAC, Md. — It can now be said that the Kemper Open doesn't really begin until the back nine on Monday. That's when Frank Lickliter, a 31-year-old free spirit who had never won in six seasons on the PGA Tour, composed himself to make one last double-breaking, eight-foot, par-saving putt at the 18th hole to ensure his first career victory.

A stroke of brilliance allowed Lickliter to avoid a sudden-death playoff with PGA Tour rookie J.J. Henry and prevented a third consecutive total collapse. Instead, he held on for a one-shot victory with a final, rain-delayed round of 58 and an under-par total of 268.

Lickliter entered a winner's check of $630,000, a handsome crystal trophy and a long embrace from his fiancée, Diane Owens, on the 18th green. He also added to tournament tradition by becoming the third straight first-time winner to prevail in the Washington suburbs, and the 10th since the tournament moved to TPC at Avenel in 1987.

Henry, who was 183rd on the money list with $47,000 entering the Kemper, ended with a 6-269, good for second place and $378,000, the largest payday of his career. Phil Mickelson, still missing more short putts than he'd care to admit, pushed into a tie for third with a 65-272, joining Spike McRoy (68) and Bradley Hughes (67).

"I'm just elated," Lickliter said. "It wasn't pretty, it didn't feel pretty, but that putt felt extremely good on that last hole. It took me longer than I thought it would take to win. It's awesome, it's just incredible... a very special feeling... something I'll never forget the rest of my life."

There was nothing pretty about the entire week. It began raining last Monday, and the delays just kept coming, forcing significant weather delays Friday, Saturday and Sunday, forcing the first Monday finish in the 34-year history of the Kemper.

Miguel Batista (2-3), the seventh Arizona pitcher, pitched two innings for the win.

Pinch-hitter Erubiel Durazo's single put the Diamondbacks up 1-0 in the top of the 10th. But Felipe Crespo, pinch hitting to lead off the bottom half against Arizona closer Bret Prinz, also homered into McCovey Cove.

wanted a foul and when Iverson was at the foul line with 58.8 seconds on the clock, he tied his way to two technical fouls, earning an automatic ejection. Iverson went on to sink three of four straight free throws to seal the game.

"I'm more than just a jump shooter," said Robinson, who has yet to go to the foul line in four games this series. "Most of my shots start in the post. We're trying to get calls right now. They say we need to take the ball to the basket more but we still don't get calls. I haven't taken a free throw this series. In four Pete Sampras open today. Venus Williams had hoped to add the French to the Wimbledon U.S. Open and Olympic titles she won last year. She arrived in Paris healthy, rested and confident after winning a clay-court tournament in Hamburg earlier this month.

But she may have been rusty as well. The match was only her seventh since March, inviting renewed criticism that she doesn't play enough to stay sharp.

"I think I've played a lot already this year," she said. "My groundstrokes were just off. I was just making quite a few errors for no apparent reason at all."

Clay requires patience, and Williams seldom showed it against Schett, going for winners too early in the point and smacking 43 unforced errors. The two longest rallies came in the tense final game, and Williams won both, but she squandered several chances to pull even in the set and reverse the momentum.

"Normally I do turn it around,"

she said. "But today it just wasn't there."

The hasty departures of Williams and Mauresmo open up their half of the draw. Four top 10 women were already missing from the field because of injuries — Davenport, defending champion Monica Seles and Anna Kournikova.

Mauresmo, winner of four tournaments this year, was considered a title threat but squandered a 5-1 lead in the second set against Kandarr and blamed nerves.

"It was just a state of mind I was in, and I couldn't overcome it," Mauresmo said. "You feel as though you're being overwhelmed."

Kuerten, favored to win his third French title, beat Guillermo Coria 6-1, 7-5, 6-4. No. 4 Juan Carlos Ferrero, No. 6 Lleyton Hewitt and No. 7 Yevgeny Kafelnikov also won.

No. 12 Arnaud Clement and No. 15 Jan-Michael Gambill were eliminated.

"I didn't seem to do well here so I didn't expect anything real-representing the 16 wins necessary to claim the cup - signaled why he practiced so hard on a holiday.

"We worked hard all season to get home Ice advantage, and we did the job in Game 7," Roy said. "Now we've got to go to it again, so we go to New Jersey up 2-0."

would have sent a wrong signal.
"We don't want to change a thing," he said. "We don't let anything bother us. We are a very tight group and when we sit in the room, we talk about ways we can get better. If the bus is late or the Zamboni is on the ice too quick, that doesn't bother us. Right now, we are fearless."

McKay and join a line with Scott
Gomez and Bobby Holik, while Russians Alexander Mogilyev,
Sergei Brylin and Sergei
Nemchinov will play together at all times.
Gomez, Holik and Corlank are natural centers, but Gomez said the moves are "for dramatic change, at all."

Usually, marched Saturday against defenseman Bourque and Adam Foote and the Avalanche's top line led by center Joe Sakic, the Devils' A-Line.
Goals in the Eastern Conference finals against Pittsburgh, a nanged only three shots.
"I know we can get a lot more production out of certain players," Robinson said. "It's a risk to much has been put on how our big line was going to play against their big line, and the lines we have together now are capable of playing against any of their four lines."

Of course, the Devils also must start putting the puck past Roy, considering his proven power-play skill in the Stanley Cup final.
The 35-year-old has won nine consecutive games in the finals;
two short of Ken Dryden's record for Montreal (1973-78). Roy led hockey in goals in one 215 minute, 12 second round of play, or 16:10 short of Clint Benedict's record set with Ottawa and Montreal from 1923-26.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE

Bobby Wolff

When Fortune comes, seize her in front with a sure hand, because behind her lies the best bet.

—Leonardo da Vinci

I've seen it all, I lamented an unhappy South. "We are lucky enough to find two kings inside, but we lose the slam anyway."

South bid his values more than once, but the slam needed only fair luck for success: How did South maneuver to lose the slam?

He won dummy's club ace and took a winning trump finesse. After he crossed to dummy's diamond queen, he took another trump finesse. South got the bad news. West's discard made it impossible to capture East's king. Even worse, no dummy entry remained to try the spade finesse.

To make the slam, South should have taken a spade finesse at Trick Two. Correct technique is for South to lead dummy's jack to his queen if East doesn't cover. When the finesse wins, South crosses to dummy's diamond queen to repeat the successful spade finesse. Now he can lead trumps, willing to concede a trick to East's king.

What if West leads the spade king? South would then have to implement his contingency plan. He would use dummy's spade and diamond entries to take two trump finesses, hoping to pick up East's king.

Even if the finesse is a 50-50 chance. If it wins, South can afford to lose to the trump king. If it loses, South retains hope in trumps. Finessing in trumps is an inferior choice. Not only does it lose when East has four trumps, but it eliminates the option of taking the spade finesse.

The Bliss students competed with other middle grade students across the state. The judges provided recommendations to improve their project to be returned by the end of May.

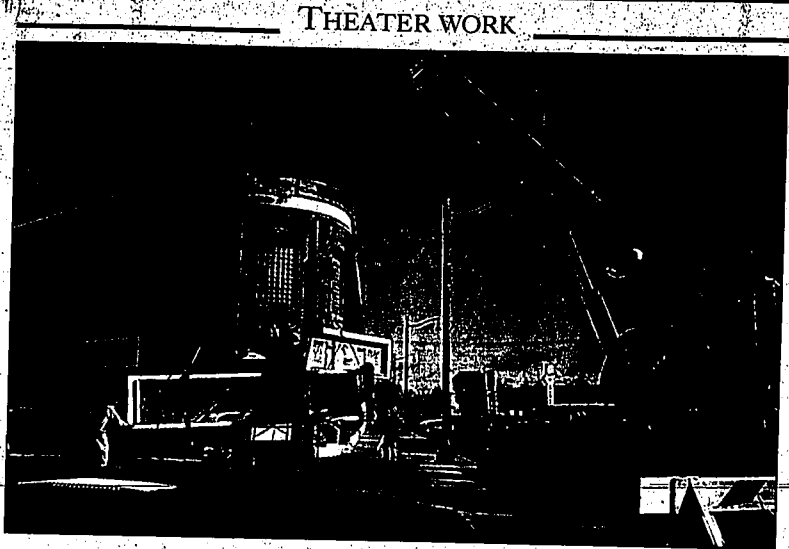

"You don't have to be big to be good," Goss said. "I'm very excited to see our students do so well at the state level."

BLISS - Bliss seventh-graders got an introduction to the political process and were awarded their efforts.

4-Hers sew up new skills with projects

RUPERT - When you think of 4-H, you probably think of agriculture. But 4-H offers a variety of opportunity to learn many new life skills, including sewing, leaders say.

The Crazy Kritters 4-H Club in Minidoka County has been meeting since December at the McGregor Community Center to sew quilts.

Want to help?
The Minidoka and Cassia County 4-H programs are seeking items to help the young people in these project areas. Sewing machines and other items need to be in good working order. For other information or to donate, call Jeni Bywater at the Minidoka County Extension Office at 435-7184 or Maria Lowder in the Cassia County Extension Office at 878-9461.

Studer.

Time-wise, the most difficult part of the quilting project is the lack of sewing machines, ironing boards, irons, as well as the basic supplies such as scissors and pins, leaders say.

Ashley Malja and Hailey Keoch work on their 4-H sewing projects.

13 years in Cassia County and has led a sewing project every year. She is a member of the Cassia Classics 4-H Club.

Barrus says this is an opportunity for young people "to express their creativity."

"There's no such thing as a mistake in sewing. You can fix it or say it's a design technique," she says.

When children start in 4-H, they usually do a pillowcase which teaches them several stitches needed for sewing, leaders say. They progress from there.

One of the hardest materials for children to work on is knits, which they work on the first year of their project. This teaches them coordination between foot, hand and eye, leaders say.

All the children have an opportunity to participate in the annual Mini-Cassia Style Revue. The children enjoy getting dressed up and having a good time, leaders say.

"It helps them with their poise and confidence," Barrus adds.

They also exhibit at the fair where others can see their efforts and accomplish-

When good CD discs go bad

Industry experts say quality control is lacking

By Kevin Washington
The Baltimore Sun

CD burners have made it possible to combine the best of Bach and Destiny's Child on the same compact disc - prompting grand scale consumption of CD-recorder drives by computer owners new and old.

But using a CD burner at home can be as frustrating as sitting in traffic - you might wind up wasting a lot of time and getting nowhere.

For example, you know you're in trouble when the first three CD-Rs out of a package of 50 discs are ejected from your $300 CD burner because it doesn't recognize them as being recordable. And prayer might be your only recourse when you discover that the CD-R you burned a week ago with five years of tax records can't be read by your computer, or anyone else's.

In either case, you might have fallen victim to poorly manufactured discs. While the odds of getting a bad CD are relatively small, industry experts agree that quality varies widely, and sadly, there are few warnings of impending doom.

"Out of 100 discs, there may be as much as a 30 percent failure rate on some brands," says Chris Bailey, digital and optical products manager for disc and drive-maker TDK. "Some brands are pure marketers. With the smaller manufacturers, the quality may not be there, but they're selling cheaply."

If you do get a bad disc, you'll get little explanation from your computer. "The media just won't work at all - it won't be recognized, or you'll get to the end of the disc, have burned most of the information, and the disc will just kick out," Bailey explained. "It's a defective disc, and you wasted all of your time."

According to industry insiders, manufacturers rarely throw away blank CD-Rs that don't meet the highest quality standards. They often end up on a retailer's shelf or in the bargain bins at computer shows, where they sell for as little as 40 cents each in bulk.

You can avoid most headaches by careful shopping. CD engineers advise buying the discs the drive manufacturer recommends. Check the instruction manual or the maker's Web site.

"If your drive manufacturer makes a disc," says Mike Johnson, general manager of Omega Optical Business, "you should buy that. Those discs have been tested by that manufacturer with that drive."

Look for a statement of accountability on the package. It can be a lifetime warranty, a technical support number or even a notice that the CD-Rs inside conform to so-called "Orange Book" specifications, originally developed by Sony and Phillips to provide industry-wide standards.

Test the discs with your CD burner before you record anything critical, whether it's music or financial records. Then test the discs in your car's CD-player or your computer.

Some recorders don't work well with some discs. "They're just bad combinations for a number of reasons," said Anders Bohren, a physicist at Vivastar.

Handspring digital assistant is easy to use, very functional.

Hardware review

Using the Visor Prism provides a sense of how a parking attendant might feel at the end of the shift: After driving luxury cars all night, it's tough to jump behind the wheel of an old Chevy.

Handspring's Visor Deluxe has been my beloved office tool/organizer/playing for more than a year, but a new toy can make you forget your first love. The Prism comes in a cobalt blue shell - not my first choice - but once you use it, it's hard not to be sold on this personal digital assistant. It offers the same standard functions as other Visors, only with a brilliant, full-color screen.

To make the most of the LCD, Handspring has created a special Web page. At www.handspring.com/color, users can get free downloads that include games, photo software and a media player.

Just as easy to use as its predecessors, the $449 Visor Prism also has a rechargeable battery. This comes in handy, particularly with power-hungry modules such as modems that add functionality.

For all the Prism's wonders, though, the pictures aren't as crisp as what you'll find on your desktop. The biggest downside I found was that, like many color models from others, the screen is difficult, sometimes impossible, to read in bright sunlight.

Open up DOS command line to check your memory

By James Coates
Chicago Tribune

Q. Now that I have upgraded my computer (running Windows ME) from 128 megabytes of random access memory to 512 mb, I am wondering how can I determine if all that memory I purchased is indeed available.

A. The best way to check how much RAM is on your machine is to boot back to those DOS routines computer users relied upon back in the days when memory was counted in kilobytes rather than multimegabytes.

To do this you need to open a DOS command line window, which then accepts text commands to check the machine's memory chips and returns an answer after the enter key gets hit. To check for memory type in the command mem/c and the machine will check the memory chips on board and give you the answer, Mr. C.

This routine shows you how much RAM is being used by the computer for essential operations and how much "extended" memory is free for handling applications. In your case that should say that there is roughly 513 mb free, which counts roughly 1 mb above that in your memory chips.

To find the DOS command line, click on Start then Programs and Accessories, where you will find an icon marked MS-DOS Prompt to click. Q. Sometimes while trying to open a file or even when trying to open an e-mail attachment, a window will pop up saying "Open with" and giving a list of options. How do I know what to highlight?

A. That "Open with" prompt is a cop-out from Microsoft, and it comes up when the file you are trying to open has an extension that Windows does not recognize. For example, Windows knows that files ending in .txt or .doc are word processing files, and so the operating system uses the proper word processing software to open them.

But if a file gets named with gobbledygook for an extension name, say .xyz or some such, the operating system doesn't know which program to use to open it. So Windows asks the user which application the user thinks might work.

If you happen to know what kind of file the icon was supposed to be, you can simply rename it to include the proper extension, and then Windows will open it if your guess is correct.

Sometimes it is possible to figure out what kind of file lies behind one of these mystery icons by using that "Open with" command box to scroll down to Word Pad, the basic word processor built into Windows that will open a file and show whenever text that it might include.

You can often find a clue in that text and then rename the icon with the extension that will open it.

Wireless system may become important teaching aid for surgeons

Knight Ridder News Service

LEXINGTON, Ky. - The University of Kentucky Chandler Medical Center is ready to put its surgical procedures right in the palm of a doctor's hand - anywhere in the world.

University doctors announced recently that they have developed a wireless system to beam live pictures and sound from the operating room to hand-held computers, essentially anywhere on the globe.

When fully developed, researchers said, the system might be able to let student doctors and seasoned practitioners observe operations, learn new techniques, and consult from distant locations.

The setup was tested successfully for the first time earlier this month, transmitting video from a hernia operation at the university to a distant hand-held computer.

Kentucky is thought to be the first to develop such a system, which uses existing technology, said Dr. Adrian Park, director of UK's Center for Minimally Invasive Surgery. University officials said they will make it available to any center that wants to use it.

"The technology still is in its infancy, but the potential for medical education benefits and clinical outreach are tremendous," Park said.

However, doctors acknowledged that the wireless system needs more development, including provisions for two-way transmission. Also, it is unclear yet whether the small video screen on a hand-held computer can show enough information to help students learn a new technique, or allow an experienced surgeon to advise on a distant operation.
