Oldest boy turns himself in Children are reassured about mother

The Associated Press

SANDPOINT - The oldest boy in a backwoods stalemate between authorities and six frightened children has turned himself in - the first break in a four-day siege that began when the children's mother was arrested for alleged child neglect. Benjamin McGuckin, 15, was driven here, about 10 miles north of the decaying family home near Garfield Bay, late Thursday by a neighbor, but by late Friday, his five siblings remained hold up, unwilling to come out.

Bryce Powell, the court-appointed attorney for the children's mother, JoAnn McGuckin, was the first person to confirm communication with the remaining children late Friday.

"The children have food and water and they know their mom is alive," Powell said as he drove away from the isolated home, set off in the woods on a dirt road.

Powell said there had been face to face talks with the remaining children Friday but refused to say who was involved in those talks.

It was not known if Ben McGuckin had been brought back to talk to his brothers and sisters: Kathryn, 16; Mary, 13;

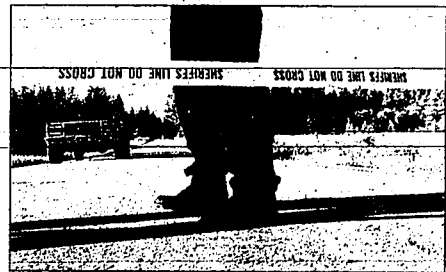

James, 11; Frederick, 9; and June, 8.

The oldest sister Erina, 19, who left the house after an earlier falling-out with her parents, has been working with authorities.

Erina McGuckin's concerns about conditions at the home formed the basis of a charge against JoAnn McGuckin, who was arrested Tuesday for investigation of child neglect and held on $100,000 bail.

A bail-reduction hearing scheduled Friday afternoon was canceled when Powell failed to appear.

TWIN FALLS - He's a thoroughly Americanized 6-year-old, is Arljan, so much so that he sometimes teases his mother about her accent.

"That's the way it is with second-generation kids," said Anita Bozic, 28, a recently minted accountant and soon-to-be naturalized citizen of the United States of America. "Sometimes, I worry about him forgetting his language, forgetting the old ways."

The old ways are half a world away, in a city called Zavidovici that was already an ethnic melting pot when Columbus came to America. It still was in 1992, when war broke over the Bosnian Between 500 and 600 Bosnians still live in the Twin Falls area.

"It was very surprising," Bozic said. "We were used to living together, to getting along."

"We both come from (ethnicity) mixed families," said Bozic's husband, Jadranko Predojevic, 30. "There was no future for us there after the war."

The future is here, in a Bosnian cafe of Predojevic's own devising on Twin Falls' Main Avenue. The metaphor couldn't be more apt for his community's experience in Twin Falls.

"Most of them have done very well here," said Ron Black, who runs the College of Southern Idaho Refugee Center, which resettles immigrants assigned to Twin Falls by the State Department. "They're very motivated to get back what they lost."

Between 500 and 600 Bosnians - the majority of whom are either naturalized citizens or in the process of becoming so - still live in the Twin Falls area. About 1,500 emigrants from that fractured portion of the former Yugoslavia have come through the CSI Refugee Center since the first arrived in February 1993, fleeing civil war among the Muslims, Serbs and Croats.

In the process, they've made the distinctive sound of Serbo-Croatian commonplace in Twin Falls schools, stores and work-places and brought some consciousness of the rest of the world to a small American city long cosseted by isolation.

"Some of the Bosnians moved on - to Boise or to jobs or family elsewhere," Black said.

Lawmaker pushes for revisions

By Jennifer Sandmann Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - His co-sponsored bill to curb the power of presidents to designate or change national monuments will be introduced next week in the House of Representatives, Congressman Mike Simpson said Friday.

Proposed revisions to the 1906 Antiquities Act respond to the authority used by former President Bill Clinton in his 11th-hour designations of national monuments, including one at Craters of the Moon National Monument that increased the size of the 54,000-acre park by 651,000 acres.

Simpson told The Times-News editorial board that his bill would require Congress to approve proposed monuments of more than

Sen. McCain considers leaving GOP

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON - Maverick Republican Sen. John McCain of Arizona, in a widening rift with President Bush and his party's dominant conservative wing, is talking with advisers about leaving the GOP and launching a third-party challenge to Bush in 2004, those close to the senator say.

Such a move is not imminent, they say. For the near term, McCain, who upset Bush in the 2000 New Hampshire primary and won 5 million primary-senator votes, will work to build a centrist faction within the GOP to mirror the moderate "New Democrats."

But if Bush struggles as president, and if McCain loses on key issues such as defense funding and campaign finance reform, advisers say he may challenge Bush in the same way the reformist Teddy Roosevelt, McCain's hero, battled a conservative Republican, William Howard Taft, in 1912.

"This weekend, McCain is hosting the Senate Democratic leader, Thomas A. Daschle (S.D.), at his home in Sedona, Ariz. His office called it a "social event," but McCain has met privately to discuss party switching with at least three Democratic senators - Daschle, Edward M. Kennedy (Mass.) and John Edwards (N.C.).

Magic Valley schools receive money from Safe School Fund

The Associated Press

BOISE - Troy officials who struggled to erase their high school's notoriety as Idaho's poster child for dilapidated buildings Friday dropped out of a lawsuit against the state after passing a May 22 levy to replace the structure... Gov. Dirk Kempthorne, state Treasurer Ron Crane and Idaho Schools Superintendent Marilyn Howard distributed Safe School Fund checks to four school districts, including two from the Magic Valley.

"It's been a hard year. We've had to suffer a lot, so I thank you for this," Wendell Middle School student Anna Strunk said.

Troy's thanks came with a significant gesture.

"The first question I had when I took office was, 'Is this lawsuit just?'" said Gary Osborn, Troy School Board member. "The answer was we don't know, but we need to do something. But I'm here to announce we're officially pulling out of the lawsuit."

More than a dozen school districts - though none from the Magic Valley - sued the state, questioning whether it is meeting its constitutional responsibility to ensure public schools can provide all Idaho children with safe

McVeigh exploits opportunity

Terrorist sees errors as reason to live

TERRE HAUTE, Ind. (AP) — Preparing for his execution at the hands of the government, he despises, Timothy McVeigh gave fellow death row inmates everything he owned, arranged for his body to be burned over to family members and readied himself for what some saw as martyrdom.

He sat in his stuffy 8-by-10-foot cell and waited.

Then he learned of an FBI error, saw a chink in the government's armor. Now instead of waiting to die, the man convicted of killing 168 people in the Oklahoma City bombing has found a reason to live.

"I would say he has some new resolve," said attorney Robert Nigh, who described his client's demeanor after a meeting in the federal prison here Thursday.

McVeigh's attorneys have filed court papers in Denver and now await a Wednesday hearing to argue for a stay of McVeigh's June 11 execution. They say they need more time to review thousands of documents the FBI failed to turn over during McVeigh's 1997 trial, and they hope to show that the govern-

Rob Nigh, right, and Richard Burr, attorneys for Timothy McVeigh, announce Thursday that McVeigh has decided to seek a stay of execution.

The decision stands in stark contrast to McVeigh's previous stance.

In December, he asked that all appeals be dropped and his death be scheduled quickly. Among the possessions he handed over to fellow inmates was his fan, prized in death row cells without air conditioning.

As early as Thursday morning, when he met with Nigh and attorney Richard Burr at the U.S. Penitentiary, he had yet to decide whether to seek a stay or move forward with the execution.

"He had prepared himself psychologically and emotionally," Nigh said. "He had prepared himself to die."

According to an online journal by fellow death row inmate David Hammer, McVeigh had been in a "soldier" mode while getting ready for his lethal injection, even keeping his bed made up military style. Hammer, who is friends with McVeigh, wrote that the 6-foot-2 Gulf War veteran had slimmed down to 157 pounds, giving his face a drawn look.

"All of this is by design, planned to the most minute detail," Hammer wrote. "All for impression and purpose."

According to the journal, McVeigh gave Hammer a photograph of himself and inscribed it with the words: "My head has been bloodied, but it remains unbowed."

Robert Jay Lifton, co-author of the book "Who Owns Death?", an examination of the psychology of capital punishment, said he believes McVeigh is torn between making a martyr of himself and exposing the government's mistakes.

"With McVeigh, there's always been a conflict between his own impulses, particularly toward martyrdom, and what you could call the legal interests of his case," Lifton said. "Now the impulse toward martyrdom has become mixed in with a desire to live and a desire to embarrass the government."

Burr said his client simply wants to expose problems in the criminal justice system.

"That right now is paramount to him," Burr said. "It caused him to put principle over personal concerns."

It's now clear that McVeigh still believes he can win something. His newfound resilience can be found in one simple act: He just bought a fan from the prison commissary.

Legal analysts say McVeigh's chances for new trial are slim

DENVER (AP) — Timothy McVeigh confessed to the Oklahoma City bombing. His attorneys admit they have no new evidence to prove his innocence. And they are relying on a 57-year-old patent fraud case in seeking a delay of his execution.

Attorneys for McVeigh face a hearing Wednesday in which they will argue that his lethal injection, scheduled just five days later, should be put on hold.

Legal analysts believe U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch will grant a delay, but say his chances of winning a new trial or sentencing hearing are slim.

They also emphasize that McVeigh is not specifically asking for either one — just a hearing to force the government to show why it has not produced all the investigative documents in the case so they can see if there are grounds for another appeal. "I suppose their strategy is the passage of time. That can only help McVeigh because every week there are new revelations," said Andrew Cohen, a legal analyst who covered McVeigh's 1997 trial.

Jury decides on death penalty for murderer

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Jurors decided Friday that a man should be executed for killing a 13-year-old girl during a botched 1991 robbery of a frozen yogurt shop.

The jury took two days to convict Robert Burns Springsteen IV of murdering Amy Ayers and two more days to decide that he should be put to death.

"In compliance with the laws of Texas, I hereby assess your punishment of death," District Judge Mike Lynch said.

The jury had just two options: life in prison or death by lethal injection.

Springsteen stood straight and showed no emotion. He nodded twice as Lynch explained the appeals process.

As he left the courtroom he looked straight ahead with a steady gaze. His wife, Robin Moss, who was seated in the front row, she took several deep breaths and looked at the floor but otherwise showed no emotion.

Asked if Springsteen had anything to say about the sentence, his lawyer Joe James Sawyer said, "Not guilty. That's what he says." Prosecutors urged jurors to choose death by injection.

Damage Caused by Propulsid®

If you were prescribed Propulsid® and have been diagnosed with heart damage or an irregular heart beat, you should investigate your legal rights. S.I.D.S. (Sudden Infant Death Syndrome) has also been reported in connection with Propulsid®. Propulsid® was prescribed for infants with colic and for adults with heartburn. The manufacturer agreed to stop selling Propulsid® in July 2000, in the face of the concerns over deaths and irregular heartbeats.

Experienced attorneys can help you learn more about your legal rights, and if appropriate, help you obtain compensation for any resulting injuries.

Prosecutor: Hospital shooting was justified

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS — A man who was shot twice by a Twin Falls police officer at a local psychiatric hospital had methamphetamine in his system at the time and ignored numerous warnings from the officer to drop the two knives he had armed himself with, according to the Twin Falls County prosecutor.

So no charges will be filed against officer Tim Green, who May 11 shot David A. Smith during a confrontation at Canyon View Psychiatric and Addiction Services in Twin Falls, prosecutor Grant Loeb announced in a press release Friday.

Loeb said he decided not to prosecute Green after reviewing reports from an Idaho State Police investigation into the shooting.

Smith, 48, of Greenfield, Mass., armed with two steel knives, was "growling" during the confrontation and at one point threw a knife at Green, Loeb's release said. "Witnesses stated that officer Green ordered Mr. Smith to drop the knives several times. Smith refused to comply," Loeb's release said. "After the warnings, officer Green fired one shot, hitting Smith.

According to witnesses, Smith was "right on (officer Green)" when the officer fired." Witnesses told investigators that after the first shot, Smith continued to come at Green and threw one of the knives at Green, according to Loeb's statement. The knife struck Green in the chest but did not hurt him, and Green again told Smith to drop the knife. Witnesses say Smith ignored the order, and Green shot him again, Loeb's statement said.

Twin Falls police detectives this week also finished a review of the shooting, said detective Scott Smith. Detectives had handed their conclusions over to department administrators, who will review Green's conduct under the department's standards and policies, Scott Smith said.

Loeb recently filed charges — of aggravated assault — against David Smith, who was still hospitalized Friday at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center in Twin Falls.

School's out

Pam Woodruff cleans out the drawers of her desk Friday at Agape Christian School in Twin Falls. Because of declining enrollment, the church will close its classrooms to elementary-school-age children. The preschool and day care at the site will remain in operation.

Christian elementary school scales back

By Julie Ponce
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Demographic shifts and rising energy costs helped end most classes this spring at a small, non-denominational Christian school.

The Rev. Jim Sommer, who oversees the Agape Christian School in Twin Falls, said the school is named for the highest form of love, transcending all barriers and prejudices. And one mother who sends her first-grader to Agape said most impressive about the school is the loving environment she sees there.

"It's just so moral and so loving," Holly Beymer said. "Every time I leave the building I am so thankful we have this school."

But Thursday was her son's last day at Agape. He and 47 other youngsters in grades one through six will have to find another school before fall. Agape

Christian School will serve only preschool-aged children and kindergartners next year.

"When I told him, he cried," Beymer said. She added that her son is a sensitive child, so she had searched for a school with an extra-caring atmosphere, good academics and an emphasis on spirituality before settling on Agape.

"The teachers really go out of their way to make sure you feel like your child is the only child in the class," she said. "People are just devastated about this."

Parents, teachers and students learned only a week ago the doors would be closed to the older students.

Teachers said they could see finances were tight throughout the year, and there had been talk about possibility of a closure. But not until they received a letter from the School Board did they really believe it.

Auction benefits homeless animals

By Dixie Thomas Reala
Times-News correspondent

JEROME — There will be bargains galore at the Pet Pals auction Sunday, and proceeds from the sale will go to help homeless animals in Jerome.

The Jerome Pet Pals, Inc. has been working with the city of Jerome for the past year to improve conditions at the city animal shelter. Currently, a $10,785 improvement project is under way and should be completed by mid-July. Improvements will include new chain-link fencing and animal runs outdoors, and remodeling of the indoor kennels to cut down on the spread of disease. Pet Pals is paying $2,000 of the remodeling costs and the city is covering the balance.

The Jerome Pet Pals have gone beyond this summer's renovations in their planning. They want to eventually add outdoor landscaping, a room to house cats, a reception room for adoption interviews and pet doors leading to the chain-link runs so the animals can go in and out at will.

Karen Kramer, a member of Jerome Pet Pals, said the group is now investigating the possibility of the remodeling costs and the city is covering the balance.

Please see AUCTION, Page A8

If you go ...

The Jerome Pet Pals auction is scheduled for 2 p.m. Sunday at the Moose Hall in Jerome, located at the corner of North Lincoln Avenue and Second Avenue East. Some of the items to be sold in the highest bidder include: several television sets, weightlifting equipment, microwave ovens, bicycles, 16-inch tires on rims, books, lots of dishes and other collectibles.

Anyone interested in helping or joining Pet Pals can call Karen Kramer, at 324-4648.

Tickets go fast for Willis play

By Karen Bossick
Times-News correspondent

HAILEY — You would have thought it was the opening of the hottest new play on Broadway.

Company of Fools' box office was that busy Friday.

Phones rang faster than the bullets whizzing through "Die Hard" as callers as far away as Germany reserved tickets to see movie box-office hotshot Bruce Willis star in his first live play here in four years.

Willis, who lives near Hailey, will star in actor/playwright Sam Shepard's "True West" June 2 through July 29 at The Liberty Theatre in Hailey.

By 2:30 p.m. hundreds of tickets had been sold, said R.L. Rowsey of Company of Fools. Most were taken by folks in Twin Falls, Boise, Nampa and Meridian. But plenty more were snatched up by out-of-staters.

If you go ...

Reserved-seating tickets for "True West" are $30 for balcony seating and $40 for main-floor seating for performances July 5-29. Times are 8 p.m. Tuesdays through Saturdays and 2 p.m. Saturdays and Sundays.

Preview tickets are $15 for an 8 p.m. performance June 30 and a 2 p.m. show July 1.

Tickets for a third preview performance — at 8 p.m. June 29 — will go for $10 and can be purchased starting at 6 p.m. that night at the Liberty Theatre Box Office.

An opening-night gala, featuring a reception with a Wild West theme, will cost $100 a person.

Tickets can be charged by phone during box-office hours at 578-9122.

It's difficult to put a price tag on — for a lot of people, the play will be just a bonus in a visit here, she acknowledged. But it will draw in others who might not have come otherwise.

Don't choke if you forgot to place your order. There were still plenty available among the 7,500 up for sale.

"True West" is a dark comedy about two estranged brothers. One, a reserved Hollywood scriptwriter who house-sits for his mother, yearns to live on the edge like his brother. That brother, a thief and drifter, wishes he had the more stable life of his sibling.

Their quest to change lifestyles results in a ferocious — and hilarious — war with one another.

Willis, who plays the drifter, was instrumental in bringing Company of Fools to Hailey from Richmond, Va. He last appeared on stage in the theater company's 1997 production of "Fool for Love."

Willis' sidekick, Chad Smith, turned in a charming performance as Scrooge in the company's production of "Christmas Carol" last December. He also appeared in the theater company's "Sideman," a bittersweet drama about a jazz musician trying to cling to a lifestyle that was fast going out of style.

"Patsy Clite," originally scheduled this summer, will probably be put on hold until next summer, Rowsey said.

Jake was born Dec. 11, 1912, to Hugh and Alice Gilles Ettore in Candia, Kan. True to his pioneer spirit, he moved out to the West at the age of 20 and settled in Twin Falls, Idaho. It was here that he met his first love, Kay Thompson. They married in 1941 and had two children, John Jacob Ettore Jr. and Roland Douglas (Doug) Ettore. They moved to Boise, Idaho, where he later helped open the Roadway Inn. Upon the death of Cletis in 1996, Jake returned to the Magic Valley to complete his life.

Jake loved to travel especially in one of his many Buicks. At the time of his passing, Jake was writing his memoirs. He planned on calling

Legislation aims to protect West from summer shortfalls

By Tom Steinfeld States News Service

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Lawmakers are working on legislation that would let industrial, commercial, and certain residential electricity consumers sell unused power back to wholesalers at market prices.

The measure is intended to protect Western states from potential electricity shortfalls and supply relief to California's energy crisis.

The Electricity Emergency Relief Act, currently under review in two House committees, would affect all Western Systems electricity consumers, but is targeted especially toward large users of electricity holding long-term contracts.

Western Systems is an electric power system servicing 14 Western states and parts of Canada and Mexico. The system's coordinating council encompasses 1.8 million square miles, the largest area of the 10 regional councils that form the North American Electric Reliability Council. NERC is a nonprofit corporation of electric utilities, independent power producers and electricity marketers.

The bill, introduced by Rep. Joe Barton, R-Texas, directs the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to forge agreements between wholesale sellers and purchasers of electric energy to temporarily halt electric energy purchases.

The plan allows for demand reduction, in which large energy consumers, particularly California's large industrial companies, sell back energy they can forgo to help relieve other consumers. Johnson said.

Currently, such industrial companies are tied into long-term contracts with energy providers that prevent this action. California's energy crisis has sapped power from other states tied into the Western Systems to fulfill its energy needs.

The legislation's major sticking point is price controls, something most Democrats oppose but which Republicans, particularly those most affected by energy problems, support.

"The one big stumbling block right now continues to be the issue of price caps," Johnson said. "Our concern is that if you create an artificial price, a wholesale price for electricity, you will only create additional blackouts and additional shortages."

Despite the short-term benefits price controls could create, Sen. Wayne Allard, R-Colo., is among the majority of Republicans opposed to such action due to the potentially devastating longer term-effects of such a plan.

New recall petition emerges in debate over forest roads

DRIGGS (AP) - All three Teton County commissioners are expected to vote on a recall petition effort with new petitions.

On May 14, commissioners Ron Ramirez and Jay Calderwood rescinded a 1998 ordinance that essentially banned the Targhee National Forest from closing forest roads in the county by prohibiting the Forest Service from running equipment over 90,000 pounds on county roads that access the forest.

Commissioner Mark Trupp abstained from voting.

The first recall drive is to recall Ramirez and Calderwood, who said they voted as they did to establish a cooperative relationship with the new Forest Service administration.

The latest document, filed by Barbara Klebesadel of Driggs to recall Commissioner Mark Trupp and County Clerk Nolan Boyle, was partly to stop the effort against the two other men, she said.

"Klebesadel said Ramirez and Calderwood were the first elected officials that have been willing to listen to the people and to act accordingly. The petition to recall Boyle accuses him of 'overstepping the boundaries of the office of county clerk."

Boyle said he does not mind the recall process, which is a "reminder to us that power is not in an office or a person but comes from the people."

Trupp said he is disappointed no one called him at home to voice their concerns.

The latest petition organizers have until July 30 to gather 664 signatures of the registered county voters. If the campaign is successful and a special election is held, 1,012 votes would be needed to recall Boyle and 1,068 votes to oust Trupp.

Nature Conservancy creates land reserve in coulee country

WATERVILLE, Wash. (AP) - The Nature Conservancy is buying 16,000 acres in the sagebrush and basalt-cliff country east of the Cascades to create one of the largest private land preserves in the state.

The deal is one in a series of recent land purchases to protect fragile desert shrub-steppe habitat in Washington.

The Nature Conservancy bought 478 acres in 1998 and another 3,588 acres in 1999, and paid for the development rights to 2,800 acres last April - all in the dry coulee country of north-central Washington.

The conservancy's property will be closed to the public while the organization develops a long-range management plan for the sites.

"We need to protect a large enough area that natural systems can unfold," conservancy spokeswoman Leslie Brown said. "If you only have a little preserve here and you're pressing to make them become sort of biological museums."

Conservation groups around the West have been working recently to protect sagebrush land.

"These are subtle landscapes that aren't very attractive to many people," said Elizabeth Bell, director of special projects for the Land Trust Alliance office in Seattle.

"Yet they are some of the best and most important areas to protect."

Sagebrush-steppe habitats are home to a number of rare plants and animals, including sage grouse, pygmy rabbits and dwarf-evening primrose.

Bush request doesn't include money to cover IOUs for ill workers

WASHINGTON (AP) - Victims of the nation's Cold War-era biological weapons program hold out hope that IOUs would have to wait until October to receive any compensation payments under a budget proposal issued by President Bush on Friday.

Members of Congress from New Mexico and Utah have urged the administration to include $84 million in additional funding to cover shortfalls in the Radiation Exposure Compensation Act.

Jude McGarrin, spokeswoman for Sen. Jeff Bingaman, D-N.M., said the senator was disappointed the funding wasn't included in the proposal.

The act, passed in 1990, was designed to compensate uranium miners and those exposed to radiation during nuclear tests who are known as "downwinders."

But the program, administered by the Justice Department, ran out of money last summer, meaning many people eligible for payments have been receiving IOUs from the government. Several have died from their cancers while awaiting payments.

"We believe it's a very important program and what the administration has proposed is significantly increasing the program," said White House spokeswoman Claire Buchan.

Bush has proposed fully funding the compensation program beginning in the next fiscal year at a cost of $97 million next year and $710 million over the next decade. He would also make the funding mandatory, meaning it wouldn't be subject to annual congressional budget battles.

But none of that money would become available until October.

"We have to look until October and even then we're not to get our fingers crossed," said J. Preston Truman, director of the group Downwinders. "On one hand everyone is so sorry for all the victims of the Cold War (programs) and on the other hand they're not willing to make the funding mandatory, meaning it wouldn't be subject to annual congressional budget battles."

Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., had requested the $84 million emergency funding, but a spokeswoman for the senator said it wasn't expected in Bush's proposal.

"It's something we intend to handle here now that it's in Congress' hands," said Sarah Echols. "We're going to get it on the front burner as soon as possible."

Burley woman, daughter die in car accident

The Times-News

RUPERT - A Burley woman and her daughter were killed Thursday evening about four miles west of Rupert. Marivel Adams, 43, and Tristin Adams, 12, died following their vehicle's collision with a pickup truck, said Minidoka County Sheriff Paul Fries.

Mini-Cassia in brief injury, Fries said. Rocio Alvarado, 29, of Burley was driving the pickup southbound on 400 West. Three passengers were inside. The accident is still under investigation, but officers believe Marivel Adams was driving west just before 9 p.m. on West Baseline Road when she either failed to stop at a stop sign at 400 West or proceeded through the intersection before it was clear, Fries said.

Idaho Supreme Court upholds Cassia decision

BURLEY - Two Burley men lost an Idaho Supreme Court appeal Thursday involving the location of a gravel pit. John Evans and Jackson Allred had appealed a decision by the Cassia County Planning and Zoning Commission that gave a special-use permit to Larry R. Watterson in 1998 to develop a gravel pit on his 46-acre farm. Evans and Allred, who live in a residential subdivision that borders Watterson's farm to the west, claimed the commission erred in finding that the gravel pit was generally compatible with adjourning property, according to a Supreme Court news release. The two homeowners also argued the commission violated Idaho law. The Supreme Court ruled Thursday that Allred and Evans failed to prove the commission's actions were prohibited by Idaho law. Other homeowners had joined Evans and Allred in an initial petition for review in 5th District Court. The homeowners argued, among other things, the gravel pit would reduce the value of their homes. That court affirmed the commission's decision, and Evans and Allred took the decision to the Idaho Supreme Court. > compiled from staff reports

Happy to be home

Community welcomes Burley man home to recover

By Correen Hart Times-News correspondent

BURLEY - After four months in Pittsburgh, Michael Pollard is ready to stay home. With Pollard recuperating from a multi-organ transplant, he's just happy to sleep in his own bed. "I lost another 38 pounds after I went to Pittsburgh," Pollard said, which made him a total of 67 pounds lighter than one year ago. But he's home for a few months and eagerly looking forward to the day when he has enough strength to return to his job at Amalgamated Sugar.

Correen Hart/The Times-News Jamie Pollard, 2, center, and Jordan Pollard, 7, are excited to have their father home.

Editor's note: A portion of this story was inadvertently cut off in Friday's edition. The story is reprinted in its entirety. The Times-News regrets the error. "I just need to get where I can eat more and put some of the weight back on, and then I'll be able to work again," Pollard said. He returned Saturday to Burley to a crowd gathered in his front yard. Friends and family had tied yellow ribbons around the trees. A huge hand-painted "welcome home" sign hung on the garage door. A home video caught the moment when Pollard embraced his friends and family. His wife, Tammi, was the photographer. Daughter Jamie Pollard, 2, has become her father's shadow since his return.

Want to help? Afflicted with hemochromatosis, Mike Pollard was unable to digest his food. He lived on liquid feedings taken through a surgically implanted tube for about two years. Most people die unable to survive past a year on the feedings because they damage the pancreas. Friends organized dinners, auctions, yard sales and many other events. They raised more than $70,000, which was used to charter a plane to get Pollard to Pittsburgh when organs became available, and for other needs not covered by insurance. Doctors gave him five hours to get to the hospital from Idaho. An initial 18-hour surgery did not result in a transplant because his liver fit extremely poor condition. As a result, he had to undergo a second 18-hour procedure 16 days later. He received a stomach, small intestine, pancreas, a duodenum and liver. The expenses are not over. Pollard's medication costs $1,300 for a five-week supply. For those who wish to make donations, a bank account in Jill Pollard's name has been established at First Federal Bank in Burley.

FLAME FIGHTERS

South-central Bureau of Land Management firefighters Tony Erickson, left, of Almo and Katie Ward of Maitta keep a range fire from crossing the road Friday about eight miles west of Paul. The West End Rural Fire Department assisted BLM crews with the blaze that had scorched about 1,000 acres by Friday evening. The human-caused fire was under control Friday night, officials said, and the cause was under investigation.

Burley city council puts skate park out for bid again

By Ruth Streeter Times-News writer

BURLEY - A skate park is going out for bid for the third time, with officials' hopes that enough money can be raised to pay for construction. The Burley City Council Friday turned down two recent bids for around $125,000. The decision was a 3-10-1 vote. Council members - Gordon Hansen and Adria Masoner arrived after the vote.

be purchased at Burley City Hall. The bidding process takes about a month. Building the park will take at least a month, plus another few weeks to let the concrete set before it is ready to use. The city is waiting a couple of weeks to put the project out for bid again, to see what money fundraising and various grants yield. The city won't likely have to scale back the project's size, said city administrator Mark Mitton. Doing so would require redesign, he said.

Search uncovers drowned man; daughter's body remains missing

KUNA, Idaho (AP) - Five days after a father and daughter drowned in the Snake River, the man's body was recovered, the Ada County Sheriff's Office reported. The body of Hilario Ponce was discovered around noon Friday about 1 1/2 miles downstream from where he and his 15-year-old daughter, Anita Marquez, entered the water Sunday night. The search continues for the girl's body. An intense search for the pair - by air, water and land - ensued following the drownings. Ponce, 59, was the father of 12. He was a farmworker and Anita, an eighth-grader, was about to graduate from Vallivue Middle School.

The city has set aside $90,000 for the park and will rely on private contributions - either monetary or in-kind donations - for the remaining $35,000. Councilman Dave Ringle's vote was the sole dissent. Ringle acknowledged that without the money, turning down the bids is necessary in light of the sluggish economy. But he said his vote signified his commitment to get the park built - something other council members said they agree on.

Mayor Doug Manning said he is confident the public will step forward with donations - as it has in the past - to make the project possible. Manning also said the city will negotiate a price for anyone who wants to give the park his or her name. Skate park organizers have said they didn't begin fundraising sooner because they wanted to know the park's exact cost before soliciting donations.

Minidoka district approves budget

By Lorraine Cavener Times-News correspondent

RUPERT - With fuel and electricity prices going up and average daily attendance going down, balancing the Minidoka County School District's budget was a juggling act. But School Board members have finished the job, unanimously approving their nearly $26 million general fund budget Thursday night. The final budget includes comparative data that shows evidence of a steadily dropping average daily attendance since 1993, said district treasurer Pam Wade. The state bases its support for schools on daily attendance, which dropped again this year. The district has 146 fewer students than last year. The drop in enrollment this year will again result in less state money next year, she said. The district depends heavily on state money. In the 2000-01 budget, the state supplied the district with nearly $19 million - 72.5 percent of its budget. "We will take another hit next year," Wade said. Fuel and utilities will also hit the district hard again next year. This year, bus fuel increased 23.4 percent over last year, and utilities rose 22 percent during a nine-month period, Wade said.

While the district has already started to encourage employees and students to conserve, district officials expect even higher fuel and electricity bills next year. "We hope increases aren't as nasty as they say they will be," Wade said. Major maintenance and repair projects were other items that affected the district's budget, Wade said. Major projects - totaling nearly $500,000 - included paving, carpet and flooring; painting; roof repair; projects involving safety and security; and improvements required under the Americans with Disabilities Act. Technology updates costing $366,652 were also a major expense. While attendance was down and costs were up, there was a small bright spot. The district received many grants for educational programs. "This is the first year we've received that many," Wade said. Grants included one for $10,000 Memorial Elementary School for the Reading is Elementary program, along with a number of smaller innovative grants totaling $5,000. To keep the budget balanced, Wade said the financial staff has to constantly monitor items such as fuel and utilities. "We are a conservative district," she said. "We keep a close watch on our budget."

City leaders have pledged to build the park this summer, after several postponements that date back more than a year. This will be the third time the park has been out for bid. In the first round, the only company to bid lacked a public-works license required for out-of-state contractors. Fundraising efforts to date have yielded only $1,000. Upcoming events to boost that amount include a dance and a day of street skating in downtown Burley.

Various items provided by area merchants - including a personal watercraft - are being raffled off at $5 a ticket or $13 for three tickets. Tickets may be purchased at Burley City Hall. The bidding process takes about a month. Building the park will take at least a month, plus another few weeks to let the concrete set before it is ready to use. The city is waiting a couple of weeks to put the project out for bid again, to see what money fundraising and various grants yield. The city won't likely have to scale back the project's size, said city administrator Mark Mitton. Doing so would require redesign, he said.

City Council members said Friday those residents should have brought their feelings to the council's attention. Council members said they did consider the park's neighbors in their discussions. "We didn't go into this lightly," Ringle said. Times-News writer Ruth Streeter can be reached at the Mini-Cassia Bureau at 674-4042, Ext. 109, or by e-mail at rstreeter@magicvalley.com.

Education board announces superintendent finalists

The Times-News

GOODING - The Idaho State Board of Education announced Friday the names of three finalists for the superintendent of the Idaho School for the Deaf and the Blind (ISDB) in Gooding. Ron Darcy submitted his resignation, effective July 1, after 20 years at the school. The finalists are Joseph D. Corbin Jr. of Romney, W.V.; Angel Ramos of Beaumont, Texas; and Wayne O'Farrell of Manchester, N.H. Under the direction of the state board, an 11-member superintendent search/screening committee was appointed to review the candidates' applications, check their references, conduct interviews and make a recommendation to the board, which will pick the next superintendent. The superintendent search/screening committee is made up of Greg Fitch, State Board of Education; Travis Beck, representative of the blind community; Jerry Wilding, Idaho Association for the Deaf; Darrell Hatfield, Gooding School District; Joe Kren, ISDB exempt staff member; Mary Dunn, ISDB faculty member; Ken Allison, ISDB classified staff member; Arden Schmitz, parent of deaf child; Kim Walker, parent of blind child; Jana Jones, State Department of Education, and Holly Sabala, Gooding community. According to Fitch, the state board's executive director, "We have conducted a very thorough recruiting process across the country for this position and are very pleased with the diversity and qualifications of the applicants we received." The next step is for the search/screening committee to conduct interviews with the three candidates sometime in early June. The candidate chosen for superintendent is expected to start on Aug. 1. The Idaho School for the Deaf and the Blind provides programs and services to support the unique educational and developmental needs of students from birth to 21 years of age who are deaf, hard of hearing, blind or visually impaired. Western photographer displays unique work TWIN FALLS - Images of thrashing bulls and rodeo queens are the specialties of rodeo photographer Jill Davidson of Eden. But her gallery of work, on display this month at the Metropolis Bakery Cafe on Main Avenue, offers a variety of subjects. "If it stands still long enough, I'll take its picture," Davidson said. A former rodeo queen and contestant, she has photographed several queens since turning professional in January of 2000, and each of those queens has won photogenic awards. "It helps when my subjects are adorable," Davidson noted. She also tours with the PBI (Professional Bull Riding Invitational, Inc.) as the association's official photographer. Riding in rodeos and horse shows, and taking pictures of everything in sight have been lifelong hobbies of this 1993 graduate of Jerome High School. Davidson, 26, said she was looking for a way to profit from these recreational activities. "I put my two loves (rodeo and photography) together," she said. "I liked what I saw and decided to do it for a living." > compiled from staff reports

Valley in brief

"We hope to recruit local veterinarians who would be willing to donate time one day a month to give shots and to spaying and neutering of animals brought to the shelter," she said.

no animal who hasn't been vaccinated or neutered will ever be adopted out from the shelter. This will help cut down on the spread of disease and overpopulation problem of animals in the city, Kramer said. Continued from A4. Even so, they say they are still a bit's terrible," said preschool teacher Judy Kendrick. "I still have a job, but my kids have nowhere to go to school." Four teachers will be leaving - three as a result of the downsizing, and the other to retirement.

Sommer said the school was down in enrollment by 15 throughout the year. He blames that mostly on changing demographics in the Twin Falls area. Enrollment figures are down and expenses - namely, energy costs - dramatically on the rise. The board studied the 2001-02 budget and could see no way to balance the books, he said. But because the school has been widely acknowledged for its high-quality preschool programs for 21 years, he said, the school will emphasize early-childhood programs. The program includes child care, preschool and kindergarten for 4- and 5-year-olds. The decision was a tough one, board member Gerald Nielsen said. "It's not like we sit down one day and decided to do this," he said. "We came to this through a lot of prayer and deliberation." Times-News staff writer Julia Pence can be reached at 735-3241 or by e-mail at jpence@magicvalley.com.

Standoff reinforces anti-government beliefs

The Associated Press

News crews gathering near Sandpoint broadcast the events surrounding a Northern Idaho standoff to a nationwide audience.

SANDPOINT - With its mix of gun-shaking children, marauding gangs and claims of government conspiracy, a standoff in northern Idaho is feeding the state's reputation as a haven for anti-government eccentrics.

The story would be a sad one anywhere: Six impoverished children fended off authorities at their rural home this week after their recently widowed mother was arrested.

But in northern Idaho, the confrontation involving the McGuckin children touches on long-running tensions. Human rights activists and government officials are on one side, militia, Patriot and white-supremacist groups are on the other.

"This all appears to be a media/county government demonizing operation to cover things up..." declared one posting to the Web site of the American Patriot Friends Network.

Attorney Edgar Steele, who recently represented Aryan Nations founder Richard Butler, took on the case of the McGuckin family. He warned sheriff's deputies to get off or risk an invasion of anti-government activists.

"The sheriff's department is adding fuel to the fire," Steele said.

Forty miles from the McGuckin home lies Ruby Ridge, where the wife and son of white separatist Randy Weaver were killed by federal agents during a 1992 shootout.

Thirty miles to the south is the former headquarters of the Aryan Nations, now owned by a human-rights activist who acquired the land after Butler and his neo-Nazi group were sued over an assault by Aryan Nations security guards.

For years, the Aryan Nations promoted northern Idaho as a whites-only homeland. That's not the case, but the region does have a reputation as a haven for recluses who run the range from independent-minded to fiercely anti-government.

State officials tried to play down the situation near Sandpoint, fending off comparisons to Ruby Ridge.

"This is not the same kind of situation," said Mark Snider, spokesman for Gov. Dirk Kempthorne. "Randy Weaver had an armed compound. These children have been through a lot. They've lost their father and their mother is gone. They're probably confused. The governor wants to get this resolved and worry about those issues later."

Outsiders have added their own agendas to the situation, Snider said: "Some people have some wild ideas, probably fueled by the Internet."

Indeed: Web sites of militia and patriot groups are filled with commentary about the Idaho standoff.

"Heavy-handed government oppression of those who don't conform to the politically correct liberal Orthodoxy is increasingly common," declared the Web site of Stormfront.org, a self-proclaimed "White Pride" group based in Florida.

"It is clear to me that it is time to stand up and defend the rights of a widow and her children," said a posting to the American Patriot Friends Network site. "We must come to their rescue, just as though it were our own children."

Watchdog groups that battle hate groups also joined the fray.

Eric Ward, with the Seattle-based Northwest Coalition for Human Dignity, said the Idaho standoff shows the effect of fringe teachings on the larger public: "Nobody is saying the McGuckin family belonged to a militia or hate group, but Ward said it's clear the family harbored a deep suspicion of government."

"Obviously these children have been fed a paranoid style of politics," Ward said.

The mother's reported mental instability does not explain away only two days a week and the family's self-imposed isolation, Ward said.

Idaho man faces charges after large meth seizure

IDAHO FALLS (AP) - A man living in Rigby faces 10 years to life in prison and up to $4 million in fines in what officials say is the biggest methamphetamine bust in southeast Idaho.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Rafael Gonzalez cannot remember a single seizure larger than this during his six years in the Ninth Federal Court District, which includes all of the West Coast states and Idaho, Montana, Arizona, Nevada, Hawaii and Alaska.

A 22-year-old Mexican national, allegedly arranged for someone to drive to McAllen, Texas, to pick up 43 pounds of meth, worth approximately $1.4 million.

The driver was stopped Sunday at a Texas Border Patrol checkpoint for routine questioning and agents found 14 plastic bundles of meth in the gas tank of the 1996 Dodge Dakota, according to the U.S. Attorney's Office.

Presumably the gas tank had been rigged - taken off of the truck and split to be able to hold the drugs and gasoline - said

Gonzalez.

Agents then took the truck and drugs back to Rigby, and Aguilar-Vazquez was arrested when he came to pick them up Tuesday night.

He was taken to the Bannock County Jail, where he was being held without bail.

It is difficult in the United States to obtain large quantities of the chemicals used to make meth, such as red phosphorus, iodine and pseudoephedrine, the chemicals found in cold pills, officials say.

"The labs in Idaho don't generate 43 pounds of meth, but high end for any of the interior states."

Rafael Gonzalez, assistant U.S. attorney

Idaho-Stapo-Police Captain Craig Peterson said large quantities of meth are produced in "super labs," particularly in countries south of the United States, because the regulation of chemicals used to make meth are more lenient and producers can buy their ingredients in bulk.

Winds pick up; firefighters prepare for wildfire to spread SUSANVILLE, Calif. (AP) - Firefighters battling a 4,459-acre blaze in the Sierra Nevada were forced to deal with windy conditions Friday. Gusts up to 40 mph pushed estimates for full containment to Monday.

Weather forecasters issued a "red flag" warning for 15 to 20 mph west winds.

The blaze was 85 percent contained, however, and personnel have begun to demobilize, dropping the number of those fighting the blaze to 1,700.

The fire, which began Sunday, has cost $4.4 million in firefighting expenses and destroyed $2.5 million worth of timber, mostly in national forest lands.

It began near Susanville, about 80 miles northwest of Reno, Nev., on private timberland. The blaze was sparked by a man shooting targets in the woods, said state Dept.

of Forestry spokeswoman Wendy McIntosh. The man, whose name was not released, was cited for causing a fire and letting it escape.

The fire skirted eight homes, coming as close as 30 feet to some of them. About 140 residents were evacuated, but most had returned to their homes by Tuesday.

In southern New Mexico, a wildfire that has burned about 1,900 acres in the Guadalupe Mountains was 90 percent contained Friday, with full containment hoped for by Sunday, a fire information officer Karen Takai said.

Some 376 firefighters and support personnel were fighting the blaze, burning in the Lincoln National Forest about 10 miles from Carlsbad Caverns National Park. No buildings had been threatened by the blaze, and no injuries were reported.

Pocatello urges residents to stop watering lawns

POCATELLO (AP) - As the drought worsens, city officials are asking residents to conserve water by not watering lawns or gardens on Sundays and limiting the time they run sprinklers.

The city issued a list of voluntary water restrictions on Thursday.

"Our aquifer level is down. The snowpack level this year was 68 percent compared to 80 percent last year," said Cindy Campbell, water conservation coordinator.

An advisory committee is asking residents to refrain from watering lawns and gardens on Sunday. Watering should occur only two days a week and the saturation should not go deeper than 1.5 inches into the ground. Watering should not occur during the hottest part of the day.

Restaurants are encouraged to serve water only upon request.

Exceptions would include establishing new landscaping or watering after an application of chemicals to protect lawns or trees, Campbell said.

Crime rates are not a factor for money from COPS

Ever since President Bush suggested cutting funds to a police program touted by former President Clinton as a way to "roll back this awful tide of violence," some federal lawmakers have been ready to dial 911.

The program has helped reduce crime in America, they said at a May rally on Capitol Hill that called for more funding.

According to them, the president's proposal threatens to make the country more dangerous.

Not to worry, Mr. President: As you probably realize, the program doesn't work.

That doesn't mean it lacks for supporters, of course. You'll still hear lawmakers toasting the Office of Community Oriented Policing Services (COPS) - part of a bill Clinton signed in 1994 - for its alleged success at using federal money to put 100,000 additional police officers on America's streets.

But my colleagues and I at The Heritage Foundation's center-for-data-analysis found the trail of evidence leads elsewhere. We found that COPS grants to hire or re-deploy additional officers have had no discernible effect on violent crime rates, which began dropping three years before the program debuted.

Why has COPS been a bust? For one thing, the program's creators have never allocated the grants on the basis of where criminals actually are.

The only requirement was that half the money go to cities and counties with more than 150,000 people and the other half go to cities and counties with fewer than 150,000 people.

Yes, believe it or not, crime is not a factor for getting COPS money.

A Justice Department study found that during the first four years of the COPS program, less than one-third of the money went to law enforcement agencies that reported more than half of all murders in 1997.

Second, the officers aren't there. Supporters of the program, including members of Congress, repeatedly claim the program has added more than 100,000.

But several reports by the Justice Department and the General Accounting Office found otherwise. At best, the number will peak at just 57,175 this year.

Why so low? Because the COPS office uses some pretty creative math in tallying its "on the street" officers. Take the fact that it counts all intended hires even if they aren't on the payroll yet (and may never be).

For example, the COPS office says the police department in Spokane, Wash., has hired 56 officers with $4.2 million in grants. But Spokane says it used the money to hire only 25 officers.

Even though it hired fewer than half the officers in question, COPS counts the 31 "missing" officers anyway.

Perhaps these phantom officers are off fighting invisible crimes somewhere, but they're not much help to the people of Spokane.

Third, not all departments are using COPS money to beef up their crime-fighting efforts, but targeting high-crime "hot spots" and to going after illegal gun possessions by criminals.

Instead, many departments have used COPS money to replace funds they were already getting from state and local governments. And they've been given COPS money despite not having a clear, proven (or at least tested) strategy for catching criminals.

As the Justice Department said in a 1997 review, community policing with no clear strategy to fight crime doesn't work. As the Bush administration has noted, the COPS program has run its course without meeting its objective of putting 100,000 officers to the streets and effectively fighting crime.

If Congress and the administration insist on a federal role in supplying grant money to state and local law enforcement agencies, fine. But give the funds only to those with specific, proven strategies for reducing crime, concentrate the aid on high-crime jurisdictions and make sure the money is spent for the purposes for which it's intended.

Lawmakers shouldn't call 911 to save the COPS program. They should call 411 to get information on better anti-crime programs.

America has veered from pessimism to optimism

Playing party pooper is no fun. I know. For three years, I've written that the economy's glorious boom seems headed for an inglorious end. Well, it hasn't happened. True, we've seen the dot-com and telecom collapses, and economic growth (at an annual rate) has slowed to a feeble 1 percent in the past six months. Unemployment is up slightly to 4.5 percent. But there's a feeling that the Federal Reserve's interest rate cuts will revive growth. If this is as bad as it gets, it isn't very bad. Some friends say that it's time to eat crow. Admit error. Move on.

I wish I could. I don't get pleasure from peddling pessimism. But I can't change what I write until I change what I think.

Since 1998, I've sensed an intensifying euphoria that was driving the economy forward at a dizzying and self-destructive pace. I don't think we will escape an unpleasant sequel: Mistakes born of overconfidence will create (as they already have) unemployment, bad news and financial losses. There may be prolonged sluggishness, a recession or some combination. I don't know. But I doubt that lower interest rates and the new tax cut will fully offset the boom's overly optimistic excesses.

For starters, there's still the stock market. This was the first sign of an economy going awry. Since 1871, the Standard & Poor's index of 500 stocks has had an average price-earnings ratio of about 14 - sometimes lower, sometimes higher. (The P/E ratio compares a stock's price to its profits, or earnings.) In the late 1990s, it reached the mid-30s. After the market's recent recovery, it's still near 25. To me, this looks high. In the late 1990, we learned about the "wealth effect." As the market rose, people spent more of their incomes, because their stock wealth had grown unexpectedly. From 1993 to 2000, the personal savings rate (the percent of after-tax income saved) fell from 7.1 percent to slightly less than zero. Meanwhile, business investment exploded, from 10 percent to 15 percent of gross domestic product (GDP) during the same years.

Not the prospect of a reverse. A faltering stock market could cause a "negative" wealth effect. Consumer spending can't constantly increase faster than income. Business investment is good only if it's profitable and you already know that some tech investment was neither. I also suspect that some non-tech investment was overdone, because it was based on unrealistic assumptions about consumer spending. So consumer and investment spending will continue to soften. Together, they exceed 80 percent of GDP.

If they're both weakening, the economy can't easily strengthen. The danger is a vicious circle. Poor profits raise unemployment and depress stocks. Consumer confidence and spending erode further. I doubt we'll be rescued by export demand. Japan is moribund; Europe weakening. Many developing countries depend on sales to the United States.

Could I be wrong? Of course. Hey, I've been wrong for three years, constantly underestimating the economy's resilience. Perhaps I still am, based on a faulty reading of economic indicators.

Consider the personal savings rate. In theory, it's the difference between what people receive as income and what they spend. By definition, the rest is savings. But Martin Barnes of the Bank Credit Analyst, a newsletter, argues that the statistic understates peoples' actual incomes and savings. Capital gains (profits from selling stocks) are excluded from income, but taxes paid on capital gains are deducted. Similarly, pension payments (considered a drawdown of savings, not current income) aren't included as income. Adjusting for these details, Barnes says that anxiety about low savings is "greatly overdone."

Perhaps. But other studies dispute this. In 1998, about 74 percent of mutual funds and 83 percent of corporate stocks were owned by the richest fifth of Americans. In the 1990s, these consumers reduced their savings dramatically, says a Federal Reserve study. That's exactly what you'd expect if the wealth effect is genuine.

In this column, I aim to provide a different perspective. If I'm saying what everyone else is saying, it's a waste of time. On the other hand, being different for the sake of being different is morally and intellectually bankrupt. I try to stick to my best interpretation of the facts. When they change, my thinking and writing change. In the 1980s and early 1990s, I argued that the U.S. economy was being underestimated. Its strengths (flexibility, creativity) were overlooked, while its weaknesses (inflation, lax management) were correctable.

But then we veered from foolish pessimism to foolish optimism. That, at any rate, is my present view. When the facts convince me otherwise, I will say so. Meanwhile, I recall something an economist told me years ago. "I have spent my life waiting," he said, "for things that were inevitable." There's a profound thought - and, as for the next recession, I'm still waiting.

Thank you SIRCOMM employees

Once again, SIRCOMM will be in the headlines through no fault of dispatch but because no one likes to face their budget. Before this happens, I would like to state a few facts.

During the month of April 2001, SIRCOMM received 3,673 emergency 911 calls and 22,554 non-emergency calls, which created 10,733 calls for service. These numbers will increase as summer approaches. Twin Falls City Information Center did not "significantly" reduce the call load at SIRCOMM. They did take some of the calls that a 911 center should not be dealing with such as public works during business hours, walk-in accident reports and civil problems among others. This is greatly appreciated by all of us at SIRCOMM, but it was only about 4 percent of the calls for service for the Twin Falls police department.

During budget time, you are going to hear about every problem everyone has had, whether it happens to be several times a year or has happened several times. We prefer to have no problems, but we are dealing with real people calling in, real people dispatching and real people responding to the calls. There are going to be problems! What has to be remembered is the people working as dispatchers are doing a tremendous job. They handle life and death situations on a daily basis and, at times, more often than daily.

So before all of the negative publicity hits the news, I would like to thank all of the employees at SIRCOMM for the dedication and caring they exhibit in dealing with the emergency situations that they handle as a routine part of their job. Thank you for being here.

MVRMC is not that bad

I am very upset with all I've been reading in the Times-News regarding the management of the Magic Valley Regional Medical Center. I have donated more than 16,000 hours to the hospital as a member of the auxiliary.

Why are our county commissioners and others, especially some who are in the area of competing services, wanting to sell or lease for profit? Don't they realize that any out-of-the-area company that would bid might give a one-time payment but most of the money would go out of the area?

We have very good management now but only need to change to 501(c)(3) to make it easier to compete with other health-care groups.

We have had committees before to give advice; now there are two more besides the hospital board appointed by the commissioners.

As a taxpayer and voting resident, I'll keep this in mind.

Bucks fire back, series tied

Allen hits nine 3-pointers in heroic effort

The Associated Press

MILWAUKEE - As promised, Ray Allen didn't let anybody else determine the outcome of Game 6.

Allen tied an NBA playoff record by making nine 3-pointers and had his own personal 17-0 run bridging the first and second quarters as the Milwaukee Bucks withstood a stunning fourth-quarter comeback attempt led by Allen Iverson and defeated the Philadelphia 76ers 110-100 Friday night to tie the Eastern Conference finals at three games apiece.

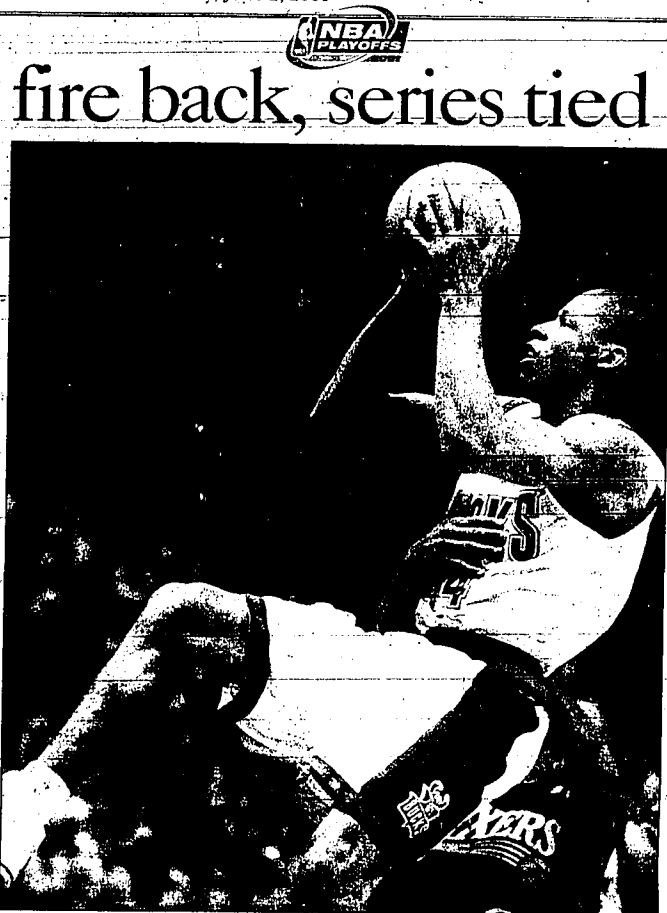

Game 7 will be Sunday in Philadelphia, with the winner moving on to play the Los Angeles Lakers in the NBA Finals.

Allen finished with a career playoff-high 41 points for the Bucks, who let a 33-point lead dip to 10 in the fourth quarter as Iverson was unstoppable. Iverson scored 26 points in the fourth quarter, three shy of the NBA record set by Sleepy Floyd of Golden State in 1987, and finished with 15.

Allen's final two 3-pointers were the biggest of the game, coming after Philadelphia had pulled within 10 with 5:14 remaining.

Allen's performance came one day after he alleged that the NBA would rather see a 76ers-Lakers final than a Bucks-Lakers final. He spent a long time before Game 6.

MVP Iverson finally lights up nets

The Associated Press

MILWAUKEE - Before Allen Iverson snapped out of his shooting funk with a fantastic fourth quarter Friday night, the NBA's MVP simply snapped.

Despite Iverson scoring 26 of his 46 points in the final quarter, the Philadelphia 76ers blew a chance to end the Eastern Conference finals in six games. And Iverson had something to do with that.

After scoring 11 of Philadelphia's first 13 points, Iverson lost his cool with 3:38 left in the first quarter when he was whistled for a technical after arguing furiously for a foul.

Ray Allen's penalty shot sparked the Bucks on a 24-2 run. By the time the first half ended with Philadelphia trailing 60-31, Iverson had unraveled, missing nine of his last 10 shots and turning the ball over four times. Plus, he got whacked across the mouth inadvertently by Lindsey Hunter.

In the Sixers' previous trip to Milwaukee, Iverson had come up big in the waning minutes after an accidental elbow from Allen had dislodged a tooth and forced him to swallow his own blood.

He came up big again, just not big enough.

Iverson scored two points in the second quarter and seven in the third before going off in the fourth quarter for 26 points.

He took a seat before he could challenge the NBA playoff record for most points in a quarter - 29 - set by Golden State's Sleepy Floyd against the Los Angeles Lakers on May 10, 1987.

For the series, Iverson has made 47-of-153 shots, 30.7 percent.

Webb beats the rain, leads at U.S. Women's Open

The Associated Press

SOUTHERN PINES, N.C. - Storms took over the U.S. Women's Open on Friday. First came a clap of thunder from Carrie Webb, then a deluge of rain that turned the second round into a marathon for those chasing her.

At the end of a wet and tiresome day, Webb was in an ideal spot - the early leader after a 5-under 65, out of the elements and with plenty of time to rest.

That's not the case for Annika Sorenstam and 104 other players who must return to soggy Pine Needles at dawn today and face as many as 36 holes, or however many holes time allows.

"She's loving it," A.J. Eathorne of Canada said. "She got her round in and can just kind of sit back and wait for everyone else to finish out tomorrow. I don't think there's anyone out here in this field that wouldn't trade places with her right now."

No one would mind having Webb's round, either.

With a 75-foot chip that dropped for birdie and a wedge that stopped 10 inches from the cup for another, Webb reminded the field why she is the defending champion, the winner of three of the past six majors and still an intimidating presence.

Webb was at 5-under 135, a two-stroke advantage over Eathorne and Cindy Figg-Currier.

Roddick battles, strains to end

Teen sensation was a former Idaho Snakers team member

By Lisa Dillman
 Los Angeles Times

PARIS - Andy Roddick and Lleyton Hewitt looked like refugees from the skateboard park - wearing the appropriate gear, with caps turned backward, of course - who happened to wander over to the French Open.

After more than two hours, they were even in their third-round match Friday. One explosive shot was immediately matched. Roddick skirted dangerously close to the edge in the first set, fighting off seven set points.

But the wild ride ended in the third set. While chasing down a forehand, Roddick fell and tweaked his hamstring. Even though it was clear he was probably done, Roddick was like the kid who wanted to try one more leap through the air on the board, even if it was risky.

"I'm not going to stop without trying," said Roddick, who played four more points after the leg was treated and wrapped. "I wanted to hit one last winner at Roland Garros this year. Stepped into one forehand, got greedy, wanted another one. I fenced it and decided, OK."

And so Hewitt advanced, 6-7 (6), 6-4, 2-2 (retired). The sixth-seeded Hewitt of Australia moved into the fourth round and will play Guillermo Canas of Argentina. Canas surprised 11th-seeded Tim Henman in five sets Milwaukee routs 76ers, sort of . . .

MILWAUKEE - Oliver Stone was not seen lurking outside Madison. None of the 60-year-old men inside at ear-splitting Bradley Center remotely resembled Lee Harvey Oswald. And on this particular evening, Area 51 was all about how many points Ray Allen could possibly score.

See? Conspiracy theories go to die when the Milwaukee Bucks are on their outrageous game, and even a squadron of cross-firing black helicopters stop a grumpy knoll inside an alien autopsy room could not have stopped the Bucks on Friday night.

The Philadelphia 76ers? They had no chance from the moment that Allen, who scored a career-playoff high 41 points, began his personal assault on the Bucks' tormentors, and now the Eastern Conference finals are going back to Philly for a deciding seventh game.

Overwhelming and destructive in a Los Angeles Lakers kind of way, the Bucks kicked the Sixers and Allen Iverson's sore tailbone all the way back to the Main Line with a 110-100 Game 6 victory, tying the series at three games apiece.

Frustrated and confused after losing a 2-1 lead in the series, the Bucks now stand one victory away from their first NBA Finals appearance in 27 years.

Running and gunning and converting what had been a sloggerly paced series into their preferred track-meet kind of tempo, the Bucks made it their game - their signature shoot-em-up game - rendering the Sixers' pummeling, physical style irrelevant from the start.

The Bucks' complaints about officiating and Philadelphia's fouls? It was never a factor because the Bucks finally broke free of the Sixers' shackles. Even when Sam Cassell again fouled Iverson beyond the three-point arc like he did during the emotional meltdown that was Game 5, Cassell didn't draw a technical foul and coach George Karl dismissed with a wave of the hand what was obviously a poor call. After all, the Bucks were leading by 30 points at the time.

Sonics hire former Pistons exec as GM

SEATTLE — Rick Sund, a former executive with the Detroit Pistons and the Dallas Mavericks, was hired Friday as general manager of the Seattle SuperSonics. The opening was created when Wally Walker became the team's CEO after it came under new management earlier this year. Walker had been executive vice president in a telephone interview from Detroit. "Seattle is a great city, a vibrant city. I really like the new ownership, Howard Schultz is energetic and enthusiastic, and I've known Wally Walker." Sund, a 28-year NBA veteran, most recently spent six years with the Pistons, where he was executive vice president of basketball operations. "It's not Sund's first stint in Seattle. He was a consultant to the Sonics and Walker during the 1994-95 season, managing the Sonics' college scouting program and helping Walker Sund with personnel decisions. One of the decisions facing Sund is the future of seven-time all-star Gary Payton, the franchise's all-time leading scorer. "Gary is a great player," he said. But he added that it's premature to talk about including him in a possible trade.

Man who helped bring World Cup to U.S. dies
HORSHAM, Pa. — Werner Fricker, who as president of the U.S. Soccer Federation led the successful bid that brought the World Cup to the United States in 1994, had died. Fricker, a member of the 1964 U.S. Olympic soccer team, died Wednesday night after a yearlong battle with cancer. He was elected president of the USSF in 1984 and helped develop the World Cup bid, which won a vote by FIFA's executive committee on July 4, 1988. The Americans received 10 votes to seven for Morocco and two for Brazil. A one-year later, the United States qualified for its first World Cup appearance since 1950.

Judge to rule on Cuban pitcher's request
TAMPA, Fla. — The judge considering a request to block major league baseball from drafting a Cuban pitcher said he cannot base his decision on how much money Rolando Viera might lose if he is not declared a free agent.

U.S. District Judge James Whitmore stressed Friday that he must focus on a claim by lawyers for Viera that the left-hander would suffer irreparably if he is selected by a team next week. "A loss of income," the judge said, is not conclusive evidence of irreparable harm. Whitmore listened to two hours of arguments from lawyers and he will issue a ruling on Viera's request for a restraining order on Monday. The draft, which begins Tuesday, covers U.S. residents who have completed high school or their junior year in college. To avoid being subject to the draft, most Cuban players have headed to Central America or another Caribbean country when they leave their homeland.

Angels release designated hitter Hill

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Glennell Hill, a disappointment as the Anaheim Angels' designated hitter, was waived Friday after batting just .136 with one home run and two RBIs in 16 games. The 36-year-old Hill, acquired from the New York Yankees on March 28, was on the disabled list from April 21 to May 29 because of a strained right knee in his right cage. He went just 9-for-66, struck out 20 times and did not draw a walk during his time with Anaheim.

Burley Legion splits with Pocatello

BURLEY — The Burley American Legion team opened its season with a split of Pocatello 6-5 and 5-4 on Friday in Burley. Kuan Redder took the Game 1 and conference win, while Matt Michael lost the nightcap, which was shortened to two innings because of darkness.

Pat Riley undecided about future

MIAMI — While unveiling part of a plan to reshape the roster, Pat Riley said Friday he has a contract option to leave the Heat's coaching job at the next season and does not know what he will do. The clause allows him to serve only as president (a title he already holds) or become a team consultant. "It's whether I coach or move upstairs," said Riley, who has been with the franchise six years and has four years left on his contract. "Right now, I want to coach. I will probably go year to year."

Kareem looks for new history

EL SEUNDO, Calif. (AP) — Kareem Abdul-Jabbar remembers the first time the Los Angeles Lakers opened the playoffs in 11 straight wins — they were swept in the NBA Finals by the Detroit Pistons.

Twelve years later, the current Lakers have become the second team to accomplish such a feat.

Abdul-Jabbar looks for a different end to this time. "They turned it up at the right time," the NBA's all-time leading scorer said this week. "Now, they're set to make their mark in the record books. I think they have a good shot at it."

Should the Lakers sweep the Finals, which they did Wednesday night at Staples Center, they'll become the first team to go through the postseason with a perfect record.

"We swept through the playoffs, only trouble is, we got swept in the Finals," Abdul-Jabbar recalled. "I'm sure we didn't have a chance to be at our best and compete with the Pistons."

The day before the Finals began, starter Byron Scott injured his left hamstring in a rebounding drill. That took his 20 points per game out of the lineup.

Then, in the third quarter of Game 2, Magic Johnson, considered one of the greatest players in NBA history, suffered the same injury.

No Magic, no Scott, no rings. Abdul-Jabbar admitted he wondered if Pat Riley's coaching strategy might have had an effect. After sweeping Portland, Seattle and Phoenix, the Lakers had time on their hands, just like this year's team.

The two-time defending champions traveled some 100 miles north to Santa Barbara to practice, something they had done before.

Longtime Lakers announcer Chick Hearn referred to the trip this week as "a little boot camp."

Whether it was boot camp or not, he gets the blame, Hearn said of Riley. "If they win the championship, he gets the credit."

"I think the fact that they were in the Finals so many times speaks for itself," he continued. "You don't take one part of a coaching philosophy and say it's the right thing." You take the whole package.

The Lakers had beaten the Boston Celtics 4-2 in the 1987 Finals and Detroit 4-3 the following year to become the first NBA team to repeat as champions since 1969.

closed the quarter with a pair of 3s. Allen started the second quarter with another 3-pointer, then went out and made the biggest statement of the series.

Hitting four consecutive 3-point shots, Allen scored 19 straight points in the second half. The final 5.5 minutes of the first quarter and the first 1.5 minutes of the second. When he was finished, the Bucks had turned a 16-15 lead into a 33-15 edge.

Allen had 25 points at halftime, 31 before the second half. He had 11 rebounds and three 3-pointers tied the NBA record set by Rex Chapman of Phoenix in 1997 and matched by Vince Carter of Toronto against the 76ers on May 11.

In the highest scoring game of the series, the Bucks improved to 3-0 this postseason when facing elimination.

"We just had to keep our composure. We've been known to blow leads," Allen said.

After being forced to play Phoenix in a best-of-five style during the previous three games, the Bucks turned this one into an uptempo game as soon as they could.

Iverson made his first two shots — both 3-pointers — but was hit with a technical foul by referee Joey Crawford midway through the first quarter. That turned out to be the moment when the momentum shifted squarely in Milwaukee's favor.

Iverson gets hot

Iverson, who shook off a slow start, did not conspire to make it interesting in the fourth quarter. In a matter of seconds he exploded with 14 points — including a four-point play and a three-pointer of 11 pointers — to get the Sixers within 11 points. Iverson wound up scoring 46 points, including 26 in the fourth quarter.

But the Bucks, with two more three-pointers from Allen, were able to keep the Sixers and their dangerous little guard at arm's length.

Simply devastating in the first half, the Bucks returned to the rollicking, free-wheeling ways of their finest regular-season days. Leading by as many as 30 points, they overwhelmed the Sixers early, with Williams and destroyed them late with Allen, whose 19 consecutive points were created in a breath-taking span of 6 minutes, 42 seconds.

The Bucks were leading by just three points when Allen began his rampage with 5:15 left in the first quarter. An innocent-looking jumper started it all, and for a moment it even appeared as if Philadelphia would actually make it a game. A modest four-point play by the Sixers made it one-point game, which only served to make Allen mad.

Warmed up by shooting a technical foul against Iverson, who again was brutal from the field, he first shot an 89-75 lead and in his ninth with 4:54 left to make it 92-79. Iverson reached 24 points for the quarter by converting a three-point play with 4:37 left, but Milwaukee scored the next four points to end the threat.

Allen hit his eighth 3-pointer with 6:27 left for an 89-75 lead and his ninth with 4:54 left to make it 92-79. Iverson reached 24 points for the quarter by converting a three-point play with 4:37 left, but Milwaukee scored the next four points to end the threat.

He later fed Robinson for a 3-pointer after Sam Cassell grabbed an offensive rebound, making it 75-46.

Iverson went to the bench with 2:37 left in the third quarter and the 76ers trailing by 28, Philadelphia had a four-point play, a three-point play, a 3-pointer and two foul shots early in the fourth quarter as the Sixers pulled to 84-73 with eight minutes left.

Allen hit his eighth 3-pointer with 6:27 left for an 89-75 lead and his ninth with 4:54 left to make it 92-79. Iverson reached 24 points for the quarter by converting a three-point play with 4:37 left, but Milwaukee scored the next four points to end the threat.

Allen does it all

A drive ... a 3-pointer ... another 3-pointer. Allen closed the first half with 11 consecutive points for the Bucks who finished the period with a 10-point lead.

The best for Allen, and his teammates, was yet to come. So reflected the second quarter, which began like this: Allen for three; Allen with two free throws; Allen for three. The torrid spree completed his 19-

Robinson had 22 for the Bucks, and Scott Williams played his best game of the series in scoring 12 points — including 10 of Milwaukee's first 14.

Williams also delivered a hard foul on Iverson just over two minutes into the game, elbowing Iverson hard in the shoulder as he drove the lane. Williams was called for a flagrant foul and Iverson rubbed his shoulder before going to the foul line and missing his first attempt — much to the chagrin of the sellout crowd of 18,717.

Iverson hit 3-pointers on his next two touches, but the technical foul seemed to take him out of his rhythm just as Allen was starting to get a groove.

"If we play like we're capable of playing and not let the referees have a hand in the outcome of the game, then we'll have nothing to worry about," Allen had said Thursday.

Turns out Allen was right, although Iverson said he had to make the Bucks sweat in the fourth quarter.

Pulvicks: Sixers forward Matt Geiger was in uniform for the first time since Game 1. He played three minutes of garbage time. ... Bucks coach George Karl improved his career record to 22-11 in elimination games.

Williams had scored a total of 101 points in the first five games of the series. ... Allen's previous career playoff high was 38 points in Game 2 of this series.

Was Allen done? Oh, no. His 3-pointer with 35 seconds left gave him 23 points for the half of 8 from beyond the three-point arc.

In his own kind of way, Williams was nearly as effective in the second quarter. Virtually invisible during the series, Williams scored 10 of the Bucks' first 14 points, blowing away Tyrone Hill with his perimeter jumpers.

Busch title centerers get clear view for start

Knight Ridder News Service

DOVER, Del. — Jeff Green and Kevin Harvick will again start on the front row for a NASCAR Grand National series race.

They will flip positions from last week, however, as qualifying was rained out for the second consecutive weekend.

Green, who moved ahead of Harvick in the points standings at Charlotte, will start from the pole for today's MBNA Platinum 200 at Dover — Downs International Speedway (11 a.m., FX).

Rookie Greg Biffle will start third, Jason Keller fourth and Mike McLaughlin fifth.

"Dover, to me, doesn't have the best pit road that we go to, so that's our first priority, to get the No. 1 pick. That should play out for us during the race," Green said. "We should, hopefully, lead a lap really early and that will give us five more points."

"Our car is really, really good in practice and we thought we had a shot at the pole anyway. That's what we work hard for every week."

Harvick also practiced well and a year ago, he won his first series pole at this race.

"Starting on the pole is better than starting 30th, that's for sure," Harvick said. "For me reason I run really good on the concrete tracks and I can really well here last season."

"Starting on the front row is going to be a real benefit. For a little while it will be hard to pass until the groove widens

Biffle is at one of the few tracks on which he has experienced. He ran NASCAR's Truck series race here a year ago, finishing second.

"That race in September here really did a lot for me because this is a difficult race track," he said. "That experience was really helpful to come back here in a (Grand National) car and run decent."

Phillies 13, Expos 2

MONTREAL — Johnny Estrada, Bobby Abreu and Scott Rolan each drove in three runs to lead Philadelphia to its fifth straight win.

The Expos lost their second straight under new manager Jeff Torborg. At 21-34, Montreal is last in the NL East, 15 games behind the division-leading Phillies.

Mets 11, Marlins 5

MIAMI — Tsuyoshi Shinjo, Robin Ventura and Rey Ordonez drove in two runs apiece as New York snapped a four-game losing streak.

Florida lost for the first time in four games and fell to 3-2 under manager Tony Perez.

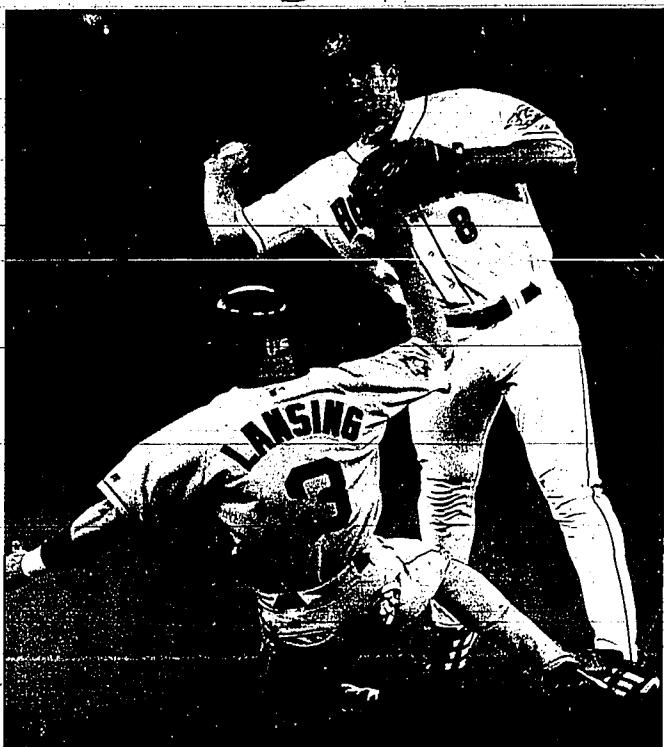

Braves 5, Pirates 1

PITTSBURGH — Chipper Jones homered and tripled before leaving because of a thumb injury, leading John Burkett and Atlanta over Pittsburgh.

Jones exited in the eighth inning after being hit in the left thumb by Jason Kendall's line-drive single. The All-Star third baseman lunged to his left, and the ball popped out of his glove. X-rays were negative.

Reds 5, Cardinals 1

ST. LOUIS — Michael Tucker

Toronto shortstop Alex Gonzalez hits the double play on Boston's Mike Lansing during the second inning in Toronto on Friday. Red Sox's Jason Vantek hit into the play, but Boston came back and won 6-4 in 11 innings.

New York's Paul O'Neill steals third base in the second inning as Cleveland's third baseman Russell Branyon attempts a catch Friday in New York.

Tribe tops Yankees in rain-shortened game

NEW YORK (AP) — Marty Cordova hit a go-ahead single in the fifth, and Roberto Alomar and Ellis Burks homered Friday night as the Cleveland Indians rallied from a three-run deficit to beat the New York Yankees 7-4 in a game stopped by rain after 5.5 innings.

Orlando Hernandez, the Yankees' scheduled starter, wound up on the disabled list because of an irritation on his left foot. He was replaced by Ted Lilly (2-1), who wasted a 4-1 lead in the fifth.

Chuck Finley, who was to pitch for the Indians, was back in Cleveland because of a stiff neck in the fifth inning at the DL, too. C.C. Sabathia (6-2) started in his place and Ricardo Rincon got the save.

In an official scoring oddity, Sabathia got the win despite pitching only four innings as the starter — the ruling is allowed in a game shortened by rain.

Red Sox 6, Blue Jays 4, 11 Innings
TORONTO — Jason Varitek hit a go-ahead RBI single in the 11th inning as Boston won its third straight game. Mike Lansing led off the 11th with a double off Billy Koch (0-2) before Varitek hit the first pitch for a single to center field. The Red Sox added another run on Dane Bichette's RBI single.

American League

Derek Lowe (3-5) pitched two innings for the win — Toronto led the bases off Lowe in the 10th, inning, but Darrin Fletcher hit into an inning-ending double play.

White Sox 3, Tigers 0

CHICAGO — Mark Buehrle shut down Detroit for a second straight start, and Jeff Lierfer hit a solo home run to give Chicago the win.

Paul Konerko and Magglio Ordonez added RBI singles off Dave Mlicki (3-6) for the White Sox, who have won seven of eight games. Chicago has won six straight against the Tigers.

Buehrle (3-3) allowed four hits in 7 2/3 innings to beat Detroit for the third time this season.

El Duque on the DL

NEW YORK (AP) — Yankees pitcher Orlando Hernandez missed his scheduled start against Cleveland on Friday night because of an irritated toe that was placed on the disabled list.

"There's a number of different ways to treat it," Yankees general manager Brian Cashman said. "There's also a worst-case scenario, which is surgery."

Hernandez had expected to be able to pitch but arrived at Yankee Stadium about 2.5 hours before the game and told New York manager Joe Torre he couldn't start.

New York disabled El Duque retroactive to last Saturday, the day after his last appearance, and planned to bring up a pitcher from the minor leagues during the weekend.

Randy Keisler, who criticized Torre when he was sent to Triple-A Columbus on April 18, seems the most likely candidate. Keisler, 24, with a 4.18 ERA for the Clippers, had trouble finding the strike zone with the Yankees but claimed Torre didn't give him a chance. Hernandez, 0-5 with a 5.14 ERA in nine starts, was scheduled to be examined Monday by Dr. William Hamilton, a foot specialist. The irritation is in the second toe of El Duque's left foot, the one he lands on after releasing a pitch.

Hernandez, whose pitching elbow and forearm sidelined him during a large part of spring training, has been bothered by the toe for much of the season.

El Duque declined comment. "It was very tough for him to say, 'I can't pitch,'" Torre said. "He wants to pitch. I know that. I don't want him to go out and pitch and think he has to prove to somebody that he wants to pitch."

Despite losing Hernandez, Torre sounded as if he still was leaning on pushing Mike Mussina back a day in the rotation to Tuesday, which would avoid another Mussina-Pedro Martinez matchup when the Yankees play the Boston Red Sox on Monday night. Torre said he would like to have

Finley misses start, probably headed to DL

NEW YORK (AP) — Just when it appeared the Cleveland Indians were about to get close to full strength for the first time this season, Chuck Finley seems headed for the disabled list.

Finley, scratched from his scheduled start against the New York Yankees on Friday night because of a stiff neck, probably will miss his next two turns in the rotation.

"This has been bothering him," Indians manager Charlie Manuel said. "We need to find out exactly what's wrong with Finley. I don't want him to keep pitching and go down for a long time. We're going to get another pitcher, Charles Nagy and outfielder Kenny Lofton from the disabled list Friday and planned to activate third baseman Travis Fryman today. The Indians opened rotation space by optioning pitcher Jake Westbrook to Buffalo and sending infielder Mark Lewis outright to the Triple-A team.

After beating the Yankees 7-4, the Indians also completed a trade. They sent outfielder Jacob Cruz to the Colorado Rockies for a pair of minor leaguers — catcher Josh Bard and outfielder Jody Jensen.

After scratching Finley from Friday's start, the Indians had hoped he would be able to pitch Sunday, a day after Bartolo Colon (4-5) faces the Yankees (5-1).

But Manuel sounded resigned to scrambling for a Sunday starter, saying the candidates included Dave Burba (7-2), Nagy and four players on Buffalo's roster: Westbrook, Steve Woodard, Roy Smith and Willie Blair.

Comhuskers blank Rice; rain postpones other starts

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — Shane Komine struck out 12 and Nebraska moved within one win of its first College World Series appearance by shutting out Rice 7-0 Friday in the opening game of an NCAA super regional.

Komine struck out seven of the first nine batters he faced after a 51-minute rain delay. He allowed just three hits in his first complete-game shutout of the season.

John Cole drove in three runs for Nebraska (49-14), which can wrap up the best-of-three series and win him to keep pitching and go down for a long time. We're going to get another pitcher, Charles Nagy and outfielder Kenny Lofton from the disabled list Friday and planned to activate third baseman Travis Fryman today. NCAA super regionals

Saturday with another win. J. J. Porfiri, Matt Cunningham and Philip Gutzman had hits for Rice (47-19).

Rain and lightning forced the postponement of the super regional game between Tennessee and East Carolina. The series will resume with today's scheduled game beginning at 5 p.m. The second game will be Sunday at noon. If necessary, a third game will be played Monday.

At Athens, Ga. Rain forced the postponement of the super regional game between Florida State and Georgia.

Fla. State resumes today at noon. The second game will be Sunday at noon. If necessary, a third game will be played Monday.

Speed rules at NCAA meet

EUGENE, Ore. (AP) - Track speed took over over football speed in the men's 400-meter relay at the NCAA Outdoor Track and Field Championships Friday night.

A lean Kim Collins, running anchor for TCU, overcame Tennessee's burlier football player, Leonard Scott, as the Horned Frogs got the best of their biggest rivals for the team title.

TCU was timed at 38.58 seconds, the fastest by a college team this year, and faster than the Hayward Field record of 38.66, set by the Volunteers in the preliminaries.

Lindel Frater got TCU off to a quick start, but sensational freshman Justin Gatlin put Tennessee back in contention on the second leg. Tennessee was slightly ahead when Scott took the baton for the final 100 meters. But Collins put on a quick burst of speed and beat Scott by about three meters.

The Volunteers finished second at 38.80.

"The pressure was there," Collins said. "The main thing for me was to stay calm and just run my race the way I know how."

Darvis Patton said TCU won despite sloppy stickwork.

"That was our worst handoff all year," he said. "I knew we've got '99 on anchor, and I got nothing to worry about."

The '99 referred to Collins' 9.99 wind-aided time in the 100 this year.

Scott blamed himself for the team's loss.

"I got the stick and I don't think I drove long enough the way I should have," he said. "I rushed a little. You got a guy like Kim Collins getting in front of you like that, it's always hard to catch him."

The Louisiana State University women's 400 relay also was won on the anchor leg, as LSU freshman Muna Leo whipped past Southern California's Kinshasa Davis to give the Tigers the victory at 43.54.

It was LSU's ninth title in the event in the past 13 years and reversed last year's finish when the Trojans beat the Tigers by 0.2 seconds.

Louisiana State's Muna Leo (187) slows after her team won the women's 400-meter relay with a time of 43.54 seconds at the NCAA Outdoor Track and Field Championships in Eugene, Ore., Friday.

NCAA Outdoor Track and Field Championships

This time, Southern California placed second at 43.64.

Harvard's Brenda Taylor ran the fastest time by a collegian in this year in winning the women's 400 hurdles by about five meters at 55.88.

Bayano Kimani led a 1-2 Baylor finish in the men's 400 hurdles, running 48.99, the fastest by an American in 2000, in regaining the title he won in 1999. Michael Smith was second at 49.34.

Foreigners swept the men's and women's 800s.

South Carolina's Orukle Lekote from Botswana led all the way, winning the men's race by three meters at 1:46.68, as Olympian Michael Sember never got into serious contention and finished fourth at 1:47.49.

Slovakian Olympian Brigita Langerholc of Southern California took command with 200 meters remaining and won the women's race by five meters at 2:01.61, the fastest collegiate time of the season.

Prep miler brings splash of attention

The Associated Press

It took Alan Webb only 3 minutes, 53.43 seconds to become a track and field phenomenon.

That was the time Webb clocked in the mile Sunday at the Prefontaine Classic in Eugene, Ore., turning a mysterious track and field meet into his own coming-out party.

"I knew it would get me a little more attention, but I didn't think it would be quite as bad as it's been," the 18-year-old Webb said.

Webb shattered Tim Ryan's 36-year-old national record for a mile by a high school runner by nearly two seconds, and stole the headlines despite finishing fifth in a race that Morocco's Hicham El Guerrouj won in 3:49.92, the fastest mile ever on U.S. soil.

"It's been kind of a whirlwind," Webb said Thursday, the day before setting his sights on the state 800-meter record in the Virginia High School League's state track and field championships, which were delayed until today due to a thunderstorm.

On Monday, a photo of Webb appeared on the front page of The New York Times. The next day, after a detour to New York City on his way home to Reston, Va., there were limousine rides and appearances on all three network morning TV shows.

The aftermath has included live spots on CNN, a guest spot on a national radio show and features in Sports Illustrated, People, TV Guide, running magazines and virtually all of the media around the Washington area.

The 5-foot-9, 140-pound Webb has barely had time to enjoy his remarkable performance in which he surged past elite runners on a blistering final lap in front of a wildly cheering crowd of 11,221.

"It was the biggest honor of my career to get a chance to run with El Guerrouj," he said. "I loved just being in that stadium and enjoying the fans and the atmosphere."

Alan Webb runs the mile at the Prefontaine Classic in Eugene, Ore., Sunday.

Schools dump dodge ball for a new PE

TUKWILA, Wash. (AP) - Eleven-year-old Ladell Carroll sprints down the blue tumbling mat. He does one on a springboard, then flips his bulky body over six of his classmates.

The crowd cheers madly as funky music blares in the background.

And Carroll learned this in P.E.

Traditional physical education is becoming a thing of the past in Seattle schools. Gone are the days of standing in lines and picking teams for the sport of the day.

"Flipping is fun," says Carroll, a fifth grader from Seattle's Sanislo Elementary School, who wears a lucky black glove on his right hand.

He says it has helped him develop confidence. That's the goal.

"The emphasis is not on showers or standing straight in lines," says Bud Turner, the physical education coordinator for Seattle schools. "We have taken it upon ourselves to make physical education a priority in the district."

Carroll and about 130 other students from Sanislo, Dearborn

Park and Orca elementary make up SCATS, a district acrobatic team from ages 5-18 that performs about once a month to show what the new P.E. can do.

Seattle students do back-hand-springs and juggle tennis rackets and rubber chickens. They stand on their hands in the middle of double-Dutch jump-ropes, and bounce while riding unicycles.

P.E. had to change, Turner says, because students' scores in team sports were low. Now, schools are giving students choices so they can pick an activity they like and remain active. Teachers hope it will become a lifelong pattern.

At some schools, students can choose from activities like yoga, hip-hop dance, swimming, kick-boxing, fencing and archery. There's also circus arts, roller skating and bicycle safety. Some kids wear heart-rate monitors and count how many steps they take each day.

Teachers can rent equipment for two-week periods from the district's physical education resource center. There are 25 new rock walls at elementary, middle and high schools.

Downtown Salt Lake City project nears completion

SALT LAKE CITY - About 75 percent of Gateway's retail space is leased as the racket of hammering and heavy machinery on downtown Salt Lake City's west-side proceeds toward the project's Nov. 1 grand opening.

But plans for a hotel have been put on hold, the result of the city's glut of rooms, project manager Jack Boyer said.

"We've evaluated the 125 hotel/375 market," Boyer said Thursday, "and felt like it wouldn't be the wisest move right now."

Otherwise, work continues on track on the $375 million project.

With 2 million square feet of retail, residential, entertainment and office space, Gateway is the largest commercial development in Utah history. Five months before its opening, about 487,000 square feet of retail space are leased.

By November, the retail space will be 90 percent to 95 percent leased, Boyer said.

Lawsuit over Rite Aid pricing policy renews

TRENTON, N.J. - A New Jersey woman's lawsuit charging that Rite Aid deceived customers by raising prices for uninsured and emergency customers was revived by an appeals court Wednesday, nearly a year after being dismissed by a judge in Mercer County.

Without commenting on the merits of the case, the court said it was up to a jury to decide whether the drugstore chain violated New Jersey's Consumer Fraud Act when it advertised the "lowest and best prices" while charging different customers different prices for the same drugs.

The case was brought in Superior Court in Trenton last year by Maritza Leon of Perth Amboy, said Bruce Greenberg, her attorney. He plans to seek classification status for the case.

Rite Aid's "policy is not to comment on pending litigation," said Abby Cook, a spokeswoman for the chain, based in Camp Hill, Pa.

Las Vegas-based airline seeks deal with financier

HARRAH'S Entertainment Inc. was asked Thursday to "remove the hammer" hanging over the head of bankrupt National Airlines to allow the company to complete a deal with billionaire financier Carl Icahn.

"In a hearing in U.S. Bankruptcy Court, lawyers for Las Vegas-based National Airlines and many of its creditors argued for an extension of Harrah's $16 million letter of credit with U.S. Bank that would allow National to sustain operations until an agreement with Icahn is reached.

The letter of credit allows National to receive payment on credit card purchases of airline tickets before the trip is taken.

Manufacturing activity falls for 10th month in row

NEW YORK - Manufacturing, added for a 10th straight month in May, suggesting it is still the weakest part of the economy, an industry report showed Friday.

The National Association of Purchasing Management said its purchasing index fell last month to 42.1 from 43.2 in April. An index above 50 signifies growth in manufacturing, while a figure below 50 shows contraction. Analysts had been expecting 43.5 for May.

"Manufacturing is in a full-blown, outright, unmitigated recession," said Mark Zandi, chief economist at Economy.com. "It's an open wound that hasn't been bandaged yet and threatens to infect the rest of the economic body."

The report is closely watched because it is one of the first indications of how the manufacturing sector performed. The figures are based on a survey of purchasing executives who buy the raw materials for manufacturing at more than 350 industrial companies.

"May appears to be a continuation of the soft start for the second quarter we saw in April," said Norbert Ore, who oversees the monthly report.

The report reflected purchasing managers' concerns about the economy, the impact of soaring energy prices and a cluster quarter in the automobile sector, he said.

Analyst: MV jobless picture looks good

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS - South-central Idaho has been fortunate in avoiding the widespread high-tech, timber and agricultural services layoffs that have hit around the rest of the state, labor market analyst Greg Rogers said.

Rogers, the Idaho Department of Labor's Magic Valley analyst, was discussing Friday's release of county-by-county unemployment rates for May.

Twin Falls County, Magic Valley's most populous, is "maintaining status quo, which is good," he said. "We're still showing strong employment in all major sectors."

'(Twin Falls County) is maintaining status quo, which is good. We're still showing strong employment in all major sectors.'

Several areas of the valley with increases in jobless rates from April to May are seeing the expected transition between the activities of winter and summer tourism. But strong construction kept Blaine County unemployment numbers low, Rogers said.

Idaho-Cassia unemployment rates were down nicely, both from a year ago and from April because of good hiring in retail, agricultural services and trucking, Rogers said.

Gooding County showed a significant decrease in joblessness last month because of strong dairy and cheese-factory hiring, and some improvement in the retail sector, he added.

Idaho jobless rate declines

The Associated Press

BOISE - More people were on the job in Idaho during May than ever before, marking the fifth straight month of record employment.

There was only a fractional increase in the number of people looking for work last month and the economy managed to generate nearly 10 times as many jobs, driving the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate down two notches to 4.8 percent.

But at the same time, claims for unemployment insurance continued to run at a record level. The gap between 2000 and this year was widening, creating further concerns about future economic growth.

While the employment figures were stronger in May, the 3,200-person increase in the unemployed in April was the largest one-month jump in over a decade. And although claims for jobless benefits declined slightly from April to May, it was a seasonal phenomenon. Payments last week ran 55 percent higher than for the same week in 2000.

At the beginning of April, the companies build Web sites that 43 percent higher than the previous year.

Seventeen counties still had jobless rates of 6 percent or higher.

In addition, May's jobless rate matched the rate for May 2000, marking the second month in a row current unemployment rates have not run below the year-earlier level. The same thing happened the final three months of 2000, breaking a three-month streak of the unemployment rate coming in under the rate a year earlier.

Analysts said they still have no clear indication of the impact skyrocketing power bills and the drought will have on employment over the rest of the year.

Labor Department analysts pointed to strong job growth over the past year despite the 2,500 layoffs announced since January. Over 23,000 more people were at work last month than 12 months before. But nearly 18,000 of those jobs were in the five urban counties - Ada, Canyon, Kootenai, Bonneville and Blaine - underscoring the anemic economic activity throughout much of rural Idaho.

In fact, nine counties - Camas, Clark, Bear Lake, Owyhee, Caribou, Boise, Lemhi, and

SALT LAKE CITY - These days, if something has room for a logo, the Olympic movement can find a way to sell it.

With a price tag in the million-, and sometimes even billion-dollar range, Olympic organizing committees have no choice but place fund raising at the top of their need-to-do list.

But lately, making money off the Games has emphasized commercialism over Olympic spirit.

For $27.99, you can own an official Olympic windsock. For $249, you can buy one of several sweaters.

Everything from boxer shorts and jackets to keychains and snowglobes have turned up bearing the official Salt Lake City Olympic Games emblem and a price tag.

No one can fault the Salt Lake City Organizing Committee. Like every committee that came before it, SLOC has to find a means to cover the escalating costs of building and running the Games.

Even the first Olympic Games in 1896 slapped its logo on stamps and sold them on opening day. It used the profits to finance the cost of those Games' final events, including fencing, shooting, cycling and swimming.

In the 100-plus years since those Games, however, technology has made selling the Olympics a lot more profitable, but not necessarily more public-oriented.

"It's not really about catering to the people," said Jim Laylord, vice president of SportsTix.com. "They're in it for the money, and the real money comes from big-time business."

Last week SLOC unveiled its plan to sell premium seats to premium events on eBay. The auction site was supposed to give the public an equal shot at tickets usually reserved for corporate sponsors and national governing bodies.

In principle, the plan sounded good, until the bids reached a level no working class person could afford.

With bidding on most of the items scheduled to end today, the a-king price had climbed to $8,600 for the ladies figure skating tickets.

Charlie Woodward of Martinez wanted a pair of those tickets to give to his wife for her birthday, and he had what he thought was a lot of money to spend on them.

"I actually put in a bid at $6,800," he said. "An hour later, someone had come along and topped me. What I had considered paying was insane enough, I won't go any further."

Repeal of estate tax doesn't mean the end of estate planning

Los Angeles Times

The estate tax may be headed for the graveyard, but estate planning isn't.

In fact, estate planning may be more complicated for some affluent Americans as they wrestle with the repeal of the estate tax, which Congress approved recently as part of its $1.35 trillion tax-cut legislation.

Many attorneys and accountants expect a surge in activity as people rework their estate plans, grapple with changes in the way certain property is taxed and attempt to break into trusts set up under the old rules.

All this will be done in a climate of uncertainty, because the estate tax isn't scheduled to be completely repealed until Jan. 1, 2010 - giving Congress plenty of time to change its mind.

"The changes have been stretched out for so many years, you can't think that lawmakers are not going to come back and revisit this," said Bruno Graziano, an attorney and estate tax expert for CCH Inc., a Riverwoods, Ill.-based tax research firm.

Even Congress doesn't reverse course and the estate tax is completely repealed, the relief may not last long. Because of budget rules, the repeal law sunsets - or ceases to exist - on Dec.

31, 2010, when current estate tax rates go back into effect.

Still, the bill is expected to significantly reduce the number of people affected by estate taxes starting Jan. 1, 2002, attorneys said.

Under current law, each person can pass $675,000 to heirs

Under current law, each person can pass $675,000 to heirs free of estate taxes. For estates above that threshold, the tax rate starts at 37 percent, rising to 55 percent for estates valued at more than $3 million.

free of estate taxes. For estates above that threshold, the tax rate starts at 37 percent, rising to 55 percent for estates valued at more than $3 million.

The tax-cut legislation trims the top estate tax rate to 50 percent next year while increasing to $1 million the amount that can be left tax-free to heirs. The increase in that exemption limit will spare about 40 percent of the taxpayers who would pay the tax. In 1999 - the latest year for which IRS figures are available - 49,870 estates were subject to the tax, of which 19,136 were valued at less than $1 million.

The new rules may require people to rethink common estate-planning tactics, however.

Many people, for example, give annual $10,000 gifts to their children, or larger gifts to charities, to reduce the size of their estates and thus save on future estate taxes. (Charitable contributions, and gifts of less than $10,000 per recipient, don't incur gift taxes.)

There may be less reason to make such gifts as the estate tax declines and disappears. But if the estate tax is eventually reinstated, people who don't make such gifts in the intervening years could be missing out on opportunities to shrink their eventual tax bill, experts said.

Complicating the issue is that larger transfers - more than $10,000 per recipient - will still be subject to gift taxes under the repeal law, even as the estate tax disappears.

Congress kept the gift tax to prevent wealthy parents from "income shifting" - transferring assets to children in lower tax brackets as a tax dodge.

The new law also may spark more litigation over trusts set up under the old rules, said Elizabeth T. Pierson, an estate-planning attorney with Hoffman Sabbitt & Wattenmaker in Los Angeles.

So-called credit shelter trusts, for example, typically set aside an amount equal to the tax-free exemption - currently $675,000.

Idaho dot-com dominates online bodybuilding world

The Associated Press

BOISE - A few years ago, Russ DeLuca told his son, Ryan, to get off the computer and get a job.

Today, 23-year-old Ryan DeLuca's Web business, Bodybuilding.com, has revenues of more than $5 million - and the young CEO employs his father, along with two brothers and a sister.

Bodybuilding.com, which sells nutritional supplements to athletes, continues to expand at a time when many dot-coms are failing. The key to success has been a business strategy that focuses on competitive pricing, customer service and hiring family and friends who share the young DeLuca's vision.

"It's so cool to be able to start something like this," said Ryan DeLuca.

The Boise business now is the world's top Internet site for body building and includes a store and warehouse in Boise, as well as a warehouse/shipping operation in Tallahassee, Fla.

DeLuca plans to open a second store in Boise this summer, and the company's third store may open in Tallahassee by the end of the year. Because of the strength of online sales, the company uses its purchasing power to keep prices low at its retail outlet.

"We've grown really fast," said Russ DeLuca, who keeps the company's books and helps with marketing. "This year, we're on track to have a little over $6 million in sales."

About 10 to 15 percent of sales are international, with just about 5 percent of overall sales coming from the legislature.

Ryan DeLuca started honing his business skills while still student at Capital High School in Boise. His favorite "class" came after school, when he pored over bodybuilding magazines and dreamed of being a professional bodybuilder, but he also was helping local businesses with their Internet marketing.

Charging small fees, he scouted search engines and helped those products were and decided, would appear higher up in Internet searches, giving his clients a higher profile.

By the time he graduated in 1996, he had started a second-business selling Internet supplements off a Web page he designed, called wholesale-creation.com.

As a user of supplements, DeLuca knew how much the markup on those products were and decided, to sell them himself at a lower margin. That was when his father told him he needed to consider finding a job that had the potential to support him.

"I said, 'People are not going to send you money over the computer,'" said Russ DeLuca.

"I took me awhile to convince him I had a job," Ryan DeLuca added with a laugh.

In 1996, not many companies.

Tech earnings worries prompt sell-off on Wall Street

NEW YORK (AP) - Worries about technology earnings overtook Wall Street Wednesday, sending stocks tumbling on investors' growing fears that this spring's huge rally may have been premature. The intense sell-off, which forced the Nasdaq composite index down more than 4 percent, followed an earnings warning by tech bellwether Sun Microsystems. Analysts said Sun's late Tuesday report was an unwelcome reminder that the economy is still weak and that many companies' second-quarter results are likely to be dismal...

The Standard & Poor's 500 index slipped 19.85 to 2,248.08, a 1.6 percent decline and its lowest close since May 11, when the S&P finished at 1,245.67. "We've really had a slew of negative technology and telecom news and this obviously has caused a pretty significant pull back in the Nasdaq," said Todd Clark, co-head of trading at WR Hambrecht. "I'm a little bit concerned because we had a nice breakout on the upside a few weeks ago, if the market was in good shape, we should have been able to hold those levels. That has not happened."

Cleaverwater and Latah - had fewer new people in May than in May 2000. Another five jobs were lost than in May 2000. The decline in the Idaho rate was double the national drop, from the national rate to 4.4 percent in May. The first decrease since last September came because employers slashed only 19,000 jobs from their payrolls instead of the anticipated 25,000 last month that Idaho's rate has exceeded the federal one. Job prospects were improved almost across the board in Idaho. The exception was the recreation sector, which is in the transition between winter and summer, and education with the end of the semester at the state's largest private school, Ricks College in Rexburg. And the increase in construction employment reflected the findings of the monthly construction report from Wells Fargo Bank. As winter ended in March, the January department store filed with local governments $122.6 million, the largest one-month total since last August. The total labor force remained just under 680,000 but 647,000 of those people worked last month. In January, department store analysts projected the average unemployment rate for 2001 would drop a tenth from the revised job rate of 4.9 percent last year and then retreat another notch to 4.7 percent in 2002. Through the first five months of 2000, the rate averaged nearly 4.7 percent.

'Dennis the Menace' creator dies at 81; comic strip will continue

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Hank Ketcham, whose lovable scamp "Dennis the Menace" tormented cranky Mr. Wilson and amused readers of comics for five decades, died Friday at age 81.

Ketcham, who died at his home in Pebble Beach, had suffered from heart disease and cancer, said his publicist, Linda Dozoretz.

"He had had some bad spells and he slipped away in his sleep," said Ellen James, a neighbor and family friend.

Unlike the late "Peanuts" creator Charles Schulz, who insisted on drawing every panel himself and had a clause in his contract dictating that original drawings would end with his death, Ketcham stopped drawing Sunday panels in the mid-1980s and retired from weekday sketches in 1994.

Ketcham's assistants handled the bulk of the work after that, with Ketcham overseeing the feature daily by fax. The team, Marcus Hamilton and Ronald Ferdinand, will continue the panels.

Ketcham began the strip in 1951, inspired by the antics of his 4-year-old son. In March, Ketcham's panels celebrated 50 years of publication — running in 1,000 newspapers, 48 countries and 19 languages.

The strip inspired several books of cartoons, a television show in musical, 1993 movie and a playground in Monterey, where Ketcham had his studio. The TV show, starring Jay North as Dennis and Joseph Kearns as Mr. Wilson, ran on CBS from 1959 to 1963.

"It's a joyful pursuit realizing that you're trying to ease the pain of front-page news or television," Ketcham told The Associated Press in March. "There's some little bright spot in your day that reminds you that it's fun to smile."

Despite its longevity, the strip has changed little since the 1950s. Dennis was always a freckle-faced "five-ana-half" — an appealing if aggravating mixture of impishness and innocence.

"Mischievous just seems to follow wherever Dennis appears, but it is the product of good intentions, misdirected helpfulness, good-hearted generosity, and, possibly, an overactive thyroid," Ketcham wrote in his 1990 autobiography "The Merchant of Dennis the Menace."

Fellow cartoonists praised his skills. Bill Keane, creator of "Family Circus," once called him "the best pen-and-ink line artist in America today. He still is a brilliant technician when it comes to drawing the lines that make his cartoons so beautifully artistic."

Henry King Ketcham was born March 14, 1920, in Seattle and grew up there. He recalled he was no more than 6 when he knew he wanted to be a cartoonist. One day he watched a family friend sketch Barney Google and other then-popular cartoon figures.

"I couldn't wait to borrow his 'magic pencil' and try my own hand at drawing these comic-strip characters," said Ketcham, who promptly copied every comic he could get his hands on. "It was a major discovery, and I was floating on air with excitement."

When the United States entered World War II, he enlisted in the Navy, where he was put to work drawing cartoons for Navy posters, training material and war bond sales.

A free-lance cartoonist after the war, Ketcham was living in Carmel when he got the idea for "Dennis the Menace" in October 1950. His wife, Alice, burst into his home studio, exasperated that their 4-year-old son, Dennis, had dismantled his room instead of taking a nap.

"Your son is a menace!" she said.

The strip with the towhead tornado, crabby neighbor Mr. Wilson and a rangy, bespectacled dad who looked like Ketcham himself debuted in 16 newspapers. It was an instant hit, and the following year, a collection of Dennis cartoons was a best seller.

"Despite the strip's real-life inspiration, Ketcham did not depend on family life for ideas. He used comedy writers and credited the team approach for the strip's longevity.

"Anyone in the humor business isn't thinking clearly if he doesn't surround himself with idea people," Ketcham told The Associated Press in a 1994 interview. "Otherwise, you settle for mediocrity — or you burn yourself out."

For Ketcham, giving up "Dennis the Menace" did not mean retirement, he concentrated on his more serious artwork, oil and watercolor portraits. While glad the strip continued, Ketcham didn't care if it outlived him.

"I'm not in it for posterity. People look at it for 30 seconds ... then it gets used to wrap fish," he said. "Now my paintings, that's something else. My bid to posterity is my paintings."

Bush wants to extend normal trade with China

Knight Ridder News Service

WASHINGTON - President Bush on Friday asked Congress to extend normal trade relations with China for another year, arguing that recent strains in the U.S.-China relationship underscore the need for economic cooperation to encourage an "economically open, politically stable and secure China."

The president's decision to grant China normal trade status for another year is sure to trigger a fierce debate in Congress, where some lawmakers want to punish Beijing for detaining a U.S. spy plane.

President George W. Bush

U.S. reconnaissance plane and its crew and for human rights violations. Congress has 90 days to override Bush's action.

Bush's administration wants to promote economic relations with China, which U.S. officials hope will erode Beijing's totalitarian political system and help the American economy, while resisting China's efforts to expand its political and military influence in East Asia.

"Fair trade is essential not only to improving living standards for Americans, but also for a strong and productive relationship with China," Bush said in a statement. "Recent events have shown not only that we need to speak frankly and directly about our differences, but that we also need to maintain dialogue and cooperate."

Normal trade status lets Chinese goods flow into the United States with the same low tariffs that apply to most other countries. Imports to America from China last year totaled $22.4 billion; U.S. exports to China were $4.36 billion, including some $3 billion in agricultural products, according to the Commerce Department.

China's trade status is reviewed annually, but Congress agreed last year to make normal trade relations permanent once China is admitted to the World Trade Organization - a decision that could come later this year. China has had normal trade relations with the United States since 1980.

Although Congress is likely to agree with Bush, the vote may be closer than usual because of the countries' strained relations.

U.S. priest is murdered in Havana

PITTSBURGH (AP) - A priest from Pennsylvania who sometimes lived in Cuba and helped the poor was strangled in his Havana home, his brother said.

The Rev. George Zirwas, 47, was killed either Sunday night or early Monday, Frank Zirwas said Thursday from his western Pennsylvania home.

A State Department official said Cuban authorities were investigating and that the U.S. Interests Section was working with the family and Cuba to have Zirwas' body sent to Pennsylvania. The motive for the killing was not known.

Frank Zirwas said he found out about the death Monday when his brother's friend called from Cuba. The death was confirmed by Cuban officials, Frank Zirwas said.

The Roman Catholic priest had been on leave from the Pittsburgh Diocese since 1996, said the Rev. Ronald Lengwin, a diocese spokesman.

Zirwas had lived in Cuba on and off for the last three years, delivering toothbrushes, clothing and other items to Cubans. He visited the Pittsburgh area where his 83-year-old mother lived, but always returned to Havana.

"He considered Cuba home," Frank Zirwas said.

What Would You Give For a Miracle?

Clothes. Homework. A date for the prom. Like most 17-year-olds, Kim Fisher thinks a lot about these. And something else most teens never have to worry about: cancer.

Kim's ordeal began on Thanksgiving Day when she went to the emergency room with symptoms of a bladder infection. Doctors suspected a cyst, but it was a tumor the size of a tennis ball.

Each year, St. Luke's MSTI treats 300 children, 50 of whom are newly diagnosed with cancer. "Kim's care has involved many different specialists," said Martin Johnston, MD, a pediatric oncologist at MSTI. Kim's caregivers have included a urologist, orthopedist, general surgeon, registered nurses, dietitians, counselors and more. "At St. Luke's Children's Hospital, we always use a team approach, because kids and their families otherwise could not handle the aggressive treatments involved with this type of intensive care."

Kim's battle against cancer is being fought on many fronts. Along with drugs to shrink her tumor and successful surgery to remove it, a positive attitude may be the best medicine. Kim underwent surgery five days before Easter. She was wheeled into the pre-operative area wearing foot-long, fuzzy white rabbit ears with pink satin centers. As staff was preparing the operating room, Kim's surgeon grinned and said, "See that beautiful girl in the bunny ears? She's with me."

Kim's beauty reaches each of us through her broad smile, her sparkling brown eyes and most of all, her inner strength. Some days having cancer makes her sad, and she's thought to herself, "Why me? But Kim is a remarkable young woman whose faith helps her see through the worst days to a bright, healthy future. "I think getting cancer was God's way of telling me to slow down," said Kim. "To stop and enjoy life and figure out my priorities."

One of Kim's greatest priorities is to thank the people who have been a part of her life during the months of treatment. "The doctors and other staff have been so nice," said Kim. "They brought me birthday cards and gifts, and Easter presents. The Child Life Specialists come by all the time to see if I need anything," she said from her hospital bed, tears filling her eyes.

Kim says she has matured since her introduction to cancer. She thinks more about the feelings of others, and she has a new respect toward the people in her life. "I never realized how important family is... they always know how to be here for me." And Kim understands how fortunate she is to have a place like MSTI so close to home. "The doctors and nurses at MSTI are the greatest people I've ever met in my life. And having treatment in Boise means I can go to school, see my friends, go shopping with my mom..." And go to the Junior Prom.

Kim struck a bargain with her doctor: she would remain in the hospital for her birthday, if he would allow her to go to the dance. In a knowing, optimistic voice she said, "I got a great deal. After all, you have a birthday every year. But it's not every year you get to go to prom."

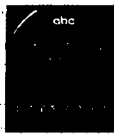

Happy dancing, Kim.

UN extends oil-for-food program

UNITED NATIONS - In a nod to a U.S.-British plan to restructure sanctions on Iraq, the Security Council on Friday extended a humanitarian program there while acknowledging in a resolution that changes must be made to ease life for Iraq's civilians.

The 30-day extension of the oil-for-food program gives Washington and London more time to sell their new proposal to other council members. Their plan would allow the flow of civilian goods into Iraq while tightening the arms embargo - a bid to keep Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein from rearming while improving the quality of life for his people.

U.S. State Department spokesman Richard Boucher announced in Washington that the United States would release more than $200 million worth of supply contracts it had blocked at the United Nations, bringing the total to about $1.2 billion worth of contracts that have been released since the beginning of May.

The United States and Britain have been severely criticized for placing what some felt was an excessive number of contracts on hold in the committee that monitors Iraq sanctions. Both countries contend the dual-use items had potential military applications.

Thousands of Palestinians gather for Hussein's funeral

JERUSALEM - Thousands of Palestinians gathered Friday for the funeral of Faisal Hussein, who dedicated his life to coexistence with Israel and Palestinian control over traditionally Arab parts of Jerusalem.

Hussein, the top PLO official in Jerusalem, was to be buried in the city's holiest Muslim shrine at the side of his father, a legendary military commander killed in a 1948 battle for Jerusalem. Hussein died of a heart attack Thursday.

His body, accompanied by his family and an entourage led by Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat, arrived Friday morning by helicopter in the West Bank town of Ramallah, where thousands of flag-waving Palestinians were gathered. As the casket was carried off the helicopter on the shoulders of eight Palestinian officers, Arafat saluted and said, "To heaven, you, the beloved of martyrs."

Attendant strike grounds Mexico's largest airline

MEXICO CITY - The union for AeroMexico's flight attendants went on strike early Friday, grounding more than 250 daily flights and stranding thousands of passengers.

AeroMexico said it has placed additional customer service personnel at its airports and reservation centers to help passengers holding AeroMexico tickets find other flights.

But red and black strike banners were draped over AeroMexico counters at Mexico City's international airport, and many passengers reported receiving no help.

Talks between the airline and union broke down at about midnight Thursday. The airline, which had offered a 6.5 percent salary increase earlier, had moved that offer to 8.5 percent. The union had been asking for a 30 percent increase and enforcement of some work rules.

Macedonian president offers amnesty to ethnic Albanians

SKOPJE, Macedonia - Hoping to end a three-month rebel insurgency, Macedonia's president offered amnesty Friday to ethnic Albanian militants if they lay down their weapons.

President Boris Trajkovski's offer came as the fighting moved to Tetovo, Macedonia's second-largest city, where the insurgency began in late February. Eight rebels were killed Friday in a clash with government troops outside Tetovo near the village of Lisee, army spokesman Col. Blagoje Markovski said.

In a sign that more violence could follow, police on Friday reimposed an overnight curfew in Tetovo and in the northern city of Xumanevo near the border with Yugoslavia, another site of scattered fighting.

Seven drowned, 90 missing as boat sinks in Bangladesh

CHITTAGONG, Bangladesh - An overloaded passenger boat sank Friday in the sea off southeastern Bangladesh, leaving seven people drowned and more than 90 missing.

Fading daylight and strong winds were hampering a search operation, said Omar Faruk, a local police officer.

The large motorized wooden boat was ferrying nearly 150 passengers to Sandwip Island off the port city of Chittagong when it capsized around noon, Faruk said. Passing boats in the busy shipping channel rescued at least 50 people, but seven bodies were found.

New U.S. commander in Kosovo pledges safety

CAMP BONDSTEEL, Yugoslavia - American Brig. Gen. William C. David took command of U.S. forces in Kosovo on Friday, with a pledge to make the troubled Yugoslav province safer.

David assumed the post at a ceremony at Camp Bondsteel, the main U.S. camp in Kosovo, where about 4,500 U.S. troops are stationed. David, who will hold command for six months, is replacing Brig. Gen. Kenneth J. Quinlan. In a speech, David said advance-ing the peace process, the rule of law and safety and security of all Kosovo citizens were among the goals of his command.

Firebomb damages deputy mayor's home in tense town

LONDON - The home of the deputy mayor of Oldham, the northern England town that was torn by rioting this week, was firebombed early Friday in what police are treating as a racially motivated attack.

No one was hurt, but the home of Rizq Ahmad, who is also a member of the town council, was extensively damaged, according to police. He and his family were inside the house at the time, reports said.

Officials expressed worries that the firebombing would re-ignite tensions between whites and south Asians in Oldham, a gritty former mill town 190 miles northwest of London.

Tensions rise between UN, Afghanistan's Taliban militia

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan - Rising tensions between the United Nations and Afghanistan's ruling Taliban militia are threatening vital humanitarian aid in the drought- and war-ravaged country.

The U.N. coordinator for Afghanistan said Friday the Taliban care more about waging war and imposing "pure" Islam than their people's welfare. The Taliban foreign minister, meanwhile, accused U.S. women's groups of fomenting discord between the Islamic militia and the United Nations.

In an interview with The Associated Press in Kabul, the Afghan capital, Wakil Ahmed Muttawakil blamed a recent series of disputes between the Taliban and the world body on "organizations of women in America, including Jewish women, and possibly from Afghan women with links to the opposition."

12-year-old AIDS activist succumbs

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) - In a country badly damaged by the ever-worsening AIDS pandemic and the harsh stigma that accompanies it, young Nkosi Johnson was a brave voice urging acceptance.

On Friday, he was killed by the disease he battled for all of his 12 years.

An outspoken representative of the millions of infected South Africans who never discuss their disease, Nkosi impressed many disappointed in the government's lackluster fight against the epidemic.

"He was a very courageous young man, a courageous child. And I think he became a wonderful advocate and was able to reach many people beyond South Africa," U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan said. "We have lost a voice."

Nkosi, who contracted HIV during birth, began his career as an activist battling to force a public school to admit him despite his infection. He later campaigned to raise AIDS awareness and fought in vain for the government to do more to save other babies from becoming infected.

He earned international fame in July, when he told delegates at the International AIDS Conference in Durban that people infected with HIV should not be shunned.

"We are all human beings. We are normal," he said. "We have hands. We have feet. We can walk. We can talk. We have needs, just like everyone else. Don't be afraid of us. We are the same."

Nkosi's foster mother, Gail Johnson, said Nkosi died peacefully in his sleep early Friday. He had not been able to eat or talk since he collapsed in December with AIDS-related brain damage and viral infections. Doctors had expected him to die shortly afterward.

"His race was run and I think we knew it a long time ago. I'm exceptionally proud of Nkosi," Johnson told reporters Friday, his eyes filling with tears.

Rings, Rocks & Ice

Made of rock and various ices, the planet Uranus was discovered in March 1781 by a British astronomer, Sir William Herschel. It's the seventh planet from the sun and located between Saturn and Neptune.

Uranus has many rings around it. They are very dark, but faint, and made up of a variety of substances from fine dust to large particles. The one that stands out the most is Epsilon.

The planet has been visited by only one spacecraft, Voyager 2, on January 24, 1986. At that time, a number of small moons were discovered. That's in addition to the large moons that were already known.

Each day on Uranus is 17 hours and 14 minutes long. Each year on the planet is like 4 earth years. The diameter of Uranus is more than 31,000 miles. Uranus is far away from where we live. It is at least 1.6 billion miles from Earth during its rotation. The planet ranges from 1.7 billion miles to 1.87 billion miles away from the Sun.

As you can imagine, with all that ice, Uranus is very cold. The average temperature is 328 F. The atmosphere is made up of hydrogen and helium with a little methane. The planet looks like it's blue-green with a faint green rim because of the way its methane gas works.

Evangelism must change its focus

Apparently, marriage is not such a hot idea anymore. Fewer people are getting married, and those who do tie the knot may resist having children. Americans like relationships, but only if they aren't complicated.

Janeal Mecham spent many days working on the illustrations for her book, 'If Jesus Came to Our House,' then was told she would have to re-do them in actual size.

'If Jesus Came to Our House'

By Coreen Hart Times-News correspondent

RUPERT - Janeal Mecham lives in a house filled with her favorite things, mostly of her own making. Vines and flowers are sponge-painted on the walls and tiny quilts are here and there, along with Victorian dolls and teddy bears.

Jesus Came to Our House." Throughout the book, Mecham asks, "How would I behave if Jesus were right here?" One illustration in the book shows two innocent young faces looking up at someone very tall who's in a white robe and sandals.

strict and at two schools in Utah. She enjoys telling a story while illustrating it before the children's eyes, she said. She also leads workshops, teaching children how to make characters out of numbers. And her presentations always have a social message, she said.

FAITH TODAY Clark Morpheus

Of course, there are several ways to explain the figures. For one, people are marrying at a later age. The median age of men getting married for the first time is 27, compared with 22 in 1960. The median age for women is 25, up from 20 in 1960.

The Rev. Tony Jones, a youth minister in Edina, Minn., and author of "Postmodern Youth Ministry," says young people are learning about the difficulty of being married from their parents: "Marriage is a brutally difficult endeavor, but a lot of baby boomers went into marriage thinking it wouldn't be that difficult. But it's probably the reverse of what they've ever done in their life. Now their children are reacting, and this is a generation that has its own mind. The postmodern people do what they want, say what they want and when they want."

For more than a century, the major focus of church evangelism has been the nuclear family. Church leaders believed that if they could lure mom, dad and the kids into church, society would benefit. Until recently, their assumptions were correct. But now, with only 23.5 percent of households with a married couple, the church has essentially lost its evangelism focus.

It may take another two decades for the church to recognize that the new focus of evangelism is divorced women with children, or single people with no children, or elderly people who are living together without being married. The Christian church, particularly the mainline congregations, will have to flex and stretch primary targets. Jones says that among the neediest people attending his affluent congregation are single mothers who need male support in their children's lives.

Clark Morpheus is an ordained clergyman and is religion writer for the Saint Paul Pioneer Press.

Writer sees Bible as self-help book

By Rachel Zoll The Associated Press

NEW YORK - Michelle McKinney Hammond says she knows how to look irresistible to men, and it has nothing to do with lipstick or good lighting. Hammond thinks a woman's glow should come from faith in Jesus, and says so in an advice book that has sold 60,000 copies.

Her "Secrets of An Irresistible Woman," is part of a major segment of the Christian publishing industry - self-help books that marry Scripture with the marketing pitch of the recovery movement. The goal: sell the Bible as the original self-help book.

"I take Biblical applications and make them practical. I think you need to have God as a partner," said Hammond, a 43-year-old, born-again Christian from Chicago, whose other works include "If Men Are Like Buses Then How Do I Catch One?" Such books have gained visibility as big chains including Wal-Mart and Barnes & Noble have expanded their selection of Christian publications, once sold only in religious stores.

In recent years, Christian publishers have used a sophisticated marketing approach to match their secular competitors, who have sold millions promising remedies for everything from depression to loveless marriages. Among the religious how-to books are "God Said It, Don't Sweat It: How to Keep Life's Petty Hassles from Overwhelming You" and "Half Time: Changing Your Game Plan from Success to Significance."

Michelle McKinney Hammond, author of 'Secrets of Irresistible Women,' says she knows how to look irresistible to men and it has nothing to do with lipstick or good lighting. Hammond's Christian advice book has sold 60,000 copies.

Conservative Presbyterian movement attracts 110,000 in just a few weeks

The Associated Press and The Times-News

More than 250 conservative congregations have quickly rallied around a new movement within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), built on opposition to same-sex unions and the belief that faith in Jesus Christ is the only route to eternal salvation.

Called the Confessing Church Movement, the effort by conservatives to gain support has been endorsed by 257 congregations, with 110,000 members, since it was formed nine weeks ago, according to the Presbyterian Lay Committee, based in Lenoir, N.C. The issues raised by the Confessing Churches will come before "the Presbyterians' General Assembly in Louisville, Ky., in June.

Conservatives see the movement as the future of their church, but liberals are downplaying it as insignificant. The Rev. Bob Stebe, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Jerome, said his congregation has not joined up with any kind of movement, but has been working on a church statement to clarify its stand on same-sex unions.

On the Net http://www.bymenonfessingchurch.homestead.com/ http://www.abumspit.org

He said his church's session (governing board) has prepared a statement saying "we won't allow the church premises or pastor to be used for same-sex unions." He said the statement will be presented to the congregation on Sunday.

The Rev. Mark Cox, pastor of the Wendell Presbyterian Church, said his church has also not signed any papers from any movement, but is "entirely on the same track" as the Confessing Church group. "There is nothing in the Presbyterian constitution that permits same-sex unions, and the Presbyterians do not endorse same-sex unions," he said, adding that it is not uncommon for people to draft various statements within the denomination.

The Rev. Paul Roberts of the 275-member Summit Presbyterian Church in Butler, Pa., and his 12 lay elders started the Confessing Church movement in March, issuing a three-point platform.

• Jesus Christ alone is the way to salvation. • The Bible is "God's revealed Word, the church's only infallible rule of faith and life." • "Marriage between a man and a woman" is "the only relationship within which sexual activity is appropriate."

The first plank of the platform comes in reaction to a step taken in February by a council that runs the church between General Assemblies, the annual national meetings of church delegates. The council said it was proper for

Local March for Jesus event marks international Jesus Day

By Dixie Thomas Reale Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS - An international event to celebrate Jesus Christ is being staged on June 9 around the world - and in the Magic Valley.

Internationally, more than 10 million people in 600 cities are expected to participate. Locally, organizers are hoping for participation from 50 churches. Typically, participants come from varied religious backgrounds - Nazarene, Lutheran, Catholic, Reformed, Pentecostal, Christian Church, Church of Christ, Church of God, Baptist, Methodist.

"We encourage all churches to participate," said Sheri Mills, who, with Heidi Roessler and others, is organizing the local event. "It is a way of bringing Christians together as one body to express God's love to the community."

The event began as a rally organized by Tom Felton in Austin, Texas, in 1989. By 1991, the rally had evolved into a March for Jesus. Eventually, it became a full-blown Jesus Day.

Join the march Line-up for the March for Jesus is set for 10 a.m. in the Fred Meyer parking lot in Twin Falls. The parade starts at 11 a.m. and will travel to Twin Falls City Park, where a rally and free barbecue will be held. Songbooks are free with the purchase of a March for Jesus CD at the Christian Bookstore. Participants are encouraged to bring CD and cassette players and also to bring cans of food for the hungry. Extra parking will be available at the First Baptist Church on Shoshone Street. A shuttle also will be available for those who do not walk the distance.

Local churches got involved in 1999. Last year, organizers say, between 300 and 500 people participated in the Magic Valley. At this year's rally, there will be clowns, puppets, balloons, singing, inspirational messages and free drawings. "We gathered over 20 cases of canned food (for community hunger) last year," Mills said.

A student walks through the Burke Library at Union Theological Seminary in New York. The institution, which has topped out leading theologians for 165 years, is grappling with the high cost of maintaining its magnificent Manhattan campus, and with an increasingly competitive academic environment.

Pre-eminent seminary confronts an uncertain financial future

By Jennifer Zacharia
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — One of the nation's pre-eminent liberal theological schools is rethinking its future in the face of an unprecedented financial crisis.

Union Theological Seminary, which has turned out experts on religion for 165 years, is grappling with the high cost of maintaining its historic Manhattan campus, and with an increasingly demanding academic environment.

"We're dreaming about an exciting way to reorder and reconstitute our theological education — one that would bring significant gifts to people in New York City," said the Rev. Joseph Hough, president of Union.

Maintaining the seminary at its present size, and with its present programs, will require an additional $150 million for the school's endowment and other items, school officials say. Union has already cut expenses. Over the past year, the school has consolidated staff positions,

"We're dreaming about an exciting way to reorder and reconstitute our theological education — one that would bring significant gifts to people in New York City."

— Rev. Joseph Hough, president of Union Theological Seminary

not renewed teaching contracts and privatized the cafeteria, bookstore and child care. Given Union's stature, theologians and academics nationwide are watching the school's austerity measures and re-evaluation process. The seminary boasts a long list of well-known scholars, including Reinhold Niebuhr and Paul Tillich.

Many other Protestant seminaries have escaped financial strain, but there are generally institutions with more conservative theological stands. Being independent of denominational ties, Union also lacks a steady source of money and students that many seminaries enjoy.

Overall, the cost of higher education has outpaced inflation for many years, noted Terry Hartle, senior vice president of the American Council on Education. On top of that, said Leon Pacala, former head of the Associated of Theological Schools, "theological education has always been an exercise in poverty."

Theology students are unlikely to have the financial resources to pay higher tuition, or to make enough income in the future to become significant donors, according to Gordon Winston, member of the Williams Project on the Economics of Higher Education.

For now, Union has no plans to sell off any part of its campus.

a denominational meeting to sponsor a talk by the Rev. Dirk Ficca that suggested salvation occurs apart from faith in Jesus Christ. Ficca, a Presbyterian, directs an interfaith organization based in Chicago, the Parliament of the World's Religions.

The "third plank" came in response to the result in March of nationwide voting within the church that allowed local congregations to conduct ritual blessings for same-sex couples if they aren't called marriages.

The Rev. Deborah Block of Milwaukee, co-leader of the Covenant Network, which advocates toleration for openly homosexual clergy and lay officers, said the Confessing Churches is "a divisive movement" that is "counterproductive."

Liberal Presbyterians are rallying behind another declaration, "Affirmation 2001," which says the church should protect "freedom of conscience" and "welcome all persons." The text, posted on the Internet on May 1, has been endorsed by several hundred individual Presbyterians.

The Rev. Parker Williamson, leader of the Presbyterian Lay Committee, predicts there won't be a Presbyterian schism because the left-right split already exists within the church, but like-minded congregations will form their own networks and "ignore denominational structures as a dinosaur," Roberts believes. "The problem with our denomination, and why we lose so many members, is that we lack focus on what we clearly believe."

The denomination, with 3.6 million members, has suffered steady losses the past 35 years.

LETTER

Studying scripture leads to spiritual understanding

Apostle Paul in chains defending himself before Festus and King Agrippa of Judea. Asked, King Agrippa, "Believes thou the prophets? I know that thou believest." (Acts 26:22-23) Agrippa answered, "Paul almost thou persuades me to be a Christian." Agrippa believed in what the prophets had written. He just didn't believe Jesus Christ was the Messiah, his stone of stumbling.

Agrippa stumbled because he wrongly believed only what scribes and Pharisees taught, he sought not beyond what he had heard. By neglect his faith was channeled into darkness. Stumbling stones are things we neither see nor know until we stumble. Listing to men educated in worldly ways could lead you down a path to stumble into these stones of stumbling.

Reverence of God brings diligent study of His scriptures (and a willing mind) absorbing His word revealing to you knowledge with spiritual understanding. No longer a babe. Coming of full age exercising the senses with skilful discernment, for a rock of offense, clearing the way of stumbling stones. Not almost persuaded Christian.

We all are sinners responsible for our soul's salvation. Repenting will wash our garments clean and white. "God restoreth our soul." His promise to us, shouldn't we want to know?

somehow like my children. It's a story designed to help them be good, to be the way they should be."

She said she doesn't know if it's the influence of her many stories or whether she is just blessed, but her children were obedient.

Mecham wrote the book without regard to any particular church doctrine. Although she is a member of the Church of Latter-day Saints, she said friends of many other denominations have read her book and found it compatible with their faiths.

Anita Morfin, a fellow teacher at Memorial School, is one of those people.

"It seemed to me it was just something that any Christian would like," Morfin said. "I am ecstatic that her work is finally being published. She has such a wonderful talent, and she's done so much, such as murals in the schools."

Husband Gary Mecham is also pleased. "He's just totally supportive," Mecham said. "I couldn't have a better cheerleader to urge me on."

Mecham chose to self-publish in order to maintain control over the book. Plans are to have the book available for sale at The Bookstore in Rupert by July 4. Mecham expects the price of the book to be around $13.95.

"Granite Publishing will distribute the book for me and help me advertise it, but it's every word mine," she said. "I have a message to get out, and to get it out to children."

Ministers mix sermons, politics

By Curtis L. Taylor
Newspaper

NEW YORK — The Rev. Floyd Flake steps into the pulpit during the 8:30 a.m. service at the Allen African Methodist Episcopal Church in Queens, ready to deliver the gospel. Only this Sunday, with the congregation at full attention eagerly awaiting the word, the sermon is placed momentarily on hold.

The former chairman of the House of Representatives' banking subcommittee strolls to the front of the packed pews and uses his spiritual influence to encourage his flock to experience the awesome feeling of self-empowerment through homeownership. "If you lease a car, it will depreciate, but buying a home, it will appreciate," Flake and the congregation repeat the two emphasized words in unison.

A few days later at City Hall in Manhattan, council member Wendell Foster is grilling city Parks Commissioner Henry Stern in a tense committee hearing about charging fees to city residents to replace trees the department cuts down. A few days later, the Rev. Wendell Foster will be standing in the pulpit at the United Church of Christ.

Both Flake and Foster have managed to combine their calling to preach the gospel with their passion for politics, serving as elected officials and ministers of churches. They are two in a long lineage of blacks — the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., the Rev. Jesse Jackson, the Rev. Al Sharpton — who combined pastoral training with political and social activism, not always without outer controversy or inner conflict.

The Rev. Floyd Flake, a former Democratic congressman, speaks at the Allen African Methodist Episcopal Church in Queens, N. Y.

"If you look at every significant gain in the community — from the NAACP, black colleges, the United Negro College Fund — they have had to go through the black church," said Foster. The legacy of Adam Clayton Powell Jr. (the late congressman) of promoting interracial harmony is still felt around the world, Foster said. Powell used his influential position as chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee to champion economic and political growth for blacks and whites. He championed the adjustable minimum wage and the nondiscriminatory clause in employment by companies awarded government contracts.

But serving both worlds can create spiritual conflict, Flake and Foster said. "There have been times when I would not go along with a vote, Foster said. "I would never do anything to bring disgrace to the God I serve or my family."

For Flake, a vote on so-called partial-birth abortions — which are administered at eight months — came head to head with his religious convictions. He had managed to avoid the sensitive issue because it had always been part of the total budget package: "Periodically, there were moments when it was necessary to go into my chamber and pray. There was pressure from the party ... but being a seven-month child myself, I could not vote for what was the killing of a life."

Historically, the black church has provided community leadership when there was no other place to turn, Foster said. It is a natural extension for a minister to engage in politics.

Religion sets 'sites' along information superhighway

By Helen T. Gray
The Kansas City Star

With more Americans turning to the Internet for spiritual experiences, religious leaders are exploring the possibilities and problems associated with online worship.

In her recent book, "Give Me That Online Religion," religion and technology professor Brenda E. Brasher says, "One of the best-kept secrets of cyberspace is the surprising amount of religious practice that takes place there."

She has found more than 1 million online religion Web sites and calls attention to the fact that virtual temples and churches dot the landscape of cyberspace almost as much as online flower shops and virtual bookstores do.

A new study by Barna Research Group reveals the extent of Internet influence on people's spiritual lives.

• Within this decade as many as 50 million people may rely solely upon the Internet to provide all their faith-based experiences.

• Currently, 8 percent of adults and 12 percent of teenagers use the Internet for religious or spiritual experiences.

• More than two-thirds indicated they were likely to use the Internet for religious experiences.

• One out of three Protestant churches has a Web site. Of the remaining two-thirds, 19 percent say they definitely will have one in the next 12 months.

George Barna, who directed the study, projected that "by the end of the decade we will have in excess of 10 percent of our population who rely upon the Internet for their entire spiritual experience."

"Some of them will be individuals who have not had a connection with a faith community, but millions of others will be people who drop out of the physical church in favor of the cyberchurch."

Congregations with Web sites are struggling to discover the place of the Internet in communicating their messages. Most Web sites include church schedules, activities and background information on their congregations. Some include Bible studies, opportunities to submit prayer requests, resource materials and links to further reference sources.

The Barna study showed that among the most appealing Internet religious endeavors were listening to archived religious teachings; reading online devotionals and buying religious products and resources.

The least appealing was online worship, but even that was projected to attract 30 million to 35 million adults in this decade.

With many religious leaders, online worship seems to be the most controversial aspect of cyberfaith. While some are reluctant to move toward online worship, others seem resigned to keep pace with the trend.

While virtual worship may fulfill a need, many people believe it is no substitute for face-to-face worship.

Battle brews over 'In God We Trust'

By Tom Schaefer
The Wichita Eagle

Commentary

"In God We Trust" is stamped on our currency and alluded to in our pledge of allegiance. We vow to tell the truth in court ("so help me, God") and respectfully stand when public prayers — those that are still permitted — are reverently offered.

The sentiment is noble, but there's a problem: As an ever-pluribus union nation, the many aren't one in agreement that we trust in God. And those who are determined to make the sentiment so are fighting a no-win battle.

Last week, the American Family Association, a Mississippi-based conservative watchdog group, announced that it will launch a campaign to put the national motto "In God We Trust" in more than a million public schools. Earlier this year, the association persuaded Mississippi lawmakers to put the motto in the state's public classrooms.

"It is an idea whose time has come," said the Rev. Donald Wildmon, president of the organization.

"Actually, the first time the idea came up was during the Civil War. A minister wrote to the secretary of the treasury urging him to imprint the name of God on U.S. coins."

"This would place us openly under the Divine protection we have personally claimed," the Rev. M.R. Watkinson of Pennsylvania wrote. The secretary instructed the director of the mint in the Philadelphia to prepare such a coin.

In 1864, "In God We Trust" appeared on a 2-cent coin. A year later it was imprinted on all gold and silver coins. Since 1938, all U.S. coins have had the inscription.

In 1956, President Eisenhower signed into law a bill that declared "In God We Trust" to be the national motto. The following year, it appeared on 1-dollar silver certificates and eventually on all currency.

Even without the inscription, symbols of this country's ties to the divine are long-standing. The founding fathers underscored the nation's dependence on God. Our nation's anthem, "The Star-Spangled Banner," declares: "And this be our motto, 'In God is our trust.'" A century later, in 1954, the phrase "One nation under God" was added to the Pledge of Allegiance.

All these efforts were thought to be expressions of a nation united in faith, but our nation's history is rich in religious diversity. Each group — Puritans, Anglicans, Anabaptists, Catholics and others — sought to single itself out as the true expression of God's will and rule. Each declared that it was following divine direction. Suspicion — even hatred — arose.

By the time the First Amendment, with its provision for freedom of religion, took effect in 1791, 12 of 14 states had their own religious tests for state offices. Since then, religious differences not only have expanded but have become entrenched. Diversity, both religious and cultural, is the order of the day.

Issues ranging from nativity scenes on public property and prayer in public schools to religious symbols in government buildings and on state seals have fueled the debate. In this litigious society, you need a scorecard to keep track of who's ahead.

So do we really believe that we, as a nation, trust in God? Should we have such references removed from public grounds and declare this nation to be solely secular?

A case can be made for such a point of view. Yet, coursing through the body of this nation is a strong sense of divine providence that obligates us to be, as expressed by John Winthrop, first governor of the Massachusetts Bay colony, that "city on a hill," a light to the nations. Honoring our religious heritage while respecting our religious — and nonreligious — differences is the challenge we have at this time in history.

No matter how good the intentions, forcing the display of "In God We Trust" in America's public schools does not respect religious and non-religious differences. Likewise, removing the motto — and all other signs of divine providence — from public display does not honor our religious heritage. Finding the middle ground will not be easy, but it is this generation's crucial test. One thing is certain: Should either side prevail in this battle, both sides will lose. And if that happens, God help us all.

Believers share faith at Pentecostal event

By Teresa Watanabe
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — At the Faith-dome in south central Los Angeles this week, one of the most dynamic religious movements in the world was out in full force.

A man from the Philippines collapsed on the floor and murmured sweet praises to Jesus. An Asian and African hugged, praying and weeping. A leader of the faith, Thomas Trask, voice booming and face perspiring, laid his hands over a Korean woman's head and exhorted God: "Heal! Heal! Heal! We rebuke the attackers in the name of Jesus!"

A century after a one-eyed preacher in Los Angeles fired up the Pentecostal flame that has now spread to half a billion worshippers worldwide, several thousand believers from more than 40 countries congregated for the World Pentecostal Conference, which ended Thursday.

The Pentecostal movement is inspired by the biblical Book of Acts, in which the Holy Spirit descended upon the apostles and empowered them with the ability to speak in tongues and perform miracles. To believers, such gifts are still fully available to those who ask, through baptism in the Holy Spirit.

Their exuberant faith is reshaping global Christianity by inspiring renewals among Catholics and other non-Pentecostal Christians. In what adherents call Pentecostalism's "third wave," this florid style of worship is taking root indigenously and independently from its original American denominations — the Assemblies of God, Church of God in Christ, International Church of the Foursquare Gospel.

Fully 70 percent of those who follow the Pentecostal style today are non-white, according to religious demographer David B.

Barrett, and the spiritual energy has sparked a global backlash. Barrett said Pentecostals are the most persecuted Christians in history, and experts say many churches may see them as competition.

Pentecostals have come under fire for faking healings or running financially amok, as occurred with Jim and Tammy Bakker. Some Christians dispute their theology, arguing the age of miracles is over. But Pentecostals are beginning to win broad public acceptance, thanks in part to a new focus on social ministry.

Four years ago, for instance, the Assemblies of God began launching "Convoys of Hope" throughout the nation bringing health clinics, food, clothing and the gospel to as many as 25,000 people a weekend, said Trask, the general superintendent of the denomination, whose 40 million members make it the largest Pentecostal group in the world.

Jim Bakker plans Florida youth camp

LYNN HAVEN, Fla. (AP) — Fallen TV evangelist Jim Bakker hopes to open a camp next year for inner-city youth in the rural Florida Panhandle where he now lives.

Bakker, 61, and second wife, Lori Graham Bakker, recently moved to Sunny Hills in neighboring Washington County and were given land nearby for the camp. The program would host street youths from an Atlanta ministry led by Jim Bakker's son with former wife Tammy.

"Lori and I had been actively involved in an inner-city ministry in Los Angeles for a couple of years," Jim Bakker said at a book signing. "We're setting these camps for older inner-city kids who want to get out of the drug culture and get out of gangs."

Bakker served five years in federal prison after being convicted in 1989 of defrauding supporters of $158 million.

Religion in brief

Author, wife give Falwell's university $4.5 million

LYNCHBURG, Va. (AP) — The Rev. Tim LaHaye, co-author of the Christian "Left Behind" novels, and wife Beverly have donated $4.5 million to the Rev. Jerry Falwell's Liberty University.

The school said the gift and a matching offer would provide a student center with an Olympic-sized swimming pool, fitness center, arcade and theater.

LaHaye's eight best sellers, about people left behind on Earth after God summons true believers in the final reckoning, have sold more than 20 million copies. Beverly LaHaye, founder of the conservative Concerned Women for America, is a university trustee.

Evidence-gathering for canonization nears end

CALCUTTA, India (AP) — A two-year inquiry into the miracles needed to declare Mother Teresa a saint will be completed by Aug. 15, Calcutta's Roman Catholic Archbishop Henry D'Souza announced.

The Vatican normally spends two or three years examining submitted evidence. But for Mother Teresa the Vatican may take less time, he said.

Mother Teresa, hailed as a "living saint" during her decades in Calcutta's slums, died in 1997 at age 87. Pope John Paul II waived the customary five-year waiting period to start the process toward declaring her a saint.

Beatification, declaring the person is in heaven and entitled to public veneration, requires certification of a miracle, canonization, declaration of sainthood, needs a second miracle.

Georgian Bebo Norman releases third Christian CD: 'Big Blue Sky'

By Bill Bolte
The Wichita Eagle

"Big Blue Sky" is Bebo Norman's third CD, the second for Essential Records. Bebo is an excellent songwriter and singer who has one of those emotional voices that pull you into the music. It's easy to relate and identify with the songs; they are real in an earthy kind of way. The music is folksy with a modern pop feel to it. Acoustic guitars round out Bebo's throaty, passionate vocal with a few electronic touches. "I Am" is a song proclaiming the omniscience of God. "You Surround Me" is a simple song of how love can completely engulf us.

Bebo is from Georgia and has been singing since he was 17. He was in college studying medicine when he decided to go into music. He's found a lot of public call gave Bebo his break by taking him on one of the group's tours as the opening act. His last CD, "Ten Thousand Days," debuted at No. 1 on the Internet Sales Chart ahead of the Backstreet Boys and Sarah McLachlan. And this CD is on track to be even bigger.

Students 'Build' with club

By Mary Lou Petts
Times-News correspondent

BUHL - An enthusiastic group of Buhl Middle School students have joined the Builders Club sponsored by Kiwanis International Foundation. With the motto, "We Build," the club is for young people who want to do good, constructive action to build a better world for themselves and others.

The objectives are providing opportunities for working together in service to school and community, developing leadership potential, fostering development of strong moral character and encouraging loyalty to school, community and nation.

Builders Club members learn by doing. They learn organization, teamwork, leadership, and most importantly, that concerned people working together can make a difference, organizers say.

"I like working with the community and it is nice to know that we can help make the community nicer. It's like giving back what we take through support. It's a blast," said Builders Club President Alyssa Welch.

Club members have participated in parks and roadside cleanups projects, helped on Johnny Horizon Day and newspaper drive, worked at sports banquets, read to Head Start children, collected canned food at holidays, painted trash cans and washed police cars.

The club also held fund-raisers to help families, such as hay day at school where students wore a hat after paying a small fee to the club.

Members also assist the Buhl Kiwanis Club with local and worldwide projects such as the Iodine Deficiency Disorders.

"I enjoy working with the students because they are eager and willing to help," said club adviser and teacher, Letha Blicck.

Teacher Danielle Groves, another club adviser, said the club members have good ideas and are creative when making plans. Librarian Blanca Davidson, also an adviser, likes the students' enthusiasm for their projects.

Other club officers are Vice President Jeremy Thomas, Secretary Jenni Hurley and class representatives, Desri Griffin, Jeremy Thomas and Drew Gabardi.

Meetings are held at lunch time. Annual dues are $2. Kiwanis visits are scheduled by regular members who are available for help and assistance in all projects.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE

Bobby Wolff

"Money doesn't always bring happiness. People with 10 million dollars are no happier than people with nine million dollars."

NORTH 654, 73, 10 6 5 4, Q 9 7 8 5

WEST J 8 2, Q J 10 9, Q 9 4, A J 10

EAST Q 9 7 3, 8 5 2, 7 6 3 2, 5 2

SOUTH A K 10, A K 6 4, A K J, K 8 3

"We can beat it if you settle for one trick instead of two," offered an enlightened East.

"You might be right," confessed West, "but I didn't make my first million on the wrong end of any two-for-one trades."

West led his heart queen to South's king, and South lost no time going after dummy's jack-suit. He banged-down-his-club king, hoping someone would take the ball.

West viewed this as a great opportunity. Not only would he cinch two club winners, but he could also establish his hearts. And if South had only two clubs, South would win only one club trick. Naively, West took his club-ace and led another heart. South ducked, won the continuation, and led a second club. When West played the 10, South ducked in dummy, and West was helpless.

He could cash another heart, but two hearts and two clubs didn't beat the game. South won West's exit, led to dummy's clubs, and claimed the rest.

If West ducks South's club king, the game falls. If South leads another club to dummy's queen to take a diamond finesse, he will win only eight tricks. And if he plays for East to have A-x in clubs and refuses to cover West's jack, he will probably suffer two down.
