Sex and our city

Lona Johnson, owner of Enchantress, has sold lingerie and adult products for seven years and said business continues to grow gradually. She emphasized she doesn't let anyone under the age of 26 in the store, and no one under the age of 21 is allowed in the back room.

Twin Falls shows its steamy side

By Julie Pence
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - In 1991, indignant protesters picketed not only a Twin Falls adult bookstore but also mainstream book sellers to express opposition to pornography.

A decade later, the city has become home to several shops that peddle explicit adult toys, lingerie and novelties.

And though the City Council cast a wet blanket on the striptease business last week with an anti-nudity ordinance, business is pretty steamy in several Twin Falls adult entertainment venues.

According to the store manager of a newly opened novelty shop, Spencer's Gifts, in the Magic Valley Mall, business has been "outrageous."

"Sales have just been phenomenal," said Jennifer Crockett, who transferred from Seattle to open a Spencer's Gifts store June 5. Twin Falls is Idaho's second site. Boise has had one in its Towne Square Mall for several years.

"We definitely have more mature items," Crockett said, listing such things as edible teddies and massagers.

She pointed out, however, the store also carries novelties not necessarily of a sexual nature often popular as gag gifts and that the toys meant for adults aren't showcased in the front of the store.

"That claim could be disputed. Even a church-going grandmother wouldn't be so naive as to not recognize the suggestiveness of a few items on shelves in the front."

On a recent midweek afternoon - often a slow time for mall-business - a woman and her prepubescent granddaughter were looking through posters of teenage idols not three feet from the "nature" line. At the back of the store, a young mother and father with an infant and a young child studied black lights, next to shelves stocked eye level to the floor with toys for adults. At another set of shelves, three boys in their early teens were studying jars of candy, the labels of which claim to stimulate almost any kind of bodily function.

"Our type of product is very irreverent," explained Mike Champion, public relations and publicity manager for the company, which is a subsidiary for Universal Studios. It has more than 750 outlets in the United States, Canada and Great Britain and is opening new stores at a

TWIN FALLS - A newly enacted anti-nudity ordinance goes as far as the city can go in regulating adult entertainment, Mayor Elaine Steele said.

"We pushed it to the max," Steele said. "We wanted to eliminate peep shows coming into town. Adult bookstores usually lead to peep shows."

Twin Falls has no adult bookstores, but a 1989 city ordinance outlawing such businesses was struck down in court because it violated the First Amendment.

Powell visits China

Meeting ends on positive note

Knight Ridder News Service

BEIJING - The Bush administration's frosty relations with China seemed to melt today during a visit here by Secretary of State Colin Powell that ended with reporters from both sides pledging to move forward by focusing on common interests rather than differences.

Secretary of State Colin Powell

"President Bush believes, and I believe of course, that a constructive relationship between the United States and China is in the interest of the American and Chinese peoples, in the interest of our allies and friends in Asia, and in the world's interest," Powell told reporters Saturday after a series of meetings with top leaders, including President Jiang Zemin and Premier Zhu Rongji. "And I look forward to working with my Chinese colleagues to broaden and deepen the areas of our cooperation."

Powell was the highest-ranking member of the new administration to come to China and the visit marked a sharp shift in tone after six months of acrimonious exchanges and a full-blown diplomatic crisis over the collision of a U.S. spy plane with a Chinese fighter plane. Powell's visit laid

TF economy struggles in some sectors

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS - Blame the U.S. economic downturn for slower Twin Falls tourism, sluggish job growth and a decline in automobile sales.

The south-central Idaho area has avoided the layoffs and shutdowns announced in other parts of the state, but there are signs of economic cooling and increased caution in business, said Greg Rogers, a Magic Valley labor market analyst.

As 2001 reached its midpoint, those weren't the only sectors in Magic Valley's economy with cause for complaint. The Times-News' quarterly survey of local economic indicators found optimism in the real estate industry and some agricultural commodity prices on the rise, but few other bright spots.

Magic Valley's low unemployment rates, for instance, are projected to rise. Higher grocery bills in the second quarter squeezed consumers, who bought fewer cars and telephone lines.

For the rest of the story, see the Money section in today's edition for Business Editor Virginia S. Hutchins' report on second-quarter economic indicators.

Fatigue takes toll on Wyoming firefighters

The Associated Press

JACKSON, Wyo. - With the weather worsening and fatigue setting in, firefighters battled for a seventh straight day Saturday to keep a forest blaze away from upscale mountain homes.

The 1,300 residents of Wilson were told to brace for the worst as strong winds, temperatures in the 80s and low humidities were expected for several more days. The fire crept to within two miles of their community, about five miles west of Jackson.

"If you wanted to develop a worse scenario I don't know that you could," fire spokesman Joe Colwell said. "I think today will be the best."

The wildfire, which officials said was sparked by an abanandoned campfire, has grown to some 4,800 acres.

It was about 50 percent contained Saturday.

Firefighters rigged high-powered sprinklers and sprayed fire retardant on homes on Friday as the blaze made another run at about 100 dwellings. The fire still hasn't damaged any structures.

"We've got a good handle on this, yes," fire information officer Terry Virgin said. "But I won't feel good until it poses no structural threat and we have a line completely around it."

In central Washington state, a fast-burning, 200-acre wildfire consumed one home and threatened dozens of others Saturday night.

The fire was believed to have been started in the home that burned.

Seventeen homes were ordered evacuated and residents in several other homes were told to be on alert, said Tammie Wilson, a spokeswoman for the Department of Natural Resources. Winds were gusting to 30 mph in the area near Lake Chelan.

In Wyoming, firefighters rigged high-powered sprinklers and sprayed fire retardant on homes as the blaze drew close to about 100 dwellings. Flames crept up to the lawn of one house in the Indian Paintbrush subdivision, where homes average about $1 million.

 Spence's look at Twin Falls as its second site for Idaho, Champion said, because the traffic in the mall appeared to be adequate to support a store. He said the company takes pains to customize displays according to community tastes and that products can be pulled and replaced with others more in line with community values.

Before Spence's showed up, other stores in town had been operating for years, but proponents of those establishments keep products of explicit sexual nature in separate rooms from the main part of the store. In addition, children are not allowed to enter. And it can be safely said that the product lines hidden from minors are more explicit than those found at Spence's.

 Johnson said she likes the idea that Twin Falls seems to be loosening up and doesn't mind if more stores selling similar products come into town.

Not far from the Enchantress, another store - Poindexter's - sells costumes. It has a back room, too, but owner Susan Buhler said she monitors it very closely. No one under the age of 18 is allowed in it.

"I keep it very low key," Buhler said, adding that when her son relations are at a "sexual juncture" but she emphasizes she doesn't let anyone under the age of 18 in the store, and no one under the age of 21 is allowed in the back room.

 Bush in visit by President Bush in October, when he is scheduled to go to Beijing after attending a meeting of the Asia Pacific Economic Cooperation forum in Shanghai. Chinese foreign ministry spokesman Sun Yong was equally upbeat in his comments to reporters. He said U.S.-China relations are at a "critical juncture" but that "now we are witnessing good momentum on improvement and development."

No concrete progress was announced on any of the major issues dividing the two countries. Those include China's human rights record, China's sales of weapons of mass destruction, and Chinese objections to U.S. arms sales to Taiwan and U.S. plans to develop a national missile defense system.

But the two sides did agree to talk about areas of disagreements. They even agreed to resume the human rights dialogue that China suspended after the 1999 bombing of its embassy in Yugoslavia by U.S.-led NATO forces.

Ordinance

 Steele said city leaders can address nudity only in businesses with liquor licenses. It is legal for strippers to go into private homes.

"When it comes to carrying pornographic materials or items, Steele said federal law makes it hard to stop business from being conducted.

"With capital... it's difficult constitutionally," she said. "With bookstores or sexy underwear, nothing illegal is going on. And parents can choose to keep their kids out of those stores.

"No one has complained about any businesses selling adult products," said Twin Falls Police Department Capt. Jim Massey.

"We basically operate as an advocate for the community, and then we try to determine if a law has been broken," Massey said.

Complaints about exotic dancing that might be leading to nude dancing prompted the City Council to pass the most recent ordinance regulating sexually oriented entertainment in the city, Massey believes it would be difficult for the city to go after stores that sell products of a sexual nature.

"I'm not an authority, but I would assume those would be some really complicated issues as far as legal issues," Massey said.

City Attorney Fritz Wunderlich said state law addresses obscenity issues for the city, but most agree the law is vague.

Idaho law defines obscenity as "materials which the average person, applying contemporary community standards, would find, when considered in their entirety, to appeal to the prurient interest; and which depict or describes patently offensive representations or descriptions of (various sexual activities)." Steele, an ordained Methodist minister, said she doesn't think exposing teenagers to sexual materials, but in a capitalistic society, supply and demand will always rule.

"I'm constantly amazed to see kids in movies I would never take a kid to," she said. "I think in general we're becoming a more deviant society."

One of her colleagues, the Rev. Jeremy Kester of the Nazarene Church in Twin Falls, agreed that exposing minors to products of a sexual nature is inappropriate, but he expressed young people have not exceeded items at Spence's Gifts in the Magic Valley.

"I'm not going to go yelling and screaming about Spence's. I think Spence's is just the tip of the iceberg. Whatever Spence's has is exactly what's on the TV or in the movies," Kester said.

"Spence's is not the problem. Spence's reflects the prevailing culture," Massey said.

 retractable landing gear and the ability to drop eggshell bombs.

"It takes good hand-eye coordination and a lot of practice," said Steve Lincoln, club president.

Many planes are sold assembled while kit planes are available.

Bob Harrison makes his own, including his plane, Green Thing, purposefully built to fly low.

"A long-time model airplane hobbyist, Harrison recalled the time as a boy in Pocatello he and a friend built a glider with 8-foot wing span. They pedaled down a hill and released the glider that two years later was found by a hunter 15 miles south of Park City, Utah. Harrison would never have known how far it flew had he not included his name and address.

Bob Adamson, club secretary and treasurer, said a filer needs knowledge of electronics, aeronautics and engine mechanics to handle the planes. He pointed out a smaller model he guded out a smaller model he guded out retracted speeds of 65 mph.

"You need the power, but flying it is a lot more fun," he said.

"That leaves time for precision tricks.

Saturday's Fun Fly was dedicated to the Gas Bugs, the original model airplane club in Twin Falls that Lincoln said dates back to the 1940's.

Today's club has about 250 members and offers pilot trainers which it highly recommends before attempting a solo flight. The planes can range in price from $300 to as much as $2,000 for a truck model.

Pentagon's 'space bomber' would drop weapons from 60 miles high

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon is exploring development of a futuristic "space bomber" that could destroy targets on the other side of the world in 30 minutes, but that also intends the growing international debate over the militarization of space.

As part of its program to modernize the military, Secretary of Defense Donald H. Rumsfeld directed the Pentagon last month to look into "sub-orbital space vehicles" that "would be valuable for conducting rapid global strikes" according to a planning document issued under his name. The bomber, possibly manned, would blast off like a long-range missile and could drop precision bombs from heights of 60 miles or more. Typical cruising speeds are 10 and 10 times the altitude of current heavy-bombers, it would help the Pentagon overcome one of its most worrisome problems: How to destroy distant targets that are becoming harder to reach because of the declining numbers and increasing vulnerability of U.S. military bases abroad.

Pentagon officials insist such a program would not mark a further move to militarize space, because its targets would be on Proposal sparks debate over militarizing the atmosphere

Earth and it would not make a full orbit of the planet. Its ultimate prospects-before Congress are far from certain, though analysts pointed out that such a program could escape a direct veto if it is included in a "black budget," or secret, funding request.

In any event, the plane is sure to ignite protests from foreign governments and arms control advocates because it could be adapted to defend U.S. satellites or strike those of enemies, analysts say.

The administration's plans for military uses of space have already been under intense scrutiny because of officials' previous hints that they want to take a more assertive approach in this area.

In May, when Rumsfeld reorganized Pentagon space programs to give them more prominence, arms control advocates and congressmen critics reacted angrily, accusing Rumsfeld of opening the way to placing arms in space. Arming space was "the single dumbest thing I've heard in this administration," Sen. Tom Daschle, D-S.D., then minority leader and now majority leader of the Senate, said at the time.

Rumsfeld denied the accusation, but he and other senior officials have said that the United States — with far more satellites than any other country — needs to be able to defend itself and that technology.

While the Pentagon's interest in the bomber is conceptual, it could move quickly toward a procurement program by adapting an experimental reusable spacecraft that was under development by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration for five years at Lockheed Martin's Skunk Works facility in Palmdale, Calif.

After investing about $1 billion, NASA canceled the X-33 Venture Star program last March because of technical problems and cost concerns.

Yucca law firm had ties to nuclear industry

LAS VEGAS (AP) — The law firm counseling the Energy Department on how to open a nuclear waste dump at Yucca Mountain was also taking money from the nuclear power industry to assure the site was approved.

Critics say the revelation casts doubt on the quality of legal and technical work that cost the government $4.5 billion, The New York Times reported Saturday. "You could make a case that every piece of data since 1952 is tainted," said Robert R. Loux, head of the Nevada Nuclear Projects Office, a state agency created to oppose the repository 90 miles northwest of Las Vegas.

The law firm, Winston and Strawn, was paid by the Energy Department and one of its contractors while simultaneously lobbying Congress on behalf of the nuclear power industry.

"Of course it's a conflict. What would happen if, when I was practicing law, somebody came to me and had a problem and I took money from them, and somebody else gave me money to sue them?" said Nevada Sen. Harry Reid, a Democrat. Winston and Strawn lawyers did not return the newspaper's calls for comment. An Energy Department spokesman said there was no conflict of interest. "We found them eminently qualified," Jill Schroeder said.

Schroeder said the lawyers helped the department decide if Yucca Mountain could be licensed to handle high level nuclear waste. The site would accept waste from the Idaho National Engineering and Environmental Laboratory, and other facilities. A decision on whether to open the site is to be made by the end of the year.

OXYDRENE™

(Crenulin-RCC™) Deep Tissue Oxygenator

Who needs Oxydrene™? America's Most Sought-After New Supplement.

Anyone Who Breathes!

Since its introduction into the U.S. market, Oxydrene™ is fast becoming the favorite among builders who want to maximize muscle growth, baby boomers who fear slowing down, dieters who want to speed up fat loss, as well as Vagiro™ users and their partners who have discovered that stamina and endurance are the key to total fulfillment. How can all these diverse groups find satisfaction in the same Oxydrene™ formula? The answer lies in Oxydrene's clinically proven ability to increase oxygen saturation of blood and tissue. Oxydrene™ helps provide the cellular oxygen required to reduce muscle exhaustion, accelerate recovery, and delay fatigue associated with stamina and endurance. In other words, Oxydrene™ provides you the power to keep going.

What can you expect from increased oxygen saturation?

- WILL be able to do more reps and lift more weight in muscle mass
- VAGIRO™ USERS (and THEIR PARTNERS) WILL see an increase in staying power and sexual fulfillment
- DIETERS AND FITNESS ENTHUSIASTS WILL increase stamina and experience more rapid fat loss
- BABY BOOMERS WILL regain that youthful bounce in their step.
- SKIERS, CLIMBERS, AND HIGH-ALTITUDE VACATIONERS WILL perform at their peak without altitude adjustment
- PROFESSIONAL MEN AND WOMEN WILL feel more powerful, independent, and secure on the job as Oxydrene™ gives you the competitive edge.
- BODYBUILDERS! The instant muscle runs out of oxygen, your workout becomes a painful exercise in futility. Oxydrene™ increases the deep-tissue oxygen required to maximize muscle growth, reduce recovery time, and speed up the loss of excess body fat. Oxydrene™ will not cause genital shrinkage in men, will not cause increased facial hair growth or masculinization in women, and will not result in competitive equalization.
- Dieters and Health/Fitness Enthusiasts! Oxydrene™ provides your body the blood and tissue oxygen saturation it needs to make any fat-burning diet or exercise program work efficiently. Not only does Oxydrene™ help your body attain optimal body fat reduction, but if you've ever been embarrassed because you couldn't keep up with the rest of the aerobics class (or that blonde on the Stairmaster) right next to you, Oxydrene™ also provides oxygen required to maintain the energy, stamina, and confidence you need to keep up. Put Oxydrene™ to the test for 30 days. You WILL NEVER be embarrassed again!
- Baby Boomers! Looking old and feeling tired will do nothing to improve your life or career. And if you're a "boomster," you can bet

FBI traitor helped search for subversives

Los Angeles Times

At the same time he was selling U.S. secrets to the Soviet Union, former FBI special agent Robert Philip Hansen was a key supervisor in a 1980s domestic-spying program questioning the loyalty of U.S. citizens and monitoring their activities, newly obtained FBI documents show.

In this program, federal agents filed reports on teachers, clerics and political activists who primarily were affiliated with liberal causes. FBI domestic spy operations under the Reagan and first Bush administrations came to light a decade ago, prompting congressional rebukes. But the role — and historical irony — of confessed traitor Hansen has not been reported before. The documents also offer some of the richest information to date about FBI domestic surveillance during the 1980s.

Hansen's initials appear on numerous files among 2,815 pages of formerly classified documents recently obtained under a federal Freedom of Information Act request submitted nearly 15 years ago. Former co-workers confirmed his handwriting.

"It's astonishing that the very guy who was going after dissenters was in fact working for the Soviets," said Michael Ramer, vice president of the New York-based Center for Constitutional Rights, a left-leaning political group that has been monitored by the FBI in the past. The program, which lasted for more than a decade, monitored peace and anti-nuclear activists and other groups that the White House worried could be manipulated by Soviet propaganda. Its stated goal was to uncover Soviet attempts at altering U.S. policy by influencing targeted groups.

WASHINGTON — They interrogated her for up to 12 hours at a time under the glare of what looked like a 300-watt bulb, she said. They threatened to jail her for life and told her that if prosecutors "want to find you guilty, you are guilty." Every day, they fed her cabbage and potato stew.

A day after her return to her McLean, Va., home, researcher Gao Zhan Friday reflected on the five months she spent in Chinese detention centers, missing her family and wondering how her academic research had turned her into a spy in the eyes of her native land.

Gao Zhan was also convicted of espionage. She said she was not harmed.

cles about Taiwan and its relations with the mainland that she gave to another colleague, a Chinese-born American business professor, Li Shaomin, who was also convicted of espionage. She said she was not harmed physically, but was frequently fed misinformation about her family and about her case.

Gao said she was allowed to watch two hours of television a night, including a 30-minute state news broadcast that she was required to view in silence, seated at attention.

Throughout her detention, she said, she thought of what she would say to her husband when she saw him again. Yet when his plane touched down Thursday in the Detroit airport, the intimate words of reunion she rehearsed during 166 days and nights of isolation failed her.

"I was so happy," she said. "I jumped to his shoulders. I was speechless. I just wanted to be with him."

Andrew was waiting for her at Dulles International Airport. "When I saw my son again I swore I would never ever let any government, any force or any person take him away from me again."

Scandals shine light on interns

WASHINGTON (AP) — Outside the nation's capital, the words "Washington interns" bring to mind the smiling faces of two young women: Chandra Levy and Monica Lewinsky.

Their images obscure the fact that the city teems with an estimated 20,000 young people who come to Washington each year to learn about government and share corridors with the powerful.

The cases of Levy, the missing intern who told relatives she had an affair with President Clinton, and Lewinsky, who had trysts with President Clinton, have highlighted this little-known subculture.

Access is part of the allure for these teen-agers and 20-somethings.

"The prime minister of Israel, Ariel Sharon, was in the office for dessert and chats with Mr. Gephardt. Is that not the coolest thing ever?" Adelle La Rue, a congressional intern this spring for House Minority Leader Richard Gephardt, wrote in a journal, which was an internship requirement.

Interns are Washington's worker bees.

They toil long hours — most without pay — on Capitol Hill, as well as at associations, nonprofit groups, federal agencies, such as the U.S. Bureau of Prisons where Levy worked, and the White House, where Lewinsky met Clinton when she delivered pizza to the president.

They make phone calls to constituents, take notes at congressional hearings and write summaries for the boss.

They set up meeting rooms, run errands to the Library of Congress, handle mail, feed the paper shredder and give tours of the Capitol.

The majority of interns earn nothing at all or receive just $100 to $200 a week. A few receive the equivalent of tuition for a college term plus reimbursements for housing and transportation expenses.

After hours, they hit city nightspots. "I had a terrific weekend," Johnathan Edward Luckey, an intern last summer for Rep. Juanita Millender-McDonald, D-Calif., wrote in his journal. "About 20 of us went out to a few clubs near our apartments. There we danced to some salsa and hip-hop music."

The Washington Center, an independent nonprofit organization that helps place interns, instructs them to tell their supervisors when they are leaving town for 24 hours. It also tells interns to immediately report sexual harassment, or any unwanted advances.

From toaster to lawsuit: The case of the flaming Pop-Tart

Knight Ridder News Service

PHILADELPHIA - The next burning issue in the courtroom of America may be a breakfast food left in the toaster too long.

A New Jersey couple is suing the Kellogg Co. for $100,000 over a house fire they say was caused by a flaming Pop-Tart.

Brenda J. Hurff put a cherry Pop-Tart in the toaster and then left the house to drive her children to preschool, according to the Hurffs' attorney, Mauro C. Casci. The lawsuit was filed last week.

When she returned 10 to 20 minutes later, smoke was pouring from the house and firefighters were on the scene, according to Casci.

"She had put it in the toaster and apparently forgot about it," Casci said. "I never thought a Pop-Tart could turn into a blowtorch."

Asked whether the preserved-filled pastry was stuck in the toaster, Casci said Friday, "who knows?"

The suit also names Black & Decker, the maker of the pop-up toaster. A company spokeswoman said there would be no comment until this week.

Dick Lovell, a spokesman for the Battle Creek, Mich., cereal maker, would not comment on the case except to say: "Pop-Tarts are safe and do not cause fires."

Fire Chief John Hoffman said the cause of the July 11, 2000, fire was listed as "unattended food." The fire caused $100,000 in damage, Hoffman said.

Pop-Tarts have a caution advisory on the box, warning customers not to "leave the toaster appliance unattended due to possible risk of fire."

The pastries have been the subject of a lawsuit before.

In 1995, Kellogg's paid $2,400 to a Springfield, Ohio, man who claimed that a fire started from a Pop-Tart had damaged his home.

At the time, the man's lawyer said he was considering calling as a witness Dave Barry, the syndicated humor columnist, who wrote in 1993 that he was able to ignite a pair of strawberry Pop-Tarts by putting them in a toaster and holding the lever down for about six minutes.

Hoffmann said that it didn't surprise him that a flaming Pop-Tart may have caused a fire.

"Go get a Pop-Tart and try it yourself," Hoffmann said. "Just do it safely."

Bush makes plans to rev up agenda

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON - President Bush, whose domestic agenda has largely stalled on Capitol Hill, plans to try to recapture the initiative this fall by putting more emphasis on the presidential role of moral leader with a series of executive actions and legislative proposals designed to foster community spirit and family values, administration officials said Saturday.

White House planning documents call for Bush to play down issues geared toward conservatives that dominated his first six months in office. Instead, the documents say, the president will stress themes that "unite Americans by focusing on children, quality of life and universally appreciated values."

The shift comes in the face of a spate of legislative setbacks in which Congress - which last spring approved Bush's tax-cut plan with extraordinary speed - has sought to reverse many of his environmental policies, delayed action on his education and religious charities proposals, and resisted his appeals to pass a patients' rights bill that he could sign.

It illustrates the apparent recognition by the White House that, with the "Senate" in Democratic hands and the House no longer a reliable ally, the president needs to build a record of accomplishment by pursuing policies that appeal directly to the American people and do not necessarily require congressional approval. The strategy echoes the one employed by President Bill Clinton after Republicans won control of Congress in 1994, when Clinton turned to "small-bore" issues such as school uniforms and school safety to regain his footing.

Bush is "considering" proposals to help provide e-mail services to link grandparents and grandchildren, add citizenship to the curriculum in schools, increase community use of the Internet, encourage news organizations to "increase reporting of good news," and promote movies that do not further racial stereotypes. The plan, called Communities of Character, also would have Bush address issues such as adoption, teen pregnancy, truancy, drugs, school safety, affordable housing, mental illness, gang prevention and prison misdeeds.

"There is potential for Communities of Character to be a four-year project for the White House that helps define the presidency," one document says. "There seems to be a consensus that a renewal of shared values in this country is needed."

That's right. Our low rates for home equity loans have fallen even lower. How great is that? Plus you'll get flexible terms and an affordable payment plan. To find out how easy it is to get a quick decision on a Wells Fargo® Home Equity loan, stop by and talk to a Wells Fargo banker today!

© 2001 Wells Fargo Banks. Members FDIC. 7.50% Annual Percentage Rate (APR) is as of 7/9/01 and is based on a loan amount of $10,000-$500,000, a 10-year term, 80% maximum combined loan to value and automatic payment from a Wells Fargo Advantage Checking, Plus, PMA or Membership checking account. A 10-year loan of $10,000 at 7.50% APR would be payable in 120 monthly installments of $1,187.71 each. Rates subject to change without notice and only in Wells Fargo stores, not available on the Internet. This advertised rate is a limited time offer from July 9 through August 18, 2001. Existing Wells Fargo Home Equity customers can refinance if total borrowed amount is increased by $10,000.

Former Gooding woman's hostel offers European flavor

The Associated Press

BOISE — A trip to Europe often is how Americans, especially the younger ones, first come to know the fun, friendships and affordability of staying in a hostel.

"That's the way most Americans learn they exist," said Elsa Freeman, whose year-old Hostel Boise became affiliated with the global network of Hostelling-International in January.

American hostels offer the same advantages as their European counterparts. They aren't fancy — rooms start at about $10 to $15 per night — but that's not the point. Hostels are about meeting people, being self-sufficient and broadening one's horizons.

Freeman moved to Nampa five years ago from Gooding, where she ran a bed and breakfast and offered a couple of hostel-style rooms.

When she and her husband, Lawrence, bought the Nampa prop-

Elsa Freeman opened Hostel Boise near the Idaho Center in Nampa. The hostel is an older three-bedroom, ranch-style home with views of the Boise Foothills.

erty, it was a run-down repo whose interior required extensive repairs. They did much of the work themselves, and, now that it's finished, her husband intends to go back to being retired, while Freeman, who isn't interested in retirement, runs the hostel. At Hostel Boise, an older, three-bedroom ranch-style home on the rural outskirts of Nampa, travelers become acquainted while sharing dormitory-style sleeping rooms and preparing their own meals in the common kitchen area. Guests can play the piano and sing — there's no television — in the living room. From the covered patio outside, they can enjoy views of the Boise Foothills.

"I wanted a quiet, serene place where people could relax," Freeman said. "Socializing is a big part of it."

On a recent evening at Hostel Boise, Cindy Stanko, 31, of Medford, N.J., shared the kitchen table with two fellow travelers and exchanged information.

"We all had our maps out, talking about different things, like which way to go," said Stanko, who is taking a few months off to see the country by herself.

"Hostels are always in a great location that you can't usually afford to stay in otherwise," she said. "It's a nice alternative to just locking yourself up in a hotel room."

Stanko learned about hostels from her sister, who stayed in them in Europe.

"I think they're very underutilized in this country," she said.

Hostel Boise has two dormitory-style sleeping rooms, one for men and one for women. Each is simply furnished with bunk beds for four people. The third bedroom is a private room for couples and families. Bathrooms are shared.

Many of Freeman's guests are foreigners already accustomed to hostel-style traveling. Pins stuck in a large world map by the front door show she already has had guests from as far away as New Zealand, Japan, Indonesia, Kuwait and Russia.

"We can do that."

It's not something you get used to hearing in a lot of banks these days. That is, unless you happen to bank at Zions. That's because unlike a lot of other places, our employees have the power to take personal responsibility for your accounts—right there in the branch. So if you have a question, a problem, or a situation with special circumstances, they can handle it for you. Without passing you off to someone else in another branch, or another state.

Personal service. It's what makes Zions a different kind of bank. And it's our commitment to you. If your bank isn't making that same commitment, maybe it's time you give us a closer look. Just call your local Zions Branch, and let us show you there really is a difference.

At Senate helm, South Dakotan shows he's prepared for a fight

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Just six weeks after assuming power, Senate Majority Leader Thomas A. Daschle's aggressive opposition to the White House — on patients' rights, energy, and the defense — has put to rest any doubts that he may have existed in the GOP about whether he has the stomach for a fight.

Predictably, some of his Republican colleagues are starting to get steamed.

While praising Daschle's organizational and political skills, some Republican lawmakers and strategists have begun to suggest that the low-key career politician from Aberdeen, S.D., is falling into the trap of excessive partisanship and, in doing so, undermining the edges of "fairness" in dealing with the minority.

They say that in choosing to aggressively pursue Democratic priorities in the face of presidential veto threats, such as the managed care bill that passed the Senate last month, Daschle, 53, is proving himself less interested in governing than in positioning himself, or at least his party, for a presidential run in 2004.

Daschle's sharp criticism of President Bush's foreign policy while Bush was en route to Europe last week, they say, shows a similar predilection for political gamesmanship.

"He looks to me like a guy who's running for president," said Republican pollster Robert Teeter. "If you think you're going to run for president ... you position yourself at the extremes, because those are the people who go to the primaries."

Democratizing the opposition — conservative talk-show host Rush Limbaugh recently compared Daschle to Satan — is a time-honored tradition in politics. In fact, Democrats often accused Daschle's Republican predecessor, Sen. Trent Lott, Miss., of being overly partisan in the way he ran the Senate.

Whatever the merits of the GOP charges against Daschle, they underscore a central challenge for the Democratic leader: how to effectively promote a Democratic agenda without being perceived as obstructionist and more concerned with scoring points than getting things done.

"We are absolutely determined not to get into payback and not to get into the kinds of political exchanges that occurred all too often in past Congresses," Daschle told reporters Wednesday.

Since taking the majority leader's job, Daschle has met three times with Bush — once over chicken enchiladas at the White House in the company of Daschle's wife, Linda — and has gone out of his way to praise the president's personal and political skills.

Notwithstanding their frustration over losing control of the Senate last month, many of Daschle's Republican colleagues like him personally and admire his abilities as a leader. Thus far, the South Dakota Democrat has prevailed in a key organizational dispute over the handling of judicial nominees, kept the Senate on a rigorous schedule — albeit one that has slipped a bit lately — and generally avoided the kind of open and bitter partisan warfare that often characterized the last Congress.

Democrats are understandably delighted by Daschle's early performance. "I would give him an A-plus," said Sen. Patty Murray, Wash., who chairs the Senate's Democratic campaign organization. "He's done such a good job of trying to accommodate every one and in the process has moved an agenda forward."

Thursday, Daschle won his first filibuster battle with the GOP when a Republican joined Democrats in voting to end delaying tactics over proposed restrictions on Mexican trucks entering the United States under the North American Free Trade Agreement.

"As minority leader he clearly demonstrated his abilities and I think he's demonstrating his abilities as majority leader," Sen. Larry E. Craig, Idaho, who chairs the Republican Policy Committee, said earlier this week. Daschle, he added, is "doing exactly what he ought to do, and that's push very, very aggressively to get the work of the Senate done."

Daschle, who routinely declines to comment about whether he harbors presidential ambitions, is keenly aware that his job requires a delicate balancing act, according to associates. In addition to advancing Democratic goals, one said, "there is also pressure to ... make the Senate work, (to) pass the appropriations bills to show that he — and by exten-

tion the Democratic Party — can govern." Daschle's early tenure as a majority leader has not been free from stumble. Racing to finish patients' rights legislation before the July 4 recess, for example, the usually even-tempered Daschle lost his cool and implied that a colleague, Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, was more interested in going fishing than in finishing the work of the Senate.

Stevens was furious; Daschle promptly apologized.

More recently, Daschle's criticism of Bush's foreign policy as the president embarked on his trip to Europe opened him up to withering attacks from Republicans — "disgraceful," said Republican National Committee Chairman James S. Gilmore III — who accused him of breaking the unwritten rule against criticizing a president while he is abroad. Daschle acknowledged an error in timing but not in the substance of his remarks (meanwhile, his staff rounded up examples of Republican attacks on President Clinton while Clinton was overseas).

Rancor over hospital endangers its future

The latest attempt to secure the future of Magic Valley Regional Medical Center is moving briskly. But is it moving toward a dead end?

That question should worry Twin Falls County officials, hospital leaders — and the county taxpayers who own the hospital.

Debate over the hospital's future has become so contentious that reaching any decision may be difficult.

That's a perilous situation — because, if various groups of leaders are to be believed, the hospital must continue operating as it has.

As of 2001, our county hospital is a potent and admirable institution. It dominates local health care, providing high-quality treatment to patients throughout the valley.

But officials say the new alliance of Boise's St. Alphonsus Regional Medical Center with two other local hospitals poses daunting challenges.

The fear is, a traditional county-owned hospital is too cumbersome to thrive in a marketplace that rewards agility. If nimbler competitors strip away profitable market sectors, Magic Valley Regional gradually may become a seedy, second-rate hospital, saddled with charity cases and shunned by anyone who can afford better.

That's the fear. We're not completely convinced it's accurate. But significantly, it seems to be the one point which hospital leaders and county officials agree about. Everything else is fodder for a political dogfight.

The trouble goes beyond simple disagreement. If you talk to the participants, you find that they feel personally wounded.

Members of the county Hospital Board, the volunteer appointees who oversee Magic Valley Regional's operations, had thought they were on track to turn the hospital into a community-based nonprofit organization. They were betrayed when county commissioners unexpectedly began exploring other options.

Commissioners feel they've been unfairly characterized as uninformed meddlers. We understand one local doctor called them "turncoats" to their faces. That's not a good way to address elected officials.

The hurt feelings and mistrust on this issue could prove costly. Unless the warring factions reach some kind of détente, citizens may simply tune out the discussion, reject all proposals, and let the hospital drift aimlessly toward its fate.

For now, the three county commissioners and the county prosecutor seem to have the upper hand. They've blocked the plans of hospital leaders, and a new advisory committee is moving toward a call for lease proposals.

But mustering community support for a lease will be difficult if hospital leaders, physicians and hospital employees oppose it.

In our view, the solution to all of this is obvious. Obvious, but not easy.

First, all parties need to recognize the legitimacy of one another's efforts. They're all people of good will:

- The county commissioners are working hard at their legal obligation to be responsible stewards of the county's biggest asset.

- Hospital Board members are donating their time and their good names to oversee a vast and complicated institution.

- Hospital executives, employees and physicians are devoted to ensuring high-quality medical care for the community, now and in the future.

Second, hospital leaders need to recognize that the county commission is boss. Agree or disagree, the commissioners are responsible to the taxpayers. Hospital leaders owe them allegiance and cooperation.

Finally, all parties need to work toward a consensus on the hospital's future. Whatever solution emerges won't be everyone's first choice. It won't move forward unless peoples set egos aside, forgive past insults, and put the community's interests first.

The battle over the hospital's future could prove costly, if it causes citizens to tune out the discussion and reject all options.

The paradox of American values

The largest city in the Granite State is blessedly free of presidential candidates this summer, but it is not devoid of controversy. A rock concert that drew an estimated 10,000 young people to a city park last Sunday night produced more than 80 complaints to police and touched off what Mayor Robert Baines told me was for him an unprecedented furor.

As late as Thursday, the Page 1 headline in the Union Leader, New Hampshire's biggest paper, read, "Concert War Rages." A day earlier, when I came to town to do some totally unrelated political reporting, the paper ran two separate editorials denouncing the event.

Publisher Joseph McQuaid declared on Page 1, "Manchester should do whatever it takes to put a quick and decisive end to the kind of filth that masqueraded as a 'music concert' at Singer Family Park last Sunday evening." On the editorial page, editor Bernadette Malone Connolly agreed that "what happened at Singer Family Park on Sunday cannot happen again."

"Manchester residents," she wrote, "should not have to hear the 'F-word' repeated throughout the evening over a rock band's music, nor should they have to put up with young girls ripping off their shirts and bras and couples indulging in bedroom activities out in the open."

But when I asked Mayor Baines if he was considering shutting down the concerts, he said, "Absolutely not. I'm planning to be there with my daughter at one of the September dates." The mayor said, "I'm trying to work with the promoters" to adjust the sound system, so people with nearby homes along the river are protected. "The series is very good for the community." The promoters of the event sounded unrepentant. Bud Comstock, president of the company that booked the heavy metal bands called Slipknot, Disturbed and Mudvayne, was quoted by the Union Hall to keep the concerts going.

This is just a small skirmish in the culture wars that increasingly dominate our politics. Look at the controversies in Congress, the courts and the White House in just the last few weeks over flag burning, school prayer and stem cell research.

It is hard to figure out what Americans really want their government to do about such issues.

children's television viewing, is used so rarely it might as well not exist.

Five years ago, when the law was passed requiring this electronic censoring device to be included in all new TV sets, it was asserted that families were desperate to protect youngsters from violent or suggestive shows. Guess what? The survey of 800 families found that 40 percent of the parents have bought TVs recently enough that they include V-chips. But half of them didn't even know the V-chips were there. And of those who did, barely one-third said they had ever used them.

Those same parents still claimed to be very concerned about sex and mayhem on the tube, the survey found. So go figure.

Yet another case. In the current issue of the American Prospect magazine, California journalist Peter Schrag argues that the federal government is "out of sync with voters" in pursuing the so-called war on drugs. He says that the success of all but one of 15 ballot initiatives allowing medical use of marijuana or decriminalizing drug possession and diverting users into treatment programs demonstrates that politicians who promise to "get tough" on drugs just don't get it.

And he refuses to be consistent as either the manliness or the civility. Drugs and sex and violence are bad things — to be denounced. But so we really want to dose them down? As Mayor Baines says, "Absolutely not." Condone them? "Absolutely not."

The Pentagon fights off reform

Seven months ago, Donald H. Rumsfeld gave his second tour as Defense secretary with what seemed like a presidential mandate for change.

During the campaign, George W. Bush assailed Clinton and the members of the Pentagon and called for a transformation of the armed forces to prepare them for future challenges.

Rumsfeld's appointment seemed like a no-brainer. He was a respected manager who had served four terms in the Pentagon and then been ambassador to NATO, White House chief of staff and Defense secretary in the Ford administration. After that, he successfully led several large tech companies.

Rumsfeld lost little time in challenging Pentagon orthodoxy, setting up a series of secretive review panels from which uniformed personnel were largely excluded. He said he wanted to wrest control of the Pentagon away from Congress, close excess bases, out-source support services and make a break with Cold War thinking. It sounded like exactly what Bush wanted.

But then things started to go sour. Rumsfeld's lengthy strategic review produced few new ideas. The White House didn't give him the funding increase he wanted. Congress complained about lack of consultation. Senior military leaders began anonymously bad-mouthing him. Today, only a few pages from his office on the Pentagon's power corridor, career civil servants are taking bets on how soon he'll leave.

LOREN B. THOMPSON

Rumsfeld's proposal to retire one-third of the Air Force's chronically deficient B-1 bombers was opposed by senators with B-1 bases in their states. Multiply this entrenched resistance and you see the task Rumsfeld faces in bringing change to the Pentagon.

with tax cuts as his top legislative priority. With Congress fencing off entitlement surpluses and a cooling economy reducing tax receipts, little was left for military increases.

When Rumsfeld did get his team in place, it proved amazingly maladroit at dealing with Congress and the military bureaucracy. Because the changes Rumsfeld wanted threatened entrenched interests, finesse was required. Instead, much of what the team said and did was gratuitously offensive to its most important constituents.

Finally, Rumsfeld and other Bush defense advisers underestimated their predecessors. They thought the decay of the military reflected Clinton administration indifference, when in fact it resulted from the same political constraints now plaguing Rumsfeld's team.

The administration's military goals are the right ones. The Pentagon needs to make a break with Cold War ortho-doxy. It needs to spend a lot more on modernizing aging aircraft, fixing a broken shipbuilding program and realizing the benefits of the information revolution. The only way of affording these investments is to save money in the areas Rumsfeld targets for cuts.

But the Clinton team also saw the need for change. What the Clinton team never figured out was how to overcome opposition to change. Now Rumsfeld faces the same challenge.

Consider the case of long-range bombers. Every study the Pentagon does of future air power finds the nation needs more stealthy bombers that can strike distant targets without being dependent on overseas bases. But proposals to build more stealthy B-2s in the Clinton years were opposed, by an Air Force dominated by fighter pilots. And Rumsfeld's proposal to retire one-third of the Air Force's chronically deficient B-1 bombers was opposed by senators with B-1 bases in their states.

Multiply this entrenched resistance and you see the task Rumsfeld faces in bringing change to the Pentagon. Every wrong-union weapon, redundant job and superfluous base has determined defenders.

So Rumsfeld's reformation would probably be moving slowly even if his first months had gone flawlessly. His mistakes have underscored the difficulty of changing a powerful institution with deep political roots.

In the absence of fast threats or huge surpluses, the Pentagon is going to change very slowly and not necessarily in ways that policymakers might prefer.

ISDA is wrong department for job

Following are some statements of facts to which I have attached questions.

Fact: Our Legislature (after heavy lobbying by the dairy industry) saw in its infinite wisdom that the responsibility of monitoring and solving dairy odor problems to the Idaho Department of Agriculture effective July 1, 2001. ISDA was and is responsible for the final approval of all proposed dairy operations.

Question: Is the ISDA likely to assess any penalties, etc., against any operation which it previously approved?

Fact: The Department of Environment and Quality was doing a fantastic job of monitoring dairy odors and concomitant hydrogen sulfide gas scientifically and recording the same. DEQ had 24-hour answering service by live persons for all dairy odor problems and promptly followed up all concerns. It was not until July 19 that ISDA made public a WATTS number for those persons wishing to report dairy odor problems. This number is answered between the hours of 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. or hours, you must leave a message with an answering machine. A representative of ISDA has stated that ISDA has received no complaints, so the problems must be solved. Not true.

Question: Is ISDA uncaring about the hundreds of citizens negatively impacted by horrendous dairy lagoon odors and noxious gases?

Fact: ISDA receives $2.50 per cow annually from dairy owners. Now ISDA is designated to solve all dairy odor problems?

Question: Will ISDA bite the hand that feeds it?

action will be taken."

Question: In this time of water shortages, should unauthorized water usage be permitted, i.e., is such usage fair to all holders of water rights?

Fact: ISDA is considering (as an acceptable agricultural practice) the composting of animal or cow carcasses with straw and manure.

Question: Do you want the 88 dairies in Twin Falls County composting their dead cows?

If you have questions regarding any of the above facts, please call your local senators, representatives, Pat Takasugi of ISDA and Greg Kemphorne of HELEN McCRAKEN Filer.

Marvel builds hypocrisy

I would like to highly commend the member of your editorial board who wrote the editorial of July 17 titled "Marvel's complaints about ranchers are mighty shallow." This article was very perceptive and to the point, bringing out how untruthful some of these environmental crusaders can be.

Being an architect, the hypocrisy of Mr. Marvel's crusade is that he is a part of the construction industry that has destroyed the original pristine peace and beauty of our upper valleys. In my opinion, building and then building these huge homes, which are little more than monuments to man's vanity, is a criminal act against nature.

Mexican villagers keep quiet about lynching

Knight Ridder News Service

MAGDALENA PETIACALCO, Mexico - Life seemed normal July 20 in this village of about 3,000, except that few residents wanted to talk much.

On Wednesday evening half the town watched as 100 people beat to death a man who tried to steal the jewels from the venerated statue of St. Mary Magdalene in the town's 18th century church. Two alleged accomplices got away.

For about 2.5 hours residents blocked police from entering and the mob ignored pleas for mercy by the village administrator and the priest.

The event has captured this nation's attention. Expectations are that no one will ever be charged, since the people of Magdalena Petiocalco aren't talking about what happened.

"Our traditions are important to us," said Tomas Mendosa, one of several men responsible for caring for the church and its contents. "Our saints, our church are important to us, and they cannot be violated. We're really strong with that."

Mob violence still occurs from time to time in isolated villages in Mexico, especially in cases of child rape and church desecration. But Magdalena Petiocalco is only about 20 miles south of Mexico's National Palace, in a partly rural southern corner of the federal district that contains Mexico City, with its seven subway lines, a glittering opera house and more legitimate theaters than New York City.

"It's a conflict between two worlds," said Gilberto Lopez y Rivas, the elected chief administrator for the Tlalpan subdivision that contains the town. "A young man who was lynched had crossed a line he didn't know was there."

Magdalena Petiocalco is one of eight towns within Tlalpan that predate the arrival of the Spanish in the 16th century. Most residents are farmers and small shopkeepers. Many still keep a few chickens, a pig or two, some sheep.

"For the people from here from their religious point of view, the lynching was justified, because they were defending their faith," said Dr. Florentina San Pedro Cardenas, who comes here each day to work as a dentist. "I myself don't think it was so different from trying to rob a bank or a supermarket, but even the young people here think in the old ways. I see even pregnant women with college degrees come in here with safety pins on their bellies, to keep evil spirits from harming the fetus." The calm last Friday belied the earlier dramatic events.

"Maybe these three guys who went into the church planned the theft before, and maybe they had just come to the festival for the town's patron saint and got drunk," said Lopez y Rivas. "The fact is that they went in the church on the town's square and started to take the jewelry, the necklace off the statue of the saint."

"A boy saw them and gave the general alarm, and they began to ring the bells and call all the people. In about ten minutes you had about 1,500 people there, and they began beating this guy," Lopez y Rivas said.

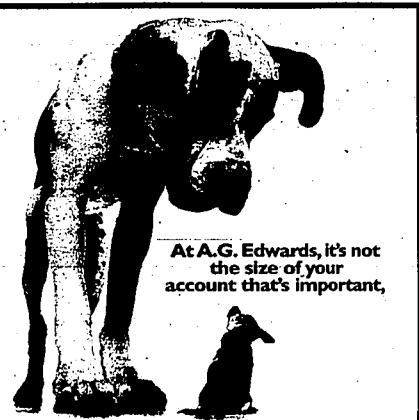

Lopez y Rivas said that a group took the man - later identified as Carlos Pacheco Beltran, 22, who was from a town a few miles away - to the government office across the street, where an official, known as the sub-delegate, urged them to deliver the man to the authorities. They refused.

"Along the way, there were maybe 100 people, who beat him the whole distance of about 75 yards," Lopez y Rivas said. "The sub-delegate called the police, but the town's people wouldn't let them in."

The town's priest also urged the mob to release the man. Again, they refused, Lopez y Rivas said.

Peru returns to democracy with new president

LIMA, Peru (AP) - Alejandro Toledo, Peru's first freely elected president of Indian descent, was sworn into office Saturday, promising to remain true to his roots and govern for the nation's poor.

Toledo's assumption of the presidency seals the former shoeshine boy's remarkable rise and completes Peru's return to democracy after a decade of authoritarian rule by disgraced ex-President Alberto Fujimori.

"My government will never again permit the dignity of the poor to be stolen through political manipulation," Toledo told the packed Congress, with its elegant mahogany balconies, grand arches and huge stained-glass ceiling. Lawmakers, judges, ministers and more than two dozen foreign dignitaries, including 11 Latin American presidents, Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres and U.S. Trade Representative Robert Zoellick, cheered when he took the oath of office "for the poor of Peru."

He accepted the red-and-white sash relinquished by Interim President Valentín Paniagua, the former head of Congress who assumed the presidency eight months ago after lawmakers voted to remove Fujimori on constitutional grounds of moral unfitness.

An economist who overcame poverty to earn a doctorate from Stanford University, Toledo took office a year after he endured smear campaigns, tear gas and death threats in a battle against Fujimori's autocratic regime. Fujimori fled in November to Japan, his parents' homeland, as corruption scandals involving his ex-intelligence chief, Vladimiro Montesinos, ended his 10-year rule. Japan granted him citizenship.

From Tokyo, in a message on his Web site Saturday, Fujimori defended his legacy. He was initially popular with Peru, grateful to him for taming leftist guerrillas and halting the economic chaos of the 1980s.

"I have the satisfaction of having left a positive inheritance, not the deadly inheritance that had been left for me," Fujimori wrote, referring to a guerrilla campaign when he took office in 1990.

BRIGHT IDEAS

Do you currently own a hot tub or are you considering purchasing one? Keep in mind that a hot tub pump and heater can use more energy per month than almost all other household appliances. To save energy, follow these recommended guidelines found at www.energyideas.org:

- Turn it down! Set the thermostat on the hot tub between 100 and 102 degrees F.
- Turn it off! If you'll be away from home for longer than a week, turn the hot tub thermostat down or off completely.
- Keep it covered! A foam cover with good insulation is essential to keeping the heat inside your hot tub. The cover should fit snugly and be tied or latched whenever the hot tub is not being used.
- Buy energy efficient! Improvements have been made in the design of hot tubs that make them much more energy-efficient than models made just 5 years ago. Replacing your old hot tub with a new model can cut your energy use in half.

The power is yours!

use it wisely

ENERGY NEWS

Good news! Idaho Power residential customers in June used nearly 9 percent less electricity than in June 2000, according to an Idaho Power sales report.

After adjusting for weather and including 8,171 new residential accounts, residential customers used 829,000 megawatt-hours (MWH) of electricity, compared to 884,000 MWH during the same period last year.

The weather-adjusted figure (based on 30-year average weather conditions) indicates that the company's 330,313 residential customers are becoming wiser about their electricity usage and heeding advice from the company's on-going conservation campaign.

Since mid-April, more than 6,000 conservation-oriented radio advertisements have aired, 1,264 television ads have played on stations throughout the company's service territory and hundreds of how-to brochures have been distributed to customers. Web site visitors also have found energy-saving tips at www.idahopower.com.

"We began last spring to reach our customers with a variety of conservation messages," said Idaho Power Advertising Coordinator Bridgett Hanna. "Knowing we were headed for a long hot summer, we have worked to convince people of the value of saving energy, both in terms of dollars saved today and tomorrow. It seems to be working."

Rates also may be affecting the way customers are using electricity, said Idaho Power Vice President for Regulatory Affairs Ric Gale. "June is the first full billing month since the May Power Cost Adjustment. We may be seeing the effect of changes in our prices."

WATT SAVERS

With several energy conservation measures in place and others "in the works," Director of Ada County Operations Dave Logan said he anticipates the county will save $631,500 in energy costs over the next 10 years.

"We've always tried to use energy wisely," said Logan, "but the energy crisis gave us more reason to make sure we are doing the maximum possible to get the most value for taxpayers."

Not long ago, Ada County implemented a five-year energy resource plan, included in the plan were changes to county buildings such as new energy-efficient interior lighting and installation of direct digital controls to regulate the heating and cooling system. These and other building operation and improvements were implemented at the Public Safety building and Jail Complex, Administrative building, new County Courthouse, Barber Park and Western Idaho Fair Expo building.

Logan said county representatives currently are working with many community partners to update the energy resource plan. "We can't get to where we're going without a plan," he said. "It's really important to constantly update, adjust and develop new goals."

Officials detail 'Operation Depth 2'

Milosevic's alleged attempt to erase evidence of atrocities in Kosovo comes to light

PETROVO SELO, Yugoslavia (AP) — On a grassy hill nestled in the shade of thick locust trees, 76 fresh graves contain grisly evidence that Yugoslav and outside investigators say could be used to convict Slobodan Milosevic of crimes against humanity.

Fearing NATO would take Kosovo in 1999 and discover mass graves, Milosevic dispatched teams to dig up the bodies of ethnic Albanians killed by Yugoslav security forces in the rebellious territory and rebury them where they wouldn't be found, a Serbian government minister, a police captain and other investigators sources have told The Associated Press.

Something about the truck especially haunted Djordjevic: One of the two doors on the back was damaged from the inside.

"Someone, or more people, were obviously still alive and were trying to get out," he said.

Toma Filip, Milosevic's lawyer, dismisses talk of a cover-up as "complete nonsense." But Mihajlovic, who heads the police, says: "It's clear this was a case of removing evidence of criminal acts."

Slobodan Milosevic
On trial for war crimes

Milosevic was surrounded by men who formed a tight circle of silence around him.

But authorities in today's Yugoslavia feel no obligation to protect the former president, now behind bars and awaiting trial before the U.N. war crimes tribunal in The Hague, Netherlands. On the contrary, they seem anxious to distance themselves from his regime.

In recent weeks, they have revealed the existence of at least four mass graves in different parts of Serbia — graves that contain the tangled remains of at least 800 victims of Milosevic's brutal 1998 crackdown on ethnic Albanians in Kosovo.

Now, in startling detail, Serbia's new interior minister, Dusan Mihajlovic, and police Capt. Dragan Karleusa, in charge of mass grave investigations, say evidence is mounting that Milosevic ordered a cover-up in an effort to erase evidence of atrocities.

Other high-ranking police officials, interviewed by the AP on condition of anonymity, say Operation Depth 2 existed and was three-pronged: exhume corpses from mass graves in Kosovo and rebury them deep in Serbia proper or dump them in the Danube.

Other bodies in Kosovo by incineration or other means; and move some remains within Kosovo from mass graves to smaller, ordinary graves.

Karleusa says Depth 2 began within days of March 24, 1999, when NATO started its 78-day air war to punish Milosevic for his crack-down on independence-minded ethnic Albanians in Kosovo, a campaign that killed at least 8,000 people.

Karleusa says Milosevic summoned top police and military officers to his White Palace in Belgrade's plush Dedinje district to convey his concerns about his regime's crimes in Kosovo.

Karleusa did not attend the meeting, but since Milosevic's ouster, he and the other police officials say they have reconstructed what happened there.

The officials say that Lt. Gen. Vlastimir Djordjevic, the then-deputy interior minister and no relation to the Danube diver, expressed alarm that "the NATO aggressors" would discover what Serb forces had done to ethnic Albanian civilians.

Milosevic, the officials said, was brisk and to the point: The terrain would have to be cleaned up, and quickly.

The top security brass needed no further explanation. They knew what Milosevic meant: Mass graves in Kosovo containing the remains of ethnic Albanians — and the bodies of those yet to be killed by Serb forces during the coming NATO airstrikes — had to be dug up and taken as far as possible from Kosovo.

That or be destroyed beyond recognition.

More than 4,000 bodies of ethnic Albanians already have been exhumed in Kosovo. More than 3,000 others remain missing, and Mihajlovic, the interior minister, is convinced that Operation Depth 2 explains what happened to them.

"This was a part of Milosevic's heritage, which was considered a state secret," he said. "Now it's coming out in the open, and we'll have to face it fully."

The operation, they say, even had a code name: Depth 2.

Several hundred miles from Kosovo, near the border with Romania, Zivadin Djordjevic picked up the phone. It was April 6, 1999, and the local police were calling the area's best diver with a routine request for help.

Fishermen had reported "a large white box" drifting in the Danube river. Djordjevic, a barrel-chested 56-year-old, donned his wetsuit, plunged into the swirling waters and swam out to the box.

It was a large, white Mercedes freezer-truck with Kosovo-licence plates.

"When I opened the truck, I saw a horrible scene: Tangled bodies started sliding out," he told the AP. "I first saw a half-naked, beautiful, black-haired woman with great white teeth. Then two boys no older than 8 years old. There were at least 50 bodies in the truck."

He said that when he told the police about the bodies, the Interior Ministry in Belgrade ordered the case to be kept a secret. He said he was ordered to keep quiet or his life would be in danger.

Smile, then lace up them shoes and bowl

A buff

DON'T ASK ME Steve Crump

Those of you who have read this column for awhile know that it's long been my quest to crystallize what defines a redneck, which is to say, an Idahoan.

There are so many icons without which Idahoan would be unthinkable - the seed cap, the pickup with blown shocks, French-fry sauce, the chafing dish-sized belt buckle - but none, I think, so indispensable as the bowling shoe.

Simply put, one's willingness to wear bowling shoes - and more particularly to wear shoes worn previously by hundreds of other people - separates us natives from the tourists.

For it's impossible to finesse wearing a bowling shoe; you're either willing to sport two-tone leather with black-and-orange laces and a billiard ball-sized number on the back, or you're not.

And for those who are not, there's not a Stetson big enough to make you an Idahoan.

The bowling shoe embodies the two most salient characteristics of the true Idahoan: amiably and utter unpretentiousness.

"We like our neighbors amenable around here, even if they're not agreeable. That's why you'll find even misanthropes at family reunions and Sunday dinners, packin' a Jell-O salad.

To do less would risk being branded too good for regular people, I call it Indian Hills Syndrome.

When I was a kid growing up in Pocatello, the upwardly mobile congregated in a housing development south of town called Indian Hills. The houses weren't particularly grand, but they were separated from the rest of Pocatello by a mile or so, and more ominously, elevated so that they could look down on the town.

To live in Indian Hills - and worse, to belong to the nearby country club - meant that you were by definition stuck up, aloof and rude. "Real ignorant" - pronounced ignard - was the local expression.

It was a damnation devoutly to be avoided. One year, a fella who lived in Indian Hills - a lawyer - ran for mayor. He finished seventh in a four-candidate field.

For an Indian Hills address meant that the boys down at the VFW immediately suspected that the closest you had come to serving abroad in the Army was Louisiana.

People in Indian Hills didn't wear bowling shoes, and quite frankly, they were smart enough not to try to. Idaho is, of course, a lot more diverse place than it was 40 years ago, but some eternal verities persist - and even folks who own a lot of toys hereabouts go to great lengths not to display them to excess.

That's why they leave the Fifth Wheel parked up at West Magic and, having bought a new pickup, go to the store without washing it. It will sort of blend in with the '76 F-150 that's on blocks in the driveway.

And that's why they spend big money to buy a rusted wagon wheel or a pair of lawn mowers that were professionally landscaped lawns. Back in Pocatello, there was a pricy downtown women's clothing store - Danielle's by name - that catered to women who lived in Indian Hills. They were easy to spot, for they got dressed up - and made up - just to go to the grocery store.

Anyone caught dressed inappropriately in public was dubbed a Danielle, and there's not a compliment. "Mrs. Jones Danielle'd into that church supper like a debutante at a dog wash, and she was so ignard to everybody."

I moved away years ago, but I happened to be in downtown Pocatello last summer and walked past the storefront where Danielle's used to be.

There's a bowling supply shop there now, and in the display window were a pair of pink-and-maroon slippers with lime green laces - 17 dollars, cash money.

Well of course I bought them. Got Green Stamps too.

Hoof trimmer gives pedicures to Holstein ladies

Jim Staal likes to joke that animal blood courses through his veins. That's a good thing for a man who spends his days confined with animals whose weight is measured in thousands of pounds.

"Come on, that's my girl. Easy, sweetheart. Yeah, I know. Nobody's gonna hurt you, I can't help it, girl. Come on, sweetie, behave."

The comforting words flow as he herds a half-ton bovine from a corral into a tiny chute on the side of his truck. The door on the chute clangs shut on the frightened heifer, and a hydraulic arm reaches under the cow to support her. She bellows in protest.

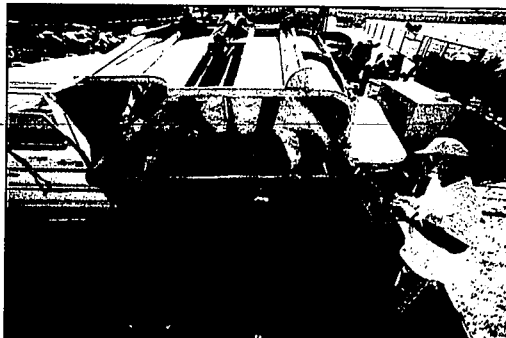

"I always tell people she's ticklish," Staal says. "Everyone always asks, does it hurt the animal? No, but it does frighten her."

"See, cows, they don't get picked up off their feet very often, and they get frightened."

Staal, 52, is a hoof trimmer, administering heavy-duty pedicures to some of the Magic Valley's nearly 200,000 dairy cows.

Every few minutes, the whine of an electric grinder pierces the air, and a stream of chips flies off the hoof of a cow trapped the lift.

Manure-covered hoof chips cover everything for a dozen feet around, including Staal himself, but after 27 years in the business, he doesn't even notice. He's more concerned with not cutting too deeply and injuring the animal.

"I can literally damage her to the point where she'll have to be simply because of the money," Staal says. "I'm older, I'm not really in that much of a hurry anymore. I'm a little more old school, I guess."

Staal's old school began after the oil embargo of 1973. He was working for Southern California Edison at the time and knew his limited seniority wouldn't protect him from being laid off. He decided the business of a local hoof trimmer and has never regretted his decision, even when the cows kick him.

"I get angry and frustrated at them every once in a while. Ninety-nine out of 100 cows will come right in, but it's that one."

But even that one gets a set of comfortable hooves, courtesy of the man with animal blood.

Forest rangers see no end to Rainbows' impact in sight

By Jennifer Sandmann
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS - The drumbeats have faded and the fire has died out, but the end of the Rainbow Family story isn't in sight.

Last week about 20 people remained on volunteer cleanup duty at the Rainbow Family of Living Light gathering site in the Boise National Forest. The counterculture gathering that culminated on July 4 drew nearly 20,000 people to Bear Valley northwest of Boise.

The Bear Valley watershed is home to endangered chinook salmon.

Lowman Forest Ranger Walt Rogers said most gatherers honored the Bear Valley Creek closure.

"I can say fairly confidently that the salmon in Bear Valley Creek were not impacted or harassed," he said.

The Rainbows' choice to gather near the stream areas in some circles turned into a debate over whether the presence of nearly 20,000 people could cause more damage than cattle that graze there.

"To me, there would be less impact from the cows than the people. I think if the cows went in there and did that, people would scream bloody murder," Rogers said.

While the streams were protected and some meadow areas look good, there are other places where use was heavy and fire circles scorched the ground, he said. Cattle, which he said are strictly regulated in the area, won't be allowed back this year for two reasons: The gathering's impact on the land and concern that livestock would be blamed for any damage the gathering might have caused.

The work left for Rainbows who remained on cleanup last week mainly was trash pickup and toilet paper detail, Rogers said. There are many places people didn't use latrines and didn't cover up the toilet paper, he said.

"That probably bothers me right now more than anything," Rogers said.

A media tour of the site will be held in August, he said.

Rogers isn't the only official who expressed frustration. Hal Gross, Boise County's emergency manager, said the cost for handling the Rainbows Please see RAINBOW, Page B7.

This trash heap generated by the Rainbow Family during its July 4 celebration might have had an environmental conscience, but the damage in the wake of the gathering is yet to be fully assessed.

Feds seize cattle from second rancher

RENO, Nev. (AP) — The Bureau of Land Management seized cattle Monday from a second Nevada rancher accused of trespassing livestock on federal land, estimating the move owes the government $300,000 in back grazing fees and fines.

The move drew an angry response from dozens of state's rights activists who dispute federal ownership of the land and plan to stand the clock picking next week at the Fallon livestock yard where many of the estimated 100 impounded cattle are being held.

The bottom line is they stole my cattle and I'm trying to stick up for my property rights," said Ben Colvin, 65, Goldfield, one of the ranchers accused of illegally grazing his herd on BLM land since 1985.

"My family's been in the ranching business since before 1850," he said.

BLM contractors seized 62 head of cattle owned by Colvin's livestock Co. on Thursday, estimating he owes an estimated he owes $70,000 in back fees and fines.

By Saturday afternoon, they had rounded up about 26 head of Jack Vogt's cattle in nearby Lida, about 150 miles northwest of Las Vegas, BLM officials said.

In both cases, the BLM has been trying for more than five years to resolve the disputes short of impoundment, BLM spokeswoman Jo Simpson said. Simpson said Vogt's bill totaled an estimated $300,000.

"This is not our preferred action. We would much prefer the people in trespass get their cows off voluntarily. These things have been going on for a long time," Simpson said Saturday.

The BLM is involved in various stages of talks with at least seven other Nevada ranchers accused of illegally grazing livestock on federal land, Simpson said. The Associated Press.

The BLM plans to sell the impounded cattle at auction if the owners fail to pay the back fees. A deadline for payment has not been set. The agency must provide the owners with five days notice before holding the auction, Simpson said.

Nearly 100 members of the Nevada Committee for Full Statehood who were meeting at a Sparks casino Saturday organized plans for the picketing to begin Monday or Tuesday in Fallon.

"We don't see anywhere in Nevada brand laws that it says they can do this," said Jackie Holmgren, a Mineral County rancher and member of the committee.

By Sunday afternoon, they had rounded up about 26 head of Jack Vogt's cattle in nearby Lida, about

County takes bold step of gathering interests in management plan

The Associated Press

MURPHY - County leaders say now is the time to resolve the future of the Owyhee Canyonlands and the ranching families who live in that vast landscape.

The Owyhee County commissioners Thursday unveiled their plan to bring together ranchers, environmentalists, Indians, recreationists to develop a bill for Congress to preserve both the canyonlands and the local culture and economy.

The "Owyhee Initiative" working group includes former opponents like the Owyhee Cattleman's Association and the Idaho Conservation League.

The initiative represents a surprising shift for Owyhee County, which has been a leader of the county rights movement challenging federal authority over public lands.

It comes after an unsuccessful environmental campaign to persuade President Clinton to preserve 2.7 million acres as a national monument. Ranchers also face loss of public grazing due to environmental lawsuits.

"We believe that it is extremely important that Owyhee County now make the effort to attain a level of certainty that will provide stability for our citizens," commissioners Hal Tolmie and Chris Salovey said in a letter to Sen. Michael Crapo, R-Idaho.

Crapo accepted their request to help them organize the working group and develop legislation.

The commissioners have been meeting with ranchers; the Shoshone-Paiute Tribes and the

The commissioners have been meeting with ranchers, the Shoshone-Paiute Tribes and the Nature Conservancy. They want to protect cultural resources like historic Silver City, wildlife habitat, scenic areas and economic interests, especially grazing.

"We are important to both the economy and culture of Owyhee County," Owyhee Cattleman's Association President Martin Jaca said. "The ranchers know this land, and we know that it can support grazing along with the other uses."

The commission recommended as possible components of the bill creating a science panel; establishing "grass banks, range lands purchased for use by ranchers while adjacent pasture is rested; and designating a national sage grouse research and restoration area."

Conservationists chosen for the panel praised the commissioners for taking a bold step.

"They're putting their necks on the line to put this together, and we need to recognize this," said Craig Gehrke, Wilderness Society regional director.

Commissioners singled out Jon Marvel, executive director of the Western Watersheds Project, as unwelcome.

Lawsuits filed by the Watersheds Project and the Committee for Idaho's High Desert have forced the Bureau of Land Management to order grazing reductions in the area. Marvel has portrayed ranchers as desperadoes who care nothing for the land.

Judge sentences ex-teacher to prison

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — A former North Idaho College music instructor and the conductor of two local symphonies could spend the next decade in prison.

Elmer James Judd pleaded guilty Friday to 10 years in prison Friday for one count of sexual abuse of a minor under 16. He could be eligible for parole in two years. He originally was charged with lewd conduct with a minor.

with a minor and possession of sexually exploitative material.

He pleaded guilty, admitting the sexual encounter with a 14-year-old boy at his home in March. The youth told a school counselor about it, who notified the boy's father.

A courtroom observer said those speaking for Snyder on Friday included former North Idaho College President Bob Bennett, who said Snyder was a good neighbor and had a good ability of making friends.

But the boy's father read a letter into the record, stating the father had considered Snyder a friend and he betrayed them.

Snyder had taught at the college since 1981. He directed its symphony orchestra, and continued in that role when it left the college's umbrella and became the Coeur d'Alene Symphony Orchestra.

Federal agents wrap up check of plane crash

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — A National Transportation Safety Board official said he found no evidence of a structural or engine problem in a light plane that crashed in northern Kootenai County more than two years ago.

Gregg Nemesier said federal investigators wrapped up their examination on Thursday at the scene of the downed plane that crashed on May 28, 1999, in a densely wooded section of the Coeur d'Alene National Forest. The Cessna 152 went down about three miles south-southwest of Solitaire, Saddle in the Horsehaven Airstrip area. A Forest Service employee found it on Tuesday.

Kootenai County Search and Rescue members recovered the bodies of instructor William E. Morratt-of-Coeur-d'Alene and student pilot Timothy E. Morgan.

The Safety Board will determine the cause of the crash, said Nemesier, an air safety investigator.

Richard McClellan, Twin Falls High School Class of 1961, walks away from his Beechcraft Bonanza after making an emergency field landing Friday in Robert Park, Calif. Problems with the plane prevented McClellan, of Penngrove, Calif., and his wife Zoe; also a Twin Falls '61 grad, from making it to Idaho Saturday for their 40th class reunion. He took off from the Petaluma, Calif., airport Friday for a test flight in preparation for Saturday's trip. McClellan said from his home Saturday in Penngrove that he was disappointed he couldn't make the reunion but counted his blessings all the same. "There was no damage to me, and the airplane is repairable," he said.

Strong quake rattles Alaska

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — A strong earthquake was felt for hundreds of miles in Alaska on Friday night, the West Coast Alaska Tsunami Warning Center said.

The quake, with a preliminary magnitude of 6.4, struck at 11:33 p.m. Alaska Daylight Time. It was centered about 70 miles east of King Salmon on the Alaska Peninsula, about 245 miles southwest of Anchorage, center geophysicist Guy Urban said. Its depth was calculated at 25 miles.

The quake jolted residents of Anchorage, Kodiak and other relatively distant cities.

No damage immediately was reported. Urban said. A dispatch at the Anchorage Police communications center said no damage had been reported there, though the quake was sharply felt.

Minidoka County Fair begins Monday

By Dan Fields
Times-News writer

RUPERT—Although temperatures during the Minidoka County Fair will likely be warm, those who perseu this year's 4-H exhibits will experience the winds of change.

For the first time in the fair's history, the exhibits will be housed in the air-conditioned McGregor Center on the north end of the fairground property.

Judy Parkin, the fair board secretary, said the cool air won't be the only plus for the attendees and the participants.

"They do a lot of interviewing and judging," Parkin said. "It's going to be really nice for them."

Joni Bywater, the 4-H program coordinator for Minidoka County, said it will be a nice change not to have to shuffle around between buildings. The 4-H and county extension offices are housed year-round in the McGregor Center.

"We don't have to keep moving everything," Bywater said. "The advantage is, for one thing, the clubs have a lot of space to decorate. It's going to be really nice for the judging on Tuesday morning."

Parkin said another change this year is that the lawn mower races are being moved from Saturday to Monday.

"It's going to be really nice for them," Parkin said. "There's a lot of people building racing lawn mowers. It's getting bigger every year. It's just a fun competition thing to see."

This year's sanctioned rodeo, on Friday and Saturday, will feature a wild cow ride instead of bull poker. The annual 4-H

Agency seeks bankruptcy protection

BOISE (AP) — One of Idaho's leading advertising agencies is seeking bankruptcy protection.

Bill Drake, president of Elgin Snyder Drake, said Friday his company will file for Chapter 11 Bankruptcy protection on Aug. 1. A California client filed bankruptcy last week, leaving Drake's firm with $1.7 million in unpaid bills.

Drake said a series of unexpected events beginning in January of this year led to the bankruptcy decision.

In January, the Boise company went out several national advertising firms to land a major account with On Tour Events of Costa Mesa, Calif. The company, owned by German promoters, planned to launch a 16-city Bavariafest tour.

Drake said the company continued to purchase advertising for the company even after the client's initial payment ran out.

In each city, the event was billed as a 10-day festival with German beer, food and entertainment. But Drake said the Bavariafest didn't live up to its expectations.

"It was little more than a minor beer festival," he said. The event's initial launch in Atlanta in April attracted only about 10 percent of the expected crowd. The next three stops didn't fare any better, and the event closed after two days at its Cleveland stop in June.

With the events failing, Drake said his agency tried to cancel as much advance advertising as possible, but in the end his firm ended up owing $1,738,792.

Repeated efforts to get payment from On Tour Events weren't successful, and Drake said his firm did what it could to absorb the costs.

On May 31, the company laid off 12 employees — a third of its staff. But Drake said it still remained $1.1 million in debt.

When On Tour Events filed Chapter 7 bankruptcy last week, Drake said all hope of recovering the costs evaporated, so Chapter 11 Bankruptcy reorganization was the only option to save the firm.

In retrospect, Drake said his firm was caught off guard and should have asked for the money up front before buying advertising.

"Our company has been very profitable over 20 years, and to have something like this happen is really an embarrassment," he said.

Kemphorne names writer-in-residence

BOISE (AP) — Gov. Dirk Kempthorne has named College of Southern Idaho instructor Jim Irons as the state's writer-in-residence.

Irons teaches technical and creative writing at CSI in Twin Falls. He will serve a three-year term.

Idaho's Writer-in-Residence program began almost twenty years ago and works to enhance literary appreciation in communities throughout the state.

Irons will work with the Idaho Commission on the Arts to schedule 12 readings or workshops over the next three years and arrange for readings of his poetry.

"I'm pleased to be able to select a native Idahoan as our state's writer-in-residence," Kempthorne said. "Jim will represent the literary arts with distinction and he will help our young people and students enthused about writing, poetry and literature. He will enhance literary appreciation for all Idahoans."

Raytheon points to are appropriate. "We have over 700 projects, many as construction sites," Washington Group spokesman Brent Brandon said. "When a crew works till midnight, we feel an obligation to feed our troops. If that means ordering pizza for them, we do it and we think it's totally justified."

He said the car wash payments were part of a contract to maintain a fleet of government vehicles.

Caldwell school gets yearly accolades

CALDWELL (AP) — Albertson College of Idaho has received its perennial praise from experts in education.

The Kaplan/Newseweek College Catalog 2002, based on interviews with guidance counselors nationwide, has identified the liberal arts college in Caldwell as one of the nation's "hidden treasures," deserving of wider attention.

The best schools aren't necessarily the most famous ones," the report said, adding counselors "recommend these terrific schools that deserve more national recognition." Two other Idaho schools also received recognition: the University of Idaho was recommended as offering top value for the money. And Idaho State University was presented as a school that is responsive to students' financial aid needs.

Excerpts from the report will be featured in a Newsweek article next month.

"We're very excited and flattered about the recognition," Albertson College President Kevin Learned said.

Raytheon Co. accuses Boise company of wasting money

BOISE (AP) — While Washington Group International and Raytheon Co. battle over hundreds of millions of dollars in contested debts, they are also arguing over pizzas, car washes and flowers.

Raytheon attorneys are challenging Washington Group's choice of such expenditures as "critical" vendors who need to be paid to keep the Boise company in business during its reorganization.

The successor to one-time international construction giant Morrison Knudsen Co. filed in May for Chapter 11 bankruptcy.

It accused Raytheon Co. of defrauding it in the sale of the Massachusetts-based company's construction division for $53 million and the assumption of an estimated $450 million in liabilities. Washington Group claims liabilities were actually $700 million.

Raytheon denies the fraud charge and in the bankruptcy proceedings, it contends

Washington Group owes it about $900 million.

Upon filing for bankruptcy, Washington Group obtained a court order allowing it to spend up to $170 million to pay vendors whose continued services were critical to keeping the company in business during bankruptcy.

Washington Group reported that as of a week ago, only $10 million to $15 million remained in the fund to pay critical vendors. It says all the payments

Rainbow

"I do not appreciate 20,000 people showing up for something like this without sitting down with the locals to plan," he said.

County officials are obligated to provide for their health and safety, Gross said. The county's population of under 7,000 typically already is stretched over the Fourth of July by between 15,000 and 20,000 Treasure Valley residents who vacation in the area, he said.

Rainbow Family member Barry Adams said from his home in Montana that Rainbows don't ask for officials to be involved and that Rainbows take care of themselves. The U.S. Forest Service wants to stop the gatherings and turns the gatherings into "false emergencies," he said.

"The taxpayers are getting ripped off, but it's not by the Rainbows," he said.

The annual gatherings purposefully are structured without a hierarchy, Adams said. The events first were organized more than 30 years ago by Vietnam veterans who wanted to focus on peace. The original organizers, including himself, had a problem with authority and developed an event where all were treated equally, he said.

The Rainbows and the Forest Service, which spends about $700,000 a year on a team that reacts to Rainbow gatherings, don't appear to have found a resolution to their annual impasse.

Adams said he plans to sue the federal government over its policy requiring a group designee to sign a noncommercial use permit to hold the gatherings in the national forest. It's culturally discriminatory — namely against people who look like hippies — by requiring a group without a leader to designate one, Adams said.

The gathering held each year on the Fourth of July celebrates world peace and includes drumming, dancing and some nudism and drugs.

Boise's alternative fuel use doubles

BOISE (AP) — The amount of ethanol blended fuel used by federal vehicles in Boise has more than doubled in the past two months.

The increased use of the alternative fuel in the fleet managed by the General Services Administration's Boise Fleet Center is a result of a partnership between the agency and state energy managers.

As part of the campaign, the agency and the Idaho Energy Division produced maps showing stations selling ethanol-blended fuel around the state, plus reminders to use the fuel whenever possible. The maps and stickers are being placed in all the agency's vehicles.

An agency review of fuel purchases showed that vehicle operators in the Boise area purchased 978 gallons of ethanol blended fuel in May and 908 gallons in June. Those numbers are up from 460 gallons in April when the partnership launched a program to increase the use of the blended fuel.

Officials said that the purchases represent only a fraction of the total fuel purchased for the federal vehicles.

"The actual numbers may be relatively small compared to our total fuel purchases," fleet manager Julie Shain said. "But they are highly symbolic and important change in direction, a significant step in the right direction in our efforts to help in the greening of the Federal fleet."

Ethanol-blended fuel burns cleaner than regular gasoline. Officials said using the fuel also reduces the amount of crude oil that the United States must import by 7 gallons for every gallon of ethanol used.

That means at a blend of 10 percent, the 2.36 gallons of ethanol-blended fuel used by the fleet between April and June replaced nearly 39 barrels of imported crude oil.

TODAY'S SCHEDULE

Cal Ripken baseball
Pacific NW Regional, at Helena, Mont.
Twin Falls Nationals vs. Willamette Valley, 9:30 a.m.
Championship, 3 p.m.

IN BRIEF

TF Nationals advance to regional semifinals

HELENA, Mont. — The Twin Falls Nationals advanced to the semifinals of the Cal Ripken Pacific Northwest Regional Tournament on Saturday with a seven-inning, 5-4 win over Western Montana at Bob Ryan Park in Helena, Mont.
Twin Falls (31-3) plays Willamette Valley, Ore., today at 9:30 a.m. in one of two semifinal games. Ferndale, Wash., faces Longview, Wash., in the other semifinal. The winners will meet for the championship at 3 p.m. with the victor advancing to the Cal Ripken Baseball World Series Aug. 18 in Vincennes, Ind.
Twin Falls won the game when Ryan Simmons was beamed with the bases loaded. Winning pitcher Nathan Ramirez struck out seven and went 2-4 to lead Twin Falls.
Down to their final strike, the Nationals rallied to tie the game in the sixth on singles by Josh Barnes and Blake Facker.
“The kids did not quit,” head coach Kent Knigge said. “At the least, we’re finishing in the top four of the Pacific Northwest and that’s awesome.”

Idaho remains sixth at High School Rodeo Finals

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. — Team Idaho remained in sixth place overall with 1,150 points after the 11th performance at the National High School Finals Rodeo in Springfield, Ill. on Sunday morning.
Utah leads Texas by a mere 7.14 points heading into today's final round.
Individual performances on Sunday:

Defending champ wins Spudman Triathlon

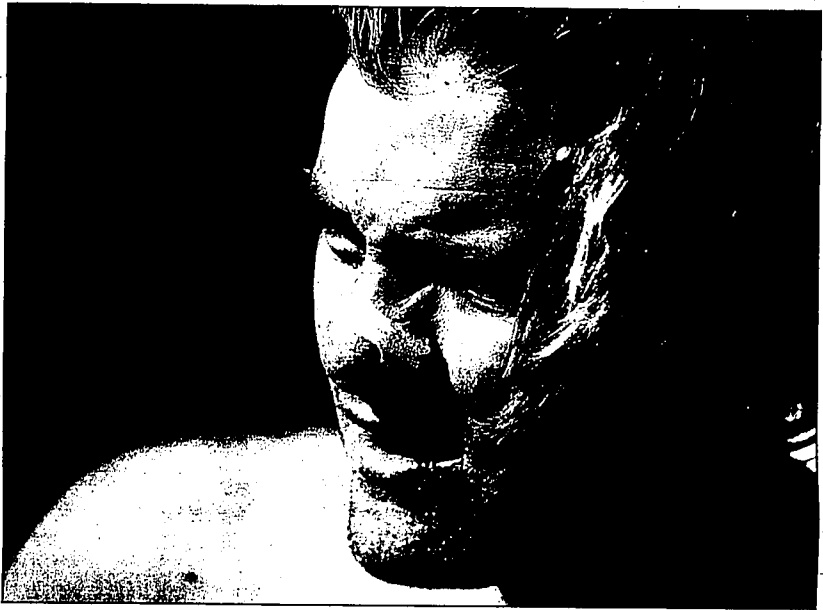

By Joe Sunnen
Times-News writer

BURLEY — Jason Crompton thanked modern medicine for providing the miracle he needed to win his third straight Lions Spudman Triathlon on Saturday.

For Cheri Weimer of Idaho Falls, it was a different kind of miracle, that provided her with the incentive to compete in the triathlon.
“This might have been my ultimate goal,” Weimer said. “Having just had a baby 19 months ago I wanted to get back in shape. Really, I just wanted to finish.”

And finish she did.
Weimer outkicked Salt Lake City's Rachel Baker to the finish line of the 10-kilometer run to win the closest race of the day. Weimer's time of 2 hours, 16 minutes and 16 seconds bested Baker by just one second for the women's overall title.

Over 650 athletes competed in the 15th annual Lions Spudman Triathlon in Burley Saturday, by far the largest field ever.
But it was shin splints that Crompton battled in the men's race, not the competition.
He finished the grueling three stages in 1:55:53. And with a small group of hopefuls pushing the two-time champion throughout the race, aspirin and experience proved to be his only allies.

Jason Crompton, of Evanston, Wyo., cools off after winning the 15th annual Lions Spudman Triathlon in Burley on Saturday. The two-time defending champion finished the three-stage race in 1 hour, 55 minutes and 53 seconds.

“It's amazing what 16 Advil can do for you,” Crompton said. “I took eight before the race and eight before I got on the bike.”
With the pain in his legs sufficiently numbed, Crompton came from two places back over the final two meters of the run for the win.

“The run has always been my strength,” he said. “The bike course is pretty flat so it takes a strong run to win.”
The shaggy-haired asphalt layer from

Evanston Wyo., whose look was described by one competitor as a cross between Steve Prefontaine and Charles Manson, has dominated the running event the last two years.

Five not-so-easy pieces: Armstrong's ride to title

The Associated Press

PARIS — It started with a defiant look and ended with a handshake.

Lance Armstrong's almost certain victory in the Tour de France took just five mountain stages.
By the time he was through — and a third straight title seemed assured — Armstrong's toughest rival extended his hand, acknowledging defeat with a wide grin to go.

“I tried everything to seek out the slightest weakness, but Lance didn't have any,” Jan Ullrich of Germany said. “That's why I shook his hand at Luz-Ardiden. For me, the match was over.”

Today, along the Champs-Elysees, that will surely be the case. And the rider whose body was ravaged by cancer five years ago will be a champion again.
Armstrong moved a step closer to victory Saturday when he finished with the main pack in 30th place, trailing stage winner Erik Zabel of Germany.

Armstrong led Ullrich by 6 minutes, 44 seconds, in the standings.

A look at Saturday's 19th stage of the Tour de France:
Stage: A 92.64-mile flat stretch from Orleans to Evry outside Paris.
Winner: Germany's Erik Zabel, in 3 hours, 12 minutes, 27 seconds.
Others: Two-time defending champion Lance Armstrong finished with the main pack in the same time as Zabel. He took 30th place but still holds the yellow jersey today.
Today's Stage: The 20th and final stage is a 99.67-mile stretch from Corbeil-Essonnes south of Paris to the finish on the Champs-Elysees.

Corbridge takes Modifieds main event

TWIN FALLS — The top three drivers finished 1-2-3 in the Mountain Dew Modifieds main event Saturday night, but not in the same order as the points standings would indicate.

Rick Corbridge ran wire-to-wire to claim the checkered flag, holding off points leader Bruce Quale and runner-up and defending class champion Steve Jones.
The three leaders touched bumpers throughout the 40-lap main event but neither Quale nor Jones could find a way to get around Corbridge.

“I could smell them the whole time,” Corbridge said after taking a victory lap. “I just knew they were real close. Luckily we pulled it out.”
In the American Race Truck main event, Jason Newhouse of Twin Falls nearly lapped the field before crossing the finish line. The yellow No. 24 jumped out to half-

Lawyer says Tyson sexual assault allegation without merit

New York Daily News

BIG BEAR, Calif. — An attorney for Mike Tyson has denied allegations that the former heavyweight champ raped a California woman 13 days ago, saying Saturday the accusation was “without merit.”

“We are hopeful that the authorities will conduct a thorough and complete investigation, which we suspect will clear Mr. Tyson of any wrongdoing,” Darrow Soll said in a statement released at his Phoenix office.

The woman contacted the San Bernardino County Sheriff's Department on Tuesday and alleged she was sexually assaulted by Tyson a week earlier in Big Bear City, a California resort town where Tyson had been training until last week, when he left for Arizona.

The former heavyweight champ, who spent the early years of his life in East New York, Brooklyn, is preparing to fight Danish boxer Brian Nielsen in Copenhagen on Sept. 8.
Tyson served more than three years in an Indiana prison after being convicted in 1992 of rape and other charges. He repeatedly has faced abuse claims from women, including his former wife, actress Robin Givens.

Mingo grand slam lifts Minico past Pocatello

By Scott Thompson
Times-News writer
RUPERT - Minico Spartans Jordan Mingo hit a grand slam in the bottom of the 11th inning, capping a seven-run rally to knock off Pocatello 13-11 late Friday night at the Area C AA American Legion District tournament at Warburton Field.

By a few hours. A very tired Spartans squad was hammered by the Idaho Falls Reds 24-7 in a run-rule shortened game on Saturday. Minico beat the Reds in the first round of the tournament, but after Friday's 11-inning marathon that nearly went into Saturday and their earlier loss that day to Twin Falls, the Spartans just didn't have anything left.

He finished this 93-mile run from Orleans in the same time as Zabel - 3:12:27.
The contest opened for real in the Alps, where Armstrong again trails the overall leader by 22 places.
The big deficit sprang from an earlier stage between Colmar and Portarlier in which the favorites, including Armstrong, allowed a group of lesser-known riders to break from the main pack and build a lead of nearly 30 minutes.

champion grimaced in apparent agony and trailed Ullrich all the way from Aix-les-Bains to the foot of L'Alpe d'Huez.
With one of the hardest climbs in cycling just ahead, the Texas's chances of finishing the stage, let alone winning the title, looked dim to many.
That's when Armstrong began moving up through the pack. He continued until he reached the front, just ahead of Ullrich.
He looked back, staring long and hard into the German's white-framed sunglasses, then surged ahead. He sprinted up the 21 hairpin bends to the summit, claiming his first stage victory and beating his main rival by a whopping 1:59. "I assumed that if I had to bluff, then they would ride even harder," Armstrong said after the race, explaining his sudden transformation from alling rider to stage-winner.

"In cycling, everybody is watching. I know that they (the team directors) are all sitting back there in the cars watching TV, and I can hear up to a motorcycle come up with a TV camera on it. Sometimes you have to play that game a little bit."
As for "the look," he denied it was intended to needle Ullrich. "It was not an arrogant thing," he said. "It was simply a check of his face and the other faces."
Despite the two stage wins and a comfortable third-place finish in the first leg of the Pyrenees, 23 seconds ahead of Ullrich, the leader's yellow jersey continued to elude Armstrong.

He took it in the next stage, a gut-wrenching stretch from Foix to Pla d'Adet that featured six exceptionally difficult mountain passes.
Whatever hope Ullrich had quickly faded in the final mountain stage between Tarbes and Luz-Ardenen. He finished just ahead of Armstrong, but made only a tiny dent on his rival's lead.
Crossing the finish line, the 1997 champion extended his hand to Armstrong. And now he must settle for a runner-up finish for the second straight year.
This year, he is stronger than ever," Ullrich said. "Simply unbeatable."

Kevin Harvick, running both the Busch and Winston Cup series, finished third after starting at the back of the field because of his missed qualifying. Stosich would ever record an out. Ogrill led the inning off with a base hit to finish 3-for-3 with two RBIs in the contest. He also picked up his third win in 6 1/3 innings, striking out five.
But it was Stosich's homer over the opposite-field fence that did the most damage.
"It feels good," the third baseman said. "I went up there to get a hit because we lost momentum and I wanted to do something to get us going."
It not only got them going but a run later they went away with the trophy in the mercy-rule shortened game.
"His been our go-to guy all year and for him to hit it the opposite field is obviously huge," an elated Russett coach said.
For the Russetts (30-10), it was particularly sweet because they came in as the top seed for the second straight year. Unlike last year, however, they came away with the trophy. More importantly, the Russetts will also go to the state tournament, which starts Saturday at Warburton Field.
Idaho Falls will face the Area B runner-up from Boise in the 12:30 p.m. game. The Cowboys (30-16) will play the Area A champ at 4 p.m. Host Minico will face last year's host, the Boise Senators, in the 8 p.m. game.

four hits in the team's 15-1 semifinal victory over Upper Valley.
Against Twin Falls, the Russetts did their damage early, notching four runs in the second and eighth more in the fifth inning.
But the Cowboys kept coming and made it a 12-7 game thanks in part to a pair of three-run home runs. Brett Miller connected in the sixth and Jake Asher got one in the top of the seventh.

Twin Falls 11, Idaho Falls Reds 10

Trailing 10-9 with one out in the bottom of the ninth, Spritzer wasn't ready to call it a career. The husky first baseman singled down the right field line to drive in a pair of runs and punch the Cowboys' ticket to the state tournament with a dramatic 11-10 victory over the Idaho Falls Reds.
Spritzer crushed the ball the entire game, going 4-for-4 with a pair of doubles and four RBIs. He also reached base via an intentional walk.
"Scott is an 18-year-old kid who is not going on (to play college baseball) and really didn't want to play his last game today," Cowboy coach Matt Rasmussen said. "He's always been an emotional leader for us."
The team needed a lift when the Reds scored three runs in the top half of the last inning, with two runs coming on a home run from Ryan Castaneda.

"You know what I think did it for us?" Rasmussen asked. "Bundling back in that first game and not giving up really prepared us for this."
And nobody showed more resolve than Spritzer.
"I'm just so happy that the whole team came together and batted," he said. "It's nice to be in (the state tournament) again. Hopefully, we can do something with it."

The Cowboys return to the state Legion tournament after missing out last season. They also played in the high school state tournament in May.
In addition to Spritzer, Miller also rapped four hits in the game, finishing 4-for-5. Ben Mueller added three hits from the plate.

Morales retains featherweight title

The Associated Press

LAS ANGELES—Erik Morales of Mexico retained his WBC featherweight title Saturday night with a unanimous 12-round decision over Injin Chi of South Korea.

The fight at Staples Center, on the undercard of Roy Jones Jr.'s world light-heavyweight championship title defense against undefeated Julio Gonzalez.

Morales, who weighed the 126-pound limit, raised his record to 4-0 with 31 knockouts, and his record in title fights to 13-0.

Chi, 125-5, is 24-2 with 14 knockouts.

The judges ruled in favor of Morales 117-110, 116-111, and 112-112. He was aided by two points deducted from Chi by referee Jose

Erik Morales

Jose Cobian — in the sixth round for a head butt, and in the 10th for punching him.

"Obviously, he can take a punch because I hit him with some great shots, the 24-year-old Morales said through an interpreter. "After that head butt, I just couldn't go after him, because he was very dirty."

"He was throwing elbows. If I would have gone for the knockout, he probably would have head-butted me again," Morales' left eye was totally closed at the end of the bout. "I deserve to fight him one more time," the 28-year-old Chi said through an interpreter after the decision was announced. The night's first title bout was declared a no-contest seven seconds into the second round when WBA welterweight champion Andrew "Six Head" Lewis of New York sustained cuts over both eyes when he accidentally butted heads with Ricardo Mayorga of Costa Rica.

"I'm disappointed the fight didn't go longer," said the 30-year-old Lewis, who weighed the 147-pound limit for the 12-round bout. "After I heal, I will give him a rematch."

Lewis remains 21-0-1 with 19 knockouts, and retains his championship.

"It was just a matter of time, I was going to take him out," said the 27-year-old Mayorga, 146-75, who remains 22-3-1 with 20 knockouts.

Lewis had cuts on his left eyelid and right eyebrow. Both fighters landed several good shots in an active first round.

It only took six laps for Jason Newhouse to erase the idea of a close finish from most of the fan's minds. Newhouse and brother John raced out to a half-lap lead by the 15th lap of the 50-lap American Race Trucks main event. And by the halfway point, Newhouse had turned the race into a laugher.

At lap 30, Jason Newhouse began to reach the cluster of trucks near the back of the pack and started to lap the pack. John Newhouse was second and John Wong was third. Burley's Nick Lynch finished a distant third.

Gossett maintains lead at John Deere Classic

SELVUS, Ill. (AP) — David Gossett, the 1999 U.S. Amateur champion trying to secure a spot on the PGA Tour, shot a 3-under 68 on Saturday to maintain the lead in the John Deere Classic.

Gossett, playing on a sponsor exemption, had a 14-under 199 total on the TPC at Deere Run. He's making his fifth PGA Tour start of the year and has played 12 events on the Buy.com Tour.

The former University of Texas star failed to qualify for the PGA Tour last winter despite shooting a 59 in the qualifying tournament.

Fleisher surges to front at State Farm Senior Classic tournament

HUNT VALLEY, Md. — Bruce Fleisher shot a 7-under 65 to surge into a first-place tie with Jim Thorpe after two rounds of the State Farm Senior Classic.

Fleisher, the U.S. Senior Open champion and leading money-winner on the tour, started the day tied for 12th. But he opened the round with a birdie and a shaggy setting the stage for his ascension to the top of the leaderboard.

Agassi ends Kuerten's winning streak

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Andre Agassi ended Gustavo Kuerten's 15-match winning streak with a 6-3, 6-3, 6-3 semifinal victory Saturday in a baseline slugfest between the world's top two players in the Mercedes-Benz Cup.

Agassi advanced to today's final against either Pete Sampras or Xavier Malisse of Belgium, who met in the evening semifinal.

"I've come here with a purpose," said Agassi, who won the event in 1993 and lost to Sampras in the 1999 final. "It's such a great tournament to get started on the right foot for the summer."

Kuerten, the top seed from Brazil, hadn't lost a match since winning his third French Open title in June. His streak included a victory last week on red clay in Germany — one of his ATP Tour-leading five titles this year.

Agassi broke Kuerten twice in the third set and won when Kuerten missed a forehand on the third match point.

"I definitely took advantage of a few moments where he got careless with some shots," Agassi said.

Agassi saved three break points on his serve to up 5-3 after Kuerten netted a backhand drop shot attempt.

Davenport advances to final for fourth straight year

STANFORD, Calif. — Lindsay Davenport is back in her accus-torial role. The 25-year-old San Jose Earthquakes' 19-year-old rookie forward, scored three goals in the first 18 minutes — and a fourth 83 seconds into injury time — as the West All-Stars edged to a 6-6 tie with the East on Saturday in the sixth MLS All-Star game.

Donovan's four goals doubled the previous All-Star game record. He won the game's MVP award for his remarkable show for his home fans at a packed Spartan Stadium.

The East scored twice in the final seven minutes of regulation but still lost to the West, which never trailed until Chead of New England scored a go-ahead goal in the 88th minute.

But the final result was sec-

Nicklaus hangs tough at Senior British Open behind Stanley

NEWCASTLE, Northern Ireland — Australian Ian Stanley shot a 1-under 70 to take the third-round lead in the Senior British Open, with Jack Nicklaus in contention three shots behind.

Stanley, who overcame a triple-bogey 7 on No. 8, was at 4-under 209. Nicklaus also shot a 70 at Royal County Down. He's tied for sixth at 1-under 212.

Llaw wins U.S. Junior Amateur tournament

SAN ANTONIO — Henry Llaw joined Tiger Woods and Mike Brannon as the only 15-year-olds to win the U.S. Junior Amateur, beating Canada's Richard Scott 2 and 1 at Oak Hills Country Club.

Llaw, from Rowland Heights, Calif., is the third youngest winner in the 54-year history of the tournament. Woods is the youngest champion, winning in 1991 at 15 years, 6 months, 21 days. Brannon won the 1971 tournament.

Chilean wins U.S. Girls' Junior Championship, tops Welch

MISSION HILLS, Kan. — Chile's Nicole Perrot won the U.S. Girls' Junior Championship, beating Whitney Welch of Las Vegas 3 and 2 at Indian Hills Country Club.

Perrot made a curling 12-foot birdie putt on the 10th hole to take the lead for good. Perrot and Welch, both 17, earned spots next week in the U.S. Women's Amateur in Andover, Kan.

David Gossett watches his eagle putt on the second hole in the third round of the John Deere Classic in Selvis, Ill., Saturday.

South Korea's Se Ri Pak chips out of the bunker Saturday to save par on the fifth hole at Squaw Creek Country Club during the second round of the Giant Eagle LPGA Classic. Pak holds a two-stroke lead heading into today's final round.

Costa, Lapentli gain Kitzbuehel final

KITZBUHEL, Austria — Albert Costa, bidding for his fourth title in this tournament, beat Guillermo Coria of Argentina 7-5, 6-3 in sweltering heat Saturday to reach the final of the $900,000 General Open.

The Spaniard will face sixth-seeded Nicolas Lapentli of Ecuador today. Lapentli, a wild card, defeated Galo Blanco of Spain 6-2, 6-4 in the other semifinal.

Robredo advances to Pkrom Open final

SOPOT, Poland — Third-seeded Tommy Robredo of Spain advanced to the final of the Idea Pkrom Open on Saturday, beating Argentina's David Nalbandian quickly 6-3, 6-2.

Robredo will face second-seeded Albert Portas, a 6-3, 7-6 (3) winner over Armenia's Sargis Sargsian.

Spain's Gala Leon Garcia and Cristina Torrens Valero beat seeded players to advance to the women's final.

Katzenmoyer leaves camp due to neck worries

New England linebacker Andy Katzenmoyer walked out of training camp because he was worried about a neck injury.

Coach Bill Belichick said Katzenmoyer contacted him Friday night to apologize for leaving camp following the team breakfast earlier in the day.

"I can't really speak for him, but I would characterize it as he's trying to resolve those issues himself," Belichick said Saturday.

Katzenmoyer's mother, Dianne, said her son is fine.

"There are a couple of concerns about his neck, about the surgery he had last fall," she told The Columbus Dispatch.

Belichick declined to speculate about the length of Katzenmoyer's absence, and said he has not decided whether to fine him.

But he added that Katzenmoyer's decision to leave camp "is not the way we want to do it. But I don't really know enough about the situation right now to make a lot of final decisions or make a lot of intelligent guesses on where things are, let alone where they're going to."

Around the NFL

Titans

The Titans started training camp with their Pro Bowl running back sidelined. Eddie George's right foot continues to heal from offseason surgery to repair a loose tendon. He expects to begin taking part in drills beginning Aug. 6.

He may not play much — if at all — in the Titans' exhibitions, but George said he plans to be ready for the Sept. 9 season opener against Miami.

Giants

New York Giants guard Glenn Parker, who recently had two moles removed, probably won't practice with the NFC champions until Aug. 6.

Parker is unable to practice because of concerns that his stitches will break. Doctors found skin cancer on Parker's leg last month and removed it. A biopsy showed it had not spread.

Dolphins

Miami signed former Baltimore Ravens tackle Spencer Foles, adding depth to an injury-depleted offensive line.

The 6-foot-5, 315-pound Foles, who spent the last five seasons with Baltimore, was released by the Ravens in March. He played in 11 regular-season games last season and started four.

Browns

Offensive tackle Tony Jones, who began his career in Cleveland in 1986, retired Saturday.

Jones, who played for Cleveland from 1988 to 1995, then went on to play on two Super Bowl winners in four years with Denver, told coach Bruce Davis said his teammates Friday night that he was done playing.

Rams

The Rams signed fullback Larry Bowle, who was out by New England on Tuesday, and coach Mike Martz expects him to challenge James Hodgins for the starting job. Bowle played for the Redskins when Martz was in Washington.

Defensive tackle Ryan Pickett, the third of St. Louis' first-round draft choices, signed Saturday. Pickett, the 29th overall choice, will begin as a backup at one of tackle spots.

Pickett is one of three first-rounders for the Rams. The first defensive lineman Damione Lewis, already is signed, but safety Adam Archuleta is not.

The second-seeded Davenport advanced to the final for the fourth straight year, defeating Monica Seles 6-4, 6-2 Saturday. Davenport needed exactly 30 minutes to win each set against the fourth-seeded Seles.

Spain's top-seeded Williams was defeated by Meghann Shaughnessy in the quarterfinals Friday, so Davenport will face the winner of the Saturday night semifinal between the fifth-seeded ondary to the all-out offensive show put on by both teams — and the fun of a friendly match among MLS' best players.

Jim Rooney of the Miami Fusion scored in the 84th minute to tie the game at 5-5 — and in the light-hearted spirit of the All-Star game, Rooney pulled off his jersey to reveal a black sports bra similar to the one famously worn by U.S. women's team star Brandi Chastain at the 1999 World Cup.

When Donovan scored the game-tying goal in injury time at the end of a brilliant run, he pulled off his jersey and revealed his own sports bra.

It was the only less-than-original move made by Donovan all afternoon.

seemingly effortless speed and careful footwork to become the MVP of his first All-Star game.

With four teen-age All-Stars — including 19-year-old Santino Quaranta of D.C. United, the youngest All-Star in North American pro sports history — the game was a perfect showcase for MLS' new generation of stars. None shone brighter than Donovan, who broke the records for goals and points in an MLS All-Star game.

With six of his Earthquakes teammates in the West's starting lineup, Donovan was very much at home — and he waited three minutes after the opening whistle to score his first All-Star goal.

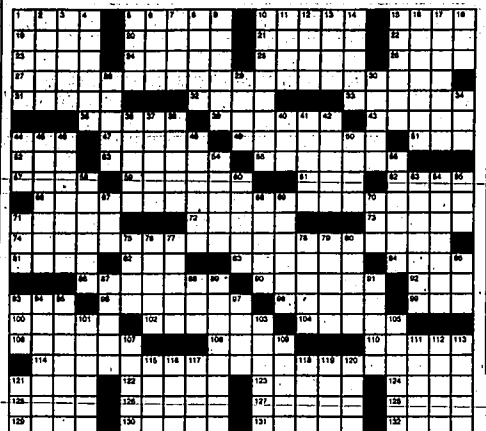

West goalie Joe Cannon, Donovan's teammate in San Jose, lofted a length-of-the-field pass over the entire East squad to Donovan, who took one dribble and put the ball off East goalie Nick Rimando's short side and into the net.

Molly McBride, daughter of Mike and Jan McBride of Twin Falls, served as director for the day at the Idaho Department of Parks and Recreation during the Girls State event in June. McBride, who will be a Twin Falls High School senior this fall, toured parks in the Boise area and met with agency staff members. She is considering a career in recreation management. Girls State is sponsored by the American Legion Auxiliary and promotes leadership and education about the workings of government.

FOCUS

Osborne takes spot at regional competition

Curt Osborne, a junior from Hagerman, was a member of a student team from Boise State University Department of Construction Management that took third place in an academic division at the 14th annual Region VI and VII Professional Construction Management Competition and Conference.

Osborne and five fellow students took third in the commercial division. All told, 22 Boise State students competed. Competition problems are written and judged by industry professionals. The problems are technical, involving questions about business, engineering, planning and methods that would be used to complete a project.

The commercial competition featured the theoretical renovation of a five-star hotel in a resort area. The students are given two days to prepare and present a written and oral component of the problem. Then, the judges compile the results and announce the winners at the conference luncheon. Boise State student teams began preparing for the competition in November by solving mock problems, working on the team pre-qualification statement and making presentations to local industry professionals.

PICKING A FAIR THEME

... and come home with all your teeth

I had the meanest third-grade teacher in the whole world. At least that was the consensus at the time. Mrs. Hartley made us do our work over and over, until we did our best. We wanted to play Red Rover instead. At the end of the school year, Mrs. Hartley gave me a book, "Treasury of Children's Literature," inscribed with a note praising my work. I had earned it, she said.

No teacher had ever made me earn anything before. I still have that book.

A few years ago, on a trip back to the Midwest, I was talking with a childhood friend about how mean Mrs. Hartley was - and about how she was the best teacher we ever had. I have since come to appreciate the importance of good teachers in all of our lives.

Three decades later, I can still close my eyes and hear the banging of my locker door, and the clanging of that silver tardy bell, and my fifth-grade Christmas pageant, and Mrs. Hartley in her navy blue dress.

It's back-to-school time. First, the wardrobe: I always shopped for my back-to-school clothes at school time.

Famous Barr in St. Louis, Mo. My mother and I would make the trip to the big city, and she would do most of the choosing. My all-time favorite was a cotton plaid skirt and gold sweater - $9.99 full price.

Today's parents can expect to spend at least $44.95 for one book that looks like it has already been used - to dust furniture.

The school lunches are different, too, but not much. In a newspaper story about second-graders giving advice to incoming first-graders, one child suggested eating lots of ice cream in the school cafeteria, "even though the chocolate looks exactly like the vanilla."

Then there is the homework. It takes a larger chunk of time than it used to, and the parents should not expect to be much help with any assignment brought home by a child over the age of 8.

When I was in school, we won stars for perfect attendance. Today, there are automated voices that report truant students to their parents by phone.

But some things never change: Kids still tell the same jokes 50 times in a row and hold staring contests with their guinea pigs - and need a back-to-school routine with consistent mealtimes and bedtime and sets of carefully explained guidelines.

Years ago, my friend Vonda sent her 6-year-old off to school in his new jacket. That night, he brought home a wrinkled mess that had been stuffed into his desk all day. Vonda admonished him to hang the jacket on a hanger the next day. That's when she got the call from her son's teacher, asking why the child was refusing to take his jacket. The mystery was solved when Vonda visited the school and found out there were no hangers in the classroom, only pegs.

The nature of kids never changes much. The nature of moms never changes much either ... I don't want to alarm you, Mrs. Turner, my daughter's elementary school principal began.

What could alarm a mother more than a statement like that from someone with whom she has entrusted the life of her first-born child?

As it turned out, I was summoned to my child's school that day to check on two teeth that had been "pushed up into her gum line" and taken out at recess. I dropped everything and rushed to the school only to discover that the two teeth in question were teeth that hadn't even come in yet.

It's a timeless back-to-school experience.

Secrets of good students

Twin Falls High School's co-salutatorian, Joseph Machala, at his graduation in May. Successful students have a wide variety of skills, but most share an ability to prioritize their efforts.

Successful kids don't always work harder but they do work smarter

By Steve Crump
Times-News writer

How to get better grades? We asked the experts, some of south-central Idaho's high school valedictorians and salutatorians who graduated in June, most of them with 4.0 grade-point averages:

1 Organization is everything. "There's a lot going on, so you have to manage your time," said Allison Marshall, co-valedictorian at Jerome High School, where she participated in speech and played tennis and cross country. "I found it was important to take advantage of my time in class (to get work done)."

2 Homework, homework, homework. "I never went to school without it," said Keri Coats, valedictorian at Twin Falls High School, where she played volleyball and basketball and participated in National Honor Society. "I'd study every day," added Troy Andrus, valedictorian at Hagerman High School, where he was active in Business Professionals of America and the NHS. "And I got assignments done as soon as I could."

3 Heads up. "Paying attention in class and not daydreaming is important," said Emily Johnson, co-valedictorian at Valley High School in Hazelton, where she played volleyball and track and participated in NHS. "There's so much you need to learn."

Getting your child ready to learn

This is the first of three special Sunday sections on preparing for the start of classes in the fall.

4 Don't wait for the movie. "Read the material," said Jeremy Funk, co-valedictorian at Minico High School in Rupert, where he was on the wrestling team and participated in Future Farmers of America and the NHS. "Go back and read your notes, and if you have study guides, use them too," said Twin Falls' Jensen, co-valedictorian at Minico High School in Rupert, where he was on the wrestling team and participated in Future Farmers of America and the NHS. "Go back and read your notes, and if you have study guides, use them too," said Twin Falls' Coats.

5 Smart kids ask for help. "If I was having problems, I'd go in and talk to the teacher before school," Jerome's Marshall said. "Especially in calculus. It's important to keep up."

6 Beware the perils of procrastination. "If you get behind, it's really hard to get caught up," said Rachel Welch, co-valedictorian at Twin Falls High School, where she played basketball, soccer and track, sang in a choral group and participated in NHS. "And you have to work a lot harder to do it."

7 Take notes. Good note-taking is virtually a universal skill of students who do high-achieving level. "I not only took a lot of notes, but I always went back and went over them," Twin Falls' Welch said.

8 Pick and choose. "Don't try to do too many things," said Jeremy Funk, co-valedictorian at Murtaugh High School, where he played basketball and participated in student government and FFA and BPA. "It's hard to do a lot of things and still get good grades."

9 Take advantage of technology. "I took notes in class on a computer," said Jerome's Marshall. "I liked it a lot better."

10 Sweat the small stuff. "I took everything they said in class seriously," said Hagerman's Andrus. "And I always tried to do a little bit more than was required."

11 90 percent of life is just showing up. "Make sure you get to class," Murtaugh's Funk said. "It sounds simple, but showing up every day is important."

12 Enjoy. "Just have fun," Funk added. "You'll do better in school if you do."

Mars and Venus in the classroom

A meld the insights of Michael Gurian, a therapist, educator and best-selling author who explored the differences in the way boys and girls learn:

- Boys tend to be better at abstract reasoning.
- They do better at learning mathematics on a blackboard.
- Girls tend to prefer concrete reasoning.
- Teaching math concepts with objects they can manipulate helps.
- Boys tend to work silently.
- They also enjoy jargon or coded language. They like symbolic texts, diagrams and graphs, and they get into an author's imagery pattern.
- Girls like to talk things out as they learn and put ideas in clear, everyday language. They prefer written texts and tend to be more interested in the emotional workings of literary characters.
- Boys seem to need movement to stimulate their brains and manage and relieve impulsive behavior. Teachers should put boys to work: handing out papers and sharpening pencils. Stretch and movement breaks or allowing a boy to squeeze a Nerf ball in his hand can help.
- Girls don't need to move around as much while learning and are better at managing boredom.

Parents can help children achieve more in school

Some high school students make it look easy. They breeze through classes, get their homework done on time and earn high grades. Other students struggle with courses, homework and grades and don't reach the same level of achievement. Two students starting high school with similar skills can end up in their senior year with very different ACT scores as they prepare for college.

What's the difference? How can you help your child achieve more?

Coursework is key
One of the most critical factors relating to achievement is coursework. Students who take rigorous courses in high school and who earn high grades in those courses are more likely to earn high ACT scores. For example, students who take trigonometry or calculus are at least three times more likely to have high ACT scores than students who avoid those courses. ACT's research shows that other characteristics also make a difference.

Personal characteristics
Students who consider themselves to be

COLLEGE AND CAREER CORNER

competent and effective, with a realistic view of their abilities, are more than three times as likely to be high achievers. Students with lower self-esteem and confidence are more likely to be low achievers. Motivation is also an important factor. Students lacking in motivation, or who have a lot of anxiety about schoolwork or home environment, are five to six times as likely to be low achievers as high achievers.

Family characteristics
ACT research also shows the impact of family situation on educational achievement. Students who have experienced three or more difficult situations at home - parental unemployment, chronic health problems, death, separation or divorce, or a student who has had to work to help support the family - are more than twice as likely to be low achievers in school.

Teen-agers unfortunately don't have much control over the family situation, but if your teenager or one you know has experienced these problems, can you help them find counseling or other assistance? Early intervention programs for at-risk students appear to increase the likelihood of their success in school.

Education-related factors
If your child spends less than six hours per week doing homework at home, or seldom reads just for fun, he or she is nearly twice as likely to achieve at a lower level than students who love to read and spend six hours or more doing homework each week.

Extracurricular activities
Does your child spend time on a computer? There is a correlation between computer access and achievement - students who use computers at home are more likely to be high achievers. If you don't have a computer at home, encourage your teenager to use the computers at school and at the public library.

Some parents pull TV privileges for students whose grades are suffering, and that may be a good idea. Students who spend five hours or more each week watching TV are more likely to be low achievers.

It's also important for students to get involved in high school activities. Those who are involved in a club, sports team, band, newspaper or other activity generally achieve higher than students who are not involved in extracurricular activities.

Ultimately, it's all up to the student. But parents and other adults can make a difference in a student's life by getting help for the student if it's needed, supporting the activities that lead to growth and encouraging the student to take advantage of learning opportunities. If you need help finding resources, talk to your high school counselor.

Evidence backs early education to reverse school-readiness trend

Chicago Tribune

Preschool was originally started to help children at risk, such as those living in poverty or whose parents have little education, but it is quickly becoming the choice of middle-class and well-to-do families who want to give their children a "head start to Harvard."

A big part of the appeal is the growing evidence that high-quality preschool programs promise to prevent many of the learning problems that are increasingly plaguing children entering the school system for the first time.

In 1995, Georgia became the first state to pay for high-quality prekindergarten care for all 4-year-olds in the state, rich and poor alike, out of lottery money. Seventy-five percent of all eligible 4-year-olds are now in the program, which is receiving favorable approval ratings from 90 percent of the parents.

Why do parents like it so much?

"Because every parent wants to think that their child is prepared for school," said Kathleen Gooding, director of the prekindergarten program in the Georgia Office of School Readiness.

"Every parent wants to know that their child is ready for kindergarten, ready to read and succeed," she said. "And every parent secretly wants their child to have a head start."

And, are the children ready?

Two out of three prekindergarten students in the Georgia pre-K program are rated good, very good or extraordinarily good on a school-readiness scale when they enter kindergarten, said an education specialist at Georgia State University.

Her survey of 460 kindergarten teachers also showed that they rated 60 percent of the pre-K children as being better prepared in prereading skills than those who had not been in pre-K. Thirty-four percent of the teachers said they saw no difference, and only 6 percent said the children's prereading skills were lower.

There is growing awareness that it is during the first few years of a child's life, when the brain goes through an enormous growth spurt.

This compares with the findings of a national survey of more than 3,500 kindergarten teachers who said that more than half the children entering the school system were less prepared to learn.

There is growing awareness that it is during the first few years of a child's life, when the brain goes through an enormous growth spurt, that learning things such as language, math and associations occur easily and swiftly.

The last 15 years has witnessed a revolution in the science of learning. It has been propelled by research showing how the brain gets built, and by long-term studies, such as one going on at the Chicago Child-Parent Centers, showing that quality preschool can change the outlook for children.

Already crumbling from the onslaught of this research are two myths that have hamstrung efforts to improve education: that education cannot reverse the effects of poverty and that IQ levels can be raised through enhanced learning experiences.

"As the power of this research becomes more widely known, it will be just like giving kids inoculations for smallpox and polio—there will be an absolute expectation that every child is taught to read by the public school, regardless of what their poverty level is," said Robert D. Barr, professor of education at Boise State University.

More than half of U.S. children have one or more risk factors that jeopardize their chances to learn and succeed in school. Risk factors such as basic as not being talked to or read to.

Other risk factors include living with a single parent, having parents with less than a high school education or who lack jobs, and children who lack health insurance or live in poverty. One of four U.S. children has four or more of these risks. Half the children in the Georgia prekindergarten program, for example, are considered at risk.

Trying to solve the growing school-readiness problem, 42 states offer some type of prekindergarten program. These are in addition to the federal government's Head Start program, which covers 822,000 3- and 4-year olds, only about 40 percent of the eligible children, who mostly live in poverty.

Children should do own homework

Q. Is it possible to get today's children to do their own homework? At the school our daughter attends, the teachers believe parents should orchestrate homework sessions—they call it "being a homework buddy." As a consequence, the children believe their parents should help them do their assignments. My husband and I, however, feel that children should do their homework independently. Mind you, we're willing to help when help is truly needed, but we don't want to be our daughter's "buddies" under any circumstances. What are your thoughts on this?

PARENTING
John Rosemond

A. This is one of my pet peeves, so pardon me while I take a few moments to rant and rave: When are teachers, administrators and college education professors going to wake up and realize that "enabling" by any other name is still enabling? Homework buddies? Cong me with a spoon! Back in the dark ages of my youth, when children were expected to do their own homework, they did their own homework. And by all measures, student achievement levels were significantly higher than they are today! Arrrrrrrr!

Having gotten that off my chest, I'll answer your original question: Yes, it is possible to get a child to do his or her own homework, even in the face of teachers who want parents to be "homework buddies." The solution is very simple, actually, and since most people in my parents' generation employed this method, I can hardly claim copyright.

First, do not, under any circumstances, allow a child to do homework at the kitchen table or in any other family area. Make it clear that homework, being the child's work, is to be done in the child's room. Parents should make sure the child has a suitable work area — i.e., a well-lit desk — and that the area is stocked with appropriate homework supplies — i.e., paper, pencils and/or pens, crayons, a ruler, etc. Rule of Thumb: When homework is done in a family area, homework will become a family affair, thus diluting its benefit to the child in question.

Second, limit the number of times per evening you will render assistance to the child, and limit the length of any such rendering. For example, when our children were of school age, my wife and I made a rule that we would not provide help with more than three homework problems per evening, nor would any one such "helpful occasion" exceed five minutes. Within these draconian (by today's standards) limits, our children actually managed to make grades decent enough to get into good colleges.

I am convinced, by the way, that one of the unintended messages the "homework buddy" system sends to children is that they are not competent. In this regard, then, it should not surprise any one that veteran teachers tell me today's kids act generally less capable than children did 20 to 30 years ago. Also, I have to think that many a child has intuited that paying attention in class is less important to the degree his or her parents are going to render homework assistance.

Third, hold children responsible for their school performance. Just as negative consequences befall irresponsible adults, so should negative consequences befall children who do not accept their responsibilities. Lessons in real life should begin early, lest they come too late.

When all is said and done, the "I am not your homework buddy" system described above amounts to nothing more than proper discipline, which has forever been and will always be the key to a child's success in school.

Modern noises to the contrary, there is nothing new under the sun.

Magic Valley Regional Medical Center Helps Young People Be Successful in Life

Magic Valley Regional Medical Center is proud of its commitment to the youth of the Magic Valley. A national coalition committed to giving young people the resources they need to be successful in life has named MVRMC as its partner and lead agency for the Magic Valley's Promise Campaign. America's Promise: The Alliance for Youth strives to mobilize people from every sector of life to build the character and competence of our nation's youth by fulfilling Five Promises for young people:

1. Ongoing relationships with caring adults, -parents, mentors, tutors or coaches;
2. Safe places with structured activities during non-school hours;
3. Healthy start and future;
4. Marketable skills through effective education; and
5. Opportunities to give back through community service.

MVRMC is one of more than 550 community and state partners across the nation that has united to fulfill the Five Promises. "We have been recognized for our collaborative efforts and hospital-based programs that address the needs of the youth in our community," said Rhonda Bright, the coordinator of MVRMC's efforts. "MVRMC is proud of the improvements being made in our community's health and excited for the opportunities that lie ahead."

The following Commitment Makers have signed on with MVRMC as part of the Magic Valley's Promise Campaign:

The goal of Magic Valley's Promise is to reach more than 14,000 young people in South Central Idaho with the Five Promises through collaborative and hospital-based programs. If you or an organization with which you are affiliated are interested in participating as a Commitment Maker, call 737-2807.

Neonatal Intensive Care Unit Helps Newborns and Their Families

When a newborn baby needs specialized care, MVRMC is here to provide it. Our Level II NICU is capable of caring for premature & sick babies. In the past, babies were transferred to Boise, Pocatello, or Salt Lake City for hospitalizations that could last for several weeks or months. The stress and inconveniences for a family with a loved one in a hospital so far from home was both emotionally and financially devastating.

A special Perinatal Transport Service has been operating at MVRMC since February. The Transport Team, staffed with our own highly trained Neonatal Nurses, Respiratory Therapists, and Medical Staff is available 24 hours a day to respond to calls for help from outlying hospitals. With new, high tech equipment, the team is able to transport expecting mothers and newborns to MVRMC's local NICU for care.

In its 6 months of operation, 18 babies and their mothers have used this specialized service. "Families have been extremely grateful to receive this quality care right here, close to home," said Michele Randall, Director of Maternal and Child Services at MVRMC. "During this difficult time, they have been able to maintain a relatively normal life by being at home to care for other children, to continue working, and to have continuity of care with the same physicians and support staff available once their baby is doing better."

The following Commitment Makers have signed on with MVRMC as part of the Magic Valley's Promise Campaign:

Ongoing Projects of MVRMC

- Plans continue for an expansion to MVRMC's Emergency Department, Same Day Surgery, Radiology, and Outpatient Services. "The Magic Valley population is growing steadily," said Marc Harrison, MVRMC Director of Facility Management and Planning. "In order to keep up with the demands from the community for quality health care services, MVRMC will expand some of its most essential patient care areas." Harrison estimates preliminary planning and bidding for the project will be completed by November. Once completed, the Board must approve final funding for the construction. The entire project could be done in 18 to 24 months, he said.
- Lease options for MVRMC continue to be considered. A special task force appointed by the Twin Falls County Commissioners has completed preliminary work on a request for proposals to lease MVRMC. The Board of Directors, MVRMC employees, and medical staff support a community-controlled, not-for-profit organization to lease the hospital. They feel this provides the greatest amount of local control while at the same time ensuring the highest quality of health care well into the future.

Magic Valley Regional Medical Center Uses New State-of-the-Art Technology to Diagnose Heart Conditions

Magic Valley Regional Medical Center is the first hospital in Idaho with the technology to transmit dynamic ultrasound images of the human heart to specialist physicians. This cardiac ultrasound technology lets doctors collaborate in cyberspace about heart problems and treatments.

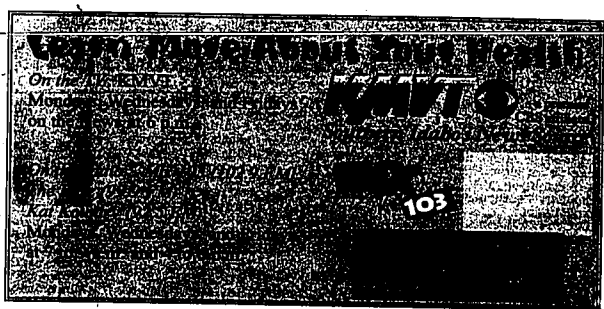

"Anytime you can optimize images and get more information out of a given picture, you're going to be able to give a better, more complete diagnosis and ultimately help the patient," said Dr. David Kemp, a Twin Falls Cardiologist affiliated with MVRMC.

"This new technology is especially important for some of our youngest patients," said Terry Hatch, MVRMC Cardiology Supervisor. Local pediatricians treating premature babies with potential heart problems used to wait from 12 to 24 hours for a video taped study to be delivered by courier to Dr. Michael Nichols, Pediatric Cardiologist in Boise. Typically, during this time the patient might have been transferred to Boise without a firm diagnosis just to be safe. Hatch stated, "Now the cardiologist has a firm diagnosis and results in 15 minutes. We can immediately determine if further treatment is needed. We can also determine within a short time if MVRMC can provide the treatment or if we need to transfer the patient to Boise." Hatch added that if the treatment is available locally, the patient and family can save time, unnecessary expense, and anxiety by staying close to home.

"The new system allows for a higher resolution and much more penetration," said Hatch. "We get a very crisp, clear image to help the cardiologist better diagnose heart conditions."

Since the Cardiac Ultrasound uses soundwaves aimed from outside the body, the procedure is non-invasive. This means patients do not need to experience discomfort from incisions or needles.

MVRMC's new Cardiac Ultrasound machine uses high frequency soundwaves, or ultrasound, aimed at the heart. They bounce off tissue and create a shadow picture of the heart's chambers and valves. It's the same technique used to see a fetus in the womb. A sensitive microphone detects turbulence or restricted blood flow in the arteries. Using Doppler technology, the sounds are converted to colors that show the direction and speed of blood. "Bringing the most advanced technology to the Magic Valley is one way we fulfill our mission of making this region the healthiest place to live in America," said Jerry Hart, CEO at MVRMC.

Gerald L. Hart

FAMILY LIFE

Workaholic mom regrets time not spent with daughter

DEAR ABBY: The letter I am enclosing with mine was written to you in March 2000 by my daughter, Kelsey Leigh Holland. She never mailed it. Kelsey died in her sleep of respiratory failure on Dec. 29, 2000. She was only 13.

"Dear Abby: My mother is a workaholic. She works at work at home, at her dinner and after all hours. She never has any fun. I'm afraid she's on the verge of a nervous breakdown - if not already over the edge.

"We talked to her, so have my brother and my father. How I send the message to Mom that life is not just paperwork and deadlines, but fun and happiness?"

DEAR ABBY
Abigail VanDuren

Signed, Out of Ideas."

Oh, how I wish I could change the past and spend less time working, volunteering, etc., and more time with Kelsey! But that's impossible. What I can do is be a better mother to my son, and pass along my daughter's message to your readers.

Parents, please spend more time with your children. Listen to them, share with them, teach them. Every moment of life is precious and we truly don't know how much time we have left.

Thank you, Abby, for listening. I wish I had listened before it was too late to spend more time with Kelsey.

-LORI HOLLAND, RIVERVIEW, CALIF.
DEAR LORI: Please accept my deepest sympathy for the tragic loss of your daughter. I'm printing your message as a reminder to other parents. The working world can be extremely demanding - and often there are not enough hours in the day to do what needs to be done. But children are young only once, and they are with us for such a little while.

Readers, the tragedy that has befallen this mother may never happen to the vast majority of you - but in life, there are no guarantees. I could lecture for paragraphs, but I think you get the message.

DEAR ABBY: Because you sometimes print letters about acts of kindness, I would like to tell you how three guardian angels came to my aid this past winter.

I was traveling from New Orleans to visit my boyfriend in Dubuque, Iowa, when my connecting flight from Chicago was canceled. Another flight that day was unlikely because of bad weather.

In line at the ticket counter, I overheard two women talking. They were also going to Dubuque. I asked what they intended to do about reaching their destination. They introduced themselves as Mary Ann and Monica, and showed me a bus schedule they had gotten. After some negotiating, we managed to purchase tickets on a bus that would take us as far as Rockford, Ill., where Mary Ann's husband would pick us up. The women stayed with me the entire time and reassured me that everything would work out.

After a short wait in Rockford, Mary Ann's husband, Jim, arrived in the pouring rain and drove us safely to Dubuque, dropping me off at the door of my boyfriend's dorm. I tried to give him $10 for his trouble, but he refused it. All three of them walked in the car until they saw that I was safely inside.

Jim, Mary Ann and Monica, thank you. I will never forget your kindness.

-KATIE IN NEW ORLEANS

DEAR KATIE: I'm sure you won't. Your guardian angels literally went the extra mile - and many more - for you.

ENGAGEMENT — Naive 15-year-old girl gets answers too late

MACKAY-MOFFITT

TWIN FALLS - Nolan and Pat Mackay of Monticello, Utah, announce the engagement of their daughter, Jan Michelle Mackay, to Blake Almy Moffitt, son of Gary and Cheryl Moffitt of Twin Falls.

Jan graduated from Sky View High School in Smithfield, Utah, in 1994. She received an associate's degree from Ricks College in 1996 and received a bachelor's degree from Utah State University in family human growth and development in 2001. She also served for 18 months in the Portugal Lisbon North Mission for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Moffitt graduated from Twin Falls High School in 1994. He served a two-year mission for the LDS Church in Phoenix, Ariz. He received a bachelor of science degree in mechanical and aerospace engineering from Utah State University in 2000. He is currently seeking a master of science degree in mechanical engineering at Utah State University. Moffitt works in space systems, fluid dynamics and thermodynamics.

The wedding is planned for Aug. 8 in the Logan LDS Temple. An open house to honor the couple will be given from 7-9 p.m. Aug. 10 at the Joe Cotterell residence in Twin Falls.

She was 15, sweet, and very cute with a little, outgoing personality. What I didn't know at the time was that she was also very pregnant.

I was in the process of teaching sex education as a part of my biology class, and I had promised to answer all questions as part of that education. The questions turned in were anonymous, and most were well thought-out - things the students really wanted to know. It was surprising to me then, and it would be surprising now to most adults how little 13- and 15-year olds know about this subject, because we assume, from television and the movies, that they know everything.

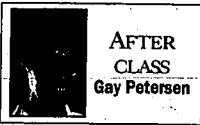

But, though their hormones are raging and they tend to have a know-it-all attitude, they really are not sophisticated in this aspect of life at all.

And, at that time, still a young teacher, I too was naive about teenage sex. So I went blithely forward, not realizing that in the back row sat a child who needed help, whose questions had been answered too late, whose future was unsure, who faced new questions - ones I could not answer.

What will happen to me? How will this affect my life?

One of the answers was that she would be unable to continue high school unless she was homeschooled or got her GED. Her boyfriend received no such punishment - the old double standard.

But the other answers then and today remain the same. Statistics show that most pregnant teenagers - though now allowed to continue on through high school - will not finish, most will be on their own within a short period of time, single mothers with little chance of further.

AFTER CLASS

ing their education. Most will end up with incomes far below the national average.

Thankfully, Charlene (not her real name) had a loving family, a mother and father willing to be grandparents, and a determination to improve her life. She was successful in both her personal life and in raising her child, though it was difficult for her. She was also an exception to the rule.

Today's young people are more free in their discussion of, and, often, in their participation in, sexual activities. Though it seems more acceptable, at least to that age group, both sexes should be concerned with sexually transmitted disease - AIDS, gonorrhea, chlamydia, even syphilis - are still prevalent. But many teenagers simply continue to believe that birth control pills will provide the answer to all problems they might encounter.

And, though the percentage of teen-age pregnancies is down nationwide, the problems faced by teen-age mothers continue. Both boys and girls are affected, but girls, unfortunately, generally bear the brunt of the problems involved.

Answers lie in loving, capable parents and in education by either those parents or by other competent, caring adults. Ignorance of facts and teenagers searching for love through physical contact will continue unless adults get involved. Helping a child avoid a lifetime of heartache can be the heartwarming result.

Gay Petersen is a retired teacher who lives in Wendell. Write to her at petersenmagidink.com

LASER

You may have seen KWTN's piece last Sunday night on a new dental laser that detects dental decay. This laser technology is amazing. Because of my involvement with the University in San Francisco, I am often given new technology to work with and have recently been sent this exact laser. It also just received a new bleaching laser, which I haven't even removed from the box. I am excited to write about this to you.

Often times it is difficult to determine if a cavity is present in the top of a tooth. Not all decay shows evidence of its existence on X-Rays and sometimes the decay can invade a tooth without marking the outside surface of the tooth. In this circumstance the dentist is forced to make a judgment based on his past experience, often times leaving decay in your tooth undiagnosed.

The KaVo Diagnodent is a two-way optical laser that can be shined into the tooth in question and present objective data on the presence or absence of decay in the tooth. The laser reads the fluorescence in the inside of the tooth, which is directly correlated with tooth decay. If the laser gives a reading of 90 to 30, decay is present but not too bad, and a reading of over 30 means there may be a cavity.

This is very valuable information if you have a child who is about to have his or her teeth sealed. A check with the laser prior to sealant placement may prevent undetected decay from being hidden beneath the new sealant. If you have, or need an appointment to see us, be sure to ask to see this new technology.
